Stage One of ATC Self Awareness means you can ACCURATELY see and separate your thoughts, emotions, and reactions to an activating event. Mastery of ATC Self-Awareness means you dig deeper, and understand the WHY behind those thoughts, emotions, and reactions.
Here's an example of ATC being used properly at the Mastery level. Go back and reread our first example.

[Activating event] you would probably think it would be ID'ed as "wife refuses sex." This is not accurate. The activating event is "Wife expressed that I have Low Value." Our [Thoughts] were to be defensive and discredit/attack her ("I'm not __, you are just __"), and to invoke a covert contract ("I do x y z so she should want to fuck me!") Our [Consequences] were to get angry that our covert contract wasn't honored (like a typical Nice Guy), be ashamed because deep down we know its true that we are Low Value, and leave to go drink because that's how we have learned to cope instead of facing reality head on and doing something about it (OYS). If you dig deeper you realize your drinking behavior was learned in childhood by watching your father go drink after fighting with your mother. Keep digging until you find all the Why's.

In our second example, while the thoughts are positive, we see a negative Reaction occur: telling anyone who will listen, "that's MY SON!" is a validation seeking behavior.

Now go back and redo ATC for all the situations you thought of, but this time do it with honesty like above, not like at the beginning. Look deeper for the WHY behind your [Thoughts] and [Consequences]

What did you find? What did you learn about yourself?

What patterns, if any, did you notice in your Thoughts and/or Consequences across multiple examples? What Theme are they falling into?

In what ways are your Emotions and Reactions helping or harming you?

If possible, I suggest doing this with a Morpheus or Mentor or straight talking trusted friend who can keep you honest if you are the self-deluding type. The type with a lot of ego hamstering away at all times to keep you in fantasy land.

What's Next

AFTER Mastery, AFTER completely understanding WHY you are having the thoughts, emotions, and reactions you are, you would then want to start replacing poor performing thoughts like "I'm not a loser, she's a bitch" with more productive ones, like "I have x y z areas where I can improve. I'll work on y area next." as you STFU. Notice that your emotions and reactions follow that higher performing thought. You would also want to plan and shift your negative Thought Themes to more positive ones - for example, a daily mantra of "From now on I'm going to focus my thoughts on Hope For The Future. When my wife rejects me I will immediately think of ways I can improve myself instead of being negative." adjust this as needed as you start seeing change internally.

It should also be noted that similar to what is described in Athol's MAP book, momentum comes into play in these situations. Your Emotions and Reactions to one Activating event (ESPECIALLY when they are negative) can cause a chain reaction and spiral into another, worse Activating Event. Then your Emotions and Reactions to that cause another, and another, and now... well shit, everything is a complete fucking mess isn't it. So STFU and practice ATC.

In Summary

ATC is a method to identify your Thoughts about an Activating Event and the Consequences of those Thoughts. Our Thoughts are under our control.

Describe the Activating Event objectively, identify your Thoughts, and identify your Consequences (ER: Emotions, Reactions).

Use ATC anytime you’re curious about your Emotions or Reactions, when you don’t like your Emotions or Reactions, or when you’re stuck in a pattern and keep repeating one Thought Theme in response to the same scenarios.
Yesterday I was at breakfast business seminar. It was a small intimate affair about 16 people plus the speaker. 13 women 3 men. 1 gust speaker (Male). The speaker was early 30's very fit, dressed business casual but impeccable. Very well groomed. I could see all the women were completely focused on this guy and their panties were wet.

He was pitching his coaching businesses. He was explaining how he had become so successful. As he was explaining this, I realized he was Red Pill. 1. Gets up at 3 A.M. 2. Eats a healthy Breakfast 3. Hits the Gym 4. Dresses impeccably 5. Gets his hair cut regularly 6. Keeps his beard groomed. 7. Focuses on his goals and meets them. He was explaining what had motivated him to get there. He was describing a Blue Pilled person but not using the words "Blue Pill" or "Beta" His marriage had broken up and he started reading a lot of books on relationships and business success. He figured out what he needed to do and explained how he got to his present self.

I went up to him later and started asking questions. He has remarried and has been for a while but I got that he was not familiar with the term Red Pill as we use it. I was thinking that here is a guy who is Red Pilled and he doesn't know it.
Welcome Subscriber Number 10,000 to Married Red Pill: Where we build MEN and Better Marriages
by BluepillProfessor | November 16, 2016 | Link

When I started as a moderator here we had less than 2,000 subscribers. Now, with no advertising except word of mouth and the occasional guy who stumbles into the locker room from /r/Deadbedrooms or after searching "Why won't my wife have sex with me" on google, we have increased our numbers five-fold.

Please be aware of the Posting Guidelines. Read The Wiki and the required readings before posting, and be aware of /r/askMRP which is the starter sub for new guys and old guys who want to field test and refine their post before putting it on /r/marriedredpill.

We reached 10,000 in two years and look forward to 20,000 by the end of three.

All of us should be aware of the first two rules of Fight Club which is another way of saying DON'T TALK ABOUT RED PILL. However, there is an exception to this general rule in the person of Red Knighting.

Of course we know that "Black Knighting" is when you deliberately "Trigger" women by trolling them on Reddit or in person. It can be great fun.

The far more difficult task of Red Knighting is not as fun but can be far more important. Red Knights recruit others into the concept of Red Pill praexology, often by revealing in stages and over time, the true nature of women. For any prospective "Red Knight" it doesn't hurt to drop a link to Married Red Pill in an answer on another Reddit (so long as you don't care if you are banned by that other Reddit) or, even more helpfully, to Private Message men who you see might be in need of improving themselves and their marriage. A good Red Knight can lay a trail of bread crumbs for the unworthy to follow but as a man, he should usually lead by example and by demonstrating, not explicating.

In the last two years we have refined our techniques and methods from the original source material written by Athol Kay, the /r/TheRedPill and a variety of other sources. We are actually getting pretty good at this by now.

We have the solution to your low sex marriage. We have discovered the secret that motioned by Newton, weighed down Einstein and ran rings around Galileo:

WHAT DO WOMEN WANT?. It may not be obvious. It may be exactly opposite what society, and EVERY SINGLE WOMAN IN YOUR LIFE has told you over and over again, but it has the advantage of being the truth.

So to the 10,000th subscriber and to all the rest we say:

WELCOME TO THE REAL WORLD.
There is no big reveal here guys. No huge lesson to think on, just a sort of report on a trend I started with the wife awhile back that pays dividends in keeping things light and always working towards a sexual conclusion. I felt like we needed some more content, thought I'd throw out what works in my home.

We all know the power of dominance in the bedroom. I've never been one to shy from this arena with the missus. Whether it be a slap in the face, making her crawl to me in bed, or a spanking, ropes, all that cliche bull shit, I employ it all in the bedroom and she is all about it. Lately, I have begun carrying the theme outside the bedroom and into our everyday lives. I have been impressed with the results in the bedroom, but also in helping keep a less intense atmosphere around the house. The "too intense" theme is an area I continually work on for my family. I can easily go from a fun captain to a brooding captain (and the topic most likely has nothing to do with my wife or family, but a problem at work, etc.) So being aware of this habit of mine, I am always watching to insure I'm creating an atmosphere of fun on top of "excellence" in the home.

A couple things that need to be considered before you would engage in this type of behavior. You know your wife, if you have not created a mood where you can discuss anything sexually with each other confidently and without judgment, work on that before implementing these kinds of practices. (TFA has a couple blog posts dedicated to this idea. Someone can drop a link in the comments I'm sure.) Anyway, the point being is I can do these things and inherently know it will not negatively affect my marriage or wife. If you can't, but would like to, then start laying the groundwork.

So many spankings...

- So we all slap our wife's ass on the regular. It is one of the great parts about being a man. The spankings in my home have gotten intense and sudden in their application. Now, suffice is to say, my wife ENJOYS this process. However, it is also a form of legit punishment. Of course, I would never do it out of anger, but the spankings are based around the concept of "disappointment." I'm not a leather whip guy, I use my hand. She counts them out. They are HARD. Her ass is usually red after. Sometimes I snap a picture and make her put it as her background on her phone. This is usually only until about 8 a.m. the next morning when I text her to take it off. I don't want her paranoid at work. She would probably enjoy it at the end of the day, a little secret she is keeping to herself, but I feel it would ultimately stress her out too much. She really likes to present a "wholesome" appearance in her everyday life. Think lady in the streets, freak in the sheets.

This started as something light-hearted when she would forget something at the grocery. I'd be unpacking the groceries and ask after something, she'd curse, and I'd say "at least we know you won't be able to sit tomorrow." She's grin and the tone was set. However, what I didn't intend was a form of "purification."

- So my wife would carry this guilt for mistakes. Maybe not over something trivial like forgetting something at the grocery, but other mistakes. Say she paid something out of the wrong banking account or forgot an event we had to attend, whatever. She'd feel awful about it for a couple of days, even when I'd try to move her on mentally, there would be a residual feeling of "regret" on her part. The spankings have become a way for her to feel the scales are balanced and she can move on improving her marriage, business, whatever. She has expressed a feeling of "renewal" after a spanking. I never intended this effect, but in the end, it has been a great boon to something that started out as just a fun way to tease her on getting manhandled later that night.

- This culminated recently when she had a death on her side of the family. It was about a week past and I noticed she had really busted ass with me around the house. We were settling down for the night and I thanked her for being such a bad ass "this weekend." She nodded, so I continued, "that's why you only have to count to 20 tonight." She looked at me cross and said, "I don't know if I'm in the mood." I told her I understood and to get across my knees, I told her,"She had been too busy to take care of my needs sexually that weekend, and I wasn't going to stand for it." This is not me trying to negotiate attraction. I did not initiate that weekend because frankly, I wanted her to have her space. What's a weekend for me? Nothing. However, there was just a feeling in my gut that she needed it, needed to not feel numb. I know her, I've been with her for almost half of her life. I don't want to share the experience other than to say in this case, I was right. She was bouncing around the next morning like her normal self. This was following about 10 days of not quite being herself. She thanked me for pushing through her protests, "I didn't know how badly I needed you, thank you." That feeling of renewal she experiences played a role.

On the bratty wife...

- So we talk of shit tests and general negativity from our wives. While she has never been one to shit test, she does go through these "bratty" phases. It manifests itself in different forms. It could be whining about not getting her way or bitching about life being too hard, anything like that. Whenever I recognize this mood, I try to seize on it. It usually means she's got some built up frustration from somewhere in her life. I may be the source, having failed a comfort test. It could be work, the kids, whatever. I have found the best way to handle this is aggression/strength. And I mean the physical kind.

- She passes some comment along those listed above, then I'm going to overpower her physically. I'll pin her arms down and tease her, usually along the line of "what's wrong princess, you not getting the attention you need?" Her protests are usually a half laugh and struggle and I let her get half way up before pinning her again. I talk shit during it...
"Haven't you learned yet I got this shit?" or "Stop snowflake, you tickle me when you struggle." I use this to get the day back on track. It usually leads to a rough, quick session of sex and she seems to have the kinks worked out from then on. People say to be the rock her emotions break upon. I fully support that statement, but this is a little more active than that approach. This is using my masculinity to allow her to feel feminine. It is a reassurance that "I've got this" but with an active tie-in of sex and physicality.

On ownership...

- Is this pussy mine?.....No one else gets to touch it....I own you....you were made for me.....

A common theme of dirty talk in our bedroom. This is another practice that I have tried to bring from the bedroom into a more everyday occurrence. I like to incorporate it into a long kiss before she leaves for the day. It is rare that I don't get a followup text at lunch along the lines of "she's missing you." or "I feel lucky to be possessed by you." The point being the concept of ownership is powerful for my wife. There is a sense of security that inherently flows from the concept. I take care of what is mine. Therefore- she is cared for...

I further the ownership concept in the bedroom. Telling her when she can cum and when she can't. If she is on the brink of cumming, I'll tell her not to cum. As she gets closer and closer, my voice gets deeper and more urgent. But I don't stop what I'm doing. If I feel she is getting to a tipping point, I stop altogether and chastise her for almost allowing "my" pussy to cum. I'll straddle her chest and make her give me aggressive head. Then go back to the stimulation. The orgasms she has from this are almost hilarious from their intensity.

You can also tie back in the punishment side. If you want, keep going with the stimulation, but when she cum against your wishes, then administer a punishment for disappointing you. This leads to a whole second session and again, you and her are now spending that much longer together, in an intimate session. I can tell you, she will amaze you at her ability to please you and the pride she will take in her growth, attractiveness, etc. Set the standard, then push her to shatter it.

I further use these concepts in public. Sometimes on the sly, sometimes I am brazen in my application. I am looking for a blush from her. Anything to add a sense of excitement or tingles to her day or the event.

Some examples:

For Christmas with the family:

- I told her to go in the bathroom and take a picture of my pussy. I want to make sure it is prepared for me. She tried to argue. I didn't say a word. I did raise my eyebrows at her. She later said she was proud she did it. A note on pics and shit, I delete them almost immediately. My phone is tied to 3 different cloud services, it is a tool I use for work, and the like, not to mention your phone getting hacked, you lose it whatever. It is a form of respect my wife enjoys. I know people don't consider nude selfies a big deal anymore, but that sense of security goes a long way in lowering her inhibitions.

Recent Date night with another couple:

- I swatted her ass in the kitchen while we were preparing dinner. The other woman went "ow, i bet that hurt." I replied, "it's my ass, I do with it as I please, anything I please." (Wife blushed bc of the anal innuendo.) Later in the night, the two wives were teasing the other husband and I about whatever, I honestly don't remember. I stared at my wife and told her she was feeling spicy. I continued, "I wasn't aware that you needed MORE attention." She blushed from head to toe. (Be careful here, her and her buddy busting balls wasn't disrespectful. It was fun. Don't be a weirdo.) But, it did allow me to plug in a sexual innuendo in conjunction with a faux chastisement. Everyone had a blast that night, but no one had the fun I did both during and after the event.

As an aside, the other husband asked me for sex tips the next time we hung out because his wife mentioned "You guys are so free and she is jealous at how you move your wife's body around and she seems so comfortable with it all..." I asked him when the last time he threw his wife up against the wall and passionately kissed her? His reply: She's not like that. My reply: Lol, ok dude, well I can't help you.

At a recent BBQ-

- rounded the corner to an empty room with her in tow and through her up against the wall hard. It was a passionate kiss, followed by heavy groping/fingering and walked out with a cocky smile and without a word. It was a "fuck you" to her. In essence, "I can do this at will, I control the sex (false) and you want me more than I want you." She broke the bed that night. (not really, but she was an aggressive woman.) She wanted to reclaim the sexual ownership in the relationship. The point being is negative emotions can be just as possible as positive emotions. Just make sure she feels SOMETHING.

Anyway, hopefully you can gain inspiration from somewhere in this text. Plenty of these ideas are represented in SGM. I try to use them in ways that mesh well with our unique life.
“Its your life, and its ending one minute at a time.”

I want to take a moment here to talk about you, big guy. Not your sex life or your retarded relationship. You and your happiness, your state of mind. So step inside and close the door before you put your feet up on that brown leather recliner. Take a break from over-analysing the minutia in your battle of the sexes; and please, put down your quantum mechanics theory books. And yes, motherfucker, I have read all those books on the shelf over there by the window.

If you want the TL:DR now, my message is that either way you like it, what I know for sure, is that all of you here want to be happy - whatever your definition of that is. In the words of our own u/SorcererKing: “The point of your life is to be happy, assholes”.

Note: This is purposely theoretical and philosophical. If you think happiness is a crock of shit, you don’t understand it or you’re doing it wrong. It’s not a goal, a mood or a feeling. It’s a state of mind. Describing ‘happiness’ is a bit like trying to describe ‘excellence’, both a somewhat abstract, intangible, relative descriptor. u/taipanshimshon is going to follow up with some practical application and examples.

Thoughts on happiness from old people smarter than me

Lets quickly review some perspectives on happiness from people who know shit.

For Aristotle, the most notable of the metaphysical philosophers, happiness is the “highest desire and ambition of all human beings”. In his opinion, the way to reach it is through virtue. In other words, if one cultivates within oneself the highest virtues, he or she will reach happiness.

Lesson #1: Happiness is not a goal it’s a way of life
Epicurus proposed the principle that balance, and temperance were what created space for happiness. This idea is captured in one of his greatest maxims: “He who is not satisfied with a little, is satisfied with nothing.”. He also insisted in the idea that one should not work for money to be able to buy goods, but rather for the love of the work (a topic I will return to later). Epicurian states not that you must be a minimalist, instead:

Lesson #2: Your ability for happiness with little will determine your happiness in any other state.

According to Ortega y Gasset, all humans have the potential and desire to be happy. This means that each person defines their reality and what can make them happy. If a person is able to truly achieve and reach that reality, then they will be happy.

Lesson #3: You can be happy if you want too. Perception is reality Slavoj Zizek proposed that being truly happy is a matter of opinion, and not of truth. He considered satisfaction and contentment a product of capitalist values which implicitly promise eternal satisfaction through consumption. However, dissatisfaction reigns within humans because in reality, they do not know what they want.

Lesson #4: A solid mission is a prerequisite to be happy

Nietzsche challenges the concept of happiness, describing it as an “ideal state of laziness”. In other words, to not have any worries or distresses. He felt, in contrast, that contentment could only be found in having vital strength and a fighting spirit against all of the obstacles that limit liberty and self-assertiveness.

Lesson #5: Happiness can be perceived as overcoming adversity or "beating the odds"

How you experience Happiness

Our philosopher friends have established that happiness is an abstract state of mind, which combines your emotions and your thoughts; all in context of your current situation and your past experiences. Modern research suggests about 40 percent of our happiness is under our control, and the other 60 percent is predetermined by biological set points and recent life events; but that is different for every person. That means that happiness is relative, and your baseline happiness (life satisfaction or long game) and daily fluctuations (day to day variations) are unique to you. So even the homeless hobo you kicked on the street today does have periods of happiness, but, it is fair to say that his baseline happiness is a lot lower overall. Maybe today he had a better day than you because he found a better place to sleep tonight. Yeah, he was happy about that. And yet there you are, all pissed off because the store ran out of peanut M&M’s.

Lesson #6: - Happiness doesn’t come from getting something we don’t have, but rather from recognizing and appreciating what we do have.

But short term happiness from regular life doesn’t last. The hobo has just realised the new digs are a longer walk from his favourite soup kitchen, and you managed to find the peanut M&M’s in amongst the regular ones the next day, so the balance of the Universe has been restored.

Hedonic adaptation is the observed tendency of humans to quickly return to a relatively stable level (baseline) of happiness despite positive or negative events or life changes. Life events like getting married, graduating from college, or being promoted affect our happiness levels, but their effects diminish over time. The process of hedonic adaptation is often conceptualized as a treadmill, since one must continually work to maintain a certain level of happiness. If they stop making those peanut M&M’s, you will get over it eventually. Naturally happy people need less effort to stay happy, hence the treadmill concept. In contrast, happiness from internal sources tends to last – Those achievements you made at work, that contentment you feel from a job well done, is internal happiness that boosts your long term baseline.

Happiness, possessions and money

You might already be able to see the connection here to money from the treadmill concept, and there is a big disclaimer here that this following advice doesn’t apply to you if you are living from paycheck to paycheck. You fucked something up, and you need to fix that. Pay attention in finance week. For the rest of you, remember money is literally given to us for our time. So beyond basic provisioning (seriously, sort that shit out), working harder and longer to have more money is a gamble on the value of your time now, versus the value of your future time; you are selling your time now to your company on the basis that those stacks of cash will make you happier in the future. If you knew you had one year of life left, you wouldn’t really try hard for that promotion would you.

So ease up on the consumerism, it doesn’t make you happier long term - You have a nice car, you don’t you really need a nicer one. One year after you buy that nice new car with the heated seats, they are going to release the same model with new LED headlights and a panoramic motherfucking moon roof. Do you really think excitement for the moon roof (excitement level 10!) is going to last? Of course not, you will forget it is there in 6 months, and you will be back where you are now. So, don’t underestimate the importance of how you ‘spend’ your time and money now versus later. Time is money, money is time.

Lesson #7: - It is not the man who has too little, but the man who craves more, that is poor.

–Seneca

The impact of others on your happiness

One of the challenges we face is that our happiness is easily influenced by the outside world, specifically, other people. So many of us erode our own happiness by Giving Too Many Fucks, or maybe you’re looking to collect on all your covert contracts. In either case, you’re projecting what you think should happen onto others and setting yourself up for disappointment when they don’t do it. You’re butthurt disappointment reads as unattractiveness by the way, and its all making you unhappy. You can't control others, Period. Stop trying to.

DNGAF, OI and the stay plan / go plan mindset, are all designed to insulate you from your weak position of unattractiveness. But keep in mind, if you completely detach emotionally, you will limit your potential happiness by losing friends and or family. You will get a reputation, and that can be hard to shake. And don’t discount the value of increasing other people’s happiness; generosity and helping others is a well-documented source of happiness.

DNGAF is like lifting, more is better, but there is a point where if you overcook it, you are going to fuck it up completely. It is of course different for a very attractive man, girls will do what you want anyway, so you won’t need OI or DNGAF to insulate yourself from when they don’t do what you want them to do (cause that never happens). And as happiness is attractive, that makes a neat little feedback circle don’t you think?

So try to remember what it is you are trying to achieve through MRP; think a little harder about what it is you really want. You think you want your wife to give you a blowjob tonight? Sure, it feels good, but I guarantee what you really want from her is to show you how much she values you by performing a submissive act. Because the pleasure in knowing you are a man of value far outweighs the enjoyment of the act itself.

Lesson #8: - Happiness is attractive

The role of MRP and happiness

I’ll keep this short as u/taipanshimshon is going to go into more depth here.
The Red Pill is a praxeology, (the study of purposeful human actions – did you know that?), but what the typical RP subscriber (I avoided the term RP “swallowers”) experiences is a methodology or sexual strategy (i.e. the practical application). The basic assumption is that you’re here because you’re unhappy with your wife, and you came across MRP hoping to improve her “performance”. So, you LIFT, STFU and READ.

But even if you’re hardcore red, life is not all about sex, so stop fooling yourself that improving your wife’s “performance” is your end game. It’s a factor, sure, maybe 20% of what contributes to your happiness. Don’t discount the other areas of your life - go and tell a joke to your son, pick up your daughter and swing her around. Go the fuck outside and do something that makes you feel alive. Come home and surprise your wife (no, not like that). Do it because you want to. Do it because it will make YOU happy. And that is attractive.

‘Very little is needed to make a happy life; it is all within yourself, in your way of thinking.’
~Marcus Aurelius Antoninus
[FR] Implementing WISNIFG for MRP; The Gift of Your Time:

by JDRoedell | July 29, 2017 | Link

This post is sort of a fusion of important RP ideas (training wheels; per /u/88Will88). It's also an FR about just one way to put WISNIFG into practice in your marriage. I recently reread it and some things became clearer in how it applies to a marriage for a Redpill man.

1. Your time is a gift, value it as such. /u/Reddjive had a good post on this concept recently.

2. Don't be afraid of upsetting her, especially if you're laying out a boundary that preserves your precious resource of time.

3. Remind her you are the prize by being unapologetic for your decisions. You don't "owe" her anything.

This was also sort of inspired by a recent blog post of Stoney's I read. It details a nice Saturday where his girl tries to derail and grab the frame with her emotions and an undeclared expectation he didn't agree to. Stoney sets a boundary, lets the waves crash around him and all is well after it's done. You really should link your posts here, man. It's great stuff. Anyway, I digress.

We live about four hours from the in-laws. They live in a small, country town on a lake. FIL owns boats so it's a fun time when we go. Every summer we usually go there anywhere between 2-4 weekends and once during the holidays or for the random wedding. Over the past year for whatever reason, I've noticed she becomes sort of cold, moody and sometimes downright cunty to me when we are there. Not sure why, but it's been noticeably consistent to me the last handful of times we've gone there. Could be that her family stresses her. Could be that I'm enjoying myself too much (fucked up isn't it?), or she thinks I'm imposing on time with her family or whatever fucking reason females justify being bitchy about. I honestly have no idea. The reason doesn't really matter. Her sexual availability also goes down when we are there, which is not the main issue here but a compounding factor.

When we talk about men control commitment and women control sex, remember that your commitment is most easily measured by your time.

Realize your time is valuable and your best asset:

Sometime during our last visit in May I decided that this isn't how I wish to spend MY free weekends at her folk's house. I don't mind her family and can easily have a good time while ignoring the cold, bitchy behavior ... but why should I when many of these weekends are purely recreational/optional. I usually have to burn a vacation day at work (which I don't always have a lot of) to do this and I lose my weekend at home to hobby or accomplish other things so while it's not a huge sacrifice, there is some flesh given up on my part for what is ostensibly a non-essential commitment of my time.

So what is a man to do? Years ago I would have just taken it and my resentment for her would have built. I don't like resenting my wife. Initially, I thought about overtly telling her I was tired of the "out of the blue" disrespect. That would have created a shitstorm and put me in her frame. Not the way to go. Or, I could just go for the weekend and reflect her poor behavior back? Nah, also puts me in her frame and is childish/womanly.

Reward those who value your time, remove it from those who don't:

Here's what I did do; this past weekend was the third time in a row this summer I haven't gone with to her parent's house for the weekend. Two of the weekends I had other obligations and told her I just couldn't make it and wasn't going to change my plans... but I would have if I wanted. This past weekend though? ... I just didn't go. No reason. Just told her I'm not going. She was going for a high school reunion, and I took the kids camping.

About a week ago I get a text from Mrs J while at work; "Well my sister is disappointed that you aren't coming at all this summer and to be honest, so am I. I'm going 5 weekends and you're going zero.

Mrs. J; "I just wish you would try harder. For one." I ALMOST fell for this one by replying with my grievance. I held my tongue, or fingers.

Then another; "Not even half." - I don't even know what this last one meant. Ha! My response... "we can talk about it later." No DEERing, no arguing, no over-texting.

Don't fear her anger:

I sure as shit wasn't going to bring it up at home that night and surprisingly, she didn't either but if she had, I was ready to talk about it because I'm a good husband. Fast-forward a few weeks (last week) and the wife and I are taking a walk and the topic comes up again when she made a veiled, passive comment about my lack of attendance. This was the night before she was going to leave for the second trip to her parents that I wasn't going on. This time my parents were coming in town and I don't see them often so I had already told her I was staying home to hang out with them and my brothers. In a calm and frank tone I took this opportunity to clatify the matter by saying, "I enjoy visiting your folks but if I'm being honest, your attitude has sucked the past year when we go there, and if you want me to go on these extra jaunts you should start acting (my tonal emphasis) like someone who wants me to be there." Plain and simple.

She was mad. "Wow! ok!?!?", she said.

Her mouth hung open in an expression of disbelief and indignation. A verbal shitstorm of angry words and guilt manipulation ensued all the way home. I broken recorded and fogged; "I understand that upsets you but it's what I think and is part of the reason I'm not giving up my weekends and vacation time to go with you every trip. Make it worth my while by not being unpleasant." Period... your position should end here and you are ready to fog and broken record. More angry manipulation attempts followed only to be met with more fog and repeating of my stance on the matter.

The rest of the night she stomped around the house and slammed drawers and other such womanly behavior that expresses a failure to get her own way. She furiously texted her best girlfriend (BGF) to tell her what a dick I was. I can only imagine the hamstering and half truth that diatribe was. She knew that I knew that she was texting this and at one point with a smirk I said, "what does BGF have to say about your asshole husband? Probably none of her business, right?..." This was an explicit stating by me of an action of hers I didn't appreciate (airing dirty laundry with friend). She just sneered at me.

After the kids were in bed I grabbed my phone and earbuds to go for a walk (yep, another walk) and listen to some podcasts. As I'm doing this she says from the other room, "ok, I think I've cooled off enough. I was planning on 'doing stuff' tonight so let's go upstairs. Where are you going?" Her tone said, "I'm mad but will still fuck you, but consider yourself lucky." "Doing stuff" is one of her code phrases for fucking. I simply said, "I'm going for a walk." In a confused tone she said, "Ok??" I needed to get out before I accidentally engaged in her emotional storm and I considered it a short term removal of time and attention to reinforce that I wasn't messing around with my previous declaration, nor was I going to drop everything for what she considered "me getting lucky" sex.

Came back in a good mood, acted like nothing was wrong, we "did stuff" in three different positions and went to bed. She took the kids to her parent's the next morning and I had a fun weekend by myself.

Note that what I did not do is "quit and take the football home." I did not stop owning my shit around the house as retribution. I did not "cancel Christmas." I did not treat her with malice or butthurt. I did not give her a "repercussions/or else" ultimatum (the "repercussions" were already in play.) I simply made it clear, by action, that I will no longer sacrifice my precious free time for what amounts to a non-mandatory family outing if she won't value my time and presence by simply being pleasant. Would you let anyone else disrespect your time like that? No, your time is a gift. Then don't extend your wife that extra and unwarranted free pass to your commitments if she doesn't deem it important enough to give you her pleasant and feminine company. She doesn't owe you shit and you don't owe her shit. If you gave someone a present and they were rude, mocking or unappreciative you wouldn't bother to give them anything else. Your time is no different.

She hasn't brought it up again. I am planning on going with her and the kids for a weekend in August. Besides, the FIL got a new wave runner and those things are fucking fun.

Value your time and realize you don't owe her shit. your time is a gift. As Reddjive mentioned, it's not infinite, and the older I get, the more valuable to me my time gets. Don't DEER, don't get emotional. Stick to the boundary you enforce for your own time. LET HER BE ANGRY.
Glossary of Notes to Increase Lifts: The Overhead Press

by NeoTheJuanDJ | September 22, 2019 | Link

In case anybody gives a fuck, here’s a couple of tricks that I have learned over the years to increase your overhead press:

Assistance Exercises to Improve Overhead Press:

- Seated Barbell/ Dumbbell Overhead Press (develops anterior and medial delts, grip, triceps, and shoulder stabilizers to assist with pressing strength and hypertrophy of the shoulders)
- Incline Bench Press (develops upper chest and shoulder stability)
- Handstand Push-ups (develops forearms, neck and cervical spine, core, and constant time-under tension on shoulders under limited range of motion. Translates to increased balance, core stability, lactic threshold, and better drive in the press, an overlooked aspect of the lift)
- Dumbbell Side Lateral Raises (develops medial delts to assist with pressing strength and hypertrophy of the shoulders)
- Plate Front-Raises (develops anterior delts for shoulder hypertrophy and conditioning)
- Klokov Presses (develops ability to engage the quads, glutes, and core while using weaker grip width (snatch grip), and generate more power output when driving through the press aka making it harder so the “real thing” is easier)
- Cuban Presses (develops Rear, medial and anterior delts, traps, rhomboids, and shoulder stabilizers. Also increases external rotational strength of the shoulder, and mind-muscle connection, for maximal stability, activation, and structural integrity of the joint when applied to the actual press)
- Barbell Shrugs (develops grip, upper traps, and surrounding neck muscles for optimal cervical spine stability during the Overhead Press)
- Triceps Exercises (Skull crushers, cable pushdowns, Tricep kickbacks, develops maximal pressing and driving force from beginning of movement-to-lockout)
- Core Strength exercises.. eg. GHD back extensions, Planks, Oblique Exercises (a weak core is the cause of many a’failed Overhead Presses, aside from inability to retract the scapulas correct, as well as chest/lat mobility)
- Scapular-Retraction exercises (Eg. Slow-Tempo Rear-Delt Flies with a resistance band, Face Pulls, and Crossover Symmetry - Develops scapular health for healthier shoulders and spine/ injury prevention, as well as scapular positioning for maximal power output during the Overhead Press. Weak scapular retraction is one of the two main causes of a weak Overhead Press)
- Chest, Anterior Delt, and Lat mobility exercises (better positioning, more stability, better power output, better lifts)

Mental Cues of the Overhead Press:

The key to a stronger Overhead Press is a combination of strength, positioning, and speed.
You want to initiate the standing overhead press by first setting your grip width (A solid and common grip width for the overhead press is to grip the bar just-outside-of-your-shoulder-width), and utilizing a “false grip” around the bar (not having your thumbs wrapped around the bar. This allows for better muscle activation in shoulders, increased pressing strength and wrist angle more optimal for maximal power output, as well as maintenance of shoulder and wrist health in the long term). Now that you have your grip width set, and using a “false-grip”, while holding this position, you want to retract your scapulas (by pulling your shoulders back, and down). Now that your grip is set, scapulas are retracted, you now want to brace your core, keeping a neutral spine. You should be rock-solid and stable. Now that your grip is set, maintaining a neutral spine, you now want to take a deep breath, pulling into your diaphragm, hold it, and brace your core. You are now ready to engage the press.

As you engage the overhead press, the first thing you want to do is to maintain a neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core. This will allow you to create as much tension in your body as possible, which will translate into increased power output, because you can now increase the force you apply as you drive through the bar. With a neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core, you want to drive through the bar to lockout, maintaining constant tension on your delts, and spine completely vertical to the floor (without leaning back). Keeping a neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core, as you drive through the bar to lockout. Once you reach full lockout, maintaining a neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core, you want to feel as if you are as immovable as you were in your “set-up” position. Once in the lockout position, maintaining an immovable frame of neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core, you now want to reverse-engineer the everything you did for the concentric portion of the lift now for the eccentric portion of the lift (negative). This means neutral spine, scapulas retracted, core braced, while simultaneously flexing your quads, glutes, and core from lockout, slowly lowering the bar using triceps keeping constant tension in the anterior delts, as the bar lowers, to the starting position or “bottom” of the press.

Reasons you may be failing and how to improve:

Positioning, timing, and speed, are important factors in the Overhead Press, but you also want the strength to be able to do so under maximal load. As with all kinetic chains, there is always a weak point and the overhead press is no exception. If you struggle with producing enough force to create the inertia to move the bar at all off the chest/starting position, your shoulders, upper chest, triceps, and core may be weak. If you struggle with getting the bar past the “sticking point” (half-way point on the concentric portion of the lift), your shoulders, triceps, and core may be weak. If you are all over the place and not “solid” or steady throughout any portion of the overhead press, you probably have a weak core need to strengthen that to improve. Also, keep in mind that doing lat, chest and anterior Delt mobility, having a solid and well-practiced “set-up” position consisting of optimal grip width for you, neutral spine, constant scapular retraction, and driving through the bar by flexing your quads, glutes and core throughout the entire press - will basically guarantee you lift more weight, because instead of wasting energy by fighting to stay in proper position, you’ll instead be in proper position and using all of that energy to focus on maximal power output through the kinetic chain. Again, these are common points where guys hit plateaus, and how they can overcome them with the overhead press. Will post again next week with the Olympic Lifts.
An open letter to the wives whose husbands "bother" them for sex

by RPAldernate42 | June 1, 2015 | Link

To the wives whose husbands "bother" them for sex:

Many of us find your sense of entitlement to all of the other things a marriage has to offer truly frightening... all he wants is sex. Your pussy is not a unicorn pussy; there are thousands out there that feel basically the same, but there is something about you your husband likes. There is something about you your husband suffers through in the hopes of maybe-trickle sex in the future. In return for this, you spit on him, and demonize his libido.

Congratulations, you are the jailer in a Stockholm syndrome scenario.

The fact is that you got married with the understanding that your husband would provide financial security, social stability, and children for you; that your future husband would stay with you and only you during the duration of that marriage (which typically is regarded as "forever") and that he would be with you and you alone, in all things, emotional AND physical. (faithful.)

If he were to step out of the marriage (without your "consent") you'd divorce him in an instant. I mean how can he possibly want to be with anyone else when he has you -a sexless shell of the woman he married?

No, the divorce comes not because of the sex with someone else (you don't like sex, after all... otherwise you'd be having it), the divorce comes so you can cut your losses and get your share of the marriage without the marriage. The divorce comes because he may be sharing resources and financial security and social stability with some other woman. This is amplified if you have kids.

However, if you stepped out of the marriage on him, on some level you'd expect him to divorce you as well, even though you'd attempt to rationalize it in some way, you'd still expect him to stay with you and you'd be horrified if he tried to leave you following that dalliance because he supplies that financial security and that social stability you married him for.

But he's done nothing wrong but want to fuck his wife.

If he stepped out, he'd simply say, "my wife doesn't fuck me enough, so I fucked another woman." That's it. It's that simple. But we all know, wives who don't fuck their husbands don't respect their husbands, they don't actively listen to their husbands, they loathe their husbands touches, caresses, kisses, and hugs.

The problem, and you know it doesn't end there, is that his heart, as it were, will follow his dick. And this scares the shit out of you. But why should he sacrifice his energy, time, effort, and resources on a woman who does not respect his side of the relationship. Here's a woman...
he's with, now, who fucks his brains out, sucks his dick, and makes him feel like a man... he's in bed with her now... why the fuck would he leave that paradise to return to a sexless harpy who literally sucks the energy and resources out of him?

Marriage is an exchange, at it's core. He chooses a life-mate, sacrifices his ability to fuck whomever and whenever so that he could fuck only you. Something about you, made him want to fuck you and ONLY you. That was the deal on marriage day. That was the person he wanted to marry. That was the package you advertised. Now you decided that we don't support that model any longer and all he gets is what you offer.

You changed the deal, and you wonder why he resents you for it. He makes the sacrifices, and you can't even get his dick wet a little bit.

And I'm not 1-sided: Your husband probably changed on some level:

He probably doesn't lead He probably doesn't make decisions He probably just lets you run things instead of being the captain of your ship (the household/family) He probably let his body go a bit (and you probably did too) He probably isn't active any more He probably lacks hobbies He probably doesn't spend time on his own, and instead... He probably clings to you, expecting the extra attention to lead to sex... He probably acts needy and validates his emotions through you (you're sad, he's sad, you're happy, he's happy....) He probably has lost most of the things you recognize as the man you married...

In effect, he has become yet another child, you have to raise. I understand that.

But the fact remains, he can only be pushed so far before he does one of two things (and you have no way to direct this course:)

He will either:

A. Simply call it a day an divorce you. Simple as that. He will decide that no amount of divorce pay-rape forced by the state is worth being in a sexless marriage when he knows he can get better elsewhere. You don't want this, but probably can't stop it.

OR

B. Decide that he no longer needs sex with you. He won't look elsewhere (if he is a man of value and honor) but he will stop trying. He will stop paying you affections and attention as well; no more hugs, cuddles, kisses, "how's your day?", etc. He will detach and basically become a monk moving through the house around you. In this, he will find peace and fulfillment in doing things for himself and only himself.

He will start working out and getting in shape. He will start looking better and feeling better about himself. He will start dressing better and you will be simultaneously aroused and alarmed by it; his body is looking good and he grooms well and you know you fucking like it. But now you begin see that he is way more attractive than you and he can pull younger women... and you're just a post-partum shrew who has replaced your attachment to your husband with your children. You realize he's in shape and you're not. You realize that in his mid-thirties, he is at his sexual attractive peak... and your sexual attractiveness is fading quickly. You'll panic, you'll harp at him, you'll try to make him stop... because ultimately you need him more than he needs you.

He will start ignoring your shrill requests and harping and complaints. He will spend more time away from you, doing his hobbies, hanging out with his friends, and noticing that younger women pay him attention in public. He will begin flirting with those younger, more attractive women (who he knows will drain his balls) and sometimes he will do it in front of you. He won't care what you think; in his head, you lost that ability to control that when you locked the pussy up. He is basically training himself to be single again. Your panic and internal dread is so high now: he is literally pulling younger women, doesn't try to have sex with you any more, and ignores your arguing and bantering.

"Is he cheating?" "Has he cheated?" "Why is he such an asshole?" You will ask these things to yourself, but when you look in the mirror, you'll realize he's not the asshole. He got pushed too far, didn't get the wife he married any more and is probably going to leave you.

This nightmare of emotions may last for a year... a year of a man who is looking better, acting better, and being better and you now have no sexual or emotional access to him. He won't allow it until you allow him the access he wants.

In the first option above, he just leaves, cuts you off, and probably leaves you more relieved in the short term, but lonely in the long term; dating is hard at your age, especially with kids. Most men who you'd like to be in relationships with are taken or are never going to be interested in a mid-thirties single mother. Instead you end up snatching up a guy who is largely ignored by younger women. You'll fuck him early and often, get married, and then realize that you married a guy far worse than your ex-husband. There's many reasons why he wasn't acting like other guys his age and pulling younger women. He can't, and you are discovering those reasons day in and day out. You stop fucking your new husband, and the cycle continues.

But the second option horrifies you; you see his positive changes and what he is capable of and that he may send that energy towards a younger, hotter, girl who regularly sucks his dick, fucks him silly, and occasionally gives him anal. You may get a temporary respite when you tell yourself that he still stays married to you, but you know, that thread is running out fast.

So he's basically a married bachelor at this point. No sex from you, but still married. And your marriage feels like it's on a balance where you have a choice:

On one side you can realize that you like what you see in the new husband, remember that he is your husband, suck his dick and fuck his brains out... reminding him that he is married and if he wants to have mind blowing sex you are there for him. Suddenly your sexual menu opens up and he is thrilled... and for good reason: he is fucking the woman he married like the girlfriend he knew! The upshot: he stays happy, which makes you happy, and he will literally do anything for you. But know this: he will be forever be changed. He will recognize trickle sex, he will recognize when he is being gamed by you to simply retain him, he will never settle for "fine." He will always want more. But he will always want more from you.
The other side sees you continuing to take him for granted and he takes his new alpha body and his new alpha attitude and leaves you, divorces you, and showers any number of younger, hotter, and sexually-adventurous women with his money, time, energy, and happiness. Meanwhile you resent him but he doesn't care... and you know you missed the fucking boat.

And maybe none of this is true and doesn't apply to you... but why take the chance of all that? Why not remember that your husband gives to you and you don't return the one thing he really wants?

Your pussy can literally save a marriage. Remember that.
Stop initiating at bed time
by Alphaphux | December 10, 2017 | Link

We're told that you should initiate all the time and only accept hard no's. When you get the hard no you don't act butthurt but you remove attention (go and do something else).

This is great unless it's 9:30pm, you both jump into bed, it's a school night and you roll over with the "how bout it moves". You my Beta friend are in a no win situation if you get a hard NO now. If you get rejected you have 2 choices, lie there with a hard on brooding (which she will pick up) or "go and do something else" which she will perceive as a butthurt move unless you are really good at faking the "I just can't sleep now sweetheart routine" - and believe me you aren't.

You are you're own enemy doing this shit, you are painting yourself into a corner you cannot possibly get out of.

As you run the MAP sidebar and lift your woman will become more attracted to you so kino her and show affection constantly during the day, initiate only when you can legitimately go and do something else when/if you get the hard no. Every time you show butthurt at being rejected you take 1 step back for the 2 steps forward you have been working so hard to get, and there is only a small chance you can get out unscathed if you're rejected when you're cornered in the standard bedtime show.

If she initiates at bedtime beauty take it and show her how much you appreciate it but save the sexy eyes and kino for other times. If you truly are retarded and only know how to initiate in bed try first thing in the morning - at least you can say "Ahh well if he's up I'm up" and you can go have a cold shower.

The takeaway - Early in the MAP don't initiate at bedtime, you're only going to hurt your progress...

EDIT: This is advice for guys early on in MRP Building your slut: Part 1 - Anal

by red-sfpplus | November 11, 2019 | Link

I am sick of these faggot posts on here. Lets build some fucking men who fucking know how to fuck.

You wanna build a slut or two? Lets do that.

Part 1 is going to be about, yep you guessed it: Anal.

So look at you, you fuck your woman. Great. You wanna think you are a D/s with her. Who fucking cares. You want to fuck her shit hole? Great. Here are the steps. LPT: This works better if she wants to actually get fucked in the ass. You have to typically not be a faggot for this to be the case, so go sidebar and be at 1xBW on all big three at least first.

Anal is all about the prep work. Shit comes out of your ass naturally. It doesn't go in naturally, therefore learning to control the anal sphincter is the whole reason we have to TRAIN this muscle.

Step 1 is you have to mentally commit to a 90-120 plan of anal training her AND you. Anal is all about relaxing the muscles and getting use to the feeling. This takes time and effort.

Tools you need are an anal training kit, quality water based lube and an enema ball.

You need to get her use to the external stimulation first.

The process goes like this: (I am going to assume you are ok with eating ass.) If you are not, you might as well stop reading here. You need to first get her comfortable to external stimulation. This includes your tongue and a very wet finger. You need to start doing this every single time you have sex, but under no circumstances do you enter yet. After you have trained the initial reaction of touch away from the area, you are free to start going for insertions. There are two positions I would recommend. Her on her back with her legs up with her hips on the edge of the bed and doggy. Make sure her ass is high and head low.

I prefer the back to start. You will be able to see her face, gauge her level of fun and it honestly makes her feel a little less like a whore in that position as well. As you move into insertion training it is important for either you, or her to provide clitoral stimulation via a wand during this process. It keeps her mind off it and helps her relax. It also builds an Oxytocin connection between pleasure and anal, which will benefit you later.

Keeping your nails clean and maintained is critical if you are going to do this. You also need to be prepared to see shit on your finger, and possibly smells as well. This will be fixed later on, as you progress up the ladder to the point of using an enema ball before butt play. The anal trainer kit I linked has one plug that slides over your finger. This will make it feel nice and smooth inside her vs you finger.

Lots of lube, and go in slow. DO NOT fuck her ass. The point right now is to just put it in, and hold it. This is going to start training her anal sphincter to not want to clamp down when this happens, which will allow you to move onto more fingers, etc. This process should be done for 3-5 weeks, as often as possible. DO NOT get ahead of yourself and try a bigger plug or your dick. YOU HAVE to invest the time to properly train her sphincter to be able to relax, and allow her brain to build that muscle/brain connection so she can relax it herself.

If you are interested in butt play for yourself (you should be) now is the time to start experimenting yourself. Do it to yourself and get used to the sensations. What you feel is basically what sees feels. Being able to empathize and coach her thru the feelings goes along way. Once she is taking that finger like a boss, I move to an actual butt plug. I do not go for multiple fingers yet. The reason plugs are a thing is cause they go in there and sit. Their job is to train the sphincter.

At this point I would move onto putting a plug in her and then fucking her vagina. Let her feel the DP sensation, and be prepared to have your mind blown as well. Do this for another 2-3 weeks. At this point she should easily be able to take a finger and a small plug in her with no issues and leave it in there for 10-20 minutes at least. Again, make sure lots of lube!

The next phase is to move her to the medium plug. This is where I start to consider using the enema ball to get clean first, as this plug is going to be longer and thicker. You will have to gauge her interest in that. Make sure you use warm water, and again I would highly recommend doing it to yourself first so you understand the process. LPT: As it is inside you and your squeezing the ball to get the water inside you, DO NOT let go of the ball until you take it out. If you do the vacuum in the ball will suck everything out of your ass into the ball and it will be nasty and hurt. Keep the ball compressed until you pull it out.

Before you move onto the final plug and/or your dick you need to get the enema part figured out. Getting your shit pushed up hurts, and it will kill all your progress.

NOTE: NO WHERE in any of this have I said "fuck her ass" All you are doing is putting something in there and it stays. We are still training, she is not ready for in/out penetration yet.

Once you have gotten to the enema part, and the large plug and we are good there, you can fuck her with it in there, and she can have it inside for 15-20 minutes you are free to go back to fingers and go for two.

Now is your chance to ever so slightly "fuck her" ass with your fingers. SLOWLY! there should be 1-2cm of movement TOPS. That is about 1/2 the length of your finger between your knuckles. LOTS OF LUBE!

By this point, you should be 90-120 days in the process of training her.

When you believe she is at her sexual peak of the month, I would go ahead and plan to try for penis insertion at this point. You will need to warm her up down there. Start with a finger, to a plug, fuck her with the plug. You will be able to gauge if her ass is "in the mood" or not. There are nights when my girls ass is DTF, and nights where it is not. YOU HAVE to have the self control to not fuck and ass that isnt in the mood to be fucked.
Your goal for your first insertion should be to just simply get it all the way in and hold it. SHE IS NOT ready to be fucked in the ass yet. Slide it all the way in and let it rest in there. Allow the sphincter time to learn the size and sensation of it.

By this point, if you have both mentally and physically prepared her for this, my girl actually with orgasm when I slide it in her ass.

Do not ever make it about fucking her ass. You are fucking her. So have your fun for a min or two, pull out, use a baby wipe to clean yourself off to be safe then go back to fucking her and finish anywhere but her ass. This is important for the first few sessions. We are mentally training her to be a slut, not a whore and there is a difference.

Hygiene is important. Clean yourself. Never go straight from anal to vagina or oral, even though they do it in porn. A2M and A2V is not good.

Once you have anal trained her, you should have a girl who actually loves to get fucked in the ass, which is honestly rare. The vast majority of women who do anal do it but don't like it.

All of these steps can be applied to you as well. Like I have said before, anal on a man feels great (no homo)

And if you really want your mind fucked, put a small plug in your ass, while you fuck her in hers its awesome.

Additional Notes:

Wearing plugs in public is hella fun. Make sure to take a pocket sized bottle of lube with you. Keep it in her purse. You will need to lube every now and again as the outside will dry out from time to time, especially if dancing - not that I would know.

Plugs can easily be worn for multiple hours (personal max is 5) however, do not forget to re-hydrate down there every 45 mins or so.

Combine plugs with remote controlled vibrators. Egg for her, cock ring for you.

If you are going to wear them out - keep the size pretty small. You do not want a 3/4'' butt plug up your ass all night, but the #1 size will be a nice fun treat - esp. if doing something active like dancing.

Too large of plug can impact erections. So again, keep the size small. It isn't about gaping her/your ass, but adding pressure to either your prostate and/or her g-spot. Yes - you can hit her g-spot via anal.

Anal vibrators are a thing for a reason. Try them.

Never use glass and/or crystal type plugs. Always use flexible ones, only porn stars who are not doing it for pleasure use gem plugs. Only use flexible, silicone type plugs with a taper handle so it conforms to your ass cheeks. This is nice for walking around/public use.

Never stick anything in an asshole that isn't attached to your body, or with a handle. It will get sucked up and lost and you will be going to the ER to have it fished out otherwise.

Have fun, and that's all for now.
There, for the grace of RP, go you by Countpudyoola | March 22, 2019 | Link

So, since I just killed a direct link with no analysis on askmrp I thought it a good time to grab a recent bluepilled man's example from another sub to show what we mean and how analysis demonstrates understanding.

We don't care about the clueless out there on other subs.

The point is we want to know that YOU are getting it. And analysis demonstrates that one way or another.

Also, no link needed (will only encourage brigading <both ways> banning, etc.. just quote the relevant part or use NP)

So on a sub related to the exposure of pyramid schemes this poor clueless beta comes in to tell us his story as a warning.

My wife got into Herbalife two years ago and I was always very hesitant about her doing so because of what I'd heard but granted I did not know much beyond what I'd heard and some cursory reading. Every worry I stated she shut down with what I now know is the prepared drivel they tell their people to say.

So at this point he already knows it's "prepared drivel". Or if he didn't, let's assume an alert leader would at least do his own independent fact checking. You don't need to do this with every first officer decision but for fuck sure when a lot of money, time and effort is on the line: you quality check. Is that what he did?

I didn't want to be an oppressive partner and I didn't want to shut down her dreams so I entertained it and gave my blessing for her to use some of our shared savings to start this as she is a personal trainer and has a good number of clients. We did not have a lot saved up, but were getting close to our target for a new home and renovations, and I felt fairly confident in her ability to earn.

Wow. So no. Joe Beta takes her drivel, that he already assumes is such and agrees to "bless" her with the funds. Mind you, these were not a lot but apparently close enough for a new house...renovations...etc. well, in my book that's actually alot. Maybe they were rich (we'll see in the end).

And where does this confidence come from when he knows to begin with it's drivel?

Self-delusion...my guess. How many wives worry about being oppressive in this situation? If a "partner" is about to spend money you've earmarked for other purchases to chase something about on ounce of independant research would reveal as a pyramid scheme? But that is what mainstream, oprafied acceptable husbands do. Not get in the way between her dreams and the money.
For a year she was doing well and seemed really to just care about the clients and helping them, and she seemed very happy and her clients were too. I noticed more money was going but it would be replenished a week or two later, so I stopped looking as I felt myself becoming paranoid.

So, on the surface it looked like it was breaking even. How long are we going to roll with this? Diligence in an investment is just that, not Paranoia. Paranoid would be your mindset or what you are hamstering to make your natural (and smarter) gut "unease", mollifed.

You are only paranoid IN HINDSIGHT.

In this case he would have been proven "PERCEPTIVE".

After that first year, I felt things change and her working longer hours and stockpiling product. I asked her about it and for the first time ever in our marriage, she told me to "fuck off" in a complete stress outburst, for which she apologised and it wasn't a big deal but was the first sign of stress.

Yeah, no red flags there. The first time he blindly demonstrated she could walk over him with a few placating remarks and assurances. She's lost respect for him as a leader. At this point it's her show, which completely explains why she'd tell a subordinate to fuck off. That's her true view of him bleeding out. It's not a shit test. This guy was failing fitness tests for a year by this point. He was just an annoying PASSED OUT DRUNK captain who raised his head long enough to question her piloting.

So that was the first year. It gets much much worse.

Over the last year, she has completely drained our savings and put us five figures in debt, and cancelled all of our standing orders so as to be able to cover product order costs which resulted in fines and huge bills I wasn't aware of at all. She even had one of her friends from Herbalife cook up a fake document that stated our account was fine, which actually led to me being arrested after going into the bank and providing false documentation without knowing it. I was since released and was subsequently not charged after being confronted with the truth and being obviously shocked and unaware.

I would argue at this point, to go this far she may even be seeing him as an Omega male or completely irrelevant. I mean she raped their bank account for at least a year or two with him taking bullshit as an answer. As well as telling him to fuck off when cornered. Her respect for him and their family is no where in the equation. There's people at her work willing to collude with her to commit a crime.

INTENDED TO PURPOSEFULLY DECEIVE HIM

YET, IS WORSE! AS IT LANDS HIM IN JAIL!

for an indeterminate amount of time. I'm sure she's totally going to be repent her deception and the collateral damage at this point going forward...
My wife has now left me, and has moved in with her sister, and at some point had her name removed from the shared billing of the house leaving me in the complete debt. I have had to consult solicitors due to the fact this was also done illegally, but I can't afford to go through a whole case, not least against the woman I love who just wanted to start a side income to help us both.

This is a man zeroed-out. He went from Beta to Omega to a patsy, a thing to use.

Because she was evil?

Because the MLM scheme was evil?

Or because he didn't tell her NO from the start?

We know from experience that telling a woman NO sometimes is not only what you want...but what they need in order to respect you.

From his sad little eyes he would have been squashing a dream that instead ACTUALLY BECAME her nightmare which then she foisted onto him as is now his to own.

So did he rebound into someone we'd see stumbling in ...full blown anger rambo?

Herbalife has absolutely ruined our lives, and through the uplines sending my wife upwards of 20 emails a day with sentences like "Make the sale however you can, flirt with them if you have to" or "Put yourself out there as single, and indicate that working with you is going to be long term" she shut off any shared approach we had to business or life, and I've almost completely lost her. I am losing my home, I'm quite literally surviving on a meal a day, and I'm going to have to sell my car which I need for work. I am going to turn this around, somehow, and I am going to sue the living shit out of Herbalife for their practices but at this point in time I am completely defeated.

I'm very sorry for this long post, and perhaps you can see why I've thought about not posting it many times, but please do share my story with others who are getting into this situation because there is nothing in this life worth this damage and pain. I am broken."

Yep.. It's the company's fault. If she threw her lot in with a company hinting at selling your attention for money, and she got as desperate as letting him take the fall while cutting and running I can bet real money that she went above and beyond with "clients" and "coworkers" whom not only did she respect, but took (bad) advice from. No where in here is the blame aimed at the chick who killed your puppy and hung it around your neck. Nope, it was the gun. This is a poor person with supreme oneitis, left with no life and no self respect.

So hopefully he grows enough of a pair to get legal advice...then if he's lucky he could see the RP light of day.

Get a handle and control of your finances if you don't already. It's not about trust. It's not about paranoia. It's simple accounting 101. You can suck at math and still know basic addition and subtraction. You may not be the one good at picking stocks or investments, but you can know + is better than -.

Learn to say NO.

Her "dreams and goals" should compliment...not cost...the family, otherwise they're just "bad ideas".

If risk is involved with any idea: you research until you fully understand what is not only at stake, set goalposts along the way and continually evaluate. Finally if you can't wrap your brain around how it is a good idea to begin with then you punt.

A few years ago I thought it would be a good idea to invest in real estate (rental property) instead of the stock market and was prepared to do the work.

Problem ended up being that I live in a renter's state with horrible taxes for landlords and I live far enough from other states that they are out of the question. Where I live you essentially need to be able to purchase around 4 properties up front for it to pay for itself. A lot of steps were taken in that direction. Still, even with some penalties I reinvested my money back in the stock market. (NOTE: not saying this specific situation is the same or applies to any wanting to do this... ) and hey...guess who had clear reservations about it and let me know without "guilt" or feeling like they were squashing my dream?

Mrs. CountP

She wouldn't be my XO if I couldn't rely on her as a second set of eyes.

In the end the impartial numbers won.

Imagine for a second this guy said no and his worst fears came true?

She left him then over him saying no? How in the world would he not be in a 1000% better situation now.

More likely if he was rp aware (or natural) she'd have just thanked him a year or two later as saving her from herself. Or even if not...that's her emotion to manage...it was still a shit idea.
Several RP truths hammered home here:

- She's not mine, it's just my turn
- Feelz not realz
- Open hypergamy

I have a side business and got a small job in my wife's home town where she grew up. She hadn't been back in decades but has a couple friends there. It's almost a half day drive away. I figure we make a night of it and she can visit her friends.

We get there. Her 2 GFs have a fancy car for them to ride around reminiscing before we all go to dinner. One stop is wife's childhood house where she grew up. There's a guy outside as we pull up and stop. Turns out he lives there now. He shows us all around the house. He says "come back if you know any single women." We leave.

Eventually it comes out that one of my wife's friends is single and the other friend suggests we go back and pick up the Lone Alpha. I let this happen. My wife is easily +4 SMV on both of her friends. We head to dinner and Lone Alpha starts telling stories about the house my wife grew up in. His game is tight. My attempts to redirect the conversation fail, as tears of emotion well up in my wife's eyes about the renovations he was doing on her childhood room and the structures that daddy built etc. My wife is showing him IOIs.

I realize that I allowed Lone Alpha to the game table who had a Full House, literally my wife's childhood house, that he did not have to earn - I handed it to him. It was like my being on the 1 yard line or getting forced against the ropes in boxing. He was almost unbeatable. I didn't panic, and remained calm.

Eventually my wife goes to get contact info from the lone alpha in front of me and her friends. I saw this coming because of intense feelz generated by the "synchronicity". She couldn't help herself. I also read that story about the PUA (Mystery?) who got Scott Baio's girlfriends phone number while Scott was in the room. I am prepared.

Wife: "so... email addresses? Phone numbers?"

Me: (looking directly at Lone Alpha and the two girl friends while I laugh) "I think she likes him"

Me: (to Lone Alpha with two girlfriends attention) "hey if you want to take her off my hands, then I'll throw in the ring for free" (pointing at my wedding band with a big smile) ...laughs all around, situation defuses, power shift.

At this point Lone Alpha knows I have to go work later that evening and having attracted my wife effortlessly by circumstance, he's trying to isolate and has a possible opening. I can't even blame the guy.

One of the girl friends says (EDIT: to me) "why don't you take her with you?" (Pointing to my wife.)

Wife: (makes a snotty face about my previous statement) "why don't you take her?" (pointing to her other friend)

Me: "that's okay, there will be plenty of women already there." (everyone knows its true)

I had already cut off the booze, then organized the check and ordered the car. We all get in. It's suggested that wife and I get dropped off first, but then Lone Alpha would know what hotel my wife was in... alone. I tell the driver to take Lone Alpha home first. Lone Alpha wants to leave a business card. We say our good byes. He doesn't remember my name of course. He goes inside the house to get the business card. I tell the driver to leave before Lone Alpha returns. - Game. Set & Match. Hail Mary recovery pass received in the end zone. Barely.

None of this is anything I am proud of, but unlike Scott Baio, I remained present. No one has Lone Alpha's identity except me, because I was not drinking and remember when he casually mentioned the name of his business.

The drunken girls carry on when the car pulls away, as if nothing had happened. Then wife and I get to hotel alone and the shit tests start:

"Why did you say that about leaving me? You really embarrassed me in front of my friends." (Feminine Imperative that it's perfectly acceptable for her to request contact info from a man she just met in front of her husband and friends and yet her hamster believes that I am the one who embarrassed her.)

Me: ignore/DNGAF/STFU and carry on with logistics and subject changes. She pushes away my kiss. I give her a firm hug and tell her I love her and then go off to do my job. (At a social event starts late at night.)

I am shaken not stirred by my ignorance. I recovered from a nearly terminal fuck up - Lone Alpha had a pocket full of unearned nuclear feelz that I handed him, and my wife was powerless over those feelz. She's not mine. It's just my turn. Right alpha, right time. Wrong husband - RP informed and game aware. Wife's hamster would have been saying "I can't believe I'm doing this..."

If he pumped and dumped her, then I have to next/ghost her and send divorce papers, which doesn't end anywhere else except the cougar carousel for her, as a post wall decliner. My actions were like grabbing a child away to keep them from running in front of a speeding truck. Men are romantics. Women are hypergamous, and ruled by feelz not realz.

I knew since I removed her from the tornado of emotion, she'd forget almost immediately - out of site out of mind like the simple minded animal that she is. AWALT. And sure enough, the next morning everything is totally fine. I carry on as if nothing happened. She loves me. Right now.
The next day there was a certain calm that I hadn't experienced yet. Wife was utterly subservient in all interactions. I think she knew exactly what was going on and so did her girl friends. She appears covertly relieved. Lone Alpha underestimated me, which means I still have lots of work to do.

I've internalized much RP truth and it all makes sense based upon my past, but to see it in action and notice the difference in my response is worth sharing, because I was no longer confused ("I can't believe she did that!") and I was no longer angry ("what a bitch!") instead I thought "oh, she's a woman." Never forget that.
Dread Level 3: Build a life apart from your wife.

I've been on this RP odyssey for three years now and am finally reading BPP's book, which is very enjoyable. Now, the chapter on dread level 3 is about two pages. This seems to jive with the amount of coverage this topic gets in these subreddits at large. Comparatively we spend much more time talking about lifting, leading, shit tests, comfort tests, stoicism, game, being fun, emotional control, sex, finances and every other related topic.

Level 3 is probably taken for granted because even most blue pillers are already doing it to some extent. Hunting trips, biking, hiking, playing in a band, going to bars, teaching classes, playing softball, video games, magic the gathering, whatever.

Level 3 must not be overlooked. True dread involves two ingredients: capability and opportunity. Many BP guys have opportunity by doing the things they normally do in life. They just lack the capability. It's "safe" for them to be out in the world because their wives know nobody finds them attractive with their bald spots, slight gut, cargo shorts, and dad sneakers. The Dread fails to ignite.

Conversely, the red piller who is excelling at dread levels 1, 2, 4, and 5 is very attractive: he's jacked, leading the family, in total control of his emotions, dressed to the nines. There is no doubt about his capability to pull women. But if he's slacking on level 3, he lacks the other major ingredient of dread. He has no good opportunity and his wife knows it. He is an alpha on lockdown. The Dread fails to ignite.

Capability + Opportunity = Dread

Dread levels 1, 2, 4 and 5 build capability

Dread level 3 is opportunity

You can dick around with the exact ratio of 1, 2, 4 and 5 and the equation still holds. But without 3 it doesn't "obtain." Does not compute.

Being attractive is not the end state. Sex will improve in quality because of attraction. Rejections will be less because of attraction. Behavior will improve. Your home will run like a well oiled machine. You will have fun. But without the ignition of fully realized dread, animalistic desire will not materialize.

A lion must wander in the jungle if he is to truly be king.

When you first start becoming attractive, you wife's hamster will do you a huge favor and invent some imaginary opportunity for you. She will hallucinate a jungle full of new Oneitises growing from the trees. Fully realized dread will happen for a while, and you will think you've made it. But eventually without continued, solid DL 3 game she will calm down and realize that it was a false alarm. He may be a lion now, the Family Alpha, but there's no danger that he'll leave. She will be legitimately happy, freed from the resentment of having a pathetic bluepilled husband. But that base instinct to chase and cage a king will be untapped.

Your job may be an asset here. I know realtors who seem to do very well because they escort women through vacant houses all day. Their social media is active and full of female "clients" who comment on their posts. If your job requires you to travel out of town, that is also obviously big opportunity.

My job is not like this. My wife has hamstered my job away as "safe" because it's "just a bunch of nerdy men in cubicles." It's not really, but in her mind that's how it is and that's all that matters.

The gym started off as a good source of dread, and maybe still is sometimes, but it's also now "safe" simply because it's so routine and hamstered as "just a bunch of sweaty men."

To succeed in Level 3 you must answer the question: What kinds of things would you be doing if you were single? How would you be meeting new people? Where would you go? What would you do?

You can build an awesome train, but it only goes so far without burning high grade DL 3.
This weekend Wife and I were out running errands, as is quite common. Instead of the usual "Where do you want to go to lunch?/I don't care, wherever you want" game. Or, the boring just-go-where-we-always-go. I pulled into a new place. Wife likes familiarity, and immediately shut down the idea with "I don't want to go here/It will take too long/It might not be good" whining.

I zipped through the range of responses I could think of:

- Placate: "Oh my bad, I'm so sorry, let's go to $Your_Standard_Place." Nope, fuck that. Bluepill me might have done that.
- Rambo: "Sit in the car then." Nope, I'm not an asshole.
- Butthurt: "Fine, let's just go home then. Pffft." Can't show butthurt.
- Stoic: "K". And go to the next errand. This was my choice.

I wasn't sure how it was going to play out, but for the next two errands before we got home, I consciously withdrew affection and attention, as to not reward bad behavior. I wasn't rude, but felt no need to drive the conversation either. I let silences sit long and let her be uncomfortable. I answered questions but did not bring up new topics. When we got home, I unloaded and put everything away, but didn't engage. I also immediately left the house to go for a run, and simply Not Be There.

I went about my afternoon doing my thing, focusing on me, and enjoying it. This is where it gets different. She stands up, takes me to the bedroom, gets naked, and initiates sex. She gets nicely fucked, and afterwards she makes one offhand comment about, "maybe that will make up for me not wanting to try the $New_Place today." Keep in mind I had a huge DB for years. She gets positive attention for the rest of the day.

Takeaways:

- Women are FAR MORE AWARE of subtext in communications than men are. Use it.
- It's not my job to entertain her. I'm not a fucking clown.

Errata:

- I've lost a lot of bodyfat. It shows. It's awesome.
- I'm dressing better and looking better.
- I'm busy with things in MY life.
- I'm owning more shit.

TLDR: Wife shot down lunch suggestion, I withdrew attention and she initiated sex later that day.
Improvements: Yeah, I still measure MRP success by the amount of sex I'm having. I'm doing better at not caring if I get laid, because I know things change quickly and I will get laid soon. I still think too much about the interpersonal dynamic between us as I absorb MRP stuff, rather than it being purely reflexive. I'm getting much better, though.
Background: Married 12 years, both of us just turned 50. We both look a lot younger. 2nd go-round for her, first for me. Near divorce 3 years ago after a few years of bad times. One day back then she said maybe we should get divorced and I said OK, and in a few hrs I had a divorce mediator appt for the following Saturday. We didn't go through with it.

Found the RP sub about 2 years ago. Lurked a lot, and around a year ago posted a little but recently decided to create a unique account for these subs.

What I did: I took things slow. First step was to avoid the shit tests or deflect them. I would not let her get the better of me with the shit tests. Fools speak when silence better suites the situation.

2nd step was stop bitching about my job. I used to come home stressed and bitch about it. Now I allow myself one statement and no more. Example. Her: how was work? Me: "I had some hassles with so and so (whatever is the crisis de jour etc) but I've punched out for the day so who cares? The double standard is she can bitch about her job, but all I do is agree, I try not to offer suggestions because I think she just wants to vent and doesn't want suggestions on what to do with the wok issues.

3rd step: getting in better shape and looking better. I'm not overweight but I've had some back problems so I did not lift too much right away, and what I did was at home not in the gym. I used the treadmill every day. I tried to eat better and dress better. Paid more attention to grooming (trim the beard, haircuts, etc).

4th step and believe it or not the most important one: I now make decisions quickly about minor things. The wife might call me on her way home from work "I'm on my way home I'm stopping for take out food, do you want A, B, or C?" In the past I would have said "I don't know what do you want? We just ate A last week and at work I ate B yesterday, etc". Now I just quickly choose something. This does not apply to major decisions (a new car purchase for example), only minor things.

5th step was to take care of anything around the house that is "mans work" right away without giving her a chance to tell me to do it. Take out the garbage, replace a light bulb, fix something that is broken, etc. I don't touch "womens work" the laundry, etc. We commonly food shop together though.

How has my wife responded? She has encouraged me. She loves how I stopped bitching about work. She reminds me that I haven't lifted if she didn't see me doing it lately. She bought me new clothes that look good and ones that I would actually wear. Years ago she used to bitch that "we always do what you want to do" but now she says to me "you're the boss", and not in an argumentative way, but a matter of fact happy way. She used to bitch whenever she did any housework, but now that I do my share of "mans work" she does her housework with no bitching. She has also started taking better care of herself, eating right, exercising, etc.

The other day we were doing a task in the house, not housework but something else. I told her "hey you're not helping" in a joking tone. She said "Tell me what to do. You know I like it when you tell me what to do sometimes". So I did, gave her tasks to do for this project and we finished the project. Later that evening it was sexy time and I called all the positions, took charge, etc and she loved it.

TL;DR: Wife likes the new me and encourages me to continue improving.
This report describes how I used an MRP technique to end weeks of passive-aggressive anger from my wife and resulted in wild monkey sex.

Background: Here's my last OYS for stats etc. So our relationship has been in Siberia for a couple weeks, DBR, and as late as Tuesday night when I playfully asked "why don't we just kiss and make up?" She angrily said "because you need to apologize first. Your problem is you don't even think you did anything wrong!" I smiled and lightly said "ok" and went off to do my own thing.

Since we've been in Siberia I didn't get her anything for V-day morning. Just woke up normally and cheerfully wished her a happy one. She was cold, per usual.

Mid-morning Wednesday I read U/Reach180's comment about teasing your wife and provoking arguments to give her feelz. Now, in the last couple go rounds my wife has complained that it seems like (1) I don't give a sh!t, (2) don't even care about her, and (3) need to give her an emotional connection. Feedback in my OYS on this point suggests I am being too autistic in my STFUing, even though I am not robotic or anything. So when I read the comment a light bulb went off. I thought, I need to lead her out of her anger by being playful and giving her feelz to replace the negative feelz that are currently satisfying her.

After lunch on Wednesday I made a surprise pop-in visit to see her at her work. She saw me walking over and gave me a grim look that said "what are you doing here." I came over, kissed her on the presented cheek (no kissing in Siberia) and said "I'm here to give you your Valentine's Day present!" She looked at my empty hands and said "what is it?" I said, playfully, "me, silly! You're welcome." She gave me a dubious look but I could tell I had her interest.

Then I said, "no, I did get you candy." And I pulled a small bag of skittles out of my pocket. (We really should set up a scholarship fund for that kid or something.) I tossed it down on the table and said "I hope you like it!" I wish I could describe the series of expressions on her face as her hamster tried to figure out what to do with that. She didn't say anything about it, but later when her boss came by to say hi, she was like, "look what he got me for valentine's--skittles" and I could tell she was enjoying complaining about it.

Then we had a nice chat and I teased her several times in a playful way. Shortly I left, "see ya!"

Fast forward through a busy afternoon of getting kids, family dinner out, and putting kids to bed. I'm in bed working on my laptop and she comes in in lingerie I've never seen before, looking delicious. We start deep kissing (pre-MRP she would almost never kiss me during sex, even dry ones). I lift her up and she puts her legs around my waist and we do that for a while till I throw her down on the bed. I do some dirty talking and then she starts some dirty talking. She says she wants me to fuck her and then lick her some more. At one point I'm pounding her good and she exclaims "I love it when you fuck me like a man!" (Ouch. This is rough but not quite as bad as it sounds as she was also exclaiming how big my cock is and so forth.) Tons of deep kissing, easily the most we've ever done during sex. More fun ensued and we both finished.

After we both jumped in the shower. She said, "what's that scratch on your shoulder?" I said, "you must have scratched me!" She said "no I didn't." I said, "well, it must have been my girlfriend then." She said "yeah" and changed into her PJs. A few months ago I would never have said something like that for fear of a rage explosion... which would have come. This time--a shit test passed!

This morning after my 5:30 workout I brought her a Starbucks (hat tip u/rian_stone, coffee is for closers), and gave her lots of kino and positive affection during getting ready.

My take-away is that the weeks-long Arctic episodes are my own fault. She's been manufacturing her own feelz when I don't give them to her. I don't have all the answers yet, because if it weren't for a few techniques I picked up around here I wouldn't have made it all the way through. I need to get my frame to where I come up with these responses on my own. But, the important thing for me is I've realized that I can be the master of her feelz, and I need to lead her feelz to the right place. Amazing. Thanks MRP.

tl;dr. Realization that I need to lead my wife's feelz through teasing and creating fun drama led to resolution of weeks'-long anger and DBR and some great sex--and I never apologized.
Are you a man living a lifestyle that somehow doesn’t feel, right?

Do you feel as though there is this void, this sense of missed satisfaction and incomplete daily regret?

If you fall into this category, understand that you aren’t alone. This sense of missing something is shared by thousands, if not millions of men out there. It’s not just the married guys either, single dudes, guys in LTR’s – they all have this fucking void that they can’t fill.

This feeling of emptiness and this feeling of being ‘weighed down’ is a result of repressed masculinity. This feeling of having a weight vest on, one that prevents you from taking those actions, telling those jokes, achieving those goals, and just barely allowing you to keep your head above water is a direct result of you repressing who you are as a man.

For the guys who just discovered the manosphere, it’s not your fault – the cards were stacked against you and from birth your reality and frame were stripped from you, molded by society and the white knight fucks supporting the female imperative, then given back to you with the warning that if you think outside this box you are wrong, ungrateful, pathetic, and weak - stay inside this box, keep your picture in this frame, and DON’T EVER CHALLENGE THE STATUS QUO.

Sad, but true.

For the guys who have discovered the manosphere and continue to push back, you are a weaksauce fuck and while it sucks to have your reality shattered the way MRP does so efficiently, it is still the truth and you must find comfort in this discomfort.

The void where regret, indecisiveness, sadness, and self loathing fester and grow is surrounded by a wall that was created by those who are looking out for themselves. the people who say you shouldn't be confrontational, that you shouldn't express your true desires, that you should take it all, bottle it up, and shove it deep inside - those people aren't doing that, they want you to do it because that supports their goals.

Here are a few truths:

- You will never get the best of your life or the women who are lucky enough to enjoy it until you accept the truth, embrace who you are as a man, and live an irrationally confident lifestyle.

- You will never fill that void until you find a way to love who you are as a man. For guys who get it this is natural, these are the guys who are able to stand in front of a group of people, tell a joke which lands flat, lay out a witty remark, and continue to smile and grab a drink. Other men would sulk, think deeply on why the joke sucked, and the rest of the night they would be lost in their head thinking of where they went wrong and why nobody likes them. Do you see the difference? A man is happy and confident no matter what.

- You will go to your death bed with regrets if you don’t pull your head out of your ass and start completely immersing yourself in the moments of life all the while expressing your masculine nature vice repressing it.

The last point is probably the most heart wrenching in my eyes. If you do not find your ‘self’ you will look back on your entire life wondering why you squandered your most precious gift away, your time.

I look at the guys who are asking for help and just want to throat punch them through the screen. There are men on MRP and AskMRP who are looking for support of their decisions to stay with their repetitive cheating lady, as if their world would crumble if somehow THAT relationship didn’t work. If she is cheating you probably deserve it and it’s most likely already dead, move the fuck on.

The same can be said for the guys who want to know what decisions they should make in their lives. Gentlemen, it’s your life, make the decision you feel is best to getting you to where you want to be.

In both of these cases we see men who don’t know where they want to be, they don’t know who they are so therefore how can they plan and act in accordance with reaching that end goal?

This is why it is so oft repeated it’s about YOU. You have to know who you are and what it is you want from this life. Do you know how you find out who you are?

You Lift
You Read
You Listen
You Act
You Observe
You Change

In each of these moments you will discover something about yourself. You will see where you stand physically, mentally, socially, your level of confidence, and that you aren’t perfect, which is great because there is no fun to be had if there is no room to grow.

Fill that void gentlemen, stop wasting your precious time with the feeling of regret that I know creeps into your mind at night, during rides to work, and while you are alone. That isn’t how life should be lived. You do not need your wife, your house, your kids, your money, your car - you need you.

Once you realize that if everything were to be stripped away and you’d still smile - only then can you start taking actions and leading others towards where it is you want to be, without the fear and void that plagues so many of our brothers.
I started my journey on purposely trying to become the ideal version of myself early in 2018. Thanks to all of you and the knowledge we are building together, I have made significant progress on my body, strength, and personal happiness. I am still so far from where I want to be, but I believe I am heading in the right direction.

This week I discovered something that I wish I would have found much earlier. The sidebar covers this in great detail, but for a newbie like myself it passed over my head. The physical components of the red pill are much easier to apply for the rookie - just go to the gym and lift the weight. If you can’t do this then you actually don’t care as much as you think you care. Unfortunately, while lifting is critical, I believe that without frame even the ideal body isn’t going to move the ball forward in a meaningful and lasting way.

Having frame is being your own mental point of origin. Restated, it is to be the thinker of your own thoughts. Most of us have suffered or are suffering because we are trapped in reactionary thinking. Our wives feel something and we react to that feeling. The red pill tells us not to react, but we are social creatures and most of us are very sensitive and tender hearted and actually want the best for our wives and family. So we get lost in listening to the emotions of others and reacting to them. The reactions that we have built over time are automatic and oftentimes not in our best interest. But there is another mode of thinking that is not reactionary. This is actually quite difficult to grasp because the same brain you are using to read this is the same brain that reacts to everyone else’s emotions.

There is a simple trick to become the thinker of your own thoughts and developing frame. Basically, you just have to stop doing everything. You have to find a quiet place, sit down, and try not to think. You use a single object to focus all of your attention on, which for thousands of years has just your own breathing. You sit and you try to pay attention to your breathing. Within 30 seconds you will realize that you are an absolute shit storm of thoughts. Your brain is constantly feeding you thoughts, memories, sensations, desires. I believe simply becoming aware of this is this first step to developing frame.

As you begin to recognize your thoughts you will realize you are in a sea of people who are all just reacting to their thoughts, just like you have been. Kids are completely at the mercy of whatever their brain thinks. Just like you have been most of your life.

Things don’t have to be the way they have always been. They can be so much better. You can actually change how you think. Try taking 10 minutes every day and practice recognizing and dismissing the thoughts that enter your consciousness. I think this is probably more important than lifting. Then, the next time you are facing someone who is emotionally upset, you will begin to see in real-time how your brain is telling you to react which is actually not in your best interest. And then you can simply not react that way.
Shelly has spent the last two days hanging out with my at my house. Her husband is out of town for 10 days, so she dumped her kid with her parents and my STBX wife had mine. We planned this out a few weeks ago. 48 hour fuck fest.

She showed up Tuesday morning around 8:00am looking great, decked the 9's in all her fancy clothes that her cuck husband buys her.

At some point in the day we are in the bedroom and we are getting ready to rock and roll. She takes off her jewelry and puts it on the nightstand, sans her wedding ring.

Standing there I say: "Funny you take everything off but your wedding band. I like that."

She then says something to the effect of:

"I never wear this ring. This is the one with my diamond, and I fucking hate wearing it. I hate looking at it as it reminds me of the shitty man I am married to. I wore it over to fantasize that it is our ring, one you gave me, that I am yours and that makes me fucking hot."

I just kind of shook my head with an evil grin and said something like: "I love that you are such a freak" as I pick her up and toss her on the bed.

Yesterday morning I was on conference calls working in my office and she was being naughty and trying to distract me. I put the phone on mute and told her to "stop it before I tie her up." That made it worse.

The next conference call I had, I did exactly what I said. I used my cuffs and tied her to the chair across from my desk. It was crazy hot. I was working on my call, and there she was - tied up naked across from my desk. She sat there for 30 mins while I was on a WebEx. She was a good little girl. That seat was soaking wet when the call was over.

I could go on and on about the shenanigans, but those were the two things.

For two days she made me breakfast, lunch and dinner. Tidied up my house and even folded a load of laundry for me. In between work, and other things we fucked like rabbits, slept in the same bed and even cuddled.

She would take calls from her husband, lie to his face and tell her she is at home, shopping, etc.

A few times she went off on tangents about her husband, typically right after he checked on her. She never called him. Some famous lines we hear around here that she told me:

I love him, but I am not in love with him.
I hate having sex with him.

I do not suck his dick.

He never makes me come.

When he forces me to have sex, I just want it to be over.

I have to take a shower right after sex to get the feeling of him off me.

I am only with him for the kids and his money.

Some things she tells me:

I love your come, I want it all over my body and in my mouth.

I want to have your babies. (She is 41)

I love how you dominate me in bed.

I love how you toss me around, and how you can pick me up.

You know what you want and take it.

You get me wet just being around me.

When my I get a text, I get butterflies hoping it is you.

Everyday when I see you at school, I just want you to come over and rub against me.

She left this morning. But not before morning sex, breakfast and her telling me "Thank you" 100 times.

Lessons:

Meh, same old shit different day. Bottom line again is a woman who wants to fuck you, will find a way to do it. She will schedule it weeks in advance with you when her husband is going to be out of town. Dump her kids with her parents and will be your 48 hour wife or girlfriend for the chance to live.

She will suck your dick, swallow your come, let you fuck her ass, tie her up and anything else you want - if you are a high value man.

She will then go home to the faggot ass husband that supports her, look at him and treat him with disgust and contempt while she fantasizes about a life with you.

Don't be the faggot ass husband.

And don't be a Rockstar that sticks around for the kids with a low value woman.
That was my mistake.
I see a lot of new guys who have real problems with anger. They're angry at their wives, bitter at how they've been treated, and they let it show.

The red pill is not that. The red pill is a sexual strategy and the core of the strategy is to be a quality man. To be attractive. It is about the pull. Everything else hinges on that. Without a solid SMV you don't have the leverage to pull off any of the other moves.

An attractive man of high quality, does he walk around angry or bitter? No. He is enjoying life. He has a ton of options, there's interesting things for him to do and he doesn't let other people pull him down.

When we say STFU, we don't mean don't talk to your wife. There is still normal chit chat and logistics to talk about; disengaging from those will only come across as butthurt and being in her frame. STFU about your feelings and plans for the marriage, STFU if you can't come up with a good A&A response to her shit test, but don't literally shut up all the time.

When we say withdraw affection, we don't mean walk around being icy or bitter. That's not attractive. She's not going to come running after a man who is upset.

Cultivate an image of having fun. Be energetic. Do interesting things that you enjoy. Get shit done. That's why you need hobbies and friends, so you don't live in her frame; so she can be a bitch and you can just shrug it off and do something you enjoy. When you withdraw affection, what she should see is a man having fun without her, not some grumpy dude in the couch. Be the sort of man that makes her think I wish I was hanging off his arm.

Don't let her get to you. I get why many of us are angry - we have good reason to be - but it has no place being put on display. Save it for the weights or ranting on reddit.

While anger is rarely attractive, it does have its place. The social signal part of anger is I'm becoming emotionally invested in punishing you to the point that I will do so even at risk or cost to myself. That can be a powerful signal if you are able to punish the other person. Can you punish your wife? I have very few weapons in my arsenal except withdrawing affection and sex, and their effectiveness rely solely on my SMV, and I built my SMV by lifting, being interesting, having fun, teasing her when she shit tested me, and not getting worked up about anything she did.

Also realize how anger fucks with your mind. That thing about signalling that you are willing to punish people at cost to yourself, that same program is actually running in your head and messing with your decision processes. Anger makes you think you are right. It makes you think that acting on your anger will work and the risks aren't that bad. Anger makes small guys take a swing at much bigger and badder men. If you're not fucking your wife several times per week, you're the smaller guy. Don't take a swing at her. It is so easy to think that I just need to be angry and make the bitch know I won't stand for it and she'll see how much of a man I am.

That's not how it works. You're letting anger cloud your judgement if you think like that. You need to stop living in her frame, stop thinking about showing her her place, and just focus on you.

Go do interesting things. Be happy. Anything short of being happy signals a lack of options and a lack of control, and that's not attractive and that's not red pill.
Angry Sex - Lessons Learned
by makethemflaunt | September 11, 2017 | Link

This woman is in the process of throwing a self-described irrational, emotionally-driven rant.

The husband does good, ignoring, then trying to leave. She blocks him and gets in his way. He picks her up, puts her on the counter and angry-fucks her, and calms her the fuck down. She sends a thank you text in the morning and posts to /r/sex to try and understand why it shifted her whole emotional state that was bothering her throughout the week.

Had a similar experience this evening. Came home late from work, showered, cuddled my sleepy LTR (lying in bed, beseeching me to sleep) as a little hello and then said I needed to sit (meditate) and she groaned and whined and clutched onto me and it was annoying and angst-provoking for both of us.

So, I grabbed her from behind and bit into the outer edge of her ear, just above the lobe, breathed animalistic-like into it and nibbled it and all up and down, with a bit of tongue. The nibbling with the hard breathing, with the aggressiveness, it is an instant turn on for her. I know a lot of guys on here are struggling with getting sex from their woman. That's not my issue. My issue is actually a bit the reverse. I wish I was turned on more often. And I wish I knew how to deal with her whining whimpering alter-ego which pops up when she's insecure and tries to bind me to her presence.

Well, tonight, after giving her this sort of super-intense stimulation which literally pushed her right to the edge of what was tolerable, she relaxed, super deeply. She was literally spent, on some level. She didn't even move as I got up to do my sit. In under ten minutes she was gently snoring.

Spiking her sexual energy to amp up and calm her down may be a technique well worth honing. Wanted to share.
"You don't know how badly I needed that."
by JonnyJaded | May 9, 2016 | Link

Some of the comments in my last post got me thinking; I can do more to lead my wife through this difficult time in her life. I just needed a little jump start to pull my head out of my ass (we've all been there). So I went to where I always go when I need a good kick in the sack, right here.

Main body: Wife had planned to take the boys to some festival around here to get them out of the house. As she was telling me about it we both realized that it was going to be the same shit that every festival has. And that it would have been lame. Through research I found that the winery my inlaws work at were having some Kentucky Derby party. I ask them where to buy the tickets and tell them not to tell her about it. Saturday morning I get home very early from the bar (I usually have a few beers with the DJ and the other bouncers after work) so I can wake up and surprise her. Perfect timing, I wake up just as she is struggling with toddler to get him dressed. I swoop in, give her a kiss on the cheek. "Change of plans, babe. You dress the little one, I'll dress the big one. Get out of the mom jeans, and put on a dress. Daddy's got a plan." She kept up with the "No. We were looking forward to this." "Where are we going?" "What are we doing?" "What plan?" stuff. I was ready for her. Most questions were laughed off (I noticed that she didn't stop looking for a dress/changing/putting on makeup as she was asking them) and took it for the test it was. Acta Non Verba. After maybe the 10th question I walked into the bathroom, pushed her against the door and kissed her hard, smacked her ass and told her to stop worrying, I got it handled. She does, we leave. We arrive, I present the tickets, get our shit and continue. Now she is shit testing about what the kids are gonna do. No problem. "It's handled. Have some wine. Check out the horses. Me and toddler are gonna disappear for while." Every 30 minutes or so I come over to her and check on the baby, which is asleep and refill her wine glass. We eat, she is smiling. She watches me play with the kid. She watches the kid play with other kids. She smiles.

Finally the toddler is tired of being there so we drive home. On the way home she says "Thank you, babe. You don't know how badly I needed that." Me: WINK "Yeah I did."

Both kids fall asleep, but I have to get ready for work. She wants us to fuck. I push her head down as I call work and explain that I'll be late. Rip her panties off, pick her up, and do her caveman style against the bathroom door. Then I give her a peck on the cheek, a swat on the ass, and I'm off to work. Got a SMS of her tits on the way to work with a note "I guess I needed that pretty badly too XOXO."

Yes you did babe, yes you did.

Lessons Learned: You can always do more, be better, lead more effectively, it's not good enough to say "I handled shit pretty good a month ago, I'll be set for awhile." It doesn't work that way. You must constantly and consistently improve. And when you fuck up, you have to realize it, own it, and fix it.

Stay manly, gents.
I just got home from coaching my son's little league team and wanted to share a gem from today.

One of our kids does not have a father in his life. His mother, who is a full time social worker has tried to get him into whatever sport she could.

The kid is not athletic. The mom is a single mom and does not have the know how that is needed to raise a boy in a masculine way. She tries, but there is just some shit that requires a man's touch.

He is uncoordinated, but he wants to be there and I appreciate that. I try to make sure I engage him and make it known that I am pleased when he is paying attention and doing as he is instructed. He has been coming around...

Today he has a frozen rope thrown his way, perfect throw from short to first.

He drops his glove down before the ball is there

Right in the fucking mouth

He puts his hand to his mouth and I immediately yell his name, he looks to me and I maintain eye contact and tell him that I cannot believe how hard core you are. Do you realize you just took a ball, traveling 75 miles an hour to the mouth and you didn't cry - (he's still trying to figure out if he is supposed to cry or not) I then tell him that he is a beast and is the toughest kid on this team and I tell the team that he is setting the example for them to follow.

All the kids fist pump him, high five him, call him an animal and the kid is super fucking proud. The rest of practice he keeps telling me, "Coach, I'm a beast"

This is but a sliver of what this kid needs.

His mom pulled me to the side after and told me that since I've been coaching him his confidence has soared. Obviously this makes me feel good as I am coaching unlike everyone else and wasn't sure how it would turn out - the other coaches for the other teams are fat and nice. I am motivating, yelling, fist pumping, and smacking helmets.

I encourage my boys to yell for each other, I get the parents to wear matching clothes, I am yelling the whole time - going the extra mile and racing them around the bases while the other coaches for other teams just watch their guys.

I try to show them what a man is and how he should act. With passion and competitiveness - showing them to appreciate hardwork and to believe in their team.

But these kids, like the one I talked about need more of this in their life.
I ask each of you to look at those young men in your life that you have the chance to interact with. Take them under your wing - make a difference where and when you can.

The next generation of men will only be men who embrace their masculinity if we show them how.

Acta Non Verba

EDIT

Because /u/OneMe2RuleUAll thought I was serious about the 75MPH - I wasn't serious, it was a throw from a 7 year old, I said 75 to build the kid up making him feel like he took a fucking line drive from David Ortiz off the face and still not cry.

This is what you need to learn, masculine men lie when necessary - I lied to a 7 year old about the speed because it made him feel better - sue me.
A recap on a founding principle. "You are not responsible for her emotions."

by Blackthorn8 | August 23, 2016 | Link

I have noticed a trend in the last few days of posters asking questions like "what if she gets annoyed" or "I tried X and she got mad." etc.

The stock answer as of late seems to be "Well, are you acting like you DGAF?"

This is inherently fine, but it is leaving a lot to the original poster's hamster. I think we can take it a step further.

First- stop fearing your wife's emotions. You need to make friends with that emotional storm. You need to be able to kick it up at a moment's notice and you need to be able to calm it with a solid embrace. She is fine with her emotions. Her emotions are what make life fun, and dramatic and meaningful. You are the one that has a problem with her emotions. She isn't scared of your emotions (because she pulls you into her frame) why are you scared of hers?

Second- you are not responsible for her emotions. (until you are- see observation 3) It is in our nature as egotistical individuals to assume a solipsistic view of those around us. We assume our actions and words carry an enormity of weight. As a result, we give away control of our actions to the people we interact with everyday. We do it in a multiple of ways. We fail to act because of an anticipated response. To break this down further, you actually will fail to accomplish a goal because of an imaginary response from someone. Fiction is stopping you from achieving your goal. Fear is dictating your actions.

Looking through the lens of MRP, men (faggots) will fail to grab their wife, throw her against the wall, and make out for a bit. They are scared because their ego could not take the POTENTIAL rejection. They are worried about her emotional response of annoyance, rejection, anger, etc. You are not responsible for her feelings or emotions. Get this through your head. You wanted to grab your wife and steal a kiss. If she has a problem with that, it is on her. If you tolerate having a wife that has a problem with a passionate husband (assuming you are owning your shit) then every future encounter is on you. Take some ownership in your life.

Third- you are responsible for her emotions. Yes- fuck you- I am a hypocrite. Here's the thing- just because you are not responsible for her emotions does not mean you cannot illicit a desired emotional response. Let me give you a few examples-

My wife is a self admitted "jealous" woman. We know dread works best when it is observed in a natural format. A woman hitting on you at a restaurant, etc. My wife sees those things- but if we are not going out and are at home for the night- I am still going to get her hamster going. I am not willing to concede to a boring night just because we are at home and it is a Tuesday. I don't have to use passive dread to be effective. I know my wife is a jealous woman, all I have to do is mention another woman. It may start with comments about the college baby sitter, a good looking employee, etc. This usually last ten minutes before she is seething internally. Then she looks at me and goes "you are fucking with me." I usually answer by raising my eyebrows, maybe a wink. Now she's pissed that I could get to her. And she is also engaged. And we are laughing. And she is making comments about guys, trying to get me to bite. And the game goes on until supper is made, kids are fed, bathed and sleeping, and she's blowing me on the couch because she wants the feelings and roller coaster to continue.

Stop fearing your wife's emotions. Channel them into a better life in the present for both of you. This is your role as captain.
This is a long story that I originally wrote for r/deadbedrooms. Turns out they don't have any interest in success stories if they involve The Red Pill and filtered my post. I spent a lot of time here over the course of this relationship and perhaps the story would be more appreciated here.

The Dead Bedroom

I started dating my SO about 6 years ago in my mid 20s. I'm slightly below average height, above average attractiveness and fitness, and was just finishing school with a very good job on the horizon. I've always dated attractive, smart women and she was no exception. In the beginning the relationship was awesome. She was fun to talk to, had a lot going on in life, was very kind, cared about her family, beautiful, and the sex was amazing. I had a particularly good feeling about this girl and we moved in together after about a year.

Living with this girl was really easy. She was always fun, in a good mood, and easy to please. That being said, I noticed the sex started to slow down. Whereas we were usually 3-4x a week, it was dipping down to every other week. She was stressed with the move and some work shit. She ended up getting promoted and we got settled in our apartment, but our sex dipped down to once every month or so. Over time, she started gaining weight and insecurity about her body became the new reason we didn't have sex. We joined a gym and started going. I always stayed in decent but not great shape, but I think she was eating a little poorly and her weight fluctuated for a while. She stopped going after a while. I continued on my own for a time but she became more demanding at home. Like a good boyfriend, I stopped going to the gym to give her attention and help with whatever would be going on at the time. Sex dipped down to once every 2 months.

I started to get concerned and we started talking about it. She claimed work was stressful and she was having a lot of difficulty keeping up. After this, I devoted myself to helping out more. I started cooking all of the meals, typically healthy, and over time was doing the vast majority of cleaning and laundry. I spent a lot of time on r/deadbedrooms and tried just about everything under the sun that was recommended to fix my problem. We tried scheduled sex, upping the romance, changing BC, stopping BC, counseling, the talk. Although every little thing usually resulted in a little uptick in sex, it would soon go back down to once every 1-2 months.

I was pretty torn as I loved everything about this girl, but missed the intimacy I had had with previous women in my life. I began to miss other little things like snuggling, holding hands, or passionate kissing. We didn't do that anymore. There was always some mental barrier or excuse for why she didn't want sex. I was also made to feel bad about it. I was "pressuring her" with my sexuality. I was too horny. I was a dog, a dirty animal whenever I brought it up. We started talking about our future and how everything else was perfect. She fed me some bullshit about how her insecurity kept her from feeling sexy and if we were married she wouldn't feel that way. With encouragement from family and friends who also thought she... was great, we started having the marriage talk. I'm embarrassed to type it. I proposed, but under the condition that it would be a long engagement.

So shortly into our engagement, I noticed that nothing had changed with our intimacy problems. She wasn't any more affectionate, the sex was just as boring and infrequent as ever, and to top it off, she was getting increasingly bitchy about little things. I realized that we had slowly reached a point in our relationship where I did 80% of the work and somehow did nothing right. I realized that I wasn't being treated the way a fiance should be treated.

The Fix

At a certain point, I snapped. We got in a big fight and I told her things would be changing. I had been reading r/deadbedrooms pretty religiously for a while and as a last ditch effort before ending this engagement, I tried something I never saw before. It was Married Man Sex Life by Athol Kay. I tore through the book in a few days. It was scary how much some of the details described my life. I continued to read MMSL forums and delved into the red pill. I came in with the mindset that if this last thing didn't work, I was backing out.

The first part of the strategy was to make sure I wasn't contributing to the problem so she couldn't blame external factors for our intimacy problems. At this point I was doing virtually all the housework and cooking so nothing needed to be done there. I started lifting again. As predicted, she fought me on it. She would tell me things like, "You don't need to do that. You're already in good shape", and "Come watch a movie with me instead!" I ignored her and continued lifting. I started getting pretty jacked again and after about a month, she started exercising on her own, something I could never get her to do by asking or suggesting. I gradually started ignoring her to enjoy some of my hobbies. I started playing guitar again and going out with friends without her. She would ask me to spend quality time with her and I would ignore her for video games. I remember multiple times seeing the look on her face and preparing for the worst. I remember the physical reaction I would have of bracing myself when she'd be about to bitch at me. I realized this was a learned reaction. I started conditioning myself not to care about her emotional state. I also kept waiting for the backlash to come. At first she would flip out when I ignored her or told her I wanted to do MY things. After a while, she kind of just got used to it and the backlash became less and less.

While this was happening, I started asking her to do things for me that I would normally do for myself: cook for me, buy me shit. I'm pretty self sufficient but started delegating tasks to her. To my surprise, she happily obliged. It gave me little moments to reward her for a job well done with some validation and attention. She gradually lost almost all the weight she had gained over the course of our relationship. The amount of shit she gave me was becoming less and less. I was slowly injecting sexuality into our every day life as well, including her tasks. For a simple example, I'd have her grab me a coke out of the fridge. When she hands it to me I would kiss her and grab her ass.

I started groping her more frequently, slapping her ass, and calling her dirty names. At first, she resisted or ignored, but her refusing sex was no longer rewarded with affection and me just kind of hanging out twiddling my thumbs. VERY IMPORTANT: When she refused sex, I never punished her or made her feel bad, but just went to do things that I cared about. Outcome independence is very important. It isn't about sex, it's about improving my life and if she isn't going to please me at the moment, I will do something to make myself happy. It started becoming normal business for me to unabashedly be sexual with her. She knew she wouldn't be punished ever for saying "no" and learned that her responses did not dictate my behavior.

To be clear: I was sexual with her whether she wanted me to be or not. I was sexual with her whether she said yes or no. I never got butthurt and kept the same state of mind and energy level whether she said yes or no. Sexuality was becoming the new normal for me and if she wanted to be a part of that, she just had to hop on board my life train for a little ride.

She started coming to me to enjoy what I was doing instead of the other way around. The bitching that was so pervasive had completely stopped. Over this period of time, frequency increased to 1-2 times a week and the sex got kinkier. I started getting dominant with her in bed. I started dressing her up in the clothes I wanted and treating her like a slut. She started calling me her "king". In one conversation after a particularly good bang, she had this to say, "The thing that makes me so attracted to you is you don't take shit from anyone, including me." I really couldn't believe the shit that I was hearing. The red pill fixed my dead bedroom of years in about 4 months. Even more shocking, she almost verbatim said some shit I read off a forum I used to make fun of.

TLDR: "Perfect" relationship except for sex life and intimacy in general. Tried eliminating her stress, cooking, cleaning, gym memberships, scheduled sex, counseling, BC changes, upping the romance and eventually was talked into an engagement to prove my commitment or some dumb shit. Nothing worked and she eventually started to become nasty to me. Read MMSLP. Started dread game. Proceeded to lift weights, ignore her in favor or my own hobbies and friends, ask her for favors, and unabashedly sexualize her. She responded by becoming less bitchy, getting into shape, putting a LOT more effort into sex, and stroking my ego.

A RP Postscript: We are humans and have our own threshold below which we will not fuck. I got lazy, complacent, and became a people pleaser because that's what she said she wanted. I got excellent at working and being domestic. At our lowest, we were both getting ugly, were unhappy, and super stressed out. After RP I focused on myself and having fun. I improved my situation greatly and she couldn't help but notice. What surprised me the most was how she responded to my ignoring her to take care of myself by taking care of herself. When we weren't ugly anymore and I stopped participating in her idea of fun (junk tv like Judge Judy), she came to me for fun as she saw me having a blast without her. The sex was just a nice side effect.

But that's only half the story because life got a lot better. Hope you guys enjoyed. If this is well received, I will write the rest when I'm feeling motivated.
I have been moderating this sub for nearly two years now and have watched it grow from a tiny 1,500 member group of mostly hard core, seasoned Red Pill guys into a much larger group, most with considerably less seasoning.

Due to the drift in quality and content, we recently posted new guidelines. In order to keep up the high quality of posts on MRP we have expanded our little brother forum, /r/AskMRP to take the newb questions and, low(er) quality posts especially from Red Pill tourists, and especially for new guys taking their first steps into the long, often painful process of unplugging.

Please note that the rules for /r/AskMRP are basically the same as for MRP. No concern trolling. No women giving advice to men! Red Pill women are always free to offer the wife's perspective: Please take note of the difference between a woman saying:

"My husband would not tolerate X, Y, or Z"

and

"You are being a loser who needs to stand up to his wife."

The former is the woman's perspective as a wife and is encouraged. The latter is a woman giving advice to men and will get you banned from both /r/AskMRP and /r/marriedredpill.

To all you new guys:

*1. Read the MRP Sidebar

It is THAT way========>>>>>>>>>>>>

*2. Post your questions on /r/AskMRP and (where some of the best work is being done for new and old guys alike) on the "Owning your Shit" weekly thread stickied on the sidebar. This is a confession thread where we acknowledge our mistakes, direct others on how to avoid similar mistakes, and explain what we are DOING to re mediate the error(s). Remember: ACTUS NON VERBA. We want to know what you are DOING. The question is not what you plan to do, but WHAT HAVE YOU DONE.

*3. Get a little bit better every day- start at the gym. The tactics we teach work- and they work frighteningly well if you do them slowly and methodically. If you barge in and try to reset your marriage without doing the work of self-improvement first then don't blame us for the divorce. We warned you- many times.

Which leads us to perhaps the most important rule:
4. GO SLOW! When you find the steps of Dread there is a tendency to skip all the way to level 7 (learn to flirt and approach random women) 8 (show your wife your ability to flirt with other women) 9 (soft ultimatum- set your terms for staying in the marriage or even 10 (meet the terms I have set or else I am out).

This is WRONG...WRONG...WRONG. TAKE A MINIMUM OF ONE YEAR OF IMPROVEMENT before you start making your demands known verbally. Women communicate COVERTLY and that is how you should communicate until the point when you really, and truly are "done" because you have done all you can do before you got to that point.

Finally,

5. Welcome.....to the real world.

Your eyes hurt because you have never used them.
For those of you who cannot be bothered to read long, painful books such as "The Surrendered Wife" or "First Kill All the Marriage Counselors" the author recently published a short piece in Fox News that outlines her methods.

Here: Tips for Saving your Marriage.

This is my mansplaining explanation.

1. Couples Therapy is disrespectful to men and men need to be respected. Interesting that this was not one of her bullet points but it is the take away for the article.

2. (this is her #1 bullet point): Stop being a nagging bitch. Shut the fuck up and trust your husband once in a while. COMMUNICATE to him that you trust his judgment then STFU even more- don't bitch and whine if it doesn't go well immediately).

3. (this is her #2 bullet point): Stop being a nagging bitch and fucking TELL him what will make you happy. Then when he does it SHOW him that it made you happy. I can hear most women right now on reading this: "Communicate" means bitch, complain, and whine about how he needs to change, not....fucking "communicate. What deep magic is this?"

That's it ladies. Can we handle doing that? Hell, combine that with sex on demand and we have the makings of an actual marriage!

Laura Doyle couldn't put give him sex on demand and shut up in a national media publication so she just told the ladies to shut up and quitcherbeefin if they want to "save their marriage."

The bar is...not high and "communicate" does not appear to mean what they seem to think it means.
An anatomy of butthurt and the impact on frame
by Red-Curious | February 6, 2018 | Link

I see this issue come up somewhat regularly on r/askMRP and r/RPChristians, but I don't see a lot of content on this. People are told, "Don't get butthurt," but they apply that phrase in a totally wrong way. So, let's get this clear.

WHAT IS "NOT BUTTHURT"?

To be overly simplistic, there are only two reactions to any tests a woman throws at you: (1) butthurt and (2) not butthurt. Duh. Obviously we want "not butthurt." But most people mistakenly apply this by saying, "X is butthurt. I'm not X, so I wasn't butthurt." In reality, yes, X is butthurt ... but so is Y and Z and A, B, C, and a ton of other things. To that end, it's a waste to try to define everything that is butthurt. We're better off trying to define the much more limited response of not butthurt. Here's my definition of "not butthurt": Positive emotional reaction. That's it.

Now, this isn't the best definition, but for new guys it's the most useful one. Why? Because it leaves no room for ambiguity. We all agree that negative emotional reactions (anger, yelling, resentment, etc.) are definitely butthurt. Positive emotional reactions are not. There is a phase in-between where most guys wind up living, thinking that they're being "stoic." This emotional gray area is too complex for many men to understand or fake their way through, but a woman can sniff it out immediately. You're walking in gray, but they see black and white. This puts you at a serious disadvantage until you've developed a strong sense of your own frame.

So, if you're new around here and you read: "Don't get butthurt," rather than thinking, "Don't react with negative emotions," tell yourself, "Oh, I need to respond with a positive emotional reaction when she does that."

DISSECTING BUTTHURT

Women are emotional creatures. They thrive on emotions. They don't even care what emotions they're feeling most of the time - they just want emotions. Good emotions are the best, obviously. But to the surprise of many a man, bad emotions are actually better to women than no emotions. Accordingly, when a woman is testing you - be it a compliance, fitness, or comfort test - she's trying to evoke an emotional reaction out of you. If she can do this, it shows her that she has power over you.

Consider a wife who asks her husband to warm up the car for her. Assume she's equally capable of doing it or that it's a luxury and not a necessity. This is a clear test. What is hypergamy trying to do here? How should a man respond? I'll give the possible responses in order from worst to best.
BETA POSITIVE: "Sure honey, I'll warm up your car. And maybe when I'm done, will you let me give you a foot rub too? After I get the dishes done first, of course."

- This is a "not butthurt" response. It's also a garbage one. If she can evoke a positive, supplicating response, that's the ultimate source of affirmation to the BB side of her hypergamous drive. "I have him wrapped around my finger," she thinks. Don't be a BB. If you're her BB, she's going to look elsewhere for her AF. It's not enough to be "not butthurt" - you have to be alpha in your not-butthurt-ness.

- This is the definition of acting in her frame.

NEGATIVE EMOTION: "Screw you! Where do you get off thinking you can boss me around, you stupid whore!"

- Whether you comply or not, if you respond with negative emotion, you're still giving her an emotional high. She might not like it in the moment, but it gives her something to complain about to her girl friends, something to post about on social media, something to stew about in the shower, etc. Her life now has a plot and she gets to take the center stage. Something is better than nothing to her. If she ever feels bored in the relationship and she knows how to get you to react emotionally, she'll do it, even if she knows it's going to blow up in her face. She'll probably even cheat on you because that's going to give her the strongest emotional response of anything she could throw at you. Your negative emotional reaction = a display of her power to manipulate your emotions. Even if she doesn't get her way, because she knows she can manipulate your emotions, you're still her BB. She owns you.

- This is also acting in her frame.

NO EMOTION/"ROBOT MODE": "No. I will not warm up your car." "I said no. No means no." <Broken record until she's gone.>

- This is where most guys screw up. When their wives come at them, they shut down into "robot mode." All emotions go out the window, they look with a plain, blank face, and they engage purely on logical analysis and calculated behavior patterns. I lived in this phase for a long, long time. This is absolutely infuriating to women because it denies them any semblance of what they're looking for, and it also shows them that you can't handle playing the game. It tells them you just don't care. Most guys think this "robot mode" is the same as "being stoic" (for example). It's not. The one redeeming factor in "robot mode" is that you finally learn to STFU and stop caring about whatever crap is spewing out of her mouth.
and all over your face. With your emotions shut down, it doesn't get to you ... at least not in the moment. But if you get into "robot mode" by bottling up the negative emotions, don't turn yourself back on and experience it all at once afterward.

- This is the ultimate spurn off to hypergamy. She doesn't get BB satisfaction of controlling you, but she also has no AF interest in you. This is the only way I know of actually defying hypergamy. Of course, the goal isn't to defy the system - it's to make it work for you.

- Congratulations. You've finally left her frame. Of course, you don't have a frame of your own yet either.

NEUTRAL EMOTION: "Not today, babe." "It's not a big deal. You can warm up your own car. I'm watching the game. Have fun at work!"

- This is where you maintain your tone, unaffected by whatever she's doing. You continue to talk to her the same way as if she had asked you, "How's your day?" with a smile. But now she's saying, "How's that whore you've been hanging out with, you lying cheater!" and you answer her in the same emotional tone as if she had asked if you could pass the butter. You're not emotionless. You're normal. You're unphased. You're you.

- Now you're hinting at having an alpha side. You're unshakable. You're trigging her AF tingles.

- Now you are living in your own frame ... you just haven't invited her in yet. This is a necessary first step for most guys. It's one thing to say you're here, but if you haven't internalized it and you tell yourself, "I played it cool," but inside it's actually taking any effort at all to maintain that composure ... you're really in the "no emotion" camp and she knows it. As has been said here a number of times: women can sniff out your internal emotional state like a bloodhound. It's one of their God-given (or if you're an atheist: "evolved through natural selection") super powers. Don't assume you can put on "neutral emotion mode" and she won't know you're faking it. You actually have to BE unphased.

ALPHA POSITIVE: "I have a better idea ... how about I warm you up instead?" with a big grin and a smack on the butt.

- This is when your mood actually brights up in response to her tests. AA stops being a tactic you employed in "neutral emotion mode" and just becomes part of who you are. She complains about you not doing the dishes, and her complaint makes you smile. You are happy to hear her complaining about you because (1) it's another opportunity to get her engines revved up, (2) it's genuinely funny to you how she prioritizes and conceptualizes the world, (3) you can enhance the resolution on your relational cartography, and (4) she makes really cute faces when she's feisty.

- Not only do you have your own frame, but you're inviting her to join you in that frame. You're brightening her mood, despite your rejection of her request.

- If she accepts your invitation, once she's in your frame, you're the AF she's been waiting for. Congratulations: you've just made hypergamy work for you.

Now, technically a "neutral emotion" response is "not butthurt" as well. So, when I say that "not butthurt" is only defined by a positive emotional response, you can see where I go wrong. But because most guys think they're "neutral" when in fact they're in "robot mode," and because their wives can see it clear as day ... it's just not worth the risk. So, just skip "neutral emotion" mode altogether and shoot for "alpha positive."

The one caveat I give there is that if you've been living in "beta positive" or "negative emotion" for too long before finding RP, and the idea of being "alpha positive" is unrealistic under your current frame condition, then and only then should you shoot for "neutral emotion," understanding that 9 times out of 10 you're really going to be in "robot mode" and just not realize it.
60 Days of Dread Week 8: Getting Social in your Exercise
by LongRoad_518 | May 23, 2019 | Link

Intro

Dread level 3 is starting to build your life outside your wife. This is hard for a lot of guys here (including me). But it is critical to get out of the house at least twice a week MINIMUM and interact with other people. Without doing so, it’s damned near impossible to imagine a life without your wife. Once you start meeting others and realize that you’re an interesting person – you start to internalize “I’m the prize, look at all these people I can talk to and have fun with”.

At the same time, you should be exercising (you better fucking be lifting already).

By making efficient use of your most precious resource – your time, you can burn some calories and get more social.

Potential Activities

Team Sports

Find a local basketball, softball, ultimate frisbee, whatever league. If you have a few friends already, get some to join with you. If you don’t… join anyways. Don’t know how to play? Who cares, go have fun, make fun of yourself for being so bad. You easily can meet new people while having fun. Bonus if it’s co-ed as you can work on talking to the opposite sex.

Hiking

Look into if there’s a hiking group in your area. Most of these meet up at a few times a month and have a diverse group of people. If you like the outdoors – this could be perfect.

Martial Arts

For me, this is far and away the best activity to get you out. There are so many benefits:

You build a useful life skill (how to fight/defend yourself)

You’re a man, you are expected to know how to defend yourself and those weaker than you. If someone attacked your family while out and about – could you defend them?

There are a wide range of age groups

In my class there are teenagers up to 50+. There are also a few hot women which is a bonus. Get to know everyone.
You get a great workout

An hour of martial arts burns a shit load of calories. You’ll gain coordination and flexibility. The best sleep I get is Monday and Wednesday after Muay Thai.

It builds a huge amount of confidence

In the past, if someone started yelling in my face wherever it may be, I’d think “holy shit what if he hits me”. That goes away quickly when you know that you can defend yourself leading to more confidence. Don’t do anything stupid picking fights, but just internalizing this leads to a lot less fear in your life.

It is an emotional outlet to hit things and other people

Are you angry about your wife, job, life? You won’t be after an hour punching, kicking, or grappling. You’ll be too fucking tired.

While any martial art probably works - I recommend BJJ, Muay Thai, or MMA. Something where you’re actively practicing against an opponent. Read about the different styles and find something that fits you. Take some time (like a week - not months) to research gyms in the area, price them out (some places can really be rips offs). The best places are usually the hole in the walls not the Mega-Complex Super Duper Martial Arts Academy.

Anxiety and You

“But I’m not any good at any of these things, I have no eye hand coordination and am a fat ass.”

You’re going to be nervous about starting anything new. The best way to overcome that is to just start. You may have a queasy stomach, your brain telling you you’re crazy to do this, fear of being embarrassed.

Kill that ego. Everyone was new at some point and you’re not going out to be the next UFC champion or NBA star. You’re going out to HAVE FUN, get some exercise, and talk to other people. When you start anything new it’s uncomfortable - this is a good thing it means you’re improving yourself. The most important thing you can do is show up. Showing up is 95% of the battle because your brain will find every excuse not to - especially at the beginning.

Sticking with It

As a general rule, I aim to stick with something for at least 6 months before allowing myself to drop it. At the beginning of martial arts, I hated how uncoordinated I was, how much better everyone was, how out of shape I was. I would have called it quits a few weeks in, but I pushed through. Fast forward six months and I can’t wait for the classes, I talk to people there, I know their names, we tease each other about shit. Oh, and I’m much more coordinated, as good or better than a few people, and in much better shape. So whatever the activity is, try to give yourself 6 months of consistent effort and showing up before you call it quits. And if you do call it quits, you’re quitting THAT activity and finding a NEW one.

Prepare for the Shit Testing

You will be tested for whatever you do. Realize this is normal. At first it may be teasing you or eye rolls asking “how long will this last”. Think about it - you are a fat or lazy ass with no activities and now want to go out and do something physical (of course it's laughable)? I think my wife damned near had a heart attack and then laughed her ass off when I said I was going to Muay Thai (not that I was thinking about doing Muay Thai, that I was GOING there that evening). She doesn’t laugh now. She brags about it to her friends - there was some pictures taken of our class that she’s shared on her Instagram. Now, she asks me what I learned when I get back home. Think about it - does your wife want to tell other people: "yeah my husband's lazy and just hangs around the house" OR "yeah my husband does Thai Kickboxing a few times a week". One of these sounds a lot better than the other...

Your woman wants you to be high value and busy. Ignore anything negative she says. Watch out for the attempts at guilt tripping you. “Oh is your martial arts tonight? Wouldn’t you rather stay home with me / the kids?”. DO NOT LISTEN TO YOUR WIFE. She loves it that you’re getting out and doing shit.

In Conclusion

It’s not mandatory that you do any of these activities. What IS mandatory is you go out and get away from your wife and talk to other people. For the love of God, be social somewhere for a few hours a week. If you’re introverted – too bad – do it anyways. But if you want to kill the proverbial two birds with one stone – you can get some great cardio in while being social. It’s a lot of fun and very rewarding.
I just shared this in a forum full of twin dads, half of which seem to be on the verge of divorce.
I have only ever come here for advice and I wanted to share my story. Many thanks to those of you who replied to my pm's and also to those of you who just laughed at how silly my questions were when you look at it from the perspective of a man who owns his shit.

Here is is -

Two years ago I was in a dead bedroom, sex was non existent. My wife hated me, thought I was abusive, was googling divorce lawyers after every fight and I had no self esteem left. I was in another country, working and realized I was not who I wanted to be, I was not the man who she fell in love with, who never tired of working, lifting or fucking. I found myself in the reddit dead bedroom forum, reading about pathetic men who begged and negotiated every aspect of their lives with their wife and realized I was one of these pathetic man-children.

I looked hard at what I had become, I'd gained 50lbs, I stopped lifting and chased her around the house for validating affection, I complained passive aggressively about the house being dirty, the clothes never being cleaned, and the lack of attention I got.

I found "the red pill" and "marriedredpill" and realized, I was the reason I was miserable and my wife was miserable, I was needy, childish, impatient and horribly sad. I started keto diet, lost 50lbs over a year and a half, put on over 15lbs of my old muscle, pants went from 44in to 36in. I stopped complaining about being sick or tired and just got shit done. When I needed a break I’d jump in the car and go fish for an hour or just sit in a parking lot or starbucks and read. I started reading about how to communicate more effectively and re-learned (and still read pickup books) how to flirt with her. I put myself first and I make myself happy first, but I do my best to never fail to pull her up when she is tired or sick or overwhelmed. I try to not take the complaints seriously, once I've weighed the complaint by my own standards, sometimes they are just calls for attention, sometimes they are just a desire to have someone hear how tough her day is and have some sympathy from her rock, sometimes they are indeed valid, you are that judge. Always. Assuming you lose the ego and hold yourself accountable.

I started cleaning up messes when I saw them, vacuuming, mopping as well as laundry and dishes until I set a standard that I would have no problem keeping on my own. I started telling her to sleep in when she had a bad night without any expectation of favors.

I make it clear via actions that I have better things to do than lay in bed and watch tv at night and that our relationship comes before everything else, including the kids. If we are happy and stable, everything else will come from this. It is not easy, I fuck up all the time, but both of us are happier than we've been in years, the sex is better than it has been, almost ever. (those first few weeks with a new girl... those are hard to get back to but I know we can get there). We have sex almost nightly, and sometimes manage nooners despite 3 year old twins.

The most important thing I've realized, when I smile from a good place deep in my "frame" there's no way that when I look at her, like I just found my favorite playmate, that she won't see that joy and smile back.

I see some of you are in the same boat as I was, I see some of you are way beyond the happiness I have and have found a way to get to a place where you are happy and self assured. I am glad to see similar thoughts echoed here occasionally. Those who have found happiness, share your methods and push the rest of us to be better men.

I really wish I'd not had to take that detour and was just always the man I knew I could be, if I didn't stop making excuses.
Moderating self deceptive bullshit by disputing: "Your kids will be fine or even better in a divorce"
by sadomasochrist | April 28, 2017 | Link

It's great to read the trials and tribulations of guys here that have gone through the gauntlet and to remind ourselves that marriages go through semi predictable failure routines and they are mendable, to a certain degree.

There is great debate to whether or not one should "stay for the kids." That is up to the individual. But one thing that I think should be clear and nipped in the bud is the assertion the kids "will be fine" or that they would be "better with two happy parents."

Now in a recent thread, there was a link to a study that mentioned that there was only a smaller percentage of kids that ended up being directly damaged by the divorce.

These studies you have to remember first and foremost are almost always leaning left, blue pill you could say. But suffice to say, finding evidence against this study is NOT difficult. Essentially the entirety of research in this segment are in agreement, kids from families of divorce are the most likely to end up in dysfunctional relationships themselves, have a host of behavior issues, do worse academically, have worse career outcomes. Hey, it turns out, having a family is a super important part of human development, maybe it's even hard wired into us.

That's aside from the well understood point that many of the guys that land in TRP or MRP come from families of divorce, or one where the father was weak or the mother was overbearing. This point is not counterintuitive. This point is not to be understated.

The impact on children in this situation is significant. Children need role models all the way until they become adults.

"Separately, we are doing the job we should have been doing together."

KNOCK KNOCK Who's there? HAMSTER HAMSTER HAMSTER

I've heard it, I've seen it, I've LIVED IT

If you are really honest with yourself and you keep your eyes peeled, and you watch the impact on the families involved, and the kids, they will not be "alright." They will be drastically impacted, and the level of mitigation to that will be the dedication you guys give to them and their own innate ability to overcome this.

Listen, I came from the family that did this. It was as amicable as it could have been, despite it being a divorce rape scenario. My mom did a 180. It didn't help ultimately. It took decades to understand the toll it took, and didn't become readily apparent until I was deep in my own marital issues. It got traced alllll the way back for both of us, even though her family never split up.
I can't spend two or three days writing this all out, but if this post has ANY significant amount of support from the guys with kids that REALLY GET IT, I will continue to add to this post as it gets referenced.

Suffice to say, once you get out of the "lead and the kids follow" mindset and understand that there are huge milestones that they need to hit, you should understand just how complex getting a kid to college is. And not in the "they got into XYZ Uni!" type of way. But in the, they're ready, well adjusted and prepared to find a long term mate, and make it work, type of way.

Enormous amount of effort and work to get to that point.

Listen, everyone has a limit of what they'll put up with. I've been fighting the battle against a woman with BPD for over a decade. That'll sharpen up your shit boy.

Just don't delude yourself into thinking that you're going to be the exception to nearly every study ever done on this. Your kids are going to be fucked up and you'll be doing your best to pick up the pieces and put it back together into something that resembles what they were before you broke them.

Do you even remember what it was like to understand the concept of mom and dad?

"They'll be happier with two happy parents" is literally the stuff I digested and lied to myself about when I was 12. This is shit a twelve year old believes and a blue pill therapist tells you.

It is NOT reality and it is NOT red pill. It runs against what this forum is all about, which is dispensing away with the bullshit and living in a pragmatic reality, allowing you to fix what you broke by adopting blue pill dogma.

If you can not take it anymore or you want to be happier, and are willing to understand that involves damage to your children's lives then so be it.

That's red pill, no moralizing here. You want to fuck up your kids lives because your wife is a mess, I get it. Trust me, I get it. The idea that no woman is ever at fault here is bullshit, there are women that are lost causes. There are women that are truly, without question, fucking nuts. But that means you're a headcase too! If your wife is BPD, that mean's you're likely NPD.

You can bullshit yourself, but don't come on here and bullshit us and then posit that I am moralizing. I'm not.

Here is my a priori argument

- If you think there will be a net positive for your kids, you better justify it.
- If you truly truly can justify it, you probably can get full custody.
- If you don't think you can get full custody, then she isn't that bad.
- And if she isn't that bad, your kids will be better off.

which means
• If she is that bad, you should be trying to protect them by staying in the house and working on tail on the side or negotiating it.
• If any of this is true, but you still want to leave, you want to leave because you'd rather be happier than your kids be healthier.

YOU DO YOU. But don't come on here bullshitting users giving them justification to destroy their families under the notion it will help or won't hurt. That's what women do.

"Oh Tom? Yeah, you need to leave that guy, you'll be waaaayyy happier without him."

Some reading for the TIP of the iceberg, I will continue adding to this ad nauseum if the post reaches any popularity, because there is NO shortage of the huge and detrimental effects of this

Mediocrity is your worst enemy - and too many men are mediocre in life outside their main job.

by SKRedPill | April 27, 2019 | Link

TL:DR - Mediocrity in a man is unattractive, excellence is attractive. High value in one area of your life doesn't mean you can afford to be low value in all others. For most men, selective excellence is their undoing and most never realize how much their embracing mediocrity outside work causes their life to suck. Excellence must become a way of life.

This started out as an observation of various boys and men in and around my life - myself, my dad (especially him), uncles, neighbours, my friends, and the like. All but one or two never got the respect they needed from the people around them, especially their wives or other women in their lives. And they knew it. Deep down it filled them with resentment and anger and often led to victim puking, jealousy and other behaviour. And none of that helped, it made it worse.

And what was the root cause? Mediocrity.

But wait, mediocrity? Come on! Dad was a CTO at a major MNC, my uncle was a genius, my neighbour is a very rich man, another friend became an award winning researcher, another's a banker, no one can fix a car like the man next door.... - what do you mean?

Unfortunately, they excelled in only one or 2 dimensions, which were career oriented. In all other dimensions of life, they were mediocre. And it wasn't for lack of ability as much as lack of vision and the will. And a big ego that wasn't ready to stretch out from the comfort zone and "This is what I am and that's that".

Therefore their wives and girlfriends (and eventually even their children) need to nag and beg and plead with them to keep their room clean, keep the keys where they're supposed to be kept, don't dump the clothes on the floor, go to the gym, lose weight, decide what clothes to wear, buy the groceries, know what the kids are studying in school (or even when their birthdays are), or the fact that the bills aren't paid, etc.etc.etc. Not one of them were an exception to a huge, fat belly. Some of them are so pathetic that they won't have the motivation to do anything all day or even cook their own meals if their "second mama" wasn't around, unless they're nagged hard. And even when they had to do it, the results were pathetic. And not because there was a learning curve involved.

With that attitude, you wonder how any of them survived a week at work. Except that at work, they brought in all their high value qualities, and promptly left them all at the office when they returned home. The contrast could not have been more stark and for a while I wondered if they were indeed split personalities.

The fact was that their excellence was selective and reactive. And that was their undoing.

This is the biggest thing that's making one beta - thinking that it's enough to just be good at one or two things, and get just passing grades at the rest, and of course, fail to pass even basic standards at the rest of life. Their favorite question at home, "Ok, so what do you want me to do to keep you satisfied?" They were ok with the fact that someone else would fill up their holes for them and were expecting their partner to do it for them. At work, they were abundant. At home, needy.

And they wonder why life's not working for them. These men were leaders in their lives at work - others asked them what to do, they had the vision, the competence, the drive, the standards, the results, maybe even the inspiration. But at home, they were busy trying to supplicate and hope the true master / mistress of their lives would give them a pass this time. They'd complain they did a lot of work at home, but the problem was -- they weren't the leader. They weren't generating the right energy - the energy of a true master. They did not exude high value outside of work. Most of them even believed that it was enough to be good at work alone.

This is pathetic. This is what was making them unattractive. They weren't taking responsibility for what was needed to be done for their life as a whole. Deep down they knew it, but never realized what to do about it, or their beta egos got in the way of their own salvation. Many of them were even treated with contempt daily and all they ever did was spread their miserable energy around the environment. It was a bad cycle.

In retrospect the solution was simple:

-- becoming aware of everything that exists in your life - that includes your clothes, your room, your hobbies, your health, your vision for the family, your finances, your cars, or even how you brush your teeth (seriously, most men don't even keep their tongue clean and drink enough water, which is what causes most bad breath)

-- Being truthfully honest with where you stand in each one of these and where you ought to be.

-- Accepting that your life is your responsibility. Others can help you out, but you must lead from the start, sit in that driver's seat, or else you are not taking responsibility for your life. A true leader does his job and knows how to get everyone else to do theirs as well.

-- having a vision and standards for each and every single one of those, and developing it till it becomes a signature style that is respected for its standards. Of course, using others' ideas are totally fine, but these need to be integrated till it becomes your own.

-- bringing in the needed masculine energy, the desire, brains and drive into everything one is or does. You need to bring in huge desire to do this, not a small, weak desire that promptly flees at the slightest discomfort.

-- not living a life dependent on reactive emotions all the time. For e.g. a need to keep things "fun" all the time makes it impossible to deal with the tough stuff. It's better to accept what needs to be done, and do it because it is the right thing to do. Unfortunately few people ever outgrow these childish paradigms. These men needed self generated drive for feeling, instead they were depending on externally dependent emotions. This was not just their problem, it is a collective failure of humanity to distinguish between proactive and reactive states of living.

It's at this point most of them resorted to rationalizations - as if they were children. The worst part of that was as they got older, so did their egos, so they found the truths harder and harder to handle and began to engage in too much beta thinking about worrying about what others would say when they started improving (as if their image was good to begin with). These men wanted to be revered - but they found it more comfortable to deal with being treated like shit than to do something about it.

A very common characteristic of a beta male is to resist truth and act arrogant when confronted with his own mediocrity.

Unfortunately there is no magic wand, no way to grow that muscle without the right pain and discomfort. A lifetime of mediocrity cannot be erased overnight, but over time. Every man has to go through the process where he's still unfinished, and none other than those who care about his growth value him, before becoming a finished product that his former critics now shamelessly adore and try to imitate themselves. And he's the beneficiary of it.

This is man's biggest weakness and BP conditioning - to think that just being good at a couple of things is enough to take care of his entire life - to think that only a few things matter and it's ok to just make the passing cut or neglect the rest. Nope, your life is way bigger than you, and every aspect of your life deserves the appropriate best of you - otherwise you will find yourself undeserving of the life you want. Every aspect of life is different and needs to be dealt with accordingly - what worked for you as a child will not work as a friend or a parent and definitely not a leader. You can't fit a square peg in a round hole, so you must do what works.

The second is that proficiency in one area of life won't guarantee results and excellence in other areas of life. Rather than trying to indirectly compensate for your lack of game with your salary slip, that weakness needs to be addressed directly for what it is. You must learn to game women, become an excellent lover - I know a lot of people come here and somehow do not want to acknowledge this as part of self improvement, but there's no point hitting the nail except on the head. Likewise, if you have no dressing sense, instead of using your nerd credentials, it's time to learn the art of wearing clothes. Whatever area that is found lacking needs to be addressed directly.

Excellence doesn't come overnight. Your earliest attempts at self improvement will be met with the usual contempt because you've created that reputation for yourself. A little later, you might inspire enough dread in the people around you that they'll tell you any shit to keep you mediocre, and even see you as a threat. Because you changing is pushing them out of their comfort zone as much as it is pushing you. But eventually a change happens in the very way people experience you. And that is where they must adapt, or die. Many will adapt and treat the new you in ways that will shock you. Others will drift away, which is ok, because those relationships are no longer authentic. Only the few ones who knew what you were capable of, wanted you to grow and helped you in your journey will take real pride in your growth at all stages. All the others are simply reactive to how you are at any given point in time, notwithstanding their earlier memories of you.
Your mediocrity in the aspects of your life which your BP self deemed unimportant (which is untrue) is making you unattractive, and the results in your life are the proof of it. You are losing respect, authenticity and attraction. You are treated with contempt. Forget sex and positive energy, you're not being treated with the same grace and basic manners given to another human being who may be a complete stranger even. Do you really want that?

An attractive man is respected, even revered, let alone being the heartthrob of many a woman. Without that respect, there is no foundation for the rest. But that respect is earned. That needs excellence, vision and standards to be a life principle. And if you want excellence, you must be willing to take the discomfort needed for your own growth and a more authentic life. Selective excellence must be banished. Only when your excellence is not selective, and is a way of life, will it begin to appear in all facets of your life, not just your job or passionate hobby.

Discomfort? Yes, it's the way of the man. It must be embraced with pride, with strength. One day you'll be grateful for it. And you'll sleep so well you'll know what real comfort is.
So you think you are doing everything yet nothing is working as expected?

by mrprider | February 16, 2017 | Link

It is easy to go red pill Rambo and/or overestimate your progress.

Here are some key metrics for tracking your progress: You should be able to answer each of the questions with a resounding YES!

A. Career

1. Do you have career with growth potential at 3-5 year intervals?

2. Are you consciously preparing yourself for the next position?

3. Do you have a rough idea of how you will retire? And a plan in action to achieve that?

B. Personal Finance

1. Are you budgeting and tracking expenses?

2. Do you have a personal liquid fund to last you 4-6 months in case of an unforeseen lay off?

3. Have you been putting money towards i) Retirement, ii) Savings and iii) Expense goals like vacation, or home down payment?

C. Fitness and Diet

1. Can you at least bench your own body weight AND at least overhead press your SO’s weight? (Preferably 5 rep)

2. Can you run a 5k with just 1-2 practice runs at max?

3. Do you have a good control of your diet to allow for enough protein intake and reducing bodyfat to 10-15% range?

D. Leading the Family

1. Do you have a vision for the type of family you want to lead? And you are on plan to achieve that or improve that?

2. Are you owning the home/house/kids/family responsibilities and chipping in without being asked instead of just responding to complaints?

3. Are you actively invested in well being and growth of your SO as well as your kids’ physical and emotional aspects?
E. Being Fun and Social

1. Are you the fun SO/Dad that everyone wants to be with? (Instead of an emotionless stoic father figure doling out advice and reprimanding)

2. Do you plan the vacation and weekend getaways for your family ensure everyone has a good time, including you?

3. Do you have periodic boys only activities? Could be just boys (hunting/fishing), or having family nearby (working on car in garage with your friend/s while their family hangs out with yours in backyard)

F. Meditation and Inner peace

1. Do you have activities for your mind? Meditation, reading, etc.

2. Are you at peace with who you are, and what you are working towards?

3. Are you involved in sharing back with society? It could be anything like volunteering or coaching kids football team or even responding to askMRP newbies.

G. Frame - thanks /u/drty_pr

1. Do you have less and less concerns about your wife's emotional state?

2. Are you able to tell her the things that you know she won't like, while simultaneously NGAF about it?

3. Do you carry yourself in a way that you don't care what people in general think of you?

H. Independence - thanks /u/drty_pr

1. Is your state of happiness in anyway tied to how your wife feelz?

2. Do things that are happening outside of your household that are completely out of your control have little to no impact on your well being?

3. Have you fully accepted comfort in the uncomfortable?
Every several months or so I find myself assessing my direction, my "narrative" (as it's commonly referred to here) and my MAP, looking for things that could use tightening up. This started out as an OYS post after a realization about one area I could improve on but I decided to throw it up on the main sub instead as it got longer. Because it was an OYS post originally I'm going lay out where I have fucked up, where I've done well and what I'll do going forward to improve this.

I was reading posts on our beloved forum yesterday and got sucked into a Jack10 rabbit hole and came across this post about incentivizing others to express desired behavior (your wife is an "other" for clarification).

I think this gets overlooked a lot of the time on MRP due to the "Levels of Dread" being so prominent of a guide when guys are building their MAP. Don't get me wrong, the dread levels are necessary to grasp but they are mostly about improving yourself and implementing a successful strategy as a married man, from that place of improved SMV. This is another key distinction for another post. Men here get caught up with looking for shit tests, having three hobbies, practicing game, removing time and attention to the point where they are missing opportunities to reinforce and reward good qualities and actions of those around them (I've been guilty of this at times). For your wife, this means creating that environment where her feminine nature is encouraged by your masculine leadership and even occasionally, your praise, be it verbal or action based.

I realized I've been somewhat failing to most effectively create that optimal environment to foster feminine energy and flourish from my wife. I've missed opportunities to craft the narrative and lead her to this and will be trying to correct it. It comes down to this for me right now; I need to do better at creating an environment that encourages good, feminine behavior and lead her into my strategy/narrative. This has some similarities with /u/GargantuaBlarg29's recent post on being a good partner and leading her to good behavior through your micro-actions.

How did I fuck this up pre-RP awareness?

If you examine your past (or current actions for the newest here) I guarantee you will find behaviors of yours that supported the FI and stifled your wife's natural feminine nature. Here's mine... I used to be one of these guys who thought he liked girls who were slightly less feminine. Not "butch" but maybe slightly tomboyish and "sporty." You know the type.

Waaaay back when we were dating (10+ years ago), I used to even tell my wife that I didn't like all the overly feminine accoutrements like lots of makeup, heels and stuff like that. I would tell her she looks fine the way she was and sometimes even accuse her of overdressing for events. I was absolutely murdering that instinct to be feminine and sexy. What a dipshit, right? Like the majority of men today, I bought into the feminine imperative lies so much I actually believed this. And in turn, she believed this is what I liked in women (and why wouldn't she? It came out of my mouth on more than one occasion). My point is that I wasn't doing myself any favors and I'm now realizing the damage this caused to fostering a comfortable environment for her to truly embrace her feminine nature. Undoing something like this takes time. This dynamic has to be right for you to be able to validate and encourage "desired behavior."

So what have I already done to reset this dynamic?

On a macro scale I did things like, took over handling our finances about a year ago. She's expressed to me how this has reduced the stress in her life (Now the thought of not doing this conjures up images of me being a man-child). I focus on the larger, strategic family decisions of our lives like; buying a new car, planning big vacations, coordinating large home repairs, vehicle maintenance, etc. Thus leaving her room to worry about things like what's for dinner, laundry, what the kids will be wearing to school and her appearance. The things many women naturally (whether they admit or not) are proud of and enjoy doing for their families. I've become more involved, or at least more aware of, what our kid's are doing at school and what they need to be responsible for. My wife still handles most of this as she works part time and only about 5-6 hrs a day when she does, but as part of my "preparing for any outcome" MAP I want to be more engaged and able to pitch in on this should we ever split. It also builds my own reassurance that I do not need her to be happy and successful. The go plan is the stay plan.

I validate her efforts at eating better and exercising daily. About one whole year after I started lifting, that 1,000 foot rope attached to the "fitness raft" tightened. Now she is watching her calories, doing intermittent fasting and exercising five days a week. Once it became noticeable to me, I wrapped her in a big bear hug, ran my hands under her shirt around her waist-line and commented on how she's looking good lately. Women want this validation.

When she gets a haircut, puts on something sexy or gets "whored up" to go out to dinner, I let her know I appreciate it. I want her to keep doing these things after all. Don't confuse these compliments with pussy worshipping. It's a quick ass slap and "that looks good on you." The hovering pussy drier is not the same as incentivizing good behavior. Don't over compliment or give undue praise.

What can I still do better to further this dynamic?

Be overt about what I appreciate from/about her. I already do this to some degree but I need to start rewarding and acknowledging daily things she does like meal prep, laundry and cleaning. This also goes for when she makes an effort to look good physically. We went to a concert together a few weekends ago and she looked sexy. I told her this. I also made sure I was looking good... come on now. Her hands were on my waist and ass all night. She should know that I appreciate her effort.

Consistently reinforce feminine value. I will be cognizant of when she tries to add value to our (my and our kid's) lives and reinforce that behavior. My wife works with children in a medical capacity for her job. She used to have a blog where she would post things related to this career. It didn't get a lot of traction and she lost interest. I'm going to encourage her to do this again because I know she enjoyed it, whether it was monetarily successful or not.
Lead her into the narrative I create. She doesn't always know what I want out of life, out of our marriage, out of sex. This goes hand in hand with not writing covert contracts. She can't possibly get on board with what I want if she has no idea what that is. See Garg29's post for more on this idea. So being overt about some of this, in a non-dictatorial way will also be something I strive for.

My MAP thus far has been very focused on improving myself, getting what I want out of life, removing my time and attention when she acts shitty and crafting my "strategy" to that end. It's become apparent to me that leading her to a place that reinforces all the positives she brings is just as important. Dare I say, I need to lead her to a place where her efforts are appreciated?

This alone won't make you a more valuable man. This comes after you've lifted for a year or more, after you've lived in your frame and created the life you want. Maybe this a "water is wet" post for some but I see it neglected a lot from newer men. Acknowledging this positive behavior from your wife is a small but key part of the MRP process that sometimes gets glossed over. Don't forget to incentivize.
Always be willing to approach
by LatePillSwallower | February 9, 2018 | Link

I originally started this as a reply to a post on r/asktrp; but thought it might be valuable as it’s own post:

Approaching has never been easy—

It wasn’t easier back in the day — men used to literally kill each other for women.

Back in my day (I’m 38 so late 90s-Early 00s) you had to approach women in person (yes we had IM and Email — but texting and cell phones weren’t as prevalent). You had to face rejection in person. And guess what there are always guys chasing all the girls - even the fat ones. Going to bars to get chicks really sucked as every hot girl was being hit on by every guy. And every skank being hit on as well.

I think shit like Tinder and other online shit is making people weak (it makes me think of grade school; “I like sally but don’t tell her unless she says she likes me”)

This gives you an edge; don’t be weak - approach in person. Don’t try sliding into the DMs first and hope she likes your IG photos — because they suck compared to the many other guys on there — and going that route you set yourself up to compete with them. When you approach using day game; you get a brief window where you are not competing with anyone else — you’re the only one occupying the space so to speak.

If you want a job or gig at some place don’t just wait for an opening and then submit your resume. Approach the company and simply ask for an interview (that’s what I did to get on where I am now — I called and asked for the IT director and got a time set up to just talk about their environment and my skill sets — a year later; they called me — bam no job posting, no competing with 100 other guys for the same job)

I’ve been working on approaching 3-5 people (men & women) a day just to practice looking for opportunities to network and build confidence. I will admit one advantage I have is that I really don’t care if I get laid when I approach (because I’m married and all that jazz).

Yesterday I had 3 approaches and only two were fruitful - but I learned from each one:

1. In the bank yesterday morning I saw a male employee struggling with a PC issue — I asked him what his issue was and luckily I was able to help him out; he was the branch manager and gave me the contact info for their IT head; who I called this morning and landed some side contract work doing DB migrations from on premise to the cloud.

What I did was asses a situation and realized what value I could bring to it and then just attempted to do so. When I spoke to the director of IT; he wasn’t even going to outsource the work - if I hadn’t taken the opportunity to approach I would have never known about the work.
Big win here $$$

2. After the bank; I went to Wal-Mart and saw a nice young thing looking at home routers; I offered to help her pick one out - she let me help, I helped her make an informed decision. I then went to get her number and offered to come set it up for her. She said thanks but no thanks - she didn’t want to just give her number out. I said I understand; how about I give you mine — she says “yea; I don’t think so” ; I said cool I get it.

Strikeout — but hey she got what she wanted and I got a good reminder that you can’t win them all and sometimes I probably come off like a creepy old man.

3. Later that afternoon; I went to a new gym (as I was in a town about an hour from home). As I made my way to the power racks for some squats and rows; I saw a 26 yr HB 7 (I would say an HB 8; but that’s me — I like chicks with thick volleyball player legs - I know some guys don’t). She was doing some circuit work Turkish getups, ab wheel, dumbbell stuff.

After my session; I saw her putting on her sweats and shoes by the front getting ready to leave - I thought fuck it - let’s see if I can get a number or something.

I opened with “I saw you working over there; how many of those Turkish Getups did you do” she tells me and we talk about training, etc. She mentions how she has trouble deadlifting - I offer to give her some pointers and we go over to the platforms and I teach her the basics about bar path, hip height for the starting position, and properly setting her back. Great opportunity for her to allow some strange dude to put his hands on her hips and ass and back.

I get her number and give her mine; in case she needs any “coaching”. As we walk to our cars; I throw out a stupid joke about her owing me one for the lesson — she comes back with “well I have a gift card to Texas Roadhouse; I could buy you dinner” — who am I to pass up free protein and drinks. We take my car to the restaurant.

At dinner we discuss nursing school and her plans, how she used to play college volleyball on a scholarship (legs to prove it mentioned earlier). I tell her about my wife who works in the medical field and about careers, etc. She tells me about her LTR boyfriend (who got her the gift card by the way)

After dinner and drinks as we walk back to my car - she takes my hand and pulls my arm around her waist. I open the car door for her (maybe a beta move; I still do old school shit like that though and don’t really plan to stop). On the drive back to gym to get her car; she lays her head on my shoulder and I put my arm around her.

When we get to the gym; I open her door for her and go for a good bye hug; she tries to get me to kiss her - I give her a peck on the forehead and give her the old “If I wasn’t married.... yada yada” she explains how she doesn’t really do that stuff - come on to a guy she just met, cheat on her boyfriend, etc. — I lie and say I believe her (AWALT) and I’m sure she is a nice girl. And then I get her car door for her.
Lesson here is again be willing to approach — if I hadn’t I would have missed out on a free dinner with a pretty girl and a nice little ego boost (all on her boyfriends dime — I did feel a little shitty about that; probably because I’ve been that guy... still am??). Also got the reminder that all women will step out if they can and have manufactured deniability.

Being willing to approach people and have direct communication is about more than getting pussy; that is why all men should be willing to do it.

If you want a raise you feel is earned ask for it; if you want the girls number ask for it; if you want your wife to blow you - tell her; if you have input in a business meeting - fucking say it... don’t wait for shit to just happen and people to read your mind. Look for opportunities and have a plan on how to seize them.
It's been a long time since I lurked and posted here and I really don't have my pulse on the state of the community.

Still, today I employed an important LTR tactic that is soooooo misogynistic yet critical if you intend on staying in a somewhat satisfying relationship with any woman.

The Wife bitching about this and that for about 12 hours and at first I ignored but once it gets started it needs to be quickly dealt with unless you enjoy walking on eggshells and scrambling to please her highness in futile hopes of making her happy.

The thing is, most women use complaining and expressed dissatisfaction as tool of manipulation. Society runs like worried butlers to fix their problems when they bark so its a go-to strategy for women.

What I do, and this seems to be required on a 2 to 3 x per year basis is just tell her to knockoff the bullshit because its nothing I'm going to live with. She knows what I mean, I'll leave.

You have to do it the first time. Just walk out for 3 hours and come back and dont discuss it. If that doesn't work, try an overnight or 2. If you are worth a shit, she will get it and likely will be sweet as pie for a month and will howl with delight when fucking because she isn't with a lapdog. She has an actual man who wont put up with bullshit.

TLDR...dont discuss the fact that she is being a bitch. Just shut it down with a stern warning and follow up til she gets it. It's the height of betatitude to get into the nuts and bolts of why she is making everyone miserable. In fact, its a reward for her if you do converse about the source of it all and you can expect it nightly forever more.

That doesn't mean not talking things over that are brought to you calmly with respect. It means break the habit of her using unhappy wife, YOUR unhappy life to get what she wants.
Sexual Selection and Existential Fear
by Rollo-Tomassi | April 2, 2019 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2019/04/01/sexual-selection-existential-fear/

Excerpt:

In 2019 men’s control over their sexual selectivity is something women don’t want to hear about. Part of ensuring that Hypergamy is the defining social dynamic today includes exercising as much control over men’s sexual selection process as possible. As fluid as men’s selection naturally is, it’s still out of women’s total control. The method to that control is social pressure. Women’s need to insure against their own Existential Fear of pairing with an unacceptable guy is so obsessive they will resort to social engineering. Tinder and Bumble are social engineering programs as much as they are facilitators of women’s Hypergamy. Body Positivity / Fat Acceptance (exclusively for women) is equally a social conditioning effort. But for these and more the latent purpose is the same – convincing men to repress their evolved sexual selection proclivities in favor of accepting women’s selection process as the ‘correct’ one. The Cardinal Rule of Sexual Strategies states that for on sex’s strategy to succeed the other’s must be compromised or abandoned. In today’s feminine-primary social order, the Feminine Imperative wants nothing less than complete abandonment from men – and it will use every social and political means available to insure men do.

Men must be raised up and conditioned from the earliest age to accept women’s strategy and their role in it as the only acceptable one. Men’s selection of a mate must be made for him according to women’s standards. Many times I’m asked how to go about “vetting for a wife”. I’m asked what the criteria, what aspects, what traits should a woman possess to make her “marriage material”. From a Red Pill perspective a lot of what I lay out seems highly offensive to the sensibilities of men and women conditioned by the Feminine Imperative. But the qualities, and the reasons I define them being desirable, are nothing any man who is invested in his own sexual strategy wouldn’t find mundane.

It’s not difficult to figure out what attributes in women would make for a good pairing – what’s offensive is that a man would ever have the temerity to require a woman to possess them at all.
How to really gauge your OI, DGAF, need for validation: Have your wife die

by taon4r5 | July 29, 2016 | Link

So, I've not been a frequent poster here, but I've been in and out for about a year and a half now. I thought I had become really good at not relying on my wife for validation, and just doing things because they're the right thing to do and I wanted to do them.

Then my wife died. Not entirely unexpectedly. We thought she had 'til the end of the summer, but she collapsed in the kitchen two and a half weeks ago while I was giving our son a bath. I ran to help her, found her bloodied, tooth broken out, with vomit on the floor, saying "this is it! this is it!" and complaining she couldn't breathe... I ran to get her asthma puffer and told her I'd be right back as soon as I got our 3 y/o out of the tub. When I got back to her, just a couple of minutes later, she was dead. 911, chest compressions, no good...dead.

In the aftermath, I'm left befuddled. If I'd conquered my need for wifely validation, why is the thing that makes me cry the fastest that I don't have her around to tell about...well, how well I've handled shit since? That our boy peed on the potty? That I organized one helluva memorial service? For all that I thought I'd made my own way with that particular part of this whole RP cocktail, that's the piece that's nagging at me. She was never one to give me that attaboy anyway ... it pissed her off that I sought the validation, so all the better that I stopped looking for it -- but not even being able to angle for it in this time of crisis is hurting. Just simple grief, or some sign that I was deluding myself about how well I was doing?

And as much as I thought I was OI and IDGAF about her staying or going in my life -- ok, I can say, convincingly if cognitively, that my best days are ahead of me and she was in some ways a shitty wife. But in poring over the memories and documents and scrapbooks and all that post-death stuff, I can't help but think things could've been better if I'd just been a bit more .... smack me if you need to .... romantic. Again, crisis of faith in my MRP learning, or just a griefly puke?

The answer may be as simple as "Dude, your wife just died in front of you and you're suddenly a single parent. Cut yourself some slack." Or, conversely, "She was a shitty wife and your SMV is going to skyrocket once you get back on the rails." Or perhaps ... "MRP doesn't work on dead people or memories."

I dunno. Mods may end up deleting this for bringing nothing to the table, but this isn't a subject I've seen brought here before, so on the off chance that there's something worth exploring, I'm going to click Submit.
Case in point: generating those tingles is an indirect effect of taking care of business

by Redpillbrigade17 | March 13, 2019 | Link

https://www.reddit.com/r/sex/comments/b0qd4e/last_night_i_heard_my_husband_tell_off_one_of_his/
Did you know "The Manipulated Man" is the first book of a trilogy?

The first book talks about women's behavior. The second book is "The Polygamous Sex" and talks about men. The third book has never been translated (her advice for "The End of Manipulation" and I have not read it nor found commentary about it).

"The Polygamous Sex" was very briefly discussed on TRP years ago here. The interesting part of the discussion was the link to an extensive Red Pill analysis by Eric Crowley. Which is excellent and worth a read.

It's very interesting--in particular the parts I find interesting are the kernel of her analysis that men are taught to distort various complex emotions into "love" the same way we are taught to distort a lot of emotions into "anger". And that women don't do this and are more clear about different types of love. So it's interesting to think about this whenever the love hierarchy and Rollo's women-in-love men-in-love discussion comes up.

runsonmagic is dead but it can be found in archive. I've linked the parts below.

The following is an excerpt from Crowley's introduction:

When I first read Esther Vilar’s The Manipulated Man, I thought it was the most important book I’d read on gender since Warren Farrell’s The Myth of Male Power or Jack Donovan’s The Way of Men. The Manipulated Man left me in stunned silence. I wanted to write about it, but had no response to the book.

Roosh wrote in his review of The Manipulated Man:

I’ve never had a book that made me reconsider so many of my beliefs like this one. It ended up being the most vicious takedown of the female gender that I’ve ever read, five times harsher than anything I’ve written.

He is entirely correct. Esther Vilar makes Return of Kings look like Dr. Phil. I had nothing to add to her work or his review, except a strong recommendation to everyone who follows the manosphere to go read her book.

That is until I discovered her second book, The Polygamous Sex.

Esther Vilar’s The Manipulated Man is actually part of a trilogy of books – the third of which, to my knowledge, has never been translated into English.
The Manipulated Man describes the problem between men and women, The Polygamous Sex describes why the problem exists, and the third Das Ende der Dressur (“The End of Manipulation”) describes the solution.

The Polygamous Sex could be the most important book the manosphere has never read. It begins from one simple premises about human drives and works it’s way forward with clear reason. Because it is out of print, and her first book contained such intensely harsh truths, few have heard of the The Polygamous Sex.

