This is why you don't see a 40 year old at the "night club" type bars trying to pick up on 20 something chicks unless they're recently divorced. This is why (if you're my age) you can't STAND going to a bar to "flirt" and try to "score" with a chick, and would much rather don your MP3 player and listen to Bill Burr's podcast while splitting wood. This is (in part) why women in their 30's and 40's, freshly divorced "can't find a man" at the bar, because the man at the bar really just came there to get a drink.

However, though the tone of this post may sound somber, as the player "ages" and realizes he'd rather do other things in life, it shouldn't be. This is nothing more than the natural progression of a player. The good news is what comes next in the evolutionary stage of a player. He turns into The World's Most Interesting Man.

Conquering what most men don't (their genetic and biological programming to CONSTANTLY chase women), the player is now mentally free to focus on the rich and unlimited opportunties life presents him. He no longer is biologically compelled to go to the bar, waste another half a day, only to score with another journalism major who writes about fashion. He is truly a free man and can now achieve his full potential in life. Like The Most Interesting Man in the World he will pursue whatever his id desires.

Hang gliding
Motorcycles
Travel
Crafts and skills
Art and music

You name it.

And not only will he pursue it, but because that is what he desires, he will master it.

The irony or the funny thing is this will only make him more desirable to women.

He won't be that ripped, smooth talking 27 year old who knows just what to say.

He'll be that peppered bearded man, who pulls up in a convertible, tangos with a select few women, enjoys a cigar with his cadre of friends, and COULD ask a girl for her number, but won't because invariably women will find a way to get to know him. Even if they don't, he doesn't care. He's too busy learning to distill scotch and listening-up on his Johnny Coltrane and Thelonious Monk.

So yes, while we may mourn the "death of a player," realize the player is on to bigger and better things, and the pinnacle of male achievement.

Tony Enjoys the Decline!

February 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Correct!

Bonus points for putting a Mr. Yuck sticker on the pistol.

Everything That's Wrong With Women

February 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

in one painful and long commercial if you can stomach it, get to the point they're riding horses side by side and kissing.

I wonder how much dental work was needed after that take.

The Weakness of the Leftist's Mind

February 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The story is about a relatively privileged student, "Jun-sang," at the time of the death of Kim Il-sung (North Korea's "eternal president"). The death is announced, and Jun-sang finds that he cannot cry; he feels nothing for Kim Il-Sung. Yet, surrounded by his sobbing classmates, he suddenly realizes that "his entire future depended on his ability to cry: not just his career and his membership in the Workers' Party, his very survival was at stake. It was a matter of life and death" (p. 98). So he forces himself to cry. And it gets worse: "What had started as a spontaneous outpouring of grief became a patriotic obligation … The inmiban [a neighbourhood committee] kept track of how often people went to the statue to show their respect. Everybody was being watched. They not only scrutinized actions, but facial expressions and tone of voice, gauging them for sincerity"

Ah, the extents humans will go to ignore what their brain know is true to abide by an ideology they know is false.

The Real Employment Picture

February 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In the earlier days of this blog I'd go into length about various economic statistics and why they're more relevant than some of the headline statistics. I realized people were falling asleep, so I just do a quick and dirty version instead. SO here it is.

Employment to population ratio.

Specifically, this measures the percent of the population that is working. Today about 58% of the people work.

Translated into English this means there's very roughly 1 parasite for 1 worker.

In short if you are working, you are not just paying for yourself, but paying for another person.

There is one way, however, to make sure you are not supporting a parasite. You just have to Enjoy the Decline!

A Real College Commencement Speech

February 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An agent in the field sent me this video.

It's of an idealistic and clueless professor parting wisdom to her students about what they should do for their futures.

It then dawned on me that she is misleading these children, not purposely, but cluelessly, into lives that will not result in their greatest potential, and most likely spectacular failure. Not because she is evil, mind you, but a clueless academian who'se never worked in the real world.

I respond with a more practical "college commencement speech" that not only aims to undo the damage she did, but turns out to be "the" college commencement speech every college graduate today needs to hear.

If you have children in college and want the best for them, then I suggest taking my bitter medicine instead of her sugar coated placebo.

Dr. Helen Enjoys the Decline!

February 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why don't you?

She is coming out with a new book, but unfortunatley I believe it won't be until June of 2013. Sigh.

How to Vaccinate Your Daughters Against Worthless Degrees

February 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Fathers, dads,

lend me your ears.

Do you want your sweet little daughter to grow up and become a hyphenated-named, obese woman who heads up an "art department?"

No, of course you don't.

So buy your daughter "Worthless."

Yes, "Worthless" has been proven by the American Medical Association to prevent young girls from majoring in stupid stuff which leads to diseases like:

Obesity
Unemployment
Spinsterhood
Self-entitlement
and
A Wasted life

Show your daughter you love her. Buy her "Worthless" today!

(Available on Kindle!)

Why It's OK to Hate Your Teachers

February 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will go into this in more detail later, but "teachers," at least the majority of them, never became teachers for "the chillllldreeeeennnnzzz"

They became teachers because at the age of 18 they knew a degree in "education" required less math and a 9 month work year was 3 months shy of a real work year. It was ALWAYS for them, and never for the student.

Thus, when you don't behave and make their job easy, they hate you. But to quote The Spearhead.

In other words, the teachers – overwhelmingly female – don't like them. Nor, apparently, do a number of NY Times commenters, who say it's just desserts for all that male oppression of the past. Yes, that's right: little kids who were born a few years ago must pay for the imagined sins of their grandfathers and great-grandfathers.

Confessions of a Worthless Degreed Person Part 2

February 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy all!

Part 2 with Jorge Gonzales, a young man whose experiences nearly match everything warned about in "Worthless," who wanted to share his experiences with younger people out there so they can learn from his mistakes.

This episode focuses on the lack of leadership and guidance by parents, as well as other adults, when it comes to helping younger people choose the correct degree for them.

Sponsored by "Worthless!"

Fighting Conservative Suicide and Depression

February 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Mandatory viewing for any conservative or libertarian who is depressed and down about the future of the country.

Why Conan O'Brien is a Class Act

February 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Long story short. My girlfriend's brother in law has terminal cancer. He's packing it in and enjoying the decline as much as he can. Last year he went to New York and as chance would have it he ran into Conan O'Brien at Central Park. As my girlfriend described it, you could tell Conan was busy, walking in a direct line and with purpose. Not to mention he IS Conan O'Brien so he's obviously constantly harassed by fans. I said,

"Please tell me you didn't harass the poor man."

They did.

But not only did Conan take the time out of his busy schedule to talk, he was kind enough to take a picture with her brother in law.

I'm not a big fan of celebrities as I think they're usually pretty pompous and arrogant, but wanted to point out what just what a sport, class act, and real article Conan O'Brien is.

Aurini Enjoys the Decline

February 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

His written review here, but he mocks, dare I say, MOCKS the Captain in his video review referring to "Weasel Whiskey" and clove cigarettes!

The Fathers Could Not Be Reached for Comment

February 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

How "Precious."

Loved Ones Deserve A Modicum of Protection

February 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Visit Ed at Ranger Self Defense.

Good News Everyone

February 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Enjoy the Decline" broke the 1,000th place mark on Amazon and is ranked 12th in economics books. A lot of people think "1,000th place??? How is THAT good?" Amazon has something like 2 million titles.

Product Details

Paperback: 218 pages

Publisher: CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform (January 7, 2013)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1480284769

ISBN-13: 978-1480284760

Product Dimensions: 8.9 x 5.9 x 0.8 inches

Shipping Weight: 12.6 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: ★★★★★ (13 customer reviews)

Amazon Best Sellers Rank: #911 in Books (See Top 100 in Books)
#12 in Books > Business & Investing > Popular Economics

I wanted to thank everybody who was kind enough to buy the book, tell friends, write reviews and just send off a link. It certainly is helping me enjoy the decline!

More Conan Class

February 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will give props where due. From a reader:

Met Conan at a pub in London. My son and I were having dinner and he was dining with his family so we didn't want to disturb them during their dinner and left them alone. After dinner while waiting for their car Conan talked to some of pub patrons. He was kind enough to talk to and take a picture with my son.

He really is a class act as you said.

I'm (Technically) a Dirty, Filthy, Jew

February 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Swear there are too many stupid people on this planet.

The Market Failure of Talk Radio

February 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is no secret that I listen to left wing talk radio. It is also no secret I've cited the reason I tune into left wing radio is because I can finish the sentences of right wing talk show hosts. This is not a slam on them, but more of a testament to how much of a "wonk" or a political "hack" I am. After 20 years of listening to talk radio, not to mention that minor "economist" thing I do, nothing surprises me anymore, nothing is new, and thus for intellectual pursuit I go elsewhere.

While that may be my particular case, that does not mean it holds for others. Sure, younger people coming into the world of adulthood tune in. Young college boys, disillusioned why women hate them, why their professors hate them, and why they can't find jobs, start to find an explanation why the world isn't turning out they way their high school teachers said it would in right wing talk radio. Young women who can't find a decent date might listen to Dennis Prager. But after 5 years the "treatment" of talk radio runs its course much like an anti-biotic treatment - it ends. It does no more good.

Now this isn't to say that Rush Limbaugh is going to fail or that Sean Hannity isn't going to be renewed for another decade on Foxnews, but this is to say there is the beginnings of an un-served market. A growing group of people, primarily young, but old as well, who have just plain had their fill and derive no significant marginal utility from listening to an additional hour of Michael Medved.

And it is here the "right wing talk radio" industry is making their largest error and setting themselves up for spectacular market failure.

First, understand that the message all of nationally syndicated talk radio conveys can be consumed, digested and incorporated in the average human brain in about 2 years. After that there is an "addiction" phase where you like to hear your logic confirmed by people who aren't lefitst ideologues that can easily run a decade. As you age, however, you start to gain confidence, knowledge, and wisdom. No leftist or media campaign can confuse you or make you second guess yourself. YOur ideology is resolved, it's cemented, and it's verified. You no longer need talk radio.

Second, I'm sorry, the "current" crop of talk radio show hosts are not really "current." However, this needs some explanation.

Understand radio is a business. YOu need to make money. The great thing about radio, however, is that it can be syndicated or broadcasted across the nation. So when a radio station has the choice of hiring some local talent and having to pay that individual a living wage, or merely "leasing" the broadcasting rights for a nationally syndicated show for 1/10th of the cost, what do you think they're going to do? Yes, this results in regional superstars like "Jason Lewis" or "Michael Medved" but it also results in homogeneity. Homogeneity that can be predicted, gets boring, and gets stale.

So while it may be financially beneficial to go with established, seasoned radio show hosts, it prevents any new talent, let alone, better talent from getting in. Additionally, since this more or less ensconces established talent, it also ensures this talented is aged, old, and separated from upcoming generations, and thus, markets.

It is here we have the third contributing factor to the market failure of talk radio - their inability to address younger generations. This isn't to say that Rush Limbaugh or Michael Savage don't talk about the debt problems older generations are foisting on younger generations, but rather the fact they plain don't speak to those generations. Admittedly, this may be a losing proposition. Most younger people are dumber than hell, ignorant as f$ck, and are so spectacularly brainwashed they'll vote to endebt themselves further, let alone, berate and mock anybody who points this out to them. But in failing to engage the younger generations, they anchor themselves to the life expectancy of older generations. THis brings up another point...

Fourth, legacy issues. If I have a complaint about the work I've done it's been the outright impossibility to get any of the work I've done into the "main stream right wing media." I've had some decent success. Glenn Reynolds and Dr. Helen have been kind enough to mention my books. Even Peter Schiff has been kind enough to host me on his show. But these people can't be considered to be "chummy chum Foxnews Elites." For the most part the Sean Hannity's and Michael Savages of the world aren't going to give their younger counterparts the time of day. They're too busy asking Charles Krauthammer for their latest talking points, and we all know how much Charles Krauthammer jives and resonates with the hip kids nowadays. The largest point is who precisely is going to replace the Rush Limbaughs and Dennis Pragers of the world? Who exactly is being groomed to follow in their footsteps? About the ONLY younger person I know of ANY notoriety only has a WEEKEND show and that is Ben Ferguson. There isn't anybody else i see under 40 being considered as candidate for any significant take over.

Fifth, an industry will arise to serve and un or underserved market. Introduce the internet. The internet is not predisposed to younger generations just because it's new, but talent that would have normally been recruited or attracted via traditional media norms are simply refusing to jump through the hoops to score a "gig" or a "contract" with traditional media. It's too costly and the cost-benefit ratio between time spent and opportunities given just isn't there. A young, intrepid and out-going individual can simply circumvent traditional media and build their own brand. They don't need expensive radio equipment, satellites, buildings or broadcast studios, they just need a computer and internet access. They also don't need to placate the masses, but can speak their minds. Not just because there's no boss to relegate and regulate their speech and thoughts, but because there are no opportunities or employment opportunties elsewhere. There is no consequence to being edgy or cutting edge, because, what? "It was going to ruin your chances at a career?". This presents the market with not only a more diverse "talk radio/podcast" selection to choose from, but more entertaining and thought provoking. A talk radio selection that is infinitely more thought provoking, engaging, and entertaining that the stale, milquetoast, cookie cutting tripe that's been going on for the past decade.

Finally, the death knell for talk radio. This new media, no matter how much it is in its infancy, is more profitable to advertisers. Because renegade podcasters, bloggers, and Youtube Peachers have no restrictions, no employment prospects, let alone, no requiements to be palatable to the masses, they have more loyal listeners. Because their message is so focused and so directly speaks to their intended audience it is more intimate and sincere. It is now a daily occurrence I get a "thank you e-mail" from a reader or listener who thanks me for sparing him/her from majoring in a worthless subject. It is also becoming a semi-daily occurrence that I receive a thank you e-mail for helping a young man with his dating and courting issues. These two narrow topics are not as wide a scope that Jason Lewis tackles on a daily basis, but advertising on my blog gets a higher rate of return than advertising on his show (AND I WELCOME ANYBODY OVER THERE WHO WANTS TO CHALLENGE IT). In other words, because of their celebrityship and broad market, advertising on talk radio is a bubble, it isn't worth the rate of return, if positive at all. But if you're willing to advertise on

The Tom Leykis Show
Dan Carlin
Bill Burr
Captain Capitalism
Roosh
Staresattheworld
Small Dead Animals
Five Feet of Fury

or any of the THOUSANDS of smaller blogs, internet radio shows, Youtube Clergy, etc.

you'll get a heck of a lot more bang for your buck.

Besides, would you rather hear about a conservative's attempt to seduce a hot a liberal chick or Sean Hannity say for the 8,000th time, "You're a great American, my friend?"

The Liberal Zombie Apocalypse

February 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I do not mean to reference the movie "I Am Legend" so frequently, but there were two instances in the movie that I found applicable to what I was writing about. The first was when he had to kill his dog (and is referenced in "Enjoy the Decline") and the second is this.

The reason for the second reference is that I like how the zombies are completely feral and lacking reason, logic or thought. If I recall the movie correctly, Will Smith's character does develop a cure that would cure all the zombies and turn them back into humans, he even tries reasoning with them, but their brains are too far gone to even comprehend what he's saying. They just want to kill him, even though he's their only hope.

What's funny (sad actually) is just how exactly a zombie's brain parallels that of a liberal.

The time is coming where the promises made by liberals, but paid for by the labor of others, will be broken. The economy is already slowing and it is my prediction this trend will continue. It may accelerate, it may slow, heck we may even grow again, but the overall trend I believe will be the trend it's been since the 1960's - declining growth. At some point it will reach a "critical point" where no matter what leftists politicians promised their parasitic constituents, there plain won't be the money or production to honor those commitments. This is already happening on a micro level. Detroit is a nice municipal example and the various instances of pensions paying out only a fraction of what they promise their government employees is another. But there will come a point where social security, medicare, medicaid, welfare, WIC, you name it, is not only going to not deliver what it promised, but SIGNIFICANTLY less. It is only because of the benevolence (of naivety) of creditors such as the Chinese this hasn't happened already.

Regardless, when this point in time comes you can expect the same amount of reason and rationality from enraged liberals, leftists, and parasites. And it's for several reasons.

First, understand how weak a mind has to be in order to swallow whole the leftist ideology. Yes, I know it's force-fed to kids in the schools, but I'm talking on a biological level. I remember a healthy amount of disrespect and suspicion for my teachers as a child. I didn't just believe what they said because "they were the teacher." Many of my classmates also had this healthy distrust. Turns out we were the smarter cadre of students in my class and I believe on a genetic level had an intelligence high enough to have some kind of immunity against brainwashing. So I do believe right off the bat you are dealing with brains that are genetically predisposed AGAINST independent thought and intellectual honesty.

Second, of course the brainwashing. After 13 years of K-12 education, and an additional 4-8 in college, your average 20 something is so hopelessly and purposely misinformed their entire construct or mental framework for their political ideology is not only erroneous, but so complete and so rooted in their mentality any outside attempts to introduce empirical evidence, logic, or reason is futile. It isn't until they live LITERALLY 20 more years and the real world just plain kicks the crap out of their ideology with anecdotal experience and evidence that they even ENTERTAIN they might be wrong. Some, like spinsters/feminists/catwomen, carry their ideology to their grave with an unenviable legacy.

Third, though this can't be said of all liberals, it can be said of (I'd estimate) 85% of them - most of them have a HUGE emotional attachment to their ideology. The reason is simple.

What precise accomplishments and achievements in life can the average leftist point to that gives their live meaning and worth?

The answer is - "nothing."

Your average leftist isn't curing cancer, building empires, starting an accounting career, or developing a trade. They're "raising awareness" or "engaging communities" or "helping the children" or leading some bullshit crusade. Whatever euphemistic titles and jargon they use to describe their "careers," in the end they're just masking the fact they're literally doing nothing with their lives. ie-their lives are worthless and thus they are worthless people.

Since deep down inside they know they are worthless and their lives have no meaning, they put "leftism/socialism/communism" at the core of their being. As Rush Limbaugh says, "being a liberal is the easiest thing" in that you just have to "claim" you care and vote to use OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY to finance your compassion. Ergo, if you ever GENUINELY, INTELLIGENTLY, LOGICALLY and DISPASSIONATELY constructively criticize of question a liberal's ideology they get emotional, enraged and angry (I remember the only people who cried on my radio show were liberals). This isn't because they really care about the poor children in Africa. It's because you are shining light on the fact they are a worthless person who does nothing, has done nothing, will continue to do nothing, and thus waste their lives.

The final result of such thorough brainwashing, insecurity, laziness, and a predisposition to naivety, results in a veritable zombie impervious to reason, logic and rationale. No matter the preponderance of evidence, they simply ignore reality and retreat to their circularly referenced and supported ideology, blame the rich, blame conspiracies and (presumably to their deaths) blame "Bush." You no doubt have ran into this where you can cite data on the internet from a reputable source, PROVING a leftist is wrong, but they (like the dismembered knight in Monty Python's Search for the Holy Grail) will never admit defeat and continue to subscribe to their now-false beliefs.

But it gets much worse than that.

Since you (and reality) are attacking the only thing that gives them value (their ideology) they will get angry. Worse still, once our creditors no longer renew our line of credit, the tab for their socialist hokey pokey will come due, and we won't be able to pay. This will result in REAL cuts to social spending which will then threaten their livelihoods as a disproportionate percent of leftists are parasitic and dependent on other people.

The end result is a real zombie movie. A post-apocalyptic economy where food, clothing and shelter are no longer being produced in quantities needed, and masses of angry, feral, irrational leftists whose pride (and shame) in their ideology prevent them from being negotiated with or reasoned with to rebuild society. In short, I truly believe leftists are so committed to their ideology that if the economy can no longer produce the basic necessities they would resort to violence, murder, theft and mayhem if necessary. This is of course very pessimistic of me, and a sad statement of a lack of faith in my fellow man, but if you look at how leftists don't even care about their own lives, to the point they'd ruin it by putting their ideology first and themselves second, you can't expect them to be open-minded during the coming Liberal Zombie Apocalypse.

This post sponsored by Amazon! You have to buy something today, might as well buy it here and save yourself the hassle of driving to the store. It doesn't cost you anything more, but the Captain does get a 7% commission, allowing him to write instead of work for dumbass bankers. Make the Captain happy, piss off his previous employers, and save yourself some time. Shop at Amazon!

Persuading and Debating Leftists

February 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Martel had a good response/post to my Liberal Zombie Apocalypse on how to engage, debate, and ultimately convert leftists.

My most successful tactic has been betting, but literally, less than 5% of the leftists

1. honor their bet
2. admit they were wrong despite conclusive and pre-agreed-upon proof proving them wrong

I cannot emphasize enough just how much of a mental condition most liberals have. They are in denial. And it REALLY has been like talking to a child at times where I say

"the sky is blue."

and their response is

"no it's not"

it's just we're looking at economic data instead of the sky.

It gets to the point debating or even trying to engage leftists is a futile endeavor, one of which not only wastes precious finite seconds of my life, but one that raises my blood pressure. Engage, debate and try to reason with them at your own risk.

Ladies' Night at the Cappy Cap Club

February 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Versus Condito discovers one of my favorite movies "McLintock!" But her analysis is a bit different than mine - "The women in this movie are stunningly beautiful and the leading men are wonderfully masculine." So in other words, leftists will hate it.

Kate doesn't trust us Americans! Well, Obama anyway.

Tam discovers faux scientists will do anything to create a problem that doesn't exist so they can study it and avoid real scientific work that may benefit society and the private sector.

Girls ARE better than boys at school. Thankfully, school sucks.

Supply and demand of sex. Well, we all knew it was this way, we just now have a study that proves it.

More proof artists, especially academic and leftists artists, make sh!tty art and architecture.

"She's got a great personality!"

Sorry, there's going to be some collateral damage ladies. Don't take it personally.

New stories *are being reported like thi*s, Kathy. Not in the MSM, but in the Manosphere, Conservativesphere and the new media. It not only results in more truthful reporting, but better writing and more-entertaining news.

Correct, The Manosphere is not shallow. Because we cannot be shallow. We will be what we are programmed to be and what we prefer to be. Deriding male nature as "shallow" is like lecturing the sky for being blue.

ARRRRGHHHH!

Everybody hates HR, Clarissa. It's an affirmative action program for otherwise unemployable women.

I'll say it again for the cheap seats. A disproportionate percent of women simply traded in their "housewive/mom" job so they could go and do THE EXACT SAME THING, just instead of it being tending their own children they:

1. are taking care of other women's children and
2. get to pay taxes on the income they are now earning
3. while driving up the overall tax bill that needs to be paid because their other-women's-children-rearing is through the state

Judgy Bitch's original article.

Red Pill Wifey goes over some basics.

Meanwhile, in Academia.

"Women's Work"

February 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've pointed this out before, but the majority of modern day "women's work" is simply the same old and much-hated "traditional women's work" but this time it's not rearing, raising or educating your own children, it's rearing, educating and raising OTHER women's children through a state job.

I linked to her in the "ladies night," but Judgy Bitch's post was so succinct, precise and thorough I wanted to link to it on its own.

It's a Beautiful Day to Commit a Crime

February 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You could work hard, pay half in taxes, and have your wealth confiscated at a later date you could do that...

or...

you could commit crimes instead!

Sadly, a life of crime is becoming easier than a legit corporate career. Just make sure you do it in a country that is favorable to criminals.

Cuban Green Bay Packer Fans

February 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From escaping Castro's regime to becoming a Packer Fan in the 1960's.

The End of Low Tier Law "Schools"

February 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The end is near.

Hopefully this will mean less desperate (and crappy lawyers) taking on and launching frivolous cases to pay back their student loans.

Exacting a Toll of Revenge from Girls on the Dance Floor

February 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

AKA, the latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

This broadcast includes the Captain's adventures while his girlfriend is out of town. The adventures include:

- trying to find the worst block in the ghetto of Minneapolis
- playing wingman to one of his buddies as they go to "pick up chicks"
- dealing with 20 something floozies at a country bar
- why liberal arts majors are to blame for high gas prices

Apologies in advance for my coughing, I lost my voice the night before.

Update - Apparently there is a limited bandwidth at Box.com that i have already exceeded for my monthly allotment. The only way you can listen is to listen to it online, you can't download it. I will be changing the host to 4share unless anybody else can recommend a better location.

The Advice Deficit

February 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Normally when I do my "bachelor grocery shopping" I ensure I go to a grocery store with self-checkout lanes. I do not care to suffer Tilly pulling out her coupons, moms stocking up on their monthly groceries for a family of 6, nor Herman the retiree paying with a check. I want in, I want out, I want to go home. Unfortunately this last time around I choose "poorly" and was stuck in a line as this particular grocery store did not have the self-check out lanes. This meant only on thing - I was going to be forced to view those stupid women's magazines on the magazine racks.

Long ago I wrote a letter to Super-Valu (the corporation that owns several grocery chains) in the vain hopes of them maybe putting up some guy magazines or just something that wouldn't melt my brain cells like People or Us. No dice. And so there I was looking at the covers of every gossip/trash magazine possible, fully understanding now how Barack Obama got elected.

But then something occurred to me.

What if you were to stack up all the magazines that dispense advice for women and compare it to a stack of magazines that provide advice for men. I imagine it would look like one of them "how big is a trillion dollars" sort of pictographs where the stack of $100 bills reaches the moon and the men's stack would be 2 Benjamins tall.

Naturally this results in an "advice deficit" where the women have a HUGE surplus of advice being dispensed and men barely have any. Heck, a lot of women even feel charitable and occasionally stop giving advice to women so they can give some advice to men out of sheer pity. However, while women dispensing advice at volumes a billion times that of men, there are two major problems with the advice deficit.

First there is the appalling lack of advice as well as leadership for men. As my readership/viewership grows I'm amazed at the types and volume of questions I get from young boys and men. Amazed because it's so blindingly obvious there was no father figure or male role model providing any kind of guidance or leadership. Whether this was because their fathers were absent or their fathers were present, but were not manly, it doesn't matter. These boys are completely clueless about many aspects of life that they shouldn't be by their age.

"So, um, how do I approach a girl?"
"I want to major in poetry, but your book says that would be stupid."
"What should I do with my life?"

It angers me at first when I get questions or I see such helplessness, but the fact these are common questions coming from nearly all ages of men/boys not only speaks to the severity of the problem, but how widespread it is. Inevitably my rage turns to pity when I realize there's nearly 2 generation of young boys hitting the market clueless, unarmed, untrained and prone to be chattel for the meat grinder.

Thankfully, though, there is some hope. The internet, along with the handful of men's health magazines and other resources are gain notoriety and significance. But given the "introductory" or "elementary" level the recipients of such advice are at, means we have a long road ahead to get them up to speed and on the path towards a productive life.

Second, is there is just plain too much advice for women. The market is flooded with advice. And not only is it flooded, it's flawed and erroneous about 85% of the time.

In financial markets, when you get "flawed" or "bad" information there are costs and consequences. Namely if you make an investment or trade on flawed data, when reality or the correct information hits the market, the stock price drops and you lose money. Of course markets are not always 100% efficient and can remain undervalued or overvalued for long periods of time (for example the housing bubble was an example of a market feeding off of flawed data for several years). But the larger point is that with such an abundance of worthless advice, women can hardly hope to make any significant or serious improvements in their lives following it. (Heck, I'd imagine 75% of the time the advice is contradicted anyway). This is now starting to show with happiness levels of women dropping, the "sages" of the women's world proving their advice was wrong, as well as a social and economic breakdown of the nation and culture.

The end result is a tale of two economies, the differences of which go a long ways in explaining the rise of the "Manosphere" and the relative stagnation of its female counterpart. In the "male market" for advice, you have a DESPERATE and HUGE demand for genuine and effective advice. Boys/men are clueless, hitting the real world, finding out the BS they were fed by the "asexual, single mom, effeminate father, absentee father, public school teacher" matrix was flawed, ineffective, politically motivated, ulterior, and ultimately damaging. Therefore, any man who, either through good fathering or by going through the tortuous process of self-experimentation and self-teaching, can provide effective and pertinent manly advice is worth his weight in gold. It is not a coincidence that many men make their living as "Pick Up Artists," bloggers, dating coaches, financial advisers and authors about men's issues. There are so few GENUINE and REAL men contrasted with the demand for their experiences, wisdom and independent thought, that they can become something as statistically improbable as a "successful blogger." And given the shortage of real (or even) present fathers, the future of the industry looks good.

In the "female market" for advice you have the exact opposite. You have more than enough women willing to provide advice for a market that really doesn't want it, and didn't ask for it. This results in a ton of "noise" where there is no clear or confirmed "wisdom" or "common sense." Not to mention with such flood of suppliers, those suppliers are incentived to play to the lowest common denominator to make their sales. Ergo, much like leftists politicians, instead of being harsh and truthful, supplying real-world advice when needed, they find it easier to placate, suck up to, and tell women what they WANT to hear, not what they need to hear. The result can be seen not just in the sheer volume of worthless women's magazines and blogs, but (what I found particularly interesting) the very young age of of the "female dispensers of wisdom." How is any college age girl a legitimate authority on anything? The answer is simple - she isn't. But she never intended to be a kind, altruistic soul, aiming to help out those less-advantaged than her via her "wisdom." It's all about her. She WANTS to dispense advice and (hopefully) get paid for it. Whether that advice is helpful or damaging, the recipients of it be damned.

Of course, consequences are to be expected. Most of the "authors" I researched when compiling "The Dowd Crowd" are in one way or another subsidized in their employment. They either work multiple jobs, married an editor, or married rich. Their "career" is more of a hobby in that what they are peddling is nothing special, nothing unique and cannot command an audience to fully financially support themselves. But worse still is the social and societal costs of essentially lying to girls and women with this tornado of flawed and pandering advice. All these columnists and faux-sages have done is ruin the lives of their audiences. Much like the "single parent, single mom, effeminate dad, public school teacher, kumbaya" matrix misled young boys about...well...pretty much everything, so to has the "female advice industry" ruined the lives of girls and young women.

In theory, then, this should give rise to demand equally forthright, honest and blunt advice in the female advice market. In other words, if a woman like Dr. Helen, Woman and Dragon, Haley and Susan Walsh, etc., were to write a book or a blog, they should be able to capture a significant market of women looking for true leadership, guidance, and advice (and to some extent they have). Unfortunately, I believe the rationalization hamsters of most women are so addicted to the lies and flawed advice they've received, no amount of legitimate and constructive advice will ever penetrate the squeaking of their hamster wheels.

If this article helped you, help the Captain! Do your shopping on Amazon today!

How Our Political Debates Prove Futility

February 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Step back from the fray, if you will, and try to view the political landscape through a different lens.

It will take some doing, but once you do this you will see the point I'm trying to make and in doing so will allow yourself a bit of respite and a happier life.

If you think about it, the primary or "main" political debates of our time could be summarized as such:

Global warming
The redistribution of wealth
The individual vs the commune
Facts over feelings
Race/Diversity/Sex over character and accomplishment
Federal Reserve monetary policy of increasing the money supply

I'm sure there are more, but I just have one question about the above-mentioned debates:

Why in the Patron Saint's Name of Frick are we even debating these things?

I'm serious, WHY are these even debates? Why are they up for discussion? Any intellectually honest individual, let alone a commonsensical 8 year old can resolve them and knows the adult, real world answer to them. But there they are, every day at the forefront of political debate.

The reason I point this out is because if THESE are the major and unresolved political debates of our time, it only shows you just how far to insanity society has moved and just how doomed we really are.

For example, take global warming.

Has it been proven? No, not by a long shot. There's just as much counter evidence as there is evidence that it there is global warming, that it's caused by humans, and that it will have serious consequences. To the slightly experinced and adult mind, you can see it for what it is (a scam), but for people on the left, it is a veritable religion. The irony, of course, is that the left will ridicule and mock people for believing in a religion, but (because global warming serves their political aims as well as provides them a convenient way to self-abscribe worth) they will never forfeit it. This forces us adults on the right to come down to their level and debate something as amorphous, intangible and irrelevant as a religion.

Another example, the redistribution of wealth.

The finances and economics of the country are such that people really expect and feel entitled to a life paid for by other people. The CHILDISHLY SIMPLE concept that everybody needs to be self-supporting and independent, otherwise society collapses, is lost on a majority of "adult" leftists. The fact the merits of independence and not being dependent on others is even being debated, again, shows just how desperate, pathetic and sad the situation has become.

And federal reserve monetary policy? OH, THIS TIME IT'S DIFFERENT???? Right, because flooding the economy with currency JUST THIS ONE MORE TIME will work.

Hell, Minnesota voted AGAINST requiring ID to vote, earning it the all-time greatest "WTF???"

Ergo, I ask the question - why even debate?

Along the lines of enjoying the decline, how precisely do you fight or argue such stupidity, childishness, naivete and brainwashing? If I can't convince a woman that she is different than a man both physically, mentally, and sexually, and that it is in her best interests to acknowledge and adhere to these facts

AND I run the risk (shoot, guarantee) of being accused of sexism then why even bother? They are so childish, so intellectually dishonest, so hopeless and so brainwashed, you are merely wasting your breath, achieving nothing, and alienating political classes who will do you no good if you dare to do so.

The larger point I'm trying to make is that if our debates have degraded to this level of stupidity and idiocy, it proves there is a critical mass of massively stupid and ignorant people and there is no point in trying to debate them. Additionally, there is no point in getting worked up about the dismal outcomes of elections as it is Idiocracy electing its own demise. It is just all the more reason to not waste what precious life you have arguing with leftists, worrying about the future, and proof you should be out enjoying the decline instead.

Telling Your Boss to Do It Himself

February 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For when you can't read your boss' mind.

Language warning.

How to Troll Libertarians

February 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HAR!!!! (it's a short video, about 9 seconds)

Twin Cities Sponsor - Conceal and Carry

February 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For those of you in the Twin Cities I have a new sponsor. Mike Seman will be having a conceal and carry class in the St. Louis Park neighborhood. Here is the information for TODAY'S class, but if you call Mike he will let you know about other classes he has in the near future:

4pm-9:30pm
Meeting at Midwest Protection Agency
6009 Wayzata Blvd. Suite 222
Minneapolis, MN 55416
(763) 421-2966 Ext. 601

Cost: $100.00
Range qualification at Bill’s Gun Range (Range fees of approximately $20.00 paid directly to Bill’s)
Equipment needed: Pistol, 50 rounds of ammo, eye and ear protection.
A free loaner gun is available by request.

Speaking for Hours, But Saying Nothing

February 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

One thing that amazes me about Barack Obama (and to a lesser extent, most other presidents and politicians) is his ability to speak for hours but say absolutely nothing. I never watched the "State of the Union Address" no matter who was president because when the president speaks, his speech is tailored for:

- low information voters
- the unintelligent masses
- people who are not decided yet in their political beliefs
- ignorant people
- weaker minds

In short, it's aimed at about a high school level of maturity, intellect, and wisdom. It simply wastes my time.

What gets me more, however, is that people actually fall for it. Of course, this is explained above with the lower level of human that these speeches are aimed at, but I'm still amazed people don't see through it.

Regardless, Muskegon Pundit, has a piece about how the left runs circles around the right in getting their base riled up, mobilized and energized. He is right, but only addresses half the formula.

Yes, the left is better at it, but they have an easier job because their base has more of the qualities and traits bullet-pointed above than the right's. Additionally, their message is an easier sell. How hard is it to sell the "ice cream and cake" promises of socialism compared to the austerity "broccoli and you'll like it" capitalist realism?

In the end, yes the republicans could do more to improve their marketing. But before they waste resources and time, they have to acknowledge it's a losing proposition or at least an uphill battle. The republicans should be taking a much more harsh and stern approach with the American people, not trying to woo them. Pulling the Lester Burnham, being the father who's had enough and puts his foot down. The republicans should say, "to hell with you. We're done. We're voting with the left and crashing this system because you children are too stupid to see where this will lead. We are going to make damn sure the left gets everything it wants and you'll see just how 'great' their ideas are." In short, feed them so much cake and ice cream they throw up and beg for broccoli.

The Southern Man Enjoys the Decline!

February 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I think we can safely say The Southern Man and his cadre of friends are enjoying the decline!

The Microbrew and Brewpub Bubble

February 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

On my lengthy great western motorcycle ride, I noticed something in pretty much every Colorado town I stopped in - "brewpubs" or "microbrews."

Couldn't pull into town without seeing one or having the hotel desk clerk tell me about "the new brew house that opened down the street." Heck, even in Wyoming there was a new micro-brew being built.

Yes, yes, microbrews this, brewpubs that. How "cool" would that be?

Naturally my cynical and (though incredibly down to earth and realistic, but still) evil nature kicked in and I have come to an epiphany. An epiphany nobody will like because I'm once again the party pooper, raining on everybody's parade.

The brewpub is the next bubble.

Not as big as the housing bubble or the education bubble, and it certainly won't affect the larger economy, but if my experience in looking at hundreds of utterly craptastic business models, not to mention my economic spidey senses, are worth anything the microbrew is going to collapse.

The reason for my suspicion is that a brewpub has all the makings of a failed business.

First, it's what the PROPRIETOR wants to do, NOT what the market demands.

Do people want a brew pub in their town? Sure.

Will people buy beer? Of course.

But if the market is flooded with a billion micro-brews and brewpubs, their margins will be too low to be profitable. Besides, there already is a place that sells beer. It's called a "bar." And it doesn't have all that nasty overhead that brewpubs do.

Second, admit it. You thought it would be cool to start a brewpub. And that's the second dead give away. Like a middle aged man starting a "sports bar" or a trophy wife starting a "horse hobby farm" none of you have ever given a consideration as to whether or not the damn thing will be profitable. It's like "Restaurant Impossible" (which I LOVE) where the guy goes in to help the people who have a failing restaurant and ALWAYS ALWAYS ALWAYS ALWAYS they;

1. Never have done any accounting.
2. Don't know how much they're losing
3. Are in debt, mortgaging their house and selling their 401k's
4. Never had any experience running a restaurant.
5. Cite such galactic stupidity as "it's always been my dream to run a restaurant."

Hobbies are not businesses. They are money-losing fun things you do. Not something you throw your retirement fund at.

Third, permit me a bit of discrimination - too many young man are starting them. Men who still wear their hats backwards and say "hawt" instead of "hot." Yes, yes, I've seen plenty of the proprietors be the aging, desperate to do something with their lives and their measly 401k balance, "hey brewpub! That'll save us during our retirement." They are out there. But nearly half I've ran into are young men in their 20's and early 30's simply making the mistake their middle aged trophy wife counterparts do with horse farms. They are once again blinded by "dreams" and not reality.

Fourth and finally, brewpubs are cool. And bankers like "cool" more than profit. I know a score of small, community banks and their retarded legions of aging male bankers who will be so enamored with the idea of financing a brewpub, that the young, naive entrepreneurs pitching the idea could have the world's worst projections and worst presentations and it won't matter. Desperate middle aged bankers will fall in love with the idea of a self-brewing Sam Malone, remember Cheers fondly, and finance it anyway. This provides the final ingredient for a classical "bubble" - an extension of credit.

Of course after Chip and Tad fail to file their tax returns for the 3rd year in a row and need to have their perpetually maxed out line of credit extended and increased for the 12th time, even moronic community banks will tire. And maybe, just maybe, saner heads will prevail at the bank and foreclose on the now-aged and decrepit property and equipment. That or the FDIC will come in, audit that file and make the bank foreclose.

Now, do I have any empirical data?

Actually, I do. But it isn't conclusive yet. I'm making a bet that in the future this bubble will burst. That cool micro-brew down the road will be no longer in about 3-5 years. The charm it brought to your village will be forever lost and you'll just have to go to the regular bar to get your more-than-ample microbrews. Of course I could be wrong too. Maybe there is a ton of demand. Maybe the brewpub is the next evolution that will replace the bar. But if I know my naive American dreamers faking it as serious entrepreneurs, and the community bank industry that is only more than happy to do their best to finance failing business models, we have a nice little boondoggle ahead of us.

How an 18 Year Old Can Be Better Off Than Most 40 Year Olds Today

February 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When you cut wood (with a chainsaw) it's pretty much pointless to be trying to listen to an MP3 player. You can't hear it and the wires just get in the way. You want to be safe so unnecessary equipment (scarf, headphones, etc) is just something to "not do" when chainsawing. This leaves your brain to think and just like hiking or long distance motorcycle rides, I have come up with the occasional epiphany cutting wood, and yesterday was just such an example.

I was thinking about "my generation" and realized that most us late 30/early 40 somethings:

- Do not have a positive net worth
- Are in debt
- Are working jobs we were capable of back in our 20's
- Do not have significant retirement savings
- Have children we can't afford
- And are simply treading water financially

The reason for this is the reason for all financial and economics problems - debt.

Despite going to college 15 years ago most 40 year olds still have student loans or are "just now" paying them off. Most people in my generation also thought buying "cool cars" was a brilliant idea and insist on having new cars (a habit developed and held over from middle school where you piss away money on stupid sh!t). And then most of my generation also has credit card debt. Not the credit card debt you pay off every month.

Oh no no no.

No, we use those 24% interest rate credit cards for long term financing of the crap we don't need, but must have. (But it's alright, learning compounding and exponential functions in the 5th grade was for "squares" and so what we don't know won't hurt us!)

Add it all up together and you have somebody who's technically been an "adult" for 2 decades, but is also worse off when they started at the age of 18.

So how can an 18 year old avoid this fate?

Simple. You just don't go into debt.

The hurdle is so low (if you care to "beat" your 40 year old counterpart) that you just need to avoid borrowing money and you will be in better financial shape than your average 40 year old.

I know for the younger kids out there, this seems crazy, but it it's true. Yes, you may view a 40 year old as "old" or "wise" or "experienced." And yes you may say to yourself (as I did when I was 18),

"Wow, you know. 40 year olds sure have their act together! They're REAL adults! I better listen to them!"

But the truth is they no more intelligent or experience than you are, let alone when they were 18.

So it is here you can do yourself a HUGE favor and learn from the mistakes of others.

First (BOYS!), don't be a moron and buy a car you can't afford. Forget crippling your financial future by taking on student loans, a car is even worse. It's not an investment, it goes down in value. And the truth is at the age of 18 using a car as a means to "get chicks" is a losing proposition. The reason why is if you are going to play that game, you are going up against men with REAL cars. Brand new Beemers. Brand new Mercedes. And men with checkbooks that can buy and sell you. Girls who also play this game KNOW THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A 2012 MERCEDES and a 2013 MERCEDES. And will certainly not be impressed with your pimped out Honda Civic with "sweet" fins.

Second, don't be a moron and go to college if the price is too high relative to the earnings potential you will have after you graduate. In other words don't major in a stupid subject. If you go to school, graduate at 22 and you STILL HAVEN'T PAID OFF YOUR LOANS 18 YEARS LATER, you majored in something stupid and something that could have been taught at the library for free. It OBVIOUSLY didn't generate the earnings that would rationalize the $50,000 in tuition and 4 (or 6 or 8) years of your youth. And if you say,

"You know, college isn't all about the money. It's about becoming a well-rounded person" please find a sledge hammer and hit yourself in the head repeatedly.

Third (GIRLS), do not buy trinkets and crap that have no functional value. If you're going to get a credit card and buy things, buy things like gas, utility bills, electornics, etc. Also, how many of your mother's dresses do you borrow over the course of a year from when she went to high school? Oh "0?" Oh, that's right, because fashion for women is nothing but a scam for you to blow away your money on something that is going to be "obsolete" or "out of style" next year. Instead of trying to keep up with the fads, how about your have your wardrobe be "timeless?" Notice the pictures and fashion below are not from the most recent issue of "Glamour"

Regardless, "shopping" is not an activity or a hobby you do for fun. "Spending money" is not something you should "look forward to doing" or should call up your friends and participate in. It should be practical and functional, serving your needs. Merely acquiring crap on a credit card only serves to enslave you later in life.

Finally, eliminate your rent or mortgage as much as possible.

10 years ago I would have said "independence" is the most important characteristic and trait of a young person, commanding younger people to move out of the house as quickly as possible. Now, forget it. Stay at home as long as you can. Live off of your parents as long as possible. Save as much money as possible. And then, when your parents finally kick you out, find the cheapest place to rent possible. Realize the less stuff you have, the smaller an apartment you need. And if you insist on buying a house, again, find only what you need.

If you do these four simple things (all of which fall under the umbrella of "avoiding debt" aka "spend less than you make") you will be in better financial shape than most 40 year olds. And not only will you be in better financial shape, you'll not have suffered wasting 4-8 years of your youth on a worthless degree, "scrambling climb the corporate ladder," let alone suffer the humiliation of filing for bankruptcy.

This has been a PSA from Cappy Cap.

How Reddit Parallels Democracy and Mob Rule

February 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Davis hits one out of the park. Especially at the 5:45 mark and thereafter.

Pour yourself a drink and enjoy!

The Epitome of Intellectual Honesty

February 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My mom does not like it when I slam on baby boomers. She somehow thinks when I say, "baby boomers" I mean "all of them" which I don't, but again, the Leykis Clause is in effect.

However, I received hope that she is starting to discern between generalizations and specific individuals when she sent me this.

You see, the reason some of you love me, and others hate me, is because I speak my mind based on the observations I see. I don't care whose feelings it hurts because I've suffered enough idiocy and demand to point out the purveyors of that idiocy. One special group of people who purvey an inordinate amount of idiocy upon me and the rest of society are aging baby boomers who decide on a whim to "live their dream," and run off to buy and ride brand new, over-priced, and over-powered motorcycles with absolutely no experience. They endanger not just me and nearly everybody else on the road, but their novice selves.

Now, it doesn't matter if you like my attitude. It doesn't matter if you think I'm cocky. Your driving habits were so spectacularly shitty in:

Sturgis '10
Sturgis '11
Sturgis '12
Beartooth '12
and all points inbetween for all years that I'm strongly recommending all you novice aging boomers who think it's a "cool idea" to get a Spider, a trike, or (heaven forbid) a real motorcycle and clog up all the motorcycle rallies while you 'n "ma" ride with matching helmets, give up that idea and just leave it to the professionals.

Or

ORRRRR!!!

here's another "crazy" idea-maybe you learn to ride first before you drive (not haul) your pristine, brand new Harley's to the various motorcycle rallies thus not becoming another statistic.

Sorry to deliver real world and bad news to you. But, then again, I'm not your parents who told you, you could do no wrong.

Just Can't Let Boys Be Boys, Can You?

February 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was thinking about this, an instance where feminism is forcing itself on men in a social capacity, namely games. And it dawned on me that if you follow this to its logical conclusion, it will not end well for feminists. In other words, promise yourself all the financial aid, assistance, welfare and what have you, the one thing government cannot provide women is the non-financial rewards of live.

Friendship
Romance
Love
Comradery
A Social life.

And the day is going to come when women realize that while socialism and feminism provide for their financial and political needs, neither will be able to provide for their social, romantic and familial needs.

My question is this:

Are women then going to demand the government force men to meet these social needs? Are feminists that selfish and entitlement-mentalitied that they would dare to force men via the government to date, court, marry and socialize with women they really don't want to? Or will they finally admit feminism/socialism (same thing) was nothing but a bill of goods sold to them to garnish their vote for abusive and self-serving politicians? Because I got news for all the little ladies out there who think the government is the solution to all of their problems:

The day the government starts telling/forcing men to marry, date, court, let alone socialize with certain women is the day the guns come out, daddy comes home and you'll see where all the "real men" have gone and just what they think of you telling them to do with their lives.

Enjoy the decline!

Grammar Nazi's, Mall of America Economics, and More!

February 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

on the latest installment of The Clarey Podcast!

(HUGE LANGUAGE WARNING ON THE FIRST SEGMENT, though it IS the best rant against grammar Nazis you'll ever hear)

Forced Discipline and Regimen Month

February 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Most of you know the story, but if you don't I'll give you the very brief version.

My single largest achievement in my life, still to this day is college. Specifically I:

- financed and paid for EVERYTHING (tuition, books, gas, housing, food, insurance, etc.) EVERYTHING
- I worked full time
- I went to school slightly higher than full time (usually taking an extra class over a full credit load)
- graduated 6 months early (and my last semester had only 2 classes)
- with $6,000 cash in the bank
- no debt
- and a 3.96 GPA (lousy Marketing class and their "A-'s")

To achieve this it required a very young, 18 year old Captain to exercise an EXTREME amount of self-control and discipline. Every minute was scheduled in my day and I was literally coming into class with 2 minutes to spare at times, eating bagels as I was walking from my apartment to work, every single second of the day was utilized and consumed. Above all else, this was self-inflicted.

Capable of a monstrous amount of work, production, and dedication, it would take me 7 years to realize there was no employer in the US that would use me to my full potential. Everybody wanted to go home when the clock struck 5PM, no middle aged boss would entrust a 22 year old (no matter what his CV said) with any kind of responsibility or challenge, and so, at most, I operated at about 40% my full capacity, though usually I would say averaging around 15-20%. This caused a certainly level of dismay and depression in that no matter how much I could or wanted to work, the limiting factor in my career would be the limitations of employers. My success was outside my control. I would not become that corporate executive at 30 with a house paid off and a nice car. I would jump from job to job scaring the hell out of every employer and HR director.

The situation worsened with two additional events - the housing crash and the two elections of Barack Obama. The housing bubble showed me just how corrupt and dysfunctional the finance, and in general, corporate/employment world is. Ass kissing, brown nosing, rent seeking, networking and lobbying is how you get ahead, not hard work and innovating thinking. Something I just plain couldn't stomach. However, even if you were to hold your nose and engage the art of ass kissing, it would be pointless in that it became very apparent with the elections of Obama any amount of production and work (whether of the ass-kissing or ass-kicking variety) would simply be confiscated.

I was enraged, gave up on my dreams, accepted reality, stopped feeling sorry for myself, replaced them with new ones, and now am enjoying the decline.

However, there is one regret I have - a lack or decrease in discipline, self-control and regimen.

Over the years of operating at a fraction of my 22 year old self's potential, I've had neither the incentive or reason to "give it my all." This has resulted in a slacking off in my personal estimation, knowing I am not achieving all that I could. Yes, admitted, there has been no opportunity to "achieve all that I could," but where idleness exists, other things creep in.

For example, while used to being engaged the second I woke up to the second I went to bed, my brain needed something to fill the down time after college. Working out and running only covers so much, but soon, with the demise of the finance industry, the country in general, not to mention your college buddies all get married and have children, alcohol now plays a large role in my life. When the chores are done, the book sales are tabulated and the budget confirmed, it's off to the bar because it will knock my brain out until my friends come home.

Another example is teh interwebz. While this one is a good thing (who knew blogging, a podcast and a youtube channel was a way to make money), checking e-mail, approving comments, and spending 3-4 hours a day on the internet is just not good in the long run.

And video games? Love them! But I get that sick feeling in my stomach that you normally got as a kid watching too much daytime TV when you faked being sick so you could stay at home and not go to school. And heck, I don't even play them that much.

What it is, is something I believe most industrious men of our generation face - a lack of purpose and a lack of challenge. And it is a problem that needs to be addressed.

Not that we have been sitting here, saying "woe is me." Nor have we just been asking people "what do we do???" as there is no shortage of self-improvement and life-guidance on The Manosphere. But industrious, adventuresome and capable as we are, we men (and women too) need to fully realize our potential, and COMMIT to doing so, not merely get by. And while we may not wish to return to our 100% full-throttle selves ALL THE TIME, I believe revisiting such a regimen in life would be useful, helpful and healthy.

Therefore I am declaring this "Forced Discipline and Regimen Month." I am going to go back to my 22 year old self-capacity and operate at that level. Even though there is no day time job, I am going to:

work out everyday (running one day, weights the other) abide STRICTLY by the no carb diet no matter how hard it is to find food without carbs not consume alcohol work on every project that needs to be done, putting off and procrastinating nothing work from the time I wake up to the time I go to bed schedule work/projects to ensure there is no shortage of work and time is efficiently used

To bring the element of "Forced" discipline I am also posting this picture here, not out of arrogance or ego, but for all to judge and ensure I abide. If there is no improvement in a month you will mock, ridicule, and deride me...just like you schmoes do anyway.

Everybody else is welcome to participate in "Forced Discipline and Regimen Month." By the end of late March I believe people will be not only physically improved, but mentally improved as well. If you are so bold and wish to "force" yourself to do it, the ole Captain will post your pre-FDRM pic here.

Polish Girls Enjoy the Decline!

February 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why aren't you!?

Operation Coffee House VII

February 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ahhhh, yes. Can't you just predict it?

Yet another coffee house that claims to have internet access, but doesn't, either because the staff know not the basics of computer netowrking or they fail to understand how coffee shops really work.

Ok, let me explain it to you. The only reason coffee shops exist is because artists, authors, and people who all fall under the "unemployed" category can't just sit at home and do their "work."
They need to get out of their hovel of an apartment and do their "work" at a different place. Understand, I'm not necessarily against this. Heck, I'm even a hypocrite myself as that's what I'm doing (though Operation Coffee House by its definition mandates I go to a coffee house to do my work). I can understand if you have the ability to work from wherever, sure, why not a coffee house?
But for the most part, and based on all my research in the "Operation Coffee House" series, only about 5% of the "artists" and "authors" I see at coffee houses are legitimately authors and artists.
Regardless, my point is that if you don't have internet access, you don't have customers because they're not coming their for the coffee (ironically). They're just getting out of the house and need internet.

Anyway, so here I sit, typing this into Notepad to be later copied and pasted in the blog.

Today's coffee house is a doozy. Hoity toity with the fancy schmancy with the oopdy loopdy. I'm in Linden Hills, and if you don't know about Linden Hills it's where all the aging, old fart liberals retire off of their government pension at 55 or they've finally come into possession of their trust fund.
So it's grey hair central here and I, along with the staff are by far the youngest souls in the neighborhood. We are also in a much lower income bracket and it shows. This coffee shop has wine, champagne, beer and a menu. I could be wrong and just have assumed it was a coffee shop when in reality it's a restaurant, but as far as my cursory drive through of the Linden Hills area told me, two coffee shops are out of business and this was the only one open. Restaurant or coffee shop it will have to suffice.

The coffee I'm currently drinking will by far be the most memorable. That I can guarantee because (I swear to god) it MUST have goat cheese in it. Yes, goat cheese coffee. You can tell you're in the shadows of upper income tax bracket pensioneers when you have goat cheese in your coffee.
Normallly I'll drink and eat anything unless it's absolutely disgusting. And this coffee qualifies. I don't know if they purposely put goat cheese in the coffee or if maybe the coffee was in the fridge next to the goat cheese and absorbed its flavor, but it's horrible.

Just like the goat cheese flavored coffee is unique, so is this coffee house. The music is currently Johnny Cash, the architecture is really nice, and while I still could beat every man here in a physical fight, I actually don't want too. None of them look to be the hipster type, but then again, they're pretty much all older.

That's about it for this coffee house. I wish I could say more, but it must be a slow day. There is nobody working on their "screenplays," nobody working on their latest fund raising initiative. Heck, you don't even have posters up on a billboard advertising the latest crappy bands or the latest leftist rally or protest. Oddly enough, I don't even feel comfortable here. Almost too sterile based on what I'm used to with the other coffee houses.

Bachelors of Art in Film

February 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So I like to study films. I totally like, ummmm....watching movies and stuff. But dude, why am I unemployed??? It's that f@cking George Bush and those republicans keeping me down man!

Ahhh, if only you idiotic children (and that's what you are) purchased "Worthless."

When Surgeons Go Galt

February 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our Surgeon Agent in the Field via an e-mail exchange:

Earnings potentia as a surgeon? Obamacare will make once-self-sufficient privately practicing physicians into insurance and government lackeys, fully employed and owned by hospitals. Those who have no exit strategy will work more and be paid less. The number of demoralized and retiring doctors I am witnesseing now has spiked like nothing I have seen before. Supposedly 1/3 want to get out within the next 10 years, half of these are under 55. Many of these will talk a big game and do nothing, of course, addicted as they are to their big-spending lifestyles and status as physicians. Due to the length and intensity of training doctors are more susceptible than most to living lives devoid of interests outside of work. Sad. But the resourceful ones will retool and do very well in non-clinical disciplines. My advice to anyone I meet is to secure a good doctor now if you don't already have one. As medicaid expands, patients rush in, and doctors rush out, it is going to get very interesting.

Sometimes life is about more than earning potential. I would rather do meaningful work, performed freely on my own terms for less. And I have no interest in being a functionary in Barack Obama's scheme to "redistribute" my skills to others by further corrupting the free market price of these services with ever-expanding insurance involvement. Learning to be a surgeon took a decade of my youth and hundreds of thousands of dollars. I have quietly gone Galt in my own way... withdrawing myself from any insurance or government payment schemes and performing procedures that are cash only. I may get out entirely, who knows. Obama thinks that if he dishes it out that doctors will be forced to take it. Some, maybe, but not all.

Thanks again for the wonderful book. The greatest benefit from your book really was psychological. It is time Enjoy the Decline!

our agent also wrote:

Freedom-oriented people need to understand that a crisis of care is coming... Not now, but soon enough. I can rattle off in a flash the names of friends and aquaintances who have either gotten out of the pipeline (dropping out during training to get MBAs or to take jobs in consulting.. One friend is selling real estate in NYC!) or very capable fifty-somethings who retired or are planning on retiring very soon. In the case of the retiring docs these are people who really enjoy what they do. These are very capable surgeons, not easily replaced by a nurse. Think of the loss to a community of a single 50-something surgeon. That type of experience takes decades to acquire. This is what liberals fail to understand because much of the work they do requires no skill per se. They just assume that someone who knows how to "fix it" will always be around.

Not now, but in coming decades we will see more care delivered by fully-employed nurse practitioners, docs imported from abroad, and remaining US docs who either cannot leave (ie not brightest and best) or who have no level of discomfort working in a top-down inefficient Soviet-style bureaucratic hospital environment. Brightest and best in the US will be in derm and plastics or running cash-only private practices at all price points.

The employed Soviet-style docs will gow ever more entitled and dissatisfied, taking on an SEIU sort of culture. There will be strike attempts, a la the red-shirted Chicago Teacher's Union. Then a law will be written prohibiting strikes. Non-private Obama medicine will be the equivalent of public school. Difference is, most people at least get out of public school alive. Those with money will buy the best privately.
I only have one observation/comment:

You leftists are going to learn real soon the difference between a government mandated "entitlement" or "promise" and reality.

Enjoy the decline!

I Lost My Court Case

February 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The Mayor has ruled AGAINST the Captain and all the minimalists out there.

I tried fellas, I tried.

Check Your Nuts

February 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Before I hear complaints, let me just quote one thing:

"Save the Boobies!"

Remember that Breast Cancer awareness campaign?

Good, now shut up and don't give me complaints about the crassness about this new testicular cancer campaign I just concocted up.

I was running, listening to Bill Burr's podcast on Lance Armstrong. As you know, Lance had testicular cancer and was cured of it. There has since been a movement akin to the pink ribbon campaign to help prevent testicular cancer. There was Movember I believe, but honestly, men are not going to respond to something like that. We don't need a large, glitzy, "testicular cancer month" kind of BS to prevent testicular cancer. We want something practical. Something simple. Something that doesn't force the rest of the world to wear a color nobody likes. And somehting akin to punching a guy in his shoulder saying, "hey dumbass, go get checked and look out for cancer."

So let me introduce to you the "Check Your Nuts" campaign.

It's simple.

Testicular cancer is easily preventable, all we (men) need to do is "check our nuts" once in a while. My doc recommended fidgeting with the boys once a month in the shower to make sure there are no bumps or irregularities. But the problem is how often do you remember to fidget with your nuts?

Oh sure, we scratch our balls every morning, peel them off the side of our leg after playing sweaty sports. But we don't "survey" them.

Therefore, it is an issue of remembering to do so and I think if we here in The Manosphere occasionally sign off one of our posts with "check your nuts" or sign off an e-mail with "check your nuts" it will get more and more men to check their nuts on a regular basis, thereby preventing cancer.

Therefore, not only should you guys "enjoy the decline" you should also

"check your nuts!"

This has been a PSA from Captain Capitalism.

Joe "Buy a Shot Gun" Biden

February 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Priceless footage comparing (admitted ditzes) firing shotguns and women firing AR 15's.

My honest opinion is 9MM+ caliber pistol for a woman for home defense is probably best until she learns to shoot a shotgun.

How to Never Lose a Debate

February 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's pretty tough, but if you work at it, you too can never lose a debate.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

February 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

LOOKS WARNING!

Isn't it ironic her name is "Liz Jones?"

hat tip

Karl Enjoys the Decline!

February 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Apparently I am a "hat evangelist!"

You can buy Karl's patented GLORIOUS HAT here.

An "Aspiring Rap Artist" TWOFER!

February 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Aspiring Rap Artist #1
Aspiring Rap Artist #2

The second one you just can't make up.

Confessions of a Worthless Degreed Person

February 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Part 3 of the series.

In this segment Jorge discusses how thoroughly brainwashed his elder sister is as the realities of her worthless degree fail to gain acceptance with her brain. HORSES are included in this story (as those beasts usually find a way into my world) as well as how a sibling has to deal with other siblings when it comes to delusion foisted upon them by socialism, educational brainwashing and the leftist disease.

Remember, all of this pain can be avoided, and the disease inoculated against by purchasing and reading "Worthless." And YES it's available in Kindle!

Captain's Afternoon Linkage

February 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I knew a guy who did this during the Dotcom days. Would get funding from naive banks and equity investors, pay himself hundreds of thousands, buy fancy cars and talk his way out of any problems. He never had a product. Good news is he's living with his parents-in-laws last I heard.

Wow! Matt writes a piece that doesn't include any epitaphs, curse words and might actually be of help to people without insulting them away! Good going Matt!

The Great Take Down of the American Female Education Bubble.

"Any degree is a good degree" says professor inexorably tied to Big Education and vampirically dependent upon naive kiddies' tuition dollars. Let's light this one up like a bomber over Dresden circa 1944, shan't we?

I know math is tough for girls, but it must be REALLY tough for democrat women.

The fact Russell Brand even has a show is more proof the electorate is predominantly composed of morons and you should enjoy the decline instead.

The Politically Leftist Rationalization Hamster

February 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you are unaware of what a "rationalization hamster" is, it is a metaphorical reference created by a man with the pen name "Roissy." This metaphor is typically used in a romantic, sexual or psychological context, explaining how (usually) women will explain or "rationalize away" their conflicting or contradictory behavior. The purpose of this "rationalization hamster" is to allow it's "host" the ability to live in denial, avoid criticism and shame, and to protect their ego at all costs.

For example the rationalization hamster will never allow a single mother of 4, at the age of 44, with a divorce under her belt to contemplate and self-inflect that maybe she chose the wrong guy and made a horrendous mistake in having children and has caused harm to those children. The rationalization hamster will "spin its wheels" and desperately try to find a reason or "rationalization" as to why it is not the woman's fault and why she is 100% innocent and guilt free in the manner. The ex was a "jerk," she loves her children, yada yada yada. The rationalization hamster will also go to great lengths to shield said hypothetical person from her dating prospects.

"She's a MILF"

"She's a cougar!"

"44 is the new 24!"

"Watch Eat, Pray, Love, You'll See!"

In other words, the rationalization hamster is a coping mechanism because the host's brain cannot sustain the entirety of her situation otherwise she would be crushed and no longer able to function.

Naturally, as the hamster spins its wheel faster and faster, creating more and more excuses and rationalizations, it places its host on a trajectory of a delusional life, especially in the context of "sexual market value" (ie-you're always hot, you're always a catch, men are evil for not wanting to raise 4 other mens' children, etc.). Since the host doesn't live, nor make decisions, based in the real world, this trajectory sends her at mach 4 into "The Wall."

"The Wall" is the theoretical point at which the empirical and anecdotal evidence is so numerous, compelling and condemning, the host has no choice but to ignore the rationalization hamster and accept reality. The host is "all of the sudden" 55, men are no longer hitting on her, but her younger contemporaries, and despite being the hot thing back in the Reagan administration, she is effectively now a grandma, whether she has children or not.

Currently, there is debate if it is even possible for a host to hit "The Wall" in that it requires the host to accept reality. Rationalization hamsters are INCREDIBLY powerful creatures driving women to think they're still sexy at the age of 70 (Jane Fonda any one?). And no post-Wall-collision hosts have been identified in the wild, just women with their cats wondering why they can't find a man. It is merely a theory our scientists are working on, akin to "can you escape the event horizon of a black hole?" and is one that may never be solved.

Regardless of the socio-sexual-romantic ramifications of the "Rationalization Hamster," the metaphor actually provides a great political model as well. Specifically, a model that explains leftist thought and behavior, and can provide great insight and practical uses for those of us not on the left. And once we see the similiarities between that of a (typically) female host of a sexual/socio rationalization hamster and that of a politically leftist rationalization hamster, we can start to draw from it.

First, and most obviously, both are impervious to logic, reason, and above all else empirical data. There is no shortage of instances in my life where I have shown a leftist charts, data, and statistics, of an unbiased nature proving they were flat out wrong, but they STILL came up with a reason or rationalization as to why I was wrong (my favorite being a philosophy doctorate inevitably saying her "perception was reality" and that all of what we were arguing about ultimately didn't matter - she is now a stay at home mom married to a very unhappy surgeon with buyer's remorse).

The reason why is that both types of hosts (socio/sexual, or politically left) do not live in reality. And it's not so much that they don't "live in reality" as much as it is their value is based on lies. If you look at the typical 44 year old single mom with a divorce and 4 kids under her belt, her life is effectively over until the youngest graduates from high school. That is the truth. However, that is a harsh truth to accept and so a rationalization hamster is needed to either help her digest that truth or (as is more commonly the case) deny it outright. For the leftist host of a politically left rationalization hamster the thought process is the same. Most leftists do not achieve anything great in life. Either because of incompetence, incapability or (as is most often the case) laziness. Of course, their egos are far too big and fragile to accept that truth, so their rationalization hamster comes up with rationalization as to why they're

1. oppressed
2. kept down by the corporations man
3. not understood
4. conspiracy theories

etc. etc.

Second is the emotional reactions hosts of rationalization hamsters (social or political) have. Notice when you ask a conservative or a libertarian to describe themselves they will say a "plumber" or a "cop" or a "surgeon." Their trade or job is what defines them first and foremost because that is the value they produce in life. When you ask a leftist to describe him or herself they really produce nothing of value, and so they cite their political ideology as a descriptor of them. Even if they do have a job, the job itself is typically nothing more than a euphemism of their political ideology (activist, crusader, CSR head, director of worthless non-profit, etc.). But further proving the point is what happens when you criticize a host infected with a ratioanlization hamster about their ideology. If you criticize a conservative about being a plumber, let a lone a conservative, they might get irked, but they will dismiss you. They are secure and comfortable in being a plumber and a conservative. YOu criticize a leftist for being ignorant of government finances or that they're not really an "artist" because nobody wants to buy their art, they get ENRAGED. Not because you are being rude, but because you are pointing out the hypocrisy in which they live their lives. You are getting too close to the truth, and you are sending the rationalization hamster into overdrive.

This can been seen in how quickly a debate with a leftist turns into name calling. If you don't like Obama, you're a racist. If you don't want to tax the rich more, you're a sexist. If you want to balance the budget and cut back social security/medicare, you're an "ageist." And dare you insist on dating chicks in shape, you are "shallow" and a cad. Doesn't matter that your concerns are based in reality, reality doesn't occur to them. Their egos MUST be defended at all costs, even if that means ignoring reality.

Third, look at the sheer effort and energy that goes into feeding a political rationalization hamster. If you look at what the primary job of a leftist is, it is to come up with excuses and reasons to be entitled to other people's money. There's never enough money for educating the "childddddreeeeennnnnn." Nearly all leftist arguments culminate into the class the rich "doesn't pay their fair share" (while never specifying what is that "fair share). Feminists claim 1 in 3 women are raped so they can get their precious university funding for a "sexual abuse center" ~~that provides them worthless jobs.~~...errr..."protects women from rapists." And the black community, if there ever was an example, is the saddest and most pathetic epitome of how much a group of people will destroy themselves and their lives because cowardly blaming their problems on racism is easier on the ego than acknowledge illegitimacy rates and fatherlessness. Leftists are no less delusional than the middle aged women consuming Harlequin romance novels, reading feminist articles, watching Sex in the City, all while getting her "Masters in Fat Acceptance."

Fourth, they become "zombies." I believe after a while, the human brain is so indoctrinated and pickled in the propaganda it receives (either because of "pro-women, you go grrrl!!! Grrrrl power media" for sexual/socio rationalization hamsters or leftist indoctrination for political rationalization hamsters) it rejects reality, even without thinking about. You could have the most factual statistics and data that would turn their lives around, but because it doesn't jive with their leftist ideology, they immediately reject it (while of course calling you a racist). You have probably seen this when listening to leftists debate. I don't even think they're cognizant of it. Their brains have been so hardwired and maladjusted that they IMMEDIATELY have the talking point ready to retort your empirical facts and data. It's worse than having no desire to be intellectually honest. It's that they no longer have the capacity to.

I call this this "Zombie Liberal" and its ramifications are quite macabre. Because if the economy ever were to collapse, do you see reasoning with the hordes of starving liberals and leftists whose mental capacity is to blame "everything on Bush?" Do you see a raving leftist, in desperate need of insulin, who, coincidentally by the way, has been brought up to have an entitlement mentality, wanting to sit down and rationally discuss with you about how the "debt to GDP ratio" got too high and when China pulled the plug and the US credit rating went down, that's why gas prices got so high insulin couldn't be transported into the city? The only reason they're reasonably well behaved now and not rioting in the streets is because the lights are still on and they're (in one way or another) getting their government check. Wait for an emergency or when there's no goods to buy with the government check and see how reasonable they're going to be.

Certainly, there are many more parallels between the socio/sexual rationalization hamster and its political brother, but in the end you have effectively the same thing - a person with a mental disorder. Being infected by a rationalization hamster, whether sociol/sexual or political, is nothing more than living a delusional life. And I say this not to be mean, but to try to help these people. Because it isn't the libertarian or conservative who has to wake up day in and day out and lie to themselves about how the real world works. It isn't the plumber or the surgeon who has to rationalize taking other people's money from them for nothing in return. It isn't Tina the engineering major who needs a government program in "Women's Studies" to find employment. It isn't the Walter Williams of the world who play the victim/race card to explain the poor decisions they've made in the past. And it isn't the conservative lying on his deathbed wondering if he's pissed his life away as a "professional activist" (because, well, he was an accountant). It's the cowards and intellectual weaklings of the world who plain don't have the stamina, fortitude, work ethic and maturity to become independent adults and enjoy the real world.

The Unnecessary Cost of Dread

March 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Approaching the end of week 1 of "Forced Discipline and Regimen Month" I am reminded of an important lesson I have forgotten since I was 17.

Look here at this video.

You'll notice the girl spends many minutes agonizing and fearing the jump off the cliff. It is not until her boyfriend pushes her does she actually go. I had a similar experience when I was 17 jumping off of the Interstate Park cliffs into the St. Croix River that separates Minnesota and Wisconsin. The cliffs are 100 feet tall and they go straight down into the water. I remember climbing up to the top of them and there there was a similar hemming and hawing as your eyes and brain tried to rationalize and take in the precipitous fall. However, that is the WORST part of it. Once you commit yourself to jumping and do it, it isn't that bad.

The lesson I learned from it was not to look. Looking only leads to dread and fear, and is the unnecessary price you pay for a task that, though thrilling, is not going to hurt you. And when it comes to working out, it is the same thing.

I HATE HATE HATE HATE HATE lifting weights.

It's boring. It is mind numbing. And the only benefit is physical.

However, since I hate it so much, I dreaded doing it. But much like cliff jumping or cliff swinging, it was the dread that made it 10 times worse than it actually was. In other words since blindly committing to lifting weights, I no longer let my brain entertain or contemplate the option not to. Since blindly committing to running 6 miles the days I don't lift, I don't let my brain fear the temperatures or cold. And since blindly committing to not drinking and avoiding carbs, cravings have gone away. In just putting your fatherly foot down on your own mind and saying, "we're doing this" there is no chance for your brain to fear or dread it, making it all that much easier. There is no debate, there is no discussion, there is no rationalizing your way out of it. It's just a daily chore, you're going to do and the calories of energy you'd normally spend dreading doing it are now repurposed into doing it. It is a skill definitely worth learning.

Enjoy the Schadenfreude!

March 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From a reader, she will be added to the schadenfreude list!

On a side note, the comments are not just priceless, but I think they answer my philosophical question:

"If a hamster hits the wall, does it even know it?" (I believe it is in the later third of the podcast)

The answer is no. It is very much like the dismembered knight in Monty Python's Search for the Holy Grail.

Heimie's Haberdashery

March 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In my efforts to enjoy the decline, I decided to treat myself to a haircut and beard trim at a haberdashery. If you don't know what a haberdashery is, it's a high end man's store. I'd like to say clothing store, but they also typically include hats, accessories, cigars, and a barber shop. Not every town has one, but the Twin Cities does - Heimie's Haberdashery.

I did not want to bother the workers, annoying them if I could take a pictures of their entire store, so all I asked is if I could take a picture of the barber shop area and here it is:

Obviously, this is not Great Clips, and yes, you are going to pay more for a hair cut and a trim at a haberdashery, but permit me to convince you why you should AT LEAST ONCE in your life go to a haberdashery before you die.

The hair cut and trim are the best you will ever get. I got not one, not two, but three different hot towel treatments. The reasoning or mechanics behind treating my face with three different lathers, soaps and conditioners was beyond me, but they are professionals and know what they are doing. Additionally, they have to be as all beard grooming is done with a straight edge razor. It is that freaking old school. The end product was a "Tony Stark" beard and hair cut, laser precision definition and jib. I walked out, in all honesty, about an additional .8 points on a scale of 1-10. That is how practical and beneficial a high end hair cut at a haberdashery is.

Also when you walk in it screams "man." Women are of course allowed in, but let there be no mistake this is a place for men. Everything is for men, everything is about men. You can speak freely and be a man. Feminists would burn much like a vampire would in a church if they were to set foot in there. In short it is about the one of the few, pure bastions for men remaining and shows you what men can achieve in terms of fashion and class if left to their own devices and desires.

The music, at least at Heimie's was jazz. Old school jazz. It was perfect. No teenybopper, Top 40, Kate Perry, Rhianna crap. It was talented musicians from the olden days who actually had talent and skill. Duke Ellington, Frank Sinatra, Artie Shaw, they got as recent as Miles Davis (unless I misheard the song). It was music for men. Not boys, not girls, not women, but men.

Finally, the staff was impeccably dressed. Not corny 1880's, barbershop quartet old school, but vests, suspenders, sharp shirts and tasteful hats that COULD be worn indoors. They were also quite dapper looking young gentlemen that would cause palpitations in the hearts of young ladies. I felt a little bit of shame coming in as I did (jeans and a sweatshirt) and believe next time I will wear a suit so as not to offend the staff or disrupt the aura of the haberdashery.

In short, whether it's Heimie's or another haberdashery in the large metro you live in, I don't recommend you go to one. I COMMAND you go to one. This is one of those things men NEED to treat themselves to before they die, and preferably once a year. The experience is like fine dining except when you eat your food you don't say, "Well, shoot, I could have grilled a better steak at home," you walk out and say, "Wow, that's nothing I could have done at home." It is such an experience, even women would love to just sit and watch the craftsmanship of the barber trim your beard. And ladies, if you're looking to get your man a gift, this is what you get him. It is a way for all to enjoy the decline.

"Why Aren't You On a Date?" Linkage

March 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's Saturday. What are you doing reading this blog? Go out, get laid...or "at least die trying."

Oh well, since you insist.

College Insurrection has a nice amalgamation of further proof corporations requiring college degrees in their "entry level positions" should expect nothing but the finest whiners, complainers and spoiled brats.

This is the primary reason a disproportionately high percentage of my new readership is of minority groups - because I don't kiss their ass and I treat them like fellow adults.

The Last Christian Standing enjoys the decline!

Legendary Kotetu hits one out of the park. It's a joke ladies!!! not really.

From our Indian, Eskimo, Scandinavian, Canadian (not kidding) Agent in the Field. More on this later.

What do I keep telling you people about property taxes undermining the value of American's largest asset?

I had a girlfriend once. She had all the privileges of connected grandparents and her entire career was due to the fact her grandad was the #3 guy at a very large corporation. I always envied how she had enough money to contribute to a 401k while I got by to pay groceries even though she was (beyond a doubt) dumber than a retarded dachshund. Now, I couldn't be happier.

Danny explains why we love our soldiers.

Marilyn Monroe is dead, but my grandmother (of roughly her age) is still alive. And guess who led the better and more enjoyable life!

What's more pathetic than an "aspiring rap artist?"

Answer - a white bred, nepotist son of a politician "hip hop aspiring rap artist."

"Get to Gettin'"

March 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Frank Intrudes On Dean

March 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Is It Possible to Short Bitcoin?

March 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just asking. I know absolutely nothing about it, though it intrigues me.

Express Air Medical Transport

March 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

New sponsor, lieutenants! Express Air Medical Transport. You can visit them at the aforementioned link or their facebook page. MOST individuals won't need these services, but if you are a hospital looking for an air ambulance service, Express Air Medical Services is the one the ole Captain recommends. More information below for anybody interested.

Air Ambulance Medical Flights Express Air Medical Transport provides safe and economical air medical transport services for our clients. Our highly experienced, exceptionally qualified team of medical and aviation professionals set the standards for patient care and comfort

- Express Air Medical Transport is licensed by the FAA and fully insured.
- One call to Express Air Medical Transport takes care of all aspects of the transport, from bed to bed.
- Express Air Medical Transport works directly with you to deliver the highest quality air medical transport available at the most cost effective pricing possible.
- We offer a full range of services. A transport can be as simple as a medical escort for an airline flight, or as complicated as a critical care transport team. We handle them all with equal care and dedication to service.
- We are trained and equipped to handle everything from medical escorts to neonatal patients to spinal cord injuries and sever burn patients, from domestic to international medical transport.

Please call for 24/7 service

800-304-8094

The Captain on Nomad Capitalist

March 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Here's the interview. You will enjoy the decline!

Operation Coffee House VIII

March 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

My god, where do I start with this one?

I believe I have found the "hive" or "mothership" of all coffee houses in Minneapolis. This coffee house has got to have every variable, trait and characteristic of every coffee house in the area. It confirms every stereotype to the point it is comical.

First there's "Mr. I-Bike-Year-Round." You can tell because there is only one bike parked outside the cafe, not that his winterized attire would give it away either. Gloves, winter pants, a full beard for extra insulation. Though I'll give him more credit than any other man in the entire joint. Those year round cyclists are hard core and are in shape. However, working at a bike shop myself in the liberal part of town, I KNOW FOR A FACT that is because they cannot afford a car. But don't point that out to them. They'll tell you they're doing it for the environment.

Second, let's continue on about the men. I swear, I wish I could take a picture, but that would violate these people's privacy. But if you saw what I saw, you'd laugh. There's a line of men, most of them bald, most of them still in their twenties, all with thick rimmed horned glasses, all, ALL of them with Apple laptops. I so wish I could take a picture because it looks like a bunch of soldiers lined up for inspection. It would make a great "motivational poster" where it could be titled "Conformity - The harder you try not to, the more you fail."

Another thing I notice about the men is the lisp or the effeminate voice. I don't believe any of them are gay, but I do know they have lower levels of testorerone. This is the latest generation to come off the assembly line, go to college, graduate and now drift aimlessly in their twenties. Without genuine challenge or rigor, their bodies and biology have failed to produce the testosterone and hormones necessary to make them look "manly." You think I'm arrogant when I say I can kick every guys ass in the joint (when I myself am a smaller fellow), but that is not arrogance. It IS a testament to this developmental disorder these men have.

Third, related to hormones, the women. Maybe it's not a lack of a challenging or physically demanding environment that explains the "Low T" these men have, as much as it is the women. They're...well...what you'd expect. None of them are wearing make up. Most are pretty ugly. And while the majority of them are in their 20's and early 30's, there is the handful of older women who wistfully look around the coffee shop, perhaps trying to find their youth. Regardless, none of these would inspire your glands to secrete testosterone. Nobody here (men or women) have seen the insides of a calculus book.

Fourth, yes, of course. Art. I told you this shop had all the amenities of your lefty coffee shop!

Today's local artist is a guy who specializes in taking figurines and posing them near lakes to make the scenery look bigger and more dramatic. I sure hope he spent a ton of money on his BA in Art to come up with that clever little tactic. Again, it's something I could do, therefore it isn't art. Perhaps he could take his figurine ability and work for Robot Chicken...naw, that would actually take skill and effort.

Fifth, even though I didn't see a sign that banned guns from these premises, I'm pretty sure I'm once again the only person carrying. I swear if a criminal wants an easy mark, coffee shops are it. These people are not so much against violence (who isn't? I am!), as much as they are afraid of it. They are so afraid of the reality that there is violence in the world their choice is to ignore it and "hope it goes away." I guarantee you if any violent or aggressive person came in here you would have one of those scenes where people would just stand and watch. Not out of a worry of law suits being filed, but they're be scared stiff.

Sixth, oh yes, everything is green. You knew that already, but the establishment has put a poster up parading its various accomplishments and achievements in going green (picture is not rotated correctly because blogger is being difficult now)

One huge thing that is missing should be very obvious - profit.

"Free meetings held?"
"Acres of trees saved by switching to LED light bulbs???"
"Full time job equivalents????"

Again, it's like suggesting a whole new accounting system be based off of Facebook "likes" and not the real world currency coming in and out of the joint. Oh well, even though profits are evil, I'm sure they'll find out it's also necessary for the joint to remain open.

Sixth, the coffee. It ain't bad. I'm not developing my pallet (sp?), but it sure as hell beats out the goat cheese coffee from the other day.

Post Script - I WAS able to get a picture of the Apple Soldiers lined up for inspection. Faces of course deleted for privacy's sake:

Warren Buffet's Magic is Gone

March 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Every year I get to loathe and dread the annual updating of my financial classes. I hate it even more than doing taxes, because I get to wait for the IRS/Congress to get their act together and update things like contribution limits for IRA's, 401k's, etc. Then I painstakingly go through my classes, updating each and every number and statistic so it is currently up to date. The whole thing takes about 2 days and given how streamlined and bachelorized-efficient my life is, you can understand how 2 days of real work puts me in a fowl mood.

In addition, however, to basic contribution limits, tax law etc., I also have to update charts. These needn't be updated every year, but invariably they get stale and I have to update them. These charts include dividend yield ratios, the S&P 500 P/E ratio and so forth. But another one I update is Berkshire Hathaway's performance chart. This makes me revisit how the democrat's favorite businessman is doing and since I started teaching classes, I've noticed something about Warren-

He's losing his touch.

In the past he RARELY lost to the index, I believe only providing poorer returns than the S&P 500 for three years in three decades. This earned him fame among academians and professors who could only study, but never replicate his performance. But the past 10 years, his performance has been anything but "Berkshire Hathaway-eqsue." He loses just as much as he wins, which adds further proof to my theory that whatever advantage he had, has been lost or whittled away by institutional investors and the market.

1974	5.5	(26.4)	31.9
1975	21.9	37.2	(15.3)
1976	58.3	23.6	35.7
1977	31.9	(7.4)	39.3
1978	24.0	6.4	17.6
1979	31.7	14.2	17.5
1980	19.3	32.3	(13.0)
1981	31.4	(5.0)	36.4
1982	40.0	21.4	18.6
1983	33.3	22.4	9.9
1984	13.6	6.1	7.5
1985	48.2	31.6	16.6
1986	26.1	18.6	7.5
1987	19.5	5.1	14.4
1988	20.1	16.6	3.5
1989	44.4	31.7	12.7
1990	3.4	(7.1)	10.5
1991	39.6	30.5	9.1
1992	20.3	7.6	12.7
1993	14.3	10.1	4.2
1994	11.9	1.3	17.6
1995	43.1	37.6	5.5
1996	31.8	21.0	8.8
1997	34.1	33.4	0.7
1998	48.3	38.6	10.7
1999	0.5	21.0	(20.5)
2000	6.5	(9.1)	15.6
2001	(6.2)	(11.9)	5.7
2002	10.0	(22.1)	32.1
2003	21.0	28.7	(7.7)
2004	10.5	10.9	(0.4)
2005	6.4	4.9	1.5
2006	18.4	15.8	2.6
2007	11.0	5.5	5.5
2008	(9.6)	(37.0)	27.4
2009	24.8	30.5	(5.7)
2010	13.0	15.1	(2.1)
2011	4.6	2.1	2.5
2012	14.4	16.0	(1.6)

But don't let that stop leftists politicians from citing him every time they need other people's money.

Enjoy the decline, Warren!

Bachelors Degree in Hip Hop

March 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

"A Brilliant, Handsome Man in His 30's"

March 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ahem, cough, cough, wheeze wheeze. Well, I guess that is true. (Aw shucks!)

Not Just Free Obama Phones

March 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Free Commie Obama Hats!

The irony is that the people who are taking the free hats are Obama supporters.

You can PAY FOR YOUR OWN HAT (like all good capitalists do) by visiting Karl!

The Sad State of Corporate America's Leadership

March 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I do:

"The Facebook"
"The Twitter"
and
"The Blog"

I draw the line at "Linkedin."

This is not to offend those of you who sent me "Linkedin" requests and like to have that fancy "badge" or "linkedin pictograph" made larger and more ornate signifying you're "linkedin-ness." I just hands down refuse to do it because after joining it I realized what it was. Another form of that hated and loathed and ULTIMATELY zero-economic-production value activity - networking.

I refuse to network intentionally because even at college I knew it was bullshit.

Yes, yes, I know, I know, business is all about "who you know" not "what you know" and rain-makers can make or break a company based on networking. But I plain do not have the evil, let alone patience to sit there in networking event after networking event, with a fake smile on my face, acting like I give a crap about the people around me, all in the hopes of meeting that one person with a morsel of business, and magically having more charisma and charm than anybody else to win that tidbit of business. Oh, and the fact everybody else is doing the exact same thing AND EVERYBODY KNOWS EVERYBODY KNOWS THIS FACT makes the whole thing the most hypocritical and fake exercise in the history of humanity.

I'm sorry, I have a soul, not to mention a life to live.

But what is really sad is not so much the futility and fakeness of networking, but that networking plays such a prominent role in "corporate strategy." The fact something so fake, so unproductive, so labor-wasting and just outright deceitful is employed as a legitimate business tactic is testament to the sad state of corporate America, its lack of leadership and it's lack of future prospects. But after thinking about it, I realized something else. "Networking" is (as far as I can tell) one of only four major "strategies" American business leaders seem able to employ and pursue today, and further testifies to the sad state of corporate America. These four strategies are:

1. Networking and Social Networking

2. Foreign Sales
3. "Going Green"/CSR
4. Rent seeking/lobbying

Networking I've already gone over. Not a cent of genuine economic production or wealth is produced by it. And while corporate cogs will slave away at the art, in the end you get a dire and disasterous "black swan event" because of what I like to consider an "inbreeding effect." Since you are hired, promoted, and advanced not on production, innovation or bold leadership, but rather you're ability to get along, kiss ass and "network," the corporate environment becomes a sort of "super-refinery" that refines and purifies employees into "super networkers" and "super ass kissers." And instead of focusing on new and improved ways to increase profits, people are instead constantly pitted up against a perpetually stronger and stronger strain of conformist, SWPL, uber-soldat employees. Making matters worse is the unemployment rate. Most anybody can do the job, so the focus or onus is put on a person's intangible ~~brown nosing.~~.errr...."people/soft skills." This means only the most purified extract of networker/ass-kisser/yes-man remain employed which only creates a spiraling effect, making the corporate environment that much more potent, purified and refined. Soon, in theory, you will have a corporate slave class incapable of independent thought, leadership, and innovation...oh wait, you already do.

Foreign sales is another defeatist strategy employed by corporations. Though legitimate (you should be targeting overseas markets) it does nothing to revolutionize or reinvent your business model or product. It's simply doing the same thing over and over, but in a foreign land. While US corporate sales overseas has remained steady around 46%, their foreign profits (as measured by tax rolls), however, have been increasing (from 45% to 61%) meaning they're likely to expand overseas, not here in the US.

"Going Green" and the whole Corporate Social Responsibility BS.

Do I even have to explain this?

It's a fad. Not one corporate executive believes in this veritable religion. But, unfortunately, millions of brainwashable sheeple do. And thus, to get suckers to part with their precious dollars, all corporations have to do is parade false and bogus "green credentials" and lie right to your face about how they're "going green" and you morons are stupid enough to buy it. And even if they aren't lying and are going green, you're still a fool to pay a 40% premium, 20% of which is just additional mark up. A REAL corporate strategy would be to go "black" focusing only on profit and priding the company on focusing only on profit purposely and proudly ignoring their "carbon foot print." But that would take some cajones, leadership, and the courage to point out the emperor has no clothes. Regardless, the fact corporations throw so much resources and weight into the "CSR" efforts only shows how few new and legitimate business ideas they have.

And finally, rent seeking or lobbying. I believe by the time you are willing to waste your shareholders' monies on bogus ad campaigns about going green and other such poppycock, it's only a fraction of an arcsecond of a degree to just go full out immoral and evil and bribe politicians to vote against the best interests of the people so your firm can get favorable treatment. I love how GE is forcing us all to use lightbulbs we don't want. I love how GM and the unions are getting pie in the sky retirement plans they should have never had. And I love how practically ALL US solar companies were nothing more than fronts to have well-connected cronies play "make believe businessman" where they paid themselves fat salaries at the taxpayer's dime, all while never having an ounce of intention to produce a profit.

Again, my distrust of the public sector is no secret. I still to this day believe it is hands down the single largest threat to the country and the future of freedom. But the private sector is in just as bad of shape, corrupted and dysfunctional. But what makes this worse, if not, dire for the country is that EVERYTHING, including government revenue, MUST COME FROM THE PRIVATE SECTOR. There is nothing the government can do to create economic production, that all hails from the private sector. And since and our private sector has become so lame and desperate that it employs strategies like rent seeking, lobbying, networking, "Linkedin," and "going green" you can expect no solution to the country's financial and economic problems.

Enjoy the decline!

Blazing Catfur is Enjoying the Decline

March 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Why not you!?

Even Gene is enjoying the decline! I mean, once Gene's on board, it's practically a guarantee to be the next big thing!

$15.96/hr Minimum Wage

March 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I too am curious how there is not more unemployment in Australia if they have a minimum wage of $15.96. The fact there is already an underground economy forming to pay people less suggests to me there is enough government intervention or hanky panky going on that there is more to this than meets the eye. About the only explanation I can come up with as to why Australia's unemployment rate is so low is that it is not that big of a country (population wise) and the commodities boom they are having it keeping the market rate above the minimum wage.

But I am speculating.

Private Investment as a % GDP

March 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yeah, I wouldn't want to invest here either.

Get Sick, Get Pampered, Why Can't I Find Laces, and Special Ops Dachshunds

March 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In this latest installment of "The Clarey Podcast"

Why Aaron can't find laces for his shoes at Target, how Marketing PhD's are behind the curve, "Special Ops Dachshunds - will they save America?" and how to extract the maximum amount of pampering and pity from women when you are sick.

You can e-mail the show at CAPTcapitalism -at- yahoo "dot" com!

Sponsored by Amazon! You have to buy something today, so you might as well go here and buy your stuff now!

I Ask for the Non-Western Civilization Equivalent

March 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Good luck.

The Captain Comes to Mayberry

March 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Mount Airy is the town Andy Griffith grew up in and based Mayberry, the town in "The Andy Griffith Show" on. The place is kind of a tourist trap, but I did inevitably find my shoe laces at the local army surplus store. The shoe laces, unfortunately, were a bit long for my shoes, but they will suffice until I find another pair.

Saken Aizhulov

March 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our Kazakhstanian Agent from Raleigh in the Field:

Apparently this guy has done a TON of significant and awesome motorcycle rides. You can peruse some of his awesome pictures.

Perhaps something to enjoy during your Sunday afternoon.

Winter in North Caronlina

March 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our other Raleigh Agent in the field:

The Art of Connecting Far Apart Actions to Consequences

March 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you were to ask a random selection of people to explain each and every action and successive event that occurs under the hood of a car from when you turn the key to the point that engine is running, I believe maybe no more than 2% of the people could do it. Most people just know "you turn the key and the car goes vroom." But just because they don't understand all the intricate details and events occurring under the hood, doesn't mean they don't know how to use cars. Everyday millions of people use vehicles they seldom mechanically understand, and thusly their lives are dependent on technologies and processes they are ignorant of.

Computers are another example. Unless you're in computer engineering or a computer networker, most people just know how to turn a computer on and use a point-click-interface. They have a theoretical understanding of how the internet works, but very few people understand binary, routing, electricity, computer processing and all the other processes and mechanics that go on behind the screen. Again, our lives are heavily reliant on processes and events we rarely understand.

Now this isn't to slam on people who don't know how to fix cars or don't know the basics about computers. The truth is such complex processes like starting a car engine or sending an e-mail are the result of a specialization of labor and a specialized economy. An auto mechanic may know in intricate detail how engines work, but could never hope to fix a computer. And a computer engineer may know how to create a circuit, but is hopelessly lost when it comes to making a soufflé. No one person knows everything about every trade and process. However, there is one field or "system of complex processes" that everybody SHOULD know about and familiarize themselves with – economics.

Admittedly, economics is boring (or at least it is to most people). And the reason most people find economics to be boring is because there aren't enough intriguing, dashing, charismatic and interesting economists like me out there. Most are boring, dull, dry, and truth be told, most economists don't even know THEMSELVES how economies work, and thus fail miserably to convey just how exciting and interesting economics truly is. But making economics even more distasteful to the potential student is that it is complex. And when faced with the daunting task of mathematically and precisely figuring out how "fractional reserve banking leads to inflation," most people's minds prefer to just "turn the key and hope the car goes vroom."

There's just one problem.

Who fixes the economy when you turn the key and it doesn't go "vroom?"

Well, let's test you with a multiple choice question.

a. The Federal Reserve
b. The Federal Government
c. Congress
d. The President
e. The people

The answer is e – the people.

The reason why is that since this is a democracy and we vote in our leaders, we are ultimately responsible for putting the right people in office. And by "right people" I mean people who make wise decisions and effect wise policy that helps the economy growth at its maximum level. But when people are so ignorant about basic economics, to the point it's like Bambi the Trophy Wife misdiagnosing why her Lexus SUV won't start, we don't send the "economic-mechanics" we need to fix the economy, but rather equally-ignorant politicians who promise us nice things. In other words the mechanic who brings us bad news, telling us the engine needs to be replaced for $2,000, is booed and hissed at. While the mechanic who brings us good news, telling us there's nothing wrong and that there won't be a charge, gets applauds, accolades and a public office for life.

The solution would seem simple – get people interested and educated about economics. But there are two main hurdles to this challenge. One, most people are WILLFULLY ignorant. Even though there's smoke billowing out of the engine, they will ALWAYS go with the mechanic who lies to them because that's what they want to believe. No amount of reason, sanity, proof or logic will ever break through their brainwashed skulls. Two, requesting the average person learn economics to the point they're reasonably fluent in it, is as intimidating as asking Bambi the Trophy Wife to get underneath her Lexus, get greased up, and change her own oil to the point she can do it on her own. It's daunting.

Alas, why The Art of Connecting Far Apart Actions to Consequences is a must for any conservative or libertarian cheerleader of free markers.

You need to not only be able to understand economics yourself, you need to be able to convey it clearly to others who are not so fluent. You need to be able to take complex economic processes and theories and boil them down to simple, but brilliant "bumper sticker-eqsue" founts of knowledge and fact that disproves what most leftists believe. You need to be able to read a Paul Krugman piece, dissect it, find the piece of data or theory he's spun intentionally and maliciously and THEN explain in under 5 minutes to the average layman why Paul is a shill AND get that layman to understand it. It is in taking the seemingly complex processes and theories of economics and making them not just palatable, but simple and understandable, you will deliver the single largest blow to socialism and leftism you possibly can.

However, there is an even more important reason in making economics as clear and as simple as possible:

Leftists, socialists, and career politicians of all political stripes, rely on the complexity of economics to mask and hide their ulterior motives.

Understand the single largest advantage the left has over a low-information voter population is the complexity, boringness and intimidation of economics. I termed it the "GLEOC" (Great Liberal Economic Oort Cloud") where most people view the economy and government as some amorphous entity where "really smart people, WAY smarter than them" know what to do and are doing everything they can in some kind of Keynesian, mixing things up, primordial goo, sort of way and hopefully the GLOEC farts out some jobs (actually, quite identical to the medieval days when only the "learned and wise" members of the clergy were allowed to read the bible and the masses could only learn of Christianity through their self-serving prism of teaching under penalty of death). Regardless, the GLEOC is WAAAAY too complicated for sheeple like them to understand, and why bother? Kate Perry is on! Unfortunately, the left hides it political agenda within this ambiguity, mentally removing the people so far from their intentions, they get away with it scot free. But if you were to explain away the GLEOC (and allow the masses to read the metaphorical "economics bible"), and get enough people to truly understand how economics works, you remove this ambiguity and expose them for what they truly are – thieves.

And yes, the leftist ideology is really that simple.

Quite a Moving Review

March 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From a review on Enjoy the Decline:

This book is strange - I liked it, and it made me happy to be alive. I might be the only one, but in chapter 11, toward the very end, I cried a little; Clarey, at this point, has made his case and is imagining the deathbeds of those who ignored reality... and something inside me just... broke... a little bit, and I was saying to myself, "I want to live...!" and simultaneously feeling the deepest pity and empathy for a dying feminist looking back at her life, longing that she had lived differently...
Buy the book.
Prepare yourself.
Take revenge.
Love your life.

Also don't forget, I DO have OTHER BOOKS.

Worthless
Top Shelf

and (the lonely book that everybody forgot and is starting to think you don't like him)

Behind the Housing Crash

Available in Kindle and Paperback.

Academian Rationalization Hamster

March 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm beginning to believe, heck, I KNOW now that women will use their rationalization hamsters not just for romantic/social purposes, but pretty much anything. The latest seeming to be they're using it to rationalize their desire to major in ~~a subject that requires no math and is nothing more than a taxpayer-subsidized hobby.~~..errr..."the liberal arts."

So here's the latest. Another 20 something girl with a blog who offers nothing to society but her witticisms, but has no problem consuming the production and labor of men and STEM majoring women in the form of the internet

Apple products infrastructure chemistry engineering agriculture
and..well...pretty much everything else.

In short she is saying, "I want to get paid to major in bunnies and flowers and I want the REST OF YOU to do all the work...Oh, and don't you DARE say I'm not an independent woman or stupid or immature! I have moxie! Didn't you read my latest column!?"

The Academian Hamster is strong with this one.

Clarissa is Pregnant

March 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I think between her and her husband the kid is going to have an IQ of like, a billion. Still won't prevent the kid from crying at 3AM. Regardless, congratulate Clarissa.

Our Raleigh Agents in the Field

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Partying with the Raleigh Agents and Economists.

If any Raleigh Agents want their photo taken down, let the Captain know.

When Bachelors Cook

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I don't know about the rest of you but I like vision.

Thus, when I tried to cook fish last night and the oil started boiling and then blowing up all over the place and on my arms I decided to turn down the temperature.

I realized then that at the lower temperature the fish was not cooking enough. Thus I had a quandary and a health risk.

Then a stroke of genius occurred. I grabbed by motorcycle goggles and a rag, resulting in enough armor to safely cook fish.

I then received guff, mockery and ridicule, but I WAS able to cook my fish to perfection, not to mention protect my vision and Cary Grantish looks from boiling oil.

Leslie Enjoys the Decline!

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Leslie is enjoying the decline!

Why aren't you?

(actually, she pulls some of the better quotes from the book).

Escaping Cuba

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Silvio Canto is interviewed by 910 KATH Dallas about his book and what it was like escaping Cuba.

New Lieutenant

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A new addition to the blog roll. The Economic Collapse.

They are prepared to enjoy the decline. Matter of fact, they're not preparing. They just are.

The Disappearing Volume of the Stock Market

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There is only ONE legitimate reason or explanation for the rally in the stock market (even though when you adjust for inflation, we're still below out 2007 levels)

Inflation fears.

Of course, I don't credit the majority of investors (institutional or individual) or the majority of the money in the market with the intelligence to invest in stocks as a hedge against future inflation. The fact that future profits will have inflation adjusted into them automatically would require too much thought on their part.

But what is even more curious than a reasonless rally is the severe drop in trading volume amongst the world's largest exchanges.

- Largest exchanges by value of share trading in the Electronic order book in 2012 and 2011

	Exchange	USD bn 2012	USD bn 2011	% change In USD	% change in local currency
1	NYSE Euronext US	13 443	18 027	-25.4%	-25.4%
2	NASDAQ OMX US	9 784	12 724	-23.1%	-23.1%
3	Tokyo Stock Exchange Group	3 463	3 972	-12.8%	-12.2%
4	Shanghai Stock Exchange	2 599	3 658	-29.0%	-30.8%
5	Shenzhen Stock Exchange	2 369	2 838	-16.5%	-18.5%
6	London Stock Exchange Group	2 194	2 837	-22.7%	-16.0%
7	NYSE Euronext Europe	1 576	2 134	-26.1%	-19.7%
8	Korea Exchange	1 518	2 029	-25.2%	-23.9%
9	TMX Group	1 357	1 542	-12.0%	-10.8%
10	Deutsche Börse	1 276	1 758	-27.4%	-21.2%

Normally a rally indicates higher volume, but there are several reasons for this traditional rule to be broken. None of these reasons, however, bode well for your average investor.

High frequency volume trading automated by computers that manipulate the market (and still don't provide enough volume to offset the long term investment money).

A horrible distaste for investment left in the mouths of younger generations after a dotcom and housing bubble (not to mention no employment prospects and no money to invest).

Large hedge funds and institional investors swapping securities for diversification reasons.

But my favorite reason the article provides is "less volatility."

Since the financial crisis in 2008 the markets have become "less volatile" resulting in less people pulling out of the market, less people trying to time the bottom, and more money permanently staying in the market.

But ask yourself a question.

"How great of a reason is THE LACK OF VOLATILITY for a stock market rally?"

It once again is another desperate excuse, a desperate reason for stock markets to rally that once again ignores the only two things that should drive a true stock market rally -

1. Increased profits
2. Increased dividends

The fact volume is tanking, leaving a higher percentage of trading in essentially connected firms' hands, AND there has not been the increase in profits to bring the P/E of investments down to a sane level, means this is a rally only for the connected.

You might as well be a man trying to rationalize driving a VW Cabriolet by citing its fuel efficiency.

Standard Excuses Girls Give You

March 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was running and for whatever reason I remembered one of the more common excuses I received from a girl in my dating days, specifically back in high school and college;

"My friend just broke up with her boyfriend and really needs me right now."

This excuse is usually delivered when you have a date with a girl and she really doesn't want to go out with you. It's a "perfect excuse" in that it's palatable enough that if you accused her of lying she could feign indignance (and at the same time accuse you of "creepystalkerassholishness" PROVING you weren't worth her anyway, jerk!), but is outlandish and over-used enough that it sends clear signal not to ask her out again or reschedule the date.

This remembrance then sent me down the path of excuses I've heard:

"I'm sick."

"I have to work."

"I have too much homework."

etc. etc.

but the "my friend just broke up with her boyfriend" excuse was so common (not to mention lame) I believed it was part of a group of "well-known" or "standard" excuses women are trained to use.

Ergo, I think it's high-time to catalog the "standard" excuses and their English translations/meanings so young men know what to do when they receive such excuses. This list will then be updated as we receive more "standard" excuses. You may start listing them off now. Please forward this link so we can get the most comprehensive group possible.

Captain Goes Kobo

March 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For those of you who are Kobo users I've set up an account and uploaded two of my books. I cannot upload Enjoy the Decline until April 30th, but in the meantime I do have:

Worthless

and

Behind the Housing Crash

uploaded.

Since Kobo seems to have a larger international presence, please tell friends about the Kobo release.

"But I'm Not Good at Math!"

March 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Teaching the kiddies (and most adults) that "I'm not good at math" is not an excuse for being lazy.

Language warning.

Dealing With Leftist Sibblings

March 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Part 3 of "Confessions of a Worthless Degreed Person."

Our guest, Jorge Gonzales, continues sharing with us his college-age experiences, this time talking about dealing with his leftist sister. His sister, older than him, mocks and ridicules him for having conservative thoughts, and even the simplest of things like asking "what are you going to do with that degree."

Making this podcast special, however, is of course the Captain's favorite topic - HORSES!!!

"Capture the Hot Naughty Russian Spy"

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From GLORIOUS HAT KARL!

You can buy his hat at www.commieobama.com

When the Nazis Come Knocking Late at Night

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Let me be clear"

If any organization, be it public or private, sends agents or representatives to my door pulling off shit like this, the gloves are off, you've gone too far, and the true meaning of the second amendment will become very clear to you.

The reason why is that the next step is cattle cars, and I'm sorry, I'm not going down like my "technically" Jewish ancestors did in Germany. There will be no subservience or "Arbeit Macht Frei" BS.

This is the most gentlemanly and western civilization warning you will receive.

The Kissing Balance of Sickness

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The paradox is a common one.

One of the lovers is sick.

The other is not.

Do you refrain from kissing that person, so as not to infect him/her?

OR

Do you "wuv dem sooooo much dat" getting sick is worth the few precious kisses and you infect them anyway?

Well, let a cold hearted economist provide some insight.

Say one of you is sick.

This precludes you from kissing your beau/babe for the time that person is infected with the disease. That person suffers, and you don't get to kiss him/her. But inevitably that person will recover and then you can get back to "sickness-free kissin' time."

But if you are of the "kisses are worth the sickness" philosophy, then you too are going to get sick.

If you get sick and the other person recovers, then all you have managed to do is simply put that person in the exact same position you were in, THUS PREVENTING THE EXACT SAME AMOUNT OF KISSING.

THEREFORE (thanks to my SAEG (tm))

It is best to let the person be, NOT KISS YOUR BETTER HALF, have "girls weekend" or "guys weekend," and let them fully recover, for if you do, then you

1. won't get sick
2. won't lose out on any more kisses than you would anyway (because of the duality of sickness)
3. and will halve the sick-kissing time, replacing it with "healthy-kissing time."

I am glad I have solved this life-long paradox, making life easier for millions of future generation people.

You may send your thanks by shopping at Amazon or buying one of my many SAEG (tm) books.

Late Night at the Cappy Club

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Even though it's morning, I think if you play this song you'll be much more capable of enjoying the decline today:

Charty Goodness

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have a confession to make. I am lazy with my charts. I normally will make a chart and its shelf life can last several years, if not, a full decade as long as the economy doesn't change too much. For example the stock market has remained bubbly over these past few years rarely requiring I update the S&P 500 PE ratio or dividend yield. But the same cannot be said for Obama's deficit spending and accrual of debt. Each year I have to update any debt related charts because the SOB adds another trillion+ to the deficit every year.

[image]
Original Source: Poker Listings

So here are the two main charts (updated) attesting to debt - deficit and debt to GDP.

For S's and G's I decided to also check to see how much the federal budget was as a percent of GDP:

I love the jump in spending not just under Obama, but how the American public keeps voting in to have government play more and more of a role in our lives. And that chart above is JUST FEDERAL. Tack on another 10% to account for state and local, 20% if you're a sucker and live in California.

Explaining the Angry Atheist

March 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For once, Inmalafide wrote a piece that doesn't involve enough foul language it manages to insult all 6.6 billion people on the planet. Of course I merely skimmed the article, so maybe I missed something, but regardless, his article highlights how the left hates religion, which reminded me about one of the more curious phenomenon out there - the Angry Atheist.

The Angry Atheist confuses and confounds your average conservative or even your average innocent bystander. Most people don't know where the visceral hatred Angry Atheists have comes from and are kind of shocked by it. Most people's thinking is:

"Well, if you're an athiest, then what do you care about religion? Shouldn't you be some kind of easy, laid back, live and let live sort of guy? What's with all the hatred, mockery and ridicule of people who just happen to believe in a religion?"

Thus when an unsuspecting person breaches the topic of religion or mentions their particular faith, they are completely blindsided by the ensuing screed delivered to them by the Angry Atheist.

However, being brought up on an extremely religious household and becoming an agnostic myself, I believe I can explain why some atheists are so angry and thus explain this phenomenon.

First, understand I have no skin in this game. I couldn't care less what people's religion is. If there's any problem I have with religion, it's that most participants of all religions do not participate in the religion for anything as noble and selfless as worship or a god, but rather for ulterior and selfish motives. Finding a spouse, socializing, business connections, belonging to a team, heck, even rationalizing taking over the world. Whatever the reason it isn't for "god." But for the few sincere and legitimate practitioners of religion, I respect them and leave them be. So whether you're a Jew or a Catholic or even an atheist, I don't care.

Second, NAAALT (Not All Atheists Are Like That). I know the majority of atheists are the laid back, live and let live types. I have atheist friends and I am certainly no fan of religion. Remember, we're focusing on the ANGRY Atheists who feel compelled to foist themselves into people's personal religious decisions. Not Bob at the water cooler who doesn't go to church.

With those caveats out of the way, there are two primary sources of Angry Atheists,

The first source are formerly religious people that had religion forced on them. And not just forced on them, they suffered some kind of abuse. I'm not talking sexual abuse, but psychological abuse. A brainwashing that religion forces on the child, to the point it IS a cult. Cults being what they are, they destroy the individual for the "commune" of the cult. You are no longer your own person, and as a child, not only are you not #1 in your own life, your parents and your family put you second to the cult as well. I would estimate around 30% of all Christian-based religions are at this cult-level in the US, and, naturally, when a young person grows up and "escapes the cult" they have the wool removed from their eyes and realize they were merely being used by a sadistic and self-serving commune. They also realize that their youth was not just wasted, but taken advantage of, and the only and natural consequence is hatred and revenge.

In this case the Angry Atheist has a legitimate beef with religion. But instead of attacking the religion on genuine and weak grounds (ie-most people don't believe it and participate in it for ulterior and self-serving reasons) they just bash it in general. They lack the finesse to surgically strike at people's hypocrisies and just call them "idiots" instead. They have such a hatred for the religion, they need to "undo it" and therefore lack the ability to realize that a true revenge would to let people remain in the religion/cult and that will cause more damage. And finally, they also lack the ability to move on and let it go. Their experiences were so bad, they just cannot let the injustice of what happened to them stand, and thus partially lessen their lives in the process. A bit of forgiveness and understanding might be called for.

The second reason or "variant" of the Angry Atheist should shock no one - they're crusaders.

It is no coincidence your average Angry Atheist is also a leftist. The reason why is that atheism is the easiest religion of them all, requiring no effort, thought, ponderance or work. You simply "declare" you're one and POOF! You're in the club and you now "belong."

In this sense, it's the epitome of irony, because the Angry Atheist is simply joining another religion. It's just not so much an "absence" of religion (as a true laid back atheist would be), it's an "ANTI-religion religion." They have a vendetta, they have a crusade, they (like all other religion people) now have a purpose and belong to a club - we must destroy other people's religion. If anything, it's a testament to the most cowardly (and borderline psychotic) mentality of a Crusader-Angry-Atheist because his/her "religion" is simply to destroy something others have built. They can't just let it be. And it is here we see the parallels between Angry Atheists and leftists because their psychologies are the same.

First, both are hypocrites. Leftists and Angry Atheists are such because the average liberal does not "care about the poor" nor does the Angry Atheist "really want to stop cultish and abusive religions." They are in it first and foremost for themselves. The leftist will ALWAYS trumpet and parade their ideology first thing in a conversation because that is CORE to their being. The Angry Atheist will as well. They claim membership to these groups FOR THEIR EGOS, not for anything as noble as "helping the poor" or "stopping abusive religion." They are crusaders, and most ironically (again) they are the most devout, zealous, and extreme of religious people. Their religions just happen to be godless.

Second, both are usually worthless people (I am reminding normal Atheists, this does not include you). They have no value beyond their religion. They are too lazy to go and develop a skill, a trade, a career, and develop themselves as a human and live an interesting and productive life. And instead of enduring or expending the effort, rigor, development, trials, tribulations and challenges in life that would give them a core and worth, they instead claim allegiance to a "holy and noble crusade" they really couldn't less about to fill that hole. The average leftist joins the Peace Corps and does nothing to help Africans while the Angry Atheist rips on religious people because their liberal arts degree isn't getting them a job.

And finally, they are envious. Since they are too lazy to go out and get what they want out of life, they must criminalize and villainize what others have. The leftist criminalizes "wealth" and "the rich" while never resting a second in their lives to concoct lies and false rationalizations to confiscate said wealth. The Angry Atheist wishing to belong to something, but not wanting to expend any effort to meet the standards of that club (not to mention, no doubt also envious of religious people's tendency to be wealthier as well), rips on religion, allowing him to immediately join a group of anti-religion religion, thereby giving him an identity and belonging.

If you got intellectual warm fuzzies, buy something you have to buy anyway on Amazon for the ole Captain. Proceeds go to his "Poor Starving Bachelor Fund"

Ranger Self Defense Sale!

March 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ed has a sale going on!

Because If We Were Good at Life, We Wouldn't Need More School

March 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Outstanding.

Coffee Boxer Short Linkage

March 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Starting this Friday off right with coffee, boxer shorts and a T-shirt, and a hot roaring fire in the fireplace. Let's get to work!

Ah feminists. Fighting against nature and ruining everybody's good time in the process.

AR15's are only for the spouses of liberals. You conservative neanderthals can't have one.

A member of the League of Unemployable Bloggers thanks god that we don't have an oppressive, invasive and brainwashed employer class that thinks your political beliefs or personal life is their business. Thank god!

Even the STEM majoring women (which I am very "pro") still can't stop that nagging desire to be (GASP!) women! Again, feminism has certainly hurt men. But it has hurt women more.

The father could not be reached for comment.

But the important question was whether he was an aspiring rap artist?

Sting Ray writes about chivalry.

A real quick history about Ceasar and power.

What if your Nanny is actually a Thug.

Nearly a dozen billboard-sized photos of vaginas in various states – including shaved ones, others that are blemished, and still some with tampons inserted – are slated for display today and tomorrow at the University of Cincinnati. Where or where could we cut the budget?

Associates in STEM > PhD in Humanities

When "liberal, white guilt" trumps your kids.

And just so you know, boys, you shouldn't rape women. That's "a bad." Thank god we have a Masters in English telling us this important lesson. Because beforehand I was a little unclear about whether or not I should be raping women. Cripes, do liberal arts majors EVER do ANYTHING of value????

You go to Harvard for connections, not to learn anything.

Why Michael Bloomberg is the Reason the 2nd Amendment Exists

March 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The latest podcast from "The Clarey Podcast" includes Marissa Mayer's (Yahoo CEO) decision to force her employees to work at the office instead of home, the failure of Americans to embrace the telecommute revolution, how women would prefer to sleep with Richard Branson vs. Mark Dayton, how Michael Bloomberg is the reason the 2nd Amendment was created, why the Captain would love to meet him in a dark alley, and what drives men to succeed and achieve (sex and physical attraction, BTW).

What's Wrong With This Article?

March 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Not the article itself, but what is wrong about what the article is about. There should be something very disturbing, but too many generations of sheeple have been brainwashed not to see it.

Review of "Why Can't I Use a Smiley Face"

March 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Why Can't I Use a Smiley Face" is the latest installment of Roosh's series that charts his exploits across the world as he gallivants, country to country, studying how to pick up women in said countries. For those of you follow Roosh or live vicariously through him it would be describe as another, though lengthier chapter, of his Bang series, and will not be let down. However, if you are looking for a stand alone book, say like Dead Bat in Paraguay, this is not the book. Ergo if you are new to Roosh or don't really have an interest in his adventures, this book will disappoint.

The book is essentially the "homecoming" chapter of Roosh. After 2 years in the field he returns to America, specifically his home town of Washington DC and chronicles his day to day life and experiences. These experiences certainly include him going on attempting to pick up girls in DC's nightlight, but also his observations of family, friends, society in general, as well as some familial resistance to his chosen path in life.

Of particular interest is reading his various Bang guides of different countries and then comparing his foreign experiences to domestic ones. Most notably getting uncalled-for assaulted by women twice (slapped and punched) whereas to the best of my recollection no woman ever touched him outside the US. Other unacceptable events result in quite a damning testimony to the perpetually decreasing and unacceptable quality and caliber of young American women (though this is in the DC area only), though this was not the intention of his book. Regardless, the difficulty, rudeness, and just outright unacceptable behavior he experiences going out in DC shows Roosh he no longer has a home field advantage and that he is better at away games, leading him to an important decision.

The overall lesson of the book, however, is one of "player fatigue." Keep in mind by this time Roosh has been overseas doing something no other person has done, and though successful, and though a very interesting career, inevitably he gets burnt out. The burn out comes in three forms. The first is the physical and psychological demands of world travel that would fatigue anybody. The second is that he achieves his goal, foisting the Alexander the Great quote of "When he saw the breadth of his domain he wept for there were no more worlds to conquer" on him. The chase or the novelty no longer appeals to him and he starts searching for a new mission, a new meaning in life. The third form is he starts to realize the costs of playerhood. Get all the play you want, you STILL have to go out, you STILL have to spend time, and you STILL have to spend money. The particularly poor results of his D.C. outtings not only made his recent domestic investments a waste, but they also planted the seeds of "opportunity cost" in his mind.

"Why Can't I Use a Smiley Face" can be found in both paperback and Kindle for $8 and $3 respectively. It is a very short read (took me about 1.5 hours) and worth the cheap price, especially if you're looking for something to tide you over during a flight OR if you are a regular follower of Roosh. I will, however, warn you the first few paragraphs are unnecessarily crass and lewd. Getting past that you should have a decent read.

This Is Why You HOLD PHYSICAL ASSETS!

March 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

How you Keynesian believers in the central banking system doing?

You doing alright?

You OK?

You have faith in your government and what your politicians are telling you?

Could you bend over a little more please?

Manly Reviews

March 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Manly Reviews enjoys the decline!

Why aren't you!?

Where the Good Men Are

March 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I took inventory of my single male friends.

Nearly all of them are 30+, all of them own their own house, all are gainfully employed, and though not all Ambercrombie and Fitch models, not one of them is obese or below what I would consider a 6.

They also all have at least ONE unique eccentricity about them. Many of them are ballroom dancers. Two of them are pilots. One belongs in a band. A fourth is starting his third serious company. And another has taught himself two languages because he managed to retire at 42. It is because of their eccentricities they are part of my crew of friends. They are interesting and significantly-above-average intelligent people and conversation with them is the most enjoyable aspect of my life.

However, there is one who stands out in this category of "Captain's single male friends." The reason he stands out is he is the only one who actively pursues dating.

Though 43, he is in good enough shape and charming enough with the ladies he manages to date 25 year old women on average. While this is certainly fun, his long term goal is to get married. However, he faces a quandary. Most 20 something girls are immature and not marriage material. They are pain to date and are not capable of the level of intelligent conversation he needs. To find women his maturity level, he needs to date older, "older" to him meaning 30+. But when he does there is inevitably a deal-breaker, usually another guy's kid or a financial wreck. Thus, he still plugs along, filling his date card with 24 year old's, occasionally wandering into 30+ territory only to have her life-mistakes return him to the younger ladies.

Now you would think "this is a great situation" and he is having the time of his life. But alas, my 43 year old friend is starting to suffer from "Player Burnout." He no longer is excited about the prospects of a new date. He no longer has the giddiness and hope of taking out yet another 26 year old. And when they text him their naked pictures he merely shows me and the others guys and says, "meh." In the past year I have seen his interest in other hobbies supplant his interest of women, and if you were to ask him today if he'd rather smoke a cigar than go on another date with a girl he met online. In short you are witnessing the last dying moments of a player, much like watching the final stages of a star gone supernova, before it collapses into nothingness.

When he does go "supernova," however, there will be no more players, let alone men looking to date in my crew. And with his resignation from "the game" he will pull himself out of the dating market and there will be one less "good guy" out there for the ladies. It then dawned on me that the answer to:

"Where have all the good men gone?"

was staring me right in the face. I can answer that question by simply explaining what all my single male friends do.

"Mike" the retired at 42 year old has a lifestyle akin to mine. He has no real job, he wakes up when he wants, and he pursues various intellectual pursuits to stimulate his mind. He is a minimalist with very few expensive possessions and though he is a veritable millionaire, he drives the cheapest import car he could afford. For entertainment he tries different coffee stores and hangs out with some of his other retired friends during the day. In the evening he hangs out with us usually for cigars or a cheap dinner at one of our favorite dives. He returns home where he teaches himself languages, reads books, watches documentaries, has cocktails and goes to bed around 4AM.

"Bill" is a pilot. He just purchased a very nice home and the mortgage on that home is the only debt he has. He has been living frugally for the past 10 years, building up a massive downpayment that he could afford a 15 year mortgage and a very low interest rate. He works out with me religiously. He is also the musician in our group and can ballroom dance. He's been working on his music, his body building, and his career. When he's in town he joins us for dinner at that same dive restaurant or (time permitting) is up for flying down south to enjoy warmer weather.

"Fred" is a computer networker and a race car driver. His house is pretty much paid off because he busts his ass off working about 60 hours a week. If you want to find him you can find him at work, at the gym, in his basement (tinkering with computers) or on the race track. You will not find him at a club or a loud bar, because he is a beer connoisseur. You will find him at the quiet local brewpub with a bunch of other 40 somethings.

I could go on, but if I were to succinctly summarize where to "find the good men" it would be:

1. At home
2. At a coffee shop/low end restaurant
3. At work
4. Out doing their hobbies

In short, NOT at the bar or the night club.

But here is where the women face a high, if not, impossible hurdle. You can't meet these men even if you wanted to. You can't go to random houses, knocking on guys doors to see if any "good guys" are home. You can't go to a restaurant and randomly approach men to see if they are good guys. You certainly can't go to various corporate offices to see if any good guys are at work. And unless you are in the passenger seat of Fred's race car or Bill's airplane, you're not going to find good guys attempting to join their hobbies. In other words, they've gone ghost. They're gone. They're not only off the market, you can't even find them to convince them to consider going back on the market.

This leaves marriage-seeking women with the "nightclub" or "online dating" as markets for finding men. Unfortunately, these aren't "good guys." Not that they a morally bad men, they're just not marriage minded men. They're players. And so when a guy scores a number and lines up a date with a girl he met at a bar, 9 out of 10 times he has no romantic interest in her, only sexual. This makes things doubly bad for women because it is misleading or (to borrow from economic parlance) "sends the wrong pricing signals." With all these players asking for their numbers, women misinterpret this attention as romantic attention, not sexual. Thus, they are constantly thinking "Mr. Perfect" is just around the corner, when it is just another player. 20 years of bar-hopping and night-clubbing go by with no yield of "good men" and thus, with the biological clock screaming, they ask "when have all the good men gone?"

The answer, ladies, is "home."

Enjoy the decline!

Larissa Faw's "Successful, Gorgeous, and Amazing" Friends

March 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ed Thatch has a post up on Return of Kings that merits reading unto itself, but what caught my eye was him quoting a young lady named "Larissa Faw." Larissa writes for Forbes magazine about Millennial and young women's issues (because what else would there be to write about?) and in her latest post she did what every budding 20 something female journalist seems compelled and mandated to do:

She bragged about her "awesome" friends and how they just can't seem to find a man.

So common is this it makes one sit back and say,

"OK, why is this such a common phenomenon? Why are there so many "successful, gorgeous, and amazing" friends of female journalists that just "can't seem to find a man? More so why do these journalists keep bragging about their "amazing" friends who just can't seem to find a guy?"

The answer is in the myopic view of women, especially those in journalism. They are incapable of asking what men want, and instead ply their own standards of either what they want or what they think men should want in terms of a suitable and compatible mate. This results not just in a mismatch between the traits Larissa's "successful, gorgeous and amazing" have and what men are looking for, but complete and utter confusion on the part of the ladies.

Of course to the outside observer, this is funny. Women telling women what men should like in them, is like my friend Steve telling me how I should breath while in labor. It doesn't apply. But what makes it worse is when a woman dares to ask a man what he wants OR a man simply speaks the truth about what men want, they are lambasted, lectured and villainized. Women even go so far as to TELL MEN WHAT THEY SHOULD LIKE IN A WOMAN (You ever been called "shallow?" You see the "fat acceptance" movement? You ever have a woman's personality listed as the primary reason you should date her?)

The reason for such a vitriolic response to fact and truth (instead of what it should be - acceptance) is because women have been brought up and brainwashed (primarily by their own selves) to believe what they WANT. Not what the reality is. And so any time someone dare introduce an ounce of reality into their fragile and delusional world, they get angry. Never mind that the purveyor of truth is trying to help you. Never mind this article would help Larissa's "successful, gorgeous, and amazing" friends (SGAF's henceforth). The irony/hilarity/sad thing is most women reading this right now are having their emotions blind them to the gold nugget of help we're trying to give them.

Now, even though I doubt most of Larissa's SGAF's will listen, in a vain attempt to bring an end to young female journalists wondering aloud how their "amazing" friends aren't snatched up by men, permit me some explaining. Specifically, let's look at what qualifies a woman as "gorgeous, successful and amazing" in the eyes of a woman and compare it to what men want.

When it comes to "gorgeous" women give other women, especially their friends, such a large handicap it dwarfs the tonnage of affirmative action handicap we've given to Barack Obama on the economy. I don't know how many arguments I've had with heterosexual women about how "pregnant is not beautiful." There I am, the heterosexual male. THE authority on what is or is not "gorgeous" in the female sex, and I have a bunch of women, who have NO INTENTION OR DESIRE to date other women and therefore are NOT authorities on female beauty, arguing with me about whether a pregnant woman is beautiful. "Gorgeous" means (and I'll say it again, despite saying it many times before):

Tight ass
Pretty face
Long legs
Long hair
Big boobs preferable

That's it. Period. End of discussion.

How many of the SGAF's actually have all those traits? Probably none. But Larissa can't tell her friend Amy, "You're ass is too big" and thus needs to keep the lie up.

"Successful?" I think we've covered this before. Successful in what? Engineering? Surgeon? Oil platform driller? Accountant?

OR

"social worker, teacher, nanny, marketing executive, designer consultant, fashion consultant?" ie-somebody who not only doesn't make a lot of money, but relies on men disproportionately paying more in taxes to create a government make-work job to make you feel like you're "an independent woman?"

Also, as mentioned in Ed Thatch's post, how much money do those ladies save? Because, let's just say for the sake of arugment, the SGAF does make $100,000. How many of them blow through that and spend $120,000? Isn't success supposed to be how much money or wealth you have saved up? Not how many pairs of shoes you have? And don't even get me started about student debts. I'd surmise the majority of Larissa's SGAF's have a negative net worth and are heavily reliant upon the Daddy-Government-Hubby complex for their livelihood and subsidy.

"Amazing?" Really? Did she really do something to AMAZE you? Like if I met your group of SGAF's I would be AMAZED with each and every one of them? Notice in my previous post I LIST THE INDIVIDUAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS of my male friends. They have done things that ARE amazing. I have done things that are amazing. So when you compare your typical SGAF's accomplishments of,

"Earned my Masters in English, and I like to travel, I TOTALLY LOVE SUSHI, OMG! And I'm like really conscious about the environment."

to

"I scaled 10 11,000+ foot peaks in a year, did two 1,500 mile plus motorcycle rallies, put myself through college, wrote 4 books, taught myself motorcycle repair, and I'm a ballroom dancer"

you can understand;

1. you're not amazing, you're actually quite common, common to the point there's millions of women just like you out there
2. you do not prompt an inkling of desire to consider you a potential candidate for marriage
3. compared to me, you're so boring and NOT-amazing, my hobbies and interests are more rewarding than having sex with you.

In the end what men want is so simple, it's laughable more women haven't figured out what a HUGE advantage it would give over their competitions.

A physically attractive woman who is nice responsible reasonably intelligent and likes sex

How 5 simple variables seem to elude the 150 million American women (even with all the brainwashing and propaganda) is beyond me and worth a Double Face Palm Award.

DOUBLE FACEPALM
FOR WHEN ONE FACEPALM DOESN'T CUT IT

The Lesson of Cyprus

March 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I ran out of patience and went off the hinge. But at the same time explained the Cyprus event and why so many sheeple are scrambling to get their savings.

Roosh Enjoys the Decline!

March 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Roosh is enjoying the decline!

Why aren't you?

Your Bank Account Is Safe

March 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Do not buy a motorcycle.

Do not buy silver.

Do not buy that shapely AR 15.

You will obey.

You will conform.

You will keep your finite life's seconds of life in the form of dollars in the US banking system.

You will Obey.

You will conform.

All is safe.

You are a racist if you dare to have a thought otherwise.

Contracting Student Loan STD

March 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Outstanding.

Our Motorcycle Agent in the Field

March 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Is enjoying the decline!

Why aren't you!?

When CSR Infects a Corporation

March 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From an agent in the field:

The company (Origin Energy) continues to pay their employees their full wages, but rather than doing accounting, admin or maintenance for the company, they're released to plant saplings, ladle out soup, and counsel troubled 'yoof' for the charity organisation of the employee's choosing. This "charity leave" is provided in addition to the employees annual leave. The only possible way it could make for good business is if consumers were so impressed with Origin's squeaky clean social conscience, that they'd choose to forgo a cheaper energy provider to make the world a kinder, friendlier place....bahahaha....God, are we proles really that stupid? I'm not sure I want to know the answer to that. In any case, I'm pretty sure Origin isn't pushing that angle with their customers, they're pretty quiet about it actually, rather it seems to be a recruiting lure, it's hinted at here:

http://www.originenergy.com.au/2233/Our-culture-values

I can't see why they wouldn't just offer their favoured charities discounted electricity and be done with it - seems far less economically destructive to my uneducated mind.

CSR is a disease.

Let there be no doubt about it.

It just happens to infect corporations and not people.

The Captain Goes "Full Monty"

March 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From Instapundit:

Short of going the full Clarey, it is prudent to think of places to put your money where it will be harder for the looters to get at: Paying off debt, educating your kids, hard goods that you'll enjoy, etc.

I like that. New economic phrase, "The Full Clarey." Defined as "when you really go off the deep end, give up on everything, and pound down the Rumpie while driving your Ninja at excessive speeds."

All Economic Production Comes from the Fed

March 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I checked CNBC. Don't ask me why, I was just checking in to see how crazy the crazies were on the financial markets. And well, they're still crazy. Here's the headline title:

If I do my math right, we are now entering the 5th year where the financial markets focus all of their attention solely on the Fed for economic salvation and a source of economic production. Of course, this is nothing more than desperation. Much like middle aged divorcee women focus their attention on "Eat Pray Love" type movies to provide them the rationale a single George Clooney with millions of dollars will choose them and their baggage over a 25 year old, childless hottie, so too do the millions of finance professionals and 401k Clergy depend on an ever increasing stock market for their livelihood. And ANY excuse, even something as pathetic as thinking the central bank is the source of economic production, will do.

Therefore, since it seems the market insists on being irrational longer than that saner heads have patience, I thought it high time to make a couple economic charts explaining this new economy.

First, GDP by sector:

If you don't believe this chart, then you obviously didn't attend an Ivy League school and are stupid. You're probably racist too.

Second, a new refined chart on the basics of government finance:

You're an idiot, or at least not a Wall Street professional or D.C. financier genius like Paul Krugman, if you don't understand this. But it's alright, not everybody can be as smart as these guys. Debt is GOOD. Don't worry that there aren't any metrics on the Y-axis, it doesn't matter. That's how awesome and smart these eocnomists are and how stupid you are. You're also a racist if you don't agree with or understand this chart.

Finally, unicorns.

The implication of this chart should be obvious even a non-Ivy League graduate should understand it. Economics+Unicorns = Awesomeness. But that's OK if you don't, because that's why we have finance professionals to explain these "complex" financial and economic issues to dumbass commoners like you. This is cutting edge stuff by the way. The introduction of the "Unicorn Complex" has pushed economics as a field into new and unchartered territory. Barack Obama came up with it himself. That's how smart he is. And if you don't know why unicorns have anything to do with economics, then you are a racist AND a sexist.

This post brought to you by Amazon. You have to buy something, might as well get it on Amazon so I get a commish and don't have to ever work a real job again.

Why It Will Remain a Boys Club

March 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's people like Adria Richards and her petty sense of an "umbrage-free" life that will cause more harm to women as her antics scare away any potential employers from hiring women in fear they will do PRECISELY what she did - go on a crusade first and foremost for her own ego at the expense of pretty much everyone else. I mean, good god. Taking pictures at a conference for a conversation you were not part of and REPORTING IT???? What nazi goose-stepping BS is that??? Are women the new East German Stasi??? I can only imagine the effects of a nanny-nazi-narcfest on employee morale and productivity.

Look ladies, if you can't handle boys being boys, and your skin is so fragile you're going to NARC on them, then you don't belong in IT. You belong in HR.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

ht.

The Check Engine Light That Cried Wolf

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you grew up in "my day" you knew that when the engine light went on in your car it was something serious. Ruptured cylinder, exploding piston, melting transmission, fire in the glove box, the Russians launched their ICBM's.

Then something happened around the mid 90's.

The horrible and much-feared engine light would go on, and after a gallon of adrenaline shot through your body, praying the car wouldn't blow up with you in it on the interstate during rush hour, it magically made it safely to the nearest and most-rip-offish service station. The next day you picked it up and found out "eh, oxygen sensor. 100 bucks to reset the code."

Next car, engine light, panic, station, 100 bucks "fuel sensor."

Next car, engine light, "what the F&CK? Again???" mild panic, drive it around a little more, station, "fuel sensor" 100 bucks.

Next car, engine light, "f#ck it, don't care." Drive around for another 6 months, pull into an auto part store and the clerk tells you "yeah, if you give us your ID, we can lend you this plug in device to your dashboard and it will reset it for you. You walk out, WOW! Who knew! O2 sensor! Reset button, NO 100 bucks.

So in 15 years the much-feared engine light, which was essentially X-Box's "the ring of death" for cars, no longer says a damn thing about your actual engine, but whether or not your exhaust indicates the TIPPY TOP MOST SUPER EFFICIENT mix of air and gas.

Is it vital?

No.

Is it even important?

No.

But unless you run the damn diagnostic on the car, you never know if THIS ONE TIME it ISN'T the bleeping oxygen sensor and the car is about to blow up and render you a charred corpse on a traffic jam during rush hour.

Now, it isn't as bad as in the mid 90's when the local station would charge you $100 to plug something in and hit a button, but you still have the fear of an imminent exploding car and the annoying chore of driving to your local O'Reilly's Auto store to use your license as collateral to boring a plug in device. And so when your beloved ole Captain was driving early this morning, and received the deceiving "engine light" on his car, only to find out it was once again the stupid "fuel sensor" he went online and bought this.

Not only will I save enough in gas to pay for the damn thing, I will also increase my life expectancy by 40 years not fretting about the stupid check engine light.

"Who's the Private Economist Who's a Salsa Machine to All the Ladies?"

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

CAP!

It's "Shaft Themed Linkage" today!

Hey, works sucks, but don't let us stop you ladies from climbing that career.

Ace of Spades enjoys the decline! (though it's nestled in there)

You get what you deserve and we're laughing our asses off at you.

Adria Richards continues to help improve the reputation of ~~nazis...errr..bitches..errr..both.~~...errr..."feminists."

The fact American's who hate their country and themselves so much that this is even a debate is why I enjoy the decline. And if Americans, specifically American women (yes, I am singling you out because of voting patterns) can't understand why the rest of us here can't afford to pay for EVERYBODY'S HEALTH CARE IN THE WORLD, then the 19th amendment deserves serious reconsideration.

It's a scam and a racket people. Education was NEVER intended to help the students, just the professors.

What's missing from this article?

Tam hits 6 million!

This is why you just pass all students with B's and give the students who try A's. Trust me, that's how you keep your job in academia, and besides, most kids don't learn anything and don't want to learn anything. Make it work for you.

Or, ORRR, just don't have kids in the first place.

Bars prove to be a better place to meet your future spouse than church. BAR TRUMPS CHURCH!

Widowed Alpha Females (a good read, especially the observation about how television shows have changed for women in the past decade)

How do you fight such stupidity?

"If 50% of companies were ran by women and 50% of men stayed at home, then we'd have true equality." And equal misery and a fraction of our productive capacity and a country ripe for being taken over by our enemies. But hey, at least the feminists will be happy!

But we own the blacks! And we own the poor! They're our bitches and their lifestyles be damned! We need to pay back the teachers unions whose money keeps us in power!

This is why I want a bartender as a mom and not a sociologist professor. I would come 2nd, 3rd or 4th in terms of importance to the sociologist professor and 1st in the life of my bartender mom.

I will explain "The Rule of Chores" again. Whoever has the lowest standards of cleanliness THAT STILL IS ACCEPTABLE AND CONSIDERED HYGIENIC, is the one who does the least amount of chores. If somebody else wants standards of cleanliness HIGHER than that standard, then that person will do all the extra work necessary to clean to that level. So (as typically is the case) if the husband cleans to his bachelor pad level (the environment of which he survived just fine in with no medical complications) and the wife wants a cleaner standard, then the wife can clean till her heart's content.

Free Northerner also does an excellent job dissecting government and GDP figures.

Finally, our sponsor, GLORIOUS KARL! Who visited me recently and we had cigars. But in Soviet America CIGARS SMOKE YOU!

Buy GLORIOUS HAT HERE!

Cubanos in Wisconsin Quote

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"For those of us who no longer have to fight to pursue freedom, it is easy to forget how precious it is."

Part IV of a "Worthless Degreed Person"

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Part 4 is our friend Jorge explaining the political environment at his arts college. You would think they would be open minded, especially be a liberal school, but the hostility Jorge experiences is something most leftists would file a harassment complaint over if it were coming from the other side.

Adria Richards Fired

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Halle-freaking-luja

Here's the official statement.

You can "like" the announcement on facebook.

To all the ladies who think it's your right to not be offended in this world, please take note and stay out of other people's business.

Andy Yang is Your Problem, Not Adria Richards

March 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If a whiner, tattle-tale or NARC goes to the authorities and the authorities can easily identify her as a tattle tale, real leaders will dismiss the tattle tale as childish, stupid, and irrelevant. If you're spineless and lack any kind of leadership or wisdom, you give the tattle tale power and kowtow to her demands.

The truth is, if the people at PyCon and Andy Yang had ignored Adria Richards for what she was (a NARCy little whiner) none of this would have happened and the true loser (Adria Richards) would be left to wallow in her self-absorbed pity and self-forced-perceived "injustice."

Instead, kowtowing to political correctness, affirmative action, and spineless corporate "leadership," Andy Yang fired somebody who shouldn't have been fired and tarnished the reputation of his firm Playhaven.

Now, it will be very doubtful if any male (who account for not only the numerical majority of IT talent he needs, but highly skilled talent) will work under Andy Yang. whether at Playhaven or not. They will search his name and say,

"Oh yeah. That guy. The one without a spine and who will throw me under a bus for something as childish as a NARC. No, I think I'll take my Masters in Computer Engineering elsewhere."

The good news is that this story has a happy ending. The villain (Adria) got fired. Her accomplice (Andy Yang) is exposed for the spineless Igor he is. PolyCon's reputation with males is shattered and will want to seriously reconsider how much they want to open the floodgates to feminism. And I'm pretty sure the young man who got fired will be picked up by a less-politically correct, and more profit-oriented firm.

The lesson to pull from this is for all you executives and bosses out there to not give teeth to such worthless vermin as the Adria Richards of the world by being spineless wimps and bending over backwards for faux harassment complaints. The cost is the people who really matter - us adults who are sick and tired of walking on eggshells worrying about when the next power-tripping, egomanic, entitlement-minded brat is going to eavesdrop and file a complaint.

You want to talk about a hostile work environment? Well then you just keep kissing the asses of the Adria Richard's of the world.

Feline Bigotry

March 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Hat tip.

Why Minorities Account for a Majority of My New Readership

March 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Uh oh! Looks like all those minority/victim groups are getting sick and tired of being lied to by the left! Even so much to the point they'll trust a evil right wing, bigoted, racist, sexist homophobe like me!

Guns That Shoot Bugs & Misc.

March 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My concern isn't so much the "gun safety nuts" who race to point out others' failings in gun safety, but "how big are the bugs you need a salt gun to kill them???"

Age acceleration. It is a fact of life. The first 5 years of my "conscious" life seem about 4 times as long as the next 30. I believe, if this acceleration continues, the last decade of my life will be about a day long in the eyes of my 3 year old self.

Remember being forced to pay $200 for the "15th edition" of your professor's book because ~~he wanted to rape you for another $200~~, err...the 14th edition, just was so outdated? Yeah so do I.

We deport people who don't agree with socialism. Everybody else, COME ON IN!

More on bitcoin. Something I still am too lazy to start studying and understand.

Finally, I have not given Delusion Damage its due. If you have not visited him, you should as it is the single largest source of traffic and the single greatest aggregator of various right/mano/econ sites. Make it part of your daily regimen.

Using "The Law of Supply" to Pick Up Chicks

March 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm not joking when I say this, but I believe economics is the key to understanding women.

But by all means. Keep using economics to figure out really important stuff like "how to lower interest rates" or "how to increase labor productivity."

I'll be using it to unhinge bras.

Whores Can't Be Choosers

March 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Boys, you paying attention to this?

The ingredients before baking were already there to warn you before this happened.

Worthless degree, "writing profession," lack of science, math or STEM.

And how much do you want to bet she will self-proclaim herself to be an "independent feminist" who doesn't need a man while she parasites off of you guys for a meal?

I don't know what angers me more. That she no doubt will claim to be "independent" and thinks this is so "cute" or that there are enough men/suckers to let a veritable whore get away with this.

Latest Episode of "The Clarey Podcast" Available

March 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Podcast 3-22-13
How cars are being progressively made more and more for chicks and how this will ruin cars. Aaron also talks about who his favorite talk radio show hosts are, as well as explains "the early dark days before the Manosphere" and how men figured this stuff out on their own. Show was heavily edited for quality purposes, however, you will DEFINITELY want to tune in at the 45:00 minute mark.

Results of "Forced Discipline and Regimen Month"

March 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The month is up and the results are "good." Not "spectacular" but well enough to show improvement.

Though physically there is some visual improvement, most of the improvement came via numbers. i.e. - my bench press increased by 15 pounds, military press by 10 pounds, the amount of reps I could do also increased, and my resting heart rate went below 60. Blood pressure is also low at 114/70. I lost no weight, but did lose an inch in the waist, leaving me to believe I translated some fat into muscle.

While I did want to pretty much cut out all carbs and go paleo, unfortunately I pretty much had already done that as much as is "bachelorly" possible. Meaning to cut out carbs would require I make my own food and go WAY out of my way to do so. I got sick of spending an hour in the grocery store looking up "carbs" on the back of boxes. Carbs are freaking everywhere. Nearly impossible to cut it out of your diet beyond just not eating bread, pasta and other obvious things. It's easier instead to just work out more or run some physical chores or errands and eat the occasional Mexican dish than piss away an hour a day "looking up carbs."

The work out routine I followed was alternative lifting weights and running each day, it was also closely paralleled to Victor Pride's "30 Days of Discipline." So one day I would lift weights and the next day I would run. I forced myself to run 6 miles a day no matter how cold or how tired I was. I would take Sunday's off. Thankfully, however, this routine has become engrained and I will continue it.

Character Trumps Diversity

March 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you ask two men (or women) to describe themselves, the lesser of the two will cite their religion or ideology rather than their profession. i.e.- the superior of the two will say,

"I'm a plumber"

or

"I'm a surgeon"

or

"I'm a stay at home wife."

while the inferior of the two will say,

"I'm Christian"

or

"I'm a liberal"

or

"I'm a vegan."

The reason why one is superior to the other is that in order to be a "plumber" or a "surgeon" or a "stay at home mother" means you must do something or achieve something. Being "Christian" or declaring yourself a "vegan" simply takes a declaration and nothing more (please do not flood me with e-mails about catechism). And though it may seem to be a very subtle difference, it is something I immediately pick up on when meeting people for the first time. For nearly 100% of the time when somebody defines themselves by their belief system or ideology and NOT their profession that person proves to be somebody I not only dislike, but do not trust.

The reason why is that when somebody substitutes a belief, religion or an ideology for achievement, it is an (admittedly) unconscious admission of laziness and proof of a weak, or total absence of, character. A person who defines themselves by merely joining a group or espousing beliefs lacks the rigor, determination, work effort and temerity to do something productive and meaningful in their lives. However, their ego is such that it cannot stand having no prestige or respect and thus they join a "club." Ergo why I truly believe the VAST majority of religious participants do not participate in religion for something as noble as god, as much as it is first and foremost for themselves.

However, religion aside, there is another variant of this intellectual hypocrisy and that is "diversity."

Let us be clear what diversity is - it is nothing more than a political tool of the left. It works by irrationally and undeservingly applying value to traits that a person was born with, and thus, had nothing to do with.

For example, say you were born the "Triple Crown" of affirmative action - black, female, and homosexual.

You are a veritable celebrity in leftist circles. You are fawned over, placated, kowtowed to and told how oppressed you are. You are also told how great you are just by the fact you have the traits of being:

1. Black
2. Female
3. Homosexual

and still manage to live, "courageously" in the face of evil white privilege, male, patriarchy blah blah blah.

But what did you achieve?

The answer is nothing. You just happened to be born with the traits of being black, female and homosexual.

THESE ARE TRAITS, NOT ACHIEVEMENTS. Traits you HAD NOTHING TO DO WITH AND NO CONTROL OVER.

Of course this isn't to say that a black woman who happens to be homosexual does not have character. If she is a surgeon and you say, "describe yourself" and she says, "I'm a surgeon and an avid cyclist," she is placing value on her achievements and hobbies, not her ethnicity, gender and sexual preference, none of which she did anything to attain. Unfortunately, though, the appeal of "diversity" and applying value where there is none proves too tempting to many. One only has to look at the sea of worthless degrees and worthless college departments in "Hyphenated-American Studies."

"Women's Studies"
"Gender Studies"

"African American Studies"
"Chicano American Studies" and the list goes on and on and on.

Here the political tool of diversity is particularly deceitful, evil and outright bigoted. It lies to various groups of people telling them traits they were born with somehow give them value. It lies to those same groups of people telling them because of these traits, they are oppressed by those who do not share their traits. It ruins the lives of these innocent people saying the ONLY way they can overcome these injustices is through the government via Democrat/Socialist/Lefitst parties (of whichever country they're in). And worst of all, it deprives these individuals of any real individualistic achievement by brainwashing them into an crippling coma-like state of "Woe-Is-Me-ism." In short the irony of these programs is that they claim to help these individuals, but merely serve to ruin their lives by making them veritable slaves to a political party.

I often wonder how long it's going to be before the black community wakes up and realizes that despite 40 years of affirmative action and democrat bribery their communities are in tatters and they are still in last place sociologically speaking in the US. I often wondering how long it's going to be before the Latino and Hispanic communities wake up and realize they're voting to turn the US into a more northern and colder version of the crappy countries they or their ancestors fled. And I wonder how long it's going to be before women realize feminism has done nothing more than enslaved them to the rat race, replaced their would-be-husbands with a government check, and destroyed any hope for true love and happiness via a normally functioning family.

Again, I don't care. I've checked out. It's just a sad crying shame nobody is heeding the words of Martin Luther King, especially those he worked so hard to help.

$1,300 for a Class in Chicana Lesbian Studies

March 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saints Name of Frick.

I mean, you just can't make this up. It REALLY IS A CLASS!.

My question is this - what IDIOT decides it's worth spending $1,300 for ONE CLASS on LESBIAN CHICANA STUDIES???

Honest to freaking Christ. What moron, even at the naive age of 18 decides to part with $1,300 of their own money to pay for this veritable shit?

And you people question my decision to give up and Enjoy the Decline.

The Captain Makes the Washington Times

March 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Huzzah!

Viva La Manosphere!

March 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New addition to "The Manosphere" directory.

Why I Refuse to See "42"

March 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

On this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast, Aaron discovers what it's like to be a stay at home wife/mom and wonders why women gave up such an easy gig for the skullduggery of work? He also reviews the movie "Burt Wonderstone" and the most recent "Die Hard." He also opines why so many good "guy flicks" are ruined by a forced romance subplot, as well as he outright refuses to see "42" as he alikens affirmative action movies to church sermons - neither of which he is fond of. Finally, drawbacks to enjoying the decline, or just being a rugged individualist. Every adventure has its drawbacks and there's not a lot of people 3 standard deviations to the right of the mean.

It's for the Chillllldreeeennnnn

March 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Gee, Jim. I don't know. Where have all the good men gone?"

If those samples were found in the post by officials on their way to foreign laboratories, the French men who sent them could theoretically face a year in prison and a 15,000 Euro fine. This year the ban was challenged but the French Government decided to uphold and maintain the anti-paternity testing law.

The reasons for which the Government said the ban should remain were related to the preservation of peace within French families. According to some online articles, Germany, has also banned (or plans to ban) paternity testing for similar reasons. French psychologists suggest that fatherhood is determined by society not by biology...

The argument against allowing paternity testing in France is directly opposed to the argument for allowing it almost everywhere else. While French Authorities believe that paternity testing can cause friction within families, some fathers find that getting rid of any doubt relating to their relationship with their child can help strengthen the bond they have with them, instead.

In cases where their paternity has been verified, the child could actually get to know who their 'real' biological father was and many people believe that is important. So, rather than causing disputes, paternity testing in France could actually settle them. Now that the ban has been upheld, French fathers are likely to continue breaking the law in an effort to discover whether children in their care are biologically theirs.

hat tip

Potemkin Women

March 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When I first moved to my current home and started establishing a rapport with the bartenders at the local pub that would become "my bar," I remember meeting two uppity 30 something women. They were sharply dressed, boisterous, laughing and certainly the center of attention. One was very attractive while the other was average. Because they frequented "my bar" it was inevitable I would establish a relationship with them also. This relationship was business in nature, but also short lived.

They were in the "house staging/fashion" business and wanted me to help them with their finances. I agreed, but found it difficult to consult them for they would constantly bail at the last minute, change meeting times, just plain forget or just plain not take my advice. They were too busy and having too much "fun" with their business and details like "accounting" were deemed non-critical.

Admittedly I was 1/4th attempting to get some kind of angle on the hot one, but after being stood up for yet another meeting I decided to end the business relationship and replace it with a "Minnesota Nice" relationship (one where you hate the other person, but fake being friendly so as not to disrupt the over all social environment). It wouldn't have mattered anyway, because the hotter of the two made it very clear she was looking for a sugar daddy to take care of her.

For the next couple of months they would come into my bar and some of the other local ones, always talking about their business loud enough for people to hear, and always ordering the priciest of drinks to further prove they were successful. It was almost as if they were 20 year olds trapped in 37 year old bodies, who somehow made it seem "house staging and fashion design" was all about drinking, partying, networking and wearing fancy clothes.

Then nothing.

They disappeared. They were gone. And nobody took note, for it was the absence of annoyance that made things "normal" again, meaning you don't remember the moment you recover from a sickness, because that's the way you're supposed to feel normally.

It wasn't until 6 months later that for whatever reason or another a neuron fired in my skull reminding me about the loud duo and so I asked the bartender,

"Hey, whatever happened to Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dumb?"

The bartender laughed as he was cleaning out a wine glass.

"I don't know what happened to Tweedle Dee, but Tweedle Dumb (the hotter one). That's a funny story. She would come in at another bar I work at across White Bear Lake and just get hammered. She'd then start crying about how miserable she was, how should couldn't find a guy to marry her, and how her business was losing money. I think they went out of business, but I haven't seen them in months."

And thus was my first conscious observation of a Potemkin Woman.

If you don't know what "Potemkin" is, it is a reference to a "Potemkin Village," a trick the Soviets used to make things look better than they actually were in Soviet Russia. With poverty, lack of production, no bread, lines, and all the other wonderful benefits socialism brought them, the Soviet leadership hid this fact by making fake "villages" to make it look like everything was just hunky dory in the USSR. So when journalists and tourists visited, they were shown the Potemkin villages, not the gulags or everyday Soviet misery. It was nothing more than a ruse to make things look better than they actually were, and is the precisely same tactic many American and western women use today.

You might ask why somebody would engage in such trickery, acting more important than they actually are. But there are good reasons women use such a tactic, specifically it allows them to attain something that they personally cannot achieve or are too lazy to achieve. Usually it is a higher status/richer man, but it could also be undue and undeserved business, undue and undeserved reputation, undue and undeserved attention, and undue and undeserved status. And thus, very much like their midlife-crisis banker male counterparts, they put on the flashy clothes, talk a big game, act all independent, and scoff at people who are actually better than them. Unfortunately, it is just a bluff. A bluff that time and real life inevitable calls. But unless you are aware of it, you can very likely fall for it and (like I did) waste precious time and resources dealing with such women.

First, understand that Potemkin Women have been with us since they were little girls. Middle school girls actually. If there is an example of a Potemkin Village in America, it is middle school. Nothing is real, it is all fake, and the most popular girls rule the roost by essentially faking it into college. They have the fanciest clothes, they have a clique no one else can join, they have the latest gadgets. However, if you've ever had the misfortune of dating one of these girls, you'd know they are typically psychological messes underneath. Of course, this is rarely known or figured out because their ruse is so effective it intimidates boys (and girls) from ever approaching them, let alone dare questioning their legitimacy.

Second, understand Potemkin Girls never mature into women who shed the fakeness and the ruse. They merely become "Potemkin Women." It worked so well as a child, why not continue the strategy? They go to college, earn some worthless degree, go out and "partay," they dress sexy at night clubs and do the faux lesbian thing, only to reject the naive boys and men who dare to advance. The ruse is so effective and society is only more than accommodating, a lot of young women actually start to believe their "Potemkin Life" is a real one. They actually think they're that smart (when a 3.8 GPA as a Communications Major is laughable), they actually think they're in demand (while most 20 something men just want to have sex, not marry them), and they actually think they're going to succeed in life (as media, parents, colleges, government and every other facet of society lies to their face). When in reality, they are merely setting themselves up for a spectacular failure and accruing debt at a pace of 4 $10 Cosmo Martini's a night on a 23% APR credit card.

Finally, after getting married, divorced, and having no real skills to fall back on, not to mention, they're getting older, the 30 something Potemkin Woman puts on her best act. She wears the clothes she can't afford, starts the business that has no hope, parades a reputation that has no truth, all in the hopes of being given one more chance at attention, money, love, and/or status. However, here reality has reintroduced itself to the Potemkin Woman and I have seen it up front, close and personal. And the difference between the show the Potemkin Woman puts on and her insecure self is stark.

There was the salsa dancing 42 year old who WAS hot for her age and wore the most provocative outfits. Of course she would only dance with the most accomplished salsa dancers. But she broke down, crying one night at her house because her children hated her.

There was 29 year old lawyer who made junior partner in record time and wouldn't even consider dating men who made less than her (including yours truly), only to end up alone at a bar a decade later with a mean scowl on her face that would scare away any man.

There was the former model who at 48 still wanted to go to "night clubs." She broke down crying as it looked increasingly likely her house would go into foreclosure.

And of course there's Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dumb.

Now I could go on retrospectively identifying all the Potemkin Women I've ran into, but the point is, especially for men (though women will also have to interact on a non-romatic or business level with Potemkin Women) is to realize just how hallow and miserable their lives really are. The more posturing, parading and bragging you see, the more likely it is they go home and their lives are miserable. That the woman who laughed at you in front of her friends when you offered to buy her a drink, goes home that very same night in a drunk stupor and cries herself to sleep because "she can't find a man." I don't say this because I "want" it to be true or that I'm looking for some kind of "revenge" for women that spurned my advances. I'm telling you because it IS true. I've seen it. I've seen the Potemkin Woman at home all by herself at 3AM, out of the public view...

and she ain't pretty.

Charty Goodness

March 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From Mr. Powell.

"We're All Out of White Guilt"

March 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and we adults are done with you elites and Hollywood types forcing it down our throats.

(so you know it links to a video of me tirading and is not safe for work).

Washington Times Article Part 2

March 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Part 2! "The Origins of Cappy Cap!"

Is it dark!?

Is it secret!?

How did the Captain become...um...well..uhh...the "captain?"

Was it a broken heart!?

Tortuous childhood?

Did parochial school drive him to become what he is!?

Tune in and find out!!!!

"The Invisible Bitch-Slap"

March 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's like "the invisible hand," but instead it's when you piss off the forces of economics and reality decides to punish you for your stupidity.

Who Employs Warren Kinsella?

March 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because I'd like to know who would employ such a person who seems to make a career out of defamation?

Roosh Walks Into a Libertarian Bar

March 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Roosh interviewed me over at Return of Kings. The response from his readership about libertarians and libertarianism was a little surprising. Between him and the Washington Times, we're on track for an interview a day!

The Captain Goes to Milwaukee!

March 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Going to Milwaukee this weekend. E-mail the ole Captain if you're around and up for cigars or dancing.

The Return of Shame

March 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Law, at its best, prevents people from doing bad things. And that's at its best.

A lot of times people just don't obey laws (criminals) and even when they do obey laws, they may not be moral. In other words laws prohibit bad behavior, but can not compel good or moral behavior. So while I may not murder somebody, law doesn't prevent me from racking up more credit card debt than I can afford or standing somebody up for a date.

However, society did have a tool that picked up where laws left off - shame.

Though not codified or written down, society had their own set of unspoken rules or laws called "standards" and if you violated these social standards you would be shamed and scorned. This shame would compel you to behave appropriately and was a vital and necessary component of society in order for it to survive and succeed.

However, shame is very interesting in that it's very much like "paying taxes" or "having to work for a living." It's a fact of life nobody likes. You step out of line you may not go to jail, but you will be shamed by society. Therefore, you don't get to do whatever you want to do all willy nilly. However, also like paying taxes and having to work for a living, shame can be used as a political tool. Specifically, when it comes to a democracy, an amoral political party can ignore the importance shame plays in society, capitalize on childish-mentalities of the lesser members of the electorate, and promise a world with no shame.

You don't want to work? Fine! We'll tax other undeserving people to finance your life.

You don't want to pay taxes? Fine! We'll make a villainized group pay them for you!

You don't want shame? Fine! We'll launch an all out assault on traditional historical standards, the country's historical culture, and institute moral relativism.

In short, promising the electorate the elimination of shame is nothing more than bribing them. However unlike welfare, medicare or EBT cards, it's a psychological benefit, not a financial one. And thus, just as sure as leftist parties across the world promise their voters other people's money, they also do their best to eliminate shame.

We see this everyday. The idiot who couldn't do basic math and bought a house he couldn't afford is a "victim." The unemployed Music Therapy major, living at home is "just down on his luck." And there is no better example of the elimination of shame as we replace military veterans with "single moms" as our nation's greatest hero. So successful is the left that the political and social environment is now so hostile that it's now "shameful to shame." If you dare criticize somebody for failing to meet a standard you are the one that is shamed. You are accused of being rude. Your target of shaming is even arrogant and entitled, yelling "HOW DARE YOU JUDGE ME!!!" And if your target of shame happens to be in a "victim class" you are immediately called an "ist" (even though you are criticizing their actions and not their race, ethnicity, sex, etc. etc.).

Additionally, since shaming by its nature is a public or publicized action (i.e. - you can't secretly shame someone) you are immediately alienated and ostracized from society. Dare you demand EBT cards be the size of a poster for all to see on a blog or a forum, employers will no longer hire you. Dare you criticize illegal immigration and are consequently accused of racism, you cannot run for public office. And dare you criticize single parenthood, you can forget finding a date. In short we have fully eliminated shaming from society and all the benefits (personal responsibility being the key one) that came with it.

Naturally, a shameless society will fail. You can make all the laws you want, but without the social norms and mores that force people to be self-reliant, responsible, and respectful units of society, those individual units will revert to their basic human instinct and decay into shameless and parasitical ones. However, there is a consequence to society failing. Specifically, those people who are vested in society and are moral, are going to lose the only thing that matters to them - society. And while a high percentage of them may still be too intimidated or brainwashed to speak out, bluntly and truthfully, a certain percentage of people will realize the cost is too great and start shaming again. Specifically, those people who have nothing left to lose.

Understand that the reason most people don't speak out against and shame the social atrocities occurring in the US is because they have too much at risk. They have a house, they have a family, they have a career. Their entire lives have been built within this system and are thus dependent on it. And dare they get out of line, and dare they publicly shame the wrong group, the political and social cost for them daring to point out the emperor has no clothes is that they will lose it all. An HR nazi will be auditing your facebook posts. Your hiring manager will get a complaint. An Adria Richards will narc on you. Careers in America are so fragile and employers so spineless, you dare don't rock the societal boat with shaming. You watch that recent immigrant use her EBT card at your expense and you shut up and like it.

But what if you're part of a group with nothing left to lose? What if you're young, endebted by previous generations to the tune of $225,000, facing a lousy job market, and no future? What if you're part of a group that is just assumed to have benefits and privileges when that is not the case, and you're constantly accused of bigotry and being part of a "patriarchy?" Oh, and by the way, what if a mental illness has infected the half of society you SHOULD have gotten the greatest joy out of in life and instead corrupted and spoiled them leaving you little-to-no shot in life at marriage of family? What if your future was just plain taken away?

Why you'd be the typical young man in America today.

And it is here where shame is not only going to have a triumphant return, but it is already back in full force.

I hate to inform all the various political groups, victim groups, protected classes, sacrosanct faux heroes and other shameless classes the left has formed, but your strategy to "shame the shamers" won't work on this group of people. And the reason why is that your strategy hinges on one thing - that there would be an economic cost inflicted on anybody who dares to shame. But if they have no money, no job, no career, no hope, and no future, there's nothing you can take from them. Worst still, as they slowly start to wake up and realize just how much your anti-shaming campaign has screwed up society, they will blame you (rightly so) for stealing and destroying their futures. And with nothing left to do and at no cost to them, shaming you and your ideological adherents is going to become their favorite hobby.

The Ed Driscoll Effect

March 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Thanks Ed!

Road Trip Linkage

March 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I predict the term "Affirmative Action" will achieve the pejorative tone in due time similar to "short bus."

The Canadians also have liberal arts majors.

Dal explains why men aren't responding the market price signals.

After 44 years of marriage we divorced. I consider it a successful marriage..Oh, BTW, Castro is great!

Ehhh...I don't want to mess with Kate.

Danny interviews Aurini about how economics delves into post nuclear war!

The DeGroote School of Business

March 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sorry DeGroote. You deserve your own post. We're getting sick of the sexist crap leftists, spineless, compliant wanna-bes-but-can't-do teachers and academians are pawning off as education.

Business degrees, unless in Accounting or MIS are worthless. They are just plain worthless. NOBODY should major in business. But what is worse is when you have to suffer a purposeful and designed political campaign of socialist, leftists clap trap from losers who couldn't hack it in the real world and end up being professors.

You want to go to DeGroote? Go right ahead and see if you can ever pay back your student loans.

Repair, Never Replace

April 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When the next generation of video game consoles come out I will be switching from XBox to Playstation.

Why?

Because I am now on my 5th (yes, that's right) FIFTH X Box 360.

The reason is simple. I am heavily invested in games I like and thus, because I have so much invested in the software, I need the console that plays that format. So when I got the Red Ring of Death for the 4th time, I started to prepare to shell out more money for the video game industry's biggest design flaw.

However, I caught myself this time. And when I say, "I caught myself" I mean I STOPPED an automated thought process that has cost me plenty in terms of money and lost self-teaching. Namely, I decided to REPAIR my XBox 360 and NOT pay somebody to do it for me nor buy a replacement XBox altogether. And after catching myself I realized this is a VERY important lesson for all of us to learn.

Understand our brains are predisposed to be put on rote rehearsal or automatic pilot for efficiency's sake. This is NOT a disadvantage, but rather an advantage for the MAJORITY of instances. For example when the new dual joysticks came out it took every 20 something man about 10 hours of play to learn the "right stick controls vision, left stick controls movement" layout of all modern day FPS's. This is no different than when we first learned to walk when we had to develop the motor skills to do so. And you can ask any beginning ballroom dance student the frustration of forcing his/her feet to do what the brain wants it to do.

But after a while you develop a muscle memory which (more specifically) is your brain stem developing a repetitive memorization of certain muscle movements that no longer require the input of the frontal lobes allowing you to (in the case of dancing) keep your footwork going while soothsaying your dance partner into bed. But while we think of PHYSICAL movements as an example of this, repetitive MENTAL actions, AKA "habits" also fall under this category as well. And these unconscious habits are hard to break, thus, why I want to point out this one.

YOu, me, and everybody else have been mentally conditioned to look for the easiest route out. When this comes to the maintenance and repair of our physical goods, the answer is usually one of "dispose and replace." The problem with this approach is two fold. One, it costs more to replace an item that is repairable and two, we lose the opportunity to LEARN how to repair things that IF LEARNED AT A VERY EARLY AGE CAN SAVE YOU HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS over the course of a life time. And thus if we can recondition our brains out of the consumerist mentality of "toss and replace" we can not only save ourselves some money, but improve ourselves in terms of skills.

Now you may say, "But I like the convenience of outsourcing repair" or you may say, "But I'm not good at fixing things." But allow me a little bit of economics.

First, there is the obvious savings you will realize if you learn to repair things at an early age as opposed to constantly outsourcing it.

Second, with progressive taxation, regulation, and socialism, the "division of labor" is being undermined, meaning, as people specialize and trade their skills via money and labor, they are taxed more. Therefore, if you can learn to be a "do it yourselfer" you not only save the money it would cost you to outsource the repair of your various items, but you don't have to pay the "sales tax" on it. Heck, you may even be so bold to barter which would avoid taxation altogether.

Third, what? Like there's jobs out there for you anyway? Even if you did specialize in a particular field, get a degree, or get certified, in the end there are no jobs which makes learning to fix your own assets a very profitable investment of your time. In short you have nothing better to do with your time so you might as well learn to repair things.

In the end, I roughly estimate with my SAEG (TM) you will save yourself over the course of a lifetime EASILY $250,000 in repairs, maintenance and outsourced expenses learning to fix, build and repair your own stuff than paying somebody to do it for you (and that quarter million is at least worth a house).

So, how do you do this?

How do you become so skilled and experienced in so many aspects of maintenance and repair life?

Well, I hate to say this, the answer is obvious.

Youtube.

I had a buddy who was an ornery computer guy. I was interested in computers and how to network and repair them. But when I asked him simple, elementary questions, he got pissed off at me and would lecture me.

"You stupid idiot!!!??? What's wrong with you!!??? Don't you know anything about DRAM!!!???"

In short, he was human and was thusly, flawed, and therefore an asshole.

Youtube, thankfully, is not.

"We didn't have Youtube in our day" but you do. And there is practically every imaginable "do it yourself video" out there.

How to change oil.

How to network a computer.

How to cook souffle.

How to clean a carburetor.

How to roof a house.

You name it, youtube has it. It's practically replaced your dad. And if you want to save yourself the pain and agony of a friend berating you for "not knowing the difference between RAM and DRAM" you just go to the Youtube.

Now this may seem cute or quaint, but as the inevitabilities and realities of the US economy takes its toll, learning how to maintain, repair and fix your own stuff is going to prove to pay larger dividends than most college degrees. Matter of fact, I would contend, self-teaching yourself how to repair cars, computers and other devices liberal arts majors love to use, but fear to understand will prove to be a MUCH better investment than the $75,000 most liberal arts students spend on their worthless degrees. So while they charge you $7 for a "grande latte" with their Masters in English, you can charge them $750 to fix their Prius with your "self-taught Youtube video on how to repair a Prius." The only difference is you spent 30 hours of your life downloading youtube videos on "Prius repair" while they spent $75,000 and 6 years of their lives on "French, Gay, Lesbian, Latina, 15th Century Poetry."

In short, I believe people are VERY MUCH underestimating the value of Youtube and other "self help" and "DIY" sites. Even if your dad was inept at mechanics and was absentee, that doesn't mean you can't find a surrogate father in Youtube and benefit to the tune of hundreds of thousands.

However, truth be told, most people are intimidated by cracking open a computer case or knocking out a wall of sheet rock. So allow me to impart the self-taught wisdom I've gain to make (hopefully) millions of younger people's lives better.

1. CRACK OPEN THAT COMPUTER CASE and DESTROY THE COMPUTER. CHANGE YOUR OWN OIL (and in the process) DESTROY YOUR OWN CAR. KNOCK OUT THAT SHEET ROCK and just make a mess of everything. One of the biggest hurdles I ever had in self repair was that I would make things WORSE than when I started.

And yes you will. BUT, it's better to learn that NOW at the age of 20 than at the age of 70. YOu WILL get better and more proficient. But you WON"T ever achieve a level of proficiency unless you make your mistakes and get dirty.

2. Just accept you WILL destroy things as you go along and MOST IMPORTANTLY no matter how much you destroy TODAY, those costs will pay off more in the future. So drop the money and make the mistakes. They're worth it. Have no fear.

3. The TWO BEST THINGS YOU CAN BUY YOURSELF AT A YOUNG AGE ARE

a. a computer/electronics repair kit
b. a full tool set for cars and home repair

I wish I had somebody buy this for me as a 17th birthday gift, but most of my family was anti-repair and pro-replace. Ideally, somebody will buy you this at the age of 10, ensuring you will be ready to repair anything as you enter the real world at 18. But if anything dropping the money on those two items is a better investment than college itself, so buy those things yourself.

4. There will be points in your life you will be unemployed and pinching every penny will become vital. In times of economic recession where you DO NOT HAVE THE OPTION OF MAKING MORE MONEY having the ability to SAVE MONEY will become key to your survival, happiness, and standard of living. A man who can fix anything can enjoy a higher standard of living earning $30,000 per year than a man who can't fix nothing and makes $70,000 per year. I've seen it and it is true. Being skilled in repair, maintenance and construction/building is a great insurance against poverty no matter what is going on in the economy.

So if you're an unemployed or underemployed 20 something, a bachelor or bachelorette looking for a new hobby or endeavor, or you got a lot of time on your hands and are looking for an intellectually stimulating project, go on the Youtube, buy yourself some tools and teach yourself to repair and never replace.

How Liberal Art Majors Destroyed Stockton

April 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I pointed this out a while ago, but it needs repeating.

You cannot expect a group of adults whose only experiences are in the non-profit/government/education industries to lead with any measure of competence in that they are politicians first and foremost and have not the ability nor care to adhere to mathematical and financial reality. They are mentally spoiled little children who just happened to be in adult bodies that purposely and consciously chose weak degrees requiring no rigor, effort or thought, and consequently chose easy "careers." It should be no shock that Stockton, or any city or organization, led by such weak and talentless people went bankrupt.

And I'm being deadly serious when I say this, INVESTMENT ANALYSTS, MUTUAL FUND MANAGERS, HEDGE FUND MANAGERS and any other investment professional in charge of investing in government bonds (be they municipal, state or national) are practically MANDATED to investigate whether or not the elected leaders of those governments majored in the liberal arts.

I guarantee you that the default rate of municipalities headed up by doctors, plumbers, accountants, etc., is much lower than that of municipalities headed up by liberal art majors.

The Manosphere is Going Mainstream

April 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And there's nothing anybody can do to stop it. Congrats to 3rd Mill.

Fractional Reserve Speed Dating

April 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If you don't know what "fractional reserve banking" is, don't worry.

It just means you're successful with the opposite sex.

That being said (and not to ruin your chances with the opposite sex), "fractional reserve banking" is the idea that a bank will take a depositor's money, lend most of it out, while still allowing for the depositor to fully withdraw that money at any time. Ergo the bank only holds a "fraction" in reserve of its depositors' monies. The reason this works is because it is very unlikely EVERY depositor will come into the bank at one time and withdraw ALL of their money. Therefore banks only need to hold a fraction of total deposits to allow for daily withdrawals here and there, while lending out the rest and making money on it.

There are many criticisms of a fractional reserve banking system. Most notably that the banks are "creating money" by lending out money that already has a claim on it and technically isn't theirs to lend out in the first place. But the larger point is that the true amount of money in the economy is only a fraction of what all the bank's electronic records say there is.

Naturally, you would think money is the only commodity that can lend itself (pun FULLY intended) well to a fractional reserve system, but in my trials and tribulations in life as a SAEG (tm) I have come upon another commodity where fractional reserving is done, and it isn't in banking.

It's in speed dating.

Many years ago I gave speed dating one shot. I walked into the joint, dropped my $35 down along with 7 other men and for that $35 we got to meet 8 other women for 5 minutes a piece. The one date that I did manage to score out of this escapade brought her gay male friend to chaperone, which prompted me to dance with pretty much every other girl on the floor but her. Gay-chaperoned dates aside, the point was there was an equal number of men to women. 8 to 8. For if there was a shortage on either end you would have too many of one gender chasing too few of the other.

But something interesting occurred after the speed dating event was over. As some people headed to the bar, I decided to approach one of the girls I was interested in and chat her up a bit. Using a simple approach I said,

"You ever done this before?"

She said,

"Yes, but technically not tonight."

Curious, I said,

"Why technically not tonight?"

And her response was one for the Economics of Dating history books.

"Well, the guy who runs this speed dating thing always has too many men and not enough women. So he calls us when he has extra guys and we just fill in and act like we're interested. If women don't show up, he can't sell as many tickets so he buys us drinks as compensation."

Kind of curious about the math, not to mention I just wanted to see how screwed over me and the other 7 men were, I asked,

"So how many women were plants?"

She said,

"4."

I was more or less speechless, but the cynical side of me let out a cynical "Heh, what will they think of next?" Seeing she herself was a plant, I just walked away, went to my car and left.

Naturally I was somewhat upset at this little bit of trickery. What was sold as a way for 8 men to meet 8 women was in reality 8 men to meet 4 women. In short a fraction of the women that were truly available. But by cheating the system of sorts, the host of the speed dating was able to "create" women just like banks "create" money and profit from this newly created asset. He just had to pay them interest in the form of free cocktails (and no doubt the ego tinglies of leading poor saps on).

Now, could it have been this ONE speed dating racket doing the fractional reserve dating? Of course, but unlikely. No doubt this is the case all over where there is higher demand on one side (the men) than there is supply on the other (the women) and it doesn't take a genius to faux-fill the market to equilibrium, profiting off of such said market manipulation. The problem this presents men, however, is one of trust and reliability. Given it is a fact women are less interested in dating than men there will always be that threat and likelihood a significant fraction of the women in speed dating are merely plants there to extract your money. And given this risk it makes speed dating a losing proposition to the average guy whose $35 would be better spent on groceries, rent, gas, utilities or plastic pigeons. So once again learn from the experiences and mistakes of the ole Captain. Don't bother with speed dating.

Besides, even if you're one of the lucky few to land a date, the best thing you'll manage is one of them highly-coveted and much-sought after "Gay-man-chaperoned dates."

You can follow the Captain on "the twitter" here.

With Feminists Like These, Who Needs Misogynists?

April 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Mercy! And the irony is this is the FEMINIST GROUP of a COMMUNIST PARTY!

Peggy Romo

April 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

She ranks up there with Peggy Joseph, "world's dumbest idiot."

Banker Scum

April 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Heh heh heh. This is why you own PHYSICAL gold or silver.

But remember, Schiff, me, Beck and all those other non-real economists are fringe and "radical." We're just paranoid.

Enjoy that freaking decline!

The Great Barter Mistake of Bloggers

April 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I kick myself for not catching it before, but let me cite three bloggers:

Silvio Canto
Roosh
Kerry Lutz

I've had dealings with all three and our dealings have revolved around our blogs. And for those of you who are bloggers yourselves you know that blogging is an accidental career. You don't set out and declare to the world,

"I'm going to be the best damn blogger the world has ever seen!!!!"

You don't "Major in Blogging" (though no doubt the worthless world of Academia will come up with a "Bachelors of Arts in Blogging" sometime soon).

You also know once you start blogging any hope of having a "normal" or "real" career is shot. You made yourself public. You've stated your positions. You DARED to exercise your 1st Amendment rights to free speech and thus Corporate/Employer America will have nothing to do with you.

And therefore we congregate on teh interwebz, capitalizing on our freedom to do as we please, write books, plug our wares and do whatever we have to do to avoid "crawling back" to corporate America to grant us another 6 months of employment merely to recapitalize our personal balance sheet, only to tell them to f$ck off as we have too much self respect and dignity to tolerate their BS.

But while we congregate we also scheme. And in scheming we make some observations. Observations that help people stay afloat in the blogging world and independent of any employer or master.

And boy, did I come up with a doozy of an observation.

My observation today was one of needlessly paying taxes. Usually you are approached or would like to approach a blogger with significant internet presence to help advertise your wares. They usually say "$200 for a sidebar image" or "$100 for a post dedicated to your product" or "$25 and i'll mention you in the podcast." Payment is usually done by Paypal, check or some other electronically, and thus, taxable means.

But then Silvio made an interesting observation.

"Why don't you just plug my stuff and I plug yours?"

The simplicity is brilliance.

Not only does Silvio NOT have to pay taxes on the advertising I paid him, I don't have to pay taxes on advertising he's done for me.

In other words, the idea of charging a fellow blogger for advertising is stupid. We merely make a transaction recordable and thereby TAXABLE and let Uncle Sam and Step-Mom State in on our business. Instead, bloggers should use their cache as currency and merely agree to help support, prop, advertise and promote other bloggers. i.e.-traffic is currency, and a non-taxable one at that.

So before you think about approaching another blogger and saying, "Hey, how much to advertise on your site?"

Why not approach and say, "Hey, I'll plug yours if you plug mine."

Not only would it save us taxes, it would piss off Barry.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick

April 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You worthless academian scum.

The Captain on The Kerry Lutz Show!

April 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Here's the interview if you're looking for something to download and listen to while running or doing your weekend driving.

Why You Never Tell Others Your Problems

April 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Stick with me on this one because it isn't going to seem "right" at first, but if you focus on the angle I'm approaching this topic at, you'll see the point I'm trying to make.

Everybody has problems. And everybody has friends. And part of having friends or loved ones is to share your problems. You need a sounding board, you need to vent, and doing such things are healthy and expected. However, when you unload and vent, it is usually problems that are not dire, nor insurmountable. You got a cold, you boss is being a jerk, the weather sucks, whatever, they all have an end and a solution, and are thus surmountable.

But then there are problems that are terminal. There is no solution. There is only one outcome. There is no end. And if there is one, the cost is not only great, but nothing can be done to stop it. Things like terminal sickness, bankruptcy, divorce, etc. And it is here you need to be very selfless and think this one through.

Say the economy has gone south and you are imminently approaching bankruptcy. There is nothing you can do about it. It is going to happen. It is outside of your control.

Do you tell your friends about it? Do you complain to your loved ones about it?

The answer is no, and let me explain why.

Just as you are powerless to stop this horrible thing from happening, so to are your friends and loved ones. And in complaining to them or telling them about your unsolvable problem, you put them at unease because they are powerless and helpless to do anything about it. It is human nature to want to help, but if help is just not possible you unconsciously make your friends feel uncomfortable and powerless.

For example, have you ever had a friend whose loved one got cancer, or your friend got cancer him/herself? And upon hearing the news you don't know what to say because, well, what can you say? "I'm sorry?"

That's about all you can do. You are completely helpless and thus have nothing to say.

Worse still, you can exacerbate this situation, with your "terminal" problem. Because of the severity of these terminal problems, you don't just mention it once to your friends and then it goes away. It's a terminal problem, it will be with you until it terminates. And because of it's severity, it is going to be the single largest topic weighing heavily on your mind. You will want to tell somebody about it, in perhaps a subconscious attempt to find a non-existent solution, but all you will do is drive them further away because you make it so uncomfortable.

Now, am I saying, you NEVER tell anybody you got cancer or that you filed for bankruptcy or your spouse left you? No, but I am saying once you make the declaration, there is nothing to gain by revisiting your unsolvable problem with friends and loved ones.

However, if this doesn't make sense, consider something on the flip side or opposite of this. Say you achieved something REALLY great. Something phenomenal. Something nobody else has done. Naturally this great achievement means a lot to you and even defines you. And if it truly is great, you will want to share it with people, not out of bragging, but out of wanting to share something of genuine interest. But here too you face a somewhat similar problem. If your achievement is so great, most people won't even believe you did it, or at least be able to comprehend. For example by the time I was a senior in college I had:

1. Paid for everything working full time going to school full time
2. Was on track to graduate 6 months early.
3. 3.96 GPA
4. 3 Internships under my belt
5. Held various performance records at my job

I thought I was a shoe-in for a job after graduating, but in hindsight, I believe what I achieved was so great, nobody believed it and my resume went in the dump. Even my friends didn't seem impressed in my early 20's and so when meeting new people I would never mention this great achievement. I would just say, "I went to college."

In short the lesson is to consider the position your friends and loved ones are in. They are already your friends, they are already your loved ones, but unless it is within their power to do anything, constantly bringing up major problems you have (no matter how much they are affecting your life) only pushes people further away. Love and appreciate your friends and loved ones, be selfless enough not to hound them with your unsolvable problems.

When We Ran Out of Good Men/Bad Boys

April 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Tell me this isn't the chart of the year:

If your mind is already interpreting it and neurons are firing with stimulation, then just read the article.

And yes I use my real name. And yes, I am a ballroom dancing, tornado chasing, fossil hunting, motorcycle riding, mountain hiking, Rumpleminze drinking economist.

Three Reasons Theater Majors Are Important!

April 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Please, oh Merciful Patron Saint's Name of Frick, Invoke the power of my Cappy Cap disciples
So that they may log into their Facebook accounts
And rip this idiot and very much well-deserved new one
So that young innocent 17 year old children
Do not falleth for the greatest lie told to their generation
That if they "follow their heart the money will follow."
And that someday
All taxpayers and hard working adults
Who work real jobs and not government or non-profit subsidized fake ones
May wake up one day,
Audit their tax bill
And vote in politicians who forever cut off taxpayer funding
For something that is nothing more than a hobby for children who never want to grow up or contribute to society

Amen

The Origins of the SWPL People

April 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"They used to say establishment, but as the ascendant taste maker group, they are the establishment so they say 'privilege'. By not being an organic setting, they are in effect buying into a subculture that is already packaged and marketed to them. They may think they are creative and unique, but they are just following the built in norms for their distinct group."

I would also remind people about how I said SWPL's have economic applications, specifically, they and their behaviors are VERY useful in predicting bubbles, like sayyyyyy....the 401k????

Oh, and you might be asking,

"Hey Captain! Using SWPL's to predict economic bubbles is pretty witty and clever. What other witty and clever observations have you had and where can I read about such great and insightful epiphanies!?"

Well happy reader, you just have to buy your copy of "Top Shelf!"

Available in BOTH paperback and kindle.

Inducing Shock In The Matriarchy

April 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I did a seminar recently at the U of MN Duluth. It was my "Why Gen Y is Completely, Totally and Hopelessly Screwed" seminar. And while admittedly the seminar is not the politest or most adroit speech, when it came to the "What were you told you SHOULD like in the opposite sex" portion of the lecture, an interesting thing happened. I asked the young men in the audience what they found attractive in a woman. Not what they were told to like, but what they in fact did like.

Not one of them answered.

OH, they KNEW the answers, their sheepish faces and smirks gave that away, but they couldn't answer for they feared what the repercussions would be.

Observing this phenomeon right in front of me, I took the opportunity to point out something so sad, but so very true. I said

"My god, look at how brainwashed they have you guys. You can't even speak the truth."

I then bellowed out the truth,

"Ladies, we like big boobs, long legs, and tight asses!"

If I read the room right it was almost as if they were saying, "Wow! He said it!"

Now, instigation aside, the reason I bring this up is because it highlights a very important aspect of this whole battle against feminism. And that is just how successful the left and feminists have been at outlawing independent thought and replacing it with their own politically approved thought. So intimidated are men and women they cannot speak bluntly and truthfully about the opposite sex.

Of course I view the truth as an absolute. Something that cannot be ignored. Something that is arguably the epitome of morality to adhere to. But if I were to say,

"The law of gravity states that mass will attract other mass"

there is no repercussions for speaking this truth.

But if I point out a truth that runs contrary to the approved speech code or the goals of leftism and feminism, no matter how true:

"Men like big boobs, long legs, long hair and tight asses!"

then all manner of social, political and romantic hell will be unleashed.

Of course it should never have gotten to this point. The point you cannot candidly and bluntly speak truths. But it did and the way we got here was via Overton's Window, the political theory where you slowly move the political debate further and further in one direction, but so slowly nobody notices it. 40 years ago you could scoff at the idea of lowering standards for women in protective services, now that's sexist. 40 years ago you could point out women are poorer at math (duly noted that the bell distribution curve is flatter) and logic. You are once again a sexist. And 40 years ago you could make jokes about women drivers. Now, even though they get in more accidents per miles driven, you are once again, a sexist.

However, while the original 70's feminists may have known full well what they were doing, and today may feign umbrage dare you speak a truth about the sexes, the successive generations of feminists and young women have not had that vantage point. Quite the opposite, actually. They've been brought up in a completely female-centric and myopic environment, and have grown accustomed to having society bend over backwards to avoid speaking the uncomfortable truths about the sexes. So much so that when a truth like is uttered they are not just insulted, but enraged.

"Men like big boobs, long legs, long hair, and tight asses"

"HOW DARE somebody say that!?"

"Yeah, but it's true!"

"STILL!!!! HOW DARE HE SAY THAT!"