- Introduction: The Best Book The Manosphere Has Never Heard Of
- Part 1: The Desire For Protege Is As Natural As Sexual Attraction
- Part 2: Women Exaggerate Their Weakness For Male Protection
- Part 3: Women Act Like Children So Men Will Adopt Them
- Part 4: The Only Person Repressing Women’s Sexuality Is Themselves
- Part 5: The Roots of Male Sexual Dysfunction
- Part 6: This Is Me
- Part 7: Men Have Been Confused About Love
- Part 8: Is Vilar Writing To Win Men’s Love?
- Part 9: Why You Never Read The Truth About Women From The Mainstream
- Part 10: What Feminism Is Really About
- Part 11: Why Intelligent Men Won’t Admit Weakness
- Part 12: What I’ve Learned From Esther Vilar
When it comes to becoming the best version of you, denial can be one of the biggest roadblocks in improving yourself and maxing out your SMV. Denial is different from being completely oblivious or ignorant to your weak spots as you may simply be unaware of your shortcomings. One thing the sidebar should do as you read it is wipe away this excuse of ignorance. If you actually read it, you will have your eyes open to the vast majority of your blind spots and you can no longer stay oblivious to your fuck ups and weaknesses. Inevitably, some blind spots will always exist and these often are the most difficult to address as you simply are unaware that you are fucking up. Self-reflection and the OYS thread are great tools to spot these yourself or get some pointers from others in this community. Anything else of significance that goes unaddressed means you are in denial.

In psychology circles they will often discuss the 4 varying degrees of denial which are:

- First degree: Denial that the problem, symptom, feeling or need exists.
- Second degree: Minimization or rationalization.
- Third degree: Admitting it, but denying the consequences.
- Fourth degree: Unwilling to seek help for it.

I look good enough

I recently went thru some of our old family photos. I have always had a decent level of confidence in my looks. Yet, I have always been self-concisous about my body. Hmmmm... no denial there. Why was I self-concious? Well, I have always been a skinny fuck. I'm 6 feet tall and was probably 145lbs when I got married. About 12 years into my marriage I didn't put on a ton of weight but I softened up the little muscle I previously had and was probably 20%+ body fat and still only weighed 150lbs. I went from skinny to skinny fat. I went thru all 4 degrees of denial multiple times. I would deny that being skinny fat was even a problem (1st degree). I would rationalize that since I had nice facial features that it didn't matter (2nd degree). I would sometimes admit it, but not consider it a big deal. Hell, she married me as a skinny fuck to begin with (3rd degree). Finally, I would say fuck it and just keep doing the same shit I was always doing because doing anything about it is hard (4th degree).

Since I have been here, my diet has changed completely, my workouts have changed completely (even though I was doing some lifting prior), my wardrobe has been completely changed, my clothes fit well, my hair style is different, my teeth have been whitened, my eyebrows are trimmed, my posture has improved, and I can keep going on and on about how I have improved my looks. I like what I see in the mirror now. I still would like to put on more muscle and keep going past 180lbs, but after putting on 30lbs in the gym over the last few years I can take my shirt off confidently. So, what did I see in myself in those family photos? Denial. It was painful to see how clueless and derpy looking I was over the last 10 years.

I'm a good dad

This might have been one of the biggest mind fucks for me personally and possibly one of the things that hurt me the most when I finally acknowledged my denial. I have always prided myself on being a good dad. Being involved with my kids and being a part of their lives was something I enjoyed. I was always present for dinner and for bedtime and spending time with them. However, I was in denial. My eyes were opened early on in this journey that I was simply along for the ride and my wife was driving the family bus. Dinner happened when she wanted. So did bedtime. So did the tasks around the house that she identified that needed to be done. I thought I was good at discipline, but in the end I was just following orders. A good indicator of who is in charge is who the kids ask permission from to do things. I was not leading in the home and I was in denial. Many times I would deny there was even a problem (1st degree). Or, I would rationalize with stupid bullshit like, "well, she spends all this time in the home already and has a system. Who am I to come in here from work and step on what she is doing?" (2nd degree). Sometimes, I would admit that she was disciplining in a way that I disagreed with, but I would deny the consequences of those actions and somehow hamster my responsibility to parent to her. (3rd degree) Finally, I wouldn't do anything about it. I mean walking on those eggshells is tricky, she might get upset, and I would eventually just do nothing. (4th degree).

What I have discovered here was that the family needs a strong masculine dad leading in the home. Not a dictator when a competent first officer is present, but someone to lead and provide direction. It was a struggle early on regaining the helm and it didn't happen peacefully or without incident. But, I can say confidently that it is worth it and in the end your wife and kids will be better for it. Delegation of tasks now come from its rightful captain. Dinner and bedtime is directed by the captain as well. There is less chaos in the home as a result and the wife is less anxious now that she is no longer shouldering duties she likely never wanted in the first place. I remember having a conversation with her after she crossed some disciplinary lines and I told her "I'll be Batman, you be Mary Poppins". She doesn't like being the bad guy anyways and she has brought this up after the fact that she prefers me being Batman so that she doesn't feel like she has to. Who is truly leading in your home? If it is not you then you are in denial about being a good dad.

It's only an hour

I was a pretty avid gamer prior to MRP. I have played pretty much all of the "Duties" and would dispose of $60 to grab them in the fall with everyone else to jump on early to make sure I stay with the learning curve and don't take a hit to my K/D ratio. Because keeping that ratio well over 1.0 is a big deal and so beneficial to me in my social and professional life right? Besides, after a long day at work, all I wanted to do was just unwind and do something mindless for a little while. She is over there finger fucking her phone anyways, so I guess I have no other choice or alternative than to keep playing. Besides it's harmless.

When I swallowed the pill I went on a quest to uncover as much knowledge as possible about this stuff. I found myself reading at lunch and at night and all of my free time was dedicated to increasing my RP knowledge and trying out different methods etc. Soon, I noticed that I had not picked up a video game controller for about 6 months. However, I had noticed a lot of other improvements in my life and as well as sex with my wife. One night, I decided to pick it up and play the game I was half way thru when I suddenly stopped playing. Guess what my wife did? Finger fucked her phone most of the night. Also, I didn't seem to find the same enjoyment that I used to when playing. What did I learn? First off, video games can be a colossal waste of time. I get the diversion aspect of it, but imagine if the screen was black and you saw someone staring at a black screen for an hour or two mashing buttons on a controller. You would appear to everyone else as a mindless zombie and you would essentially accomplish nothing of value. You can accomplish just as much staring at the wall for the same amount of time. Men get pissy at their wives finger fucking their phones on social media. We see it as such a waste of time. Trust me, they see you playing video games as equally unnattractive. Be attractive. Don't be unnattractive.

Do I still play? Only with my kids now. Playing alone now just feels so unproductive that I can't bring myself to do it. We still have every console you can imagine laying around the house and I do still enjoy playing the Wii with the kids from time to time. I no longer have XBOX Live or PS Plus subscriptions as they have all lapsed and not been renewed. I'd rather be out doing something and I want to same for my kids as well. I'm sure I will get shit from some others here that are in denial and tell me that video games are fine. Sure, you can play them, but don't be in denial about what they are doing to your productivity, SMV, and sex life or lack thereof. Unless your girl is an avid gamer herself it is likely going to come off as unnattractive 100% of the time.

Conclusion

If you find something that is harming your mission, don't deny it's existence, rationalize it away, deny the consequences, or refuse to change it. If you do, you will be stuck as a scrawny skinny fat dad that dresses poorly, plays video games, thinks he is the shit, but can't understand why his wife always seems to be in a bad mood and never DTF. Trust me, I can confirm. Make the hard changes and push beyond to live on the edge of uncomfortable. It is the only way to improvement and ultimately the life you want.
Be a wild tiger.

One thing I keep having to relearn is to watch what she does, not what she says. [FR] about ignoring what she says, give her what she really wants.

This video really hit me, it's funny, but it's actually tragic. I saw into the dark things that AWAL this last weekend. Vid is well worth the two minute watch, even if you don't continue reading.

I've been trying become a better Family Alpha™ and leading my family towards the direction of my vision. Most of this process has been improving, lifting, reading, and doing me. I hate how long it is taking while simultaneously knowing that I'll never reach the end, so I'm in this state of embracing the suck while attempting to enjoy the ride.

I've been trying to bring the family along to get outdoors more often (embracing the suck that I can't afford an extravagant vacation, while truly enjoying the experience of hiking for free). Last week there was an opportunity with perfect weather, and we had a Sunday free, so I told her a few days before, "Keep Sunday free and we'll go hike the Creek Trail as a family."

She replies that she's not sure if she can, she has stuff to do. translation: "I'm really not attracted enough to hang out with you Sunday, you haven't reminded me today that you are the prize"

I say, "Too bad for you!" smack her butt and walk away.

An hour later she says, "What time on Sunday are we going hiking?" translation: "I'm a little moist from my recent interaction with you, and want to see if you are truly the prepared and determined leader that I may be attracted to."

"I will leave the house by 10am sharp, I'd like the whole family to be in the car by then. I will get the kids and their food ready." At this point I thought I had won, and we would all enjoy a great time.

The night before the hike she tests me with, "I really want to sleep in tomorrow, so I'd like to leave around noon." translation: "I know you think that you are a strong alpha tiger and I'm allowing you to have a little fun, but remember who holds the leash here."

At this point I'm thinking, you bitch, you just have to tweak something to get the final word. Luckily it was just for a secong and I try to return to OI zen. "Not gonna work babe, I want to get to the top and back in time for us to grab some dinner, and then we're gonna go to the movie at 5pm. We can't leave any later. I'm leaving at 10 with the kids. I'd love to have you come." A little 5 second kiss and I'm gone. This is subtle, but 6 months ago I'd change my plans completely if it meant I was getting a shred of what I wanted. For me this is a huge improvement in my OI.
Day of the hike she was in the car by 9:55am (would have never happened 6 months ago, watch her actions), and excited to leave, even helped get kids ready before I knew. translation: "I respect you as leader, and trust your vision so I want to do what you want"

Again, I thought I was done with shit tests. We are driving and she asks why we are going a different way. The trail has many starting points, I had chosen a simpler one since we had kids with us, told her simply that we are starting from the south. Then comfort test: "I don't want to go that way. I like the other way." (use of I). translation: "I am afraid of the world, and I'm not sure you are able to protect me or my offspring." All that improvement is now out the window, I thought I went from Alpha Motherfucker to Asshole who doesn't care about his wife's comfort! The unknown is terrifying to her, and fear seems to dominate a lot of her mental process. I should know better, as a beta pussy, how could I dare push her to be challenged. I admit I almost didn't make it, but I attempted to treat her as the oldest teenage daughter. She doesn't know, and I do, and so I didn't back down.

I said "I know this is the better way, and we are going to go this way, even if you don't want to." Satisfied with this response I forgot to STFU, and let leak, "I hand picked this was for the kids. My decision for the safety of the kids comes before your preference." Big mistake, DEERing. I notice it immediately, tell myself I'm a fucking idiot, and STFU. Still an improvement for me. She is upset, and fidgeting to show it. I would have caved in at this right away, I just want to get along. It's at this point, when she's upset when I start to think there is no way we can have a good time now. That isn't true though, I can still have a good time, and I start to tell myself that. I can enjoy my time, she can choose not to, but it won't affect me. (I'm repeating this in my head, faking it to make it.)

I push hard to STFU, and we pull into the trailhead before I have a chance fuck it up.

The gate is closed. Now I might fuck it up. She says, "Well looks like this place isn't as good as you thought? Didn't you say you researched it?" I didn't say that, although I did research it. translation: "You may have hid it well, but deep down you are a pathetic beta bux faggot, and you are MY beta bux, now say it! Say it in front of me and the kids."

I was bummed, I won't lie, but stayed with STFU, got out to inspect the gate, and realized it just blew closed by the wind, it wasn't locked and there were other cars in there. I opened it, and placed a rock to keep it open. I had to stop myself from doing an "I told you so, see I'm a big boy mommy" routine, but I just got back in the car and parked it, just saying, "Man it's perfect weather today for this."

Her last ditch effort as we started walking was a shit test, "Well, this place you picked looks way shittier that the other one." translation: I'm starting to feel some tingles, are the legit or not?

I told her I didn't notice because she was in front and I like the pants she wore and the way it shows off her ass.

She acts mad "Quiet! There's other people here" translation: "Louder! Let them all hear."

As we almost made it to the top she couldn't stop saying how much she liked this trailhead better, how it a better for the kids but so much more pretty. A couple of times she said she was glad our kids are learning to enjoy outdoors. She had an amazing time, and honestly the kids just seemed to enjoy it because we were enjoying it. Afterwards at dinner she kept grabbing my leg and telling me how it was one of the best family days ever. We never made the movie because the kids were tired, and so we went home and I pounder her into the bed instead.

Still today she keeps bringing up what a great time she had, and how nice it was. The same trip that she doubted every step of the way, the same trip that she could barely be bothered to come on.

I LEARNED A LOT ON SUNDAY

• This is a sexual strategy, but there are excellent side-effects that come from all of the changes required, and all of life is affected.
• Wife is relentless at trying to tame me, get me to doubt myself, get me to admit that I am a beta.
• Maybe AWALT, but she has the right to reserve her pussy and/or company to only the best man, I truly wouldn't want to be with a woman who lowers her standards (but my life would be easier).
• All the way into the start of the activity she never said anything to reassure me that she was enjoying herself. And I desperately wanted that validation! I almost caved several times.
• Shit tests and Comfort tests are foreplay, I should look forward to them instead of avoiding them or being upset by them. My wifes panties are soaked with my Shit Test defenses.
• She will never love me the way I want her to. I want her to be quiet and believe me and never doubt me. She actually is usually quiet or and submissive most of the time, but never when I want. And when she is a sex denying shit testing harpy it is only an indicator to me that I'm failing at Dread Levels 1-5. She is a mirror that I can see how well I'm leading in.
• Even when she gets all pissy I can still have a good time. And when maintaining frame she will usually become less pissy and have a good time after a while.
• I'm glad I didn't give up. I still have a way to go as far as getting rid of the dad-bod. I started to get more sex, and almost relaxed a bit on the lifting and dieting. I'm so glad I didn't.
• I'm glad I didn't give in. My beta training was screaming out that I am fucking up and being a prick and all kinds of stuff. STFU goes for my schizo-beta voices too, just gotta keep telling my self STFU.
• She's counting on me to translate and appropriately deal with her shit. This is big, SHES COUNTING ON ME, she has no interest or reason for trying to prove that I'm attractive to her! That's my job.
• This was a small victory, I need to continue to improve a LOT before I can start to acheive a big victory like her begging for my cock in her ass while I eat a pizza on the beach in Hawaii. I've set my sights on that kind of marriage, but it's on me to be as Brad Pitt/Ryan Gosling/Jake McDorman smvwise.

- My wife doesn't know what she wants as well as I do. I cringe at saying that, but I think it's true. My wife thinks she wants me to be a domesticated tiger, friendly and cuddly, but that's not what she wants even if she doesn't know it.
- "I told you so" routines are a display of low value.

Deep down she wants to be hunted by a wild tiger, but all she will ever do is try to tame you. Don't let it happen.

Update: Thanks for the encouragement. I have realized through reading it and my own comments that I'm balls deep in her frame, and have learned that I need to reconstruct a strong, personal, masculine frame that doesn't need validation in order to maintain integrity. Thanks /u/redneck001 /u/redpilldad /u/spexer /u/scurvemuch and /u/reddreadwolverine for illuminating that. If I'm going to be honest though, I really found out how important validation is to me with the positive comments on this thread, and how much I eat that shit up. I am on the tit of your guys' approval, and I am getting off it today. Seriously, thanks men.
The older I get, the less stock I put in ideas, knowledge, skills, success and the more I focus on communicating them effectively. One of the most effective books I've read on this subject has been Way of the Wolf: Straight Line Selling.

It's written by Jordan Belfort - subject of the biopic, The Wolf of Wall Street - and, if you've ever seen the movie, this is the content he developed in his post-prison life teaching people to sell pens.

Is it the final word on sales? I highly doubt it but he compresses a great deal of knowledge into an easy read and there are a few call backs to the movie that stop it from being too dry. Finally the whole thing is described in a visual style I felt useful and lends itself well to coaching others.

The following is a brief synopsis of the overall concept and a cut out of one of the techniques which I've been conscious of using recently as part of my MAP.

Summary: the Straight Line

The book opens and pivots around how Jordan, a natural salesman, was able to summarize his entire philosophy and method of sales by sketching and talking through a simple diagram on a flipchart.

Basically he gets frustrated that his team can't close sales, that they can't prospect leads, that they're sloppy and unprofessional, that they lack confidence, that they go off topic and a million other things and eventually says:

"look guys: every single interaction should be built around a straight line from A to B".

OPEN ---------------> CLOSE
"and your job is nothing more than pushing things along."

And when the guys protest that they’re building rapport, Jordan says “fuck that. Of course there is a grey area. A small grey area. Your job is to keep the boundaries in mind and when the conversation starts drifting there, you fucking bring it back to the straight line”:

He goes on to talk through this process in more detail touching on DHV, shit tests, fogging, negative inquiry, DARE'ing and many of the other concepts we talk about here. He also clarifies how multi-phase interactions can be joined up i.e. when you're not selling a pen to a passerby, when you're continually re-engaging to develop a relationship with a company/client/person.

In fact really this book is about creating and controlling the frame of an interaction and expanding that sphere of competence.

It's all very light on theory and heavy on action. Worth a read.

Example: Pacing and Leading

One thing Jordan explains especially well is the correct use of “Pacing and Leading”. He is drawing from various sources and many might recognize this as what I believe is originally an NLP term. If you don't, it was a concept from the '90's that led salesmen all over the world to obsess over mirroring their counterparts body language. Such as crossing or uncrossing their legs anytime the prospect did.
Cue autistic results.

However Jordan drops a simple nugget of wisdom that the focus shouldn't be on forcing rapport, but falling into it naturally by matching the prospect’s level of enthusiasm/engagement and making your own EVER SO SLIGHTLY higher than it. Then, as they warm to the subject, you lead by increasing your own enthusiasm and so on and so on until you both reach the shuddering climax of a successful close.

If you've ever been really in the zone and pushed through a lot of resistance to close a huge deal, you'll know exactly what he means, alternatively you'll recognize times when some charmer has made you his own slut.

Anyhoo.

IRL

My wife once said she loved that when she asked me if I wanted her to make me a cup of tea, I always replied “I’d love that”. Cue relaxing together and being taken care of.

Conversely if she asks what movie I want to watch and I shout “Predator!”. Likely I’ll be watching it on my own (another win, ha!).

The same effect happens in catch-and-release type cold approaches:

Quite often a casual “hello there” from me results in a bright eyed “Hey!” from the girl in question and the challenge is to re-calibrate and lead her UP in enthusiasm and not down towards me. Bizarrely it seems easier for me when the response is neutral, maybe because in many ways it’s easier to start low and go up?

But wherever you are, people tend to seek to match you as long as you are not too far off and from there you have a choice to influence it by controlling yourself.

When the gap is too large, it will be obvious as you will both likely want the encounter to end.
Anyway, a simple way to establish and lead a dynamic is to think of your engagement level as a dial and dial it up and down to one notch above your counterpart.

Use this knowledge to boil that fucker like a frog and check out the book for more ideas on communicating.

As Jordan Belfort might say:

"Sell me your penis".
Some of you faggots need a reality check. So here it is.

First, I just got my DEXA scan completed, and cross compared that to a BIA scan I also completed the same day. I took the average of those two scans, since neither are 100% accurate. But there were pretty damn close.

The scan highlights:

I am 39y/o, 5'10". My current weight it 227 pounds. My BF is 15.2%. I have a lean body mass of 192# and carry 35# of fat. 23# of that is carried in on my trunk. I have 120# of skeletal muscle mass, which is 150%. My Visceral Fat is at a 7, which is low. My estimated metabolic rate is 2560cals a day. I have a current combined Big-3 lift total of 1360, which is not my ATH, but I do sick amounts of volume when I lift.

Here is what I looked like in 2016 when I was logging 1000's of miles a year swimming/biking/running. After I did my last Ironman I started lifting. Red hat is one year ago, black hat is present day. I am still bulking. I have been on a average dose of TRT of 90mg a week for the past 8 years, with periods of time with no TRT (due to no source and/or sick of pinning) to blasting on 500mg of a week of test. I consume in excess of 3000cals a day, but I don’t really keep track.

Current stack (1 week in) is 200mg a week of test, 50mg of Winny ED, 20mg of Nova MWF and 12.5mg of AI Tues/Sat. Daily ancillas include 10mg of Cialis, 2g of Taurine, 1G of Pantothentic Acid, 100mg of Chelated Magnesium, 1g of Krill Oil and a Centrum Men's Multivitamin with breakfast. Currently on Winny I take 500mg of TUDCA for Liver Support.

Previous stack was completed on May 10th and was 300Test/500Tren for 12 weeks. In previous cycles I have also ran other orals such as Winny, VAR, and injectables such as Masteron and NPP. I have ran 5 cycles since Jan 2017. Most were dirty bulks.

I have been lifting for while now, most of that time has been not Natty. So, let this serve as a reference, not of what is the maximum possible - because I could be GLO and certainly run more gear, spend 6 days a week in the gym instead of 4, work harder, risk more injury and maybe see more results. But bottom line - for you mid 30 year old guys who are lifting, esp. natty - you have a TON of work ahead of you. This is a multi-year commitment you have to be willing to accept. Sure, you will get some beginner gains, and yeah if you do IF or Keto you might loose some weight. But in terms of moving serious iron? Give yourself some time and be patient with yourselves. Bottom line - what is your goal with lifting?

It took me the better part of a year to really get into lifting and switching from cardio. I also kind of tweaked my back in 2018 working way to hard to a 6 plate DL and ego lifting and had to lift baby weight for the better part of 4 months. This was at the start of my divorce. Why did I lift? Cause I was sick of cardio. Then I lifted for stress, now I lift to be a fucking monster.
I have been in a LTR with Mandy for about a year. The first two months I was still a man whore. At around 60 days I dropped to just Mandy and Shelly. About 7 months ago I went monogamous. She didn’t know about Shelly, and kept her head in the sand while I was spinning plates. I have no reason to suspect, nor really care if she was seeing other men for those first few months. TBH, she could be fucking someone else right now, and I wouldn’t care other than STD. I have no ties to this woman, so next is easy as block and ghost. I also have zero reason to suspect she is not 100% faithful.

I slept with Mandy on our first date. I could tell from how she was in bed that it had been a very long time (if ever) that she had been properly fucked by a real man who knows how to fuck. She couldn’t suck dick to save her life, had a gag reflex that was uncontrollable. No anal, not even a thumb. When I went down on her the first time, she literally blew up all over my face in about a minute due to no oral for who knows how long. The first time I came all over her face, her reaction was priceless. In the better part of 7 months I have turned this woman into an absolute submissive slut who will do anything I want, at any time.

I have trained her anally, orally, physically and mentally. She obeys commands with zero talk back when we flip into "playtime." About 3 months ago I was sick as a dog. Unannounced she came over my house after she got off work, made me soup, cleaned my kitchen, did my laundry and left at bedtime with her kids. So she does "girl" stuff to, which I do like. She is an absolute model of HSP's "Bitch Ladder."

I have never been rejected for sex, nor received starfish sex. In 12 months we have had two arguments, and these were due to me giving zero fucks about "manufactured drama." Both times, she also consumed a good deal of Jack & Coke so there is that. In the first instance I simply left her house and ghosted her for 18 hours. The second time I went into my pool to chill. She came out 10 mins later naked and got in with me. Anyway, I suck at comfort tests, because I do not care, and I suck at manufactured drama.

I have learned over the past year that Mandy has had in the approx. range of 20-30 sexual partners, all but 3 of them were in College. She has one baby daddy, and since her divorce 2 years ago she slept with one other man other than me. She had a 5 month long relationship post divorce, then was dry for 5 months, then met me. All of this has been trickle truth as I vet her, either when we are high/drunk and people tell the genuine truth. She is not fond of my sexual history and hates the fact I wont give her a number - other than more than 1, less than 1000 but - she would never admit it openly that she doesn't really wanna know. Bottom line, I don’t GAF about who she slept with prior to me because I can tell based off her sexual performance when first dating, it was all boring vanilla sex.

Many of you men have women who have beta orbiters. Guess, what? Mandy did to. When we first started dating she had at least 3-5 beta male orbiters that would DM her, like every single SM post, text her, call her, whatever. In less than a month, that number went to zero. In the beginning, I could tell her orbiters made her nervous, when we started dating. Not due to me mate guarding, but because I laughed at it and told her it was cute. I described to her (possible fight club rule break) exactly what they are, and that if she wanted that kind of attention, well for right now, I didn't care. But a LTR woman/wife who wants me - doesn't have a bunch of thirsty orbiters sliding into her DM's. Mandy has many male friends at work, as we all do and I have many female friends. But for you guys who have wives with legit beta orbiters - y'all have issues.

I walked into my relationship with Mandy operating 100% in my frame. There has been no Alpha->Beta slide or any type of recovery needed. What I have been able to accomplish with her in 7 months of training her is nothing more than a testament to building my own slut. But, it also serves as a caution to your married guys with wives on 1000 foot ropes who think you have this awesome "on the road to 100% recovery MAP and relationship" shit going on.

You fucking don’t. And you likely never will either. I went from Alpha->Beta (fucked up really) and the relationship was over. It was never going to get back to the baseline I had established in my "head" so I checked out. I didn’t have the patience for the 1000 foot rope, didn’t care about the marriage (esp. after she tried to take my kids away) and went full on Scorched Fucking Earth.

Other than the duration of my D and the financial cost associated with it, the scorched earth approach has worked. I have weathered false DV claims, CPS inquires, etc. But I am still not a 100% free man, and that causes cyclical depression and anxiety for me in my life.

I have scripts for both Trazadone and Ambien, and use them both to calm my nerves and sleep when necessary. Personally, I love the Ambien (10mg) and take it every night around 8:30pm when in bed. I wake up at 5:30am ready to kick some ass. Trazadone I will take 25mg when the Anxiety hits real bad, but it take the PRN only.

Getting back to reality and expectations. As I look at this sub lately, I see a lot of men talking about their wives, the sex they get, what they lift, how they eat, when they take a shit and how many ply's of TP they have.

Listen, I am in the - "you are never going to get there camp" after my personal experiences with my relationships. But I also didn’t care.

What I am here to do, is tell you about what a possible relationship, under really good initial conditions can look like in about a year. But what you have to realize is that what I walked into with Mandy, is not the relationship I had with my wife, nor the relationship you have either. While I absolutely enjoy and even "love" my relationship with Mandy, I know that she 100% replaceable with 10 other women just like her. I have zero ties to her. No shared kids, no shared resources, nothing. We stay at each others houses often, but the bottom line is that where I live in Dallas - I am not moving out of until my kids are done with school because the schools are the best. And right now, cohabitation is not even something discussed.

This literally gives me all the power in the relationship.

Mandy knows she is 100% replaceable. The fact she has no real ties to me, adds unspeakable amounts of dread to her life. There are times where I feel sorry for her, and I know I fail a ton of comfort tests. Just recently she made the comment "I know if we broke up, you would have 4 other women by the end of the week." My response "Easily" was not the best, and I do need to work on showing a little more comfort at those times.
Back on track, you need to understand that there is zero motivation from your wife to turn herself into a Mandy, unless you are willing to walk away. The levels of Dread are not enough. You have to, in your core believe and be willing to TAKE LESS THAN WHAT YOU THINK YOU ARE WORTH for the duration of your reboot phase in HOPES you will get something back. Good luck dealing with that mental anger and baggage. I sure as fuck couldn't, and didn't want to.

For me, at 37 years old, with probably less days ahead of me than I would like........

I was unwilling to make that commitment and make those deposits into the bank. My balls are snipped. I have my kids. I have a finite amount of time on this rock, and once I took a pragmatic approach to it, I was done. The marriage was over. I started banging bitches and started working on my exit plan and putting it into motion.

This post, is not to tell you, that I do not like women and/or relationships. I actually really enjoyed being married and I enjoy being in a mutually beneficial LTR with someone. But once I am divorced, I will never get married again. I will cohabit with someone likely, but no marriage. I already have my kids, cant have more, don’t want more, so the prospect of betting 50% or more of what resources I have left after this divorce, and what I will build in the future, are not worth it.

Most of you guys need to chill the fuck out. You have a long, tough road ahead of you. What I see is a bunch of men who are either unwilling to put in the work to better themselves, put in the work to exit the relationship or just lack patience and ability to execute.

If you cant commit to lifting, then you will never fix your shit. That is the #1 piece of advice for a reason, because it is so critical. Over three years of work. 18 months of divorce. 6 months of planning before that. One could say lifting gave me the resolve to do what I needed to do.

You, sir faggot - you need to fucking decide what you want. Stop with the fucking mental debate and masturbation, stop with all of it. You either have the balls or you don’t. You either are willing to make those big, heavy deposits into the bank, or you are not.

It is all on you.

The simple question is...

Are you willing to live below your possible means in your relationship in hopes of a sweet payout later? Or are you going to jump ship like me?

Keep in mind, the relationship never defines the man.
The Burden of Family
by TheFamilyAlpha | June 6, 2017 | Link

Read the entire post on the Family Alpha Blog:
https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/12/05/the-burden-of-family/

Nick Kelly recently released a Podcast Listen Here.

In the Podcast he answers the question as to whether he’ll get married or into an LTR and have kids. He says(paraphrased), “no, not now – possibly not ever.” He then goes on to discuss how he puts work before all else and all of the married men & fathers he knows have lost their fire.

When I heard this I nodded in agreement as having a family does reduce a man’s output. I let the thought go and listened to the rest of the audio clip which conveniently ended right before I finished my commute from work.

I didn’t come back to this topic until I was laying down with both of my kids. I had intended to work on editing the TFA book, but both my son and daughter came up to me right before I was going to put them down for a nap (we had a late party to attend that night) and they asked if we could have a ‘family nap’(think Willy Wonka’s grandparents, everyone in the bed napping) basically I’ll nap with them, one on each side – me in the middle.

My immediate instinct was to say “No” as I had edits to do, but I thought of all the other times where I’ve said No the past 2 weeks because I was studying for finals, knocking out assignments, writing posts, etc.

So I said, “Yes.”

While lying there I thought of Nick Kelly’s point on Work. I was also thinking of how there is nowhere in the world I’d rather be than laying on that bed with both of their little heads on my chest listening to them lightly snoring, in rhythm. I thought of how choosing to nap with them over editing was me placing the ‘work’ I had to do with them over the work I had to do on the book.

I caught myself thinking of this/that and intentionally forced myself to immerse in the now. Hearing their snores, their soft hair, the warmth from their little bodies, my mind was warmed by the comfort & joy that comes from knowing your kids still need you.

I won’t have these moments for much longer and that’s a sobering thought. My son is becoming a man, more and more independent with each passing day. Same with my daughter, I find her asking for help less and less with the passing months.

I chose this life; I purposely chose the grind of fatherhood knowing that by doing so, I’d become a less productive individual with regard to my own pursuits.

But that’s the point; their development, upbringing, and life experiences have become a part of my work.

This is an aspect of fatherhood & marriage that is lost on many men. They view their wife and kids as a burden, they think they would be better if only they were single.

This is a flawed mentality and it is where the FAMILY aspect of being a Family Alpha comes into play.

Nick Kelly can travel to anywhere at any time he chooses. /u/IllimitableMan can pump out a high workload of writing without having to worry about dedicating time to others. Some men view them with envy, wishing “if only I weren’t married with kids” as if their failure to perform has to do with their life status.

Married men and fathers, look upon your wife & kid(s) as fuel, not an anchor. Recognize that your role in life is different than the single guys out there. They can travel in a moment’s notice while you are raising the next generation of men and women who will raise the standard of masculinity and femininity in our society.

When you create a pathway to act as your son’s Rite of Passage you are doing your work as a masculine man. When you lead your wife to staying in shape, being a freak in the sheets, and allowing her to fill her feminine role you are doing your work as a man. Most of the work done by the Family Alpha’s out there is done in silence. We are the Silent Professionals of the Manosphere; the men who write on our blogs when the family has gone to sleep, in between activities with the kids, or while a wife is talking to us and seeking guidance.

We are the men who have to wake up earlier to get time alone and stay up later to get edits done. We make time to lift, read, and write while also leading a wife, educating our children, and ensuring the entire clan is truly living, getting the most of their days, and Hanging Polaroids.

Read the Rest on the Family Alpha Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/12/05/the-burden-of-family/

Follow on Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
The Beginning

M/27. My journey of personal transformation began a while before I found MRP. I was an upper 300s-pound slob and beta as hell. I met the woman who is now wife through mutual friends (She came to our weekly D&D sessions of which I was the DM). She was and is a high-value woman, and at the time we met I had no idea why she fell in love with me. For a year, I had done a low-carb diet on and off and had gotten my weight down to 300 lbs. During this time we were going at it like honeymooning bunnies. About six months before I proposed to her (two year relationship), she started going through hormone treatment for PCOS which included being on the NuvaRing. I went through a dry spell and victim puked/negotiated sex as hard as possible. She was still in high spirits and agreed to try daily. She would get in the mood but be dry as a desert. We tried to solve that problem with lube but it was like she would soak it up and be in pain the whole time. After a few weeks of this she took sex off of the table until she was "normal". At the time, I was a man that looked for external validation anywhere and everywhere. At home, it was get sex or I felt like a terrible/unattractive man, and at work if I didn't get external validation I didn't try (Oddly my work was giving me a lot of external validation so I was still getting promotions and kicking ass).

Finding MRP and Swallowing the Pill

I want to start by saying my wife has always been the most amazing, supportive woman I know. Throughout our relationship, she's noticed the positive changes I've made and enthusiastically encouraged me. She rarely shit tests me and even though it is obvious when she is mood swinging, she will internalize it and not try to push it on me. Unlike myself she has always had a very strong father figure (see career army father) which has left her with unbounded confidence.

After a lengthy six month dry spell, I was at wits' end with sexual frustration. My confidence had mostly stayed the same as I was now 290-ish and walking every day (quality time with my dog). Like most of you I found MRP through other subreddits such as deadbedrooms. I sorted by top, read the post "Year One" and I could not put this down. I read, absorbed and very much related to NMMNG. It was the story of my life; father passed away early and older brother was in college/medical school. I read NNMNG a total of three times in a two-week period. From there I read MMSLP, WISIFG, Rollos, Book of Pook, and all of the family alpha blog.

I absorbed all of it and made three important changes (in my attempt to not go Rambo):

- I owned my shit (took over laundry, cleaning up after dog, taking out all trash and cleaning)
- I got a gym membership
- I stopped looking for external validation
Of the three, that last one is harder than I thought; I still catch myself slipping up at least once a day.

Three Months of Progress

Mentally: I have continued to re-read past books and have moved on to furthering my career by studying for certifications. I read Meditations by Marcus Aurelius, and started SGM in an attempt to fix my current issue. I have started journaling my daily activities, and if I did nothing productive that day I left an entry stating such.

Physically: I am now 273 lbs. (the lightest I have been since the 8th grade) and continuing my low carb diet.

- Squat 205 lbs
- Bench 115 lbs
- Press 70
- Deadlift 215 lbs

Spiritually: I have started meditating in my own way. Whenever I feel like I am getting angry or feel like I am setting up a covert contract, I meditate and release any feelings of anger I have.

A Turning Point

One of the posts on MRP went over planning a vacation start to finish. This past Memorial day I planned a vacation to a local waterpark/amusement park for the long weekend. Set up the hotel, found restaurants we would like, got tickets and reservations everywhere and for the most part it went off without a hitch. She loved it. I had not initiated in some time due to rejection but the first night we were there she initiated and we had the most passionate sex we had had in more than a year.

The State of the Relationship

I now lead as much as possible. I am decisive about where and what we eat but do listen to suggestions with me ultimately making the decision. I now cook at least one meal a week which she is loving. (No previous cooking experience, I want to be an amazing chef)

I kino pretty much all of the time, regardless of whether I am feeling in the mood and she loves the affection without strings being attached. The lack of covert contracts have really allowed our relationship to bloom. The sex is roughly at a 33% soft no with about a 10% hard no but I am still unattractive and lack the physical endurance to have prolonged sex which is my biggest problem currently.

Oneitus and Luck

I put my wife on a pedestal and was deep in oneitus for the whole of our relationship. She had not changed and has treated me very well but knowing what I know that would have most likely changed in time. I believe I am very lucky to have stumbled on this information at such a young age before my marriage had gone to shit and will continue to strive to be the best ME I can be.

Father Figure

I have gained since getting married a very strong father figure in my step father. We take time to smoke cigars on the weekend and he imparts his wisdom from 24 years in the army on me. I dissect it and absorb it as gospel.

Summary

Mine is not a wholly negative story. There was a lot I could have done better and more efficiently since I started my journey, but overall the personal improvements I've made have changed my life forever. I would say a combination of getting my shit together and her medicine balancing out has revived our sex lives, but I really need to work on getting better and lasting longer.
Bring a Gun to a Knife Fight
by ParadoxThatDrivesUs | May 3, 2016 | Link

There's a famous scene in Raiders of the Lost Ark where Indiana Jones is confronted with an expert swordsman who threatens him with an intimidating display of whirling swordsmanship while facing off against Jones. Jones responds by shrugging his shoulders, pulling out a gun, and shooting the guy.

I'm starting to see that MRP is about bringing a gun to a knife fight.

A lot of noob questions are focused on small tactics - she said this, so I should say that, but then what if she says the other thing, etc. If you're evenly matched against the swordsman, then maybe that kind of minute tactical examination seems to make sense, since any small advantage could win the day.

But the real solution is to blow right past that stage, to improve yourself to the point that small tactics don't even matter. You bring out the gun and end it. And you don't reach that point by studying swordsmanship really hard (her frame). You reach it by developing your frame to the point that you simply transcend her frame. Improve yourself until you are a man of such quality that the petty bullshit that's weighing you down now isn't just "solved," it's totally irrelevant. Then IDGAF is not just a pose. Bring a gun to a knife fight and you truly don't need to GAF.
Never Complain; Never Explain
by StandardDeparture | November 10, 2018 | Link

Summary: I stumbled upon a surprising nugget of wisdom today on AOM.

https://www.artofmanliness.com/articles/never-complain-never-explain/

Posting here as well (I posted in TRP the other day) to make sure people see it. This is doubly so in a marriage.

Body: I know AOM sometimes gets a bad rap around these parts for being a little too "happy wife, happy life" but I surprised myself by giving this one a read and finding a lot of overlap with TRP.

I'll mostly let the text stand on its own, but it discusses status and power dynamics when you choose to dive down a rabbit hole of explanation, the implications on your confidence and authority, and the overall weakness of hanging on what other people think of you.

One section in particular stood out - President Trump used this to great effect in his debates.

“Never complain; never explain” doesn’t necessarily mean not saying anything to your doubters, complainers, and critics, but limiting your response to a sharp rejoinder. Disraeli in fact formulated his maxim after hearing the advice of fellow politician Lord Lyndhurst, who said: “Never defend yourself before a popular assembly except with and by retorting an attack.” Thus, a short, pithy rebuttal or a humorous, yet withering sarcastic quip (Churchill was the master of these) may be in order. Then you turn heel and don’t engage further.

Instead of engaging with his competition, he gave a nice succinct "WRONG" and instantly filled the viewer's mind with doubt concerning what the attacker was saying, while retaining his power and respect. Or the infamous "because you'd be in jail" to Hillary - did it address the main point? No, not really. But it's remembered all these months later and elicits a great laugh from the audience at her expense.

Brett notes, and we should also note, that this is not black and white. If the CEO of your firm is significantly offended or wronged, he won't be impressed by your refusal to explain yourself, he'll just have his secretary get you a box for your stuff and kick you to the curb. (Law 19: Do not offend the wrong person.)

Lessons Learned:

- Value can be found in all types of resources around us.
• Powerful men avoid explaining their actions.
• Make your accomplishments seem effortless. (Law 30)
• Conceal your intentions. (Law 3)
• So much depends on reputation. (Law 5)
• Use absence to increase respect and honor. (Law 16)
• Cultivate an air of unpredictability. (Law 17)
• Act like a king. (Law 34)
Dealing with the stressed wife.
by Red-Curious | July 7, 2017 | Link

As a corollary to my previous post on The Biological Step-Mother mentality, I should address the issue of wives who are constantly stressed out.

DEVELOPING THE PROBLEM

In my previous post I made this assertion as a core principle:

Women don't want to feel like wives; they want to feel like the hot girl who's dating the bachelor who has it all together.

How do "wives" feel? By cultural context, wives are always stressed out. This is true even if they're not stressed out. AWALT - they share what's stressing them and it becomes a comparison game. When they realize they're not stressed, they see another woman on Facebook or at the mall with a better life claiming to be stressed and have to hamster their way into believing they are more stressed so they can justify why their life isn't as good as the other woman's. This self-comparison game in and of itself creates stress and discontentment. There's some hypergamy behind this too, but I won't get into that now.

Wives will always blame their husbands for their stress, but won't always tell them they're doing so. The hot babe a guy dates will rarely blame him for her stress. He is her salvation from stress. Again, there's some hypergamy to this as well (he'll pull her up out of the muck), but I'll skip straight to this: Your wife wants to be the hot babe, not the wife. With her words she wants all of the technicalities of wifedom, but she doesn't want to feel like a wife. Why? Because wives are stressed and you were supposed to save her from that. The fact is, stress is unavoidable and inevitable; but the prospect of a savior at least gives her hope, which is the strongest force fighting against stress.

If she's still stressed, you weren't the savior she was looking for, so she either (1) looks for another savior, letting her hamster justify it, or (2) she lets the hamster spin even further into the realm of developing mental disorders to cope with the decision to stay with her husband. This is why all husbands think their wives are at least a little crazy. If she chooses 1, he's not her husband; if she chooses 2, he is her husband and she actually is crazy.

No. 2 most often comes in the form of depression, sometimes developing histrionic tendencies (i.e. addiction to drama, most often creating it through angry outbursts). When her mental state plummets, she can once again justify staying with her husband. "I really did marry up. Look how much of a mess I am! I'm lucky to have him to take care of me. Those other girls don't have to deal with this stuff; that's why their lives are so much better. I guess I should give my hubby some obligation sex to thank him for sticking it out with me through all this." The husband then gets the obligation sex and is totally dissatisfied, yet somehow jumping up and down at the fact that he actually got sex.
UNDERSTANDING THE PROBLEM

I've learned this lesson a million times over: Women are stressed by thinking about what they have to do, not actually doing it.

Most stress for women comes from comparing themselves to other women. When they make these comparisons, they begin formulating ways to make their lives more like the other women's lives. Unfortunately, these other women only reveal the best aspects of their lives, always talking about their stress, but never showing it, creating cognitive dissonance (the explanation on how is too long to get into here). Because it's impossible to live up to the displayed standard, this creates a never-ending list of things that needs to be done for your wife to accomplish her goal. At first, she deals with the minor stress because it is rationalized by the verbalized stress these other women say they experience. Unfortunately, because hamsters can't run infinitely (even the brain can't compute infinity) and she can never compute a list long enough to satisfy the cognitive dissonance, the system overheats, the hamster passes out, and she can no longer justify how she's living her life. She is stressed to the max.

Interestingly, most husbands will notice that when their wives actually finish a project, they feel good about themselves. There is a sense of accomplishment. That is because the work itself is not as stressful as thinking about the work. The list is what burns out her brain, not checking things off of it.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM

Women need to have someone else think about the work for them, then allocate them actual work to do. Some guys (especially rich ones) take all the burden off her shoulders altogether by hiring everything out. Get a cleaning lady, hire a live-in nanny, get the boy down the street to mow your yard, etc. Some of these things actually increase her stress because it denies her the sense of accomplishment and her hamster has to justify doing nothing. Contrary to popular belief, women don't want to go shopping and lay on the beach all day. They want that in periodic bursts, but they need to feel like they're nurturing their husbands and children in some way. This is a God-given biological imperative for them.

The best way a husband can help his stressed wife is by taking the burden of thinking about the work away from her. Incidentally, we're actually very, very good at this because we're not trying to compute infinity. How do you do this? I said in my last post: take over. How do you do that?

OYS is one way, but here's a more practical solution that (1) gives immediate relief, (2) kick-starts a new tone for the relationship, (3) develop your wife's ability to trust your lead and (4) confuses the heck out of her, making her more susceptible to noticing the changes you're making without you bragging about them to her. Ready? Here it is:
Honey, for the next 3 days let's agree that you'll do absolutely nothing productive except what I ask you to do.

My wife laughed at first. "That's ridiculous. How will things get done?" "I'll be responsible for everything." "You can't do it all yourself." "You're right, I'll delegate tasks to you to help out." "So you're going to tell me what to do?" "Yes" [don't explain this away, just say "yes"]. "You don't even know what all needs to be done. You'll forget very important things." "Then I'll be responsible when it doesn't get done, not you" [she's going to eat that up!] "But it still won't get done, and we can't have that. These things are important." "When it doesn't get done, if it's important I'll find out it didn't get done, take responsibility, and will remember next time." "Well, what am I supposed to do when I run out of things you've told me to do?" "Whatever makes you happy." "What if being productive makes me happy?" "Then ask me and I'll find more productive things." "What if I just want to do the things that I think need to get done?" "Don't do it. Go for a walk, head to the mall, or watch some Netflix instead." "Okay!"

When you leave for work the next morning, "Today I need you to do the dishes, run a load of laundry, vacuum the living room, pick the kids up from school, and make spaghetti for dinner." "What about ___?" "I've got that covered. You just do those things I told you to do." It doesn't matter what it is - if she asks about it, you have to take responsibility for it or else you've just proven you can't keep your end of the deal. She won't give you slack because you're "new to this." Your newness is exactly why she'll be uncomfortable accepting this proposal. If you need to, allocate it to her the next day.

If your wife also works, assign her "go to work" as one of your things on the list and adjust your list to be realistic in light of the time she has at home.

If she has something on her list that hasn't gotten done in a long time, she'll eventually ask about it. Just say, "I'm responsible for that. I'll get it done in my time. If it's not done, you keep enjoying yourself and blame me if it becomes a problem." Inviting your wife to blame you does two key things: (1) it proves she can rely on you because you're making yourself extremely vulnerable in an area where most guys won't be (they usually pass blame away), and (2) it takes the impact out of blaming you, so there's no point in bringing it up when she actually gets around to trying; eventually she'll just give up trying, seeing that throwing blame that you willingly accept doesn't do anything for her histrionic tendencies.

POTENTIAL PIT-FALL - She might still keep computing a list just in case you fail. Be ready for this. Ask her: "What else needs to get done today that I didn't do?" If she tries to answer, you stop her, make a buzzing noise and say, "I'm sorry, but the judges would accept 'nothing' or 'you already did everything.'" Seriously, though, I made a judgment about what needed to be done today and those things didn't make the cut. You don't need to worry about those things, I do. Let me decide what needs to get done, you help me do it. Got it?" Then secretly run to another room and make a note in your phone not to forget those things next time because you're an idiot and you forget things too. The difference is: you can handle forgetting things and doing better next time; she can't.
CONCLUSION - Women are stressed not by doing things, but by thinking about what needs to be done. Do that thinking for her so she doesn't have to. Get her to agree to this up-front so she doesn't stress herself out thinking about how to handle it when you fail. Let her cast the blame on you for things that don't get done, diffusing her ability to get to you in the first place. Test her periodically to make sure she's not secretly creating lists behind your back and learns that the correct answer is: "It's your responsibility."
FIELD REPORT: COMFORT AND FRAME
by Bushpilot817 | November 9, 2018 | Link

For the last couple of weeks I’ve been very busy and working late at work as a couple of hard deadlines approach. I let the wife know it was going to be this way, and it occurs from time to time in my career. She knows this. I am very focused on making sure everything goes down as planned during these times.

Side note - she is 39 and two months pregnant with our 4th.

Yesterday she sent a long email about how I have changed, I’m not the man she married, she misses the old me that would share my feelings, she is scared about the pregnancy, blah, blah. (Read: needs comfort and reassurance).

I made sure I was in a good mood when I got home. I always take a few minutes on the drive home to clear my head of work stuff and be fun when I make it home. I come in the house, say hey to everyone and give her a quick kiss. She asks if I’m hungry and heads to the kitchen while I hang with the kids for a few and tuck them into bed.

I go back to the kitchen, grab her and give her a real kiss; she’s all over me. I keep kissing, move to her neck, kissing and biting, finger her with one hand and finger her ass with the other. She immediately starts squirting and comes. I turn her around, push her against the island and fuck her while she’s begging for it, then I fuck her in the ass and finish.

Food got cold, so she re-heated it while I sat down. I told her to come sit by me while I ate. Asked about her day and listened. I addressed the email, and told her that she knows we’ve both been tired, her emotions are all over the place, having another baby doesn’t change anything. We already have three kids. She agreed, happily. When we were done I told her we were going to go lay in bed and watch a show. She was a sweet little kitten, and I had a great night and ending to the day.

Women want to know you desire them, and the best way to show it is to take them. Always lead, hold frame and give a little comfort as needed.

I’m not posting this to boast. 15 months ago I was a different man. I couldn’t have even had the same outcome and post this a few months ago. But after I swallowed the pill, posts like these were always an encouragement to me. I welcome feedback and discussion.
"Do something about it or shut the fuck up."

by druganswer | July 28, 2016 | Link

I heard this little gem the other day and kind of blew it off as some cold blooded shit, but the more I thought about it, the more it resonated with me.

This phrase can be applied to just about everything in your life. You see people bitching about their problems on AskMRP, on reddit as a whole, all over your home and personal life, you've probably even been guilty of this from time to time.

Your wife is texting a coworker she has a crush on, you have a dad bod, your coworkers walk all over you, you're balding, the kid won't do his homework. Hell, even small day to day shit: the one barista puts too much cream in your coffee, the gas station you frequent smells like dead hookers, your refrigerator makes an annoying ticking sound. Do something about it or shut the fuck up.

If something is worth bitching about, it is worth acting on. I'm almost certain nobody has ever become great by crying on the internet (or to themselves, for that matter). And if you have absolutely no control over something, it probably isn't worth your time to dwell on it forever; you're better off directing that energy elsewhere. So when you hear that voice in your head start complaining about something, just tell yourself to do something about it or shut the fuck up. Either way, you will be better off.
The Dangers of Information Addiction and Why to Avoid News!
by FailingBillionaire | April 12, 2017 | Link

Hi Lads,

this sub has given me a lot of insight and it's my turn to give something back.

Today I'll tell you about how I overcame my "Information Addiction" a.k.a. Reddit Addiction. All credit goes to Rolf Dobelli (www.dobelli.com)

This post is going to be long and you won't be able to skim it. Thanks to heavy news consumption, many people lost the reading habit and struggle to absorb more than a couple of paragraphs straight. This post will show you how to get out of this trap - if you are not already too deeply in it.

Intro - News is to the mind, what sugar is to the body

We are so well informed and yet we know so little.

Why? Because 200 years ago we invented a toxic form of knowledge called "news".

At core, human beings are cavemen in suits and dresses. Our brains are optimized for our original hunter-gatherer environment where we lived in small groups with limited sources of food and information. Our brains and bodies now live in a world that is the opposite of what we are designed to handle. And this leads to great risk and to inappropriate, outright dangerous behavior.

Unlike reading books which requires thinking, we can swallow limitless quantities of news flashes, like bright-colored candles for the mind. Today we reached the same point in relation to information overload that we faced 20 years ago in regard to food intake. We are seeing how toxic news can be.

What follows is a list of of the toxic dangers of news. I have gone without news for a couple of weeks and though it is hard at first the upsides are, less disruption, more time, less anxiety, deeper thinking, more insights. It's not easy, but it's worth it.

No. 1 - News misleads us systematically

News reports do not represent the real world.

Our brains are wired to pay attention to visible, large, scandalous, sensational, shocking, fast changing, loud graphic onslaughts of stimuli. Our brains have limited attention to spend on more subtle pieces of intelligence that are small, abstract, complex, slow to develop and quite. News organizations systematically exploit this bias.

News media outlets focus on the highly visible. They display whatever information they can convey with gripping stories and lurid pictures. News grabs our attention; that's how its business model works. Even if the advertising model didn't exist, we would still soak up news pieces because they are easy to digest and superficially quite tasty.

The highly visible misleads us.

As a result of news, we walk around with the completely wrong risk map in our heads:

- Terrorism is overrated. Chronic stress is underrated.
- The collapse of Lehman Brothers is overrated. Fiscal irresponsibility is underrated
- Astronauts are overrated. Nurses are underrated.
- Britney spears is overrated. IPCC reports are underrated - Airplane crashes are overrated. Resistance to antibiotics is underrated.

The probabilistic mapping we get from consuming news is entirely different from the actual risks we face. And if you think you can compensate for this bias with the strength of your own inner contemplation, you are wrong. Bankers and economists - who have powerful incentives to compensate for news-borne hazards - have shown that they cannot.

The only solution: cut yourself off from news consumption entirely.

No. 2 - News is irrelevant

Out of 10,000 news stories you have read in the last 12 months, name one that - because you consumed it - allowed you to make a better decision about a serious matter affecting your life, your career, your business - compared to what you would have known if you hadn't swallowed that morsel of news.

The point is: the consumption of news is irrelevant to the forces that really matter in your life. At its best, it is entertaining, but it is still irrelevant.

Even if against all odds you found one piece of news that substantially increased the quality of your life - compared to how your life would have unfolded if you hadn't read or seen it. How much trivia did your brain have to digest to get to that one relevant nugget? Even that question is a hindishgt analysis. Looking forward, we can't possibly identify the value of a piece of news before we see it, so we are forced to digest everything on the news buffet line. Is that worthwhile? Probably not!

The first Internet browser debuted in 1995. The public birth of this hugely relevant piece of software barely made it into the press despite its vast future impact. People find it very difficult to recognize what's relevant. It's much easier to recognize what's new. We are not equipped with sensory organs for relevance. Relevance doesn't come naturally. News does. That's why the media plays on the news.
The relevant versus the new is the fundamental battle of the modern man. News floods you with a worldview that is not relevant to your life. What does relevance mean? It means: what is important to you personally. Relevance is a personal choice. To the media, any tale that sells lots of copies is relevant - Paris Hilton, a train crash in China, some idiotic world record. So don't take the media's view for it.

No. 3 - News limits understanding

News has no explanatory power. News items are little bubbles pooping on the surface of a deeper world. What we really want is to understand the underlying processes, how things happen. The important stories are non-stories: slow, powerful movement that develop below the journalists' radar.

Will accumulating facts help you understand the world? Sadly, no. The more "news factoids" you digest, the less of the big picture you will understand. No evidence exists to indicate that information junkies are better decision makers. They are certainly not more successful than the average Joe, otherwise we would expect journalists to be at the top of the pyramid. That's not the case.

Reading news to understand the world is worse than not reading anything. What's best: cut yourself off from daily news consumption entirely. Read books and thoughtful journals.

No. 4 - News is toxic to your body

News constantly triggers the limbic system. Panicky stories spur the release of cascades of glucocorticoid (cortisol). In other words, your body finds itself in a state of chronic stress. High glucocorticoid levels cause impaired digestion, lack of growth (cell, hair, bone), nervousness and susceptibility to infections. The other potential side effects of news include fear, aggression, tunnel-vision and desensitization.

No. 5 - News massively increases cognitive errors

News feeds the mother of all cognitive errors: Confirmation Bias. We automatically filter out evidence that contradicts our preconceptions.

News not only feeds the confirmation bias, it exacerbates another cognitive error: the story bias. Our brains create stories that "make sense". And news organizations are happy to deliver those fake stories. Instead of just reporting that the stock market declined by 2%, the anchors proclaim, "The market declined by 2% because of X." This X could be a bank profit forecast, fear about the EURO, a handshake between two presidents. The fact is, we don't know why the stock market moves as it moves. Too many factors go into such shifts. To a large degree, news reports consists of nothing but stories and anecdotes that end up substituting for coherent analysis. It's irrational and we should stop it from contaminating our thinking.
No. 6 - News inhibits thinking

Thinking requires concentration. Concentration requires uninterrupted time. News pieces are specifically engineered to interrupt you. They are like viruses that steal attention for their own purposes. This is not about stealing time (see reason 8). This is about the inability to think clearly because you have opened yourself up to the disruptive factoid stream.

News makes us shallow thinkers. But it's worse than that. News severely affects memory. There are two types of memory. Long-range memory's capacity is nearly infinite, but working memory is limited to a minimum amount of slippery data (try repeating a 10-digit phone number after you hear it for the first time). The path from short-term to long-term memory is a chokepoint in the brain, but anything you want to understand must pass through it. If this passageway is disrupted, nothing passes through.

News consumers are suckers for irrelevance and online news consumers are the biggest suckers. News is an interruption system.

No. 7 - News changes the structure of the brain

News works like a drug. As stories develop, we naturally want to know how they continue. Why is news addictive? Once you get into the habit of checking the news, you are driven to check it even more often.

Science used to think that our brain, the dense connections formed among the 100 billion neurons inside our skulls, was largely fixed by the time we reached adulthood. Today we know that this is not the case. The human brain is highly plastic. Nerve cells routinely break old connections and form new ones. When we adapt to a new cultural phenomenon, including the consumption of news, we end up with a different brain. Adaptation to news occurs at a biological level. News reprograms us.

No. 8 - News is costly

News wastes time. It exacts exorbitant cost.

News taxes productivity three ways. First, count the consumption-time that news demands. Second, tally up the refocusing time - or switching cost. Third, news distracts us even hours after we've digested today's hot items. News stories and images may pop into your mind hours, sometimes days later, constantly interrupting your train of thought. Why would you want to do that to yourself?

No. 9 - News is produced by journalists

Good professional journalists take time with their stories, authenticate their facts and try to think things through. But like any profession, journalism has some incompetent, unfair practitioners who don't have the time - or the capacity - for deep analysis. And you might not be able to tell the difference between a polished professional report and a rushed, glib, paid-by-the-piece article by a writer with an ax to grind. It all looks like news.
No. 10 - Reported facts are sometimes wrong, forecasts always Sometimes, reported facts are simply mistaken. With reduced editorial budgets at major publications, fact checking may be an endangered step in the news process. Many news stories include predictions, but accurately predicting anything in a complex world is impossible.

Did the newspapers predict World War I, the Great Depression, the sexual revolution, the fall of the Soviet empires, the rise of the Internet, resistance to antibiotics, the fall of Europe's birth rate or the explosion in depression cases? Maybe you'd find one or two correct predictions in a sea of millions of mistaken ones.

No. 11 - News is manipulative

Our evolutionary past has equipped us with a good bullshit detector for face-to-face interactions. We automatically use many clues to detect manipulation. Today, even conscientious readers find that distinguishing even-handed news stories from ones that have a private agenda is difficult and energy consuming. Why go through that?

The public relations (PR) industry is as large as the news reporting industry - the best proof that journalists and news organizations can be manipulated, or at least influence or swayed.

No. 12 - News makes us passive

News stories are overwhelmingly about things you cannot influence. This sets readers up to have a fatalistic outlook on the world. Compare this with our ancestral past, where you could act upon practically every bit of news. Our evolutionary past prepared us to act on information, but the daily repetition of news about things we can't act upon makes us passive. It saps our energy. It grinds us down until we adopt a worldview that is pessimistic, desensitized, sarcastic and fatalistic. The scientific term is learned helplessness.

No. 13 - News gives us the illusion of caring

We may want to believe that we are still concerned, as our eyes drift from a news anchor announcing the latest atrocity to the NBA scores and stock market quotes streaming across the bottom of the screen. But the ceaseless bombardment of image and verbiage makes us impervious to caring.

Action Step: What to do instead

Go without news. Cut it out completely. Go cold turkey.

Make news as inaccessible as possible. Delete the news apps from your phone. Sell your TV. Cancel your newspaper subscriptions. Do not pick up newspapers and magazines that lie around in airports and train stations. Do not set your browser default to a news site.

I personally bought a subscription in freedom.io. And got the "Off time" app. And I haven't visited a sub on Reddit except for TRP related subs the last 10 days.

The first week will be the hardest. Deciding not to check the news while you are thinking, writing or reading takes discipline. You are fighting your brain's built-in tendency. Stick to the cold-turkey plan.
Everything is about sex, except sex. Sex is about power.

by Sepean | November 21, 2018 | Link

That great quote from Frank Underwood. He's getting shit done, leading, being Machiavellian, he knows what makes people tick, how to make them do what he wants. And that quote sounds so right.

"Everything is about sex, except sex. Sex is about power."

But it's 100% beta. It's a great description of the beta's sexual strategy. A thirsty chump who works his ass off trying to impress the girls so they'll fuck him. Everything he does is about getting laid, and when he gets laid it has nothing to do with the girl just wanting to fuck. What she really wants from him is something else.

Rollo once wrote a great piece on being alpha https://therationalmale.com/2011/10/20/alpha/ including the news segment on Corey Worthington - a man who most of us would instinctively class as a loser, but who displays extreme degrees of alphaness. It's a great article because it illustrates how far the typical man's idea of a "real man" is from being alpha.

Frank Underwood is the other side of that coin. The guy has dodgy morals to say the least, but his leadership and power plays, that's impressive. He's a real man, right? Maybe, but like a lot of great leaders he's a fucking beta. He brings A LOT of beta to the table, but in the end he's playing beta game.

Maybe there's some alpha in him, I can't remember everything from the show and it's not that relevant anyway - it's fiction, not reality. The interesting thing about Underwood is how many men find him fascinating and how easy it is to mistake that for being alpha. The stuff about Underwood that impresses, that's beta. Power, influence, money, leadership, it's not alpha. Look at Corey from Rollo's article to see what alpha is. The typical male ideal of a real man is a lot of Underwood and very little Corey - it's a lot of beta and very little alpha. If your problem is a dead bedroom, you lack alpha and trying to be that sort of "real man" won't solve your problem. We're fascinated by power, but sex isn't about power.

To an alpha, nothing is about sex, except sex. Fill the rest of your life up with whatever you want. Some alphas are losers; lazy fucks, gamers, minimum wage personal trainers, lowlife drug dealers. Some alphas make the most out of their lives and work hard and lead. They do it because they like it, or like the fruits of it - they don't do it for sex. Sex is easy, because girls want to have sex with alphas, losers of winners. You don't have to promise them juicy news stories or a mansion when you're alpha.

As much as beta game doesn't make girls wet, remember that girls do have a dual sexual strategy. Sure she's attracted to alpha, but she also wants beta, especially for anything long term and involving a family. Here at MRP we're about bringing both. There are good beta qualities, stuff that we strongly identify with as men and that women seek in partners.
But if you lack alpha, you can't compensate with beta. If your wife doesn't want to fuck you, the solution isn't to bring more money, more leadership, more Frank Underwood. The solution is more Corey Worthington.
My Journey: What I learnt to do, or what not to do!

by mrprider | March 20, 2017 | Link

My Journey: What I learnt to do, or what not to do!

(This is what I should have posted instead of 3 separate bare bones posts earlier. /u/bogeyd6 - it’s all here, with meat this time.)

This will be a bit long, so here is the structure:

- Mistake 1 - Red pill Rambo – aka AF/BB and how to balance
- Mistake 2 - Mixing up masculine qualities with good-person qualities - How to assess correctly
- Mistake 3 - I have become awesome now, but I see no changes – aka Possible reasons why I am over-estimating my progress
- Mistake 4 - Getting frustrated – Flowchart to follow if you are unhappy
- My timeline of RP as reference

Mistake 1 - Red pill Rambo - aka AF vs. BB and how to balance

Every person is unique, so when you have two unique individuals then their relationship is unique too. So, depending on the personality of the people involved every relationship has minimum requirements for alpha and beta qualities. Too much alpha is cocky asshole, while too much beta is the uber-nice guy trying to please all the time.

Note that so far I have not used genders or relationship type so far. Because I believe this dynamic is true for any relationship in your life. You have had that one cocky asshole friend that never understands your problems but is always making fun of you. There always is that one pet-employee/student that is trying to please the boss/teacher. The quantities of alpha and beta present, and the minimum required for each relationship is unique.

In short:

- Alpha qualities – Leadership, Stoicism
- Beta qualities – Comfort, Empathy

When starting on this journey, we all learnt about the basics, the alpha fucks and beta bucks qualities and actions/activities that establish those qualities. We learned how the bad boys give tingles as they exhibit a lot of alpha qualities, while good guys (not “nice guys”, that’s another topic) exhibit a lot of beta qualities and make great husbands/providers. Go back to sidebar books if you need details, but here is a quick recap:

Coming back to MRP, most of the newbies start with very few alpha qualities, and usually moderate number of beta qualities. Also, of note is that dating and single life does not require as much beta qualities, while marriage or a LTR requires fair amount of beta qualities to be sustainable. Bigger the family (i.e. more kids, or grandparents living together etc) the higher the requirement for number of beta qualities for that relationship to be sustainable.

- Alpha qualities – tingles – favored for short term feelz - Increase SMV
- Beta qualities – comfort – favored for long term - Increase RMV where SMV is Sexual market value, and RMV is Relationship market value.

So, what happens when a newbie comes across the TRP/MRP and ‘correctly’ identifies the lack of alpha qualities in himself and then proceeds to ‘incorrectly’ reduce beta qualities while acting like an entitled asshole. That my friends is what we refer to as going Redpill Rambo.

Why does he do it? Because everyone told him to model after bad boys, and what is glaringly obvious to a 'good' and "nice guy"?

"The bad boys are assholes."

What you actually want to model after is:

- Confidence, boldness, muscular body, interesting hobbies, being fun

Don’t feel discouraged, happened to most of us, sort of a rite of passage.

How to fix that? Having been reading for a year now so I forget who advised this in MRP but the gist was: Keep doing what you have been doing, while adding alpha qualities. Do not stop doing the beta actions as these required for the relationship to survive. Now, this does not include nice guy activities that inherently have covert contract. Feel free to cut down on nice-guy activities as you see fit.

You might still be able to cut down on some beta activities without threatening relationship survival, but how much is that – it all depends on your (unique) relationship with that unique individual.

But wait, I don't want to be beta.

Of course not. That is why you add enough alpha that the ratio of alpha-to-beta tilts in favor of alpha. If instead you decide to decrease beta and thereby have more alpha than beta qualities, then you are just a lowly schmuck with not many qualities.

Now is a good time to refer to the chart that shows the paths forward. The horizontal axis is increasing beta actions in right direction; while vertical axis is increasing alpha actions in top direction. The red boxes show various idolized keywords as follows:

Balancing alpha and beta - Chart Link

- Low on Blue; Low on Red – Loser – No redeemable qualities at all
- High on Blue; Low on Red – MRP Newbie – Good for relationship comfort
- Low on Blue; High on Red – TRP Chad – Goof for sexual attraction, or tingles
- High on Blue; High on Red – Ideal RP – A good balance of alpha and beta actions, and lots of alpha and lots of beta

Horizontal dash line - If you are too low on alpha scale and as you keep adding, it will be a while before she or anyone notices a change in you. That is the minimum alpha required before a change is observed. Depending on the other person, there might be a power struggle or smooth sailing, but this is the right path forward.

Vertical dash line - This is the minimum amount of beta activities required for a relationship to survive. Chads are famously lacking in beta comfort actions so they are not ideal.

Transitions:

- Red Pill Rambo (Blue arrow): If you abandon all beta qualities while not adding enough alpha, you are going red pill Rambo, and following the blue arrow.
- TRP in LTR (Yellow arrow): In rare chance that you arrived here from being a TRP veteran, you are in great position already. Just need to add beta actions and boom you are the unicorn every woman is dreaming of.
- Growth mindset (Green arrow): For rest of us, we just need to keep increasing our alpha actions, while ensuring we do not drop below relationship threshold of beta actions.

But wait, what are these alpha actions, and why do I keep mixing alpha/beta/masculine/human/etc??

Mistake 2 - Mixing up masculine qualities with good-person qualities - How to assess correctly

That is the next mistake we made, at least I did. While I thought, I was increasing my alpha, I was just becoming a good human being (and shedding off my “nice guy” traits). Which is correct thing to do, but those are not the qualities that will generate tingles. Necessary but not sufficient.

Note that alpha-beta, masculine and SMV/RMV are all interconnected. For e.g., Doing the dishes or tidying up to ensure house is clean – alpha. Yes, it is your house, even if she is SAHM, you are a leader that ensures your place is in top top condition. However, it increases your RMV more than your SMV.

Being pleasant all around, joking and flirting with everyone, that will increase your SMV as well as RMV. Not being fat, but ripped with low bodyfat, that will increase your SMV more than RMV. Using foul/abusive language just to show you are badass – that is plain stupid.

Since most of us here start out bit overweight and not fit, the low hanging fruit is Lifting! Also, it is a slow process so it must be the first habit to be developed.

Further reading:

1. /u/Sepean posted excellent article here
2. /u/JDRoedell 's post on balancing RP

And this is where your self-analysis gets important. If you are improving by leaps and bounds, but not observing any changes, you need to:

1. Ensure you are working on things that require most working on. If you are an investment banker, you do not need to work on getting more money. If you are a gym trainer, you do not need to work on your deadlift from 3x bodyweight to 5x bodyweight. Find out what you are most lacking and ensure you have that on improvement track.

2. Ensure you are correctly understanding effect of each quality – Is it good for Sexual attraction or Relationship potential? If you keep working on RMV qualities, then do not expect SMV to improve.

3. Ensure you are not overestimating your progress. Which brings me to the next mistake.

Mistake 3 - I have become awesome now, but I see no changes:

Or Possible reasons why I am over-estimating my progress

[MrPrider and (/u/drtypr) 's checklist eg] (https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/5udfwn/so_you_think_you_are_doing_everything_yet_nothing)

This is just a checklist I like to review periodically to ensure I know where I stand. As noted in the discussion on that post, it is important to compare my current self to what I want to be, and not where I was at the start. If I get discouraged or impatient, then I look at the starting point and lift myself up that I have made progress, a little in some areas, a lot in other areas. And I will keep at it until I meet my goals. (And keep moving my goals forward as required).

Follow the link for more discussion on various things.

However, even after all this, you might be frustrated. If you are worried that you are missing something, then here is the flowchart to see what to do next:

Mistake 4 - Getting frustrated - Flowchart to follow if you are unhappy

Flowchart if you are frustrated

If you know what you are doing, then do not start the flowchart. It is when you are confused and frustrated with your progress.

Why this flowchart? At the start of every MRP journey, there will come a time when you will start getting IOIs from other women, some even blatantly flirting with you, but there would have been no change in your relationship with your wife. Plainly put, this is frustrating.

No, you are not doing it to improve this relationship but to improve yourself. No, there are no covert contracts that if you improve, this relationship will improve. However, as a human being, it is natural to get frustrated when everyone around can see the prize you are, but not your wife. You have this strong urge to serve the divorce papers and move on. Every few weeks.

Patience. Deep breath.

This flowchart ensures that you are doing everything you can to improve yourself. To increase your SMV so high that if you should leave your wife then you will have no problem in (1) getting laid and (2) maintaining RP lifestyle in any new relationship.

Follow the link and go through the discussion there. There are only 2 outputs from that flowchart, either you work on improving yourself, or you file for divorce. If you truly understand ‘complete ownership’ then you probably are already on the path to improvements and no need to start this flowchart.

Finally, on frustration and patience, here is a reference for newbies:

My timeline

I have considered myself smart, have engineering background, making 6 figures since late-20s, but I was a career beta. Until a year ago I did not know what redpill was.

34M/SMV 5/RMV 9 with 34F/SMV 7/RMV 5 and together 10 yrs at that point of time, no kids or pets, yet – felt disrespected and taken for granted

Time: Zero – Came across Athol Kay’s MMSLP
1^st month – spent at MMSLP forum, reading forum posts etc.
2^nd month – Came across TRP and MRP, Read NMMNG, WISNIFG, Rational Male etc
3^rd month – Start lifting in true sense. Yes, I was stupidly slow in starting this.
Realization of being career beta.
4^th month – went redpill Rambo, almost thinking of divorce
6^th month – getting IOIs in bars from HB6-7s, more frustration at home, changed job
8^th month – read bang and day bang and started approaching, got a number from girl for first time in decade, entered LDR and felt doomed
9^th month - depression, went back to sq 1, gained 20 lbs, mostly fat
10^th month – Sobered up, back in 4x/week in gym, running on weekends, 5 approaches/weekend
12 months – LDR end, but new job requires me to travel 3-4 days/week
~14months – SMV 7 by looks alone, can get to 8 given right situation. Had a FMorFY event. Replied “ok” to her threat to divorce. Ball is in my court to decide if I will continue or quit. She knows the boundaries and keeps testing them. IDNGAF. I have the MRP knowledge, and lifting experience to blast away.

Summary: I made all the usual mistakes, and sometimes keep repeating them. But, I know the path forward, and am gaining ground one step at a time. I felt I am going much slower than most FR I read here, but then accepted that is what it is. This is my journey, it is unique. I started this relationship as a complete beta, a happy go lucky aloof but beta, and then turned into pathetic beta. I am undoing all of that while adding the alpha qualities. And enjoying the process.
If you think you are going slow, it is okay. You made a mistake or you relapsed, it is not end of the world. You will be fine if you keep pushing. Journey is half the fun as well.
Proper interpretation of the Captain/First-Officer model
by man_in_the_world | September 20, 2018 | Link

Many guys here misinterpret the Captain/First-Officer model for marital leadership as a formal military/Star-Trek-style, appointed or agreed-upon official chain of command. This is a flawed interpretation which will serve you poorly; the informal "Leader-of-the-Pack"/"Best-Mate" leadership model, which is natural to small voluntary human social groups, should be your goal.

Forget Star Trek, the Army, and adult supervision

The military/Star-Trek-style, formal chain-of-command view of leadership is actually deeply blue-pill, because the leader is appointed by some higher external authority (admiral; Star Fleet headquarters; teacher; Bible), or elected or negotiated (which means that it can be withdrawn or renegotiated), and often ends up with a beta or inferior man in charge. (Have you ever wondered why so many red-blooded ex-military/police show up here with deeply blue-pill ideas and behavior and failing marriages? Now you know why!)

Formal, chain-of-command leadership is unnatural, inefficient, demotivating, and an ongoing source of conflict and resentment in small, voluntary or informal social groups (such as families; small gangs; groups of friends; pickup sports teams). In such groups, the leader emerges organically, based on his superior "alpha" and social traits. The leader is never formally voted on or declared, but everybody in the group knows who the true leader is and defers to him, his vision, plans, decisions, and judgments. This is informal "Leader of the Pack" or "pirate captain" leadership, with voluntary followers inspired by the implicit "captain" and his vision. If well led, small groups of inspired and motivated followers are generally much more productive, harmonious, cohesive, and happier than formally structured organizations.

In such groups, a "right-hand man" or "best mate" often emerges with whom the leader preferentially takes counsel, delegates secondary leadership, and entrusts to represent him or lead when he's away. The "best mate" earns this trust and role by being the most loyal, dedicated, diligent, and capable follower fully committed to the leader's vision and mission. This is the informal "first officer" role that you want your wife to spontaneously and willingly take up.

Becoming the Leader of your Pack

Leadership of the pack is never negotiated or discussed, but is simply claimed by the actions and behavior (not words; don't do this) of the "alpha". If you have to negotiate being the captain, you aren't a real captain.

Think about it, if she has to approve it, it means she is still leading. Leading is not achieved with verbal arguments so she recognizes your leadership.
This excellent post by /u/strategos_autokrator describes how to become the leader of your pack:

Leaders don’t need permission to lead. They just lead, period. Those that like your vision follow willingly. Those that don’t, well, they are useless to your vision, so you won't miss them when they stay behind. It is that laser-beam focus of the vision of the leader and doing whatever it takes to get to the goal that inspires others to follow. Thinking others have to follow so you can lead is having it all backwards, and this backward thinking is why she doesn’t trust you to lead.

Don't negotiate or discuss "who's the captain" with your wife; just be the superior productive, effective and charismatic leader of your pack, and she will likely follow and happily assume the "first/best mate" role over time.

For you hopeless Star Trek nerds, Khan, not Picard, is your model.
Archwinger from over a year ago - Being Controlling is for Losers

by | September 23, 2015 | Link

[deleted]
You can't get better without doing. And you can't do better without thinking.
by weakandsensitive | July 29, 2019 | Link

Past

Back in the PUA community, there were a ton of Keyboard Jockeys. These were the guys who would read all the material and theorycraft the hell out of everything. They knew the ins and outs of the lingo and would write about how all the theory should work. Those guys were morons.

The people who went out knew the KJs were full of shit. The theory is great (it really isn't.. ), but the application of theory gets messed up really fast. Being in field forces you to challenge your theory and adapt your approaches, otherwise you're going to continually fail. But being in field isn't enough - you also have to have the introspection and active/engaged learning to diagnose and understand what's actually going wrong. And those guys never did that -- those guys never failed or put themselves in a position to fail. So they never put themselves to succeed.

Present

Like I've mentioned in my OYS threads, I recently launched a side business in the travel services space. We're incorporated and we think we have a great solution to a problem people have. We're really excited to get out there and show how awesome we are to potential customers. So we did what any great company would do, we got in front of people. I spent this past weekend at a local festival trying to sell my product.

For the record, I've never sold anything in my life. I like engaging people when I'm in the mood, and I'd like to think I have pretty good interpersonal skills. I've never done any marketing, customer engagement, or sales. But I have a great service, so it should literally sell itself. Easy, right?

Day 1

Frankly, it sucked. It was awesome from a learning perspective, but right away I knew we weren't up to par. To our right was a gallery with photo booths and arts and crafts for kids. To our left was a Church was 5-7 people staffing it at any time, huge flow of friends and visitors, and a spinny wheel where they were just giving stuff away.

Our booth? It was me and my partner. We had a 4x8 banner and a canopy that you'd use while camping. We had literally nothing to engage people except the fact that there were 2 of us, and a belief in our product. So what'd we do? Cold approaches -- just like the good ol' PUA days.
It was grindy, like pulling teeth. People were polite, and some people were pleasant, others were interested, but ultimately, we were doing it wrong. They knew it, we felt it, the vibe just didn't flow right. It was draining and a defeating, but it was also such a massive learning experience.

---

Day 1 Retrospective

After day 1, it all felt wrong, but what was actually wrong? Taking the time to do a retrospective on what went wrong was so key to making progress on day 2.

There was the obvious

- We didn't have a good hook (no marketing, no free stuff).

But there was the much more subtle stuff

- We were trying to push our service onto people instead of knowing we have value and giving them the opportunity to want to learn about us. People hate feeling like they've a commodity -- and ultimately that was what we were doing day 1.

There was absolutely no reason for us to try to sell, because our service actually provides value. All we needed to do, was find the people who would benefit from our problem. Instead of talking about us and what we do, the focus needed to be on the customer and the problems that we can solve for them, i.e. our value add.

---

Day 2

It was awesome. It was a 12 hour day that felt like nothing. What'd we change? Just about everything.

- We pimped our setup. We added a globe and some airplanes.

- We went for a conversation instead of a sell. We got a globe and some pins to get an initial engagement. This was refined throughout the day from "Where are you going next?" to a more hypothetical "If you could go anywhere in the world, where would you go?" With the former, people still reacted as if we wanted to sell them something, and so wanted to avoid us if possible.

- We changed our approach. Instead of going to talk to people, we'd engage people who slowed down to read our banner. This made it a warmer approach. We gave an excuse for why we were talking to them, so they could feel the plausible deniability. "Hey! We're putting pins on our globe for where people want to travel. If you could.."
learned that putting a pause after "Hey!", actually drove people away, because that gave them time to worry about what we're trying to sell them on.

- We focused on learning about the customer. Who were these people coming to see us? Did they like to travel? If so, where? How often? What's their dream destination? Why? The lady who wanted to go to Zimbabwe was fascinating. And then to the points were our value lies. Do you book your own travel? What do you find most challenging? Is it the constant booking and price anxiety? That's where we can help. So now, instead of trying to get them to buy our service, we're solving their actual problems.

It was killer, just so much easier... and it's things I should've remembered from my PUA days. I'm not there to convince someone that I'm valuable. I'm already valuable. I'm there to learn about the other person to see if we're compatible. And if we are, let's see how we move forward to be mutually beneficial.

Day 2, we didn't need to sell anyone anything. They engaged with us. They asked for our cards. They signed up for our newsletter. Because we weren't trying to get them to buy anything, we were offering value and it was up to them to engage or not. And when they learned it was free value, they absolutely wanted to engage. Day 1, we had 4 email sign ups when we tried to get them to sign up. Day 2, we had multiple pages even though our approach was "we have a mailing list. if you're interested, feel free. if you're not, no worries."

You

There's a lot of stuff packed into the anecdote from the weekend. And none of it really has to deal with my shitty attempt at marketing. What it's really about is being better.

For you, dear reader, what I want you to takeaway are the following 3 points:

1. Not showing up means you're guaranteed to fail.

   I thought our service was so cool that it'd be so easy to do marketing and customer acquisition. I was full of shit and very, very wrong. That's why getting the actual in-field experience was enlightening. Next step is to get a way bigger globe to do more peacocking.

2. Just showing up is not enough.

   If all we did was to show up on day 2 and do the exact same shit we did day 1, we'd fail just as badly on day 2 with even greater volumes because of the longer day. "Hey! We're here! Buy us!" -- still a shitty tactic.

3. Being actively engaged, understanding the problem, and adapting are how you set yourself up to be better.
Refinement and improvement is all about understanding what's actually going wrong. You can't figure out what's going on if you're just dilly dallying going through the motions.

It's easy to end day 1 thinking we just had dickhead customers who didn't appreciate our greatness enough (true! by the way), and it was easy to think that day 2, with more people we would've had more and better customers (pipedream).

The hard work was understanding why things weren't really working and testing out different strategies to get that improvement. And then continually refining to be continually improving.

When I read OYS posts, so many of you guys are doing great work, doing the hard stuff -- the retrospection/introspection, the adaption, and the testing of various approaches, I love it. But there are some of you guys who just flounder and wait on other people's solutions -- and the reality for those people is they simply won't succeed. They'll be in a groundhogs day loop of Day 1.

I want you all to succeed, but if you have no interest in making yourself successful, I have no interest in making this fantastic place available to you. So be sure you're setting yourself up for success with or without MRP.
Listen up, Lazy Cunts

There’s a reason why newbs are told to lift:

a). It makes you look more attractive b). It makes you feel more attractive c). It focuses your mind

d). Going to the gym gets you out of the house for a few hours a week and stops you lurking around behind your wife trying to Kino her, fog her or whatever the fuck else you’re trying to do with her that she doesn’t want you doing to her.

d). Muscles

e). Abs

f). Testosterone

g). Abs

There is no Excuse

“But the gym is too far away”

“I don’t want to get too big”

“I’m too old to lift”

“I don’t know anything about lifting”

“I like being skinny”

“I am too weak to get off the sofa”

These were just my excuses. You have your own. You can have as many as you like, but really, there is no excuse.

My expertise
I am not an expert. I am a newbie to the gym. I have been lifting for 6 months. Prior to that, I had never stepped into a gym in my 45 years of life.

I lie – I went once in my twenties. Walked on a treadmill for 15 minutes, then walked straight out of the gym, never to return.

I also had a dead bedroom. That’s what brought me to MRP. I believed that if I applied all the MRP “tricks” minus the weight lifting, I’d be fine and I’d “fix my marriage”. That was the plan.

I’m not saying that lifting solved my problems – frame did. Physical frame and mental frame.

You need to build both.

I’m not going to tell you how to lift, what to eat or what programs to follow. There are people a lot more qualified and experienced than I am. Go to r/fitness. Find a program. Stick with it for 6 months. Eat properly. Dial in your TDEEs, macros etc. Eat protein, hydrate, sleep well. All the information you need is out there.

But I will tell you that you NEED to lift.

Also STFU.

And the sidebar is over there (or at least it used to be).

Lift, Faggot, Lift

When I started MRP in January, I was told to lift. I ignored this advice. As far as I was concerned, I was in good shape – I was doing HIIT four times a week at home and had just started a Strength and Conditioning course doing all sorts of things like kettlebell swings, lunges, bear crawls, jumping jacks and some barbell work. Crossfit, basically.

I got ribbed by other members here for not lifting, so I posted a shirtless pic to prove how good I looked naked. “This’ll show these cunts”, I thought. The fuckers laid into me. I was told that I looked like member of a concentration camp. That was one of the nicer comments.

Shortly after that, my wife told me that I looked like I had spent the last year on hunger strike.

I took another hard look at myself and realised that I was fooling myself. Yes, I had low body fat, but my ribs were sticking out, my arms were like chicken wings, my legs were like toothpicks and the skin on my arse was starting to look flabby and saggy.

I was a skinny, unhealthy, unattractive looking motherfucker. I wouldn’t even fuck me, so why would someone else?

And the chances are, that if you are a newbie to the forum, then you are equally unattractive – either a skinny boney, weak ass fucker, or a pudgy, soft, fat ass slob.. or some combination of both (read - fat skinny cunt). Either way, you aren’t getting fucked because - you not only act like shit - but you look like shit too.

Don’t believe me? Think you can get away without lifting weights? Think your cardio, bodyweight exercises and Crossfit is going to cut it?

OK – post a pic in the replies below and we’ll let you know how good you look.

Time for a change.

In March this year, I joined the gym and started out with SL 5x5.

I’m 6ft 1”, I weighed 163lbs, Body fat around 10%

My lifts were as follows

Bench – 35kg / 75lbs
Squat – 40kg / 85lbs
Deadlift – 60kg / 130lbs

Basically, I was so weak, that I found it difficult to lift the bar off the rack.

I switched to Candito’s Linear Progression in April and have been running that solidly for the last six months

I now weigh 182lbs, Body fat around 13-15%

My current lifts are as follows

Bench – 85kg / 185lbs
Squat – 120kg / 265lbs
Deadlift – 150kg / 330lbs

I’ve put on 19lb of muscle in 6 months. And I’m not even jacked. Yes, I have some muscle definition, some abs showing – I’ve added 3” to my legs and arms 2” to my chest, lost 2” from my hips.

I know I’m a way off from where I want to be / can be in terms of physique and strength. But I have gone from being an untrained novice with subpar strength to intermediate level in 6 months. And I’m looking pretty good too.
I’m not going to post progress pics and I’m not posting my story to get praise. I am posting to show that this shit can be done. And should be done.

How? Sheer dedication. Hit the gym 3-4 days a week at the gym, follow the program rigourously. Eat right, sleep right, lift right, lift a lot.

6 months ago, my wife wouldn’t fuck me. I was a repulsive concentration camp victim with bones sticking out. Just yesterday, while I was at the kitchen sink, she grabbed my ass with both her hands and said “mmm, buns of steel”. I lifted her up onto the sink and thanked her for her compliment by fucking her on the kitchen worktop.

So don’t be a lazy cunt, stop making excuses, get off your fat / skinny arse and start lifting like your life depended on it, because in reality, it probably does.
[FR] The second try

by HandsOutOfMyPockets | January 16, 2017 | Link

There have been lately quite a few "breaking free" stories at MRP, so I decided to add my own. I have been postponing this FR for quite some time now, thinking that "I will see this next step through, first", but that time never comes. There is always more to do, so I will share with you how it is going, right now.

I found MRP first almost a year ago. I came here to find cure for my sex life, but my first attempt failed miserably. Those who have been around might remember my great whinings about "the Main event" from last summer, see post history. As a new guy here, the overload of information was just too much. After reading NMMNG, MMSLP and all the popular blogs and posts with no previous information it was easy to go rambo, mute and sit on a sofa just to wait for a shit test to pass. The problem was that it worked at first. When I first passed a direct shit test my wife actually smiled, and in the middle of the next night she woke me up to have sex. A week later I came in her mouth after a blowjob without asking and she kept sucking. Now she had told me she doesn't like that. Without flushing her mouth she went hand washing her lingerie at 11PM. I was certain that my wife is a unicorn and I had just found the holy grail. Enter the most giant covert contract of them all; all I need to do is ignore her, and she will open her legs. Fast forward four months and I was rushing out of the door bawling my eyes out after a failed shit test. That was seven months ago. All this is documented here, and I got more replies than I deserved. I was back at back at square one, plug still in place.

The first decision to I made was to be honest. I know this is entry level stuff, but that is where I really was after four months choking on the pill. Now I don't of course mean sharing my feelz with my wife, nor do I talk about MRP. But taking ownership of my own opinions, needs and wants. As a "nice guy", this created me some anxiety at first but I sticked with it. A few examples:

- "Would you make me cup of coffee?", - "No, I'm watching the game", or "Sure, would you like to have a sandwich, too?"
- "Do you like my new haircut?", -"Hmm, it's too short, I liked the last one better"
- "Did you you stare at her??", -"Did you see those boobs?! How come she wears such a tiny bikinis?"
- "I'm going to the movies and beer with the boys on Saturday"
- "I don't want to join, its my gym night"

And silence is honesty, too. I don't say what I don't mean or don't want to say. Of course, most notably not saying "I love you" when my brain is not filled with hormones we call "love" and I literally can't keep it in anymore. It also makes DEERing practically impossible.

To build on honesty, I refused star fish sex. The first time when I asked her to quit during foreplay when she was clearly not into it she ran out of the room. Second time she rolled inside her blanket and went mute. Third time never came.
No covert contracts. I still catch myself doing them time to time, but I always stop it right there and go do something else. This has included leaving laundry in the middle of the floor for couple of hours until I was actually more bothered by the pile of clothes than lack of sex and quitting set of bicep curls in the gym when it was not a bicep day. I have also cancelled a hotel reservation for the weekend and returned the first Christmas present I bought her to the store. And it does not have to be about sex. When I need something, I do it myself.

So, I don't ask her for anything unless the job physically needs more than two hands. If she is in the kitchen making sandwiches, I go there to make my own. If she offers to make me one, I'm happy to have one if I actually want. As a father of two, this includes also taking care of the kids. I cannot stress how beneficial this has been. If I need to get something done the kiddos tag along. After a while, it became the new way of the house and there is absolutely nothing that would not get done in our household because of the kids. I mean, a two-year-old is great help when making sushi, right? This is my best example of IDGAF. We are having awesome times, in which my wife's presence is irrelevant. Leading by example.

Ok, so extrapolation from "I don't need her for anything" is "I don't care about sex". That, of course, is a lie. But for me this is the "fake it till you make it" part. It is also major tool for avoiding covert contracts. If there is anything else I want to do or needs to be done, I do that. And as I officially don't care about sex, I have quit porn and masturbation. I know opinions here are biased on this matter but that works for me. I used to be mad at my wife because I was jerking more than I had chances to have sex with her. Suddenly I realized that the solution was simple. Be warned, that if you choose to try it, first weeks are just shitty. It has been hard, and I have failed multiple times in past but the truth is that my game sucks when I release the sexual pressure myself. There is no need to do kino, be playful with my wife or even pass shit tests when I have other outlets. If I don't, well, ...

Now this is the fun part. Like lots of other newbies, I was worried how to pass a shit test and finding out smart lines when my wife was being AWALT. But passing a shit test here and there covers only 5% of the time. Other 95% is the time to display integrity and running my amused mastery is integral part of my game. It is simple: I don't take here seriously, have a smirk at her expense, exaggerate when ever possible and keep things covertly sexual, a.k.a "Is the anything more that needs drilling?". Not being evil or truly jerk at all, but keeping things light-hearted and being on top of it all. Within the last few months I've become rather good at this and we are both enjoying a lot. There are a lot of laughters in our house these days. Also displaying my status overtly, regular shit testing has reduced greatly. Sometimes when I'm minding my own business she comes me and throws a shit test just to see how much I can amplify and to get few laughs. Then she happily walks away. She has also become conditioned to expect sexual references so whenever she hears keywords like "rod", "meat" or "drilling" I can tell her mind is racing. I keep talking like nothing was said. She is turning out be a quite dirty girl.

After a while when I got more confident with my jokes I started to bring all this outside of the house with great success. Using covert sexual references and inside jokes publicly is great fun. The look on people's face when they are not sure what they just heard is priceless. Displaying AM with friends and family present has at least double effect. Late summer we were spending the day at the lake with my family-in-laws. The water was already getting cold, and after a playful banter with Mrs I decided to "punish her" and carried her into the lake with her theatrically objecting. Once I dropped her in the water she planted a deep kiss on my mouth while we were standing in the water fully clothed and her family looking dumbfounded from the dry land.

Ok, I got a little drifted but after "honesty" there are some other early steps I have taken since last June.

• Lifting. This has been said over and over again. I do Stronglifts 5x5 (there is a nice app!). I got a little contemplate with my lifting after summer but now I am back on track. I was not overweight to begin with, but I was definitely out of shape - and still am. But the most important part of lifting is that by leaving the house for the gym several times a week I am doing something or myself, already passing several shit tests and displaying OI. Also by handling the logistics to make the required time I am leading my family. I recently hit the plateau and could not add weights for a while. I added more core work, yoga and stretching and now the weights are going up again. I used to do some P90X so namely I do Abripper X, Yoga X and Stretch X in days between the gym. I also added some time to do warm up and reduced additional exercises besides 5x5 program.

• Communications. This is the core of leading my family. When ever I schedule myself an event, I make an entry into a family calendar and note it to my wife. If there is a conflict, it gets solved well before it comes an issue. I ask my family for their needs and wants, including the kids. The two-year-old can barely talk but he has a say when I plan the menu for the week.

• Hygiene. I shower now twice a day, every day. After a gym or in the evenings, I wash thoroughly using soap, facescrub, shampoo and conditioner. Then I blow dry my hair, soften my hands with salt scrub and lotion. In the morning I take a cold shower. Again, blow dry and I use comb and wax to make my hair. No bad hair days anymore, even on sunday mornings.
   I know it is a trick, but I find cold showers empowering. The broscience behind it is that exposure to ice cold water fills body with stress hormones rapidly and one's receptors get used to them thus increasing tolerance for stress in general. Also, my body gets primed for the day. Seems to work. Crank the temperature to extreme low, jump in and let the water flow. When the pain comes, breathe.
   I use only electric tooth brush and floss every night.

• Looks. I was your regular career dad, not a bad dresser but I often wore what was available. One day I got all my clothes out and picked out everything that I did not like or did not want to wear, and sold them online, donated to charity or just threw away. Now suddenly, I had only nice clothes in my drawer and closets. After my clothes come back from the laundry I iron everything expect underwear and gym clothes. It takes 45 seconds to iron a T-shirt, and it looks very different and keeps it's shape for much longer. Now I have my clothes neatly organized and ready to use all the time. When I open my closet in the morning I can choose what I want to wear that day from all the clothes I own.

There is no downgrading of clothes. When a nice T-shirt seems worn, it does not magically become homewear. I also bought proper clothing for handy works so I don't need to paint walls in old sweat pants.

I bought a membership to a local barber shop chain. For a flat rate I can go and get myself pampered by nice young ladies as often as I want. I go get my hair cut and trimmed twice a month.

TLDR: The most important outcome of all this has been that I am happier than I have been in a long time. I keep failing all the time, and nothing is a as bed of roses as above wall of text may imply, but now instead of going angry or depressed I move on and keep doing the best I can. Once I realized the anger is because of my own failures and short comings it has been easier to handle. Hard no's and rejection still make me sometimes angry and that is an indicator that I am still partly in her frame. Refusing to cuddle after being turned down may seem as butt-hurt, but more and more often I find myself singing in the shower afterwards.

My family is mine to lead, and my kids come to me for guidance and my wife for decisions. I end this with a small humblebrag;

During Christmas we were visiting family and were driving quite a lot. And as you can imagine, with two small kids and snowy roads the schedule was beginning to fall apart. My wife asked me:

- "As a head of a family, what do suggest we do next?"
- "We should leave now, skip the next place and give them a call from the car. Then we should be well on time to make it to the final destination so the kids can mingle with grand parents before it is time for bed. How does that sound to you as my deputy? (smirk)"
- "I don't want to be your deputy. I like you to draw the big picture. I can be a brand manager and choose the Christmas cards and make sure the kids look tidy. Your plan sounds good, though."

And the wagon was moving again.

I hope other newbies find hope in the dark here. It might not be as faraway as it seems. I encourage you to post here or askMRP.

For others, I would thank you for holding the mirror up to me.

HOOMP
A lot of new guys are coming here and they're at their rope's end. Some can't handle the frustration anymore, some can't imagine they'll ever get over the hatred they feel for their wife, some are sure their wife really is a bitch and they want someone better.

Others seem intent on saving a marriage even though their wife is probably never going to become pleasant company.

The answer I wanted to give to all of them seemed to center around the same few principles, so here is my take on when to next your wife.

Time changes everything

I've been at that place where my wife had hurt me so bad so many times I thought she'd killed all feeling for her and I just wanted to hurt her back. I could not imagine it ever working again.

But the fact is that months later we're having lots of great sex, we're happy, and all that's under the bridge. My wife is still capable of being the meanest bitch on Earth, but she's not that way towards me anymore.

All of us has had something bad happen to us and at the time it seemed we would never get over it, but then we did. This could well happen with your wife once she stops being a rejecting bitch. You will not despise your wife forever.

Except the things that don't change

The red pill is mainly going to change one thing in your wife: her desire for you.

I have a heuristic I use to find out what people are capable of when they're properly motivated. I look at them at their best. Most people can be shitty friends or shitty workers when they don't care, but look at how they do when their heart is in it. If your wife is and always was a lazy, fat slob that never got along with anyone and couldn't hold a job, you have no chance of turning her into a good wife. Such people just don't have it in them to work up the effort to fight for even their important relationships. But if she is popular among her friends, she can become good company. If she works hard at her job or to take care of the kids, she can work hard for you.

So look at her when she's at her best. Even if you alpha up to the max, you're not going to get better than that. Some women just don't have the energy, self discipline, or agreeableness it takes to become enjoyable company.
The grass is greener on the other side

Unless your wife is fucking your brains out, this is a fucking fantasy. Assuming you didn't marry someone that actually is worthless, the problem is you, not her. How your wife treats you is an accurate reflection of your level of alphaness. If you read all the red pill stories about how people are spinning plates and think your life as a single man will be like that, the truth is that you have some work to do.

Dread games

Some dread games are always a good idea, but if you're thinking about leaving your wife, they're essential. This guide by /u/BluepillProfessor has a great take on the approach. Read it.

The thing about running dread is that not only does it make your wife realize your value - it also lets you know how well you're really doing and what your alternatives are. It is pointless to leave your wife to spin plates and then finding out that you suck at flirting, don't like it, or have lower SMV than you thought. Dread games lets you gauge your actual progress and gets you out of the idea that your wife is the source of all problems. If you can't pick up women, the problem is you.

When you can pick up other women, you're doing great. You're alpha. You're ready to decide if your future is staying married or nexting her.

Next her right

If you are going to next her, don't do it in the heat of the moment. Prepare. Talk to a lawyer, hide finances, get proof you need to not get fucked over in the custody battle. The consequences are going to stay with you for years - enduring marriage for a few more weeks is going to be worth it.

TL;DR

1. Patience. Calm down. Realize that your wife will change and with that your feelings towards her.
2. Look at your wife at her best, when she is working for something important for her. If she sucks at that, she's a lost cause; next her. Otherwise, the problem is you, not her.
3. Improve yourself, lift and lead.
4. Play dread games. When you can flirt successfully with other women, your wife is going to be wet for you too; this is the time you want to decide if you want a divorce, not before.
5. If you still want to next her, see a lawyer and prepare properly.
From a comment earlier...expanded in a couple areas

I've never liked the trust but verify mantra. By this I don't mean not knowing where your girl is going. Of course you should be generally interested in her life. Part of that whole relationship gig. Still some believe in keeping even closer tabs. So following up, confirming where she is and what she was doing smacks of a lack of frame. It smacks too much of me wasting my time to verify what is being told to me. I would then live in someone else's frame until I can verify what they are telling me. It's also a slippery slope of how much do I verify? Do I get a PI? GPS trackers? What? Furthermore, I have come to see trust as a weapon. Think about it. Someone says they don't trust you anymore and that you need to work towards earning that trust back. But are you ever given a check list? A set of tasks to perform to earn that trust? No.

I came to this conclusion during my journey as I would watch my shrew of a wife constantly tell me she doesn't trust me. It goes back from nearly the day we were married. I got up for work one day and she just blurts it out. The next 17 years I was and am held to a standard I never understood nor was given the rules for. When someone says they don't trust you what you get is a bevy of servant tasks and behavior controls that just keep you in your place. Yet what it's really nothing more than the other party maintaining control on you.

We use trust as a weapon. To hold someone to us and cause them to heel. Yet in our myopic views we rarely see the other side. Mistrust is a self-fulfilling prophecy. Furthermore what if the other party no longer wants your trust? You can only be made to heel for so long before you get tired of it. It's part of why men became betas. In order to please. Being held accountable to a "trust standard" that you don't know the criteria for is the exact same thing. A covert contract you both write.

What's more is that you will never earn the trust back you once had or what you perceived you had. This is because trust is never really earned. It can't be. It's given. We give trust and we do it all the time. We trust strangers to do things for us without harming us. Baristas to serve coffee without pissing in it. Restaurants to serve food that isn't poisoned. This is why when trust is violated at a public level it is so horrific.

There are millions of ways we trust in small doses each day to people we've rarely met or interacted with. Just think of any number of things we do on a daily basis that rely on someone doing their job correctly. Yet in our relationships we reserve the highest standards for this trust and suddenly the script is flipped and you must earn that trust. No. Trust is given and you keep giving it until you come to the point where you can no longer. It's called having boundaries. Once you can't give it any more the relationship is dead.

Before I launch into the loyalty part it behooves us to reexamine Briffault's law. You can follow the link and read it. Briffault's Law establishes the female role in a relationship and in society. The rules are right there in front of us. We have been given the play book.
Understanding where a woman's mindset is and how a RP man can use the idea of trust vs loyalty is beneficial on breaking the chains of control. Earning trust is all about control.

Briffault's Law is what established the hierarchy of love. Man, Woman, Child. It's also what established the idea she is never yours, just your turn. With this concept in mind consider that acts of loyalty need to be daily. They are what she gives you. Sure one can see the dynamic as she working for your trust and keeping her on a short leash...seems to appeal right? Yet consider who works harder? The one who is earning trust or the one who has to keep verifying that trust? We already know exactly what her priorities are. Therefore, we already know exactly how far we can trust her.

Compared to loyalty. Some will say women are not loyal not in the same way men are, remember women suck at overt communication. They are loyal...if you are Alpha enough and can demand that loyalty. Where loyalty differs from trust is that it's an act. A woman can demonstrate loyalty to you by her actions. A fantastic article about Managing your bitch details this to some degree. Some will tell you to trust your women to go on a GNO after all you can go out with your friends. Why can't she? If she breaks that trust next her. Yet what does this mean? There's no boundary here or if there are you have to list them out to her. Ugh...like a fool you have to sit her down and go over all the rules. Really? Ok yeah I get it we like the whole treat them like girls idea, but for fuck's sake who has the time to do that? Create a list of rules. Spend the time with her going over them and already establishing some level of mate guarding. Just like her dad did right? Remember the girl that used to sneak around when her parents slept? Yeah...keep going that way and see what happens.

Without the loyalty component, she can be trusted to go right to the line with another guy. Invite the validation and play around with it like a cat does a mouse....but you trust her to come home to you. You trust her to fuck you. So what where she gets her motor running. Right? Yeah. Thing is this is an act of disloyalty. She entertained the idea. It would be different if she laughed at a beta who was trying to get into pants. If a woman is with her Alpha she won't turn her head. She will instinctually know what she will lose. If she does sleep with some random dude? Its more likely the Alpha didn't vet well or knew what he was getting into and didn't care (ie a plate).

Women can't completely stop a beta or even another Alpha from coming up to them. It's just a fact as Alphas our women are going to attract other guys. Yet women know exactly how to turn off orbiters and know exactly how to stop attention. Just as they know how to keep them going. Women don't write these covert contracts. Other men do.

I've seen it play out this way many times. It's a simple "nope not interested" or other road block they will throw up. They have a series of them. If your girl is into you she will do it until it becomes necessary for her to send you in or make mention of you. RP talks all the time about being shut down by women, so clearly the are capable of it. If she is repeatedly seeking, inviting, enjoying validation from other guys it's a sign and it's an act of disloyalty. If she mentions it to you (OMG I need to tell you...) she may have found it amusing and thinks you might as well....but never forget it's a shit test. Your response confirms your Alpha status. Yet there is a deeper meaning here.

Threading the needle for you. Look at her actions not her words. Loosely, Trust is about words. Loyalty is about actions. I can tell someone I trust them all day long and get all sorts of productivity out of them. Doesn't mean I am going to want them standing a post with me deep in Injun Territory at 0300. Loyalty means I wouldn't have to ask. They would support my mission regardless, and would know how to do it.

Only you know where this stands on the acts of loyalty as it stakes up across the relationship. Acts of loyalty are accumulative but it only takes one act of disloyalty to remove it all. If this is systemic. She's disloyal and you know what to do. Compare it to business. Men are in a constant state of earning profit. We want to end our fiscal year in the black. Some of us have multiple gigs/businesses going. Of course these prices will vary based on market value but go with it...

- Sex maybe earns $10.
- Certain sexual acts ups the margin. Varies between the man.
- Supporting your mission in life maybe $20.
- being supportive $35 per action
- Doing laundry, cooking, let's say $30 for each time it is done
- Nag? Complain, be negative all the time then the account losses money to the bank. At three times the rate it went in. (NOTE there is a difference in her coming to you for support and just plain being negative)

At the end of the quarter, fiscal year the man will take an account. If the account is in the black when he makes this assessment he will make a return on that investment. if not...then he looks for other profit centers. Why would a man continue his investment in a profit center that is losing money or a low earner? If he is putting in the time to fix it, to get it to earn again but the maybe the business has run its course.

Maybe it was never really a viable idea to begin with. Maybe he is just a bad business man. As time goes on you will look at that account and wonder why you only accept having $17 for your time and commitment, when you know someone is willing to make a bigger investment. But the man can only do this once he knows his business acumen is solid and proven.
Musings After a Wedding

by Red-Curious | April 23, 2018 | Link

I was a groomsman in a wedding this past weekend in a wedding where virtually all of the attendees were self-identified Christians (authenticity unknown). Here are some observations for both married and single men.

Blue Alphas - Even naturally alpha guys can succumb to a blue pill ideology. Just because you are a type-A guy doesn't mean you're immune to self-defeating sexual strategies. The groom was an ideal example of this. He's generally a DNGAF, no-nonsense, does whatever he wants type of guy. But his wedding vows were full of unrealistic fantasy blah blah. I even caught him commenting "happy wife, happy life" at the reception.

Emotional Empaths - When the groom said "HW, HL," I tried to jab back, "True, but a happy husband is what makes for a happy wife." He just gave me a blank stare. The bride pretended to get it, but who knows. My wife actually backs me up on this now. She still likes the social acceptability of verbally proclaiming the HW,HL statement, but realizes that her happiness is directly related to mine. Women are empaths - they feel what others feel, especially those they're closest to. Ideally, there is no one they're closer to than their husband. If the husband is unhappy, they empathically pick this up and become unhappy as well. If he's doing well, his happiness rubs off on her.

Whipped - My best friend was at the wedding. He'd only had 2 girlfriends before and he's now 34 and engaged after a year of dating. Although he is a master at playing it cool, it's obvious that below the surface he has this "finally! I found someone!" feeling that's controlling his life. His fiance likes to travel a lot and they just announced that they plan to move to Spain for a year after the wedding.

This is pretty ridiculous, given that if he were to stay at his current employer for 2 more years he would have all of his student loans forgiven - a windfall of over $100,000. Neither of them have jobs lined up in Spain ... she just wants to go and he's going to ruin the last 8-ish years of working toward this loan forgiveness program to accommodate her whim. Don't be that guy. He's changed and is no longer the same person I once knew - at least not when she's around. When it's just us, he's back to normal, but that will obviously be much rarer now. Perhaps I should have been more intentional about red pilling him.

AWALT - I got hit on by two girls who came with dates and while my wife was leaning on my arm. With a little alcohol, there was no shame or discretion. One commented on my appearance and asked me to dance with her hand on my arm. The other actually asked me to "take a walk" around the lake with her. Their dates were good looking men, but happened to be sitting at the table eating cake instead of socializing.

Dread - Getting hit on had a noticeable impact on my wife's interest in me throughout the evening. Circumstance notwithstanding, my wife commented, "I'm really wishing we'd gotten a hotel."
Stress - At some point throughout the evening, my wife got a work e-mail that stressed her out. This pretty much ruined things for an hour. It didn't matter how great of a guy I was ... sometimes women are going to succumb to their feelings and you can't pull them out of it. Don't bother trying. Just keep having fun and invite them to join you whenever they're ready to stop being such a downer. I enjoyed myself and my wife enjoyed myself too when she was ready. Don't force it.

PDA - There were two primary crowds with virtually no one in-between: (1) those who had been married for under 5 years and had no kids; and (2) those who were married for over 10 years and have kids. The sharp contrast in levels of PDA between these two crowds was obvious. This was, no doubt, subliminal. I found myself victim to the pattern for the rehearsal/dinner and the first hour of the wedding reception, given that I wasn't planning on having sex after the wedding anyway (wouldn't really have been possible), so kino wasn't an intentional focus.

My wife noticed this distinction and it made her mad, complaining, "We'll see what they're like after having a house full of 4 kids!" My first gut reaction was to chew her out for her general aversion to sexuality and say, "It's not about who has kids and who doesn't; it's about who actually wants to have sex and those who have repressed it." I didn't - it's not often these impulses come up anymore, but when they do I've gotten pretty good at STFU. I just upped my kino game and she responded. This made our time much more enjoyable. Conclusion? It's better to be sexual rather than complain about your wife not being sexual.

I'm sure I could pull out a lot more, but that's most of it. Enjoy.
I've seen a lot of influx of new guys here. First, congrats, knowing you have a problem is the first step. Second, stop fooling yourself into thinking you have just a few things to tweak, and it's all good.

Here are the lies I see every day that you tell yourselves.

"We've got a good marriage, except for a dead bedroom"

"She's a good wife and mother, except she drinks too much"

"I've been redpill for a month..."

These are all things we tell ourselves because we don't want to face the hard reality that maybe things are not what they seem to be. Some of it comes from the feminist imperative telling us we should just suck it up and be happy to get what a woman gives us. Some of it is us trying to rationalize us making poor decisions. Mostly it's us trying to make excuses for all the bad crap we've either accepted as truth or allowed to happen in our lives.

Yeah we throw words around like “hypergamy” and “solipsism”. We use terms like “abundance mentality” and “Outcome independence”. Here’s one redpill truth we don’t talk about much, the sunk cost fallacy. Every single situation you find yourself in as a redpill husband should be looked at with an eye to the future not the past. “She was a great wife up to the point I caught her bouncing on another man’s cock” or “We have a great marriage except for no sex” shouldn't even come out of a redpill husband’s mouth. No my friends, you should always look at her actions as they are, outside of the context of the past.

The upside, you now have vision and clarity.

“She’s a cold fish”

“She’s a drunk”

“I have a lot to learn”

Now you can see your options a whole lot better once the truth is clear. That's truly redpill.
What one year of MRP has shown me

by PurpleVeteran | January 13, 2017 | Link

Reading a couple recent posts by BPP got me thinking about what it was from this forum that helped me get on a better track. Some of my worst BP qualities were a thirst for validation, a social clumsiness that is one small step above Aspergers, and a tendency to over-analyze everything to the point of inaction. My last month before swallowing the pill was a journey in emotional lows, passive aggressive lashing out, and beta-behavior that I’m still digging out from. Somewhere between my wife saying "you're acting just like your mother", and me bawling my eyes out in the basement, I hit rock bottom.

And the thing is, I'd read Rollo and browsed the TRP forums -- and laughed at the misogynists that posted there. I would read 2XC, and visit DB, trying to figure out how to fix my problems from the other side or with others in my shoes. And they were all saying the same BP fantasies that I'd been fed for years. It literally was coming to MRP that opened my eyes. This wasn't a group of kids trying to get laid or knee-jerk womyn bashing, but nice guys like me who were waking up to certain truths (that weren't so self-evident at the time).

Vocabulary

The first thing that MRP gave me was something to measure my life against, the vocabulary to express and understand the problems in my marriage (but more importantly, in my head), and a set of tools for addressing them. My first read of NMMNG was a period of denial, but I soon identified with MMSLP, and WISNIFG brought certain lessons home to me.

For the first time, I could see how some of my "good" behaviors had killed my wife's attraction for me, and how others that she once "protested" were actually things that drew her to me. I had blindly accepted the social norms and Disney fantasies that I'd been taught about compromise, equality, and pedestals. And while I managed lots of elements of our life (finances, family, shopping), there were other things that I neglected (leadership, leadership, and leadership). For 20+ years, I'd expected her to act as my wife, my maid, and my mother in turns -- and resented her when she didn't.

And I learned the language of masculinity and self-actualization, but also found labels for the short-comings that I'd struggled with but never could express: "validation", "co-dependency", "covert contracts". Identifying these behaviors and how I'd come to accept them as normal, I was finally able to start addressing them in a constructive manner. I embraced the idea of a MAP -- instead of chipping away at the problem by negotiating for sex (I once tried to trade cleaning the toilet for a blow job) or passive aggressive mind games, I started back at ground dread level zero.

My MAP has been focused on improving myself and my life in specific ways: lifting, dieting, decluttering, and building frame. I consider myself lucky, because my marriage is strong overall and my wife complements my strengths very well. The biggest problem I had was lack of leadership and ownership, but I now had some strategies for improvement. I also identified my constant thirst for validation, and nearly 12 months in, this still remains my biggest weakness. Hell, for the longest time, I was still doing all of this improvement shit for her -- I would alternate between images of her and Chad, and plotting how to fix our sex life -- as fuel for my lifting and cardio. That was a tough demon to kill.

Finally, Dread taught me two things: first, that while I was never socially aware, that lots of the small details I neglected were not only under my control but mattered hugely to my SMV. Second, my wife had been trying to nudge me on these things for years, but never pushed or finally gave up on to avoid my predictable reaction. I celebrated losing nearly 50 pounds in 3 months by shopping for myself instead of just sending my wife to pick up some pants, or ordering clever T-shirts online. I tried on a dozen pair of jeans, I studied fit, and I read lots of articles on men's fashion. I went into Gap and Urban Outfitters, only to find out I was still way too fat for modern fit clothes marketed to guys half my age. sigh back to the Iron Temple.

Calibration

The second thing that MRP teaches is how to balance the competing voices in your head. Ironically, when you read the cacophony of responses to the newbies on AskMRP, you might wonder how anyone can find anything constructive to their situation. But among the shouts of "faggot" and "AWALT", there are nuggets of valuable insight and lots of tough love.

So when we tell guys to STFU, it's not surprising that some of them might confuse that with "sitting like a lump" while she vents or cries. When we tell them to build frame, but not to DEER, these "nice guys" go rambo and start throwing boundaries and making demands that must appear to their wives like a psychotic break. And when we talk about LMR and OI, these guys -- who think that 3 months of lifting or a friendly smile from the waitress mean that their wife should suddenly forget years of chump -- still resent the starfish sex they get, so they jump up and stomp away in a "completely not butt-hurt way".

Look, I've embraced the fact that I'm never gonna be one of those "hawt" guys with spiky hair, "bad boys" with ink, or sharp-dressed player, but I can be the most attractive and fit white-collar professional in the room. I'm not good with my hands or managing people, but I am willing to roll up my sleeves, fix what's broken, and get shit done.

And to many of the hardcore folks here, I come across as an apologist, especially given my username. But for as much as we talk AWALT, not all women are the same. There are narcissists, codependents, ice queens, and just plain bitches, but there are quality women out there as well. The same advice does not work for all relationships or all people, and even then, your journey of self-improvement will be an uphill battle against inertia. The fact that she (and everyone else) comfortable with beta you, means that there are always plenty of crabs trying to pull you down.

So, when the advice comes in waves... from the beginner, to the intermediate, or the advanced, it's important that the reader takes it with a grain of salt. I've seen several reports over the last few weeks where the OP was given dangerous advice before he could handle it, or that was just a solipsistic RP reading of events. Now, it's up to each man to choose his path, but it's also important that he take it a step at a time. RP provides a number of valuable tools, but like their real-world equivalents, it takes practice to master them.
For this reason, I relish the recent FRs from /u/saint_chalet that demonstrate what frame is, the quality posts on ownership by /u/TheFamilyAlpha, and the harder lessons by /u/man_in_the_world and other long-timers. These guys set the bar by which the rest of us can measure ourselves. Which brings me to...

Peer Group

I know, MRP is not a support group, it's just a bunch of 1s and 0s floating on the Internet. But it is a place for getting advice from people who have been (or currently are) in a similar situation. We acknowledge those who put in the hard work, who have earned their "red chip" for their progress, or lay breadcrumbs for those who are still finding their way.

This is not a safe place by any means. Between the brigading and cross-posts, there are any number of reasons to just STFU and hide your mistakes as guilty secrets. And yet, we have any number of men willing to puke up their blue guts just for the opportunity for feedback and advice. Why is that?

Because we are men. We come from the sandbox, the locker room, or boot camp, where feelings don't mean shit when there's work to be done. We lift iron to get stronger; not because it's easy, but because it's hard, and that's what makes us stronger. We come to throw down, to challenge ourselves in the arena, because we know that the most valuable lessons come from your opponent.

MRP is the mirror we hold up to ourselves, to take the measure of the man. It's how we set the benchmark for what we want to achieve next. Whether that's BF%, lifting 3 plates, killing Oneitis, or slaying strange.

And then there are the stories. The ones from newbies that make us laugh and point, or from old-timers who look back and recall past lessons. It's field reports, play-by-play from last night's shit test, and mundane notes for the latest OWS. But it's also the valuable feedback that they get, from quick pointers to epic dissections (J10, wherefore are thou?), so that others can learn the lessons early. So that MRP becomes a clubhouse of sorts. A place where we can recognize the progress made by former addicts and newly divorced men. Where sharing successes and failures, and putting skin into the game, means that we know each other at a deeper level than just the text we've read and the comments we bookmark.

I find it strange that someone posted recently about mid-life crises, because that's what I thought this was for me. As it turns out, it's not a crisis at all, but a threshold to be crossed. I wish I'd seen the code in the Matrix long ago, when I was a younger man, but I will take my life (and my improvements) a day at a time. Thanks to MRP, I now have a lens to examine my life, the tools to make necessary improvements, and the will to take responsibility for my mind and my actions, while I continue to carry on with my mission.
I posted this to someone else in the Divorce Inc. thread, but this might be worth noting for a more public review.

- 85% of all children with behavioral disorders come from fatherless homes (per CDC)

- 90% of all homeless/runaway children are from fatherless homes (Census Bureau)

- 71% of all high school dropouts are children from fatherless homes (National Principals Association)

- 75% of all adolescents in chemical abuse centers come from fatherless homes (Rainbows for all God's Children)

- 63% of youth suicides are from fatherless homes (Census Bureau)

- 80% of rapists diagnosed with displaced anger come from fatherless homes (Criminal Justice & Behavior, Vo. 14, p. 403-26)

- 85% of all youths in prisons grew up in fatherless homes (GA and TX Dept. of Corrections stats)

Children from fatherless homes are:

- 5x more likely to commit suicide

- 32x more likely to run away

- 20x more likely to have behavioral disorders

- 14x more likely to commit rape
• 9x more likely to drop out of high school

• 10x more likely to abuse chemical substances

• 20x more likely to end up in prison

... than children where they have an active, present father-figure in their lives.

Now, I get that "fatherless" means no father at all, as opposed to "mom gets custody, dad's still present as a non-custodial parent." So, when it comes to custody-based stats, here are a few from the Pew Research Center (yes, it's a Christian resource - deal with it):

• Median household income - F: $40,000, M: $26,000

• Average Age - F: ~40, M: ~34

• Education - Interestingly, F/M are almost equally likely to have a college degree (17/18), women are more likely to have started, but not finished college (32/40), but men are more likely to have graduated high school (32/26) - remembering that these are stats only for single fathers v. single mothers, not all men/women

• At or Below Poverty - F: 24%, M: 43%

---

Why I Prefer Female Judges for my Male Clients

My county actually has 5 domestic judges, 4 of whom are women. Interestingly, if you go into smaller counties, the judges are almost exclusively men. Those smaller counties are FAR FAR FAR more likely to hand custody over to a mom than my big-county female judges.

Why? Because women judges don't have anything to prove - they are already the epitome of female power. They can do whatever the heck they want and the feminists will support them for it because they're powerful women. As a result, they're more fair. The men, however, are so used to sucking up to women that they can't get it out of their systems. This isn't true for every male/female judge dynamic, but in my county every attorney knows who they'd rather have presiding over their cases with male clients.

I also see empowered female judges looking down on SAHMs and needy/dependent women. Do I like the condescending tone they have toward their "inferior" sisters? Not really. But I do find it interesting that their attitude is, essentially, "I'm a woman and I made it into power. You obviously chose a different path that didn't lead you into power. Why should I use my power to help you when you've done nothing to help yourself?" In this sense, they often do maintain that feminist entitlement attitude, but it doesn't play out to favor other women the way you'd think.

As for the men, I actually had a case where a male magistrate said on the record (he forgot it was still recording), directed toward my client (I was representing the woman in this case) - "Man, I would do anything to tap that. Doesn't someone like that make you wish they'd repeal that ethical law about not sleeping with your clients? You'd have it so easy because you're her savior!" He then proceeded to flirt with my client repeatedly throughout the trial. Needless to say, we won that one and that fat magistrate didn't get any from her.

More fun stats: In a neighboring county where I practice, a statistical analysis was done on a male judge's most recent 60 custody cases at the time (2014):

- Shared parenting was requested by one or both parties in 45 of the cases (75%), but was only granted twice.

- Custody was granted to the woman in 51/60 cases (85%).

- Of the 15% of cases where dad got custody, 6/7 were because the mother had severe substance abuse or violence problems, the remaining 1 was due to extreme mental health issues and medical disability. None of them were just because dad was clearly the better parent.

- Although it wasn't part of the study, that same judge also rejected an AGREEMENT BY ALL PARTIES that Father get custody. The Father, Mother, and the children's Guardian ad Litem all testified under oath on a fully-signed agreement at a final uncontested hearing that Mother was incapable of parenting the children and Father had to be the custodial parent, and that Father was stable and capable. The children even went in-chambers to talk to the judge and explained that their mom never fed them, often left them in the home unattended (they were under 11), and just slept all day when they were over ... and the judge ripped up the agreement and gave custody to the mother anyway.

CONCLUSION?? - Beta and SJW men are more likely to help women than empowered women.
I’m happy to announce today that The Rational Male – Positive Masculinity is now available on Amazon.

The Kindle version will be up within a day or two as it takes a bit longer for Kindle Direct Publishing to go through the review process.

Positive Masculinity is the newest supplemental reading in the Rational Male series designed to give men, not a prescription, but actionable information to build better lives for themselves based on realistic and objective intersexual dynamics between men and women.

Free of the pop-psychology pablum about parenting today, Red Pill Parenting is primarily aimed at the fathers (and fathers-to-be) who wanted more in depth information about raising their sons and daughters in a Red Pill aware context. While not an instruction manual, it will give men some insight into how to develop a parenting style based on Red Pill principles as well as what they can expect their kids to encounter from a feminine-primary social order determined to ‘educate’ them.

The Feminine Nature is a collection of essays, revised and curated, that specifically address the most predictable aspects of the female psyche. It outlines and explores both the evolutionary and socialized reasons for women’s most common behaviors and their motives, and how men can build this awareness into a more efficient way of interacting with them.

Social Imperatives details how the female psyche extrapolates into western (and westernizing) cultural narratives, social dictates and legal and political legislation. This is the Feminine Imperative writ large and this section explores how feminism, women’s sexual strategy and primary life goals have molded our society into what we take for granted today. Also detailed is the ‘women’s empowerment’ narrative, and the rise of a blank-slate egalitarian equalism masking as a form of female supremacism that has fundamentally altered western cultures.

The last section, Positive Masculinity, is comprised of essays, reformed and expanded upon, that will give men a better idea of how to define masculinity for themselves from a conventional and rational perspective. In an era when popular culture seeks to dismiss, ridicule, shame and obscure masculinity, this section and this book is intended to raise men’s awareness of how fluid redefinitions of masculinity have been deliberately used to disempower and feminize men by a feminine-primary social order.

This book was a long time in the making and a lot of that was due to my wanting to create an organized flow of topics as well as to make sure the grammar and syntax was as perfect as I could make it. Like my two previous books, I’ve returned to my most popular essays and arranged them to speak to different themes in the book.

When I began writing, compiling and rewriting this book I had an initial working title – The Rational Male, The Red Pill – however, as I progressed I shifted this to Positive Masculinity. There came a point in my compiling and editing where I’d taken a different path in the purpose of the book. Where I had wanted to explain and/or defend the initial, intersexual, definition of what the term ‘Red Pill’ has increasingly been distorted away from, I found myself leaning more into expressing ways in which this Red Pill awareness could benefit men’s lives in many ways, both in and apart from intersexual dynamics.

I’d hit on this in my Red Pill Parenting series from a couple years ago and I knew I wanted to revisit and make that series a prominent part of this book. As it sits now, it accounts for a full quarter of the book’s content, but as I moved into my writing more I decided that the best way to really define ‘The Red Pill” as I know it was to go into the various ways men might benefit from redefining masculinity for themselves in a conventional, Red Pill aware sense.

When I finished the parenting section I realized that I was really laying out general, if not prescriptive, ideas for ways men might better raise their sons and daughters in a feminine-primary social order that’s determined to raise and condition them. My purpose with both the series and section was to equip fathers with Red Pill aware considerations in making their sons and daughters Red Pill aware themselves in order to challenge a world that increasingly wants to convince us that fathers’ influence is superfluous or dangerous.

It was from this point that I’d made a connection; what I was doing was laying out a much-needed reckoning of sorts with regard to what conventional, positive masculinity might mean to future generations of Red Pill aware men. Since my time on the SoSuave forums and the inception of my blog I’ve used the term Positive Masculinity. I’ve even had a category for it on my side bar since I began too. From the time I began writing I’ve always felt a need to vindicate positive, conventional masculinity (as well as evolved conventional gender roles for men and women) and separate it from the deliberately distorted “toxic” masculinity that the Village of the Feminine Imperative would have us believe is endemic today.

More here:

It has been one year since I started this journey, and throughout this time I’ve been inspired by the success stories of those that have adhered to the principles. My own journey has overall been successful, but I have been reminded many times that you only get out what you put in.

For the previous 3 years my marriage was in a bad state. After 9 years of marriage and two kids, I had slid downhill into an over-drinking, apathetic, directionless jellyfish of a man. My skill and belief in being able to lead my family were non-existent. I begged for sex, which was doled out to me carefully after much choreplay or other transactional promises. This was, in turn, making me bitter and defeated, and I found plates because I didn’t care. There were a couple of years of useless marriage counselling (I snapped at the first counsellor and never went back) and then we saw another counsellor who told us that our lives would probably be better if we split up. That hit me hard.

I was still blue pill, there were two young kids, and I was a fucking slob of a man. I didn’t want to split up, and perhaps narcissistically, part of that was I didn’t want people to look at me and think “yes she was right to go, he is a good-for-nothing idiot”. So for the first time in a long while, I turned my attention to who I was. It wasn’t pretty. I decided that I would change myself. If I was an excellent person, and we still split up, then I could hold my head high and say that I gave the marriage the best version of me. I found this place through conversations with a running partner. We would run and chat about politics, etc etc. When I found out about MRP, I lurked for a few months to see what this whole idea was. Then u/SorcerorKing posted the 60 DoD challenge and I realised I had to start somewhere.

PHYSICAL STATE

Before: I had stopped running for a while and got back to skinny-fat pretty quickly. Easy to do when you suck down burgers, beers and don’t exercise.

What I did: I was very poor, I didn’t have enough money for the gym. In month 1 I started bodyweight fitness. It was a big step. I made good progression through it and gained a lot of shoulder muscle. I stopped eating shit food and started meal-prepping. As a result I lost the weight and the start of a sixpack was coming through. When the financial situation improved in month 3, I got a gym membership. I started at the gym, lifting just the bar. It looked comical. But I didn’t care. I just did what the SL5x5 app told me to do.

Now: 5’11” Weigh 175 and BF ~15%. My current (5x5) lifts are SQ210 OHP100 DL145 BP105 BR105 and they aren’t my best but I’m working back up to that. I feel strong and fit. I physically look strong. My shoulders and chest are the biggest they have ever been. Chicks dig it. When I started, wife says “I don’t want you to be muscly.” In month 6 I renew my membership and wife says “you look good, but I don’t want you to get more muscle”. Last week we are eating breakfast and she says “god I am just admiring your physique... but don’t get any more muscly”.

www.TheRedArchive.com
However: There were a few deloads and there were a few hiccups. During times of stress, I did eat shit food and take my foot off the gas. It’s very easy to say “fuck it” for a few days and feel like you’ve earned a break. It’s not worth it. It takes discipline to get yourself back to where you know you should be.

MENTAL STATE AND FRAME

Before:
The stress of work meant that I slept poorly. I would take work problems home with me. The situation at home was not much better. Financially we were just hanging in there, and credit card debt was starting to climb rapidly. I didn’t understand the concept of frame, and would not have been able to provide any examples of my frame in any case. Shit tests came daily, and I failed them all. I got easily drawn into arguments, over mundane pointless stuff. It wore us both out.

What I did: First, sidebar. I read and read. WISNIFG hit me like a series of sharp jabs. MAP was the knockout blow. I realised I had to start from scratch. I literally wrote down all of the areas I needed to improve on. I started to understand shit tests and how to pass them. I was there, googling “shit tests” and reading the posts over and over to try to determine what they were. Mastery of a shit-test is essentially mastery of yourself: are you going to let yourself get drawn into a dirty fight? I started meditating, and my ability to compartmentalise work and home meant I could switch off much more effectively – that means more energy at home. Importantly, I now understood the idea of frame. Initially this was extremely challenging. I was trying to regain frame when (i) I had none; and (ii) I didn’t know what I wanted. But as time went on, my confidence in myself grew, I started to know what I wanted out of life, and now I can set out to achieve those things.

Now: I meditate every day. I pass shit tests (they do not stop…) and I recognise the comfort tests. I have a much calmer, positive mindset now. Butthurtedness is an old memory and yes I still get hard no’s but they just bounce off me.

However: When I’m feeling stressed or short on energy, I can fail. Sometimes it seems too easy to pass up an opportunity to make a wisecrack or deliver a stinging remark. I know that I shouldn’t do it, but it happens.

FINANCES

Before: Money was stressing us both out. There was enough, but never enough. We weren’t poor, but we had to live that way because of poor choices.

What I did: I started my own bug-out fund. There’s enough in there to set me up if/when shit goes south. I monitored the spending and set up budgets. They didn’t work, but I tried. And when that didn’t work, I changed tack and set up spending limits. I had major fucking dramas when I cancelled the credit card, but I enforced a boundary that I set, and when she overstepped, I did what I had to.

Now: Better. We are saving money, ensuring that we have buffers in place for emergencies. The credit card was a storm in a teacup – lots of histrionics from her but forgotten in a couple of days and now she never mentions it. I’ve got my own financial independence too – I’ve got the means to walk away if needed.

SOCIAL

Before: Basically, I would meet up with buddies and binge drink. Just a “let’s drink the worries away” sort of thing. We’d head out to town, and be the sloppy dudes in the corner that everyone keeps away from. If I’d been drinking, I’d be loud and charmless. At social events, I was happy to sit down with the ladies and just have a quiet chat. It’s so cringey to think back on it.

What I did: There was a bit of monk-mode in the social life. The above behavior isn’t consistent with what I wanted so I stopped going out for quite a while. Instead I developed some hobbies and started working towards a promotion at work. When I did go out, I cut back on the drinking and remained a bit more aloof. And this place also told me to, and taught me how to, go and chat to the other guys at social events.

Now: I’m confident around people. I have been to the PTA and struck up conversations with the hottest mom in the room, and under pretext of “we’ll be working on a committee together” got her to put her number into my phone. I know that went back to my wife. When I’m out, being the quieter and more thoughtful guy makes people more interested in me. I talk to the bros at barbecues etc., not the women. Also, muscles and tending to how I look helps when I approach people, and them coming up and talking to me. I’m still platting but (apart from a setback last month) it’s just a bit of fun on the side, not a critical part of my life that I seek out. Pussy is pussy.

THE MARRIAGE

It’s now stronger than it has been for many, many years. There are definitely good days and bad ones. But I’m smart enough now to weather the bad, and maximise the good. I have come to terms with “not mine, just my turn” and if it goes to hell, then I’ll be ready to pick up and leave and alpha-widow that shit.

The two most powerful parts of where I am now: Dread™ and passing shit tests. I’ve spoken about the shit testing already, but the use of Dread is critical. If your wife doesn’t notice you, you don’t matter to her. You’re in her way. It needs to be the other way around, and Dread got me there. Again, the 60 DoD was the catalyst. I’ve gone from wearing sweatpants and old t-shirts to the shops, to being on-point with a good haircut, smelling respectable and fitted clothes to the shops. Be attractive. Don’t be unattractive. I’ve changed the way I look, I’ve changed the way I dress, I even changed the way I sit up and stand up (trust me, better posture is noticed). Wife’s friends noticed me, so now my wife did.

YOU GET OUT WHAT YOU PUT IN

It takes effort. I lacked in effort for many years, and look where that got me. When I actually applied myself, I was able to slowly but surely clean up my act. But that’s the key. If you don’t actively put in any effort – you don’t get a reward.
There have been times where I did slack off. When I’ve been particularly stressed, annoyed or things weren’t generally going my way, on occasion I gave up and stopped adhering to the rules. It set me back.

Now I’ve come to realise that failure is part of the game (just don’t repeat those failures) and to actually forgive myself when I do fail. It’s important to keep pushing. I still don’t always get it right, but I always try to improve.

Thanks for all the support. You’ve all been inspirational in your ways. People who’ve called me a faggot are just as important as people who have supported me (perhaps more so - it killed my ego very quick). I’m going to stick around here. This shit works – just make sure you work hard at it.

EDIT:

SEX LIFE

Before: Explained in the opener, but it was grim.

What I did: I kept initiating and kept getting shut down. I started initiating in other rooms, at other times - rather than "after kids have gone to bed". I recognised and shut down butthurtedness when I got rejected.

I did go monk-mode for a month as I didn't want distractions. I spent a lot of time and effort working on myself (ha no you fuckers I'm not talking about the champagne of victory!) I was reading, lifting and internalising. I practised DEVI and tried to make things more interesting. Added a bit of slap n tickle through the day as well.

Now: There have been improvements. I still get the low-effort lays but there are also times when I can tell she is really putting in some effort and the surprise BJs and showers together are back. That had been missing for quite a while. She still rarely initiates (that hasn't changed much) but my initiations are regularly getting results. I can also tell when the dread is working, as she'll initiate after something happens while we are out. She doesn't make it obvious, but you can tell why. While still not the quality and quantity I would like, overall it has been a great improvement and on the right trajectory. As I improve, so does the sex life.
THE CHEATING GAME - post mortem, 180 degrees.
by over60_stupid_loner | January 10, 2017 | Link

Part One: Summary of PM’s over the last year.

Often someone will read an old post of mine The Cheating Game and, I get many private messages that go something like this:

I was reading your post from a year ago and would like the benefit of your experience. I became RP aware a few weeks, or months, ago and have read some, or all, of the side bar. I am about 35 to 45 years old and have 2 or more, kids. I have been beta all, most, or part of my life. I am long married to a difficult woman that has problems getting along with me and the kids. She has some intermittent issues with alcohol, or something else. She is an angry woman, a feminist, and she childishly refuses to accept any responsibility for her bad behavior. I am a very successful provider for the family and a good father.

I know you can’t make this decision for me. I am trying to decide if it is better to stay together for the sake of the kids and get sex outside of my marriage, or, just go ahead and make the split with my wife.

I am concerned that my children may not do well having me in their lives only half time.

I would really appreciate your advice........

AFC AverageFrustratedChump

Part Two: My response to the AFC’s PMs.

AFC, what you describe is far from an impossible situation.

Unbeknownst to you, you hold all the cards in your relationship. Just as you so easily admit you were beta, you also are the cause of all your problems, and only you can fix them. As you lift, apply dread, study the sidebar and apply it to your situation, OVER TIME you will improve.

As you get control of yourself and improve; you, your wife, and your children will benefit, over time. Very rarely, does leading your family fail. When it does fail to improve, there is no doubt about leaving and becoming a half time dad. Therefore, the answer to your question is to do the work on you, then your question will be answered by your wife’s behavior, in time.

You probably already are a half time dad. Between work, maybe travel and other obligations, few men really spend that much more time with their kids when they are married, compared to after they divorce. Get your day-planner/calendar down and really look at it. For most men this concern is overblown.

If you are still having sex with your wife, outside affairs will only dilute your time for gaming of your wife and your self improvement efforts.
The best reason for affairs is - the sex. The second best reason for an affair is to re-establish your view of abundance. If you are looking for more than sex or abundance, then you are a needy guy looking for validation, and, you will probably implode your marriage.

Recognize that getting caught will likely end your marriage, and, end your plan of staying for the kids. If ever you couldn’t keep a secret, you will probably not keep your affairs secret either. Based on your comments, your kids are a priority. How would you like you kids, and others, to know about your affairs?

There are some tactical issues. If you improve yourself/marriage, you have a shot at sex several times a week with a partner you can train to please you. You will not be spending hours gaming soccer moms, or on dating sites, or in bars gaming women that may, or may not pan out. Avoiding STD’s, not attracting crazies, and unprotected sex are other considerations. If you think you are dealing with rejection now, more women approached will mean more opportunities for rejection, and more opportunities to meet shitty women.

My advice to you:

- If cheating is what you really want to do; do it, you are your own judge.

- Avoiding cheating allows you more time and energy to work on the real cause of your problems - you.

- Once you have gone through the entire self improvement process, and your wife doesn’t respond, then, rather than serial cheating, respect yourself and your children, and leave.

Best

Part Three: Post Mortem of “The Cheating Game”.

When I wrote that post over a year ago, I was trying to make sense of my first failed marriage, that ended over 25 years ago. That post set in motion months of introspection. This post is the result to date.

I am still unapologetic about that old post. I did what I thought was best at the time. However, months ago, I changed to another username, because I did not want my adult children, to stumble across it and know it was me. The very reason I stayed in that marriage, became my achilles heel. I realized, I did not want to be outed as a cheater to my kids, and significant others. Well, my kids know now, but they always mostly knew. Kids are a forgiving bunch; you love them, they love you back. During my introspective process, they offered me some insights.

Their mother had/has serious mental issues that she did not/will not address. My kids said they appreciated that I stayed. They appreciated my being there for them, but they question if a divorce could have been better, for them, their mother, and me. My kids did not enjoy living with the tension, and their distant, unhappy parents. Having two parents and lots of stuff was good, but having two happy parents even if they are divorced, would have been much better.

One reason I stayed in the marriage, was to spend more time with my kids than just being a joint custody parent. My kids pointed out that between working and working “late”, going out with my friends, going camping “alone”, and my involvement with school activities, I didn’t spend as much time with them as I thought. When it came to coaching their teams and working in their school organizations, although I was always involved, they often had to wait their turn for my attention. I was often preoccupied with the moms that needed my attention.

I spent so much time gaming and chasing women, that I probably got less sex than if I was gaming the wife. Logistically it is hard to line up several one night stands a week. Much less train them to consistently give me what I want. Edit: If it's all about sex anyway, you may as well fuck the crazy woman you know, hard and often, rather than look for new occasional crazy that might cause you even more problems.

Another reason I stayed, was to protect my children from their mother’s problems. However, the vast majority of the time, their mother cared for one or more of them, without my supervision, or the need of it. She loves those kids and they love her, faults and all. I was wrong.

So my rationalizations for staying were not very sound.

“Fallacies of Cheating for the Sake of the Children”

- If you get caught, you will hurt the children you are staying for and trying to protect.

- You will probably get less sex than if you improve yourself, game your wife, and lead your family.

- You will increase your chances for getting an STD, and attracting crazies. Any unprotected sex is very risky.

- You will have to approach a lot more women to get laid regular. Increases your exposure to rejection, and, problematic women.

- Having two parents and lots of stuff is good, but having two happy parents, even if they are divorced, is much better for you, and your kids.

- You will spend less time with your kids due to your cheating, than you would if you improved your marriage or divorced.
• It is unlikely you will protect your children from your spouse by staying.

• Spending the time you would use for cheating, for self improvement instead, is more likely to benefit you and your children long term.

Part Four: What (I Believe) I should have done:

I should have taken control of myself, of my emotions, and spent my time improving myself.

• I was the cause of all my problems. By redirecting the time I spent getting the thrill of sexual pursuit and validation, to improving myself, I would have been a better man with a happier family. Even if the marriage eventually failed, I would have gained.

• If I had done the work of improving myself back then, I believe there was a better than 50% chance of fixing that marriage.

• If it could not have been fixed, I would have divorced and improved the lives of everyone, especially my children and me.

• Even if the marriage had improved, I still doubt it would have survived the empty nest, but the intervening years could have been happier for everyone.

Not many subjects get the visceral reactions that male, and female, cheating get. Although I have my mutating views about cheating, you are your own judge. With that in mind, I look forward to your discussion.

Best

Edit: This is my thoughts about a primary focus on cheating instead of gaming your wife, or, serial cheating. This is not about the guys that do "catch and release" and every once in while don't release.
Signs she might be a former carousel rider looking for a provider.

by kevin32 | November 25, 2016 | Link

Having been married to a former carousel rider in my Blue Pill beta days, I thought I'd share some insight on how to identify former carousellers looking for a provider for those wanting an LTR. Considerations will also be made for men already in relationships with such women. This is a complementary essay to Rollo's Saving the Best.

A common scenario the Blue Pill beta male faces (assuming he's at least average-looking and has a stable career), is he meets a 30-something beauty who gives him more attention than other women. She's very open to him, initiates often, and she's so easy to date he doesn't have to put forth much effort for her to respond positively. Because he lacks a sex life and social interaction with women in general, meeting her is like finding an oasis in the desert.

But he's unaware that the most common sexual strategy of the attractive woman is to ride a carousel of cocks in the prime of her youth, and then secure a beta provider such as himself when she's post-wall.

Signs that a woman might be a former carousel rider looking for a provider:

- She's a 7 or higher in looks.

- She's around 30 years of age or older.

- She shows signs of slutty behavior. The major ones are she has visible tattoos, dyed hair and unusual piercings; she's on birth control; she likes talking about sex and reacts positively to sexual innuendos; she has daddy issues; she has the "thousand cock stare".

- She attended college.

- She's a single mom with some of the other traits listed here.

- She asks "Where have all the good men gone?". She says she's "tired of the games", or she's "tired of jerks and players trying to get into her pants", and that she wants a "mature man" for a serious relationship.
• She's a try-hard. She actively pursues you, calling you often, wanting to be with you, laughing at your jokes that aren't that funny. If she knows where you live, she comes by unannounced if she hasn't seen or heard from you in a few days. And keenly aware as a prostitute that men love sex, she makes herself easy to get into bed. The key here is that she puts forth most of the effort, with you doing little in return. Be sure to verify other carousel signs to distinguish between a woman who's genuinely attracted to you, and a woman who just wants provision.

• She feels the need to confess her sexual history to you. Sometimes the confession is out of the blue, sort of like "I need to get something off my chest" to give her plausible deniability in case you hold it against her in the future (She confessed her slutty behavior and you stayed anyway). Other times it's her need to reminisce the good old days. But a good way to get her to open up about her past is to talk about your sexual past as if it was no big deal (public places you've had sex, kinky things you've done, how fun it was, etc.). If she feels you won't judge her, former carousel riders light up at the opportunity to talk about who and what they've done. Now, she generally won't reveal her sexual history while you're dating and she's attempting to marry you, but she'll be more open about it after marriage when she has legal access to your resources. Just don't fall for the "I've only known one man who was my boyfriend" line.

• She will guilt-trip you into marriage within months of the relationship. When you first start dating and tell her upfront that you're not interested in marriage, she will be okay with the idea initially. But after some time she'll say things like "My parents don't like the idea of us being together for so long unmarried," or "It's against my religion/personal beliefs for us to have sex unmarried," or "I feel like I'm being used and I don't want to play games, I want someone who's serious", or "My biological clock is ticking", or "Don't you love me?"

• She doesn't enjoy the role of housekeeper. She doesn't like to cook or clean, and isn't very good at it. She lived such a hedonistic lifestyle in her prime with friendzoned betas at her beck and call, that being of service to someone other than herself is unappealing. She'd rather lay around watching TV all day.

• She's closed off in the bedroom. When you first start dating she's easy to have sex with and many times she'll initiate (to get you hooked), but after marriage she shuts down. She's sexually prudish and not as enthusiastic in bed as she once was, and sex feels more like a chore and stress-reliever than something fun.

Signs that a man is being used mostly for his resources by a former carouseller (I've been guilty of many of these):
His behavior is beta. He's always showering her with attention, doing whatever she wants on a whim, being servile and supplicating, but she thinks it's "romantic" and appears appreciative, at least prior to marriage. To my bias, beta behavior is the #1 cause for ending up with a selfish, uncooperative, unsubmissive woman, and what helps makes her manipulation of him easier.

He's physically unattractive, but she knows he has resources. He's short, skinny, fat, unmuscular, etc. but he makes a good living, especially in the STEM fields. Her asking "So what do you do for a living?" is her way of determining if he's someone capable of providing for her. Of course, having good looks and a good job only raises his value, but if he's not all that good-looking and she's still interested, it's for his resources.

He's early to mid-20s. Though he prefers younger women (who aren't interested in dating him), he rationalizes dating an older woman by assuming she's mature and experienced and therefore should play her role in the relationship much more efficiently than someone younger. But I also think older, desperate women target younger men because they're generally more naive about how women operate and therefore easier to seduce and manipulate than older men (though older men aren't exempt of course).

He's Captain Save-A-Ho. He's with her primarily because of some "problem" he thinks she needs rescuing from. He wants to see himself as the hero who "saves" her from loneliness, or poor living conditions, or her fatherless child. He thinks his noble act will make her more appreciative and committed to him, forgetting the corollaries in Briffault's Law.

He only has vanilla sex. In keeping with his Nice Guy personality, when the beta male has sex with a woman, he doesn't fuck her with any sense of dominance, he "makes love" to her. Maybe such a strategy is appropriate if she recently had a traumatic experience such as losing a loved one. But if the porn industry and 50 Shades of Grey hysteria is any indication, women much prefer dominance and rough sex to love-making. This is why the Red Pill emphasizes lifting and alpha behavior. Because once a woman has been fucked by enough cocks, especially good ones, her ability to stay with one man long term is diminished because she judges her current partner by her carousel years. Good cock is like an addictive drug to women, and if her current partner is not giving her the feels that Chad did, she will cheat or leave.

There's no genuine emotional connection between the two, and she doesn't care. She's not genuinely happy to see him when he comes home from work, and she's not particularly upbeat (not that she's necessarily moody, just indifferent towards him). They don't have shared interests or social interplay such as cracking witty jokes with each other on the fly, or some light-hearted horseplay. The relationship feels so effortful that they need a lot of outside influences (dining out, going to a movie, and other "outings") to compensate for a boring relationship as opposed to using those things to compliment an already good thing. But she doesn't care about bonding with him because she never wanted anything more from him than his resources. Whereas the beta male is stimulated by being subservient to her, her stimulation comes from eating, sleeping, shopping, and cheating.

- He's good father-figure/emotional support. "Resources" is not limited to money, food or shelter. Many single-moms want a father-figure for their children. For post-wall women, the provision they look for in a beta male is the same provision they enjoyed from the men they friendzoned: attention and validation; from a male servant around the house who flatters her like a princess and serves as her emotional tampon. Being post-wall and no longer attractive to Chad, she wants someone to tell her she's still desirable. The servile nature of the beta-male makes him qualified to fulfill these roles.

- He's desperate for a woman. Loneliness and a lack of women willing to date him has been so prevalent in his life, that when a pretty women shows him some attention, he's willing to forego the carousel signs just so he can have some companionship. This makes her efforts to exploit him that much easier.

The takeaway from this is that being a beta-provider is like being friendzoned with benefits. He provides her with resources/emotional support and she occasionally gives him duty-sex in return. But the sex isn't fulfilling for her as it was on the carousel because unless he's decent looking and dominant in the bedroom, she's not sexually attracted to him. Her settling for a beta male means she sees him as a servant rather than a lover or partner.

Denial:

I realize this is a sensitive topic for men already in LTRs because it puts a spotlight on their current partner, and if perchance several of the carousel signs checks out for her, they may go through some measure of denial. I want to address this denial now. Keep in mind this is coming from someone who married and provided for a former carousel rider:

There is a segment of men in the manosphere who give carousel riders the benefit of the doubt by believing that even though she rode the carousel, she simply made a mistake in her sexual behavior that she wasn't aware of until she approached the Wall. That at some point she "came to her senses" and realized the jerks and players she was fucking weren't good relationship material, that she was never empowered by giving herself away for free, and now her seeking a "good man" is evidence of her remorse and repentance.

But assuming she started riding the carousel at say, 18, isn't it odd that it took her roughly 10 years to come to this realization, which just so happened to coincide after all the jerks and players no longer wanted her? But let us recall the young carouseller's remark in Michael's story when he confronted her about her slutty behavior:
“Michael let me tell you something: not only am I going to have my cake eat it and eat it too. I’m going to have it with ice cream and sprinkles”

A woman's carousel years has nothing to do with finding a "good man" for long-term commitment and everything to do with hedonism, which feminists have been pushing for decades. And the most telling evidence of this behavior is her lamenting "Where have all the good men gone?". To ask about these men after she's post-wall suggests they were available in her prime, but she wasn't interested in them at the time. She was far more interested in riding the carousel.

The man who holds the "good girl who made a mistake" perspective is usually in an LTR and wants to believe that the woman he's with is a Good Girl Gina who has a low N-count and loves him for his personality. In the face of Red Pill awareness of the cock carousel (examples here and here), he doesn't want to consider that his partner might have been a deliberate carousel rider who planned her sexual and provider strategy from the start, because it would make him the recipient of used-up goods. YaReally offers a similar perspective.

The fact they've been rejecting decent men who gave a damn about them for jerks and players since high school shows these women know exactly what they're doing, and they're even encouraged by feminists.

Anger:

Once the beta-male realizes the woman he's providing for had a slutty past, he usually goes through some measure of anger. He's disillusioned that she isn't the "good girl" he expected. And considering his friendzoned days with her former desirability, he realizes that he's married to the very woman who would have friendzoned or rejected him in her prime, making him a living example that "Nice Guys finish last."

And for many men there's the additional element of jealousy: It's not so much that she was promiscuous that frustrates him, but that he couldn't enjoy that sort of sex life for himself. For years he's tried to unlock the secret to getting laid like a playboy to no avail. But then comes along his LTR who tells him tales of her wonderful adventures at DisneyCocks Theme Park, the park to which he was denied employment. From his perspective, her reminiscing about her abundant sex life is like saying "Ha ha, look at all the fun I had that you never could!". And then for her hold back in the bedroom is a slap to the face; she was slutty for the men she hooked up with, but not for the man who provides for her.

If for much of your adult life you could barely get women to look in your direction, and all of a sudden this attractive 30-something is giving you lots of attention, putting forth the effort to be with you, and giving up the pussy without you doing much for her in return, it's a sign she wants you to be her provider, not because she thinks you're hot or loves your personality.

The purpose of the carousel signs is to be aware that women who rode the carousel generally don't make good long-term partners because they're self-serving, disrespectful, unappreciative, they aren't good housekeepers, and they aren't committed. Just like her relationships with friendzoned men, she will come in wanting the LTR to be all about her like a pampered baby.

For men already in LTRs with older attractive women, one of the greatest tests of Red Pill maturity is honestly acknowledging that one's wife or girlfriend was likely a slut in her prime. I understand many men new to this information have children and financial constraints preventing them from making an easy exit from the relationship if her sexual history is a deal breaker. But I suggest at least assessing her current behavior to ensure she at least contributes to the relationship in ways that serve you, while also resolving any counterproductive behaviors in yourself that makes her uncooperative in the relationship, and unenthusiastic in the bedroom (see here and here).

Because the benefit of acknowledging her slutty past is it minimizes attachment and dependency on your perceived "goodness" of her for your happiness. This detachment makes it easier spot deception and manipulation, it reduces beta behavior, and it's easier to not put up with her bullshit and ultimately work towards getting what you want from the relationship because you no longer think the world of her.
Your life gets easier, the more than people want to fuck you

by stonepimpletilists | April 27, 2017 | Link

My brothers, I'm starting to see a trend, and my greatest joy of logging onto reddit to see my brothers working, is to impart the limited wisdom I have attained, from my many, completely heterosexual days at sea, surrounded by big burly, sexual men.

Redpill Bambi, the antithesis of redpill rambo. So afraid of fucking something up, that they slow to a crawl. There's many recent posts, about why one shouldn't expect their woman to shape up because you found a gym last week. Wash a few more dishes, stop listening to their nagging... No blowjobs or anal yet?

A mon dieu!

This was triage. You're asking why the tourniquet means you can't get back in the game. It's because You still ain't shit, but thats OK If you haven't fucked anything up yet, you haven't pushed. Your worries about inconsequential shit are holding you back.

Wife won't get off facebook? Wife won't initiate? Wife doesn't lift a finger around the house except to cash cheques? It's because You still ain't shit, but thats OK

But but, I have lurked for a year. Nevermind my fuckarounditis for the last 12 months, I've gotten all the goodfeels from this, and am crushing those weights at the gym. Crossfitters use these right? I kind of sort of read a little on game. I read NMMNG cover to cover man! What gives?

Get it through your stupid thick fucking head. You still ain't shit, but thats OK

But there is some hope. People hate change. Fucking despise it. It's why your EGO is there to stroke you for not doing anything differently. Maybe you've killed it and putting in serious work. maybe not. Regardless, she has one too.

What, she gonna leave because you don't hold her purse when she jingles it at you? She gets a little miffed that you're acting different? Gonna leave because you're at the gym and looking hot? Walk it through. Whats the worst thats gonna happen. This is the hard part, because you start to learn how stupid most of your consequences have been all this time.

The big question to ask yourself "Is she going to leave over this?" And the answer is almost always "Not unless she is looking for an excuse to anyways". In this case, ripping that bandaid off quick is probably doing you a favour. Once she's checked out, shes checked out.

Ever made her cry since starting your map? I did, multiple times. I'm taking snot bubbles, stomping feet level crying. Know what though? She didn't leave. Crying means emotions. What you need to watch out for is apathy. Apathy is what kills you, so you be worried when she doesn't cry over some dumb shit.
Now, my advice, of which you will neither heed, value, or do, is this... When in doubt, err on the side of action, STFU, or laughing at her womanly quibbles. IF you don't have the balls to try it, pick the most inconsequential shit ever.

Good example: I left the toilet seat up once. She came at me, screaming. I fell in the fucking thing, blah blah blah. Fucking pissed.

I couldn't stop laughing, probably 60 seconds in. All I could picture is her doing Trainspotting, the home game in there.

Fucking funny.

Know what? After about a minute of my uncrushable frame (who the fuck falls in a toilet?) she started laughing too.

This can be the power of a strong frame. Now, this example is about as inconsequential as it gets, but that's the point. Pick some dumb shit, build up the courage to start testing more boundaries with your newfound, rock hard frame you pussy.

Eventually, you start to see all the dumb shit crumble. 100%. And on the off chance you misjudge, and blow off some real shit? Hey, this is great! Hold her in your big man arms (those kettle bells) look her deep in the eyes, tell her "Baby, I know you needed X, and I didn't do it. I made fun of it, and didn't take your feelings into account. I have to tell you, this is your fault you know... you're the one who married an asshole." Kiss her on the forehead, go fix whatever you fucked up and move on.

And now you know how far you should go before you go Rambo.

As for the 'don't eat paint' disclaimer that usually comes from there, I'll get them out of the way now. If you are a giant autistic fuckup. If you think you're a god among men, and that 30% BF is 'kind of lean' then stop, close your computer, and don't do any of this. Go learn human emotions and go lift quietly.
Stats: 35/m, married four years, 1 yo baby.

In mid-2016, I was in a really low place. I was in a giant city that I hated, my wife's bitchiness level was increasing, the sex was ebbing and I was depressed as shit. I was victim-puking on /r/deadbedrooms when someone red-knighted me about MRP. I had never really looked into the TRP stuff, since it all looked like a bunch of 20 year old douchebags trying to one-up each other; but exploring MRP was something of a revelation for me. Mostly lurking, I plunged in. This has been my experience over the last almost-2 years, for anyone in a similar position.

Step One was lifting, reading, and STFU-ing. The big importance and wisdom of this step has only become clearer to me with time.

At first, I wasn't sure how to get to where I wanted to be in my marriage - I wasn't even sure what that would look like. I wanted my wife to fuck me more, for us to have the kind of fun, kinky sex life we'd had back while dating, for her to respect me more. (Ha!) But the entry-level MRP advice sounded reasonable, and its sagacity became only clearer the further I went: STFU. Lift. Read.

- I joined a gym. I got on a program. Paid attention to my diet. Adjusted my lifestyle around that. Committed. 3-4x/week.

- I went on Amazon and picked up NMMNG, MMSLP, WISNIFG and Rational Male. Between them, MMSLP was outstanding, but I have to say that NMMNG was one of the most eye-opening books I've read in along time. It made me truly realize who I'd become in my marriage. Holy shit.

- Recognizing shit tests for what they were, I now mostly STFU instead of blubbering through some DEER bullshit. When my wife copped an attitude, I began charitably treating her like the child she was behaving like. Why respond? Who cares? STFU and disengage. Drives her insane.

After this initial stuff, it seems like a lot of guys want to sustain a steady pace of changes, because of course they're eager to get to the prize: getting more sex in their marriage. They go Rambo! Well, it didn't work like that for me. The process since has mostly more of the same: Lift. Improve yourself. Grind. That's it. That's how you get where you want to go. The most important parts to me have been:

Lifting: As I made lifting into a part of my lifestyle, I started to see gainz. Holy shit, that's fun. Lifting is now a whole part of my lifestyle regardless of my MAP. It's fucking great. All men should lift. I'm a 3-4x/week guy now. Over this time, I've dropped a ton of bodyfat and gotten much stronger.

Wardrobe: Tbh, I fucking hate shopping and don't really give a shit about clothing, but okay - I'm a grown man and need to invest more in my appearance. I bought new clothes. Changed my hair. Grew a beard. Looking better.

Aesthetic change has been gradual, but now, 22 months in, the fruits of my labor are clear. I look good. I'm much more muscular, have lost a lot of fat. Wife has scrupulously said nothing about this, but I know she notices: even her friends comment that I'm looking great, in her presence. IOIs increased.

Self-improvement: This is a long process that's completely dependent on you and what you do, but my thought process was: how can I improve my status? How can I publicly demonstrate my own competence and mastery? Do so in a way you care about, not necessarily one that your wife cares about. (Eg. do this for yourself, not your woman.)

Me? I settled on two things: I started volunteering a lot at a local charity I care about, and eventually was recognized for my contributions there. I also kicked off a big professional side project: a technical book, which was eventually published just this year by a major publisher. Huge accomplishment for me. I'm getting asked to give paid conference talks/trainings on the topic now. Cool. Side revenue!

Presiding: I've organized a men-only hiking trip with a group of buddies, which has become an annual thing. It's a ton of fun, and has also resulted in an ongoing group text that's honestly both fun and a source of support. I also organized a group beach vacation with a few couple friends for later this summer, where I'll get to play Mr. Goodtimes and the key leader for the group.

Ownership: I own my shit in my house. If there is shit that needs doing, I either delegate it explicitly to my wife or I get it done myself.

In the middle of this process, my wife got pregnant and had our baby daughter. There have been obvious ups and downs to that process, but on balance, I feel it's been a positive. I love our daughter. She's great. Being a dad is both a lot of work and also, to me, completely worth it. Frankly, I am kicking ass at dad-ing. Doctor appts, daycare, schedules, etc - I've got it.

So has all of this "worked?"

Short answer: no, not really! A drop-off in our sex life over the last year is to be expected (pregnancy, and then the first few months with baby), but it's more like gone off a cliff. My wife is just not interested in having sex with me. She does not seem attracted to me at all, really, and our sex life has all but completely dried up. Bitchiness level has increased. Coincidentally or not, she has much more explicitly embraced feminism (where it is convenient for her, of course) than she ever did before.
(Side note: I know that in many couples, women shoulder most of the childcare work. This is fine and proper, IMO, and conforms to my idea of the ideal division of responsibilities within a family. That said, in our family, I have taken on more than my fair share, and Mrs. Mithridates still complains and nurses resentment towards me because she thinks she still does an unfair amount. A ton of "New Mom culture" programs women to nurse this complaint, regardless of whether it's accurate in their own household or not. Fucking irritating.)

That said, her Dread level has risen. She has dreams about me leaving her. As the delta between our SMVs has widened (she has gained weight, of course, and doesn't seem to care to do anything about it), she has not engaged in mate-guarding, but rather withdrawn from me. Her respect level has not changed appreciably, either.

So, since was/is it worth it?

Resoundingly, yes! Both psychologically, physically and professionally, I'm in peak condition. If divorce ever comes our way, I am in a great position. I feel great about myself, have a daughter that I love, and while I really, truly want my wife to join me/us on the path upwards, I can't control whether she does or not. I can only give her every reason to.

I don't spend a ton of time trawling through MRP looking for affirmation. That shit is a waste of time, but I appreciate the support this community gives to us men looking for answers to what's missing in our lives that isn't hopelessly twisted by the feminist cultural imperative.

Upwards, gentlemen.
Here's your wife having an emotional affair on a girls' night out [X-Post TRP]

by ex_addict_bro | August 9, 2018 | Link

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/95xku0/bouncer_tales/
If you’ve read my previous posts on Depressive and Anxious wives, good for you. Some have asked why I have picked the topic of “Depressive and Anxious Wives” rather than AWALT (even though this rule still applies). The reason that I’ve chose this extreme version of your woman is because yes, while AWALT applies, it seems to me after being here on MRP for a long time that some women naturally pursue chaos to get feelz, and thus those traits usually manifest themselves in your relationship and wife as anxiety or depression.

As a simple reminder, here’s the previous 3 posts – which you should read to understand the context of the next stage that I think happens once you’ve accepted it’s all your fault, built a safe place, and converted dread into desire.

Part 1: Depressive and Anxious Wives: How it’s all your fault Part 2: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Transformation and Building Escape Part 3: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Converting Dread to Desire

Discovering you mission of authenticity

By this time, you’ve likely recognized that building a safe place within your life for your woman to find and gravitate towards usually results in great quality sex. You may have even discovered how to abandon dread altogether in place of inspiring desire. This post is an attempt at providing MRPers more guidance on building a deeper safe place including honesty and authenticity that contains more than sexual fulfillment and gravity towards sexual desire. Learning to use authenticity and patience in your life will drive your woman into greater depths of feelz, which then inspires more desire in both sexual and non-sexual ways.

The first question that I found myself attempting to answer when trying to lead my wife into deeper authenticity was to determine for myself the following things:

- Who am I as a man?

- How do I project the authenticity and truth about who I am as a man to others that I encounter?

These two questions that I asked myself were core to my mission. I did not yet know my mission or what it was that I needed to do with my life, but I did know that I wasn’t quite sure what kind of man I was. To answer this question, with true authenticity and masculinity, it was required for me to strip all ideas of who I was before and for once – peel back the layers of ego like an onion and discover what was at my core. When I was finally able to peel back all the layers of pain, hurt, and false senses of security – the answer presented itself with great force.

I discovered that I was a man who was full of energy and gifts. I had a desire to give myself to this world in ways that were unique to me and spoke from my core. These gifts can manifest themselves in many ways, and perhaps you have some of the same: strength, mental fortitude, direction, passion, creativity, leadership, understanding, non-judgement, gracious, mindful, protection, courage, independence and assertiveness.

I discovered that all of those things were just qualities of who I was as a man. You may share quite a few of those with me. But most of all, the largest thing that I was as a man was... giving. I would share all those great traits and qualities from my core to influence and change people’s lives for the better (or worse). Either way, I am the prize. I am the gift. I give freely no matter the circumstance, until it no longer works and I choose no longer to give.

Only when you know who you are, and what you have to give this world can you then become an authentic version of yourself who will then (if you choose to) give that gift to his woman so that she can be your reflection.

If you’re an asshole, your wife will reflect your asshole better than anyone. Choose and discover who you are with great care. A man who gives from abundance great things to this world and his woman will soon discover that not only is your wife a mirror of who you are, but so is the world and everyone you meet.

Being authentic to your masculine self allows the polarity in your relationship to surface and your woman to live in her feminine. If you are LARPing, so is she. If you’re bullshitting your way through life, so is the world around you. Find where you are no longer authentic in your life and challenge that mental model with the force of your direction and masculinity. Challenge it all. Change if you must. Choose who you are.

Creating the Feelz 2.0

You should know by now that your woman, if she is depressed or anxious, requires BIG feelz and emotions in order to satisfy and remain congruent to who she is. You should have accepted this by now, and if you haven’t you certainly need to go back to the sidebar or give up and choose a different woman. Most men, from what I gathered here at my time in MRP, only wish to dab their toes in the water of the deep end of understanding their woman with the purpose of getting better quality sex.

That will not work with a depressive and anxious wife.

Using your masculine direction, this gives way for her to let go of her masculine energy and put it into her feminine energy. The masculine is direction. The feminine is chaotic. But guess what?

You need chaos and uncertainty just as much as she does.

Why? The challenge. The test. The things she says or does to drive you absolutely into an emotional tailspin is just that - a test of your frame to see if you are able to overcome those emotions and lead her to a place of safety and masculine strength. Can you overcome her shitty behavior and still continue to be the man that you are? Most men cannot, and this is why we usually end up here at MRP. We fail time and time again tests of our manhood and become betatized in an attempt to supplicate her feelz with more feelz.

She doesn’t want your feelz, or at least not in the way that you think she does. The best feeling that your woman will ever get is when you stand up against her, look her in the eyes, and call her out on her bullshit never with a word of anger or disrespect. You call her out with who you are.

There are still ways to create Feelz 1.0 throughout your relationship that lead to Feelz 2.0 - but that's a topic that I should tackle in a different post.

Shitty Comfort Testing

This is the epitome of how I want to be tested now in addition to regular comfort testing (which there are thousands of words on how to pass here at MRP).

What is a shitty comfort test?

A shitty comfort test is complicated but once you understand the motivation behind a woman’s desire to do it, you will understand exactly what YOU need to do when encountering one if you choose to pass it. You don’t have to pass it, but I sincerely doubt that intentionally failing a shitty comfort test is who you are if you’ve put the time and energy into self discovery.

It’s simple. A shitty comfort test is an effort on your woman’s part to elicit the STRONGEST frame you have, all the while playing the nice card but not offering her the desired outcome that her hamster thinks she needs. Remember: this is the wild hamster, who really doesn’t know what it wants and will grab at anything to satisfy it’s thirst for feelz. Here’s a recent comfort test that I encountered, because I made something a priority over her:

“You’re just leaving to go do XYZ? I have been asking you for days to do ABC. You always get to leave whenever you want. You don’t care about how I feel. Go ahead, do whatever you want. It’s fine.”

On the surface this seems like a shit test (“You always get leave whenever you want”). Betas reply to this by staying home, or arguing that they made time for her to do ABC earlier/later. Betas might even get angry at their wives for being a bitch when there is something important that they need to do. Anger is bred in crazy ways during shitty comfort testing.

If you have read before on how to pass shitty comfort tests, it’s simple: STFU, carry on. But I want to challenge that idea entirely by making this the key opportunity to provide the biggest and best feelz that a woman requires.

I looked at my wife after she said that. I stared deeply into her eyes, and looked through her words and through her emotions. I peered deeply into her, using the brightest eyes that I could muster, and let her FEEL that no matter what she said, I knew what I was doing was more important right now than providing her comfort. I told her, with my eyes only and intense STFU, that I’d be there later for her when she decided to approach me in a way that would be constructive to our relationship and my frame. She stared back at me at first with fire in her eyes and anger in her heart, but 10 seconds later I watched the anxiety leave her face.

“Fine.” A second time I heard this.

I continued to deeply look through her, look through her bullshit, until she FELT me standing in the face of her ridiculous behavior – still the same man that I discovered long ago. Smiling. The man that she desires. The strength of a thousand men were in me against this simple chaotic episode in her mind.

She felt the warm strength of calmness and direction.

“Ok, but I need to go do ABC soon.”

Continue to look through her. STFU. Use your eyes. Use your body language. Open up your arms, the front of your chest, your breath, your large heart. Open it all, even if you have to physically do so by getting up and stretching. Continue looking through her and into her.

“I’m sorry, I just get so worked up sometimes and I get jealous because you get to do all these things all the time and I don’t. I know you need to do XYZ for our family, I just don’t like that it takes time away from us.”

And there you have it. There’s the end of the test. She’s overtly stated she is seeking comfort. How did she arrive here through the chaos of her hamster? You. Your strength. Your masculine balance.

THOSE are the feelz that she desires most, and those are a whole entirely different level of feelz that she has never had before. Feelz 2.0

She is testing your authentic self and that connection to her. You must wade through the bullshit of the daily grind to discover in any way possible the authenticity that she desires from your core. Your woman is seeking an authentic connection that ONLY YOU CAN PROVIDE HER, and if she denies these feelz then she is lying. She is full of ego.

Why should you welcome the tests like this? It is a test of congruency, but more specifically it’s a test of her showing you inauthentic behavior (it’s not about XYZ or ABC or the nail) to see if you can deliver back to her those feelz desire her shitty behavior. Deliver the most authentic version of STFU ever and feelz through her. That’s a shitty comfort test, and that’s how it’s passed.

I love shitty comfort tests, and so should you. They are the best test of them all. But they require strength and patience that you never knew possible within you. That’s why they’re so great – they take you to your edge and require you to live in that uncomfortable edge for longer than any other test.
Creating Feelz 2.0 with the Juggernaut Cock

Ok, so it’s a little bit funny to read this now that I’ve written it but I cannot come up with any better term than this one. Where and how must you give your biggest cock ever?

Remember: your wife is seeking comfort and strength all at once.

As you woman pushes you harder and harder with both shit and shitty comfort tests she is continually seeking your strength and for you to penetrate her moods and feelings as you would the world. When I know my wife requires this, I give her from my own core: The Juggernaut Cock.

It’s huge. It’s forceful. It’s powerful. The juggernaut cock is the largest cock you can ever imagine - and it’s yours. Some guys here talk about cavemanning your wife aggressively with dominance, but I also think there is another way.

Come from behind her, jump her in bed, pull her into the closet. You know what I’m talking about. It’s the moment when the spontaneous desire within you MUST take your wife with your strength and power, often as surprise. Not a huge surprise here, but this is likely when you find your wife the wettest she’s ever been. Why? Your wife desires you to penetrate her moods and feelings as you would the world. Often, with reckless disregard of the consequences with COURAGE (remember your qualities now?).

She pushes you harder and harder, until your body becomes swollen as an erection. This is what she desires. For your body and your core to be full of life - full of strength - like a rock hard juggernaut cock.

As she pushes harder and harder, she desires for you to break through her, penetrate her, and leave her craving that feeling she gets from Feelz 2.0

As she pushes harder and harder, you break... but not in the way that she would expect you to full of beta emotion. You break into your masculine. Your inner drive. Your sexuality. Your erection in this world. You grab her by the waist, turn her around quickly while ripping her panties to her knees and you take your huge, forceful, erect juggernaut cock and push it hard and harder into her.

You push your cock into her so she feelz the penetration of who you are. You hold that cock inside of her, pushing deeper and deeper – harder and harder – to HER edge that reaches fear and comfort all at once. You have gone so deep into her that she feelz (2.0) the man that you are. As your cock pulses inside of her against her raw challenge, you hold it a while longer.

There you go.

You’ve now penetrated your woman for the first time in your life. You can now go and penetrate the world.

Get up, smile, and get back to work.
You’ve just delivered your woman the greatest feelz she has ever desired. Yor cock has become her safe place, along with who you are. Watch the desire build in her to be penetrated over and over by you. You are a man that penetrates his woman with all that he is.

Edit: Part 5: The Power of Your Mission and Greatest Purpose
Swallowing the pill is only the beginning. This is a years-long process. Internalize that NOW.

by Shackmeister | April 13, 2015 | Link

Gentlemen, this sub has a patience problem.

Many among us seem to have forgotten that "LT" in "LTR" stands for Long Term. You are in this for the long haul. There are no shortcuts here and you should not be seeking them.

I bring this up because there have been an awful lot of posts containing phrases such as "I swallowed the pill two weeks ago" or "I have been hitting the gym for a month" or "Since I began asserting myself these past ten days." Let's be extremely clear:

ONE MONTH IS NOT ENOUGH TIME TO EXPECT RESULTS.

If you are escalating to level 7 or 8 dread after hitting the gym ten times in a month and saying "no" every now and then, you are going to blow up your relationship very quickly. That might work just fine for single guys or plate spinners because they can Next a girl when she gets pissed that they are changing and find one that only knows the new them. This does not work for us, we carry the baggage of years of plugged-in behavior that our women have witnessed, become accustomed to, and now expect from us.

Consider this from her perspective. She has been with a sweet nice guy for years and all of a sudden he hit the gym and became a bit of an asshole. She is not going to think, "Oh, goodie, a whole new him!" She is going to think it is a phase, a mid-life crisis, or that you are ill. It will take a LOT of time before she gets used to the new you even if you are very consistent with RP behavior. I've been back in the gym regularly for 4-5 months and my wife still asks if I am off to the gym in a tone that suggests she feels I can't be all that serious about it. Months and it has not sunk in that it is more than a phase. These are the timetables with which we are dealing.

Because your actions and newfound balls are going to be a jolt to her worldview, you need to slow down. A lot. Frustrated that you have not seen results a month after manning up? No shit, we all are. Stay the course. Do not go upping your dread game hastily, as you WILL destroy your marriage.

The ideal scenario for you is that she does not notice a change in you. It was so subtle and took place over such an extended period that one day she wakes up and realizes she has the tingles for you again and cannot figure out why. It's because you have been working your ass off to be a better man for months on end, but you won't be sharing that with her.

So do yourselves a favor. The next time you want to post and ask for advice, take a careful assessment of your progress so far. Step back, breathe, and remind yourself... This shit is LONG TERM.

EDIT: Per /u/TheGreasyPole's suggestion below, I'll add this tidbit:
Another huge reason to take your time with internalizing TRP before applying its concepts within an LTR is that the anger phase is NOT the time to be applying higher-level dread or other hard TRP concepts. When you are still in the anger phase you may feel spiteful, resentful, and distrustful of your wife (and/or all women). These feelings will very likely present themselves in your behavior whether you like it or not. Fomenting the main event while still in the anger phase is a terrible idea and you risk being heated in any discussion. You need to be prepared to deal with it in a sanguine state.
On OI, abundance mentality and how being butt hurt is your biggest enemy.

by Boesman12 | June 24, 2016 | Link

Unfortunately unplugging from the matrix in real life is not as quick as in the movies. You just don't swallow a red pill and the new reality opens up before you magically. Depending on your degree of betaness, and your blue pill conditioning by the female imperative, it takes time and dedication not only to see the world for what it is, but also to re-condition your own attitude and how you interact with the world in this new reality.

There has been an influx of newbs on MRP who is so accustomed to their blue pill world that it physically hurts them to unplug. You can see it in the posts.

My wife's SMV is rising... HELP. MY wife is fucking some other dude...HELP to the more tame and mundane

I showed outcome independence by NOT showing her how I sulked after she rejected me and I AA and AM the shit out of her argument but now she thinks I'm and asshole and is giving me the silent treatment.

Lets start clarifying some things for you.

First a bit of background A few years ago I was blue pill to the core. I was fed up with being the uber husband and still not getting fucked on the regular. I was so beaten to the ground by constant rejections that I just couldn't muster the courage to even ask for sex. Of course I had THE TALK a lot of times. I would mope about the house ready to fly of the handle at even something insignificant in the hopes that she will see how her rejection is hurting me and that SHE would change and start fucking me again. I was the master of the covert contract.

So being fed up I hamstered my way into an affair. Now this was not your typical affair. This women's husband knew I was fucking her. This was before internet porn could label it as cuckolding him. It was a fucked up situation, but she fucked like a pornstar nymphomaniac and my dick was getting drained until it fucking hurt, so I ignored the fucked up nature of it all and plowed on like a tractor.

Here is the strange thing. I was getting all the sex I wanted on the side, and suddenly I was starting to get a lot of sex at home. It took a while for me to realize why, (this was before MRP), but because I was getting pussy on the regular, I was a fuck ton less needy and whiny with the wife, and I started showing confidence in myself again. My affair stopped before I discovered MRP as the mother lode, and sex dwindled down to duty sex 2-3 times a month. Even my wife stated that she doesn't know why, but we had such a good two years and now that is gone again.

Abundance Mentality After discovering MRP I realized that what I got from my affair was AM.

AM is the basis that sex, and for that matter everything you do, you do for yourself and your wife chooses whether she goes along for the ride or not. If you initiate sex and she resists, you are confident enough in yourself that you have better things to do than to convince her to fuck you. If you have somewhere to go and she doesn't want to come along that is her loss. A lot of advice for newbies is to line up something to do before you initiate. That way you can get up and jump right on to the next awesome thing you have to do. And then you have to own that shit. Recently there was a guy that got up and started mowing his lawn. At night? Come on, you say. But he owned his lawn mowing like it was the most natural thing in the world to trim your edges after dark.

AM is the same as when have plans to go camping on the weekend and you ask your buddy to tag along. You have already made the preparations, you are going anyway. If he wants in great, if he doesn't, still great, because you are going anyway and are going to have a good time.

AM is always having something to do that you want to do for yourself. Because you are the only one that matters and you have options.

Outcome independence After discovering MRP I realized that even during my affair I never had OI.

OI for me is even more important, not so much for unplugging, but for sexual strategy. OI is offering something to someone not because you want something or some validation in return, but just because you have something to share and doesn't really mind if they take it or not. In a man/women or sexual context it ultimately refers to not giving a fuck if she rejects your sexual advances. In a more everyday setting it can be compared to you wanting to give your child a piggy back ride and just get up and move on if he/she doesn't want to play. To have true OI you have to reach a state between compassion and not giving a fuck. You can lead a horse to water, but that's where it ends. You don't care if the horse drinks or not. Yes, In order to fake OI in the beginning you have to have some kind of Abundance mentality. You have to have something else lined up to go and do. But the main difference for me between the two is with AM you know you have other options. With OI you don't give a fuck about the outcome and you can continue on your merry way.

OI is YOU offering someone the chance to come along for the ride. You are going regardless of their acceptance or not. OI is going through life without seeking validation from anyone.

I had AM mentality because I knew that regardless of whether my wife fucked me or not, I will be getting some pussy anyway, but because I didn't have true OI I was still butt hurt by the rejection. Do you get it?

Why being butt hurt is your biggest enemy

This has a lot to do with your teeny tiny fragile ego. Now ego as used in MRP is NOT what we generally refer to as ego. When we use the word ego it has to do with that tiny voice in your head that is constantly seeking validation from others. As an example. There is a lot of newbs that post here, hat in hand, humble as fuck, about what to with his wife. She does this and she does that. He thinks that because he is humble and not a fucktard he has no ego. It might seem that way. But because he can't see past the fact that the fuck ups are all his to own and he blames his bitch wife for his lack of sex, he actually has the biggest ego af all. He needs validation that she is wrong to feed his ego. Yesterday a guy posted about his wife cheating on him in all sorts of manner. She was just being mean about how she went about it.
He was here asking for ways to make her stop hurting him. He needed the validation that she is a harpy bitch and he is the good husband. If you want validation post on /r/DeadBedrooms .
There you can be sure that everybody will agree with you that the problem lies with her.
Fucking sex denying cunt wife that she is.

If you can't get to a place where you can not be butt hurt over rejection, or anything for that matter, you will never grow as a man. You will never get to learn from the experience and get to a place where you approach your situation from another angle , because your ego will always look for someone or something else to blame. Your butt hurt will fuck with mind so much that you will fester and die from the fucking resentment rather than look for ways to change.

I was getting pussy on the side. My balls were getting drained. I had Abundance mentality, but my lack of OI lead to me being butt hurt about getting rejected, and then sitting in front of the T.V. the whole night thinking how I hate my fucking wife and how she is hurting me.
This never got me to a point where I thought about my life and what I wanted to do. It kept me in the dark feeling sorry for myself.

How to get AM and OI and not be butt hurt.

As has been said a lot by SPT the last couple of weeks. We are building men here. In order to become a real man you first have to realize what it means to be a real man. A real man is a beast of burden. He shoulders the responsibilities of his life and his family. He takes control of his surroundings because that is his fucking job as the man of the house. A real man does this by shouldering the weight because he is the man, the father and the husband of his household. NOT because he is a bully that wants his own way and try to enforce that by demand. He seeks no validation for the things he do. He simply does it because it has to get done and he is the man.

A real man, is secure enough in himself not to care about what other people say or think about him. He chooses his path and follows without falter. If your conviction is strong enough other people will follow your vision and your path without question. YOU HAVE TO OWN YOUR SHIT.

You get there by learning, by growing, by continues improvement. Not by sitting in front of the fucking t.v. smoking weed and playing xbox. The modern world has provided us with all the things we need to become fuckhole weaktards. If you want to be a man that grows and evolves you HAVE to do shit that adds value to your own life. By default you add value to other peoples lives.

High value men are a sought-after commodity. And once you are getting to that top percentile of desirable men you start to get abundance mentality.
When you have serious shit to do for yourself, for your own improvement, because you see a need somewhere and react to it. When you are constantly out and about growing, learning, giving value, you start to get outcome independence.

And when you have these two licked, you have option, you don't get butt hurt by any setback. not at work, not in life, and not from your wife rejecting your advances. And then you will have the mental capacity to clearly look at why something happened to you, see the real reason, and then get to a real solution. And you grow from there.

In the beginning you have to fake it sometimes, but success will lead to more success, will lead to true DNGAF.
To piggy back on the boyfriend/husband/trifecta posts.

Are you a smooth motherfucker?

Or do you have an initiation sequence when you want to have sex?

Can your girl tell the difference between your playful, sexual, kino-laced banter (which you do, right?) and your actual desire for sex right then and there? Yes? Then you have more work to do.

There's this thing women have called ASD, or Anti-Slut Defense. This kicks as soon as you force, or even ask, her to make sexual decisions. When a woman has to make sexual decisions (e.g., do I accept this man's offer to slobber up his cock right now?), she will feel the weight of responsibility as the one wearing the sexual pants. Being the oldest child in the house, your wife doesn't want or need that responsibility if she is to be your babe.

Socially autistic guys have two modes. "Handle business" and "get down to business". When we're handling business, we're probably working, doing chores, playing with the kids, working on the car, making contacts, feeding our platonic relationships, etc.

Then we get horny, so our radar clicks on and finds the wifey (or any other wet and attractive hole, for some of us), and our mission is set.

The problem is that the bitch can tell when that radar starts up. And she dreads that ping. Not in the BPP manner, but the stomach-in-knots, I-hope-he-doesn't-see-me-here, oh-god-this-again type of dread. There's a visible cringe that happens in my wife's body language if I officially begin the process of coitus. It doesn't matter how objectively attractive you are. If you make this autistic move of flipping on your sex radar with such a loud click that the whales circling the arctic perk their ears, you're doing it wrong. You're not a dominant caveman, you're a geek who read some tricks on MRP and thought he found his balls.

Blur the line between

- I'm a sexual guy who likes to tease and have fun

and

- We're going to have sex now

It's a spectrum, not a binary choice. This means an actual rejection is not even possible, because when she gives a hard no, you're Stoically hanging out in one range of the sexy spectrum, not plopped on the wrong side of Pleasuretown. You have outcome independence, mostly because you are't limited to one outcome to begin with.
So I game, and sometimes the sex naturally follows. "That's what she said", "...in bed", gropes, ass slaps, boob grabs, pantsing, 10 second fireworks kisses, shameless PUA moves, or just a sly, knowing glance at any time of day. Sometimes I don't feel like gaming my wife. I do it anyway.

I come out of left field sometimes, instantly puts sex on her mind. But then I don't assume the go-ahead and go in for the kill, scaring the slut out of her. Plant the seed and move on. I don't keep it sexual so that she'll sleep with me. I keep it sexual because I am naturally sexual, and I find the remarks funny/sexy/amusing/fun. No hidden agenda behind them. You could even say I have no covert contracts. She feels no guilt in not having sex with me immediately, because she's not letting down my hornily constructed expectations.

When sex does happen, it's more of a slight ramp up, not a strenuous jump. It will "just happen". Even I've been caught off guard.

The status quo is a simmer of sexiness, and actual sex is a nice rolling boil. But the heat never turns off.

Advanced study: how to flow seamlessly from sexy hubby to caring father to badass professional/business owner to whatever the fuck else you do. It becomes more natural the more you do it. Have fun with it.
I love the game. Women love the game. Everyone loves the game. If you don't love the game, you aren't an attractive person. Period.

What is the game? And why must you play it? Game, in its shortest definition, is the social interplay between men and women. It doesn't matter whether you're married, single, in a relationship, or otherwise, you should always be playing the game - because the game is fun.

High Level and Abstract

Social attraction and flirting have no barrier on whether or not anyone needs to put out or act on it. The men who don't understand this basic concept, who wrap up covert contracts into the simple act of flirting, are highlighted all the time over at r/niceguys. Those guys are fucking faggots, omega at their core (if you buy into the terminology), and are shunned by everyone as they ought to be.

Attractive people flirt. That's how it goes. That's why attractive people are attractive. Just because you're flirting, doesn't mean you're keen on fucking. Grasp that subtlety. Flirting makes people feel good. Being flirted with makes you feel good. As a high value individual, you should be adding value in any given situation. Making people around you feel good should be something you're doing by default. Since this post isn't about attractiveness, I won't delve into situational awareness w.r.t flirting - but suffice it to say, don't be a social retard, it's unattractive.

Note for all you newbie Neds - if your wife isn't being flirted with, she's probably bottom of the barrel. If you're salty because people are hitting on your wife, all you're doing is demonstrating how unattractive you are. Note that this is also why mate guarding is so detrimental to your attractiveness - because it demonstrates the fact that you are either unaware of or scared shitless by the possibility of loss (i.e. no alternative options). You think Hef was scared to lose bunnies?

When a woman is single, you're competing with everyone. When a woman is taken, you're only competing with one person.

Even fat chicks get fucked on eurotrips.

But mister, I'm a social retard. I don't know how to flirt.

Luckily for you, a whole bunch of other social retards got together back in the late 90s and early 2000s to deconstruct interpersonal social dynamics. It works great for people who have no idea what they're doing. That's how I was first introduced to this material. The classics are classics for a reason.

Structured Game
Let's start with where I started back in 2008 -

- fastseduction.com's You are New Page.
- fastseduction.com's Player's Guide.

The sheer amount of basic information is staggering. It covers everything from posture, to conversation, to tricks and gimmicks (palm reading, cube, etc.), eye contact, body language, the whole 9 yards. It has basic routines and structured game that you can run if you have no idea what you are doing. Mystery's M3 model is covered here as well. Best done calibrating with in field experience.

The ridicule of keyboard jockeys was immense then too. The guys who don't get in field, but instead sit around, jerking off theorizing about hypotheticals. Still happens all the time, guys with no practical experience who posit lots and lots of bullshit. It's very transparent to anyone who actually puts in work.

Inner Game

Somewhere during the mid to late 2000s, there was a big shift to inner game, value giving, and congruence. This is pivotal, but useless without the in field foundation from structured game - because it's so easy to delude oneself. I knew a guy who was pumped because he f-closed and eventually caught feelings for ... a tranny. We judged the hell out of him. Not so different from MRP. It's so easy to bullshit yourself - but does it matter if you're actually happy?

Back then, r/seduction (aka seddit) was still pretty good. Here is TofuTofu's guide to inner game. The focus here was getting to the point of personal congruence and recognizing you are enough - and getting the reference experiences to reinforce the point. So many men in MRP fail because they lack congruence - what do you want? and the more important followup - what are you willing to do to get that? Without the answer to these questions - your actions don't really matter. "I'm not sure, yet.", "I'm figuring it out.", and "I don't care." are perfectly acceptable if that's congruent with where you're at.

The most important work to come out of this era was probably RSDNation's Blueprint Decoded. There used to be downloadable audio and videos of the seminar, but I think it's been lost with time (but here are the pdf notes). To be perfectly honest, I didn't get through the entire thing - but the one thing that stuck out to me was Tyler's line "Most people go through life in a walking daze."

Et Cetera

Seduction School: Size Doesn't Matter documentary - One of my favorite documentaries which highlights how much of game is more than just about looks. While looks matter, so much of it is about fixing the mindsets and attitudes that have been fucked by modern blue pill society.

But Mister. I'm seriously retarded. I don't actually know how to put any of this into practice.
Okay - so you understand lols, so you understand eliciting values, you understand body language, and congruence, and the whole 9 yards. You know interpersonal touch is important, but you don't know how to go about implementing any of this information.

Since everyone here is married, I hope to go this isn't any one of you guys, but in case it is - in case it's been so many years that you've avoided platonic touching, here's a refresher.

The definitive work to kino is Vin Dicarlo's Kino Escalation Ladder. Lots of youtube videos on this, but the premise is simple. We have parts of our body and person that are more personal than others. By leveraging this information, we can gauge our level of comfort. If we're intimately familiar with someone, we let them closer to our personal space. Similarly, if you're playing with a girl's face, hair, or ears, you're in.

If you don't know how to establish comfort and dominance and attraction via body language and eye contact, you must know at least how different ways to touching people trigger various types of psychological responses. If a girl's willing to share a drink with you, she's willing to be kissed by you. If you're brushing hair out of her eyes and she's not flinching, she's willing to make out with you. The difference between standing side-to-side versus a tight angle. Locking eyes while imaging her naked and squirming, and how that changes the look you're giving her. How many of you men are gaming your wives at this level?

I've written before about how 93% of communication has nothing to do with the words we're speaking. That was in the context of talking and congruence. When it comes to game, 93% of communication still has nothing to do with the words you're speaking - but so much of it is posture, body language, eye contact, intonation. You, as an attractive man, who flirts with everyone, should be leveraging and practicing with this in mind so that you're developing that level of attractiveness and seductiveness without ever having to rely excessively on the physical. Can you tell a woman you find her sexy with just your eyes? With just the way you're looking at her? Just by the fact that you've checked her out from head to toe, knowing she knows, and having no shame about appreciating such a fine, fine woman?

The best compliment I've ever received was from this beautiful half-vietnamese half-french girl during my PUA days. What she said was "You're not much to look at, but there's something about you that's just so attractive." That was all personality, self certainty, swag. How are you subcommunicate your ownership of your sexual nature as a man to sexually attractive women?

The dirty little secret

The pickup world is ultimately a numbers game. The more women you interact with, the more women that potentially fit the bill for what you're after. Something like 5% like you outright, 5% hate you outright, and 90% are indifferent. You need to be physically attractive because that skews the numbers game more in your favor. But the truth is, not everyone is going to like you. You're not going to like everyone. So in the pickup world, what you're really doing is filtering for the common matches that share common goals. But you're a married man - so does any of this actually apply to you?

Remember the rules
• Rule 1. Be Attractive. Game will help you here because attractive people play the game.
• Rule 2. Don't be unattractive. This is where most of you will fuck up. How does game help you here?
Hypergamy for the Married Man

by Red-Curious | November 8, 2017 | Link

In Rollo's interview at the 21 convention he talked about hypergamy being the core driving force behind all sexual strategy. This got me thinking a lot, so I did a search and it's been over a year since hypergamy was discussed as a focal point, beyond a passive reference. So, I'm looking for conversation, but let me get things going.

ACTIVE HYPERGAMY

Virtually every time hypergamy is brought up it's in the context of divorce or cheating - how the woman acts with regard to other men in her life. This is very active in nature. She sees. She wants. She takes.

When I first discovered RP, I glossed over hypergamy as a thing that didn't really apply to me. My wife is faithful to a fault. I mean that literally: It is one of her faults. In my beta days I would wish that she'd start watching porn, reading romance novels, or oggling celebrities because at least that meant she had a sex-drive deep down somewhere. I got her hooked on the Twilight series. I would bring up 50 Shades and suggest she read it just to see what all the fuss was about. That was actually my first glimmer of hope: she came to me all teary eyed and guilty, confessing, "I just looked up the 50 Shades trailer on YouTube and watched half of it ... I started getting excited. I'm so sorry, I'll never do it again!"

I was unwittingly trying to fuel my wife's active hypergamy in the hope that it would cause her to desire me more while in a low SMV state. Having unplugged, I see now how stupid that strategy was. Fueling hypergamy while in a low SMV state is highly counter-productive to increasing attraction. That said, fueling hypergamy as the most valuable man in her life might actually increase attraction - as she seeks and does not find.

Why wasn't I leading my wife in the bedroom? Why wasn't I the one she was fantasizing about? Why did I need someone else to get my wife sexually excited for me?

PERCEPTIVE V. OBJECTIVE VALUE

Hypergamy makes clear that a woman will be most attracted to the highest value man in her life. Higher value = higher attraction; lower value = lower attraction. If you are objectively the highest value man in her life, she might have attraction toward you at a level of 9/10 (the perfect 10 reserved for those men she knows she'll never get). But suppose a higher value man comes along. Her attraction to you just bumped down to an 8 and the new guy now holds a 9 on the attraction meter - even though you have not changed in any way. She just found out there's someone better who she has a chance of getting, so she's less interested in you. Add 7 or 8 guys who are realistic options for her who are all higher value and suddenly her attraction to you is a 0-2.

In all of this, your SMV has not changed from an objective standpoint. Instead, it has changed from her subjective perception. For women, perception is reality. There is very little room for objective truth. As BPP says in his podcasts, women are designed to mold to the shape of their container. This container should ideally be your frame. But if they aren't in someone else's frame there are no objective boundaries to how they operate. If you're not containing her in your frame, she'll most likely default to (1) social constructs, like the feminist imperative as communicated through social norms or (2) a specific person, like the guy she's all tingly for, so she becomes whatever he wants. Point? Your objective SMV means nothing relative to her perception.

This sucks for guys who have been married for a long time. This is why going Rambo doesn't work and dread is to be applied over time and not all at once. It takes a long time to change perception (reeling in the 1,000 foot rope), particularly when the status quo has been going on for so long that there is no longer an expectation of change - and don't dare think you can cheat by telling her about your MAP.

---

PASSIVE HYPERGAMY

Married men face a unique type of hypergamy that singles don't have to deal with. This type is passive in nature. Where active hypergamy causes a woman to become attracted to someone outside the home, leading to cheating or divorce, passive hypergamy does the reverse - it decreases attraction within the home when the wife believes that there are better options outside the home - even if she has no active intention to pursue those options.

As I noted above, my wife is faithful to a fault. Is it possible she might cheat on me someday? Sure. AWALT. But the immediate impact of her hypergamy isn't a motivation to cheat on me or divorce me; rather, it functions as a decrease in her attraction for me. When she perceives that there are other men in her world who are higher value than me - especially if they're men who she believes are actually attainable - her attraction toward me goes down. She finds herself thinking that she stands too much to lose by acting on her hypergamous desires, yet simultaneously, "Those other guys are everything I wish my husband was; why can't he do ___ like they do?" = attraction plummet.

Now, as many of you know, I've been upping my game and demonstrating high value - physically, socially, financially, etc. Sure, this increases dread at the fact that my options are now increasing. The result is that her desire goes up.

But there is a secondary function to my SMV increasing that works alongside dread: As my SMV increases, the number of higher value men decreases, removing the negative impact hypergamy was having on her attraction to me.

---

CUTTING THE BRAKES
Anyone half way familiar with the sidebar should be fluent with the concept of "be attractive, don't be unattractive." This isn't redundant, it's actually saying two distinct things. Dread increases attraction. Beyond its negative emotional drawing force ("I better up my game or he'll leave/cheat! He's a man with options!") it also has a positive emotional drawing force through preselection ("If these other girls want him, there must be more to his changes than I first thought!"). In short, dread is designed to increase attraction.

But when it comes to decreasing unattractiveness, you may want to be mindful of passive hypergamy as a worthy tool to put in your belt. How? Here are a few suggestions:

- Whenever possible, engage with the other men in her sphere of exposure who she might see as higher value. As you stand toe-to-toe with them, maintaining composure and leading the conversation, the mystery that makes up much of preselection value diminishes and you show that he's not a threat to you, therefore must not be as high value as she thought.

  Shortly after we were married, before I lost my alpha, my wife told me in tears how she was developing an emotional connection toward her boss. He was objectively higher value than me at that time. I was a student, he was her professional superior. I think I was better looking and smarter, but he was new and mysterious and paid his own rent. I told her I wanted to meet the guy, so she invited me to one of her work happy hours. I showed up, had a few drinks with the guy, told some jokes, led the conversation (other co-workers present too), and we went home. My wife was shocked, thinking I was going to confront him more directly. My response? "Nah, I didn't need to. You can do better. In fact, you already did." [How did I ever lose that attitude?!?]

- Develop orbiters and don't hide them. Unless your wife hangs out at bars and nightclubs without you on a regular basis, chances are she won't see many women orbiting other guys in a natural environment. But she's presumably around you enough to know how often other people are trying to get your attention. This presents you as the higher value man from her perception - even if the other men in her life are otherwise objectively higher in value. She sees you getting attention, but doesn't see the same in them. As she asks, "What did they [the orbiters] want?" don't shy away from revealing the gender. "She just had a quick question." In fact, this goes even better if you get involved in the orbiter's drama as an advice-giver (particularly with regard to relationship advice - extra credit if you're telling her to leave the guy, for dread effect). Not only does this demonstrate high value as someone whose wisdom is sought after, but it also shows an amused mastery - that you can casually brush off other people's emotional drama with a casual wave of your hand, knowing the answer to their problems in seconds, whereas the orbiter has probably pondered it for days to no avail.

  On reddit and in church I'm constantly getting people asking me questions about the Bible. There have been several times in the past months where my wife has observed me interacting with other women as an advice-giver. Her early responses were to fire away with the tests to get me to back down. When that failed, she has since started having fun with hearing about the (anonymous) juicy drama, walking away with a simple, "Just don't get too involved."

- Be mindful of the ways other men display high value. Seeing a DHV in another man causes her to expect that same type of DHV in you. If you're aware, this is really a win-win for you. If you refuse to play the game, hold frame, and pass the test, that's a DHV, pitting you toe to toe against your competitor rather than taking a loss. But if it's a legitimate issue where you need some improvement, go ahead and improve - and that's another DHV, also negating the potential loss. But if you are simply unaware because you're not mindful of how other men act around her, she will see you failing to display high value, which in her perceptive reality is actually a display of low value.

- If you're extremely confident in your value and your wife has a small social circle, let her expose herself to more lower-value men. This comes off as a DHV because you're not mate-guarding and you demonstrate no sense of threat from your beta competitors.

Any other ideas on how to make hypergamy work for you? Leave some comments.

- Adapted and expanded from content originally discussed on r/RPChristians
A field report of a different sort.
This is pretty hard to write because I could do a novel. High points - Married 15 years, 2 kids, Walkaway Wife this spring. I actually started browsing the Red Pill stuff before she left, thought about 'changing' things, but in the end chickened out - because ... What if it made things worse ? Didn't want to rock the boat.

Before : For most of our marriage moved around for my job - made good money, she was a SAHM - somewhat lazy but she did cover the bases - took good care of herself, good physical shape - HB6 ? but paid to have her teeth fixed, new boob job (had cancer right after we married - walked her thru that) moved her to a 7+. Me, I wasn't a Beta, more of one of Vox Day's Sigma's - my give a shit level was fairly low - happy to be married but knew from Day One she didn't love me - which was not optimal but OK as long as she filled all the other roles / holes. No deadbedroom, rarely turned down but not a lot of effort on her part. I did become fat pretty quickly but she never seemed to care much and I always did some running (been doing it all my life).

Straw that broke the camels back was building her a new house. Decided a few years ago to buy a country place and try to let the kids experience life outside an apartment. Had lots of 'discussions' about it, thought she was OK with it (altho there were warning signs). So me and my son build a house, send the wife and daughter on overseas vacation. Bust our balls - 80 days straight - 100 degrees - no days off - get a functioning place done. Lots of bugs to work out, but liveable.

Wife comes back, hates it. So appeasement starts - let her choose lots of things hoping she'll get on board - after a couple of months of bitching start have mini-Main Events - I basically tell her if she is THAT unhappy she needs to think about leaving. For me this was my MAP and I thought we had discussed everything at length and she had signed up for the full package. Incorrect. Also in my view it came down to making a better life for my kids or appeasing the wife. Wife lost. My father made the same move when I was a kid - to the countryside - and it changed Everything about me - I knew my kids needed the same. So True Main Event comes and I drive her to the bus station (she's moving to Las Vegas where life can be exciting again) - she's tired of "hiding in the wilderness" (her words - 15 minutes from a Walmart LOL).

Never forget her look when I dropped her off - little wave goodbye and that was the end. So now of course started looking for answers and swallowed the Red Pill. Thought I knew a lot about women and relationships - dated / screwed dozens, LTR 7 years one, married 15 years one. Wow did I turn out to be completely clueless. This after watching my father get fucked by my mother in his divorce. Spent the summer working on my MAP - worked out, lost 30+ pounds, doing huge projects around the property (poured almost 100 yards of concrete this summer). Spent tons of time reading sidebar stuff, NMMNG Rational Male Athol etc. Still learning.
AAR (afteraction report) - I 'might' have been able to stick save the marriage if I had gone Red Pill earlier, but confidence is not high from all the FR's I have seen here. My MAP was too big of a change - if I had more a suburban white bread corporate lifestyle MAP in mind, yes, it would have worked (maybe). I did some things very well - have not spoken with her on the phone or email or text other than logistics since she left for the most part. Got a decent divorce agreement spelled out and signed - should be final shortly. Kids spent the last six months with me. Even at my advanced age can see lots of avenues for LTR'ing or marriage again - lots of girls out there willing to take up the slack from the Walkaway Wife - but ... not really as gung ho about that as I thought I would be - go figure LOL - internalized AWALT a lot after digging thru this marriage and all the past LTR's. Much less desperate for sex too. So why bother ? Guess that will sort itself out - still long ways to go on my MAP.

So here's the twist on this FR. Don't have a real great relationship with anyone in my family other than my dad. Brother is Major Left Wing Blue Pill, mom is Yuge feminazi, etc. So didn't spend any time explaining what happened straight off. When I did get to it - turns out that they had already gotten the basic info from my dad and my ex-wife (texted my mom) Everyone with the exception of my father decided that it was ALL MY FAULT. You know, that complete bastard dragged his wife and kids into the wilderness and built her a new house. My mother wrote me one of the nastiest shittiest emails I have ever seen - it was all my fault, I was traumatizing my kids by not letting them live in a big city, I had zero integrity - on and on and on. I must have pushed every emotional button in her little hamster head. Keep in mind this was a woman who blew up her marriage from multiple episodes of cheating which ended up in fights for years when we were kids as my father just Blue Pilled the whole thing. Even my cucked brother told my father it was all my fault. Remember now, not one single one of them so much as bothered to pick up the phone or send me an email asking how I was doing, or ever asking 'what happened'. My mother and my sister even decided that they are going to Vegas to stay with my STBX because - she needs emotional support in her time of trouble. I have never been so disrespected in my life. And it all came from my own family. I'm too old for that shit. ANY person who shows a complete lack of respect or basic human decency has no place in my life. I replied to my mother's email and told her to a) go fuck herself and b) do not ever contact me again.

So I NEXTED them. ALL of them.

Fuck that shit. Got my MAP, got my kids. Everyone else can go fuck themselves. And that, my friends is a Happy Ending.
In our better years, my wife and I used to laugh about her "tableaux". For example, if I went out with a bro, which happened rarely enough, despite all the "yeah, go have fun!"s, we both knew there would be something waiting for me when I got back. I'd get home late and she'd be pretending to sleep on the couch, shoulders bunched up in fury. At times like that, I'd sit down next to her, talk about my night and drag her into the bed and the next day we'd laugh at it.

She always said afterward that she knew what she was doing was dumb. She just couldn't help herself.

A couple of years back, the tableaux was replaced with something darker, more serious. I could ignore it but without the laughter, I was afraid to tackle it head-on, as it could only escalate to places I was afraid to go.

The gaps between what was "normal" and the dark periods got shorter until it seemed like darkness was all there was.

Obviously: fuck that shit.

The other night as my wife sat with her back to me, raging at some imagined slight, I realized it was kind of funny. I impulsively said, "let's touch butts!". She grudgingly wiggled her ass against mine and all of a sudden the laughter was back.

My son had a nuclear tantrum he couldn't calm himself from. But once he was safe and contained and I knew it was just a waiting game. It was kind of funny. As I chuckled at this, he screamed "stop laughing daddy!" and immediately calmed down.

After a real blow out over dinner, my wife stormed off home on her own. For reference, this indicates she requires either a full and unequivocal apology or a full 24 hours of sulking according to the Rpeed family manual. But when I arrived home (much later) and saw her, It just seemed funny. I couldn't help but snigger. We locked eyes. I laughed. And we were both laughing.

I guess when you get out of her frame and back into yours, you find the right tools for you. And for me, laughter might be the best medicine.

TL:DR: I thought I had my shit dialed in but my foundation was weak. I was working on Game, while failing on shit tests. I haven't quite completed this level but I've seen the full map now. Maybe I got the giant key from the dead boss and all I have to do is backtrack a bit and unlock the elevator to head up.
Only one month in, holy fucking shit..
by The-Fast-Yeti | October 6, 2015 | Link

5 years married, one 7yo daughter. Two months or so ago My wife walked out and called me a bitch ass pussy with no balls and that she wished I was like her dad. I was standing there crying like a little bitch boy (because I was and didn't even know it).

I wasn't always beta. In high school I was shredded, worked out 10 times a week, did what the fuck I wanted, fucked almost any girl I wanted, and was happy. Then I met my wife. Sexy as fuck punk girl, I had to have her, so I got her. Then it went down hill, we were "soul mates", we were "meant to be together" you know the Disney bullshit. But I still regained a little bit of my attitude but was slowly catering to her, because "I wanted, to make her happy".

I stopped working out in the mornings.

I got her pregnant.

I went from a fairly cut 175 to a soft 225......and felt like shit. Barely getting laid at all, I thought maybe this is how it's supposed to be. I was buying into all the bullshit. I never wanted to get married, she knew that. It's just a fucking piece of paper. So we got married when our daughter was 2. I was getting bored with this shit but kept it all inside, I couldn't upset my princess now could I?

Just work, pay the bills, come home, fuck once a week maybe, everyone is happy.

Jesus fucking christ.

Fast forward to two months ago. I was in despair. A shell of a man who just got castrated by his wife as she walked out. All I could do is Google "wife called me a bitch ass pussy". THANK FUCKING GOD I DID. My life changed forever. I was brought here. You can read my victim puke if you can stomach it.

I immediately started lifting again while she was gone. I deployed STFU and didn't cry for hr to come back. I actually started to not give a fuck of she did. She then text me one day and asked if I wanted to go out to dinner. I said no. I then picked her up and had my daughter with me and we went to the zoo, my plans, didn't ask her, we just went. It was actually a good day. My new (old) attitude was already getting positive results from my daughter, and my wife was in awe.

She came back home two days later. Everything has fucking changed for the better already. I fuck with her and she loves it. We fuck at least every day, if not more, and it's good sex. She calls me an asshole (half jokingly) at least every day, and I love it. I made her cry last night because I wouldn't go in the store to get her something but instead told her if she wanted it, she should go in. Great sex was had an hour later.
Guys, I know I'm nowhere near where I want to be as a leader, a captain, a father, or man, but god damn I feel amazing. My wife and daughter feel amazing. It's so refreshing to just be. I cannot thank you guys enough for your harsh, constructive criticism you all gave me. Especially /u/trainingthebrain.

You guys have literally, helped me save my life.
Almost 6 months ago, I began on the path of self improvement in order to fix my hellish marriage. We'd had a dead bedroom for years. She was always bitching and so contemptuous towards me. It felt like we were always fighting.

When I swallowed the pill I got some initial results - and then they were all undone by PMS. It got better with ovulation, then bad with the next PMS. Handling her PMS would be my bar.

This time, I nailed it. Every time she got pissy I just went amused mastery and teased her lightly like "aw poor you with your PMS". It worked like a charm. The first time she just looked at me askance, smiled and gave me the "you just get it" look, pulled out her phone and showed me her Clue app and put in "mood: tornado." No bad arguments, and she was still taking my dick in her mouth every time I took out.

At the height of her PMS, she went to bed (she sleeps 2 hours more per night than me) and texted me that she was worried that I was trying so hard to look good for other women. I texted her back "you're doing a good job, don't worry". She texted back something about it made her feel bad and if I was on the way out she'd want to know. I wrote "if you're fishing for attention you're using the wrong bait ;)". She texted back more of the same, I went up to her, smiled at her, kissed her sweetly on the cheek and went back downstairs. The next morning she was super sweet. I had to go out of the house and meet someone at lunch, and right before I had to leave I called her up to show her something - which was my dick. Normally she'll just suck on it for 30 secs, but this time she went "I can get you off before you have to leave". I really like her newfound eagerness, and this was on PMS.

Yesterday (on her period now) she randomly texted me "I love you and I'm so lucky that we've been together so many years and I'm still so happy to be with you and attracted to you [kiss emoji]". Even though it completely glosses over the years of dead bedroom and constant bitching, it's a nice text.

And things are even better the rest of the time. She's pleasant company. Shit tests happen, sure, but they get handled and we move on instead of getting into arguments. She's actually horny now: she likes sex, she talks about it the day after, she asks for it, and all her inhibitions are gone.

I'm thinking Mission Accomplished. And don't get me wrong, I have no illusions about the difficulty of winning the peace. I'm far from being all I can be yet, and growing complacent will turn me into the sucker I was before and sink our marriage. But I fucking won the war.

In an attempt to add a little value to this post, I'll recap the process here. Maybe someone starting out their journey can find it useful.

My wife and I had both set out 2014 as the year we'd either get our marriage fixed or we'd divorce. She was putting in zero effort - dead bedroom, and not just bitching but being so mean and hitting me where it hurt the most.

We were approaching year's end and I thought it was over. I don't know if it was a last ditch effort or me preparing to get back into the dating game, but I pulled my shit together. I didn't know about TRP, but I had some issues that obviously needed fixing - mainly a porn addiction that was spinning completely out of control, and on top of that I was in way too much gaming. Total escapism, probably due to my wife's constant tormenting. So I quit porn, gaming, social media completely and poured that energy into work, my kids, our house.

I made a habit of telling my wife's friends about this when we'd meet them, and they all had the typical smartphone zombie husbands so they responded with "you're so lucky to have a husband like that, I was mine was like that", which I guess was a kind of dread. And on top I was in good shape, I had been lifting and doing MMA for years.

So the sex started happening. It was frequent, it seemed good (I now know it was just decent), she was into kinky stuff, putting on lingerie and collar and leash.

Her first PMS and period was a complete reversal to the old days. I relapsed back into excessive porn usage, and my otherwise awesome therapist gave me pretty much the only piece of shitty advice I got from her: ask your wife for support. I was feeling really shitty about my relapse and I had figured out my wife's rejections were the main source of my addiction, so I bared my soul and asked for my support. My wife shot me down. I then begged for her support, and she shot me down even harder in the cruellest manner you can imagine.

I hated her so much in the following days. And then I found the red pill.

A lot of the stuff made sense to me. I've managed people and negotiated a lot in my business and the concepts behind holding frame, shit tests, posturing and such were easily recognized. I've read a lot of evo psych, and I knew of studies that totally described AF/BB. I've always called feminism bullshit and I wasn't far from MRA.

And when I read TRP I was like "why didn't I connect the dots like this myself?" I knew intellectually that the blue pill idea of how to treat was women was bullshit but still I had the idea that you had to put your woman on a piedestal and treat her like a princess, cater to her whims. It's classic cognitive dissonance, I was an indoctrinated sucker.

So I read, and I began implementing, and the results were immediate. Holding frame, passing shit tests, not doing small favors for her, leading the household, not asking her what she wanted but just doing it, it worked right away and I felt like I understood her. I wasn't perfect from the beginning, far from it, but I could see how it improved things instantly. My rejection issues went away and with that my porn addiction. I had it under control.

One thing I really struggled with was not always asking her for her opinion or what she wanted. Just little things, like where to get take away from her, it was difficult not to ask her but just decide it. But I forced myself to do it, and soon she was asking me "what do you want for dinner?" And she was cooking, but she was asking me. My blue pill thinking wasn't gone so I was considering was she tired so I should choose something easy etc. and picked something that considered her. I know, I know, I was still in her frame. But then I tried asking for something that took a lot of preparation, and she did it and was happy.

This was one of the big ideas I had to internalize: she didn't want it easy. What she wanted, more than anything, was a strong man. I was physically strong, but she wanted someone that was strong mentally and socially too. I had to be dominant. She wanted me to be dominant. She would be more than happy to work hard for a dominant man. You can't both be dominant and also care for her fee fees.

And this is the idea behind shit tests too. She's programmed to test mens' social dominance just like us guys are programmed to check out girls' asses. Your frame is like a girl's ass. A strong frame is like a firm, squat-toned ass. That's what you want to put on display. It's unfortunate that shit tests are done using language which makes them fly in the face of our normal value set (for example that we trust and respect what people tell us), but that's the reality of how women test for social dominance. The great philosopher Sam Harris believes we should always tell the truth, but understand that sometimes people are not really saying what they say - when your wife asks you "does my ass look big in this?", she's really asking something else.

I was getting all of the initial push back people describe. Things seem to be going good, then she gets all "are you mad?" and you wonder if this is really working. Stick to it, hold frame, don't engage - she'll get over it and be much more pleasant company afterwards.

One thing she tried hitting me with several times was that she accused me of acting like her teenage boyfriends - unpredictable, selfish, wouldn't talk seriously, blah blah - and that she had started dating me because she didn't want to deal with that sort of immaturity anymore. It was a good attempt and for a while I was doubting myself. But then the AF/BB reality of what she was saying set in - these guys she supposedly didn't like were the guys who got to fuck her in the ass for free. This was a good sign.

This was phase one for me. I was feeling great, but it was more like "fake it till you make it". I was getting by and improving, but my frame wasn't really strong yet. I was on our subreddit and asking for advice, and I got a lot of great advice. It was pretty rough at times what people said, but when you need guidance from tough people that can't really be any different. I fought some of it, insisted on some stuff that later turned out to be irrelevant. The thing is, this is a process. The more experienced guys turned out to be right, but you're not going to get it right away. You start with your baby steps and you think you're so awesome for walking. Then this guy comes a long and says "you gotta run, boy" and I'm like "but I'll fall!!" And that's true, when you're learning baby steps you'll fall if you try to run, but you have to keep your eye on that goal. Don't try to perfect your baby steps just because you can't imagine yourself ever getting to run. I might have insisted I needed to perfect my baby steps once or twice...

Phase two was Sex God Method. For many years I had operated under the idea that my wife had low libido, and while our sex life was now frequent and she was submissive, she was still giving off that low libido vibe. SGM changed that. She talked about our sex the next day. She asked for sex. She got bitchy if we didn't have sex, but aside from that this made things much better, more fun. She became happier outside of the bedroom. Phase one felt great, but I was just getting a passing grade. When you also begin fucking her good, the whole mood of the relationship changes.

The next book I read was the Book of Pook, and I thought I was going to get PUA moves, but it was all about being a natural. But it didn't have instructions on how to be a natural. So halfway through I quit it. Book was right, I had to work on me, I had to become the prize and I really had to internalize this, but I didn't need another 100 pages of it.

This was phase three, and that's when I picked up stoicism. Stoicism is awesome. It is a deep system that can and will improve your character, and it fits nicely with red pill. It was what I need to build a solid frame, to make it about me and not about my wife. A lot of my early progress was about my wife. I was not entering her frame as such, but I was operating from a frame that was about being attractive to her. A bit further on it became about being attractive to women in general - my wife was very welcome to continue holding the job as my SO, but there's a standard that has to be met and the company is making sure the position is attractive to future candidates. With stoicism my frame finally began being about me. I'm sure there are other ways, and I guess I could have arrived there in other ways, but it did the trick for me. And the thing is, when your frame starts being about you, the TRP mentality really starts to spill out into other parts of your life.

And that's where I am now. Things are awesome. Even when she has PMS, I can tease and get her on her knees for me. When she's ovulating, she's talking about getting a Brazilian wax. I've successfully flirted with other women. I'm enjoying being me, being tough. I'm lifting hard, starting the day with a cold shower, growing my beard longer. I'm self employed and being pushier with my sales calls. I'm leading my household. I'm down to 14% body fat and dropping; it's a fucking shame I've been hiding my muscles behind a layer of fat. I bought a squat rack and I'm taking my wife down to use it every other day.

I still have lots to improve on. Of course my wife isn't all submissive: I still get shit tested, but I don't mind and see them as a form of flirting. I pass them, but they still rattle me to some extent. I guess it is like when you're getting extorted for money. My old frame facing a shit test was like how most people see the tax man - he's entitled to take your money because democracy and the social contract. When you begin with TRP, it is like a mugging - you know the robber is wrong, you're seriously offended by it but you're scared and you're not sure you can handle the robber if he assaults you. These days, I feel like it's some punk trying to rob me on the street - I don't expect anything else from punks, I'm pretty sure I can handle it and outwardly I stay cool, but it still gets the adrenaline flowing; I don't have that deep sense of calm I'd have if I was sitting in an armored truck.

But fuck, this journey has been amazing. I can't believe how miserable I was just 6 months ago, and now I'm on top. Thanks for the guidance from all the great men of this subreddit.
Ok girlfriends,

It's been a while since I posted about getting out there into the big wide world and doing some manly stuff. Maybe you do already, maybe you don't. But there is a lot of talk here about who should be making dinner and what it means when she is being a bitch (it's day 3 of her cycle, so...). If I stumbled across this site I would assume you all are pussies from the recent posts. I can't remember the last post that made me think one of you was bad-ass - probably u/red-sfpplus I guess, or maybe u/screechhater

So let go of that wheelbarrow you need to carry your balls around and tell us about your adventures / challenges / risky behaviours. You know like multi-day hikes, back country skiing, surfing big waves, fight with a homeless person, you get the idea.
David Takes on Goliath: Married Red Pill Relationship Coach Sues Our Social Media Host Alleging Gender and Political Discrimination in Access to Advertising

by RedPillCoach | May 7, 2018 | Link

Fellow Red Pill Men:

I am a “Red Pill” life and relationship coach who works with men in troubled marriages and long-term relationships to make them better or to end them. I can work both sides because in most cases the “Stay Plan” is the same as the “Go Plan.” The “Plan” is drawn from Red Pill praxeology, including Married Red Pill and The Red Pill and includes a healthy but skeptical dose of Gottman Centered Marriage Therapy. “The Plan” always includes self-improvement, understand the cardinal rules of attraction, being mindful of attraction, establishing your boundaries, and leading your life and marriage.

I am writing to let my Red Pill brothers know that the discrimination is real; but take heart because I am taking the fight from all of us right into the belly of the beast.

Today I filed a lawsuit in the State of Michigan with the Wayne County Circuit Court (Detroit) alleging Reddit discriminated against me, my brand (the name Redpillcoach and the website www.coaching4men.com) because of my political affiliations and sympathies for the Red Pill and Married Red Pill Reddits in violation of California law, and because of my gender as a man in violation of Michigan law. Further, that these violations constitute a breach of contract with Reddit on it’s term of use policy causing actual economic damages to me.

This is a copy of my Complaint:

I was a divorce attorney long before I ever thought of becoming a life and relationship coach and have started several businesses. None have been as difficult to get off the ground as this one with advertisers suddenly getting squirrelly and jerking me around for weeks. Normally companies in the business of selling advertising likes to, you know, sell advertising! Not so with Reddit which appears determined to stamp out offensive advertisements like mine.

For the record, This is the ad Reddit refused to run:

And it simply asks: “Are you a man ready to move forward with better relationships and a better life?”

I tried to get a reasonable accommodation or at least an explanation and was ignored. Apparently, the idea of a man working with another man to better his relationships and life offended them so bad they said:

Upon revisiting our policy and reviewing your ads, we are unable to approve your ads and allow you to advertise on our platform. This decision cannot be appealed.”
I am not here with my hand out asking for donations. I just want to get the word out about my unique coaching service to the Reddit community. My coaching is targeted at men in problem marriages. I participated in writing /u/bluepillprofessor’s book on Saving a Low Sex Marriage: A Man’s Guide to Dread, Seduction, and the Long Game and I was inspired by the comradery, and the work being done on both The Red Pill and Married Red Pill. I left the practice of law and went back to school to pursue Board Certification in Coaching (BCC) where I added much more than "Red Pill" into my toolbox.

Now I am done with my coursework and I am studying for the BCC examination and busily working to open a full time coaching practice. I picking up some traction and had picked up several clients just from random posts on Reddit and Quora with a few comments linking my web site. I was so certain there might be an explosion when my Reddit ad hit that I spent several weeks preparing for it. Then Reddit rejected the ad at the 11th hour like a wife rejecting her husband at 11:00, and just like that in fact. I have to say these unpleasant and unnecessary bumps in the road are quite irritating. Frankly, like a lot of you, I am sick and tired of getting pushed around all the time by these damn SJW’s, and wives. We are right this time and I will not go quietly into that good night.

TLDR: Get me some Clients Brah.

Help out yourself or a guy you love who is in a lousy marriage and wants some help by referring him to me. You probably know 10 off the top of your head.

You can visit me at:

www.coaching4men.com

for my pics and personal information and for more information about coaching. I can help you, your dad, your cousins, uncles and brothers- and yes, I can help the wives, sisters, mothers, and daughters who love them.

Dave the “Red Pill Coach”

Oops! I think I just doxed myself!
Lots of men here refer to the lag time (aka the 1,000 ft rope) from when they started implementing their strategy to when their wives, or more importantly, other women started responding positively. Some report that their wives didn’t respond... but other women did. I’m 2 and a half years into this. A year ago I stopped measuring this by “her” actions and just continued to pursue my own happiness (sometimes selfishly) and to build my strategy with as many options and contingencies as I could. Was there “self improvement”? Ya, there sure as shit was but that wasn’t my overall goal. Building my strategy was. Improving myself was just the bedrock. Or was improvement just a bi-product of my strategy? Eh, another topic for another time.

As a long term MRP member I’m almost hesitant to admit that It wasn’t until a few months ago that I really started noticing consistent positive behavior from the wife. “Consistent” is the key word here. Examples;

She grabs parts of my upper body now during sex and squeezes them while gritting her teeth a bit. Always. She started using more affectionate words and phrases in texts to me. She apologizes for things like not having dinner ready on time or at all some nights. I always praise her efforts in this department because it adds value and she’s a good cook. So when she’s had a rough day and things aren’t all in place, I just say, “no problem baby. Let’s just order something.” Or “what can I help with?” The bloops will love this one based on their post about me and PMs I received about six months ago...She put her hand up around my throat for a brief moment while I was on top of her pounding away a few weeks ago. It wasn’t hard and it wasn’t for long because she caught herself in genuine surprise, covered her mouth and was like, “OMG I just choked you now.” And then she laughed. Surprised even herself. Whenever I put my hand up around her neck, she always says in a half-hearted, playful manner, “don’t choke me..” I realized that she’s mirroring what she likes, and even unconsciously in this instance. We had a good laugh. Uses me as validation in social circles. Photos on Facebook, comments to her friends, etc. Initiating more. Sometimes for sex, sometimes just for affection. Last night she asked if I would cuddle her in bed because she was cold. I still initiate most of the time because we’ll, I’m the man. Sometimes she’ll surprise me which is always nice.

Some women will respond immediately to your strategy and your better self. Others will take months, and still others will take years. Some may never and some may require more than covert dread and game, i.e. a more overt and jarring event to get it through their solipsistic head. See /u/DownVoteforDickPick’s post about his cyclical and recurring jaunt into DL10 to keep his wife reminded of what the expectations are. Some disagreed with this but I say, “it’s a strategy and it’s working.” And it’s assuring you aren’t being taken advantage of in Marriage 2.0. I don’t see any problems.

Occasionally there are debates here about whether DL10-12 type motivators are the right... kind of dread to get the sex you want. In other words, is she just putting out now for fear of losing the comfortable lifestyle of a marriage and not because of genuine desire? To that I would say “it depends” and “do you give a shit if it does?” Depends what HER motivations are. Perhaps that sort of ultimatum is the ONLY thing that will cause the tingles in some women. Afterall, society has conditioned men to give up their commitment, time and attention freely and without any regard for our dreams and happiness. The longer you give these up for free, the less respect she’ll have for you. I would argue that this kind of motivation (the “fuck me or fuck you”) might actually increase her desire for you. Probably not at first. At first it will be to keep you and out of fear of blowing up the marriage. But as time goes on and you show congruence in your new steadfast frame to not be a doormat and to not give away your commitment for free, I believe she’ll come to respect you. With that respect comes attraction. All women are different. You just have to decide if that sort of strategy is going to make YOU happy. For some guys it may be the right move.

Regardless, As we always say, it’s not about her and it’s not about sex with her... it’s about your strategy to get the sex you want. That could be with her, with a plate, with her and a plate or with a new girl(s) in a post DL12 life. But remember if it is with the wife, she may be slow to come around. Mine is. I say “is” because I think I’m still finding how deep this hole goes, even after 2+ years at this. Maybe it lasts and gets better, maybe it won’t. My prosperity doesn’t depend on it.

All these things are small and incremental. It requires some patience and some distance from your start point to really notice them but for most of us, they are there if you open your eyes. There will be ebbs and flows and setbacks. If the overall progression is in the right direction, even if slowly, then it’s good.

Two plus years, gentlemen. Be mindful of the lag but also be able to recognize if your wife or LTR is unable or unwilling to properly respond to your value when other women are showing interest. That’s the linchpin for when to execute higher levels of your strategy. She only gets first crack at a sex life with you, not unlimited control over it.
From the Source........ How to Deal with Woman Being a Bitch
by screechhater | March 12, 2017 | Link

TL/DR How to Deal with a Bitch - Red Pill Truths

I was at a basketball game last night for one of our kids. I was watching the Blue Pill fags disciplining their kids and the wives, were fuming with the lack of manhood. It made me laugh my ass off when my niece quipped- "Why can't they deal with their bitchy wives? It's not like women are complicated"

Found this, this morning Source:

Author I know how complicated women are — trust me, I'm living proof of this. But if there’s anything I’ve learned about men, it’s that the more I’m accepted for exactly who I’m being in this moment, the more I change and morph and melt into something more accepting myself.

6. When I act like a child, think of me like a child

Half the time when I’m being a bitch, it is exactly the same as when a 3-year-old is wiggling out because s/he’s sleep-deprived. There is no logical reason for the behavior — it’s a physiological reaction. As adults, we assume we’re all capable of being normal, rational beings all the time.

We’re not. Especially not those of us with riotously, spectacularly, outlandishly fluctuating hormones.

Seriously, when I’m whining or bitching or complaining seemingly just for the sake of it, picture me as a tiny little girl in a tiny little dress with a tiny little diaper and a tiny little face red from bawling, who is upset that you just gave her the wrong milk. How seriously do you take that toddler? How much compassion do you have for her?

You always knew I was secretly a 3-year-old. Now make it work for you.

3. Take care of yourself

You don’t always have to put up with my crap. (I hope some of the newbies can internalize this and kill the griping fear that controls them) Just because I’m in a bad mood doesn’t mean you’re responsible for it — or for fixing it. As my man, I expect you to give me attention and put energy into the relationship, but I don’t expect either 24/7.

You are, in fact, a whole separate being with your own experiences and needs and responsibilities. And your first responsibility is to yourself: If you can’t handle it or don’t have the energy or just don’t want to deal with me in a certain moment, don’t.
DO NOT sacrifice yourself or your truth just to make me ‘happy.’ It doesn’t work, anyway — you usually get resentful that you tried to help and it didn’t fly. I’d much rather you take care of yourself in the moment and have space for me later than overextend yourself now and blame me for it later.

Instead, try just letting me know: “Hey, I get you’re upset and I want you to know I care. At the same time, I need to take care of myself right now so I’m gonna go chill for a while. Cool?”

With this, you’ve solved half of it anyway just by acknowledging that I’m not OK. I at least feel seen, and I’m also primed to get that it’s not all about me all the time. (Frame fuckers, frame)

Sometimes, it’s easy for me to forget that.
How meditation, the /r/marriedredpill and the work of Jordan Peterson are helping me transform my marriage

by yyiii | September 20, 2017 | Link

this isn't your typical /r/mrp post, but this community has been pivotal in my life over the past year and in writing it so I thought I'd try sharing here. Link at the bottom to source and my blog. Mods can delete if they disagree Nothing makes the abstract concrete like survival and reproduction. My wife and I have been together for almost a decade, we married three years ago. Last summer she decided it was time to start trying for a kid. Until then, the idea of becoming a father and having a baby was enticing—I was all in. But when it became a tangible, visceral possibility, I folded. My resistance was as surprising to me as it was upsetting to her. I was downright bamboozled. My choice to press pause on the baby thing surfaced a lot of difficult material that we've both been working with over the past year.

It's hard to express the experience of your body telling your mind to fuck right off. The internal mental conflict was like overwhelming confusion-drenched aporia slathered in rage. And my body felt like a blast furnace every time I approached the topic. Why did having a baby freak me out so much? I think it goes back to lessons learned through experiences with death.

Rewind four years. Within a sixteen month period, all three of my grandparents died, my great uncle died, and doctors found a tumor in the center of my fiance’s father’s brain. A week after our wedding my father-in-law passed away. It was around the same time that I stumbled upon Buddhism and meditation. One of the first books I read was The Tibetan Book of Living and Dying. I read parts of it to my father-in-law during his last weeks of life. The look of calm acceptance on his face as I read is still vivid in my memory.

I also started a daily meditation practice around then and found an amazing meditation teacher to work with one-on-one. Since then I’ve been trying my best to ‘sort myself out,’ to make the most of the insane privilege I have received: the ability to draw and expel breath on the only planet our species knows of, capable of supporting human life.

Being alive is a bloody miracle, and it comes with a great responsibility. I just happened to be humbled enough by suffering to recognize that when I did. So I made the decision to stop living my life as a passenger adrift in the undertows of helplessness, complaints, entertainment, and distraction. I just could not bear to keep struggling forward through the overgrown weeds of my suffering, choked by emotional reactivity. Something had to change.

“The practitioner discovers—and this is a revolutionary insight, whose subtlety and power cannot be overestimated—that not only do violent emotions not necessarily sweep you away and drag you back into the whirlpools of your own neuroses, they can actually be used to deepen, embolden, invigorate, and strengthen [awakening mind]. The tempestuous energy becomes raw food of the awakened energy of [awakening mind]. The stronger and more flaming the emotion, the more [awakening mind] is strengthened. I feel that this unique method of Dzogchen (a direct approach to the natural state) has extraordinary power to free even the most inveterate, deeply rooted emotional and psychological problems.”—Sogyal Rinpoche, The Tibetan Book of Living and Dying

After a year of reading dharma and meditating, I was able to switch out of 24/7 survival mode. After repeatedly (and silently) admitting to myself what a horrorshow I’d let my life become, I learned to focus on and start to take responsibility for the things I had agency over.

I also practiced how to stop obsessing over the past. It continues to be a process of recognizing that my escapism, self-victimization, and constant unconscious blaming were the only strategies I had to survive suffering for a long time. Pain is sometimes so deep and so overwhelming we become numb and oblivious to it over the years. When self-pity or self-hatred come up in reaction to this acknowledgment, I label it: ‘opinions about myself,’ not facts, and let them go too.

The flip side of that lesson was to learn to stop wasting my time, energy and attention focusing on and trying to fight generalized abstract systems, groups or structures I had zero control over. Quitting grad school helped a lot with this. I’d been trained since my mid-twenties to write persuasive, logically sound arguments that blamed society, capitalism, the mass media, the patriarchy, the Church, my family, or one socially constructed group or another for the biggest, baddest problems that I could perceive. When I discovered Jordan Peterson’s ideas a few years later, his dismantling of the ideological possession that plagues the Humanities departments of many of today’s universities brought me a lot of peace.

With the help of my meditation teacher and a small community of fellow practitioners, I made it my mission to take responsibility for and transform my suffering, instead of continuing to trundle through life as a reactive, alienated, spaced-out victim.

First I focused on managing my finances and career. After dropping out of grad school, I’d found a job, and started to dig myself out of debt. Two years later I turned my attention to physical health, sleep, nutrition, and fitness. Today I’m in the best shape of my life—and just getting started. Last year, the baby thing kicked off my efforts to re-focus my energy and attention on my relationships—with my family, my marriage, and myself. Adding new life to this planet is a huge, difficult, meaningful responsibility and I want to do it right, to the extent that I am able.

Last week, my wife got back from a three month meditation retreat at Blue Cliff Monastery in the Catskill Mountains. It’s been a spacious summer, and I used the space (emotional, psychological and physical) to investigate my conduct as a husband. To really sort through what I was doing, thinking and saying that was contributing to the difficulties in our relationship.

What do I think about my wife—as my wife? What do I think about myself as her husband?
What do the stories I repeat in my mind say about her—and about me? Do I believe them? Do I act on them as if they were facts? What kind of language do I talk to my wife with? Do I use blame and judgment to try and manipulate her? Do I hear her when I’m listening? Does my behavior align with what I say want? Do I know what she wants? Do I know what I want?

As I reflected on these sorts of questions, I started to recognize some of the specific reactive emotional patterns underlying my thoughts, speech, and actions. While these reactive patterns operated, they clouded my mindset and co-opted my logic to justify their own existence. A life governed by reactivity makes things worse than they have to be.

At first, the patterns were subtle, barely perceptible, noticeable only in the ways I treated other people. As summer passed, they became more obvious. As I started to uncover their roots, I started to see them everywhere, in myself and others. Now they are difficult to ignore.

Clumsy language use, unmindful behavior, and mental gymnastics conspire to generate a very confusing dynamic in my relationships that results in me avoiding owning my shit. The proliferation of reactive patterning, like unattended weeds over many years, created ripe conditions for this fundamental confusion.

The truth is, I’ve come to see that I have unskillful ways of being in relationship with people in general—not just my wife. Although I want my marriage to be a nourishing source of mutual support and joy, despite my best intentions, I’ve been making things worse and contradicting this very wish. That’s not the kind of situation I want to bring a baby into.

Survival and reproduction are at the root of every human being’s biologically grounded conditioning. There are observable intersexual dynamics, the strategies men and women act out (with or without conscious awareness) to survive and reproduce. Survival mode doesn’t have to be triggered by mortal danger to our bodies, it can be (and was often in me) activated by deep, suppressed emotional pain or psychological trauma. Overcoming that was the first part of my journey. Tapping into and experiencing my innate reproductive drives has more recently been my focus. A man’s conditioning is different than a woman’s because his body has a unique function, composition and purpose from hers. That is where red pill theory fits in.

The first time I was introduced to Roosh’s writing I rejected it flat out. I told the friend who showed it to me that he was a sexist bigot and I seriously questioned our friendship. It was only a year and a half later, when the pain I was experiencing in my relationship with my wife became so acute that I gave Roosh another shot.

As I read through Bang the first time, slowly, my outrage eventually simmered to anger, which settled into shame, and eventually I was able to recognize the truths of intersexual dynamics described by a guy who’d devoted a large part of his life to observing, experimenting and validating sexual strategies. This lead me to /r/theredpill and /r/marriedredpill, No More Mister Nice Guy, and www.therationalmale.com.

Being married, I’m not looking to pick up women, but the fundamental principles of intersexual dynamics apply to any male-female relationship. So I starting to practice positive Masculinity: asking for what I want, being direct about my expectations, leading through action, staying composed in the face of emotional reactivity, etc. Since I started practicing things I've been learning from the manosphere, my wife tells me she feels much more freedom and space to be feminine. She says she feels safer and more at peace in our apartment, and greater confidence in depending on me. We've still got some ways to go, but the changes are real, and they are amazing. When I stopped crowding the feminine roles and responsibilities in our marriage, and focused on unapologetically listening to my masculine drives, our relationship started to balance out.

“If men and women are clinging to a politically correct sameness even in moments of intimacy, then sexual attraction disappears. I don't mean just the desire for intercourse, but the juice of the entire relationship begins to dry up. The love may still be strong, the friendship may still be strong, but the sexual polarity fades, unless in moments of intimacy one partner is willing to play the masculine pole and one partner is willing to play the feminine. You have to animate the masculine and feminine differences if you want to play in the field of sexual passion.” David Deida, The Way of the Superior Man

In the following series of posts I’m going to own and unpack how a situation like mine came to be, dig into what reactive patterns are and how they work, and share ways of taking responsibility for the things you can control (thoughts, words, and actions) and show how they’ve helped me transform pain into joy and contentment. I hope they help you too.

I’m bound to make errors, and mistakes in the way I describe my experience and the things I’ve learned, I’ve not mastered any of this stuff. Whatever mistakes and misrepresentations are my own, and I am happy to discuss or answer for them. Everything I’ve learned over the past four years I have to thank my meditation teacher Paul for his guidance, support and friendship, and my wife, family and friends for the space, patience and understanding they’ve offered.

And really, at the end of the day, this whole blog is just me doing my best to piece together the wisdom that my father’s father acted out in his backyard garden throughout his life. You can’t grow delicious tomatoes, hot peppers or grapes for red wine without a rich bed of horse shit and rotting compost. Love you nonno.

original
I’m in a 1y LTR and the last month has been literally non-stop shit testing. The reasons she finds to bitch about are mind-boggling. Some of them made me laugh out of the plain shock of an adult being angry at things like that.

At first she threw very little shit at me, whenever this would happen I was so complacent I forgot how to handle a fucking shit test... I actually took her for face value and tried to solve whatever was making her unhappy.

In retrospective, I see that the more I did that the more frequent and ridiculous her complaints have become.

It hit me just a week ago like a ton of bricks that I am dealing with a level of a 5yo and started responding accordingly.

I was completely blind to the fact that those are shit tests and I did all the worst beta mistakes like trying to reason with her, come to agreements etc.

I asked myself why, and the answer was: empathy.

-----

I read a book on sales which said: a sell is two worldviews colliding and only one prevails. Either the one you believe your product is more valuable than the client’s money, or the clients' resistance that it isn’t. You are either selling to the customer, or he is selling to you and you buy his idea.

Because of my empathy, for many years I was afraid of hurting people, especially women because I could see their emotional response. Together with being raised by a single mother this made me focus a lot on others and little of myself. I was always sold on the other person's worldview, especially if it was negative.

If a woman has a strong emotional response, the more empathic a man is, the more he will identify with her. How can you feel someone else's pain and remain untouched? You can feel like a real asshole.

This is the downfall of the empathic man: we are too attuned to others and feel that we actually not attuned or care enough. In a sense, it is like you become a chameleon that responds, rather a man that is focused in his own internal wants and needs.

This is why men who genuinely don’t care have an easier time in most things. This is why you see parent’s give in to their 5yo’s tantrums: they can’t stand to see their child in pain.

-----

The most important lesson for me is to keep reminding myself I have NO CONTROL over other people’s feelings. I do me and force no one to stay with me. She can always walk out and I will find another girl. This was always my breaking point: if she feels bad--I feel like I did something bad and have to fix it.

It requires much willpower for me to stop myself from trying to fix whatever she complains about.

Whenever she gets a mood, I go back to RP basics: laugh it off, STFU and let her be (or try to fuck her).

I do something I want for myself, to take the focus off her.

There is no fixing a mood. The more you try--the more you fail and look weaker in her eyes.
Marriage: 23 year marriage, MRP for maybe 2 years, but never really too beta previously, never a dead bedroom, wife remains attractive, child now 18. Edit: 2 years ago lost our other son [many posters suggesting probably correctly this tragedy significantly alters this situation]

Problem: Last week, wife mentions she had lunch with another guy who she met at work, says they have lunch every now and again to discuss industry and catch up. I recognize this right away as preliminary hamstering and ass-covering. So I check the text messages (which I normally never bother checking), sure enough almost daily text messages, including talk of "stuff I can only comfortably discuss with you" and "I love our lunches," and "I adore our time together". But I believe nothing physical has happened, they have sent each other a single picture, him out hiking by himself (posing) and she sent one that included our son. It probably fits the definition of emotional affair so far, nothing explicit in the text log and no obvious deletion gaps. Were I to directly confront her with it, she would certainly trickle truth and hamster "We're just friends" and probably move to "Why are you so jealous I can't have any friends." and of course go nowhere.

RP specifically advises against Mate Guarding, which I agree with, until the behavior becomes a real problem. If this were physical cheating, even direct flirting by text or explicit picture sharing, it would be clear and I would obviously address. But right now it's right on the line of deniability.

The MPR approach to this, from MMSL, is to gather all the evidence, fill out the divorce paperwork, and have a nuclear decision session -- instructing her to either cut off all contact with this guy while I watch or I will submit the divorce paperwork to the court and have her served.

Am I going nuclear too soon?

The only other option I see is to ignore (and continue monitoring while it inevitably escalates) and continue to work on myself. If I ignore, I feel like I am setting myself up to become cuckolded, but if I divorce her over this it seems perhaps petty and she will feel fully justified, certainly will look pretty bad in the social world, not that I care much about that, but may even push her to press harder on the divorce rape button. Any halfway solution like telling her I found her texts and they bother me will result in denial, no progress, and me coming off as beta/butthurt.

There are other troubles in the marriage, so divorce would not come completely unexpected, but she would almost certainly be quite surprised to find this to be the final straw. Also, I am comfortable moving forward with divorce, child is legal adult now (thank god), but all things being equal I think the marriage could be made to work and eventually be pretty good, and I really would hate to burden our newly-adult son with divorced parents.

I am requesting advice.

TLDR; Wife texting other man constantly, super friendly but not yet physical, considering nuclear option to stop it before progressing.
Half Repping
by Cloudy_Pirate | October 16, 2019 | Link

As I was reading through the OYS threads this morning, I couldn’t help but think of a dude at my gym. I don’t know his name, so I’ll call him Chester. Chester is strong. If he were reporting here, he would say that he benches 320 lbs and squats 405 lbs. Chester is also a weirdly proportioned. His upper body is way bigger than his lower body. Maybe it’s genetic. Maybe it’s how he dresses. But most likely, it’s because Chester is a half-repper.

He half-reps his squats in the worst way. He is so far from a proper squat (like 6-8” above parallel) that it isn’t even close. But he also half-reps his bench, his chin-ups, his rows… I don’t know if you can half-rep a shrug, but if you can, he does it.

I’m not a lifting expert and I’m not ever going to try to coach Chester. He is way more experienced than I am and has been lifting a lot longer than I have. But I don’t need to be an expert to tell that he isn’t doing the full range of motion.

I didn’t give it too much thought until I watched another big guy at the gym. I’ll call him Adonis. Adonis squatted 405 lbs to parallel (and for reps) and it was a beautiful thing. You could tell it was a tough lift and that it took him awhile to get there. Adonis is also ripped as fuck and doesn’t have the weird body proportions that Chester does.

Both Adonis and Chester are significantly stronger than I am. But the difference between them was huge. I would rather progress more slowly towards being Adonis than progress rapidly towards being Chester.

Chester’s problem is that he will have to kill his ego and practically start over if he ever wants to do real squats. He (probably) isn’t willing to do that so he is stuck where he is.

There are too many men here that are half-repping their OYS. Yeah, it’s hard, painful, and scary to go all the way down. You might fall over and do the walk of shame. But to get the results, you must do the hard work. You must grind it out. The weights don’t get easier – you get stronger. Owning your shit doesn’t get easier – you get stronger. And if you have been half-repping for awhile now, you are going to have kill your ego, go back to the beginning and practically start over. Either that or you end up with a weirdly proportioned marriage that you choose to be stuck with.

Make your choice.
Deload, proper form.
by ex_addict_bro | December 17, 2016 | Link

TL;DR

Short & sweet post about life. And, for all you noobs out there, if you don't understand abbreviations, you're doing it wrong.

Body

I did some squats, I did some deadlifts. After some time I realised that I am not satisfied with my results. I started looking into the matter. Accidentally I saw some group of PTs-in-training at the gym and I saw how they did deadlifts. I realised, that the way I did the exercise was not proper. Then I realised, that to do the exercise in a proper form, I need to deload. I was sad in the beginning. No more bragging about 1.5xBM RM's. But whatever. Let's do it properly because people say it is good for me.

Few weeks, then boom, results.

I remember reading once that GayLubeOil's post criticising some of that "Jersey Shore" show actors or something like that, comparing their posture to Arnold's and explaining, which exercises did they omit.

Proper form. That manly greek god physique. Here I come.

Then I realised.

Some time ago I abused alcohol. That was not a proper form to live life. So I had to deload. At first, I was sad and worried about what will people think. Then boom, better life. Proper form.

Some time ago I was married. But that marriage was built on some false premises and some mythology (which is called "blue pill" by a few). This was not a proper form to build a relationship between a man and a woman. So I had to deload. At first, I felt shattered with all the money and time I've spent through 9 yrs of my failed marriage. Then boom, better life. Proper form.

Deload. Proper form.

Where do you need to deload in order to improve?
Long time lurker. Infrequent commentator. I have ingested the sidebar, worked on my MAP, and made many improvements on myself. Clearly a long way to go, but I am solidly on track.

This post is on theory, so enough about me. The words 'I love you' have been fully hijacked by the blue pill bullshit consortium. 'I love you' now means 'even if you get fat, I will still pretend to want to fuck you'. It also means 'if you behave poorly, I will be a bitch'. It also means 'I am going to do the dishes, even if I worked all day while you had coffee and bitched with your friends all day'. Fuck that.

I have switched. Accidentally in fact. After a great romp session with my wife, I smacked her on the ass and said 'I'm loving you'. And then it clicked in my mind. I was loving her. Loving that I was getting bjs again. Loving that she was not bitching all the time. Loving that she was being happy. All because I had retaken the helm and am again captain of a badass ship. She was happy to feel that the first mate position was a good one, and that I was trustworthy enough for her to let go and enjoy the freedom that comes with not trying to be the captain. Heavy is the head that wears the crown.

'I'm loving you' means that, at this moment, you are kicking ass and doing what needs to be done. It also means 'don't start slacking, because my love is not unconditional'. Don't get fat. Don't be a cunt. Don't bitch. Respect the fact that I do a damn good job as a father and husband.

'I love you' means 'walk all over me'. It is a sign of weakness, and frankly disrespectful to ones' own self.
So, I'm on vacation having a good time with the family. We have some down time at the park, and I wip out my phone to check some email. Current wife is sitting right next to me and I see an email from my ex. We communicate fairly regular for logistical purposes so I'm thinking no big deal. This one was different though. It started with the words "It wasn't time to say goodbye"

My current wife sees and says "WTF". I say "Don't know, but not dealing with it right now" and put my phone away.

I get back to the hotel room and read the rest of it, and basically it was about 5 paragraphs about how she still misses me, and can't say goodbye, I'm still her first love, blah blah, barf. I've been divorced from this woman for almost a decade. She has remarried, and has a kid with her new beau.

Gentlemen, while I was married to this woman I was miserable. We fought all the time and at the end I cheated constantly. One day I literally walked out of the house and never went back. We were in a nasty 2yr court battle for my kids (I won) and countless other awful things that have gone on between us in the years since I've left. Over the last two years, I've really been trying to embrace apathy towards her, and have made an art out of using as few words as possible to communicate with her and only if it's absolutely necessary. Basically, I have not given her any reason to think that I have any affection, or care in the slightest about her, or our past life, and she still felt the need to send me a long ass email about how she still pines for me and whatnot.

So, what's the point: You, Mr. Man are the prize. A few years ago, this email would have surprised me. But now I understand. I'm worth a damn, and so are you. When a woman finds a man who knows his worth, she is his lock stock and barrel (unless hypergamy). That includes being respectful, and sweet and feminine, and putting it in the butt, etc.

This may seem like humble brag, but I completely understand that whatever she wrote was only what she was feeling in that moment, and tomorrow I could just as easily get a hate email. I just wanted to point out that even if you can't see it, her hamster is on that wheel spinning. Do your work and let her hamster spin. When you get there she'll respond. Either she won't be able to see past the old blue and divorce, or she will embrace the red you have become. Win Win for you my friends.
How I Took Back My Marriage
by | October 10, 2014 | Link

I posted a brief success story in /r/thankstrp and was asked to elaborate. Here I will give some examples of actioning the redpill philosophy in the fields of MONEY, TIME, and SEX.

BACKGROUND

My marriage spiraled downward as I tried harder and harder to win my wife over. Ironically, all the hard work I put into saving my marriage was misdirected. Instead of manning up, I went full beta - sacrificing my time, my interests, buying gifts, etc. because I mistakenly believed that's what she wanted (that's what she told me - what a mistake to think women are rational beings!). Fast forward 3 years and she totally despised me, I hated myself and my marriage, she cheated on me, and she was the dominant force in our relationship in every way.

I habitually submitted to her leadership, hoping she would see my sacrifice and appreciate it. I hated it, but couldn't figure out how to change it. I would have left her immediately when she cheated if we didn't have a young son. In short, it was really bad.

When I found TRP it instantly resonated. I had game before I married - it was now time to bring it back as a last ditch effort to make my marriage work. I had nothing to lose. The first part of my life I took back was my money.

MONEY

One morning at 0430 as I was getting ready for work I realized she had thrown out my hair product along with a load of junk we were cleaning out. It was annoying; I told her so via text when she woke up. She was a total bitch about it, and would not even say sorry, so THIS is where I decided to begin holding my ground.

That day I went to the barber and bought the most expensive, premium hair product for myself. While I was in the shop I decided to get a $40 haircut too. I also made sure to buy a $13 lunch that day. I wanted to make a point.

I came home from work later than usual (without explanation) with a new, good looking haircut. Predictably, she checked the accounts online and launched into an attack, "You spent $75 today!??" expecting me to become defensive and apologetic - setting the battleground for a war she'd win. Instead, I held my frame. Calmly, and totally unaffected by the shit she was throwing, I told her I purchased the hair product because she threw mine away, and I wanted a new haircut anyway. For lunch, I was hungry. Period. NBD. I was not defensive, I did not engage, I just held frame. "This happened, here's why, since you're asking, now let's move on now sweetie. Did you get that job you applied for?" Basically I refused to engage in an emotional argument. She huffed and puffed, and I went about my business in the home, totally unaffected.
She pushed back the next day with the following shit test. So, I'm moving our family to another city so I can go back to school to become a doctor. It's my lifelong dream. She will work while I take courses. She tests me with this: "When I start working, I think we'll have separate accounts." I sense the shit test immediately, and raise an eyebrow while staring directly at her with a crooked smile - amused mastery frame mode engaged. She laughs nervously and says, "I'll give you an allowance."

Now, Bluepill-Me would've indulged her in the privilege of a logical explanation about how we've had joint accounts our entire marriage while I was sole provider, this wouldn't be fair because blah blah bluepill shit. I would've lost her respect, and possibly the argument. Not this time.

Instead, I chuckled, and said "that's cute. Not happening." Shut it down, and changed the subject. Not the most alpha reply, but it effectively shut it down instantly.

Another money example: last week we took a load of unwanted books to the used bookstore to sell. I ended up with $140 store credit. Instinctively, she took the credit note and put it in her wallet.

Not this time. My books, my store credit, thanks babe ;) Her responsive shit test: She tried to list my store credit note on craigslist, looking for cash. Because she did this without my permission, I just gave the credit note to a friend. When she found out, predictably another shit test ensued. I just held frame. Amused mastery. Laugh it off, no biggie, when you sell your books you can be rich like me, let's move on.

There are limitless opportunities to take the power back in this arena. I now make it my responsibility to pay all our bills. I decide where to allocate my paychecks. This is a huge leadership position in the marriage, and you must lead her.

TIME

I used to rush home from work like my life depended on being there ASAP. I was conditioned into thinking this way because she'd text me constantly near the end of my workday, setting up her timeline for the things she had planned. The sense of being there for her so she could do the things she wanted actually created anxiety in me. Somehow she had stolen MY use of MY time.

This is where I realized I wasn't just acting beta, I had internalized the whole thing. I felt like I had PTSD. I needed to take back my use of my time.

The next morning I woke up and without saying a word I collected my gear and headed out the door. I shouted, "going to the gym" and just left. She called me as I began jogging to the gym and told me she had plans to go for a run this morning, when will you be home, you need to be home by x-time, blah blah. I just said, "I'm working out. Back when I'm done." Radio silence ensued.

I did a 1.5 hr workout and ignored a lot of calls and texts during that time. When I showed up at home she was kind of pissed, but I could tell it was just an act. I held frame.
The same night I told her, "you need to put [the kid] to bed tonight, I am going to study for my math class." She threw up a shit test claiming I'd been gone all day (really it was 1.5 hrs, and she worked out later that day herself), and blah blah. I just said calmly, totally unaffected, that I'm going to work on my math class so I can become a doctor and I'll see her tonight. Out the door. Not even a text from her until an hour later asking me. "How's it going? :)

The other thing I'm doing is not asking her plans when I make my own. Yesterday we were walking together when I got a phone call. A friend wanted my help with a project on saturday, so I said Yes, I'll be there at 10. She started trying to talk to me while I was talking on the phone, saying she had a plan for us on saturday or something - nothing she'd mentioned to me before. I confirmed my plans to my friend right in front of her, said goodbye, and hung up the phone. In the past she would've fought me hard... I would've canceled my plans - or not made them at all, in order to let her do the thing she wanted to do. But she was now getting the message and she didnt even fight me on this. Instead, she asked if she could come along with me on Saturday, and she was happy the whole walk home. What!?

SEX

Recently one night I needed sex and she declined, as she usually does. I held frame and told her she was failing in her duty as a wife, and that I want her to give me a BJ. She threw a fit, saying "you can't say that to me." She may have said something about me being misogynistic. I held frame, confident and unperturbed, and told her in uncertain terms what I required sexually, and that her failure to perform is unacceptable. She threw a fit and left the bedroom, calling me an asshole. I held my frame, and did not chase her. She was accustomed to a dramatic routine we'd usually engage in, where I'd follow and console her, she'd play the victim, and I'd reward her for denying me sex. Not tonight babe.

I stayed in the bedroom reading my book, ready to do my own thing tonight, but clearly upset with her for her failure to perform. After 10 minutes she realized I wasn't chasing her to apologize, so she came back into the bedroom. She says, "Fine, we can have sex" and she just lays there. I was about to take her, when I realized she was planning to lay there like a dead body. This was a shit test, and something she'd use against me later. I told her no, gtfo. Not good enough. I maintained the frame - I need sex, this is a big issue. She needs to perform. I left the room, and went to my chair to read a book, content to write her off for the night, but clearly mad. Another 10 minutes pass and I can hardly wait to see what will happen next. I know we are making progress. She eventually comes out of the bedroom, and says we can do it on the couch. I tell her to start with a BJ, she says no, so I escalated. I threw my book across the room and left her again. Now she's starting to understand I'm serious, and it's turning her on.

She follows me into the bedroom immediately and takes her clothes off. BJ ensues. She's into it. I take her from behind and just have my way with her. She's so turned on she climaxes faster than I've ever seen! After we both finish, she asks me sweetly if that was OK? I give her affection. By being dominant I turned her into a sweet feminine creature. We both feel very, very good.

The next night she asks me if we can have sex again.
CONCLUSIONS

Gentlemen, this shit works. My wife is more calm, much more happy, she is acting right. She seems to love me more than I've felt in years. I am taking every opportunity to lead, and seeing HUGE improvements in every area of my life. I am focusing 100% on my mission of becoming a doctor (quit my job yesterday!), and she is focusing on me, and our son. I am flirting with every girl I meet, and she's marking me everywhere we go. My sex drive has increased. I am more confident at work. I am enforcing my authority with my son. His behavior has improved too.

I am not suggesting you become a cold dictator. You need to engage with her emotions - but only on your terms. You need to fuck her good and show her love. But first, you need to make yourself into the man you were destined to become.

I realize my marriage might never improve to the level I require for happiness, but TRP has improved life for everyone in my home - almost overnight. We tried counselling, I've read a lot of self improvement books and relationship books, and none of it made any appreciable difference. With TRP I feel like a man, my wife behaves better and is happier, and my son has a strong male role model.

Every aspect of my life is improving, and my wife is much, much happier than she's been in years. If you are a husband you need to lead your wife. My wife has a naturally very dominant personality, but I now realize the ONLY way she can be fulfilled is to be led by an even more dominant husband. Make no mistake, this is hard work. She will constantly test your fitness - it is her nature. Your nature is to get lazy when you make it to the top. You must not let that happen.

Own your shit, and everything else will fall into place. I'm living proof of the truths of TRP. My entire family is benefiting from me living up to my potential and becoming the man I was meant to be. When my wife tries to start shit, I shut it down immediately. Do not engage. "She can start it, but you must finish it." You must call her out on her shit. You must not reward bad behavior. You must not tolerate her disrespecting you in front of your kids. You must reward her for good behavior. You must protect her. You must be STRONG for both yourself, and for her.

Masculinity is not a bad word. Embrace it. Be bold. You must not fail in this- the most basic quest of becoming a MAN. It is what you were born to be. She will love you more for being a man than acting like a woman. Give her what she really wants by becoming what you were born to be.

It is embarrassing to reflect on my past and see how castrated I was, so I hope this account helps some of you guys decide to swallow the pill and make a necessary change. Like many, I had a father who was incredibly passive. So by default I inherited this trait, and even internalized the idea that it was the "right" way for a man to act. But no, it was totally wrong. I am determined to ensure my son will not learn the same mistake I did. I am finally proud of who I am.
Better Beta Divorce Strategy
by Red-Curious | September 26, 2018 | Link

This may not be popular among a group of guys who get off on circle-jerking about being more alpha all the time, but bear with me. Your goal in a divorce isn't to make your ex have the hots for you. It's to be on good terms with everyone involved so you're more likely to settle or win at trial. Although alpha strategies can work, this post is directed more toward the guys who are married to mentally unstable and highly hostile women.

Beta Divorce Strategy

Society wants to see men be more beta, right? Nice guys are good guys. Alphas are jerks who most people in culture want to punch in the face. Yeah, they're attractive to women, but they're still seen in a negative light by everyone else - including your judge, who can do the legal version of punching you in the face and get away with it. Very few alpha men present well in court. Being confident and articulate is powerful. Being the jerk who always teases his wife, AAs her complaints, says no to fitness tests, etc. will just justify to the judge why she's leaving you in the first place. If you can be the model nice guy - the man all the feminists are trying to create - your judge can only think: "He was everything a woman would want. Sure, he made some mistakes, but he owned up to them and tried to make it right. She's the one who's being a jerk by leaving such a nice guy." This isn't the best strategy for every judge, but it works for a lot of them - 4 out of the 5 judges on my current court.

If you want to save your marriage, maintaining frame and being attractive would be the goal. If you want to win at divorce, be the best beta suck-up you can be until you build the evidence you need - not just to influence the judge with your character, but to screw with her too. She's not going to soften up to Mr. Alpha. Be the pandering fool who begs and pleads for her not to leave and offers to buy her flowers every day for a year and give her chocolates on Tuesday just because it's Tuesday. Let her think she's in the position of power. That's when her guard goes down. That's when she says stupid things in front of the microphone in your pocket.

Also, comment periodically: "I know you hate me. I know you want to prove how horrible a husband I've been to you. I can't stop you if you want to do that, and I'm happy to accept the blame for anything I've done wrong. But I still love you. I don't want this to be a big fight [especially if you have kids, bring up how it could affect them]. I'm trying to get together all the documents you'll need to prove how much money we have, how much I earn, and we can figure out how to settle this in a way that I hope we could still be friends after this is over. And who knows, if after some time things start to cool down and you would want me back, I want to do this in a way that could leave that door open." Of course, she's going to scoff at that last part. But if she's even slightly on the fence about the divorce, what you're doing is nullifying her aggression in the divorce process, increasing your chances of settling on favorable terms by reducing her hostility toward you, and opening the lines of communication so you can try to settle between yourselves rather than paying your attorneys to do that negotiation for you.
Again, this strategy doesn't work on every wife and judge, but when it does work it's the best option possible. The thing is, you can't start with an alpha, hard-ball strategy and move to the beta strategy, but you can always go from beta to alpha in a divorce. Alpha to beta isn't believable. You won't be able to convince anyone that the softness you present is sincere or genuine if you've been a jerk for the first half. It comes off as trying to manipulate the court. But if you start beta and change to alpha later, the court just thinks, "Well, what did she expect? He tried to play nice, she wouldn't have it, she pushed him too it." You can always start with the beta strategy, though, and convert to the alpha strategy if that's not getting you very far. That said, hold out on the beta strategy for longer than you think you should because: (1) she needs to see the first few bills from her attorney before she recognizes the cost of her being the only one to want to fight hard, and (2) because sometimes women will test how sincere your beta-ness is, knowing you might be trying to play her to get a better settlement.

Multi-Lane Divorce Theory

Most mentally unstable and hostile women are preparing for a head-on collision with you in Lane A (Alpha). She's going to play the alpha, hard-ball strategy. If you've got a divorce 2.0 judge, you're not going to win in Lane A if you try to collide back. Don't fight fire with fire. Switch to Lane B (Beta) and put some road blocks in Lane A.

- Lane A is the direct and traditional emotional way to win a divorce case, which is when each side slings a bunch of mud and tries to convince the court that the other side's mud is worse. Her "mud" will be about how abusive you've been to her (whether it's true or not), how lazy you've been all the marriage, that you've been controlling, and that you've generally been absent and uninvolved. Your mud is going to be similar: she's lazy, has mental health problems, never held up her end of the house care, child rearing, etc. and that she wouldn't seek a (better) job when you urged her to. Statistically, I wouldn't bet a dime on winning in that type of a collision. Men are expected to treat women nicer than women to men.

- Lane B is the indirect and unconventional, yet legally secure statutory way to win a divorce case. Look up your state's statutes and assess the factors, then live by them as perfectly as possible. Alphas ignore the rules and do their own thing. Lane B litigants play exactly by the rules. This makes it very hard for a judge to rule against them and gives the judge easy justification for ruling in his favor because he knows he cannot be reversed for ruling consistently with the statutes. So, while Lane A is an appeal to the judge's emotions, Lane B is an appeal to his sensibilities and the law.

For spousal support, your state will have a list: "The court must consider the following factors: a ... b ... c ... d ... etc." The same thing will be true for child custody, parenting time, asset division, etc. Make sure you're fulfilling those factors better than she is. If your kids have a doctor's appointment, you take them. Talk to the school and make sure your number is the "first to call" on the list and hers is second. Create a spreadsheet that charts your spending for the past year and a half so that you can prove where all of your money has been going - and categorize it as to who spent what. Don't blame her for her excessive spending. Just use the exhibit to address your conservative spending. Let the court look at her column on the spreadsheet on its own. After all, you're not trying to sling mud here. You're simply trying to show that you're a responsible person who does right with his finances, takes care of his home, and is an upstanding parent to his children. Get all of your documents together. Make sure the numbers add up.

If you know she's racking up a lot of debt (or is likely to do so), look up your state's "de facto termination date" case law and figure out what factors the court will apply and start building a case for why the court shouldn't use the day of trial as the division date (thereby giving you half of all of that new debt) and should instead use a past date. Typical factors include: leaving on unfriendly terms, when you stopped living together, when you sought legal counsel, when the case was filed, when you started separating your assets, when you started segregating bill obligations between the two of you, whether or not either of you found a relationship outside the home, etc. You have to be able to show that these and other factors started before she started racking up the debt.

This is how you win on Lane B - by showing the court that you're better than she is, not by showing the court that she's worse than you are. In essence, you're proving that you're a high quality man, not that you married a low quality woman. If the judge has eyeballs in his sockets and your wife is even half as crazy and hostile as you think she is, he'll see it and she won't be able to hide it on the stand, as will be evidenced by all the mud she tries to sling - most of which won't be relevant anyway. Don't fight back. You can try to run both lanes at the same time, but it doesn't often go as well as one might think. If you travel on the low road, you're inherently not on the high road anymore. Due to biases, women can do both. You can't. Pick a lane.

Nullification Planning

To nullify her Lane A you simply have to taint any evidence she might throw at you. Now that you know she's recording you, leverage those to your advantage. Record yourself if you have to. Get her on record while she's off-guard acknowledging that she's not afraid of you or that she's looking forward to something you're going to do together soon. Put her in a good mood. Fake it if you have to.

I had a case recently where the wife was crazy. She broke the court order dozens of times. She would send e-mails to my client acknowledging what she did. But she always ended those e-mails with something like, "I know this may not technically work within our parental plan, but I hope you agree that this is what is best for the children. I only want to do what's in their best interests. If the plan isn't accounting for that, maybe we need to talk about changing a few things." So, when she went back to change the parenting plan and my client wanted to bring up all the evidence proving she was in contempt of court, how do you think that evidence is going to play out? Judge: "Yeah, I can see she violated the plan, but as she said in your own evidence, it's because this plan isn't working. That's why you're back into court. This isn't a contempt issue; it's just evidence that the plan needs to be modified." That was a bitter pill for my client to swallow. Fortunately we had 3 experts all testifying that my client should get custody, so it's a slam dunk on other grounds anyway (order pending).
My point is simply that she did everything she could to nullify and taint any evidence my client would try to present. Every audio recording, every e-mail, every text message, every phone call, etc. They always included in the beginning or the end, something like each of the following phrases, which I encourage you to emulate too:

- "I'm genuinely grieving at the loss of our marriage and that things are going this way. I really do love you and wish that we could cooperate and make peace through all of this."

- "Although we have our differences, I know that you mean well. I hope you can see that I mean well in what I'm trying to do too."

- "I understand why you're so frustrated. I would be too if I only had your perspective. That said, I still think this is what we should do, and I hope you can see from my perspective a little bit as well."

- "I know we're not going to see eye-to-eye, but I hope you know I'm just trying to look out for the best interests of our children."

- "I know you're trying to back me into a corner so you can use these e-mails as evidence. I'm not happy about it, but I understand the strategy you're trying to use. Nevertheless, I have to stick to my principles. This is what I think is best/fair/appropriate and I really hope you would be willing to consider this and work toward resolving our differences rather than building a case for court."

- "I know you are filled with hate for me, but I still love you, even if I know now that it's not going to work out between us."

Most states have a rule that the context of any evidence has to be presented when the other side asks for it. So, if she presents the first two sentences of an e-mail showing how you make stupid decisions or that you admitted to something that looks bad, you can force her to reveal the rest of the e-mail. When the court reads these types of phrases, it often significantly dampens and nullifies the impact of what she's trying to prove because they believe you have a greater genuineness and sincerity behind why you said the other thing in the first place.

It doesn't actually matter if it's true or not, as in the case of the mom I referenced above. One of her conversations was about not taking her son to hockey practice because she had to go to a funeral for a co-worker. My client was unavailable, but offered to have his new wife drive the kid and the mom refused because she didn't like the new woman. Then my client's mom drove in to town (4+ hours) and offered to drive him to practice, but the mom still refused. Instead, the kid sat in after-school-care for 3 hours and missed his hockey practice ... and the mom wrote, "I know you don't understand why I'm not in agreement with what you're proposing. I wish you could see things from my perspective and that we could understand each other like we used to. But until we can learn to communicate better, I think we just need to trust each other that we both want what's best for our kids." It's a very vague statement and offered no actual justification for her idiotic refusal to cooperate, but it sure made my client look like an idiot for making an issue out of it. For the record, she later admitted on cross-examination that she didn't have a good reason for not using my client's wife or mom to get her kid to practice, other than that she simply didn't know them well enough yet.

CONCLUSION

In short, there's value in being alpha if you're trying to attract a woman. But if you're trying to impress someone who lives in blue pill ideologies, like your judge or a guardian ad litem, or even your wife's attorney (and trust me, if her own attorney believes you're a stand-up nice guy, that's a huge advantage) ... sometimes you have to conform to what they want to see in you. You're not trying to convince these people to have sex with you. To that end, being more alpha might be more attractive to your STBE, but obviously you weren't doing it well enough to keep her from divorcing you, so don't expect more of the same to change her opinion about you. Try a different strategy in the divorce.
Thank you. No really, THANK YOU.

by 1965Chevelle | February 12, 2016 | Link

Last October I reached the point where I was tired of my marriage being an ongoing source of frustration and emotional pain. I have been a “Good Man” and my wife has always been a keeper, but our marriage just wasn’t right. Both of us were trying to “do the right thing”, but it wasn’t working for me, and I’m sure it really wasn’t working for her either. Too many years of swallowing conservative Christian Blue Pills and “conventional wisdom” had brought me to a place of being a dark shell of a man, and something had to change. I did NOT like where we were.

I started my search for, "something" that might help, and I found MRP in December. To be blunt, it made my head explode: anger, self-loathing, surprise, regret, hope, conviction, a few internal temper tantrums, you name it. Then? Then self-assessment, planning, action, some spurts, stutters, success, and outright failures. However, for the first time in a LONG time I had hope, and I was seeing some (immediate) positive changes in our marriage - no way I'm going back to the old model... I wish I had a video camera for some of those first interactions under the new paradigm; I’d love to replay some of her expressions and responses – especially when she tried to shit test me while we were in the shower and I just smiled at her and walked out (thankfully there were clean towels in the dryer)!

Now? Now I'm almost ten weeks into lifting again. I’d forgotten how much I enjoyed that during my 20's. Praise God for all the bodybuilding I did in the past, and for trying to stay in shape as best I could all these years, because the bulk is coming back FAST. I'm running stairs on the days I don't lift... My youngest boy saw me flex in the mirror just after returning from my workout last Thursday; his eyes grew huge and he exclaimed, “Wow Dad! You look like Captain America!” My wife’s head snapped up from folding laundry on the bed and I kid you not, I think she was actually panting.

Now? Now I'm implementing what I have been reading, and looking forward to reading all of the other books on the growing list. I also eating up MRP - it’s like being in Man College. THANK YOU.

Now? Now I’m setting more and more of the pace at home and at work. I have a modest personal development plan for 2016. Baby steps, but steps nonetheless.

Now? Now I'm dressing better - just a little bit more each week. All of a sudden, EVERYONE out there treats me better. The only drawback is that my pants are getting a little baggy and my shirts are starting to get tighter. I’m gonna have to replace a goodly section of my wardrobe in the near future.

Now? I have had the most frank month of communication with my wife in the history of our marriage. Good grief that’s liberating.

Now? Holy crap! Our bedroom wasn’t dead by any stretch, but compared to what’s been happening in the last weeks it was a corpse. I had no idea she had that in her. She has also upped her game in the self-care department: she has always been an attractive athletic woman who turns heads, but lately she has returned to the knockout that I met and married.

Now? I just saw my wife make THE biggest leap ahead in her personal life that I NEVER thought I would see, and, it was an element of my change that was the catalyst. Better still, she knows it and is genuinely grateful to me for it. (No shit, she killed a huge demon).

Now... Now I am committed to getting just a little bit better every day and passing that lifestyle on to my boys as well.

Thank you for the manifold wisdom and resources that all of you have collected here. It’s a lifesaver.

Once again, THANK YOU.
This is going to be long and a primer only. It should get you started in looking at your lifts and start dialing things in.

Lifting is at the core of what we do as men. I think it’s essential. Socrates said:

No man has the right to be an amateur in the matter of physical training. It is a shame for a man to grow old without seeing the beauty and strength of which his body is capable of.

This is more dialog as there are a lot of men here that have experience, and each have developed a bit differently. There are a couple professional trainers that I am aware of so they may also weigh in.

In my 20+ years of lifting I listened to a lot of people and refined my techniques. When I started there was none of this knowledge of mobility work, nor the idea of perfect form. Yet back then the idea of hitting 900+ pounds on a lift as unheard of. Despite my experience, for years I would reach the 450 range and then have to stop due to pain or injury. I thought maybe I just couldn’t do this sport. Then about 2 years ago I got tired of it. I decided to look for an expert.

Within the first 6 months I was hitting near 500. A year later? Up past 650. Form, and proper development of the joint is an absolute must if you want big numbers. I had strength what I didn't have was a dialed in form, prop accessory muscle work. Gear does nothing for this. Supplements help but they won’t alone do it. You want big lifts or to continue without injury you need to learn some basic physiology and start applying it to your sport.

The first area I want to discuss is your shoulders. Over time i may post something about squats and deadlifts (deads are my jam). I am reading a lot of shoulder injuries on the sub. Not surprising since 93% of shoulder injuries in powerlifting (which is what SL 5x5 is) last over 4 weeks and the shoulder is the most common. Tackling this head on is important. I myself am nursing an AC Joint separation, unrelated to lifting but it does have it’s effect. Shoulder injuries are mainly due to improper form and improper development.

SL 5x5 is an excellent beginner program. It gets you strong pretty quick if you are religious about it and it will get you to where you want to be in order to branch out. Going the muscle head (ripped as fuck) route of the ironmonger route (power/strong man). What isn’t talked about is how to prepare your body for heavier weight or even the constant toll you are going to be putting on yourself. It takes its toll on your joints. Despite what the crowd says if you have been a fat body all your life just hitting the weights is not going to help you develop over time. You need to approach this methodically if you want to continue pain free.

I’d argue that above 350 and you need to start supplements. Calcium, magnesium (this is leached from you when you lift heavy), and zinc. In addition to all this you need to start strengthening the shoulder. you need to add accessory muscle work to your program. I know what the god of SL says, that doing these heavy lifts also improves this, BUT it only gets you so far. Here is my typical shoulder/Chest workout as an example:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Exercise</th>
<th>Sets x Reps</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Chin up grip lat pulldowns</td>
<td>4 x 12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palms down, wide grip, chest supported row</td>
<td>4 x 8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inclined rear delt swings</td>
<td>4 x 12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Standing OHP</td>
<td>4 x 3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Floor Press</td>
<td>4 x 3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dips</td>
<td>4 x Failure</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hyperextensions</td>
<td>4 x 20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plate crunches</td>
<td>4 x 20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bench Press</td>
<td>4 x 4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inclined Press</td>
<td>4 x 5</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This changes on my second day of Chest/Shoulders by adding

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Exercise</th>
<th>Sets x Reps</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>V Bar Lat Pulldowns</td>
<td>4x 8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palms up Chest Supported row</td>
<td>4x15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TRX Y</td>
<td>4xFailure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

With my AC joint issues I don’t bench too hard. The emphasis of this workout is to keep shoulder stability. I also have a good 20-30 minutes of mobility stuff my coach has me doing. This is designed to improve lat and pectoral strength to provide shoulder stability during heavy lifts. Weakness in these areas will most definitely impinge your improvements as you go higher and higher in weight. You can tell you have issues with these muscles groups by looking in a mirror. If you are shoulders are titled anteriorly or posteriorly (front and back for you non-smart people) then you have weak areas you need to address otherwise you will begin to experience shoulder pain at some point.

Shoulders rotated forward are common for lifters. Which is why I wear a shoulder retraction harness around the gym.

Let’s discuss your form. I could go into great detail here. Benching is probably a far more technical form then any of the other lifts, but I want to stay focused on shoulders. We all assume we know how to bench. Men have been doing for decades. Well again if you want to go higher without pain then you have to give proper consideration to form.

The scapula must be retracted when benching. Achieve this by squeezing them together as if you are trying to get them to touch. Doing this gives the shoulder stability. When they are not retracted, your entire shoulder is not securely stabilized by the bench. This means that the shoulder joint is solely responsible for the support of the bar load. You don’t feel this at the typical 225-315 but go higher and it’s little wonder why there is pain. Your joints just can’t support all that weight alone.

You need to assess your shoulder mobility and it’s complete range of motion. You must be able to rotate the shoulder in its complete range of motion without pain. If you are tight, lack flexibility, and are just in general stiff then you have issues you need to work out. There is a difference between flexibility and mobility. Both are important to work on.

I have always said I can tell someone who has lifted. There is an appearance about them. Most of it is from having these tight areas, and lack of flexible joints. With shoulders most lifters are rotated in some way, forwards or back.

Here are some good resources to check out.

Lifting with AC joint Pain

Good Shoulder Warm Up Routine

Bench Press Technique

Like I said this is a primer. You need to do your own research and understand the details of what you are doing. I have always believed that how a man approaches lifting is how he approaches life. Have to take care of the little things before you can do the big things.
Do you have your "fuck you" money?
by rurpe | December 23, 2015 | Link

When I was younger, I worked at a terrible fast food joint washing dishes. The job sucked but I did it because I wanted money to take a trip for spring break with my friends. I worked nights after school and on the weekends and saved much of what I earned.

Spring break rolls around and I ask for some time off to take my trip. My "boss" expected me to wash dishes over spring break and he told me that I could not take the time off work. I simply told him that I would not be working but would be available the next week if he wanted me to come in. And then I left and had a blast at the beach for a week with friends. He called two days after I returned and let me pick the days I wanted to work.

A few years later I was working at another low skilled job and the higher ups decided to move my group to another location across town. My coworkers flipped out. Some were crying, others had genuine fear in their eyes. Some could not fathom how they would continue to live if they had to drive an extra 40 miles a day. I had enough money in the bank to live for a few weeks so I just told them I would just find another job and continued working while they cried.

A few years after that, in a much better job, a few coworkers and I were asked to provide 24/7 support to customers overseas. This meant that it would be normal to troubleshoot technical issues at 3am from someone who barely speaks English. My coworkers immediately agreed to take on the additional work, but I did not. I expected to be compensated for the additional hours and inconvenience. I knew I had enough money in the bank to live for a few months and did not "need" this job to survive. I received a raise and time and a half for my after hours calls but left because I did not want to answer my phone at 3am.

When most people daydream aloud about "fuck you" money they use numbers in the hundreds of thousands or in the millions. These people are delusional. You only need enough to cover your obligations for a set period of time. When I was 16, this number was in the hundreds. Today, it is in the thousands since I know I only need to take care of the bills and can cut to the bone if needed.

I'm seeing a lot of posts here about finances and budgeting. In order to get your own "fuck you" money, you need to create a budget and some goals and then work to it. I have found that it is easier to save or cut expenses by trying to identify what is "needed" vs "wanted". For example, we recently killed out cable. It was something we wanted but not something we needed. This is a big shift for a lot of people who are used to spending every dime they have and is really big shift when this new worldview is imposed on them by a spouse. In order to be successful, they have to be on board with the vision for less debt and more "fuck you" money. Here are some books that have helped my household.

1. "Your money or your life". If you need a last minute gift idea for your wife, this is it (you should read it too). Fair warning: This sometimes has a "new age" vibe with terms like "life energy" but the idea is solid: When you spend 65 on another pair of shoes, you are literally exchanging $X$ hours of your life. Some things may not be worth the trade off.

2. "Total Money Makeover". Once you both agree to change your habits, this book gives you a clear path forward. Fair warning: The book has a slight Christian slant but mostly avoids being preachy and is only slightly annoying.

tl;dr: "Fuck you money" is a critical for "outcome independence" in other areas of your life. I have it and you don't because you are too lazy to read a post.
So, you decided to try trying eh?
by RPeed | December 9, 2019 | Link

Maybe it’s just me but the sub seems a little quiet over the holidays. Without even a low effort lifting post to fill in the time. The latter is probably not a bad thing as lifting is easy and distracts people (like me) from working on harder things and this is reflected in the disproportionate upvotes lifting posts get.

Really the whole lifting posts thing is pretty gay... so I guess I should preface the following with a firm: “no homo”.

With that formality out of the way, welcome to my low effort lifting post!

NB: low effort as I write from well within my comfort zone: I do hope you read and apply the tips here.

Intro

If you’re subbed here no doubt you’ve at least signed up to a gym. Maybe you’re a beginner who still believes in a mystic connection between deep squats and... everything and that Rippetoe is a god descended in human form or maybe you’ve already torn down that idol and are currently obsessed with getting enough face pulls in. You almost certainly identify as a powerlifter - though you’ll likely never compete - and, since we all have to start somewhere, I am not going to try and change your mind here.

What I did do instead is put together a few things you can use this week without interfering with your 5x5, 5/3/1, n-Suns, GZCL, Candito or whatever.

Many are going to sound dubious. In fact, some of these nuggets are so small I’m going to highlight them lest they slip by.

Just try them.

If they work, keep doing them. If not stop.

Air Bending

Before we rock out with our cocks out, a PSA on the number of injuries I personally have had: none. I have never injured myself in ten years of weightlifting. I owe that to bracing and minimal volume.

Learn and re-learn to brace. Gigabytes have been recorded on it and I won't reproduce it here. Just study it and try and improve on it every session really.

What I do want to talk about now is “oxygenating your blood”. No idea if this is the medically correct term but I mean a method by which you increase the oxygen in your blood and thereby are able to hold your breath longer.

I know of three methods for this:

1. Wim Hof’s;
2. David Blaine’s;
3. Rpeed’s:
   - exhale forcefully until lungs 110% empty.
   - Inhale - a huge breath in should now come reflexively
   - Hold that for a couple of heartbeats
   - Repeat above for 10-30 breaths.

Take ten minutes to learn this superpower and then let’s take a walk-through of the lifts you’re likely doing each week.

Seriously: just skip to the one you’re doing today/tomorrow, give it a try and let me know how you do. Why not?

Squat day

So it’s leg day but we both know you’re not going to leg press.

Wear a hoodie today. Just try it.

If you have lifting shoes, wear em. If not, the flattest, hardest sole you can find. And if you don’t have those, I would much rather kick mine off and squat barefoot than puffy, running type sneakers. It really does make a difference.

You should wear wrist wraps and knee sleeves (not wraps!). If you don’t have those, it’s not the end of the world but get a cheap pair off Amazon and use them next time. While you’re on Amazon, order a non-slip drawer liner and some “nose tork”. We’ll need those later.

Try and get 400-600mg of caffeine about 30-60min prior lifting. This can be some expensive pre-workout or just coffee.

Now we’re at the gym, hoodie on (hood down please) and hopefully getting some cold sweats from caffeine.

General warmup advice: please don’t be the guy that foam rolls prior to lifting. I have done this out of curiosity and seen an immediate drop in all my lifts. For similar reasons: don’t do any static stretching prior lifting.

Warming up to squat: if you’re diagnosed with, or confident you have a specific mobility issue, then of course address it in the least retarded way possible but ideally you should just walk in the gym, go straight up to a rack and load the bar with about 50% of your top set.

Set the bar at sternum height and walk into it. Like literally bump into it.

Put your hood up now btw.

Grip the bar with your index fingers on the rings. This may be wider than you’re used to but just give it a try.

Duck directly under the bar. Not to the left or to the right, directly under it.

Breath and brace.

Bend the bar, hard, over your back.

Breath and brace harder.

If you don’t know how to brace: take a deep breath in your belly and shove your tongue into the roof of your mouth.

Make it a big breath: you’re going to hold it from BEFORE unracking until as many reps as you can.

Stand up straight. Don’t “arch out of the rack”. Just straight up.

Walk it out, let the plates settle, and squat. I have no specific rep goal here but will do 3-5 on that same breath.

Do 3-4 sets like this.

No need to ramp up: just keep the weight at 50% of your working set.

Now load the bar with your working weight and walk around the gym oxygenating your blood.

Try this: slap your quads, hams, lower back and ass hard.

Finally approach the bar. Now one last thing here: try a loose limbed approach. Like instead of marching head down towards the bar, make a conscious effort to have a loose limbed walk. "Fight" or "flight" is a powerful instinct but so is "freeze". Try consciously loosening your limbs somewhat, as you walk up to the bar, to lower your level of "psyche-up", while maintaining focus, and see if your body "unfreezes".

Then you bump into the bar, set up as before and start repping out, holding your first breath.

I don’t want to confuse you during the set but if you fail in the hole, it’s likely psychological (or your form is seriously retarded).

Your real sticking point should be slightly above parallel and there’s a way to attack it:

Let your knees “wink” in at the bottom (discussed in point 9 here). That should let you ascend a little more cleanly. Then you’ll be entering the true sticking point - usually 2-3 inches above parallel. All you do then is:

Fight to get your hips under the bar as early as possible. That’s it.

I am so conscious of this that my squat slows down perceptively here. Then once I’m through, I almost “pop” up to the top with a rattle of plates.

What’s happening there is my knees are pushing out again, my hips are pushing forward and my traps are pushing back on the bar and my elbows are trying to get under it - glad we’re wearing wrist wraps. But think “hips under bar” and it should come together. Discussed in depth here.

It's not that hard to remember: drop, wink, grind, pop and you did your first rep.

Keep going fucker: we’re not done.

Keep holding that same breath and keep repping out.

Once you run out of air, take another breath

Hold it and rep out more.

Take another breath

Rep out.

If you need a little more time between these "clusters", you may take three shallow breaths between them but no more.

Repeat until you have to rack it.

For me this is when my grind through the sticking point slows down to a snail's pace and a fly on the bar would have caused me to miss it. But I never actually fail the rep and if you taped it, each rep would look virtually the same. I decide whether I can "commit to the rep" or not. If you can't commit to grinding it all the way through, stop (Don't go 'eewwww" and sink limply into the hole cos you gave up).

Now that you followed those tips, I'm confident you either did a fixed set a hell of a lot faster and easier than ever or added 2 or 3 reps onto a AMRAP set. You might even have turned a high rep set into a true “widowmaker”. In which case enjoy the white hair.
Bench day

So for sure you’re in your hoodie again. You got your caffeine earlier too and you start oxygenating your blood while you set everything up. Take that cheap, non-slip drawer liner purchased from Bezos earlier, throw it on a bench and it’s time to hit your bench warmup

Key to this is tiring your rear delts somewhat. You’ve got three options here in order of my preference:

1. Row or chin. Not to failure but fairly heavy;
2. Stretch them, hard, at least 60 seconds - just like gym class;
3. When you lay on the bench, with bar securely in uprights, pull the bar down isometrically (hard) towards you and hold for like 10-20 seconds (Set up afterwards if this distracts you or puts you out of position).

Maybe just try all three the first time.

If you need all the help you can get you might want to scrape your pecs: dig your fingertips into the fibres of your pec near your shoulder and rub across them, perpendicular to the muscle strands for like 20 rubs. Same where the pec meets the sternum, then again on the other side.

Now get on the bench.

Set up just be consistent with your normal grip width but try a bull dog grip.

This is key for me as my hands pretty much look like this. YMMV.

You should know to tuck your shoulders back but try tucking your chin down too. This lifts my sternum and puts the weight on my traps.

Finally, if you don't "get" leg drive, imagine four bathrooms scales underneath you:

1. Left foot;
2. Right foot;
3. Butt;
4. Traps.

Imagine that the three scales under your feet and traps each carry 33% of your weight and that the one under your butt is just wavering between 0 and 1% i.e. the lightest of contacts.

Now take that huge breath, tongue to the roof of the mouth, and unrack.

Get to it. Start repping. OK let the plates settle, but then get to it. You’re on the clock, burning energy.

I find “belly to bar” a good cue for holding everything together for me. Then I just press as hard as I can.

This is the one lift where I’ll do the traditional warmup pyramid of 50%, 60%, 80% before a top set.

All your warm-ups and work sets should have the same setup but on the top set you're repping out on one breath, re-breathing and repeating.

Deadlift day

Good news is you don’t need the hoodie today (Good day for a tank).

But you do have to wash your hands. Thoroughly. Full on, aseptic technique: front, back, around the thumb, edge of hand, in between fingers. Pretend you're going to do an emergency appendectomy on your boss. If you have that alcohol based, anti-septic gel, even better - use some afterwards.

Now your hands are stripped of any oil, dry them and put chalk over them. Not too heavy. If you don’t have chalk, get it. And if your gym doesn’t allow it, get liquid chalk. Then add straps if you use them (or would that be cheating? Ha!).

Now if I said to cut down on warm-ups before, dead lifting is ultra minimal for me:

I do a few reps with 1 plate, 2 plate, 3 plates, then straight onto the working set.

I firmly believe, the stiffer you are, the better (giggity). Yes, you will need to prepare your mind for heavy weights somewhat but try to ration out the sets.

This can be a mind-fuck because your last warm-up may well feel shit and heavy. Just trust me here. Anyway we can get a little more out of those few warm-ups without taxing ourselves:

IF you know you have a major fault. Try emphasizing it deliberately in your warm-up sets.

So if, for example, you sometimes don’t keep the bar tight on the way up, deliberately set up with the bar over your toes and let it hang out through the lift.

On your next set, lift as you normally would and it’ll be glued to you.

I don’t know why this works but it works and if you have major technical faults in the other lifts, it’ll work there too. This is totally worth throwing in every once in a while anyway as the learning effect is retained for long periods of time.

I also get a little out of back or front squatting prior probably because it stretches out, and therefore weakens the opposition of my hip flexors and activates my core. If you feel like you must do something more then give that a try too.
Now you've got your work weight loaded. Oxygenate your blood as usual.

You should be good to go now but if the weight is particularly intimidating I've got a couple more tricks for you:

1. Step off a bench or box and stick the landing;
2. Sniff that nose tork.

Both give a temporary, but significant, boost in performance.

Now you're ready to rock. No comment on form, all dead lifts are beautiful, but I do put the bar way, way down in my spider hands. Like in the second knuckle. It might work for you. Then hold that breath and go. When you need to breath, do it at the TOP of the lift as many times as you can. Eventually when you're gassed you might get a couple more clusters (or just single reps) from breathing at the bottom. Don't stop until you get enough.

Press

I do this with "0" warmup, after squatting or deadlifting. Like literally just take a 3-5 minutes after deadlifting and then press 135-175lbs for reps.

Usually it “feels” off but the performance is always there.

But for you this is a good time to try an “over warm-up”. This is where you put a little more, like 105% or 110% of your work set on the bar. Do one or two clean reps. Then strip the weight down and do your work set. It should feel easier.

It’s easy to get this wrong though so best just go a little over what you plan for a high rep set. Again, if it works you can try with the other lifts. You can even do a slow negative with 110% of your 1RM on bench, prior to a PR attempt, for a proven boost.

Then just oxygenate your blood, like usual, take the bulldog grip and huge breath before unracking, held through as many breaths as possible.

Chins ups

Stand on something to take your grip, as opposed to jumping up to the bar. Supposedly a climber's belt is much better to add weights to than a traditional weighted belt but I've never tried. But anyway, when you pull down, pretend you're elbowing someone behind you in the face. Chin ups suck.

Post workout

After working out, try some extreme stretching. I get that stretching is about the least exciting thing every, so just do me a favor and start out by trying 90 seconds in a deep, deep dip position for your chest and triceps after benching for 3 or 4 weeks. You will see a big change, for sure.

And that's it bro’s. That's all I got for you today. It's not meant to be the greatest of all time, just a few tidbits that are likely not on your radar but I can promise you everything here yields tangible results.

Good luck out there. Don't pass out or have an aneurysm. Wanna see how thick, solid and tight you can get.
Transactional vs. Validational Sex

by Rollo-Tomassi | March 8, 2018 | Link

---

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2018/03/07/transactional-vs-validational-sex/

Excerpt:

Validational Sex

When women look for that Alpha Seed in their peak ovulatory (proliferative) phase, the sex they seek is a desired sex with a man who meets evolutionary criteria. He’s the ‘hawt’ guy, or the man who leaves a woman with an perception of danger or excitement. A lot of men who don’t meet this criteria have a tendency to over-exaggerate this type of man as the ‘Alpha Chad’ and make a ridiculous parody of him as an ego protection mechanism for themselves. Let me state for the record here that every aspect and adjective that this type of guy embodies is mitigated by conditions and contexts. It is just as likely that this conventionally masculine dominant guy is only so according to his most immediate social situation. So spare me the “Chad Thundercock” anxieties.

The sex that women give “enthusiastic consent” for is validational for them. The easy assessment here is that women have a genuine desire to mate with conventionally masculine men who look and act the part – yes, behavioral congruency is vital. If you follow the research women consciously and unconsciously will actively put themselves into environments where the likelihood of their meeting a dominant masculine man who most closely matched that masculine ideal when they are in estrus. They openly and discreetly look of arousal cue from men who best embody what can only be described as Alpha Seed.

I should also add that women in “satisfying relationships” (meaning LTRs where a woman is still very hot for her husband/boyfriend) report an increase in sexual desire (proceptivity) for that guy during this phase. A lot of guys mistakenly think ANY woman will want to seek out extra-pair mating (cheating) opportunities when they’re in estrus. This is only true if a woman isn’t into her current man.

I don’t want to get too lost in the descriptions here. Rather, I want to focus on the associative feelings women get in and after having sex with that Alpha man during estrus. I would argue that Alpha Widows are made in the estrus phase. This is the sex women want to have and are enthusiastic in both the hunt and the act itself. This is largely (presumedly) the sex that men have with their wives-to-be before they marry. It’s this validational sex, the sex that women fantasize about, that men and women want to get back to once they are committed to each other monogamously but now have a dead bedroom. This sex validates a woman’s ego in that it proves to herself that a man of this SMV caliber would want to pin her to the bed and have marathon sex with her. Remember, the latent purpose of this sex, on this side of Hypergamy, is to access the sperm from men with high reproductive value as defined by what our evolved nature predisposes women to be aroused by. Validational sex is sex by choice and genuine desire, and is satisfying on both a psychological level and an evolutionary level.

Transactional Sex

One of the benefits of a concealed estrus is that it allows women a few luxuries. One of these was the ability to confuse men of their paternity. Today this confusion is little more difficult because we’ve got DNA figured out well enough to make accurate assessments, but in our evolutionary past it was important to trick cuckolded fathers into second guessing whether a child was his or not before he killed it and impregnated a woman on his own (this is also why men evolved mate guarding behaviors).

The other advantage of concealed estrus was essentially prostitution. Now, to pretty this up a bit, lets say that women who were sexual with men outside of their fertility window found that sex could be leveraged with non-Alpha men (men they didn’t want to have children with) to encourage them to help with a lot of the chores more Alpha men were less willing (but not entirely unwilling) to do. Enter transactional sex.

As mentioned, the most overt form of transactional sex is prostitution, but it’s impolite to call every woman a whore. In fact it’s impolite to even imply a woman may be having sex for other reasons than validational sex. Today women are contemplating whether or not transactional sex is itself rape since it technically meets the definition of rape (sex women don’t want to have). I discussed this “grey area sex” recently in another essay, but it’s interesting to see women wrestle with transactional sex in an era where the Future is Female and women ought to only have the (validational) sex they want to enthusiastically have.

For most men (i.e the 80% Beta men) transactional sex is where the rubber meets the road. In fact, I’d argue that for most Beta men transactional sex is the only definition of sex they ever really know. That’s kind of sad to think about, but most men never really experience the unfettered feral lust of a woman they’ve chosen to spend the rest of their lives with. I got into this in Saving the Best and Hats Off to the Bull, but I think it’s important for the average man today to acknowledge that it’s highly likely that their wives have shared parts of themselves with, and have lost all inhibitions with, men in their sexual pasts they may never know anything about. That’s a cold bucket of reality a lot of men who unplug from all this have to confront.

Marriage today is almost entirely predicated on on the transactional sex side of Hypergamy. I’m not saying it has to be, nor am I saying it always is, but I’m fairly comfortable in speculating that for most married women sex is reward she uses in the operant conditioning of her husband. And the very fact that this is effective with most husbands throws the power dynamic and Frame of the relationship firmly over to the wife. This has the effect of disqualifying that man from ever (or very rarely) being a candidate for validational sex within that marriage. And this too is another aspect of the transactional sex dynamic that modern feminists are contemplating today – if a woman doesn’t want to have sex with her husband, but does anyway, is it rape? But again, NAMALT, not all marriages are like this or have to be like this. I would also argue that a confident man whom a woman admires, who she recognizes as being above her SMV even if slightly and who has internalized Red Pill awareness within that marriage needn’t be doomed to transactional “duty” sex in his marriage.
Guys

Lots of crap tactical stuff lately. I suspect many of you read these, and many start writing, then do not post silly questions because you already know the answer. I’m talking to you: guys who are on the hard path already, and are seeing enough results to know what questions to ask and what not to. Rule of thumb: if your question is of a tactical / situational nature, chances are you already should know the answer or the answer is in the side bar reading materials. If you were to truly internalize those you wouldn’t be asking silly tactical questions.

So a few observations re sex:

- The mindset shift you want to attain is that of rewarding her with your dick. She is such a good woman that she’s worthy of you. Play that role and that dynamic and her hamster will work overtime to please you. In and out of the bedroom.

- Give her an orgasm or two before you come. This is crucial. As she gets close to coming, grab her face, tell her how amazing, sexy, slutty etc, she is. Ask her if she wants to cum. Tell her how much she needs you. Then tell her not yet. Play with her like she’s a toy to enjoy. You can do without her. But life with her is more enjoyable. Get to the point of rewarding her with sex with you: mentally and physically.

- Learn to view sex that way: an after thought and a side effect of living a mission-focused life. It doesn’t matter if you have sex or not. Sex is like watching a movie, playing a game, watching a game, having a drink, relaxing, Netflix etc. It’s basically pure entertainment (and frankly a bit of fun art in my opinion when done well). It won’t deter you from what’s truly important to you in your life.

- Talk to her as she cums telling her how she’s such an amazing woman and you’re now (as a result!) giving her your dick. “Release”/ allow her to orgasm when you want and after she waited for a bit and you’ve built enough anticipation. She exists to please you. Reinforce that dynamic. She earns your dick and her orgasms with you. You are generous and are giving this pleasure to her.

- If it’s not enthusiastic sex, trick your mind to not want it. That’s what sex-satisfied means. And what we talk about around here. It’s very subtle, and you have to fake that state in case indeed you’ve suffered a dry patch. The moment you seam more eager, more horny, more needy, is the moment you’re a beta bitch. To your own damn self. She of course has a dog’s smell for that state. Just like she has for a true alpha, IDGAF, OI state. That’s what a high-value man is. That’s who you want to be. The longer you’ve been in a marriage where you’ve accepted sub par performance from yourself, in bed, from her - the harder it’s going to be to turn the ship around. The less slack you tolerate from the outset (in the lucky case you’ve found red pill early in your LTR/ marriage) the easier it will be to set the right frame for your relationship. To paraphrase Jocko/ Leif Babin “It’s not what you preach it’s what you tolerate. “

So go live your mission. Become someone worthy. Then have fun with your woman, when you need a break from your hard work of making a difference in the world. It’s that simple.
MRP hazard: When IDGAF becomes too real by spexer | November 14, 2016 | Link

Sometimes the Red Pill still leads to the end of your marriage, and not because you can't fix it.

There is a real danger after your transformation where you honestly are no longer interested. You now can have sex whenever you want, and she is the one making moves on you because... your passion and desire for her...is not there.

I have witnessed posters here share their surprise at this unforeseen result, and others who either stop trying because they don't care, or stop giving a fuck and take on plates and other high risk behavior. Often this leads to the same result - divorce.

So be aware this might be on your path. I have recently found myself on this trail, and I welcome feedback on how to captain out of these waters.

Many factors that I see that lead MRP'ers such as myself to this place of disillusionment:

- After the pill dissolves and you see women for how they really are, there is a loss of attraction as the mystery disappears. Too much time in the manosphere might turn you even more bitter, encouraging an even more pessimistic view of females. This hurts your natural attraction to them.
- as you let go of the beta blue perspective, and realize there is no true love, and that AWALT - your blue heart breaks and your bond with your woman weakens.
- as you silence your emotional outbursts, and stop sharing your innermost fears and failings to instead be the strong silent oak the family needs, your connection to her becomes weaker. Any emotional codependency also dissipates.
- After doing the work (lifting, reading, working on social skills, flirting, gaining confidence, getting shit done and becoming alpha) you see your SMV skyrocket, and as you look down at hers, there is a loss of attraction.
- After year+ effort into your transformation and taking responsibility for the problems between the two of you, It becomes more and more difficult to not see the remaining issues to be problems with her, or to grow increasingly frustrated with where she still resists the corrections you are implementing. This builds resentment and clarifies her flaws that you cannot change. Your attraction and interest in making this work takes another hit.
- with your higher SMV you find yourself with ample opportunity to have something with other women. These other women suggest an easier answer for short time fulfillment. They also reveal that you could have a fresh start with someone better. And if you end up plating one of these, then returning to the less fulfilling sex with your wife is not appealing.

Those are a few thoughts on the routes that get you to I DONT GIVE A FUCK ANYMORE- WHY AGAIN MAKE THIS WORK?
I personally have had great success with MRP.

Finding myself here at IDGAF Avenue could be as simple as finding the strength and discipline to do another workout set after a year plus at the iron temple. Maybe it is just a momentary case of being burned out.

Or it could be a more complex philosophical quandary of how to find and maintain love, passion and purpose in marriage when you refuse to wear rose colored (blue?) glasses. thoughts?
Lurkers or noobs:

When I first came here, I did the same as you. I lurked in reading the top posts. Combed through thousands of words for information to learn what MRP was. Maybe I started the sidebar a bit. I kept seeing flaired people here telling people to "STFU, Lift and sidebar". I spent countless hours reading through past OYS and reading their stories hoping that they would be in a similar situation I was in and I would find a path to fix things through them. I pondered whether to join in the weekly thread where people read about all your shortcomings and sometimes achievements. I didn't have many achievements to speak of. I did not want to post because I was truthfully afraid of starting it for real. I could continue to dabble in the sidebar forever... but somewhere, deep down, I knew that if I was going to succeed I needed to be held accountable.

Before I posted in OYS, the only person accountable to me was... me. And how did that turn out? Not so great, man. I wasn't happy at all with things. The person that I should be accountable to was me, but I was so fucked up myself I did what I was afraid to do. I posted to OYS.

The first comment I ever got? "Are you a beanstalk?" (thanks /u/weakandsensitive)

All my worst fears, confirmed. I was just here to be made fun of. How was that going to help??? I knew I wasn't the man I wanted to be. Yet here I was, attempting a path that would maybe make me a better man and the first thing I get is ridicule?

It's all the design, faggots. But let me tell you the beauty in all of that... I could chose to think this random internet stranger was just being a fucking dick to me, I could choose to ignore it, or I could choose to evaluate his comment. So I chose the latter - to evaluate this comment against my own ego and plan. You know what? He was right, and it changed my plan. I shed a little bit of ego that day. That's what MRP is designed to do. Guide you - if you want to work hard for it - to a place where your ego never gets in your way.

Somewhere along my journey of just grinding, and trying really fucking hard because I really did care about myself and my wife (gasp!) and my children (of course!)... some comments in my OYS from a man here drew my attention. I think he understood what I was trying to do, and something he said helped me get to a better place. If I hadn't posted in OYS, I never would have gotten that help. This man through his own patience and goodwill - who still remains a complete stranger to me in real life - took his time to help me choose my own path and help guide me on it. And whew - I took a lot of his time. I still had to do all of the work. I won't call him out here because I know he'd hate it and also don't want all you faggots PM'ing him all the time.... but you know who you are, dude. Thank you. From everything I have in my soul as a man - thank you. You were my Morpheus.

I only learned much later that helping me was part of his mission.
But see, my Morpheus had a Morpheus too. It was /u/jacktenofhearts (great listing of his work here). If you give some of that dude's comments a read, it'll blow your mind.

Without OYS, you will never find a Morpheus if you need one. And you probably do need one.

Flaired Guys, Mods:

I feel it's our duty to give back to these men in any way that we can. I'm not talking about the faggots that show up once in a while, post retarded shit to /r/askMRP or don't seem to be making any progress week to week. Fuck those guys. You know them when you see them if you've been around here long enough.

What I'm talking about are those guys that are struggling to figure anything out but at least they are "STFU, Sidebar, Lifting" their way to confusion. You have valuable advice, give it.

If a "man" (loosely used here) sends you a PM and you see he's been doing the work, maybe give him a pointer or two. He was lost like all of us here at some point, and he's only seeking knowledge. You should be the judge if he deserves your valuable time to return that message.

One of the most valuable things that I've experienced here is actually watching some of the guys that I exchange OYS comments or PMs with progress on their journey. Maybe the time that I invested in them was just as valuable to them. Of course I waste my time with faggots as well, but I know I can quickly weed them out.

So help a dude if it helps your mission. We want them to find the truth in the way that men should be today. We want a stronger masculine set of men to share this shit with. It's what helps my mission. Maybe it does yours.

Encourage them all to post in OYS so they can find their own Morpheus if they need one. It doesn't have to be you. Pointing a man in the right direction is allowing him to give the gift of freedom to himself. He still has to choose it.
This is for guys who are divorcing / ending a LTR or considering it, based on my experience

You have improved, became a valuable man, gave your wife time and she didn't jump into your boat.

Nobody is perfect, but while your mistakes were acceptable, hers were not. What now?

1. Know why you are divorcing.

Divorce is a bureaucratic process that often takes a long time to complete. It is easy to stay down and consider not getting divorced when your wife comes to ask you to come back. While it may be ok to forgive her and decide to get together again, it is not ok to do this due to oneits, or for any reason other than a well thought out, reasonable, rational approach.

Make a list of the reasons why you are divorcing. Save it on your smartphone in order to have it always with you. This is what will keep your mind fresh and sane when you need. My list has over 20 items. Remember all the shit she has done to you, your kids, your family and friends, and write it down.

When you start the divorce process, more shit will happen, make sure to include those in your list as well. Save all the text messages with your soon to be ex. She will eventually do stuff that will hurt you even more. To a few good and close friends and family members, you can show how crazy she is. These are the only people that will give you emotional support.

Use the list of the reasons why you are divorcing when she starts to gaslight, making you doubt your decision. Check if what she was saying overcomes the problems you listed; from what happened with me and others I’ve talked, it rarely will.

2. Know that it is hard to be a man and be divorced without a fault on your side.

People don’t know what to tell you when you did everything right and your wife messed things up. They know what to say if the case was that you’ve cheated her, if you were a bad husband or father. It’s good for YOU to know that you did your best, and you did nothing wrong. But it’s hard for others to understand. And it’s hard to explain to plates when you start going after other girls. Nobody will give you emotional support. Girls will actually feel repulsed for the very fact that you didn’t do anything wrong in your marriage, don’t ever say this to them.

To the plates, I often tell that “my wife didn’t want to have sex anymore, was distant, along with a lot of other things”, or you can A&A then say "mistakes were made". If you go the other route, saying all the good things you did and yet your ex didn’t want you as a husband, the plate will see you as low value man. She will think: “if your best wasn’t enough for your ex, how can it be for me?”