It's this violent (or at least strong) reaction in combination with social, political, romantic AND CAREER costs/threats that is what keeps most men (and women) from speaking truthfully about feminism. But there is a problem with this strategy. Overton's Window can only be moved so far in one direction before it is so divergent from reality and truth that society starts to crack and there are real and severe social, economic and financial costs. And we are at that threshold now. And not only are we bearing the costs (unemployment, government debt, dysfunctional children, etc.) those costs outweigh the costs for pointing out the emperor has no clothes, especially for young men.

Understand if you take the average young man today and look at his prospects in terms of Social Political Romantic and Career (otherwise "Economic") in this society, what precisely does he have?

Socially speaking he already has friends and this one, though important, aspect of his life is inoculated against the forces of leftism and feminism.

Politically, nothing. All political emphasis is on women and women's problems. Government spending disproportiontely goes to women and women are still considered a victim class.

Romantically, the average western male has a lousy selection in women as women were brought up to be men, not women. And any woman who dares to say, "Yes, I'd like to have children and a family some day, and I like men and I want to be beautiful" is immediately shamed by feminists and the left.

Economically, your average young man has no hope and no chance at a successful financial life. THe economy is stagnant, unemployment is disproportionately high for young males and the economy, forever more being progressively dictated by the public sector, is becoming hostile to traditional male-employing industries.

In short, your average young man has nothing, meaning society is no longer able to provide for and support one half of the society. And with nothing left to lose, there are no costs, for speaking the truth. With no hope, no future, and no money, all the shaming, threats, and NARCing of feminism rings hallow as they no longer have any teeth. There is nothing you can take from these men.

It is here that the movement back to reality will not be as slow and meditated as the feminists' original nudging of Overton's Window. It will be lightning speed compared to the past 4 decades. Men (and women) will shed the annoying, if not, impossible-to-adhere-to political correctness about the sexes and will realize life is too short to keep up the charade. Men will realize their sanity and love lives are more important than keep eggshell-fragile feminists' feelings in tact. Men, who never had anything to begin with, will wonder why their fathers and grandfathers adhere to "obsolete feminist morals" and instead will see no cost or consequence in being men, and will instead lay down the law in their relationships and be the man. Women too will be sick of being shamed about "wanting to have a husband and children" and will find nothing wrong with wanting a family, let alone wearing dresses and wanting to be beautiful.

The problem for feminism will be the abruptness of it all. Already you can see this in feminist responses to Manosphere posts, not to mention the shock and awe that their Patron Saint Adria Richards was actually fired. They cannot believe (since they are inured in the brainwashing that they are the victim and the "patriarchy" is oppressing them) men, let alone ANY man would say such things or do such things. Didn't they get the memo? Didn't they get the brainwashing in school? We were told that was very very BAD and MEAN to say those things in the 3rd grade no matter how truthful it may be. The shock on their internet-metaphorical faces is priceless.

The problem for them is that reality is reality. Truth is truth. And when there's no cost or consequence for speaking the truth, they're going to find out just how flawed and erroneous their much-coveted religion of feminism really is. And no amount of angry, screeching or accusations of misogyny is going to stop it.

If you liked this post then you can show your appreciation by buying something on Amazon. You were going to buy something anyway, might as well do it here and today. Commission goes to support the Captain and this here blog.

Why Gen X & Y Should Be Denied Social Security

April 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

My general (and intense) hatred and loathing of the baby boomer generation is no secret. It is also well-founded as it is the baby boomer generation that has been in control of the country's finances, politics, economics and corporate leadership. It is not debatable who's been at the helm of the country and its institutions for the past 30 years and, therefore, whose fault the current condition of the country is. And since their generation is near the end of its life cycle, the baby boomer generation legacy is more or less set in stone. They WILL go down in the history books as the generation that destroyed the United States.

Naturally, I don't believe the baby boomers deserve one red cent of social security, medicare, medicaid or any of the other plethora of various government programs they voted themselves in. They are the only generation (at least to my knowledge) in the history of the world that not only squandered the economic production of their parents (via inheritance), but also all of the economic production of their own lives AND were so voracious in their squandering, they needed to mortgage the economic production of their children.

Of course, when a baby boomer runs into me and they're shocked I find their generational theft disagreeable, they always, ALWAYS, ALWAYS say,

"But I paid into the system!"

To which I quickly and factually respond,

"And you also voted into the morons who pissed all your contributions away on all those social programs you so love. You got the benefit of 30 years of Keynesian deficit spending stimulus. YOU ALREADY GOT YOUR MONEY BACK IN SPADES!"

But the argument then stops because usually the baby boomer I'm talking to has never looked at a federal budget in his entire adult life.

However, before we all jump on the baby boomer generation (and don't worry, history will be INCREDIBLY harsh on them) we have to look at our own generational selves in the mirror. Specifically, whether we deserve all these programs or not.

Of course, the question is moot and academic. I don't think there will be any money to be paid out in the first place, but let's just say there was. Do our generations really deserve all the unicorns, puppies, hope, and change the government says we're entitled to? I say no and here is the reason why.

Gen X and Gen Y are doing the EXACT same thing as their baby boomer predecessors did. They are spending more money than they make. They expect other people to take care of themselves. They are entitled WAY more than the baby boomers ever were. And (most importantly) THEY VOTED IN DROVES FOR BARACK OBAMA and thus THE MORTGAGING OF THEIR OWN FUTURES.

Much as I loathe the baby boomers, the successive generations, mine included, are worse. Despite BLATANT and OBVIOUS financial problems our generations faced, we lacked the adult maturity (let alone simple 2nd grade mathematics) to turn this country around. And while the baby boomers have been voting more and more conservative, it is the younger generations through galactic stupidity, ignorance and selfishness that merely nailed a couple more nails in the US-coffin and thus our own futures.

Like I said, I doubt there will even be any money for Gen Y, Gen X and any future generations to make good on all those socialist entitlement goodies we promised ourselves. But before we start blaming previous generation's for our current problems, we should start blaming ourselves for making our future problems worse.

Oh, and when you're 55 and about to retire, please don't tell future generations,

"But I paid into the system!"

This post sponsored by "Enjoy the Decline!"

The Zombie Feminist

April 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I linked to this in a previous post but it warranted it's own post.

GLORIOUS HAT!

April 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Young female comrade-ette is enjoying the decline! Why aren't you???

BUY GLORIOUS HAT NOW!!!

In Soviet America HAT WEARS YOU!

Please Bite the Hand That Feeds You Academia

April 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ahhhh…it's a good day when leftist academian scum shoot themselves in the foot.

Worse Than I Thought

April 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I remember a year or two back somebody ridiculing me about pointing out our dropping labor force participation rate. He said it wasn't because of socialist policies deterring people from working, or because of a lack of economic growth promised by Barack Obama, but because old people were retiring. He even sounded pissed about it suggesting us fools didn't know what we were doing AND if I recall correctly, he claimed to be an economist.

I believed I had already looked it up to confirm what was happening with labor force participations rates between the young and old, but I had a nagging twinge in the back of my mind that I didn't. That it may have slipped my mind. And sure as worthless people majoring in the humanities, I was right! It did slip my mind! Here it is:

I would have remembered this chart because it not only proves the guy wrong, it is the OPPOSITE of what he claimed.

Not only are things so bad, young people are dropping out of the labor force, OLD PEOPLE WHO SHOULD NORMALLY BE RETIRED BY NOW ARE RETURNING TO THE LABOR FORCE!

Why?

Well, the politically correct answer is what Time, Newsweek and CNN will tell you-

Tilly and Herman are just so active nowadays and they're just so intelligent that they can't stay at home and enjoy a life of leisure, relaxation and retirement. Heavens no! They WANT to go back to the labor force. They don't really need the money. They're just doing it to keep their minds stimulated! How hip and cool they are!

The truthful answer is -

They didn't save up enough for retirement and HAVE TO go back to the labor force. They were very poor at financial planning and even with social security and medicare they still don't have enough to retire.

I'm just wondering how long a country can last where it's dying/near dead population is returning to work while the "children who are our future" are dropping out.

Oh well, enjoy the decline!

Ladies Night Linkage

April 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Why, we love the Ladies of Cappy Cap, right? Well then why don't you show them a little link love and visit them.

We start off with a new reader who sent in a picture of her enjoying the decline.

I like the dog/rat/whatever it is.

And now the linkage love:

The Sexual Division of Labor - I'll say it again for the cheap seats - it is NOT coincidental that the majority of marriages was where one person stayed home and the other worked. It was a naturally forming sociological phenomenon and therefore there were very strong forces behind it and good reason for it. Tamper with it at your own (or society's) expense.

Children are not yours. They are the state's. You will obey. You will conform.

Why I'm a libertarian.

But math is tough. And I'm not good at math. And men are evil and I don't like gravity and I shouldn't have to drink water to survive.

Worthless women majoring in worthless subjects using academia and government to extract preferred treatment by society either via taxation or status and prestige. Again, the majority of problems are caused by liberal arts majors.

If you really want revenge on leftists and feminists, then keep yourself in shape for your woman and keep yourself in shape for your man. Because leftists, in general, will never be as physically atttractive as their conservative counterparts AND (no matter what feminists say) sex and sexual pleasure is one of the best experiences in life. So hit the gym, hit the treadmill and stop making excuses.

When you start acting as men, acting as equals, we will treat you as such. In the meantime, since you act like children, we will treat you like children.

You young idiots voted for this moron and now you will suffer the consequences.

Chewed bubble gum.

They want what they can't have and don't want what they can have. I'm glad my 20's are over.

You will visit the Life of Liz! I command you! Obey damn you! Obey!!!!

I remember trying to score my way into a girl's pants by helping her with her math. I was a freshman, she was a junior. It got me nowhere. With this hindsight of knowledge, I now instruct all young men and boys that the next time some girl wants "help with math" you tell her "hey, isn't the entire state, federal and local government paying billions of unneeded tutors, teachers, and academians to help you chicks catch up with us boys in mathematics? Go hit them up for help. I'm too busy playing Modern Warfare 3."

We don't need no STIIINKING western culture!

Some outstanding advice for daughters.

I am for coupon clipping. Until it affects your life so much you expend more in labor/time that rationalizes the cost savings. There is a psychological disease with those women. Perhaps something along the lines they can't produce anything of value and therefore go the other route and try to save as much money as possible, losing the larger picture that they waste $10 in resources saving a dollar in expense.

No Cafeteria Christians Allowed

April 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is a real Christian.

And even though I loathe religion and you all think I hate religious people. I don't. Just the 90% of them that abuse the religion to advance their own selfish aims, which means they aren't religious.

This concludes the Captain's monthly required ranting against religion.

My Amazing Awesome Super Intelligent Friends

April 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

who just can't seem to find jobs with their ~~worthless fucking pieces of crap liberal arts degrees.~~...errr...I mean..."super awesome advanced degrees in awesomeness."

They Are Coming For Your 401k's

April 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What do I keep telling you?

It is going to happen.

Enjoy the decline.

How to Legally Exact Your Toll of Revenge on the Left

April 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The last chapter in my book "Enjoy the Decline" is titled "Revenge" and if there's a reason for you to buy the book, that chapter is it. The reason why is that any Real American, any real independent individual who loves freedom and liberty is in a rather helpless position. Since this (the United States and western civilization in general) is a democracy/republic we get a government forced on us by the majority, no matter how ignorant, no matter how stupid, and no matter how short-sighted. And unless you're willing to resort to violence, tyranny, criminal, and other anti-democratic actions there is nothing you can do but sit and watch the left destroy the greatest thing that has ever happened to humankind.

However, that is what the "Revenge" chapter in my book is about. How exactly does one person get their revenge on the people who destroyed their lives, their country and their futures and not land in jail? There are ways (ways you will have to read the book to find out), but one of them, after further contemplation, I realized was arguably the KEY way to get your revenge and deserves a more thorough flushing out.

Specifically, sex.

Before I go further let me state after thinking this through I am being deadly serious. This is not hyperbole, this is not rhetoric, this is not for shock value. This is what my logic, thought and contemplation (free of the restrictions of politically correct thought) has concluded. And if you follow me through you may not agree with what I'm saying, but you'll at least understand and see some reason in it.

First, ask yourself what is the most important thing in life. I've addressed this before and without a doubt it is other human beings. I use the analogy of having the most advanced XBox 360, huge TV, etc. etc. No matter how advanced, that video game is still finite. It is still limited. A human being, however, is not. It is dynamic, it is sentient. It is the most advanced, complex entity in the known universe and that is what makes another human more interesting and engaging than anything else.

Second, who are the most important humans in your life? Children of course if you have them. But without a spouse you (in theory) can't have them or at least have a decent and well-grounded family. Therefore it is your life partner, the love of your life that is the most important thing in anyone's life.

Third, what is the greatest enjoyment you receive from your significant other?

Companionship, intellectual conversation, yes, these things are definitely very valuable, certainly mandatory requirements, but what sets apart the love of your life from just regular ole friends you have (who you also have compansionship and intellectual conversation with) is sex.

Fourth, what makes sex enjoyable? The answer is simple if you ignore political correctness. Physical attraction. You need to be physically attracted to your partner, just as your partner has to be physically attracted to you. And the more physically attractive each person is the better the sex is. And the better the sex is the better a VERY important, if not MOST important aspect of your biological life is.

And it is here where you will exact your toll of revenge on the left.

Understand the left, typically, though not always, are uglier than those of us on the right. This is not up for debate. All one has to do is play the game I do while driving:

"How Ugly is the Person With the Liberal Bumper Sticker?"

If you don't believe me try playing the game yourself. Any time you see a car with a leftist bumper sticker catch up to it and peer inside to see how "attractive" the occupant is.

You'll note two things:

1. They are usually pretty ugly, certainly homely.
2. They are never smiling.

The reason why leftists tend to be uglier is the same reason they are leftists - a deep-seeded fear and hatred of effort and competition. ie- they are lazy.

To be physically attractive, just like a career or anything else worth doing in life, takes effort. You need to work out, you need to run, you need to eat right, you need to dress right, and above all else, you need to have self-control and discipline. You also have to be selfless to a certain extent, considering the preferences and tastes of others in order to prove appealing and attractive to them. You may not like the maintenance required in having long hair, but you're not having long hair for you, you're having long hair for him. You may not like lifting heavy blocks of metal repetitively as your brain atrophies, but you're not doing it for you, you're doing it for her. In short you have to have a personal philosophy that is opposite of most leftists - hard work and altruism with your own resources.

Since these traits of effort, rigor, discipline, hard work, genuine selflessness and responsibility are antithetical to leftism, practitioners of leftism suffer the consequences.

Lower incomes, poorer degrees, poorer employment prospects, lower standards of living, etc. However, just like every other aspect of their lives, they also suffer in the looks department, and consequently suffer a lower physical quality and caliber in their lovers. And since the value and importance of sex is so high, they also suffer in this very key aspect of their lives.

Now while it may seem sophomoric and childish to say,

"Nanny nanny boo boo! Your sex life sucks! Ours rules! We have a better life!" and to suggest hotter people having better sex exacts a heavy toll of revenge on leftists, permit me some additional evidence that shows you, yes it really is that simple and YES, being hotter and having better sex REALLY IS a huge toll of revenge. Namely, the great lengths leftists go to deny reality.

If you look at the left, their entire effective (not conscious) philosophy is to do as little work as possible and live off of other people as much as possible. As a consequence to this laziness, they have to CONSTANTLY come up with new and innovative ways to rationalize taking other people's money and other people's success. I even argue that it is a leftist's primary job to rationalize the theft of others production for without them, they would die. Therefore you have the formations of "ists" and "victim classes" and the "rich doesn't pay their fair share" etc. etc. Whatever the rationalization, none are based in the real world for the simple fact they can't be. There is no rational, intellectually-honest or real-world-based argument for parasitism simply because parasitism is not viable. Ergo the left has to constantly rationalize away reality to legitimize their existence.

However, while we normally focus on the left's herculean efforts to rationalize the confiscation of others' wealth, we do not pay as much attention to the equally-impressive intellectual acrobatics they perform to rationalize their non-real world reality in other aspects of their lives. Specifically social, romantic and sexual.

All one has to do is look at the great and (literally) insane lengths feminism goes to destroy basic, simple facts about the sexes.

- Men liking long legs, big boobs, long hair and tight asses (as they always have since the dawn of time and are genetically wired to) is misogynist, bigoted, and shallow.
- Gender, despite obvious physical proof, is socially determined, not physically.
- Women should NOT want to have children or stay at home. They should be men...just as long as it doesn't require math or STEM classes....and it's SEXISM that explains the wage gap, not a lack of female engineering majors.
- Women should not want to be beautiful for that is conforming to the patriarchy and could there be a better example of denying reality than....

- the fat acceptance movement?

The question is if sex and beauty are not so important, then why do feminists (and leftists in general) go out of their way to belittle, berate, and destroy what society over the eons have determined to be beautiful? What do they care if a man is attracted to a big boobed blond? What do they care if a woman is skinny? Why is nearly 90% of feminist/women's studies focused on sex and sexuality? And furthermore, why are they so vehement, outright emotionally enraged if you disagree with them and dare to say you like big boobs?

The answer is because they DO care about it. They are merely coming up with rationalizations and reasonings because they are too weak to accept reality. It's harder for them to psychologically accept and commit themselves to a life where they have to hit the treadmill (effort) and answer to others (selflessness) in society than one where they lie to themselves with malarkey like "fat acceptance" and other feminist claptrap excusing them to sit on their asses, work faux affirmative action jobs, commiserate with other equally physically revolting individuals, and never enjoy a great sex life.

In short, try as the left might to deny economic reality, social reality and sexual reality, they are living in a delusional world. And no matter how much rhetoric they spew, deep down inside they know they are living a lie (as evidenced by their emotional reaction to any criticism) and cannot deny their basic sexual nature and desires.

It is here, however, where you can extract your revenge.

While their fear of a life of toil, effort, rigor, work, competition, risk and achievement paralyzes them from enjoying life, you and every other conservative, libertarian, and Real American owe it to yourselves to ENJOY LIFE TO ITS MAXIMUM. Go out, try, fail, try again, fail again, try again, succeed, excel, dominate, enjoy, progress, and evolve. Become an interesting person with interesting hobbies and live a unique life they will never live because they're too busy conforming drinking organic coffee with their Apple laptop and skinny jeans. But beyond that, the single largest bit of revenge you can extract from the left is by simply playing on their basic carnal darwinistic sexual desires.

Stay in shape and have a hot wife/husband.

Look sharp in public to the point you turn people's heads.

Spank your girlfriend's tight little ass in public announcing to any leftists in view

"I'm going to hit that later tonight and you aren't and never will."

Rub it in their faces every day with achieving great things, the most piercing of which is having a physically attractive partner, the likes of which they never will enjoy.

That is how you exact your toll of revenge on the left.

If you found this post intellectually stimulating and not a waste of time, please consider buying something on Amazon. Commissions go to pay for my living expenses as there's no way in hell an employer will EVER touch me. Your business is appreciated.

Linkage of Manliness

April 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

IOTW gets elected...though he was unopposed. I will be entering politics shortly myself fully intending never to get elected, but we're going to stir things up a bit.

Work is more important than your children or family. Ignore this woman. She knows not of what she speaks.

I am not necessarily against suicide. It can be arguably the only option. However, usually it isn't. There's usually a ton of more and better stuff to do.

You don't have to worry about North Korea....unless you live in Hawaii.

It's because feminists love marxism even more than they do women.

It's for the chillllllldrennnnnnnn...

Some basic home safety tips from Ed. This is one of those things you can do while you wait for summer weather to get here.

Man the hamsters are running fast on this one.

Fact! Men like long hair. Fact! You don't convince them of this otherwise.

How miserable is a person who has absolutely nothing else going on in her life that she comes up with a concept of "racist hair?" Pretty f#cking miserable I'd have to say.

I mentioned this before about labor force participation rates. Perhaps the youth are enjoying the decline...that or there's no jobs out there for them.

Ask a Cuban about Cuba. Not a rapper thug and a harlot.

The 70's sucked. The culture, the music, the fashion, and the economy. But don't tell Paul Krugman that.

Why you absolutely must see a girl without her make up.

Marriage is "rent seeking hell." Which is again why you need to get ripped and get in shape.

And what "Linkage of Manliness" would be complete without a pretty dame plugging

Enjoy the Decline?

Book Review of "The Return of the Great Depression," By Vox Day

April 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Vox Day, aka Theodore Beale, has several books out, most of which by a perusal of his site are along sci fi and fantasy/fiction lines. However, perhaps his original claim to fame was a book I've been procrastinating reading "The Return of the Great Depression," available in both paperback and kindle.

Unlike the title would suggest the majority of the book is not, in fact, about the next Great Depression as much as it is a very good analysis and study of conventional and historical economic theories and how they are playing out during today's turbulent and uncommon economic times. This is my largest complaint about the book in that I was expecting a book on the next Great Depression and what this man's thoughts would be, but it isn't until the second to last chapter that you actually get to his own personal observations and theories.

That being said, the book was certainly not a let down, surprising me in other regards warranting the purchase AND READING (that's for you, Aunt Judy) of his book. First, the book is an outstanding, thorough, but succinct analysis and comparison of the various economic philosophies that are duking it out today. He compares and contrasts Austrian, Keynesian, the Chicago School and Marxism in ways that shows he's actually read vastly more books on economics and philosophy than I have and can use words like "praxeology" in a sentence. THis makes him "one of those guys" who while would be considered a Buzz Killington at a party, is the guy you'd probably defer to when it came to matters of economic history and technicality. Second, like reading other economists, you always pick up a trick or two you weren't aware of or observe mistakes you may have made (for example his explaining what the GDP deflator is NOT the same as the CPI may not help you pick up chicks at a bar, but will provide for some interesting adjustments to modern day RGDP). This has not only further advanced my understanding of economics, but plugged some minor holes in my own economic theories and philosophies I've procrastinated plugging. Third he writes very well and very dense, efficiently packing as much information into the fewest and optimal amount of words. The introduction alone is a perfect synopsis that would benefit everybody in terms of "what economics is." Finally, the man is a genius. I say this not in a flattering way but because he belongs to mensa and factually is a genius. This means his writing and the pace at which he covers and delivers material, concepts and theories, etc., is not slow and is sure to engage, if not challenge your mind (sometimes requiring multiple re-readings of certain paragraphs).

Unfortunately, this leads to the second largest drawback of the book, it will shoot over most non-economist's heads. Though intended for "economic actors, not economists" and purposely simplified in language, vocabulary, mathematical formulae and charting, it's obvious Beale has been in an environment where his mind is among equals. Even "dumbing it down" it's still a heavy read requiring your full mental attention and a constant referencing of the glossary.

Ultimately the book is a great read for two groups of people. Those those already in the profession and (more importantly) people who have an intellectual or hobby interest in economics, but are not in the profession. It is this second group that would benefit most, not just because of the exercise your brain will receive, but Beale does a great job breaking down the current and past economic philosophies, providing you the background and history as to how different schools have come about and how they are playing out in the real world today.

It is worth the price of paperback, but the $2 price on Kindle practically compels you to purchase it.

Hedge Fund Manager vs. UFC Fighter

April 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The pictures is all you really have to look at. language warning.

"I Don't Dress Up For You! I Dress Up for MYSELF!"

April 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Of the many lies men will be told from the ages of 12 to...umm....death, one of the more misleading ones (that can trip you up for years unless you learn the deceit behind it) is,

"I don't do X for you! I do it for myself!"

"X" being dressing up make up working out lingerie

etc. etc.

Right off the bat many of these "items" should prove to be an obvious lie.

What woman REALLY wants to wear make up?

What woman REALLY wants to work out? (hell, what man does?)

If you are REALLY going to do something for yourself, then it is by (a non-pejorative sense) selfish. You truly don't care what other people think. So when it comes Saturday day and the girlfriend is out of town, do you think I'm going to wake up early run 6 miles clean the house put on nice clothes and fix the car

for myself???

Hell no! I'm sleeping in till 11AM, drinking during the day, playing video games, and going out with the guys. And on top of it I'm not dressing up for nobody! It is a TRULY selfish endeavor and ergo if you're really "doing it for yourself" you will engage in vices and not virtues such as working out, glaming yourself up, etc. etc.

However, the reason this lie is so tricky is because when a woman says this, it is a half-truth.

While she is NOT dressing up for you, she IS dressing up for somebody else. And that somebody else certainly is NOT her (at least in a direct sense).

Again, we revisit the realm where economics and sexuality meet. Women are (primarily) driven by attention. Attention from who? Attention from anybody.

Oh, go ahead and threaten me with your Adria Richard's hallow threats, I'm sorry dearies, I have nothing left to lose. Besides, this is a fact and is truth. And if you don't like that...well, then maybe you really don't like being treated as an equal and perhaps like every other guy I could continue lying to your face to spare your precious little feelings. But I'm sorry, I'm not a sexist. I believe in the equality of the sexes so you'll APPRECIATE me treating you as a GENUINE equal and never daring to lie to you as that would be degrading.

Anyway, women crave attention. And the primary way (before social media) they can get that is by simply dressing the part. This is why in large part you can be at a bar/club, see a group of girls LITERALLY dressed as ladies of the evening, approach them and get your butt shot down. They REALLY weren't dressing that way for you, just as they technically weren't dressing that way for themselves. They were merely dressing that way to get your attention and the attention of others. And should a supreme specimen of man (professional athlete, celebrity, obvious rich man) approach them, that is also why they dressed that way or went to the gym.

In other words, don't be a fool on either end of this half-lie, half truth. She really isn't doing it for you. And, yes, in a roundabout way she is doing it for herself. But she is ultimately doing it to garner the attention of other people, both men and women.

Baby Boomer Economics

April 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Of the participants who took out loans, the greatest percentage were to people in their 50s (34.2%), followed by those in their 60s (28.9%) and then by those in their 40s (27.3%). The increase among participants in their 50s was nearly double the increase among those under 30. This is based on an analysis of a subset of 1.9 million eligible participants in retirement plans that Wells Fargo administers."

No no! Nothing to see here! Back to your lives citizens. Oh, and you youngsters! You better hit the ground running. We don't have time to train you. You didn't have it as tough as we did. I don't have time to explain this to you. If you can't figure it out on your own, then you don't belong here. You just aren't a team player are you? You're not as wise as us and you should plan better for your future. Matter of fact, can we borrow $45 trillion from your future? We're really smart and you're too stupid to understand. Didn't you hit the ground running? Why, we told you it was a steep learning curve. You're just not smart enough to understand this. Answer our HR questions. You don't know about HR? Well, that's alright, you didn't hit the ground running and we didn't have time to train you. You have to be a self-starter. Didn't you pay attention to detail?

My gosh the lack of nursing home visits will sure be funny. Perhaps we can securitize or commoditize "nursing home visits"?

"Hey grandpa? Want a nursing home visit? Well that will be 50% of your medicare payout this month and 60% of your social security check. Good thing you 'paid into the system!'"

The Underrated Life of the Stay-At-Home Husband

April 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Frank let's out a screed I'm not necessarily against. Matter of fact I agree with most of it, but then he let's loose on men who want to stay at home as "girlie."

Ouch.

And thus I think I have to defend those of us guys who are the stay at home types not so much to counter what Frank is saying, nor to lick our wounds, but to explain that there have been fundamental changes in the economic relations and roles between the sexes, changes that make being the "stay at home husband" the logical, wise, and correct choice for most men.

But first let me provide a caveat in that the following advice is meant for men and women without children, which I do believe addresses not only the majority of my readership, but Frank's specific targeted audience with his post. If you have children then with today's taxes and cost of living, yes, both of you will have to work and the argument about who stays at home with the chillllldreeeennnnnnsszzz is moot.

Regardless, here are the reasons why you want to be the one to stay at home.

"Real Work" Sucks - And by "real work" I mean the traditional job where some aging boss who is unaware of the miracles of the internet, requires you to show up to an obsolete office, replete with unnecessary computers, and, oh, by the way, a really sucky commute. I don't know why women in the feminist world thought that "work" was "fun" to the point they demanded it, but if you have ever worked a "real job" in your life you know it sucks. You are not working for yourself, you are working for somebody else. You are also not allowed to achieve your maximum because careers and real jobs are not designed to benefit you, but rather your employer. And finally you are not working for you. You are working for the shareholders of the firm. Shareholders whose interests are the opposite of yours. They want your salary low as possible and really couldn't care less about your career or advancement. No, you are stuck in a job that pays you a sustenance level of income and only if you sell yourself and your mental health to a slave-like level of loyalty to your firm, are you going to reap anything approaching a "career."

"Stay at Home Work" Rules - Of course, just because I eschew real work doesn't mean I don't work. I work all the time. It's just not considered "real work" by the "real world." It's stay at home, self-employed work. Oh, laugh as you may as "stay at home office" or "self employed" usually carries the reputation and connotation as "person who can't find a job" and of course banks will never qualify you for a loan for "self employment income" isn't real income, but if you can be intellectually honest with yourself and pursue real work, just not for an employer, then you are light years ahead of the game. "

Stay at home work" (SAHW), if pursued rigorously, seriously, and professionally means, in a shorter amount of time you will have more success than if you worked a "real job." Not only because you are working for yourself, but because you will typically engage in work you like or at least work you have set up. There are no meetings, there is no negotiation, there is no discussion, it is just you. You are the Supreme Allied Commander and you get to decide, pursue and execute immediately and however you please. This single efficiency benefit is what allows you to run circles around your would-be-employer-now-competitor.

In short SAHW is all about you and the benefits all go to you. You actually enjoy your job, you can do it from home or the coffee store, you are allowed to complete tasks on your own time table and how you see fit, AND, did I mention, no mind-destroying, purposeless commute? Doing what you like AND having an extra 2 hours per day over your commuting your contemporaries makes those that ridicule SAHW look like investment banking analysts plugging dotcoms in 1998. Besides, just because it's work at home, doesn't mean it isn't manly.

I Like Sleep - Sleep is the most underrated benefit to human kind. I enjoy sleeping in till 9 or 10AM. I feel better, I'm healthier and I'm in a better mental mood. I'm more productive and (more importantly) I'm more creative. I can innovate and come up with ideas better than the coffee-junkie forcing themselves to stay awake during that Monday morning meeting. Sure, you could be a "real man" and suffer sleep-deprivation, but why would you?

A Better Home - Sure, I'm the "girlie" stay at home boyfriend. But guess what? The house is in tip top shape. Things are repaired. The cars are in working order. The fridge is full and when my girlfriend gets back we can go out because there ain't no chores to do. Besides, do you know how much you save when you can do your own home and auto maintenance, not to mention how many manly points you get for being able to do those things? Also, we don't need to increase our income tax bracket to pay for others to repair these things. I learn to repair and maintain at home, requiring a lesser income, but same standard of living. Why pay Barry and his legion of constituent parasites more than you have to? Besides, you can't write off maintenance, repair and chore expenses. Might as well do it yourself.

Taxes - On a related note, lower taxes. Certainly, not having children helps in this regard, but still, why have a double income that will only send you into stratospheric tax brackets? You, again, cannot write off house cleaning and maintenance, might as well have one person home doing that.

It's Easier - Sorry ladies, I've lived both lives. The hard working corporate type and the"stay at home wife" life and you have go to be kidding me about how hard it is. Really? Cleaning, vacuuming, and laundry? Really? None of it takes that long and then I can watch Hogan's Heroes. Not to mention the entire time I am doing "house chores" I can listen to my MP3. THAT BEATS LISTENING TO SOME LOSER OF A BOSS IN A MEETING ANYDAY! Not to mention, you don't have any boss watching over you every second. You get to do your chores how you please and when you please. You can leave any time you want, do anything you want, exercise during the day, as long as things get done, who cares. But not a real job. No no no. You got a boss that wants you to look busy even if there isn't any work. You got a boss that wants you to sit in a meeting that has nothing to do with your job. Your boss wants to suck the life out of you, wasting your finite life, for shareholders who couldn't care about you and a government that wants a 40% cut. Meanwhile forfeiting what really is a part-time job where 100% of your efforts go to benefit your family is worth their mental slavery and hell? Sorry, whoever stays at home gets the better deal.

Physical Fitness - Since the standard "chores" only require part time amounts of work, this gives you ample time to stay in physical shape. Never have I been in better physical shape than I am when I'm the stay at home boyfriend. I run every other day, life weights opposite those days. My girlfriend appreciates the physique and so will your girlfriend/wife.

Freedom and Fun - Obviously an underlying theme to all these benefits is your freedom to do as you choose during the day. Not only will this result in you having the most efficient regimen or routine for the day, achieving the most amount of production and work, but you can also maximize your fun. Don't let any stay-at-home husband/wife tell you otherwise. They can sit down and have a cocktail watching the Price is Right. You can play video games while grilling a steak. And if the weather permits you can go out for a motorcycle ride. Heck, even assuming you did have children, playing with the little rug rats certainly is more fun than writing TPR reports.

Fundamental Change in the Labor Market - Much as I lament society's utter failure to fully capitalize on the world's latest revolution, the fact remains it IS happening, just not at the pace I want. If it were up to me, we would not longer have commutes, traffic jams, let alone downtown office buildings because the technology exists that you can work 97% of today's white collar jobs from home. The technology exists, the software is secure, it is the obstacles in the form of aging gray haired bosses who can't let go of control and let people work from home. However, as time has gone on (and more of these aging gray hair types die or FINALLY retire) saner minds are realizing there is no real reason to pay for the unnecessary expense of office space rental, computer expense, and printer expense. Employees are more than willing to work from home and their younger bosses are letting them. This means there is a more hospitable and growing environment to SAHW's and truth be told, that is the future. The mockery and ridicule of people who are "self employed" or "home based business" types will end, because that is where the future labor market is heading. You being the stay-at-home-husband merely positions himself for the future.

Basic Economics - All the compelling and factual reasons above to be the stay-at-home hubby, in the end it is really a matter of economics. Yes you may have that darwinistic male drive to excel and achieve, and yes you may have that biological drive to be a provider, but the economic reality and fact is that it plain financially isn't worth it being the "go getter corporate type" for most men. First, society and politics are cheering for the woman to excel and exceed in the corporate world. This manifests itself in outlandishly handicapped affirmative action programs where the bar is lowered so much for women corporations will go out of their way to create whole departments like HR and CSR departments to keep the government off of their asses. Quotas, either explicitly stated or not, are in force, and no longer does the job go to the best candidate. And women, who are disproportionately represented in HR are in fact sexist and will ply favor to women candidates. In short corporate America has become corrupted to the point it is not only inhospitable to male employment, but is no longer worth your endeavor to become employed there.

Second, government and law in the form of taxation, not to mention divorce law, are also increasingly hostile. Not so much towards men as much as it is the "bread winner." If you are the bread winner, be it male or female, you are the one who loses half your assets, must pay alimony and must "provide for a previously expected standard of living." You want to be "manly" and "be the man?" Good luck. That's too much risk to be a provider male.

Finally, are you kidding me???? Work the crappy corporate job and run the god damned rat race??? For once I fully and wholly agree with the most ardent of feminists. Women SO should take over and be the sole bread winner and provider. It is a no brainer. Let them do all the real work, let them provide for the family, let them major in engineering, study calculus and physics. We'll stay at home and clean, cook, whatever, and pursue our hobby/faux-career as an "artist" "musician" or "part time teacher." The key issue for the likes of Frank and other men invested in their manliness is to not let their manliness blind them to economic realities. If women and feminists are so adamant about them being GENUINE and TRUE equals, then I say let them have at it. We should not look a gift horse in the mouth when given the option to stay at home, clean occasionally, repair the roof and change the oil, and of course pursue our "career" as a "children's book author." Let them work hard, let them commute, let them tolerate and suffer psychotic bosses, let them sit in the meetings. Even with the presence of children the life of the stay at home husband is INFINTELY easier and better than the working woman. It is simply a matter of letting go of unnecessary pride and letting leftist and feminist women have their dream in spades.

Regret Having Children

April 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sunshine Mary has a post over here that triggered my little Google Trend searching:

What I love about this is that children (as well as divorce) is usually the first REAL challenge today's modern adult-children face in their lives. Understand the average American youth is shielded from the harsh realities of life with parental or governmental money well into their late 20's, even 30's. But once they have a child or get a divorce, there's no amount of government money, programs, or societal ass-kissing that can shield them from the consequences. And thus, when their cushy life runs head on into the crushing realities of rearing/raising a child, they have buyer's remorse. Thus, the trend upward in people searching for others who have search "regret having children" so they can forgive themselves for not wanting to raise their own children because...well, like...children are whinny tone "sooo haaaaard!"

Enjoy the decline!

The 3 Musketeers of the Manosphere

April 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There are three sites that I would like to highlight because they are aggregator sites and they account for a fair amount of my traffic.

However, since they are aggregator sites you usually do not link to them since they do not produce or publish their own material. This kind of creates an irony because they send out a TON of linkage, but rarely do we send any back.

Ergo, please consider getting on the good side or sending a link to a buddy for the following three aggregator sites:

Delusion Damage

Hawaiian Libertarian

Viva La Manosphere

"What Happened to Gold"

April 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I woke up this morning to a text from my father. My father, a former huge lefty, now is starting to notice what he was told doesn't add up to what is transpiring in the real world. Matter of fact, I get the impression he almost feels violated for being lied to all these years and is even more conservative and angry than I am. Regardless, since his economic epiphany he now approaches me with questions about the economy, politics and the like, the most recent one in his text was "what happened to gold."

I speculated at first.

Market bumps.

Margin calls.

The US dollar is gaining strength against other "less sucky" currencies and thus in terms of "relative" currencies the dollar is increasing. But then something struck me.

"Wait, could it be that PAPER gold is going down while phyiscal gold isn't?"

With ABN Amro failing to deliver physical gold recently, that event could spook the markets, as it rightly should. However, it would have an effect on paper gold, not physical gold, if anything increasing the price of physical gold at the expense of paper. But since there is no separate quoting system between paper and physical gold, you would not see this difference or "premium" between the two.

Enter in my coin dealer.

Last week I stopped in to see if there was a way to calculate a market "physical price" and he essentially said, "no, but."

The "but" being is that the dealer (who has to make a profit on his coins) is charged a premium by his supplier. And premiums HAVE BEEN GOING UP RECENTLY beyond the spot price. This is the closest we can get to calculating the premium, the price suppliers are charging retailers, in excess of the spot price, because they only deal in physical gold.

The moral of the story is to remember why you invest in gold or silver - as an insurance policy. And your precious metals investments do you no good when they are merely claims on physical gold...

to be mined in the future...

in a mine in Australia...

that will be held in proxy by a gold ETF...

and the economy hits the fan.

In the future as unscrupulous banks and investment firms aim to profit off of the metals market, especially with their fractional reserve mentality, you can expect only a fraction of the paper gold to be backed by physical gold and the two markets to diverge significantly in the future.

The Evils of "Progressive Credentialism"

April 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What is "progressive credentialism?"

How does it delay the incubation of the US labor force?

And how can you avoid it?

Well, just watch this video.

(on a very serious note, this video should be viewed by every 14-18 year old so they know what lies ahead).

Paul Krugman - Economic Whore for Hire

April 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When the Prom Queen Falls

April 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I returned to Milwaukee about two weeks ago. I was visiting friends and family because I had to drop off my girlfriend in the middle of Wisconsin and it was convenient to continue on to the east side of the state. There was my old baby sitter, my dad, my best friend and my cousins, but in terms of real worth to my life and care, nothing else.

After meeting with my cousins, my friend, and a fan of Cappy Cap, at a cigar lounge on the west side, the only thing I had left to do was kill time, maybe revisit some old haunts, visit my dad and attend a "charity" event where a handful of old school mates would be. There was nothing, and I mean, nothing left in Milwaukee for me. So inbetween visiting my dad and going salsa dancing with my best friend, I was killing time, which landed me at a bar all of 200 yards from my old middle school.

At this bar was a "fund raiser." It was for kids with Asbergers syndrome. Everybody was very friendly and a nice girl who was a friend of mine back in the day was kind enough to invite me to it, so I showed. But when I showed, it was sad. Not sad because anybody was mean or unpolite, but because it showed we were 200 yards from my former middle school. I couldn't remember names, but I remembered faces. They were older now, decrepit, certainly not as handsome or cute as they used to be, but the ultimately sad thing was, was that they were still 200 yards away from the middle school. They hadn't left. They never left. They were still living in this wretched shithole of trailer trash Milwaukee. They were dating the same people and (after conversation) I realized they had bred and inbred resulting in children from multiple fathers/mothers, lines of which you could connect on the old high school year book.

If anything I took from it, it wasn't the stereotypical

"Yeah man, I was the nerd and I proved to be more successful than all of them."

That was a foregone conclusion I knew in '91.

It was the shock at just how utterly low class, trailer trash and shitty people I had attended school with AND how they never escaped it, DESPITE being on the precipice of a major metropolitan area. They had ALL of the opportunities a modern metro area provided and they still insisted on being and remaining trailer trash. Not just the people I saw, but the stories I heard about former friends and acquiantences. One went to jail, the other was dealing drugs. Single parents about, and divorces were standard. If anything it provided a lot of hindsight and proof that I wasn't insane back in the 80's and 90's, that these people (both present and in reference) were genuinely lower class.

The reason I bring this story up is not for revenge or "I told you so-ism," but rather to make a very important point for younger folk, especially kids who are in the current environment where all of their world seems commanded and controlled by the temporary and faux hierarchy of their school.

It is a FLEETING and TEMPORARY aberration.

I didn't believe it when I was in the thick of it, but when you graduate these people will be forced into the real world in one regard or another. And in the end a person's true temerity, salt and worth is what is going to separate the wheat from the chaff. Even with parental or government subsidy they will fail because it is the person, and their low caliber, that will fail them, not society. And besides, you won't remember them as your life becomes preoccupied with more important shit and more important people.

I didn't believe it, but it will happen. The prom queen will fall. The jocks will get fat. And it isn't because of universal karma or "divine intervention," but because society, especially at the public school level, creates a a huge bubble of popularity, fakeness, and bullshit. It is systematic and predictable. It will prop up young kids to certain heights. Kids with short term skills (throwing a ball, big boobs at an early age, etc.), but no long term ones (mathematics, logic, science). Skills that only serve in that short lived environment. And once that environment is taken away from your peers they will deflate like funding from Dotcoms in 2000 and their true value will show.

For years you will think that you want revenge, but if and when you see them you'll realize their real lives are all the revenge you'll need. It will be so much revenge, you'll actually pity them.

And then you'll leave the bar and continue on with your life.

It's Not Easy Being "Mean"

April 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is now pretty universally understood that the single worst thing you can do to torpedo your chances with the ladies is...

be a nice guy.

If there is progress to be pointed to in The Manosphere, that is it. We have pretty much made it basic, introductory knowledge to all men of all ages that you do NOT be the nice guy.

But what is not so easy is doing the opposite. Being a "jerk" or being an "asshole" to succeed with the ladies and let me explain why.

Chances are you really ARE a nice guy.

Understand nobody sets out and says, "I'm going to be a jerk" or "I'm going to be a mean guy!" Most guys want to be nice people because it is being nice that gets you quality friends, keeps your enemies to a minimum, and increases your standard of living. In every social, psychological, political, familial and business circle it pays to be nice. Unfortunately, however, in this one circle (western civilization romantic) you have to change your game, change your personality and do the opposite. And it is difficult to do when your core being, your true personality is a nice one.

I've seen this not just in my own exploits, but recently hanging out with a buddy of mine. Even at the age of 42 he still catches himself unconsciously defaulting to "nice guy mode." He has to constantly keep his guard up, at least in the initial stages of courting a girl. And when it comes time to actually treating a girl poorly he's rued on multiple occasions,

"Geez, I just can't do it. It's not in my nature. I just don't like treating girls poorly."

Unfortunately (or fortunately) he realizes that it's the only option he has if he wants any measure of success, and thus he fakes it through anyway.

Regardless, the point of this post is one of morality versus that of practicality. I understand it isn't fun being mean. I understand it goes against your nature to not call a girl back and play stupid games. I understand you don't want to hurt people's feelings. I get that, we've all been there. But unfortunatley the rules of the game are such that you HAVE to be a jerk. You have to be aloof. You have to be an ass. This of course does not eliminate that "twinge" of guilt or regret as you purposely cancel on your date 2 hours before its start, but the fact these ARE the rules and women respond to it moot any moral qualms you might have.

You need to buy something today. Might as well buy it here on Amazon.

Eye Candy and Underpants Gnomes

April 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The Underpants Gnomes, if you don't know them is well...here look for yourself:

Obvious it doesn't make sense, which is why South Park is the funniest cartoon ever.

However, something very similar to the UNderpants Gnomes' profit strategy occurs with men. Specifically, eye candy. Why do hot attractive women trigger men to spend money? Ergo, with the help of a kind reader we will test the Eye Candy/Underpants Gnomes profit strategy.

Stage 1 - Desire money to purchase new high quality microphone for podcast

Stage 2 -

Stage 3 - Profit off of increased sales to men of Enjoy the Decline and Amazon sales.

I am, however, reliably informed that if young Amy's pics do help with sales she is not necessarily against providing new ones.

"But Math is Tough!"

April 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

Honest to god. I know the ladies of the Capposphere are real women who are equals. They prove their mettle everyday. AND they are intellectually honest. They don't go rushing to the defense of a woman simply because she's a woman and then worry about whether that woman is right or wrong later. They hold all people to the same standard and are just as judgemental against the women as they are the men. But for the rest of the women out there who clamor for equal treatment, but then want special treatment when the going gets tough, shut up. You're a bunch of hypocrites.

Teach a finite, precise study like math or physics differently so women can catch up???

No, how about you do what men do and that is man up, burn the midnight oil and quit whining. Then you'll be equals.

Cripes.

Probably a White Guy

April 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And that's the truth. This is probably a white guy.

Now all leftists can go pound sand accusing me and the likes of suspecting a muslim in the Boston bombing.

Update - I was right! Let's see if I can go 2 for 2!

UPDATE UPDATE!!! NEW EXPLOSION!!! I predict it was a chemical or faulting mechanics. This is because of course I am a chemicalist and a faulty-mechanic-phobe and am bigoted against both groups. I know my jumping to conclusions is PROOF of my hatred for chemicals and faulty mechanics, but that is because my white privilege forces me to assume it was chemicals and/or faulty mechanics.

The Prevalence of "Self Harm"

April 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What I found interesting in this is how "self harm" was so highly ranked as the #1 or #2 cause for injury in young females. What I also found interesting is how bad men are presumed to be for women in society, even when it's not true.

Oh well. Just another reason to sit and watch society burn and not care, maybe even laugh at it a bit.

A Mean, Old Coin Dealer…

April 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and other antics in this latest episode of "The Clarey Podcast."

A Call for Everybody's HR Stories!

April 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings all!

I need everybody to send me their HR stories!

I'll explain why later, but it is for my next writing project. They can be as long as you want. GOOD STORIES. STORIES WITH DETAIL.

Just post them below and forward this to anyone you know with a good HR story!

AND ALSO KNOW I WILL BE USING THEM IN MY NEXT PROJECT AND YOU ARE GIVING ME THE RIGHT TO USE IT.

Wise and Cheap

April 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ed, our sponsor over at Ranger Self Defense sent me two links.

I am plugging these because they are something I think everybody can use and should use. Diversion safes.

You should at least have SOME of your investments in physical form such as gold, jewelry, guns, bullets, etc. Not a TON, but at least some in case the government ohhhh...I don't know, confiscates your bank account a la Cyprus?

Anyway, he has safes and stash cans. Literally, they're cans. They're actually pretty cool, you'll at minimum get a kick out of looking at them.

Remember, mention "Cappy" or "Captain" and you get a 10% discount off of your purchase!

The Old Can Fight Us or Work With Us

April 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In my latest podcast I mentioned this - how elder people in general do NOT help younger people as you would think they would.

Matter of fact, I've found older people to not only NOT want to help younger people, but obstruct their progress AND take advantage of them. This ranges from obvious things such as the entire education industry (where older people vampirically feed off of younger people) to business "partners" screwing over their younger partners to bosses refusing to do any grooming, training, or mentoring.

Again, if you step back and ask yourself,

"Have any of my elders really helped guide, lead, mentor and help me in my endeavors?"

The answer is not only "no" but also "they have been antagonistic, obstructionist, even against us."

Understand I don't say this as a younger entitled "woe is me, every one is against me," but this HAS been my observation. Contrary to what you would think elders in a society would do (help the younger generations to become successful) I've found they are more against younger people, at minimum indifferent, and at worst taking-advantage of.

Thus when a reader sent me this article, two things stuck out.

1. The elders in this young man's profession had not interest, nor time to guide him or help him in his research.

2. His elders were also WRONG indicating they were manipulating the data for political gain at the expense of future generations.

The lesson to pull from this for younger people is to realize just how alone you are. Not in a social sense, but in a life-leading and guiding sense. NOBODY is here to help you. Nobody is here to lead you. Matter of fact, most people are here to take advantage of you. And the only way out of this mess is going to be through your own self-teaching, self-guidance, logic, and self-upbringing.

Yes, it would have been nice to have elders in society guide and lead you.

Yes, it would have been nice to have your elders be good stewards of the country, and groom you to one day take over and continue its progress, advancement and attainment of excellence.

Yes, these things would have been nice.

But unfortunately you are faced with a leaderless society forcing that role upon your unprepared self.

For the first time in US history the phrase:

"Don't trust anybody over 30 man!"

actually has merit.

"But They Were Such Good Boys"

April 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here's why you have terrorism:

Where's the Feminist Self-Improvement Counterpart?

April 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Victor Pride caught a lot of flak from feminists a while ago for his 30 Days of Discipline, some of the rules of which were unconventional. But criticize his techniques as you might, the fact still remained that Victor wrote a manual with the intention of self-improvement.

A couple months back I entered a "Forced Discipline and Regimen Month." The goal of this was also self improvement. To force myself to do this I put up before and after pictures. I received some guff about "cheese cake photos" and my blinding pasteyness, but again, the overall intention was self-improvement.

And while the two examples above focus on physic fitness and health, if you step back and cast a wider net, you'll realize The Manosphere, as well as various economics blogs, follow a similar parallel. Namely one of self-improvement. Men trying to improve their chances with women. Men trying to advance their careers and financial success. Men (and women) trying to start businesses. And men and women trying to aim for happier, better lives. They are constantly asking "what can I do to improve myself."

I have a simple question.

Where is the feminist equivalent of this?

If I were to generalize the two spheres (feminism and Manosphere) it seems very obvious The Manosphere is focused on self-improvement and improving one's self while the feminist sphere is one of whining, complaining, bitching, victimization and entitlement. I say this not out of spite or agenda, but because it's true.

The Manosphere, for the most part, is an entity of advancement, progress and self-improvement while feminism is one of complaint, victimhood, and class warfare.

If you don't believe me, just take some sample "themes" from both spheres.

Health

How many feminist blogs/sites write constantly about physical fitness and health? And I'm not talking about "how to eat green/organic" (the purpose of such articles being ulteriorly political, not health), but "how can I lose weight?" or "how can I be sexier to the opposite sex?"

None or very little.

Contrast that to The Manosphere where nearly I'd say 1/4th the articles revolve around health. Heck, we even have entire blogs in our ranks dedicated solely to men's health. And how candid and blunt are they compared to their feminist counterparts? We are harsh and merciless upon our readers. Telling, nay, yelling at our younger readers to lose weight, work out, eat their veggies and your personal preferences be damned. You're going to do it son! Whether you like it or not!

And why do we do it?

For women! Not even ourselves! (though it is duly noted that this is so we can GET women, but the point is we at least change our behavior to match what women want).

Education/Labor Market

Another theme that shows where The Manosphere looks to self-improvement while feminists bitch is education. Manosphere Men always ask whether or not the investment in college or training is worth it. Underpinning this is not just the cost of education, but a long term financial strategy, the purpose of which is to achieve economic independence, self-reliance and freedom. Thus, we pursue fields of study that have a positive and adequate ROI. We also encourage younger men (and women) to pursue such fields based on our experiences. We do not let the difficulty of math or science stand in our way, but commit ourselves to it instead knowing surmounting this challenge will pay much better dividends in the future.

The feminist sphere on the other hand practically demands the right to attend college and have a job as an entitlement. An entitlement of which more often than not proves to be a worthless hobby rather than the first step in a well-thought out, long term, SELF SUSTAINING financial strategy. Then, when the economic realities of the labor market come bearing down on them, they NEVER ask what they can do differently to close the wage gap, but rather bitch, whine, complain and demand government intervention to undo what reality and their stupid decisions have done.

Family/Spouse

A huge percentage of The Manosphere is dedicated on how to be a better father, husband, lover and sex machine. Yes, again, admittedly for our own desires, but I've never heard a feminist fret over "whether or not she could provide for her family." Most men, many of which, did not have the luxury of present or real fathers are now starting to fully understand the damage a lack of a dad has on children and thus are recommitted to be good husbands and good fathers. Their own suffering and experiences make them quite selfless as they thoroughly, seriously and completely think about their children and family, current or to be.

Feminists? Are you kidding me? They're begging to get artificially inseminated and have the federal government supplant the husband and father role, with absolutely no regard to the children ~~they intend to abuse and extract financial governmental resources and societal attention from~~ cough...raise. The fact so many feminists view fathers as unnecessary to the proper upbringing of a child shows they only view the child as an asset to own, a pet to have, ultimately proving it's all about them.

Businesses

The Manosphere has a significant percentage of its text dedicated towards setting up a business and doing something significant with your life. Creating a company, employing people, making a better product, innovating a new creation to advance society.

What is the feminist sphere's answer?

Taxing said businesses to fund some non-profit charity that never solves the problem but manages to pay its "directors" a handsome sum?

Some worthless NGO that only employs equally worthless liberal arts majors to protest for some productionless leftist cause or another?

Even MORE bitching and whining about the performance gap between men and women?

Again, The Manosphere is focusing on advancing society where the feminist sphere is primarily focused on parasiting off of it.

Reality

Finally, reality.

Notice how the Manosphere takes a "what is reality" approach first, abides by that reality and then figures out how IT can change to abide and profit from that reality? You know kind of a realistic, mature adult approach to life?

Well the feminism sphere does the complete opposite.

So lazy and ego-centric is the "feminism sphere," it not only ignores reality, but goes to desperate lengths to CRIMINALIZE and CHANGE reality. AND change it to its own selfish and LAZY desires. "Fat Acceptance" being the perfect example.

So selfish and lazy (and veritably insane) is the feminist sphere they ACTUALLY THINK

THEY CAN CHANGE MALE SEXUALITY TO THE POINT WE'D LIKE FAT CHICKS. They actually think they can shame men into finding fat and ugly chicks attractive. They think they can, via political arms and the government, get men to "accept fat" (not to mention slave away paying taxes for the government to surrogate their roles in society).

But the key thing is LAZY. Don't for a second think they don't full well know what the reality is. They KNOW what men what. It is the fact that to meet that goal would require such effort and challenge (working out, staying sexy, being GENUINELY educated and intelligent) they are dissuaded from such a life. For such a life requires more effort and rigor than being a women's studies professor, a welfare recipient, a CSR/HR manager, AND requires you consider the desires of others. In short it requires you to be self supporting, and above all else selfless.

And that is a trait no feminist has.

The League of Ohio Valley Bloggers

April 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Glorious Karl visited me a month or so ago and told me about his ragtag band of Ohio Valley bloggers. I finally am getting around to introducing them for this weekends "Lazy Day Linkage."

Nice Deb is one of the better aggregator sites I've seen. Looks like she updates it faster than Drudge does his.

Interesting. I've been to that mine in my great Utah hike.

Karon Wright, enjoy the unemployment line. I'll say it again, the majority of teachers are not the holy, innocent, pure people you assume them to be.

It only took 45 years to kill this idiotic government program. Which is why I have no faith in the future.

And the Conservative Sociologists makes some keen observations about people who drink at her bar, their employment status and their varying levels of stupidity.

Went to College to be a Stay at Home Mom

April 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I understand that society, the school system, and all of the media drills it into young women's heads that they need to have a career. Some elements of society even shame women for daring to want to be a stay at home mother. However, all of this social engineering will never override biology and most women will answer nature's call to have children. Unfortunately, though, we put women at a great disadvantage practically forcing them to get college degrees, go into debt for those degrees, waste years of their youth pursuing them, only to never use it.

This isn't to say that women shouldn't pursue careers, or shouldn't attend college, or that we're the evil patriarchy glass ceiling, pay gap blah blah blah. It's a request that we at least acknowledge women's tendency to want to have children and when raising young girls to explain that there's nothing wrong with being a stay at home mom, just as there is nothing wrong with becoming a neurosurgeon. The amount of time and money saved would be of great benefit to millions of young women.

"Any Club That Would Have Me…"

April 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There are many tangents I could go on, but I'll let your minds wander on this one. The reason why is that all the wanderings of all wanderers and the conclusions your draw from them will be correct.

Clean It Up People

April 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A reminder I believe is in order once again.

Cappy Cap is a controversial blog. Life is too short to have milquetoast writing, discussion and politics. And while I do the occasional cursing here and there the amount of unnecessary crass language, not to mention vitriolic hate, and condescension of women as of recent is not going to get through. Also outright bigoted and naive commentary such as, "kill all the f#cking muslims/jews" is not going to be tolerated.

This is not going to become a sounding board for angry potty-mouthed middle schoolers. Kick it up a notch here fellas. And if you have any questions about comment policy look up the various clauses including the "St. Leykis Clause."

"Her Facebook Isn't Working Very Well"

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was young.

I was, ergo, naive.

And when the date I was scheduled to pick up in 2 hours didn't return my "are we still on for tonight" call I got upset. My upsettedness was warranted for she never return my call and I was stood up.

For some reason later that night I ended up talking to my mother on the phone and when I explained I got stood up IMMEDIATELY her unconscious "Protect the Female Hive At All Costs Including Your Son's Sanity" instinct kicked in and (I kid you not) she said,

"Well maybe she got hit by a truck. You never know."

I had received explanations like this before, all of them from women;

"Maybe she's in the hospital."

"Maybe she's really busy and it just slipped her mind"

"Maybe her cell phone is turned off." or before the days of cell phones, my all time favorite

"Maybe she's broken down on the road this instant and can't get to a phone."

Of course in hindsight we realize just how stupid these excuses were and realize to what extents the women in our lives would go to protect our feelings or protect the hive.

But I really like this one

"Her Facebook Isn't Working Very Well."

Of course he is spoofing the title, but the spoofing is precisely the sarcasm and ridicule you young boys need to realize just what a bunch of hokey it is when other people provide excuses as to why a girl is standing you up not calling you back

etc. etc. etc.

So the next time you hear,

"She got hit by a truck"

you think

"Her facebook wasn't working."

When you hear

"It probably slipped her mind"

you think

"Her facebook wasn't working."

When you hear

"She could be in the hospital"

you think

"Her facebook wasn't working."

THen you go to the gym, hit the weights and run a couple miles.

Chronic Regulation Addiction

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Chronic Regulation Addiction (CRA) is a disease that infects (mostly) leftists and wreaks havoc on society.

Specifically, it is when a leftist in the form of a bureaucrat, regulator or politician simply cannot stop making new laws.

The disease manifests itself when the host gets addicted to its ego. He or she fails to acknowledge or accept that there is such a thing as "enough law" and instead insists on making new laws and regulations, not for the benefit of society, but rather to stoke their ego.

A person with CRA typically has no other real world experience, skills or purpose in life and naturally gravitates towards government, regulation or non-profits. However, there is a natural point where additional codification, law and regulation no longer provides a benefit to society and further decisions should give way to common sense, leadership, and human thought. Again, this sort of genuine statesmenship never occurs to the person infected with CRA.

Some governmental organizations fight CRA. For example the Texas State Legislature which meets only once every two years. Unfortunately most don't.

Mayor Bloomberg, on the municipal level, is infected with CRA his law-making goes so far as to tell people how much soda they can drink.

The "Forest Stewardship Council," an international organization that tries to standardize forestry standards across various countries' DNR-equivalents is increasing their "certification" standard to include 350+ NEW standards 25% of which are contradictory (this from an inside source who was the inspiration for this post).

And how many principals do we know that substitute "zero-tolerance" policies for genuine leadership, resulting in expulsions over pop-tarts eaten in the shape of a gun or a kid playing "Save the World"

Nearly every career-politician is infected with CRA and continues to make unnecessary laws which only slow down and further (though microscopically) erode societal freedoms.

If you want to stop CRA vote for term limits and a constitutional limit on the number of years people can serve in public office at all levels as well as limit the number of years one can work in the public sector.

This has been a public service announcement from Cappy Cap.

Review of "The Hitchhiking Crash Course"

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hitchhiking is one of those things when you think about it you realize 2 things.

1. It is one word, not "hitch hiking" and
2. "Hey, why don't more people do this? It's cheap, it's a built in adventure, and it's a challenge."

Naturally the appeal of hitchhiking would tempt the tastes of men more than women, but if you're unemployed, young, and got nothing else to do (i.e.-most kids under 30) why the hell not? It's getting somebody to jog your brain out of its predisposed state to never consider hitch hiking and Matt Forney's book does just that.

"The Hitch Hiking Crash Course" is a purposely short book that addresses the do's and don't's of hitch hiking. The book borrows from the author's experience in 2012 hitch hiking from New York to Washington State (where he consequently went through the Captain's home town and did not inform him of his presence). A lot of the book is common sense, but that is only after you read it. You would probably not consider at least 60% of the "do's and don't's" Matt brings up in his book.

Of particular note/interest.

Psychological preparation - Hitch hiking across the country is no small feat. Plus Mr. Forney took 6 months to get across the country. He slept at way sides, truck stops and out in the open. This was not a timid task, hitching 20 miles, that if necessary you could walk in a day. Matt gained invaluable experience, especially mental preparation. The biggest hurdle is one of "just do it," while there are other aspects such as fatigue, a mental mind set while trying to hitch rides and the physical (and consequentially) mental punishment you will put your mind though.

Etiquette - Not that he's conveying the "Carnie Code," but he does clearly show how having the appropriate etiquette will increase your chances of getting rides and making your adventure not only easier, but much more enjoyable. How to interact with everybody you are going to run into (cops, gas station managers, truck drivers, etc) has an effect, if for any other reason you are at the mercy of other people when hitch hiking.

Logistics - Anybody who hitch hikes for 3,500 miles picks up a thing or two beyond common sense. Details like when to hitch hike, where to position yourself on the road, attire, what to pack, and route planning. Save yourself of having to learn by mistake and just take his advice.

All in all it's a solid book, a very short read (60 pages PDF), but most important, the precise and mandatory guide anybody considering hitch hiking needs.

"Education is Not a Human Right"

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Thanks Obvious Atheist!

Why am I not retired sitting on a beach after writing "Worthless?"

How Robotech Caused Terrorism

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I guess I'm going semi-viral.

Don't know how this happened, but I am now the #3 result if you search for the Boston terrorists on Youtube.

This has resulted in a flood of the most worthless, brainless, but still-think-they're-geniuses college brats, as well as some angry radical muslims, spewing the most mind-numbing bullsh$t you'll ever see.

JOIN THE FORAY!!! It's fun!

I've (according to my comment policy) have cleaned it up a bit, but there are still some amazing comments that get through.

Here you go:

Oh, and let's see if "Cappy Gets Results"

Let's like this one up a bit here, eh?

Post Post - Oh honest to god people. Have NONE OF YOU SEEN DIRTY ROTTEN SCOUNDRELS?????

Here!

Dames in the 40's Liked Math

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

They didn't say,

"but math is tough."

or

"I just don't like math."

or

"I'm more of a people person."

They said, "Cool, let's learn COBOL."

And that's when they were (of course) HORRENDOUSLY oppressed in those barbaric 1940's.

Penn's Sunday School

April 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As many of you know I run.

What many of you may or may not know is that as you get older, fewer of your colleagues can keep up with you.

So whereas it was a blissful summer day in 1998 while you and 4 of your buddies went and knocked out 8 miles in your early 20's around some of Minneapolis' finer groomed parkways...

by the time you're 39 and it's a cold, snowing, dark April night in 2013, you look around and realize nobody is running with you as they've succumbed to the ill-fates of marriage, children, careers, and (sadly some) suicide or premature death.

Thank god technology has advanced to the point the MP3 player was made and podcasts were invented.

I'm a big fan of podcasts, not because I'm trying to create my own, but because they provide what I believe to be the most convenient and beneficial media to people who are genuine intellectuals. There are thousands of "unoccupied audible" hours in a human life where the human mind can be stimulated with the words of another human mind via headphones and I'm shocked there aren't more people with headphones on wherever you go.

Driving, running, working out, you name it. Just because your physical body is occupied, doesn't mean your mind cannot be further stimulated, advanced or progressed through the wisdom, observations and anecdotes of others.

Thus, why I particularly appreciate a good podcast and would like to share with you my three favorite ones.

There is Garage Logic. The host, Joe Soucheray, is pretty much an unknown outside Minnesota, but you will appreciate him and "the Rookie's" rapport with one another. I still to this day don't know why he hasn't been nationally syndicated.

Bill Burr. Rambling and crass and elementary, it's precisely what most men in their teens through 60's need to get through the pansified, girly, PC-obedient society the country has foisted upon us.

But, more recently Penn Gillette's "Sunday School." Though not frequent, I strongly recommend the podcast because, though it's obvious they're not a serious production, Penn and his co-hosts' intelligence provide for some engaging and intellectually stimulating conversation.

If any of you know of any other podcasts FOR FREE you can download, light 'em up. The average broadcaster/podcaster can do 2 hours of material per working day. The average pursuer of intelligent radio will burn through about 4-6 hours per day, ergo new sources are always in demand.

The Zombie Feminist

April 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Note - this is a serious post despite the title. This is also a NOT a post about politics as much as it is about psychology. The reader would benefit most from trying to set aside politics while reading this and treat it more as a clinical study in psychology rather than a mockery of feminism or leftist politics.

The more I sit and think about this, the more I realize I'm on to something AND I do not like it.

The "liberal zombie."

The title may get a chuckle, but if you think this through the consequences are very dire, arguably the single largest threat western civilization faces.

In short, how do you reason or rationalize with somebody whose mental capacity has been compromised or impaired? How to you explain or convey a person is wrong when they have a veritable mental disease that prevents their minds from even entertaining the fact they might be wrong. Not to provide a personal anecdote, but to make a very clear point, my brother has been an alcoholic since the 5th grade. After being requested to drive him to the airport this last Christmas, it was impossible to deal with him because he has suffered literal brain damage to the point he can no longer retain commands or maintain his short term memory. You could tell him not to light up the pot in the car, at which point he'd obey your command, only to try to re-light it 3 minutes later. It's not that they disagree with you, it's that their brains have been compromised to the point they're not capable of it, and are only responding to a brainstem level of instinct.

Enter the liberal zombie.

I truly believe that after K-Grad school education, the human brain is so indoctrinated and steeped in leftist thought they are mentally impaired and incapable off;

independent thought critical thinking intellectual honesty
open mindedness
admitting being wrong or in error

And with a compliant media, government, and society, this mental disease remains thoroughly ensconced in their psyches into adulthood. But what makes it worse is there is usually a violent (though mindless) reaction. An emotional and visceral response to anyone or anything that dares to suggest they or their ideology is wrong.

For example, compare and contrast these two clips.

This is what a feminist looks like.

This is what a zombie that wants to kill Will Smith looks like.

Precisely how do their psychologies differ?

Will Smith's character (if I remember the movie right) tried to reason with the zombies saying he could cure them.

They wanted none of it.

The MRA in the other video wanted to have a calm discussion.

The feminist wanted none of it.

But worse, both became agitated and (at minimum) angry. So angry in fact it becomes VERY obvious there is no point in trying to reason with them. They lack the mental capacity to reason.

In other words, I fear there will come the point (if we're not there already) that trying to reason with anybody on the left will not only be impossible, but they are so indoctrinated to hate the right (or anybody who disagrees with them), they will become violent and dangerous. And since they are so far gone that they can no longer be engaged with reason, logic, thought, intelligence or discussion, it will unfortunately force "non-leftists" with only one alternative - physical force.

Ergo it is perhaps best for the left at least try to practice what they preach and be open-minded.

The New Way to Measure GDP

April 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A couple people have asked about the new revisions being made in terms of how we measure GDP. I investigated this and let me just say

YOU OWE ME BIG.

I had to go through this monster of a document to find the answer and see if;

1. the changes are economically and "accountingly" accurate/correct/called-for/legitimate
2. determine if the impetus for these changes was malicious or well-intended and after much debating, theorizing and thinking through I think I have your answer.

In short, the changes made (specifically to the R&D) are incorrect in that they double count R&D into the GDP. However, I do not believe these changes were malicious, but were rather logical and theoretical errors made on the part of the economist and accountant "theoreticians."

The longer version...well....why don't you pour yourself a martini first and find a comfy chair before I delve into it?

You back?

Good, OK, let's begin.

First, I found the subsection of the study that specifically addresses R&D and I have it posted here:

Research and development

10.103 Intellectual property products include the results of research and development (R&D). Research and [experimental] development consists of the value of expenditures on creative work undertaken on a systematic basis in order to increase the stock of knowledge, including knowledge of man, culture and society, and use of this stock of knowledge to devise new applications. This does not extend to including human capital as assets within the SNA. The value of research and development (R&D) should be determined in terms of the economic benefits it is expected to provide in the future. This includes the provision of public services in the case of R&D acquired by government. In principle, R&D that does not provide an economic benefit to its owner does not constitute a fixed asset and should be treated as intermediate consumption. Unless the market value of the R&D is observed directly, it may, by convention, be valued at the sum of costs, including the cost of unsuccessful R&D, as described in chapter 6.

10.104 R&D should be recognized as part of capital formation. In order to achieve this, several issues have to be addressed. These include deriving measures of research and development, price indices and service lives. Specific guidelines, together with handbooks on methodology and practice, will provide a useful way of working towards solutions that give the appropriate level of confidence in the resulting measures.

10.105 With the inclusion of R&D expenditure as capital formation, patented entities no longer feature as assets in the SNA. The patent agreement is to be seen instead as the legal agreement concerning the terms on which access to the R&D is granted. The patent agreement is a form of licence to use which is treated as giving rise to payments for services or the acquisition of an asset.

most of this is gobbledygook so let me translate this into English for you.

The red section is basically the UN saying that the value of R&D and all of its future economic benefits should be considered in the SNA or "new GDP measure." This assertion is true. The benefits that are derived from R&D SHOULD be included in any measure of economic production for it DOES affect economic production. So so far we have no disagreement with the economists at the UN.

However, we get in into trouble with the green highlighted area. Here the UN is calling for a way to go about achieving their goal of accounting for or measuring R&D in the new GDP measure. They don't go into details, merely suggesting new methodologies and techniques to measure this, but here is where they're wrong.

R&D is already accounted for and measured currently in GDP.

The reason why is that all expenditures on R&D are transacted and accounted for. Maybe not obviously, but every bit of economic production and benefit of R&D DOES end up in the current measure of GDP.

Let me explain why.

When a company, government or other institution spends money on R&D it spends it on two things:

Materials and labor.

Any money spent on materials is immediately accounted for in GDP in that the suppliers of said materials record this as sales. So just because Apple is developing a new lithium battery doesn't mean all the money it spent on lithium doesn't make it into GDP. It does via the lithium company producing and selling Apple its lithium.

That is your first instance of double accounting.

Labor, however, is a bit more ambiguous and the double accounting is not as apparent. All the money spent on scientists, support staff, and maintenance staff in the R&D lab does not immediately result in the production of a good or service. Not recordable at that moment anyway. At this point, however, you may be tempted to make the argument that:

"Well, those people will take their salaries and buys stuff, those transactions of which would end up in GDP." and think you have found the "double accounting error."

But, while true, it's Keynesian. It doesn't account for the fact the value of their labor and expertise in developing a "new lithium battery" is still not accounted for. For example the scientist who takes his money and buys the Hogan's Heroes DVD set did not MAKE the Hogan's Heroes DVD set. That is the production of somebody else. Ergo the labor he expended at the lab is still not making it into GDP.

Inevitably though, the scientist's labor WILL make it into our current measure of GDP in the future when the product or service his labor was used to develop is sold on the free market.

This is an important point to explore further because I believe it is here where the UN economists are goofing up.

Two things happen when this product is sold.

One, a transaction. This means the transaction will be recorded in GDP.

Two, the scientist's labor is finally valued. It has a price tag put on it.

The reason why is that when a product or service is sold, you are now attaching a value in terms of dollars AND making a transaction. So when somebody buys the latest Apple device the price they pay is NOT just for the materials, and NOT just the labor that went into assembling it, but ALSO for the labor in the R&D lab that was expended developing it's latest doo-dad or feature. Naturally, this is why people are willing to pay a higher price for an IPhone 63 vs. an IPhone 47. That premium IS the market value of the R&D AND IS ACCOUNTED FOR.

Now, admittedly I did not read through all 800 pages of the UN's SNA publication. And I could have misinterpreted the writing, reason or rationale of the economists who wrote it. But as it stands right now, my understanding of this new measure of GDP is flawed and will overstate the level of genuine economic production and wealth in the country.

I VERY MUCH WELCOME any criticisms or corrections from any economists who are more specialized than I am in accounting theory, NIPA accounts, etc. etc.

American Women Need a Good Spankin'

April 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And the majority of our problems would go away.

And I'm not half unserious about that either!

(This is a clip from the movie "McLintock!" and is actually a pretty fun, good flick.)

A Basic Tutorial on Buying Silver and Gold

April 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here you go kids!

Warp Speed, Hamster Sulu

April 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Aye, Captain Hamster!

Outstanding Cartoon on the Basics of the Stock Market

April 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I saw this and immediately had to post it.

If you are interested in investing in stocks, or just have a philosophical interest in the accounting, finance and economics behind what drives a stock market, I strongly recommend taking my online class on stock valuation and analysis.

A Most Thorough Review of Enjoy the Decline

April 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Elusive Wapiti wrote a review of "Enjoy the Decline" over at The Spearhead. I mention it not just for self-promotion purposes, but because it is probably the best and most thorough review of the book. If you or somebody you know is wondering "what is it about, and do I want to buy it" Elusive's review is pretty much spot on.

An example:

By far the most useful aspect of this book, in my opinion, is in the case that it makes for readers to realize that whatever bourgeois values they may presently possess, there is a high probability those values are maladaptive in the present economic and social climate. Up has become down and right has become wrong in these last days of the American republic. Work hard and save for retirement? Don't be ridiculous. Why save when the nation's leaders gleefully debauch the currency, pulling a "stealth Cyprus" to the tune of 8 – 10% each year? Why delay gratification when there will likely be little / no Social Security for Xers and younger generations, particularly if the government will simply appropriate your savings through an outright Cyprus/France/Hungary/Ireland/Argentina/Poland-style seizure? Why work hard, when doing so only qualifies you to be taxed even more to support an income redistribution scheme consuming more than 2/3 of the Federal budget, "spread [your hard-earned monies] around a little", to bankroll parasites who didn't earn it? Why hope for things to get better when unemployment is presently at around 14% and the labor force participation rate is at a 30-year low, is trending downward, and has been so for decades? And why scrimp to pay for college while the higher ed bubble continues to inflate, making your parent's advice to "get an education" in order to succeed nearly financially suicidal and economically ill-advised in the new economic reality? For that matter, why marry and have children? Silly rabbit, very few men and women these days are equipped to be proper husbands and wives. Moreover, 5,000 years of traditional Marriage 1.0 has been subsumed by Marriage 2.0–and now, by homogamy–and is characterized by easy divorce and the subsequent trafficking in former spouses (usu but not always ex husbands) for the pecuniary interests of the state and ex-wives.

You can find the book here.

Dirty, Sloppy Linkage

April 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Wow, who knew she'd end up as a worthless academian bureaucrat!?

Maureen Dowd is HOT! You're just an ageist, sexist, bigot who's intimidated by a strong, independent woman!

Ahhh, yes, "The Healthy Penis!" That'll make our enemies quiver in their boots and think twice about taking us over!

Dude, that's pretty freaking manly. I'd like to see a liberal arts major do that.

Your morning NSFW funny ha ha.

My children will never grow up with yours as I refuse to bring them into this world with your genetic excrement running feral and rampant.

Hmmmm....dominance trumps sexuality and sexual preference. Veeeeerrry interesting.

And just when my X Box breaks AND the repair kit doesn't work. Curse you Aurini!!!!!!

But math is tough!

Baby Boomer Meat Markets, CSR and More!

April 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In this latest podcast Aaron talks about Baby Boomer meat markets, how "traditional grandmothers" might become extinct, how he hates it when bank tellers fake taking an interest in you, and he asks corporate America the question - "What's the next, greatest innovation in business? CSR? Linked in? Lobby and rent seeking? Do any of you have ANY new ideas or is it just more BS?"

Some of his finest work and NO recording errors! You can find the archives here.

Oh Danny Boy

April 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

All is not well in Honolulou.

On a somewhat related note.

Beta of the Century

April 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

here's the story

here's the picture

Maybe one of those cough cough wheeze wheeze women will let him carry their books to class!

Why Cary Grant is Mandatory for the Manosphere

April 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My mother, who I do indeed love, gave me a tonnage of advice.

And in all honesty 90% of it was completely worthless BS that only served to cripple me later in life.

However, there was one "arena" or "genre" of advice she gave me that DID indeed prove to be useful and that was watching Cary Grant movies.

Cary Grant if you are unfamiliar with was arguably the premier actor from the golden years of Hollywood. He played everything from his early years of romantic comedy fill-in to war hero in "Destination Tokyo." But if there was anything you could glean from Cary Grant at the age of 14 it was his vocabulary and charm.

Charm and vocabulary are things that are hard to teach. They are endeavors that truthfully an individual must pursue and perfect. But if you start enough at an early age, or dedicate yourself at an older age, you can naturally embed these traits into your being, infuse them into yourself, and in the end come out a much more advantaged man than your peers. And this advantage is huge over your other alpha male contemporaries.

Understand that with all the TRUTHFUL and LEGITIMATE observations about confidence, dominance, leadership, etc. of the alpha male, not all of those traits are conveyed via physical posturing. Women do not solely interact with you on a physical basis, matter of fact the majority of their INITIAL interaction with you will be verbal. And therefore if you wish to improve your chances, having this "natural Cary Grantish charm" to bolster your "verbal game" will prove necessary.

How do you achieve this Cary Grantish charm?

Very simple.

1. Watch Cary Grant movies.

2. Plagiarize his lines.

3. Increase your vocabulary.

#1 Watch Cary Grant Movies

I cannot claim to be Cary Grant, but I've watched enough of them, and have become familiar enough with the man's acting that I can fake him really good. The man never loses confidence, is always in command, and if he isn't, he is in the state of "confused indifference." Of course Hollywood playrights made him look that way, but merely studying his characters in many movies will at MINIMUM give you a template to work from. He never gets angry, he never gets riled, he's very much like John Wayne. Immovable, though affable and every woman will at minimum like him.

#2 Plagiarize His Lines

The benefit of this is that most modern day women are so uncultured and pursue such mindless endeavors, they don't even know who Cary Grant is. As they lap up the latest gossip of the Kardashians or what latest celebrity harlot had a bastard child to prove her independent womanhood, you clandestinely take in and write down all the smooth oneliners Cary Grant spoke. Even though those one liners were written 60 years ago, the wisdom of our Hollywood playrights in terms of knowledge of the sexes shines through and still applies to today. If you watch those movies from the 50's and 60's you'll see, as clear as day, what charm is and how it plays on female sexual psychology. They knew the formula back then. They know it now. Why bother trying to recreate it? Just repeat it.

Remember. Modern day women are too busy watching the likes of EPL, Sex in the City, etc., to even know who Cary Grant is. So it's like plagiarizing with no risk of being caught.

 # 3 Increase Your Vocabulary

If there is one thing I learned from watching Cary Grant flicks it was the cunningness and cleverness of the PRECISE words he chose.

Of course Cary Grant did not CHOOSE those words, the playwrights did.

But the point is still taken.

Understand the power of vocabulary.

Most people when they think "vocabulary" they think "some nerd who knows too many words."

But the truth is that 100% of your verbal communication with the opposite sex HAS TO COME THROUGH WORDS.

And if you have a better command of the vocabulary, why wouldn't that provide a great opportunity to improve your game?

This is the largest point of my post.

For if you have a better command of the language then you can convey, practically magically, much more than your competitors, your super-awesomeness. Instead of merely conveying information you can become the soothsayer, embedding traits like intelligence, wit, and cleverness in those words.

For example you, say get your ass shotdown by a girl who claims "she has a boyfriend."

The NON-Cary Grant familiar man will scuffle off into obscurity or at best say, "cool."

You, familiar with Cary Grant lingo will say,

"Well, if anybody goes on the critical list let me know." (Charade, 1963)

Or if a girl feigns umbrage at your approach you say,

"Dreadful etiquette, I apologize" (which isn't a Cary Grant line, but a Christian Slater line)

The list can go on and on, but the larger point is not one of merely a "tit for tat" memorization of Cary Grant lines from 1940's movies, but to have a command and (more importantly) a familiarity and COMMON USAGE of many $5 English words that when sparing verbally with a woman you can pull the precise clever sniper-precision

words you need to deliver to such effect it not only mutes her, but turns her on. NOT because no other guy used those words but...

because those words convey meaning that no other man in her life was able to convey.

"Diploma Addiction"

April 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HAR!!!

"More good at being smart"

12 Year Old Rapists

April 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hmmm....I wonder if their fathers could be reached for comment.

Oh, but don't worry. I'm sure there are no consequences to 7 year olds being told to deal drugs.

And remember,

I genuinely want you to remember, men and fathers are not needed. Society will get along, nay, ADVANCE without them.

Is the US Cooking the Books on GDP?

April 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An old school trick economists use to measure the true economic growth of countries where their governments are not...um...known for publishing accurate and true figures

COUGH COUGH
ARGENTINA

COUGH COUGH
CHINA

WHEEZE WHEEZE
VENEZUELA

is instead of taking the liar's word for it, they instead substitute electrical consumption. This is a reasonably good proxy, unaffected by inflation or distortions from government bureaucrats and can be easily measured.

So I decided to do the same thing with the United States.

Here is electrical consumption vs. Real GDP going back to 1949.

Because of the varying axes it is important to index both to 100 in 1949 to see whether one is growing faster than the other. Here is that same chart indexed:

If you eyeball it, it seems the opposite of what I was suspecting was happening. Energy consumption is growing faster than GDP suggesting we've been UNDERSTANDING our economic growth. I double checked the figures , thinking I had erred, but they prove to be the correct.

Understand, however, I still actually think this is an error because if anything the US has become more efficient with its energy and I have seen GDP/unit of energy figures proving this. But here's the interesting thing. Even with this error (that goes against my original case) this data series actually ends up proving it even more so, notably by what I spy with my little eye in the green circle.

Since the chart is indexed you don't really see it, but starting in 2002 energy consumption flatlined while GDP continued to grow. Matter of fact, GDP has grown by 14% since 2002 while energy consumption has grown only by 1%.

This is what I feared was happened. Where the government says,

"Yep! you're all 14% richer now!"

When the energy consumption does not prove so.

Now it is hard to say whether this is because of measuring differences as the chart shows the two do not perfectly correlate with one another, but NEVER in the history of the two data sets has GDP been a full 13% higher than what electrical consumption would suggest.

I can only want to see how much larger the differences will be once we adapt the "New GDP" measure.

(also, any thoughts on the discrepancy or data source from the EIA would be appreciated).

Your Boss Hates You

April 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And the sooner you learn that, and accept the fact they will throw you under the bus, the better your career will be.

They are not your friends.

They are not your mentors.

They are your enemies that need to be quarantined as quickly as possible and people you must be promoted over in order to succeed. They are the bottleneck and blockage to your advancement in your career.

Again, cheap nursing homes for all.

Grown Women Don't Read "Twilight"

April 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Or Cosmo

Or EPL

Or 50 Shades of Gray

Or anything you can find in the check out lane at your local grocery store.

Which means grown women are definitely in the minority.

If I Were an Oil Corporate Executive

April 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'd sell all our assets in the US,

Move our corporate headquarters to Bermuda and tell all the ungrateful spoiled little eco-brats (and I'm not talking children) in the US to go pound sand.

It is amazing any of them stay here, let alone supply this ungrateful country with oil.

Leftist Zombies

April 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Keep going zombies. Keep going.

Why I Felt Safe In the 80's

April 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I am not joking when I say this, but when Ronald Reagan was in charge I felt very safe and never worried about the country. Of course I was only a child at the time and there really wasn't anything I could do about it, but I intuitively KNEW the government or "what adults were in charge of" was something I didn't have to concern my mind with.

I didn't know this picture existed, but it more or less speaks more words than most as to why everybody, bar the most hate-filled leftists, loved Ronald Reagan, not to mention felt safe.

(though who is in the background? Stossel?)

Eulogy of the American Woman

April 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As a dead woman buried six feet under the ground, I'm appreciative of all the privilege I've had to live a life where women were cherished and valued above men, who finally understand their role as sperm donors and tax payers and nothing more. But even more can be done, and I pass the torch to young women today and tell them to keep up the fight for gender equality, girl power, and female happiness at all costs. Thank god I was born an American girl.

Roosh hit this one a while ago and it is still gaining altitude. You will read it.

The Captain's Great 2013 Motorcycle Adventure

April 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is the tentative plan.

If anybody happens to be on this route let the Captain know.

No specific dates however.

Liberty Mastermind Symposium

April 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember to sign up if you are interested in attending. The price jumps $50 tomorrow!

We Provide Leadership and Guidance Where There Was None

May 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

That is arguably the most important and positive benefit The Manosphere has brought to society. I strongly recommend the link if for any other reason there's a free PDF book the guy links to and hey, who doesn't like free books?

Suicide Bombing Civilians? It's All Good!

May 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Outstanding chart to show you just what kind of evil in the world exists.

Make Believe James Bond Linkage

May 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

As I play "James Bond" in Florida and the Caribbean, here is some linkage from the kind agents holding down the fort at Fort Cappy:

Housing Market Bubble Part II

I'm getting my Bachelors of Arts in Porn.

Karl has a competition going on where you can win GLORIOUS HAT!!!!

I know a lot of you have been taking an interest in silver so thought a little post/podcast on the supply side of the silver market might be of interest.

This is laughable. They're going to try to ban guns from (get this) ILLINOIS PUBLIC HOUSING!!!

Happy Day for Says Uncle as he approaches 9 million! Mayhaps somebody from Cappy could be his 9 millionth reader!

Why can't I find a maaaaaaaannnnnn??!!!!! (picture IS safe for work, but just gross)

The Three Urinal Paradox

May 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Warning - this is guy humor. All complaints from women will be ignored.

Because of the average amount of traffic that goes into the average men's bathroom in a public place, more often than not you will find three urinals.

HOWEVER

ONE of those urinals will be placed lower on the wall, obviously for young boys who cannot yet reach the adult male urinals (though a really good arching technique will work). This results in the traditional set up of the "3 Urinal Bathroom"

There is, however, a design flaw in the 3 Urinal Bathroom.

If you walk in and ALL THREE urinals are available, which one do you choose?

100% of the time you will choose the one on the far left.

Why?

Because you are too manly to use the little boy's urinal and you don't want to be in the middle urinal in that it would force you to potentially stand next to another guy (and therefore be potentially construed as gay). This leaves the left urinal as the most "manly" choice.

However, while this may absolve you of the decision, it presents the classical "Three Urinal Paradox" to the second man. And every man in the world will at one point in their lives BE THAT SECOND MAN.

Since you have occupied the far left urinal, the second man gets a choice:

Be gay or

Be a little boy.

If he takes the middle urinal, he's obvious flaming gay.

But if he takes the far right urinal, he's obviously not a real man and is a little boy (maybe even a pedophile).

There is no third option, thus resulting in the paradox.

So men of the Capposphere, which one do you choose if the far left is occupied.

I know my answer.

Hyphenated-Named Women

May 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Stay frosty, boys. Stay frosty. They're out there.

The Lie of a Generation

May 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"When I was in my 40s, I realized I had become invisible to men of my own generation," said Brings, co-author of "Older Women, Younger Men: New Options for Love and Romance" (New Horizon Press). She noticed younger men, often raised by feminist women, were intrigued by and admiring of her success and experience, whereas older men seemed threatened and expected women to play traditional roles."

Whatever you got to tell yourself sweetheart. Whatever you got to tell yourself. It isn't going to be us who suffers. Just you and the idiot women who actually swallow the lie.

It's a Horrible Life

May 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just a hello to all the economists and lieutenants out there from Florida!

Remember to enjoy the decline!

Krauser Enjoys the Decline!

May 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

New review on Enjoy the Decline.

Why aren't you enjoying the decline?

I'm Right, You're Wrong

May 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I received a little blip of traffic that made it on my radar. Not a ton, but something was sending me a little traffic. Looked it up and found this.

In short it is a semi-disagreement-response to my post about how emulating Cary Grant would help increase your chance with the ladies. However, it is not so much a disagreement piece about being charming like Cary Grant, as much as it is a critique of people thinking somehow the 40's and 50's were better in America and that today is just as good as it was back then.

But there's just one minor problem with this specific critique.

He's wrong.

And I'm not saying this as a matter of opinion or a matter of arrogance, I'm saying it as a matter of fact. He is wrong. And not that his post was scathing or even unpolite, it is that he highlights something that really irks me - when people mock and ridicule people for daring to think yesteryear was better than today. So permit me some evidence.

First, this picture.

This is a picture of a soup line in the Great Depression.

Do you notice something about it?

What is odd about it?

Oh, that's right, even though we were in the depth of the worst economy in the past 100 years people still dressed their best when in public. Today, our society doesn't even come close to that.

Second, here's an interesting comparison of searches.

"College Girls"

and

"College Girls 1940's"

Admittedly, in intellectual honesty, I'm all for a little T&A, but not when talking about the quality and caliber for marriage material or people I'd like to associate with.

And for those of you who are arguing that "college girls" would naturally default to a more rated r version of images, fine, try another search for a more intellectual group

"slut walk protest"

Third, the chart that should have won me awards, economic growth is decreasing (despite the government's best efforts to artificially inflate it). Our current generation is only about 55% as productive as the previous generation and this is WITH advances in technology.

Fourth, debt. I'm not even going to link to any charts or data because this is just common knowledge.

Fifth, dependency.

Now I could go on and on (and on...and on.....and on), but the simple fact is that Americans today are:

- lower quality
- lower caliber
- uglier
- fatter

- lazier
- more dependent
- and just all around
- poorer quality

humans than their 1940's and 50's counterparts.

And while there are certainly some areas society is doing better in than in the past (say computer technology), for the most part the majority of economic and sociological data proves the people and society in the 40's and 50's were superior to Americans today.

I don't want to hear any inferior, minds-of-weaklings arguments about "moral relativism."

I don't want to hear any inferior, minds-of-weaklings ad-hominem attacks.

I don't want to hear any inferior, minds-of-weaklings name calling.

And I don't want some trumped up worthless liberal arts academic study done by some equally worthless professor who couldn't hack it in the real world using biased data to advance a political agenda.

No sane, rational, mature and intellectually honest adult can look at society today and say today's Americans are just as high quality or better caliber than yesteryear's. I don't care how much you may disagree with it, you can all sit there, pout, hold your breath until your face turns blue and scream at the top of your lungs just what a mean-poopie head I am. Because in the end, barring some miraculous economic growth, the economic realities of our laziness and inferiority (in the form of massive debts) is going to come crushing down on us. And when that happens you will be BEGGING for the days American's had the temerity, work ethic, and drive in the 1940's, because, frankly, that's the only thing that is going to save this or any other country.

If this post provided warm fuzzies, then return the warm fuzzies by buying something (you were going to buy anyway) on the Captain's Amazon site.

The Importance of Revisiting the Meat Market

May 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

As most of you know I am spoken for. Took a while, but the benefits of it taking a while and dating 300+ of America's...COUGH COUGH...WHEEZE WHEEZE...PHLEGM PHLEGM...

"finest"

kind of puts things into perspective so that when a quality candidate comes along (one every eight years) you know to capitalize on it.

However, that being said, there is a thing called "euphoric recall," a term an alcoholic friend of mine taught me about. It means that your brain tends to remember only the good things or good times and forgets the bad ones. I believe it is a survival mechanism in that if your brain remembered all the bad stuff in your life, you'd become depressed and suicidal. But that aside, the principle applies in the same regard when it comes to courting and playing the field - your brain will remember only the good times of your single swingin' bachelor/ette days.

Because of this, after some time men (and women) will tend to only fondly remember the good aspects of dating and playing the field. They will then start to wonder about their current spouse/boy/girlfriend/lover, or just the concept of settling down in the first place. But what they forget is the sheer hell and pain-in-the-assery those "good ole times" were.

Thus, why I recommend "revisiting the meat market."

As I sit here now typing, my pilot-bachelor-millionaire friend and I just returned from "Friday Night" in St. Petersburg, Florida. Every Friday night they section off the bar area of downtown and the night clubs, cigar lounges, and bars open up. We headed out to the cigar lounge to smoke, but as luck would have it, I also found a salsa club just a block south of the "Friday Night" festivities.

However, when we reconnoitered the salsa club there were practically no women to dance with, prompting us to think we'd surely be able to convince some women to come dance with us back at the "Friday Night" festival. I thought this would be a breeze given the levity of the festival and figured it would only be a matter of approaches to convince a couple girls to join us, but, ahhhhh yes.... euphoric recall.

The first group of girls "didn't know how to dance."

The second group, "no thank you, nice try."

And the third group! Mercy, a veritable 23 year old bitch told me "nice try, it's time for you to leave."

(And to dissuade any arguments that I was dejected or butt hurt, no, in all honesty I was merely, literally, and honestly asking girls if they wanted to join me and my buddy at a salsa club. And to further address any additional arguments, yes, I was on my game, was charming, wasn't creepy, etc, etc, etc.and my approach was one of NOT hitting on, but a genuine and friendly request that some girls come dancing with us (for example, I asked no one particular girl, but GROUPS to join us) Also the approaches were aloof, indifference and nonchalant.)

Regardless, my point is the responses were just so hostile and arrogant that it reminded me of just what a pain in the ass it was trying to play the field, when in fact we WEREN'T EVEN TRYING TO PLAY THE FIELD! We were just trying to get dance partners. And thus, there is a lesson for both those of you who are spoken for and those of you who are single.

For those of you (men) who are single, my god. I don't envy you. I've been off the market for a while, but not that long. And even in that short time the arrogance and hubris of women has increased 2-3 fold. To see someone as young as 23 dare to have the rudeness to dismiss a request to dance with "time for you to go" only tells me they have been approached so many times their courtesy and etiquette has been obliterated by their egos. And while admittedly this is a sample pulled from St. Petersburg and is not representative of all girls in America, it is once again further proof the wisdom us old fogies have is needed more than ever.

For those of you men who are spoken for, I HIGHLY recommend revisiting the meat market. Not so much to hit on girls, but to be reminded as to just what a pain in the ass it was suffering such brats in your youth, and what a catch you have back at home. I have the benefit of being able to use a platonic vehicle in the form of dancing to test the attitudes of women today, but simply revisiting a meat market or a bar and faux talking to a girl will more than make you appreciate the attitudeless woman who entertained your offer to take her to a movie 10 years ago.

I'll say it again for the cheap seats. I ALWAYS and CONSTANTLY worry that the wisdom we gained from our experiences 10-20 years ago will not apply to the current generation, and in no longer being applicable, turn out to be erroneous, misleading, and thus, detrimental. But the situation has WORSENED, NOT IMPROVED making our advice and experiences all that much more important for the young boys of today.

Stay frosty, boys. Stay the freak frosty.

(Did you like this post? Then go here and buy something)

"Evil" is the "New Good!"

May 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Oh, the sarcasm and cynicism is just priceless.

True, but priceless.

The Man Who Went Galt

May 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is the latest. My buddy conveniently had a flight to the Bahamas. I got to ride co-pilot:

No GDP was produced in the production of these pictures.

Tasteful Risqueness

May 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Again, the ole Captain is NOT against you ladies sending in pictures of you "enjoying 'Enjoying the Decline'."

Get it?

ENJOY Enjoying the Decline???

The pun I mean.

Because the word "enjoy" which is the active verb references the exact same word in the title?

Ya get it? The punchline I mean.

Anyway go buy Enjoy the Decline. Available on Kindle and on Paperback.

And no, I don't know how pretty girls help sell books, but somehow they do.

Danny Impersonates the Captain

May 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I'm at the "Manosphere sleepover" and Danny from 504 decides to break out some rare talent. Specifically a "Captain Capitalism" impersonation.

A huge language warning, but you must listen at least to the point where Bill from Apocalypse Cometh has issues with Danny's dog.

QOTD

May 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"The older I get, the more I realize that having TV in the home is a terrible influence."

Pax Empyrean

Bill Ayers - A Worthless Human Being

May 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is what you get when daddy pays for everything and doesn't hold you to standards, discipline or morality.

A spoiled little brat who becomes a professor.

The Moral Difficulty of Going on Welfare

May 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Kerry Lutz interviewed me today and he hit on a very important psychological and philosophical facet of life many Americans are facing today, specifically, should you collect government assistance.

I have caught much flak for this, especially in the review of my book. Matter of fact, if you were to take away all the reviews that lambast me for my suggestion you collect as much government money as possible, Enjoy the Decline would have a near-perfect 5 star rating. However, this addresses the crux of the situation.

Should you collect government assistance?

The only argument I can portend is that if you can, then hell yes.

The issue is no longer one of morality or independence, but practicality and mortality. The idea of an "independent" person is laughably long gone. How many women's studies professors are there that claim to be "independent women" but still suck from the government tit via their state-subsidized professorships? How many "bankers and finance professionals" are there that only owe their careers to a bail out or FDIC over-regulation that mandates their job? How many government employees have you heard COMPLAIN that they really don't do anything on the job?

This stupid, idiotic, idealistic nostalgia of the 1950's is long gone. Nobody in America has the desire nor loyalty to adhere to some kind of over-arching purpose, or country, and are therefore completely and totally in it for themselves (consciously or not). So stop being naive, stop being idealistic and just take the check when you can.

You must realize that the idiots that populate this society have voted in such societal rules. And that they, in voting in such rules, have absolved yourself of any kind of responsibility you have to this nation or its people. So stop being the sucker and start being the advtantager, because in the end all you will have managed to do

"working hard"

"being a good American"

yada yada yada

is be the host for faux "American" parasites.

Enjoy the decline!

Why You Should NEVER Have a Business Partner

May 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Story 1

Guy I know decides he's going to buy out an old sandwich shop and run it for his retirement plan. He has enough money, but not enough time to manage it. He finds an old buddy from his high school days to manage the shop. Sure enough after mortgaging his house to the tune of $300,000, he finds out his business partner is not managing the shop effectively, they're losing money, and they guy is handing out free food to friends, almost to the point of embezzlement. He has to take out another $150,000 from his house to buy his partner out and now manage the firm on his own which he has not the time to do.

He is depressed. He is miserable. He has wasted the past decade of his life and with nothing to show for it.

Story 2

Another guy I know decides to start a business with a friend. There is are barely any real start up costs, but some and since both are young, these start up costs are significant and thusly shared 50/50. After depleting what little savings they have, one of the partners decides he wants out and demands he get his capital back. The guy I know has to borrow money from his father to buy the guy out, and once again, now has to manage the firm (which the other guy wasn't really doing anyway).

Story 3

A good friend of mine went and worked for this older fellow who was planning on retiring and needed somebody to take over his business. He agreed to train my friend in and invariably give him the company for all the labor and sweat equity my friend put into learning the ropes. My friend received a minimal wage and upon taking over the company would have to pay out 33% of the profits, but be able to keep 67% of the profits for himself until the guy inevitably died.

Unfortunately, the old man had some health problems and completely cashed out his company dishonoring this agreement he and my friend had. My friend only managed to get a minimum wage as he no longer wished to take over an insolvent company whose accounts and assets had been raided.

I could go on, but there is no limit to the number of stories where a partnership was started, one of the partners was a loser, and the whole business went down the toilet because of it. However, it is not so much the entertainment value of such stories that is important, as much as it is the financial lesson everyone should glean from it - going into business with a partner.

NEVER

EVER

EVER

Let me explain why.

If I were to estimate the number of partnership that failed based on my experiences in banking, I would say about 80-85% of them failed. And they failed because ONE partner was a loser and didn't carry his weight.

ALWAYS

ALWAYS

ALWAYS

The reason such a high percentage of partnerships have this "loser partner" is because of the binary nature of partnerships. Losers, by definition, cannot support themselves financially and are always on the cusp of insolvency. Because of this they are constantly coming up with scams. It is important to note the difference between a "scam" and a legitimate business idea as one could claim any loser like myself who can't hold down permanent ~~slavery~~ employment would be a scammer. However, business ideas MAKE MONEY, the purpose or aim of the scammer/loser partner is to merely access somebody else's capital so they can live another year or two without having to work. i.e.-they have no INTENTION of making money, they merely (like Solyndra) need somebody else's capital to finance their "business idea."

This brings in the nature of the second partner - the capital provider.

With the smooth-talking sales guy, looking for a sucker to finance his "idea" they naturally seek out friends, even old long lost acquaintances to finance their scam. These capital providers usually are normal, hard working people who have saved up their pennies and dimes and are looking for a better rate of return than what they're getting on their savings account or 401k. Sure enough they are sold on the idea, cash in their retirement account or the equity in their home and are now financing a sports bar with the "idea guy" running it into the ground and drinking the inventory on the side.

Again, 80-85% of the partnerships I saw had this binary relationship.

The irony, of course, is that this means the majority of partnerships should never have been partnerships in the first place. They should have been sole-proprietors. Not just because you would be jettisoning the loser partner, but out of all the partnerships I've seen 100% of them were not big enough to warrant two people to start them, either for capital or labor. The other person was just completely unnecessary and was extra baggage, if not a risk. Additionally, there is ALWAYS a leadership battle when the ownership of the company is 50/50. It is the WORST of all situations in that the largest single advantage a small company has is that decisions can be made QUICKLY and thus outmaneuver their competitors. I've seen more energy spent bickering over business decisions between two equal shareholders than energy put into managing the business.

The REAL reason people go into partnerships is psychological. Namely they're scared and daunted by the task of embarking on a business venture and thus the perceived risk-sharing seems appetizing. Also, a lot of people are bored and would like somebody to manage the company with. Many friends have become enemies because while they made great friends, they made horrible business partners. The larger point though is that starting a business is not a "fun" thing to do and your psychology should play no role in a financial decision. Additionally, if you do have a genuine business idea, then the last thing you would want to do is SPLIT THE PROFITS WITH OTHER SHAREHOLDERS. Again, it is a FINANCIAL decision.

Now, the reason I bring all of this up is because I know my readership. I know my lieutenants, economists and Cappy Cappites and I know many of you are of the pro-capitalist, unemployable, self-employment types. And because of this you will likely be offered the opportunity to engage in or start a business with another person.

DO NOT DO IT.

Unless the company REALLY needs two people's labor or two people's capital, it's best that it is started, managed and owned by ONE person, be it you or the other guy. The risks of having your savings plundered by some scam artist, not to mention your profits halved should the business prove successful, is just not worth it.

The End of STEM

May 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Looks like there are 3 graduates in STEM for every 2 jobs in the market. Employers also seem to be hell-bent on importing cheaper STEM graduates from foreign countries.

Solution - default on our debt to these countries since our government and employers prefer foreigners over their own citizens. It's the least we can do and it's actually economically justified.

In the meantime it looks like the trades and minimalism is the route to go for most.

I Link So I Can Drink

May 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Writing takes effort, thought, planning, and wit.

All of which is severely impaired if you just want to get hammered during the daytime, play video games and enjoy the decline.

So I link instead!

$6.3 trillion for illegal aliens. Though the argument of illegal immigration is not a financial one. It's a philosophical one. If everybody in the world can come here and not adhere to American culture, then why have a country? Let's just be an open "place to hang" for the whole world and us citizens can work hard to support everybody else in the world because it's compassssssionnnnaaaaate.

"The Lawyer Bubble."

Why Glenn, WHY??? Why did you lower your standards and write for USA Today??? (didn't even know they were still around).

I said it before, and I'll say it again, CHARACTER TRUMPS DIVERSITY. There is NOTHING valuable in diversity unto itself. It is a leftist scam to split the country along racial lines, create victim groups they can bribe with money for votes, and a way to excuse criminal/unacceptable behavior if the perpetrator happens to have a trait of a victim class.

This is your bed. You are now allowed to sleep in it.

When You Have to Divorce Yourself from the Country

May 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"...don't think your country is too good to follow that path. There's nothing magical about a patch of dirt that prevents it from such ends. The Roman Republic was just as prominent and successful as the United States. Look what happened."

Some pretty heavy writing.

On a related note, again, the 50's were superior and you will wish we had such a culture today.

Making Euthanasia Fun

May 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"For example, Clarey is the only guy I know who can write about euthanasia and make it seem like a real fun time."

a review by Matt Forney

Why I Throw My Hands Up In Futility

May 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's kind of like cancer. After a while the body just gives up because it's coming from all sides and it's obvious the host no longer has the will to live.

From 0 to Assault Charges in 30 seconds

May 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In a previous post of mine I left out a lot of detail because the nature of the post required it. However, there was a sub-story of legitimate worth that would have detracted from the primary one and it is now that I wish to share this sub-story with you.

Without going into detail, my friend and I were at a downtown party. This is one of those deals where they close off the street and in a municipal politician's Keynesian wet-dream attract tourists and locals to support the local economy. I got wind of a salsa club half a block from the "sectioned off block" and then set off to find some dance partners for me and my buddy.

I approached I believe 5 different groups of girls/women with the honest and polite intention of merely scoring some dance partners. However, one stood out because of the lightning speed at which the situation deteriorated to the point I knew to step back otherwise the law would get involved.

At a distance they looked to be upper 20's maybe even early 30's. But as I approached improved vision showed me they were younger 20's. Already committed to the flight path I followed through and made my approach.

"Howdy!" I said, only to receive blank stares from the three girls that populated this group.

"Me and my buddy are looking for some dance partners. Found a salsa joint just a block south of here and wondering if you girls would be interested."

Two of the three girls were silent, but the third (and prettiest) one spoke up with such an arrogant tone that it stirred an agitated darwinian response in my psyche.

"Ummm...no. I'm not interested in dancing with you."

I paused for what seemed to be an eternity, but (in hindsight) recouped probably lightning fast to this condescending response.

"Who says I'm asking you?" as I put my arm around her slightly overweight, but shy redhead friend. "I'm asking the redhead."

The two silent girls were...well...silent. But the blond, obviously insulted by my "game on" response, got angry.

"Nice try. It's time for you to leave."

Somewhat angered myself I said, "What if they (referring to her two shy friends) want to dance? We only need two, not you."

And that's when the situation really started to deteriorate.

"You better get out of here or I'll kick your ass."

And her face was serious.

It wasn't that I was intimidated by a dime-a-dozen cutesy 20 something girl, it was the audacity any woman (girl really) would threaten to kick my ass for what was a request to take her and her friends salsa dancing.

Again, it seemed like an eternity.

To recoup from the outlandishness I just got threatened by a 20 something child, and to assess the now rapidly escalating volatile situation, and to predict where the current path was taking us (me to jail, her to the plaintiff's desk) and to concoct the precise words that needed saying, seemed to take forever. But again in hindsight, it was lightning fast.

"Yeah, you and your 90 pound ass." as I then proceeded to look away and disengage.

This exchange transpired in what was no more than 30 seconds, but it was a very valuable 30 seconds that not only I learned from, but every young man should learn from as well. A fair amount of American women have been brought up so spoiled, entitled, impolite and easily-offended, there is now a HUGE risk is merely approaching women.

I'm not saying not to approach.

I'm not saying not to make your play.

I am saying that girls today, with society spoiling them for every one of their 20 youthful years, can go from 0 to "Assault Charges" in literally under 30 seconds. And you NEED TO CONSTANTLY ASSESS THE SITUATION and know when your innocent attempt to score a dance partner is RAPIDLY turning into an unwanted advance from a guy and thus an excuse to feed the "drama-queen monster" a reason to file a faux complaint of harassment to the local constable.

I hate to sound old, but this REALLY DIDN'T HAPPEN IN MY DAY. At least the Gen X'er women would politely turn you down or just say no. It never, once in my (probably) thousands of approaches deteriorated to the point so quickly that a violent event would have consequented in under 30 seconds.

But there is another lesson I want all of you to pull from this.

And it is not to brag, but to clearly paint the picture of what was really going on.

Me - salsa dancing, ballroom dancing, fossil hunting, economist who writes books, goes on great motorcycling escapades blah blah blah.

My buddy - millionaire pilot who lives DT St. Petersburg, can fly wherever he wants, whenever he wants, drives a luxury car, etc. etc.

Both - in great shape, financially better off than most, etc. etc.

How much do you want to bet these girls in 15 years from now in their late 30's, early 40's are bitching and whining "where are all the good men" when there were two accomplished (by the veritable definition) men

OFFERING TO FREAKING TEACH AND TAKE THEM SALSA DANCING!!!!???

Again, there are times where I wonder if maybe if we men are in the wrong, and our advice no longer applies, but it is instances like these that only reforge and reinforce there is a war on, and we didn't start it.

But by god and by damn we will finish it.

The Mathematical Impossibility of Retirement

May 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Permit me some really rough mathematics.

In my introductory course to basic personal finance and investing, one of the first things I have my students do is go to this website and calculate how much they need to save for retirement. It's a good exercise for everybody to go through, but the primary point is that (if you tinker with the calculator) you'll realize each person needs roughly $1 million in savings to retire.

With 6.5 billion people in the world that ads up to $6.5 quadrillion (the number after trillion) in required savings to invest.

Now, I'll grant you "retirement planning" and things like 401k's and RRSP's are really more of a western phenomenon and most people in 2nd and 3rd world countries don't have retirement plans, so let's just say the roughly 1 billion people in countries where they do have some kind of retirement program need to save up for retirement.

That brings the total amount of required savings down to $1 quadrillion.

Just one problem.

There isn't $1 quadrillion worth of stocks or bonds in the entire world. Matter of fact, according to the World Federation of Exchanges, there's only about $55 trillion in equity and $82 trillion in bonds, leaving us with $137 trillion in securities, only 14% of the total amount required to finance the retirements of 1 billion people (it is duly noted here there are other securities, however, bar commodities, things like mutual funds and ETF's are merely compositions of stocks and bonds. I admit we could throw in the commodities market and REIT's, but you'll soon see the point I'm trying to make).

There are some other problems as well.

First, the majority of the $137 trillion in securities is owned by the richer classes. It is not equally spread out across the 1 billion westerners. So the average 401k schmoe is less likely to have the $1 million in his account.

Second, though primarily held by 1st world nations, some of that $137 trillion IS held by 2nd and 3rd world countries. In other words, the above optimistically assumes all the stocks of the Shanghai stock exchange are held by westerners solely for their precious little 401k plans which simply is not the case (heck, foreigners hold most of our debt anyway).

Third, the bond market has a ton of debt that is, frankly, never going to be paid back and be defaulted upon. $16 trillion (intra government holdings duly noted) alone of which is the US federal government and roughly an equivalent amount in those kick-the-can-down-the-road socialist utopias in Europe that are currently already defaulting.

So of that $137 trillion, can we roughly assume only a third of it is going to go to help finance people's retirement plans? So roughly $46 trillion, i.e. 95% short of the amount necessary for people to retire.

Now there is one other variable I have not accounted for (and, truthfully, am having some difficulty figuring this one out, but I think I have it pegged, though would appreciate any criticism or thought on it)

Not everybody is going to retire on the same day.

As the 401k Clergy will rush to point out,

"See!!! See!!! The stock market goes up though! You're not assuming any growth! You're assuming everybody cashes in today when they will in fact amortize out and we all know the stock market will go up by the magical amount to pay for everybody's retirement! See!! See!!!"

And they're right. Not everybody is retiring today and the markets will grow. So let's do a little more (admittedly rough) math. The magical $46 trillion needs to grow into $1 quadrillion to pay for the current 1 billion westerners' retirement plans. And while these people vary in ages from new borns to nearly dead, assume 35 years for the markets to grow (half of people's life expectancy to roughly approximate the old and young). We'll also optimistically assume an 8% annualized growth rate, meaning the market will increase roughly 15 fold in those 35 years. Even with this idealistic scenario (where governments never default, corporations provide annualized returns of 12%, there's no inflation, and Obama's Magical Job Unicorn farts out jobs), the total global market capitalization for stocks and bonds will be....

$665 trillion.

Still about 35% short of the total.

Now, again, this was VERY rough mathematics and I'm sure somebody will find something wrong (and please do inform me if you do), but using this very rough litmus test it shows once again conventional retirement planning is flawed. The amount of growth necessary in the capital markets will not be sufficient enough to pay for everybody's retirement. And it is not even so much the rate of growth in the prices of stocks and bonds will be inadequate, but rather the increase in earnings, profits, dividends, and solvency of bond issuers will not be there to legitimize or rationalize current prices. In English, this means as people flood the market with retirement dollars P/E ratios will go up, dividend yields will go down, and financial deadbeats (in the form of most western governments) will continue to borrow money at low rates they will never be able to pay back.

People who are planning for retirement need to consider other forms of retirement beyond their IRA and 401k's. They need to look at skills, property, commodities or just working till they're dead. Not just because they didn't save up for retirement, but because the prospects for growth just isn't there.

Did you like this article?
Were you intellectually stimulated?
Do you now have something to talk about at the water cooler, thereby impressing your friends and making your more attractive to the opposite sex?

Then buy one of Aaron's books!

Worthless - The Young Person's Indispensable Guide to Choosing the Right Major
Enjoy the Decline - Accepting and Living with the Death of the United States
Behind the Housing Crash - Do you hate bankers? You'll hate them more after this!
Top Shelf - The "best of" series of Captain Capitalism. Why search the blog when this will do?

All are available on paperback and Kindle.

Not Good for My Tornado Chasing

May 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Lousy stupid tornadoes.

This only PROVES my 100% correct theory that the reason I have yet to see a tornado is not because of bad luck or a lack of them, but rather they know I'm looking for them and they are AFRAID OF ME! And thus, when they know I'm coming they COWARDLY retreat back up into the clouds!

Sling-Shot Religion

May 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An interesting piece by Athol Kay about a couple where one of the spouses turned "religious" and was born again after 20 years of being anti-religious. This caused some stress in the relationship, not just because of the philosophical or religious change in the spouse, but because it now brings on the specter of one person having a higher moral authority over the other.

While the piece is one of advice, it also happens to be a perfect example of what I like to call "Sling Shot Religion."

I have not mentioned this term before (because I literally just came up with it in the shower 3 minutes ago), but I have addressed it amorphously across multiple posts in the past. Namely, it is my complaint against and disgust with people who abuse a religion, joining one not to praise a god or something altruistic as that, as much as it is an ulterior and self-serving purpose (business connections, finding a spouse, etc.). But what I could not peg down was a term that would describe people who abuse religion to give them presumed "moral superiority" over others.

I was originally intending "leverage," but I liked the phrase "sling shot" because it references how various satellites and space vehicles use the mass and gravity of a planet to "sling shot" and go faster for its own benefit. i.e.-Voyager 1 didn't go to Jupiter to visit Jupiter (well, it did) as much as it used Jupiter's gravitational force to fling it out into interstellar space. And there are people in all religions who are "sling shots" and not genuine practitioners.

The problem with sling-shot religious people though goes beyond merely joining a church or a mosque to make friends or drum up some business. They are particularly cowardly people, sometimes outright evil, because they crave power AND are willing to resort to hypocritical means to get it.

The church, for example, has trouble with young men becoming pastors because majoring in "divinity" is not only easy, but you immediately get authority as a pastor (whether you believe in the religion or not). Many pastors abuse their position, not just reveling in their position, but many times using the bible or the religion to excuse unfair behavior against others or preferential behavior towards themselves.

The born-again christian girl is another example. I don't have to go into the number of girls I dated that would use "Jesus" for any number of non-religious reasons. "I can't kiss you until we're engaged." "I can lay here in your bed in just my skivvies but we're not making out." "Unless you pray with me and go to church, we can't date." "We can't have sex, but we can do anything else." Again, these sling-shoters don't really believe in the religion, but enjoy having the benefit of a rationalization hamster in the form of a holy script to lord power over you and excuse their own immoral behavior.

In short, much like "crusaderism" I wanted to point out "sling-shot" religious folk because these are bad people and are a threat to your happiness and freedom. It's just that in order to avoid the threats these people pose, the first step is in identifying them, explaining what they're doing and how they think, and explaining why they do such things.

Saving Another Soul

May 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From a reader:

I heard about you on the Tom Leykis Show and I immediately picked up your book! "Worthless" was the most valuable investment I ever made!Now I don't have to fear ending up like my Leftist sister who graduated with an Anthropology degree & now drowning in debt with no job! I am also obsessed with your YouTube videos and I agree with you on virtually all of your topics! You are one of my 4 biggest role models along with Tom Leykis, Adam Carolla, and Dennis Prager. I'd be thrilled if I could stay in touch you & write to your advice every once in a while. Thanks!

-Brice in California

I appreciate Brice's e-mail, but it also reminded me of a little story I need to share.

I was at the Orlando International Airport waiting on standby. Since my plane wasn't going to be coming in for a while, I was looking for one of the coveted electrical outlets to plug my phone and computer into. As I scoured the area I walked past a young lady who I believe to be a janitor or baggage person. She was talking to another co-worker and I caught a segment of the conversation:

"I know it doesn't pay well, but I getting my degree in Anthropology. You have to follow your dreams."

I wanted to rip her a new one, telling her to stop being so idiotic and naive. That she was never going to achieve anything of note or worth, that there were a billion naive young 20 somethings just like her, and that this lousy job she had was going to be the only job she could get, even after completing college.

Of course, this would have been impolite and probably land me in trouble. So instead I walked up to her and asked:

"Excuse me, do you know where there are any electrical outlets?"

She said, "Yes, there's one down the hallway on the left."

I figured it was the anthropology major's equivalent of "Do you want fries with that?"

Regardless, look, don't have your child grow up to become the janitor at the airport with $75,000 in student debt.

Just have your child grow up to become the janitor.

Not everybody has to go to college and you only hurt your children pushing them into a worthless major that they're not going to use. There's nothing wrong with being a janitor or a baggage guy.

There IS something wrong being financially crippled because you or your parents were a moron and you ended up majoring in crap.

Associates Degree in Heavy Metal

May 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

From our British Agent in the field.

Again, I REALLY should be sipping a cocktail on a beach for the rest of my days as EVERY student and parent in America should be reading this book.

How Hyphenated American Studies Hurt Minorities

May 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When the Heathens Come Over the Hills

May 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

don't expect me or any other guy to lift a finger except for our loved ones who proved they are worth saving and risking our lives for.

Latest Epidsode of The Clarey Podcast

May 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In this episode Aaron showcases his new recording equipment and software as he talks about how he'd rather have a celebrity roast than a funeral, how church was so boring he actually read the bible, why everybody should write a book, how it's sad men can no longer ask women to dance, and that yes, he is indeed good looking.

Beyond Help

May 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Arguably the single largest complaint or criticism I received about "Enjoy the Decline" was that unless you were a single bachelor under 40 who didn't have kids it wouldn't apply to you. Of course, this is not true as the book is actually quite family-oriented, so much so I think it would surprise most of my regular readers just how "pro-family" I am in the book. However, the criticism did highlight an aspect of human psychology that I found interesting, specifically its inability to accept "being totally screwed."

Understand when I say, "being totally screwed" I'm not talking about a temporary condition where after you make a couple course changes and strive a bit you are back on track. I'm talking about life changing decisions that cripple you in one way or another for the rest or the majority of your life.

So for example, let's say you did some drugs back when you were 14, the cops busted you, and at that moment you said, "Dude, I am so screwed."

Are you really screwed?

Sure enough, though the sinking feeling of panic that set in your heart suggested otherwise, three years later you graduate from high school, go to college, and when you're 29 you laugh at it realizing how inconsequential it was.

Now let's say you're 14 and you get pregnant or impregnate somebody.

OK, NOW YOU'RE SCREWED.

And the reason why is that is at minimum 20 years of your life gone, spent raising your child.

For the most part "severe, life-crippling screwed" comes from having children you can't afford. Matter of fact, I believe this so much, I believe you should need to have a license before you start spawning children. However, there are other stupid mistakes you can make that are also life-crippling.

Majoring in something stupid and going into debt for it.
Buying a house or cars you can't afford.
Racking up credit card debt to the point you have to file for bankruptcy Marrying somebody who is abusive
etc. etc.

These life-crippling decisions and the consequences of them cannot be overcome in a few short years. Matter of fact, they are decisions that will punish you for the rest of your life and only until you die will you be relieved of their consequences.

So my question is this:

"What do you want me to do about it?"

Not so much to my critics of "Enjoy the Decline" but to people like this who have obviously screwed over their lives so much there is no hope whatsoever they will ever recover from it, but then complain when society can't bail them out. By definition being "beyond hope" means NOBODY and NOTHING can help you. So whether it's a book like "Enjoy the Decline" or all the "moral support" you're going to get from your family and friends, NOTHING is going to unscrew you out of your situation.

In short what I think it is, is the inability of the human brain to accept that it's life is over. Matter of fact, it's probably even worse. That it's still going to be alive, but have to suffer a life of strife, agony, suffering and pain and not enjoy the care-free happy life they were expecting. And when faced with accepting such a prospect, the average human brain simply doesn't. It denies it's going to have to suffer for the rest of its days and complains about the lack of solutions. However, it also fails to realize there ARE NO solutions. The only solution is that they will have to suffer, a prospect political promises backed up by lot of redistributed wealth and borrowed Chinese money has numbed most minds to.

Regardless, in the end, the solution is very simple - don't make stupid decisions that will cripple you for the rest of your life. Don't have more kids than you can afford. Don't major in stupid subjects. Don't expect government to support you. Don't have kids when you are a teenager. And for god's sake, don't complain to me when my book can't work miracles by helping the helpless.

Ode to the Ladies of The Manosphere

May 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Stingray was kind enough to link to me. If you love the ladies of the Manosphere, I suggest you visit her site. Also if you are one of the lovely ladies yourself, you may like the podcast she linked to.

Why They Never Lose Weight

May 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Nobody likes fat.

Sorry, that's a truth, if you don't like it I'm sure there are some Oprah youtube videos spewing lies that will make you happy.

But if you wish to live with us in the real world, nobody likes fat.

It's disgusting.

It's unhealthy.

It damages relationships.

And it damages the host.

However, during one of my long days working by myself, allowed to ponder the meanings of life, I was trying to figure out what was the resistance to people losing weight when the solution is well known and obvious. And I think I have figured it out via economics.

Understand when you are asking somebody to change something about them be it losing weight, giving up smoking, increasing muscle mass, etc., you are not merely asking them to hit the gym, watch the calories, or give up smoking for that month. You are asking them to do that for the rest of their lives.

This prospect, whether consciously realized or not, is daunting to the brain because you aren't asking that person to suffer temporarily for the next month. You are asking them to dedicate a significant amount of their time for the rest of their days towards to something that their previous behavior proved they did not enjoy. In other words it's the equivalent to asking somebody to take on a part time job when they really don't want to.

In this regard I feel a little for my fellow overweight people or scrawny folk because who really wants to spend more of their lives working at what is effectively a part time job they won't enjoy? I hate lifting weights, and if it weren't for MP3 players I probably would hate running too. The question is whether the gains from engaging in such behavior (higher social status, better looks, better pride, better/more sex, etc.) is worth the cost (mind-numbing working out, opportunity cost to time spent running, lousy food, etc. for the rest of your life) and this cannot be answered for everybody. However, for most people, that answer is yes.

I'll say it again for the cheap seats, if I had spent a fraction of the time I spent going to night clubs and trying to chat up girls and instead just hit the gym I would have been immensely more successful in my early years. If you set down the booze and video games so you can knock out 3 miles a day, not only will your physical looks improve, so will your health. And ladies the fact still remains that the ONLY thing a guy can first ascertain about you is your physical beauty. The list goes on, but unless you REALLY hate working out (and I mean hate on a level of hating hipsters and child molesters) it is in your best interests to lift weights, hit the treadmill, watch what you eat and improve your physique.

Yes, it is going to suck. And yes, it is something you'll have to do for the rest of your life. But it will be worth it in the end. And besides, if you find out it isn't worth it, then you can always go back to the status quo as it is very easy to get fat.

Part time job.

Modern Day College Students

May 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"I continued to google search various phrases and sentences that seemed too well crafted for the ability of my students and found out that out of 92 students, 89 had plagiarized.

The next day I ripped into them. I lectured them about how plagiarism was completely unacceptable, they would all get F's and blah blah blah, they weren't listening. And sure enough I got called into the principle's office.

The "dean" then lectured me about how I was overly harsh on the students and that they "didn't know" they weren't supposed to plagiarize. He then went on to read complaints he took in a survey from my students about my performance, one of which was a complaint about this ever so slight speech impediment I have (I cough due to allergies more frequently than the average person). I was to also let all the students write a new paper. I was dumbfounded.

I was to apologize to these students for their plagiarism. Only in a 2 year degree mill.

It was here that I realized that if I was going to keep my job I was just going to have to play ball and pass these kids no matter what. But the trick was to show them still who was boss because by this time they thought they owned me and had won. Never mind their degree would be worthless. Never mind with that kind of attitude they would get fired in half a second. In their little minds they "won" and now life was just going to bend over for them, if not the dean would always be able to save them and would bend life over for them.

But I would get my revenge. For the next class in the next semester was statistics."

I'm Not Simon Cowell, I'm Aaron Clarey

May 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I rarely post people's comments. This is in large part because I am lazy and it takes effort. However, every once in a while somebody will say something absolutely brilliant that it mandates I post it.

This is the opposite.

This is a response from (what I believe to be) a drunk 34 year old woman. She is responding to this post from several years back (emphasis mine). I have done a copy and paste job so you can see her post in true, unedited form.

I cannt stand guys like you. You think ur all that and she was probably interested in you because, I don't know UR ok looking and near her age?? What makes you think you deserve a model in her 20's? Who are you? Simon bleeping Cowell? Wouldn't you rather have a women who is mature and experienced and confident because she now KNOWS who she is not like some flaky college girl and since your talking about marriage is must be on your mind so a women in her 30's is looking to settle down*. She and already* got the partying out of her system and WANTS to get married*. So go ahead and be like that. It's your loss not mine I'm 34 and there R still LOTS guys to date. I post a dating profile and get 50 responses in 20 minutes. So I KNOW I'm still wanted and by the way u know whats funny you went to all the trouble of that* making that graph and I didn't even bother to read it. :)

Normally I would dissect this, but I have a feeling this is meat too tempting to the hungry lions so I'm going to let you guys light this one up.

Have fun boys and girls!

PS - And for cripes sake, with the questioning of my looks thing again! Can't my critics at least look me up on teh interwebs to see if I'm just an ugly, pissed off loser in his mother's basement? Here's a picture of me ~~teaching a salsa dance class~~ in my "mother's basement" playing video games and watching porn because I can't find no girlz. Cripes.

BE THE BEST YOU CAN BE

The Bachelor Tax Cometh

May 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If it isn't paying property taxes while you have no children or paying higher income taxes and not being able to deduct/itemize your non-existent children it will be something else where other people want to tax the childless bachelor.

Enjoy the decline.

QOTD

May 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Hamsters gotta hamst!"

Financial and Economic Wisdom

May 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was talking with Danny from 504 when in Florida and he was telling me how he knew nothing about economics and that's why he liked my site. I often forget that a lot of people come here for the economic knowledge and that, though, logical and self-improving, the Manosphere doesn't really have a "financial advice" hub making me the "resident economist" of sorts.

He wanted to know where to get educated on finance, investing, economics etc., and while the internet is certainly a place for self-learning, there are couple class and resources I've developed over the years that may be of benefit for those of you looking for financial advice.

#1 The Blog

If you look in the top left of my blog there is a little search box that will search my entire blog for posts on whatever financial topic you are looking for. Understand this blog is NOT designed to be like a class, but over the past 7 years chances are if there's a topic you're interested in, I have at least written about it. This is a good start to get some free information.

#2 My Introductory Finance Class

Many years ago, 13, I wrote a basic introductory finance class for an online company. I was younger then and though I've improved in my writing, it was basic enough and I was young enough that it REALLY resonates with students. It is a BASIC, INTRODUCTORY COURSE to investing and financial planning. It is ALSO "conventional" meaning it doesn't go into the prospects of the government confiscating your IRA's, the collapse of social security, etc. (though I do touch on those things).

Yes, it costs money, but if you're looking for a place to start and to have a good road map providing you context for future learning, I recommend dropping the bucks on it.

HOWEVER SINCE THIS IS A CLASS OF ANOTHER COMPANY YOU WILL BE EXPECTED TO BEHAVE AND NOT BE POLITICAL. These are real college classes, they just happen to be online. You can find the closest class to your location here:

Stocks, Bonds, and Investing: Oh, My![image]

#3 My Stock Analysis and Valuation Class

This is the class I originally wanted to write. Not everybody is going to have an interest in investing in stocks, HOWEVER, in all honesty I would have to say this is the best class I've ever seen that teaches people about basic accounting and how to read financial statements. You may not want to invest in the stock market, but it is a GREAT skill to be able to learn how to read an income statement and a balance sheet. Again, it costs money, and AGAIN YOU WILL BE ON YOUR BEST BEHAVIOR, but if you are looking to go beyond basic finance, this is the class to take.

The Analysis and Valuation of Stocks[image]

Additionally, if there are any specific classes you are interested in, let me know because I have access to their entire catalogue of classes and can post them here.

#4 Khan's Academy

I have not checked in there in a while, but I would surmise by now Khan's Academy has hopefully started to branch out into the finance, investing, economics world. Last I checked however, it was still pretty IT/Science focused. Regardless, keep an eye on them for future free classes.

#5 Books like "Economics in One Lesson," the "Books for Dummies" series, even Rich Dad Poor Dad are great resources for people looking to get by on the cheap at the library. I also plan on a future book on economics, so keep your eyes peeled for that.

#6 Libertyclassroom.com. It's a classroom, it's liberating, it's libertyclassroom!

#7 THis was sent to me by Wall Street Oasis. Some good stuff here too:

- Anatomy of the 10-K - one of the most high quality posts we've had on the site, written by a hedge fund portfolio manager
- MD at top HF invited me to have dinner...should I go?, and part 2 (the follow up) - a tell all story from a female grad student who was invited for dinner by a managing director to "discuss career opportunities"
- How to Develop a Personality - a great story on keeping/growing your personality while spending most of your hours at the office

Hopefully this will provide those of you interested in personal financial management with some options and help your future financial endeavors.

Cpt.

The Enslavement and Imprisonment of Western Children

May 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Once again, for the cheap seats, I will make my claim that I do not hate children. Matter of fact I will go so far to say I probably like children more than the average American or western parent in the fact I've actually taken the time to assess whether I would even make for a good father before fornicating and bringing innocent little souls into this world only to suffer under my poor and reluctant parenting. I will even go further and claim that unlike most adults today, I have not forgotten what it was like to be a child and therefore empathize with them.

However, in being an adult I have the added benefit of hindsight and a birds-eye view. I can look back with adult eyes and assess, analyze and view kids today as well as look at my adult peers and see how they interact with children. And the unfortunately I've concluded our (adults') relationship with today's children is not so much of one of love, kindness and discipline, but rather one of convenience, advantage and slavery.

We literally enslave and imprison our children for our benefit.

For example, take religion.

I don't think I ever ran into one religious adult, yesteryear or today, who uses religion as an optional tool to instill virtue, morality, and discipline in a child. A tool of which can be discarded or kept at the child's discretion when that child reaches an age of which they can determine their own religious beliefs. Instead, the majority of instances the child is used as an asset for the religion. A borderline annuity of future collection plate donations, that is brainwashed before it is even cognizant or sentient, and then guilt-tripped into further compliance with the threat of eternal damnation and excommunication from the church. And before you start making accusations of cynicism, ask yourself this question - have you ever seen or forced your own kid to participate in the Christmas service at church? Forcing them to memorize hymns they don't understand and play the manger scene?

Was that for their benefit, god's benefit, or yours?

That's what I thought.

If religion doesn't convince you, just look at how we treat "having children" today. While, yes, I will admit, there are many loving parents who truly love their children and have them for all the right reasons, sadly they account for the minority. This is evidenced by the percent of parents who actually bring up their own children versus outsourcing it to a third party. Be you ghetto/trailer trash, getting knocked up in your teen years and outsourcing the upbringing of your child to the state or you be uppity higher class folk who pay a nanny to ~~take away the inconvenience of raising your own child so you can pursue your own career~~ raise your child, let us be very clear what you are stating with your actions. You view your child as a physical asset. A thing to "have. A cute little toy that you do not credit with having its own personality, intelligence, consciousness or soul. It is no different than a luxury SUV or an accidental consequence for fornicating without protection. Regardless of whether you are using it as a social status object or a reason to collect more in WIC/welfare, it is clear once again the child is there to serve you. It is a slave, it is a prisoner.

Finally, if none of that convinces you (or perhaps none of it applies to you), just because the parents may not be unconsciously enslaving their children, doesn't mean the rest of society isn't. Namely the education industry.

If there is an example of how we abuse, enslave, and take advantage of our children, the United States' (and most other western nations') educational system is it. From the age of 5, we have our country's WORST people act like they're educating them, when in reality they are doing far worse.

At best they are baby sitting the tykes (thankfully taking those ~~crying, liability-brats~~ much-loved-children off of our hands, which is why very few parents ever complain). But worse they are typically (though not always) our most incompetent and lazy citizens looking for an easy "career." Too lazy to learn a skill or a trade, millions of worthless and lazy people declare "education" as a major not because they nobly care about the children, but like the idea of 3 months off, avoiding math at all costs, and being practically unfireable. But the absolute worst is the brainwashing that occurs by these despicable people. Indifferent about providing a genuine education to these children and preparing them for the real world, members of the education industry are first and foremost interested in brainwashing the little tykes into voting for future socialist causes, namely, more money for education, thereby guaranteeing their own financial futures.

However, the slavery is not merely relegated to K-12. Not by a long shot. There's still blood in those bodies that need to be sucked out and by god, we're going to get every drop.

First, you have every leftist, educator and teacher union thug pushing for the expansion of "pre-K-12" and "early childhood development. Such efforts have already manifested themselves in the form of "Head Start" and the multitude of before and after school activities that are nothing more than breakfast, lunch and dinner programs. Leftists and socialists are only more than happy to have the government take on more and more of the role of parent as it further secures future income for their ~~racket~~ "profession." And lazy, pathetic-excuses-for-parents are only more than happy to have ~~that little crying bastard~~ their beloved child outsourced to the state. Besides, "it's for the chilllllldrreeeeeennnnnn." And there's no amount of other people's money and government indoctrination that's too good for them, right?

Second, it's not like the slavery ends at 18. Not by a long shot. Matter of fact this is when the child-enslavement kicks into high gear. For after 13 years of indoctrination you can actually sell these young skulls full of mush on the idea of going into debt to the tune of $100,000 for worthless degrees that have no hope of ever providing a positive rate of return. They are so deluded and misled they will actually spend anywhere from 4-8 years of their lives listening to worthless people spew worthless liberal arts and humanities, and they give these vermin their money.

Finally, as the slave starts to approach 30, and has jumped through all the hurdles, giving the adults and the education/enslavement industry the best years of their lives, $100,000 in tuition, and unwavering blind brainwashed loyalty, they finally have nothing left to give. They have been sucked dry of all their youth, all their money, all their energy and creativity, and thusly are...

kicked to the curb.

The adults no longer have any use for them (and the real world certainly doesn't). They have served their purpose - to entertain and support other adults. Besides, there are always newer and younger batches of slave-children being fed into the machine. This child-slave has nothing left to offer and is thus discarded.

Normally, this would enrage and anger most slaves. However, there is one, final ingenious trick the slave masters played on their young victims. They instilled in their children slaves unassailable egos.

With 13 years of K-12 brainwashing, as well as 4-8 years more in college, the education-slave industry lied to the children-slaves. They told them "how great they were" how "intelligent they were" and how they were bound for "great things if they just followed their heart and the money would follow." And when faced with the reality that most of them had;

1. No skills or trades that were employable
2. No future job prospects
3. Trillions of dollars in student debts
4. Just got suckered their egos can't handle it. Why, they're just so gosh darn intelligent! Don't you know she has a 3.85 GPA in sociology?! And instead of owning up to their mistakes for believing the BS the education-enslavement industry, they do what they were trained to do - lash out at the enemies of their indoctrinators.

"Evil big businesses."
"IT's the corporations MAAAAN!!!"
"It's George Bush!"
"It's white males/oppression/racism/sexism!"

So brainwashed are they, they will even continue to vote for socialist programs that mortgage their futures such as social security, national health care, medicare, etc. and some are so brainwashed, they merely double down hoping to become a slave master themselves by working for the education-enslavement industry.

Most, however, with time, will realize when they're 40, 50, even 60 that they are the ones who are to blame for believing the lies the adults told them.

But frankly, I don't care about them because by that time they are no longer children. They're adults.

Adults who should known better.

Enjoy the decline!

Boris

May 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Coming this summer!

Curse His Velvety Voice

May 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Davis Aurini has finished the recording of "Worthless" on tape. Will be available soon. But if you want to hear his "made for radio" voice he has put up the first chapter for all to hear. Of course, it is fair that I warn you in advance, his voice is like heroin to the ladies. You girls will not be able to resist and will be begging for more.

You're Better Off Playing Video Games and Drinking in Your Mom's Basement...

May 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

than majoring in the liberal arts.

And I'm not joking about that either. You WILL be better off.

Bachelor Work Camps, The Soccer Mom Myth and More

May 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

on this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

A Feminist's Dream Come True

May 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ah, yes. Argentina.

A woman in power (by her own merits of course, not because she was married to the previous president).

A compliant leftist parliament.

Hot latin guys.

And non-western culture.

A feminist's dream come true.

What could possibly go wrong in this wondrous utopia!?

Heh heh. Just you wait.

QOTD

May 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Regarding the post "The Enslavement and Imprisonment of Western Children"

"I am from an older generation than most of your readers. We had children because remote controls for TVs were not invented yet."

Using Politics to Compensation for Lack of Talent

May 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is the latest and last installment of "Confessions of a Worthless Degreed Person" our interview series with Jorge Gonzales.

Not that the other episodes weren't interesting, but this one was my favorite in that two very interesting observations were made.

1. 100%, not "most," not "the majority" 100% ALL of the women in his college were leftists and liberals. It is proof of several things

   a. These young kids are nowhere near as independent minded as they like to think they are
   b. They are obviously brainwashed
   c. The vehement responses he got when painting something "politically incorrect" only further proves my "Leftist Zombie" theory.

2. I was amazed how you can no longer just make a work of art. It MUST have a political meaning behind it and it MUST be leftist. This is of course nothing but a ruse to overshadow the fact none of these "artists" have any talent. None of them can be considered "artists."

It's very much worth a listen despite the poor audio quality as it shows you just how far and psychotic this part of life has become since leftists have taken it over.

Before You Major in Law…

May 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

consider this first.

Some Very Practical Advice for Young Men

May 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And you young men should listen to your elders so you have a better life than we did!

And That's Why I'm Packing an AR 15

May 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Correct.

Epic Fail in Tornado Chasing

May 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I have returned from a day of chasing tornadoes. None of which were brave enough to set foot on the planet while I was driving around. Just further proof it is tornadoes that are afraid of me.

Though a member of the Cappysphere seems to have suffered some tornado damage.

Nannies Aren't Mommies

May 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our British Agent in the Field:

Good morning Captain! I just had my 79th birthday, I am a woman born in England with ancestors who came from other places as well. I very much enjoyed your piece on children and would have written a comment but prefer to speak directly to you. I was brought up by a trained Nanny and in unusual circumstances, that is, a war which involved moving from place to place and living on the minimum amount. Nothing can be worse for the developing mind and soul than being put in a group of other children supposedly supervised by a woman with no personal interest in them. Many women can be good nursing mothers because nature and the hormones kick in here. Later one is in the absolute power of one person who is most often NOT INTERESTED AND SELF ABSORBED. I do not speak from experience here but from observation. I am an historian by training who was lucky enough to make a living as a librarian\archivist here in North America. Thanks to Vivien, my nurse/ nanny/ governess, a Methodist by the way, I was instructed in the basics of the Christian faith [I am now a convert to Catholicism] and a sane person [well, maybe], my sister owes her very life to this woman. Growiing up with adults dying all around one for something greater than themselves plus some knowledge of God gives one the core belief that it is all for a purpose. Well, enough! I could go on and on as my friends ofteen remark... Most important: Children are not here to be our slaves and playthings as you say.
Thank you!

The Corruption of the Economics Profession

May 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From a reader, answers I provided are italicized. Figured this may address many questions people have about velocity, why there isn't inflation, the corruption of the economics profession, and let's not forget ripping apart the parasite classes of society:

Hello Captain,

Longtime reader of your site here. I remember when it had the black background. Back then, you used to do more econ heavy site, which is why I, as an economist, was drawn to it. Although you've since changed direction, I find myself still reading. I don't always agree with you, but I continue to read to get your take on things.

I have some questions though that have been bothering me and I thought I'd send them your way to get some insights. Like you, I am libertarian minded when it comes to the economy. I favor smaller, decentralized government, a minimal welfare state, and balanced budgets.

I used to be a big Austrian. The Austrians, as you know, have been predicting for some time that massive inflation would follow the Fed's printing efforts. The logic, as I understand it, is that inflation is a monetary phenomenon, and the expansion of the monetary supply would accordingly result in massive price increases.

But... this hasn't happened. Except for in commodities like food (whose prices have been risen for a variety of supply reasons), inflation has been relatively stable. What gives? To paraphrase the Wendy's lady, where's the inflation?

1. The reason we haven't see inflation is because the marginal propensity to consume and invest has gone way down. In other words, Obama, the debt, and the general socialist direction we are going is scaring away any investors, businesses and entreprenuers. Also, many people are just simply not spending any money as they're afraid of the cripplling effects of government debt AND the future taxation that would imply. Because of this you can pump the banking system FULL of money, but that money will remain unlent and in reserves, never seeing the light of day in the real economy AND THUS not cause inflation. Also, banks are pretty much prevented from lending out any money now due to Dodd Frank and their own incompetence (ever try to refi a house today?) So in short, the money is tied up in the vaults of banks and not until it is lent out will it cause inflation.

TO see this look at the velocity of money at the FRED database. This mathemtically shows just how little faith we have in the future.

My second question concerns the debt. With Reinhart-Rogoff's excel error, everyone is pronouncing the end of austerity. I don't think that's the case, but I'm starting to wonder whether the Keynesians have a point. It seems impossible to cut our way out of the debt. We're still paying off debt from WW2. Isn't the more logical answer to grow the economy, and thus reduce the size of the payments relative to GDP.
I am not stupid enough to recognize that growing the economy is easier said than done. Though I have been straying from the libertarian gospel for sometime now, I know that the government multiplier effect is non-existent at worst and exaggerated at best. Even if the Keynesians have a point about growth, they don't have a point about fiscal led growth.

2. Yes, the logical choice is to grow the economy to dwarf the debt, but to do that in today's economy would require government spending because the private sector is basically scared into inaction. Of course, there's a problem. Government doesn't really produce anything. AND on top of that the problem the Keynesians face is a psychological one. Again, the debt, the general hatred towards production, success, wealth, and innovation Obama and leftists have in this country is scaring the producers into inaction, meaning most government spending will be symbolic, ineffectual, and never spurring real economic growth. The pump will never be primed.

Another problem the Keynesians face is that to get the economy growing again means getting the productive people producing again. But, bluntly, these are the enemies Obama and leftists hate and want to punish. I don't credit Obama or the democrat leadership with the knowledge of economics or intelligence to piece this together and realizing they'll never get the economy to grow because their policies are antithetical to economic growth. However, this no doubt is causing some traditional Keynesian economists (who DO want the country to succeed) to pull out their hair...or what little hair economists have.

Finally, my last question concerns the heterodox nature of libertarian economics. Given that the economics field is dominated by neo-Keynesians or some variant of that, isn't it odd that the supposed correct answers, the Austrian/libertarian school, are so outside of the grain? I guess what I'm saying here is a reformatting of a tired leftist argument on global warming. So many of the experts believe it, therefore it must be true and if you deny it you are insane/stupid/ignorant/pick your slur here. How could it be that those who have dedicated their lives to the study of economics are so wrong about it, if they really are?

3. Economics, like all the other liberal arts, has been co-opted and hijacked by lesser minded people who use it as a means to avoid real work. It is no coincidence they spew (typically) leftist solutions because that is how they get paid in government-financed academia, leftist-non-profit think tanks, and government itself. What angers me most is the hypocrisy and arrogance of these people. On one hand they claim to be trying to help people, but while on the other hand they are selling nearly a billion westerners down the river so they can advance their own faux career.

The end WILL COME and I say that not out of some kind of religious zealot prophecy, but simply because their current economic model/system/ideology is not sustainable. With no production and government expected to resolve all problems AND having that government merely act as an agent for wealth redistribution one of these days our creditors will turn off the line of credit, call our debts due and the life blood that supports the system (other people/countries' monies) will stop flowing and the system will crash.

I believe this is the way to go because, as you point out, everybody is believing the lie and the stupidity. And not just the professionals and leaders of our country, but the idiotic masses of voters who are truly some of the dumbest people in the history of human kind.

So I say light up a cigar and enjoy the decline. There's nothing you or I can do to stop stupid or ignorant. But we can enjoy watching the welfare class revolt when their EBT cards don't buy jack or their welfare checks bounce OR there just plain isn't anything in the shelves of grocery stores to buy.

Cpt.

B.A.S.D.S.M.T.O.T.W.D

May 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

BASDSMTOT (Bachelors Against SUV Driving Soccer Moms Texting or Talking While Driving) is a new ~~crusade I want to pursue because I'm bored and want to tell other people what to do with their lives so I can feel better about myself~~ campaign I want to start to protect society from a genuine scourge that threatens us all

Soccer moms who drive SUV's and don't pay attention because they're too busy talking on their phone, texting, or are just plain lousy drivers.

Many a bachelor and motorcycle riders would have been killed had it not been for our superior reflexes and defensive driving that compensates for the general poor driving ability of this group, but we here at ~~MADD,~~ BASDSMTOTWD want to be just as aloof, unaware and indifferent about our driving ability as the texting talking soccer moms. I want to be able to do my make up, text, talk on my phone and try to discipline my child while crashing into and totaling a bachelor's convertible (that actually happened to me) with no consequence of legal punishment.

So what I suggest is limiting the ability of ~~normal, responsible adults to have a drink and enjoy life~~ soccer moms to drive because ~~I'm a unproductive member of society, and like Mayor Bloomberg have nothing better to do,~~ I care about society. therefore I'm asking the legislature to limit the NODUITSUV (Number Of Distracting Units In The SUV) to 2. NODUITSUV would be any object or entity that is capable of distraction such as:

1. cell phone
2. child
3. make up
4. magazine
5. on star
6. another person

etc.

So if you have your cell phone, three chidlren, and your husband. Too bad, you can't take all 5. You need to make three separate trips hauling only 2 NODUITSUV's each to abide by this law.

And I don't care how much it inconveniences you, because "if it just saves one life, then it's worth it."

Glenn Thrush, Douchebag and Beta of the Year

May 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If you wonder why I hate socialism and leftists, this is why.

When the IT Guy Shrugged

May 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I wonder what all those MBA's and HR directors will do when the IT guys across the world just say, "f@ck it" and go fishing instead.

The Liberal Mind

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Amen brother.

Why You Should Aspire to be a Security Guard

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If I had stayed out of banking when I originally intended to, I would have had more years experience as a security guard than I would in banking. The reason why is that my first job in college was as a campus cop which then predispositioned me for future security work. Sure enough if I needed any extra cash I would work a night shift or go part time. Also, security work gave me options, thus any time a boss got lippy, I was misled about a job's duties, or there was just a good ole fashioned market melt down I could tell the boss to pound sand and take off.

However, while most people look at security guards as one of the lowliest of "professions" truth is it's the best damn job you can have.

The reason is simple - the job allows you to work on you.

Understand that the vast majority (if not all) corporate wage slave jobs require your time to be completely consumed and preoccupied. And more often than not that time is consumed with a mentally boring and mundane task. And even if it isn't, the culture is such that you still have to "act busy," which is even more mind-numbing than actual work. In the end, yes you do have a job, but your brain is completely and 100% occupied doing boring work that advances some other person or company.

However, with security work it is different.

First, your job is to merely be present. Not to track down the bad guys. Not to do detective work. Not to be a wanna be cop. You merely sit at your station or desk, make an hourly patrol, and then return to your desk. The reason why is the big secret in the security industry. You really aren't paid to protect, you're paid because having a uniformed person on the premises gets that company or client a decrease in their insurance costs. A decrease that MORE than compensates them for the $9/hour they're paying you.

Second, since you aren't supposed to be doing anything other than merely existing most security companies allow you to do some other work. In other words, there is no expectation you need to be constantly occupied all the time. Matter of fact, it's expected you'll bring a book, study, bring a laptop or whatever. Some security companies and some security gigs won't allow for this (for example body guarding some socialite at a night club) and these are not the gigs I'm talking about. But the majority of security work is sitting at some corporate campus, twiddling your thumbs, killing time.

Third, the caliber of the average security guard is crap. Absenteeism is a huge problem, drugs another, and nutjobs thinking they're cops and pulling people over (known this to happen twice) is rank throughout the industry. If you are just a clean cut guy, looking to make a couple bucks on the side, and can show up on time and not be high, you are in.

Finally, the night shift. If you are going to work security make it the night shift. You don't want to be the armed and overpaid receptionist for an office building downtown unlocking people's cars, towing cars, and in general dealing with everybody's mistakes.

In the end and combining all these traits together, you have the PERFECT job, especially for independent-minded people like us. You are paid, albeit it a minimum amount, to sit and work on your own stuff, occasionally getting up so you don't fall asleep, and are completely alone (assuming you took the dog shift). It is the perfect recipe for an inventor, an author, a entreprenuer, or just a minimalist who likes to read books because it gives you 8 hours a day to work on what you want. Better still, it FORCES you to work on your own projects because if you don't have anything to occupy your time you will get bored.

For example I wrote "Enjoy the Decline" in 45 days while pulling 16 hour shifts sitting at a warehouse as a security guard. I wrote "Behind the Housing Crash" in just three months doing the same. Another guard I know wrote the code for an entire program as a security guard. And another one I knew doubled as a network administrator who would telnet into work and get paid double. Though the work was not glorious and the title guaranteed not to impress chicks at bars, working security gave industrious individuals like ourselves the time, the discipline and the opportunity to focus on ourselves and our endeavors.

But the true benefit of working security is ultimately financial. Specifically, your chances of becoming genuinely rich are higher working as a security guard than a corporate cog.

Understand nobody becomes rich busting their ass off in the rat race, climbing the corporate ladder. Most people will deem the mental and pscyhological costs too high to make it into senior, let alone executive management, settling instead for a very median wage. But as a security guard, busting his or her ass off, aggressively pursuing whatever your idea or dream is, you stand a MUCH BETTER CHANCE at becoming rich than your average corporate, ass-kissing slave because it is your entire idea. If it works, you get to benefit from it 100%. Also realize that while, yes, a corporate cog could come home and start working on his or her new business idea or invention, corporate employment is so mind-numbing most people just want to sit and veg out. Security work not only allows you to work on your own stuff, but does the opposite of what corporate employment does to your mind. Instead of numbing it, it invigorates it. It gets the creative juices flowing and consequently gives you more passion and energy to pursue and accomplish your dreams. I've come home from 16 hour security shifts more invigorated and pumped up about life than a 4 hour day cut short by a computer network failure or power outage at a corporate gig, just because the damn job gives you hope.

Of course, all of this is contingent on one thing - that you have a plan or a goal AND you have the discipline to pursue it while working the night shift. For if you don't have those two things, then, well, yeah, you're just a rent-a-cop wanna be Paul Blart. Otherwise, there is absolutely no shame in working a security gig.

How to Exact Your Toll of Revenge on Bankers

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Listening to the Bill Burr podcast, one of his common refrains is to rip on the bankers. He recently bought a house and realized that he more or less signed away his life for 30 years. However, like most teens-50 somethings, he has a very simple understanding of economics and because of this defaults to blaming a handful of bogie men for the condition of the US economy, bankers being the most prominent.

Like blaming "big oil" or "evil corporations," he doesn't really know what he's talking about. To figure it out would take too much time and effort, and since it makes simple logical sense in his world view of economics, his ire and hatred is directed towards bankers. However, unlike "evil corporations," "corporate executives," and "big oil," Bill Burr, and every one who disproportionately blame bankers for the ills of our country...

are right.

Though accidentally right, I am here to tell you now, after working in banking for nearly 20 years, Bill Burr and everybody else who blames bankers and the banking industry for our economic problems today are right. Bankers are the verminous scum you suspected them to be and you should have every ounce of contempt, despisement and hatred for them.

Are there some good bankers?

Of course.

Are there some banking executives that truly are there to make good loans and grow the economy?

Absolutely.

But in my experiences such quality people account for less than 15% of those employed in the banking industry.

For the most part, bankers and banker-eqsue types fall into two categories.

Dumb and evil (and sometimes both in a Venn Diagram sort of way).

Dumb bankers lack the intellect and mathematical skill to fully analyze and assess the quality and risk of loans they are making. They have practically no knowledge of accounting or financial analysis and out themselves rather quickly by being the "rain maker" or "salesman" (or most commonly admitting to playing high school football). They're always "in it for the deal" or "trying to find a way to get it done." In reality they are simply that. A knowledgeless salesman trying to get a commission on a product that is flawed to a person who is unlikely to pay them back. They don't care about loan quality, they don't care about their clients, they don't care about them employer, and (since the banking industry is backed up by the FDIC and Fed) they don't care about the taxpayer. They have no other skill and very much like other pure-sales jobs, quantity is quality because they get their commission. Again, not because they're evil, but they're too stupid to connect the dots between a taxpayer bailing them out and the crappy loans they constantly bring to committee.

Evil bankers can be stupid as well, but typically know, or at least don't care, what they're doing. They KNOW the client isn't going to pay them back. They KNOW they're condemning the client to file for bankruptcy in the future. They KNOW they're financially crippling their clients, their employer and the nation, but they just plain don't care. They're going to get their commission regardless of morality and will sell anybody under the bus if it financially benefits them. They view themselves better and more valuable than most people and is again why (I explain in "Worthless") most finance majors are finance majors because they are too lazy to study calculus, but still want to make the salary of an engineer. Worse still, in booming times when it's nearly impossible to NOT make money, they charter their success to their "intelligence" and not the massive macro-economic forces behind that success. They buy luxury cars they can't afford, houses they can barely pay for, and trophy wives sure to learn the difference between debt and equity spending when they invariably divorce.

In short, it is not only perfectly normal, but it is your right to hate, loathe and wish the utmost of atrocities upon most bankers.

Of course "the utmost of atrocities" would largely fall under "illegal." Much as I would like to hunt down bankers I personally know and release an unimaginable hell upon them, I can't for it is illegal. However, that doesn't mean you, I or anybody else can't exact our toll of revenge from the banker scum, especially in a legal matter. And that is what I intend to show you how to do today.

Understand that while you may think bankers are sitting up top some sky scraper, smoking cigars on a mahogany desk, that is the furthest thing from the truth. The majority of bankers are not your "Goldman Sachs" types living it up and whooping it up with other people's money. The vast majority of bankers are miserable people, who just like everybody else, has every day problems. But worse for them (and this where your revenge comes in) is the fact they work in banking, and this makes their lives miserable.

First, the banking industry is different and unique from most other industries in that it constantly gets bailed out. However, there is a negative consequence to that.

Recessions, much like your liver, filter out deadweight and underperforming companies and people. If you can't provide a good product at a good price, booming or busting economy, you simply go away. This "survival of the fittest" aspect of economics is not only a law, but ensures that only the most competent, efficient and productive people remain, getting rid of the losers.

However, in bailing out the banking industry this "purging" or "purification" process never takes place and crappy bankers, from crappy banks get bailed out and/or simply go down to the next crappy bank to start a new job. In other words it would be like you eating some salmonella-infected food, which your body promptly vomits up, only for you to re-eat it, re-sickening yourself again, re-puking yourself again and so on and so forth. Bankers, for the most part, are this regurgitated vomit constantly re-introduced and never-leaving the banking industry.

But ask yourself the question, how fun or productive is it constantly having to work with regurgitated vomit? In other words, with such a low-quality and low-caliber class of people employed in the industry, can you imagine how painful it must be to work with such losers? 8 hours a day of dealing with inept co-workers, none of which are competent at the 8th grade math banking requires? Egomaniacs who all think they're better than one another, and the politics, back-stabbing and corporate BS drama that ensues? I've witnessed it and experienced it and it is PAINFUL. It is veritable torture to go into work, day in and day out and deal with such ineptitude, egomaniasm and deceit. It is this fact, that most bankers must suffer their own ilk, that should give you at least a couple of ounces of flesh.

Second, the bankers are one thing, but the clients are another. Matter of fact, they're equally low-class and low-quality as the bankers. And not only do the bankers get to tolerate each other, they get to tolerate their miserable clientele as well.

At one bank I worked at the fattest, most disgusting woman (she looked like the gal in Raiders of the Lost Ark who was having the drinking contest with Mariam) traipsed her obese ass into the bank to cash a check. The check was for $6,000, an amount this sow never saw in her life. She was always overdrawn on her accounts, had well over $1,000 in fees, and was just a miserable, pathetic, excuse for a human being. But what made this great was just how obvious it was she had printed this check off of a cheap ink-jet printer.

My solution was simple - call the cops and get this vermin arrested for passing fake checks.

But oh, no. Not for the staff nor my boss. How did we know it was fake? How did we know she purposely printed this off? Besides (and pay attention to this) we needed her late and overdraft fees because those (despite never being paid) made this a profitable account.

Another client came into my office wanting a loan.

A loan for what?

A loan for GAS MONEY.

Gas money for what?

Gas money for (and pay attention to this) visiting his new-born grandson in Denver that had to get heart surgery due to complications of the birth.

I didn't know what angered me more. Him lying to my face with some BS story or the fact he was a 60 year old man resorting to make ends meet by requesting a BANK LOAN FOR GAS!!!

Regardless, I could go on with stories, but you get the point. Most bankers are not dealing with quality clients, quality borrowers who intend on paying them back. Most clients are cut from the exact same regurgitated vomit cloth as the bankers. And this makes the bankers' lives miserable.

Third, along the line of crappy clients is the fact that the majority of work bankers do today is not developing new business or lending money to help expand some successful operation today. It's dealing with problems from the past. Specifically, "problem loans."

Problem loans are loans that are simply that. Problems. They're not getting paid back, the client is late, the client has split town, you name it, the bank isn't getting paid. This then requires the banks to "resolve" these problem loans. However, here is where the banks and bankers shoot themselves in the foot.

Since the economy still sucks, there are no new or potentially profitable loans to make. This puts the focus and onus of most banks today on saving EVERY SINGLE PENNY FROM THEIR PROBLEM LOANS. In other words, since there is nobody banging down their door to borrow money, they instead focus on trying to save as much money as they can from bad loans. This means around 90% of a banker's time is spent dealing with:

1. Collateral that has deteriorated WAY below what is owed on the loan.
2. Tracking down problem clients to hopefully, maybe, potentially getting them to make a payment.
3. CONSTANTLY negotiating with their vomitesque clientele to refi, extend-and-pretend, short sell, restructure their loans
4. CONSTANTLY hounding the clients to get 2009-2012's tax returns, balance sheets and financial statements

5. Tracking down assets that had been stripped of the property and pledged as collateral

Ironically, however, a vicious spiral develops. Since the only business most banks have are these problem loans, they are practically forced to constantly keep these losers afloat. This chains most bankers to their loser clientele, making their jobs even more miserable and providing you an added ounce of flesh.

Fourth, Frank-Dodd. Frank-Dodd is legislation that resulted from the financial crisis and housing bubble. In short it is a MONSTER of a piece of regulation and I cannot emphasize just how detailed, invasive, and petty it is. I was paid for two days to (and pay attention to this) change a cell in an Excel spreadsheet from reading "Sources of Repayment" to "Financial Capacity of Repayment" for all of our loans. There rarely wasn't a day where our contacts at the OCC and FDIC weren't handing down some new and minor change our bank had to make. And so petty and pointless were they, I was and still am to this day, convinced Frank-Dodd was nothing more than a means to punitively punish the banking industry.

Does such regulation hurt the economy?

Absolutely.

Does such regulation prevent loanable dollars from getting out into the economy, harming economic growth.

You bet.

Does Frank-Dodd drive up the cost of banking for consumers and customer?

Darn tootin'.

But it is a NIGHTMARE for the bankers and banks to deal with and they deserve every second of it.

In the end, what you need to do is step back and look at what has become of the banking industry. It is not this high-flying, romantic, booming and advancing field that it may have been. It is not the "Mad Men" sort of martini's and golf Hollywood has painted it as. And it certainly isn't a functional or sane segment of our economy exploiting you or other innocents.

It is hell.

It is

- Arguably now the most regulated industry in the country (bar medicine)
- Populated by the country's most incompetent and corrupt people
- Serving, pampering and baby sitting the country's worst financial basket-cases
- Whose only future prospects are cleaning up messes of the past with no economic growth to exploit in the future

And that same banker scum, that disproportionately caused the economic and financial problems we have today, are forever condemned to work in that industry because...

well...frankly...

they have no other talents and no other industry would ever hire them. They are stuck there with the regurgitated vomit both as coworkers and clients for the rest of their "professional" lives.

And knowing that is where you should get your full pound of flesh.

If you liked this post, consider buying Aaron's book "Behind the Housing Crash" where he chronicles his adventures and exploits in banking during the build up to the housing crash.

And if you REALLY want to piss off bankers, start buying your stuff via Captain Capitalism's Amazon affiliate program. Nothing would irk his previous bank-employer scum than seeing him make millions on a business model purely based on ripping the banking industry a new one.

Our Man Flint

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just ordered it for myself.

How can't you like James Coburn?

Plus the theme song is very bachelor-pady.

The Lawyer Job Market Is So Bad….

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"How bad is it?"

"The lawyer job market is so bad, lawyers are now resorting to prostitution!"

Yuk yuk yuk.

"I'm here every Tuesday, folks! Don't forget to tip the waitresses!"

Anybody want to guess her undergrad?

Why Martin Crutsinger Must Be Assassinated

May 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

GOOD GOD MAN! WHAT ARE YOU DOING!!?!??!???!

Don't you know the media is here to serve the democrat party and destroy the US!?!?!!

WHAT ARE YOU DOING POINTING OUT SUCH FACTS AND TRUTHS!? Don't your superiors at the Star Tribune know what you are doing??? And what incompetent editor let your vile, fact-based reality through!!!????

I'm sorry, you will have to be terminated for ~~being an actual journalist, holding to standards, seeking the truth, trying to help America and acting as the genuine 4th branch of government~~ not being the democrat party's bitch.

We're Winning

May 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

We're winning and the feminists don't like it!

The 2013 White Privilege Conference

May 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I can't think of anything more despicable, hypocritical and deceitful than this bunch of communists resorting to anything to get other people's money.

Ladies Night at the Cappy Club

May 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Come on Joanne, you know it's because they major in easier subjects.

Again, you wonder why I view the democrats with such hatred and disdain, here is your answer.

Another example of Zombie Liberals. You suggest some rape charges are fake and trumped up, you are now "pro-rape." There is no thought or conscience with these people. Only a political platform.

Leslie provides another great historical lesson that you either were never taught in school, of if you were, you have completely forgotten about it.

To this day, I am still befuddled why anybody or corporation donates money to universities. Agreed, the person's original intent was not the best, but it was her money...was anyway.

March Madness!

To this day, I still am amazed how many people think I'm a eunuch and not simply a man who had a vasectomy. Though, there seems to be a lot of confusion about this anyway.

The Abilene Paradox. THough I am thoroughly amused and entertained when groups of people shoot themselves in the foot.

Gotta have outfits. Life's too short not to have them. Though I prefer the nurse theme myself, the naught librarian is always good too.

You think teen pregnancy is bad there? Just visit Casper, Wyoming! Regardless, is it wrong of me to enjoy the self-inflected misery teenage mothers condemn themselves to for the rest of their lives? Good, I didn't think so either, especially since i'm paying for them.

Hey! Why does Jen get the visit from the professional meteorologist!? Why can't I get a visit? Would have helped my chances with tornado chasing!

That's precisely what everybody in this society needs. Tough talk. Too much touchy feely worthless lies have been being spread around and pandered off as truth.

THey had a term for that back in the olden days - "stay at home parent." It was when the parents brought up their own children instead of outsourcing it to the ~~public schools~~ baby sitting farm.

I have an interesting question. Today's manly men are truly manly. The generally hostile environment we've been brought up in AND had the intellectual audacity to question it and thus ingest the red pill, have made us more manly than average. We don't care about people's feelings. We don't care about political accusations or consequences. We have no problem standing up to feminism in that we really don't care what they say.
So riddle me this riddle me that, when this generation of Manosphere men start to make decent coin and start to make their own men-only clubs, and the feminists and socialists come in and try to destroy our clubs, do you think our reaction is going to be the compliant, tail-behind the leg variety that you're used to from previous generations? Methinks not.

Neither I, nor Kathy, nor any other real adults give a damn what kind of made-up allergies your kid has.

That's it for the ladies' night linkage. Would be nice if the ladies showed the Captain a little love. But, sniff, sniff, nooooobdy loves the Captain. Poor ole Captian, nobody listens, nobody loves. The girls are completely unaware of his existence, and if they are, they probably don't like him. Sniff, sniff.

Sarah LeTrent, Sorry, "Fat" and "Attractive" are Mutually Exclusive

May 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Sarah writes a piece getting excited about some nobody who photoshops fat people in Ambercrombie and Fitch ads.

Oooo! You witty liberal arts majors! What would the world do without you!?

Just one problem.

"Fat" and "attractive" are mutually exclusive.

And I don't have to explain or write any further because nature and genetic programming ensures the above statement is true.

Enjoy the fat!

Post - post - Ah, I see Sarah is a worthless person with a worthless degree. Must have been KILLER studying for that "BA in Communications."

Yes, Jimmy, the Democrats Are Socialists

May 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Of the limitless examples of American ignorance, claiming that the democrat party is nothing more than a socialist one and the scoffery that ensues is one that particularly angers me. The average American (at least in my day and before) was brought up to see "socialism" and "communism" as pejoratives. And for good reason. Socialist economies grow slower. Socialist economies produce less and have more poverty. And if they go too far down the left side of the political spectrum into full blown communism, they have a tendency to kill hundreds of millions of their own people. So when you make any accusation of a politician or person being a socialist you are immediately dismissed as crazy or a right wing lunatic because you're essentially claiming that person is a fool-near-murderer.

However, practically nobody in America bothers to take the time to understand, economically, what a socialist is. And so when the democrat party champions nationalized health care, wealth redistribution, unions and worker parties, bailing out companies, and investing in solar ones, the average American ignoramus does see "socialism" they see a party that "cares" and is "for the little guy."

I try to make things simple as possible, so simple the empirical data is right there telling you you're wrong about the democrats and the US not being socialist. But even this simplicity, fact, and empirical data is not enough to overcome the stupidity and ignorance of most Americans (and thus why I no longer care and enjoy the decline). But for posterity's sake I'm going to throw this old beaten up chart up one more time. It shows government spending as a percent of GDP.

A country where government spending accounts for 40% of GDP is NOT a capitalist one. It is a socialist one. And if the republicans had any balls they would start calling the democrats the "socialist" party because that is what they are.

I Will Never Apologize

May 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For liking hot, toned, in shape chicks.

Never.

And the sooner you feminists realize that the sooner you and the entire other half of the population are going to get along.

Why Techies Love Tax Hell California

May 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because while they be smart in IT, they be dumber than all hell when it comes to economics.

Why Every Young Man Needs to Hang Out With Older Women

May 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I once again decided to avail myself of the free gym and lounge offered to my girlfriend at her place of employment. Normally my schedule consists of lifting weights, using the communal internet to do my daily work, running on the local trails and then grabbing a bite to eat. However, the powers that be had a surprise in store for me, and that surprise took the form of 5 elderly ladies.

At first it was just one. I was sitting in a comfy chair in the lounge when this amazonian woman (6'1') walked in and sat beside me. She inquired if I was with the "coffee club" and I said, "No, I'm just here because my girlfriend works for the company and this is considered my 'bachelor daycare' which prompted laughter and prompted conversation.

She was a widow and a mother of children slightly older than myself, and she was waiting on her friends for their little coffee club. She was promptly on time, suggesting to me she may have been ex-military, and started to ponder whether her friends were even going to show. She called one of them and while on the phone started jesting to her friend that she was sitting with a "fine young handsome man." I interrupted and suggested she tell her friend I would abscond with her to Bermuda, her friend on the other line laughed loud enough I could hear it.

Sure enough within half an hour her friends all did show and as they trickled in I was introduced to them as her "new boyfriend," "boytoy," and "time share." Every one of them laughing at each new title. I had work to do, but set my laptop aside because it became quickly obvious and apparent these ladies were neither boring or uninteresting. Yes I had work, but since I knew other humans are the most important thing in life, I set it down and participated with the ladies.

I would say "normal jousting" occurred, but while the pattern of conversation was that of jousting you would have with other men, the fact these ladies were older made it superior conversation. They were wise, they were experienced, they were witty. In short they were the perfect people that you would want to engage in conversation. They were not crass, but certainly weren't saints either. They would tell stories about how they would peek through the blinds to see young men (back in the day) roof the house from across the street. They would make high-brow remarks about me "coming over to do work for them," but at the same time inquiring what I did, telling me about their families, and other more innocent topics. They were also cultured catching every Victor Borge reference I would lay on them and not having to require me to explain who Cary Grant was. They, in short, were not just a pleasure to be around, but were the epitome of fun.

No person on the face of the planet would not have fun with these women.

Because of this I decided that we should all meet at the lounge during the day time and I would grill them steaks and make them martini's. Not one of them refused the offer. We set a date, arranged for some minor logistics, and I have a afternoon date with 5 elderly ladies for steak and martinis in the near future.

Now let me tell you the important lessons to take away from this experience.

#1 Enjoy Them While They Are Here

Every young man, and I mean EVERY young man, needs to hang out, at least once, with elderly ladies. Not for any ulterior motives such as MILF/GILF or gigilo/money, etc., but because this is the last generation of real women you will ever get to interact with.

Understand once this generation dies off you get to deal with aging boomer hippies, middle aged Gen X'er feminists, and entitled Gen Y'ers and millineals, all of which have to one extent or another been influenced and impaired by feminism. In other words the last true remaining, classy, Sophia Loren-esque women will die off and you will never get to enjoy hanging out with them, leaving you with "empowered women" and "masters in communications" types of females who are only female in gender. There are non-physical reasons men like women and these women are the last ones on the planet that "got it." Reasons that are soon going to go away and you won't ever get to enjoy. So I suggest you enjoy their company and presence while you still can.

#2 This is "How It's Supposed to Be"

You ever feel like you're walking on eggshells with modern day women? Always wonder where the next sucker punch is going to come from? Asking yourself the question, "Will I go to jail if I ask a girl to dance?"

Well that's because women have been co-opted under the socialist guise of "feminism" to be victims and any interaction between men and women is hyper-analyzed to see if those interactions in any way can be construed as "oppression," "victimization" or "crime." In other words, a war has been declared between men and women, unbeknownst to most men.

This is how women were before the "war."

Men and women got along. Men appreciated women and women appreciated men. They would wittingly spar, counter with charm and see who could crack the most smiles from the opposing team. They were not focused on themselves, but rather intrigued and interested in the other. And if you ever wish to experience how that felt, not to mention have a standard or a "goal" as to how men and women should interact, again, hang out with older women.

#3 True Judges and Judgement

Nearly every young man is judged every day. And he is certainly judged when he approaches a woman of his age be it for a date, a social event, or what have you. However, unfortunately, this young man has no context. And when Sally McDitzysociologymajor shoots him down, perhaps even mocking him in the process, he actually thinks that this somehow reflects upon his:

quality moral caliber personal caliber worth as a man

My question is simple - why do you let the most inexperienced, spoiled and childish people in the history of human kind (20 something western girls) judge you AND accept their judgement as a true measure of your worth?

I do not say this out of desire or bias, but because it is true. What experience, wisdom or hindsight does Tanya the Suburbanite Princess have to give her such authority?

Older women are much better judges as to the quality and caliber of a person (be it a man or a woman) than their younger, spoiled-brat, entitled 20 something counterparts and if you really want to know if you are a good person, charming individual and all around good man, then it is older women you should hang out with.

Can you get them to laugh?

Can you get them to like you?

Can you get them to smile?

and the ultimate condoning of your quality as a man

Can you get them to start inquiring about setting you up with their daughters or granddaughters?

There is no larger or better endorsement to your caliber and quality as a man than a nice ole grandma lady asking if you have a girlfriend and saying she has a nice single grandaughter she'd like you to meet.

I say all of the above not because I'm looking for anybody to validate myself or others.

I say all of the above not to make you feel better about yourselves.

I am saying all of the above because it is true.

Our female elders, just like our male elders, have just as much wisdom and MORE when it comes to the opposite sex. And if you want to enjoy the company of women, and appreciate the true intellect of females, and have some honest judges as to your worth in salt as a man, then I strongly suggest you hang out with our female elders.

This post made in honor of my dance partner in Wyoming. She said yes when all the 20 somethings said no.

NEW BELGIUM

The Death of Charm

May 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

At any time you may ask any woman in my life if I was charming.

And they will say, "indeed he was."

Charm, I have to chalk up to my Uncle Jeff who, though a wonderful man, was very short and bald. He had to develop his charm and he did to the point I would say he was the epitome of it.

He was sharp. He was witty. He was intelligent. And he was a natural. He always had the right thing to say to crack a smile in others AND (most importantly) it wasn't rehearsed. He was smart enough and quick enough that he WAS charming so it came off as natural and genuine because he was.

Being a nerdy skinny kid myself in my youth, I started focusing my efforts to become like Uncle Jeff. I would try to be witty, practice and form the art of dry wit. TO this I added watching Cary Grant flicks, Humphrey Bogart flicks, and Jimmy Stewart movies, developing a repertoire of quotes no girl my age would recognize as plagiarism. And sure enough, over time, growing taller, learning to dance, lifting weights, working out, riding motorcycles, etc., I developed into the devastatingly charming man that I am today.

Again, if you don't believe it, ask any woman who knows me.

However, like many other things, I have taken "charm" off of the table and now reserve it only for women I deem worthy of it. My girlfriend, my female friends, and old ladies I happen to run into at coffee clubs. And the reason this charm has been taken off the table is twofold.

1. Most charm is not appreciated by my contemporaries or younger. Older women will always get the "who are you really and what were you before" line and they LOVE IT. My female friends will always appreciate me purposely underestimating their age. And the girlfriend will always appreciate the clever and witty inside joke hidden within an otherwise unremarkable statement. But most women simply do not get it. THey are not cultured enough, nor have the vocabulary to appreciate it. Most witticisms will go over their heads and worse, they may see you as simply as nerdy, goofy, or just plain creepy.

2. You have to earn charm. Just like chivalry, just like respect, I don't hand it out for free anymore. If I'm going to expend the calories of energy in my little brain to say something entertaining and cute that will improve and enhance (albeit minorly) your life, then you better have done something to deserve it. Not necessarily benefiting me, but you better have proved yourself to be a good person, a person I find agreeable, and somebody deserving of charm (or respect, or chivalry).

While this may address why myself and other genuinely charming men have in a cartel-like fashion limited the supply of charm, we cannot lay the Death of Charm solely at the feet of women. For while there is no limit to the Disney-Channel-Justin-Beiber girls-cum-ladies now entering society who may demand it (or feel entitled to it), their male counterparts are hopelessly incapable of charm.

Lacking any fatherly discipline, let alone guidance, let alone role models, young men today have no concept or clue of charm. Hats are still being worn backward 20 years after the plague hit society, "hawt" is still being pronounced, and the behavior is so uniform the word "douchebag" now has a VERY precise Urban dictionary definition, defining young men who can only be described as well...douchebags.

Few men know how to dance, few men know how be witty or creative, none of them have any culture beyond X-Box 360, and nearly none of them could even mimic Jimmy Stewart or Cary Grant because they have no clue who they are. This is not a call for them to "man up" but rather to point out the current crop of men are incapable of charm, thus further limiting the supply.

Because of this, we once again delve into the world of economics to explain what is happening in the courtship market. With demand for charm being relatively constant, and the supply of charm dropping, charm comes at a premium. The price of charm has gone up. And if you want charm, then you better be a girlfriend, a good female friend, or a charming woman yourself to get it. Because if you're not willing to pay "P2" in this market, there is no charm for you.

(PS-you would deserve charm if you could explain what "P2" is or could just explain the chart above and not tell us who Kate Perry is dating right now).

Three Years of Hate - A Review

May 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Matt Forney sent me a copy of "Three Years of Hate." He also said he would be discontinuing the book for reasons I don't know and don't understand. The reason why is it is a solid book that, though I don't agree with everything in, is going to benefit and serve its reader with not just entertainment, but wisdom, intellectual stimulation and the exercise of rethinking your own thoughts.

First it is very well written, perhaps too well. His vocabulary had me looking up multiple words, giving me an unexpected vocabulary lesson. But the flow, context, logic and structure of his writing was very enjoyable, as if you're just talking to a guy at a bar.

Second, it is very thought provoking. Something challenging your own philosophies, but more so he expands and advances current thought and philosophies (and this was originally written about 2-3 years ago). And not just in the real of courtship and dating, but politics, economics, and philosophy.

Third, I would say, though not intended to be a primer, it is a great introductory book for the young man or woman about to take the red pill. It is not too elementary or basic, but neither too advanced or over one's head. Not all of it is about red pill theory or questioning your world and premises, but it does address pretty much every major theory, thought, law and development that has been created in the Manosphere.

Fourth, it is blunt and visceral. This may deter most female readers (who I would strongly recommend getting over his crass language and normal guy talk and instead listen to what he is trying to say), but it is precisely what makes this book a very enjoyable book. It is a normal guy speaking normally, resulting in clear language that does not dance around societal-pleasantries and political correctness. It is an example of what all men should be able to do in public and entice no criticism.

Fifth, outright hilarious at time. His "End of Night Game" is not only funny, but brilliant. There are many phrases such as below:

I've always preferred to listen to news/talk radio when I'm in the car. Music radio is a waste, re-playing the same five songs over and over again. NPR is faux-intellectual drivel for SWPLs who want their friends to think they're cultured and smart. And I never really cared for sports. There's nothing like a good screaming rant from some middleaged white guy to keep you awake during those long drives.

that will make you laugh your ass off.

Finally, typos. I love typos. You want to know why? Because it shows the author spent more time coming up with ideas, thoughts, and philosophies than worry about the bleeping difference between a semi-colon and a regular-colon. I read books for the intellectual stimulation and knowledge the author is attempting to convey. Not to worry about whether a comma was in the right place or not.

About the only complaints I would have are two. One, while Matt broaches the topic of race and race relations, 95% of what he says would only serve to help all people of all races, there is 5% I just cannot sign up on board with or have not thought through thoroughly myself to have an informed or at least wise opinion. Two, his economic observations are somewhat underdeveloped and immature. He would benefit from doing more (albeit boring) data and empirical research on the FRED database than reading another philosopher wax poetically never citing a chart or data series.

All in all I would strongly recommend this book as it will only serve to help the reader and stimulate their mind. I would also STRONGLY recommend it to women who want to see how men really are and what really goes through their minds.

It is available on Kindle and paperback.

Book Review of "Men On Strike"

May 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dr. Helen of PJ Media fame is in a very small, but elite league. She is one of the few professionals (PhD in psychology) to address and bring to light the sexual-sociological backlash men and women are having to feminism. The only other person I've known to do this is Dr. Roy Baumeister with his book "Is There Anything Good About Men." However, while Dr. Baumeister's book focuses on society's current view or opinion of men, Dr. Helen's new book "Men on Strike" addresses the consequences of having a myopic and solipsistic societal view of the sexes. And the consequences aren't good.

As the title would suggest, men are going on strike. They are striking from their traditional roles as breadwinners, innovators, hard workers, protectors, etc. But worse they are abandoning their roles as husbands and fathers. Not out of a lack of desire, but worse - they are being forced out of these roles as society has made both roles too risky to forfeit their precious and finite lives for.

Naturally there is a backlash.

Women want men to "man up" and marry them. Women want men give them children. But, particularly ironic, while women SAY they want men to be effeminate, sensitive, caring, listeners, their behaviors show their preferences for strong, thuggish bad boys have never changed. This confusion (and risk) to men has sent them fleeing, and blinded by feminism, modern day women can't figure out why. They are stumped as to why they're 42, single, with some other man's child, a masters degree in creative writing and NOT getting approached every day. They simply cannot connect the dots.

Dr. Helen explores this reaction of men and tries to connect the dots for women. Her language is polite, diplomatic and correct. but this is a herculean task to ask of her because she is trying to undo the brainwashing women (and men) have received for 40 years. It is a harsh pill to swallow, too harsh for the progressively deteriorating and childish men and women who populate America today, and her blog receives more criticism than inquiry and acceptance. Regardless she tries and has a professional psychological background to back it up lending the book authority.

Unfortunately, however, what she writes will be nothing new to those who have been on the frontlines since the war began. The book will bring no new observations, epiphanies, or theories to veterans or those well-read about the plight of men in western civilization. It is simply a refining, repackaging and delivery of an argument that has been going on for a decade. However, the intended audience is not members of The Manosphere, but rather society at large and is where the value of her book lies. It is made to be digestible to the general public and, again, has the backing of Dr. Helen's professional background.

The only real complaints I have about the book are two fold. One, the heavy reliance on anecdotal evidence rubs my economist soul the wrong way. While good, anecdotes can simply be dismissed as anecdotes by more cynical people or (worse) ideologues who have no intention of pursuing truth and only wish to maintain a political agenda. There is some empirical data, and enough anecdotal evidence would give cause to investigate a claim further, but given the entrenched and politicized forces of feminism and socialism, stories are not going to debunk them, let alone convince them. Two, it lacked organization and succinctness. This could of course be due to my general impatience and ADHDDDHHD, but I would have liked to see less heart and more of a clinical "legal case" made in this book. Again, though, that is a preference.

In general "Men on Strike" is one of the first real "official" books written by a professional that should make the jump from "fringe, right wing manosphere" to MSM and should be welcomed, or at least, heard out by the main stream. It may not make a great book for those of us already familiar with the battle, but would make a great gift or argument for introducing somebody to the backlash that is occurring against feminism today.

So far it only looks like it is available in paperback format, but I am sure it will be available in Kindle soon as well.

Strictly for Da Guys

May 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Greetings gentlemen.

The ole Captain needs your help.

I need all the guys in the Cappysphere to send me what they would like to know in terms of personal financial and economics advice or wisdom. This is going to lay the foundation for my next project and though I have a pretty good idea of the topics I'm going to cover, I want to make sure I leave no major or significant topic unaddressed. Things like housing, budgeting, financial planning, etc, anything in the realm of personal finance that would be of interest, benefit or curiosity to you, please list them in the comment section below.

Also, if you would be so kind, forward this to any other bloggers or readers who may be charitable enough to link back or provide some topics/ideas as well.

Many thanks,

Cpt.

Guns Are a Girl's Best Friend

May 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Remember ladies, your emotional and psychological predisposed position on guns (conveniently given to you by educational and social brainwashing), should trump your safety.

Keep voting democrat! It works so well for you!

Party On Wayne

May 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Party on Garth.

This I dedicate to you spoiled brat children protesting and rioting against a country that took you in and saved you from the sh!thole you came from.

The Most Underutilized Weapon in Men's Arsenal

May 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

One of the things that irks me is when a company or an organization does something un-American, bigoted, racist, or just stupid, and then...

everybody complains about it and then...

does nothing more than that. They just complain.

Remember Absolut vodka and how they did a campaign showing "Mexico" overtaking California, Arizona, Texas and New Mexico?

No, of course you don't.

It would inconvenience you too much to ask the bartender to make sure you don't get Absolut vodka. What's the sovereignty of the US, American culture and the American labor market worth compared to the 5 seconds of your life it would take you to ensure Absolut vodka pays for its threat against US sovereignty. That 5 seconds is too much effort.

I could go on, but you get the point. I'm sick of people (especially conservatives) being whinny bitches when some Hollywood leftist spews their anti-American mouth off, and then like sheep you still go and see their god damned movies, instead of holding to a standard and refusing to patronize the leftist scum.

So here's your opportunity guys. The Samsung commercial has been in the news for the past week, let's see if you men can actually pull out that rusty ole boycott weapon and actually cause Samsung pain and financial cost for being ignorant and sexist.

Let's see if you guys just want to bitch on the internet about how the world is stacked against you, or if you want to cost Samsung so much in sales they fire the ignoramouses that made such a stupid commercial.

Let's see if you can, albeit indirectly, exact your toll of revenge on the misandrists who did that, costing them their jobs.

Here's their e-mail address if you care to expend the precious 5 seconds of your life telling them to shove it.

samsungpr@edelman.com

I got a Samsung, just got it 2 months ago. And when the contract is up, my new phone will be anything but. Of course, if Samsung were to issue a statement and proof they fired all the people responsible for the commercial, I'd go back. But we all know that isn't going to happen.

(On a hilarious side note)

Manliest Man Ever

May 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

107 years old
WWII Vet
Celebrates memorial day with cigars and whiskey.