3. If you have kids, your ex will be in your life until your kid is 18.

You will always be the father of her kid, and she will always be the mother of your kid, that’s for life. You will have to deal with your ex until your kid is 18. It's hard to ghost her before that. Your ideal scenario is joint custody, which presupposes respect and harmony in the former couple.

If your ex is not happy, she will probably reflect that on your kid. This is the hardest shit, but inside your head, you must wish your ex to be happy with some guy.

The best scenario is that you and your ex become friends. Your kid would love this, it’s the best for the kid, if you can. But do it in a manly way: you are right in this divorce, so if she is giving you a bad time, this may not happen at all or happen only in the future. All you have to do is be stoic and don’t answer to her bullshit. Walk away when she is crazy, don’t answer her nonsensical provocations.

4. If you have kids, accept that you will have to pay something (a lot).

Since you or her leave the house, start paying something. The idea is that you build a historic that can be used in court later. Pay a decent amount, but not all you can, since she will probably ask for more in court.

Always talk to your lawyer before you start paying anything. Get the best lawyer your money can buy.

5. Your kids will be fine.

As long as you see your kids a decent amount of time, things between the kids and you will be the same. They will love you as much as they did before. Being married and being a father are separated things. There is, however, a small chance that your kid will experience divorce-related problems.

Be awesome with your kids when you are with them. Go for joint custody if you can.

6. You will need to make new friends.

If your friends are all married or on LTR, they will not fit in your new reality. Married friends have their family and business to run, and a lifestyle that probably doesn’t include going out late of the night on bars. They will help you with talks and shit, but they won’t be able to go out with you when you want find new girls.

Basically you will have to go out without the friends you know, in places you are not used to go, and will have to be social again. If you have divorced or single friends, go after them; otherwise, you will have to socialize to find new friends.

7. There is an awesome life for a divorced man out there.
It was the biggest surprise for me so far. Pretty, intelligent divorced and single women your age everywhere, for every tastes. No ONS or plate gave a shit for the fact that I am divorced and have a kid. It may be harder to find a LTR in the future, I’m not sure. But after being a long time in a marriage, who wants a relationship this fast? Give yourself some time.

You will be amazed by the amount of awesome single or divorced girls that are available for you to pick.

8. Girls will like you. There are few masculine men out there.

You go to a bar and there are guys younger, better looking and stronger than you, but they are lost in general. They have no game, they are not masculine, they only approach girls that throw themselves to the guy.

Girls told me that old-school men are the best. I am 38 years old. Be cool, secure, mock the girls, don’t pay their drinks (I recommend you pay for one beer, she pays the other), have a good time and they will think that you are the shit. And of course, lift heavy as if your cock depended on it, because it really does.

Edited to insert good considerations from the posts below.
In the last 4 years, I went from purple pill to red pill. It was quite a journey, because the red pill is fucking tough to swallow even though you know what to expect from married life you still have to go through the motions.

I never wanted to become one of those depressed married guys that walk around with his head bowed down, so I knew before I got married, I need a different path. I'm coming close to finding it.

However, it didn't stop me from becoming a fat married fuck in the first 2 years, who became comfortable because he married a 9.

After 2 years I woke up an started lifting.

TL:DR --->>> https://imgur.com/a/bjd9hGS (2 years of lifting). Just to confirm no incel is writing here.

These are the tactics and tools I used, that helped me tremendously. I will skip frame and all the other obvious steps.

Lift

Raise your SMV. Regardless if your wife is hot or average stay home mom. Your life is not circled around her. Get a decent workout plan and execute it without excuses. I managed a six-pack in those 2 years with just 3 times lifting a week and following macros. Including all the day to day stress with kids and work.

Books

We all heard the top 10 list of books a red piller should read. For me personally, the one I was like "FUCK I wish I read that when I was 16" was The Way of the Superior man. Must read!

Other recommendations

Meditations - Mark Aurel

The one Thing - Gary Keller (productivity bible)

King, Warrior, Magician, Lover - Rober Moore (incredible insight in the male psyche)

Do the Work - Steven Pressfield (no bullshit, straight in your face advice for being productive)

Sex at Dawn: The Prehistoric Origins of Modern Sexuality - Christopher Ryan

Bonus: Bhagavad Gita

It's a book on the more spiritual side, which counters the hyper rational red pill theory. However, I found a lot of truth in this book and it helps if you have some narcissist tendencies. Jordan Peterson once said, if you are rather on the selfish side, you need to do some selfless deeds and vice versa this book helps a lot.

(If you are a blue pill guy, "No more Mr. Nice Guy" is your pick)

RDG - (Random Dread Game)

This is a theory that made my life a lot easier and keeps my wife on top of thing. Now I assume we all heard of the step by step guide of dread game. If you have a very jealous wife, this might fire backwards, so readers discretion is advised.

I realized whenever I played good old husband, sooner or later my wife gets bored. She went out drinking with the girls, which from a biology perspective means, looking if better mating partners are out there. Of course she will not admit it, but it is what it is. Since I went from fat boy to hot guy, those days are gone. She wants to stay at home. All those depressed married femal friends that want to go out with her, gave up because she keeps saying no.

Possible Reason?

One thing i keep doing is use a Random Dread game tactic, which most of the time means meeting women who are preferably hotter than my wife. I got a few female friends, with no responsibilities who are in their early 20s. Of course none of them would admit that they want to fuck me. It required a lot of self-discipline to not fuck the shit out of them, but it makes my life so much easier to have them around.

My wife knows any minute, any day, any week, I can have a woman which is into me, younger and some better looking. There have been quiet a few main events leading up to this, but it worked out. She's never happy when im out with a "friend" to smoke hookah or grab a few drinks. Some of them she likes and she knows them from the gym I work out at.

Kids

One of the things I always do, take care of the children. I drive them to schools, kindergarten. Spend time at the playground with tight shirts, while all the other mums have to acts like they are not keep staring at me. I support them in sport activities and keep on doing it, whether my wife is with me or im alone. Doesn't make a difference.

I'm always prepared for divorce, so one thing someone will not say, is that I dont take care of my kids.

Reminder: No Love

Im sorry, if there is still any doubt in you, but there is NO LOVE in a male/female relationship. It's the second BIG TRUTH in our society, right after there is no santa clause. I once had the purple pill thinking "I keep frame and do most of the red pill things, but i think i found me a good one". Later on, I came to find out I simply reached deep conversion.

Room Competition

I have a rule, if I enter the room and I'm not the fittest, best looking man in the room, I leave quick. I make sure, im the Nr. 1 next time we barbecue, have dinner or do some of those other mostly boring married life meet ups.

This lead to the richest guy I know wanted to be me. Wanting to spend time with me, but i refuse. I gave up on dropping any red pill knowledge. He even keeps telling my wife "Look at your husband" "This is the man" I dont respond to those non-sense praise (i just smile a little to not be completely anti-social), because I'm immune against criticism and I'm immune against praise. Can't have one without the other, so fuck both.

Sex

Sex is still underestimated. I make sure, that in a 50-mile radius, there is no one who's better in bed than me, other than maybe some porn star on drugs. In the past few years the wife went from being into me a decent amount into getting wet just by being close to me. (no I don't exaggerate)

From my own experience, this is the most effective way to not come too quick and have your wife get to at least one and most of the time multiple orgasms.

Start with Missionary (Count to ~30-60 seconds) > Doggy Style (count to ~30-60 seconds) > The Captain as long as you like.

This is the base. At the end, I do whatever the fuck I want as a finisher.

Important:

• Keep your Jaw TIGHT! You cannot jizz with a tight jaw, so don't relax it.

• Breath in for 4 seconds and breath out for 6 seconds. This will activate your parasympathetic nervous system. (research here). If your body is in a relaxed state, you can't jizz.

There have been times in my early 20s were I jizzed so fast, i never got a call back from a potential plate back then. Now, I choose when I come.

Daily Routine

My perfect daily routine in no particular order. (I read in the book time warrior, that you shouldn't have a set time, since time is not linear. It helps me getting shit done when i stay on top of things.)

I try to keep it as simple as possible because whenever I had too much stuff on my to do list and set times, I end up being frustrated for never hitting close to 100%.
So this is the perfect day for me

Wake up 4 AM.

short Yoga Session & Meditation

Read

Prep Breakfast for Kids (I got a license as nutritionist, I prefer taking care of highly micronutrient food and not leave it to my wife feeding cereals, toast or whatever the fuck mums feed)

Work out

Work

Spend time with kids

Learn with the pomodoro technique (will be a life-long student of some sort, always some education or in the future language I will learn, as you probably already figured, English is not my first language)

Spend time with the wife in the evening

Go to sleep

Struggles

I went from depressed semi suicidal fuck to calm balanced and shredded Übermensch.

However, I keep having struggles. Every now and then, I fall back into old habits. Even after almost 1 year no fap, I went back to porn for a short while, fucked up my diet, reinstalled old computer games, smoke weed and went on a dopamine binge. Too lazy to go out with the kids, like all the other fathers in the neighborhood. It's insane how disciplined you can live and fuck it up in no time.

My estimate is I fuck up 2-3 times a year for 2-3 weeks and then get it back together. I fight on decreasing the fuck up times and at some point get them to zero. I'm sharing this so you know however good you think you are, old habits root deep, I fight them as well.
Hope this helped some of the warriors out there fighting reality.

Like Rodriguez said in my favorite documentary "Searching for sugar man"

"Nothing hits as hard as reality"
Before and After: Examples Illustrate Two Years of TRP Transformation. [xpost TRP]

by TRPatriot | January 3, 2016 | Link

Summary: [xpost from TRP] Examples of personal and LTR transformation after two years of internalizing the truth and practicing the wisdom shared in the Manosphere.

Body: Background: I am early 40’s, in an LTR with a woman close to my age, let’s call her Woman. Three children. We divorced and separated for a few years somewhere in the middle, then reconciled. I was ready to leave again due to frustration from lack of sex, when I discovered TRP two years ago, read extensively, and went to work. Lifting and improving my SMV, practicing dread, identifying and passing shit tests, setting goals, kicking ass, building and maintaining a worthy frame.

And thanks to you brilliant bastards, everything is dramatically improved, and I feel enormous gratitude for those who have shown me the way (in the absence of a knowledgeable father). Some examples to illustrate the difference:

Before: I was like “Spreadsheet Husband,” the guy who kept track of the (lack of) sexual contact with his wife. Once a month was routine, sometimes twice, sometimes skip a month...

After: I still keep track, using a period-tracker app (which I highly recommend to anyone in an LTR). Frequency increased slowly over many months of practice, then we had a breakthrough into a whole new frame, averaging 10-12x per month, which satisfies me at this stage of my busy life.

Before: Always wanting sex, always frustrated, always scheming to find a way to get her in a good mood (ha!), to make everything good and right so she would be willing to have sex. Always trying to negotiate desire, then being butthurt and cold to her when she resisted or I couldn’t make it happen.

After: When I want sex, I go to Woman and grab her, I smack her ass and show her my uncontrollable desire for her. I put her body and her hands where I want them. I tune into what I want and I give/take it.

Before: When the rare sex did happen, I was always trying to make it amazing and give her lots of orgasms so she would want to have more sex in the future (ha!). Always a romantic, thinking about what she wants and trying to please.

After: I focus on what I want and don’t overly concern myself with her pleasure – I tune into the dominant/submissive nature of sex and express myself. I tell her what to do. It is Very Clear that she enjoys sex a lot more this way, with a passionate masculine beast ravishing her. Sometimes, usually around her ovulation window, she signals that she wants more attention, and I take care of her until she begs me to stop.
Before: Trying to warm her up, be sweet and talkative, sharing, sad as she pulls away, covers up, isn’t interested.

After: Close the door and lock it (keep the kids out), smile at her with a lion’s hungry gaze, pull the pants away that she is trying to put on, push her on the bed, tease her, do what I want.

Before: I would show her my feelings and vulnerabilities, share my problems and challenges at work, share confusion and exasperation about the kids’ issues. Try to be Human and get her to love me for my genuine communication and tenderness.

After: I am a rock. I am a man with a Mission. I set goals and persevere and celebrate my achievements. Woman only hears of the problems I have solved, maybe my plans to attack future challenges. I am the Father, confident, wise, disciplined, stoic. I do my research and look for help and answers from trusted sources. And while I enjoy discussing our children with Woman and gain from her insight (thankfully she is a good mother), I show only strength and my joy in being a man, husband, and father to her.

Before: “Sorry.” I said the word all the time, explained myself, justified my actions and feelings.

After: It took months of watching like a hawk, and now I only apologize when I judge that I have caused harm to someone and wish to express sincere regret. Otherwise, I do not explain myself, I often simply tune into amused mastery and enjoy mysterious silence. I carefully watch to avoid justifying or rationalizing any actions I take – rather I choose actions and words deliberately and stand tall when Woman or other people shit test me. [I carefully policed my thoughts and words to break these habits. Every time I hear the word ‘sorry’ escape my lips, I stop and analyze if it was warranted. Usually it is not, and then I plan out a better course for the next time such a situation arises.]

[Aside: the importance of the words we use in our thoughts and speech cannot be overestimated. To provide examples, instead of ‘sorry’ I may say: “It’s too bad that happened…” “Hmmm….” “I regret that [describe what happened]” “Oops.” (Silence and a knowing look).

Before: Taking her moods seriously, trying to fix the disagreeable ones and encourage their opposite.

After: Focusing on myself and my mission. Her moods are the weather in the background. Not only am I not concerned about her moods, I actively welcome the emotional rollercoaster she may ride if we have conflict. I simply stay true to myself and what I believe is right (which may change if she shares information or insight), and I know that the passion in our relationship is recharging from the tension. I smile knowing we will be having great sex later, rather than feeling anxious and frustrated that her upset emotional state means no sex now.

Before: Being angry about the imbalance of sexual desire. Wishing she would initiate, or at least give signs that she is interested in sex with me. Frustrated that it wasn’t like before, when we were dating...
After: Embracing the role of the man and taking initiative whenever I feel like it, expecting her submission. Understanding that sexual tension/excitement is optimized when I am dominant and she submits to me.

[Note: My thorough bluepill, feminine-centric programming dictated that I see her as a perfectly-equal being, like myself in every way except genitalia. Following the “Golden” (Blue) Rule, I continuously judged my actions toward her in light of how I would want to be treated, dedicated to doing what was “right” and, God Forbid, never dominating her, shitlord. It is remarkable how much our sex improved through this transformation, how liberating it has been. And how clear it is to me that she loves the feeling of being submissive to a real man doing what he wants - she tells me she is happier than ever.]

Before: Always stressed about money and trying to get her to spend less. Expecting an equal partner and getting extremely upset about our struggling finances. Frequently went against my gut when trying to please her/negotiate desire.

After: Separated our money and took charge of my income. Earned a generous raise in 2015 and am generating income from work on the side. I accept and embrace that I am 100% responsible for my financial situation, and I no longer enable her spending. I am unconcerned about her emotional response to my financial decisions, and her behavior has shifted to fit the new container I have created.

Before: Taking her shit seriously, often judgmental or thoughtful and wanting to teach her or help her. Wanting her to be different.

After: Not saying much, no point. I have fun listening, watching how she works. AWALT. I am playful or stoic as appropriate, and she is much happier with a strong man who can listen without being emotionally thrown-off. From my perspective, this is a short and mysterious life, and I find her very fascinating and enjoyable now that I understand her nature and have no expectations of her to be something she’s not.

Before: Asking “if it’s cool” if I go do something at night or with friends, trying not to upset her, thanking her if I did go, probably apologizing after for the inconvenience. Never mentioning other women/girls.

After: I tell her when I plan to go out and leave the details as vague as possible. I express my enthusiasm for going out and doing things with other people, with no hint of concern that it may affect her. I prioritize the gym and the court. I will share stories of other girls/women in my life, building SMV and dread (the lifeblood of an LTR).

Before: Asking her questions about how I can help her in the kitchen or with some other task. Show her how supportive and helpful I am, negotiating my covert contract for sex.

After: I look with discerning eyes and take care of shit – empty the trash, carve the chicken, etc., then I spank her and go work on my mission. I am here when she needs help, her rock, not her girlfriend.

Before: “I love you” all the time. Mad inside when she didn’t say it often enough or when I thought she should. Believing she would want to hear my eternal love professed; giving her what I wanted. Negotiating attraction.

After: Hard Rule: I Never Say It First. I show her, a physical expression, a passionate intimacy and domination of her being. Now I often hear the words spoken in the breathless tone I longed for in my previous life. I smile knowingly and return the words. [Note: I respond, “I love you.” Rather than, “I love you, too” because it removes the implication that you are saying it as a polite response. My frame is to look into her eyes and say it with intensity and meaning, responding to her need for security by projecting the essence of masculine strength and protection. And sometimes I don’t say anything, just grab her clothes and pull her to me, or tease her if it is said light heartedly.]

Before: Believing in the karmic, soul-mate, “love me for who I am” Hollywood fantasy and thinking Woman had similar romantic feelings, along with valuing loyalty, sacrifice, integrity and honor.

After: Knowing my (perceived) SMV must be and stay higher than hers, that she is gone in a heartbeat, a moment of (perceived) weakness. Embracing my aloneness, knowing she can only love me for how I make her feel in this moment. Bittersweet and poetic, for Woman there is only the now, her satisfaction based on her perception of her man’s status and frame in each moment. While things are mostly awesome after the Transformation, AWALT and it’s only working because I am doing the work.

Before: Fear of losing her, of fucking it up, of her finding some other great guy, of not keeping my family together, wanting it to work with the mother of my kids. Not confronting her over disagreements in parenting. Oneitis.

After: Fuck that, I am awesome and getting awesomer. I know there are many women, younger and more attractive than her, swooning at the thought of a man like me (Dominant, Confident, and armed with the Truth). Abundance mentality - I’m happy to keep her around as long as she behaves and is submissive, charming, respectful. I tease her about other women and cultivate dread. I challenge and encourage her to be the best parent she can, rather than thinking she automatically knows best as the mother.

It is clear: living by the principles of true gender dynamics gives the best results for the man, woman and children in the family. The righteous path of the red-pill-aware, mission-focused, disciplined man can result in a healthy, satisfying relationship. Of course, AWALT, and mate selection is difficult and critical. I feel fortunate in this regard.

Lessons Learned:

1. Read the sidebar and the top posts/comments from all time. Study, practice, revisit the theory if you hope to stand a chance.

2. Lifting is essential for the right mindset.
3. AWALT. I had to actually become a masculine man, hold my frame, and be willing to walk away.

4. All 5 stages are real and valuable in their own ways.

5. TRP in action produces the best results for men, women, and children.
Gender War
by Rollo-Tomassi | January 17, 2019 | Link

Essay:
https://therationalmale.com/2019/01/16/gender-war/

Excerpt:

In Male Control I explored what I saw as a narrative shift coming from the Village with respect to masculinity. This post was written after the Las Vegas mass shooting in October of 2017 (for which we have no definitive answers, and even less people asking questions) and in its wake came the predictable series of articles from the Fem-Stream media. Usually this narrative starts with appeals for gun control, then it shifts off to how it’s always men or boys and ‘toxic’ masculinity, and OMG we need to teach our boys to be better girls. This time though it was different. The narrative shifted to “masculinity itself is toxic”. In that 2017 article I predicted that this would be the new message coming from the Village for the foreseeable future. And right cue the concurrent mass shooting events and any incident of “men behaving badly” in the MeToo era was (still is) written from the ‘masculinity IS toxic’ perspective.

Well, the future is now. We are in a post-‘toxic’ masculinity era. That narrative has been replace by a ‘Masculinity is toxic’ message. No longer is it about certain, perceived negative aspects of masculinity being toxic – if you are male, you need to learn to repress your maleness altogether. We are no longer just teaching our boys like defective girls, the Village is teaching men they need to become woman-like in order to be an acceptable member of western society.

Less than a week after the APA’s holy decree that ‘traditional’ masculinity is a psychological disorder we see the now infamous Gillette “commercial”. In this video men are ubiquitously portrayed as ridiculous buffoons, but also as borderline perverts, potential rapists, oblivious fathers and uncontrollable hard-ons. The message is overwhelmingly “masculinity is this, you males should do the opposite”. And this is the message most plugged in men got when they watched the show. What they fail to realize, due to a continuous feed of the narrative, is the overwhelmingly misandrous subtext to the video.

This narrative is the same one I wrote about in Good Humans. There was a message that accompanied feminist mothers’ boys when they marched in the Women’s Marches of 2017-2018; it was no longer ‘Boys Will Be Boys’ but ‘Boys Will Be Good Humans’. This then begs the premise, if you are a boy, if you are male, then you are not a Good Human. This is a fundamental redefining of what it means to be a man, according to the Village. In the Red Pill we understand the importance placed on living out the conventional definition of masculinity – manhood is not something to be given or taken away by the ambiguities of gynocentric society. But this is what the Village is fostering as it’s direction for men. It’s not enough for them to withhold your ‘manhood’, now if you resist their correction, if you embrace your innate male self, you are a “no good human.”

I’m hesitant to call this Gillette video a “commercial”. In actuality it is a feminist agitprop piece directed by a well-known radical feminist, Kim Gerhig. Kim and her producer, Sally Campbell, are notorious for producing exactly this deliberate misandry when they’re not creating videos of singing vaginas. This, of course, is the ugly detail the Fem-Stream media would rather the mainstream pay no mind to. Our attention is supposed to be either on the message of “Men need to do better, what’s so wrong with that?” or “Only man-babies are crying about this ad.”
Guys, quick nugget:

This is a trap. She does not want your opinion. Stop taking her words at face value.

Lots of askMRP posts lately describe a situation where “she said this. I am confused / I said that. What to do?”

Start by understanding that the fact that she speaks or shares some idea is more important than the idea or question itself. Look to connect with the emotion behind the actual language. This is womanese. Men reliably screw this up and we put our feet in our mouths when we engage with ladies in conversation as if the words were on paper in some technical manual. They do not matter. Conversation initiated by her is to a large degree simply an opportunity for you to be attractive and reinforce your frame and higher value. End of story.

Watch what she does, ignore what she says.

She talks about sexy bathing suits? What she means is she wants your approval so spend some money and she wants to have her brains banged out by you while she looks like a total dirty slut. Perfectly fine. She’s yours for now, it’s your turn, enjoy it.

Want simple rules? A rule of thumb I read a long time ago on this sub: anything that starts with “you” is usually a shit test. Treat as such. Anything that starts with “I” is most likely a comfort test.

Engage with how she feels about whatever she’s talking about. This is a great exercise with all women you meet. At the department store. At the cafe whatever - get out of the ordinary bla blah generic conversation on boring facts and ask/talk more about how she engages with whatever she’s experiencing. Eg: “Did you panic/get excited/ smiled etc when you saw X”. Instead of “So when you saw X then what happened after that? “

Next level up on that is to inset hyperbolas, jokes and metaphors. Eg.” You got excited like a little girl in a candy store .”

Watch what she does, ignore what she says. She’ll say anything she feels like in the moment.
Over the past few days, I've watched this part of Peterson's lecture until 1:34:30 several times. The amount of relate-able material in here to what we learn here is enormous and compact. And I would suggest going through it multiple times, each time viewing from the perspective of 1) How did our frame get broken, how did we break our old ideas to get here 2) How have we remade our frame based on what we've read from posts, sidebar, and what we see in life 3) How other people respond to our breaking their frames and 4) How we can most effectively lead them to build a frame that follows our vision.

Very early on Peterson states succinctly that when you get what you want, you feel good, and the frame (your frame) is validated. Not in a yay-look-mommy-validate-me way, but a reinforcing, positive feedback loop that the way you are acting is getting you what you want, so you're happy way. Likewise, when you don't get what you want, your frame (that is, the substructure of if-I-do-this-this-outcome-happens) starts to crumble. And we all live in a world where we fool ourselves into believing we know what's going on. But as Peterson says elsewhere in the lecture, all we've done is develop frames based on learned ideas that work most of the time. And when it doesn't, the chaos of the world rears it's ugly head and we hate that because it shows us we really don't know anything after all.

"How deeply should you unlearn something when you make a mistake?" (and likewise read: How deeply should you dive to rearrange someone else's frame when you want to lead them?) When we examine the substructure of frame of both ourselves and those we want to influence, Peterson shows that there are multiple multiple pieces we can break a frame into. And in our heads we can all speculate how the life of an ideal man runs. But we somehow find it difficult initially to know how to live that life because we're looking at the abstracted view. And just like when we read countless PUA books on how to pickup women, the number one piece of advice we get is ultimately to put down the book and go out there and do it. Because, as Peterson states, the abstraction of the ideal man is grounded in micro-activity. You need to act, not speak, not think, to ground those thoughts about who you want to be in action. The actual act of something is what gives that dopamine kick and reinforces your frame. And I've stated multiple times that when I'm feeling down or lacking, the best way to get out of that is to stop thinking of how to get out of it, and simply go do something, anything.

We build ourselves into the new idea of our ideal man from the bottom up, with all these micro-actions. Just as a child would coming into the world...which was our problem in the first place. We were all children who developed a frame of the world, and as I commented in a recent post, with a lot of the problems we encounter, the WHY behind our problem is that we are still using that frame we developed as a child and haven't put anything better in place yet. As we build our frame up rigidly with new rules based on our wants, after awhile, we can start to play with the rules like a game. And you'll encounter many men on here who refer to shit tests, or playing with their wife's emotions, or other actions in the world as games. They really are that. We are playing with the rules in order to bend them most to our advantage and learn their nuances.

Last thing and I'll let you view the rest of the video with these thoughts in mind. Again, "how upset should you get and how do you calculate it?" So if you are attempting to change yourself, or you are attempting to change your wife. If she doesn't comply, how upset should you get? You need to have that introspection to realize where on the substructure of your frame and hers you are operating. If she is an ass to you when you get home from work, doesn't help out with the kids, and then hard no's you early on in your unplugging and you jump off the bed, throw pants on, and slam the door on the way out, you are pushing back at a very top level of her frame. You're effectively saying: "You're a bad partner." And she is, you're not lying. You know all the sub-sub-reasons that she's a bad partner. But she also knows all the other sub-sub-reasons she isn't a bad partner (and or you are), and that's what she'll use in her hamster defense. When you respond globally to many micro-problems, you're not attempting to influence at that sub-level, you're going to a broad, top-level view and attempting to shake her entire frame. That's being rambo. And she's going to punch back. You're not leading on the level that influences her being an ass, or her not helping with the kids. When she backtalks you when you get home, you have to go all the way down to the level of: "You see that teddy bear right there? I need you to pick up that teddy bear." Sometimes this will happen with a boundary. But more often than that you will positively and negatively reinforce with your actions. Build that global frame from micro-changes in an action based way.
STFU & the Benefits of Doing
by Th3JourneyRed | July 18, 2018 | Link

TL;DR - STFU does NOT mean simply keeping your mouth shut when she's irritated. It applies to every single thing you do, and it is the core of your independence and command of the household.

Intro

I've been reading and attempting to internalize/understand Red Pill concepts for what feels like a long time. I only became aware of MRP within the past six months or so, and it's been a breakthrough. The Drunk Captain post set off an introspective journey that has honestly saved my future.

I think I'm at the point that I can submit some of my understanding to the community with a reasonable chance of being right and edifying those who have yet to understand this particular topic: STFU.

In colloquial use, STFU translates exactly. Just be quiet at this exact moment. In RP parlance, it has a much wider application. When I stumbled onto r/TRA and saw that term, my first thought was, "Oh great! I already don't talk a lot during arguments." That was not nearly as true as I thought, and it frankly missed the entire point.

If anybody else sees STFU and doesn't understand why not talking when she's upset doesn't seem to really get you anywhere, perhaps this will add some clarity.

Definition

Let's get this out of the way. STFU is not "Just don't talk a lot during arguments."

It is a philosophy with two core tenets. First, always maintain control of your speech. Respond. Do not react. When she's upset and blaming you, this means taking time to think about what she's saying, mostly by applying the concepts of The Emotional Process to the conversation. Is her recount of events accurate and truly linked to her frustration, or are her emotions simply riled and she's externalizing them by blaming you? Do I fog, neg, A&A, disengage?

In my own marriage, this means that I always have to remember that she is emotional before she is rational and that she exhibits highly narcissistic behavior on a semi-regular basis. Every time that I forget to do this, the conversation goes off the rails. Every. Single. Time.

Second, STFU translates to, "Actions speak louder than words." At no point in the beginning should you be talking about taking ownership/responsibility for your life and your house. At every point, she should be discovering the results of you simply doing so, and it should be a pleasurable thing (unless you don't care about the relationship, but this is MRP).
When you finally start explicitly directing the marriage or talking about things you want to change (more/better sex, financial objectives, children), it should be against a backdrop of OYS achieved in practical silence. Dread 9 and 10 only occur after months, possibly a year or two, of demonstrating SMV to her. The point of STFU is not that she'll magically change her behavior by fulfilling your covert contract. The point of STFU is to force you to demonstrate your competence and attractiveness to her thoroughly enough before opening your mouth and laying out how you want her behavior to change. Doing otherwise is a surefire way to blow up the relationship.

Tenet One, Benefits of Controlling Your Speech

STFU when she is upset has two very important positive aspects. First, you are driving the conversation. When she comes to you upset that you didn't take her where she wanted to go on the date or that you didn't ask her about starting your gym membership, responding, not reacting, means you are in control of yourself and where the conversation is heading. It means that you are solving the real problem, rather than the one her hamster brought to you. With this approach, a desirable outcome is inevitable.

It will take months, possibly years, for the surface lesson of this pattern to sink in for her: you know what you are doing when she is upset. She may never learn the true lesson of this pattern: she is emotional before she is rational.

Regardless, the second benefit is the authority that will come from reliably and successfully STFU. Remember, leadership is hard. Your LTR, presently, has absolutely no clue why she can't talk to you about being upset without it devolving into a fight, and she will have no clue why all of a sudden it starts getting better. She might think she has an idea (my wife certainly does), but she doesn't. Over time, the absolutely bat shit things she says will start to pile up, and she'll begin to realize that she actually has no clue how you're staying so calm and collected while steering her back towards tranquility and happiness.

If she has an ounce of rationality and good will, there will be a tipping point at which she begins to trust in your ability to soothe her, because even thinking about doing it herself is exhausting.

Tenet Two, Benefits of Action Over Words

Even more important to /r/MRP than STFU is OYS. It's why the only recurring thread there is the weekly OYS post. STFU is merely the most important piece of advice when talking about how to OYS. Before you set your 1RM goals or your budget or the hobbies you want to nurture or the bad habits you're going to ruthlessly exterminate, you must internalize STFU. We do not talk about fight club, and this is why.

It establishes control in fact. If you look around and decide that X needs to happen and simply make it so, by definition, she has no control over your action. This will freak her out in the beginning, especially if it's some massive policy change for the household. So, it is best to start with small objectively good things. It is objectively good that your yard and house are neat and in working order. It is objectively good that your body is in shape. It is objectively good that you stop jacking off to step-daughter porn.

Secondly, think about the times that some buddy of yours has said, "I'm going to do X," and you knew that was as likely as getting struck by a meteor. I guarantee that your LTR has heard you talk about objectives that never get achieved with the exact same attitude. Do not give her the opportunity to deride you, either internally or externally, and do not hand her confirmation of her opinion of you. STFU ensures that she only sees your attempts at change when you succeed.

Tightly coupled to that point is the fact that talking about your plans softens the impact when you complete them. If finances suddenly aren't in disarray, that's a jarring positive thing. If the yard is always mowed, edged, and trimmed, this is a surprising and pleasurable experience of your responsibility. If you suddenly get haircuts regularly and dress well, she will be happily surprised.

Good surprises equate to dopamine. They tap into your reward circuitry. It's why you scroll reddit for hours on end, looking for that next hit. As you introduce good changes into your life, your wife will adopt a similar mindset. The more surprising you can make your achievements, the more pleasurable they will be to her. STFU optimizes how your LTR experiences OYS.

Finally, she is not interested in the details of OYS. She does not give a flying fuck about the nuts and bolts of lifting. She could not care less about what you are doing to make sure she doesn't have to worry about the vehicles. She really really really is not interested in your raspberry pi fixation or why exactly you're excited about turbocharging your project car. I can think of nothing more boring than an intimate description of how you keep the house in order. All she cares about is how exciting, attractive, convenient, and/or socially recognized the results of OYS are.

Which means that talking to her about OYS is shooting yourself in the foot. There is no version of you talking about it that does not end up with her wresting control from you, deriding your plans (internally or externally), or seeing you as some tone-deaf conversationalist who can't recognize that she's listening to you prattle on about <insert masculine hobby> because she wants to be polite.

The Exception

There is one really notable exception to this process. If it's been a while (1000 Foot Rope, or about a month for each level of Dread) since you know you started successfully and consistently applying an accurate model of your LTR to your conflicts and it really doesn't look like she's recognizing the benefits of a competent and attractive man who can handle her shit, you need to deeply consider that you're married to some flavor of a Dark Triad. This is especially true if her combative behavior has escalated, rather than diminished or acquired some level of humility.

Find a counselor who has experience with Dark Triads and figure out where exactly she is on the spectrum. Be prepared to blow it all up and for her to go on the warpath when you do.
The Final Result: Admiration, Independence, and Great Sex

Female love equates to admiration, and it exhibits itself through varying degrees of starry-eyed cooperation. A good woman recognizes her true nature and encourages her man to act in such a way as to create that admiration. You create that admiration by OYS and STFU. If either of these components are absent, you might as well burn it all to the ground.

Once you successfully OYS while STFU, though, two things happen. You gain increasingly peaceful access to independence and authority, and she becomes more sexually interested. You still have to initiate and flirt, but if that's not part of OYS, then you're doing it wrong.

Concluding Thoughts

I wrote this as much for criticism as for the community's edification. I'm pretty sure I'm on the money here, but if anybody disagrees, I'd be interested to understand why. I think one thing that doesn't really come out in the post is the fact that I'm following OYS and STFU as much because I just want to be the one taking ownership of my life as I hope it will make the relationship better. I've got a 65 point plan to OMS, and I legitimately don't care if she approves or even notices. Even if it doesn't shift the paradigm of the relationship (which I think is only possible if she's diagnosable), the confidence that it will create will be worth the struggle, all on its own. This is not a covert contract. Once I OMS for a time, I will make my desires for certain changes known.

I also don't think that I connect this to sexual strategy very well. I'm kind of capitalizing on STFU being an established concept, but I wanted to get into what I think the mechanics of STFU are and how they drive an LTR towards viewing your independence as a good thing in her life. Connecting her admiration with her sexual availability is best done more rigorously in another post, though (and has been done. I'm not really breaking new ground here, just figuring out if I understand STFU).
I'm sure we all see the posts.

I'm getting RP now, why is she (insert pejorative) now? Why isn't it working? Why doesn't she love me now?

If you've read NMMNG, you have no excuse to even ask this question.

What did you think she was going to do?

My story is probably nothing special. Know what happened? Hit a tipping point with my newfound 'me first' perspective. I have texts blowing up my phone during, and up to our main event.

'This new you is an asshole'

'this new you is selfish'

'narcissist'

'I don't know if I can do this anymore'

lots of crying. You know what I didn't get?

- A pat on the back...
- an attaboy,
- hey man, thanks for being alpha now, do you want a blowjob?

She fucking gets pissed, she throws out shit tests. But you know what I do get? I don't get stories anymore about a temper tantrum before a date. Not to say she doesn't have them, but I'm no longer at the house placating them. I'm out, joining a whiskey club, hanging out with old friends, talking with a few girls I know, being a little flirty with the neighbours guests in the hot tub. Working out. Hell, I enjoy a good pre workout shit test, I hit personal bests when I get them.

Yeah it's selfish. Yeah she's not going to like it. But at the end of the day. I buy her 50 cent honeysticks, and I get her to eat them off me where it counts. If she's too tired that day, I jerk one off and go to bed, it's about as big a concern to me as whether I have maple syrup or butter on my pancakes.

She says she doesn't like it. Thats just a comfort test. When she says 'you' statements:

You're an asshole, you don't X

Those are largely shit tests, she's testing your frame. I hate how they are called tests, because all you really have to do is pretend you are an american running for supreme court. Sit there and let a senator berate you for an hour or two, if you don't lose your cool, you got the job (look up sotomayors nomination if you want)

If it's a lot of I's:

I don't like this, I don't want a man who X, I hate x

Those are largely comfort tests. Ignore the actual words, listen to the subtext, the body language. It generally boils down to a girl telling you that she is punching above her weight, and she's worried that she's going to lose the fight. Give her a strong hug, kiss on the forehead, tell her everything will be OK, and you have no reason to leave, you're getting all your needs met at home (subtle dread to inspire her to meet your needs if she wants you loyal)

But to sum up, the last fucking thing you should be expecting is for her to be on board for your changes. Biggest teenager in the room, she doesn't know what she wants, she only knows how she feels. Would you let your 4 year old daughter tell you how to do your job? Why the fuck are you letting a girl riding emotions tell you how to live your life?

Those same angry emotions for her are like you not jerking off/sex for a few days... Ignore her words, watch her actions.

/rant
Alphas, Betas, Omegas, and Oaks: Let them NOT eat paint
by BluepillProfessor | November 28, 2017 | Link

This post is for the Rambo's, those who insist on eating paint, and all the guys who are so pissed off at their wives they are being rude, petulant, cruel, denying them sex, or whatever else you think is "punishment" enough for her treating you like a sexless Beta all those years.

I have for you men those 3 little words so many of us long to hear:

Get over it.

Leadership includes managing your subordinates and making sure they have everything they need.

Women NEED validation and approval from men. They greatly prefer that validation comes from a strong, attractive, Alpha man. They greatly appreciate it when you show them a warm gooey center every now and then so long as that goo is encased in a hard shell of mostly Alpha. They really like it when an Alpha male leads them on an adventure and a good time.

You know what they don't like? They don't like a petulant Beta male trying to "man up" by treating her rudely, with cruelty, and/or with little or no awareness or regard for her needs.

On TRP/MRP we often tell guys to man up. We tell guys to take her off the pedestal. We tell guys to not take shit and to respond to shit tests with Agree and Amplify and other methods.

You know what we don't teach?

We don't teach men to withhold love and affection from their woman.

A women will almost always CHEAT if she is denied love and affection for too long. If we accept that women NEED love and affection and validation then this should come as no surprise.

I think some guys just don't get it in part because there is a divide over the terminology we use so let me highlight that because I think some confusion is because we don't even agree on what exactly is "Alpha" and what is "Beta."

I and many others have suggested that Alpha is what makes girls wet and Beta provides comfort but not tingles. Unfortunately this makes women the gauge of MRP success and is problematic.

Another terminology dispute is that MRP has more tightly defined "Beta." As a result, in MRP terms, the main sub conflates "Beta" with "Omega"(which is a person or behavior that does not generate tingles OR comfort) and never ruses the term "Oak" (which creates BOTH tingles and comfort).
So to summarize:

MRP:

Alpha: Hot guy who gets all the girls or a behavior that tends to improve your chances of getting all the girls (i.e. increases attraction for men).

Beta: Loving guy who shows his caring and comfort but rarely gets laid or a behavior that is loving and caring and comforting (but doesn't generate the tingles).

Omega: Objectively gross and unattractive people and behaviors that provide neither comfort nor tingles.

Oak: Attractive cool dude who generates the tingles AND brings all the warmth and comfort they need (but not to much).

TRP

Alpha: Hot guy who gets laid or behaviors that get you laid.

Beta: Weak men or weak, supplicating behaviors that turn you into a "nice guy" who doesn't get laid.

Thus, in TRP terms, one should avoid "Beta" and Rambo the fuck out of your plates.

However, in MRP terms, one should be Alpha, but also provide strong Oak and Beta comfort especially to reinforce good behavior.

So fellows, get teeth off the window and wipe your chin already. Yes, take charge. Be the man. Lead the family. Yes blast her Shit Tests from orbit and don't take any shit either. Just make sure you realize that part of being the Captain is making sure your crew is getting what it needs.

TLDR: If a wife is NOT getting the affection, validation, and attention from you that she needs and deserves she will get it from somebody. MRP is a praexology that you adapt to your own circumstance. This information works but it is DANGEROUS. We are giving out dynamite to children so please don't go full retard or Redpill Rambo; don't eat paint.
When you get away for a few days with your fellow guy friends something changes. I forget if it was Jack Donovan or Brett at AoM or some other manosphere writer who touted the importance of going periodically to “refresh at the well of masculinity”, among some kind of trials, activities and adventures with your guy fiends.

A few things happen when you do that.

1. Planning. It’s rare that busy guys of today can just quickly get on a bus, car, train etc and get away. So this is something that you have to do oftentimes months in advance. In that planning process you fight for what’s important to you, you exercise planning skills (duh) and you show leadership among your buddies, if needed. Of course she may try to sabotage your efforts or may bitch and whine that you’re going without her etc. Another chance to practice passing shit tests, kissing her on her forehead sweetly and fucking her ever harder so she thinks about you when you’re gone.

2. Execute. Ok you’re with your buddies. Time to have fun. But remember it’s time to be the example, as some of your buddies may be blue pill dudes, divorcees who still have anger issues, or simply guys not in as good place as you. Look around and if there’s no clear alpha you look up to in most ways, then you’re the one. AMOG. Not to get set-conscious, cocky, or egomaniacal, but you now have a real chance to look after the pack. They look up to you - and may not even realize it. And they’ll be sure to call you on your shit in case it gets to your head. That’s the wisdom and benefit of hanging out with the guys. And you’ll get a chance to call them on their shit and be a true friend.

3. Don’t forget self-improvement. Whether it’s fishing, hunting, skiing, surfing, bowling, sailing, shooting, wrestling, rowing, golfing, hiking, kayaking, fucking dart throwing - it doesn’t matter. Focus on improving your technique. Hire a trainer. Skillful anything is the way to happiness and fulfillment. Plus you get respect and become de facto leader in case you’re the best one at whatever you guys are doing, but that’s a side benefit. On this note: (1) don’t get too drunk (keep it under control basically), (2) keep proselytizing your beliefs to your buddies to a minimum and (3) bring a book. You’ll want to use time away also to have a few minutes by yourself, and read.

4. Lastly: you’ll get perspective from the distance on how the relationship has been going of late. You’ll reflect on how she’s been acting, shit she’s been saying, and what tweaks you need to make to the course, so she continues to be a happy, cheerful willful follower. This can be hugely valuable, when you’re going against her conscious and subconscious long-term efforts to turn you more into a beta. The day-to-day routines can indeed pull you down into her feminine frame (especially after the holiday season). Now once you’re away and have time to build yourself into a better man, you come back better prepared. And ready to fuck her brains out.

Good luck guys and safe travels.
What is an Alpha Widow?

To understand the phenomenon of the Alpha Widow we must look at women’s evolved mating strategy – Hypergamy, a woman’s intrinsic desire to balance the best quality sexual/reproductive male with the best provisioning/parentally invested male. Since a woman’s mating strategy centers on quality in a long term partner(s) women tend to focus on ideals in men. The imperative drive for mate quality extends to both sides of women’s Hypergamous equation; the best genetic, sexual experience and the best long term security potential. Only women are Hypergamous, and Hypergamy never seeks its own level – it is always seeking a better-than-merited exchange in SMV compared to her own. For more information on this concept read False Equivalencies.

When a woman misses the opportunity to consolidate on a confirmed, high SMV (sexual market value) male that man becomes the new standard for what she believes she can attract as a potential mate.

“I’ve an SMV 8 guy before so in the future no man below an 8 will be my optimal choice.”

Even if a woman’s perception of her own SMV isn’t realistic her Id wants what it believes it can get.

The setting of a mating strategy metric in men is largely a subconscious process for women, but, more often now, high-ego women do consciously acknowledge that one man does (or doesn’t) meet the SMV benchmark of a previous lover. As women have become more comfortable in embracing Open Hypergamy, amongst their girlfriends, on social media, they will readily debate this SMV metric of past boyfriends. The Alpha Widow dynamic is no secret among women. Usually this involves women bemoaning the lack of “eligible” men in their lives when their prime SMV years are behind them. Please note that eligible implies an entitlement to a man who would be an ideal.

This qualification process is a constant for women, and it’s a complement to mens’ Burden of Performance. Women’s Hypergamous filtering process evolved from an Existential Fear of pairing with any man beneath her own (self-perceived) SMV and risking her life on a bad reproductive bet. The worst existential prospect for a woman is to have her mating strategy superseded and controlled by that of a suboptimal man.

The flip side to this dynamic is that, evolutionarily speaking, a woman’s subconscious cannot afford to miss out on an optimal Hypergamous pairing. If a woman’s Existential Fear is to be forced to reproduce with a lesser man, the next fear is to lose or miss out on the opportunity to consolidate on monogamy with a high SMV man. When I talk about how a woman will make rules for Betas, but break rules for Alphas this is the root of that principle.

As such, a man who exceeds a woman’s SMV, and creates a benchmark of her ‘personal best’ ideal male to breed with and parentally invest with, makes a significant impact on her psyche; sometimes in the long term. When a woman has had this man – one for whom she has genuine, organic desire for – but she cannot consolidate on him (i.e. lock down in monogamy), this represents a critical loss of the ideal Hypergamous/Reproductive/Life strategy option. Mentally this is what a woman will strive in some way to recreate with subsequent men in her life – a return to that ideal state.

This then is the basis of the Alpha Widow:

A mental fixation on the man who made the most significant impact upon a woman as her Hypergamous ideal.
45 Days Later
by Reddjive | October 26, 2016 | Link

So my sweet little 11 year old girl, full of smiles and braces, has become yet another angry child in the house. The first morning it started I was at the table having come home from the gym and a 12 hour shift at the jail. The 11 year old has flown into a rage over every thing, and I could hear her and her mom getting into it over everything. Ahhh the joys of pre-teens.

My youngest kids, boy and girl (7 and 6) came plodding down the hall.

Them: Jackie's (name changed) angry again.

I nodded

I could have decided then and there to wade in like a general on the battlefield. Separate the two and find out what was the cause. And like a good diplomat solve the situation and get the things moving again. That really wouldn't have solved anything but got me embroiled in the emotional turmoil going on. Like wrestling with a pig. Pig's happy, I'm dirty.

What would I be instead? The calm one. The rock. Against all the emotional storms raging around me I am the one unmoved. I sat there and engaged the littles. I asked about the day they were about to have, what they were looking forward to and some how got roped into promising to take them to a haunted house this weekend. All the while down the hall way a war was being waged. Yet things in Switzerland were fine.

Soon the wife came down the hall. Looking hot as fuck. Woke me up better than coffee. I sat back. She was angry as hell. I don't think I've ever seen that anger before. To be honest it was kind of hot.

Me: hey sexy.

Wife: Don't sexy me. What are you going to do about your daughter?

Me: She deserves a spanking.

Wife: You can't Spank an 11 year old. I can't believe your are being obtuse about this (obtuse is her favorite word).

Me: I wasn't talking about her.

And I reached out and smacked my wife's ass....hard.

She yelped. The littles laughed seeing their mom get spanked. The youngest daughter even remarked that "dad spanked you". As for the wife there was a mix of looks. Incredulous, shock, and yes...happiness. I shit you not a smile briefly crossed her face. It was like a reset, the anger was gone but she tried to pretend it was there. Never ceases to amaze that a smack on the ass can do that.
Wife: I can't believe you did that. Jackie is out of control and all you can think about is my ass.

Me: Pretty much. What else am I going to think about? It's a nice ass.

Wife: How about dealing with your daughter? She won't dress appropriately for the weather and refuses....

I raised my hand like a traffic cop and stopped her from talking.

Me: I'll take them to the bus. You go to work.

She tried to draw me in more with how Jackie can't be this way, what bill needs to be paid, basically giving me a list of shit to do. I sit there and make funny faces at the littles.

Wife shuffles off, no longer angry but certainly bratty. I like bratty girls.

I pack the littles up easily. Jackie is another story. I let her behavior happen parallel to me. What she said or did was not important. Like she was on the outside of the house and we were inside. I did set the standard with her. She was to be ready, eat breakfast, the car leaves on time.

She did none of it. Arguing with me the entire time, though I wasn't arguing. Other than maturity I was literally watching my wife in miniature form.

When time came to leave jackie was still arguing, not dressed right, a piece of toast in her hand, three steps behind everyone else. The car was backing up when she appeared. The bus stop isn't far, but far enough to be a chore. The wife likes to do it and engages the other moms there. I had another plan.

Jackie runs to me as I am backing pulling out and drive away. I watch in the review as her angry little self stomps down the sidewalk. For you SJW out there the bus stop is 4 blocks, and straight down the road. And there are several other kids that are walking to the bus.

She eventually makes it. Humble, cold, I let her in the car to wait the last few minutes for the bus.

Her: I'm sorry dad.

Me: For what?

Her: I was mean to mom and you.

I look at her. She had been crying but there was still some defiance in her. I knew this wasn't over, she was more sad about not getting her way then truly sorry for what she had done, but now wasn't the time.

Me; You need to stop otherwise you are going to be in the cold a lot more often.
She nodded but not truly understanding other then her current feelings. That's fine. This is a long game. I've got time.

The bus came and left. I returned home. Sitting here I thought about what Epictetus said.

First say to yourself what you would be; and then do what you have to do

Epictetus is asking who would you be. What sort of man are you? If you are called to action do you have a plan? Do you have the ability to handle the situation you are about to get into? Are you prepared? I dare say all men are able to handle these situations, but we forget, we hide, and are ashamed to be the one unmoved by the events around us. The Blue Pill desire to appease takes over and we want to be liked, fucked, and happy. You want revenge or want someone to understand so deeply why they failed and why you are right, that you are willing to do anything to prove this.

Stop. Decide who you are. Does the rest of that matter? We forget that all those things are up to us. How we handle events and that we don't need to lower ourselves to that degrading level of validation. Life goes on and it is up to us to make that happen regardless of what goes on around us. Does the argument really matter?

Determine who you would be. MRP gives you that path to discover this. Decide this then do what you have to do.

Acting from emotion is fine. emotion is what gets you into action. Anger, fear, hunger, horny, all these things cause an energy surge of one sort if another and spur you to act. The problem lies when they guide you, take control, and become the only reason you act or think.

Your actions should be measured. Energized by emotion but not guided nor clouded by them. When her emotional storms rage it is not your decision but it is yours to decide how you deal with it. I am repeating MRP teaching but it is important to remember it is a subtle difference.

She can rage all day about one thing or the other. Though you must listen for the underpinning causes of this storm, your action is still the same. Don't deal with emotion, they are merely signs of something greater. She needs to be fucked, comforted, or to know that you are in charge of everything. You need to show her you are. That you are indeed in control and master of not only of the ship, but of yourself.

Seneca gives the best advice, perhaps boils MRP down to one simple sentence.

Step back some distance and laugh.

Later that afternoon kids came home happy and bright. Though Jackie still had (and does have) moments, they are containable and a lot less explosive as that first one. It's a process.

That night I had sex with a very bratty girl.
I have been applying MRP principles since the end of October when I reached a crisis moment in my life and my marriage.

One night, after begging my wife for sex (it would have been only the third time that month), she said, "Why are you acting like such a baby, pouting and whining."

I immediately stopped, stepped out of the room, and went to the bathroom. For the first time in almost a year I stepped on the scale. 350 stared back at me. Now I am a tall man, over 6'4', but that weight shocked me. I hadn't even weighed that when playing college football.

I stepped off the scale, turned, saw myself in the mirror without a short on and looked hard at myself for the first time in years. I was disgusted. I realized why my wife wouldn't willingly give herself to me. I was fat, sloppy and disheveled. Unkempt beard and hair, plain clothes that fit too tight in the wrong places.

Over the past 8 years, 4 kids and 3 moves, I had put on 80 lbs. And has become careless in my appearance and in my attitude. Our sex life had slid toward 2-3× per month and I was exhibiting all the negative beta characteristics I had once despised in other men.

I found RP first then MRP and devoured the content and threads. I read NMMNG and MMSLP and 75 percent of The Rational Male. I began doing all the things I had avoided before on my slide to comfortable mediocrity. (the irony is that comfortable mediocrity becomes painfully uncomfortable).

Since I always had an active social life with other men (something church provides that I don't see in non-religious friends), rarely complained to my wife about work problems, was the sole earner for the family, never went to places or watched movies/shows just because my wife wanted to, and was a good father/spiritual leader for our household, I realized my issues lay elsewhere.

Getting things done, seeing problems and fixing them, keeping up the house, cleaning the things I own and care about, and setting the mood of the household.

I also began lifting and doing cross fit while changing my diet and putting down the fork. Since I had the necessary mass already, the cross fit allowed me to redefine the muscle while losing weight.

I also began flirting with my wife, using amused mastery and STFU to hold frame. Worked on being the oak tree when she raged and learned to discern between different kinds of tests. I began planning activities with her and for her. She loved it.

Finally, I created a shared calendar for our schedule that was color coded and planned out our lives months and weeks in advance. This ended the constant checking in and allowed our communication to be more fun.

Finally and most importantly, I am beginning to learn the power of OI. If things happen the way I want that's great, if not that's great too. I can either choose to join or do something else. It's one part humility and one part not being emotionally needy.

MRP has helped me MAP, our sex life is back and growing, I am becoming more of the man I was at my best, I am accomplishing things because those things are worth accomplishing and I have lost 50lbs while gaining strength and muscle.

All it took was the crisis. That would be my hope and prayer for you and your friends. The crisis forces a choice. Change or die. I'm glad I'm changing.
Sexual Tension

by Alpha_Engineer99 | January 14, 2018 | Link

Got several texts to repost this here in the main sub. So here it is.

First off, the main point of this post is to let hard case newbs understand that there is something called sexual tension. It exists, and you can learn how to build it up and then release it.

Like potential energy in a spring during compression, or first few opening moves in chess, you are building up the energy, more and more, just waiting to release it.

I was a hard case newb, dead bed room, etc. there’s value in understanding the dance I think. I reached the point where I can fuck my wife when I want to, but it’s fun to play with sexual energy. You can feel it in the air. Chicks love the anticipation of it more than anything else. My wife will get so giddy leading up to it and start doing hardcore drive bys on me and flirting. It makes it fun. I’m coming from a place where I could never do anything right, we were like room mates at home, I was a perfect little beta bitch husband that just wanted her to show me some affection, but she was always too tired from the kids, finger fucking her phone, doing the scroll, etc. this is a whole new dynamic now.

The last part about walking into tension also applies to your life. Learn to walk into the tension of any particular situation. At work, dealing with an aggressive asshole, etc.

-------------- Loved the sarcasm in the “Anniversary Ideas” Post yesterday. Had me thinking... It’s funny, but also kind of sad, too.... For how many of us was this the Go-To plan in our marriages ? It sure was for me.

While we can deconstruct what OP was lacking in his post, everything really, one concept that stood out to me was the concept of creating sexual tension with my wife. Well, my complete lack of it pre MRP.

I always thought that my wife would or should want to fuck me for taking her out to a nice dinner, getting a baby sitter, buying an expensive present, etc. This would be my reward for being Nice and dedicating my life to her. Being a nice guy who didn’t force her to have sex. Bullshit. I was boring, predictable, vanilla, beta.

For newbs, She won’t automatically just want to suck your dick at the end of the night spontaneously (well, maybe for vets) Yes, do all the other things that make you attractive by reading the sidebar material, , but you Must stroke her responsive desire throughout the day. Remember, you are doing it for you, not her. Stick to basics: kino, text game, flirt, push/pull, just be awesome. Live your life in the Now.

I’ve been ramping this up last few days with my wife preparing for this weekend. It Was a busy fucking week. I started strong lifts too two weeks ago again after getting injured playing basketball, so I’m incredibly horny this week. Blood pumping. Imma fuck the piss out of her good.

Let her know this, tell her, you want her fucking body, want to ravish it. Ramp it up as the days go by. As my wife was leaving this morning for work, we kissed goodbye, I pulled her into me, pick her up and put on the edge of the counter, grinding, and said I couldn’t wait to rip off her panties off later on.... And I started to unzip her jeans, she was all giddy and laughing, licked my face, gave a wink and headed out the door. I knew she had to leave. We had no time. That wasn’t the point. I wasn’t doing it for her, it’s for me, It’s fun for me to do drive bys. She already text me flirty shit all morning. She is primed up for tonight.

For hard case Newbs, learn how to sexually escalate with your wife. Sex is a build up for her, starts in her mind first. She doesn’t just want to jump to the end of the story (sex) and insert dick in here- like us. Watch any dumb beta Rom Com movie, there’s a story first before he nails her.

Sex is a build up, and then release. It’s a dance. Everything is like this. Listen to the greatest composers (Mozart, Bach) on how they structured their melodies. It’s a slow build up, with spikes here and there, ramping up, a peak, and then release (or multiple .. if you’re good)

Everything needs tension in order to grow. Take a little acorn, it requires tension to expand enough to put enough hoop stress on it to cause it to split, and than attract nutrients from the earth in order to grow into a large powerful tree.

Walk into the tension. Don’t hide from it. Don’t avoid confrontation. That’s where you will grow too. Confront it with confidence. Feel it flow through you, acknowledge it, and walk right into it. When you walk into the tension, your wife will see you in a different light. Chicks don’t do this. It’s your job. Then, you will get those unsolicited BJs. That’s when you will know that your MAP is working.

Be a fucking man. Don’t jump to the end of the story, build it up.
The ultimate covert contract
by bigtuna45 | April 23, 2017 | Link

I am about 18 months into redpill and have made great progress; improvements to my body, social circle, and career prospects. However, last night I realized that I had a MAJOR covert contract; if I improve myself, she won't be hypergamous!

My wife and I went out to dinner with friends. After dinner, the group went to my friend's house and my wife left to meetup with her friends. My group ended up going to a dance club and my wife went to a bar with her female friend. After I left the dance club I went to the bar where my wife was.

I walk in and I see my wife in the corner talking to a guy and she playing with her hair, putting out flirty body language. He was taller than me and better looking though I probably had 30 lbs on him. I had a quick fit in my head and thought wtf! I've been improving so much, why is she talking to him?! Then I quickly remembered - AWALT.

I said hi to my wife then walked straight to the dance floor where she promptly joined me. However, body language doesn't lie - I could tell she was attracted to him.

No matter how much you improve, how ambitious you are, etc. there is someone better than you and she is actively looking for him. Keep improving yourself and make sure that you have options in the case that she does branch swing.
FR: 8 Months into MRP Journey
by XianMRP | June 6, 2017 | Link

To begin, I would like to thank the Blue Pill Professor, Rollo Tomasi, and The Family Alpha for being inspirational and motivational voices in the return to Alphaness I have experienced in my marriage and in my life. Their wisdom, postings, blogs, challenges have given me the insight into how to pursue the kind of life that is worth living and the kind of marriage and family worth having. I thank you and I am sure my wife and kids would thank you as well.

Quick Background: I wrote an earlier post about this, 36, married 12 years, 4 kids, been with same woman since she was 19. She had low N count of 3 and fell for me hard. In the beginning I was too Alpha, pumping and dumping on the side, etc. I stopped living a lie, got right with myself and her, we had kids and I went from healthy Alpha/Beta mix, to pure Beta, maybe with some Omega after our 3rd kid.

Fast forward to October and our sex life was down to 2-3 times permonth, I was begging for sex, wife said I was acting like a baby, took my shirt off and looked hard at self in mirror and was disgusted then weighed myself for the first time in a year and the scale said 340. Someone said it was the Phoenix point. I knew I had to change.

Found MRP, Read NMMNG & MMSLP, listened to BPP youtube videos, started reading The Family Alpha and The Rational Male, and most importantly, I started LIFTING!

Physical: 6'5" 279lbs, down from a high of 340. (Former D1 athlete so transition has been faster then most due to muscle retention of nuclei) Bench: 305 from 225 in November when started. Deadlift: 415 from 315 when started. Squat: 315 from 250 when started. Began grooming myself regularly getting cheap haircuts every 2 weeks and paying for High end haircuts 1x every other month. Pant size went from 44 to 38. Goals by December are:

Frame: I have been working amused mastery and agree and amplify ike a champ. Laughing off her shit tests and making funny comments. For example, last night she wasn't in the mood (which she probably wasnt because her period is coming soon) so I got up to leave. She started saying, "You are so manipulative. You are manipulating me." In the past, I would have defended my self and argued with her. This time I said with a smile, "You are right, watch me manipulate your pants off." She rolled her eyes and I started laughing. Then massage, then clothes off, etc. By the end she was orgasming and thanking me.

Another example is I made a comment about her weight last night. I did it xompletely in jest. And this morning she got up to challenge me on it. I fogged, said I barely remember saying it and then laughed, kissed her on the forehead and said, "Oh, am I that far inside your pretty head?" She smiled and laughed.

Sex: Back to where it was when we first got started. 10-15 times per month, more blowjobs, often spontaneous, in the past 6 months then in previous 5 years, integrated toys and slight dominance. She's letting me do things to her and with her that she never has before.
On top of this, I have taken back control of the condition of my household. Building things, cleaning up the kitchen, cleaning our bedroom, managing the property, being the first one up every day in the house. Basically becoming the man I should have always been.
Rollo Tomassi - AMA 30 Sep, 2016
by stonepimpletilists | September 12, 2016 | Link

Great news for everyone. Probably the biggest name in The Red Pill, and tops in the manosphere, Rollo Tomassi is coming to Married red pill

When

30 Sep 2016, 1700 - 2000 EST. (Time is subject to change)

Why

For those that don't know, Rollo is actually a happily married man, been that way for a while. As such, he's in a unique position to give a great perspective on a quality Red Pill man and gender interactions, beyond plates. He's also been able to do what he does in the manosphere for over a decade, with no Doxx scares that I'm aware of.

feel Free to ask him anything.

A few caveats, before faggots try to fuck this up:

1. If you haven't read the rational male, I would strongly suggest doing so before asking questions. He has limited time, as do the men in here who work. People will respect that, and ensure that your question isn't easily answered by linking a post he has made in the last 5 years.
2. Priority will be given to regulars in the Own your shit threads. Those are the guys who are in here, week after week, starting out of cookie dough, and eventually becoming a man, carved out of wood.
3. This IS NOT PPD, TBP, or any other cuck space. Rule 0 will be strictly enforced. This is not the time for you to bicker about whether the red pill is moral, useful, or a misogynistic cult. No warnings.
4. Leave the top level comments here for new questions. If you have a question that is on the same thread as another one, feel free to comment to it, so Rollo can see questions in greater depth.
5. Rollo loves feedback, I will sticky a thread in here for all thank you's personal stories, photos of his book, pictures of your greyhounds. The better organized this is, the less time he has to spend hunting, and the more time he has to spend interacting with the red pill community.
6. TRP, RPW, and redpillwives are all invited as well. Same rules apply. While they are guests in your sub, be good hosts. If you're commenting in a thread about something that isn't to Rollo, or about Rollo, chances are it isn't supposed to be here.
7. Report anything that doesn't focus on the mission. We are here to here all about Rollo Tomassi. His books, his podcasts, his love for greyhounds, his time in the liquor business, his marriage, future plans, and his meta analysis on the manosphere in general.
Enjoy, I know I will.
The matters we discuss here are all about creating sexual options by becoming a better Man. It is about developing the mindset of abundance and embracing the fact that YOU have control of your life. If you put in the work...

It's also about realizing your wife has similar control. To rehash everyone's favorite example, your wife has control over whether or not she is receptive to your want for sexual intercourse (aka fucking). You may be married and shared in some vows, but you simply do not own her body. If you initiate sex and she gives a ‘hard no’, you back off and play it cool. That's just how it works. This journey is not about forcing anyone to do anything they don't want to do. Quite the contrary. You only control yourself and your job is to work on yourself and make it where she simply cannot fathom saying 'no' to such a high value Man. The sidebar (look to your right--> ) is The Instruction Manual for the assembly of such a Man. Read the instructions before attempting to completely re-assemble yourself.

But there is some good news for you. These rules of control cut both ways.

To beginners, we give the advice that you should simply shut up as you work to internalize all these concepts. You must stop engaging the emotional chaos around you until you can learn how to manage yourself first. But when you begin to establish this stoic frame, your wife feels it and is jarred by it. She will attempt to engage further to test your resolve. You need not engage.

However, what do you do when your wife persists and chases you around the house with her raging emotions trying to initiate verbal intercourse (aka talking)? It's simple...give the ‘hard no’ to her initiations. If you don't want to have a conversation, say 'I'm not having this conversation.' And leave the room. If she persists and continues to follow you around the house demanding you speak while ignoring your 'hard no', remove yourself from her presence physically by leaving the house. Go for a walk, go to the store, or better yet go to the gym. When your wife gives her 'no' to sex and leaves the bedroom, do you follow her around the house with your raging erection trying to jam it whatever orifice she's left uncovered? I'm betting she wouldn't be fond of that, and if she is then you should have just tried that years ago...

Until you're worth fucking, she has every right to say no to sharing in sex. And until you think she's worth conversing with, you have every right to say no to sharing in conversation. But now you're at a stalemate right? Wrong. Your self improvement will break the stalemate. As you build the body of a worthy man who possess strong frame, she will want to engage you sexually. In return and with time, you will want to converse with your now sexual wife who gives off a wonderfully feminine air even during simple talks. Well, that is until the next fitness test...

For the benefit of both you and your wife, break the stalemate and get to work. Read, lift...and repeat.

TLDR: Don’t chase your wife around the house with your raging erection. Don’t let your wife chase you around the house with her raging emotions. Sexual and verbal intercourse is optional.
Having an abundance mentality gets a lot of discussion on MRP. And it should; it is one of the cornerstones of a strong frame. You can't be outcome independent when trying for sex if this is your One Shot and you're desperate for success. Day one shit.

But I've seen a lot of guys—especially newer guys like me—not realize that there are really two kinds of abundance. There is the abundance that comes from knowing you can go down to the local dive bar and end up with some ONS, or lock down a new LTR if that's your thing. This abundance is great for quenching that fear of the relationship falling apart. It lets you respond with actual indifference to threats and run higher levels of dread. It lets you kill the puppy, if you have to.

But there is also abundance within the relationship: literally, is sex within your LTR happening frequently. Are you likely to get shot down if you initiate? Is the sex likely to be good, or starfish? Is getting sex easy enough that you can be lighthearted and fun about it?

Missing either level of abundance wreaks havoc on your relationship. We all know what missing external abundance does. You put your wife up there on a pedestal because she's the only pussy you'll ever get, start acting like a good little beta, and watch as her pussy dries up into oblivion. There's no abuse you won't tolerate and rationalize, and your wife hates you for it.

But when you miss internal abundance, you lack the ability to be OI with sexual initiation. When you've saved up three months worth of betabux and nagged your wife into scheduling some Wednesday night duty sex, and she is "sick" or "tired" and you go angry jerk off in the bathroom, it sucks. And even if you aren't a total faggot and manage to play it off like you don't care, you're still just acting, because you do fucking care. And your wife can tell, and the bitterness just puts more pressure on her to meet your covert contracts and dries her up even more.

Having solid external abundance actually makes the lack of internal abundance more bitter. You think, "fuck you, bitch, there's three women I know who would fuck me right now and you're acting offended that I tried to get inside your size 15 granny panties." And long term, you either cheat or leave, because you're tired of not eating ramen when there's steak across the street.

But when you have internal abundance? That bitterness goes right away. If your wife is "too tired" for sex, but you've fucked the previous four nights and will probably fuck tomorrow, you won't give a shit. And you won't be acting, you'll just know that you can get it when you want it, so not getting it right now doesn't matter.

And like external abundance snowballs on itself (abundance -> more confidence -> more abundance), internal abundance does the same thing (abundance -> OI -> better sex -> more abundance).
Internal abundance without external abundance is unstable. It leads to putting the pussy on a pedestal and all but guarantees that the internal abundance dries up. External abundance without internal abundance leads to bitterness and eventually kills the relationship.

This is why, when starting out, you fuck your wife every chance you get. If you are having regular sex, one off night doesn't send you back into a validation spiral or beta puke. You have to create the sense of abundance within the relationship that you are creating outside of it. Or else the babysitter ends up pregnant.
I've been participating in the weekly OYS threads for over a year now. This is mostly advice for the newbs, but it applies to every one.

“It felt really good to…”

This is a phrase I’ve been seeing in way too often in OYS reports. Here is a small sampling (there are many, many more examples).

It felt good to:

.... Clean up the cars

.... Show off my [195 lb] squat

.... Focus on myself

.... Shoot the shit

.... Change the light switch in the bathroom

.... Be noticed by women

.... Have sex without ejaculating

.... Be alive and game women

... Be aggressively kissed by a drunk, ugly female

... be assertive

... Read the sidebar

... verbalize all the shit I’ve been learning

... set a boundary to turn down late night sex.

... be doing something.

... set boundaries and tell people no

... align with my own goals

... bust out some reps
All of these things fall into 2 categories:

1. Shit that wouldn’t normally feel good, but somehow felt good for you because you are a faggot. You felt the need to tell everyone that it felt good because otherwise we wouldn’t care.

2. Shit you would normally be doing already if you weren’t a faggot.

So why do this? Basically, you are feeling good about feeling good and think that you need to share it. As a result, you pump up your ego and build up more self-protection.

- Self-congratulatory
- Chronically overestimate your accomplishments
- Delusionally positive self-perception
- Constant self-absorption.

In one context (Narcissism / Dark Triad), this is fine because confidence leads to success with women. But in the OYS context, it’s harmful because it leads to an inability to handle failure/rejection and avoiding confrontation/discomfort.

Owning your shit is about owning your shit. It doesn’t feel good. It sucks. It requires real introspection about failures in order to learn from them and improve. Moving from beta behaviors to alpha behaviors is uncomfortable. It’s painful. It doesn’t feel good. Killing the ego is required to begin building frame.

If you feel great every time you leave the gym, you are doing it wrong. If you feel great every time you write an OYS, you are doing it wrong. If everything was rainbows and unicorns, you wouldn’t be here. I wouldn’t be here.

When something really feels good, you don’t have to say it. /u/Red-Sfpplus didn’t need to say “it sure felt good to have two women at one party” or it sure felt good to “anal train my slut”. /u/HornsOfApathy didn’t need to say “It sure felt good to create my 24/7 D/s wife”. Real successes are self-validating. You don’t need to tell anyone how good it felt. We already know.

So when you write your OYS, take a risk and write the uncomfortable stuff, the shit you really need to own. Dig in, get real, and reap the rewards.

And if you find yourself using the phrase “it felt good to...“, take a moment and ask yourself why you are writing it.
Cheating means you are a "Beta Faggot"
by Scurvemuch | August 25, 2017 | Link

In the spirit of some of the recent posts regarding getting sex outside of marriage, I wanted to clarify something for the blue pill morons who think they are red.

If you choose to have sex with someone other than your agreed upon contractual sex partner, understand what you are doing, and why.

Do you need to get your dick wet, because it hasn't seen the inside of a vagina for a decade? - You are not ready

Do you want variety but are getting consistent good sex in your life? - Create your slut

Are you just done with her, but are staying for what ever reason you choose to hamster out? - Well, see if you want to call it cheating cheat verb gerund or present participle: cheating

1. act dishonestly or unfairly in order to gain an advantage, especially in a game or examination. "she always cheats at cards" deceive or trick. "he had cheated her out of everything she had" synonyms: swindle, defraud, deceive, trick, scam, dupe, hoodwink, double-cross, gull; More

2. avoid (something undesirable) by luck or skill. "she cheated death in a spectacular crash" synonyms: avoid, escape, evade, elude; More archaic help (time) pass. "the tuneless rhyme with which the warder cheats the time"

Don't be dishonest with yourself. Do not run away from what you are doing. This will make you feel bad. And feeling bad, guilt, will fuck you up.

Until you are ready to not feel bad about having sex outside of your marriage, no matter how "cheated" your wife's inability to get wet for you makes you feel, you are not ready "What would I be doing if I were single?"

by alphabeta49 | November 29, 2016 | Link

https://www.reddit.com/r/askMRP/comments/5fccwl/get_busy_absence_for_noobs_you_might_be_doing_it/daj8d6f/

This is a post for newbies and intermediates alike. Pros should hopefully be past it, but I don't know. I'm mostly intermediate still.

Act as if you were single

It sounds harsh, acting like you're not married. I mean, this woman is the most important woman in your life, and it is your job as a husband to at least consider her when you are making decisions about your time, money, and attention. You didn't get married just to act like you were single again.

So try acting like you're single. I can see the response now. Deer in the headlights. The idea isn't as much appalling as it is baffling and foreign. Many of you are so far up your wife's asses that you can't fathom acting independently from her.

For the ladies: when you are privileged, equality feels like oppression.

Or, for the men:

When you are a doormat, a healthy balance feels like asshole alpha, ew yuck.

See, men, we are designed to lead. We are designed to take charge. And women are designed to follow. Sure, many of them aren't really good at that, but 1) should that change whether you lead or not? and 2) its partly your fault she is that way, so suck it up for now and lead better from here on out.

When you run every mental idea through the filter of "what would wifey want", you are actually the follower. As much as TFA preaches about keeping her on her toes, do you think he's actually spending the majority of his day thinking about what would get his wife wet? God, I hope not. I hope he, like myself and other hopeless romantics, are spending our time and energy building ourselves, our careers, our muscles, our children, our friendships, and our awesomeness, so that when we do want to turn on our women its exponentially easier.

There are two scenarios in which acting like you're single is especially useful.

1. You're new and desperate to throw off the chains of your blue pill conditioning. Like I said, you're going to feel like you're being a neglectful husband when you go out with friends without asking her... but if she were just your roommate and you were single, would you ask your roommate if you could go out with friends? You might feel like you're sending the wrong signal when you start handling your own laundry, meals, schedule, bedtime, and routine (especially if she's slacking in these areas)... but if you were just roommates, wouldn't you do that anyway? Installing this mental check valve will help you learn how little you need your wife. Congratulations, you found your big boy pants again.

2. You're not sure if this marriage is going to work out, or if you even want it to anymore. I find myself in this camp currently. Acting like you're single when you're considering, planning, or executing an exit strategy will help your confidence as you start to depend less and less on her input. Because soon you won't have it anymore, even if you wanted it. Plus, it will send a message of independence, and maybe, just maybe, she'll take the hint, start stepping up to the plate, and add enough value to your life to convince you to stay.

Big personal example: we're in the process of refinancing our house, flipping it into rental income, and buying our dream home in the nice older area of town. I don't consult her on anything. Sure, I present her options and get her opinion, but its mostly trivial shit like "is this kitchen good enough, since you'll spend 10 hours a day in it?", and always only options that I've already ok'd. The husband's pre-approval, so to speak. Guess what? The mid-century style that I love, which she historically hated, is now an option because I showed her an awesome mid-century house, without asking gasp, and whaddayaknow, she fell in love with it. Its currently at the top of the list. Easy peasy, and I didn't have to break my head trying to convince her. I didn't care enough to.

Small personal example: I used to hang around the kitchen/dining/living area when I would read books or play with the kids, just in case she needed my help. Then I started asking myself, "Would I hang around a roommate, waiting to see if he would need help?" Fuck no. I would hang out with a roommate if we were doing awesome shit together. Besides that, I have my life and he has his. So I have my life now, and my wife has hers, and if she wants to join mine she better come to my side. Its more awesome anyway, we have laughs and six packs (the muscly kind).

Once you've gone "full rambo" (you asshole, you), you will have tasted both sides of the fence and will have a much better grasp on how attached you actually want to be. It might be time, then, to add a little consideration back in. If she's worth it.
Once again the purpose of one of my posts is to caution men to take these changes SLOOOOWLY. There is no hurry. Don't throw it all on the fire at once so that it explodes! Move slowly enough so there is not explosion.

The bottom line is that by following the MRP program, you are making a commitment to "Alpha Up." That is, our goal is to become more "Alpha." That is, our goal is to become a more attractive man. The problem is that we often focus on the sexual side of the equation to the loss of the rest of the relationship.

Yes, it is true that becoming a cave man muscular guy who doesn't take shit from anybody, and is in control of every situation is extremely attractive to women. It is also true that to a certain extent, "Beta" behaviors are counterproductive to the goal of sexual attraction.

That is, being the sweet, caring, considerate, thoughtful, reliable little pussy begger is counterproductive to the goal of increasing sexual attraction and interest.

However.....

If you sprinkle on the Alpha and cut off the Beta we are getting many old and new reports of a poor result and a poor outcome. We have long realized that you cannot just sprinkle some Alpha on it and make the meat taste good.

However, it appears that when you sprinkle on the Alpha AND at the same time suddenly stop being the Beta emotional tampon you were before, then you have suddenly removed the entire reason for her staying married to you. News flash: This is NOT going to make your marriage better.

Add a little "anger stage" into the mix and we have the makings of the cluster fuck described in many stories.

Let me help out especially you "Alpha" guys who are natural assholes. If you are going to sprinkle on some "Alpha" by, for example lifting, doing guy stuff, responding to shit tests, leading etc then it is NOT a good idea to also remove all the "Beta" for example listening to her, expressing emotional connection blah blah.

When we say go slow, we really, really mean it. Don't go Red Pill Rambo. Don't start to challenge your woman, especially in public. Don't remove YOU and your emotional connection to your wife (aka "Beta") at least not completely.

Do cut back on the Beta and increase the Alpha. Do become SLIGHTLY more aloof, confident, and busy. Do make an effort to pass Shit test AND COMFORT TESTS.
Now for the cute animal story brought to you by MRP APPROVED contributor: /u/druganswer (with some minor editing and clarifications).

When I say "play the nice card" I don't mean bend over backwards for her.

For Example: She wants you to go to a play with her, but you have prior commitments to whatever.

Her: Why won't you go to this with me? You never do anything with me.

You: I would love to hun, but I have blah blah blah that night.

Her: That's so like you! You are such an asshole! You only think about yourself!

You: Okay sweetheart.

Her: I don't even want to be around you right now!

You: I understand, I will talk to you later. Go out and do something with your friends/gym/whatever

Her: giving you the silent treatment

You (hours later): Completely different subject as if nothing happened and keeping your "nice card" demeanor Rinse and repeat as necessary. If she tries to have a more adult conversation with you about it, just broken record that you already had plans and you told her that. Even though she is calling you an asshole repeatedly you can say "I see this is important to you, let's look at our schedules and see if there is something that works for both of us in the future."

Do the same thing with brutal sexual rejection. Attack her frame with your frame of being a happy guy who gets along with his wife no matter the circumstance.

You are not pulling your time and attention as a "punishment" or based on how you feel about her actions.

For newer guys until you have read all the sidebar and have been lifting for a minimum of 6 months, the only time and attention pulling you are doing here is getting yourself busier. This is part of your long term goal anyway) and when she basically tells you that she is sick of your shit and doesn't want to be around you guess what? You have a place to go so...no big deal!!!

Draw her into that frame....it is not big deal. See you sweetie.

If you're thinking "This is standard MRP stuff dude," then go the head of the class because there is a perception that MRP is about becoming the asshole Alpha who DNGAF! That's what we say ALL THE DAMN TIME.

What is often left unspoken is that YOU ALMOST ALWAYS NEED SOME BETA IN A MARRIAGE IF YOU ARE GOING TO MAKE IT WORK So this is MRP stuff and hopefully you get it. If not, keep studying, you will get it sooner or later.

The problem is that some of the advice to new guys is "tell your wife she's being a bitch!" and "Don't hang out with her if she isn't putting out!" and it causes all sorts of fuck ups. So the new guy is getting his shit in order somewhat, but absolutely creating the bumpiest road possible while he still very much does not have his shit together. He's gone to the gym for a month straight, but now he just decided to skip his wife's birthday like that's not going to blow up in his face.

Trial by fire is definitely a thing. And it's those confrontations that will make him more comfortable with things in the future, I get that. However, I am really adamant that 6 months of rock solid "nice card" frame (while doing whatever you want behind the scenes) would benefit most of the guys just starting out.

The major problem I see with the new guys is them thinking they have to assert their dominance or protect their ego or something. I'm not sure exactly what to call it, but I see the above hypothetical situation ALWAYS ending as the woman screaming that he is an asshole and him either deciding "he will not accept this tone!" and calling her a bitch or trying to out silent treatment her. In case you were wondering, THAT IS NOT THE GOAL OF MRP.

there's definitely a time for telling your wife she's being a bitch, but it's probably when you have your own emotions in check and you aren't going to rattle off a laundry list of shit you hate about her and end with both of you not speaking for a week. And there is a time to ghost your wife, but it's probably not when she doesn't see your time and attention as anything worth a shit.

If you try to do too much too soon you're going to end up with a wife that has just proven to herself how much of an asshole you are or is happy with your newfound absence. Even if that doesn't happen, you risk turning her into a crazy mess when you start "punishing" her for every boundary that you used to let her walk all over you on. So even in a lot of the best outcomes of this overdoing it at the start she ends up neurotic and walking on eggshells around you because the guy who used to cry to her begging for her attention turned into the guy screaming at her that she is a terrible wife and he won't put up with this shit any longer, of course in between stints of trying to "remain OI and DGAF."

So that's why I suggest saying "For 6 months I'm not going to punish her, take anything out on her, or do anything for her in hopes of her doing something for me in return. No matter how shitty she treats me I will respond with kindness, but I will also get my shit together and start doing things for me."

bpp note: At LEVEL 4 DREAD I SUGGEST THAT YOU "BEGIN CONDITIONING YOUR AVAILABILITY TO HER WITH HER SEXUAL AVAILABILITY TO YOU This means at 4-5 months you can BEGIN CONDITIONING. Not jump from 0 -500 suddenly. Begin! At 4-5 months. Not before. /u/druganser is exactly right saying 6 months before you really stop playing your nice card. Before that, play your "nice card basically all or most of the time."

I have stolen his anectdote and quote it verbatim- well worth the read guys because it explains so much:

Growing up we had a cat. Really nice cat, but definitely an "only cat" and it was very cat like in that it had times where it completely wanted to be alone and would get annoyed at you if you tried to pick it up or pet it. Now... we ended up finding this other little kitten and wanted to give it a home.

This kitten had the most solid frame of any living being I have ever seen. It wasn't afraid of anyone... people, other cats, anything. It basically thought it was the shit.

Old cat HATED IT. Swiped the shit out of it anytime it got near, hissed at it if it was even in the same room, would go out of its way to avoid the kitten. What did the kitten do? Didn't even notice. Tried to play every day. Would turn the angry swats of the old cat into a game. This lasted for at least a month. We were pretty certain that we just had two cats that would never get along. But the kitten was so resilient and had a frame of "hey best friend" that was so strong the old cat eventually gave in.

I'm looking at this in hindsight, but this was the most literal example I can think of that I have ever seen of something imposing its frame on something else. Everyday swatted at, everyday hissed at, and never did it think to hate the old cat... never once did it hiss back. Never once did it doubt that they were going to be friends and play together, even in the face of absolute resistance. They ended up getting along great for the rest of their lives. Would it have turned out like that if the little kitten had occasionally snapped and attacked the old cat? We can't know for sure, but I would say I doubt it.
You’re Being Cucked. What Do You Do About It?

by Reddjive | August 30, 2018 | Link

This comes up often. I get tired of correcting it comment by comment. A lot of unplugging guys are really good at hiding the fact that they are trying to figure out if thier girl is fucking Chad. In my early early days I did this. Wondered if my STBX was fucking when she said she was at a study group. Maybe she was. Maybe I don’t care, but I wasn’t about to drive 40 minutes to the university to find out. In fact it’s a visceral fear of most men except for you freaks that seem to think it's some sort of fetish.

/u/friendandadvisor makes this point:

> If I were a man in this situation, I would most definitely want to know if I were being cucked. Actually, in ANY situation, I would like to know if I were being cucked or not!

This is wrong thinking. Sure seems Alpha though. This is in Insecure Alpha. You are in her frame at this point. Seriously if your time is so precious you have an abundance to devote a portion of that to finding out if your girl is out with Chad rather than going to the grocery store like she said. I got engaged to my college girlfriend. It was the thing to do. I admit that I didn’t think it out. Army Cadet and they plant this idea that marriage is a career move. It can be if you have the right girl. A year in i caught her with her first boyfriend whom she had broken up with like 5 year ago. There were flags, but in college schedules tend to get changed quickly in the last year. So I had gut feelings, but no proof. Until my Army buddies started calling me telling me they saw her here, there, and in some guys dorm room. I took action right then. Moved out and haven’t talked to her since.

Then we get shit like this. Why are you going around chasing her just to see if she is fucking Chad? You already know how this turns out. You already know she is fully capable of doing it. I am Chad. I know. If your girl is throwing red flags it’s not about finding them. Red flags can be life events. Red flags can be paranoia. Stop trying to account for red flags. You are living in her frame. By the time you see them your instincts have already told you what you need to know. Wondering, worrying, being overly concerned about what she is doing. It’s about knowing what you will and will not put up with and sticking to it. This is about your self respect. This way no one controls you

Being cheated on is the ultimate fear of any red pill man, of any man really. There is literally nothing more of a punch to a guy than finding out he’s been an eskimo brother to the entire block. Beta’s just kind of accept it as the result of their life and do nothing about it. I am talking about guys who haven’t fucked their wife in 6 years or more and wonder why. The potential is there for any man to be cucked. Yet being cucked is not in and of itself failure. She did not just walk along the street and suddenly a man so alpha made her panties fall and she was powerless. She made the decision to do it. We know why she did, and that is where men can be guilty. Even still she can make that decision no matter how Alpha you are. She was never yours. The why is unimportant to this discussion it’s the action that is more important.
So your girl decided that Chad had a better dick than you. So what? What you do next is what defines you. If she wants to be the neighborhood pin cushion her choice. Realize your vetting sucked ass and do better next time. Tracking your wife/LTR is tantamount to mate guarding. For that matter setting her down to go over boundaries is ridiculous. Might as well have her sign a relationship agreement. It’s like the dad who tells his teen daughter she can’t go out on a Friday night and the next thing you know she’s sneaking out the window to jerk off the football captain at the trash can party in the vacant lot.

I believe this paranoia, this drive to constantly find out if she is cheating on you, is from fear. The first fear is that you won’t be able to leave with the upper hand. that’s it right? you want to exit the relationship leaving her broken, alpha widowed, and at the top of your game. Sorry bub, doesn’t work like that. You will never know in your life time if you Alpha widowed a girl. Maybe you find out, but it won’t be noticeable immediately. Not only that but women have this amazing ability to rationalize anything. They will have moved on. Though remember, women connect memories to emotion. What memories are you connected to? The ones where she saw you as a suspicious loser or a strong alpha? Doesn’t matter if you were right or not. It was never about that.

The second place this fear comes from is failing to have achieved Outcome Independence. It’s difficult to flip that switch to caring but not caring. In life there are only 3 problems to solve. This is where your work is. Being cucked isn’t the problem. What you do when you find out is.
In Japan, there is an art style born out of necessity. When a pot or prized ceramic piece is broken, instead of throwing it away or discarding it, the piece is repaired with highly ornamental glue of lacquer and gold dust. Sometimes a piece is replaced with another piece from something else, but in the end the result is the same. The new piece is made whole again with its flaws highlighted; even celebrated.

From this, a philosophical style has been born, the philosophy of embracing the imperfect; highlighting the flaw. It can be a powerful tool to win an argument, or even reset the standard thinking.

I Got This

A few years ago, my wife had planned a party for our youngest kids. Like always, she over committed and her planning was off. Sometimes I rescue her; sometimes I let her flail to learn a lesson. At this point I’d determined that she wasn’t going to fail and a rescue was not needed. I was doing my usual Saturday morning routine of lawn chores when she came outside and got into command mode, “Go down to [Friends house], and pick up the big coffee pot.”

“Um, no thanks. I’m right in the middle of something.”

“Don’t you see I’m running around like crazy here? You never help me when I need it. I’m trying to do something nice here for the kids.”

SHIT TEST! some of the more inexperienced of you may scream. It is of sorts, but let’s unpack it in its entirety. Early in the morning I specifically asked her what she needed done. She gets angry at this sometimes partly because she doesn’t know but also because she thinks she’s got it under control. She rattled off a list of things and how she would tackle it. As a good captain, I offered any tools she may need, and she declined as she had it under control. I repeat, I specifically asked, “What do you need of me?” and she replied, “I think I got it.”

Cue to the front yard again and here she is proclaiming she was doing this for us. And in her lizard brain she was. Never mind that I didn’t ask her too, on top of the fact I had already offered help. Her reaction was you never when I…

Now this could have been dismissed as a simple shit test, but what it really was, was bad behavior disguised as a shit test. Bad behavior needs to be dealt with appropriately so that good boundaries are maintained. In this case she needs to learn to ask for help in a timely manner and not demand results when things are going wonky.

So I asked her, “Are you asking me or telling me? Because I would never tell you what to do.”
The hamster wheel starts to spin. “Of course I was asking. Do we have to do this now? I’m really busy here”

“Because if you were asking, then I have the right to say yes or no?”

“Really are we doing this now?”

“I’m just asking, do I?

“Yes you do.” The hamster wheel was now approaching full speed.

“I clearly offered help this morning. You declined. Now I’m in the middle of a project and I’d rather not drop everything. So don’t try to make me feel bad for your poor planning.”

Here’s where she broke down. She saw the error of her way and came close to sobbing. “I forgot about some things... I’m running out of time... I’m sorry, yes you can say no. I didn’t realize you were in the middle of something. I need the coffee pot so I can get it ready before everyone shows up [it takes a while to brew]”

[EDIT FOR CLARITY: I did not get the coffee pot. I finished the work I was doing and at some point I think she went over to said friends house and got it, as it’s only a block away.]

Making It Whole Again

The flaw in this pot was the right to say no. It was broken and she was being a bitchy harpy thinking she could go around barking out orders because she fucked up and couldn’t plan. So it needed to be highlighted in a way that she could relate to. Was she asking or demanding? When put on the spot, her own words were “asking”. So I highlighted it by putting it in a context she would relate to, namely I give her choice why was I not allowed the same? I took an ugly broken shard and highlighted it for her to see. This comes up again and again, particularly with the journeymen redpill guys. They’re just starting to bust through the easy shit tests, they have their technique down pat, and of course she ups the game. Think of it like shit testing for the masters’ class. She knows you’re strong in the moment, but do you have strong frame for those blurry boundaries that go beyond a simple compliance test?

My wife in this moment had clearly passed some boundaries I was not happy with. Namely, don’t treat me like shit because you are being ineffective. I could have been a prick and told her to go pound salt, I could have upped the beta and gave into what potentially was a lightly disguised comfort test, “You never help me when I need it.” But I didn’t, instead I chose to focus on the big picture, in this instance being pleasant and asking for real help when you’re in over your head.

The big difference in LTR game is we need to manage the relationship so that it stays mutually beneficial. You can spin a plate, and let it fall if things become untenable. She may demand more time than you are willing to give, she may demand commitment, etc. so now the value proposition has become unbalanced, so you let her drop. It’s a simple solution.

While we maintain that there’s always a walkaway point in an LTR, you do have a real investment. Not just sunk cost, but future earnings to think about. In an LTR, that might be your wife being mom to your kids, being a supportive first officer or even being a trusted partner in crime (not partner, maybe trusted sidekick?). At the very least she is a complement to your life. I want people in my life I can trust so I have to nurture and invest in that relationship. Investing in that relationship comes in the form of clear boundaries and a framework for understanding.

So here my wife broke a few boundaries and instead of defending why I was right and she was wrong, I played upon her emotions. I asked her how she would feel if I did the same thing to her. I played to her emotions on the situation, not the facts.

At its heart, this is why DEER (alternatively JADE) fails. It fails in its method, expecting people to see facts, and it fails in its delivery, ignoring the emotion. Your wife is an emotional being, so are you for that matter. You need to use those emotions to your advantage, not try to bludgeon them away or dismiss them.

My wife broke down, she apologized and came and cried in the crook of my neck. “I’m sorry, I just want this to be nice. We don’t spend a lot so I want this to be a nice experience for them.”

In the end I think a lot of guys fail because they don’t make the leap from being a technician to a master. Sure they can blow a shit test out of the water, or manage a comfort test to a happy conclusion. To be a master is to manage those situations so that boundaries are clearly established and future behavior is managed. Whether we like it or not, our lives are intertwined with our women. The technician level thing to do is let plates drop; turn this dial, punch that button, oops not working, mission cancelled. The master level is to manage these situations so that they are easily dealt with, prior to them happening. We want to punch the buttons and turn the dials so the machine is humming and running on a high level, not just feed-back but feed-forward control.

The next time you are in the heat of an argument, take this as a learning moment. Don’t run from what is broken but instead highlight it and use it to your advantage. Let people’s emotions move them to convince themselves of your argument. You can always get compliance, but don’t you really want engagement?

Epilogue

We've had several parties since that moment. Things still get out of hand, but two things are noticeably better. She comes to me before hand and asks for her captains input. Things like, *I need to do this, this and this...", "Do you think, x, y, z" before she ever starts to execute. She'll also come to me, with humility and ask, "Yeah I fucked up and forgot...". It helps with the things we can affect, and makes the things we can't easier. The machine is running smoother and everyone is happier for it.
Finally

Here

Honestly, I'm not going to sum it up. All I can say, it's everything I've learned and shown to other guys in here. It's as best I can explain MRP in less than an hour. I've got a ton more of these, a lot smaller though, and now that I have the speech out here, they can have their context.

Not going to lie to you, when practicing, it takes 57 minutes. When it was live, it was closer to 50. I've since padded and edited it to make more sense as an essay, making it 50% longer. It's not a short read, so here you go, take it or leave it.

TLDR; It's the fucking sidebar with some stories to keep your ADHD from wandering.

If you really want to watch and hear my run my mouth

Pathos
Pathos
And Logos
FR: almost 3 years swallowing the pill. Personal reflections
by CopyAndPaste2015 | March 23, 2018 | Link

Background: 40 year old, senior professional in highly regulated environment. SO 42, together 14 years, married 9. 2 kids, 6 and 8 year old. If there was a picture of the definition of the Nice Guy it would be definitively my own. There were a lot of beta traits and covert contracts to deal with in the beginning. I found out the red pill after a short period browsing r/deadbedrooms and devoured all the info. On the first few months I managed to go red pill Rambo and fuck things up even further. After that I STFU, took the advice from MRP, continue lifting and worked on my MAP. I reread all the recommended books again and this time I took time to let it sink in. This is a self-reflection of my own journey which, by all means, it is far from perfect. I will make the 3 year mark of swallowing the pill around June/July this year. I want to share some nuggets that might/might not be beneficial for men unplugging.

- The journey is about you and not about her or anyone else. If you, (like me), start your journey with a post like “how can I get more sex from my wife?” then I’m talking about you. I have never been truly alone, (no girlfriends/wife), and I was truly dependent on my SO to fill my needs. Following the book read about the MAP, (man action plan), I had no idea where I wanted to be personally/professionally/financially in 3/5/10/20 years’ time. It took me over 6-9 months to figure this out. Focus on this and don’t put any names on your plan, (does not matter the place, company or person; at the end of the day it is about you!). My only caveat on this is that my plan includes my kids.

- Lift, exercise regularly, but most importantly, control what you eat. My progress on my physique was delayed because of this. You will get the benefit of exercising but to see a significant increase on your SMV stop eating garbage!. I have good improvement with IF and Keto, but due to my lifestyle I have stayed on low carb low cal diet. Count your calories every day as you check your cash flow.

- Enjoy the fucking journey. I went full redpill Rambo in your first months and I can assure you it was not fun for anyone and caused a great strain in our family life. STFU should apply and focus on the changes you can make by yourself. After implementing those then there is a lag, (in my case of 6 months), where your SO will test the new frame you are building to the eleventh degree. I enjoyed the path of self-reflection and assessing the things within your control. Things as leading with your kids at home, (those little shit testers), have been great in building the life you want to live in. Meditation should be advised during the anger phase.

- When sex is back be aware of the previous baseline. If your SO decides to be in your frame and be part of your MAP your sex life will definitively improve. My own reflection is that it is unlikely that the frequency will increase more than on those years prior to marriage; that is the baseline. On the other side the quality will massively improve, (sex god method all the way), including things that didn’t happen before.

• A personal note on finances: financial independence. I’m still in the same role I was 5 years ago. My MAP includes to progress to executive/board positions in the mid term, (2-3 years), but I am aware that will not happen within my current company. During these three years I have built my experience in project management and strategic skills and I have engaged with recruiters in looking into new opportunities, but, being in a niche market they have not materialised for different reasons. I ended up demotivated in my role for some time. Nevertheless, when a path is closed a new one will appear. I focused on improving my financial situation; budgeting, saving, tax efficiencies, etc. I read financial blogs and ended up on financial independence blogs. I have saved enough “fuck you” money to, if I decide to do so, leave my current job and be able to carry on living the same life style for over a year. In addition I have an early retirement plan that would allow me to retire in 6-7 years if followed. This has caused me to increase motivation in my current role with a new, fresh approach. I always talk my mind and senior management has taken this new approach favourable. In addition a weight has come out of my shoulders and I keep being contacted in linkedin for new opportunities, and I know the right one will come, (or early retirement whichever comes first).

So, what’s next?

I truly don’t know but I have enough occasions where I took to foot off the gas pedal and see your frame being damaged, if not destroyed, in a blink of an eye. I now live by my work and I know consistency is key. I’ll keep lifting and controlling my diet and building on my map. If my SO wants to continue be part of it then great but that is only the cherry on the top. I will focus to continue building the man I want to be.
I look for ways to lead my wife into adding more value to my life. This example alone doesn’t mean shit. This is simply a single observation.

For the record, a year ago I was getting passionless dread sex. Now I never get it.

Before we get started: Now what the fuck does all this mean? I had to rewrite this fucking post because of the autists here that didn’t seem to get it. So let me spell it out for you: If you want your woman to add value to your life, you must give her ways to do so THROUGH YOUR LEADERSHIP. You must give her side-missions that support your mission. I need to gain weight. Meatballs have protein. Plain spaghetti doesn’t. Thanks, wife.

Before you autists jump in.... The meatballs are clearly not the point of this fucking story. JFC.

I thought of this story because my wife came up to me tonight and said, “Hey Horns, I’m making meatballs for dinner tonight, again.” With a kiss on the cheek and a bicep grab. So here we go, this all happened about a week ago.

It has been a long day of running around and getting shit done by everyone, and my wife approached me asking if it was OK if she just made spaghetti for dinner. I sensed approval seeking in her voice. Frankly, boring spaghetti sucks. It was a long day, afterall, and I knew that my wife was tired. Instead, I decided to test her. “Do you think you could make meatballs sometime with spaghetti?”

I decided a while back my wife added value by preparing good meals. My wife has never made meatballs before.

> "Oh, I don’t know Horns. It’s late, I still have to go to the grocery store, but if you want to... can you look up a recipe and maybe I’ll try to make it?"

I didn’t catch the compliance test in that statement at first. She was testing me back with my compliance test with a test of her own. Sly little girl. After fumbling through cookbooks for about 5 minutes, I caught it. Stopped. Fuck. I need to recover.

I told her: “Oh, it’s ok. If you want to make them some other time, you should find the recipe. I’ll trust you on this one. I have to go take care of some things.”

Why did I say this? By trusting her to complete this task (her task) I implied that this was her opportunity to bring value to the relationship. Either she would do it herself or not. DNGAF. She can choose to add value or not.
Dinner time came and the most predictable thing happened – she had found a recipe herself and was prepping meatballs to be baked in the oven. Dinner came and they were fantastic! Perfect I might say. I even went for seconds. I’m now hearing the following statements during dinner:

- “These weren’t so hard to make, it was really quick!”
- “They turned out pretty well didn’t they?”
- “I’m so glad they are moist and not hard like rocks!”

Why all these statements? She was seeking my approval. Trying to figure out if she was good enough and it made me happy. I did not satisfy her desire during dinner, because I realized long ago that dishing out praise when warranted is a double-edged sword. Too much praise, and your approval is too easy to obtain. Too little praise, and you risk her feeling worthless.

The feminine grows through praise.

It left her hamster in suspense of “Did I do well enough?”. Take too long and she will test. I’ve discovered this through thousands of failures and successes of tests. Like most faggots that "get it" 'round these parts... it comes second nature now.

Later that night we went to bed. Before I could even initiate (those meatballs were damn good and I was proud of her)... her hand was already on my cock. Damn, this woman is STILL seeking my approval but now with comfort. If you’ve read anything I’ve written in the last year, you know that I’ve managed to build this comfort approach with my wife where she now associates sexual desire with comfort. That riled me up into a very heavy initiation of my own.

I flipped her over on her belly and forced her down onto the bed. I grabbed her by the arms just above her elbows in the perfect squatting position, pinning her upper back against my chest and pulled her back to her knees. I entered her from behind, holding her arms behind her with my hands tightly and fucked her on her knees. Hard. Fast. Her back was overextended (not good for squatting but her tits were out and looked great facing the mirror across the room). As I fucked her from behind, she came quickly, and I shortly thereafter. We both collapsed in the puddle of juices she had dripped onto the sheets below us.

I threw her on her side of the bed onto her back and she collapsed trying to catch her breath. In a sheepish voice she said, “Oh my god, Horns. That’s exactly what I needed.”

Of course you did, sweetheart. I know.

She finally had the approval and validation of a man of value that she had added value to. I smiled. Her praise was complete, and she was happy. I was happy too. The cycle of mutual gifting was complete. I turned my body over on top of her and ran my fingers along her the sides of her face slowly. She quivered and sighed. Her legs were still shaking. I watched her eyes close, and then open again and she stared into mine. I felt the connection. She felt it too. She started to say something, but I pressed my finger against her lips and said a quiet “Shhhhh” to her.
“What?” she said, my finger pressed against her lips still.

I looked into her deeply and said: “Thanks for the meatballs, babe.”

CONCLUSION

You must give your woman opportunities to succeed in small ways everyday, or she will become bored with you and just go back to what she knows. What have you taught her? In my case before all this realization, this usually manifested itself in my woman furiously cleaning. Or giving me passionless dread sex. Or doing more laundry unnecessarily. Your woman will only add value in ways that you’ve taught her to.

What I attempted to do here was lead my wife to a new recipe, a new way to provide a small amount of value to my life so that she remembers that. And guess what? It works, faggots. If you give your wife 100 different ways to do small things, you might forget about them - but I assure you that if you reward her, then the next time her hamster goes wild trying to figure out how she’s going to keep a high value man, she may remember that time she made you meatballs and she was handsomely rewarded. She learned that made you happy, it in turn made her happy, and she benefited in the end as well. It’s all about her feelz in the end.

This is also an example of creating the rollercoaster of feelz.

Remember – women are generally defined by solipsism. They can only really see into themselves and their benefits subconsciously. If you reward good behavior and praise these things you enjoy, this will grow her femininity in ways that YOU can control and manage...

and lead.

So lead, motherfuckers. Quit expecting your wives to read your mind. That’s a covert contract. Just man the fuck up and tell her what you want. And don’t be like me and miss the compliance test she’ll inevitably throw right back at you as a last ditch effort to test if you’re a man worth putting effort into.

Do you want some practicality to this post, you autistic faggots? Lead your wife by telling her exactly how you want her to suck your cock. Praise her every time she tries to do what you tell her to. Feed her ego. Praise, praise, praise. Before long you’ll have a woman that not only knows how to suck dick well, but she’ll also know how to suck your dick exactly the way you like it! Want to blow a load on her face? Tell her how hot it is. Tell her how you love to see it. Tell her to spit on it. "Oh god, you are so hot. Spit on it MORE." Praise the things you want even when they aren't praiseworthy. Praise, praise, praise.

Strength, motherfuckers.
I ran across an old episode of "Wife Swap" from the UK. You remember that show? Not exactly sure how it came on, YouTube just sort of does what it wants sometimes. Here it is if you're interested.

They're British, and as such, quite unattractive the lot (sorry). If you're not familiar with the show, basically they send two wives to each others' homes for ten days. They've got to deal with the other's husband, kids, routine, finances, etc. Honestly, it's fascinating from a MRP perspective.

This one really grabbed me in several ways. Obviously, in an effort to make it a "fish out of water" story, they put the wives in dramatically different environments. In this one, there is a rich man and a poor man.

The rich man comes home from work and spends the rest of the day and weekends in his man-cave playing XBOX and slot machines. Occasionally he goes to the pub to play slot machines as well. He pays his wife to do everything. 5 pounds to iron a shirt, 10 pounds to take the boy to his karate lesson. There's even a not-so-subtle allusion to him paying her for sex.

The poor man is poor--and I mean fucking poor. Not exactly sure of the exchange rate, but I reckon his family of four survives on less than $1000 a month.

The poor man OWNS HIS SHIT. He works full time. He cooks. He cleans. He plays with the kids. He saves up all week to take the family out to an arcade on Saturdays.

This rich, boojie, well-dressed, spoiled-to-shit wife ends up at the poor man's house and HAS A BLAST! By the end of the 10-day stint, she's openly talking about leaving her rich husband. The poor wife goes to the rich man's house and is absolutely disgusted by his behavior.

The money plays such a minor role in the dynamic as to be nearly inconsequential. Quite the eye-opener.

Lessons Learned

- Own your shit
- Be fun
- Lead your family
- Fuck the money
"We suffer more often in imagination than we do in reality." -Seneca

Overcoming my real and imagined fears, and actively seeking more fear, has become an important cornerstone of my frame for a range of reasons. Control of your real and imagined fears is a prerequisite of a Leader, dare I say, an Alpha. It’s a topic I'd like to expand on here.

In essence, fear can be divided into real and imagined fear. Real fear is obvious - if you swim in the ocean and see a big shark, that’s real fear, because you might really die. If you refuse to swim in the ocean because of worry about sharks you cannot see, that’s imagined fear, created in your head. I challenge you to think about how often you seek and experience real fear, which is pretty easily avoided in modern everyday life.

By contrast, imagined fear is a preoccupation with the unknown, specifically possible outcomes in the future. Fear of the unknown manifests as anxiety quickly because humans have a large brain that likes to ‘run possible scenarios’. This has positive uses such as creativity and problem solving. But some problems you are trying to solve have no easy solution or there are too many unknowns to be able to settle on a single most likely solution. Unsolvable MRP problems such as your wife’s potential infidelity leads you to seek further evidence through ‘hamstering’ or ‘looking for signs’.

Where real fear is no longer common in modern society every day life, Anxiety and overthinking are extremely common and unique to all of us - e.g. fear of plane travel. Your brain can’t compute the concept of flying through the air, but your brain knows is that if you are up high and there is nothing below, you are going to fall. And if you are high enough, you are going to die. Hence the logical connection between plane flight and death. But you ‘know’ flying is safe, so all you can do is buckle up and listen to the pilots announcement and make an assessment as to whether or not he/she sounds like a ‘good pilot’. Maybe you try to pick their nationality from their name and think about if they are good at pilot training in that country. You probably also look at how close you are to the exit, and if that fat dude in the exit row is really going to be able to open the door on this tin can we are all in.

All of what I described since you got on the plane is overthinking in response to your fear of falling and dying. Overthinking and ways to manage it has already been covered here so I'll leave it at that.

Stoicism and OI are the number one theories that explain how to control your unknown fears. But this does not address the active seeking of real fear. If you want to grow as a man you need to find some real fear, seek it out and face it head on - get out there and scare yourself, do something with a bit of risk. Lifting and regular sports won't give you what i am talking about. Like I have said before, once in a while you need to arrive home thinking, "I am glad I made it out of that!". So stop being a pussy and get out of your comfort zone - Harness what you had when you were 20 if that helps. A little bit of real fear in your life will wipe away those imaginary concerns that your wife's last text message seemed "a bit short". Instead you'll arrive home with the look of a man who has been outdoors, seeing shit and doing shit, and 'she' is the last thing on your mind. And that is attractive.

Facing and controlling your real and imagined fears should be a priority area for your ongoing development. Proving such mastery of fear is a clear indication of a leader of men.

We can easily forgive a child who is afraid of the dark; the real tragedy of life is when men are afraid of the light. - Plato Is this it?
by drty_pr | September 30, 2018 | Link

So with TRP being banned, are we going the way of the dodo too? If so, it's been a good run motherfuckers and thank you for helping me pull my life together.

Peace 🙏
Echo Chamber: An enclosed space where sound reverberates.

I, and you probably also - have an echo chamber. It is located in your head.

This echo chamber is an interesting place to hang out in. It is where plans come to life, anxiety is created and people get lost in their history. This echo chamber is where your hamster lives, where you wonders live, where the uncertainty of your live grows.

Inside this echo chamber, you wonder:

Did she cheat?

Does she love me?

Should I dump Mandy?

How do I build a D/s relationship?

Should I apply for that job?

Why did Joe get the promotion and not me?

Should I try to pull 315, or is 275 good enough?

Where do I want to be next month, in a year, in five years?

Can I ever respect a woman I pee on? Do I even need to?

Your echo chamber is not all bad. It is where Outcome Independence (OI) is born. In competition there are three possible outcomes. Win, lose, tie. When you visit your echo chamber, you are run through the various scenarios so that you can create OI. You can visualize, and hopefully understand that no matter what the outcome is - the only thing you can really control is yourself, and your reaction to external forces.

The OYS you posted last week? That is you living in your echo chamber. Yes - I purposefully posted this on Monday morning to give you faggots time to ditch your OYS for this week. It is why I always start my OYS with "Dear Diary -".

It is a log, an written down echo chamber. I see far to many men on this forum living inside their echo chamber. I don’t give a fuck about what happened last week in your echo chamber. Where are you going this week?

I will admit - I have been spending far to much time in my own personal echo chamber. Thinking about the possibilities of my divorce, child custody, my future and where I want to go. Lately I have been able to escape my echo chamber and make some serious, yet incremental changes to my life which has been great.

I recently made the connection on meditation. In fact, I have never seen it written like this:

"Meditation is a process by which you can escape your echo chamber, and become present in the moment."

Quote me motherfuckers, I just thought that up.

Its true for me, maybe not for you.

You echo chamber can be a very beautiful, healthy place to visit from time to time.

But get the fuck out of there ASAP.

The only place you can make real change is outside your Echo Chamber.
As a result of our equalist social narrative, women have been conditioned to believe that they can find this security and happiness in some untapped well they have hidden in their psyche if only they can be Strong and Independent enough to access it. In prior essays I’ve made the case that the ultimate goal of our feminine-primary social order has been to facilitate women’s optimizing Hypergamy by essentially outlawing men’s influence on that process. Every gender-based law that’s come into being since the time of the Sexual Revolution; from sexual consent, to what constitutes sexual harassment, to father’s (lack of) rights, to divorce settlement has been motivated by this deep seated female need for an enduring security. This was a security unique to men, but in an ‘equalist’ paradigm it is no longer required of, nor is it expected to be found in, men.

Yet for all of this handwringing, for all of the great efforts needed to legislate men’s direct or indirect financing of this security, and despite every social dispensation intended to empower women to provide this soul-gnawing need for security, women are still not happy.

The masterful Pook once said that the surest way to make a woman unhappy is to give them everything they want. I recently got into, yet again, another debate about the merits or non-merits of Choreplay and whether the idea of women getting hot for guys who do dishes was really a thing,…or not. This time the spin is that women will cheat on their husbands if they don’t do more chores.

As I was requoting myself for this debate I realized how long the Choreplay dilemma has been playing out – the first time I took it on was 2008. Men are deductive problem solvers. We want to make women happy as a means to getting sex, keeping the peace, sustaining intimacy, security, and just making a woman happy. The problem with that is that nothing a man can do will make a woman happy in the long term. In fact, just the whack-a-mole attempt to intentionally try to make a woman happy is itself a display women read as coming from a man who Just Doesn’t Get It.

The majority of men (Betas) would like nothing more than to sustain a woman’s happiness. They’re taught that relationship are always ‘hard work’ and his work will ultimately never be good enough. Even the most dutiful Beta can’t make a woman happy, but their efforts become a process of him negotiating for a woman’s desire. Whether that’s earning the ‘happiness’ of his mother, his sister, his female co-worker or his wife, the effect is the same.

We’ve made women’s happiness a litmus test for how successful a man or his relationships are. The common refrain of a woman leaving a man due to her being “unhaaaaaappy” is almost a cliché in the manosphere now. But if it’s a cliché it’s because this is the go-to reasoning we’ve heard from pop-psychologists, marriage counselors and mommy bloggers for the 70%+ of divorces initiated by women. We are expected to put a premium on women’s sustained happiness in a feminine-primary social order. Women’s happiness has become the prime directive and the metric for a relationship’s success. Any concern for men’s happiness is either a sign of his weakness or his problematic misogyny.
When people look for leadership. One of the things they look for is the ability to maintain composure in the face of adversity. The ability to control emotions plays a big role in this. You are looking for someone who is in control at all times. Whether that emotion be anger, fear, or pain you expect them to be able to process their surroundings and make the right call every time. You are looking for someone that is a master of themselves and their emotions.

In football, the quarterback is referred to often as a field general. Someone that leads the the offense and many times the entire team. Even in a locker room that is swimming with alpha males, there is a hierarchy that exists where the quarterback is in a position that typically commands respect. Well, until it is lost.

Derek Carr of the Oakland Raiders has reportedly "lost the confidence of his teammates" after crying in a recent game. He adamantly denies that he cried, but the melting face look is clearly present. Click here to read the article and see for yourself

Under some pressure and heat, his brother tweeted the following:

| Hit 16 times in that game |
| Broken Pinky Finger (Throwing Hand) |
| Sprained Thumb (Throwing Hand) |
| Knee Sprain MCL Grade 2 |
| High Ankle Sprain Grade 3 |
| Concussion Grade 1 |
| Chest / Ribs Bruised |
| 3 Broken Bones in his Back |
| Broken Fibula Bone in Leg |
| 2 Missed Games (because they made him) |

Was Derek Carr likely in a lot of pain? Absolutely, sounds like he was rightly fucked up. Did he sob and cry on the sidelines like a little girl with snot bubbles and tears? No. Then what is the problem? He cracked. For a few seconds, he let all of the adversity his brother listed above get to him. He showed his emotion and he lost the locker room as a result.

Society will tell you that they want a man that can show his emotions. One who is not afraid to cry. So, then why is Derek Carr taking so much heat? This is because this is misinterpreted far too often. Women don't want weak men. Crying is weak.

The other night, my wife saw a man crying on TV as he was about to win $50,000 on a game show. She has no idea what this man has been through in life. Nor, does it really matter. My wife said to me "I know I cry a lot, but when I see a man do it I'm like, ugh, suck it up!" Truth confirmed. There is no wiggle room here. Weak men cry.

The Oakland Raiders players don't want a weak person to lead them. Your woman doesn't want a weak leader either. Crying at the wrong time, despite the laundry list of adversity you may have, will forever and always change what she thinks of you. Some impressions stick forever and are difficult to shake. Make sure you don't leave these lasting ones as there is often no recovery since you will likely only have a few similar moments in which to redeem yourself or none at all.

Is it okay to show emotion? Yes, however, it must be kept under control. Women don't want robots, but they also don't want a mangina. Is it okay to shed a tear? There are moments where this is acceptable. I believe there is a time and place for everything. Just know that this should be rare. Crying due to pain, fear, stress, disappointment, are sure to lead to a lack of confidence in your leadership. If you lose a loved one, shed a few tears if you must (no snot bubbles or hysterics), wipe them away and move on. There are other times where this is acceptable and I am not going to list them all. It is okay to show that you care about the people you love. Tears should be rare.

Maintain control of your emotions despite the adversity you face. This is mountain we must climb. These are the challenges we as men face. This is what true leaders do. This is the burden of being king.
You Are What You Eat
by Redneck001 | July 21, 2015 | Link

TL;DR: Count your calories, get lean, wear a life jacket because you’re drowning in pussy.

I don’t contribute much original content. But I see a reoccurring theme. LIFT, LIFT, LIFT! Great advice, and an important thing you need to do to change the way you look. But there’s a bigger piece of the puzzle: what you eat. And it doesn’t get a lot of relative attention.

I’m not going to rehash any lifting advice. /u/sepean nailed it in this post, in my opinion. Lifting is important, but nutrition is the key that many guys are missing.

I’m no nutritionist, personal trainer, PhD, etc. I’m a 49 year old dude that’s 6’3”, 195 lbs, and currently 9% bodyfat. So take this post with a grain of salt and shot of tequila. Or pour some good whiskey over ice and read this while you sip it.

Let me let you in on my worldview. I see fat creatures. Everywhere. Fat girls, fat guys, fat kids, fat dogs, fat cats. A first-world issue for sure. The majority of the first-world is fat, and can’t seem to get a handle on their weight, their fat, their health. Because they eat like shit.

But what if you could completely control your weight? Your look? Your progress at the gym? Would that make your life easier? I mean, the one thing that the vast majority of people have no control over, you can control. Easily.

So you’re sitting here reading this, and you’re thinking, “I’m in pretty good shape.” Well, “pretty good shape“ is fine, if you’re OK with it. But the truth is, you’re a fat fuck. But what if you walked through life, and 99% of the time, you are the most fit, most shredded dude around, regardless of your age?

Get a grip on what you’re eating.
First and foremost, you need to develop some objectives (goals are broad statements of direction, like “Get ripped/shredded”; objectives are measurable, like “Be 10% bodyfat”).

So you want to “get shredded?” What does that mean? In my mind, that means you carry very little body fat, there are veins running all over your body, and you have visible unflexed abs and an Adonis belt (much more impressive than a necktie, and serves the same purpose of drawing attention to your business). Women will say stuff like “I don’t like muscular dudes,” or “I like a Dad Bod.” That’s just insecurity and hamstering. Watch what they do.

I’ve been 20%, 15%, 12%, 10%, and 7% bodyfat. At 15%, I became visible to hot women. At 12%, hot women were smiling at me and initiating conversation. At 10%, I would get complimented on my body at least once per week by strangers. At 7%, I was getting swolested by the neighborhood women, touching me, begging me to take my shirt off. They were begging me in front of my wife. So you know how that turned out.

You owe it to yourself to get lean. You’re making all these other improvements, but still a fat fuck at 15%? Own your shit.

When you’re lean, people treat you differently. At less than 10%, you become a special snowflake. Or, more accurately, a snowflake with “angles.” And I’m 49 years old. So imagine what some of you younger guys can pull off.

So lean the fuck out.

Let’s start with downloading MyFitnessPal, because you’re going to count what you eat. And don’t half-ass it. Count everything. Because you need to know how many calories you’re consuming.

You’ll need a food scale, and a good digital bathroom scale.

Now, its time to find your Total Daily Energy Expenditure (TDEE). This is how many calories you burn in a day, including your basic functions and activities. Find an online calculator. It doesn’t matter which one you choose; you’re just using the number it spits out one time. If you’re cutting, pick ‘Sedentary’ as your activity level. Let’s say you’re 6’3” and 200 lbs and the calculator spits out 2,500.

So you want to lose weight. One pound equals 3,500 calories. So you’ll need to consume 3,500 calories less than your TDEE to lose 1 lb. Simple enough, right?

Now, track your weight every morning when you get up. And record it. I like to make a spreadsheet for my weight and my calories, so I can create a moving average for my weight, and add up my calories for the week. Do this for at least 3 weeks, don’t worry about the fluctuations that you see (yet). You’re losing water weight, retaining water, depleting glycogen, etc. Lots of shit going on the first few weeks.

I like to create a 7-day moving average of my weight. I also figure out my weight loss or gain weekly, usually on Sunday. Just subtract this Sunday’s average weight from last Sunday’s average weight. And I like to add up my weekly calorie total and divide by 7; this tells me how many calories I averaged. I usually average my calories on Sunday, but it doesn’t matter when you average them.

Miss a day of weighing yourself? Just put the previous day’s weight down. Miss a day of counting your calories? No problem, divide by 6 instead of 7 at week’s end.

By keeping up with your moving average of your weight and how many calories you’re consuming in any given week, you can easily determine what your true TDEE is, compared to the number you started with.

How much should you lose and how fast? Good guidelines to help preserve your strength are:

- 18-19% body fat: -1.7 lb/week
- 15-17% body fat: -1.5 lb/week
- 12-14%: -1.3 lb/week
- 9-11%: -1 lb/week
- <8%: 0.7 lb/week

When leaning out, you can do a straight cut or you can cycle your carbs/calories. A straight cut is easiest and its literally impossible to fuck it up. You just eat this number. Every day. The downsides are that you wind up eating the same thing every day. And once you get into the “lean” territory, you may run into unwanted side effects if cutting for an extended period. For example, I did a straight cut once and when I got down to 10%, my immune system quit and so did my sex drive. That sucked.

So now, I cycle carbs/calories, because I can add variety to my diet and I can avoid most of the unwanted side effects. You can try both, and see which is easier to adhere to.

OK, so you’ve figured out your objective, you have your daily calorie number to reach your objective. So what should you eat? My advice is to pick your favorite foods, because you’ll find that you eat the same things over and over, mainly because they hit your numbers.

Get lean, get laid. Womenz be crazy over a lean, shredded man.
People say married red pill is red pill on hard mode. I've never agreed with that statement. I personally think it's a cop out. That doesn't make it a wrong statement.

What is Hard Mode?

Hard Mode is the reality that your wife has years and years of experience of you being a total schlub and loser.

The truth is that it is always easier to make a new impression on someone completely new than to change the impression that someone already has. This is why there's the 7 hour rule in PUA. It's impossible to have 2 first impressions.

Why is it hard mode?

Hard Mode is the natural consequence of growing relationships.

The first and foremost challenge in any situation is complacency. Complacency will overcome everything. When humanity is dead in 10,000 years - nature will have reclaimed the greatest buildings in human civilization. If you're being complacent in your relationships (marriage, work, otherwise), your relationships are decaying. They're not going to be thriving.

Second, the roles and requirements to be attractive change. Remember, a toddler saying "Look daddy, I wiped my butt" is cute. A 13 year old doing it is not. As we grow, basic concepts of growing up are expected.

You, as man, should be able to adult at the very bare minimum. A 16 year old making $10,000 a year is impressive. A 40 year doing the same is not.

What do growing requirements have to do with Hard Mode?

Attraction.

It's actually very simple and it makes a ton of sense when you think about it. In a relationship, there are multiple stages. First, you're a boyfriend, then you're a husband, and finally you're a father. Let's break this down a bit.

Boyfriend

When you were just a boyfriend, the only thing you really needed to do to be attractive was to have fun, enjoy life, take an interest, and show her a good time. The requirements were really low.

Your requirements for her were simple too. She had to come over, be pretty, dress well, cook some dinners, and fuck you.
Husband

But at some point, you guys decided to move in together. Now you've got co-habitation requirements as well. Things like being able to pay rent, flushing the toilet after taking a piss, leaving crusty dishes in the sink. None of those are going to build your attractiveness, but not doing them will probably kill your attractiveness to some degree.

Now, instead of showing her a good time every time you guys spend time together, maybe it's once a week. And hell, you're busy (read as: lazy), so instead of being spontaneous and fun, you schedule a "date night". But planning date nights is hard, so you get a routine date night - dinner and movies. That absolutely screams romance and passion and not apathy and complacency.

For her part, she no longer feels the need to impress you as much. After all, she's your wife now. Maybe she's only shaving every 3rd day. Maybe she's only going to the gym once a week. There's no need for her to keep trying as hard. After all, you're more than willing to put up with it - you're not fucking that skank Tracy down the street yet anyway.

Father

But let's suppose you did the husband thing all right. Or, probably more accurate, let's assume you didn't slip as much as it could've.

Well, now you're a father. So now, not only do you have to figure out to thrive for not only yourself, you're responsible for the kids as well. Again, while being able to provide for the kids isn't attractive, not being able to provide for the kids is very unattractive.

See where this is going?

Hit the trifecta

For me, this insight came when I was trying to figure out why I wasn't as satisfied with my wife as I should've been. And it was because she wasn't checking the girlfriend box to my satisfaction. I realized I was also slacking on parts of my different roles. The reason Married Red Pill is hard mode is because in order to be attractive, you have to be attractive as a boyfriend, as a husband, and as a father. If you get a new plate, you just have to be attractive as a boyfriend.

Similarly, the expectation should be that your wife is attractive to you as a girlfriend (that slutty little thing that would fuck for days on end), as a wife (because who wants a nasty house?), and as a mother (no cunt kids for me, thanks.). It's ridiculous to expect all 3 to happen all the time, but it's not as ridiculous to expect each of the three to happen some of the time.

The solution is to recognize and kill complacency. Easy, right?
An Interview of Rian Stone
by RedPillCoach | December 25, 2018 | Link

THIS is the interview

As I said on youtube: "this is a long form unedited interview of Rian Stone, the first Moderator of both the Married Red Pill and The Red Pill (/r/marriedredpill & /r/theredpill).

The discussion includes his time in the Navy and his participation in The Red Man Group and the 21 Con plus the Red Pill Reddit Quarantine, Rian's up and coming youtube channel and his tried and true coaching system for men. Get in touch with him on Twitter at:

https://twitter.com/_Rian_Stone

Yes, Rian's audio is exceptional and my audio is sub optimal because size matters. My mike is not as big as his and I will fix that little problem. If you have a complaint or suggestion, feel free to speak into the mike."

This is an outline of the talk (links are in the first comment on youtube)

1:10 Rian on Life Coaching

1:39 What do you do on the Married Red Pill Reddit?

3:10 Tell me about your Navy experience? Why do we have so many guys on Married Red Pill who are former military?

4:00 Rian's experiences in the Navy

5:00 Rian on PUA using the Mystery method in the Navy- but no American broads!

5:54 Rian on using PUA and cheating in the Middle East

7:10 Dave on the Red Man Group

7:55 Rian on the value and importance of the Red Man Group to see normal guys having a normal conversation

9:00 Dave & Rian summarize the value of demonstrating male banter

10:12 The mission for the Red Man group- Rian names names from the past and talks about how this type of masculine male banter is not seen anywhere else

11:40 Why don't you talk more in The Red Man Group? Pithy and glib? Of course, but look at the depth 13:25 An analysis of levels of information on different Social Media Platforms (this is an entire book, I know it!!!).

14:20 Rian on Roosh

16:10 Pithy phrases and Married Red Pill guys stepping on your own dick

17:19 Rian on Rollo

18:20 Plug your Patreon page and all the other stuff ($5.00 / month gets you a private telcon with Rian):

https://www.patreon.com/_rian_stone

21:45 What is your secret to getting thousands of Followers on Twitter in just a few months? https://twitter.com/_Rian_Stone

23:20 Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/_rian_stone/

24:00 The 21 Con Convention

25:20 Doing PUA at the 21 Con

26:00 The HUGE UPGRADE in the 21 Convention between 2017 and 2018: BMI DOWN! Muscle up! Confidence- sky high!

27:15 The first African Canadian! Is Red Pill anti sematic or racist?

29:00 Identity Politics is stupid

29:45 The Red Pill Quarantine & The Red Man Group Reddit Ban

35:10 My lifting stats are horrible (recovering from an auto accident- you heard it first here because men don't complain or make excuses!)

36:50 Suck it up buttercup!

38:00 Don't be impotent: You are not powerless!

38:50 Male Archetypes on Married Red Pill- almost every guy comes in with the same story. NO SPECIAL SNOWFLAKES!

39:40 Why we beat up new guys on Married Red Pill

41:15 Why is my epic book- "Saving a Low Sex Marriage, a Man's Guide to Dread, Seduction and the Long Game so far down on the Sidebar?"

41:50 Tell us about Robert Glover- Red Pill? What is Red Pill? Why are thousands of guys suddenly telling me I saved their lives? (Author of No More Mr. Nice Guy).

43:30 Guys we get on Married Red Pill- Fallen Alphas and Defeated Betas

45:00 BPD- Borderline Personality Disordered girls and how they interact with the different types of MRP guys

47:00 It's not about the nail- My coaching clients from the Married Red Pill Reddit- it is better than therapy but a tricky business model

48:40 Rian loves editing videos, Dave complains about editing videos

49:50 Inside baseball on video creating and editing

50:40 Tell us about your new youtube channel- what kind of content are you going to give us?

52:30 See Rian's YouTube Channel

(https://www.youtube.com/channel/UC4ay...)

53:20 Rian's Coaching Service/Consultation Service

54:38 How Level 11 and 12 of Dread Came about (The Ultimate Cad)

55:40 Sexual Strategy and Masculinity Coaching

57:00 Rian using Red Pill strategies in the workplace and for self-actualization

58:00 Coaching female clients

1:00 Guys refuse to get help!
Cross post from TRP. The same rules apply here, if you are worried that your wife is not fucking you enough, then you are still a slave to your own cruel master.

- "it is like escaping from bondage to a raging madman." - Plato

Plato wrote this in the Republic as the answer when an old man was asked what it was like to be free from lusting after women in his old age. Unless one learns to master the demons within you, then the demons within you shall be your master. Those of you who have been slaves to pornography know this master well. It is cruel and demanding. Any guy who has stared at a girl in his class, social group or work just wishing you could be with her could be with her know this master. The sad beta who falls asleep thinking of a girl and wakes up and she is the first thing on his mind, is a slave to a merciless and angry master. The thing you need to realise is that it is your own weakness and unfulfilled potential that you are a slave to, not to the external validation of women. You are the warden of your own prison. You are not in love with her, you are in love with idea of being free of the desires that control you.

This is not a MGTOW post, not at all. This is a post on mastery and abundance. What is the enemy of need? It is satisfaction. When you are hungry you need to eat. Pretending that you do not need to eat will just lead to poor health and eventually to death. Pretending that you do not need sex and intimacy will turn you into a fat, fedora wearing incel who beats off to anime. So denial will not work, not on the cruel master who rules you. So how does one slay the demon, escape the prison, feed the beast? One does this by changing the dynamic and taking back control. One must go through a process of transmutation and go from the slave, to the master. You need to transmute the leaden collar of your unsatiated desires, into a golden crown of rulership.

How do we do this? Well it is a mental and physical process. One must begin to transmute from a needy, weak follower, into an abundant, strong leader. You all know how to do this but many of you would rather stay in your cage than to put in the hard work required to escape. There is no need for me to give a detailed breakdown of this process of transmutation, because it is all there on the sidebar. Those are the steps required but they are merely training wheels for the weak beta to follow. They are baby steps for the meek, milk for the puppy. Milk for the babes, meat for the men. The senior men of the red pill are here to feed you milk because you are not ready for meat. So start with the milk on the sidebar and use it until you are strong enough to walk alone. When you master that, your penis will no longer be a cruel master that you try to beat into submission in front of a computer screen, but a wonderful tool for your enjoyment, and hers.
I'm not going to tell my backstory, it's been told a million times over. What I will say is that I came for a more fulfilling sex life, but stayed for the key to my own prison.

It's been a pretty awesome year, fellas! For the first time, ever, I'm leading my own life and reaping the benefits. Case in point, the new job offer I just accepted.

A little context here, I've been working 2nd shift for almost 10 years now. Good pay, great benefits, and excellent work experience at a well respected machine shop. I used that time to learn as much as possible which ended up mutually benefitting the company and myself. But I'm a simple man, and missing the "prime-time" (nights) with my family ate me alive from years 3-5. I eventually used the pay, benefits, and lifestyle change from my previous job to hamster my excuses for staying. In reality, I was just scared to look for a new job, knowing I would have to take a pay cut, start over on seniority and a bunch of other lame ass reasons. But at any rate, I started dealing with it somewhat better from years 6 to now by focusing on the good things my job provided and ignored being unhappy with the hours, or at least tried. Led to a lot of faggot behavior, again, that has been talked about here a million times over.

I never had a good example of a healthy marriage dynamic to learn from growing up. MRP changed that. Knowing what I know now, it became less about me missing my family and more about realizing the opportunities I am missing to lead my family. Setting a good example of this for my sons is high priority, and being gone all night won't cut it. It was time to change that. I told myself this was my last year on 2nd shift

So I get a heads up from a buddy that the company he works for is trying to fill a lead position. It's 1st shift and in my home town, cutting 2 hours drive time a day. I asked him for an email address to ask about the job and ran with it. Sent in a resume and a week later was sitting down for an interview. Reading about powertalk and posturing all those months ago came in handy. Nailed the first interview and started mental prep for the 2nd immediately. Anticipating the normal "what are your strengths/weaknesses" routine. Pay was also a big concern. In the first interview they threw an offer way higher than I expected, but still not close to what I needed. I was worried I would push too hard for what I wanted and they would give the job to someone less qualified (they told my buddy I was the front runner after interview #1) and willing to take less.

I showed up for interview # 2 and right out of the gate he told me they wanted me on the team. It really felt like I was interviewing them the entire time. They offered my low number as their opener, I told them I could make it work but ideally would like $2 more per hour. Ended up working out a compromise, they start me at their offer and then add into my contract that I will get X amount in raises over Y time period, which is not standard procedure for this company. A year ago, hell even 4 months ago, I wouldn't have had the balls to try negotiating at all. And here I am now, knowing what I'm worth and what I need and asking for it without hesitation.
This position is also bigger than I expected. The VP told me they're looking to expand the department and, to quote my future supervisor, "That's where [I] come in." I can't. fucking. wait. to get started there. Just waiting on the background check to go through, should be starting around the beginning of May.

I did end up taking a small cut in pay from my current job, but the lifestyle change is more than worth it to me. I will not only be able to make it to all my son's games, but once I get started will ask about becoming an assistant coach for his team. So many doors are open now. You can't put a price on doing what makes you happy.

The kicker to all this is about 8 months ago I started taking my finances a lot more seriously. I seen a change in shift, which would undoubtedly mean a change in jobs, in my future and had to make room for a pay cut in the budget. This included knocking out as much debt as possible. I started making extra payments on my car, and got it paid off at the beginning of this year. And I'm a few hundred away from paying off my credit card. I knew I would have to take a pay cut if I didn't want to wait for the seniority to bid into a first shift position where I'm at now, which will be at least 2 more years. 3-4 years realistically. I buckled down, picked up extra jobs and O.T. and cut out excess spending. Chess not checkers, I made this pay cut workable.

My marriage has done a complete 180 as well. My approach was pretty unorthodox, Rambo and fake it til I make it all the way up to the last few months. I wasn't just going through the motions though, I would dig for the root causes as to why things bothered me more than I showed. Don't get me wrong, the butthurt still showed through. I just quit yelling at her about it. Stfu, ate it, tried my best with the AA/AM/fogging, and really used removing time and attention as my crutch to get away from the chaos and figure my own shit out.

I don't completely ignore her now, I just don't give her words any weight on my self-esteem, respect and mood anymore. She may, and sometimes does, make some valid points while she's bitching, and it's on me to figure out if I want to work on those things and how to go about it.

There are just so many little things that have changed in our day to day interactions. Nothing worth pin pointing and going on and on about, but on the grand scheme of things they all add up to make a much better relationship. I'm much happier and feel more fulfilled now that I've started taking the lead and owning my shit, and she is starting to settle in nicely as well. There's much less pushback on me taking the lead now, she's actually deferring to me for decisions now which was unheard of in the past. I make a plan, figure my moves, let her know what I need from her, and fill her in as I'm putting it in motion. I want to do some refining here, but I'll get to that in a bit.

And the realization that all of this, all of the ways I interact, the way I handle her rollercoaster rides, all of it....it's all transferable. None of this is hinged on her, she just gets to enjoy it so long as she continues to add value in all the ways she does. If it were to end, nothing changes for me.

And finally, the sex! What we're all here for in the first place. I don't get hard no's. I blow through soft no's. I'm not ashamed of what I want, and I go after it uninhibitedly. The intensity and dominance has gone way up. I'd like to be more vocal and commanding, but in the moment I don't really think about it and just enjoy myself. The sex is great, no rush.

I've been playing with manufactured drama and it has been a blast. Negging to full on acting mad about something I could really give 2 shits about just to get her rialed up. There was a night she went out with the girls after school, I told her before hand I didn't think it was a good night for it being that it was a school night for the boys and she already gets them home later on her school nights as it is. She went anyway, and it really wasn't a big deal. (Note - just months ago I would've lost my fucking mind about "being disrespected" bc she didn't take my advice) But instead of playing the "nice guy" and telling her how I really felt (not an ideal decision, but no harm was done. it was the first time, so it's not like it's habitual.), I ended the phone call quick and went radio silent the rest of the night until I got home. She was texting non-stop and, thinking I was pissed, got mad as hell herself to match. She tried aaaalll the tricks to try to get me off topic and start fighting back.

Instead, radio silence until I got home, walked in to find her "sleeping", ripped the covers off her, flipped her from her side to her back and spread her legs. She protested and tried getting shitty about what went down earlier. I asked her, rhetorically, "you wanna fight or fuck?" Her clit was in my mouth before she even had time to answer.

Enter stacked orgasm and the wettest pussy she's ever had (with me, anyway). She jumped up and sucked my dick like her life depended on it. That night was the roughest I have ever been with her, my hand was full of loose hairs I'd pulled out of her head....we both loved every second of it.

There was no doubt for me how that night was going to end. I didn't let her emoting distract me, I didn't play into the verbal intercourse. Just set the trap, watched it spring, then had my way with her.

I also realized, I do this kind of stuff to compensate for the lack of being the "fun guy". I'm now planning date nights and really just trying to view every night at home as a date night, so work is being done on that. I've also lightend the fuck up in the last month or 2 and have started enjoying myself everywhere I'm at. Some days aren't as smooth as others, but in general this holds true.

I was just so stuck in my head with all this information that I ended up playing 4D chess, as I've been called out for here, when we were together. Forcing fun a) isn't fun for me and b) comes off lame as fuck to her, I'm sure. Everything is fun to me now, until it's not. And then it's either dealt with if it needs fixing, or looked at with indifference.

So that's a little bit about the last year. But moving forward, the 3 big things for me are balance, refinement, and progress.

Balance: The lines between dominating/domineering and leading/controlling have always been blurry to me, and as a result I always opted to "play it safe" and basically be a submissive little faggot. So I stepped out of my comfort zone, after finding this sub, and starting trying to lead and be more dominate in bed, and assertive in day to day life. I've crossed those lines maliciously several times, and caught/stopped myself from doing it even more. My completely fucked mentality was the cause of it, and now that this "new me" feels more and more normal, it has become easier to ride the line to my advantage or completely avoid it altogether. But it's still something I want to keep an eye on.

Refinement: I've been working on my leadership skills and did a lot of reading and Youtubeing on the subject. I have a better understanding of the concept now, and seem to be executing pretty well, too. I have a good foundation to build on and refine and really I'm just looking to not Rambo this and be a little more calculated until it all comes natural. Having a literal leadership position at this new job means I will get to practice this skill everyday. At home, everything from delegating housework and our parenting methods to creating my slut and leading our sex life is on the books to obviously continue leading, but also to do so more effectively. I know that's a pretty vague statement, but if I'm being honest I'm still not quite sure what I need to work on as far as leadership goes. Like I said, I don't get much pushback, so maybe I'm doing better than I give myself credit for. I just have a feeeeeeeling I could do better. Maybe because leading other people is still new to me and I assume there's more to learn? I don't know. But I know I have no plans for ego efforts here, I will take my lessons as they come and build off those.

This ties in with my planning and execution. I've heard a few times that she feeeeeeelz left in the dark. I take it as face value as a shit test and treat it as such...to her. But I do look back and dig for some merit in it. I've yet to decide that I did something wrong, by my own standards. But thinking of the Captain/FO dynamic I do think I need to get better at somehow including her in the process, or at least make her feel included, without it coming across as deferring to her. I'm still mulling this whole idea over, so for now, it's business as usual until I find something I can work with, or maybe I won't and she'll just have to adjust and deal with it. I wish I could remember what was going on the last time I heard this so I could give an example. But it's been awhile and nothing is coming to mind.

Progress: That's the name of the game! 'nough said. I have no grand visions of becoming a millionaire next year. Just a lot of little mundane things, in comparison to mansions and Bentley's. But to me, they are everything. Coaching my son's baseball team. Planning and even preparing dinners with my family at night. Nights out during the week, both with and without my family. So many. Too many to list.

It's said that MRP is a sexual strategy. It's also said that there is so much more to it, and I'm understanding more and more what that means. I like to combine the 2 and look at the world as an HB10 and this stuff can help me fuck her raw. And I intend to do just that.
Women know what they want, even when they don’t.

by TrainingTheBrain | August 11, 2015 | Link

A lot of guys come here from /deadbedrooms. Even dudes who didn’t still had a dead bedroom but didn’t know it. The amount of posts that include something along the lines of, “We hadn’t had sex in x months” is too damn high.

Gentlemen, Women WANT to fuck....I’ll let that settle in for a few seconds....

Women, with their ability to disassociate their identity like nothing a Man could ever conceive of mentally doing, know they want to fuck a capital M Man. But they say and act as if they don’t. Do you honestly think your wife is fine without sex? That she’s some Unicorn?

If so, get the fuck out of MRP/TRP/The Manosphere because you aren’t understanding shit.

The only posts on MRP that truly frustrate me are the posts that come from guys who aren’t fucking their wives. This is a Marriage, albeit we are all living Marriage 2.0, but it is still a Marriage and with that relationship status there are still expectations of the Ying & Yang, the give and take, the Masculine and Feminine roles being filled appropriately.

Sex is a part of Marriage. If your wife is not fucking you, it is because YOU are not thinking and acting like a Man. A woman will find a way to fuck a guy she wants to fuck. You are supposed to be that guy.

Well it’s hard with jobs, kids, gym - STFU!!

Drop all of the excuses about how it’s hard as a husband because she knows you too well making things not as ‘new’, or how you’ve fallen into a routine, or how your weight gain (which you rationalize away like a woman) is an expected part of aging/parenting/marriage.

MRP Dudes are operating on Hard Mode and embrace this challenge. We can only find true comfort in the discomfort of living a Masculine Life in a pussified Society. Finding ways to keep your marriage ‘fresh’ is your fucking job as a Man and if you’re doing it right your woman will make it PERFECTLY CLEAR to you that she is onboard your ship and following your lead. She wants to fuck and more specifically get fucked by her Masculine Warrior of a Husband.

Just like there are no Unicorns, there are also no Dragons, you are not unique in any way. You’re a disposable Man and if you want to make yourself a little less disposable and make your marriage a little less shitty, take all of the different facets of TRP/MRP and apply them.

Be an interesting guy who doesn’t fucking bitch about anything. Be a Masculine dude who displays his strength and prowess without coming across as ‘trying’ to display these things. Read your books and understand psychology, physiology, and whatever you’re interested in. Stop analyzing every interaction as Alpha/Beta, Shit/Comfort, etc. just do the things Masculine Men do.
Lead, Own, be spontaneous, stop being such a predictable fuck living inside the confines of the shell our feminized society has built for you.

If you are doing these things, then your wife is going to fuck you because she can’t help herself. No matter how much she wants to say or act like sex ‘isn’t all she thinks about or needs’ she’s a fucking liar and wants to get fucked long and hard by your dick (if you’re the type of Man she wants, which you should be unless you’re a lazy weaksauce fuck).

Follow behaviors, not words.

To the newly ‘unplugged’ guys.

You need to shut the fuck up and put in the work. Read the damn books, don’t start them and then come here to talk about how you’ve been reading and now your wife is pissed... Just stfu and read cover to cover all of the books, and research on TRP and the blogs to better understand the hamster that is in your wife’s brain housing group.

Then, befriend that fucking hamster. Don’t hate your woman for thinking like a woman, embrace the hate you have at your ‘old self’ for being a beta puke weaksauce fuck and use that as fuel for improvement.

Instead of being discouraged at what has been and the time that was lost, realize that your past failures have provided you with an opportunity to improve. Be grateful for the challenge you have, be grateful for having this chance to be a better Man. Or, in some cases, to become a Masculine Man for the first time in your life.

Your wife wants to fuck, but does she want to fuck you?

Acta, Non Verba
The Happy Man – How to Guide

Simbarlion started us off by framing the concept of happiness. This is the follow up, “how to” guide for those struggling with the concept.

First, I’ll address the most common problems guys will have with the concept of happiness itself.

A common argument will go something like “life is eternal struggle with brief moments of satisfaction”. The idea being that life is full of difficulties and challenges for the average man. While true, life can be very difficult, I will simply reply with – perception is reality. It is difficult to deadlift weight if you have never done it before. It is hard, possibly painful and potentially damaging. However, doing it right and eventually succeeding, does lead to a moment of happiness. Stack up enough moments, and you have a string of happiness.

The second common misconception is that what we call happiness others will define as pleasure in the hedonistic sense. While pleasure is a kind of momentary happiness, it is not all that encompasses “happiness”.

For reference, here is a definition:

“Happiness is used in the context of mental or emotional states, including positive or pleasant emotions ranging from contentment to intense joy. It is also used in the context of life satisfaction, subjective well-being, eudaimonia, flourishing and well-being”[1]

But, Shimshon, what the hell does that mean and how do I do that??

Step 1. Decide what makes you happy

This is probably the most difficult part of the whole thing. We learn as little boys to make our parents happy, because hey, they feed us. Its not that simple, but in general it applies. We also learn how to drop dopamine into our brains from various activities. Games, video or actual, physical play. Certain foods can make a child happy. FFS Happy MEALS were created as a way to tie food to joy. Great marketing there.

But Shim, I am an adult! What do??

Well, since you are a man, you know that a happy meal is a trick. Think back to your brief moments of happiness. Usually they came from achievement. You won a foot race. You did well in school. You got the girl (more on that one later).

Contrast that with things that were fun but ultimately did not make you happy. Maybe it was drinking a little too much. Maybe it was fucking a fratmattress. Maybe it was having too much cake.

You will find that the things that make you happy came from a sense of achievement. Pride.

Getting a black belt at a McDojo doesn’t give the same sense of happiness as getting a blue belt after a long time in BJJ. Trust me, I’ve done both.

So, step one is looking at your life and figuring out which of your behaviors lead to unhappiness. What makes you fucking sad for yourself to think about.

Cut that shit out. Cut it like cancer. Those things are death.

But like a surgeon, cut out only those things which Are cancer, and spare any potentially viable tissue. Its your life, and your opportunity and responsibility to figure out which one is which.

Step 2

What makes you happy?? Is it a nice car? A better more capable body? Financial independence? More time to spend on your hobbies? ( You have those now, right?)

All those things take work. All those are rewards. Winning the lottery and buying those things will of course give them to you... but none of them will be worth shit because you did not put in the work to earn them.

That is what happiness is. Accepting the struggles of life, picking your own damn struggles to have. Choosing what to struggle for. Choosing how to struggle. Choosing what to earn.

Face it, you don’t actually enjoy the pain of drop sets or trying to get a PR on deads. You do it because you know it is a means to an end. And because you know that achieving goals feels good.

You know that its not fucking the girl that is the achievement. You can fuck a hooker. It’s getting the girl to want to fuck you that’s and makes you happy.

Step 3.

Figure out, after trying it out, what actually IS worth your effort.

A couple of examples from my life:

In my marriage I figured out that for multiple reasons ( most of which were my fault, as its always your fault, because you are in charge of your own life) , I was not happy being married to the woman I had married. I had given her all the rope I wanted to, and was seeing no behavior change that indicated that she wanted me the way I wanted her to want me that made me happy.

I planned and am now nearing divorce.
In terms of my physical goals, I lost 50+ lbs of fat, after being literally physically disabled. I returned to what I like to do, which is some sort of martial art. I chose bjj because I knew I needed the competition in a (somewhat) safe environment. I am by far not even the most average at it. Even for a beginner. I suck. I'm not 18-25 and a recent college wrestler (those are the guys I roll with, that's the competition). It fucking sucks to get choked, tapped, pounded by people stronger, bigger and faster. It's not pleasant. I love it. I feel better afterwards. Everything is sore. I know I am more dangerous than I was yesterday. I know that I am more capable. I can take pride in any tap I get, or in going one more 5 min round than last week. It's not pleasure. I enjoy the shit out of it.

Money - briefly - getting rid of the idea that I work for a company, rather than AT a company, for myself, created cognitive opportunities to make more money, have more control of my day, have more free time. In fact, I haven't done any work in a few years. By that I mean that, most of the time, I enjoy what I do nearly every minute. It doesn't feel like work. It feels like a hobby that pays me.

Getting the girl - Several plates, ONS and so on, into separation, I realized that it's getting the girl interested and having her show that interest is what's enjoyable for me. Sex is a byproduct. Oh, and now I can think much more logically about any given woman and the time I want to invest in her, if any. Works wonders for creating that correct mentality for game.
What’s stopping you?

by SBIII | September 4, 2019 | Link

You wanna be a better role model for your kids
What’s stopping you?

You wanna lose 15lbs
What’s stopping you?

You wanna make new friends and have a social life
What’s stopping you?

You wanna make more money
What’s stopping you?

You wanna bang some Tinderellas
What’s stopping you?

You wanna have anal sex
What’s stopping you?

You wanna have anal sex in a threesome with your Tinderella and your wife
What’s stopping you?

You wanna start your own business
What’s stopping you?

You wanna finish reading that book
What’s stopping you?

You wanna have a woman that respects you and fucks like a bunny rabbit
What’s stopping you?

You wanna stop drinking and smoking weed
What’s stopping you?

You wanna have a joint and a bottle of beer
What’s stopping you?

You wanna climb a mountain

What’s stopping you?

You wanna sky dive from an aeroplane

What’s stopping you?

You wanna just go home, put the TV on, crack open a beer and chill

What’s stopping you?

You wanna be the best version of yourself

What’s stopping you?

You wanna have a clear vision and mission for your life

Then what the fuck is stopping you?
In my spare time (yea right) I like to peruse old newspapers from the early 1900s and 1800s. It's something everyone here should do because it provides a glimpse into a forgotten world; well...forgotten for most. A world where RP knowledge was so ubiquitous and near universally accepted that it didn't even need a name and no one batted an eye.

I've collected a few articles by one of the shitlordyist shitlords that ever shitlorded - Paul "keep'em barefoot, pregnant, and in the kitchen" Popenoe. Be warned though, when you see what men once were and what we are today, you can't help but get pissed the fuck off. I read his stuff and I'm like FUCK. It's easy to get angry at our forefathers for bending the knee to feminism but it's important to know about the men that saw what was coming and tried to stop it. Paul is one such man.

-July 5, 1934 - These Modern Eves

Dr. Paul Popenoe, director of the Los Angeles Institute of Family Relations, spoke on marriage last week before the American Home Economics Association in this city. He said very few men visited his Institute in search of wives, but the husband-hunting women were numerous.

Then he said, in regard to marriage failures: "The superior education of wives is a frequent cause of breaks. No matter how successful the husband may be financially, the wife has, in general, a superiority complex towards him."

Thus again, science verified old folk ideas. The dominating female continues to nab her man and then "henpeck" him. And the only avoidance for the male of the species to follow his grandfather's advice about women - either marry them young and dumb, or else don't marry at all.

-August 3, 1949 - Keep Sons Posted, Fathers Advised

A father should take his son to the office, shop, or factory rather than to the movies or a baseball game, according to the director of the American Institute of Family Relations. Dr. Paul Popenoe, Los Angeles, told summer students at the University of Cincinnati that it is important for a boy to know what a man's world is like and to feel that he understand it.

The smallfry in long pants, the family expert believes, should look forward to being a part of the adult world with a full share of his responsibilities. "The importance of a father is not sufficiently recognized in a great deal of current discussion of family life," he said.

Dr. Popenoe said father can set a good example by being more demonstrative and affectionate with their wives in the presence of the children. He also called for more married men in the nation's school system, whereby younger boys would get a more masculine outlook on family life.

Dr. Popenoe decried the fact that many persons in charge of children are women and frequently unmarried women who have no family patterns to give them.

-May 26, 1939 - Soulmate idea in love scorned

Girls who wait for their prince Charming to appear are likely to be disappointed, according to Dr. Paul Popenoe, director of the Las Angeles Institute of Family Relations.

The dream that somewhere there is a "special soulmate" waiting for everyone is just so much "childish bunk" Dr. Popenoe declared here.

"There are nearly 30,000,000 marriages in the United States and each year a million more are added to that number," he said. "Unfortunately, nearly 200,000 of the million married couples in the present year may end in divorce court, and others, though not breaking up the marriage, will be miserable in it."

Dr. Popenoe said the reason for the high divorce rate is that the couples "don't try".

"They intend to get, not to give," he said. "It's up to the other fellow to do all the work"

"Before marriage, they made some effort to please each other. Now they are married, they think it is time to 'settle down.' If you want to 'settle down' after marriage, don't trouble to rent a home; just move into the graveyard."

"Too often," the marriage regulations expert continued, "the husband begins to consider himself a star boarder rather than a lover, and the wife gets careless about her appearance and disposition."

The trouble is, he said, that the home, the church, and the school in the past have paid little attention to education for marriage. It's an encouraging fact, he said, that school are adding courses concerning family relations as a fast as teachers can be trained to give such courses.

-June 9, 1960 - Criticism Helps, Nagging Harms

Mr. G. in his letter complains: "My wife needs a good deal of instruction from me, but no matter how necessary it is, she always accuses me of criticizing her unfairly. It seems to me she just goes out of her way after that to do the opposite of what I tell her. Is that just because she's a woman, Dr. Popenoe?"

Many women do react that way to criticism, Mr. von G., as do many men. But maybe your "instructions" are not really as necessary as you think they are. And, if they are necessary, it's evident that your technique isn't all it ought to be!
Try the approach of a high-powered executive out to get proper action from a subordinate. There's a great deal of help for family life to be found in the current writings on personnel in industry! In their book, "The Executive Interview," Benjamin Balinsky and Ruth Burger give some useful guides to sound criticism, that every one of male or female, could apply to advantage:

- Keep it impersonal. It's a situation that you want to correct, not a personality. That's the greatest mistake most of us make. We start with: "The trouble with you is..." and we start a fight!

- Stick to the fact - don't exaggerate.

- Don't criticize unless you add a clear-cut remedy at the same time. The remedy is much more important than the complaint.

- Choose your time and location carefully. It is not a good idea to criticize immediately, but to wait until a calm period and then take up the question in a courteous but businesslike way.

- Don't try to be funny. People sometimes pretend that this will take the sting out of criticism. A woman who takes things personally is more likely to believe you are being sarcastic.

- Tie up loose ends. Settle the matter with agreement all around, if its at all possible. To do this you'll have to listen attentively to what the other says, and agree with as much of it as you can.

Beyond all this Mr. von G., the truth is that many of us, women as well as men, are merely naggars; more exactly, it's not by nature but through a cultivated disposition which can therefore be eradicated.

-1934 - College girls make the worst wives?

This is a full page article so I'll only include a snippet.

At the start, Dr. Popenoe was careful to point out that he is not disparaging the college girl nor calling her a matrimonial failure. The college girl, like the college boy, has passed through a weeding out process, so that she is almost inevitably the mental and usually the physical superior of the average of her sex. It would be strange indeed if such a superior class could no succeed at least as well as their duller sisters in almost any enterprise, including matrimony. And many of such college girls as actually do get married make a good showing.

"But," Dr. Popenoe points out, "that is in spite of their college education and not because of it. It is because college women represent a selected group. They come for the most part from successful homes. They have good family backgrounds, parents who were successful husbands and wives. They are girls who would make successful wives and mothers if they never had stepped foot into a hall of so-called higher learning and in many cases their college education actually detracts from their natural endowment as good home-makers."

"The point of my contention, which is based on first-hand observation and study of thousands of cases, is that the college girl gets nothing out of her education that helps her in marriage and frequently emerges with her degree professed of attributes and viewpoints that constitute a definite barrier to married happiness and burden her with problems that her less highly educated sisters do not have"

...

"Some college girls fail to marry because of over valuation of a liberal culture. A girl in this class has been led to think that it is so valuable and omnipotent that any man ought to be tickled to death to marry her just to get this second-hand culture."

"But the average husband is not interested in having the warmed over remains of a course in philosophy or English literature served up to him"

"The girl graduate of this class is not a competent home-maker because she has had no training for that job. She is not an emotionally satisfying object of love, to be guarded and adored, because she has been over-intellectualized. All she has to offer her husband is femaleness and she has no monopoly on that."

So here's to you Paul - thank you for being a man among men.
Let's talk about your time.

by ReddJive | July 18, 2017 | Link

Once again many of you are not researching. You aren't reading sidebar material other then books. So let's discuss one of the most basic principles to Red Pill, MRP or otherwise.

Your time.

The first thing you need to understand is that your time is the only real currency in the world. This is a universal truth. It can never be created. Once you spend it...it's gone. It cannot be saved. It's here and then gone. It is a finite resource that requires your careful attention. Where you spend your time as a man tells the world what you find important. Spend it wisely.

The RP adage is that women are the gatekeepers of sex. Men are the gatekeepers of relationship (time/commitment). It’s also further said that women NEED men but men WANT women. They NEED relationships. We want sex. I get it. You feel that shit in your soul, but bare with me. Consider as part of this paradigm that women can get sex whenever they want it. This then means that even beta men are getting sex. sex is easy. A beta can get a woman to fuck him at least once. It may not be the woman he wants, it may not be the best sex of his life, but he can do it.

The time and commitment for a woman to get a quality relationship is even more rare. Of all the beta men out there, while perhaps good for a one time or twice fuck are not quality enough for a relationship. A woman can fool herself with a beta provider for only so long. Some do it for their whole lives, but the angst they feel manifests in other ways. Time proves this. I am telling you right now once exposed to true masculine/Alpha behavior the bullshit a woman has built up in her life will come crashing down around her. Then you will see her true self. These walls may come back, but they will not be strong, and she will not be the same person. Your time, and ability to create a great relationship is a rare commodity and one you must know in your being you provide. It is defined by your confidence. By your decisiveness and your actions.

Newly unplugging men lately are not using the basic technique of limiting your time and attention to her bad behavior or rejections. Consider this. A woman will tell you she's too tired for sex. That she doesn't have enough time. There was so much overwhelming tasks during that day....I mean putting laundry and dishes in a machine is tough work. Have you ever told her you're too tired for a conversation? That there isn't enough time to get into something. She will still demand and expect that you will be there to hear about her day. That you will still support her, show up on time, do all the things a good man in a relationship does.

Digression: gentlemen, right now disavow yourself of the notion or honor, gallantry, and keeping your word. Unless you explicitly said you would....you didn’t. She may think that you showing up on time is you not keeping your word, but you never said you would. She will manipulate you into thinking that there was an inherent commitment to being honorable, but unless you said it....never happened. Many a man will sacrifice under the illusion of honor and chivalry. Men make sacrifices. No matter how Red Pill you are you do. It's what men do. It's our nature. The extent to which you sacrifice and the expectations you have from doing so define your masculinity. Honor is only useful to those that can afford it. They have no emotional attachment to the acts they perform, but they are just as quick to turn it off when presented with a situation where honor is a hinderance. Case in point: the only woman who gets the door held open is the woman i am currently fucking. All others have two hands that aren't being used. Mine needs her strength.

In martial arts there is a concept called flow. Where the artist moves from technique to technique. A street fighter, while capable, may have only 3-5 techniques that he uses. He puts them on repeat because they have worked for him in the past. He loops them until he wins or doesn't. A martial artists will have many techniques and will flow from one to the next and adapt to the changing situation. This flow, this fluid comes with practice and time. There is no other way. Sure there are naturals that have some level of skill that make it easier for them to learn but they are still beholden to making it work under stressful situations.

The reason most AA AM and LMOP isn't working is because you have no flow. You aren't moving from one to the other and you haven't limited your time. You are just hanging out in the house being a sarcastic asshole, not the fun busy guy that has great quips every now and again.

Here's the rub. The difficult part of putting in the work and time into flirting and escalating with your girl, and still having her reject you brings up those original emotional reactions of anger. I mean you put the time in right? Then you think back to what many of us here are saying and you get angrier still. Problem is you wrote a contract. The key here is that you enjoy that process of flirting. Sure she didn't respond. Smack her ass wink and go back doing something else but enjoy the masculinity that you exuded. You're the guy that smacks her ass...and in public! The fact that you grabbed a woman's ass, and that you expressed your sexual desires. You made it known. Fuck the world and their conventions. This is your world and you will spend the time and energy the way you see it. They don't like it. Well....fuck them.

You must flow from task to task. She rejects you? happily move on knowing that you have other, and in this case, better options for your time. She is the one that will lose out. She just lost a little bit of access to awesome guy. Now this doesn't mean full on dread where you disappear or go away for days on end. Suddenly cutting her off is butthurt. Dial it back, remove awesome guy for a couple hours. trickle it. Then re-engage. Rejected again? a few more hours still, further and further until many months later you have lost interest in the relationship or her bullshit.

Think of it like this:

Men are in a constant state of earning profit. We want to end our fiscal year in the black. Some of us have multiple gigs/businesses going.

- Sex maybe earns $10.
- Certain sexual acts ups the margin. Varies between the man.
- Supporting your mission in life maybe $20.
• being supportive $35 per action
• Doing laundry, cooking, let's say $30 for each time it is done
• Nag? Complain, be negative all the time then the account losses money to the bank. At three times the rate it went in. (NOTE there is a difference in her coming to you for support and just plain being negative)

At the end of the quarter, fiscal year the man will take an account. If the account is in the black when he makes this assessment he will make a return on that investment. if not...then he looks for other profit centers. Why would a man continue his investment in a profit center that is losing money or a low earner? If he is putting in the time to fix it, to get it to earn again but the maybe the business has run its course. Maybe it was never really a viable idea to begin with. Maybe he is just a bad business man.

As time goes on you will look at that account and wonder why you only accept having $17 for your time and commitment, when you know someone is willing to make a bigger investment. But the man can only do this once he knows his business acumen is solid and proven.
The following is a general overview of stoic philosophy, with examples of Marcus Aurelius, influenced largely from a recorded speech performed by Professor Michael Sugrue. This speech can be viewed and is available on YouTube at this link: https://youtu.be/5897dMWjiSM, and tailored for practical use, as a tool in symbiosis with Red Pill awareness:

“The tranquility that comes when you stop caring what they say. Or think, or do. Only what you do. Not to be distracted by their darkness. To run straight for the finish line, unswerving.” - Marcus Aurelius Stoicism is a noble philosophy - an excellent philosophy for silver men. It is characterized by a “rejection of pleasure” - as the standard for human happiness, and human felicity. Stoicism takes the position that the wise man, the good man, the philosopher is a man who lives in accordance with nature. He fears only abdicating his responsibility and frame. He is not afraid of pain, he is not afraid of death, he is not afraid of poverty, he is not afraid of the negative, undesirable, and uncontrollable aspects of the human condition. He fears ONLY that he should let himself down; that he should be less than a complete human being.

The only matters of concern to the wise and philosophical man are things completely under your control. You can’t control whether your wife fucks Chad, you can’t control whether your 1000ft tow rope is still fastened to the ship, and your wife “catches on” when you finally reach the 1000ft distance from shore, you can’t control your boss from giving the promotion to another man in a simple act of nepotism, even though you may have “earned it”, “deserve it” and put in the hours (think covert contracts). There is only one thing, and one thing only that you are in control of, and that is you; your will, your intentions, yourself. In other words, the wise man is the man who is truly in control of his own soul. He takes utter and complete responsibility for his actions, and is indifferent to everything else. This indifference - is not because he does not care about others around him, nor the tendencies of the oblivious (Blue Pill men) and the irrational (hypergamous women at the mercy of their emotional tempests) around him, but he remains indifferent because they are out of his control. Master the art of indifference, there is no use in wondering or worrying what others are doing because that is and will always be outside of your control.

The stoic philosopher is the man who has liberated himself from fear. He’s not afraid of death, fear, what others think of him, or others’ dismissal. The only thing he cares about is that he does not waste his time, energy, fucks given, potential, and that he does not meet his own standard he has set for himself.

The stoic, wise man, is the man who has trained his mind (Red Pill awareness) and body (via Lifting, martial arts, etc.), so that he is not afraid of “apparent evils” or variables that life may bring, he is only afraid of losing control of his mind, his centre point of origin, his frame. He isn’t afraid to take the lead, to be the bulwark, to be the oak, and to use his rationality and strategy to navigate the rough seas. He does it with full belief in his own competence.
In living with accordance to nature, the stoic philosopher examines the nature of the human condition (an example would be using a Red Pill lens to examine and navigate the Blue Pill world around us). He discerns his position in nature, and he lives in such a way, not to disgrace himself; not to be less than he truly can be. He won't succumb to the comforts of blue pill ideals, in which previously blinded him and deceived him. He also does not want to be a god, rather he wants to live up to his fullest potential.

A very interesting fact within the world of Philosophy, is that two of the most notorious stoic Philosophers - Epictetus (who was a slave), and Marcus Aurelius (who was an Emperor), are bound by similar foundations of belief. This belief, this stoic belief, no matter the position of the man within the social hierarchy and power structure, is the great equalizer. Both the Slave and the King can participate in a philosophy that is accessible to all men. Regardless of position within the social hierarchy, no matter your starting point: a wise man, a man who is disciplined, in control of his emotions, and follows the way of nature can be a good man, a successful man of his own opinion and standard.

The stoic philosopher is the man who does what he ought to do, regardless of circumstance. If you extend the olive branch to your wife after increasing your SMV and she still refuses to fuck you, you continue improving yourself, seemingly unphased and with complete outcome independence (the stay plan is the same as the go plan). You don’t act butt hurt, you don’t DEER, you stfu, lift, and improve all areas of your life.

The stoic philosopher uses stoicism as a tool, similar to the Red Pill, but to remain unafraid of what others think of him, to have others attempting to destroy his reputation behind his back. He is only afraid of failing himself and what he thinks of himself. He is only afraid of making chaos of his soul, of losing trust in his instincts, and succumbing to his emotions. Why? Because his soul, actions, and emotions are the only things he is completely in control of. The rest is a matter of indifference to him. You become Red Pill aware and begin gaming women while married to increase abundance mentality and dread, and others (Blue Pill men) judge you? Who cares, they are simply unaware of why you are doing what you are doing and will probably suffer from this lack of strategy down the line in their own lives anyways. It does nothing for you to worry or wonder.

Marcus Aurelius wrote a book to himself while he was emperor, never intended to be published. This book was titled “Meditations”. What kind of man writes a book to himself when the nature of a book is to communicate something to a reader? Marcus Aurelius wrote a book to himself because he was the loneliest man in the world. He is a man on his own ship, and as the leader, he has no equals but the responsibility of leading people he can’t control. He is the only one on that ship with the competence to navigate in a direction that leads to success. A man with no equals, has to deal with the burden of performance of being the Emporer, and the only one fit for the role. The book, Meditations, is his echo chamber, his release, where he can vent his emotions, vent his anger and frustration, pondering the stupidity of the seemingly helpless around him, and understanding the world around him with a daily re-anchoring for his mind. He uses this book, as a release, while on the surface: he is STFU, lifting, remaining stoic, and leading with full belief in his ability to do so, in the way only the best version of himself could.
This is exactly why those that do harm to themselves only do so because they don’t know any better. Not only do they not have the knowledge that serves them (the red pill), they don’t have a release that serves them, either. Instead, they allow the surplus of accumulated emotional weight to wear down on them, to the point where they lose emotional control and surrender frame. The mindset of the wise man, is the mindset that allows you not only the mastery of yourself, but evolved wisdom in relation to your reality, making you into what Plato terms: “The Philosopher King”; a man of abundance, outcome independence, indifference, masterfully amused, who is his own centre of point of origin, the main character of his own story.

A man could easily sit back and kick his feet up, let his hair down, crack open a beer on the couch, and ask his wife “what are we up to this weekend?”. He could easily stop courting his coworkers and boss, losing the promotion from Senior-manager to partner in the firm. He could easily put his hobbies on the shelf to collect dust forever, allow his ex wife to raise his kids while he sits on the sidelines and is as involved in their lives as a piece of furniture in the living room. But he doesn’t, because he would be surrendering frame, not adulting right, would ultimately be letting himself down, and all of these things in which he can control.

This explains how stoicism can be used, as a tool, in combination with the Red Pill, to ultimately overcome fear, free of a mindset that doesn’t serve you, and to instead allocate your resources towards a mindset and strategy that does serve you. - To help you move forward in your life where you may be stagnating/ hitting plateaus.

“At some point you have to recognize what world it is that you belong to; what power rules it and from what source you spring; that there is a limit to the time assigned you, and if you don’t use it to free yourself it will be gone and will never return.”
Quick post on Testosterone
by PBL89 | September 11, 2018 | Link

When i started my MRP journey last year i was in the midst of a failed marriage and being at the lowest part of my life. I hated myself, like an unsafe amount. My dead bedroom, lack of self confidence coupled with my weight gain killed my marriage.

As i started distancing myself from my ex and working on myself i turned to the gym. I went everyday and started lifting. It was my escape. But i noticed i wasn't seeing gains like i did when i was younger. I also noticed my erections weren't as hard or sometimes non-existent. I never craved sex and i knew something was up. So i made an appointment to get a hormone profile done.

Sure enough my Test level was 253 at 27 years old, that of a 70 year old. So i kept lifting, dieting, and supplementing for 4 months strait to try and raise my level. I lost 24 lbs and got to 15% BF and i was looking great and was feeling confident. I was going on dates but was still having the ED issues which stressed me about dating.

Got a retest and it was only 450 and i still felt like total shit. So i decided to bite the bullet and start TRT. I did 6-8 months of research and absorbed everything before committing to my first injection.

In the 6 weeks i started TRT i gained 11lbs of muscle and dropped to 11.5-12%BF. My dick was as hard as a rock, my metal state was amazing, and I'm banging a hot 22 year old. Its funny, most of the guys on TRT say it gives you a mindset of "not giving a fuck", i can attest it certainly does. NOTHING PHASES ME.

I advise everybody on here, NO MATTER HOW FUCKING OLD YOU ARE, GO GET FUCKING TESTED. Even if you feel fine, find your natural level, you could find other things that need tweaking, or you could find you were low T like i was. You guys are already putting in the work wit the sidebar and the gym, this is fucking easy, and could change your life more than anything on this subreddit. I really do think getting this checked should be in the sidebar.
Go fuck yourself, Mr. I do not go to the gym. Mr. I do not get sex. Mr. my wife is a bitch.

Go fuck yourself, Mr. I have a 1400# total. Mr. I get so much sex my dick gets raw. Mr. we are running out of public bathrooms to fuck in, just for fun.

Go fuck yourself. Every single one of you including myself.

You have problems. Your wife doesn’t pay attention to you and doesn’t care if you live or die. You have tons of debt. You are a blue pill faggot. You get duty sex. Aww. Poor faggot baby.

I have problems. I was a bachelor for nearly 2 years. I have a maid who cleans my house, I do my own laundry and have a dry cleaner. I do not need her or you to pay any of my bills. I have lawn guys, pool guys and a variety of restaurants I like to eat at who do a good job of keeping me fat and chubby. I have my shit on lock down, and guess what? That is the worst fucking dread there is, even unmanageable at times. Aww poor fucking alpha Chad.

My gal says things like: There are no girl things for me to do around the house. She doesn’t like that. How can she validate herself to me without doing girl stuff that doesn’t include sex?

Your girl bitches you don’t do anything manly. She doesn’t like that. Why cant you validate yourself as a man to her by doing some faggot shit?

The net result is we both have women who are at times, unhappy and need validation. But mine sucks my dick because she knows her value. You, have no value thus your woman treats you like shit.

I live my life as if I am alone. Because I am. My girl is nothing more than an accessory that I really, really enjoy having around and even love from time to time. I enjoy her so much I choose to be just with her, when I know I could spin plates EASILY. I provide more value to her, than she or any other woman ever could to me. And that is OK. It is OK because she is cool, and not a bitch.

Those are her values to me. Her vagina? Its nothing more than an accessory to the accessory. A tool I have trained to do what I want, when I want. Her personality? That is the hard part. That is her programming from childhood, and that is what you must understand. That is something, not so easily modified.

Do you understand?

Because I did not. I did not understand exactly how immaterial every single hole is on a woman's body really is when I started this journey. The one that matters the most? Her mouth. Why? Because of how much bullshit is coming out of it.

The ratio of bullshit to sex is the golden ratio. Not your Adonis cut, or your fucking chest to ass. Who the fuck cares?

Bullshit to sex ratio.

You fucking understand?

Let me try again:

Bullshit to QUALITY of sex ratio.

Now do you fucking understand maggot?

That said:

I fucking suck at and hate comfort tests. "You know, if we broke up I know you would be with another woman the next day."

What the fuck am I supposed to say to that? "Yes" Lets give that a try I think to myself, because fuck that is the truth if I choose so.

Guess what homo, that doesn't work. That causes tears and frowns. So now, I just give a kiss on the forehead. Guess what? No tears, no frowns and I still validate her point and her existence in my life.

Why cant this woman just accept the fact that by me allowing her to be in my life at all, should be all the validation she needs that she provides value? Why do I have to fucking say it or show it via emotions?

Cause she is a chick you dumb fuck.

Why is it that I can I do stupid shit, learn and STFU about it? Do you see me going to askMRP every fucking week and asking dumb fucking questions?

"Hello my fellow faggot friends, my girl wants to know that if I break up with her, if I will fuck other women. I respond with yes, and that makes her sad. What should I do?"

"Hey dumb fuck, how about you STFU and read a fucking sidebar book?"

Do I go and post this shit? No motherfucker. I am to busy stubbing my fat fucking toe, getting high, having butt sex and lifting to come here and ask other dumb fucks what I am doing wrong. I also don't worry about the small pot holes in the road. Am I on the right fucking road is all I need to fucking know.

My biggest fuck up to date in my LTR? Getting tricked into talking about my sexual past. Do not, ever fucking do this. EVER. They do not want to know that they are not the only woman you have pissed on and nearly choked to death.

I am a fucking idiot, just like you, playing the same game you are, just on a different fucking level.
Same game different levels, same hell different devils.
I am one year in, and plan on doing a large overview of the year in the near future. Let's just say understanding these concepts has totally turned my life around and my marriage is actually starting to improve. Remember, this is not a quick fix, take the long and steady approach and your life will improve (with or without your wife).

In the meantime, here is a quick shark week field report (period posts have been my specialty since last April).

Since I have know her, my wife has always been extra emotional during shark week. It is her favorite time to shit test. Her goal is to have me ride her emotional roller-coaster hand in hand with her. Blue pill me would happily cooperate.

On top of that, she is extremely anxious and loves to start fights right before guests come over to our house. Seriously this happens all the time about 45 minutes before people come over. She has always done this, and the problem is blue pill me allowed this shitty behavior, so obviously she now still thinks it is appropriate.

Right on time, 45 minutes before our friends arrive, my wife comes storming into the bedroom. I had just finished showering and was now wet shaving to get ready for the night. She gives me her best shots.

She lays into me stating I need to watch the kids RIGHT NOW because she does everything around the house. (Look here new guys, she wants me to DEER or jump to her command. Old me would DEER right away. I could go on and on about everything I do for my family and did that day, but only a sexless pussy would do that. Why the hell did I use to do that?)

Then she follows up with how it is all about me and she doesn't get to do anything she wants to do. (In her mind she is wondering if this will get me to bite? Is he in his frame or my frame? She hopes I am in my frame because she need a strong man.)

Two failed pitches both fended off, so she throws the "asshole" pitch. (Man she needs some new pitches. I have been knocking that one out of the park since month 4).

So, after she let out all her steam, instead of DEERing or taking the bait and fighting back, I went with the playful mocking route.

I said, "you know, your really do have an asshole for a husband. You should call up your friends and tell them I had the nerve to take a shower!"

Pretending to be her talking to her friend, I follow: "And do you know what that jerk husband of mine did after he showered? That bastard shaved his face! What an asshole!"

She tried to start again, but I totally redirected the conversation at this point and said, "I think we will have pizza for dinner" as happily as can be.
I finished shaving, got dressed and left her with a good laugh. A few minutes later, I went back into the bedroom to grab my phone which was right by her, gave her a nice slap on the ass, and told her she had been bad and was going to be punished later. She ate that shit up.

God it is liberating to understand shit tests. But even more liberating is when you reach the point where you can have fun with them. Blue pill me would have Deered and looked like a weak man, or fought back and looked bitter, or sulked and still been pissed off when our friends got to the house. Or when I was new to the red pill, I would have faked it, but still be fuming under the surface. That was better than before, but she would still sniff it out.

Now I just see her acting like a bratty little girl. No need for me to get worked up over her. In fact, it is best to make fun of her ridiculousness or just laugh off the outburst as exhibits of her feminine nature.

Of course, I had sex twice this weekend and she doted on me all that night. This is what both she and I wanted all along. Keep following the course.
"Lifting, it's easier posted on reddit than actually done." -bogeyd6

Picking a Gym

When everyone first starts to think about MRP and what they need to do. The first thought should always be which gym will you join. More importantly you will think about how much of a fat slob you are and the judgement that comes with going to said gym. Going to a gym and in front of at least 100 people will make you feel stupid starting with an empty bar on SL5x5. I was there, can still remember how dumb it looked and how I couldn't walk straight for a week. The reality of the matter is, and prepare yourself, no one cares. You think the world revolves around you and in your beta kingdom you have trussed up a reality in which you are the center. Could not be further from the truth. My gains and videos were posted on MRP years ago, there is nothing left to prove. If you have a few minutes continue reading and maybe you can begin to fix your life.

Everyone, and you will have to wrap your mind around this, everyone starts at the beginning. Picking the gym that makes you feel comfortable to at least get started is paramount. Many people choose the wrong gyms like LA Fitness and Lifetime Fitness. They are cheap, available, and pretty much have everything you could want. They are also cheap. The problem is, and if you are like me, you don't have three hours to work out. Get in, Lift, Get out. These mc'gyms cater to a larger audience, and could very well be a good choice for the beginner. Who doesn't like a dip in the hot tub to help the muscles relax. Many of us are very busy in our lives and that kind of time doesn't exist. Yet, we tell everyone to make time. The best part is most people are willing to help new people and those who aren't will continue to be idiots. If you find yourself in a busy gym, ask to work your sets in and you would be surprised how helpful most people will be.

Where do you make time? That part is the easiest. Find a power lifting gym somewhere near your house or your work. When I was stateside I lifted in a gym that was very close to my work so I could get in and out. The cost was, well, prohibitive to most poeple. We spend the money where we expect improvement and I needed to lift. Inspect what you expect and the results were pleasing. Time to finish was about 45 mintues and I got to read NMMNG and WISNIFG during my rests. That was about 4 years ago next month.

How to find the right gym for you? That's no easy decision. Maybe you live next door to an independent gym and the decision is easy. Perhaps, you go to to powerliftingwatch dot com and search for a gym in your area but none exist around you. For sure I can tell you that the YMCA will always be better than a mc'gym. You need to find a gym that has a squat rack with safety bars and a bench press that doesnt reuiqre a spotter. Bonus points if the gym is mostly empty so the wait times do not take long. The most important part to consider is the availability of free weights. Showing up to smith machines and calling it a good work out doesn't quite cut is. Doing cardio or cross training for an hour doesn't count.
Common mistakes people make in the beginning that lasts a lifetime.

- Find a gym that fits your schedule and has the equipment to do power lifting.
- Start at the lowest possible weight and start your gains.
- Stop thinking other people are judging your 65lb dead lift.
- Fix your diet.
- Fix your sleep.
- Make the time.

If you think you can do MRP without Lifting and without Reading. Go ahead and leave as there is nothing left for you here. There is a reason this is the first of several weeks. I will promise that if you lift, read, and stfu you will have the same stories like BPP, SK, Perseaus, RZD, STSK, Stone, and all the other men who put in the work. You know who you are. Perhaps in four years time you are still hanging around to offer guidance and share your war stories.

P.S.

Shout out to Stoney, Comment dit-on lifting en français? Think lifting is hard? Try finding a power lifting gym in Europe.
I don't post many personal details here and today I decided it's time to change that. I'm going to let you guys in, fuck it.

I remember so many neglectful moments where my parents dismissed me, shamed me, and attacked my character. I never really grew up into a man who had confidence in himself because of this. Most things I did were doubted, questioned, or mocked, so my internal dialogue was one of self-doubt. I was also brainwashed with religion a lot and developed an entirely BP view of the world and women.

Not surprisingly, as I got older, I was a fucking mess. I retreated into video games, drug addiction, and porn addiction. I let life pass me by. I'm talking years. I was depressed. So depressed. I avoided people. I cut myself, I fantasized about suicide, and I wanted to die. Instead, I created my own world where I was cooler than everyone else. I cultivated BPD tendencies. On the inside, I was barely a shell of a person. It was all I could do to survive. I hid it well.

I don't know how, or why it happened, but when I was 24 I decided I was going to stop being a victim. I enrolled in college, started a business, got married, started a career. I went from barely making $20K a year to pulling six figures in three years. I bought a house, had children, quit smoking weed and popping pills, quit porn, quit videogames, and built a real life of my own but my mindset was still shit.

Right after my son was born, I was put on a really bad project at work that required 100% travel, nights, weekends, and holidays with no PTO allowed. With my shit mindset, I couldn't take the heat. I was eating junk food and drinking every night. I ballooned up to 230 pounds at 6'2". I couldn't sleep, I was put on antidepressants, my blood pressure was through the roof, and one day my back went out. I have had chronic musculoskeletal pain ever since. So did I sit around feeling sorry for myself and making excuses about my special circumstances like my old Omega self? Fuck no. I started lifting.

I lifted constantly. I went from 230 to 195 lbs. I saw a picture of myself from 4 years ago - I am unrecognizable. I built strength from nothing. I was 158 pounds until my early twenties. I was never strong, I just got fat. I dove in head first and learned everything I possibly could about lifting. I finetuned my routines, my diet, I tried different things, I got fit. As for my musculoskeletal issues, I have been to every doctor around, read every book, bought every tool (straps, lacrosse balls, rollers, name it). I manage it, like a fucking man, and I never let it stop me.

So here I am, I have done all these things. Why aren't all these improvements getting me the crazy sex life I want with my wife? Why don't we even have sex much? How come I can buy her all these Christmas presents and she doesn't even give a fuck? I know, I'll write her a letter asking her why! That'll do it!
I wrote a huge letter lamenting over why I wasn't getting my needs met. Her response was essentially; "thanks for saying this. uhh I don't know I guess I'm self conscious and sometimes you smell?".

Cue heartbreak. I started researching divorce, every morning I would wake up studying my options, learning about custody, etc. I noticed a girl at work acting kind of silly around me so I googled it and a Cheateu Heartiste article came up. Alpha/beta? Is this a joke? These dynamics can't be real, humans are way more complicated than that... Around the same time, I stumbled upon Gorilla Mindset. Then, I overheard my wife spewing vitriol about me to my own mother, who sympathized with her. This was the beginning of my RP journey.

Again, I dove in. I read every fucking thing I could get my hands on. I started applying it. My family rejected me. My wife hated me. My mother told me to get my shit together. My brother sold me out. My sister lectured me. I kept going. I lifted, I read, I STFU'd, I AM'd, I AA'd, I got my finances in order, I got my social life back, I started pursuing hobbies again, I killed my oneitis and started following my fucking path - my way. It took months, but my wife started coming around. I stopped using her as an emotional tampon and I stopped letting her use me as hers. I encouraged her to get therapy and, with some pushing from you guys, started going myself.

I used to basically avoid women entirely. I was so unsure. I hated conversations with strangers. I was a closed book. So I started talking to every-fucking-body. I opened groups of friends I never met before and party all night with them like we've known each other for years (this has happened more than once). I gamed women constantly. I have talked to so many fucking girls I can't even remember their faces. I successfully N/K/F closed randos. I fucked my wife constantly.. constantly. I still fuck her constantly. She has literally told me I give her the tingles and she just wants to follow me. She defers to me for all decisions, she does shit in bed she never would have before. She has fully fucking submitted to me and I don't even GAF because what I have learned here has changed my mindset so much, I finally have the tools necessary for living a life worth living, and that's so HUGE none of the little things even matter.

Not even to mention this has made me a much better father. I have been able to lead my family through many challenges that I would have been a drunk captain in before. My own FIL accused me of fucking my MIL for Christ's sake. You have any idea how bad that could have gone for my family if I wasn't on top of my game? Now I'm working on moving us all across country without a single fucking worry. My kids absolutely adore me and I them.

I comment on posts and I don't really share my story a lot. If I can go from who I was, to who I am today, anybody can do it. Thank you, MRP, for giving me the tools I needed to finish the job. I never thought I would look back and laugh at all the torment I put myself through. Yet here I am. I can finally fucking LIVE.
Starting And Changing Your Habits
by MRP5248 | May 8, 2020 | Link

Overview

When you woke up this morning, what did you do? How much of that routine did you do without thinking? Our day is a series of habits that guide our actions and how we spend our time. We can spend that time on high value activities or low value activities. We can develop habits that are high value and stop habits that are low value. In MRP, our MAP is that plan for which habits that we want to start and habits that we want to stop.

As u/ImNotSlash said, we need to Unfuck our habits. I hope to build on his post by exploring specific strategies on how to build new habits and change old ones. At MRP, our default response is to Lift, Sidebar, and STFU. Rightfully so. Changing your habits will help you make this a reality.

Yes, I am going to shit for this post. "Just fucking make it happen!" Well, fuck you, I think we could all make progress faster if we understood our habits. So, I'm swamping notes here here.

Habits

u/ImNotSlash already described a habit. I also like Charles Duhigg's definition from The Power of Habit, > [Habits are].. the choices that all of us deliberately make at some point, and then stop thinking about but continue doing, often every day.... we stopped making a choice, and the behavior became automatic.

This speaks to MRP, where we either used to be Alpha, but we developed new Beta habits and stopped thinking about it or we were career Beta's that made these habit choices in childhood (see NMMNG) and it's just automatic now. So much of the MRP veteran's response to new people are to fucking step up, make a choice, take action, and change your behavior.

At some point, we all consciously decided how to respond to someone questioning our judgement, how much to workout, how much to eat, or how to respond to rejection. Overtime, it just becomes automatic. With MRP, we become aware of how these automatic responses impact our attraction and sexual strategy. This post can help you rebuild those habits to whatever you choose.

Habit Loop

To rebuilt your habit, you have to understand how habits work. It's a simple three step loop:

1. Cue - There is a trigger that tells your brain to go into automatic mode and use a habit. It could be a visual trigger, a time of day, an emotion, a place, a sequence of thoughts, etc.
2. Routine - There is a routine that we follow. This could be a physical, mental, or emotional routine.

3. Reward - There is a reward. This could be physical sensations like sex, food, drugs, but could also be emotions like pride, calmness, etc.

Example - This is a helpful visual where your phone vibrates (cue), you automatically check for a new message (routine), and you get a momentary thrill / distraction from real work (reward).

Example - When we DEER, is a MRP example of an automatic habit. Your wife asks why you haven't cleaned the dishes yet (cue), you just automatically explain how you were busy doing the laundry (routine), and feel relieved when the conflict settles and tension / attention decreases (reward). You don't even think about why you responded that way, until you read WISNIFG and NMMNG. In this case the reward is subtle, I'd say it's an emotion reward where we avoided conflict and "Ah" it's calm again.

Example - It's 5PM, (cue) you pack up your bag, and head to the gym. (routine) That's just what you do now, you're a man and you lift. You lift, and afterwards you feel satisfied, calm, and proud you spent this time on you. (reward) You also get those endorphins pumping. (reward)

Strategies

It is not easy to create or stop a habit, but you're a fucking man and can do this. There are some strategies you can use to help.

Time Boxing / Time Blocking

As /u/RStonePT said, your time is valuable. You fill your time with high value activities. One cue for a habit is time of the day. It's 5PM and that means I do __. The strategy is to deliberately plan every minute of your day and ask yourself "What should I be doing now?" You can use the time of the day as your cue to start a habit routine.

This image shows my plan for a random work day from 8-4 and here is an example from Cal Newport. Every line is a half hour. Hell, Elon Musk apparently time boxes down to every five minutes and Benjamin Franklin did it.

To look broader, this is my plan for a typical weekday. Weekends vary too much, so every Saturday morning, my Wife and I time box on a whiteboard for that weekend.

Tips

- Be flexible. Unexpected things come up and you adjust your schedule. Things take less / more time than expected. It's about being intentional on how you spend your time.
- Compare your day to your MAP. Where did you spend time that was not a high value activity? Where was your time not reflecting your MAP? What should you have done instead? Adjust your time boxed schedule.
- You can timebox fun activities, creative work, etc. Making a schedule doesn't ruin life's fun.

Recognize The Cue - Change The Routine

Next time you DEER, play video games, or do some other stupid shit, ask yourself "What triggered that behavior / response / action?" You want to find the cue that triggered the behavior you are trying to change. The cue is usually a location, a time, an emotional state, other people, or an action right before. When you are trying to figure out why you did something stupid ask yourself:

- Where am I?
- What time is it?
- What's my emotional state?
- Who else is around?
- What action preceded this urge / routine?

After you find the cue, then work on replacing the routine with a better one. When ___(cue), I will _____ (routine) because it provides me with ___(reward).

"When my wife bitches at me about being late, I will STFU, because it provides me with ___." Fill in that last part on your own, if you can.

Example - I have a low value activity where I play video games at night. I want to change that to do a high value activity. Last time I played video games, I realized it and said, "You fuck, what are you doing?" then I thought about what happened right before I picked up that controller.

It was about 9PM (time), I was in my kitchen (location), I was bored (emotional state), no one was around, and I just finished my protein shake (proceeding action). I made a plan that next time this cue happens, I will grab my Kindle to read MRP books. I will replace the routine and break this loop.

Start A Habit - Create A Cue & Reward

To create a new habit, you need to choose a cue that will start your routine and choose a reward. You Then, you have to do that over and over and over. You start to want that reward, expect that reward.

Your trying to unfuck yourself, right? That means you have some new habits you need to start. You need to lift, you need to agree & amplify, etc.

1. Create A Cue - Start by picking a simple cue for your new habit. Something like putting your gym clothes on when you wake up, or an alarm notification, or that feeling of anger that bubbles when you when your wife starts bitching. When I feel that anger bubbling (cue), I will ___.
2. Make Your Routine - This is the new behavior you want to start like STFU, lifting, etc,
3. Create A Reward - Think about your reward will be. It could be a feeling like pride, satisfaction, etc. It shouldn't be an ice cream sandwich after a workout, you fat fuck.
Ideally, your reward should be internal, not external. Think Stephen Covey, you want private victories.

Effort Pacts

Make it hard for yourself to start your bad habit routine. If you are trying to cut and you have a bad habit of getting stressed (cue) and eating chips (routine) to lower stress (reward). You can use increase the effort it takes to get those fucking chips. Don't buy them, put them farther away, etc.

By making it harder for you to do the bad habit, you get more time to ask if it's worth it and stop.

Example - This is a personal example. I am trying to stop jerking off. Before MRP, when I go to take a shower (cue), I would bring my phone into the bathroom and browse reddit while taking a shit. (cue) Then, I would start browsing NSFW, jerk off (routine), and it felt pleasurable (reward). Fucking disgusting, right? Now, I don't take my phone to the bathroom, I leave it in a drawer in my living room with my keys and wallet. I made it harder for myself to do this bad habit.

It's fucking weird. I go to take a shower and my brain starts thinking about sex, porn, jerking off, etc. My phone is not there, I stop and think "What the fuck, brain?" and take a shower. That cue is still there, my brain is still trying to play out that routine. Now, though, I made it harder for myself to fuck myself.

Action - Look at your bad habits. Look at your red areas on your MAP. How could you make it so it's harder to do that bad habit?

Price Pacts

Put your money where your mouth is. We are more motivated to avoid loses than to seek gains. A price pact is to put money on the line to do what we say we will. If you fuck up, you lose that money.

Example - Let's say you want to go to the gym 4 days a week. You take a $100 bill, a calendar, and place it nearby. You track every time you go to the gym. If you don't go to the gym 4 days in a week, you take a lighter and burn that $100 bill.

Tips

- Price pacts are for behaviors you can control.
- Do this for short tasks.
- Set a price that matters to you.

Identity Pact

How you view yourself affects how you lead your life. MRP is often about rebuilding your identity to become the Chad McThundercock who is the ultimate judge of himself, captain of his ship, the prize, etc. As Nir Eyal said, "Our perception of who we are changes what we do."
This is true with MRP with the phrase "I am the prize." It is how we think of ourselves.

Think of the "accountability mirror" that David Goggins talks about. Those sticky notes on that mirror is how he was reshaping his identity.

Example - Recently in one of my own pitiful OYS posts, I said I jerked off and /u/Tyred_Biggums said "Change your mindset to 'I do not jerk off' that's it." He was telling me to change how I see myself. To see jerking off as something I simple did not do. It wasn't apart of my identity anymore, I'm not that guy anymore.

Example - This might sound gay as hell, but after a workout, (cue) I found myself looking at my gains in the mirror and saying "I am the prize." (routine) and felt confident (reward). Unconsciously, I was trying to realign my identity. To build the self-image I wanted. It's straight from NMMNG and having a set of affirmations.

Action - Give yourself a moniker, a name for your MRP identity. Alot of you already did this with your MRP username. It's what you call yourself that helps shape your self-image.

Action - Write your list of affirmations to build how you see yourself. This is my list, "I am the prize. I am my captain. I am my own judge. I own my decisions and the consequences. I put my own needs first. I am who I want to be and fuck everyone else. I can handle anything. I am the leader of myself and my family. I am decisive and take the lead. I am the only person I have to please. If it's something I want to do, then that's what I'll do."

Yeah, it's alot of common MRP phrases. Fuck you, I'm still faking it until I make it. I won't need to look at that list one day because it will just be who I am in my actions and thoughts.

How you see yourself is a habit of thought. We can change that habit.

Keystone Habits

Some habits are more important than others. I think that's partly why MRP suggests Lift, Sidebar, and STFU. These habits are the keystone habits of MRP. You start / change those habits and they start cascading into other habits.

This strategy is to pick a short list of habits to focus on. Make those your keystone habits that will make the biggest change. It's similar to focusing on the red areas of your MAP.

Example - For me, lifting is a keystone habit. If I lift, I tell myself "Shit, I better eat more at this dinner and I better have that protein shake. I'm going to need it to recover." I tell myself "I need to get to bed now or I'm going to feel sore as fuck tomorrow." Once I started lifting, it was much easier to eat more, eat healthier, sleep more, etc.

Action - MRP gives newbies the first keystone habits: Lift. Sidebar. STFU. You might be past the basic advice, but you could still identify your short list of keystone habits you need to start / stop to improve.

Conclusion
I'm still figuring this shit out, but these strategies have helped me create new habits and change old habits related to MRP.

Resources

- This graphic is a good flowchart on modifying habits
- The Power of Habit by Charles Duhigg
- Atomic Habits by James Clear
- Cal Newport Blog Post
- Indistractable by Nir Eyal

Edit - Grammar. Title Change
OYS tip: Always Always Always be early.

by | November 22, 2016 | Link

[deleted]
If you want a slut, find one or create one.
by TrainingTheBrain | December 7, 2015 | Link

I’ve had a few guys respond to my posts on sex saying, “My wife is disgusted by x, y, and z” or “I can’t get my wife to do blah blah blah” To all of these guys I will provide you with this reminder:

You need to realize a cruel red pill truth you cannot negotiate genuine desire. - Rollo

Your wife will do whatever it takes to keep you around if she views you to be a man that she truly wants to keep around.

Some may argue that they could just go out and find a hooker, someone on tinder, or a neighbor and get their needs met by them. Of course you can and if that helps your situation then go for it. But, people are talking about how to get their wife to do that nasty shit.

Go through the quick checklist:

- Do you have a six pack(low bf%), clearly defined adonis belt, developed chest, lats, and arms?

- Do you lay game and kino on your wife throughout the day, building her up to getting what you want when you want?

- Do you truly not give a fuck if you remain married? Developing your OI, Abundance Mentality, and creating dread?

- Are you a Man other women want to fuck?

- Are you a Man other men want to be like?

- Do you feel it's worth the time and energy to get your wife to that point?

As you go through this and dedicate some time to serious introspection you'll realize that if she doesn't put out the way you want her to then she is gone or you'll cheat.

OR

You'll realize that she is capable of more but you are just not lighting that fire of tingles in her. Don't resent her for that. You've probably been a pussy for so long that the fire has all but died.
So be it

Start from square one, truly wrap your mind around the fact that you are the prize. Then make yourself look like a fucking prize and for the most part the rest will sort itself out.

As you develop physically you need to continue absorbing the sidebar and reading on this sub, contributing when you have something of value to provide and above all, owning your shit.

Do what you need to do for your situation. You'll get what you want when you realize that you have to choose what exactly it is you want from life. You need a plan to get what you want, if there's no plan then you're just spinning your wheels.

Do you just want more & kinkier sex or do you want more & kinkier sex with your wife? There's a big difference there and you need to decide what your goal is.

Edit I'm in the process of writing a post on the actual 'creating the slut wife' aspect of this.
So I'm sure there's some work that needs to be done here. Let me know.

I never was a full blown beta. my issue has been more of becoming a better captain and bettering my shitty life to a point where, of course I respect myself, but also my wife can do the same instead of treating me like a mother and constantly falling into her frame. I wanted those tables to turn. Me, to be a leader of her. And our family. She is a control freak and that often comes into conflict with things. She wants things done her way. I want them done mine. We would butt heads and argue about it. I wanted to more shift into her trusting me enough to know I know what’s best. And allow me to lead us to where we need to go. I know she wants this deep down also.

I realize this all starts with me and ends with me. And that comes as a side effect. Started by shifting my focus off her and onto me. I know we stress having a mission here but you Reallllly can’t fucking get this shit without one. Once that falls into place I feel it makes things so much easier. It’s like walking around in the dark and suddenly you have a flash light.

I started lifting 6 days a week. I found my mission. My purpose. Everything is starting to fall into place. I quit a heroin addiction. Got clean. Got into a good career. Got 3 raises in less than a year of being there. I love my fucking job. Now I found someone to not only pay for my schooling to further my career but hire me right out making great money. To my ultimate end goal which will be to run my own business within this career. All of this happened with in the last year +.

last weekend there was a couple boundaries I wanted to put in place and I sat her down and told her about them. I told her if things did not improve we would not be together. That there was something’s I needed to take care of to better myself and if she wasn’t going to help or make the process harder that we are best to go out separate ways. She cried. I didn’t bite and left it at that.

The next couple days came and went and things have been awesome. Coming home to meals everyday (not part of the deal she has just been doing this). Great sex when I want. Putting up her end of the deal Etc. I realize this is bound to change after a while and this is because of the boundary talk. But for now I am cool with how things are going.

I come home from work yesterday after a 12 hour shift and a gym session. And she tells me she wants to talk. I say about what. She says what was said the other day. I tell her I said what I needed to say. There’s nothing else to talk about. She says yes there is.

I continue getting undressed and go make a plate of food. When I sit down she is staring at me.

“I love you so much and you can’t just say you’ll leave. You’re playing with my heart”
I say okay.

I can tell where this is going and I want no part of it. I have been here plenty of times before.

I forget what else she was saying but then She starts going.

“I’m not comfortable. With this” with an angry. Serious look.

And this is where I done something I never have before and I watched the magic unroll. Normally this is about the point where I give into her frame. This time

I immediately say.

“Well no wonder you’re uncomfortable look how you’re sitting. (She was slouched down in the couch laying back a little bit) here let me help you with that”

I go over pick her up and place her upright in the couch. She starts cracking up.

After her laugh she starts trying to talk again. I tell her I don’t want to talk about it. She says “it’s not fair. It’s like everything is always on your terms”

I stfu.

She eventually gets over it.

This might not seem like shit to most of you guys but this was huge for me. I would normally jump right into her frame and start defending myself. Hating myself for it after and he being pissed off all night.

I am by no means where I want to be but I am a hell of a lot better than I was a couple months ago.

I think my biggest realization in all of this is the true importance of having a mission/vision in place that has nothing to do with your wife.
All things are cyclical, and our little misogyny hamlet of a Subreddit is not immune to the lazy tendencies of society at large. In a world of virtual EVERYTHING, we often conflate the effort of analyzing a thing with the exertion of building that same thing. So before anyone else goes off on a frustrated rant, I believe it’s time for a semi-annual “Thinking v. Doing” check-up.

The users of MRP, me included at times, would rather wax poetic about the esoteric aspects of what makes a man, rather than give examples of action demonstrating the building of a man. Theory has its allure, because it can be applied in the abstract to our own personal situations. Educated guesses can be made about how people may behave with regard to whatever circumstance a man is addressing. To further buttress this “virtual testing” we simplify (intentionally or unintentionally) factors from the problem that is to be solved by the use of categorization and stereotype. (E.g., if AWALT, then in theory, X woman will react to Y in Z manner.)

Great, a man has discovered the path to paper Alpha and keyboard cowboy, and might even fool himself into believing he gets it. Has filling the space between a man’s ears ever gotten his dick wet? Does knowing how to pray guarantee a place for a man in Heaven? Will being good at “fantasy” sports make a man qualified to run Minnesota United FC?

Knowing isn't enough. Being smart isn't enough. Recognizing the patterns in the Code is not enough, Neo. Does a man enjoy fucking or not? Is it worth the effort to be a coveted man? Is a man that frightened of what a woman will think of him? At some point paralysis of analysis and procrastination has to end.

Getting Out of Your Head

There are several causes of analysis paralysis and these can affect smart men the worst.

People fear making the wrong decision

Often we don’t make a decision because we fear making the wrong one. It can be impossible to work out all the many possible consequences of the choice or strategy to employ, particularly with people. Because it is impossible to know which decision is best, we avoid making any decision at all. This can be particularly difficult for linear thinkers who are used to using logic to resolve problems. People are irrational, complex and often words betray what they are really thinking and feeling.

There is too much choice

In our current society, there is a huge amount of choice available. From diets, lifting programs, the hobbies we engage in, the shit we buy, the careers we choose and the relationships we foster, our lives are made up of endless choices. Having lots of choices seems like it would be a good thing. However, having many options (not to be confused with abundance mentality) can actually make it more difficult to choose. It is also the case that we are never quite as happy with the choices we make because we are always wondering if a different choice would have been better. Every fucking guy who married his High School sweetheart ends up puking on this sub or AskMRP about not having sowed his oats. This combination of “Paradox of Choice” and “Fear of Missing Out” is pervasive in this space.

There is too much information

For each choice we make, there are vast amounts of information available. Take the example of eating healthily. A man will be able to find thousands of books, academic papers, websites and TV programs about this subject. It would be impossible to read or watch all of these resources. Even if we did, many of them are conflicting. Some tell us not to eat fat, some say avoid carbs while yet others suggest we avoid meat or dairy. MRP tries to narrow information by providing anecdotal evidence in the form of Field Reports and “Own Your Shit” to demonstrate what works for individuals to whom the reader might relate. YMMV.

A dude looking for relationship advice likes to find a conclusive answer before he makes ANY decision and this simply isn’t possible in the information age. Sometimes perfect can get in the way when good enough will do in a crisis. In addition, The Red Pill isn’t meant to be prescriptive. I’m not a deacon, and this isn’t a cult. I’m not trying to fuck your SO, you are.

Lack of focus

Some of you fuckers have undiagnosed adult ADHD. Added to this, the incredible amount of options for our lives can also make it more difficult to focus. We can see so many people doing so many different things with their lives and we want to do them all too. However, spreading ourselves too thin can mean that we do not do our best at any one thing. With the constant distractions of porn, social media, and other people, we can find it hard to focus on what is really important to us.

This is a main reason why the virtues of lifting are extolled here. Lifting takes up a regimented period of a man’s day, which used to be misspent oversleeping in bed, making money for someone else, or sitting around with the SO not fucking on the couch. Many of us use lifting as the catalyst for the entire day. It provides discipline, focus, and strength of mind and body. More and more studies are being published showing that strength training allows a man to be more vigorous, youthful, and masculine long into his life.

Trying to do too much at once

As a result of our lack of focus, we often try to do too much. Multitasking sucks, and study after study demonstrates that it does nothing to increase productivity or results. In addition, we only have the mental and physical energy to make a certain number of decisions every day. As our energy is consumed, decision making becomes harder and harder. We begin to make less well-informed decisions and this can affect our productivity and creativity. This is why we also implore men to initiate sex when they feel up to having sex. A man has the energy to do it right, and if rejected, can move on to do something productive with his time.

A high IQ is no guarantee of success if men become paralyzed by making decisions.
Overthinking can lead to being less productive and less creative. It can also lower cognitive function, exhaust willpower and undermine happiness. Getting stuck in one’s head will beat a man down.

Ultimately, if intelligence gets in the way of taking concrete action, it can lead to eventual failure, rather than success. This is why so many intelligent, outwardly successful men are miserable. They don’t act, react poorly to the smallest of failures, and don’t persevere.

Tips to Act

After identifying why men overthink things to the point of catatonia, I should probably provide some actionable solutions to the issue, or lest I become part of the problem.

Prioritize your actions

We have a limited capacity to make decisions. So to be most effective, men need to prioritize the most important ones. Making a man his mental point of origin will simplify this greatly. If a decision is a needless sacrifice, it’s probably a bad decision. This is why successful people develop a routine and don’t suffer the bullshit of others. To “not give a fuck” is not a call to be callous, it is a call to prioritize what is important and disregard the rest (or find it absurd). Why wear out decision-making abilities choosing things that could be delegated, or have almost no consequence to a man’s life?

Take important action when you are freshest

Because we have a limited ability to make effective decisions, it is worth making important ones when we have the most energy. We have all experienced the situation where we struggle through work even when we are tired. We make mistakes, and get clumsy. This is not the time to make important decisions. Most people are better at making decisions early in the day: before their limited amount of mental energy and willpower runs out. Initiate earlier. Game during the day. Take time to rest and recover.

Limit time searching for further information

When a man has a decision to make, decide how much time will be spent researching it. Obviously, different decisions will need different amounts of time. Choosing a toaster has fewer consequences than choosing divorce. Deciding where to go on vacation is less important than choosing a place to live. Work out the worst-case consequences of the decision and allocate a reasonable amount of time to make a choice. If a man can’t act in a meaningful way, minimize the damage that could be done by keeping his fucking mouth shut. Not acting can also be the best action if he is unprepared.

There is a plethora of information available on any subject. Reading too many posts here will likely lead to further confusion. Choose a few reliable sources and learn on your own time. Set a time limit, do the research and then make the choice. I’ve seen divorce research last many, many months on this sub. Law school only lasts six semesters, and your research won’t result in a diploma or job.
Some necessary action is admittedly reflexive or close to instantaneous. This is where good practice and repetition come into play. This is why we have a staggered interaction strategy proposed for men having trouble expressing their wants in relationships. (1) Observe (STFU) and minimize damage; (2) sorting emotional speech (AA, AM, Fogging, etc...); and (3) proactive, overt expression of boundaries and desires (meaningful mouth sounds used to say what a man wants and deserves). The fact that the sub uses training wheels to get men to talk to women as though their own lives are important is both sad and illustrative. Men in this sub are generally poor advocates for themselves and blame others for it.

Be clear about your objectives

What the fuck do you want? A man can’t make an effective decision unless he is clear on his desired outcome. Also keep in mind that a man’s desired outcome might change, which requires a change in course. Before he begins any research, he needs to think about what it is he truly desires from the decision. This will help a man to focus on the most pertinent information he needs to make that decision.

The vaguer a man makes his objectives, the less obtainable they will be, and also the less likely a man will be to act to achieve success. The “Own Your Shit” weekly thread serves to distill a man’s shitty vagaries until he can clearly state what he wants.

Conclusion

It’s easy to retreat into the comfort of theory when people and life are unpredictable. In order to get the most value from this sub and from the advice it dispenses, a man needs to step away from academia and into the arena. Above all else, this requires knowing what he wants.

By providing some cogent and congruent solutions to this pervasive problem with our membership, I hope at least some of you faggots are spurred to act, regardless of your fears and misgivings.
My “First MRP Moment”, I believe. It will never be the same.

by Zer0FuksGiv3n | October 18, 2019 | Link

Long time reader, first time posting. Been following MRP and RP guidance since Jan this year. Reading, working out, and letting go of shit and fear. Last insight I had what I would call "My first MRP" moment with the wife and it felt great.

Been one day since we last fucked - gave her the prior night off - and I was feeling the urge last night. Night started off with her in some funk mood, but I decided to be strait forward and initiate sex, and she resisted. Then the fireworks started. She started bitching at me about some random bullshit about "You don't do this or that". Trying to deflect and start an argument - you know so she can get out of sex. I stopped her mid bitching and called her out that she was just trying to deflect and argue to ensure sex was off the table. She got pissed, I stayed cool. Then I asked for a strait answer, "sex tonight, yes or no". She gave the obvious "I don't know" trying to just drag me along like a puppy. While we are arguing she starts to get up to go take a shower. I expressed to her that I am talking and that it's bullshit to just walk away. She stopped and gave me a bitchy look. I told her since she can't give an answer, then I am making the call, no sex (At that moment you could see it in her face that she knew she lost control with sex as a tool). She then asked if I was done and if she could take a shower. Of course I said, "thanks for asking for permission and yes take a shower. "

After the shower, I didn't sulk or complain about no sex. Just sat in the bedroom, ignored her, and watch some TV in silence. About 15 mins pass, and she says "Ok I want to have sex". Great! As I sat there, she came over gave me a blow job with out me asking, then I fucked her hard (so she knew who was in control). After ward, she thanked me and we went to bed.

It works. Let go of fear, be a fucking man, own your shit, and your wife will beg to make you happy.
Marriage is like the Prisoner's Dilemma game. Each player has a nice card and a mean card. The best strategy that has been developed over millions of computer simulations is to ALWAYS play your "nice" card first, then respond tit for tat. That is, you play your nice card, she plays her mean card. Then the next card you play is your mean card. You KEEP PLAYING your mean card until she plays her nice card. THEN you play your nice card so long as she continues playing her nice card. Tit-for-Tat.

How does this look in a marriage? All of us have a "Nice Card" and a "Mean Card" because of this unbreakable rule:

MEN CONTROL COMMITMENT, WOMEN CONTROL SEXUAL ACCESS.

Husband Nice: Masculine, affirming presence with your time and attention.

Husband Mean: Ignore, remove affection, time, and attention.

Wife Nice: Sexy time

Wife Mean: Hard Sexual Denial

Based on the Prisoner's Dilemma and some basic Psychology, I advocate withholding affection for sexual denials beginning at Dread Level 4. This is a very basic operant conditioning technique. By providing clear consequences to behavior (withholding sex and giving a "Hard No") you work over time to change that behavior.

However there are a few clarifications because this concept of withholding affection for sexual denials is taken WAY to literally by WAY to many people.

First, this is supposed to be built up slowly over months and the connection in her mind- and yours- between withholding sex and you nope-ing the fuck out of there is NOT supposed to be a direct link. It is simply that you have better things to do than to put up with a screechtard blue baller who is not attracted to you.

This is why Level 3- GET BUSY COMES FIRST! You have to build a fun, exciting life with lots of options and to GET BUSY BEFORE you start on Level 4- BEGIN CONDITIONING YOUR EMOTIONAL AND PHYSICAL AVAILABILITY TO YOUR WIFE WITH HER (SEXUAL) AVAILABILITY TO YOU. If you don't lay the groundwork first, then she will see this (correctly) as you being a butthurt little boy denied his candy.

Withholding emotional and physical validation IS AN EXTREME STEP AND SHOULD ONLY BE TAKEN FOR EXTREME REASONS.

There are several key words in THE Level 4 directions: First is the word BEGIN. "Begin" means.....Start. It doesn't mean get busy (Level 3) and then move to Level 4 where you suddenly turn into a total dick- suck my dick every day or I will ignore you and have nothing to do with you, bitch.

If you are on the once a month or twice a month plan then initiate one night. If turned down, play it cool. Don't be an asshole! Take a middle road path. Simply turn down the ardor a bit. Take longer to answer her calls. Leave for your martial arts club without kissing her goodbye. Cut back a bit on your displays of affection. Remain the rock. Remain strong and fatherly but no more Disney Princess Twu Wuv bullshit.

Notice I don't say ignore her completely! Simply dial it back. If turned down again when you have been affirming and upbeat for a while then do it again- this time with a bit more withdrawing. Perhaps you leave for a time and "accidently" leave you phone at home. Perhaps you don't take your phone to work the next day and you don't call or text her during the day.

The point is BEGIN to disengage. DO NOT BE SCHIZOPHRENIC AND SUDDENLY DISENGAGE COMPLETELY. Do it slowly and increase the pressure (by decreasing the time/attention/affection) over weeks, NOT days. Build the connection in your mind and hers that there are consequences to her being in control of your sexuality and denying you. Just don't do it all at once!

Second, "sexual availability" does NOT mean she is DTF 24/7 every day of the week. There are times when your wife is NOT available to you but this is not always a "Hard Denial."

For example, I have a tacit agreement with my wife that I will not initiate sex every day. She has always maintained that she enjoys it much more when we wait a day, building up tension and so on. Since I am in my late 40's, I have to agree with her. So I initiate just about every other day. She is receptive and only rarely turns me down on that day- and almost always with something along the lines of "I am tired, darling. Let's do this tomorrow so I can get into it."

My response? A paternal kiss on the forehead and THEN I act as if nothing has happened. I remain upbeat, affirming, warm, affectionate, strong, etc before leaving the room to do my own thing). Why do i do this? BECAUSE THIS IS NOT A SEXUAL DENIAL. THIS IS PERHAPS A SEXUAL DEFLECTION, OR SEXUAL DELAY. IT IS NOT A HARD "NO" HOWEVER.

YOU WANT this level of communication (SHH, don't tell TBP) with your wife. In fact, you WANT the level of communication where you communicate your intent with your eyes and she responds nonverbally. I can't tell you the number of times my wife has seen me give her a smoldering look and she responds by closing the distance, settling into my arms, kissing me and saying: "Tomorrow." A couple times I managed to say it along with her because I already knew the answer. THAT is Red Pill communication fellows. Direct, to the point, and no or few words necessary.

Even Daniel rose of The Sex God Method recommends this course of action for this type of "denial." He suggest giving her an Agree and Amplify and something along the lines of: "Oh my baby is sore from all that pounding last night. Don't worry dear, we can wait another day and let you heal."

So let us be clear:

1. I think you withhold affection for hard sexual denials and ONLY for sexual denials. She controls sex, you control commitment. If she plays her "mean" card, then you are forced to play your "mean" card.

2. I do not think you withhold affection for Starfish sex. A woman can respond to your advances by submitting to them but the only way to truly get her to like it is to be a high value man yourself and that has nothing to do with changing her behavior. Thus operant conditioning is useless for the Starfish. You can get compliance from your wife, but if you want to get her hot and dripping, that is entirely on you. Be attractive. Don't be unattractive.

3. I do not think you use this tactic during shark week or if there is a legitimate reason to deny intimacy. What are you conditioning if your wife is physically unable to have sex with you? What is the purpose of withholding affection for a behavior that cannot be performed at the moment due to illness or infirmity (or a bloody mess)?

4. I do not think you withhold affection for a single night of "I'm tired, let's make it up tomorrow." As stated above, I do not think this is an actual "sexual denial" most of the time. Of course it may very well be- that is for YOU to decide on your own in the context of your own relationship.

In conclusion: I think you use this ultimate tactic- withholding affection and time for Hard Sexual Denials- in a sparing, measured way. Use your head with this guys- and not the little ones. Define what a "Hard Sexual Denial" means to YOU and YOUR marriage and act accordingly Red Warriors. Be consistent, develop your goals, and gradually work towards them.

Finally what do you do when your wife calls you out on your sudden change in behavior? "Are you going to be mean to me all the time if we don't have sex every day." I think when she brings this behavior into the open it is not out of line to bring it all the way into the open. If you can say very calmly:

"I am not mad, just disappointed and frankly I have better things to do than to hang out with a woman who is not attracted to me."
Then smile grimly and give her a brotherly, passionless kiss and leave the house. Let us know what happens when you get back and for the love of God do NOT react to her whining, bitching and moaning. Just leave and if she tries to keep you from leaving just do broken record- I have better things to do than to hang around here with a woman who is not attracted to me." Note how this works when you really do have better things to do!

TLDR: Actus Non Verba
Nick Kelly recently released a Podcast Listen Here.

In the Podcast he answers the question as to whether he’ll get married or into an LTR and have kids. He says(paraphrased), “no, not now – possibly not ever.” He then goes on to discuss how he puts work before all else and all of the married men & fathers he knows have lost their fire.

When I heard this I nodded in agreement as having a family does reduce a man’s output. I let the thought go and listened to the rest of the audio clip which conveniently ended right before I finished my commute from work.

I didn’t come back to this topic until I was laying down with both of my kids. I had intended to work on editing the TFA book, but both my son and daughter came up to me right before I was going to put them down for a nap (we had a late party to attend that night) and they asked if we could have a ‘family nap’(think Willy Wonka’s grandparents, everyone in the bed napping) basically I’ll nap with them, one on each side – me in the middle.

My immediate instinct was to say “No” as I had edits to do, but I thought of all the other times where I’ve said No the past 2 weeks because I was studying for finals, knocking out assignments, writing posts, etc.

So I said, “Yes.”

While lying there I thought of Nick Kelly’s point on Work. I was also thinking of how there is nowhere in the world I’d rather be than laying on that bed with both of their little heads on my chest listening to them lightly snoring, in rhythm. I thought of how choosing to nap with them over editing was me placing the ‘work’ I had to do with them over the work I had to do on the book.

I caught myself thinking of this/that and intentionally forced myself to immerse in the now. Hearing their snores, their soft hair, the warmth from their little bodies, my mind was warmed by the comfort & joy that comes from knowing your kids still need you.

I won’t have these moments for much longer and that’s a sobering thought. My son is becoming a man, more and more independent with each passing day. Same with my daughter, I find her asking for help less and less with the passing months.

I chose this life; I purposely chose the grind of fatherhood knowing that by doing so, I’d become a less productive individual with regard to my own pursuits.

But that’s the point; their development, upbringing, and life experiences have become a part of my work.

This is an aspect of fatherhood & marriage that is lost on many men. They view their wife and kids as a burden, they think they would be better if only they were single.

This is a flawed mentality and it is where the FAMILY aspect of being a Family Alpha comes into play.

Nick Kelly can travel to anywhere at any time he chooses. /u/IlimitableMan can pump out a high workload of writing without having to worry about dedicating time to others. Some men view them with envy, wishing “if only I weren’t married with kids” as if their failure to perform has to do with their life status.

Married men and fathers, look upon your wife & kid(s) as fuel, not an anchor. Recognize that your role in life is different than the single guys out there. They can travel in a moment’s notice while you are raising the next generation of men and women who will raise the standard of masculinity and femininity in our society.

When you create a pathway to act as your son’s Rite of Passage you are doing your work as a masculine man. When you lead your wife to staying in shape, being a freak in the sheets, and allowing her to fill her feminine role you are doing your work as a man. Most of the work done by the Family Alpha’s out there is done in silence. We are the Silent Professionals of the Manosphere; the men who write on our blogs when the family has gone to sleep, in between activities with the kids, or while a wife is talking to us and seeking guidance.

We are the men who have to wake up earlier to get time alone and stay up later to get edits done. We make time to lift, read, and write while also leading a wife, educating our children, and ensuring the entire clan is truly living, getting the most of their days, and Hanging Polaroids.

Read the Rest on the Family Alpha Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/12/05/the-burden-of-family/

Follow on Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
This is long, but I think that it needs to be. I'm not new here, I've been posting for months here and there, but I've created a new account because in many ways I feel as though I've turned a corner. I'm setting up background so that those lurkers who are in the depths of despair can understand that if I can do this, they can also.

Intro

I found RP philosophies through a round-about way. Over 10 years ago I would occasionally listen to Tom Leykis on the radio. This was my first introduction to what could be considered an "alpha" mindset when it comes to relationships. I never implemented any of his advice or rules because I believed it was only for single guys.

I'm a doctor and an alpha at work, but have been a drunk captain at home. Married for 16 years and we have 4 children.

This past May I was browsing the dead bedrooms subreddit and found a recommendation for the MMSLP book. I purchased the pdf and read it in a matter of days. I implemented many of the principles and noticed an immediate improvement in the bedroom. After about 2 weeks, however, the bedroom reverted back to old habits. In hindsight I can now see that part of this was because I felt that "playing games" with my wife was simply too difficult and I found the prospect of having to do that for the rest of my life to be too exhausting.

Of course, now I can see that the information in MMSLP is invaluable, however it can't be a permanent bridging of gap in any marriage. There is other knowledge that is necessary and a compliment to MMSLP. At the time I did not know this. In hindsight I also find this shocking because Kay specifically mentions "the manosphere" in MMSLP, but I had no inclination to discover anything about it.

In August I once again found myself in the dead bedrooms subreddit and saw a mention of TRP subreddit. I clicked it and read for about an hour. I liked the principles I saw. What I liked even more was the mention I found of the MRP subreddit.

There (here!) I found many of the same things I had heard years ago from Tom Leykis, coupled with things I had read in MMSLP...but it seemed to be finely-tuned for me, a guy married for 15+ years and a handful of children.

Implementation

In August I read NMMNG and WISNIFG. In September I read Pook and discovered various manosphere blogs. In October I ordered and read The Rational Male books 1 & 2. These weren't just cursory readings. I ordered hard copies of all of them and made highlights and took notes. I got serious about it. I also re-read MMSLP. It made much more sense. I implemented the Captain/FO model and verbally acknowledged this to my wife. I began tracking her cycle using the Clue app. I've feasted on all the top MRP posts.

Tests

Through September things weren't perfect, but they were improved and improving. Intimacy still wasn't where I thought it should be. Her most common complaint/shit test was "all you think about is sex!" I defused this with STFU, answering with "of course I do," or using A&A or AM. It no longer bothered me.

The Event

Mid-October she was in a funky mood. Her parents were in town for the weekend and I knew she was going to blow up at me. I knew this because she felt that her parents would give her emotional support. I knew they wouldn't be involved in the argument but I also knew that she believed I wouldn't stand up for myself if they were around. She was wrong.

The began by saying "is this it? Are we done with our relationship because I don't feel any emotional connection to you?" It didn't phase me. I calmly said to her "I'm not here to please you. Feel free to leave, but it's my house and I'm not going anywhere." I then left the house to run an errand.

We had plans to go out to dinner with her parents, so after I was gone for 10 minutes she sent me a text asking where I was. I didn't respond but made my way back home, which I was planning to do anyway. She greeted me at the door as the kids were getting into her car. She said "I'm sorry" and I said "let's go inside so I can speak with you."

Inside I kept it short and sweet. I said "you can do whatever you feel but I will NOT be held emotionally hostage by your vagina anymore." She had a look of shock and I walked out to the car, she joined me, and we went to dinner.

Dinner was good. I had a great meal. Everybody enjoyed themselves and I felt an immense sense of freedom for the first time in a long time. I had finally said something that I felt was vital to me as a person. If I valued myself I could not be held hostage by her vagina any longer.

I didn't know how things would be when we arrived home. The kids went to bed and then I went to bed. I was exhausted from the emotional release. She said she was going to stay up and hang out with her parents for a bit and then she would be up to bed.

I fell asleep, she woke me up when she came up and we had crazy sex. She was turned on. I wanted to think "damn, this RP stuff works," but I didn't know if it was the RP or just her having emotional swings from our conversation.

The outcome

That night was October 19. Here is a list, by date, of times we have had sex since then:

October 20, 20, 23, 25, 27, 29, 30. That's right, we had it twice on the 20th, once before work and once after. Those dates include sex in the kitchen, sex during my lunch break, and blowjobs every time. Prior to this I've received a blowjob from her ONE time in our marriage. I've now had 8 this month.

We've averaged sex once every 10-20 days in our marriage; I know because I track it. During our marriage I would initiate every 1-2 days. I basically had a 90% rejection rate. We've had it 8 times in the past 12 days. We could have done it more frequently but I didn't want to and therefore didn't initiate.

On two of those above evenings I didn't initiate, because I felt great and honestly had an abundance mentality. I think that this made her more horny and she couldn't help herself.

What am I doing?

Am I satisfied? Yes, in many ways. But now more than ever I recognize the effort that a Man but out forth in being a leader, a father, a person who commands respect because he is so awesome that not giving him respect is recognized as detrimental by those around him. I'm enjoying life and my wife is along for the ride.

I'm surprising her multiple times each week. I'm radio silent during the day. I don't respond to calls or texts, and she absolutely loves this. She wouldn't say she does, but I know because of her actions. I'm the king dick around these parts. Leading, delegating, creating opportunities. We ran an obstacle course 5k as a family today. We've never done that. She loves and craves the new stuff.

Am I resting? No. I've been lifting & conditioning every day for two years now. I lost 30# in the process, but need to lose more. I'm reading more than ever. Meditations by Marcus Aurelius and The 48 Laws of Power are on my nightstand. I started them today. I hit a different manosphere blog each day and read the writings. I go out with guys hit the shooting range every 1-2 weeks. I'm making choices that bring me happiness and make me a better person. IDGAF has taken over my life.

Summary

This stuff works. It takes time and effort. I know, I've used it to resurrect a dead bedroom. Turns out our wives don't want to be married to a whiny baby. It's all on my shoulders. Our familial successes and failures. My successes and failures. Isn't this amazing?

Update

Two weeks later, time for an update. Still boning hard. Sometimes missing a day but making up for it twice the following day.
FR: Stick Up for Your FO

by donedreadpirate | January 28, 2018 | Link

Was at the club with my wife. I guess this big motherfucker and his friend were next to me. I was flirting with my wife and not paying them any mind. Everyone was dancing and his friend bumped into me. I just turned around and smiled, it was packed, everyone was dancing, it happens. His friend started to apologize and the big dude came up and put his arm around me in kind of a drunken late night way no big deal. Turns out he had pushed his friend into me. Then he stares at my wife, grabs her beer, and goes to take a sip.

Mid-air, I grabbed the beer and held it to his stomach, not allowing him to take a sip, my hand was over his hand. Kept calm, level head, and said, "let it go man." His friend started talking him out of it, "dude, come on, give it back." Few seconds later he lets go, my wife takes the beer back and says, "I think we can all agree that was a dick move." Guys backs off, we were waiting for an Uber that was just arriving. Wife said he jumped at me again when we walked out. Didn't even notice.

Walked out and she says, "that was SO attractive, I can feel the energy coming off of you!". I just shrugged and was like "whatever". Smiled and winked. Went home and slammed. Lessons I learned here, having never been confronted by someone bigger than me, or ever having another man disrespect my wife like this before:

- Stick up for your wife when called upon
- Remain calm and unemotional in the confrontation. Eye contact and confidence. No fear. Don't enter his frame. Don't try to protect your wife or usher her away, this is between you and him.
- Other guy will look like a child, you will look like a man in control. Believe this and it's natural.
- His friends may sense your calm and defuse the situation for you
- Betas guard, alphas disregard -CAD

This isn't the most revelatory FR, but this is an instance where it's important to show leadership and ability to remain calm under pressure. In the end, I got out of there without scrapping, displayed dominant and protective qualities in an attractive way, and got my wife dripping wet. I remained in my frame and the night went exactly how I had planned before and after the small disturbance. She wants a man who keeps it together. You should want to be a man who keeps it together. Don't get me wrong, fight when necessary. Stick up for your FO.
Male Authority - Be a "Man"
by Rollo-Tomassi | November 14, 2018 | Link

Excerpt:

How women and a feminine-primary social order control men by reserving the title of “manhood” for men who comply with female primacy.

In the Manosphere we often discuss the dynamic of men holding the burden of 100% responsibility yet are conferred 0% authority when it comes to intersexual relationships. This didn’t used to be the case. There was a kind of default authority imbued in men that was part of simply being a male under the old social contract. A lot of western societies still presumes this is the case in fact. It’s one reason popular culture presumes such a thing as ‘male privilege’ exists today. They may even have a case with respect to the Old Set of Books; being a “man” inferred that a male had some degree of power, authority and decision making capacity over the course his life would take, as well as the lives of any women or children or extended family members who were dependent upon him being a “man”.

Responsibility is what defines men to this day, but the utility in this being hammered home into the psyches of men has become something the Feminine Imperative has found very useful in consolidating power in the hands of women. We’re ceaselessly told that responsibility is something men need to assume, but under the old set of books the incentive for a man assuming that responsibility came with a commensurate portion of authority (power). That was what used to earn a man the title of “manhood”; men were expected to possess the competency to produce surplus resources, enough to ensure the security and survival of his immediate and extended family, and then his tribe, his clan, his nation, etc. We still call this “being a productive member of society”, but now the incentives of a default authority that made assuming that responsibility a reasonable exchange have been stripped away along with all the grounding that a family name or tribal identity used to mean to men. In their place is all the same expectation of responsibility, but not even the pretense of male authority that stems from it.
Twitter Bros out there including Rian and Hunter are having a little tiff over vetting.

With the utmost respect - they are both wrong.

What is vetting?

- using available data of someone's past and current behavior to predict future behavior.

Makes perfect sense. People tend to do what they did in the past.

Vetting seems like a great idea.

Unless you make it the Golden Calf of future relationship potential.

High N count, prior cheating, tattoos, drugs - all great red flags.

Low n count, good job, good family, long hair, cooking, great sex, submissive - whatever - great green flags. Maybe.

Neither one predicts future behavior with you.

Those guys on the side of vetting will tell you that you just have to vet well.

You do. Just like you just have to be yourself. If yourself has frame and has his shit together.

But all those who tell you to vet well - it's because they got lucky. They vetted for the right things for their given situation and have not experienced the stressors with that woman that would make that specific no longer be a good partner.

Think of it this way - if you vetted when she was young - she literally didn't have enough miles on her for sufficient data.

If you're vetting an older woman after your divorce - consider that all her prior negative and positive behavior had context. A beta husband/ltr, etc.

Consider that all her positive behavior has context (trying to sell you on a relationship with her).

It's all ego.

"I vetted well therefore I have a good relationship".

"I vetted poorly therefore I picked a bad woman"

Bullshit.
You did what you could do at the time. Use the information to guide you but understand that in the end of the day you're making a bet.

Hedge the bet as much as possible. But since you don't know what life has in store for you - understand that hedging a bet is ALL you're doing.

Your only power is to walk away if you bet badly.

If you're here you fucked up once. So how about you start by vetting yourself.
Divorced or single, I noticed a similar thing, guys looking for a relationship. I have never been the guy who wanted one, the only reason I'm in one now is because the girl I was with never gave me a red flag in over two years. And I remember that one goof in here who got divorced, then a few months later is already looking at his first plate like a replacement for the wife he already didn't want.

I happened into this mindset, almost by accident. I had been spinning plates for just about a decade at that point – I was a late bloomer – and had seen nothing but disaster in the vast majority of relationships around me. Parents, friends, co-workers. I was just old enough to see the first round of divorces among guys my age. Man it happens young. As I started telling the story, I was getting the stories of other guys in the red pill, the one that comes to mind was /u/UEMMMcgill, another red pill moderator who had the same experience. A few others afterwards came out, and so I ran with the idea.

You can only be open to having a relationship, but the onus is on her to convince you it's worth it.

Full post here

Also I watch the dogs sleep while I tell the story
Holding Frame in Dread Level 12

As expected, nothing last forever. As I described in last week’s OYS; I had broken all my plates save one (Charlene). Last Saturday I had a stay over date planned with Charlene at her place. Charlene is single, an 8-blond (not age dependent . . . lol), not at all clingy, and just a lot of fun. Only one problem: she has a problem with alcohol. I had told her I was ending our relationship the week before because I was too busy with other priorities in my life; but she wanted to meet one last time to go to a concert and fuck all night (sure). My lie to wife was that I was staying at a friend’s house that happens to live near Charlene, for a poker party. Chat with Charlene in the days leading up to the date was normal with the exception of a few comfort test thrown in which was unusual for her (she was asking me to shoot the puppy in hind sight). I show up to Charlene’s place on time and no one answers the door, she doesn’t answer her phone; and I let myself in (door is unlocked). She is passed out on the couch at 4 in the afternoon with an empty of vodka bottle in the trash. I sit on the couch for a while pondering what to do when she wakes up with a small, but clearly discernible, attitude. At this point, I am not interested at all anymore in going out or fucking with a completely drunk bitch. I tell Charlene I’m not interested in staying, kiss her on the forehead, and bail.

Plan B was the story I gave my wife. My buddy knows all about Charlene already. I text my buddy and let him know what happened. In this text conversation, I also talk about fucking her a month before, send him a smokeshow nude of her, and engage in some random bitches-be-bitches banter. I had to chill for a few hours because he was on deer-stand; and he did not want me to approach his house until it got dark so I ate dinner, got some coffee and was parked at the end of his road waiting.

Now to the point of this shit. I bought the wife a new IPhone 8 for her birthday. It arrived and I set it up. Her old phone was ancient (4) and I had to setup hers from scratch. We had previously shared an ITunes account; and I was aware of the potential pitfalls of IMessage (i.e. all the messages are shared). I disabled that feature and tested it to make sure messages were not shared. Well sometime during the day she enabled that feature; and saw the entire text string between me and my friend as well as the phone call to Charlene. So she calls me while I’m parked at the end of the road waiting.

Wife: the way my phone is setup I saw your entire text conversation with buddy

Me: OK

Wife: can you come home now, we need to talk
Me: Sure, I’ll be home in an hour

I text my buddy to let him know I’m going home (with no explanation); and drive home. I got an hour to think about so I decide to go with the truth on Charlene, leave out the other plates, and just go full main event and take this opportunity to lay out my vision for marriage.

She’s waiting for me when I get home; dressed and ready to go somewhere out of the house. We drive to a local park and park in the dark. Following is the paraphrased dialogue:

Me: where do you want to start?

Wife: what are your intentions with this woman and for us?

Me: you saw in the text string that I dumped her, and I want you and our marriage but as you know I have been unsatisfied with our marriage

Wife: how long has this been going on and what have you done?

Me: I met her in July, we chat almost daily, and I have been with her three times.

Wife: what do you mean by mean “been with her?”

Me: I’ve spent the night with her and had sex on three different occasions, twice in August and once in September (she already knew I didn’t fuck her Saturday from the text string)

Wife: starts crying and “I don’t blame you“

Worth noting here that she said this because I have told her several times in the last 9 months that her girlfriend game was not adequate; and that I would find someone that wanted to play the role. Apparently she did not take me seriously. Also she obviously did not know I have been cheating on her as I suspected.

Me: (after taking her into my arms and holding her for a while) it’s not about the sex; it’s about having someone in my life that values my time and attention on a daily basis. (Several examples of how she’d rather Netflix or read a book than do something with me for 30 minutes).

Wife: I don’t know if I can deal with all this. A lot of words about how she is under so much stress between daughter and her family.

Me: I met with divorce attorneys (and name them) in 2016; and planned on divorcing you this summer until the problems with daughter developed last fall. I want to go forward with our marriage; and then lay out my vision which is basically we spend more time together, that we value each other attention more; and that she follow my lead in life. I gave several recent examples when I thought she was operating in this frame. (I did not bring up anything related to sex because it’s already pretty damn good; and it’s my opinion that addressing these other issues will allow me to lead her more effectively in that area)

Wife: starts really sobbing and “the irony of life is too much because what you have been wanting these last several years is what I wanted before and after daughter was born; and you just wouldn’t give it to me. You hurt me so bad so many times; and I just built this shell around myself and between you”

This is true as I laid out in my original MRP post Weak Frame Is My Biggest Problem (warning long read). TLDR – Too much alpha, not enough beta comfort/leadership, leads wife to 2 year emotional possibly physical affair with co-worker. Went beta with an extra helping of resentment for several years afterwards. I think of this failure to hold frame and confront the issue at the time as my original sin in the marriage. I had not planned on bringing this up; but it flowed naturally from the discussion of irony.

Me: You’re right; there is a lot of irony in our marriage. I also find a lot of irony that in the same time period that you had an affair with coworker he was my age and Charlene is your age at the time.

Wife: It’s not the same thing, I never had sex with him.

Me: You lied to me when I brought it to your attention two years ago; and I don’t believe you now. It doesn’t matter either way, I did what I did because you behave as though you don’t want to be my wife a lot of time.

Wife: If that is how you view it than that is how it is. (She is referring to the affair here, and was an intriguing projection of solipsism . . . I feel it and therefore it is)

Me: If you want to move forward, you need to move past me hurting you back then and now.

I then reiterated the vision going forward.

Her: I can’t blame you and I want to forgive you.

More of her crying and me holding her. We went home and went to bed. Neither of us slept very well. She wanted me to hold her most of the night. I initiated the next morning to a no and put up no fuss. She went to the same park the next morning to run and was gone for quite a while. I went to her location. She was sitting in the car staring at a flower and sad. I held her for quite a while. She went home and I went to yoga class. We had separate activities in the afternoon. She was quite cheerful in the evening and came downstairs to watch football and hangout all night.

We held each other most of Sunday night in bed. I initiated and got a no. Went to sleep. Monday after work I asked her if she wanted to go for a walk. We did and it was nice. I initiated this morning and got a no. I told her “I am moving forward. I will not move backwards”; and went to work.

She just called me and want to take me out to dinner for my birthday (which she largely ignored last week) on the way to our son’s soccer game.

My frame has not changed. I am moving forward with the marriage I want or I am moving on, sooner than I originally planned.

[edit] - not planning on giving daily updates; but had good good "makeup" sex with wife last night. maybe i'm misusing the word; but just held frame like i have since Sunday which is to say just being me and doing the things i do with no change in my demeanor or roll. went to dinner, walked a little to Starbucks, went to soccer game (we lost 2-1; but my boy scored the 1 (his first varsity goal as a freshman, yay). it's funny because it was the type of night that i would consider writing a field report on a year ago in that i gamed my wife, i gamed other women, i got IOI from randoms, i passed shit test . . . and the expected results ensued.
I work the full sexual spectrum. This is known, and no need to discuss this. What we are here to talk about is something that is new to me, and that is role based sexual play. Yes it sounds cheesy, yes I was hesitant but it was actually tons of fun and very, very hot.

There have been several women over my time as a single man who have dropped hints about "rape play" or "forced sex." We are not talking about basic shit, but full on fighting back. Fitchick mentioned this several weeks ago. So I decided to do some research and figure it out. She had the basic layout of the fantasy, even if it is very cliché - I just needed to make it happen.

The scenario was simple: Single Mom who can't pay her rent. I was the landlord and I was going to take her rent money via sex. Forcefully if necessary.

Background: We agreed that traditional safe words would not be used. She had an overt desire to want to say the following phrases:

"No", "you are hurting me," "I do not want to" and "stop."

Obviously, for any sane person - these phrases are immediate stoppages. However, pushing through these we needed to establish unique safe words, even outside of our "green, yellow and red" safe words for our standard D/s play.

After a while, she wanted to "submit" to the sexual advances. Some of the things she wanted was for me to say things like "I will be collecting rent from you this way moving forward, this is not going to be the last time I force you to have sex with me," in addition to standard stuff like calling her my slut, etc. This all sounded fun and erotic to me.

Beyond the establishment of new and unique safe words, the other paramount rule was absolutely no closed fist hitting, clawing, kicking, or slapping harder than we have both previously done in our D/s play. We have each slapped each other across the face, and we understand those limits. For this particular episode we also agreed to keep our hands off each others necks to ensure safety there, even though we choke each other often, I did not want to introduce this. I also kept anal off the table. At this point she was not fully anal trained, and I was not interested in "anally raping" her and/or hurting her. Even though she wanted it, I told her this could be time 2 or 3.

Once we had the ground rules laid out it was up to me to execute. I decided to prep the play room with cuffs, ropes and leg spreader. I also got out the silk blindfold (I do not like ball gags) and prepared all that. Had it ready to go.

Once the room was ready we went over the plan one last time, and the scenario began. I put her out in the garage for her to simulate knocking on my front door. I opened it, and she came in and we sat at my kitchen table.
The scenario began to play out, and after about 15 seconds the role playing became very natural. We each went into our roles very easily and it became very organic. I started to execute my part (like any traditional casting couch porn) and eventually getting to the point of forcibly picking her up and taking her to the play room.

I am a big, strong guy and Fitchick is no push over herself. This was when it really started to get interesting. She was fighting back, and fighting back with intention. I had to actually exert some strength to get her into the room. Fighting, wiggling to get away and screaming she was playing her part beautifully and it was very sexual to use real strength.

After I had her in the play room, I threw her onto the bed and to my surprise, she got up and tried to escape. She was 100% invested. So I threw her back down, and this time tied her to the bed via the cuffs and ropes I had laid out. However, my "normal" knot was insufficient and again, she broke free. Laughing at me and actually breaking role for a moment to make fun of me and my shitty knot skills.

Well, she should have kept her mouth shut because at this point I gagged her, and really took the time to tie her up and make sure was secured to the bed.

I am not going to go into details on the sex, because it was awesome. As discussed about half way into it, she started to "pretend" she wanted to fuck me for the rent debt.

At one point during sex she went to kiss me - I had not kissed her to this point. I pushed her face away and said "Sluts do not get kisses". I believe she came about 15 seconds later.

The session ended with me untying her, and pushing her out of the house into the garage butt naked and telling her to walk back to her apartment like a good little whore.

10 seconds later I let her back in, roles were dropped and aftercare began.

Tools used:

- Cuffs and Ropes
- Leg Spreader
- Blindfold
- Lube (not used)

Lessons and thoughts

I have had lots of rough sex over the years, but never had someone resist and work to fight back. It was pretty hot. Hearing the phrases "no, etc" was also very fun - understanding they are show stoppers normally however in the scenario were fun. It was a mind trip.

I believe that she really enjoyed being forcefully taken, then allowing herself to submit. There is likely some inner slut shit going on here that I need someone like /u/rstonept to verbalize, but seeing it was hot.
None of this is possible without a high level of trust and sexual openness with your partner. This was all 100% consensual.

Do not, ever, ever forget about aftercare and that cuddles are required.
A how to guide to owning your shit
by threekindsoflucky | June 28, 2020 | Link

So you've come across MRP and have decided that you want to be involved.

There are two parts to MRP that matter:

- The sidebar; and
- Weekly OYS thread

The order is no accident. Read the sidebar before you think about posting on the OYS thread. There's a better than even chance that you'll get banned on your first post if you've not spent at least a month or two reading. Imagine sucking so much that you can't even properly tell people how much you suck without getting banned.

I'm not going to give you a formula, mostly because I don't care for them. This is about how not to make shit posts. There are a ton of people writing about stuff that doesn't matter, and very few people writing about what does matter.

Why post?

/u/weakandsensitive said it best:

This forum exists because we want all men to succeed.

This forum also exists to make sure effort is focused towards men who are actually going to succeed - not those who are going to waste people's time with whiny bullshit. If you don't think is appropriate, feel free to go to any of the ask*, relationship advice, or dead bedroom forums that exist throughout Reddit.

The purpose of the OYS thread is for you to... you guessed it, own your shit. Determine where you want to go, determine how you want to get there, and then do it.

Your OYS post should be about you, for you, and about shit that matters.

It's not your counselling service. It's not your life coach. It's not your guide, your best friend, or your wife. You write shit, and if you're lucky, people may decide to point out how you're lying to yourself or whatever. But write about you. Don't ask us to tell you where you should be aiming, what you should do, or how to live. It's your fucking life, figure out what you want to do.

The whole point is to find where you may be going wrong, come up with ways to correct those mistakes and improve. Figure out what you want out of life, and detail how you're faring. Judge yourself, expose your weaknesses and blind spots. Hold yourself up to your own standard and compare yourself against it. It's all of those things. You are responsible for your own change. No-one is going to give you a step by step guide on how to do it. No-one is going to give you an attaboy. It's on you.

It can be useful to you if you actually stick to it, remain accountable to yourself, and tell the fucking truth. Or you could waste your time. It's on you. If you’re going to do it, do it properly.

Reasons to post an OYS:

- To process your thoughts on your own progress, areas that may be blind spots, and what you’re doing to overcome them.
- To talk about shit that matters

Reasons not to post an OYS:

- Because you want feedback from others
- To outsource decision making
- So that you’ll be ‘kicked’ back into line
- For validation of a decision you made
- You want to be accountable to MRP
- To share your story with everyone
- To talk about shit that doesn't matter

What to post

Post about shit that matters if this isn't already abundantly clear. In terms of formatting, its up to you. You want a shitload of subheadings, dot points and other shit? Good for you. Want to have a consistent formula that covers the main aspects of your life every week? Great. Want to just write whatever you care about right now? No worries.

In terms of content, its up to you. You want to focus on how you landed a big sale this week? Groovy. You’re focusing on lifting this week? Cool. Want to talk about what you got out of reading one of the sidebar books? Go ahead. Just make sure it actually fucking matters.

It has to be about you. Your post should be filled with I statements. I did this, then I did that, and I felt like this, and I decided that I wasn't happy about that so I did this in response. That's your frame.

What not to post

Anything that breaks Rule 9 and 10.

If you can't get her to write her about her mindset, focus on the shit that you can control, which are your mindset, thoughts, and actions. Because honestly, I don't give a fuck about her -- and I especially don't give a fuck about your mental representation of her. OYS is for you, by you -- but don't waste your own time and the reader's time focusing on 1) shit you can't control, and 2) shit that ultimately doesn't matter.
Common theme 2 is how you guys write about your sex life with your wife. And the way you guys are approaching this is from a scarcity mindset. Many guys as writing as if your wife is the gatekeeper to sex. In a world with 8+ billion people, this is patently not true. Your wife is only the gatekeeper of sex with her.

If you've made the choice that you're only going to have sex with your wife. That's on you. That's your personal decision. You need to very much own it. And as a result, when she doesn't fuck you -- you don't get to complain, because you've put yourself in that position. You don't get to lock yourself in a cage, and complain about being locked in a cage.

If you think that because you're doing all this self improvement, your wife should WANT to fuck you. Again, you're wrong. We've stated repeatedly that MRP has nothing to do with your wife -- and that doing this for your wife to fuck you is the worst covert contract you'll have. You have NO say in what she does or how she reacts. None. She is free to make whatever choice she wants. Just because you do the work, doesn't mean she's going to want to fuck you. All it means that someone will probably fuck you, maybe, but if you're locking yourself in a cage by your own choice, you don't get to bitch.

Most people who start posting are generally after one thing: More sex with your wife. Rather than me telling you why that is dumb, refer to the Dancing Monkey Attraction Program. Hopefully this saves you the hassle, but you'll probably still fuck it up anyway.

Things you shouldn't post about:

- Your wife.
- Your wife's responses to what you're doing.
- Your wife's thoughts and problems.
- Shit that is outside of your control. If you can’t control it, why talk about it.
- Woe is me. No-one cares that you're life sucks if you're not doing anything to improve it.
- How much of a victim you are. Life keeps happening to you, but you don’t happen to life. Sounds tough.
- She focused narratives
- Shit that doesn't matter
- MRP lingo bingo - stop trying so hard to use 'MRP' terms to make it sound like you get it.

A good tip is to do a ctrl-f search for 'she' and 'her' before you put it up. If it's glowing in yellow, then you've fucked it.

Feedback

You are not owed feedback on your post. If you don't get feedback, its probably because:

- It's not really that interesting
- Your post is shit because you didn’t actually do anything
- There’s not much to say
• Because it’s Reddit and people have better things to do.

If you do get feedback, spend some time thinking about it before you mash the reply button. Keep your ego under control. If a reply makes you angry, there’s a good chance its right on the fucking money, so maybe think about that before you throw back some ego-riddled bullshit. You may find upon reflection that there was a blind spot that you hadn’t considered. Good. That means you might actually make progress.

It’s also possible that you don’t agree with what someone has said. Cool. Shut up about it. What a great opportunity to practice frame control and STFU by, you know, shutting the fuck up. Wow, now you’re implementing techniques at the same time!

Take what is useful to you in the replies and leave the rest.

In fact, that’s good advice for life. Take what is useful to you, leave the rest.

Don’t forget, you’re giving a brief summary of events, the nuances are unlikely to come through. Nor do they need to, because again, nobody cares. Feel free to expand upon things in your replies if you think its necessary. But mostly, nobody cares.

And for fucks sake, don't be a little bitch. Don't gush when you get kicked down. Shit like 'thank you for owning me' is just embarrassing to read. Don't thank people for exposing that you're a faggot. Think about it, digest it and find out where you're going wrong.

If you want to provide feedback, make sure you actually know what the fuck you're talking about and have some experience in the exact thing you're replying to.

First posts

Ah yes, the first OYS post. You're nervous. Who knows what those big mean men are going to say about you (Hot tip, it doesn't matter, we're just retards on the internet). Before you make your first post, spend some time looking through the weekly threads over the past few weeks. My only advice is again the same: Write for you. Write about shit that matters. Own your problems, don't try to blame your life on someone or something else. Your first post is mostly going to be shit because you've just started. That's ok, as long as the focus is you.

Here is an example of a good first post

Why is it a good post? Because despite the fact he's a mess, he owns that fact. Look at the 'I' statements. Look at the 'she' statements. He realises where he is in life is his fault, not his wife, or his dog or whatever.

Here is an example of a shit first post

This is shit because he sees himself as a victim. Life happens to him.

There are plenty more examples of shit first posts - however, most people slink away and delete them straight after. Look at the weekly OYS thread and you'll see it time and time again.
Regular posts

Once you get into a rhythm, you should have consistent areas that you're working on. Usually this revolves around reading, fitness, mental models, career and finance. It can be whatever you want it to be, but these are a reasonable place to start. Don't turn these into a checklist of things that you tick every week, or some dumb grading system. Again, post about shit that actually matters. Don't fill your post with a load of things you say you're 'going to do'. You aren't 'going to do' shit, so don't bother writing it.

If you want an idea on the mindset you should have, here's a few examples of good posts from people who are putting in the work weekly:

- DirtyNuke
- RedBackedBadger
- Ancient_resistance

There are plenty others putting in the work as well, take a look through the weekly threads and observe.

You must be pretty good at OYS then Lucky

I'm alright. I've had my fair share of shitty posts. In fact, here are some of my worst:

- Tea and chicken
- Blow by blow accounts on meaningless shit
- Dancing Monkey

So I know how to fuck it up.

Couple of closing tips

Don't delete your posts, even if you get shredded or banned for it. Learn from it. Don't reply to people's comments straight away, have a think about it first and take it in. If someone takes the time to give you a detailed breakdown, think long and hard about what they said. Tl;dr summaries - just fucking don't. Write about shit that matters. Don't write shit that isn't true. Don't distort your own narrative to put you in a better light. And don't care too much about anything anyone says, its the internet. None of this actually matters.
Your wife doesn't know the rules have changed.

You've been doing your reading. You've been lifting. You're feeling more abundant. Identifying shit tests. But you just don't think like your wife is accepting the changes yet. She's resisting.

Well, of course that's the case. She hasn't been doing the reading, and you of course follow the first rule of fight club, so she has no idea there's a new sheriff in town.

You've got to give it time. "You lead, she follows". Follow. To come after. It's not "you lead, she paces" No, she follows you. There will be lag.

Going Rambo screws you up and it screws up the process. Not only are you a nubile moron that doesn't know shit yet, but you're also trying to move to fast. Slow your roll. Work the process. Your wife will come after Same with dread game. One month per level, minimum. This isn't just for you. You need time to internalize the process. But your follow needs time to see the new direction. The U.S.S. Ronald Reagan don't turn on a dime, and neither will your wife.

One line summary: Just because your wife isn't keeping pace with your changes doesn't mean your changes aren't working.
Crosspost from TRP: Chateau Heartiste is GONE
by rocknrollchuck | May 11, 2019 | Link

Chateau Heartiste Has Been Shuttered in What Appears to be WordPress' Opening Salvo as They Join the Greater Tech Censorship War.

- Link to the Wayback Machine Heartiste archives
FR- When she you realize she has fully entered your frame
by Spaw-1-4-5 | November 12, 2016 | Link

For most of my marriage, I was the drunk captain of the ship. I found TRP, MRP, started lifting built my frame, but the hardest part FOR ME was understanding shit tests and how to handle them.

Now, keep in mind but I'm still learning, and with practice, I have been hitting these lobs out of the park.

When you really start nailing these shit tests, incredible things start happening: In my case, I find my wife initiates a lot more these days, especially around ovulation.

Her "No's" and excuses have nearly stopped entirely. And when she said no to me last week (through her body language, I don't verbally ask her haha), I responded by saying "Alright babe, but you're gonna have a boner poking you all night". Five minutes later, she's rubbing my hands under the pillow and dragging her feet up and down my leg, her typical signal.

The next day her mother was over at our place to meet her friend. Her friend cuts hair, and meeting at our place was a halfway point for them.

So, I'm watching football, and all 3 of these women start chatting, haircutter tells this story of her beta husband, gambling away settlement money, drinking and smoking all day (this is a man in his 50s btw), and finally kicking him out.

The conversation progresses and eventually they are discussing our pets. Wife talks about how it's a pain to deal with the animals.

Haircutter: "Why?"

Wife: "...because I am not the one in charge around here"

Excuse me? Did I hear that correctly?

At this point, some sick part of me, some disgusting, lingering beta part of me almost spews out some bullshit. I was almost about to say "Oh we're both in charge around here. The bird just doesn't like you and the dog is hyper"

But I chose to use this situation to further solidify my frame. I was already in the kitchen getting some cheese so I approached my wife with slight grin, smacked her ass gently and said, "That's right baby."

They all chuckled, her mom more so in disbelief that I said this (I fully believe her mom has no respect for men) but the haircutter friend says "I wish I could have said that about _____" (I can't remember what dudes name was...)

www.TheRedArchive.com
Remember to build and always maintain your frame. You never know when or if that blue pill nonsense is going to just spew out of your own mouth. I almost blew it right there and instead I paused, and seized the opportunity to solidify my position as the alpha in the family.

TL; DR: After almost a year of building frame, passing shit tests, and righting my ship, my wife openly admits to her mom and her mom's friend that I am in charge in this household, and then I capitalized on the opportunity.

Edit: I fucked up my title... can't change it...
Mini-FR: "You don't have to grope me all the time."

by InChargeMan | January 2, 2017 | Link

Just a quick check-in to keep everyone on their game. This is a combo shit/comfort test. I figure occasional examples might be helpful to others.

I'm always physically escalating when around the wife. The other day she was talking with me and I was getting close and grabbing some butt when she says: "Can you just talk to me sometimes without groping me?" or something like that. I looked her in the eyes, and with a sincere look said "Yes, I can do that sometimes. See, I'm doing it right now." She says "thank you" in a little bit huffy tone. Then, once she thinks she's got this one in the bag I say. "I can do this at least 10% of the time." Then she rolls her eyes, at which point I continue to negotiate with myself. "What do you want, 50/50?" She says "ok", then I say "well, the best I can do is 40/70". She breaks frame and laughs. I give her a nice kiss, tell her I love her, and her body posture shifts back to normal. Then as I turn to exit the room give her an epic ass slap. "Welp, guess I can't...next time don't be so sexy." And walk out, looking back with a smirk to see her face flushed.

I'm guessing a lot of guys as they progress get similar responses to increased physicality.
Beta male puke; No frame, no positive masculinity and looking at starting over over 50.
by dirk626 | November 19, 2017 | Link

TL;DR - Two weeks after celebrating the 25th wedding anniversary and hit with "I don't love you." Facing the end of my marriage I have been forced to look at my self. I want to puke at what I see. Fixing myself is my only path foreword. I expect the blood letting I am sure this post will bring me, but I have to get this out.

Been with my wife for almost 30 years and married for 25. Two kids and a lifetime later I am looking at going into the final third of my life without her. I discovered TRP and the manosphere about a year ago. I had already started reading some of the material on the sidebar under Red Pill 101 just by chance.

When we married I was a different man. Former Marine 0311, and rookie cop I had some obvious alpha traits. Ended up a 320 pound fat drunk; totally withdrawn from her and life. I let the house fall apart, never followed up on my promises and / or met any of her emotional needs. I was not an attractive or effective man for a very long time.

A couple of years ago she got tired of sitting at the kitchen table while I sat in the basement drinking in front of the TV and decided to get a life. She started doing cross fit, bought a bike and began doing group rides and making friends. In her early 50’s and she turns heads. Orbiters and cock-hounds besiege her constantly. Caught her in an affair with one of these riding “chums” and had a big blow up. She has always denied any physical component to the relationship, but I choose to assume that there was. I don’t think that I can forgive unless I forgive from the worst case.

I was terrified of losing her and punked on setting a hard boundary. My life had shrunk to TV watching and booze. What the fuck was I going to do if she left? She agreed to go to marriage counselling and we did that for about a year. We stopped when we both agreed that things were much better and we were substantially back on track. After the affair I got involved again. Started riding with her, meeting her friends and otherwise making myself present and known. I did feel like things had improved. I was showing a lot of low value behaviors. Mate guarding, jealousy, clinging and neediness on a very unflattering scale. So my “feelings” were doomed to be wrong. About 4-5 months ago I started to sense more detachment from her. Most of her female friends are divorced and frequent flyers on the cock carousel. Usually, she would rather spend time with them than me. My romantic overtures and little displays of affection were not being reciprocated as much as before. Four weeks ago, two weeks after our 25th anniversary (I got a simple card from her a week late), I was getting ready for bed and pulled her to me as she walked by and said, “You know you are deeply loved, don’t you?” She didn’t respond but tears began streaming down her cheeks. Then it hit. It’s over! I said, “You don’t love me anymore at all, do you?” She said, “I tried to get it back, I’ve been trying to get it back but it won’t come back.” She sobbed. Later she said that she hadn’t left yet because she was afraid that I would drink myself to death or worse. (Bullet to the head) I told her that we have children (out of the house now) and that my legacy to them would never be suicide. She agreed to stay awhile longer until our youngest gets farther along in college. The next day, when home alone, I grieved like I have never grieved before. I grieved more than at the death of my father, my grandfather and best friend. I fucking wailed! I bargained with God, I begged the Universe... I woke the fuck up! Four weeks later and I haven’t drunk a drop. I’ve worked out every day and modified my eating habits. I have dropped 30 pounds so far with low carb and intermittent fasting. I lift heavy four times a week, and even with the weight loss I am getting stronger. I started seeing a therapist to work on some of my emotional bullshit. I don’t want my marriage to be over! I know I’m going to read a lot of advice to move on. But if MRP is just about divorce then it should be TRP2. I’m hoping there are some men out there that are close to, or in midlife, with a similar story that I can learn from. I know that the only hope I have is to fix myself. Doing so, I will either re-attract my wife or put myself in a better position to start over. My therapist says nothing is certain, but my wife has likely moved on long ago and that I should focus on being ok while making my life in a new direction. She tells me that if I fix myself that I may find that I don’t want my wife any longer.
On TRP a poster listed out a set of behaviors that women use to take over the frame of a relationship and chain down a man's commitment. They include what I call Alpha Fucks, Beta Sucks

Nagging

Criticizing and shaming

Drama and Theatrics

All sorts of shit and compliance tests

Ever unhappy and not good enough

The courtroom - where you are on trial and you must be guilty, or her ego might die.

Getting him to work

This problem is far more acute for married men - who are tested day in and out.

However, just as men need sex, but also need a woman to respect and love him, women need commitment, but also need a man whom they can respect and be attracted to.

This is part of the betaization process and apart from genuinely low value behaviours in most beta husbands / guys, it is entirely politics of frame. Underneath the loving vibes and feels, our hormones mask the reality that both alpha fucks and beta bucks are essentially selfish in nature and are devoid of virtue (WTF is that?)

And this is the most important thing - the more she wins, the more she stars setting the narrative for the relationship, the more it validates your low value in her eyes, and the greater the contempt she will have for you. This will, it WILL, result in her eventually losing attraction for you and moving on.

The moment you agree to the trial is when you have already lost, because you will not win, not in her world, her frame, her rules. Her ego and emotions at that moment are only in a mood to inflict pain and validate herself. Be aware that her pain body (yes, women have it, I've seen it, often) usually comes to life in moments of extreme neediness and never allow yourself to get swept into that. Egos when triggered are utterly self righteous and rationalize their actions away, because if they're wrong, it just invalidated and diminished them. This is threatening and painful to the ego - very few women have any strength to let go of their egos. If it goes down, what's left of you? (or so it thinks).
You can be rest assured that an emotional ego will do everything to win. For all the talk of male ego, men tend to be more objective and truth oriented and this makes it easier to let go of their egos than women's sollipsistic nature allows them to.

The more her ego increases, the more her neediness and contempt, pain and hyper-reactivity increases, which is a feedback cycle. This will end in mental illness, because high ego and insanity are directly correlated. Don't believe me, look around. See for yourself - the modern woman. This is why trying to please her won't work - because her painful ego only increases.

If her ego becomes too needy, it can become a force of mutually assured destruction even.

I had an ex who was ax-crazy in running her "courtroom". I know what I'm talking about - most lawyers in the Supreme Court didn't have her natural talent. I lost, because it was a battle I could never win. She wasn't normal after a point - I realized the only way to win was to end it - she knew that and did everything possible if you let her have her way, she will create enough pain to kill the relationship.

Even if she doesn't overtly make your life miserable, she'll try to domesticate you into compliance. Unfortunately, a sanitized piece of life is a sterilized piece of life, and your mental castration will kill the raw, wild energy that triggers her sexual attraction and respect to you.

So what's the solution? The answer lies in your own growth and self awareness. You need to own your shit, improve your situational awareness, you need to know what's really going on. You need to stay stoic and not fall into her well of pain, you need to stop wondering what she needs and make her do what you need and what you know she needs. You need to shrug off the shit tests and compliance tests. You need wisdom to bring your wild horse under your command without castrating it - that way the raw power is ever available the moment you decide it's needed. You need to proactively set the standards for raising the kids. You need to let your family know that you are fully aware of what you're doing, and they should respect that. The more alpha you become, the less you will be castrated (although shit tests won't end, they'll become benign)

You need to keep the intensity of your energy and involvement with life very high, because the wild guy within you didn't die, he just changed form, but underneath that he's as wild as ever. Don't let the world forget that you own your wildness and their ideas to castrate you are not the solution.

A cat might make a cute pet, but only a tiger is held in awe. Because power. Because we respect and admire what is bigger than us. Because something greater than us makes us humble and snaps us out of our ego. When we have escaped the ego, the better side of ourselves emerges. Women are by nature far more reactive than a mature man - if a man knows this he can play her like a piano rather than breaking his head over wondering what she needs. A moon needs a sun to humble it, simple.

Wisdom, not castration, is the solution to managing your wild animal well. As a man you are already wired for wisdom more naturally than a woman or a child. Use it. Be a wise tiger, not a foolish neutered cat.
If you can use your relationships as an opportunity to get more aware, stronger and wiser, you have won the war, even if you lose the battles. Good or bad, happy or miserable, you will always find an opportunity for this one thing, to grow and become more aware, and I strongly recommend you to learn this art. This will ground you on a foundation that can't be shaken easily. People only shake you to the extent they can get away with it.

The more needy you are for them, the more they can have power over you. Do not let your sun become her moon. For e.g. A man's emotional state that comes from a point of abundance is not something that needs his woman to make it what it is - it is energized by it's own energy. She only has power over what you commit to her. When you do not commit anything, she's powerless. Leave your needy ego at the door, and you will have more power and abundance than you can ever imagine.

Only when a man realizes this does he even realize how much power he had the whole time. He must put the right price on it, sex is cheap, commitment is not. To own your commitment even when the state laws and courts are against you requires a man to overcome the primal fear of death and loss - this enemy is only within. Fear makes him needy. Fearlessness is the much harder path, but it is freedom. A man needs spirituality, surrender and awareness for this reason (not religious, religion is just a betaization machine, but real spirituality knowing how the universe works and cutting down the false ego and it's illusions).

Every man comes with one more job in his relationship - cutting down her ego. You can't learn to cut her ego down if you haven't learnt to cut down your own - part of Red Pill is to realize that life's laws are bigger than you, and that itself brings down your ego to a point where positive transformation is possible. And you're not the only one who needs that. It's almost certain these days that she needs it far more than you.

The more her ego goes down, the more her respect for you will go up. Part of the reason why she goes into an emotional meltdown when she tests you (and when you pass the test) is that her ego did diminish, that too at a moment where it was rather enjoying the party, and this is painful to her at first, but when she's calm and more aware she respects you the more for it. It is actually the best thing for her ego to go down, it will allow her natural femininity to come out. Her own abundance will emerge, and she will learn gratitude rather than bitch about how life's always unfair and how she's the only victim.

The more her ego goes down and the more her respect increases, the more her hamster will justify your actions than her self righteous expectations - women really can't get rid of their hamster, so what happens is that her hamster works for you instead. Without a massive pruning of the modern woman's ego, it's foolish for a man to expect anything of worth for the price of his commitment. And the process only starts when a man acknowledges and embraces his role as the guardian of commitment and lives the life where he can put a high enough price that she needs to earn.

If your relationship doesn't survive that, it wasn't authentic to begin with. It's selfishness and ego could not hide forever, and eventually the truth had to come out. Better to be honest with the red pill and swallow it once, than to be deceived for life and ever frustrated. Self transformation raises your energy to another level, changes the very vibes of presence and transforms your relationships and your life. Those who are honestly incapable of staying with that will drop away. It's good for you down the road, and good for them, because in the process their egos probably received a sound thrashing they did not expect. They may keep doing the same thing over and over again until they wake up. In the meantime, it's time for you to live that high value life.
The Taming of the Shrew: A Red Pill Analysis (X-Post from TRP)

by BluepillProfessor | August 3, 2017 | Link

I saw Shakespeare’s circa 1490 Taming of the Shrew in London recently and thought it would make an interesting post. In this timeless play about male and female behavior, Katharina is a vicious Shrew whose rich father is desperately trying to marry off but she keeps Shit Testing her suitors into oblivion. We first see Katharina dragging and beating her bound younger sister and yelling hysterically at her father.

The Shrew talks disrespectfully and rudely but I had trouble seeing her as a “Shrew.” She is pretty much like almost every woman today I have met in the last 10 years. Arrogant. Loud. Boisterous. Petty. Aggressive. Mouthy. Opinionated. Useless but demands a perfect man. Katharina viciously bad mouths every suiter who approaches her and I recognized her “bad” behavior as nothing but normal and common shit tests men deal with today. Katharina’s Shit Tests are almost nothing! I have seen worse shit tests at the bank.

In Shakespeare’s time at least some men knew how to deal with mouthy, shit testing, harpy screech-tards. Petruchio is an Alpha Red Pill ManTM who recognizes Katharina’s childish attitude and attacks as Shit Tests inviting a masculine frame. He determines to conquer the Shrew (and get the hefty dowry to add to his wealth). Early in their first meeting he basically tells her to shut her complaining yap and she responds as a woman today might albeit without the eloquent rhyming couplets:

```
| Why, sir, I trust I may have leave to speak;
| And speak I will; I am no child, no babe:
| Your betters have endured me say my mind,
| And if you cannot, best you stop your ears.
| My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,
| Or else my heart concealing it will break,
| And rather than it shall, I will be free
| Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.
```

See what I mean? This is nothing! The “foul mouth” and “bad attitude” Katharina displays is really the norm today and the “Shrew” is just a strong-independent-female. Perhaps mildly shocking to a Victorian audience but not today!

Petruchio passes the shit tests and convinces Kate to marry him. Today a newly married man keeps his head down. Certainly it is always important to remember “SHE HAS THE PUSSY” and to bow deep and scrape before the majesty and glory of his wife—she of the most holy and gracious golden uterus and overlord and gatekeeper of the coveted slimy, warm orifi. Today, Petruchio would be a henpecked husband in a dead bedroom. Today, Petruchio would have almost NO WAY to respond to the violent, arrogant, cruel little bitch except of course Dread Game. She would use sex to manipulate and control him. She would wear him down. What could any man do in the face of complete female domination except give up and let the woman dominate and abuse him?

Oh wait, this is Shakespearian times so there IS something the man could do to "man up" and stand up to his haggard" wife and force her to submit beyond being prepared to Next that Bitch at any moment. I wonder what masculine power looks like? Let's see what Pettruchio thinks:

Another way I have to man my haggard,

To make her come and know her keeper's call,

That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites

That bate and beat and will not be obedient.

The eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;

Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not;

As with the meat, some undeserved fault

I'll find about the making of the bed;

And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,

This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:

Ay, and amid this hurly I intend

That all is done in reverend care of her;

And in conclusion she shall watch all night:

And if she chance to nod I'll rail and brawl

And with the clamour keep her still awake.

This is a way to kill a wife with kindness;

And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour.

He that knows better how to tame a shrew,

Now let him speak: ‘tis charity to show.
Yep, that’s right! Petruchio denies his wife food and sleep. He tames the shrew and curbs her mad and headstrong humour” by starving her into compliance and keeping her awake until she submits to his demands! Obviously in real life he would have beat her ass with a stick but this is a comedy after all.

Petruchio demands COMPLETE SUBMISSION. He tells Katharina the sun is the moon when he says so and demands her to acknowledge that he is right and to submit to him completely:

| PETRUCHIO: Come on, i' God's name; once more toward our father's. Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon! |
| KATHARINA: The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. |
| PETRUCHIO: I say it is the moon that shines so bright. |
| KATHARINA: I know it is the sun that shines so bright. |
| KATHARINA: Forward, I pray, since we have come so far, And be it moon, or sun, or what you please: An if you please to call it a rush-candle, Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me. |
| PETRUCHIO: I say it is the moon. |
| KATHARINA: I know it is the moon. |
| PETRUCHIO: Nay, then you lie: it is the blessed sun. |
| KATHARINA: Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun: But sun it is not, when you say it is not; And the moon changes even as your mind. What you will have it named, even that it is; And so it shall be so for Katharina. |

With the wife’s submission to her husband, and Katherina falling into Petruchio's frame, weirdly enough her behavior suddenly changes completely.

At the end of the play Petruchio and 2 new husbands are drinking and wager which wife will be obedient when summoned. They lay out bags of gold and the first man sends a servant to fetch his wife. He comes back and peevishly advises the lady will not come, 'she says she is busy.' The second man sends for his wife and the servant returns to say ‘the lady says she will not come. She says you are joking and bids you come to her.’ Finally, Petruchio summons Katharina, telling the servant: “Tell your Mistress that I command her come to me.”

The men grumble that Katharina will not come but within seconds she is at the door:

| “What is your will, sir that you send for me?” |

Petrochio orders his wife to go get the other disobedient wives from the dressing room but first, just to demonstrate his power over her, he forces the Shrew to remove a cap that she liked and stomp on it. She obeys and her father says ‘you have given me another daughter’ and doubles the dowry (along with the substantial bet).
At the close of the play, after Katharina has thrown the disobedient wives into their husband's arms Petruchio commands:

> “Katharina, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Her answer is shocking to a modern ear:

> Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
> Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
> And for thy maintenance commits his body
> To painful labour both by sea and land,
> To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
> Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;
> And craves no other tribute at thy hands
> But love, fair looks and true obedience;
> Too little payment for so great a debt.
> Such duty as the subject owes the prince
> Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
> And when she is froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
> And not obedient to his honest will,
> What is she but a foul contending rebel
> And graceless traitor to her loving lord?
> I am ashamed that women are so simple
> To offer war where they should kneel for peace;
> Or seek for rule, supremacy and sway,
> When they are bound to serve, love and obey...

Just in case we were in any doubt how Petruchio managed to tame the Shrew, it apparently wasn't all torture because he responds affectionately. Weirdly enough it doesn't look like Katharina denying sex was the issue- of course such a thing would be unheard of for a Victorian audience- but it was that she was being mouthy and unpleasant.
Not any more! Now she is sweet and affectionate.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Well there’s a wench.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Come and Kiss me Kate...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Come, Kate, we'll to bed.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We three are married,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>but you two are sped (meaning you guys are done for!).</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Lessons Learned:

Men today have so much less power in intersexual games like marriage than they had in the past that it has clearly become a bad deal. Consider that it was COMEDY to a Victorian audience for a husband to starve and sleep deprive his wife if she mouthed off. Nearly all you go girls of today hepped up on girl power and arrogance are AT LEAST as bad as the Shrew. They won’t listen or shut their trap and quit complaining and they shit test and challenge everything.

How are men supposed to tame the ubiquitous Shrews of today? Dread Game and the ability to walk away helps a LOT, but it doesn’t seem as useful as the power to deprive them of food, water, and sleep.

Just sayin....
Nagging Wife
by Flagfootball99 | October 20, 2017 | Link

2 year anniversary discovering MRP. All i can say is thank you. This stuff works.. At the height of my beta sexless days, my wife turned into a nagging, harpy bitch.. I could NEVER do anything right. Well, it's all turned around now. I never get that bitch anymore, i get cute now.

If i could go back and write me a letter when i first got married, this is what i would write..

Sometimes you need to go back and review the basics. Keep it simple guys:

Your wife cannot be attracted to you if you let her walk all over and talk down to you. She needs to know that she can’t boss you around. She cannot be attracted to or respect someone who she can talk to this way. Your wife is constantly complaining because she feels she has to be the responsible person in the relationship. It’s a classic response from a woman who is resentful. If she is constantly nagging you, she is not attracted to you. She is feeling hurt, not anger, she is basically saying “prove to me you are the man who can protect me”.

The female selection algorithm assures that Alpha men get more pussy than “nice guys”. Women desperately need a strong alpha - warrior thug- so their offspring can have comfort and security. She will test you to see if you’re the stronger partner and if you’re still in charge. She will reflect and calibrate up to the same level of energy you are bringing to the relationship. Woman are wired to be attracted to dominance and leadership. Women are attracted to “Jerks”. Tap into some of these qualities. Doing chores do not make you attractive. Do the dam chores because you are a man and it needs to get done. Male power and intensity is desired by women.

If she rejects you, it’s a direct reflection of the level of attractiveness she feels towards you at the moment. It’s your own fault. Did you stroke her Responsive Desire or create any sexual tension today? If she is not attracted to a man, she will hate/despise/recoil from any sexual comments or jokes from him. However, a man she finds attractive who “always thinks about sex” is “cute”, Become attractive and you will get “cute”. The more Dominance you show, the more attractive you will be to her. Take Pride in your own pervertness. Own it. Your sexuality has value.

Sexual tension = the most powerful tool in your arsenal. - stroke her responsive desire. Throughout the day. Stop asking her what she wants, and start telling her what to do. Issue commands. You are in charge. For fucks sake, give her little dopamine hits every day or she will go seek it out somewhere else (CHAD, mindless hours of facebook scrolling, or expensive kitchen upgrades, etc). Show her some fun and excitement, if you don’t provide these, who will then? Some other dude and she will find him attractive. She needs to realize each day that a man lives with her who wants to fuck her. That’s your pussy. You own that pussy. The more Dominance you show, the more attractive you will be to her. Better give her some male dominate energy, or she will be attracted to a man who does.
When she asks why “is it always about sex”? : Just AA and say one of the following with Ass Slap and walk away:

1. What part of husband don’t you understand?? (Asshole grin on face).

2. Unzip...Yep!, still a man

3. Your ass makes it so hard not to think about it.

4. I don’t just think about sex, also think about BJs and anal.

It should be normal for a wife to want to please her husband. Marriage is a sexual relationship, otherwise, what’s the point? You will see improvements in the bedroom only after you have fixed the other things in your life. Your plan is to up your Sex Rank by improving your body and your Alpha and Beta skill sets in order to purposely destabilize your relationship with your wife by trumping her Sex Rank. Once you recognize you have sexual options, she'll recognize you have sexual options. She'll change her game up when your SMV comes up, and she won't even know she's doing it.

You have to remove your neediness based validation. Your wife will eventually realize that she only has one thing to fall back on or one real value that she provides... guess what that is? So she uses it. Sex ensues. Everybody is happy as a result.
First post.

I've been reading, lurking and commenting here for about two years now. Typical drunk captain after a motorcycle wreck, eating, drinking too much. Pain, no gym. Fat on the couch, no motivation. Weird thing... the sex dried up! Found this place. Devoured the site. And, like most went all RAMBO and tried to fix 4 years of being a miserable fuck in a week. She moved out. I became a man on a mission to return to the great guy I was.

If you're here, I hope you know of the Captain/first mate relationship dynamic. To adequately pilot a ship, someone has to be Captain. As a man, that's YOUR job. You can listen to suggestions if you have a proven first mate, but the ultimate decision is up to you. You can't co-captain a relationship any more than a ship.

So, your boat is chugging along nicely, why not go down to the cabin for a few drinks? The first mate is capable at the wheel for a few hours. Damn it's nice down here. Big screen, lots of snacks. Can't even hear the kids. You start getting more and more comfortable, letting the responsibilities of life slip away and not really caring where the ship is headed.

The first mate never wanted to be captain. That's why she chose you all those years ago. She resents how she has to pick up your slack, resents how you felt somehow ok just being a couch potato all day, resents how your mutual hopes and plans have somehow faded away without a whimper.

You've become a fat, lazy, whiny drunk. She sees you as one of her children, just another need she needs to fulfill. No respect, no sex. You're just not an attractive person. So she gives up. Finally stops the boat and jumps ship into her own little life raft. You're still tied together by this long line, 1000 feet of rope coiled between you, but you're essentially on separate vessels.

As you awaken from your stupor, hangover pounding, you realize the engines are silent. You are alone. But nobody delivered breakfast! You come up on deck. Dead in the water. First mate nowhere to be found. You're drifting towards the rocks.

You have to do something. Where are the damn keys? Ok, started. Choose a direction leading away from the rocks, apply a little gas.

If you freak out and push the throttles to their stops, the propwash will rock the life raft, and the first mate will get up and grab the keys away. Rightly so, you've been a fuckup for years, why should she suddenly start trusting you, Captain Rambo? Your balls haven't grown back yet, so you'll let her retain control. Back to your rum.

You have to ease it away, slowly, gradually picking up speed. Be gentle. Don't tell the fucking first mate anything. She won't believe you anyway.
As you continue to get up on plane, speed rising, you start to realize how cool it is to be captain of your own vessel again. You're enjoying life again. Holy shit! I don't need a first mate at all!

The first mate has been left behind, still slowly drifting towards the shore. The 1000 feet of rope is paying out, faster and faster. She hasn't noticed any difference from her perspective.

Eventually the rope gets taut, starts to tug. By this point you're so far ahead, jumping wakes, enjoying your cruise, that whether she comes along for a fun ride or not is up to her. You've rediscovered your passion, your drive. You are outcome independent.

She may accept you as her new captain and decide to come along, or not believe you and simply cut the line. Either way you'll keep on doing what you choose to do as captain of your own ship. You can even cut the line yourself if the drag gets too bad.

But be very aware of the 1000 foot distance between you. It takes a long time for something on the end of such a long lead to respond to changes at the front.
Sleeping Naked

by Red-Curious | October 5, 2017 | Link

Take this as more of a field report. I stumbled into the concept accidentally, by virtue of not having time to get my laundry done. All of my "sleep shorts" were dirty (I use the same shorts as when I go to the gym, so I go through them fast). The pants I was wearing were too hot to sleep in, so I just decided to sleep naked. I love sleeping naked when my wife's out of town - so much cooler and more refreshing. Never really tried it with her around. She used to get weirded out by nakedness and exposed genitalia (for those who don't know me, she was brought up in an extremely conservative, sexually repressive religious environment). I think I had done it once in my beta days and she made a nasty comment and I never tried again.

Anyway, for the first couple days she didn't notice, or at least didn't say anything. Then day 3 hits and she mutters while mostly asleep, "Are you naked?" She then cuddles up to me in the king position, claiming to have no memory of this the next day.

Interesting. I do the laundry, but decide to keep sleeping naked anyway. If nothing else, I thought it would help toward deconditioning her anti-sexual programming by normalizing nakedness. Since then, she's cuddling up to me most nights and now remembering doing so, oftentimes playing with my junk, and a couple times leading into sex. This is totally backwards, given that even as recently as a month and a half ago she's firing her tongue off about how rude and insensitive it is to initiate in the middle of the night, demanding I never touch her while she's sleeping. ("Well, how am I going to give you a mind-blowing orgasm without touching you? Challenge accepted," I said with a smirk. Of course, the next night I lost the challenge, but still won the game.)

Point being: a door that was previously closed (sex after she falls asleep) is starting to open. Why? I don't know. Humor my speculation:

- Pheromones not being stifled by my clothes.

- Increased access to genitalia boosts sexual awareness.

- Increased skin-to-skin contact while we cuddle (specifically below the waist, where her legs touch my legs rather than my shorts) = unintended night time kino.

- Just laying down next to someone in bed who is naked subconsciously (if not actually consciously) produces sexual thoughts.

CAVEAT: I'm 100% confident that this would not have worked if I was still overweight and weak. Noobs: don't try this until you hit the gym for a few months.
I'm going to keep this test going for more data. 2 weeks isn't quite enough for a fully-fledged conclusion yet. But, I thought it'd be worth sharing and seeing if other people have had similar experiences.

ALSO - I'm thinking after another week or so, if results are still good, I'll explain to her how refreshing I feel sleeping naked and suggest she try doing the same. I'm confident on my suggestion that she'll try it at least once ... not sure where it'll go from there. But, given that I'm most horny right when I go to bed (a couple hours after she's been asleep), this might be a solution to getting sex when I want it and not trying to force myself to be into it at times that are convenient to initiate for her.
The fourth tunnel
by 2ndal | February 17, 2018 | Link

The only things people believe in are things they don’t know, things they can’t prove, things they cannot experience. Ghosts, UFOs, reincarnation, a perfect society, a wife who will desire them...

This post is for the new guys.

I have this weird fascination with the self-help movement of the ‘70s and ‘80s. When I get my hands on old classic books or audio recordings in this space I devour them. Many are fucking wild and outlandish (take Dianetics for example), but that’s what I love about them.

My favorite of all the fads was something called est, or Erhard Seminar Training. (est made a brief appearance in a few episodes of the TV show The Americans. Maybe that’s where you’ve heard of it?) The seminar aimed “to transform one's ability to experience living so that the situations one had been trying to change or had been putting up with, clear up just in the process of life itself.” Yeah, what? Okay. Sure.

In 1976 an author named Luke Rhinehart attended an est seminar and wrote a book about it. It’s called The Book of est, and it’s one of my favorites. (He also wrote a fucking crazy weird book called The Dice Man but that’s for a different post…)

The Book of est is almost entirely made of up of dialog between trainers and trainees during a two-weekend seminar in the 70s. And let me tell you, there’s a reason est no longer exists and that its founder, Werner Erhard, was shunned from society via a number of legitimate and illegitimate claims of wrongdoing: the seminar is fucking bonkers. They were accused of mind control, of not letting people use the bathroom. People would vomit, pass out. They locked trainees in a ballroom, two hundred at a time, told them not to believe a word they were about to hear, that everything is bullshit, and then proceeded to tear down (often by screaming and calling everyone assholes) their notions of belief and self and reality before building it back up again under a new paradigm until everyone “got it.” Sound familiar?

The sheer number of topics the seminar covers is insane. The last time est was offered in a public forum was in 1984, so the book is the closest you’ll get to experiencing it. I re-read it a couple times a year, and have a different experience each time.

I could write many posts on this book alone, but today I want to narrow in on a particular concept that I think is particularly applicable to MRP: belief versus experience. To quote The Book of est:

“Look. If we put a rat in a maze with four tunnels and always put cheese in the fourth tunnel, after a while that rat will learn always to go to the fourth tunnel to get cheese. A human will learn to do that too. You want cheese? Zip zip zip down the fourth tunnel, there's the cheese. Next day you want cheese? Zip zip zip down the fourth tunnel and there's the cheese.

Now after a while the Great God in the white suit moves the cheese to another tunnel. Zip zip zip goes the rat to the fourth tunnel. No cheese in the fourth tunnel. The rat comes out. Goes down the fourth tunnel again. No cheese. Rat comes out. Goes down the fourth tunnel again. No cheese. Comes out. Down the fourth tunnel again. No cheese. Comes out. Eventually the rat will stop going down the fourth tunnel and look elsewhere.

"Now the difference between rats and human beings is simple: THE HUMAN BEINGS WILL GO DOWN THAT FOURTH TUNNEL FOREVER! FOREVER! HUMAN BEINGS COME TO BELIEVE IN THE FOURTH TUNNEL. Rats don't believe in anything; they're interested in cheese. But the human being develops a BELIEF in the fourth tunnel and he comes to MAKE IT RIGHT TO GO DOWN THE FOURTH TUNNEL WHETHER THERE'S CHEESE IN IT OR NOT. The human being would rather be right than get his cheese.

Let's bring this back home to MRP.

You, Blue Pill motherfuckers, are the rat. The maze is your marriage, the fourth tunnel is the Matrix. The cheese is your wife's desire. Now go back and read it again. I'll wait here.

Welcome back.

The reason your marriage (or life) doesn't work is that you're living mechanically in your belief systems, you're living in an empty, cheese-less tunnel, instead of in the world of actual experience.

Rats don't believe in anything; they're interested in cheese. Your plugged-in self on the other hand has so many fucking beliefs! Beliefs that society has instilled on you throughout your entire life. Beliefs that ultimately impede your ability to get your cheese.

I believe that because I married her, my wife should fuck me.

I believe that because I make $200k per year, my wife should fuck me.

I believe that because I put a roof over her head, my wife should fuck me.

The good news is that you, my Red Pill fellows, are unlike a majority of men, and you realize there is a tunnel, you realize that you've been duped, that the cheese probably isn't where you thought it was. So many men don't make it out of the fourth tunnel. They believe they are different. They believe their wives are different. They believe the stories they have been told about love are true.

"You know you've been spending your time in empty tunnels because every now and then -- accidents will happen -- you experience some cheese: a freedom, a joyfulness, an aliveness [desire from your wife] so different from your usual flow that you wonder whether someone slipped some acid [Spanish fly] in your [her] morning... orange juice. And ‘Wow!’ you say to yourself, ‘This is great, I'm gonna hold on to this,’ and you reach out to get a good grip on it and POP! it disappears. The harder you try to get it back again the worse you feel.”

For these men, it disappears because they are so wrapped up in their beliefs that they refuse to look in a different tunnel, they refuse to unplug and truly experience what it means to be a man who is worthy of desire. They keep playing the game, keep going back to the where they think it is, but POP! it’s gone. Instead of looking down the alternative tunnels, or questioning the tunnels existence in the first place, they keep playing the game with their wives and wonder why it’s not working, thinking they're doing everything right, everything they've been told, but wondering where the goddamn cheese is.

MRP is about recognizing the tunnel for what it is, knowing that the path to their wife’s true desire is not down the tunnel their moms or society created for them. It's about realizing that your wife's desire is not the fucking cheese. It’s about taking that maze of your marriage and life and flipping it the fuck upside-down, about realizing the true nature of women, of desire. It's about throwing away everything you've been told, everything that has built up these false beliefs that you are clinging to, believing them to be real, to be what will bring you what you want. It's about living in the realm of experience, not the realm of your false belief systems. It's about forging your own path, being your own cheese.

Stop going down that fourth tunnel and expecting to find the cheese. Motherfucker, stop making your wife's desire the cheese. You are the cheese.
3 Year MRP progress
by gearsmurf | June 28, 2018 | Link

Just wanted to give something back to this subreddit that helped me so much and also provide some honest criticism. I only ever lurked in the past and contributed nothing and feel the need to give something back. I rarely come here anymore simply because this stuff works and I’ve gotten the results I was after. I mean the whole purpose of this is a sexual strategy for men, so once your getting the sex your after, job done. The odd check in to avoid complacency still helps.

I read the sidebar books 2 or 3 years ago and the books work plain and simple. Also I read Jordan Petersons 12 rules of life which wasn't on the sidebar back then and someone on here recommend a book on stocism called 'A guide to the good life'. I am now in shape and in control of my finances and have sex 2-3 times per week (for me at 35 this is what I want) with a wife who now respects me.

Previously I was on the once a week sometimes once a fortnight plan. Which honestly was all I deserved. I tried negotiating sex with chores, told her it was her duty, tried being nice (lying) in general, bought her expensive gifts, told her how much I loved here. I had become isolated from male friends over time, had issues with alcoholism and had become more and more "beta" over time.

I have a tendancy to take things very literally and went a bit "red pill rambo" at the start and really upset my wife. The main changes I had to make were being less of a nice guy, more alpha, better physique and more of a leader of the ship. Taking full control of the finances was a big one.

Getting in shape is a game changer. My previous skinny self had no idea truly how much women like men with big muscles. Combined with confidence it has made me more 'alpha' because of the way other women and men treat me in front of her. It naturally causes 'dread' and gives you more power in the relationship.

So there you have it I implemented the sidebar reading and now have a happy marriage that I never plan on leaving.

My only advice would be to take some of the forum posts (maybe even this one) with a grain of salt. There are a lot of men who have had a bad experience with women and marriage on here and I wouldn't let them taint your view of women or marriage.

The one MRP thing I'm glad I did not implement. Learning how to pick up women and getting phone numbers but not sleeping with them. The principal makes sense and it may be right for some, you should be able to pick up a women at a bar. For me this would just be too dishonest and I would not want to put myself to the test of turning down potential sex like this. If you get in shape and increase your SMV and you know that women are interested you might not need to take it to the next level. I dabbled with the flirting with women in front of my wife, but I could see how painful this was for her. This step may not be necessary for some, my wife knows younger women find me attractive so why cause unnecessary suffering. The more you naturally increase your SMV through fitness, confidence, career wise you don't need to play these games. Now i'm definitely not super successful or have a really high SMV but its higher than hers and does the job.

Edit: I did post to MRP once before on this account 255 days ago I recommend r/stopdrinking to a guy struggling with the booze

Edit: Someone mentioned a new comer might read this and think cool I don't have to do dread. Dread is essential. I piled the dread on it was Rambo 3 at the start and I was angry Stallone. I did everything that was mentioned here and only stopped when it nearly brought her to tears.

For context at this point in time wife is a stay at home mum. She has 2 kids and wants a third we have been married 7 years shes 32 and wasted all her best years on me. Dependent completely on me financially. I then suddenly stop drinking beer and lose the bear gut. I go to the gym 5 times a week and get abs and gain some arm muscles, to amp it up I even shower at the gym to increase paranoia. She knows this gym and knows there are loads of women there. I'm also wearing a totally new wardrobe and sporting a different hairstyle. I've also completely changed my behavior based on MRP reading. I'm trying to hard to be alpha and there is zero beta as I'm overcompensating. I'm walking out the house during arguments. I'm demanding sex constantly and only treat her well when she puts out. It was hard on both of us and I could have ruined the marriage if I'd gone any further. It worked though.
As you may know from askMRP post (which was clearly a troll post for folks who don’t realize it) my wife and I celebrated our 13 year anniversary on the 12th. Last night I arranged to take the kids to “kids night out” at the gymnastics place here in town, so we had a free evening from 6-10pm Sat night!

Wife and I got dolled up and went up the street to the local sports bar that has a band, and overall good scenery. It is a 35-50 year old type place, so it is good for us. We get there at 6:05pm on the nose and post up at the bar and order some shrimp apps and drinks, and start the evening.

Before we went out, I had told my wife about a social experiment I was going to try in which I will call the styrofoam cup (SC for short.) I had read about the SC in another post, and the gist of the post was that a guy got his drink in a SC for the sole purpose of a conversation topic, and to gauge female reactions.

After we had a few drinks and enjoyed our apps, the bar started to fill up with other old people like us around 7:00pm, so I knew that I had 3 hours for my test. By this time several groups of guys had shown up, as well as women in their typical GNO attire.

The plan was simple, in our typical fashion we would make some bar friends and see what happens with the ladies in their GNO groups. I had no idea what was going to happen next.

Being an old guy, it only takes an hour or so for me and then the seal gets broken. So off to the mens room I go. When I come back there are two guys that have moved in on her, which is very typical for us. I come back and make my presence known (both are out of shape, typical 40 year-old dudes), and pick up my SC cup. Bro #1 sees me take a drink from my SC immediately asks why I am drinking from a SC? I tell him I am clumsy and like having a lid on my drink, but it is more the facial expression I gave that did the communication. They both respond with an awkward laugh and smile, and kind of look at each other.

Before anything else happens, the same Bro has waved over the bartender, and orders himself and his Bro a drink, but for some reason orders my wife and I a drink as well. When the drinks come, the bartender (whom we have socialized with in the past) puts all 4 drinks down and tells me that the Bro ordered our drinks and they are on him. I look at him to say thanks, and he tells me that he did it because I should drink out of a glass properly, and not out of a SC cup. I smile, shake his hand and tell him thank you for the round. Minutes later I pour the drink into my SC cup and keep on going with our night.

I was very surprised at this point by the reaction from this man. I have no idea what his logic was, if he was trying to AMOG me, or what? Why did he buy my wife and I a drink after literally less than 5 minutes of interaction? I saw the bartender hand the drinks to us, so I know they are clean. I have tossed drinks away people have given me, because of obvious reasons, but straight from the bartender, meh.
So here we are, about 7:30 or so and already have a beta Billy buying our drinks, so now I decide to add on another layer of the game. The SC is clearly working in some fashion, but not how I expect thus far. We post up and watch a table of 3 women (late 30’s early 40’s 5&6’s) get approached by other people, and promptly pushed away.

Every single one of the men approached in the same fashion - from the back angle. Imagine a round tall top bar table big enough for 5, and 3 women on one side somewhat sandwiched together to watch the band that will be starting up around 9:00. Which direction do you approach from? The fucking front. They need to see you coming. Listen boys, when you approach anyone from the corner of their eye, or backward direction they immediately are in a point of discomfort. Approach head on, so they have time to see you, size you up and realize you are not going to steal their purse. Don’t be a fucking insecure creeper.

It was time for me to make my move. The plan was simple, approach use the SC for conversation and then after a few minutes call the wife over and make it a party. I was not out to pick anyone up, and parties are always more fun with more people. We both love meeting random people out. It is a spice of life for us.

I approach with my SC, and I will spare you the details but I was sitting at their table within 60 seconds and the wife was over after that. The SC was a hit. Every single one of the women could not believe I was drinking out of a SC with a lid and a straw. They wanted to see the drink, they wanted to smell it and see if there was alcohol in there. It was ridiculous. When one of the women asked me why I do it, I told her that back in my youth I would use it as a piece of paper, and give it to women so they can write their phone numbers on it. One of the women took it and drew a pair of tits on it with a smiley face. By the end of the night, my SC was covered in graffiti, and a couple phone numbers.

After chilling for a bit, I notice that Bro #1 and #2 are still posted up at the bar, so I came up with an idea. I told the women we had met about our interaction with those men and how after less than 5 minutes they bought my wife and I drinks. I wanted to see it happen again, so I made a proposal/bet to the women.

I told them that I was going to invite them over to our table, and there was a very high likelihood that they would buy all 5 of us drinks. At first one of the women (the hottest) was very against it, but I reminded her how fun it is to get other people to buy drinks for us, and then her other two friends jumped on her, and said that they will “shoe” them away if they don’t buy a round within a few mins of coming over.

Well men, you can image what happens next. I signal Bro #1 over, and he just about runs across the bar floor. When he gets there he immediately tries to bust my balls about the SC, but he just had no skill set at all. I showed him my SC with the tits drawing on it as well as a few numbers, and I saw the “you’re not clumsy you’re an evil genius” look on his face appear.

Anyway, as you can image I was correct and they did get all of us another round of drinks. This mentality never stops surprising me. How guys think that by buying drinks for random women, (and men) that this will get them in. I know that my tab for 2 shrimp apps, and drinks (I paid for) was $80 which, in Dallas, drinking Grey Goose means that these two guys probably paid well over $50-$75 in drinks for my wife and I over a 2-hour time span. I know I had a couple on them, as well as my wife and they were buying the other 3 women their drinks, and there was ZERO, and I mean ZERO interest from them towards those men, other than being an ATM and providing free drinks. I never paid for another drink for my wife or I the rest of the night.

We left at 9:45pm on the dot, because we had the kids to get, so I will say that my social experiment was a blazing success. I had at least a dozen women ask me about the drink, and one very insure man try to tell me the proper way to drink. If he only knew, and if he only had the frame to even do something like this, he wouldn’t have spent hundreds of dollars buying random people drinks. They sure were not fucking me, or my wife that night, and neither one of them was doing a very good job with the other 3 women, that I introduced them to.

I honestly have no idea what their reasoning was. Maybe he was just trying to get them drunk enough, and go about it that way...

So, newbs hopefully you learn something.

1. Don’t buy people drinks.
2. Approach head on so they can see you coming. Esp. if you are HAWT.
3. Don’t be afraid to try shit.
4. Don’t buy people drinks.
5. Be HAWT, and smile when you talk to people.
6. Hi – is the perfect approach. It works for me 99% of the time. No one line bullshit.
Judgement is a feminine quality

Bill Maher had a great phrase on his HBO show, the 'pussification of America'. A critique of modern manhood in the west. You see it in well meaning single mothers, absent or estranged fathers, the vilification of male life. You see it in interactions with groups, or the herd mentality, and judgement. Men adopting feminine qualities, to our own detriment. A man is his own judge, and it's a lesson that we were not taught early on.

Men are also never taught that we are largely ignored. the bottom 80% of men are the invisible workhorses of a civilization. They do the jobs, they suffer the workplace fatalities, they are sent to war, and they ultimately pay more into a system than they receive. They (read:we) are not women, but we have been raised by women, and are woefully unprepared. Not only in the sexual marketplace, but in general male interaction. Shame, it's one of the true joys of being a man, and has been dying a quiet death for generations. The herd is not the place for a man, we are not cattle. We band together for common purpose, producing more than we will consumer over a lifetime, to ensure our tribes survival.

Women are social creatures, their survival is largely at the behest of the strong that guard it. They have their swingset, and their life depends on the social power they have inside of them. Their main tools are judgement, shame, and consensus. Sally can think Judy is a bitch, but that doesn't confer any power until they convinces Sara and Karen as well.

Men are social creatures. We have our sandbox, and our life depends on the ability to form hierarchies, and work towards a common mission, for our betterment. Jim may think Sean is an asshole, but until Sean doesn't pull his weight, no one cares, nor should they. Now imagine Jim was raised by women, what kind of verbal judo do you think he will learn?

I'm a guy. I'm not an authority.

When interacting with other men, one of the greatest revelations I, and others have found, is the increase of life's quality, once you shed the feminine strategies you have been raised accepting. Judgement is one of the first ones to go, and it's the most harmful, doing so much harm to our fellow brothers.

For example

- The woman that is divorcing her husband because she's not happy. The man is judged as a failure. The man accepts this judgement and doubles down on more chore-play, while the wife prepares the case of his abuse, the custody of her children, and the new man who will live in your house. This never works out for the man, he has adopted a horrible strategy.
• The man that works hard, stays fit, keeps up his quality, while a wife sits at home getting fat, lazy, and bored. Too bored to clean the house or watch the kids, Perhaps not so bored that she can get an emotional affair on account of the mans absense at work. Anyone else being taken advantage of like this should walk, but the judgement of the herd compells him to accept that he has to work harder, do more to please her. And like any parasite, she will accept all his hard work, and knows; the meaner and more judgemental she is, the more he will acquise. He has adopted a horrible strategy.

• A man who finds his wife was saving the best. He married a whore who fucks like a prude, and everytime he looks for the ability to grieve over his injustive, he will recieve a lesson in judgment and shame. Her past doesn't count, you should put up with it, man up and marry those hoes. He will put up with a deadbedroom, because of shame.

A man does not judge another man

When you read that, it reads like a command. You will not judge other men for their choices. It's a common bit of masculinity that was lost, and only now coming back. You also know that you cannot get others to act, according to your wishes, and will read as your willingness to be judged. And the only power judgement has on you is scarcity.

Scarcity

Scarcity, the worry of losing that which you currently have. Your resources, your social connections, all of it. Life has figured out a way to get you attached to your house, your phone, and your aquaintences, and to use these ties to coerce you into someone elses sexual strategy.

If you take nothing else from the manosphere, take this, it stops today.

Judgement, abundance, scarcity, and loss. they stop today.

How different would your life be if you were free from judgement? It would upend every facet of your life, for example:

• You don't approach women. You create a bullshit narrative, she is busy, you don't disrespect women like that. At it's core, you fear rejection, or the judgment of you being unworthy. This person whom you have no emotional invesment, and her hypothetical judgment has put you into a self imposed prison. Remove the aversion to judgement, and you'll approach.

• Your LTR wants to go on to Cabo on spring break, with her single girl freinds and old boyfriend from college. You would be judged as insecure, insensitive, and manipulative if you said anything of your comfort with this, so you go along with it. She will get some dick, and come back with zero regrets. Worst case scenario, you could be fathering
Chad Jr. Without fear of the Judgement, you realize this relationship has ended, and could have your dignity, and the time to pursue other options. you didn't lose her, it was only your turn.

- Your wife has zero desire to fuck you. She had your baby, and almost immediately, decided your dick was poison. Years you've been the good husband, because of the judgement; a man who only thinks of her for sex, not at all concerned for her wellbeing. Without judgement, you could start up divorce papers, find a mistress, or otherwise sex up some starved soccer moms who could keep your dick wet, and keep their mouth shut.

All these examples have a common thread. Judgement is used to have a man self-select a losing strategy in life. Funny how morality is 100% aligned against you. It's time for your own morality.

A man is his own judge

You have to be. You are the only person invested in your own happiness and well being. The less it aligns with another persons happiness and well being, the starker the example. When discussing these things, you will hear rebuttals of "equality". Women do X, but so do a lot of men! Which is great, except you aren't fucking men. This will make you a hypocrite, which is fair. You never claimed to be searching for equality, you've had it for 3 generations, and the word has lost all meaning. Equality has been perverted by feminine power talk to mean power over you, not equality. Like animal farm, some of us are more equal than others.

So fuck it. You don't want equal, you want to eat what you kill, like any good hunter. Do you think prey, talking to the hunter hold merit? Where he is constantly told of his barbarism and evil nature by someone with a vested interest in getting him to leave his hunter ways? It is ridiculous to be coerced by animals, to pen them, care for them, and sacrifice your freedom, to be a slave to the land. It used to make sense, but your desires were aligned to their happiness. There were no strong indpendant females during the famine. Thanks to the modern age, you have no ownership or reciprocated benefit to relationship husbandry. the prey wanted to be free, so the rancher will revert to the hunt.

The Classics

Iron sharpens iron, it doesn't try to cut it down. To quote TheUltimateCAD:

> You cant pick and choose the parts of TRP that you like and call it a day. Here is an important point you missed: I don't care what you think and dont need your permission nor your approval to continue. Thats why your shaming tactics dont work. I could explain my past and probably convince you why my current life makes alot of sense for most parties but I dont need to do that. This is about sexual strategy and relationships and I am successful with both. Your opinion EITHER way changes nothing
To Judge, a Summary

Men have always been the workhorses that build society. They judge each other, they judge solely on their worth to the goal. For 3 generations, they have been raised by women, and a woman's standards of value. They value consensus, they enforce it through judgement and shame. We have adopted their aversion of these things, and been conditioned to fail in our own lives because of it. You will be shamed for things, which by their nature, are meant to maximize the sexual strategy of the women around you, not for your happiness. They do it through the fear that you will lose the things you've become attached to.

Learn to let things go. There is nothing in the world today that cannot be replaced. Nothing but your happiness and your time on earth. Act as if you don't care of the opinions of others. Act as if you don't require their permission, or approval. Don't explain, rationalise, or otherwise demean your desire to do what you want for yourself. And throughout this mind shift, and refusal to accept the judgment of others, you can free your self imposed prison, and start to experience life, on your own terms.

Better yet, instead of acting, be.
What a weekend to be back home! Finally got my new thermostat and went to install it. She kept asking me to not mess with it because we had a busy day but I was excited to finally complete the smart home. Went to install the thermostat and was following the directions. Problem was, something happened and it blew the fuse on the control board to the furnace. Got on the phone with a friend who does commercial HVAC and he guided me to the issue. Oven was running and now we had no AC! Talk about a wife being pissed it was so bad you could feel the vibes in the air.

As I went upstairs to grab my wallet I heard her very softly say "I can't fucking believe this" but I didn't bother with it. She was not saying to me and I just walked out the door to go buy the new part after I opened the windows to at least cross breeze the oven heat out. As I was driving I started calling the home stores to find out who has a three amp fuse. She kept calling, but I was trying to find the part. Eventually she stopped and started sending texts to my phone. Notice the last part, she really thinks I didn't hear what she said.

All of them went ignored because I was legit busy. Had to save Easter from my own fuck up. When I pulled into the gate I answered her phone call. She was crying because she thought I walked out. I told her it was easter and I am not mad, just don't want to be sweaty unless we could be sweaty together. She laughed, and we exchanged I love you's. She was still upset when I got home and we hugged for a bit.

What got me the most is she was filled with dread over something so dumb. In which case she also tipped her hand. Took a few years to get to this point, but it's nice to know that you do reach the light at the end of the tunnel.

Keep at 'em boys, don't let feelz slow you down.

P.S.

Autozone carries three amp fuses.
60 DoD 2019 - Official kickoff
by SorcererKing | March 22, 2019 | Link

Rejoice, for 60 DoD 2019 is finally here! I know you're as excited as I am, for this is going to be a content-packed 60 days, with many of you committed to write posts for our focus areas.

Before all that kicks off this weekend, let's go over the basics of this challenge again.

The idea of 60 DoD is to improve your life-process. What do I mean by that? Mostly, it's about habits - if get into a habit of lifting regularly, eating right, tending to your hygiene, dressing well, gaming your wife, tending to your finances, advancing your career, and enjoying your social life, you will not only see gainz in those areas, but you'll sustain those gainz. Many challenges will say something like "do 1,000,000 pushups by next Tuesday!" That's well and good, but what about after next Tuesday? Does it become 1,000,000 pushups every week? Do I only need to do 100,000 per week once the challenge is over? Instead, here we focus on changing your process for the long run.

So the content each week will give you new ideas about what the possible range of process might be for you. Your lifting goal might become, something like:

- Lift M-F every week, with weekends off
- Lift at 7pm each night, without fail
- Do SL 5x5 until plateau, approximately 6 months from now
- Switch to Arnold's Blueprint for 3 months
- Create custom plan with some crowdsourced ideas from internet and gym bros after that
- Revisit gainz and program every 3 months

Notice how the first two items are the most important from a process perspective. They are the "what" of it, while the other items are the "how". A wardrobe goal might be an initial purge of worn-out ill-fitting articles, followed by refresh every time the seasons change. Hygiene could be to start wearing cologne and pledge to change it out every 4 months. You get the idea. Notice how in these examples it's not "join the 1000 lb club" or "get 17 polo shirts," but rather a sustainable approach to staying awesome.

This thread is for your public declarations of intention in the 8 areas. You should have enough self-awareness to know what you need to be better at. Not everything has to be drastic change, as even a stopped clock is right twice a day, but we all have room for improvement.

This year, for those of you who declare in this thread and report on success at the end, I will be granting special flair to show your accomplishment. I will enlist some fellow mods to determine who we think is worthy based on your honest self-assessment, realism in goal-setting, and actual accomplishment in changing your life process.