Damn right.

Why You Own PHYSICAL and NOT PAPER Gold

May 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What do I keep telling you kids about owning precious metals?

Own PHYSICAL, not PAPER. There is a difference and it is highlighted between the premium people are paying between physical ownership and paper ownership.

Also, this came from Kerry. I couldn't find a link, but for those of you interested in the Liberty Mastermind Symposium, here's some more info:

15 Alternative Media Websites Join Forces To Present One-Day Symposium Discussing The Elevated Threat Level To Your Liberty And What You Can Do About It

DALLAS, TX – Liberty Master Mind LLC (www.LibertyMastermind.us) is pleased to announce it will be hosting the first-ever Liberty Mastermind Symposium Saturday, June 29th, 2013 at the DoubleTree DFW Airport North Hotel in Irving, TX. The one-day symposium will bring together thought leaders from 15 alternative media websites to discuss the elevated threat level to your economic and personal liberty and what you can do about it.

"Liberty is under assault," says Kerry Lutz, the symposium producer and host of FinancialSurvivalNetwork.com. "Our roster of speakers has a combined audience of nearly one million readers, listeners and viewers and that number is growing. People are flying in from all over North America. If you want to arm yourself with unconventional, out-of-the-box thinking to help you survive and thrive in today's hostile political climate, you'll want to attend on June 29th."

The Symposium begins Friday night June 28th with a special "night-before" reception and dinner. Guests will enter the reception through a private receiving line where they will meet and shake hands with each of the speakers and panelists. Following dinner, a special keynote speaker will conclude the event and set the stage for Saturday's Symposium. A private screening of "Silver Circle" will conclude the evening – www.SilverCircleMovie.com

The lineup of speakers includes:
Martin Armstrong – www.ArmstrongEconomics.com
Kerry Lutz – www.FinancialSurvivalNetwork.com
Robert Ian – www.ConquerChange.com
Chris Duane – www.SilverBulletSilverShield.com
David Morgan - www.Silver-Investor.com
Bill Murphy – www.Gata.org

Jeff Berwick – www.DollarVigilante.com
Andy Hoffman – www.MilesFranklin.com
John Rubino – www.DollarCollapse.com
Michael Krieger – www.LibertyBlitzKrieg.com
Jay Taylor – www.MiningStocks.com
Elijah Johnson – www.FinanceAndLiberty.com
Mickey Fulp – www.MercenaryGeologist.com
Aaron Clarey – www.CaptainCapitalism.Blogspot.com
Gary Gibson – www.DollarVigilante.com
Lindsay Hall – www.RMBgroup.com

The RMB Group (Rutsen Meier Belmont Group – www.RMBgroup.com) is the Diamond Sponsor of the Liberty Mastermind Symposium and their Chief Market Strategist, Lindsay Hall, will be speaking.

The Symposium will be held Friday night and all day Saturday, June 28 and 29, 2013, at the DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel Dallas – DFW Airport North; 4441 West John Carpenter Fwy; Irving, TX 75063. A special room rate of $99.00 has been secured. Guests can make room reservations directly with the hotel by calling 972-929-8181 with reservation code 'LIB".

*Registration for the Symposium is $249 per person and includes breakfast and lunch. The Friday night reception and dinner is $99.00 per person. Register for both the dinner and the symposium and you will receive a free one ounce silver coin.
Registrations received after June 10th will be $50 more. You can register online at: www.LibertyMastermind.us

For more information please contact:
Coordinator; Liberty Mastermind Symposium office@libertymastermind.us
702-835-6120

Or click here to go to the site.

Two Book Reviews on Minimalism and Survivalism

May 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Short reviews for two short books given to me by Danny. "Dirt-CHeap Survival Retreat" and "Rancho Costa Nada."

Dirt Cheap Survival Retreat - M.D. Creekmore

This book was written by a man who lost everything to his ex wife in divorce. To make ends meet he decided to live in a trailer and go off the grid. The book is VERY practical with charts, diagrams, how-to's, and is also very clearly written. It is also very thorough covering everything from electricity to food storage to security. Aside from the background as to how the author ended up in a trailer, there really isn't a story here in this book as it really is just a how-to manual. I personally liked it a lot in that it was succinct and to the point. A small book that would help to have in your bugout bag, I highly recommend it, especially for the price. M.D.'s site can be found here.

Rancho Costa Nada- Phil Garlington

Rancho Costa Nada is the philosophical flip side of "Dirt Cheap Survival Retreat." The author who is terminally unemployable finds a scrap of land in the Californian desert and basically builds a shack he can live in for free. While there are some elements of "how-toism" the majority of the book is the philosophy of living a minimalistic lifestyle, going off the grid, psychological freedom from the daily grind and a general criticism of people self-stuck in the rat race. This makes for good reading, but it will become very obvious to the reader why this man is unemployed - he lacks focus, structure and organization in his writing (things needed in his former profession as a journalist). By the middle of the book it basically becomes a rambling and repeats itself. The first half is great, but by the middle you're like "OK, DUDE! I GOT IT! FINE, FREEDOM! UNDERSTOOD!" The first half is worth the read and excerpts from "The Crazy Veteran" are also good, but you will get the gist of the book without having to read the whole thing. You can find his website here.

The 80/20 Rule for RELIABLE, Pretty Girls

May 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Notice the emphasis on "reliable?" I've written about it before, but an epiphany just dawned on me as I'm currently reading Roosh's "The Best of Roosh" and I think this epiphany holds water.

A common obseravtion or "belief" in the world o' men is that 20% of the men "trap" or "monopolize" 80% of the women. This 80/20 rule is based on the theory that the majority of women (80%)want to date "up" and so the majority of women will only agree to date the minority (20%) of men, leaving the majority of men, womanless. It is perhaps not a theory as I do recall a college study (that I cannot find right now) where they lined up a group of male and female college students and found out the majority of men were willing to go out with the majority of women, but the women were much choosier, ONLY willing to settle for the top 20 or 25% of men. Regardless, the point is one of "prohibition." A minority of men essentially prohibit the majority of men from attracting women because the majority of women will only settle for the cream of the crop.

But as nature (or god or whatever you want to believe in) would have it, there is a built-in balance of powers giving no creature nor sex a true and absolute advantage over the other. Enter in the attractive AND RELIABLE woman.

While the majority of college girls will only settle for the top minority of men, they do not realize that the majority of men will not settle for them. Oh sure, they might go on a date, they may have a night of hey-hey-hey in the hay, but they will not marry them. Not only because they don't want to, but polygamy is outlawed. So mathematically one "top man" can only take out "one woman" and usually they're going to insist she's a top dame as well. This still leaves the majority of women unattached.

However, while this game of attrition is happening, understand something else is happening. A minority of women, perhaps with a little bit more foresight and maturity, are starting to size up potential marriage candidates. And while they may like the top 20% of men, they are happy to settle for the next quintile of men in the 40-20% range who have perhaps maybe more to offer than ripped pecks. Also other women maybe not the most beautiful of them are, are also thinking with a little foresight, snatching up the next quintile. And before you know it the top three quintiles or 60% of men are off the market.

In short what is happening is the opposite. A minority of women (20%) are keeping a majority of men (80%) off the marriage market, prohibiting other women from accessing them. How do these women do this? Because they have one trait the majority of women don't have - they're reliable.

Understand good and great men are not going to settle for an average or poor woman. Sure, we might date you, sure there's always the hey hey hey in the hay, but marriage? Commitment? Sorry, that requires adult maturity, responsibility, reliability, and truthfully the vast majority of women don't have that. This gives that minority of women who DO have the combination of reliability AND attractiveness a HUGE advantage over their pretty, but flaky counterpart.

The girl who shows up reliably at the agreed-upon time is one step closer to capturing a guy long term.

The girl who makes dinner and doesn't spew some kind of feminist doctrine is one step closer to capturing a guy long term.

The girl who supports herself, pays her rent, and manages a positive net worth with no subsidy from daddy or the state is one step closer to capturing a guy long term.

And though anecdotal, my girlfriend, though not a 10, snatched me from the clutches of

- a GM car model
- a top notch salsa queen
- a scorching hot (and equally promiscuous) Minnesota blond
- and other various 9's and 10's

because the woman showed up on time, did what she said she was going to do, made me lasagna without me asking, and promptly obeyed when I told her to get dolled up in lingerie.

And thus, the 20% of reliable and pretty early bird women who display responsibility reliability adult behavior professionalism and a HINT of selflessness get 80% of the proverbial worm.

However, there is a flaw in this analogy as only ONE reliable and pretty woman can take out only ONE man on the marriage market. THus it isn't so much an 80/20 rule as much as it is a pecking order. A solid 7 or 8 who is on time and doesn't play games will find a quality man loooong before her drama queen entitled 9 or 10 does. A solid 6 or 7 who doesn't flake on a date at the last minute will get a husband long before her mind-game playing 8 or 9 counterpart does. And while these savvy and reliable women pick the best away from the 3rd and 2nd quintile of men, after a decade of pursuing the top 20% of men (but never getting one) the 80% of women now have to choose from the bottom 40%.

Ah, equilibrium. What a wonderful natural concept.

Of course there's howls and whinings about "where have all the good men gone" and "why can't I find a maaaaaannnnn!?" but I, and most other guys, don't care. Reliable, responsible and attractive women have already sniped us out of the market and now you can have whatever remains. Just remember the time you shot down the guys who wanted to salsa dance.

Book Review - The Best of Roosh Vol. 1

May 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yes, I have been on a book review kick. You may think I'm a mad man reading this much this quickly, but the truth is I have read most books beforehand and took notes, and then spring cleaning and house repairs took over, postponing the review up to this week, making it look like I was a book worm and a reviewing fiend. Funny thing is that I still have 3 more books to go and truthfully, until I get counter reviews, the book reviews will be limited to a tit for tat mutually beneficial relationship.

The latest book is "The Best of Roosh Volume 1."

Roosh's latest book is, obviously a "best of" series. And while that may seem cheap and easy, the truth is I am actually a big fan of when bloggers compile their "best of" series.

The reason is simple - it's their BEST OF and let me mathematically point out what I'm talking about.

Roosh's "best of" consists of the top 90 posts out of 1,742 posts. His writing is normally superb, but when you take the best 90 out of nearly 2,000 posts you are talking the top 5% of his posts. My "best of" book "Top Shelf" is 183 posts out of 4,200, again, roughly the top 5% of my posts.

Do you think this writing is going to be anything but pure, intellectual stimulation? A lot of people think "best of" series are an easy way for the author to make a quick buck because they merely repackage what they've already written. And while true, they completely dismiss the quality of writing the author is refining, repackaging and presenting to the audience. In short, this is a person's best writing. However it was presented or published is moot.

Additionally, think of the time savings.

When you purchase an author's "best of" you're not really purchasing the writing in that you may have already read most of the posts. You are purchasing time savings. Because, yes, you could personally go through the past 6 years of posts and pull the best ones, but that will take you over 50 hours and if you pro-rate that at the median wage of $18 per hour, that's $900 in your labor to do so.

The $14 price is certainly worth it. So just like "Top Shelf" or "3 Years of Hate" you may want to consider purchasing "The Best of Roosh" because it's going to save you way more in labor trying to sift through their corresponding blogs for the gems of information.

Logistics and efficiency aside, what content can you expect from "The Best of Roosh?"

First, it is a great insight and chronology (though not presented in chronological order) of watching Roosh go from observant and independent thinking mid 20 something to accomplished and seasoned-veteran 30 something. Specifically, his tiring of the game. Though it has been his core and soul he mentions multiple times across multiple posts that to be a successful player means you must approach courting and picking up women as a job.

I don't know about you, but I don't like jobs. And, not to brag or be condescending (as I have nowhere near the success he has), I do have 8 years on Roosh in terms of age and am a bit further down the mine shaft than he is. And it is nice to see that, even with great success, the best start to tire of the constant scheming, planning, strategizing, etc. Matter of fact you start to feel bad for Roosh because if you step back and look at the book, you start to realize just what a high percentage of his life is dedicated to chasing girls. Though, this is purely speculation on my part, but I predict you'll see Roosh starting to abandon women and pursue more philosophical, loftier, and self-rewarding pursuits in the future. An epiphany most men never realize until death.

Second, it is once again, just like 3 Years of Hate, a GREAT primer and intermediary book for any young, middle aged, or old man. The book is just pure wisdom. And not pontificating observations or theorizing, but field experience. Again, I've never been the player Roosh was, but his experiences not only confirm what I experienced, but his experiences and observations go beyond what I ever did. One would do themselves great service reading and taking in what Roosh is writing about.

Third, I like the typos. I'm taking a religious stance with this in that I believe men are sick and tired of the predominantly female-dominated publishing/correcting-ones-english-at-the-expense-of-ideas industry. I truly believe that with online publishing proper grammar will finally be ranked below "ideas and content" as it should have always been until academian charlatans came in insisting their knowledge of "dangling participles" was more important than pioneering lines of thought. The more and more typos I see, overshadowed by intelligence, innovation, creativity, and just plain cleverness, the better for the publishing industry and readers.

Fourth, though crass even beyond my tastes at time, this book would be 4 times more beneficial to women than its intended male audience. The irony of course would be for women to get over/look past the crassness and vulgarity that would deter most women and once again READ WHAT THE MAN IS SAYING. Of course this is day dreaming, but doesn't make it any less true. Women would benefit IMMENSELY reading this.

I leave with two quotes I found outstanding in the book to give you a taste:

Is she in a group of more than three people? I find that three is the magic number.
If she's in a group with only one or two other girls, your approach not only has a high chance of success but a low proba-bility of getting cockblocked. In larger groups, the dynamic changes to where she tries to align herself with the group's previously agreed-upon personality. She's no longer herself, but a slimy leg of a big anti-social octopus. She will be colder (even though she may be single) and let her friends levy an immediate cockblock strike upon your person.

I'm not attempting to be funny:
I sincerely cannot feel the difference between the men and women of this country once you take away the clothing and hair. Men look and act like fags while women act like men of yesterday, all to make a lot of money in an office park that contains a Starbucks. If you draw a venn diagram of both genders the circles might as well completely overlap.

You can find "The Best of Roosh" in paperback and Kindle.

"He Made Partner"

May 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I'm at my bar.

This is my bar. The bar I do not have the deed to, but I still none the less own.

And sitting beside me are two men. One young, one old, both lawyers. The younger one "just made partner."

The older one is bestowing his wisdom upon the younger, and it is good wisdom.

"Don't forget family."

"Your wife is the most important thing in your life."

"Your childrens' baseball games are more important than late night meetings at the firm."

I admire the older lawyer and respect him. May even ask for his card later tonight to have a legal resource I respect and trust.

But what i can't get over is what the old man is asking of the young man. He is still telling the kid that there will be times that he will have to subvert his family for the "firm."

That there will be times he has to stick around late. That the family will have to come second. That he may have to compromise his morals to supplicate office politics and power struggles. It is an old man who has sold his soul to a particular path and is now badgering the young, new partner into a life that he may not really want.

Money is a currency people. No doubt about that. Money is a currrency.

But the most important currency is happiness, and the source of your happiness isn't the office. It's your wife/husband/children/friends.

This young victim is literally 2.5 feet from me.

The IRS Audits Glorious Hat!

May 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is why you support Karl and buy GLORIOUS HAT!

The Best Graduation Gift

May 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Your son, your daughter, your nephew or your niece are graduating this spring and are going to head off to college.

There is no better gift you can get for them than this.

This $12 book is a microscopic pittance compared to the price you or your children are going to pay for their college education. And if $12 is too expensive the $5 Kindle version is also available.

It simply is a must and (arrogance and bias aside) I don't know why it isn't in the hands of EVERY high school graduate every year.

Show your love through wisdom, guidance and leadership. Buy your children "Worthless." Or, if you have a blog, facebook, twitter or what have you, you would have my eternal thanks if you plugged it on your site. It really is that important of a book that if you want to do something to fight back against socialism and leftist academia, helping get this book into as many young student's hands as possible the best way to do it.

On a related note.

Republicans Get 30 Seconds, But the Democrats Get 20 Years

May 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"I have pity for the Republicans. How are they supposed to undo 20 years of leftist indoctrination with 30 second sound bytes for commercials?"

at the 1:05:00 mark or so.

Worthless Degree Awarness Month

June 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I finally figured it out, and if you follow me on this, I think we might actually be able to do some good.

Today, I declare June to be "Worthless Degree Awareness Month."

It may sound funny, but it really is no laughing matter. The single worst thing we do to our young kids is cripple them financially for the rest of their lives by telling them to waste 4-8 years of their youth and anywhere between $50,000-$150,000 on worthless degrees. Economically, the education bubble is on par with the housing bubble, but this time it is within our own control to stop it.

Since most kids graduate from high school during early June, it's the perfect time to "raise awareness" (I always wanted to use that vile phrase for something that's actually good, legit and noble) about the threats and dangers of majoring in a worthless field.

All we have to do is get the word out there.

Got a blog? Start linking and citing articles about worthless degrees.
Got a child or a family member? Sit down and have a chat with them.
Got a PTA group you know? Have someone come speak to them.
And as always if you don't know how to broach the subject with your children, buying them a copy of "Worthless" is definitely a diplomatic and caring way to tell them about the economic realities of choosing a good degree.

Aurini on the History of Psychological Problems - Part 1

June 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Davis is putting together a three part series on the history of psychological illness. Part 1 is up and I strongly recommend it. Not that it would help you self-psycho-analyze yourself, but it provides an interesting insight, especially given how nearly 50% of westerners are on some kind of medication.

A Voice for Men

June 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

As everything gets to the forefront, then everything gets put on the back burner, getting A Voice for Men in the Capposphere being one of them. So now I finally have the time.

Was fortunate enough to have Paul Elam and Stardusk take my call when they were talking about MGTOW.

A Voice for Men is now also included in The Manosphere Directory.

Drawbacks of "Making It"

June 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If you play your cards right, or just don't make any major errors in your life, you will "make it."

What does that mean?

Well, whatever your life goal was specific to you.

You don't have to work for the man.
You have enough residual or dividend income to not work any more.
You achieved a "minimalist nirvana" allowing you to jet set around the world.
You won the lottery.

Whatever it is, in general, it means you achieved the goal you set out for yourself in life and can now enjoy the fruits of your labor.

However, like all things in life, nothing is perfect and everybody's life will have problems regardless of how happy and perfect it may look to outsiders. And since a disproportionate percentage of my readers have independent psychologies and spirits, and are likely to head down this path, I wanted to not so much warn but "explain" what kind of problems you'll run into when you "make it."

First, understand any unique or different individual is so far down the right or the left of the bell curve that though highly talented in some areas, they are by statistical default the "outliers of society." You, by definition of being you, will not fit or jive with vast majority of the population. This is of course your primary strength, allowing you a different life, a better life, and a life not wasted. But at the same time since you are so far down the tail of the curve, it is also very lonely.

For example I climbed Desseret Peak on a beautiful Spring day in Utah. The weather was perfect. It was sunny, it was a perfect day for everybody to be out hiking.

How many people were on the mountain range that day?

4.

One was named "Tom" who I met at the peak and the other 2 were some rookies who were trying to summit the peak starting in the afternoon (which means they would be hiking down at night and getting lost). Aside from that, nothing and nobody.

The reason is simple. Tom and I are too far down the right of the curve. Neither of us had to work. Neither of us had kids we had to tend to. And both of us were in the necessary shape to scale Deseret. Those three traits combined ensured there would only be two people on top of that mountain that beautiful day (and it was a statistical coincidence we were even on the peak at the same time).

The point is that if you pursue an individualistic lifestyle you will be to a certain extent peerless because only you are your own individual. And dare you start to not only think, but live, outside of the box, there will be less contemporaries for you to meet and engage with.

Second, society is not geared or tailored for the individual. It is tailored for the masses.

My girlfriend and I were driving past the mall and I asked her,

"My god, how many people go shopping? Look at all those cars!!! What can those people possibly be buying?"

But then I realized it wasn't the thousands of people in the mall that were weird or odd. It was me. The only places I shop are Wal-Mart, the grocery store, and Amazon. I never go "shopping" as if it's an activity, I only shop for the bare necessities because it's a chore. The rest of society does the opposite, and society in turn designs itself around this, shopping merely being one small example of this;

Highways are built to deliver worker drones to centers of work.
Work schedules are assumed to be 8-5.
You get health insurance with your employers
Restaurants serve breakfast during breakfast hours, lunch during lunch hours, and dinner during dinner hours.
Everybody goes to college
Everybody needs to own a home

The list goes on.

You buck this, you deny yourself the economies-to-scale benefits that come with it.

You self-employed? To hell with you on many levels. You can't qualify for a mortgage, you get to pay twice the social security tax and self-employment tax, you get to pay for your own insurance and society will view you as a loser just one step above welfare recipient.

You don't want kids? Tough crap anyway. Pay more in property taxes to subsidize other people's children. Pay more in taxes in general as we provide WIC, EBT and welfare to people who had children they couldn't afford. A sizable percentage of people won't want to date you. And then there's always the occasional person who will claim you're selfish for not ~~suffering their misery~~ breeding.

You need to moonlight at night to work on your own personal projects? Too bad, restaurants aren't open, nobody is awake, and let's not forget the social stigma associated with working as a security guard.

This doesn't mean there aren't benefits for working outside the Matrix (say, like never commuting), but it is to say you will not be able to avail yourself of how society is structured, even sometimes having to work against it.

Finally, arguably the worst drawback is what I like to call the "Shark Syndrome."

Sharks cannot stop swimming. If they do, the lack of flow of water over their gills deprives them of oxygen and they die. So even when sharks sleep, they are swimming.

Independent types like us are the same.

Either driven by poverty, the drudgery of a corporate gig, a disgust with society, or the intellectual curiosity and desire to push your mind and abilities to their limit, we are constantly pushing, working, and striving to succeed and "make it."

The problem is "what do you do when you make it?"

Just stop?

The sad truth is to "make it" usually takes at least 10-20 years of hard work, discipline and effort. And by that time (and combined with our types of psychologies) you simply can't stop. You can't "turn it off." It is not longer a pursuit to achieve independence and luxury, but becomes one of achieving excellence.

This results in the ironic situation of where you may have been brought up poor and wanted nothing more than to live a life of luxury, but after two decades of striving, working hard, and being innovative, that temerity and work-ethic has now become part of you, if not, fully defines you. And even though you may have achieved the lax life of luxury you always wanted, you can't enjoy it because your mind won't let you. It now needs to keep going.

This forms two problems for those of you who actually "make it."

One, (and I believe this especially for men), you need "agency." I had to look this up because Aurini with his freaking 217 point IQ keeps using words I don't know, forcing unwanted vocabulary lessons on me. In other words you need purpose in life. YOu can't just, at the age of 40, retire and sit on a beach. Certainly not after the hell you went through to get to that point. You need "agency." So even if you won the lottery and could just jet set across the world, the average man (and I am presuming woman) could not just sit there and eat bon bons all day playing video games. You would need to get out and do something of worth or merit otherwise you have none.

Two, you are psychologically incapable of enjoying life and leisure, because it is the pursuit of that leisure, not enjoying it, that gives you the greatest joy. This is not necessarily a bad thing in that this constant pursuit of achievement results in becoming the "World's Most Interesting Man," because once you've "made it" you ask "what's next?" But since you've made it, your next venture needn't be business minded or profitable, just something that is more challenging than before.

This is a problem I (and you will) face in that my "new challenges" are not only NOT relaxing, but increasingly risky as well. My 2,200 mile motorcycle ride (on a crotch rocket) from Wyoming to Phoenix, AZ was awesome, but not enough. I will now be doing a 4,500 motorcycle ride through the Canadian Rockies (alone of course). Doing a 20 mile hike in the Badlands wasn't enough, I had to transverse the entire park (nearly suffering heat stroke and almost falling into an underground cavern). And even my daily chore list isn't enough, usually resulting in me staying up later than I should and depriving myself of sleep.

Whatever the case, it doesn't stop as you need to constantly be going and you never let yourself relax and enjoy life.

THe solutions to these two problems are simple.

First, ensure you always have something to do. And I'm not talking about "cleaning the house" or "changing the oil," but projects that make you a better man. Projects that provide you agency. Writing a book. Rebuilding a car. Self-teaching yourself electronics. Climbing mountains. etc. And you're going to have to provide yourself your own agency, because it isn't like corporate America or the feminist-HR department is going to provide you agency, let alone rewarding agency. You need to have an endless list of life-projects you're going to work on to carry you until you're dead.

Second, you need to take some of that self-control and discipline that helped you "make it" in the first place, turn it around and FORCE yourself to enjoy and relax. Again, I am being a bit of a hypocrite here. I actually have to FORCE myself to sleep till 10AM. I actually have to FORCE myself to play video games. And if you take my laptop away from me I cannot just "sit and enjoy a cigar." It is probably only through booze I can force myself to relax. But you must also realize, more importantly, that your body is not designed to CONSTANTLY go at the rate that helped you "make it." It needs to rest. It needs to relax. YOu will only shorten your life expectancy if you can't turn it off. It is here where getting into a good habit like FORCING yourself at least 2 hours a day of watching TV or playing video games will help. It is here where making sure you get 9-10 hours of sleep a day will post pone your rapidly approach stroke or heart attack.

Again, I am the pot calling the kettle black in this regard, but when you get here and finally "make it" these are the new problems you will face in life.

The Thankless Job of Aggregator

June 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Aggregators account for a plurality, if not, outright majority of my traffic, and therefore the lifeblood of my blog. Matter of fact, if you look at your stat tracker or site counter, chances are it's the same for you and any other blog.

Just one problem - they're aggregators.

In being in aggregator you are doing the most selfless and altruistic work in that you never get to write or produce your own stuff. You are constantly (and charitably) linking to and championing others.

What thanks do you get?

Well, you can monetize your site and get some revenue that way. You get the great respect and kudos from the sites you aggregate, but beyond that, not much. It's a thankless job.

Therefore I did want to highlight some of the aggregators out there who day in and day out do you, me and everybody else in the blogging world a big favor. They provide our readership an easy and convenient was to access out material and should be noted, highlighted and pimped out on a regular basis.

Let me know if I'm missing any.

Vivalamanosphere
A Voice for Men
RedPill Reddit
Delusion Damage
Articlesformen
Libertarian Zebby
Instapundit
Hawaiian Libertarian

The Best Compliment I Ever Received

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"You are an evil Cary Grant."

Please post yours below, I have a theory.

I'm Not Having a Threesome With Jesus

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ah Haley, you loving beautiful angel you.

I hereby award you the third "Well Hello Second Armored Award." which if you don't know what it is, it is an award granted ONLY to women who support us men in this psychotic battle we have against feminism, serving as those "sweet beautiful babies."

Haley won this award for recognition in exposing how many Christian women abuse (not use, but ABUSE) the bible (and religion in general) to advance their own aims over other people, even JC and God. In this specific case, claiming they can't date "non-Christians," but have no problems leading them or or dating them anyway, causing not just confusion, but some pain and harm on the other end.

However, I also thoroughly enjoy watching this sector of feminism in that it is further complicated with a religious angle. Yes, having a religion and abusing it like a get out of jail free card any time you want to misconstrue the bible for your own dating/courting advantage, certainly is in itself an advantage. But the complication or weakness is one where the adherents blindly subscribe to "fateism" and "the lord will provide" when reality will not. For example, she quotes a purist from her post:

I enjoyed listening to the panel discussion on 2nd dates. It sounds like CO Springs has a pretty great Christian singles dating scene. Maybe I ought to move there! Just kidding, of course…but I've been a little discouraged this weekend. I'll be turning 33 years old this week, and I haven't ever been on a first date as an adult, let alone a 2nd date. I don't know how I'll get to marriage someday (something I highly value, study and prepare for, desire, respect, etc.) if I can't even get to a first date. I suppose I'll keep asking God to work a miracle, because I think that may be what it will take!

My god, how absolutely precious and delicious.

I'm going to say it again for the cheap seats AND for altruistic purposes as well, because if these Christian ladies want to know why they can't find men, this will answer it for them.

Their Christian-approved wish list is MUTUALLY EXCLUSIVE to what they are physically and mentally attracted to.

In order for any man to meet all of those criteria, not to mention be the type to tolerate modern day church, those traits and characteristics are antithetical to what most women find attractive in men - independence, charisma, independent thought, manliness, leadership, wit, cleverness, humor, sexual passion, fun and charm. You just will not find those men at the local singles church group.

However, I, in my cynical nature of course, believe something much more nefarious, because truthfully I don't believe the human mind to be that naive. What I believe you see happening here is on a subconscious (maybe even conscious) level, are these Check-List-Christian women belying the fact they value power and control more than love and affection. This is of course based in my cynical belief the majority of religious practitioners do not follow a religion for the religion's sake, but rather because they gain ancillary and ulterior benefits (business connections, social networks, finding a spouse, belonging, etc.). God, Jesus, the bible are dead last and merely tools to be used to rationalize your mistakes and lord yourself over others. Thus when these women list impossible demands of a husband, cite the bible for convenient (albeit, baseless) moral authority during arguments, or conveniently excusing piss-poor real world results on "fateism" or "God has a plan," is proof not of a "good Christian girl committed to Christ," but a power-hungry coward who values control over love.

And that is not...oh...what is the phrase? "Not very Christian."

Enjoy the decline!

Book Review - 30 Bangs

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In my completely not-chronological reading and reviewing of Roosh's various books, the last one is the aptly titled "30 Bangs"

A review of (surprise!) 30 Rooshian bangs.

The standard caveats that apply to all of Roosh's works apply here as well.

It is crass.
It's about sex.
It's how guys speak behind closed doors.
Women will feign disgust and indignation, citing his crassness, accuse it of misogyny, but will be the last ones to put it down.
And blabbity blah blah blah.

We've all heard it before so you know what you're getting into.

However, caveats are where the similarities end in that this book, though about courting and sex, differentiates itself from the rest of his standard "guides." Namely, it is more of a clinical, sociological study, documenting 30 different data points. Roosh, never being able to get rid of the micro-biology scientist in him, analyzes and assesses each of these 30 data points. Certainly it is entertaining, granting the reader the opportunity to live vicariously through him, but trends, correlations, and statistics start to shine through to the point you see there is some science to this art.

Of particular note was the number of times "we're not having sex" came up in a book where the outcome was known THEY WERE GOING TO HAVE SEX. Of the 30 datapoints, I'd estimate at least half of the subjects claimed "we're not having sex" only to have sex by the end of the chapter. Another common refrain was where test subjects would claim to "hate" Roosh's blog, but then still find him fascinating and intriguing. Also prevalent was Roosh's strategic planning which manifested itself in the form of multiple venues, the strategic use of booze, "I'll miss the subway," "I just need a nap" and other tactics Roosh deploys throughout the book.

In short, this book is one of empiricism, but also entertainment and would make this book just as good of an introductory course to redpill/Andro/Manosphere/PUA/etc., as any other well-written book on the subject. It is very entertaining, it is very reasonably priced, and it is very digestible taking me only an afternoon to consume.

The only other observations I would have (which can't even be called "drawbacks," just observations) are:

1. The later 6th of the book is simply a recap of his exploits in South America, so for people who have already read "A Dead Bat in Paraguay" you may wish to skip these chapters altogether.

2. I noticed a pattern in Roosh's behavior that was always there, but just now consciously made it to my frontal lobes and made me have a scary potential epiphany. When trying to meet girls, Roosh would make attempt, after attempt, after attempt, nearly (and not to be crass, but because it is the perfect analogy) identical to a sperm cell trying to impregnate an egg. He'd try for the touching, get shot down, only to try again. He'd try for the kiss, get shot down, only to try again. He'd try for sex, only to get shot down, only to try again, and in many instances, multiple times. However, regardless of the volume of rejection, he would INEVITABLY succeed.

However, because of the context of this book all we see is Roosh "succeeding" (nay "slaying") women. If you step back and view it from a different angle, there is a different impression. One where you postulate women were already OK with the idea of sex, but were merely having the poor guy dance and jump through hoops for their entertainment. Roosh was providing them with MASSIVE amounts of attention, and then finally being rewarded with sex. In other words, what if women like sex, just as much as anybody else, but they know they can extract an incredible amount of attention out of somebody, then who is really being taken advantage of?

Admittedly, it's just a theory.

3. Finally, I am impressed where Roosh manages to fit in his John Dillinger-esque flatulence problem in EVERY ONE OF HIS BOOKS, but does not let that impede him.

Favorite quotes from the book:

She was a hyper-educated feminist who thought she knew everything about the world, repeatedly saying things that turned off my wang. I responded with slight jabs like, “Are you always like this?” or “Don’t you ever stop?”...We made out briefly in my car when we got to her friend’s house. She said, “It’s obvious that you want me bad.” Her masculine attitude all but assured that this would be a pump-and-dump.

I pushed again for a drink, logically explaining that it would be ten times faster and easier to get to know each other in person than by email. It was a dangerous move to use logic on a female, but she finally agreed.

I had trouble finding the exit to her gated complex so I ended up scaling a concrete wall. Unsure of where I was, I went to the nearest store, a Sam’s Club, and asked for the phone number to a taxi. They gave me a dirty look like they were about to call the police, so I left and roamed around various suburban streets like a confused cow until I regained my bearings by studying the skyline. I got on a street that seemed to head downtown and then took a bus back home.

All in all I would say this is his second best book, distantly behind "A Dead Bat In Paraguay" and definitely worth the price and your time.

You can find in in paperback and Kindle, and also don't forget the ole Captain's most recent books "Enjoy the Decline" and "Boris the Shitting Buffalo."

College Administrators Resorting to Cold Calling

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I cannot fully explain just how much I loathe college administrators. In due time they will become the next "bankers" in that society, especially younger folk, will wake up and realize just how much these vermin of society screwed them over selling them not just a bill of goods, and not just crippling their finances, but how they brainwashed the youth to so effortlessly go into debt to pay for their bloated salaries. And when the education bubble collapses they will be the righteous scapegoats just like the bankers were for the housing bubble.

However, there is good news on the front. News that shows just how desperate college administrators are that the gravy train may be ending.

From my Secret College Student Agent in the Field:

"Hey there. Just a quick note between study sessions. I wanted to let you know the latest work-study project I have been helping with. Cold calling former students. Yup. 2k+ Names and numbers of students that were enrolled for spring, but have not yet enrolled for fall semester*. This is the script I was given.*

"Hello, my name is------, from FUU and we just wanted to let everyone know that enrollment is now open for fall semester. If you have any questions our website, fuu.edu, is available or you are welcome to call us at XXX-XXX-XXX. Thank you have a great day"

Fall classes start Sept. 2nd, so there is still plenty of time to enroll, but the administrators are poopin their pants, because by this time there should be looooooots more enrolled, and summer was down a lot also. I don't have those numbers yet, but for them to rally the troops to cold call it has to be bad. First crack in the edububble? Well see.

I hate cold calling. yuck. YOur tax dollars at work, go work study."

Sniff, sniff. You'll forgive me if a little tear of pride in my little agent in the field is welting in my eye.

Remember, June is "Worthless Degree Awareness Month." Do your part by forwarding, linking or just plain warning your kids about the risks of majoring in a worthless degree. Also consider buying the book "Worthless" which is .0016% the cost of the average college degree (unless you buy a Kindle version which is only .0006%!)

Kick Ass Father's Day Gift Idea #1

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"The Man with No Name Trilogy" consisting of

"The Good, The Bad and The Ugly"
"A Fistful of Dollars"
and
"A Few Dollars More."

Don't get your father a gift that sucks. Get him something kick ass.

Economically Benefiting from Vice

June 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A champion against corporate welfare, and rare ally i have on the left is Ed Kohler of "The Deets". He is a nice guy, but brainwashed none the less, living in the echo chamber of MInneapolis. However, what aligns us is his impeccable work aaginst Zigy Wilf who is the owner of the Minnesota Vikings and rich man who has bent over the Minnesota taxpayer to subsidize himself a new stadium. there's already enough reasons not to attend a Minnesota Viking's game

1. They suck and have never won a superbowl
2. None of them are from Minnesota and are merely people fat, overweight men live vicariously and Monday Morning Quarterback through.
3. Parking sucks

but

4. Subsidized by the taxpayer can be added to the list.

However, a friend of mine sent me this:

"Football sponsorship is a big business."

And the "football" he's talking about is not "football," it's soccer.

Apparently over in the old country casinos and gambling companies are allowed to sponsor various soccer teams. The two meld together well since you can bet on sports, so an alliance between the gambling industry and professional sports would make sense.

The article cites problems, wondering if there are drawbacks to such an alliance, and of course casinos are not the end all be all of every economy's problems. But if Deadwood and Indian reservations are any proxy, why not use gambling to pay Zigy his "Wilfare" (as Ed likes to call it) and leave the tax payer alone.

I know, I know. Me and my stupid simple economic solutions to simple economic problems. If all of the politicians were dead maybe we could make some headway.

This is Ed, Ed and My other Sponsor Ed

June 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Today's special at Ranger Self Defense is self-defense/fighting instructional videos.

Kick Ass Father's Day Gift Ideas #2

June 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

These actually came recommended from readers:

Band of Brothers DVD Set

Bruce Willis DVD Set including "Last Man Standing" and "The Last Boy Scout"

Stanley Tool Set (though there are a ton you can find on teh interwebz) and my recommendation a humidor for your dad's cigars

The Efficiency of Male Anger and Bluntness

June 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Life is short.

It is only short because it is finite and has an end.

Thus, why you get enragingly pissed when you are behind somebody going 2 MPH under the speed limit.

Because, no it isn't "'ONLY' 2 MPH, why are you so easily angered?"

It is a parasitic, verminous, scum-human directly transferring precious seconds of your life into their luxurious leisure to drive slow and hold up the rest of society.

Thus, why I like blunt, direct, and truthful (read - "male") conversation and honesty (and yes, that "male" bit was a test).

You see, since I am finite and I am going to die, I want to get the most bang for my "seconds of life" buck while on this planet. And no matter how petty or minor somebody holding up my life, be it in the form of a soccer mom talking on her phone in the left lane beside a semi going the exact same speed, or morons who are too stupid to use the self-check out lane at the grocery store, but occupy it none the less, preventing me from getting on with my life, I want them out of my life.

Unfortunatley, murder (let alone the mass-murder on a scale required to eliminate all the bottleneck people in my life) isn't legal, and until it is, I am relegated to maximizing my life's efficiency via other means, namely those that are legal and within my control.

One of these primary means is dealing with direct, blunt people.

Oh, yes, in today's timid and pansified emasculated society "blunt, direct, and truthful" means "mean"

"bigoted"
"racist"
"hateful"
"asshole"

and whatever other terms the castratti has come up with, but these people are the most noble, honest, and trustworthy people you can associate yourself with.

They don't waste your time, they don't waste your life, they don't care about your feelings, and in a very altruistic way (assuming you can be an adult and not take pansidied victimization umbrage because you're addicted to woeismeism) listening to them interacting with them conducting commerce with them and otherwise engaging with them will improve your lot in life in that you are dealing with reality and a person who deals with reality, not a charalatan playing "Minnesota Nice" who is lying to you so you have warm fuzzies.

So you'll appreciate the (literally) hours of precious finite life I'll save you about which next video game console to commit to when I present this blunt, harsh, "mean," "cruel," "arrogant," and all the other epitaphs that are now compliments in the real world, analysis of whether you should buy Sony, Nintendo or XBox's newest generation.

You can thank me by calling me names and telling me what an asshole I am.

A Classic to Irk Your Lefty Friends With

June 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This seems to have had a bit of a resurgence.

No Man Has Any Excuse for Not Working Out

June 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Thanks to this badass mofo.

Next time you think

"I don't want to work out."
"Working out sucks."
"I hate working out."

have yourself a cup of STFU and hit the gym AND be thankful.

Boo-Freaking-Hoo

June 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What angers me most is that the idea of bailing out any industry, let alone the cronyistic, nepotistic cesspool of the East Coast/London publishing house industry, is even palatable to society. Society is so ignorant and so clueless about basic economics they'll damn well eat up the "ooooo, we need to save the libraries" and vote to tax themselves more to support this veritable horse and buggy industry.

Hat tip.

Daddy, Where Do Lawyers Come From?

June 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

AKA "Finally, now we know why lawyers are mostly scum."

The single largest concentration of worthless degrees is the liberal arts. And the single largest destination for liberal arts majors who can't find jobs is law school.

Law degrees are much like MBA's, just even more depraved of morality and integrity. It is not a coincidence that those too lazy to pursue a real degree end up in law school. Just look at the undergrad degrees most lawyers have and you'll see very few Engineering majors or accountants, but you'll see a ton of Sociology majors and hyphenated-American studies majors. But this disproportionate representation of liberal arts degrees also goes a long way in explaining why lawyers have the bad (and well-deserved) reputation they do.

Starting in elementary school, children are told how great and wonderful they are. You could even say they're brainwashed to think too highly of themselves and certainly are brainwashed today to have an entitlement mentality. These kids continue on through high school and when it comes time to pick a major they never consider the real-world ramifications of picking a worthless degree because the entire time they've been told how wonderful they are and how successful they'll be. Sure enough, a disproportionately high number of them choose the liberal arts. Because it's nearly impossible to get anything below a 3.5 GPA in the liberal arts, their egos and entitlement mentalities are only reinforced. It isn't until they graduate and can't find a job is their fragile little world shattered. However, undaunted, they continue on to law school, work very hard for two years, and after incurring another $75,000 in debt, they still can't find a job (or at least a decent paying one).

By this time, you have a person who has been told they deserve the world for the past 20 years. The world, however, is not complying. But this person has a law degree and huge student debts, not to mention in their minds they think they worked really hard for the past six years. What do you think this person is going to do?

Of course this person is going to do whatever they can to make money whether it's moral or not. Frivolous lawsuits. Chasing ambulances. Concocted class-action lawsuits. They're entitled to it! However, more commonly today, you see lawyers join political crusades. The primary purpose of which is to extract money from either political donors, charities or the taxpayers under some kind of "social justice" theme. A lot will follow the rule, "those who can't do teach" and return to Academia where they will become bitter, angry professors. And a lot of them, if their parents have the money, will simply enter politics (go and see if your representatives in government have law degrees and hail from well-to-do families).

More can be found here.

Percent of the Population That Works

June 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I thought I would have to actually work at this chart, meaning pull the population figures from the Census Bureau, then getting the "total people employed" figures and then divide the two. However, it seems the folks in charge of the FRED database have actually been bucking the government employee trend by (GASP!) working! The data series is already pre-calculated!

Naturally my intent was to highlight the significant drop in the percent of the population that is working and show that a smaller and smaller minority of people are supporting the rest of us, however something did jump out at me and that was just how few people were actually working back in the early 60's. only 37% of the population supported the remaining 63%.

Of course this is somewhat misleading as it does not consider stay-at-home mothers (or fathers) "working" and it wasn't until women left the house for the labor market did this ratio increase. What is interesting, however, is how we had lower unemployment higher-technology adjusted standards of living higher economic growth and sounded government finances than we do today with 10% LESS of the population working.

I also find it interesting that with more people working how government spending as a percent of GDP went up. Should this not have been the reverse? As more people labored, then private sector GDP would have gone up, shrinking government's spending as a percentage...unless...hmmmmm.....there is one thing that would explain all of the above.

But I'll let you junior, deputy, aspiring, official or otherwise economists out there figure that out.

Saint Frick Goes to Wall Street

June 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I swear, for the Patron Saint's Name of Frick:

Stocks Soar; Dow Gains 200 Points on Jobs Data

CNBC Text Size

Published: Friday, 7 Jun 2013 | 4:11 PM ET

By: JeeYeon Park | CNBC.com Writer

Recommend 70 Twitter 161 +1 1 LinkedIn 12 Share

Stocks closed sharply higher Friday as the monthly employment report suggested economic growth is tepid enough for the Federal Reserve to maintain its bond-buying program over the next few months.

I'm not making it up. I can't. It's too god damned stupid to make up.

So it is FEDERAL RESERVE BOND BUYING PROGRAMS that is a sign of economic growth, NOT THE ACTUAL ECONOMY GROWING?????

He Treats Her Like an Equal and She Gets Enraged

June 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An "environmental" engineering major (and yes, the quotes were on purpose, because "environmental" engineering isn't a real degree - note "chemistry and calculus is tough!") asks a man for his opinion. And not only does he obey her, he tells her...

the truth.

And in doing so actually treats her as a genuine equal because that is what men do to other men. WE are blunt, we are truthful, and we don't give a damn about your feelings. We just care about getting the job done and done the right, best, and most efficient way. And we know you ladies would have it no other way, because we would NEVER dare to treat you as anything else but true and genuine equals. And that's what you wanted.

Remember, June is "Worthless Degree Awareness Month." And in honor of feminism I say we help prevent women from majoring in worthless degrees and doing our best to help them close that pay gap by forcing them into the trades and STEM.

Kick Ass Father's Day Gifts #4

June 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Shaving kit (as recommended by a reader)

Old Man Cologne that reminds their daughters of when dad was young and reminds mom of when dad was hot. My female friend recommends Aramis, but you can get Polo and Drakar and other old timer cologne. Heck, you can get him Brut! However, if you Cappy Cap ladies want to see what the Captain smells like, then I recommend "Man."

Air Compressor

And because your dad is the only person in the world as cool as Steve McQueen, the ultimate Steve McQueen collection.

"Why Can't You Be Happy Cappy???"

June 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Occasionally I will write a screed (which I am prone to do) and will then get comments akin to "geez Cappy, I love ya, but why can't you be happy all the time, 24-7, no questions asked?"

It reminds me of this Calvin and Hobbes cartoon.

So here is something cheerful, joyful, happy, and cute!

Good vs. OK vs. Bad Suicide aka "Suicide in the Manosphere"

June 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

As you know, I am not against suicide. I'm all for euthanasia. I'm all for the Smith and Wesson retirement plan. And if life gets particularly hard (say, you're crippled or life is really just horrible to you), then yes, I do not see suicide as a "cowardly" option, but rather a sane and logical one. However, a couple spates of suicide and knowing some of my friends who have committed it themselves, I believe many of us, especially men, and especially those of us in the Manosphere need to delve into this dark and macabre world as it is more pertinent to our demographic group than others.

First, the good suicide.

Suicide CAN be a legitimate and optimal choice. The most common reason I can see is if you are terminally ill, in pain and don't want to cripple future generations with hospital bills to keep your failing corpse alive another 6 miserable months. Hunter Thompson for example, my grandmother (who did not commit suicide, but was a vegetable for her last 5 years of life) another, or anybody whose physical body is failing them and the conclusion is foregone. I will further contend (and will admittedly not get everybody to agree with me) that if your life is irreparably damaged, destitute, disadvantaged and genuinely hopeless, then yes suicide can certainly be a legitimate option (though I provide the caveat if it comes to "suicide" then all options are open and you should try robbing a bank or something drastic to see if you can't turn your fortunes around, because, what's it going to cost you?).

Beyond that we enter a "gray area" of suicide that I can "understand," but do not agree with. Specifically, when people have success, reach the pinnacle of their lives, and then, have nothing left to live for. You see this in a spike in suicide after people retire, or the likes of Ernest Hemingway perhaps, Kurt Cobain another, or any number of successful celebrities that then suffer from depression or suicide (Amy Winehouse). I am of the personal theory "there is always something to do, some adventure to go on, something to explore," so no matter if you conquer the world there was always places to go and people to befriend. Of course, this is easier said than done when your entire being is wrapped up in you being a great singer, a great author, a great astronaut or a great "anything," but still, family, friends and loved ones should always trump your career.

Then there is bad suicide. Suicide that shows you are weak. You're on drugs. You're a woeisme person, and you're just too damn lazy to change your life. You'd rather feel sorry for yourself and get all emo, making multiple faux, suicide attempts in the vain hope you'll get some attention that will yield a knight in shining armor to save you, but in the end it boils down to you not wanting to expend the effort and energy necessary to make life worth living. It is these people I have no patience or pity for.

Bad suicide does not interest me intellectually. And "good suicide," though not palatable to the average westerner's mind, is a foregone philosophical no-brainer for me. What intrigues me though is the gray area, specifically for these reasons three:

1. The two life coaches that just committed suicide. These aren't the first, and I fear they won't be the last, but why are people, who are presumably experts on life, committing suicide? And furthermore, why would you listen to this group of people? It would be like reading Jezebel for marriage or dating advice. Regardless, there seems to be a disturbingly high percentage of "motivational speakers" or people who generally dispense personal advice that end up killing themselves, questioning the legitimacy of such a profession. The only way I can see this being legitimate is if they pushed the psychological and philosophical boundaries of happiness so far they mastered it and it became boring.

2. Mystery from "The Game." I'll have to apologize, but I had to spend some significant time tracking down the post where i read this, but "Mystery" who is the author of "The Game" gets suicidal (and I am totally trusting Rollo did his research on this). Again, a guy who is a professional PUA, dispensing advice, feeling suicidal.

3. The handful of stories and posts I've read, but cannot find right now, at various Manosphere sites about "totally cool, awesome, incredibly successful men with the ladies" who ended up committing suicide anyway (I would appreciate if any of you could send me the links because I know they're out there).

In short, there seems to be a psychological profile of pick up artists, ladies men, successful babe hounds, many of whom are and have dispensed advice that are either dead by their own hand or contemplate it today. And what I can't figure out is, is it because these men were highly successful, finally figuring out an insanely complex algorithm that was never meant to be solved, and thus unintentionally took away their own meaning in life

or have something wrong with them that makes them gravitate, like "life coaches" and "motivational speakers," towards an advice-dispensing profession plagued by high suicide rates.

Thoughts? Opinions? Observations? Anecdotes or empirical evidence?

Coincidentally and NOT to be considered a subject or example of the above, is this post is sponsored in part by Private Man's dating advice services. Read all the stuff you want on the internet, it is general advice. NOT advice tailored to you. That's where Private Man comes in. One on one advice, SPECIFICALLY addressed to you and your situation and over the phone as well. No texts, no e-mails, unless that is what you want.

Why You Want to Be Like Mike Rowe

June 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Mention "Sam Elliot" to pretty much any man in America and he will respond positively saying things like "Yeah, cowboy guy with mustache" or "the dude."

Mention "Sam Elliot" to your mother or perhaps even your grandmother and you will be shocked and surprised with the lewd and bawdy commentary that ensues (and you never thought your mother would say!).

Why?

Well, let me explain.

Sam Elliot, while an OK looking guy does not stand out to any man, and most men would not see why he stands out. Truth be told, I STILL don't see why he stands out. However my mother (not to mention a score of other elderly ladies) swoons, nearly passes out when you mention "Sam Elliot." Was it because he was hotter when he was younger?

No, for as it turns out there is actually a lot more to Sam Elliot than meets the eye and a lesson we can all take from him. So let us fast forward to people more our age.

Having the SAEG (TM) that I am gifted with and actually listening to the words coming out of my mother's mouth, I focused on when she kept saying he was "real" and he "was a man." She dislikes George Clooney and dislikes Brad Pitt and kept harping on "the real man" aspect that her and her elderly female colleagues liked (nay, salivated over).

So my brain scanned its archives and came up with another guy who I though would fit the "real man" bill - Mike Rowe.

And I said, "So is Mike Rowe a hottie?"

My mother, not knowing who he was said, "Who's Mike Rowe?"

I said, "You know, Mike Rowe. The guy who does 'The World's Dirtiest Jobs.'"

"No, don't know who you're talking about."

I said, "the guy who did the special 'How Booze Built America'"

"No, still don't know who you're talking about."

Then I said, "The guy who wears a cap and does the Ford truck commercials."

And you should have see her knees turn to jelly.

"Oh! YES! OH MY GOD! HE IS EXACTLY WHAT I"M TALKING ABOUT!"

And so let us take a lesson as to why every young man should be aiming to be like Mike Rowe.

First, Mike Rowe is not a "cutie" or a "pretty boy Floyd."

He is a man. He has changed his own oil, done pretty much every other disgusting real-man-imaginable job via his TV show, probably has rebuilt an engine or two in his life, owns Stanley Tools, and is a guy who can get shit done. George Clooney, pretty as he may be, only has experience in being...well...George Clooney and Rose Mary Clooney's nepotist. Mike Rowe is a normal guy, who soared through the ranks of real life under his own steam, and is definitely the guy you want on your team in a post-apocalyptic world. His face shows this and women see it.

Second, he is middle aged, BUT physically in shape.

Have you seen his physique? He hides it under sweatshirts, but if you pay attention during the Ford commercials he is the last guy I would want to rumble with, even if the lord were to grant me an additional 4 inches in height and 30 pounds of muscle. And this physique does not come from a personal trainer, it comes from regular ole work and toil. Any man his age, whose life has forged his physique into that, is a man who has lived a real life and one that women want.

Finally, Mike Rowe is a normal guy, and therefore in most women's eyes he's attainable. Sure, Hollywood and People Magazine go out of their way to brainwash women into thinking George Clooney is the sexiest man alive, and 100% of the women would jump at the chance to date George Clooney...

but you don't have billion dollar media empires putting your face on worthless magazines, do you?

You get to live in the real world. And therefore you have to figure out who you should model yourself after given this real world you live in. And fashioning yourself after a "normal guy" like Mike Rowe will lead to much better results than fashioning yourself after a guy like George Clooney, because the truth is you aren't a celebrity. You are a normal guy. And if George Clooney and Mike Rowe were walking down the street WITHOUT their celebrity status, women would choose Mike Rowe every single time.

So remember, and take it from my mom (and every other crass-talking woman in her cadre of foul-mouthed females), you don't want to be pretty boy Floyd. You don't want to be Brad Pitt. You want to be the tough, rugged, torn-jean, motorcycle-fixing, whiskey swillin', blue collar guy who can punch above his weight, but remembers to buy mom flowers on her birthday.

Actually, One Hell of a Father's Day Gift

June 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The best of Ennio Morricone.

And if you don't know what I'm talking about try this and this

and this

Captain Does Dallas

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Late June if you didn't know and are interested in signing up. Got a bunch of people and I have a pretty darn good topic I'll be talking about. Admittedly it's pricey if you have to fly into Dallas, but for those of you in the area, hopefully you can attend.

The Latest Clarey Podcast

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In this latest installment the Captain explains why radio is doomed and the internet is the future, why people who insist other people be constantly happy need to get slapped, and how the Manosphere is here to stay and is a gold mine that nobody has the gall to mine.

Thank You Chris Muir!

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I woke up this morning and our beloved Stingray and Dr. Helen (interesting post here) had sent me an e-mails. Turns out the ole Captain got a mention on "Day by Day!" (somewhat NSFW as I was surprised Chris has been drawing some of his characters nude!)

Never in a million years would I have thought this little ole blog and my little ole writings would make it this far.

That's Just Wrong, Man

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just wrong. I mean it's "correct" and "true," but it's still wrong.

Which is Why I Own a Car

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

About the only place I ever lived that made sense to ride mass transit was Chicago. Otherwise, no amount of buses, light rail, trains, or what have you was efficient enough to compensate for the fact a car could go from the driveway of your house to the driveway or parking lot of your destination. Throw in the fact it gets gold in Minnesota and walking to and waiting at bus stops makes mass transit all that much more unappealable.

There is another reason not to ride mass transit. It (usually) has people who are so bad at life they can't afford a car. It isn't that hard to afford a car. Plenty of used cars nowadays for $3,000. Leftists and the bleeding heart types will say, "but who has $3,000 they can just drop on a car? You hate the poor! Why are you so mean! Not everybody can be like you!"

I ask how CAN'T you save up a measly $3,000 for a car? Hell, I managed to do that working for $6.90 an hour AND pay for college, living expenses, etc. A car would be kind of your primary thing you need to get since it allows you to get to work, the grocery store and makes life a hell of a lot easier. Sure, maybe ride the bus for a couple months to build up your reserves, but (and again, unless, say you're commuting to downtown for work and it just pays to take the bus) in the end every person should be able to get a cheap used car. If you can't, then there's something wrong with you.

How Western Civilization Will (Temporarily) Save the US Dollar

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A law, not a theory, but a law of economics is if you print off more money, but the amount of goods and services remain the same, you will have inflation.

There is no if's, and's, or but's about it. YOu print off more money without a commensurate increase in the production of goods and services you have created inflation.

This law is of course, masked by the complexities of central banking and international economics. But pull as many tricks out of their central banking hats, in the end this law will end up proving true, undoing and unraveling all the tomfoolery and magic tricks central bankers try to play.

Many people are banking on such an unraveling. They're buying gold and silver, ammo and guns, and some are investing in more stable currencies like the Norwegian Kroner or Swiss Franc. However, there is always the issue of "investment horizons" and as John Maynard Keynes said, "Markets can remain irrational longer than you can stay solvent." And today's US dollar is one such instance.

THere is no doubt whatsoever that with "QE^1...n" set by the Fed there has been an increase in the money supply that outstrips the increase in GDP. Naturally there should be inflation, but one of the little smoke screens employed by the Fed (or actually, a lack of business confidence in the US economy) is that those monies are sitting in the banking system, afraid to be lent out against such poor economic prospects. So yes, the CPI shows no inflation, but the moment that money ever gets circulated into the economy or velocity increases (if you believe in that stuff) inflation will kick in. Regardless, the larger point is it doesn't matter to the gold or silver investor WHERE the US dollars are sitting, all that matters to them is HOW MUCH DOLLARS ARE OUT THERE as that is what directly speaks to the price of precious metals relative to a fiat currency.

However, the above situation, though true, is over-simplified. Specifically, it does not account for the irrationality of other actors in the world economy and does not explain the recent year long drop in gold and silver prices. And if we were to investigate the "irrationality of other actors" in the world economy, we'd find there's one simple reason the US dollar has had a resurgence against precious metals (and other currencies)-

Western Civilization.

Understand that though the US and other western nations have massive economic and debt problems, they have one advantage over their non-western counterparts - we are more civilized. By "more civilized" I mean precisely that. WE don't have a ton of corruption say like, China. We don't have to bribe officials like say, Russia. We don't have people shooting each other in the streets say like, most of Sub-Saharan Africa. And in general our population agrees and abides by our legal, contact, and economic laws (we pay people on time, we aren't trying to price gouge people at the local bazaar, etc.) And when you compare these traits and factors to people with trillions of dollars worth of their local currency in a world where evil is winning in most places and most other countries are kleptocracies that disgusting, dirty, evil United States, with it's despicable dead, white European male culture, where those stupid westerners get up, day in, day out, go to work and do what they say they're going to do, still looks to be the best bet.

This "trust premium" if you want to call it that has two effects. One, it provides additional value to the US dollar above and beyond it's purchasing power or underlying economic production. The dollar now becomes a "safe haven," or "reserve" for people around the world looking to just maintain the value of their currency. Two, it increases the value of the dollar relative to other currencies, despite our horrible financial fundamentals in that we are the "least sucky currency" or as a reader put it, "the least ugly sister in the room."

"Sure," you might say, "I can see how this affects the exchange rates between the US dollar and other currencies, but why precious metals?"

And that is an outstanding economics question, one we can take a lesson from.

Understand that there is a difference between "price" and "value." People often confuse the US dollar (or any currency) with value thinking currencies somehow have value. In reality currencies are nothing more than units for pricing something that DOES have value.

"How much is that Big Mac worth?" 4.23 US dollar units of value.

"How much is that gallon of gas?" 3.97 US dollar units of value.

In other words a Big Mac or a gallon of has still has the same value. A Big Mac will fill your stomach just the same whether the price is 5 cents or $500, and a gallon of gas will move your car the same 20 miles regardless of whether its price is 40 cents or $300 per gallon. It is the CURRENCY'S PURCHASING POWER THAT CHANGES, not the value of the underlying good.

To this end you can see why gold and silver have dropped in price in terms of the US dollar. Not because they went down in value, but because with everybody scrambling to park their assets in US dollars (and dollar denominated assets) the value of the dollar has gone up, allowing the dollar to purchase roughly 20% more gold and silver than it did a year ago.

But once again, we need to look at the fundamentals.

Yes, it's nice that we have the least sucky currency.

Yes it's nice that CHina's bubble is starting to burst (not for the Chinese people, or for that matter, global economy, but for the US dollar)

And yes, it's really nice that the US "only" has 105% debt to GDP compared to Europe's 160% debt to GDP.

But we still suck. And over time, unless there is genuine, booming and miraculous economic growth to provide the US dollar with genuine production/wealth-based value, you can expect the eternal law of supply to play out in the end and the dollar to drop relative to other items that have real or "intrinsic" value.

Enjoy the decline!

I'm Not Feeding Your Mistakes...Er "Children"

June 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

THankfully, the United Way is private, unlike the public schools which force me to feed other people's ~~mistakes~~ children.

Then Go Marry Jesus

June 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Cripes. A 33 point checklist????

Only one man I know who can meet all those requirements and more

JESUS, SUPER-ROCK-STAR-BAD-ASS-ALPHA!

I'll say it again for the cheap seats - the majority, not all, but the majority of young born again Christian women abuse religion as a means to leverage control, authority and demands over others. Additionally, no man can compete with Rock Star Super Alpha JC. It is an impossible task so do not even bother trying.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

June 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

But the mother's boyfriend could.

Regardless we don't need no STIIIIIINNNNNNNKINNNNNNG FATHERS!

Paul Elam and Bill Burr Walk Into a Bar

June 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A good post from Mr. Elam.

Today's Word - Nomenklatura

June 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Future members of the Soviet nomenklatura started out in the Young Pioneers, the Hitler Youth-esque brainwashing organization that replaced the Boy Scouts. From there, they graduated to the Komsomol, the youth wing of the Communist Party, before becoming card-carrying Bolsheviks themselves. At every turn, they were vetted for their loyalty to the communist revolution and their willingness to blindly follow orders. It was effectively feudalism; the nomenklatura fiercely promoted the interests of their Inner Party patrons in exchange for little pats on the head. Modern American feminism functions in almost the same way.

Matt also has a good post here on an unrelated topic. It is a review of Roosh's "best of" series, but he makes a point that I think every blogger, male and female, of a controversial nature needs to heed.

You NEED to publish your works in physical format not so much to "make coin" on it, but so that your best works of literature and thought are forever preserved and not deleted by some bureaucrat or Google-apparatchik. It was the primary reason I published my "best of" book and is the primary reason you should be publishing your works as well.

"My Mom Is Taking Care of My Child"

June 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Rip apart the boomers all you want (and by all means, please do), there is one area or arena they are getting their comeuppance and getting paid back in spades - raising their children's children.

I don't believe this to be a plague that affects middle or upper classes, but certainly the lower-middle and lower economic classes. And there could not be any better form of poetic justice. For if you raised your child so "crappily" that your child now lacks the common sense and reason not to fornicate without protection and get/get somebody pregnant, it is now YOU who gets to pay the consequences.

Forget retirement grandma, you get to baby sit while your harlot of a daughter goes and works at the local hair salon and then goes to night school to become a "chef" because she can't take care of her kid she had when she was 16.

Hey, did you have your kid at 15 and (surprise surprise) dad didn't stick around to raise your son? Well, don't be surprised when your son "Jessup" comes home with his 17 year old crappy goatee telling you he knocked up his girlfriend. 18 more years of strife for you!

And did your son carry on a life long tradition of children born out of wedlock as he pursues his 'aspiring rap artist' career? Good luck "grandpa," you get to deal with two children now.

Naturally these types of COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE "families" never read Cappy Cap. I'm just highlighting the above study/link so you can enjoy the self-inflicted misery these losers of society foist upon themselves.

The Role Women Should Play in Society

June 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I received a question from a reader about what I thought women's role in society should be.

At first thought I imagined the response would be a lengthy one, but the more I thought about it, the more I realized it was very simple.

Women's role in society should be whatever role women wish to play.

That's it.

Period.

Women, like men, are human and have every right to freedom and should not be pigeon-holed into one role or another. They are sentient, they are human, they are individuals, there should be no specific "role" they play in society as pre-ordaining them to play ANY role would be be tyranny over the individual.

Where the hubbub or contention occurs is where women do precisely that, but then whine and complain about the consequences.

For example, if a woman wants to get impregnated at the age of 16...and then 18...and then 21 by three different men, I personally do not care. But when you start telling me I have to pay higher taxes to bail this parasite out of her own idiotic mistakes, then I morally and logically should have a say in how she should lead her life because the veritable parasite is now consuming part of mine. I would go so far as to even say I have the right to force birth control on her. And the reason why is that when somebody starts requiring others pay for their way, then they cease to be an individual and forfeit all rights.

Or another example. Say a woman majors in a worthless subject. I don't care. I don't really care. You go major in Lesbian, Transgender, Chicano-White-Privilege, French, 18th Century Poetry for all I care and make sure to go $150,000 in debt at some prissy little liberal arts college tucked away in the non-urban East coast.

As long as she lives up to the fact she will be unemployable, in debt, and just plain out of luck.

But once I'm requested to bail her out (either though loan forgiveness via the taxpayer or lobbying to increase my taxes to make a pointless, make-work government job for her), then once again she has forfeited being an individual and I have every right to dictate to her what she should and should not do.

In other words, the issue of "women's place in society" is not one of liberty or individualistic choice or idealism. That is a simple matter - they should be allowed to do whatever they want. It's a matter of whether society is man enough to let them suffer the consequences of their decisions and TRULY TREAT THEM AS EQUALS or is hoodwinked into being asked to bail out women for stupid choices, stupid mistakes, and just plain stupidity.

But don't think this just applies to women. It is only women we are talking about because of the question posed to me. This lesson applies to both sexes.

To what extent do we grant freedom to an individual to fuck up his or her own life?

Philosophically and morally I say "the fullest extent."

But it is on the grounds and understanding that they get to suffer the full and complete consequences of their mistakes, their stupidity, and their inferiority with no cost to the taxpayer.

Of course, we do not have this today. Everybody gets bailed out.

The loser who borrowed more than they could afford to buy a house.
The loser who had more children than he/she could afford.
The loser that majors in English in an English speaking country where English is a skill akin to breathing.
The loser that started a sports bar or a trinket shop because they had a dream but no business acumen.

I could go on, but you get the point.

Mature, freedom-loving adults, allow people to do whatever they want because that is freedom and that is liberty. It is the consequences of stupid decisions that causes the controversy about women's role in society today because women (disproportionately to men - and yes, I will defend that with empirical data) then go begging, nay, DEMANDING the rest of RESPONSIBLE society lessen their standards of living to bail them out of their stupidity.

So what role should women play in society?

Simple, whatever they want, long as they're adult about it.

The Basics of Tax Deductions

June 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You Can't Blog on a Motorcycle

June 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Bar not hitting a deer or meeting Jennifer Aniston on the side of the road, I am currently enroute to the Black Hills for a 2 week sabbatical. Thusly, I will be plagiarizing the work of others as it is somewhat difficult to blog while piloting a motorcycle. Posts will return to somewhat normal once I make it to my hotel. On a related note if you are in the Black Hills area, give a shout out to the Captain. Grab a Rumpie or get a hike or something.

___

I've said it before and I'll say it again. We need anti-nepotism legislation. This is one of the things both democrats and republicans (small d/r) can agree on. There would have been no Bush's, no Pelosi's, no Dayton's and no other spoiled little trust fund brats destroying our country.

___

I don't disagree with him, but one thing that the boomer generation did (quite brilliantly, though unintentionally perhaps) was dumb down successive generations so much those generations were too stupid to

1. educate themselves about government finances
2. realize they were being taken advantage of and thus still vote against their best interests.

___

Again, why ANY controversial blogger NEEDS to consolidate their best writings and publish a "best of."

___

It is a dark, very dark world of psychology that I have yet to delve into the depths necessary to start pulling my own theories, but I theorize my recent "Felon Game" experiment and this are related.

___

Diamonds are a woman's biggest shit test.

___

I think we have found the most despicable person in America with all the traits and characteristics embodied into one soul. Though this lady is a close second.

Diamonds are a Girl's Biggest Shit Test

June 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I had linked to this before in a linkage fest, but felt it warrants its own post.

At a very young age I knew diamonds were worthless. They were shinny rocks. They did nothing but sit on fingers. And the amount of money I heard the "adults" said they spent on them, I knew they could buy a lot more cool and practical stuff, say like, food, and ohhhhh, rent.

Of course, as I aged, life empirically proved my skepticism, and my education between college and poverty also confirmed to me just was a frivolous expense diamonds were.

However, it wasn't until yesterday reading this post at Maggie's Farm did I really realize what diamonds TRULY are -

They are the world's biggest shit test.

Understand what a woman is asking you to do, gentlemen, when she wants that diamond ring. She wants you to:

1. Spend as much as your money as possible
2. On a veritably worthless hunk of rock that
3. Offers no genuine production, value or worth other than to
4. Inflate her petty ego as she uses it to brag to her equally hollow and shallow friends who
5. Are such vain and worthless people as they measure human worth based on the size of a rock.

In short it is a purified economic test of the shits. She wants to see how much of your PRECIOUS FINITE LIFE you are willing to sacrifice on SOMETHING THAT HAS NO VALUE. It is the biggest hoop. The biggest hurdle. The biggest shit test. And it is also incredibly demeaning.

How do you deal with this shit test?

Like any other.

You get a small diamond, or better yet, no diamond at all. You find a ruby, an emerald, something prettier than a boring old diamond. You say, "I'm not getting you some big ass diamond, and matter of fact, we're not pissing away precious funds on a bullshit wedding. We're going to Vegas and getting married by "The Flying Elvi."

Of course, if you're at the stage a woman is still shit-testing you, and you're about to propose AND you still don't know how to pass shit-tests, then go ahead and pony up your 4 months salary, sucker. You may also want to start stashing away for a divorce fund which you're probably going to need later. For the larger the diamond you buy, the less of a woman you have.

Rumpleminze Leads to Higher IQ's

June 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What'd I tell ya?

Keep Kicking Ass Ladies

June 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The real-life Rosie the Riveter quit the factory just two weeks after she began, fearing a possible hand injury would interfere with her cello-playing.

You go grrrrrrrrllll!!!

Once Upon A Time

June 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In a land far far away

There was a bachelor named "Cappy."

He was on his motorcycle crossing the great and barren land of South Dakota in an attempt to make it to the rumored beautiful western side of this land. The great prophet said there would be mountains, streams, buffalo, cigars, and booze.

Much as Cappy the Bachelor wanted to get there, alas, there was not enough daylight to make the trip in one day, and so he set up camp in a little town along the road. Broke out his rations, checked the tension on the motorcycle chain, and managed to save $60 by not paying for a hotel.

In his tent he fell asleep and dreamed.

He dreamed of the mountains he would summit, the booze he would drink, the fossils he would find, and the fish he would catch. However, since the internet was not available in the middle of nowhere South Dakota, he also dreamed that when he finally made it to his destination, they would have internet access as well. And when he'd log onto the internet and check book sales for Boris the Buffalo and his Amazon affiliate account, that millions of people bought tons of books and tons of stuff so that he would never have to work again. And then, upon arriving in Rapid City, Jennifer Aniston would be there in an inebriated and poor-judgement state.

The End.

Because Girls Don't Fart

June 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Burping, eating fast food in the morning, and playing video games are a sign of immaturity.

Uh huh.

How I Befriended a WWII Sniper

June 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This post is not one of bragging or heroism. It is a post the background story of which is necessary to convey the moral of the story. Any criticism or accusations of bragging and blowhardism will be ignored.

It is here that I have to confess something, for in me telling this story I will tip my hand and belie what my next project is. That project being the first in a new series of books I will be starting (for the rest of my life) called,

"The Crotch Rocketeer's Guide To X"

"X" being wherever my motorcycle travels take me. The Canadian Rockies. Tierra Del Fuego. The Wild West. You name it.

However, the first in this series of books will be South Dakota, specifically, the Black Hills, which is where I currently am. I am taking photos, notes, and whatnot to compile a guide for everybody (not just crotch rocketeers) about how to avail themselves of the most the Badlands and Black Hills have to offer. However, since I only have two weeks here I have to spend my time efficiently and judiciously, requiring me to make side trips and short stops along my general way...which is how I made friends with a WWII sniper.

I had met him once before on one of my previous trips to the Black Hills. This was the byproduct of me hearing about a "barn dance" at some unheard of town, and because this town was so obscure and so out of the way, I was committed to experiencing this event. Upon arrival I found out the townsfolk were going to go to "the" bar in town and get some drinks before the dance started. I decided to tag along and upon walking through the door of "the" bar I saw "him."

"Him" being "Lee." A man nearly 90 years old, thick glasses, a skinny and frail figure.

I was warned about "him." I was told he was a curmudgeon, a pissed off old man, that he had a sawed-off dual barreled shot gun behind the bar, and that I shouldn't piss him off.

And they were right.

He was a curmudgeon.
He was old.
He was pissed off.
And there was the double barreled shot gun.

However, what they did NOT tell me was that he was a HAAAAYOOOOGE fossil collector and agate hunter. They also did not tell me his house was attached to the bar. And they also did not tell me that he left the door open from the bar to his house WHICH GAVE YOU A PERFECT VIEW TO HIS AWESOME FOSSIL AND AGATE COLLECTION!

As I was walking through the bar and looked to my right, I saw all this 90 year old man had collected. The finest pieces, the finest specimens, the crappiest of which put my best to shame.

I turned to my left, gobsmacked, and like a little kid at Christmas asked if I could look at his fossils.

He said in a very stern tone, "no!" And if my memory serves me correctly there was even a threat of the double barreled shotgun.

A little shamed, I realized what the townsfolk said was true. He was an old curmudgeon. He didn't like strangers. And even though he had the world's greatest agate and fossil collection, my passion would simply be an annoyance to him and so I let it be.

However, my memories of this town and "the" bar still remained fond. It is a GREAT TOWN, a LITTLE TOWN, a TOWN YOU WILL NEVER FIND UNTIL I PUBLISH IT IN MY BOOK. And so, when I was on my way to my hotel and realized the sun still had about another hour to set, I figured I had the time to take a detour, take a snap shot of the bar, the town, and the streets for the "Rocketeers's Guide" and save myself a chore at a later date.

Upon arrival there were no cars in front of the bar. I was thinking the old man maybe died or just retired, but when I parked my motorcycle near the entry I could hear a television and knew he was still in business. I didn't want to piss him off so there would be no asking about the agates or fossils, and truth be told, I was a bit fearful of asking him if I could take a picture of the inside of the bar. Old men like their privacy and this guy DEFINITELY was the type I could see getting pissed off, looking at some crotch-rocket-driving city slicker wanting to take a picture of his "cute" and "quaint" little bar.

I walked in, took off my helmet, and sure as shit, there was the old man. Just like I remembered him, but two years older. However, though two years had passed since I last saw him, he looked 5 years older. He was even more frail. He was my height (5'9") and maybe 115 pounds. His shoulders were also unlevel, suggesting to me his bones were going out of whack. He was also more bent over, not to the extent of a humpback, but one of a man in his 90's.

Also at the bar was a man rolling his own cigarettes. He was in fatigues and a muscle shirt. Approaching 60's. Looked like Sam Elliot.

Upon seeing me the old man made his way over to my position at the bar. He used the bar as a crutch to make his way over. He asked me what would I have and I said, "Whiskey."

I stroke up a conversation with the guy rolling his cigarettes. Chit-chatting here and there, but as many men in this area of South Dakota, he knew about agates, fossils and the like. We started talking about different places to hunt and the old man was listening.

However, though interesting, our conversation was interrupted when two large men walked into the bar. Both drunk. Both very large.

They weren't loud drunk, but their body language gave it away. Slow talking, slurring, not getting to their point. Inevitably they wanted two beers and already I knew something was up.

This bar is a far flung bar in the middle of nowhere.

It is in a town you would not know exists unless you already know it exists and if you're going to get a drink when you're already drunk this is not the place you'd go.

Also, when you're hammered, you don't ask for a Bud Light. You go for something heavier with more of a punch, especially if you're over 2 bills. So when these large men asked for two Bud Lights, I knew something was wrong.

Confirming this was when these vermin started giving the old man shit about the price.

The price for 2 beers was $6. The gas alone was more than that to get their drunk asses out to this bar from the main drag. So when they started not "heckling," but complaining, even acting like they weren't going to pay, then (truthfully) I was glad South Dakota recognizes Minnesota's carry conceal laws.

The man rolling his own cigarettes didn't seem to notice. He was talking to me the entire time. I was trying to keep two conversations up, responding to the guy with "Uh huh..yeah...yep...uh huh" while watching the two thugs interact with the old man. Then one of the thugs went to the bathroom, while the other one asked to bum a cigarette off of the other guy. Funny thing was, the other guy was rolling his own cigarettes, which meant there would be some work required of the thug, which actually put him off. Regardless, while they were going over the basics of rolling one's own cigarette I strode over to the old man and said under my breath,

"you alright? You need me to stick around?"

The old man said,

"Yeah, I'm fine. Thanks for asking, but I've handled these types before."

Taking the man for his word, I paid my tab and decided to leave. Grabbed my helmet, walked outside, and there was a truck with a kid who was nowhere near the age of 16 in the driver's seat. Hand over his face once I walked out. He obviously drove these two guys to the bar and was sitting just a like a getaway car. Too damn fishy. "Oh well," I said to myself, "the old man is a piss and vinegar sort, he's got that shot gun, he'll be fine with the other guy in there."

Put the key in the ignition, started to done my gloves and helmet, and then I just couldn't do it. I couldn't let the old man be. Piss and vinegar and anger and weaponry all aside, he was just too damn old and too damn frail. They could overpower him easily ensuring he never reached the gun. The large thug could easily hold down the cigarette-roller. And who knew what role the adolescent thug would play. I couldn't leave.

So I returned.

Walked back into the bar and somewhat brashly said, "Eh, I decided I'm going to stick around a little bit!" and took my old seat.

The old man came up and asked me under his breath if I wanted a drink on the house. I said no, but I'll take water. I asked him quietly if he called the cops, which he hadn't, because he wasn't just a tough, old, curmudgeon man in reputation, but in reality as well. His pride wouldn't let him. I figured the best thing to do would be to get the cops to come in and so I walked outside in the vain hopes of having reception.

For some ungodly reason, there actually was reception for both cell AND data in this town. Got the local county cops on the line, started to give them the information, and then the two thugs walked out.

Apparently, they had had enough. The two "Bud Lights" were enough for them. They got in the car their 12 year old son/daughter (I couldn't tell) was driving and as they drove off I saw them open a bottle of tequila.

They already had the booze from the get go. Stopping by at the old man's joint was something more nefarious, at minimum, ulterior.

I told the cops what was happening, telling them they were leaving, but they may want to send out a squad anyway given a 12 year old driving two men with an open bottle of tequila usually isn't good news for others on the road, and then returned to the bar.

I said to the old man, "looks like they're gone" and before I could ask him about how long it normally takes the cops to get there he said,

"You are really observant. Most young men don't even pick up on that. YOu knew what they were doing."

Kind of shocked how somebody couldn't sense something was wrong, I said,

"Oh, I don't know about that. It was pretty obvious they weren't up to any good."

I then decided to throw one from his generation to lighten things up,

"Besides, you may have that shot gun, but I don't think you can draw as fast as Glenn Ford."

And mercy did that get him on my side.

"Oh yeah!!! Glenn Ford was fast, but let me tell you! This isn't the first time!"

He then regaled me with a tale that I will not repeat as I assume he would like to keep it private. However, the story consisted of a thug, taking advantage of an old frail man, out in the middle of nowhere, and that old man rising to his own self-defense. But while the old man was telling me this story he slipped and belied why he may be so curmudgeonly in the first place. He said,

"I was a sniper in the Pacific and by golly I know how to handle myself! Ain't nobody going to get me!"

Heh, the old frail man who stood in front of me was a WWII sniper in the Pacific. He was the badest ass mofo for at least a 40 mile radius. Sure he was 115 pounds. Sure he was weak. But he was never going to go down without a fight and that made him the coolest guy I was guaranteed to meet this entire trip.

I wanted to say something a little cocky, but lesson-teaching, about large, multiple, younger thugs, up close and personal, vs. Japanese officers at 1,500 yards in the hopes it would convince him to retire, hire some muscle or maybe call the cops sooner, but I opted to shut up instead. He offered again to buy me another drink, but I said,

"No thanks, I'll take you up on it next time I'm out here. Should be a week or two, but I'll be back."

And before I got up from my seat he said,

"Thank you for making friends with me."

It wasn't until about 10 miles later did I fully realize how freaking cool and awesome it was to have a guy like him thank me (THANK ME????) for being a friend and considering me a friend. It means more to me than "earning a degree" or "getting a promotion" or some other such lame ass shit that passes for "achievement" or "success" today. Besides, pissed-off, curmudgeon, angry, WWII sniper, agate hunter, fossil hunter that could put me to shame, now doesn't hate me so much!? I mean, come on, how do you beat that?

"As a % of GDP"

June 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

One of the most important lessons in economics for the beginner is to learn the concept as "a percent of GDP."

The Occasional Female Alpha

June 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I am first and foremost for freedom.

I want humans, regardless of race, gender, sexual preference, etc. etc. politically correct obligatory disclaimer crap to get the commie leftist asshole nazis off my ass, etc.

to be free humans pursuing their happiness unhindered.

And though I take a strong stance and insist men and women are predisposed by their sex to play certain roles in society, I will admit that is not always the case. Also, I will admit that it is best that ONE person lead and ONE person follow, REGARDLESS OF SEX.

In short, I put more importance and emphasis on leadership dynamics than mythical gender equality because, frankly, it is more important to have ONE leader than multiple leaders regardless of who has what gender and what gender has historically been given presumed leadership.

Thus, why it's OK to have a gal in charge.

Not every man is born an alpha male, kick ass, John Wayne, type guy....you know...like me (just kidding...no not really).

Nor is every female born an submissive, compliant chick.

And I will even go so far as to say that there are many instances where the man does not wear the pants in the family and the woman does AND that such an arrangement is OPTIMAL because, once again, it is better to have ONE leader than two, regardless of genders.

The reason I bring this up is because not all men can be alpha and neither can all women be the first officer. Sometimes women DO display superior leadership skills and sometimes men DO display superior supportive skills and it is neither your nor my right to criticize such arrangements. Truth be told, if we are going for maximum freedom and maximum happiness, there are some men out there who need a female leader and there are some female leaders that need some supporting males. We should not judge or be critical of such arrangements, but supportive because...well...it works.

You all know the couple. The woman wears the pants in the family and the guy is a little timid.

But does it work?

Sure it does!

Sometimes men aren't cut out to be the leader.

And sometimes women aren't cut out to be the follower.

Both should thank the heavens they have each other and none of us should judge them for it.

Related:

Hotel Vagabond

June 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Adventure is out there!" is a quote from an average Disney movie that I took to heart anyway. The movie was "Up" and the quote originated from a scene in the movie where the hero of the film was having a flashback to his childhood. He worshiped an Indiana Jones/Howard Hughes like figure from the 30's that had escapades and adventures from South America and the young boy wished to emulate him. The reason the quote "adventure is out there" resonated with me so well as a 36 year old man was that it completely confirmed what I already knew.

Adventure IS out there.

Understand the average American yutz sits on his or her ass watching HGTV, going to the gym, eating at Applebee's, and maybe daring to have the audacity to get "hammered at Champs" if they really want to get risque. But none of them leave their 40 mile urban/suburban protective radius and try to explore things. They plug in, day in, day out, their regular crappy boring lives, never daring to explore or do something different, almost as if they're giving a proverbial finger to god or whoever gave them this shot at life.

God - "Hey, I gave you life. And not only "life" but like human life. So you aren't like a worm or a tick whose life is going to be really boring and suck, you get to be the most intelligent and advanced creature on the whole freaking planet. So what are you going to do with this amazing gift?"

Typical American -"Well, I thought I'd piss it away. I'm going to go do what everybody else is doing and go to college, get a mind-numbing career, have kids I can barely afford, get a divorce and not discern myself or make this one great opportunity you gave me unique. No, I'm going to just piss it away like everybody else watching reality TV shows."

And thus they waste their one precious life.

However if one were to ever just go on an adventure and "go where no man (or very few) have gone before," they might discover some things. And not only would they discover things, but they would discover them quite easily.

If anything has been shocking to me in my adventures it has been the ALMOST NEAR GUARANTEE I would find something interesting if I just walked off the beating path. For example, most people drive ALONG SIDE ON THE PERFECTLY MANICURED ROAD of the Badlands National Park never daring to walk more than 10 feet from pavement.. I "dared" to hike 500 yards in and found machine gun shells from when the park was a pre-

WWII bombing/testing range not to mention a fair amount of fossils.

People always go agate hunting where the POSTED SIGN SAYS "AGATE RESERVOIR" where I have the "bold"

"audacious"

"revoluionary"

idea to look outside the reservoir and find(I'm not kidding you) a $3,000 agate from a place NOBODY ever thought agates were.

And while most people are going to the hip clubs and bars, I was able to find the old 50's/60's lounges where the original pianist still plays at the piano bar, the original clientele celebrates their 50th wedding anniversary and martini's are cheap and bountiful because the lounge doesn't have a mortgage to cover because they paid it off back in 1977 and can still made decent profit charging $4 for a martini.

But the best discoveries you will have are not finding cheap drinks at old lounges, WWII casings, or precious agates. It will be other unique and interesting people. And thus, why I bring up "Hotel Vagabond."

Find as many agates as you want.

Find as many fossils as you want.

Find as many lost Ute Indian archeological finds you want.

The truest and most interesting discovery comes from finding new and interesting humans.

I was already blessed on this trip with meeting the WWII sniper, but let me tell you another gold mine the milquetoast, cookie cutter, SWPL, Eden Prairieite, Applebee's going crowd will never experience - the colorful group of clients at the Skyline Motel.

The Skyline Motel is when I like to stay when in the southern end of the Black Hills. The reason is simple - it's cheap. It also happens to be closer to the agate beds I like to scour and thus to make the most of my vacationing dollar and vacationing time I stay at least a couple days here.

However the Skyline Motel is off the beaten path. Both physically and financially. It is in Hot Springs, arguably the farthest southern town in the Black Hills and thus not a lot of tourists come here. It is also VERY cheap (cheapest in the Black Hills) and thus you get not only some shady, but colorful characters. THere isn't a year that doesn't go by where there isn't some kind of crime or ballyhoo, but at the same time this motel, in part because it allows monthly rentals, attract a lot of free spirits from across the west. A plurality of the clientele are older men in retirement looking to get away and live on the cheap. And while disheveled in appearance, it is merely a ruse for they too are explorers, wanderers and adventurers.

For example you see a bunch of drunks pounding down 40 ouncers. But what you don't see is the two vets (and one economist) who are happier than pigs in mud. You don't hear the stories they have and interesting lives they've lived and the wisdom they impart. You also don't see the math and finances (these guys are set for life). And you didn't see what they did that day (I returned from a near 300 mile motorcycle ride, these two, and some other old timers at the motel, fired up the grill and had burgers and hot dogs).

It only a person with a keen eye who might pick up the smile or the gleam in their eye and realize their lives have not only been fuller, but they are happier. But let me tender another bit of evidence as to how looks are deceiving. This is the room of one of the guys.

I didn't want to take more pictures so as not to violate the man's privacy, but the place was immaculate. He has the set up. Just a small one bedroom hotel with his sitting chair, his TV, his car pictures and all he needs.

Regardless, hanging out with these old timers, listening to their stories, watching them interact and give each other guff (they're like a crass version of Matthau and Lemon) all under the glow of an old school 1940's red neon light (see below) is a thousand times the discovery that will ever be made at your local sports bar. All one has to do is step outside their front door and keep walking. The people, things and adventure will find you.

THis post sponsored by "Enjoy the Decline" and Amazon. Help the Captain ~~avoiding working a real job~~ keep the adventures up. Buy his book or buy your wares through Amazon.

Crusher Joe - The Movie

June 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Crusher Joe" is an anime series from the late 70's that I was not made aware of until the early 2000's. Either it didn't get syndication here in the US or it did and it was never broadcasted in my town as a kid. Regardless, when somebody recommended watching it I had gone through the standard "anime phase" or "cycle" most people my generation did:

Stage 1 "Innocent Kid" - "Wow! What's this new style of cartoon that looks really awesome! Holy cow! People die and get killed in this stuff. DUDE! They pilot robots and mecha! I want red motorcycle too! OMG, this is the greatest shit ever!"

Stage 2 "Exploration" - "I'm going to watch all the anime I can! THERE'S HOW MUCH OF THIS STUFF IN JAPAN??? I must go to every obscure video store rental in my neighborhood to see if I can find it. I heard my buddy has a connect and is loaded with it."

Stage 3 "Realization" - How come none of these plots make sense? Why did the robot just turn into a pretzel? I don't get it. Will they ever get to the point and fight the bad guy? Is there even a plot to this? Why the lengthy boring dialogues that are supposed to be deep, but were made for 13 year old Japanese kids and when translated they suck?"

Stage 4 Indifference - "What? Yet ANOTHER anime about mecha and young kids piloting them as they grow and mature through life? Yaaawnnn.. oh, hey, college is starting. No more anime for me."

In short whatever novelty and uniqueness about the art or style of Japanese anime is quickly overshadowed by the generally crappy, if not outright lack of, plot or character development. You go from an intrigued kid with too much time on his hand to an adult who doesn't have time for lousy animation and you rarely revisit anime again, and thus why I was skeptical about "Crusher Joe - the Movie."

However, every GREAT once in a while a masterpiece of anime comes out that doesn't suck and actually warrants your time and viewing. Cowboy Bebop being one of them (practically mandatory), Spice and Wolf (yes Mr. Fuller) being another, and Ninja Scroll being a third. "Crusher Joe - The Movie" is one of these films and since I know have a subsegment of anime fans let me provide a quick review.

The drawing style is 1970's/early 80's. There are some obvious mistakes made (note the ambulance scene), but these do not detract from the overall quality of the film. Matter of fact I would almost say it makes it "classic" in that 30 years have gone by and it is interesting to see how the style matches the fashion at that time. The plot is CLEAR and very straightfoward. No attacking octopus god from the sea who changes into a super mecha only unless the princess can overcome her feelings for a young boy and interfaces with some quasi deity. They are mercenaries for hire, period. They get a mission, period. The mission does not go as they presumed, period. Ass-kicking commences.

But what I like the most about it, especially for it's time, is its character development and dialogue. It's very witty, very clever, especially for the era it was made. It would be on par with the crew of "Firefly" or "Cowboy Bebop."

Unfortunately, I believe they stopped making the movie in production in English because so few are out there they now cost around $200.

So if anybody has a Crusher Joe dvd or knows where to get one, I would certainly appreciate it.

for reference:

We're All Out of White Guilt

June 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Though I thoroughly enjoy watching self-hating SWPL's constantly flagellating themselves for the sins of their ancestors they had no control over.

Porn Economics

June 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ahhhhh!!!! It's so nice to light up a cigar and let other people deal with this.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

June 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is a sad, but a hopeful story in that our protagonist is fighting the good fight on multiple fronts. However, his latest enemy is manifesting itself in boys without fathers. Nothing good comes from children without them (and please don't send me anecdotal stories about this one time, at band camp, I knew this kid, and he didn't have a father and like, he became a surgeon!).

Most Pastors Are Hypocrites

June 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Let me tell you about Reverend Ryan.

He was a tenant of mine.

A sweet, young kid. God damned boy scout is what he was.

He kept his apartment in perfect order, could fix things faster and better than I ever could, and if you ever needed to rely upon somebody he was the guy you'd go to.

Only one problem.

He wasn't a reverend.

I thought he was because he got his degree in youth ministry, and so I naturally assumed he was a pastor. But as I found out later, that was nothing more than yet another college-education scam perpetrated upon the youth to support an academian scheme, but this time of a religious variety. His degree was utterly worthless.

But his moral character and caliber was not.

If you were to ask me, and in all honesty, he is BY FAR a better man than I will ever be. He is honest, he is pure, he is noble, and he is righteous in the truest sense...matter of fact if you just took me and multiplied me by a -1 you would mathematically get Reverend Ryan. I don't think the boy has ever committed a sin in his life. He is virtuous and upstanding and I am, frankly, surprised such a man exists in a modern day environment today which is so hostile to such virtue.

Ironically, this results in a paradox.

For while this is one of the most pure, innocent, virtuous and noble men I know, he cannot become a pastor because he doesn't have the right credentials.

But I know men who have become pastors.

And I know men who did jump through the hoops.

And for the most part, most of them come nowhere near the caliber and quality of man as my former tenant.

THough I don't harp on it much, one of the most worthless degrees you can get is "religious studies." I don't harp on it because it is presumed you do not enter such a study in the hopes of riches, but out of charity, altruism and selflessness.

But that cannot be further from the truth for many religious studies majors.

For like journalism, management, even economics, "religious studies" grants the major an air of authority. Jounralists always seek truth. Business management majors always seek optimization an production. And economists always seek efficiency and progress. However, in pursuing such lofty endeavors, those studies are nearly-guaranteed to be corrupted by lesser souls using the lofty position of the study to wield power and control over others for their own selfish gain by abusing its moral position. And "religious studies" is the most loftiest (and consequently, corruptible) of all because it presumably is the authority of morals and decency.

Such a discipline attracts two types, both the most opposite you could ever imagine.

Pure, virtuous, and noble saints like Reverend Ryan

and

worthless, lazy, (but worse) power-hungry scum who wish to abuse a religion as a means to advance themselves without work, effort or rigor.

Unfortunately experience has told me most pastors (as well as most practitioners) are not of the Reverend Ryan caliber. They are in it for themselves, in it because it's an easy subject, in it for the power immediately granted to them, in it for the business, and in it because they lack the intellectual power and capability to determine their own morality and virtue and thus rely on a religion to spell it out for them. And yes, yes, I know fellow Christian, Jewish, even Muslim, Cappy Cappites, I know you may have that one special pastor that does not fit this bill, but this is (admittedly) the personal, yet empirical, data I have experienced and I still contest the majority of clergymen/women aren't in it for "god" but in it for themselves.

The only thing that is going to convince me otherwise is when I see the church (of whatever religion, sect or denomination) start opening the priest/pastorhood to people with moral caliber like Rev. Ryan who have good hearts, instead of requiring (much like the HR witches in the labor market) "degrees" and "certifications." When religious entities start promoting good people with good intentions and good hearts to the roles of leadership and not the scamming, verminous scum willing to effectively lie and play "Game of Thrones" to get into positions of leadership then I'll start granting American religions more credit.

In the meantime, I don't care whether Reverend Ryan has the qualifications to be an actual "ordained" minister or not. He's the only man qualified to be a reverend in my book and my standards are a hell of a lot higher than most official religions'.

"Rather Hang Out at the VFW

June 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

than hang out at a bar with people my age."

Warning, this is a podcast. Kerry Lutz interviewed me about how you mentally have to prepare for a world that you were not expecting, how feasible is it for people to not work a real, daytime job, and other such things like minimalism and life.

The audio version is here.

White Privilege Zombies

June 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was at one of my cigar bars. The sole female employee in the place was getting her doctorate in philosophy. She was overweight, pushing fat, but not yet obese. She also wasn't very pretty, but not hideous which is where I know most of your minds are predisposing to go right now.

So there I was, smoking my cigar, cranking out my book, when she is talking to one of the black patrons complaining about "white privilege." The man she was talking to was richer than most of us, friendly fellow, but very rich. He certainly did not have any financial problems, but here was a spoiled little suburbanite brat who never had any intention of working for a living, complaining to a very wealthy man about how oppressed he was and how people like me had privilege.

My natural instinct was to rip her apart, but I did not for it was not my conversation and it would rupture the quiet, calm tone of the lounge.

I waited until she came into my area of the lounge and then told her in a calm voice that she was a worthless person, with a worthless degree and that white privilege was f%cking bullshit and mindless faux intellectuals like her were ruining society with their marxist BS.

She then ran and narced on me to the proprietor.

Naturally I was banned from the cigar lounge. These middle aged men needed some kind of eye candy, even if it was of lesser quality. And, of course, this strong, independent woman couldn't take the criticism and did the crying thing and went running to daddy. So they caved and I had to find a new lounge, which was fine by me because I am not abandoning principle and will shame people when they spew insidious Marxism, cowardly disguising it with terms like "white privilege."

However, a sad and scary thought has occurred to me. White privilege is now so regularly taught in schools and to minds so inferior they actually swallow it, that when these people graduate and enter the real world, they will be beyond reason. They will blame everything on "white privilege" and "racism" or "sexism." And since they have no mental capacity for intellectually honesty or reason, they will become liberal zombies, but of a racist and sexist sort(this post is an outstanding one and I strongly suggest you read it).

It is here my theory of "liberal zombies" comes to a dark and dire conclusion. A person who cannot be reasoned with and will not adhere to intellectual honesty can only be dealt in two ways. You avoid them and just plain don't interact with them or violence. Ignoring them is one thing, but when they decide create public policy, make laws, or sometimes sue you, it will be hard to avoid them completely. Also as more and more of these minds are brainwashed in the schools, they will soon become prevalent in society, completely unavoidable. And violence is sadly what I see happening in some instances, since they are of the belief you are the enemy and the cause of their problems. They will come after you and there is no talking them down.

Again, I reference "I Am Legend." There is no difference between the zombies in this movie and the mindless "white privilege automotons" being mass-produced in universities today. They are mindless and they hate.

Damn Hippies

June 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Found some hippie tracks. Some damn hippie hiking on my trails on my mountain!

Mark Dayton and the Amazon Tax

June 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Looks like Amazon will be shutting down the affiliate program in Minnesota.

Here is my response to Mark Dayton and the Minnesota Democrats responsible for this.

However, this does not mean the Amazon Affiliate program will go away. I will simply set up shop in South Dakota.

And thus concludes another fine lesson of "capital flight."

They All Hit the Wall

June 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An outstanding before and after comparison.

I will merely add this.

The more genetic "gifts/lottery/benefits" a young person is given, the less likely they will develop mature, adult skills needed to survive and succeed in life. And one of those skills is the discipline and temerity to work out and stay in shape after the benefits of youth leave you and age and slowing metabolism visit.

Were you overweight or scrawny when you were younger?

Well then over the past 2 decades you've obviously, no doubt, developed the discipline, habits and ethic to work out and stay in shape.

Were you born a natural god/goddess?

We'll see you at the 20 year reunion and fail to recognize you.

Mike Rowe Works

June 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I was watching Fox New's "Red Eye" and Mike Rowe was on. Turns out he has a new web site called "Mike Rowe Works" and he is championing a worthy crusade about getting young men and women real jobs that pay. He was talking about the skills gap, education, and other such things we do regularly here on Cappy Cap, but one problem.

The morons interviewing him kept interrupting him. Matter of fact they were outright rude. And if you watch the interview you can see it on his face. He's a pro, however, and just laughs it off as if saying, "Heh, did they really want to interview me?"

Regardless, since June is "Worthless Degree Awareness Month" send Mike Rowe some traffic and check him out (and by that ladies, I mean "check out his site," not "check him out). Chances are he is a bit more diplomatic and charming than your angry, loud Captain, and would maybe do a better job at convincing young men and woman to choose the right type of education.

If Your Marketing Strategy Consists of "Cookies" Your Company Will Fail

June 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was working for what was mathematically and empirically the 2nd WORST bank in the entire state.

This is not my opinion.

This is not my estimation.

It was fact.

I had compiled a ton of research of all the banks in the state using the FDIC's institution database and based on measures like depository growth, loan defaults, loan delinquencies, OREO, oh, and let's not forget those old school measures like ROA and ROE, this bank was without a doubt the second worst bank. Actually, it was quite clear this bank was the second worst, because it was a "very distant second worst." It was very obvious it was in bad shape and the only reason it was second was because there was another bank that was even more spectacularly abysmal than this one.

Unfortunately, I was working for this "second worst bank."

Naturally, because we were in such bad shape, I thought part of our efforts (in addition to cleaning up all the bad loans that were made) would be to restructure the bank, marshal our resources, and then attempt to start growing again. To start anew, and start going after new, but quality business and thusly provide our (very) benevolent shareholders a decent return on their investment. Besides, I was no longer a measly credit analyst, I was now a VP in commercial lending, which meant my job now entailed pursuing new business and expanding our market.

I was fine with this, because truth be told, the underwriting or "credit analyst" part of my job was easy. Also, I was not allowed to repossess, foreclose, liquidate or do anything to clean up our "bad loan portfolio" which meant I had about 6 hours a day to pursue business development.

Just one problem.

I was never given the green light to pursue new business.

You see, all of the higher ranked individuals were too busy dealing with bad loans, decaying collateral, difficult clients, and complying with new federal regulations to approve a business development strategy. They didn't have time to start pursuing new business. Understanding this, and having about 6 hours a day to twiddle my thumbs, I did something spectacularly stupid and should have known better.

I took initiative.

I put together what (in my opinion) was arguably my finest piece of work in my entire corporate American career - an entire marketing strategy for the whole company, based on market research, FDIC data, economic data and so forth.

It was thorough.

It was complete.

It was concise.

And it was brilliantly innovative.

It was also, completely ignored.

"Too busy to read it."

"Gotta deal with the OCC."

"Oh, thanks, yeah, I took a quick look at it, but I don't have time to get back to you on it. Maybe next week."

and other such excuses I received for no less than (are you ready for it?)

9 months.

And so there I was, like a top of the line F-22 Raptor, mothballed in a hangar. Capable of carrying out a great many things, but the brass was too busy worrying about the paint color on the runway or what to order for lunch.

So there I sat, doing what most corporate cogs do - acting like they're working, when they're just killing time. Matter of fact, I didn't even bother to "look busy." I'd just listen to music, e-mail my friends, facebook and so forth. My "boss" would come in, have something that would take him 8 hours to do because he was old and inept, and I'd knock it out in 15 minutes. I'd take a morning work out break (one hour), then lunch (another hour) and sometimes I'd go for a motorcycle ride just to get some air. However, what constantly gnawed at me was what was substituting my marketing strategy in its stead:

Chocolate chip cookies.

You see, my plan consisted of breaking out of the traditional banking mindset. Doing things differently, innovatively, and creatively. We were small, and thus nimble, and if we streamlined operations, got rid of our bad clientele that consumed our labor resources, we could (I estimated) undercut our competitors' interest rates by .5% and still pull profit. We'd also poach business from our competitors by aggressively targeting their best clients, and we'd get new business by doing fun and creative things like sponsoring barbeque and hotwings competitions, dance classes, and sports competitions.

But no, oh no, we were going to deploy the brilliant strategy of "chocolate chip cookies."

As I was told,

"You see, it's all about superior customer service. It's all about personal service. When Bill walks into the bank, he wants to chit cat, and talk. He likes it that we know his name. And that's why people bank with us. We have cookies on Fridays and offer them cofee"

And so instead of targeting a higher quality clientele, looking for new and profitable business, we were going to be the shucks howdy, gee-whilliker's dandy bank and offer money-losing-customers chocolate chip cookies (but only on Fridays).

The reason I highlighted/bolded the statements above is because this had happened before at the credit union I worked at. We offered "cookies" to our clients when they came in. And when a bank's (or any company's) strategy is "cookies" and "superior customer service" I can gar-ron-freaking-tee you that company's strategy will fail.

The reason why is simple - it's not a strategy.

It's a platitude leaders spew who have no ability to lead, let alone, ideas to offer.

YOu see, if you're going to offer "superior customer service" then the first and primary way you do that is by offering a better product at a lower price. In banking this translates into offering them a lower interest on their loans or a higher interest on their deposits. Free checking and no fees. Stuff like that. THAT is the SERVICE people want. Not f#cking cookies on Fridays (and technically it was popcorn at my branch, only the main office offered cookies).

Additionally, the whole "superior customer service" is a canard in that WHAT FREAKING BANK DOESN'T CLAIM TO OFFER SUPERIOR SERVICE!? Have you ever heard of a bank claiming they offer INFERIOR service? Unless you've hired the absolute best customer service people NO BANK (or company) offers SUPERIOR customer service. You're all the same, you're all providing an equal standard of "faux customer service," while completely ignoring the quality of your product.

The result is obvious - do you know of any bank that is demonstrably superior and better than others? Can you find a single, innovating, mover and shaker bank, busting its ass off to offer you a significantly lower interest rate on your mortgage than its competitors? Or is it that same faux-Minnesota-nice teller at Wells Fargo who is being forced to fake an interest in "what your plans are for the weekend?"

Of course, this lack of any true innovation or ideas is not relegated to banks. Sadly it affects practically all of corporate America. For example this little article here. As further proof corporate America is all out of ideas, food manufacturers are spending their time trying to make their processed food looked more "homemade." Kraft alone, spending 2 years to develop a cutting technique to make their turkey "unevenly cut."

But the primary reason in bringing this up is not to knock the banking industry or the food service industry, but one of serious consequences. The ONLY place any kind of economic recovery or a return to our western countries' former greatnesses is going to come from is the private sector. And the ONLY way we are going to solve our debt problems or enjoy increasing standards of living is through the innovation, creation and productivity of private individuals in the private sector.

But for the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

If "Friday cookies," "superior customer service," the Wells Fargo teller faking interest in my day, and "uneven cut turkey" is the best our private sector can come up with, we are doomed. Because those ideas, are frankly, so stupid they may as well have come from the public sector.

_____

Aaron Clarey will be speaking at the Liberty Mastermind Symposium in Dallas June 28th-29th. Everybody is welcome to join. You can sign up here!

Cappy Cap for Governor

June 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Governor Cappy Cap."

I like the sound of that.

Sure would be a fun time at the capitol!

Novel and Mundane

June 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is the decline. The math is there. There are a few charts to read and some numbers to understand but there's no prerequisite in economics needed to understand everything.

For All The Poor Wells Fargo Tellers

June 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just so you know, every one of us knows that your bosses are forcing you to do the fake "nice" thing, asking us how our day is. We feel for you and wish the same miserable and painful death upon your banking boss overlords as you do. Understand we sympathize with your plight and take no umbrage to you being forced to feign fake interest in our lives. We will do our part to keep our transactions efficient and uncumbersome as possible to make your day more bearable.

Please forward this message to all the other poor suffering souls in the teller community.

How An Obama Sticker is a Good Proxy for a Person With Mental Illness

June 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

The archive of which can be found here.

"If Everybody Did What Danny Did"

June 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Danny from 504 and I were talking not to long ago and he was telling me his plans. And in short, if I were to do it all over again, I would do what Danny did.

He's going to get himself a pension after knocking out 20 years at the firm. He has no kids. He has himself a trailer and a spot of land picked out, and, after running some projections he estimates he's going to work maybe a day or two per week and otherwise just enjoy life and enjoy his free time.

But something occurred to me as I drove through the Black Hills on my bike and pondered our conversation.

"He's going to be retired at 40...he's taking himself out of the labor market before his prime earning years - his 40's and 50's...what if everybody did that? What would the economic consequences be?"

I've already alluded to what would happen if every person engaged in minimalism - the economy would collapse. But what if just a significant percentage of men decided to clock out of the rat race before they started producing and earning the most? We don't need the entire country to go Galt, just a key percentage of them. And this is precisely the legal action libertarians, conservatives, and otherwise Real Americans can take to get their revenge on a galactically stupid electorate.

Understand not all people can just clock out and "Do the Danny." Some men, republican, libertarian, conservative or not, have saddled themselves with responsibilities in the form of mortgages, wives, children, etc. Responsibilities that condemn them to be enslaved to the rat race, denying them the option to clock out at 40. But for the rest of us we are free to do what we choose. And when given the choice of slaving away in the vain hopes of getting promoted to "junior executive" or "senior project manager" only to pay a 50% tax rate (and deal with insufferable office politics) or setting up shop in a trailer on a beach in Southern California (to live off of the generous benefits Californians promise themselves), it's a no brainer - become a beach bum. Additionally, in living so minimally (as I was telling Danny) you are likely to benefit from a TON of tax breaks, income credits, etc., that those generous-with-other-people's-money leftists have voted in. You could easily be paying an effective 0% tax rate AND also be giving it to the system.

In short, not everybody has to starve the beast. Just enough of us do. And if enough "Do the Danny" the left will be paid back in spades.

Remember to sign up for the Liberty Mastermind Symposium if yee'all want to come down to Dallas.

I've Got "The Klout"

June 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

My buddy in Arizona was telling me she got "the gout."

I found that odd because I thought it was a disease old men got.

So I said, "I thought that was a disease that old men got."

And she said, "Yeah, so did I, but I guess anybody at any age can get it."

"....so what the hell is 'The Gout' anyway?"

She said something to do with an inflated toe or something. It was so innocuous I forgot what it was.

But what was cool about having "the gout" was not only was it an old man's disease, it's a disease that is so hoity toity you have to put "the" in front of it.

Of course now I put "the" in front of any sickness I have to beget further pity and pampering from the women in my life.

"I've got The Cold."

"I've got The Fever."

"I've got The Indigestion."

But another thing I put "the" in front of is any of the myriad of new and faddish social media things.

"I do The Twitter."

"I'm on The Facebook."

"I never did The My Space."

So add to this lexicon "The Klout."

"Klout" is very simple. It's a score of 1-100 that presumably measures the "clout" you have on the internet. The higher, the better. The algorithm they use to calculate the klout score could be complete BS, but I don't care. My spidey senses tell me "Klout" actually has some staying power.

The reason why is simple - it's simple.

Score 1-100. 100 good, 1 bad.

None of this reverse, backwards ranking from Technorati with a score in the 4 digits.

None of this "you ranked 345,000th" on Alexa in Guatemala.

1-100, good, bad.

Now, you may be saying, "Captain, why are you telling us about this? Are you plugging it or do you somehow profit from plugging The Klout?"

No, but I am making a prediction. The Klout, because of its simplicity will start to play a larger and larger role in this little interwebz online advertising portion of GDP you, me, and other bloggers/internet personality types progressively make more and more of our money on. And it is because of this simplicity that it will moot and obsolete more complex rating systems. It is also a valuable lesson about social media. All it will take is one slightly clever innovation or tweak and media giants like Facebook could be rendered obsolete.

Calling Captain Save-a-ho

June 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"and thank god it's not"

Hat tip.

Reminds me of this when I was in Wyoming.

The Captain Needs Help

June 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Greetings All,

Your beloved ole Captain needs some help and he'd just consult his beloved readership.

1. I need a model of the female persuasion for a non-puritanical, but tasteful photo.

2. I need a doctor who can help me cut costs for some basic preventative medicine/screening stuff, by bypassing all the damn clinics in town asking me for my social security number, previous records, regulatory bs, etc. etc.

3. I need an artist who can draw this style of art:

You may e-mail the Captain at

CAPTcapitalism

at yahoo

:dot:

com

Testing the Lone Ranger

June 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

OK, Cappy Cappites.

I got an idea.

I refused to see 42 because the trailers showed the standard oppressive white man proselyting BS that is always imbedded in hollywood movies today. I didn't oppress Jackie Robinson, let alone any other black man and so I do take offense and umbrage to the insinuation that I am somehow responsible for actions of people who fall under the category of "not me."

So since Tonto is an Indian (played by a white guy, nice going politically correct, liberal hollywood), I fear that "The Lone Ranger" is going to have some token, politically correct lecture about racism and Indians and evil white people.

I WANT to see the movie but REFUSE to until I know for a fact there ain't no condescending lecture.

So how do we resolve this quandry?

Simple.

Let's make a little pact.

Whoever sees it first reports back immediately if there's any hint or tone of some kind of leftist "evil white man come and take buffalo away" guilt tripping. And if there is, I simply announce it here on my blog and nobody goes sees it. That way only one ticket is bought, saving 10,000 people the hassle and humility of spending their own money to get lectured by the left, and roughly, $100,000 in profit for the left.

Any volunteers to go see the movie?

Empirical Worthlessness of the HR Ditz

June 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Google does a study with numbers

meaning data and stats

which proves interviews and interviewers are worthless meaning IT'S A FACT

and then the HR witches come out screaming bloody murder in the comments.

It's priceless.

Sorry HR people, your skills are best used benefits and compensation and employment law. NOT determining who should be hired or not. Yes, yes, I know, you went into HR because you didn't like accounting or finance because of all that icky math, and why, you're a good "people person." You can tell when somebody's lying because you've watch a lot of reality TV. And you went into HR to have power and control over people's lives and would get a power trip out of it.

Um dearies, how bouts you just go file this W-9 with the Feds and leave the hiring to the big boys who have questions about DSCR ratio calculations and the logic of ACL statements, the math of which would hurt your poor wittle bwains. OK. Thatta girl. Oh, fetch me some coffee while you're at it.

Wasting Away Again in South Dakotaville

June 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Sleeping until 10.
Talk to the old men.
Go hiking in mountains all covered in pine.
I'll take out my old bike
And Harney's Peak I'll hike
It's hard work enjoying the decline.

Wasting away again in South Dakotaville
Searching for my long lost bottle of Rumpie
Some people claim that there's a recession to blame
But I know
It's the socialists' fault

I guess I could go work.
But that'd make my brain hurt.
Dealing with douches who work at the banks.
I'd rather just relax
While you work and pay tax.
For fine public roads I give you my thanks.

Wasting away again in South Dakotaville
Searching for my long lost bottle of Rumpie
Some people claim that there's a recession to blame
But I know
It's the socialists' fault

When Atheists Really Aren't Atheists

June 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Atheists I don't mind. They don't believe in god. Pure and simple. And true atheists leave it at that.

Unfortunately, most atheists don't fall into that category.

No, unfortunately more fall into the crusaderism category where they have to LET YOU KNOW they're atheists. They need to get in your face. They wear it like a badge of honor, because, well, they really have nothing else of value going on in their lives.

And this is the just the latest bit of proof.

Look...I hate religion just as much (if not more) than anybody else. But when you MAKE A CHURCH about atheistism then you have become what you hate. You're a freaking hypocrite and aren't an atheist. Your "theist" has become "atheism."

It's the same thing with "going green."

How many lefitsts mock and ridicule Christianity, Judaism, or just religion in general (unless it's Muslim because Muslims would beat your ass)...

but then in the same breath swallow whole the "going green" "environmentalism" religion?

There is no difference between the two.

Environmentalism is nothing more than a snooty person's religion. Equally unfounded claims. Equally unfounded moral superiority. Equally deserving to get a punch in the face if they ever proselytize to you.

They may "claim" they hate religion or are "too smart for it," but just like all the other sheeple, they find something to glom onto because they lack true and genuine independent thought and individuality (see hipsters). Just because it isn't a biblically-based religion doesn't mean it isn't one and the intellectual weakness of one to subscribe to it doesn't apply. But when you go to the extend to create a CHURCH of atheists you are merely mocking atheists and atheism.

Atheism is the belief there is no god.

Therefore you should not be praying or attending church to/for anything.

Heck, the simplest, most banal reason to be an atheist is to avoid wasting your time praying to a deity in the form of attending church/mass/synagogue/mosque.

But now you morons decide to make a church for atheism.

You're not atheists. You're just a bunch of intellectual weaklings, cowards, and above all else, hypocrites.

Post script - I have also taken a second look at the pictures in the original article from CNN. Notice how nobody is good looking. They're all pretty ugly. Again, they're not real atheists. They are rejected people, desperate for acceptance, and something as pathetic and hypocritical as a Church of Atheism (whose standards I can only imagine to be "a pulse") is only more than happy to have them. This is how cults are formed.

The Consequences of Having No Consequences

June 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The hotel I'm at is a denizen for people on the cheap (like me) old timers looking to retire and live on the cheap

and outlaws evading the law

This makes for some colorful acquaintances, but also provides for some dangerous entertainment I, frankly, enjoy.

One of the older men had imbibed too much. He was a larger fellow, almost pushing 4 bills. He passed out, collapsed, and landed on the floorboard heater which then proceeded to burn his skin to the point the smell awoke others, but not him. He was then rushed to the local hospital and then helicoptered out to a burn unit and I believe he finally woke up only after they shaved off several pounds of flesh to address his burns.

Not to be crass, but that's the truth.

Now we may mock and ridicule this alcoholic all we may, but the truth is the entire country is nothing more than a macro-economic incarnation of this fellow. And the reason why is that we constantly bail out people from their mistakes, just like the alcohol prevented this sap from experiencing the full pain of his wounds. We ensure there are no consequences.

Complain all you want about "Wall Street Bankers," there are millions of "everyday mainstreet" people we bail out from their everyday, idiotic mistakes that cumulatively cause the country much more harm.

They had too many kids.

Bought a house they couldn't afford

Majored in a worthless subject

Started a sports bar that was guaranteed to fail.

Or they racked up a ton of credit card debt.

Everyday, day in, day out, either through forgiveness via the bankruptcy laws or a taxpayer bailout, we prevent the most stupid, ignorant, idiotic, parasitic, negative-net-economic value people of our society from suffering the full and complete financial, economic, and emotional consequences of their mistakes they fully deserve.

Why?

Because leftists have figured out they can score people's votes by shielding people from the consequences of their mistakes. They have made a (temporary) world where there is no pain and no consequences. Only success or neutrality.

But what are the consequences of a "world without consequences?" What if we just paid for all the illegitimate children, bailed out all the banksters, forgave all the humanities-liberal-arts-worthless-degree-majoring college students, and just financially made sure nobody ever suffered their own stupidity?

Complete and utter collapse of society.

Understand a world where there are no consequences will only result in a selfish and childish society that will ultimately destroy itself. The reason why is that if you use the public treasury to constantly bail people out of their mistakes they never are introduced, let alone, forced to live in the real world. They are only brought up with the motherly positive-reinforcement and never the fatherly negative-reinforcement/punishment. And they are therefore are never forced to be adults, let alone, self-sufficient, self-supporting, independent units of society. Worse still, because of this lopsided upbringing, they think they have done no wrong and are incapable of shame. And thus each independent unit turns out to be not only a dependent human, but an enititlement-mentalitied one as well.

But there's a mathematical and economic catch.

Classes of DEPENDENT humans can only last as long as the INDEPENDENT humans are producing enough economic surplus to finance both groups' livelihoods. And while this economic-production-charade can be extended further as you ~~dupe some suckers~~ convince creditors like the Chinese, Japanese, Indians or others to lend you money against your non-producing assets, in the end there is NOT the production necessary to support everybody's livelihood.

"Tami" the single mother of 3 from 5 different fathers, decides to default on her student loans when she pursued her "Masters in Peace Studies"

and

"Tanner Winthrop III" doesn't get paid back his $400 million loan he made to his Sigma Sigma Phi frat brother for that micro-brew that failed

and

any one of the hundreds of millions of equally negative-net-economci value people who rely in some way or another on others' production to bail them out, slowly, but surely start to overcome, and like a cancer consume, outnumber and inevitably kill the productive cells and host.

In short, the whole leftist, boomer-era, Dr. Spock, BS of shielding our pwuecious wittle childwren from the harsh realities of society (because you were too lazy to parent) has only served to produce two generations of net-negative economic producers, three if you include the boomers themselves.

And while we can play the game of moving cones or changing accounting rules, in the end what we ultimately have is

- a bunch of adult children incapable of supporting themselves,
- hopelessly depending on a government for their livelihood,
- which itself is hopelessly dependent on a deteriorating tax base,
- which also then relies on the naivety of foreign creditors to lend against our WWII generation's reputation
- while current generations watch "Keeping Up With the Kardaishians," major in sociology, and vote such an inconceivably inept man like Barack Obama into the presidency.

The fact millions of creditors lent $16 trillion against such lousy, pathetic, worthless, and non-producing assets is beyond me.

———

Enjoyed the above? Ensure the Captain never has to go and work a real job again. Buy something you need on Amazon or purchase any one of his books!

Why You Don't Want Your Kids Educated By Prof. William Cunningham

June 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"To get around this inequity, our forefathers set up a progressive tax system where high-income taxpayers pay a higher percentage of their wages in taxes."

and other bold faced lies by this academian who could never get a job in the real world.

"Men's Interest" Measured as a Commodity

June 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Now do me a favor and let's not make this complicated.

I want something a little complex, but in actuality is quite simple.

I want any MALE participants who are willing to do the following:

List the percent of your FREE TIME (outside of work and sleep) that was spent pursuing the fairer sex at the following ages:

15
25 35
45
55
65

So, for example, when you were 25, and you finished work, WHAT PERCENT OF YOUR 8 REMAINING AWAKING HOURS did you spend at the bar, happy hour, or the night clubs on the weekend pursuing the fairer sex? This could include online dating, chatting up a girl at the grocery store, any time spent chasing the girly girls, what percent?

Also, let's say you're 52. Just estimate it for 15, 25, 35, 45, AND 55. Do not estimate for 65.

Post below like this:

15 - 70%
25 - 80%
35 - 50%
45 - 50%

Do not let the above example numbers influence you. I want an empirical read.

AND FOR GOD'S SAKE DON'T MAKE IT COMPLICATED WHICH SOME OF YOU ALREADY ARE!

THank you,

Cpt.

PS-Please forward to other men for the more data samples I have, the better.

It's Too Late for the Boomers, But Not For You

June 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Don't wait until you're 60 to start planning for retirement.

PLAN NOW.

Here's the class I offer on basic personal finance and retirement planning. It is very introductory and written for the common man. No hoity toity crap, no talking over your head. Simple common senses and advice everybody needs.

Worthless Now Available in Audio

June 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Howdy Lieutenants!

Worthless is available in audio-book format. I believe it is also on iTunes, but I haven't really ever looked much at iTunes.

Also, if you want to stock up on Amazon stuff before the new Minnesota law goes into effect, do it now.

Have to set up a South Dakota LLC and some legal stuff to get her up and running afterwards, but that might have to be after vacation.

Now How Cool Is That?

June 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So guess who gave a hat tip to the Ole Captain!?

MIKE - FREAKING - ROWE!

About the only thing cooler would be Bruce Willis saying he needed me to co-star in the next Die Hard...as long as it doesn't suck like the last one.

In any case, you should all go visit Mike Rowe's web page of friend him on facebook and the reason is simple. Not because we all like Mike Rowe. But because he has the status and celebrityship to actually convince younger people to make wise choices when it comes to pursuing the right fields. Guy's got a noble cause...and...well...more patience and charisma than I do to convince youth.

Adventures of Cappy Cap

June 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I had gone to the extents to duct tape my camcorder on my helmet and film the Spearfish Canyon on the bike.

The angle was completely wrong and all you got was pavement and yellow passing lines.

So here are some pictures instead, of my most recent adventures.

85
16

The following are pictures from the Sheridan, WY Dachshund Races, the bike outside of Buffalo, WY facing the Big Horn Mountains, Spearfish Canyon at Savoy, SD, and the crossroads in Newcastle, WY of 85 and 16. The last picture is from the top of Bear Butte just outside Sturgis, SD. This was all done in a 16 hour period with 6 hours sleep. YOu too can enjoy the decline. Just get your wife's permission first. Yuk yuk yuk!!!! No, seriously, there's no reason I should be out here by myself. You all need to get motorcycles and get your asses out here next year.

Oh, and if that doesn't convince you SUPER DACHSHUND WILL!

Feminists Can't Do Math

June 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A friend sent this to me. Article claiming Julia Gillard was ousted because of sexism.

The article is full of half-truths and hallow accomplishments, not to mention "successes" that are actually failures (she passed the most amount of legislation since WWII - OH GREAT! Just what everybody wants! More rules!)

But something caught my economist eye. The author claims Australia's GDP increased by 14% under Gillard. Of course it was a feminist prime minister that was the cause of this great economic growth. Not the hard working people of Australia and certainly not China's economic boom requiring Australia's natural resources. No, Ms. Gillard, just like Obama could fart out GDP.

Regardless, I found that 14% odd and a little high for a prime minister that has only been there, about 3 years. So I did two things feminists don't;

Look up some facts
and math.

Here's the data I used - RGDP growth rates from the OECD.

Economics: Key tables from OECD - ISSN 2074-384X - © OECD 2013

Real gross domestic product - forecasts

Percentage change over previous period

	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013
Australia	4.8	2.4	1.5	2.6	2.4	3.6	2.6
Austria	3.7	1.1	-3.5	2.2	2.7	0.8	0.5
Belgium	2.9	1.0	-2.8	2.4	1.9	-0.3	0.0
Canada	2.1	1.1	-2.8	3.2	2.6	1.8	1.4
Chile	5.1	3.1	-0.9	5.8	5.9	5.5	4.9

Here's the math I did exponentially multiplying the various years, halving 2010's and 2013's growth since Ms. Gillard took over and got fired mid year in each years respectively.

	A
1	1.013
2	1.024
3	1.036
4	1.013
5	1.08862575
6

The REAL economic growth figure?

8.9%.

Look, ladies (and by ladies, I mean feminists), if you want to be treated as equals you need to actually BE EQUALS. Not hacks, not spoiled children following an ideology at the cost of truth, and on top of it you need to be able to do at least 5th grade mathematics. You demand all these changes in society, you demand everybody make sacrifices, but when all you spew is propaganda that is either spun so much it's not true, our just outright lies, your entire credibility is shot.

Perhaps you could enlist some engineers and accountants of the female persuasion instead of drudging up the same ole "leftist, humanities-majoring "journalist/writer/adviser/activist" (Oh, that's right, those women are busy with real jobs and producing actual GDP and economic production people want!). Or perhaps you could take some elementary school math classes for free at Khan's Academy. Or perhaps you could actually grow up into a mature adult, learn about economics, develop intellectual honesty, and learn what "empirical" evidence means before you start advocating the world change to unfairly benefit you.

Because to tell you the honest truth, when all your mind is capable of is viewing the world through the feminist lens, you don't come off as myopic, self-serving, and a cry baby, you ARE MYOPIC, SELF-SERVING and a CRY BABY. And ironically if all you can do is whine and complain, chalking every problem up to "sexism" and not take your lumps like a real man, then not only will you incorrectly diagnose yours or society's problems, you will never achieve parity with men.

But please, continue on the "feminism at all costs, including the truth." It provides immense entertainment for myself, not to mention exposes who are charlatans and ideologues advancing a political cause to benefit at the expense of others, and who are actual statesmen and patriots who care about society.

Why You Can't Find a Man

June 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I am working on a whole new economic theory. In my humble opinion it will revolutionize economics. I tire as different economists and philosophers argue the differences between "Keynesian" and "Austrian" and "neoclassical" and "classical" economics, because they're

1. talking way over normal everyday people's heads
2. usually are quite often wrong because they are more concerned about supporting one particular line of economic thought instead of ackowledging the empirical real world.

It's just a general theory now with the details and tenets being worked out in my head as I hike and ride, but some day it will be my "General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money" but it won't suck and will be understandable by the masses. And no, I'm not even going to tell what it is because I do not want other economists taking the idea and running with it.

Anyhoo, with this new theory prompted me to conduct an informal and unscientific study. It won't seem any different than any previous sociological study I've done, but it does have its origins in my new theory - specifically why can't those girls find a man.

In a post I requested men estimate the percent of their free time they spent pursuing the fairer sex at the following ages:

15, 25, 35, 45, 55, and 65

Out of the 27 data points only one was 65 years of age and it was zero, so I only have data for ages 15-55.

I then averaged them out to estimate a "demand curve" of ladies for men at varying ages. And it looks like this.

Percent of Men's Free Time Spent Pursuing Women By Age 30
25 20 15 10
5 0 15
25 35
45
55

In short men (while still boys) spend 15% of their free time chasing girls, peaking at around 24% when 25 and then consistently declining to only 2% in the three decades thereafter.

What this confirms is something we've already known - that as men age they leave the market. But that's precisely the point. It CONFIRMS. I don't like going into debates with theories, I like going into debates with facts and knowledge because I don't care to debate. I care to be informed.

Regardless, though just a single and simple chart, it has ramifications.

First, it validates work done by The Rational Male, namely his attempts to chart "Sexual Market Value." No doubt he has gotten guff and accusations of misogyny for daring to chart such a thing, but it is reality and reality cannot be bigoted or sexist. The above chart just provides more empirical data to prove it.

Second, it explains why as women age "they can't find a good man" or "where have all the good men gone." As I've explained before, they went home. This is a very important point to make because it shows the classical signs of an economic bubble. There was HUGE demand earlier for women. Men would flood the market with attention, effort, time and energy trying to find girls. Just think of all the time you would go to parties, clubs, online dating profiles, etc. etc, just to get a number back when you were 23. Men would make themselves available as much as they possibly could.

But then the bubble bursts.

Men no longer go out "clubbing." They don't log into their Match.com account as much. And they could go to that desperate singles event, but the game is on. And soon the supply of attention that was previously flooding the market and driving the SMV of women up, plummets, driving down the "units of attention" per woman.

However, I fear there is a "Wile E. Coyote" experience these ladies have. They have been so accustomed to being flooded with attention, they don't realize the ground has been taken out from beneath them. They are like the McMansion buyer in 2005 who lost his job in 2006, has to sell the house and "can't believe," nay, REFUSES to believe his house had gone down in value. Ironically, he only worsens his situation in delaying the sale based on pride as the market tanks further.

Third, also notice age has an effect. A 25 year old man is looking for a 25 year old woman. But at the age of 55, they 55 year old man is probably not looking for a 55 year old woman. Matter of fact, most of his attention and efforts are going to be expended on a (roughly estimated) 45 year old woman. This means the chart is even worse for aging women.

In short, however, the chart does answer where all the "good men" have gone. They're still alive. There wasn't a disease that wiped them out. They merely aren't in the market anymore and are expending their free time on other things.

The Captain Meets Two Girls From Russia

June 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

There's a bar called "The Vault" in Hot Springs, SD. It's about the only place that fits my age, has decent food and internet access.

I was working my mother's-basement-based internet media empire when two very attractive young women walked in. They were decked out, in heels and groomed perfectly.

I naturally assumed they were with the "Ms. South Dakota" pageant which is hosted in Hot Springs and thus ignored them. I continued with my work, finished my burger and went up to the bar to pay my tab.

However, my path had me go right past the two entrants and so enroute to the cashier I stopped and asked,

"Are you girls entrants in the beauty pageant?"

They, surprisingly said, "no." I continued on to the bar to pay my tab, but in that short 3 minutes I was confused. They were WAY too good looking to be locals. Too young to be natives. And too dressed up to be from the area. I caught a hint of an accent and so on the return trip to my table I stopped by again and asked,

"Excuse me, but do you mind if I ask you a question."

They said, "sure."

"If you're not with the beauty pageant, then why are you here?"

They giggled a little bit and said, "What beauty pageant?"

I said, "The Ms. South Dakota beauty pageant. It's hosted here every summer."

The one on the right said, "No, we're not with the beauty pageant. We're workers at the Vista Hotel. We're from Russia."

And then the light went on.

To handle tourist season a lot of the local hotels, gift shops, and so forth, hire eastern European kids to handle the excess traffic. They get to see some of the most beautiful parts of the US and the employers get cheap labor. And when they said they were from Russia and working at the hotel, it all made sense.

But here is where it gets interesting.

Had they been American women, my inquiry as to whether they were part of the beauty pageant would have been a complete failure. It would have been viewed as sucking up, dismissed, poo pooed, "yeah we know we're hot," and I would have been guaranteed a 100% failure. But since these were girls from Russia, it was the complete opposite.

They were completely flattered.

"Did you really think we were in the beauty pageant?" one said with a smile on her face.

I said, "Yes, but you have to understand. NOBODY dresses up like you girls do in this town and most of the women are old or ugly. You stand out and since the pageant was in town I figured you were part of it."

This innocent and sincere statement only endeared me to them further. They genuinely appreciated the fact I mistook them for beauty pageant contestants. They started asking what I did, why I was there, as I also inquired about them and what they were doing.

However, it was sad because I only had one more day in town and wanted to make sure these young ladies got the most out of their trip. Since I couldn't play the role of tour guide, I wrote everything I loved about the Black Hills and the Badlands down on a napkin making them promise me they would visit these sites even if it took a little money. They thanked me and then something very rare happened.

One of them asked me to pull up a chair and join them.

I don't mean this to sound like "Gee shucks whillikers howdy" moment as if a girl never asked me to join them. I mean this as a "holy cow, a courteous gesture on the part of a young woman to be considerate enough to OBSERVE the situation and make a stranger feel welcome." Though I would have liked to talk to them more, I was deadly tired from 300 miles of riding and climbing Bear Butte, and very politely declined the offer, said I had to get some sleep and reiterated the importance they explore and enjoy the Black Hills.

The moral of this story is a simple one.

This is HOW IT SHOULD BE.

Notice there were no sexual overtones or romantic interests. There was no presumptions on the part of the girls. It was just a simple and honest interaction between a guy and two gals. And the women were cordial, kind, sweet, and (dare I point out) physically presentable to the public. When I made my approach they were not rude, dismissive or condescending. Instead they listened, were polite and took me for my word, never once considering engaging in mind games. It resulted in a very enjoyable experience where instead of pulling teeth to merely engage a member of the opposite sex in a non-sexual, genuinely interested, curiosity-based, grounds, I got to enjoy a good conversation with two nice girls that will make two lucky men very happy in the future.

They were ladies. And I suggest American and western women start paying attention if they wish to achieve the same status and respect.

The David Lereah of the Education Bubble

June 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Meet Verlyn Klinkenborg.

In a recent editorial in the NYT she says

What many undergraduates do not know — and what so many of their professors have been unable to tell them — is how valuable the most fundamental gift of the humanities will turn out to be. That gift is clear thinking, clear writing and a lifelong engagement with literature.

Frankly, I am sick of this shit.

The reason I curse is because no non-cursing language can convey how utterly sick and tired, not to mention, angry I am with shills and whores of Big Education desperately trying to;

1. Rationalize their own stupid decisions to major in worthless subjects
2. Continue to vampire off of naive young 17 and 18 year old children by making them pay inflated prices for worthless degrees so the legions of aging worthless humanities professors can avoid having to work real jobs in the real world.

The Education Bubble is bursting, just like the housing bubble. And you David Lereah's of the education industry are being exposed for the shills you are.

Do you even listen to yourselves???

"The gift of "humanities is the gift of "clear thinking, clear writing, and a life-long engagement with literature?"

Really?

So, then we could agree to eliminate all humanities and liberal arts departments from all universities because there is a cheaper alternative called "the library?" And since you academian leftist jounralism types care soooooooo much for the "chillllllldreeeennnnnn" you would in all intellectual honesty say, "hey, don't spend $50,000 on a degree when you can get the same thing for free at the local library AND HAVE THE EXACT SAME EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS?"

Or are we going to go the same old boring "education is an experience, it isn't all about the money" route?

You might as well say "housing prices always go up."

The only thing saving you now is the naivety and ignorance of the average 17 year old who has been indoctrinated and brainwashed by ass-kissing, brown-nosing teachers and parents who have convinced them they are great and can do no wrong. That "follow your heart and the money will follow." Not to mention you've convinced these undeveloped minds they're entitled to an education, even if it is in Transgendered-Ethiopian-18th Century-French-Poetry-Studies, and even if it will cripple them financially for the rest of their lives.

The only thing worth less than the degrees in the humanities are the whores, charlatans and scum pimping those degrees in academia, quite literally parasiting off of the children they so hypocritically claim to be helping. They're no different than the bankers and mortgage brokers scum we've all been told to hate who brought the housing bubble.

So do America and the children a REAL and GENUINE favor. June is Worthless Degree Awareness Month. How about you fight back and buy "Worthless" for either a loved one about to attend college, yourself, or hell, if there's any foundation or conservative institution that really wants to implement some change, how about you spend a little bit of that money on buying an entire high school or school district copies of this book? How about flooding a high profile college campus with copies of it? You want to undo all the socialist brainwashing these kids get and are going to get? How about you start at the source and launch an all out campaign where the left is weakest? Their liberal-voter factories - academia.

Replacing Your Husband With the State

June 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is exactly how feminism has hurt women more than men. It has taken something as soulless and indifferent as the state and supplanted genuine, loving, caring, human beings in the form of fathers, husbands and children.

I don't have to lift a finger to get revenge on the leftist feminists that are assaulting American and freedom. They're doing it to themselves.

A Worthless Haiku

June 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

for Worthless Degree Awareness Month! From a reader:

Butterfly dances
'Cause her degree is worthless
She needs the money

Why Black Men Can't Compete

June 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Let's call him "Bill."

It wasn't his name, but I don't care to identify him and give him more grief than what he's already in for.

I met Bill watching over him while working a prisoner shift at a "place."

Over the course of these shifts we get to know the prisoners if they're the talkative types quite well. And Bill was talkative.

He had himself a girlfriend. Thought he was in love. Until he came home one day and she was with another guy. Bill went into a rage, thus leading to the opportunity for Bill and I to get acquainted. Turns out this has happened before to Bill. Not specifically that he came home and caught his girl cheating, but that women would date him for a while and then leave him for another man.

What was interesting, however, was that though Bill was no saint, he was no grandiose sinner either. He was also quite personable, seemed sane, and after talking to him for 8 hours I got the impression it was unfortunate events like this that landed him in the slammer. Theoretically, I wondered, if the first girl hadn't done this to him years back, would he have gone down this path and would we have ever become acquainted? Regardless, I could not see why this guy would have girls leave him for other men so regularly.

One other thing about Bill, he was black.

Now before we let the brainwashing the socialist public schools, media and society have forced on us to immediately have a knee jerk reaction and start slinging accusations of racism around please shut up, engage your adult mind, and listen, for this is an important point I'm trying to make and has a lesson in it for all of us.

So my little detective brain started to piece together a theory. Bill was short, wasn't terribly successful in life, was a little younger than myself. So I took a gamble:

"How tall was the guy she left you for?"

Bill said, "I don't know, 6'."

"Have all the guys girls have left you for been taller?"

"Yeah, pretty much," he said.

And so I said to myself "hmmmm...."

WAs this proof positive of hypergamy running rampant in our society? Proof positive that the women that dumped Bill for other men wanted to date taller fellows?

No, but it was yet another bit of anecdotal evidence that would raise a brow and an anecdote that made me think some things through for our black brothers as Bill drifted off to sleep for the next 6 hours.

"Hypergamy" if you are unaware of, is the theory/fact (depending on who you ask) that women like to marry "up." They want a guy who makes more money, who has a higher status, who drives a nicer car, etc. etc. Because it suggests women (in general) have less-than-pure or ulterior motives, it is thus taboo to suggest a thing in ~~brainwashed and politically correct~~ "polite" society, but since I don't care about feelings and only care about the truth, it is a phenomenon as blatantly obvious as the sun.

Is hypergamy "wrong" or even "bad?" No, it's a fact of life, it is the nature of women. It is a naturally developed trait that has evolved for good reason over the eons, a reason we may not fully understand.

However, when hypergamy is combined with societal, sociological or political changes, it can spell disaster. And such is the case for our black brothers.

Understand the single most important thing in life is other human beings. They are the most advanced, dynamic and changing entities on the planet. Again, you can have the latest version of Grand Theft Auto with the most advanced X-Box system, it pales in comparison to another human being that is not a finite or programmed entity. It is because humans are changing, dynamic and mentally infinite, you can love them. Be it either your children (who will continue to amaze you with their antics, advancements, and mental wonderings) or your friends (who challenge your thought, stimulate your mind and provide you comradery) you can establish a personal relationship with them, a relationship you cannot establish with an inanimate object. However, more important than all that is the relationship you will have with your spouse/loved one. It is a different love and one that is not rivaled and is one of the key sources of happiness. And thus why women are so important to men in life.

However, if you wish to attract a quality woman, all the wonderful personality in the world will not matter. You need to accept and incorporate the reality of hypergamy into your strategy otherwise you will fail. This is a good thing for it forces men to strive and work hard. It forces them to create, innovate, discipline and improve themselves so that they may have a wonderful woman in their life. Matter of fact, you could make a very reasonable claim that nearly all advances and creations in society are at least partly due to hypergamy. Regardless, the instinctual, biologically hard-wired rules are that men must strive, produce, and succeed in life to attract a quality woman.

But what if extraneous sociological, psychological or even political factors are combined with the hypergamous nature of women and disturb this natural balance? What if something were to happen to society where women's hypergamy was tinkered with? There is no "what if." It's happening in American black culture today.

What we have today (in the black community) is "hyper-hypergamy." Women are no longer satisfied with a hard working electrician or a mild-mannered accountant. They are not satisfied with a stable guy, with regular income. They are not satisfied with a regular Joe who works hard and does his best. Media, society, and other sociological entities have created in their minds the idea that it's "a rap star or nothing." That it's a "professional athlete" or nothing. This puts the VAST majority of black men (and boys) in an impossible situation.

They simply can't compete.

How does Bill compete with Kanye West?

How does the average black man compete with LeBron James?

How does the local average high school black boy compete with his drug-dealing counterpart glorified in rap videos and media?

It's simple.

They can't.

They don't have millions. They don't have fame. Just like every other race, the vast majority of them are just regular schmoes like us. Not rock stars, not athletes, not movie stars.

But there is another entity black men are competing against for the affect of their ladies that puts the likes of LeBron James to shame and makes Kanye West look like a putz. Matter of fact, you could take all of the athletes, rock stars, rap stars, and romanticized thugs, purify their "higher status" and breed a genetically modified "super-athlete-rap-star-alpha Denzel Washington" type and it would still pale in comparison to this irresistible entity. And truth be told, it was what instigated black women to go into "hyper-hypergamy" in the first place and (in my humble opinion) is the core of the cause for black's relative "last place" in society

The federal government or "the state."

Understand the state has decimated the black community by corrupting hypergamy in women in three ways.

First, in in the state providing the basics in terms of food, clothing and shelter, women no longer need a man for these basic necessities. Normally and historically, this was provided by the man, but with these necessities taken care of, women can now afford to demand even more from their men.

"What, you're just going to provide me a house, pay for my food, and pay for utilities? Barack Obama and the state already does that! What ELSE are you going to bring to the table?"

This puts black men in a nearly impossible situation because black men have simply been replaced by the government. Since the man's job WAS to provide a stable living, providing things like food, clothing, shelter, etc., with that gone these men must go into hyperdrive and outperform in other areas (fame, athleticism, brute display of strength, etc.). Mathematically, only a certain amount of men can become professional athletes, rap stars, or what have you. The rest, sadly, "die trying."

Second, it is IMPOSSIBLE to compete against the government. The government has TRILLIONS of dollars every year that politicians are only more than willing to spend on women and children. How does the average black man with a respectable $17/hour job compete against Barack Obama promising trillions of dollars for black women and their children? And worse still, while the Kobe Bryants and Kanye Wests of the world will attract the hottest and top females in the black community, the federal government sops up the remaining 99% of regular women that regular men would have normally attracted, leaving the vast majority of regular Joe black men destitute, lacking romantic meaning in life, and without families of their own. And without that, what incentive does your average black man have to go and make something of himself?

Third, this government entitlement/subsidy WORSENS the quality and caliber of women. Whereas a husband or potential suitor in the past would hold their wives or potential spouses to certain standards, the state holds them to none. Worse still, the worse-behaved and more screwed up you are, the MORE the state will provide for you. This only reinforces low-quality behavior and in a cartel-like way, lowers the quality men get to choose from.

Now, while I am focusing on black men, don't for a second think it only applies to them. Understand I only highlight them because it is our black brothers who are furthest down this rabbit hole.

If you look at illegitimate births (or any other sociological ailment) as a proxy for the level at which the government is replacing men, "sugar daddy government" is, frankly, stealing all races of all men's women at an increasing pace. Whites, latinos, indians, you name it. Ergo, this is not a "black" problem, it is a problem for all men (and truthfully) all women. It's just the likes of Bill are the proverbial canary in the mine shaft.

A Very Apt Review

June 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Posting this because it hit me as a very accurate and insightful review:

Given the subject, I was expecting a bleak read, but Mr. Clarey presented a practical treatise on a topic many become Chicken Little-esque is discussing. The text doesn't read as a prepper's guide nor the Unabomber's Manifesto. It was written in a thoughtful and practical manner. The premise is: If one cannot change the system to which he is bound, then one should take advantage to ensure, as best possible, a favorable outcome for himself and his loved ones.

You can buy "Enjoy the Decline" here.

When Hollywood Ran Out of Ideas

July 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The chart is very telling and confirms what I intuitively knew was happening.

I do have an OUTSTANDING fiction book that I intend on writing and would make for a great movie (and no, I'm not just saying that, it would be an instant blockbuster), but it will have to wait for the day I am independently wealthy on economics and non-fiction books that I can afford the time to pursue such a leisurely pursuit.

Regardless, what Hollywood is suffering from is the precise, exact same thing government is suffering from - talentless individuals.

I've cited this before, but worthless people with no intention, desire, work ethic, let alone, ability flood the government, public sector, non-profit, and (naturally) art world.

Who declares a poli-sci major?

A lazy egomaniacal 17 year old.

Who declares a journalism major?

A lazy, but still egotistical, 17 year old.

And who declares a "film major?"

Again, an equally lazy, talentless 17 year old who doesn't like math.

Mark my words - in the future the TRUE masterpieces and blockbusters will come from people who did NOT study the arts, but rather studied life and lived it. They will not be spoiled suburbanite brats whose parents paid for their hobby to major in "theater." They will not be the adult-children whose parents made large donations to art museums to have their 45 year old child's crappy art put up in a display. They will be the truck driver who had a lot of time on the road to think about (and pull from his personal experiences) a truly great work of art. They will come from the security guard who has the time to ponder and hammer out a great plot. They will come from the 80 hour a day workaholic who gets laid off and channels his/her energies towards some creative production.

It will never, and I mean, NEVER come from the hipster-infested coffee shops and cafes of conformists and intellectual weaklings who rely on government subsidy.

Teachers Aren't Your Friends

July 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I will be coming out with a series against teachers exposing them for the failed humans most of them are.

In the meantime some empirical data.

From Our Father Agent in the Field

July 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dear Cappy Cap,

My 14-year-old son had been talking of working in IT, which sounded like a decent plan to me. Somebody in India or China can't come in and fix your dead computer, or get the network switch installed down the hall. He's a kid who set up Linux on his PC on his own, and regularly jailbreaks phones/tablets/etc. for himself and his friends.

Anyway, the other day in the car, he announced that he might be interested in entomology, with perhaps IT as a minor.

ENTOMOLOGY?!?

"Son," I said, after managing to not crash the car, "I'm sure bugs are interesting, but what's your plan B? What are you going to do to actually, you know, earn money so you can eat?"

So the rest of the way home, we talked about how useless his entomology degree would be, compared to IT.

And in a bit that may bring a tear to your eye, his younger sister, who had been silently taking this all in, piped up with, "So maybe being an actress isn't such a good idea?"

I gifted "Worthless" to my son on Kindle about 5 minutes after we got home, and he read it within 24 hours. Now he thinks petroleum engineering might be a good major. On his own, he's searching up websites about job salaries.

THANK YOU!

Ahhhh....warm Cappy Cap fuzzies.

That and knowing I cost the liberal art academian vampires over at Big Education another $100,000 in tuition they'll never get.

The Ineffectiveness of Nagging

July 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Really, no kidding? You don't say!

I distinctly remember a woman (who shall go unnamed) tell me

"Yeah, I used to nag, but it doesn't work."

Which told me

"OK, so you women KNOW what you are doing when you nag and it isn't just some 'thing women do unconsciously?!"

I think a new slogan for a PSA announcement might work -

"Nagging - It Gives You Permission to Cheat on Your Wife! THe More You Know!"

Methinks that would bring an abrupt end to nagging.

Resource Warfare from the Terrorists

July 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The military switched from larger caliber bullets (30-06) to smaller caliber (.223) because they found larger caliber bullets tend to kill the intended recipient. That would take one soldier off the field. However, if you wounded one, it would potentially take three - the wounded soldier and two more soldiers to remove him from the field and save his life (and I swear to god, if any of you people come in and anal-rententively correct me on a technicality I'll murder your cats).

The same tactic is being employed here. The enemies of western civilization are not so much concerned about killing targets one at a time as much as they are resource consumption. THis scum bucket has consumed, in terms of time, more than just one Brit's life and thus caused more damage.

Of course, if Britons wanted to grow a spine and just start throwing/killing scum like him out, they could. But that wouldn't be polite and the lefties would scream bloody murder. Plus it would require self-respect and an appreciation for western civilization.

The Dysfunctional Labor Market

July 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If there's one "surprise" benefit I wasn't expecting when I clocked out and started to enjoy the decline, it was the sheer amount of effort, time, and resources I saved by never having to apply for a job again. And not just the chronological time, but also the fact I don't have to deal with the bi-polar, passive-aggressive, psychotic traits of the labor market.

For example, I met a guy at the Liberty Mastermind Symposium who works at Miles Franklin, a precious metals dealer. He realized I had advertising potential. I realized his product was aligned with my audience and in what was no more than a 1 minute conversation, we had already concluded business and are likely to start setting them up as an advertiser.

Another example, Ed over at Ranger Self Defense. For him and me to conduct business took all of two e-mails. Him asking me to put ads on my site and me saying "sure."

Contrast this with negotiating for employment with a modern day employer.

First there's the "initial call."

Then the screening interview.

Then the 3 weeks that go by when they said they'd get back to you in 1.

Then you give up.

A month later they call for a second screening interview.

Then set a time for a phone interview with the hiring manager next week.

Oops, can we make it the week after.

Then another 2 weeks.

Then the in person interview.

Then the "panel" interview.

And when it's all said and done you've spent the equivalent of 3 weeks of full time work dealing with these inefficient, private-sector bureaucratic, morons only not to get the job.

The latest bank I worked at was so inefficient, that it took them 3 months to finally get around to making a decision. I remember them setting up their 4th phone interview during which I purposely ensured to be drinking a martini when they called because of all their dicking around.

Regardless, this article highlights and outlines how the situation is not improving. So much so that it's just more straws on the camel's back to abandon "traditional" employment. And I believe it has gotten to that point, especially for impatient and standard-holding people such as myself. And you must understand how powerful a statement that is.

It is EASIER for you to just not go to college, pick up a skill or a trade, and start a business from scratch than it is to go to college, rely on the economies to scale of the traditional labor market, spend all the time sending out resumes, etc. etc.

In otherwords, the system has become so corrupted, so dysfunctional it is no longer efficient. A 19 year old sole proprietor stands a higher chance at making more money eeking out some niche or morsel of a market than he/she does wasting their lives and sanity dealing with the HR ditzes, progressive credentialism, compliance, 4 hour meetings, and sociopathic bosses that plague corporate America. You stand a better shot at being a freaking blogger than becoming a "valued employee" as an accountant at a Fortune 500 company.

So you all go to college. You all go to those "networking events." You all force yourself to act interested as the recruited comes to school to promise one of the 600 of you a job. You get your bachelors, then masters, the CPE certifications. Oh, and by god, you enjoy that commute. The rest of us are going to the internet, meeting up with people who don't have time for corporate schmoozing bullshit, want to get the shit done, and make some money. Our system may not be as glorious, but we'll be the ones waking up at 10AM and pulling down the real money and not having to talk to a therapist because of the psychotic mental environment of modern day corporate employers.

I Will Not See the Lone Ranger

July 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our agent in the field:

"In one of the busier scenes in Gore Verbinski's very busy The Lone Ranger, dozens if not hundreds of Comanche tribesmen are brutally gunned down by a machine-gun-armed U.S. Cavalry. This sad and ugly violence — employed to represent the larger cultural annihilation being waged throughout the American West in the bloody era of Manifest Destiny — is intercut with shots of Johnny Depp, at the moment dressed up like a Chinese rail worker but face still covered in warpaint, furiously pumping a railway handcar with a blindfolded Armie Hammer as his passenger. Tonto and the Lone Ranger's wacky, madcap getaway complete, we are then allowed a somber moment to pause and reflect on the terrible bloodshed to which we were just subjected."

I said it before, and I'll say it again, I'm sick and tired of being lectured by leftists and race whores blaming me and trying to shame me for things I didn't do. And I'm not going to pay them or give them my money. Sure, I'll watch a pirated copy. Sure, I'll watch it if somebody else watches it, but unlike every Eloi, SWPL who will just brush it off and see it anyway, heck, even blame themselves a little believing in BS like "white privilege," I'm not going to part with a portion of my finite life in the form of my money to get lectured.

And just like we took roughly $100,000 away from Big Education recently, I suggest the roughly 10,000 readers take their $10 each and not give it to Hollywood.

Happy 4th Cappy Caps!

July 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Fuck You Mark Dayton

July 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Fuck you very much.

Like I said, South Dakota or Wyoming will be getting the business.

Why Your Job Will Never Be Satisfying Or Challenging

July 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Some brilliant career advice if I do say so myself.

And I do, because it is brilliant.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick

July 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So it isn't "free" tuition when you essentially are having your wages garnished, is it?

It's more like "indentured servitude" or "slavery" or "the state parasiting off of you and adding another 3% income tax."

Honest to god, at any time you dumb, young kids can starve the beast by not attending and getting votech degrees.

Somebody buy the entire state of Oregon copies of Worthless.

By the way, what is 3% on a barrista's part time annual income?

The Fat Rationalization Hamster

July 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Spin baby, spin!

Update - from our Swedish Agent in the Field. Apparently the author is a COLLEGE HEALTH EDUCATOR. Yes, that's who I want in charge of a college's health education program, a woman who doesn't believe in discipline and self-control...though, now I have to ask...why does a college need a health educator? And you dumb kids and leftists wonder why tuition is sky high. Idiots, freaking idiots.

Professors are the New Banksters

July 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The parallels between the bankers that caused the housing bubble and the professors/administrators causing the education bubble are uncanny.

Men Improve, Feminists Excuse

July 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

There had been something gnawing at the back of my head regarding this post from a feminist/"college health educator," advocating that your obesity was not your fault. It finally dawned on me in the shower;

Men look to improve themselves, correct the error of their ways, and become better people.

Feminists look for excuses for their continued gluttonous and slothful behavior.

Politics, economics and sociology aside, if you look at the Manosphere vs. the "feminist-sphere" the Manosphere has an entire section dedicated towards health, working out, eating right, and self-improvement. Heck, we even have entire blogs dedicated towards working out and health.

Feminists do not.

Matter of fact they perform the most insane mental acrobatics I've ever seen in intellectual dishonesty, lying to themselves, and rationalization. Going so far as to blame society for daring to having values, standards and the audacity to judge.

I've meandered into this rabbit hole before, and I theorize that it is laziness that drives this. It takes less effort to use words and concoct weak mental rationalizations than it does to commit to a life-long part time job of physical self-improvement. I've also theorized in the past this is why leftistism and feminism usually go hand in hand. Lazy people (feminist or not) LOATHE and FEAR work effort tenacity drive competition performance and judgement

It explains why they're not only physically unappealing, but usually rely on government subsidy for their livelihood, job or profession (for example academia, the non-profits that receive government grants, women's studies departments at public universities and their constant political demands to have the state replacement the husband as the main financial provider).

Regardless, the end result are two philosophies that are starkly different and shows which group is truly more moral, selfless and altruistic - the men.

Men could, we COULD, just sit on our asses and complain all day. And many men do. But isn't it funny, that the most "extreme," "radical" and (guaranteed-to-be-accused-of) misogynistic fringe of the male world in the form of the Manosphere constantly beats it into the heads of its readers that to impress and make women happy they have to hit the gym, work hard and dedicate their lives towards self improvement? Yes there is a element you do such things for yourself, but in the end, don't fool yourself, it's primarily for the women and the theoretical children you might have some day.

I ask, where is the feminist equivalent?

Even those mindless women's magazine you can pick up at the grocery store have articles and sections about maintaining health and beauty! But no, not the group that claims to be first and foremost for the benefit of women. No, they much prefer to bury their heads in the sand, ignore reality, even try to villainize it, and sit and pontificate from their offices in academia new and creative rationalizations as to why they're wasting their one shot at life.

In the end, as an economist, I don't care. There is ALWAYS equilibrium. Every decision has a commensurate consequence and it will all balance out in the end. Because no matter how much feminists hate work, discipline, and competition, and no matter to what lengths they go to rationalize those things away, in the end (and by end, I mean their death bed) they will have to face the fact had they spent a fraction of the time self-improving, working out or working hard as they did concocting excuses, their lives would have been immeasurably better.

But who am I to get in the way of obese, miserable and hate-filled people?

The Death of HR

July 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Good news everyone!

Inefficient systems, in the ideal economic world, are replaced by efficient ones.

For example bike couriers were replaced with e-mail attachments that made large paper documents they'd normally deliver (blueprints, legal documents, etc).

Horses were replaced by mass-produced cars from Henry Ford.

And land line phones were replaced by cell phones...unless you're my parents.

But for the life of me I could never understand why such a dysfunctional and damaging system or (COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE)"profession" like HR has lingered as long as it has. Heck, aside from affirmative action, I can't imagine why it got started in the first place.

Well rejoice Cappy Cappites, for the free market has come up with a way to circumvent those math-hating, subjective judging, mindless ditzes in the HR department. Apparently those wonderful men and women in HR have such a bad PR problem it's driven an entrepreneurial type to set up a labor market outside the traditional HR dominated one.

Want to find an employee? Go here.

Want to find a qualified worker? Go here.

Want to find a company that's professional and smart enough NOT to have an HR department, signifying their hiring managers are serious about recruiting the talent they need? Go here.

It almost, ALMOST, makes me want to start applying for jobs again, but, eh, that would mean I'd have to work and pay taxes.

Stay Frosty, Boys

July 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

There ARE some women out there who will trick you into getting them pregnant.

When I was younger I thought it so wrong, deceitful and evil that only a very small minority of psycho-paths would do such a thing. It is more common than you think.

Stay frosty, boys! Stay the freak frosty.

Congrats to ROK

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Damnit, I wanted that title.

Why Scarcity is a Good Thing

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The sworn enemy of economists is not debt, as you may presume. It's scarcity.

The reason why is that if you eliminated "scarcity" you would have unlimited "wealth," solving all of the economic problems of the world.

However, terms like "scarcity" and "wealth" have very specific meanings to economists and when compared to the meanings associated with them by normal people, there is some miscommunication.

"Scarcity" means that there is only a limited amount of the stuff. Technically, everything is scarce. There is a limited amount of dirt. There is a limited amount of rocks. However, when it gets to things like oil, gold, iron ore, etc. things become a little more scarce. Because of this people must be efficient, they must be "economic" in their decisions on how to use these scarce resources to get "the most" out of them.

Get the most what?

Get the most "wealth."

"Wealth" though commonly assumed to be money or income, is quite different in economic terms. "Wealth" is simply "stuff." Your cars, your food, your house, every item and asset you own. The reason why economists are so focused on "wealth" and not "money" is because it is not so much the MONEY that matters to people as much as it is the physical items and services. In short you don't get a benefit from a $20 bill. You can't eat the $20 bill. That money is technically not wealth. The $20 in groceries it can buy, however, is. Because those groceries will help maintain and improve your life.

Therefore, in an ideal world (say like Star Trek where they have a replicator), resources would not be scarce, but limitless. If you had unlimited oil or unlimited diamonds or unlimited chocolate, everybody's "wealth" would increase to a maximum level at minimal cost. Standards of living would be unlimited and the only thing that would limit your life would be your mortality. Ironically, in such a world, economists would be unemployed because there would be no need for them.

Of course, a scarceless, unlimited wealthy world is not feasible. There is a limit to everything, not only including physical resources, but human time as well. But there ARE instances of unlimited wealth and while economists may think that is the ideal situation or "goal" of economics, they may want to rethink such an infinitely wealthy world.

Understand there are instances of unlimited wealth. I've seen it first hand. And it was when one of the Saudi princes came to the Mayo Clinic.

My buddy ran the security company that was hired to provide the prince protection. He flew in with an entourage of about 120 people, 90 of which were support staff, servants, cooks and maids. he flew in his own private airliner and was so wealthy he had rented EVERY 2010 Mercedes S Class in the UNITED STATES that was rentable (it was 2009 and he would ONLY settle for the newest cars) to transport him and his family (chauffeurs were driving from California and NYC). There were also trucks lined up at the airport that would be used to transport all the items he and his entourage would purchase at the Mall of America and other places. And he had rented out two entire floors of the Kahler Hotel in downtown Rochester.

He and his family had unlimited wealth.

But what transpired afterwards was something that I couldn't put my finger on, but after reflecting upon figured out what was going on.

He and his family would buy ANYTHING.

And by ANYTHING I meant ANYTHING.

One of his three wives bought a large commercial sized crate of hand lotion at Wal-Mart. Another wife would buy clothes at Nordstroms. One of his daughters left the convoy and her protection for a slice of pizza at Pizza Hut, only to take one bite and throw it away. Top of the line German cars were purchased, as was jewelry. Though one of the princesses insisted on having her hair cut at a cheap salon.

There was no rhyme or reason to their purchases. They didn't buy "only the best" as evidenced by their trip to Wal-Mart. They didn't buy stuff they needed as evidenced by the crate of hand sanitizer. They didn't buy stuff they were going to use (one of the wives bought three truckloads of crap she could never ever wear/consume in her life time). And they didn't buy stuff for a purpose (tools, medicine, entertainment).

They just bought stuff for the sake of buying.

And then I saw what was going on.

With literally unlimited wealth the Saudi prince and his family were unable to assess VALUE. Their entire lives they could afford anything they wanted. There is more than one story of a Saudi prince buying a brand new Mercedes, having NO CLUE it runs on this thing called "gas," runs out of gas in the middle of the desert, and abandons the car there. He would simply get picked up, returned to the castle and buy another one. The reason why is that with unlimited wealth that Mercedes might as well cost as much as a piece of chewing gum because to the Saudi prince, it does. $100,000 vs. $1 is an inconsequential difference to a man with $10 billion.

But while you and many economists may wish to be so wealthy, think again, for there is a consequence.

What would your life be without the ability to judge VALUE?

You take this ability for granted. You, me and most normal people have to assess, judge, discern and discriminate how we spend our resources. We have to compare whether or not the outlay in terms of time, money or resources is worth the item or service we purchase. And not only in our purchasing lives, but our social lives as well.

Do you spend time with that annoying friend or the couple who can't keep their loud obnoxious kids in line?

Do you spend the time getting that Masters in Quadrapalegic Turtle Art History Transgender Studies?

Do you go on a date with Tami the Suburbanite Bimbo Brat or have a scotch and cigar with your buddies?

But if we had unlimited funds and essentially our entire free time to ourselves, how would you be able to discern which is better? You didn't have to part with a piece of your finite life to get the money or the day off to enjoy a purchase or social time with friends. And since you didn't have to forfeit anything in exchange for money or free time, you don't value it. Your time and life is essentially worthless and you will spend it accordingly so.

This is why the Saudis not only piss away their money in the most random and chaotic fashion, but why they also were never smiling. They were grumpy, I never saw one smile, they were miserable. I would even consider them zombie-like when you'd see them going to and fro in the world's most expensive cars to go places their subjects could only DREAM of going and would be ecstatic in doing so. And also imagine how impaired their ability is to judge human value. Do you think any one of the score of princesses has a good friend to talk to? Do you think the princess has ever endured hardship and strife or just a plain challenge that would have developed character and a personality? Or do they just have legions of servants, maids and yes-men taking advantage of them for their wealth? Heck, one could make a very good claim the Saudi royalty is inoculated against love because they aren't capable of it and nobody would love such boring, mindless, money-spending automatons.

In short having unlimited wealth would be nothing less than sustaining an injury that would cause you to lose one of your senses. You become blind, you become deaf, or you become paralyzed. You can no longer "sense" value and therefore can no longer make wise decisions on how best to spend your life. Worse still you lose your ability to determine what is important in life.

Fortunately, however, for you and me and most everybody else, we were brought up poor or certainly not "billionaires." We've had to discern and judge value. We've had to work for we got. We've had to suffer and sacrifice, and thusly attach a value to our time. Consequently we have richer lives than any Saudi king will ever have.

Enjoy this read? Then consider buying "The Best of Captain Capitalism" or "Enjoy the Decline." You can also follow Aaron on "the Twitter."

Again, I Ask, Where Is the Feminist Equivalent of This?

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From ROK:

This question is in reference to the work you've done yourself. How well groomed are you? How engaging are you in conversation? Are you funny, witty, and confident enough when engaging the women you want? Do you dress well enough to catch their eye? Are you physically fit enough to catch their eye?

I know I just wrote about this, but it is a point worth reiterating.

For all the accusations of "misogyny" and "sexism" men in the Manosphere sure are critical of themselves and awfully considerate and aware of what women want. They are willing to admit they have flaws or that there is room for improvement. Additionally, men are willing to expend the effort, time and sweat into changing themselves for the better. Naturally this is not purely altruistic as the larger goal is in part to attract a woman, but it is certainly the opposite of what goes for standard gospel in the feministsphere - "the world must bend to my desires and if not then screw society, and oh, btw, you're all sexist."

Notice the men of the Manosphere do NOT try to force society to their will. They do NOT try to undo nature. They ask "What is reality?" and then change their actions, strategies and behaviors to accommodate and benefit from these realities. Feminism is, quite frankly, delusional with a belt of selfish on top of it. To think that an entire half of society is going to undo their genetic programming and fight their hard-wired nature AND to call them names on top of it if they don't? I'm no psychologist but I'm sure there are multiple psychoses infecting such a person with such a deluded perception of reality and oneself.

It's a really simple solution, so simple it's basically a variant of the golden rule - treat others as you would like to be treated.

Well, I would like women to stay in shape, carry their own weight, be interesting, be civil and courteous and dress appropriately. Therefore in return I pretty much do the same. It is whether women realize this basic mutually advantageous relationship with one another and capitalize off of it, or scream "sexist" or "misogynist" because men dare to hold women up to standards before spending their time on them.

Enjoy the decline!

The Manosphere as a Subsitute for a Father

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A well-thought out, though crass, podcast that addresses the issue of how young boys today have to resort to the internet for advice and guidance on being and becoming men. Other topics as well, but that was the main one.

The archive for the podcast is located here. Yes, I have a podcast. Yes, as indicated by the image off to your right.

Fair warning, the quality is off. But the content is very good.

Hyder, Alaska Bizatches!

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I was going to do the Canadian Rockies on this upcoming trip.

Then my economic spidey senses started tingling.

"Look, Cappy, if you're going all the way to Prince George, then you may as well see if you can't make it to Alaska."

Never been there. Alaska is one of those places like "Burma" or "France" that you'll never see or visit in your lifetime. At least not on a bike. But after an hour of searching on teh interwhebz I found the ONE town that is on a paved road that does not require I go to the Arctic Circle or take a slow-ass ferry.

Hyder, Alaska.

There is literally nothing there except bragging rights that I drove there and I can see some American border guards welcoming me "back home" though home would be the complete opposite direction.

Regardless, I'm still doing the Canadian Rockies and will come through Kampaloos and the like, but I will be driving a bike to Alaska. Which as far as I'm concerned puts me on par with Wolverine because he is well, you know, Canadian, drives a motorcycle and hails from the area. Only difference is I'm just better looking that Hugh Jackman.

You Should NEVER Have to Game Friends

July 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Permit me two stories.

About three years ago I was teaching a salsa dance class in Mankato, Minnesota. The dance scene had gone from a bustling marketplace of 20 something hotties, desperate to learn the art of ~~getting attention on a dance floor~~ "ballroom dancing," to a sad shell of its former self. The 20 somethings left to start families, and now certainly in their 30's, their children prevented them from such luxuries as taking dance classes. Instead my dance classes were now full of recent 50 something divorcees thinking they were going to find a "Latin lover" if they and their 200 pound ass just learned a little salsa dancing. It had gotten so bad that sometimes I couldn't teach dips because many women were literally too heavy to dip and the dwindling number of men that remained would injure themselves if they dared try. And so instead of being excited to start a new class, the previous decade of decline in the beauty of my students had taught me not to get excited and treat what was once my passion like a job I no longer cared about.

Then she walked in.

"She" being the second most beautiful girl I ever had in my then 13 years of dance classes. Tall, model-esque, and a face that was the epitome of beauty.

I was about to pigeon-hole her as just another self-absorbed attention queen, and play the appropriate game, until we had a drink after class and was shocked. She was a sergeant in the US Army, fresh from Iraq. She was a communications specialist, worked a real job, and had the misfortune of losing her mother early on in life. She was not spoiled, but rather had suffered a harsher than average life, and thus was a rather impressive person.

Normally, at this point, one's mind might default to "wow, this might be the one," but there was just one problem.

Though stunningly beautiful, there was just no physical chemistry between her and me.

I KNEW she was attractive, my brain corroborating what my eyes saw, but oddly enough I just really couldn't get it up for her. She was one of those rare "hot chicks" that everybody else would want to nail, just not you.

However, while the physical chemistry was just not there, the personality was. So much so that you would almost consider this person to be a soul brother/sister. Her experiences in life shaped her into an interesting person and also gave her the street smarts needed to just do things on an automated and unconscious level. She intuitively knew what you were saying, knew what you were doing, and would support you without thinking twice. She was observant and clever, making her a great wingman. I was convinced that though I would not be dating this girl, I would have a cool tomboy of a chick to hang out with and thus started inviting her to hang out with my crew.

Then, something interesting occurred.

While she was desperate to go and resurrect her social life after Iraq, pretty much every invitation I gave her went unanswered. I'd say, "Hey, we're going to a jazz club. Give you a chance to get out of uniform and dress like a girl for once." She'd respond enthusiastically, only never to show. I'd say, "Hey, we're going salsa dancing later tonight," only to get a response back the next day that she had to work. I'd say, "Hey, bunch of us are going for a motorcycle ride, we're coming through your town, you want us to pick you up?"

Nothing again.

It soon got to the point that she so infrequently attended that I just stopped inviting her. However, I could never reconcile why we got along so great and why she expressed such an interest in doing things (to the point it sounded like she was "dying" to get out), only never to capitalize on my offers.

The next story is one set in Sheridan, Wyoming.

There I was working at a local bank, sifting through loans we made to local meth addicts, trailer trash, single moms, and degenerates who couldn't run a sports bar effectively. I was fortunate enough to live downtown, which meant I could walk to work, not to mention, four bars were literally within one block of my apartment (one literally under it).

Because of my proximity to bars, my social life received a significant boost. I would hit every bar, every night, and even taught dance classes at the largest bar in town on Tuesdays. Also because of the relatively small size of the town I became one of the "regulars" overnight, me knowing everybody and everybody knowing me.

Unfortunately, since this town was in Wyoming most of the local women were hideous. This is not my opinion. It's just a fact. Women in Wyoming just aren't pretty. They're overweight, they smoke and drink too much, aging their faces prematurely, they get pregnant before they graduate from high school, and they certainly don't care to doll themselves up. They rarely wear dresses. They never wear heels. And no amount of make-up can save them, so they don't even bother. Wyoming literally is just one big, square trailer park and their women represent this fact.

So imagine my surprise when a buxom, drop-dead gorgeous blond in 6 inch cherry red heels and a matching red cleavage-dropping dress walked into the bar.

It didn't make sense. The needle went off the record. Men's jaws hit the floor and women sneered. NEVER had such a hot woman ever walked through those doors, let alone set foot inside Buffalo, Wyoming.
My instinct kicked in and I stopped looking, ensuring to be the only guy ignoring her. And sure enough she sat next to me and started talking to me.

But just like the beautiful sergeant from Mankato, her looks were deceiving.

She wasn't a ditzy broad, looking for free drinks. Turned out she worked at a rather prestigious ranch outside of town and this was her one night off that week. She never had the opportunity to dress up and had been wanting to wear this little red number for quite some time. And so she was going to wear it, consequences be damned.

She was also incredibly smart and incredibly different. She had traveled to Russia to purchase a unique breed of horse and start breeding them here in the states. She was also very well read on philosophy and could challenge my thinking and make me think of new ideas I had never pondered before. And add to it again, she was a tomboy. She liked not only ranching, lassoing, and riding horses, but 4 wheelers, motorcycles, hiking, fishing and amateur paleontology and archeology.

I was happy for there were very few people in Wyoming I could talk to, let alone be intellectually stimulated by. And because of the rapport we had established it was in my mind a foregone conclusion we would be friends. She invited me out to her ranch where she said she'd cook me dinner and then we could go fishing, hiking, arrowhead hunting, or whatever we wanted. She gave me her number and given how few intelligent and in shape people there were in Wyoming, I promised not to ruin this gem of a find by trying to hit on her or making any advances.

A couple days later I headed out to her ranch where she gave me a tour. We drove a 4 wheeler around, saw some amazing mountains, cliffs and a picturesque stream filled with trout. She showed me the horses (not a big fan) and then she showed me some old buildings that were there during the pioneer days. It was a good ole time, but she had to wake up early the next morning to work on the ranch, and so I headed back. But before I did she gave me a large arrowhead piece. Too large to be an actual arrowhead, but rather was obviously a tool of some kind. Regardless, it was such a nice piece I would have considered it museum-quality and was consequently thankful and humbled for such a gift. It also made me think she was a kindred spirit and further confirmed I had made a friend.

I was thinking since she could really only take off on weekends that we might climb this mountain I had scoped out the week before. Didn't want to see too rushing, so waited a couple days and left her a voice-mail. She was so far from town, however, that I knew she didn't have reception on the ranch. She had to drive to the state highway every night to get her voice-mails, so I figured she'd call back when she had the time.

Wednesday passed, then Thursday, then Friday and unfortunately, she never called.

No matter, I figured, probably busy. The ranch was quite the operation. I'll catch her next week.
I then walked down to one of the rowdier bars in town and surprise! There she was.

Red dress
Red heels
Drunk as all hell

She saw me and immediately lit up "Cappy!!!! Hi!!!!"

"Hi," I said kind of surprised to see her bombed. I said in a jesting manner, "So I take it we're not going hiking tomorrow?"

"Nooo, I'm sorrrry, I forgot to call you. We can go hiking next week. I just needed to get out and let lose."

Suspiciously understanding, I said, "Well, you're sure making a go of it now!"

We continued to hang out, but unlike the first night we met and the day we had at her ranch, she was now flirting with pretty much every guy at the bar. There was no conversation and she was now dancing on the floor to hip hop music spilling beer. I decided to leave her at the bar and check out the one next door. Sure enough within an hour she followed.

"Why did you leaaave!??? I need you to protect me from this guy," she said somewhat slurred.

"What guy?" I asked.

"This guy, he keeps hitting on me."

I saw no guy.

Realizing she probably had a few too many I offered her a place to crash at my joint. She refused and instead decided to hit the remaining two bars, while I believe I had enough for the evening and walked home.

The next morning I saw her car parked downtown. I found that odd. So I walked into the bar beneath my apartment and inquired (I learned that in small towns in Wyoming bartenders proved a better source for information than the internet, and yes, bars are open that early in Wyoming).

"Oh yeah, Amy!? Yeah, good ole Amy. She got ripped. Ended up going home with a bunch of Italian tourists last night. Bit of a drama queen that one."

"Heh," I said, "she does this much?"

"Yeah, she'll come to town, get drunk, lead guys on, piss off their girlfriends, lead on the tourists. Provides for some decent entertainment."

And certainly it did, for it wasn't just that one night Amy came to town, but at least three more nights before I left for Minneapolis. I made a token few handful of calls to see if Amy wanted to go hiking, but none, of course, were ever returned.

Last I saw her she was drunk at a bar scoring drinks out of a guy nearly thrice her age.

Now the moral of these stories is not one of entertainment value or living vicariously through the life of the ole Captain. But rather to prepare you for the likely event that in your 80 years of life expectancy you will run into a girl who is:

1. Gorgeous and
2. Has such a unique personality or spirit about her it practically compels you to be friends with her, but
3. For some reason you just aren't physically attracted to her

You will be excited. You will be happy. You will think, "Wow, you know, I just REALLY dig this person for herself and it would be totally cool to just go and hang out with her." But you will be let down, because the friendship you assume is a guarantee will never come to fruition. And the reason why is that her beauty prevents it.

Understand absolutely drop-dead gorgeous women are damaged goods in a certain regard. It isn't even necessarily their fault, but rather society's. Since they are so good looking, the vast majority of men interact with them on a sexual basis. They want to have sex with them, they want to be around them, they simply want to look at them.

Sadly, none of them want to be their friends and therefore truly beautiful women have few, if any, platonic or non-sexual relationships with men. This skews their experience and mental development so far to the point that by the time they're 20, maybe 22, they're INCAPABLE of having normal, healthy, non-sexual friendships with males.

99.9% of the time, this is fine because 99.9% of the time men are physically attracted to such women and aren't interested in friendship. However, for the remaining .1% of men who just don't find that particular woman physically attractive, OR value a friendship more than a sexual relationship, you throw the girl for a loop. You "do not compute." Making matters worse, is that some of these women ARE genuinely interesting and intellectually-engaging people which draw you in on a platonic level. But since these women never had male friends, and thus, don't know how to interact with you, they assume you are just like every one else. You're hitting on them, you want to nail them, you're only interested in sex, and thus the games continue.

This will throw you off because (for once) you REALLY don't want to have sex with this woman! You will be approaching her in (GASP!) an honest and friendly way! And so when you say,

"Hey, let's go hiking this weekend."

You're not saying

"Hey, let me feign like I'm interested in hiking so I can get into your pants."

You're really, actually saying,

"Hey, let's go hiking this weekend."

But she doesn't know that. Matter of fact, her mind and psychology has been so predispositioned by how society interacts with her, she is incapable of knowing that. And therefore, no matter how cool a chick, no matter how much you jive on a certain level, and no matter how much you may enjoy each others company, don't get too excited about making a new friend. Because she is going to default to her sociological programming. She will play mind games. She will assume you want her. She will flake out. She will be the drama queen. She will be just another drop-dead gorgeous girl.

The sad thing, however, is not that you won't realize a true and great friendship with these women. That was fated never to happen anyway. What's really sad is you see a very interesting, engaging, unique person with incredible potential let society and their beauty dictate how they behave and what they'll inevitably become. For while you'll see the potential for a brilliant, intelligent woman, with various hobbies and interests, who would make a great wife or mother, and make a family incredibly happy, or have some amazing career, or just be one hell of a friend, unfortunately she'll choose to be just another piece of T&A at the bar.

Enjoy the decline!

An Interview and a Podcast

July 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The podcast is out. Topic includes how sad it is that young boys and men have to consult the internet for fatherly advice. Also, Lutherans and ham sandwiches, how Aaron got hit on by a guy in South Dakota, and more! Horrible audio quality, my apologies.

Also had an interview done by AVFM last night. Located here.

Should be plenty of MP3's there for your MP3 player when you go running today!

Advice When You Must Kill in Self Defense

July 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Some helpful advice.

You Assume People Have Jobs

July 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I like watching the discussion on interest rates because it is somewhat moot when nobody has jobs and younger people are saddled with student debts. I also find it an academic discussion because banks will only loan to picture perfect people with real jobs and none of you self-employed types or those of you who want to buy rental property. You must fit into the slot the government has made and if you don't, well then those interest rates may as well be 0%.

Remember kids, home ownership and the American dream isn't for you. It's only for older people and good little corporate cogs who did what they were told.

Compare and Contrast

July 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Modern day option.

Option of yesteryear.

Stay frosty boys. Stay frosty.

Off to Alaska

July 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Leaving this morning in about 20 minutes.

Blogging will of course be limited as blogging from a motorcycle is problematic.

Again, if you're in the Canadian Rockies area, let the old Captain know.

Also if anybody lives in Smithers or Smith, BC, a couch would help out TREMENDOUSLY from a logistical standpoint.

And yes, I did pack my Iron Man pajamas in case I have to camp in the cold.

Anger is a Good Thing

July 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

One of the things the left is trying to beat out of people is "hatred" and "anger."

The reason why is that those inevitably lead to something they truly fear - revenge.

Hatred, anger, and revenge, however are not inherently "bad." They are neutral, they are facts of life, they are darwinistic responses that are necessary to extend one's life and protect one's family and friends.

But the political attempt to villainize hate, is just that - a political move. It has an ulterior motive and that is to prevent or moot people's desire and incentives for revenge, even self-respect.

Therefore, when you see hate, don't immediately default to accusing the person of being a "hater." Ask first why they might hate. You might be surprised that there are good reasons.

Kangaroo Boxer Enjoys the Decline

July 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Why aren't you?

From Regina

July 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Met two of our Canadian Agents in the Field. They are our top men in Saskatchewan.
"Who?"
"TOP...MEN."

Also found out Regina is not pronounced the way you think.

Also a picture from North Dakota and "Portal, ND" which is where the crossing to Canada is

PORTAL STATE BANK

Sergeant Rumpie in Calgary

July 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Sergeant Rumpie Fluffalo says hello to all the Cappy Cappites from Calgary!

The Happiest Salad of My Life

July 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When you start evaluating your life by ranking the food as "happy moments" your life is pretty much over.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

Smithers, Prince George, Jasper, and Revelstoke

July 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Howdy Canadian Lieutenants!

I'm starting the second leg of my journey and am seeing if anybody is in the aforementioned towns (or towns in that general area). I'm essentially heading to Hyder Alaska and then drop south towards Kamloops/Revelstoke and then into Idaho. Love to grab a beer or something stronger.

Let the ole Captain know if you're in the area.

Cpt.

Cappy in Banff

July 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You might see some other ne're-do-well in the photos too.

This trip possible from your purchases of Worthless and Enjoy the Decline.

Captain on the Return of Kings

July 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Guest writing now.

We're All Out of White Guilt

July 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And maybe, just maybe, Hollywood will realize this.

Why I Don't Trust People Who Are Nice to Me

July 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is how I always know who my friends really are.

Mutually Beneficial Plagiarism

July 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I'm currently in Prince George, BC. Only 8 hours away from Alaska. Saw the most gorgeous scenery in my life, and no, I'm not being hyperbolic. It was the most beautiful scenery I've seen in my life.

Unfortunately, to make it to Alaska and back on a dutiful time table, I had to push my bike and myself for 14 hours of riding. Ergo, I'm going to plagiarize.

Ed points out, once again, just how biased, racist, politically motivated and (frankly) evil the MSM is.

Kate has some OUTSTANDING photos of Saskatchewan after a storm I missed by a day.

Yes, it has been 25 years since Die Hard came out and was pretty much the last real manly hero men in western civilization to serve as a role model.

I have not addressed the Zimmerman/Travon case much because I am neither hispanic or black...despite the leftist media's best efforts.

Monday Morning Quarter Backing Is Trolling

July 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I'll be brief and blunt because I'm riding to Alaska on a motorcycle, have to maximize daylight and plain don't have the patience.

I have written pieces in the past that, though about women, were NOT about trying to date them or bed them.

However, because they WERE about women, the "Monday Morning Quarterbackers" come out of the wood work and start critiquing game, telling me what I should have done, etc. etc., when the whole point of the post was NOT about gaming a girl, but something else.

For example, this post here at ROK.

Though I am very grateful to have it posted and read by many, the comment section completely misses the forest from the trees and immediately goes into "post game analysis show."

Thus I call BS.

In not being able to accept, realize, and appreciate the point I was trying to make, and IMMEDIATELY go into a "post game show analysis" on how "I failed to ignore them" or "how I didn't do X or Y," it only further convinces me that the manosphere is honeycombed with wanna be's, keyboard jockeys, and "manosphere academians" who have no front line, real world, experience and merely wish to study it from the safety of the anonymous internet.

They never approached a girl.

They never got shot down.

They never failed.

And consequently they have never succeeded.

Instead, they abuse the Manosphere and its composite sites as a mental treatment to vent, yell, scream, and then rationalize. But they either lack the means, ability or will to actually take the advice, wisdom and/or observations of it and thus become talkers, not walkers.

Understand the Manosphere and the stories, data, anecdotes, etc., is not an academic study to be theorized about. It's not a liberal arts program. It's not a Philosophy PhD department. It's not a women's studies shelter.

It is a practical trade school giving you tools. Tools that have been forged by other mens' experiences.

If you wish to take these observations, tools, wisdom, etc., to improve your life, great. But if you wish to sit in school for the rest of your days, become a theoretician and never apply these practical lessons and bytes of wisdom we're giving you, and instead use it to explain, but never correct your failures, then admit you're a coward, a troll, a professor. An academian who can't do, but will only teach and critique.

I do NOT want any readers making any comments on ROK. I linked to it as it was only empirical evidence. We will NOT annoy or start a troll war over there. My thanks in advances. Just wanted to point it out.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick

July 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Could you imagine being married to this?

Just can't make it up folks. Just can't make it up.

The Drumheller Fossil Hunt

July 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So it turns out one of our agents in the field is an actual geologist with a passion for fossil hunting. Me and Mr. Aurini decided to head out with the Official Cappy Cap Geologist to Drumheller, Alberta. There we found not only the BEST collection of fossils in the world, but some badlands formations where we launched our very own fossil hunting expedition.

It was somewhat successful with some petrified wood discovered as well as some shells and fragments, however I strongly recommend visiting the Tyrrell Museum.

Smithers

July 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

There's Smithers

And then there's Smithers

Help the Captain with gas money and buy "Worthless" which is in AUDIO FORMAT NOW!

Jasper/Hwy 93/Glaciers

July 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I drove from Smithers to Hyder, AK to Prince George in one day. If you are too lazy to look that up it's about 650 miles and I got another 650 to go tomorrow. In the meantime here are pictures from 3 days ago I haven't had time to upload from my trek on hwy 93 in between Banff and Jasper. It was at that time the most pretty scenery I've seen, but then I saw hwy 37A enroute to Alaska and that has since changed.

Remember, Sergeant Rumpie Fluffalo says:

"Work hard, kiss ass, brown nose, buck for that promotion, and run ever so much faster in that rat race so you can pay more in taxes so that I and the Captain can enjoy the fine public roads, highways, infrastructure and national/state/provincial parks! Enjoy the Decline!"

From Alaska

July 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

HYDER
Townsite Limits
ENTERING ALASKA
HYDER, ALASKA

HYDER, ALASKA

What Did I Tell You About Working Security???

July 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our Security Guard Agent in the Field:

Mr. Clarey,

I wanted to thank you for your recommendation of night watchman as a stress free job opportunity that offers plenty of time for personal growth. I secured a position as one following your posts on the subject and it's been exactly as I anticipated. I also have good reason believe I have delayed sleep phase disorder, so in many ways it's been the best job I've ever had. Staying up to 6 am is completely natural for me.