So with that all said, let's get to it. There will be a couple of "Week 0" posts hitting between now and Sunday, which will help frame our philosophical approach to 60 DoD, (hopefully) helping you to answering the question, "Why even bother?"

Gentlemen, this is 60 DoD. Begin.

Edit: Just a reminder, this will end on 05/24/2019.
I am a TRP rookie, however I thought I would share a brief field report. Not technically married but half a decade with the same woman. I have been hitting the weights pretty hard and eating well. The other day I am at the counter of very busy bank, almost all older women and men. My gf waiting in the lobby. Well the only young, attractive teller call me over to the business line and within 30 seconds my GF is standing by my side. Later that night we go out to meet a couple that she's friends with at a low key bar. They both make some comment about how I look ripped. (Im not but def a noticeable gain in muscle). Its literally 1 girl to 5 guys. I am at the bar and one of the only good looking girls comes up to me and makes conversation. Before TRP I would of excused myself hastily from the convo. After a couple of minutes I head back to my table. My GF asks who the girl was. I respond " I think she thinks you're hot, wants to ask you out or something...Why else would she wanna know if I have a GF" My gf just rolls her eyes but when she looks back over the girl comes over to our table with another female friend clearly trying to feel out the situation. Two hours later my gf is giving me some of the best sex I have seen in months.
This weekend, I'm going to the opera with my wife and some friends. I planned the event a few weeks ago and everyone is looking forward to it. The wife bought a new dress and heels and is off getting her hair and nails done as I write. She wants to look good in face of the competition - her female friends.

I just had my beard trimmed, bought a new shirt and some Tom Ford cologne. I have no competition. I just want to look good in the mirror.

Beforehand, there will be dinner, drinks and general jollyment. Afterwards, some more drinks and fun. I will talk with the BP husbands and try and impart some words of wisdom to them. Most of which will be lost on them but it may help. They are pretty balls deep in BP territory. Happy wife and happy life.

My wife's female friends are quite attractive. I will flirt with them and they will respond in kind. I will do this partly for my own entertainment and partly because I know that it will get my wife all hot and bothered. So hot and bothered, that she will fuck my brains out when we get back to the hotel that night.

Is this a covert contract I hear you noobies say? Well, the chances of it happening are 99%, so I honestly couldn't give a fuck. The weekend is set to be a blast and I'm looking forward to spending time with friends, having fun, flirting with women and banging my wife's pussy at the end of the night.

Meanwhile, some of you poor fuckers will be at home, scouring the Top MRP posts, reading WISNIFG, trying to employ AA and fogging techniques, badly trying to kino your wives, failing to introduce 10 second kisses, getting turned down for sex for the umpteenth time and generally having a shitty weekend.

How do I know that?

Well, because that used to be me.

But I'm not here to humble brag. Well, not just to humble brag. I'm also going to give you a few pointers. Nothing new here but something you can add to your reading list over the weekend while your wife is ignoring you. And thses are things that you should - at the very least - have or be aiming for in your lives..

Have a Mission - it may take time to develop a purpose in life, but this - above all else - is the most important thing every man should have.

Have a Min income - at least enough to cover your outgoings, enough to save min 10% of your income.
Live within your means - debt is avoidable. Never go into debt for lifestyle expenses.

Be Family Alpha - become the leader of your crew. Be a positive role model for your children and provide them with the support that they need. Being a positive masculine figure is the single most important gift you can give to your children.

Be Physically attractive - dress well, groom well and often, smell good, fix your health issues, and lift until you look like you lift.

Be mentally sound - if you have mental issues, get them sorted. If you think you have ADHD, go to a fucking doctor. Then get a second opinion. Then a third. If you don't have any issues, continue to develop yourself mentally through reading, learning, improving. If you are spiritual, I can lend no advice on that, just be good at being spiritual.

Have a great sex life - develop your skills as a lover and enjoy exploring & experimenting. tantric sex / BDSM / DEVI / fetishes. whatever you are into, learn about it, practice it, develop it and become a fucking Sex God.

Improve & challenge - continually strive to improve & challenge yourself & to learn new skills. Skydive, mountain bike, tango dance, make curtains out of the hair of dead animals. Whatever. Just do it.

Have an active Social Life - Put the books down, put your phone away and go out and fucking meet people. At least once a week. Non negotiable. Be fucking social.

Aim to live a life of Consistent Happiness - you will have ups and downs. Aim to minimise the downs and maximise the ups. You have one life to live. Fucking enjoy it.

And..

- Develop a Strong Frame
- Always maintain State Frame
- Believe in yourself
- Be confident in your vision
- Be congruent with your desires
- Work hard on all areas of your Mission
- Always defend your boundaries
- Be confident and driven
- Be stoic as fuck
- Be fun to be with. No one likes a miserable cunt.
- Be adventurous. Challenge yourself. Bring your crew with you. They will love the adventures and remember them forever.
- Be strong, dominant & project positive masculine energy
- Remain unphased by her - at heart she's just girl and underneath she wants to be a little slut.

And remember, that the attitude you project is the attitude they reflect
The moderation team would like to welcome our new moderator /u/Ianironwood.

Ian has published 4 books on Red Pill theory and 25 or so other books. His blog is The Red Pill Room on the MRP sidebar.

Ian's Manospherian works are available on Amazon Kindle and include:

The Ironwood Collection of Alpha Moves which was the 4th Red Pill book I read after MMSL, MAP, and NMMNG and THIS book finally opened my eyes.

The Manosphere: A New Hope for Masculinity is an exceptional historical review of the transition from PUA's to the Manosphere and The Red Pill.

The Gentlemen's Guide To Picking Up Women I read this book 5th and his folksy take on seduction made me suddenly realize in a complete epiphany that the sexual desert I was in was of my own making. I could leave it any time I wanted. I realized there ARE alternatives to a sex denying wife (aka PUA Game and engaging random females) and there ARE ways to seduce your wife (using PUA Game). Real eye opener because when I realized that, everything changed almost overnight. This book also began my personal study of Dread Game which morphed into the 12 Steps of Dread Post and my own book.

Sandbox Rules Another folksy tale from the self professed sex nerd about male and female social dynamics using his extra strong Red Pill spy glasses.

Coming this Summer....The Red Pill Experiment where Ian explores the use of Red Pill theory to improve marriages using his upbeat style and personal examples from his own marriage.

Welcome Ian. Make yourself at home. Nuestra Casa Es Su Casa. We are excited that you have joined us and look forward to your contributions.
Ladies: Your husband is obliged to put up with your shit, not MRP

by stonepimpletilists | November 27, 2016 | Link

Bogey has provided a wonderful post on women posting to MRP

However, some have forgotten the cardinal rule of women on the internet

Men here are perusing their goals. You may not share them, you may not like them, you may even despise them. Your approval, your blessing, and your opinion aren't asked for, or required.

We aren't fucking you

Men will post on generalities, so you can use them to guide decisions, aka 'assume all guns are loaded'. If you are offended because some of your qualities are on the list of 15 things psychos do, no one cares to hear you fight for your virtue. No worries ladies, we don't care.

We aren't fucking you

I know some of you see RP guys, and relationships really taking off. I'm glad you're happy for them. There are two female subs, that cater to both your sensibilities, and perspective. redbillwives and redpillwomen, I suggest you ask questions to them, us helping you control the relationship is not a primary aim.

We aren't fucking you

If you want to run your mouth, Purplepilldebate could use more poorly thought out showerthoughts and rants. I'm more than happy to shit post with you over there. This sub is designed to build men, and I am more than happy to show you the door if you decide that you have a problem with that

And unless the other mods have issue, I'm issuing a quick rule, so you don't think we are cruel virgin assholes. If you send a picture of you (topless or bottomless, we have preferences for both) to one, or all the moderators, you can have 1 free-for-all post, either yours, or someone elses, to run your mouth, and get serious engagement from said moderators. Don't worry, we don't do anger, they will be treated with discretion and privacy, consider it a mutual show of good faith, see attached image to see why.
I’ll begin with a quick summary for those who don’t care to see my relatively short posting history. 38, married 12 years, 3 kids 7, 5, and 3, pregnant 42-year old wife, HB 6 or 7. I am the same SMV or higher now (as evidenced by her actions over the last few months and the ease of getting strange vagina). Dead bedroom since 2011 after returning from second combat deployment, cheated numerous times on the down low since then. Wife is SAHM, very religious, rode the CC a little bit but not terribly experienced. I was a bit of a player before her but totally went BP after falling “in love” with her. Kids are homeschooled by her, doing well, ahead of their would-be classmates by about a year in reading and math at this point. I had previously relinquished control of all finances, child-rearing, and most house-hold chores in order to focus on my 2 jobs; huge mistake. With the dead bedroom and increasing fighting going on in the house due to my shitty leadership, I started seeking out ways to improve my situation, and found this place. Immediately started reading all I could and trying to implement all of the wisdom here as fast as I could. I got extremely angry for the first few months and my attempts to wrest control of everything from her were met with serious resistance. It wasn’t until I learned you have to improve for yourself alone, and that the only way to win is to not play the game, that I began to see minor improvements at home. During this time, I decided to spin plates and had about 5 to 6 in about 2 months. Still had a dead bedroom at home and fights were less frequent but still pretty horrendous (due to my anger, lack of frame, and generally caring too much). After one particularly violent one, I filed for divorce. Once served, she immediately asked me to come over to talk. She sucked my dick like it was going out of style and the dead bedroom was no more. We talked about our problems, I told her what my life was going to look like from here on out and she was on board. Things were looking good. Too good to be true.

Thinking I had conquered the world, one night about a month ago when I spent the night at home “reconciling” (aka fucking like a couple of wild gorillas) with my newly-awakened-wife-slut and STBX (served her back in October for multiple reasons), she checked my phone afterward. Yeah, I know, stupid, but I forgot that I had told her my PIN a few weeks prior for some dumb reason. Anyway, back up to one night prior to this, I was supposed to go home but ended up meeting this 29-year old HB 5.5 online, sweet-talking her into meeting me at a pharmacy, and then banging the fuck out of her in my truck. It was pretty fun. I then went and stayed at my father's house that night. So she reads the entire conversation where I go from just meeting this chick to talking her into fucking me that same night. This caused the Mother of All Shit Tests to be thrown at me by the wife. Crying, calling me names, telling me I am so fucked up, you know the drill. I’d say it was awful, but it really didn’t phase me. I held frame like a fucking champion, never showed much remorse, explained that until I withdraw the papers, I am not committed to shit. I held it so well that this woman fucked me like her life depended on it AGAIN before I went to work. It was spectacular and I felt like I had dodged a bullet.

Fast forward a week, I am working a lot and not coming back to see her but once or twice. We have plans for a military reunion Friday night and picnic Saturday. Friday morning she freaks out and sends me this long diatribe about how we can't be together, I can't trust you, you need to get an STD test, I am getting one as well, etc. I hold frame as best I can (this really pissed me off) and tell her she’s free to make her own decisions, but that she is not going to ruin my night and she is no longer invited to come with. Also, I am still taking my children the next day to the picnic (which happens to be the youngest B-day, which was to be celebrated on Sunday) but she needs to find something else to do. She is all upset, starts telling me I am crazy and horrible person and tries dragging me into an email war. I respond 2 or 3 times, then catch myself and respond with the original reasons I am divorcing her and quit responding after that. I go to the reunion, see a lot of my buddies, drink all night, shepherd their asses back to the hotel, and pass out for a few hours.

When I wake up, I take some time to think about the previous day’s events. I realize that I didn’t need to punish her quite so harshly, and that I could have just excluded her from the night time activities but brought her to the picnic. I did it out of anger and hadn’t thought it through completely at the time. I also knew that it would have a poor effect on the children and wanted them to have a pleasant day (as well as myself). So I call her and tell her that I would like her to come with us and enjoy the day as I am going to pick up the kids. She had already made plans with the sister-in-law (whom she told all about my extra-curricular activities and now hates my guts, lol), so she decides not to go. That’s cool. We go to the picnic, have a great time, and I drop them back off with her. She wants to talk for a bit, but her sister won’t let me in her house, so we go for a drive. She starts another shit test and tries hard to change the frame of the divorce from her treating me like shit to me cheating on her. I continually hold frame, bring it back to the original reasons for divorce, and state that, for the 100th time, when I am ready to recommit to her, that’s when I will withdraw the papers and stop fucking other women. You can imagine she is not a happy camper. I don’t budge. I drive her back to the sister-in-law’s, kiss the kids goodbye, and head home.

Afterward, I took a few days to really think about what was happening on the advice of one of my Army buddies and my father, and came to the realization that I couldn’t look my kids in the eye and tell them I tried everything I could to keep the family together if I didn’t stop banging whores, fully implement the Red Pill, and burn my ship on the shore at home. I drive to the house, game her, and fuck her. We then talk about the future, and I tell her that I think we can make this work, that mistakes were made on both sides, but that we can pull together, let go of the past, and have a good life if we choose to do so. She comes around (not without a little testing of course, which I smashed) and agrees that we can be happy now that all of our problems are in the open. I tell the kids the next morning that Daddy and mommy are staying together. I ghost all of my plates (some may disagree with this, but I want to give it my undivided attention for a while), but still plan to day game, flirt, catch and release. My biggest weakness is the cold approach, so I plan to practice. All is well.

Since then (about 3 weeks ago), things have been mostly great. There has been some shit testing here and there, snarky cheating comments, but nothing much and I bat it away easily. She has fucked me to the point where I cannot go any more and have to take breaks. I have choked her, pulled her hair, tied her up, fingered her ass (haven’t ventured into getting my dick in there yet, but the right time is coming), and received more spontaneous blowjobs than in my entire life. I’m talking daily or every other day. She is a wild animal. I don’t initiate, it is all her. I can barely keep up. My dick has been perpetually raw.
I talked to my lawyer and took the next hearing (this month) off the docket. She has not decided if she will remove her rebuttal hearing as well (pretty sure she will) because she still doesn’t trust me, but like I told her last weekend, I win either way. I’d RATHER win with her, but I win either way. We’ll see what the future holds.

The downside of all of this is that the cheating is eating her up (I know, who cares, but I do love her and it pains me a little, knowing that if I had manned the fuck up earlier we could have avoided all of this). I know she dwells on it constantly by her little comments. It doesn’t bother me much, but I have a feeling it will get worse before it gets any better. I know that I just need to remain the oak, absorb her wild emotions, game her, and fuck her like a sexual tyrannosaurus. I am very optimistic at this point.

Lessons Learned So Far:

1. Be attractive. You can get away with murder if you are an attractive man with options. Some have to work toward this more than others. I got a decent hand from the genetic lottery but luckily have kept myself in good shape for the last 18 years. It makes a fucking difference.

2. Don’t make rash decisions in the anger phase. Let go of your anger! I decided to divorce after my wife punched me during a fight in which my frame folded and I was going apeshit. It took a few more weeks before I had let go of my anger and just gamed the fuck out of her. I realize now that getting all butthurt over the punch (it wasn’t much anyway) was a DLV and a better alternative would have been to smile and tease her about it, slap that ass, and get in those panties later. I was not in the right headspace at the time. I could have saved myself $7,000.00 and counting. However, I will have spent that amount happily if I am able to maintain what I have now. Being a masculine man and living my life on my terms was all I needed to do to get her ass back in line.

3. Cheating is ok (TRP is amoral), but be aware of why you are doing it. I was doing it for validation and because I was horny as a toad. I needed to prove to myself that I could still be a Chad if I wish, and I did that. However, it never really made me feel good, and I knew that I wasn’t giving MRP my best effort by going the easy route and just banging sluts. Banging sluts is fun, but if you can turn your wife into your slut, that is much better. Mine is like a new woman, seriously. Super prude Virgin Mary wannabe is drinking my cum all of the time. The challenge is to remain the awesome dude who continues to get his cum drank daily. Major challenge, but I’m game.

4. Lift! Lift like your life depends on it. You need the testosterone from all of those squats, deadlifts, and bench pressing to aid you in your journey. You need those muscles to pop so that chicks want to touch them. You need the confidence it gives so that you will approach chicks daily and game them. You need to lift so that you can show your sons how to stay in shape and be strong enough to handle the shit life throws at you.

5. Live selfishly, as in on your terms and in your frame. That doesn’t mean don’t sacrifice for others (i.e. family), but do so according to what you determine they need and if you are magnanimous enough to give it to them. Make your decisions, state your opinions, and never waver. Develop a frame that cannot be compromised. Congruence between your actions and thoughts is the key. Own your shit: your decisions, your weaknesses, strip away the ego, and be a man. Nothing more, nothing less. You aren’t special, but you are a man, and that makes you better than any woman on this planet.

6. The harder you work toward making the MRP your reality, the easier it becomes. You can see the matrix all around you and it gets easier to react in the appropriate way, rather than your previous default BP manner. I still have a ways to go with this one, but I can see the difference from the last 6 months. I can see why some get to where they don’t even think about it anymore and just are. I hope to be there next year.

7. Who you marry makes difference. I left this part off the original post. My wife is an alpha woman. Highly intelligent (she has her MBA), very conservative Catholic upbringing, very pretty (but 42, so take it for what it's worth), driven to excel, daughter of an alcoholic. I consider her high-quality in most respects. I had her on a pedestal for a while. Because she is so driven, it was easy to slack off on my end (with 2 jobs this is the easy way out) and know she would pick up the slack as the First Mate. That is where my descent into betadom and drunken Captain began. Once you hand over control to a woman of this type, it is hard as fuck to wrestle it back. It may have only been possible because of her view of me as Alpha in the beginning of the relationship, my ability to return my SMV to a place higher than hers (in her eyes, obvious by watching her actions), her traditional upbringing and non-feminist (though still a little bit you-go-gurl) philosophy, and her adherence to the tenets of her faith despite her peers telling her to kick me to the curb. If any of those factors had not been present, things may have turned out differently, even with my actions remaining the same.

I hope that this FR will give some of you other guys hope that you can turn it around yourselves. This place and this group of men have literally saved my life. I consider you all my brothers and am grateful for all of your wisdom and friendship. I will salute you all with some Maker’s Mark tonight.

edited to add lesson #7
Squat More to Increase Strength, Hypertrophy, and Mental Resilience
by CaptJohnLukeDiscard | March 21, 2018 | Link

In this post, I’m going to share a workout program I’ve done lately with huge success. It’s a variant of the 20 rep squat programs that you can find online if you just google them. Here is a decent article which lays out some of the principles. This is not a program for someone brand new to weights. Don’t do this until you’ve been lifting at least a year or so. Also, for the love of all that’s holy, learn how to squat properly before doing this program. Good tutorial here.

Before I get into the details though, I want to talk about why I think this is important. First, men need struggle and squats are struggle. Second, if you are going to lift, don’t waste your time in the gym (machines, biceps only, no programming, etc.). Third, this program just fucking works in terms of strength, strength endurance, hypertrophy, hormonal changes, and mental resilience.

Program Overview
So here is what I did. I do 5/3/1 3x per week with a workout that looks something like this:

Workout A
Squats 5/3/1
Bench 5/3/1
2-3 assistance exercises
1 set of 20 squats

Workout B
Deadlifts 5/3/1
2-3 assistance exercises
Core work
1 set of 20 squats

Workout C
Overhead Press 5/3/1
2-3 assistance exercises
Core work
1 set of 20 squats

On this program, I started with a weight that was ~55% of my then 1RM so 205lbs. I then planned to do this program for 6 weeks and do the extra set of squats (I thought of them as Finishers) after every workout. The key is that you add 5lb EVERY workout. So 205 the first day, 210 the second, etc. If you do 18 workouts over 6 weeks, you will have added 90lbs. I jumped weights a couple of times until I finished with 315lbs on my last set of 20.

Good assistance exercises to include are stuff like pullups, dips, Kroc rows, DB press (bench or overhead), leg curls, hypers if you have the machine, lat & bicep stuff, etc. Don’t be johnny douchebag and just focus on iso arm stuff.

The Actual Set of 20
Let’s talk now about the actual set of 20. It sucks. It sucks a lot. If you have a training partner, have them stand close to you and hold up fingers to help count off because as that weight gets heavier, you will lose count in the teens. As you go, focus on breathing and bracing. Don’t rush. I found a good set of headphones with a rage song works wonders. Just keep grinding and breathing and you’ll be done soon-ish.

Recovery
As far as recovery, this program sucks at first but isn’t bad after that. You get so much blood flow through your body and legs during and after this that as long as you have good nutrients in you, you shouldn’t get very sore. I had some DOMS the first week but none after that. I do recommend incorporating daily stretching / foam rolling though just as a matter of course.

Other Tips
You have got to eat a lot on this program. This is not a workout to do while cutting. Do this on a clean bulk with a focus on getting as much protein as possible. Old school guys used GOMAD with this (gallon of milk a day) and that’s not a bad idea if you aren’t lactose intolerant. So eat and then eat more.

You also need a lot of sleep. Aim for at least 8+ hours of QUALITY sleep each night and turn your fucking phone off (screen dark) at least 90 minutes before bed.

Repeating the Program
As discussed above, you should only do this for 6 weeks. After the 6 weeks, drop the 20s and go back to normal volumes, etc. for at least 6 weeks before you do this again. This gives your legs time to recover and not adapt too much to the higher volume (which enables you to shock your system when you do it again).

My Results

On this program, you can expect to get much, much stronger in all your lifts. I saw my squat jump from 410 to 475. My deadlift went up a similar %. My bench and OHP didn’t jump as high but definitely saw a good 10% jump or so over the 6 weeks.

I felt better in general. I got to where I started to really look forward to the Finisher set especially when it was a benchmark of some kind like 275lbs. Sure there were days I didn’t want to do it but I did and I strongly believe that type of commitment carries over to everything in your life. That’s what creates mental resilience.

My quads ballooned in size. I had some jeans that became useless to me because the quad area is uncomfortably tight.

My BF% tests showed I added weight but dropped my BF% by roughly 2.5%. Considering I was bulking and not counting calories, I’ll take it.

If you have any questions, let me know. Just trying to share what worked for me.
Women Don't Care How Strong You Are... They Care How Strong* You Look

by CaptJohnLukeDiscard | July 16, 2018 | Link

The title is self-explanatory but since a lot of newer guys seem to miss this, let's break it down a bit.

How Women 'Feel' The World

99.99% of women do not have the frame of reference to appreciate how significant gains in strength are. My wife is extremely fit and regularly does the major powerlifting lifts on her own. She is a personal trainer. She still doesn't have the frame of reference to truly understand the difference between benching 275 and 365. Both are so far past her realm of personal experience that she can't relate. As such, she doesn't give a shit if I increase my BP from 275 to 365. She might congratulate me on an achievement but it won't win me any additional respect or tingles. Remember, women process their world through their feelings and they can't 'feel' what they can't personally relate to on an experiential level.

What my wife can understand is that there are now lines on my stomach where there weren't before. My deltoids stand out now because I've lost fat above the tricep and bicep. My upper body has more of a v shape because I've lost inches around the middle. Hence, tingles.

Strong versus Strong

Where I'm going with this is that if I want to generate tingles, I need to remember that looks > performance. Your woman cares far more about you looking strong* than actually being strong. I put an asterisk next to strong because I don't really mean strong in the fat powerlifter sense. I mean more of a powerful, competent sense like a men's physique athlete. Those guys look like they can run to and then still participate in a fight if they need to. The powerlifter? He looks like he would be out of breath after 5-6 punches. That's not really true, of course, especially if you've seen real strongman competitions but women don't have the frame of reference to really understand that on the primal level that generates tingles.

What Does This Mean To Me?

If you stand in front of the mirror at complete rest and don't see vertical and horizontal lines between your abs, you are too fat. I don't mean that in a medical sense. I mean that in a maximization of your SMV sense. Alternatively, if you can see lines between your abs but you have no V taper because you have the shoulders of an 11 year old girl, you don't have enough muscle mass.

What this means is that neither of the following guys is getting as much interest as he should be:

"Male, 6'0, 225lbs with 20% BF, 325# BP and 450# squat" - pretty strong but still too fat
"Male, 5'10, 145lbs with 8% BF, 175# BP and 245% squat" - pretty lean but not enough muscle

But are AWALT? Does this apply to every single woman? Maybe. Maybe not. Sure, some women may "prefer" leaner guys and some may "prefer" stronger guys but everyone still has a biological impulse to breed with the best possible genetic specimen.

That's the same as the guy who says "I really like much leaner girls" but who would be DTF Kate Upton in .001 seconds if she was even remotely available. Biology is biology.

So... stop settling for "18% BF" or "165# Bench Press"... go out there and become fucking Thor or Hugh Jackman or the 17 year old werewolf kid from Twilight that all the 45 year old moms were perving over. Don't settle for less.
Some advice for those who are not seeing results or how it took me a year to really see things sink in by servintimeok | July 31, 2018 | Link

Learned about red pill over a year ago. Then I read a big chunk of the literature that is out there. I got a little frustrated when I didn't see any results, and I gave up for a while thinking it was something that worked for others and not me. I fell back into that harmful thinking of there is just something wrong with how I am wired and no books or strategies can change that.

What I've discovered is actually I am a slow learner, as I am in all things in my life. When I read things, my mind wants to hurry up and embody the images that get painted in my head. When I do not suddenly become amazing overnight, I get disappointed and maybe a bit jealous that it works for others and not me. Even though it didn't feel like things were working, I kept studying about fashion, watches, fishing, etc. Or the things my own father never taught me about. Then I went out and spent some capital on outfits that seemed a little strange to me until I started wearing them. It felt stupid, but then I started getting genuine compliments and great feedback from the women I work with. Of course I cheated a little. I'd go to a store and snoop around until I found something strange like a pair of red pants. Then I'd google 'men's outfits with red pants,' and I'd basically replicate what I saw pop up on pinterest.

I posed a lot and it never felt genuine. I felt like a dork pretending to be a better man. But over time, my attention shifted. I began noticing how other men are dressed. I started looking at men the way women look at men. And while I am not too ugly, but definitely not a looker- I realized that being 'handsome' simply means dressing deliberately. It really doesn't matter if you have a plain or ugly face so long as your hair says something and so do your clothes. To be handsome, you just have to dare to try new styles and learn the simple rules of matching belt to shoes. How to wear certain watches with certain outfits.

Another thing that helped me is I geared my mind to take attention away from women and focus more on myself and other men. Now that I've taught myself about watches and clothing and other things, I find I can talk to other men easier. If you find other purposely-dressed men like yourself, you can comment with some knowledge and experience on their watches or different fashion they might have tried. I was surprised to learn that men actually respond and love talking about this stuff. And each time I talk to a stranger or coworker about it, I gain more knowledge myself.

In the beginning of my transformation, I kept falling down because I didn't see any results from my wife. Actually, things started getting worse. She accused me of spending too much money on clothes. She was surprised when I not only disappeared to the gym, but had a scheduled time to be there that I wouldn't surrender for her no matter what.

Recently, we went on a vacation. We took a few pictures together. though I am just average looking, I have always thought I was ugly (especially in pictures). In these vacation pictures though, the clothes made me look a lot better. It also looked like my wife and I fit together, as she puts some effort into her outfits.

I still get starfish sex mostly, but I am making little bits of progress. She gets jealous when I go out looking nice and smelling nice. The woman who has been bored with me ever since she popped out a kid and I bought her a nice house and car is suddenly having hamster moments again. Getting jealous, to which I respond with a shrug and amused mastery. I also do things like iron my own shirts and clean our bedroom to improve my own domain, not as a longshot bet it will translate to pussy passes later.

For over a year, I thought a lot of this was something that could work for certain types of men. But really, these changes are so big that your brain really needs time for everything to seep in. This is not the matrix; you cannot just plug in and absorb everything in an instant. It was daunting to try to learn about being better physically, conversationally and stylistically. I pushed myself at these subjects until it tired me and I gave up. Then I restarted. One day, things started to click into place.

I am in my 40's. I have never been good enough for my family. I am not good enough for my wife. But it is changing. The key ingredient is that I've begun having more purpose to the things I do and say. And I am slowly beginning to be good enough for myself- which is where it all starts. And I see I can reach in and improve my relationship with my mother- which was always impossible for me.

I have gotten some life-altering advice from complete strangers on Reddit. I am grateful. It really is a long road up from the pits we've accidentally dug ourselves into. If it took me over a year to awaken, I expect it will take two years or more for my wife to awaken to what I have now become.

The biggest criticism I used to have against my wife was that she had gotten too 'comfortable.' But actually, it was me. I thought it was enough to go to work, come home, put on gym shorts and a t-shirt, just relax and get mediocre sex served to me about once a week. I thought it was enough to pile up possessions and pretend I had achieved anything with my life and my mind.

I am better now. Not all my problems are solved, but I have understood the capabilities within myself after a long time of much self-doubt. I never thought I could lift and get in shape with my weak, frail-ass body. I put out the dough to go three months with a personal trainer. $1500. On the second week, I was doing more push ups than I think I'd done in my whole life up to that point.

It can be done. We need other men more than anything.

I am in a happy place, my friends. Don't give up on your own paths. And getting in shape truly is the starting point. Every gripe I had about my father not being there or what he never taught me doesn't matter. Resistance is your father. You doing push ups, you lifting barbells. It's the resistance, and your overcoming of that resistance, that will father you. I haven't gotten buff by any means, but I feel good in my shirts. A woman sitting across from you knows when you feel good in your own shirt and with the clothes you chose.
A few guys have responded to my comments and posts with this common theme of needing to remember to enjoy the ride. This post is to those Men who have forgotten to have fun and find comfort in the discomfort of living life as a Masculine Male in our feminized society.

The root cause of this issue is a combination of being too rigid in your application of The Red Pill and your inability to kill your ego.

Being Too Rigid

When you initially unplug you are trying to figure out what in the actual fuck is going on. You’re seeing the world through a new lens and while nothing about the people or environment has changed, everything seems different.

This is because you are now on the outside looking in. You’re no longer in the race but are now observing others running through the maze. Interactions with your wife, other Men, observing other couples... TRP opens your eyes to a level of interaction that you were oblivious to and that is equally motivating as well as terrifying.

The rage (anger phase) that comes from this is rough. You think of wasted time, the lies that were believed, the fact that you aren’t special and you are alone in this. As a Man you are the more romantic of the sexes and because of this you have built this romanticized version of how things are supposed to work (thank you Mr. Disney).

So you discover TRP, recognize things for what they are and you begin reading, lifting, and applying your knowledge.

Here is where most guys are getting in their own fucking way

You are working on yourself and trying to figure your own mind and your role out and while doing so you attempt to lay down some solid boundaries. Except, you make everything a boundary and before you know who the fuck you are as a Man and what your new ‘enlightened’ brain wants to do in this life you begin to work on improving your wife.

You don’t know what you want, you don’t know who you really are or where you fit in, and you’re uncomfortable with this new truth & reality. Now is Not a good time to start laying down these ridiculous boundaries that you don’t even know you want yet.

I fully believe in the STFU until you know what the fuck you’re doing program. You’ve been a weak fuck for years; you don’t fix that in 1 month. Draw the basic boundaries, refuse to be disrespected, remove time and attention and only give it when it’s earned, make yourself a priority (eating right/time for the gym) but do not start demanding that you’ll have sex 3 times a week, and blowjobs are on the table, and your wife will submit to your lead.

You need to work on you and most importantly, while you are working on you, remember to remain like an amoeba, being flexible during the adjustment period.

Maybe you don’t get the blowjobs you want, give it time you’re SMV/Game/Dread aren’t there yet - and that is A O Fucking K this is self-improvement for life, not sprint to get there in 2 months. TRP isn’t a race to see how fast you can become a Man again; this isn’t a contest where you win upvotes online. This is no shit your fucking life.

Maybe your wife fucks up; shit tests you, and outright does the opposite of what you tell her to. Don’t sulk and get pissed and think, Fuck I need TRP to tell me what to do, was this shit or comfort, do I need to Lift??(yes) Just sit back and smile in her face, she’s being a woman enjoy that.

AWALT, you are not plagued with some psycho bitch (there are exceptions) this is just your chick being a chick. Enjoy that. You’re sore from the gym, tired from work, hungry as fuck from fasting and your wife gets on you for forgetting to mow the lawn - Do Not Get Pissed She is right, you should have handled your responsibilities and she doesn’t give a fuck how you feel, nobody does. You’re a Man, you’re expendable.

So Smile, then mow the lawn with your shirt off and let the neighbor’s wife leak like a faucet while your muscles bounce around (if you’re fat keep the shirt on, ain’t nobody got time for that).

You need to find joy in these interactions as they are nothing more than signs of your progress. You’re recognizing your wife for what she is and are taking the actions necessary to become the Masculine Male she’s always wanted you to be.

- Find comfort in the discomfort

- smile through the process

- Fix YOU before you try dropping boundaries on HER

Killing The Ego

Your ego is always trying to protect you. If you can’t say right now that you’re being a weak mother fucking betafuck in regards to (insert where you’re fucking up) or that your wife’s failures are actually reflections of your piss poor leadership then you still have some killing to do.

All of your success and All of your failures are entirely on You.

Your wife challenges you? She doesn’t respect you. - Should she? Why?

Your friends walk all over you? Are you letting them? Why?
Your job sucks? What are you doing about it?

Your wife cheated and you stuck with her? Why bring it up again and again, destroy the past own it before it destroys and Owns you.

“She keeps testing me” GOOD. When she stops is when it’s over.

The opposite of Love is not Hate it’s Apathy.

Your ego can prevent you from true growth. It will block any form of introspection as it will deflect ownership/responsibility from you thus preventing you from discovering the true root of your problem, you.

Kill your ego, take as an objective approach as you can and just accept that you fucked up and for you to unfuck yourself you need to work on you.

It’s your fault and that’s fine. Fix it. Don’t talk about understanding what I’m saying on this forum then telling your wife she’s a fucking nag.

Apply what you’ve learned and embrace the suck.

Acta, Non Verba
There seems to be recent trend of guys just not doing the basics. So I will help out just a little bit, as a hint the search tool is your buddy. Then read the highly up-voted posts and the flared guys stuff.

If you are just getting started STFU is key. You don't do anything with your words. You do it through your actions. Start acting like a little bitch and guess what you are showing?

STFU is important. What we don't really tell you is that it keeps you from looking like a fucktard. Because really you don't know what you are doing.

The primary purpose of STFU is so that you take time to internalize what's going on. You are going to fuck it up. Hopefully if you are doing it right and STFU you don't fuck up badly that you are set back months.

Above all you have to remember this process isn't about her at all. It's about you. Dread isn't about making her guilty to have sex with you. It's about making sure you are a better man and have the options to make it better at the end of it.

Get it out of your head right now that as you increase she WILL respond. That is not necessarily true for one, some people are just shitty and you will come to that realization eventually. Once you do then you can plan accordingly. This is where I am. There are shitty people out there. Some are in your life. Why do you want them there? Jackten's advice rings in my head every damn day.

Every man's path is different. Second, is that if you think increasing dread is the key to your problem then you are still writing contracts. If I go dread level 5 THEN she will like me.

Dread is more about making sure you are a quality man.

MRP saves the man.

You're welcome it took me all of about 5 minutes to find those posts. Do the work.
Beware the Ides of March:

The warning fits the intent of this project. Mediocrity should beware, your former weak self should beware, complacency and comfort should beware, because at the end of this, they will no longer exist. There is nowhere for them to run or hide in your mind, you’re coming for them and this March, you’re destroying them.

A Seed is Planted

There was a blog called ‘The Lifestyle’ which ran a series called the Alpha Dog Days of Summer This series was 20 straight days where the author provided you with something.

Whether it be focusing on your ability to pay attention or how you dressed yourself. Each day had a clear purpose and each day was improving and expanding on the skills of the previous day. The goal was to create a habit & create a mind which displayed the traits all ‘alpha’ males possess.

I came across this blog via @JackShepReturns and a seed was planted in my mind.

The Alpha Dog Days of summer was written in 2011. It’s time for the next installment, Spring.

The Project

We are heading into Spring soon and there’s no better time to reclaim and grow your masculine self than when the rest of the world is coming alive as well. While the heat rises so will your masculine flame. As flowers bloom so will you, showing the world the man which lives inside; no longer repressed but expressed.

March will be my first full month as a 30 year old. What better way to start out this next decade of my life than with a month dedicated to self-improvement with my brothers? Every day during the month of March I will be writing a post dedicated to embracing the ‘masculine-self’. These won’t be two paragraph ‘journal entries’, but actual posts. These are going to be the Spring equivalent of Alpha Dog Days of Summer.

The timing is perfect; at the end of the 31 days of March and Springing into your new Life you will enter April, May, & June.

They say when you start to work on yourself it takes 30 days for you to really notice, 60 days for friends and family to notice and accept this is the new you, and 90 days for the world to recognize your efforts.

March will build your foundation and you will enter the next 3 months armed with both the discipline and motivation to make this coming summer the summer in which you look good, feel good, and will always look back to as the point where you reclaimed your masculinity and took responsibility for your life and health.

- You’ve set and missed enough deadlines.

- You’ve relapsed enough times.

- You’ve suffered in silence for what seems like an eternity...

Make the commitment to yourself, put yourself first and actually commit to something and stick to it.

Men, I’m telling you now, if you do not take ownership of yourself, here and now, after reading what I’ve written, you will regret it forever.

Commitment

I’m not charging for this, I’m not making you sign up for any type of list, and I’m not making you do pointless shit like pick a fight with a stranger.

I’m just extending my hand through words, grab hold and save yourself from the quicksand of a weak society you’ve been slowing sinking into day by day. I’m putting the information out there and setting the bar, you either choose to reach it or you don’t.

But know this now, you’ll always look back to this moment and wish you’d fucking started and grabbed the hand of the man who was working to pull you out of the abyss of dismal living.

There are going to be challenges and you must commit to completing them. If I say do 100 push-ups that day, 50 in the morning is not good enough.

If I say I’d like you to look at your life and objectively isolate the areas where you are truly dissatisfied, this doesn’t mean ignore the difficult parts like sex, physique, etc.

The term Good Enough should be removed from your vocabulary in regards to obstacles as that mentality leads to mediocrity.

This is about breaking the mundane and mediocre existence you’ve lived up to this point.

This is about Springing into the next phase of your life, where you live genuinely, love masculinely, and fucking own each and every day; leaving nothing to chance, leaving nothing to regret.

Join me Brothers, let’s raise the standard and set the bar from which excellence will be measured, let’s create Men this March.

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
“A monkey will not swing from one branch without a firm grip on another”

I started my RP beta de-program about a year ago. Since then I have gone from a fucking overweight, depressed, overtly needy co-worker, friend, lover, father to a fucking a man.

SW 220lbs, 6’0 BF% high 20s CW 184lbs, BF% mid teens

I’m on the verge of a significant raise and me being needed more than I need my job (currently make 150k +)

My SMV is probably 8-9 depending on the woman. I see myself as a 8.5. Six pack and better delts I’ll be a 9 forsure (December)

In the beginning my wife loved the new me. I was Rambo and pissed off. I settled down after about 3 months and began to really focus on our relationship, which meant completely changing my ideals of life. Slowly the comfort and fitness tests became daily, and every time I passed (or failed) one she began to pull more resentment from the past out to try and beta-ize me again. I eventually told her we are not talking about these issues that are 10 years old anymore, we have been to counselling, we have put these to rest. If we can’t get past them we need to explore other options.

We split.

She split quick too. I didn’t give a fuck. Didn’t ask her to stay, didn’t ask what she was up to. Just continued my mission as IDGAF. My suspicion is that she had found someone else. I view(ed) this as a positive. It’s a distraction for her, and makes my life easier.

AWALT confirmed. She told me today after a heated financial discussion that she seeing someone. “Sounds good” I said. Buddy has some pretty fucking big shoes to fill, hope he likes being compared to me and used as a pawn in her eyes to try and stir up some emotions from me.

I got a HB8.5, HB8 and another couple 8s waiting for me to text them. Gonna go lift some iron now.

IDGAF.
This is more of a relationship building post- just a heads up. However, it can also be used for “spinning plates:”

The concept of dread is one of the most misunderstood concepts out there....

Alright, lately I’ve been hearing a lot of talk about the concept of dread. Usually, I see people talking about it like it’s an active action to elicit a response of dread in a woman (usually in a relationship). While this concept can occasionally be effective, it is kind of like a kid playing with dynamite.

The dread levels are very specific and set up to gradually increase your value as a man, and if you are in a relationship, it should be used passively. Now, I’m not talking passive aggressively, but passively. In other words, as you improve as a man, dread is a natural response that a woman will have in a relationship or your plates will experience dread.

Passive dread is healthy as long as it is balanced with doses of comfort. In other words, you don’t want dread to spiral out of control. Passive dread is essentially a buffer and insurance against women’s natural propensity towards Hypergamy. But, it’s much more than that.

So, in order to understand the concept of dread better, let’s look at the actual levels. These should be taken slowly - general rule of thumb is 1 level every month or 2:

Levels of dread

So, understand that going through the levels of dread will give women what they desire- a man that they believe has high sexual and social market value. But, it should also be understood that you are essentially becoming a man of high social and sexual value by going through the levels of dread.

Essentially, dread isn’t about the woman or women. It is about you, and becoming the best version of you. Now, if you are in a relationship or go into one, these can be a great side effect and balance the power in your favor. Let’s face it, every relationship has a power dynamic, and if a woman says “we are equal partners,” it probably means she holds the power in the relationship.

So, dread is a safeguard.

Dread is a tool.

Dread is power.

Dread satisfies women’s propensity towards hypergamy, but you are the prize.
Dread is much more....

Women need to feel it (but they will never admit it) because it reinforces that they made the right choice, you. Of course, this can be used if you are just spinning plates also.

Don’t think of dread as “I stayed out late and took a shower when I got home right away” to make her think I’m fucking another woman. This is active dread, and it is used by weak men who are too lazy to go through the levels of dread.

So, REALLY become a man who they KNOW has choices and can fuck other women by going through the levels of dread. It’s similar to passive income because passive dread yields rewards without effort beyond the initial efforts. However, remember that the initial efforts should be thorough, increase your SMV, and make you the man you want to be, for you... not for a woman

There is no fake it til you make it.

You either are or you aren’t a high value man, and perception is based on your actions.

Be a high value man. Don’t put women on pedestals.

YOU are the prize.
This was how I took control of my financial life many years ago. If it helps you get control of your finances and your life, great. If you find my methods distasteful, fuck you in advance.

About 5 years before the end of my first marriage, 30 years ago, I started having trouble paying all of the bills. Credit card balances were climbing fast, and, the savings accounts were declining.

Digging through my finances I found that my (now) ex-wife, was spending a lot of money. Among other things, she bought very expensive gifts for the kids and others that I was not aware of. Substantial sums were for drug/alcohol items.

Edit #1: I tried to discuss the finances with my wife and find ways to get things under control. While she agreed to improve, her actions were just more of the same. It became clear that she was never going to help. This would never get better unless I took charge of it.

My goal was TOTAL control of everything financial. With this in mind these were my steps.

Step One

- Make a list of all income items, their source and the ownership.

- Make a list of all Assets; house, bank and savings accounts, CD’s, etc, and the ownership

- Make a list of all debts, and the ownership of the debt.

- Understand the rules of ownership that affect the assets and liabilities you want to control.

The simple rule is that any asset that is in your name only, is controlled by you. Additionally, joint assets, though not totally owned by you, are under your control. For example, you can empty a joint bank account without your spouses signature.

The rules for debt are very similar. If a debt, like a credit card is in her name only, which is fairly rare, you can’t do anything with it. However, if it is (a) your card or debt, or (b) your card or debt and she has use of it (not joint), or (c) a joint card or debt; in all of these cases you can close the account, or, close it to new charges. Remember to check for home equity lines of credit, as these often lie dormant.
TIP: If you have an employer retirement plan, such as a 401k, 403b, 457 plan, spousal approval is required if you withdraw or borrow from the plan. If trying to withdraw funds during a divorce, you still need her signature. Guys have had to pay ransom to their soon-to-be-ex to get their own money.

Step Two:

- Open a Post Office Box. You will use this address for every NEW account that you set up. Just don't use a private personal mail box like FedEx. It is harder to forward mail to and from this type of box.

- Apply for a new card in only your name.

- Open a new checking account in your name only, and order checks for it. Ordering checks is important as there are many things that you cannot do with starter checks.

- Open a brokerage account in your name.

- Prepare letters to every debt you have authority over. The letter should say to close the cards to NEW purchases immediately, and, that you will continue to pay the balances.

- Prepare the same letter to the bank for any bank loans or open equity lines of credit on real estate.

- Prepare a letter to each credit reporting agency requesting a credit freeze.

- Tell the wife there was a breach on your checking account and she needs to get her paychecks sent to a new account the bank is setting up for you. If she has somehow found out it was not a joint account, tell her that the bank wanted to get the account set up ASAP and they were going to add her later.

- Stop all automatic payments to and from the old joint checking account and move them to the new checking account.

- Change your paychecks to the new bank account.

Step Three:

- Go to the bank and close the joint (household) checking account and deposit the proceeds in my new checking account.

- Close all the joint savings and CD accounts and reopen them in your name

- Close the joint brokerage account and move the proceeds to your new brokerage account.

Step Four

- Mail the letters to the credit cards, bank debt accounts and credit agencies via certified mail.

- Have the Post Office forward ALL of the home address mail to the new POBox.

Step Five; The Reveal

I gathered all of the kids and wife and said:

We are spending more than is coming in. I have no intention of working until I am 90 years old, when I make plenty of money. As a result, I am taking complete charge of our finances, and, I expect your complete cooperation. I have closed all of the charge accounts. I have closed the household accounts. All of the remaining accounts are now in my name. You cannot access any of them.

I will provide you (wife) with cash for the household expenses, gas grocery etc. This will be $300 per week for now. Keep the receipts of your purchases. I will use those receipts to replenish the fund weekly. We can review this fund each week.

When additional items are needed, I will provide additional cash as requested. If, for example, I give you $500 for clothing for the kids, I must see the purchases, and receipts, for approval. Make no mistake, extravagant items, or items that I do not approve of, will be returned immediately.

The Aftermath

One of the things that amazed me, was that there were still three more charge accounts that I did not know about. The wife also managed to open two new charge accounts in the first week. Because of the forwarding of the mail to the POBox, I got to see those statements, and, close them.

Another thing I learned was how much she was abusing drugs and alcohol. It was amazing the level of it. I visited the 3 closest liquor stores, and found she had two “in house” charge accounts. Closed them.
After it was all tallied, the credit cards exceeded $100,000 balance. The home equity line of credit was maxed out.

In short order I had plenty of cash on hand. I paid off the credit cards in just over a year.

I never let go of any of the control after that. I was tested with failure to provide receipts and trying to hide purchases and other things. Once the pattern was established of zero tolerance, it worked well.

One of the up-sides of this was getting the kids to model their new clothes and show the new stuff they got. It was a very pleasant activity that we all started to look forward to. Looking back, that this was so enjoyable, highlights what a shitty atmosphere it was for all of us back then.

Iron Rules

Avoid joint assets, joint liabilities and joint agreements, such as leases, and, business ownership or debt. Any asset that is joint, is a gift to her as she the the ability to take it all, legally. Any debt that is joint, is a gift her, because if she refuses to pay, you will be legally obligated to pay it.

Co-signing is MUCH Worse than a Joint Liability. Co-signing on any debt offers you 100% exposure to the debt, and, unlike a joint debt, offers you absolutely no ownership rights. The trap that so many miss is when you co-sign certain types of student loan applications for your kids.

Today and Forward

Today I am in my 60's and retired from actively seeking income. I retired from the financial services industry. As a private wealth manager, I managed over $200 million of client investments. When I sold my practice, I retired. My net worth is several million and zero debt, including no mortgage for many years.

NEVER in this second marriage, was there any question about who was in charge of the finances, or who made the financial decisions. I consult with her, but I always decide.

There is only one joint bank account, and, I work under the assumption that it is a gift to her.

The only other joint asset is the paid for house, and, I assume it is a gift to her.

For many years she paid the bills, but this was more of a bookkeeper function than actually making any decisions. I always checked to see what she was doing.

My frame, when it comes to finances is, was, and always will be, absolute total control.

Edit#2: It is important to realize that this whole situation I was coming from behind here because of my own failures to lead. These failures were:

1 Not taking responsibility for the family finances in the first place.
*2 Dumping that responsibility on my spouse.

*3 Not checking on, overseeing, supervising my spouses handling of the money.

*4 Although I already knew she had alcohol issues, I did not pay attention to how much that problem had grown.

*5 Jeopardizing my children’ college funding and their future.

*6 Jeopardizing my financial future and retirement.
A very, very dreadful Saturday
by Persaeus | August 8, 2016 | Link

It started like most Saturdays for many months now, first some morning sex, some pretty great sex to be specific. Cooked some bacon, took a bike ride, told the wife we were going to a movie tonight after some shopping, completed our chores/projects, lifted, and then sat down for some Olympics with wife. Then my wife tried to apply some dread.

First though some recent background

Found the RP 11 months ago, and been slowly dissolving the jagged pill. The changes to myself and my marriage have been solid and steadily building after an initial 3-4 month lag where nothing much seem to gain any traction. However, as recently as a month ago I was still occasionally losing internal frame mostly over whether my wife could ever become the person I thought I married and wanted back. I got a lot of good advice on this sub two months ago that the woman I thought I had was never there due to a combination of the blue goggles and her taking my shape to an unsustainable degree. Three weeks ago, while lifting, I just came to terms with this as a fact. I cannot change her that much. I will either accept it or I won’t, those are my options.

During the same lift, I had the following epiphany that has finally moved my frame squarely into the middle of me. The goal of my MAP, relative to my marriage, should be to end the marriage. My goal should be to become a single man that can slay every single component of my life. This doesn’t mean I ignore my wife. Rather, she is my current partner in my RP training. If she makes it into the championship, swell….if she doesn’t oh well. For me, this is the way to kill the mother of all covert contracts that was my MAP. This mental model was influenced by the post on “The Gift” and the referenced Rollo post. The most perplexing concept for me all along has been the man that “just gets it”. In other words, what the fuck am I supposed to just get? What he just gets at the deepest levels of his psyche is HE IS PRIZE and he NEED NOT QUALIFY HIMSELF TO ANYONE. A covert contract or expectation on the success or failure of my marriage is anathema to “just getting it”. I modified my MAP accordingly in the days following as described in this week’s OYS.

The change in mental model has had a profound effect on my frame. My OI, which has been tested on both sex and in terms of being “that woman I fell for”, has been effortless since. My mental state has been calm and mission focused with zero interruption of this frame. My best description is that I see things happen rather than feeling them happen.

Two weeks ago, the wife started a temporary assignment in one of her company’s contractor-processing facilities taking her from an office environment filled with people (mostly women) I know to a new environment filled with a bunch of blue-collar rednecks. Back in my BP days this would have sent me into mate guarding orbit. I would have been calling her for a bunch for bullshit reasons, been waiting for to get home from work so I could “interview” her, and generally freaking out over Chad. I would try to be surreptitious; but I know now she saw through this facade and what she saw was very unattractive. On the other hand, I think women take a little, albeit disgusted, satisfaction from so obviously taming a man. Nothing of the kind happened this time. I gave zero fucks, made zero calls, and although she was getting home much later I was still not there because I was out doing my thing. While I no longer fantasize about divorce, if she wants to hand it to me on a silver platter I will laugh all the way to the pussy bank with my kids firmly in tow.

Last week, I went to high-school sport parents meeting. Lots of (now) typical IOI in meeting. We are leaving school and run into a guy my wife knows and two random MILFs. One of the MILFs opens me, we start talking going from one subject to another. One of the MILFs touches my arm, I start countdown in head, and 4 seconds later the other MILF touches other arm. Wife's conversation runs out, I am still going. She comes over and wraps her arm around mine; and ask if I am ready to go. Sure...say bye to MILFS. In the van, she ask how I know those women. I said I did not know them, but just met them. She said "sure did seem like they knew you". I said "yeah, I know, that happens a lot now". The look on her face was fucking priceless. I have been lightly gaming women in our social circles and women I randomly meet, and it has consistently had the expected positive effect on her demeanor. However, this was the first time she has witnessed random women hitting on me. I woke up that night to find her crawling on top of me. With the exception of a 4-day shark attack last Saturday-Tuesday, she has been on the dick every day since. Add in a little pool party dread-boost on Wednesday for good measure.

My point in this background is that although I have been laying on the dread consistently for many months now; it has only been several weeks since my mental state has been psychologically congruent with the dread. We like to “fake it until you make it” around these parts, but understand this faking it is for you and your confidence, not her. She likely sees through your faking because she is a highly evolved frame detector, a Tingle-o-meter if you will. The fact that she goes along with your charade only indicates she is not a complete cunt and/or has some respect for you.

Wife Dreads me.........

Ms. Persaeus drove my jacked diesel truck to work on Friday because SIL and I took her van to pick up the boy from summer camp. She had to go back to main office; and apparently rolled into the contractor parking lot right as a bunch of operators and a young Chad engineer (Chadgineer) were coming back from lunch. She has mentioned Chadgineer a few times since starting this assignment in typical woman-speak (he’s so smart, he’s so nice, etc.): Translation – he’s hawt and making me tingle.

We are watching the Olympics, she starts to talk, and so I mute the TV

Wife: blah...blah...essentially setting up the interaction with Chadgineer

Me: yeah

Wife: I jumped out of your truck and all these guys and Chadgineer came over and asked me “what is such a little girl doing in such a big truck”

Me: really

Wife: I told them it was my husband’s truck

Me: yep

Wife: Chadgineer really liked your truck. He had to look at the engine and blah blah about Chad loving my truck.

Me: it’s a nice truck for sure

Wife: he asked me to take him for a drive in your truck, but I told him I was too busy

Me: really

Wife: so what do you think about that? (at this point her body language is showing annoyance at my lack of reaction….should mention the whole time I am eating a can of Reddi-Whip with a spoon)

Me: tell Chadgineer if he will take you lock, stock, and barrel; I will throw in the truck

Wife: you’re an Asshole….and grabs Reddi-Whip can out of my hand

Me: yep…and turns volume back up on TV

Her: pouting and eating Reddi-Whip

This was my first “you’re an Asshole”; and I was so proud in that moment. We chill out some more like nothing happened. I go to pool for a couple hours and come back to get ready for our movie. On our way out the door, she bends over to pick her purse up off the floor. I run over, grab her hips, give her a couple dry humps, and then slap her. She just looks back and with a smile says “you’re so bad”....“yes I am”. She doesn’t even remember 9 months ago when I started slapping her ass in the kitchen and she came completely unglued telling me I should never do that again.

I Dread wife........

Went to clothing store to pick up some thing for a hiking trip we are taking next week. We each have a couple items; and are walking towards the dressing rooms (the kind with a gal that “checks you in”). These rooms have these cool mirror/light setup that I swear adds a couple points to your SMV. Approaching, I ask her if she would like to join me so we can evaluate the fit of each other’s clothes. She declines “I don’t think so buddy”, me “your loss”.

We go in, separately, and of course I am out way before her. Sitting there, a hot MILF walks up with her teenage daughter. We give each other a good eye fucking as she approaches.
Teenage daughter goes into dressing room. I am seated-waiting, and she walks over and says “hi”. Turns out she just moved back to area; and her daughter is same age as mine. I am on about my 3rd elderly ramble topic when wife comes out, comes over, and says “hello” to the woman. It’s the “who the hell are you” kind of hello. I say to MILF, “I am sorry, I did not get your name yet”, MILF answers, and I introduce my wife and tell wife how MILF’s daughter is going to ‘our’ high school. MILF seems a little surprised at WIFE since I had just been gaming her; and I had my ring-hand covered with garments.

We checkout and head over to local GNC (health/nutrition food store). Oh look who’s working the GNC, it’s the 28yo HB8 from BJJ that has been really flirty with me the last several months. She doesn’t disappoint and is openly flirting with me while we discuss the merits of product, catch up on BJJ gossip (I have not been to BJJ for 2 weeks due to surgery), the whole time she is intermittently touching my arms and shoulders. Wife interviews me about BJJ babe on way to movie.

We go into movie a little late missing previews, and it was about 1/3 full. As were watching the movie, she just keeps getting closer to the point where she has her hand in my lap, I have my arm around her shoulder, and we are watching cheek to cheek. About half-way through movie, I thought to myself “what would she do if I started making out with her right here”. You know we are both 47yo, been together 25+ years; and I am pretty sure I have not made out with a girl in a movie theater since high school. I said fuck it, and moved in. We made out for the rest of the movie like two horny teenagers, she is rubbing my dick through my shorts, and I am alternating between grabbing her tits and rubbing her clit. We gave zero fucks that there were people around.

Needless to say, when we got home I picked her up and carried her to bed. This coming week is pre-ovulation week......should be exciting. Self-improvement and RP to the grave.

TDLR: Dread your wife with complete psychological and physical (i.e. be jacked) congruence; and she will submit.
It's been many months, maybe a year since my wife said no to sex. Rarely has she been fucking me out of "obligation". As last night proves, nothing is permanent. A man can never relax, no matter how tempting.

She insisted on a back massage first. Complained she was tired. I granted the massage but let my hands roam and then she would pull away and tell me she needed more back rub. When she did lie on her back she had a nasty look on her face as she really was more interested in herself then pleasing me.

So I rolled over, put my clothes on, and told her I changed my mind and didn't want to have sex with her after all.

She lit into me "I'm tired (yea right), I didn't go to gym like YOU did, I needed more foreplay and when you can't have what you want when you want it and get so ANGRY..."

Side note----I frequently am shit tested and am accused of being angry when I know I'm ice cold and in frame. Or when I put my foot down then I am told I am "arguing". Both cases are untrue. My wife hamsters her inability to "get what she wants" with me being an MAD and ARGUMENTATIVE.

Truth is we haven't had an actual argument in months. I've also been much more on the indifferent side than upset/angry. I see these accusations as a provocation. She wants me to lose temper so she has "something to work with".

anyway back to last night..

I told her I wasn't angry at all. Said "your not turning me on. I don't want to have sex with you. Maybe some other time"

Within two minutes of her watching tv and waiting for me to say or do something (I flipped open laptop to espn.com) she asked if we "could cuddle".

Said sure. I matched her new disposition with a cheery, happy attitude of my own. Then I ripped off her PJs and fucked her hard for ten mins. ZERO foreplay She was moaning and running hands all over me. Best sex in a month.

Don't ever whine, beg, plead, argue for sex
Use red pill to get out of a dead bedroom

by mancozbi | July 25, 2017 | Link

I had been following a certain subreddit that deals with dead bedrooms (if you don't know what I'm talking about don't bother looking for it - it's too depressing). There is an attitude that prevails there: if you're in a dead bedroom, then the only way out, is "out" (aka divorce)! It's not bad advice because if the sex is not good now, will it improve in the near or distant future? Probably not.

Take a red pill and things will change even in the deadest of dead bedrooms. If you love your low libido SO and don't want to give her and your family up then try this.

TL;DR: you need to man up, stop whining. Yes, it's that sort of advice. It's not her fault you're not having sex, it's your fault - 100% mea culpa. The mess you are in now is not her doing, it's yours. If it's your fault then you can change.

Mrs LL SO lays down the law, she makes all those silly rules. Mrs Cozbi used to have sex with me infrequently, only during the day, in total darkness, no kids around (like when are we ever at home during the day with no kids around), only a certain type of sexual contact etc. Other women have other "marvellous" rules (like no sex until the dishes are washed and dried). I have pushed us out of this.

Remember this, know this: most women want to be sexually submissive - they want the man (that's you) to be dominant. Do you see the problem here? To me it's glaring, obvious. You've let Mrs LL SO be the legislature and the police officer, she sets the rules and enforces them because she controls the sex - but, she really wants to be submissive and she wants you, her man, to be dominant. It's contradictory and confusing. What she really, really wants is for you to "take charge", to be dominant, and to do that YOU HAVE TO BREAK HER RULES. The more you keep her rules, the weaker you are, and the less dominant you are, and the less she's attracted to you.

I was in a similar situation and got out of it. There is no more daytime, total darkness sex. My rule is that I want to see my woman. She said: "I can't do that. No darkness? No sex!" I said: "OK :) no sex"! We now have sex with the lights on and not just at a certain time of day. She said no "oral sex", I said "put it in your mouth", eventually she did it, now she asks if I want it, (yes, she asks to do it). You know what, Mrs Cozbi complains but she respects me now and she is enjoying sex much more.

When she says "I'll have sex with you if you xyz" you must be tough as nails and say "No" to her. Don't be arrogant, be assertive. Stand your ground, gently. She's a woman, you love her and you're not a gangster or a rapist. At all times you have to be ready to go to monkmode, denying yourself sex is not impossible. Being self-confident and assertive against her shitty behaviour makes you more dominant and therefore more sexually attractive. If a woman finds you sexually attractive she'll want to sleep with you. If you're submissive then you're weak and she's not going to respect you and will not sleep with you, and if you're in a LTR then that's a dead bedroom.
The worst is choreplay - never, ever, let her set conditions, or payment, for sex! This is the weakest. Sex is just for sex. You give her your body and she gives you hers. That's how it works. Anything else is asking for trouble.

In my next post I will discuss 10 things I did to improve my sexual relationship with my wife.
I am reading "The Complete Marriage Counselor" from 2009 which interviews America's "top" marriage counselors from across the spectrum about common marital problems. Fortunately, they include the erstwhile and one of the original manosphere icons Warren Farrell (The Myth of Male Privilege) and some other males but at least 80% of the answers were from females or worse.

The first thing I noticed as I read this with a Red Pill lens was the amazing and obvious GENDERED differences in the therapists approach to the problems.

Boys and girls are actually different fellows. Who knew?

The advice they give is hilariously predictable and often pedantic and the chapters are organized by "common marital problems."

These PROMINENT MARRIAGE COUNSELORS provide 3-4 page short answers to the specific problems in marriage and I will give you the main point of their responses.

Chapter 1: Chore Wars:

Female- 1: Come up with a list as a couple of what needs to be done and divide it up. List first what you are willing to do and not willing to do. Then in respectful manner discuss your concerns with the therapist.

Female 2: Get the woman to understand the value of male chores such as starting the car and shoveling the snow. Women do things every day but men contribute differently. Chores disparity is perception not reality.

Female 3: Let the woman explain how it makes her feel when the husband neglects to do his share of the housework.

Male 1: Tell your husband you will be in be naked in bed waiting for him when he finishes loading the dishwasher. (LOL)

Male 2: (Warren Farell): If a woman shows true gratitude by her tone and belief a man can be induced to do anything for her.

Female 4: (the author of the book): The dude is right. "Give the lug what he craves (gratitude and sex) in order to get him to do what he should be doing anyway."

BPP: ALL of these therapists from radical feminists to (somewhat) conservative Red Pill men agree that men crave admiration and gratitude (aka "respect) from women even more than sex. None openly make the connection that a woman who has the quality of being grateful to her husband is also willing to sex him up at any time. Could these things be connected?

Chapter 2: Money Fights

Female 1: Make a list about what you disagree on and talk and talk and talk and talk Female 2: Make sure you are unstressed. Then talk and talk and talk and talk...

Female 3: Take care of the feelings before finances. Forge a common goal to get out of your debt problems. Talk and talk about your problems.

Male 1: Set boundaries on spending.

Female 3: Talk about control problems and talk about a budget and talk about making good spending decisions.

Female 4 (the book author): The dude’s spending cap idea makes the most sense.

Male 2: Money is the number 1 cause of divorce because it is about power and freedom (he missed the BIG one = ATTRACTION). So talk and talk and talk about your MOMMY AND DADDY’S spending habits and how you grew up.

Male 3: Money is the center of an octopus with many tentacles like male ego and value. So talk and talk about your values to solve money problems.

Female #4: (book author): The dude is right. It’s all about early childhood experiences with money.

BPP’s take: Notice that NONE of the therapists consider anything practical beyond making lists and budgets. We say Acta non Verba- ACTIONS NOT WORDS- but I don’t know the Latin for "ignore the problem but be sure to stand around talking about the problem." Obviously somebody needs to make more money and/or somebody needs to spend less. Vacations need to be cancelled and purchases reconsidered but they want to encourage the wife to talk about how it feels being married to a man who doesn’t earn enough money. Yah, that works.

Chapter 3: Sex

Female #1: Why does the husband want to fuck his wife? If it is just for his own gratification that’s a problem. Husband needs to keep asking his wife “what can I do to make you feel safe” (I just puked in my mouth).

Female #2: Wife should lower her barriers and husband needs to learn how to “get her interested.” Let her know he is patient but will revisit the topic from time to time and give the wife the option of suggesting something different (aka a sad, passionless blowjob).

Female #3: (Book author): Don’t pressure wife for sex and pay fervent attention to the wife’s sexual pleasure. Man needs to get a clue and pay attention for when the wife might be receptive. Also, differing sex drives suggest a “disease” in the relationship. Also, if he won’t fuck her it’s probably weight related (LOL) or he is gay (LMFAO) and if she won’t fuck him it is because she never wanted to fuck him. Ouch! Therapists Saving The Best.

Husband/Wife Counselor Team: The important thing is what sexuality represents. Being connected and intimate. It is a unique bond and everybody should make an effort.

Male #1: Sex is important to men. She would want to fuck him if they were emotionally connected so work on issues of insecurity and self-esteem.

BPP: Holy Matrimonials batman. I am now 100% sure that MRP is MUCH BETTTER than marriage counseling. This Pablum has only a little to offer and is more damaging than doing nothing. MRP is about ACTION and solutions. Most of this is an outrage. There are some helpful hints buried in the text on Tantric Sex and “Switching It Up” and watching porn together and so on but there is a reason why counseling is the direct path to divorce. This is the advice these counselors are giving! Most of it would be hilarious were it not so damaging.

Chapter 4: Whelping and Rearing: Kids

Female #1: Celebrate the differences in parenting styles and don’t be afraid to argue in front of the kids.

Female #2: Celebrate the differences in parenting styles and try to understand your partners perspective.

Female #3: (book author): Arguing in front of the kids robs them of their childhood. Why not just tell them about Santa Clause (WTF?)

Female #4: When kids interfere with sex life just plan date nights.

Female #5: (Esther Perell- author of Mating in Captivity): Be willful and inventive about maintaining sex after kids.

Female #6 (book author): Plan sex dates and take alone time.

Female #7: Don’t argue in front of kids.

Male ?? #1: The only thing that matters is the child’s welfare. Protect them from any arguing. Use inside voices....

Female #8: Men need to not be a whiny bitch when there are kids to care for. It’s not about him.

Male #2: Women are not attracted to whiny bitches.

Male #3: Man needs to understand the biological and psychological changes of pregnancy on the human female.

Female #9: These men suck. Husband doesn’t just need to understand- he needs to do 50% of the child care and chores cuz the baby is half his (until it isn’t and the wife takes it and leaves- then it is HER baby).
BPP’s take: OK, I am done. There is little of help here but I thought it was interesting to see in action what we always advise against.

TLDR: Don’t go to marriage counseling.
[FR] - What the Fuck Have I Gotten Myself Into?
Learning how to live a good life.

by Tyred_Biggums | April 8, 2020 | Link

Here was my first ever post titled “What the Fuck Have I Gotten Myself Into” to askMRP which I was such a faggot I deleted. Don't delete shit people - you'll regret it and that was a pain in the ass to find on removeddit. Comments are here

So what did I get myself into?

- A journey which continues that has improved EVERY ASPECT of my life in profound and unimaginable ways
- A new worldview where things outside my control rarely bother me, and if they do – I can quickly work through them back to a calm mental state
- The ability to go after what I want and judge myself based on my values and ideals – no one else’s
- Seeing a shitty marriage, initially trying to ‘fix’ it and then realizing what I wanted would not be possible and burning it down a few months ago
- Several periods of depression, questioning what the fuck I was doing, self-pity, failures, looking for external validation. For every two steps forwards there was a step back and sometimes it was 5 steps back.
- The determination to keep moving the fuck forward. Day by day.

From that original post /u/SteelSharpensSteel distilled the entire process into a few sentences (because he's a fucking voodoo witch doctor at this shit):

“You want to know what you can do? Own your shit. Make slow, positive incremental changes in your life. Learn the tools. Shut the fuck up. Forgive yourself for making mistakes along the way.

Become better.”

Where am I now?

I’m in the process of divorce. It’s not been the ideal circumstances with COVID, but things are moving on. I’m in the best headspace of my life – true OI and DNGAF. I’ve seen two girls in the past 3 days. One I met her Monday and fucked her last night and this morning multiple times including in her ass. This is what is possible when you stop being a faggot. If I went back and told myself this 18 months ago, I would have bet against myself with 1,000,000:1 odds.

I have seen true desire from women. I will never settle for less.

My career continues to improve, financially I have a game plan post divorce to rebuild wealth. I am in an insanely calm mental state constantly. I simply enjoy life while I continue the small incremental improvement to make myself even better.
How

Pretty simple program here... I lifted, (attempted to) STFU, read the sidebar, reread the sidebar, and posted in OYS every single week for over 15 months without fail. Along the way I gained insights (and yes being called a faggot is an insight) and a serendipitous Morpheus IRL.

I got angry, I rambo’d hard, I lost frame multiple times. I put up with disrespect and physical assault from the STBX. I saw (and still see) attempts to turn my kids against me. But I weathered it all. There were certainly things I would do differently - not go Rambo, not tell my STBX of my divorce plans, not have talked so fucking much (STFU people). I would have listened to the warnings and vets who told me all this shit I had a huge ego and “thought I knew better”. I didn’t - and you reading this don’t either.

So to boil it down:

1. Lift - now, today, don’t wait (ok if the gym is closed due to COVID then body weight) but do something
2. Shut the fuck up - seriously, this was such a weak point for me and the source for a lot of failures
3. Realize you’ll get angry and get an outlet for it - I took up Muay Thai and got it out in the Iron Temple. I still was angry and fucked up talking about it (see #2)
4. Read read read - Read the sidebar, take your time, highlight, re-read, do any exercises in the books, really absorb the material
5. Practice - you can’t just read, you have to practice and make those small incremental improvements. Don’t sit in an Ivory Tower reading all day - use the knowledge you have
6. Realize that your wife (or LTR or g/f) is not the only woman out there - Keep going and no matter what happens YOU will be fine
7. Listen to the vets and drop the ego and pretense. They see you bullshitting yourself or doing stupid shit - and there’s a good chance it’s because they did it themselves
8. Stop hiding your true self - go after what the fuck you want relentlessly
9. Never allow disrespect to continue in your relationship, set a boundary and enforce it even if it means the relationship is dead
10. Do not let anyone tell you who you are and how to act. Be your own judge.
Just wanted to say thanks for all the ideas and support here.

Although I haven't participated, I have been reading this sub religiously for months, but "unplugging" by my own volition (without knowing what it was) for about a year and a half. Started with reading Athol Kay. No point in spilling the whole tale, I got comfortable and fucked up just like the rest of you guys. Wanted to share this exchange as it may be motivating. Sure straightened me out.

Anyways, a few months ago, when I was sliding back into my old ways, wife tells me that when I was at my beta worst, she complained to her doctor about feeling a low sex drive, thinking it was her pill or something. Doctor responded: "That's impossible, you must be just with the wrong man."

I felt punched in the gut when I heard it but really don't blame my wife for sharing that info, since at that time I was really on a whiny retrograde slide due to an event (admittedly major) I had no control over and caused me to completely loose all frame and sense of stoicism. Atomic shit test? Maybe, but I deserved it.

In short: Don't be the wrong man. Doctor's orders.

Edit: doctor is woman
I wrote this as a guest post on TheDarkTriadMan.com back in February, in light of the recent attacks, I felt it was necessary to get it out into the community.

Be the master of your own death.

This was the third & final post of my 3 part guest post series.

In the first, Words of War I shared the beginning of www.TheFamilyAlpha.com and exposed the battle which is being waged over the minds of men.

In the second essay How to Roar Primal Fury of Family Honor in the Dark World we covered how honor, primality and lineage intersect, while calling our brethren to find their shields bearing their family crests and to raise their banners in preparation for battle.

In this essay we discuss what happens when the meat meets the meat: raw destructive physical violence.

At this point in the series you should see the battlefield with the corpses of your slain brethren. You should hear the call from those who actively resist the powers targeting masculinity, choosing to accept harassment and targeting for physical attack over submission and conformity.

It is now time for you to feel that primal rage which exists in every man. That immense pressure which instantly builds inside every muscle fiber when you are called upon to deliver destruction to the life of another.

It is not a matter of if your masculine aggression, strength, and power will be called upon, but rather when.

Mental preparation for imminent violence.

In our day and age it is common for men to daydream about what they would do if placed in a life or death situation. We have movies, television shows and video games which place us in the hot seat where we’re watching the action unfold and critiquing the decisions made by the individual while playing the “If that was me, I would” game.

Men dream of the defining moment where:

- They’re the sniper who has to make the shot...
They’re the boxer who has to win the fight...

They’re the soldier who has to rise while all others fall...

They’re the hero...

They look upon these forms of entertainment and blur them with real life.

You see, modern society in the West has made men so comfortable that they no longer fear physical violence. Most have been so far removed from any dangerous environment that now the most minor of inconveniences is cause for unbearable strife and anguish.

These men who believe that they could “take out the bad guy” are perturbed when they have to ask someone to get out of their way when walking around a store.

Most men would rather go the long way vice saying, “Excuse me, could I slide by you?” because their mind is conditioned to avoid all possible confrontation.

It is here that we shall begin the preparation for battle.

If you look at the most highly trained warriors in our society, you’ll find that they are nothing more than men who have trained their bodies for combat and that they’re more in tune with their surroundings than most.

The fastest way to win a battle is to avoid it.

While it sounds like you’d need a superpower, step back and understand what it is I’m saying and how avoidance is the best tactic.

You know when things start heating up in groups; very rarely do fights occur out of the blue. Usually there is a period of escalation which then boils over to the point where the smallest spark can ignite the entire place.

Watch for the signs.

Train your mind to read body language, to hear what people mean versus what they’re saying, and most importantly keep your head on a swivel. Train yourself to find exits, to keep a tally of the type of people who are around you, and immediate action items.

An immediate action item is one of the games I play with my wife and kids.

Remember, you are responsible for yourself as well as the lives whom you are leading.

Their training and preparation is your responsibility.

The game goes like this:
My wife and I are on a date. Not every time, but randomly while we’re out, I’ll say: “All right, the kitchen caught on fire and flames are blowing out the doors and people are panicking. What do we do?”

If she takes more than two seconds to respond I’ll intensify the questioning to get her mind to make decisions in a stressful environment, which more accurately simulates how the mind works when shit really does hit the fan.

Recently I asked her what she would do if there were protesters blocking the street.

Her immediate response was see them and turn around before getting too close

Good girl.

I then changed the game and told her she couldn’t turn around and they were close.

She said she’d lock the doors.

Dead.

I then went on to explain to her what could happen if she allowed them to swarm her Jeep.

Now she knows to keep the wheels moving. And while she may slow down, she stays above a speed which would knock people to the ground and keep them from have a chance at grabbing any handles.

This sounds crazy, but this is the reality in which we live.

And for all of those who think I’m fucked up for training my wife, get off your fucking high horse and read about the man who did stop.

My wife and kids have a better chance to live because I’ve trained them to.

My mind is capable of making the decision to commit to the act. And win, lose, or draw I will have not suffered from hesitation. I am always ready for a fight. Even when I’m at home and have friends over, there’s a part of my mind which says, what would you do if someone barged into the house right now with a gun?

The same should go for the men reading this.

You have to shift your mindset to observation mode. You need to be aware that violence is imminent and unforgiving. It does not discriminate.

Doesn’t matter if you’re out on a date with your family. Evil has no soul, and the difference between your family walking away unscathed – or your wife and children being beaten to death – is your mental fortitude and ability to avoid the fight or fully commit to it.

The problem men face is the fact that they are, mentally, living in an entirely different realm in which their physical body exists.
Physical preparation for imminent violence.

You must remain physically fit to the grave. This is not purely for aesthetic purposes, but rather for survival.

As a man you must be physically able to run, lift, climb, fight, push, pull, jump, and do so without injury or immediate fatigue.

The adrenaline a man will experience if he gets into a street fight will be short lived. Few are aware how fast the body tires when locked in combat.

You must prepare for this. You’re being warned right here and now that your very survival may come down to whether you are able to outlast your opponent’s stamina.

When you read of Ivan’s dark world, do you not understand that this is the world in which we all live?

If you’d like to argue, I advise you Google Saffie Rose Roussos along with the other 22 names who never left the concert they were attending. A concert primarily filled with teenage girls that was specifically targeted.

When you read his daily posts discussing how he and Mr. Swift will do battle against gravity via the iron, do you not also see how they incorporate combat fitness? You must not only make your body strong, you must also make it capable.

Train with weapons, train hand to hand combat, train when fatigued from sprints to replicate a high-stress scenario. Train. Train. TRAIN.

The only way to be confident in your abilities is to be aware of your abilities. The only way to know how much your body can take is to push it past that threshold and when you fall hard onto your face you discover where that line can be found.

Test your body.

Push your body and your mind past that comfort zone because when the times comes for utter destruction, you will not be comfortable, but you will be capable.

Look at yourself right now. If you have a “DadBod” or cannot remember the last time you participated in some physical exercise, understand that you are a liability and your family is at risk entirely because of your complacency.

Your decision to be comfortable is being placed higher than the safety of your wife and children.

You need to understand the severity of your actions. You must also be aware of the example you are setting for those around you.
Your wife, sons, and daughters will look to you as the man who shapes their vision of what life is.

Your inability to understand the reality of our world is setting them up for failure. It’s possibly setting them up for death.

When our children face the same foe, in the same environment, and my child takes the immediate action as he’d envisioned while yours hesitates... I will not look back with regret on the days I was sore and tired from preparation for violence.

While you watch your child lowered into the ground, you’ll look back to this moment and wish you’d listened.

These are brutal words to write and for some they’ll be even more difficult to read.

But we exist in a dark world. one filled with bamboo cages and gardens.

Never forget this.

You can read the entire post at:
https://darktriadman.com/2017/02/17/how-to-prepare-for-imminent-violence/

Follow on Twitter https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha

Side Note

This is a product of the Men of March campaign. For those who participated, this is the entire program, including the days I missed in the original campaign.

During that campaign the totals were 238,500 pushups and 312lbs lost.

Those are the tangibles.

What you don’t see in those numbers are the intangibles

You don’t see that those men are still walking around with their shoulders back. They have a newfound sense of purpose and their wives and kids are now able to fill their own roles which allows her to be more feminine and their sons and daughters have better examples as to how men and women should interact with one another.

Fathers are lifting with their sons

Husband and wife are having sex again

The home has filled with laughter when before the children were raised by screens while the father walked on egg shells and the mother was filled with resentment.
That’s what this program did for hundreds of men.

I’ve received several emails from guys letting me know that they’ve purchased the book and are all starting on the last day of May (the program has to start on a Wednesday).

There is going to be a whole new group of men following the book together working towards the common goal of reclaiming their sense of self.

If you are the type of guy who enjoys the ‘tribe mentality’ which comes with collectively marching towards a goal with others, check out the program.

If you think this is for you, order the book and reach out to others to ensure you remain accountable to your self. I’m always available as my Twitter, email, and blog are open to all. There are too few places where men can be men, this program is not like any others you’ve ever participated in, those who completed Men of March can attest, this will test your willpower and answer the question, are you worthy of the life you feel you deserve.

It’s 31 days of raw self-assessment & objective observation as well as daily action.

Is reclaiming the rest of your life worth 31 Days?
Man Up
by TheFamilyAlpha | June 16, 2016 | Link

I was recently chastised by a ‘father’ for telling my boy to be a man. More specifically I said he needed to, Suck it up – Man up and try harder next time.. My boy got upset because he was thrown out at first, the kid is a solid ball player and this is the first time he was thrown out.

As he walked back to the dugout I saw the chin quiver and his eyes were fucking furious & sad. I said what I said and smacked the top of his helmet and let it go. The kid is 6 and disappointed - whatever I know him and I know the 'tough love' is what he needed, not some pep talk or anything else.

I was enraged when this guy approached me saying this crazy weaksauce shit, I was a mix of stupefied at how gay it sounded and mad at how weak it was and that this mindset exists in many guys out there.

Here is a piece of advice for you all - Man the Fuck up.

We need to, collectively, accept our position in the animal kingdom. We are men - we have the hard labor, burden of performance, and are disposable...so fucking be it. Own that shit, make it work for you.

Don't be like the ‘dad’ who thinks, ‘Boys should not have any stereotypical expectations on them.” – OK faggot.

We are men, yet I’m realizing that I hear ‘Man Up’ less and less frequently both here and in real life.

The world is hard? Man the fuck up – take the gift of masculinity that nature gave you and develop it. That is what TRP and MRP helps you with - it helps you develop the ability to man up.

MRP and TRP provide you with the mental resources and education to take a different approach, view things from a different perspective, and Man Up.

Some ways you can do this right now.

Stop complaining about what ever problem you have going on. I do not care if:

- your wife is a bitch
- kids don’t listen
• work doesn’t recognize you

• You’re injured

• Sex life sucks

• The news is pushing the feminine imperative

• Etc. Etc. Etc.

Man the fuck up, do something about the problem and stop thinking you need to have your own special voice in this life. I don’t complain to my woman, I don’t cry to her about how sore I am, I don’t let her know how retarded the people at my work are, I (and a lot of the masculine men on this sub) do not post about how unfair the world is. We just fucking accept it and find solutions to our problems – coming here to share notes or get opinions on specific actions/ideas is how we improve.

Start owning your masculine nature, accept that ‘Man Up’ means put your fucking mind to work on doing better – raising the standard. My son could have come to me and I could have coddled him and said, ‘Hey buddy, it’s ok’ but I didn’t, because it wasn’t OK – he was pissed and that’s ok.

Sometimes things don’t fall our way, that’s no reason to get upset and feel bad about yourself because while you are sitting their moping, the world is moving on.

Let it go, whatever ‘it’ is, let it go and fucking move forward.

Look at where it is you want to be in this life and align your actions to get you there. Don’t concern yourself with the ‘fluff’ that is specifically designed to get in your way.

I was asked about women being included in the draft - my answer - I don't care. It has nothing to do with me or my goals.

I see guys getting worked up over the divorce payments of celebrities - let it go man, don't let that shit take up space in your head - space that could be used for understanding sexual strategy or physical fitness.

The mind is open for rent, are you letting superfluous shit rent space in there or are you being selective with the tenants of your brain?

If I were you, I'd start thinking and acting like a man and expecting that of others. I would most certainly expect certain things from sons and brothers that I would not expect from sisters or daughters.

Man up - do the hard right thing, own your shit, and make your life about you and those you are responsible to. Find comfort in the discomfort and stop wishing it were easier.

EDIT

Stone provided me with an awesome post HERE from the Red Pill Room.

Do not confuse 'Man Up' used here with the shaming language that others will use to get you to do something.

Man Up, in this context means grit your teeth, accept your failure, and use it to fuel your future growth and performance. As it's worded in the linked post, "When men tell other men to “Man Up” (usually) they are trying to improve the condition of the other man."

Others may try to shame you saying Real men don't care about N count - FUCK THAT and FUCK THEM a real man does as he pleases as he follows his mission in life and lives within his own Frame.
Incels
by Rollo-Tomassi | June 5, 2018 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2018/06/04/incels/

Excerpt:

So what’s different now? Well, to start, we have a generation of lost boys who’ve been acculturated to think that even asking a girl out is a form of sexual misconduct. The Village has raised boys as if they’re defective girls, devoid of any of the masculine discipline necessary to teach these young men how to cope with real rejection from a girl, how to deal with defeat or how to come back stronger as a result. As we’ve feminized these boys so to have we embedded the same feminine victimhood narrative that women rely on into their collective psyche. Except these boys are still beholden to the old social contract that women believe incumbent upon men. This puts these boy-men into a very precarious position: they are educated like defective girls and as such adopt the same frail sensibilities and are subject to the same entitlement narrative as most women are, but they are also male and therefore are expected to suck it up, take it on the chin and carry on. They are told to express their feelings and in the next moment are told to check their male privilege.

Most of the lost boys generation are not ready for the disillusionment that the Red Pill brings to them, but it’s not the manosphere that’s opening their eyes so much as they are having it thrust in front of them by a communication age steeped in the Feminine Imperative. Today, Red Pill truths are harder and harder to get away from as Open Hypergamy and all of the unflattering truths about the female nature are triumphantly lauded by women themselves. Every swipe left on Tinder is one more confirmation of exactly the harsh truths that push Incels to their limit.

Of every article I’ve read on Incels since the Toronto killings not one author has analyzed the problem correctly, but also none have any actionable idea about how to solve the problem of Incels snapping. There are no longer the same outlets that ‘losers’ had back in my day to channel that sexual frustration to more productive ends. Many a frustrated high school boy became his generation’s iconic artist or musician. I think it’s the height of irony that Mark Zuckerberg essentially created Facebook to stalk his ex girlfriend. There are no longer the creative ways to deal with the discontent that comes from sexual rejection. Some will say to me there are, it’s just these guys are too unmotivated to apply themselves. And while that may be true, there are much easier outlets that further stunt that boys development. Rather than redirecting that sexual angst to something creative, it’s much easier to lose themselves in online porn or immersive escapisms facilitated by this age’s technology.

Or they can seek out a forum of similarly disaffected young men and commiserate about the truth of a world that has no place for them. I read that Dr. Jordan Peterson suggested that a social order based on ‘enforced monogamy’ might be a cure for Incels. I get what he was trying to say, but it’s just one more flippanat redirection away from the real causes of this rise in Incels. I can remember reading a post that Roissy had made about a knife wielding man in China who had gone to a day care center to specifically kill women and children. As horrifying as that is what had prompted the guy was the understanding that he’d essentially been selected out of the reproductive game because there was a huge imbalance in the ratio of men to women in China as a result of their one-child policy for so long. Roissy went on to suggest that as more and more men are disaffected by a feminine-primary social order, one that bases all its legislation and social doctrine on optimizing Hypergamy, the men disenfranchised by it will become either more violent (in their effort or angst to reproduce) or more suicidal – which we also see in men killing themselves at 5 times the rate of women.

Incels are the canary in the coal mine that is a gynocentric social order. They are what results when a society prioritizes and incentivizes Alpha Fucks (enthusiastic consent) while Beta Bucks is more or less assured by direct and indirect resource transfer to women. When 80%+ of men are evaluated as ‘unattractive’ to women fed on a steady diet of ego inflating social media, you get Incels. I made a case for this in Dangerous Times, but Incels are a byproduct of a feminine-primary form of polyandry. Incels are a result of shifting from a social contract based on marriage to one based on a sustained child support. The old social order was founded on giving a guy a decent shot at marriage and reproduction by way of being a good provider, this contract is gone today. When a woman’s primary incentive is no longer provisioning all that’s left is a socio-sexual contract based on the most available Alpha seed to meet a need that a woman cannot provide for herself.
[FR] Training Day
by PillUpAss | November 22, 2019 | Link

A FR inspired by u/HornsOfApathy's Depressed and Anxious Wives series:

For my whole life, I've given up my power in sex. The women I have been with were always giving me an orgasm, every time, every encounter. That was my sole focus and mentality during those times: taking from the woman. I might give them orgasms too, but it was only validation-seeking and covert contracts for reciprocation. Society supports this supplanting, powerless view for men and, even if a man has high SMV and may have practiced RP for years, it's easy to see how he can remain stuck in this mentality in regards to his sexuality.

Recently, I've been rethinking my default mentality. After a lot of reflection, I decided to change my mindset on this and instead view every interaction with women (and really people in general) as a gift. That's the true meaning behind "be the prize." My sexuality is a gift, my time is a gift, my presence, knowledge, wit, even my gaze and words are gifts.

I'm training myself to embody this mindset, and by proxy those around me are being trained on how they fit into it. Surely such a seismic shift in mentality will require retraining of my wife to receive my gifts instead of me taking from her. After 16 years of shitty, selfish sex with me, this is going to be a really difficult transition for her to accept and understand for sure.

Allow me to take you back to a recent night...

After the kids go to bed, the wife and I usually spend 30-60 minutes talking about the day, etc. It's usually time I'd rather give to more sexual activities, so this time I mixed it up. While we were talking, I put her hand on my dick. I had her play with it while the conversation continued normally. There was no resistance and it didn't even seem strange to either of us - I just led her to it and she complied.

It created this duality that was new and interesting to our normal routine which started to turn us both on. As she decompressed her stress from the day and I remained the oak, I escalated with her and brought her to orgasm. I wanted to do it and I did it from a place of strength, from a place of giving myself to her. There were no contracts and there was no validation to be gained. I felt in total control and could sense the absence of the normal resistance she usually has to most sexual acts (with me).

When it came time for reciprocation, I told her I'm letting it build up until tomorrow. I told her this firmly and with confidence. "Sounds like a challenge," is what I get back. I love when she's feisty. We proceed to play together for an hour and had lots of fun. I never came because I decided I wasn't going to. You know what? Ejaculating is not required for a satisfying sexual experience, IF you are in control and you are the one giving your sexual energy instead of trying to syphon off your partner's like a faggot.

My wife remained sweet and submissive as she had been all day, happy in her feminine role.
It's a natural state for women around a man who leads them. It's the way things were meant to be. The session ended the same way it started, with a normal conversation as if nothing abnormal happened. That's because, from an evolutionary perspective, there was nothing abnormal about it. What's abnormal, and fatal in an evolutionary sense, is a man bringing needy, validation-seeking energy to sex or any other experience he has.

The real training was tolerating my shit mentality for 16 years; transitioning to the way it should have always been required no training at all.
Women are awesome
by 88Will88 | July 14, 2018 | Link

- Women are totally awesome. In fact one of them gave birth to me and cared for me extremely well until I was old enough to fend for myself.

- Attractive women attract my attention without my volition. I literally have no choice in the matter. My lizard brain reacts automatically to a shapely and symmetrical young woman. All rational thought leaves for a split second until my programming kicks in. I want to fuck them all.

- Women do not have the same vile tendencies as men. Women don’t start wars, they don’t beat people to death, they don’t abduct toddlers to rape and kill, their acts of violence are nearly always ineffectual, they smell better, they are more open and nurturing and they live longer than we do. Yes they have many flaws but in pretty much every way women are far less dangerous than men. Conversely men are overachievers in many fields such as philosophy, physics, science, business and art. They probably excel at these things so they can get laid. Even men’s greatness is inspired by women.

- Every guy in here is only here due to our hardwired desire to fuck women. If you are here to have a circle jerk over all of the many flaws of women then you are just a refugee from the rightfully banned incel sub.

- When a man commits a heinous crime society sentences him to a period in prison. Prison is where they lock you up with other men, in other words THEY DEPRIVE YOU OF THE COMPANY OF WOMEN. Think about that for while and you will have a lightbulb moment

- Third wave feminism is a lie

- TRP is one of the only places in the world which tells you some of the terrible things about women. Really this is just the simple acknowledgement that women are just people too. The fact that you put them on a pedestal in the first place is why you did not see it all along. Women are as adept at psychological warfare and emotional manipulation as men are at violence.

- TRP is partially responsible for the incel movement. Michael’s story is on the sidebar. The manosphere needs to deal with our incel problem. Using the term incel as in insult (I have done it plenty of times) is like kicking a dog when it is down. I regret that I have not previously reached out to our incel brothers and found a way to communicate with them. Hopefully someone better and brighter than me will think of a way to help them.

- If you are still caught in the anger phase or you identify as an incel then you need to do something about that rather than embracing it as it is a dead end. You may as well shake your fist at the thunder or hate female spiders for consuming the males during or after copulation. Just be glad you are not a male spider.

- If you are a junior or a new member then do not be too bold with your opinions and never insult other members. You are here to learn, not teach. I favour a military approach to TRP. If you are a private you do not break the chain of command or disrespect your senior officers. I hope that TRP never becomes a democracy and remains vigilant against incel and blooper degradation.

Here are a few tips in no particular order that an older, rich man who has fucked 100s of very hot women would like to pass on to younger guys who are finding life difficult:

1. Women are awesome, be an awesome man and they will be happy to show you just how awesome they can be
2. Buy assets not liabilities
3. Have children
4. You are not a man unless you have had your heart broken and broken at least one heart yourself
5. Read philosophy
6. Asian girls are the best for more reasons than I can count
7. Take the truth over a comfortable lie every single time
8. Keep your body in shape
9. Question authority and think for yourself
10. Keep it simple
11. Meditate
12. Keep your word
13. Take two steps forward for each step backwards
14. Learn from your mistakes and do not repeat them
15. You know nothing and all truth is relative
16. Do not cultivate too many bad habits

So with these thoughts I bid you all goodbye and good luck. It is time for me to hang up the mask that was 88Will88 but I will put it back on from time to time. This has everything to do with me and nothing to do with the sub. For now it is time for me to take a break and wish you all the very best. I will check my inbox periodically if anyone wants my advice.

✌️❤️
The Art of Learning
by Alpha_Engineer99 | June 26, 2017 | Link

Coming up on my 3 year anniversary of finding this place and wanted to start giving back. Thank you to everyone in this community. Went from begging for sex on my 10 year wedding anniversary & then crying about it to her- lowest point of my life- to her telling me that her “pussy is all mine” on my 11th anniversary as I’m choking her doggie style... Mmslp/mrp completely changed my life around. Thank you. Just read the, “The Art of Learning: An Inner Journey to Optimal Performance” by Josh Waitzkin. Unbelievable book. He is the child chess prodigy the movie “Searching for Bobby Fisher” is all about. In one section, he talks about the difficulty he faced as he was trying to write his first “How To” chess book. Even after being a chess prodigy from an early age to still a high ranked grandmaster today, he had trouble explaining basic chess principles in his book...and it wasn’t even designed to be advanced. The problem, as he explains, was that he internalized 30 years of chess theory and tactics and it was extremely hard to sit down and actually write them all out on paper. He had internalized it all and doesn’t even have to think on that level anymore during a game. He is the game. It’s natural.

I was just cleaning out my office desk at work and found an old “How TO” list I made when I first was learning about the Red Pill from MMSLP from 2 ½ years ago. - and I made a connection with what Josh was explaining in his book. When I first started to learn the sidebar, being engineer by trade and knowing nothing about GAME, I actually carried around an index card in my wallet to remind me how to act when I got home from work. I was extremely Beta in a AAAAF marriage. No clue. Before entering the front door, I would read over it: 1) 10-sec kiss, 2) If I see her in the hallway, pin her against wall for a kiss and move on, 3) Ass slap in kitchen if the positioning is right, 4) Try to flirt with her, 5) If she starts complaining about the towel I left on the bathroom floor this morning, just FOG her to see if it works... 5) pick her up like a child and carry her to the sofa and then move on.. etc.. pathetic, I know. Looking back. For the next year probably I just added to the list more of the abstract teachings.. 1) She wants to Feelz...give it her, don’t be so logical 2) She’s not yours. Only your turn.. etc... I guess sometime during the second year I didn’t need to carry the list anymore, it all just become part of me. I no longer need the list. I internalized it all ! The side bar is part of me now, completely internalized. 3 years of doing this and It’s automatic. If I tried to sit down and write a book about everything I learned, it will be extremely difficult.

Lessons Learned:

• Make a list of tactics and principles and work on internalizing it.

• Even after you internalize it, don’t forget to occasionally go back over the tactics and principles (index card) to remind yourself of the foundation. I just found an old gem on my index card that I haven’t used in a long time. So I literally just texted her with “So fucking horny right now...(which I am)... be ready to go under the covers with no panties on when I get home...” She loved it! Some fun & flirty text exchanges after that.. The beta version of me would have NEVER texted that. I would have been texting about the status of the relationship while getting mauled by her. That kind of exchange would have NEVER happened. She would have shammed me for even trying to be sexual.

• Keep practicing & don’t give up. At first, all of this seemed so foreign to me. Sometimes in the beginning, I felt like I was just “acting” off of a script. I had some low points asking myself “is all this necessary to get my wife to fuck me?” She should want to automatically...Ha. “Why do I need to do all this stuff, it’s tiring..” When you internalize all of it and it becomes part of the new you, you realize that you are doing “all of this” for YOURSELF, not her. Acting “like this” makes me happy. When I see her dance in the kitchen every so often for no apparent reason, like this morning, and she says “I don’t know why I’m happy..but just am!”.. I have to remind myself that I certainly know why she’s happy. She now has a husband “Who just gets it”. She wants you to just get it. Get
One Year Progress: Why I'm Smiling more

I originally posted this as an OYS update. Some members suggested I put into an FR for the main sub. Hopefully, some of the greener men here can find something useful from my list of "concrete actions" below. The below exchange took place last week, exactly one year to the DAY that I discovered Red Pill. Wife and kids and I were hanging out at home and she decided to take a picture of me with our two little ones.

Ms. J after looking at picture on her phone: “Wow, daddy is showing a lot more teeth in pictures these days. (then cheekily says) Are you having an affair?”

Me: I look at her sideways with wry smile as if to leave that mystery on the table and say “What can I say, that’s just how I am.”

Her comment is a reflection of my continued drive to be better, a happier man and follow my own mission.

Mission Statement: Become a man who does not need her affection or validation and live my life for me. Do what makes me happy, and live as if I am a single, prosperous and masculine man. Be a man she wants to put effort into. (last part attributable to u/weakandsensitive).

Last week I hit my one year MRP anniversary so I thought this OYS post covering my first year was in order and I want to list all the concrete actions I took to begin the process of regaining my own course in life. This will be "no shit" elementary for some but maybe it will help some of the newer guys. I say “Begin” because I’ve come to accept that I’m on the “long game” plan as my changes have been slow and my wife’s response to them even slower. As a result I don’t usually do weekly OYS posts so I want to do this one with the scope of the entire last year. This is a reminder to me that this is a long process of constant betterment and re-embracing of my masculinity and personal drive. The below changes are what I’ve done and found success with.

BE ATTRACTIVE

Improved wardrobe. Buying new clothes a bit at a time and had some things tailored which makes a huge difference.

Stepped up my fitness regime (SL 5x5). I’ve been doing SL5x5 for a year now and it’s showing in the visible gains and comments from wife (to include the obligatory, "you're not trying to be like those musclely guys are you? I don't like that." If you hear something like this from her....keep your foot on the gas, you’re doing it right.) Based on the Navy body fat calculator I’m somewhere between 12 and 14% body fat. I’m 5’11” and my weight has mostly stayed the same 170-175 but I’ve lost a lot of fat and gained a lot of muscle definition. My newbie gains in the gym are over but I must be making continued progress as my lifts continue to slowly go up.

Going to get invisalign for a few slightly out of position teeth and whitened my teeth.

Got a better haircut that suits my thinning hair. I won’t try to hide this, just buzz it shorter and shorter. This is another reason I must stay in good shape. Fat and bald is not good but shredded and bald, we can work with.

I have noticed that NGAF and OI have slowly started seeping into my being and these behaviors are also outward displays of attractiveness.

FRAME

Stopped asking permission (So fucking beta) to do things for me (going out with friends, getting new clothes, saying what I want to eat for dinner, etc). When I want to do something or I want to buy something I just do it and TELL her I’m doing it.

Identify and beat shit tests with AM and AA. I still slip up occasionally on shit tests but recognizing them more than 50% of the time and reacting accordingly.

I stopped saying "I love you" as much. Strategic use directly tied to her sexual performance and overall value adding attitude. Reading Rollo really made this part easy.

Teasing (I think this actually had a lot to do with changing our everyday attitudes towards each other). You'll know you're doing this and NGAF right when you get slapped on the arm, get called "asshole" or "dick" but she's not actually really mad at you. It’s more playful. The “Large Mouth Bass Face” LMBF is also a good indicator you are doing this right.

Grew a beard again. This is in FRAME and not ATTRACTIVENESS because the wife says (verba) she doesn’t like it. Also offsets the lack of hair I'm starting to see up top.

LEAD

Took over finances around month 4. Developed long term financial goals and told her about them. She was extremely relieved when I told her I would take over the handling of finances. This was an easy gain in my relationship. MMV for others. My overt goal of saving us more money even spurred her on to do things like shopping for groceries at Aldi which saves us $$.

"Chart the direction." By this I mean get ahead of the "decision curve" that, if your LTR is like mine, she always had control of. She is a big planner and can't just “wing it” so she usually had the weekends planned out before I could even think about it. Some guys’ wives may not be like this so charting direction will be easier for you. Decide when and where you're going for dinner on weekends, throw out vacation ideas, plan that vacation, plan a hike, propose ideas for home improvements, take the kids to the park. Set the course, don't be reactive. (Sun Tzu)

Lead the family - I now try to lead in decisions big and small. I’ve also noticed my wife coming to me for “permission” for a lot of things, mostly financial. I took on the role of coaching my daughters soccer team. This is a good way to lead the family, lead your community and I think it created a little bit of dread at the same time.

Made sure I took care of shit around house - small things needing to be fixed, yard work, yard improvement projects. If it’s something I can’t do, I call a repairman to do it.

Planned more outings with just wife and I. A couple times when she was being shitty, I canceled date nights.

SEX

Admit, embrace and be unapologetic that I am a man with a healthy desire to fuck. This idea, framed in the tenants of NMMNG and WISNIFG, should be at the core of this OYS area.

Initiated 3-4 times a week. I used to sit back in bed and wait for her to initiate and would get more angry when she didn't. Now I just do it. She rarely makes the first move but is responsive to my advances a little more than half the time. For example, sometimes I like her on top and she knows this but the old BP me would be passive about it and it became a chore and she would whine about it sometimes. This faggoty behavior created no tingles. Now I always get on top first and control everything from there unless she asks for something. Now, if I want her on top, I tell her. Honestly, I think this one change made the biggest improvement in our sex life. But those were the easy gains...just being the proactive one in bed. Evolutionary biology says that female libidos/desire tend to be reactive, not proactive. Understand, accept and capitalize on this. Don’t sit around waiting for her to initiate because it just may not be in her nature. I wish I would have figured this out years ago. I see many guys on here talking about their woman getting sexually aggressive and doing a lot of the initiating. Good for them, but don’t expect it in your situation. Women are on a spectrum in this respect. Don't ask but tell her you want to Fuck.

Throw in some DEVI in your approaches and initiations. I’m still working on this and have a long way to go but experimenting with ramping up SGM tactics.

Stopped being butthurt when I got a hard no. (This was hardest when it had been 3 days or more with no action) I still find it hard not be angry but I’m getting better and projecting a positive DGAF attitude when it happens.

Left house a few times upon repeated "hard no's." One time I did it while we were on vacation at a beach resort. Dread is literally all around you at a place like that. I only had to do this a couple of times in the first few months. But it’s good to do occasionally to remind them you are the prize.

Have a contingency plan for if/when she gives the hard no. Have a hobby that’s easy to jump back into. This helps when you don't really have OI internalized.

AM/AA through LMR. If I get three “No’s” I usually drop it because if she agrees after that it’s usually starfish.
Stopped talking about and/or arguing about sex/lack of sex. (goes with not being butturt). This one kept wanting to resurface and still occasionally pokes it’s faggoty head out a bit but I’m working to squash it completely. However, after re-reading a lot of posts here and having discussions with u/Persaeus and others about this dynamic, I now see the value in occasionally stating your expectations in a concise, unapologetic and uncompromising way when the timing is right and her solipsistic head is too thick to get that I won’t accept a “roommates with kids” relationship.

PART TWO to follow below:

EDIT: Formatting issue
Re-branding and the Married Life

We say – “you are the prize”. You are the thing that your woman wanted, gave herself to, all those years ago, when you were worth a damn. And now, she can’t get wet enough to fuck you.

It is time to recognize that you are a product. She is the consumer – and, in many of our cases, our only consumer. Why are we talking about rebranding? If you as the producer are not getting what you want from your woman(en) , the first place to look is into yourself and see if there are things you can do to be a better masculine man.

“But I am alpha, why rebrand” / “Why can’t she just love me for me” / “But I make X times more than she does…”

Whaa!!!

Why Rebrand:

You sold your woman a product. You. That product may have been alpha, beta, a good mix of both. Either way, she bought it. She has full expectations about that product providing her things. Remember, her pussy was unique and precious. Oh, and her purchase... you , beta boy. You better perform for that pussy...right?

And, you are not performing... either you are a shitty captain, or got fat, or she got to see your weak emotional squishy side, you no longer give her the tingles, and she genuinely misses that, and doesn’t even realize. In fact, she is so upset that she gets a headache every time the idea of fucking you enters her brain. The headache, or stomachache, is because- maybe she genuinely recognizes that you are a good man. She SHOULD be attracted to you ... but isn’t. Headache from the cognitive dissonance.

Or She married herself a full on BetaBux type, knowing that this is all for security... and now, this little beta worker be is trying to get out from under her heel??!!! No way!! Squish!!!

Time to rebrand, boys!

What is brand?

“A brand is a company's or product's identity, and to understand what that means you must go to the customers and prospective ... ask them what they think, feel and expect when they see the company or product, because those thoughts, feelings and expectations are the brand. A company does not own its brand—its customers and prospects do.”

Breaking that down:
You are a product. Your consumer should get a dopamine response from having access to you. You as the product should be able to provide the feelz and tingles. This means that from the packaging (clothes, fitness/looking good/grooming etc) to the substance (frame, inherent drive, mission, and so on) you need to be the one that gives her that tingly dopamine spike that she craves.

“The company does not own its brand- its customers do” - this is important. We do things that will give us the things we want... (sex, respect and so on), but ultimately, in this praxeology we see what actions and physical features get us those things and do those activities. (be hot and hold frame are ways to get women because that is what women want. If being an emotional tampon got you laid, TRP would be all about how to be a better fitting tampon).

Steps to rebranding:

Influence and shape the brand with a series of promises

First things first. Lift.

Then ask yourself these questions:

- What qualities and characteristics do you want your women to think of when they hear your name or see you?
- What feelings do you want them to have?
- What do you want them to expect?
- Can you support all those ideas in fact? If not, what do you have to do to make it true? Do it!
- What can you honestly say sets you apart? Look at everything.

Obtain customer feedback

As you make changes, your customers--- your wife, LTR, other women, will provide feedback. You don’t even have to ask! Isn’t that great!

If your wife is not fucking you, you are still doing it wrong, or she doesn’t yet believe your brand and product.

Find out what is NOT working

Figure out which of the things that you do are not working specifically. Figure out if you really want to do them any way. Act accordingly.

Develop the story

“Your brand’s look, feel and message should tell one story, and that story should be heroic and memorable”

Think about that… this is about her seeing your mission. Seeing you pursue it. Seeing you succeed. She wants to see you slay dragons. Oh... and so do all the other girls out there.

Permeate your “company” communications with the new brand

Now that you have figured out who you “really are”, make sure that your message to your target audience makes sense... That you are actually worthy of being treated the way you want to be treated.

Never stop supporting and promoting your brand

This is where you need to “advertize”. She will need to see evidence that you, the product, are a rare find, and that you are desired by other consumers. Be the Iphone... everyone wants one. Go out and talk to everyone. Be approachable. Get hit on in social settings. Have her girlfriends tell her how lucky she is to have you... and what they would do if they could have a “man like that”.

Be consistent and persistent

Now that you are all alpha and getting what you want out of life... don’t go back to the beta. Don’t go back to being that guy who couldn’t get the girl who used to fuck him 12 times a day to do so once or twice a week.

Edit:

And remember - you can always free to change your consumer. This one isn't special Lingerie guide in 3 parts
by cholomite | December 6, 2017 | Link

This post is about lingerie, and sluttness, and your girl and you.

A lot of guys come here asking about how to get their girls to wear lingerie for them, and they complain that their women don't make it a point to look good in the bedroom and all that shit that guys like. I've had a lot of success with this, so I figured I'd share what worked for me, why I think it worked and how it can probably help you, especially during these trying holiday times.

Prerequisite reading is this post by /u/thefamilyalpha, pay attention to the part about removing the taboo of talking about sex;, and being attractive, because like the rest of this shit, if you're not, it makes it a lot harder.

https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/5c4a09/create_your_slut/

Part 1

If you've read that post or you've been around long enough, you'll know that accepting women's true slutty nature is part of accepting the red pill. Every woman enjoys being a slut, it just depends on the man she is with and how she is feeling in that moment. The kind of man that women want to be a slut for have been around enough women to know that they enjoy it, and he accepts it. There is a certain level of comfort women have when they are around an attractive and fun guy who just "gets it". They know they can be open and free without judgement because he knows too and doesn't care. You need to unlock this side of your girl, the kind where she can be her slutty self without judgement and jealousy. She might talk about shit or say things that you never expected her to say, but if it isn't in violation of any boundaries, just accept it and take advantage of it, she is opening up. You'll be surprised at what women will say and do around a guy who "gets it". Lately my girls friends have shown me their tits, thongs and talked about how good they can suck dick because they know I'll be cool and won't jizz in my pants like an 8th grader. It really fucking works if you can handle it.

This leads to the main point of this post:

Lingerie is a gift for her, not for you.

It's a gift for her because women enjoy acting slutty and turning men on. They get aroused turning guys on as much as we get aroused looking at them, biology made that shit work out fucking perfect. The problem is if you're not attractive or not good at enjoying her being slutty, she won't enjoy turning you on. That's why you need to accept her, and have fun with her and keep her in the right emotional state, while also being attractive and fuck her well. I know, it's a lot to think about but you're a man you can handle it.

You should never ask your woman to dress sexy, look slutty or wear certain things "for you", you're not special, she doesn't owe you shit, and having to ask is sad as fuck.

(Pro-tip: Women want a guy who just fucks. A ripped sex beast who just wants pussy because he is masculine and strong and doesn't give a fuck about much else. This means you have to not give a fuck one way or another if she actually wears lingerie or anything like that. Fuck Beasts don't worry about clothes, or where you are, or any of that shit, so get over it and fuck her anyway.)

Keep it light at first and once you get her comfortable in lingerie and slutty clothes, you can start telling her what you want her to wear and pick out stuff and be more dominant or whatever else you pervs want to do, but it’s important to have a DNGAF attitude and be able to get past it and fuck regardless of the situation. Don't force it or go for it if it will be an extra hassle. Immersion is a big part of the DEVI model from sex god method that you all should know about by now. Having to shut down a rapid escalation so she can change her clothes can kill the mood. I’d rather have hot naked sex than starfish in fishnets. Read the mood of your game and act accordingly. If it will fit and not kill the immersion, go for it, if not, default to FuckBeast mode.

Part 2

How to get her to enjoy it:

Getting your girl to enjoy being slutty for you means that you first must accept her slutty side. This can start with you talking more openly and less judgmentally about sexual stuff, talking more crudely with her about sex or your desires or her desires, and all that other shit. Basically just talk dirty and own it, just don't be weird, keep it fun and try not to come off like a horny beta creep. Tell her what you like about her, tell her what you want her to do or do to you. It is also important that you back all this dirty talk up with an actual ability to fuck well, or at least the frame to handle it if you can't. If you can't go hard in the bedroom like sex god method, then you need to read more. Caveman mode is always good, and if you can make her cum she'll be putty in your hands.

Make her comfortable in her own skin.

You can't judge her if she doesn't look like the girl on the cover. You must be attracted to her how she is, if you don't think your wife is attractive already, this shit probably won't work and it’s your fault anyway. My girl isn't a busty porn-star, but together we stay fit and right and I find her sexy as hell, so if she wants to wear slutty clothes it’s just a bonus to me, but I’m a fuckbeast so I’d smash either way. The point is if your wife or gf puts some slutty clothes on and she doesn't look good, you have to get the fuck over it and fuck her either way and still have a good time without skipping a beat, otherwise you're a faggot for fucking an inferior woman if you have so many fucking options anyway. She will never look as good as the plastic surgery photo-shopped model on the box, so get ready to give some comfort and help her move past it by keeping it light and playful. I honestly don't like fake blonde plastic tittied bimbos so that part wasn't hard for me.

Before your girl will have the guts to put on something she might look terrible in she needs to "feel" as though you are attracted to her and love her and are genuinely attracted to her personality and shit, at least a little bit before she will take the risk {if you're not any of these things to your wife or gf you're wasting your time here}. You do this by spending time with her and being a fun and enjoyable guy. If she thinks you're an attractive person, and you're spending your time with her, she will be more confident in herself. Take this confidence and use it to bring out her slutty side, if she doesn't feel confident taking her clothes off, or burping in front of you, she won't feel confident trying on slutty clothes for you. You don't have to tolerate a gross girl, but learn how to use her raw pure self to make fun and get into her inner self and her inner slutty side. If you want to be with her forever you have to be able to laugh about some awkward or meta shit. The cooler you are the cooler she'll be and the more receptive she'll be to the weird shit you're into. I'm not some one night stand that my girl will never see again, we've been together for over a decade. If she fucks up, it will ruin her life, so make sure you make her feel safe in exploring this shit.

Part 3

FUCK VICTORIA'S SECRET

I used to buy all kinds of slutty outfits and matching sets and satin and lace shit for my girl. I'd go with her to Victoria's Secret and let her pick out whatever and pay $100's for it like a chump. She would never wear that shit, we'd get home and she would put it in a drawer to never be seen again. If I was lucky she would wear nothing or some thong from 5 years ago. After being angry I stopped giving a fuck, accepted my gf's true AWALT nature and started just enjoying her nakedness. I got hotter and she got sluttier, and hotter too. I stopped giving so many fucks and just did what I wanted. She followed my lead but still wasn't slutting it up like I wanted her to. It was around this time that I realized something important that you all should know. My girl won't become a crazy slut on her own, she needs me to lead her there, so, I did that. Maybe it's because we've been together for over a decade, or she has more to lose than she would with a one night stand, I don't know, but she just wouldn't take that first step unless I took her there with me.

Before I get into how to buy slutty clothes for your girl, I want to talk about the argument of "well, she should buy them on her own if she really wants to impress me". My girl would never buy some of the crazy shit I get for her just because she's afraid of getting it wrong or looking bad and slut shaming and all that. Again, I'm not a one night stand, we've been together for over a decade and have built a life together. Social and sexual rejection hurts girls 100x worse than it hurts guys, so they are much less likely to take risks. If I get it, she has plausible deniability that I was the one who fucked up and we can both have a laugh because she knows I'm cool enough and have the frame to get over it. Now that she knows what I like, and she knows what she feels comfortable in, she has surprised me many times with some crazy shit I didn't even think she could put on by herself. It's on you to take the first steps.

Just to emphasize...

Victorias Secret is the biggest beta bucks scam i have ever seen in my life.

Buying victorias secret shit for your girl is basically guaranteeing that she will not want to fuck you or wear it for you ever. It is impossible to act like you don't give a fuck while also paying 100 dollars for 3 dollars worth of fabric. Skittles Man wouldn't drop that kind of cash, so why the fuck are you? I would bet my life savings that the Victoria's Secret marketing team has used the term "beta male" at least once in their marketing strategies and probably have a whole marketing team dedicated just to thirsty beta males. Fuck that shit.

The first time after the red pill I bought my girl slutty clothes and outfits I picked out, I got them from discountstripper.com and amazon. I paid the absolute cheapest amount for what I wanted and got like, 10 slutty outfits for 30 bucks. Discountstripper.com was on the box when she opened it and she was pissed off, but realized I obviously didn't care and started laughing and putting it on. I honestly just wanted to see her reaction, she knew I didn't give a fuck if she wore it or not, and that's why she put it on (I did this shit as a "holiday present" and we had been doing holiday shit and bonding over our shitty families together, so she felt extra close to me, the circumstances definitely made it easier but this will work anytime, as long as you are comfortable being called an asshole and having her be mad at you), but at the end of the day, I didn't care what she thought about it. Best case scenario is she puts it on, worst case scenario is she's pissed off and I can have fun teasing her while she pouts at me. The asshole card pays off if you know how to play it, just own your shit and don't let her shame you for being a man.

In conclusion, fuck Victoria's Secret. I am in no way affiliated with discountstripper.com, they just have an awesome and hilarious name that worked to my advantage in pissing off my girl. Fuckbeast is a real thing and it should be your default setting, most of the time. SHE has to be in the mood to wear lingerie, not you, because like I said before, it's a gift for her to enjoy, not you.

Go forth and get freaky, and don't spend too much money on that shit. Good luck bros.

fuckbeast
From Illimitable Men: Marriage is the only legal contract in existence that permits a person to violate contractual terms and then subsequently penalize the party who upheld said terms.

From Briffault’s Law: Where the female can derive no benefit from association with the male, no such association takes place.

I had a date with a lady I met online, I’ll call her “Jan” (because I grew up watching the Brady Bunch reruns, and I always thought Jan was “groovy”). Jan and I met for a few drinks at a watering hole near my house. I like this place because it has pool tables and dart boards. The games are good because there’s something to do other than sit there at the bar. They also provide opportunities for kino, and if things work out very well, it’s a short drive to my house.

Jan’s a divorced, decent looking petite blonde, early 30’s. She has one son. She’s a veterinarian who has her own private practice. We live in a farming community, so I’d assume she makes pretty good scratch for her age. Jan drinks draft beer and wears jeans and cowboy (cowgirl?) boots.

We had the typical “why did you divorce” first date conversation. Her story was a routine example of hypergamy in action:

She and her ex-husband met through the sport of “cutting”, which is a competition where a rider and horse work to separate a cow from the herd in front a panel of judges. Like any equestrian sport, it’s an expensive hobby. It’s pricey to buy and maintain cutting horses, plus transportation to competitions, etc.

The husband, let’s call him Peter (to keep with the Brady Bunch name theme), worked in IT, while she was studying to be a veterinarian. The also had a small farm where they raised cattle. The farm had been in Peter’s family for generations.

Peter was repairing some fencing on the farm where the cattle had been escaping. He was operating a post-hole-digger tractor attachment and got his foot caught in the auger which mangled and nearly amputated his foot. The accident happened in front of their son, which probably saved him from bleeding to death because the son was able to call for help.

The injury required multiple surgeries and extended rehabilitation to save the foot. While he was off work he exhausted his disability coverage and FMLA, and was released from his good-paying job as a network administrator.

They were able to save his foot, and after it had healed enough, he started looking for work but was unable to find any openings locally. He ended up getting a job at an employer who was a few hours away. Rather than relocate his family and remove his wife and son from their schools, friends, etc., he elected to rent a small apartment in the town where his job was, travel there early Monday morning, and return Friday evening after work. Not an ideal setup, but a man does what he has to do to provide for his family.

Meanwhile Jan was left alone during the week, studying to be a veterinarian, and taking care of their son and the cows. Jan became increasingly resentful of this arrangement, picturing her husband enjoying the solitude of his apartment all week, while she was left to take care of everything.

The tipping point came when Peter surprised her with a very nice new dually truck and horse trailer for use at their cutting competitions. He bought the truck and trailer to try to appease her because she was so unhappy with his work travel. The problem was that he had gotten an equity loan against the family farm to fund the vehicle purchase, and to pay off other debts they had incurred after his foot injury. When Jan found out about the loan, she concluded that Peter was “not an asset, but a liability” (she used those exact terms when telling the story).

Further complicating matters, Jan had made a new “best friend” while at school, I’ll call him Greg. While Peter was away at work all week, earning money to support his family and pay for Jan’s education, Jan and Greg (and Jan’s son) were spending more and more time together. Peter wasn’t very happy with this arrangement and grew increasingly irritated and jealous of their friendship. Jan felt Peter was simply being insecure and controlling.

As soon as Jan graduated from veterinary school and got set up with her own practice, she and Peter separated, and she moved into an apartment near her new office. Peter was actually the one who filed for divorce, but it was a last-ditch act of desperation to bring her back (“move back or we’re getting divorced” kind of thing).

Peter had to liquidate the family farm in the divorce. He now lives full time in his little work apartment. Jan got to keep her veterinary practice intact, along with her nice new dually truck (I’ve seen it, it’s a sweet ride). She’s currently building a new house out in the country.

I have to wonder if Peter had just completely lost his foot in that accident, and went right back to work instead of being off for so long to save the foot, would he have kept his job, and therefore his marriage? So he’d only have one foot, but still be married to Jan, instead of having both feet and being divorced. Is a wife worth one foot? (Fuck no!) Lastly, it seems Jan’s BFF Greg had his fun and moved on. So now Jan is dating online, shopping around for a replacement husband. She’s actually not a bad catch, just don’t get injured or she’ll be gone.

TLDR: Husband got hurt and lost his job. Wife branch swung as soon as her education was completed.
AF:BB - A grown up’s perspective
by 88Will88 | October 24, 2017 | Link

AF:BB is the king of red pill acronyms/ formula. It is the E=mc2 of the red pill universe. This equation is epic in its scope and broad in its application. 4 simple letters describe the crux of sexual strategy as we know it. However the reality of the way this equation has been incompletely applied, both on the main sub and in here, is yet to be revealed. So maybe it is time to swallow another pill, although this one is a choice, rather than a necessity. The main sub is simply not ready to have this discussion as it would undermine the wet dreams of the incel/ basement dwelling keyboard warriors who increasingly own the debate. So as grown ups we can at least have a discussion without it descending into a name calling shitfest. My theory is that AF:BB is not a dichotomy as previously believed, it is a concurrent and complimentary aspect of female hypergamy. If you really want to be a successful and fulfilled alpha male you need a healthy and alpha body, and a healthy and alpha status/ bank balance. What you really want to be is AB - Alpha bucks.

There is a wealth of data and discussion from red pill luminaries to back up this theory. Esther Vilar correctly pointed out in The Manipulated Man (the best and most neglected item on the sidebar) that truly beautiful women do not marry tradesman. Jordan Peterson points out that women primarily choose men based on their ability to provide resources. Indeed women presented with images of men rank 85% of the men viewed as “below average” in looks. So while it is true that a beautiful woman will more readily have sex with a very attractive man (top 10-20%) they will not remain in a long term relationship with said man if he cannot provide resources. Study after study has shown that women pick men with resources and men choose on attractiveness. Why else is it that wealthy men are habitually married to women who are much younger and more attractive than they are yet the reverse is never true. Why is there such a thing as a sugar daddy but no such thing as a sugar mummy?

This is a SMV/ RMV issue. TRP helps you to over perform in the sexual marketplace but it does nothing to improve your RMV. We often hear it mentioned in MRP that for a good LTR is TRP on hard mode and you need to mix some beta with your alpha. I disagree with both assertions, firstly a good relationship should be easy, not hard, if it is hard then just leave. Secondly I think we need to take a harder look at the concept of beta bucks. Beta bucks is seen as the only way that a beta can get laid, and there is a lot of truth to this. However that is an SMV issue, beta men with a decent income are more desirable for a relationship that alpha men with no money or a dead end job. So if you want the best of both worlds then you should be aiming to be AB - Alpha Bucks. After all, betas can certainly have money, but there is nothing stopping an alpha man from making money as well. Alpha means boss, and without a bunch of betas answering to you, then you are not alpha.

The commandments of poon is another area of TRP which is regularly skimmed over. We are supposed to make our mission our priority. Pook also describes a healthy life balance as combining day and dream, meaning one does not want to become the alpha jerk, or the beta good guy, but a self realised man who lives life on his own terms. So I think the end game of red pill sexual strategy is AB. For me personally, finding TRP was great because it made me start lifting. I was cocky and had money, but I was skinny as fuck. So red pill helped me to up the physical aspect of my alpha. Lifting is compulsory in red pill subs and I think it is time we realise the importance of the last letter of AF:BB and that is bucks. Money and status gives you more options in life in every way. So if you just want to bang vapid hos, then there is no need to stray from the main sub. Hit the gym, learn some basic grooming and game and you will be balls deep in tinderellas. However to be more realised as a whole man who does not take orders, we need to cover both ends of the AF:BB spectrum and aim for AB.
I'm tired. Read the fucking sidebar
by stonepimpletilists | August 18, 2016 | Link

Look, I get it. Your situation is unique, you are unique. I know this from the length of your interesting and not boring at all background stories, ripe with defense of the woman we don't even know, all the way to describing all your weak bullshit as a benefit.

Yes, you're well learned, you used to be hot shit in the Air Force (does such a thing even exist?) you are really good at facetime with the kids. Fucking wow.

Come here, because you're a guy, we automatically will put our collective heads together, and sort out how to make you love her again, and her to fuck you back. OK?

A very trusted poster brought up a good point. Why do the other guys even allow you into their locker room? None of you start your posts with what you've done, how much of the sidebar you've read, at least a few of you mention lifting, thank fuck.

And every guy in here sees a little bit of the former them in you, so they offer you some very obvious tips that you would learn in said sidebar, said activities, and the hundreds of top level posts here, and in TRP that takes a 200 word post, and brings it the 1000 word context that makes it click.

You are failing you, ergo, we are failing you, but we will learn from our mistake.

Lead with your accomplishments, this place should be about guys chucking shit in the locker room, swapping success stories, laying out some damn fine learning experiences in their FR.

The days of bitching about your shitty life, then having 20 of us explain to you why your life is shitty, arguing with you the whole way are over.

You will be a man, or you will leave. Get to work brothers, I would say I believe in you, but we all know that I probably shouldn't.

I'd rather see an empty frontpage, than another fucking bitch post. I hamstered it as cautionary tales for those putting in effort to heed. I now see I was bullshitting myself.
Frame is impossible without abundance
by parkerfiveone | October 6, 2018 | Link

Deleted
The Red pill is training wheels for betas
by 88Will88 | July 21, 2017 | Link

When my daughter was 4, I bought her a bike with training wheels on it. Red pill subs are a lot like the training wheels on my daughter's bike, they are basically a set of acronyms to help hopeless betas to learn to think, act and walk like a man. We use acronyms like training wheels, wooden swords and floaties so that you can change your weak, feminine and pathetic behaviours into stronger, masculine, dominant behaviours. Acronyms like AF:BB, OI, AWALT, A&A, STFU, CC, AMOG, SJW, MRA, MGTOW, GLO, IDGAF, SL 5x5, SMV, HB are basically cheat codes/ basics about gender dynamics to allow betas to begin learning how not to be totally retarded bitches that women rightfully consider repulsive. They are largely a legacy of the PUA movement from which TRP grew. These acronyms and rules have been codified so that our members can learn to get laid, spin plates, or get their cunt of a wife to fuck them.

Red pill subs (among other things) are a school where you can learn to be more alpha. Just like learning the alphabet and the times tables, we keep it basic. The fundamentals are all there on the sidebar. We have posts by vanguards, mods, approved, senior and endorsed contributors which deal out wisdom from the full spectrum of basic ideas, right up to extremely advanced posts such as the outstanding post on how to manage your bitches by u/humansockpuppet (most of you need not even read that post because you are not managing one bitch, let alone several). You will not get anything out of the advanced posts until you master the basics. You will certainly get fuck all (except hopefully a long ass ban) out of arguing with Endorsed contributors or other members until you master these concepts. It is important to remember that the basic teachings really are like training wheels. Do not try and apply these things like they are absolute truths, they are teaching devices and they are there so that you can discard them one day. After all how important is AF:BB to you if you are in excellent shape and getting laid whenever you want? Why would anyone need to act as if they have "abundance mentality" when they have genuine abundance? Why do you need to learn game if you get approached a lot and your online dating inbox is full of messages from hotties?

What you want is to be able to forget all of these baby steps and be able to act like a man naturally, without having to remember acronyms, maintaining eye contact and the best ways to deal with shit tests. Your goal is to be able to forget the rules, not commit them to memory and think about them day and night. You get to take off your training wheels when you can ride well and then hopefully go on to win a race against your peers. Best way to get there is to practice. Don't talk about what your goals are, take steps to achieve your goals. Don't read too much about how to approach, get out there and approach. Stop overthinking red pill concepts and treating them like a religion, it is training wheels for hapless betas, not a dogmatic code to engage in keyboard warrior style battles. So for those of you that want to get upvotes, or get endorsed, or get favourable comments from members - how about you remember the real goal of red pill awareness. That is to see things as they are, act like a man, live a happy life, achieve your mission, and get laid on the regular - in other words TO TAKE OFF THE TRAINING WHEELS. Any other goals are just masturbation.
Mini FR- Shit test and application of Law 36
by gettingmymojoback | December 15, 2016 | Link

Just a quick FR about a quick shit test, my handling of the situation, and realization that it was a direct application and example of LAW 36 - DISDAIN THINGS YOU CANNOT HAVE: IGNORING THEM IS THE BEST REVENGE

While reading the Keys to Power of Law 36 the following really stood out to me

"Desire often creates paradoxical effects: The more you want something, the more you chase after it, the more it eludes you. The more interest you show, the more you repel the object of your desire. This is because your interest is too strong—it makes people awkward, even fearful. Uncontrollable desire makes you seem weak, unworthy, pathetic."

This particularly resonated with me as I have first hand experienced both with the failure and misery of attempting to get more affection from my spouse through relentless Beta smothering, and have witnessed first hand the last 3-4 months the improvements that implementing a RP approach produces.

Case in point, last night was the first night this week my wife and I were able to get home together relatively early. Absence being what it is, we were both glad to be home together. This does not however mean there were no shit tests to be had lol.

After catching up on our days, a few 10 second kisses etc, and our usual family dinner we cleaned up and settled into our evening routine. I had a few personal matters to attend to and deal with and returned back to the family room a while later. Wife was working on her laptop and I approached her to lean in for another kiss and get a snappy "WHAT DO YOU WANT!"

This is where Law 36 kicked in subconsciously. I know for a fact 3 months ago I would have either A) begged for a kiss or B) been butthurt as fuck. Instead I chose option C) give her nothing. Literally my reply "Nothing", continued walking by and went and did some other shit I needed to do.

The best part, I couldn't have been less affected by her outburst. No biggie, she can come to me when she's ready. Finish my stuff up, relax on the couch for a bit before lights out. She comes and cuddles up next to me for a bit, when she gets up to go to bed she tells me she's holding off on her bedtime routine until after I come upstairs. Gives me a coy smile, nudge nudge, wink wink, and walks away. I know how this ends, and the best part....all I had to do was "nothing" but ignore her denial as it no longer had any meaning to me. She no longer has that power over me, and she knows it.

Pre-MRP me would have been hovering around her all evening, drying her pussy out, and doing nothing but pushing her further away with my thirst. Valuable lesson learned.
Marriage after Dread Level 12 (see also “Spin Plates with Caution” or “How to be Happy with What You’ve Got”)

by daddytwoshoes | March 25, 2019 | Link

This post is part cautionary tale, part philosophical question, part request for advice. I tried to be reasonably concise, hopefully I didn’t gloss over important details or go on for too long.

TL;DR version

How can a married man who has gone through each stage of dread, improved his SMV, pursued outside interests, indulged in a hedonistic lifestyle, banged hot young girls, destroyed his wife’s self-esteem by neglecting her and eventually getting caught, then come through the other side with an intact marriage, ever be truly happy again with a real-world wife with real-world flaws who wants nothing more than for him to stay, be faithful, and tell her she’s sexy? Can you really close Pandora’s Box and pretend you never saw what was inside? Choke down that blue pill and forget all you’ve experienced, and learned about the world and your place in it?

Full Version

About three and a half years ago, I was knee deep in an unhappy, low sex marriage with my wife, an overweight and stressed out new mom to our 2 year old daughter. We were both each other’s first serious relationship, having been together for over 15 years (we were both 35 at the time, now 38). I knew nothing of TRP, MRP, or really anything at all about relationships, and was feeling neglected and sorry for myself. We had been mostly happy together before my wife got pregnant, although her weight (correction: we were both overweight and out of shape, and I wasn’t happy about it) and her seemingly low sex drive had always been an issue for me, and neither of us knew how to communicate properly about our feelings. I tend to avoid conflict because I’m a sensitive chickenshit, and she’s shy and self-controlled, but also very sensitive to criticism, and with a bit of a temper.

Long story short, I jumped head first into the deep end of casual dating and sex - straight to Dread Level 11, as I later found out. Then I lost weight, got in shape, started dressing better, developed outside interests, and learned how to game girls. The dread sequence was completely out of order; I likened myself to a bull in a china shop, running wild without any concern for what I was doing to those around me. I was having fun, but my marriage suffered; slowly at first, but over time we drifted further and further apart both emotionally and physically, even with the birth of our second child. Time is zero-sum, and time spent with side pieces meant less time with my wife and our family. I loved my wife, but I also grew to resent her; the girls I was dating were fit, fun, energetic, and had low expectations for me, so why would I bother putting any energy into making my wife happy when the payoff was mediocre sex with an out of shape 35 year old?

Over time, I basically wrote her off physically and emotionally - a kind woman, the mother of... our children, but fat and boring - and she consigned herself to a life with a neglectful husband who would rather pursue outside activities than spend time with her, and who was most likely cheating on her (I had a lot of “client dinners” and “guys nights” but I’m a terrible liar when it comes down to it). I hadn’t complete given up on our marriage and wanted to love her, but I was still too afraid of hurting her feelings and wasn’t communicating properly. My step 9 came in the form of me having an emotional breakdown in the middle of the night, when I finally told her I wasn’t attracted to her. We went to therapy, and she agreed to start working out and lose weight, but I didn’t stop cheating and never told her that I was. I felt like I couldn’t go back to my old self at that point; that I could have it all and never get caught. I even convinced myself I was a good husband and father – a good provider, right?

Then one day about a year later, I was caught. It was messy; she found evidence of the things I had done, and who I had done them with. I told her everything. She was angry, and hurt. She yelled at me, and cried, on and off for days and days. All of her fears were true, and worse. Already self-conscious about her body, her self-esteem hit rock bottom when she learned that I had been out banging eager young girls at the same time I had been refusing sex with her.

But there was hope; we both wanted to repair our marriage, and she decided to focus on the future, not the past. We talked openly like we never had before. It turns that we’re actually very sexually compatible; the willing sub I spent so much time searching for was sleeping beside me the whole time. She wants me to want her, to need her, to use her. But therein lies the rub... she’s lost 30 pounds, continues to go to the gym 1-2 times a week, and is slowly opening up to me sexually, but for me it’s still not enough, and may never be enough. She’s a great partner in life, everything that I’m not - responsible, organized, emotionally stable - but sexy? Not really. Sexy is the amateur model with the perfect tits, or the uninhibited college student who used to scream my name when she came during our lunchtime trysts, or the submissive Indian girl who was so nervous and turned on she could barely speak, then followed me back to my car so I could bang her in the parking garage. My wife turns me on, but she will never compare to what I’ve experienced, and what I know is still out there if I chose to seek it again. And now she’s painfully aware of this fact, and she can’t get it out of her head. And neither can I.

I read a post recently on TRP that basically said that the quest for self-improvement could become an all-consuming obsession, and I feel like that fits me to a T. On paper I have everything a man could want - a high status career, a wife that most men would be jealous of, a nice house, two wonderful children, and an active social life with lots of friends - but I still feel this emptiness inside me. My wife tells me that one can create their own happiness, and to some extent I believe that. But then another part of thinks I can do better; maybe I’ll find that 21-year old bisexual lingerie model who’s also polite and loves children and home cooking, or whatever chimera my mind has conjured up as a vision of what would actually satisfy my own hypergamous instincts.

Once you’ve experienced something “better”, how do you go back to “normal” and be satisfied?
Your wife fucking you is a side-effect. Your wife not fucking you is a side effect.

by RedPillRambo | January 23, 2017 | Link

I'm convinced that what often throws newbies off track from the mrp journey, often right from the start, is an inherent incongruence between what Newbs initially think MRP is... and what it actually is.

The discordance stems from how MRP is typically encountered by a newbie desperately seeking a "Sexual Strategy" (aka, "how can i make her fuck me??")... as opposed to its actual reason for being and true value: an unparalleled resource providing education and practical training manual for improving one's life, body, mind, and masculinity.

Which is the more attractive proposition to a Desperate Noob?

- (Sexual Strategy positioning:) “If I do this stuff, it'll finally get her pussy all quivering and dripping all over me, every night, without me ever having to ask or pester? Who do I make the check out to?”

Versus:

- (Self/masculine improvement positioning): “Do a shitload of hard work than I'm used to doing, or want to do, every day, forever. And after all that, have “OI” where I don’t care whether or not she fucks me.”

And it's here that the two species of Newbs diverge:

Eyes-Opened Newb, and the Forever Beta.

The Open-Eyed Newb at some point grasps that the 'sexual' part of the strategy is a side-effect. A bonus. An add-on, a nice-to-have, but not the main game. Even if that was the main (or only) game that brought them here.

The Forever Beta on the other hand, having placed that pussy so high up that pedestal, doesn't realise that the main game is about something so much bigger than whether you can trick her into stomaching the thought of fucking your fat ass yet again.

The crucial distinction: the Open-Eyed quickly (or slowly) gets that this so-called ‘sexual strategy' really isn't. A side-effect of undertaking all this boldness, risk, work and effort may be more/better sex with your wife.

There is no guarantee whatsoever that if you're owning all your shit, leading everywhere, lifting to Strong + Ripped status, happy with yourself and in charge of your life .. nope. Even then. There is still no guarantee that your wife will open wide and say Insert Cock Here.

But-- it sure as fuck is likely to be a side effect. And even if it's not - and this is critical - it's all
OK. Maybe she'll come around later, maybe she won't come around at all - if she doesn't, I have more options than I've ever had, regardless. If she fucks me, great. If she doesn't fuck me: I'm still good.

In exactly the same way, hitting the snooze button 3 times in a row and X-Box'ing and Craft-Brewing and Stained-T-Shirting your days away ... giving up responsibility and leadership at home (and not even noticing that you have) ... and generally sleep-walking through life as shit-eating schlub ... none of that guarantees that your wife will never, ever fuck you again -- but it sure as fuck is likely to be a side-effect of doing so.

The real value of MRP... the value that Open-Eyed Newbs start to sense (and yes, quite likely with some disappointment that this shit isn't going to be anywhere near as easy as hoped)... the value that becomes clear to them, while the Forever Beta goes back to the locked bathroom, furiously slapping his cock back and forth, staying pissed off and sad and lost...the value of these 'strategies' isn't the side-effects.

It's the effects.

TL/DR: Every man has a sexual strategy, and the results indicate what matters most to him in life. Interestingly, the potentially most effective one, isn't really predicated on sex at all.
FR: Gains

by donedreadpirate | October 28, 2016 | Link

I posted a couple months ago about overhearing my wife trashing me to my own mother. I want to update you guys on my life gains. You have made such a positive impact that I want to share my story.

This is what I have done.

I have read:

- Gorilla Mindset
- NMMNG
- WISNIFG
- Book of Pook
- The Rational Male
- MMSL
- SGM
- Conversation Tactics 1
- The Way of the Superior Male
- The Mindful Attraction Plan
- Bang
- Models

Reading:

- The Natural (70%)
- 48 Laws of Power (40%)
- Conversation Tactics 2 (40%)
- The Ironwood Collection of Alpha Moves (20%)

On Deck:

- Day Bang
- Art of Seduction
- Conversation Tactics 3

Style gains:

I upgraded my wardrobe. Much needed because I have been lifting for a couple of years and none of my clothes fit anymore. Pants were huge, shirts were ragged. I didn't own any button downs that fit. I wore the same old shoes every day. I studied up on men's fashion through some advice on this board and bought nice new pants, shirts, briefs, shoes and socks. Spent about $1k on this and still have more to go.

Gain gains:

As for lifting, I have been doing The Body Transformation Blueprint which I really like. I continue to upgrade my home gym as needed. Squat Rack is next on the list. I'm getting bigger and I can see it/feel it. This has been a long journey I started two years ago as a total novice who would have been completely lost in a gym. I started with Body Beast and did that religiously. It isn't the best program in my opinion but for a beginner I think it's fantastic. It gave me the confidence I needed to move forward.

Professional gains:

I started taking more initiative at work. I am traveling more now. I used to avoid it but November will be the third month in a row I go to Europe for work. I am volunteering for projects and people are coming to me for advice. I am seeing a huge shift in the way people look at me at work now that they feel I am committed. Might have something to do with my newfound confidence as well.

Social gains:

I started talking to strangers, holding my head up, walking with confidence and allowing myself to be vulnerable (Models/The Natural). For example, I'm being more open with friends and colleagues about my personal life. I have always been very closed off/don't let people in.

I started flirting with women. Still a work in progress. I proactively avoided this my whole life. Reading all of these books I realized there is no shame or guilt in being honest about your sexuality. I am seeing major changes in my interactions with women. Catching a lot of them checking me out. I'm trying to get used to not looking away! Trying to figure out what my reaction will be and what feels natural to me (The Natural, pointing at them or doing a peak-a-boo etc.).

A girl at work said the girls in customer service want to know how I got my abs and that I was hot. Okay, I don't ever walk around without a shirt on... She's a 2 but who cares, there are some hot women in CS - it's progress! When I was in Europe I practiced approaching, not too aggressively though. More as Mr. Sociable (The Natural) when walking around town or entering a new bar. Got rejected a bit but had a couple girls going crazy for me.
One HB 7.5 was asking me to sit next to her, grabbing my hair and other major flirting. I am confident I could have ONS'd her but I am getting plenty of sex from my wife and I am not interested in something on the side at this time. I'm still learning and growing and want to wait until I become the man I want to be and see how it plays out with the wife. I'll admit it took some major self control not to escalate. It was still a lot of fun to flirt and feel sexual. And you know what? I got her number. I have never asked a girl for her number.

Another girl asked me to join her and her friend to play a game. Another started kissing my neck and grabbing my beard. A gay guy asked me if I own a microbrewery in the states because I have that kind of attitude. Haha. One night I couldn't sleep so I went for a walk and a drunk guy offered me some of his pizza. I obliged and was BS'ing with him while a group of girls in a bar were watching me, laughing and waving me to come in and drink with them. It was 2AM and I was sober and just trying to get some fresh air so I laughed, smiled and waved and went on my way.

Athol Kay made me realize that I can't change my personality and I don't need to make an excuse for it. I will rub some people the wrong way but if I don't show my true personality I also won't meet people who I like. The Natural, Models and Bang made me realize that some girls will think I am creepy (an old fear of mine) and that's okay, it's natures way of filtering out people you wouldn't have clicked with anyway.

What else?

Hobby gains:

I started playing music with friends again. I go record songs with my buddy and was just asked to play in a show for a friend's band.

Assertion gains:

I stopped asking permission, I simply inform of my plans.

My 2.5 year old has been coming into our room in the middle of the night and sleeping in our bed. This week I set up a gate and we have been training him to sleep through the night in his own bed. Last night was very successful. No crying, no resistance at bed time. If he woke up, he would come to the gate and say, "Mom and Dad I need your help" as I instructed him to do.

I have been planning our weekends (going out on the boat, going for hikes/picnics, making homemade pizzas). Whatever I feel like doing, I make it a family event.

I planned a vacation to Vegas with my wife, something we never would have done. I learned and taught her how to play black jack and we gambled and had a great time drinking free drinks and held our own at the table. We went kayaking on the Colorado River, it was great. Also happened to be her 30th birthday so we went to a couple raunchy Vegas shows.

Finance/responsibility gains:

I took to heart Athol Kay's Red, Yellow, Green theory. I am identifying these things in my life and making plans to improve. For example, I just paid off all my credit card debt (~$10k) and one of my cars. Then I put new brakes and rotors on it (learned a new skill), changed the oil, cabin and air filters, rear door openers and have spark plugs on the way. I did all of this silently without seeking my wife's approval. This weekend we are organizing and pricing items for a yard sale I will host.

Shit/comfort test gains:

My wife has thrown some major shit tests at me. The first couple of times, I was drunk and fell into her frame. I have been improving greatly in this. Yesterday was another. I told her I was going bowling with some colleagues (we had a guy in from the UK). She got really upset and I was able to practice a lot of the skills I learned in WISNIFG.

Without giving the whole convo: She feels left out like I am making decisions without her. She said she knows I am in charge and is not challenging that but she feels like she's not part of the team, that paying off debt is exciting and she wants to be a part of that (she's a SAHM). I said I thought she was cute when she was upset and there are decisions I will make that I would make regardless of her opinion and will not seek her approval for, although I can understand that she would want to know.

As you can see, I am still learning the balance. I'm STFU'ing possibly too much on some things.
She pressed more about how I don't talk enough about what I do at work and how my day was etc. and how it's part of our life. I said I do not see my work as part of our life, that it could all go away tomorrow and it's unimportant to our relationship. I am where I am and when I'm home I don't want to relive work. She comfort tested me with, "then what is important?!"

I said, "you". Then I Way of the Superior Male'd it, picked her up, twirled her around, danced with her, MMSL 10 second kissed her, made out with her, looked to our bedroom and Bang/The Natural said, "let's go somewhere more comfortable."

She resisted, "I'm on my period."

I persisted. "Do you think I care?" I brought her to bed and fucked her. Anal. When we woke up this morning we fucked again.

Speaking of that, sex has been pretty much whenever I want it. One day we had sex 4 times. And she does whatever I want and enjoys it. Getting into a little bondage/kinky sex too. I can wake her up in the middle of the night and bang, I'm getting blowjobs by the coffee maker while the kids watch TV in the morning (they are 2.5 and 1), the list goes on. Naked twister, all sorts of fun shit.

What the fuck was I doing all these years?

Setbacks:

Now for the dark part. There have been a couple of incidents when she got so upset that I wouldn't break frame and was STFU'ing that she physically started punching me and getting aggressive. We had been drinking and she has never done this in the 12 years we have been together but it was weird. She definitely bruised me up! I kept my cool but I have to admit this was shocking to me and I didn't know what to do at the time. I am still disturbed by it.

I sat her down and told her I do not accept her behavior, I would have left her for this if we hadn't been together so long and had two kids. That she hasn't done it in the 12 years we were together so I am giving her the benefit of the doubt. Plus I know I am making changes and she is frustrated (I didn't say this to her, just adding for context). Maybe I am going too fast. In one of the fights, she scuffed up my brand new Wolverines so I told her she was to give me $250 to buy a new pair. She did, along with a card explaining how sorry she was which I promptly hid in case things go South and I need proof of the reasons I left.

Divorce is always an option. I never would have said that 3 months ago.

So...

A lot more has happened that I didn't include in this post, mostly positive, so thank you all. I read the posts daily and try to learn as many lessons as I can from the community. I can't tell you how much this has done for me in such a short time. From scarcity to abundance and outcome fear to outcome independence. All the suppression of my natural instincts I was shamed into... It's going away and I see that I can be free - a man. There is always work to do, I'm sure you will hear from me again. By no means have I finished my journey.

But if this is just the beginning... holy shit.

-ddp
TL;DR: When you take on the red pill, expect the tension to build with her into the mother of all shit test tantrums as her comfort base erodes and she worries that this new you will dump her, and she seeks comfort, attempts to regain control, and test your fitness. This is a good thing and your opportunity to reset the marriage.

Reading through the experiences of many of us on here, I've noted that there's often a huge fight that occurs at some point after the red pill is taken. This fight is usually different than what is typical in the relationship with a new level of crazy and intensity. They are the ultimate shit and comfort test rolled into one. These fights are going to be exhausting, and it's critical that you succeed.

I wanted to bring this up here for discussion because everyone should be prepared for this to happen as they start to implement these changes in their own lives. I haven't seen a comprehensive treatment of this topic in the source material, and these fights are unique to the married guys (one of the advanced levels of our game, if you will). So, you won't find our other RP brothers having to deal with this.

The Main Event

My Main Event came this July. I had been introducing RP changes since around March. I had read NMMNG a couple years ago and laid a small foundation of boundaries at the time, but the major changes came after the rest of the RP thought was introduced to me. In a casual conversation one afternoon, she threw down some BS request, and I refused. Long story short, she hit the roof, left the house (dinner half-cooked, kids hungry, etc, etc), and moved her stuff into the guest room when she returned hours later.

In hindsight, I probably could have avoided the fight if I had seen the comfort test underlying the BS request, and responded to it instead of the request. That said, her reaction went completely nuclear, and it seems that this had been brewing for a while. I figure she was poking the bear looking for a fight, and if I got that one right, it was just a matter of time before this blew up over some other irrelevant topic. She was just about to get her period (not a coincidence), and I was already preparing myself for one of our typical tough weeks.

For three days she went rolling in the bat guano. Completely off the deep end. I held frame as best as I could. I probably talked with her too much, and I let my frustration show a couple times, but I held the line that I would not be ordered around and I would not tolerate her emotional outbursts. Mind you, when I said she was crazy, I'm not exaggerating. She accused me of everything she could think of, no matter how cruel or detached from reality. Some good examples include accusing me of conspiring with her mother to take away the kids, having a girlfriend on the side, not responding to her so that I could work with a lawyer on divorce papers. Obviously, none of these were true. She even tried to shame me for "letting" her stay in the guest room knowing that she had more stuff and that I was being controlling by not offering to switch with her. Dark days.

After around three days, she calmed down and said she'd like to discuss what was bothering her. We set up a time after the kids were asleep. She calmly laid out her concerns, dealing with the changes that had taken place, she felt that I wasn't being empathetic enough, and that she felt powerless because I "held all the cards" (I make the money and when push comes to shove she knows that I'd be fine on my own). She also expressed that she didn't know where these changes (the new me) were going.

Since then, after months of contemplation, I've boiled her concerns down to the following:

- She was pissed about the loss of her comfortable marriage to a guy that just gave, did everything she asked, and asked nothing in return.
- There was the big dread that she realized she might lose me.
- Once she was able to calm down, she started to realize that the hamster was way out of line and she was embarrassed by it.

At the time, I just tried to reassure her that my main commitment still resides with the family (not her specifically, but always with the kids first), and that I have come to realize that I have not been getting from the marriage what I needed. When she brought up that I seem like I'd be happier by myself, I didn't refute it.

While I was kind and supportive of her feelings, delivered calmly, I didn't want to let her off the hook, apologize profusely for her sadness, or give her any indication that things were going back to the way they were before. I also told her that her emotional outburst was complete unacceptable, no matter how upset she was, but that she was always welcome to bring concerns to me in a respectful manner.

Once she felt heard (it took a few hours), something incredible happened. I gave her a hug and a kiss on the forehead (a powerful paternal gesture, I might add in passing), and she buried herself in my arms. It was very loving and submissive, and I was a little shocked.

Things were never the same after this.

At this point, I felt it was appropriate to invite her back to the bedroom. Once we finally made it to bed, she came over and snuggled in to me and started escalating. It had always confused me how women will do this after a fight, but now with my RP perspective, it makes perfect sense. We had enthusiastic sex that night and the next morning before work, and continued to have sex almost every day for the next three weeks (the timeframe is not coincidence). This had never happened - not when we first started dating, not during our honeymoon, never.

She later admitted to me that despite being pissed, she was also incredibly turned on by my dominant stance during our cold war.

The Three Week Afterglow

So, things were great for three weeks. The mood around the house was a lot more positive, we worked well together, and we had much more fun around each other.

It was easy to get complacent. Things were going great, she got it! She was going out of her way to make me happy, and it was a huge difference. It's important at this stage to keep two things in mind: this won't last for ever, and she will go back to her old ways when she gets comfortable again. Stay vigilant. Remember, she hasn't changed, she’s still like that. She’s just in a little attraction bubble.

Secretly, she was recollecting her strength and starting to pick out the little issues that she would use against me. There is still some fear, uncertainty and doubt about this new way of things around the house, and she will test it. Since things were going so well, I let the little things go. She’d give me an occasional order instead of a request. She’d start throwing little tantrums about the kids or things that need to get done around the house. I would just ignore them instead of more proactive responses to nip them in the bud (in fact I'm still struggling with this). None of them escalated, so I didn't think anything more of it.

The Backlash

But then Aunt Flo comes knocking again. The frustration with kids and house chores come back, then the moods, then the cramps, headaches, and before you know it, the box of tampons are on the counter. In my case, things were still in pretty good shape going into the cycle. They changed quickly. As she became more uncomfortable and frustrated, she got back into the mode of avoiding or defending my advances. She became noticeably less playful and Since we stopped having sex for a few days, the attraction momentum trailed off.

Almost overnight, we seemed to go right back to our old ways. My natural reaction was to get discouraged, give up, and resign myself to the conclusion that this was just the way is was going to be. I lost any incentive to make it work, and turned my attention to just living my life while minimizing the wreckage of my home life.

The True Rebuild

Once this cleared, months of a long slow slog through the crap have passed now. The difference was that we had hit a tipping point and she now knew the New World Order, and her only choice was to be on board or move on. Things are improving slowly. She's starting to truly internalize that I am a new man, that it is good for her, that she actually prefers her new role and is more comfortable there. She of course unconsciously tests me, and will throw unbelievable crap at me to see how (or if) I react.

The key has been the overriding mindset of outcome independence and confidence in my own direction. If she doesn't want to be part of it, then that's her issue.

As a status indicator, I came back this last Monday night from a business trip, after the kids were in bed, to find her in the kitchen, lingerie’d up, baking me a pizza. She had been teasing me with texts all afternoon: "please hurry home, I've really missed you", etc. She planted a huge kiss on me and dragged me straight to bed while the pizza cooked, followed by serving me a late dinner in the bath and another romp in the sheets. In all, 4 enthusiastic times in the next 24 hours. Again, that had never happened in our 16 years together. After one of our sessions, she told me she realized while I was gone that our marriage meant everything to her and that she had not done enough to try to make me happy. She felt bad about the years of neglect.

A little absence is golden. It also doesn't hurt that she knew I had a cute, younger, recently divorced co-worker who works for me along on the trip. Her hamster was imagining long company-paid dinners and drinks.

Some takeaways and summary

- You know it’s coming, so stay calm.