I've seen more improvement in my abilities as a sketch artist and linguist than ever. There are literally no responsibilities to the position aside from touching a wand to a dot every hour. While it doesn't pay a living wage precisely, I have made some good investments in the past and expect to in the future.

Thanks,

Patrick

I'll say it till the day I die:

"Security is security."

Carry on lieutenants!

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

July 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

But the boyfriend could.

It's Called Capital Flight

July 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And it's the primary reason you leftist scumbuckets will not have anything in the shelves in the end despite all the promises you made to yourselves.

From the Lakes in Southern BC

July 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If you look at a map of the Canadian Rockies, you'll see near towns like Revelstoke and the like long lakes that were caused by dams. This not only makes for spectacular scenery, but also hands down, the BEST motorcycle riding. Had I known the curves of the road I would have filmed, but was on such a tight time schedule I really didn't have time to pull over and duct tape the camera. regardless, hope you like the lastest pictures. The second to last one is entering into the US in Washington state and the last picture is a forest fire I drove through in Montana.

Remember, work hard, pay taxes, stay in that corporate job and if you behave you might be rewarded with having only HALF of your 401k nationalized by the government!

Logic and Truth are MEAN!

July 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I always love how people think emotion overrules reality. From our Christian Agent in the Field.:

Hi Mr. Clarey,

On the link below, a poster named "The Bechtloff" clearly and simply explained why many men have decided against marriage (due to the biased court system). Please check the responses.

I don't see where they ever refuted his point, but they did get personal.

http://www.breakpoint.org/bpcommentaries/entry/13/22618?spMailingID=6429549&spUserID=OTQ0MjMwMzc3S0&spJobID=76736979&spReportId=NzY3MzY5NzkS1

Clearly, he pointed out the high risk side of the risk/return equation.

This appears to be a Christian (churchian?) website.

ADD/ADHD/Aspergers Can Pay for the US Debt

July 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Creativity and innovation are the only way the US, let alone, any country will get out of its debt problems. It is through economic growth that debts are dwarfed, and it is through innovation and creativity that economic growth comes.

Not "working harder."

Not "networking."

Not developing a "CSR department."

And not rent seeking via lobbying politicians.

INNOVATION and CREATIVITY.

Good thing we got all that ritalin to ensure creative people never make it into the labor force at their full potential.

When Boys Took Girls to Jazz Clubs

July 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was driving back from a buddy's of mine tonight when the DJ on the jazz station said,

"The song you were just listening to was from Captain Jack McDuff."

I remember Jack McDuff. Saw him multiple times in person at the Artist's Quarter and "The Dakota," jazz clubs in the Twin Cities. He died of old age about a decade ago. Only reason I knew of him and the only real reason I ever ended up becoming a ballroom dancer was because a more-cultured friend of mind FORCED me to go see him, and thus my love for jazz was born.

But something else became of that fateful night.

My desire to take a girl to a jazz club for a date.

Simple enough.

Innocent enough.

Hell, down right classy enough.

But oh so complicated.

For while in the past I've harped upon the irony that I could not find a date when I was 19 to attend a Victor Borge concert with me, hearing Jack McDuff this evening reminded me of a problem or phenomenon that was more prevalent back in my collegiate youth.

You just couldn't get a girl to attend classy events with you in college.

Let me state this and let me state this clearly, so that it goes down in the history books and is recorded for posterity.

There were MANY young men in the age ranges of 18-22 that were more than willing to be gentlemen. And not only gentlemen, but classy men as well. We had ideas about taking young women out on dates that were not just "drinks at the bar" or "going to a house party," but genuine venues and events like jazz clubs, salsa clubs, Victor Borge, and opera. A significant step up from what went for common dates.

But there were no takers.

Understand we were not nerds or ugly men. We were not morons or socially awkward. We were thoughtful young, (albeit) naive men that frankly wanted to do something classy, something different, something better than the run of the mill date. But despite that, there were no takers. And the reason was sociological.

You ever try to get a girl to attend a jazz club with you at 20 years of age?

Damn well near impossible.

First there's the pearls before swine aspect of it. Back in the 90's you had to duke it out with tickets to the "Back Street Boys" or some local, crappy, hippie, grunge band sure to spread tetanus to all of its audience. When you dared to suggest the girl dress up in a nice "dress" and you in a suit and you'd pick her up and take her to dinner before, you were laughed at and dismissed. Perhaps even ridiculed as being sexist for daring to suggest she wear a dress and not a nose piercing.

Second, you're over shooting. What 20 year old girl has ever heard of Jack McDuff? You'd be lucky to get a 35 year old to even know who he was, let alone even know of the venues you were talking about.

And finally, face it, you were a square from day one even thinking along those lines. Forget how great the jazz club was. Forget how great the jazz music was. In you thinking about attending a jazz club immediately took you out of your environment/class/caste and put you at such a great disadvantage you literally might as well have been trying to sell ice to Eskimos. The average 20 year old girl had no interest, inkling, desire or want to have anything to do with a culture approaching something like jazz.

And so there you were. You had worked up the extra $40 over the course of a month to pay for dinner and a cover. You had maybe eyed a handful of girls to ask out. You had strategically chatted up and charmed them to the point you'd be able to ask them out.

But when you finally popped the question:

"Oh, I'd like to see Jack McDuff, but I'm going with my girlfriends to see Lilly Lipstick and the Licking Lizards. They're like the new Kirk Cobain!"

Fast forward 20 years.

I don't think I've asked a girl to a jazz club, salsa dancing, a high end concert, or any other event that would call for formal attire in at least a decade. And this isn't because of me courting a lady. Even when I was single I gave it up. Matter of fact I don't know any guy in my peer group that even bothers with setting up "special dates" where they get reservations, find unique locales of lounges to go to, etc. No, all of them, not the majority, ALL OF THEM, now only offer "drinks at the local bar," "wings at Applebee's," or a "movie."

The special dates, be it Victor Borge, salsa dancing, Cpt. Jack McDuff, or any date that required pre-planning on their part has now been relegated to "special nights" with their theoretical wife in the future that they may or may not ever marry. Those thoughtful, considerate, impressive dates are now taken off of the table as they were seen to be too bold, too "needy," too "nerdy," and frankly were never availed of when offered.

But in those 20 years, it's interesting how times have changed.

Now, pretty much every girl I know wants to go salsa dancing. Nearly every girl I know would kill to have a guy dress up in a suit and pick her up. Nearly every girl I know would die to go to a high end jazz club. And nearly every girl I know would love to have a gentleman take her to a nice dinner.

The irony of course is that

Jack McDuff is dead

Victor Borge is dead

And that young man is dead.

Though there is still open night jazz at the Artist's Quarter in St. Paul that would require modern day men to drive 40 miles round trip and pull suits out of storage which they haven't worn in years. That would take time and effort they just not longer care to spend.

In other words that nice, innocent, well-intentioned boy with a little more class than the average guy and his offer to take you out to a dinner, a night of jazz and (here is something so stupid in hindsight, but what I'd actually do out of naivete) who would buy you a flower to pin on the lapel of your dress, got his fill of martini's and jazz on his own. He no longer exists. The offer is off the table and now you can enjoy the bar scene, just at the age of 40-60. You can enjoy the aging, balding, recently divorced (or still married) investment banker or failing businessman. You can enjoy the man who leases his Mercedes, but you don't know the difference between "lease" and "own." You can enjoy the guy who has a lot of money, but can't run a mile without suffering a cardiac arrest.

Because it would have been nice. A young, nervous, but determined 21 year old man, intent to impress you with a dinner he could barely afford. And hoping his selection in jazz or symphony would buy him enough time to accidentally show you his quality and caliber. And though not a BMW he'd pick you up just the same in his Ford Escort. And there you'd sit at a high end restaurant, all dressed up, being treated to a fine dinner and some great music, as people walked downtown and observed from the outside saying,

"how darling"

"how cute"

Yes, that would have been nice.

But alas, it was "girls night" as "Farting Pete's" where you could drink for free and have a score of men lavish you with attention and free drinks. And we all know that is more important than having that young kid pin a flower on your lapel as you listened to Jack McDuff.

Enjoy the decline!

Why It's Mandatory you Have Time to Think

July 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was interviewed by Kerry Lutz, but the interview has a VERY important lesson about having the time to think. YOu're usually occupied doing other tasks for other people and never have the time to think for yourself. But it's very important that you DO have time to think for yourself and ponder things. Regardless a very important interview for everybody to listen to.

also, latest podcast is up.

Why Job Hopping Is Good

July 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In the last few years of my banking career I had built up a pockmarked resume full of year long to 18 month long "stints." A credit analyst position there. A senior analyst position there. Even managed to make it to assistant vice president (which was a euphemism they used to low ball me on salary). Regardless, the reason for the brevity of the stints was obvious - the banking industry was failing, it was corrupt, and it was dysfunctional.

Of course, the HR and hiring managers interviewing me didn't see it that way. They, naturally, thought there was something wrong with me. And thus, I was asked during pretty much every interview in the last 5 years of my banking career,

"I see a lot of short stays...lot of job hopping. Any reason?"

And by this time I was blunt and too damn tired to lie,

"Yeah, you're industry is screwed up, dysfunctional and losing money. Did you want me to have a long term, loyal stint at banks that were losing money?"

Ironically, this actually landed me several gigs, but the lesson to take away from this little experience of mine is one of "job hopping."

"Job hopping" is usually viewed in a shameful manner by our elders in corporate America. It shows you're not loyal, you're not serious, you aren't reliable, etc. etc.

Of course, this is BS.

The truth is job hoppers are people with two things:

1. Options
2. Self respect

The primary reason I didn't last longer than 18 months at any one employer was I had dance classes and online classes on the side. And anytime a boss got lippy, got an attitude, or started asking me to do immoral or impossible things, I'd tell them to go to hell. I didn't need the job, and the hell if I was going to suffer 8 hours a day under a sadistic environment, serving a boss who was delusional, even sadistic him/herself.

I also had self-respect.

Understand the labor market is so flooded with overqualified and overeducated candidates that they are no longer hiring people based on competency or ability. They are so flooded with candidates they can be supremely picky and finicky, making their hiring decisions based on ever-increasingly petty criteria. Because of this the employment environment has become mentally abusive. You need to network, you need to kiss ass, you need to play corporate politics, you need to be a mind reader. Oh, and by the way, you need to do your job too.

The baby boomer generation currently in charge of corporate America are fully aware of this and is why you deal with power hungry, petty, and incompetent bosses. They know you're desperate, they know you have student loans, and they are going to eek every non-financial benefit they can out of you, part of which is deriving a sick and twisted psychological benefit of watching you squirm and just through hoops. Thus the lack of clear, concise leadership. The lack of training ("you have to hit the ground running!"). The petty office political games you get to play. Their demands of having access to your private life (facebook passwords). False and misleading job descriptions. And YOU have to figure out what they want because they "just don't have the time to hold your hand." And if you don't, "well then I guess you're just not a team player."

Thus, along this line, they loooove to play the "you're not a serious adult" card when they see a job hopper. When in reality it's just a young man or woman who has figured out the game and will not tolerate any kind of abuse or corporate BS antics. In short, job hoppers scare them and there really is no shame in being one.

However, eliminating the shame old timers try to foist on job hoppers does not solve the problem job hoppers face - primarily employment.

Even without crushing student loans, mortgages or other debts, you still need to put food on the table, you still have expenses. You still need to work because you still need money. Not to mention it is the world's largest pain in the ass to constantly be applying for jobs. So invariably you would WANT to find a good job and settle down. So how do you find a good, quality, reliable job if your a job hopper?

The solution is ironic, but very simple:

Keep job hopping.

Understand the way jobs and careers are sold to young people today is like that of arranged marriages. You find a job and even if it isn't a perfect fit, heck, outright abusive, you still try your best to make it work. You "must be loyal." You must "give 110%." You must "be a team player." And if you're not, you're a failure.

However, this "arranged marriage model" is wrong. Finding a job and a quality employer should be like dating. You date as many people as possible, with absolutely no intention of committing, until you find a quality courtee worthy of your commitment and effort. You'd be INSANE and STUPID to try to SERIOUSLY DATE EVERY GIRL/GUY you ever dated, so why are you trying to SERIOUSLY DATE every job you have? Forget what the old timers say or try to shame you about "job hopping." SMART people who want to find the ideal job DON'T WASTE THEIR TIME at jobs they don't like. They find out (much like dating) the flaws of their employer.

Lousy boss.
Incompetence.
Idiotic co-workers.
Corrption
Psychoses galore.

You name it, just like girls in their young 20's, employers are rife with tons of deal-breakers, problems, baggage, and damaged goods that should deny them your labor and loyalty. And just like it's bad for your health to stay in a bad/abusive relationship so too is it bad for you to stay with an equally bad/abusive employer.

Of course, this solution is not a quick one. I wish I had an easier answer, but the labor market just doesn't work that way. Just like dating, you are going to have to kiss a lot of frogs to find that employer prince. And it may take DECADES of job hopping to find that right one.

But think of the alternative.

Forcing yourself to slave away at a job you hate, working for a boss you want to murder, all while having your brain rot, just so you can be considered "loyal" and get a pension.

Job hopping and all the faux shame that comes with it, might suck, but in the end you will be one of the very few who finds a job they truly love.

Enjoy the decline!

Stay Frosty, Boys

July 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Stay the freak frosty.

A sad, but good story to learn from/read.

Do Women Even Know the Meaning of the Word, "Independent?"

July 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Swear to the Patron Saint's Name of Frick, you just can't make this stuff up.

From this post:

E-mail Tweet 19 36 Share

I was a single mom for 10 long years. During that decade I relied on welfare, housing assistance, and food stamps to help me support my daughter while I earned both bachelor's and master's degrees.

I was an independent woman working to achieve my goals of self-sufficiency, a meaningful career, and to be the best mom possible. But underneath my professional ambition was an even stronger desire: to get married and become a stay at home mom.

And how much do you want to bet the "bachelors" and "masters" degrees were worthless fluffy puppy crap that came at the subsidy of the state?

Bunch of god damn spoiled brat children running around acting like they're adults.

Post-post: Davis does a more detailed taken down of the article. I just couldn't read the whole thing. It's the epitome of everything wrong with America and western civilization.

The RCMP's Reputation Problem

July 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was in a small town in Saskatchewan. My head was itchy and since the land was flatter than North Dakota and there was no vegetation, I figured it would be a safe place to ride without a helmet.

But before I could fire up my motorcycle one of the locals came running out, yelling,

"What are you doing!!!???"

Confused I asked, "what am I doing???"

He then continued on to explain to me that you could NOT ride in Canada without a helmet otherwise you'd get pulled over.

I said, "Really?? boy that kind of sucks."

He said, "Yeah, I know. They'll confiscate your bike if you don't."

That seemed a little harsh. I dismissed him as a local yokel hick who just didn't like the cops. Probably had a run in with them where he was belligerent and got what he deserved. And so I said,

"No way! They're not going to confiscate my bike!"

He contested saying, "They sure as hell will!"

His adamancy was compelling to the point I didn't believe him, but didn't NOT believe him either.

For the rest of my travels I inquired about the RCMP with locals and to my surprise they all agreed the RCMP WOULD INDEED confiscate my bike if I was not wearing a helmet.

This made me a little weary of the local law enforcement of Canada. Unlike the US, they don't have local sheriffs or constables. The RCMP is basically the national police force. And given their sparseness on the road and the stiff penalties for speeding, I started developing a concept of their law enforcement model.

Fewer cops + stiffer penalties + badassery = low cost law enforcement that can cover a wide area.

I can appreciate that model. You don't have a ton of resources, you have a large unpopulated land, and so it may be of economic benefit to the tax payer to have stiffer penalties to compensate for the lack of manpower.

But then this happens.

And now the cops, who I normally side with, are frankly my enemy. And the reason why is that they are nothing more than nazis.

Understand I enjoy the benefits of free speech in America. I am not Canadian and therefore I can speak freely about matters in other countries with no retribution whereas local Canadians can't. So to all you RCMP "members" (that's what they call their officers) who think you have the right to violate the rights, let alone, property rights of law abiding Canadians, go to hell.

Normally conservatives and libertarians have a favorable view of law enforcement. Normally, we like the cops and have this implicit understanding that we abide by the law and you don't get an attitude or go on a power trip. But based on what I've seen, heard, and this scam going on in Calgary, I just want to let the RCMP know that they are not the "Dudley Doo Right" red coated Canadian mounties media portrays them as, but are rather goose stepping nazis. It needs to be pointed out and I think a little threat from people who are allowed to speak their minds without the Canadian Human Rights Commission coming down on them will do a lot of Canadians some good.

Now, again, I am pro-law enforcement. I for the most part have a favorable opinion of cops, sheriffs and law enforcement here in the US. But I get the distinct impression that the RCMP is getting a little strain of SS in it and a little too big for its britches. Of course, in all intellectual honesty, I am more than happy to post any response to this piece from members of the RCMP or Canadians who are pro-RCMP. But based on my experiences, conversations and recent confiscation of weapons by the RCMP, they need a little international attention from the media and maybe need to be bitch slapped down a bit.

Again, any time you want to legitimize/defend your actions, your comments are free to be published.

Why Charities Will Never Solve Their Claimed "Goals"

July 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And why you should never donate to them.

Revenge on the Left

July 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In my effort to enjoy the decline, I focus some of my energies on watching and appreciating the various ways leftists suffer. For example, it is no secret, I very much enjoy watching feminists who swallowed whole the entire ideology, only to live miserable, lonely, and unaccomplished lives. I enjoy watching leftist students major in worthless crap only to end up working at as a barrrrrrista, their lives now financially crippled, which is also a HUGE crushing blow to their precious little egos which have been pampered since day 1. I enjoy "ists" who blame their failures on sexists, racists, misogynists, ageists, and any other bogeyman, which condemn them to lives of hopelessness, which in turn guarantees they'll never succeed.

There are plenty of pounds of flesh out there for the normal, sane, conservative or libertarian to enjoy as they watch their leftists cousins deal with and suffer from what is literally insanity.

But let me give you another little morsel of revenge. A morsel you may not be able to enjoy fully now, but will be as time progresses.

The teachers union.

Teachers and educational administrators, for the most part, but not all of them, are overpaid, glorified baby sitters. There are very few "educators" or "scholars" who genuinely care to educate the future. Most went into teaching because it was:

1. an easy job
2. required little to no math (unless you were a math/science/STEM teacher)
3. and you got summers off

That's the truth and you public educators can stop cowardly hiding behind "but it's for the children." The jig is up, you've been exposed, you are pretty much some of the lowest form of vermin in this country as you are genuinely abusing children, you're not fooling anyone, so own up to it.

However, there is another juicy little irony about teachers and teacher unions types - they always vote for socialism/leftism/government.

The reason this is ironic is because while that may ensure more money for their baby-sitting career, because of the policies enacted by the leftist politicians (which they voted for) society has started to deteriorate. Specifically, the quality and caliber of people are decreasing over time with each successive, and increasingly, fatherless, generation. And once Suzie Jones-Smith is bored with the rigamarole of giving birth and child rearing, she's going to drop off her ill-reared, improperly brought up, guaron-freaking-teed to be a problem child, child at the public schools for the teachers to deal with.

In other words, teachers, by them essentially voting to replace the family with the state, are ensuring future generations of children are lower quality and therefore poorer students. They will be less disciplined, will have more problems, will be less obedient, will have less respect for authority and in short will make their baby-sitting career absolute hell. Teachers 20 years from now will not be dealing with children of the 1950's, obedient, sitting in their chairs, listening to the wisdom of their elders, aspiring to work for NASA and go into STEM, but rather will be dealing with something more representative of a Chicago proper school where it's a quasi baby sitting operation/juvie-prep-school.

The only thing that makes it better is that by their own left-voting hand, they've made sure their industry is RIFE with progressive credentialism, now requiring teachers essentially get masters to do a job any high school graduate with a 3.0 could do. This, combined with the debt they pay to get that Masters in Baby Sitting, should put a smile on any real American looking for some pound of flesh for the havoc the teachers unions have wreaked upon the US.

Enjoy the decline!

HAR!!!

July 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Brilliant.

Swab Their Mouths You Scallywags!

July 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is why you always always always swab COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE "your" children's mouths for DNA testing to make sure it's actually "yours."

Stay frosty, boys. Stay the freak frosty.

Don't Let Women Land You In Jail

July 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

She was screaming at the top of her lungs on I-35W southbound right at the intersection where I-94 intersected.

It was rush hour.

I had to make a move to make my exit to westbound 94. I needed the entirety of my mental capacity and senses.

But she was so fanatical it impaired my ability to drive to the point it now was a serious threat to my safety which resulted in the only time in my life I made a physical threat to a woman.

"I will fucking beat the fucking shit out if you don't shut the fuck up right fucking now!"

I said it with more emphasis, sincerity and anger than what Blogger text formatting will allow, so please do believe me that I was a micrometer from punching this veritable child into a bloody pulp. It was that bad, it was that serious, and I was that close from pulling over and just beating the ever living hell out of a Californian suburbanite princess.

But appreciate that statement.

I REALLY WAS a micrometer from beating the hell out of her.

I REALLY WAS so angry I would have not relented.

And had I just a mere brain cell or life-experience less or two, I would have followed through with that threat. She'd be on the side of 35W, a twitching soon-to-be-quadriplegic corpse as I drove off happy to be rid of her.

Now ask yourself the question - what would the consequences have been?

Well, the consequences are quite obvious.

I would have been in jail and this vile woman would have been scot-free (albeit "twitchy").

Another interesting anecdote, and not unrelated either, she married a guy I knew and liked. And while I feel sorry for him, he is the first guy to ever invite me to a party where I saw lines of cocaine lined up. And while I had quite an amiable relationship with his young fellow, I can only imagine what would have happened had the cops busted down the door when everybody was snorting coke.

Now I could go on.

The time I sucker punched (unjustifiably so) a guy who took my gas station spot.
The time I taunted a guy at a bar for collecting welfare and living off of his dad for tuition.
The time I told a rowdy and drunk cowboy that the girl who was hitting on me wasn't his woman and I'd take her home if I damn well pleased.

There are many instances.

But every instance was a RAZOR SHARP instance and pure dumb luck that the dice didn't roll the other way, with me landing in jail with a criminal record, vs. the other way where I luckily find myself now. And I say that with the most sincerity. I should have a criminal record, but it was only by pure dumb luck I don't.

So you young men listen to my following wisdom.

1. No girl is worth getting into legal trouble for. I don't care what it takes to override your biological, Darwinistic predisposition, you NEED to learn to control your emotions when it comes to women. This is the NUMBER ONE thing your brain is wired to vehemently react to. You must learn to IDENTIFY IT and CONTROL it.

You find your girl sleeping with another man in your own bed. You have a pistol on your person. You MUST learn not to shoot the man in bed with your girl. Because NOTHING good will come of you killing that man.

The (again, I use it rarely, but accurately) cunt is SCREAMING at the top of her lungs for some unjustifiable reason or another while you're driving on the interstate. Do you pull over and beat the hell out of her, or do you take a deep breath, think things through, and in a very zen like fashion ignore her decibels, drive her home, drop her off, and never see her again as you pursue your own life? Again, what are the consequences to succumbing to your darwinistic desires to pull over and beat her?

Jail.

Whatever the instance, you must have the adult, TRUE MAN, maturity to dismiss and ignore such drama and antics, side step such traps, and ensure you remain a free man, outside of the prison system so you can enjoy the finite life you've been graced with.

2. Simply do not associate with even QUESTIONABLE people.

I really don't believe that most people in jail are there because they were hardened criminals. I believe many of them are there because they were innocent bystanders. They had a tacit interest, their friend was being assaulted, their girlfriend needed her "honor" defended, whatever, they were the wrong man at the wrong place at the wrong time.

The key is to avoid such "wrong people" and such "wrong situations" from the get go.

When it comes to the point cocaine lines are starting to show, you go.

When the jealous lawyer who is married (true story) starts to wine and dine your girl, you go.

When your friend needs you to lie for him to provide an alibi you go.

Your life is not meant to be wasted away in a 6 x 7 cell because you were hanging out with the wrong people, so just make sure you don't even associate with such people.

The larger point is that if you look at most people with criminal records or who end up in jail unjustifiably so, they all have one thing in common - they didn't have the good sense or self-respect to say, "You know what, these people I'm hanging out with are bad news. And even though I'm a good guy/gal, their activities could get me in trouble. Be it by association, drama, jealousy, rage, or foolish antics, it isn't worth it."

You need to learn to walk away and never associate yourself with such people in that it only will increase your chance of having a criminal record.

There Is No Debate About Women With Short Hair, Just A Lot of Short Haired Women Who Are Wrong

July 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our hairdressing agent in the field.

And for a little background music while you read.

Most Small Business Owners are Dumb as Hell

July 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I love how politicians only champion "small businesses." "Big business" is bad, but "small businesses" are good.

Never mind that big businesses account for the majority of employment.

And never mind small businesses,when successful, become big.

Nope, small business = good.

Big business = bad.

Just one problem.

The vast, and I mean like 93% vast, majority of small business owners are dumber than hell.

They are incompetent. They have no business acumen. And they consequently fail the vast majority of the time.

The reasons are many.

Most small business owners are naive and start things they think will be "fun." There was no limit to the number of sports bars, trinket shops, horse hobby farms, music studios, and restaurants I had to deal with working as a credit analyst. NONE of them were profitable. NONE of them were feasible. It was just some moron who foolishly cashed in their 401k to "pursue a dream" and start a company they thought would be fun. Of course "fun" things are usually oversupplied to the market and the profit margins just aren't there.

Another reason for the spectacular failure of small businesses is their owners truly and honestly believe accounting is optional. THat's the "hard stuff" and they literally have no idea how much they're making or losing. All one has to do is watch Restaurant IMpossible where the host invariably asks the bloated sows about their "P&L" and they don't even know what that is. Again, these are lazy, dumb people who started the business for "fun." Not profit. And since accounting isn't "fun" they don't do it.

Finally, a disproportionate number of "small businesses" are really just contractors who claim theyr'e running a business. You know, the guy with the truck who bought a magnet to put on it "Joe's Master Paving" but couldn't tell you what "LLC" stands for or where the secretary of state is to register such a thing. They are basically playing make-believe-businessman. They get cards, they get signs, they get everything that is glamorous and ritzy, but not the basic things like setting up a company or getting insurance.

Normally I would like to submit a solution. Like "hey, if you're a dumbass, don't start a restaurant." Or "hey, if you're a politician, the LAST group of people you should be championing for saving the US economy is small business owners." But I don't care anymore. Not because I'm enjoying the decline, but because the entire small business world, even the entire US economy, is more focused on feeling good and avoiding real work than working hard and making a profit. And no amount of logic, reasoning, lecturing or facts from me are going to wake these people up out of their trance.

The only thing will be when the Chinese and Japanese turn off the credit line and there's no more money to be lent out to sports bars, hair salon, or horse hobby farms.
Enjoy the decline!

The Benefits of a Truly Free Mind

July 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A mandatory speech for people looking for guidance and wisdom on how to lead and live life.

You may also download the audio here in the case you don't want to sit in front of a computer screen for 30 minutes.

Why You're Still Stuck in 800 A.D.

July 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because of stupid shit like this.

Empirical Proof of the Married Beta Male Slave

July 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dalrock does some outstanding economic research and pulls some earnings data for different groups of men/women and married/single.

The two trends that are apparent in his chartage is:

1. Single men are increasingly earning less
2. Married men are always making more

Why?

Because single men can and married men have to.

Single men are like the Priuses of the courting world. We can get by on very little fuel. We don't need a ton of money and with the varying economic, political, and socioloigical factors making hard work, production, and a career distasteful, if not outright impossible. Fire up the X-Box and get another bottle of scotch.

But the married men, my goodness, the solid, reliable stalwarts of the labor market. Hell or high water they will work their assess off and buck for that promotion.

Why?

Again, while there is certainly the factor they are being noble and providing for their children and families, I contend it's because they have to. They do not have the option to tell their manipulative, psychopath of a boss to shove it. They do not have the option to stand up for themselves and their self-respect. They have a mortgage, kids to feed, a wife to subsidize, a car payment, student loans (both the parents and the children) and credit cards. They are OWNED by the company via debts that aren't even theirs.

Again, I am not criticizing good fathers and husbands. Many of you who read this are out there and don't let your finances/wife/children get to the point you are living paycheck to paycheck and must suffer the sadism of employers. But for the remaining, I'd estimate, 80% of married men out there, I would love to say "Enjoy the Decline," but I can't because it's impossible for you to. Your life has been cast. And it is one of slavery.

Forcing Others to Live a Lie for Your Petty Ego

July 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and more on this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Post post - It is Perry the Platypus.

Peerlessness

July 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When I tell people i'm going tornado chasing a common witticism I receive in response is "what will you do when you catch one?"

Touche witty friends of Cappy, touche.

However, a slight spin on that question has a lesson for all of us and one I'd like to share:

"What would you do if you realized your dreams?"

Very rarely do people realize their dreams. And the reason is simple - society is predisposed to ensure you don't.

I don't mean this in a "conspiratorial" sense, that there is some sentient, organized effort to prevent you from realizing your dreams, but that society is structured and organized to take advantage, live off of, and parasite off of its precious youth.

Chances are if you were born after 1960 your parents wanted you because THEY wanted a child. Whether they could AFFORD children, whether they SHOULD have children, and whether they had the adult capacity to raise children be damned. They wanted a child like a soccer mom wants an SUV. And thus your upbringing was already impaired from the get go because you were an "object" or a "thing" in the eyes of your parents, not another human being.

After that you were pretty much a pawn for the state via the state education system. Your parents, too "busy" to rear you yourself, were thankful that at the age of 5 you could ~~be outsourced to a government daycare program~~ "go to school." There you learned what a socialist/leftist government approved labor union wanted you to.

Global warming
Ozone Layer
Recycle
Give money to poor disadvantaged people in third world countries
You're privileged
Vote democrat
Go to college at all costs and other things that were neither educational, nor helpful.

You then went to college, because you were told to, incurred a ton of debt, and then started a career where at any moment you could be fired for the most made-up-of reasons and were strongly encouraged to donate money to your 401k plan, which would be confiscated or haircuted anyway.

In short, your dreams of what you wanted to do as a child never really stood much of a chance. Because from the day you were conceived (not born) society already had your time booked to be slaved away to serve it and not you. Those dreams were merely a fake incentive to get you to work for them. And, for most people, they succumbed to the matrix, they obeyed, they "did what they were told" and now are suffering a mortgage they can't afford, persistent student loans, a spouse that hates them, children they really shouldn't have had, a car payment, parents who refused to sock away for retirement, and a boss that owns them because they are by-proxy-enslaved via debt.

But then there are the "others."

"Others?" You ask.

Yes, "the others."

The men and women who got sent to the principle's office often. The boys and girls who could stump their teacher in the 3rd grade with...well...3rd grade logic. The young 20 somethings who knew something was wrong, couldn't put their finger on it, but via the internet, compared notes, removed the wool from their eyes and realized just what a scam society had in store for them.

We call these people "independent minded."

Most of us fall into this category. We didn't fit in, we refused to obey, and we knew something was amiss, but society kept on telling us we were flawed, erroneous and just plain wrong. Our audacity and personalities would not accept it and we stuck to our guns. We decided we didn't have to obey what society told us. We decided we were going to get a bang for our finite live's buck. We were going to drive our lives to the limit and do what we god damned pleased with it - consequences and society's desires be damned.

And thus you have a new breed of westerners and independent thinkers. Young men (and women) who refused to go with the matrix and are truly independent people.

There are of course, benefits.

We don't fall for the college/education scam. We do not waste our best years laboring away for an opportunistic employer. We don't have enough assets to be confiscated in a 401k or IRA. We don't have debts we can't afford. We don't have kids we can't afford. And by merely identifying and side-stepping the slave-trap society had laid out for us, we're living lives that are arguably the freest in human history.

I just went to Alaska and back on a motorcycle at a whim. Danny is going to live in a trailer in Louisiana, spending time with his nephew, and retire at 40. Matt hitch hiked across America. Roosh is gallivanting around the globe chasing girls and getting paid for it. Davis and Silvio wrote two great books. And scores of you are starting your own business or going on your own adventure. We could go on, but in general, adherents of this new independent line of thinking are capitalizing on the one finite lives they've been given and are thusly living better lives the the average sheeple.

Just one problem.

When I say we are living lives that are arguably the freest in human history, I'm not joking. We really are. But who else has gone down this path? Who else have lived such free lives? Has anyone gone down this rabbit hole before? Has any one tread this path in the past?

While there certainly have been independent minded people in the past, they are so rare and so uncommon their experiences are either unavailable for public consumption or have been lost to history. Their philosophies, observations and epiphanies were considered "obscure" or "outliers" and thus never made it into the realm of "common sense" or "general wisdom." And with this lost, or perhaps, never recorded knowledge, we are going into uncharted territory. And as with every trip into the unknown there are always unforeseen costs, consequences and drawbacks.

It is here a sad irony unfolds.

To the outside observer, stuck at their wage slave job, and boring mundane lives, all the see is the positives. Gallivanting around the world, climbing mountains, leaving at a whim, never worrying about money, answering to no one. Their entire lives they have been told (and truthfully so) that this is the "dream" and when you achieve it all will be well. There will be no more problems and you will be happy. But what they don't see is the unforeseen costs and consequences to "living the dream" and living such independent lives. Costs and consequences that are all too real and hidden/overshadowed by the blinding benefits.

First is the issue of peerlessness. I say this not to brag, and I need you to understand that. I am NOT bragging. I am telling you the truth to make a point and to help you in the future. But this past summer I took two vacations. The first one was 2 weeks in the Black Hills and Badlands of South Dakota with my motorcycle. I drove all over the place, hiked all over the place, smoked cigars and gambled in Deadwood. I experienced something most motorcyclists across the world can only dream of experiencing. The second one trumped even that. I drove to Alaska and back. I saw mountains that put the Black Hills to shame and am one of the very few to claim they drove to Alaska on a bike.

I was miserable about half the time on both trips.

Why?

Because after you gun through the Needles Highway on a crotch rocket or make it to Hyder, Alaska or summit Harney Peak or hike in Banff, and the adrenaline wears off, you are once again alone because nobody can just take 4 weeks off on a whim. There is nobody to share the experience with, not because you don't have friends, but because you are so far to the right of the mean nobody can keep up. Either because they don't have the money, they don't have the time, they don't have the physique, or (more commonly) they don't have the interest.

Roosh is another example. You may disagree with his life choice, but again, to the outside 20 something male observer, Roosh is living the dream. He flies around the world, makes money on writing books about how to seduce women in different countries, and that's his job. But at the end of the day, how many people can Roosh associate with? Who can he compare notes with? Not only is he peerless in that nobody else in the world is doing what he does, but in traveling so extensively, he rarely is in a country where people speak English, pushing him further to the right of the bell curve into further isolation. It isn't until he returns home does he have his peer group surrounding him again.

Whatever it is and whatever your dream may be, realize if you realize it, it will be YOUR dream. And in it being "your dream" it will be so specific and unique to you that by default you will not have any peers.

Second is decreasing novelty.

Imagine if your palate would became inured to new foods the moment you tasted it. You would have to keep pushing the edge getting newer, spicier, and more obscure foods. You'd try one food, and then would become bored with it, forcing you on this spiral to constantly be trying to find new foods. Yes you could eat to merely survive, but you will never experience that "first taste" ever again until you find something bigger, better, and newer.

Your brain is the same way.

Once you achieve your dream, you will become inured to it. My childhood dream was to climb mountains. My first real mountain was Flinch Peak in Glacier National Park. It was amazing. Then I did Hallet's Peak, Laramie Peak, Deseret Peak, Lake Angeline, and more and more and more until one day, half way up a new mountain, I couldn't go on. Not out of physical weakness, but no desire. It would be just another peak. I would be up there by myself. The view could have very well been as spectacular as when I first summited Flinch Peak, but it would be nowhere near as impressive. It would just be more rocks, dirt and snow.

In short, because society enslaves you and prevents you from ever realizing your dreams, you think when you inevitably realize them you will be engaged and stimulated for the rest of your life.

The truth is you will tire of it in about 2-3 years and need to find a new source of inspiration. You will also wonder if the new "dream" will be the same, and you will then finally realize there is no "final solution" to happiness. Like a shark, you will need to keep swimming, keep going, keep trying or else you will become inured to life.

Now, I paint a very dark and depressing picture. And I know, I know, crocodile tears and world's smallest violin.

Would I EVER want to go back to a bank or a corporate gig? Would I or any of the other independent minded types who are pushing the frontiers of independence EVER go back to regular lives?

Absolutely not. We KNOW and APPRECIATE what we have.

But the reason I bring these drawbacks up is not to complain but to warn those of you who are on the path to achieving and realizing your own dreams in your own lives. And that is a higher percentage of you than most of you realize.

Understand this current "generation" of "others" or "independent minded types" had to start from scratch to get where we are. There was no advice, there was no wisdom, there was no internet. We had to wake ourselves up, take our own red pill, with many of us not waking up until our 30's, 40's or 50's. But with the internet and the plethora of websites out there speaking these derived truths and provide such advice, the "next generation" will be able to benefit from our experiences. And the whole concept of wisdom is to help the younger generations by passing on our knowledge so that you may have BETTER lives than us.

This means many of you will be reaching your goals and realizing your dreams ever earlier on than we did. And while you may think this is great (and it certainly is) us "elders" or "older brother types" who are down the path further than you, would do you no service in not warning you about the drawbacks that await.

So in short, consider multiple dreams and goals you wish to achieve because if you take our advice you will have enough time in life to realize more than one. And you're going to need them to maintain your sanity and intellect. Also I strongly recommend appreciating your fellow human being and developing an interest in intellectual thought and good conversation with your fellow man. I delve into more detail here, but it is not through peaks of mountains, riches, or a high notch count that happiness lies. It is your fellow man. Finally, do not be so stupid as to shoot yourself in the foot by making foolish mistakes. i.e.-getting somebody/yourself pregnant, majoring in a stupid subject, going into debt for material things, etc. None of your dreams can be accomplished if you've crippled yourself with stupidity.

Why You Want to Be Walter Matthau

August 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Walter Matthau, at least to the younger generations, is primarily known for his role in the Grumpy Old Men series. Perhaps some of you even remember him as the sloppy bachelor, Oscar Madison, in "The Odd Couple." Whatever the case, most people's perception of Walter Matthau is one of a man who played boorish slovenly characters.

Really?

Does he look boorish or slovenly to you?

Here's why people, especially young men, should become students of Walter Matthau.

He was an average looking guy, perhaps even slightly below average, whose mastery of CHARM more than compensated for his looks.

Have you seen "Charlie Varrick?"
Have you seen "Charade?"
Have you seen "Fail Safe?"

Probably not, because Matthau's most popular work is the likes of The Odd Couple or Grumpy Old Men. But if you did you would see a man whose demeanor, wit, pose and vocabulary compensated for any mediocrity in his looks.

Was his charm at least in part scripted like Cary Grant's lines?

Sure.

Was there multiple takes to pull off the impression the director wanted?

Of course.

But just like you should emulate the likes of Cary Grant's performance, so too you should aim to be as quick, clever, and charming as Walter Matthau.

There is also another reason Matthau should be mandatory viewing for all men -very few of us look like Cary Grant or Steve McQueen, but most of us DO look like Walter Matthau.

We're average looking schlubbs. We're normal looking guys. Got a little extra weight and perhaps our faces are a bit muggy. That didn't stop Matthau and it shouldn't stop you. Unless you are horribly disfigured it is within the capacity of most men to craft, hone, practice, improve and deploy charm to the point their 5.5 face is transformed into a 8.7 man. You can don a suit, you can keep most of the weight off, and if you have an inventory of lines or (better yet) a brain that can craft witty lines in context at a drop of a hat, you can achieve Walter Matthau.

Also, two things about Mr. Matthau you may not have known that would make you want to emulate him more.

He was a gunnery sergeant in the US Air Corps during WWII

And he was able to kiss and pinch the ass of Sophia Loren. (Note the smile on her face).

How many of you can claim that?

How Opportunity Costs Partially Explain Player Burn Out

August 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've said it before, and I'll say it again, players WILL burn out. There is only a certain amount of energy and patience men have, and the novelty of the hunt WILL wear out.

However, there is another economic variable that goes unnoticed by most socio-economic spectators - opportunity costs.

If you're a poor, unemployed, young college student with nothing else going on, then chasing tail is very likely the most important and productive option you have with the remainder of your free time.

However, you don't stay in college forever and you don't remain unemployed or poor. Sooner or later you WILL find a job, you WILL get a career and WILL have other things going on in life. As life goes on, these things will gain an "economy to scale" and you will progress and advance in these fields to the point your free time becomes more and more precious.

Soon you're not a 21 year old kid who can sleep in tomorrow, ace your Freshman Comp exam, and play hacky sack for 6 hours on the weekend.

You're 30, recently promoted, bringing down significant money, who also has to train for his upcoming jiujitsu bout and then has night class for his computer networking certification. You also have your motorcycle ride with your buddies and you got to install gutters on the house before it rains again.

And the prospects of going to yet another bar or yet another night club for 4 hours to MAYBE get a number is like getting .0004% interest on your savings account - it isn't worth the investment.

In other words are these boys "giving up?"

"Suffering from low t?"

"Have other options like video games and booze to attend?"

Sure.

But boys become men, and if they become real men, life starts to have other more pressing matters for them to attend to, to the point they drop out of the market, or significantly cut back their interest. And the opportunity costs of their progressively more-valuable 4 hours of free time is just too high to be wasted chasing Tizzy and Tina as they faux lesbian make out at the bar.

So don't be confused, let alone, lecturing of boys ignoring girls at the bar. Everything happens in this world for a reason. And their behavior/actions are not irrational.

Hogan's Heroes, Peter Gunn, and Venture Brothers

August 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

are the only TV shows I ever watch now.

The rest really is crap.

Time Is More Important Than Money

August 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The average man lives to be about 79 while the average woman will live to about 82.

However, the average man does not make $1 million per year in income and the average woman does not have a net worth of $40 million.

But there's an interesting thing about the relationship between life expectancy and riches - there is none.

Yes, up front, where you're dirt poor, living in Somalia, spitting out 8 children per woman, and you can't afford the basics like food, medicine, shelter, etc., a little bit of income goes a long way. But once you make it past, oh say, the $25,000 mark, the added health benefit of any extra money goes away. In other words, if you live in the 1st world, your income will have no effect on your health or life expectancy.

This is an important point to make in that it should provide some guidance in how to lead, live and enjoy your life to its maximum extent - time is more important than money.

Take a look at any super rich person - Bill Gates, Warren Buffett, Carlos Slim, Oprah, you name it, these people are not going to live any longer than a guy who brings in $50,000 a year. Sure they may enjoy things the average Joe won't enjoy (sushi every day, yachts, travel, etc.) but when all is said and done, these people are going to die pretty spot on the average life expectancy. Therefore the only reason to work that hard or aspire to be rich is to buy all the pretty little toys and enjoy the "rich" lifestyle.

But here's another little secret - toys and material items are not the most important things in life. It is (as I've said many times before) other people. Conversation, thought, philosophy, love, humor, pranking, sparing and witticizing with other humans is the best thing that can happen in a person's life. And if they have that, then a Ferrari or sushi every night won't really matter.

Extrapolating from these two observations (life expectancies are pretty standard across income levels in the 1st world and other humans are the most important thing in life) you should be able to make some important conclusions about "work life" balance.

First, if you're making $25,000 a year and you have family, friends and loved ones, why work harder or make more money? You're only going to pay more in taxes and spend less time with the people who really matter. You are better off working part time, going home to help raise the kids or get some beers with the guys at the bar or have an afternoon quicky with your wife.

Second, along the same lines, you should be working LESS in that while you may be making extra money, the amount of psychological, political and corporate BS you would have to endure only serves to increase your stress and destroy your health. Again, unless you were an idiot and bought a house you couldn't afford, a spouse you couldn't subsidize, and children you coudln't rear, and are up to your eyes in debt, you can (AND SHOULD) scale back on work and enjoy life.

Third, this puts a MAJOR emphasis on physical health. You NEED to eat right, you NEED to work out and exercise, you need to keep your body in shape. These actions cost you NOTHING but extend the only resource you have - time more than income would. This extra time will result in not only additional time you get to spend with loved ones, but you'll feel better, you'll look better, you'll have better sex, and that right there is enough to make any leftists raging with envy. Besides, would you rather be out running around, knocking out 4 miles on a beautiful day or sitting in that cubicle hoping Mr. Grayhair McMoron might promote you to ASSISTANT Reserve Adjunct Vice President?

Finally, Steve Jobs. You'll never know where or when and it's better to have died a poor man who enjoyed life than a rich one who didn't.

So do yourself and all your loved ones a favor.

Go home.
Do some budgeting and number crunching.
And see how little you can get by on.

See if you can go down to part time. See if you can get by on a security guard income. See if you can't make it on the ancillary revenue your home based business generates. See if you can't downsize into a smaller apartment.

Because the only better feeling than telling your boss you don't need him/her any more is when it's a beautiful day like today and you know all your former bosses are cooped up inside, working on their TRP reports, answering to an equally retarded boss and are on the verge of divorce with children that hate them, while you're out running, spending time with your kids, or just playing some video games tanked on a bottle of Rumpie.

Enjoy the decline!

How Women Can Save the US Economy

August 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ladies, you want to do your part to help boost the economy?

Do this and inspire men to be more productive.

I guarantee that will boost the economy more than you voting for Obama phones and the government to replace men and more social workers.

God Bless the Aggregators

August 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again, it is a thankless job. And actually, no, nobody "has" to do it. They do it out of charity and purpose. So thank them by visiting them:

Morning News Telegraph (new)
Viva La Manosphere
Delusion Damage
Hawaiian Libertarian

The Captain's Commanding Officer - Bill Watson III - RIP

August 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have very few men I look up to and respect.

Very few.

This is largely in part because most of "elder" society today not only fails to bring up or lead the younger generations, but, sadly, prefers to take advantage of and parasite off of the younger generations.

Not Big Bill.

Big Bill was a friend of mine and somebody I consider my mentor. He was wiser, more experienced, was just, fair, and pretty much the epitome of what every man in the Manosphere would wish to emulate. He was a man who you shut up and listen to, not because he was older, but because he went down that path before and had the wisdom you didn't.

But beyond his experience, he was also a lovable man. He was your friend. He was 6'5", 300 pounds, former secret service agent, cop, and could crush you in a matter of seconds, but never chose to as he was the textbook definition of a gentle giant. His heart was limitless. He could take any amount of joshing, ridicule, and teasing and know that it was nothing more than his fellow man too cowardly to say, "I love you, man."

The SOB died way too damn early and is the first person to make me say,

"Damnit, I wish I spent more time with him"

Not because that is the thing to say, but because there will never be another opportunity to experience a man of his caliber, his wisdom, and his kindness.

I will miss Big Bill, which is infinitely more than I can say for the vast majority of people I've ran into on this planet.

Elysium

August 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For all you suburbanite Republicans who feel powerless against the tide of socialism sweeping the nation, could you maybe for once NOT see a movie that is so blatantly criminalizing and hating you? No, no, I know. That would "hurt movie night" in the blissfully ignorant suburbs.

The "How 'Bout You Call People Back" Economic Plan

August 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When I am king there will be many changes.

I will cut all government funding of liberal arts/humanities college programs.

I will ban sports from all public educational facilities, K-Kolidge.

I will ban omnibus legislation.

I will force, via the military if necessary, term limits AND a total 20 year limit on ALL public service.

I will allow new hunting seasons such as "banker season," "lobbyist season" and "trial lawyer season."

And I will consolidate all forms of taxation into ONE, SINGLE, easily understandable sales tax.

But my economic plan will be very simple. I call it the

"How 'Bout You F#cking Call People Back" plan

(or HBYFCPBP).

The reason is simple. Yes, taxes are a problem. Yes regulation is a problem. And yes a lack of skill labor is a problem. But the single biggest bottleneck I have found that is keeping America's economy from booming at 12% annual RGDP growth per year is the fact that nobody calls people back in a timely or prompt manner.

Matter of fact, very few people call people back at all.

It isn't until you make 5 or 6 calls to your intended target do you actually get them to call (or e-mail) you back.

For example, I have been trying to buy advertising on various podcasts to help advertise my books. Podcasts like The Tom Leykis Show, Laura Ingraham, and at least five others.

But if we simplify what I'm doing to an even more basic level, I'm simply asking them if I can give them money.

You would think they'd want to call you back.

But oh, you foolish man. Don't you know this is modern day America, not the 1940's? Why, what made you think people would actually WANT TO MAKE MONEY and CALL YOU BACK? Silly silly man. This is 2013 America when society has decayed to such a point people are too stupid to call you back. Not because you're trying to sell them something they don't want. Not because you offer them nothing worth their time. No, they won't even call you back WHEN YOU'RE TRYING TO GIVE THEM MONEY!!!!

No, the ONLY show that has ever called me back is the Tom Leykis Show (which I fully endorse and recommend advertising on). The rest of them have never gotten back to me (though I am still waiting to hear a response from Gillette Sunday school).

Now think about this.

If ONE out of SEVEN people call you back WHEN YOU ARE TRYING TO GIVE THEM MONEY, can you imagine the response rate for things not as beneficial?

What if you need that report from your boss?
What if you need the most recent tax returns of your client?
What if you need to order new machinery parts of your factory?
What if you need a new part because the motorcycle mechanic ordered the wrong one (AGAIN) but won't get back to you?

And what if it takes at least THREE TRIES to get them to get back to you?

Well what happens is the entire economy grinds to a halt and it's amazing there's even any GDP being produced at all.

Thus my HBYFCPBP.

With the HBYFCPBP we essentially take the average person's 8 hour day, and instead of 7 hours and 42 minutes of it waiting on other people who are waiting on other people who are waiting on other people to call them the frick back, I decree you call people back IMMEDIATELY under penalty of death. And thus, the average worker no longer spends only 18 minutes per day on actual work, while s/he waits 7 hours 42 minutes the rest of the time, but instead is working and producing the full 8 hours a day.

This is a 2,600% increase in production which would boost GDP in the first year alone by an equivalent amount. Instead of our annual GDP being around $15 trillion, it would be closer to $390 trillion, dwarfing our national debt and pretty much solving all of our economic problems.

Of course, this would require most Americans not be complete f*cking idiots and maybe develop a little hustle, but since that is more of a 1950's American thing and not a 2013 American thing, I guess we'll just sit here mired in the malaise and rot of the average American worker.

Lady's Night Linkage

August 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Even though it is morning.

But math is tough!

Paying to change history that, frankly, has nothing to do with you, but people related to you over 200 years ago.

And you think I'm cynical about parents being so self-absorbed it overshadows their kids.

I remember scoping out a bar. Was kicking around even getting a drink, but then the "no guns allowed" sign was on the door. Normally I ignore these as my gun is concealed and nobody checks and I don't give a damn, so I walked in anyway. But when the bar tender asked me if I wanted a drink I said, "No, I have a pistol, I can't patronize your establishment." She had a confused look on her face as I wandered away looking at the bar. Nobody was called to ask me to leave. But they still didn't get my business.

Men always say "marriage isn't easy," but that's because they compromise instead of take command.

I don't care about Hugo. Enough people are ripping him, including women.

I expect women to be feminine. When they're not, I treat them like men. But then they get angry. I'm so confused.

Heh, yeah. When you say, "cutting edge of American cultural trends and society" I IMMEDIATELY think "700 club."

Yes, yes, the reason you're in 2nd place is ALWAYS sexism. Cripes.

The Crapshoot Career

August 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A buddy of mine was visiting from Kansas City. In all seriousness he said,

"You should become a used car salesman."

I looked at him with one brow raised and said, "Really?"

He then continued on to explain that there was a ton of money, but it took an odd and obscure personality to become a good used car salesman. I laughed, but life has taught me that he is probably more right than wrong. I probably would make a good used car salesman.

Why?

Because my initial reaction would be that I would be a HORRIBLE used car salesman. And what I always thought I would be "horrible" at or would "never do" I ended up excelling in.

I don't know what to call it, perhaps a "reverse skill talent," but if life has taught me anything, it's that you are likely to be horrible at what you think you'd be good at and awesome at what you'd think you'd be horrible at.

For example, not in a million years did I think I would be a ballroom dancer/instructor, let alone an author, let alone a radio personality. I even mocked and ridiculed such professions as fake or bogus. It wasn't until harsh economic conditions forced me into taking a crap shoot at all three, all of which I excelled at, two of which are now my mainstay of income.

Banking? Well, you all know the story. I technically am the best analyst and economist I know. My predictions about the economy and default risk of loans is near a 1.000 batting average. However, that skill is not what matters in the banking industry, as much as how wide you can spread your butt cheeks and how wide you can open your mouth.

Regardless, why this is true, I do not know, but I have a theory.

Different personalities are attracted to different industries. Analytical types are attracted to finance and accounting. Creative types are attracted towards media and the arts. Courageous types are attracted towards military and police. But in an ironic twist, each of those industries are then FLOODED with those personality and aptitude types, thereby lowering the value of those personalities and aptitudes. This puts not so much a higher value of personalities and aptitudes that would DIFFER from the traditional personalities and aptitudes normally associated with those industries, as much as it gives people with different aptitudes and abilities a HUGE competitive advantage.

For example my business background gave me a HUGE advantage over my touchy-feely, artsy, fartsy dance instructor competitors. I was the first instructor to offer "field trips" to my students where I'd take them out dancing, thereby making my classes more attractive, and I also learned multiple types of dances so I could schedule a "batch" of classes. So instead of just an hour of dance class, I would teach 3 hours of three different types of dance. This allowed me to increase my radius where I could offer classes because I was generating more revenue per trip. In short, and to this day, I am the only instructor from the Twin Cities to travel to far flung places like Mankato, Hibbing, Austin, etc.

The larger point is one that should provide GREAT hope and relief to you younger (or even older) types who are trying to find a job or your place in the world - your best career is likely NOT to be the one you're applying for.

This means that if you're a business major filing out yet another f*cking Taleo-Brass Ring online application, you may be better off walking down to the welding shop, learning how to weld, and getting a job at the Bakken oil field.

This means that if you're the drama major, you may be better off picking up an accounting class or two and becoming a staff accountant at the local beanery or theater.

This means that if you're a computer network engineer, your mind numbing job might be easily replaced by becoming an author or music composer.

Whatever it is, you might be shocked and surprised just how well you would do in fields you thought the complete antithesis of your skill set. It's just a matter of taking a chance, applying and taking a crap shoot at anything.

In all seriousness if my book sales were to dry up, I would probably walk down to the used car lot and ask to be a salesman. I would also pick up a saxophone and start playing because I think I would be horrible at it, which means I would probably rock at it. You should do the same.

Think you'd make a lousy cop? Then volunteer as a reserve officer to see if you're not wrong.

Think you'd make a lousy surgeon? Then watch surgery videos and see if you don't immediately upchuck, but are one of those weird people who find it "fascinating."

Hate kids? Sign up to substitute teach and see if those rug rats don't wear off on you.

Are you a pastor looking for some side income? Consider a career as a porn star.

I personally cannot tell you what it would be, just that my experience has been that it's the complete OPPOSITE of what you think, and usually a lot more fun.

Children Are the #1 Cause of Poverty

August 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So stop breeding if you can't afford them:

How Feminism Took Over the Church

August 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Outstanding.

Out-freaking-standing.

We have made a society that has created enough child-women to actually, honestly believe that their personal preferences trump the standards and rules of pre-established institutions, and yet STILL BELIEVE THEY ARE ENTITLED TO BE PART OF THOSE INSTITUTIONS.

I await the response from the religious community.

Do you kowtow to these demands (like gay marriage), thereby admitting you are nothing more than a money making, for-profit organization duping your congregation into donating money to you, or do you hold fast to your religious standards?

I eagerly await your decision!

Ahhh, religion. The trade older than the oldest trade.

Minimalism Pirates

August 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Arrrrrgggg!

We scallywags be set to destroy the leftist socialist economy by denying her the fruits of our labor and thus the life blood she needs to pay fer her parasitic constituents! Avast President Obama, you not be gettin' us Minimalist Pirates to work for ye!

How to Avenge the Death of the United States

August 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I, along with millions of others, are angry.

And we are angry because we have had our country, culture and futures taken away from us.

We were supposed to inherit the world's greatest country, and with hard work, a good education, and a good moral code, we would enjoy a great life. Some of us would have great careers. Some would have great families. Others would have great adventures. And most of us would have all three. On top of it, there was a guarantee that we'd be reasonably safe and that this country, its economy, and its government would be reasonably stable. We could focus on advancing ourselves and enjoying our lives, instead of having to fight just to maintain our culture, our nation, and common sense.

Of course, all of this is now rapidly becoming just a dream. Yes, it was very feasible back in the 1980's when you had the likes of Ronald Reagan in office and the majority of the population loved America, what it stood for and were willing to fight for it. But three decades of socialist brainwashing in the public schools, media, and government has resulted in an ignorant, entitled, and lazy electorate that cumulatively has rejected America, freedom, individualism and liberty, and instead replaced it with socialism, the lack of responsibility, commune, lies about the real world, and a vile code of political correctness.

And thus every aspect of America has been destroyed and we all get to suffer for it.

Romance (arguably the most important part of people's lives) has been corrupted as women are fat, narcissistic, arrogant and ugly, while men are weak, emasculated, timid and breakable. The labor market is dysfunctional as you now need a masters in some worthless degree (and the debt that comes along with it) just to get a ENTRY LEVEL POSITION. The government mandates we judge people by the color of their skin and not their character. Generational unity has become a joke as one generation insists on living off of the others via social security, medicare and Obamacare. We don't even have the self-respect to protect our borders, allowing people from the world's worst countries to come in and live off the government because it brings in more socialist votes. Worse still the left has been so successful at brainwashing people you have the most spoiled brats in the entire world hating the country that afforded them a 1st world lifestyle.

And so instead of that stable job right out of high school, with the fit wife and two healthy children, and a car and house you can afford, with the knowledge and security that your government is working for you, you now have...

Ugly and disgusting options when it comes to choosing a mate
Children that are going to be brought up by the state
Student loans that prevent you from ever having a house
A lousy job market that will prevent you from ever affording a decent car and a constant battle on your hands against a growing number of brainwashed, leftists zombies who are trained to hate you and wage war on you and your country daily through activism, regulations, taxation, lawsuits, lobbying and idiotic faux religions like global warming.

The difference could not be more stark, and your anger could not be more justified.

But what do you do?

As I've said before, this IS a democracy, and for better or worse, the majority DID vote this in. So you can't be killing people or taking up arms as it would be the antithesis of democracy - i.e.- you would be a tyrant. But this still doesn't address how you stop this unstoppable trend towards socialism and the destruction of the United States. Voting doesn't work when the electorate is getting dumber, more dependent, more parasitical and more socialist. And write all the letters to the editor or try to reason with people, they are so thoroughly brainwashed they have become zealots - beyond reason, logic and fact.

Well my good junior, deputy, aspiring, official or otherwise economists, there's only one thing we can do.

Help accelerate the transition to socialism.

You see, trying to stop socialism is futile in that the majority of its adherents are again, zealots. They are zombies. They don't care about anything else but their religion, which just so happens to take the form of socialism. They are so wedded to their ideology that it trumps facts, reality, truth, and data. They are literally delusional and NO amount of reasoning, arguing, or rationalizing with these people will work.

How many times have you been at a 20 something party and gone in scores of circles with some ditz or some pansy of a man explaining, rationally, logically, and empirically your point, only to have them dismiss you with a bogus study from academia, flawed logic, or just get frustrated and call you an "ist?" (racist, sexist, etc.). How many times have you tried to explain to the 32 year old mom that "no, there really isn't enough money to pay for all these kid's programs" only to have her respond with "well the rich have loopholes and they don't pay their fair share" (never once her ever looking at the federal budget). I could go on, but you get the point - the majority of ADULTS (let alone children) do not care to be intellectually honest or take the time to study or think through their ideology. And most people's lives are so void of any real accomplishment or meaning, socialism is the ONLY thing they have in their lives. And any time you dare to introduce an ounce of sanity, realism, reality, facts, or data into their fragile world, you deliver a blow to their egos and their core, resulting in (at best) polite cognitive dissonance, but more often vitriol and hatred.

You will NEVER convince these people as they have no desire nor capacity for intellectual honesty.

The only option is to give them socialism full force and make them sleep in the bed they made.

How?

Well, here is where it is actually quite practical and feasible.

Understand socialism is parasitical (and by default, unsustainable) in nature. It needs a host to do the majority of the work while the parasites live off of that host.

But what if that host goes on strike?

Yes, yes, "going Galt," you've heard it before, but have you looked at the numbers?

Already people have been going Galt since 2008. A lot of this has been of course by force with the recession forcing unemployment on people. But a better sign is the labor force participation rate which shows the percent of people who can work and are ACTUALLY SEEKING WORK.

Again, some of frustration from not being able to find a job, but some are also changing their life views towards work and "making do with less." This trend essentially proves the host is shrinking itself, producing less for the parasites.

Of course, the parasites in the US haven't been on a diet. Government spending has gone through the roof, obesity of presumably "poor" people have ballooned as well, heck, we even give phones for votes to our worst citizens.

But if the host is shrinking, where does all the money come from to feed the parasites?

Thank you China, Japan, Saudi Arabia and other ~~suckers~~ federal government creditors:

We have been running TRILLION DOLLAR PLUS deficits for the past 4 years and will probably run another for a 5th.

Trillion dollar surpluses are proof positive the host is no longer large enough to sustain the parasites and the system needs a blood transfusion.

In other words if it wasn't for the Chinese, Japanese and other ~~suckers~~ federal government creditors this "economic reckoning" would have occurred a long time ago and the full price of socialism would have finally been borne by the parasites and socialists. Without borrowing, prices for every good would skyrocket. Electricity and energy would become a crippling expense. Shelves would not be as full, if not outright empty, giving EBT card holders a dose or irony. In general, a whole host and slew of economic consequences, always associated with socialism, would rain down on the ignorant electorate giving them the much needed economic slap across the face in the form of starvation, hunger, cold, disease and general physical and mental pain. But as long as the ~~suckers~~ creditors are there, lending money, politicians can at least keep the lights on, buy votes, and postpone the inevitable economic punishment that will come.

So how do we get our creditors to turn off the line of credit? How do we get them to stop lending the US government money so society can actually pay and experience the full costs and price of socialism?

Tank our credit rating.

Understand that if enough people were to go Galt and go on strike, the US' economic fundamentals would sour enough that it would have an effect on our credit rating. If GDP were to start to contract, instead of grow, it would make the Chinese very nervous. If consumer spending were to tank, instead of grow, it would make the Japanese very nervous. And if the labor force participation rate, labor force productivity, and other measures of labor utility were to tank, it would make the Saudi's very nervous.

In short, if a critical mass of people were to just quit stop spending so much money drop down to part time downsize

and in general minimize themselves

our economy would contract to the point even the Chinese, Japanese and Saudi's wouldn't lend us money. The line of credit is cut, nobody lends any more money to Obama and Pelosi, their bribe money runs dry, and their parasitical constituents force the first time are not bailed out of their mistakes. EBT cards run balances down to zero. The welfare check bounces. Your disability check is late. You student loans aren't funded. The buses aren't running. And it all wouldn't matter anyway because there's nothing in the shelves at Wal-Mart because 25% of their work force went Galt and are at home living off of their home grown veggies.

Of course, grinding the US economy to a halt like this is not likely. And the reason why is the beta-debt-ridden-wage-slave. The single, largest and most powerful part of the US economic engine are those hard working, loyal, wage slaves who plain cannot afford to "go Galt."

Why?

A whole host of reasons.

They have a family. They have a wife/husband. They have a mortgage. They have car loans. They have student loans. They have their kids student loans. They have to pay for hockey. They have a credit card debt. They have a line of credit.

In short a goodly portion of the US' economic engine is ball and chained to their jobs via debts they can barely afford and families that are dependent upon them. They will slave away for 3rd world illegal immigrants who hate them because they need to make the next lease payment on that Lexus SUV for wifey. They will slave away for the quadruple single mom who is majoring in Women's Studies because they need to live in that McMansion in that good school district where the property taxes are sky high. They will slave away for any parasite because the banks, mortgage companies, car companies, credit cards, and divorce/legal system has them by the balls.

There is some good news however.

These beta-debt-ridden-wage-slaves are NOT the innovators or creators. They are not the entrepreneurs or the business developers. They are SLAVES, they are CONFORMISTS, they will NEVER create a Microsoft, an Apple, a Wal-Mart or what have you.

That is where you renegade, non-conforming, misbehaving, individualists come in.

I contend, though I have no hard numbers to back it up, there are enough individualistic people, who are not ridden with debt, not beholden to their families, that we could lop off at least 4% GDP, sending the US economy into recession.

How? By becoming Minimalism Pirates.

If enough people, who can afford to go the minimalism lifestyle, were to just up and quit their jobs, drop down to part time, or heck, even go on the government dole, you will do your share in helping bring the socialist system down. Also, in spending less, you will also do your share to bring the socialist system down. In just having a critical mass percentage of the independent minded types, the future or current entrepreneurs, just go Galt and become Minimalism Pirates, that should be enough to slow the US economy down, send it back into recession, increase the amount the US needs to borrow, and decrease its credit rating.

Of course, this requires some sacrifice on the part of people going Galt. Say you have a great career and you can't "scale it" to part time. YOu need to work full time, you might lose your skill set, you worked hard for what you earned. It may not be worth it. But if you're like most people, you hate your job, you hate paying taxes for socialist, parasitic scum, and with some cut backs in spending, debt abatement, you can minimize your "economic footprint" and enjoy a freer life. You know that family, friends and loves ones are the most important thing in life, and thus you don't need that Mercedes and thus you don't need to work. You know sleeping in will help boost your health vs. a daily stressful commute every day, and so you only work part time telecommuting. And while you wake up, refreshed, drinking your coffee at 10AM, finishing your "work" by noon, you go out and ride your motorcycle, watch cartoons, write that book you always wanted to write, or spend time with your kids.

And if that's how you have to defend America and strike back at the parasitical socialist scum of this society, then so be it.

"He Was a Good Boy"

August 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Dear "Parents of Criminal Children Who Keep Saying 'He Was a Good Kid'","

I speak for everybody when I say the following:

No, he wasn't.

He was a piece of shit.

And you, by default, were a piece of shit parent.

You failed to bring up a reliable, responsible child because you were a lousy, lazy, pathetic failure of a parent who was too lazy to instill the basic moral lessons in your illegitimate offspring because you were too busy watching daytime TV or getting knocked up by the next latest loser.

We're glad he's gone because he was a criminal. We're glad he's dead. The world is better off without him. Matter of fact, if you didn't bring him into the world in the first place, we'd be better off even more so. Matter of fact, the world could do without you.

So have yourself a cup of STFU, collect your welfare check, and continue to piss away the one finite life you have with Schlitz beer, meth, and a loose crotch.

Sincerely,

The Rest of Society

Here's the photo. You should note TWO things. One obvious, one not so.

Antioch College - The Epitome of the Education Bubble

August 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

After it closed its doors, it re-opened with a whole, whopping 75 applicants!!!

Yipdee-freaking-ding.

Couldn't be they're a bunch of batshit insane leftists and feminists incapable of math, accounting and basic budgeting now could it?

Let us know when you close again.

Forget the Night Club, Go to the Fabric Store

August 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm working on a youtube video that, in all honesty and bias set aside, I believe will go viral. It's extremely clever and witty, however, the cleverness and wittiness requires a costume as a gimmick. So there your Captain was today at Joann Fabrics in the suburbs, completely out of his element, looking sad, pitiful and hopeless as he meandered in a clueless pattern trying to find the materiel he needed to make his costume.

However, as I stumbled through Joann Fabrics I started to notice that not only was I the ONLY man in the place, but about half the women were young and good looking. Some, drop dead gorgeous. While I appreciated the scenery, I was on a mission and wanted to get back home before rush hour started. And so, for one of the rare times in my life, I decided to ask for help. And shucks howdy, as luck would have it, the first girl that physically came within a reasonable distance to politely ask for help was a 9.6 20 something babe with a wedding ring the size of a Buick.

"Excuse me," I said, "but can you help me?"

She said with a smile on her face AND WITHOUT HESITATION, "Sure!"

"I'm looking for some velcro that can adhere to both fabric and cloth, but don't know what kind of adhesive to get. Glue? Sticky back? Should I just sew it?"

"Well what are you making?" she asked.

I said, "I'm making a costume for a video I'm putting together."

"Really!? What kind of video?" she inquired.

And it is here that I must interrupt the story and point out a sad fact.

I wasn't there to hit on women, I was there on a mission. AND I had only a finite time to accomplish my mission before the suburbanite idiotic driving masses clogged the streets.

Could I have continued to converse with this pretty lady?

Sure.

Could I have laid on the charm?

Of course.

But I wasn't there for that, and thus, when she asked, "What kind of video?" I must sadly admit I aborted the mission I was NOT on and said, "Oh, it's very boring. It's about economics, you wouldn't like it. So would you recommend one adhesive over another?"

She recommended a fabric glue and so I was on my way to the cloth counter.

At the cloth counter I realized that Joann Fabrics is indeed a store for women. It's clientele is women. It's staff is women. And I'd gather the majority of its shareholders are women. Consequently, this meant standing in a long and unnecessary line as women would take numbers, line up, and when it was their turn to get their cloth cut, they would gab with the seamstress about the world's most inconsequential shit.

"Oh that is a NICE pattern! What are you using it for?"

"Oh, my son likes trucks, it's for his bedroom."

"You know there are more truck patterns in aisle 7."

"I didn't know that. Is there any flanel?"

"Oh my yes!"

I sat there for at least 30 minutes while the staff managed only to serve THREE PEOPLE in that time, thus further advocating my call for bachelor lanes.

Regardless, during that 30 minutes I was able to study the environment a little more. Yes, the women were definitely very attractive, but they were also alone. Very few came there with somebody else, if it there was somebody else it was usually a child. Obesity was not an issue. There was the occasional fat woman, but it reminded me of the 1980's where the vast MINORITY of people were over weight. ie- women there seemed to be the traditional types. And the only other man in the place was staff, and matter of fact, I think most women noticed that too. They were all looking at me as I caught them stealing glances. I mayhaps would have had more sociological observations, but my number was called and in a mere fraction of the time it took my predecessors, I had my cloth cut and was off to the check out lane.

Now while the above may sound like a cute little anecdote about a man stumbling about in a woman's world, what it really is, is a huge advance in the study of "day game." For there are elements and lessons within that can be of benefit to all men.

First, if you don't know what "day game" is, it's simply approaching women during the day time and not at night. The reasons for doing so are many. Night clubs have largely deteriorated to attention-fests for women where they score as many free drinks and covers from the naive, 20 something male populace. They have no intention of meeting a guy and are there simply to extract resources and boost their egos. Social media has further relegated night game to obsolescence as more and more people flirt and score over facebook or Match.com. Women are also more approachable during the day time as they usually are alone, without the herd there to run interference/cockblock. And they also do not have the mentality and confidence/arrogance at the book store that they would at the night club. It is because of this many men recommend replacing night game with day game (and also why I predict night clubs will go the way of the dinosaur). Regardless, as you age and gain wisdom, you'll probably want to deploy day game instead of dropping $50 a night to maybe, potentially, hopefully, sort of get a number.

Second, just like night clubs or "night game" there are also different strategies for "day game." While there is no "official list" and playing it by ear seems to be as far as the study has advanced, Roosh V's book "Day Bang" extrapolates some strategics based on the basic and pioneering principles of day game. A lot of these strategies exploit the obvious advantages of approaching during the day:

- The girl is usually alone at the coffee store.
- You can engage in conversation better, and thus display your charm, because there isn't loud music blaring as there is at the bar.
- The girl doesn't have her "bitch shield" up while at the library, matter of fact, she's completely off guard
- You feign "ignorance" and ask the girl to help you with a task to open her up to conversation
- You feign "helplessness" to assuage the girl of any concerns that you're a masher, and perhaps beget pity

There's more to it than that obviously, but those are the basic tenets of "day game" strategy.

So riddle me this, riddle me that, Batman, how is the fabric store not the IDEAL set up for day game. How is it not "day game heaven?"

While Roosh recommends pretty much any place to exercise day game (coffee store, grocery store, library, gas station), the fabric store I contend is the OPTIMAL place to deploy day game because it not only has all of the qualities above, but has three additional and distinct advantages.

One, the ratio of men to women. You go to the library, the coffee shop, etc., you will have roughly a 1:1 ratio of men to women. You go to the fabric store, you are VERY LIKELY to be the only guy there. You have NO competition whatsover. You will have a ratio of 40:1, 50:1 if you include staff. You will stand out and immediately have high comparative value (for example, I was on my motorcycle today, and thus looked completely bad ass. The one other guy was staff with a mandatory polo shirt and khakis).

Two, you don't have to "feign" anything. A brilliant tactic Roosh recommends is asking girls where the closest pet store is. It is ambiguous, can tangent into the discussion of pets (which is "cute" and safe), and shows you are "hopeless" and need help. But you have to fake it. However, when you are in a fabric store, you don't have to fake helplessness and hopelessness, you REALLY ARE helpless and hopeless. You will be COMPLETELY clueless as to what you're doing in such an environment and thus your pitifulness will be sincere. Women will take pity on you. And when you ask for help, you're not doing so to hit on the girl, you're doing so because you REALLY NEED HELP. Thus, you should at minimum have a certain amount of performance anxiety reduced because you aren't performing. Your a being genuine.

Three, whatever craft project you're working on (make one up) becomes a NATURAL and IMMEDIATE topic of discussion. The women there were all genuinely curious about each other's projects and it was completely normal to inquire and ask.

Got yourself a nephew? Make him a "truck blanket."

Got yourself a niece? Make her some "Barbie Pajamas."

Don't got either? Lie and make it up, so when you approach the cutesie near the "flannel" department you can ask, "I'm sorry, but I'm trying to sew some pajamas for my new born niece. Do you recommend wool, flannel or some other material? I'm afraid I don't remember as I was an infant last time this decision came up, not to mention don't know what little girls like today."

The crafts and in's are not only natural, but limitless.

"But Math is Tough!"

August 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

this is why I love IT chicks, or just smart chicks in general, they pull their freaking weight.

The Onus of Man by Damian Bouch

August 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was down in Dallas doing my speech at the Liberty Mastermind Symposium. It was only a two day affair and I had to fly back to South Dakota to retrieve my motorcycle and drive it back to Minnesota. So early the next morn, after the symposium was done, I checked out of my hotel and started to make my way to my Mustang GT 5.0 rental, until I saw Damian, a young attended in the atrium.

He looked like he was waiting for the shuttle and so I asked, “Are you heading to the airport?”

He said, “Yes.”

I said, “Want a ride?”

Preferring a sooner and more convenient ride he said, “Sure!”

So off we went for the 10 minute drive to the airport. I learned Damian was a 23 year old kid, ahead of his peers in terms of economics if he was attending an economics seminar, but he was also an author. I didn't dismiss him because he was sincere and earnest about writing, but in my mind I was saying, “Great, another kid with no worldly experience is going to churn out what he thinks is going to be a great book. Maybe another 10 years in the real world and he'll cut his teeth and increase his writing skills.”

That being said he did have a book and he was curious about how to go about getting it marketed. I told him to NEVER go the traditional publishing route and that the best option for a young, unknown man like him was to pitch it through various blogs and social media. He thanked me for the advice and asked if I'd read his book if he ever mailed me a copy.

“Sure!” I said, completely predispositioned to read another directionless rambling of another 20 something.

I was completely wrong

I just finished “The Onus of Man” on the flight to Florida and I was amazed. Not so much with the plot, the character development, or the “Gotcha” at the end (which I DID predict, Damian!), but the SUPERB quality of writing, especially coming from such a young man. I was also flabbergasted by the structure of the book and the plot (which switches between a young man's life memories and his pursuit to go dig up his treasure he had buried out in the wilderness – it will throw you off at first, but after three chapters you'll see how it flows). It was well organized, made sense, and the “gotcha” is just killer, and quite bold I might say for such a young author.

IN short “The Onus ofMan” is the fiction version of “Worthless.” It follows a young man from roughly the age of 14 through the first few years of college and addresses, from a first person narrative, the experiences, thoughts, and challenges the average American high school/college student faces today. Because it is fiction, it is more entertaining that “Worthless” as well as more personable as you familiarize yourself with the various characters (Aunt Malorie is somebody you love to hate and see die). Also, it paints a personal face on the education bubble, rather than mine and others' dry and academic non-fiction accounts. You see the personal pain young kids are going through, the confusion, and the helplessness/hopelessness of being indebted to such a great amount. You also see just how much havoc and ruin worthless degrees can cause and just what a despicable vile system “big education” has come.

The are drawbacks of course. My primary complaint being it reads too much as a familial memoir, with stories being too long, dragged out, and irrelevant to the primary plot (though this is of course to paint the picture of a “normal” life for the hero). It is also a tad verbose with words that even I don't want to look up on account that I am lazy and have too low of an IQ to understand such words.

Regardless, “The Onus of Man”is incredibly timely and written by some one who has recently gone through the scam known as “college” and thus can relate on a personal level to the people who would benefit most from it – high school and college students. So if you want to warn your kids about the risks of a worthless degree, but don't want to bore them with charts, data and screeds, I highly recommend “The Onus of Man.”

It Is Alright to Disagree

August 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Chances are I will throw it up, especially if I'm vacationing and not blogging.

Done With the Foul Mouthed Langauge Against Women

August 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was at a regular haunt last night in St. Petersburg, Florida - "Central Cigars." It is hands down by favorite cigar lounge because it not only has cigars, but a bar

a jazz club

and assumes you are an adult capable of making your own adult decisions ergo serving you booze and (GASP) allowing you to take a GLASS CONTAINER OUTSIDE!

The other reason I like it is me and my buddy just pull off a Dean Martin and watch all the girls go by. THere is a college campus in town, plus the local ladies usually dress quite provocatively and sometimes quite pretty as well, that it really is a sight to behold. However, past experiences tell us the best thing to do is look. You never approach, you never talk. They are incredibly arrogant, incredibly snooty. The best thing to do is take a drag from your Cusano M1, take a sip of your scotch, while standing on the corner, watching all the girls go by.

But last night the ladies of St. Petersburg pulled off another one, further cementing their reputation.

My buddy and I are sitting at our outside table. A cackle of young 20 something girls walk past us, giggling, and strutting, as one in their cabal places her empty pizza cardboard container on our table, without a bat of the eye, and continues walking with her friends. Following my theory that if shit like this is "let go" it will simply reinforce behavior and turn her into an even more insufferable woman for some (or multiple) schmoes in the future, I grabbed it, darted after her and put in upside down on her head. Of course she just let it fall off and continued her little strut, but the cackle did stop giggling.

Now this is the epitome of a girl who is a genuine, 100% USDA certified "bitch." Her behavior was unacceptable, arrogant, cocky, and demeaning to everybody else to think she could just drop off her garbage at any ole table. She deserves to be called a "bitch" (and many other derogatory words).

However, this is ONE person. A SINGLE girl who may represent a sub-group of people, BUT NOT ALL WOMEN. And it's high time this be pointed out to a significant percentage of readers in The Manosphere.

I've instituted a new policy on comment approval - I'm no longer approving posts that call women in general names and other derogatory terms.

Do I use foul language to describe women at time?

Sure.

Is the language crass?

Of course.

But it is ALWAYS a specific girl. And anecdote. A single person. Somebody who deserves it.

Never women in general.

And when some basement, keyboard jockey says things like "Ameri-cunts" or "whores" or cannot help but put "gina" as a suffix to every word, I'm angry and therefore done. I'm sick of the childishness of it all. I'm sick of "faux Manosphere academians" who merely co-opt the manosphere as an excuse for their poor performance and fear of trying in life. I'm sick of people trying to paint the "Us vs. Them" when it is "Us vs. Feminism/Communism." I'm sick of seeing genuine, sincere, nice women being included with the vile scum ruining the country.

And so I'm instituting the new comment policy for these official reasons three.

1. You damn right NAWALT

We are fortunate enough to have scores of women on the internet coming to bat for men, family, and loved ones. They like men, they appreciate men, and they are spending their time defending them. And for every female blogger out there there are thousands of nice, wonderful, caring, traditional women. Just because they live in "America" or are "western" does not mean they all have their triple masters in Women's Studies and will die of old age with their cats.

2. It's childish to call women names

Name calling???? Are you kidding me??? Of all the legitimate and sincere criticisms that can be made about affirmative action, fake rape charges, lopsided divorce courts, feminist hatred, and insane unacceptable courting behavior of women, you have to resort to NAME CALLING???? First, it isn't going to work. Second, it makes you look like an idiot. Do you think that veritable bitch in St. Pete's would even be phased by calling her names? It won't be until she lives life and hits the wall will she even begin to get her comeuppance. Name calling does nothing but make you look pissed off, out of options, and one who has no legitimate beefs, just a genuine bigotry against women.

3. Real revenge

Name calling isn't revenge. There is really only going to be ONE source of revenge and that is your absence. I shall review it VERY briefly here, but, the most important thing in life is not material wealth, not income, not riches, but your husband/wife. A member of the opposite sex you fall in love with. They are likely to be the single greatest source of happiness in your life. So in you, and millions of other men, extracting yourself from the marriage market, you deny these women the best thing that can happen to them, and thus exact your toll of REAL revenge. But this is COMPLETELY dependent and presupposed on YOU BEING A QUALITY MAN.

If you are in shape, supporting yourself, are interesting, have a profession, have hobbies and have a life, then you in refusing to date certain types of women get your revenge. But if you are fat, uninteresting, can't support yourself, live with your parents, not hygienic, and just don't have anything going on, then you won't get your revenge, you ARE the revenge of others in that women are left with you to date. Ergo, not only is this a reason NOT to call women names, but it is a practical COMMAND for you to get off your ass, get in shape, becoming interesting, and become a man.

Do Not Tell Me "Economic Growth" Has a Limit

August 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"I still contest to this day, a population adequately educated in economics could inoculate itself against recessions. I still contest to this day, that I don't care how "mature" the US economy is, RGDP growth of 7% per year is possible. I still contest to this day that if we mastered economics as a society we could have income per capitas of $250,000 per person and effectively eliminate poverty, not to mention extend life expectancies to unfathomable ages. All these benefits are possible if we just master economics."

The Work Place Post Baby Boomers

August 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dear Baby Boomer Bosses,

This is now officially my new office.

I know you suffered the past 40 years of your career in a sunless cubicle, the destination of which you aimed for with countless hours in traffic during a stroke-inducing commute, and then, after you were a good little boy/girl, foregoing your children, outsourcing them to daycare, so you could chase the almighty dollar, maybe, hopefully, after enough brown nosing, ass kissing and "networking" got promoted to the office WITH A DOOR (giggity!), but technology has advanced enough that offices, cubicles, and massive office tower skyscrapers are officially obsolete.

Notice that rectangular looking thing to the right? That's what we "youngin's" call a "laptop." These "laptops" are also computers and serve the same function as those "desktop computers" you keep insisting me and my generation ball and chain ourselves to.

It has all of the functionality, but with the added benefit of PORTABILITY meaning we can work from anywhere.

Also notice it's seemingly not hooked up to anything?

Well, that's where the wonders of this thing called the "INTERNET" come in. You see, the "INTERNET" is this...well, you know what, it's too damn complicated for people who listened to too much Jim Morrison. The short version is that I can do work from anywhere. I'm able to send e-mails, make pointless MS Word and Excel documents that impress you, but do nothing to boost profitability for the firm. I can do EVERYTHING you want me to, but I don't have to be indoors AND I can e-mail those TPS reports to you just the same.

Oh, you noticed that snifter glass did you?

No, that's not water. That's Rumpleminze.

You see, I'm what's called an "adult." It's a foreign concept, so let me explain. You see, I can get my work done, I can do it in a very high quality manner, and I can do it, not only without you looking over my shoulder, but I can do it while imbibing a bit. I know, crazy, huh? You thought with your social security, medicare, multi-trillion dollar deficits, and the destruction of the world's greatest country, YOU were the only COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE PHLEGM PHLEGM HEAVY FREAKING QUOTES "adults" in this country, but no, apparently not. Us youngin's can do what you did, but better, cheaper, faster, and at a fraction of the cost, while drunk, outdoors and part time.

I know, I know, you weren't able to enjoy this during your 40 years of work experience, and therefore, illogically, and quite vindictively of you, you think I and every other successive generation should suffer your same shitty fate, but, again, technology has allowed us to do our work, with quality, and if you would make the HUGE jump of faith to assume that I am an adult and can get my work done, regardless of how you THINK it should be done, then we're all going to get along much better.

But wait, now that I think about it. In order to work for you, I have to do all the same shit you did for the past 40 years. Kiss ass, brown nose, buck for promotion, "put in my dues." Hmmm....that seems to inefficient, corrupt, nepositist, cronyistic, and well...stupid.

You know what. I think instead, I'm just going to go and start my own business and market it through the internet. I don't need to go to college because your academian bretheren are charging too much, and well, they wouldn't teach me anything practical anyway. Certainly not with all those prerequisite classes and fees and bloated tuition classes all steeped in leftist indoctrination.

No, I think I have a much simpler idea and business model. I have a skill/product, I will market that skill/product over the internet, I will get paid over the internet, and my clients will pay me. And you know something, here's the real crazy bit. They won't care how the work gets done where the work gets done or what I was doing when the work gets done because (and this is the shocker)

the work got done.

I know RIGHT?

I mean, you boomers just "KNOW" unless you see people working, then they aren't working, right? I mean, you can't trust any generation other than yourselves to get shit done, right? Why take advantage of the internet to lower costs like eliminating rent and corporate office buildings and leases while people work from home because you need to have control over those good for nothing "loafers" who insist on working from home. I mean micro-managing and never delegating is the GREATEST way to ensure profitability, robust growth, higher employment, and prosperity for all, right?

You enjoy your visitless-nursing homes and the well-deserved reputation as the generation that destroyed the US.

I'm going to enjoy my new office and I'm going to enjoy the decline.

Killing Childhood

August 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I too am surprised I am alive today.

The Chinese Can't Invade Quick Enough

August 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Honest to freaking Saint Frick.

It's Called "Capital Flight" and Liberals are Too Damn Stupid to Know What That Means

August 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

But they will suffer from it anyway.

Joseph Cotto is Enjoying the Decline

August 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why aren't you?

The Adventures of Government Check Dad

August 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The Maelstrom Underneath

August 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The ladies of St. Petersburg are the gift that keeps on giving, and they couldn't let me return home without providing one final present. My flight had been canceled due to weather. My buddy picked me up 2 hours after he had dropped me off a Tampa International and without even having to discuss it we both said, "cigar lounge?" as our solution for what to do for the night. So there we were on Central Avenue, smoking cigars once again.

To keep our prime-real-estate-of-a-seat outside, I had my buddy go in first to get his cigar while I sat outside and reserved our table. But while he was in there I noticed something peculiar. A cutesie blond I had seen previously that afternoon 7 HOURS AGO came walking out of the nextdoor bar with some guy. She had been drinking, starting at 2PM, ON A MONDAY AFTERNOON and was still there 7 hours later.

Her and her male friend sat at the outdoor table next to me, where she began to call a friend and leave him/her a long rambling, curse-filled message that only drunk, angry girls could. It was hilarious. Accusations of stabbing in the back, how she wasn't trying to steal somebody's guy, and who would want to steal that guy anyway, and how dare somebody violate her trust blah blah blah. I laughed inside because she looked a little too old to be leaving such a message, not to mention the guy seemed pained to be seen in public with her.

My buddy returned to our table with cigar in hand. It was now my turn to pick out a stogie and as I got up I said, "You gotta see this girl." I walked into the lounge and there was George, the smart alecky 23 year old maitre d. I said, "have you seen the girl outside?" He said, "Holy cow! Look out for her! She asked me how old I thought she was and I said '28'. Then she yelled at me and cursed at me saying I was an ass and didn't know shit and looked like Doogie Howser!" (George was a young looking 23 year old kid). I proceeded to the humidor, purchased a Connecticut wrapped cigar, and rejoined my friend outside.

By this time her male friend had left leaving me and my friend in the uncomfortable position of dealing with this volatile and angry woman by ourselves. Long as she remained at her table and we didn't bother her, things should be alright. There was just one problem.

I had been imbibing a bit myself at the airport because...well...what else is there to do at an airport? I wasn't completely gone, matter of fact I was quite sober, but I had enough booze in me to turn off any concern or worries about offending somebody that would be so easily offended. So I told my buddy at the table how this lady eviscerated poor George and then turned to the lady and ask, "Hey, how old are you?"

Visibly disturbed she said in a condescending manner, "Why? How old do you think I am?"

George had told me previously she was 33, so I said promptly, "42, 43?"

My friend, now mentally shaking his head, immediately jumped in, "33?" as a means to calm her, but it was too late. The drunken tart had seen red.

"OH YEAH ASSHOLE!!!??? What makes you think 43!??!!"

I said, "you look 43."

"Well, I'm not!!! I'm 33 asswipe!"

In a brilliant backhanded-complimenting comeback I said, "Really??? It must be your clothes. If I just look at your face, you actually do look 33, but I had to include your clothes. You kind of dress like you're 43."

This did nothing to calm the situation.

She then lit me up over my fashion.

"Oh yeah fuckhole!? Look at you with your stupid hat (I was wearing a fedora) and your Steva sandals. Who the fuck wears Steva sandals nowadays!? You're dressed like your grandpa."

And it was here I knew I had her on the ropes. I didn't even know what brand name my sandals were. They were purchased for me over 10 years ago by a girlfriend from long past, but were (obviously) of such high quality they lasted. But in being able to tell what brand they were, and to know when they were in fashion, the lady belied the fact 10 years ago she was so hot and in such a high socio-economic class (which she didn't earn herself into) that she had the luxury to know about luxury sandals. This was going to be a piece of cake.

I continued my goading along a logical line of inquiry, that was occasionally derailed by her cursing, rants, and sometimes just outright hilarious stuff. But there was a purpose and a direction of where I was guiding the conversation. I first leveraged the fact I had a significant other and she didn't by pointing out "my loving girlfriend, who I am returning to tomorrow, bought me these sandals." I asked her if her boyfriend (which I knew she didn't have) ever bought her nice sandals, "No, I don't have a boyfriend! But my boyfriends in the past have bought me much nicer things that those shitty sandals!" I then asked about her orange pants, if she had purchased those on purpose, and if they were not themselves 10 years old. Angered even more, she screamed that those pants were $60 pants, were very much in fashion, and that she could easily afford them with the money she made. I asked what she did for a living that she could afford $60 pants, at which point she grew a full inch and said proudly she was some marketing muckity muck at some local magazine. She then took the bait and said in her most condescending and demeaning manner,

"So what do you do for a living?"

I responded, "I wrote a book about a shitting buffalo."

She didn't have an immediate response. She was actually kind of confused as I imagine most people are. She inevitably scoffed at it and said, "Ha! You probably make jack shit."

Knowing my income and how I do make jack shit, but make enough to avoid a real job, I revisited her pants saying, "Yeah, but I don't have to work a real job because I don't buy $60 43 year old pants."

"OK Mr. Smart Guy!!!! What did you study in college!!!???"

And it was here I knew I had her. Because drunk, professional marketing type ladies who start drinking at 2PM on a Monday just have to prove they're better at and superior than you at something. And so we were going to go the "intelligence/education" route.

I said, "Finance."

"Oooooo! Finance. Big deal!"

I inquired, "What did you study in school?"

In a Fresno Valley Girl, talk-to-the-hand tone she said, "Uh, I went to Eckhart!?"

Not answering my question because she was so drunk, I said, "No, what did you study???"

"I went to Eckhart! What shitty school did you go to???"

Further not answering my question, I said, "University of Minnesota."

This then prompted one of Eckhart's finest to start slamming on my accent. "Oooooo! Ya der hey. Dontcha know, Minnesoooooootaaaahhh! Bunch of fucking morons up there."

My friend and I laughed. We retorted, "No, you are confusing Fargo, which is in North Dakota. And they don't even talk like that."

"Whatever, bunch of fuckers who probably still are wearing Steva sandals!"

Trying again to confirm what I already knew was true (liberal arts degree) I asked, "So what did you study in Eckhart?"

She said with beaming pride, "Political Science."

I then asked, "Masters degree?"

"Yes," she said proudly.

I then asked, "So what does that have to do with marketing or your job?"

This then sent her into a tizzy. So much so she ignored the question and went on her 37th tirade.

"YOu know what! I went to ECKHART!!!! I'm rich mother fucker!!! Do you know what tuition was???"

I said, "No, I don't, but you're missing my point, if you majored in..."

"$1,000 a year!!!!!"

The booze had taken over. Hell, I'd go to Eckhart for $1,000 a year. I tried to point out her mistake,

"Wait, Eckhart charges only $1,000 a year???"

"Yes"

"ONE-THOUSAND DOLLARS A YEAR?????"

"No, wait, it was $47,000 a year!" she yelled.

And then I tried to do some math, "So you spent roughly $50,000 per year for 6 years to go to college. That's $300,000. To get a degree in..."

But I couldn't finish my point before she started her 38th tirade,

"I'm rich mother fucker! I can afford any school!!! Do you know how rich you have to be to go to Eckhart? You need TONS of money! if you even knew blah blah blah blah..."

I wanted until there was a pause to ask my next question.

"Then why did you go to school if you're already rich. Why work?"

"Well my dad is rich! We're loaded!" she said.

And that's when I kicked the keystone from out beneath her life.

I said, "Well then YOU'RE not rich. You're DAD is rich. That's his money. Not yours. You did nothing to earn it. You're not a real woman. You're a DEPENDENT WOMAN. You DEPEND on a man!!! You don't support yourself."

For once she shut up, though her eyes told me she was more livid than ever before. Apparently nobody had pointed out this obvious fact and her brain (educated at Eckhart, mind you) was scrambling for something to say. But it couldn't. How do you respond to truth? I was expecting more name calling, but, luckily the taxi cab she had called pulled up. Knowing deep down inside I was right, and having nothing to retort, she got up in a harrumph and made her way to the cab. Refusing to even talk or look at us. But I couldn't let it go. I had in front of me everything I hated.

A spoiled brat.
A person who thought she was better than us.
A former cutie pie who led on lord knows how many superior men cause she was hot at one time.
A liberal.
A liberal arts major.
With a cushy job she got through connections.
Who no doubt votes for socialism
Makes my life more difficult
And a hypocrite thinking in her mind she's an independent minded person.
And scum thinking she's better than other people because her DAD is rich.

It was everything that was wrong with America. It was an enemy of and an affront to America, freedom, liberty, adulthood, and every decent human being who busted their assess off every day, who were superior to this women in every regard.

And so as she walked away I goaded her even more,

"Hey daddy's girl! Enjoy your ride home on daddy's dime. May be he can buy you a boyfriend to tolerate you! Maybe he can buy you another job so you can play make-believe-independent woman. Just know you're not! You are a DEPENDENT WOMAN!!!!"

I said some other things, but whatever I said, I believe the entirety was too much for her ego to take. She couldn't let inferior, Steva-wearing-scum like me say such things about her, so she got out of the cab and came walking back. She was walking straight for me and I knew what I better do. Treat her like an equal.

So I stood up, and made sure to give her a stare that said, "I will treat you like an equal in all regards, including letting you have the first punch and then throwing you down to the ground and holding you there as we call the cops. And if daddy's little princess' face happens to be throw face-first into the pavement, then so be it."

She was walking up fast, but then suddenly stopped short about 5 feet. I believe (can't prove) she saw my stare, it pierced through all the alcohol, making it to her frontal lobes, and she saw I would indeed honor her women's studies' classes demands and treat her like an equal.

She spat at my feet. Falling 3 whole feet short of my "Steva sandaled" toes. About faced and returned to the taxi.

Now I tell you this story not out of entertainment value (though my friend and I found the whole interaction entertaining), but rather there is a very important lesson here. For every "top notch, elite, socialite, daddy's little princess," there is a torture soul underneath.

I say this not out of desire.
I say this not out of "what I'd like to see or think."

I say this out of experience.

Every hottie, every night club girl, every super attractive woman who is hitting the night scene that I have ran into has a hidden psychological maelstrom going on.

You wouldn't know it, because all you see is them put together item. All you see is the exterior. All you see is what she wants you to see, which is the flash and the cash and the short skits and the "look at me, I'm beautiful." But if you ever date these girls, or catch them at a moment of weakness as a friend, or catch them in a drunken rage like my friend and I did, you will see this maelstrom.

For example, St. Petersburg's marketing queen has every, and I mean EVERY financial, familial, social, and educational advantage normal schlepps like you and me don't have. She had EVERYTHING. A rich dad, free education, no fear about how to pay rent, and a cake job lined up for her. She has so much she can afford to get hammered at 2PM on a Monday. She should be living on cloud 9.

But all that material wealth and social status is NOT enough to make her happy. That is what society TOLD HER would make her happy.

The college degree. The masters degree. The corporate job. The $60 orange pants. The night clubbing. Men buying her drinks to get in her pants. Every material and bogus desire foisted on her by society.

Problem is society doesn't tell you what is the true source of happiness and that is other, high quality people.

This puts girls (and men) like the St. Petersburg Marketing Queen in a sad and confusing situation that is ultimately very damaging. Being brought up they never had to develop or hone their personality into an interesting one, a caring one, or an adult one. A personality other humans might find interesting. However, at the same time ironically, they have EVERYTHING ELSE handed to them. Either by genetic luck in looks, being born into wealth, or both. They have money, attention, adoration, toys, drinks, tuition, etc., everything that "should" make them happy, but sadly, no respect. Sadly, no friends. Sadly, no loved ones.

Oh, sure, they have people that just want to use them for their money.
Oh, sure, they have people who just want to nail them.

But nobody in their right mind will tolerate their insufferable personalities to the point they become good friends or genuine, caring lovers rendering them alone.

So by these spoiled children live three decades of life (like our aforementioned subject) they have EVERYTHING society has told them they need to be happy, bar one thing - other cool and genuine humans.

Friends Families
and Loved ones.

It's like having a Ferrari, but no keys.

Of course, this causes great confusion, great angst, and ultimately great anger and depression in the elite socialites. When the hottie turns 33 and the body starts to age, the attention and free drinks dry up. Her friends get married, and there are fewer in her cackle of friends (and yes, I use that word purposely). What she thought was "important" in life is being taken away from her, while at the same time she cannot fill that unknown darwinistic desire in her core psychological programming that is screaming for friends and loved ones which would result in true happiness. But what is arguably the worst curse you can wish on a human, is because she has had such a spoiled upbringing her personality mutually excludes any hope of her finding true happiness. Worse still, her ego won't allow her to change her personality condemning her to this fate forever.

This is why you see the maelstrom unleash itself on Central Avenue in St. Petersburg. It is also why she will no doubt go home and cry herself to sleep, every night, until she's dead, for reasons she will never understand.

America's Best Days Are Behind Us

August 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From an interview with Mr. Cotto of the Washington Times:

"When you go from Frank Sinatra to Jim Morrison in 8 years, that's not a slow transition from musical tastes of society, that is an immediate change purposely forced by a generation determined to ignore wisdom, taste, culture and value just for the sake of doing so.
But music is only one aspect. Fashion turned hideous, divorce became an Olympic event, the idea of outsourcing your children to daycare became standard, nearly every aspect of work, effort, and ethic was thrown out the door and every non-economic aspect of society shows it."

Meet Rozzell Medina - Professional Crusader

August 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our agent in the field.

How much you want to be Rozzell is costing you tax payers more money for some worthless academian cause or social/ist crusade?

Regardless, outstanding work from our agent.

The Captain Interviews Roosh on the Drawbacks of Success

August 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I had hit on the topic of peerlessness and some of the drawbacks of success while doing two two week adventures in the Black Hills and a motorcycle ride to Alaska. Admittedly it is a philosophy in progress, but decided to interview somebody who is down the rabbit hole of success and individualism more than most and that is Roosh V. You may not agree with his lifestyle, and many will criticize it, but you cannot deny this is a man who set out to do his own thing, is doing it, and is successful at it. Consequently, he is one of the few men who is "living his dream" and somebody whose opinions about success should be heeded.

My questions are in regular font, his answers are in italics.

"You are arguably "peerless" in that there is no other man on the planet whose job it is to fly around the planet and try to seduce different women in different countries. And in being this individual, it is only you who has experienced this particular path in life. Now, to the outside observer, most men would say you are living the dream and can only see benefits to such a lifestyle/profession. However, we all know that just because one is "living the dream" or "achieving their dreams," there are always drawbacks. What are the major drawbacks or disadvantages of your lifestyle or "achieving your dream" most people don't see?"

Loneliness is the biggest drawback. I meet a ton of new people, but very few of those develop into something deeper. I am a novelty to the locals and they are the same to me, so it's no surprise that friendships I've met among non-Westerners have been superficial and fleeting. I find it exceedingly difficult, almost impossible, to make male friends abroad that don't already know me through my blog. This may be a product of age: men develop such specific personalities in their 30s that there are few others who can reasonably match it.

Travel is also exhausting in that you have to constantly learn new environments and adapt to them. Just when I begin to relax in a new city after identifying my favorite cafes, supermarkets, and bars, or after I finally adapt to a city's vibe and character, it's time to go somewhere else and start the process all over again. It becomes a grind of having to continually re-adapt to new environments and hopefully find comfort in yet another strange place. I'm usually quite tense during the first couple of days in a new city or apartment, of having to mentally accept a complete change to my living space.

Another result is that since I know I can't really get attached to any person or place, my emotions have to lean towards the cold side. I approach every city or encounter with detachment.

"Most other people have contemporaries or colleagues in their profession. Even rivals (a la Joker and the Batman) can be considered colleagues. I would surmise you have none. Does that result in any kind of loneliness or a hopelessness that you just cannot just crack open a beer and talk to somebody "about your day at the office?"

The higher up you climb the mountain, the fewer people you see around you. I do meet a lot of men who are internationally mobile with internet marketing businesses, but this mobility means lasting friendships are rare. I hang out with them for a week or two and one of us has to leave for the next city. Even one night out with such man has a lot of value to me, because I can go months without it. I know perhaps the most interesting men in the world, but they are not where I am.

Sometimes I do long to be a member of a fixed community and the sense of belonging that goes with it, where someone at my usual gathering place would ask "Where's Roosh?" if I wasn't there. Once I leave a city, maybe one or two girls may care, and that's it.

I realized that being alone is a skill like any other, and I'm starting to believe my blog is a sort of "friend" where I can write thoughts that would have otherwise been spoken to a group of friends. The fact that I developed a working strategy for "going out alone" signifies how scarce friendship can be while on the road.

"Your profession requires extensive travel in countries where you not only don't know the language, but have inadequate time to become proficient in the language. It doesn't seem to affect your game, but there must be some social drawbacks I'd imagine. You can't sit down with your local chums at the bar. The closest friend you have may be in Stuttgart. Yes, the internet is always there for you to converse, but does language proficiency pose a problem and have an effect on your social life?"

English is becoming very common around the world, because it's a gateway to the middle class for many foreigners who want what Americans already take for granted. While studying Russian in Ukraine, I've had to expend some effort to exclude people from my social life who speak English---it was just that common.

It only takes six months of study in any language to become proficient enough to have sex with the local women, but the conversations will be extremely general. Silences are long. You can only make corny jokes. There is little depth, and complicated opinions can't be shared. You definitely won't be talking about philosophy. It takes years of language study before you can express yourself similarly to your own language, but life is long, and so I believe you should start somewhere.

One thing men have to realize is that the connections they have with foreigners will rarely be stronger than what they can experience with their own countrymen. Sure you can fall in love with a Ukrainian woman because of her beauty, sweetness, and ability to cook you hearty meals, but you won't be able to have as many interesting conversations with your style of humor. Then again, I don't know any man who travels because he wants more friends. They do it mainly for adventure, experience, sexual abundance, and dissatisfaction with either their homeland or lifestyle.

"You have gone on great adventures. South America, Scandinavia, your Central European expedition. And even before you left for your first one (South America) a friend of yours told you about how you would go through a "time machine." You would change, but everybody back home wouldn't. they'd stay the same. You would have experiences, adventures, wisdom and observations, while everybody back home would stagnate doing the run of the mill 9-5 thing. One, are people even able to comprehend your experiences when you come back home and want to share them, and two, does it alienate (not in a bad way, but just a differential way) from your home social network? And three, is this something any adventure seeker should heed in terms of a consequence/cost?"

Even if you don't live abroad, but merely travel short-term, the distance between your friends can only increase. They get new office jobs, move to neighboring towns, get girlfriends, and so on while you're seeing the world. Living abroad only accelerates the problem because you are doing things that they've never done, and so when you return, you're no longer interested in the same habits or routines as when you left.

My friends remain in DC, and they can only pursue DC women, so they go to bars that now I simply cannot tolerate because of my experience in Europe and South America. Since chasing DC women was the main activity that we did together, my inability to dive into that bar scene (or even live in DC), puts a strain on our friendship. Eventually you have to come to the realization that it will get only harder to meet someone who has similar experience as you do, and it's best just to seek basic companionship instead. Humans need someone to talk to, and soon you forget the notion that a man must share in all your interests to be a friend. If your friendship standards don't decline, you will soon find yourself without any friends.

Men must also realize that every lifestyle has a cost. Anything you gain with a lifestyle change must cause something else to be lost. The problem is that travel is like a medicine with a side effect that never goes away. You cure the disease only to create another condition. Even if you want to go back to your stable lifestyle, your mind has now had a taste of adventure and better women, so it will sabotage future efforts at stability, making travel both a blessing and curse. You can never revert back to your old self once you spend a long time abroad. An animal that escaped the zoo doesn't want to go back, even if his daily food is guaranteed.

"The quote, 'When Alexander saw the breadth of his domain, he wept for there were no more worlds to conquer.' highlights a problem a lot of independent minded people might face in their lives - nothing left to do. Do you suffer from "adventure burn out?" i.e. - you have lived such a unique life, done pretty much everything your 20 something self would have ever desired. Upon completing or satiating these "adventures/desires" do you ever say "what's next?" but sadly have no answer? Again, to the outside observer, what does a man do after flying around the planet, laying every girl he can? Is there any intellectual, physical, or economic challenges that seem appetizing to you? or is it a challenge to find "that next project?"

I think it's likely for a man to become an adventure junkie, of seeking higher highs, and then finally burn out from it all. He wants to experience a new adventure which exceeds his previous one. Of course this isn't sustainable in the long run.

I do agree that you do reach a point of diminishing return of what travel can give you and start to see new countries as being similar to ones you've already visited. Even new girls, in no matter what exotic locale you find yourself in, will start reminding you of previous ones you already slept with.

I don't know the solution to this besides living the life you want. I like reading and writing, so no matter where I am, I can at least do that, which offers a buffer from burn out. For guys who don't have their own hobbies that they can take wherever they go, I do believe they will find it harder to continue abroad for more than a year or two. This is why almost all the guys I meet who have been doing it for years have an internet business---they can take it anywhere. You stay grounded when you have a consistent daily routine.

You ask what a man has left to do after flying around the planet, but I would ask what the man in a corporation---who has achieved middle management---would do after his big promotion. You hit walls without whatever lifestyle you pursue. The smart man will appreciate what he has, take one day at a time, and be open to any new opportunities to either learn new skills or enjoy his leisure. Once a man reaches his potential, or at least close to it, I guess there is not a whole lot more he can do but refine his craft.

For me, intellectual challenges offer high rewards. My recent mission was sleeping with women using Russian. I get a nice high when I have a conversation in a foreign language that I only started learning after turning 30, but like any other goal, you experience a little success and then get bored. I have met a lot of men who have monetary goals (i.e. saving $1,000,000), but I already make enough to meet my needs, so such a goal would not serve me any benefit. One thing that I wonder is if my best work is behind me or not. Have I already created my best book? This will be interesting to find out when I'm on my death bed looking back.

"Since you have been down this path and very few others have, is there any warnings you'd give younger men (or women) who dare to live such an individualist lifestyle. Not so much in terms of "risks" or "failure," but success?"

The individualist lifestyle is great if you are an individualist. If you can't handle loneliness, constant adaption, unpredictability, and intense struggle, you may not be fit for this type of life. Then again, the only way to find out is to embark on a trip of a month or longer. You will never know if you don't make an attempt. As hard as my first trip abroad was, I wanted to get back out there and do it again, so I knew that my days in America were numbered. The main idea is to try something you've never done before, take a rest, and then listen to what your gut is telling you to do next. While my life isn't perfect, this strategy has worked for me, because I prefer my life of today than the one I had in the States.

You can find Roosh's books, travel guides and essays here.

But Math Is Tough

August 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

ht

Taxi Dancers

August 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So I was watching Peter Gunn and there was a scene where elder men were buying tickets at this dance hall. They would then give the ticket to a lady and she would dance with him.

I personally couldn't believe this happened in that the demand to dance is higher among women than it is men, but it was such an outlandish, but well-organized set up I was viewing on the show that I presumed it must have been true.

Sure enough, it was - Taxi Dancers.

Back in the day men would actually PAY to dance with women. And we're not talking the naughty types of lap dances and strip teases. We're talking ballroom dancing.

Regardless of its history, this is a great example of economics where the suppliers and demanders switched. For whatever reason men no longer cared to dance with women. The demand dropped, and Taxi Dancers went extinct along with the industry and employment that came with it. But (oh cruel, twisted, ironic fate of economics!) just because male demand for dancing vanished, didn't mean women didn't enjoy dancing themselves. They did, it was just that at the time men demanded dancing more, making women the default supplier and allowing them to charge for it. Now with male demand below female demand, it is men who supply the dances and women who are demanding (nay) desperately clamoring for male ballroom dancers.

I should know! I billed out more than once at $100 per hour to dance with clients!

Just Can't Make It Up

August 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So here is the really really short version.

A feminist posts a picture of herself with the "This is What a Feminist Looks Like" meme.

It goes pretty much viral as everybody points out the obvious that she is ugly, overweight, and precisely what a feminist looks like.

I tweet back to the originator who bravely put herself up there and somewhatknown feminist writer Vanessa Valenti, "thank you. priceless" in that it is so rich you just couldn't make it up.

But they take it seriously

Honest to the Patron Saint Name of Frick, you just can't make this stuff up.

enjoy the decline folks!

Leykis Financial Planning

August 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is a basic primer that if every man (and woman) followed, there would be no financial problems.

Straight Line or Bell Distribution of 1-10?

August 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Heh, a deeper analysis than you thought about "she's a perfect 10!"

Latinos Get What They Deserve

August 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You move here to escape a country that is lousy.

You then vote for a guy and policies that are the EXACT SAME THING YOU WERE TRYING TO ESCAPE FROM IN THE FIRST PLACE.

And then you wonder why life isn't better.

Well, you're at least American in one regard - you have the same astounding ignorance of economics that most native Americans have.

Real Men Don't See "The Butler," The Red Head Pacifist I Dated, and How Parents Who Let Their Kids Major in the Liberal Arts Aren't Parenting

August 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

in this latest podcast of The Clarey Podcast!

Everybody Wants Ice Cream

August 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

To put you in a better mood.

It's OK to Hate Your Teachers

August 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Welcome back to ~~prison~~ school kids.

Crack Open a Can of Dalrock

August 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hmmmm….cold, steely, logical, empirical goodness, void of emotions and political correctness.

Why You Shouldn't Feel Bad for Not Saving for Retirement

August 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because you never had a chance.

The Academian Rationalization Hamster

August 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Man, look at this hamster spin.

It makes me wonder if a human brain, after a certain amount of brainwashing/environment/etc., is incapable or independent thought, let alone taking criticism. And even if it is in its best interests to stop, admit it made a mistake, take action to correct it, and thereby have a better life and future, how the ego overrides such wisdom.

I'd suggest sending her a copy of "Worthless" but it would be akin to her most likely path in life - pointless.

The Economy That Was Immune to Keynesian Viagra

August 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I did a post a while ago showing just what a waste education has become by calculating how much GDP is yielded per dollar in educational spending. This ratio was essentially a "return on investment" for the now trillion dollars we spend on education annually and showed not only diminishing marginal returns but just what a sad and pathetic lot populates the education industry.

But then I got an idea while motorcycling around.

Since Obama, Krugman, and every other leftist economist out there is constantly plugging Keynesian stimulus and government spending as the way to get the economy out of its doldrums (still waiting by the way guys, anytime time now), I figured a similar calculation would be called for in that if there's a ratio that would measure Keynesian success, it would be GDP per dollar in federal government spending. In short, since there is that COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE "multiplier effect" a dollar in government spending should result in multiple amounts of GDP.

So here it is:

You'll note that the Great Depression and WWII skew things a bit. When nearly half of your production goes into the war effort, you can expect some odd ratios, so I made another chart post WWII, but keeping 1945 in there so you can see where we came from:

And shucks howdy, look at that. Just like education spending, it looks like federal government spending just isn't getting the bang for the buck it used to. In those "evil 50's" you would get $6.50 in GDP for every $1 in government spending, now we only get $4.30. Matter of fact, in the short 5 years since America's first socialist president took over we lost nearly a buck in GDP per government dollar of spending. The Keynesian Viagra just isn't taking, so what is going on?

It's very simple - government spending does not, in fact, contribute to economic growth. It takes away from economic growth and merely redistributes wealth with a production or efficiency loss.

If you look at what leftists and Keynesians advocate, they advocate merely moving money around in the economy to get things "shaking up a bit" in the childish and naive hopes this jostling will get the economy going again. The problem is this "shaking things up a bit" means taking money from productive people (or the future via borrowing) and giving it to Barack Obama's biggest supporters - economically worthless, productionless parasites.

I say such things not in the pejorative, but in accuracy. That's who gets the lions share of money. People who don't work. People who don't produce. People who are not independent and, thus, by default, and dependent and parasitical.

The problem with such people (and thus, a Keynesian economic stimulus plan) is that they do nothing to earn it. And that is why GDP is not as responsive today to government spending as in days past. Normally when you give somebody money you do so for some kind of production or service in exchange You don't just randomly pass out money, you expect a soda, a video game, a burger or something in return. But the government (specifically, Keynesian stimulus) doesn't work that way. It takes money from people's savings, their income, or the future, normally productive people, and gives it to non-productive people in exchange for nothing. Not one cent of GDP is produced when you pay out a social security check. Not one cent of GDP is produced when you pass out Obamaphones. Not one cent of GDP is produced when you hand out food stamps.

Of course people will argue not all of the stimulus spending is handouts and income transfers. Why there are billions of dollars of grants, investments, etc., that go to bail out companies, invest in new technologies, etc. And this is true. Such government spending DOES get some modicum of return in the form of GDP...just not as much as if it remained in the private sector.

I need not remind people of the spectacular failure and losses of Solyndra and the score of other connected-cronies of Obama who faked like they were serious about building a solar company. I need not remind people of the billions spent on worthless social programs and the employees that manage them that not only fail to solve the social ailment they contend they're trying to fix, but also results in fake GDP as nothing anybody REALLY wanted was produced. And wasn't there a bridge (though in a Republican's district) to the middle of nowhere? Again, Keynesian spending might get a bang for its federal government buck, but comes nowhere near as productive and high as the private sector.

No, the truth is that not only is government spending inherently NOT economic production, when you give it to the least productive and parasitic groups of people in the nation to either not produce at all or to fake producing (so public school teachers can claim they have some kind of "career" while their students shoot each other and can't read out of high school), you can expect the economy to stagnate and the ratios we have charted above.

But what's really precious is how so many people think the likes of Obama and Krugman are still well-intending, just misled about economics. The reality is they hate this country, they hate freedom, they hate success, they hate liberty, and they make their careers off of giving an ignorant electorate their undeserved pound of by destroying the country.

Enjoy the decline!

Why You Will Remain Poor

August 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"My Child Comes First"

August 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Whilst peering over the shoulder of my male friend, perusing the Match or the POF, he'll occasionally point out how common it is for women to list in their description,

"My child comes first"

and then laugh as he moves onto the next, hopefully, childless profile.

But this brings up an important issue about hierarchy and the importance of different people in people's lives.

First, gentlemen, before you wed, you will (not "need" or "should") you WILL make it very clear you will be the number one thing in her life and she will be the number one thing in yours. The kids will come second because without two parents, they will suffer. This doesn't mean you put your kids beneath you, as it is akin to having a pilot and a co-pilot on the plane. Those are the two most important people. The fliers, very important, but they would all die if in an emergency the emphasis was put on them. If you fail to convey this concept then you WILL be relegated below the children and relegated further to the position of ATM. You are not an ATM, you are the father of the household. Don't just act like it, insist on it.

Second, if you fail to do that, you will perpetually be knocked down the hierarchy as various "important" things enter your wife's life. This will result in the following hierarchy and placement as time goes on.

2nd place behind the wife

3rd place behind the wife and any kids

4th place behind the wife, any kids, and if she's religious, Jesus (or God or Allah, etc.)

5th place behind the wife, any kids, any god, and her career

6th place behind the wife, any kids, any god, her career, her affair

7th place behind the wife, any kids, any god, her career, her affair, her family

I could go on, but if there are enough "false gods" you could in theory be bumped down to 117th place.

Regardless, it is important to assess these things about a woman before considering marriage. Say, for example, she's already divorced with kids, has a career and is a really religious girl.

Well lil' buckaroo, you're default placed at 5th.

She's got no kids, but constantly listens to her mother's advice over yours, and is insistent on getting her "Masters in Feelings," you're default ranked 4th.

Again, at any time you men can put your foot down and say, "No, I am the head of the house hold, and I will be in first place." It really is that simple.

Kathleen Rice

August 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I saw this, but then I remember I knew I heard that name before.

How much you want to bet she didn't major in STEM and comes from a richer family than what you and i have?

Again, It Is OK to Hate Your Teachers

August 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because they are not there to educate you. They are there to brainwash you and take your money.

I Standby My Captain America Shirt

August 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I don't know why I catch such guff for my Captain America T-Shirt. Especially when everybody is wearing one.

"Where She is Forced to Work in HR or Marketing…"

September 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HARRRRR!!!!!!!

Pleasure in Others' Pain

September 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I tried to be a productive member of society. I really tried. I worked hard, studied hard, majored in (what I thought) would be a wise subject, and I did my best to make capital markets efficient. I also supported myself the entire time taking not a dime of government money or parental money.

But when all I got in return was a bunch of whinny bankers, socialists clamoring for more of my money, deluded and spoiled women demanding I pay for dates, and people who hate me because I'm white and male, I gave up. My happiness was no longer going to be derived from success, riches, economic production, or status. Not because I chose that, but because the new rules made it impossible. It was all a scam. There was never going to be any kind of "career" or "take home pay" or "white picket fence house with a sane wife and a stable economic future for my children." It was just a way to keep you plugging along for a system fully intent on sucking every ounce of blood and youth out of you.

So what makes me happy now?

Well, enjoying the decline of course, but another thing I truly savor is taking joy in the pain of others.

People call me childish, immature, even petty or vile for taking joy from the suffering of others, but again, I didn't make the rules. I'm just obeying them. And until there is genuine economic opportunity to do my best WITHOUT ridicule and villainization from society for being an "evil, rich, white, male" I'm going to take what pleasures I can in my finite life as I watch the same vermin who stole my dreams destroy their own with their own incomprehensible ignorance and stupidity.

Enjoy the decline!

"Early Childhood Education Majors" Can't Do 3rd Grade Math

September 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our Collegiate Agent in the Field:

Here is the class she is being forced to take.

Here is a test she managed to scan in:

Honest to god people. Your teachers are not innocent, nice, well-intended people. They start off at 18 year old children who don't want to try hard in life and choose an easy degree. Remember that next time the teacher's union demands more money as they fake-claim that it's for the children.

"The New Economy, Headed Up By Men"

September 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"where shit gets done and progress is made."

The Nazi's are Alive and Well

September 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In Germany of all places!

The Girl That Destroyed Cappy

September 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and MORE on this LATEST episode of The Clarey Podcast! (if you want to fast forward, it's around the 1 hr 10 min mark).

The $17 Big Mac

September 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was intending on doing something like this, but this deputy economist did a fine job - breaking down the effects of a $15/hr wage on McDonald's profitability and pricing.

I'm going to explain this very succinctly and simply as possible in the vain hopes some of these McDonald's protestors are listening as it WILL help them in their financial futures:

Companies would not exist without profit. The reason why is that in order to form a company you need investors. And investors (that's you people with your 401k's and IRA's and pensions) will not part with their money unless they get something back OF HIGHER VALUE in return. In otherwords, people aren't just going to throw money away at McDonald's so they can employ people temporarily until the company runes out of money (besides, that's what Barack Obama does with the likes of Solyndra and other green-red companies).

So you can protest all you want. If you get a law passed for the $15 per hour, McDonald's will shut down those stores.

If Wal-Mart has to pay it's employees $12 per hour, Wal-Mart will shut down.

What you are experiencing and the frustration that comes with it, is the real world telling you that you do not have the skills they want. You offer nothing of value (beyond the minimum wage job) that they are willing to part with their money for.

Your real world choices are jobs that pay minimum wage or no jobs that pay $15/hr.

You also could go to school and develop a skill in which case you'll provide something of value in excess of $15/hr.

But sitting on your ass and merely existing, that's nothing special. And your wage shows it.

And don't get pissed as me. This is the real world. You either live in it or suffer. You should be thankful I'm telling you like it is.

Post script - for those McyD's employees still reading this, I want you to real through the comments. Some wise words there about basic labor market economics. You think long and hard. Do you want real world advice or just want to be lied to? Which is going to benefit you in the long run.

Krista Leighanne Milburn

September 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just doing my part to help employ a young unemployed female.

The Trillion Dollar Liberal Arts Scam

September 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When you're done hating the bankers, perhaps you youth can start hating your professors.

Because, of course, you're all intelligent and independent-minded and shit.

Diminishing Returns on Human Effort

September 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I contend it is human nature to excel and progress.

The reason is simple - survival. It is hard-wired into people's brains to survive and until the very recent (in terms of human history) advent and expansion of capitalism and free markets, which made things we used to strive for (food, shelter, safety, health) plentiful, human existence was harsh, cruel and short. Because of this unpleasant existence, humans had constant incentive to improve, secure, and progress, and therefore that hard wiring is unlikely to disappear any time soon.

This has pros and cons.

Because of this relentless advancement we have made great strides in science, technology, and medicine. We are without a doubt the most advanced creatures on the planet, and likely the universe. And the problems of our poorest are blessings the richest would kill to have only a short 1,000 years ago.

But the cons come in when this unstoppable force and desire to advance and progress runs into the unnecessary and unneeded barriers society constructs for political purposes to regulate and restrict itself. This then causes great confusion and frustration in people as they try to advance, but society's institutions just won't let them.

Take for example the current labor market.

There is no shortage of labor, let alone educated labor. The urge to constantly progress and advance is so strong people are forcing themselves to jump through insane hoops required by employers, getting MBA's, master's, and any number of credentials to put as many acronyms on their resume. There are no jobs, of course (once again for stupid political reasons society self-forces on itself), so this massive energy of human intention sits unused. But this energy actually doesn't sit unused. Akin to the law of physics, this energy has to go somewhere, and it does.

It pushes the frontiers of business and employment to psychotic and petty levels.

Employers no longer care whether you can do the job (which, when jobs were plentiful was all that mattered). No, because the economy is weak and the human spirit cannot turn off its hard wiring, there is now a surplus of highly-trained labor. This switches the focus from ability to progressively less and less important, and MORE and MORE PETTY qualifications.

Do you play well in the sandbox?
Do you have a facebook account we disagree with?
What kind of shoes are you wearing?
What is your demeanor?
Did you participate in CSR, diversity and other government sanctioned activities whilst in school?
Take the "Personality Profile Test" to see if you're an ENTJ or an ENTP!

And it doesn't stop with the petty and childish questions of HR.

If lucky enough to be employed in today's economy, you will quickly find out your ability to advance is not how well you do your job, but how well you play ball on the progressively petty antics foisted on you by office politics. Did you donate your time to the local Kiwani's club to hand out business cards? Are you getting your MBA (of course without company sponsorship)? Did you smile when you walked into the office today (not joking, had a former boss point out I wasn't smiling). Are you avoiding the use of apostrophes when writing?

All of this pettiness being a testament to the fact that corporate America has ran out of ideas in that it cannot come up with new industries to employ this excess energy and must diffuse it with psychotic and petty games.

Another example is women's studies.

If there was any low-hanging fruit to flesh out in this newly-formed discipline, it's already been picked. Women, one can argue, were oppressed in society in some manner, and a women's studies department was a natural consequence. But in this already-faux field, whatever genuine advances were to be made, were made very early on. Still, this doesn't prevent millions of ill-reared children from declaring it as a major, and thus, once again, with a surplus of human intention and energy the field must "advance" or "evolve."

A perfect example of how this institution accommodates this is the continually increasing sub-divisions of sexuality. The aforementioned link only covers a fraction of the different sexualities that are out there, but one example that came to mind (and I could not find) was a girl's profile on the internet which cited no less than 5 different sexual orientations she had, the phrases of which used to describe these orientations were DEFINITELY academian in nature. Regardless, the fact "women's studies" has evolved to the point it creates whole new sexual orientations, or to catalogue the most obscure of human phenomenons, shows the institution has run its course and offers nothing of further tangible value to society. But with millions of 20 year old girls, with billions of labor hours, intent on majoring in the field, the "field" must occupy them with worthless make-work somehow, and thus the productivity of their efforts become progressively diminished.

And finally, consider government regulation. The US got along just fine before the EPA, the Department of Energy, and the Department of Education. Laws were set up and established at the state, local and federal levels, and the country managed to become the richest, most powerful nation in the history of the world. But all it took was one "seed generation" of professional activists, bureaucrats, and regulators to increase the code and laws to a strangling amount. Was there a call for regulation in the banking industry? Sure. Was there a call for cleaning up rivers that caught ablaze as companies dumped their waste? Sure. But after 50 years these apparatchiks cannot turn it off. It is human nature to constantly advance and evolve. And so bureaucrats, DNR officials, environemtnalists, and activists are always on the hunt for further regulation and further evils to combat, even if there are no evils or calls for their progressively petty (and destructive) regulation.

There are other instances, but you get the idea.

In every aspect of American life, in every corner of our economy, and in every branch of government human effort is not being used to its fullest potential because those institutions have become corrupted to the point they are no longer productive, and thus there is no economic expenditure or use of said effort. And try as you might, and have the greatest intentions you might, and have the CAPACITY to deliver, it will all be in vain, because in the eyes of the overlords that command these institutions the marginal utility you provide is not via something productive and legitimate, but political and petty.

You could stop the housing bubble from crashing, but you didn't kiss enough ass at the last meeting.

You could build a pipeline and bring thousands of jobs to the oil sands, but that would harm the economy.

You could be that much-needed computer networker we need, but you remind the HR ditz of her previous boyfriend.

You could get your degree in 2 years, but then you wouldn't be forced to employ all those liberal arts doctorates with worthless prereqs.

It won't be until we destroy the petty, pathetic, vile and political incentives that put a cap on our human effort will this human effort translate into economic growth, advancement and prosperity. In the mean time, this effort will remain unused and fester, driving most people insane as they endure another mindless HR interview fill out unnecessary paper work to get approval from the city fight another false law suit by the Sierra Club have to go $250,000 in debt for their MBA, CFA, and doctorate in finance and jump through other completely fucking pointless hoops society has deemed necessary to foist on itself.

Until that point, I suggest you don't bang your head against the wall. I suggest instead you enjoy the decline! It just doesn't pay to play according to society's rules.

Bullets in the Badlands

September 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sounds like a movie, but it's not. Just a "warm fuzzy story" about my exploits in the badlands of South Dakota.

Fun Times With Hyphenated Names

September 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"When I was a young college student, I had a boss at my part-time job who told me that she hadn't changed her name when she got married the first time. She ended up divorced, and when she married her second husband, she opted to change her name. When I wondered why, she said that changing her name was her way of saying OK, I really mean it this time."

Heh heh heh. Ahhh, is there anything better than kicking back, pouring a tall one, lighting up a cigar and watching feminists put bullets through the aortas of their finite lives?

What I truly savor out of all of it, is how they villainize and hate the best thing that can happen to them, and dat be men.

Really, name something better in life. Name something genetically engineered to be complimentary to you, something that is sentience and thus infinitely dynamic. Something that is not a thing, but an engaging human being, and something that is also designed to be all giggity about you.

You can't name it! You can't!

The best thing in life for women is men, and the best thing for men is women.

And while men readily admit this fact and try to capitalize on this opportunity presented to us, feminists throw away the best thing life has to offer to them.

It's just too precious!

My Truck-Driving Son is Better than Your Doctorate in English Kid

September 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because he's employed and not living at home.

The Compendium of Worthwhile Overseas Countries

September 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As the free market thinkers, manosphere, and other independent minded fellows advance, we not only free ourselves from the false premise of "employment in corporate America" and student loans and 30 year mortgages, we also start to look for greener pastures. However, there is no sole source or depository for information about the various pros and cons for various countries we may wish to move to and start anew.

Of course, finding a new place or a "plan B" as it were is starting to come up on various men's minds, especially those on the vanguard of this new line of thought. So much so it is actually the next logical step in their careers/life journey. But before making such a jump, it would be helpful if we had a pot of wisdom about the various pros and cons of different countries.

This question though is problematic because you really do need to visit each country you are curious about maybe moving to, but with 176 countries in the world, the travel costs are prohibitive.

Ergo, I call for a compiling off different mens' various opinions of different countries they have visited. It won't answer questions for everybody, but it may result in at least a list of key contenders, further refining the list of viable candidate countries into a digestible list. I will invariably start compiling a directory for every one's permission.

Poor Unemployed Humanities Professors

September 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Now that their scam is known, they're having trouble getting kids to piss away their money on a worthless degree.

My favorite is that you could actually get degrees in "outdoor pursuits" and "travel, leisure and tourism."

And how much you want to bet the kids stupid enough to major in this stuff claim to be "really independent minded" and "great, smart, intellectuals?"

Hat tip!

Why You Should Never Date Chicks With Horses

September 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Nitrostreak · 2 hours ago

The horrible failings of grammar, sentence structure, and punctuation in this article make me all the happier to NEVER date a man like you.
Any man who doesn't understand horses should avoid women with horses because SHE will have NO interest in YOU, if she knows what's best for her. I'm a 23 year old college student. I have a job, I have life insurance, and I have six horses.
I will never date an idiot like you, and I thank God for that. Maybe the first thing I should say to potential suitors is that I have horses, in order to chase away freaks like you?

1 Reply Share ›

1971creaper → Nitrostreak · an hour ago

Example of batshit crazy; see above.

1 Reply Share ›

I wrote a piece about avoiding, with all of your might, women with horses.

It struck a chord...which means it's completely true.

How the Inanity of Our Political Arguments Prove We're Doomed

September 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Take the horse blinders off, take a step back and follow the ole Captain on this one, because I had to step back myself, wipe the crud from my eyes and see what was really going on.

I was thinking about global warming. Not from a scientific or political perspective, but a psychological one. Namely,

"How dumb are these people not to see it for the scam it is?"

Really? Global warming? Based on computer models that keep failing, constantly get proven wrong, from avowed socialist scientists, and (surprise, surprise) the only solution seems to be higher taxes and more government spending?

But it isn't even the arguments (scientific, political, economic, or logical) that gets me, as much as it is the pure inanity of the topic. It's the fact I have to even debate this in the first place. That there are millions of mindless, conforming humans that actually believe this stuff necessitating my expenditure of calories of energy to address the idiotic and very-religious-like premises of global warming. In other words, the fact we're arguing about something so inane proves there is a larger underlying problem than global warming itself.

Another political issue I can't believe we're arguing - feminism. Not that women should be treated equal and have the same rights as men, etc., but more the current frontier that feminism is pushing. That men and women are INTERCHANGEABLE, and if they're not, THEN THEY BETTER DAMN SHOULD BE!

Ignore the differences in plumbing.
Ignore the differences we enjoy.
Ignore the different aptitudes and weaknesses of both and how they compliment each other and help society advance.

No men and women MUST BE interchangeable to the point we're going to bring them up "genderless." And if you don't agree with that, then you're a (fill in misogynist term here)_____!

Again, it's an inane argument. No sane people should have to argue against it. But its outlandishness is only outdone by the fact society is so mindless that this topic has even attained "debatability" in society. The only thing more outlandish is feminism's recent movement into "fact acceptance."

And finally, the never ending arguing I've had to deal with since roughly the age of 18. Where, in a room of thousands of 20 and 30 somethings over scores of parties, I seem to be the sole mind of reason making the "outrageous" claim that you can't have a society where nobody works. That people need to work to support themselves. That we all can't be elementary school teachers and that the equally inane Keynesianism where we "just move money around and economic growth will magially happen" is bunk. 20 years it's been where I painfully have to stoop down to my adversaries' childish level and explain, be it at a college party, a house party, or just in the company of others, the very simple and adult concept that there's no such thing as a free lunch. That if there are too many parasites and not enough producers, society will collapse.

And in return for my insistence on being the only mature adult in the room I get called every type of "ist" or every kind of condescending ideology (Nazi, Fascist, etc.).

But then something dawned on me, prompted by my increasing misanthropy and cynicism triggered by humans -

Do they really believe it?

For example, does the average impoverished black man really believe his poverty is caused by "whitey" and NOT the illegitimacy rate, the crime, lack of fathers and out of wedlock births in his community?

Does that social worker I'm arguing with REALLY believe we can just move money around, take it from those "evil rich" and all the country's socioloigical problems go away?

Does that environmental activist REALLY believe in global warming and care about the planet?

Or is it just one big-ass red-herring for the Right to chase, waste their efforts and energies debating, foolishly believing these people are dumb enough to believe it, when in reality it's just a front to obscure their ulterior motives of theft and parasitism?

And after thinking about it, I've realized it's both.

It is here, we need to break down the left into two general, but very applicable categories - categories I cannot claim to have come up with, but rather a reader - "Dupes" and "Devils." Both of which populate the left, and both of which explain how these inane political arguments are both a ruse and a legitimate ideology members of the left believe.

The "Dupes" are your mindless, zombies who believe anything they're told. They are the foot soldiers of the left. They never think on their own, they have no critical thinking skills (despite what their professors tell them), they don't care to think through the consequences of their actions or ideology and largely can be persuaded with bumper sticker sound bytes or chants that "sound good to them."

Typically the Dupes are you high school or college students or celebrities. Younger idiotic and wiseless children who, by society, the media, the education system, and the government, have been told they are oh-so-smart and "independent minded" as they all wear the same lame ass skinny jeans, thick rimmed glasses, and magically all have the EXACT same political ideology. But don't think it's just youth or a lack of education. You can have professors, fully indoctrinated into the system that their brain is no longer capable of independent thought. A third generation union worker whose forefathers never let alternative ideas into the family. Or even a politician, completely clueless about the mechanics of economics, governance and statesmanship, and just in politics because their grandaddy was. Regardless of the age, economic or other sociological backgrounds, these people have NEVER thought their ideology through and mindlessly follow it like a radical Muslim or a born again Christian. They not only have no intention of "finding the truth," they are fully incapable of it. And thusly, because of the lack of a truly free mind, they make the perfect "dupe" for any politician willing to abuse them.

Those politicians willing to abuse them are the "Devils." People who fully well know what they're advocating is not feasible, unsustainable, and sometimes just outright wrong and evil, but don't care, because it is for their own personal gain.

The liberal arts professors sucking the tuition-blood out of your child, crippling their financial futures until they're 60, as they charge $400 a credit for their worthless humanities class.

Jesse Jackson race-whoring, blaming all of one group's problems on other groups, permitting no critical thinking, self-inflection, let alone desire to actually help the group he hypocritical claims to be helping.

The limosuine liberal, who wants to avoid a real job at all costs and instead enters politics, advocating the unbeatable policy of taxing a rich minority to buy the votes and love of the middle class and poor majorities. Never once would they ever part with their own money to help the poor, it is only through taking other's money do they advocate such a thing.

Whichever of the many variants of Devils, when you're arguing with them, they know full well they are lying, they are living a lie, they are ruining millions of people's lives, and they don't care. They are the epitome of evil.

Now, regardless of whether you are facing a "Devil" or a "Dupe," libertarians, conservatives and other right sided folk face a problem when attempting to engage them in a debate - neither Devils nor Dupes are capable of being convinced.

First, the Dupes are incapable of being convinced because they, frankly, lack the intellectual capacity for intellectual honesty. The lies they've been told are too kind to their egos and thinking of anything else would hurt their fragile little feelings. They will live a lie and suffer the consequences because it's more important their ego be saved than their lives be enjoyed.

And second, the Devils are also incapable of being convinced, not because they need convincing, but because they already agree with you. They agree with everything you say. Now get them to admit that and give up their racket. They won't because the money is just too good. And so good luck ever convincing a Devil.

So what's a righter-leaning person supposed to do?

Simple - deny their premise right off the bat.

You see, I don't know about you, but I got sick and tired of the 2 hour arguments at college parties where it would go around and around in circles where inevitably they would just say we'd have to agree to disagree. Or where through some spectacularly concocted mental self-rationalizing bullshit, a leftist would say something inane like "well my perception is reality." Or "I don't believe your figures." (both true).

My life is too short for that.

Instead, a much better approach to debating a Dupe (or a Devil) is to immediately call them out on their bullshit.

To a Dupe you say, "you know what, I'm sorry, but I'm not going to debate you. You aren't going to be convinced or persuaded because it's simple - you refuse to. You prefer to believe in your ideology like an unfounded religion and no amount of data or empirical proof I have will convince you. You want to believe a lie which is psychotic and there's nothing I can do to counteract a mental problem."

To a Devil you say, "You're a liar, and you know it. You don't believe the BS you're spewing for one god damned second. And you ain't fooling me."

This will not solve any debates. This will not convince any one to agree with you. But you have to realize one key important thing;

You were never going to solve the debate or convince any one in the first place. It was doomed from the beginning.

But what you DO achieve in calling BS on the premise or calling them out on their intellectual dishonesty is is two things.

In terms of Dupes you DIRECTLY address their real problem - psychological delusion. You say, "No, the real issue is not global warming or whether there are such things as genders, etc., it's that you have such an impaired mind that you actually think this is even debatable. That you have such a psychological problem that I have to stand here and engage you with kid's gloves on actually thinking you believe it's big bad rich people who are holding the world down when in reality you just want an excuse to steal other people's money." This moves the national political debate from arguments that are never going to be solved to arguments as to the sanity of the Dupes.

In terms of the Devils you DIRECTLY address their real problem - they're sociopaths. If there's one thing I love about calling the Devils out on their BS is that you actually do not look like a Dupe yourself. I don't know how many years I've listened to talk radio hosts, WHO SHOULD KNOW BETTER, swallow whole the lies and the premise the Devil's put before them and then argue from such an impossible handicap. The Devil's are LAUGHING their asses off at you. There you go trying to explain, in THEIR TERMS, restricted to their premises, why global warming isn't real, why race relations are better than they claim, how the wage gap is BS, when your only argument should be "you're a liar and a charlatan and you can go to hell. You're abusing the people you portend to be helping and you should be ashamed of yourself."

Of course most talk show hosts, pundits, and conservative media types never grow the balls to accuse leftist Devils of "crusaderism" or evil, which plays wonderfully into their hands as they make idiots of themselves vainly trying to convince them. But perhaps someday, they might actually want to take the kiddie gloves off, dispense with the "my fine colleague from across the aisle" bullshit and start throwing down.

The Financial Advice Bible for Men

September 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings all,

After much debate and pondering I have settled on the next book and what it will be about - it will be the ONE and ONLY guide young men (and women) need to manage their entire financial lives.

Of course it would apply to anybody, but it will be particularly helpful to young men because it is harsh advice (thus I believe most young women will ignore it) and the younger you are the more help this book will provide.

Unlike Enjoy the Decline or "Worthless" however, it's going to take a little more time to write on account "Worthless" was a relatively short book and "Enjoy the Decline" was written while working an insane 16 hour per day, 2 month security stint. And if you have 16 hours per day to sit in a room, you'll churn out books pretty quick too.

Since that is not the case, I'm aiming to have this next book available by Christmas shopping season so you can buy yourself or a loved on this book.

However, the title will not be "The Financial Advice Bible for Men." it's much cooler than that. Just don't want to give it away.

Cpt.

The Captain Opens His Milwaukee Office

September 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Well, technically Lake Peewaukee.

I found some PRIME real estate right on Main Street and the Lake.

The terms were a 2 hour lease where they served me Mexican food and drink. Figured I had to eat anyway so it was nice they included that in the lease. The view from my office was SPECTACULAR as you can see.

And yeah, it was a tough day at the office. I had to read "An Army of Davids" by Glenn Reynolds. Only on chapter 2 and it's already an outstanding book, but will do a better review later. But that aside, yeah, it was a busy day, sitting at a cafe on a beach, reading...but the new office certainly helped.

I mean, I know I'm not as professional and successful as all my previous bosses and colleagues in banking. I mean, they're the professionals in their cubicles and corner offices with that one window maybe with the view of a street. And you know they're also very successful because they have to commute. That right there is the sign of a really serious go-getter, somebody who commutes. Oh, and don't forget, going through audit and investigation via the FDIC and OCC, that is "the" sign of real professionals. No, I guess I'm just a failure at banking who couldn't hack it which is why I get these subpar accommodations and work schedule.

But some day, if I work really hard and make loans to cronies, retards, idiotic businessmen and trophy wives with horse hobby farms, then I'll get that office space right next to the toilet with a view of the atrium!

/> sarcasm

Seriously though, this is just a reminder to all my previous bosses who (I know read) and are stuck in their offices doing mind-numbing bullshit work during a gorgeous summer day.

Well, You Could Always Lose the Weight

September 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

No, no, that would require too much.

Much better to cry, rant, and yell at a guy that though what he said was true, it hurt her feeeeeellinnnnnngssss.

Honest to god. It's true, so don't say it and P.S. - you're mean? And you girls want to be taken seriously and treated as equals? You want the right to have a say an important public, national and international matters?

Let me tell you people out there who like to bury your head in the sand,

Telling the truth is the most noble caring thing a person can do. Especially in the face of backlash. This girl should be THANKING Matt Forney as he is likely the ONLY person who has actually done something tangible to help her instead of lying to her face and enabling her.

Prepper and Precious Metals Shaming Language

September 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I remember getting a comment from somewhere, where the commenter said,

"Oh, yeah, went to his site and saw all this gold and silver stuff, total psycho."

suggesting that I was some kind of doomsday prepper and if you invested in silver or gold you were pejoratively one of "those guys."

However, let us be very clear what this is. This is nothing more than shaming language deployed by one of the many and varied sorts of (typically) leftists groups that either through ignorance or conscious desire want to bring about their ideological dream by shaming others they don't agree with.

We've seen this many times before.

The traditional, conservative christian movement is berating the men in their congregations to "man up" and "marry up" when the quality and caliber of women isn't even enough for secular bachelors to propose.

The mindless everyday people of a democrat variety who get angry when they find out you've gone Galt and aren't going to work your hardest any more. They have and will continue to claim, "Oh, what, poor baby, picking up his toys and going home!" in an attempt to shame you into working more hours at higher tax rates to, basically, support them.

And of course feminists or liberal women who, if any any point in time you disagree with them about...well....anything, will immediately call you "gay" or claim "you can't get any" etc. etc.

For those of us experienced or independent minded, this is Somali pirates challenging the USS Ronald Reagan. But most other people have a default psychological response to feel shame or start questioning why they are doing things, so let me defend precious metals and prepping and explain why it is very wise.

First, anybody remember Katrina? You remember the public service announcement campaign by FEMA and the Feds telling us to have X amount of days of water, have a back up plan, have a back up communications, etc. etc.

Well?

Understand prepping is a wise thing if for any reason else than an emergency. You should, just like you have car insurance, have SOME semblance of a prep plan including a first aid kid, some safety gear, communications gear, a gun, and so forth. Because if an emergency does occur and you are caught out in the open, it will be those same people mocking you for being a prepper that mock you for not being prepared.

Second, investing in gold and silver is not "crazy" nor does it make you "one of those people." Investing in silver and gold is a WISE move that EVERYBODY should do. The reason why is simple - it is an insurance. An insurance against a collapsing currency and a way for you to protect the YEARS of your life you spend building up wealth. And just like health insurance or car insurance, you hope you don't have to use it, but you are happy when a currency collapses that you do have it. To that end.

Third,

No idiotic child, ignorant of basic economics who accuses you of being one of "those people" has ever spent a second of their lives to study something like the above chart. It would get in the way of their cable-TV watching time and distract them from having the education-government-parent complex kiss their ass.

But, perhaps as they sit there with their masters in English, working at McDonald's, they'll have enough time to ponder why they're wrong as they serve you "crazy preppers" your fries.

Enjoy the decline!

When American Women Married Obama and Threw True American Males in the Dust

September 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From Mark:

We seem to have reached a tipping point where future oriented people who engage in long term planning are becoming a minority. Last year 50% of all women who had babies received Medicaid assistance for the births. You have half the population having children they can't even afford. And after these children are born, the mothers are going to need further assistance to raise them. At the same time, the type of men who would pay the taxes to support all this is declining as they decrease in numbers and many of the ones left just "go Galt" as you suggest they do. These are trends that are going to continue to get worse and will lead to a massive economic decline that any rational person should be preparing for.

Again, I cannot emphasize this enough. Women have consistently and (i would contend) unconsciously voted to have the government replace husbands and fathers. The consequences will be utter societal collapse. But until that time comes, it is in men's best interests to just enjoy life, avoid responsibility, work as little as possible, not support the children they bring into the world, and live by the new rules voted in by the socialists - live off the government as much as possible.

This is not an issue of morality, but sanity and self-respect. If women disproportionately keep voting in government and government programs to supplant men, then by all means, accommodate them to the fullest extent.

You are going to tax men more and more as they succeed? Fine we'll scale back our production to keep ourselves at the lowest tax bracket possible. And we can do it because we need only a mere fraction of the consumerism crap women need. You want a battle of attrition sweet heart? We'll win it like the Soviets against the Nazi's!

You are going to ruin the quality and caliber of women via feminism, materialism, and a Big Media ass-kissing-fest, fine, we'll play, but not marry.

You want to make everything "fair" by taking money from the productive, the go-getters and innovators and giving it to the lazy, parasitic, and whiny? Fine, we're going to take vacation instead of putting in the extra couple of hours.

Women better think about the long term economic consequences of their short term, short sighted, and completely emotional voting. Because last I checked it wasn't a bunch of female elementary school teachers keeping the lights on as much as it was male electrical engineers.

Why You Should NEVER Go to Culinary School

September 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Pay attention kids. It's a scam.

Women Are Only Equal…

September 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

until it comes time to pay.

Man, the mental acrobatics displayed are just unreal.

An Army of Davids - Book Review

September 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"An Army of Davids" is a 2006 book from Instapundit founder, Dr. Glenn Reynolds. The general premise is how the internet and technology is revolutionizing the economy to the point the most optimal form of a commercial entity is not the large corporation with the benefits of economies to scale, but rather the individual with the benefits of agility, innovation, tailoring and expediency.

All bias set aside this book is a MUST for every young person out there, and CERTAINLY every person who is self-employed or somehow depends on the internet for their living. Dr. Reynolds does a SPECTACULAR job in explaining the underlying economic and technological changes that explains why many of us are making money on the internet, sitting in cafes instead of cubicles, and telling our Pointy Haired Bosses to shove it. The fact this book was written 7 years ago and nearly EVERYTHING he predicted or contends has come true is even more testament to his insight.

His first few chapters are exemplary in terms of quality, clear and concise writing that conveys a full 4 college courses in economics in a matter of minutes. He also has the desperately needed wit and humor that livens things up in what would otherwise be boring economic and techno-speak literature. Additionally, the author is "human" and "one of us." He is not just a boring law professor in Tennessee, but (unbeknownst to me) a garage band musician with his own record label. In other words you will enjoy reading this book despite the (seemingly) dry topic manner because it is a normal human writing on the other end.

The only major problem I have with the book is that in the last third of the book he unnecessarily delves into an overkill-amount of detail when it comes to technological and biological advances. This distracts from the general premise of the book and leaves the reader a tad confused as to "where is this going?" He talks about nano-technology, the space race between China and the US, and genetic engineering, rarely tying it back to the original premise of the book.

However, if there was a mistake to make, this was it. While it diverges from the main intent of the book, it isn't necessarily uninteresting. Matter of fact, it's VERY interesting. So much so it has prompted me to start looking into stuff myself. That being said it still is a distraction from the main point of the book. He ties it together in the ending two chapters, but you're left feeling you were taken on the "scenic route" to make a point.

In short I STRONGLY recommend this book to every person who:

is young makes money on the internet is looking for guidance hates their boss wants to make money on the internet is unemployed

just wants an explanation about what is happening to the economy

BUT, with one contention - you just read the first half.

The second half of the book I would deem optional, though highly recommended. So if you're busy and just need a bird's eye view of what's going on in our modern day economy, read the first half. But if you have the time and want your mind taken to new heights and intellectual extremes, then I STRONGLY recommend reading all of the book.

You can find it on Amazon in various formats and find Dr. Reynold's website here.

Dealing With Misleading Job Descriptions

September 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

All jobs suck. And most employers will lie on their job descriptions.

Not A Lot of Nose-Pierced Investment Bankers

September 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Been meaning to write about this, but Vox Day already did a decent enough job.

I will add that when I ordered my Subway sandwich last night I was physically repulsed by the cherry-red haired, nose pierced, lip pierced, brow pierced, disk-earring wearing pile of biomass that somewhat resembled a female human. No doubt she was informed how special she was, how intelligent she was, and how she would become a great poet or whatever...as she makes my sandwich.

I'm just saying you don't see a lot of investment bankers with nose piercings.

No Kid Hungry

September 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

just saw a commercial for for "No Kid Hungry." That's funny because:

1. I thought hunger has been eliminated in the United States.
2. The poor/lower income kids are actually obese.

How much you want to bet "No Kid Hungry" is just a bunch of socialist lefties looking to score some charity money so they can avoid jobs that require rigor, math and production.

Heck, they even have a "share your SNAP story" to further advocate dependence and parasitism.

Let's be clear where your money goes when you donate to such a faux-shell leftist "charity" organization.

It doesn't go to the kids. It goes to the scum who abuse children as a means to enrich themselves.

God I'm sick of such scum.

(This post will be immediately retracted when child hunger is ACTUALLY ELIMINATED and they close shop and move onto more productive activities...but something tells me the children will "always" be hungry. Won't they?)

The 12 Year Problem Leftists Face

September 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've said it before and I'll say it again.

Confiscate all the wealth of those evil rich people, and the longest you'll last is 12 years before the money runs out.

This optimistically assumes the rich can liquidate their wealth immediately, turning it into cash to pay the parasitic classes. It also assumes there are enough buyers willing to part with roughly $50 trillion immediately to purchase said assets. It also optimistically assumes prices would maintain themselves in such a sell-off and INSANELY assumes some idiots would want to buy such assets when it's obvious the US no longer desires to protect property rights.

It's because of this simple math and economic logic, I love it when somebody further eviscerates the whiny, sniveling, and lazy classes who think they are somehow "oppressed" and therefore "entitled" to other people's lives in the form of their money. Not because the man points out reality, but because it's just further proof that no matter how far socialism succeeds in this country, in the end, they simply can't win. There's too many lazy people and not enough rich people's money to even boost them above $50,000 per year in GDP per capita. Socialists, liberal arts students, democrats, and other assorted delusionals think there's a vat of $200 trillion dollars that would result in everybody making $670,000 per year...if we only just spread it around.

Sorry people. There isn't enough money. It's going to boil down to you to help yourself...that is unless you're OK with just $50,000 per year...but oh, that's right. You're entitled to more I bet.

The Trader Joe's Blues

September 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Happy day fellas!

Trader Joe's workers get to suffer the consequences for their leftists voting!

Hell of a way to start the day!

Robot Replaces English Teachers

September 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Oh, this is just too precious.

Remember, if you're planning on going to school or you are sending your kid to school, ensure they pick the right degree first. Otherwise, it really is just a waste of money. Your choice, $50,000 in tuition or $12.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

September 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Let's do some math kids!

At what age did the fornication begin?

Oh, you democrats and the wonderfully dependent classes you have built.

Why You Should Always Screw Over a Corporation

September 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you get the chance.

Why the Manosphere and Socialism are Mutually Exclusive

September 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A young man on the RooshV Forum had posted a question about resources that would help him determine his political orientation. Obviously a younger fellow and not fully versed in politics, economics, and ideology, he was noble in that he was at least open minded and wanted to find out for himself what his political leanings were and NOT let the government-education matrix tell him he was a socialist.

However, I found that kind of funny because if you think about it being a real man or a Manosphere adherent and being a socialist/leftist/democrat are pretty much mutually exclusive.

If you look at what men stand for (and the themes that are being written about in the Manosphere) they are largely traits of that of conservatives or libertarians.

Independence.
Freedom.
Self Reliance.
Production.
Wealth/enriching oneself.
Success.
Competition.
Excellence.
Integrity.
Honor.
Physical health

If you look at our presumed opposite number (feminists or women in general) they write about/champion:

Dependence
Government assistance/reliance
Commune
Sharing
Equality in opportunity AND outcomes
"Fairness"
Sameness
Preventing hurt feelings by the elimination of success
The elimination of concepts like "best" or "better"

Fat acceptance

Now we can debate about the details, but frankly, it cannot be any more stark and any more clear.

Men champion ideologies themed around capitalism/conservative/libertarianism/freedom/the individual

Women champion ideologies themed around socialism/democrat/dependency/commune.

But there are many insightful ramifications for this "boiling down" of the two spheres' ideologies.

It goes a long way in explaining why women tend to vote democrat and men, republican. It brings up good questions about males vs. females aptitudes in logic and math versus emotions and feelings. It explains clearly how women view the government as a viable substitute for men. It even brings up some interesting psychological or sanity issues (in the case of fat acceptance). But if there's one thing it does point out, especially for a young man, it's that real men aren't socialists. Real men aren't democrats. Real men aren't egalitarians. Real men aren't communists.

Real men are freedom-loving individualists who want to achieve excellence.

The reason I bring this up is because there are a fair amount of young men who think they are democrat, discover the Manosphere, love what it has to say about courtship and dating, but then get confused (or even angry) when they find the political aspects of the Manosphere to be conservative or libertarian in nature. I imagine this causes some confusion where a young man would say, "Wow, I really dig this stuff on dating and girls, but WTF is with this capitalist, nazi, GW, racist, BS? I hate the banks, maaaan!"

So let me break this down to explain why there seems to be this disconnect.

1. You are too young and ill-read to know the history and economics behind the current political spectrum to be able to accurately judge and assess the correct political ideology. This is not a slam on you young men, but a correct assessment AND YOU KNOW IT. Have you studied the federal budget? Have you studied Keynesian vs. Classical economics? Of course you haven't. But you HAVE STUDIED GIRLS. The only reason you find the observations of the Manosphere spot on about women IS BECAUSE YOU HAVE AN INTEREST IN WOMEN. Most 20 soemthing men have no interest in economics or politics. It's time you do your civic duty and un-ignorantize yourself about government finances, budgets, and economics.

2. The stuff you like about "dating" and "courting" and "girls" and "sex" derives from the exact same logic, reality, and truth that most men in the Manosphere derive their political ideology from. The common thread between them is one simple thing - "truth." Real men really don't have an opinion as much as they merely want to know what the truth is and then abide by it, even taking advantage of it to advance themselves.

Do women like caring sensitive men? No
Do women like strong, brutish men? Yes

Conclusion - hit the gym

The same cold, steely logic applies to all aspects of life.

Will majoring in poetry help me get a job? No.
Will majoring in electrical engineering get me a job? Yes.

Conclusion - major in engineering despite me wanted to be a poet.

Will lying around collecting a government check advance society or improve myself? No.
Will lower taxes and less government spending prompt people to get off their ass and work? Yes.

Conclusion - vote republican.

Women, on the other hand (particularly feminists) do the opposite. They find out what the truth is and try to change it or villainize it:

Will majoring in women's studies get me a job? No.

THAT'S BECAUSE SOCIETY IS SEXISTS AND PATRIARCHICAL!!!! I NEED GOVERNMENT MONEY!

Conclusion - vote democrat.

Will being fat and having short hair attract me a man? No.

THAT'S BECAUSE MEN ARE INTIMIDATED BY A REAL OR STRONG WOMAN!!!!! I NEED IVF!!!

Conclusion - vote democrat

Will running trillion dollar deficits ultimately destroy the US dollar and our economy? Yes.

HOW DARE YOU CRITICIZE OBAMA YOU RACIST!!!!

Conclusion - marry Barack Obama vicariously.

The choice is really up to you - do you live in reality or futilely fight against it?

3. Being a man it is in your nature to be conservative/libertarian/individualistic. as time goes on and you become more and more informed about government, politics, economics, and budgets, you will start to realize the BS you were fed in K-12 and college was precisely that. BS. Unless you have high estrogen levels in your system, your DNA and genetic programming will take over your social brainwashing, driving you to succeed, achieve and excel as well as maximize your freedom.

We could go on, but the truth is I am not trying to convince you. I kind of like keeping the Manosphere stuff separate from the political stuff, and I truly believe it is up to the individual to come to their own conclusions about their political beliefs. What I am trying to do, however, is explain to you the differences between the Manosphere's and feminists' political ideologies so that you can make a more informed decision on your own as well as clear up any confusion as to why the Manosphere seems to have so many republicans, conservatives, libertarians, etc.

Besides, the truth is, I don't have to lift a finger to convince you. If at any time you want to be a liberal man, go ahead.

Most real men are anything but.

U.S.
U.S.

An MBA Gets His Head Out of His Ass

September 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A cozy warm story we can all enjoy

How Old Liberals Eat Their Young

September 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will forever be amazed how young liberals don't realize they're getting screwed over.

Perhaps the video can go viral and wake them up.

Amanda Lickers and Anna Shireman-Grabowski

September 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Two spoiled children, crusading because they're bored.

Again, leftists hate America.

And again, does anything good come from hyphenated names?

All the House You'll Ever Need

September 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

After battling a summer cold for the past week I managed to get the best of it to the point I could do my regular run again of 6 miles. This run of course a bit more full of mucus as I coughed the last vestiges of green phlegm vacationing in my throat, but it was back to my regular schedule at my regular route.

My regular route is at "The Lakes" in Minneapolis. "The Lakes" refers to a group of 4 lakes within the city limits that have immaculately groomed trails, trees, and mansions of old-money fame (Pillsburys, Daytons, Cargills, etc.). I've enjoyed running around these lakes for the past 20 years, fancying in my youth someday I might be able to buy one of those houses.

My favorite house, however, is this one. An old Italian villa that if I ever had the money I would buy it.

Or, at least that's what I thought when I was 18 and first saw it. For now that I've doubled in age since first laying eyes on that house and dreaming that if I worked hard, such a house would be within my reach, my experience and wisdom has told me that such a house is the last thing I would want.

First, unless you have 10 children, a wife, and heck, staff and a mistress or two, the house is just not practical for your average bachelor, let alone family. You'll have tons of unused rooms and unless you have a ton of hobbies (telescopes, music, painting, etc.) they'll remain that way - unused. Heck, in my window-washing days I had seen the insides of enough mansions to realize most rooms, if even dedicated to "telescopes" or "piano rooms" are rarely used, essentially turning them into insanely expensive storage for insanely expensive, rarely practiced hobbies.

Second, the property taxes. I tutored a rather well-to-do woman who was getting her MBA. The property taxes ALONE on her house was $16,000 per year. That was more than I paid ON MY ENTIRE MORTGAGE per year. And this house, while very nice, was NO WHERE NEAR as luxurious as my Italian villa above. For that amount of money not only can you afford another entire house, but you could travel the world, staying in different places, having a much more interesting and adventuresome life.

Third, on a related note, property taxes again. Minneapolis is notorious for jacking up their property taxes at a rate 4 times that of inflation. My humble duplex I once owned was making me money until my property taxes went from $900 per year to $3,600 in less than a decade, making it no longer profitable AND A RISK TO EVEN OWN. In other words, it's not even an issue as to whether the property taxes are "high," it's an issue akin to nationalization or Cuba. Cities in major metro areas are headed up by socialists. And while they may not take the deed to your house from you, they'll just tax it to the point they've effectively confiscated it anyway, and now you are paying exorbitant rent to have the "privilege" to live in Minneapolis. In short that Italian villa would be nothing but a HUGE liability in that the city would attach such property taxes it becomes a debt to the city, not an asset to the individual.

Fourth, cleaning and heating and maintenance.

I know, I know. If you had the money to afford that house, you'd outsource the maintenance of the place and not worry about the heat bill, but I am talking from the standpoint of normal people who are looking from the outside, "dreaming" of what it would be like to own that house.

When you put this altogether, the house is very much like a hot trophy wife - pretty to look at, but not worth owning.

This is the house you want:

This house was for sale near a buddy's of mine. It is not flashy, it is not luxurious, but for your average bachelor or couple, this is all the house you'll ever need. It's cheap, it's small, it's easy to maintain and clean, and the city will never jack up the taxes on it to the point it loses it's value, and you will save money over the long haul in rent. And even if the city did "municipalize" it, in the grand scheme of things, it's not that big of a loss because it can't become that big of a liability.

Of course, it's not as luxurious or prestigious as my Italian villa, but that is what I'm trying to get you to see past. That's ALL the Italian villa is. It's a pain in the ass AND a risk otherwise. In short, what I am trying to do is spare you the longing, envy, desire and pain I wasted countless calories of energy on as I ran past that and other luxury houses for the past 20 years. Yes, you may have your favorite house or houses, but unless you are filthy rich, there is no point yearning or sighing heavily to own such a house because if your did, YOU'D LIKELY REGRET IT.

So do what I do now every time I run past this or a home I really like a lot - look at it and enjoy its architectural beauty. Because, once again, like a trophy wife, its visual beauty is usually the best thing about it. And you can enjoy that for free.

You Can Have It All

September 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just as I can have Jennifer Aniston, my own personal P-51 fighter plane, a successful career, a meaningful home life, riches, immortality, and immunity to the common cold.

You go girl.

The rest of us will be watching with a cigar and a scotch in a lawn chair enjoying the decline in the meantime.

The Captain Crashes a 20 Year High School Reunion

September 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

talks about how he doesn't give advice away for free...

discusses the 1960's shows "Combat!" and "12 O'Clock High"...

how Gen X hasn't matured an ounce since 1991 and make lousy bosses...

how he discovered where "divorce is made" in the suburbs...

and more!

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Fatherhood.gov

September 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I just saw a PSA for "Fatherhood.gov"

I want you to let that one sink in.

Is it sinking?

Still sinking???

Good, let us commence.

First, I know the intention of the site is good. It is promoting fathers. No problem there. BUt I cannot help but realize how the website is a contradiction.

Fatherhood.gov.

The "fatherhood" and "gov" are antithetical to each other. The government should not be the father. The government should have no role in fatherhood. But apparently men are just "so bad at fathering" the government needs to step in. It's, in economic parlance, a example of "market failure" and the government needs to step in.

This is of course a testament to the genuinely crappy fathers out there, or the complete lack of them. Whether the fathers ARE genuinely crappy OR the system has forced them to be absent OR the mothers chose poorly, it has come to this folks. The government now needs to step in and tell us how to be good fathers.

Second, who is the federal government kidding? If the federal government was REALLY concerned about the importance of fathers it would immediately relinquish it's role as "substitute father," cut off WIC, EBT, and refocus the attention on the individual and family, and ultimately the father as the head of the household. The federal government would get out of the business of being a father and husband to single moms forcing women (and men) to think long and hard about bringing children into the world as they would suffer the full economic consequences of having children they can't afford. And the federal government would lower taxes so parents would have more money to afford either a stay at home dad or mom. Of course, millions of union government workers rely on the fact parenting has been outsourced to the state, and don't give a rats ass about the family, fatherhood, mothers or the children, rendering "Fatherhood.gov" a marketing gimmick.

Third, it's too late, the federal government is the "ultimate alpha male." Limitless funds, couldn't care less what the woman does, won't hold her up to standards, and will always pay. No man can compete against the federal government. He has not the funds, the patience, nor the ability to be that kind of provider. Worse, you have roughly three, maybe even four generations now of single moms relying on the government as surrogate husband and father and they're accustomed to it, even preferring it over a real flesh and blood man. It's laughable the government is now calling on men to become participatory fathers when the government kicked them out of being the head of the household.

Enjoy that decline.

"Participation Society"

September 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

huh...who would've guessed.

You mean we just can't all lie around, collecting government checks, majoring in art, expecting Obama to give us government jobs as "site interpreters" in the National Parks system????

You mean, shit actually has to get done and be produced?

I though we could have an entirely self-sufficent economy on elementary school teachers, social workers, university professors, professional activisists and politicians.

I mean, the Chinese would slave away for the rest of the world and produce the shit we really need, right?

The older I get, the more I realize just what childish, immature, and idiotic amoebas liberals really are, and RUE how much intellectual credit I gave them in my youth. I have known DOGS more honest and intelligent than most liberals. And that's not BS. They at least have logic.

We Should All Go On Welfare

September 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I make the argument that we should not just go Galt, but go full parasite on Kerry Lutz's show. Very interesting conversation.

summarized succinctly by somebody else, therefore saving me the time to work on the new book.

Joe Friday's Linkage

September 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'll say it again for the cheap seats - teachers become teachers NOT for anything as noble as the children, but because it's an easy job, a part time job, and the training avoids math at all costs. Don't be surprised if the kids are hurt.

Girls like boys. You can fight that, but you'll probably end up angry in the end.

Turmoil in the Middle East and how it affects precious metals.

But what will all those low end country bars do to scam you out of a $5 ATM fee when they say, "Sorry, we don't take credit cards, but there's an ATM right there!!!!!"

New podcast - FTM Daily

The fact the president of the United States, no matter who he is or whether you agree with him, has resorted to saying such a blatant half truth and lie is a testament to just how far we've decayed as a society. The only thing more pathetic than that, is that people will actually listen to him and believe him.

Fractional Reserve Teaspoons.

Women don't dress up for men. They dress up to compete against other women. BUT WE DIDN'T NEED A BLEEPING STUDY TO TELL US THAT!!!

And finally, the death of grandmothers. I'm thankful mine is a class act all the way.

Not Enough Economic Growth to Go Around

September 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Since it is forced discipline and regimen month, I am up. And one of the annoying nagging things in the back of my head was this score of posts and economic ideas I've had that I just plan didn't have the waking hours to attend to previously. But now since "we work until there is no more work to be done or we fall asleep trying" I'm knocking this one off the "to do list."

Follow me in on this because it takes a little bit of explaining.

All standards of living comes from economic growth. And in the ideal world the economy would be growing faster than the population. This excess growth would result in higher GDP's per capita or higher "wealth." However, it is not the entire population that produces the economy growth. You have children and retirees and, don't forget people who just don't want to work god bless 'em! So you look at the "labor force" which are those "willing and able" to work whether employed or not.

However, I was a bit cynical. I believe if it weren't for women entering the labor force, there would be fewer and fewer abled bodied people working as a percent of the total (which is true). Also, women are also leaving the labor force, resulting in a very quick drop in the labor force participation rate since this Great Recession began. So to simplify things (as well as account for laziness) I dispensed with the concept of "labor force participation" and just looked at "working age population" i.e.-the people who should be working in relation to the amount of economic growth.

In short, I wanted to see if the economy was growing at a rate faster than the employable population and if so;

GOOD! Because that means higher wages and higher standards of living and if not

BAD!!! Because that means stagnating or decreasing standards of living and wages.

Thus the "GDP Minus Working Age Population Growth Rate Premium."

In short I took the annual growth rate of the economy and subtracted out from that the growth rate in the working age population. But because economic growth is chaotic, I did my patented, "Let's smooth things out over a rolling 10 year average." The results were thus:

It's pretty much what I expected. From the 50's to the 60's (when America was evil and bad) the economy grew 3 full percentage points faster than the working age population. This then tanked with the oil embargoes and ensuing Volker Recession, but recovered to a full 2 percentage point premium for the next 27 or so years, before it tanked during the Great Recession.

There really isn't much to say that we don't already know intuitively. The economy is not growing enough to provide enough jobs for everybody, let alone increase the country's standards of living. And it won't be until the private sector (where all jobs, production and wealth comes from) is reinvigorated will we recoup (though the data only goes up to 2012, I would love to see 2013 and 2014 with Obamacare in place).

The real debate is whether this makes people on the left happy that they've knocked the world's former greatest down to its knees or whether they're so ignorant about economics that they would never see, let alone understand the above chart.

Factories or Office Buildings?

September 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

People say that China has a bubble and will collapse, but after the collapse, which would affect the West just as bad, who is more poised to come back? Those with the factories or those with hollowed-out office buildings? The East will surpass us while we busy ourselves trying to be musicians, foodies, and Vine celebrities. I don't wish bad on the West, but I can't think of a people that deserves more to fall.

You mean the legions of HR and social workers all with their masters degrees AREN"T going to pay off our national debt? Heh, shows what happens when microbiologists don't study Keynesian economics!

It Is Men Who Determine What Is Beautiful in Women

September 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm going to say it again for the cheap seats.

Men determine what is beautiful in women.

Just as it is women that determine what is "hot" or "sexy" in men.

The key issue seems to be that men accept this binary reality whereas women (primarily in the form of reality denying feminists) don't. They wish to change it.

My counter-argument is simple:

Good luck.

You see, barring the 1-3% of the non-straight population, it effectively is a binary relationship men and women have. And "beauty" or "attractiveness" is ultimately determined by the opposite sex.

You can lie to yourself and tell yourself that all women are "beautiful" but you are merely changing the definition of "beauty" to fit your definition which requires less rigor, effort, self-control, and discipline. In order to be beautiful you need to be appealing, by definition, to the opposite sex.

But perhaps we could approach it from another way. Think of the word, "attractive." Well that implies "attraction" which means there are two entities involved. You are attracted to one person, just as another person is attracted to you. It's implication is damn well near the law of gravity that two bodies will have a gravitational, or in human's case, sexual pull towards one another. Ergo, to claim you don't need anybody else to think you're attractive of beautiful, that you on your own little lonesome are "beautiful merely because you exist," implies there are no other entities providing a gravitational or "sexual" pull.

Which only means one thing:

You're a metaphorical sexual black hole collapsing on itself and only attracted towards itself.

A description most apt to most feminists.

(oh, I'm sorry, was all that physics and math talk above most Masters in Women's Studies' heads?)

What is Hispanic?

September 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Was always a bit confused on Latino vs. Hispanic.

But now, thanks to my buddy Silvio Canto, we don't have to be confused no more!

It Isn't Because "You're Black"

September 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Some wisdom we can all benefit from.

Stay Frosty Boys

September 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Stay the freak frosty.

The Clarey Podcast

September 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Welcome to the Podcast Archives! Take the Captain with you in the car, on a flight, or during a run!

As of 8-15-14 I've moved the podcast archive to Podomatic. You can find all the new episodes here. The episodes below are hosted on Box.com for free, but have limited bandwidth and may not be available for download.

8-14-14 The Clarey Podcast 60

In this episode of The Clarey Podcast Aaron is in Seattle where he and his friend discuss;

Cappy's aggressive driving
Idiots who stand in line for 2 hours to get coffee at the original Starbucks Ruining his reputation by helping a kid

and

Cappy's dream of being airdropped into the Minnesota State fair armed with tasers where he goes Wolverine on a tasing rampage

8-4-14 The Clarey Podcast 57

Two funny jokes,
my awesome grandma
blaming the border problem and lack of US sovereignty of females voting democrat
The Royal Order of the Water Buffaloes
The Mecca of Grunge and Hipsters (Uptown in Minneapolis) has officially been taken over by frat boys

And more!

7-28-14 The Clarey Podcast 56

Forcing yourself to take time off
18 months not knowing you had a dishwasher
50 shades of gray the movie
Feminists invade comic-con
The bar Aaron could never attend closes
And hands down the BEST RIPPING APART of a female troll who insists she deserves children without a husband.

7-21-14 The Clarey Podcast 55

Getting fired for your political views
Why Laughlin, Nevada is the future of America
An interview with The Great Matt Baldoni
Striving to succeed as a self employed individual

7-14-14 The Clarey Podcast 54

Cheering on the demise of the US
Fan mail
Enjoying the misery of others
HR ladies can't do math
The girl Aaron loathes the most and how she's now outsourced the upbringing of her children to day care
Crying Brazilians
Argentina's default

and MORE!

7-7-14 The Clarey Podcast 53

How nice destroys countries, a motorcycle ride to the Bakken, auctioning off my ex gf's tits,
ladies, ENOUGH WITH THE MAXI DRESSES
"I don't live my life for men," pregnant isn't beautiful,
neither are tats,
Phil and his dog living the American dream, hairy armpits for extra credit

and MORE!

6-23-14 The Clarey Podcast 52

Debating about whether to take the crotch rocket to the Bakken Oil Field
The problems you're going to have with success
When male friends of different races use racial epitaphs to show affection
Listener e-mail "how will the US collapse?"
Cappy's trouble with tornado chasing.

6-16-14 The Clarey Podcast 51

Advanced apologies from the road because I was driving to visit my dad for father's day. So if you're against this podcast you're against father's day and you're evil and hate all fathers.

No, actually, you aren't. You just don't like marginal audio quality.

Still, in this latest podcast:

How the Mighty Morphin POwer Rangers are Creepy
How the National Park Rangers in Glacier National Park are Hippie Nazi's you can ignore
Not regretting having children
And the amazing absence of black people in horse racing

AND MORE!

in this totally non-racist, non-horse-a-phobic, non-Might-Morphins-Power-Ranger-Anti-Pedophiliac episode of The Clarey Podcast!

6-3-14 The Clarey Podcast 50

Post Vegas sickness and weakness,
MBA professors faking their intelligence in Hungary,
Defending the online IQ test,
Realizing you are above average,
and a horrible price is paid for a lack of masculine men in society.

and MORE!

5-15-14 The Clarey Podcast 49

Hoping Aurini and Forney don't drink too much before we hike in 92 degree weather
How the Captain just wants a small trailer to live in during winter in Arizona...with his mistress
"Troll of the Weak!"
There is no merit unto college itself
Your mind can't grow when arguing with a leftist
Americans, especially college students, are stupid enough to swallow whole "Privilege 101"

and MORE!

In this episode of The Clarey Podcast!

5-12-14 The Clarey Podcast 48

The jazz scene in the Twin Cities
The one black girl I dated
When your parents violate your right to self-determination
How bad could prison be if you had internet

and MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

4-29-14 The Clarey Podcast 47

Aaron tells is "Hippie Chick With a Staph Infection in Idaho" story,
The Mandatory decade all college students are condemned to wander in the desert
Aaron doesn't understand "Tinder," Responds to the "live in your mother's basement" accusations,
and
Asks, given Dartmouth's recent caving to an spoiled brat college student, if college is for education or indoctrination.

AND MORE!

in this episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Language warning.

4-8-14 The Clarey Podcast 46

A "from the field podcast" that includes:

The Captain's Las Vegas Stripper Story
the Born Again Christian/Churchianity version of "Jesus Loves Me This I Know" why Aaron and his brother are ending the Clarey line forever
the saddest stripper in the world
and reminiscing about Grandpa and what the 50's must have been like.

4-1-14 The Clarey Podcast 45

The increasing number of idiots in our military
Cavarrici jeans, Vail, Vanilla Ice concerts and other things douchey rich kids consumed in the late 80's, and why every man needs to go out west

3-25-14 The Clarey Podcast 44

Divorcing women with horses, My Little Pony, HR diversity broads realize they need math, and MORE!

3-18-14 The Clarey Podcast 43

An all female company goes belly up, how friends who abandon their friends once they start dating somebody should pay a tax when the break up and sheepishly want to come back into the gang, Crimean politics and Russia, and how the only source of pride for kids today is "college."

3-13-14 The Clarey Podcast 42

A podcast from the field as Aaron got called into work. Aaron talks about South Park the Stick of Truth, how you can't force yourself to go to sleep, do cats arrogantly ignore god like they do people when they go to Kitty Heaven, wonders who to cheer for in the Ukrainian affair, and says you deserve to get invaded if you only have 6,000 combat ready troops.

3-5-14 The Clarey Podcast 41

Why Senator Murphy looks like he has kids in the basement,
How there's ALWAYS an excuse to eat and not work out,
A movie review of "3 Days to Kill"
Why Connecticut gun owners should refuse to comply with the new gun registration law,

and MORE

in this episode of The Clarey Podcast!

2-28-14 The Clarey Podcast 40

Is there such a thing as a Vietnamese Bar? How the government, media, and education industry abuse, use, and destroy the lives of women, why you should pay people to do your homework, European vs. American liberalism, how to bet liberal chicks to get them in bed.

2-18-14 The Clarey Podcast 40

In this episode I discuss how I will be going "curse free" for a week as a request from several people to see if it boosts readership. I also delve into why people curse, why it's good to have hate and anger, and opine how cushy life must be for people who don't curse. Also, a review of The Lego Movie which leads to a plea for adults to not forget what it was like to be a child.

2-11-14 The Clarey Podcast 39

Minnesota cold, wood management, how feminism replicates a virus or a cancer, "MyRA's" and a fan letter from Romania and MORE in this episode of The Clarey Podcast

2-3-14 The Clarey Podcast 38

Name one problem the left has ever solved
Why you should never buy GTAV for 360
Why if blacks listened to this podcast the democrats would never gain political office again
The sad case of indians.
Why it's now perfectly moral to pay other people to do your homework
Why Superbowl 48 was the gayest superbowl ever
How younger, hotter, minority women are scaring the crap out of their 30-40 something American counterparts.

1-16-14 The Clarey Podcast 37

In this latest episode the Captain talks about how the younger generation deserves what it gets and how their ego's override reality...to their detriment.

He also talks about how women watch the dumbest shit on television, and bar sports, men can't hold a candle to they crap they watch.

He then also delves into how there's a wave of feminist judges entering the legal system that care more about socialism and feminism than meting out justice.

AND MORE!

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!
12-23-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 35

This episode we talk about how truly free people do not want to be pestered about scheduling and details, especially things 2 months in advance. We also talk about how

Matt Forney and Erin McCarthy are at each other's throats now, but will likely hook up and get married and make muchas smoochas! There is some miscellany of discussion about how old people just don't try to drive good anymore, and a tirade against how Kwanzaa is not a real holiday and never will be!

12-13-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 34

Two articles from the middle of nowhere Wisconsin
How buying property in big liberal cities is like buying into a large and expensive HOA
Why my friends are all depressed, some suicidal
Why socialism doesn't even warrant discussion
Has ANY charity or non-profit solve the problem it claims

AND MORE!

on this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

12-3-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 33

Podcasting on the road (literally), Aaron asks why anybody lives where there's snow and liberals, tells the sad story about how the only memento he has from his childhood is a 1970 Hoover vacuum, explains why there is no longer any shame in collecting a government check, gives a helluva plug for Ranger Self Defense, and finishes off with a MANDATORY rant about racism and how the left has just destroyed people of color.

11-19-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 32

Aaron wants Exxon Mobil to put him in charge of their CSR department, he calculates that teen moms could breed 6 generations, making them great great great grandparents before they die, talks about being a misanthrope (look it up), and explains what you should get people for Christmas.

11-13-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 31

Aaron updates us on the latest "Racist Running Game" bout, advises a reader how to enjoy the misery that most welfare recipients endure, talks about the "Lost Jewish Bar of St. Louis Park," and tells some stories about different bars he visited out west.

11-4-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 30

Aaron talks about how all the generations, bar the WWII generation, pretty much suck. How political correctness prevents younger generations from identifying and solving problems. He's amazed how women were sold on the idea that "work is great," and then celebrates as a NY Times article cites a decrease in the number of students majoring in the liberal arts.

10-25-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 29

Aaron wonders if the children of liberals will ever visit their parents in the nursing home given how bad they screwed up the country, wonders if leftists are capable of admitting 1/3rd of the country is collecting a check, finally figures out why he hates people who wait in line (they're SWPL's!), theorizes if Chick-a-Fillet will ever live up to the hype, and explains why cutting and hauling wood is manly.

10-9-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 28

Aaron talks about how good conversation is better than a sports car, what drawbacks lie ahead for people who advance to the frontier of individualism and minimalism, trying to find a belt, and a screed against head phones.

10-1-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 27

Aaron explains how when there is no future, no jobs, no quality members of the opposite sex for mates, and housing is now a liability, then there is nothing leftists, liberals, commies and socialists can do to shut us up or shut us down. Plus he takes some e-mails and talks about Bill O'Reilly's new book and "female chick porn."

9-24-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 26

Aaron explains to the youth why home ownership is a losing proposition, why you should appreciate self-employment if you can get it, how to torture HR with questions as stupid as they ones they ask you, and a mess of general tomfoolery to prove more entertaining and intellectually stimulating than most other podcasts.

9-17-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 25

Aaron talks about how he doesn't give advice away for free, discusses the 1960's shows "Combat!" and "12 O'Clock High," how Gen X hasn't matured an ounce since 1991 and make lousy bosses, how he discovered where "divorce is made" in the suburbs and more!

9-2-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 24

Aaron talks about how Gen X is the shittiest generation of parents ever, how it's GREAT to be in shape when you run into an ex that has let herself go, why psychologists make up new acronyms to excuse bad parenting, the key to good podcasting, how he set the kid straight, and other great tirades!

8-25-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 23

Aaron talks about World War Z and how the actor who portrayed a zombie did such excellent acting, he deserves an academy award. He also talks about how real men don't let their wives force them to see "The Butler" and pontificates about how men are to blame for letting women decay to such a point. He then manages to link malaria, a red head he dated once, "The Great Raid," guns at schools, and tonic water. And finally, eviscerates parents who let their kids major in the liberal arts, comparing them to parents of the racist thugs who murder people because they're bored.

8-4-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 21

Aaron tells his "Sex Ed in the Lutheran Parochial School" story, how preacher's kids end up having sex in the 7th grade, gives a shout out to his buddy that recently passed away (Big Bill), and makes a bet with himself to see just how good he is at sizing people up with prejudgement, cynicism, and a general distrust of the average human being.

7-31-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 20

The Captain talks about how "back to school sales" should be banned during summer, the "skirt chaser 5k," how night clubs are no longer viable places to pick up chicks, hating Americans who hate America, and more!

7-21-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 19

The Captain does a "pitch podcast" from the field as he makes his travels and travails to Alaska. In this episode you hear about the "girl with the staph infection," Davis Aurini guest stars in this podcast as well, and the details about avoiding deer while riding a motorcycle in Idaho.

6-30-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 18

Another "from the field" podcast as Aaron hunts for the elusive "Hippie Hole" of South Dakota. Join him as he talks about the economics behind small towns, how easy it's going to be to set up shop in South Dakota to subvert Mark Dayton's Amazon tax, how he'd like to do stand up with his minority friends and they would just exchange racial jokes to the shock of the audience, and some interesting facts about dirt roads in the west.

6-18-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 17

Recorded while hiking Battle Mountain in South Dakota, in this short podcast Aaron talks about the proper use of the "c" especially on a woman who deserves it, how a democrat bumper sticker really is a good proxy for person with mental problems, park board people, and how he hates large thugs who target the weak, frail and elderly.

6-10-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 16

Why people who say, "Why aren't you happy? Why are you so angry?" need the shit kicked out of them, how radio and the entire entertainment industry is going to be destroyed by the internet, and how and why the Manosphere will never go away and is a gold mine for anybody brave enough to speak candidly about the state of men in society.

5-30-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 15

In this episode Aaron talks about the finer points of tornado chasing, how normal people make better artists and actors, he just decimates 20 something liberal art majors to the point they'll never get up again, he ponders how stupid people hold up the rest of society, and shares some GREAT news about Davis Aurini.

5-16-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 14
In this episode Aaron ponders if they'll have "Bachelor Work Camps" wherein they force childless bachelors to work more to pay taxes to support the socialist system, talks about the run he had and how the suburbs are vacated during the work day, how there really aren't any desperate housewives in the suburbs (just old rich men), and wonders why you have to remember birthdays or Mothers and Father's Day.

5-12-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 13
Aaron showcases his new recording equipment and software as he talks about how he'd rather have a celebrity roast than a funeral, how church was so boring he actually read the bible, why baptisms are considered "church going into overtime," why everybody should write a book, how it's sad men can no longer ask women to dance, and that yes, he is indeed good looking.

5-2-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 12
In this episode we learn about how a Chrysler Sebring is NOT like a James Bond Aston Martin. Also what it's like to live the bachelor life in St. Petersburg, how Wyoming is not a "hidden secret" the locals like to claim it is, how Fed Ex packages have now replaced Christmas gifts, people who stink, and how they might bring back stoning just to kill the Captain.

4-25-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 11
Aaron talks about Baby Boomer meat markets, how "traditional grandmothers" might become extinct, how he hates it when bank tellers fake taking an interest in you, and he asks corproate America the question - "What's the next, greatest innovation in business? CSR? Linked in? Lobby and rent seeking?" Some of his finest work.

4.-17-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 10
The Captain takes umbrage at a comment from a guy who ridicules him about "working at home" while he watches Bugs Bunny. The Captain also questions the psychology of people who don't mind standing in lines. Is their job that boring a line is considered a "treat?" And finally an asshole of a coin dealer that refuses to help out the Captain in his quest to measure the difference between the physical and paper price of gold!