- Employ true amused mastery and maintain frame - calm, controlled, you are the adult, you are in charge, this is the way it will be (no choices or negotiation), outcome independence (yes, divorce is an option). Your going to slip up, just stay on point.

- Don’t argue, don’t persecute her for the past, stay above all of it. The less said, the better.

- If she questions the change, simply acknowledge it, “there were some changes that I felt were necessary to improve myself.”

- She'll likely seek comfort. As long as it's done with respect, acknowledge and let her know you are committed to the relationship.

- Let her vent, but maintain boundaries. If she gets out of control, becomes hostile or insults you, the conversation is over. Likewise, as soon as the conversation stalls, strays, or goes in circles, then it’s time to wrap up.

- In the aftermath of the Main Event, don’t be surprised if she moves into the guest room for a few days. Don’t stop her, remain calm, and don’t back off. This is a shit test. She is looking for you to give in. She needs to make the first move here. She will have a chance to think about things and experience what it’s like to be without you. She may test you again. Eventually, she’ll get on board or she’ll state that it’s unacceptable. This is your opportunity to hit the big reset button. Take back control of EVERYTHING, swiftly and with authority. Don't let her back in until she concedes or says she wants out. If she continues to resist, stay in separation.

- If and when the Afterglow hits, enjoy it, be prepared for another backlash and don't get complacent. The pendulum will likely swing a few times before it settles in the new norm. Stick to the fundamentals - they are your only hope.
Strength, wisdom, compassion, humility, and inner serenity, My Brothers. Thanks for everything - I can't tell you how much this all has restored my life.

I'd love to hear any observations.
This is part six of a seven part series.

I ran this series on the blog and intentionally did not cross-post to Reddit as I felt these piece's are based primarily on my views more-so than what I feel will benefit others.

Basically, I wrote about my kids, wife, money, etc.

This post in-particular is one I feel will benefit the men here. I've included the links to the other writings.

The Order:

1. Son Where I talk about my little man and how he recently got into his first real fight and how I handled that.

2. Daughter A piece for my daughter, the little woman who has captured my heart.

3. Wife My wife is the balance to my masculine, I felt the need to write about that.

4. Finances I share my financial approach/strategy and offer some ways you can help unfuck your own.

5. Home We spend a significant amount of time in our homes, we need to ensure they represent who we are and not what society has told us we should be.

6. Tradition

7. Country I'm a nationalist, I'm proud of my country, and I think that the best way to raise the standard of America is by being better citizens.

Traditions Will Set You Free

As men, we’re part of a long line of survivors. Respect those who came before you.
Traditional Beginnings

Following your biological programming is the only means to optimal living. What is meant by ‘optimal’ is the type of life which you enjoy during and look back upon without regret.

In the past men and women followed their programming. This created what is now being called ‘Trad Life’. Our ancestors followed their mission and fell into what are now considered the ‘Traditional Roles’ for men and women.

In these roles we found our greatest strengths being displayed and because of this our pride and joy poured forth with ease. Men and women looked back on their youth and beamed with pride at having given it their all and while they may have hit some deep valleys along with those mountain peaks, they lived genuinely.

Like Sinatra said, “they did it their way” and they did it with all they had.

The masculine and feminine mentality and set of behaviors were around well before our weak society decided they were obsolete.

When you strip away each layer of lies that you’ve painted to cover your true self you’ll see that there is a raw ‘self’ which is dying to get out.

When you stop repressing who it is you are as a man and instead allow that ‘self’ to surface, it will initially be so overpowering you feel that you are going to punch through a wall, cry, and ultimately die.

What are you passing on to your children? What will your legacy be?

That’s how powerful our spiritual side is. That’s the ‘self’ traditional living allows us to share.

When we break the mold society has forced us into we’re able to experience the world on our terms and often times that means disregarding entirely the comforts which modern society has told us we absolutely need.

Trad Life in Modern Society

More and more people find themselves desperate for a sense of purpose and meaning.

This is a direct result of the comforts technology has provided us as well as the narrative society has spun and tried to program into our minds.

Through suffering we find purpose.

Men and women are unplugging and detoxing from the poison modern society has injected into their minds. They are stepping away from the screens and instead of shopping malls and electronics, they’re going into their backyard and choosing to experience the world.

When is the last time you truly appreciated a breeze?
The color of flowers?

The age and beauty of trees?

In an attempt to keep our sense of purpose and satisfaction in life we are shunning technological advances in favor of inferior yet more satisfying products and activities.

- Hunters will use re-curve or long bows as opposed to compound.

- Wives will cook from scratch as opposed to ‘ready in 5 minute’ meals.

- Men will rebuild what is broken as opposed to choosing to ‘just buying another one’.

- Women will defer to their man and support him vs being an ‘independent woman who don’t need no man’.

- Men will listen to their woman instead of viewing her as an incompetent idiot who is just tagging along.

There are a myriad of examples which can be given, but the universal truth between each piece of evidence in favor of trad living being presented is that it comes from authentic living.

When we think, act, and live in accordance with who we are on the inside, the greater our level of joy and living will be.

The software that society is programming and the support of the female imperative over the male has led to men repressing who they are and women absolutely depleting themselves of the essence which would otherwise fill them with the greatest pride and happiness.

We have to choose to take back our lives and the manner in which we live out our days. You can sit there and scroll for hours, or you can go outside and live.

Place your children in front of a screen or teach them to garden.

You can be overly critical with your spouse, or you can learn to love again. Men are men and women are women, there should be no discussion on what that means or whether it is an ‘outdated’ style of thinking.

Tradition is timeless

Read the entire post on the Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/07/15/traditions-will-set-you-free/
For more personal interactions: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
60 Days of Dread Week 6: Finances - Part 2

by liftingisredlife | May 2, 2019 | Link

60 Days of Dread: Finances

I AM NOT A FINANCIAL PROFESSIONAL AND THE BELOW ADVICE IS NOT MEANT TO BE CONSIDERED PROFESSIONAL INVESTMENT OR TAX ADVICE. PLEASE CONSULT WITH A PROFESSIONAL BEFORE MAKING ANY CHANGES

I grew up in a family that did not understand financial planning. When I was young, my parents divorced and I lived in a single-parent home for several years. I knew two things: I was poor, and I was not going to stay that way. I remember reading my first personal finance book, Rich Dad, Poor Dad. Although 90% of that book is fluff, it opened my mind to the possibilities of financial freedom.

Like fitness, there is a lot of analysis paralysis in personal finance. Developing financial literacy is less complicated than most think.

TL;DR version: Increase your income, reduce your expenses, pay down debt and invest extra money each month into a low-cost index fund that follows the overall performance of the stock market. Over time, you will become wealthy.

- Investing: Here is the fun part. Investing is the most important aspect of financial literacy. Some people think investing is complicated. Like fat loss, the formula is really simple. Be wary of people who sell you complicated investing products. To borrow a quote from Warren Buffet, "Beware geeks bearing spreadsheets." With investing, simple almost always beats complex.
  - Consistency Beats Complicated: There are thousands of people in the investment management industry who tell customers investing is complicated. The truth is, 70% majority of hedge fund managers underperform the market in any 10 year time period. Over a 30 year period, that number increases to over 98%. This is why Jack Bogle, the deceased founder of Vanguard, recommended people invest in a low-cost index fund that follows the performance of the stock market. Not only are the fees lower, but you will consistently beat the most educated and hard-working investment advisors.
  - Compound Interest: Einstein called compound interest the 8th wonder of the world. If you invested $12,000 in 1975, you would have over $1M by 2015 based on the performance of the market. This does not take into account inflation, but it does demonstrate how small choices can add up over time. Instead of asking how much something costs, start looking at purchases through the lens of opportunity cost. How much does that $10,000 diamond ring really cost? After 20 years, it is really $40,000 if you are earning 10% annually. Not to mention, diamonds are one of the most abundant resources on the planet. But you already knew that. You're not the type of guy who buys a $10,000 ring hoping to get decent sex.
  - 401(k): If you get a 401(k) match at work through your employer, you need to use it. A standard match is 5%. You are not going to notice a major difference in your paycheck by contributing 5%. However, you will soon notice the balance Growing with 10% of your income invested each month (5 from you and 5 from Your company). Your 401(k) should be invested in a low-cost fund. Look for two Numbers: Load Fee and Expense Ratio. A load fee charges you X% on your Contribution. The expense ratio is the annual expense that is paid to the fund for Management. There are funds with No load fees and expense ratios below 0.10%.
Vanguard offers dozens of investment funds that track the performance of the Stock market. I personally use the ticker symbol VTSAX. You can contribute $19,000 to a 401(k) each year. This does not include the company match.
• Roth IRA: You should also consider taking advantage of a Roth IRA. For most People, you can invest $6,000 a year (There are income limits for qualifying, most People do not make enough money to worry about this). This means $12,000 total Between you and your wife. Contributions to a Roth IRA can be withdrawn without tax penalties, and the compounded growth is not taxed. Think of this as a liquid Savings account that is earning substantial interest each year.
• Real Estate: Some people believe that real estate is a path to wealth. In my area, Real estate prices are so inflated that the numbers do not make sense. However, if You are from certain areas of the country, you may have more success with Finding low-cost homes. Bigger Pockets is an excellent resource for people Interested in investing. I am not an expert in this area, and I really can offer little Advice for people interested in this subject. There is a lot of smoke coming from "gurus" in this space. People who become wealthy through Real Estate Investing take the slow road. Beware of people promising fast gains.

• Expenses
  • Americans suck at saving money. This is unacceptable. Are you the type of man Who has to ask his wife permission to spend money? 69% of Americans recently Reported having less than $1,000 in savings. I had $1,000 saved when I was in High school. You need to track your expenses. Use a free tool like You Need a Budget. Your biggest opportunities will come from three areas: Housing, Transportation and Food. Living in a McMansion you can't afford to impress your Wife? Move. Drive a $50,000 truck with a massive payment each month? Buy a Used car from a reliable company (Toyota). Go out to eat every day? Start cooking at home. You will save money and be leaner. Most people can get much faster Results from cutting expenses than increasing their income.

• Income
  • Better posts than mine have been written on career goals. Read those posts.
  Anyone who can fog a mirror can get a decent job right now. Maybe you need two Jobs to reach your financial goals in the short-term. Do whatever it takes to Provide for yourself and your family.

Final Thoughts: Notice I did not say anything about having strong finances will improve Your sex life. Many men have a giant covert contract surrounding their finances: If I am a Good provider, my wife will sleep with me more. Wrong. You need to build wealth to make Your life better and to change your family's trajectory. Follow some of the steps above, and You will soon find yourself with a net worth above six figures. When you have a solid financial Foundation, you are able to take more risks in your career and investing. Boss makes you Mad at work? With $100,000 at your disposal, you have the leverage to leave. It will also reduce stress in your personal life. Stop worrying about how building wealth will make your wife feel. Stay in your own frame. Be your own judge. Build wealth like a man.

- Podcasts: Here are some financial podcasts I enjoy listening to.
  - ChooseFI
  - Afford Anything
  - Motley Fool
  - Bigger Pockets Money

- Books
  - The Simple Path to Wealth
  - Playing with FIRE
  - Total Money Makeover
  - The Millionaire Next Door
  - Set For Life
  - Your Money or Your Life

PS - I am not on Reddit much, but will try to be on more often for a few days to answer any questions.
Give Her the Opportunity to Provide Value
by JoATMoN9 | July 25, 2018 | Link

Subtitled: Controlling the Finances

Are you a captain, or a dictator? What happens if you start a task, and then someone comes along and instructs you to do that task? Or worse, what if you are never allowed to do a task of your own will...but are told to do everything you do? What does that do to your motivation to do that task?

I recently compiled a list of motivators, or why I do things. From most motivating to least:

1) Because I want to - I will do anything if it internally moves me. To find joy through doing is the biggest motivator.
2) If it's worth it - I'll shovel shit all day if you pay me enough. Payment includes value, not just money.
3) Gratification - Though not internal, I derive some joy by providing value. I can't live on gratification, but it does give positive feedback.
4) To save face - because I hate failure.

Take away the motivators, or only allow the bottom of the barrel motivators, and you're going to build resentment. I've often said I want my wife to do things because she wants to do them...not because I tell her to. And a classic line is: "You cannot negotiate desire." And this includes the desire to provide value.

But you'll hear often the advice to remove time and attention, or even reward good behavior. These are things you should do. But if you take them literally...you are doing them for her. Instead, you remove time and attention because the value provided by something else exceeds the value you get from your wife at that time. You reward good behavior to set the bar of your expectations in life for you. And that's the bottom line of frame: Set the bar for your life. Anything that meets it gets a value exchange. Anything that doesn't is discarded. Value leeching friends, a cunt of a wife, a shitty job, all of it.

But back to to motivators. You could command the bar be met. But more often than not, commands won't drive people to please you. Look at the first two again...they are internally driven. Looks at the last two...they are externally driven. If you can foster an environment where providing value to you checks one of the first two motivators, you will have better and happier compliance.

Case Study: Controlling the Finances

One of the boxes to check "to be RP" seems to be to control the finances. Much to my disadvantage because nearly everything that comes out of my mouth is sarcastic, words online are often taken literally. So here's a rewrite of this idea. Be the final authority on the finances.

I used to have absolute control of the money. All the money came in to a joint bank account, but not a dime came out unless I allowed it. I allowed an allowance each month of equal amount...even though i made significantly more. This meant i was funding her money to play with. Anything extra went to the family fund unless I allowed some to go to the monthly allowance.

For reasons with a long explanation...one day I said "fuck it, you handle your shit, I'll handle mine, separate accounts, and 50/50 on all house/child expenses. And if you can't keep your finances in line, for my protection, we're done." It was basically a financial divorce. And it turned out to be one of the best things I ever did.

My first mate is an adult. She should be able to handle her money. I give her the freedom to buy, save, and spend her money. She worked part time before because that's all she needed to. But now works more hours and reaps the rewards of those hours with paychecks nearing mine in some cases. Not only does this give her the dopamine rush of a larger paycheck...but guess what nearly even paychecks means if we do divorce.

In addition...I can save now and invest, I can go in on business deals, or I can blow my money as my heart desires.

At the end of the day...she comes to me if there's a big decision like changing jobs, buying large items, if theres an expense involving the kids, or if guidance is needed. Before I denied her the ability to provide that value because she didn't have a choice. Now she has a choice to provide that value, or not. And if not, we both know the outcome.

Yes I know her debt is still my debt. My funds are still her funds. But held separately, we cannot touch each others. And it's like the stock market...it's unrealized until you pull out. That's the risk involved. Don't like the risk? Then cut your losses and pull out now.
That case study was my original post. But I see it expands into this whole idea. How was I giving her the ability to motivate herself before? How was I giving her the ability to provide value before? The value that you want is the value that comes freely from a choice.

If you could autistic-ly schedule sex as many times a week as you want, and she agreed to scheduled starfish sex, would you be happy? Not really. May as well go masturbate, or buy a hooker. Because the joy comes from the decision to provide value. The value to you is enthusiastic sex. The value to her is enthusiastic sex with a mate she wants to keep. It's a freely given value trade for individually motivated reasons.

Getting in shape, eating right, hobbies, a clean house, sex, money, success, all these will thrive under internal motivation.

The bottom line is: To build an environment where that internal motivation can thrive. And that environment always involves the opportunity for the choice to provide it. That choice is sometimes motivated by aversion to the choice not to provide it. Removing your time and attention, while for you, also influences her actions. Because she values the value trade of time and attention. For her, it's worth it (motivator 2). Become the best version of yourself for you. But it also motivates her to want to keep you around because she likes being with a high value male (motivator 1). Doing these things checks the block of internal motivation for both of you. At the end of the day though, it's still a choice. She can choose not to. That's fine. And you can choose to find value elsewhere.
Teacher reflections on behaviour management
by Brushyourteethm8 | April 25, 2020 | Link

With lockdowns being in place, it is more important than ever to be the level-headed leader at home and that will mean dealing with challenging behaviour for many of you.

UK Primary teacher here. Though I have no kids of my own, this advice is based on nearly a decade of teaching children in 4-5 schools across my city from leafy suburbs to inner city estates. My behaviour management perspective has been hard won by working with Behaviour PRU (Pupil Referral Unit) staff and by trying (and often failing with) different strategies.

- Penalties and negative consequences do not change future behaviour for the better. It damages relationships, builds resentment and can just teach the person to hide 'negative' behaviours. This is the same for children, teens and adults. (Same principle - a friend once shouted at his puppy for messing on the carpet - he then had to battle with it doing it behind the sofa/curtains).

- Rewarding the 'right' choices is the most powerful strategy of all.

- Try to couple this with ignoring the negative if possible - this does have it's limitations e.g. intervene swiftly if there is imminent threat to safety but do so as calmly as possible and control your emotional reaction.

- Praise and emotionally based positive feelings being associated with chosen behaviour is incredibly powerful. The praise must be genuine, intrinsic, believable and not over the top.

- Children with higher level behavioural difficulties have usually had some form emotional turmoil in their past that they have had to endure. Often: neglect, abuse of some kind (physical/emotional) or generally being around toxic people.

- Those ^ children will find praise difficult to accept and it may stir up all kinds of negative feelings for them so there's a risk that they will then act out soon after being praised. This is because of a yearning for safety.

- Boundaries. See Maslow's hierarchy of needs. Children must feel safe and secure in order to be happy. They must feel secure in their environment and therefore need boundaries. How can they trust that you will look after them and they'll be safe? They will test your boundaries - in a similar way to shit testing.

- Be the caring oak (see stoicism). Children must feel that they have boundaries and there are consequences for transgressing them.

- Praise in public but apply consequences calmly and quietly.

- Rewards can be as simple as giving your time / attention, a smile, approval etc. and a consequence for negative behaviour can be the immediate and short term removal of these things until their attitude / choices improve.

-> Punishments / consequences. The most effective consequences (for improving future behaviour) are not the most severe, they are the most consistently applied ones. They are small explicitly laid out consequences that they know are guaranteed to happen. Punishments that are over the top in severity, where you make a big show of dishing out, are usually emotionally dished out, disproportionate in severity to the initial transgression and are most damaging to your relationship.

-> From Restorative Practices principles: "separate the deed from the doer". Avoid labelling a child’s character based on their actions e.g. instead of "You're such a naughty boy / disappointment - I can't believe you've broken that _____ / done xyz..." go for something like "I'm really disappointed / annoyed that _____ happened / that you chose to _____." Make sure to communicate that it is the behaviour that you don't like / want rather than the child themself.

-> So they throw food at lunch every day? A 30 minute sit on their own and the loss of a toy for the afternoon is far more effective than shouting at them, grounding them for a week, taking away all tv privileges etc. in an emotional tirade.

-> Keep a level head, be pragmatic and involve them in the process of understanding the impact of their actions (see Restorative Practice). Ideally after an incident, ALL involved will have their views and feelings heard and understood and opportunities are encouraged to: repair the relationships / 'right any wrong' / positively build and strengthen the relationships of all involved.

-> Finally, if a child is doing something that is annoying you and so you tell them to stop (such as tapping / bouncing a ball / flicking something on a table etc.), expect them to have the compulsion to do it 2-3 more times before they cease. I've no idea why this is - perhaps they were acting on some subconscious impulse that they need to get out of their system? Either way, once you understand / expect this then it may annoy you less.

Happy to clarify or elaborate on any points raised and I'd welcome critical discussion for others with experience.
Welcome 8,000 Subscribers to Married Red Pill

by BluepillProfessor | June 2, 2016 | Link

There have been a few changes over the past few weeks on Married Red Pill (MRP):

/u/thefamilyalpha stepped down as MRP moderator in order to pursue his "Family Alpha" blog concept. We are very pleased that he continues to participate on MRP, providing his sage advice and writings. His blog is not exactly "Red Pill" but it is an exceptional resource for positive masculinity. Check out The Family Alpha!

/u/stonepimptilist has stepped up as a new MRP moderator. Like TFA, Stone has his own blog you should check and also like TFA, Stone is an old navy guy who will be taking his "Hard Core Red" philosophy to the boards and doing more than his part to whip these guys into shape. Stone was taken on board with the express intention of "Reddening" the discussion on MRP. The rules on The Red Pill about concern trolling, shaming, and spouting purple pill nonsense have been sporadically applied in the past but Stone was asked to come aboard and apply them with a little more zeal. This is your only warning- No moralizing, no concern trolling, no stupid sniping at one another. Don't test him!

/u/theultimatecad and /u/whinemoreplease both mysteriously deleted their accounts although we suspect they are both lurking among us, probably trying to pull a Richard Bachman on us all and become famous (again) under a different name just to prove it wasn't a fluke.

Finally, some of you may have heard that we have some competition in the "Married Red Pill" label insofar as /u/redpillschool (head moderator who rules The Red Pill Reddit with an iron fist) has, instead of putting MRP on the TRP sidebar, decided to start his own "Married Red Pill" flair. There has been little activity on this flair to date and we on MRP see it as less a direct "competition" and more of us filling similar niches.

On TRP, the niche is younger and newly married guys, who are primarily there to talk about the state of marriage. On MRP, the niche is older married guys with a highly experienced panel of older married men to advise and direct other men in the same situation. There is room for both of us as the growth of MRP suggests. On MRP we want to provide actionable advice to men in marriage and avoid the "marriage is a terrible deal for men" diatribes because in other news, water is wet, the sun is bright and space is a near vacuum.

So welcome 8,000 subscribers and remember.....stay manly gentlemen.
New mothers have less sexual desire for male partners who express empathy
by cupoftoon | October 8, 2016 | Link

A new Canadian study that explores the sex lives of first-time parents has produced a surprising finding that could serve as a caution to well-meaning fathers.

The one-time survey of 255 first-time parents with infants, published in the Journal of Sex and Marital Therapy, found that new mothers reported lower sexual desire when their partner expressed more empathy - a finding that turns conventional wisdom on its head.

"We had results that are all in line with empathy being good for both people, and then we have this one little finding that wasn't consistent," said the study's lead author, Halifax-based psychologist Natalie Rosen. "I would like to replicate this in other studies before drawing grand conclusions."

Rosen speculated that some fathers are perhaps so intent on helping their wives deal with the challenges of parenthood that they assume avoiding sex is the best policy.

"They might be saying they're OK with less sex," said Rosen, a professor with the Department of Psychology and Neuroscience at Dalhousie University.

"They might be saying, 'I'm just going to kind of back off no matter what sexual needs I might have.' That might actually lower the desire that the woman has."

Rosen, who also works as a sex therapist, said she sees this pattern when counselling those coping with sexual dysfunctions.

"Partners think they're being really understanding and supportive, but they're actually just reinforcing and encouraging avoidance ... It comes across as very supportive and both people think it's a good thing, but it reinforces ... that sex is not that important."

Rosen stressed that her speculation could be shot down by further research, so she offered another possible explanation. She said it might be a mistake to assume that the fathers' increased empathy caused reduced sexual desire in their partners, when the causal link might be the other way around. In other words, the new mothers who reported reduced sexual desire may in fact be causing their partners to express more empathy.

source!
[Editorial]: Why RPW Hates MRP, or, How All of You Failed a Large-Scale Shit Test. Inspired by the recent PPD thread and BPP's Subsequent Post

by RPAlternate42 | March 16, 2016 | Link

Originally, I was going to respond to this comment from /u/BluePillProfessor.

We use the term Red Pill as a sort of in-joke for waking up from a system of lies as like in the matrix. We also use the term "Red Pill" to refer to a man who is aware of the system and is/has woken up.

These are fine, at first. Later, I've come to know that "Red Pill" is just a term for a very specific sexual strategy. "The Red Pill," the subreddit that started it all, is literally "Discussion of sexual strategy in a culture increasingly lacking a positive identity for men."

Then there is "Married Red Pill." MRP is that same sexual strategy, but for men in marriages. To the boys in TRP, MRP is anathema to their system of praxeology. TRP eschews marriages. Unsuprisingly, MRP, generally, eschews marriages too. In fact, I'd go so far as to say if an MRP man were to get divorced he wouldn't get married again. I'd go even further to say that if they were to do it all over again, and MRP man would have never gotten married.

So that's Red Pill, for men: execute a sexual strategy that maximizes sexual success for the man. Marriage tends to counteract that maximization of sexual success. Sexual success, for men in a Red Pill sense, is as many sexual partners as possible. The long game for some may be to find that virtuous woman with whom he finds pleasure in both a sexual context and long term companion with whom to father children, legitimately; Even a TRP man has some realistic ideal as to the nature of a man's true biological success.

Marriage -legal marriage- doesn't play into this strategy as it provides no sexual success to him and is even prohibitive in terms of financial and resource allocation success; The legal entity that sanctifies the union seems to have a de-facto system in place to enable the woman and disable the man. Whether this is truly the situation doesn't matter, it is presented to a great many men in this way.

Then there's the odd little subreddit called "Red Pill Women." One may wonder why they refer to themselves as "Red Pill" when they are all women. But remember: Red Pill is just an interchangeable term for sexual strategy. IN RPW's case, it's sexual strategy for women.

The Man's sexual strategy is to strive for the top 20% (or better) of men in order to attract, and keep, as many women as possible for the purposes of sexual success. A man's sexual strategy is a singular one.

A woman's sexual strategy, on the other hand, is dualistic. Being the gatekeepers of sex and the bearers of children, she wants to find the best possible genetics for the strongest possible child while also procuring as much resources as possible in order to ensure that child's survival and thriving. The Red Pill refers to this as Alpha Fucks/Beta Bucks.

And I'm just preaching to the choir here: we all know these things... but we seem to forget it from time to time. And I have to specify these things in order to make my argument clear:

Red Pill Women are Red Pill, through and through. Their advice is directly geared towards finding the best possible scenario for child production and child rearing... but while The Red Pill speaks about these things very overtly, RPW is much more covert about it, soft, even. They won't come right out and say, "welcome to RPW... we know you've been jumping from cock to cock and are looking to settle down now, and we know the years of constant sexual freedom have stripped your ability to properly bond with a mate properly, so we are here to help! We will give you the tools to try to be a woman that men will want to settle down with."

RTW clearly dislikes MRP, as a whole. Though they seem to, at least, not hate TRP. but why? MRP and TRP seem to have the same mindset and MRP should look better to them as MRP is about being a better man (and husband) and TRP is about, well, having nothing to do with marriage. So why the love for TRP and not MRP?

It's simple: MRP disrupts the dualistic mating strategy the woman thought she was successful with. MRP takes the beta the woman locked down into marriage and attempts to mold him into an alpha. She didn't want to marry an alpha (he may stray) and she didn't want to marry a man that other, younger, hotter women are attracted to because she may (gasp!) have to stop being a post-wall mess. RPW is for health and fitness and beauty and femininity... but every one of them know that there is a wall, most of them have hit it (or are about to hit it) and an alpha husband is a constant reminder that they are getting older while he is getting more attractive. And a man who knows he has options may decide to start taking advantage of those options.

But why doesn't TRP get this hate?

That's easy: TRP has ultimately filtered themselves from the pool of marryable men by identifying themselves as both men who won't marry, and men who they don't want to marry. And why don't they want to marry them anyways? Because they see TRPers like they see MRPers: men who aren't truly alpha but are trying to be alpha... liars, basically.

The difference, the line they draw between MRP and TRP, is that see MRP men as having tricked their wives: They married (demonstrating beta status) but then decided to become alpha ("suddenly," is the word they use) which makes that snowflake wife feel bad about herself. It doesn't take much to imagine them referring to what we do as emotional rape. We can see why they have a problem with MRP: A woman feels bad and might have to work hard to keep a man gaining value every day.

In short, every issue RPW has with MRP: the "faking" and "lying" about not being a beta makes them have to assess that this is exactly what RPW is doing: pretending to be a high value woman who had a stint on the cock carousel but needs to lock down that beta for marriage before her age and lack of social status renders her an aging spinster.
So here's the crux:

You all got shit tested by RPW and then decided to argue about it with them. You failed a large-scale shit test.

RPW is Red Pill... but they are not our Red Pill. A woman's sexual strategy and our sexual strategy are at odds, and only intersect where P meets V. Until P meets V, RPW should be disregarded in the same way you would disregard any woman or group of women throwing shit tests: A&A and Fogging with a high helping of Amused Mastery.

EDIT: BLECH. GO LIFT.
The Rational Male is now available on Audible
by Rollo-Tomassi | April 13, 2016 | Link

I'm proud to announce that my first book The Rational Male is now available on Audible and will be up on iTunes and Amazon within the week.

It's been a long time coming I know, and there's a long story behind it, but the audio quality and narration by Sam Botta was well worth the effort.

Please let me know your feedback here. This is the first time I've ever produced an audio book and I have plans to do the 2nd, so TRP's input is vital to me. This is your book as much as mine.
How to release the sex kitten within your wife?

by spexer | February 10, 2016 | Link

Thanks to a year of MRP, I now have exactly the amount of sex I want (ie: almost whenever I want). So thank you brothers. Step 1 complete.

Now I have been focusing in improving the quality of the sex. I have had some success in taking my stale bedroom and revitalizing it. My limited success is listed below, as the best I can offer thus far as a contribution in this arena. But I consider it as going from level 1 to level 3, where 10 would be ultimate porn sex with your wife.

So my ask is for the seasoned pros here contribute their tips and guidance. And what other sources do you suggest?

For books, Sex God Method is often touted, and I am working my way through it. It is a bit disheartening to see videos of the author. He is a young 20 something, so I do not know how well his 'wisdom' works for those of us in our 40s on year 10+ with the same partner. I am currently reading Mark Manson's Models book, but cannot recommend it yet.

So for the beginning steps to help your wife WANT to become a dirty girl with you in the bedroom, here is what I have found successful.

- take the red pill, lift, make a MAP and start to become the man.
- did you read that part about Lifting? My wife said she didn’t like muscle guys. But now she grabs my new bulging muscles throughout our lovemaking session, and it gets here really into it.
- stop asking for sex, or apologizing for your libido. You are a man and you are proud of that.
- flirt with her constantly, and have foreplay that you end suddenly with a get up and go grin. This gets her hamster running on the sex wheel, and gets her revved up. NOTE: make sure that none of your flirting is a feeler to see if she is in the mood. You are not asking for permission ever again.
- Go Caveman. She sees that primal lust in your eyes and you lose control to your animal instincts. Note: this is not you checking in with her, or making sure she has an orgasm.
- be physical, not verbal. Don’t ask or suggest a new position, but move her body to what you want. manhandle her.
- Make her responsible for her own orgasm. Encourage this by telling her how hot it is when she touches herself, put the toys in her hand, guide her to what you want her to do.
- be possessive and dominating. Start the dirty talk on the easy level by saying or making her say who owns that pussy, etc. ramp it up but be careful of anxiety/self-shame. (she might like to be called a dirty girl, but not a whore). with actions, test the water with a bit of spanking, a hand on the throat, a bit of a pull of the hair, to see how she responds.
- Do not be serious. Instead, be either lighthearted in bed, which encourages play and fun, or be passionate and intense - IE the caveman losing control for how much he wants his girl. Flip between these two behaviors.

- Explore fantasies and interests in an encouraging manner. Take quizzes like http://mojoupgrade.com/ - but be supportive about whatever deep dark fetishes she might reveal.
- Listen to her. Respect the hard no. Have a safe word. Make sure she feels this is a safe place, and that she is respected (believe it or not, this will make her comfortable with exploring the side of herself that wants to be disrespected).
- Understand that she might not know what to do, or what is ok. This here was the big realization for me. I thought with my wife that I had not earned the crazy sex side of her that likely some Chads got in college. I have learned that it is likely she has never explored that side of herself, and it is on me to lead her to the amazing places we can reach. My goal is to create a sexual environment that is also fulfilling and mind blowing to her. But waiting on her to give that to me has cost me 10 years, put me in a dead bedroom and built a lot of resentment. Now with me finally stepping up to lead, it has become fun times for her and me, and I have not heard about her s'posed low or no libido in over 8 months.

So those our a few notes on what has worked for me. There is now formula, but reading tips like this from others has helped me up my bedroom game. I look forward to reading what has helped you.
Advanced techniques for defeating the Starfish
by SirGaetanDugas | May 12, 2017 | Link

This topic comes up all the time. The standard advice is some variation of Dread game, aloofness or refusal.

That advice is sound when compared to the faketalk out of Askmen or Dead bedrooms BUT from time to time when I need to soak the sheets and hear screaming while getting nails dug into my spine....a different approach is needed.

Its something I learned not from men talking around the TRP water cooler, but from women.

Start a fight

Bitches do it all the time. They do it to feel important or loved or to get attention. Most men would never do it out of fear. Most men are afraid of womens emotions. Most men are scared little boys.

So now, sometimes, I do the same as women and relish the act of inciting melodrama. The exact opposite of Billy Beta who will massage feet to avoid conflict. The exact opposite of rational, normal man who doesnt quite understand the point of deliberate provocation. He wonders why women enjoy reality TV which is nothing but emotional violence. I know why and now you do too.

I call her a bitch, just like her mother. Or I tell her lots of women can be her replacement if she keeps whining.

Or tonight, in the middle of so-so sex, I grabbed her face and left tit and asked what deleted text messages I would find on her phone if I looked? Said are you my good girl or bad girl?

Boom. Instant change and the starfish became a porn star. I literally felt her pussy open wide and clamp down while moaning. From something I said

Use emotion and sex gets much much better

I dont mean emotion like..."You are my everything!"

I mean "Fuck me like its the last time, you know, before I move out and start fucking your hot best friend"
It's science! Fat fucks have declining levels of marital quality compared to fit hardbodies.

by ho-li-fuk | October 21, 2017 | Link

This study says that there is a correlation between risk factors for Cardio Vascular Disease and improving or declining married relationships. If you are a married man, and your risk factors for CVD are increasing, the quality of your relationship will decline over time. If you are a married man, and your risk factors for CVD are decreasing, the quality of your relationship will increase over time. The authors of the study said some very interesting things related to decreased risk of CVD: “Change in both these risk factors for the improving quality group may have been driven by weight loss (change in BMI −1.07 kg/m2, 95% CI −1.73 to −0.42 kg/m2).”

My extrapolation of this study into generalized information consists of two main points:

• Lift - If you are a fat fuck, your life will suck. The less fat you are, the less your life will suck. For married men, your wife will want to fuck the slimmer, fitter you. You will be more of a prize. Other women will notice this to. If you are not prioritizing your time and attention on a physical fitness plan for yourself, you’re an idiot, and you’re wasting your time.

• Sexual Marketplace Value - While this study focuses on LPL and HDL cholesterol counts over time, read between the lines… If you were the hot, fit guy that got the girl, then turned into a fucking fat slob, your SMV lowered. If nobody else will fuck you, why would your wife. Your value in the marketplace will reflect on how your wife should be treating you. (notice I said should).

From the Study:

What this study adds - Improvement and deterioration of longitudinal relationship quality appears to be associated with respectively positive and negative associations with a broad range of objectively measured cardiovascular disease risk factors.

Further research needs to determine if effective marriage counselling, or when appropriate, abandoning a deteriorating relationship, has longer term physical health benefits over and above psychological well-being.

None of this should be a mystery to any of you here. I saw an opportunity to read a paper about this, and share it.
Be Married Like it’s Your Job (Career Beta-Bux? Get in here!)

by 2gunsgetsome | April 21, 2016 | Link

When I started my MAP, I did a LOT of introspection, as do most of us. My married relationship was pathetic, but my career was exploding (in the good kind of way). How could this be? How could I be so effective in my career (to make those sweet Bux) but be such a Beta chump that I couldn’t get sex from the woman who helped me spend that money? I was the common denominator in both facets; a canon of MRP is “You are the problem. Fix Yourself” so I took the proverbial step back and looked at my contributions to the two sides of my life with an engineering mindset.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Am I / Do I</th>
<th>In My Job</th>
<th>In My BP Married Relationship</th>
<th>In My RP Married Relationship</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Successful?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Getting There</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantly and consistently bust my ass?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bring indispensable value?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Know my value?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sufficiently Compensated?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Getting There</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Willing to walk away for a better offer?</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Well there’s the problem! Let’s talk about each of these elements:

Busting My Ass

In my job, I do everything in my control that needs to be done to ensure the successful completion of a project; I put in the hours, the effort, and the passion. I take control of more things just so I can ensure they get done. I learn new skills in a constant state of improvement. This improvement is mine and I do it for myself.

If something doesn’t work the first time, I do it again without hesitation. I hold my team to the same standard. Even though I frequently delegate, I am able and willing to do the job of anyone on my team. If a coworker ever whines about something not being “their job”, I’ve been known to wordlessly do that thing, right there in front of them, usually looking them in the eye, then go right back to handling my own responsibilities.

During my plugged-in existence in my marriage, I did fuck-all for self-improvement; I didn’t lift, much less exercise. I procrastinated house maintenance and generally tried to do as little work as possible. I lounged around and felt entitled to sex. Since then, I’ve crushed the weights, sharpened my style, have my house, yard, and vehicles in top shape, and I do the chores as if I were single. I can honestly say I bust my ass, and I like it!
Bring Indispensable Value

I am the recognized subject-matter-expert in multiple areas at my current company. I became the SME by repeatedly demonstrating competence of execution and correct judgement. Besides that, I get calls a couple times per month to answer a question on a product or project I produced while working a previous job. I get calls from machine shops to interpret drawings done by other companies! One could say that this is value that I'm giving away for free, but I see it as an investment in my professional network.

I'm a cool cucumber when shit hits the fan.

In my BP marriage, I thought bringing home a salary (the equivalent of just showing up as an adult) was enough. Well, everybody’s money is green and mine came with the burden of covert contracts. While not completely value-less with respect to basic-needs, money is nothing special. Also remember, the law says she can have your monetary value without your presence. The valuable contributions you make to be indispensable must be intrinsic.

Now I lead my family on adventures, I have hobbies, and I’m building a broad social circle. I’m a woodsman, a marksman, a mechanic, a musician, an oyster and whiskey connoisseur, and all around interesting motherfucker. I’m teaching my sons to be the same way. I can dance my boots off in a country bar. More and more, I’m becoming The Oak in my marriage and the Alpha my bedroom. I would date the shit out of me.

Know My Value

At the beginning of my career, my mentor gave me some advice which I followed: Always keep your suit clean, your resume up to date, and every year or so, go find a job posting, have an interview, and get an offer. Do it just before performance evaluation and raise time. This does two things; puts a number on your value that you can compare come raise time, and makes you think about why you choose to stay at your current job. Is it just the money? The short commute? The reputation you've earned? The cute secretary?

Earlier I made a specific choice of words to indicate that my mission is the success of the project, not specifically the company. I can execute a project and bring value to any company at which I work. If I got fired today, I could pick up the phone and start another job or three on Monday with someone I know. In a week, I could have an interview with a stranger. I know this because I've done it repeatedly (not the getting fired part...). My current company knows this because they hired me based on past performance and reputation. I know they know I know.

Before finding TRP/MRP, I had no comprehension of the concept of SMV. Sure, I knew most hot chicks got with hawt dudes, but I was married so I didn’t have to compete in the sexual market place. False.

After working my MAP for a year, I’m at Dread Level 7 and gaming lots of attractive women. Let’s call it “Being interviewed” because I’m even getting some “offers”. Knowing my value in the external sexual marketplace is effective for maintaining abundance mentality when my perceived value is trading low domestically. Eventually, my wife will also understand my SMV. Or she won’t. And I no longer care; read on...

Compensation:

At first it would seem that you get compensated with money in your job and sex in your marriage, but this isn’t really what it’s about.

As Frank Underwood said about the Lobbyist Remy Danton in House of Cards:

> “Such a waste of talent. He chose money over power. In this town, a mistake nearly everyone makes. Money is the Mc-mansion in Sarasota that starts falling apart after 10 years. Power is the old stone building that stands for centuries. I cannot respect someone who doesn’t see the difference.”

All things being equal, it’s easy to jump from job to job if the only variable in compensation is just a little more money and a different name at the bottom of the check. But if the respect shown to me in the lower-paying environment allows me to operate with autonomy, that’s a more powerful form of compensation. With power in your job, you get money without asking because your contributions are too valuable to be lost to the competition. With power in your relationship, you get sex without asking because your contributions are too valuable to be lost to the competition.

Be Willing To Leave For a Better Job (AKA Breaking Oneitis)

Every company pays you money and every girl has a pussy. Every chair keeps your butt off the ground. If my chair suddenly lost its legs, I’d get up and find another seat. If my company stopped paying me, I’d leave, simple as that. If my wife stopped having sex with me entirely, even Beta-me would have popped chocks and rolled out of there. Of course nothing is ever that simple...

I’ve had jobs that paid exceptionally well but micro-managed the shit out of me. Desiring the type of compensation I detailed above, it didn’t take much discomfort to inspire me to look elsewhere, even though the money was flowing. Each time I went to look for another job (even during my yearly value calibration), regardless of the season, there was always someone hiring. Maybe not in the city or even state that I currently lived, but there were always jobs available. Always. Not just jobs, but better jobs. [abundance mentality]

Following another gem of advice my early mentor gave me, the first thing I do when I sit down at a new job is write a letter of resignation and print it without a date or signature. I keep that in an envelope in my desk as a reminder that I only have to tolerate what I want to tolerate and walking out the door without emotion is just that easy.

Eventually, I took a job that paid average at first but showed me respect and allowed me to operate with autonomy. This company quickly realized that when they let me do my thing, they reaped increasing benefits so they adjusted my salary accordingly (industrial mate retention). This job will be hard to leave unless the status quo changes, but my LOR is in my drawer and I’m already mentally prepared to deliver it.
Examining my Beta role in my marriage, I had epic oneitis. I felt shame for even considering divorce or infidelity but yet I did nothing but whine and sulk. If this were a job, I would been trudging to work each day to punch the clock, putting in minimal effort, never getting a raise, and bitching to the bartender, while never even opening up the help-wanted section of the paper.

Establishing abundance mentality and willingness to walk away has, for me at least, taken the longest of the critical milestones on my MAP. I don’t have unsigned divorce papers in a drawer at home, but after confirming the abundance of attractive, enthusiastic alternatives during Dread Level 7, the hammer is cocked. Researching the divorce laws in my state and talking through the process with some experienced friends has mentally prepared me to squeeze the trigger.

Conclusion

How could I possibly expect my marriage to be as successful as my career? I wasn’t doing any of the things required for success! Identifying and correcting the major discrepancies between my effort and awareness levels at work and at home has made my satisfaction level at home approach that which I experience at work. It’s taken me over 12 years of conscious execution to achieve what I have in my career so I don’t expect one year of MAP-ing to produce equivalent results, but the data is undoubtedly encouraging.

Undefined problems are the hardest to solve and the most defined are the easiest. Define your critical parameters then apply to yourself the energy, skills, and attitude you’ve developed while making your career successful. Earn the respect and subsequently the power in any relationship you choose to have.

Obvious Questions

1. Why am I choosing to stay in my marriage instead of leaving to be an “independent contractor”? Two reasons:

- Because I feel responsible for the day to day influence on my subordinates (young kids).
- Even professionally, I’ve never left a job in the middle of a project. My personal code is to see things through. The MAP is my project and observing my wife’s response is within the project’s scope.

2. Is my personality this intense both at work and at home?

- No (well, maybe). I pull shenanigans at work all the time. Morale on my team is the envy of other groups. I’m actively working to improve my joviality at home.
[FR] The three words every wife wants to hear: I'll handle it by Necroptotic | June 7, 2016 | Link

Summary: We had a stressful situation. Its my responsibility to take care of it, so I did. Had Grade-A enthusiastic sex for days.

Body: Married 5 years with 2 small kids. We have outgrown our house and are trying to buy a nearby house that'd give us 3 times the space. At the same time we are trying to find people to rent out our old place as we own it. The wife is naturally stressed out about this situation. I've learned so much from TRP/MRP in the past couple of years that I can smell her shit/comfort tests coming and can redirect her actions and behavior.

I fully understand how stressful buying a house is. However, I'm also fairly OI. It doesn't matter what I feel on the inside, but I know that if I start acting stressed out and whine, she'll feed off of my emotions and amplify everything. When the wife worries about our offer falling through, I blandly state that there are other houses and other towns. When we have potential renters flake out, I simply remind her that we could get a dozen people in if we just dropped the rent by 5%. Stoicism works wonders.

Every time a new issue would pop up, I'd say 'I'll handle it' and then just take care of it. Her knowing that I have my shit together multiplied her attraction to me. Most nights over the past few weeks I'd literally lie down in bed and she'd just hop on me. As I took care of problems that kept getting bigger and more urgent (had to switch mortgage places at the last minute, etc) I'd get fucked better. Absolutely 100% correlation. I'll spare the details but the type of stuff we do now regularly is the type of stuff I used to jerk off to 2 years ago when I was full-on blue pill.

So what's the moral lesson? Guys, just handle your shit. In this short example, I didn't go to my wife complaining about an issue or seeking validation. Blue Pill me would have, and this situation would have gotten much worse. Instead I led my wife and it just made her want to fuck me more.

Conclusion: Women want men not whiny shit bags.
Hunter Drew (The Family Alpha) full video interview on The 21 Report by Dream_21 | October 28, 2017 | Link

- YouTube link: https://youtu.be/BlddzX_0Ew4
- Vid.me link: https://vid.me/T0mEn
- Facebook link: (uploading)

Behind the scenes interview with Hunter Drew after his first ever presentation at The 21 Convention 2017 Ten Year Anniversary special event.

To my knowledge, this was also his first time ever giving a public speech [outside of the military?).

Only 2 presentations got a standing ovation at the 4 day event, his was the first.

And a look at what's to come... https://imgur.com/a/NPHJD full 1 hour video podcast.

If you appreciate the free videos make sure to support them by dropping a like/comment/share on the video. Little stuff like that helps.
Here I Am
by domitp | September 20, 2017 | Link

Lurking for 4-5 months. My first post. 48. Married 10 years. 2 kids.

Arrived at this place in an unusual way. I was not dealing with a dead bedroom. I was not unhappy with my marriage. I’ve been blessed with a very good woman and terrific kids. Perhaps that’s because I’ve always been a mix of Alpha and Beta. That said, this place has opened my eyes to the fact that I was a hell of a lot more beta than I ever would have thought. Was also surprised to discover that I had some definite Mr. Nice Guy tendencies. I thought I was crushing it… realized I had and have a shit ton of work to do.

My wife and I have a good marriage but there were some issues. The biggest one for me was I hated the way we would fight. When we had disagreements they would escalate to the point where we would both give each other the silent treatment. It could last for days. It was toxic. Also a major pain in the ass if one of them happened on a vacation or just before a fun night out or before a planned fun weekend with the kids.

Over a year ago, I started searching online for a better way for us to handle disputes. I stumbled across a website called Taken In Hand. It’s a domestic discipline site. Basically, it’s delivers some similar messages as MRP - the man needs to be alpha. The man needs to be the head of the household. But he can’t just be domineering. He needs to demonstrate that he is worthy of being the HOH. This was my first introduction to owning your shit. There is also an erotic/discipline spanking component to this philosophy.

I started to walk down this path. Incredible results as I started to own my shit and really take charge around the house with a positive attitude. I was fortunate in that I have always been alpha-leaning and I enjoy being in charge. Foolishly, over the years I allowed myself to be conditioned by a society that told me everything should be fair. If I cooked, then she should clean. If I made the bed today, she should make it tomorrow. What nonsense. I threw that crap out immediately and just started following my natural instincts. I love being a leader so I lead. I don’t mind having more on my plate so I just started loading up.

Our happy home was much much happier.

So I went further down the rabbit hole, which led me to discover Dominant/submissive relationships. This is where things got really fun. We always had a good sex life in that we had sex regularly, about 3-5 times a week. Again, I’ve always been naturally dominant in bed and she’s naturally submissive but... I was definitely holding back. I would want to be respectful, considerate, and not have her think I am some awful macho douche. I didn’t realize it at the time but I was only expressing a fraction of myself. Dominant is who I am so some of it would show itself but just a sliver. Once I embraced our natural D/s tendencies our sex life went through the roof. I wish I had known about Sex God Method before because it would have made it go more quickly. Basically I wrote my own version of SGM by studying and practicing D/s.
Researching D/s led me to MRP. What a discovery. Took it all to another level. Finally everything that I sensed in my gut about women was explained and it made perfect sense. Men and women work best together in this dynamic.

GREATEST TAKEAWAYS FROM MRP:

1. LIFT. This was huge for me. I had improved so much as a husband, father, leader when I went Dom in my marriage but I was missing this key ingredient. I had the top position by dint of leadership and force of will but learning about SMV and what women really respond to was an eye opener. Lifting has improved everything. I’ve never looked better. Never been in better shape. Wife now feels my muscles, rubs my ass with delight as she passes me. I always did well with women but stopped getting looks on the street as I entered my late forties and nobody ever rubbed my non-existent muscles. Now looks are coming back. In the past IOL were because of my face and looking fit in clothing even though there were never any muscles underneath. Now IOL’s are coming because of posture and some muscle tone. I still have a long way to go to be where I want to be but that’s a great thing – it’s something to work toward. I love a good project. 4 months progress in the gym: Started: 5’11’ 190lbs. 27% bf Never really lifted before. Today: 175 lbs 22% bf. Want to get to 15% while continuing to gain muscle if possible.

2. FRAME. Never heard of this before. Never heard of shit tests before. Game changing information. STFU is one of the greatest gifts to mankind. Constantly thinking to myself... any word out of your mouth right now is just throwing a log on the fire. I had made so many improvements to our relationship during D/s that I couldn’t understand why she was still giving shit sometimes when I knew she was so much happier than ever before. Shit tests explained it all. They will always shit test. Not their fault. Nothing wrong with it. You have to demonstrate to them every day that when the lions storm the cave, you are the best caveman for the job. Turn into drunk captain and she will be eyeballing a replacement lickity split.

WHAT I NEED TO WORK ON?

1. Getting butt hurt. I am way too obvious still when I am irritated about something. For me it’s not usually a reaction to being denied sex. It’s the day to day things. It’s the shit test. It’s when I’m tired or worn out from the kids. I have to spend more time practicing fogging AA and AM. Must improve in this area. Only upside is I now recognize when I’m acting butt hurt and see it as weak. In the past, I’m embarrassed to admit I would indulge in being butt hurt. Sort of got off on being the pissy one around the house. She had to walk on egg shells around me. Disgusting and embarrassing. Got us nowhere. Would lead to silent treatments and lost days. That does not happen anymore.

2. By outward appearances, I seem very much in command of our relationship and our household. But deep down, I know that I’m still afraid of her reactions. I need to improve my OI. I still catch myself factoring in what she will say or how she will react before I make a decision. I have completely taken over the role of being the one who makes the decisions in our house and she is on board with this. Loves it. But I still catch myself trying to make the “right” decision… by that I mean, the one that I know she wants. Need to work on making the decision I want regardless of how she will feel about it and just own it afterward.

3. Still looking for attaboys. One of the things I love about MRP is its emphasis on taking care of your shit. Laundry needs to be done, do it. Dishes in the sink, clean them. Make the bed. Change the light bulb. Take out the trash. Have an emergency plan. All of that stuff is gold. Makes me feel better every time I handle something. That said, if I’m completely honest, a part of me is still looking for a pat on the back. I catch myself wanting her to notice that I cleaned all the pots and pans. Not really a covert contract in my case but more like looking for Mommy’s approval. Have to get past that. Must be more OI.

4. Lift. Lift. Lift. Without any doubt lifting is the not just the cornerstone but the whole damn foundation of this thing. I was never a gym guy. Was always athletic and always in pretty good shape so I could get away with it. Not so in the last 10 years as I started to morph into dadbod. I’ve seen nice results these past 4 months that I’ve been lifting. I’m doing Strong Lifts and started with just the empty bar. Was mortified the first day in there. Now I’m a regular but I need to work on being more consistent. I have been pretty good but have skipped some days. Need to lock it in. Funny thing about the gym, everyone feels better after they’ve gone, and everybody knows they will feel better if they go… and yet still, some days, it is such a chore to push myself to get off my ass and get on that iron. Not sure why that is but it’s something I have to continually work on.

Can’t wait to see where this journey takes me next.

Thanks to all you contributors. Incredible work.

EDIT: some typos
Inevitably in every book I read and podcast I listen to about marriage, red pill, and social dynamics, I come to an 'ah-ha' moment where a deeply rooted personal belief about how the world really works is uprooted, and replaced with a much more logical, intuitive, and time-proven idea. Early on, thanks to WISNIFG, I learned that I was the judge of myself. The search for approval that we grow to learn from parents; which is then transferred throughout life to teachers, women, professors, early bosses, and our wives was a search in vain. And the search often leaves us wondering: "Why do I have to perform for everyone else, but no one seems to look to me or care about my approval?" But once we learn that we are the judge of ourselves, it feels as though chains holding us down are broken, and we can begin the search to fulfill our inner drive and desire.

You Make the Story

But there’s more to it than that, I’ve learned, as I read through some PUA material. Take the example of a guy walking up to a girl at a bar. It can be a completely nerve-wracking experience depending on your level of inner game. All the doubt, all the thoughts of failure in the past, inadequacies. Suddenly your hamster breaks free and you forget you are the judge of you. This is why it's often said when you see a girl you like, you need to initiate immediately before those thoughts can cloud your mind.

But if we look at the big picture for a second, and take her perspective, that girl doesn't see anything but a guy walking up to her. She is not privy to your thoughts, nor your past attempts. To her you are a completely blank slate. And this idea I find more powerful than any other tool you can use when solidifying that inner game. You are not only your own judge. You are your own plaintiff. You are the person who makes the case for you. Over time, you will unravel some of your story to this person, if they care to be a part of it. And truth (or untruth) be told, you can tell whatever story you want to tell.

I was once out at a bar about a year ago with a group after a co-ed volleyball game. We were playing flip-cup and a guy there was the social alpha. Seemed to be leading everyone in the fun. And women wanting to get to know this guy more asked what he did for a living. He said he was a trash man (you know, the guy who picks up your trash). A little time passed and I turn to him and say, "Trash man huh?". He says: "You know I'm not really a trash man, I'm a bar tender. I just like to say fun stuff like that to see what happens." This man just completely lied, but 1) Who cares? and 2) who's going to question him? You are your own plaintiff. You can tell your own story. And people have no reason to do anything but accept it.
People Will Accept It

There's a reason everyone operates in this reactive kind of mode. It's how we actually learned most of what we know today throughout childhood and adolescence. We grew up copying and accepting what other people thought and did; and often had no reason to believe otherwise until we were exposed to counter-opinions. It's how cults form, it's how religion propagates, it's how societal norms like marriage, monogamy, morals, hell traffic laws and tipping culture are learned. And so everyone's first reaction to new information is to accept it until proven differently.

Does this sound familiar? Back in my beta days in high school and college I was absolutely CONVINCED that everyone else in society was in on some big secret about how to socialize, how to live, and what to believe. Like it was all some big secret that I just had to figure out. The big secret is this: No one knows any of this shit. Everyone puts reality through their filter of acceptability of societal norms they've learned, but if YOU act like you are the authority, people will buy into it. They will think: "He must know something I don't know". It's why in WISNIFG you have the scenario where you demand a refund for a defective lamp and continue to argue the point that, "I understand store policy and what you are saying, that's not good enough, I want a refund." Or the scenario in Models where Mark's friend asks: "Hey honey, can I pee in your butt?" and it actually works. It's not the wacky intro, but the default mindset of, "This is weird, but he might know something I don't, so I'll entertain a conversation." That's not to say they will accept your reality without testing it, shit testing it if you will, but I won't delve into that right now.

So how can we use this information to our advantage in addition to one time encounters?

Changing Reality

When I say "I know Billy Beta, he's a gamer." How can I say that? Because Billy plays video games. I've seen him do it. A lot. And I feel very comfortable with my ability to peg Billy as that type of person. But let's say Billy just this last few months started getting into Crossfit, and going to bars in his free time to pick up women instead of playing video games. If someone asks me now: "Who is Billy?" Can I say he's a gamer? Not really. I can't really tell what he is right now. And as a Joe Schmoe of society that makes me uneasy because in a world where everything is 'supposed to' have it's place, Billy now does not. People love being able to put you in a place. To feel comfortable that they know you. And they will actually fight to keep you in a place that they know. It's the classic crabs in a bucket analogy. If one crab tries to climb out of the bucket to the unknown, others will attempt to pull him back in. Now let's say Billy continues this behavior for the next 12 months. When someone asks me: "Who is Billy?" Now I'd have to say: "Oh Billy? He's into Crossfit and pickup."

So who is Billy? Billy is simply a representation of the ideas Billy consistently conjures in my head. He is not a person, he is not an individual, he is a group of thoughts in my mind of what I think of when I think "Billy". And most importantly those thoughts can change over time. I will always know what Billy used to be, but the more Billy is something different, the more my mind's image of Billy changes to suit that new image. Do I have any say in what Billy changes into? No. Can I hold on to a false reality of what Billy no longer is? No.

So how does this apply in marriage? If you've just found TRP you are the collection of behaviors, likely beta behaviors, in your wife's head. You may be into sports or have a degree in Engineering, but with respect to mate material...you are a beta provider. You got this way from months to years of being a beta provider. But through slow, methodical digestion of the RP concepts you can change.

And I say slow and methodical on purpose. There's a sign in my gym that the trainers change every now and then. Recently it said: It takes 4 weeks for you to start seeing results. It takes 8 weeks for results to start showing to others. It takes 12 weeks for others to begin to notice your results. As you digest these ideas and improve over time, keep this sign's message in your head. And realize the realistic message it is giving: It takes 12 weeks for others to begin to notice your results. Begin to notice. This means that anytime you start applying something new, even if you're 4 months in on RP and just finished WISNIFG and decide to start applying it, it'll take 12 weeks for your wife to begin to notice this change in you IF she starts to notice it then at all. Then after she notices, it'll likely take several months for her to start adopting it as the new you. To replace that old image of you in her head. This is why we advise newbies to Go Slow. Because not only does it take some time to start changing that mental model of you in your wife and those around you, but it also takes that amount of time to change your OWN mental model; to congeal the thoughts of what being a RP dude is.

And like the crabs in the bucket, your wife may resist this change once she spots it. But the point is it can be done. I disagree with the idea that if your wife met you as a Beta and you married as a Beta then you'll never be recognized as an Alpha. Surely you'll never reach the stage you would have reached had you been Alpha through and through. But over time as you begin to phase out the collection of ideas that you were to her in the past, more and more she will adopt the opinion that you're pretty damn close.

Remember. You define you. You judge you. It's almost like you have a superpower where you are free to impose what you are to other people onto them. Have the mental mantra of:
"Accept my reality. Adopt my frame. This is who I decide to be. You have no power to change it."
FR Game and frame

by LongRoad_518 | November 29, 2018 | Link

I haven't seen a lot of FR's from newer guys so I figured I write one up.

First 5 weeks of RP sucked... then everything changed. I have a long long way to go - overall plan is going to take 12-18 months. I will preface this to saying my journey to be more physically attractive started months before finding RP. I'm still a fat fuck but considering I'm 55 lbs less than when I got married and never been this skinny or strong since I've known my wife has had to have helped this process.

About two weeks ago after either a really long continual shit test or a potential 'main event' (a week of non-stop talk about me being selfish and her wanting a divorce), everything changed. I saw the light switch effect with my wife. Suddenly I wasn't repulsive to her.

If you had asked me a couple of months ago if what happened last night was even in the realm of possibility I'd have laughed at you. My frame has been solid the past few weeks - what I want, not getting upset by threats of divorce, keeping a good mood when she's mad. She made the comment that it's annoying that I don't ever seem to get affected by anyone else's moods. (Response: Yep - unless you're turned on). She claimed I'm perverted, only want sex. Owned that shit (yep - let's go right now, etc.). She'll probe your frame immensely when starting out. Don't back down. Don't apologize. Don't complain. To be fair I do find myself edging to complaints and have to catch this. It's a marathon that never ends. Not a sprint.

Get home after work. Kids are around as well as her father in law. Start gaming the wife. Light touching, spinning her around and kissing her. Then escalated to grabbing her ass and tits when no one was looking. She was so turned on it was incredible. I was able to do whatever I wanted and she didn't push back. She started to wipe up something on the kitchen floor so I started grinding her ass. We were then on the floor and I started fingering her... right in the middle of the kitchen which opens up to the living room where the kids are watching TV. Lead her to the mud room for a quick fuck and then we went back and sat with the kids (after she went to change her soaked panties).

If anyone, anyone who is new doubts that this process works - don't. Maybe it will take longer and maybe she'll never come around, but you won't care. You'll be free to do what you want. I want to have this playful fun relationship with whoever I'm with. I'll get that - either my wife will come along or won't. So far I am absolutely amazed by the progress I've seen. I went from a few times a month of starfish, never making out, resisting quick pecks or hugs to this. When she kisses me now she wants to... she hugs me and holds on for dear life.

Make your plan, stick with your plan, don't rambo (like I did), accept failure, and get better. And post in OYS... that's mandatory to hold yourself accountable for the stupid shit you do.
Past Indiscretions
by Rollo-Tomassi | October 24, 2018 | Link

Essay:

Excerpt:

The Sisterhood will always show solidarity for, provide cover for, or aid and abet a woman trying to optimize Hypergamy,...unless that woman is in direct intrasexual competition with her for the same optimization.

Right now I’m sure there are guys thinking, “Rollo, we know that women can get really brutal when it comes to competing with each other.” And yes that is true; “slut shaming” is almost entirely reserved for women’s intrasexual combat, and there are many other ways women disqualify other women from the sexual marketplace if they feel threatened by that woman’s direct competition. But women evolved to be collectivist and cooperative in our hunter/gatherer past, and this has given rise to a globalized Sisterhood wherein women buy into the narrative of their own victimhood and most understand their gynocentric position of power simultaneously. If there is a prime directive to the social order it’s that all women everywhere are entitled to the best available opportunities to optimize Hypergamy.

Women will almost universally run cover for their sisters’ infidelity, and especially so if they are anonymous and there is little risk attached to their involvement. The rationalization is always the same too; it’s men’s responsibility to “Man Up” and marry a sister and thus subterfuge is justified, or, a woman deserves a shot at hot short term sexual opportunities if that woman is paired with a Beta partner. Either scenario is consolidation of Hypergamy.

Men are never afforded the same luxury of being able to vet women or to abandon one for his own reasons. I constantly get questions from guys asking how to vet a woman for marriage, but the fact that I would be audacious enough to offer advice on this is enough to set most women off. How dare I think that any woman might not be suitable for a long term commitment? To the Sisterhood, that vetting is only ever valid when it comes from another woman, why? Because to women only women should ever have control over Hypergamy and sexual selection. And in a feminine-primary social order a man telling another man that he should pass on a woman for commitment is conflated with misogyny.
Reposting from OWS

It's been a while since I posted any updates, so here's a bit of background for those who don't know or remember me.

When I started my journey on 2/1/16, I weighed 340 pounds. I didn't have a DBR, but after over 20 years of marriage, we were both headed there. I hadn't lifted since high school, so I ordered a squat rack and free weights, and before they arrived, I started just doing deep knee bends and walking for 30 minutes in the mornings. Typical dress was T-shirts and baggy jeans, and I was a classic nice guy / drunk captain, who was afraid of his wife's emotions.

Physical

I'm now 47yo, 6'4", and weigh 270 pounds (up from 255 after of bulking). I do look a lot better, and though I could go lower, I prefer having a bit of dad-bod over looking like a deflated balloon. I still have loose skin on my face and chin, but my beard covers it pretty well, and my upper body gains have helped give me a better, more masculine shape.

My goal was to hit the 1000 pound club this August, after 18months of lifting. The first week of August, I was about 980 pounds calc-1rpm, but during a session of heavy squats, I pushed through a slight twinge, and hurt my back. A week of light exercise, I hurt it again and couldn't even move -- my wife had to bring my to the ER. I spent the rest of the month recovering.

After my recovery, I switched from my volume focused PPL-DUP to a GZCL program that would let me run fewer but heavier sets and test my 1rpms. In conjunction with an egg timer to enforce my breaks, I was able to shorten my gym time to about an hour/day. I supplemented with high-rep, low-weight (60%) sets. Last week, I hit 235 bench / 355 squat / 415 deadlift for 1 rep each = 1005 pounds. Achievement unlocked.

But I also hurt my knee during deadlifts that Sunday (bar regularly hits top of my knee cap), and exacerbated it by running and squatting heavy later in the week. Anti-inflammatories and rest helped, but after three days it got worse again, and now I'm taking a week off from lower body work and running to focus on my upper body while I recover from the injury.

Update: after a few days of down time, I'm ready to get back to the treadmill.

It was nice to hit my goal, but 1rpm lifts are solely for the ego, and I know I don't need to prove anything to anyone. At my age, I have to pay more attention to my body's warning signs. As such, I'm going back to my PPL program (5x5 working sets at 195/305/365) that balances strength and hypertrophy, with decent volume, at sustainable pace.

In the meantime, I've been doing heavy rope exercises for a few months, and I love it. The DOMs are awesome, and my shoulders have fucking popped. At 270 pounds, I can't do many chin-ups, but I recently picked up a tow strap, lat bar, and carabiners to make a custom lat station for my squat rack. Adding these to my T-bar and one-arm rows fills out my back/pull day nicely.

With the impending cold weather, I'm getting ready to switch to running indoors on a treadmill, but I'm also looking at joining a heavy-bag gym for upper-body cardio after work. Finally, after being in a bit of a funk, I've bumped up my Vitamin D intake, and the positive effects were almost immediate. I still need to schedule my yearly physical and get my T-levels rechecked.

Appearance

I have revamped my wardrobe, and for this fall, I have found a look that I like that still feels comfortable. I'm not 25 or 30 any more, and with my graying temples and beard and average looks, I am more professorial than anything else. I keep my hair trimmed, my teeth clean, and my breath fresh.

Slim-fit Levi 541s look good and fit my thighs nicely (36-38 waist). I have a couple polos, but I prefer henleys or button downs that highlight my shoulders while hiding some of my belly. I am not always the best dressed in the room, as there are still managers and sales guys in suits in the office, but even in work casual, I stand out in color, style, and demeanor -- and I can still catch the eye of women over 30.

Commitments

I work for a medium sized company. I'm the team lead, and after shepherding one major project to completion, I'm now the key man on a new high-profile venture for the company. This means that I'm putting in 60+ hours a week, and though I can work from home most days, it tends to impact my other commitments.

I volunteer at a local group for a few hours a week, and after a hectic summer, I've become too busy to stay on point with everything. Things are falling behind, details missed, and I probably need to give up some responsibilities, though I'm not sure to whom.

I still spend time with the family, but even here, the captain doesn't have the focus to keep the ship running perfectly. Finances are fine, there are plenty of fun ventures, and I handle or contribute to much of the household operations -- but the first officer is also busy, so things are falling between the cracks (small repairs, weekly chores, car maintenance). I need to make the effort to get (and keep) my planner up-to-date, so that I can better track what needs to be done and make sure it gets scheduled. I also need to discipline myself again that Saturdays are for completing tasks and not just a day of rest.

Marriage

The last 18 months have been a re-kindling of my marriage. The sex has been great, and while its tapered a bit from 2-3 times a week that I find optimal, it's due to longer hours and busy schedules and not a lack of interest. I don't know that we're any closer emotionally, as even during our DBR, we were never really distant, but passive dread has certainly had an effect. I no longer rely on her validation for my ego, I don't weigh my responses against her reaction, and (for the most part) I keep an even keel on all our interactions. I tease, but I don't do any push/pull. I initiate when I want, not when its time. I lead, and she follows.

For a while, I think she suspected I was having an affair, but she's never tried to confront me about it and I've neither suggested nor denied any such thing. Still, I have never strayed nor even dabbled in strange, except to become more aware of my own physicality and the responses of those around me. As someone who was always awkward, I still don't have the confidence to approach (or even stand out from the crowd), but I am making this my next major goal, and I have 3 months to work on it before my second year is up.

I've applied what I consider the best MRP precepts and tried to maintain a balance of alpha and beta. While I haven't become the red-pill hero like certain others here, my problems were never so bad. Any issues I've had with my wife were only due to my poor leadership, and as I've improved, so has every aspect of my life. I'm still deliberate and my responses measured, but now I have the insight to see things (and people) around me as they really are, the language to describe what I want out of life, the tools to make those things a reality.
Manage your bitches.
by red-sfpplus | July 27, 2018 | Link

I have been actively playing the dating field for three months now. My divorce is moving along at a slow pace, my kids still live with me 7 days a week, and everything keeps moving forward exactly how I want it to in those regards.

My SBX wife has pulled out every nasty page in the book ranging from false DV allegations, to accusing me of withholding money, to withholding the kids, you name it she has done it. And this is a woman I have known since she was 15. When they turn, they turn.

I simply cannot stress the importance of reading /u/Red-Curious posts on divorce and planning this shit out if you really think you are going to split. It will save your ass.

You need to memorize his posts, and the post on "be her friend" as well. These two things will save it all for you. My hardest job right now, is continuing to be "nice" to my wife. Even my lawyer tells me over and over again. Be fucking nice. She is destroying herself and the judge knows it.

But I digress.

The bitch ladder

I have read the sidebar many, many times. But until you are in a specific phase and dealing with those things I don't think it registers, well at least for me. So, the learning never ends really. The topic of Bitch Management and Plate management has been a rough one for me. I am weak in this area, and many of you might be as well.

The post from HumanSockPuppet called Managing your bitches is by far the most applicable post there is, for a guy like me going through what I am going through. He absolutely nails how women act during the dating/honeymoon phase and while his post is great, I want to share my personal experiences with you.

Keep in mind, I am still a believer in the LTR. I am no longer a believer in "marriage." I have my kids, I am working on my divorce and everything I want now, I can get in a simple LTR with a woman I may or may not eventually find. If I do great, if not well I have proven to myself I can bang 10 different women in 30 days with little effort or cost. 38, in shape and there is a plethora of pussy out there. Lift, STFU and sidebar are still applicable, as is rule Zero.

Mandy is someone I met on Bumble a while back. She is a cool chick. She has moved through the ranks of HSP's rating system like precision clockwork. After our first date when she came over she brought a really nice bottle of wine for us to share. She knew from date #1 I was fond of Oregon wines. Between date 1 and date 2 she did her research, and selected a great red wine to pair with the steak I was grilling us on date 2. Keep in mind, there was no sex to this point. Since then Mandy has cooked me dinner, and while not hand done "artistry" like HSP talks about in his post, has sent me many meme type poems she has found on Pinterest to describe her interest in me.

Contrast this to my wife, and perhaps your wife. Never went out of her way to select a wine to pair with steak. Never sent me a poem from Pinterest. In fact, I have received more nudes from Mandy in the month I have known her than my wife our entire marriage. Have I changed that much in 30 days? Or was it something else?

How you fuck matters

It has taken me almost three months to "deprogram" my brain to how I used to fuck my wife, to how I fuck these other women I now fuck. The same rules, boundaries and guidelines I had built in my brain - I naturally associated them to these new women. Not sure why, maybe someone who understand phycology better than I can discuss it, but I cannot stress how important it is to start with a clean slate mentally on these things. This translates to your wife/LTR. And I am telling you right now, I see it and I now recognize my own behavior.

Never used to put your thumb up your wives ass while she was bent over? Mandy loves that. Never used to choke your wife during sex? Chances are your new girl loves it. Why didn't you wife like the thumb up her ass? Was it because you convinced yourself she didn't, or that she really didn't? Again, I ask myself - how much have I changed in the last 30-90 days?

Experience counts

I have an N count I am happy with, and thus far I have not been with a woman who has a higher N count that me. I am a sales guy, and a pretty good judge of character, but even if their N count is higher (I really DGAF) my experience level is higher than theirs. Based off how I fucked the 1st girl I met post split up (what we would call starfish...hey I was nervous) to how I fuck a new woman now, there is absolutely no comparison. Missionary is not going to cut it. If you need to watch some porn to get your knowledge base up, then do it. But if you want them crawling across the floor to suck you dick - you better know how to coach them on it.

This fucking game is all mental. You think it isn't? It is. I thought I was pretty good, but nah - lots to learn brothers. Perhaps more accurately - lots to REPROGRAM.

The Plan

If you are an efficient planner, then you will have NO problems dating women. This is one area I have on 100% lock down. There is never any question on who/what/when/where. I never get any push back on the "dates" I plan, and they always make whatever arrangements necessary to ensure they are there.

Frame

Frame is everything. You have to be DNGAF right from the start. They get instantly addicted to you if you show them out of the gate you are a man who lives his own life, on your terms and they will need to do everything in their power to get an second of your time.
Bitch Management

Three is all I am willing to take on. Three different women I am fucking. The most I was ever up to was 6, and the juice was not worth the squeeze. YMMV.

I am booked out 4 weeks on dates with these women. They know that Sunday-Thursday is generally reserved for the kids, so that leaves two days a week Fri/Sat to play. I have picked up Mandy a few times from her work for a quick lunch because of the three, she is somewhere between Level 2/3 on HSP's guide. The other two, are just at Level 1.

What is the take away?

I don't know. I am in the thick of it right now and wanted to share my notes. Looking back, I can see how my own mental blocks I have had to un-program could have impacted the sex quality I was getting from my wife, so for you guys - I would challenge you on this one specific thing. So perhaps - that is the takeaway.

My window of opportunity with women is around 14 days. That is all I care about right now. That is one coffee date (about 30 mins) to make sure they are not crazy and that the look like their pics IRL, and a FUP date where we fuck. This is the traditional date. If we don't fuck on the second date, they do not get a third. I will go on record as saying I do not fuck on the first date because there are some crazy bitches out there.

Am I the same guy I was 30-90 days ago?

No.
If you all want an amusing read, head over to The Atlantic to read the article The Bored Sex: Women More than men, tend to feel stultified by long-term exclusivity--despite having been taught that they were designed for it.

The entire article is simply a PC-wrapped composition on hypergamy and beta partners. Below are a smattering of quotes I found particularly amusing:

...Although most people in sexual partnerships end up facing the conundrum biologists call “habituation to a stimulus” over time, a growing body of research suggests that heterosexual women, in the aggregate, are likely to face this problem earlier in the relationship than men.

... “Long-term relationships are tough on desire, and particularly on female desire “

... But Meana discovered that “institutionalization of the relationship, overfamiliarity, and desexualization of roles” in a long-term heterosexual partnership mess with female passion especially—a conclusion that’s consistent with other recent studies.

... The psychiatrist and sexual-health practitioner Elisabeth Gordon told me that in her clinical experience, as in the data, women disproportionately present with lower sexual desire than their male partners of a year or more, and in the longer term as well. “The complaint has historically been attributed to a lower baseline libido for women, but that explanation conveniently ignores that women regularly start relationships equally as excited for sex.” Women in long-term, committed heterosexual partnerships might think they’ve “gone off” sex—but it’s more that they’ve gone off the same sex with the same person over and over.

There is nothing in this article that would surprise anyone who has read the sidebar. I just find it interesting that a very politically correct and left-lean ing publication like The Atlantic would essentially confirm the idea of hypergamy in its own PC way.

Of course, the solution they come to is all wrong. The author's solution: add novelty (read DEVI). Of course, we here at MRP know it's far more than just novelty.

Keep fighting the good fight gentlemen.

And make your woman some goddamn heart-shaped pancakes.
The last few weeks have been rough. Sleep has been difficult. My legs, hips throb. I feel like a newbie again.

Last fall in a BJJ tournament I suffered a Stage 2 Separation of my shoulder. By luck I was on steroids for another illness so inflammation was knocked out immediately (affirming my belief that inflammation is probably the root cause of many illnesses and issues). So my coach/trainer set a plan to improve shoulder strength while I abstained from Bench pressing. Which was and is now the only lift that causes pain.

Flash forward to about a month ago. I was benching a token 225. Feeling good so we add some weight. 315. Instant pain. I am freaked, I’ve got meets this summer! I waste no time in getting into a doc. Xrays, MRI, Ortho within a week. Confirmed. I have an AC Joint widening with bone impingement. Ok could have been worse. The ortho is sports focused. He isn’t telling me to stop lifting and he isn’t diving right into surgery. we develop a plan.

So 3 weeks ago coach breaks the news to me. I can’t do full power events until my shoulder is healed but there are plenty of deadlift and squat only events. If I can make the cut then I go do full power and just do a token 135 bench, make points up on squat and deadlift. Yet that means my squats and deadlifts have to be on point. The organizations that do the squat/Deadlift only require deeper squats below parallel then I had been in before. OK, coach. Let’s do it.

This means getting 4 more inches on my squat. We are talking ass to grass here. I was envisioning adding weight, dropping low, and just grunting it out. I wasn’t prepared for what was ahead. Instead of just doing a 4x8 squat with a set weight, I was now doing 3 differently types of squats on various protocols. First a regular one as deep as i can get. Then another at 50% weight with a 2 second hold at the bottom, the third same weight but sitting on a bench. Every leg day (twice a week) has been painful. I mean I am popping Advil at night so i can sleep painful.

I am also pissed. My squats were up there and here I am now struggling on a 225, later 280, 300,.....this used to be warm up weight. And yeah it doesn’t escape me that most don’t lift at this level. I just have to look to my right and see my coach warming up to do a 989 sumo deadlift. I get it. Still, this is what I judge myself by. I walk among giants.

The gym I train at has a mobility coach. I have to start working with him. So I add him to the payroll. 30 minutes before every workout I am doing ridiculous exercises. Makes me look like I am a beginner. Thing is my coach is there too. He still competes. In fact all the serious guys are there. Doing all these little movements, talking, joking, preparing. We look like a bunch of fags at a boot camp workout. Meanwhile I’m drooling over the heavy weights, the atlas stones, you know? Real shit.

I am anxious to get back at it. But no. I have to do these pussy ass lifts and what’s more they are wrecking my shit. It totally fucks with your head. An experienced lifter wants to get into the complex. He wants to lift the heavy shit, the real work; why the fuck am I rolling a little ball on the wall at arm’s length? Why am I doing duck walks? Monster walks? Why? Because I have to train the small muscles again. Meanwhile some skinny fuck is over there on my power rack (probably one of you unplugging guys).

Sometimes you have to do the little shit to get the big movements. Sometimes you have to go back to the lab when something goes wrong even when you had it locked in. Life is not linear. When you settle for less then you deserve you get less than you settled for. If that means I go back to beginner lifts to make huge numbers, then I swallow my pride and make it happen.

I want to see what my body can do. what it can achieve. Every man has that obligation. You have to do something cool in your life. It has nothing to do with her, your friends. It doesn’t matter what reasons she gave you for not fucking you. None of that matters.

What, matters is what you are doing about it. Get your distance. Get your direction. Get your mission and pursue it like the unmerciful god you are.

I got the 4 inches. My ass is hitting the floor at 350.

Coach told me today... now we go nuts.
Two years and counting
by HerukaArisen | November 16, 2018 | Link

I am a little over two years into my Red Pill journey and I feel like it's time to take stock. I think the Red Pill main sub quarantine has made my old account unusable for mobile, so I created a new one. But I guess creating a new identity for yourself every now and then is just a good thing.

I'm 47, married, wife 43, three kids 14, 13 and 6. (BTW, even though my English is pretty good, it is not my first language. There may be some weird phrases here and there, so bear with me.) Over the past two years, I have made a lot of progress in many areas in my life. I have read the sidebar, some books several times. I have also read plenty of other books on PUA, Stoicism, personal finance etc. For me, finding Audible was a game-changer. I highly recommend it. In general, I understand most of the central RP concepts and I can apply them relatively well to my own life.

I am lifting three times a week. In the summer, I went to the gym even more than that, up to six times a week, but during the busy working months three per week is the most I can do. (I also notice that 5 or 6 times a week is too much for me in terms of recovery). I'm not the most jacked guy but I'm doing good. I found a good PT, and now I work with him once a month, currently on my squat and deadlift technique (lots of back problems and small injuries in the past).

During the Christmas time last year, I understood I was building muscle but I still didn't look the way I wanted. Since the new year, I have become increasingly conscious about my diet. I dropped all sugar and decreased my overall carb intake. Since the summer, I have dropped most alcohol, now drinking only on occasional social events. Since the new year, I have lost 10 kg (that's 22 lb. for you Americans) and I was never that fat to start with. The veins are starting to pop as I am now approaching the low two-digit body fat. People are noticing.

An important part of my RP progress has been Buddhist meditation. I used to do it in my youth but then had a long, long break. Right after encountering Red Pill, I decided I needed to start doing it again. I am now meditating pretty much daily. In the summer, I attended a ten-day meditation retreat, something that I am going to make an annual tradition of. I think the most important thing meditation has brought me is a kind of a confidence in myself or a relaxation into being myself. This is something I have very much struggled in the past.

A rewarding single event for me was this year's summer holiday. I took my family to a slightly unusual foreign country for a total of 16 days. I initiated the whole thing and took care of most of the details, but I also sought input from my wife on some things. As an example, I let my wife and the eldest kid choose one of the accommodations from a few options on Airbnb pre-selected by me. Overall, the holiday was a perfect combination of luxury and adventure and the kids still talk about it pretty much every week. I have now started to plan the next summer's holiday, this time to a more urban environment, just to change things up a bit.

The things mentioned above are the good things. Things I have made considerable progress
What are the not-so-good things or the things I still need to change?

I still constantly compare myself to other men. In a way, it is not always necessarily a bad thing to be inspired by others or to learn from others' example. But I feel I often do this comparing in an unhealthy way.

Even on this board, I feel that other men come here after me and in less than a year they are already banging their now suddenly hot and willing wife in the ass or, alternatively, their hot new girlfriend or, alternatively, both, while also attending powerlifting competitions over the weekends. I do realize this is not the whole truth, just a perception. And even if it were true, it is not my life nor is other men's success in any way my loss. I know I should rejoice in others' successes and sometimes I even manage to do so. But somehow it often also exposes this nagging feeling inside me of inferiority and not being enough.

Another challenge is that I am not a particularly fun guy at home. I often take things oh so seriously. It is kind of weird, since I can be fun with my friends and my colleagues and also goof around with my six-year old daughter. But something in my own approach to my home life and my marriage often drags me down. I really should lighten up and do more fun things by myself and with others.

Financially, I'm nowhere near where I would like to be. I feel somewhat stuck in my main profession. There are little opportunities for promotion or progress and I feel my heart is not in it anymore. I have managed to increase my yearly income a lot, but this is because of a couple of side hustles I am able to do. This, in turn, means that I often work long hours and on weekends. I'm kind of OK doing this, but at the moment I feel I don't have clear goals or a sense of going forward. And even more so, I don't have that much to show for all my efforts. What comes in, goes out, pretty much immediately.

I come from a childhood of financial struggles and somehow, I have not been able to rise above it. Even though I make a decent income, I still live pretty much hand-to-mouth. I have managed to transform my money into meaningful experiences, such as the summer holiday and the retreat mentioned above or the cool car I just bought. What I haven't done is transform money into security and a long-term vision. Also here, I feel that a lack of direction is a key factor. I kind of know what I'm supposed to do but I'm not doing it fully.

And then there's the sex. Things are much, much better than what they were a couple of years ago. I'm more relaxed in bed. If I want to fuck, I'll do it. Porn and masturbation are non-issues. But somehow, also here, I feel a bit stuck.

Currently, it is actually my wife, who does most of the initiating. She does like sex and sees its importance in our relationship and I have also managed to create some dread. However, she is also very vanilla and sensitive. And I'm a bit bored. I do fully know that it is my responsibility to change the situation and go for what I want. But, for the time being, it is not happening.

From what I have written above, I can see a pattern. All the things that mainly involve myself alone, are going well: the reading, the gym, the diet, other healthy habits, the meditation, the extra gigs I do to make extra money and so on. The ones that involve other people, like my main job, finances, sex, interacting with the family, I am somewhat struggling with or unable to reach for what I want. Or maybe even more so, that I have trouble even recognizing what it is that I want.

One of the most significant reads for me lately here on the forums has been this post by /u/skidsm where he writes how his life used to completely revolve around his wife and her swinging moods. My marriage is clearly not at all as extreme as what he describes, but, as a child of a narcissistic mother and an alcoholic father, my childhood sure was. I think I have built my whole existence and especially my personal relationships with others on being very clever in recognizing other people's needs and wants and then finding ways to fulfil them, sometimes even before they are aware of them themselves.

I am not referring to my childhood in order to blame others. Nor do I particularly want to keep dwelling in the past. But I do need to understand what has made me what I am in order to become what I want to be, whatever that is.

Another post in a way discussing the same theme was the recent post by Rollo, although he takes a more societal perspective on this. Here's a quote from his post:

"Red Pill thought emphasizes men disconnecting their sense of identity from a female-correct paradigm. In my own work I've stressed that the most important aspect of Red Pill awareness is men making themselves their Mental Point of Origin and this necessitates a realigning of oneself as his first priority. It's easy to make declarations about how your self-worth begins and ends with you and that no woman can influence that image, and in a way that seems liberating. Like you're taking at least that much authority back for yourself. But it's another thing entirely to wrestle with a social order that's now founded on a consolidated female-primary authority."

Over the past two years, I have become considerably more conscious of my own wants. I am taking time for myself to go to the gym and to do other things I like. In everyday situations, I can quite well pass shit tests and say either "no" or simply shrug away silly demands made upon me. I can do these things. But I also feel that I am still miles away from really, really recognizing and embracing my true wants, when they involve other people, when there are really things at stake.

If someone were to ask me now "what do you want?", with some consideration I would probably be able to come up with a pretty good answer, including various short-term and long-term goals. However, I feel that this answer would ultimately be a kind of a hoax: a well-formed conceptualization of things I feel are expected of me, are practical and sensible, are socially accepted.

One reason for my, in my own view, somewhat slow RP progress has also been the fact that things were actually pretty decent when I started. My bedroom was never dead, just a bit docile. My wife is not perfect but she was never a fat harpy cunt, either. I was certainly not alpha but I was never a total beta pushover either. I was not super fit but I have always been relatively slim and good-looking. I was no Chad but I have always been somewhat attractive to women. In a way, over the past two years I have now kind of maxed out most these characteristics in me.
And life is OK. It's not perfect nor awesome but I am content in many ways. I was talking to a good friend of mine recently and he said that most men he knows are a mess while I'm the most balanced and healthy person he knows. So, I am kind of balancing between accepting things as they are, with their small imperfections, and going for what is truly possible for me.

Perhaps you could say that I have now perfected the process of alpha-sprinkling. But have I really swallowed the pill? Probably not. If I want more, I need to do more. And "more" here certainly doesn't mean "more of the same." It means something that will help or even force me embrace my full power and capacity. What would it be? Getting a divorce? Getting a plate? Changing professions? Aiming for the powerlifting competition? Don't know yet. But I will find out at some point.
Bring the Balance Back
by RedPillCoach | January 7, 2020 | Link

In the immortal words of Robert Plant:

Sing as you raise your bow,
Shoot straighter than before.
No comfort has the fire at night
That lights the face so cold.
Oh dance in the dark of night,
Sing to the mornin' light.
The magic runes are writ in gold
To bring the balance back, bring it back.

This is a writeup largely based on my latest youtube video bridging marriage counseling and Red Pill: Balancing Alpha and Beta: Reconciling Red Pill Praxeology and Mainstream Marriage Counseling. This video summarizes Gottman techniques ("Beta") and then summarizes Red Pill techniques ("Alpha"). Both sets of tools are useful depending on your circumstances, the state and type of your relationship and where you fall in the Alpha/Beta balance. Of course this varies every damn day of the month but nobody ever said the game we were given was set on easy mode.

I have been Coaching men and the women who love them for a couple of years now and have learned a thing or two about maintaining a marriage over the long term. The key to a good marriage can be summarized in a single word: BALANCE.

On the one hand we have discovered The Red Pill. We have opened our eyes to the ‘real world’ and all of its horrors. We know that men and women are different, that they have different sexual strategies, different desires, different things they find attractive in the other sex, different behaviors, and very different emotional responses. We know about hypergamy, Alpha Fucks/Beta Bucks, and the fact that #Believewomen would be a hilarious lie were it not so pernicious and dangerous. We know about the Pence Rule (don’t just avoid fishing in the company pond, avoid women entirely at work and never, ever be alone with a woman from work). Via Red Pill we have learned that women like to screw just as much as men but they typically only like to screw bad ass men who take no prisoners and are willing to calmly and deliberately call out their bad behavior.

On the other we have the mainstream advice columnists, marriage counselors, therapists, and an assortment of “blue pill professionals” determined to push the party line of equality, equalitarianism, and “women want a NIIIIIIICE guy” to settle down with so buy her things. Lots and lots of things. Also, don’t raise your voice, stand up to her, or deny her anything. Ever.

Does it feel sometimes like women want the impossible? It is true. If you just listen to what women say it becomes clear they want “Fried Ice.”

Fortunately, we don’t just listen to what women say, we watch what they do. When you leave the house after an argument and refuse to engage, women and the whole crowd pile on to call this “abusive.” They whine that it is manipulative. When you stand up for yourself and ORDER your woman to stop her bad behavior and then follow it up with actual consequences, they decry this as antithetical to a happy marriage.

You know what else they do when a man starts standing up for himself and no longer tolerates intolerable behavior? That’s right, they fuck him into a coma!

So…if she SAYS be niccccce and kind and sweet and buy me flowers and then when you do those things she doesn’t want to have sex. THEN you stand up for yourself and tell her to knock it off she wants to have sex later that night which do you think you should listen too? The words or the behaviors? In my experience, the lie that ends most marriages is the lie that men and women are interchangeable and the same. Women expect men to be weepy, emotional, indecisive women after the wedding who stops leading (that would be “narcissistic” don’t you know) who constantly asks them what they want to do- and then they are disgusted and deeply turned off by the man who acts like a woman. They are frustrated that this is what they are supposed to “like” and then when they get it, they recoil in anger and frustration- even rage.

Men expect women to be “equal” and logical. They are told that you should “discuss” things with your wife all the time. Emote, show emotion. Listen intently and don’t try to solve her problems. Don’t minimize her feelings! Basically, be her girlfriend. Again, women are disgusted and deeply turned off by this behavior that every magazine, every woman’s group, and almost every relationship book ever written demands. They are turned off because of the lie society has told us! The lie that women and men are the same. Except for one problem. Women are NOT men.

Men are NOT women.

Women want strong men, leaders, who are badass, and take no prisoners. Sure, they say they want weepy, whiny little manboys who emote and refrain from solving their problems but just listen carefully and tell her: “That sucks.” Sure, listening works- if you are already a badass. It doesn’t work so much when you take a metrosexual type guy who is already in touch with his emotions and try to “fix” the woman’s growing disgust and loss of sexual arousal by turning him into her gay, sexless friend. I think this is why marriage counseling has an 80% failure rate- it only works (marginally) for the badass guys who are not emotional enough. The goal of “therapy” is to get the man to get in touch with his emotions and to “listen.” It works for the guys who need to get in touch with their emotions and who need to listen more. For the rest of us guys, most of us, it is toxic advice- because it is predicated on a lie.
First you have to define the problem. If you are not getting sex, just “Alpha Up” right? Seems easy enough. Develop your frame. Set your boundaries. Enforce them. Lead. Pursue your own self-interest. Screw her good and hard like a cave man. It’s what we focus on almost exclusively on MRP. No problems!

Except it is not quite that simple. I hate to break the news to you guys but marriage is not all fun and games and it is not all about sex. Mostly, but not all. Short term behaviors that get you laid are not always conducive to a long-term marriage. * Please reread that sentence again because it is important. It is the primary difference between /r/TheRedpill and /r/Marriedredpill.

In the same way, short term behaviors that provide comfort and Beta-dom to your woman are rarely conducive to having awesome and hot sex in a marriage or out. Sure, you might get a pity frack now and then but chances are, if you are on the twice a month plan then your Alpha quotient is not high enough. The key to upping the Alpha is to ALSO up the Beta. Want to be stronger? Then you should also show more of your compassionate side. Want to lead more? A good leader listens to his followers! Want to be more dominant in bed? A dom understands that his duty is to the sub and her welfare and that requires emotional connection and attunement.

That means the key to upping the Beta is to ALSO up the Alpha. Want to be more sensitive and caring? Then you should also be more decisive and lead more often. Want to have tender, gentle sex? Then throw her against the wall and kiss her roughly. Then throw her on the bed, jump on top, and slowwwwwllly play with her body until she is squirming and panting. NO problem! We will get right on it.

What if you have become unbalanced? What if you were a Beta slug your whole marriage and then one day after a google search for “Why doesn’t’ my wife want to have sex with me” you discover the Red Pill and it works! You manned up, and started to really Alpha up….and the sex got better for a while. In fact it got a whole lot better- thank you very much, Rollo! Then it happened. Her whining started to increase. The festering anger in her voice grows and grows. What do you do? Red Pill preaches us to “Alpha Up” and DNGAF and STFU. Guys do that and it usually turns around the sex! That must mean we should do more of it, right?

Wrong!

Remember, the key is BALANCE. If the sex isn’t happening then work on some Alpha behaviors but don’t completely cut out your Beta behaviors! We call this “Going Rambo” and it is a real problem.

When guys have followed the Blue Pill plan for a while and have been cruelly taunted and disrespected and denied sex, often for years if not decades, they tend to go crazy when they discover the Red Pill. They discover that being a bit of a dick turns women on so what do they do? Do they stay “a little bit” of a dick? Nope! They turn into critical, cynical, bitchy women whining about everything their wife does. She is screwing you a lot more often now because you have discovered that avoiding an emotional connection, dread game, and STFU has a powerful effect on women. (SHHHHH, don’t tell anybody but it lubes them up for some reason).
However, there is an optimal line between Alpha Asshole and Beta Schlub that is murky and different for every relationship. Hell, it is different every day of the damn month but with a little attentiveness you can find the line.

Where is that line? It is actually pretty easy to spot if you step back and pay attention to her behavior. (Did I mention that women really, really like it when a man pays attention to them). Don’t listen to her words for content but DO listen to her words for emotional affect. There is a huge difference between her calling you an “asshole” and calling you an “asshole.” The same word means different things in a different context and you can usually easily tell by the tone. One is a harsh and angry criticism while the other is a warm, comfortable complaint in the incessant manner of many women.

If you can step back and objectively determine that you are the asshole then maybe it is time to walk it back a little. This is where you can work on your “Blue Pill” methods for marriage improvement. By “Blue Pill” I am referring to the tactics in famed marriage counselor John Gottman’s methodology. The Gottman Method is based on observation of successful couples and I have done several videos describing his methods and effectively “Red Pilling” Gottman but his strategies definitely work if applied at the right time and in the right situation:

THE GOTTMAN METHOD

1. Build love maps by exploring your partners inner world. Be interested in her history and her life story. I always ask my guys: Why did you marry this woman? I remind them how entertaining her drama really is- and was earlier in the relationship. You remember that time when you were having sex 5 times a week. They just might be related!

2. Share fondness, appreciation and admiration/avoid the 4 horsemen of the divorce apocalypse: Criticism, Contempt, Defensiveness and Stonewalling- by expressing and feeling appreciation and respect.

3. Turn towards your woman instead of turning away.

4. Be positive.

5. Assume good intentions.

6. Avoid harsh startups to conversations.

7. Use “I” words and not “You” words: “I want us to get along better” vs. “You stop being a bitch.”

8. For guys, one leadership strategy is that when possible use “Us” and “We” words instead of “I” words and use them authoritatively and directionally. Make it about you and her against the world: “We are going on vacation in February to Florida” vs. “I am going on vacation.”

9. Be sensitive to Bids for attention from your partner and regular offer bids for attention from you to her. aka- reset every 24 hours.

In contrast, to the typical marriage counselor’s beta-ization program, the Red Pill prescription offers an Alpha up program with some of the following tactics:

RED PILL TACTICS

1. Dread Game: Be a man with options.

2. Outcome independence: Sex is great and you want it- but you don’t NEED it, at least from her. It’s like asking a girl to dance. If you walk up to her shivering and stuttering “would you, would you like, uhhmm, you know, ummm, to dance with me” then it is not going to work all that well. If you walk up to her and take her hand with a confident “let’s dance” your chances are much, much higher. Now, how do you suppose the girl reacts when you start whining and crying when she says “no.” Yes, it works the same way in marriage. It is a gigantic turn off. Don’t do it.

3. DNGAF: The key to Outcome Independence- and the key to happiness in life. Just don’t give a fuck.

4. STFU: The key to most men having a happy marriage. They talk and talk, just like the marriage counselors recommend and their balance is tipped HEAVILY to the Beta. They do this when their balance is ALREADY tipped heavily to the Beta. If they just shut up, it tips the balance over to the Alpha. Yes, it really is that simple.

5. Be attractive, don’t be unattractive: The ultimate key to vaginal access and fulfillment right their guys. The problem is that we need Red Pill to determine what women actually find attractive (Hint: It’s not begging, whining, desperate, or angry). This includes lifting weights, and not being a filthy slob or lazy troll. Not really a high bar these days.

6. Lead her to a better place. If a woman will follow your direction, in most cases she will be more than happy to screw you on demand. If she won’t follow your direction then you need to work on your leadership- or work on finding better followers.

7. Understand Seduction and Kino: Instigate, Isolate, Escalate, using touch to get your woman used to being touched by you and ready for sex with you.
WHAT IF YOU ARE OUT OF BALANCE?

If you have gone a bit Rambo towards the Red Pill side then the sex is probably improved and you are probably motivated to become even more “Red Pill.” However, if she is increasingly avoiding you or acting bitchy and/or sullen when you are around, then you may just need some more warmth and compassion in your marriage- blue pill style! Study up on Gottman and work on your “sound relationship house” before going any further. Take her in your arms and whisper sweet nothings in her ear. Then bend her over and take her like a cave man.

TLDR: If you are too Beta as evidenced by a low sex/low desire marriage then add some Alpha but decrease the Beta sparingly. If you are too Alpha, as evidenced by a somewhat high sex/high desire marriage but the woman is still acting frustrated and angry (and probably whining about your narcissism) then add some Gottman style “Beta.”

If you need any help with these concepts and straightening out your marriage then get in contact with me. I am having ridiculous levels of success helping guys, and women, restore their marriages. It’s not that I am so good it’s that what I do is based on the reality where we all live, and not the fantasy world we learned in graduate school.

Edit: New Video, same ideas, better audio.

Dr. Dave Peters, JD, MS, PHD Board Certified Life Coach Candidate; Attorney at Law; Domestic Relations Mediator

Web: www.coaching4men.com

Email: dave@coaching4men.com
I was frustrated with all the stupid fights we had, scared of a possible divorce that seemed would come. We both had a lot of resentment and were very angry and unhappy at each other. Sex was suffering from this, which had been our life line before. MRP found me, and it really opened my eyes. I fucked up many times during my transition, not increasing my SMV as fast or effectively as I could have, and even had a victim puke. I worked hard on myself, but still had a couple of weeks of terrible anger phase. I felt disrespected by her, and exhausted by the shit tests. And then we had the main event, and I was exhausted, but I held frame and held frame and held frame. If I hadn't acted, then MRP would have been just a circlejerk on the internet that fed my frustrations. But I acted even when it was scary, I acted because I had to rock the boat to change things. And here I am, with a Thanks MRP post.

--

It hasn't been 4 months yet since I took TRP, but everything is so different. I am happier than ever since we married. I just feel in so much control of my life. Even though there are a lot of uncertainties, I just channel that into just doing more stuff that I control and make me happier. I work harder than ever on myself and on my household, because that is what the captain does, period. I don't look for approval from my work. Instead of fighting to maintain frame, I feel that more often I get strength from my frame. Stuff that used to irritate me or that I thought wasn't fair now just seems so ordinary, manageable and even useful. Stuff that I thought she had to change so we could be happy now are things that I see is just part of she being a woman and love her more for who she really is.

It isn't perfect, I make mistakes, I miss shit tests, she sometimes still gets to me and it takes me a bit to recover, I should initiate more sex, and I need to get to the next stage in my career. I will keep working on that, because men never stop improving. This weekend it really sunk in how happy and comfortable I feel looking at the world now, the real world. Yeah, it is harsh, yeah, there is no rest for us, no chance for weakness, yes, the burden is heavy for men to carry. But there is also a beauty in accepting it as it is, taking responsibility, and just carrying the burden, it makes me feel strong.

Field Report

This weekend she threw some minor shit tests at me. I was calmed, I knew she was ovulating, I wasn't upset by the shit test, I just understood she wanted to fuck me, so she had to do this test to be sure I was worth it, and that is reality. I had a passing grade, nothing too memorable. Looking back, I should have used some amused mastery to pass it with flair, but I didn't. A bit after she came with yet another shit test. Instead of being resentful for it, I was grateful. She was so nice she was giving me another chance! I knew she wanted me to ace this test so she could fuck me harder. If that isn't a sign of RP love, I don't know what it is!
I ignored her stupid shit with amused mastery while I led her to do the bedroom by the hand because I knew that is what this was really about. We had fantastic sex. And the next day she was flirting and happy all day. She hugged me and started to squeeze my back, shoulders and arms, and commented on how I felt different. (I acted as if it didn't matter to me, but I know i've put work into losing the fat and getting some muscle tone, and it shows). And we had more good sex and fun all weekend.

We hadn't had such a great fun weekend in many months. She was so into me, it was just like when we had started dating: hanging out, having sex, laughing together, and having more sex. And I understood why so well. She was ovulating so she wanted to fuck an alpha man of high SMV.

And I am that man my wife wants to fuck.
Blue Pill Boy Meets Red Pill World
by sexyshoulderdevil | November 3, 2015 | Link

They are here watching us. Those who choose to disregard the Red Pill praxeology are reading our tales and picturing us taking a flame thrower to our relationships as if our intent is to just watch it burn. They chit and chat in their Blue Pill sub-reddit debating what new level of despicableness we have sunken to today.

And then there’s another camp that reads our utter insanity to test the waters and see what we so-called misogynistic, shitlords are up to...while secretly hoping, just maybe...we have a magic key to help them un-fuck their own depressing, sexless marriages. Yup, there are those reading this right now that are so desperate in their marriages that they have landed here...The Married Red Pill...

Here's the thing, pretty much all the men here would love nothing more than to fix their sexual desert of a marriage with a nice, Blue Pill chat over some warm, chamomile tea after the kids are fast asleep. How great would it be if we could just logically spell out to our wives our want to have sex with them on a more regular basis. Oh and lets spice things up while we’re at it...that would be really fun! What a relief it would be for her to eagerly and lovingly understand our basic male needs, smirk and head over to the bedroom and engage in some passionate lovemaking where both husband and wife are left fulfilled and glowing. Ah, a hapless Blue Pill boy living in the Blue Pill FANTASY World.

Guess what? I’m willing to bet just about every one of us misogynistic, shitlords tried this open and honest communication. Many, many times...and it did not work.

So we regrouped and rethought our approach. Perhaps we just didn’t explain it well enough in the last conversation because emotions kept getting in the way and we didn’t explain ourselves clearly. Oh, perhaps a nice, loving letter. Yes, a well thought out letter telling her how how we miss her touch and truly love her will help. Letter sent. Nothing changed. Odd, she loathes our honest neediness even more it seems... That can’t be right though... Just think on it more.

Hmmm. Maybe be of additional help around the house more. Find ways to ease her burdens. Yes, the talk and the letter along with helping more around the house. She will surely now know we love her and she will want to share in bountiful lovemaking where both husband and wife finish fulfilled and glowing. Why wouldn’t she? Nope. Nope. Nope. What idiots we were.

None of it worked...for those of us here at least. It was a fool's errand run on seemingly good intentions. And now we're getting ticked. You see, the Red Pill did not corrupt us. All on our own we started to wake up to the fact we’re Blue Pill boys living in a Red Pill World. We just didn’t have the proper language to explain it....yet.

So we began our search. And down the rabbit hole we went...until we landed here. Where it’s all explained. Where it all finally makes sense. This magical yet disturbing place where we realize we haven’t been owning any of our shit. And then that moment...when we recognize and become so deeply embarrassed by all the trite schlock we've attempted out of ‘love’ and want for physical intimacy with our wives. We were pathetic, misguided chumps. And it stings.

I’m betting most of us didn’t want to end up here. This was a last resort. Hell, most of us would have been fucking ecstatic as hell if the so-called Blue Pill methods worked. You see, this Red Pill nonsense is a lot of work. You have to go to the gym at least 3x times a week to become more physically attractive. You have to get your household finances in order to ensure your family is properly provisioned. You have to refocus on work to avoid becoming mentally lazy. You have to work to be a better father to your children. You have to make an effort to attract new male friends who positively influence your life. You have to proactively plan and decide events for your family that they will enjoy. You have to finally do the work to be an attractive man so you wife finds you worthy of fucking. In short, you have to be Masculine.

In hindsight, it’s so utterly simple and pure. It’s the way it’s always been. Hell, some of us knew all this when we first attracted our wives. But time, kids, or complacency got in the way. We were simply mistaken to think the basics of sexual strategy had changed. Nope.

And now that my eyes are re-opened, I wouldn’t have it any other fucking way...

TL;DR: Not anymore.
Welcome to The Red Pill on Hard Mode.

by isolos | June 30, 2014 | Link

As a long time lurker on TRP, I've been noticing that the signal-to-noise ratio has gone down dramatically, which is unfortunately a by-product from gaining subs. Also, while I have nothing against spinning plates or MGTOW, that is not a lifestyle that I would want to live for the rest of my life, and so it has been increasingly hard for me to find good content on TRP. As such, I went ahead and created this subreddit to foster discussions that are relevant to those of us that feel the same way.

Therefore, I invite everyone that are married or in a stable long term relationship (or planning to get into one) to chime in and share their frustrations, success stories, or general advice that is different from the usual bullshit that is being spewed on subs such as /r/relationships. We know those don't work.

I have a very limited experience being a mod so if there are anyone interested in lending a helping hand modding this subreddit, please send me a PM and I'll add you to the list. Let's get started with some good content here.
Application of MRP to a 'Good' Marriage

by viderelux | May 23, 2016 | Link

This post is essentially a 'thank you' to the long time contributors of this forum and an encouragement to those who are new.

I stumbled across MRP by hitting the random reddit button and it changed my life. The three first sidebar books were eye-opening and enlightening.

I have been married for 23 years and if you asked me if I was happy, I would have said, 'yes.' We married at 23, both with n counts of zero. She has a professional degree, outearned me for the first 20 years. I'd say we were about HB6's (she topped at 7 while running track in college. I could be 7 if I lifted) I was (and am in many ways) the perfect beta-max.

Our marriage is strong, little chance of straying...we molded things to the current fashion of equal everything. We pool the money, divide the household tasks, and enjoy each other's company. She gives me plenty of alone time. We spend much of our time raising 4 kids (2 in college now, 2 middle school) and are typically worn-out from a day's activities. We are able to get out for weekends away and vacations with the family. We had some years with major struggles and came out the other end stronger. All in all, a good life and good marriage that I would have chosen again. And yet...

In two areas I was uneasy and had that nagging doubt that all was good. The first, is obviously the sexual arena and the second was the understanding that with both of us leading, neither of us was. The household was adrift with no real direction or focus other than making it through each day. As for sex, it was and is always available. I'm unsure I've ever been given the hard no. However, there was lots of starfishy duty sex...lots of that. I was the clueless good guy, always concerned that I didn't appear to want it too bad...too worried about what she wanted, unsure, timid...what I now know to be nuclear passion killers. She gained enough weight to drop her SMV a point (edging up to two), while mine has probably moved upward. She threw me SO MANY signals about how she wanted me to lead...Asking my opinion on every single damned thing no matter how trivial, giving me carte blanche in the bedroom (and me having no idea how to use it), telling me she likes to feel 'desired.' My good guy conditioning could not be overcome.

Stumbling across MRP was like being instantly smacked in the face with a 2x4. It INSTANTLY hit home. I read the sidebar through and was astounded how much of me was in there. The course prereqs were revolutionary. I began my MAP.

Every single little bit of alpha I add to myself has resulted in clearly tangible benefits in both the household 'progress' and in the bedroom. I have not yet begun to realize many gains from lifting, but they are coming. Of more importance in my life has been the more dominant stance in terms of sex and her very positive responses to me taking control of the wheel (finances and household direction- goals). Dread, simply in terms of improving myself, has worked magic. I changed jobs to a more risky, but higher paying job with more social status after reading NMMNG. I had been scared to death to pull the trigger on this change. (thank
The Family Alpha website has been the most relevant application of RP to my life. I'm very out of touch with the PUA and the plate mentality that much of RP revolves around (except how it applies to married seduction). It's all good for others and I am probably missing out on all the RP has to offer, but for me, that stuff will never be on the table unless I am divorced. Monogamy and the idea of living out my vows are central to who I am.

I guess my point is: MRP can help even those who are struggling with good to mediocre marriages. It can help those of us who are not looking outside the bounds or our marriages. Every bit o' alpha I inject into my being has taken our marriage to a new level. Especially in the sexual area, I have reaped immediate rewards in both the variety and intensity. I expect that when the lifting gains take hold, it can only get better. (the beginner gains drew comment and ACTION enough!) MRP works, but it is not easy. The biggest obstacle I have to overcome is myself. I like to shirk responsibility and struggle with laziness...both things Captains can ill afford. MRP gave me the incentive and the tools to start chipping away at that old me and the benefits arising from that have been impressive.
What did you think she was going to do?

by stonepimpletilists | July 5, 2016 | Link

#Sprinkle a lil alpha on it

I know, I'll sprinkle a little alpha on it! I just have to hit the gym, practice a little game in front of the mirror. Not to other women, that would be cheating, and ethically, I can't do that. I used to be alpha, but slowly slipped into beta. My SMV is a 7 and hers is a 6.

If you ever got the impression that we are all special, spend some time here to quash it. The subject title is there to illustrate a basic, flawed premise so many, many men seem to have when taking the pill.

It's not a Dr. Phill. Red Pill praxeology has nothing to do with fixing relationships, or getting women to 'act right' with some magic steps. That's a PUA thing. Even then, PUA teaches that you won't get that girl, just more girls.

I'm getting RP now, why is she (insert pejorative) now? Why isn't it working? Why doesn't she love me now? I label this an alpha-as-wolf, since he was such a wonderful example of RP not working. It works just fine, but he was sitting in his car, flipping all the buttons, opening and closing the door, putting the key in, and key out, then sitting there angry because the damned thing isn't working like it's supposed to.

Why?

I'm getting RP now, why is she (insert pejorative) now? Why isn't it working? Why doesn't she love me now? If you've read NMMNG, you have no excuse to even ask this question.

What did you think she was going to do?

Seriously, if you read NMMNG, WISNIFG, Confessions of an involuntary incel, Manipulated Man, Michael's story. I mean, how hard did you have to delude yourself into thinking this giant covert contract was the way ahead?

My story? Probably nothing special, I'm sure there's at least a hundred guys reading this at some point with the exact same one. Know what happened? Hit a tipping point with operation me first. Why was I working so hard to fix something that I didn't break? I mean, from an ownership perspective, it's always your responsibility, but I didn't take the kill shot here, I shouldn't have to be the plow horse who drags it out of the ditch. I would have texts, blowing up my phone up to, and during our main event:

- This new you is an asshole
- This new you is selfish
- Narcissist
- I don't know if I can do this anymore
These are paraphrased, I have them saved, for some future date when I forget these very simple lessons. AWALT, they can all do exactly what any other woman can do, all that's missing is that little push. Oh, and lots of crying. You know what I didn't get?

- A pat on the back...
- an attaboy,
- hey man, thanks for being alpha now, do you want a blowjob?

She fucking gets pissed, she throws out shit tests. You've built up a serious amount of Beta Debt over the years, and it takes a lot more work to get out from under debt, than it does to save, hence, Iron Rule #7.

Do you know what I did get? I no longer got stories about her having a temper tantrum, and me ending up bullied into some bullshit I didn't want. Not to say she doesn't have them, but I'm no longer at the house placating them. I'm out, hanging out with old friends, talking with a few girls I know, being a little flirty with the neighbours guests in the hot tub, working out. Hell, I enjoy a good pre workout shit-test, I hit personal bests when I get them..

Yeah it's selfish. Yeah she's not going to like it. But at the end of the day. I can buy 50 cent honeysticks, and I get her to eat them off me where it counts. If she's too tired that day, I jerk one off and go to bed, it's as concerning as whether I have maple syrup or butter on my pancakes. She says she doesn't like it.

That's a comfort test. When she says 'you' statements, e.g. You're an asshole, those are largely shit tests, she's testing your frame. I hate how they are called tests, because all you really have to do is pretend you are an American running for supreme court. Sit there and let a senator berate you for an hour or two, if you don't lose your cool, you got the job.

If it's a lot of I's:

- I don't like this
- I can't take this anymore

Those are largely comfort tests. Ignore the actual words, listen to the subtext, the body language. It generally boils down to a girl telling you that she is punching above her weight, and she's worried that she's going to lose the fight. There's an element of desperation, fear of losing control, and less disdain, very little spite. Give her a strong hug, kiss on the forehead, tell her everything will be OK. This is where the Come to Jesus speech belongs. Because this is what a main event is. That flip into submission, and where she's receptive to your leadership. If you ain't getting that, than it ain't a main event.

The last fucking thing to expect

The last, fucking thing you should be expecting, is for her to be on board for your changes. Biggest teenager in the room, she doesn't know what she wants, she only knows how she feels. Would you let your 4 year old daughter tell you how to do your job? Why the fuck are you letting a girl riding emotions tell you how to live your life?
Remember this, write it down, post in on your wall. Dread isn't a way to sprinkle alpha on it. None of this is for her. At this point, your relationship is a dead husk, and you are applying dread as the way I've always described it: A deliberate set of steps, which remove you from a shitty relationship, and put you on your best foot forward for the next one/s, allowing enough time for the people in your life to get their shit together and fight to have you back. Her role is only as a sparring partner. You have a person who shit tests you in real time. You are training more intensely than the actual events, since she already thinks you're a fuck. It's an uphill climb.

Gratitude

I'll end on a folksy bit of wisdom I have for gratitude.

If your dad beats you, every day, and you vow to never put a hand on your kids - yes he taught you that lesson, and no, he doesn't get to take credit for it.

Some of you will get lucky, and your woman will straighten up, start acting right. And some of you won't, she'll still be a cunt, and think she's still that same girl in her 20s that men swooned over. Either way, this isn't a case of dread not working, or RP being wrong, it's not part of the equation.
Holiday Reminder: Look out for numero uno
by JackGoldsteinWrites | December 8, 2016 | Link

I'm in a 7 year LTR, and own a house with my fiancé. One thing I noticed, in the last 7 years, is that the holidays would often leave me feeling more tired coming out than going in. In my field, no one works from the last Friday before the 25th until the 3rd or 4th of January.

Each year, I have acquiesced to use this time to visit our families and do events, usually 6-7 over 10 days, the lions share being events with her non-immediate family (aunts, uncles, cousins, etc).

This year, I got promoted, more responsibility and stress at work, and took on the renovation of a house we purchased together. I am hitting the holidays with my fatigue at an all-time high.

I started thinking about all these events and it just made my stomach turn. So I told my girl, I am attending one event for her family, one for mine, and the rest of the holidays, I am in recovery mode. She can pick the event, but that's the only one she is getting. I am not interested in seeing her aunts and uncles and cousins that, quite frankly, don't add anything to my life. I see them once a year, and then? So why would I give my precious rest time to these people? That time is being repatriated and given to numero uno, me. In addition, I told her she can go to the other ones without me, but my recommendation for her was to rest as well, so she could be a better First mate for me in 2017.

What was her reaction? To me, her reaction would tell me just how "on board" she was as my FM. If she gets bitchy, it means she hasn't fully understood that those non-immediate members are not her family any more, I am her family.

Well, she was initially disappointed, but since then, she has truly embraced the idea. In fact, she told me she was actually kinda relieved to get some rest herself, and that she was happy I made this decision... which I had initially made selfishly and out self-preservation ( I don't mean to sound negative here, I have no issues being selfish, I think it is an admirable trait in some ways ). In fact, the "frame" I set there basically allowed her to be honest with herself about how much she was sacrificing for little to no benefit.

I noticed in fact, that when I make these types of decisions, she often is relieved someone else is making a difficult decision for her. Even if she disagrees with the decision. In other words, a woman loves following a leader more than she hates following "unpopular" decisions of the same leader.

Be sure to stake out a bit of time for yourselves, boys. The Captain needs rest too. Happy holidays everyone.
You're a fucking asshole, you know that?

I'm sitting in bed reading and my wife walks in and say, "have a look at this picture, I'm thinking of getting a hair cut"

Two things:

She knows I like her hair long. She knows I think Charlize Theron is attractive.

It's a picture of, you guessed it, Charlize Theron with, another guess, short hair.

"She's really pretty"

"Do you like her haircut?"

"Yeah, it looks great on her"

"Are you saying it wouldn't look great on me?"

"You look better with long hair"

"So you're saying I'm too ugly to have short hair?"

smirk, raise eyebrows, go back to reading

"you're an fucking asshole, you know that?"

continue reading.

She left. Came back 15 minutes later happily humming and started a conversation about something else. It was almost like the previous conversation was with someone else. The rest of the night went perfectly.

Here's what I learned. My wife knows she's not ugly. She also knows I don't think she's ugly. She knows I'm shallow and wouldn't have married an ugly woman.

I spoke on this topic of her choosing for less than 5 seconds and it resulted in exactly zero seconds of tension, anxiety, upset or anger. She was reminded that I think other women are attractive.

Very few words and it came quite naturally because I wasn't trying to win the moment. I was just 100% honest and used as few words as I could to communicate that honesty. Felt fucking great.

I'm coming to realize that it's these little changes that are bringing me far more happiness than the large scale stuff I once tried to implement through initial MRP. I used to think I had to be this rapier sharp guy with a witty reply for everything and it would result in copious amounts of sex. I've now embraced the fact that treating every part of my marriage with Outcome Indepence and suddenly the sexual dry spells are far easier to deal with. It's not all about getting laid. It's about being a better, happier me.

Two Field Reports in a week is enough. Back to the Field.
Right tools for the right job.

In my experiences, I've found each to have their place, and not interchangeably so.

Agree and Amplify

When someone is being absurd, or caught up in the moment (read: emotional). If you're having a conversation, and the other persons logic is completely out of whack, this is when you would use it. When someone is emoting something reasonable? this is not the time to use it, because it comes across as a child-like version of amused mastery, minus the mastery. You sound like the petulant teenager. It takes a bit of work, but understanding when a conversation is open (exchanging information) and closed (a fight to own the frame or recieve validation) is the key here. A bare bones introduction to the concept, so you can better visualize.

It's that cold glass of water in someones face flying off the handle. And if they don't snap out of it, at least it's entertaining. It's a devil-may-care attitude towards lunacy. The other person will either punch themselves out, and calm the fuck down; or, come to terms with being an irrational person, and calm the fuck down.

Either way, at some point, they will calm the fuck down.

Anything outside your frame is either amusing, intriguing, or funny.

Fogging

Acknowledge the other persons frame, but do not engage or accept it. I found this most useful when the other person isn't pulling any closed conversation methods, but applying a fishhook, to see what they can reel in. It's not about you here, it's the other person emoting, and there's really nothing for you to 'fix' here, nothing to 'win'. It's bait, to bring your emotional level into theirs. I'm mad, therefore you should be mad. I'm hurt, therefore I want you to hurt etc.

I don't use this one often, it's most useful to me when I can tell the ol lady is picking a fight, or venting frustrations. It's a trap I used to fall into, still do from time to time. When someone is venting a frustration, we can take it personally, want to fight back, defend our territory, lay out devils advocate. At least for your women, they don't care, they don't think like that, and they don't want to hear someone dismissive of their feelings. Remember, for a woman, her feelings are the barometer of truth. Acknowledge them, then guide her to where you should be anyways. Let the hamster work for you.

My goto? Just acknowledge. "K", "I get that", "well when you put it that way". Any number of neutral statements. Sometimes, she catches onto what I'm doing, says something like "But you're going to do it anyways, aren't you?" which I will agree. You are the singing and dancing automated email response from tech-support.

We have received your email and hold it in the highest regard, someone will get back to you shortly. Thank you for your feedback -- The Microsoft Team Anything outside your frame is either amusing, intriguing, or funny.

Amused Mastery

As if you're floating above all the rabble, amused at the child's tea party. I've found the most use of this when you're being second guessed. example

Background example

this is when Canada engaged the war measures act. French terrorists were kidnapping elected officials, and the military was brought in. Reporters were squeamish, and he spend a few minutes articulating his stance on the issue. At the linked point, you can tel he was getting annoyed that the guy kept coming at him, and the famous "Just watch me" line. To make this perfect amused mastery, I would have added a shit eating grin, and just left it there for the reporter to stew on, but it makes the point. I suggest a rewind to watch the whole thing if you have 7 minutes. Keep in mind the context. This is the first and only time we've ever put military boots on the ground for civil unrest, not a light hearted manner, and our PM is simply tired of having bleeding hearts queasy at him making the hard choices.

If you boil it down to it's core, it's amusing ones self at the other parties attempt to punch above their weight. It's the manifestation of confidence to the outside worlds reluctance to be on board with that confidence. It's you, just knowing better. This one can be the hardest to internalize, because it's the accumulation of

- Irrational confidence
- Competence (OWS, get to work)
- Building on previous successes
- Acknowledgement that you absorb all the consequences for your own actions, so you bear all the authority in making them

Another way to think of it... "Just watch me"

Anything outside your frame is either amusing, intriguing, or funny.
Lifting, it's not a choice you need to make.

by bogeyd6 | September 14, 2015 | Link

Everyday we see people come here with I am unplugging by reading this or that. Applying this. Holy Shit is works. Blah fucking blah. You are doing it wrong. Your very first step in your road to manhood is lifting heavy weights. Start your weight routine. Then pick up a book in between reps. SMV, to me, is the core of everything. Until your SMV outpaces hers, then it's all an uphill climb. But just wait, if you call now, ol' bogey has the cheap and easy solution for you.

Maybe one of the first articles I ever read on /r/TheRedPill was about strength training. The program was called Stronglifts and the article was https://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/2m1gtt/if_squats_arent_a_part_of_your_lifting/routine/. This article talked about testosterone and strength. Arguably two things I was severely lacking in. Immediately, I went to www.stronglifts.com and downloaded the app to my iphone. Started the program and never looked back. I went from the bar to 240lb squats yesterday since the start.

Example

Yesterday, I was laying my head on my wife's lap on the couch. This is not something that I normally do. This was to her, and me, a supreme display of confidence in each other. Flashing a little controlled weakness is like passing comfort tests she didn't even know she had. As I layed there I noticed she went from rubbing my back to casually tracing the muscles on my back. Stronglifts is good for that. This went on for about 2-3 minutes and she spread her legs ever so slightly. Tingles^tm. I looked up at her and said "You like that huh?" and she said "What?". Figures, lol. Then she looks me right in the eyes and says "Thank you". I know what she means. Then she gets up and goes down on me, and we go to the bedroom. Bold on her part, MIL was upstairs and son was outside playing.

Summary

The reason I tell new people to lift is three fold (there is more). One, muscles/strength increase your SMV. Two, self-reliance/confidence. Three, the hormones that are released in your body. These things combine into some very interesting and valuable resources that you can then begin to use.

Looks

Everyone knows the cliche about the muscle bound dude scoring all the chickadees at the beach. The fact is, it's true. Visually perceptive as strong is maybe one of the first things a lady will recognize in you. This could be being cut like a literal diamond. The other way is look like you just might wrestle a bear and win. Physically imposing and proximally dominant are turn on's for the ladies.

Your wife's vagina will become the niagara falls when you go to initiate sex by carrying her up the stairs and tossing her onto the bed. Fucking her doggy style, with power, will drain the sexual energy she has for other people. Using your Sex God Method you can even get her to completely bond to you. This all starts with your physical prowess. If you are unable to pick her up and calmly toss her on the bed like so many dirty clothes, she won't get the Tingles™. /u/IanIronwood has a great article on this. It's called "Three alpha moves to use on your wife" located at http://theredpillroom.blogspot.com/2013/01/three-alpha-moves-to-use-on-your-wife.html. Particularly the part about carrying her books.

Confidence

As your strength progresses until you are easily outperforming every male you work with. Your confidence will increase correspondingly, if not linearly. There is no replacing the feeling of satisfaction when you are lifting equipment or boxes by yourself and colleagues are having to use team lifts. The guys will take notice, and by your strength alone, you will start your ascent on the male social ladder.

There is a halfway decent article with a good take away located at https://jehurst.wordpress.com/2011/04/18/game-theory-part-2-the-hierarchy/ and is quite informative with the relation of self-confidence. "Beyond puberty, the social structure brutally punishes any weakness in self-confidence. By the same token, self-confidence determines how thoroughly one can reject cultural orthodoxy and choose a more independent path." The question then becomes "How can you reject your betabux role?". The simple answer is that you cannot.

Self-confidence in a male is the end all be all of every leadership undertaking. Lifting is the quickest and surest method to get your confidence back. Heavy weight lifting will make you stronger, and the side effect is confidence. The side effect of confidence is natural leadership and social elevation. You understand. Therefore, lifting becomes necessary in your path to the red pill. Be sure, that I am not talking about 500 reps of a 10lb dumbbell. I am talking about squatting 300lbs and benching 250lbs.

Hormones

Lifting heavy weights is a key to increased testosterone levels. Really there are two ways, as I am sure the doctors on MRP know. Specifically squats. The best way is the natural way in my humble opinion. Lifting heavy weights is going to increase several different hormone levels in your body. All for the purpose of good. Men are meant to be strong, not betafats.

Strength training and lifting heavy makes you stronger. Certain levels of training will help your body naturally produce significant increases in Growth Hormone, Testosterone, and Insulin like growth factor. These hormones have varying affects on your body.

Growth hormone will help you build muscle and burn fat. Obviously looking better increases your SMV. As we know, SMV is where the gains are made in our relationship. Supposedly this hormone enhances your immune system and reduces aging. There is an interesting theory and articles about how women are attracted to men with a different immune system. This could all be bullshit, but any edge is better than no edge.
Insulin like growth hormone is kind of a bonus hormone. You can read the scientific shit I can't understand but it goes a little like this. This hormone helps your cells repair. Your heart, your lungs, and you're liver. After a night with friends at the bar, who couldn't use some liver repair? This hormone may also repair your muscles and help you get stronger and feel stronger.

Testosterone, oh where to start. This is your sexuality and male hormone extraordinaire. This hormone helps you build muscle, burn fat, and get your dick hard. Yeah, better than viagra. There was a very interesting study not too long ago located at http://www.nejm.org/doi/pdf/10.1056/NEJMoa1206168 that does quite an indepth study of doped males.

Your woman needs a good and hard dicking down every now and again. Testosterone is your friend. If you read the above article, increases in testosterone go hand in hand with improved sexual function. Basically, you are going to feel like a man and you are going to fuck your woman like a man. That's what she really wants. She doesn't want four hours of foreplay, three hours of eating her out, and two seconds of intercourse. You would be surprised how little foreplay she needs. Plus, once your smv outpaces hers, she will get wet from things that don't even involve sex.... There is no greater foreplay than her seeing you be a man.

Last but not least on testosterone. Women prefer the scent of a male with high testosterone.

Conclusion

If you are not lifting, then why are you bothering to do the reading? If you are a beginner then I recommend a program like Stronglifts for 12 weeks. If you are one of those high cardio dudes who thinks being skinny-weak is attractive then go for IceCream Fitness.
I’ve been on vacation but reading to catch up. One recurrent theme I’ve seen over the last month is the problem of the marriage “check book” and keeping it balanced.

One gent told his forlorn story of working his ass off and scrimping and saving to buy a house. He busted his ass, had a huge emotional day, and his wife threw a comfort test at him to remind him of how hard he worked. Another guy goes through something similar, busts his hump to get his family debt free only to be reminded of how it was “a shitty present”.

My own personal story is similar. I’ve been blessed in my life to be mechanical, I was taught by my father to handle my shit, and there’s literally nothing I can’t fix with my hands. I bought our first house, a tiny shit-box in a red-hot market. I spent a month before we moved in removing and replacing every inch of drywall, sanding wood floors, re-carpeting, and making it look better than the day it was built. I stood back when we moved in and in my best Tim Allen said “Oooooog!, I have created!”. I sat back waiting for the blow-job dam to break open.

My wife promptly went and bought curtains, and filled it up. She reminded me that she worked hard too; you know decorating and making sandwiches. Then she asked “when’s the basement going to be done?”. I was like “what in the actual fuck did she just say?”

In my mind, I had just banked like 10 fucking years of good will. She had a brand new house without going in to massive debt. Yet the moment it was done, she was like “Well I did this too. What’s next?” The marriage bank account had just been reset to zero.

I made the critical mistake of assigning a discrete value to the work I had done. My wife, as all women, only assigned one value to it, +1. I made the mistake of doing that for years (lots of covert contract in there by the way), thinking my bank account with her was like +15,000, when the only achievable numbers are +1, 0, -1. Me, remodel the house +1!. Her, decorate the house,+1 her column. Back at zero. Me, get called on a last minute trip, -1. Get $10,000 bonus because of said trip, +1, yeah back to 0...

It was a critical mistake to think I could bank good will all these years. Just like Pauli in Good Fellas, she was there again with her “Fuck you, pay me”. This fact rears its ugly head when you are particularly beta. Because everything you do is easily cancelled out by some little thing she does. Women are transactional and resource seeking. So she gives you starfish sex, and thinks she deserves a new car, because pussy. She makes you a sandwich and thinks she deserves a new purse, because it’s fair. On and on. It may sound exaggerated, but it’s not far from the truth.

I finally realized I would never win this battle. I had given up completely and decided that I had no more fucks to give. I embraced TRP, and made myself the center of the universe. In fact, I went to the bank and closed all accounts. I stopped engaging in covert contracts, and flat out told my wife “I don’t need you. I don’t want someone I’m beholden too.” I stopped putting stuff in the bank. I started to do things because they either needed to be done, or I wanted to do them. I didn’t do them because I thought she would approve. I gave my wife the attitude of “I’m the prize, if you want to come, join me. If not get out of the way.” I flipped the script, so now the ball is always in her court. She knows through subtle and not so subtle ways there’s only one column in the bank account, that’s me. She can choose to make it +1 or not.

Are you still trying to fill the checkbook?
Gentlemen, nothing has been more life changing then this.

by grs_srg | July 18, 2016 | Link

Gentlemen, this is a post for anyone who is in two minds about MRP, two minds about putting in the work, two minds about is this worth it.

My background story is the same as most here, NMMNG was written for me, used to be alpha, dead bedroom, it was all her fault, coasting through life being all pissy that things are kinda good and shit at the same time, etc etc you guys know the deal.

Started a year ago, first post was 9 months ago, a few more in between, lots of replies putting me in my place (learning to stop the passive aggressive attitude I threw around).

Now to the point, Gentlemen just start putting in the work, you will go all in very quickly and think you are a dick swinging master, you will have some wins and think the hard work is done, you will stop and then get pissed that things are not working again, START AGAIN!!

LIFT, it sounds very overused on this sub, but I cannot explain the value of it, you need to see and feel the results.

To elaborate, if you lift and keep it consistent, not only will you see physical changes, your mind will change, you will almost feel like lifting heavy shit day in and day out makes everything else seem easier, your work, your bitchy wife, making decisions as a captain become clearer, reading the sidebar does not become so daunting, as cliche as it sounds in a way you become NEO.

This in turn leads to CONFIDENCE, a physical confidence, a mental confidence, a willingness to become more alpha without even knowing it.

example: my wife's friends and my sister-in laws etc, have become very touchy with me at gatherings, I see them want to talk to me, to engage, make comments about my gym progress to my wife, these things will in turn lead to more CONFIDENCE, and your wife will have to step it up, she will never admit it, but she notices them touching your arm when talking, holding a goodbye hug longer.

The theme here is "trickle down" as you progressive your wife will sub consciously expect you to take the lead, she will want you to engage in sex (she may not admit it ) but she will want you all to herself.

If you have kids you will automatically find yourself being more fun and engaging. Your wife will leave family decisions to you, she will expect and trust you to make a choice that is sound as the captain, without questioning it she will just follow, because you have the CONFIDENCE.

I cannot reiterate how important lifting is, like I have said, it will all TRICKLE DOWN from that.
You will still have battles but they will become easier as you develop the CONFIDENCE you obtain as you transform your body, which leads to transforming your mind, house, work, attitude, life.

As I close I will throw out a little FR/win...

Last week after teasing wife with text messages and flirty conversations at home, we both knew that it was going down later that night.

Once in bed I still got the shit test of, can I have a foot rub (which we all no means, if you rub my feet we can have sex).

my response was "how about you rub something of mine" I in turn got the "it's always about you isn't it" speech, though she said it in a playful way, I stood my ground and proceeded to initiate, with no foot rub!!

Very quickly she was all over me, then without any persuasion at all, she had my dick in her mouth, going to town like she would have when we first started dating.

The point of this is, a BJ has not happened in about 6 years. Yet without having to ask or encourage she was all over it like a ice-cream.

Now you may think this post is about getting a blow job and Yay me etc etc,

But I assure you it is the by-product of the work, I AM BETTER NOW, I MAKE HER WANT TO SUCK MY DICK.

The prize isn't the BJ, it is knowing what got her to do it. It is knowing how the work makes you better.

I STILL HAVE A LONG WAY TO GO, BUT BECAUSE I JUST STARTED THE WORK, PICKED UP HEAVY SHIT, EVERYTHING TRICKLED DOWN FROM THAT, I AM BECOMING BETTER, AND IN TURN AM GETTING WHAT I WANT.

THE BJ ISN'T THE PRIZE, KNOWING WHAT YOU ARE BECOMING IS THE PRIZE.

GENTLEMEN GO FORWARD AND WORK! IT IS NOT FOR HER, IT IS 100% FOR YOU!
Hello Dreadful lads. It's time again for 60 Days of Dread.

This year, our posts will focus on mindset for our areas of improvement. To the extent that we have original content this year, it will be aimed toward this.

For example, our Week 1 post is traditionally on lifting. You can review past years' posts on how to lift effectively. What we want to discuss this year is why to lift. The obvious answer is "to get stronger." There are less obvious answers too.

If you lift well and lift consistently you will indeed get stronger. You will look better. You will feel better about yourself. You may even get to the point that you get women throwing IOI's at you. But none of these things are the why, and they should not underpin your mindset. Vanity and hedonism are for the weak-minded, just the siren-song of ego; those things listed are benefits, yes, but not reasons.

Your mindset for lifting should instead be linked to your identity as a man. You lift because your body is made for it. You lift because it shows commitment to your own well-being. You lift for the clarity of mind and commitment to process that it affords you. You lift to become a fully actualized man.

So, by all means put yourself on a program. Get as big as you can, I dare you. But when you're grunting out a set and you're just sure you will die when you're through - remember why you're there, and you just may smile through your pain.

For reporting goals and progress this year, put in OYS each week. Include a #60DoD tag so I and other interested readers can find it. Remember that this is your challenge to yourself to improve how you operate. Your mindset for that should be to own it fully and execute it as a promise to yourself. Those who make outstanding progress (as judged by mods) will again get 60 DoD flair. Recall that prior year posts are on the side bar. If you're new to 60 DoD you should read those. Now get to work.
Men, women and their different reactions to the real masculinity
by ex_addict_bro | November 1, 2017 | Link

TL;DR
An analysis of recent shit-storm on the main subreddit, only slightly related to TRP, MRP, RP and your cheating whore-of-a-future-ex-wife. Posting here because I don't have to post it anywhere else, as the main subreddit became a total shithole.

Body
As most of you probably know, u/GayLubeOil created a post at the main subreddit, entitled "Red Pill Beats", where he criticises u/TheFamilyAlpha, mainly for alleged not living up to what he preaches. From what I understand, the boiling point was reached when GLO saw TFA's pictures from The 21 Convention, which were posted few days earlier by conference's organizer, u/Dream_21. Before that - everything was fine.

As you can see, many (possibly very young) people commented under the post with pictures from The 21 Convention. Their comments usually looked the same, were written in dismissive tone. "This looks gay", "so this is how real alphas look", "you look like a bunch of losers" and such. Insightful comments were downvoted heavily. Cool.

I checked post history of a few of those commenters. My theory was as follows: those negative comments must come from many fatherless kids (or raised by absent or abusive fathers, which gives actually pretty similar image). Such kid, when sees a real, masculine, successful man, which comes in good will, without any means to do any harm, only to do good, to educate, to shows them the way (which they are actually in the dire need of!) - he starts to feel something. What is it? I don't know. But then, his ego kicks in and he suddenly converts it to hate and anger. Because that's the way we distance ourselves - by using our egos - when we aren't as mature as we could be.

Maybe that's craving for a real father in their lives. A warm, open man, who teaches them stuff. A man they were always craving but never met, for example.

... or, they may be acting on their core beliefs. What they believe, what core belief about what is masculine they have in their minds, this dictates how they see the world and react. So basically, perhaps, for many young man, who love video games and are possibly raised in fatherless homes, by single mothers, who feed them with beliefs on how bad and negative men actually are... The 21 Convention must have struck a nerve.

Then egos kicked in. If something is not in line with the core beliefs of the ego, it must be destroyed.

So the turd-flinging monkey takes his aim.
The place I mention my ex wife, because that's what I do here

That gave me similar vibe to my ex wife. When I stopped drinking, when I started therapy, I became someone different. I wasn't a man she wanted. I started being the man she despised. She was not able to accept the new me and she often dissed me in a way no more mature than those teenagers dissing u/Dream_21, The 21-Convention and its attendees and she did that as long as I decided I had enough and left and she is a fucking codependent trainwreck ever since.

I have met with various women during that last 18 months. Some of them stay. Some of them run from me. The quality of women who stay is way higher than of those who run away (I'm not too selective, but that's another story).

If some women have a core belief, that men are shit and they meet a quality male, they perform a smear-campaign in their heads then run away.

The post by GLO

The post by u/GayLubeOil only proves this theory, if you ask me. Suddenly, a man who often suggested to "bring your own value" when someone criticised a valid TRP post, starts dissing u/TheFamilyAlpha because of... his looks (not exactly the most masculine thing you can do, especially from the safety of your own room and your computer screen, but I digress). TFA, according to GLO, is not big enough as for someone who preaches lifting since 2013, has a baby face, that he tries to hide under his beard and all that. And, TFA's blog is obviously blue pill.

And I start to wonder, what has happened to the "bring value to the community or STFU". I start thinking why GLO decided to throw some turds at TFA and why the turd is actually flying so low.

u/GayLubeOil openly stated in a few places (correct me if I'm wrong) that he was raised by a single mother. What I believe is, that the way TFA or some other guys that attended The 21 Convention presented themselves aren't in-line with GLO's core beliefs on "what is masculinity". But, his own behaviour is. It must be, he's the "icon" of manosphere, right?

Fight

So let's see. In one corner we have a fatherless male, somehow desperately trying to LARP masculinity, only on higher level - by posting pretty intelligent, nonetheless always in a joking manner, by lifting, by injecting himself with steroids. I actually don't mind reading about his experience with steroids, mainly because the day my testicles stop working is not getting any further, but I digress.

In another corner, we have The 21 Convention attendees. A bunch of (mainly) well-dressed, well-presented individuals, who are trying to do their best. Who came there to share their notes, in person. To meet in person. To have fun - in person.

They were courageous, open and (fuck it) vulnerable. They exposed themselves to all the risks of doxxing, critique and shitposts like the one GLO wrote and like the comments many commenters wrote under it. Why did they do that? For money? Maybe, why not. But I think that they saw that they're doing this for some greater good. This was what they wanted to do, to give to the world.

A fatherless male, criticising from behind a computer screen versus some guys doing some actual work together (the lectures, the Q&As) and having some fun together after. A manosphere icon, doing actually something very feminine - like a tumblrina, writing a post where he criticises one's looks.

Aftermath

The post had its effect in our own small piece of manosphere and it caused separation and fragmentation and I think those are least needed things, but I digress.

I think I somehow found a link between ex-wife, GLO's post and the overall undeserved critique of The 21 Convention.

And, hell, I remember when I was in about the same place that GLO is now, many years ago. Unable to cooperate with anybody. Ready to call everything gay. I have LARPed my own version of “being a tough guy”, which included doing bike marathons, running FreeBSD on my desktop computer, and actually calling everyone gay.

And yes, I also played "the court jester", because that's how I fulfilled my need for attention from others.

Of course I did that because of ego-fuelled false sense of being an elitist - that's what I thought.

Today, I think, that maybe I did that because of deeply hidden fears.

That post did not bring anything good to TRP. And, if GLO sees TFA as "manosphere cancer", well, I hope we'll get as many metastases as possible. TFA even by being a bit blue sometimes brings less harm to manosphere, than The Avatar Of Brodin showing us all, how immature and lost actually he really is.

I bet BuzzFeed or other SJW media are just waiting for those posts like the one GLO wrote.

Takeaways

People act accordingly to their core beliefs. Sometimes, when those beliefs don't match reality, ego kicks in and turds start to fly.

People without strong, proper masculine presence since their early childhood usually act with anger when confronted with such kind of proper masculinity in their adulthood.

TRP is already fragmented enough. I don't think we need more fragmentation.

Primadonnas, teenagers, turd-flinging monkeys are gonna turd-fling. Making fun out of another man's looks when he brought a lot of value in other areas is not going to do any good to anyone... and it seems suspiciously feminine.

You don't like this post? Write a better one. You think TFA is full of shit? Write a better blog, get a better form, longer beard, write a book more people won't buy. You think 21 Convention sucks ass? Organise a better one. Why the fuck you shouldn't, you're so much much better than them, that's what your mother told you, you're not going to leave me son, you're way better than your father, you're mommy's special snowflake...

Shit or get off the pot and that in my book includes everyone, EC's, TFAs, Brodin Avatars, 21-attendees, Red Berets, all of you.

Post Scriptum - Paul Elam

Another person criticised by GLO is Paul Elam. I'm not sure what Elam is doing these days and if his critique is well-deserved, but what I am sure is: his YT flicks about BPD women helped me tremendously when I was in my darkest hours, some months ago. But, when he criticised Elam, I laughed. Maybe I should have wrote this instead.

Footnotes

- I disagree with u/TheFamilyAlpha in many places, I think he's overly optimistic in his beliefs and still way too young and inexperienced for my taste, but I wish him the best,

- I criticised u/Dream_21 founder because of some of his earlier posts, which I found to be overly focused on a woman, on the other hand I never had any beef with the actual Convention which I think is a good idea,

- I actually respected u/GayLubeOil's work and I tipped one of his posts with actual cash on the trp.red platform once as a form of saying "thanks" and supporting their work (I'm 3rd on the list of "Top tippers" on trp.red ATM). I'm not planning doing that again soon.
I continued to talk to him about standing up to bad kids and making them respect him, adding in some of the examples people gave me. We worked on thai clinches and knees some more, but now we began it with roleplaying me being the bully, yelling at him and pushing. I also showed him some videos (this one with adults but my favorite, starts at 4m17s https://m.youtube.com/watch?v=ibl6SHbq8sY )

Wednesday he kneed a kid so the kid said he couldn't breathe, and Thursday he did a hip throw on that bully I mentioned earlier, landing him flat on his back on the asphalt. He got scolded by a teacher for it, but no word to us parents (not that I expected that).

He said noone bothered him Friday.

I hope both the lesson and his reputation sticks.

Thanks for the help :)

Update on getting my son to stand up for himself
by Sepean | April 9, 2016 | Link
Digital books: They are a fantastic convenience. I can finish a book in half the time it would take me to finish a physical book. Having said that, it took me a very long time to convert. The reason being: I love the feeling of accomplishment when I finish a long book. Looking at all those pages I turned one by one to finally complete it. The pages are a nice measure of progress through the book, especially during the boring parts.

The point is: There is satisfaction in "The Grind" Learn to embrace the grind. Understand that it is there, and it is not going away. Everyday is a grind, and that grind offers you something in return. There are fantastic rewards to reap from the grind. But you don't want that grind, do you? You want to be comfortable. Comfort is fine, but it's reward comes quick, leaves quick and leaves you feeling unfulfilled and unsatisfied. Grinding rewards are slow and hard to come by, but its rewards last long and are satisfying.

People don't care about you and your grind. They care about the results. Also, people don't care about your two week results, they care about your 2 year result. The important parts aren't day 1 and day 730. They are 2-729. Those are they days you put your head down, shut your mouth and grind.

You haven't put in the grind (or you're in the middle of it), so don't get butthurt when your world (your wife, kids, boss, strangers) take no notice of you, or give you little to no respect. You haven't earned it yet. And when you have, you won't have to announce it. They will tell you.

I play an instrument very well and have been in many bands. When I would finish shows, many times I would have people come up to me and say "Teach me how to play like that". I am passionate about my instrument and I would start to discuss the basic things they should start with (very boring drills). Once they've mastered that, add something slightly more complex. Their eyes would glaze over and I learned very quickly they didn't care about the instrument. They just wanted the end result of playing on stage and jamming out like a rock star. They see the end result of many years of grinding, boring (it wasn't boring to me) practice. They are not willing to do that, which is why they will never achieve what they see.

What do you want to achieve? Find successful people who've achieved it, but don't look at their success. Find out what they had to grind through to achieve that success and do likewise. Avoid looking at them as a measure of your progress. Measure your progress by how consistent you can be.

The only easy day is yesterday.

tl;dr Success in anything (marriage, sports, health, career etc.) requires a grind. If you don't accept it and embrace it, you will continue to be unfulfilled and mediocre.
3 little words
by drty_pr | November 4, 2016 | Link

There are 3 words that should never be said. Especially when preceded by "I". Its talked about a lot on here, but I'm going dissect them a little deeper. They are just, think and feel.

Very simple words that we have been programmed to use for our entire lives. The problem with them being, that they are some of the most indirectly indecisive words one can use. As men who are trying to not only be confident and masculine, but ensure we are portraying ourselves in a definitive manner, this is unacceptable.

JUST

acting or being in conformity with what is morally upright or good

This is a righteous affirmation which is used as a means of justification. A sense of entitlement needed by an individual to have their own convictions. There is no need to have your actions validated. Even to yourself.

- "I just didn't do the dishes"
- "I didn't do the dishes"

Or

- "I am just going out tonight"
- "I am going out tonight"

Notice the difference? One is seeking a form of approval and the other is simply a statement.

THINK

to have a certain thing as the subject of one's thoughts

That "thing" that is the subject of one's thoughts is approval. There is no way for a statement to be assertive when your seeking validation for that of which your pursuing.

- "I think I am going to have a beer with my dinner"
- "I am going to have a beer with my dinner"

Or

- "After the kids are in bed, I think I'm going to go out"
- "After the kids are in bed, I'm going to go out"

Notice the difference? One is an indirect question and the other is simply a statement.

FEEL
a sensation of something felt; a vague mental impression or feeling

That sensation is your brain's way to justify emotional weakness. It's a coping mechanism for an inability to accept the truth. That's why females are so apt to use them.

- "I feel your not invested when we have sex"
- "Your not invested when we fuck"

Or

- "I feel we aren't having enough sex"
- "We aren't fucking enough"

Notice the difference? One is trying to justify your desires with an emotion and the other is simply a statement.

Now understand, these words all have several definitions. Often being equally indecisive. Still I advise the complete removal of them from your vocabulary. In every way, shape and form. If you catch yourself, stop mid sentence if need be and fix it. Within a short period of time, it will be natural to stop using them. The reward is obvious as well. Almost like a weight being lifted from your subconscious.

You should also be wary of want and try. That's a discussion for another day though.

So stop talking like a pussy and think what it would feel like to just stop using these words.
FR - From Up North

by vomit_romney | September 10, 2017 | Link

Gents this is my first contribution. Little to see here beyond my affirmations that this system is one-fucking-hundred percent solid. Wanted to share one week’s worth of non-stop observations from far afield, touching on almost every bit of RP that I’ve absorbed to date.

I work in a trade in the mining industry, and recently had to travel up to the far north. I needed assistance but I selected an apprentice I didn’t know much about. However, in his couple months on board with us, he’s earned a rep as keen to get the job done, and it was a strict timeline. Little did I know Ricky was as sheltered as anyone can be, and while meaning well, he’s a socially awkward white knight and thoroughly blue pill.

Being away from my wife is always a good time to practice next level game, get rejected, have some fun and verify some of the truths I’ve learned in the past year since discovering RP. I’ve seen the term ‘catch and release’ here and I’ll go with it - but I won’t have a wingman on this trip.

RP Subject #1 - Hitting the Wall

In my beta days, a few years ago at a previous job I was friendzoned by a HB8 co-worker because I was blue pill as fuck, even as she made it clear I could pet her beaver if I wasn’t so fucking lame. I remember her flirting with me hard and proudly ending that by telling her I was married cringe. Amazing what the benefit of hindsight reveals, and how simultaneously humiliating and enlightening it is. Anyway, given our working history and trade specialties we kept in touch by Linkedin (the only social media I’m sometimes on) 1-2 times a year since.

Had a layover of 8 hours in her new hometown on the way to my destination, so sent her off a note about a week in advance: “I have a stopover there next Saturday. Where are you taking me for lunch, I’ll be bored and hungry.” Got multiple texts back but played the text game / logistics only rule, and sat on it despite the typical stuff: What are you doing here? Where are you going? Who are you with? Responded days later upon hearing a “ meet me at in the neighborhood - with an “ok”.

The day of, didn’t think it was right leaving Ricky at the airport for the long layover; reluctantly told him to tag along, but tried not to show it. Besides, on the flight we got to talking and I see he’s a good kid; listens well and despite his Amish-like worldview, we have a few things in common.

Switched up the location after five minutes of net search seeing her choice was weak. Told her by text we’re headed elsewhere, “if you’re in”.

We arrived at my spot around 10am, had breakfast and enjoyed a few beers (I’m prepared to break my diet for the week since I hear the food up north is super carb-heavy anyway - thank fuck they have a gym). Our server was cute, a solid 7 and I flirted with her constantly, but in a real care-free manner - I have nothing to lose so zero fucks to give. When she hovers back to our table I’m mid sentence and completely ignore her, so we get a view of her delightful ass as she turns around to wipe down the table next to us. For the third time in 10 minutes. Ricky then takes notice of some kino techniques I’m trying out and we start talking about women and dating, as I point out our server’s positive response to my advances. Damn this is fun.

He tells me his LTR is expecting a ring soon, and he’s proudly saving up. Well this opens a whole new conversation as I ask why. He tells me about love, and she’s the one. I don’t talk about fight club, but I start asking questions that lead to tough RP truths. I ask him to give me a single good reason that he should get married. His first three responses are all her reasons. Not surprising. I call him out. He defensively asks me why I’m so against it when I’ve been married almost 20 years - I’m honest and say that if I knew at his age what I know now, would have been legally single for the rest of my life. Divorce is fucking expensive, particularly with kids. But, guess what? I’ve figured out how to make what I have satisfying and that was to focus and work on me, and me alone. This triggers a theme that continues throughout the remainder of our trip.

She arrived on cue at noon. Damn, she hit the wall hard AF. I hear about the catfishing on dating sites. Never even crossed my mind Linkedin would have the same scenario but should come as no surprise, AWALT. Nature, or more likely lifestyle wasn’t kind on our subject #1. She’s now a 6 with makeup, but likely closer to a 5 rolling out of her bed at six a.m.

My transformation from 215lb clueless blue cuddle toy to tempered 187lb stoic with a six pack threw her off. After mentioning how great I look, she sputtered non-stop for 5 minutes about her husband, I had to tell her to shaddup. The topic had a pre-emptive ASD reek about it, like she was trying to talk her hamster out of spinning some naughty thoughts.

I immediately detect friction between HB6 and our solid 7 server, my attention was now split between them. Made me chuckle at the thought they both picked up on that nuance and the feelz were real. Interesting field observation here - Almost seemed at one point that these two bitches decided the other might have the upper hand for my attention and caved the fuck in, like solid 7 thinking she didn’t want to ruin my date, and my “date” seeing I was enjoying the attention of our server. So I told solid 7 that “I should have introduced my cousin earlier” - HB6 picked up and played along nicely, accepting the role.

I asked her if so proud of her husband, why didn’t you introduce him? Well, he’s a busy and important man. Bullshit. Then more gushing about her kid and finally about the Beta Bux home she lived in. With a pool and OMG my landscaping. Time to shut the shit down. Her monologue like a steadily decreasing value statement from a seller bargaining with me, as I discover what is being sold is hollow or decrepit, even though I’m not buying anything. Several RP truths validated.

The hardest part of this whole field verification experiment was seeing how desperate she was for alpha dick without consciously knowing it. I wanted to tell her that in lieu of actually providing it, but this girl is not on my radar, see ya. I insisted she pay for everything as some RP icing on this truth-cake, so she did. Even asked me how much of a tip she should leave “this fucking bitch”, our server, haha. I said anything less than 20% would “make you a cunt”. Her body language indicated compliance.
Spent most of the taxi ride to the airport explaining the RP principles - without labeling them as such - that Ricky had witnessed back to him, mainly AF/BB, hitting the wall, her hamster, and remaining aloof. And a great example of how our server had more currency in the SMV. But he needed some further help. In part:

Me: “Dude, you recall when HB6 asked about what we were doing up north?”

Ricky: “Yeah, why?”

Me: “Did you notice her eyes glaze over when you started telling her?”

Ricky: “I noticed you interrupted me.”

Me: “Right. The technical details were boring her to tears. I interrupted because that was awkward as fuck and I could hear her pussy drying up.”