4-6-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 9
The Captain talks about his salsa dancing escapades in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. How he had a dance off with some black gay dancers at the local gay bar and why he has more diversity than most poser leftists and liberals. What people really want out of a job and a career. And how he absolutely refuses to send "thank you letters" to HR people or people that have interviewed him.

3-22-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 8
Aaron talks about how cars are being progressively made more and more for chicks and how this will ruin cars. Aaron also talks about who his favorite talk radio show hosts are, as well as explains "the early dark days before the Manosphere" and how men figured this stuff out on their own. Show was heavily edited for quality purposes, however, you will DEFINITELY want to tune in at the 45:00 minute mark.

3-15-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 7
The latest podcast from "The Clarey Podcast" includes Marissa Mayer's (Yahoo CEO) decision to force her employees to work at the office instead of home, the failure of Americans to embrace the telecommute revolution, how women would prefer to sleep with Richard Branson vs. Mark Dayton, how Michael Bloomberg is the reason the 2nd Amendment was created, why the Captain would love to meet him in a dark alley, and what drives men to succeed and achieve (sex and physical attraction, BTW).

3-06-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 6
Why can't Aaron find shoe laces? "Special Ops Dachshunds." And how to extract the maximum amount of pity and pampering from women when you're sick.

2-24-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 5
The world's greatest rant against grammar nazis that is sure to make sure nobody corrects your English ever again. Aaron also discusses his amazement how people are shopping at the Mall of America despite the economy, how you need to drink more when you have more family members in attendance at gatherings, and a miscellany of intellectually stimulating stuff.

2-17-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 4
What happens when chicks unknowingly turn down an accomplished ballroom dancer when he asks them to dance? Well, you'll see. Also "finding the worst block of the Minneapolis ghetto" and how liberal arts majors are to blame for high gas prices.

2-11-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 3
The Grammies, how men/women like Guys/Girls Night out (and how you get pissed when it gets canceled), girls who drive Chevy Cavaliers and Pontiac Sunfires, how lines are for sheeple communist SWPL's, how did Moses get lost on the Sinai Peninsula for 40 years? It's impossible! And the married man who envied my luxury omelete.

2-4-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 2
Learn about pumping gas in the cold, why tornado chasers at the NOAA are stealing money from the taxpayers, and the difference between people who are independent and those that claim they are.

1-30-13 The Clarey Podcast Episode 1
The maiden voyage of The Clarey Podcast takes off. Learn about why Clarey isn't so smart, he just has a lot of time on his hands. Clarey also asks if you're rather make $20,000 a year and sleep in till 10AM or slave away for $60,000 while driving your kids all over the place. A review of the movie "Parker" is also included.

1-18-13 Aurini and Clarey
A conversation of no particular topic between Davis Aurini and Aaron Clarey recorded in the hinterlands of the Canadian Rockies. Booze may have been involved.

11-5-12 Avoiding the Misery of Feminism
An audio version of Clarey's semi-famous youtube video about the pitfalls of "hating women" turning you into the same hate-filled feminists we all so um...hate.

Guys, You Gotta Let Me Know

September 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Novel and Mundane wrote a review of Enjoy the Decline.

But like nearly everybody else, he didn't tell me!

There is nothing more that makes me feel bad if you took the time to read my book AND WRITE A REVIEW and didn't tell me. The absolute least I can do is send you some traffic, so for all of youse out der if you did write a review, PLEASE inform me that you did.

I feel absolutely horrible otherwise.

Avoid Windows 8 at All Costs

September 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I like to be practical and to help my readers as much as possible.

And I'm not joking, this isn't a sarcastic post or a satirical one - it's REALLY one of the most practical ones I've ever done.

DO NOT GET A COMPUTER WITH WINDOWS 8.

In following this humble advice you are saving yourself AT LEAST 10 hours of your life and labor. Pro-rated at a normal wage that's like saving $200.

Hold onto your old copy of Windows 7 and wait for Windows 9. And if it doesn't improve switch to Mac or even Linux.

Yes, it is THAT bad.

The Increasing Desire to "Get Fired and Collect Unemployment"

September 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was in Casper, Wyoming. And it was not just me, but no less than a full quarter of the staff that confessed they hated their jobs so much they were hoping to get fired so they could collect unemployment.

And those were only the people who confessed.

I thought it was just the galactically craptasticness of the bank I worked for, but in hindsight and retrospect, I'm starting to realize that employment in America has been become so damaging to one's psychology, so hostile to a sane brain, that the "shame" that comes with getting fired has become moot. So bad has your average job become that people, particularly the youth, don't give a damn any more and the "shame" that was employed by elder generations no longer works.

Nobody cares about having the "perfect resume."

Nobody cares about "having a gap in their employment."

Nobody cares about "getting a good reference."

No, the situation has become so bad most youth (and not so young) are throwing in the towel, admitting there is no "career" to be had and are now BEGGING TO GET FIRED SO THEY CAN COLLECT UNEMPLOYMENT.

Of course to the corporate gray-haired automotons with perked lips and chaffed knees who somehow managed to thrive in this vile environment and now head up corporate America, they cannot understand this. They were accustomed to having desperate youth beg and plead for just the opportunity to prove themselves that unpaid internships came into existence. They were accustomed to be able to have youth do the most belittling and berating of tasks because they needed the money. They were perhaps even enjoying creating a work environment where sanity, production, logic, and effort had no bearing on success and got their kicks out of making younger people dance and jump through hoops as they arbitrarily replaced logic with ass-kissing rules. But now with more and more people begging to get fired, there is a sea change afoot.

Of course, people have always wanted to quit their jobs, but had to stick with it at least to pay the bills. But there are two things that are making this a reality - forced frugal living and no hope for a future. After 5 years of debt forgivingness, personal bankruptcies, and minimalizing forced on them by recession, there are by my estimation millions of people from 18-45 who have scaled down and can get by on a lot less. Also, with no real hope in sight after 5 years, most people have given up hope and no longer desire to obey in the vain hopes they are rewarded with a promotion or high-paying career. they know it's a scam. No, most are in it to get paid and that's it. Corproate loyalty is dead.

Sadly, for HR directors and bosses, this means the leverage or power they once held is completely gone (or at least dimishing rather quickly). With a generation burnt out and jaded so quickly and so early, they have already given up hope and don't care to try to "excel" in their career, leaving employers and HR reps no power or strings to pull. You can't get "Bob" to come in on the weekend because he doesn't believe his future is with your company, he doesn't believe there is any chance you'll treat him fairly, and he just as soon get fired because he hates you and the job so much. Besides, if he does go on the dole it's all those middle, senior and executive type people who pay the 50% tax rate to support his unemployment. And beyond that, he's been trained the past 5 years to get by on unreliable and minimal income. He doesn't need a job, just a small unemployment check. And most employers have not made the marginal income difference between the two worth suffering the psychotic inanities of the corporate world.

No, it will be a very interesting labor market in the next 10 years. Millions of unemployed youth, all with college degrees, and a spoiled corporate sector that thinks it can get away with abusing applicants by forcing them to talk to legions of 25 year old HR ditzes asking about favorite colors. Only to find out those youth are even more arrogant and entitled than the HR ditz and (since they never had any hope in the future) decide they only want to get fired so they can collect unemployment.

Congratulations corporate America and older generations, you've completely disincentived the younger generations to the point you can no longer take advantage of them.

We all just ask you senior, upper and executive management types work extra hard to pay the taxes to support us as we loaf around.

And before you get upset about those "darned kids" living off of the dole and not taking life serious, just ask yourself who you were expecting to finance your social security and medicare...or...well...I mean, who did you think was going to pay for it because...um...well..without jobs those youth just won't be able to pay the taxes to pay for it.

Enjoy the decline!

Oh, John Surma, You Kill Me!

September 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HAR HAR!!! (check #2)

Ah, good ole John Surma. Always in for a good laugh.

Again, Leftists Are Ugly

September 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'll say it again, because it's true, leftists tend to be less attractive because to be attractive means you have to work at it.

You have to eat right, you have to work out, you have to expend some effort in looking appealing to the opposite sex.

That basic amount of work and the sex drive that should compel someone to do it, is outdone by the hatred and fear of real work most leftists have.

Ergo why they not only look like this, but spend all their time coming up with rationalizations as to why they are entitled to other people's stuff.

Corporate Culture's Mental Sickness

September 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again, my detractors will claim I just "couldn't hack it" in the real world.

I contest there is something very sick, wrong, and evil about the corporate world.

10 Years of Unnecessary Hoop Jumping

September 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Embedded in this CPA update is the story of Walt Kofski. Because it's not obvious where it is, I've taken the liberty of highlighting the relevant sections:

OK, lieutenants, agents, and economists. Do you see what I see?

Yes, that's right, good ole Walt was able to test for the CPA without having to have a degree.

The other thing you might have observed is that in spite of this disability he still managed to become one of the most successful CPA's and accountants in Minnesota history.

HUGE
DRAMATIC IMPAIRING

So riddle me this, riddle me, that, why in the Patron Saint's Name of Frick are we requiring modern day CPA applicants to have not only an undergraduate degree in accounting, but also a certain amount of masters classes in accounting, oh, and not to mention the never-ending litany of CPE/continuing education? If somebody can just pass the CPA out of high school, then why not let them? Wouldn't it be more efficient for all of us???

I shall answer young lieutenants, and the answer is two fold.

First, there just plain isn't enough economic growth to go around. When Walt sat for the CPA exam, economic growth was averaging around 4.25%. Today is is only 2.5%, nearly 2 full percentage points lower. This means without new economic growth, there is no new economic opportunities for any young up and comers. Therefore employers have to find ways to screen you. This means - you guessed it - progressive credentialism.

While a million people in the state of Minnesota may have the raw talent and ability to sit and pass the CPA exam without going to college, that doesn't matter. Employers just plain don't have the demand for that many CPA's. So they throw in front of you unnecessary and unneeded hoops to test NOT YOUR SKILL, but basically, your compliance. Your obediency. And (ultimately) your lack of self respect.

The reason why they are ultimately testing your lack of self-respect is because people with the least amount of self-respect are the cheapest. So cheap in fact most employers know they can do away with training programs or certification programs and FORCE THE INDIVIDUAL TO PAY FOR A 4 YEAR DEGREE, MASTERS CLASSES, and FEES TO GET CERTIFIED.

But it isn't just the financial costs (which can well be into 6 figures), it's also the time. And not just time, it is your youth you are wasting jumping through these hoops. When all is said and done, I'd estimate with 4 years undergrad, 1 year masters, a year studying for the CPA, another year getting the necessary work experience to be able to test for it, AND let's not forget that oh-so-needed CPE and continuing education (all during your prime years, mind you), you are already agreeing to forfeit 10 years of your life merely TRAINING and EDUCATING yourself to get the credentials.

Understand there is no economic production that comes from training and education. It is merely developing a skill that in the future will result in added economic production, but for those ten years it is a sunk cost the young, poor person pays. Worse, as progressive credentialism expands and HR departments become more picky and requirements become more lengthy, the quality of that "education" decreases. Matter of fact, it becomes nothing more than a big fat expensive joke (for example just look at what they're teaching in MBA classes now).

Now, this is just the CPA, but the vileness of progressive credentialism has infected nearly every aspect of the working world. College degrees are "preferred" for jobs that 14 year olds can do at fast food joints. Masters degrees are essentially required if you want to get into anything above "entry level," but said jobs will still be way below your skill and education. A young man in the UK was required to dance to get a job at a GROCERY STORE. And I'm sure every one of us would like to have back the 8,000 brain cells we've each lost every time we go in and suffer the inanity of the HR ditz asking us "if you could be a cat or a dog, which one would you be?" But the insanity and psychological pain this all inflicts on us is nothing compared to the economic costs.

Understand there is a counterbalance to all this insanity. And it is the fact that the young are wasting at least a decade of their lives, going to school, getting certifications, and getting accredited INSTEAD OF WORKING. This of course bodes poorly for the young kids doing the Decade Long Hoop Jump Dance. They're not at their full capacity, they're never "advancing" and rarely will they have a career. But it bodes even poorer for the scum who instituted this dysfunctional labor market. For the people in power need young people's economic production to pay for the social security and medicare ponzi scheme they've created.

Many of you are angry about this. But may I point out, you can't pay for other people's stuff if you don't have a job, let alone a high paying one? Because of the piss-poor management of the government and corporate sector, employment prospects are so poor for young people, there's no way they can tax you - you have nothing to tax. Furthermore, with our "great leaders" from "the great society" instituting socialism, you are inoculated against confiscatory taxes on your income. So yes, while you are forced to be poor or at least lower-middle income, you are also protected from high taxation to pay for other people's stuff (that is until bank accounts and 401k's are "haircutted" but that is another topic).

In short, the "lost decade" of economic production is not solely going to fall on the generation forced to jump through hoops. It's going to affect those guilty of setting up such a sadistic system in the first place. The only true costs to younger generations is the time you wasted in school (which you don't have to do) and the fact, unlike say, your WWII counterpart, you aren't going to achieve your best so early (it's almost laughable to think of all the 18 year old pilots and engineers who had more responsibility and achievement during WWII compared to most 40 something cubicle dwellers today).

The second reason why younger generations have to suffer such inhumane treatment is one of simple malice. Here I have no empirical proof, no data, no charts. Just enough work experience and adulthood to come to the conclusion most of the people in power, be it government or corporate America, are petty and evil enough to do this out of entertainment. Power is a corrupting force I will never understand, but I have seen it turn people into the most malicious and petty of people. Adria Richards (though not older) is a perfect example of what just a little bit of power can do. She ruined the career of two young men (not to mention her own) because of the lizard-brain taste for power. And so when a younger, smarter, faster, better go getter is in the ranks of an old, ass-kissing, brown-nosing, has-been who "doesn't do that Excel stuff" hurdles and hoops must be put up to keep the young and talented from advancing, otherwise LEGIONS of old, obsolete, outdated, and inefficient managers would have to relinquish their positions OR (GASP!!!) HAVE TO GET EDUCATION AND TRAINING!!!! And we all know those hoops are just reserved for idiot young kids. In other words it's just a delaying action to defer the inevitable giving the 57 year old blue hair that vital extra decade he needs to pay off his two ex-wives, pay down the 3rd mortgage on his McMansion and pay off that loan on his 7 year old 5 Series.

Of course, none of this solves the problem that many (if not) most young people are under/unemployed, in debt, and will never have society's institutions use them to their fullest potential. But it does put into perspective as to how society treats its youth today versus that of yesterday. And at least with this perspective, you can make wise decisions that are going to benefit you, and not the pre-made decisions that are going to benefit them.

First, refuse to jump through the hoops. School, I've said before, is quickly becoming a waste unless you major in the right thing. And even if you do major in the right thing, you are not going to be taken seriously until you are at least 35. Again, this is not WWII where you are desperately needed to pilot that P-51. This is the worst economy in 50 years where there is no need for you except to file and fax and be called an "assistant manager" and do all the other crap work your boss doesn't want to do. You will never be challenged and you will never meet your potential. Ergo...

Second, why you might want to consider the military. Any posts about how "you could get killed" and "I'm not defending this socialist hell hole" will be ignored. Because you would not be joining the military for "god and country" as much as it will be for "me and me." The military is about the ONLY place that will take an 18 year old kid and give them the opportunity to achieve their best. And since most employers are too sadistic and inefficient, this makes the military the BEST option for kids nowadays. Free food, clothing, shelter, health care and education. You outta kiss your drill sergeant on the lips for how kind and generous the military is compared to corporate America.

Third, by god, have some self-respect. I know this is tough to do if you have debts, but your youth and your sanity are not worth putting through the mental meat-grinders employers have become today just for a paycheck. Job descriptions that are outright lies, job offers that are half of what they should be, psychotic bosses who never make tough decisions or provide leadership, resulting in feuds between the rank and file as they try to lead themselves. Why even tolerate it? Collecting a government check or working a low level security guard job or working as a parking lot attendance is infinitely better and more self-respecting.

Again, very few of us will ever become that top notch accountant elite investment banker super accurate actuary or top sales guy

but nearly all of us can get by on very little, enjoy stress free jobs, and give employers the proverbial finger when they tell us to waste 10 years of our youth and at our expense, jumping through hoops.

(If you liked this post please forward it to a friend or consider purchasing one of Aaron's hate-filled, rant-a-licious books. You can also listen to Aaron's podcast located here)

Housing Affecting Employment

September 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I had almost forgotten one of my favorite charts- comparing housing starts to unemployment.

The reason I like this chart is because any significant drop in housing starts can predict, anywhere from 6-18 months in advance, a jump and peak in unemployment. There are many theoertical explanations for this, but I believe that as housing is the single largest purchase anybody makes, it therefore is also the single largest consumer of material goods and services. Therefore to build a house requires a lot of employment in every sector that goes into making, mining, cutting, transporting and building them. It is also a predictor of additional employment as the little ladies LOOOOVE furnishing new houses with ~~tons of unnecessary crap~~ err....um..."furniture and fixings" which also triggers employment in other areas.

The charts shows that as the housing market has made a slow, but sure recovery unemployment has gone in a near-mirror image. Also note the severity of the housing crash (the worst ever recorded) coincides with the second-worst unemployment peak. And just as it has been a slow recovery in housing (we're not even back to normal) the PRECISE same thing can be said about employment - slow and not even back to normal.

Now, I'm not foolish enough to credit all of an economy's employment to housing, but isn't it interesting it seems this tepid recovery in housing has done more to help the economy than the $5 trillion in Keynesian wealth transfers to the parasitic classes?

I now, I know. Correlation is not causation. You lefty economists and social "scientists" keep telling yourselves that.

The "Real" Freshman Orientation

September 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is likely either you or someone you know is starting college or at least returning to college. Commensurate with that comes the obligatory “freshmen orientation”wherein the university or college of your choice charitably takes the time to give you noobs some of the “basics” in order to orient yourself on campus. With this guidance and wisdom you will be able to navigate the school, streamline your studies, make wise choices and enhance your overall college experience.

All of it is a lie.

Understand freshman orientation is nothing more than brainwashing, invariably of the leftist variety. You will be bombarded with the value of diversity, force-fed bogus statistics about campus rape, told (if you're white or male) just how much privilege you have, and (if I recall my freshman orientation) there will be some kind of touchy-feely kumbaya exercise which will have an almost cultish like feel to it. All of this is not for your benefit, but rather the benefit of political forces that are heavily invested in making sure youth think, behave, speak and vote a certain way...and continue spending $150 a credit on the education-government industrial complex.

Because of this, freshman orientation, especially for men, is completely worthless. Not only is it worthless, it's down right damaging as it misinforms, misleads, and misdirects you about the reality of what you're about to face. If you believe it you will make bad decisions that will not only fail to produce the results you want, but also serve to only worsen your college life. Therefore, I think it would benefit every male freshman at every campus at every school in the entire nation to get a real “freshman orientation.”

First, the rape statistics (which I guarantee you they are going to give) are completely bogus. One in three (or four or two, depends on the mood of the campus feminists at the time) women are not sexually assaulted. As you have no doubt read here on ROK the definition of “sexual assault” can now mean an “unwanted advance” or a guy who doesn't go scampering away at first rejection. This has a double-whammy effect on campus relations between men and women. One, women are afraid that every man is a potential rapist, about to jump them at random notice. Two, it makes a young man's job of approaching women that much harder with their shields raised. It also has a tertiary (look it up) effect in that such bogus statistics allow the feminists on campus to lobby for more government money to create “sex abuse shelters” or “programs” which are not intended to help actual, genuine victims of sexual assault, as much as it is to provide worthless women's studies majors worthless jobs.

Second, along similar lines you will constantly be bombarded with the “fact” that women are earning the majority of degrees. This is merely another head of the leftist-feminist hydra on campus where such propaganda is meant to bolster the esteem of women on campus and (maliciously at times) rub men's faces in the dirt. The reality is, yes, women do earn the majority of degrees today at the bachelor, masters, and doctorate levels.

The question is “at what?”

Chemistry?
Nuclear engineering?
Brain surgery?

Or is it

English?
Women's studies?
Sociology?
And “Child Psychology?”

The truth is women earn the VAST majority of EASY and WORTHLESS degrees. This is not debatable, it's a fact as I spent the better part of two hours sifting through graduate data at the U of MN.

Regardless, the point is not to let this get you down or somehow think, “the girls are beating us.” They aren't. Not at anything that matters anyway.

Third, you have to get off of campus. The dorms are at best an OK starting point, but if you want parties, booze, and sex, you need to get your own place. Some people recommend frats, others recommend just finding a house with a bunch of guys, I personally recommend dropping the additional money on your own studio or one bedroom apartment. You can do all the college coeds, booze, drugs, and pot you want at your own joint.

Fourth, you need a vehicle. Taking a girl out on a bus is...well...as lame as that sounds. Get yourself a god damned car, and if you can wing it, a motorcycle too.

Fifth, you will have to master day game as it is during the day you will have most interaction with women. This translates into sitting next to the hot chick you want to bang on the first day of class (as people are prone to re-sit where they first sat) to knowing the study schedules of hotties at a library to just developing the balls to approach any girl out in the open because you'll never see any of them again after you graduate. Truth is you couldn't ask for an easier day-game environment, so much so I would even advise avoiding college parties and night game. But I know you and your girded loins are going to attend college parties anyway, but once you start realizing “this is lame” go back to day game.

Sixth, and most importantly, why are you going to college?

If you're attending college because “you were told to go” or “you want to experience the college experience” then cancel all your classes and get out until you realize the real reason you should attend – to make money.

Understand what is being asked of you when you attend a university.

You are being asked to spend $50,000-$150,000 of your money and 4-8 years of your youth on a piece of paper.

And it damn well better pay off.

I don't care how hot the chicks are.
I don't care what your parents told you to do.
I don't care what your guidance counselors told you to do.
I don't care how awesome Hollywood made “the college experience” look in the movies.

You are being asked to take on an insurmountable level of debt and spend at least half a decade of your most precious youth sitting in stale classrooms, listening to professors blather on, which you will slowly realize is nothing more than High School v. 2.0.

But that is the true risk you run – when it's all said and done, you have a worthless degree, that doesn't increase your employability, let alone wage, and you are now saddled with $75,000 in debt that will cripple you financially until you reach middle age.

Understand there is an education bubble going on in this country. And it is the most despicable, disgusting and evil bubble out there as it preys on the ignorant youth. Professors, teachers, guidance counselors, principals, the government, the teachers union, college administrators, the media, even your naïve parents are all in on it, brainwashing you from K-12 into thinking you

absolutely 100% undeniably

MUST attend college.

They then turn around, take your $150/credit in tuition and pay the most washed up, talentless, worthless, incapable people who couldn't hack it in the real world (professors) to "teach" you the ways of the world and somehow give you an "education." But in the end they hand you a piece of paper, that only after 6 months of a spectacular failure of a job hunt do you realize you've been had.

You owe the government money you can't pay back.
You can't get a job.
And the professors (who were such your buddy buddy friends) are laughing as they buy their latest Prius, Volvo, Subaru or whatever other gay shit-car they drive and give their kids free tuition because the university gave them that perk.

But there is a way around this. A way to make sure you don't get scammed:

Choose the right major.

The majority of kids today (70%) major in the liberal arts or what is also known as the "humanities." While interesting these degrees offer absolutely NOTHING of value in terms of employment and skills. If you are going to drop $80,000 on a degree, you need to major in something that is going to pay off. These degrees are largely found in the "STEM" fields (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math).

They are harder, but they are also in demand because while everybody demands an iPhone (requiring a bevy of engineers to make and design), nearly NOBODY demands an English lesson (which is why most English majors become ~~overpaid whiny babysitters~~ elementary school teachers).

This may not be what you wanted to hear. Perhaps you were told to "follow your heart and the money will follow." Perhaps your parents kissed your ass, lying to you, telling you you had some kind of artistic skill or talent when you didn't. Perhaps your teachers said at the age of 17 you were a "great writer" when that is patently laughable. It was all lies and bullshit. The Manosphere is not your mom, your teacher, or Oprah. We are men. And real men tell other men the truth. Because no matter how much truth hurts, it's the only thing that will lead you to genuine success.

What Women Can Learn from Quin Pu

September 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ladies,

help me help you.

Help me....help you.

Or better yet help Quin Pu help you.

If you don't know who Quin Pu is, she is a girl who got dumped after two dates and then proceeded to forward sexts to the dumpor's bosses.

But a colorful undertone to this story is her self-concept. She thinks very highly of herself because she has a blog, two self-published books, a condo, and has managed to stay alive for 25 Earth rotations.

But what gets me is not the completely out of whack perception she has of herself (teh interwebz is already eviscerating her for that), but that it's more proof young women think men want a business resume and not a woman.

Look, ladies. It's not that difficult.

Sweet, sexy, pretty, skinny, reliable and not batshit insane.

Nowhere will you see in a "list" of things men would like to have in a woman:

"MBA"
"CPA"
"Vice president"
"Doctorate"
"PhD"

That isn't bigotry, it isn't sexism, it's just the god damned truth.

Keep plugging your resume and see how far it gets you.

Your Revenge is Through Non-Participation

September 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A dark side of the Manosphere I disagree with is the genuine misogynistic side.

Oh believe me, it exists. And though my female detractors may not be able to distinguish between me (a guy who treats women as genuine equals by holding them up to male standards) and these men (who genuinely hate women) trust me, there is a chasm of difference.

I first ran into this when I wrote a piece standing up for the kind and sweet women who actually stand up for and like manly men. Haley's Halo, Grerp, Judgy Bitch, Sunshine Mary, Dr. Helen, etc. I got sick and tired of not just the nitpickyness of the misogynistic side, but also the "purist" aspect of it. That if you didn't follow along with their purist views that had derived from their discussion forum, you were a traitor, not a real man, not really for the cause, blah blah blah blah. It also irked me that these girls would get the pettiest of complaints and ridicule from these men, suggesting said men were not only academians (focusing on theory and never deploying their wisdom in the real world), but cultists and purists with no capacity or willingness to tolerate slightly different views. Any disagreement or (dare you suggest) to back off women was not tolerated and was deemed traitorous, etc.

It not only made me realize that yes, there are genuine misogynists out there who hate women, but it also made me realize there is a key decision or fork in the road men must take when they take the red pill. Sometimes they take the fork that is healthy and productive, the other fork leads to misogyny. So let me explain.

For whatever sociological reason you want to claim, most men are lied to in their youth about the realities of the fairer sex. It isn't fair. It isn't just. And it costs them greatly. They have every right to be angry and I will go so far to claim they have every right to revenge.

But revenge is not going to come through the mere hatred of women, lumping all women, even those that like men, into the same group and punishing them by cumulative proxy. It isn't even going to come through singling out the individual feminists and leftists and attacking (justifiably) them. It's going to come through the only way it can - non-participation.

Understand the flaw of modern day feminism - it is erroneously based on the lie that men unfairly benefit in society because they are men. They then take this false premise and run rampant with it, extrapolating it irrationally to other aspects of life, demanding irrational and unfair concessions from the rest of society. Their entire ideology is based on a false and self-serving premise.

So to exact your toll of revenge on them will not come through mockery or ridicule. They are immune to it. They are so wedded to their ideology, not to mention delusional, any criticism is rendered moot. And even more so, it CERTAINLY won't come from mocking and ridiculing innocent women as you lump them in with the rest of feminists. The ONLY way you can get your toll of revenge is by taking away the most important thing in their lives.

Yourself.

Now, let's qualify this statement.

When I say, "yourself," I mean, "a reasonably attractive man who has a life and his schtick together."

If you are Mortimer Snerd, living in your mom's basement, Monday Morning Quarter Backing the Manosphere, playing pure academian, never approaching and getting shot down by a girl in your life because you're too scared, and have thus far used the theories and epiphanies of the Manosphere to excuse your own lack of performance, then no, we're not talking about you. And the reason why is that you have no value. Sorry to say that, but the Manosphere is the MANosphere not the OPRAHsphere. We deal with reality.

But if you are a reasonably in shape guy with a life and stuff going on, then yes, your best toll of revenge will come from you removing yourself from the situation.

The reason why is very simple, but one feminists will SCREAM is not true - the most important thing in life is a member of the opposite sex you fall in love with. And if you deny women your (presumed) quality self, that's how you get your revenge. You go your own way, you only have sex with women, but never date them, or you could even consider marriage, but only to women who are traditional, truly self-supporting, conservative/libertarian, in shape, etc. In short you deny undeserving women what they want as you have standards and self-respect.

The resulting revenge is not immediate, obvious, or climatic as in the end of a movie, but much much worse.

It is silent. Subtle. Cold. Delayed. Deferred. And unnoticeable until it is too late.

It is delivered when a 45 year old recent divorcee realizes it isn't 1992 any more and boys aren't thronging to take her to a "Poison" concert.

It is delivered when a 50 year old executive NOW decides it's time to settle down and all of her male peers are looking at 34 year olds.

It is delivered when the 42 year old comes up to you drunk in a sequin shirt saying "Cutie" and you in your heart of hearts have no desire to talk to the woman.

That is how your revenge is delivered.

Because no matter how much they scream and contest otherwise, the most important thing in life for a woman is another man. Oh sure, during the day they'll talk loud enough so you can hear how they don't need a man. And sure, at night they will shoot down scores of advances, as they tally up their "like" score from FB. But at the wee small hours of the morning they're crying in bed because there isn't a man there. And if you refuse to be that man, then you have your ultimate revenge.

Of course this is contingent on one key thing - that you are at some minimal level a coveted man and not merely an individual who abuses the "Manosphere philosophy" as an excuse to excuse your non-performance. Because otherwise you're merely an academian, a Monday morning quarter back plagiarizing the philosophies, observations and laws theoreticians in the Manosphere have come up with to excuse your lack performance. Again, this is the MANosphere. Not the OPRAHsphere. I leave it to your own intellectual honesty to admit to yourself which kind of man you are.

How Real People Use Windows 8

September 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HAR!!!!

The Death of the Nightclub

September 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Long live the nightclub!

Never Move to Ohio

September 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ever.

Reap What You Sow

September 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hmmm....you mean you didn't raise a generation capable of producing the economic production necessary to pay for all of your entitlement, socialist 60's hippie shit?

Enjoy the nursing home!

American Women Bending Over Backwards for Latinos

September 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

At the the height of the salsa craze in the mid 2000's there was no shortage of recently divorced, desperate 40 something women to capitalize on the scene and fool themselves into thinking all those Latino males were interested in marriage and not a green card

or

one night stand

The scene has fizzled now and I don't know where the illegal immigrants went or where the desperate 40 something American women went, but I do know one thing:

It irked me to no end when said women would pronounce, on purpose, and in great compliance, Spanish words in their native accent and not how we normally pronounce it in America.

Tiburon is the Spanish name for "shark" and was also a night club in Minneapolis.

Real,
Normal,
Manly,
American men would pronounce it "Tib ur ron."

But aging desperate 40 something women to placate diversity and give their meaningless lives meaning would pronounce it

"Teee beer rrrrrruuuuuuuuunnn."

Note the emphasis on rolling r's.

Let me explain this so the rest of society can advance.

Chile is pronounced, "chilly" by normal non-communist, non-pedophile Americans.

People who pronounce it "ChEEE-LAY" are evil, leftist, aging 40 something women who would sell the entire country under the bus so long as they get male attention from illegal immigrants who couldn't care less about the future, society, democracy or liberty and have no problems setting society back millinea to collect a government paycheck.

You may laugh and of course I'm being a bit sarcastic, but not by much. People who purposely change their pronunciation of a word from a foreign land from that of their homeland to that of the foreign are in plain sight decreeing to the world that they have no allegiance to their homeland and have more allegiance to foreign lands.

It's why I don't trust them and neither should you.

Now, contrast that with by good buddy Silvio Canto who IS from a foreign country, then it makes sense that he would pronounce it normally as it is his home country.

I pronounce it "Que Ba"

He pronounces it "Koo Ba"

But the dude lived there and had to suffer under Castro's commie bullshit.

The 44 year old HR manager with her waist scarf trying to delude herself about her SMV in the salsa scene who had all the advantages of the United States and never suffered real oppression has no right to start faking accents and pronunciations, DID NOT suffer genuine oppression that most of our Latino brothers and sisters did.

But by all means, ladies. Delude yourself into thinking pronouncing Spanish words in the homeland dialect will increase your chances of scoring Antonio or Jose as a husband. In the end you are just a middle aged woman being used for residency, a one night stand, and AT BEST long term public assistance purposes.

Turn In Your Yachts!

September 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Teaching Youth "Employerese"

October 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hi Kids!

Are you confused about the terminology and jargon being used by today's employers?

Wish you knew what all those really important, really smart gray haired people were saying?

If you just knew what those job postings were saying, you could probably get the job?

Well worry no more with this handy reference list! Below are all the key words that professional business people use ~~to make them sound smarter than they actually are~~ to help keep the American corporate sector booming, bustling, and creating new work opportunities for you!

"HR" - An affirmative action program created by corporations to meet quotas and political pressure to hire more women. It is now morphed into an arm of the Communist Party International where they impede and destroy the western economies' labor markets making sure people are hired based on the color of their skin, gender, and/or ethnicity and not by their character of ability to do the job.

"Probationary Period" - When you did something right that would help increase the profitability of the firm, but your boss either didn't authorize it or is so intimidated by it he needs to teach you a lesson.

"CSR" - A sign that the company has plain ran out of any good ideas and is now jumping on the green bandwagon to get you suckers to buy their product. Also an affirmative action program used to high math-impaired masters candidates from liberal arts colleges, but only as long as they're related to the CEO.

"MBA Preferred"- Typically listed in the job description, this phrase tells you a mentally impaired otter is capable of doing the job, but HR is still going to insist on hiring idiots stupid enough to pay $70,000 to jump through a hoop and get an MBA in the OFF CHANCE it might lead to better job prospects.

"Ad Hoc Duties" - This is the catch all term that basically says, "yeah, we know we said your job would be X, but this clause allows us to force you to do the real work we hired you for and we don't want to do ourselves"

"Internship" - Formerly considered janitorial and secretarial work, this new euphemism attracts idealistic and hopeful students aiming to put to practice what they learned in school, only to give them a dose of reality, but with out pay!

"Diversity" - The new profit model that has replaced accounting. Corporate goals are no longer measured by income and earnings, but rather diversity, facebook likes and carbon foot print.

"Training Program" - A mythical thing that never existed. Why would they have a training program. You have a masters degree.

"Hit the Ground Running" - A phrase used by many bosses too lazy to train you in, provide you leadership or guidance, let alone tell you what to do.

"Steep Learning Curve" - Another phrase used by many bosses too lazy to train you in, provide you leadership or guidance, let alone tell you what to do.

"United Way Donation" - Mandatory tax that your employer forces on you because if you don't donate then you will get overlooked for promotion.

"Promotion" - A practice of the past where younger, lower ranked employees could get "promoted" to a higher, better paying position. The last promotion, however, was recorded back in January 27th, 1988 as too many old people have failed to save adequately for retirement and now need to work until 2078.

"Continuing Education"- Another way to replace work with jumping through hoops to ensure you never actually develop any skills and all your knowledge is theoretical.

"Synergies" - A phrase that developed in the 90's and they haven't shut up about it yet. Pre 1995 it was called "efficiencies" but did not sound adequate enough.

"VPN/RDP/Telecommute" - Theoretical concepts being developed at the forefront of corporate America. The idea is that some day, technology would obsolete the need to commute to an office building, not to mention the office building itself by allowing to let people work over "the internet." Another 20 years will be needed to see if this is possible so suffering 2 hour commutes will continue to be necessary.

"Facebook Password" - The tell-tale way to see if your employer really cares about making a profit or snooping into your private life.

"Health Insurance Plan" - An insurance plan that at first looks like your employer is giving you a benefit, but when you realize you can get the same coverage for a lot cheaper on your own, you realize it is nothing but a scam to overcharge you for insurance while subsidizing the older employees' health plan.

"I'm Too Busy" - The most common excuse management and bosses will give you because they've failed to manage their time correctly and therefore can't lead the office, let alone you, no matter how important your question is.

Democrats are the Real Uncle Toms

October 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Notice how well the black community has been doing under Obama.

I don't know how else to get blacks to take the red pill they so desperately need. Democrats, especially the likes of Sharpton, Jesse Jackson, and most politicians are using you. Don't you get it? They are using you to make themselves rich while impoverishing you.

You Can't Find a Man in the Bakken Oil Field????

October 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

for the Patron Saint's name of Frick.

In a state where men are regularly pulling in $100K+ and there are 5 men for every woman, and you still can't find a man?

And just when I think, "You know, we've said our peace and we can cut back now."

And mercy, could it get any more stereotypical???

36, yoga instructor.

HAR!!!!!!

Enjoy that decline fellas. Enjoy that freaking decline!

Bar Killing Us, There is Nothing the Left Can Do to Stop Us

October 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I explain how when there is no future, no jobs, no quality members of the opposite sex for mates, and housing is now a liability then there is nothing leftists, liberals, commies and socialists can do to shut us up or shut us down.

Because what are you doing to take away from us?

and more in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

Defending Her MA Thesis While Applying at McDonald's

October 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ahhhh poetic justice.

I Miss the Women of the 1950's

October 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Somebody please tell me this is a photoshopped deal. Please.

They Even Got Vox

October 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ug...they even got Vox.

A well written and charty-goodness post, but he still considers the education/college degree gap a "real" gap.

There are two brief points I shall make as I'm trying to knock out a chapter per 4 days of my book:

1. Women earn the majority of EASY DEGREES. When it comes to engineering and anything that requires significant math men beat them at a ratio of 4:1. When it comes to Masters in Farting Unicorns and Doctorates in Feelings with Minors in Oprah, yes, women dominate. But for the stuff that matters in the world, men by far outcompete women.

2. Women are NOT going to be ahead in the world for this. It is NOT a good thing for women that they are earning the majority of degrees because they are buying into a bubble. It's like having women purchasing 70% of the housing in early 2007 and citing that as an example of some kind of performance gap.

Post post - Vox repsonds.

Running With Dad

October 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm quite impressed with my old man. On the rare times I find myself in his town, without fail, he is always up for a run. He is 67, looks about 53, which is a testament to his religious adherence to running regularly, diet (primarily salads) and no drinking. He can't bang out 9 miles at a 7:30 minute mile rate, but he can do 5 at a decent clip which puts him and his cardiovascular system in the top 2% of his age group.

However he is also old AND also "with it." He doesn't need hand holding. His mind is still sharp and this combination allows him not only to have wisdom but to make observations and think things through resulting in interesting epiphanies. So when we run I'm not tolerating a discussion with somebody just for the sake of having somebody to talk to, nor am I wishing I had my MP3 player so I could listen to a more interesting podcast, I'm simply discussing things with him.

In our latest run he was talking about a church in Milwaukee. He was a pastor and kind of keeps tabs on "the industry." And apparently there is this "rock star" of a pastor coming out who is turning one of Milwuakee's ghettos into a nice place (of course while the Milwaukee's teachers union and leftist thugs fight against it). Regardless, the pastor, paraphrased from my dad said something to the extent,

"The future of the congregation and religion in general is not going to be buildings, but the internet, podcasts, and Youtube videos."

I had never thought of that.

Like radio, the "religion industry" is headed up by old farts who largely are incapable of seeing how the internet will shove an entirely different business model down their throats. Young people don't want to spend the money on gas going to church, let alone sit with a bunch of old farts who want to sing and go through 45 minutes of BS just to get to a sermon that might be marginally good. Additionally, they don't have the money to tithe, those that donate in the first place. But notice how something as simple as podcasting can completely revolutionize religion.

First, people are not stuck with the pastor sent to their local community. Like podcasting, they can go on the internet, select from thousands of podcasting pastors.

Second convenience. No more wakey wakey at 6AM to catch the early service. You download it, put it on your MP3 player, and go running while listening to Reverned Bob tell you about St. Paul's letter to the Corinthians.

Third, no more buildings. Again, like radio, buildings and capital equipment are expensive. But with the internet and podcasting, nearly all capital expenses are eliminated. A rock, solid pastor with a laptop and internet access can smoke any established old fart pastor with the church's largest temple. He can also attract more donations, a higher percentage of which now can be donated ~~to his personal Jimmy Swaggart account,~~ uh...err...ummm...."go to charity."

Fourth, higher quality sermons. Not just because people can choose from more pastors, but with out all the singing, rehearsing or (god forbid you're Catholic) standing,kneeling,jumping, squatting,calisthenics, that leaves more time for the sermon. Also, the pastor only has to record it ONCE. He doesn't have to do late service, early service, Saturday service, etc. He just uploads it and they're off to the races.

There are other benefits, but like all old, established organizations, I'm very interested to see if the old guard will embrace these changes (as they would not doubt immeasurably improve the quality and religious life for many religious followers) or if they will fight against them because it would undermine their control and force some of them to give up their fiefdoms.

Guess where my money's on!

5 Reasons You SHOULD Major in Women's Studies

October 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm not making this up folks. She actually has a 5 point list why you should major in women's studies.

But what I am going to do is a genuine favor for all the women (and men) out there who are thinking about majoring in women's studies and debunk the above list with just one reason.

Ahem...

"The One and ONLY Reason You Should NEVER Major in Women's Studies."

#1 - You can achieve everything a doctorate in women's studies can achieve without having to waste 8 years of your youth and $150,000 in tuition. You can read the books on the internet or library for free. You can read the literature for free. You can protest, lobby, and do whatever you want to advance women's issues for free. And (here's the kicker) you will have the exact same employment prospects as people who have a doctorate in the field.

What we're witnessing here is the cannibalism that occurs in leftist academia. Liberals and leftists major in some faux humanities degree. They can't find a job with a "Bachelor's in Vicitimization" so they proceed to get a "Masters in Whining." That doesn't result in employment so they go full on for a "Doctorate in Asking the Government for More Money While Claiming We're Independent."

But the irony of such worthless degrees is the only thing you can do with them is simply reteach them to future students. Deep down inside you KNOW the degree is worthless, but you have so much in student loans and practically all of your youth invested in this fake industry that your ego cannot take the blow that you simply plain just fucked up your life and wasted your youth.

And so they cannabalize on (in this case) future young women, cajoling them to join them in their misery at the women's studies department AND in the process ruin and destroy these poor girls' lives (despite, ironically being a presumed women's studies program).

Ladies, look, I don't care if you're a leftist, a liberal, or a feminist. You can be all those things for free. You don't need to be "ordained" or "certified." Just "be" those things. But for the love of the Patron Saint's Name of Frick, if you're going to drop 6 years of youth and $100,000 on a masters degree could you at least make it count?

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

October 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

We don't need no STIIIIIINNNNNNKINNNNNNNNG fathers!

We have Barack Obama! Duh!

Men Determine What is Beautiful in Women

October 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And no, pregnant still isn't beautiful.

All I Want for Christmas is a Remote Controlled Sturmgewehr 44

October 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm trying to figure out how they HAVE a STG 44!!!

To Defend Capitalism and Defeat Socialism - Series

October 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Several of my youtube subscribers/viewers have asked about the "Capitalism/Socialism" speech I delivered several years back. They said it was private, but it seems to work for me. Regardless, the speech is probably some of my finer work and certainly one of the most comprehensive presentations/arguments I've ever put together, not to mention a ton of succinct economic data.

If you are new to economics and politics, not to mention, just looking for some clear empirical data and arguments about capitalism and socialism, this video series would be it. Will save you a ton of time and trouble trying to read a score of books. It is unfortunately spread across multiple videos, but you can click from one to the next.

Part 1
Part 2
Part 3
Part 4
Part 5
Part 6

Girls Going to Somalia

October 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Help the Captain out here lieutenants, economists and agents.

Can you post below all the links, stories, news you've heard about a young western woman going off to some crappy third world country to go "help the poor" or "fight the system" only to end up murdered, killed, attacked, raped, assaulted, etc.?

I have a theory and it's ground shaking. But I need empirical evidence and data to test it.

Post post - I appreciate all the info, but I need LINKS and NAMES. Not just anecdotes and stories guys. Something so I can go and research so I can start pulling data.

This isn't Oprah.
This isn't the democratic party
This isn't the liberal arts college at your local university.

This is Cappy Cap. And we be economists here.

POST POST POST - There seems to be some kind of assumption of race here. I'm don't care if the woman is white, that is irrelevant. I want instances of ANY woman going overseas, or to a destitute area to help only to end up in trouble. Data people, numbers. Not colors.

Waltz for Venus

October 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cowboy Bebop is by far one of the best artistic achievements humanity will ever come up with. An integral part of it success is the musical score the accompanied it.

To this day, 15 years after it was released, I cannot with my perfect hearing discern whether this is a xylophone or a music box. It is from the scene "Waltz for Venus." I would appreciate anybody's knowledge/better-hearing than mine to tell me what it really is.

Boys, NEVER Buy a Fancy Car to Impress Chicks

October 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The best part is the 8:00-9:13. Doesn't have anything to do with cars, but it's funny.

I Was at the Office Today…

October 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I think I may start a new series called "My Office Today" highlighting the benefits of a location independent career.

This was "today's office" over on the west-sayeed visiting a buddy of mine:

Remember kids,

work hard go to school
go into debt
get a job, but before you get that first paycheck get a car loan you can barely afford, get a mortgage get a wife that doesn't like you have kids you can't afford and then get to work at a job you hate in a cubicle because that's what "contributing members of society" do!

And remember, if you don't succeed at that, then "you just couldn't hack it in the real world" and are a loser.

So Women ARE Using the Government to Supplant Men

October 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"We usually have a lull in September and October," Gwynn says. "For us to peak at the end of the month in September, and this week in general, it makes no sense for us to have a growth like this. Half of the new members are single moms, so we're thinking that it's tied directly to the government shutdown, since (the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children), that help more than 9 million moms, have been stalled. It would make no sense for growth otherwise."

1. This just disgusts me.
2. Men who vote democrat are not men.
3. I don't want to hear anything ever again about single moms being noble or heroic
4. I don't want to hear about "independent women" when I have to pay more taxes to support them
5. This video should be going viral.

The Reality Principle

October 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Arguably the simplest and easiest way to improve your life is to adopt this principle. It has helped me immensely.

Seetha Kulandaisamy - Another Narc

October 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Like Adria Richards, another narcer feminist gets offended at male humor and costs another guy his job.

But I want to be INCREDIBLY clear on this. The problem is NOT that petty women like this take offense and self-decree themselves crusaders to "right the wrongs" of evil, and then go narcing to the employers of said employess.

It's the fact the employers ACTUALLY TAKE THIS SERIOUSLY AND FIRE THEIR EMPLOYEES instead of dismissing these child-women as the mere whiners and complainers they are.

I've addressed this in my latest podcast. It is a trend. It is the future. And you NEED to know how to adapt to this and realize there is NO FUTURE with modern day employers. It is mutually exclusive to being male.

Stay frosty boys. Stay frosty.

Post post, seems she ruffled some feathers.

Ladies, Just Dye Your Hair

October 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

So I'm watching "The Property Brothers," which I will standby because I like the show, even though I know it is nothing but eye candy for women watching "John and Drew." Regardless, the "contestants" come on and I had to snap a photo (because I couldn't find a picture on the internet of the couple)

Alright class, shall we?

#1. The woman is not old. Like Steve Martin she is pre-maturely gray. if you look at her face you can see she is not a day over 40, she just has bad "hair genetics."

#2. She is actually quite pretty...if you can get past the gray hair.

#3. Yes, the husband the entire time fit every stereotype you could imagine as did she.

#4 The husband, is actually not ugly himself. Handsome if he got rid of the Beatles cut and hit the gym.

#5. She was a little overweight. Say 30 pounds.

Put this altogether and what you have s a very important lesson for both men and women, namely:

A little bit goes a long way.

HOW HARD WOULD IT BE FOR HER TO DYE HER HAIR AND WALK 5 MILES A DAY????

How hard?

And for that little expenditure of effort you could see her improving DRAMATICALLY.

Same thing for the guy.

Get rid of the 70's hair cut and the pedophile attire, hit the gym, BLAMO!

Hot couple on the block!

But no. No no no no no.

If you saw the two interact you would KNOW the lady, "loves the way she is and if society can't accept her then blah blah blah blah blah."

The guy, "Well, I'm in charge of the money and well yeah, I guess we can blah blah blah blah."

The only reason I'm writing this is I see two GOOD LOOKING PEOPLE hidden in a thin veil of laziness. and that is the lesson you should take from this. Just a little effort people, just a little freaking effort, and the pay off would be amazing.

But no, I know, I know. Your ego and emotion is all that matters. Looks are shallow. Who wants looks when you can have mundacity and mediocrity and not look like a million bucks walking down the street.

Cripes.

D'oh Jesus

October 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For Bill Burr fans.

If you don't know why this is funny then start listening to the Bill Burr Podcast.

Off to Jamaica

October 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings Economists, Children, and Lieutenants,

I'm off to Jamaica so the blog will be on auto pilot with links and other minimal efforts on my part for the next couple of days. I will unlikely access it from Jamaica, because to be honest I don't trust the internet connection from being hacked. Ergo, it's only the most basic of work I'll be doing on teh interwebz. E-mail will also be minimal.

There will be a podcast however, posted later today, that's if I ever get indoors because it's gorgeous outside.

Stefan Molyneux in for the Captain #1

October 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ripping apart Hannah Montana.

And It is the Indians Who Will Suffer

October 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have a friend from India. When he (and his family) came here they stocked up on electronics because, as he explained, they don't have large companies like Wal-Mart and such items can cost twice that in the US.

So you would think a country like India, with hundreds of millions of poor, would benefit greatly if a company could come in and overnight boost their purchasing power, and thus, standards of living by 20-50% (depending on which items you'd like to compare).

Well, you are right. It WOULD benefit pretty much every Indian. It WOULD be the single largest advancement and improvement in the world of economics this year. But those socialists and ignoramouses are (as you would expect) attaching so many strings to Wal-Mart setting up shop, they've now scrubbed their plans to expand into India.

This is how leftists unintentionally hurt those they so hypocritically claim to want to help.

Are the Young Kids Finally Waking Up???

October 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've seen enrollment dropping for college classes and a general disregard for liberal arts degrees among younger circles. This is a good thing, too bad it took a generation of older brothers and sisters to get their asses handed to them so their younger siblings wouldn't make the same mistake.

However, this is also heartening. Younger college students blaming democrats and the left.

I still contend, however, the best allies the republicans and conservatives/liberatarians have would be what would be considered "safe" demographic groups for liberals. College students and minority males. But this would require the GOP to wake up and try some new tactics. Maybe they can nominate another milquetoast nice-haired-billionaire for president.

Pre-Planned Dropped Post

October 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Today's total cop out of me writing comes from Joe Soucheray.

Attaining Equality to Men

October 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Step 1 - Stop complaining. Men don't complain, let alone about such petty and minor things like this.

Why Fat Shaming is Unnecessary

October 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I saw this and remembered it is/was Fat Shaming Week, but had not been able to write as I was in Jamaica enjoying life. But as I flew back on the plane and the battery to my laptop dwindled, my mind wandered and as it is wont to do it came up with an observation:

Fat shaming is unnecessary.

The reason why is look at who fat shaming is aimed at - people pushing fat acceptance.

If the goal was to get people who we like, but are also fat the negative reinforcement needed to lose weight, live healthier and better lives, then fat shaming is (in all truth) kindness and tough fatherly love. But since fat acceptance is pushed by delusional (typically), leftist people, intent on destroying yet another fabric of society, the goal of fat shaming is to cause them pain, grief, mock them and ridicule them.

But let me suggest another route if you truly want to get your "revenge" on people who are increasingly responsible for the decreasing beauty in humans and push fat acceptance:

Let them keep pushing fat acceptance.

The reason why is simple - they're wrong. And in being wrong, no matter how much they try to convince themselves otherwise, they are in the end being delusional. Living in a false world. Living a lie. They are trying to change a law of nature - men like trim chicks - and no matter how much effort they put into it, they are guaranteed to fail as it is no different than trying to change the law of gravity.

The consequences of this are far more punishing and brutal than any kind of fat shaming campaign done on the internet. Their health WILL BE worse. Their love lives WILL BE non-existent. Their careers WILL BE a fraction of what they could achieve. And, worst of all, they have to spend years in mental energies constantly rationalizing it.

In the end these are people who love food more than other human beings, including themselves. In doing so, they will never get to interact with and engage other humans (the most important thing on Earth) to the capacity normal humans do. And in doing so, they will waste the one life they have on this planet.

Us merely shaming them and pointing out what idiots they are, not only is likely to go unheeded, but in the off chance they listen, they might actually benefit from it. Ergo, my friends who work hard at staying in shape, take joy in the just what miserable lives these people lead.

More Views from My Location-Independent Office

October 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Remember kids, you're a loser if you don't commute, pay for parking, work in a cubicle, or have to sit in meetings. Those are real jobs real men and women take. Losers like you work from home or where ever you want because you "couldn't hack it in the real world."

Air Ambulance

October 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you are looking for an air ambulance, look no further, consider one of our sponsors, Express Air Medical Transport. Prompt, fast, efficient and professional, these guys have medical, security and flight staff to ensure your flight is as safe and secure as possible.

Visit their web site here or give them a call at 1-800-304-8094.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

October 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

One of the things I'm going to enjoy in the future is watching these children grow up and completely flail about in society, clueless as to how the real world works. It will also be entertaining to see if their parent (yes, that's singular, not plural), will care their children are suffering. Because my cynical (yet, constantly being proved right) gut tells me they never really cared all that much for these kids in the first place.

Leasing Beauty

October 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have a friend who is now on his third Russian mail order bride. Every stereotype you are having right now about him is correct. But what I couldn't understand is after the first two ditched him (one with a kid), cheated on him, and split once they got citizenship, why he opted for a third.

But the little hot librarian in my mind decided to search through the ole Captain's mental archives and pulled something she deemed relevant and might explain it:

When he was looking for his second wife he was insistent on showing me her picture (along with all the other girls he was considering) on the dating/mail order bride site.

In hindsight what this tells me is that he never viewed these women as potential spouses, mates or wifey like material, but rather things or objects (albeit luxurious). He was literally shopping for a young, hot, woman in an online catalogue, no different that if he were looking for shoes on Amazon.com. What's worse is that despite the HA-YOOOOGE price he has paid for his past two mail order brides, he is going at it again, with surprisingly little remorse, let alone fear. In other words his hind economic-lizard brain has made the calculation that it is worth it. It is worth the risk and the likely price to have a hot, young mail order bride that he probably really couldn't care less about emotionally.

But then it occurred to me what was really happening on an economic level:

He was merely leasing beauty.

While we can all understand men wanting to be with pretty women as opposed to ugly ones, and preferring to have sex with hot girls instead of fat ones, what I cannot understand is the psychology that drives some men to pay to merely be with and seen with a hot chick. But just because I personally can't understand it, doesn't mean it doesn't happen and doesn't mean there isn't a market. This is a real economic phenomenon that I cannot deny exists.

However, my best economic explanation of what we are viewing (and thus an explanation of why some men do this) is that it is a separate economic market from the traditional sexual market place. In the "normal" market place, normal men and women meet, date, court and kind of stumble their way towards marriage. I would estimate this accounts for 70% of men who (while maybe not all Clive Owen) are capable, no matter how clumsily, of invariably having enough charm and wit to score a mate. Of the remaining 30%, I would estimate 25% are either just fine on their own, MGTOW's, not interested, or are too afraid of rejection to go and attract a mate. But there's that 5% remaining who have no game or charm, but DO have enough money to essentially lease out women's attention at very high financial and emotional rates, and these guys make up this obscure market. But to them it makes perfect sense.

They don't need to go to clubs.
They don't need to work out.
They don't need to practice Walter Matthauish and Cary Grantish charm.

They just need to pay a price.
They just merely need to "buy" her attention.

And even when the attention dries up or she just skips town, the prospects of participating in the sexual market place to find another girl "the normal way" is still too daunting. So daunting in fact they'd rather "play it safe" and get MOB #2, #3, #4,...#n as long as the money doesn't run out.

I'm no fan of the meat market. Been there, done that, and I was what could have been considered "very successful." But I'd rather take my chances there than going to the ~~lease a whore~~ mail order bride market.

Manosphere Growth v. 20/20's

October 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The article, written by (undoubtedly) two leftist women is completely biased and passes off the Manosphere as a hate, misogyny, blah blah blah.

But permit me these points three:

1. How's ABC's viewership growth rate compared to The Manosphere and Alt Right econosphere? I'm experiencing 50% annual growth. Which is serving a growing market and which is stagnating, resting on its previous oligopoly status?

2. What is 20/20/ABC hoping to achieve with this? A "shaming and then they hopefully go away?" Again, I've said it before. We have nothing to lose (14:00 mark). Jobs? none. House? None. Wives? None. Country? None. And until there is genuine economic opportunity in the country this is the best use of our time.

3. Consequently, I can't wait to see their response when they read through the comments and it doesn't go their way.

Anyway, you guys wanted mainstream attention, well, now you got it. Might as well light up the comments section and show readers this isn't just a group of "angry meanie men who can't get laid."

Also, the "journalists."

Alyssa Pry - worthless degree, East coast, blah blah blah. You're heard it before.

And Alexa Valienti - Oooooh Diplomatic Relations degree!!!

Ug, you just can't make it up. It's sooooo predictable.

But there is something important to note here guys. Look at their resumes.

These are CHILDREN, young 20 something CHILDREN who have been given the cache and pull of a traditional media outlet like 20/20. HOw can you take their article seriously?

Millions of men unemployed, in debt, divorced, and with no hope for a future and two children with "Ambercrombie and Fitch" experience write an article daring to suggest you're all just a bunch of sexist whiners???

What this is, is proof of just how desperate, out of touch, and worthless the MSM is. It should also be an ego boost to those of us in the alternative media world.

It's So Bad You Now Pay to Work

October 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I want to go to work, pay my taxes, come home and not fucking think about it. I'm not a motivated self starting entrepreneur. I don't want an opportunity for growth. I don't need to sound cool to girls. That's what the book is for. Go to work and get paid and come home. Impossible. Jobs do not exist. The promise of a job is just a way for motivated self starting entrepreneurs to sell you something. The unemployed are a captive market. There is no money. There is only debt. What's out there is: you pay to work. Soon the whole economy will be like this.

The Manosphere Takes Down ABC

October 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And no, that is not hyperbole. It is fact. I've never seen such a pathetic and lopsided victory in my life.

The Pry, Valiente, ABC, 20/20 Thing Continues

October 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Staresattheworld

Kid Strangelove

Judgy Bitch

Rex

Stingray

Wouldn't have happened if the story was a legitimate piece of journalism.

Kathleen Mooney - Another Idiot Principal

October 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again, teachers do not care about the children. They care about their ideology and socialism.

R vs. K Type Breeding and How It Relates to Politics

October 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An interesting post and book review by Matt Forney.

Is Sandra Foehl Racist?

October 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because I have yet to find if Praise Martin-Oguike has been reinstated at Temple, given his scholarship back, and been let back on the football team. And if he hasn't, then I cannot help but conclude it's because of racism. Because that's the script academia would give

A Manless World

October 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's already here!

Again, a great entertainment I'm going to enjoy as I age.

Bachelor Pad Economics - November 2013

October 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Several very perceptive people have asked,

"Why are you getting all Drudgey?" indicating they have noticed my lack of quality, lengthy original posts and merely linking to other bloggers.

Very well played, observant Lieutenants, very well played.

I have been linking more than writing and the reason why is my new book:

Bachelor Pad Economics

I have been writing like a mad dog to get it finished for Black Friday and the thing is looking like it's going to come in around 400+ pages. It's about 40% done, but I am trying to knock out a chapter every 3 days.

Regardless, it is what I like to describe as "the young person's financial advice bible." It will be the most comprehensive financial road map for any young man looking to chart his financial future, as well as any young lady open minded enough to tolerate its blunt candor and occasional crass language.

I will also be looking for any bloggers/podcaster types interested in getting advanced digital copies, but in the meantime, I will be focusing most of my efforts on the new book.

Liberalism Really is a Mental Disorder

October 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have no patience for delusion or intellectual dishonesty. It's largely why I don't have any liberal or leftists friends and if I do, they are honest people, but misinformed and haven't spent the time needed to become an informed citizen. Heck, I can't even say that as nearly every one of my liberal friends in college are now libertarian or conservative. Regardless, the reason I do not brook intellectual dishonesty of delusion is because I am sane. I am an adult. I live in the real world.

This cannot be said of the vast majority of leftists and liberals.

This isn't to slam on them. This isn't to over simplify an issue in order to dismiss an entire ideology.

It's true.

Leftists do not adhere to reality or act like adults.

You see this everyday and it gets frustrating.

Liberal - "We need to spend more money"

You - "How much more?"

Liberal - "I um...don't know. BUT WE NEED MORE!"

You - "How can you advocate spending more when you don't even know what we spend in the first place?"

Or another.

Liberal - "Racism is why the blacks aren't doing well as whites."

You - "While racism may exist in the form of Cletus the trailer park schmuck in Casper, Wyoming, the real reason blacks suffer such lower standards of living is because they have a 70% illegitimate birth rate."

Liberal - "RACIST!!!"

Had I still some hope for the future of the country, I might care to try to convince or explain to my leftist brothers and sisters why they're wrong, but you can't because...

they have a mental condition.

I don't know about you, but my time is precious to me, and if I can't convince somebody with statistics, logic, reason and reality, then I'm never going to convince them. Some idiots recently made some comments on my youtube video about "The Reality Principle." They essentially said that they agreed with my concept (that you shoudl live in reality), but that i was completely forgetting the humanity aspect of humans. That they have emotions. And in ignoring that part, I was wrong.

It was such idiotic and outlandish bullshit because they actually think their feelings and emotions are just as valid as reality.

You - "Look out! Here comes a train!"

Liberal - "Yeah, but I feel that the train isn't coming."

Of course, that analogy is a bit simple and outlandish, but consider feminists (the most psychologically damaged of them all) who have gone to such delusional lengths as to claim things like the scientific method and math is sexist. So exactly how do you argue with them?

You can't.

You can't argue or debate an insane person.

What I find particularly interesting, not to mention scary at the same time, is just what a high percentage of the population has this mental condition. Yes, a lot of it is just brainwashing. The young 21 year old suburbanite girl majoring in philosophy may not actually have a mental condition. Yes, the young black man is likely to blame everything on racism, because of brainwashing. But what gets me is when this brainwashing solidifies, rendering them imperviousness to any attempt to an alternative explanation of reality. At this point I don't know if it's brainwashing or an actual mental problem, but it still presents me the same problem (though I've had better luck getting some of our black brothers to wake up than Tilly the English Major). Ultimately, I fear the liberal zombie (which I've written about before) where you're no longer dealing with a sane human, capable of reason and independent thought, but a highly functional zombie that doesn't want to eat your brains, as much as they want to take your money.

Thank god I have neither.

Everybody Can Go a "Little Galt"

October 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The most common criticism I received about Enjoy the Decline (as well as most of my writing and ranting) is that "not all of us are 30 year old, childless bachelors like you. We can't just up and quit. We have a house and a family to consider."

Which I understand.

But when I say "go Galt" or "Enjoy the Decline" or participate in minimalism, I'm not saying, sell the house, buy a trailer, quit your job, and then go work the occasional security shift (though I do say that) as much as I am saying, "work as little as you possibly can." Because even if you don't go full Thoreau, if everybody "just goes a little Galt" the effect on socialists and leftists in the country would be devastating.

Understand just how sad and pathetic our GDP and economic growth is. A normal, healthy economy should be growing around 4% a year. It is my opinion any economy is capable of 10% a year. But we're happy with a measly 1.8% a year today (hell, as long as it's positive, that's fine by us and our new lowered affirmative action standards we're applying to our president).

But just because we're happy with 1.8% doesn't mean our creditors are. Also, pension funds (which are dependent upon perpetually increasing stock prices which are dependent upon perpetually increasing profits which are dependent upon a growing economy) and the people who rely upon them are also not going to be happy with 1.8%. In short everything we've promised ourselves and our creditors has to come from economic growth, and if it becomes very apparent we can't provide enough economic growth then they will....

are you ready for it?

cut us off and rush-sell their stocks.

This would bring about an immediate and required cutting of spending as the government would have nowhere else to go to get the money. The economy isn't growing enough, the Chinese won't lend us more. They will have to cut spending.

But isn't this what we've been wanting? To bring the system down? To end the socialism and starve out the socialists and the parasitic classes?

The great thing is that because or economic growth is so low and sclerotic, it would only take a little bit of scaling back to bring economic growth into negative territory. Since consumer spending accounts for 66% of GDP, if everybody just cut their budgets by 5% that would lop off 3.3% economic growth, sending us thoroughly into economic contraction and rattling markets. If you could manage to cut 10% from your budget, that would send us into a deep recession and force economic reality and action on congress and the president.

The question is can you cut 10% from your current spending? Most people can.

I visited a mall the other day and I my economic spidey senses started telling me to roughly estimate what percent of the stores were selling worthless crap women primary buy and have no practical use in the real world ("SWCWPBAHNPUITRW Stores"). After ballparking it I realized about 90% of the stores were SWCWPBAHNPUITRW Stores.

Clothing
Trinkets
Gadgets
More clothing
Jewelry
Accessories

You name it, we could nuke all of the country's malls tomorrow and we would get by just fine.

But that's what you have to realize. You don't need all of that crap, ESPECIALLY YOU LADIES.

So if you want to get back at the socialists. You want to make the welfare classes actually feel some pain. You want to raze the economy so we have a shot at rebuilding it correctly the next time, then time to start going "A Little Galt."

I Could Use Some Manosphere Brains

October 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy all,

I am currently writing the chapter on girls for my new book "Bachelor Pad Economics." I have a streamlined and succinct outline, and pretty much know what I'm going to write, but I also appreciate having more than one brain on this subject.

If any of you could be so kind as to list the major and key tenets of wisdom we have theorized and flushed out in our little itnernet endeavor I would appreciate it. I think I have "most of it" but I know I am missing somethign.

So you know how broad or specific of examples I'm looking for I already have:

Leanring to ride motorcycles
Vasectomies/protecting against false pregnancy claims
The use of booze to get laid it's cheaper to get a hooker than to find an actual girl

etc. etc.

In general any specific advice that I may miss. Please post in comments. My thanks in advance.

Cappy

Not Another 70's Movie

October 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I am intrigued by Ed's (quite extensive) analysis of 1970's film and the 1970's filming industry. I was not really cognizant of these goings-on's at the time, but I do know that a genre of 70's flicks I thoroughly enjoy are the Spaghetti Westerns. Of course not American, but probably the best film production from that decade.

Mayor Naheed Nenshi

October 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Am I correct in assuming Naheed Nenshi is one of those affirmative action mayors who was voted into town by the city's degenerate classes who do nothing of economic production, but pride themselves off of fanciful leftist causes like multi-culturalism, global warming, and other faux crusades? Hmmm....just like our president.

Well you Calgarians enjoy your little municipal decline for electing a potty mouthed child. At least our president acts presidential in that one regard.

Cripes.

Done With the 20/20 Piece

October 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This will be my last post on the 20/20 piece.

When we freed the Philippines we didn't sit and stare at our navels contemplating about our awesomeness.

We moved on to nuke Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Plenty more work to do, and against enemies just as evil as the 40's Japanese fanatics.

So let us not dwell.

No Mo White People In Marketing

October 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Funny thing I noticed when I was in Jamaica.

Their advertisements had more white people than ours (US) did.

I found this odd because I was (as far as I could tell) the only white boy to leave the plantation (aka - the resort) and take a 7 mile run into the city (Montego Bay) and explore it a bit.

I noticed many things.

Like the Jamaican version of Wal-Mart near the Catherine Hall neighborhood. Very efficient. Very effective. And despite the guards, that place has improved standards of living in the area by at least 10%.

Or the twin boys who saw me and started yelling "white man! white man!" until I had to explain to their older brother/father that I wanted to see Jamaica, not America's version of it.

Or the taxi cabs that kept pulling over, honking their horns, thinking I was lost because I was a white man...even though I had running shoes...a running shirt...and I was...um...running.

But what stuck with me the most was the number of white people on their advertisements. Be it TV, the billboards, or what have you, there were nothing but white people. But far as my eye could see, I was the only white guy around. Matter of fact, I can guarantee you I was the only white guy around. Ergo, why i found it a bit insulting to the locals that they had to suffer advertisements and billboards that foisted white people down their throats.

Ergo why me and some people and the Catherine Hall residents may have something in common.

We're sick of the powers that be forcing diversity down our throats.

Go north 2,000 miles and I'm sick of Target's shit where they force minority faces in my face. This is no slander nor slight against my non-white brothers or sisters, but a disgust as to how they condescendingly placate them to eek out that extra 3% market share while ignoring their real market. I look at the advertisements and it's all minorities. But I look at the shoppers at Target and they're all wonderbread white.

Yeah, Target, we got it!

All of us got the freaking memo passed on since the early freaking 90's.

There are non-white people in our mix. We like 'em. We hang out with 'em. Sometimes we try to outdo each other in glorious rhetorical battle as we recite our "worst racist jokes" whilst doing shots of Jack Daniels bringing us closer together than your CSR department ever will.

Now can you stop it with the mixed-raced 14 year old pedophile-inciting models while I'm trying to pick up a freaking belt???

But, no, I know. Your corporate MBA executive types have nothing left up their sleeves. Instead of innovation, creativity, and lower prices that would actually help all colors of all people, we need to keep harping on this baby boomer, leftist bullshit of "diversity" and "corporate social repsonsibility" and "unicorns" and "job-farting half-white half-black presidents."

Good thing the 1990's education system brainwashed all those now guilt-ridden, middle aged, suburbanite white women into buying shit at your stores just because you showcase minorities as 90% of your models. Because it sure as hell ain't fooling the non-white folk.

Cripes.

If You're Going to Rape, Rape Swedish Girls

October 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The shocking title of this post is purposeful and noble.

It is to point out the outlandishness and true risk an unchecked feminist society presents to those it portends to protect- women.

Understand that feminism is merely a cloak, a ruse, if you will, to shield it's ulterior motive - marxism. It's ulterior goal is to bring down the productive classes, spread the wealth, and bladdity blah blah blah.

But it doesn't care who it destroys along in the process. Ergo why Sweden is one of the most "feminist" countries in the world, but suffers a wee-bit higher rape rate than others. Women are not the goal of feminism, but rather tools to advance the aims of marxists masquerading as feminists. And if women get raped at a rate similar to Lesotho, well, so be it, it's all for the "cause."

Despite my action in posting this (which would suggest a compassion on my part) I personally don't care. I've become too immune to the plight of women after having it shoved down my throat since the late 80's while watching them have every advantage of affirmative action, media, and government, also while hearing how evil and sexist and bigoted I was even though I presumably thought I rather enjoyed the company of women.

So now, I enjoy watching Sweden, and its women, who are further down the rabbit hole than we are here in the US, suffer their own self-inflicted wounds. I enjoy watching the fruits of the labor of feminists, marxists, and socialists as they mire in their own mud.

You girls keep going! "Grrrrrll power!!!! Moxie!! Yeaaa!!!"

I'm just going to light up a cigar as you embrace global warming, the state, and diversity as your gods and saviors and watch the consequences destroy you and your nation much like I enjoy watching "Die Hard" or "Tropic Thunder."

Enjoy the decline! Or as they say in Sweden

Njut av Nedgången!

Why Corporations Can Go To Hell

October 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because there's no amount of money that can compensate for non-monetary stuff like this.

But by all means people. Keep slaving away for that mortgage.

(Post Post - Does anybody know if Bill Watterson is out of retirement? The copyright date on it shows 2013) and is nothing more than an affirmative action industry to employ talentless people.

The Secret to Losing Weight

October 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's all very complicated.

Thomas Sowell is Much Better Spoken Than I

October 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Two videos for you today Cappy Cappites.

One, this early morning video I put together explaining quite clearly what this blog and others like it stand for when it comes to race/gender/ethnic relations.

Two, Dr. Thomas Sowell demonstrating exactly who is the enemy advancing a political agenda and who is capable of intellectual honesty and truth.

What Did I Tell You About 401k's and IRA's?

October 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Did Paul Krugman predict this? Did he? Cause I thought he was this great economist able to get the country's economy booming again.

Damn, not only am I better economist, I'm better looking too.

The Most Clean Cleans

October 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Since the age of 18 I have managed, without female intervention or supervision, to bathe regularly,

floss and brush my teeth,
prevent myself from starving,
clean my humble abode,
do laundry,
not starve

and a whole host of other things that have kept me alive and in reasonably good physical condition and health.

Enter the ladies.

Not one girl in the history of girls could just leave my place well enough alone.

No this must be cleaned.

No this must be put away.

No these clothes must be folded (which I know for a fact they don't because I haven't folded clothes since 1993 and the world has yet to spontaneously explode).

So permit me a new rule in the little lexicon of Cappy Cap;

"The most cleansed cleans."

You see, I clean to a standard that I find is necessary and eliminates biological messes and threats. Ergo the toilet is normally cleaned as is the sink, but the papers on my desk are not. The showed is scrubbed down with bleach when needed, but the clothes will remain in their respective "clean" and "dirty" piles until I do laundry.

Naturally this upsets those of the female persuasion.

"Why doesn't he KNOW that's NOT where the clothes go!!"

"Doesn't he KNOW that's NOT how papers should be stacked!!!?"

So the answer is simple - "If it's bothering you that much, then clean."

This rule solves that vast majority of domestic excuses between the men and the ladies. If you don't like the standards of a certain aspect of the house, then by all means upgrade it to your satisfaction. It's already up to mine, ergo, any further cleanliness is up to you.

But don't be so quick to think it is a cheap way for men to get out of cleaning. Consider the maintenance of the house and other fixed assets.

If left to the devices of women oil would be changed once every 63,000 miles and air filters never. The roof would be curled and warped as the shingles would be approaching 80 years old. And siding would be falling off as the first brisk fall breeze would come through. It is merely an issue of who has the lowest tolerance that determines who does what work.

Thus, instead of fighting and complaining, perhaps everybody should clean, maintain and do chores to their own personal level and not somehow view this as somebody too damn lazy to do it and thus "being their slave."

This has been a PSA from Cappy Cap.

Imagine a World Without "NAWALT"

October 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was reading this piece and it reminded me of a theory I had been concocting. This piece, however, promoted it to "fully realized and understood thought in the frontal lobes so now I can write about it" status.

There is only a certain, finite amount of time you, me, and everybody else on this planet has. And a natural, engrained, darwinistic response you get when behind someone in traffic, or the vile and contemptible person who pulls out an order for her entire office in the line at Subway or Chipolte, is one of anger.

The reason why is they're killing you.

Oh, admittedly, not ending your life at that moment, but forcing you to waste precious seconds, and delaying your life by those precious seconds. Seconds that add up over the years to be at least by my estimation a month of extra life.

Now while we can all exchange stories about idiots in line or rush hour caused by three old people, there is another stalling or delaying in our lives and that is bad conversation.

For example, my girlfriend will accidentally send me from zero to "About to murder the Eastern Seaboard" in barely a microsecond as she unconsciously asks me the same question three times. Women do this not because they actually want your answer to something, but they think in merely rephrasing the question, you'll give them the answer they're looking for.

"Do you want to go to the movies?"

"No."

"Well aren't there any movies you want to see though?"

"No."

"Well, I thought you said you wanted to see Movie X."

"FOR THE THIRD BLEEPING TIME WOMAN!!! NO!!!!"

But this is actually an endearing eccentricity of women. One I really have no choice in accepting. But another example of how bad conversation delays things is when you are in debate. And it is here I have no patience whatsoever. Ergo, why I bring up NAWALT.

What if we didn't ever have to bring up NAWALT again? What if people got it the first time, and would then save us the hours of arguing, "well, I know most women are like that, but you see, this one girl, blah blah blah blah blah...."

And not just NAWALT, but what if every fount and bit of knowledge, wisdom, concept and fact was agreed upon and never questioned again?

Could you imagine how much faster our philosophical understanding would advance? Could you imagine the intellectual epiphanies and observations we'd come to realize?

It's akin to "if the Roman empire didn't collapse, we'd have made it to the moon by 1617."

Except I'm not asking the Roman Empire to not collapse. I'm merely asking (both men and women) to acknowledge and incorporate previous knowledge and information so that we may advance the freaking conversation instead of having to constantly revisit and reaffirm things we already know to be true.

Imagine the speed and clarity debates and conversation would have.

But no. Oh, no.

I gotta deal with people playing semantic games, asking me "what is racism?" I gotta deal with women who insist that though my empirical chart shows women earn the majority of easy degrees, they know this ONE person (at band camp) who majored in engineering. I gotta deal with some schmutz who purposely chooses to ignore my larger point and barf all over the technicalities to prove he's smart and that technically my point was only 98% correct. All of which, sapping out my finite life by the second to address these petty and intellectually dishonest contentions.

So I want to come up with a new acronym. Something that says, "We Fucking Covered That Already and All Agreed Upon It Now Can We Move On for the Sake of Future Generations?"

But "WFCTAAAAUINCWMOFTSOFG" seems a bit unwieldy. Perhaps, "It's Been Settled." IBS. Or "Say, Have U Talked to Us about this Previously?" SHUTUP?

I don't know. I just know it would be nice to move a lightning speed while talking about different topics instead of holding up for the NAWALT/technicality/semantics short bus.

Why "LIFT" Won't End Poverty

October 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm sick of non-profits, headed up by talentless liberal arts majors, claiming they going to "end poverty."

Really? Like in Africa and Central America and all these other places the peace corps types go.

You know what would be great. If just once, JUST ONCE you people were actually successful and not merely pissing away millions of dollars playing, "Adventure Liberal Arts Major!"

ONE!!!!

NAME ONE PROBLEM SOLVED BY THE LEFT!!!!

Paul Thornton of the LA Times

October 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Attention, Attention
I Have a poem
Attention, Attention
I have a poem

LA Tiiiiiimmmmmes
LA Timmmmmmmess?

You think you're better than us?

Than us???

U S.

U S A.

No way!

(for those of you unfamiliar why the above is funny, here is the context)

Jacob Gago

October 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Before I upload (heck, record) the latest podcast wanted to give credit to Jacob Gago who was kind enough to let me use his music for an intro to the podcast. Figured there must be some law or rule against just using music from different songs from my CD collection.

His genre is club/mixed/DJ music, may not be your cup of tea, but for those ravers out there in the Capposphere, you will be impressed.

Latest Clarey Podcast!

October 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Aaron wonders if the children of liberals will ever visit their parents in the nursing home given how bad they screwed up the country, wonders if leftists are capable of admitting 1/3rd of the country is collecting a check, finally figures out why he hates people who wait in line (they're SWPL's!), theorizes if Chick-a-Fillet will ever live up to the hype, and explains why cutting and hauling wood is manly in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

SMV is Real

October 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Uh oh! Science and statistics!

Good thing feminists don't believe in science and math.

But "It's For the Children"

October 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I crack me up.

The Captain Meets The Property Brothers

October 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yes, they are that tall.
Yes, I am that short.
And no, they did not inherit it all. Those guys busted their asses off to get where they are today (business success, not tallness).

The Best Explanation of the Manosphere I've Ever Heard

October 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If there is an unbiased, truthful counterpart to the hit piece by ABC

AND is hands down the best explanation of what the Manosphere really is this is it.

And what's great about it, is the people who would benefit most from this would be women.

How Leftist Women Want to Destroy the Careers of Men

October 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The "Snitchy Bitch" (my latest article at Return of Kings) is up for consumption.

And let me be clear about this.

The "Snitchy Bitch" is not some kind of sophomoric term I assign to some "crazy" women.

It is a real threat. A threat that is just as real and predictable as the housing bubble.

After 40 years of feminists/leftist indoctrination, there are millions of young women who think their "job" is not to produce anything of economic worth, but to whine tattle tale and report

NARC

men out to their superiors to get them fired should said men offend the ever increasingly fragile sensibilities of women.

Does this advance the economy?

No.

Does this increase efficiency?

No.

But it makes a bunch of pampered, spoiled, liberal-arts-majoring-girls feel COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE

"Empowered."

So my argument is simple.

If society has so decayed to the point it kowtows to leftist tattle tales, that you will fire a man, who works hard and earns his economic merit, because some whinny snively

20 something
CHILD

files a complaint and what he said on teh interwebz, then by all means said employer, you fire that man. You go right ahead.

Because in the end following such a route will result in non-profitability because you're only firing your most productive assets and replacing it with a incompetent woman-child who is more vested "CSR" and "diversity" than profit and excellence. So enjoy that "women's empowerment" initiative or "diversity campaign" your HR and CSR departments are jamming down your throats while you try to figure out how to fund your pension plan.

Cripes.

The Single Father Deficit Crisis

October 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I hadn't been up more than 40 minutes before I was already pelted with another piece of leftist-religious propaganda telling me I should man up and start dating single mothers.

After the initial rage and anger subdued, however, I had a clear and intriguing thought:

"Why am I, a childless bachelor who didn't torpedo his life with an unwanted child, constantly asked, nearly commanded, to date and court single moms? Why are bachelors in general even a part of this? Shouldn't there be just as many single dads to go and date these single moms??? Why don't they go date themselves and leave us childless people alone?"

So my brain did some thinking in the shower.

What if there was a shortage of single dads? What if there were more single mothers than there were single fathers, thereby necessitating us childless bachelors who didn't screw up our lives go in and sop up the surplus supply of single moms.

It's certainly possible because a man can impregnate multiple women. Say a real Casanova, who's a little lax on the use of birth control knocks up three women. In this case you have ONE father, but THREE mothers, two of which at minimum have to be single mothers. However, it is also possible for there to be more fathers than there are mothers. A woman can have multiple children with multiple men resulting in a shortage of single moms. The question then becomes which scenario is more likely.

Based on the OK Cupid study (where women rated 80% of men unattractive) it suggests a classical 80/20 scenario where 20% of the men are making off with 80% of the women. You also throw in the natural tendency for women to trade up, it becomes more likely a scenario where you have fewer men knocking up more women, than more women getting impregnated by fewer men.

Then I realized something as stoking the morning fire.

"Hey! I'm an economist! And there's the Census Bureau! Why don't I just look up how many fathers there are in the country and how many mothers there are in the country and that will prove whether or not there is a surplus or deficit of fathers."

And shucks howdy, what do you know.

There are only 70.1 million fathers in the US

While there are 85.4 million mothers.

This means (optimistically assuming all fathers are married, which they're not) there's at least a surplus of 15 million single mothers.

Now, in all intellectual honesty, some of this can be chalked up to men dying before women. In other words grandpa kicks off and grandma is still alive, but grandma is not looking for a new man to save her. I tried to find data at the Census Bureau that would address age, but their data tables do not delve into that level of detail. Regardless, I think it is such a deficit that it can be safely assumed (until somebody wishes to do the research to prove otherwise) there are millions more single mothers looking to date than there are single fathers available because of the "Casanova Effect" (or whatever you want to call it).

In truth, this should be insulting to most bachelors who kept their nose clean. It means you have some of these women doing the 80/20 thing, thinking only 20% of men are good looking enough to sleep with, while the remaining 80% of you schmoes are not worth it....

That is until they get pregnant and then need you single, childless, non-screwed up "schmoes" to bail them out.

The truth is you already are financially bailing them out. In collecting things like WIC, EBT, and scores of other forms of government aid, not to mention the entire public school system, these women disproportionately force you to pay higher taxes for children that aren't even yours. You needn't pay double by giving them your company, affection and attention.

Sex With Dinosaurs - The Latest Harlequin Trend

October 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

As if vampires and werewolves weren't bad enough.

From a Fan

October 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What this is, is testament to the fact that you will have more trust in people who pick on you, ridicule you, and mock you, more than you will people who kiss your ass.

How Danny Deprived Welfare Bums $600,000

October 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Danny is one of those guys who did what "I would have done had I to do it all over again."

Knock out 20 years in the military and take a pension at 39.

But I did some very quick math. Since the socialists and government has driven him to go Galt, what would he have contributed to society had he not been deterred?

Well, he would presumably work another 30 years until he was 70. Pro-rate it at $50,000 per year and a 40% tax rate, that's $600,000 that will NOT be going to welfare bums, whiners, complainers and other general parasites on society.

Now imagine if you will the 75 million male workers in America just saying, "to hell with it, I'm done. It's minimalism for me."

If they did that it would cost the government/parasitic classes $45 trillion.

You want to talk about how to win this war, there's your ticket.

Ladies Night Linkage

October 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Some linkage love for all the ladies out there in the Cappysphere.

Leslie is doing some research. It's kind of chicky, but it is ladies' night linkage. Perhaps you can assist.

Judged not by the color of his skin, but his character...or..wait..unless you are the federal government.

They're not learning anything anyway. Besides, there's no jobs for them either.

Again, I ask, since when did "women's work" become criminal, condescending and unimportant? Who villainized it and said it wasn't necessary let alone beneath men's work?

No wonder it got 670 comments.

This is why I refuse to take public transportation...among many other reasons.

This is why I refuse to buy cars the government tells me to.

Does Stephen Harper get any credit for navigating the worst recession in 70 years putting Canada well ahead the US? No, no, the Canadian leftist media needs to tell the sheeple how to think and vote.

I went as "Archer with Tactileneck" for Halloween and I pulled off an awesome job. Jennifer also has pulled off an awesome job AND it is a costume that doesn't suck.

Our Ukrainian Agent in the Field warns of Russian credit card scams.

This outdoes birthing music. Remember kids, you weren't had for you, you were had for mommy. Why else do you think you were dropped off at daycare?

Mercy, porn is beating out flesh and blood women.

You're "kinda bitter" about the baby boomer generation? I'm full on raging hatred and loathing of them.

Female privilege.

Let's raise your blood pressure!

Ladies (and men) don't be stupid like kids were in the 90's grunge day. Make yourself look presentable to society.

Economics is "The" Model to Explain Dating

October 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Always has been. Always will be.

We're Just Arguing Over Price

October 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Though I will point out it is men who are enabling this.

There is Nothing Noble About Being a Single Mother

October 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A rant-a-licious rant against single motherhood.

How Stefan Molyneux Saved My Economic Sanity

October 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There is nothing more annoying, agitating,

enraging,
insulting,
and angering

to me (and I presume most of you) than when I present a leftist or a liberal irrefutable economic data and proof they are just flat out wrong and then they proceed to worm out of it with the most flaccid and intellectually dishonest of lies.

More than once I've had a leftist resort to the pathetic and "admission of wrongness" excuse,

"well, my perception is my own reality."

Never have I ever wanted to cause physical harm to people more than in those instances.

I personally could never understand it. Here's the data, here's the logic, here's the reasoning, you're wrong.

WRONG WRONG WRONG!!!!

Only to have them retort in the liberal's version of "I know you are, but what am I?"

So after a while I gave up. If people are going to insist on being impervious to logic, fact and reason as Detroit collapses around them then how do you convince them? This is largely why this blog has gone from one of data, charts and statistics, to more of one of philosophy, rants, shame and mockery. If all the research, data, and empiricism I've expended considerable resources on is just going to be dismissed, fine. I'm switching to philosophy, ridiculing everybody, and am going to enjoy watching them suffer their own self-inflicted misery.

However, this mere switch never answered the burning question,

"What in the Patron Saint's Name of Frick is wrong with these people who refuse reality over ideology? What is their mental damage that they can't see the sky is blue?"

Enter in Stefan Molyneux.

I was listening to this podcast of his and at the 1hr 2min 20 second mark he answers it.

All I could say was "Why the hell didn't I see this before???"

This doesn't mean leftists and liberals won't stop destroying the country.

This doesn't mean leftists and liberals won't stop performing the most amazing mental acrobatics to rationalize believing in lies.

But it does mean you and I and every other sane person out there can now fully understand why these inferior humans consciously and purposely believe something they (probably) deep down inside know to be false, and will continue to be impervious to logic, reason, sanity, fact, data and intellectual honesty.

The Benefits of Avoiding Fatherhood

October 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An excellent piece by ROK.

There's Something Seriously Wrong With People Who Don't Like Tropic Thunder

October 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

How can't you like Tropic Thunder?

Today's Offie

October 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember, kids!

Work hard!
Pay taxes!
Commute!
And if you don't have a cubicle job at a corporate strip mall you "couldn't hack it in the real world."

Enjoy the decline!

"Victim-Predator"

October 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Thank you!

I was looking for a term for people who are too lazy to work real jobs and so they rely on their skin color ethnicity sex sexual preference religion,

etc

to claim victim status and thus rationalize the theft of other people's money and now we have one!

Victim Predator!

A Rant Against Spoiled Brat College Students

November 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A curse-laden rant as college students are complaining about their student loan interest rates going up to almost 4%.

Remember, inoculate your children against this horrible disease. Buy them the book "Worthless." It will make sure they're immune to living at home at 30.

Mike Rowe Should Be in the Next Expendables

November 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just how badass would that be to have Mike Rowe in Expendables 3?

100% completely badass, that's how badass it would be!

Don't Blame Capitalism for the Collapse of the US

November 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Blame socialism.

Punishing Liberal Millenials

November 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

But liberals, in contrast, are nice. Obama is cool. You chose petty fascism with a smile. Not a lot of thought went into it. Facts, evidence – these were mere distractions from the feelings-based validation that came from rejecting us wicked conservatives.

It's great because they punish themselves.

How We Fooled Women Into Thinking Work Was Great

November 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and more in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Neotony

November 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I really wish I could find people who were high level, intelligent thinkers. I mean, this low-brow, boring biological/philosophical talk just isn't stimulating at all (warning, it's a lengthy video, but if you know how to strip the audio from Youtube videos it makes for a great podcast)

Bravo Good Man

November 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Bra-freaking-vo.

Why You Should Sleep With Your Students

November 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me to be blunt...not that I wasn't previously.

You should totally sleep with your students.

Of course I am not speaking to K-12 employees or anybody who takes their teaching job seriously, but if you are like me and ended up teaching on a part time basis to adults, you should totally take advantage of your situation and sleep with your students.

The reasons are numerous and the drawbacks are nearly non-existent.

As a (male) instructor you are already put in a position of power and authority, granting you at least two more points on the scale of 1-10. I cannot count the number of women I seduced because I was a:

dance instructor economics professor financial advisor

It was almost effortless.

So why should you refuse the advantage if you are in an equal position of educational power?

Aren't you men working primarily to work up the money to hopefully convince a young lady to copulate with you? Why work so hard when your profession will do that job for you?

Also, unless you are really attached to your job or you are teaching minors, does it really pay enough for you to start having morals?

Sure, there were rules against professors dating their students.

Sure, there were rules against me fornicating with my apprentices.

But there weren't any rules after class ended. And there certainly weren't any rules after they graduated. Besides, no girl is going to rat you out and if she does you at most lost a job that paid a lousy $18/hour and had no job stability.

The larger point is simply this:

Out of every bit of game and strategy I've ever ran, it was "Teacher Game" that got me the most play. Being an economist scored me nothing. But being an "economics professor" scored me at least three nubile girls. Being a salsa dancer was fine. I think I got a couple dates. But being a salsa dance instructor score me much more.

It is the position of power a teacher/professor/instructor has that grants him a HUGE advantage when it comes to seducing women. So instead of going down to the night club and perfecting your "negging" skills, may I perhaps suggest an alternative?

Go to your local community college or community education department and "selflessly" become a teacher of one sort or another.

Women under your tutelage are much easier than women at the bar.

If Feminists Are So Independent

November 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

then why do they constantly need taxpayer money?

Why Post-Scarcity Economics is Scary

November 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Follow along if you will on a mental exercise in post-scarcity economics.

"Post Scarcity" is basically a utopian ideal of economists. It means everything is free because things are no longer scarce. Matter of fact the entire study of economics would be unnecessary in a world where resources were unlimitedly plentiful and not scarce. But to really wrap your brain around the concept of "post scarcity" you have to understand what it really means.

If resources were unlimited, everything would be free. Cars would be free just as gumballs would be free. And because everything is free, then NOTHING would have value. There would be no prices. Just "stuff."

You can kind of imagine this if you've ever seen Star Trek where they have the replicator. As a child you might say, "Well I'd replicate a ton of diamonds and be rich!" But the problem is there is no "rich" or "poor" in a post-scarcity economy. The diamonds have no value because they can be replicated ad-infinitum, just like everything else. Again, NOTHING would have value, NOTHING would have a price. Matter of fact in a TRULY 100% post scarcity economy, you wouldn't even have money, because, what would you buy? Everything is free.

Naturally, a 100% post-scarcity world is actually impossible. Even if we perfect 3 d printing, you need people to maintain the 3d printers, people to transport goods, electricity, not to mention maintain the infrastructure of society as well as some government services to manage the humans. But what is interesting about economics (and humanity) is that though a 100% pure post-scarcity economy is impossible, we are constantly, asymptotically approaching it. Just 100 years ago food was kind of a huge issue. Now it isn't. Just 250 year ago, electricity was a huge issue (non-existent). Now it isn't. And thus, though we will never have EVERYTHING be truly free, because of technological advances, we are constantly closing in on that post scarcity goal.

This then leads the human mind into an interesting world. If 3d printers actually deliver on all of their promises, it will be the first time in human history where your physical needs are met at zero or near zero cost. This then behooves the question:

"What will humans do or pursue in life?"

Realize you, me and everybody else works a fair percentage of our lives working up the money to pay for everything. But if "everything" (or most everything) were free, what would the economy be about then? What would humans work and live for?

The answer is other humans.

Specifically, sex and attention.

Imagine again there is no such thing as money. Material goods and physical possessions are limitlessly abundant. What would then have any kind of value in this society and economy? Well, with physical goods being completely free, the only thing would be non-physical goods or services, namely provided by humans. And because of our binary sexual nature, this would leave only two goods or services left to be traded.

Sex and attention.

Men would want sex from women and women would want attention from men.

Of course, this trade has always been going on, but has been confused or complicated with physical goods. Men needed to display their income earning potential to convince women that are good providers, so they would buy "expensive stuffs" like sports cars, Rolexes, etc. to peacock around. But, alas, in a post-scarcity world, this role would be rendered obsolete, relegating the man solely to his ability to provide attention to score some sex. Women would also face a much more simplified economy. Instead of having to work all those extra hours to buy a pravda purse and pay off her Masters Degree in English, she now just has to earn mens' attention by solely focusing on her physical beauty. And this is where it gets scary.

Though it's impossible to predict, as far as my SAEG (TM) tells me, a post scarcity world would be nothing more than a super, hyper-sexualized world where the last remaining economy is purely based on men's ability to be ripped and buff, and women's ability to make themselves as pretty as possible. In other words, imagine Miley Ray Cyrus and roided up guys at the gym, but a hundred times more vain, slutty, and self-obsessed. Millions of them, all trying to outdo each other in order to garner the most about of sex/attention they can.

In short what would happen is an arms race based on narcissism, looks, beauty, and the like that would drive both the supply and demand curves to the right for sex and attention.

Normally, economists would agree this is a good thing. When the supply and demand curves for anything shift right, you have increased production but (assuming proportional increases in supply and demand) no increase in price. But my fear is at what human cost.

Humans are not cars or widgets. And matter of fact, intellectual conversation and stimulation I believe is the most important thing humans can provide other humans, something physical items can't. But with everybody racing for the gym, getting the latest implants, and injecting themselves with the latest roids, it is unlikely such a vain society will stimulate intelligence, let alone intelligent conversation. And so my second prediction.

Should post-scarcity ever occur, it will fragment humans into two camps.

1. Those willing to expend the effort necessary to participate in the arms war of sex/attention
2. Those not willing to expend the effort and instead focus on intelligence and personality

The first group will likely breed and populate the future as their entire focus is on sex and attraction. The second group, though maybe not as much, will still copulate, but focus on less physical and more mental qualities and traits. Naturally, over time, these two groups will evolve with one group becoming "hotter" and the other group "uglier," but it makes me wonder if over time and because of the "hyper arms-sex-attention race" post scarcity would instill in the "hot group," that they would evolve into separate different species (and is here where my speculation runs out as I am not a great biologist, geneticist, let alone philosopher, and is perhaps where others might take over).

However, as I said before, this was a mental exercise. There are many variables that would make such a scenario unlikely, even impossible, and I would hope some of you would point those out (besides, it would only take one generation focusing on looks and not the engineering needed to keep the 3d replicators operational that would end the post-scarcity economy). But before economists cheer for a post-scarcity economy, they may want to think about what it would replace and what the consequences might be.

Calculate Your Chances of Divorce

November 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Brilliant.

Abso-freaking-lutely brilliant.

Crowding Out the Private Sector Husband

November 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was listening to Stefan Molyneux and he said something that made my economic spidey senses tingle a bit:

That the average unwed mother, supporting a family, received somewhere around $70,000 per year from the government in the various forms of social services, welfare, etc. He then went on to add if you considered public school that was another roughly $10,000 per child.

The number seemed a little high, and I cannot find the specific podcast, but I trust Stefan's veracity to ensure those numbers are correct, so for the purpose of this particular post, I'm going to assume it's true (if somebody has better data or can cite the study, please let me know). But the point Stefan was making was how this essentially supplanted men as the role of a provider. If the government is going to pay a single parent (typically the mother, but not always) $70,000 per year, then why would she bother looking for a husband, at least in the capacity of a provider?

Simple, she won't.

But this got me thinking. Assuming the $70,000 is accurate, what that essentially does is put a price floor on the marriage market. No woman is going to consider any man who makes less than $70,000 because that's the MINIMUM she's going to get from the government. So as a man, if you wish to participate in this market you need to make more than $70,000.

But what percent of men make that much?

Well off to do some research I went and found on wikipedia's entry on personal income that 87% of the population makes less than $75,000 per year (close enough). Yes this included women as well, which probably increased that percent, but let's just say 80% of men make less than $75,000 for the sake of argument. That's 4 out of every 5 men who cannot provide at the level the government does. 4 out of 5 men cannot compete in the marriage market.

Now, naturally, women don't just marry for the provider role, and there are a whole host of other variables that go into it, but the government at least at some level is crowding out men from this marriage market. And we all know from Economics 101 what happens when you set price floors and crowd buyers out of a market - surpluses.

D, Men
S, Women
$70K
D
S
Surplus
Quantity of Women

The chart above graphs your standard supply and demand curve market. The "supply" of women is in pink and denoted "S, women" while the "demand" for women (obviously by men) is in blue and denoted "D, men." Had there been no government interference, the market would "clear" at an equilibrium price that would be around what the median income is for your average man. This would be "normal" and normal women would marry normal men. You would have a normal house and normal children. And life would have gotten on like it always has, normally.

However, with the government essentially providing a $70,000 price guarantee, it throws the whole marriage market out of whack. At such a high income level, many more women are willing to get married, and so the supply of women increases and is denoted by the green S. But with only 20% of the male population making that kind of money or more, the demand drops to the green D. The difference between the plethora of women who are willing to get married and the few men who can afford it, is a surplus of women who constantly ask "where have all the good men gone?"

Of course, it is impossible to put precise numbers on this market. But it does go a long way in explaining, at least economically, why there seems to be a shortage of men (or a surplus of women). Government has crowded men out of the market by making it too expensive to compete in. It would be no different if the government came in and created a law putting the price of Playstation 4 at $5,000. Some people would buy it, but most others would simply not be able to afford it. However, instead of less video games being played, government's vying for the affection of women has resulted in less marriages. Perhaps they can design a government check that will hug you back at night.

Enjoy the decline ladies!

WhyYou Should Never Donate to the United Way

November 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If something comes up on my radar once, I usually ignore it.

If something shows up twice, ehh...most likely coincidence.

Three times may be a short term trend.

But when it comes up FIVE times, then I know somethings amiss.

And something is terribly amiss with The United Way.

I have been out of the work force for quite sometime. And when I was in the work force, my wonderfully clam and amicable demeanor told any HR rep or manager never to ask me to donate to charity. It was very clear I was a stringent fiscal libertarian and really have no pity for the poor as I too was once poor and managed to get myself out of without a single penny of help from anybody.

But with an e-mail from a fan, "Rich," it makes now SIX times that I've heard about employees being forced or arm twisted by their bosses or their HR managers to donate to The United Way.

So I decided to do some research, and hokie smokes, it's a god damned epidemic. The most "authoritative" article (I guess) was this one here from the SF Gate. But a basic Bing search pulls up hundreds of stories, articles, discussion boards, etc. about how (in addition to a 40% tax rate) they're forced to donate to the United Way.

Why the United Way is so prevalent, and no other charities are mentioned, I do not know. And whereas my intellectually honest mind says, "There probably are other charities like this," my cynical and statistical mind says, "no, there's something nefarious going on here. The United Way would not be mentioned so frequently."

So lieutenants, economists, agents in the field, children, and Cappy Cappites, how about we flex this here new-found media muscle and do our best to dissuade people from donating to the United Way? Charity ought to be optional, not forced or coerced. And since we're already forced and coerced by liberals via the government to donate to their pet charities, the least we can do is tell the HR bitch and the manager douche to shove it next time they ask us to donate to the United Way.

Remember, Avoid Women With Horses

November 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is a surefire way to determine the lack of sanity and fiscal discipline.

Obama Nationalizes Best Buy

November 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Oops, sorry, wrong country, wrong president.

But it will happen. Give it time.

The "Round-House-Kicking-Chick-Cop Test"

November 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The Bechdel Test.

Never heard of it, but it turns out it's one of those things that proves we have too much government money going to worthless people with worthless goals and worthless lives.

So to show the feminists of the world a bit of solidarity I've come up with my own pointless test that in a very fascist way forces a pointless and harmful ideology on society for the sole purpose of bolstering my ego.

The "Round House Kicking Chick Cop Test" henceforth referred to as the RHKCCT

It is a very simple test.

If there's a cop show that stars or highlights women:

portraying cops,
who weigh less than 120 pounds and displays them magically kicking the shit out of men who beat them by 80 pounds and there's no way in hell in the real world they could pull that shit off then that show and all the actresses that star in and foolish women who turn into that chick-porn get the Nelson Ha Ha Award, henceforth known as the NHHA.

Because, understand this. In order to pass the Bechdel test you need to have two women in starring roles

who never talk about men

Which I can sort of understand. But when Swedish theaters provide this rating for all their movies, then frankly it is hilarious, unlikely, delusional, dumber than shit, and not based in reality. Kind of like RHKCCT.

But since Swedish feminism doesn't care about sanity, reality, being dumber than shit, or advancing society, I figured I'd just pick something out from the female world that is infinitely more childish and pathetic, and maybe hope it would make them take a look in the mirror and ~~break it~~...errr...realize their hypocrisy.

Should I hold my breath?

Masters Degree in Pop Culture

November 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

A reader told me about it, but I could believe it.

But it's true.

You can get ADVANCED DEGREES IN POP CULTURE.

What did you expect? It came from the Frankfurt School.

My favorite is it is so worthless it makes journalism seem like a WORTHWHILE MAJOR.

My god, and I even have to spend time arguing with these people why their degrees are worthless. The problem isn't worthless degrees. It's galactically stupid people who can't or refuse to see that.

To Make You Seem Even Less Manly

November 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just watch this video and envy how cool it would have been to have Bruce Lee train you and get to spar against James Coburn or Steve McQueen.

I Finally Figured Out Bitcoin

November 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Economists,
Lieutenants,
Agents in the Field,

lend me your ears!

For I have finally figured out bitcoin! And truthfully, this is one of my best mental achievements. And hopefully, through my ability to write clearly and explain things, I may be able to explain bitcoin to us all.

I had listened to this podcast of Stefan Molyneux on bitcoin. It was very good, but did not fully answer my question, "why does a bitcoin have any value?" However, what the podcast did do is bring my perception or "observation" up high enough that I could finally see and conclude how bitcoin does actually have value.

To understand why bitcoin has value, you first need to think about why currencies exist in the first place.

The answer from an economics 202 class is "to avoid barter."

Barter is horribly inefficient. If you are a cow herder and want a pint of ale, well, you're out of luck. Because you can't trade a whole cow for a measly pint of ale. Nor can you slice off pieces of beef from the live cow to make the trade more fair. Therefore, if any kind of economic trade and progress is to be made, you need a currency.

Historically, this has meant anything from gold and silver to salt and sea shells. But regardless of what item inevitably becomes an local economy's currency, they all have some key traits and qualities in common.

Divisibility - You can divide gold, silver or salt into measurable quantities. Pounds, ounces, grams, etc. This allows you to scale the currency to the value of the item you wish to purchase.

Durability - The currency cannot rot or decay over time. Milk is a bad currency because in 3 years time it will be quite gross. Gold in 3 years time will still be gold.

Store of Value - The currency must also maintain its value and purchasing power over time. If you're like Venezuela and constantly printing off more commie paper money, it will lose its value. But with a limited supply (gold, silver, diamonds, etc.) you can assume that currency will still have roughly the same amount of purchasing power as it did.

Finally,

Intrinsic Value - The currency must have some kind of real value. Gold can be used for jewelry. Silver can be used in electronics. Copper can be used in plumbing. Salt can be used in cooking. In other words, people will take it as a currency, because even if they don't use it themselves, they know somebody who will. It does have an intrinsic value unto itself.

And it is here (intrinsic value) where most people get lost on bitcoin.

Bitcoin meets all the OTHER characteristics and traits of a good currency. It's divisible. It's durable (infinitely as it is digital). And it will not decay (again, binary doesn't decay).

But precisely what practical, real world application does it have? You can't use it in electronics. You can't make jewelry (aka - buying sex) with it. So why does it have any intrinsic value at all?

The answer lies in comparing a currency's "intrinsic value" versus its value as a currency.

For example look at what has served as the primary currency throughout most of human history - gold.

Why does gold have intrinsic value?

Economists will answer, "because you can use it in jewelry" which is the polite person's way of saying, "men can buy sex with it."

But does that make any sense? That ONE thing you can do with gold, "make jewelry" is why it served as the standard currency for thousands of years across the planet? What you'll soon realize is that, yes, while gold can be used to make jewelry it serves a much more important function to society as a currency. In other words, an item's value as a currency is really not dependent on its intrinsic value. It just needs SOME intrinsic value to get people to have faith in it and start trading it.

Salt can be used to flavor and store food. Was that grounds enough to make it the Mali Empire's default currency?

Silver can be used to make jewelry and some industrial items. Was that grounds enough to make it the currency of the wild west?

Large clam shells could make some funky and uncomfortable bras in ancient Polynesia.

Was that grounds enough to make it the default currency in the south Pacific?

Apparently so, because it DID HAPPEN. But not because of jewelry making potential or food storage potential. That was just "enough" intrinsic value to suffice. It was because those items provided more value to the economy as a currency than it did some as jewelry making materials or food flavoring. And to prove it an interesting comparison would be to compare the amount of gold (or silver) actually being used as jewelry versus that of currency, bullion or investment. I'd surmise over time, 90% of silver and gold has been used as a currency and NOT tiaras.

Understanding that a currency derives most of its value from its NON-intrinsic value traits, and only needs a "little" intrinsic value, this then puts the focus on how bitcoin derives it's "little" but necessary intrinsic value.

The answer is simple - scarcity.

Consider diamonds.

Why do they have value?

Taking the jewelry and industrial drilling uses of it away, why do they have value?

The answer is, they don't. They serve no purpose. At least from a PRACTICAL or PURPOSEFUL perspective.

But because they are so rare people will scramble for them. But understand what we're talking about when we talk about "scarcity" or "rarity." It is in relation to other things.

On this planet there is 9 quadrillion megatons of dirt and maybe 100,000 pounds of diamonds. Both dirt and diamonds have no real practical use or value, but diamonds are considered infinitely more valuable. Ergo, when we talk about scarcity, is merely a RATIO between two items that determine whether it is valuable or not. It is simply the ratio of the supply of one thing on the planet (copper) versus that of another (platinum).

And this is why bitcoin has that wee bit of necessary intrinsic value. It is very much like diamonds in that is has no practical use, but it is scarce. Matter of fact, diamonds, gold, silver, rare earth, etc., are constantly being dug up out of the ground. The makers of bitcoin have limited their supply to 21 million units forever, making it even more scarce.

In the end, bitcoin is really nothing more than a private sector currency akin to digital diamonds. And it is my opinion, you have a currency that is better than any official government fiat currency out there as it cannot be hyper-inflated away by a central bank. However, there are some drawbacks to bitcoin.

One, it is completely dependent upon the internet working. Any post apocalyptic event that shuts it down or turns off the electricity, and it's about as valuable as those gold ETF's you have. Two, it is not yet universally accepted by people. This may change over time, but it is a distinct (though growing) minority who use bitcoin. Three, it is such a threat to other established currencies I have no doubt in my mind governments will do everything they can to put the kibosh on it. Fourth, it can be undermined by another digital and more preferable currency.

Regardless, whether bitcoin ends up becoming a universally accepted currency is another matter. the key economic lesson to take from this is what drives the value of a currency is not so much its intrinsic value as much as it is the amount of value society puts on it as a tool for exchange.

(if you liked this post and it finally explained that NAGGING question, "how does Bitcoin have any value" please consider buying some of my books- Worthless, Enjoy the Decline, How to Privatize Governments, and Boris the Shitting Buffalo)

The MGTOW Official Theme Song

November 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Don't know why I didn't think of this before, but it is perfectly illustrated by Cary Grant portraying Walter Ecklund.

"Pass Me By"

It's "Her Day"

November 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I gotta do more videos when I'm half in the bag. They come out much better than originally think. (language warning).

Regardless, I eviscerate the idiots dropping $25,000 on weddings only to have half of them end up divorced. Not to mention that money could go to a house or some kid's college fund.

Enjoying the Misery of Others

November 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

...results from the latest "Racist Running Game," the "Mythical Jewish Bar of St. Louis Park," bars of the wild west,

and more!

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

So Atheism IS a Religion!

November 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Never understood how atheists are so adamant about being atheist. I mean, isn't one of the biggest benefits of being an atheist that you DON'T have to go to church? Me think they doth protest too much.

If It Weren't for Divorce, I'd Have to Get a Real Job

November 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

To all the parents out there getting divorced, keep it up! We here in the Manosphere need a constant supply of new and screwed up kids to buy our books, subscribe to our YouTube channels, and give us a token amount of money to set them straight and tell them like it is!

All Employers Are Like That

November 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From my upcoming book "Bachelor Pad Economics" (slated for early December)

The result of such a disparity between what you are capable of and what the real world has to offer is a working environment that not only will spectacularly fail to meet your lofty expectations of challenge and reward, but crush your hopes and dreams of the future. After nearly two decades of schooling it will take you months just to land an interview, sometimes years to find a job. After flirting with the likelihood you'll have to go on welfare, you will have a bit of "luck" and maybe land a job. You will desperately take it just so you can make ends meet, but you will soon find out it is tedious, mundane, and nothing like what your employer said it would be. You will think you're just "unlucky," that not all employers are like that, and it's just a matter of finding another employer. But you will soon find out, job after job, that all employers are indeed "like that."

In the meantime consider getting an early jump on Christmas shopping as you spread Cappy Cap Cheer (TM) by purchasing any one of my books.

I Will Only Protect the Women Close to Me

November 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hosurance is the correct moniker to explain this utterly contemptible and disgusting advertisement by Colorado's insurance exchange. I won't delve into it in detail as I believe Roissy has done a good enough job, but I will merely point out two things this vile and childish advertisement screams at everyone:

1. American women have decayed so much that this isn't considered a parody or mockery of them, but rather an accurate portrayal. Making it worse, the advertisement was likely made by liberal women who have no clue just how badly they've presented women.

2. This is young women telling men they don't need men, they just need the government. Maybe a fling here or there, but man's role in society is no longer provider, father or head of household, just a hot guy for a romp around the bedroom.

To that end, it is now my policy to only help women I know and trust. If I'm already paying for harlots' health insurance and they're going to return the favor by acting like Miley Ray Cyrus and marrying the government, I'm done. I don't care if it's -20 and you're on the side of a road with an overturned car. If it doesn't have a conservative bumper stick or some other obvious evidence you care to support yourself, call up the federal government tow-car hotline.

More on Bitcoin

November 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From Mr. Kerry Lutz.

The Destruction Principle

November 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Gather 'round kids and let the ole Captain tell you a story which will explain the sometimes confusing and hypocritical behavior of leftists.

Many years ago me and my brother were engaged in glorious snow fort battle. Never had he or I ever built stronger, sturdier snow forts. We would go out at night and pour water on our forts so they would be reinforced with a 3 inch coating of ice. So strong were the forts they were impenetrable to snow balls. So we started (much to the concern of our mother) building and throwing ice balls.

While more dangerous, they were more effective, knocking off a chip of the snow fort here. A chip of the snow fort there, and then we're hurriedly jump out of our forts to repair them while having a gentlemen's agreement to then attack the other side of our opponent's fort.

Then something dawned on me.

If I were to build a simple column of snow on the top of my fort, much like a thick snow flagpole, my brother would be tempted to knock it down. This would then draw the majority of his fire and munitions, and he would waste those precious resources on a pointless target, while I could reinforce my fort and build more ice balls.

It worked.

Once built nearly all of his missiles were directed at the snow column and I was allowed to strengthen my fort. Occasionally he would hit it, knocking it down and then celebrating. But I would just put up a new column in a matter of seconds and continue on.

Naturally, this was quite some time ago. But what I learned back in 1986 has always carried forward with me. People like easy targets.

Now take this fact and apply it to the modern day leftists or liberal. Specifically, environmentalists and protestors.

Do you know why liberals are protesting fracking in the Bakken oil field?
Do you know why liberals are protesting against nuclear energy?
Do you know why liberals are protesting, well....anything they protest?

What they will tell you is that they are doing it for some noble cause or another. To protect the environment. To protect the children. To save the whales. But this is nothing but an outright lie. However, what's really interesting about this lie is that they are telling it not so much to convince you about their nobility, but rather to convince themselves.

And this is where The Destruction Principle comes in.

Understand the single most defining characteristic of a liberal or a leftist is that they are lazy. They do not want to work. They do not want to strive. They want an easy and paid-for life as much as possible.

However, the second most defining characteristic of a liberal or a leftist is their ego. They have to be applauded. They have to worshipped. They have to be doing something that provides them and their ego validation.

Naturally, these two traits are mutually exclusive. If you aren't going to work hard for a living, if you're not going to strive towards something, if you're incapable of rigor, then you will achieve nothing noteworthy and your ego will go unvalidated. However, leftists' egos are so huge and so hungry they inevitably have to "do something," and so, just like my brother did in 1986, they go for easy, but pointless, targets.

Going green.
Driving a Prius.
Shopping at Whole Foods
etc.

All of these things are nothing more than substitutes for hard work, production, self-supportation, and genuine human value. They are nothing more than rituals, no different than rituals performed at a church. They are pointless, they achieve nothing, but they make their religious participants falsely "feel good about themselves."

However, where the "destruction" in The Destruction Principle comes in is where you have your environmentalists or your most vain and vile leftists. For example, if some dolt wants to buy a Prius and smugly put their MPG on a vanity plate, they aren't really hurting anybody. They are destroying nothing. But if you have protestors who are going to shut down the Keystone XL pipeline, then you are costing people their lives, jobs, not to mention economic growth for the country. You are causing destruction.

And that's The Destruction Principle.

In short, The Destruction Principle is:

"Worthless people, in order to validate their egos, but avoid any real work, will take the production, success, and work of others, villainize it, protest against it, and ultimately destroy it. Not because other people's production, success and work was evil, but because it is easier to destroy other people's work that already exists, rather that build up something of genuine value yourself."

Now, understand just what negative-NPV-humans these vermin are.

They are so arrogant, so lazy, so full of themselves, they have no problems ruining the lives of others, just so they can feel good about themselves.

They are so vile, they don't mind holding up the economic growth of the entire nation, as long as they can go and protest against "global warming," "patriarchy," or any one of the fashionable leftists ~~religions~~ causes.

Worse, they are so evil they would rather destroy something that is good, because it's easier than working hard and producing something of value themselves.

Again, look at the Keystone pipeline. To build that would take engineers, chemists, accountants, and skilled tradesmen. But look at just one of the key opponents to it. A worthless crusader who is deathly afraid of real work, never held a real job in her life, and will ruin the lives of millions to avoid it.

Now I know I receive some criticism and guff for simplifying things. But it really is that simple. People who don't like hard work or math are the cause of the majority of our problems today. People who major in worthless degrees are declaring to the world they don't want to work hard, but still want to be in charge. And when you throw in ego and The Destruction Principle, you have a veritable mental-cancer that infects people, has them attack others, and slowly kill off the body known as society. I just wanted to identify and define the problem/symptom as that is the first step to solving problems.

Enjoy the decline!

(If you liked this post you would most likely enjoy my 8 part Youtube series on "Crusaderism")

Use the MSM, Don't Let Them Use You

November 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

These people are no geniuses with diabolical plans, because if they were, they wouldn't have gone to work into media in the first place (my experience shows that reporters are not the mostly intellectually curious of people). Any agenda they have against you is primarily due to mental indolence. They work with people who all think they same because they all graduated from the same colleges. Think of them as bubbly, useful idiots who hate rocking the boat.

Buying Books for Winter

November 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

He'll have plenty to read once the snow starts falling.

Afternoon Humor

November 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

AKA "Dating is An Expensive Pain in the Ass"

November 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sit down and pay attention kiddies as Reverend Dalrock delivers his latest sermon explaining why men are not just pulling out of the marriages market, but the dating market as well.

Enjoy the decline!

Another Successful Parochial Student

November 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember parents.

Force feed Jesus down your kids' throats.

The results are great!

The money quote though:

"But Miss Desaine – who insists that all her conquests wear a condom – added: 'I hope employers see it as a bit of fun and it shows I am more confident than the average girl."

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

How Running Can Trick Your Brain Into Thinking You Have Agency

November 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Agency" is a word Mr. Aurini taught me (among many others). It not only refers to an organization you might work for, but also means purpose or usefulness. It also happens to be a mandatory requirement for all men to attain happiness.

If a man doesn't have agency or purpose in life, he becomes depressed and lethargic. Sometimes even suicidal. Just look at what happens to men after they retire from a successful career. Many, at best, go through a funk. Others get angry, irritated, depressed and don't know what to do with themselves. But forget men who are lucky enough to have a "successful" career. Consider young men today.

Most young men today have had the three main ways they can attain agency denied to them:

Career/provider Husband
Father

And this was done largely at the hands of women (and lefty pansied men) who voted in government to supplant men in these roles.

The economy is shot and offers no employment opportunities (let alone something as idealistic as a "career") as it is no longer focused on the private sector and growth, but rather wealth redistribution and supporting out parasitic classes.

Becoming a husband is becoming impossible as feminism has turned the quality and caliber of women into this.

And without a wife, let alone a career, it's pretty hard to become a father. Oh sure, men will inseminate women. Sure, they'll breed. But they won't raise a child or spend time bringing the child up. Besides, that's now the job of state-run schools and divorce courts.

So there sits about 2 full generations of young men, full of capacity, full of potential, laying idle and twiddling their thumbs. And just as government has supplanted their roles in society, these men have turned to video games, booze, drugs, porn, even crime to replace women's.

But drink all the booze you want and save the princess a million times, in the end your genetic hard-wiring will take over. And no matter how much you fight it, you will get depressed you have no career, you have no family, and you have no future. The environment is hostile to men's nature and it is an uphill battle to find agency and thus happiness.

But may I make a suggestion? It doesn't solve the underlying problem, but does, in a sneaky way, provide men with a substitute for agency.

Start running.

Running is a way to trick your brain into thinking you have agency. In the darkest days of my life I would get up and literally be incapacitated. I could not move. Not because of neural damaged, but every choice, every action I had available to me led nowhere. So why choose any of them. It had no purpose. And so I laid there on the couch, getting up to get food or go to the bathroom occasionally. My frontal lobes knew, however, this was not a viable long term plan. I had to do something, but with no career, no desire to meet girls, and no (at that time) obvious entrepreneurial opportunities, I did the only thing I could do.

I ran.

Not that I hadn't ran before, I always knocked out 3 miles every other day to keep in shape. But now I was running to kill time. And so instead of my short 25 minute run around Lake of the Isles, I was running 10 miles, everyday. I'd return home and for once I felt completely normal. I wasn't sad, I may have even felt like going out that night to an old haunt. But soon the endorphins wore off and I was back to incapacitation.

Time for weights.

Understand at this point in time I was so defeated I also wasn't eating much. I had dropped from 150 pounds to 125. But, add the running and weight lifting, I was ripped. Not an ounce of fat on me. I could bench press 180 pounds and knock out 150 push ups non-stop. But I wasn't lifting weights to get ripped. Matter of fact, I LOATHED lifting weights. It was the "normal" feeling I wanted after. I refused to do anti-depressants and so weights it was.

Sure enough, after an hour or two, I was feeling "normal" again.

Ideally this would last me into the night at which time I would pop two sleeping pills to knock me out to the real world. And sure enough, my internal organs would not fail me, and I would wake up the next day to start the whole miserable process over again.

This lasted about a year, but inevitably things turned around. When a recruiter called me

I was drunk and went into a rage, tirading against the banking industry and how I wasn't baby sitting "dumb, mother fucking, middle aged bankers who can't do Excel."

I got the job.

I had self-taught myself salsa and ballroom dancing.

My dance class revenues tripled.

And though I hated every second of lifting weights, girls were throwing themselves at me.

Then one day (ironically listening to this song of all things-have to get to the 55 second mark) I all of the sudden realized something - I was happy. I had created my own agency despite society's best efforts to deny me any. I was getting up to do things in life, not merely to run.

Since then, of course my running and weight lifting has tanked. I only knock out 6 miles every other day. I lift weights, but only do enough to keep in shape, and my girlfriend is an outstanding cook, nursing me back to 150 pounds. But I will never forget the role running (and lifting) played in my overcoming that depression. Not because it made me feel normal, but because it didn't make sense at the time why it did. But in hindsight I now know why.

Running or any exercise directly stimulates the lizard part of your brain and tricks it into thinking you have a point or purpose in life. When you are exercising your hindbrain is thinking, "We must be doing something productive. We must be hunting mammoth or toiling in the fields. We are being productive. We have agency." which then continues to have your various glands produce various hormones and chemicals that make you feel good. Of course you don't have purpose. YOu don't have agency. And once you stop working out your frontal lobes that are acutely aware of this fact take over, sending you back to Cameron-ville (Ferris Bueller). But for that hour of working out and the two hours after that your brain and body are given the much-needed "normal feeling" you need to get through the worst bouts of depression.

Now, is every Millennial male and young Gen X man in the throes of a crushing depression?

No, of course not.

But they are without agency or purpose, and they are in a hostile environment that will never provide them the opportunity to have those things. This will at minimum put most young men in a funk and lessen their quality of life. But this does not have to be the case. All a young man has to do is start running (or working out). This won't guarantee a job opens up. This won't guarantee a career becomes a possibility. And it certainly won't turn women today into the Sophia Lorens and June Cleavers we demand. But it will, on a subconscious, cave-man level trick you into thinking otherwise and make it much easier to enjoy the decline.

Brilliant

November 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Absolutely brilliant.

American Men Demand Their Careers, Women, and Children Back

November 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

aka "Why the Manosphere isn't going away."

Warning, 30 minute video so...like...pour a stiff drink.

Why Doesn't This Come Standard with Every Podcast?

November 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I am still amazed when it's becoming progressively clearer and clearer that podcasts are the way of the future, that the best podcasters out there still do not have something like this standard in all of their websites.

How hard is it to put a "want to sponsor the program" page with contact info?

Look, I do not get paid for this. I am really just that happy of a customer and perhaps more stunned from an economics standpoint how celebrity podcasters just aren't monetizing their sites. Regardless, I cannot endorse Tom Leykis' Show and Gary's professionalism enough for all you budding entrepreneurs looking to expand your business. The demographics are perfect, the price is affordable, chances are (unlike pretty much any radio ads you might run) you will get a positive rate of return on your investment.

Help Me Help Ed Help You

November 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Come on! Support an agent in the field!

When Your Aging Parents Come After Your Money

November 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's called "filial responsibility." Apparently in 25 states your parents can come after you for your money if you don't help take care of them in their old age. These states are:

Alaska, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia

But the money quote is this right here:

"As recently as the 1950s, 45 states and the federal government had them on the books. They began to erode during the New Deal, when the Social Security Act passed and the concept of government rather than familial responsibility started to take hold."

Ahhhh, replacing people with the loving and caring government.

This is why if you have liberal parents you should just tell them the government is there new children. The government is their all and everything. The government, the government, the government.

Oh well, you aging lefties who love government, you crazy cats try to enjoy that decline, ya hear?

Why Exxon Mobil Should Hire Me to Head Their CSR Department

November 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

How a "welfare family dynasty" of teen mothers could breed 6 generations in a single lifetime

Why it's OK to be angry and not help out your fellow leftist

Why Exxon Mobil should hire me to head their CSR department

What everybody wants for Christmas

AND MORE!!!

On this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

"Grrrrl Power!" (TM)

November 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's just too precious.

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick

November 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cripes.

Alyssa

November 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I am reliably informed there is a book in the picture somewhere:

Alyssa also insists it is available in Kindle.

The Theoretical Price Limit of Bitcoin

November 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me a very simple mathematical observation.

In my previous post I pointed out how bitcoins were more like diamonds in that there is a limited supply of them, and bar some industrial uses, really have no practical value. Ergo, if you want to compare the value of diamonds to dirt, diamonds are valuable because they are scarce and dirt is cheap because it is not. This ratio of "diamonds to dirt" would by math give you the exchange rate.

So, why not dollars instead of dirt?

You can choose your poison of which measure of the US dollar supply you want to use, but since bitcoin is only going to have 21 million units produced you can calculate their theoretical dollar exchange rates quite easily:

M1 Money Supply - $2.6 trillion
Implied Bitcoin Value = $123,809

M2 Money Supply - $10.974 trillion
Implied Bitcoin Value = $521,319

For this super awesome economic analysis you can read one of my books.

Social and Poetic Justice

November 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

All wrapped in one!

Well, you vote for Detroit, you get Detroit.

Fight or Flight

November 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hello All,

I'll be speaking in Vegas Jan 23-25th at the "Fight or Flight/Passport to Freedom" symposium hosted by Nomad Capitalist.

This is nothing low rank. They have Peter Schiff headlining and I'm somewhere at the bottom mopping up shop afterwards.

It is my honest opinion this is going to be the next logical step or "wave" in terms of economic philosophy as the national debt is getting so high that it is at the critical mass point where there is no salvation. After that you are going to have to think outside the US not just for your future, but at minimum a place to diversify your investments.

Truth is I am not an expert on overseas investing, international banks, etc., so I will be very interested in the speakers. Regardless, it's a pricey seminar, but may well be worth the money.

Cpt.

Are Women Better at Enjoying the Decline Than Men?

November 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because it sure as hell looks like it.

Enjoy the decline!

Stares at the World Gets a Facelift

November 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Go visit. Kind of envy his layout.

Shame Will Get More Women Into Engineering Than This Idiocy

November 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our IT agent in the field.

In short it is a commercial spoofing the Beastie Boy's song "Girls."

It advertises a chemistry set like toy set designed to get girls interested in the sciences and engineering, which I'm all for.

Just one problem.

It is SOOOOOO STUPID, even condescending to girls and women that it becomes a mockery of itself.

EVEN IN THE LYRICS they talk about girls don't like pink, buuuuuut!!!!!

PINK IS ALL OVER THE PLACE IN THE COMMERCIAL!

Look, here's how you get girls interested in the sciences and engineering.

You introduce them to video games at an early age and then you tell them the truth:

"Boys are better at engineering and math than girls."

That will at least rile them up and give them the energy to prove you wrong. And then maybe some day we'll actually have a generation of girls who are majoring in engineering at equal rates to boys, instead of us just lying to them saying,

"You go girl!"
"Grrrrrllll power!"
"Anything boys can do girls can do better!"

while they still major in baby sitting, women's studies, English, and other subjects that avoid math and rigor at all costs.

Cleaning House Linkfest

November 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our Muslim Agent in the Field - Swiss young socialists want to pass a law limiting executive pay to 12 x's the lowest paid worker.

From our Rookie Canadian Agent in the Field - Feminism declining since 1990's.

From our Glorious Hat Agent in the Field - Wishing you and everybody good times this 2 months worth of holidays.

From our Canadian Agent in the Field - Explaining to young men that there is hope and you still have a life to live.

From our Matt Forney Agent in the Field - Matt is, well, Matt. He is an adjective unto himself. He's Matt "Forney-ey" and was kind enough to review my book.

Nice Guys Finish Last

November 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember that boys.

Felons get more play than accountants.

Also from Roissy, a no-shit-Sherlock moment.

Like I said in my previous podcast, your husband wants you to lose 15 pounds for Christmas.

"Masters Degree Preferred"

November 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I convey, what I believe to be, the feelings of the younger generation to all the HR, corporate management types, baby boomers, Gen X'ers, and the education industry who INSIST young people get advanced degrees for jobs that could be done by a 12 year old.

How Verenice Gutierrez Demonstrates How Much Feminism Has Failed

November 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I shall point out a handful of things because I wish this to be short and most of my readers already have the background knowledge they need no hand holding.

Verenice Gutierrez is the principal of a school who has claimed peanut butter and jelly is racist.

1. Minority who benefited from affirmative action.
2. Ugly
3. Feminist
4. Worthless doctorate degree
5. Abuses children so she can have a faux career acting like she's educating them when she's really indoctrinating them.
6. Cares more about advancing her socialist ideology than educating children

I simply point out one thing:

If this is the best product socialism and feminism can put forward AND society decides to put this worthless human being in charge of children's education, it is not only a testament to how much feminism has jumped the shark, but how blatantly obvious it is we don't give two shits about educating our children.

Oh, and yes, she is ugly.

If Girls Want to Pose With Books

November 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I have had some women inquire about posing with the books. So here is a basic break down of the rules:

1. In terms of "risqueness" I am using the traditional 1950's pinup girl as a standard. Nothing too crass, but nothing too Lutheran either.

2. If you don't know if you are good looking enough, send me a picture. Do not get upset if I decline because, well, my readers are typically 30 something men.

3. Dress up anyway for your husband or significant other. My books don't matter, I'm just trying to spruce up the joint here and get a little eye candy in between the charts.

And yes, my books are that good that girls will read them on a lazy Sunday afternoon in bed.

If the Captain Were to Have a Daughter

November 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is precisely how it would be.

Well Let's See if the Girls Can Play With the Big Boys

November 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hee hee. I love this shit.

Man I Wish I Was James Coburn

November 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Class act.

Modern Day Christian Hypocrisy

November 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yes, yes, I too would like the answer to that question.

Alyssa 4

November 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cripes, almost forgot today's pic!

The Question is Not When Will The Manosphere Go Mainstream…

November 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

but when will the mainstream goes Manosphere.

Proof American Girls are Dumb: One Directions

November 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Never heard of them.

The reason I never heard of them is because they did not exist until 48 hours ago.

But since some media and marketing executives create them, I have had nothing but an annoying and constant barrage of Yahoo "News" (COUGH COUGH PHLEGM PHLEGM) and other media outlets about

"One Directions"

Look, girls. Don't you think it's about time you "girl up" to your presumed "independent" and "intelligent" reputations American media constantly shoves down my throat?

I mean, you're all so independent.
You're all so smart.
You're all so everything.

And yet, the money in Hollywood is you're so stupid, you're going to swallow whole (pun intended until they take down Miley Ray Syphilis) the latest dumbass boy band.

And you know what, you most likely will.

For once, I find myself aligned with my sworn enemies - the feminists. EVEN THEY can see through this corporatist pablum. They'll tell you the same thing I am, which means (for once) we can't possibly be wrong.

Oh, I know, I know, Hollywood has figured out the magic formula for tweens and teens. And this is merely hypothesizing (look it up, it's word dearies) on my part you're capable of being smart enough to ignore this blatant placation (look up both words dearies) to your genetics. But something tells me you're going to ignore this anyway because "they're so hot" or "they're so cute."

And something tells me the canard (look it up dearies) that "girls mature faster than boys" will continue.

You kids enjoy the decline....never mind, you'll never get the pun.

Why You Wish You Could Be Don Rickles

November 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was 18.

I was stupid.

I bought two tickets

6 months in advance to see Victor Borge.

I was stupid because I thought it would be easy to find a date.

How wrong I was.

Because at that point in my stupid, naive life, I thought most girls were like me. Yes, they may have liked "Hootie and the Blowfish" but they also appreciated a pianist genius like Victor Borge.

After asking around 15 girls to attend with me, and having 15 girls say, "who?" I realized I overestimated my generation of women.

Enter now, Don Rickles.

Rickles ain't getting any younger folks. And, like Borge, it wasn't until I was older did I appreciate him. So I was happy to see he's still performing. Better see him before this great American passes on. WWII vet, entertained millions, the epitome of America at its peak.

Or you can always go with Chris Rock or whatever filth passes for comedians nowadays.

The Closest You'll Get to Economic Utopia

November 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

While liberals and leftists do their best to create an economic utopia on Earth, and the best they can come up with is Detroit or North Korea, I've been fortunate enough to experience the closest humanity will ever come to a genuine economic utopia - an all inclusive resort.

You may chuckle a little bit here or there, but I am being serious. All inclusive resorts (the ones without Mexicans or the locals constantly harassing you with trinkets) are precisely what economists, knowingly or not, are aiming for, and let me explain why.

First, I had to turn off my cell phone and laptop. There was no internet or cell phone reception. This forced me NOT to work. Not only did it force me not to work, but because it was not an option, I never worried or fretted about it. Work was no longer an issue. Completely eliminated from my options and therefore completely eliminated from my mind.

Second, all your necessities are taken care of. Food, clothing, shelter. Yes, I had to work up the money to pay for them, but for a wonderful week it was the epitome of true unlimited resources. I could drink until my liver puked, eat until I puked, sleep in my room, and not worry about anything. I would not starve, and thus my lizard brain was not worried about hunting for food or providing for myself.

Third, with all the basics covered, the entirety of my efforts were focused on recreation and fun. I don't think many people get to experience this, even those with unlimited resources. You're always worried or focused on maintaining or increasing your wealth that you never take the time to enjoy it. But (again) with leisure forced on you via no internet or cell phone access, you finally forgive yourself for not working and can finally let loose. I think I played volleyball for 8 hours one day, snorkeled for a couple hours the next, laid on the lazy river for 10, and did waterslides for 20 (I also hosted races with some of the kids to see who had the best time, and yes, I dominated as I knew the technique of slingshotting yourself at the beginning of the slide).

Of course I knew the all inclusive resort was a fleeting phenomenon, and I would soon return to my (horrible) life of waking up at 1030AM, afternoon Rumpies, and writing for 4 hours, but I did have an epiphany or at least an observation:

Would not the all-inclusive resort be the best form of retirement?

As it stands right now, the United States and most European nations so heavily tax their citizenry that 2nd world countries can provide an all-inclusive resort for a fraction of the cost of most 1st world nursing homes. And if you can afford a nursing home for the last ten years of your life, why not save up your pennies and nickels for the last 20 years of your life at an all-inclusive resort?

Naturally, you wouldn't want to stay at just one resort, but perhaps join a club like "Club Med," but a cheaper version. You'd be allowed to travel, visit different resorts, but know for a "lifetime membership" you'd have food and shelter covered until you're dead. I would have to run the figures, but I have so much faith in the leftist idiots that populate and increasingly run the US that the day will come (if it isn't already here) all-inclusive resorts are more affordable than most retirement communities in the US.

Don't Hate Me Because I'm Bloggyful

November 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Had a comment that I didn't post because it was cursing and swearing and name calling, but the gist of it was that my little media empire here is not a real job and that I am a charlatan and a fraud, blah, blah, blah.

So let me explain.

I am INCREDIBLY lucky to make a living blogging. I know this, I'm aware of it, and I thank my lucky stars everyday when I see traffic reports or reminisce about when I had a real job.

However, especially since writing Bachelor Pad Economics, I noticed I was getting a little down and a little depressed. This is normal because writing does take it out of you and I am usually very hard on myself ensuring I get my books written quickly, and done by a certain date. This book (Bachelor Pad Economics) is going to be about 450 pages, and it will have taken about 2.5 months to write, edit, and publish. I thought the malaise I go through was because writing is boring, but it wasn't until my girlfriend pointed out I had been writing for four hours straight at my local bar did I realize just how much time I was putting into this.

Between blogging, podcasting, writing, videos, not to mention splitting wood and all the household chores, I knock out about 16-18 hours a day on work.

Is this "real job work?"

No.

Do I have to commute to a cubicle?

No.

Do I have to deal with another gray-haired fool who lost his spine, balls and ability to lead during his MBA classes?

No.

But that doesn't mean I'm lollygagging about, drinking rumpie, and playing video games all day.

It means I'm busting my ass off...and drinking rumpie occasionally playing video games all day.

In other words, detractors, haters, and jealous people, I do work. This is a real job. It's just one that's enjoyable and one where I am the ultimate authority and boss. It's one I earned through my own sweat, toil, dedication, and sacrifice.

Ergo, you can be jealous all you want, but you can't get angry. Well...I mean, you "can" get angry, but your anger is misplaced.

In the meantime I'll just continue to act like I'm drunk all the time, playing video games, sleeping in and never working just to irk the right people.

Enjoy the decline!

Hello From Phoenix

November 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A Tactic That Works Against Liberals

November 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Was at the bar.

Sat next to a young couple. The girl was an education major still in college, the boy was a recent graduate with a degree in economics.

He was excited when I told him I was an economist, but then depressed when I told him he would not get a job. The girl, somewhat offended I was being truthful and blunt asked what I did for a living. Overhearing that she was an education major, I said,

"I collect welfare and foodstamps for a living. I stopped working two years ago."

I said it with a sincere and direct enough face it convinced her.

She was upset.

"Wait, you don't even try to find work anymore?"

Half-tempted to point out in her declaring an elementary education major that neither was she, I decided not to and instead went with my original plan,

"Yes, not worth working any more. You see how much free shit Obama is giving away? To hell with work. It's for suckers."

She got pissed. ROYALLY pissed. She wouldn't talk to me. You could see it in her face. She was angry that somebody might take advantage of the situation.

And then I realized something - I finally figured out how to convince liberals they're wrong.

It wasn't through charts. It wasn't through logic. It wasn't through reason. And it wasn't through statistics or facts.

It would be by agreeing with them to the full logical conclusion of socialism and acting like you were completely abusing their ~~charity~~ naivety.

So the next time you run into a liberal and they ask you what you do for a living, with a straight face you say,

"Nothing, I collect welfare and food stamps. I live off of the government."

It is thus far and by far the most effective tactic I have ever deployed.

Why I Charge Union Members Double

November 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When I can, I usually charge union members double, sometimes triple.

Of course I can't always do this, but have managed to do it a handful of times. It is the least real people working real jobs producing real economic wealth can do to the parasites.

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

November 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

But the bad boy step-father could.

More From Phoenix

November 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ladies, Your Feelings Will Never Trump Reality

November 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

His answer is one based in physics (i.e., if you wear tight fitting athletic clothing and you happen to be overweight, inevitably you will wear out the fabric). End of story. If you have an issue with this, take it up with the Gods of Alchemy

The Father Could Not Be Reached for Comment

December 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The primary reason I decided to have a vasectomy was because I could not financially afford children, and never saw the case or instance in my future that I would.

This is rapidly being replaced by, "I don't want my would be child to grow up with the mentally damaged children mentally damaged parents like these are bringing up."

The Maths Are Hard

December 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I originally intended this to be about old people who don't know how to do decimals and percentages, but it ended up becoming the most off-topic and odd video I've done to date.

Professors Freaking Out About MOOC's

December 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And they go to their crusaderist extreme to come up with the most bullshit of rationalizations as to why they're still relevant.

Sigh. Clarissa needs to be a chancellor of a school. How much you want to bet she'd provide kids with a better education at a fraction of the cost?

Eric is Enjoying the Decline

December 1, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why aren't you!?

If the States Were Chicks

December 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've been in Arizona for about 4 days. In those four days not once have I had to worry about frostbite, hypothermia, or even had the subconscious, darwinistic worry that causes a stir in my stomach by reminding me I might die when I go out in the frigid cold. It has made me conclude that without a doubt, I will be moving to the south. Maybe not Arizona, but certainly Texas or Florida. Life is just too short to live in Minnesota.

However, what's funny is the arrogance most Minnesotan (and Michiganian and Wisconsinite) leftist politicians have about their "beloved" states.

Mark Dayton for example thinks community centers, "Minnesota Nice," and our publicly funded sports arenas are enough to convince people to live in -30 degrees. Why, having to shovel 3 feet of snow, move cars during parking emergencies only to be ticketed anyway, and pay $300 a month in winter heat bills is more than compensated by the fact we have nice bike paths that can be used 2 months out of the year. And don't forget our "hip cool hipster" areas like Uptown and Lowertown! Those inferior artists who populate the place can't work up a damn lick of decent art to the point we've gone so far to redefine art as the minimalist, talentless shit that currently populates the Walker Art Center. But hey, they wear converse shoes, skinny jeans, and they drink their coffee with their pinkies extended! And finally, the taxes. We should be proud of our socialist Norwegian heritage! And that is enough right there to be proud of. We care! So shut the fuck up, pay more in taxes, and appreciate that what you get in return is the fact you were forced to be charitable!

Sarcasm aside, in the end, Minnesota (and her upper midwest socialist sisters) need to realize something:

They're like fat women.

What socialist, liberal, and leftist politicians of the Arctic States of America have to realize is that they already have an uphill battle to keep productive people in their states. Their weather sucks, snow sucks, and 8 hours a day of sunlight during winter also sucks. So what do they do to sweeten the pot?

Foist some of the highest taxes on its population.

This is like a fat wife having the audacity to be overbearing and nagging on top of physically repugnant. Not only is the place unattractive, but it's abusive and intolerable as well.

Now some states get it. They realize they're fat and thus, they are nice. North Dakota and South Dakota know they are the obese ugly sisters of the United States, but compensate by offering no income taxes, favorable business environments, and in general have a pleasant demeanor. Other states, on the opposite spectrum also get it. California for example knows it can abuse its popuilation because it's the "hot girl" of the United States. Great weather, great climate, awesome scenery. Why the IT nerds in silicon valley will line up to get financially ass-raped by the state just as readily as they will to get ass-raped by gold digging divorce-prone liberal arts majors from LA. But at least California offers something.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, New York, Connecticut, and all the other snowbound shit holes offer NOTHING. Ergo they are the worst - a fat chick WHO HAS ATTITUDE.

Thus, there should be no surprise Minnesotans and the like are moving to Florida or Texas.

You see, Florida and Texas are like the nice farm girls who are hot, but don't have the attitude of California or the delusions de grandiuer of Minnesota. They still appreciate productive citizens, they like stable, non-criminal populations, but are also physically pleasing. Nice weather. Warm climate. And no shoveling snow whatsoever (I might also point out their women are indeed hotter). But ALSO low taxes, freedoms, pro gun, and a general pro-business environment. So the question to Minnesota liberals is simply this:

What, precisely, do you bring to the table for your economically productive suitors?

And the answer is nothing.

You're loud, you're entitled, your obnoxious, you're fat, you're ugly, your abusive, and you're gross. No self-respecting citizen would ever marry you let alone fuck you for one night. And when people threaten to leave, you merely threaten to punish them for leaving instead of looking at yourself in the mirror to maybe consider that maybe you are the one with the problem.

So continue on Mark Dayton. Continue on Phyllis Kahn. Continue on Chris Coleman. You keep snapping your fingers in a "you go girl talk to the hand" type manner. In the end you're nothing but the fat, ghetto trash, trailer trash girl that offers nothing but pain and life-sucking misery to anybody with skill, talent, and future. And until you check your attitude (or somehow magically change the climate) you will forever be the ugly, bitchy fat girl of these United States of America.

Matt Forney Doesn't Like Typos

December 2, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Matt was kind enough to read and review my "best of" book "Captain Capitalism - Top Shelf."

May I return the favor and suggest you consider one of his books for a gift this season (I recommend the hitchhiking book) or also consider his podcast?

Accidental Alpha

December 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I was sitting at my post late one night at the Electrical Engineering and Computer Science Building. I was stationed there to protect the multi-million dollar super computers that were in the bowels of the building, even though it would take a crane, a wrecking ball, and other heavy industrial equipment to steal them from the premises. In short, I was there to lower the insurance premiums of the building by sitting at a desk because I was "security" and according to the insurance company's idiotic actuaries, there was now officially a statistically smaller chance the 5,000 pounds of super computers would not be absconded with.

Up came a friend of mine. She was an east Indian girl. The epitome of "cute," she must have had a British soldier inseminate her lineage 200 years back somewhere because while her skin was dark, her eyes were piercingly blue. I appreciated her companionship, but she talked a lot, and I had a lot of studying to do while protecting the immovable supercomputers. Besides, I know who she would talk about.

"Brian."

Brian was a guy she had a crush on for the past 6 months. She would consult me about how to get Brian to go out with her. How to get Brian to ask her out. How to get Brian to notice her.

I appreciated her to death because she was a computer science major and was pulling her own weight in life. But I was on such a crunched time-table, I didn't have too much time to consult her or advise her about her love life. She would have to leave in 10 minutes, otherwise I wouldn't be able to finish my chapter and complete my assignment for "Advanced Financial Statement Analysis."

"Hiiiiiiii Aaron."

"Hello, Swatee."

"What are you doing????"

"Studying."

"Why do you study so hard?"

"Because I don't want to be poor anymore."

But soon enough "Brian" came up in our conversation.

I loved the kid to death, but I didn't have time to talk about Brian. It was finals, I was under pressure, and my credit load was the heaviest I had. And so when she asked for the 40th time about how to get Brian to talk to her I broke. I said (though in a polite manner),

"Look, Swati. I don't have time for this. I'm too busy. I need to get this studying done. Just ask the guy out already. I can't be your therapist."

She seemed hurt, as I suspected she would be. But then she sheepishly said,

"You're Brian."

I was perplexed and didn't get it at first.

"Huh? Wha??? What do you mean, I'm Brian?"

She then confessed, telling me that she didn't know how to approach me and ask me out. And so she made it seem that she liked this fictional character called "Brian" hoping I would somehow realize.

She then did the boldest move I've ever seen a girl make - she asked me to date her.

"So, would you want to date me?"

Without a skip I said, "No."

She didn't seem so taken aback by the answer, as much as she did the speed at which I answered. She responded increasingly shakingly as she digested my answer:

"Wa...well...why not?"

Equally callous I said, "because you won't sleep with me."

Now on the verge of non-functioning she said:

"But...but...I would do a lot of other things."

I said, again, equally dispassionate, "No, I don't care. I'm sick of girls not having sex and I'm not dating any more girls that won't have sex. Your religion prevents you from it so I'm not going to waste my time with you."

She ran upstairs crying.

It wasn't until a full 15 years later did I realize just how devastating that must have been to that nice young girl. She really liked me. She really had an interest in me. She even went so far as to do what less than .00001% of the female population does and live up to the truly equal reputation they claim to have and ask me out.

And I shot her down with the coldest of indifferent callousness.

However, I still managed to forgive myself and let me explain why.

One, life was tough. So tough that girls were not on my mind. What was on my mind was much lower and basal on Maslow's hierarchy of needs. I was starving. I had no money. And I could barely afford to live. My entire life was work and school and sleep. There was no fun, there was no "partying," there was no girls. However, a close third to SURVIVAL and TUITION was "girls." And so if there was any freetime I had, it was dedicated towards finding one and getting laid.

However, most girls within my "game-reach" would play their mind games, tease and joke. They had parental finances, they had many more male suitors, they had all the advantages, and so when I had a rare 3 hours free on a weekend and was looking to close in that tight window, they were looking for me to merely begin the beginnings of an initiation to perhaps, maybe qualify later, to be considered a candidate, to perhaps at some point in time, maybe have sex with them.

The best I got was a girl who dry humped my leg (who was just the first of THREE) and then asked me to leave when she was done.

Between the biological-physical pressures of starvation, sleep deprivation, financial demands, tuition, studying, and the rare mind-fuck games girls played on me, I broke and remember, quite clearly saying to myself, "I do not have the time for this bullshit."

And so, you can understand why I was so callous and blunt.

My life was completely consumed with survival and school. And therefore if ANY girl was going to insist on being in my Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs she better damn well be putting out. Otherwise, get the fuck out of my life, you serve no purpose.

Two, self respect. I didn't notice it at the time, but it was arguably the first time I stood up for myself and said, "No." I was sick of busting my ass off, doing 10 times what the local frat boy douche was doing, and if he could get laid while daddy paid for him, his booze, his roofies, his rent, his insurance, and his condoms, then the least any girl that had an interest in me could do would be to fuck me. I was by all measures and manners a better man than most on campus, but if any girl dared to insult me by saying,

"Lets you and me have a relationship where we cuddle, you pay for shit, spend what rare free time you have with me, but I'm not going to reward all your supreme-kick-ass-edness with sex, but merely my presence," sorry sweetheart. Don't care how blue your eyes are. Go fuck yourself.

And it was this transformation that made me the "accidental alpha."

Almost immediately after telling her I would not date her, my junior and senior years were a complete 180 from my freshman and sophomore years. I was working just the same, but oddly enough many women starting popping up, nay, foisting themselves into my life. I would be sitting at my station and several girls would flirt with me to the point I'd be guaranteed a date. I would be walking a girl home (while working) and she'd give me her number. I would be studying at the library and a girl would sit next to me to ask me a stupid question that was an obvious ploy to talk to me.

Of course, none of this mattered because I had to put food on the table, shelter over my head, and money into my bloviating and worthless professors' hands, and so I continued to ignore them. But my ignoring them did make dating a lot easier. Soon, despite my pressure for time, I had notched up over 70 dates in my junior year alone. My belligerent and iron persona got me a "friend harem" on campus which only begat more introductions to other girls. And it almost became a non-issue as women seemingly just approached me and "fell into my lap."

But let us be clear about one thing:

NONE of this had anything to do with what I did.

It had EVERYTHING to do with my environment. An environment that was so harsh, it forced me to push women to the back of the line and put myself first, because if I didn't, I would (frankly) die.

And this is the lesson to learn.

How a man "achieves alpha" depends. Sometimes it is through reading blogs like this. Sometimes it is through good leadership and guidance from a father. Sometimes it is through sportsmanship and competition. But if I were to gander for most men, it was accidental.

One day, you're the nerd of the world.

The next, for some odd reason, you're king shit.

The trick is to be able to learn WHY and HOW.

Consider the natural athlete or "natural alpha." He is genetically superior. Tall, handsome, fast reflexes. Society is geared to practically guarantee him alpha status through sports, captainships, and highschool hierarchy.

But what happens after high school?

He goes to college.

Learns he's not all that as he's competing against nationwide bigger, stronger and superior guys.

And soon develops a gut and gets a "BA" in "business" and works as a salesman at the local styrafoam company. He returns to his 10 year reunion and realizes he's out of shape, no girls recognize him, and no girls want to talk to him.

The man was an "accidental alpha." His environment made him attractive, but he was clueless as to why and thus could not maintain nor replicate his success he enjoyed for those two brief years in high school. His "alphaness" was fleeting.

You need to be smarter than the high school jock. You need to know WHY so you can capitalize on it and sustain it. And thus, when you become the accidental alpha you need to have the wisdom and foresight to step back, assess the situation, and realize why everything is going your way.

In my particular case it was that my environment was so extreme it forced me to say to the women,

"Go fuck yourselves, I do not have time for you and your petty mind-games and drama and bullshit. I need to eat and pay for rent. And unless you're going to get naked, then you can go find an emotional tampon elsewhere."

In other men's particular cases it may have been,

"Sorry sweetie, I'm making $100 per hour. I'm going to milk this as long as I can and no T&A is worth sacrificing this."

But whatever the case, you must realize why it is you are alpha at that moment in time, otherwise it will forever remain ACCIDENTAL. You need to identify the traits and behavior you are exuding that is resulting in the success you have with women. You need to pause and get your head out of the grind to take note as to the (seemingly odd) success and attention you're receiving from women. You need to stop and identify what precisely is going on because if you don't take time to figure out why you are having that success, it will forever be gone when you; graduate retire achieve your goals

because once you do, whatever it was that was attracting women to you will turn off.

And unless you did indeed identify it so you can replicate it, you will forever lose it.

In short, ensure your accidental alpha status becomes permanent.

Latest Episode of The Clarey Podcast

December 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Podcasting on the road (literally), Aaron asks why anybody lives where there's snow and liberals, tells the sad story about how the only memento he has from his childhood is a 1970 Hoover vacuum, explains why there is no longer any shame in collecting a government check, gives a helluva plug for Ranger Self Defense, and finishes off with a MANDATORY rant about racism and how the left has just destroyed people of color.

Get Drunk in Vegas With the Captain!

December 3, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Not to mention Peter Schiff and a whole bunch of other guys!

Americans Like to Be Abused

December 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hey Spike! You wanna go chase some cats! Huh, Spike, ya wanna???

Eeeyyyyyya, SHADDUP!

The Real Reason for the "Fast and the Furious" Franchise's Success

December 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hot chicks.

Yep.

Fast cars.

Yep.

Cool ripped dudes?

Yep.

Exotic, though financially impossible careers?

Yep.

Just one thing people miss about why the Fast and the Furious franchise was so successful.

Family.

I'm going to go out on a limb here and draw a couple lines.

The youth that are attracted to the FATF series are also of a generation now brought up by my completely worthless and dysfunctional generation, or the equally dysfunctional baby boomer generation who had children later in life. Whether late boomer or early x'er, they have something in common:

Divorce or absentee parents. i.e. -shitty parents.

Don't know if you've seen any of the FATF movies, but there aren't any parents. There are no parental figures. Matter of fact, every movie is a story of young adults having to make their way in life, and the only way they know how is through the underground or by illegal means.

Is "dad" around?

No.

Is "mom" around?

No.

Is there even a "wise uncle" that could pass as a father figure?

No.

It is 100% parentless youth that can only find refuge, surrogate family, and meaning in other equally abandoned metaphorical orphans.

Are the movies horrible?

Yes.

Will their car chases ever match "Bullitt?"

Hellz no.

But there's a reason there's a "Fast and Furious 7" and not a "Forrest Gump 2":

These kids wanted a fucking family. And if they can't get it in the real world, they'll live vicariously through the movies dreaming they might have the shot at putting together a surrogate one with a ragtag band of rejects and miscreants. They might have meaning, they might have belonging, and they might serve a purpose, even if it is illegal.

Of course, the series and acting is absolutely horrible for TFATF (no disrespect to Paul).

But what is worse is what's driving kids to see such an otherwise horrible and pointless movie series.

Give Up Thee, These Vices Three

December 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You looking to improve yourself and make yourself happier?

Try giving up three vices for a month.

You can still significantly improve your looks by Christmas.

Shame on the Rampant Racism at the ACLU

December 4, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm offended. Just look at this link or the image below.

What? You people at the ACLU just assume because he's black he runs into problems with the police? Boy talk about white privilege and institutional racism!

My Prediction About the Manosphere

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Not to get too "Rooshian" on you, but I'm going to predict the word "manosphere" gets added to the dictionary somewhere between 2014-2015.

I know, I know. It's two years so I'm cheating a little. But mark my words, it will be entered in the official English lexicon.

Because, well, it already has. It's whether the academics deem it "worthy" in their little world.

Men, You're Fired

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Some very good writing. Don't agree with it all, but some outstanding observations.

I Like What You Muslims Did With that Debt Thing There

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And that retirement planning scheme you got going on too. Nice work.

Anyway, take the hate you have for muslims out of it and remember that the majority of them voted Republican before some of their people flew planes into our buildings and GW dared to retaliate. It is a conservative culture. Not too sure about the ha-jab, not to sure about the stoning of people in Afghanistan, and not too sure about honor killings, but the extremities aside the Muslims do have some economic principles I'd like to emulate.

The Key Difference Between the Manosphere and Feminism

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

We here in the Manosphere are actually, genuinely, independent individuals who do not need constant help or subsidy from the taxpayer. The irony, of course, is that feminists, who SCREECHINGLY proclaim their COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEZE PHLEGM PHLEM

"independence"

is so laughably dependent on forced wealth transfers to their women's studies programs, women's shelters, and the cacophony of non-profit, public sector, social service claptrap make work jobs that they're not only the epitome of dependent, but hypocrites as well.

To provide empirical evidence to this fact, I made a chart.

I know this chart may be a bit complicated because it has "the Maths," but don't let that bother you're little feminist brains. You just claim "the Maths" is a disease created by the patriarchy.

Oh, by the way ladies. I've been meaning to ask you something. Instead of this whole "I pay taxes, government bureaucrats take a piece, and only a portion gets passed onto the intended recipient" perhaps we could cut out the middle man. I mean, why don't I just write you a check directly. Or better yet, how about I hook up an IV to myself and I'll just pump blood into your system? Ooo! Ooo! Better idea even than that. How about you get genetically engineered to become a lamprey-like human and you can just suck off my lifeblood like the biological parasite you are? That would be incredibly more efficient than the racket we have set up today.

Perhaps that is an idea. Using the Lamprey as the official mascot of feminism.

POST POST - Ug, really? Do I have to do this???? The $1.2 trillion is not real. I don't care to bother to try to calculate all the money. It really is a lazy, guesstimate. The point is that feminists HAVE TAKEN money and the Manosphere has taken NOTHING.

There Is No Reason to Take Public Transportation

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Unless you are disabled or in such a heavily populated area, there is no reason to take public transportation.

"Inflation Insurance"

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You want to tell your woman you love her?
You want to show her how much you care?

Well then this Christmas get her what every woman wants:

Inflation Insurance.

Yes, gold, silver, be it bars or bullion, makes the perfect Christmas gift for the woman in your life. Unlike other men, you know that your girl pays attention to the M2 money supply, is aware of the expansionary monetary policy the Federal Reserve is pursuing, and can calculate national debt to GDP. So instead of flowers or chocolates, you know she wants something tangible and never frivolous - precious metals.

So go to MilesFranklin.com or call them at 1-800-822-8080 and get the love of your life (or even yourself) some Inflation Insurance. Nothing says I love you more than a pound of silver.

(Don't forget to mention that the Captain sent you!)

Today's Office Brought to You in Part By

December 5, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Go Fuck Yourself" - Are you a boss that lied about the job duties to get a younger employee to agree to take the job? Then go fuck yourself. It's the least you can do for your lies and deceit.

Also

"Have a Cup of Shut the Fuck Up" - Not going to offer a wage that is commensurate for the work you're asking people to do? Then try "Have a Cup of Shut the Fuck Up." It takes the bullshit out of middle management and middle aged bosses.

"Take This Job and Shove It" - No, we're not working in a basement because you planned so poorly you failed to rent enough office space with windows. "Take this Job and Shove It" - now available from kids working to pay your social security.

And by

"Do It Yourself" - Too lazy to train staff? Tell them it's a steep learning curve because you don't want to do it? Then "Do It Yourself." If you're not going to train somebody, then why hire them? "Do It Yourself" - just pray it isn't Excel.

And finally by

"You Lost" - Thought kissing ass and brownosing your way to the top would guarantee a successful career? Uh oh! You lost! Apparently doing your own thing is more profitable, enjoyable and easy. Why kiss ass and work at a job you hate for 40 years when you can live on the cheap and answer to no one...Oops! I guess it's too late for you. "You Lost" - when you realize you lost at the game of life.

Movember Fish - QOTD

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"That fish hasn't got the hang of movember"

I love my readers.

What Would Sophia Loren Do?

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Here's a pretty easy rule of thumb to follow ladies:

"What Would Sophia Loren Do?" or WWSLD?

I was in downtown Phoenix the other day, when I saw a cackle of middle aged women laughing and having a good ole time. It wasn't until I got closer however did I realize what they were doing.

Posing with a naked statue akin to the "King David" statue. Yes, they were grabbing his unit and posing in lewd places. But once I shook off the initial disbelief, I figured it would be good to document it.

The picture is a little dark, which is probably for the best.

So let me ask you something ladies. Who can you see doing this?

Sophia Loren or Miley Ray Cyrus

And then ask which one you want to be.

Seriously, this is the selection boys. This is the selection. Enjoy that decline.

The Mandatory Christmas Gift All Teenagers Need

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is Christmas time.

You want to know what I want for Christmas?

I want for NO children to go to college only to waste their time and money on some worthless degree that will do nothing to improve their employment prospects and only serve to indebt them into the future, and cripple their finances.

Look, parents, uncles, aunts, and family friends.

You got that kid in your life that just declare a worthless "art history major" or some kind of "masters in creative writing" BS.

Can you please man up, do the right thing, and prevent them from making a horrible mistake?

Buy them the book "Worthless." It's THE book that every high schools senior and junior needs to read and it's going to make your life, their life, and everybody's lives easier. It explains very clearly why some degrees are worthwhile and others are completely worthless.

It is available in paperback and kindle.

But more importantly it's available in audio format so your kid (or you) doesn't have to actually read it.

Eliminating Your Desire for a Car You Can't Afford

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Helping out the chillllldrreeeen (Fall Out 3 "Children," not Michael Savage "Children") like I do!

Alyssa Again

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I know you guys hate her. So out of sheer spite for my readership I shall post the latest pic.

Coincidentally you may purchase my books here, and for any of the lovely ladies that want to send in tastefully risque pics, I will send you all my books for free. All of the lieutenants, economists, and agents in the field appreciate the WWII pin up girl.

Before You Major in Law

December 6, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Some outstanding advice for those of you considering going to law school.

Remember, you can also buy "Worthless" to help guide you in what to major in.

Late Night at the Office

December 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A Discreet Weapon and Christmas Gift

December 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hey Kids,

Talon Knife. Go buy one. Great personal protection device. Great survival piece (comes with paracord). AND one of those perfect "small gifts" that you want to get somebody who is outdoorsy or are just looking for a high-end stocking stuffer. Might also prove VERY useful for a loved one on campus where they ban guns, but not small, discreet knives.

TALON KNIFE!

Go get one!

Aaron

A New York Story

December 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Catch them two decades down the road and they'll talk about how they almost wound up going down a bad path before they turned their lives around and they'll have stories of their friends who went from mugging to dealing to shooting. But often those same men, now amiable and wise, shaking their heads at their past selves, will still have left behind a trail of fatherless kids who are repeating the process all over again.

There's actually a lot more to this story. He paints a clear and full picture of what it was like to be in the Jewish neighborhoods of NYC.

Enjoy Staying Poor

December 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because that's where that's heading.

Hi-Freaking-Larious

December 7, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What the Man in Your Life Wants for Christmas

December 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember how I said men want women to lose 15 pounds for Christmas?

Yeah, scratch that.

I now know what I want for Christmas.

THIS!!!!!!

All I need is Glenn Reynolds to mention my new book and like my AR-15 I'll be able to buy one!

You can find the website here.

When Your Voter Base Is Full of Idiots

December 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I worked in the lower castes of the banking system. Never worked at Goldman Sachs, was ever so briefly an "analyst" at Norwest, but after that it was pretty much the bottom of the barrel for me:

Credit unions and community banks.

This meant taking on the clients that the upper, mid, and regional banks didn't want. Our clientele was by far the dumbest people in the population, and because of their idiocy, they were also the worst in terms of personal finances. And this is not an opinion. The last bank I worked for actually liked problem clients because (get this):

they always had to pay late fees and were thusly sometimes our most profitable clients.

Forget quality clients that pay you back on time. Forget reliable depositors and checking clients who always made sure they never overdrafted.

No, our business plan was to keep the degenerates of society because we could nail them with fees.

Thus, why I'm not surprised that a full 25% of Obamacare applications have errors on them.

Like credit unions and community banks, people who are applying for Obamacare are likely the dregs of society. They're unable to support themselves financially, and so you shouldn't expect them to be able to fill out an application correctly. And frankly, I'm surprised it's as low as 25%. But what I really love about this is not that Obamacare is failing because it's technology is being implemented by incompetent liberals, and not that it's failing because of its own crushing bureaucratic weight, but because the intended users are just too damn stupid to use it effectively.

This is a real problem the left is going to have to face. If it gets so big, and it gets so much of what it wants, it not only has to rely on lesser talented people to implement and manage these programs, but rely on their idiotic voter base to use it AND appreciate it. But since they've dumbed them down so much with K-College education, it's too complicated for their voter base to use, thus appreciate it.

it is the blind leading the blind, and I am enjoying watching it as I enjoy the decline.

Jenny Erickson - Professional Mommy Blogger

December 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

WARNING - You will be alright if you just read Dalrock's post that I link to above. HOWEVER, if you click on links going to the woman's actual website you will never be able to "unsee" what you saw.

The Choice Blacks and Other Minorities Must Make

December 8, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Either you vote democrat, in which case you are powerless because you are told just to sit there in the ghetto and decay and rot while the democrats get you other people's money

or you realize you are in control of your life and it is not so hopeless your only option is to wait for other people's money from the government and vote republican.

Choose.

How the Short Hair Debate Shows How Girls Have Been Brainwashed

December 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Alpha Game Plan had a quick, but great, and humorous, post.

He had written before about how short hair is 99% of the time NOT preferable to long hair. And that if women wanted to attract said members of the opposite sex, they should grow their hair long.

Oh mercy me or my, the vitriol he got in return.

So let me see if I can break this down to the simpleton, atomic level so that everybody, especially the ladies, can understand.

You see, this whole dating thing is not myopic or one-sided. There's kind of 2 parties involved. And if these 2 parties are ever going to come to an accord, both are going to have to consider what the other party wants.

For example, it is understood that women would prefer fit, muscular men to fat or wimpy ones.

Or

It is also understood that women would prefer men who are accomplished in one capacity or another.

And because of these facts men, who are serious about it anyway, regularly go and work out, run, and develop some kind of craft, persona, skill, or career of some sort.

Now, as far as my inklings tell me, this is where most American women stop.

"Good, he learned. He is considering my needs. He is expending effort to make himself attractive to me."

Well, not so quick sister. We have a little Christmas wishlist of our own.

Top of the list...

you need to be hot.

Sorry. Dems the rules. Don't care what that fat bloated sow called "Oprah" told you, she ain't sleeping with women. We are. And "we" (that would be the men dearies) do not "like" or

"request" or
"prefer"

physical beauty

we

DEMAND it.

Now, understand this is not arrogance or bravado. This is nature. This is our genetic programming. This is outside of our control just as much as it is for you to be repulsed by a guy shorter than you. So don't get all upset if a guy first and foremost judges you by your looks because:

1. It's a prerequisite before anything can happen and
2. It's the most easily assessable trait you have. We don't have to talk to you to find out if you're hot, we just have to look.

Now, with all that being said, PART (not all) but PART of the "attractiveness" of a woman is whether or not she has long hair.

I know you hate that. I know it takes more maintenance.

Tough shit. Those are the rules.

Just like gravity.
Just like Newtonian physics (they're one in the same, but I'm going to guess with your BA you don't know that)
Just like quantum mechanics.

Men like women with long hair.

Now, if you want to take personal umbrage to that fact and call men "shallow" or scream that you don't do your hair for men, but rather yourself, then good. You do that.

Because realize what you're doing. You are broadcasting to the world you are incapable of the number one thing it takes to keep a man - selflessness.

Once again, I suggest you read the comments Alpha Game Plan had to endure.

Do any one of these children sound like they're capable of altruism, selflessness, compassion, or kindness?

They sound like greedy, snivelly, self-centered trollops completely incapable of thinking of anybody but themselves. And when you consider the audacity they have to lecture and berate men for being shallow for liking what they're genetically programmed to like, you know there's just a wee-bit of a dash of pscyhoticness in them.

So let us do this all day ladies. I'm game. You keep lecturing men for "daring" to like big boobs, long hair, trim bodies, and tight asses. And while you're at it lecture them for not liking the "inner you" or your intelligence. Because I have news for you dearies, unless you're an IT chick or an accountant or a doctor or a welder, and you're just another one of the boring, billion "liberal arts majoring teacher social worker communications" types who lecture men for insisting on physical attraction, you merely belie two things about you:

You're likely ugly
And you're likely dumb

Which means you might as well cut your hair short, because I don't see any guys coming your way.

Oh, and for reference, allow me to put a picture of what you should be aiming for. You know, just in case you decided to ask the quesiton, "what do men want?"

MRE Ration Post

December 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I think I've coined a new term.

When the blogger or author is too busy to write new material he or she shall make an MRE Ration post by linking to others work. It will suffice, it will provide nourishment, but it isn't as good as a home cooked post made from scratch.

Ergo, here's your MRE lieutenants, economists, agents in the field, and children. It should stave off the hunger while I polish off the book. (though now the debate is whether Ace of Spades HQ - or any said linkee - will take umbrage to being an MRE post or appreciate the traffic ;)

Barry White and Sean Connery

December 9, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

do not adjust their speech for California girls.

And that is why they get more respect from society and more play from the ladies.

Why Paul Mason Should Just Try to Take My Property

December 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because if he did, he would not be getting it without the most serious of injuries.

Could You Take Them in a Fight?

December 10, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is a serious question because I believe that people's politics do invariably have an effect on their masculinity and femininity. But how many of these people could you take in a fight?

This is not a joke, this is not hyperbole, but how many of them could you duke it out with and know you'd come out the winner?

I'm not saying this because of bravado or arrogance, but I am complete confident for me it would be 100%. And the reason I even bring it up is not to slander them, but to advance and record an embryonic theory I have about masculinity, attraction, and strength in leftists and liberal that I'm trying to flesh out.

What's truly sad is I didn't even research the site enough to confirm whether they were liberals or not. I just somehow KNEW. And that's why I want to get to the bottom of.

How did I KNOW they are leftists??

I don't HAVE TO research them any further. I just KNOW they're leftists. And what gets me is I can tell by their faces and demeanor. So why is that? Why can I tell? And more importantly, why am I so supremely confident they are leftists?

Ideas, thoughts, theories?

YEAAA! I'm on the "Chart O' Evil"

December 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

To me it seems like patriots and Americans, not people who want to destroy democracy.

A Question for the Sphere - Are You Better Off Than You Were 4 Years Ago?

December 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ronald Reagan in his 1980 presidential campaign asked a very simple question - are you better off than you were 4 years ago.

The answer for the majority of Americans was a resounding "no."

Four years later he would ask the same question, and the answer for the majority of Americans was a resounding "yes," and he then went on to re-election.

But this question asked over 30 years ago in the political arena is one that needs to be asked today of every reader, follower, viewer, and listener of The Manosphere, the Econo-sphere, and any other alt-right sphere:

Are you better off today than you were 4 years ago?

And I'm going to bet it's a resounding "Hell yes."

The origins and precise date that these various alternative spheres started is up for debate. And truthfully I don't think "Fred on Anything" or "Roissy" or Tom Leykis or "Matt Drudge" care when it was or who started it as it is truly an altruistic endeavor or intellectual labor of love for them. But we can generally agree that the 'sphere (which ever one you want to consider yourself a part of) didn't start gaining significant readership until about four years ago. I know using my own personal traffic statistics, I'm up about 10 fold since 2009. And given the anecdotal evidence of Google Trends, MSM attention, etc., it seems "the 'spheres" have enjoyed exponential growth over those same four years. Ergo, there are probably millions of young men who discovered us, are following us, and have continued to follow us for the past four years.

But are we doing any good? Are we making any progress? And it is here that I'm supremely confident that we are.

There's not a day that goes by that I don't get a "thank you" e-mail from some young (or not so young) guy who tells me how he was miserable until his discovered the 'sphere. I've even received thanks from women who tell me how much my and others' blogs helped her turn her life around be it career, mothering, of being a wife. And an increasing percentage of my choir is coming from minorities who appreciate me laying down the law, telling them like it is, and not kissing their ass like some SWPL pussy, but kicking their ass like a loving father. And though I have no statistical proof of it, I would bet my motorcycle that we have done more to advance, help, and improve the lives of millions of people IN A SINCERE, PRACTICAL, AND TANGIBLE WAY more than any government program, more than any feel-good affirmative action program, and more than any astro-turf non-profit, PSA, bullshit lefty "initiative" ever did.

But the key thing is to denote why.

Why is it such a "hated," "evil," "racist," "bigoted," "misogynistic," hate-filled segment of the internet managed to do so much good? Why is it such a vile group of basement-dwelling vermin get such praise?

The answer is simple -

We have the balls to tell the god damned truth.

Realize the paradox or dichotomy writers, bloggers, "vloggers," authors, and podcasters in these alternate 'spheres face:

Obey, get rewarded, but never be free

or

Disobey, speak the truth, get punished, but be free

And 100% of your alternative 'sphere bloggers chose the latter. We don't have the patience, we don't have the tolerance, and we actually respect ourselves and our fellow man too much to swallow whole and parrot the commie, leftist, feminist script. We don't care how much it costs us in terms of our careers, our housing, our families, and our futures, because a life of lies is just not worth the McMansion in the suburbs, a confiscatable 401k, student debts, worthless degrees, divorce and false accusations of "ism."

And so with nothing left to lose we speak the truth. And it's the truth that people are starving for.

Be it the average American male who's been lied to about what women want, that he should be "sweet" and "kind" and "sensitive."

Be it the poor black man who's been lied to that he shouldn't try because he's been discriminated against by "evil white people" and should hold out for a government check instead of majoring in engineering.

Or be it the woman who deep down inside wants to be a stay at home mom and raise kids, but has been berated for not wanting to become a "powerful lawyer executive supreme awesome independent woman."

we come outright and say not only what's on people's minds, but explain to them with logic, facts, data, and morality why it's OK to think or desire those things. We give them hope, we give them truth, we give them reality, no matter how harsh and unpleasant it may be compared to the lies and bullshit Oprah, the media, the government, politicians and the education industry tell them, because in the end it is only the truth that matters.

In short, it is simply adhering to The Reality Principle that not only makes our 'spheres a success but gives our readers practical, functional, and effective advice because...

it's based in reality not politics, lies, propaganda and bullshit.

So, riddle me this, riddle me that readers, viewers, listeners, lieutenants, economists, children and agents in the field:

Are you better off than you were 4 years ago? Has the Manosphere, Androsphere, Econosphere, etc., improved your lives? Are you in better financial shape? Are you in better physical shape? Are you in better mental shape? Do you have some modicum of hope? And is your life not better?

Because understand I'm not looking for a particular answer. I merely want the truth. But I'm going to bet my bottom dollar the alternative 'spheres have done more good, helped more people, and advanced more lives (not to mention saved some people's sanity) than the trillions of dollars the government has spent on social programs and thousands of hours of Oprah-spew ever has. Because we have something even better than trillions of dollars and a cable network with a bloviating woman:

Reality and the truth.

And that is the only thing that can genuinely help out your fellow man.

Enjoy the decline.

Retroactive Grade Inflation

December 11, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Swear to the Patron Saint's Name of Frick, we need to start nuking law schools

Damnit, Now I Have to Think

December 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Lousy, stupid, intelligent bloggers. With all their intelligent observations and stuff. I just want to play video games and drink. But no!!!! Oh no!!! Have to get all fancy schmancy with the oopdy loopdy and get all smart and stuff. I remember the days when I was a kid. Oh, it was great, no thinking. No worrying. Just how can I score another cookie without my mom finding out and praying for snow days. No, now I got some Canuck getting all smart and I'm compelled to read his shit. Should have never gone to college. Wouldn't be curious about this stuff. No, should have just stayed at home. Lived in my mother's basement. Then I wouldn't know, let alone care about this intelligent talky stuff. Stupid internet.

Low Level Employees Are Only Worth 1/847th of an Executive

December 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The math is in and it appears that entry level, low level employees at various corporations are only 1/847th the value of corporate executives.

After spitting out illegitimate children, majoring in stupid shit, expecting the world to pay for them, and in general making bad decisions all around, their productive capacity as measured by the labor market shows them to produce a meager .001 of economic value that their better educated, harder working counterparts do.

Efforts have been made to increase the productive capacity of society's lowest class so that they too may be able to tell what the difference is between a debit or credit is, why you shouldn't breed before you're 20, and how learning basic math skills is required to make it out of poverty. But despite trillions of dollars spent on the public education system, all it seems to have done is brainwash people into a entitlement mentality and enrich a class of education majors. There still (amazingly) seems to be some genuinely stupid (or lazy) people in the country who will never ever manage the intellectual or tradesmanship muster to produce more than 1/10th of one penny the production for every dollar their executive counterparts have.

End Sarcarm...though only slightly

Let me ask you people this.

Why is it we look at corporate executive pay as a multiple of the lowest paid employee as some kind of measure of overpayment to the executive?

What if we did it in reverse? What if we took the logical opposite and applied that rule?

If an executive makes 847 times more than the lowest paid employee, if labor markets are efficient, then by default doesn't that mean the lowest paid employee is only 1 847th as productive?

What if we, with the same hatred, vitriol, envy, and bigotry the left has, skewed the lower classes claiming they're only 1/847th as productive?

1/847th as smart?
1/847th as hard working?

Oh, don't get me wrong. You don't have to convince me that most corporeate executives get there through non-meritorious means (look it up), but you can't simply say this disparity between CEO and entry level pay is solely because of "big bad meanie" executives. I would say the majority of it has to do with why entry level people are making as little as they are.

In other words, the single dad, who didn't graduate from high school, who works at the local McDonald's and can well...do basic subtraction and addition, does not compare to the CEO who has her MBA, CFA, CPA, can balance books and knows how to interpret statistical marketing reports and knocks out 80 hours a week. And you can let your emotions and ideology get in the way, but it doesn't matter. That is why CEO and executives make more than the noobs. They're older, they have experience, and they busted their asses off.

Now you can get mad about this. You can go ahead and protest, but you know what's great?

Let's say you get your little $15 an hour.

Let's say the minimum wage goes up to $10/hour.

Robots.

Yep, robots.

You see, you're so unskilled that you're only about $3/hour a way from being replaced by robots. Yes, they are complex, yes they are advanced, but you know something?

They shut the ef up and do their job. They're never late, they never "um oh, like, yeah, I'm um sick" and they don't breed illegitimate children, let alone get an entitlement complex. So much so they can replace you.

Don't like that?

Tough.

That's reality and I'm trying to help you realize that rather than kiss your ass like Obama or Oprah.

So it's up to you kiddies. Do you want to whine and complain only to be replaced by robots (or in other cases, illegal aliens) OR do you want to go to school for a real reason, stop making stupid decisions, and only have to work at McDonald's to make ends meet until you're on to bigger and better things?

Oh, that's right. YOu'd have to try.

Best to sit there and wallow in your pity and envy and do nothing.

Why There Will Always Be a 1%

December 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I mean, beyond basic math and statistics.

Robots to Replace Liberal Arts Majors

December 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Where do most liberal arts majors go?

The service industry.

That's not a joke. I'm sure a statistically disproportionate number of liberal arts majors end up in the food service industry. Just ask any 24+ year old waiter what they went to college for, if they did attend, and I'll bet you it ain't electrical engineering.

But uh oh!!! What were those mean nasty evil engineers building in addition to roads, cars, computers, and everything?

Tablets!

Tablets that can replace human waiters and waitresses!!!!

Oh sure it masked as some kind of "way to get people the bill faster," but don't believe it for a second. You drop $5,000 on tablets and you can easily replace 2-3 people who no longer need to take payment or run bills out to people.

So yeah, clamor for that increase in the minimum wage. See what happens. I can't wait.

Nelson Mandela - Kill Whites

December 12, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have largely stayed away from the Nelson Mandela debate because I was ignorant about him. Aside from what was shoved down my throat in the 80's, I never paid attention to the man. Well, through factual research my opinion on Nelson Mandela has now officially solidified from what my socialist teachers told me to think of him to the truth.

He was a communist and probably a racist. And I don't have time to tolerate assholes, let alone keep up the charade the government/media/education complex wants me to. And if you don't like that fact he was a racist communist, then you really have to ask yourself (especially if you're white) why you would support somebody singing songs about killing white people? I mean, if you're that brainwashed to defend a guy who is singing songs about killing you, then bravo, bravo educational and government establishment. You got people to adhere to an ideology over their own lives.

In the meantime he was a despicable person despite the good he did in South Africa. My opinion will change when historical FACTS (not education or media brainwashing) warrant otherwise.

Will The Real Aurini Please Stand Up

December 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Please stand up
Please stand up

There is only one real Aurini. Can you tell who are the imposters and who the real one is?

Why Illya Kuryakin Was the Ultimate Bad Boy

December 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Do you know who David McCallum is?

He is an old actor who plays in NCIS.

Or at least that's what modern kids today know him as. Back 50 years ago the kids had a drastically different opinion. David McCallum was actually a huge star in his youth starring in anything from "Perry Mason" to "The Great Escape." But his defining role was as a Russian agent, named "Illya Kuryakin" in the TV show "The Man from UNCLE" (which I own and highly recommend)

Now take a look at him in his youth:

Certainly better looking than he is today, not to beschmirch Mr. McCallum, as nobody gets better with age, but answer me this. Is he really a heartthrob?

Sure, he's not ugly. Sure, he's in OK shape. But he was no James Dean or Sean Connery, was he?

From Wikipedia

Although the show aired at the height of the Cold War, McCallum's Russian alter-ego became a pop culture phenomenon. The actor was inundated with fan letters and a Beatles-like frenzy followed him everywhere he went.[5] While playing Kuryakin, McCallum received more fan mail than any other actor in MGM's history.[7] Hero worship even led to a record, Love Ya, Illya, performed by Alma Cogan under the name Angela and the Fans, which was a pirate radio hit in Britain in 1966. A 1990s rock-rap group from Argentina named itself Illya Kuryaki and the Valderramas in honour of The Man from U.N.C.L.E. character.

Are you boys paying attention?

Illya Kuryakin was an agent from, at the time, our HATED and SWORN archnemisis - the Soviets.

And chicks digged him more than any other character in Hollywood, let alone any one of the million of available hard-working American men.

Now I have seen the show. And David McCallum's character is certainly polite, dark, mysterious, but boyish and innocent as well. But do not be confused why he was such a heart throb among the ladies.

He was the "enemy." He was forbidden fruit. He was the "bad Soviet boy" that daddy would be furious about.

It's why felon game works so well.

You need to be forbidden. You need to be bad. You need to be pretty much the EXACT opposite of what women claim they want. This cannot be emphasized enough. If you pull up on a motorcycle with some tats, dare to even dismiss her presence, the girl will not be able to resist.

Don't ask me why. I don't know the underlying psychology and I'm too old to find out. but it "is what it is." And those are the rules you need to play by. Remember you want to be Illya, not Napoleon Solo.

"Maybe You Just Attract the Wrong Type of Girls"

December 13, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Two articles from the middle of nowhere Wisconsin
How buying property in big liberal cities is like buying into a large and expensive HOA
Why my friends are all depressed, some suicidal
Why socialism doesn't even warrant discussion
Has ANY charity or non-profit solve the problem it claims

AND MORE!

on this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

The Pinnacle of American Achievement in Theater

December 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm waiting to see something akin to this quality from our current generations.

Dear Arielle Schlesinger, STEM and the Liberal Arts Don't Mix

December 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

Really??

REALLY??????

"Feminist coding????"

Somebody buy her this book!

You Can Tell A Lot About A Country Based on Who Attends Which Funerals

December 14, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When the Spice girl's get more of an attendance at their funerals than Winston Churchill then you know the last nail was put in the coffin of Western Civilization.

From Our Artist Agent in the Field - Ms. Libbi Ponce

December 15, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Young Ms. Ponce contacted me about pursuing an art career and I think between myself and our resident artist Jorge Gonzales we set her on the right path to achieve that, but not sacrifice thousands of dollars on a worthless degree. Regardless, she found out I was sick and sent me this kind gesture:

Why I do believe despite my evil capitalist nature, I might have some warm fuzzies.

And just so you know ladies, poor ole sick Cappy NEVER turns down any form of pampering and "awpoorbaby-ing."

An Economy Without Men

December 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You'll feel the first shocks, as the infrastructure fails to maintain itself under the strain of invisible workers who have been imprisoned. You'll watch as convicts are forced into slave labor to sustain the infrastructure. You'll feel the crunch as taxes increase, then increase again, because no government seems to understand that slaves and government workers cannot create GDP; without GDP, you have no tax base, without a tax base, you can't maintain a government, and a large portion of women work for the government, whether directly or through welfare.

I just want to know who will do the maths?

Math is Tough

December 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I don't like the maths.
How do I math?
Driving is hard.
Tee hee! I'm majoring in Child Psychology.

When the Fed Doesn't Endorse College

December 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

then you know there's a problem!

Your Age Does Not Determine Your Success (No Matter What Middle Aged Old Farts Say)

December 16, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me to be bold.

Well, I'm not actually being bold, I'm just telling the truth. It's just I have the audacity to speak it, which comes off as being bold and arrogant, but still, it is the truth when I say:

Not one,

NOT

ONE

boss I've ever had was smarter or better than me at either his/her job or mine.

And this is an important point to make, because as many of you youth are finding out, you are being challenged ABSOLUTELY NOWHERE NEAR your full capacity in your careers. You are working jobs that are way beneath your skills, education, and training. And if you don't find out why this is, it WILL lead to decades of confusion, angst, depression, frustration, and anger.

Thus, in order to have this mental peace and sanity you need to understand what is going on in a macro-economic sense to understand the environment you're in, why you are in a job that seems to be going nowhere, and dealing with bosses that are seemingly illogical, constantly lecturing you, and are never happy. And to do this we need to compare two very different economic environments - WWII and today's economy.

To this day I am still amazed at just how much responsibility young men (and women) were giving during WWII. Fighter pilots at the age of 17 (because they lied on their applications), 22 year old captains in command of men. Majors who haven't even made it to their 3rd decade of life. And let's not forget what governments on both sides were doing with their youngest, best, and brightest.

The Manhattan Project had tons of 20 something men.
Hitler's rocket program was headed up by a then 28 year old Verner Von Braun.
And I don't think anybody back at home on either fronts were required to have a bachelor's degree with "master's preferred" in order to work in the factories and help in the war effort.

But that was the thing. There was a war going on. All countries on all sides NEEDED everybody to produce at their absolute potential, at their absolute best. Because if they didn't, then it would spell the end of that country. To that end, all the hurdles, hoops, and other bullshit was eliminated.

Don't care if you're not related to the boss, you are the best welder. WE NEED YOU!
Don't care if you aren't sleeping with the owner, you are the best secretary. WE NEED YOU!
Don't care if you are only 18 years old, you scored well in flight. Here's your P51. WE NEED YOU!

It was the closest we've ever came to a meritocracy.

Now, contrast back then to today's economy.

The economy is growing 40% slower than it was back then. There is no war that threatens the country to galvanize the people. Thus with neither growth nor compunction to use and employ everybody, including our youth, now people are employed based on an increasingly petty amount of irrelevant traits.

It's not merely if you're the best. You need to network and have an in.
It's not merely if you're the brightest. You need to "have adequate people skills."
It's not merely if you are the best man for the job and can replace your boss at a fraction of the price. You have to pay your dues.
And it's not merely if you're more than capable. You need to answer the idiotic questions of a math-impaired 25 year old HR ditz.

Ergo, our economy is not a meritocracy like it was in WWII as much as it has become a bureaucracy. And advancement and success is no longer dependent upon skills, excellence, ability, and potential, it is based on the (veritably) psychotic and sociopathic laws and rules the current managerial class sadistically applies.

This is why you go to college, become amazingly skilled, but are then hired to do a job you could have done when you were 13.

This is why you ram heads with management because all you want to do is work hard and get promoted, but your boss constantly and miserably fails to provide clear and concise leadership, and blames their failures on you.

This is why no matter how many jobs you get, you aren't "having bad luck." It's just that employers are that lousy.

And to top it all off they drown you in a sea of propaganda telling you:

"you just aren't cutting it"
"you just don't get it"
"you just don't take your job seriously" confusing you to think you are the one with the problem.

The question is, is it worth it?

Is it worth wasting your entire youth going to school, and then further busting your ass off for another 6-8 years getting advacned degrees and certifications, so that by the time you're NEARLY 30 and have easily spent 25 YEARS IN SCHOOLING AND EDUCATION and THEN and ONLY THEN does society allow you to start working? Only then are you deemed "worthy" to file and fax?

It's the biggest lie (bar social security, medicare, Obamacare, and socialism) told to the younger generations.

Here's the truth kids.

The modern day "employment system" is so dysfunctional, so bureaucratic, so corrupted, and so nepotistic, it's no longer worth participating in.

I don't care what they tell you about working hard and "putting in your dues" and a "steep learning curve," the pay is plain just not worth it. You will NEVER get promoted. You will NEVER be challenged. And you will NEVER make the money that will make your quarter century of education-slavery worth it. It is a scam, it is a lie, and you will easily waste 50 years trying to pursue it only to get laid off and die poor.

However, the true testament as to just how impossible modern day employment is, is not the bum deal you get. It's the fact that SELF-EMPLOYMENT is not only much easier, but statistically more likely to bring you financial success.

Look, if a 17 year old kid who lies about his age can pilot P-51 fighter planes, then you can start a business.

If a 28 year old can build the first successful ICBM, then you can become self-employed.

And if men in their 30's and build an atomic bomb, then you can come up with a better mousetrap.

But you can't do that with $70,000 in student loans, blathering idiotic professors stealing

4 years of your lives in pre-requisite classes, bloviating Pointy Haired Bosses keeping you in the mail room until you're 27, and more idiotic professor holding you hostage in an MBA program until you're 33.

The key is to play a split strategy. Yes, keep one toe in the "traditional route," get some schooling, do what you need to do. But at the same time it is VITAL you immediately start pursuing a business venture of your own, starting as early as the age of 18. 100% of your efforts will go to benefit you, as opposed to the .2% of your efforts that a corporation allows you to have. And while there is no guarantee you'll be successful, and it is likely you'll have to try multiple businesses before one sticks, in the end it is a much wiser and better strategy than putting 100% of your faith in the "corporation" and being a good, reliable "corporate man."

A Conservative Tries to Design a Functioning Welfare State

December 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Pax was so bored.

HOW BORED WAS HE???

He was so bored, he decided to try to design a functioning welfare state.

An Astute Observation from Mr. Forney

December 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yes, I concur.

Manosphere = Producers of original content
Mainstream = Largely (minus Stossel, etc.) Parasites gossiping about what other people wrote/said

Bravo, good sir. Bravo.

The Bankruptcy of Our Nation

December 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I met Jerry Robinson and his wife Jennifer at the Liberty Mastermind symposium. He being an economist as well as myself, I was happy to see that he was going to speak about "petro-dollars," as petro-dollars was one of the many fields of economics I knew nothing about. Sure enough he spoke, and sure enough myself and every other person in the room knew precisely what petro-dollars were.

However, in addition to this kindness he also gave me his book - The Bankruptcy of Our Nation:
[image]

This was back in July and since then it has been sitting inside my laptop case. Not out of lack of desire to read it, but because of lack of time. But last night, I had the great fortune of being blessed by the Great Security Guard Gods of the sky and got myself a 12 hour shift. Thankfully, I had the entire shift to dedicate to reading the book as I had completed Bachelor Pad Economics and had no more chores or projects to work on. And I'm glad I did as this book proved to be better than what I was expecting.

First, understand no economist knows everything about economics. The field is just too wide. So I was very happy to see that Jerry's book pretty much complemented every field I was either weak or completely clueless about. Specifically, the history of our banking system and central bank. If you are wondering why there is such a visceral hatred of the federal reserve on some people's part, this will explain it all.

Second, I don't care how educated or advanced you are in a field, a simpleton's explanation is much appreciated. Anybody, be you an economist or evangelist, will be able to understand the US banking system, the federal reserve, and how it affects our currency, debt, economy, etc. Because of this Jerry's writing has wide appeal because the every day average Joe can pick up the book and read it AND understand it.

Third, his organization is outstanding. Many people will write books, but put little to no effort into structuring it so that a human brain may digest, incorporate, and comprehend it. There is a glossary, an index, and a bullet point review at the end of each chapter covering the key points that were discussed. The book could be a stand alone class on economics without a professor as it is that clearly written and logically organized.

Finally, it is practical. The first part of the book, like every good book on economics should, introduces some key economic concepts like money, currency, debt, etc. It then goes on to build on that foundation making a case against central banking, making a case for just how truly fucked our nation is financially, and a case, nay, a command that you prepare for this contingency. However, he doesn't just leave you hanging. The second part of the book is basically an instruction manual that carries you though different strategies on how to plan and prepare your financial life given the economic backdrop of the country.

About the only complaint I would have about the book is the reference or even a bit of mythical "reliance" on religion. Though this is more of a function of my visceral hatred for religion and desire for completely basing economics on empiricism so it needn't rely on outside verification. However, even this complaint would prove beneficial for Christian (and in general religious) people who would like to see biblical supportation for the economic arguments Jerry presents.

In short, about a good HALF of the book was new knowledge for me. AND beneficial knowledge. In a matter of 2 hours reading three chapters I came away with more knowledge about central banking than the mandatory class I was forced to take back in the day. For the average person you will walk away with w TON more. I strongly recommend buying it for yourself or loved ones, especially as a gift for Christmas as it isn't too late just yet.

You can find it by clicking on the image above, or if you're dead set against the Wal-Mart affiliate program, you can find it here on Amazon.

You can also visit Jerry and Jennifer at their website, FTMDaily (Follow the Money) where they have not only articles, but a podcast you can fill your MP3 player up with and listen to over the holidays.

Dragging Kids Into Politics

December 17, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick. You just can't let kids be kids, can you people? No, you can't let them pray for snow days, play sports, play video games, and enjoy their childhood. No, you need to drag them unconsciously into politics, specifically, your personal political battle. It's no different than forcing religion down your kids' throats.

First watch this:

And now, my response, which I hope is polite enough for kids:

And yes, I am not surprised both of his parents are teachers.

ALSO, IMPORTANT NOTE. This is a kid. Do not curse, swear, make fowl comments on the poor kid's video. He's obviously being led by his parents, he's reading a script. If you want to make critical comments, make them here.

"Dating 1850-2012: R.I.P."

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Dating is dead.

May it RIP.

Let us rejoice and celebrate the end of this idiotic transfer of wealth, disguised as "courting."

Why You Never Want to Work for BMO Harris

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Kids, you paying attention?

Are you?

OK kids, lookie here.

I want you to read through this job description and answer yourself honest and truthfully:

Does this sound like a sane organization?

Does this sound like a company that wants to hire the best, the brightest, and has its shit together?

Does it sound like a genuine and honest meritocracy?

Or does it sound like a political bureaucratic organization that just reeks of asskissing, brown-nosing, HR-bullshiting, and cock-sucking as the only means to get ahead?

Look, kids, I can't make it any more clear for you. These companies are exposing themselves for the worthless, opportunity-less bureaucracies they are. They're showing their true natures.

You will NEVER be successful in an environment like this. Not at least if you have any ounce of intellectual honesty, veracity and desire to perform. You need to sell your soul, lie, cheat, and obey. And what makes it great is if you take the micro-calorie of energy to just stand back, clear your brain, and look at that advertisement for a job for what it is, you'll realize just how far gone these corporations are when it comes to employing the "best and the brightest."

BMO is nothing more than a political, bureaucractic organization that does not care to be a profitable, productive company. It have been co-opted and corrupted by outside political organizations that it is so removed from it's original charter of profit, that it need to hire a "diversity recruiter."

Have fun working there kids. Have fun working there.

Are You the Enemy of Freedom?

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Take the test and find out.

Shitting on 2,000 Years of Western Civilization Wisdom

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's almost as if the past 2,000 years of Western Civilization didn't happen.

They Will Run Over You If You Let Them

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Boys, pay attention. You cannot, let the little ladies have their way all the time.

CAN

NOT

You need to draw a line in the sand, hold people to standards, lead, and in short, be a man.

If you don't, this is the result.

Best Damn Career Advice EVER

December 18, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Thank you, thank you very much:

Hey, It's One of My Former Students!

December 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

College students, not elementary. COLLEGE.

The Best Men Lie on Their Application

December 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You paying attention boys? Are you?

I would not have the career I do today if it were not for some outright, bold faced lies on my resume.

You need to lie on your application and your resume. Just as long as you can back it up.

Again, corporations are lying about the job and the job description. You owe them the simplest of courtesies to lie right back at them.

Your Economic Lesson of the Day

December 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Lost decades"

How the "Pregnant Female Protagonist" is the New "Jumping the Shark"

December 19, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My favorite cartoon that is still running (Archer) took a bad turn on it's season finale last year. The main female character got pregnant. The reason I don't like this isn't anything against women getting pregnant, but multifold.

First, a pregnant private sector TEC-9 toting spy should not be running around on dangerous missions while she's carrying. Second, the whole Archer cast is without children and single. They are able to not only take on dangerous missions, but with no child-rearing obligations, they can pursue equally dangerous and haphazard-prone social lives. Third, I think it's a play to a female demographic that once again, like "The Replacement Killers," ruins an otherwise good action show.

But my primary reason for not liking Lana getting pregnant is that it telepaths to me that the show might be ending.

Allow me to explain.

Fast and Furious 5, Paul Walker and Vin Diesel are running around Brazil trying to avoid a politician's hit squad. In the middle of flight Paul Walker's girlfriend (the actress of which I have a Jennifer-Aniston-equse soft spot for) stops both of them in the middle of their escape and says,

"I'm pregnant."

Not that the F&F franchise was that great to begin with, but the F&F6 seeming so ludicrous, Paul Walker's unfortunately demise would not have been the only thing to mercifully end the series.

Another example - Control Alt Delete. The comic.

I was an AVID fan. It was hilarious, funny, cute, and entertaining.

Then the girlfriend of the hero got pregnant. Things got emotional, and you know something, I checked out. That was about 5 years ago and I haven't read the comic since. I wanted to read a comic about nerdy tech geek humor, not a soap opera.

"Friends" anyone? How many of those women got pregnant? Fifi or Bibi? Didn't Amy or Pipsi get pregnant too? Sorry, I obviously didn't watch the show too much, but I do know that some women got pregnant and then the show ended.

The point I'm trying to make is that I think I have found a new replacement for when Fonzi jumped the shark. It's when the female lead character gets pregnant.

Naturally I hope this is not the case with Archer, but if previous "leading females getting pregnant" is any kind of proxy, it usually means the show is about to come to an end.

Regardless, the people at Fox better make sure this isn't the last season of Archer.

And for god's sake, will somebody resurrect "Venture Brothers?" That show had limitless potential.

"Sugary With a Taste of Slut"

December 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Turn to my right. Brunette this time, hooray for variety I guess. "What are you drinking?" This one is excited and tells me ginger ale and Jameson. Sugary with a taste of slut. We chat it up and things are going well. More hand contact, first shoulder then side waist. She's a fun girl and I'm enjoying my time with her. Maybe I should buy her a drink. Wait, no I can't. I'm in America and that is a sign of weakness. Despite the fact that I genuinely don't mind.

Some outstanding observations brought to your frontal lobes with some outstanding writing.

Women in Video Games

December 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So Davis has a really good podcast/video about women's role in video games. It unto itself is worth listening to.

But then he does a spot for Ranger Self Defense and TO MY SURPRISE ED HAS TRACKING DEVICES that you can use to keep GPS tabs on your children, cars, or other valuable things in life.

Did Ed tell the ole Captian about these things?

Ooooooohhhhh noooooo!

Keeping all the good stuff for the damn Canucks!!! Traitor!

How Ethan Krupp Embodies Everything Wrong With American Males

December 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

We do indeed rip apart American (and western) women here in this little sphere of our world. But we must also remind ourselves that it isn't only men that have suffered as the forces of socialism and feminism have completely destroyed our selection in the opposite sex.

Socialism and feminism have also destroyed women's selection in men.

Seriously, take the time to be a bit empathetic and appreciate the fact that many innocent women now only get to select from the Ethan Krupps of the world.

How Your Christmas Wishlist Tells You Everything You Need to Know About Economics

December 20, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Actually, this is one of those 20 minute videos that will teach the beginner more about economics than three college classes will.

I have also coined the new degree:

"Masters in The Avoidance of Math"

I kill me!

Remember, if you enjoy the videos, buy something through the Wal-Mart affiliate plan. You can click on it in the right side bar.

"It's Beginning to Look a Lot Like 'Worthless'"

December 21, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From a reader:

Aaron Clarey's book is the equivalent of drinking an antidote to a slow-acting poison. The scales fall off and clarity is achieved. Nothing is more touted today that education with all those well-known slogans ringing in the air "stay in school!" Yes, but for what purpose? In what direction? To what end? These are the questions Clarey brilliantly tackles here and he does so in an easy, jocularly manner that belies its great importance. Too many end up spending too much money--read, debt--at our nation's universities in the vain hope (yes, hope. There's almost no thought that goes into their decisions) the piece of paper they get at the end will be rewarded somehow. Clarey convincingly shows why this is wrong and takes those who should know better to task: the guidance counselors, our teachers, college professors and even parents who all profess to care for the next generation.

Every one should read this book. Every High School should require its students read and comprehend its contents.

The problem, however, is that doing so will require our educational system and its denizens fundamentally change how it operates and that's not going to happen any time soon. So get this for your High Schooler or for a kid you like instead so they don't end up wasting what's supposed to be their formative years in pursuit of hot air.
5 stars.

You can find "Worthless" here, and also in Audio book format here!

Meet The Future

December 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I predict homes like these will be the way of the future as Gen X and Gen Y realize the incredible debt burden they naively voted upon themselves following the self-sabotaging advice their Baby Boomer teachers gave them.

There is good news, however.

How, oh how, will we ever raise the funds to pay for Baby Boomer retirement plans and health care when Gen X'ers, Y'ers, and Millineals, only need to work up $22,000 a year to pay for homes like these?

Oh, and if savvy youth don't have kids (as they obviously cannot live in such small quarters), will you rely on future immigrants from the non-Western-Civilization world to work up the economic productivity to pay for your entitlements?

Heh heh. You hippie AARP boomers, you idiots enjoy that decline. You brought it on yourselves and there's nobody more deserving.

"Man Talk"

December 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A long time ago, and stupidly listening to my mother, I was lead to believe that girls liked it when a guy bought her flowers, wrote poetry, and said nice things.

I now know that all you need is "Man Talk"

Are you boys paying attention?

The Manosphere's Resident Artist

December 22, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Gentlemen (and ladies),

I know many of you are writing books or are pursuing some kind of internet/media venture. However, not all of us are artists. Thankfully, you don't have to be. That's why we have Jorge Gonzalez.

Jorge did the artwork for my up-coming book "Bachelor Pad Economics," as well as drew the entire "Boris the Shitting Buffalo." I strongly recommend contacting him if you need some kind of artwork done or are just looking for an artist in general. However, I also recommend Jorge on account most of his college peers at art school were raging socialists and will no doubt mock and ridicule him for ~~supporting himself with his art~~ "going corporate."

You can contact him here.

Asshole Consulting

December 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New business model lieutenants!

We will replace Bain and McKinsey!

Bachelor Pad Economics - Tenatively Scheduled for Dec. 27th

December 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just got the digital proof and all looks good, but I prefer to have a paper copy to make sure the printing works right. Measure twice, cut once kind of thing. Being express-delivered and will be here presumably around the 26th. And if all looks good I hit the magical "go" button and it will be a nice little post-Christmas gift.

How the Net Present Value of Effort is the Cause of Intimidation, Procratination and Fear

December 23, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My Jewish Agent in the Field contacted me laughing at the other end of the phone.

She said, "Cappy, you're not going to believe this! I was at the doctor's office and ran into one of your fans." She then regaled me with the tale of randomly meeting a young 23 year old man who was a regular reader of me and the rest of the Manosphere. However, while he was an avid reader, he was basically an academian. A theorist. He "knew" what he had to do, but still had problems approaching girls. Matter of fact, the words my JAITF used was "afraid of girls." I told her to have him contact me and that I'd solve his problem for a small fee.

Rewind 18 years ago.

A female friend of mine had a crush on a male friend of mine. I did what I could to set the two up, but despite many rendezvous, he never asked her out. For the next six months she verbally pined about him to me. Wondering how to get him to ask her out. To the point I got sick of it and told her, rather bluntlly, that she was pissing away more calories of energy worrying about it and would have had a better life had she just point blank asked him out. She took my advice to heart, was about to call him up and ask him out, but THEN CRIED IN THE FEAR AND ANTICIPATION, and bailed at the last minute.

Fastforward back to today.

Millions, nay, HUNDREDS of millions of western women claim they want to diet. And hundreds of millions of western women attempt new diets every year. But nearly 95% of them fail, invariably going back to eating shit and using their .000004 mile "power walk" or "I used the stairs" as an excuse to stuff their faces with icing-laden cupcakes. They only end up like the fan my JAITF met or the female friend of mine back from college - failures knowing what they have to do, but somehow never having the gall to do it.

So let me explain what is happening here amongst all three, because while we can all stand here and ridicule them, you, me, and everybody else have this "want to, but seemingly can't" hypocrisy about us.

Understand that in the case of my "fan" my JAITF met, it wasn't that he was intimidated by asking that one girl out at the bar.

Understand in the case of my friend back in college, it wasn't the she feared rejection from my male friend.

And understand in the case of most fat western women, it isn't that they feared they wouldn't lose weight.

It boils down to the "Net Present Value" of effort.

"Net Present Value" or "NPV" is a financial concept that takes a string of payments in the future and asks "what would be the value of all those payments in the future if they were converted into a single payment today?"

So for example a mortgage. You have to make monthly payments for 30 years. Well, considering inflation, interest rates, cost of borrowing, etc., what would the "single payment equivalent" of those payments be today?

But we can take this financial concept and apply it to the psychological world. And when we do we make some great realizations that can benefit us all. Because when you ask the noob kid to start approaching girls the fat woman to lose weight, or my friend to finally ask the guy out you are not REALLY asking the noob kid to ask out that ONE girl, or that fat woman to forego ONE meal, or my friend to ask that ONE guy out you are asking them to change their behavior FOR THE REST OF THEIR LIVES. You are asking them to essentially take on a part time job they never wanted, because human nature is to be lazy.

So for example, when you tell a fat woman to lose weight, you aren't asking her to refuse that ONE cupcake. You're asking her to refuse ALL cupcakes into the future AND demanding she take on what is a vertiable part time job of working out everyday FOR THE REST OF HER LIFE.

And when you tell that fearful 23 year old kid who is "afraid of girls," you aren't saying, "approach that ONE girl and suffer the rejection," you are saying, "You must COMMIT yourself to a life of rejection, dismay, and wasted labor attempting to get girls."

And that is why the "Net Present Value" of effort is such a deterrent. Because when you're asking people to make life changes be it weight approaching members of the opposite sex becoming educated physical or mental improvement

you aren't asking them to "tweek" something, you're demanding they dedicate a significant percentage of their free time, their free will, and their conscious life to achieve the goals they want.

It is here I can appreciate and feel a bit of empathy for our overweight women, our timid men, or our basement dwelling nerf-herders. They are expending very little effort and energy. They are minimalists in the sense they are willing to forego the demands and desires society places upon them, so they can live a VERY simple and existent life. But, human psychology and darwinism being what it is, it can't just let that poor soul be. It still needs to foist natural, sexual, achievement, and agency desires on humans, and so they are torn.

This is why my female friend was crying at the prospect of approaching a man.
This is why women get so emotionally upset if you dare to point out men just don't like fat chicks.
This is why a man will talk shit about approaching, but rarely do, and when they do, take personal umbrage when shot down.

The trick or the solution to this crippling and pre-programmed psychology is a simple one:

Realize if you don't make these changes, you WILL forever be condemned to failure.

Do I like lifting weights for an hour every odd day, and running 6 miles every even?

No.

Does any guy like approaching women, opening their mouths, and hoping something witty comes out in the hopes they might get laid in the long run?

No.

And do women (let alone ANYBODY) like passing up the great and awesome food that is sure to tempt us this Christmas?

No.

But if you don't, and constantly succumb to the immediate desires and fail to achieve delayed gratification, you will forever be:

that fat overweight woman nobody wants to fuck the nerd who sits in his mother's basement and never gets laid or the addict/alcoholic that never says no and dies early because of liver failure

In short, you must realize it was never your choice to begin with. You need to commit to these part time jobs. You need to commit to the effort to stay in shape, suffer rejection, and put yourself out there. The only other option is not to participate and wonder, dream, and opine what life would have been life if you had. And that life of regret is the worst one you can possibly live.

Cappy's Crazy Christmas Podcast!

December 24, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hey kids!

I know a lot of you will be traveling and some of our younger Cappy Cappite brothers and sisters working, so take a little yuletide joy with you with the latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

This episode we talk about how truly free people do not want to be pestered about scheduling and details, especially things 2 months in advance. We also talk about how Matt Forney and Erin McCarthy are at each other's throats now, but will likely hook up and get married and make muchas smoochas! There is some miscellany of discussion about how old people just don't try to drive good anymore, and a tirade against how Kwanzaa is not a real holiday and never will be!

Have a good Christmas all!

Cappy

Glorious Karl Enjoys Christmas!

December 25, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Look, Karl got a gun, some flannel pajamas and a mug from the Occidental Hotel (Cappy's favorite hangout whenst he lived in Wyoming).

Laurette Lynn and How Schools are Prisons

December 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A Stefan Molyneux podcast that is an absolute must. He interviews an author, Laurette Lynn who actually hates school more than I did.

I haven't even listened to the whole thing, but what struck me is when she is talking about staying home to rear children how much you realize she actually loves her children. Stefan also has a hell of a quotable comment:

"If you have a kid, but instead both parents decide to have jobs, then that's like cheating on your kid."

What amazes is not how feminism thought that outsourcing the rearing of children to the state or nannies would work, but that society as a whole bought such hogwash.

Stay Frosty, Boys

December 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Stay the freak frosty.

"Calling People Fat Should Be Illegal" aka ABC Round 2

December 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

So where do you want to go with this one guys?

Pick on Jennifer Lawrence for being so stupid she's advocating totalitarianism?

Go the regular shaming route and redouble our efforts to ramp up fat-shaming?

Or just ignore it because it's another stupid bint from Hollywood?

Here's the correct answer:

Expose ABC news (again) for being the paper-thin fraudulent media outlet that it is.

Look, the real news story isn't that another 23 year old hollywood harlot is saying stupid things. Nor is it that "fat" is a politicized topic. The real story is that a presume "media giant" like Barbara Walters would even consider interviewing such a mindless individual in the first place, LET ALONE CONSIDER HER ONE OF THE TOP 10 MOST INTERESTING PEOPLE.

This isn't news.

This isn't journalism.

This is pulp-people-magazine garbage being served as "serious, top notch" journalism.

Ergo, the only thing to do is go to the comment section and merely point out ABC has jumped the shark or "gotten the female lead pregnant."

That's if you even deem ABC's comment section worth your time, which I really don't.

Today's Office

December 26, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Brought to you in part by,

"Masters Degree Preferred" - You need to go $75,000 into debt so our HR ditzes can more easily sort out resumes. "Masters Degree Preferred" - the biggest, most expensive and unnecessary hoop we force our labor force to jump through.

Also by,

"Commutes" - We don't care if the technology allows for everybody to work from home. We need to condition our labor force to obey. Thank god for commutes. "Commutes" - when you're a masochist control freak that hates your employees.

Also by,

"Layoffs" - Were you loyal to the company to the core and gave it your all? Tough shit. We found somebody who will do it for $1/hour cheaper. "Layoffs" - reserved only for the most loyal and naive employees.

Also by,

"Divorce" - Make sure you get your spouse to divorce you as you spend more time at work than tending to your family. "Divorce" - sponsored by the Corporate-America & Feminism Partnership.

Women Who Have Horses are Psychotic

December 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again...

not that you didn't know....

women who love horses are mentally deranged and are damaged goods. They love animals more than they love their fellow human being, and would rather ride a horse than have a husband or tend to their children. Now you can add, "love their horses more than their country" in France.

It is getting very difficult to defend women's suffrage.

Teachers Love Your Children More Than You Do

December 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Well, at least that's what the maths say.

I estimated the amount of time children, from kindergarten to 12th grade, spend with their parents, vs. teachers and daycare providers.

There are some assumptions I made and you can certainly calculate your own figures, but including weekends, friends, commuting, summers, etc. those state paid teachers spend a HUGE amount of time more with your child than you do. AND keep in mind their ENTIRE JOB is to be teaching and engaging them the entire time. Your time also includes feeding them, lecturing them, chores, etc. NOT sitting down and TALKING with them.

But remember,

you need a career
you voted democrat because you care you need to pay those taxes you need to pay for strangers to raise your kid in daycare so you're in the clear.

I'm sure your child will come visit you in the nursing home.

Bachelor Pad Economics Proofed and Authorized

December 27, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just got the proof in the mail and figured now would be a good a time as any to show youse guys the cover.

It's going to be 5-7 business days until it's available on Amazon.com. Will let you know once it's officially available.

The thing is a MONSTER. 500 pages doesn't seem like 500 pages until you're holding it in your hands. However, remember, you will NOT read the whole thing through. It is a reference book for EVERY STAGE OF A MAN'S LIFE. So, you know, the 14 year old kid would not be reading the chapter on End of Life Planning or 401k's.

Kindle version will also be available around the same time.

And I don't want to hear ANY complaints about price. It's going to be $30. And the reason I don't want to hear any complaints is that if I had this book when I was younger I would EASILY have had $500,000 more money than I do now. The amount of mistakes you will avoid and wise decisions make by reading this book I would say LITERALLY make it worth it's weight in gold.

Finally, you cannot read Bachelor Pad Economics without having the below music playing in the background:

Table of Contents for Bachelor Pad Economics

December 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A reader had a good question, as well as several of you have inquired about what "Bachelor Pad Economics" more specifically covers. Here is the table of contents, a more thorough explanation will be released once it's available at Amazon.

Chapter 1 "Leaderless, Guideless, and Adrift"
Chapter 2 "Philosophy" (about economics, investing, life goals etc.)
Chapter 3 "The Basics"
Chapter 4 "Education"
Chapter 5 "Career"
Chapter 6 "Entrepreneurship"
Chapter 7 "Girls"
Chapter 8 "Housing and Lodging"
Chapter 9 "Cars and Transportation"
Chapter 10 "Maintenance and Repair"
Chapter 11 "Investing and Retirement Planning"
Chapter 12 "Wife and Kids"
Chapter 13 "Legal"
Chapter 14 "Economics"
Chapter 15 "End of Life Planning"

In short it is a reference guide for all men of all ages between 14-Death. The younger they read it, the better off their life will be. Basically it is a book of advice that your father should have given you, but given today's single-mother households or just spineless fathers, this vital wisdom and guidance is sorely lacking.

The Clarey Podcast, Latest Episode!

December 28, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Aaron talks about replacing booze with lifting weights, gets a GREAT letter from his "Brazilliant" Agent in the Field, explains why everybody has a right to enjoy the suffering of leftists and parasites, and talks about putting together an "Anti-Feminist" poster, and MORE in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Western Women "Saving" Third World Men

December 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Multiple choice boys and girls! Where do we go with this one?

a) Female sex tourism
b) Treasonous western women helping out everybody but their own countrymen
c) Another trust fund baby bites the dust
d) "But he said he loved me!"
e) Bad boys are sexy, especially if they kill me
f) I didn't like the maths, so I helped the childrenzzzz (aka "Liberal Arts Degrees Kill")
g) Wow! There was only 50 murders in Honduras since 2008? That's pretty safe!

It's Called Capital Flight

December 29, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and it's a feature, not a bug, of socialism.

How "Leftist Heroes" Predict the Failure of a Film

December 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Very interesting podcast from Davis Aurini. Old one from the archives, but good.

Post Wedding Barbie to Hit Stores

December 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Replete with Liberal Arts Degree and commensurate student debt!

Thank god Ken majored in Chemical Engineering!

The Miley Ray Cyrus Effect in Economics

December 30, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A great economic lesson that we can all learn about marketing and how to use trolls to your advantage!

Bachelor Pad Economics Now Available!

December 31, 2013 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Good news everybody!

"Bachelor Pad Economics" is now available on Amazon!!!! (Kindle to follow later)

I have alluded to the nature of the book before, but I think it's best to quote the first chapter of the book to accurately and fully convey what it's about, who it's for, how it will benefit everybody, and just how important this book is for all generations:

"To this end "Bachelor Pad Economics," (though applicable to everybody) is written with the average American male in mind. Most likely single, most likely young, but every man, married or not, young or not, will benefit greatly from this book. It is the single, most comprehensive source of wisdom for men regarding personal financial management, investing, and life from a financial perspective. It is a roadmap to financial planning that has been sorely missing the past three generations. Reading this book will surpass any number of college classes in terms of the wisdom and help it will grant you, and the younger you read it, the better off you'll be. This book, quite simply, is a must for every young man out there, so that you not only avoid the mistakes your elders made, but live better and more enjoyable lives than we did."

The only thing I will add is that it is NOT meant to be read as a novel - i.e. - front to back.

It is meant to be read as a reference book, consulting the individual chapters that apply to your personal life. Ergo, I recommend reading chapters 1-3 to get the "basics," but then reading any future chapters only on a "as needed" basis.

It is $29.99 (though I think they're discounting it) and I am being serious when I say this - IT IS WORTH THE MONEY. Think of what you drop on some worthless, pre-req college text book, think about your booze habit, and then think about a book that would have prevented you from buying that house you're now underwater on or marrying that woman who took half of your worldly assets.

Again, it is a MUST for all men.

Regardless, I would appreciate your spreading the word. My apologies for not getting it out before Christmas. I prefer quality over speed.

This is How You Stick It to Feminists

January 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Brilliant.

They stole my idea.

But brilliant.

My Humble Thanks

January 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I wanted to thank everybody who has already purchased "Bachelor Pad Economics" (BPE). In ONE DAY you guys shot BPE to an Amazon rank of 3,400 (and I saw it even higher over the evening at 2,800).

This may sound "affirmative actiony," but for self-publishing schlubbs like us, it's actually huge. Keep in mind this is out of 3 MILLION books, so such a ranking is very high indeed.

Another Reason Feminists Tend to Be Ugly

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will selfishly (but accurately) claim I pioneered a new line of thinking or "theory" as to why leftists and (especially) feminists are ugly. In it's most refined and reduced form it is:

"Feminists and leftists are uglier than their conservative counterparts because maintaining physical beauty requires work, effort, and rigor; things antithetical to their leftist political ideology which entails laziness, the avoidance of rigor, and the least amount of effort."

Dalrock came up with a very interesting alternative, though not mutually-exclusive theory:

Feminists are miserly with their love.

Love is selflessness. Putting somebody ahead of your own self. And feminists are indeed a very selfish and self-centered lot. I've pointed it out before and I'll point it out again, the Manosphere is infinitely more loving than feminists in that we actually care about what women want. So much so we advocate lifting weights, losing weight, eating healthy, etc. Whereas I ask, when is the last time you heard a feminist advocate staying skinny, getting implants, or cook a meal to make their man happy? It's simple - they don't. Matter of fact, they go the opposite direction and advocate such bullshit as "fat acceptance" and dare to lecture men to have the audacity to like what they are genetically programmed to.

This is why they tend not to be pretty. Because "pretty" is an outward, outside, and selfless quality observed by OTHER PEOPLE. A kindness or a courtesy you give to your fellow man (and woman) to:

maintain your physical shape dress attractively do yourself up and just plain give a damn about your appearance.

But since feminists are so self-centered and are incapable of selflessness, they don't care what other people think. They are incapable of empathy. They are only capable of focusing on themselves. And when somebody is so myopic and only care about themselves, then they are incapable of presenting beauty to other people. Ergo, why most feminists tend to be ugly.

The two theories are actually the same, but I like Dalrock's view in that it shows you just what lonely, sad, pathetic and dysfunctional lives these women are living. They are incapable of considering others. They are incapable of love. And it is the fear of effort, rigor and work that keeps them from enjoying the best life has to offer.

Oh well, you feminists enjoy the decline.

So Lindy West Gets on a Plane and…

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

you just can't make it up.

The Comeback of Smoking Jackets and Ascots

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Being a minimalist I very rarely spoil myself. This is not only because of limited funds, but because I have achieved an economic "nirvana" of sorts where I no longer desire fancy items. I no longer "envy" people's fancy cars, and I have the vision and economic understanding that me sleeping in till 11AM is the better deal than the "successful" executive slaving away 60 hours a week and suffering a commute.

However, as an incentive to work on AND FINISH various projects and goals I set for myself, I do reward myself with the rare and occasional luxury. This time, it was to get a high end smoking jacket and ascot upon finishing Bachelor Pad Economics:

While normally used as a stereo-type in media or a parody of Hugh Hefner, I have to admit the smoking jacket and ascot is absolutely, 100% worth the money. Not just because of the fashion or "shock value" should you wear it in public, but it is incredibly comfortable and cozy. You can wear it out, but you can also wear it indoors. But understand it also makes three (potentially four) very clear statements:

1. I am successful. Maybe not financially successful, but happy as to where I am in life.
2. I am a bachelor. There is no wife telling me I can or cannot wear this thing. I am in command and do what I want.
3. I am classy.

and should you choose to wear it out:

4. I am ballsy enough to wear this in public.

Because of this I believe a smoking jacket with matching ascot IS A MUST FOR ALL MEN. Bachelor or not. You not only deserve the fine silk threads and the class it conveys upon you, but you cannot leave this planet without at least experiencing your very own smoking jacket and ascot.

But before you decide on a get up, you need to know your options.

First, there are "two types" of smoking jacket. The one above is technically not a smoking jacket. It is a bathrobe that Hugh Hefner has popularized and made acceptable to be worn in public. The other type is a felt or velvet smoking jacket that is designed for actual smoking:

Second, you need to choose an ascot that matches the jacket. This is no different than choosing a tie and they are tied in a similar fashion to a regular tie.

Third, you need some kind of tobacco. I prefer cigars, but you may also want to go uber classy and get a pipe. If you don't smoke, a martini glass or a snifter of scotch will suffice.

Finally, a hat. I wanted desperately to get a fez, but fez's are VERY hard to come by. I went to the most exclusive men's clothing store in the midwest to get my jacket (Heimie's Haberdashery) and they informed me that while they used to sell them, the last distributor in the US closed down. You now need to go to London to get an authentic fez.

All in all you can expect to drop $1,000-$1,200 on a decent get up.

While the price is steep, I am convinced this is a mandatory purchase for most men. Certainly, college students may not be able to afford such a purchase, but the sooner you get this into your inventory the better.

If You Send Marines, Please Send Men

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You know, the real Marines.

All Men, All Races, All Nations

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've had a handful of men ask if "Bachelor Pad Economics" would "work in Canada" or is "for men in Britain" and the answer is:

Yes, about 95% or so.

While the retirement chapter would be specific to the US retirement system (IRA's, 401k's, etc.) and would not directly apply, the vast majority of economic advice is still applicable to all men in all countries simply because the laws of economics are universal.

For example, women, no matter what country you're in, desire attention and men desire sex. This results in a universal set of rules or laws all humans operate by in the sexual market place.

Also, my advice that 16 year old boys should get their motorcycle license applies to British boys just as it does American boys, French boys or Vietnamese boys.

So in short, no you will not be wasting your money. BPE is basically a "father in a book" and will help any boys/men who need some kind of guidance or purpose in life, regardless of where you're living.

Available in paperback and kindle.

Bachelor Pad Economics Now Available on Kindle!

January 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hello economists, lieutenants, children, and agents in the field.

Bachelor Pad Economics is now officially available on Kindle. You may purchase it here.

Also, because of the breadth of the topic, I put together this youtube video explaining the book, who it's for, how to read it, etc. You may want to send the video to people you're trying to explain the book to if you are being so kind as to plug my book.

Thanks for all the support and readership. BPE is now ranked 2,100th place on Amazon and I almost earned enough money to pay for the ascot and smoking jacket!

Cappy

Quiz Time Boys and Girls!

January 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

OK boys and girls!

Can you tell ole Cappy what Amy and her husband did wrong?

I count 6 mistakes.

AND NOTE BOYS WHO GOT TO PAY OFF HER STUDENT LOANS WHILE SHE STAYED AT HOME!

Stay frosty, boys. Stay frosty.

Intellectually Honest Professors Are Even Against College

January 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From our southern agent in the field.

Conservative Talk Radio's Legacy Problem

January 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I personally have absolutely no problems helping out a fellow blogger or rookie podcaster. None whatsoever. Kid comes up says, "hey can you put me on your blogroll," long as the kid is writing regularly, sure, why not? Give the kid a shot.

And the reason why I do this is simple:

Why wouldn't you?

Why wouldn't you want to help out your fellow man or woman? If you have the choice between helping improve the life of a person and not, and there really is no expense or cost to you, then the answer should be obvious - you help that person out.

So you could imagine my frustration when, back several years ago I was trying to "break through" by getting radio show hosts to consider my work. Provide a link. Maybe talk about my very timely and relevant book that year. Anything, an interview, a mention. Just to get my name out there that "one time," that one "lucky break," that would result in a very Vince Flynn like career.

Crickets. Nothing but crickets.

You mail the book to the studio.
Never hear back from them again.

Send a link to a post that explains everything and would advance the conservative cause.
Not a mention.

You break a story, giving them a huge edge over their news desk.
Nothing.

Now, admittedly I am fully aware a lot of this has to do with logistics. Rush Limbaugh, Glenn Beck, Sean Hannity, etc., are all so big, they are bombarded with millions of e-mails they cannot possibly respond to. But that included, there is still a severe lack of effort on their part to search for the "next generation" of conservative talk show hosts, to seek out their successors, to groom, guide, and forge any raw talent in the younger generations. Have you ever seen them have somebody under 50 sub for them? Additionally, there is absolutely this club or "cartel" of media types that they constantly recycle and prop up. I like to call it "The Hannity Cartel."

Michelle Malkin wrote something?

She's on Hannity.

Ann Coulter came out with a new book?
She's on Hannity.

Hugh Hewitt is speaking somewhere?
He's on Hannity.

But if Joe Blow, aspiring public speaker, or Jane Doe, superior-but-unknown author writes a great treatise on economics, even if their work is superior, they will NEVER make it into "The Hannity Cartel."They are not interested in hiring the best or finding the best. They are only interested in protecting their little club. in other words, despite the capitalist political ideology, they really aren't as interested in finding "the best," as much as they are continuing to propagate their little network or club.

But there's a problem.

While it is completely within their rights and their prerogative to advance their little club, they're getting old.

I was talking to the Lovely Leslie at Temple of Mut who has had some indirect, thrice-removed dealings with Dennis Prager. She pointed out that though she loves Dennis Prager (and he is actually my second favorite talk show host), he is so old he no longer can even relate to younger people. I hadn't thought about that because I'm nearly 40 and rather enjoy their older-man talk, but she's right. And not only is she right about Dennis Prager, she's right about pretty much all of the conservative-talk show league. Glenn Beck, Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, Hugh Hewitt, Michael Medved, Michael Savage, all of them are roughly 60 years old. And because they are so old, just like Harley Davidson, they are slowly moving away from any future and younger generations that would provide a future market for conservative talk radio, presenting the industry with a major demographic and legacy issue.

For example, while Rush occasionally tells stories about his dating in the 70's and his initial run in with ~~the Klingons~~ feminism, he and Prager and Medved etc. etc., completely MISSED OUT on the Manosphere phenomenon. I don't recall any of them were on the ball about the education bubble (despite me desperately trying to get copies of "Worthless" in their hands years ago). And they are awfully soft-spoken about the scourge of single mothers. All of these topics would have captured a younger audience and further secured their radio shows into the future, but they were too busy beating the same dead horses they've been for years (unlike Tom Leykis who was one of the few older people who got it and capitalized on the aforementioned topics).

Sadly, and thankfully, however, all of this discussion is moot. And I shall tell you why.

That good ole "interwebz."

Like many other industries, the younger generations, after being forced to go to school for a quarter century just to stand a shot at having a career, have realized how bureaucratic and inefficient various industries have become. And instead of waiting around, "putting in their dues," "getting a masters,"and "hoping for a break," they've instead bypassed the old-boys network and used the internet to start their own industries. Musicians are selling their music directly to their fans. Aspiring radio show hosts are saying, "fuck it, I'm not interning. I'm just going to start my own podcast." Suppliers are setting up their own online shops instead of "starting in the mail room." And more people watch their computer screens than listen to the radio or watch TV. And the radio industry is no different.

Thanks to podcasting a whole new industry has sprung up. It isn't as big as radio, but it's there. The Peter Schiffs, the Adam Carolla's, the Stefan Molyneux's, the Tom Leykis's, the Paul Elam's, the Silvio Canto's, even the ahem Aaron Clarey's. This is great because people with talent, people who want to get into the industry, no longer have to wait for permission. They just "do it." And not only do they "just do it," they are going to be much more successful as the time they'd have to spend to "make it" in the archaic radio industry is better spent polishing up their own show or "brand." Ergo, not only is talk radio failing to recruit successors as it protects it's cartel, it's unaware that all the new and future talent is not going to bother with radio. It's all going to be podcasting.

But a "brain drain" from the industry is not what is truly going to spell the demise of conservative talk radio. It will be three qualities and traits of the "podcasting" industry that will spell it's undoing.

First, podcasting is a 100%, pure meritocracy. There is nothing to stop anybody from picking up a microphone, a laptop and start recording. This means the TRULY BEST will rise to the stop as they are unimpeded with HR ditzes, mandatory interning to "put their dues in," and micro-managing program directors that ruin the quality of the podcast. The best will also rise to the top as connections or "networking" or ass-kissing is absolutely unnecessary.

Second, people will help you in the podcasting industry. Glenn Reynolds is a great man because he is that guy who will give you your big break. KOASDA (Kate over at Small Dead Animals) will also send you an amazing amount of traffic if you write well. And Roosh at Return of Kings has opened his site to quality writers aspiring to make a living out of it. In short, NOBODY requires you "jump through a hoop" or "put in your dues." They want to help you because they are selfless, altruistic and good people.

Third, costs. I'll say it again for the cheap seats - radio towers are expensive. So are the large buildings and electrical equipment they're attached to. And so are all those people that are employed in the building. I'd say the average radio station must cost around $5 million to build, and lord knows what operate each year. A podcast costs about $500 in equipment and $100 a month for storage...not to mention its reach is GLOBAL while a radio tower maybe has a range of 100 miles. This is why advertising with Tom Leykis costs a fraction of radio spots, but delivers about 5 times the sales.

In short, yes it would have been nice if America's presumed "cheerleaders of freedom" would have taken somebody under their wings, under their tutelage and groomed successors to continue their fight. It would have been nice if they just would "give a kid a shot." But the truth is they're not. They probably won't. And, ironically, it doesn't matter. Because the time WILL COME that new and infinitely-more-attuned titans will rise in the podcasting industry, replacing and supplanting their aged counterparts in conservative talk radio. And while the Aurini's, Schiff's and Corolla's of the world excel in their new industry, the power will be shut off and the "Golden EIB microphone" will have electricity run through it for the very last time.

Aaron Clarey is a motorcycle-riding, salsa-dancing, fossil hunter who fakes being an economist and author on the side to finance his hobbies. He is the author of "Worthless," "Enjoy the Decline" and most recently "Bachelor Pad Economics." He also hosts "The Clarey Podcast" on a completely unreliable and random schedule.

Yes, Bill, the Market is Still Overvalued

January 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

One of the most irrelevant and insipid arguments liberals love to tender when you critique a democrat president is,

"OH YEAH!!! WELL THE STOCK MARKET IS DOING WELL!!!"

Forget that unemployment is still recession territory
Forget that underemployment is at an all time high
And forget that economic growth is stagnant

No, find that one statistic that has NOTHING to do with presidential or economic performance. AND cite something you normally hate and loathe - Wall Street - as a metric.

Regardless, I didn't follow the market for jack during 2013. This is in part because I have no money to invest and also in part because it is overvalued due to all the retirement dollars that have been flooding it since the advent of the 401k. But while sitting at my favorite bar, I caught a glimpse of a chart of the DJIA on the TV. And it looked like it was almost at 17,000.

"This couldn't be. What has happened in the economy that would warrant that?!"

So I admitted I was ignorant about the stock market for the past year and decided to go right to the source and ask the horse, for Dr. Robert Shiller will give you the answer you'll endorse - the S&P 500 P/E ratio.

In other words, "nothing to see here people." It's the same damn thing that it's always been. Earnings haven't been going up, but prices have, resulting in an even more-inflated bubble. Historically, the S&P has traded at a PE of 15, and now, WITH NO LEGITIMATE ECONOMIC REASON OR RATIONALE the market is trading at a 67% premium over its historical average.

Again, for the cheap seats, this means if you buy stocks today it is like paying:

$5.44 for a gallon of gas
$680 for an XBox One, or $12 for a Chipolte burrito

And don't even get me started on the dividend yield.

In short, nothing has changed, except for the severity of the bubble. Bar the Great Recession, the Dotcom Bubble and the Housing Bubble, the stock market has never been so overvalued.

"But I Paid Into the System"

January 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yes. Yes you did. But….

(and as per policy established before, the above video ONLY pertains to AARP- Baby Boomers. All non-AARP boomers need not watch as it does not apply to you).

Cappy Cap is Comin' to Town

January 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Good (early) morning Lieutenants.

The ole Captain has to deadhead a car down south to Florida. This means transversing several states. And since one of the greatest joys I have in my life is meeting all you schmoes, wondering if any of you are going to be around.

My path is taking me through St. Louis, Nashville, and Atlanta. I may stay in Nashville, because,well, I don't know, they say there's culture there. But if you do a google map for directions of "Minneapolis to Tampa" if you're on the route, would love to hang out for a beer or a cigar or something.

Shoot me an e-mail. No guarantees, but one of the best benefits of this job is meeting all you schmoes.

Cappy

Why The Manosphere is Truly "Racistless"

January 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You want to know what I love about the Manosphere?

A ton of things.

But one of the more intellectually interesting things is you never see the person, and therefore never know what race they are, until you meet them in person.

This means that the Manosphere (or any anonymous internet community) strips away:

race creed ethnicity
sex gender religion

from its participants and allows them to form bonds on the only thing that matters - intelligence and the person.

For example, talking to Danny from 504, I could have sworn I was going to hang out with a lanky, tall black guy for the evening. Instead when I showed up he was the complete opposite - a short white dude with bad vision. Wintery Knight. Thought he was a typical Lutheran type white guy. You know, pastey, short, balding etc.. Nope, black dude.

But here's the point. What I love about my completely horrible batting average about guessing the race, ethnicity, etc., of various participants, readers, and writers in the Manosphere is that it shows you that men will form bonds, appreciation, and respect for fellow men based on their intellect, character, and caliber and NOT their race, because ultimately the race doesn't matter. The Manosphere, and to larger extent, internet, strips away all the unnecessary and irrelevant traits and leaves you with THE MAN. The CORE. The INDIVIDUAL.

Ergo, why I don't give a flying fuck when I'm accused of racism, sexism, bigotry, or what have you, because if you want a testatment to your character as to whether or not you become friends with somebody for themselves and not what they look like, then the Manosphere, its anonymity, and the friends you make here is the raceless ideal that leftists and liberals can only envy.

Glorious Karl's Bachelor Pad

January 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Glorious Karl of Glorious hat fame has put up a review of Bachelor Pad Economics. It is actually a very thorough review with quotes and quips from the book that I believe conveys an accurately portrayal of what you can expect in the book.

Karl was able to write a review very quickly because he was kind enough to volunteer to be one of my editors. He did this for free. So it would be a kind gesture to purchase your very own GLORIOUS HAT!

Besides, it's going to be -28 in Minnesota. YOu'll want one of those hats to keep you warm!

Replacing Booze with Weights

January 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Greetings all.

I decided to replace booze with weights. Anytime I felt like drinking, I would go to the gym instead and lift weights or run. It's two weeks in and the only way I know to make sure you stick with something is make sure everybody knows you're doing it so you do not become a hypocrite in front of everybody.

Results are thus far pretty good. Bench pressed 170 for the first time in 7 years, lost 5 pounds, lost an inch and my arms are more toned than before.

So what say you Merry Men o' the Manosphere. You going to join me for two months of "Replace Booze with Weights?"

Liberal Women Are Antithetical to Being Wives

January 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"…if they are a genuine liberal, leftist, or feminist, they are antithetical to being wives because, consciously or not, they vote to replace men with the state. Like nuns to the church, they are first and foremost wedded to the state and not you. Therefore, any self-respecting man will simply refuse to marry, let alone, support somebody who actively votes against him, his success, and his liberty."

More can be found here.

Why Keynesianism is Like Al Bundy

January 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Al Bundy, if you don't know, is a character from the show "Married with Children." He was the father of a lower-middle income family that was the epitome of the 90's ghetto/trailer/exurbanite trash that was becoming mainstream at the time. One of his defining traits was when he would wax poetically about a football game his played in high school where he scored several touchdowns and threw for several more. It was a mockery of himself as it showed his pinnacle, his peak, was when he was 17. And the remaining 60 years of his life would be as a shoe salesman.

But while I was deadheading a car down to Florida and listening to a discussion Stefan Molyneux was having with an economist about Keynesianism, it dawned on me that Keynes and Keynesianism AND Keynesian economists have something very much in common with Al Bundy.

They can only point to ONE instances in history that gives them any validation.

In Al Bundy's case it was that mythical high school football game back in the (presumed) 70's.

And in the Keynesian's case it was that one big, blockbuster of a government stimulus - WWII.

However, like Al Bundy, Keynesians are equally pathetic.

They have never had a repeat. They have never had more than one instance or datapoint in their lives. They have only that ONE SAD PATHETIC thing to point to that grants them (only in their own minds and the minds of academians) a morsel of validation.

What I don't get is how the entire western world, which accounts for 75% of global GDP and presumably has the smartest people on the planet let such an unvalidated and pathetic economic model govern their government's fiscal and monetary policies.

I mean, can we give it up already with the Keynesian bullshit?

It worked ONCE. And every since then the economy has been growing slower, recessions have been taking longer to recover from, and (if there is any glaring empirical data or proof against Keynesianism) they still can't get it up with $17 trillion in deficit spending.

So I'm done. I'm done granting the Keynesians, the Krugmanuats, and the other idiots any credit or cache.

Your economic model doesn't work. It isn't working. And it never really did work. We've done it your way, especially with the past 6 years of Obama, and you still can't get the bleeping GDP to grow more than 2%, nor get unemployment below 7%.

Of course, deep down inside they know this. But then they'd have to admit they're not economists, but rather politicians and thieves, thinking they're being as clever as Hans Gruber posing as economists.

Unfortunately, you have some of those John McClane economists running around.

Moose Norseman Pours Himself a Martini

January 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why don't you do the same in your own bachelor pad?

Reverse Mortgages Are for Losers

January 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

who failed at the game of life.

3rd "Well Hello Second Armored" Award

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

goes to The Return of Queens.

If you do not know what the "Hello Second Armored Award" is, it is an award given to the "Sweet Beautiful Babies" (read, dames) who are supporting us conservative, traditionalist, libertarians, Manospherian types out there as we battle against socialism, feminism, and statism. Women who refuse to be indoctrinated or view men as the enemy, but rather like them and their company, and identify feminism for what it truly is.

For that they are hereby officially awarded the 3rd "Well Hello Second Armored" Award

It is at the 6:25 mark:

A Scary Glimpse into Feminism

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm merely going to post it.

No editorial.

No snide remarks.

No nothing.

Just posting it in it's pure, unadulterated form for you all to see.

Getting Rid of Your Principles So You Can Operate in Corporate America

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A reader had asked me about this, and thought it might prove to be a good lesson for all of us.

Kerry Lutz Joins the Bachelor Pad

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Kerry Lutz interviewed me two days ago about Bachelor Pad Economics. Talked about the book, but also the hellish weather we were having. I was more or less battling through a snow storm, but made it through. By the time he called I was in Paducah, Kentucky. Anyway, for you listening pleasure should you choose to.

Capital Flight - The Next Frontier

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First it was the housing bubble. Then it was the education bubble. The death of marriage and the exit of men from the sexual market place was always an undercurrent. And the retirement bubble was there too. But I believe as the US continues does the road of socialism and its debt becomes increasingly unsupportable, the next "stage" will be capital flight.

Not today
Not tomorrow

But I believe over the next decade the productive people of the United States will be looking for greener pastures, especially those who are younger, have their lives ahead of them, and do not have anything to root them down to this socialist, diversity, feminism, wealth-transferring Titanic.

I am terribly naive and uninformed about this realm however. Sure I've read some Escape Artist, and I've followed Nomad Capitalist, but truthfully, I don't have enough money to make it worth while leaving the US. Therefore, I've really had no incentive to "find an offshore tax haven" or "move to Bermuda." But that's just the point. It's no longer whether you have millions of dollars and want to avoid a 50% tax rate. It's becoming bad enough that there just aren't any jobs for young people. Laws and regulations are becoming too onerous, even tyrannical, and sociologically the government, teachers, and the education system is training people to hate people of different colors and races. These political and non-financial reasons are why most people should be considering things like:

another bank account overseas purchasing property overseas secondary passports or at least having an escape plan

it is also why you may want to consider attending the "Passport to Freedom."

I'm going to be speaking there, along with keynote speaker Peter Schiff and many others. I'm actually looking forward to it because I am only speaking about one narrow aspect of capital flight, while expecting to learn much more from others. Besides, it's Vegas. How fun would it be to get hammered in Vegas?

Jan. 23rd - 25th. Escape the cold, have some fun, learn something valuable in the process.

This Isn't a Problem

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sweden is for socialism, diversity, egalitarianism, equalism. Therefore they should be happy to take those poor refugees that have been so obviously discriminated against in that racist Israel.

Why Is There Such a Thing as a 4.5 GPA?

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From my youtube comments:

:/ gyyy wizz If getting a doctorates degree in child psychology is the equivalent of working at mcdonalds while living in your grandmothers basement, what am I supposed to do with my life? I just recently came out of depression knowing that I can graduate with a 3.5 GPA and there is an interesting major out there for every human being with a passion for some thing. Though I guess if I don't have a 4.5 GPA and I don't go to yale then I'll never get married and I don't suit up, and I'm not unique and special at all? Thanks a lot. Well guess what? My boy friend has a 4.5 and is majoring in nutrition, and loves me for my dorkness, my and for how confident I am as a women. I understand that you all have truth in what your saying and I respect that. Though I don't know, I guess I'm just sorta giving up again after watching and reading all of this. It sucks. I'm tired of worrying about what other people think of me and I just felt like I should stand up for my self or least say some thing.

Reply View all comments

Somebody help me here, because I think I'm becoming "old."

Have the children of today become so stupid, so spoiled, that we are now giving them so much extra credit that you can now get a GPA ABOVE 4.0????

I'm mean, grade inflation is bad enough.
Getting doctorates in child pscyhology is bad enough.
Dating boys majoring in "nutrition" is bad enough.

But good lord, have the sensitivities of the wittle wittle childwen become so fragile they now need a full additional point on their GPA scores?

You understand why I say I the baby boomers are crap, but Gen X is crap-squared, and Gen Y is crap-cubed.

This country fully deserves where it's going. Fully.

This is How a Bar Should be Ran

January 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"The Bird Cage Theatre operated continuously – twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year – for the next eight years. It gained a reputation as one of the wildest places in the country, prompting The New York Times to report in 1882 that "the Bird Cage Theatre is the wildest, wickedest night spot between Basin Street and the Barbary Coast". More than 120 bullet holes are evident throughout the building."

The One Post That Did More for Women Than All of Oprah's Blathering

January 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here it is.

Of course, the wisdom in this post is nothing new. The real issue is the psychology that prevents women from actually following it. This psychology has been hardened to the point of imperviousness with feminist ideology, socialism, and a media applauding girls/women without any of the commensurate and required achievement in life to warrant such applause. Ergo, our efforts should not be merely to highlight the simplest of things women can do to improve their lives (not to criticize the post), but rather to employ tactics that change their prohibitive psychology and deprograms their brainwashing. Namely:

shame
avoidance mockery ostracization
and ridicule

"OH that's so MEAN!"
"Oh that's so MISOGYNIST!"

No, it's the ultimate form of love and care - truth, aka "tough fatherly love."

What's truly misogynist is lying to women while claiming to help them merely to profit financially like Oprah, the media, the democrat party, and professional feminists have.

Enjoy that decline, ladies. Enjoy that freaking decline.

Today's Office

January 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

brought to you in part by:

"No Illegitimate Children" - Did you have children you couldn't afford, too early, and with an unreliable partner? Tough shit. You don't get to enjoy this. "No Illegitimate Children" - it's the least you can do for yourself and your kids.

Also in part by:

"High Taxes" - Whoa!? A 50% tax rate if I work hard? No thanks, I'll just go minimalism and get by on $15,000 instead. High Taxes - when you want the producers to quit.

Also by:

"HR Chicks" - Nothing says, "we say our employees are our best assets, but we really don't mean it because we're going to let 25 year old ditzes do the first screening interviews" than having HR interview your applicants. Ensure you drive the most productive and intelligent employees into a location-independent career so they can smoke cigars while working. "HR Chicks" - they're dumb, they don't like "The Maths," and drive all real talent away, but hey, at least you meet diversity quotas!

And finally:

"Our Great Insurance Plan" - When your employer offers you a "Great Insurance Plan" that is 4 times what you can get for a catastrophic plan on your own, you'll realize they're having your youth and health subsidize all their old, fat, and lazy employees. "Our Great Insurance Plan" - another way to fuck over the younger generation!

Again, Mike Rowe is a Cool Guy

January 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You want an inside, behind the scenes story about Mike Rowe that shows you what he's like off-screen? Well, look no further.

We should get Mike Rowe to run for president. Of course, that would require the Republican party to get it's head out of its ass and not nominate another connected blue-blood millionaire.

You can find the Real Mike Rowe here.

Our Van Dwelling Agent in the Field

January 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When I was 22 I was trying to bust my ass off to get into banking, work hard, and prove my mettle.

I wish I did what our Van Dwelling Agent in the Field is doing, and I sincerely mean that:

I'm 22, travelling around the US in an outfitted van on money that I saved working at a hotel for a year and am definitely enjoying the decline. Note: I'm from a cold as hell Midwestern state that would not be as fun of a spot to read your new book in during the middle of January.

This kid is smarter than all of us. Enjoying the decline 15 years my junior.

Book Review - Nixon's Guide to the Multiverse

January 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Marty Andrade is a friend and a colleague of mine. I like him and enjoy his company.

This relationship, however, will not bias my book review of his latest book "Nixon's Guide to the Multiverse."

The reason it won't bias my opinion is because, factually, it is a very good book. Matter of fact, after dealing with a lot of serious political, economic, non-fiction book, it was a hell of a break and pleasure to read.

The basic premise is an alternative reality of "The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy." It involves the inter-universe space and time travel of a motley crew of creatures, some humanoids, some Migrid Serpents, and of course, one Richard Milhous Nixon. Like The Hitch Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy, it has no plot, allowing the characters to get into situations impossible in this multiverse. But unlike Hitch Hiker's Guide, Andrade beats Douglas Adams in my opinion in several ways:

First, Andrade thoroughly explores and incorporates all the possible theories about the universe and physics, namely multiverses. That there are infinite realities, infinite universes, parallel universes and that because they are infinite, EVERYTHING is possible.

This not only paints a background for a book that can have unlimited humor, but also makes the reader deeply ponder and think about the nature of the universe. Is reincarnation real? The question is moot. In some universe you probably existed before, because, why not? It is this freeing of the mind that is the intellectual counterbalance for a book that is largely humor.

Second, the incredible creativity that could only be epiphanized on the golf course. Understand with a truly limitless universe Andrade's creativity had to live up to this limitless canvass - and he did not fail. The universe of turtles stacked upon each other, the concept of meta-cars, a wing-monster that naps with half a brain so he can function with the other half, and the come back of the Red Baron all show that Andrade not only used the concept of "limitless multiverses," but availed its potential for creativity as well.

Third, the humor. I would contend Andrade's wit and humor is as funny and dry as Victor Borge's. You're just going to have to read the book to see what I mean. But there will be multiple instances where you snicker at first, but laugh out-loud as you realize just how truly funny and clever it was that you just read.

Fourth, character development. Hard to feel pity for a Migrid Serpent or a bird-monster-diplomat, until you get to know them better. And you most certainly will as you read the book.

Finally, the primary reason I found it better than Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy is it was easier to follow. Douglas Adams moved WAY too fast for me. I had no idea what was going on, and had to re-read several chapters. I inevitably gave up on it, opting instead to watch the movie, and even then I still could not understand it. "Nixon's Guide to the Multiverse" is easier to follow and makes a lot more sense for a book that in a Seinfeldian way is not meant to.

My only complaint is that it is too close of a genre of "Hitch Hiker's Guide" that many people would consider it mimicry and not an original idea and would have liked to see Andrade's talents go to something completely new and original. Regardless, I found it a better book than Hitch Hikers, and the humor and dopamine fix I received in the two short days it took me to read it was worth the price.

You can find "Nixon's Guide to the Multiverse" on both paperback and kindle.

Warm Schadenfreude Fuzzies

January 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When liberals in Minnesota get the crap kicked out of them by their supporters.

Remember, hungry dependent classes, who are in the middle of revolting because the producers and transporters of the food and energy they need to survive just stopped, will not discern between a good little liberal and a good little conservative.

Why We Need to Outlaw Single Moms

January 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because it's (are you ready for it????)

for the chillllllllldrrreeeeennnnnnnnnn!!!!!

(Brilliant satire, but impervious logic)

Using Sex to Spur Economic Growth

January 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I say this as the honest truth and my honest opinion of which I agree with 100%.

If you want the economy to boom without Keynesian economic voodoo expansionary policy without Austrian deregulation and cutting of taxes without requiring a single concession from either the right or the left

AND to have it completely within the power of women who can then go on to claim to be the SOLE reason for the end of The Great Recession for the rest of history all that needs to be done is this.

It would work. I guarantee it. More than anything that Paul Krugman idiot is recommending.

From the Field Podcast

January 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A "Masters in Ego," how hellish it was driving through an ice storm in Mt. Vernon, Illinois, the futility of listening to talk radio, and the world's most worthless college...

AND MORE

on this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

The Captain Has Been Nominated

January 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Good morning Lieutenants, Agents in the Field, Economists and Children,

Good news!

My book "Bachelor Pad Economics" has been nominated for "Best Finance Book" by a rating agency in Canada (I'll take what I can get). Whether it wins "1st place" basically boils down to how many people vote for it.

Ergo, if you would be so kind, I would very much appreciate ~~beating out Jim Cramer~~ you going to the website and voting for me.

Basically, click here to go to the survey.

There are many categories, "Bachelor Pad Economics" is located on the second page under "Best Money Management." You don't have to vote for any of them, just make sure to vote for mine.

Click "next" to the end.

Then to "submit" they ask you for a bunch of information. Name, e-mail address, and "province." I suggest lying on all of them because this does have that feel of "fake award to get more marketing data."

Many thanks!

Cappy

Cappy's Backed Up Linkage

January 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Posts I've been meaning to link to but have not had time:

"Teen Mom" the show, causing more teen pregnancy.

The INDISPENSABLE cook book for feminists.

The most idiotic, stupid, outlandish degrees, AND YOU STILL GET COMMENTERS ARGUING FOR THEM!

English majors get a cold cup of wake the fuck up from the labor market.

Remy Sheppard Reviews "Bachelor Pad Economics"

January 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For all interested parties.

The World's Most Worthless College

January 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick...

An agent in the field has just found the most worthless college I've ever seen - Naropa University. I think it even beats out Macalester and Antioch.

Get a load of the degrees they offer.

And "only" for $28,000 a year.

With all the media, not to mention my super-awesome book, BLARING the alarms about worthless degrees, you literally have to be mentally impaired or incomprehensibly ignorant to get suckered into this.

Why Profit is Mandatory

January 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have to snicker every time I overhear some naive 20 something faux-intellectual blather on about about "bad" profit is.

"Profit is evil."
"Profit is bad."
"How dare you profit off of (fill in the blank here)"
"Excessssssss profits"
etc.

And the reason I laugh is because saying "profit is bad" is like saying,

"gravity is bad"

or

"water is bad"

or

"the laws of physics are bad."

So let us all pour ourselves a very cappy cap drink, saddle in, and enjoy ourselves a much-needed lesson in the concept of "profit.".

When people hear "profit" they usually associate it ONLY with profits that are begotten by businesses. Corporate profits, Wall Street, 401k's, etc., But profit in the literal sense is merely "excess money" or "excess resources."

For example if I start a business and I invest $20,000 in doing so, and that company then generates $30,000 in sales, that excess $10,000 in money is profit. This is the example we are all familiar with, but this concept can be applied elsewhere.

Say an individual has an option to stay at home on Saturday day. He isn't going to go to work without having some kind of incentive to work. So in order for him to get off his butt and work you are going to have to pay him. You are going to have to pay him an amount of money that is more valuable to him than his leisure. i.e. - you are going to have to make it profitable for him.

In other words, profit doesn't just apply to just those evil, rich private sector businesses, but EVERY single economic entity in the world.

Companies
Governments
Individuals and yes, even (ironically)
"Non-profits."

And the reason why is very simple - nothing would get done without the incentive for profit. None of those economic actors would go into action, labor away, or produce anything without it.

Leftist of a particularly idiotic and idealistic stripe contest otherwise. They often pine wistfully for a "world without profits." But simply ask yourself what kind of a world would that be?

Without profits not one single business would be started. Why would any would-be entrepreneur sacrifice his time, his money, and his labor NOT to make any money? And with no businesses who, precisely, would be producing all the goods and services you and all those lovey lefties need to survive? (just ask those Venezuelans about toilet paper and electronics). This goes a long way in explaining why there were lines for simple staples like BREAD in the Soviet Union.

Also without profits why would anybody go to work? I'm not allowed to keep the fruits of my labor? Forget the fact no companies are hiring because none exist because profit has been outlawed; people wouldn't show up to the work in the first place if they weren't getting paid.

What about all the suppliers, consultants, energy providers, accountants, lawyers, and other third parties that go into supporting a business? If they are not allowed to profit why would anybody provide internet access to the company, computers, legal services, etc. if there was no profit? What the left (and most non-accounting people on the right) fail to realize is that it isn't just the "evil rich business owners" that gets profits, but all his suppliers, vendors, employees, he pays. In other words ALL of his expenses are other people's profits.

And finally, the favorite den of leftists - government and non-profit.

The ultimate hypocrisy I've ever witnessed of the left is their constant villainization of wealth, money, and profit, but in the same breath their CONSTANT clamoring for more of it.

The public ~~baby-sitters~~ schools are CONSTANTLY begging for more money.

The non-profits are ALWAYS short of cash.
The universities just need more money for those poor children but not one of these hypocritical fucks ever live up to their "charitable image" accepting lower pay or (GASP!) actually VOLUNTEERING.

No, I'm terribly sorry, profit is an absolute necessity for this or any other economy to work. And the only people who advocate otherwise are the types too lazy to expend the 5 minutes of effort to think their ideology through.

Remember to vote for "Bachelor Pad Economics" in Rate Market's "Consumer Choice Awards" (page 2, Category #6)

"There Are No Good Investments"

January 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yes, there are no good investments.

That means it's time to think about things like gold, silver, (yes even) education, but may I also recommend

SAFETY.

That is why Ed over at Ranger Self Defense has been a long-time sponsor of the blogshowpodcastvlogyoutubechannelthingy I have going on here.

If you have surplus funds and you don't know where to investment them consider some security cameras for the home, some mace for your children in college, a taser for your spouse, or some diversionary safes for your valuables.

Ed literally has EVERYTHING but guns.

You can visit Ed here and purchasing something at Ranger Self Defense.

Politics Isn't Art

January 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Jorge Gonzales, artist extraordinaire and artist for the cover of Bachelor Pad Economics is a 23 year old young man who about a year ago was looking for my advice and guidance. He was a recent graduate from an art school in California, he could not find work, but saw my video series on "Crusaderism" and just about feinted because I had described what he had experienced to a T.

The "High School Vegan Kid," the political leftist indoctrination of college, worthless professors, and the lies students tell themselves about why their "cause" is more important than they pay (even though they were now $120,000 in debt). But what I found to be most interesting in our interactions was how, when he was describing various projects and art work he and his fellow peers created, that every piece, every bit of art had to have a "story" behind it. And not just a story, but a political story.

I found this odd, thinking that "art should just be art, what does politics have to do with it," but oh how foolish I was. For, as Jorge explained, you can't just have a piece of art, you need to have some kind of political motivation behind it, a political story behind it, so you can convey your feelings or explain the plight of some oppressed group or another.

It didn't make any sense to me, and matter of fact, I don't think it made any sense to Jorge, but after sitting down and thinking about it, my brilliant misanthropic and cynical mind came up with the answer like it always does:

These people aren't artists. They're your typical lazy 20 somethings who:

Have no talent
Have no work ethic
Want to avoid rigor and real work at all costs
Still want to become artists anyway

But in imbuing politics with their art they can use it to rationalize in their little minds that they are indeed artists.

Realize the role politics plays in art. It isn't to "improve" art. It isn't to "enhance" art. It is 100%, completely for the COUGH COUGH AHEM AHEM WHEEZE WHEEZE SUPERLARGEAIRQUOTES

"artist."

First it masks the fact they aren't real artists. You're looking at a pile of dog shit with a GI

Joe figure stuck out of it and the leftist dolt-hack of an artist tells you in made-up esoteric language how it shows in “inner-hatred America has for its tyrannical oppressors that blah bitty blah blah blah.” But realize what happened there. In a very subtle and cunning (even unconscious I’d say) stroke, the “artist” redirected the focus from art to a “message.” You are no longer thinking “wow, this art is shit both metaphorically and really,” but dedicating your frontal lobes to the message.

Second, it feeds the ego of the “artist.” In having some noble leftist politic message or purpose to his/her art, they think that somehow that compensates for their utter lack of talent. Could my 3 year old draw that? Doesn’t matter, it’s “real art” because it portrays the plight of migrant workers who have to learn English to fill out their welfare forms. Did my dog wipe his ass on the carpet, smearing his feces in a pattern identical to the crap I see up at the Walker Art Center? Doesn’t matter. That painting was done to help raise awareness of the discrimination overweight women suffer in today’s beauty-obsessed culture. In short, substituting a noble cause for a lack of talent helps the talentless artist rationalize wasting $80,000 at art school and 20 years of their life making crappy art.

Third, it serves as a shield. The most common tactic leftists use is to take a noble or innocent entity or cause and hide behind it as they use it to rationalize the theft of other people’s money. Teachers do this every day holding the precious children hostage for forever increasing bloated baby sitter salaries and artists do the same thing.

Did you criticize the painting of the black man urinating on the crucifix?
Then you hate blacks! You’re a racist!

Did you criticize the sculpture of a woman having sex with a donkey?
Then you hate women! You’re a sexist!

Did you criticize the pile of cat shit smeared on a picture of Ronald Reagan?
Then you hate the poor oppressed child slave laborers of Gabbitygoo, Costa Rica that the feces OBVIOUSLY represent because you lack the vision and interpretation skills to see what this true work of art obviously is!

In other words, having a political message attached to a piece of art allows the artist to deflect any genuine criticism of his ability as an “ism” or “ist."

And finally, money. Notice how ALL of the art pieces have a leftist connotation? A leftist political theme?

What, you thought the government and the NEA would give money to a conservative artist?

Government/public/non-profit money is pretty much what makes the art world go around today. Not the real art. Not the stuff being auctioned off at Sotheby's for $40 million that people willingly buy. I'm talking the crap we get to see everyday in architecture, community centers, local crap-museums, and academia. Heck, you can't even get a building built in St. Paul without a required minimum amount of art from local artists (look it up, not joking). But understand what is really going on here. The art community, just like those "evil" bankers, just like those "evil" insurance companies, just like any other lobbyists, forces the innocent population to pay for their shitty and unwanted hobbies. From $50,000 drinking fountains to lord knows what else is out there, artists are constantly building leftist-theme pieces of art to get more grants, more taxpayer dollars, more of your money so they can play "make believe I'm a talented artist." This not only shows you why most public art sucks, but why there is an obvious surplus of talentless artists and why they are all leftist.

There is good news however. Time.

You see, time is the ultimate judge. And over time the political cronies that voted to buy some talentless hack's art will die. Those talentless hacks will also die. And when the next generation of hacks and artists come in, they will say,

"Why the fuck do we have a statue of a woman fucking a donkey in Minneapolis' City Hall?"

And slowly, but surely, all the government-art, and, consequently, all the life works of the talentless leftists artists will be thrown away and end up in a landfill, right where it belongs – with the rest of society's garbage.

In the meantime people will still insist on seeing the Statue of David, Michelangelo's paintings, and pay $40 million for a Pablo Picasso.

Meanwhile, Over at Instapundit…

January 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Linked at Instapundit! Yeaaaaa!!!!!!

Ammo as an Investment

January 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Like silver or gold, guns and ammo can actually be a form of non-traditional investments. However, they are somewhat limited in their ability to serve as an investment. For example I know one guy who owns over 600 guns. I ask him precisely how he is ever going to use all of those guns should the SHTF. He then gives me a redneck smirk and just says, "But I love my guns!" (yes, he is the stereo type).

However, while an arsenal of 600 guns is an impossible number of guns to even move, let alone use, having "some" guns not only serves as a safety measure, but also an investment.

I personally recommend having the following:

Pistol for personal safety.
Shotgun for hunting waterfowl and home defense.
Scoped rifle for hunting/SHTF hunting
AR-15 for protection/SHTF protection

They'll serve the purposes above adequately, but if stored properly will be a decent store of value.

However, regardless of what your end inventory looks like, you will need ammo. So may I suggest one of Cappy Cap's sponsors AmmoforSale.com.

Ammo, is very much like coin or currency. Holds value, has intrinsic value, will have value today and certain in a SHTF scenario. However, just like guns, you can have too much ammo. By the time you 2,000 rounds for each gun, I would recommend switching your non-traditional investments to silver and gold because they carry more value per ounce than guns/ammo.

This has been your "plug for a Cappy Cap sponsor camouflaged as a PSA" for the day.

No Man Likes Treating Women Like Shit

January 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Matt Forney interviewed me on his podcast last week and has it posted. It was largely about my new book, but the conversation took an interesting turn and an important lesson was learned - no guy really enjoys treating women like shit.

We just don't.

We'd much prefer to be kind, charming, or at least civil. Sadly, to have a modicum of success with today's women you do need to set aside your preferences and act aloof, indifferent, and like a jerk as those are the rules. It takes some doing and it can be done (it has to be), but I NEVER liked it. It never seemed natural. Always twinged when I did it.

Anyway, just wanted it down in the history books that men don't enjoy it.

Parents Need to Parent the Fuck Up

January 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You need to at least watch the 11:00-12:30 part with the world's largest "air quotes."

How Poverty Arrests the Development of Game

January 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is without the slightest milligram of shame or embarassment that I will readily admit that I never got laid in college,

Not once.

And the reason I can admit this to an audience that would otherwise use such a fact as proof that I had no game, I'm a poser, I'm a keyboard jockey, etc., is because of a credible excuse:

It literally was a choice between food/rent or sex.

Tough of a choice as that may sound, invariably even the horniest of horn dogs will be forced to choose food over sex because of the simple fact you need food to live. You technically don't need sex. And I was in such a situation.

You all know the story. Full time work, full time school, no parental or government support, yada yada, yada, but the end result was that I was too busy working and supporting myself to have the social life necessary to score a little play on the side.

Were there some close calls?

Sure.

Was there that stereotypical girl who "just didn't know" by the second date?

Of course.

And did I make it to a party with inebriated women?

Thrice.

But in the end, I would have to either go to work, go to bed, study, or remain sober for that same night's shift. None of which is conducive to being laid.

Naturally, when I graduated this all changed. Without having to work an effective 90 hour work week, I could focus on building a social life. My dancing career certainly helped, acting as a steroid, boosting my charm with the ladies, and for most of my mid to late twenties I made up for lost time. But that was just it, I was making up for lost time. Though only delayed by 4 years, that was enough time for me to realize I was still behind the curve when it came to game. Worse still, I didn't get it out of my system like most men did by their late 20's, and so while men were slowly starting to get married off, I was not prepared to settle down. I still needed more notches in my belt.

This ended up costing me greatly. For while I may not have been ready to settle down, the rest of my effective generation was. And the girl I was dating at the time, who would have made a quality candidate for marriage and saved me great angst and bullshit from future floozies, inevitably stopped waiting for me to come around and found someone else.

That was the rude awakening I needed to realize that no matter what poor lot in life I drew, it didn't change that the rest of society, the rest of my generation, my environment, didn't care. It was moving on without me. They all got it "out of their systems" from 16-24, and entitled or not, in me insisting I also get it out of my system, my strategy was no longer conducive to the environment I was in and only served to hurt me. My game had suffered from arrested development.

Sadly, there is no solution to this situation except to realize it. Many young men, especially in today's generation, are going to be brought up poor. They will not have the luxuries their generational peers have, and because of this they will have to focus on the lower requirements on Maslow's Hierarchy of needs (safety, food, health, finances) before moving onto the loftier ones (sex, friendship, self actualization, etc., just look it up). Because of this, their ability to game, interact, and score with women will be stunted or put on "hold" while they try to scrape up enough bucks to pay for rent. But when they do inevitably get to the point their finances are stable, they don't need to work two jobs, and they can start to enjoy a social life, they will enter the courting/sexual market with underdeveloped skills or at least outdated goals and ideas. The trick is for you to realize whether or not you are one of these people and have the intellectual temerity to set aside "what you lost during your youth," and accept and realize what the realities of your current dating/sexual market are.

Why You Want to be Alton Brown

January 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Alton Brown?" you say?

"Yes."

"The nerdy guy with the bow tie and does the cooking show thing?"

"That's the one."

"Why on Earth would I want to become that guy?"

Well hold on there young lieutenants looking for role models to live up to. Hold on and hear the ole Captain out.

Like me, you probably know Alton Brown as "that guy" who shows up occasionally on cooking shows as you control-surf from the Cartoon Network to Adult Swim to the Military Channel, occasionally transversing the Food Network. You don't stop to watch him because...well...why would you? It's a cooking network. And unless you're Danny from 504, you have no interest in cooking.

But do you know of his background?

For while you and I see a kind of nerdy man approaching his 50's, the man is about the closest approximation to "The World's Most Interesting Man" we have. I didn't believe it at first, when my girlfriend starting citing all of his accomplishments and hobbies, but after further investigation the guy is an accomplished man and a total badass.

First, do you have a 20 year career in radio and television to the point you never have to worry about working a real job again? I didn't think so.

Second, are you a pilot? Neither am I. Alton Brown is and he OWNS two planes. I own a 2003 Chevy and pilot it occasionally to the grocery store.

Third, but surely I beat Mr. Brown in the motorcycle department. Right? I mean, this guy can't do it all. Right???

Wrong.

Dude's an avid motorcycle enthusiast.

Fourth, but at least he's old. Right? He's old. Can't keep up with the youngin's like us. We'll be sure to pass him up.

Wrong again.

Guy lost 50 pounds as he went on AND SUCCEEDED IN losing that weight. He is dedicated to his health...and oh yeah, like young up and comers, he has a podcast.

Fifth, his personality has got to suck. It just has too.

Nope.

Watch any one of his "Good Eats" shows and he is a study in wit, humor and charm that most men should master.

Sixth, come on Cappy. Give us something that we do better than Alton Brown! Well, I don't think he's an accomplished ballroom dancer...oh! BUT WAIT! HE'S AN ACCOMPLISHED GUITAR PLAYER AND PLAYS IN A BAND!!!!

YOU CAN'T BEAT THIS GUY!!!!

Sorry lieutenants, agents in the field, economists, and children, that nerdy exterior Brown portrays is nothing but a ruse. The dude is living life like a real man should - he's kicking ass, he's taking names, he's doing what he wants, and isn't letting one second of his life go to waste.

Ergo, that is why, like

Walter Matthau
Cary Grant
Steve McQueen
Mike Rowe

you want to be like Alton Brown.

PS - from a reader

DAMNIT!!!!

Asshole Consulting

January 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Making it official. "Asshole Consulting" is now open for business.

The World's Ugliest Belt

January 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Rattlerstrap has been one of Cappy Cap's sponsors for a while. It is an ugly belt. A hideous belt. I guarantee you girls will NOT want to sleep with you if you wear it to the club.

BUT!

It is THE belt you'll want on you when you go hiking, hunting or anything outdoors where you might run into an emergency and need some paracord to survive. Consider visiting or at least check it out and see if it isn't for you.

Hump Day Linkage

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A combination saloon, pawnshop, shooting range. God bless America!

Uncle Jay is back! And he is explaining the news as he always does!

When the accusation of "racism" lost it's potency.

Warm fuzzies.

Gossip as a weapon.

I often wonder what kind of a mental life people have who put their politics above themselves and their accomplishments. "Hellish" is a word that comes to mind.

May I be blunt? The reason there shouldn't be something like "male studies" is because it doesn't produce anything except victimization and self-pity, just like "women's studies." And truthfully, I don't see any real men being duped into majoring in such a worthless faux-study.

The world owes you nothing.

Bachelor Pad Theater - Why Black Men Can't Compete Against the Government for the Affection of Black Women

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You may purchase Bachelor Pad Economics here.

It's Called Capital Flight

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and it's a feature, not a bug of socialism.

ht

Keeping the Lights On

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Want to help out the Captain? Consider visiting one of my sponsors Talon Knife.

Does everybody need it?

No.

But it is a nice little SUBTLE and CLANDESTINE knife you can carry on your person which may prove helpful in a close quarters combat situation.

Visit Talon Knife and see if it isn't something for you.

Why the Parasite Will Never Be Bigger Than the Host

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Despite the general decline of western civilization, I try to find what morsels of joy and happiness where I can. Of course, this means giving up my dreams and replacing them with alternative and inferior sources of joy, but when your dreams were never going to happen anyway, the alternatives' feasibility actually make them superior.

For example schadenfreude.

Oh, I'm accused of being petty, but I enjoy watching the single moms of the world whine and complain about how hard life is and suffer a crippled life. It's the least bit of joy I can extract from their situation for them voting for the government to supplant men's roles in society.

Another example, the education bubble.

All those kiddies who were "so smart," and "so independent minded," and "knew what they were doing" only to end up unemployed, financially crippled with student loans, and their egos smashed into a wall because life didn't turn out the way their ass-kissing teachers told them it would. Again, it's the least bit of joy I can extract from their situation for them voting en masse for Barack Obama and the destruction of the United States.

There are other examples, and it does take quite a bit of pondering, thought, thinking things through, even meditation, but I believe over time people will come to learn to "enjoy the decline" like I have. However, to help accelerate this epiphany in others, perhaps I can provide a little bit of "back of napkin economics" that with mathematically show you something about the leftist parasites of society that will provide warm "revenge fuzzies" and a morsel of schadenfreude joy.

Namely, the parasite can never get larger than the host.

I alluded to this before in my "12 Year Problem of Socialism," which in a nutshell says that even if the left got its way and decided to confiscate all the wealth of "the rich," the absolute MAXIMUM amount of time they could survive would be 12 years. But I came up with some additional calculations that will show you the parasites of society will rarely (bar political connections) ever live lives better than the hosts.

Of the roughly $67 trillion in wealth all American's have the "rich" (top 20%) are estimated to have $50 trillion of it. Let us magically say we confiscate this and stock prices don't plummet the rich don't hide assets society doesn't collapse people show up for work the next day the electricity still runs

It won't, and the country would immediately go to shit, but let's just idealistically assume like only academians can.

That $50 trillion will have to be spread across the 260 million remaining Americans that aren't part of the 20% (and some of whom also happen to be children).

That is $192,000 per man, woman, and child, NOT in the upper 20%

Naturally, this does not make any of you hard-working people feel any better. $192,000 is certainly likely more than you make. But here's where the revenge comes in:

It's a one trick pony.

This isn't $192,000 per year, it's a ONE TIME PAYMENT that would have to last the rest of people's lives. Once such a confiscation of wealth occurred NOBODY in their right mind would dare to work so hard even again. Therefore, assuming the average person is going to live another 40 years or so, that is a whopping $4,800 per year.

$4,800 a year is not enough to solve the problems of the poor. And it is likely not enough to raise the average socialist parasite's wage to match or exceed yours. But if there is a source of revenge it is not so much the fact this $4,800 is not enough to raise the parasites to a standard of living on par or in excess of yours. It's the fact that the $4,800 is not going to be enough to solve the core problem of the parasites:

Stupidity.

Understand that the vast majority of poor people are poor because of their own damn stupidity. Yes there are some where medical problems befall them. Yes there are some where something statistically bad happens. But the vast majority of poor people are poor because they had kids they couldn't afford, majored in stupid stuff, got in trouble with the law, did drugs, or just plain chose not to work. And no amount of money, let alone $4,800 can solve stupid.

This stupidity, and the fact it will forever cost the individual more than the $4,800 subsidy can offset condemns them to a miserable life. Do you really think Peggy Joseph is enjoying her life right now? How about the trailer trash methed out mothers in Wyoming? Their male idiot counterparts crippled with a truck loan for a Dodge Hemi-

Diesel and three DUI's? Take whatever parasite you want, chances are, even with the taxpayers' money, they are still living inferior lives to yours.

Finally, if you really think about it, it isn't even the incurable stupidity of people and their consequentially condemned lives where you get your warm schadenfreude fuzzies. It's the consequences of stupidity - namely, insanity.

Take a look at this video and ask yourself what kind of a mental hell all the people, bar the security guard, must live in. Can you image day in day out what they must go through? The pinnacle of their lives being "welfare check day?" Let alone what they miss out on in life? Do you think the parasitic classes ever get to go to a great jazz club, appreciate Victor Borge or find the entertainment in a movie like "High Society?" Do you think these people have a good ole fashioned Norman Rockwell Christmas that is sane, quiet, enjoyable, and loving? Do you think these people have any kind of friends and conversation that would stimulate the brain more than the drugs or booze they're doing?

There is none of that for these people. There is the ghetto, there is the trailer park, there is the barrio, replete with perpetual poverty, day time TV shows, illegitimate pregnancy, shitty parents, a constant battle with the cops and no hope for anything greater in life. They'll never eat sushi, never visit Glacier National Park, and they'll never have any accomplishments or feats to point to in their lives. They won't start a business, won't start a (successful family), they'll never climb mountains, and they'll never bike across Europe. If there is ever a crushing revenge you will have on the parasites that insist on living off of you, it's that you will have not squandered your one shot, your one fleeting opportunity to perform in and enjoy this universe, while their lives will not only be insufferable, but inconsequential, irrelevant, and completely wasted.

"The Maths" R Hard, Even for STEM Gurlz

January 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I know, "The Maths" r hard gurlz.

Just make sure all the bridges I drive over were designed by men please.

Thank you.

The Blunt Truth About Women in the Workplace

January 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Was going to write/video something similar, but then Aurini stole my thunder.

From his video:

"So why should men work? We don't require that much money to live. We don't have kids. We just need to pay for our motorcycles, and our beer and our video games, and we can chill the fuck out as we watch society decline all around us."

He does an outstanding job and covers all of the topics I would have. So I'll just link to him instead.

The African American Studies Program that Wasn't

January 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just can't make it up people. Just can't make it up.

Again, these academians, especially in the liberal arts, are nothing more than the modern day banksters screwing the youth and society at large over.

Thug Notes

January 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Actually, the review is quite succinct, not to mention it saves me the time of reading any of these books:

Animal Farm
1984
The Great Gatsby
Lord of the Flies

Main channel here.

The Politically Incorrect Reasons Young People Can't Find Jobs

January 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ahhh! The truth!!! IT STINGS!!!! IT STINGS!!!!!!!!

90's Nostalgia

January 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For those of you wondering about one hit wonder obscure artists from the 90s.

Friday Night Linkage

January 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is why I always wait for books to come out in the movies. No point in reading.

Go ahead girls. Cut your hair short. See what happens.

Hate is good. And it will never go away.

Some house cleaning and intellectual honesty about how much men suck is always called for. Keeps us honest and makes us better than feminists who believe "they can do no wrong."

Feminism is evil. No, really, it is evil.

Victory Unlimited

January 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why didn't anybody tell me of this dude before?

Great podcast and site for any of you young men out there looking for the father you never had or the older brother you needed.

The Solution to All of the World's Economic and Financial Problems

January 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Detroit's Gross Municipal Product Smells Fishy

January 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Gross Municipal Product or "GMP" is basically Gross Domestic Product, but for cities. I only don't mention it as much as the data is a bit difficult to come by and isn't commonly cited. However, I remember a while ago looking up Detroit's GMP to see what I was sure to find a cratering drop.

It wasn't. Matter of fact, it hasn't cratered, but held steady, even rising in the past couple of years.

I couldn't believe it, but figured it must have been something with the metropolitan region. Maybe the surrounding suburbs were included. Whatever it was I didn't really care too much about it until...

they decided to revamp how GDP was calculated.

This is a major concern I have with the economics industry. Since it is largely populated by academians and government economists, I don't trust them to be honest and employ the best methodologies when measuring the economy. I do trust them, however, to lie and taint their methodologies to have a political bias to favor more socialism. Regardless, this forces real, private sector economists to become tricky and use alternative measures that more accurately measure economic growth, wealth, etc. (for example, many economists will use electrical consumption instead of China's "official" GDP figures as they are prone to overstating GDP). And I'm afraid we may now have to do the same in the US.

However, sometimes you don't have to go so far as to be looking up electrical consumption or some alternative measure. Economists have made so many other statistical measures that invariably they will contradict each other giving government statistics their distinct fishy odor. For example manufacturing employment.

This is more in line with what I hear and see in other statistical circles. Stagnation during booming times and a precipitous crash during the recession. But the ultimate statistic that makes me question and no longer trust Detroit's GMP figures is the only thing that can cause economic growth - people. Namely, Detroit's population:

In the last decade alone it's population has shrunk by a fifth. However, it's GMP has increased by about 7% during that same time period. And even considering all the advances in technology and improvements in economic efficiency that has occurred in that time, I frankly don't believe Detroit's population is smart, educated, driven or capable enough to make those figures jibe.

Something stinks and it's the rosy picture the left keeps trying to paint of Detroit.

ht to MJ Perry for the chart.

A B.A. in "Special Snowflake Studies"

January 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here's the original piece.

And here's the commensurate ripping apart of her degree in (are you ready for it???)

Political Science and Food.

Randye, if you're reading this, please let me do you a favor and mail you a book you might like. It may spare your future children from making the worst mistake in their lives. And I'm not joking. You are unconsciously harming your children's financial futures.

Also, a video for all of you parents who can't understand why your kid at the age of 23 constantly needs more of your money.

Monday Morning Linkage

January 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Irresponsible single mom?
Check.
Twice divorced?
Check.
Had other people pay for her education?
Check.
And you people think she's going to be a good governor?

It is because I shoveled shit as my first job and at the age of 13 had more real world, private sector experience than our president ever had or ever will have that would make my autobiography infinitely more interesting than his two (sure to be three). The only problem is I'm not arrogant enough to write a book about myself.

Would it kill a company to tell the race whore industry to pound sand for once? Huh, would it?

Thank god.

Why the Manosphere Will Unintentionally Become the 4th Branch of Government

January 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The Manosphere's origins are truly organic, truly unintentional, and truly visceral. There was no organized effort to bring its existence about. No PAC or political group that created it out of whole cloth like "privilege" or "fat acceptance." It was the natural result of men (and some women) comparing notes over a newly created media that allowed us to identify, expose, defend against, and combat various sociological, economic, and political trends that all aimed to benefit in a zero-sum-game off of men.

Because of it's origins, it has largely become an entity of refuge, therapy, education, information, training, and strategy to help first world men deal with the various problems that face them today. We are a brotherhood, a fraternity that pretty much welcomes all comers, aiming to help our fellow man though either passing on wisdom, comparing notes, providing explanations or providing guidance. But while this has largely been a self-help group, like many other entities throughout history, it will likely unintentionally become something else.

And The Manosphere, I believe will become the 4th branch of government.

Understand what the 4th branch of government is. It's the media. It's the news outlets. It's the journalists, television personalities and talk radio hosts that keeps an eye on, and reports on the government, our elected officials or any other self-proclaimed leaders that desire to lord over us in a political manner. Historically, the "traditional" or "Main Stream Media" served this function. Reporting on Watergate, scouring over various economic and government data, interrogating people who wish to run for office. But something interesting happened I'd say back in the 1960's.

Journalism was no longer viewed by those who wished to participate in it as a:

vital and important piece of society that guarantees, protects, and defends freedom, but as an easy job, that avoided rigor, only required writing, but then also gave you the ego-boost that you were some kind of crusader, some kind of hero. It is why I hate journalism majors more than any other bar political science.

This ease and "glory" of the journalism field attracted not only the weakest of minds, but the most power hungry as well. People who didn't care so much about intellectual honesty, intellectual temerity, or protecting freedom, but hacks, quasi-politicians, and egomaniacs who put their egos, careers, and pride above the American people.

The consequences were almost predictable. Following the "Destruction Principle" (just read it first, and then come back, trust me. It will be the "something you learn" everyday) these inferior people preferred to earn their journalism laurels not by working hard, exposing true corruption or evil, but rather by first criticizing and villainizing the established institutions in our society so they could then "take down those evil entities" with half the effort legitimate journalism required. And soon all of our legitimate institutions that existed for very good reasons were under attack:

Corporations Profit
Freedom
Choice
The Nuclear Family
Physical Fitness and Attraction
Beauty (in humans, but art and architecture as well)
The Education System
Success
Excellence
etc.

Unfortunately for the majority of Manosphere participants this was being done either before we were born or while we were children. Doubly unfortunately our parents' generation fell for it, perhaps even participated in this urinating on the wisdom of our forefathers. And without the internet for us to compare notes, we were left to be brainwashed by the schools, by the media, and with compliant (or at least) oblivious parents.

However, just because the MSM says something, doesn't make it true. And just because the media tells you something, doesn't make it so. And so for about 20 years proto-Manospherians in their teens and 20's wandered the desert aimlessly, completely and thoroughly confused as to why they were not succeeding in life doing what everybody told them to do. It wasn't until the internet and some independent minded men who were driven to the brink of insanity, did they start positing different theories, trying different things, and compared notes did they realize what was going on. But once they did, and this epiphany was realized, the entire lid of the feminists-socialist-media-government-education-complex got blown.

Which leads us to where we are today.

The Manosphere always was, and always will be a brotherhood that helps out his fellow man. The father you never had. The older brother you desperately needed to beat some sense into you. The Morpheus forcing the red pill down your throat. But there is one quality and trait that The Manosphere has that will supplant the MSM from its position of the 4th branch of government - truth.

See, The Manosphere only cares about the truth while the MSM for the past 50 years has been focusing on distorting the truth. And while people can be fooled by the MSM for decades, inevitably when what they were told doesn't manifest itself in reality, the consequence is not just insanity, but an INCREDIBLY DESPERATE desire to have it explained why. Nearly once a week I get a fan letter saying, "THANK YOU!" not because I helped some kind get laid, or that I prevented him from majoring in a stupid subject, but because I merely explained to him what was going on. And it is this breath of fresh air that not only the MSM is mutually exclusive from delivering, but is the point where a person's trust will switch from the talking heads on CNN and their professors to guys like me, who constitute The Manosphere, giving us a platform.

You combined this platform, with:

the trust of the people, and the truth

and whether you like it or not, you have the recipe for true, honest, and legitimate journalism. The type that defends freedom, protects the people, keeps the government in check, and is what the MSM was supposed to be doing this entire time.

Naturally, of course, I don't see a ton of the writers that constitute The Manosphere dedicating themselves to "journalism." I don't see them really desiring to do so. They will continue on providing advice to men (and women) in whatever subsegment or specialty they're in. But whether they realize it or not, they unconsciously ARE JOURNALISTS. They ARE THE MEDIA. People are reading them in the exact same precise way they did newspapers back in the 80's.

Finally, the last way The Manosphere will supplant the MSM is in our numbers. Our readership is BOOMING, while the MSM is in decline. I recently did a piece on a Time Magazine author who's hamster ran at Mach 7, rationalizing her daughter's choice to major in "Politic and Culture of Food Studies." In a genuine olive-branchian way I offered to mail her my book. But when I looked her up on twitter I noticed something:

Randye Hoder
@ranhoder
I write about the intersection of family, politics and culture for the NYT, Time and others. Focus on Gen Y and Z, mostly because I have one of each.
Los Angeles, CA
238
TWEETS
111
FOLLOWING
120 FOLLOWERS
Follow

(follow me here)

How does a TIME MAGAZINE WRITER GET ONLY 1/10th MY FOLLOWERSHIP??? It harkens back to the ABC 20/20 scandal where they had two 23 year old adult-children write an obvious hit-piece on The Manosphere. If Time and ABC are giving their platforms to people with even less cache and experience than a novice like me, it only shows that the MSM is on the verge of collapse, or at least must keep up the charade of a legitimate news organization. But what is ultimately driving the decline in the MSM's numbers and the skyrocketing of ours is that we're the first entity in the past 60 years to target America's least targeted, least concerned demographic - men. I don't know how many fractions of a point you can increase your readership by when you constantly harp on women, focusing on the forever increasingly petty aspects of their lives. Articles on how to get their cuticles done right. Articles on what kind of tap water is good. But did it ever occur to people in the MSM to maybe venture or attempt to capitalize on the male market? I mean, they do after all account for about half the population on the planet.

Sadly, however, we know the answer.

"Men" was one of those "evil" institutions the MSM's 1960's strategy was based on. "Men," just like profits, just like capitalism, just like freedom, had to be taken down. And it has been such a core aspect of MSM for so long, it has become them. They cannot disassociate themselves from it.

Which is fine by us. Because we'll take the male market and its billions in potential business. The MSM can keep writing stories about "male privilege."

Aaron Clarey is a ballroom dancing economist who accidentally found himself making more money screaming truths at the internet. He has this blog, but also hosts "The Clarey Podcast" and is the author of several books that every man (and woman) should read.

Who Has the Life Expectancy to Read Ayn Rand?

January 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From a commenter in response to this very brief and very short video.

Nathaniel Spatchcock 17 hours ago (edited)

Five words. Did you hear that, Ms Rand? It took him five words. So why did it take me fourteen years to read Atlas f*$%ing Shrugged?

Reply · 2

Tuesday Linkage

January 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There is such a thing as being "too minimalist."

Heh, who knew American football was so popular in Mexico!

Why black liberals will never fulfill MLK's dream.

Dating is dead. And thank god. It was an expensive and fruitless endeavor anyway.

Again, black men are just furthest down the mine.

Your Late Evening Funny

January 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Not bad for a rookie. Not bad at all.

(ps-don't drink milk while watching)

Yet Another Reason to Hate Your English Teachers

January 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I hated school.

But I loathed my English teachers.

They were boring, completely unengaging, but the primary reason I loathed them was that they were inconsistent. I could always ace my math classes, but nope, not English.

I didn't diagram the sentence correctly.

I forgot what the dangling participle was.

I used "their" when it should have been "there."

Forgot my last name.

Or I just didn't write "good."

It seemed to me they would do it on purpose, some of them favoring girls over boys, and while I could never prove either, in my core of cores I knew they were at least unfair and dishonest people.

Of course, as I've gotten older I've realized them for what they were - the laziest of the lazy of education majors. Primarily women who didn't give a rip about children or have a passion for literature, as much as they did a selfish and lazy ego that only wanted an easy job and the "faux" sense they were actually professionals at something.

Oh sure, that may sound harsh, but it's true. They were hacks. They were frauds. There wasn't one English teacher that inspired anybody in my school to read, and had no problems holding 30 kids at a time hostage for 8 hours a day for 13 years all so they could get a pension for 75% work. And for that I will today and into forever expose, rip apart, and humiliate English teachers for the vermin they are.

I'll point out a kid who flunked out of 7th grade English has more fame as an author than they ever did.
I'll point out they could only read what they could never write.
I'll point out they never "changed the lives" of a single student.
I'll point out the entire professional life they dedicated themselves to in literature only got their pictures in yearbooks and that is the ONLY piece of memorable "literature" the universe will ever remember them for.

But it came to my attention quite recently of another crime they committed. I couldn't believe it because of just what a bad taste they left in my mouth, but they still managed to get one last sting in.

They ruined reading and literature for me and hundreds of millions of people.

I always thought I hated reading. It was inefficient, it was boring, there was plenty of other things to do. The ONLY books I ever read were the "High King" pentalogy by Lloyd Alexander. Ever since then the only books I ever read were textbooks or terabytes of economic reports. In the meantime, for the past 30 years, I'd rather eat chalk than read.

But then something funny happened after I finished Bachelor Pad Economics. With the new-found free time I didn't go on a video game playing binge like I promised I would. I didn't go and watch the entire Charlie Brown cartoon series. And I didn't watch all the spaghetti westerns I said I was going to watch.

No, I kept going back and reading blogs, and even reading books people had sent me.
And it literally hit me last week.

Shit, I like reading.

Not the crap they tried to force down my throat in the 80's.
Not the crap my liberal arts prereq profs made me trudge through.

But if I was given a choice in following my interests and reading what I wanted, reading was actually quite enjoyable. So enjoyable that I got more mental stimulation from reading than playing Battlefield Bad Company. This then behooved the question, what did I miss out on? What other books or authors would I have thoroughly enjoyed? Not that I didn't enjoy playing the Final Fantasy series or hiking mountains, but if I was allowed to read what I wanted I could at least understand what Aurini and Molyneux were saying half the time!

So touche, English teachers. Touche. You made life miserable for millions of children. Probably scarred a couple young boys along the way. Unnecessarily cost us some GPA points. And your coup d' etat was ruining literature for us well into our adult lives. But once no longer in the education system and under your auspices, we will slowly and surely wake up and realize reading doesn't have to be the pain you made it be. And while in a vengeful way I'd love to look you guys up to see if you've ever amounted to anything in the literary world, unfortunately I can't remember your names. You were like all other English teachers - immemorable and unnoteworthy.

The Clarey Test

January 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me a bit of bravado, but hear me out at the same time as I think this will have some practical use in the political world.

It is now practically a daily event we are confronted with some elitist dumbass that thinks they're smarter than everybody else and is therefore entitled to be a tyrant telling us what or do. It could be a media personality, a professor, a politician, but you know the type I'm talking about. People who who are such ego-maniacs they think they have the right to butt into our business and tell us what to do.

Now I have a nose for them, and over time developed kind of a litmus test of sorts. I test my hunches by taking a gander and asking my readers to research somebody I link to, whose profile I haven't seen, to see if they have a worthless degree, have a trust fund, and in general fit the profile. But it gets tiring for me to ask, "OK lieutenants, anybody want to guess their degree, whether they live off of mommy and daddy, never worked a real job, etc. etc?" So instead I'd like to codify it and simplify it by creating "The Clarey Test."

The Clarey Test is simple. It's a scale of 0-4, 0 being a "fail" and they are not the leftist, crusaderist, socialist, tyrant scum I think they are, and 4 being a full-blown, ego-maniac narcissist that views other people on the planet as serfs that should serve them, and consequently confirms my suspicions. There are four categories or "traits" for which the subject can get one point (with me kicking around some degree of allowing for half points or fraction of points).

Worthless Degree
No significant private sector experience
Currently working in government, academia, non-profit or some other such industry (bar military or cops)
Hail from rich or well-to-do parents

So President Barack Obama would score thusly:

Worthless Degree - 1
No private sector experience - 1
Currently in government - 1
Hail from rich/well to do parents - 1

Total score = 4 = pass

Haley Koch

Worthless Degree - 1
No private sector experience - 1
Currently in government - 1
Hail from rich well to do - 1

Total score = 4 = pass

Matt Forney

Worthless degree - 1
No private sector experience - 0
Currently in government - 0
Hail from rich well to do - 0

Total score = 1 = fail

You get the idea.

Now I'm more than open to any ideas, recommendations, and changes, but the larger point would be to come up with a numerical score or just use the test as a label. If it ever gains traction you could literally say, "Oh yeah, I heard that Joe Schmoe wants to provide more money for single mothers by raising property taxes, looking into his background and he totally passed the Clarey test. 3.9!"

So let's give it a trial run shall we? How about we score up Dr. Kirk J. Schneider.

I'm going to go with 2.0 (keeping in mind I haven't looked him up, just read Dr. Helen's post on him).

Tuesday Night Linkage…Um…Again

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Monday's night linkage was called "Tuesday Night's Linkage," as I am really having a problem telling what day it is. The lack of a 9-5 job these past 18 months has REALLY thrown me off, and I'm not joking. I didn't ajust my watch after the battery went dead, and I'm too lazy to look at my cell phone, so 6 our of 7 days I'm clueless. If the girlfriend didn't go to work, I would have no idea what day it is. Anyway, Tuesday Night's Linkage...again:

Yeah, have fun marrying those "good, obedient" Christian girls.

Hawaiian Libertarian learns the economics really is a faux science.

Danny explains how government works for those never in public office.

The gayest video ever and proof liberal arts majors are ugly. Rip the comment section apart.

And hey, don't forget the aggregators:

Delusion Damage
Vivalamanosphere
Articles for Men

The Economics of Reparations

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Two compelling arguments that (if anybody cares to be intellectually honest about) proves reparations is merely another form of slavery.

Coming to Vegas

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy all!

Heading to Vegas on the 22nd. Have to speak at a seminar, but should have nights available. Already having some lieutenants and agents in the field showing up, so shoot the ole Captain an e-mail if you want to hang out!

Cappy

Why Girls Like Vladimir Putin

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Is he for individual rights, uncorrupted democracy, clean government, and against crony capitalism?

Probably not.

But that has nothing to do with him being the ultimate bad boy.

Dr. Kirk J. Schneider's Psikhushka

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First read this (if you haven't already)

Ok, now you can continue.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
PRESS CONTACT

An Economist diagnoses Dr. Kirk J. Schneider-and other faux psychologists threatening our world. In "Liberal Talentless Academian Hacks Who Use Psychology to Criminalize People They Politically Disagree With," Aaron Clarey, SAEG., calls for a new and deeper psychological understanding of the potential threat of biased psychologists who like the Soviets, use trumped up, fabricated mental diseases to lay the groundwork to institutionalize political enemies.

It's easy for people with real jobs to snicker at the fake psychological profession and nefariousness of the likes of Dr. Kirk J. Schneider, but economist Aaron Clarey says that we dismiss or diminish groups like this at our own peril. Clarey, the author of "WORTHLESS," "BACHELOR PAD ECONOMICS" and other books that don't suck like academian pablum, has done an exhaustive study of worthless humanities types throughout history and he says it's time for us to look more seriously at what he calls "unchallenged, unchecked, elitist academians." In "I DON'T LIKE MATH, WHERE'S MY GOVERNMENT JOB," Aaron Clarey, SAEG., calls for a new and deeper psychological understanding of our greatest political and social threats and the political operatives posing as legitimate psychologists who drive them.

"You can see a blatant disregard for personal and economic freedom, as well as an obvious leftist bias at work in virtually all of academia from Nazi Germany to Maoist China to our very own Democratic Party. In fact, it is the pervasive malady of the Hippie Generation," says Clarey.

How does the Kirk J. Scheider fit in? Many people don't want to work hard in life and so they choose and easy major. They tend to be from well to do families who can afford to bail their children out from worthless degrees. They often end up in the most productionless sectors of the economy - government, non-profits and academia clamoring for other people's money. They resent anybody who works hard, achieves excellence and reminds them of their own mediocrity. And it's not just envy and insecurity that drives them. It's also the ego that leads them to a "crusaderist" mentality and their desire to foist their political opinions on other people's lives. "I think many in this movement are embittered over the freedom and happiness of others. They look at the amazing track record of capitalism and the US, which just doesn't jibe with their socialist ideology, and they feel the need to criminalize individualism, freedom, private property in anyway possible, even if it means throwing in normal everyday Americans with Nazi's and Communists," says Clarey.

Although you won't find "polarized mind" in any official diagnostic manual, for Clarey it's crucial that the psychological community wake the fuck up and start screening its ranks to ensure the profession isn't abused by tyrants as a political weapon. "When we think of mental illness, we think genuine victims of mental illness that need help, not a political group expressing their 1st Amendment Rights," says Clarey. Look, for example, at some of the traits of narcissistic personality disorder or psychopathy: A callous disregard for the feelings of others, the reckless disregard for the safety of others, a sense of entitlement, arrogance, a grandiose sense of self-importance. These traits are readily seen in academia, the liberal arts, the humanities, and professors that ~~screw their students over for tuition~~ populate the field.

"No one can or should deny the veracity of therapy and psychological help, but to overlook or dismiss the potential threat Kirk J. Schneider is obviously telepathing, one that would associate political-dissent and free-speech with a psychological condition, is the most surefire way of bringing Psikhushkas here to the US," says Clarey. "Recognizing and exposing this vile and thinly-veiled evil when we see it is the first step."

Uh Oh! You're Going to Be Referenced in a College Paper!

January 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A funny thing is happening, but it is a testament to how much those little collegiate kiddies are getting brainwashed in school instead of receiving an actual education. It's happened to me three times, Matt Forney once, and I believe a handful of other people who don't come to mind right now:

A college student reads/views/hears something you said on teh interwebz and goes out of their way to inform you in a snarky tone that they are going to cite you for their college paper as an example of "facism" or "racism" or "narcissism" or blabbity blah blah blah!!!!!

GASP!!!!

Ha! Take that mean, adult who lives in the real world and says things that hurt my feeeeelingssssss! I'll show you!

Oh horror of horrors.

You're going to be "cited" in not a college term paper not any genuine academic research not any kind of professional academic journal

but some freshman comp or psych 101 paper or presentation by 19 year old Twiddly McGoo.

I think you can sleep soundly tonight.

Humor aside, yes it's childish, it's cute, and it's entertaining, but the only reason I bring it up is because it's something I think that will become a trend. Realize you have little leftist ego-maniacs who think they know how the real world works and are (of course) super intelligent and educated just because they passed the 12th grade. They are now in "college" and their leftist crusaderism is only reinforced by their professors. They do some googling for a paper on "racism/sexism/etc." and because of the alt-right's increasing presence, we come up #1 on google. Boom! They have a cornucopia of material they can use in the Hate Malecapitalismfreedomprofitlibertyamerica Studies class. But they just can't use it. No their egos are too big for that. They need to inform you of what they're doing. And thus why you'll get an e-mail or post or something informing you how you will be the center of ridicule in some class in some college some place.

In any case I find it bemusingly adorable, but still wanted to let you all know what I'm seeing popping up on my radar so when/if it happens to you, you can pat the little tykes on the head.

Wednesday Linkage

January 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If liberals and lefties are so smart and so independent minded, then why do act so helpless against corporate advertising?

I never once believer Jennifer Aniston was talking directly to me whilst seeing her on TV or in a movie. I guess I'm not a teenage girl afterall.

God, "The Economist" really has gone to shit.

Divorce Corp! Why would you let the government into your life like that?

The father could not be reached for comment.

Make a leftist's head explode by having them watch this short video.

Step #7 is the hardest one.

The next installment of Bachelor Pad Theater.

The MGTOW Forum Joins the Bachelor Pad

January 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And they brought beer! Alright!

Boys, NEVER Donate Sperm

January 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Never ever ever ever.

Stay frosty boys. Stay the freak frosty.

(Also note the judge was a female)

When "The Economist" Jumped the Shark

January 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yeah, sorry, "The Economist" is really nothing more than a fractional rag of its former self.

Judge Sharron Norton Rewards the Scum of Australia, Rachel Gardener

January 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

1. 36 year old "art student."
2. Freeloading on the train and not paying her ticket
3. Gets awarded $250,000 from what I'm speculating is a feminist judge that cares more about feminism than justice.

Here's what the taxpayer of Oz is supporting now...more than they were before I mean:

Enjoy the decline Oz!

"Bachelor Pad Economics" Won "Best of Canada" Award!

January 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Happy day lieutenants and economists!!! "Bachelor Pad Economics" won the "Best Book in Money Management" for the Best Finance Awards in Canada!

Spread the mirth and the joy!

You can purchase Bachelor Pad Economics here for Canadians and here for United State-ians.

How to Test for Counterfeit Silver

January 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A very simple, but important lesson fellow economists!

The Captain Now Accepts Bitcoin

January 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The ole Captain accepts bitcoin. You can make donations or purchase any of my wares for the going market rate of bitcoin.

Here is the image address to my bitcoin account

Here is the text address to my bitcoin account.

19M33dGW25DfVxEmDb9WMXW3tAC94MZ9en

Donations are of course welcome.

Caitlin Dewey

January 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First, somebody get me a score for Caitlin Dewey on "The Clarey Test."

Second, let's commence.

Caitlin, and I'm going to be completely stereotyping and prejudgemental based on her photo, is a typical 20 something American woman who has swallowed whole the leftist, feminist indoctrination that is she incapable of seeing things from a male point of view. She also further confirms that she is a stack of cards of the MSM because she has only twice the followers I do on Twitter, BUT also has the advantage of large MSM outlet.

Again, I ask, "how serious or legit is the MSM when they employ people who are only marginally more popular than I am, and let them write articles on their platform?"

Anyway, she happened upon the Manosphere, found things revolting (or at least contrary to her feminist-centric brainwashing) and felt compelled to go on a rant here.

Girl meets male world.

I love articles like this because it shows just how much they've kept young women in an echo chamber. Girl grows up used to the media hype and political indoctrination of how men "should" behave, but once those men no longer have jobs, careers, or futures, and start exposing their real selves,

SHOCK!
APPALLED!
DISGUST!!!
HOW DARE THEY!!!

Sorry, sweetheart. This is how men are.

There is no further analysis required because, frankly, Caitlin's commentary is not deep nor though provoking. It is just another datapoint. Another anecdote. Another case study.

She's just another girl in the same ole boring MSM that is carrying the 60's hippie's leftist torch who is paid squat

and has less notoriety and fame than her internet counterparts.

The real story is why is Roosh and Matt Forney are making a living, simply being men, while Caitlin needs the entire power of the MSM and backing thereof to even make it on my radar today?

And yes, this will probably be the peak of her fame - me and other manospherians using her as a prop to advance our legitimate journalism. If anybody hears of Ms. Dewey again, in any serious manner, I'd be surprised.

Sunday Night Linkage

January 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Liberal logic - just barf our random words and put at the end "for the children."

Fatherz in da Hood. Aka "Fatherzhood"

DIE, MSM!!! DIE!!!!!!!! (Which means "the, MSM. The.")

Aurini spews his normal low-IQ, non-thinking, bland thoughts. Also, Aurini's latest podcast.

From our Muslim Agent in the Field - "We can't do the maths because the evils menz are keeping us down with the social barrierz. The maths wouldn't be so hard if it weren't for those evils menz!"

Latest episode of "Bachelor Pad Theater."

Newest Episode of The Clarey Podcast

January 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In this latest episode the Captain talks about how the younger generation deserves what it gets and how their ego's override reality...to their detriment.

How the word "excuse" was turned into a dirty word by the Baby Boomers.

He also talks about how women watch the dumbest shit on television, only to be outdone by men who watch "post post pre post" game shows. Still, women beat men in the volume of dumb TV they watch.

He then also delves into how there's a wave of feminist judges entering the legal system that care more about socialism and feminism than meting out justice.

AND MORE!

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Why You Should Stay in the Military

January 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For our boys and girls in the armed services.

Monday Night Linkage

January 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I like this post because there are some elements I agree with. Like celebrating "accomplishments" that billions of people have achieved for thousands of years in the past. But then there is the anger of "how dare women stay at home and raise their chlidren!!! BECOME A LAWYER DAMNIT!"

Again, the traditional "Aunt Bea" type grandmother will become extinct. Sigh....I miss real grandmothers.

Lie on your resume. Lie lie lie.

No, Bonnie Morris, you don't produce anything of value for society.

I'd care about the younger generations, if they didn't purposely vote to screw themselves over.

Remember what I said about worthless, leftists using their lack of talent to steal taxpayer monies so they can play "fake artist?" Well, here's the quality of art today kids.

Don't worry. With your help or without it, it will burn to the ground. Every empire does.

How the Federal Reserve is Jesus Christ

January 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

With the 2013 fiscal year closed I was intending on doing a full financial analysis of the Federal Reserve. And so, whilst working a 12 hour dog shift, I spent the better part of two hours pouring over the Federal Reserve's balance sheets from roughly 2009 to FYE 2013. I was going to post my analysis, detailed and glorious here, but then something dawned on me.

A full-fledge analysis of the balance sheet of the Federal Reserve would prove boring.

And so I thought a Thug Notes version of it would suffice and make more sense to regular people.

But before we delve into the details we need to understand two things:

1. Some basics about the Fed
2. and the economic backdrop

This will allow us to see the points I'm trying to make and hopefully we can all walk away with some important economic lessons.

First, the Fed.

The Fed is not a government entity, but rather a privately owned "non-profit" that was originally created to "back up" or "insure" the US' banking system. Banks deposit money with the Fed for "safe keeping," and the Fed in turn "guarantees" them against bank failures, panics, and the like. The stated intention of this is to make the banking system sound so panics or runs on the banks do not grind our financial system to a halt, thus preventing an even more severe recession from occurring.

To ultimately back up the financial system, however, the Fed must be in charge of monetary policy. Specifically, it must have the ability to print as much money as needed to make good on its promise in case an a financial "Armageddon"occurs. Economists at the Fed presumably (and I even question that) know they cannot just "print off more money" so they do not resort to this unless they absolutely have to. And so the majority of Federal Reserve action hovers around changing the "interest rate," the sale or purchase of US Treasuries, the reserve requirement ratio and other "tools" is uses as a means to PRIMARILY CONTROL INFLATION.

This is how it's "supposed to work."

Second, the economic backdrop.

That "financial Armageddon" I told you about? Yeah, well that was more of less what happened in 2007-2009. So drastic and so large were the mistakes made by our banks and financial institutions that we entered (and in my opinion, have yet to leave) the largest recession since The Great Depression. Because the economic crisis revolved around our financial system, this then tested the effectiveness of the Federal Reserve as the ultimate guarantor of our banking system. However, so severe were the financial problems of our financial system, the demands for borrowing money from the Fed outstripped what it had available to lend.

This created a unique situation for the Federal Reserve. Instead of merely being the guardian against inflation and a insurer of the banking system, it ended up having to literally bail out the financial system. You can see the trillion dollar "TARP" bailout in the "mortgage backed securities" account of the Federal Reserve in 2008-2009

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS
COMBINED STATEMENTS OF CONDITION
As of December 31, 2009 and December 31, 2008
(in millions)

	2009	2008
ASSETS
Gold certificates	$ 11,167	$ 11,167
Special drawing rights certificates	5,200	2,200
Coin	2,063	1,688
Items in process of collection	507	979
Prepaid interest on Federal Reserve notes	-	2,425
Loans to depository institutions	95,598	544,019
Other loans, net (of which 588,105 million is measured at fair value as of December 31, 2009)	96,433	120,062
System Open Market Account:
Securities purchased under agreements to resell	-	85,000
Treasury securities, net	823,592	476,449
Government-sponsored enterprise debt securities, net	169,262	20,760
Federal agency and government-sponsored enterprise mortgage-backed securities, net	[illegible]	-
Investments denominated in foreign currencies	24,272	24,164
Central bank liquidity swaps	553,272	553,728
Other investments	5	-
Consolidated variable interest entities:
Investments held in consolidated variable interest entities (of which $[illegible] million and $[illegible] million is measured at fair value as of December 31, 2009 and 2008, respectively)	81,580	[illegible]
Preferred securities	35,186	-
Accrued interest receivable	12,941	7,389
Bank premises and equipment, net	2,604	2,512
Other assets	698	639
Total assets	$ 2,243,547	$ 2,245,728

This is an important point to make, because the Fed was no longer just a "central bank" that was there to play the traditional role of "lender of last resort," but was now an entity or "fund" by which to shore up and bail out the entire banking system. And the changing "assets" the Fed listed on its balance sheet proves it.

But after 2009 things "settled down." And despite the US being the primary instigator of the world wide financial crisis, most other countries were doing the exact same thing. Property bubbles, excessive lending, ginormous government debts, etc. And therefore, because everybody else was doing it, the US looked better in RELATIVE TERMS. All countries were going to hell in a handbasket, but the US was "the best looking horse in the glue factory."

This bought us some time. China, Europe, Japan, and the Middle East all wanted to buy US treasuries because of the presumed "safety" those investments provided. THe US was "the US" after all! And just like Superman, we never fail, because we're Americans! We always win! Why? Because we're Americans! And the US never fails! (just ask Sean Hannity).

This "perceived safety" allowed one Barack Hussein Obama, a democratic senate, and a balless, spineless, pussified republican house to run MASSIVE federal deficits to pursue a Keynesian wet dream of fiscal stimulus spending. Obama phones, free money, extended unemployment, Obamacare, you name it, it was approved. However, economic growth did not "obey" like it should have and has since remained stagnant hurting the feelings of Paul Krugman and the like.

Without economic growth, however, debts cannot be repaid, and our creditors took note of this, namely China and Japan. These foreign creditors stopped lending us money which now foisted a third role on the Federal Reserve -

Financier for the US federal government.

And thus my concern for the FYE of 2013.

From 2012 to 2013 you can see that the Federal Reserve now had to essentially bail out the US government. It lent the Federal government an additional $514 billion dollars that the Chinese wouldn't. Worse still, the Fed purchased another $564 billion in mortgage backed securities.

Factors Affecting Reserve Balances of Depository Institutions and Condition Statement of Federal Reserve Banks

1. Factors Affecting Reserve Balances of Depository Institutions

Millions of dollars

Reserve Bank credit, related items, and reserve balances of depository institutions at Federal Reserve Banks	Averages of daily figures
	Week ended Jan 22, 2014	Change from week ended Jan 15, 2014	Change from week ended Jan 23, 2013
Reserve Bank credit	4,045,116	+ 37,733	+1,095,876
Securities held outright[1]	3,815,952	+ 37,045	+1,077,874
U.S. Treasury securities	2,228,046	+ 11,167	+ 534,211
Bills[2]	0	0	0
Notes and bonds, nominal[2]	2,122,020	+ 10,319	+ 513,798
Notes and bonds, inflation-indexed[2]	92,615	+ 883	+ 17,677
Inflation compensation[3]	13,410	- 36	+ 2,735
Federal agency debt securities[2]	54,911	- 639	- 20,200
Mortgage-backed securities[4]	1,532,995	+ 26,517	+ 563,863
Unamortized premiums on securities held outright[5]	209,059	+ 389	+ 33,757
Unamortized discounts on securities held outright[5]	-13,328	- 494	- 11,711
Repurchase agreements[6]	0	0	- 466

But what makes matters worse is that this is just the change from 2012 to 2013. Since 2010 the federal government debt the Federal Reserve has purchased has gone from $1.1 trillion to the $2.23 trillion it is today.

So what does this mean in every day normal person's language?

It means the Federal Reserve is the modern day financial incarnation of Jesus Christ.

Oh, laugh if you will but hear me out.

Listen or read through the lyrics "Christ the Lamb of God." I know it by heart because it was jammed down my throat by Nazi's using a church called "The Wisconsin Synod" as a front:

Oh Christ the Lamb of God, you taketh away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us.
Oh Christ the Lamb of God, you who take away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us.
Oh Christ the Lamb of God, you who take away the sins of the world, grant us peace.

How precisely is that any different than what the Fed does for the American people? All you have to do is tweak some words:

Oh Greenspan the Chair of the Fed, you bail out the scumbag bankers of the world. Giiiiive them more moooooonnnneeeeey.
Oh Bernanke the Chair of the Fed, you make sure people don't have to pay for their mortgage. We can't do maaaaaaath.
Oh Yellen the Chair of the Fed, continue to finance Obama's bribery of the voters. Give us Obaaaaaaama phones.

And you know it's true because of the forever changing balancesheet of the Fed that is outside of what it was originally chartered to do.

Bailing out the financial sins of bankers.
Bailing out the financial sins of people who spent more than they could afford.
Bailing out the financial sins of the parasitic classes that rely on government spending.

And does anybody want to bet me on whether or not student loans will make it to the asset side of the Fed's balancesheet within 5 years?

In short, since we can't get those Chinese and Japanese ~~suckers~~ "investors" to ~~give~~ "lend" us anymore money, we now have to rely on the Fed to finance/forgive/pay for our sins.

And it will.

Just pay close attention to the "liabilities" side of the balancesheet in coming years to see how it does that.
And then don't complain when the Fed finally says, "It is finished" when hyperinflation sets in.

Tuesday Night Linkage

January 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Irony...the women who would make the best leaders sit down, think things through, and realize that becoming a "high powered lawyer" may not make them happy.

Bitcoin is for betas. (though I am still generally Pro-Bitcoin)

What housing bubble?

Wow, imagine if you let kids be kids.

From our Military Agent in the Field about whether you should join the military.

DIE MCMANSION!!!, DIE!!!!!!!

Why Justine Bateman is a Real Role Model for Women

January 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Justine Bateman of "Family Ties" fame has decided at the age of 47 to go back to college.

For what, you may ask, knowing full well celebrities always take the easy way out.

Computer science.

My jaw dropped when I saw it, but, yes, there is a woman out there who gets it, understands how the labor market works and instead of going the whinny, "the world owes me a living" route, manned up, mathed up, and is now pursuing a legitimate field.

The reason I bring up Ms. Bateman, however, is not just to give her kudos, but rather point out to all the young ladies out there who are brainwashed by their parents, their teachers, their counselors, the media, and the state to go and waste their youth (not to mention money) majoring in the worthless liberal arts. The problem, I have however, is overcoming the emotional reaction I get from women (and men) when I try to convey the simplest of economic truths about humanities degrees. When I tell them it isn't worth the time or money, or that the degree is worthless, women especially, get emotional, some going so far as to spew vitriol and hatred, for me daring to suggest they look into the ROI of such an investment (and yes, I've even gotten death threats over my book "Worthless.")

Going forward my efforts and blogging will be dedicated in part towards figuring out this psychological problem/hurdle. In the meantime I hope highlighting the likes of Ms. Bateman will convince young women to make a genuine investment in their futures and not merely a transfer of wealth to their professors.

30 Days to X Joins the Bachelor Pad!

January 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You should join the pad too!

"Don't Do Drugs, Stay Out of School"

January 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

One day, whilst splitting wood, I was listening to Stefan Molyneux's podcast. He had on one Laurette Lynn and they were talking about her book "Don't Do Drugs, Stay Out of School." I was naturally hooked because I knew, deep in the deepest of my soul, that most of my K-12 education was anything but, and was likely a scam I could never put my fingers on. Now, in hindsight, i realized it was just a racket for talentless people posing as "teachers," abusing children to extract resources from the private sector.

And no, that's not hyperbole.
And no, that's not rhetoric.

It's the truth.

School was a god damned prison and a miserable experience for myself and the majority of other children.

So when Laurette and Stefan were talking I thought it would be preacher to the choir. However, it wasn't just preaching to the choir, it was them (specifically Laurette) opening my mind to greater heights to see just what was going on, and just what a disgusting epitome of evil our education system has become.

Naturally, this prompted me to purchase her book, which I read on the flights to and back from Vegas.

"Don't Do Drugs, Stay Out of School" is a combination manifesto, ultimatum, and plan. It is a screed against the current educational system. It delivers an ultimatum to parents to actually PARENT and educate their own children instead of outsource them to the state. And it finally is a plan on how to homeschool your own children.

Some of it was stuff I already knew (because of my visceral hatred for school), but it was really eye opening on two levels. One, it made me realize just how few parents actually love their children. They'd rather pursue a career and dump their kids off at what is REALLY a mental prison. Stefan Molyneux said it best - if you dump your kids in daycare/school so you can pursue a career, that is no different than cheating on them as you are depirving them an upbringing. And two, just how unnecessary public schools are. You DON'T need two incomes. You DON'T need to send your kids to school. And you SHOULD have one parent (oh I don't know) ACTUALLY RAISE THE FUCKING KID WHICH INCLUDES EDUCATING THEM!

You throw in the savings of day care, afterschool activities, and the resultant familial stability that doesn't result in psyschiatrist bills or divorce lawyers, and (who knew!) the nuclear family with a parent at home can beat most government ordained familial structures.

About the only two complaints I would have about the book is that

1. It was repetitive in its intent on proving the public schools are bad
2. The last quarter was a bit idealistic on setting up voluntary communes to home school kids.

Both criticisms are largely due to my personal situation. You don't need to convince me about the despicability of public schools, but you DO need to convince otherwise brainwashed-parents who don't know any better. Also, I have no children, so I have no vested interest in how a utopian home-schooling system would work.

In short, this is not a book for minimalist bachelors who hated school in their youth (though it is therapeutic).

IT IS, however, A MANDATORY book for any mother or father who are genuinely concerned about the education and futures of their children.

Your kids are going to grow up fast. And if you want to have them spend more time with their daycare provider and government teachers than you during their formative years as you pursue a social work career raising other people's kids, then by all means. But if you actually love your kids and want what's best for them, then I suggest buying Ms. Lynn's book.

The Two Mandatory Part Time Jobs All Men Must Have

January 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Lifting weight

and Entrepreneurism

Neither are optional.

GET ON IT!

Putting the Podcast on Youtube

January 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Help the Captain out Lieutenants,

I've received requests to put the podcast on Youtube, which I don't quite understand. Figured podcasting is audio which means you can take it anywhere and do anything while listening to it. But if you put it in video format, what's the advantage?

Anyway, here's the latest podcast on youtube. If somebody could explain the advantage I'll upload the podcasts to youtube regularly.

Thanks,

Cappy

The Unspoken Efficiency Loss of Keynesianism

January 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As I age I find Keynesianism, and by extension, the entire field of economics, a progressively childish, idiotic, and naive discipline. It's not difficult. It's not hard. And only academics and ulteriorly-motivated bankers would try to make the field more complicated than it is to either bloat their egos or just outright steal money. And so, much like I tire of criticizing childish ideologies like socialism, global warming, or religion, I also get tired of arguing the merits or drawbacks of different economic theories because, frankly, nobody really cares about economics as much as they care about defending their fiefdom from reality or truth.

But if there is one criticism I've yet to make of Keynesian economic ~~philosophy~~ idiocy, it's the efficiency loss.

"Efficiency loss?" you might ask.

Yes, efficiency loss.

The whole underpinning argument of Keynesianism is that the government needs to intervene when "aggregate demand" is not meeting aggregate supply. And while Keynes advocated things that worked on the stimulus side (tax cuts), he also advocated boosting government spending with a magical "multiplier" effect. Take money from one person (ie - rich), give it to another person (ie - poor), and that poor person will spend that money which will boost aggregate demand, as well as set forth a chain reaction of demand-fueled spending with that multiplier effect all Keynesians swoon over.

The common response to this fallacy is that merely taking money from one individual and giving it to another does not increase aggregate demand. You stole money from one person who now has to spend less, which would negate any demand increase caused by this wealth transfer. Keynesians would argue that "well if we borrowed it, instead of taxed people, then everybody would spend more and this wouldn't happen!" Wrong again, because in borrowing that money, that is less money that can be lent out and invested, once again having no effect on overall demand.

But there is an often overlooked drawback to Keynesianism, specifically giving people money in the form of welfare, wealth transfers, etc., that nobody addresses. And that is the fact when you give somebody money for free, that is lost labor or production that should have happened.

For example for people like you and me and other real adults, if we want to get money we need to produce something of value to get it. This could be fixing cars, producing cell phones, or doing somebody's taxes. Whatever it is, it increases economic production, genuinely increases our standards of living, and results in a richer society. But with Keynesianism, especially of the Obama socialist variety, millions of people get trillions of dollars in exchange for absolutely jack. This "efficiency loss" is the true weakness or criticism of Keynesianism because you basically blew $1 trillion for nothing in exchange. This "cycle" or "rotation" of spending WITHOUT A COMMENSURATE LEVEL OF PRODUCTION OF GOODS AND SERVICES not only results in no economic growth, but dilutes the purchasing power of the currency.

Don't believe me?

OK, consider this.

Let's say everybody who collects a government check could not do so without first working on some kind of public works project at a pro-rated rate of the median wage to earn that check. Working on the highways, fixing street lights, cleaning up the road, etc. Do you have any idea how impeccably clean and mint our highway system would be? Or instead said welfare recipients were required to work at the local GM plant (it's government motors after all) doing whatever odd and non-specialized chores the mechanics and assemblers didn't want to do. Could you imagine how cheap GM cars would be?

The point is whether it was a public work or some kind of private company, society would benefit from requiring recipients of government checks to produce at least SOMETHING of value in exchange for the money. Today we literally piss away about $2 trillion a year and get nothing in exchange. Were there no such thing as welfare, production would be on the other side of that money, resulting in genuine economic growth, genuine economic production, and genuine prosperity.

Of course, I'm being foolish and naive criticizing this aspect of Keynesianism from an intellectually honest and economic standpoint. I know it is nothing more than bribing the parasitic classes to vote for the socialists. I know about half the population couldn't give two shits less about the future of the economy or the country. And I know that about half the population has no moral qualms about being the parasites they are.

I'm just making the economic argument against this aspect of Keynesian economics in the vain hopes the Keynesians would have a cup of STFU, and to show just how stupid Nancy Pelosi and Barack Obama are when they say government checks are the best thing for the economy.

The Epitome of Loser

January 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

From my twitter feed:

LMAO what a looser @aaron_clarey @tomleykis pic.twitter.com/nVS6k21sjr

Reply Retweet Favorite ••• More

Is Occupy Wall Street even going on still? Regardless, I am having warm schadenfreude fuzzies over this one. Just imagine, friends, what his/her (I can't tell) life is like. Just imagine every day the mental havoc the real world is wreaking on this poor individual's deluded view of the world.

Wednesday Night Linkage

January 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

How sad is it we're happy with a 3% dividend yield? Nope, no bubble here!

My hatred of teachers is justified.

Your career, your education, and you are more important than your child. Your child is there to serve you and satiate your biological clock. It is to be spat out and then jettisoned to the local state financed child care facilities immediately where it will be programmed to vote for glorious socialism and the destruction of the family. You will obey. You will conform. You will "go girl."

It's not easy being a manly Christian.

A legitimate criticism against keyboard-jockeying. Again, The Manosphere is not an academic department at a university where you theorize. It is meant to be a tradeschool where you get in, get your education, and get out and apply it to the real world. Pontificating and theorizing 100% of the time behind a computer screen is not helpful.

Good thing you weren't college material!

And the "Bad Dad Award" goes to Joe Wethington for blaming his mistakes on companies!

You bleeping idiots can't even predict weather 3 months into the future. The only people dumber than you are the fucking idiots who actually believe you know what you're talking about with this global warming scam.

The importance of "unlearning."

Mongoloid, Negro, Oriental, 1980's Words

January 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I cannot claim the original observation of this as it was Stefan Molyneux that did, but in one of his podcasts he adamant insisted on referring to mentally impaired people as retarded. He validated this preference because he said it was the 5th reincarnation of the noun used to politely refer to retards. First it was mongoloids (I had to look it up) then it was retards, and now it's mentally impaired.

The same eggshell-mine-laying has occurred in other groups of American people.

When I was being brought up "black" was a perfectly acceptable way to refer to blacks. Just as "whites" are still a perfectly acceptable way to refer to "whites." But then the effeminate, pansy, thin-skinned, professional-victim groups got in and turned it to "negro." Mullato (for half white, half black), to "African American."

Even the Asians are getting in on the deal. I lived a block away from a hotel called the "Occidental." Not until I looked that word up did I realize it simply meant "westerner." So "oriental" means "easterner."

Talk to any college "educated" Asian today and they're brainwashed to think "oriental" is a racial term.

So here is what I want to convey to all the groups of all the peoples of all the races of all the victim classes.

Go

Fuck

Yourselves.

I'm done.

And not only am I done, I think most white males or the "non-victim/whinny" classes are done.

I look at all my predecessors and all my contemporaries dancing daintily and pansifiedly around the purposely laid-down eggshell mines, kowtowing to your every whimsical and irrelevant wish to "not be offended" and I'm disgusted. Not only am I disgusted with their lack of spine, I'm vomitously repulsed by your cowardice.

Me uttering a descriptive word that was perfectly acceptable 10 years ago that a bunch of commie, socialist, media, academian decided to purposely repurpose for political/victimhood advantage that "now" offends you, seriously,

and I want you to listen

GO FUCK YOURSELF!

i don't care if you're offended.

Because you're not. You really aren't.

You're a cowardly, weak, sad, pathetic individual that hides behinds your (choose one)

race
creed color sex sexual preference,

etc. etc.

that insists on making the rest of the world dance on eggshells so you can constantly play the victim, fake being "oppressed" all to merely provide the weak rationalization to steal other people's money under the bogus pretenses of "oppression" or "discrimination."

And I for one am no longer playing your game or dancing to your tune.

You're black?
Guess what!
I'm calling you black.

You're a retard?
Guess what!
I'm calling you a retard!

You're Asian!
Guess what!
I'm calling you Asian...because (truthfully) "oriental" has more syllables and isn't as efficient.

Now if you take umbrage to this or find it insulting or somehow "oppressive" go file your complaints with the Department of I Don't Give a Shit and wallow in your own self-pity. Perhaps you can find some simpering 25 year old female liberal arts masters candidates that will sympathize with you. Perhaps you can find some pansified, white males constnatly begging for forgiveness for the sin of being born white and male. They're so weak-minded they actually believe they've unintentionally "discriminated" against you with poppycock like "male/white privilege."

In the meantime me and all the real men who will genuinely judge you by your character will continue to use the language we were brought up with and refer to you accordingly.

You are black.
You are oriental.
You are retarded.
You are indian.
You are dames.
You are hispanic.
You are whatever.

If you take offense, then you may want to consider if you hide behind traits you did nothing to earn and use it as an excuse to carry your own weight in society, as opposed to people who don't care how they were born, but instead define themselves by their accomplishments in life.

"It Isn't All About the Money!"

January 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Do you have a humanities majoring friend that is so emotionally invested in their degree they don't realize they're getting screwed? Do they lash out at you if you dare ask about the validity of their choice in degree?

Then show them this quick video and help save them from making a bad mistake.

My Glenn Reynolds Impersonation

January 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ahem.

Hang on. Let me get my Glenn Reynold's voice on here.

COUGH COUGH! WHEEZE WHEEZE!

Ok

Here we go!

"In the mail!"

Whether this endorsement earns Glenn the proceeds by which to afford himself an AR 15 is left to be seen.

It's Never Too Late to Enjoy the Decline

January 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Seriously, your mental health deserves you spending the paltry $15 or whatever it is on "Enjoy the Decline."

You'll thank me for it later.

Thursday Night Linkage

January 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again, the government will marry your daughter. Not the boy who knocked her up.

A pastor has his hand at becoming an economist and it doesn't turn out too shabby. Wintery Knight really is the modern day incarnation of Nicholas Wolfwood.

You pursue your dreams at your own risk. When they don't pay off because your dreams sucked, then don't blame society for not liking your sucky dreams. Ensure your dreams don't suck.

Again, "The Economist" is not what it used to be. It has sold out and become a media whore.

The Democrats always wanted to ass-rape blacks. Somebody tell the blacks if they can pull their lips from the Obamaphone Nipple.

Chief Sustainability Officer

January 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When you are younger or first starting to get into politics, you will logically, but simplistically assume that corporations are generally for free markets and capitalism. They want to maximize profits, so they are for efficiency, excellence, growth, and low taxes. But as you age you start to see corporations for what they really are - shills that will take any advantage they can to increase profits for all those who participate in it. This obviously manifests itself in the form of lobbying where corporations throw off the moral mantle and have no problems essentially costing the American public their freedoms over the long run, if it can profit corporations in the short run.

But there are other ways corporations become the moldable, amoral entities that they are and that is when they lose their spines and just do whatever the government tells them.

For example HR and diversity.

40 years ago corporations could have said, "No, we're not doing this diversity thing. We're hiring the best people, period. And no, we're not creating a whole new department out of cloth to employ women. We don't need 25 year old ditzes screening applicants. We need the bosses and managers screening their own labor." But they didn't. They swallowed it whole because they thought the marketing and PR benefits of seeming like a "kind and caring" corporation would outweigh the costs. Now you have day care centers, flex-schedules, etc., that frankly disproportionately benefit women while foisting additional work and costs on men and childless women in the work place.

Combine this along with the 20 year battle I've had with HR ditzes, and my loyalty to corporations as a political ally has all but vanished. But if there was any glimmer of hope that maybe corporations would have an ounce of sanity, that maybe there are people getting into the upper echelons of corporate management that realize the threat socialism is posing to the west, it was snuffed out with this:

Sustainability As A Core HR Discipline

[illegible]

[illegible]

By Peter Graf, Chief Sustainability Officer, SAP and Anke Dworzapf, Marketing Manager at SuccessFactors, an SAP company

Haven't hugged a tree lately, dear HR leader? Well, you're not alone. According to the "State of Sustainable Business Survey 2013" by BSR, HR is among the least engaged corporate functions when it comes to sustainability. This is surprising because sustainable success has evolved from environmental concerns to a comprehensive strategic challenge.

I couldn't believe it when I heard Joe Soucheray mention it, but yes, fellow economists, lieutenants, agents in the field, corporate America has decayed so much and lost all sense of sanity that it now regularly employs...

"Chief Sustainability Officers."

Naturally, it would fall under the domain of HR as no accounting, engineering, or "real" division within a company would tolerate such tripe. But what is important to learn from this is that corporations are no longer viable long-term solutions to your employment. They aren't sane entities where common sense and logic rule, and a hard working sane individual will succeed. They are increasingly becoming politicized entities that if you work there it would be like working in a psych ward. Worse, it requires that you must play politics, tow the company's "sustainability" line, donate to the United Way, and engage in "Bene Gesserit"-style manipulation to advance.

What this means for you, especially younger people, is that your efforts to find long-term, sane employment are probably better spent looking at smaller companies, self-employment, or companies with a strong, conservative history. You don't want some company that is so large it has HR ditzes screening at the front door, and you CERTAINLY don't want a company that is foolish enough to waste its money on things like a CSR or "sustainability" department. Of course, you could be a soulless sociopath, in which case you'd excel in such an environment! Hell, in 20 years time maybe you could head up the newly formed "Gaia" department. But for the rest of us, it seems the route to a successful career via the traditional large corporation has been closed.

The Fatal Flaw of Feminism

January 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When you value your "career" more than your fellow human being, especially your theoretical husband and children, then you will pay with a squandered life.

Friday Day Linkage

January 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When you outsource child-rearing to the state because you love your career more than your children, this is what happens.

Obama speaks the truth for once, and the left pummels him.

HGH, how to get it, and what it does.

Remember boys, some girls would rather date a terrorist than you.

Crabs in a bucket.

I'm honored to be on the list.

The Extinction of Real Grandmothers

February 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I love my grandmother. She is the epitome of everything a grandmother should be. She is kind, she is nice, she is sweet, she (for some ungodly reason) loves her grandkids. She is also incredibly classy. She worked in investment banking, had martinis, flew to Florida with her friends, and even today schnookers all the old guys at the rummy competitions they have at the senior center. I am very fortunate to have a real grandmother in the Aunt Bea sense and feel guilty for not visiting her as much as I should.

However, I am even more fortunate in another sense. I believe my grandmother is one of the last of her kind.

Understand that feminism has been going strong since the 1960s. And whereas my grandparents hailed from the Greatest Generation, modern day kids' grandparents hail from the hippie generation. And sadly these women have not grown up.

I first noticed this when I visited a cadre of Cappy Cappites down in Raleigh, NC. We went to a jazz club to smoke cigars. Everything was great, very classy club with a good selection of cigars.

Then the music started.

And in came in a cackle of 40-50 something women wearing clothes from their halcyon days during Reagan's first administration that were no longer fashionable and no longer fitting.

I saw these aged women dancing on the floor, getting drunk, dancing with each other, grinding as if they were 21, none of which had rings. And then it dawned on me - these women were my grandmother's age when I was a kid. These women had grandkids.

And in a very Joe Hollenbeck way I said to myself "WHAT THE FUCK!?"

But this was to be expected. After a 40 year regimen of you-go-girlism, feminism, careerism, divorce, and you-can-have-it-all, there was no way these women would turn out to be the refined, elegant and graceful Sophia Loren like grandmothers my generation was blessed with. No, sadly, not only do the kids today get to suffer single mothers, drama, divorce, ritalin, drama, and an otherwise unstable family, even their GRANDPARENTS aren't around to provide that modicum of stability, let alone role modeling.

Regardless, I'm going to go and buy my grandma some chocolates and flowers. I suggest if you have a good one like I got, you do the same.

Post post - found this on my twitter account. What I want you to do is look at the food and the children and tell me that doesn't make you feel like you're in Mayberry and Aunt Bea is cooking for you. That's the type of grandmother I'm talking about.

Girls, Please Stop Mutilating Your Bodies

February 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just a simple request from an old man.

Sunday Linkage

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Oh noes!!!! Bitcoin isn't helping the poor immediately right now OMG! I hate leftists.

My favorite actor has died. Guess I'll have to find a new one. Edward Norton maybe?

I never knew so much about porn as I do now.

Amerika.org Enjoys the Decline, why aren't you!?

It pays to be good looking.

Stewardship

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As a young and completely intellect-deprived child I would thumb through hymnals to find the "oldest" piece of music I could find. Hymnals, if you've paid attention, have the dates of the music when both written (for the lyrics) and composed (for the music). I think the earliest I found was around 800 AD.

Regardless

I also noticed something with the hymnals and brochures they'd hand out at the beginning of every ~~brainwashing~~ sermon. They would list what "season" it was within the church.

"Season" meaning what was the theme or the general purpose of sermons during that particular section of the calender. December was obvious Christmas. Sometime in Spring there was "Easter." Somewhere in there was "lent." But after those major three Christian themes, you had about 10 months to fill. So they would fill them with various over-arching themes and principles. One of which was "stewardship."

"Stewardship" was the excuse pastors needed to guilt trip all those COUGH COUGH WHEEZE WHEEXE

"good"

Christians into actually putting a couple coins in the collection plate. I recall Jesus saying something about "tithing" and 10%, but I guarantee you it's less than 10% of the Christians that actually tithe (you know, because Christianity can be treated like a cafeteria - you only select what you want).

Anyway, obviously people were not contributing what they should, let alone what was needed to keep the church going so the "stewardship" theme would provide the pastor the platform necessary to berate, lecture and loathe (more than normal) the ~~sheeple~~ congregants into forfeiting those precious dollars.

I found it a bit dishonest, a bit underhanded, but hey, that's the Wisconsin Synod, so who cared.

Regardless, I'm going to do a bit of "stewardship" myself. However, I won't call it "stewardship," I'll call it "sponsoring." And unlike the church, this will be a straight up, guilt free, only if it benefits you, does it benefit me, sort of relationship.

I am here to make money.

I provide a service.

People realized I have an audience.

They advertise with me.

I plug their wares.

And if they are of use to you, please kindly buy them.

If they are not.

No hard feelings and CERTAINLY no guilt. Just keep on reading or maybe mention the ole Captain to a friend or two and you umm....won't go to um...."Cappy Cap Hell" (which is a place of fat chicks, socialists, and everybody is a teacher, but nobody produces anything).

So here are the sponsors.

Please visit them and purchase their wares if they are of benefit to you.

Thank you for all your support.

Cappy

NSFW Cappy

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Brilliant.

Lloyds of London Abandons Meritocracy

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sorry, I'll be banking with people who hire the best based on their character and not their plumbing.

Coincidentally, I'd recommend dumping their stock.

Veterans Speak on Why You Should Stay in the Military

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Karl and Cardigan (sounds like a GREAT jazz duo) voice their opinions about the military and whether you should stay in it. Cardigan is also kind enough to mention "Bachelor Pad Economics" (which every man in America should be reading, so including infants...150 million...times the $8 commish...makes me...ummmm....$1.2 billion dollars....so not even close to it).

Anyway, yeah, I'm sure to a 22 year old 4 years in it sucks.

Try the alternative OR at least listen to your 30 something elders who might have perspective.

Name One Problem the Left Has Solved

February 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

One of my better (and more colorful) podcasts.

Other topics include:

Why you should never buy GTAV for 360
Why if blacks listened to this podcast the democrats would never gain political office again
The sad case of indians.
Why it's now perfectly moral to pay other people to do your homework
What Superbowl 48 was the gayest superbowl ever
How younger, hotter, minority women are scaring the crap out of their 30-40 something American counterparts.

Monday Night Linkage

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Bad to be good and good to be bad." Thanks lefties, you've changed the rules.

Belly Dancing is a genuine art that should only be taken seriously. It is not, as some witticists would say, "a 2 day, 2 hour token of cultural diversity for western women to take."

The Captain finally makes it to the Ivy League. They are using my book at a seminar in Princeton. Of course, it was self-published and not under "Wiley Publishing", but I have a feeling I'm going to have to remedy that. The further irony is its for their theological seminary. How fun would it be to guest speak there on "Being a Preachers Kid!?"

Wintery Knight leaves the plantation and starts asking questions only "bad" black men ask.

Have you shown Delusion Damage any love recently?

How the fuck does James Coburn, of all people, have less than 5,000 likes?????? Can we at least double that please????

Hey look! Baby Boomer problems nobody gives a shit about anymore!

Cartels and trusts are good as long as it leftist billionaire Silicon Valley types who do it!

Bill Cosby, I Spy, Season 1, Episode 1

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Flabbergasted.

Absolutely flabbergasted.

Cosby will go down, obviously, as a comedic legend. That much is sure. But if you watch Season 1, Episode 1 of "I Spy" hey may just go down as a patriot and a model for all black men to follow.

Now if you'll excuse me I just found my new favorite show to watch.

Remember, Latest Podcast is Out

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Can be found here.

Archives here.

Why You Can't Criticize Karl Marx

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First, if you have the time, i strongly recommend listening to this podcast by Stefan Molyneux on Karl Marx. If you don't, then allow me to give you the Thug Notes version:

From what superficial studying of Karl Marx as an individual I did, I knew the guy was not right. He came from a relatively wealthy family, always had financial problems, ended up marrying into wealth, but still managed to squander it. He never had a real job and instead focused his efforts on his political-economic theorizing. This lack of focus and adult responsibility is clearly evidence in Das Kapital. Not because of it advocating childish theories, but the writing is HORRIBLE and PAINFUL to read. It was blathering, not a logical, succinct, cogent argument for socialism.

Beyond that I never gave Marx, the person, another thought. However, until I listened to the podcast above, I had no idea just how literally and genuinely insane the man was.

Marx was indeed an older version of today's hipsters. He lived off of other people's money, and when those sources dried up, he would go and try to find others. He viewed real work beneath him and had a crusaderist view of himself which is why he was always "researching" in the library to advance his own economic religion. This alone is enough to make me see red, but mercy almighty, it gets much worse.

Marx also didn't like to bathe. That rats nest of a beard is not by accident. It's because of a lack of hygiene. Because of his preference to avoid basic grooming (probably too much work) he ended up having boils over his body regularly. This is not the sign of a sane person, but somebody who obviously had mental problems.

Further evidence of mental problems are abound if you look into his family life. Such a poor provider was he that 4 out of his 7 children died before the age of 18. 2 of the survivors went onto commit suicide. Marx also sired an illegitimate son with his maid, a woman he never paid, but lived with the family.

Finally, Marx was a hypocrite. To avoid creditors he would use aliases, skipping out on rent and often times not paying butchers, tailors, and other "workers" he so claimed were "exploited" by those evil capitalists. Further more, he was an intellectual hypocrite. Instead of using facts and data to create theories, he did it the other way around. His entire "research" was spent trying to find proof and evidence that his childish and naive ideology would work.

There is certainly more, but the larger point is a simple one:

Karl Marx was batshit insane. He was psychotic. And to believe or subscribe to any ideas the man had (be it political, economic, familial or anything) is foolish.

History has proven this. Only a madman's illusions de grandeur could result in killing more people during peace time than Nazi's did purposely during war. You can compare similar people's implementing Marxism vs. freedom (the Koreas, East vs. West Germany, Cuba vs. Caymans, etc.). And you can look to see what happens when countries abandon socialism in pursuit of capitalism (China, Vietnam, the Baltics). But the real issue isn't what a "moron" or "psychopath" Marx was. It isn't even the devastation and poverty his cancerous and flawed "theories" has wreaked upon the world.

It's the scary fact as to just how receptive humans are to such a stupid, and ultimately, dangerous and evil ideology.

This is why you can't criticize Marx. There have always been idiots. There have always been megalomaniacs. There have always been psychopaths. It the fact humans are actually stupid enough to listen to these morons that is the problem.

For example, it is a fact, A FACT you can't just "print off more money." They tried it in ancient Rome, they tried it in the Weimar Republic, they tried it in Yugoslavia, and they continue to try it in Venezuela, Argentina, and yes, these United States. You would think with a basic and cursory knowledge of world economic history we would know that printing off money will not solve any economic problems and will only bring about a collapse in the economy. But we still do it. And the reason isn't a lack of knowledge, but psychological. Human's want to believe they can have their cake and eat it too.

Another example, obesity. We all know what causes people to be fat - too many calories, not enough exercise. The solution is simple - work out more and eat less. But despite having the KNOWLEDGE the human mind performs acrobatics to ignore this reality and rationalize away pigging out, and obesity rates continue to increase. (Some humans are so delusional and weak-minded, they've even gone so far as to advocate "fat acceptance).

And a third example, minority poverty. It is a fact illegitimate children are the number one cause of poverty. Throw in a lack of education in STEM fields as well as a propaganda-destroyed work ethic, and it is very clear why minorities suffer lower standards of living. The solution is simple - don't have illegitimate children, studying in fields that are in demand, and work hard. However, despite KNOWING this is the path to success, the majority of minorities would rather swallow the spoon-fed lie that it is "discrimination" that is keeping them down and wallow in a Detroitian self-pity.

We could go on as the examples are endless, but the point is that it isn't "bad ideas" that threaten society, but a weakness in human psychology that excuses people for believing in them. The belief that you can have something for nothing. The inability of the human mind to understand delayed gratification. The willful ignorance of not asking "where does the money come from?" It's almost as if there's a piece of the brain that, despite thousands of years of wisdom, evidence and fact, stubbornly insists on forcing its host to make bad decisions in the long run.

Because of this merely criticizing Marx, socialism, and socialists won't work. The people that need convincing do not believe in socialism or Marxism on a logical level, but an emotional, psychological, even greedy one. Throw all the charts up in the world, cite all the case studies of North vs. South Korea, point to China's historic improvement, it won't work (trust me, I've tried) simply because socialism's adherents WANT to believe in socialism just like a fat woman wants to believe "one more cookie won't hurt" or an alcoholic's belief that "one more drink is fine" or a 38 year old spinster's belief that "38 is the new 24."

Therefore, I suggest a new approach when battling socialism. Instead of fighting it on a logical and mathematical level, we fight it on a psychological one. Understand Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, and Dennis Prager have been doing the same damn thing, day in, day out, and the country has still dramatically shifted to the left despite their admirable work. Their factual tactics have failed. But if we were to do something on a psychological level, especially something they won't dare do, then we might actually see success where they have failed.

I suggest being mean.

Specifically, shame, mockery, and ridicule.

For example the shame, mockery and ridicule that is rampant in the Manosphere has done more to not only free men from their psychological brainwashing, it strikes right at the core of female psychology - shame. 40 years of touchy feely nice guy bullshit has only allow feminism to run rampant over Baby Boomer and Gen X men. It wasn't until about 8 years ago or so did some men say, "fuck this, we're done," and dared to start mocking women for being naive in their political beliefs, shame them for being fat, ridicule them for majoring in stupid subjects, and start holding them to task about wanting to be genuine equals. The jury is still out on whether this tactic has worked, but based on the cumulative "chatter" of social media sites younger women are at least taking note and not swallowing whole their 60's grandmother's feminist bullshit.

Another example the black community. I am obviously indifferently harsh on the black community (and other minority communities). Do I do this because I hate minorities? Do I do this because I am a racist?

No, I do this because I refuse to lie to my fellow man. I could no longer tolerate delicately dancing around eggshells and gingerly trying to maybe convey the concept that hopefully someday maybe, kind of, our minority brothers and sisters will kind of sort of maybe see the logic I'm trying to convey.

Fuck it. Don't have time. Don't have the patience.

Black community, stop fucking up and get your shit together.

And shocks of shocks, guess what! I have a disproportionately higher black readership (especially young black males) who appreciate me giving them the straight dope instead of lying to them to spare their feelings. Again, despite having a fraction of the audience, I've converted more blacks to libertarianism/conservativism in the last year than Dennis Prager has in 20.

Again, we could go on, but the point is simply this:

You can't criticize ideas.

But you sure as hell can criticize the idiots who believe in them.

And it is that psychological line where the battle for freedom, liberty, and capitalism should be fought.

Did Tyema Sanchez Vote for Obama?

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If she did, then she voted to replace men with the government. And I frankly, don't care about her problems. Perhaps Obama can escort her to the next nightclub and defend her.

"Maybe You Just Attract the Wrong Type of Women"

February 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've always wanted to address this topic and probably have in the past, but (not to plug the podcast again) in reviewing it I really hit this one out of the park. It is also an important lesson for all the young boys (and men in the dating world) to learn because the two most common reasons the women in your life will give you as to why you're having trouble with girls will be:

1. "Maybe you just attract the wrong type of women" and
2. "Maybe you're just not looking in the right places."

I have a different theory. Well, it isn't a theory, it's a fact. But it will at least salvage your sanity as to why you're seemingly having trouble finding quality girls. You can listen to the whole podcast, but this topic is specifically addressed at the 59:50 mark.

Tuesday Night LInkage

February 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Masters and doctoral students in the liberal arts get their due.

The "best of" "I need feminism!" Oh, can you imagine these adult children impoverished and psychologically delusional at the age of 45?

Related

Matt Forney's Podcast is less-sucky! His delivery is improving, though his topics need less hate and certainly are not for the feint of heart.

The second story in this link (don't ask me why Ace of Spades does it this way) bought a house in Detroit for $500 and now he's going to fix it up. I'm cheering him on, but I am not hopeful.

Malta. The latest tax haven/Mediterranean Hong Kong. Once I scrape up by $1.2 million, I'll be there!

A quick synopsis on the housing market.

The children are our future!

The Victory Unlimited Show

February 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Victory Unlimited is the name of a show. It is also the name of a man out east who dispenses advice to all the boys out there (who was kind enough to link to me). I started listening to "VU's" podcast and was impressed with his presentation. He carefully scripts and rehearses his performance which results in a higher quality, succinct presentation (as opposed to my unscripted ramblings and tirades). However, this unfortunately means there's not as many episodes.

Still, because his material is dense (meaning packed with a lot of well-thought out ideas and wisdom, not "dumb") it is definitely worth taking the time to download his podcasts or "missions." I would also add he is very fatherly. I don't know his age, but whereas I kind of fashion myself the "older brother you never had, but need to beat some sense into you," VU is very much like a patient Ward Cleaver.

Regardless, visit him and "complete all his missions."

Why Nowadays It's Perfectly Acceptable to Pay Others to Do Your Homework

February 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I got an e-mail from a guy looking to hire the services of Asshole Consulting. He runs a paper-writing company that in-no-beating-around-the-bush-sort-of-way does people's homework for money. It's completely immoral. It's completely unethical. But it's not illegal. And he capitalizes on this fact.

Now before you get all up in arms, understand he wouldn't be in the business if there wasn't a market for it. It's very much like drugs. Are you going to blame the drug dealers for creating something other people want? Or are you going to blame the drug-addicts? Are you going to blame the guy who sleeps with married women, or are you going to blame the married women looking for affairs? Don't blame the supplier, blame the demanders. And given my very libertarian, Machiavellian, misanthropic and cynical beliefs you all know where I come down on these types of arguments.

But morality and philosophy aside, we started to notice that given my readership demographic we might benefit from an advertising relationship. And so it is with without shame, cynical indifference, and a very misanthropic heart I introduce a new sponsor to the Cappysphere, Academic Composition.

Naturally some of my more moral readers are wincing. Some of you that are starting to see the country for the cesspool it's rapidly become are cheering, but before you dismiss this, let me make the argument why it's no longer "immoral" to pay for somebody to do your homework for you in today's United States educational system.

First, progressive credentialism.

I do not "dislike"
I do not " hate"
I LOATHE WITH ALL MY HEART what corporate America and all the other employers have done to the youth in this country. Not in terms of mortgaging the future with government (they've already done that), but how they've made it so difficult to get a job. Specifically, how they've increased the credentials needed to be deemed "qualified" for the simplest of jobs

In WWII you could take an 18 year old kid and turn him into a pilot, a tank commander, a mechanic, or a clerk in 6 months. You had majors at the age of 25 and colonels at the age of 30.

Now, today, nope. You need a bachelors, minimum. "Masters Preferred." Oh, and now you need some certifications and CPE. And then, and ONLY THEN, will we consider you for employment.

But the truly disgusting thing they're requiring you spend 4 unnecessary years and $150,000 in tuition isn't because you really need that level of training or education. The ONLY reason employers require all those credentials is so that they can (are you ready for it)....

more easily screen out resumes.

Think about that.

You are REQUIRED by today's employers to bust your ass off for 4-8 years, forking over $300 a credit, taking on $100,000 in debt JUST SO YOUR RESUME IS NOT TOSSED IN THE GARBAGE.

And thus, if you're "lucky" enough to get hired, you end up working some job you could have easily done at the age of 18 with 2-3 months training.

If the entire purpose of getting your college degree (advanced or not) is to merely jump through a hoop and NOT to increase your skills, then there is no merit in legitimately doing writing your own papers.

Second, speaking of a job that you could have done at the age of 18 without a masters, employers LIE ALL THE TIME on their job descriptions. NOT ONCE in the past 40 years has a job description in the history of job descriptions been accurate. Job descrptions are window-dressed to sound better than they actually are so that you more willingly take the job as well as lower pay. It's not until it's too late that you find out the "analytical work" you were supposed to do is "filing" and that the "challenging work environment" is not challenging for intellectual reasons, but because your boss is a psychopath. If they're going to lie on the job description, you owe them the courtesy of lying right back to them about all those "masters level courses you took."

Third, most degrees are worthless.

If you're going to become an accountant or a surgeon, then you should never hire this guys services. But if you are getting ANY degree in the liberal arts of humanities, then sorry, your degree is really worthless. You're not learning a skill. YOu're not learning a trade. You're learning theory, or just outright leftist brainwashing, that you will NEVER put into practice in the real world.

Since the degree is worthless and no measurable skill will be gained and therefore never be tested, you might as well pay somebody to write your masters or doctoral thesis. From a purely economic point of view it will result in the same outcome.

Speaking of worthless degrees, fourth, most of academia is a scam.

It is.

You're told by teachers from k-12 to go to college.
You're told by cousnelors to go to college.
You're parents really don't know any better and regurgitate the same thing.
But where they totally screw you over is when they say, "follow your heart and the money will follow."

This then sets you on the path of majoring in touchy, feely, easy subjects you find interesting instead of a trade or major that will result in employment. And there is no limit to the number of colleges, professors, deans, and TA's that are MORE THAN HAPPY to lie right to you face about the merit and validity of majoring in "African American History" or "Women's Studies" or "Communications" or "Child Psychology." Because the truth is where else are those talentless people going to work?

The best thing to do is avoid these charlatans. But if you're "already committed" to getting your Lego-Diploma, you might as well pay somebody else to jump through the unnecessary hoops for you.

Fifth, even if you are majoring in a legitimate field, the academian scum are still going to insist you pay more by forcing you to take pre-requisite classes that have NOTHING to do with your intended study. Here you may be majoring in something legitimate (engineering, accounting, etc.), but are forced to take "CISgendered Hating Male" studies.

Why do the work for something that is not pertinent to your intended career?

Return the favor to these frauds by being fraudulent yourself.

Sixth, the professors really don't care.

They don't. And neither do most deans. If the UNC scandal about African American studies doesn't do it for you, then my experiences at degree mills will.

The primary goal of most educational institutions is NOT to educate you, but get your money. This is why when I had 89% of my students plagiarize their college papers, the dean did not kick them out, but forced me to allow them to write another paper. This is why when a student showed up drunk and punched me, they expelled him, but then let him back in.

Your generation is sadly filled with so many losers that the "adult" generations are bending over backwards to give you every excuse, every advantage, and every ounce of forgiveness. Yes they "say" you will be expelled, but I'm having a hard time trying to find deans and professors that give a damn about enforcing it (just look at Martin Luther King!)

Finally, if you outsource all the bullshit classes to Academic Composition, it will allow you to increase your credit load and therefore potentially get out of college a full year earlier. Outsourcing your paper writing will also allow you to work instead, helping keep your debt load low.

In short, the entire "college education" racket is precisely that - a racket, a scam. And coupled with masochistic reasons employers insist on "progressive credentialism" you should have the least bit of self-respect and return to them a proverbial finger by being just as disingenuous and fraudulent as they are.

Now, the caveats and legal disclaimer.

You run the risk of getting expelled. YOu run the risk of ruining your future. Matter of fact, don't do it. Just don't do it. Don't hire his services. Matter of fact, I'm going to say you WILL get expelled. 100% guarantee. Just ignore everything I said above. Just ignore how you are being royally screwed over by a fraudulent system. Just ignore that and be a good little boy or girl and behave.

You hire Academic Composition at your own risk.

Why Don't Men Want Children?

February 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Oh, let me count the ways.

(An absolute must podcast if you're looking for some humor in your day as well as serious commentary)

Wednesday Night Linkage

February 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Closing the female wage gap by asking women to volunteer and intern for free.

Aurini writes another low-brow, low-IQ post that is typical of his ho-hum topic selection. Damnit Aurini could you write something intelligent for once!

Hannah Smith - a genuine tyrant and (of course) liberal arts major.

Diversity burn out.

Based on analytics only 15% of my readership is female. That 15% is going to have a huge advantage over the remaining 85% in that they dare to simply listen to what men want.

After 60 odd years of life, 20+ years in radio, and 8 years after alternative media picked up on it, Joe Soucheray finally discovers the public school system is replacing families (around the 32 minute mark). I officially award him a "Welcome to the Party Pal" Award. (though the MSM is expected to pick up on this trend in 2058)

Why can't cool shit like this happen here so I can go look at it?

Destroy Your Retirement for Your Kid's Dumbass Degree

February 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Make sure worthless professors have a cushy retirement while you eat dogfood.

How "Intrinsic Value" is Derived from Ego and Sex

February 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In my mission to fully and completely understand the economics behind bitcoin I have gone through a handful of papers, scores of posts, and hours of podcasts. I viewed attaining a 100% economic understanding of bitcoin as an intellectual challenge and while I will write about it at a later point in time, I did accidentally have an epiphany about something else while listening to Peter Schiff and Stefan Molyneux talk about bitcoin. That epiphany specifically being intrinsic value.

Intrinsic value means, in simple terms, "real value." For example paper dollars do not have intrinsic value. It is only the goods and services you can purchase with said paper that does have "real value." However, gold does have intrinsic value because the gold itself is valuable.

Or is?

This is the problem I think very few economists think through about currencies, intrinsic value, and specifically gold and silver. We always assume gold and silver are valuable unto themselves, which made them the "ultimate" form of currency. But if you look throughout history, especially in places where there was no gold or silver, you'll find other "substitute currencies" popped up. Salt, shells, etc. Even today in prisons cigarettes manifest themselves as the default currency. In other words, the value of a currency isn't its "intrinsicness," but rather the physical qualities it has that makes it the ideal tool of exchange.

This results in a debate and is the essence of the debate Stefan Molyneux was having with Schiff - does a currency even need to have intrinsic value or just really good traits that makes it a superior currency.

Schiff argued that currencies like bitcoin and the dollar are not backed up by anything, which makes gold superior. But this then brings us back to whether or not gold actually has intrinsic value. However Schiff pointed out several times something that made me realize gold (and silver) do indeed have intrinsic value. Namely, gold can be used for ornamentation.

Now when I say, "ornamentation" that is the polite was of saying, "sex and ego." For while, yes, humans have always sought gold and silver, you have to ask why would they do so? What is in it for men to grab a hunk of metal that has not the function of iron or the usefulness of bronze?

You can get laid.

Gold was (and still is) nothing more than peacock-feather currency. It was a way to demonstrate you had wealth and power. With gold you could either directly purchase sex (either prostitution, supporting a concubine, or a wife...or 6) or at least demonstrate you were wealthy and powerful by adoring yourself or your house with it. Thus, gold, and by default, intrinsic value does not derive it's worth from something like "scarcity" (though it does need to be scarce) as much as it does play and ego.

If you don't believe me, think about a world without women.

What would happen to the price of silver, gold, and diamonds? Yes they have some industrial uses, and their scarcity and malleability would make them a decent currency, but they would not be trading anywhere near what they are today if there were no women to woo.

Therefore, we need to realize that functional currencies do not necessarily have to have intrinsic value. Gold and silver have adequate enough characteristics on their own that make them great currencies, just as bitcoin, shells, cigarettes and salt. But if you want something to have genuine "intrinsic value," something that goes beyond currency-functionality, then it needs to either stoke your ego or get you some play.

The rest are all truly fiat currencies or commodities.

Thursday Night Linkage

February 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This is the main reason I don't get a doctorate.

Remember my video about parents crippling their retirements to pay for their childrens' stupid degrees? I take that video back. I want stupid people to suffer. Especially when they pay for their precious little princess to major in this.

Three cheers for Patriarchy!

A nerdy white mathematician plies his trade, has success, and a feminist gets jel.

Teachers, please, get over yourselves. You are overpaid baby sitters for children whose parents love their careers more than them. You purposely and consciously chose to become teachers because it was easy and you got 3 months a year off. You are regularly at the bottom for IQ when it comes to IQ by major and your professional association (unions) are disproportionately responsible for the destruction of the family and the country. Please have a cup of STFU.

Is There Anything Worse Than "Christian Rock?"

February 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Yes, the upcoming movie called "Christian Mingle."

'Christian Mingle' is about a young, modern, single woman. She's trying to achieve it all – a successful career, amazing friends and finding Mr. Right. She stumbles into the world of online dating looking for an instant 'soul mate solution,' but ultimately ends up taking a personal journey transforming her life.'

Seriously guys, this is one of those instances where (after vomiting) you just sit back and enjoy the decline by enjoying others' misery.

No Mo Procrastination

February 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Before you enjoy this weekend, ensure you "do the right thing" and get these annoying chores off of your to do list:

1. Buy some silver or gold that you've always been intending to do, but haven't got around to it yet.

2. Buy you and your loved ones some safety gear and security-up your house.

3. Get a Rattlerstrap because...um...you might go hiking once it gets warm again.

Mention Cappy or Captain when you do!

Oh, and it's tax time too! Don't delay, and while we're at it, remember to check your nuts for testicular cancer!

Friday Night Linkage

February 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Shame works. It works better than anything Oprah ever did.

"Either there's a princess to save or we're razing it to the ground." A surprisingly good podcast about ammo starvation, Star Trek, D&D, and other geek culture that spreads to the rest of society.

Remember, Republicans are the party of "big business."

One of the more delicious morsels of enjoying the decline will be watching California take the brunt of it. Do you remember when California was like the pinnacle of American achievement? Neither do I. But I've seen old television shows.

We won't sleep with you if you vote this way!!!
"Yeah, but you weren't going to sleep with us anyway."
YEAH!!!!??? WELL!!! NOW WE WON'T FOR SURE!!!!
Ahhhh, isn't it great when feminists run out of ammo.

Slothful Saturday Linkage

February 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Bankers killing themselves. Let's hope for more!

Again, I ask, if feminists are so independent, then why do they constantly need more taxpayer money?

When Associate Degrees beat out Masters.

And I'd like to thank Improvement Movement for his review of Worthless.
However, remember, IF YOU DON'T TELL ME YOU WROTE A REVIEW I CAN'T GIVE DUE THANKS!

How to Self-Publish a Book

February 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

People have been asking me (via Asshole Consulting) several times about how they should go about publishing their own book. This has been a common question so instead of charging for regurgitated information I put together this lengthy, but very helpful video.

Entrepreneurship: Officially the Dumbest Degree

February 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Book Review: The MBA Bubble

February 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The MBA Bubble, by Mariana Zanetti is about the only serious or significant book warning against the costs and consequences of getting an MBA. Readers here are already too aware of the education bubble and through reading either "Worthless" or my tirades against MBA's, you are fully inoculated against making such a mistake. However, for people contemplating an MBA, especially those who already have their undergraduate and are driftless in their professional lives, this book is a must just like a Polio vaccination.

Mariana writes from experience getting herself an MBA several years ago at a highly ranked program in Europe. She talks about the program, her experiences, etc., but more importantly for readers the consequences and post-MBA observations.

She explains how the schools make it seem like you should be HONORED to be accepted into their program and have the "right" to blow $100,000 on a two year program. She discusses how much personal time and effort is expended, where you sacrifice everything else in life to earn that almighty MBA. Then there is the job hunt where you slowly realize the whole thing was a masturbatory hogwash for professors who have no real world experience to screw you out of enough money you could have bought a house. And that is where the real lessons come in.

Career service centers that don't have any real jobs to offer you. The painassery in attending "job fairs" and networking events. The "hidden labor market" where you soon realize it is who you know, not what you know that gets you a job. And how employers love business schools because they generate obedient little cogs to put into their machine. Because of these experiences and observations, not only does the book serve as a warning to any would-be MBA pursuers, but as therapy for those unfortunate enough to have fallen for the MBA scam.

The only complaints I have are two:

1. My review has much more hatred, anger, and color in it than her book. She is nowhere near as angry and vicious as she should be. Or maybe she is, but does not allow it to show through her reading. She should be LIVID over just how she (and an entire generation) got screwed over, and should have eviscerated her school, her professors, and the entire industry. Instead she is overly polite, way too timid, and constantly provides caveats about "not all schools are like this" or "I definitely enjoyed my experience, but."

2. It sounds more like a diary than an expose. She does a great job telling stories from the front lines and her experiences, but delves a bit too deeply into them and the emotional consequences, telling her personal story. Naturally this could be because I am an impatient, angry, hate-filled man, and women readers may actually like this aspect of it, but I personally was saying, "yeah, yeah, get to the point."

In short, this book would not be for any regular readers here on Cappy Cap (because we've known about the education bubble for about a decade now), but is a must for anybody either currently in or contemplating getting an MBA. My minor criticisms (opinions, actually) aside, the book is precisely what is needed in today's education industry and should be read by every undergraduate thinking about grad school. Of course, it is a self-published piece, and it goes against the trillion dollar annual scam academia has set up, so don't expect it to get out there through the traditional channels. It will be up to you to buy it or recommend it to a pertinent reader.

"I'm Too Busy Watching Rocky and Bullwinkle" Linkage

February 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Some "light" reading.

Davis Aurini mislabels his post, making it sound like professional women do not carry their weight. It should have been titled "Single Female Lawyer."

Mnnattt Daymmunnnnn.

When I'm dead, I just want them to say, "He opened our eyes to see what true evil teachers and the public schools really are.'

"The New School" - a Book Review

February 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The New School
112 pages
By Dr. Glenn Reynolds
Available on Amazon.

The New School by Dr. Glenn Reynolds is his latest essay into the foray of education in America. Like his previous work "An Army off Davids" it is a forward-looking book that attempts to predict what lies in store for the future of America, this time in terms of education.

I personally enjoy reading Dr. Reynolds because he writes well. Even if you don't agree with what he's saying (or you find the topic boring) the man takes the time to be clear, succinct, but, most importantly, thought-provoking. Without fail he always manages to make an observation or have an epiphany that I didn't, rendering me envious and, dare I say, a bit "cheated" as if Seinfeld were to say "Newman!!!" And here Dr. Reynolds does not fail again.

Using a combination of personal insights of the education industry (he works there), charty goodness, clear and damning statistics, as well as geometric logic Dr. Reynolds makes a score of predictions and observations. Education at all levels (K-12, college, graduate school) is approaching the point that it no longer is a wise investment with a positive ROI. From law schools producing twice the number of graduates than there are jobs, to a quadrupling of administrative staff with a stagnance in teaching faculty, to a quadrupling of property taxes with no improvement in academic performance, Dr. Reynolds makes the case that education is a money-losing proposition. He also notes people are getting wise to the scam education has become. Enrollments are down for collegiate enrollment, law schools are suffering a 50% drop in the past two years, and home-schoolers are on the rise while public schools are the ones closing shop. He then projects these trends into possible outcomes with universities cutting all programs until all they have left is a diversity department, the trades trouncing the humanities, online courses replacing K-12 brick and mortar schools, and unemployable mothers with their masters in English deciding to stay home and rear and educate their own children. Naturally, he admits he does not know how it will all turn out in the end, but at least provides a framework or an outline how the education industry may evolve.

There's just one problem - he's incredibly idealistic, almost bordering naive in my humble opinion.

Understand Glenn Reynolds has something the vast majority of his professor, dean, chancellors, and K-12 peers don't - a soul.

Dr. Reynolds actually cares about education, cares about his students, and cares about the future. However, the vast majority of teaching staff today (K-college) are nowhere near as altruistic as he is. They first and foremost only care about themselves. They did not join the education industry for anything as noble as "the children" or "educating they future," as much as they did "summers off" and a morbid fear of math. They only care about making money, but they're so lazy rather than do something productive in the private sector they took the lazy man's way out and decided to "teach." Dr. Reynolds may disagree, but if there's any empirical proof to this it is the fact nearly 98% of college faculty religiously votes for socialism. Furthermore, all one has to do is look at the brainwashed, hate-filled, mindless zombies being graduated from the various "victim-studies degrees" programs and their equally hate-filled, racist and bigoted professors. The latest academian pablum of "privilege" and "CISgendered" not to mention outright calls for the killing of white males is proof this system is has been co-opted from an institution of education to one of politics and, like the equally evil Third Reich, needs to be completely destroyed.

Dr. Reynolds does admit there will be some political backlash. But I believe he completely underestimates this backlash thinking it will be pure economic reality that will simply override politics. In the end, yes, that will happen, because it has too. But it is in my opinion the millions of worthless individuals that are parasitically vested in education would rather destroy the country than give up their host. The adult-children protestors from the Wisconsin Public Schools who violently fought against Scott Walker's tame reforms are nothing compared to what the millions of students, millions of faculty members, and the millions of union members living off the university system will do when you force them to accept their true economic value is $0. You throw in the millions more students, faculty, and union members of the K-12 schools and reality be damned, they will hold the country and the parents' children hostage if they have to. ANYTHING to avoid real work.

Finally, Dr. Reynolds has way too much faith in parents and the modern population. Some parents do indeed care about their children. Some do indeed pay attention to the schools (some even paying extra for private schools, some staying home to school their kids). But most parents today are of my generation and they are just as greedy and self-centered as any other generation. They do NOT care about educating their kids as much as they do a government-financed daycare (no matter how craftily disguised as a "school") that allows them to jettison their kids as they pursue their careers. Throw on top of that that most people care more about Kim Kardashian than the federal (let alone local) budget and it really will have to be a Greek-like economic crisis that forces the education industry to reform, not a "great awakening" of parents who suddenly start homeschooling their kids en-masse.

This major disagreement, however, does not take away from the larger premise and points of the book.

Dr. Reynolds is right - the education industry is screwing over pretty much everybody.
Dr. Reynolds is right - people are getting wise and taking their money elsewhere.
Dr. Reynolds is right - online and home schooling will present a threat to the established cabal.
Dr. Reynolds is right - what is not sustainable will not continue on forever.

But the real reason to read this book (beyond the statistics, observations, predictions, etc., and what I personally liked most about it) is that Dr. Reynolds proves this evil and despicable industry is finally in decline. It is collapsing. The day is coming worthless professors will have to actually produce something of value to earn their keep in life (the segment where he talks about all the professors admitting there's something wrong alone is worth it). And if you're like me, a victim of worthless teachers, overhyped degree potential, and a constant barrage of socialist brainwashing from the country's most worthless profession, seeing them quake in their boots and get their upcoming due in slow motion is the epitome of enjoying the decline.

While Principal Theresa Nolan Educates Your Children

February 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm going to say it again for the cheap seats.

Education majors are the dumbest, laziest people there are. And you let idiots like this broad in to not only teach your children, but THEY'RE IN CHARGE OF THE TEACHERS!

Anybody want to guess?

Worthless liberal arts degree?
Ugly?
Well to do parents?
Never set foot in the private sector or held a real job?

I haven't looked her up. I just want to see if Ms. Nolan is another high scorer on The Clarey Test.

Mercy, and you wonder with affirmative action charity cases like this why your kids aren't getting educated.

I'm Blaming Marissa Mayer for Yahoo's Mail Problems

February 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I want to introduce you to a website that I never knew existed, but thanks to Marissa Mayer and the deteriorating e-mail performance of Yahoo, I've had the honor of getting to know intricately.

www.downrightnow.com

You see, it has been a weekly event that the ole Captain wakes up and logs into his e-mail account to see if any of you lieutenants, agents in the field, economists or chillllldren have something important to tell me. You know, links, thanks for the book, I hate your guts, that kind of thing. But whilst the ole Captain can log in all his site does is freeze because Marissa and pals have overloaded their e-mail with advertising.

Of course, if you didn't know this or about the above-mentioned site, you would think there's something wrong on your end. So you spend an hour of your precious finite life trouble shooting something that isn't your problem. But instead, here is the problem:

Now I really don't care that Marissa Mayer became CEO. Women can and do make fine CEO's. But when the performance of the company and its products just spectacularly tank whilst coinciding with a new CEO, I'm prone to believe the primary cause is that CEO.

Of course, good luck finding any articles about her performance that is critical. It's all about her having a baby, her setting up nurseries, and whether or not a "woman can have it all." But this IS actually the core of the problem. Instead of focusing on the shareholders and customers the media is focusing on politics and gender. So much so the primary article being shoved in my face from searching for Ms. Mayer is about her giving a speech.

I don't want to have articles about her as a person.
I don't want to have articles about whether she's making the company go green or not.
I don't give a damn about whether the nurseries at Yahoo Corporate increase employee satisfaction.
And I don't give a shit about her fucking speech.

I want to know why my god damned e-mail is down.

And until the media (and corporate America) refocuses their attention on profits and not this modern-day-touchy-feely-CSR-diversity bullshit soap opera, you can expect more and more businesses to fail.

You Should Judge a Book By It's Cover

February 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A post that warranted a stand alone link.

The "I Love You Hannah Smith" Podcast

February 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast Aaron:

explains just how cold it can get in Minnesota, wood inventory management, ponders the life of a troll, how the Greatest Generation is a hard act to follow, shows how feminism is indeed a cancer on society, obliterates the stupidity of Obama's "MyRA's," and reads a letter from our Romanian Agent in the Field and more! Download and tell friends!

Horses and Herpes

February 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An interesting little tidbit you may not know about the Cappy Cap online media empire is that my demographics vary greatly depending on the social media I'm using. Also interesting is there is little overlap or cross over between say my "viewers" on my youtube channel vs. "readers" on my blog.

What this has resulted in is me having to repeat some of the wise wisdom I passed along ages ago here on the blog on my alternative channels today. Naturally we want to convey the MOST IMPORTANT lessons immediately so as to do the most good for our Youtube, Twitter, podcast, etc., bretheren, so I decided today to convey the very important lesson about horses.

You all know my disdain for horses, and I don't wish to reiterate what you already know, but I want to convey just how real the problem is with a comment from the Youtube:

[redacted] 16 minutes ago

You know, I felt like I would disagree, even be a tad offended, but you know what, you are quite correct.

My mother has horses. We're not a rich bunch, however we are in a big shit ton of trouble right now due to having to pay for those horses. It has caused arguments, financial problems, responsibilities (as in I or my brothers will get screamed at to clean and feed her horses), and it's just so annoying, and we're getting to a stage where we either have to get rid of them or we go homeless and they get taken regardless. Only problem is, my older brother is in need of care due to his mental issues (not complete psycho or incapable, just very vulnerable, anxiety, depression, and so on), and my little brother who is fifteen.
I brought it up to her that it may come to it that they have to go, otherwise we're going to be dragged down and the horses will have to go regardless. My God, the amount of shit I had to put up with for even suggesting a very possible scenario that could harm our family due to the horses made her go crazy.

Literally, everything you said here hit the nail on the head for my family. Shit, don't even get me started on the family friend that stayed with us who had a horse staying with out horses, too.

You know, now realizing, horsey people are a bit crazy.

Titillating Tuesday Linkage

February 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Over the counter paternity tests - how long until the government bans you say?

Dr. Helen reviews Bachelor Pad Economics!

Oregon - a place you should already be smart enough never to move to.

Uncle Jay explains the boomer obsession with the Beatles. (get it "Beat"les, clever huh).

I'd like to say, "thank god! You're finally out of our way!" But unfortunately the replacements are even worse.

The ROI of college degrees with (OH NOES!!!!) THE MATHS!!!!!!!
So basically, STEM majors will understand the article and humanities majors will claim it's a Euro-male construct designed to oppress people who can't do THE MATHS!

The Parasitic Human Bubble

February 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First there was the dotcom bubble. Companies magically were 400% more valuable because you put a ".com" at the end or an "e-" or "i-" at the beginning of a company's name.

Then there was the housing bubble. Housing always goes up and ignore those liberals jacking up your property taxes making home ownership mathematically and factually a perpetuity liability.

And naturally there's the education bubble. "Major in what you want and the money will follow!" "Any degree is good degree!" "It'll open up doors!" And thus came a wave of puppetry degrees, "Beyonce Studies," and "CIS-Gendered-Hermaphrodite-Peruvian-Lesbian-Poety" majors.

But while all of these bubbles did (and will have) devastating consequences for the economy....

"do you recall...the most devastating bubble of them all?"

We can focus on individual sectors such as technology, real estate and education, but the largest and granddaddiest bubble is about to happen. And it isn't going to hit a "sector" or a specific "industry" but pretty much half our population, and by default consume the remaining half - the parasitic human bubble.

Understand that since the "Great Society" the United States (and most western nations) have been championing the losers of society. Originally it was set out with good intentions. Who doesn't want to help the poor? Who doesn't want to help the disadvantaged? Who doesn't want their fellow man to succeed and thrive? But as we all know the road to hell is paved with good intentions and what once may have started out as a charitable endeavor quickly turned into a political tool for the left to bribe blocks, segments, divisions and groups of people into voting for them. And as human nature is prone to do, the beneficiaries of these government programs raced to the bottom. They didn't take the proceeds and use it to improve their lives, but instead used it to loaf around and enjoy leisure. They didn't take the government cheese as a temporary measure to increase their skills to start a new successful career, but as a way to take a permanent vacation. And they didn't view this charity as "other kind and generous people's money," but rather an entitlement they deserved.

Fast forward several generations and throw in a good solid mix of socialist brainwashing from the public schools and media, and you now have a solid 50% of the population that is dependent upon the other half for their livelihood. And not only are they parasitical, they are mentally brainwashed to see nothing wrong with it, some even hating and loathing their benefactors.

Sadly, for the beneficiaries and the benefactors (more accurately, parasites and producers), this system cannot last. For there are some Malthusian mathematical limits inherent into this system. What those precise limits are is hard to say, but sooner or later the number of parasites will grow to the point they will out-consume what the producers can possibly produce.

And that's when the Parasitic Human Bubble will burst.

Like the housing bubble or the dotcom bubble, it's hard to predict precisely how it will burst.

It could be dramatic where one day the EBT cards won't work, the TANF check bounces, or the WIC office is closed. The parasitic humans will get upset, raid the local grocery store or Wal-Mart before they starve, but this will only exacerbate their problems as on the supply side stores will close and refuse to be re-supplied. Once their pilfered supplies run out, the parasitic humans will be forced to forage for food elsewhere forcing them into areas where people are more heavily armed, overly-taxed, and quite pissed off about being forced to support a parasitic class for decades. Riots and firefights break out and in comes the National Guard. Martial law is established, rationing is enforced, but this only sends us down the spiral further and faster as such restrictions grind the economy to a halt, and society inevitably collapses.

It could be slow and controlled. Politicians, even though incredibly stupid and corrupt, are forced to see the simple mathematical fact they don't have the money to maintain their bribery and are forced to slowly cut the supply of resources to the parasitic classes. The parasitic humans complain and get angry (ever see the teachers union complain about a "cut in the INCREASE" of their budget and scream bloody murder?), but not enough to riot or cause civil disorder. Unfortunately, for the leftist politicians, they are mathematically forced to commit to this new strategy of amortizing down the benefits of the parasitic humans, and over time slowly alienate their voter base. It is possible, over time and over generations, the parasitic humans are forced to learn independence, self-reliance, heck, even "achievement," "entrepreneurship," and "excellence," but regardless of personal economic epiphanies, the parasite human bubble slowly deflates. Of course the economy doesn't "boom" because of the crippling debt load we've taken on paying for bread and circuses and so the United States is relegated to a half-century-long stagnation like Japan or Italy. Malaise sets in and western civilization stops advancing.

Whichever scenario the outcome is not "good." But the point I'm trying to make is one of:

"Stand back and look at just how stupid it is we are arguing about this. How far gone is society that I even have to write about this?"

What did you expect when you let half your population believe "there's such a thing as a free lunch?" What were you thinking constantly advocating victimization, woeismeism, and parasitism? What did you think the consequences were going to be? Set your crafty, dishonest, disingenuous, made-out-of-whole-cloth academian arguments of "sexism" "racism" "class warfare" "evil corporations" aside, deep down inside you know that mathematically factually in the real world

a society cannot exist where one half loafs off of the other half in the long run.

And the simplicity of this fact does not debunk it. Matter of fact, it only reinforces it and exposes the "elaborate" socio-political-economic arguments people on the left make for the smoke screens they are. They are masking the fact they are one of four things:

1. Evil - for knowingly lying to parasitic humans about economic reality so that they may benefit politically
2. Dumb - for actually BELIEVING in such idiocy that half a population is somehow "entitled" or "deserves" the production of the other half, AND that somehow that system is sustainable
3. Intellectually Lazy - because to take the time to think things economically through, not to mention look at budgets is too much effort for most leftists
4. All of the Above - Which is the category I find most leftists fall into Thankfully, I will suffer very little of the consequences of leftists' stupidity. I will likely die before the United States and western civilization "really" collapses or ends. Additionally, history will be on sanity's side as historians 2,000 years from now look at dependency ratios and ask "WTF were those leftists idiots thinking!?" But most importantly I don't have kids who will suffer the consequences of my generation's idiotic leftist decisions. This is the "true" revenge I will savor and salivate over, for most leftists are so dumb and intellectually lazy (not to mention arrogant) they will NEVER admit they're wrong. It's too core to their ego and pride. And either out of ignorance or ego most will have children and bring them into this world. A world they created, a world they made, a world they are completely responsible for, and one that will be terribly unkind to their genetic skin in the game.

Enjoy the decline, lefties. Enjoy that freaking decline.

Wascally Wabbit Wednesday Linkage

February 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Horoscopes" - That's all you have to say. "Horoscopes"

Davis Aurini with his latest podcast. As always it's mind-numbingly boring. He discusses why it's futile to argue with leftists, the stupidity of Valentines Day and talks a little science fiction.

How come cowards like this don't show up at my house? Oh, that's right, they're wearing masks. They're cowards, and they know they'd be greeted by a hail of gunfire if they set foot on my property.

Stingray brings back a classic.

HAR!!!!!!

Land of the free. Home of the slaves. How much you want to bet those young kids are going to take the deal from the devil and STILL vote democrat?

If You Argue With Turkeys, You Can't Debate Eagles

February 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In Aurini's latest podcast he delves into detail explaining the "debate" structure of grammar, logic, and rhetoric. Grammar basically meaning you all have to agree on the definitions and meanings of words. Logic meaning you have to be intellectually honest and adhere to associative rules and other logical concepts that ensure integrity. And rhetoric meaning you apply it in the real world or test one another's arguments with anecdotes from reality. If both parties in a debate or even a discussion have these three things, then the conversation/debate is much more productive and progresses towards an inevitable "conclusion," "reality" or agreement.

What's funny though is for the longest time I never viewed debate as a cooperative effort, but rather an adversarial one. One of competition. One where you had an enemy that needed to be defeated. Of course, this was the sad consequence of growing up with the mentally deficient people that populated my generation. Parties I attended in my 20's I was regularly attacked and berated for being a conservative. Debates in college (or even post college) were filled with emotion and vitriol. And in nearly 100% of the cases my opponents degraded into name calling, ad hominem attacks, accusations of "ism," or being a nazi, etc. But Aurini's podcast and points made me realize and appreciate something that I don't think too many "Alt-Right, Econo, or Manosphereians" are aware of and something that didn't hit the ole frontal lobes until just now. And that is:

Just how liberating and freeing-of-the-mind the Manosphere/Alt Right/Econosphere is in terms of debate and discussion.

Whether you realize it or not, chances are you haven't really had any REAL debates in your teens, 20's, even 30's or 40's. What you HAVE HAD is a person with superior:

knowlegde information intellectual honesty maturity grammar logic and rhetoric

trying to explain to idiots, ideologues, and zealots (who not only lacked the aforementioned, but had no desire to pursue truth) why they're wrong.

The results are something we're all familiar with. Frustration. People yelling at you. People getting emotional. Death threats. Anger. Etc. And the reason why is that you are arguing at a level much higher and much loftier than they are.

The reason is simple. You are interested in the truth. And you are just as likely to admit you are wrong or ignorant in certain matters than you are to claim you are right because you have no emotional or psychological attachment to your arguments or ideology. Matter of fact you don't have an ideology. Ideologies and religions are beneath you. You just, in a very scientific manner, want KNOWLEDGE, FACTS, and TRUTH. The same cannot be said for the majority of people.

The majority of people are weak-minded. They are also lazy. However, they are also egotistical (especially Americans) and so their mind reaches for something that will not only allow them to claim some kind of intellectual "superiority" or "achievement," but also allow them to do so with no work.

Going green
Protesting
Claiming they're a caring liberal
Joining a religion
Going vegan
Becoming a professor
etc.

This not only results in them living in a delusional, non-real world, but also makes them emotionally and egotistically invested in keeping up their ideological facade. Thus, when you make impassionate, logical, stoic arguments of fact, math, and statistics you (consciously or not) pierce their ego, expose their charade, and therefore trigger a visceral, emotional, and often hate-laden response from them.

Sadly, this relegates you to throw a pitched battle every time about your ethics, morality, etc. etc., as you are forced to respond to their emotional outrage. The original debate is quickly forgotten as you find yourself defending your morality, your ethics, why you don't love Hitler and why you don't eat babies for breakfast. But what you DON'T realize (and what I just realized now) is how in having to throw these constant, unrelated pitched battles, your debate, discussion or conversation stagnates. Your ability to advance understandings of politics, economics, philosophy, etc. is arrested. And the reason why is that while YOU may be interested in using debate to advance your understanding of different things in life, your opponents RARELY have the same aim. Your opponents are constantly in an emergency scramble to defend their hypocrisy, and thus your "debating skills" are stunted.

Enter the internet, namely the alt-right spheres and especially The Manosphere.

Not that there is 100% complete agreement here, but unlike the general population, most participants here care about the truth. And while certain factions may have their disagreements, in the end we all agree we "want to get to the bottom of things." This not only results in a more cordial and polite debating environment, but (most importantly) one that is VASTLY MORE PRODUCTIVE AND EFFICIENT.

Reading the alt-right and Manosphere alone in the past three years has advanced my understanding of philosophy, human psychology, and debating skills more than the previous 20 years of my life. Instead of constantly defending my honor, never getting to the point where I can prove "government spending is 40% GDP," and that I am indeed not a Nazi, those calories of energy are instead spent, nay, invested in either further testing out my own ideas or considering and contemplating others'. Pioneering new lights of thought, and pushing philosophical boundaries. Additionally, in not having to argue with solipsistic adult-children who are only concerned about their egos, nearly 100% of efforts (on both sides of the argument) are put towards advancing and achieving knowledge. In other words the Manosphere's engine of debate is infinitely more efficient than Jezebel's or the Troll section of Reddit.

Naturally, detractors will claim this is merely advocating an echo chamber. That I only want to hear what I want to hear. But to that I say, "bullshit." One, I and the likes of me had to endure the completely emotional and dishonest whining that passes for "debate" in post-WWII generations (and therefore are intricately aware of exactly what kind of "debating" is going on) for the past 40 years. We have been in anything but an echo chamber. Two, the knowledge, wisdom and education I've gained from reading, debating, and listening to the likes of Stefan Molyneux, Dennis Prager, Roissy, Tom Leykis, etc., again, dwarfs what I learned the previous 20 years past. Three, nearly everything that has been said, discussed, discovered, or theorized about in the Manosphere/Alt-right has proven true, especially in the rhetorical or "field testing" stage. And, four, that's rich! Leftists, who mire themselves in academia, media, and government claiming we're in an echo chamber?

The sad truth is that the majority of people under 60 lack the intellectual honesty in this country to pursue truth because it not only would force them to realize hard-work is a necessity for success, but they themselves are living a lie and are, quite frankly, a bunch of losers. And given the amount of money (both earned and borrowed) that has gone into satiating all of our material desires, not to mention the billions of hours of self-aggrandizing bullshit the media how blown up every Americans' dirt chutes, there's no "reasoning with them" or genuinely "arguing with them." They are on full-automatic zombie-liberal and are impervious to logic, facts, statistics, truth, or reality. And it is because of that I suggest if you are one of the rare eagles out there who seek truth and reality, that you stop trying to debate turkeys and come join us eagles here in the Alt-Right and Manosphere.

Apparently Some People Find Reading Enjoyable

February 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I am flattered when readers/viewers/listeners ask me if I've written anything else. And the truth is yes, I have.

While most people focus on "the big three" (Worthless, Enjoy the Decline, and Bachelor Pad Economics) the majority of my readership is unaware of my first book "Behind the Housing Crash" as I've gained about 70% of my current day readership AFTER the book was released.

Not that you don't know what the outcome of the housing bubble has been (yes, it did crash, and yes, the economy did tank btw), but if you are looking for kind of a "Sam Spade" "film noir" themed book that focuses on financial analytical work instead of detective work, Behind the Housing Crash is it.

It basically is an expose that chronicles my trials and tribulations being a "credit analyst" in the banking industry during the buildup to the bubble. The reason I mention I was a credit analyst is because that is where the rubber hit the road. As an analyst it was my job to assess and judge the quality and credit of the potential borrower. For the most part, the VAST majority of loans that came across my desk were absolute junk. HOWEVER, management, bankers, mortgage brokers, and the entire housing and banking industries were completely dependent either through commission or sales on getting the loans approved. Naturally this resulted in conflict where you had nothing short of the most corrupt and idiotic bosses ramming heads with the sane and virtuous underdog, and consequently a good story.

However, at the time I was an analyst, and even while writing the book, I did not have the hindsight or bird's eye view I do today of the banking industry. I was still partially under the belief I was a "bad employee" and that my supervisors were "wiser, older" people. But when I found out the FBI was investigating one of the clients of my most hated banker (you'll have to read the book for details), the wool was pulled from my eyes and I transformed into the modern day, hate-filled, "fuck authority" incarnation of Cappy you all love and cherish today. Regardless, because I was at the bottom, it really does provide a "Peter Gunn" detective theme to the book.

Naturally we all know what happened to the housing bubble. Naturally we all know that I was proven right and that most bankers are scum deserving of the most painful death imaginable. But if you want a "behind the scenes" slash "war stories from the front lines" slash "who dunnit" slash "Tracer Bullit" kind of book, Behind the Housing Crash is the book to read.

Blogroll Addition

February 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HBD Chick is now officially a lieutenant.

New Podcast Added to Umm..."Podcastroll?"

February 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ed Driscoll is now officially in the house.

Keep him away from the whiskey.

There's Always ALWAYS a Catch with Women

February 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Just helping out the boys.

Friday Night Linkage

February 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Damnit, I wish bloggers would come up with something intelligent to write about.

I love it when people who have nothing going on in their lives cheer for the "local team" when the "local team" has NOBODY from the state playing on it. Reminds me of the Nika Riots with the red and the blues...or was it the blues and the greens? What does it matter. Mindless idiots who get pissed off when "their" team loses deserve to suffer the sadness.

HAR!!!!!!!!

Astrology is not a science. But don't tell Jezebel readers that.

Happy Valentines Day for all the girls with moxie and grrrrrl power!

The Smith and Wesson Retirement Plan keeps looking better and better.

A perfect example of how leftists ~~debate~~ shift, squirm, lie, and retreat.

Affirmative action in STEM is so bad.
HOW BAD IS IT?
It's so bad that to teach programming you don't even need to know how to code if you're a girl.
Filed under "The Maths are hard! Teee hee!" Hat tip.

Have You Hugged Your Aggregators Today?

February 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Viva La Manosphere? Huh, did you send him some love?

Delusion Damage? Did you visit him this week? Huh? Didja?

The Red Pill Reddit Forum? Those guys are new. Been getting some traffic from them recently.

Morning News Telegraph? Bet you didn't visit him!

Well, get to it now. Your aggregators need love too!

Pretty Lies or Harsh Truth: Choose

February 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You have a choice when it comes to consultants.

Suits bilking you at $500 per hour to tell you pretty lies about how YOU aren't the problem, but rather umm...."synergies" or um... you need to "leverage your core competencies"...and umm...."you are beautiful just the way you are and if any man can't see that well then to hell with him!"

OR

An asshole who will tell you the truth and say

"You're an incompetent boss and can't manage for shit."
"You fucking idiot, you don't even have a corporate strategy! How the fuck are your employees supposed to know what to do during downtime."
"You're fat. Lose the freaking weight."

and only charge you $40.

The choice is clear - Asshole Consulting.

Everybody has problems. But only assholes will tell you to your face that you're the problem. May sting, may suck, but in the end it's:

INFINITELY cheaper and INFINITELY more effective because it's based in reality.

Just look at how successful all those 50 something women are who did what Oprah told them! Aren't they the happiest, never-divorced lot you've ever seen? Oh, wait, that's right, they believed in lies because it didn't hurt their precious feeeeeeeeelingggsssss.

Fuck your feelings. You need reality. You need the truth. And you need it cheap.

You need Asshole Consulting.

Saturday Linkage

February 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cotto interviews Roosh about political correctness.

Our Affirmative Action Military - Cherish Byers

February 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cherish Byers, class A affirmative action cunt.

The Latest Trend in Daddy Issue Induced Body Mutilation

February 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Tongue splitting.

Here's some of the results! (warning graphic)

Just a couple observations if you'll permit me.

1. Boys, hurry up and score one of these fine young ladies before they're all gone!
2. How many OWS vs. Tea Partiers do you think have this?
3. Please do not tell me that western civilization can be turned around, let alone deserves to be
4. How many STEM majors do you think have this done versus liberal arts?

Enjoy the decline people. Enjoy that freaking decline.

You Can't Say I Didn't Try

February 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Let it be known I tried to save a young girl from going to law school.

Let it be known that like an older brother or tough fatherly figure, I tried to prevent what was likely a leftist liberal arts major from making a life crippling decision.

Let it be known that I am not an "asshole" for speaking the truth, but rather quite the opposite.

Though, let it be known when I tried to tell somebody the truth, I am consequently called an "asshole."

Not only do I want this to be up here for posterity's sake, but I now open the floor to predictions. You may commence.

David Joins the Bachelor Pad

February 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Latest review of Bachelor Pad Economics.

Not joking guys, this is "THE" book to buy. And ladies, you'd stand to gain more from reading this book than most of your college classes.

Dear Public Sector Workers, You're All a Bunch of Wimps

February 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm going to be brief.

Most public sector employees have no idea what a real job is, what it means to truly suffer, and have not the faintest clue what "strife" is.

I've never seen government budgets cut in REAL TERMS (none of this "decrease in the increase" bullshit they pass on as if you cut off their right arm), and I've never seen massive layoffs as has occurred in the private sector. I've also never seen anything approach real work and real rigor. The adult-children working as government baby-sitters, euphemistically called "teachers," make it seem like they have the "most difficult job on the planet," when in reality they are weak, they are wimps, and they are pansies.

I know myself and the three other private sectors workers in the country have had an infinitely more difficult time than our public sector ~~whiners~~ counterparts. And I say that not out of woeismeism, but because it's true. The average private sector employee not only has to work harder, work longer, and work according to (sort of) principles of production, but is more prone to layoffs, firings, whimsical psycho-bosses, and is at the mercy of the economy. We get to fret about not making ends meet. We have to ACTUALLY PAY FOR OUR OWN REITREMENTS AND INSURANCE PLANS. And there's the never-ending CPE/progressive credentialism bullshit.

The public sector? HA!

I YEARN for the day to see in the newspaper "Minneapolis Public Schools lay off 25% of their employees."

I would LOVE to see on the Drudge Report, "Department of Health forced to restructure to cut costs by 30%."

Just ONCE I'd like to see the public sector pansies walk a mile in their private-sector brother's shoes.

Instead you see this insipid cry-babying from genuine children who just happened to have hit puberty 30 years ago.

Thankfully, this system cannot go on forever. And it won't. The day will come that the public sector will have to cut back or not receive anything at all. Politicians will of course use it as a voting block/Keynesian-failed-stimulus tool until that time, but you can't have a country where the entirety of GDP is comprised of:

Teachers
Social workers
AFSCME janitors
Case managers
Cops
Firefighters
DOT workers

You need the private sector because ALL wealth comes from it.

The rest of you are factually economically parasitical. Could you please stop being cry-babies on top of it?

Monday Night Linkage

February 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Those stupid Russians who actually LIVED under communism. Don't they know they did it wrong and our super-awesome intelligent professors are superior to them?

Speaking of the stupidity of communism and an overly large state. Banning laced panties.
You leftists really do hate fun, joy, love, and good looking people, don't you?

They can't tolerate men...but they all want to be married....thus...they want the benefits, but none of the work because....they would have to think of somebody other than themselves...thus the mannequins.

It's "Da Jooz!"

February 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What's great about blaming "the Jews" for everything, is that it guarantees the blamers will forever fail in life because they never identify, let alone address the real problem - themselves.

Just a Mustard Seed of Doubt

February 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you are a true and genuine Christian (or any SINCERE and LEGITIMATE religious person) the following post does not pertain to you.

If you are a family member that wants to maintain some facade of "Goodie Goodie Jesus Rah Rah Yea" then you may not want to read ahead.

For the rest of you intrepid intellectually honest intellectuals, let me tell you a story.

If you want to know where my wit and cleverness comes from, it comes from one person and one person only:

My Uncle Jeff.

Jeff was like me. Small, skinny. But while growing up I noticed he was INCREDIBLY quick, clever, and even charming. It wasn't until I became a student of Victor Borge did I realize what qualities and traits both had in common. And so from the age of 13 or so, I fashioned myself after Uncle Jeff.

This decision sent me on the trajectory that landed me here today and is (what I would boldly guess) is why many of you tune into my blog/podcast/whatever. I'm not the same ole same ole. I come up with the occasional witticism. And above all else, I'm a little bit smarter than the average bear.

Thank my Uncle Jeff for that.

Sadly, Uncle Jeff contracted cancer at a young age. Fight it as he may, in the end he lost and died in his mid 50's. Knowing this was coming and feeling bad I had not spent as much time with my psychological mentor as much as I would like, I drove from Minneapolis to Appleton to visit him at the hospital.

When I visited him he was still, without skipping a beat, good ole Uncle Jeff.

Witty, clever, and smart.

And though we never really had a ton of time together, there was an understanding that he was my uncle, I looked up to him, and maybe he could have picked up a clue or two that I fashioned myself after him. He was happy I was there, and I was feeling guilty for not spending as much time with him as I would have liked.

But, as would be the case with all men facing cancer, death, and mortality, our conversation took a turn towards him reflecting on himself, his life, and his beliefs. But unlike most of the automotonic-Christians that had visited him before, I wasn't a Christian. I was the black sheep of the family. He knew I didn't care about the afterlife. He knew I was the outlier in the family. And so, because I had this reputation, our conversation became rather and ironically...

truthful.

It was there that my Uncle Jeff admitted that deep down inside, despite 50 years of TRULY RELIGIOUS ADHERENCE to the faith and Christ, he really didn't know if he believed any of it. This coming from a man who was the epitome of devout. He attended every Sunday. No doubt tithed. Donated time and volunteered at the church. You could NOT be a "better Christian" than Uncle Jeff.

But there he laid in the hospital bed, hooked up to an IV, and after half a century of life plus, admitted to me that deep down inside he didn't believe it.

I had nothing to say. NOthing religious anyway because I got rid of religion as quickly as a sailor can get rid of the clap. But being out of the "system" for 20 years didn't leave me without explanation or thought on the matter. And so I told my greatly-respected Uncle Jeff what I thought.

"You don't know, I don't know, and nobody else knows what's on the other side. But I'll tell you this. It can't be anything great, grandiose, let alone horrible, and CERTAINLY NOT LONELY because 50 billion people have gone before you. And you, nor I, nor anybody else is special."

I don't know if it did anything to assuage him, but based on the smirk I got, I like to think it did. That where some guy nailed to a cross, and 50 years of unsubstantiated lies, and an entire religion without empirical proof FAILED to provide one of its most devout followers solace, an asshole heathen with a bit of streets smarts, cynicism, and elementary logic succeeded.

Within a month we were at Uncle Jeff's funeral. There in attendance was the preponderance of good Wisconsin Synod groupies including everything from my former-pastor father, to ~~nazi concentration camp~~ Lutheran teachers, to a hypocritical brother who conveniently finds "god" every time he lands in jail, to all the "good Christians" in SWPL goodie-2-shoes Appleton. And my stomach churned as I saw the pastor officiating the event show picture after picture of Uncle Jeff, hidden in the background of various church photographs "proving" Uncle Jeff was indeed a good Christian.

There is no doubt my great and awesome Uncle Jeff was a good Christian.

There is no doubt that my Uncle Jeff was one of the best people to walk this planet.

But if there is a lesson to take from Uncle Jeff it's that deep down inside that the VAST MAJORITY of you Christians (as well as all other religious folk) KNOW for a FACT it is all

BULLSHIT.

I am at a point in my "philosophizing" where I no longer care about arguments, facts, truth, statistics, etc., as much as I am the MIND-BLOWING ability of the average human mind to IGNORE AND REFUTE said things. That I am flabbergasted as to how much time, effort, resources and money childish human minds will KNOWINGLY go to defend an FACTUALLY WRONG AND ERRONEOUS system.

Fuck "allegiances."
Fuck "social networks."
Fuck "fear of ostracism from society."

How can ANYBODY believe in such poppycock as religion?

The simple answer is, "they can't" and "they don't."

It's all a fucking show for superficial reasons.

Networking, familiality, tribalism, survival, you name it. In the end it is just an elaborate version of "the emperor has no clothes."

And thus, I wanted to plant that mustard seed of doubt. Because I know, I KNOW FOR A FACT

EVERY SINGLE ONE OF YOU

have that doubt in your heart.

And based on the quality and caliber of most "christians" I see today, you fail, EPICALLY against my Uncle Jeff in terms of sincerity, penitence, honor, and self-reflection.

Thus relegating your "religion" into nothing more than a god damned social club.

Enjoy "hell"...that is of course assuming you ever really, truly believed it in the first place.

Post post - apparently this is needed. I'm agnostic. Not atheist.

For Your Audio Pleasure

February 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Was shopping. Head this song on over their music system. Tracked it down and found it. One of the best songs I've heard in a long time:

Which leads me to a question:

Has anybody else noticed music really hasn't changed since grunge took over in the 90's?

I Love a Captive Audience

February 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hospitals and laid up patients make for a great "forced market" for my book.

The Latest Episode of The Clarey Podcast

February 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In this latest episode I discuss how I will be going "curse free" for a week as a request from several people to see if it boosts readership. I also delve into why people curse, why it's good to have hate and anger, and opine how cushy life must be for people who don't curse. I ask what the deal is with the robots during the intermission of NFL games. Is that manly? Is that cool? Also, a review of The Lego Movie which leads to a plea for adults to not forget what it was like to be a child.

Also, don't forget last week's episode which apparently nobody knew about!

Treating "The Feminine Mystique" As An Equal Male

February 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

aka "holding it up to logic, reason, reality and sanity."

ie- treating it like a male.

I don't like to read. And the heck if I was going to read "The Feminine Mystique." but Davis Aurini and Sunshine Mary are going to read it and give it the once over from a non-feminist mind.

Davis' assessment of the first chapter here.

Sunshine Mary's assessment here.

A piece of me wants to say say your stereotypes ere wrong, that there is indeed something in "The Feminine Mystique," but already it looks like the typical whinny blathering of a spoiled American who didn't appreciate what she had. Someone who BLATANTLY values a career more than her children or family. Somebody who (if I weren't so lazy, I'd look up the author and her background) would probably score a 3 or higher on The Clarey Test.

Naturally detractors will claim we're all sexists and can only view things from a male/patriarchical mind/blahfreaking blah blah blah. But the great thing about The Manosphere is that we're done with the "trying to be understanding, open-minded, and cognizant of our unconscious biases." These people are unrepentantly devouring the book and making blunt, truthful, and direct assessments of "The Feminine Mystique" and don't give a damn about trying to be "fair." Their assessment is going to be what it is without remorse or the consideration of people's feelings.

And that should scare the hell out of feminists that for once some adults are dissecting it.

Regardless, it's just more proof why Bill Burr's "Most Difficult Job on the Planet" is pure brilliance.

Any Mandarin Speakers Out There?

February 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy all,

I want to put together a project, but would need an interpreter.

Anybody out there fluent in Mandarin?

Why You'll Never Have a Good Job

February 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My latest piece at ROK.

An excerpt:

*You are going in there, day in, day out, to f*ck that company out of as much money for as little work as possible before you throw it away like the slut you picked up at the bar last Friday. You will pump and dump your employer.*

Peter Gibbons is the New John Galt

February 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Enjoy the Decline!

Wednesday Night Linkage

February 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Kelley's Heroes was one of the greatest movies because there were no women in it bar some nuns. Which is what you would have seen in WWII.

The "manosphere" looks like it might get a wiki page.

I do believe the military has gone to pot. Maybe they need to up their recruiting age to 30 before letting all the retards in.

Marx also refused to bathe. But I don't know if he hated himself because he was white. Then again, maybe this is the "new and improved" communist.

"I've been hurt by a lot of assholes in the past, and I really care about you, so I want to do this right"

This is the biggest global threat. More so than terrorism. When governments act like cartels to "harmonize" (read "jack up") taxes, then you eliminate the only thing really keeping them in check - competition for labor, capital and intelligence with low taxes.

Sandra Y.L. Korn - Another Mindless Adult-Child Nazi

February 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I've decided to start recording individuals, especially the youngin's of college age who, despite being in college and presumably really smart, advocate eliminating the freedom of speech. Not because they are against the freedom of speech, but because they're so stupid and so ignorant and (above all else) so brainwashed they are incapable of understanding what the first amendment means.

Sandra Y.L. Korn is such a person.

Naturally she is a worthless studies major, majoring in women's studies. Also she has never had a real job working at student newspapers he entire career. Finally, she is not pretty. She's not a dog either, but certainly a 4-5. This is germane to the topic because of my theories about why ugly people tend to be liberal. In short because being attractive takes effort (working out, eating right) AND takes selflessness (you care about how you look primarily for other people's benefit.

So three cheers for another waste of human life brought up by parents and an education system that failed to instill in her the basics about human rights, free speech and other vital concepts this country and our livelihood is based on.

Captain Capitalism Takes Down the "MyRA"

February 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

More proof our president is not only an idiot, but has no moral qualms about taking advantage of the poor.

"I'm an Idea Guy"

February 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I couldn't remember if it was a video or a podcast I had done a couple weeks back, but I was mentioning the "idea guy" and precisely just what despicable pieces of vermin these type of people tend to be. Consequently I received quite a bit of e-mails, comments, and responses from listeners anecdoting about "idea guys" they've ran into in the past and thus I think it's time to expound upon and highlight these individuals.

First understand "idea guys" are really nothing more than lazy bums who want all the glory and benefits of hard work, but don't want to do the hard work themselves. They just want to sit and pontificate and come up with pretty ideas, but when it comes to turning those ideas into reality, they need other people. Typically this manifests itself in the form of a jock with a business degree or an MBA who when it comes time to volunteer to take on a task at a meeting they'll excuse themselves saying, "well I'm more of an idea guy." Bankers also fit this description as they'll "work hard" to provide you the money for your business, but you need to pay them a 7% cut while you do all the real work. Regardless of what form they take, they NEVER get their hands dirty with IT, engineering, trades, accounting, or anything else that is require to turn an idea into a profitable business.

Second, they're egotistical, sometimes even ego-maniacal. They value themselves more than anybody else and think a different set of rules apply to them. Therefore, work and toil is beneath them. They just want to be in charge and benefit from the status of "leader." I point out Barack Obama not because of my 100% disagreeing with his politics, but because he is the epitome of this. The man has no real world experience (just look it up, only 1 year in the private sector). BUT despite his non-existent career and literally achieving nothing in life, he fancied himself so important he wrote TWO memoir books and deemed himself worthy of the presidency of the United States (consequently you can see just how effective "idea guys" are when it comes to actual performance and production).

Third, they're arrogant. They really believe they're that smart. That nobody else has their "leadership abilities" or insights. They think the kid programming code or the woman doing accounting can't come up with the ideas themselves, no matter how simple and obvious those ideas are. Deep down inside I don't think they actually believe this, but their ego and fear of real work conspire to make them think they are smarter than the average bear. Regardless, these are the type of people who will rely on credentials and not true genius as vindication of their being an "idea guy." MBA's, "leadership seminars," and all the cacophony of BS business school tripe where they try to make "leadership" a teachable science, when in reality it is only hard work and experience that makes a leader.

Finally, they're thieves. Because they're so afraid of work, they will do anything to avoid it. Thus many of these "idea guys" develop incredible political and charming skills that (sadly) lands many of them into positions of power. This isn't their fault as much as it is the current employment system we have today, but it doesn't change the fact they take the credit for other people's hard work. Not to say that Steve Jobs was one such guy, but in this Bill Burr clip you get the idea.

In short, you don't want to have anything to do with "idea guys." Be it work, be it school, be it social. In work they'll view you like a CIA agent does an "asset" and at minimum try to offload their work on you, or (worse) blame their mistakes on you. In school they are GUARANTEED to be the person who doesn't do their part in group projects. And in social life, they are the ones to constantly be late, never bring booze to the party, and will constantly parasite favors off of you, never to be returned in kind. Thankfully idea guys can easily be avoided because whenever there's real work to be done, and it's time for people to start stepping forward and taking on tasks, they will yell with the decibel-level of Loud Howard, "WELL I'M KIND OF A BIG PICTURE GUY. AN IDEA GUY MYSELF!"

That's when you punch him right in the face and tell him to start programming code.

In Defense of the Smith and Wesson Retirement Plan

February 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here's my defense.

Dr. Helen Makes It Into Cartoon World!

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Damnit Senator! I'm Pro-Dr. Helen, I've always been Pro-Dr. Helen, and will continue to be until the day I die!

TO HELL WITH YOU AND THIS CIRCUS COURT!

Thursday Night Linkage

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When the child competes for your spouse's attention and love.

If there is a reason I vehemently hate the left in this country it's because they don't even care about the country enough to defend it and maintain it's sovereignty. File also under "Another reason to not subscribe to The Economist."

As a non-ideological viewpoint, Conservatism needs a different form of study to be understood. Liberalism and ideology reward the memorization of talking points and arguments; conservatism requires an understanding more like biology or mechanics. Liberalism teaches thoughts, conservatism teaches how something works

One chart that disproves global warming.

Annnnnnd the president backpedals on the one time he told the truth.

Joe Cotto's part 3 on government's assault on free speech through political correctness.

He says "7 uncommon reasons" to quit your job. I call them "REALLY GOOD REASONS."

Divorce! It's good for the economy and it's good for you!

MSM is shocked to see a 23 year old acting like an adult. Three generations ago, MOST 23 YEAR OLD MEN WERE ADULTS!!!!

Reality Alway Wins

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And that's why the private sector will always outperform the public sector.

A Prediction of Girls Who Hate Cat Calls

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

That while many a young 20 something women complain about it, by the time they're 45 they'll wish men would make cat calls at them.

Leftistwhitegirlsaveafricavolunteer-itis

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Again, I ask, is there ONE leftist program that has ever solved the problem it set out to solve?

Once again, no.

But at least some spoiled suburbanite kids got to have their egos stroked that they were "doing something."

And that's more important than ACTUALLY ending poverty in Africa or ending disease in the Caribbean.

Three cheers for spoiled American girls who want to avoid math and help out society so they use non-profitism and its ease as a way to shield their egos from the fact they produce nothing.

HIP HIP!

HURRAY!!!!!

HIP HIP!!!

HURRAY!!!!

HIP HIP!!!

HURRAY!!!!

Two for the Record Books

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Happy day Cappy Cappites!

We have two new records set in just one day!

1. LITERALLY the dumbest comment I've ever received in all of my blogging/internetmediaempiring.

and

2. The most delusional hamster ever.

Yep, Idiocracy is coming full force people. Full force.

FCC Bureaucrats Want to Sign Off on Newsroom Stories

February 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It has been a long time that the MSM has become so corrupted, so biased, so purposeless, that it not longer deserves nor has the capacity for being the 4th branch of government. It has largely become nothing more than a propaganda arm of the democrat party and has turned "journalism" from a somewhat respectable profession to a hobby egotistical, math-imparied children major in because they want to avoid real work. But whereas you, I, and anybody with an ounce of intellectual honesty can see this, the general masses, not to mention the modern day journalists who populate the industry, don't. The people still trust the big three networks, swallowing anything the MSM puts in front of them, and the people in the MSM are too arrogant and stupid to see themselves for the leftist shills they truly are.

Of course there are pockets of resistance in the dinosaur/MSM industry. Joe Soucheray is one of those pockets and in a non-brown-nosing way is about one of the few true and genuine journalists left. However, (in true journalist form) he uncovered a story that should not only strike fear into the hearts of every American, but only goes to show you why the MSM really has completed the transformation from 4th branch of government to propaganda arm.

The FCC is trial ballooning the idea of having a government bureaucrat in each newsroom to ensure "underserved" markets are getting "critical news." (this links to a podcast and yes, you should download it and listen to the whole thing).

Now I'm not going to beat the same old drum that you, I, and anybody who's been paying attention already knows. MSM is biased. Journalism is dead, yada yada yada. But I will say this:

The above makes it official. The internet and podcasting are now officially the 4th branch of government.

The fact that NO major news media outlet ran the above story on their front pages only confirms just how in bed with government and socialism the MSM is. It takes a dying breed of journalist like Soucheray to highlight it and bring it to the forefront with what mediocre platform he has. So if the MSM is going to be so blatantly compliant and unnerved by what is nothing more than a brazen and frightening assault on the first amendment, it's going to be up to us "nerdy bloggers" and "citizen journalists" to do their job for them.

Thankfully this is easy. And not only is it easy, it's easy to do a better job than they do. Instead of answering to a narrative, we simply dig for the truth. And any rookie blogger in his pajamas, drinking coffee in his basement who follows that simple rule will be a better journalist than most of the kids graduating with "Masters in Journalism" from today's laughable schools. But the real reason the internet, blogging, podcasting, youtubing, etc., will surpass the MSM not only in terms of being the 4th branch, but in terms of popularity and widespread acceptance is that the MSM is old. From the corpse that is Diane Sawyer to the burnt out 60's hippies in the boardrooms of the media giants, their stories and narratives are getting old, repetitive, and stale.

Whereas they think a story about a gay football player is news, people under 45 don't care and don't like the insinuation of being a homophobe.

Whereas they think racism is still a problem, people under 45 don't care and don't like the insinuation of being a racist.

Whereas they think the "wage gap" is real, people under 45 know better and don't like the insinuation of being a sexist.

In short, the narrative of "lecture, berate, and belittle" has run its propagandist course, and instead of lies, politics, and social engineering, younger generations simply want the truth. And exposing the government's desire to take over the MSM, AND the MSM's dropping its panties and spreading of its legs in the form of silent acceptance is just a good of a starting point as any.

Friday Night Linkage

February 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

More vomit from leftist lawmakers in New York.

The "Racism Bubble." ie - when whites got sick and tired of being called racist when they weren't and the word lost it's meaning and now nobody cares.

Jesse Jackson proving he is an idiot. Though not as dumb as the congressman(woman?) who though Guam would sink if we put more Marines on it.

Steve echoes my previous sentiments about sports fans having psychological problems.

Lefty crusaderist woman goes to India and starts telling them what to do. Then gets murdered. I love happy endings.

Socialism! Coming to a United States near you!

How to Be in the Top 1% of Women

February 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

1. Stay in shape
2. Drop the psychoses you think are defensive mechanisms or "cute" ways to entertain yourself and be a mature adult.
3. Support yourself
4. Cook

You do those four SIMPLE things and you will be in the top 1% of women.

Erin Ching - Another Adult-Child Nazi

February 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

“What really bothered me is, the whole idea is that at a liberal arts college, we need to be hearing a diversity of opinion. I don’t think we should be tolerating conservative views because that dominant culture embeds these deep inequalities in our society. We should not be conceding to the dominant culture by saying that the so-called “progressive left” is marginalizing the conservative,” Erin Ching ‘16 said.

Venezuela, Ukraine, and Syria

February 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If you're like me you really don't care anymore what's going on in the world. Well you do, but you're not going to let it impede your enjoyment of the decline. However, sometimes enjoying the decline requires a road trip or a flight and so you need to listen to something. Thankfully, Silvio Canto has a podcast that addresses the three "hot spots" in the world right now:

Ukraine, Venezuela, and Syria.

So, if you are like me and you have kind of checked out of the world, but maybe want to see what all the hubbub is about, check out his podcast.

BTW, heading to Florida for business/pleasure. Let the ole Captain know if you're around.

Lazy Sunday Linkage

February 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Multiculturalism destroys everything.

A Masters of Art in Porn

February 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick....

Got this from our Captain Agent in the Field via 4chan. A warning as the links lead to pornographic sites, but they are germane to the story. My only editorial comments are:

1. Dads, if you fail to be a real father and instill logic, common sense, and some times tell your little princess "no" she will major in the liberal arts, which doesn't pay, and leads to stripping and (in this case) porn work.

2. This is the most powerful rationalization hamster I've ever seen. Hands down.

For people that dont know here is the sumary:

Girl from duke university managed to get 60k$ debt because of her women studies.
She has the brilliant idea to make porn to pay the bill because porn is so empowering.
Ends up at facialabuse and they trash her. Especially the first few minutes are hilarious I recommend it.

Here she is defending her porn shoots:
http://m.xojane.com/sex/duke-university-freshman-porn-star
Her porn movie:
http://www.cliphunter.com/w/1955731/Belle_Knox_gets_fucked_HARD

We got any other info?
I cant imagine the university is too happy about this

The Wall, Sexual Market Value, Currency, Scotch, Milk, and How Women Overvalue Themselves

February 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Using economics to explain the sex, dating and marriage.

It's OK to Hate Your Teachers

February 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because they aren't there for the children. They're there for an easy job.

Ed Driscoll of PJ Media Interviews the Captain

February 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ed was kind enough to interview me on PJ Media. An excerpt:

"Material wealth really doesn't matter. I'm the biggest capitalist there ever was. But truthfully, the only thing that really matters, the true source of happiness is other humans. And the great thing about humans is they're free."

Ed also threw me a curve ball asking about the illustrious model we have on the right sidebar.

The audio file can be directly located here.

Monday Night Linkage

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I'm going to say it again - school is NOT for the children. It's for people posing as teachers who don't want to work real jobs.

Could a blogger win a Pulitzer? Interesting question. But the question is wrong. It should be "should a blogger even want to win a Pulitzer given what's happened to other awards like the Oscars and the Noble Peace Prize?" If anything the bloggosphere should create it's own Pulitzer.

I miss Johnny Carson.

58, $200,000 in student debt for a "Masters in Social Work" and won't ever be able to retire.
Aw, that's too freaking bad.
I do recall baby boomers lecturing me when I was younger about doing my math homework.

Piss Morgan gets cancelled. I do recall him "interviewing" somebody about gun control and calling him an idiot. Will CNN replace him with an equally and obviously biased left-winger or will they be more discreet this time?

A podcast on using testosterone replacement therapy.

HAR!!!

Americanthinker "Malware" False Positive

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Been getting reports from Chrome users that Cappy Cap is blocked because we link to Americanthinker and it is a known malware site. I believe this is a "false positive," but if anybody else is getting these warnings please let me know.

Thanks,

Cappy

UPDATE - I deleted the American Thinker link from my blogroll. Let me know if you still get it.

On the Road Today

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Visiting Kerry Lutz and Chris Muir. Posts will drop as scheduled. Also heading to Orlando for cigars with local lieutenants. Matter of fact, I think cigars will be smoked at every stop and I should probably set down this Red Bull.

For Depressed Conservatives and Libertarians

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Any doubt about the future of the United States and the direction the country was heading was quickly eliminated in the election of 2012. Most of us were hoping the first four years of the Obama administration was a fluke in American history. That his election was only possible because of a childlike naivety on the part of an ignorant electorate. That the voting public, temporarily star-struck, opted to vote with their emotions and not their heads. And that after four years of the worst economic performance of any president since FDR, people would wake up, grow up, realize the error of their ways, and vote like mature adults the next time around.

Unfortunately most of us were wrong.

With the election of 2012 the American people have made it very clear which path they wish to take the United States down – socialism. Whether cognizant of this fact or completely ignorant about it, it doesn't matter, people voted the way they did. They could still be fawning over President Obama like a teenage girl or Chris Matthews. They could be the typical voter who votes for socialism because it sounds "nice." They could be the galactically ignorant soccer mom who believes no amount of other people's money is too good for her children. Or they could be fully informed socialists knowing damn well what they're doing confiscating other people's money. The reason why doesn't matter, all that matters "is what is."

Of course "is what is" is a devastating blow to lot of conservatives, libertarians, freedom-lovers and what I henceforth refer to as "Real Americans." Not just because politically or ideologically "our team lost," but because our entire lives and all of our futures are now in question.

Understand that you, me and everybody else who loved America, believed in America, and loves freedom grew up under some basic assumptions. And not only did we grow up under these basic assumptions, we based our lives and our decisions around these premises. We assumed the United States would continue to be the freest country in the world. We assumed we would be able to keep the lion's share of our income and wealth. We assumed hard work, innovation, and efficiency would be rewarded. We assumed if we worked hard at something our dreams could be realized. In short it was all that made America not just great, but the most successful country in the history of the world and we poured our hearts and souls into these beliefs.

Unfortunately, with these basic premises no longer certain all of the work, effort and time we put into our lives, and therefore our futures, are also no longer certain. Did you attend college to become a doctor? Well too bad, you may have wage controls with Obamacare. Did you work hard to become an engineer and create something? Too bad, we may have to confiscate your income at a 60% level. Did you have dreams of starting up a motorcycle shop? Too bad we're going to regulate and tax it out of existence. Were you planning on marrying a nice girl? Too bad, feminism has destroyed the quality of women. Did you want to have children? Too bad the state will raise your children. Did you want your children to have a better life than you? Too bad, your generational peers voted to mortgage your children into financial slavery. Say, nice sizeable 401k plan you have there! Too bad, we're going to nationalize it just like Argentina did.

The end result is EXTRAORDINARILY depressing. Not only is it increasingly likely you've lived your life in vain, but you've lived a significant percentage of your life in slavery. Worse still any dreams you had are becoming rapidly impossible. And even worse than that is without your dreams there's nothing you can uniquely achieve that would define you.

In short your life has no meaning.

This epiphany, whether consciously realized or not, obviously takes a devastating toll on all Real Americans. Anecdotal though it may be, everyone I personally know is more depressed today than they were a decade ago. I know more than one rugged individualist contemplating suicide. And there's no shortage of old men I know who MEAN IT when they say,

"Thank god I'm not going to be around to see this country collapse!"

The entire population of Real Americans is defeated emotionally, psychologically and spiritually. With no purpose or future they are simply asking "Why go on? Why continue? Why did I work so hard? What is left to live for?"

But dire as the situation may be, there is some hope. Genuine hope, not the hope that is found in presidential speeches and pablum. Hope that is practical, real, and will yield results. However, this hope comes from the only place real hope can come from – within – which means we have to focus on ourselves and what is within our control to realize this hope and capitalize on it. This isn't to say that the world will turn out all roses and dachshunds, nor is it going to be the "faux depressing type of hope" akin to when your mother would say,

"Well at least you aren't a cancerous, Ebola-infected, starving, blind quadriplegic, leper living in war-torn Ethiopia with lice!"

But at minimum this book will show you there is a future, you can live a happy life, the left will get their comeuppance, and no matter how bad it gets, there is always a way to "Enjoy the Decline."

Tough Fatherly Love and Worthless Degree-Majoring Children

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I had received this video of a man telling the story about his friend who is being asked to pay for his daughter's "social work" degree at William and Mary College. The story goes on to show that the man is completely owned by the wife, never stood up for himself, and more or less faces the choice of:

Pay the daughter's way through college

or

Get divorced.

He was eliciting advice, so I provided it for him here.

In short, it is too late for this pour soul (his friend, not him) to do anything about it. He married the wrong woman (a social worker, ie - liberal), paid off her student debt (thereby setting a precedent), has failed to bring his daughter up to appreciate and udnerstand basic economics, and never told either his wife or daughter "no." But while it is too late for this poor guy, it is not to late for you my find young friend.

Learn to control the finances of your wife and your family. If you can't do that, then don't get married.

Can't Say I Didn't Try

February 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Apparently my video on journalism being the dumbest degree is getting people's EMOTIONS all a-flutter.

However, when I beseech these kids to use their BRAINS, even extend the offer to give them Worthless for free so that they do not financially cripple themselves for the rest of their lives, this is what you get in return:

Again, this is why I will laugh (and do laugh) when I see liberal arts majors smack against the labor market wall of reality when they graduate and are forced to work in a job they could have done in the 7th grade, but are now hindered with a life-crushing load of student debt.

I will always give them one chance. After that, they are fodder for schadenfreudenistically enjoying the decline.

How to Spot Daddy Issues - 101

February 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cripes.

Tuesday Night Linkage

February 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was officially awarded an honorary doctorate. It's probably more legitimate than most other "honorary" doctorates:

prettysteeve47 commented on a video on YouTube.
Shared publicly - 12:11 AM

Mister Aaron Clarey: My homeboys and I from the ghetto of Charm City now bestow you with the Honory Doctorate Degree of Recession Economics because you have provided more than enough empirical evidence that the USA is heading for a severe economic collapse of Epic proportions which will inflict massive pain & economic suffering for all the sheeple.

Jimmy Hendrix didn't get his masters in guitar. Michaelangelo did not go to an MFA program. And Dali didn't borrow $50,000 to paint. You are an IDIOT if you pay for get an advanced degree in art.

Whole Foods turns out to be....not so wholesome. Of course, the hipster lefties never really cared about it's organicness or "greeness." It's just for them to gloat over non-green/organic people. Just, you know, don't tell them it's about as valid as any other religious practice like communion or praying 5 times a day.

Roosh expands on a dangerous and ironic cliff men who are successful will look over - that once you succeed, you will be unhappy, until you find something else to achieve, which upon succeeding at, will render you unhappy once again, until you find something else...and so the spiral continues. I have yet to find a solution to it.

Classic Cappy

February 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Reposting this because I am lazy and have yet to be inspired to write something.

I Wouldn't Want to Piss Off Gregory Peck

February 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Well son, you're bystanding days are over!

Wednesday Night Linkage

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Aurini's disseection of "The Feminine Mystique" part 2.

Some humor from Mr. Aurini as well:

HAR!

How many will stay?

The "pact." Though I would say it's socialists playing two groups of people off each other.

Proof of the Mental Illness of Leftists

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

First, I wanted to point out how this veritable child puts her petty little crusaderist ego ahead of an entire nation (Israel).

Two, notice how, when the resolution fails to pass, she is completely distraught and destroyed. The reason why is simple - this is about the only thing she's really worked at. And it isn't even work. It follows the Destruction Principle which (for leftists) means people would rather choose immoral easy work over moral hard work.

Finally, seriously. Step back, clear your mind, and look at this again. This isn't sanity. This is a seriously mentally disturbed individual who is in the embryonic stages of becoming a cat lady just like a super giant star about to go supernova. Do you see conservative engineering college students doing this? It leads me to believe that k-12 education is causing more damage than just the mere brainwashing and indoctrination that (basically) destroys young people's lives.

Anyway, just more proof that college, especially the liberal arts are not just a scam, but a place of genuine and sincere evil.

Hat tip

For All Our Australian Agents in the Field

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy All,

I have a friend touring Australia with a band right now. Naturally he is very busy, but as many of you know, traveling on your own, even with colleagues gets a bit boring.

Wondering if there's any of our Australian Agents in the Field that would be kind enough to show my friend around if his tour comes to your town. Here's the schedule:

WEEK 2
Mon 24-Feb-14
Tue 25 Feb 14
Wed 26-Feb-14	PORT MACQUARIE, NSW	Glasshouse
Thu 27-Feb-14	TAMWORTH, NSW	The Capitol
Fri 28 Feb 14	DUBBO, NSW	Dubbo Regional Theatre
Sat 01 Mar 14	WALLGETT, NSW	Wallgett Memorial Entertainment Centre
Sun 02-Mar-14	DEE WHY, NSW	Dee Why RSL
		MARCH
WEEK 3
Mon 03-Mar-14	Labour Day (WA)
Tue 04 Mar 14
Wed 05 Mar 14
Thu 06-Mar-14	CESSNOCK, NSW	Cessnock Performing Arts Centre
Fri 07 Mar 14	CHATSWOOD, NSW	Concourse Theatre
Sat 08 Mar 14	BELMONT, NSW	Beverly Workers Club
Sun 09-Mar-14	ROOTY HILL, NSW	Rooty Hill RSL
WEEK 4
Mon 10-Mar-14	Labour Day (VIC) / Adel. Cup Day (SA) / Eight Hour Day (TAS) / Canberra Day (ACT)
Tue 11-Mar-14
Wed 12 Mar 14	MOUNT GAMBIER, SA	Sir Robert Helpmann Theatre
Thu 13-Mar-14	HORSHAM, VIC	Wesley Performing Arts Centre
Fri 14-Mar-14	WARRNAMBOOL, VIC	Lighthouse Theatre
Sat 15 Mar 14	EXPACC, VIC	Colac Otway Performing Arts & Cultural Centre
Sun 16-Mar-14
WEEK 5
Mon 17 Mar 14
Tue 18-Mar-14
Wed 19 Mar 14	WERRIBEE, VIC	Wyndham Cultural Centre - Influence Theatre
Thu 20-Mar-14	DANDENONG, VIC	Drum Theatre
Fri 21-Mar-14	WANGARATTA, VIC	Wangaratta Performing Arts Centre
Sat 22-Mar-14	BENDIGO, VIC	The Capital Theatre
Sun 23-Mar-14
WEEK 6
Mon 24 Mar 14
Tue 25 Mar 14
Wed 26-Mar-14
Thu 27 Mar 14	DEVONPORT, TAS	Devonport Entertainment Centre
Fri 28 Mar 14	LAUNCESTON, TAS	Country Club
Sat 29-Mar-14	HOBART, TAS	Wrest Point Showroom

Shoot the ole Captain an e-mail if you'd be kind enough to have a beer with the guy and show him around.

Cappy

The Economics of the Sex and Attention Exchange

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Pour over the millions of articles written in thousands of magazine for the past hundred years about the dynamics and relations between men and women, and none of them will come close to the truth. And that truth is:

Men want sex,
women want attention
and we trade.

Of course in the olden days it was

"Men want sex,
women want resources and security,
and we trade"

but with the welfare state and government providing resources and security to women, respectively, women have replaced "security and resources" with "attention."

So imagine my laughing when I read this little article sent to me by one of our Dancing Agents in the Field.

To sum it up it was written by a woman who was SHOCKED, SHOCKED that men would dare to have the audacity to... (are you ready for this)

USE SALSA DANCING AS A MEANS TO GET SEX!!! GASP!

I KNOW!!! ME TOO!

What evil men would do this!!!????

Sarcasm aside, what we are witnessing here is what we could call asymmetric information in the "Sex-Attention" market, ie - one of the parties are mis or uninformed about the true nature of the market exchange. In this case it happens to be the women, but what is interesting is not so much that women are misinformed, but HOW they came to be misinformed.

First, ladies, you have to understand that for the most part, everything men do (especially when they are younger) is to try to get women. Their primary goal, more often than not is NOT to get to know you to learn to salsa dance or because they have the same interest in movies or art that you do

They want to have sex with you.

Whether you like this or not, is irrelevant. And whether you deem this "moral or not," is moot. It is factual. It is a law. If you don't like this you might as well get angry at things like "The Law of Gravity" or the fact that fire is hot. Besides, you can see the empirical proof of this in two ways.

1. When the hot girls leave ANY dance scene it quickly dries up and becomes a 40 something virgin Christian singles scene or a greencard market

and

2. Ladies night. Do you REALLY think ladies night is just because bar owners want to be nice to ladies? It is because they are acutely aware of the law of the sex-attention exchange and know young men will spend tons of money on women buying them drinks...just like on non-ladies nights.

So when a guys asks you to dance, yes, he may genuinely like to salsa. And yes, he may genuinely want to improve his dancing. But in the end his primary goal is to either get with you OR use you to improve his skills so that he may get with another girl he is attracted to.

Second, knowing the true nature of "ballroom dancing dynamics," we must investigate why women are so misinformed about this and suffer from asymmetrical information. And the answer is simple:

Propaganda or "social conditioning."

The biggest canard told to women today is that men's primary interest in them should be anything but sexual. And if a man's primary interest was sexual, then he was a cad, a lout, and a scumbag (as explicitly detailed in the aforementioned link). But once again, by the laws of nature, men's primary interest in women IS sexual and thus anything you've been told otherwise is a lie. The problem, however, is if women believe these lies they are deluded into thinking they can get attention for free. That men just selflessly, and pointlessly spend hours, nay weeks, learning the various dances, fork over thousands of dollars in cover charges and dance lessons, waste months of their free time at clubs with (typically) lousy music, suffer rejection roughly 1 in every 2 times they ask a girl to dance, all for S's and G's and good ole fashioned, innocent, geewhillikers wholesome Jimmy Stewart, church-going fun.

So when an accomplished dancer parades his female partner at the epicenter of the hottest night club, twirling her like a tornado, dipping her like fondue, making all the other women jealous, and thus begetting her more attention in 4 minutes than she received in the past 4 years, women SERIOUSLY expect there to be no-counter cost or price to that. That the guy just made her the center of attention altruistically and selflessly.

Only 20 years of media, government, feminist, and educational brainwashing could render women so asymmetrically naive.

The sad, but natural consequence of this delusion is that as hotter women are approached more and are "insulted" men dared to have a sexual interest in them, they leave. As there are less hot chicks, the better dancing males leave. The overall quality of looks and talent drops, and the dance scene bubble pops.

So how is a man supposed to approach the debate of whether he should learn to ballroom dance? If the majority of women aren't there for romantic/sexual purposes, why expend the enormous amounts of energy learning to dance?

Well boys, let the Ole Captain tell you.

You SHOULD go and learn to dance. But you should not learn to dance as means to pick up girls.

Not to say you won't pick up girls at a swing dance club or a salsa joint. Sometimes you will. But the primary benefit and reason every man should learn to dance is so that he can reward a quality woman he's already dating with attention. Since (by my estimation) 85% of women on any dance scene are not there for sexual/courting reasons and are really just there for exercise/fun/attention reasons, 85% of your efforts will be wasted (bar the apprenticeship period where you're sole goal is to learn). But if you have a loved one in your life and girl that DESERVES to be the center of attention on a dance floor or a night club, that's when you break out your rare talent. In short use women to learn how to dance so that you may award quality women in the future with that skill.

This post sponsored by Asshole Consulting. You want to be lied to? Hire a regular consultant. Want the truth? Hire an asshole. Asshole Consulting - cheaper and better because assholes don't care about your feelings.

The Shady Characters You Meet

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Anybody recognize this fella? He's got that distrustful shady character look to him.

I'll give you a hint.

Why Every Man Needs a Good Neighborhood Bar

February 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My latest post at Return of Kings.

Thursday Night Linkage

February 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Cornell professors running scared that their students are wising up and minoring in employable degrees. They fear some of them may even switch majors and "not pursue their true passion in life." Keep selling that snake oil you verminous scum. Keep selling it.

Even Google is realizing the worthlessness of college degrees. though, like IQ tests, will the government make them illegal because they discriminate against blacks?

5:19. Just fast forward to 5:19. Tattoos, single mom of 4, horses, and mysticism. You just can't make it up.

$660,000 for a superintendent, who still went bankrupt. Remember teachers hate you.

Book Review - "The Book of Alpha" by David Lorenas

February 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"The Book of Alpha" written by David Lorenas is not a book. It is a guide. It comes in at 74 pages, but about 60 are actual writing, the rest is foreward, TOC, and space between the many chapters.

This is a common criticism I have of many writers on the internet. They write an essay, a treatise, or a guide, but they call it a book.

GUYS, STOP CALLING ANYTHING UNDER 100 PAGES A BOOK. IT'S NOT A BOOK!

That criticism aside, it is actually a pretty good guide. Matter of fact a very solid one and one that every novice or young man should read if new to the Manosphere or just breaking away from the singlemomgovernmentfeministsschool indoctrination matrix.

Yes, you can find this information for free on the internet.

Yes, if you have already consumed copious amounts of manosphere material, you probably won't find much new here.

But it's going to take you a long time to find these key tenets or gems and David has the efficiently and succinctly documented in his guide.

This the what I like most about the guide - its brevity and efficiency. While he doesn't delve into too much detail about the philosophy of "why" you should do these things, he explains them adequately enough for a beginner.

Are you a fat loser wondering why you can't get girls?

Read this book.

Do you hate your job and your career?

Read this book.

Is there anything about your life that you would like to improve?

Read this book.

Best of all, it will take you maybe two sittings to read the entire book and you'll come away with the basic solutions to most of your problems.

My only complaints (aside from it being a guide and not a book) are two:

One, some of his topics/chapters are a bit too touchy-feely girly for me. Stand tall, Breathe Deeply, Meditate...ehhhh....sure, if you want, but those aren't the core issues facing men today.

Two, by no fault of the author's, David has the benefit of employment and things more or less going his way. I could be wrong, but David hasn't suffered any major life failures, crippling events, or devastating or debilitating crises. This leads the book to be a bit optimistic in my opinion. This does not, however negate his advice - it's all correct. But a much better chapter than "Meditate" would be how to maintain and pursue all these bits of advice in the crushingest deepest depths of a hellish life.

In short, I would not recommend this book for anybody who is a man, is a veteran or advanced student of the manosphere, etc., but for rookies and noobs. Nerdy sons whose fathers don't have the heart to tell them to man up. Loser friends who have no guidance or purpsoe in life. And douchebags that need a swift kick in the ass. The Book of Alpha would be a god send in their lives.

You can find "The Book of Alpha" on Amazon in both paperback and kindle.

"Obscene Profit Break"

February 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Well, hopefully obscene, but i'll settle for just "keeping the lights on."

Academic Composition - Be smart just like your future employers and corporations! OUTSOURCE your stupid liberal arts prereq classes homework to Alex! He charges $20 a page for writing papers so you don't have to. Besides you liberal arts professors really don't care. They just want your money and are thankful for having a job with a worthless degree!

Asshole Consulting - Want to be lied to? Well hire a real consulting company or read Cosmo. Want the truth? Hire an asshole, like me! Asshole Consulting - because everybody needs an asshole.

Rattlerstrap - It's neither a rattler, nor a strap, but a paracord belt every outdoorsman and outdoorsgoddess needs when hiking. Get yours at www.rattlerstrap.com

Talon Knife - Small, discreet, and great for personal defense, especially when you're kidnapped or absconded with.

How the Government, Media, and Education Industries Suck the Life Blood Out of Women

February 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

and MORE!

In this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

Friday Night Linkage

March 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

HR, female, and baby boomer. And look at how she covets her precious little "high level senior level network." Never once did it occur to this "recruiter" to look at talent. Not once. It's all about power and status.

The difference between "qualified" and "entitled."

Looks like the white kids have cooler toys. But sarcasm aside, it's blatantly racist and laughably inaccurate. Maybe if you put a laptop or a calculator in their hands it might be more accurate.

OK, maybe some white kids do like guns. But they shoot predators and not other humans with it.

Aurini's latest podcast.

Saturday Afternoon Boredom

March 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Remember, if you're bored this afternoon (or any noon) you can always download the latest Clarey Podcast.

Archives found here.

The Economy Is Building a Resistance to Keynesianism

March 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Like bacteria can build up a resistance to antibiotics, or an alcoholic can build up his tolerance for alcohol, so too can an economy build up a resistance to Keynesianism. We are now in our 5th year of Obama's Keynesian wet dream (13th if you want to be fiscally technical) and unlike Bush Jr's economic growth, Obama's growth figures are "paltry" at best. Even taking out the recession Obama has only managed to grow the economy by 2% per year, not enough to increase standards of living with a growing population. And if you wanted to compare "stimulus" vs. "economic growth" a chart showing the ratio of GDP growth to deficit spending as a percent of GDP shows government spending is having the least amount of effect on growth in history.

Why is happening? Why isn't Keynesianism working? And why is Paul Krugman in the fetal position, crying and sucking his thumb?

Let a real economist answer.

First you have to understand that while most Americans aren't smart, let alone savvy on economics, there is SMART MONEY. People who have money and are smart about it. These are your entrepreneurs, investors, businessmen, industrialists, etc. These people are, and always have been, the people that make or break an economy. Without these people you are just left with workers (who are honorable and good) and parasites (government workers, freeloaders, etc.), both of which rely on the "smart money people" for their jobs, and in the case of parasites, taxes, economic growth, and money.

Sadly for Keynesians, the smart money is reading the writing on the wall. And while a little bit of Keynesian stimulus might be OK, when you have so much of it, it threatens the fiscal stability of the nation, then they get worried. Additionally, even if these "smart money" people believe in Keynesianism, when the majority of the money gets handed out for political purposes instead of genuine investments, you start to see a kleptocracy instead of on overly concerned, but well-intentioned government. This further deters investments and moots the effectiveness of Keynesian stimulus.

Second, there is always a "message" attached to Keynesian stimulus. This "message" is important because it tells investors, businessmen, entrepreneuers, and employers what the intentions are of the government. And there can be no starker contrast between the two presidents who have ran up the largest deficits since WWII:

Barack Obama and

President Reagan

Both presidents ran deficits that would make Keynes giggle - Reagan around 4.7% and Obama around 8%. However, the message between the two presidents could not be more stark:

Reagan's message was:

Pro-America
Pro-growth
Pro-business
Pro-success
Pro-excellent
Pro-achievement

Obama's message was/is:

Anti-American (yes, yes it is)
Class warfare
Fair outcomes/equalization of income
Anti-business
Mediocrity
Woeismism/Victimization/Racism

In short Reagan wanted to invest in the future of America while Obama hates nothing more than America and wants to redistribute wealth.

Criticize the above if you must, but the "smart money" doesn't care about your opinion. It's already spoken. Gold alone shows the difference to how receptive the smart money people are to the two presidents. Even with dangerous levels of deficit spending, people had enough faith in Reagan that they pulled their money out of gold and invested it in America. Obama, it's the opposite - people went screaming for gold.

Unemployment is another metric you can use. After Reagan took office, unemployment tanked primarily because jobs were being created. Obama has relied on people leaving the work force to lower unemployment, and even then unemployment is stubbornly high.

And revisiting the original purpose of this post, economic growth under Reagan was more positive and responsive to deficit spending than under Obama:

Ultimately what the above shows is that economists have got to get over themselves thinking economics is a science and that they are somehow smart. That people are somehow their little playthings and lab rats. That the idea that the government should somehow "intervene" to "help" is the most arrogant and cocky thing to think because it implies professors, policy wonks, and politicians know what's best for people more than the people themselves. But what's worse is when the intention of Keynesian spending goes from "noble" to "political." And your buddy Obama has gotten rid of all pretenses about using Keynesian economic policies to "boost the economy" as he blatantly abuses it to steal from the productive to bribe his parasitic constituents.

And you all wonder why economy isn't growing.

Saturday Night Linkage

March 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Daddy cuts the purse strings to Ms. Independent 37 year old and makes her raise her own children. Ahhhhh...warm fuzzies.

Girls confuse "mean" with "truth." If telling girls the truth is mean, then lying must be "nice." Oh...wait...that's what we've been doing to women for the past 50 years. Oh well, enjoy being condemned to 2nd place forever ladies.

Clarissa explains the Ukrainian situation. She does not like the Russians much.

Sunday Night Linkage

March 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Final piece of political correctness and Roosh.

When OWS became the Banksters. More on this later. (post script, she banned comments on that video, so maybe you can post comments on her other video that is equally retarded.)

Resident DJ and musician Jacob Gago has a new album out for any tech/industrial/house music fans out there in the Cappysphere.

And a comparison of the two presidents. Lord help us.

Why the "Oscars" Are Purely an AARP Baby Boomer Affair

March 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

When growing up my mom made it seem that the Ms. America pageant and the Ms. World pageant were important. She also made me think that the Oscars were somehow important. Matter of fact every major television event was deemed to be important because...

well...

television said so.

And so there I sat, for reasons unknown to me, watching dutifully the various pageantry and pomp along with 200 million other doltish Americans.

But as I grew up and realized I had more pressing matters (food, clothing, shelter, friends, life, etc.) things like the Ms. American Pageant, the World Series, the Superbowl, and the Oscars went to the wayside and I don't think I could name one team/person/actor that ever won or were nominated.

Fast forward 20 years and the Oscars have become something like your appendix:

It may have served a purpose at one point in time in the past, but it no longer does now.

And that criticism can be levied against pretty much every form of "award" or "trophy" since the boomers took over.

Take for instance the "Nobel Peace Prize."

What a laughable joke that has become.

It would be more aptly named, "Prize given to leftists that other leftists in Scandinavia like and will use to reciprocally politically masturbate one another and we don't give two flying f#cks about peace."

"Teacher of the year" anybody? Yes, you championed socialism and brainwashed little children to vote the way they need to to ensure your pension is funded. They have no skills, they have no talent, and you are laughably not a REAL educator, teacher, or mentor, but hey, you towed the socialist line the best, so let's lie to the people and call you "teacher of the year."

And what obsoleted "honor list" would not be complete without that veritable worthless rag Time Magazine. Yes, their "Person of the Year" award. How galactically vain, retarded, stupid, pointless, political and other adjectives I can't use because it's "No Cursing Week." Yes, if you want to know your career is over, just look to see if Time Magazine has published something about you.

In short, the premier societal prizes and awards that were given to people of genuine competence and skill have been completely co-opted by political forces to use as a tool to fool Americans into thinking they are wrong, their tastes are wrong, and perhaps even bigoted and racist. That society is much more hip and classy than the average American really is, and you are just a rube, a noob, and a hick if you don't believe "12 years a Slave" is the greatest movie ever.

The truth is these are all false trophies, all false prizes, and are nothing more than propagandist tools. The Oscars, the Nobel Peace Prize, Time's "Entity of the Year" and the Pulitzer no longer have any meaning, veracity, worth, merit or relevance. They have been co-opted and corrupted by the baby boomer's AARP/leftist/political arm and are about as relevant and purposeful to society as the people advocating them (worthless).

So when you're asked this week to attend an "Oscar" party by an aging 50 something, or somebody comments on who the latest Pulitzer prize winner is, or somebody says, "my goodness, did you see who Time declared person of the year!?" do yourself and your generation a favor. Pat them on the head. Fetch them some Metamucil, and be thankful these pointless, self-serving and aggrandizing "prizes" will go the way of the dinosaur in about 20 years.

Because by that time the generations that are alive will have much more pressing financial and economic matters to attend to and won't be able to afford to worry about what meaningless award a group of leftists concocted, created, and awarded to themselves.

Enjoy the decline!

When OWS Became the Banksters

March 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Two groups of people I wish we could arm heavily and have them duke it out like the Nazi's and the Communists would be the OWS protestors and the banker scum. Give them whatever they want, arm them to the teeth, throw in some good chemical weaponry for good measure, and let them go at in in the New Mexican desert. It would be like two forms of cancers fighting each other in a human body. But whereas I passionately loathe each group for different reasons, the OWS camp is about to add "hypocrisy" to their own list.

Welcome the "I majored in debt" meme.

If you don't know what this latest meme is, it's akin to the "I need feminism" meme where idiotic college students put together videos whining about their student loan plight. They have $40,000 in debt, $50,000 in debt, $75,000 in debt, and (surprise, surprise) they asking you me and all the other responsible, productive taxpayers to bail them out with HR 4170 (the Student Loan Forgiveness Act).

There's just one major problem.

Aren't these college students asking for the US taxpayer to bail them out of their stupidity just like the bankers did with TARP?

If you look at the two groups (OWS/lefty students and banker scum) they're the exact same.

1. They did absolutely no research to assess the value of their investments
2. They borrowed huge amounts of OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY to make said investments
3. And when said investments didn't pay off they went crying and whining to the taxpayer to bail them out

The only difference is that OWS/lefty students never made any attempt to be profitable in the first place. If you watch the videos you'll notice damn well near 100% of them all majored in some worthless touchy feely liberal arts BS. They treated it like a hobby and are "shocked, SHOCKED" they can't find a job with a Masters in Hatewhitemale Studies. Worse still, they have absolutely no shame about it. They don't blame themselves for their lazy decision to choose an easy major, they don't blame their parents or teachers/counselors for the crappy guidance they received, and in true brainwashed and programmed-dolt fashion fail to see the irony when they come running us for a bail out.

What the "I Majored in Debt" meme ultimately shows is how the Millennial generation has followed their Gen X and Baby Boomer predecessors in failing to grow up and become responsible adults. However, they've taken it to a whole new level. They've perfected the art. They're not even cognizant of the incredible mistakes they're making, how those mistakes cripple their futures, and STILL have the attitude of entitlement and "somebody has to do something about this!"

Sadly for them the socialist experiment has run out of money. Not only are there no jobs (because they voted for an anti-business, anti-capitalism government), but what money is being spent is not being spent on them. Instead, they are the victims of their own socialist machinery. The government, education industry, and politicians LOVE liberal-arts majoring children because these child-sheeple are the only ones idiotic enough to take out hundreds of billions of dollars in student loans and give it to their leftist-socialist professor indoctrinators. It may disgust you that adult-children are asking for your money, but it is the perfect example of where "Worthless" meets "Enjoy the Decline." So pour yourself a drink and sip away as you enjoy the schadenfreude warms fuzzies as reality hits these useful idiots upside their heads.

Sex, Drugs, and Finance

March 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

New lieutenant added to the blogroll: Sex Drugs and Finance.

Late Night Monday Linkage

March 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's "Moderate Muslim Monday!"

At anytime American conservatives could wield immense political power if they simply boycotted Hollywood, Coke, and now Apple. But that would just inconvenience your cute SWPL, cookie cutter suburanite lives wouldn't it? Please breed so your children suffer you're complacency.

Speaking of boycott.

The Epitome of "Spoiled American Princess"

March 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just can't make it up. Just can't make it up.

hat tip

There's the Right Way and the WRONG Way to Do Your Taxes

March 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

New and TIMELY sponsor ladies and gentlemen.

Chad Elkin's 2014 Comprehensive Tax Guide.

You haven't done your taxes (and don't worry, neither have I. I've been a bad economist). But before you do consider purchasing Chad's book. Though written for preparers, it is a great book for anybody concerned about their taxes, people who want to do their own taxes, and some helpful hints about dealing with the IRS.

Also, since may of you are the entrepreneurial type and starting your own business, don't be a dumbass and botch your taxes. This is a MUST to make sure you're not one of those idiots while drinking at the bar with your buddies who says,

"Hey Mike, ask me about business!"

"How's business!"

"It's good! HEY!!! I get to write off the tab!!!!"

You don't need a degree in accounting, just this book.

So go forth and purchase. It's cheaper than a bottle of premium beer and will be much better for you.

Stewardship of the Country

March 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Realize that since you live in a democracy it is you, the individual, who is ultimately responsible for the governance and leadership of the nation. You are responsible for picking the people in society to lead us and therefore it behooves you to inform and educate yourself about which people and which governmental policies are best for the country and the best for our future. Unfortunately, this decision is ALWAYS obscured, confounded, and blurred by politics, corruption, and just plain evil. People who couldn't care less about the future of the country, look to politics for an easy and lifelong career. People who are immoral look to government as a means to enrich themselves. People who are just plain power hungry egomaniacs become politicians instead of selfless, altruistic statesmen. And the way these amoral scum get into office is very simple – they lie.

They lie about reality. They lie about the economy. They lie about their intentions. They lie about lying. It is nearly impossible to tell who is telling the truth, let alone what precisely is the truth. But there is a way to cut through all the propaganda, deceit, and falsehoods – economics.

Tuesday Night Linkage

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Fancy cars triple your success over cruddy cars in terms of women.

Uncle Jay explains the news!

Animals you do and do NOT want to bring back from extinction.

The grad school scam. Sadly, it really isn't satire.

The Difference Between Sales and Profits

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This is an important distinction to know:

SALES is your total revenue. NOT YOUR TAKE HOME PAY.

PROFITS is what you get to keep after expenses.

Somebody tell the fat balding middle age faux "businessmen" and fratboy sales reps that.

Your Daughter Calls Me Daddy Too!

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dear American Fathers Without Spines,

Please continue to fail to raise your daughters properly. We younger men need you to lie to your daughters about "follow your heart and the money will follow, Sweetheart" so they:

Major in stupid subjects
Go into crippling debt to do so Can't find a job to pay their debts back and are forced to become strippers, prostitutes and porn actresses.

Such desperation not only increases the supply of young, supple 20 something babes, but lowers the price we have to pay.

Your continued support of failing to be genuine real fathers to your "Precious Little Princess" is very much appreciated.

Sincerely,

The Younger Men in America

New Podcast Entry

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Radio Derb.

You will obey.

You will conform.

You will listen.

If Monica Lewinsky Was a Camel

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Guess what day it is!?

"The Guy Looks Like He Has Kids in His Basement" Podcast

March 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Why Senator Murphy looks like he has kids in the basement,
How there's ALWAYS an excuse to eat and not work out,
A movie review of "3 Days to Kill"
Why Connecticut gun owners should refuse to comply with the new gun registration law,

and MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

New Sponsor - Ten Buck Truck

March 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The concept is simple.

You pay this young man $10, he'll design and put a bumper sticker on his Ford -150 and drive it around.

Why Trevor Phillips Is Another Nail in Hollywood's Coffin

March 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just finished GTAV and it is certainly one of the best games I've played in a long time. Many good things going for it, but hands down the best thing it had going for it was its character development in a player called "Trevor Phillips."

If you don't want to play the video game and just get an idea of what makes Trevor Phillips such a crown jewel of the game, just watch some of the youtube clips of cutscenes starring Trevor. (cursing and violence warning BUT I would like you to watch it so you realize my cursing is quite tame). You may find it a bit crass, but you will no doubt have to admit that the character development is amazing and Trevor is quite colorful.

So why does a video game character, no matter how well-done, pose a threat to Hollywood?

Time and money. Time and money.

See, even with the extra $20 I had to spend on an external thumb drive to play the $50 game, I got no less than 35 hours of game play out of the game. That's $2 per hour of entertainment and I'm not even 65% done with all the missions. Whereas two nights ago

I forked over $17 to see a craptacular movie called "3 Days to Kill" (movie review found here). Not only was it bad, it was only 2 hours, so $8.5 per hour. So not only was the video game more entertaining (not to mention interactive) than the movie, it was a fraction of the cost.

But where the likes of Trevor Phillips REALLY poses a threat to Hollywood can be found in the credits after you conquer GTAV.

They took forever.

Why?

Well, think of it this way. The programming, the development, the art, the coding, the voice acting, the scripts, everything that went into creating a massive, engaging environment, not to mention a near 35 hour movie, obviously take more time, people, and money than a 2 hour film. But in doing so they produce a product that lasts multifold times longer making it not just a cheaper per hour form of entertainment but a superior form of entertainment. I pay my $2 per hour and I can get about 17 movies out of this game. And when it involves incredibly well developed and endearing characters like Trevor Phillips, the question then becomes, "George Clooney who?"

In short, I've spent more hours sitting in front of JUST ONE video game this past two weeks than I have movies the past 3 years and it's acting is an IMPROVEMENT over films. Soon as technology gets so advanced you can't tell a digital version of a person versus the real thing, real live actors won't be able to compete with the perfection and costs of computers. Alas, George Clooney and Hugh Jackman shouldn't be so concerned about me pursuing an acting career as much as they should advances in computer processing speeds.

Masters in Zombie Studies

March 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

The Chinese have got to be laughing at us. They have just got to be laughing at us and figuring out what "special" slave camp to put these morons in.

Remember, Last Podcast is Out

March 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Can be found here.

A Primer on Capitalism, Socialism, and Communism

March 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I received an interview request from a student who was writing an economics paper. The questions I realized were probably questions many people had and though they may tangentially be educated about various economic systems a good introduction into the three man economic systems may be called for.

1. Can you define each of the three? Communism, Socialism, and capitalism. What are the differences?

There is debate between the definitions of all three. But traditionally the three fit along a spectrum from total government ownership of everything (communism) to technically the absolute absence of government (anarchy) "Socialism" fits in between where the government owns OR TAXES at a rate of around 50%. However, sometimes people refer to "socialism" as the same thing as "communism." So when you are reading or talking about socialism, you need to know what context it's in. Are they talking Sweden or Norway where 50% of GDP is taxed, or are they talking SOCIALISM as in a purely 100% totalitarian Marxist control of the economy.

2. Can you list examples of each? Can be modern examples or past examples.

Capitalism – Bermuda, Singapore, 1940's America, Cayman Islands, Hong Kong
Socialism – Current day US, all of Europe, Canada
Communist – Venezuela, Cuba, Soviet Union, North Korea, East Germany, California (just kidding)

3. Are there any misconceptions that people have? If so why might people believe these misconceptions

Yes, absolutely. The reason people have misconceptions is because most people (Americans) are idiots when it comes to economics. They're more concerned about Kim Kardashian than they are the US federal deficit. The most typical of these misconceptions is that the US is somehow a "capitalist" country or that China is a "communist" country. None of them take the time to study economics, tax rates, spending rates, etc., so most people are arguing from idiotic emotions rather than unbiased, cold, heartless facts and statistics.

4. How does government play a role in each? How does the citizen population play role?

Citizen population only plays a role in terms of voting. But the government plays a role based on how involved or how much ownership it has in an economy. If the government tax or spending rate is 50%+ of GDP, then it's a solid socialist or communist country. If the government only consumes or spends 20% of the economy, then it's a solid capitalist country.

5. Are there any flaws in each of them? What are they and can they be fixed?

This would take 10 books to answer. In short, the biggest flaw in socialism or communism is that it invariably ends up with more parasites than producers in the economy. Government spending and welfare freebies make it more attractive not to work than to work. Economic production collapses to the point it can no longer support itself and you get deficit spending, trade deficits, and inevitably countries cut you off and you collapse. Starvation and general economic crappiness ensues.

Capitalism, however, is not without its problems. Usually economic growth is so great it allows for one, even three, generations to live off of the work and backs of just one. Those successive generations lose the lessons of hard work, toil, and innovation. Consequently, the money runs out and you have spoiled little brats expecting a free handout. Also, capitalism is high susceptible to "crony capitalism," wherein successful business use their money and lobbying power to bribe the government to pass unfair laws that advantage said people. The bank bailouts, Chesapeake Energy's shutting down of the Keystone Pipeline, even the teapot dome scandal are all examples of capitalism becoming corrupt and thus "crony capitalism"
Both have their disadvantages, but crony capitalism has yet to kill 100 million people in peacetime through starvation.

6. Do some just work in theory and not in reality? If so why?

Yes. Communism is based in a (veritable) madman's idealism (just look up the personal habits of Karl Marx). Capitalism is based in human nature by much more hygienic and sane 18th century philosophers. People are always greedy, always going to serve themselves, so why not build an economic system around it. Only idealistic idiots think about puppies and flowers and unicorns about "wouldn't it be great if everybody made the same amount of money" blabbity blah blah blah. Besides, Marx and Smith are moot. There's over 200 years of track records between the two ideologies. Socialist/communist countries have failed miserably compared to the capitalist counterparts.

North Korea vs. South Korea
East vs. West Germany
The US vs. the USSR
Communist China vs. Capitalist China.

Not to abbreviate or dumb down the life long economic argument, a system that allows its people to keep the majority of the fruits of their labor will result in people producing more fruit. You want to confiscate/steal/tax them, then you deter work and deter economic production. The fact this is even a debate shows how political forces have desperately tried to corrupt it.

7. Has a country ever switched to another system (ex. Communism to socialism, socialism to capitalism) ? If so why? Was it successful? Did it fail? What were the reasons for its outcome

Not drastically, but then again, I'm going off of the current knowledge I have now. A historian would know, but no examples are coming to me now. There are some instances (say the Baltics) that broke away from Soviet Russia and did quite well in the 90's, but many of those countries reverted back to their socialistic tendencies and are in the crapper again. But anything as "drastic as that" is not available. Countries change slowly over time. So your best case studies are countries divided by socialism and capitalism a la the Koreas and E. vs. W. Germany.

8. Do these systems affect the quality of life, standard of living, or freedom?

Most certainly yes. All one has to do is compare South Korea standards of living vs. the North. East vs. West German standards of living. The comparison isn't even close. The "most successful communist country" (USSR) only had 33% the standards of living the US did. About the only "socialist" successes are the Scandinavian countries . But even they had financial problems or (in the case of Norway) are lucky enough to have oil account for a full 25% of their economy. Those abberations aside you can expect most socialist countries to be a 2nd place/2nd rate western European country like Spain, Italy, France, etc.

9. Do factors such as corruption, poor leadership, geography, population, crime etc. affect these systems?

Oh, most certainly and this gets back to the issue of crony capitalism. Technically Russia today is a capitalist country. But that is only by stated tax rates. It's so corrupt nothing else can get done. Corruption is largely a non-economic issue. If corruption has influenced and infected a country, then it's economic policies are largely rendered moot. Africa is a perfect example of this. You and me and everybody else could debate the economic policies of Somalia all day. It doesn't matter, because it's a shithole that's highly corrupted, highly war-torn and until you have the establishment of law, "economic theories" are truly first world problems that are not relevant to Somalia.

As for other factors (geography, population), not and Hong Kong, Singapore, the Caymans, etc. prove this. If you do not have corruption and a motivated AND MORAL work force, you can achieve anything. Sinapore's and Hong Kong's stratospheric rise in economic growth is proof you don't need a ton of resources. You just need smart people motivated people, and honorable people. This is one of the best things about capitalism in that it allows people to achieve their best no matter what the geographic or natural resource handicaps are. Smart people always find a way to succeed, it's an issue of whether a government will let them, or tax/steal from them so a politician can bribe poorer people to put him/her into power.

10. Why do some work for certain countries while others seem to work better for different countries

There are absolutely various sociological reason an economic system works better than not. For example the Scandinavian countries seem to do very well with socialism. But they are (at least for now) a homogenous society with a solid national identity. In the US it doesn't work so well because, bluntly, there are various races and instead of focusing on talent, skill, and character, political lines have been drawn (primarily by the democrat party) to alienate and pose against different sex, creed, colors, religions, etc. So if you have a variable (like homogenous population), sometimes socialism "can" work. But once you get different groups of people in, then natural human envy takes hold and an argument for the transference of wealth of a "privileged" class to the "underprivileged class" occurs, consequently destroying the economy in the process.

11. Which one is better in your opinion? Why?

Capitalism. NOT CRONYcapitalism. But real capitalism.
And there is no opinion. It's because it is what has helped serve and advance society and humanity the most. And the argument isn't even close. Capitalism, free markets, free men have yielded more inventions, more advances, more drugs, more innovations, etc., than any socialist or communist nation has. It boils down to whether or not you're going to let individual achieve their best and reaps the rewards of them achieving their best, or go some idiotic, whinny, wimpy, "woe is me I need other people's money" route. Do you award the winners or losers.

Even the losers benefit from a capitalist society because the Steve Jobs and Jonas Salks and Wright Brothers are allowed to achieve their best, creating new innovations and creations that improve the standards of livings of EVERYONE infinitely more than mere income transfers and socialist parasitism can. It's why North Korea today presumably spends all of its money on "the people," but the poorest people of the US are richer than your average "rich" North Korean.

12. Can you give modern examples of each one?

Sure, North Korea, South Korea.
1980's US vs. 1980' USSR
East vs. West Germany

Monaco/Lichtenstein/Luxembourgh vs. All of Europe

Just look at history and ask yourself a simple question:

Do countries that allow their people to be free and keep the majority of the fruits of their labor result in higher standards of living, higher life expectancies, higher innovation, and higher economic growth

Or

Do countries that confiscate/tax 80% of their people's production, to transfer it to people who don't work or are as not efficient, result in higher standard of living, higher life expectancies, higher innovation, and higher economic growth.

The question is so simple it moots the entire "study" of economics.

Thursday Night Linkage

March 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What would Wendy Davis do? Oh, what this female politician just did! Again, women are HORRIBLE with money.

How do you tell you're on the way to learning the truth? When the Southern Poverty Law Center targets you and calls you a bigot.

The Truth About Abraham Lincoln - a heck of a podcast that changed my mind about the man and showed me how little slavery was part of the Civil War.

Man Ex reviews Bachelor Pad Economics and disagrees with me on a key subject. Remember, if you write a review, let me know!

Annnnnnd then I wonder if the youth even deserve saving. Bunch of brainwashed lemmings.

A True Story About Communism

March 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our Son of a Communist Worker in the Field:

Communism is the application and enforcement of flawed socialist economics by firing squad.

To illustrate let me tell you a true story of what happened to my mother on a Kolkhoz (state farm) in the former Workers Paradise.

My mother was assigned to a dairy farm, to help milk the cows and other duties as befitting a farm girl. The farm had a quota which was to be picked up and delivered to the milk processing plants. As long as the cows were healthy and happy, the quota was maintained.

One day, however, the cows got sick and milk production dropped to less than half the assigned quota. A few days later the commissars came by to investigate. The commissars refused to accept the fact that the cows were sick and accused the farm manager of stealing the milk. My mother said that he just went white as a sheet. They also threatened the manager and half the staff, including my mother with execution if the thefts didn't stop.

The manager said that he would take steps to ensure that from now on full quota would be delivered on time.

Of course the cows were still sick and couldn't provide the volume of milk required to fulfil the quota.

The solution? Simply top up the half empty milk containers with well water and voila, quota met.

Socialism, Communism Fascism and Nazism are all branches of the same tree and ALL are EVIL.

I want all the little spoiled brat American children who live off of the innovations and savings and (now) credit/borrowings capitalism created/allowed for to pay attention.

The least of your problems will be that you can't afford the iPhone 7 when your ignorance manifests itself in something similar to the USSR. And there will be no better deserving generation than the OWS'ers.

Oh well, Enjoy the Decline!

Ladies, Think Twice Before You Declare Yourself a Feminist

March 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because it's not what you think:

Target Fires Their Affirmative Action Hire

March 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Former Target CIO Jacob, [female] who holds an MBA, began her career with Target in 1984 as an assistant buyer in Target's department store division, Dayton's, for two years. She was hired by Target in 2002 as director of guest contact centers, and named vice president, guest operations in 2006.

Emphasis mine.

Question lieutenants, economists, agents in the field and chillllldlren!

Why would a large corporation promote a person with

NO IT experience, an "MBA,"
and an expertise in "guest services" to the CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER ROLE??????

Anyone?
Anyone?

Bueller?
Bueller?

Oh, that's right! It begins with an "A" and ends with "ffirmative Action!"

Well at least they had diversity at Target Corp and that's definitely worth a cool billion!

hat tip

Friday Night Linkage

March 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Average is average.

You are not a "bright young woman" if you are majoring in early childhood education. You are a babysitter.

Nomad Capitalist radio is back with it's first episode of 2014.

A tale of two grandmothers, one traditional, one careerist. Guess who won at the game of life!

When Myopic MBA Douchebags are Put in Charge

March 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You get idiotic decisions like this.

Saturday Night Linkage

March 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

If you're going to stop smoking, don't do it cold turkey. Somebody tell Aurini.

I love happy endings. Don't you?

I will put a slightly different, but related spin on this. Men will always find a way to say yes, women will always find a way to say now. This is one of the many reasons for the earnings gap.

I am better than your kids.

Cat fight amongst liberal women. Moewroar! In short this heffer is upset white women are using belly dancing which is I guess the preserve of Arab women. I find it laughable because no man would want to see that oil tanker belly dance.

A Short Man is Like a Fat Woman

March 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The LADIES (Bill Burr emphasis) over at Return of Queens came up with an explanation of their scale of attraction for men on a scale of 1-10...

well...OK,

they ATTEMPTED to come up with a scale of 1-10, but being the lovely females they are, nothing is ever so simple. Their attraction to males is a bit more multi-faceted for a simple linear scale, so it became a list of "do's and don't's" instead. Perhaps not as simple as us men were looking for, but helpful nonetheless.

However, one of the best bits of advice was about short men, specifically, how women are just not attracted to them, and this needs to be expanded a little more for the benefit of our shorter brothers.

If you were like me and every other boy/man in America, you were brought up believing what your parents and teachers told you - that women would like you for you and just be yourself blabbity blah blah blah. You were also maybe told women preferred dark, TALL, men, but that was the extent to which height was addressed. And thus you were sent out into the world, thinking your height was no serious disadvantage. That like you, women weren't bigoted against people shorter than them and just as you were comfortable dating a girl taller than you, women would be comfortable dating men shorter than them.

Oh, how wrong you were. For while not addressed or talked about much, height is arguably the number one thing women look at. And I would go so far to say they are repulsed by shortness on a level almost as much as men are repulsed by fat.

While I have seen no studies, anecdotally there is enough data a study doesn't have to be commissioned. It is usually the case women are shorter than their partner. Only during my "ballroom dancing prime" was I able to score taller girls (and they would usually not stick around). And we can of course take what the ladies at ROQ are saying at face value. But if there is a case study that proves the "shortness handicap" it is my much more ripped IT counterpart. This "friend" is basically me on steroids and improved in every other category.

He makes six figures
He is an infinitely better mechanic than I am
He is a computer genius
He races cars and rides motorcycles
He's way more ripped than I am

Has a nicer house
Has a nicer car
Has a higher networth

oh, and he is an accomplished dancer AND musician.

You could not really improve a human more.

But, alas, he is 5'9", and that's where he "fails." Matter of fact it was a conversation we had about a month ago that prompted me to look at shortness as such a handicap, and the ROQ piece confirms it. You can be the most accomplished man in every aspect of your life, superior to most of your competitors, but if you're short, you might as well be that "fat girl with a great personality."

So what is a short guy to do?

Well the primary purpose of this post is to at least MAKE YOU AWARE of your handicap. I do this NOT to berate you or make you feel bad, but to improve your chances with women. A soldier that goes into battle unaware of his greatest weakness or operating on false information is going to fail compared to a soldier that DOES know his greatest weakness and makes decisions accounting for it. So if you are short (I would say 5'10" or shorter) REALIZE and ACCEPT women are just not going to be as attracted to you.

Don't listen to what your parents say
Don't listen to what your friends who are girls say
Don't listen to what society says

If you are working out, interesting, good looking, and doing everything "right," if you're short THAT is the reason you are failing with women, just like FAT is the reason woman will fail with men.

Second, well while a fat girl can always lose weight (well, according to science and biology anyway, HAR HAR HAR!), a short man simply cannot increase his height. There is no "solution" to height.

Correct, so, like the ladies at ROQ point out, you are merely going to be relegated to shorter girls.

This is alright because, again, men really don't care that much about height. And there's plenty of short girls around. The problem is (as many online dating profiles will show you) short girls are just as picky as their taller female counterparts when it comes to the height of men. Profiles are abound of 5'1" girls DEMANDING a man 6'0" or taller. This "height spread" combined with the fact taller men aren't going to turn down a girl based on height, pushes short men out of the "height market."

Regardless, you're just going to have to "aim low" and not bother approaching taller girls.

Third, lie.

Do women put on makeup?

Do women wear clothes that adjust their shape?

Do women wear heels?

Women lie all the time about their appearance, so the least you can do is lie about your height.

Of course, this isn't Gattica, so how do you lie?

Pull a Prince and get some platform shoes. Nothing 4" or anything as drastic as that, but an additional 1.5" will still look like a "normal" shoes, but mayhaps give you that edge you need.

Fourth, charm. I am a student of Walter Matthau because the man did not look like Steve McQueen, but still managed to be charming. It won't fully compensate for being short (as my IT doppelganger has shown), but a devastating charm can add a couple inches in height.

Finally, if push comes to shove, Asian and Latin countries. Women in these countries tend to be short. And of course this is doing no service to our Asian or Latino brothers, but sorry guys, all's fair. If height is pushing you out of the taller-Anglo/Scandinavian/basketball-player market, you'll just have to go to cultures where women are biologically shorter.

Whatever strategy or strategies you choose to pursue, the key lesson to pull from this is to realize just what a severe handicap being short is for a guy. It's not a "minor" inconvenience. It's not "something shallow girls insist on." It is a genetically hardwired preference of women, neither to be berated or shamed. It is a law, and a law you need to abide by.

The Captain Beats Out Ivy League Schools' Economics Departments

March 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

At an Ivy league college I took two semesters of economics - "micro" and "macro" economics, all of which turned out to be crap. Wish I saved some money on those courses, as well as some sanity, and read this book instead.

Well, that is because the Ivy League's economists are not gifted with SAEG (TM).

Regardless, yes, my book is only $27 ($10 on Kindle) while two Ivy Plague econ classes will probably set you back $10,000 and 200 braincells.

When Your Job Hunt Strategy Consists of "Hopefully the Economy Will Turn Around"

March 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I love it when college graduates never paid attention to economics class:

The Truth Industry

March 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Working in the financial services industry sucks. While you would think it is a viable career, an industry that is vital and necessary for the economy (and it is), it has been overrun by incompetent morons, charlatans, and politicians. It's why the dotcom crash occurred, it's why the housing bubble occurred, it's why the Fed is debasing the currency, and bar a parasitic class, it is the number one reason the country will collapse. I am incredibly thankful I'm out of it and have the career I do today.

But what is that "career" precisely?

Blogging guy who writes the occasional book?
Social media guy who blogs and charges for advertising?
Schmoe who wakes up at 11AM and screams at the internet?

It's amorphous and hard to define, but after much contemplation and thought, I finally realized what me and all the other blogger/podcaster/youtubing people are in the various spheres of the internet:

The Truth Industry.

Oh, claim I'm being grandiose and thinking highly of myself, but that really is what our industry is - the truth. And if you think about it, that is precisely the product we offer.

The irony of course is how this industry even formed and, even more so, to whom me and all the other people who work in the truth industry owe our new-found careers. For if you think about it, we owe our success to (by my estimation) 8 groups of people. These people have allowed me and hundreds of others to sleep in till 11AM, work from anywhere in the world, tell our bosses to shove it, have 100% freedom in how we work, and, above all else, given us a monopoly on the largest and most untapped market.
These 8 groups are:

Socialists/Democrats/Politicians
Feminists
Parents Who Divorce
Absentee Fathers
Wimpy Fathers (those who stick around, but are emasculated and not real men)
Public Schools
The Media and the University System

And the market they've kindly handed to us on a silver platter are:

Delusional people who they've all lied to and are now desperately seeking the truth.

Permit me to explain.

There is the real world. This world is based in reality. And governing this real world are not only physical and scientific laws, but hardline economic and social laws that cannot be violated:

Everybody needs to work
Men don't like fat chicks
Women like strong, manly men
The nuclear family is the best unit to raise children Specialized skills are in higher demand

etc.

The closer people or a society live by these rules, the better and more successful their lives will be. And over the eons humans have slowly reversed engineered these social laws and incorporated them into society either through actual law or passed-down "wisdom."

But what if somebody wanted to circumvent these laws? What if somebody was lazy or unethical and wanted to profit off of society? Well, they'd simply realize that the real world is very tough, sometimes, not fair. Heck, the real world is brutal often times. So an unethical/evil person would capitalize on these unfortunate facts of life and lie to people telling them what they WANT to hear, and not what they NEED to hear:

You don't have to work for a living.
Fat is beautiful
You are oppressed and entitled to other people's money.
You are not responsible for your own mistakes
Etc.

And these lies are perpetrated on society by the aforementioned 8 groups of people.

Socialists/Democrats tell people lies about not having to work for a living, not having to carry their own weight, and are masters at seeding division and hate among racial, sexual, and religious lines. They are also masters at concocting the most outlandish rationalizations such as "social justice" or "racism" for what amounts to nothing more than theft. Anything to keep their voting block ignorant, impoverished, and therefore the socialists in power.

Feminists love nothing more than lying to women about the nature of themselves and men, because it prevents them from having to expend any effort in life. Work hard to stay in shape? Work hard to get an IT degree and support yourself? Work hard to support a family?

Hell no!

Better to claim you're beaufitul, smart, intelligent, and independent just the way you are as you bloat over 300 pounds, major in and therefore offer nothing of value to society, and by consequence need constant taxpayer subsidy from the government. Meanwhile in your path lay millions of dysfunctional men and women completely clueless about what the other wants in terms of attraction, love, support, career, and family.

Divorced Parents are also wonderfully deluded people. Lying to themselves and their children that "you're the number one thing in our lives" when their actions prove anything but. Piss-poor selection in mates resulting in completely dysfunctional families and damaged children. Now we have two full generations of children brought up with a damaged concept of family and marriage which not only ensures their lives will be handicapped, but their childrens' lives as well. But remember, divorce is "empowering" and 40 is the new 30 and the grass is always greener on the other side. Besides, your spouse was such a bastard/bitch that your children are WINK WINK much better off now that you're divorced.

Absentee Fathers/Wimpy Fathers are also complicit in the lying. Either too lazy to stick around to raise their own kids or so influenced by feminism they just "assume" mothers and feminists know best, they relegate themselves to wage mule, rarely, if ever, dispensing the real world advice their children need. Of course, this assumes they had real male wisdom in the first place, but it is more likely they are spineless kowtowing wimps, rarely asserting their authority and telling their children the "harsh truths of life," because like a tail-behind the legs Ray Romano, that might rock the boat. And so their sons grow up to be the pansified, weak, timid men their fathers were, replete with a female-only rearing that is sure to feed them to the meat-grinder when they reach adulthood.

The Public Schools are also masterful liars. So good are they, they are better called indoctrinators. Working in tandem with the socialist parties of different countries, they train youth not to think, but to obey and vote more power to the state. They fool young children into thinking the real world owes them a living just by the fact they were born, and also use any propagandist tool they need to advance their political aims - rich are evil and unfairly advantaged. You're "privileged" if you're of a certain race or sex. Boys and girls are the exact same and there are no differences whatsoever. Global warming, etc. Even if you did have a strong father in the housebold, he simply cannot fight the lies and propaganda teachers feed his children 6 hours a day, 9 months a year.

The Univeristy System is merely the public schools v. 2.0. But this time instead of being told lies for free (well, on the back of taxpayers anyway), the children get to pay tuition and cripple their financial futures doing so. Again, the leftist lies continue, but the university system advances the ratioanlizations and conspiracies to ludicrous and idiotic levels. CISgendered, the cabal of "privileged" categories, 1 in 1 women are raped every week, you name it. Things that would be laughed at with 50's common sense are vehemently defended and insisted upon by faux-accredited professors in the most fabricated of studies. Worse, though, however, is the biggest lie told to the youth - that they are going to go on to become something great. Nay, they are entitled to go onto to do something great. That "Masters in Zombie Studies" is going to pay off big, and if it doesn't it's George Bush's fault. But before we blame George Bush, better get your doctorate just for good measure.

And finally, when the youth are no longer under the government auspices of the K-College industry, there's always the Media to keep the lying going well into adulthood. Confirming that there is global warming, Miley Ray Syphillis is a female role model, fathers are bungling idiots, and chicks can become the 110 pound "Round-Housing-Kicking Chick Cop." And let's not forget the hundreds of billions that is spent keeping women deluded. Madonna is still hot, cougars and MILF's, you just need this new creme, 50 Shades of Grey, and EPL mind-porn fantasies. Whatever lies are necessary to keep people's egos from getting smashed are told by the media, hopefully until the victim dies of natural causes.

In the end, you have what I would estimate to be a full 60% of an economy dedicated to deluding, lying, propagandizing, deceiving, and misleading the entire population. PLaying off of everybody's desires and innate preference for leisure over labor, the aforementioned 8 entities aim to profit off of these natural human weaknesses. Moral or not, supportable or not, the aforementioned groups of liars don't care. They're making their money and will destroy the country if they have to, and they're succeeding on both fronts.

But there's just one problem.

Did you noticed how most of the effort and lying these groups do are aimed at children and youth? That most of the lying occurs early on in a very despicable and evil way as they're targeting the children? That's not by accident, it's done on purpose. Children are easily brainwashable and once you instill lies into their minds, their minds and mental structure grow around it, making the resulting adult mind almost impervious to reality, and consequentially, deluded. This is merely economics as the "Lying 8" know an ounce of brainwashing early on prevents a pound of propaganda later. However, targeting children is also their biggest weakness and this is where the Truth Industry comes in.

What happens when the children leave the University System?

From there on out the Lying 8 heavily rely solely on the Media to continue to brainwashing. But post education, their victims are no longer under their educational auspices for 8 hours a day. Worse still, no matter how many lies and how much government money go into keeping up the facade that the real world doesn't exist, the real world does in fact exist, and the kiddies are at least exposed to it on some levels.

For example the labor market.

All those "independent minded, open minded college students" that majored in English? What the Lying 8 told them was that they were going to make $60,000 a year teaching English in a warm foreign country. The real world tells them they're going to work for $7 per hour serving coffee while still being unable to pay off their student loans.

Another example, the dating/courting market.

All those empowered 20 something women who put career head of humans, family and love? They're now 35 and "finally" ready to settle down after they got their masters and their certifications and want to start a family in the next 40 seconds because that's what they scheduled. The Lying 8 said they could simply snatch up a husband at this point, but the real world now delivers them the crushing blow that most men would not touch them as they're too old, not wife or mother material, and are instead chasing after their 25 year old baby sister.

Marriage?

Remember the Lying 8 told men they just had to be sensitive caring 90's type guys with great personalities and a decent income. No, don't work out. No, don't lay down the law. Good lord, no, don't be a man. Women will respect and marry you if you're kind and caring and obedient.

Well, they'll marry you, but the real world will quickly show you she won't sleep with you. However, she WILL sleep with the guy who does work out,

who does lay down the law,
and is actually a man.

THat's the real world.

We could go on, but in short the Lying 8 cannot keep up the facade. Their false world starts to unravel because it has to. It's not sustainable. Divorce goes up, children become dysfunctional, Detroit files for bankruptcy, Millenials fill up the unemployment line, men are fat, women get lip, and everybody is sexually frustrated. The empiricism builds up to the point the victims of the Lying 8 are completely confused. They did "everything they were told." Believed in every one of their sweet-tasting lies. And when life does not turn out the way the Lying 8 said it would, the sheeple are forced into one of two things:

Cognitive dissonance or accepting reality.

There isn't much The Truth Industry can do with people infected with cognitive dissonance. No amount of reality, empiricism, data or statistics will convince them. They have become so emotionally and psychologically vested in the Lying 8's lies they are beyond hope. They live out the rest of their lives as the basement dwelling troll, the embittered feminist with her cats, the political activist who never gets promoted because of their lack of connections, or the corporate cog who gets divorced and pays alimony to his ex-family that hates him. They live the rest of their lives wasted, progressively and increasingly becoming more wedded to something as stupid as an ideology, religion or politics.

But there is something The Truth Industry can do for those who genuinely seek out the truth and have the capacity to admit they may have been brainwashed.

The young man who inevitably gets so fed up doing what "women told him to do" when chasing girls and dares to try different tactics. He then lifts weights, doesn't return calls and calls women on their BS.

The hen-picked husband who has enough and decides to Lester-Burnham up and start laying down the law. Tells his wife she's fat and needs to lose weight, otherwise there's the door.

The young female college graduate who realizes her degree isn't making her an empowered woman, and there are no quality suitors pursuing her. She then majors in STEM and hits the treadmill and starts to ponder whether having kids is all that bad.

Whoever it is and wherever they are, people who have the intellectual honesty to sit back and say, "There's something wrong here, something is off, is it possible I missed something and I am wrong?" are the people The Truth Industry can help and serve.

And let me tell you what a joy it is serving them.

When they find "The Manosphere," read up on economics and finance, or however they find it, 100% of the time they always say, "THANK GOD FOR EXPLAINING THIS TO ME! I THOUGHT I WAS THE ONLY ONE WHO VIEWED IT THIS WAY!" The Truth Industry takes away the confusion and the psychological torture of not being able to explain what's going on for literally 3 decades in people's lives and for once explains the lay of the land, the reality of life to them, so that they may not waste the next 3 decades of their lives. My consulting arm, "Asshole Consulting" has prevented more than one young soul from majoring in a stupid degree, selling his soul to a soulless corporate employer, or wasting their lives "being nice" and instead told them to hit the gym. And the blunt, impolite, directness of The Manosphere has helped save easily thousands of would-be marriages for men and women (and subsequent children) from being the trainwrecks they were fated to be had people merely listened to the Lying 8. The Truth Industry is undoing the brainwashing the Lying 8 has perpetrated on generations, saving people from wasting their one and finite lives and waking them up to the lies that they've been fed since cognizance.

But the best thing about The Truth Industry is not the irony that our adversaries made this all possible. It's not that without these evil vile scum we wouldn't have been here and otherwise would have had boring cubicle jobs. It's that the Lying 8 can't do a damn thing about it.

You see, if the Lying 8 wanted to nip The Truth Industry in the bud, it would have basically sacrifice itself. It would have to admit it was wrong the entire time, it had an ulterior motive, a political agenda, which ultimately means it would have to admit they were lying and abusing society for their own profit. They would have to admit they were selling sweet lies and in the process destroying lives all for personal financial gain. And if they were to do that, they would then face their worst nightmare - they'd have to get real jobs and actually work for a living.

No more pontificating professorships.
No more "professional activists."
No more "non-profit champagne sipping fund raisers."
No more benefit laden political careers.
No more "won't somebody please think of the chilllllldreeennnnn."

They would actually have to work and toil like the rest of society.

And that prospect scares them more than the amalgamation of spheres on the internet that constitutes The Truth Industry.

In other words, we here in The Truth Industy have life-long employment security. The Lying 8 will continue to lie to the children, the youth, and the susceptible. Feminists will still lie to women about fat being beautiful. Socialists will still lie to their parasitic constituents about victimhood. Teachers will still lie to their students about global warming. Divorced parents will still to their children. And the Media will still continue to lie about...well...everything.

And I sincerely hope they do. Because I don't ever want to go back to banking or real job ever again.

What Happens When You Take Away Career, Family, Wives, and Financial Success From Men?

March 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This - implosion.

But remember social scientists, economists, and policy makers - men should NEVER be factored into your decision. Never. They're only half the population and the group that produces and innovates nearly everything in society. You don't want to factor them ever into your decision making.

John Campbell - "Capitalism Isn't Fair!"

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Somebody call the WAAAAAAAAMbulance.

Video and simpering whinny baby cry girl here.

The Stock Market is NOT the Economy

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For everybody who points to the stock market as a "sign" of economic success or good governance:

The Resident Mom of the Manosphere

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Do you need a hug? Need some motherly love? A mama-bear that will shred anybody that dares hurts her little ones? Perhaps somebody who will give you some digital pampering over the internet when you're sick with the flu?

Well everybody needs a surrogate mom and we here in the Manosphere are lucky to have several. One of them is Suzie of AVFM fame and I was lucky enough to meet her.

She had been blogging at Shiny Pearls of Something, but then the untimely death of her husband and family medical issues forced her to go on a hiatus.

Now a lot of you already know Suz, but I think it would be kind if we all said hello to Suz here and give her a little love as she runs ragged driving cross country. She will return, but in the meantime any kind words of support and thanks in the comment section would go a long way (also telling her she doesn't look a day over 32 goes a long way I found).

Fuel for the Online Media Empire Fire

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Please consider visit and patronizing our sponsors if their services would be of help to you:

Elkin's Comprehensive Tax Guide - Don't do your taxes before reading this guide.

Academic Composition - If outsourcing jobs is a good corporate strategy for employers, then outsourcing your homework is just as smart!

Asshole Consulting - Do you want to FEEL better or BE better? If you want to feel better Oprah, Obama, and CNN are down the street. If you want to BE better, I'm right here and for a fraction of the cost.

Miles Franklin - You need gold and silver. Not much more to say than that. Mention Captain or "Aaron Clarey" and I get a commish.

Ten Buck Truck - The simplest concept in advertising

Rattler Strap - Every outdoorsman needs this Talon Knife - Every PERSON needs this.

Tuesday Night Linkage

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I am once again intrigued by Islamic economics. The idea of the abolishment of debt as well as rules imposed on traders in the 000's cause for an interesting study.

The latest Aurini podcast about heavy metal, philosophy, porn, suicide and other family-friendly topics.

Apparently 20 something American women do not watch "Hogan's Heroes" or "The Victor Borge Show."

It's called capital flight and it's a feature, not a bug, of socialism. Also notice how they all are workers and contribute to GDP. I'm sure a country of people who don't contribute to GDP will do just fine.

The Deteriorating Intellect of Leftists

March 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As I've aged not only have I gained more and more insight and wisdom from hindsight, but I've noticed that society has changed along with me. Men indeed are becoming wimpier, women more manly, people dumber and more gullible, and institutions more machiavellian. The majority of society's trends are unfortunately downward or regressive, but it is not under my control, nor my concern. I can only accept these truths as reality and tailor my actions and decisions accordingly.

However, one of the more prominent trends that affects my "profession" directly has been understanding and acknowledging the progressively deteriorating mental condition of leftists. In the embryonic stages of this blog my primary purpose in setting up "Captain Capitalism" was because I was sick and tired of being the sole "republican/conservative" at the various 20 something parties I attended in liberal Minneapolis. Sure enough somebody would out me, I'd have a cacophony of emasculated liberal males attacking me to display their oneupmanship in the hopes of sleeping with a harry-armpitted-South-Minneapolis female, and while I didn't start it, I would most definitely finish it. Of course this ruined the party and so I decided that it would be beneficial for my social life to have some key data and charts readily available on the internet that would pre-emptively end any political arguments, allow the party to continue uninterrupted, and me not ending up the "right wing nazi asshole" by the end of the evening.

But something funny happened.

After no less than 5 years of compiling empirical data, terabytes of charts, and what I consider to be one of the best depositories of economic data in the world, I noticed not ONE leftist was ever convinced or even phased by the preponderance of evidence I had amassed on my blog. They would claim "X," I would show them "Y," and then they would execute the most cowardly and delusional mental acrobatics to weasel out of it. It was until no more than 3 years ago that I finally realized leftists had absolutely NO desire to seek out reality or truth, but rather preferred to have a religion or belief system that made their fragile psychies and egos feel good.

This had a significant effect on my blog and other online activities as I no longer wasted my time compiling empirical economic data or statistics. Why would I waste my time compiling data, when I would get responses like "well my perception is reality?" The left has absolutely no intention of having an intellectually honest discussion. Ergo the switch some of you may have noticed from pure, hard-core economics to mockery, ridicule, philosophy, Manosphere, and antagonism. But while this observation provided the impetus for the switch of focus on my blog, it also opened my eyes to a much larger and deeper phenomenon - the decaying intellectual capacity of leftists.

The absolute absence of any desire to be honest, truthful, and seeking reality at 20 something parties was just the tip of the ice berg. It was a symptom of a much larger problem. Here were presumed "adults," college educated even, who would have a glass of water put in front of them and when told "that is a glass of water" lacked the ability to acknowledge it for what it was. This delusion or denial was just the first of many symptoms of a decaying intellect.

The second thing I noticed was leftist mind's inability to handle literalness vs. general points. A perfect example is where Tom Leykis always always always has to correct his female callers when they call in and say,

"Oh yeah!!!!??? Well my friend, she's 55 and never married and SHE DOESN'T HAVE CATS!!!!"

Instead of listening to the general point being made about most people who are female, 55, and have cats, the leftist ignores the general overall point attempting to be made and scrambles to find an anecdote or a datapoint that disproves the overall point.

Forget the overall point wasn't literally saying, ALL women who are 55 and single have cats, no just desperately try to find the outlier example that does not follow the general rule.

On the flip side, the leftist mind shows the capacity to be literal when it chooses. I've written scores of paragraphs, making a concise point, abbreviating the logic so it is easier to the readership. And mercy do they point out the gaps or the inconsistencies. I wish I could provide an example, but the criticisms are so petty and not-germane to the topic, none come to mind right now.

Regardless, what this once again proves is the leftist mind has no desire to adhere to reality. Only support the religion/script. So it has the ability to CHOOSE to be literal when it wants to be, and general when it doesn't.

This third sign of mental decay was the inability of leftists to adhere to any kind of logic. I never thought logic a great or incredible skill because I think the brain is naturally programmed to unconsciously incorporate "if then" "and" "a=b, b=c, then c=a" and other proof-type logic into debate and conversation. But apparently it must be a herculean task to adhere to because leftists just seem immune to logic.

They lack ANY capacity to be logical, let alone adhere to any kind of linear argument. Ergo, while you may think "OK, I can't beat them with an empirical argument, so I'll get them on logic," forget it. Once you paint them into an inescapable corner, they either engage in intellectual dishonesty to make it seem their position is logically tenable, or they switch the topic of conversation, usually accusing you of an "ism" of sorts.

This leads to the fourth symptom of a deteriorating mind - non-sequitur arguments.

If you and I were having a debate about dogs and I all of the sudden started talking about cats, you might wonder if I had a few screws loose. If we were talking about the best way to get to Sturgis and then I bring up the route to Tallahassee, you might wonder if you shouldn't have carpooled with somebody else. But when a leftist switches the debate from the crushing debt we're destroying our children with to "Oh yeah, well Reagan had death squads in Central America!" that's viewed as "intelligent" or "strategic."

No, it's not. It's a mental flaw. A mental impairment. A sign of a dysfunctioning and inadequate intellect. If you pulled that kind of switcheroo off as a 9 year old boy in the 4th grade you'd be given Ritalin.

Naturally anybody who's argued with a leftist or paid the slightest bit of attention when debating one, has observed and witnessed these symptoms. Perhaps some of you, after bashing your head into a wall trying to actually argue with a leftist, had the wisdom to acknowledge they were mentally handicapped and stopped. But most recently, I've found evidence that the leftist intellect is deteriorating even further. And mental deterioration in this specific category has scary ramifications:

Leftists are losing the ability to understand satire and sarcasm.

It was a spate of hate-filled, curse-laden, death-threat-full comments in the past couple of months that made me realize leftists are starting to lose their ability to discern sarcasm and joshing. One instance was a podcast or video (I can't remember which) where I was opining about what celebrities I could take in a fight.

Bono, no.
Clooney, probably not.
Matt Damon, unfortunately no.
But Leonardo DiCaprio, sure!

Was I REALLY going to challenge any of these people to fights?
No.
Do I REALLY want to beat up Leonardo DiCaprio?
No.

But in comes the tirade about how "I'm not a real man" and "Look at the pussy acting all macho" and "You never served like in Nam, have you ever hunted man" and "I know a ditch you'd fill well" etc. etc. as if I was actually serious about fighting Hollywood celebrities.

It was this instance combined with others that made me realize leftists take everything you say seriously and no longer can tell when you are kidding. They can't take a joke. They can't laugh. They are so serious and insecure about their politics, their intellect no longer has the capacity for humor.

And this is why it is scary.

Humor, it is my humble belief, is proof of a high intellect. Squirrels don't laugh. Cows don't cut jokes. But humans do. It is humor that not only makes humans human, but is also the primary reason I believe there is a god and that humans are indeed special (besides, theology aside, comedians as a group have surprisingly high IQ's). So when a human no longer shows the capacity to identify and appreciate humor, it shows a regression in their mental capacity. This isn't to say all leftists don't appreciate a good joke, but i have noticed the preference (or perhaps purposeful choice) of leftists to take offense and umbrage, and then display rage and anger at something that was patently sarcasm. You combine this inability to discern humor with all the other aforementioned mental deficiencies (lack of intellectual honesty, lack of logic, problems with literalness, non-sequiturism) and the ramifications are indeed scary, namely...

The liberal zombie.

To be blunt, when you try to talk reality and sense to a leftist today, they more often than not end up getting angry, sometimes rageful. And while most won't throw a punch, what if they were starving? What if they were unemployed and constantly teetering on the verge of poverty? What if they were brought up under an environment of constant brainwashing, hate, bigotry, and classism? What if the EBT, TANF, and WIC checks suddenly bounced in an economic melt-down?

Do you really think you're going to be able to sit there, with a mob of starving leftists charging you saying,

"No, wait, you don't understand. You see the Chinese cut off our funding and so the federal government had to print money to meet this quarter's social spending demands, but this triggered inflation and is why those checks have lost 90% of their purchasing power. You see, if we just vote for fiscal austerity this next election cycle and reform our social programs, we can reverse this?"

These people, even the college educated ones, scoffed and did Cirque de Solei level mental acrobatics to dismiss your literal and factual chart. Do you think they're, let alone their ignorant mass-sheeple counterparts are going to pay attention, let alone heed your arguments?

The sad truth is you aren't dealing with sane mental individuals. You really aren't. This is not hyperbole or rhetoric. This isn't even to slander leftists for political reasons. It's factual.

Leftists are mentally impaired.

And if their deteriorating ability to laugh at humor is any indication, it looks like they're getting worse.

Perhaps all that zombie ammo in the stores isn't a joke.

Aaron Clarey is a mean, evil, right wing libertarian who hates everybody, but especially women and minorities. He lives at home in his mother's basement and is a 42 year old virgin who can't get any. He writes stuff, but you should ignore it because of his CISgenderedness-privilege-white-maleness.

He is the author of "Enjoy the Decline," "Worthless" and "Bachelor Pad Economics", has a Youtube Channel, and is host of The Clarey Podcast.

You should buy them so you can burn them because burning books is good, unless you're a Nazi, then it's bad. You should also do a Youtube video about what a jerk he is, especially if you're a 20 something college student who think you know everything.

Latest Episode of The Clarey Podcast

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My apologies in advance, but it had to be done from the field and the audio quality is just fine, the background noise is what makes it marginal. But still brilliant economic and sociological observations can be found.

Damn Papparazzi

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This was snapped without my approval or knowledge! Now the truth is out! I do not loathe infants. My reputation is ruined.

When Daddys Let Their Daughters Major in Crap

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Oh ouch. The ending of this is so precious, yet so sad.

Well, remember fathers. Keep letting your pwetty wittle pwincess major in what she wants.

Why You Will See Morgan Baskin in the Future

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will make a prediction. Not now, but in the future, you will see one Ms. Morgan Baskin in the future of politics.

She has all the qualifications:

None.

She has no real world experience.
Never worked a day in her life.
But at the age of 18 she thinks she's qualified to be Toronto's mayor.

This is the key trait all politicians have - the arrogance and greed to put their personal interests ahead of society's.

Does this bint REALLY think she's qualified to lead the people of Toronto?

Of course not.

But that doesn't matter. Ms. Baskin WANTS the money, fame, and above all else, easy high paying job. She could not care less about the people of Toronto.

It is because of this is a 100% guarantee she WILL at some point in the future enter politics AND a 100% guarantee she will accelerate the decline of whatever constituency stupid enough to vote her in.

Do not say I didn't warn you or that this couldn't have been spotted a mile...err...1.6 kilometers away.

New Lieutenant Added to Blogroll

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Western Rifle Shooters

Wednesday Night Linkage

March 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"Parents that Suck"

A man is still a man is still a man. I'm surprised that a corporate executive didn't kowtow to PC.

Laid back crucifixion.

Learning to Loathe the United States

March 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An interesting and intellectually honest observation I had about the United States was that I never got to experience what I presumably loved about the US. This made me realize I was being a bit hypocritical, because the US I experienced was anything but the US I was fighting for.

The US I loved was what I saw in television and was taught to me (either through parents, school, media, etc.). It's history, winning WWII, the nuclear family, truth justice, gallant country westerns, dashing heroes like James Bond (I know, British), John Wayne, Robert Mitchum, beautiful women like Audrey Hepburn, Sophia Loren, Doris Day, not to mention its entertainment culture be it jazz, comedy, fashion, etc. But that version of the US died around 1965 and I was born ten years after. The US I got to live in was practically the opposite.

Destroyed families, divorce, Volker Recession poverty, hideous 70's music, fashion, and entertainment. Harlots and sluts for female actresses and vocalists, masculine women, effeminate men, spoiled rotten children, bullies and bitches, idiotic teachers, increasing taxes, recessions, bubbles, and prisons masquerading as schools. And let's not forget a selection of women destroyed by feminism, bigotry against white males, a progressive credentialism that ensured your youth was wasted, bogus careers with false promises, and never ever coming close to achieving the American dream a la the 1940's.

No, the two were actually quite different and it forced me to conclude something.

I hate the United States. I loathe it.

Not the idea of America. Not the ideals the country was originally founded on, but what it has become and consequently the US I get to live in.

It's basically a decadent, dependent pile of spoiled rotten human filth.

This isn't to say there aren't good people in the US or that there aren't good aspects of the US, but what me, you, and everybody else has to do is wake up and realize is that the country no longer represents the ideals and ideas it was founded upon. While we naturally surround ourselves with people we like, we have to realize that in doing so we bias our perception of the country. And therefore while you play poker with fellow conservatives, libertarians, and self supporting people and think most people are hard working folk like you, you don't realize that the majority of the population are parasitical, have no desire to be honest hard working Americans, are brought up/brainwashed to hate the country, hate people who work hard and are successful, and whose purpose in life is nothing more than to live off of you.

If you step back, clear your eyes, and take a fresh look, you can see this "real" United States for what it is and realize this is what you've had to live in and endure:

Lena Horne vs. Madonna vs. Miley Ray Cyrus
Duke Ellington vs. Kanye West
Jimmy Stewart vs. Matt Damon
Dwight Eisenhower vs. Barack Obama
Women with decorum and class vs. feminist brainwashed arrogant lippy brats
Strong, independent men vs. wimpy, simpering obedient, emasculated "men"
Powerful classy cars vs. EPA compliant boxes
Traditional architecture vs. minimalist crap
This vs. that
Don Rickles vs. Margaret Cho

I can go on, but how can anybody champion such crap? How can you advocate the US in its current state?

The truth is you can't. Not unless you're one of the losers that is populating the new America. And so I'm done. I never got to experience a Andy Griffith Mayberry lifestyle. I never got to come out of high school with a job waiting for me. I don't know what it's like to have a population that wants to work with me, instead of villainize and live off of me. And I've never walked downtown to see every man and women dressed their best as they presented themselves in public. It's not that I'm 'sick of it,' I already am. I'm just no longer fighting for something that isn't. The US is not ideal. The people that populate it have no desire to bring it back to its former greatness. And the hell if I'm fighting for something that I've never gotten to enjoy.

Enjoy the decline!

The Mel Gibson Career Paradox

March 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Say you are really good at something.

No, actually, say you're the best.

You went to school for whatever it was, graduated top of your class, know your field inside and out, and are so good at what you do you know who your competition is and they number no more than three.

That's how good you are.

Now you try to go into your field and you find out, despite how good you are, you run into various obstacles. Inept bosses, drama-politicking co-workers, duties that are beneath your ability, corruption, or a constant ramming of heads with management. None of these things have anything to do with your ability or skill, but they do have a direct effect on your performance and career.

Now say you think that job is a one time fluke and you find another one. But sure enough you start to run into the exact same problems. Old fart bosses who can't do Excel, management that turns a blind eye to either huge opportunities or devastating threats. Co-workers that don't carry their weight or, worse, purposely sabotage you at every corner. You really aren't doing anything wrong, there's no reason for these roadblocks, it's just that you keep running into incompetent, braindead turkeys that won't let you soar at your eagle capacity.

You try and try again, but it's the same thing at job after job again. Mundane duties, never allowed to achieve your best, petty politics and moron managers, constantly ramming heads...

Well son, you unfortunately suffer from the Mel Gibson Career Paradox.

You see, you may be the best in your field. You may be able to see with 20/20 vision what others can't or won't. You may be 100% right in everything you do and observe and would indeed make the best CEO in that industry, but alas, there is something about you that makes you completely incompatible with the industry. It's nothing bad or good, you just have some trait, some characteristic that makes success in that industry an impossibility.

In the case of Mel Gibson and thus the paradox, Mel Gibson is an incredibly talented actor. He is also an incredibly talented director/producer making one of the few billion dollar grossing film. He is hands down one of the best in his field, alas his personality and alcohol-induced rants are traits that just do not abide with the leftist Hollywood powers that rule the movie industry. Forget that he's talented. Forget he can bring in billions. And forget that many in Hollywood are bigots, racists, and anti-American themselves. He just doesn't jibe with the industry.

Same thing with Peter Schiff, Robert Shiller, and dare I throw myself into the mix. It was as clear as day to us that the housing market was hyper inflated and bad loans were being made. Had the government and/or the banking industry merely listened to any one of us, the Great Recession would have never happened. Alas, where are the three of us now? I cannot speak personally to Peter Schiff or Dr. Shiller, but I'd imagine much like me, they rammed heads with management in their early career days and never made much head way in the financial services industry. However, there is no doubt that we are "top men" in our respective industries. Still be it our personalities, the way we walk, or the fact our intelligence scares the piss out of inept and corrupt banking executives, none of us had successful careers in the finance industry. We just had that "trait" that made it mutually exclusive. And thus the lesson to all of you.

Understand that while you may be the best in your field, AND you may be 100% right, various sectors, segments, and industries of society have become so corrupt or so infiltrated with different groups of people, that qualities and traits you have, that have nothing to do with you ability, skill, or the profession, will make it impossible for you to work in those fields. And whereas in the past this may have meant your skin color, your religion, or your ethnicity, today it can be things as innocuous and petty as "you're too moral," "you're too smart," "you know too much," "you're not corruptible," "you just don't play ball well," "you lack the ability to kiss ass," "you don't dress right," etc. etc. etc. But while this may be "unjust" or "not right," it is what it is. You may be the best, but that is irrelevant. The system and you are not compatible. You need to find a new career.

Sadly this means many of you will have to give up your dream job or dream career. You may really want to become a cop, but the police department doesn't want you to. You may really want to become an accountant, but the CPA firm won't let you. And you may want to be a nurse, but the medical industry steadfastly refuses you. The key thing is to realize that it was never possible in the first place. Your dream job was never to become a cop or an accountant or a nurse, because it was never feasible. The biggest risk, however, is letting your excellence in the field force you to waste your time pursuing something that is not possible. Ergo, even if you are the best, if your career is not flowing the way it should, and constantly has bumps in the road, it is time to give up your infeasible passion and find a feasible one.

Nick Steves - New Blogroll Addition

March 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New addition to the blogroll. Nick Steves

Why Does Secession Have to Be Violent?

March 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

how you can't force yourself to sleep, are cats as flippant and arrogant to god when they die and go to Kitty Heaven, and any country with only 6,000 troops deserves to get invaded,

AND MORE

In this episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Dear Stupid Students, America Can No Longer Afford Your Stupidity

March 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A student majoring in "Design" gets into $163,000 in debts and asks you, me, and all the other taxpayers to bail her out.

I provide a response where I attempt to be as polite as possible...but more or less fail.

Post post - 60 year old returns to school to get a DUAL degree in British Literature and Creative Writing. Somebody please make it stop.

POST POST POST - OK, call off the dogs. She admits she made a mistake and is owning up to it. From her site:

UPDATE 3/13/2014 Thank you all for viewing this video. It was very hard for me to do. To face the mirror of my own mistake was hard! Thats the just of the sincerity of the video. I understand this is a very passionate subject for most people. By no way am I saying that I want the government or tax payers to pay for the loan I knew I took out. That is not the point of this video. The point is that private student loan borrowers are not eligible for the same consolidation privileges federal student loan borrowers are. That's all. I wish I could go back in time and not take the private loans out.

Thursday Night Linkage

March 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Who doesn't enjoy a good story about a strip club?

Dropping your kid off at daycare is a dereliction of duty. You replaced mothers with the state and this is what you get.

Role models for young girls. Hint there's a "right" and a "wrong" one.

Women Don't Care How You Got Your Money, As Long As You Spend It On Them

March 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

My latest piece at ROK.

Help the Captain on Fiction vs. Nonfiction

March 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings Lieutenants, Economists, Agents in the Field, and Chillllldren!

I need your input and help before I select my next "serious" book to write. Namely, whether I should leave my traditional route of non-fiction and write a fictional book. I am distinctly aware the two are very different beasts and because of this I know that fans of non-fiction may not be fans of fiction and vice versa. In short I have a REALLY cool book idea, but as with any project of this size it has to pay off financially. Ergo, if there's no market for it, then I will not write it.

If you could kindly voice your opinion in the comments section I would appreciate it. Also I do NOT want my feelings spared. I want to make money. Therefore, even if you think "aw, how sweet, the Captain really wants to write this book. I don't like fiction, but I'm going to tell him to write it anyway" DON'T. I want the truth.

Your thoughts are greatly appreciated.

Cappy

Did Keynes Ever "Think of the Chidlren?"

March 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I think not.

Black Men, You Have Officially Been Replaced By Government

March 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And white, hispanic, asian, and every other man, you're not far behind.

I cannot think of a more empirical bit of evidence of the totalitarian state taking over people's private lives and the resultant human filth that ensues.

Friday Night Linkage

March 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Men are attracted by the physical but marry character.

Why I'd Like to Have a Drink With Larry Brown

March 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Larry Brown died. Among his many possessions was a 1969 Shelby GT Mustang.

But what is interesting is how there was no heir to his estate.

Larry never married, had no kids, and thus, he was a statistical anomaly.

An anomaly I would wish I could have conversed with.

Let us think about a man like Larry Brown. He didn't marry, didn't have kids, but had enough taste to purchase and store a classic American car. What kind of life did this guy lead?

He was obviously an independent thinker, did not conform, and probably did his own thing. Had enough money to purchase the epitome of American muscle car classical lore, but still, no family and no wife. I don't know if I have more admiration or pity for the guy, but still, somebody unique enough that the tragedy isn't the fact the car has not heir, but that his life, observations and wisdom will not be passed on.

New Blogroll Additions - Victory Girls and Matt Walsh

March 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You will visit Victory Girls because who doesn't like 1940's style women and pin ups?

And Matt Walsh. Very good writing. You know when somebody says, "Oh, this restaurant has the best food" and you're like, "ehhh...I doubt it." Well this guy does actually write well.

White Male Appreciation Week

March 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hey kids! It's White Male Appreciation Week! Celebrate the achievements and contributions of white males this week...not to mention incidentally irk all the right people. Here's my contribution, a list of few achievements and innovation of white males!

Sunday Day Linkage

March 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

That math and accounting thing is tough, huh sweetheart?

Some sociological observations from a bouncer about the night club scene.

White Male Appreciation Week

March 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This week we celebrate the contributions white males have made to the world and society. We just want to participate in celebrating diversity like every other political group does in America.

Today's White Male Achievement is Double Entry Book Keeping.

It's not a major contribution. Just that the entire world's GDP and global economy wouldn't exist without it.

Celebrate White Male Appreciation Week by using the hashtag #whitemaleappreciationweek or pointing out contributions that you appreciate having in life!

When Podcasters Replaced Pastors

March 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An interesting epiphany hit me.

Not when I was out hiking 13,000 foot peaks in Wyoming.
Not when I was on my thrice weekly run.
But rather when on the treadmill as this vile of a winter that refuses to end:

Podcasters are the new pastors.

I say this not for my own egotistical self, but rather an observation whilst listening an episode of Stefan Molyneux's podcast. He was reviewing the numbers and 2013 was by far his best year. Over 50 million downloads, the "Truth About" series helping with that, and enough income to at least keep the lights on. This all without a building to preach in, housing, or a congregation all provided by the parish. It was with a microphone, a computer, some bandwidth, and some servers Stefan (and his adjutant) Michael were able to deliver, in just one year, more "sermons" in the form of podcasts to more listeners' ears in a week than your average pastor will deliver in his lifetime.

Driving this naturally is technology. And of course people would rightly point out this could have been said about radio hosts. However podcasters pose a greater threat to pastors than radio show hosts in that they don't need to cover the overheard of a radio station and a radio tower. Ergo, they can focus on special niches in life and attract smaller, but very loyal audiences, instead of aiming for a mass, boring, indifferentiated market share.

The result is a plethora of podcasts and shows that address every imaginable topic. Aurini and Molyneux cover philosophy. I have my own economics/sociological/courting podcast. Ed has his political podcast. Kerry Lutz his precious metals podcast. FTM their survival podcast. Alton Brown his...well..."I'm Alton Brown and everything I touch turns gold because I'm that freaking cool of a guy" podcast. Every imaginable facet of life has a podcast and people can now tune into very specific and precise shows leaving the mass-market-appealing radio shows behind.

But the area podcasters give pastors a run for their money is philosophy and real-world advice. And this is where podcasters are not so much putting pastors out of business, but eating their lunch.

Understand with philosophy, life advice, financial consulting, dating, etc., podcasters are serving a horrendously underserved market of (primarily) youngerish people (45 and younger) who have been misled purposely or unintentionally by all instititutions and entities in society. Revisiting much trampled ground before - courting, careers, dating, health, politics, government, etc., etc., - nearly every one 45 and under have been lied to about the real world. Consequently they very much are lost sheep and are in desperate need of being deprogrammed from the brainwashing they received and then being informed about how the actual real world works.

However, whereas this would be the domain of pastors and clergy members, they fail miserably addressing these social problems because they have their hands tied behind their back.

Tied by what?

Religion.

Whether you are a rabbi, a priest, an imam, or a pastor, you are relegated to to dispensing advice through the lens of the Torah, Koran, or Bible. You are also further regulated by tradition where all of your sermons must be religious. Ergo, the best a man of the cloth can do is lecture around 500 people once a week, pulling a lesson from their religious tomes that has a real life world application. This of course ONLY AFTER you waste 25 minutes on the front and 25 minutes on the back of the sermon doing calisthenics, kneeling, praying, singing, and saying, "the lord be with you" to some stranger to your right. And heaven help you if there's a baptism or communion. For 2 hours of attendance, you maybe get 15 minutes of sermon, 2 minutes of which is actually practical advice.

But not with podcasts.

With podcasts it's direct, topic specific, and immediately practical to your life. There's no interruptions with pointless 3,000 year old traditions and chanting. It's a fraction of the cost of tithing (because all your good religious people tithe, right? RIGHT?). And it can be listened to anywhere.

Now, will the advent of podcasting flatten the churches, raze the synagogues, and destroy the mosques? ~~Well, one can hope,~~ er...ummm...no. As long as there are people there will always be religion. However, what will happen is philosophy, advice, leadership, economics, political, and other "life guiding" sorts of podcasters will become the effective new pastors. Not because they set out to do so, but because they are actually doing the jobs of what pastors were originally supposed to be doing, but can't because of the religious handicap. You throw in technology and the traditional "business model" of a church (with physical buildings, organs, staff, etc.) is about as obsolete as a radio station. And if there's any doubt, realize even a lousy, curse-laden podcast like mine, has about 2.5 times the weekly "attendance" than the average Wisconsin Synod Lutheran pastor. Then again, it's pretty hard not to beat those sermons.

Monday Night Linkage

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have said before, and I 100% sincere about this, that if women were to lose weight in America that would increase economic production infinitely more than the trillions in Keynesian spending because hot chicks incentive men, not government welfare checks. And men are the primary producers and innovators of society.

Now if climate model programmers would just admit the same.

He's your boy, not your man.

Liberal arts majoring daddy's girls turn to prostitution to pay the bills. BRAVO on the "fathering" spineless, emasculated males of America! BRA-freaking-VO!

Heee hee.!!!

White Male Appreciation Week

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

In the spirit of diversity we highlight another achievement of white males today - vaccines.

"Fornication Trophies"

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Freaking hilarious. And no, it's NSFW, and he curses.

Why Most Lawyers are "Scum"

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

On With Kerry Lutz

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Got interviewed by Kerry on his show, The Financial Survival Network. We chat about the weather and how the world of podcasting is evolving.

All Female Company Goes Bankrupt

March 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

a review of Mr. Peabody, why you should boycott the new Muppet movie, how conservatives are wimps when it comes to boycotting, a discussion about Crimea and Ukraine, how the sole source of pride for youth today "college,"
Law School Lemmings, making your friends who ditched you once they found a girlfriend pay a fee to be let back into the gang when she dumps him,

and MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

Tuesday Night Linkage

March 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Woman marries her dog proving there are no good men to find.

U of Michigan activists trying to force STEM majors to ~~pay for worthless graduate students TA positions~~ take mandatory diversity/race classes.

Cool time chart showing European borders.

Roosh unplugs.

David reviews Bachelor Pad Economics.

Coolest picture ever (anybody know the artist for due props?)

Fueling the Internet Media Empire

March 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember to visit some of our sponsors:

Asshole Consulting

Tenbuck Truck

Academic Composition

and

Chad Elkin's Tax Guide

Why Marty Seifert is Mark Dayton

March 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is no secret I loathe Mark Dayton. He embodies everything I hate about politics and politicians.

He never worked a real job, chose an easy major, didn't earn his money, and values himself more highly than the people of Minnesota because it's more important for him to run for office and become a senator or governor and have something to do rather than let a better qualified individual represent Minnesotans. He is the embodiment of why government is ineffectual and the primary cause for the decline and decay in America today.

In 2014 Minnesotans have an opportunity to select somebody with leadership and real world experience instead of giving their Dayton-namesake trustfund baby brat another term for his hobby. And naturally a pool of Republican candidates have formed. Prominent among them is Marty Seifert, a man who's been a Republican regular on the scene.

He is no different than Mark Dayton.

Not in terms of being a trustfund baby (he isn't).
Not in terms of him having a naive political ideology (he doesn't).
And certainly not in terms of me loathing him (I don't, I rather like the guy personally)

But when it comes to work history, he and Mark Dayton are no different, and it is the primary reason the Republicans have gotten their assess handed to them time and time again in one of the most liberal states in the nation.

First, Marty is a career politician. And worse, he is an ineffective career politician. He's too damn nice of a guy. But Marty shouldn't take this personally. Pretty much every republican leader in Minnesota has been ineffectual playing the DFL's bitch for the past 50 years. Regardless, his resume shows it. The man has been running for office the day he graduated from college. What kid is qualified to run for office fresh out of college? None, really, but again, like Mark Dayton, it's not for the people, but for Marty he opted to run.

Second, a worthless degree. Nothing says, "I don't want to work hard at life and think I should lead other people" than a young man telepathing it by declaring a political science major. Mark Dayton's education major was no better, but again, I'm trying to point of the similarities to explain why Marty is going to be no better.

And finally, no private sector experience. Marty's career is primarily running for office with a stint as a teacher (just like Mark Dayton) which is also not a real job. Admitted, he's been in real estate now for a while and that sliver of experience is more than what Mark Dayton, Barack Obama, and Nancy Pelosi have combined, but not enough to be effective in the governorship.

In short, Minnesota republicans have a choice. Same ole same ole, in which case we will get the same ole same ole:

Wimpy, timid, meek Republican leaders constantly playing defense with the same old tired tactics

or

A candidate with private sector experience, real world experience, real leadership and somebody who's been a normal person that did something aside from "run for office." And in this group there's more than one candidate running.

Dave Thompson (who in full disclose I know and worked with) has worked as an attorney, ran a business, and moonlighted as a radio show host on the side.

Scott Honours, who I've met has degrees in economics and business, but more importantly has been working in the private sector the entire time as a turn around specialist, buying and improving various businesses.

THere are others, but the point is simply this:

If you want to have any success in changing Minnesota from a liberal state progressively drifting left to one you'd like to live in instead of think of moving out of, you can't keep nominating the same cookie cutter noob politicians. YOu need something different, you need somebody who is able to think outside of the box and strategize, you need somebody that's actually had to face real problems and real challenges.

Politicians like Dayton and Seifert don't have that experience.

Private sector candidates do.

Starting thinking like a Republican for once and turn to the free market for your solutions. Not the government or politicians.

White Male Appreciation Week

March 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Today for White Male Appreciation Week we highlight the invention of refrigeration which allowed for the storage of food over long periods of time, not to mention airconditioning!

New Blogroll Additions - Page for Men and Manosphere.com

March 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Added.

and

Added

Explaining Why Feminists Tend to be Ugly

March 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

There are no ugly people, only lazy people.

Housing Not Peaky Yet

March 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

With the recovery of housing prices, but an obvious lack of economic growth (not to mention genuine hope from the non-parasitic classes), many people are concerned about another housing bubble. Of course increasing housing prices has allowed people to finally refinance....

5 years later
after they could have really used it no thanks for HARP v. 1, 2, 3...n

which has eased personal finances somewhat, but once again is there that specter of a housing bubble.

Well, you're lazy, but loveable economist who decided to stay up all night playing video games decided to check before he went to bed this morning and no, it does not look like there's a bubble....yet.

Using a simpler measure of housing prices to economic production we see what we surmised (increasing prices, but no economic growth), but it is nowhere near as peaky as the idiot-fueled bubble of 2006.

Case Shiller to RGDP (Source: FRED)

Naturally to be professional about it one would look up the price to rents ratio, but I'm lazy and decided to do this temporary hack job instead. Besides, if you want to worry about something, worry about the education bubble.

White Male Appreciation Week

March 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Today for White Male Appreciation Week we celebrate wheat.

Well, white men didn't invent wheat, but one of them DID invest a strain of wheat resistant to disease and yeast which did more to end hunger than all of the celebrity aid to Africa.

You too can celebrate White Male Appreciation Week by posting achievements and contributions to society by various white males!

Goodbye and Good Riddance to Gamestop

March 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

May they enjoy bankruptcy after overcharging and underpaying a generation of avid video game players.

Oh, and you will have CAPITALISM to thank for the lower prices and consequential increased standards of living for their demise.

(language warning)

White Male Appreciation Week Continues

March 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Today we celebrate diversity by pointing out another contribution of white males - freedom.

Also another post celebrating White Male Appreciation Week.

Not Obligated to Pay for Your Drinks Sweetheart

March 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Besides, that would be sexist. And we all know how much you want to earn the title "independent."

Last Day of White Male Appreciation Week

March 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the final day of White Male Appreciation Week we celebrate electricity. Now many people will insist on either Edison or Franklin, but we're going to go with Tesla.

How to Be an Architectural Genius Like Frank Lloyd Wright

March 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hee hee:

Dave Has a Cocktail in the Bachelor Pad

March 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Why don't you join us for a spell?

How Economic Bubbles Disproportionately Harm Women and Minorities

March 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

If there was ever something that caused my life serious damage it was nothing purposeful or untoward, but rather unintentional. Specifically, people lying to me to spare my feelings. We've all experienced this before. Your female friends telling you you'll make some girl happy...just not them. Follow your heart and the money will follow...in the form of an unemployment check. Hard work and a strong work ethic will be rewarded...by manipulative bosses who will make you work overtime. No doubt, like me, these lies you were world cost you years of your life and hundreds of thousands of dollars in lost opportunities because the people in your life then could not muster the courage to tell you the harsh truth.

Conversely, those that have the genuine heart to tell you the truth, are likely the ones responsible for what modicum of success you did have in life. Your father telling you to change your own damn oil. The girl who had the heart to say you needed to lift weights. Or the rare guidance counselor that said, "No, son, you're not going to make it with a degree in communications."

The reason polite lies wreak incalculable damage as opposed to harsh truth is that lies, no matter how kind, do not adhere to The Reality Principle while the truth does. Ergo, in telling people the truth, no matter how harsh, you are ACCURATELY informing them about reality, allowing them to make decisions based in the real world, and thus have better results and success in life.

This conundrum or paradox, however, perfectly explains women's and minorities' effective "2nd place" in the US and other western nations as they are both the victims of "kind lies." Propagandized by left-wing politicians, they are led to believe that their second place ranking in society is due to "discrimination" or "sexism." That women earn 25% less than men because of discrimination...not because they major in easier subjects and work less than men. That minorities median income is only 78% white's because of evil racism...not that fact 70% of blacks are born out of wedlock which cripples their future financial endeavors.

While you, me, and any other regular visitor here to Cappy Cap Land knows this, there is another way this left-wing propaganda harms minorities. And it's particularly devastating:

Economic bubbles.

To simplify it, let's say you're a white male. You're evil, you're sexist, and you don't even know it because you're privileged. That's all fine and dandy, but in the end, it does not "blind" you to various economic realities. You're likely aware you have to work hard, probably major in a STEM field, and you're also likely to know not to have kids before you're 30. The majority of propaganda is to make you feel guilty so you are more willing to pay more in taxes so that the socialist party and continue it's bribery of non-white male people. It is NOT to delude you about your future or economic reality.

However, the same cannot be said for minorities and women. Leftist propaganda not only deludes minorities and women into thinking white males and discrimination is the cause of their second-placeness, but that they can do ANYTHING they want. Ergo, not only is their performance dismissed away (because of you evil white males you), but they can do "anything" and "have it all."

The single, independent, Roundhouse Kicking Chick Cop Show woman CAN become a cop, get her law degree, become a judge at 38, teach at the local university, be a cougar at 48, and find the love of her life to start a family with at a wrinkly 53.

The poor black kid CAN become the ganster-rap artist, an NBA 1st draft pick, a future full back for the NFL, or a general P-Diddy-esque socialite. Just keep rapping and lifting weights like the other 30 million black kids, and don't think about engineering or accounting. YOU CAN DO WHATEVER YOU WANT, FOLLOW YOUR DREAMS, labor market realities and "aspiring rap artists'" life expectancies be damned.

I can go on, but the point is that they are not only deluded to think they never made a mistake and are therefore not responsible for their current position in life, but that they are capable of, if not entitled to, great success.

This puts minorities and women in a very dangerous economic mentality because unless they paid particular attention to their college economic courses (assuming they were even taught by a competent economist), they are completely blind to the risks involved with "having it all" and "living the American dream." This makes them incredibly susceptible to bubbles.

For example (and this is the observation I had that prompted this post) look at the racial and sexual composition of Facebook/Twitter posters on "Law School Lemmings." Though not the majority, minorities and women account for a disproportionately high percentage of the kids posting about law school and how they can't wait to attend/graduate. But it's quite apparent than nobody has told them that schools are producing 2 law graduates for every 1 job currently being offered. Matter of fact, the propaganda is so thorough current applicants and acceptees to law school are completely tuning out the dire financial straits current law graduates are facing today. The consequence will be that of which only pretty lies can deliver - graduates with $250,000 in debt, no job prospects, and a destroyed financial future.

Another example, the housing bubble. It wasn't until the later and last stages of the housing bubble were lending standards lowered so far (both by bankers desperate to keep the bubble going and politicians that wanted to "help" minorities) that minorities and women started entering the housing market in droves. While at the time this may have seemed like "help" and women and minorities were "finally" going to achieve the American dream, all they managed to do was buy into the most inflated housing bubble in history AT ITS PEAK, and thus suffer the largest decline when it burst.

And finally, the retirement bubble. Again, late to the party, women and minorities (and especially young people) who overcome their economic disposition "finally" have enough money to start stashing away for retirement. Hurray! Celebration! Joy! They're buying into a market that based on PE ratios is 60% overvalued. Never mind that would be the exact same thing as being excited to pay what amounts to $5.20 for a gallon of gas, the propaganda and pretty lies have made them think the ability to invest is the goal unto itself, not to get an adequate rate of return (and don't even get me started about how Barack Obama's MyRA harms the disadvantaged).

We could go on, but the point is simply this - in lying to two general classes of people for political reasons you've denied them the ability to be truly independent minded and thorough in their due diligence of researching particular investments. This is bad enough as it impairs their ability to truly assess various investments, but since you did NOT lie to the other group of people (white males) you've allowed a segment of the population to invest in different areas of life. This "smart money" or at least "non-propagandized money" invests when it makes sense, realizes the majority of gains in these investments, AND drives up prices to the point it may get bubbly. When other segments of the population realize how these different investments are "on fire" (housing, Dotcom, education, etc.) they come in, with what little money they have as Johnny-Come-Latelys only to be the last "bigger fool" of the "Bigger Fool Theory," buying when prices were highest, ergo getting the worst deal, and therefore suffering disproportionately compared to their White Male (and naturally-implied) Evil counterparts.

It is here everybody of all races and sexes need to wake up and realize the damage lying to different groups of people in an effort to alienate them, and thus conscript them as life-long voters for left-wing politicians, causes. Women and minorities are not suffering an effective second-place citizenship because of evil white males or discrimination or sexism. They are suffering a second place citizenship because leftists and socialists have been lying to them for decades. Worse still, they believe it, and consequently pay a horrible economic price (Detroit anyone?)

Alas, it is not under my control nor my responsibility to get people to appreciate harsh truths over warm-fuzzy-feelings lies. I have my own life and have been lectured enough by various sectors of society for daring to speak the truth or hold women and minorities up to the standards I would white males (ie-treating them as genuine equals which I thought was what the goal was). But what I hope will convince women and minorities is how time and time again socialist and leftist causes and promises put them in houses they can't afford only to be repossessed lead them to chase impossible dreams instead or realistic ones destroy their communities and cities ruin their families put them $250,000 in debt for a degee that just won't pay and in short, just completely destroy and ruin their lives.

Then again, I've never seen such propaganda that was so thorough and so effective. It would not surprise me if the entirety of my brilliant argument above would simply be dismissed with an accusation of being "white male" or having some kind of "privilege" thus blinding my "ignorant ass" to the "real problems."

Oh well, enjoy the decline.

When People's Lives Are Beyond Repair

March 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A common comment I get about my books, even my classes is "if this had only been around 10 years ago." Or "if I had only read this when I was a kid." It's a nice compliment that I take kindly and know that while my various literary works may not be able to help "everyone," it will help those that it can in the future.

Contrast this with a much less common comment I receive, though I still do receive it - that my literary works are largely only beneficial to young men without children. Men who aren't divorced or don't have alimony to pay. And that if you're a single parent, with student loans, and didn't save for retirement and are rapidly approaching 50, my books are pretty darn worthless.

While the two comments may seem different, they are essentially the same thing. The only difference is the person making it.

If you've made mistakes in your past (intentionally, unknowingly, or not) and realize and admit you made said mistakes, you are the type to say, "Wow, where was this book 20 years ago?" However, if you made some of those exact same mistakes, and then say, "Well, this book is worthless, how is it supposed to help me," then you are the type of person who has yet to fully realize the consequences your mistakes in the past and still lingers out for hope that there is a solution.

And I am here to say, "Sorry, I'm not a miracle worker."

Because of what I believe to be an overly optimistic media, public school system, and especially movies, Americans (of all political stripes) have been led to believe that "the good guy always wins." That "no problem or threat is so great, it can end you." Or that "no problem is insurmountable and there is always a solution at the end that will save the day."

And I am here to tell you, "sorry, it just ain't so." It is VERY POSSIBLE that you make such critically bad decisions that you will permanently screw up your life, to which there are no solutions. And there's nothing you, nor I, nor anybody can do anything to solve it.

For example I eviscerated this woman who went $163,000 into debt to get a "Design" degree. Not so much for that action in itself, but in her plea that "congress or Barack Obama" (read you and me) "do something about this." (she has since made it clear that she does not want a bail out so please do not harass her anymore). But she exemplifies the point of somebody who made disastrous decisions and now vainly looks for a solution, to which there is none. Sadly her life is f*cked. She has no other option but to pay the price and endure it.

Another example are teenagers who get pregnant. Their brains, only about 75% developed, are incapable of fully comprehending just how thoroughly and fully they've destroyed their lives. But worse, pickled in an environment of "single mom heroism," "the youth are our future," "you can do anything you want," and other public school/media feel-good BS, they overestimate themselves, their position in society, and their future capacity for success. This not only prevents them from fully assessing their real situation in life, but more often than not leads to them making even MORE life-crippling decisions (eg. the "empowered single mom" who goes further in debt, whilst at the same time outsourcing her child to daycare, so she can get a worthless degree that will not improve her employability)

Cite as many examples as we want, the point is that people can make such horrendous decisions that they are beyond help. They are beyond repair. There is no possible solution or recovery. Their lives, their one shots at life, are literally ruined, are literally over, and their only option is to suffer their remaining days on this planet in misery.

The question is whether they come to terms with this reality or they vainly and futilely search for a solution that does not exist. Whichever of the two they choose, I don't care. But for the Patron Saint's Name of Frick, don't DEMAND other people come up with solutions to your impossible-to-solve problems.

This evil, mean, hate-filled, though 100% truthful post brought to you by Asshole Consulting.

Asshole Consulting - the only consulting company specializing in truth.

New Sponsor - The Red Ginseng Store

March 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New sponsor everybody - The Red Ginseng Store.

Never knew much about red ginseng, but apparently it's very therapeutic in a natural sort of sense. Giovanni the proprietor recommends using it as a tea and as a substitute for caffeine. He also suggests infusing it with vodka claiming it adds a bit of a kick, enough so that he advises NOT drinking too much of it.

Regardless of how you use it, I don't care. I'm a libertarian. Just buy some if it seems appetizing to you!

Before You Commit Suicide

March 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Here's some perspective you might want to consider:

Monday Night Linkage

March 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Google, Apple, and all those wonderful lefty west coast companies leftists love to love found behaving like a cartel.

Company looking to hire a "Diversity Analyst," but requires a DEGREE IN COMPUTER SCIENCE. Talk about wasting perfectly good talent on a worthless political and ass-kissing endeavor. Remember kids, corporations are not friends of capitalism.

Job Posting on Cappy Cap

March 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy All,

Alex over at Academic Composition is looking to hire some people and since I know a lot of you are either in college or fresh out of college and looking for some cash, thought this might be up some of your alleys. Of course, nothing glamorous or glorious, but it will pay some bills. Basically he's looking to expand his homework-writing business and needs people to post ads on Craigslist. The details are as such:

If you reside in one of the below listed regions, you can seize this opportunity by posting ads on craigslist.

1. Minneapolis, MN
2. Denver, CO
3. Dallas, TX
4. Phoenix, AZ
5. Vancouver, BC
6. Boston, MA
7. Chicago, IL
8. Madison, WI
9. Honolulu, HI
10. Toronto, ON

Next, all you'd need to do is follow this simple four step process to receive a $25 start-up compensation.

A. Create a new gmail account
B. Set up the forwarding features to ensure that all of their incoming emails are automatically re-directed to me (sounds more complicated than it really is, most people will be able to figure out how to do this within 3 minutes)
C. Use the new GMAIL account to set up a Craigslist account
D. Receive my ads and prepare to post them in the city where they reside

If you post the ad specifically as you were instructed to, it will not be flagged and removed by craigslist. If your ad stays live on the forum for one full week, you will be paid $20. If it stays for a full 12 hours, a $15 compensation is in order. If it only lasts three days, I'll pay you $10. If it survives for a mere 3 hours, you'll be paid $5.
Contact Alex at academiccomposition@gmail.com

Again, I know it's not an investment banking position, but it beats delivering pizzas.

One More Flogging of the Dead Economic Horse

March 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

As you know, I only occasionally revisit pure economics and that's if I have a very interesting economic observation or epiphany. Most of what I use economics for today is mere citation or statistical support of a larger philosophical (or in the case of the Manosphere) sexual argument. And once again the reason is simple - nobody is willing to listen to data and statistics. Economics falls on the deaf ears of those who need it most - leftists. And since most of the economists, lieutenants, and agents in the field here already have intellectual honesty and a desire to seek out truth, throwing up more charts showing that, yes, indeed, socialism still sucks, it pointless.

That being said I always love a good economic whipping of idiotic South American countries whose peoples are sometimes so galactically stupid they wonder why they're perpetually in 2nd world status. Specifically Venezuela and now, Argentina.

In short, both countries implemented socialist policies. One by a now-deceased crusaderist ideologue and the other a whorish looking president, Christina Kirchner. We all knew Venezuela, pursuing near Marxist policies would end up having lines and shortages for basic staples of life. But what the media in the US doesn't report is more or less the same thing happening in Argentina. Price controls, police shutting down companies that do not comply. It's just another datapoint to add to the already-sickening number of datapoints where idiotic politicians think "this time it will be different," but only manage to show their truly and outstanding ignorance of basic economics.

However, the interesting thing about Argentina's economic problems is that they're failing to gain traction in US media. The answer is simple:

Obama deep down insides envies Kirchner's socialist policies and her stealing every Argentines' private pensions, and the MSM knows it.

The sad truth is that if Argentina's economic problems were highlighted some people would realize nationalizing pensions does not provide any medium or long term economic fix. Matter of fact, it just is an omen of worse economic times to come. And sadly, nationalizing private retirement accounts is one of the last tricks the socialists/democrats/Obama have in their leftist bag of economic tricks to keep the "Never Ending Keynesian Stimulus" going. The media, of course, just doesn't have the heart or journalistic integrity to point it out.

Thankfully for Obama, however, the average American is too stupid to care. Between the average American male idiot filling out his "brackets" for March Madness to the average obese American female reading People magazine whilst gorging on cupcakes, both are way too pre-occupied with the irrelevancies of life to study the structural problems of the US federal deficit.

Again why this blog has turned from one of strictly economics and data, to one of philosophy, mockery, ranting, and enjoying the decline.

Some Retirement Planning Lessons

March 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This video was a request video, specifically about retirement planning in the military. However, I realized some of the lessons here are applicable to pretty much everybody and would prove useful to most:

Divorcing Women with Horses, My Little Pony, HR Diversity Broads Realize They Need Math…

March 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

AND MORE!

in this latest podcast of The Clarey Podcast!

(language warning - the topics were just impossible to address without cursing)

New Blogroll Addition - Lion of the Blogosphere

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You are invited to visit.

Why You're Wasting Your Time in Language Classes

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Schools and universities love forcing their students to take foreign language classes.

It's for diversity!
It's for a well-rounded education!

No, actually, it's to employ the idiots who 10 years before you majored in a worthless subject.

Oh, huff and puff all you want, the truth is in and it turns out it only pays to major in a foreign language if you're a non-native English speaker living in an English-speaking land.

Now naturally the foreign languages departments, teachers, and professors across the land will get their panties in a bundle, predictably claiming it isn't all about the money, and they wonderful experiences they had in foreign lands, and if they were to blah blah blah.

And for once, I 100% agree with them.

There is a non-financial aspect and benefit to learning a foreign language that should not be measured in increased profits, ROI, or economics.

Good thing Rosetta Stone can replace the billions we waste of foreign language professors and teachers every year for a mere fraction of the cost. And we all know how much those teachers and professors PRIMARILY care about educating the children and not money.

Right?
RIGHT????

ht

Because Your Children Won't Read

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

That's why we converted "Worthless" into an audio book.

Because not only do I not like to read, but most kids don't like to read. So if you are still having trouble convincing your child not to major in a stupid subject, make it easier by merely just downloading this and playing it in the car as you drive your child to ~~K-12 prison~~...errr..."school."

Remember, the Latest Podcast Is Out!

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For your listening pleasure...well...actually, it will just raise your blood pressure given the topics covered.

New Podcast Additions - Jack Donovan, The Black Brigade

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Two new ones that will ensure you never listen to talk radio again.

Jack Donovan

and

The Black Brigade

Also a new aggregator - Red Pill Review.

Words That Prove You Have a Worthless (and Likely Leftist) Job

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Of the many things I loathe about socialists and leftists is how they create words to make themselves sound smarter than they actually are. Academia is a perfect example of this, and women's studies are the epitome. Just read through any course description and you'll see mutli-syllabic words that were completely fabricated for the sole purpose of masking the fact the entire "profession" is a farce and its participants idiots. However, things like "praxis" and "rubric" are usually relegated to the world of academia and are obvious as they are political. But, sadly, socialists and leftists cannot all be employed in academia. They need to find other sources of employment, and natural as it is to leftists, they will try to find work that is:

1. not real work
2. but still feeds their ego

This search for faux-work-but-our-egos-need-to-be-stroked type work has resulted in a bevy of new and hypocritical terms that are dead give-aways to two things.

1. Your job is not a real job
2. You are likely a worthless leftist living off of the taxpayer or charity for your meaningless job

Thankfully, over the past two years I've been jotting these terms down as I've come across them to create a sort of compendium which will allow us to truly understand what these words mean and to identify and expose those worthless people who work in these worthless "careers" for the parasites they are:

Initiatives - this is usually used in the public sector, mostly schools. It means to "initiate the creation of another program that is going to cost the taxpayer more money." The goal of an "initiative" is that it hopefully goes from a program into a full fledged department. For example Michelle Obama would love it if her "initiatives" on obesity evolved into the US Department of Obesity.

Outreach - Usually associated with a program, "outreach" is just a euphemism for "paying unemployable college graduates to go and force something on society that nobody wants." It belies the true suckiness of the program when you have to "outreach" to clients to get them. For example Obamacare has a lot of "outreach" because nobody wants it.

Diversity - Diversity is nothing more than the socialists' attempt to replace character with race/sex/ethnicity/etc. In doing so, socialists can argue for the stealing of other people's money based on race/sex/ethnicity, etc. "Diversity" is also rapidly being pushed by HR departments to replace "profit" in corporations, once again eliminating any need for hard work, character, excellence or achievement.

Raising Awareness - If "raising awareness" is in your job description there is a 100% chance you are a worthless person with a worthless job. Like "outreach" "raising awareness" again aims to create a problem where there is none. If it was a real problem people would know about it. Ergo, since socialists thrive on concocting problems and the ensuing government money that is sure to follow to "solve the problem," "raising awareness" is nothing more than future job security.

Community - This refers to the crime ridden crapholes 50 years of democrat policies have turned most of our major metro inner cities into. There really isn't a "community" as much as there is a group of people who hate each other, but make for a convenient group to champion the expenditure of additional government money on. Ergo, it's for "the community" is really "I'm going to use this community to get my non-profit government grant money so I can pay myself $89,000 a year as the director with no intention of actually helping out the community." It's exactly like a drug dealer's market, but more unicorny and flowery sounding.

Invest - This term has nothing to do with actual "investing" as that would imply some sort of positive rate of return. No, this is a euphemism for "pissing away," "wasting" or "pouring down the toilet bowl" taxpayers money. Usually "invest" precedes some noble cause as a cowardly tactic to change the focus from the pissing away of money to the noble cause. eg:

"Investing for our future"
"Investing for our children"
"Investing in our education"

For those of you with real jobs and who work for a living, simply replace "invest" with "pissing away" and you will be able to translate.

Change Lives - Change lives means "me telling you what you're going to do with your life because I think I know better because the government told me so." Usually people who want to "change lives" go into education or child psychology because they think it is their domain or jurisdiction as a 19 year old girl to tell 5 year olds how to think and behave. You can also see "change lives" in what is nothing more than a travel agency masquerading as The Peace Corps with spoiled suburbanite kids using "changing lives" and "helping the people" as an excuse to travel. You will also note not one person employed in this field has managed to change one person's life for the better.

Provide Leadership - Kind of like "raising awareness" nobody was asking to be led let alone asked for a leader. But don't let that stop you from "leading the community." Remember, these jobs aren't for the people or the purported intended recipients. These jobs are purely for you and your ego. And nothing boosts the ego by being a self-proclaimed leader.

Leader of what?

Who cares?! You're "leading." And if that means being in charge of 5 people carrying clipboards around, then by gum, you have just as much leadership skills and experience as a first lieutenant from Iraq with 3 tours under his belt.

Advocate - Whatever it is you're advocating it's likely taking my money and then giving it to somebody who cannot speak for or defend for themselves. Thankfully, you're all too eager and willing to take my money or non-profit money to be an "advocate" for some group or another, but understand and understand this well - we all know you don't give a damn about said group. You're primary concern is that you get paid for easy work. ie- you use these genuinely disadvantaged people for your own financial gain. You're despicable.

****

Naturally there are other words and terms that I have yet to happen upon. However, if you have some, please enter them in the comment section below. I would like this to be the most thorough resource of "faux" job duties leftists like to heap upon themselves.

The Problem Short Male Asian and MidEast Engineering Students Face When In America

March 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This was a requested video, but I think it addresses a concern many of your Asian and MidEast brothers face when they get here, but there is no tutorial or wisdom to guide them.

Wednesday Night Linkage

March 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

When Hamsters meet Crusaders.

Everything that's wrong with American youth in one tweet.

Like moths to the flame, girls go to tats.

Much ado about nothing.

Bullshit: America's Greatest Commodity

March 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A requested video.

Thug Notes - The Great Gatsby

March 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Once again I save you from wasting 20 hours on reading a book by linking to this synopsis.

Denver and Vegas

March 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

No posts today as Im currently in the field away from a computer.

But will be taking a road trip out to Vegas via Denver.

shoot me an email if youre around.

Finally Home Linkage

March 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Molyneux has an absolute must of a podcast. You can listen to it this weekend.

Another person picks up on what I've been saying for about a decade now - worthless degreed people end up going into politics and this is why you have incompetents like Trudeau and Obama in office.

Aurini finally gets off his ass and does a podcast.

"Land War With Russia"

March 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The problem I face with the Crimea is that it is not a clear cut situation and there are very few outlets telling me what is going on and more importantly why. Steve Sailer comes to the rescue and provides more insight than average.

Average Married Dad

March 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Thanks Dad!

Plus a fan in Wyoming who doesn't hate me. But then again he lives in Cheyenne which is much more cosmopolitan and less trailer trashy than the rest of the state.

The Economic Reason There's Ladies Night and Not Men's Night

March 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I shall explain this a briefly, though this is an excellent write up about the epitome of ladies night.

Every bar's business model is based on getting women into their establishment. The reason is simple - men will buy drinks for both men and women. Women won't even buy drinks for themselves. In other words women themselves aren't really ever viewed as customers as much as they are in fact marketing.

Sadly this means most night clubs are really nothing more than "more polite" strip clubs designed to extract money from men.

YOu guys really do have a choice. You can just refuse to go to night clubs. Not saying you won't hook up. Not saying you won't get a phone number. But for the time, effort and money you have to expend to do well at a night club, there are plenty of places where you'd do much better.

On the Road

March 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Currently enroute driving from Minneapolis to Vegas. Posts will be sparse until Tuesday.

Arrived In Vegas

April 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Posts will continue at a semi-regular schedule.

An Interesting Way to Pay Off Your Student Loans - AKA "Your Credit Score Doesn't Matter"

April 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Consider this lieutenants, economists, agents in the field, and chillllldren!

What if you did three simple things:

1. Never bought a house because it's too risky
2. Never bought an expensive car because you always paid cash
3. Never took on any credit card debt, insisting to pay off the balance every month?

Why, you'd never have any reason to borrow money. And since you'd never have any reason to borrow money...

your credit score wouldn't matter.

Women Don't Have the Life Expectancy to View All the Pictures They're Taking

April 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The increasing number of idiots in our military
Cavarrici jeans, Vail, Vanilla Ice concerts and other things douchey rich kids consumed in the late 80's, and why every man needs to go out west

AND MORE

in this Denver-to-Vegas field episode of The Clarey Podcast!

New Material Month

April 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I tried listening to liberal talk radio for a while. It was painful. But one thing I did take away from it, especially listening to the Ed Schulz Show, is how they define themselves via conservative talk radio.

Since liberal talk shows have no real core, no real depth or logic or intellectual honesty, and merely advocate "other people's money" as the solution to all the world's problem, the entertainment value, let alone the intellectually-engaging value is near zero. It is merely the radio-incarnation of a bum on the street begging for other people's money, and you can imagine how boring (and predictable) the bum's story is about why he needs "spare change." Because of this format around 70% of liberal talk radio is slamming on "republicans" and comparing themselves to Rush Limbaugh. And nowhere is this better displayed than the Ed Schulz Show where he can't go an episode without mentioning Rush Limbaugh, whereas I don't even think Rush Limbaugh has uttered Ed's name once.

However, I noticed something similar happening in the Manosphere. A plurality, and sometimes a majority, of the posts and articles being written are in response to, and thus being defined by, feminism.

This does not mean that The Manosphere is as vapid and coreless as liberal talk radio. It does have a core, it is founded in legitimate, genuinely, and completely new philosophy/thinking. And it does have a noble and altruistic purpose. Ergo, it can stand on its own. But what I've found after reading ROK and Viva, etc., is that it is becoming merely and increasingly reactionary to feminism or the latest feminist bint spewing the most idiotic of ideas.

Realize that while most of which feminism and socialism advocates is outlandishly stupid, and certainly deserves a response, the truth is their numbers and stupidity are staggering and incomprehensible. This has resulted in a limitless number of stupid ideas and stupid thoughts flooding the idea marketplace. And while your visceral reaction may be to shoot each and everyone of them down, I fear all it is doing is driving traffic to otherwise unremarkable and irrelevant feminists. Additionally, as you know, I believe the situation in America is unsalvagable, so why bother wasting your time rushing from fire to fire to vainly put them out?

Ergo, I am suggesting something for The Manosphere and all content generators within - a month where not one reactionary article or post is written in response to the latest idiotic antics of western feminists.

Not to say we'd be abandoning them forever and letting the rooster rule the roost, but for a month, instead of giving them an absolute value of attention, we dedicate our efforts and focus towards other more-productive topics. We already are covering health, working out, finance, economics, philosophy, etc., which can more than adequately compensate for the lull in feminist-related topics, but perhaps we can also discover new fields and pioneer new lines of thought.

In short, I'm done responding like a Pavlovian dog to the newest of the never-ending retarded ideas coming from the left. I'm going to focus on something else for a while. All authors, bloggers, and internet personalities are welcome to join me this month.

But At Least It's "Hip" to Vote for Socialism

April 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Remember spoiled brat suburbanite and ghetto brainwashed youth - when you vote left because it's fashionable this is the end result.

I Don't Care If Society Collapses

April 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A defense I have to make every once in a while when my "No Child Manifesto" videos get rediscovered is that I, being a sentient, self-aware individual, who is entitled to his own life, has no obligation to engage in some kind of "breeding-race war" to outbreed different cultures or races. I, being 100% entitled to all the minutes in my life may choose how to spend them however I damn well please and if I choose not to bring children into this world, then so be it.

One of, if not, the largest benefit of not having children is that I really have no vested interest in the future of this, or any other country, beyond my life expectancy. And therefore, no matter how bad things seem to get, I can glibly move on in life, enjoying my conscious minutes here drinking Rumpie, motorcycling, and enjoying the decline. Call it selfish, call it mean, call it whatever you want, it's reality. I'll be dead by that time and won't care, let alone be cognizant of what's going around post-mortem-Cappy.

However, it is interesting to kind of clock or measure where we are along different stages of society collapse. Again, I have no personal vested interest where we are along this spectrum, but it does make for an interesting academic discussion. Though I must confess I have a morbid entertainment interest in watching Sweden collapse within my lifetime. Unlike the US, I believe I'll seen Sweden collapse within my lifetime.

Progressive Credentialism Gone Awry

April 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The Boomers will rue the day they made it so hard for successive generations to become productive members of society. If for any other reason than they cut off the only source of their social security/pension - future generations.

Kim Radersma Gets Her PhD in "Critical White Studies"

April 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Getting a PhD in Critical Whiteness Studies.

Honest to god, I'm not making it up.

Remember parents, this is the vermin that teaches your children.

Fear, the Final Frontier

April 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Dealing with, and consequently crushing fear.

Once More, Into the Breach

April 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Greetings all,

Posts may be a bit sparse as I'm about to do a four day whirlwind hike hitting four national parks in four days:

Zion
Capitol Reef
Canyonlands
Colorado National Monument

Your patience during these "difficult times" is appreciated.

Cappy

Cappy's Las Vegas Adventure

April 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Sadly it does not entail lewd prostitutes, run ins with the mafia, nor winning a Texas Hold 'Em tournament, but rather climbing Turtleback Peak and hiking the Gold Strike Hot Springs Canyon by Hoover Dam. Regardless, not one penny of GDP was made during the production of this western adventure:

Aurini Joins "New Material Month"

April 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You too may join!

Bridget Brown - Proof the Media Doesn't Know Jack About Economics

April 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Don't know how this one escaped my radar. It's 2 years old, but mercy does it show just how stupid people are.

Yeah, the maths are hard, aren't they girls?

Zion and Capitol Reef National Parks

April 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Climbed "Angel's Landing" which consists of a harrowing scaling of the "spine" of a very narrow butte with about 2,000 foot drops on each side. I will be uploading "360 panorama" pictures once I compile them.

Why Bitcoin Has Value

April 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A video request from a client:

Scouting Canyonland

April 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Did some reconnaissance today to scope out a hike in Canyonland National Park. The sad truth is that there's just way too many options:

Prof. Fritz McDonald, Meet David Lereah

April 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

David Lereah, if you don't know, was the chief economist of the National Association of Realtors and his claim to fame was swearing up and down that there was no housing bubble until it invariably popped. His outlandishly optimistic and naive predictions and arguments showed how an association like the NAAR was a biased entity and should have been hiring real economists like me instead.

However, there is a new bubble about and it is the education bubble. And while there is no forefront media spokesperson type of guy like David Lereah for academia, an agent in the field sent me this article written by one Fritz McDonald. An excerpt:

I understand that many of you work full time, sometime many jobs. Here is my advice to you: do as little work as you possibly can outside of college. College is a full-time job. It might be the best full-time job you ever have. Go ask your parents for more money, if they have it. Spend less money on your car or clothes. Don't waste your time working at Abercrombie and Fitch or Taco Bell. Spend more time at OU.

The entire article is not so much the standard propaganda of "follow your heart and the money will follow" or "you can't put a price on education," but has taken a new twist of highlighting the social and cultural benefits of attending Oakland University. This is a new twist to the strategy of getting naive children to part with their (or their parents') money in that it suggests that you cannot have a social life nor be cultured outside of that precious and necessary academia.

You know that college experience of drinking at an underage party?

Nope, can't enjoy that unless you're in college.

Road tripping out west?

Nope, can't do that unless you're in college.

See a play at the local theater?

Nope, can't do that unless you're in college.

My agent in the field wrote a response to Prof. McDonald here, but I'm going to be a bit more succinct:

Fritz is nothing more than one of thousands of academians, unionized workers, support staff, TA's, and all the other people that make up the nearly trillion dollar per year education industry. And like most of his peers, he realizes there's a bubble and it's about to burst.

However, this would force him, and nearly everybody else in academia to live their worst nightmare:

LEAVING ACADEMIA AND GETTING (GASP!!!! NO!!!) A REAL JOB!!!!!

This is what's behind the increasing number of academian-originated pieces out there advocating the "benefits" of a college education.

And just like it was wise to know David Lereah was biased, so too should you know all academians and professors are biased too.

Day One Canyonlands

April 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Instead of just driving around, ended up hiking AND drove down the most terrifying stretch of road I've ever been on:

Canyonlands Day 2 - Needles District

April 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Some more pics from my adventures:

Why Scandinavians (and Naive SWPL Americans) are Suckers

April 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I am always amazed how Scandinavians (and many Americans) allow people in from other countries (as well as people within the country already) who have no intention but to take their charity for granted and parasitically live off of the taxpayer. However, Molyneux has an OUTSTANDING and MUST LISTEN rant in this podcast about why that is. It's around the 51:00 minute mark and it goes for about 25 minutes of non-stop rant.

The Captain's Las Vegas Stripper Story

April 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

the Born Again Christian/Churchianity version of "Jesus Loves Me This I Know" why Aaron and his brother are ending the Clarey line forever
the saddest stripper in the world
reminiscing about Grandpa and what the 50's must have been like

AND MORE!

On this episode of The Clarey Podcast!

And remember kids, you can get all the archived shows here for your listening pleasure!

Tuesday Day Linkage

April 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

What did I tell you about Warren Buffett oh....about 3-5 years ago?

Glorious Karl reviews "Nixon's Guide to the Multiverse." It is that good, you can buy it here.

Lipstick on a financial pig. Lipstick on a pig. It's about as wise as printing off more money to solve all problems.

This is the natural consequence of governments intervening in social policy.

I loathe the boomers I "interned" under who lied about the job duties and the lack of pay. But when they steal ideas from youth ESPECIALLY WHEN TELLING THEM THE IDEA WAS STUPID, I get furious.

Spoiled American College Students

April 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From a reader in the field:

Dear Aaron,

I agree with you about the college cost bubble. IIRC, we both graduated in three years of cheap in-state tuition.

But you seem to be missing the demand side. Students want luxury dorms. I remember when we had phones in the hall that only called campus numbers. Students want trips abroad. They want the five-year college experience with easy majors. And they want athletics.

http://www.nytimes.com/2014/04/07/education/colleges-increasing-spending-on-sports-faster-than-on-academics-report-finds.html?hpw&rref=education&_r=0

Much of the inflation comes from administrative salaries, including fundraising and all these new customized extras. I guess students are rich and lazy. Seriously, in 1960, students attended class around 15 hours per week and studied around 25. Now they study (or do homework) around 12 hours. It's like high school or an executive education conference where you just show up and get baby-sat/entertained.

Enjoy your trip out west.

Agent in the Field #47

We Are All Sheep

April 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Reluctant, but still sheep nonetheless.

Late Night Aurini

April 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Well actually it's early morning and I just woke up, so whether you're a late night night clubber or an early to rise farmer, I present you with Aurini's latest.

Making the final leg of the journey home. Posts/material will return to normal starting tomorrow.

OK Cupid and Mozilla's Anti-Free Speech Idiocy

April 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I liked Mozilla's Firefox. I really did. But when they showed they were not real Americans and kowtowed to the slightest bit of criticism from some Nazi anti-free speech assholes, I have no respect for them

This, then begets the standard request of dumbass, oblivious SWPL republican Americans to actually inconvenience themselves from their posh lives and boycott the evil that plots against them. But I know, I know, that's too much to ask from the sedated class.

They will still attend Leondardo DeCaprio movies.

They will still buy Starbucks coffee.

They will still use Firefox.

They are so stupid, ignorant and lazy they are the real reason the US will collapse.

Still, I insist on making my little commentary here for posterity so that I may die with a clean conscience 30-40 years from now.

So here's the basics:

Boycott OK Cupid if (for some reason) you have an account with them.

Also:

Get rid and uninstall Firefox if you're using it and replace it with Chrome, Explorer or some other browser.

Viewing Cities as HOA's

April 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Whilst adventuring out west I was able to download podcasts from my favorite talk show, Garage Logic. And so, though 2,000 miles away and in the most remote regions of the US, I was still able to hear about the latest stupidity of Minneapolis, this time our newest mayor's desire for Minneapolis to go "zero waste."

Naturally some standard observations and criticism can be made:

1. the municipal left's propensity to blow money on consultants.
2. the blindingly obvious fact that the left has ran out of genuinely good ideas on governance and are instead pursuing the political religion of going green
3. the lack of funds needed to do basic things like pave streets
4. and the poetic justice of the idiot citizens who vote for such idiocy, but get to suffer it

There is more, but the important lesson to take from this is not one of leftists policies turning every major metro into Detroit, but rather one where it pays every potential home owner to step back, clear their eyes and look at cities for what they really are:

Large home owners associations.

I never liked the idea of HOA's because to me it seemed like another layer of unnecessary government. But if you're going to live in a development or a condoplex, HOA's are a necessary evil. However, cities or municipal government are EXACTLY THE SAME THING, just on a larger scale. And just like you would want to investigate who is in charge of the HOA's, what kind of people live in the association, etc., etc., so to do you want to investigate the city you're about to drop $300,000 purchasing a home in.

First, who are your neighbors? Most regular HOA's are filled with boring, law-abiding citizens who live in the burbs or are professionals in the city. Sure they may play music a little loud or perhaps they don't tidy their yard, but in general they are people you can get along with. Contrast that with a major metro area where it is practically guaranteed you have criminals, drugs, racists, dumbass drunkard youth, graffiti artists, all of who are practically guaranteed to be leftists.

Second, because of the city-HOA's populus' propensity to be leftists, you can expect a city council of unimaginable ineptitude to be voted in. All they have to say is the right thing, advocate the rich pay their fair share, beg the state for more money, and spend money on bike trails, art, community centers, and light rail trains. Consequently...

Third, what are your association dues aka "property taxes" like and what is their trend?

Again, it is no secret that while living in Minneapolis my property taxes went up 400% in 8 years. If I remember the math right, I was shelling out around $350 a month, up from $90 a month when I first purchased the home. Not only did I not enjoy an increase of 400% in city services, the perpetually increasing property taxes made it so my rental property no longer cash flowed AND consequently drove its value down. I could only imagine what $350 per month would get me in one of the posher suburban developments.

and finally

Fourth, if the HOA posing as a city is so poorly managed, are you even going to be able to sell your property if you decide you no longer wish to be a part of that HOA? Ask anybody who had a significant real estate investment in Detroit during the 60's if they got their money back or lost money on their property. The problem people face, especially in large metros, is that home ownership really isn't a benefit, but rather a liability.

The larger point is that no matter how big a city is, when you decide to purchase property within those city limits you are consciously or not joining a "club" or an "association" the members of which consist of the entire city's population. This population, like a HOA out in the burbs, will determine the quality of life you have, not to mention the ultimate financial cost associated with owning a home in that municipality. If the people are high quality people, you can expect quality services, a quality standard of living and low HOA's fees. But if it's the typical vermin that populate our major metros you can expect to pay through the nose for bad roads, crime, people bigoted against conservatives/libertarians, and a perpetuity financial liability that forever will increase, rendering your home worthless. The choice is yours.

New Sponsor Uplift X

April 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New sponsor everybody - Uplift X.

Instead of drinking Red Bull or the like and ruining your kidneys try Uplift X instead. Bottles have 30 capsules, take one a day and see if it doesn't replace your coffee habit. The combination of caffeine and L-theanine improves mood and energy.

Unfortunately, only available for sale in the US.

"Triggers" - The Latest Display of American Weakness

April 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"triggers" cripes.

It is stuff like this that makes me want to cheer for Putin.

What You Can Learn from Matt Forney

April 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Congratulations are in order for Matt Forney who because of a recently acquired independent gig, is now 100% completely independent from all forms of employment.

However, Matt's recent success has a lesson for all men in it and I wanted to highlight it.

I personally like Matt but am lukewarm about the material he puts out. It's a bit too crass for me and I like books more than I do what amounts to essays (ergo why I liked his hitchhiking book and not much of his other stuff). This isn't to say that he material is bad, it's just not for me.

But here is the point:

Matt didn't start out a great writer (he is) and a good podcaster (he's improving). Like you, like me, like every other person out there, he started out sucking. But persistence pays off. And just like I had 5 women walk off the dance floor from me whilst learning dance, over time, I ended up becoming an accomplished dancer.

Matt has achieved the same success.

Of course, there is no doubt in my mind that Matt received a lot of guff and flak. Both for his choice of material, opinions, and daring to aim to become an independent writer/blogger/podcaster. But who is laughing now?

Matt is now 100% his own man. He answers to no one and now has his entire life ahead of him ALONG with the right to spend it however he damn well pleases. And he did so not by starting a billion dollar company or even getting a one hit wonder book. He did it with multiple lines of revenue, pursuing minimalism, persistence AND ignoring the naysayers.

It is a feat many young men should emulate.

Saturday Night Linkage

April 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Predatory cultures taking advantage of empathetic cultures. How much you want to bet the UK was all affirmative actiony with this guy?

Is it possible to enjoy the decline, part 1.

Precious. A worthless academian who never worked in the real world rues the trend of companies getting rid of HR departments.

Podcast Corner

April 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Three podcasts.

OK, well, in reality ONE REAL podcast and then two guys who use Youtube as the medium to record and publish their podcasts thereby forcing me to convert it into an audio format by which I can listen to on my MP3 player

Just kidding guys, just kidding.

Podcast 1 - Ed Driscoll interviews Kathy Shaidle about her new book "Confessions of a Failed Slut"

Podcast 2 - Two episodes I missed from Aurini while travelling. #1 and #2.

Podcast 3 - The Bechtloff's second foray into podcast world.

I Am Not Sisyphus

April 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Though I humbly and with great gratitude appreciate the comparison.

On a horribly off color note I present this crass and tangentially related music video.

and other female participants in the more extreme sects of the "religion of peace."

Asshole Consulting Now Official

April 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings All!

Like the rest of my life, the things I tried to be successful at I failed at miserably.

And the things I scoffed at and merely tried as hobbies or recreational activities...

I succeeded at incomprehensibly.

Enter in Asshole Consulting.

The problem I faced was I was receiving a ton of e-mails requesting advice that I just plain did not have the time to answer. Out of controlled, but polite frustration, I started telling the seekers-of-free-wisdom that it would not be free. And that though I would love to help them, I personally did not have the time to answer all of their questions without being compensated.

And so what I thought would end up being a polite financial disincentive to turn people down for free advice ended up becoming a genuine and actual market to capitalize on.

People are willing to fork over a couple bucks for some quick and dirty advice.

And thus Asshole Consulting was born.

Many of you have already contracted my services, but for those of you who haven't I'll explain it very simply:

You have two choices when seeking advice.

1. Pay for a professional consultant to lie to you because their goal is to extract as much money from you as possible and will therefore NEVER solve your problem, but merely perpetuate it as long as possible

OR

2. hire an asshole who doesn't give a damn about your feelings, already makes enough money on the side that he doesn't need your money, which means he doesn't have any incentive to lie to you, and therefore will tell you the honest truth...which ultimately means a cheaper and more effective solution to your problems.

And Asshole Consulting is option #2.

Most of the people who have hired me are looking for a TIDBIT of advice. Not a ton. And after what usually amounts to a 5 minute e-mail and a $20 tab, I slightly correct their path in life to a path that is much more profitable and happy. So consider the ole Captain when you have a question in life. A $20 consultancy may be just the nudge or epiphany you need to make the remaining 50 years of your life easier, happier, and financially more profitable.

That's ASSHOLE CONSULTING.

Because only assholes will tell you the truth to your face.

The Importance of Controlling Your Micro-environment

April 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A funny thing happened to me whilst driving both ways through Utah. While listening to the radio or my podcasts about the outside world and how liberals in DC were doing X, the socialists at the UN were doing Y, and feminists in academia were doing Z, right there in front of me was the most beautiful scenery on the planet.

And while Michelle Obama was spending millions of our tax dollars taking her and her daughters on a whirlwind trip to China, there I was talking to Alvin, the proprietor of my favorite fossil and rock shop in South Dakota.

And while more accusations in North Minneapolis were made about white privilege and economic justice, I was sitting with two of my best friends in Vegas smoking a very smooth and tasty cigar.

Slowly, but surely, over the course of my 2 week wild-west road trip, this juxtaposition between what I heard on the radio/podcasts versus what my eyes saw and what I was actually experiencing brought forth to my frontal lobes another important epiphany:

The importance of controlling your micro-environment.

Understand that although your "macro" environment (the government we live under, the economy we endure, the culture we're born into etc) has a profound effect on your life, your "micro-environment" has a much larger and determining effect on you, your life, and your happiness. And the reason why is simple - you personally interact with your micro-environment more than you do you macro environment. Thankfully, your micro-environment has an additional advantage over your macro-environment - it is nearly 100% under your control. Ergo, while there isn't much you can do to about the idiot Millineals voting in an anti-American socialist into the presidency, there is a lot you can do to ensure such idiots play no role in your personal life whatsoever.

These facts about the micro-environment (let alone realizing there is one) is often underappreciated, and therefore, undercapitalized by most Real Americans. They, naturally and logically, focus on the general decline of the US, the destruction of their culture and the demise of the former-greatest country on the planet. However, if people were to step back, clear their eyes, and take a look at their lives, they'd soon realize that for all the dire news they hear in the media, practically none of it affects their daily lives.

All the Marxist hyperbole of "privilege" does nothing to change the fact you're still employed and current on your mortgage, while those who constantly invoke "privilege" are still dead-last place in society with student loans, a worthless degree, and no future prospects.

All propaganda about "global warming" may drive up your taxes and costs, but in the end you can still afford infinitely more sushi and martinis than the unshaven, dirty, and impoverished "professional" environmental activists.

All all the whining about race, class, gender, ethnicity, etc., will not change the fact that regardless of your color, you made the right choices in life, didn't get/get somebody pregnant before marriage, majored in the right thing, and never have to live in the ghetto, section 8 housing, or send your kids to some crappy inner city schools.

There is certainly more, but if you take inventory of your personal life and your micro-environment you'll soon see that no matter what happens at a national level and what leftist, hate-filled vitriol is spewed by the media or academia, in the end your life is infinitely better than most others simply because you are better than most others and you surround yourself with people who are also better than most others.

Your friends, for example, increase your standards of living more than most tax cuts because they provide engaging conversation, safe reliable friendship, don't deal drugs, and genuinely hold your friendship in high esteem. The same cannot be said for "friends" dealing meth in the trailer park or crack in the ghetto, constantly landing you in trouble with the law.

Your neighbors, again, higher quality people who keep their yards tidy, respect your property rights, and keep quiet at night. They also are likely to vote to keep local taxes low and the majority of money in private citizens' hands. The same cannot be said for denizens of leftists communities who are looking for more bike paths, community centers, and other forms of wealth transfers while keying your cars, graffiting up the hood, and rioting like feral animals.

Your lovers play a vital role in a superior micro-environment. Always hotter and sexier that what most leftists tend to offer, not to mention they tend to be more mentally and financially stable.

The proprietors and businesses you patronize are part of your micro-environment providing you superior products, superior food, superior entertainment, and superior service.

And while "society" may demand the likes of Miley Ray Syphilis, nobody says you have to listen to her or her subhuman musical filth, permitting you to listen to jazz, engaging talk radio, or the(COUGH COUGH AHEM AHEM) world's greatest podcast.

In short, bar fiscal and monetary policy, nearly every other aspect of your life is within your control. And as long as you don't majorly screw up, insist on making the right decisions, and surround yourself with quality people, your life will forever be superior to those on the left no matter how much they try to improve theirs at the expense of yours. Better yet, your life will be your ultimate revenge as it will forever burn a hole of envy in most leftists' hearts. They'll never be able to attain what you have, thereby relegating them to villainizing and mocking it.

Enjoy the decline.

Good News About Firefox

April 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The Pale Moon browser is gaining traction against it:

The Unrelenting Ego of Leftists

April 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me to cite four stories/examples.

First, R22.

If you didn't know what R22 is, it's a refrigerant that is used in airconditioning units. It's been banned by the EPA and the EU because it "harms the ozone layer." Its replacement is much more costly and has resulted in some entities (smaller sports arenas namely) having to shut down or go without airconditioning.

Second, azodicarbonamide.

You may remember this more as the "yoga mat chemical" that was used to make Subway bread chewier. It wasn't until a "food blogger" Vani Hari went on her little crusade and "exposed" Subway for using this chemical did most of anybody care.

Third, earplugs.

Not that there's anything interesting or newsworthy of earplugs unto themselves, but when a city councilman like Jacob Frey wants to force music establishments in Minneapolis to provide their patrons with earplugs and considers such an idea "good government" you can see why such an idiotic idea and man might make the news.

Finally, the cancer-ridden woman in Rapid City.

Some of you may know the story, but the short version was this 60 something woman who obviously had gone through chemo (she had no hair) was talking with her friends about how they stopped the Keystone pipeline at a cigar lounge I like to attend. They were patting themselves on the back and then said, "ONTO STOP THE BAKKEN!" When I got up to leave she thought I was her friend and asked for a hug "goodbye." I then ripped into her about how she was scum, the reason the country and my generation had no hope, and that her little crusade was just to feed her ego and she didn't give a damn about the environment. I may have said something about her not living long enough to see the Bakken shut down.

So what do all four of these anecdotes/stories have in common?

They all highlight what is arguably the most dangerous aspect of leftists and socialists:

They won't stop.

Understand that there is a theoretical "optimal" amount of legislation. Too little legislation and there's bound to be a lot of crime. Too much legislation and you cripple and choke off your private sector. But leftists don't care about this because to them MORE legislation is ALWAYS better. It makes up for the fact they really don't have good ideas of governance, they have no game plan, and they make for miserable statesmen. I termed this "disease" or phenomenon "Chronic Regulation Addiction" or CRA.

The problem for leftists and politicians in general suffering from CRA is that they fail to realize that there's nothing wrong with doing NOTHING. That maybe over the past 250 years an adequate amount of laws and regulations were already passed and this body of legislation needs only mere and occasional tweaking. No they "must do something" and so they're always on the hunt, always on a crusade to right and imaginary or made-up wrong.

The problem this presents for society, however, is that as the laws become progressively petty they also become progressively invasive. Admitted Nazi, Hater of Humanity, and All-Around Douchebag Extra-Ordinaire, Michael Bloomberg is the perfect example of this. So complete was the legal system of NYC he had nothing better to do than to tell people how much soda they were going to drink. And Jacob Frey, though not in the same league as Bloomberg, is doing his best to make people's hearing health the responsibility of the city government. You take these two and multiply them by the tens of thousands of bureaucrats, politicians, and other participants that populate and lead our legal and regulatory agencies and you can see the threat to personal freedoms CRA infected leftists presents.

Perhaps, however, if we find out what drives leftists and socialists to constantly push for more as opposed to less regulation we can stop the perpetual encroachment upon our personal freedoms? And while that may sound great, unfortunately it's impossible, for what is truly driving leftists and socialist is ultimately their lack of any worth as a human being.

Though not a 100% correlation, if you look at the majority of leftist (and rightist) politicians, crusaders, "activists" and other people suffering from CRA their lives usually have no purpose, no core, and no meaning.

They rarely work real jobs.
They rarely tried hard in life choosing the path of least resistance.
They produce nothing of genuine economic value.
And usually hail from academia, law, government, non-profit and 9 out of 10 times have a worthless liberal arts degree.

Because of this they need something to fill the void and give them some kind of "faux" point or purpose in life, but nothing that would require rigor or hard work. And thus they not only champion leftist causes (because "other people's money" is a popular and easy platform to run on), but constantly hunt down those progressively smaller morsels of "societal ills" that "demand action be taken to solve!" But worse, it's nearly impossible for them to ever stop feeding their egos with never-ending "do-gooderism" because in order for them to stop at the "optimal level of law" they would be forced to look in the mirror and accept two things:

1. They are in fact worthless people and their lives not only meaningless, but damaging to society
2. They would have to get real jobs

And that the ego of a leftist cannot abide.

Ergo, the ego of leftists is never ending. It will not stop. It will not relent. And it will run-ramshod over your personal freedoms as long as it feeds its host. Because after all, it's more important that politicians and bureaucrats make up new laws and regulations to feel good about their worthless-selves than you have the right to drive the car you want, eat what you want, and do what you want in this country.

Enjoy the decline!

The Worst Advice My Father Ever Gave Me

April 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"just because somebody CAN do something doesn't mean they ever will."

Amen brother. A-freaking-men.

I will merely add my favorite quote of all time:

"When you come from, it's gone. Where you thought you were going to? Weren't never there. And where you are ain't not good unless you can get away from it."

Cappy Cap Sponsorage

April 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Remember lieutenants, economists, and agents in the field, support other entreprenurial lieutenants, economists and agents in the field who advertise on good ole Cappy Cap!

Chad Elkin's Tax Guide

UPlift X

The Red Ginseng Store

Talon Knife

Rewarding Paul Krugman

April 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

for being the government's lapdog bitch.

When I am king there will be no government money going to anybody to espouse any political views of any kind.

But remember, I'm the "right wing fascist" and Krugman is a caring liberal.

Michael Bloomberg is Precisely the Reason the 2nd Amendment Was Written

April 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

You would think he'd just retire, but alas, the only thing tyrants have in their lives is to control other people.

Why Liberals and Leftists Are Impervious to Logic, Math, and Reason

April 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A "Sane" Horse Woman Speaks Out!

April 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I got this comment from this video that I just couldn't pass up.

Silent Stormz 4 hours ago

Haha you're funny not! I understand there are women that are overly obsessed with horses. women have horses so they can escape most of the bullshit in their life's! us women have passion men that talk like this don't understand! women put horses before them self's is because they are important to them, they can be like children to them! Me myself, are completely sane. OK THE LAST THING WOMEN THAT USE THERE BF/HUSBANS MONEY FOR THEIR HORSES IS STUPID, I LIKE TO PROVE I AM PROVIDE FOR MY SELF AND MY HORSE!

Reply

MAXCOBRALAZERFACE 1 week ago

LOLZ 140 IQ & you didn't know horse chick are crazy...

Reply

Kelsie Beaulieu 1 month ago (edited)

I'm probably in the minority but I have 3 horses, one is my step dads, and I'm nothing like your describing but I'm also not a 'girly girl feminist' or whatever. My horses stay healthy and two of them pull a wagon in parades, their food bill is less than my grocery list and I do their feet myself so no farrier(foot trimming) fee. I spend less than $120 a month on my

Read more (16 lines)

Reply

Remember boys, women with horses are AHEM "sane." Don't all rush out there and marry all of them up now, you hear. Leave some for the rest of us!

Until the Government Bails Out the Higher Education Industry

April 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An estimate going around that half of the US universities could be out of business in 15 years.

That is until the government bails them out.

"Confessions of a Failed Slut" - A Review

April 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Confessions of a Failed Slut is the latest work from Kathy Shaidle of Fivefeetoffury Fame. And I would like to start out by pointing out it is an ESSAY, not a book!

Not that there's anything wrong with that. I am a big fan of essays if for any other reason than that many ideas do not need 300 pages to convey. But I wanted to be a stickler to this point because Kathy readily admits it is an essay and not a book by offering it only in Kindle format. She did not write 35 pages and call it a "book." Ergo, I tip my hat to her in this pet peeve regard of mine.

That being said "Confessions of a Failed Slut" covers Kathy's life through the 70's, 80's and 90's, primarily recording her observations of dating, courting, sex, and society during that time. However, unlike her slutty counterparts or contemporaries writing for Cosmo or aging like Maureen Dowd, she is nowhere near as vapid or vain. She is a woman with a sharp mind, self-respecting impatience, and an cynical eagle eye making her observations prove correct overtime and clairvoyant in the past. Therefore instead of Harlequin romance tripe, you get a straight shot, no dope, Brooklyn east-coast accented talking story (except for the fact Kathy hails from Canada).

The essay takes on basically a rant/screed feel as she effortless transitions from one topic to the next, never requiring chapters or even subheadings. One minute she's talking about being in AA, the next minute she's talking about the Love Boat, and the third about Penthouse Magazine. While this would have normally made my linear economist mind explode, it doesn't matter because there is a logic and a flow, and above all else a lesson - generations of young men and women have been lied to so much that what we are witnessing is not only sad, but sadistically entertaining and utterly predictable. Normally such a dire and macabre topic would beget frowns and heads shaking, but Kathy's realism, indifference, bluntness, and ability to make hilarious analogies on par with Dennis Miller will have you laughing your ass off every 2nd page.

Will this book revolutionize your thinking?

No, probably not.

Will this book convince any one of the hundreds of millions of young westerners to convert back to their traditional 1940's societal roles?

Oh good lord no.

But it is nice to see, from the perspective of a "slightly" older than me type "older sister" who had been through it before explain what she saw, how outlandish it was back then, and that no, you weren't insane for thinking what you did back in 1988.

You can find "Confessions of a Failed Slut" on Kindle.

(Note, "slightly older" means like 3-4 months older than me putting her squarely in her mid 30's)

Part Two of Soul Smithy's "Enjoy the Decline"

April 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Admittedly it is very crass and ridden with foul language, but I like the flow and the Sam Spade kind of narration of it.

When the Left Co-opts the Word "Bullying"

April 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Permit me to make a prediction young lieutenants.

My experience has told me that the left hates and loathes more than anything else the following things:

Being accused of lying
Being shamed
Being exposed as a hypocrite
Being accused of/shown to be stupid
Being criticized
Being ridiculed
and
Being mocked

They can dance in the boxing ring with you all day if you try to argue facts, statistics, and logic, because they will simply ignore what you say and call you a racist or a sexist. But if you stoop to their level and take them on in a personal way, shaming them and exposing them for the idiots they truly are, then they get mad. Because in going after them personally, you reframe the argument to be personal and about them. They (very much like conservatives frantically scramble to deny an accusation of racism) get livid, see red, and muster the entirety of their energies to protect the thing that means the most in their lives - their egos

Does it solve the debate?
No.

Does it advance the national dialogue about the economy and government?
No.

But it's the most progress I've ever had whilst engaging leftists.

However, an interesting little phenomenon is developing and I can see it happening a mile away. And that is the left is quickly drafting on its drafting board in academia the perfect weapon to deflect, deny, and even criminalize any mockery, ridicule, outing, shaming or any other form of one-upmanship. And that perfect weapon is to take all of the above, define it as "bullying" and make it an illegal act a la "harassment" or some other such act of intellectual dishonesty.

Whether they will be successful or not is another debate, but already you can see the word "bullying" being used in leftist parlance with the context that suggests when you call a feminist on her bullshit you're a bully

make fun of a socialist's inability to do basic 4th grade math you're a bully dare to hold minorities up to white standards, thereby treating them as genuine equals you're a bully

laugh at middle aged women who think they can "have it all" as they divorce and find out no men want them, you're a bully

The ultimate aim of this cowardice is to shut down debate. And like other words (racist, sexist, bigot, homophobe, close-minded, fascist, redneck, hick, privilege, etc.) once accused of the criminal act of "bullying" most spineless conservatives, libertarians, etc., will abandon their post, abandon the argument and rush to defend against the accusation out of fear of social ostracization, fear their career would be ruined, or fear of criminal charges being brought against them.

Of course, "bullying" ending up becoming a crime may sound a bit outlandish, but how far of a jump is an accusation of "bullying" from "harassment?" Also, have you seen just how thin-skinned, cowardly and pathetic the up-coming generation is? Just a quick perusal of our college culture with their obsession to find new forms of "privilege," their hyperbole of "rape culture," and their addiction to becoming some kind of a victim (ADD, ADHD, dyslexia, my sex, my color, my multigenderedness, depression, bipolar, the list is endless as it is pathetic) shows our "future" is a bunch of adult children professionally trained to look for and be insulted. Their inferiority in this regard almost guarantees the definition and illegality of "bullying" will be expanded.

But, as you know, I always like to point out the bright side or at least the solution.

These veritable Nazis, these haters of freedom, these whiny, snively parasites who constantly fake being a victim so they can rationalize living off of others just aren't terribly savvy about economics. And what they don't realize is that the economy is so poor and entire underclass (namely comprised of men) have no future career hopes family

or money

And since the teeth of left's "victimization strategy" ultimately lies in the threat that if a conservative or libertarian speaks their mind they might lose their career

job money future hopes and/or family

for at least the future generation this tactic is ineffective. An entire generation of (again, primarily men) have nothing left to lose. And when it comes time to telling a fat acceptance feminist she's fat a minority to get off his ass and stop blaming his skin color for his failure, but rather his 5 illegitimate children or a spoiled brat suburbanite that her degree in sociology is a waste of taxpayers resources and proof she can't do math no amount of a legal threat of "bullying" is going to stop them. Because at least there's sanity in pointing out the truth, no matter how much and how many whinny, spineless, cry-baby victim leftists cry bloody murder.

Another Cappy Cap Job Posting

April 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy All,

Alex over at Academic Composition is looking to hire some people again and since I know a lot of you are either in college or fresh out of college and looking for some cash, thought this might be up some of your alleys. Of course, nothing glamorous or glorious, but it will pay some bills. Basically he's looking to expand his homework-writing business and needs people to post ads on Craigslist.

Here are the specifics he's provided me:

If you reside in one of the below listed regions, you can seize this opportunity by posting ads on craigslist.
1. Los Angeles
2. New York
3. Boston
4. Houston
5. Dallas
6. Denver
7. Vancouver
8. Chicago
Next, all you'd need to do is follow this simple four step process to receive a $25 start-up compensation.

A. Create a new gmail account
B. Set up the forwarding features to ensure that all of their incoming emails are automatically re-directed to me (sounds more complicated than it really is, most people will be able to figure out how to do this within 3 minutes)
C. Use the new GMAIL account to set up a Craigslist account
D. Receive my ads and prepare to post them in the city where they reside

If you post the ad specifically as you were instructed to, it will not be flagged and removed by craigslist. If your ad stays live on the forum for one full week, you will be paid $20. If it stays for a full 12 hours, a $15 compensation is in order. If it only lasts three days, I'll pay you $10. If it survives for a mere 3 hours, you'll be paid $5.
Contact Alex at academiccomposition@gmail.com

Again, I know it's not an investment banking position, but it beats delivering pizzas.

Dude Bro Inc

April 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Let's just say I know "a guy."

And when hanging out with this "guy" one time I met his co-workers. These co-workers were the epitome of the fratboy-douchebags that, like Wyoming, should eliminate any concern on your part that the decline in America is relegated to just "women and minorities." No, they were proof positive that the decline is truly unbiased, unbigoted, and is infecting all people of all kinds.

But something was different about these dude bros. They were extra-special douchey the night I met them.

Sure they all had the signs of dude-bro-ness:

Wearing sunglasses indoors at night.
Having floozies on their arms that had the face "don't dare talk to me."
Doing shots shots shots shotshotshots shots shots shots shots.
Telling stories and giving speeches that were neither funny, nor witty, and completely based on inside jokes.
Bragging about their careers.
Taking selfies even though they're males.

But then two things caught my eye.

One, they all drove cars that I knew by their age they couldn't mathematically afford. Oh sure, it was possible. Anything was possible. But they'd have to be bringing down around $250,000 per year to make all their stories true and hold the deeds to those cars. And I knew from banking the percentage of middle-aged fratboy douches who owned their car was around 2%. Their younger, less experienced counterparts, had to be leasing or borrowed to the hilt.

Two, they were in sales. "Sales" if you don't know is where many douchey dude bros work because they are completely untrained, unskilled, and too lazy to do anything else.

Frame this house?
"Dude, that's like what my old man did."

Program this router?
"Dude, that's for nerds!"

Weld this car?
"DUDE! THAT GAME IS ON!!! GO LEBRON!!!!! He's my man!!!!!"

No, they were "big idea guys" and any real work was beneath them.

This also caught my economist eye because I knew all "idea guys" were ego maniacs who wanted the benefits of hard work, but used sleaze, ass-kissing, politicking, and networking to attain said benefits without hard work.

So faster forward several years and I don't know why it comes up, but my economic spidey senses start tingling and saying, "you know, there's no way to tell how those dude bros turned out, let alone prove with 100% certainty that they were indeed posers, but I wonder if their company is publicly traded."

And by golly it is.

And by golly will you look at those bottom lines.

Again, there is no guarantee that the dude bros were faking it. Who knows, the company could have been spending all of their money on sales teams making those dude bros the only dude bros in the country that weren't faux $30,000 millionaires. But based on my experience in banking, not to mention knowing precisely what it would take to present and keep up such a lifestyle/image, I think I can safely tell you this very important lesson:

Nearly 100% of the people you see dude-bro-ing it up, or fratboying it up, or (on the female side) "partaaaayyyying" it up, are fake and putting on a show.

Mathematically
Economically and psychologically

it is just impossible for so many young people in today's economy to all be acting like Paris Hilton AND have the money to back it up. There just isn't the money, there just isn't the economic growth, and truthfully, most young people today are just too freaking stupid to manage their finances, let alone to the level they are in the top 1% of income earners.

Ergo, when you see them in the nightclubs, partying it up at a bar, ordering a round of shots, driving a fancy import, do not feel jealous or that you are somehow underperforming. I can guarantee you with 99.9% accuracy the party is going to end rather quickly for them and the remaining 20 years of their lives consist of avoiding bankruptcy, living paycheck to paycheck, and the constant fear of having to make ends meet. Worse for them, they will have to keep up the lie to save face which will only condemn their entire financial lives to hell.

You just need to realize this, practice minimalism, find non-douchey friends, and both your personal lives and financial lives will be forever better and genuinely richer than the dude bros'.

New Blogroll Addition - James Altucher

April 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Many of you guys have recommended for some time now I look into James Altucher. I metaphorically said in my mind, "yeah yeah, I will" as if I was promising my mom I would read Atlas Shrugged or something.

Finally, I checked out his site and, frankly I am ashamed I did not heed the words of my readers earlier.

My thanks, and apologies, but James Altucher is now officially on the blogroll. You may visit him here.

I also intend on reviewing some of his books. Namely Choose Yourself and 40 Alternatives to College.

A Podcasty Weekend

April 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Davis has (in all seriousness) one of his best podcasts. Download it and listen to it.

He also has a post about Tinder, which invariably I'm going to have to figure out what's going on.

The Bechtloff also has the 4th episode of his podcast released.

The Weakest Generation

April 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

WWII was the Greatest Generation.

Baby Boomers were the Lamest Generation.

Gen X, good lord, the most "Pathetic" Generation I suppose.

But there is no doubt the Millineals are the Weakest Generation.

"The Job Market for Law Grads is So Bad..."

April 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

HOW BAD IS IT!?

It's so bad employers actually have the balls to post a want ad for VOLUNTEER LAWYERS!

College as a Leftist Cult

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Which it is and which is why the Zombie Liberal is a genuine and real threat.

Chicago, The Next Detroit

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The stupid! It burns, it burns!!!!!!

How Black Boys' Desire to Become Athletes and Rappers Destroy Their Lives and the Black Community

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Tourism - The Zero Sum Game That Should Be Played

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Let me succinctly and briefly explain "tourism" from an economic perspective so that you all may understand why local governments are all about it, even to a level that said local governments don't even understand (but do on an intuitive level).

"Tourism" is very Keynesian in that it is short sighted.

For example, Obama, all of economic academia, the council of economic advisors, and the entire management of the federal reserve really do believe, like Christians do a guy nailed to a plank of wood, that government stimulus will "increase aggregate demand" and with a "multiplier effect," blabbity blah blah blah.

Is it working?

No, of course not. Average economic growth is the lowest it's been ever, especially considering the INSANE Keynesian-wet-dream-of-a-deficit we've been running these past 6 affirmative action years.

But the reason it isn't working is because the smart money sees what's going on. The government is merely borrowing money from future producers to pay for current day parasites. Who would invest in such a system, even with (I know, giggle for the idiot naive Keynesians) "low interest rates" and "low taxes?"

But that is PRECISELY the same concept of tourism.

You are taking money from one group of people and moving it to another group of people.

However, instead of Obama's KWD (Keynesian Wet Dream) where we take money from the future and give it to the ~~parasites~~ present, tourism is merely the same thing taking money from one area of the country and giving it to another.

For example, when I lived in Wyoming, there was no shortage of middle aged men motorcycling through town living their motorcycle dream of driving cross-country. Certainly admirable, certainly something I'd recommend, but whereas Krugman and his Fucktard Keynesians (it's a band of government-quality music) would claim this is "economic growth" or "economic stimulus" in the end it is nothing more than taking money from one area of the country and placing it in another.

The money those motorcycling men spent on gas did indeed go to local economy in Wyoming, but that by mathematical necessity withdrew money that would have gone to their hometown economy in Pennsylvania.

The money those mid-life crisis men spent on booze at the Occidental Hotel (which I highly recommend) did in fact benefit the local economy in Buffalo, Wyoming, but at the expense of Saskanoose, Michigan.

In other words, the overall economic impact of "tourism" is a zero sum game. You are merely taking dollars from one area of the country to spend on another.

This then presents an interesting local-economy-war game where different localities and municipalities must advertise and duke it out for tourism dollars. This is why you see advertisements to come visit some place or another. Advertisements to live your dream. Advertisements where SNARK the parasite state of California wants outside money constantly to bail their pathetic asses out (hey California was cool in the 80's! Come visit us, please...we're umm...totally relevant dude!) It also explains why local taxpayers spend billions every year subsidizing professional sports and marginal teams by building them palaces to throw the spheres into hoops or hit spheres with sticks, or are stupid enough to vie for the Olympics.

Regardless, in the end you have what is invariably leftist local politicians fighting against other local leftist politicians for other people's disposable income in the form of out of state tourism dollars. The next national gain is zero, but the local gain can be enormous. But something tells me the leftist politicians and economists we have in our institutions of leadership can't tell the difference.

Bail Me Out of My "Music Education" Degree

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Boo-freaking-hoo.

Just Once, Some Intelligent Shit

April 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I have only one request before I die and pass on in this world.

That Davis Aurini would for once write a quality, thought-provoking intelligent piece of shit.

Of course he can't because, well, in an affirmative action sort of way he is a Canadian, so what do you expect.

But still

Just once

I beg

I plead

Could the man just write one intelligent piece of shit?

Why Nazis Make Better Super Villains Than Communists

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An outstanding observation by The Bechtloff.

Nazis make for better super-villains because at least they aim to be super or superior. Communists (and by "communist" I also mean American democrats) are so unmentionable and unimpressive as individuals they by their own nature are not unique and thusly need to define themselves through others. They aren't Lex Luther or The Joker hatching brilliant schemes as much as they are boring, common, petty thieves rationalizing their parasitism.

Ergo, evil aside, think about what villain you'd rather hang out with:

The Borg or Professor Moriarty
Your average women's studies professor or Bernie Madoff
Barack Obama or Vladimir Putin

Now that's telling. Which comic book series would have better success?

One where the villain is Obama

or

One where Vladimir Putin is the arch-nemesis?

The New Style of Debate

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Hi-freaking-larious.

The video he is referencing is here.

Bernard Chapin also addresses debating in the past and how it's gone down the toilet.

Another Product of the Boomer Generation

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I love it. They carry the 60's leftist crap shoved down our throats to it's logical end - kill yourself.

How Andrew Norlen Destroyed Sweden

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It's not even the fact that immigration will destroy Sweden. It's the blatant ending of the freedom of speech.

"I do not think it takes very many prosecutions before a signal is transmitted in the community that the internet is not a lawless country, the sheriff is back in town"

No Arlen, Stalin is back.

Best Economics Cartoon EVER

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An outstanding cartoon that explains money, banking, and economics better than I've ever seen. Mandatory viewing for people of all ages.

Ram Z Paul

April 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

New blogroll addition.

Ram Z Paul.

Pretty funny guy.

Antonia Ayres-Brown

April 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It is April 22nd, 2014.

I want you to remember this girl's name:

Antonia Ayres-Brown.

The reason I want you to remember her name and this date is because I am making the prediction you will see this person in the news again in the future. And it is nearly guaranteed that it will not be good news, but rather of the "crusader/narcissist telling others how to live life" variety. She got a taste of success. MacDonald's "diversity officer" caved. And she will now and forever be addicted to the powertrip that ensued.

Conservative Female Porn

April 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

At any time, you men have it within your ability to turn this around.

At Least Russia's President is for Russia

April 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Getting hard not to be pro-Putin.

Municipal Bike Coordinator

April 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

For the Patron Saints Name of Frick.

Honest to god, a god damned "bike coordinator."

Boys, are you paying attention? What did Uncle Cappy tell you about owning property in major metro areas?

That's right, DON'T! You rent and spend your youth there, you do NOT invest or live your productive lives there.

In the Mail - MissLed

April 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Got this in the mail.

The Night Dad Went to Jail

April 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I saw this on my Facebook feed and after an unthinking and visceral reaction against it, with further thought I think it's actually quite brilliant and a sad testament that such a book is needed in society.

Countries that Wish to Secede

April 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An interesting post about all the different countries/regions that wish to secede.

The Latest Podcast - Why Do Haters Hate?

April 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Actually, to be honest, I was on Aurini's "The Podcast" as he was gracious enough to host me.

The Most Balless Sheriff - Chris Nocco

April 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

What an utter fucking pathetic excuse for a lawman. "We can't do anything."

OH REALLY??? Then what was this from two years ago?

What this boils down to is that property rights aren't protected in Pasco County because the sheriff is not a sheriff and you are an idiot to live there.

Government Workers Have No Clue How Spoiled They Are

April 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

And MPR (Minnesota Public Radio) is just the latest proof of just what clueless and spoiled children they are.

The Real Reason There is a Liberal Bias in Media

April 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

It really is that simple:

DIE, Higher Education Industry, DIE!!!!

April 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Ahhhh….warm fuzzies!

Weekend Listening

April 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Greetings all,

Returned early in the morning from a funeral from Milwaukee and have been playing catch up with spring cleaning, motorcycle prep, and the like. unfortunately I had to do a video from the road and it is duly noted the audio and video quality suffers when I'm not in my "mother's basement."

Regardless, next week shall be more normal as I catch up on my chores. In the meantime I present to you some podcasts I've been listening to over the past three weeks that I also found enjoyable.

Black Brigade's latest podcast.

Honey Badger Radio

Victory Unlimited's latest podcast on avoiding gold diggers.

Kerry Lutz's podcast on Japan's economy which proves interesting because we're basically Japan 15 years ago.

Follow The Money's podcast archive.

The Captain on Alimony

April 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

This turned out a little better than I thought it would:

Free Northerner Joins the Bachelor Pad

April 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Many thanks for the kind plug.

You can read Free Northerner here.

Uplift X Now Available in Canada

April 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Sponsor wanted to let me know you Canucks can buy Uplift X if you so desire!

You've Been "Mozilla'ed!"

April 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

I will be putting together the petition shortly:

As the State Further Steals Your Children

April 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

A friend of mine said her kid was in "4K"

I said, "4K? What's that?"

"It's kindergarten for 4 year olds."

I didn't even flinch because it's what's to be expected. The state making further inroads into destroying the family, replacing parents, hiring worthless teachers union ditzes, indoctrinating your children to become future democrat voters, all while using what amounts to nothing more than "free baby-sitting" to sell this totalitarianism to the naive suburbanites.

Why Dennis Prager is Dangerous to Young Conservatives

April 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Dennis Prager often trades with Joe Soucheray as my 2nd favorite talk show host. He is incredibly intelligent, goes way further into the rabbit hole than the superficial skimming Sean Hannity does, and crafts his shows meticulously.

He is also incredibly dangerous.

The reason I say Dennis is incredibly dangerous is because he (albeit unintentionally) conveys hope to people where there is none. Specifically when he references his book "Still the Best Hope - Why the World Needs American Values to Triumph" during his show where he is typically suggesting people still have hope for America, invest in America, and believe in America. And while this is nice and what many of us would like to believe, it unfortunately just isn't true.

America and to a larger extent, Western Civilization, has seen it's zenith and is now barreling its way down to 2nd and 3rd world status. With government debt approaching 110% GDP, economic growth half of what it used to be, and with unfunded commitments and liabilities running at 10x's our annual economic production, it is economically and mathematically impossible for this debt-ridden sloth of a country to ever achieve, let alone deliver on whatever hopes Mr. Prager claims it has the potential for.

But the real reason there is no hope in America is not so much its already-handicapped economy; it's what has always determined whether a country is great or pathetic - it's people.

In nearly every aspect of the country you see a decay in the quality and caliber of the people that make up the US.

A younger generation so steeped in leftist indoctrination they voted in a guy who has done nothing more than mortgage their futures. These same kids also naively believe majoring in philosophy or Hate-White-Male-Studies is going to land them a job. And they're so unforgivably ignorant in terms of economics NONE of them are capable of supporting themselves financially, let alone know the basics of public finance (oh, and BTW, this is the generation Prager is pinning his hopes on to "save" the country).

The youth are not the only culprits. Gen X, now thoroughly in what could be considered "parenting age" are failing miserably at that. With divorce rates no different than their parents' generation, we are ensuring the young are dropped off in daycare, raised by the state, alienated from their parents, and are even going to be more inept and incompetent than the adult children that populate our colleges today. But at least Gen X women are empowered.

Of course, who can forget the parasite generation known as the baby boomers? Not only are they parasitical in terms of the resources they will consume via social security and medicare, but the also in their absolute abysmal failure to lead the country. Be it the housing bubble, the government debt crisis, the education bubble, you name it, every major financial and economic problem we have today was done under the reign and leadership of baby boomers.

And hey, let's not forget the newcomers to this country. Why we'll let anybody in. Don't want to learn the language? Sure, come on in! Don't want to work for a living? Sure! Come on in! Want to leave your crappy country, but continue practicing your crappy traditions that made your country crappy in the first place, foolishly thinking just because you're located on a different part of the globe everything will be better? Come on in! And make sure to out-breed the productive members of society because you still haven't learned the concept of income per capita.

Naturally, the result has been predictable. As the quality of humans drops, so does the culture.

Miley Ray Syphilis is on the stage and not Doris Day.

"Black Box" and "Sex and the City" is on TV and not Hogan's Heroes.

"Figgityfoe and His Two Bitch Ho" album outsells Duke Ellington.

And any inferior culture is deemed superior to American Culture simply because it is not American.

Success is failure.

Beauty is ugly.

Excellence is criminal.

Now, are you going to tell me, with all of the decay, all of the corruption, all of the idiots, and all of the just plain evil, you're going to invest in this kind of country?

While Dennis' intention is absolutely noble, honorable, and well-intentioned, unfortunately anybody who follows his advice and decides to tie their anchor to America is going to ruin their one and finite lives. And thus nearly every channel of investing in America is pointless.

Want an education in the US? You're nuts. 50% of your tuition money goes to unnecessary pre-req classes to keep worthless professors employed. And what classes remain will still have a leftist slant berating you for daring to be white, male, or aspiring to succeed. That's when they're not too busy shoving bogus sexual assault statistics down your throat and accusing you of whatever variant of privilege you're unaware you have. And the final parting gift is a crippling level of debt sure to ruin the rest of your life.

Want a career in the US? You're foolish. There are no jobs here, and there CERTAINLY is not the economic growth needed to provide something as unicorny and mythical as a "career." And heaven help you if you dared to exercise your freedom of speech in the past, as your employer (now thoroughly corrupted into totalitarian leftist thought) will fire you with impunity.

Want a family in the US? You are insane, especially if you're a man. The women are spoiled, entitled, obese and divorce-prone. The schools are there to separate you from your children. And if you have the intellectual temerity and honor that most Pragerites have, you will likely raise your child with a decent work ethic, which will only serve to make them hosts for the parasites of lesser parents they will suffer and serve under.

Want a house in the US? Too bad, you can't own a house. OH sure, they'll say it's yours and give you a deed. But in the end all you've managed to do was buy a perpetuity liability where you promise to pay (ever increasing) property taxes to the state.

And all of this under an ever-increasing public debt, declining economic growth, and increasing hostility towards conservatives, libertarians, and otherwise noble and successful people.

No, for anybody with an ounce of temerity or a desire to enjoy a happy and successful life, you'd be wise to ignore Prager's advice and look for greener pastures. Not that he's a bad man, he's just a man from a bygone era hopelessly in love with an idea that is no longer tenable for younger generations.

Enjoy the decline.

QOTD

April 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

"In my dream the Koch brothers buy a bankrupt Harvard"

Everybody Needs An Asshole in Their Life

April 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Because assholes are the only ones who will tell you the truth.

Ergo, consider hiring an asshole to consult you about;

your career your education your dating your business, and your life

Cheaper than a "real" consultant, and infinitely more honest.

Asshole Consulting, because we plain don't give a fuck about you...

which ironically means...

we care more than anybody else.

A Location-Independent Job Posting for Cappy Cappites

April 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Howdy All,

Alex over at Academic Composition is expanding his hiring to other cities. Again, this is NOT going to pay $80,000 a year, but if you're currently out of college, can't find a job, and don't want to work minimum wage, well, here you go. It has the added bonus of sticking it back to the man because this company does college students' homework for them.

Here are the specifics he's provided me:

If you reside in one of the below listed regions, you can seize this opportunity by posting ads on craigslist.

1. Honolulu, HI
2. Houston, TX
3. Dallas, TX
4. Denver, CO
5. Los Angeles, CA
6. San Franciso, CA
7. New York, NY
8. Hartford, CT
9. Philadelphia, PA
10. Pittsburgh, PA
11. Atlanta, GA
12. Raleigh, NC
13. Chicago, IL
14. Phoenix, AZ
15. St. Louis, MO
16. Minneapolis, MN
17. Boston, MA
18. Toronto, ON
19. Vancouver, BC
20. Ann Arbor, MI

Next, all you'd need to do is follow this simple four step process to receive a $25 start-up compensation.

A. Create a new gmail account
B. Set up the forwarding features to ensure that all of their incoming emails are automatically re-directed to me (sounds more complicated than it really is, most people will be able to figure out how to do this within 3 minutes)
C. Use the new GMAIL account to set up a Craigslist account
D. Receive my ads and prepare to post them in the city where they reside

If you post the ad specifically as you were instructed to, it will not be flagged and removed by craigslist. If your ad stays live on the forum for one full week, you will be paid $20. If it stays for a full 12 hours, a $15 compensation is in order. If it only lasts three days, I'll pay you $10. If it survives for a mere 3 hours, you'll be paid $5.
Contact Alex at academiccomposition@gmail.com

Again, I know it's not an investment banking position, but it beats delivering pizzas.

The Clarey Podcast - "College Students Walking in the Desert" Episode

April 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Aaron tells is "Hippie Chick With a Staph Infection in Idaho" story, gives the most valuable advice in a long time to people "lost" after graduating from college, doesn't understand "Tinder," responds to the "live in your mother's basement" accusations, and asks, given Dartmouth's recent caving to an spoiled brat college student, if college is for education or indoctrination

AND MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

Language warning.

.1% Economic Growth

April 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

Right, blame the weather not the idiot socialist we have for president the moronic people that populate this country the terabytes of regulation and the anti-business and anti-success mentality in this country.

Nope, it's the f*cking weather.

How to Tell a Person is Worthless

April 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

An excerpt from the latest podcast, but one that is important as it explains it is not the color of your skin, your sexual orientation, or your gender that matters because you did NOTHING to earn said traits. You were born with them. It is what you've achieved in your life that defines your worth:

First Movie I WANT To See in About 5 Years

April 30, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

---

The untold story of undercover WWII American fighter pilots who went to Israel to defend Israel in 1948.

A Canadian Alpha Male

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

George Beurling

The girls' faces just belie how much women like a tall, dominant man.

The Legalities of the College Homework Industry

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I proudly allow Academic Composition to be a sponsor on my little Internet media empire because I not only believe in the business, but I also believe students should not have to pay, let alone, jump through all the hoops Big Education makes them while raping them for their tuition money for a degree that more often than not isn't worth it.

Still...

It has recently come to my attention that paying other people to do your homework is actually ILLEGAL is several states.

In the effort to remain above board and full disclose I present...a...um....full disclosure:

Selling and falsifying student homework and fraudulently taking online courses on behalf of students is illegal in New York and 17 other states. It is also a violation of CL rules. Violating NYS laws on Craigslist puts the site and the founder, Craig Newmark, in jeopardy. The NY County DA's office is currently monitoring this listing category and will prosecute those selling homework to the full extent of the law. You would be advised to remove your ad or rewrite it to remain in accordance with NY State law. FYI -NEW YORK STATE LAW: New York: Section 213-B of the New York Education Law criminalizes the unlawful sale of "a dissertation, thesis, term paper, essay, report or other written assignment" as a Class B misdemeanor, punishable by incarceration of up to three months. Local district attorneys or the state Attorney General can initiate investigations into this misconduct. Academic tutoring and counseling services are exempt from prosecution. In 2013 the NYS legislature amended the bill to include any sale of student papers on the internet. Selling homework and student papers is also illegal in Massachusetts, California, Illinois, Florida,Texas, Virginia, Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina,Oregon, Pennsylvania and Washington.

It is my personal opinion these people may kindly go fuck themselves because as far as I can tell it is nearly impossible to determine whether or not somebody is writing papers for another person and their "punishment" seems to be nebulous or (at worst) a "class B" misdemeanor (so you know, you'll probably get a government check and some counseling or something).

Regardless, when using the services of Academic Composition realize you are taking on the full legal consequences of doing so and that neither I nor Academic Composition are responsible for whatever consequences befall you.

YOu have been warned.

A Month of Pent Up Posts

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"New Material Month" is officially over. The month of not posting anything pertaining to or in response to feminism, but instead focus on new frontiers has come to a close. However, there were some honorable mentions and some outright doozies that needed to be addressed which I have been storing up for the month.

"M' Lady" - freaking hilarious video on white knights.

There will be no demise of men. Just a return of men being manly once they realize the jig is up.

Why are feminists always so ugly?

Degenerate slutwhore complains about the consequences of her idiotic decisions and the epitome of whitenight pansy actually gives her press. Did she at least sleep with you Carl or are one of those kids your own?

I don't think I ever want to get on the wrong side of Judgy Bitch.

The "Mommy's Basement" Accusation

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A common comment I receive on my youtube channel is that, among other things, I live in my "mommy's basement." Naturally a comment from people ~~I've offended~~ the truth pisses off. The expected knee-jerk reaction to being offended is not to critically think through or digest why what some random guy on the internet said causes such discomfort, but instead abandon the entire discussion being had and go personal.

Ergo, "mommy's basement."

The reason I love this counter-punch is because not only is it common, and not only is it part of a prepackaged suite of knee-jerkism ("can't get laid" "small penis" etc.) it's because it belies that the person accusing you of living in mommy's basement has lost the argument.

It's done.

It's over.

You've won, that person lost, and the reasons are multi-fold.

One, do you REALLY live in mommy's basement?

Of all the bloggers, commenters, podcasters, etc., I know none of them live in their "mommy's basement" let alone receive a STIPEND or subsidy from their parents or government like most "mommy's basement accusers" do. Are there basement dwelling trolls who make trolling comments?

Yes.

But what should concern most people who resort to this argument is the fact that there are so many self-supporting men who are merely voicing their legitimate opinion. And accusing them of "living in mommy's basement" is...well...pat-on-the-head-worthy "cute." It's not true, so the accusation rings hallow, and an eye roll ensues.

Second, the "mommy's basement" is a CLASSIC liberal debating technique of changing the topic. If the current debate or discussion at hand is untenable a hypocrite will ALWAYS go personal because they know deep down inside they're wrong and their adversary is right. The real issue is whether you have the self-control not to fall for this ruse, take personal affront, and then go on defending how you "don't live in your mommy's basement." Maintain control of the debate, ignore these personal sleights, and continue your assault.

Finally, I'm not a big "psychology" guy and don't really believe in this "projection" kind of thing younger generations resort to as a means to debate. But I am a big believer in "deflection." Realize when somebody is so desperate, so hypocritical, and above all else, exposed for their self-serving and immoral beliefs, their little lizard-brain goes into full defense mode and tries to cover up their true intention of basically stealing resources from other people. However, since they have no legitimate moral or logical argument, they need to resort to name calling. As previously mentioned, this is merely a ruse and proof you've won the debate, but I wanted to point out just how cowardly, pathetic, and "loserish" it is of the person that has to resort to this tactic.

In the end, the true "loser" is not the guy (or gal) accused of living in "mommy's basement." It's the person doing the accusing. They're typically a spoiled suburbanite brat that had everything handed to her (or him), never had to support themselves, and never had enough adversity in life to challenge them and forge them into a real, interesting, and self-supporting adult. And so when reality smashes their fragile idealistic view of the world in the form of a genuinely independent person, speaking real truths, their tantrums, and any accusations of living with mommy, can largely be dismissed.

Teachers Who Mock the Trades

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Arguably the most accurate assessment of public school teachers and their worthlessness to society ever:

Southern Man Appreciation

May 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You will visit the Southern Man.

I feel humbled because I never knew this picture existed:

University is the New Church

May 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Some really low-brow, dumb writing here.

The Sickness that is Coming

May 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

One of the more important epiphanies I had was that age doesn't matter when it comes to leadership and capabilities. Sure, you would think older people are wiser, but as I've aged I realized that in fact, no, they're just older. They are just as dumb and incompetent as people half their age.

While it took some daring and bravado to make this epiphany when I was 30, it is only reinforced as it is now my generation that is approaching 40 and will be viewed by today's 20 somethings as the "wise elders who have their act together." The modern day 20 something does not know what I know and does not see what I see in my 4 decades old peers - that they're the same idiots and morons they were back in the 90's when they were in their 20's. They did not mature, they just got older, and really have no clue what they're doing.

But if we were to extrapolate this trend, one where generations don't mature, never grow up, and never change, just merely get older, the country is in for a world of hurt. For while I can't believe people in my generation are heading up companies, working their way up the corporate ladders, or are educators and teachers in our schools, what's coming down the pipe is scary - a mentally infected or diseased generation.

When I say "infected" or "diseased" I mean I look at the kids today, especially of college age, and realize they have a genuine mental condition. We can all laugh and mock them citing examples of entitlement, weakness, and idiocy, highlighting stories where they demand free education or have their parents attend a job interview with them or Pajama Boy's latest antics, but these are merely the symptoms of a much larger and threatening sickness. One where nearly an entire generation is incapable of understanding other people's rights, freedom, and property.

If you look at college students and 20 somethings today an unacceptable number of them lack the mental ability to respect the rights and freedoms of others. There was the student journalist that wanted to ban conservative opinions on campus (I forget the name and the school). There was Donglegate where Adria Richards thought it was her domain to get two guys fired, which is only one of the increasing instances of Mozillaing. And there's more than one instance where some idiot adult child will claim we need to ban conservative talk radio.

This trend, however, is not so scary because of what these people are doing, but because they are unconsciously doing it. They are unconscious of what they are saying. And they are unable to fully and thoroughly think through the consequences of advocating such things. What's worse, however, is the disease is further complicated and entrenched in the minds of young people by a historic amount of brainwashing and pampering. Be it the trillions of dollars in debt accrued to prevent said people from paying the full price of their socialist utopia, the 20 years of brainwashing they received from K-college, or society and their parents bending over backwards to kiss their asses, all of this shields these kids from the harsh and necessary realities of life. This not only results in adults who are incapable of supporting themselves, completely clueless about how the real world economy works, but worse it convinces them they are entitled to everything in life. This lays the ground work for what is arguably the most despicable aspect of this mental condition - victimhood.

From the ever increasing categories of "privilege" to the left's desire to separate and define people by their skin color, an entire generation has been trained to take traits they were born, fool themselves into thinking they are oppressed because of it, and demand other people slave away for them. This is not only cowardly and hypocritical, but it also attaches an emotional element to the disease where they take personal affront to any attempts of constructive criticism or insistence of self-supportation and production. In short, it renders the host with this disease immune to any attempts to cure them.

You combine this altogether and what you have is a group of people who:

1. Are not able to support themselves
2. Lack the mental ability to understand the sovereignty and freedom of other people and
3. Therefore lack the ability to protect freedom while voting
4. Are trained to find insult in everything and view themselves only as a victim
5. Are not capable of logical and intellectually honest thought
6. Who are instead ruled by emotions and self-pity
7. and are therefore uncurable and beyond reason.

Add to that, that generations really never grow up, just get old, and you can see why this sickness is such a threat.

People infected with this disease will act and vote in a way that will destroy the liberty and freedom Western Civilization spent the last 2,500 years trying to build. You may say, "well, that's why we have the Constitution. That's why we have the courts" or "that'll never happen." But what if these people were to become the justices? What if they were to become the politicians and leaders of this country? A piece of paper or the foresight of our founding fathers to have the division of powers cannot stop an entire population that is mentally sick and impaired. And instances such as Brendan Eich and Dartmouth caving to the demands of a sick person, already shows you the lack of US institutions to stop and fight this sickness.

What will "end" this sickness, however, will be an economic collapse wherein there is no more government money to keep these people supported in their current environment. Life-long college students come professors will no longer have a university to go and teach at. The various "professional activists" will have to worry about clean water instead of saving the whales. And professional victims will have more pressing matters like starvation than finding fake umbrage at a Cinco De Mayo fundraiser. Unfortunately, such a collapse can be staved off a long time with the fed's constant printing of money and the US' relative position of being the "least sucky economy" in the world, and this will continue to provide the environment these diseased people thrive in. Ergo, not only are they not going away, they're going to increase as the 20 somethings of today become the 40 somethings of tomorrow and by default infiltrate our various institutions.

There's not much to do but what we're doing now. Pointing it out and trying to bring shame to these people. Alas, their brainwashing is so complete, their sense of victimhood so engrained, and their sense of entitlement so strong, it is doubtful anything will ever get through to these liberal zombies.

Enjoy the decline.

Only Assholes Can Save the World

May 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Brought to you by Asshole Consulting.

The only consultancy that isn't here to kiss your ass, but kick it into gear.

Democrat Math

May 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

AHHGHHH!!!! THE STUPID!!!! IT BURNS!!!!!

A comment in response to this video:

Some comments are hidden as they are probably spam. Review comments

rumbrell54 16 hours ago
you sir are the idiot. if you can't spend more than you make, how would anyone buy a house or car? or anything else that costs more than their monthly/yearly income? also, exactly how much do you spend on 'defense', which the gov't spends a lot on.
Reply ·

Millennial Woes 4 days ago
"your average brainwashed unconscious leftist liberal yutz" - LOL
Reply · 1

For the Patron Saint's Name of Frick.

Do you guys understand or at least empathize with my belief that with so many stupid people in this country there's no hope whatsoever?

"Tee Hee! I Like to Travel!"

May 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ranked amongst "My children are the MOST AMAZING CHILDREN" claim girls claiming they "like to travel" is the most peeving of my pet peeves.

Aurini Needs Your Help

May 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

He's putting together a video and is applying for funding. If his video gets enough votes he'll get the grant. Here's the basic breakdown of it. In very efficient form he gets right to the point.

New Blogroll Addition - Amerika.org

May 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Amerika.org

You will visit.
You will obey.
Conformance is not optional.

Cargo Cult Manospherism

May 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Cargo Cult, if you don't know what it is, is a phenomenon that occurred post WWII where several uncivilized, native cultures saw their South Pacific invaded by the US (and Japanese) forces who in turn would airdrop and supply these petty but militarily vital islands with supplies. Unaware of what Western Civilization had discovered in terms of flight, physics, chemistry, etc., they thought that the precious cargo was merely a consequence of having things that looked like planes around. Naively, they built plane replicas out of bamboo and other local material in the hopes that would bring the bounty of cargo a superior culture created.

Naturally it did not work.

And neither will Cargo Cult Manospherism.

I know of the rifts and tiffs that have occurred in the past month of the Manosphere. Naturally, there will be disagreements and that is largely why I stay out of them. It's like Lithuania and Latvia arguing over linguistic differences while the USSR is about to invade both. However, at the core of these arguments is something I believe is legitimate and real and needs to be addressed. And that is poseurs vs. real men.

I understand just what an unfair, unforgivable, and disgusting amount of lies and propaganda has been fed to men.

I understand how most western men have had their birthright stolen from them from socialism and feminism.

And I am completely sympathetic to the Herculean task every western man must take on in terms of accepting this harsh reality, reprogramming themselves, changing their life goals, and making the best of what remnant of life they have in an increasingly hostile environment.

I get it.

But in the end, your righteous and well deserved anger HAS TO progress into acceptance and becoming a real man and saying, "OK, what can we feasibly, realistically, and most efficiently do about it? What is the best possible outcome of this newly-brought-to-my-attention situation?"

It is here the men separate from the boys and we have genuine Manospherians versus Cargo Cult Manospherism.

The real men accept reality of life and move on. Yes, there is some element of the 6 stages of grief, but they get over it, accept it and move on. They start working out instead of trying to further refine their "nice guy personality." They sacrifice their diet, eating what they need to, not what they'd like. They work harder at their jobs, while at the same time start a company on the side. They stop sitting in front of the TV, they put down the video game controller, they stop doing what has been easy, and they take this new-found knowledge, work hard, sacrifice, and achieve something of importance, relevance and worth.

The Cargo Cult, however, finds value, definition, and meaning in the Manosphere itself, never taking the important lessons it's uncovered and applying said lessons to improve their lives. That takes took much effort.

Lift heavy metal objects in a mind-numbing state to increase muscle mass?

That's too boring.

Sacrifice my free time to lay the groundwork for a future company that will grant me true freedom and success in the future?

That's too hard.

Go up to multiple girls and get shot down so you develop a tough skin as well as aptitude to approach women?

My feelings might get hurt.

No, it's much better, much easier, and much too tempting to merely to cheer on what is being said on the internet, living vicariously through a shocking few real men, and say,

"YEAH!! YEAH!!!! WOMEN SUCK!!!!"

"YEAH!!! YEAH!!! THAT'S HOW I GET GIRLS!!!!"

"YEAH!!! YEAH!!! THAT'S HOW I"D TELL MY BOSS TO FUCK OFF!!!!!"

In the end, Cargo Cult Manospherism is nothing more than Monday morning quarter-backing. It's keyboard jockeying. It's criticizing military moves in a war you're comfortably watching from your home, 4,000 miles away on CNN. It's just being a professor or academian studying the industry that would never employ you.

Another Manosphere author said it best (and I don't remember who so could somebody please let me know so I may give due credit),

"The Manosphere is not a church, it's a gym."

Or as I like to say,

"The Manosphere is a trade school, not a university."

And that is the truth.

This is not some religion you follow to have your sins forgiven.
This is not some therapist's office where you talk about your feelings and they say it's your parents' fault.
And this is not some pontificating, bloviating Ivy Tower hiring aging hippie baby boomers to spew leftist fucktarded rubbish.

This is a place where misled, disadvantaged, and otherwise crippled men come to find explanation, sanity, clarity, and truth, but above all else the tools needed to make the best of what remains of their remnant sole life on this planet.

You can sit behind a keyboard and be a bloviating professor or get your asses shot down, doing the hard work like the rest of us like real soldiers:

The Destruction of the Muse Machine

May 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Laugh as you might, but in my idiotic and naive youth I fancied myself quite the poet. This was brought about in part because of advice from my father (he said girls like stupid poems) and my observation that a poem was a convenient vehicle to hit on a girl while also displaying wit and cleverness.

Just one problem.

Poems rarely worked and were the epitome of beta.

Sure poems enthrall the girl you're already dating, but as a tool for "game" or attracting a girl, poems quickly showed their use - useless.

Slowly, but surely, my poetry writing met the same fate as a gal bladder becoming an present, but obsolete, unnecessary and never used tool.

Still, since that time roughly 15 years ago, there was the rare occasion a girl would suit my fancy, so much so I would be "inspired" to do something creative. Poetry was just one thing, but there were other forms my creativity would eek out. Crafty ways to ask her out, line up unique activities for a date, or just be inspired to write the most charismatic of e-mails. I didn't know it at the time, but what was happening was what I would later find out to be called the "muse effect." A muse being a woman and her effect to inspire men to be creative and productive.

At first hearing about it I dismissed this "muse" effect, but with wisdom and hindsight, it's as obvious as day that there is indeed a muse effect. Matter of fact, it's so obvious the entirety of western civilization (and any civilization) was built off of it. Mens' desire to procreate with women they are attracted to is just a powerful a force as gravity in this universe and all of our advances in all of the different fields as an indirect and inspired means to nail chicks is proof of it.

A sad thing, though, happened one time.

After countless dates with countless pains in the asses manifesting themselves as American women, my system was just completely worn down. So much so (and I remember this quite clearly) I walked into a restaurant one time and there before my very eyes was the epitome of "my type of gal."

Just imagine it "THE Cappy Cap Gal."

Petite, redhead, with a little bit of that 90's grunge moxie chick thing going on.

My lizard brain immediately went into default mode and I sent out to approach her. Fully intending to spew some charming charismatic bullshit, I had not one iota of worry as I desperately wanted this woman so. But as the neurons fired and electro-chemical pulses flowed and I was confident in my stride, I remembered, quite clearly, walking towards her with the full intention of asking her out, something abruptly slapped me across my face and stopped me dead in my tracks;

My empirically-experienced frontal lobes said,

"Wait, what's the point?"

I remember the restaurant, and I remember the exact location I stopped. And I remember leaning against the wall there for a solid 3 minutes debating with myself whether or not I should even approach the girl.

What ended up happening was almost precisely what happens when you try to start a car with a dying battery.

The engine just couldn't turn over.

I just could not get excited about what was in front of me.

I sat there running two concurrent debates in my mind. The now-dying debate as to whether I should even bother approaching her versus the now more-recent discovery that I was not incentivized to approach what (as to up to that point in my mind) was the "perfect girl." Taking inventory, I realized that my frontal lobes had vetoed my lizard brain so much so that while there was the natural and impulsive "wooza!" experience, it quickly faded into a simple, but 100% truthful and empirical excuse:

"I'm too damn tired."

Naturally, this accidental, nay, biologically forced decision ended up being the right one. I decided instead of pursuing her to just sit and observe her. And so, over the course of a year, patronizing this restaurant/bar I learned several important things.

One, she was dating a loser whose only form of transportation was a peddle-bike. He had tats, a dumbass haircut, worked as waiter and was about 33. I was just this "loser" compared to him - 30, owned two cars, rental property, taught dance on the side and was still working in banking.

Two, bar her physique, she was no catch herself. Also a waitress, but also an "aspiring artist" painting "murals" at people's houses (her art work went nowhere).

And three, after getting to know her on a platonic level, I learned about how hard it was for her to make rent and pay for groceries, and...well...to occasionally lend her boyfriend money.

In the end I realized what happened. My muse machine was broken. No more could the mere glance of a woman prompt me to work harder, be more creative, or produce more GDP. If anything, the more attractive a girl, the more my cynical and empirical mind would distrust her. And while this epiphany helped me 10 years ago, it isn't until now I realized the severity and critical ramifications "broken muse machines" present to our economy.

The blatant truth is men are the true innovators, shakers, and makers of this or any other economy. Certainly there are some outstandingly productive women, but by and large nearly 100% of all economic production and creativity come from men. And the primary motivating factor for men is the beauty of women.

But what if women in this (or any other) society become so disagreeable their repugnance actually overrides and kills mens' biology? It destroys their "muse machines?"

Well, the answer is obvious - what we have now.

Pajama Boy, men on strike, basement dwellers, video game players, man-childs, herbivores, etc.

Call it what you may, you have an army of men who are just not incentivzied or mused any more. And you can't really blame them. Look at what is supposed to "inspire" them.

I always love how "low t" and "erectile dysfunction" is presented as a "disease" or problem men have. When in reality you damn well know the number one cause of erectile dysfunction is a fat, unattractive wife. Throw in divorce, lippy attitude, socialist voting preferences, and genuine psychological problems, modern day American women are the anti-muse that are shutting down the engine of economic growth. Nuclear bombs dropped from mother Russia herself could not be as devastating to the US economy and society as the unfeminine, loud, noxious, obese and uninspiring women that roam the landscape today.

I mean, seriously, wow, ANOTHER overweight, short hair, tatted up, democrat-voting sociology undergrad pursuing her masters in social work with a cat that reads Cosmo and thinks The Daily Show is funny who thinks she's "unique" and "independent" while living off of daddy's credit card?

Wow, let me fire up the ole creative juices and go paint the fucking Sistine Chapel! I need me some of that all-too-common hairy-armpit bitchy government worker play!

The truth is men have lost what has traditionally inspired them to be the awesome, creation and production machines we were. And though it took a while, after 40 years of feminist propaganda and turning women into men, they were successful. Women in the west are so homely, so physically unattractive, and (I would say above all else) COOKIE CUTTER COMMON they couldn't inspire a bear to shit in the woods.

Naturally, women will be appalled and criticize such statements. But when China cuts off the credit line or the Fed's QE-hyperinflation jig is up, the "uninspiring, not unique, not terribly intelligent, make work government worker, I'm an independent, worthless-degreed female that really offers nothing to society" bubble will burst and the importance of feminine beauty and genuine production will become painfully clear.

Aaron Clarey is a meanie, jerk, poopey head that lives in his mother's basement and can't get laid. He's a professional asshole and specializes in pointing out the truth and not giving a fuck about what people think because...well, how do you argue against truth? You can buy his awesome books here and hire him for his "asshole consulting services" which every Idiocracy dipshit in America is in desperate need of.

Why Are There ANY Businesses in California?

May 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's called capital flight and it's a feature, not a bug, of socialism.

Related.

But I'm Not Haaaaaaapppyyyyy!

May 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Hollywood lies to you....There will be no handsome millionaire willing to marry you when you're 33 and ready to settle down. Once you're married, adultery is no light, breezy thing. You probably won't live in that huge home with a pool and a maid to do the cleaning. Your "high-powered" career will mostly likely consist of tedious paperwork in a claustrophobic office cubicle as you daily work through messy office politics and cope with a few difficult colleagues, while worrying about all those unfinished tasks at home. All too often, especially if you made poor choices about what to study in college, you will not get your dream career. You might actually end up being the maid or the nanny for another woman, doing the same housework/childcare in a stranger's home that feminists always told you was sneer-worthy work to do in your own home. Your debt load will scare you. Your loneliness could shatter you. Men will come and go as they use you for their sexual pleasure and you will pretend to feel "empowered" by letting them do so.

Monday Night Listening

May 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Black Brigade has another solid podcast.

Using Children as a Financial Futures Option on the Economy

May 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

He doesn't say it in such financial terms, but whether or not people have children is essentially very much like a futures contract about your opinion as to whether or not the future economy will be bright.

I've been meaning to poll economists about whether they have children and if my theory is correct, they probably have some of the lowest birthrates....well...adjusting for our typically poor physical attractiveness I mean ;)

Nothing Good Comes from Naropa University

May 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Thanks to one of my agents in the field to brought this to my attention.

While I highlighted Naropa for being the perfect leftwing, self-blowing school that offered the most concentrated group of worthless degrees, understand that there is a correlation between mentally deficient and weak people and worthless masters programs. And like strippers, you can almost bet a worthless degree will lead to problems in the future.

People Who Have No Meaning or Purpose in Life

May 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was driving the motorcycle yesterday as it was a reasonably tolerable day to go riding. Saw an SUV infront of me driving slowly and if you know anything about SUV's as a motorcyclist you know they're more dangerous than deer as they're usually piloted by a inattentive soccer mom texting on her phone. Ensuring I gave her a wide berth, I couldn't help but notice her vanity plates saying "4CHOICE" with her requisite "Obama" bumper sticker.

Upon seeing this I had to confirm my theory that leftists are usually uglier and sure enough as I carefully passed the driver side of the SUV I saw a frumpy, elderly lady who was not smiling (leftists rarely smile). I speed off, now with the SUV danger behind me, but couldn't help but think about how sad a person would have to be to have vanity plates that say "4CHOICE."

Understand most vanity plates are an exercise of wit or cleverness. Something that typically brings about humor or a guffaw. Perhaps even personal, but usually an uplifting statement. But to have a plate that yells to the world:

"The thing I value about myself the most, the number one thing I want you to know about me, what my prides of prides is based on, is that I'm pro-choice in the abortion debate." in English translates into:

"I really have no meaning in my life."

The reason is very simple. Believing in something, be it a religion, an ideology, global warming, or what have you takes no effort, builds no character, and is not an accomplishment. It's perfectly fine to believe in something, but when you define yourself by a zero-calorie exercise such as "belief" then it's almost a surefire guarantee you haven't done anything of noteworthiness, significance, or accomplishment in your life. Instead of taking on tasks, engaging in a rigorous endeavor, you instead subconsciously say,

"WHOA!!!! Do WHAT with my life??? Work hard? Study hard? Take the harder path!!??? Are you kidding me!?? I'm just going to put going green and "COEXIST" bumper stickers on my car and claim I'm doing something instead!"

In short you take an effortless act (belief) and substitute it in for actual accomplishment.

Alas, why this is so disgusting on several levels.

Understand I am pro-choice myself. I find abortion to be a lesser of two evils when a potential child is faced with a life where his/her parents never really wanted them, couldn't afford them, or both, vs. never coming into that miserable existence in the first place. Cold, callous, calculating, yes, but that's my belief.

However, at no point in time did I ever CHEER ON abortion. It's not like it's a GREAT thing. It's a horrible thing, something I'm sure most women who had one did not wake up in the morning and say "YEAAAAAHHHH!!!! ABORTION TIME!"

But some people, like the lady linked above, do. Some people are so valueless, such worthless people, they take something as horrible as abortion and pride themselves off of it because...well...what else in their lives can they point to as achievement or accomplishment?

Thankfully these people can be easily avoided as their insecure egos force them to scream to the world about their beliefs. It may not be as clear as a political vanity plate, but you've no doubt seen cars wallpapered with political bumper stickers (of both the leftist and right wing variety). You've no doubt heard somebody say, "environmentalism is very important to me." You've no doubt met several people that "found Jesus." And you've no doubt found somebody within the first 5 seconds of introduction tell you they're a vegetarian.

Whatever variant, all of these are easy beliefs one can merely "claim" which they will no doubt lord over you, even arrogantly use to lecture and berate you. But understand all it is, is a very thin and ineffective veil poorly hiding the fact the person has no core, has no worth, and is wasting their one and precious life they've been given on this planet.

Enjoy the decline!

Funniest Thing You'll See All Week

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The true punch line starts at 3:20 and ends around 4:10

Why Nobody Will Contribute to University Endowments in the Future

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our Recent Graduate Agent in the Field:

Dear Cappy,
I am a fan of your work and I wanted to share with you what knowledge you have shared with me through your work. I really think this is worth sharing with you.
After a long day at work (I write Performa Operation Plans for a telecommunications company) I get a phone call from a local number. I picked up the phone, thinking it was somebody about a prescription, but instead, I get greeted with this quiet, 19-year-old female voice.
She wanted to know if I was willing to fork over money to donate to the Vampire University (I am using a fake and accurate name for the school) since I am an Alumni from there. I majored in Bachelor's of Science in Management Information Systems. The money would go to current students and scholarships for potential students.
This is not the first year I get these calls, but this will be the last year.

I told her no, I will not. I told her to instead of calling the Allumni for money to donate to students, I told her to go the president of the school for those donations. The student loans and grants go to fund the president's place of residence on school property, living expenses, and anything else the president wants. I also informed her that the school's administrators have a huge budget (we are talking hundreds of thousands of dollars per year) to redecorate their offices. At the expense of the students.
*I told her that most of her money was not going towards her education. I told her that amount of adjunct teachers were very high at that school. They do not get paid as some of the administrators, who do not do real work in the first place. The school keeps asking for more money, but the quality she is paying is not going to her as a student.
I also informed her that her very expensive tuition is high because there is no cap for tuition as long as the government is willing to pay whatever they want for her piece of paper. The school can keep asking for more.
I finally asked her if she was even getting paid for doing this cold calling (Vampire University is notorious for using student labor and not paying them). She told me she was getting paid: at a call center. I told her "Great, that is fantastic. Do not ever work for free."
After that I told her to take me off the list and for her to think about the true cost of what she is getting out of what she is paying for.

When I was going to school there part time as a student and working full time as a warehouse manager at a stevedore company at a port, we stored brand new AC units for* a building under construction at that university. These AC units were as big as single wide trailers, costing somewhere in millions of dollar range in total(I do not remember the exact number, it's been 3 years or so since I have worked there). The AC units ended up going on top of a 5 story building. The building is for Interdisciplinary Science... which holds classes for majors like "Interdisciplinary Social Studies". AKA: Bachelor of Arts degrees in Gerontology, Humanities, Latino Studies, etc. You know "non productive" courses the kiddies love.

Keep spreading the good word, sir. I appreciate the work that you do.
Thank you,
C

Our Agent in the Field highlights something I've thought about and is going to be a HUGE problem in the future for universities and colleges that raped their students for their tuition money:

Who in their right mind is ever going to contribute to their alma mater?

You see, in the past maybe college was a fond memory, full of friends, socializing, and fun times. But it was also likely more rigorous, challenging, and productive. Professors were not washed up losers who could not hack it in life, but people with real world experience that decided to share their wisdom. Also pricing was a "tad" cheaper back then, to the point a degree was a positive rate of return. And finally, said degree ended up landing those people better jobs and careers, giving them said extra income to contribute to their fond alma mater.

But not today's kids and certainly not my generation.

I know personally I would NEVER give the U of MN a penny. I don't know one person who actually enjoyed their college experience there. And the lies and propaganda that was fed to me and my fellow 50,000 students during the 90's was unforgivable. Like most other educational institutions, it was a place of evil.

So when it comes to donation drives and ginning up the ole graduates from Whatsomatta U to donate to their college, I see today, as well as into the future, students doing precise what our Agent in the Field did and telling them to pound sand.

This presents a huge financial risk to the futures of nearly every university. Without endowments and donations, what precisely are they going to do to make up for the loss of funding.

Well lieutenants, economists, agents in the field, and others, you know precisely what they're going to do:

Demand a bail out and government money.

And when they do, it will at least be an admission as the evil they truly are.

The Captain Makes It on Day By Day!

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Well, not a personal appearance, but Bachelor Pad Economics I mean.

New Addition to "Words That Prove You Have a Worthless (and Likely Leftist) Job" - Advocate

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

New addition ladies and gentlemen!

"Advocate"

Advocate - Whatever it is you're advocating it's likely taking my money and then giving it to somebody who cannot speak for or defend for themselves. Thankfully, you're all too eager and willing to take my money or non-profit money to be an "advocate" for some group or another, but understand and understand this well - we all know you don't give a damn about said group. You're primary concern is that you get paid for easy work. ie- you use these genuinely disadvantaged people for your own financial gain. You're despicable.

You may find the original list here.

If you know of a word that is not on the list please let us know!

A Woman's Ego is Worth $640,000 of Other People's Money

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's one thing when it's make work government jobs in the form of social workers to essentially raise other women's children.

It's the same thing when it's teachers effectively baby sitting our children whilst feigning to teach them something in the public schools.

But where ego and hypocrisy knows no bounds is when a woman wants to powertrip and play "make believe businesswoman" with other people's money.

The only difference between her and Bernie Madoff is that Madoff had the smarts and ability to handle stress to the point he could swindle people out of billions AND consciously know he was doing so.

Ug, ladies. It's not hard. Major in the right thing and work hard. That's it. That's the secret.

New Blogroll Addition - Law of Markets

May 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Law of Markets is the newest lieutenant in the Cappy Cap blog roll.

Though he does not seem to agree with me on the Smith and Wesson Retirement plan, no matter how unavoidable it's going to be.

What is and IS NOT Capitalism

May 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Aurini offers the left a very well-thought out and honorably intentioned olive branch.

How College Should Work

May 8, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Home schooled girl graduates at 16 from college.

The trick is to have a parent that actually loves you enough to prevent you from being brainwashed for 13 years in front of a bunch of boring, brain dead government paid baby sitters in the public schools.

The Value of Leisure

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just how a person spends his leisure reveals a great deal about him. If a grown man tells me he spends most of his free time watching American Idol and playing video games, I simply will not consider him the equal of a man who devotes much time to studying a foreign language, playing the guitar, or tending to a garden. You can deem me an elitist, but in order to value some things, we must devalue others: the very notion of value—inherently comparative—vanishes if we are not willing to make certain distinctions.

Please Tell Me This is Fake

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Please please please please please.

I don't think my brain can accept people this stupid, let alone have to rethink new strategies on how to deal with a society populated with such.

There's No Such Thing as Greed, Only Theft

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In my economics class I tested my students' ability to not just regurgitate what I told them, but see if they can take what I taught them and start drawing logical economic conclusions. To do this I asked one rather difficult question:

Why are stock prices going up faster than earnings?

It is a difficult question, but of the many guesses I get, the most pluralistic one is:

"greed."

I have to temper my immediate ire and remind myself of the innocence of that answer. Nearly nobody has adequate education in economics, and nearly everybody has misinformation and propaganda fed to them by state schools.

However, the prevalence of that answer only indicates just how widespread leftist indoctrination has become and it's time to explain greed as a means to undo this political brainwashing.

Understand there is no such thing as greed. There is only theft.

In other words the only REAL form of greed is when somebody steals something that is not theirs. That act - stealing - is the only behavior that can truly be considered greed.

What the left has managed to do is change the meaning of the word "greed" to mean "not sharing enough of your wealth, income, profits, resources or time with other people." The problem is "well, how much is enough so that the person is no longer considered 'greedy'?"

This puts us on a slippery slope, and was done so quite intentionally by the left. Because since there is no objective standard as to what is "enough" this leaves it up to the interpretation of the person accusing somebody of being greedy. And no doubt, almost always this accuser is a leftist,

and the answer to "how much is enough" is always "more."

The problem is this cowardly tactic by the left does not adhere to reality in two ways:

Morally and mathematically.

Morally, nobody has to share jack with anybody else. The reason is simple - that person gave up part of their precious and finite life to get what wealth and income they have. Ergo, when you are asking somebody to "share" you are literally saying, "become my slave for part of your life so that you may work up the money and wealth to give to me."

Doesn't matter if that person earned a trillion dollars.
Doesn't matter if that person uses diamond spoons.
Doesn't matter if that person has 30 mansions.

It accusing somebody of being greedy, and thereby implying they should share, you are in PLAIN ENGLISH telling them to be your slave, albeit for a limited time.

The second way the accusation of greedy doesn't work (from a leftist standpoint) is the "how much is enough" component. Not one leftist, NOT ONE can answer the simple question:

"How much is enough?"

When it comes to the public schools, there is never enough money.
When it comes to welfare, the poor, and the elderly, there is never enough.
When it comes to the children or global warmer, there is never enough.

The reason why is that leftists are by their nature lazy and never sit down to calculate how much money would be necessary to finance their demands. They are emotionally driven, parasitically even, to constantly demand more and more and more and more and more (matter of fact I intend on doing a little research project where I am going to contact various political parties and ask them what their economic plan is, namely what their goals are and what are their financial plans to attain said goals - I already know NONE of them, Republicans included, will have said plans). It doesn't occur to them that there may be limited funds, and even though we're already spending around 40% GDP, I do not doubt for a second that if asked they would demand 2.5x's or more than what is currently being spent.

The larger point is that the accusation of "greed" is the perfect weapon for leftists because it provides a reason to take other people's money and allows them to take as much as they can as there is no objective standard or adherence to reality governing what is "enough." And so as long as somebody just "thinks" said person has too much money (be it a kid whose brother found $40 or an adult whose neighbor makes $400,000) they can make the accusation of "greed" just as they "racism" on equally flimsy and intellectually dishonest grounds.

The key is to ignore the accusation knowing deep down inside you are neither a thief nor a racist.

The Little Green Book of Eco-Fascism

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ed Driscoll's podcast where he interview James Delingpole on his new book. One I will probably buy and read.

Death to the Hipster Beard Fad

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

You mean Seth Rogen wasn't cool after all?

The "Bearded Community" did not respond well to being pointed out for the faux hipsters they are.

Oh well, looks like hipsters will have to find something else that doesn't take effort, but they'll somehow wear as a badge of honor which thankfully makes it easy for us to know who not to hire.

The International Conference on Men's Issues

May 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

AVFM is holding a conference in Detroit this summer - The International Conference on Men's Issues. I will unlikely be attending, but I did want to point this out for some of my younger or newer readers who may have happened on The Manosphere, Alt-Rightsphere, etc., and are intimidated by the sheer preponderance of information out there.

It costs $260 and while a chunk of change you are likely to earn that back in saved labor as the speakers will be speaking directly about various issues allowing you to more quickly digest everything that is out there and get a birds eye view of what's going on. Also the entertainment value alone of Karen Straughan and Stefan Molyneux will likely provide a guffaw or two.

Consider attending if you're finishing up school for the year, looking for a road trip, or are in desperate need to talk with some like-minded people.

Promise Ring

May 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

AH HA HA HA HAHA!!!!!

This one is for all the guys unfortunate enough to have dated a born again:

The Law School and MBA Bubbles

May 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Explaining to the young kiddies out there why they should SERIOUSLY reconsider MBA's or law school as their next career step.

(plus my world famous "Harvard MBA" impersonation starts around the 5:45 mark)

When a Conservative Girl Dates a Liberal Boy

May 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Hilarity ensues.

Ahhhh!!!! Warm fuzzies!!!!!

Proof of the Alaskan Trip

May 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A very studious lieutenant pointed out that while I had many pictures of the Canadian Rockies, I had none of the proof that I did indeed make it to Alaska.

Duly noted, young observant lieutenant. Duly noted.

Now go have a warm, inviting cup of STFU doubting lieutenant!

The 67% Overvalued Stock Market

May 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

We once again find that our path comes across this dead horse and thus, let us flog it one more pointless time.

As you know trillions of baby boomer dollars have been flooding the stock market since the advent of 401k-esque retirement plans. Mindless lemmings, making their monthly contributions to their IRA's and 401k's on auto pilot never stop to think about the ramifications of this because...well...that'd mean they'd have to think! And independently no less!

No no, much better to believe "Tee hee! My 401k is up over 30% this year! Tee hee!"

So, as these trillions of dollars chase a limited number of stocks, the price of said stocks go up and beyond what the underlying profits warrant. And thus the PE ratio is driven to highs that are approaching the 1929 stock market bubble, indicating that the stock market is overvalued by 67% (source Robert Shiller).

Now, I know, I know. We all love it when stock prices go up because "Obama." We think we're rich and that it's good when stock prices go up.

Well, that's if you already own stock. But if you're like most Americans, especially younger ones, you don't own any stock. All this means is that you get to pay 67% more than what historically has been the "mean price" of stocks.

So ask yourself would you like to pay:

$5.50 for a gallon of gas?
$700 for the new XBox One?
$10 for a Big Mac?
$325,000 for a law school?

And realize that it's the same proposition if you were to invest in the stock market today.

Enjoy the decline!

The Goddess That Broke the Captain's Heart

May 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The jazz scene in the Twin Cities
The one black girl I dated
When your parents violate your right to self-determination
How bad could prison be if you had internet

and MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast.

Tuesday Afternoon Linkage

May 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

More whining about sexism from the NYT. Thankfully you can link to Steve Sailer instead of sending the NYT traffic.

Maggies Farm enjoys the decline by hiking through Italy.

Why did you let them into Italy in the first place?

Blaming society for your problems.

Liberal Silicon Valley Tycoon Learns a Political Lesson

May 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yeah, donating money to the teachers union is going to help kids. About as much as donating to the mafia will help crime.

Why the World Trade Center Should Never Have Existed in the First Place

May 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Arguably one of the most interesting articles I've read in a while. Didn't know about the history of the twin towers, let alone how they came into existence, let alone how it was never fully leased and required government agencies to be housed there.

Why You Never Date Women of the Clergy

May 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

My latest piece at ROK about dating female pastors, chaplins, priestesses, etc.

Only Self-Hating Whites Attend Harvard

May 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Seriously, I don't know how anybody who is deemed "privileged" would ever attend Harvard after this bullshit.

You are paying to be insulted. You are paying to be lectured, berated, and genuinely victimized.

I know we all like to pick on Harvard posing as the country's greatest school, but it really isn't with a blatantly politically motivated propagandist class like this.

Wednesday Night Linkage

May 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A sad realization - most people, even family and friends, are on some level parasitical.

The best fight scene ever drawn. The sound effects are amazingly timed and precise.

In anticipation of increasing minimum wages, McDonalds hires....7,000 touch screen tablets. Ahhh, it sure does feel good when people who are already destitute and voted for Obama are going to suffer even more.

"I don't want to hire women." Now now now, wait, it's from a female. So it's acceptable sexism.

An insightful interview of the "Homework Outsourcing Industry." Alex is interviewed by Matt. It starts around the 32 minute mark, Alex does have a slightly difficult accent to listen to, but if you hear his words it's AMAZING just how far gone and corrupted academia is.

Sally Blount, Doesn't Like "The Maths"

May 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Ug...

Another shill for Big Education saying we need more... (are you ready?)

MBA's!

But let me be very laser like in my logic and point out one thing in her article.

Do you see any numbers?

No, you know why? Because the Maths are hard. The Statistics are difficult. And young Sally like many people posing as journalists are too lazy to do any research. Better to just talk about feelings and name toss and write a crappy and shittacular article that will lead some naive, equally math imparied soul to part with $100,000 to get a worthless piece of paper.

Post post - OHHH!!! What a shock, she's the DEAN OF NORTHWESTERN'S MANAGEMENT SCHOOL! Hey, maybe you can hire David Lareah to teach a class on housing markets!!!!

There's No Such Thing as a Financial Genius

May 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A short video that I wanted to put together explain true "genius" in the financial services industry is really more of a function of daring to have independent thought rather than any sort of inherent "financial genius."

Housing Starts vs. Unemployment

May 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Set aside, if you will, the valid and legitimate criticisms of labor force participation and people leaving the labor market. I am merely updating arguably my favorite chart - housing starts vs. unemployment.

I happened upon this chart quite some time ago and noticed that housing stats lead unemployment figures anywhere from 6-18 months. The logic being that housing triggers not just construction hiring, but effects nearly every other industry as a "house" virtually houses products from every other industry. Ergo when housing recovers so too (generally) does employment in every other sector.

Empirically, this relationship is holding, but as mentioned before a large part of the drop in unemployment has been by people leaving the labor force. I may someday compare labor force participation vs. housing starts to see how this compares (though I fear demographic trends - women entering the work force, baby boomers retiring - may mask any relationship)

The Las Vegas Podcast

May 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An early release of a pre-emptive podcast in anticipation of the Captain's visit to Las Vegas.

This episode includes:

Hoping Aurini and Forney don't drink too much before we hike in 92 degree weather
How the Captain just wants a small trailer to live in during winter in Arizona...with his mistress
"Troll of the Weak!"
There is no merit unto college itself
Your mind can't grow when arguing with a leftist
Americans, especially college students, are stupid enough to swallow whole "Privilege 101"

and MORE!

Listen, forward, share and spread the good word!

Also, don't forget last week's episode!

Dear Class of 2014

May 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Graduation for all the high school kiddies is coming up and consequently I'm starting a new advertising campaign for "Worthless." Obviously I intend on profiting from this, but I want to get as many copies of Worthless into the hands of high school graduates as possible as it is BEFORE they attend college that the book can do the most good.

Naturally, those of you who wanted to purchase Worthless already have, but if you would be so kind to forward this on social media or refer Worthless to a young upcoming graduate I (and their future 30 something selves) would greatly appreciate it.

Weekend Archive

May 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I'll be in between flights, hiking, renting cars, and other general Las Vegas tomfoolery this weekend.

In the meantime, you can consult the podcast archives given the likely dearth of posts that is to ensue.

The Captain Meets Judgy Bitch

May 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Happy day lieutenants!

Got to meet THE Judgy Bitch!

The People You Run Into in Vegas

May 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was heading to Vegas for the "Good Preachers Kid Convention" and who do I run into but:

Matt Forney
Chris Bechtloff
Davis Aurini and the Great Matt Baldoni

Not to mention a couple fans!

Never a more shifty, shady, and distrustful group of scoundrels and thieves have ever assembled.

Off to Zion National Park today so that we may more professionally Enjoy the Decline!

So Glad I'm Never Going Back to Corporate America

May 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The further and further removed I become through time from working in corporate America, the more appreciative I will never have to tolerate this psychological torture ever again.

More Pain and Suffering

May 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

We Can't Find No Gurlz

May 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because we're all too busy living in our mother's basement.

Which looks an awful lot like the Bellagio in Las Vegas, but it's really just a backdrop screen in the basement.

Ending False Rape Accusations on Campus

May 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Looks like universities and false accusers of rape on their respective campuses better start thinking twice before pursuing witch hunts against innocent men.

But oh nozies!

What are the women's studies departments supposed to do if there's no "rape epidemic" on campus to cajole money out of the state and university coffers to ~~help employ unemployable women's studies majors~~ fight the non-existent rape epidemic?

By gum, they'd have to get real jobs requiring real effort and work! And we all know that is what truly scares them.

"Aaron Clarey Tried to Kill Me"

May 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

No east coast bloggers were hurt in the hiking of this mountain.

Why Open Carry is Like Breast Feeding in Public

May 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I am not against open carry. Matter of fact during the summer months when it is hot, I will open carry because I don't have a long or heavy shirt to conceal my pistol. But that's just it;

I CARRY A PISTOL.

I don't lug my AR-15 into Chipolte AND POSE WITH IT FOR PICTURES LIKE A COMPLETE F*CKING DUMBASS!!!!

Understand this psychology and understand it well. This is no different than a woman who breastfeeds in public.

It isn't for the baby.
It isn't for convenience.

It is first and foremost for her ego.

And the morons totting rifles into public restaurants are guilty of the same. It's all about them, not gun rights.

Want to carry a pistol discreetly on your side?

Sure.

Perhaps make a fashion statement with a particularly nice piece of gunsmithing, maybe even an admirable hoslter?

Sure.

But looking like the rejected Taliban applicant dude-bros from the suburbs is going to intimidate and alienate people to the point you can't open carry period.

This post sponsored by Asshole Consulting. Asshole Consulting - when you need to pay to get a swift kick in the ass.

Obama By the Numbers - Unemployment

May 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Originally I wanted to put together a rather lengthy and detailed economic analysis of Obama's performance thus far against other presidencies. The only problem was that this would take a lot of hard work and effort and if there's anything I learned in my 20's it is that hard work and effort rarely pays off. Ergo, I decided to do more of a series where we take one individual economic statistic at a time and compare the Affirmative Action President against the performance of other, obviously lesser, presidents.

Before we do this, however, I should point out that such comparisons are actually somewhat flawed in that chalking up the performance of the entire economy to one man and his affiliate political party is foolish. It is really the policies that are implemented by congress, the president, not to mention the actions of the American people that ultimately determine the economic success and growth of a nation.

For example both Reagan and Obama inherited outlandishly bad recessions.

Bill Clinton, though a democrat, implemented more conservative policies than Bush Jr because of a Republican congress.

And the "Great Recession" can squarely be blamed on incompetent bankers and a galactically stupid and ignorant American population rather than Bogeyman Bush.

Therefore, remember to take these statistics with a pinch of salt. Be intellectually honest and realize it is the overall policies and financial intelligence of the American public that determines our economic success. However, if at anytime you get into a presidential performance debate with a leftist about "Oh yeah! Well Bush caused AIDS and eats baby kittens!" then by all means feel free to use these statistics.

Today's statistic is unemployment.

Though I could have gone back longer, I didn't feel the need because unemployment pre-Carter was actually not that bad (well, actually it was under Ford, but I don't want too convoluted of a graph). Regardless, since the data series has been kept since 1948,

Obama, thus far, has the worst unemployment average out of all of our presidents. In all fairness, like Reagan, he inherited a crippling recession that largely wasn't his fault, however, unlike Reagan, his recovery...well...isn't a recovery. Reagan was able to get unemployment reduced faster than Obama and it was through job creation, not people leaving the labor force, that did it (as GDP figures when we visit it will show).

So far, based on the NUMBERS (I know, those damn factual mathy statisticy things!) the left's great hope is dead last place.

I'm sure when we look at GDP, though, things will turn around for America's first golf-like handicapped presidency.

Professional Sports Will Never Cure Cancer

May 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Third, sports are ultimately irrelevant. I always love watching people watch the Olympics because it ultimately boils down to;

Who can throw the sphere the furthest.
Who can twirl the prettiest on the rink.
Who can do the most flippy-things in the air.

None of it…

Cures cancer
Boosts economic growth
Promotes freedom and liberty

Alas, this is why everybody knows who got traded to New York, but doesn't know what the national debt is as a percent of GDP.

Abortion is Green

May 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Freaking hilarious. NSFW

The Capitalism, Socialism, Communism Spectrum

May 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A good lesson all junior, aspiring, deputy, official or otherwise economists can learn from:

When Leftists Try to Get You Fired

May 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Here's what you do.

I cannot emphasize enough the importance of being self-employed so you may give any would be witch hunters the finger.

Mandatory Graduation Gifts

May 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Graduation is coming up. You or a loved one is about to finish the 13 years of prison hell called "public school" and will shortly be on their way to the real world. However, unlike K-12 the real world will not be pampering, it will not be cushioned, and it will certainly not be free. Matter of fact it will be outright dangerous.

There are people out there who are eager and waiting to take advantage of you or your loved one. Once you/they leave their parent's home, you will have credit card companies, not to mention the trillion-dollar-per-year education industry salivating over the prospect of young, naive 18 year olds ill-prepared and ill-educated by the public school systems, to be foolish enough to part with their money. Worse, most 18 year olds technically don't even have money to part with, and will likely go into 6 figure debt to "follow their dreams," making it a near-guarantee their financial futures will be ruined, and thus their lives, ruined.

Do not ruin your life. Get two ABSOLUTELY MANDATORY BOOKS for yourself or your soon-to-be graduate.

Worthless

and

Bachelor Pad Economics.

Between the two Worthless is an absolute must for every high school graduate or prospective college student. It is short, it is cheap, and it is even in audio book format for easy consumption. If there is a graduation gift to get it is Worthless. It is the tough fatherly love adroitly and diplomatically delivered in book form about the real world realities of education, the labor market, and how to achieve financial success that you were too afraid to tell your children or read for yourself.

Bachelor Pad Economics is a close second in that it goes beyond the immediate need for wisdom regarding choosing a major, and provides a financial road map for all young people, guiding them from the age of 14 to death in all of life's major and minor financial decisions.

These two books alone, if read by every 17 year old before they graduated from high school, would ensure there would never be any financial problems ever again. It is the financial and economic education everybody keeps regretting they don't have, and desperately wished they had 10, 20, 30 even 40 years ago.

However, while for some of us it may be too late, that doesn't mean we don't owe it to our youth to do what we can to make their lives better. Yes, I do get a commission on every sale of the book. Yes, I am primarily doing this to enrich myself. But a close second is the good these books will do for young people (even middle aged people) across the country.

Ergo, I humbly ask that if you are looking to buy a graduation gift for an upcoming graduate that you consider these two books or refer them to a friend or a loved one.

There Should Be No Libraries

May 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because technology has changed that they are now obsolete and a better, cheaper version is available.

However, something tells me, like the Post Office, we are going to be forced to slave away for unneeded, but highly unionized and politically influential obsoletes osuch as postal workers and librarians.

The Paris Hilton Effect

May 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In one case study, an inheriting family blew through a mega-million dollar fortune built over fifty years in just twenty-four months.

Obama By the Numbers - GDP

May 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Continuing on in our empirical series comparing economic performance under different presidencies, we look today at economic growth. Here, even I was surprised based on the empirical data in two ways.

1. Carter had a surprisingly high average economic growth rate. Marginally higher than Reagan's (however this was due to a freakish one off event of 16.5% annualized economic growth in the 2nd quarter of 1978. The reason for it I'm still trying to peg down).

2. Bush Jr. had an even lower economic average than Obama, largely due to the walloping -8.3% contraction in late 2008.

Still, economic performance under Obama is nothing to get too excited about. At 2.1% it is on par with the two nepotist presidents democrats love to loathe, and nowhere near Clinton, Reagan or Carter (two of which were dealing with real recessions). But in all honesty and truth (because the facts don't lie) Obama is "not as bad" as Bush Jr. However, while we can debate which economy is "marginally less sucky" under the hated Obama and the hated Bush, two points of order.

One, though not economic, Obama was billed as this brilliant, intelligent, genius by the media, academia and other arms of the democrat party. However, Bush Jr received nothing but 120% the complete opposite of Obama. He was an idiot, a war monger, etc. etc. Still, the "holy and sacred" Obama could not really muster a significantly better economic performance than the loathed and galactically stupid Bush Jr. If there is a criticism most conservatives, libertarians and republicans have, it's the egregious amount of handicap, affirmative action, and lowering of the bar the media and society has granted Obama while holding Bush to abusive and impossible standards. The truth is that Obama is no better than Bush.

Two, Keynesian stimulus. Understand with the LARGEST Keynesian stimulus since WWII, Obama can still only manage to be marginally better than Bush Jr. This is like Barry Bonds taking steroids, but never hitting a home run. Matter of fact, the above chart should strike fear into Keynesian zealots as the two presidents with the most amount of textbook Keynesian stimulus have the poorest economic performances. Good lord, even Carter trounced them.

With that in mind, the next statistic we will look at will be precisely that - Keynesian stimulus in the form of deficit spending and national debt. Something I'm sure doesn't need addressing, but it will be interesting to see just how much in economic steroids different presidents have been taking.

Soviet Toy Store

May 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yea, what fun.

Only liberals deserve such misery.

How to Work in a Bank

May 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Had I known back then what I know now, this is how I would have negotiated and acted during meetings. Would have been more productive:

Saturday Afternoon Linkage

May 25, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Student run "Che" coffee shop to shut down because ~~they're fucking spoiled brat children that never worked a real day in their lives~~ of "problems."

Why I ignore "Guns Banned from these Premises" signs and carry anyway.

The future of housing in America. Of course, I predict property taxes would jump to about 20% the value of the home.

Bachelor Pad Theater - Why Your Husband Can't Get It Up

May 26, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Figured we'd start Monday morning off with a laugh.

You Aren't Adult Enough

May 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A sponsor came to me. Andro-Plus. We discussed, agreed, and now he's an official sponsor of Cappy Cap. However, it is interesting how he became a sponsor.

In addition dedicating myself to lifting, running, giving up booze, and dieting, I wanted to see what other supplements I could take to achieve my goal of look un-shirt-worthy this summer. This included Creatine, vitamins, and other supplements, but what I wanted was a testosterone supplement.

Enter the US health care industry.

I just can't buy "Andro-Gel." No, I need a prescription.

And I just can't get a prescription. No, I need to see a generalist first who will then recommend me to a specialist who will run some tests so that some day, some how, I might get a prescription.

This reminded me of when I wanted to test my potency and ensure my vasectomy had held.

No, the lab couldn't just run a test.

I would have to see a doctor first who would then authorize me to have a lab test.

In frustration and knowing where there's a will, there's a free market way, I turned to the internet where they have do it yourself lab kits to test your, ahem, virility. Sure enough, I saved myself about $400 in unnecessary health care costs, and so I thought I'd do the same with testosterone supplements.

Andro-Plus was recommended to me by Davis Aurini. I bought it for $100, took it, and knew full well I would live with the consequences if I grew a third arm, but that thankfully did not happen. I can't guarantee you that YOU won't grow a third arm, but if you're sick and tired of needing the government's and the doctor's permission to receive the medical treatments you want as a full grown adult, and would still like to at least give a testosterone supplement a try, I recommend Andro-Plus.

You can buy some here if you so desire.

Pussies Pretending to Have PTSD

May 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Arguably my best rant

ever.

The Maple Grove Economy

May 27, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A few clicks south and about 10 more west you'll run into a town called "Maple Grove."

Well, there really isn't a town or veritable "city center" there, but that geographical location is called "Maple Grove."

Maple Grove, for the most part, is inconsequential to yours, mine, or anybody else's life. But there is an important economic lesson to pull from it that is consequential to our lives. And that lesson is what the entire American economy is slowly morphing into.

Understand that Maple Grove did not exist at all of 10 years ago. When I was in college it was where the city and suburbs ended and farmland began. But 10 years ago, overnight seemingly, it burst into a large sprawled out, multi-mega-strip mall area. It now covers about 5 times the surface area of the Mall of America, has (by my ballpark estimation) more retail space and outlets than the MOA, and if it doesn't already, it will have more restaurants than the MOA. If you name a chain restaurant, a national retailer, or any kind of American brand name, Maple Grove has it.

When this massive development first went in, my economic spidey senses tingled at the back of my mind. I couldn't understand it on several levels. One, where was the city center? Why did all these stores and retail outlets just open up in this area? Was there some center of commerce I was unaware of that economically warranted such a development? Two, who the hell would go there? It was the epitome of cookie cutter. There was not ONE unique restaurant in the entire area. Just Applebee's after Houlihans after California Pizza Kitchen, after Joe's Crab Shack. Only the most boring, SWPL, mindless suburban automotons would patronize the place, and I didn't think there was a high enough SWPL population make all those businesses financially viable. Three, by god, there was a high enough SWPL population to make it financially viable. HOW??? How could there be that many milquetoast people? There's enough flavorless people in the area to make this a go??? But the key thing that was tickling the back of my brain, but never made it to the frontal lobes until last week was;

Where is all the production? How does this purely retail economy exist? How is this supportable in the long run?

And thus the important economic lesson.

Realize that in the Maple Grove economic nothing is produced. Only consumed. There are no factories, no assemblies, no plants. It is 100% pure, cookie cutter retail. Maple Grove's "Municipal Gross Product" is 100% retail clerks, waiters, bartenders and baristas selling you things that are made outside of its city limits. It is the first entire city that is solely dependent upon retail and would not exist otherwise.

But while Maple Grove effectively only serves as a large sprawled out mall, it is a microcosm of what is in store for the American economy. A fate where we slowly switch from that of a industrial, productive economy where actual things of value are produced to one where we merely become...

one big ass mall.

Already this is happening to a certain extent globally. The West, including America, the UK, and western Europe act like the world's mega-malls. China, SE Asia, India and nearly all other 2nd world serve as our factories. And the debutantes of western society act likes spoiled suburbanite princesses, borrowing money from daddy (China and other creditors) so they can buy worthless, meaningless crap that only serves to play an unwinnable status game in the West. However, equilibrium is universal, and no unsustainable system can survive. And thus, just like Maple Grove or a suburbanite princess cannot maintain their parasitical existence without the constant supply of foreign made goods (and credit), so too will the American economy inevitably collapse.

Maybe not today, maybe not tomorrow, and maybe not even next year, but the time will come that China, Japan, the Arab nations and other creditors will realize that America is just a mall, it's people suburbanite princesses, and that we really don't produce anything of value here. Once that happens, the dollar will drop in value, nobody will lend us any more money, and unfathomable amount of economic hurt will slam into our increasingly spoiled and delusional people. Adult-children more concerned about privilege, falsely claiming PSTD, the earnings gap, or the Kardashians will be blindsided as society is no longer concerned about their petty, politically drummed up drama, but rather why there is no electricity, why gas is up to $5 a gallon, and why their bank accounts were haircutted. Their primary concern won't be whether they can live at home, but whether mom and dad can even afford food for the week. And they're going to be begging and pleading to work as a barista as Starbucks lays off 70% of its labor force because nobody can afford a $7 cup of coffee.

Of course, this is already happening to a certain extent already. Matter of fact, I'm surprised our foreign creditors hadn't dumped the US dollar sooner. But they are, and the "factory" of the world is slowly realizing the US for the financial deadbeat that it is and switching out of US dollars, increasing reserves in gold and other currencies. We are now engaging in thinly-veiled inflationary hanky-panking with our "quantitative easing" as one last final desperate ruse to make it seem like everything is normal. This is nothing more than daddy going to the bank to secure one last desperate Keynesian loan to keep his trophy wife and princess happy and spending, "hopefully turning the economy around."

But it won't work. And the reason is simple. No economy can exist purely on consumption. It needs to produce something of value. And while Keynesians, economic professors, and idiot presidents may tell you otherwise, in the end you are foolish to believe them, just as you would be foolish to believe Maple Grove is a self-sustaining economy.

Consider that next time you order the chicken quesadillas at Applebee's while celebrating a hard day of shopping for a new Korean-made smart phone and an Indonesian-made scarf in "The MG."

This post brought to you by Asshole Consulting.
"Asshole Consulting" - when you want lies, hire a regular consultant.
When you want the truth, hire an asshole.
Asshole Consulting - "The truth hurts, and we're happy when it does."

Tallie Dolye - Keep an Eye On Her

May 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I predict, for some reason, you'll hear about her in the future. And it won't be because she starts a new company, but rather is running for office or some other form of living off of the taxpayer.

Dean and Frank

May 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I would have killed to just be in Vegas when those guys were there:

Dean Martin

MARTIN BURGERS

1 lb. ground beef
2 oz. bourbon---chilled

Preheat a heavy frying pan and sprinkle bottom lightly with table salt. Mix meat, handling lightly, just enough to form into four patties. Grill over medium-high heat about 4 minutes on each side.

Pour chilled bourbon in chilled shot glass and serve meat and bourbon on a TV tray.

Frank Sinatra

SINATRA BURGERS

1. Call for Deano.
2. Tell him to make you a fuckin' burger.
3. Drink his bourbon.

Study Finds No Degree is Better Than a Liberal Arts Degree

May 28, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

HA FREAKING HA!!!

Hmmm...let me see...

Hire some kid with attitude, lip, and some worthless degree that makes them think they're smarter than they actually are AND with leftist indoctrination about privilege, entitlement, going green, etc.,

or hire a kid right out of high school hmmm....that's a tough one.

Remember June is Worthless Degree Awareness Month where we try to get as many copies of Worthless into young graduate's hands.

When It's This Hard to Sell Freedom, Something's Horribly Wrong

May 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I like to step back.

Stepping back allows you to clear your mind, take the horse blinders off, but most importantly allows you to see the situation for what it truly is.

For example, the eternal debate of Austrian vs. Keynesian economics. The front lines of this battle are between economic intellectual giants on both sides of the debate. Krugman, Reich, Williams, Sowell, you name it, heavy hitters from prestigious institutions of government and academia tender increasingly complex and researched arguments. It's like the Battle of Somme being waged, slugging it out, with no clear winner.

But what if instead of burrowing your head further into No Man's Land you instead, pull back, hop on a plane and take a look at the debate from a completely different, simpler, and admittedly, less-intellectual perspective?

You'd soon realize the debate is about whether the government knows what's best for the economy and has the right to intervene or whether it should be left up to the people.

The answer, if you're intellectually honest, is simply clear.

Global warming is another example. The pro-global warmists will through up a chart and claim we're all going to drown in 500 days, the anti-global warmists will show new data debunking said claims and the latest global warming models. Sheeple will believe who they choose to. Whoever is right, however, if you step back and look at it with different eyes you'll realize it is much more likely this is just the latest political ruse by socialists posing as caring "environmentalists" to get more of other people's money. But you can't come to that realization if you're steeped in the religious indoctrination, or in the throes of debunking it.

So a third "Step Back" observation dawned on me and its ramifications are quite depressing. And that is:

How f*cking hard is it to sell the platform of freedom to people?

Step back and think about this.

Those evil,

meanie,
bigotted,
racist,
fascist,
baby seal clubbing,
grandma tripping

Republicans want basically one simple thing:

Lower taxes.

And not just lower taxes for "the rich," but lower taxes for everyone.

Yes, duly noted, a faction within the Republican party is against abortion. Thank you leftists, we got the memo. But aside from that overly beaten accusation of a drum, their overall political product is freedom.

Now you would think, given logic and reason, the American people would in general want freedom. You would think, given the history of humans, where the vast majority of them were oppressed by the government, they would want LESS government and MORE individualism.

You would think.

The irony is, however, that it's damn well near impossible to sell freedom to the American people.

The question is why, and when you step back, clear your eyes, and think about it, the answer is quite scary.

Admittedly, part of the reason American's are so resilient to freedom is that the Republicans are the worst salesmen in the world for it. But although poor salesmanship is in part to blame, the real reason is that the American people have been brainwashed to think against their own, long term self interests.

This may sound conspiratorial, but it is not. This is only the natural consequence of a leftist political party that uses a public school system and a leftist media to convince people to;

1. Not think critically
2. Never develop the capacity for delay gratification
3. Never learn about basic personal budgeting and financial planning (you ever see this in schools?)

4. Hate and envy other, more successful groups of people, that they should be emulating instead
5. Self-rationalize why they are entitled to said successful people's lives in the form of their wealth

Of course, this scam is obvious to even the part-time observer of politics. But what is truly scary is how effective it is. It's so effective, and the people's brain's so dumbed down and impaired, they not only can't identify this ruse for what it is, they are so far gone they actively reject and vote against something as simple and good as freedom.

Naturally, I've given up and don't really care. If people are so lacking in brain power and intellectual honesty they foolishly think they can get something for nothing and that such a system is sustainable in the long run, then they don't deserve the freedoms that true intellectual giants fought wars over to ensure. The question is whether you can admit the same and realize you're dealing with insanity when people reject freedom.

Elliot Rodger Was a Feminist and a Liberal

May 29, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

This will be my one post about Elliot Rodger. I refuse to react or respond to a media that has such a patently blatant leftist agenda that you can no longer call them media or journalists, but rather what they are - liars and propagandists.

If you are intellectually honest
And if you wish to look at the words, behaviors and actions of Elliot Rodger
He is by all means, measures and metrics acting like a liberal and a feminist.

Roosh has done an outstanding job of pointing out just how identical Rodger's actions and words were to that espoused by feminism and socialism that I see no reason to add anything. I will however address another angle in my podcast, but it will be tangential to this issue.

Mark Steyn on Ed Driscoll

May 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Tis a beautiful weekend and therefore i'm going to go out and play and not write. In the meantime, consider this interview with Ed Driscoll.

When a Leftist Admits He's Wrong

May 31, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It still doesn't change the fact that their ignorance (in this case) impoverished, unnecessarily, millions of Latin Americans.

I applaud him for admitting he was wrong, but it's like saying, "oops" when you helped ruin the lives of millions and stagnate countries' advancement.

The Knowledge - How to Rebuild the World from Scratch

June 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I had seen and immediately purchased "The Knowledge - How to Rebuild Our World from Scratch" by Dr. Lewis Dartnell. I was so impressed with it and deemed it such a valuable book that I requested an interview with him, which he kindly granted.

I shall write my own review of the book later, but wanted to first post the interview:

1. Before we discuss the book you have a very interesting background. You are only 32, you have a PhD, you are a published author, and you have a bit of a television and radio career as well. Can you tell my audience about yourself and how you came about this unique position in your life so early?

Yeah, I like to keep myself occupied! But all of those activities are related and build on each other. I'm a research scientist at the University of Leicester, working in the field of astrobiology and the search for microbial life on Mars, but also really enjoying science writing and public outreach.

2. Tell us about the book.

My new book, 'The Knowledge: How to Rebuild our World from Scratch' is a thought experiment on all the behind-the-scenes fundamentals that underpin our civilisation, and the prerequisites for it progressing over centuries of history. I take a post-apocalyptic world as the starting point, and ask what is the critical scientific and technological knowledge you'd want in order to rebuild our world from scratch, and how you might even accelerate that reboot second time around.

3. The book is unique, but also very interesting and timely. What prompted you to write it?

I certainly don't think the world as we know it is about to collapse, although humanity does clearly face some grave challenges in the immediate future. But I have been fascinated for a long while by thinking about how you could rebuild civilisation if you ever needed to. This thought experiment could also be rephrased to the essentials you'd need to start from scratch if you accidentally fell through a time-warp to 10,000 BC, or perhaps crash-landed on an uninhabited Earth-like planet.

4. Who should read the book?

Anyone who is curious about how the world around us actually works, and how it came to be created! I think there's a growing feeling of disconnect between all of us in the modern, developed world and the basic processes and principles that support us; things we just take for granted nowadays. As I say, The Knowledge isn't really about the apocalypse at all - that scenario is just a way of holding up a mirror to our own society - and I hope that after reading the book people come away with an appreciation of how things work and a greater sense of satisfaction with all that humanity has achieved over the ages.

5. Going over the book it is apparent you are not merely an academic or theoretician. I presume you've had some hands on experience either in mechanics, a lab, or your dad teaching you how to change oil, etc?

You're right there, my father was an aeronautical engineer and fixed jumbo jets for a living. But I've never been particularly good with my hands myself. During the research for The Knowledge, though, I made sure I got some direct, hands-on experience of a lot of the material so that I could write about it properly. For example, I made a steel tool for myself - a knife - working with hammer and anvil in a blacksmith's forge and the author portrait was created by mixing together rudimentary silver chemistry and using a primitive single-lens camera.

6. There is also a lot of history cited in the book, citing when different technologies were invented by different civilizations. Did you have to research this or did you have this historical knowledge from the normal course of your studies?

Sure, alongside ensuring I got first-hand experience of many of the practical skills described I also made sure that I kept rooting possibilities I talked about right back to actual historical examples of similar circumstances. So we look at human ingenuity during the Second World War in keeping civilian automobiles running without gasoline or diesel, how POWs constructed rudimentary radios out of nothing more than scavenged junk, how Japan industrialised in a matter of decades, and the repercussions in Europe of the Black Death. All of this came from my own library research and interviewing experts - my primary research in astrobiology is a little far removed from this area.

7. The scope of the book is potentially huge, and I imagine you had to be quite selective as to what to put in the book, leaving a lot of things on the floor (for example I was curious how to make toothpaste, but it wasn't in the book). Were there other items you would have liked to have cover, but couldn't because it would have made the book prohibitively lengthy?

Yes, absolutely, the trick for The Knowledge (and a constant source of anguish for me as a writer!) was in deciding what stuff to leave out rather than what could be included. The Knowledge is a popular science book, and so naturally it focusses on science and technology, and I do genuinely believe that the material included would be the most vital information for rebuilding a civilisation from the ground-up. Clearly for a stable, flourishing society you also need law and order, governance, trade, economics, mathematics, and so on, but you can't also cover all of this in appropriate detail in a single book of 300 pages. The Knowledge also makes little mention of preserving art, literature and music in case of global catastrophe. The argument I made was that while the laws of physics and requirements for human survival are universal - it doesn't matter where or when you are - the same is not true for art. Clearly art is important, and I find certain oil paintings and piano concertos as achingly beautiful as the next person, but civilisation won't be held back 500 years without them, whereas knowledge of electricity or germs would make an enormous difference during recovery. Post-apocalyptic survivors will create their own artistic and literary expressions that will have significance to them.

8. One things I found lacking in the book was the lack of precise measurements. 3 parts this, 2 parts that, boil at 100 Celsius, etc. Failing myself abysmally at cooking the most rudimentary of meals, it would take some considerable trial and error even with the book to recreate some of these technologies. Was there a reason such precision was left out?

This was primarily a stylistic decision, to be honest - reading a technical manual overloaded with lists of precise directions and accurate quantities would be agonisingly boring to actually read as a popular science book. And, of course, for most readers today thumbing through the book on their couch they'd never need to know such level of detail anyway. Having said that, knowing the ingredients for making gunpowder is 99% of the solution and it wouldn't take much trial and error to hit upon the optimised ratio. You can only fit so much into a single book, and the guiding principle was always to provide the condensed kernels of the most crucial knowledge that would then expand under investigation. I'd never pretend that actually rebooting civilisation won't be a long, hard slog, but I do think that the guidelines provided in The Knowledge would make an enormous difference during the recovery.

9. Tell us about the other books you've published.

My first book is very much based on my primery academic research in astrobiolgy. It's called 'Life in the Universe: A Beginner's Guide' and presents an introduction to the current state-of-play in our search for life beyond the Earth, covering the basics in microbiology, biochemistry, geology, planetary sciences, and astronomy, and explaining the latest cutting-edge discoveries. My second book is an illustrated children's book with Dorling Kindersley, called 'My Tourist Guide to the Solar System'. Imagine in the future you could book a holiday with your parents, but rather than going to Florida or France you could go anywhere in space. Where are the tourist hot-spots on the other planets and moons, what are the unmissable sights and unique adventure activities, and which souvenirs must you remember to bring home?

10. Though not related to the The Knowledge, because of your relative youth and abnormal accomplishments, do you have any advice or recommendations to the younger generations either in high school, college, or about to start their careers?

'Abnormal' - errr, thanks…! I spend a lot of time talking to school children and those just starting in their careers (part of my fellowship is in science outreach and public communication) and the advice I always give is to simply follow your heart. Pick your favourite subject to study at university and then try to step into a career in something you really care about. Of course it'll be hard work, and you won't always be happy or where you want to be, but if you enjoy what you do you'll find it comes so much easier!

You can find more of Dr. Dartnell's work here and his website here.

Convincing the Parasites They Are Indeed Parasitic

June 1, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A video request that ultimately boils down to:

How do we convince the people who are sucking off of society to stop if they are impervious to reason, logic, and have no intellectual honesty?

The answer?

Shame, mockery, and ridicule:

Che Marville - The Worst Possible Candidate Ever Created

June 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Wow, from our Spaniard Agent in the Field. He just found what is all honesty is the WORST qualified candidate for the Canadian parliament.

She:

Works for a non-profit
Rides horses
Worked in HR
Has a worthless degree
Comes from a family of government workers
Never worked a real job
Makes Obama's speeches sound succinct, pointed, and purposeful.

Ladies and gentlemen, I give you the WORST possible candidate you could ever create, even with perfect lab conditions, Ms. Che Marville.

How Forced Entrepreneurship Helps Destroy the American Family

June 2, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Entrepreneurship is largely regarded in society as a good thing. It is the "missing ingredient" Keynesians refuse to acknowledge as they strive to find the perfect balance between unionized labor, capital and technology to increase economic growth. It is responsible for nearly all the increases of standards of living since the post-Caveman days. And it is the most surefire way to enjoy a happy and successful career. There is not much bad that can be said about entrepreneurship. However, when it is forced, leaving an individual no other option to earn his bread, it can still yield benefits, but it comes at a cost, an opportunity cost to be precise. And this cost comes at the expense of the American family.

To understand this we first need to understand where forced entrepreneurs come from. And today's economy is as good as any because it is the perfect storm with the perfect confluence of events which breeds (in my humble opinion) more forced entrepreneurs than it ever has before.

The first "ingredient" contributing to the rise of the forced entrepreneur is that there is no longer the "life long career." Historically this laid the foundation to buying a home and raising a family as reliable employment would result in the money needed to afford both. But with a "30 year, uninterrupted career" as mythical as unicorns, Santa Claus, social security, and pensions, any somewhat savvy individual will know not to breed or buy a house. However, scaling down in major life purchases does not solve an individual's need for income and so whereas American employers become increasingly unreliable, taking matters into your own hands does not.

The second ingredient is with an ABYSMAL labor market and declining economic growth, increasing numbers of young people have to compete for relatively fewer jobs. This has resulted in not only historic highs of unemployment and underemployment for younger people, but given employers carte blanche to power trip and become increasingly petty in their requirements for employees. HR ditzes asking job candidates the dumbest of questions, the never ending progressive credentialism, refusing to train people and demanding 5 years experience in software that has only existed for 3 (true story). However, the real cost manifests itself in the form of petty office politics and the increasing psycho-sadism among employers. Like the cadre of "popular girls" in high school, employers now instill a work environment that is nothing short of psychological abuse, making their employees' lives psychological hell. An employee can no longer show up on time, do a good job, and maybe make a recommendation. No, s/he must figure out and play the office politics game or get rubbed out for good. Such an environment is so unacceptably childish and hostile, entrepreneurship, once again, looks to be a better option.

The third ingredient is affirmative action. Not so much in hiring practices (though that is true), but because affirmative action actively discriminates against the group of people who historically have been most prone towards entrepreneurship - men. However, in addition to being overlooked for promotion, there is a genuine institutionalized discrimination against men. From school to university to media to the government to the entertainment industry, nearly every one of our institutions is geared towards women. But our institutions are also the primary providers of "regular employment" and "regular careers." Thusly, their preference towards women results in a "crowding out effect" somewhat forcing men out of these institutions and pushing them towards entrepreneurship.

The fourth ingredient is outsourcing our industrial economy to foreign countries. Nothing forces a man into another field, potentially entrepreneurship, when you just outright wholesale the industries that historically employed men in exchange for malls, shopping centers, cappuccino cafes, green consulting agencies, government bureaucracies, and horse hobby farms.

Now these variables alone provide a great incentive to give up on the rat race and pursue a career as an entrepreneur. I don't know anybody who truly likes their job, and nearly everybody would love to run their own business, not so much for the money, but "to be their own boss." But that until itself would not spell demise to the American family. Matter of fact, if more people were successful entrepreneurs that might even bolster the American family. The true threat to the American family comes in the final ingredient to the "forced entrepreneur" - The mandatory and required "10 years wandering in the post-college-graduation desert" (or "TYWITPCGD" henceforth abbreviated).

You see, up until you graduate from college, society, government, parents, the schools, etc., is bending over backwards to kiss your ass and tell you what you want to hear.

"You can do anything you want! Achieve your dreams! Follow your heart and the money will follow! Oh the places you will go!"

But while your family and friends tell you this out of a love-blinded naivety, the government, the teachers unions, and your professors tell you this for 100% pure profit motive. The government tells you these pretty lies so when you get older you vote for more government. Teachers and professors tell you this, because they profit directly off of your attending school. But once you graduate from college, you no longer serve any financial or political purpose to these lamprey-like entities, and you are dumped out into the labor market, dumped out into the real world, NOT with an education that has prepared you for said real-world, but one of mush, poppy-cock, entitlement, feel-good

USDA grade A bullshit.

And this is where the forced entrepreneur is formed.

For about 10 years the idealistic college student will live an abysmal life trying to reconcile what he was told the real world was going to be like versus what the real world actually is. His career will never manifest the way his teachers told him it would, matter of fact (because of the dire economic conditions) his career will never get off the ground. He will work part time jobs here, overnight shifts there, but MUCH WORSE he will take it personally, thinking somehow he has failed and not that he was the victim of what is arguably the world's greatest scam. If it wasn't bad enough, add to his immense confusion, psychological pain, and shame that:

constant never-ending never-relenting never-ceasing always-threatening poverty that follows him around.

Worrying about making rent for the month, having to eat ramen well-past college when college was supposed to afford him sushi, not being able to go out, and the terror that strikes when his car needs an expensive repair, it will ensure that this period of his life is the worst he will ever experience.

But while this epoch in his life is guaranteed to be the worst, he will learn one very valuable and important lesson from it - minimalism. And that is the added chemical that forges the alloy known as the forced entrepreneur.

After stumbling through the "TYWITPCGD" and getting the harsh life lessons that came with it, he will enter the labor market (if he hasn't already) and be exposed to the aforementioned and unacceptable hell American employers have become. Landing a "real" job "finally," thinking his financial problems are over, he'll learn that his boss is a psycho-path, his co-workers catty women who like to cause drama, and that any attempts at efficiency or progress are viewed as threats that threaten the status quo which constantly land him in trouble. His job duties do not match the job description. And the incompetence that surrounds him ensures he will be that Eagle who can never soar with the turkeys.

He'll think it's bad luck, not logically believing all employers are like this, and apply for another job elsewhere. However, in due time, and after working enough jobs, he'll slowly realize that it isn't just him or "bad luck," but that ALL employers are like this. And when having this epiphany, he'll realize the ONLY solution is entrepreneurship.

There's just one problem.

Was he stupid enough to breed, marry, sign a mortgage, and get a car loan?
Was he stupid enough to have kids with a spending-addicted woman?
Or did his true education from the TYWITPCGD stick?

Because a man with a mortgage, kids, a car loan, and a wife can rarely become an entrepreneur. The man with such familial and financial liabilities is damned to a fate worse than the forced entrepreneur. He gets to suck it up, suffer the psychological torture and the unreliability of American employers.

A man unencumbered with family, debt, and a house, however, can become an entrepreneur. And given the intolerable work environment of America today will be forced to via self-respect.

However, before you get too excited about this person becoming the next Bill Gates, employing thousands and supporting millions of socialist parasites, understand what kind of entrepreneur he's going to be. Since he went through the hell of TYWITPCGD he will have been trained to be a minimalist. He will be immune and inoculated against the consumerist marketing industry to buy cars, take on leases, McMansions, trophy wives and credit card debt. And given the hell he had to suffer when he made a decent go at the "traditional means of employment" he knows that no amount of money is worth his sanity and freedom. Therefore, this individual has no desire or incentive to create the next Apple or Standard Oil, but rather only cares to make enough money to get by, effectively turning him into a "Micro-Entrepreneur."

This spells doom for some would-be American families. Not that the American family will be wiped out, or that there aren't millions of indebted wage mules on the hook for 30 years of mortgage/wife/kids payments to ensure its future ahem "success," but that there is a significant demographic forming (and I would contend growing) that go through the arduous process explained before and are forced into this micro-entrepreneur role. But key to understanding why this would have a negative effect of American family formation is to realize it is antithetical to family formation. Struggling, striving, and starving for a decade after college makes one awfully risk-averse. Couple that with a declining economy and unacceptably psychotic employers, once one has a path and an opportunity to just a modicum (but self-sustaining and reliable) source of employment, they will abandon family creation for the stability, tranquility and freedom that comes from forced-micro entrepreneurship.

Worthless Degree Awareness Month is BACK!

June 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

June is Worthless Degree Awareness Month where we do our best to ahem "raise awareness" amongst the youth that the vampiric higher education industry is fully intending of sucky dry their financial live blood.

Naturally I have my book available for 1/32,784ths the price of an average degree, but just having a talk with your kid, highlighting starting salaries, or doing some basic math with your child about ROI will help prevent your child from making a decision that will ABSOLUTELY DESTROY their financial futures.

This is too important of an issue AND TOO EASILY PREVENTABLE that something (unlike most leftists political causes) can actually be done about it.

Just like polio, let's eradicate worthless degrees.

I Told You - Leftists Can't Tell the Difference Between a Million and a Billion

June 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Now just imagine if you introduced "trillion" to their little logic-impaired brains.

The Clarey Podcast - The Horrible Costs of No Men Episode

June 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

MBA professors faking their intelligence in Hungary,
defending the online IQ test,
realizing you are above average,
and a horrible price is paid for a lack of masculine men in society

and MORE

in this latest episode of The Clarey Podcast!

You can listen to more of the Clarey Podcast by visiting the archives!

I Don't Recall Ever Wanting to Shut Down a Feminist Conference

June 3, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Short version.

Bachelor Pad Economics is, among others, sponsoring the International Conference on Men's Issues this upcoming June. I was also intending on riding my motorcycle out there for a little summer road trip.

Apparently they've received enough threats that the Detroit Police are going to be "needed" to protect the event (I call it a shake down) Naturally this has raised the costs of holding the event to the point they are going to have to raise money to host the event.

Regardless of whether this event occurs or not, I only have one question - who has a track record of shutting down speeches and thus shutting down the freedom of speech?

Evil, right wing, libertarian, conservative men's rights groups

or

Liberal, leftist, feminist groups?

There is no more obvious proof as to which group is a hate group, hell bent on forcing their political agenda on others and which one is not.

How to Recover from a Worthless Degree

June 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

My latest piece up at Return of Kings goes into detail about what to do if you got a worthless degree and how to best salvage your live after it.

Best Quote in the History of The Clarey Podcast

June 4, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"I've hit upon a splendid combo: I listened to your podcast whilst watching porn with the volume turned down, standing in the kitchen doing shots."

You too can tune into The Clarey Podcast by visiting the archives here.

Money Isn't Evil. It's Just Human Time

June 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

How Women Centers Reveal How Pathetic Feminism Truly Is

June 5, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I viewed with a tacitly interested eye this "battle" being waged on college campuses between women's studies departments vs...well...men in general. Tacitly because I no longer attend college and I had larger fish to fry. However, with the:

increasing cacophony of this battle, the increasing severity of feminists' accusations of men,
the outlandishness of what "constitutes rape," an obsession with "rape culture," plus multiple instances of false charges of rape (and consequently, no punishment for the false-accusers), it required me to think this through because a fair amount of my readership is younger males and it is my opinion college is becoming a hostile environment for them, too risky to attend.

So after delving into this particular rabbit hole, and flushing it out to the end, I have finally figured out why there is this war being waged against college men. And the conclusion is the most pathetic thing I've ever realized.

It is no secret feminists play the victim game. Too lazy to take on real jobs they all major in some worthless subject and then expect the rest of society to pay for their faux careers in women's studies departments, boring authors, activists, etc. To this extent, you can see their all too familiar and tired broken record of "sexism, patriarchy, blah blah blah." Demands for affirmative action, funding for women's studies departments, etc.

But this obsession with rape is relatively new, as much as it is eerie. And not just eerie, but incredibly damaging and telling. For it's one thing if a naive population votes in socialists and therefore pays higher taxes to fund these economically worthless and unproductive people. The biggest price you pay is higher taxes to support these adult-girls or suffer discrimination via affirmative action. But if you're accused of rape, the costs go well-beyond a mere 10% increase in your tax bill or a rejection letter in the mail. You get to pay legal fees, have your career and future ruined, not to mention the psychological torture as you sit in a jail cell for something (that is progressively proving) you didn't do.

So why would feminists create a rape-scare much like the McCarthyism Red-Scare? Why are feminists and their leftist college administrators redefining rape to include fornicating when a girl has consumed alcohol? What do they possibly gain from such vile, evil, and above all else, destructive propaganda?

The sad answer is:

Women's centers.

"Women's centers?" you say.

"Women centers."

Allow me to explain.

Like ALL women's studies majors and ALL feminists in the worthless liberal arts fields, the biggest problem facing them is that the real world does not want nor demand them. They have no skills anybody wants. They have no talents anybody needs. And they are usually so physically and emotionally unappealing, no man wants them in a romantic or familial sense. In short, the world does not want them. But rather than admit this and abide by the real world, their ego insists otherwise and demands the world bend for them.

Since they are not going to abide by the real world, providing others with a good or service the real world demands, by logical necessity their nature is forced to become one of parasitism. This is not an opinion nor an insult as all one has to do is look at where the majority of their financing and employment comes from:

Government Education
Non-profits
Forcing students to buy your book

Because of this, the primary job of a feminist (and leftists I might add) is to CONSTANTLY find sources of other people's money. To find hosts. To find actual producers of society to pay for their faux careers/egos.

To help with this, the "Victim Strategy" is deployed as a means to guilt trip people who are guilty of nothing into forfeiting their financial life blood to these parasites. Again, we saw this before where "patriarchy" results in affirmative action. "Sexism" results in higher taxes and government spending on women's programs. Etc. etc., However, the "Rape Scare" can be directly tied to the one thing that feminists on campus IMMEDIATELY clamor for when protesting or "raising awareness" about it and that is the college women's center.

Yep, that's right.

False accusations of rape.
Redefining rape to include a night of dirty, sloppy drunk sex
Bogus 1 in 3 women are sexually assaulted
The general "men are the enemy" feeling you get on campus today and let's not forget

The ruined lives of innocent college boys who are accused of rape are all to get funding for college women's centers so that 10-15 women's studies students can have a part time job tending to the non-existent Rape-Scare on campus. Yes, I accuse those feminists of being that evil. Yes, I accuse them of being that petty. Because as far as I can tell, they have no problems ruining the lives of (theoretically) millions of young men just so they can get that morsel of funding to have a women's center on campus.

Naturally, many people will look at this with a cynical eye. My opponents will merely say I'm "pro-rape" (which, obviously, I'm not). My readers will say, "Wow Clarey, even this is cynical for you!" But I genuinely believe that this witch hunt that is occurring on college campuses is solely motivated for nothing more than funding for women's centers. The fact so much effort is being put into COLLEGE CAMPUSES means that it must tie to what benefits feminists on college. And when you look at the demand of college feminists it INVARIABLY is for more funding (typically in the form of a women's center).

But if that doesn't convince you, perhaps I can remind you of the parasitic nature of most modern day college feminists. To be a parasite is to be the most pathetic, lowest, saddest creature on Earth. Parasites don't have glorious ambitions, they don't have dreams of starting companies, they don't have goals of becoming great. Their only goal in life is to get something for free and achieve nothing of genuine accomplishment or noteworthiness. It is to merely exist.

And when you put it in that context you can see why feminists will ruin other innocent human beings just to get that measly morsel of blood in the form of an unneeded women's center on campus. And once you realize that, you'll realize how truly sad and pathetic modern day feminism has become.

The Reality Principle Causes Economic Growth

June 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

It's a very simple concept - base your decisions in reality and watch your culture and economy grow.

Base them on lies (mainly of the theological or socialist ideological type) and you get what we have now.

Will be on a road trip to Kansas City in the hopes of intercepting a tornado or two this weekend. Posts will be sparse.

Cappy on the Hinderaker-Ward Experience

June 6, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Happy Day Lieutenants,

The ole Cap was interviewed by Brian Ward and John Hinderaker of Fraters Libertas and Powerline fame.

You may find their podcast episode here for your listening pleasure.

Tornado chasing updates will occur over the weekend.

Cpt.

Global Warming Has Surpassed Science

June 7, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

And become a religion. The reason I say that is this one chart, this one bit of data, disproves global warming. That's it. It's over. It's done. I don't care what anybody else says because the globe isn't warming. It would be like having video footage of Jesus saying, "Hey, you know this whole son of god thing and salvation and heaven and hell and everything? Yeah, it was just a joke."

BUT

you just know, deep in the recesses of your brain that it won't matter. People would still follow Christianity just as they will global warming.

Why?

Because the adherents of all religions participate not primarily for the cause or nobility of the religion or any actual belief. They participate because it gives their otherwise meaningless lives meaning. It fills a hole desperate for purpose. It makes them feel like they're part of a team and gives them something to rally around rather than work hard to provide people in society something genuine to rally around. It's a club, it's a sports team, it's watching the Kardashians.

And I for one, eagerly await what the consequences are for their children as they chart the course of the future based on lies.

Book Review - The Knowledge: How to Rebuild Our World from Scratch

June 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In my bug out bag I have one AR15, one pistol, iodine pills, ammo, a compass, maps, hand-powered radios and flashlights, a tent, and many many other things. Add to that now "The Knowledge: How to Rebuild Society from Scratch" by Dr. Lewis Dartnell.

In short this book is a how to manual to "reboot" society should a destructive event occur wiping out most of humanity and our technological advances along with it. It immediately caught my attention as I have often thought about this in terms of

"OK, I made it to my safe zone and survived, now what? I'm just an economist. I don't know anything about farming, agriculture, and only have a very basic understanding of chemistry and science. How would I rapidly as possible make the remainder of my life the least-labor intensive as possible?"

And this book addresses precisely that.

In an amazingly efficient manner, Dr. Dartnell boils down in a "Civilization"-video-game-Gantt-Chart way what key technologies should and CAN be recovered from the basic tools we'd have available in a post-apocalyptic world. With these basic "key" technologies, we can "leapfrog" other technologies recreating in a matter of two generations that took humankind 10,000 years to create the first time. While the topic is somber and morose, the book is actually quite encouraging, even hopeful, as it explains in a way the average person with average intelligence can understand how to scratch out a reasonably comfortable existence from the ashes of collapsed society.

There are of course drawbacks in taking on a task as broad as this. I didn't see a recipe for toothpaste. He doesn't provide specific instructions (measuring out units of ingredients to create say, gun powder) that will force some trial and error in the future. And he covers the construction of various machines in a general manner, providing no blue prints. The reason for this is obvious, the book would be 5,000 pages long. However, while it may take 4 months to perfect the ratio of the three ingredients to make gun powder, that is infinitely shorter than the 6,000 years it took civilized Chinese to discover it the first time.

In short, the book is a must for survivalists in that most survivalists do not merely wish to survive, but believe in life and believe in the future no matter how dire it may be. And to ensure there is a better future should a collapse occur, having a score or two of these books on the planet will indeed help reboot society and rapidly return the world to the standards of western civilization.

He's Going to Become a Writer After He Goes to "Collage"

June 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In response to this video.

Some comments are hidden as they are probably spam. Review comments

3 hours ago LINKED COMMENT

your are the most ugliest bitter person I ever seen on YouTube how fucking dare you say that 17 and 16 years don't have enough of experience of intelligence to write. For your information you stupid motherfucker I am a 17 year old boy who has 4 short stories in my community newspaper and in my high schools newspaper I have taken journalism and creative writing course in my high school and I got A+ in both of the classes. so don't fucking come on your camera judging anybody. you should judge your fucking whore of a mother for giving birth to you. you are an asshole. I do plan to major in writing when I head off to my wonderful collage and am going to be a successful writer. you fucking dick head go suck a dick you bitter motherfucker.

Show less

Book Review - A Christian Man's Guide to Love and Marriage in the 21st Century

June 9, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Thankfully, a GUIDE.

A man who wrote a GUIDE and didn't call it a BOOK.

He called it a GUIDE, and that's precisely what it is, a GUIDE.

I read Don Riefstahl's new book, "A Christian Man's Guide to Love and Marriage in the 21st Century" on my way down to Kansas City. I was able to finish reading the entire tome before reaching Missouri because it is a short, succinct guide. As it's title suggests, it's for Christian men and it addresses love and marriage.

To be truthful (which Christians appreciate) it is NOT reading material for any veteran or experienced reader of The Manosphere for the past 2 years. It summarizes some basic information, tenets, philosophies and laws that have been discovered and repeated adinfinitum on The Manosphere. However, it's intended audience is NOT that of those exeprienced Manospherians. It's market is for two distinct set of Christians:

1. Men of all ages who have yet to wake up and unfurl the brainwashing "churchianity" has forced on them

and

2. Young Christian boys who are about to hit puberty and are in for a world of hurt unless somebody gets them this information right quick.

In short, two groups of people who have NEVER heard of the Manosphere or been introduced to its ideas but desperately need them.

The major problem I personally have with the guide is what makes it most marketable - it's for Christians. Ergo, it cites scripture and bases some of its arguments on the word of God. I personally don't believe some of the conclusions (women submit and serve your husbands, etc.) or other bits of advice that come in the book, but it isn't intended for people like me. It's intended for Christian men. Therefore, if they are true believers in the scripture, they will appreciate this tailor-made guide for their religion.

Naturally, anybody who cites scripture is lambasted in the secular community as a sexist, neanderthal who is foolish enough to believe in god (while oddly silent about radical Muslim's treatment of women). However, the biggest push back many Christian men face comes from within their own church which has been more or less hijacked by political correctness, feminism and cultural marxism. This puts many Christian men and boys in a very confusing spot. Do they follow the teachings of Christ and the word of God, or do they kowtow to the screaming Christian women who want abortion, pick and choose passages from the bible that convenience them, divorce frivolously and seem to use Christianity as a mere pharmaceutical to scratch some kind of psychological or social itch they have?

In short, your average secular man whose brain has not been encumbered by religious indoctrination does not need this book. The first few chapters are so elementary and apologetic they actually made me wince. But if you look at it through the lens of a brainwashed Christian boy who's not only been fed all the leftist feminist BS from secular society, but also the emasculating "churchianity" BS from his church you can understand the introductory and kid's glove nature of the book. Therefore, even though I wouldn't recommend it to any of my secular friends, I do recommend this short, brief and succinct book be put in as many hands of your Christian friends as possible.

Agreeing With Liberal Girls Will Not Get You Laid

June 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A bit of helpful advice for our hipster and liberal brothers on campus:

Obama by the Numbers - Debt and Deficit

June 10, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Continuing on with our empirical series of measuring the performance of the presidents' economic performances, we look today at debt and deficit.

And this is such a slam dunk I don't really think we need to delve too much into the details.

Without a doubt, Obama is the biggest spend-a-holic making Reagan's deficit spending in the 80's (which the left at the time screamed bloody murder) look like austerity v. 2.0.

The natural economic criticism would be that with the world's largest Keynesian stimulus, why the poor economic performance that is on par with GW's? It's like taking five Viagra pills and only lasting 3 minutes. Of course, cynical economists such as myself know when you piss away the stimulus on the dregs of society for Obama Phones, make-work government social programs, unneeded community centers, global warming research, and single-mom mania, it shouldn't be a surprise the money wasn't invested in capital goods, manufacturing, or any real investment, resulting in zero future economic growth.

Naturally, when you piss away deficit money, you do two things. One, increase the amount of debt, and two, you do NOT grow GDP. This then results in an increasing amount of debt relative to the actual economic production being produced:

Average Debt to GDP (Source FRED) 100
90
80
70
60
50 40 30 20 10 0
31.778090625
41.0743115625
56.762889375
61.658758722222
60.11035505556
94.100750
Carter
Reagan
Clinton

Of all the statistics we could look at the presidents, it is this one, debt and deficit, that not only defines the Obama presidency, but one of the few ones I would claim is completely owned and the fault of the president. Conservatives at least berated Bush for his (then) egregious spending, but the left is completely silent at the crippling deficit spending of Obama, because like him, they are ideologues and in general hate this country. Any spending that goes to them and their causes AND harms the country's finances at the same time is a two-fer in his and their eyes. Call me cynical, but I'd glad change my tune if I saw proof of the left actually loving this country, rather than hating it and trying to destroy its culture and traditions.

When Sons Won't Listen to Their Fathers

June 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A humbling review of Bachelor Pad Economics where the father bought his son the book, but can't get that damn horse to drink the water.

Don't worry, poverty will cure that.

Daddy's Little Princess Syndrome

June 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I will be coming out with another video ripping apart all the "fathers" that brought up and sent forth their spoiled princesses into our dating ranks back in the day and highlighting the destruction they caused, but in the meantime, I think it's about high time we define and explain some of the risks of bringing up a "Daddy's Little Princess"

The Economist the Captain Consults

June 11, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

There are a handful of economists I follow, let alone defer to their authority. Obviously, Sowell and Williams are two, but Jerry Robinson, who you may not have heard of, is a third. And this is the reason why. Jerry has an ability to explain advanced economic concepts simply and clearly. And I'd like to see another economist explains de-dollarization in Russia better than him.

Reversing the Economic Argument

June 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

In being a preacher's son forced to go to parochial school, what information went into my little toddler brain was very controlled and very deliberate. Therefore, like all young children who don't know any better, my brain was limited in it's capacity to fight against what my lizard brain knew was lies, deceit, and sometimes outright mental abuse because it was confined and structured by "facts" that were not facts at all. Things like "I will go to hell if I sin," "If you don't love Jesus you will go to hell," and "the Bible is truth." There are literally thousands more instances of these false facts that religious people use to restrict people's brains, but the larger point is that in getting a young child to agree to false premises, you effectively handicap that individual from ever legitimately arguing against, let alone, challenging the religion. In other words, in a very cowardly way, you fool the child into thinking that s/he can only debate or argue against the religion by using ordained and approved religious techniques. And therefore instead of questioning something as fundamental as proof of god or how precisely a guy nailed to a plank of wood forgives you for putting a snake in Suzie Jone's desk never comes to the forefront as you are instead too busy trying to parse and interpret bible passages.

But a funny thing happened to me today as I was riding my motorcycle around Lake Pepin. I had one of those epiphanies where the light just shot on, forcing me to pull over and take notes so that I would not forget it. And that epiphany is;

You can apply the exact same observation to economics.

As I've aged and become more experienced, I start to realize just how much of a fraudulent study economics is. Not because economics isn't important. Not because there isn't some serious important issues that economics addresses. It's not even that the secret to riches for all does lay within economics (it does and it is what ultimately drives my eternal passion for economics). But rather how the field's self-proclaimed experts have turned it into nothing more than self-serving political bunk. It is no longer simply about the "efficient allocation of resources" or "maximizing the wealth of people" but rather idiotic concepts like the Phillips Curve, running advanced (and ultimately flawed) economic models, fretting about things like the liquidity trap, drawing idiotic foursquare games for "prisoner theory," and the hundreds of other temporary and fleeting relationships that have been observed in the past 60 years that the economist academians trump out and treat it as if it were a real science when in reality it is a constantly changing art as it is human psychology that underpins it all.

And thus my case for "reversing the economic argument."

I tried to read a paper by Paul Krugman once, and while he no doubt probably adhered to Keynesian theory to the letter, in the end none of it made sense and my mind started to wander. Not only because it was boring, but because experience has told me something that complex would ultimately be debunked by Occam's Razor. I don't care how many charts he threw up, I don't care what latest version of "Ricardian Equivalence" he was using, let alone the empirical data to prove it, in the end if you step back and look at it, it was nothing more than a pastor using the bible to further confirm Christianity. In otherwords, economics has becomes so focused on itself as a study, has put on such horse-blinders, its clergy has lost sight of its original and more important goal and now study it for its own sake.

Therefore, if you truly want to understand (or disprove some things about) economics, I argue going backwards. I argue going outside the study. I argue applying some basic, simple logic and factual testing to see if this increasingly complex "field" even makes sense anymore or is merely a circle jerk for wanna-be mathematicians just like religion is for most clergymen.

For example, a simple question I have, is WWII the only data point the Keynesianism can point to in history where it worked? And if so, why the hell did we base the entire western world's governance and economic policies on something so ill-tested?

Another, precisely whose brilliant idea was it that government should intervene period? Who precisely died and made you economic king giving you authority to "provide incentives" or "boost demand curves?" Since when was it the government's and politician's responsibility to MANAGE people? (I'll tell you who. One sick, power-hungry, totalitarian, that's who).

And though I am certainly very political, shouldn't we be concerned when the likes of Krugman call Republicans racist or we start claiming that 100% purely politically moves such as "diversity" have some kind of inherent value? i.e. - why is politics allowed to enter, let alone corrupt economists and their views?

I could go on, but these simple questions are identical to the basic, logical questions we need to ask (but aren't allowed to) of religion.

First, where's your proof of god? Oh, you don't have any? Then why with the threatening of little children with hell?

Second, explain to me the guy on the plank of wood and the snake in Suzie Jone's desk?

Third, did Adam have a belly button?

And fourth, how is stealing money from productive people and giving it to parasitic people a "winning" long term and sustainable economic strategy?

In the end, if you reverse the economic argument you'll see our modern day economists are no different than those "idiot" clergymen they mock for having equally idiotic, fanciful, and self-serving beliefs.

Enjoy the decline.

Baby Sitting the Banks

June 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Like always, an epiphany struck when I was innocently sitting at my bar in my town. I don't control when these things happen, but it did, and now I'm forced to document said epiphany before I forget.

Rewind about 3 years ago where I was in the dumbest state of the union, Wyoming. There as an "assistant vice president" working at what was then MATHEMATICALLY AND FACTUALLY the second worst bank in the state, I entertained degenerate applicant after degenerate applicant looking to ~~steal~~ "borrow" money from ~~the fed~~ our beloved shareholders.

One guy wanted a truck equity loan.
Another wanted a home equity loan on his tetanus-infested trailer.
A third tried to pass on a fake check
And let's not forget Casper's finest citizen asking me for a "Gas loan" so he could drive to Denver to visit his "grandson who was in the hospital."

I was in the midst of it and didn't realize it, but the fact the bank I worked for had such a bad reputation that banks were sending literal bums to us should have told me that management was so desperate and so inept that we were entertaining such idiocy as "truck equity loans" and making loans to trailer trash. But add another factor I didn't realize until now because I was in the thick of it.

OCC compliance.

When I moved to the company's "headquarters" my job went from commercial lending to one of federal compliance. The bank was so shittacularly managed before that they were now under audit and had the federal regulators down their throats. And so I got to see, upfront and personal, each and every new regulation, requirement, dictate and demand that came from the authorities.

At first I was angry at these regulations. They were petty, idiotic, and so time consuming they made it so the bank could not be profitable. We had to do monthly updates on our "problem loans." We had to write reports proving to the feds that we were actively working on dealing with our problem loans. I had to fill out 13 pages of paperwork to get the taxpayer (that's you) guarantee on loans we made to Bubba the Incestuous Trailer Trash Hick on his Goat-Screwing farm. And that's just a fraction of needless time-consuming hurdles we had to deal with. But so petty and onerous were the regulations, I was convinced they were doing it out of spite. That way up top of these various departments were leftists, democrat types that wanted to "stick it to the banks," and that's what I was thoroughly convinced of.

But then I got to thinking as I look at the now polished off tumbler glass of Rumpleminze and reminisce about ~~Screwyourcousining~~ Wyoming.

The feds weren't being the typical "inefficient" government bureaucracy unconscious of their crippling regulations.

And the feds weren't being vindictive ideologues punishing those "evil bankers."

The feds were actually 100% completely right in doing what they were doing.

They were baby sitting what was once an incompetent and piss-poorly managed bank.

Naturally the old guard was fired and replaced with a turn around team. This team was focused on getting out from underneath the federal regulators with the sole goal of becoming a state chartered bank allowing them to have a shot at being profitable (though lending to trailer trash, Goat Screwing Farms, and the burgeoning Teenage Single Parent market will likely prove that difficult). But none of that changed what the federal regulators had to deal with.

View it from the regulators' eyes.

You had the largest financial crisis since the Great Depression caused by the most galactically stupid bankers in the history of the world. These bankers and the management of the banks were SOOOOO incomprehensibly inept that they were literally like dealing with children. The only problem is these "children" were at the vital cross-roads of the US economy and that was the banking system. The lifeblood of this or any other economy was being ran by the most idiotic incompetents in the world. Soon enough, their reckless lending came to roost and when their idiocy was exposed either through audits or the news, the feds had to have been saying circa 2008

"Who the fuck is in charge of this operation? What the fuck is going on? How dumb can you possibly get?"

And naturally, the consequence was one where a house full of feral children ultimately come to heel - through a tyrannical, powerful, heavy handed disciplinarian.

In the end, the petty regulations, the constant updates, and all the seemingly pointless requirements regulators were (and still are) forcing on banks were not out of malice, pettiness or politics. But rather necessity because of the unrivalled incompetence and stupidity of bankers and the banking industry. And the fact for once I actually agree with federal regulations and regulators, crippling and choking off our financial services industry, is a testament to the true ineptitude of those genuine USDA 100% fucktards currently in charge of our banking system today.

Smart People Outsource

June 12, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

"Outsourcing" is a funny thing.

Business experts applaud it.
Democrats love screwing over their union base by destroying jobs for it.
And every American loves nothing more than forcing Asians to slave away to make their latest Apple product for it.

But you know where the REAL cutting edge of outsourcing is?

Outsourcing your worthless prerequisite classes forced on you by the Big Education Industrial Complex.

Do you REALLY need to take 10 courses in common sense diversity

CSR
and other leftist claptrap bullshit?

no you don't.

But your higher education indoctrinators demand you do so they can employ further worthless scum such as themselves and enrich themselves in the process.

Why don't you fight back with a tool they themselves use?

OUTSOURCE your worthless hoop jumping classes to Academic Composition.

Academic Composition will write the pointless, purposeless papers you don't want to, let alone have the time to in order to prove to those souless corporations that you're worth hiring. Besides, corporations believe outsourcing is a GREAT strategy and would be hypocritical if they dared to judge against a person employing their own tactics. So the solution is obvious.

They want to make you jump like a well-trained puppy dog to get an MBA.

You have self-respect.

So why don't you employ the services of Academic Composition to throw it right back in their hypocritical faces and "outsource" your pointless, meaningless, commie-socialist-professor-enriching make work so that you can get your MBA and ultimately get on with your life?

Society, boomers, academia, corporate America and every other institution is aiming to fuck you over, why not fuck them back?

Hire the services of Academic Composition and play their equally foul game. It's the least you can do to play their own game.

(PS - Academic Composition is looking to hire! Do you have that worthless masters degree that your indoctrinators told you would be the salvation and your gateway to freedom and happiness? But instead is an albatross of student debt? Well, fuck the system back and help write papers for other students! make money AND screw back the system that screwed you over!)

When the Fuel Runs Out

June 13, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I've been kicking around a theory, one of which I've ran past Roosh and some other philosophers and theoreticians.

Do men have a finite amount of fuel/energy?

Fuel and energy for what, you ask.

Fuel and energy for pursuing women.

It seems a stupid question on the face of it, but when you think it through a couple more layers you start to see it's importance and ramifications. Most of "sexual market value theory" is based on the relative worth of an individual where young women in their 20 something prime command the highest premium while men age more slowly, but surely into their 40 something primes. This is the biologically "separation of powers" that nature has programmed into the human species to ensure not only its survival, but that no one sex gains the upper hand over the other. But the entirety of this "model" (completely true as it is) is one-sided in its focus.

It only focuses on demand for the respective sex.

It never considers supply.

And supply is the topic I'd like to address today.

I took an informal survey a while ago asking men what percentage of their free time they dedicated towards the pursuit of women. And like I surmised, the results showed a high percentage during their late teens and early twenties, only to dwindle to near nothingness in by the time they reached their 50's. Matter of fact most men in their 50's had more interest in reading books than going out and finding favor with the opposite sex.

This not only supplements the theory that men have a more long term advantage over women, aging like scotch while women age like milk, but deals a double blow to the "supply demand" dynamics of aging courtship. Not only do men get better with age, they lose an interest in pursuing women as well.

This isn't to say that men as they approach 50 don't notice a fine POA crossing their vantage point, but based on my observations they are less willing to spend the effort and resources in trying to procure a hottie.

And who can blame them?

If we revert back to lizard-brain-neaderthal times, calories spent was the primary calculation that determined if you lived or died. Do I spent 5,000 calories of energy pursuing a herd of deer to MAYBE beget 6,000 calories of meat? Do I spend 10,000 calories tilling fields to grow a crop to MAYBE beget 12,000 calories of food? Though our minds have recently been inoculated against such biological mathetmatical realities for the past 100 years due to advances in food production, that doesn't undo the 2 million years of human genetic evolution that has trained mens' brains intuitively to calculate every proposition as such.

Ergo, it is in man's natural instinct to constantly weigh the pro's and con's of effort expended on trying to mate versus the opportunity cost. And with ample supply of food, not to mention an unlimited choice of substitute goods (video games, scotch, TV, sports, internet porn, etc.), most logically thinking males will choose the substitute goods and "rub one out" to quote Bill Burr, as that is the least expenditure of physical effort and calories and therefore provides them (according to their lizard brain) the highest chances of survival.

This then leads me to my theory that most men have a finite and limited amount of "fuel." In my younger, more idealistic, years, I would have contended a man's life force was unlimited. He was truly limitless. All he needed was mere support from society and a man's potential was unlimited. While I do on a theoretical basis yearn to believe as such, living in the real world and seeing just how "anti-progress" society is, I've come to accept that a man's potential is indeed limited by the idiocy, closemindedness, bigotry, and anti-success-envy that rules the rest of society. It not only is draining, but is also provides great disincentive at every step of a (would be) genius' advancement. Constantly hounded about inequality, superior performance, the concept of "excellence," and bedraggled into the mundacity of "affirmative action," a true genius or society performer has the life and inspiration kicked out of them. Combine this with progressive tax rates and a general hatred for the successful, men's fuel or "desire" to perform at their peak is severely deterred.

This acceleration, according to my theory, "burns up" the "tolerance fuel" young men have for society, included of which is women. A young man circa 1947 would graduate from college, know how to weld, and likely have a serious job offer at the local car shop. He would have little to no problem finding a suitable woman to court and she'd be happy to court him. Today, however, with $50,000 in debt, no job prospects, and a part time job at Starbucks seriously burns through whatever "patience fuel" a young man has today. Throw in the generally bitchy attitude of most American female college graduates and you don't have June Cleaver at home to soothe your ills and support you, but rather a demanding, commanding, fuel-burning battle axe blathering on about her worthless liberal arts degree. Not only does the lack of economic and employment opportunity burn away at your fuel, but the parasitic deadweight of liberal arts majoring bloviating entitled-thinking American females just evaporates whatever remaining fuel reserves you have left.

Accelerate this scenario over the course of a 20 to 30 something man's life. Poverty, constantly harangued with a never ending supply of self-entitled liberal female adult-children, and in the end, you will burn out. You will lose your patience, and you will lose your desire to ever go to a club or a bar again. And thus my theory.

Most men have only a limited amount of energy, patience, tolerance, and naivete. But once that runs out, they will rarely, if ever, go out to the club scene and present the "supply curve" of attention women so desperately want. Over time, as men age and get wise, they will eschew the night club scene, and even the online dating scene, as they realize, time and time again, their efforts are wasted. And since their efforts are wasted and said efforts are a very real and mathematical percentage of their lives, costing them genuine opportunity costs, they will scale down.

The results are obvious:

Less men at clubs
Less men at dance classes
Less men asking women out.
Less men in general

This isn't to say hot spots in NYC or Las Vegas aren't going to be teaming with DudeBroInc. But it is to say that over time young men, after having the candle burned at both ends, will "burn out" running out of fuel and no longer have the energy or fuel to go out at night to find you. They will be at home, watching Midnight Run, watching porn, grilling steaks or reading books.

Just remember that when you're 42 and still think you have the right to fire up your "Bitch Shield" because nobody is watching.

Friday Night Constitutional

June 14, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Yawnnnn...don't care. And yes, it's because I'm an asshole.

Why you never book at the Hilton in a Liberal Town.

I dated a black girl once. But she acted like a respectable woman. And that's why I dated her (though it was shortlived because she didn't reciprocate the poor ole Cappy's feelings...sniff sniff.). However I would never date this.

What happens when you renounce your US citizenship?

We don't need no STIIIIINNNNKING fathers!

Outstanding Podcast on Your IQ

June 15, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Molyneaux has a very good podcast (the first caller) about how having a high IQ serves as a handicap towards integrating with the rest of society. His mockery of people looking for gold on the beach is also hilarious.

It's a Good Day When a Hoarder Dies

June 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I couldn't put my finger on it why I had this visceral and extreme hatred and disgust with hoarders. Not just in watching the shows, but dealing with people in my own life who put more value on material items than they did life and their fellow human beings.

And then it dawned on me why:

They put more value on worthless material items than they did life and their fellow human beings.

My epiphany about humans being the most important thing in this world is well-covered ground. I don't need to delve into that. But the fact that hoarding is a phenomenon AND to a lesser extent VERY COMMON among the rest of society, only serves as a damning testament to the general patheticness of society.

Think about it. Nearly everybody you know hoards to one level or another. Not the extreme where a worthless soul is crushed by the collapsing floor underneath the weight of filth. But just look at the average American household and how much unneeded and worthless stuff is crammed into it.

Admittedly I have a unique perspective ridding myself of nearly 75% of my Earthly possessions. LImiting myself to just the bare necessities and ONE box of mementos. But even the average person has about 60% of stuff they don't need, don't use, but still hold onto. Certainly, a lot of this is unconscious (not until you move do you realize just what a burden all your stuff is). But where my ire is raised is when a person is asked to get rid of their stuff so that they may continue on with life AND HAS A PERSONAL UMBRAGE AND AFFRONT to getting rid of said stuff, that is where I start to view them as inferior.

Trinkets, doileys, furniture, appliances, televisions, clothes, you name it. Humans are programmed to put more value on stuff they'll never use than the people said stuff inconveniences. They'd rather cripple their finances, renting or paying a mortgage for a house that serves more as a storage facility, not to mention torpedo their personal or love relationships, than rid themselves of meaningless things because they are so subhuman, so sub-par, they actually value things more than life and their fellow human beings.

It took me a while to fully explore and understand my genuine hatred for hoarders and people who are pack rats. And now after thinking it through (not to mention seeing instance first hand) I understand why I not only despised such people but why my despisement was completely legitimate:

They are not humans, but subhumans. And subhumans that would rather collect "Beanie Babies" or some other worthless shit than give their spouse or children or just their plain fellow man an extra bedroom in case of need.

It is indeed one of the few and genuine drawbacks of capitalism.

A Sad Father's Day

June 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

From our Chicago Agent in the Field:

I always knew Jenny McCarthy was worthless. And that Mark Wahlberg's brother was...well...Mark Wahlberg's brother and not Mark Wahlberg. Because Mark Wahlberg would never settle for Jenny McCarthy.

Anyway, deep down inside I wish that what we "perceive" is not what "is" and that we're just being pessimistic. Sadly, when I see this I start to realize that the problem really does run that deep and that it really is an issue.

Lastest Clarey Podcast

June 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Advanced apologies from the road because I was driving to visit my dad for father's day. So if you're against this podcast you're against father's day and you're evil and hate all fathers.

No, actually, you aren't. You just don't like marginal audio quality.

Still, in this latest podcast:

How the Mighty Morphin POwer Rangers are Creepy
How the National Park Rangers in Glacier National Park are Hippie Nazi's you can ignore
Not regretting having children
And the amazing absence of black people in horse racing

AND MORE!

in this totally non-racist, non-horse-a-phobic, non-Might-Morphins-Power-Ranger-Anti-Pedophiliac episode of The Clarey Podcast!

(Archives can be found here!)

Monday Night Liebschens

June 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

All liberal and leftists roads lead towards Lierre Keith. I ask a simple question of the leftist activists. When it's all said and done...or heck, you're just Lierre's age, do you ever stop and say, "wow, I just pissed away my life?" Or does that thought never occur to you?

That reality is a bitch. Let's replace with with ~~lies~~ er...um....non-reality.

Dow Jones 32,000....and based on his argument I can't disagree with him.

Now if Free Northerner would just write something deep and intricate involving economics, inflation, philosophy, morality, religion and logic. You know, if just once he would do that AND make it interesting. You know instead of all that other boring tripe he writes.

When the Economy Refuses to Play Keynesian Ball

June 16, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Guy #1.

Good buddy of mine. Realtor carpenter. Busted his ass off when he was young. Fell in love in his early 20's. Lent a girl with big tits a lot of money, never got it back. Didn't matter as through determination and raw effort he inevitably made killer coin during the housing bubble. However, while he was successful he was foolish enough to buy a cabin and a luxury SUV (among other purchases) thinking it would continue forever. Crash hit, he suffered mightily for 6 years. Now, he crawled back, not losing a thing, and is once again approaching $100,000 for an annual salary.

His next major purchase?

A new fishing pole.

Guy #2

Another good buddy of mine. Smart, young entrepreneur. Made a KILLING during the housing bubble as he was a master carpenter and also invested in real estate. Was flying to Vegas on a semi-weekly basis with his wife. Drove a Mercedes and also thought the good times would last. Housing bubble hit. Some of his investment partners proved not to be as solvent or honest as they claimed. His flagship operation went bust. Now, he's rebuilt himself a nice piece of property he bought at the bottom of the bust, built up a stash of cash to pay off creditors if necessary.

His next major purchase?

A cigar with me.

Guy #3

Me.

Never had anywhere near the success of the aforementioned two. Finally found a company to refinance my house. Make enough money on book sales and various internet ventures to put food on the table and travel on the cheap sleeping in crappy motels, if not the rental car. One time, with full time dance classes and full time banking work, almost made $100,000 had I not told my employer to go fornicate himself. Housing bubble hit, reverted to solely dance classes, and once again lived in an illegally furnished basement apartment to make ends meet.

Next major purchase?

Gas for my next road trip.

So what, young lieutenants, do all the aforementioned boys above have in common?

Well, let me tell you.

1. They in their naive youth were more than willing to bust out of the gates, take on life, and become great entrepreneurs or captains of industry.

2. They foolishly assumed what finite and fleeting fortune they did have was going to last forever and either purchased things they shouldn't have or made investments in what is now in retrospect foolish things.

3. After suffering the great recession, having to get by on limited income wherein finances were so crippling and threatening, all of them have (and pay attention to this) ZERO INTEREST IN EVER BUYING ANYTHING OF SIGNIFICANT WORTH EVER AGAIN.

And thus the point of my post.

While we three men of occident aren't conclusive empirical proof, we are anecdotes of what I believe to be a torpedoing trend for the Keynesian Obamanauts - people, with the harshness of the Great Recession fresh in their minds, just plain don't want to invest or spend money.

I wanted to see if there was a "Marginal Propensity to Consume" figure on the FRED database to confirm this, but I could not find one. Still, using several proxies you see at least a reluctance or stubbornness as the population becomes penny pinchers a la those who went through the Great Depression.

Gross private investment, though recovering, still isn't back to its historical average:

The Personal Savings Rate (which I believe is actually a good thing) is not playing Keynesian ball

And the velocity of money puts another nail on Obama's record-breaking stimulus spending:

Whatever specific events caused this - crushing finances for 7 years, big titted girls running off with money, foreclosure, ne'er an ounce of job security - the larger point is that what is ultimately driving this fear to spend and invest is psychology. And sadly, for Obama and his Keynesians, they largely ignore psychology, insisting to treat economics as an actual, mathematical science arrogantly thinking they can predict the economy like Newtonian physics.

Since they ignore psychology the economic policies they enact are rendered impotent. For example we do have relatively low taxes historically speaking. But spending is so out of control it undermines the entire future of the economy, driving away any long term investment. Obama can talk all he wants about jobs, but with Obama and the left blatantly spouting off their hatred, envy and desire to steal from the successful, it not only makes it just talk, but further deters any would-be entrepreneurs from trying their best. And ironically, since none of these Keynesian tactics have actually worked, the left has screwed over their most reliable demographic - young people. Additionally burden this demographic with student loans used largely to finance the "Leftist Vampire Professor Industry" and it doesn't matter how much "hope and faith" they have in Obama, they just plain don't have the money to buy houses, cars, and boost the economy.

The end result is what we have now - an economy that could not be more diametrically opposed to textbook economics. Historical (and I do mean historical) stimulus spending, yet a stagnant economy.

For Austrian economists or people who just have their heads out of their asses, this makes sense. For charlatans posing as Keynesians, but who know better (Krugman, etc.), this also makes sense, but they need to come up with increasingly fabricated poppycock to keep the spending gravy train going. For the rest of the economists out there this simply does not compute. But then again, most economists spent way too much time obsessing over math, let alone they actually believed the leftist claptrap they were fed in school. Alas, the price one pays for a lack of intellectually honest and independent thought is confusion and forced cognitive dissonance.

Enjoy the decline!

Monday Night Constitutional

June 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Stay frosty, boys. Stay the freak frosty.

Some outstanding charts from Susan Walsh. My favorite is the chart showing a near-zero interest from women in hooking up or looking for sex, but a booming interest in dating.

New sponsor "Confessions of an Online Hustler"

Indian accounts of tornadoes pre-colonial days.

Dealing With Adult Children

June 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

But the biggest purpose in ensuring that whatever your critics say about you is a lie is that it ultimately calls into question their authority and accuracy. No matter how emotional, no matter how enraged, when they are lying about you it calls into question everything else they've said about you and gives you cache and credibility over them.

The Marksman's Box

June 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A year ago I headed out west for my annual South Dakota trip. I was invited to visit a reader out in Wyoming. He was an older man, but he was a skilled man because when he showed me his little shop (which was an abandoned gas station) he showed me "The Marksman's Box."

It was one of those things that was so simple in design that it was brilliant. It is basically an ammo box, a strap of which you use to sling it over your shoulder or just carry. However, the way the top opens suspends the strap in midair just above the box allowing you to lay the barrel of your gun down using it essentially as a firing platform.

I've been meaning to link to the poor guy for the past year, but then ended up working on various other projects. It wasn't until recently I rediscovered the pictures from that trip did I frantically realize I forgot.

Anyway, he isn't a sponsor because he isn't paying me, but he was a heck of a nice guy with a heck of a nice idea. please consider purchasing one if you're looking for something to carry ammo as well as to help your aim.

Tuesday Evening Constitutional

June 17, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Fat tatted up self-absorbed crusader goes on a crusade because...well...she's got nothing better to do.

El Capitan de Espanol! I was looking for somebody to translate.

College degrees per capita.

Self-sufficiency is better than a college degree. But don't tell professors and their spoiled veal-like suburbanite princes and princesses that.

Oh, just NOW you realize Americans are stupid?

Ghostbusters, 1774 America, and some zingers on Obama.

Uh ohhhh!!!! Google has no problem hiring people without degrees! Oh noezies!!!!! What are the edukated childrenz of Ameriku suppozed to doo?

Speaking of stupid.

Fuck You Mark Dayton

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Fuck you and your spoiled brat children.

(read down to the point where you find out his children run a restaurant and complained to him about the minimum wage hike)

No Good Deed Goes Unpunished

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

To give context, I was in all good faith attempting to get this kid to at least RETHINK attending law school. Alas, this is what happens when you try to introduce reality into the Millennial's Dream-World built up by politicians, aloof parents, and an education industry desperate to rip them off of their money.

It's instances like this that makes me happy to hear the never ending news stories of (typically) leftists students getting crushed and their lives crippled by student loans.

How 90210 Drove Gen X Women Insane

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Or something to that effect:

New Blogroll - Glitter Night

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Two posts that intrigued me:

The top 4 Forgotten Military Units.

A review of "The Burqa" - Apparently makes Quentin Tarantino seem tame.

You can visit the main site here.

The Most Depressing Podcast Ever

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The Black Brigade has another damn fine podcast up, but the news they cover not just makes it the most depressing podcast I've listened to in a while, but only reinforces why enjoying the decline is the way to go.

No Greater Determining Sociological Variable Than Single Moms

June 18, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Why do we champion such idiocy in society?

Never mind, I know, I know. It helps elect socialists to power by promising a surrogate provider to replace fathers and husbands. At least the children don't suffer.

Wednesday Night Constitutional

June 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Do not underestimate stupid people.

We should just ban all guns...that way we can use knives.

Didn't we just leave this place?

The Real Threat of the Patent Office

June 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Conservative talk radio is once again just like the Republican Party.

Timid
Tepid
Weak Polite and apologetic

when it comes to the patent office reneging on the Washington Redskin's trademark.

"Oooo!!! Ooo!!! Gee Joe I don't know about that. That 'MAY' lead somewhere! Ooooo! Oooo!!! Slippery slope!"

Thankfully I'm not as spineless as they are and I don't care to be fake nice to the "party across the aisle" in the hopes they may someday reciprocate my politeness.

The truth is it was 100% an Obama appointee ideologue's move and it was done 100% for political purposes.

This, in it of itself, does not particularly wreak any damage. Just a political hack with a government position abusing power. However, because leftists are idiots and really don't understand economics, they have no idea just how much economic damage they've potentially caused in turning the patent office political -

What inventor or entrepreneur is EVER going to trust the patent office, let alone come up with a new invention ever again?

Oh, I know, I know, big companies and big Pharma and big chemical companies will still apply for their patents and copyrights, but the next Edison, the next Gates, the next Ford? If they're conservative (or at least capitalists which they usually are) why should they trust the patent office now with their sweat and toil?

The true damage caused by this little political whining cry baby stunt is that a name that really only offends the professional offense-seekers has now completely undermined that concept of copyrights, patents, and intellectual property.

Enjoy that freaking decline.

Hoarder Economics

June 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

While therapists and TV network producers aim to profit off of hoarders, none of them ever get around to actually solving the problem at its genetic level. They treat it, they have interventions, sometimes an increasingly-rare father figure comes in, bypasses them all, and lays down the law. But by and large the phenomenon is one that persists.

However, with my patented SAGE (TM) I have found an economic rationale or "counterargument" for what is the number one excuse hoarders use to explain why they hoard -

"It has value"

or

"I can use this in the future."

And I think for those of you that must suffer hoarders, it will prove invaluable.

Let us set aside the argument that their basement-dwelling, mold-infested, "Computer Programming Today" magazines from the 1970's really don't have any value. Let us set aside the argument that Beanie Babies don't pay dividends and provide no cash flow. And let us set aside the argument that all those clothes haven't been worn in 10 years and are obsoleted through fashion.

Let's just assume EVERYTHING a hoarder hoards has value.

So where do you store it?

Well, you have many options where to store this stuff. But the problem is that no matter where you store it, it's going to cost money to store it.

A rental facility costs rent.
Your house has a mortgage (and property taxes, insurance, maintenance, etc. even if you pay the mortgage)
And your apartment also costs rent.

And if you've ever been in realty you know that rent, housing and storage costs are measured by (what metric was that again?) oh, that's right $/square foot.

This is often the variable the hoarder's brain fails to account for. That even if their stuff did have value, which it doesn't, they are still paying for it in that they must house it SOMEWHERE. And the more stuff they have, the more they must pay. You calculate total storage cost, and the fact they NEVER sell it, the true storage costs are at least thrice any potential value of all the stuff.

Naturally, for genuine psycho-hoarders who have an emotional vestment in their junk this logical economic argument will not force them to start jettisoning their junk. BUT for the "sane hoarders:"

Great Depression generation
People brought up under poverty
A cluttery husband and pretty much every female in America (yuk yuk yuk)

this handy economic rationale may open their eyes to how hoarding junk is really costing them more in the long run...not to mention grant you that sanity of having a clean house you can finally enjoy.

Volunteers Love Themselves, But Hate the Poor

June 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I received a request from some social media internet company that wanted to do some kind of "affiliate" thing with my blog. I always entertain these offers because sometimes they actually pay money instead of "exchange traffic" or "help optimize my SEO." So I said, "sure yeah, what do you got?"

"Well, we work with non-profits" and then he lost me there because no matter what he said after that would be irrelevant and let me explain why.

Non-profits DO NOT SOLVE PROBLEMS.

They don't.

They just don't.

I've asked before for people to provide me a list of social ills non-profits have solved and am still waiting for one. Haiti is still a shithole, Africa is still a shithole, Chicago is still a shithole. racism is still abound, 1 in 5 children are starving in America..matter of fact, if you ask any of these non-profit types they're saying the situation has GOTTEN WORSE and they need EVEN MORE money.

My question is "What happened to the $4-$8 TRILLION we gave you over the past 40 years?????"

Naturally, in the private sector if you handed out trillions of dollars to solve problems and NONE of them were solved, whoever was in charge would be fired. But ahhhhh, there's the problem.

You're thinking logically again.

You see, charity, non-profit and social spend is NOT to solve the said ills of society. It is FIRST AND FOREMOST for the workers in those industries. There is no limit to the MILLIONS of spoiled brat suburbanite high school graduates who go to some third world nation to "help" which is liberalese for "free trip and ego-masturbation hiding the fact I'm a lazy 18 year old who doesn't want to work hard or study math." And they really never grow up, but instead aspire to start their own charities and non-profits (just look at the heads of any non-profit and see if they're engineers, doctors or any real contributors of society, or are instead liberal arts majors hailing from rich families). This results in an entire industry (and a significant part of government) that is nothing more than adult children syphoning money off of charitable people and taxpayers so they can play

"incompetent do-gooder" and avoid a real job.

But what pushes the non-profit world from "naive and lazy" to "full blown evil" is where they realize that if they ever were to solve the problem, then they'd be out of a job and have to find real work. This results in one of two things. Either they NEVER solve the problem, constantly begging for more money (the public schools is a perfect example of this) OR they create whole new problems (once the Keystone pipeline was kaboshed, all those environmentalists went on to protest fracking). In other words these people USE AND ABUSE the actually disadvantaged people they're claiming to help and is ultimately why 32 cents on the dollar is actually received by welfare recipients, "Live AID" made some musicians rich while Africans still suffered, and black kids in Chicago suffer a lousy education while the true Uncle Tom eats sushi in the White House.

I've said it before and I'll say it again - I have more respect for the welfareist of the welfare bums because at least they're honest. They just want a free buck and I can at least understand that on a human psychology level. But the scum that populate the non-profit world are a zillion times worse in that they not only want to parasite off of the rest of society, but DARE to claim their actions are noble and DARE to act superior, smug, and altruistic about it.

What "Asshole Consulting" Tells Us About Society

June 19, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

I was interviewed on Kerry Lutz's show yesterday and we actually had a great discussion about Asshole Consulting. Not so much the business model, but what it says about a society that there would be an actual market for a consulting company that basically dispenses advice your father, mother, teachers, and elders should have give you.

But that's just it.

What fathers?
What mothers?
What teachers?
What elders?

The sad truth is the "elders" are nothing but spoiled brat children who just happen to be 40+. Inundated with touchy feel-good 60's BS, trillions of debt in stimulus spending, and socialist poppycock, they never grew up. Everybody still gets divorced at the same enviable Baby Boomer levels. The economy has gone to pot. The young have no financial future. And NOBODY has even the faintest clue about the basics in personal financial management.

Throw it all together and you now have two full generations brought up with what can at best be considered an impaired and deficient upbringing.

People may find it despicable that I charge to provide basic "older brother" advice to the young, disadvantaged and destitute, but charging them $30 for a harsh-truth e-mail is better than the free sugar-coated lies they've been told that only destroys their lives, but spares their feeeeeelinnnnngsssss.

Good Christians, Bad Christians, and Why Atheists Hate You All

June 20, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Just a PK's view:

Job Posting

June 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Aleksey at Academic Composition is looking for people to post ads on Craig's List. The basics are thus:

In summary

Start up compensation: $20
Requirement: Creating a new GMAIL Account and using it to set up a Craigslist Account
Payment method: PayPal

Regular compensation: $1 per each day your ad stays live on the forum
Bonus: $5 per customer

For people in:
1. Minneapolis, MN
2. Denver, CO
3. Dallas, TX
4. Phoenix, AZ
5. Vancouver, BC
6. Boston, MA
7. Chicago, IL
8. Madison, WI
9. Honolulu, HI
10. Toronto, ON
12. New York, NY
13. New Jersey, New York area
14. Seattle, WA
15. Atlanta, GA
16. Jacksonville, FL
17. Philadelphia, PA
18. Pittsburgh, PA
19. Los Angeles, CA
20. San Francisco, CA

Contact Alex

academiccomposition@gmail.com www.academiccomposition.com

From a Father

June 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Average Married Dad is kind enough to write a review of Worthless and explains why every son (and daughter) needs to read it...and consequently why it should be on the NYT's best seller list.

Saturday Day Constitutional

June 21, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Over nice and under laid.

Just another nail on the coffin on the radio industry. I don't think anybody is going to be shedding a tear watching the East Coast publishers, West Coast recording studios, and all the other "elitists" who determined what kind of media would be published or not.

Picking up girls in a Lamborghini without talking (moths to the flames, boys. Moths to the flames)

How white males can claim the benefits of diversity - claim you're gay.

An interview with a man who does other people's homework for a living.

The Black Brigade has another damn fine podcast, BUT this time replete with incredibly Barack Obama impersonation. Also, they recap the Iraqi situation that I'm too lazy to look up.

Once Lost a Student Can Never Be Recovered

June 22, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Permit me to explain a non-state-teacher's-union-leftist-education-degree-approved real world, private sector observation about education:

Once I lost interest in school, I never gained it back. And that wasn't just me, but what I'd estimate to be about 95% of boys and about 50% of girls.

Once we lost an interest in school, it was damn well near impossible to ever get us excited or interested about it again.

Notice I say "school" and not "education," because what goes on in the public schools really isn't education but baby sitting, indoctrination and keeping talentless people employed as they hide behind the guise of children. But regardless of the political machinations of what the public schools really are, it is sad because it wasn't until I was about 35 did I take an interest in education or things like reading. School was a chore, all the way from my second day of kindergarten to my last day of college. 17 years of what was no less than a mental prison for an industry that managed to siphon off around $250,000 from me and my parents when it was all said and done. So when it was all said and done you basically had a boy sitting, nodding his head, sometimes barely staying awake, just to jump through one ass big hoop while I learned little to nothing along the way (except a seething hatred of teachers).

And that is the true tragedy of education today. Because just imagine if you, me, and every other boy and girl out there was not forced to go to this mental prison, but were rather invigorated, excited, and MENTALLY ENGAGED their entire K-college education? 17 years of actually looking forward to school like you do today reading a good book or studying something on teh interwebz. 17 years of not just stimulating your mind, but pushing it towards new horizons, exercising it to take on and understand new concepts. We'd have a country full of creative and literal geniuses and nowhere near the financial problems we have today.

Sadly they key vital ingredient to getting students excited about school and mentally engaged is missing - interesting, exciting, and passionate teachers.

Oh, I know, I know. Little Suzy McSuburbaniteprincess at the age of 17 declares her education major because she's "passionate" about education and wants to change "children's lives." The truth, however, is borne out in the classrooms.

Boring
Incapable

Uninspiring
Stupid
Politicized
Adult children

posing as "educators," inspiring excitement in their students about as much as Whoopi Goldberg inspires an erection.

This is the real problem - a lack of inspiring teachers.

Not to brag, but when I taught (be it economics, finance, or ballroom dancing) I made damn sure my students were intellectually entertained and engaged. I had students screaming in a mock-stock market exchange. Curmudgeony old men who came to dance class kicking and screaming, dipping their wives an hour later. And once performed an economics sermon for my class from the top of my 1985 Cutlass Supreme about the evils of brand new cars. This isn't because I'm a genius or have some kind of natural gift for teaching, I just remembered how boring it was sitting in school and couldn't dare to punish hundreds of students I had nothing personally against. Ergo, I took the time to think my class through, think the lesson plans through and create an EXPERIENCE that my students would enjoy and learn along the way.

Sadly, that's too much to ask of people who belie their laziness when declaring education majors.

The truth is that if we really cared about the children, if we really wanted them to get an education, we'd pretty much fire all the teachers, get rid of something as stupid as an a "Degree in Education," and hire people with real world experience, who also have the capacity for empathy of their students. People who just don't mouth the words "I care about the children" as they go and protest Scott Walker, but people who actually DO CARE about the children, enough to ensure those children are never bored, intellectually disengaged, or disincentived to pay attention. People with real world experience that enables them to directly tie in what's on the board to the real world and explain to the students' brains why it's pertinent to their lives, not a 23 year old child spouting off leftist talking points about global warming.

Of course this is laughably impossible in today's political climate. The sheeple believe there's no such thing as too much money for education. And the vile thieves of the democrat party posing as teachers are masters at extracting nearly a trillion a year from these rubes in exchange for the shittiest education in all of Western Civilization. Worse still, they've now had nearly 50 years ~~brainwashing~~ "educating" three generations to think a certain way, protect the hive, and vote socialist.

All I ask is that society wake up and at least admit that nobody really enjoys school and the primary reason why is we have arguably society's worst and most incompetent people posing as "teachers."

That's a Total Nazi Move

June 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

An update about the International Conference on Men's Issues where feminists and college students have made attempts to shut it down. I won't be attending, but they have moved venues and consequently have more seats available.

My only editorial on the whole thing is a simple one because it is that simple - the left hates the freedom of speech. And every day lefties better stop focusing on free Obama Phones and student debt forgiveness and instead start focusing on true, blatant, and obvious signs of evil within their ranks.

The Clarey Podcast - Crotch Rocket to the Bakken Oil Field Episode

June 23, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

The Captain's girlfriend spots a tornado at work today...while he still has yet to see one Taking a crotch rocket to the Bakken Oil field,
Racial slurs between male friends as a means of showing affection,
The problems with success,
Listener e-mails

and MORE

in this episode of The Clarey Podcast.

(You can find the archive here)

Why People Hate Mike Rowe

June 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Because he's a real man and holds men to real standards.

And that makes all the little pansified, PC boys' panties get in a bundle.

"No-kay"

June 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

Hee hee. I'm so funny!

The Economics of Robots Replacing Human Labor

June 24, 2014 | by Captain Capitalism | Link | Original Link

A commenter on my Youtube channel, though leftist, did indeed make a comment that made me think. He said that, ideally, and hopefully in the near future, robots will replace human labor resulting in everybody's needs being met. This would wipe out nearly all jobs, but would allow for and mandate a guaranteed income for most humans, even those that did not work.

Though idealistic, poppycock like this can only come from leftist 20 somethings steeped in academia and too much reality TV, there were strains and elements of his point that did make sense, or at least intrigued me, and thus merited a full thinking through. And so I donned my motorcycle helmet, put on my gloves, and hopped on the ole Cappy Capp Cycle and headed out west to think this one through.