Ricky: “But I was just answering her question. What should I have said?”

Me: “We’re a tag team in the Nacho Libre wrestling league on our way to compete for the Northern Lights title belt. We’re sniper team eleventy on a mission can’t tell you anything about. We’re on the verge of discovering a multi-billion dollar diamond deposit. Whatever. Make it mysterious. Have fun with it. Play her along. Just avoid the boring as fuck stuff - keeping her hamster spinning is the point, man.”

RP Subject #2A - No Matter the Culture (Part 1) AF/BB

Our destination was a small enclave consisting of 90% aboriginals. Spent a few days in work camp. Those of you that have worked oil rigs, mines or any wilderness outpost up north will know what I’m talking about; close quarters and testosterone fuelled.

A cute native girl, HB7 was one of our kitchen hosts. Given the scarcity of females in this place, let alone any above HB5, she got a lot of attention. Quite a few ‘southies’ had been here for months, and there was many a blue-balled sack in this place. Not much available to drain said sacks, but like a live version of social media she giddily slurped up the ‘likes’ from all the dudes here. Didn’t get any from me, since I’m temporary and DNGAF. So go figure she flirted with me quite a bit; and even though I’m in considerably better shape than most of her peers, I’m double her age.

It had Ricky annoyed that he was nowhere on her radar, probably because he’s half my age as well. In fact his use of the word “invisible” made me recall Rollo’s writings on SMV - so that day while at work we discussed raising one’s SMV since it is currency in the SMP. And the fact that the only men visible to women must be above her in said marketplace, irrespective of age.

Ricky: “Don’t want to insult you, v_r but you’re not a spring chicken.”

Me: Yeah, “I’m salt & pepper, and wrinkly. So what. Youth doesn’t mean much to HB7.”

Ricky: “Guess she likes old men.”
Me: “Well, she seems to like me”. I thought of rolling up my sleeves or pulling up my shirt to provide visual evidence of what may be attracting our HB7 but not going to work that hard to explain this to a sheltered kid, think he knew anyway.

Though his ego took a blow, he seemed to absorb quite a bit. Spent some time talking about the cock carousel too, as it applied in this situation.

I passed HB7 in the hall near the end of her evening shift, she’s batting her eyelids at this dude with a bit of a troublemaker look, and she doesn’t notice me. I overheard them speaking their native language. Seeing the look in her eyes and hearing the tone of voice I smiled at the thought that she was enamoured with this guy, who perfectly fit the description of that asshole leaving all the betas wondering how he gets the girl - just the local edition. Hello RP up north!

This culture is known for their art. I took some personal time to ask around if there was an artist in the community, so I could see their work, and possibly purchase a piece or two. Was told about Anik by the locals. Walked to his house one evening, and HB7 answers the door. She recognizes me from camp and is friendly, but guarded.

I almost ask for her dad, but she’s introduced as Anik’s wife by him as he strides to the door, and I’m surprised to see Anik is a young man. Looked at his art, and while he was obviously skilled, respected and successful, his art wasn’t what I was looking for. Very interesting guy, but effeminate and soft in every respect.

HB7 was obviously bored with her BB husband, and though she’s got more security than most of her sisters in that remote village, she’s still willing to risk it all for the AF. This truth knows no cultural bounds.

RP Subject #2B - No Matter the Culture (Part 2) Dyed Hair Edition

To his surprise, Ricky got some attention from another kitchen worker at camp; aboriginal HB3 making a point to talk to him at every opportunity she had. As we head to the job site I ask if he finds her attractive, to an immediate “hell no!”. So why are you giving her all that attention man? Well its the blue pill nice guy in him, apparently. I give this broad a 3 since she’s at least sixty pounds blubberside, smokes like a fiend, has a big ‘ol jailhouse-looking tat on her droopy right teat, tongue ring that interferes with her already alcohol-impaired speech and a ‘hot pink’ dye job. As in, checks every fucking red-flag box.

I guess out loud to Ricky that she’s accepted copious amounts of dick. Many dicks, dude. Yooge dicks probably. Maybe even syphilis flavoured dicks. I mean it’s written all over her, but she’s hit the wall 3 or 4 times over and is super desperate for any attention. He counters that she’s simply “really nice” and wants to show him a good time, and not in the way you and I are thinking, good reader. Almost like he’s something special she’s never seen before. I laugh out loud.

So Ricky being the white knight in waiting to his unicorn back home, accepts an invite to “meet the family” of HB3 one night. Cool, good luck young man. I laugh out loud again.
He's late getting up next morning, and not very talkative at breakfast. How'd it go? I ask. Well, he says he had a good time. It's only after pressing in response to the 3-4 word answers I'm getting that he admits she made a “bit of a move” on him that he says he rebuffed. I laugh out loud once again - “Man, you were giving her all the signals!” He proceeds to tell me that she lives down south and is there on contract for a few more weeks until she gets home to her kids. Hmm. I’m not surprised that this is a single mom just wanting some dick.

“So why didn’t you nail her?” He’s so BP that he truly thought what came out of her mouth was the reality of the situation and was shocked when it wasn’t. I spent most of the morning explaining “watch what she does, not what she says”, and repeating myself on the AF/BB and hypergamous realities of women her age that are hitting the wall, particularly ones with kids. Think just because you didn’t meet her kids immediately after you met her, that she has none? Why does that seem to be the default setting of any of her new male friends? AWALT, Ricky.

RP Subject #3 - Setting Boundaries

My liaison on this trip - technically our customer - turned out to be a nasty and unnecessarily wretched bitch. Picture hardcore rah-rah short-haired and overweight feminist, probably not laid in a decade, perhaps if ever. Likely employed due to the oh-so-in-demand ethnic minority + vagina factor. Constantly self-congratulating her “type A personality” as if we’re all supposed to be cheering her on, rather than wanting to cave her face in. It is immediately apparent that she is new to field operations and has something to prove. Great christ, just my luck.

If I fold this experience into everything else RP I’ve been experimenting with on this trip, I haven’t anything to lose, and a ton to gain. Big customer, but abundance mentality - there are others. Problem is, in my year since digesting the pill, my biggest ongoing challenge has been maintaining frame. I’m a passionate guy and can get pretty fired up, don’t tolerate retarded or stupid stuff easily.

Second night in work camp, and we’ve put in consecutive 13 hour days. It’s a dry community, but a couple of decent lads we became friendly with grinding this job out share a welcome measure of Glenfiddich with us in the deserted lounge. Fuck sore muscles, we’re talking shop challenges for tomorrow. Through the front door bursts this awful beast of a woman wondering why the ‘milestone set out for the day’ was not met. Well shit. Here is my test of frame as senior in the room. I look over to the other three and say excuse me for this interruption gentlemen.

Without touching her, I physically back her up to the door, it helps that I’m 6-2 and this pig is around 5’. In soft volume, but almost growling tone glaring straight into her eyes, I tell her first that her presence in work camp is inappropriate and against the rules for guests. Second, the job will get done regardless of what gantt chart your pencils are holding us to. You are not welcome here at this time, your behaviour is rude and I will see you in the morning back on the job site. We can keep it at this, up to you, or I can file a formal grievance and it could pose a problem on your end. I hear the door shut as I walk back to our table to stunned looks.
This setting of boundary would not have happened in my BP days. I would have scrambled to appease the customer. But she was clearly ignorant, and I’ve unplugged. The line she crossed needed to be pointed out in very direct terms, and clearly turned the tables.

The next day she didn’t acknowledge our exchange. Though she was unable to conceal her vile personality, she was considerably more restrained after the boundary setting. I considered it a win, and since he saw the interaction, explained to Ricky that no one should put up with that kind of shit, ever, regardless of the relationship.

Side note, when it came time to sign off on the job, she wrote “absolutely impressed with the work - great team, thank you!”. She also thanked me verbally for my “no bullshit approach”.

RP Subject #4 - The HB10

Ricky’s been soaking in quite a bit on this trip. On our way out, we stop over in a larger city and finally let loose a little, as we got the job done against considerable odds, and with that awful bitch of a roadblock. Not sure he’s been completely sponging what we’re throwing his way.

We park our sore bodies at a sports bar a few gates away from our departure point but 5 hours prior to boarding, so time to let loose after the week of restraint. We are at one side of horseshoe shaped bar, eventually opposite a stunning young woman on the other prong, clearly in the realm of wanting to attract dick. She is the prototypical hot babe in the purest form; sweet body 5’6” firm build with C-cups, great care taken to present her face that would be perfectly hot without any makeup, but with makeup, and a skimpy summer dress that needed hard nipples to hold it up from the cool night air. Bar architecture promoted full body viewing. We admire. Thighs just visible enough to make me mumble after a week of dusty northern air. Many a man’s fantasy, this specimen.

I tell Ricky after all the ‘coaching’ over the past week (more like my venting), that he should approach this perfect ten, because why the fuck not - what does he have to lose.

Well, shit it takes no time at all for him to repulse this rare HB10 bird that is ready to take flight from her perch. While she flies past we lock gaze and she says “I’ll be back here in a bit”, but in an intimate way. I have to board in a few minutes and almost want to roll my eyes at the irony, but lock gazes with Ricky; dude this is just as easily your show, man.

It struck me since returning from this trip; much like my trade where I’m expected to pass along knowledge to those willing to absorb it, that a) it typically isn’t questioned, and if it is, the inquiry is operational (how-to), and b) I operate and pass it along since I believe in it, live it and have used it to my benefit. RP is trade like; those that have come before have “tested / verified and confirmed the methods needed to continue”.

I passed so much info along to Ricky that he might actually see this post and recognize himself - if that happens, dude I’m proud of your week away from whateverthefuck it is that keeps you say keeps you ‘grounded’.

Impress the shit out of yourself; stop smoking so much weed - it dulls your mind and costs you money. Look in the mirror after 2 months of weight training, and smile. Look at your bank balance after deferring the price of cigarettes quit for one whole year to a ghost account - what’s there; four grand? Get a hobby with that extra cash. And for fuck sake if you see this, post!
Blue Pill Trauma
by Rollo-Tomassi | August 1, 2018 | Link

Essay:
https://therationalmale.com/2018/08/01/blue-pill-trauma/

Excerpt:

She’s My Everything

We’re going to come back to this question later in this essay, but now I’d like you to have a look at the IM exchange I had a reader make me aware of on Twitter this week. I apologize for the resolution; the tweet was deleted not long after I commented on it and I had to rely on screen captures. What you’re looking at here is an exchange between a very invested Blue Pill guy and the thought process guys like this typically go through when the woman they’ve made their ‘everything’ wants them gone. There’s a lot going on in this and I wanted to parse it out here. When you’re Red Pill aware for any length of time it can sometimes be confusing to see the thought process that Blue Pill conditioning predisposes a guy to. The Red Pill Lens is one of the gifts (and curses) of having unplugged, and internalizing the awareness can make us somewhat confused or jaded to the experiences of guys who are still plugged in and trying to make their blinded understanding of intersexual dynamics work for them.

"Can this guy really not see why this girl wants to get away from him?" From a Red Pill perspective we might think this guy is an idiot for not seeing what he’s doing. It’s plain as day for us so their must be something wrong with him, right? Usually, the only thing wrong is that these guys’ Blue Pill conditioning has limited them to understanding their situations from that old set of books – the rule set that they believe (like a religion) that ‘quality women’ acknowledge and play by too. Lets try to put this jadedness aside for a moment.

[...] I can’t take my mind off of you no matter what I do and yesterday I literally cried for an hour in my room because I didn’t know what to do. I just really need you in my life and it kills me to know that I have messed our relationship up,...

This kid’s (it reads like he’s an adolescent) whole exchange is riddled with self-incrimination. This is an intrinsic part of Blue Pill conditioning – the guy is always at fault in any break up. Even with his now ex’s admission of her own complicity in their split, he’ll have none of it. If a relationship, a marriage, fails it is always because a guy wasn’t invested enough; even if she cheated on him the Blue Pill conditioned mind will only accept his complicity in her looking outside the relationship. I should also add that this is an integral part of the Promise Keepers mentality as well as the ‘Oprah-Marriage Counselor Approved’ notion that “relationships take a lot of work” and it’s always a man’s responsibility to qualify himself for a woman’s intimacy by maintaining that work.
As a result, the Blue Pill mind automatically defaults to self-blame and looks to find ways to negotiate some kind of new work-program that will ‘fix’ the ‘broken’ relationship he somehow caused. Blue Pill conditioned men are still men, and as such they default to the deductive reasoning that we’re largely predisposed to. So in that Blue Pill state it seems like logic to look for solutions that will put the relationship back together again. This is how Blue Pill men’s minds work; they have a set of (Old Books) rules they believe everyone is, or ought to be, playing by and since he also believes the lie of coequal agency (blank-slate) between men and women he thinks a woman’s desire and intimacy can be deductively bargained with. He realizes his failing and will be sure to correct it. But that’s not how all this works. In fact, it’s this very acknowledgement that only reinforces this woman’s decision to leave him. Hypergamy is rooted in doubt, and it turns out he is as Beta and optionless as her Hypergamous hindbrain suspected. His reaction to her confirms it.

[...] how can you just cut me out of your life so quickly? I want to make things better and work on our relationship because I know what it can be, why don’t you want to work on it?

I’m trying to avoid most of the clingy emotional shit in this exchange. Blue Pill guys will pepper in their emotive state even in the best of times in a relationship, but when they’re facing a break up, that’s when all the stuff he’s been taught about vulnerability being a strength turns into a huge liability for him. Not to mention it disgusts the woman leaving him.

Here we see the standard Blue Pill bewilderment over why this woman he’s deeply invested in can so casually blow him off and move on. Isn’t she playing by the same rulebook he’s been playing by since he learned to dutifully put women as his mental point of origin? I linked my War Brides essay in his quote above because this is the nuts and bolts reason as to how women can, and often do, move on so quickly. It is literally part of women’s preinstalled mental firmware to have the capacity to turn on a dime with their emotions.

Next he makes the Blue Pill appeals to Relational Equity and declares his willingness to ‘work on the relationship’ in order to fix it. In a breakup this ‘work on the relationship’ narrative works against women; particularly if the guy they’re leaving is overly invested in equalism. He’s been taught that “open communication is the key to any healthy relationship®” so he’s confused as to why his coequal ‘soul mate’ wouldn’t want to work on things and patch it up. When things are good the ‘work on things’ narrative is a benefit for women getting the things they want, but when she wants to leave a Blue Pill guy (usually because she wants to open herself to better Hypergamous options) it’s a leash around her neck. Why doesn’t she want to ‘work on the relationship’?
Men of March: Day #2
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 2, 2017 | Link

Day #1

Yesterday Recap: Each day I’ll do a brief recap from the day before. Day #1 received significant support and we have hundreds of men following the program. I hope the momentum continues.

My fear is that bad habits will overcome initial motivation as it’s not motivation but rather discipline which is needed.

Men, Don’t reward yourself with a drink after work if you’ve given it up for the month. Don’t jerk off when your wife isn’t around because that’s the only way you can fall sleep or that you ‘need to relax’.

This is about doing it differently, it’s about doing it right.

It’s so easy to say yes when some offers you a smoke or drink.

You must say no.

Show yourself that you’re worthy of the life you feel you deserve. There are no second chances, you’re either all in or you aren’t. If you fail, confess to it and try to continue on, but share it as hiding it and pretending you’re still marching with the real men will only drive your self hate to greater heights.

This is about reclaiming your masculine nature. You’re worth the physical and mental pain required to complete that task.

Suffer with me for this month and you’ll forever be able to claim the glory of being an original Man of March.

Reminder: The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don’t give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.
4. You must start reading a book. Even if it’s just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don’t have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.

5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go. This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Life isn’t about hiding from storms, it’s about learning to dance in the rain.

Day #2: Stop Avoiding It

There’s something you’ve avoided dealing with for weeks, months, or possibly even years.

I don’t know what that something is, but you do.

It’s difficult for you right now, as you start thinking of what it could be. But it’s growing inside as you know what it is; but you’re so used to shoving it deep into your soul that sometimes, it isn’t the focus of your mind.

*You forget about it.

Now there’s a lump building in your throat, because I’m not going to let you forget about it and you know that. You don’t want to fail this Men of March challenge and be ostracized from your brothers, but you don’t feel you’re ready to face it yet.

You are.

Heart’s beating a little faster, breathing is getting shallower...

You know what it is

Listen to me, you’re going to stop avoiding it and you’re going to face it head on like a man.

There’s skeletons in everyone’s closet, but this isn’t a skeleton as they’re dead and this, this is very much alive.

That harsh truth you shove deep inside, it’s coming out and it’s coming out for good.

I told you this wasn’t going to be an easy month.

Brothers, it is absolutely critical that you do not put forth all of these efforts only to fall to pieces later on again as you have so many times before because the empire you built was on a weak foundation.

Holding the pain down and swallowing the reality you hate leads to there being gaps in your sense of ‘self’. You’ll never develop your masculine foundation if you can’t face all of who you are.

I’ll provide some raw examples from men I’ve helped. Every example comes from a man who after messaging back and forth with me and taking ownership of his demons reached that level of total ownership of himself and his life. But, he had to face the music first and that’s not easy.

Avoidances

1. You are a terrible father. You know you should be more involved in your kid’s life but between working late, taking are of home matters you’re just too busy to stop and play with them. You keep thinking you’ll take them out on the weekends or you’ll take them on vacation, but you promised someone you’d help them, you aren’t feeling well, or you’d just rather ‘relax’ after such a long week at work; then you go back to work. Your kids have no father, they have a man who lives with them.

2. Your wife doesn’t love you. She’s disgusted at how heavy you’ve gotten and she views you with judging eyes that say, “Why are you so fucking stupid?” You know she’s right; you are fat, you’ve stopped having a passion for anything in life, and you’re just too fucking tired to try anymore.

3. You want to kill yourself but you’re too scared. You’ve thought of it, maybe you’ve half attempted it. If you’re reading this you failed or never went through and instead decided to just hate yourself and hate your life, but not enough to end it.

4. You’re weak. You talk loud and bully people but it’s in an attempt to compensate in your lack of belief in your own strength. You’re the guy who talks a big game, but inside your screaming because of how insecure you are and if you were to be slapped across the face by a real man, you’re more likely to cry than fight back.

5. You don’t know who you are. You aren’t living your life but merely existing nothing makes you feel. You’re just an apathetic individual waiting for the clock to strike the final seconds of your life.

6. You just want to be loved. Your wife doesn’t love you, your family doesn’t love you, and no matter how hard you try you just aren’t good enough...

This list could go on for pages, but that isn’t the point. These are but a few examples of what modern day men are feeling. It’s due to the fact that society pressures men, *from birth, to repress who they are and their true feelings on anything.

Today we break their hold.

Today you stop avoiding the harsh reality that there is a noose around your neck and that you’ve been balancing on a chair for days, weeks, months, or even years trying not to fall and lose it all. The balancing game is done.

I’m untying your hands and handing you a knife; cut the rope and step down from the chair.

You are free.

Release the stress, stop pretending everything is OK, and let the emotions flood over you.

Challenge #2

1. Do 100 push-ups.

2. Face whatever it is that you have been too terrified to meet head on.

Maybe that means admitting to past abuses. Maybe it means telling a loved one or friend that they are toxic for what you want to do in your life and that you’ve got to head different ways. Maybe for you it means sitting in front of a mirror and admitting that everything isn’t all right and that changes need to be made.

It will be tough to talk to your friends and family, but masculine men do what they have to do, not always what they want to do.

Whatever that thing is for you, don’t avoid it a moment longer or it will haunt you and sabotage any effort you make during this month.

Fight it brother, your fellow Men of March are here for you.

Wrapping up Day #2

Too many men are carrying around this weight on their soul. Some days it isn’t so bad, some days they feel like they can’t breathe, like the world is on their chest.
When you release the black cloud living in your heart, mind, and soul it's like running out of air 10′ feet below the surface of the water, it takes every you have to kick, scrape, and claw to get there but when you face what you’re avoided you break the surface and you can finally breathe again.

Now, breathe deep and come up with a game plan on how you’re going to handle this today.

Post on the Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/01/701/

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Mr. and Mrs. Smith Syndrome
by RP_SuitScholar | November 14, 2016 | Link

This post is about a phenomenon that I have seen play out here and in /askmrp multiple times. I have also witnessed it with the men that I have helped in my personal life that are taking some Red Pill coaching from me. Since I am creative as fuck, I am going to call it Mr. and Mrs. Smith Syndrome, based from the movie Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie starred in years ago. For those of you that don’t know about the movie, the reader’s digest version is they are a bored married couple who are each secretly spies from rival organizations. They do not know that each other are spies until at some point in the movie they both independently find out about the other.

The concept I am writing about is based on a mildly entertaining scene that plays out when they are having dinner with each other at the house, trying to go through the standard motions of what their marriage has been every other day, but each is cautiously watching the behavior of the other, waiting for an attack. Watch the movie if you want to see what happens because the rest of the scene is an analogy for what will happen in your marriage and family if you mishandle the Red Pill.

So here are the stages of Mr. and Mrs. Smith Syndrome:

1. Blue Pill Beta Bitch finds the Red Pill (Confusion Stage)
2. BPBB starts lifting and internalizing sidebar (Monk Stage)
3. BPBB gets pissed as he realizes his whole life has been a lie (Anger Stage)
4. BPBB starts to view his wife as an agent of the system (Paranoia Stage)
5. BPBB starts treating his wife like his enemy (Attack Stage)
6. BPBB wrecks his marriage (Fucked Stage)

Let’s take a closer look at each stage...

Confusion Stage

We’ve all been here. This is Neo realizing there is a Matrix. You start to see the strings controlling you but you don’t understand what it all means and how deep it goes. The problem is, it all makes sense and you keep going down the rabbit hole.

Monk Stage

Unless you are a complete moron you do not share the Red Pill with your wife, especially at this stage. You STFU and read and start lifting. You will start getting questions from her at this stage about the change in routine you have started to implement. Again, unless you’re an idiot you just keep going without saying much here.

Anger Stage

These first two stages are pretty basic and are the standard reaction most men have to the Red Pill. As such, they don’t need to be corrected, and in fact I don’t think you can correct them as they are more reactions then conscious actions. The Anger Stage is different. Most of us do hit an Anger Stage, but what separates the real men from the faggots is how they react to the anger. Yes, you were lied to your whole life, but no it is not your wife’s fault, even if she is the one that has actively been abusing you as her Beta Bitch. That is her programming but it was your fault for allowing it. Be angry at the system and yourself. If you cannot do that, now you are going down the Mr. and Mrs. Smith path which takes us to the next stage...

Paranoia Stage

Okay. You’re pissed. You’ve been lied to, used, and abused. And that BITCH you married is the cause. She’s not the soulmate you thought she was, she is an agent of the system. Now you put everything she does under a microscope. She hugged you on your way to work...was that a comfort test? She asked you what your plans are tonight...was that a shit test? She said her N count was 4, but is she lying because she rode the cock carousel and the real number is 40? Oh Jesus you told her you loved her, are you losing frame?

Jesus, what a faggot. Relax.

Attack Stage

This is what I see too much of and it’s a sad thing to behold. Bluepillprofessor said it best, we give men dynamite here so they can remove obstacles in their lives but many of them use it to blow their families up instead. Just like Brad and Angelina you and your wife go into attack mode. The tools you were given in Red Pill to make you a better man, like DNGAF and Abundance Mentality, now make you a heartless cunt to the woman you chose to raise a family with. You’re on Dread Level 4 and decide you’re going to kick her out or start an affair. No judgement. Fuck who you want to fuck, but don’t fool yourself into thinking you’re doing it from a place of Alpha mindset. You are still a Beta Bitch who has little to no self-control and must fill your empty sense of self-worth with something besides personal development. Oh, and if your wife is destroyed in the process you don’t care because she’s your adversary. Right?

Faggot.

Fucked Stage

Nothing’s left but a handful of destroyed lives. Good job, Captain. You really did great, didn’t you? What a strong Alpha Male you are...

Conclusion

Stop living in paranoia. Relax. Lift. Digest the sidebar slowly and with repetition. Go through the levels of dread slowly, and if you get to the end and she hasn’t come along for the journey you can calmly next her with a sense of Amused Mastery. Don’t create a marriage infected with this Mr. and Mrs. Smith Syndrome. Stop fighting and looking at her every action as a potential attack.
Being Beta is Being Afraid.
by Reddjive | May 26, 2017 | Link

Ever feel like you’re sailing through a storm on a tiny rowboat?

Being a beta is kind of like that. You work your tail off to get things moving in the right direction only to get thrown off course when your fortune changes.

Even worse?

When you aren’t struggling through a storm, you’re crippled by anxiety and fear. When will something go wrong next? Maybe I should just stop trying and turn this thing around? Maybe if I do this she will like me again.

Being Alpha is not difficult. Not at all. Being Alpha is simply facing obstacles head on. Alphas fight. Alphas continue. It’s not about winning nor losing it’s about standing up and being counted. A true warrior isn’t the one wins but the one that stands and says...me. I’ll go - despite the odds.

This is what men do.

Marcus Aurelius put it best. “Life is warfare and a journey far from home,”

We aren’t victims. We may passively accept the things that are not in our control, but the rest? Fuck it.

We are coming up on the weekend. For most new alphas you are looking at another weekend with your shrew. Locked in mortal combat for 2 days. Maybe you won’t get laid, maybe you will just completely lose every ounce of frame you’ve been jealously guarding this week. maybe you'll get the blowjob you've been hoping to get for months. You’re planning scheming, prepping your AA, AM lines, making sure you’ve gleaned every bit of knowledge from MRP so you are prepared for war.

You know what that is? Fear. Being beta is simply being afraid. Afraid of all the things you’ve built in your mind. Like a 5 year old who thinks monsters live under the bed. Alphas love. They love life. Every aspect of it. A love for everything that happens and the courage to stand up to it.

Your challenge this weekend is to stand up to your life. Men have faced greater challenges, but yet some how there are many that cannot stand up to their women, their kids, their simple life. This weekend consider the fight you are facing. Are you dealing with it head on? Are you hiding? Take joy in the simple pleasures and look around and ask:

What am I really afraid of?

Stop being afraid. I was just discussing this with a close friend. Fear is insidious. It creeps in unbeknownst and masquerades as other things, other emotions, excuses...sound familiar?
Think of our ego like the blanket that 5 year old wraps himself in. Hiding, shivering for fear of his simple imagination. On the other hand you can be a man and have your foot sticking out and think fuck it. Demons...come take me home.

Live and love fiercely. There is no other way.
Wow...I just totally lost my shit.

by resolutions316 | May 10, 2017 | Link

This saved a bit early, I meant to tag is as a FR (or possibly Cautionary Tale.)

Context: MRP since November. Lifting, sidebar, hobbies, leadership, etc - working on all of those, not perfect anywhere but lots of progress. Married about 6 years, SAHM, two kids, 3 and 1. Career beta that whole time, married to my oneitis. 100% dead bedroom for 1.5 years after the second kid was conceived. Only recently started having sex again. Had a huge blowout two months ago, after she was acting depressed enough that I had worries about the kid's well being. Since then, things have stabilized - she's MUCH better, much more in control, dressing nicer, much better with the kids, better mood. But sex has also drifted off, from a high right after that big fight (8 times that month) to about once every week and a half. Also important: I've initiated the last few nights and been rejected, and those rejections got to me, even after a few months of truly feeling OI.

---

So, MRP - tell me how much I fucked up. Pretty sure I was just involved in a train wreck.

Now, something you should know about me: I don't get mad. Really, hardly ever. I had a wicked temper as a kid, really hurt some other kids in fights, and had my anger straight up therapy-ed out of me.

Because of that, I internalize anger. I don't show it. I can count on 1 hand the times I have gotten visibly outraged at my wife over our 9 year relationship. If I get really pissed, I might go in another room and punch myself in the leg. Given myself some nice bruises that way, but other than that, it's extremely rare for me to blow up, yell, etc.

This week I've been trying to make plans with a friend, Friend X. That friend also knows my wife (we all grew up together), but Friend X and I are very close, grab beers together for "Dad Nights", etc.

I've noticed my wife and I haven't had a date night in a while, and we've been hanging out separately a lot. I thought it would be nice to lead our relationship and get some group hang time in.

Yesterday I texted for logistics, letting her know I was making plans for this week with friend X. I asked if she'd be down to have him over the house after the kids were asleep, maybe play a board game. She has been reluctant to have people over in the past, because she feels self conscious about our house.

She didn't reply. She's on her phone all fucking day, messaging her friends, so I know she got the text. Fine - no worries. I Friend X called me this morning, let me know he would be in town, and we decided to grab a beer. Texted wife:

ME: Heads up - Friend X will be in town tonight, so I'm swinging out to meet him. Won't be till around 7:30.

HER: Wait. Is this instead of him coming over to hang out?

ME: i never heard back from you about that. do you want him to come over?

HER: You never followed up with me. I didn't have a chance to think it answer when you texted. I wish you would stop assuming things. You do this a lot.

HER: I'm so frustrated. Like, what went through your thought process when I didn't respond? There are so many possibilities and you just assumed one thing which is most convenient for you.

...............

ME: wow.

HER: That's what you have to say? We are supposed to be working in our communication. It continues to be a problem.

I don't know if it was her "tone" - like she was chastising one of our kids. I don't know if it was the complete taking me for granted. I don't know if it was just weeks of initiating and getting rejected, all the "I have OI" talk I'd been giving myself just covering up more resentment.

But at this point, I lost it.

Blood started pounding in my head. My hands started shaking. My breathing sped up, and I started pacing the room...

...And then, from my hands to the keyboard, emerged the grossest fucking victim puke.

I'm including it here because it's fucking embarrassing. If I'm being honest, I didn't even mean to send it - I typed it in, expecting to get it out and then delete it.

But of course, I hit "send" instead.

ME: how about i don't want to text because I am soon fucking pissed at you. I texted YOU to include YOU in plans that I was making. I wanted to hang out with YOU and reached out to YOU because we haven't hung out much lately. YOU are on your phone all fucking DAY and probably facebook messaged your friends 150 times over the course of the next 24 hours. I told YOU I was trying to making plans for this week. and yet, when YOU don't have the fucking time or courtesy to respond to ME, it is MY fault and I should've been chasing YOU around and treating you like a fucking child.

jesus fucking christ i am so fucking pissed i can barely breathe hence me trying to pull back on the texts and nOT RESPOND i am shaking god damn, you take me for granted. holy FUCK

I haven't edited any of that, because hopefully one day I will look back on my post history here and laugh at this.

I then called her, basically reiterated the above, she started arguing back about "how dare I turn this around on her" and "is it too much to ask that I follow up with her in person." And I argued back every point, completely sucked in.

She said she had to go - she was with our son - and we'd talk about it when I got home.

Look, this is like, the picture of an MRP train wreck. Losing frame, being butt hurt, showing weakness, getting sucked into fights, DEERing, fucking texting!

Like I was going down a fucking check list of things not to do, and then just doing them instead.

I probably undid months of work.

But, honestly...it feels so good to be MAD. It feels good to be pissed off and vocal about it. It feels good to get pissed and call her out on shit.

I know - it's probably terrible for the marriage, terrible for me. But I actually feel GOOD now. I'm sure it'll fade and this will just feel shitty, like the victim puke it was.

Anyway. Posting this here to remind everyone, and myself:

1.) You can feel like you are on top of you shit, and still let stupid bullshit get to you. Never slack off or let up your guard.

2.) Even when you THINK you have let go of resentment and butthurt, that shit goes deep and can fuck you up when you least expect it. This day started perfectly fine.

3.) I made a commitment when I started here to be open about this process. This shit is fucking embarassing. I'm posting it anyway.
If you guys haven't noticed yet, none of the concepts I write about are actually tied directly to marriage. The reason for this is because marriage isn't this uniquely special snowflake entity. Life isn't compartmentalized like that; if you're dominating at work, but totally suck at marriage, you're bullshitting your mentality at one, the other, or both. Figure out who you are, what you're about, and start aiming for congruence in your attitudes and behaviors. Remember, choosing to not making a decision is making a decision. Enough with the 101. Let's move on with the 201.

The most important thing that you need to have for professional satisfaction, as every single successful professional will tell you, is fuck you money. There have been tons of articles written about it, so I'm just going to link an article with a red pill slant.

Let's start with a definition -

- Fuck you money, as you may have guessed, is uncommitted cash sitting in your bank account which you can use to live on when you need to say “fuck you!” to an asshole boss, customer, or employer of any variety.

And let's continue with the all important why -

- It’s the stash of cash you will have which will allow you to operate and live as a free human being rather than a slave.

So what does that really mean -

- Fuck you money is good because it gives you power and independence.

And with this caveat -

- I’m not saying you will have to quit work and spend your days stroking your beard on the porch and reading philosophy (although you can do that if you wish), but it will give you the option to quite simply pack up your things and tell anybody you don’t like to get out of your face.

Which brings us back to MRP and a theme I'm seeing guys who've put in a lot of effort continue to struggle with (I'm looking at you /u/jdroedell). Where's your fuck you money for your marriage?

Ask yourselves that real quick. Do you actually have a stash of reserves ready to go in the event that you need it?

I'd bet for many of you the answer is no.

I'd bet many of you are living in the many years of debt that you've built up emasculating yourselves, letting yourselves turn into physically and emotionally unattractive fucks. I'd bet you're paying interest on this debt to this very day.

If you don't have any fuck you money, when your boss says jump, you're going to say how high. That's the choice you've left yourself with. You put yourself in a position where you have no choice and no options - where you're effectively a slave to the whims and wants of another individual, without power, without independence.

Fuck you money isn't really about a specific sum of money either. It's about a state of mind. If you don't have any fuck you money but know for a fact that you can get a job that pays just as well tomorrow - then you're more than free to tell your boss to go fuck himself today. If you're bullshitting yourself about being able to get a job tomorrow, then you're stuck in a shitty position aren't you?

The beauty of fuck you money is that it does provide you with choice. It gives you the option to stick around so long as you enjoy the job, you enjoy the environment, and you're reaping a personal benefit from being there. Just because you have fuck you money doesn't mean you're obliged to go running around and screaming "FUCK YOU" in everyone's face. But a more subdued "That plan isn't going to work for me. Let's figure out a better alternative." isn't out of the question when the situation calls for it. When you have that fuck you money state of mind, you're free to use it as frivolously or reservedly as you want.

If you don't have any fuck you money for the many aspects in your life, it's as good a time as any to start cultivating and saving.
Shit test win 6 weeks in. Big win.

by [deleted] | June 25, 2017 | Link

[deleted]
So, I had a family gathering this past weekend, and some of the wife's cousins are about the same age as she is, but we don't see them often... it's probably been about a year since we've seen this particular couple. Her cousin is married as well and has two young kids.

Anyway, the cousin comes into the reception hall and gives me a big hug and says "OMG, you look great, no, wait, you look AMAZING!" I thanked her for the compliment and went back to doing my thing. My wife was coming over to greet her from the other side of the venue, but I assume over heard/ saw this exchange, because she came up to me, and gave me a big hug and kiss.

I asked her "What was that for?" (I know what it was, but wanted to see what the hamster told her to say). She said "For helping set all this up." (I helped with a bit of the decorating) I just smiled at her and said, "No problem."

Knowing what I know now about how the female hamster thinks, I totally recognize this as preselection at it's finest. She got validation from another female about her "good" choice in mates.

While working on myself has made a drastic improvement in my/ our relationship, I've found that, if you want your woman to want you more, you don't need to impress her... you need to impress OTHER women. She should want/ need you, but if she's not getting the "this is my man" feelz to keep the other women away, you are that much closer to her branch swinging.
Hi everybody:

We have got the word from one of the RPW moderators that a lot of married guys are posting on RPW. Please remember that RPW is a sub for WOMEN to discuss Red Pill strategy.

Lurk if you must over there but remember that RPW is not your henhouse. They are apparently getting some posts with 9/10 responses coming from MRP men and this is driving away some women from their sub.

I can certainly appreciate why that would be a problem for them and we are not going to let this dynamic continue.

If you want to cross-post a RPW comment as a post on MRP (so long as it is relevant) I have no problems but the RPW points are valid.

from RPW Mod: /u/wingnut you are taking over our sub. You kicked us out of here for good reason, women were giving bad "team woman" advice, and this is a place for MEN to advise men and destroying male community. Now you guys are doing that to Us.

There is no other place for non-religious women to congregate meet and communicate, no place, RPW is IT. We are male friendly and hate all that feminist "safe space for women" bullshit, but you are all LITERALLY driving women out of our sub and taking it over. Some posts have a 90/10 male female response ratio and it has become ALL mrp posters. We are not your wives or your sister sorority, neither are we TRPs, we are our own community and if you keep interfering with us youll all be banned on sight, not every place on the internet is for you.

Let me add that I will enforce a suspension and then a ban for any MRP users who are interfering or trolling another RP sub. Just as MRP is male space, RPW is female space. Please respect this fact and do NOT interfere with their carefully structured dynamic.

TLDR: Stay out of the henhouse or you are liable to be banned on RPW and MRP.
My first attempt to post something to /r/marriedredpill and not just comment. Hope y'all enjoy it.

I've noticed with men having problems with their marriage, their wife's behavior seems to fit three archetypes. I'd like to outline them here and I'm curious if you gents will agree with me.

1. The Drunk Captain With A Pissed First Officer Who's Had to Take Command:

Your wife asks you to pick up something from the grocery store for dinner. You pick up a slightly different brand, size, etc of whatever she wanted. This results in her yelling at you and criticizing you for a lot of unrelated issues. She works all day, she's waking up all night, breastfeeding your infant child, and you're apparently so worthless you can't even pick up the right kind of ground beef. The warmth is draining from your marriage, and you feel you're try your best to make her happy, but she seems to find fault in even your most minor mistakes. In the morning, she hinted at having sex that night, which you were really looking for to since it's been a whole month. But then you had to go and buy 90% lean ground beef instead of 93% lean ground beef, didn't you? That 3% more fat might as well be the 0% fat chance you have of having sex that night.

The Problem: If your story starts with saying, "I was alpha, met my wife, and turned beta," this is probably you. But your wife didn't turn you beta, you did. In other words, you're the Drunk Captain.

It's not about the groceries. She's berating and henpecking you because she's pissed off that you haven't stepped up as leader of the household. She's reluctantly had to take the reigns, because she feels the ship will crash otherwise. She's no longer telling you what structural improvements she wants -- she's given up completely on your ability to execute anything meaningful. So all your attempts to "help" are looked at almost with contempt. No amount of running errands or doing chores will make up for the major deficiencies you've allowed in your life.

The Solution: Get your shit together. Read MMSL, and start working on your MAP. Make those structural improvements she wants. Hit the gym. Focus on work. Make real improvements in your life and in your children's lives, if you have them. This will almost definitely piss her off at first. Like I've said, she's written you off. When she sees you doing things like going to the gym, her gut reaction will be, "Oh, the Captain thinks he can just sober up and take command overnight? I don't trust him for a minute."

There will be a period where she doesn't trust your leadership, and on top of that, now sees you declining the pathetic ways you used to "help" her before. This will be tough and you can expect a lot of Shit Tests, but your road is actually is the easiest to navigate of these three scenarios. This is because your wife fundamentally wanted to be a First Officer, not a First Officer Who Had to Take Over For a Drunk Captain, which is why she was attracted to the Younger Alpha You to begin with. Follow your MAP, maintain your frame, and become that guy again. You'll know you've turned the corner when those Shit Tests have given way to Comfort Tests, and you'll eventually be able to regain her trust, respect, and eventually admiration.

Degree of Difficulty: Depends on how long you've been figuratively drunk, but this is the easiest of the three dysfunctional Captain and First Officer scenarios. The failure mode here is the husband's decline into betadom, the woman's nagging/henpecking as she's resentful she's had to take command, and the husband lets himself be beatdown by said nagging/henpecking. Then they go to "marriage counseling," which only encourages a deeper rift. The husband is told, "you need to appreciate your wife," but no amount of appreciation will make her happy -- she doesn't want to be appreciated for being in command, she doesn't want to command the ship at all! And the wife is told, "you need to stop busting your husband's balls," but the easiest solution to that is to stop making them such a big target!

---

2. The Captain and the Constantly Complaining Passenger:

You've made plans to meet up with some friends for happy hour after work, and you're excited; you haven't seen them in months and you feel lucky they're even still talking to you. You're wrapping up your day at work, when your phone starts vibrating; it's your wife. Just seeing her name pop up on your phone causes your gut to tighten and make you feel slightly anxious, even if you'd never consciously admit that to yourself, let alone her. You pick up the phone, and she immediately launches into how annoying her job was that day. Normally you'd entertain the hours of verbal diarrhea that inevitably will come out of her mouth, but you're going to be late to meet with your friends. You try and gently interrupt her story, which immediately causes her to direct her wrath at you. "So it's more important for you to get drunk with your friends then listen to your wife's problems. I see how it is." You try and backpedal, offer to keep listening to her, but now she's entrenched in her anger at you. You defend yourself, saying you're hardly going to "get drunk," and will be home well before 7pm. Some how this leads her to start crying, saying how stressed she's been lately and how she feels so unsupported by everyone, including her own husband. You sigh, tell her you'll be right home. Looks like happy hour isn't going to be so happy for you after all.

The Problem: You're the Captain, but somehow this means you're responsible for everything that goes wrong, and don't get any credit for anything going right -- pretty much as discussed in Rollo's post "Mutiny." Your wife isn't a First Officer, she's just a passenger -- and a very critical one at that. If your wife feels negatively for any reason, it's automatically your fault. If anything negative happens to the family; again, your fault. It's impossible to reason with her, because so much of her responses to anything are based on her "feelings," and she has a way to twist anything she doesn't like as your lack of consideration for said feelings.
Pick your analogy: eggshells, a tightrope, or a bed of nails, either way, you're walking on them constantly and it sucks. Any suggestions from her are basically just negative criticism, and work much like George Steinbrenner's old rationale for insulting players in the media. If you fuck up, she was right. If you succeed in spite of her criticism, then she "lit a fire under you" or "is glad you proved her wrong by finally stepping up." Your sex life isn't barren, which is nice, but only seems to happen after an epic fight, which isn't so nice.

The Solution: Your story probably doesn't start with "I was alpha, then became beta." Sadly, you were probably "beta" for most of your life, likely stemming from codependency issues developed during your youth. Your parents divorced and you found yourself having to console and comfort your mom or younger siblings, and this what you equated with "love" -- protecting people from bad feelings, even if you have to take responsibility for all of them. Or attributing love to dealing with some sort of conflict, even if it's self-imposed.

So Mr. White Knight, this doesn't get any better until you stop that. The good news is, you're probably already a pretty good Captain. Anyone viewing your marriage from the outside would probably see a nice house, happy kids, bills paid, and food on the table. You can't turn your wife into a good First Officer overnight, but you can stop caring about her criticism about your failures. It's going to be terrifying for your wife to not have you taking responsibility for all her emotions, and you're going to see that right away. She'll alternate between Shit Tests and Comfort Tests, sometimes within the same conversation. She'll criticize you, get hysterical when you brush it off, and then end up in tears because, "it just seems like you don't love me anymore." This likely won't end until you manage to hold frame through a level DEFCON1 Nuclear Shit Test, but then there's nowhere to go but up from there.

Your bible is WISNIFG. For too long, you've attributed your value to how pleased others were by you. That needs to stop, especially because chances are your wife isn't the only codependent relationship you're in. But while your game is boundaries, this is going to instill a radioactive level of Dread in your wife without you even trying all that hard. Focus on techniques like Fogging and Negative Inquiry and Negative Assertion, because this gives you the best chance to navigate setting boundaries without your wife freaking out that "you hate her and she can't live like this anymore," and torching your house.

Degree of Difficulty: Generally this marriage is what happens when you mix a codependent man with a "Cluster B" (narcissistic, histrionic, or borderline) personality disorder. If these traits are acute in you and/or her, get ready for a lot of intense drama that your marriage may not survive. Your wife may decide that taking responsibility for her emotions was her condition to being married to you. Or you may feel her hysterics are just too emotionally trying for you to keep maintaining frame.

Otherwise, if you'd describe your wife as just "emotionally needy" but not necessarily to a pathological level, you should be able to come out of this just fine. The only other pitfall is when you inevitable instill that Dread, you'll be tempted to enjoy and relish it. The opposite of Dread is taking you for granted, which is what she's essentially done for most of your marriage. You've probably built up some resentment about that, and it'll tempting to watch that Dread and even intentionally fail Comfort Tests. But you do want to save your marriage, you're going to need to learn to resist this.

For what it's worth, this is only scenario that I consider talking to a professional -- separately -- to be helpful. Individual therapy can help you overcome your codependent ways of thinking, and if your wife truly is truly a full-blown Cluster B, a professional will be able to help her deal with (or medicate) her moods in ways that you can't.
Divorce won't fix your relationship, you will by ex_addict_bro | January 24, 2017 | Link

TL;DR

Had the "main event" 1 year after divorce.

Body

Everything with the ex-wife went kind of smooth, unless the time of winter holidays came.

I prepared a really cool retreat in the mountains with my kids (9, 7 and 2 yrs old) and my gf. The logistics behind it was, gf stays with the youngest kid when I take older sons for snowboarding (up to 2 hrs max).

Ex didn't like that. Gf wasn't too enthusiastic because she lacks experience with kids this age, but she was like "hell, why not". My youngest son communicates his needs very well (he will grab your hand and lead you to the fridge if he wants to eat something, for example). Me, after getting an advice from my advisor (thanks buddy, you know who you are), decided I'm okay with that. I can leave my youngest son with ex for 7 days, ski resorts aren't really too 2-yr-old-friendly. So I agreed.

This discussion had place about month ago and I decided my youngest kids stays with his mom. We settled this via e-mail so I had the records.

Then, ex started to act angry and aggressive 2 days before our departure. We had a phone call once. I saw her as a feeble, emotional woman, perhaps for the first time in my life; That phone call included me stating "you have 5 minutes to spill everything you got - I'm listening everything you say", me stating "if you want to hit the legal route, just do it, I'm okay with that, here is the zip code for my new address and as it was already mentioned twice by you - I don't see why should we discuss that any more"; basically I used all the tips from "WISNIFG" and also from MRP regulars during that phone call, thanks guys.

She used all the gaslighting she had. I heard numerous straightforward blatant lies like "your older kids didn't know you're taking your gf!", "it is your fault you won't take your youngest son for holidays". I had e-mails which stated otherwise, and also called my oldest kid to ask him, when did I tell him that we're going with my gf (his answer: "month ago, dad, when you told us where we're going"). I also proposed that I will take my youngest kid with us anyway because I can provide him with adequate, because I can. Even if I literally asked her month ago "are you sure you want your youngest son to stay with you during holidays? I don't want a situation when you will change your mind day before we leave".

At some point ex stated that I either leave my gf at home - or that she won't give me the kids and she will lie that they're sick. I was calm, because I still have keys to their apartment (I'm a co-owner), if they kids are really sick I can see that (I have medical degree). I told her I'm going to call the police when she meets the criteria. She told me they won't be home. I told her, I'm still going to call the police, so they make a report and I will take it to my lawyer later. But honestly, who would have thought - an apartment for 5 people in the mountains and only me and my gf inside - that for a moment was a really attractive option for me. Ex, you want to take the kids for a week more, just do it.

So basically, I was really outcome independent. Not because some flaired guy at TRP told me to, but because I was prepared for every option. I'm going alone or just with gf or with her and 2 kids or 3 kids or without her and with 2 kids (we would manage ourselves) or without her and 3 kids (I had a girl who does babysitting and also wants to learn how to snowboard as a backup, I kid you not). Every single option was fitting me.

And, I realised later, I am literally giving zero fucks about the situation, the life and everything. Not because u/Archwinger wrote once it is a good idea, no. I gave many fucks and my marriage failed and I got big alimony and had to move out instead. So now I give zero fucks. I don't care. I realised how much problems was caused just by my big, big ego. I realised that I really don't matter too much (because u/stonepimpletilists wrote so). I realised, that even if I would be missing today, my kids would probably eventually come out to be all right some day. Or, they would not, and this is also acceptable and possible and okay. Whatever.

But basically I had enough of ex's behaviour. And letting her dictate who do I take for my holidays with me was definitely not a good idea.

I didn't told her anything, I didn't try to tell her how to be a grown up person. I accepted her, as she was. Feeble, hurt, emotional woman with Stockholm Syndrome and perhaps some other disorders. I saw her being really hurt. Last year as a last resort I decided that we'll go on the winter holidays together with the kids and those holidays went really fine (and I behaved really calm during those holidays because some guys at MRP wrote it was a good idea, so I did) - and she actually confirmed she was missing that time together. Me going on a winter holidays with another girl and kids marked an end of an era for her.

And me? I just had some idea to spend time with my kids that I thought it was cool, I already paid for the apartment and I wanted to go to try some longer snowboarding routes.

And I was not going to take any of my ex wife's shit any more.

Epilogue

On monday I went to collect the kids. I was calm. I enabled voice recording on my iPhone, but it went really smooth, she behaved herself so I deleted the recordings shortly thereafter. I received some hateful emails that I did not reply to (because some guys at MRP told me to STFU and because, honestly, I could not care less about her at this point - I'm like "bitch, I give you this much, I pay alimony on time, you was left with car, flat, I take care of my kids, you act like shit still, GTFO").

When we arrived, everything was way better than I expected, including weather. My kids instantly picked up the holiday vibe, picked up some sled (shit, free sled for guests, who would have thought) and went out to play. I snap a photo and send it to the ex wife as an act of grace, she replies with "so did you arrive?" but I STFU at this point. Kids FaceTime her in the evening because 7yr old got an iPod Touch as X-mas gift and the wi-fi is really great.

Gf overhears her asking them "did daddy locked himself in the bathroom with his girlfriend and leave you alone", tells me about it later, I turn it into joke ("shit, she must think I'm a some neanderthal... but whatever, maybe we should do this, this sounds like a good idea!", smile, wink, ass smack) - when writing it I realize, shit, MAYBE it was a shit-test from my gf? Whatever. I realise later ex wife behaviour is just pumping up my value. Let the butthurt flow through her, pre-selection for the win. But on the other hand, I could not care less.

Everything is splendid around here, including weather. I'm becoming suspicious.

Summary

My ex is still a trainwreck.

Lessons learned

- divorce won't magically fix your life,
- every failure of yours, every failure as-a-man in your relationship with your wife will be augmented in case you divorce,
- lift and sidebar, if not for yourself, then do this for the sake of your kids. There will be problems, there will be "parental alienation syndrome", there will be life happening. You need to be strong, prepared, cool, calm and collected.
- everything they teach here that you should do in the pre-divorce phase becomes suddenly a really solid framework after you divorce and move out. What did I had to change after I moved out? Not much. Everything was in place. The gym, the food and diet. I realised what I can and need to improve - using MAP - which was also the part of the, let's call this, pre-divorce framework.

EDIT: ex still a train wreck? Is she? Bullshit. She does whatever worked with me. Manipulation and gaslighting are not much more than words, really. If you can achieve something just by speaking with someone, why not try it?

She does know exactly whatever she needs to say to make me do this and that. Fortunately, for me, I realised where I am and how can I act to make this whole thing less "hers" and more "mine".
The Important of Stoicism to Achieving Your Preferred Outcomes

by Th3JourneyRed | August 15, 2018 | Link

TL;DR - Your woman experiences your anger as a threat. This is a result of biology. Any time she sees you frustrated, enraged, or anywhere in between, her amygdala goes crazy, and she goes into crisis mode. In order for her to calm down/accept your frame, you have to be cool and collected first.

Intro

Life is not fair. The sooner you can recognize this, the sooner you will be able to build habits of thought that will help you cope with your surroundings in a way that produces outcomes you want. It is not fair that Lebron James is a physical marvel that no amount of lifting and practice will let you equal. If you can not accept this fact, then you will go through life bitter at his billion dollar empire, instead of focusing on what you can do to make your life better.

That's a contrived and easy example, though. This fact of life is more relevantly applied to your relationship with your LTR and society in general. It is not fair that she can raise her voice and even go so far as to hit you without being perceived as a significant threat, whereas mere body language from you sets off all kinds of alarm bells in her and in wider society.

You can act in the exact same manner as your LTR, and it will achieve wildly different outcomes.

Explanation

The reason for this is rooted in the innate differences in how men and women perceive each other. Essentially, women tend to perceive men as more threatening than the other way around, and this reaction is exaggerated. Thus, we have a society that assumes the man is the abuser, to the point that there are essentially no shelters for male victims of female domestic violence in America. It is well known that women can physically assault men in public without fear of being policed by the crowd, whereas if the man were to physically defend himself, he could go to jail.

The list is endless.

In personal conflict, this means that, when you begin to display anger, she will exaggerate the threat you present to her. Just firming up your tone can be enough to make her label you an outright threat to her bodily safety. This is a pure sympathetic nervous system reaction. She has no practical control over it. When she perceives a threat from you, her amygdala starts to go nuts. This is essentially a one-way street. Your amygdala can send signals to shutdown your prefrontal cortex, but not the other way around.
The Fallout

Your woman will never be able to hear your anger and frustration in its raw form. Ever. I don't care if you're married to fucking Ronda Rousey (okay, she might be an exception). When you start displaying signs of agitation, irritation, and especially rage, the conversation is effectively over, because she perceives that behavior as a threat that must be mitigated.

Remember, for women, context/emotions are everything. There's a reason that your woman is so unfocused on rigorously discussing conflict and equitable standards. It's because that topic literally doesn't matter to her. What matters is that she's upset/uneasy. So, when you get angry, this makes her upset, and every single word out of her mouth will be her trying to communicate that fact.

With another guy, displays of anger can work as a communication tool. I perceive that whatever it is you're talking about is really important to you, and we broker some sort of compromise. You could be outright flipping tables, and if I know you, I could still remain calm and talk to you about the issue.

RP Lessons Will Save You

There is nothing in the RP lexicon that confirms its value better than the fact that it overcomes this issue. Whatever your objective is, the core tenet of maintaining a calm, almost amused appearance in all situations is so fundamental to interacting positively with the women in your life that RP could be wrong on literally every other front (it most definitely isn't), and it'd still be worth wading through the shit to find this gem.

AA, fogging, negative assertion, and negative inquiry are all tools designed to overcome her threat matrix.

How to Internalize Frame

Frame is about two things. One, figuring out what your values/worldview is. When she comes at you with something from two weeks ago that you've already discussed multiple times, what are your boundaries? Is it acceptable for people in your life to treat you this way?

Two, figuring out how to enforce that boundary. In my personal view, until you complete and implement this step, your line in the sand isn't a boundary. It's just mental masturbation.

How do you achieve both of these with your woman? WRITE THEM DOWN.

Get a notebook, and come up with as many scenarios as you can. In every single conflict you have with her, write down what she brings up, figure out your boundary, then figure out how to enforce that boundary in a manner that recognizes that the central issue, from her view, is how she feels about it. Make this a daily habit.

Read WISNIFG. Here's a link to a free PDF version. (You lazy slob) Figure out how to defend your boundaries in a way that does not try to use "I'm angry" as a tool. Every single time you turn to "I'm angry," you lose.

You could be turning her down flat, and if you can make her feel good about it, she'll happily acquiesce, even thank you for it. I promise you this is true. I've had my wife bear hug me when I do this successfully, even though I haven't promised to change my stance one iota for her, and this is a high IQ woman who listens to egalitarian podcasts on an almost daily basis.
Earlier this week, I went for a meal and a couple of beers with a younger married but childless colleague. During the course of a good conversation I discreetly threw in a few MRP truths that he latched on to and pursued. It turned out that his bedroom is already suffering a substantial decline, and his wife is putting on weight, etc.

Later that evening his wife and a gay friend joined us for the final beer. The conversation was flowing and my colleague and I were enjoying ourselves. Since my colleague seemed to have a basic idea of married game and had enough frame to benefit; I decided to help him out and have some fun by applying some dread to his wife.

During the conversations the matter of "Happy wife, happy husband" cropped up, which I blew away with humour and corrected. At other moments I 'innocently' dropped in remarks concerning the importance of partners in a relationship keeping themselves fit, healthy and attractive, and mocked some ridiculous feminist bullshit. The cherry on the cake was when I 'innocently' gushed about a particularly attractive and sexy young woman that sits opposite him in his office. With a twinkle in his eye, my colleague followed my lead and chimed in, singing her (non-sexual) praises, explaining that she was kind, good company, and excellent at her job. During this this exchange, his wife, sat quietly with a somewhat defeated demeanour.

Over the following days, my colleague was full of good humour, and looking to organise another fun evening. Apparently his wife was anxiously asking about this female colleague, and when shown a picture, she sniffily remarked that "she was an ordinary blond". Since that evening, his wife is taking more initiative and qualifying herself to him. He reports that it's now "back to like it was at the start of their relationship".

Conclusion: You can have fun while doing a male friend a favour by applying dread to his wife. If done well, you can have fun and earn a little respect and gratitude.

I intend to try a similar but less blatant approach to gaming females in my wife's social circle. This will not only be to enjoy myself, but with a view to sowing seeds of competition anxiety and reducing the level of female complacency and entitlement to which my wife is exposed.
One of the problems with scheduled married sex is that it can be boring or chore-like if you let it be.

When I was in boarding school (co-ed), we weren't allowed to have sex, so those of us who were sexually successful had to sneak it in between classes and sports and then basically act like nothing happened. I had to climb through windows and hide out under the bleachers; have Oral sex with clothes on and the door ajar, in the hallway, under the stairs, etc. All under the threat of expulsion if caught and wrecking future goals. You have to learn to start and finish fast or work with whatever time you have available knowing that you could be interrupted at any second by teachers or room-mates.

Anyway, it is possible to have lots of sex even when you're both tired and sneaking around, even having to make it happen when you only have a few moments unobserved.

Even though this sounds like the exact opposite of what you would expect in 'married game', there is a lot of carry-over that I think would serve MRPers here.

If you're married with little kids and in-laws and ringing telephones and planes to catch, it probably feels like there is no time to have sex, that the only way you can have sex is to schedule it twice a week. This is bullshit. It's going to make it beta and boring.

You should be taking advantage of those little bits of time when nobody is looking, while mother-in-law is checking her cell-phone or the kid is in the bathtub. That's what a bad boy would do.

When you're basically initiating all the time some of the little sessions are going to go all of the way and a lot of them are going to go nowhere, but that's OK. You can finish up later. Or tomorrow. It doesn't matter at all.

When you schedule sex for Tuesday night it's turning it into a trip to the dentist. If you or she has a headache on Tuesday night, then there's hurt feelings and performance anxiety and potential for unenthusiastic performance.

Grab bits and pieces throughout the day. You'll be walking away from sex and blowjobs because you really don't have time to finish or you have to leave for work or school or whatever. Be like Bill Clinton dodging secret service agents in the White House.

If you have enough time to finish, you can finish, if not, save it for later. It will be a lot less predictable and boring and you may be surprised where you end up and how often you actually don't get interrupted or run into headaches.

If you're on the twice a week (or month) plan, try mixing it up and seeing if it works better for you. Since you weren't really expecting sex when you initiate at wildly inappropriate times, you certainly aren't going to get butthurt when it doesn't work out. And maybe the five minutes before the conference call or the car to the airport will be more valuable than you realized.
"Celebrity pass" conversation I had with my wife today by jsh1138 | November 11, 2018 | Link

Let me preface this by saying that my wife and I have been in a bit of a slump lately because of circumstances that are largely outside of our control, death in the family and some other stuff.

Also, 2 days ago I sent my wife a funny interview with Henry Cavill and I could tell after she watched it that she was kind of wet in the pants for Henry. That's fine, we all have our little crushes or whatever.

Ok, so today we get to work (my wife and I work together) and one of the guys apparently had the talk about celebrity passes with his girlfriend the night before. For any of you not familiar, the idea is that you could have a pass for a celebrity that you could have sex with if the opportunity ever arose and it wouldn't be considered cheating. So this co-worker is telling the story pretty loud and he mentions that his exception is Beyonce and his girlfriend's is whoever it is, I forget.

Normally my wife is pretty reserved and avoids sexual joking at work like the plague but this time she made a bee line out of her office to where we were standing, like literally rushed over, and excitedly told everyone with me standing right there that she "could go for Henry Cavill if I ever had the chance". This was very unusual behavior for her, but again, I was not bothered, I just noted that it was out of character mentally and let her go on about him.

So then my coworker and wife both ask me who my exception is and I say my wife's friend Mandy. Mandy is kind of thick but still very attractive and she is on her way out of an unhappy marriage and she and I have alot in common. I did this just to fuck with my wife a little and see what she would say, not because I have any designs on Mandy.

Anyway, my wife literally gasps and says "not Mandy!" and my coworker laughs because I didn't pick a celebrity. So we talk about it a little more and then I get back to work.

I know this was long but the point is that when we got home my wife volunteered that she didn't really want to have sex with Henry Cavill (pretty sure this was a lie tbh) but that she just said that to mess with me a little. Then she said she was sure that I didn't really want to have sex with Mandy, to which I said nothing, just sort of made a non-committal noise and changed the subject.

My wife was extra nice to me for the rest of the day, to the point that it was very noticeable. I think it is probably the nicest she's been to me in a couple of weeks, at least, not that she is normally ugly or anything but it was obvious she was going out of her way to be extra pleasant.

So anyway, if you ever find yourselves in a similar situation, try that.
FR: “I’m nervous. You seem to be going through some sort of phase.”
by dt8933 | March 27, 2016 | Link

Background context--my first MRP FR is here:
https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/49zdc9/impressed_red_pill_really_does_help_a_marriage/

“I’m nervous. You seem to be going through some sort of phase.” That’s what my wife told me a few days ago, as we were winding down from some very good sex. She senses that change is afoot. I’m working out more, getting myself fit and tight. I’m less plugged in to her activities. I’m dressing better. I’m more assertive with her when there is something I care about. She is feeling the dread when other women pursue me, something that has definitely been happening more lately. She’s feeling uncertain, perhaps even a bit ungrounded.

All of this is motivating her little hamster so damn well. She is regularly initiating sex. She is working out more. She is dressing better, sexier, more in line with my tastes. She offers blowjobs. She is planning sexual adventures for us. She is striving to engage me more, but she’s also careful not to overdo it.

We’ve hit bumps in the road: the occasional fights. STFU has worked so well when she starts yammering on about some trivial thing. I’ve learned an extension of STFU that has worked super well. When she is feeling emotional and doing the verbal vomit thing that women sometimes do, I don’t respond with words. Rather, I just grab her, hold her tightly, kiss her deeply. Sometimes in these situations, if logistics permit I’ll grab her hand, take her to the bedroom, and fuck her hard. Her confusion and emotions just melt away. The issue seems pretty irrelevant when I am balls deep in her, pounding away. It works wonderfully.

The one downside of all of these changes is that she’s lost some of her verve. She’s a little uncertain, almost timid at times. Her confidence is one of the things I love about her, and seeing it wane is sometimes tough. My cynical side concludes that this is just another attempt at emotional manipulation, and there surely is some validity to that. I need to be strong, continue to pursue my path, while also giving her the comfort that I love her, desire her, enjoy her. Hopefully, as we work through this transition, her confidence will return, tempered by the deep-seated knowledge of her position and what really works for her. I’m weaning her off the emotional candy of “yes, dear” and showing her the meat and potatoes of confident, assertive and respectful leadership.

It’s working. Thank you all for opening my eyes to these dynamics.
Be attractive, don't be unattractive. The number 1 rule.
by Boesman12 | April 4, 2016 | Link

There was a post recently asking if woman still doll up for their man. From the OP it became clear that some men expect their wife or LTR to step up regarding their looks, but are not willing to do so themselves. This got me thinking what is the difference between the above statement. Seeing that it is the number 1 rule of MRP, lets break it down.

Be attractive To be attractive is a physical thing, it has to do with your looks.

- Be fit and muscular. You should aim for 10% bodyfat, but not more than 15%
- Wear clothes that fit your frame and is as stylish and nice as you can afford that fits the situation. What I mean is don't wear your washed out track suit at home. Wifebeaters is for the gym only, if even that. There is a lot of tips on style if you look around.
- Be well groomed. Remove those hairs in your ears and trim your eyebrows. You can't reasonably expect your wife to tweeze her bikini line if your unibrow is a mustache for your eyes.
- Smell nice. At the very least remember your deodorant. Sweat and tobacco smoke is so 1955.
- Polish your shoes. And for fucks sake, use some foot powder.
- Treat every day as if it is a first date, and dress to impress.

Don't be unattractive This has to do with your personality and demeanor. This is actually the crux of being a better man. Of being a red pill man.

- Don't be clingy. Women can't stand a man who is clingy and needy.
- Don't be that man that she needs to whine at to get shit done. Women want shit to magically be perfect. Your job as the man of the house is to make sure your house is ship shape.
- Don't be boring. Have a hobby. Have friends that add value to your life. Have something to do if you get a hard no.
- Don't be weak. Woman want to know you are a rock. You can't complain to her if you feel ill. You don't tell her about shit at work, or if you are feeling depressed. You only tell her that whatever happens you got your shit together and then you show her that.
- Don't entertain her emotions. She needs to know that you are her captain. You will lead her.

There is a shitload of posts that handle each and everyone of these statements in more detail. Look it up, read the blogposts of the MODS. Read the sidebar and lift.

But know the difference between what is attractive, and what is unattractive. You need to get them both right.
Your wife is a whore and you should divorce her by 88Will88 | August 24, 2017 | Link

I like non inflammatory titles which are not clickbait. So here we go, to all you guys who post in here or askMRP about your whore wife hanging out with other dudes or having an emotional affair - First and foremost your wife is a whore. The only way this statement is not true is if you live in a gay marriage legal jurisdiction and you are married to some guy named Pete. Why am I calling your wife a whore? Because I think sometimes it is helpful to look into the abyss and see things for what they are. In The Manipulated Man Esther Vilar broke it down for us accurately, decades later Rollo spelled it out again, the ladder of love flows down, not up. Men love women, women love kids and kids love puppies. This is a brutal assessment but the reality is like Rollo said, she can never love you the way that you want to be loved. She does not love you, she loves the image of you she has painted in her own head. With a woman, her love and relationship is transactional and conditional, see Briffault's law. She is not yours, it is just your turn.

So when we see guys in here and on askMRP whining that their little snowflake is having lunch/ kayaking/ karaokeing (is that a word) or doing something else with other dudes, then we rightfully call them a faggot and explain that she only acts this way because he is a beta schlub. This is the right thing to do because we cannot change the wife, only the man. Giving him a kick in the ass and telling him to man up is the right thing to do because we can only fix the man. That way in either scenario (a - he improves his miserable marriage, or b - he leaves the whore and moves on to a better life) we have helped the man. I agree with this approach and I agree that this is the best thing for them. Encourage them to lift, lead and focus on their mission, be their own point of origin, stop focussing on the wife.

However it is sometimes useful to look at the other side of the coin. That is the reality that the guy who comes on here whingeing that his wife is hanging out alone with some random dude, is that his wife is a filthy, dirty whore. The other guys who do my fucking head in are the guys who come here telling us about their whore wife’s emotional affair and asking how they can save the marriage. TBH in either case, no matter what the cause of her behaviour, the best possible advice is for him is to leave that slut and build a better life. To try and "fix" the marriage is purple pill logic. It is going through the trash. I realise that many guys here may reasonably counter with "well I was one of those guys, now I own my shit, lift, give her 10 second kisses and we are have sex three times a week instead of three times a year!". To that I say, well you made the bad choice, you would have been better off divorcing her and getting on with your awesome new life. If you think going from dead bedroom, to fucking the same woman who used to reject you is some sort of success, then your bar for success is very low indeed.

So to you guys who come here whining that your whore wife is spending time with some other dude, you are the one who is still pining for her. The only thing which turns my stomach more than your whore wife, is you, you pathetic, blue pill, pedestalising little bitch. Leave her ass, get on with your awesome new life. You will be happier, you will either bang many better women or the new you will find a better woman. Life is there to be lived, do not be a coward.
and tether your happiness to a whore.
A woman will never fully appreciate the things a man does for her. Learn to accept this and avoid covert contracts.

by InChargeMan | December 20, 2016 | Link

On the Reddit home page I came across this post. This guy makes an incredible wooden unlocking storybook to propose to his girl (with a platinum ring he also made himself). Looking at the detail, part-count and pictures of early prototypes, it is clear that he spent an immense amount of effort on making this. This guy is clearly intelligent, motivated, and trying to show her he loves her the best way he knows.

Now, not to take anything away from their relationship (which may be fantastic), but I highly doubt that you will be able to find many women who would put forth that level of effort and thoughtfulness. Additionally, I can guarantee that she will not appreciate it as much as she should. AWALT.

So, what is the point? It would be easy to say "don't try so hard, they won't appreciate it anyway." But, I believe this guy did an awesome thing, as many a man has done something special for a woman. We need to be careful not to become jaded and slip into a drunk captain role, waiting for appreciation that never comes. Instead, we need to be internally satisfied with ourselves and the things that we do. The leader doesn't need his subjects to tell him how awesome he is, he knows. But he does need them to follow him and perform their roles to the best of their ability. The concept of covert contract can be difficult to grasp for those just seeing the light. Don't do something "special" so she will have sex with you. Instead, do something "special" if you feel like it, period. Her fully fulfilling her roles in your relationship is her responsibility, which she should see demonstrated in your behavior. She doesn't have to (and likely won't) appreciate the things that you do, but she does need to fulfill her role to the full extent.

In effect, there is a contract, but it shouldn't be covert, it should be right out in the open as clear as day. "If we are to be married, I am going to be an awesome husband/father, and you are going to be an awesome wife/mother." Doing occasional special things for your wife is part of being an awesome husband, but not the only part. Being respectful and sexually available is part of being an awesome wife, but not the only part.

TLDR: That special thing you did for your wife once won't keep her from being a shitty wife. Only your leadership can do this. Doing something extraordinary for a woman just because you are awesome increases your value. Doing something extraordinary for a woman hoping that she will give you more sex/be nicer/etc. decreases your value.
Greetings one and all. This post is a response to a media story and is not a typical post on MRP. Don't ban me broh, it's a special case of responding to a media story about MRP.

First we should note that according to Google, more people read this soulless twit of a feminazi author than MRP! Our little MRP Reddit is now THIRD down on the list of hits when you type in "Married Red Pill."

Uh Huh. Tell us more about that algorithm Massa Google. Could it be any more blatant and obvious?

This chicks hamster is amazing and properly harnessed, would be able to clean up Log Angeles!

The Red Pill philosophy of sexual strategy (and especially Married Red Pill) contains bits of useful relationship/communication advice

Yes we know. Tell us more!

but the deeper meaning has been stripped away and replaced with patriarchy AHAHAHAHAHA!!! Yes...we know. That IS the deeper meaning.

Married Red Pillers, though already in serious relationships, are studying pickup artist tactics designed to trick women into having sex with men. MRP followers discuss tactics to get their wives to quit asking them to do stuff (what they call “nagging” and “shit tests”) and to have more sex with them.

OK, so what's the problem?

And they call it Fight Club. Married men are out there, swallowing the Red Pill, and discussing tactics with each other. They’re not respecting their wives LOLOLLLLLLLLZZZZ... Men are discussing tactics with one another! We must stop that immediately. They are not respecting their wives and worshipping them the way we demand!

What's that? They are getting laid like tile? Their wives are happy? Well, but, but, Patriarchy! Men and women are the same and equal and stuff except women are more equal.

My husband is a visual artist and he listens to a lot of podcasts while he works.
Can you smell the dripping slime all the way to the floor as she talks about her artsie faggot husband?

He told me last week that he listened to a relationship podcast, that it was great, even though it was really, “Men are like this and women are like this.” Immediately, I felt panicked.

Oh no! I could lose total control of my husband! That’s not panic darling. Those are the tingles. I bet you screwed hubby into next week later that night. We know, it just happened and he was looking especially handsome that night. AMIRIGHT?

Also, why is hubbie listening to Relationship Podcasts? Hmmm?

My husband is a leftist anarchist, identifies as a feminist.

Did you take out the trash and do the dishes. Dammit, why is it so dry? I need you to get me another bottle of Replenz after you finish cleaning the house.

The Red Pill promises a solution, then gives them textbook toxic masculinity.

Wait, I thought we were giving them Patriarchy? Of course you mean that all patriarchy is 'toxic" because before feminism everything was toxic.

I think we have you pretty much pegged. Rails against the patriarchy and drips when a man is strong enough to stand up to her. She cries about equality and then demands special treatment. She is horrified (HORRIFIED I SAY!!) that men would talk with one another about issues that concern men. Standard feminist tropes.

Her other article is: "My Rapist Wrote Me An Apology, No I never reported him."

Obviously.

TLDR: MRP made the news and they don't like it one bit
I was coaching a guy recently who said, “[My wife] doesn’t have anything going on in her life, so she just sits at home watching Netflix all day. She just seems to be bored and starts drama with me.”

Women are going to have big emotions, both positive and negative. Since women make decisions based on their emotion at the time, negative emotions justify(in their minds) creating drama. It's in human nature to blame other people for our problems, creating scapegoats, using drama. I hope this post helps some of you minimize the drama, while regaining the frame.

In the absence of an outside enemy, people will get anxious about lack of progress and decide there is an enemy within the group.

So because she's "bored"(doesn't have an enemy outside the home to blame or attack) she chooses you to be the enemy.

Sometimes, she scratches this itch by making the enemy climate change, Trump, or Cersei Lannister. But if she's displeased with something in her life eg not owning a bigger house, she will choose to blame you instead of taking responsibility for the part she plays in that(spending rather than investing, not getting a part time job to add funds, etc). The blue pill and often natural response is to perform and buy a bigger house. Don’t.

Women will use drama to test your frame ie shit test. When you have the frame, you can enjoy and embrace reasonable levels of drama targeted at you(even non playful shit tests). Passing the shit test will increase attraction because the anger part of the brain, in women, is closely connected to the sexual part. After the fact, small levels of drama can also tie her to you emotionally because when the resolution occurs, she has very positive feelings. But intentionally escalating drama can create distractions from your mission, and without adequate frame, it can create very unfavorable, Rambo-type situations.

Redirect her energy.

When initially building frame you want to de-escalate situations or not let them happen at all(STFU, don’t DEER) to keep her from going crazy on you.

Minimize shit tests, while building frame in early stages of dread(1 & 2)...

Encourage her to get out of the house and do something else to focus the drama on someone or something else.

You’ll have to decide how and when to do that, but yoga, a part time job, playdates for kids, all accomplish this goal. If she says she wants to do something new, encourage it. You’ll find her coming home to bitch about someone else, and you’ll need to be prepared to listen and validate her drama focused on others, rather than argue or try to fix the problem. She’s probably wrong. The other person isn’t that bad. But the focus of her drama is on the other person, not you. Don’t be her chatty girlfriend and get wrapped up in the drama, but keep energy focused away from you.

Dread Stage 3+. Get out of the house and build your own life. Separating yourself from her minimizes drama because you simply aren’t around for her to attack. But she sees you on missions accomplishing things, so attraction is built. Too much, too soon, can escalate drama because “you aren’t around anymore,” so ease into it. Picking up new hobbies slowly.

Date night...

I believe strong men with strong frame figured out this drama issue, in the past, and the date night was conceived. Getting her out to see new things and new people helps to distract her from focusing the drama on you.

In recent years, the date night concept has been hijacked and has become another feminine tactic for control. Date night is an entitlement used to further utilize the beta bux side of a man, while dangling the carrot (sex at the end of the night) in front of the horse (the man) as long as he is obedient. Inevitably, it doesn’t work because she isn’t turned on, and sex rarely occurs.

When you don’t have the frame...

Use a date night, not as a night for her to be wined and dined (beta bux), but rather for you to have fun and her see you do it (alpha fucks). She’s still wondering, if you are good enough for her, so increase your value in her eyes. Show her, she is with a strong, confident man. This can work wonders for sexual attraction.

Once you’ve built frame (if you aren’t sure you have it, you don’t)...

The drama will shift from her feeling you aren’t good enough, to her not being good enough. At this point, you wine and dine her, in appropriate amounts. Don’t fall back into the beta bux habits, but use dates to provide comfort (showing her you’ve chosen her). Doing this (once she believes you are a strong confident man) will make her feel that she is, now, valued by a strong, confident man, the dream of every woman.

More advanced red pill men can use drama to their advantage by creating it. I encourage “playful drama” created through sarcasm or pushing her buttons in a playful way. Sometimes, when you have particularly low levels of frame, this can backfire, but generally, it’s well received.

Example: Occasionally, I’ll ask my girl if she plans on “eating that entire meal” with a smirk. When she was young, she had an eating disorder, so this is an emotional trigger for her. But she hasn’t gained a pound since I met her, and she knows I think she has a rockin’ body. She knows I’m pushing her buttons in a playful way. And in an indirect, fun-asshole way, it reminds her that I think she’s attractive, but I’ll have no problem saying something, if she were to let herself go.
Edit: Beginners should not use teasing to create drama. That is not the point of my post. Drama is inevitable, no need to create more. Redirect her energy through activities outside the house rather than blaming her for the drama because she isn’t doing anything besides watching Netflix.
The definition of frame I currently like best comes from /u/weakandsensitive; frame is simply how I view the world, or my worldview: my values, beliefs, missions, likes and dislikes, desires, and emotions. More precisely, frame is fully congruent expression of my worldview in every action, behavior, and word.

Put another way, frame is living fully and openly "in character" with my authentic self.

Developing frame

Career betas have repressed their own worldview into their subconscious in favor of adopting the worldviews of others, to avoid conflict, curry favor, and hopefully achieve their covert contracts. In every interaction they attempt to adopt and reflect the frame of the other person. They essentially put on a mask to hide their true selves so as to better reflect back what they think the other person wants to hear.

Phase One: Discovering your worldview

The first step for the recovering beta is to get out of the frame of others and to discover his own worldview. This is accomplished by STFUing, thereby giving himself the silent space in which to become conscious of his own true desires, emotions, beliefs, likes, and dislikes. This typically takes at least 6 months (and often much longer) for the career beta.

Edit: "What do you want?" is a frequent comment to the posts of these hapless betas, who have so deeply repressed their true selves that they find it difficult to answer. Start with this, career betas!

Phase Two: Expressing your own frame

Now that he has become aware of his own worldview, the recovering beta can start developing his own frame by openly expressing his own beliefs, desires, and emotions. This requires the courage to accept that others will not always agree with these values and will resist them and fight them at times. The career beta must learn to hold steadfastly to his frame and his boundaries even in the face of this resistance.

Here you must also become your own "mental point of origin." Your worldview is the only correct worldview. You must become entirely self-validating; the only opinion about you or your actions that matters is your own. As /u/weakandsensitive says, any criticism or opinion outside of your frame "is either interesting or amusing."

(This doesn't mean that you don't listen to the ideas and criticisms of others whom you respect or never change your worldview when you agree (else why are you even here?), but it means that others' criticisms are merely "data" to you and only affect your own opinions and emotions if, after evaluation, you agree with them.)

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you,
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you, But make allowance for their doubting too: ... ... you'll be a Man, my son!

Phase Three: Projecting your frame onto the world

Once our baby alpha learns to live within his own frame, it is now time to learn to project his frame through leadership onto the world. Through narrative, vision, charisma, and leadership, alpha leaders convince others to adopt their missions and worldview. Steve Jobs' "reality distortion field" is a famous example of this.

Misconceptions about frame

- Knowing only the experience of adopting others' frames as a mask to hide their true selves, career betas assume that frame is yet another mask or false persona to adopt in order to display alpha behavior, and to hide or shield their natural reactions and emotions. Often this mask is an extreme form of STFU, or they fake stoicism or outcome independence by behaving like an emotionless robot. This in fact goes in precisely the wrong direction; developing true frame ultimately requires stripping away the masks and filters to uncover and express the authentic you. (See The Book of Pook.)

- Masculine frame does not involve suppressing emotions; rather, it involves expressing emotions like a man, in subservience to your goals and when appropriately called for.

- Frame is not necessarily selfish. Most strong men protect, care for, and add value to their family and friends, and many have missions that serve others as well. Desmond Doss's and Mother Theresa's frames were rock solid, for example.

Edit: typos.
Men of March: Day #3
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 3, 2017 | Link

Day #1

Day #2

Yesterday’s Recap: Each day I’ll do a brief recap from the day before. Day #2 started with me opening my twitter to 263 notifications. My initial fear was to lose the motivation men felt in the beginning, this clearly proved that fear invalid.

Yesterday our brethren faced their inner demons while we did the same. The pain you felt is the pain they felt, we all fought together and we have all made it to another morning.

We faced our deepest enemy, our ‘self’ and we survived. What we once viewed as something we should hide and be ashamed of, we have no claimed and taken ownership over.

Congratulations brothers, you’re one step closer to becoming your masculine self.

Men needed this campaign.

I can’t tell you how many said that they were on the cusp of taking action and this series was that little shove they needed.

Now, they’re killing it.

My challenges are the minimum and everyone is adding their own personal challenge to this mix, which is perfect.

Keep moving forward, one day at a time, one hour, one decision.

Create the habit of defaulting to masculine action & decisions.

Daily Reminder

Reminder: The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don't give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.

4. You must start reading a book. Even if it’s just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don’t have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.

5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go. This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Life isn’t about hiding from storms, it’s about learning to dance in the rain.

Day #3: Fresh Start Friday

Men fall into routine, we’re creatures of habit and there’s nothing that will change that. It’s the reason men can eat the same meal time & again without complaint, it serves its purpose, we move on.

In development of the masculine self this is detrimental as we’re in an age where everything is comfortable & controlled.

There’s little fear of violence, we go from climate controlled home, to climate controlled car, to climate controlled building never really worrying about the elements except for a few brief moments between climate controlled environments.

This comfort has created routines which breed weakness and a total loss of experience.

Today, Friday, we fuck that routine up.

This is Men of March, if you haven’t noticed we’re leading real change and reclaiming our genuine selves, that means fighting our instinct to resist change.

Trust me brothers, this Friday you’ll make a memory that will last months as opposed to doing the same old thing which you’ll forget or repeat by next Friday.

Breaking the routine will not only improve our own standard and how we approach life, it will also improve our relationship.

Being a predictable man means you’re a stale and boring man. The last word you want to be associated with is boring.

Lose the stigma by breaking another boundary. Lead the charge and shift your entire perspective on what it means to be alive.

Fuck routine; go out and experience the world. Accumulate memories and experiences over more ‘stuff’ and mundane mediocrity.

Challenge #3

1. 100 Push-Ups

2. Choose your situation & Apply:

Married/LTR with kids:

It’s important to ensure that you, as the leader of this clan, are making the time to develop and enjoy those whom you lead.

When is the last time you, your wife, and your kids all had a genuine laugh together?

For most, the answer is too long.

This Friday, instead of ordering pizza and watching a movie, why not have a family cooking night where you all make your own dish; whether that’s individual pizzas, sandwiches, whatever make the act of working together and having fun a thing.

If you want to watch a movie - great!

Set some blankets up, build a ‘floor fort’, or your own fancy home theater and make the movie an experience and not just you sitting on the couch.

Pop some popcorn, turn the lights low, grab flashlight and guide everyone to their seats, etc.

Something I do is read to the kids and let them both climb into the same bed and listen to the story.

I’ll do different voices for each character, sing any songs in the book, and do all sorts of fucked up sound effects to make it as real as possible. (The Hobbit was great)
You’ll have to cater your ‘Friday night Shenanigans’ to your specific family, but make it fun.

Routine = Death

When the kids go to bed, read below as you’ve got to view your wife as your lover and not just ‘mom’ or ‘wife’.

Married/LTR without kids:

Your girl is your lover first and girlfriend/babymomma/wife next. This Friday, let her know you’ve got plans for the two of you.

If you have money:

Start looking on Yelp!, Google maps, whatever to find a place that the two of you have never been.

It might suck, if it does even better you can make it a running joke which gets the two of you laughing together at how terrible the food or service is, making fun of people, playing the “Are they Fucking?” game, etc.

Make it fun and through your boyish humor and ‘can do’ attitude, you’ll keep her from going bitch mode.

If you don’t have money:

Then we’re going full ‘DIY’ mode. Create your own picnic by grabbing stuff around the house like a blanket and maybe a candle (be safe).

For most it’s too cold or the weather sucks. If this is the case for you, then sneak to the basement, backyard, deck, or fucking spare room and set it up however you’d like.

Build a picnic for her like you never have before and act like it’s totally normal for people to do shit like this on a Friday night. Again have a blast, make it fun, wear a Bow-Tie with no shirt, you get the idea.

If your weather is awesome, then create the same scenario outdoors on your lawn, nearby park, or just set up a nice little getaway to look at the moon from the top of your local ‘high elevation’ point.

Another option is to grab some paper, markers, pens, or crayons and get something to lean the paper against (canvas if you have the funds).

Next, put Bob Ross on the TV via YouTube/Hulu and have your very own Paint Night.

Again, act like you’re dead serious and you’re goal is to out paint fucking Bob Ross (The last time we did this I tried painting the Balrog from LOTR and it turned out looking like a cat that was high)
The point is, get creative and do something you’ve never done, create a memory in her mind and give yourself the gift of genuine joy as I know all men love seeing their girl smile her beautiful & genuine smile.

Single:

You can bring friends, but only if they’re able to leave right when you are and if they’re willing to follow your lead.

Go somewhere in another town without any particular destination. Decide on a town nearby you want to go to and just drive to it, don’t even go home from work.

If you have to go home to change out of a work uniform or you stink, then get home, shower, get some good clothes on, and get out.

Look for a place you’ve never experienced.

Bar, restaurant, or club it doesn’t matter just get out and experience something new, get out of routine and stale living, go have an adventure.

Drink a new drink, eat some new food, try to enjoy each bite and start a conversation with whomever.

This is living.

Go out and live your life by experiencing all the great venues which are practically in your backyard yet you’ve never taken the time of day to check out.

Wrapping up Day #3

Nowhere in this did I say anything about sex.

That doesn’t mean it won’t be on your mind, it probably will, but hear me out.

Men of March isn’t about getting fit and it isn’t about getting your dick wet, it’s about cultivating masculinity.

Too many nights have been ruined by the covert contract of ‘sex’ being written all over every action.

Instead of taking her out thinking, “I’m going to get laid” or pouring her wine thinking, “We’re going to have drunk sex” or the infamous, “I took her out now she’ll want to fuck me.“

How about you just enjoy the night?

If you have game, are attractive, and don’t approach this with the mindset of a horny inexperienced teenage boy then you’re going to have a great ending to your night. But that doesn’t matter because your mind isn’t on the end of the night, it’s on the present moment.
Immerse yourself in the new experience and have fun with your Fresh Start Friday.

From the Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/03/day-3-fresh-start-friday/

Twitter (I’m much more active on there as my work blocks Reddit):
https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Why You Can't Negotiate Desire
by redearththeory | July 15, 2016 | Link

This article The Enduring Enigma of Female Sexual Desire is largely vague, bluepill nonsense with one important point.

“Often for women, genital, physical arousal precedes the psychological experience of desire,” Diamond says. “Whereas in men, desire precedes arousal.”

~ Lisa Diamond, a professor of psychology and gender studies at the University of Utah.

When she says “the psychological experience of desire” this means that the woman realizes in her conscious mind (or admits to herself) that she is attracted. So what this is saying is that women are turned on (aroused) without the recognition of their conscious mind, which follows only after, if at all. This has a couple important implications.

1. Whatever is going on in her conscious mind (LMR, being angry at your IDGAF attitude, talking about the weather) is likely to be completely different and unrelated to the fact that she is being turned on. Watch what she does, not what she says.

2. This explains why you can't negotiate or obligate desire, for instance with a marriage contract. Negotiation and obligation work on the conscious mind and that's not the causal factor for arousal in women.

3. Understand that successfully attracting a woman involves her reacting to you as a stimulus with an unconscious part of her mind. You don't need to talk to her and convince her conscious mind of facts with your words, you need to act and get a reaction out of the lower levels of her mind. In practice you'll need to talk for the sake of social protocol, but its not the thing that does the actual attraction. Acta non verba.

TL;DR - Female attraction is not driven by conscious decisions.
I lurked this sub hard when shit hit the fan in my marriage starting last July. Had two options: curl up in a ball on my couch and let depression grip me as deeply as it had my wife; or man-up, embrace a new course, exercise daily, read, and most of all when I could not display higher SMV, never ever expose incidents of low value.

The new course was accepting that I was a slave to validation, especially creating covert contracts that if I acted nice or attended to what I thought were the needs of my wife, it would result in the highest form of validation: sex. I turned it off completely which allowed me to learn how to build and maintain frame. I adopted a mindset to become the best man I could be for myself, and decided my wife could either jump on board and if not, I would be prepared to face life without her.

I am not a fan of gyms. I neither have the money for a membership or the time to travel. My basement / new living quarters became my home gym. With a yoga mat and six foot ceilings, I still used body weight training, stretching, and eventually developed a daily meditation regimen. Hitting this no less than 6 days/week and cutting sugar and grains from my diet, I quickly gained a physique that was a major confidence boost.

Starting off I read the side bar, current and top rated posts along with all the comments. Then to the 101 books: MAP, WISNIFG, NNMG, and then Rational Male and Rollo's blog, podcasts, etc. all vital! Mixed in some fiction as well as philosophy and other non-fiction along the way to keep my mind fresh and balanced. Along with the reading I began internalizing the ideas and perceptions and implementing these new ways of speaking assertively into every conversation regardless of who it was with. Then came Dieda's, The Way of the Superior Man. As soon as I finished the last sentence I started it again from page 1 and am now on a path in seek of my core purpose.

Lastly, when it came to High Value / Low Value shit... We all fuck up, but if no one is around to see it, just STFU. There is no need to tell anyone that you broke a glass. Just own it, clean it, and move on. I've gained weight before and been able to keep squeezing into the same clothes, but after dropping fat I didn't know I had to lose, I needed to pick up a whole new, form fitting wardrobe. Finding sales and buying a piece at a time off clearance racks allowed me to do so without breaking the bank.

The red pill ideals are essential to a happy life and ranking up either your current woman or the ones who are lucky enough to come into the picture post-personal-transformation. Confidence and integrity result in trust from and the ability to lead the world around you. Make a plan for the next hour or day or year and plow forward. Accept that mistakes will result and learn from them, but do not allow the opinions of others to take you off course. Fuck Em if they disagree or judge, you make all choices for your life now.

The principals I learned here allowed me to create an environment for myself in which I have not been more happy and genuinely optimistic with life since before puberty hit. While I was not active in posts or comments, I want to sent my gratitude to those who are. Anyone who feels like they are in a rut and no matter how hard they try only seem to get buried deeper:
it's not about trying harder, it's about making a complete change from head to toe, inside and out. Follow the advice, use the tools, and own the shit.

Personal details for reference. I'm late 30s, married 8 years with an almost 4 yo daughter.
47/M two-year transformation story
by Rian_Stone | April 16, 2018 | Link
Step One: Get Past Victim Mentality
by midlifedick | January 31, 2016 | Link

Summary Victim Mentality is common, learn to recognize it. It is the Heisenberg blue meth of hamstering; pure, potent and insidious. In order to get results, earn respect and make your life better you need to recognize your own victim mentality and behaviors. How? Own your shit.

Body

A victim mindset is basically lack of accountability. It is denying how your own actions, mindset, attitude and behavior influence results or, most often, lack thereof.

The guys that come into any of the red pill related subreddits and get torn up the worst are the ones that are operating with a victim mindset. You will recognize them because they use a lot of words to say "it's not my fault". They are in a downward spiral or endless loop and it becomes a way of life.

Behavior -> Result -> If bad = wasn't me -> no learning -> no change in behavior, repeat.

They are in a cycle of self inflicted failure caused by simply not recognizing the tremendous influence they have on their own life. This is true for past, current and future behaviors and attitudes.

This post by /u/countpudyoola about the new rage quit icon  gives a great example. /u/alpha_as_wolf continued to exhibit signs and symptoms of victim mentality, despite the many users who pointed it out along with suggestions and advice to counter it and improve his situation. He ignored it all and doubled down on victim behaviors which you will recognize below. So... off he goes back into the ether from whence he came, destined to endlessly repeat a self fulfilling prophecy of being a victim, sadly unaware.

Signs you are becoming a victim:

* Losing your ability to control your circumstances
* Looking to others to help yourself succeed
* Not taking responsibility for your own actions
* Blaming others for your mistakes
* Finding excuses why you could not deliver/achieve results
* lost the drive to perform
*Prolong taking action to see if the situation will disappear or if a resolution will appear

*Being confused and not taking action

Signs you are already stuck in the victim cycle:

*Avoiding confrontation of your toughest issues.

*You are saying/thinking "Why it can't be done" vs. "How it can be done"

*You blame others or "finger point"

*You cite mixed signals and confusion as reasons you did not get results

*You avoid situations/people that would expect you to explain your progress/results/outcomes

*You spend time creating a "story" of why it wasn't your fault. (Amazingly, this can happen before you even start something and is very common, leading to many failed efforts with handily available stories explaining why at the first sign of a hiccup)

*Saying "we'll just have to wait and see"

*Saying "there's nothing I can do about it"

*Feeling that you are always being treated unfairly

*Wasting time bashing others

*Feeling captive and having no control over your circumstances

It is an absolutely critical first step to recognize your own victim mentality in order to make improvements since it prevents you from accepting your contribution in the good AND bad parts of your life. Once you get past it and start being accountable for yourself you can begin to learn, grow, take risks and gain credibility.

There are different stages of entering the victim cycle, let's run through them.

Ignore/Deny Pretending to ignore or deny a problem exists. "She would never cheat on me, it's just drinks with an old high school friend" , "I haven't gotten a blow job in 8 years, it's ok I never really liked them."

It's not my job/role/responsibility Avoiding responsibility. redirecting blame and making excuses for NOT taking actions. "If she wants sex, she will initiate" , "I don't need to lift, I'm naturally skinny" or "Why should I decide where to eat, every fucking time?"

Finger Pointing Shifting blame to others. "She is low libido."

Confusion and tell me what to do Ah, my favorite. Most askMRP posts. Every askTRP post. Something along the lines of "She keeps saying she is too tired unless I do the dishes, but you guys are saying she would fuck me if I could just lift a bag of sand?! What do I tell her when she asks me to do the dishes!? ... a week later... I told her to scrub the pans with her huge bush (like someone said to A&A) and now the bedroom door is locked. Now what?" This one is a classic and extremely common. If you are not a careful leader you will force someone to take this stance by micromanaging, criticizing, flip flopping, giving ambiguous instruction and delegating poorly.

Cover your trail This is a full on dodge of accountability/responsibility. You have convinced yourself with a story of your creation (maybe others have enabled you by commiserating and adding to the story... r/deadbedrooms and r/relationships ??) and you are imaging this story gives you some protection for blame. The story is usually complex, prepared and rehearsed and always leads to a viable explanation as to why this is not entirely your fault.

Wait and See Maybe things will get better. You've effectively given up.

Fine. You recognize something in the list. How do you stop the cycle?

Step One Recognize the full reality of the situation. Don't let others hide the truth and don't hide the truth from yourself. Ask for and give honest feedback. These are the guys that post and actually listen to the advice being given, usually they had a blind spot. Epiphany follows, along with renewed vigor and action plan.

Step Two Own your shit. Accept responsibility for the experiences and realities you create for yourself and others. The Victim stories typically screen out any evidence of our own role in creating our circumstances. Often, blame for unhappiness is based on perplexing circumstances beyond control. Victim pukes are long complicated explanations and descriptions of the same basic stories we hear over and over, yet somehow it's definitely unique to this one guy. Too bad for him, it was an unfortunate series of improbable events, and yet... here we are reading about yet another deadbedroom from an overweight, attention seeking, directionless people-pleaser about how his wife is low libido and agreed to have sex every Wednesday and Sunday but goddammit she skipped the last 13 weeks of Sunday and Wednesday sex, even after he cleaned the garage, basement and bathrooms!

Ask yourself some questions: What did I pretend not to know? What evidence did I ignore? Has something similar happened in the past? What about my own behavior and actions prevented the results I wanted?

Step three Ask yourself this question until you have removed all the layers and found your next step: "What more can I do to achieve the results I want?" Generally, you are going to have to think differently in order to solve the problem. Red pill is overflowing with new and different ways of thinking. Can you accept these new paradigms, even though it cuts you deep and to the core? Is your sweet wife of 10 years really capable of fucking the balding but fit and dickish soccer coach? Yes. Now, what more can you do to achieve the results you want? Still doing body fitness? OK, no problem. Could you do more? Yes.

Step four Time to go do it. Don't just sit here reading the Internet, you now know what to do. Get past your fear of risk, failure, being actually responsible for results. You must be willing to do what others won't. It's Sunday. Turn off Netflix, read a chapter of WISNIFG, update... the annual budget, pay the bills that came in this week, send that update to your boss, clean the chicken breasts for this weeks’ meals and then get to the gym. It's deadlift day.

Conclusion

Examine yourself and your history of behavior for signs and symptoms of victim mentality. It will creep up on you and blind you. That is why, before you speak, lash out or cry for help, ask yourself if you are behaving like a man that acknowledges fully the part you play in your own life. What more can you do to get the results you want? You must accept that you have contributed to your current situation and you will contribute to your future situation.

The source for this post is "The Oz Principle" by Connors, Smith and Hickman which is a business book, but applies to more than office politics. I was introduced to this book years ago and it changed my perspective. I have recommended it many times to many people.

format for better readability
Female Perspective on RP Transition
by LeggyBlueEyes | December 2, 2014 | Link

To the RP men who have gone the LTR route, I implore you to think carefully before you next your partner. Don't forget that while you were sold the feminist agenda, so were we. Most woman who believe in RP philosophy (even when we didn't know it had a name) did not ride the CC and other feminist notions however many of us have gotten used to being our own captains. Either from being single or from our mate's BP days when, we were forced to be captain because our men had forgotten, or never really learned, that he was supposed to be leading the ship.

If she was a RP woman, she stayed with you when you went BP. She didn't cheat on you or trade you in for a better model, because that's not the kind of person she wants to be. She was fighting her hypergamous nature, for you! She tried to figure out why you were both unhappy but nothing really made sense. And then you found TRP.

As you struggle to get the pill down, please remember that this is a struggle for her too. You are asking her to put faith and trust back in you, when you may not have shown her that you can be reliable and trustworthy on a consistent basis yet. If you love her still, even a tiny bit, stand by her as she comes to terms with the changing relationship - just like she stood by you when you didn't even realize you were being BP. I'm not saying forever, but you can't undo 10 years in 2 months. And be prepared for setbacks. Because they will happen. It's just life.

Maintain frame. Be her calm, rational and strong oak. Stronger even than she is. And this may take more strength than the average guy, because these women, the ones who had the courage and strength not to succumb to the CC, who didn't allow their instincts for hypergamy to override their love for you when you were being BP, these are strong women. And you are going to have to be that much stronger to regain their trust. But when you do, there won't be anything the two of you wont be able to get through.
Why would any woman complain about MRP?

by ParadoxThatDrivesUs | March 10, 2016 | Link

I find myself wondering if MRP is actually a con put over on us by women. I'm only half joking. Consider the program:

1. Lose weight. Get in great shape. Dress better. Become as attractive as you can.

2. Learn to become a Sex God in bed.

3. Become OI about not getting sex if she doesn't want to. Just cheerfully move on to the next thing.

4. Get shit done around the house, manage the kids, finances, etc.

5. Generally improve yourself in every way.

6. If your wife is a bitch, realize that it's ultimately your fault. If she's mistreated you in the past, that's on you, not her.

7. Always remember that she's a free agent and you can't force her to do anything.

8. Do this for a year or so. At the end of the process, make sure you give her a clear warning and a choice before ending the marriage.

Sure, throw in some fem-bashing and let him think he's the captain to make it palatable. But seriously, what's not to like if you're a woman?
Shit test success story. Not perfect, but a landmark in my RP journey.

by toddfan420 | October 18, 2018 | Link

TLDR had a very good outcome after passing epic shit tests, and a thank you to this forum.

I live close to work, so I can come home for lunch and enjoy a wife-made sammich, check on homeschool, and just generally enjoy myself for 20 minutes.

Yesterday my stay-at-home wife was having a bad day. She was coming off being sick the day before, and our little girl was throwing fits because mommy wanted to stay in bed. I helped the situation via text from work and wife was grateful.

But she still had a headache. (Anyone else have the migraine demon in their home?) When I came home for lunch, things felt grim. She proceeded to trouble me with household concerns that were apparently on her mind. I tried to engage but there was no time to address anything. In the end it was just stress I didn't need on precious break time.

Then she took it to a whole new level. She started going into this whole thing about how I opened up a bag of chips that she was saving because they're SEASONAL (they were stale) and blah blah and how I'm not considering her feelings. At first I engaged a little, and when I saw she was escalating, I looked at the time, my break was ending soon, I realized I was more stressed after my lunch break than if I would have just gone to McDonalds. I got angry and loudly spoke "It's just fucking chips!" or something. And then announced I was going back to work (I made it back early.) I hear her saying as I went out: "You're just going to leave the chips on the table..??"

She texted while I was driving and here is what I texted back: Link Not proud of all this so far, but it's the truth. I shut my phone off so I could concentrate at work. I also made time to read about anger here because I thought I may have really screwed up. There seems to be some debate about what role, if any, male anger can play in RP life.

I worked the rest of my day with my phone off and it was nice not having to engage with her over text and just concentrating on my job. I knew there was going to be a shitstorm waiting when I got home, but I resolved to maintain a frame of amused mastery NO MATTER WHAT when I got back in there. I'll admit, I still have to fake it.

I turned on the phone to see a flood of enraged ranting on her end. Didn't engage with any of that. It was the same attacks I've seen so many times when we fight. Insults that seem so real, if a man said them to me,we'd have to have damn duel. Yet I know it's all bullshit. A desperate attempt to try and move me, to control me.

I get home and get a beer and sit down to relax and look at the news on my phone. She comes around and resumed something in the kitchen, and as she worked I see her from the corner of my eye mustering an attack for me. She starts:
-Did you get my texts? -Yup. -The way you walked out and slammed the door, is there something else going on you wanna tell me? Are you angry? -Nope I'm fine. (I smile at her) Actually I would like to mention something. My lunch break is a time of relaxation for me. I don't to be troubled. If that's a problem.. -Troubled? What was troubling? You couldn't even be troubled to talk to me with your face in your phone.. -Did you say anything interesting? I remember you brought up X, Y, and Z annoying thing. I started a convo about Elizabeth Warren which was cool for a minute, and then you started in with the chips thing.

That's when she started going sour. Launching a ton of fallacies meant to get me mad and defending myself. I held frame. I engaged none of it. I said "Ok then." Took my beer and went upstairs to change.

Now I noticed something. A large amount of housework had been done. Our room was looking better than it has for a while. She picked all her shit up. In fact, she'd been hard at work for hours all around. Hmm!

She followed! She started changing too (we take the kid to ballet on Tuesdays) She's naked in front of me. And she's still launching extremely titillating salvos of strawmen and attacks, desperately trying to get under my skin so I will engage. I tell you, inside I was nervous the whole time, but I faked it and held frame.

I go "OK, guys have fun at ballet!" As I'm going downstairs she goes "Are you going somewhere??" I say "I'll be in the basement working on my project" (musical hobby.)

They went. I didn't have to tend to them. I got a great chunk of time in on my project. I was feeling good.

They got home a couple hours later, and I felt satisfied enough that I could check on the lady and stop working for the evening if need be and it would be no great loss. The thing is, the amount of cans of worms she opened with her attacks, two rational people would have to spend hours working through all the seemingly unresolved drama. But I had a theory that wasn't going to be the case.

Sure enough. I get up there. She's already in the kitchen working on a stellar dinner. I give her a kiss on the head. ITS LIKE NOTHING HAPPENED. She's chipper. She starts telling me stories. I sit down and we have a good time. She NEVER brings up the shit. We have a great dinner, and kid bed time, and fun chillouts. And she initiates a passionate session.

So, yea, that was a landmark for me. For the years since we've been married, I've tried to live by RP principles. I do OK. I've been training her. I am lucky to have a lady that is much better than the average. But she's a fighter, and I've done a bad job at not falling for her tactics when she's in a mood and wants a fight. She hooks me in with outrageous accusations that I KNOW I could beat if i engaged. wrong.

There was a post on here about how marriage is like unexpectedly getting punched in the gut once a month. That's accurate. But I'm optimistic that consistently passing shit-tests will more than mitigate this condition.
I posted a couple years back here, probably under another name, my story about how I left my wife in another city because we had a fight in the car on the way to a show. I got righteously lit up of course. That night was emblematic of just how many problems I had not dealt with in my journey. And I was too butthurt to see it. I heard what yall were saying and yet I couldn't internalize it. I had also been listening to Stefan Molyneux and trying to wrangle his ideas with RP philosophy.

So thanks for being here. I have some posts in my mind that hopefully yall will enjoy or debate. I don't see a ton of new posts on here, so I'll hold back until I get the lay of the land.

Cheers.
You will never have your bluepill dream girl
by theultmatecad | December 14, 2015 | Link

I know, the title here is "sad", and "depressing".

Let me explain why internalizing this basic RP concept is actually LIBERATING.

If you have browsed both the MRP and TRP sidebar you now know that women don't love men who place them on a pedestal. If you put a woman's concerns above yours then you get fucked® as women are biologically programmed to despise unmanly, faggotty, Disney Dream Seekers. They want and need an "asshole" who will reassure them that they and their precious offspring will survive.

So why is this good news?

You now have the opportunity to build a terrific life INDEPENDENT of your woman (or if you are smart like me..Women).

You can still love her childlike nature, her sweet pussy and tits, and her adorable feminine qualities. Just know this:

That love you provide? This masculine love needs to be carefully doled out with thoughtful moderation and with full knowledge that it can't, won't, and isn't coming back in the way you were conditioned to expect.

Moral:

A man's love won't be returned in the way you expected and that's ok. It doesn't seem ok to newcomers, but that because they were lied to. They were told they were special, that they could have an egalitarian, incredible partnership with the "One".

It's a sack of bullshit and women instinctively and unconsciously sell this dream everyday. Its not real and they know it. TRP elders are here telling you to wake up, unplug, and see the truth that very few men today know.

Be the source of strength to your children and women. Expect little in return. This truly is the way of men.

EDIT..hi bluepill fatties. I love when you give me extra visibility, it helps bring more men to TRP
This is primarily a tool for those moments when she's being overly emotional, and even SHE doesn't know why. You know it when her arguments seem irrational even for her. Something is clearly bothering her, and she just needs to vent. While this could be effective with a plate, it's mostly more appropriate for an LTR. I have had some success with this when she is genuinely pissed about something, but it's less likely.

Have a childish nickname for her. It should not have sexual connotations. This needs to be something you might use when being playful with a child who is throwing a tantrum. For example, I call my wife Grumpy-umpagus (a derivative of Snuffle-upagus - from Sesame Street). I've combined her mood with a child's cartoon.

When she starts ranting, console her in the same condescending childish voice you would for a toddler who is being over the top. Use this nickname, and hug her. If she does not get pissed, then start sticking your hands in her clothes (up her shirt, down her pants, etc). Escalate until she either pushes you away, or you manage to fuck her. If she pushes you away, just go on about your business.

The results are rather remarkable. She will sometimes let you fuck her on the spot. She may push you away, but will have become completely diffused (sometimes, even playful). Occasionally, she will get quite angry about "not being taken seriously". The response to which is typically something like "how can I take you seriously when you're not naked?" If she does become angry, she will return later feeling very guilty, and have a very sweet/submissive tone.

I have even done this in a somewhat public setting. She starts to emote, and I hug her, and start trying to unfasten her pants. On one occasion, I got as far as having her pants around her ankles at an ATM. On a number of other occasions, I was able to finger her in a dept store. These occasions usually led to some good times when we got home. AND, it's even added a bit of kink to our life.

The key takeaways: She is being emotional - a potentially great time to have sex. She needs to know you don't take her trivial emotions seriously It's an opportunity for you to set the frame (and maybe even get laid) Looking forward to your comments!
Gravitational Centers - A Case Study on the MRP Journey
by Red-Curious | June 11, 2019 | Link

As I've observed numerous relationships in the last couple years, I've noticed an interesting phenomenon. I call them gravitational centers. These are relational norms that people tend to gravitate toward without even realizing it - and they can work either for or against you.

These are pretty obvious when taking a bird's eye view of how most men see progress in their MRP journey - both relationally (respect) and sexually (seduction). Understanding how gravitational centers work would have helped me break covert contracts early on, as well as staying motivated in my MAP, because it gives a framework for accepting the reality that women will sometimes refuse to respond to your improvements the way you think they should.

To make it easy to visualize, I've created a simple graph that should show you how this works. For easy reference:

- Red means the woman has given up. She is repelled by her husband.
- Orange means she has no interest in working on herself. She gravitates away from her husband, but watches to see what happens.
- Gray means there is no gravitational pull at all. You're just existing.
- Green means the wife is responding to her husband by improving herself, following his lead in the self-improvement venture.
- Dark green is where the wife feels the need to impress her man and that the onus for self-improvement is on her to keep up with where she perceives he already is.

This is far from a perfect graph, and the slopes certainly need a lot more readjusting - but heck, I only had an hour and a half to put this post together, so deal with it.

BOB'S STORY

A lot of what's written on MRP is targeted content, addressing a single event or discussing one concept. Reading the broader case studies that tracked the whole of a man's journey often helped me stay motivated, so let's start with a common RP story in the broad picture to show how the various gravitational centers affect sexual responsiveness: nuclear to bliss. I'll use a case study from a guy I've discipled for the past 2 years. For the sake of anonymity, let's call him Bob and his wife Jane. Bob, feel free to out yourself if you think it'd add to the conversation.

NUCLEAR: Bob's wife, Jane, threatened divorce a couple years ago. They were in the red zone. She wasn't getting any tingles or fuzzies. Bob was 100lbs overweight and had no clue what a clit is, much less how to find it. He was more interested in the latest Netflix Original than walking out the front door, and his mission was dictated to him by an NPC on his computer screen.

He responded to the threat of divorce by promising to improve. He did improve. He dropped 20lbs in the first few weeks and started contributing to chores. Did Jane see this improvement and reward him for it? No. If anything, she backed away even more, still repulsed by him.

Why would she do that when he's making progress? I hear this story all the time among my clients who are shocked when their wife files after they made the changes they promised her. It's because Jane rooted herself into a view of Bob that she could not pull away from. It was as though he was on a bungee cord - the further he tried to pull away from Jane's view of him and the relationship, the more tension existed that, in her crazy rationalization, only reaffirmed that they were in a bad, tense marriage and she wanted out.

SURVIVING. At some point, the bungee cord stretched like a mangled slinkee. It's still all connected, but even if you let go, it wouldn't recoil all the way. There's extra slack in the line to work with. When Bob crossed that threshold, Jane was willing to give him a chance. Bob's still pretty darn blue because he's doing all of this for Jane at the time, but at least the weight keeps going down and he's starting to take ownership of his own home and life responsibilities. He mistakenly makes Jane his purpose, but at least it's better than his previous mission of making as much time for games as possible.

Jane's still skeptical and gravitating toward divorce, but at least she's willing to let things play out before pulling the trigger. She's gone from red to orange. There's a line ahead of her and she sees it. She wants Bob to succeed and cross that threshold, but expects him to fail. She herself still feels no compulsion to improve.

GRAY ZONE 1. After enough stretching, the cord finally snaps. Jane is now more interested to see how far Bob will go than she is in looking up attorneys online. In stead of being repulsed by him, she's intrigued by him. She's obviously not going to be chasing after him or try to improve herself yet, but she's not pulling away either. There is no pulling force. Life just exists here.

Jane was willing to call Bob her husband again, rather than "that scumbag I'm planning on divorcing." She acknowledges her marriage to Bob ... it's just an unhappy one.

PULL UP TO CENTER. At some point, Bob crossed another threshold. He started dressing nicer, and his clothes were actually fitting. He began wearing cologne. He's initiating sex again. Jane sees the possibility that their marriage can shift from unhappy to normal.
In this first green zone, Jane sees hope for what their relationship could become. Suddenly she's willing to work on herself. She believes that a little improvement on her part will continue encouraging Bob in his efforts to improve as well. She's manipulating him, but in her mind it's for the best. All the same, Jane's becoming sexually responsive to Bob again, so things are looking up.

CENTER. At some point their lives just kind of normalize. This is the second status quo. Just as there was a bungee cord in the bottom left when Jane wanted to divorce Bob, now there's a bungee cord in the dead-center. They aren't unhappy, but they're not excited every time the other one walks in the door either. They're perfectly neutral. Things in the relationship feel balanced, which at first sounds good, but then it means no one is yearning.

If Bob were to have faded downward a bit, Jane would have been motivated to get things back to center. Instead of Bob thinking 300lbs was just his normal weight, suddenly 230 is normal. If he pops up to 240 for a time he feels it and something in him causes him to gravitate back to 230 again. The same thing with his lifts - if they slack, he feels a drawing force back to what he was lifting at this center line. This applies to his efforts at leading in the relationship or taking ownership of his home - as he slacks, he sees the negative impact and is motivated to re-stabilize on that normal line.

PULL DOWN TO CENTER. But Bob's not okay with neutral. He keeps improving. It's harder than it was now. In the lower left sections, Bob first just wanted to avoid divorce, then he saw a "normal marriage" as some light at the end of the tunnel he was striving for. Now he's got what he believes all his friends have. Is it really worth it to keep going? He gravitates back toward the center and must have an extreme will-power to keep going up.

Jane also became comfortable with neutral. She put in a bit of effort. She dropped 10lbs. It's nowhere near the 70lbs Bob lost, but she had less to lose in the first place, she thinks. She smiles more than she used to in the gray first gray zone, and that should be enough for Bob. Yeah, he can keep improving, but he should be grateful for all the ways she's been improving. She puts the cap on the toothpaste now. Shouldn't that mean something to him? I've already put in the effort, she tells herself. I'm good now. I'll be Bob's cheerleader as he keeps going while I sit right on this line.

GRAY ZONE 2. After deciding that "normal" wasn't enough, he keeps going. Now he's developing his social game. He's working on his Keno. He's trying new things in bed. He's getting too far ahead of her, so Jane finally agrees to meet him where he's at. She crosses into the gray zone with him. They reach a new status quo.

Unlike the first status quo, they're not "unhappily married" (default in most sitcoms), nor are they the second status quo of neutrality (where we just assume other people always are). Now they are "happily married." There's no pull up or down, left or right - they're fine just where they're at.

THRIVING. But then Bob keeps improving. He's not doing it for Jane anymore. He's doing it because the further he gets from his former unattractive slob self the happier he is with his life - and he wants to see just how far that road will take him.
He's no longer one of the "better guys" anymore. Now he's one of the best guys. He went from fat slob to respectable hunk. Other girls are taking notice of him and Jane sees it. At first she's mad and wants to pull him back to that center-line, but part of her likes it. If she want it to continue, she realizes she'll have to improve herself just to keep up. Now she's not doing it to motivate Bob - she's doing it because Bob has motivated her.

Jane sees another green light - a need to improve herself. Even if Bob stopped improving, just by being one of the "best guys" around, Jane constantly feels on her toes - a persistent pressure to keep Bob happy and make a real effort in the relationship. She's initiating sex more than he is. She takes care of the household responsibilities - without him even having to ask. She buys him little fun surprises when she's at the mall. Life is good.

BLISS. Now, making gains at some point becomes difficult. It's like building a house. One day the foundation is laid. Then the next couple days the structure is up. "Wow, you got all that done in a day?" Then the utility lines are installed, and a day after that the insulation and siding are put in. "Wow, look at that progress! This is going faster than I thought." Then the flooring is installed in a day. The dry wall in another day. Then the amenities are put in (stove, toilets, etc.). All this massive progress in the span of a few short weeks. But something bizarre happens. You stop seeing progress. The workers are there for hours painting baseboard and nailing it in. It takes two whole days for one of the guys just to tile the shower. It's a week for painting and caulking and detailing. What's taking so long?

Bob finally got a foundation laid and structure put in place. He had all the amenities to make Jane swoon, but the detailing would take much longer. Bob's still working on that.

But from other relationships with the most high-end guys, I see an even greener zone than in the thriving relationships. They live in bliss - true excitement. I expect this can't be maintained perpetually and indefinitely (at least I haven't been able to), but when the guy lives in this peak, the wife seems to feel the full weight of dread on her shoulders and will put in whatever effort it takes to keep her man focused on her instead of the neighbor who's always trying to chat him up. As a man lives in this zone, his wife is drawn toward impressing him. She gravitates toward him, not toward any status quo.

CAVEAT: In this particular story, (sorry Bob) Jane didn't start off as a very attractive woman (though she got there by the end), so it's not like she had several Chads sweeping in to steal her away while Bob was just getting going. If that had been the case, she may have stayed in the "I'm better off just divorcing him" phase much longer - or actually have gone through with it. Again, you can't always predict how a woman will act at any given time, though there are certainly broad trends that are generally reliable.

CONTEXT

It's important to note that the entire context of viewing this graph is looking at the man's attractiveness, value, improvements, etc. as the decisive factor of his own ability to achieve sexual and relational satisfaction - whether with his wife or otherwise. If Jane wouldn't have responded this way for Bob, a litany of other women likely would have.
In that sense, while we use the man's status on two of these axes as the premise for everything, the colors show generally how women are likely to respond - not a predictor of how Jane specifically should be expected to respond (no covert contracts). So, you can think of this graph as a picture of female sexuality.

For the mathematically inclined, you're welcome to imagine the colors as a topographical indication on a third axis sticking into or out of the page as the general "female" variable - I just thought it'd be easier to interpret this in terms of color than a 3-dimensional graph (which would have taken far more effort to figure out how to do than would be worthwhile). But the picture would be far more complete with an into/out of the page dynamic happening in this hole process.

---

EXTENDING THE GRAPH

You'll note that I extended the "fuzzies" section beyond the basic square. This is because you can always add more fuzzies to a relationship ... but after a certain point it forces attraction downward.

The further away you get, the less sexually interested the woman becomes and ultimately couldn't care less about the man.

---

GRAY ZONES

It's interesting to note that there are two extremes in the gray zone:

- Extremely attractive people with no depth to the relationship. These are your CEOs, biker gang leaders, and meat heads at the gym. The woman really has no long-term interest in the guy, but somehow she's in his bed for years and years. She's not going anywhere. She knows she doesn't love him, but the sex is too good - how could she leave it? They have reached a status quo - albeit not an ideal one, but it's comfortable enough to live in.

- Then there's the supreme beta bux. The guy who isn't attractive at all, but will do anything and everything for his wife. She wants a back rub? There he is. A new house they can't afford? He'll make it happen somehow. Her friend has a cute puppy? He gets her a cuter one. There are water spots at the bottom of the sink after he finished the dishes? "Don't worry honey, I'll dry them up so you don't have to see them anymore." She's not going anywhere, but she's certainly unfulfilled. Again, not an ideal status quo, but one she's willing to live with.

Between the extremes are areas where a guy sacrifices a bit in one area, but makes up for it in another.

CAPS

Now, I hear some guys complain that they're not naturally attractive, therefore they must be doomed. "Black pill ... yadda yadda ... I hate women." Suppose even with all the alpha confidence, amused mastery, etc., he still caps out at about a 7 on the attraction scale. You'll note that it's unlikely the 7 will ever have to worry about divorce ... just remember that these rankings are perspective-based - a 7 to the girl at the bar might still be a 4 to his wife if he's not gaming and attracting her the same way.

What hope does he have for a successful marriage once he's hit his attractiveness peak? He'll never be as attractive as Chad. Of course, most Chads don't give her the fuzzies. So, the 7 becomes an oak. Instead of relying on his attractiveness (A-game) to maintain a healthy marriage, he ups his B-game and finds himself in the green, where his wife gravitates toward him and her default position is to improve herself for him rather than rest in the neutral gray zone.

Note that the "fuzzies" he improves here are not about serving or pedestalizing her, as that would actually decrease his attraction down from a 7. Instead, it is about passing comfort tests and decorating the interior of his frame to be a desirable place that any woman would want to live in, rather than steel and barbed wire that make up the border.

The same is true in the reverse. Some guys just lack the capacity to build a comfortable frame. Comfort tests aren't natural for them. They might hit a 7 and peak there. What's he to do? Up his attractiveness game.

A balanced guy will have a steady pace moving from phase to phase, but if a guy is imbalanced, he has to put an incredible amount of work on his strong point to make up for a mild/moderate lacking in his weaker aspect.

GREEN-ORANGE REVERSAL

It's also interesting that there is green on the "unhappy" half of the graph and orange on the "happy" half. Shouldn't all the orange be on the unhappy side and all the green on the happy side? Why would a woman start responding positively to her man when she's unhappy and respond negatively after he's improved?

That's the whole point of the gravitational centers. When she's unhappy, but has hope, she gets in the game. When she's happy, but thinks even more happiness isn't worth the effort (usually because she can't visualize it or doesn't believe the improvements will last), she pulls away.

This confounds lots of men I meet with who saw some early gains in their sex life, but then realize that continued improvement was counter-productive. I believe this is why.

ANOMALIES

Now, there's actually an updated version of the graph for you to enjoy: right here. I add 3 significant zones.

BROWN - The brown zone is the murky area where about 95% of men live. They're not elephant-man ugly, but far from attractive. They make up for it by being good beta-bux to their woman, but aren't perfect. That big brown hole is your average guy. It's not a great place to live, but I guess "not great" describes the average marriage today anyway. Most women really don't like having sex with a guy in this zone - and might even say it's painful to have to deal with him there, which is why these types of guys face constant rejection from their wife.

CENTER PINK - This is the "sweet spot" for women. Whereas men most often live in the brown zone, married women are most comfortable living in the pink zone - leaning slightly more toward the attractive end of the spectrum, but overall not seeing a compelling need to supremely excel on either axis. And why would they? By being average, they can already get whatever they want from most men. Of course, they don't want to slack too much either, as that would compromise the social advantage they have and their ability to find another man easily if her husband does turn out to be a flop. It's not a sexual peak for them, but it's a comfortable place for them to be all the same. Nevertheless, most guys seem to think women should be sexually excited to be in this "normal" zone, and it just doesn't work like that.

What zone on the graph is most likely to get a woman sexually excited? ...

UPPER PINK - This is the exciting place for women and where sex happens most for them. For most women, this really is their peak sexual place on the graph. They can't resist a guy who's extremely attractive, even if he's pretty low on the fuzzies axis. One night stands, bar hook-ups, the CC - it's all because of this particular zone for women. But even within this zone, stroking her feelz even a little bit has more impact than that extra bit of attraction, so I marked off the right-most section of that pink area as the best spot even within that zone.

Enjoy, fellas!
Response to AskMRP: 17-year Oneitis Marriage; You Can’t Fix your Marriage... You Can Only Fix You
by RPAlternate42 | February 5, 2016 | Link

There was a post, very recently, in AskMRP wherein user /u/throw_away_acct4 seeks help in his 17-year marriage.

My Take on His Marriage

I believe he got married young. He clearly did it too quickly (3 weeks after meeting her) and this indicates a strong sense of oneitis for this woman. My guess is that she wasn't quite at the wall, but saw it on the horizon and thought she might be able to secure her place in the feminine social structure, and avoid the wall altogether, by marrying a guy who was nice enough, I guess... and kind of cute but wasn't her ideal exit ride on the CC.

^^I ^^don't ^^know ^^his ^^chronology ^^or ^^her ^^sexual ^^history, ^^but ^^I'm ^^applying ^^broad ^^strokes ^^to ^^his ^^picture.

Summary of his post

Married 17 years, not well-off, but better than financial survival. He's in a DB and she is emotionally withholding from him, meanwhile, she babies their 14 year old son as if he was half his age.

He is aware of Red Pill but seems to be wielding it bluntly, clumsily, and only with purpose towards her. He thought losing 22 lbs would be a magic bullet and I'm guessing he constantly talked about his progress looking for validation and a gold star sticker for his reward poster hanging on the fridge.

I don't believe he has read the sidebar otherwise NMMNG would have nipped this in the bud a while ago, WISNIFG would have informed his actions towards his (lack of) child-rearing ability, and MMSLP would have assisted him in creating a comprehensive MAP for himself.

Prologue

There have been some great Comments in response to this from the likes of /r/Archwinger and /r/JackTenoffHearts, and /r/UEMcGill (you know... the usual suspects.) One of the great things about this subreddit is that it gives everyone almost instant access to respond and that everyone offers a different point of view. Some will offer almost exact information and advice and some will offer slightly different POVs.

Absorb everything you read in here; someone's responses and posts will resonate deeper than others. We are all different and the women we are with are all different: RedPill is not as cookie cutter as the main sub would like you think.

I had started to write this as a simple comment response, but as I am oft to do, it ballooned from a simple set of observations to a need to a whole thing.

Without more ado:

From Your Post: Your Problems

I've applied some of principles of theRedPill to my marriage and it's done more harm than good

You don't apply RedPill to your marriage; you apply it to yourself.

We have very little sex. She does not enjoy sex at all (she has no desire and cannot orgasm). I knew this going in to the relationship but I thought that would change.

She does not enjoy sex at all with you.

She is not emotional, cuddly, touchy-feely. She could go day after day with no touching, hugging, etc. (I'm the opposite though I wish I wasn't)

I'm willing to bet you are more touchy-feely-cuddly because you see it as a stepping stone to higher intimacy and you are looking for a crutch for the missing intimacy; If she would just hold me, then I would know that everything is alright.

She is emotional, cuddly, and touchy-feely. She just isn't those things with you.

I can't say anything to my son in a negative, fatherly way without it being an argument with her. She still clips his toenails, cuts up his meat at dinner, and things like that. If I bring it up she goes off on me.

You won't be able to stop her from doing anything... right now. However, there is hope.

The Red Pill, and You

Married Red Pill isn't for your marriage. Married Red Pill is simply Red Pill praxeology applied while in the confines context of a marital relationship. Married Red Pill isn't about your marriage any more than The Red Pill is. I would even go so far as to say that The Red Pill is more about marriage than Married Red Pill is. Of course, I don't mean literally, but I will explain this paradox.

Go on the main sub and especially /r/AskTRP and witness how almost every post and question involves how can I... girls or what si the best way... women, and the every-increasingly popular and quasi-MRA posts about feminist this and feminism-that. Everything they do, whether they choose to admit it or not, is centered around women. Of course, this stands to reason as The Red Pill is about Sexual Strategy but they always smack, at least to me, of validating through women in this small way. Still, when stripped bare, they will hold the line of "male improvement."

Married Red Pill on the other hand knows that we are (for the most part) without the availability of other women with which to apply the RP sexual strategy. Since we are "stuck" with the one woman, we don't worry so much about doing things about her or towards her... we are more (in my opinion) specifically centered on True Self-Improvement.

You claimed that Red Pill may have done more harm than good. This is impossible since Red Pill is about you and not her (or even your marriage.)

The first thing you need to internalize, from this point forward, is I am a married man who is now practicing to be single.

As this path continues forward, as you improve, as you become more physically, emotionally, and psychologically attractive, you may find that she likes this improved version of you and wishes to hang around you more often.

Or you may find that she is still a sexually-withholding shrew or that she still doesn't find you attractive in any way and divorce is the only way.

Stop trying to fix your marriage and start fixing you. You can't fix her and if you are fixed and she is broken then the marriage is broken. Once you start focusing on you, then, and only then, will a truly assertive and attractive man be revealed not just to her, but you as well.

The Sexual Desert

You didn't state how often you have sex. You only stated that she doesn't like sex, and din't before the marriage.

Well, I hate to break it to you, but the only way she will enjoy sex (if the above is true) is that you become better than you were when you first met. I won't even delve into how thinking you could change her opinion of sex with you is even possible.

Yeah, You read it correctly: with you. the fact is that your wife loves sex. And given the right guy, she would spread her legs with intent to multiply your brood faster than a catholic rabbit. You, however, do not inspire such feelings. Hey, I get it because I was in the same boat: she loved having me around for the social and financial security and the reminder that she is worthy enough to be married... but I didn't inspire the tingles.

The good news is you can only go up from here. You need to stop being so thirsty about and stop allowing it to dictate your life. This is where we employ OI and the IDGAF attitude ^(see ^the ^end ^for ^what ^this ^truly ^means). when she rejects you, "okay," and then go do something else. You're new enough at this where starfish sex is basically the same as a rejection for sex. If she is going to be indifferent about sex, then you can be indifferent as well: zip up and go do something else without her, or fuck her like a despondent hooker and then zip up and go do something else. I've employed both tactics to positive results.

On top of all of this, you need to live like a man with options. She knows she is the only oasis in this sexual desert. When she sees that you are being offered bottles of water without her, she will respond. Dread Levels 1-6.
Emotional Availability

This one will change when the sex frequency changes. Remember the guy that would make her fuck like a pornstar? Well he's also the guy she would hang on and hug, and touch, and kiss, and do stuff for. The guy who inspires the most tingles is the guy who gets the most attention from her. With a lack of available options she will turn that energy into something else.

Once you have passive dread working for you, are using OI successfully, are improving physically and in the way you dress, then sex will improve, rejections will cease, and starfish will turn into better sex. As this happens, you will notice changes in her emotional availability.

However, it's important to note that you shouldn't be looking for emotional support or validation from her; expect none of it. As far as she's concerned, right now, you aren't worthy. And you aren't.

Self-Improvement

You need to start reading the sidebar yesterday. MMSLP is the book that literally opened my eyes to Red Pill. If I had to put one book out there that I would recommend only, MMSLP is that book. It very cleanly wraps up RP in a very easy-to-digest manner.

You, however, NEED NMMNG. You seem to require validation from her and you probably throw little temper tantrums in your head and have fake conversations with her when she isn't around. I didn't need NMMNG so much. I already had the selfish-like attitude nailed down.

WISNIFG is another you NEED. You seem to have a problem with setting boundaries and expectations (which NMMNG will also help with) but WISNIFG will help you enforce those boundaries. Boundaries, specifically, pertaining to your kid.

Epilogue: What is IDGAF?

It literally means I Don't Give a Fuck. But this is misleading, especially for a novice. IDGAF becomes I'm angry and I don't care about anything you do or say.

IDGAF, when deployed properly is actually selective indifference. When something is going your way and she is good, you are happy, chipper, and altogether pleasant about it. When she is "mean" or "bad" you are indifferent towards her but happy about everything else. The key to proper IDGAF is never being angry.
I am currently getting my Masters in counseling, and I’m in the middle of a class for Counseling couples.

From a RP lens, I can’t help but think about how Rollo writes about BP men acting in relationships based on the “old books, or the old set of rules. The teachings and lessons in my current counseling class are mostly based on those old set of rules, but as a Rollo says, women are playing by the “new book,” or the new set of rules. Men who are still playing by the old set of rules will be in for a rude awakening sooner or later, often after its too late and the marriage contract is in effect. Then, they may begin to see their woman acting differently, and this is very confusing to the BP man. He sees his woman "changing," but really what he is seeing is her following the new book of rules in a more open manner.

I don’t see it with any anger anymore. The anger phase has come and gone, but that doesn't mean I don't get angry sometimes. It's just, I very rarely get butt hurt anymore. I've become glad that I see it how it is. The truth is women love opportunistically, and based on their current mood, which can change in an instant. They will throw all these rules (that they teach us in my counseling classes) out the door in the heat of an argument. That is just part of the new book, so it doesn't surprise me anymore. As a matter of fact, it often amuses me. When I get amused by her trying to push my buttons, A&A and AM have all but become the default, and she will often laugh along with me.... Why? Because she knows its just a game, and the fact that I "get it" allows her to laugh along with me. This is what they mean when they talk about the man having such a strong frame that it is like a container. The woman is drawn to that strong container, and she fills the container that the man lives. To boil it down, she is often living in my frame instead of the other way around.

My oneitis is pretty much gone, but if I'm not diligent and careful, I can easily fall back into her frame... because remember gentlemen... the shit tests never end.... and you don't want them to. If the shit tests end, that is a signal of indifference or apathy, and also signals a lack of dread. Passive dread is an ongoing factor in the successful RP man's life, and it is a healthy dread. If she's feeling dread, she still sees you as attractive and fuckable, and that turns her on. She won't admit it, but trust me, the fact that she initiates as much or more than me confirms that actions speak louder than words.

Getting back to the class: They talk about communication and blah blah blah... but when it comes down to it (in the real world) women will fight dirty, and all of these teachings about proper “communication “ are really just buzz words to keep the beta males on task. AM and A&A are my go to's, and I don't take her serious enough to have a conversation about "communication." Also, it will bore her to death and dry up her pussy like a hair dryer on a summer day in the Arizona desert.

That’s why FRAME is so important. I’ve been on hard-mode almost daily for over 2 years, and hardly anything she can say or do has an effect for longer than 10 minutes, if that anymore. More times than not, if I do lose frame, and it does happen occasionally, I will quickly regain it and simply say "lets just drop it. It really doesn't matter." End of conversation. If she tries to prod and continue the argument, I just go broken record... "lets just drop it. It really doesn't matter..." because you know what... it really doesn't matter. Life has become simplified in that way. It doesn't mean I have a drama-free relationship with my wife, it just means I control the flow of drama and start it and end it how I wish. Any drama happens in my frame.

Now, I get “ I love you sooooo much” with that old loving look in her eyes. I love seeing that, but I don't base my happiness on it, and I realize it can be completely different tomorrow, or even 10 minutes later... and that's OK. Frame has to be internalized to get there, and faking it will only expose you as a fraud, so I don't buy into the "fake it till you make it" on the subject of frame. Just try to build your frame, and be genuine. STFU until you can build your frame strong enough to implement A&A and AM. These should be genuine and come naturally with time and lots of effort.
Two quick caveats before we move forward:

1. As always, I want to be clear when I post on here that I am NOT someone with everything figured out. When I write posts on MRP I am mostly writing to myself, laying out what I most need to work on. I usually find that I only really know what I think when I’m able to write it out. I welcome constructive criticism.

2. If you’re just interested in the actionable bits, you can skip the “Personal Background” section, as it just gives personal context for what follows.

PERSONAL BACKGROUND

I got a ton of really useful feedback on my most recent OYS. It’s a really great thread - I highly recommend going through it.

An addendum to that original post: Things actually got much worse. About an hour after I first posted the OYS my wife and I had our first therapy session after a long break. I went in with the goal of setting some expectations for what we would be working on and making that our last session. (Keep in mind, this was before getting any of the feedback in the thread).

During the session I completely lost frame. I was trying to lay out my version of events and mentioned that I track sex frequency. Both my wife and the therapist know this, but my wife interjected that it made her uncomfortable, that it was weird, and the therapist made a relatively harmless joke about it.

The actual comments were very mild - but I completely lost it. I nearly screamed out loud in the office, emitting a kind of strangled shriek. I stormed out and went to the car to hyperventilate.

Not my proudest moment.

Eventually my wife came out to get me (sigh) and we went back inside. I had trouble pulling myself together; I basically went on a rant about she doesn’t think tracking sex is important because sex isn’t important to her, and I’m the only one working on the relationship, and I’m alone in this process, etc.

Basically, the real life equivalent of a first-month victim puke in /askMRP. Fucking awesome, bro.
I eventually calmed down and we finished the session. We ended on a relatively positive note, and I resolved to just put it behind me and focus on the present.

But a sense of depression settled over me. I got nothing done at work; I barely managed to make it to the gym all week. Not only did I not initiate sex, I found myself barely able to touch my wife or show her affection at all. My sex drive completely vanished, and when I thought about initiating I felt only anxiety.

These events - plus the thread in OYS - threw a lot of things into sharp relief for me:

Clearly I am carrying around a deep reservoir of anger and resentment that I am barely aware of day to day. It continuously resurfaces; I think I’ve moved past it, only to have it come back at times like these. Despite a lot of personal progress since finding MRP, my success - and even my general happiness - is limited by my inability (or unwillingness) to address these deeper emotional issues. I’ve been doing a lot of “mindset work” - visualization, affirmations and so on - focusing on my day to day attitudes, especially ones that will aid in attraction. But ultimately, this work is shallow, and isn’t getting at the deeper rooted issues that are actually holding me back.

Clearly, getting at the root of this emotional turmoil is extremely important - not even within the MRP context (although that’s certainly true as well), but for my development, maturity, and happiness as a human being. I have a lot of deep emotional work to do.

But - how do you do deep emotional work? What does that even mean?

/u/man_in_the_world has called me “Mr. Carefully, Carefully Plan” before, and that hits extremely close to home (although it’s still pretty funny). I love a good plan - more than that, I often feel like I need a clearly laid out plan for how to proceed in order to curb my tendencies to overthink, get distracted, etc.

So I’ve done some research into different methods for “deep emotional work;” ways of working on deeply ingrained mental habits. In this post, I’m going to lay out the general theoretical framework that explains where these issues come from, and how to address them. Then, I’ll cover some specific exercises and techniques for “doing the work” to change them.

While I’m going to be writing within the MRP context specifically, it’s important to note that none of this is coming from “RP” sources, nor is it specific to the kind of stuff we talk about in here. These could be applied to pretty much anything, from general self-esteem issues to getting better at brazilian jiu jitsu.

WHERE DOES THE ANGER COME FROM?

The “Anger Stage” of MRP is one of the most common tropes we see on these boards. Beta Husband wakes up one day, realizes he’s fat, miserable, unloved, unappreciated, and (in his mind, anyway) not getting the sex her SO RIGHTLY DESERVES...and immediately gets bitter and angry.

This initial anger stage - the sense of not being told “the truth,” of being “taken advantage of,” etc, hopefully doesn’t last too long; the new man slowly starts improving himself and begins to enjoy the process. The anger drifts away, and the progress he makes becomes intrinsically rewarding.

Why, then, do many men - myself included - seem to return to the anger stage over and over again? (By my count, I’m on anger stage 3.)

The problem seems to lie with our motivations.

Note above that I said the process becomes intrinsically rewarding - eventually, we have to identify with and ENJOY the new self we are building. For almost all the guys who have been here a long time, were their wives to disappear tomorrow, much of their MRP routines/habits would stay exactly the same. It’s not ABOUT HER any more.

However, it’s possible to move past the initial anger stage without fully adopting this sense of intrinsic motivation. The rush of self improvement, the joy of seeing a better body in the mirror, increased sex frequency - all these can provide a sense of real accomplishment that soothes the anger we felt when first starting.

But if the GOAL remains “I want to have more sex with my wife,” or “I want my wife to treat me differently,” or “I want my life to love me more” - we remain, at our core, validated by the actions of by the other.

Ultimately, THEY are the judge of whether or not what we’re doing is “working” - and this is a surefire recipe for misery.

OUTCOME INDEPENDENCE

“Be outcome independent!” “Get rid of your covert contracts!” “Make yourself the prize!”

All of these are MRP truisms, and they contain a great deal of wisdom. At their core, they address a single truth: In the end, you need to do all of this for yourself, and only for yourself. So why is that so difficult for many men (like me) to internalize?

For one, we are all used to being externally validated. From grades at school, to whether you’re accepted by your peers, to how much money you make; our lives are filled with external scorecards that let us know how well we’re doing.

If you’re naturally goal-oriented (as I am), you are very used to setting a target using one of these external scorecards and then building a plan to get there. Not only are you used to it, you’re regularly rewarded for it! How do you know if you’re kicking ass? You hit your sales numbers, you get invited to to the party, you tap that big dude at BJJ practice. Clean and objective.

If this has been your orientation all your life, MRP can seem straightforward.
“Got it - women are attracted to dominant, alpha types. My wife is a woman. Therefore, if I become more dominant, my wife will be attracted to me, and want to have sex with me. Oh, awesome - there’s even a 12 step program. Lift, act cocky and funny, smack her ass on the way out the door, tease her, STFU....no problem. Let me put that in my calendar.”

This mindset views MRP as a simple IF/THEN process: IF you perform the following actions, IF you look a certain way, THEN your wife will have sex with you. This view of MRP is often exacerbated by shallow understandings of hypergamy, which view women as automatons with vaginas that get switched on when a dude with big muscles walk by.

When goal-oriented guy asks, “How do I know MRP is working?”, the answer they come up with isn “MRP is working when my wife is having sex with me.” Wife not having sex with you? You’re not doing it right, dawg - lift more, shut up more, tease more, etc. MRP is the input, sex is the output.

But the more you hang around MRP, the more you get exposed to MRP’s “Zen Side.” You learn that you need to be “outcome independent” regarding sex. You learn that MRP “saves the man, not the relationship,” and that “the more you want sex, the less likely you are to get it.”

All of this flies directly in the face of the “IF/THEN” version of MRP.

“Be outcome independent?” But...isn’t the whole reason I’m doing this to get more sex? “The more I want sex, the less I’ll get it?”...but then, why the hell am I doing all this lifting? “MRP doesn’t “save the relationship?”....but that’s why I came here in the first place!

The goal-oriented among us (namely, me) will be confronted with this conundrum and resolve it the only way we know how: by incorporating “outcome independence” as just another step to take in pursuit of our goal.

“Ohhh, got it - women aren’t attracted to needy men. So, when I get rejected, I shouldn’t act needy...and that will make her want to have sex with me.”

This is essentially LARPing outcome independence. We’re not REALLY independent of the outcome; we don’t actually FEEL, on a deep level, that we will be OK, no matter what happens in bed that night.

Instead, we know we’re SUPPOSED to feel that way in order to achieve our goal of more sex, and so we act in a way we assume someone with OI would act.

RECIPES FOR MISERY

What’s the big deal about any of this? After all, “fake it till you make it,” right?

In a way, that’s correct; I don’t think anyone on here would say that they simply read about outcome independence for the first time, had their light-bulb moment, and then waltzed away, never to be upset by rejection again. Clearly something like that takes work.

The problem with “faking it” for too long is that we haven’t actually achieved outcome independence; we’re simply using outcome independence to try and achieve a specific outcome. This will always produce sub optimal outcomes.

This is very important to understand, so let’s dig into this a little bit.

Why does having a clear goal of getting more sex with our wives impede our progress?

It was David Schnarch, in his excellent book The Passionate Marriage, who really opened my eyes to this dynamic.

In every marriage, there is a lower sex drive partner. Think about this for a second; it’s nigh-impossible for two people to have the exact same sex drive. Add to that the biological differences between men and women, and it becomes clear that in any relationship - but particularly in heterosexual ones - there will be a mismatch in sex drives.

Someone’s always going to want sex when the other doesn’t, even if that only happens very occasionally. Your wife could be the lower sex drive partner; it could be you. But there is always a lower sex drive partner.

Remember that our goal-oriented MRP man has made “sex with my wife” his goal, and the validating factor that tells him if he’s successful or not. Assuming that his wife is the lower sex drive partner (as that’s by far the most common situation here), this means that he will always run into situations where he feels like he “fails” because he wants sex and his wife doesn’t.

Goal orientation in MRP is thus ALWAYS going to produce a “fail state”, even if you successfully get sex the majority of the time.

What happens when we’re confronted with this “fail state”?

Some men will employ increasingly high levels of dread, even if their wives are mostly on board with their vision. They’ll constantly try to eliminate the chance of being turned down for sex...and since that’s impossible, they’ll use harsher and harsher “strong arm” tactics, creating an environment where their wife is afraid to turn them down for sex.

I don’t have any hard data on this, but somehow I doubt that’s going to make for a healthy long-term situation, and it’s hardly the relationship I think most of us want. Even if it did, it’s impossible to scale dread in this way forever. This is simply another form of negotiating attraction (“If you don’t fuck me, I’ll fuck your sister in front of our kids!”)

(To be clear, this is NOT how dread typically works in relationships; rather, this is how dread works when someone is using it as a tool to force external validation from someone.)

Even if your wife has sex with you 100% of the time under these conditions, she still isn’t providing the validation we’re seeking - she’s not a willing participant. She doesn’t “want” you - she’s simply “afraid of losing you,” and I think there’s a pretty big difference between the two.

If some men resort to increasingly heavy-handed uses of dread, others will simply become frustrated and resentful. I count myself among this group.

In effect, goal orientation is simply a subtle covert contract. “If I improve, and become truly outcome independent, and drop all my covert contracts....THEN she’ll want to have sex with me.”

The closest equivalent to this would be constantly thinking “I’m going to think no thoughts!” during meditation....when, of course, “thinking no thoughts” is itself a thought. The act of trying to solve the problem simply exacerbates the problem.

How does this subtle covert contract play out? We improve, we lift, we become more attractive. We see some improvement in our sex lives - but because there will always be a sex-drive mismatch, we still feel stuck in our “fail state.”

Even if the sex we receive meets our original criteria for “success” - say, having sex three times a week - that becomes the norm, and we want more. “Yes, we’re having sex, but it’s only starfish,” for example, or “We’re having sex, but she won’t let me try anal.”

Hedonic adaptation ensures we’ll never be happy where we are, and thus we never feel like we’re making any progress.

To give a personal example (even typing this out, I can see how fucking stupid this shit is....and yet, I’ll be honest, this thought has a lot of real anxiety for me):

My wife and I started from a completely dead bedroom, and have slowly built up to 4-5 times a month. Even before we had kids, our sex life had dwindled to about once a month - so in many ways, our sex life is the best it’s ever been.

Yet, I read in one of Rollo’s blogs that an “alpha tell” - a sign that your wife really respects you and looks up to you - is that she’ll be comfortable with your ejaculate on her body...and that a “beta tell” is that she rushes to the bathroom after sex to wash out your inferior seed (I’m paraphrasing).

My wife hops up shortly after sex to go pee. She has always done this. Before MRP, I assumed this was because she could get a UTI if she didn’t. Maybe she just doesn't like the feeling...or who knows? Maybe she just needs to pee! The truth is, I have no idea why she does it, nor does it really matter in the grand scheme of things.

But since reading that blog post, I feel a pang of insecurity, anger, and resentment when she does this...This completely normal, habitual action. The goalpost has shifted - now it’s not enough that we have sex, but now she needs to like the feeling of my ejaculate.

Can we see how irrational this is? Hell, I don’t even like the feeling of my ejaculate!

Goal orientation, combined with the absolute certainty that you will be faced with a partner with a differing sex drive, essentially guarantees that you will “fail” a great deal of the time.

Thus if you base your sense of success, or self esteem, on the external validation of sex with your wife, you will constantly be confronted with feelings of frustration.
The irony here is that improving with a clear goal of getting more sex will only sabotage that goal; whereas improving without the goal of getting more sex will actually result in more sex.

Frustration in and of itself is not a terrible thing; we’ve all been driven to improve by frustration with various parts of our lives, whether it’s living situation, physical fitness, etc. Often, it’s one of these “I’ve had enough!” moments that kicks off our journeys of personal improvement.

But frustration, combined with these deep covert contracts, can actually be deeply damaging over time.

JUDGEMENTS

What’s so damaging about frustration?

I do think it’s possible to go through all of this without experiencing real long term damage. After all, we’ve all been faced with periods of struggle, and most of the time we rise to meet those challenges.

Marriage, however - especially a marriage in which one partner is overly emotionally invested in the actions of the other (what Schnarch would call “enmeshment”) - is especially prone to both judgment and internalization. These dynamics can be extremely damaging over time, and are often at the core of the anger phases so many of us go through.

Let’s take a look at these in turn.

Judgement

Judgement is an essential faculty of all humankind. I would argue that it’s at the very root of all creativity, industry, productivity….the ability to see the world as it is, judge that it could be better, and put a plan in place to improve.

Our judgemental minds are thus at the core of our self-improvement and play a large part in any MRP journey. After all, if you’re completely content, why change, right?

But there are different types of judgements. There are material judgements - simply deciding that you’d prefer something to be different. If you have a small kitchen, you might make the judgement that your kitchen would be more comfortable with additional counter space, and plan to install island a kitchen island.

Then there are value judgements - the decision that something is either “good” or “bad.” We might look at a parent slapping their child in the airport and think they are a “bad person;” it’s not simply that we wish something was different, but that we’re making a moral judgement about that person’s nature.

In the kitchen island example, our kitchen is neither “good” nor “bad”; we feel no moral indignation about the fact that our kitchen is small. It’s simply a situation that we can change a bit to better match our goals.
We can make the same kind of judgement about our marriages - we may judge, for example, that we’d like to have sex more often, and put a plan in place to achieve that goal. Stripped of moral judgement, we can see the situation as it truly is, and simply act in accordance with our interests.

(This is the mindset I often notice in /u/weakandsensitive’s comments - when I complain about not having enough sex, he often asks why I don’t just cheat, or hire a prostitute. Even though I CLAIM sex is my problem, I feel revulsion towards these suggestions...clearly illustrating that sex is not actually my problem, after all.)

But, if instead of making a material judgement about the sex we’re having, we make a value judgement...things change. For one, we will start to feel resentment towards our partners - after all, if it is “bad” for them not to want to have sex with us, then they are “bad” for withholding that sex. This is why frustration over our sex lives can so easily turn to anger and resentment (whereas no one is feeling resentment towards their lack of a kitchen island).

The more emotionally invested in our partner we are, the more dramatic this dynamic becomes.

“I’m doing ALL THIS WORK to become more attractive and she’s NOT DOING ANYTHING...she ALWAYS gets sex when she wants it, but I get rejected all the time, it’s NOT FAIR...I’m becoming more and more attractive and I’m STILL getting rejected...there must be something wrong with me...I’ll NEVER be attractive/alpha enough...” etc, etc, etc.

(These are all my real thoughts, by the way. They are not fun.)

Even this wouldn’t be so bad, if we could simply observe that thought process and walk away from it. But these kind of value judgements often become internalized, leading to a downward spiral that intensifies the process.

Internalization

There’s a clear process that occurs when we make value judgements about our own performance over time.

Let’s look at a typical example: initiating sex and getting rejected.

Resolutions316 decides he wants to have sex. He initiates.

2. His wife isn’t into it, and turns him down.

3. R316 knows he’s supposed to be outcome independent, so he shrugs - “No big deal” - and rolls over.

4. Immediately, he starts to analyze what just happened. Why didn’t she respond? Am I not attractive enough? Was my initiation too weak? Damn it, I shouldn’t have waited till
5. These value judgements then shift from judging the actual event - the initiation - to making value judgements about my own character. Why do I always do this? Ugh - this isn’t working at all. We haven’t had sex in over a week. I’m such a piece of shit...

6. Then to making value judgements about my wife..she’s just playing me for my money. She isn’t attracted to me and never will be...I should just get a divorce, why don’t I do that? I have no self respect!...

And on and on. Value judgement after value judgement.

We move from event, to making value judgements about that event, to identifying with those value judgements.

“I was rejected for sex” --- “I suck at initiating” ----> “I’m unattractive”

Over time, these internalized value judgements become our identity. We repeat them over and over, essentially hypnotizing ourselves into believing they are true. We’re no longer simply someone that wanted sex and didn’t get it one time; we’re now someone who is unattractive.

If there’s anything we’ve learned from sports psychology, it’s that we tend to act in accordance with our image of ourselves. Our beliefs about ourselves inform the decisions we make, and those decisions drive behavior.

If we BELIEVE, for example, that we are successful with women - if we can easily call to mind many examples of success with women, and we’ve been rewarded consistently in the past for this belief - then we’re more likely to approach women and ask them out. That act makes us more likely to have future successes, and increases our capacity to dismiss failures as aberrations. The belief fuels a virtuous cycle that strengthens the belief.

Likewise, internalizing our negative value judgements creates a negative cycle that decreases the likelihood of our taking positive action, and thus strengthens our negative beliefs (“I’m unattractive - why bother initiating? I’ll just get rejected” → less initiations, less confident initiations → decreased success rate → “See? I always get rejected - I’m just unattractive, it’s hopeless”)

Understanding The Anger Cycle - Putting it All Together

This doesn’t happen all at once, of course. This is a gradual process that often goes undetected, as it’s mixed in with some success.

Let’s examine the entire cycle, using the concepts above.

- New guy joins MRP. He reads, realizes the mistakes he’s made, and gets angry (Anger...
Phase)

- Guy sets a goal of using MRP to improve his relationship and getting more sex (Goal Orientation)
- Over time, he starts to see some success. He feels validated by wife’s reaction. (External Validation)
- As process continues, however, the mismatch in sex drives becomes apparent, and new guy faces several “Fail states” despite his sense of progress (Lower sex drive partner)
- Guy makes value judgements about these “fail states” (Value Judgements)
- Over time, these value judgements become internalized (Internalization)
- Internalized value judgements create negative cycle, increasing likelihood of “Fail states”
- Progress towards goal stalls or stops, frustration builds as Hidden Covert Contract is not met, and we enter Anger Stage 2...often in explosive fashion.
- New guy resolves to “REALLY drop covert contracts this time”, because all he has to do is become really outcome independent to get more sex...and the cycle begins again.

By my own reckoning, I’ve been through this cycle three times now. Each time, I lose great amounts of progress...and resolve to redouble my efforts and “get it right this time”....only to end up repeating the cycle.

The trick here is that every time I resolve to drop the covert contracts in order to get more sex...I am simply reinforcing the covert contract. I’m sitting down to meditate and thinking “DON’T THINK!”

So - how can we escape the cycle? How can we make things actually better....and ensure that, regardless of whether our sex lives get better, that we don’t grow up to be bitter old men, unable to accept themselves or the world on its own terms?

Because that’s my biggest takeaway from the last few weeks. The problem is NOT that I’m not getting the sex that I want. The problem is that despite all I’ve done and all the wonderful things in my life, I’m MISERABLE. And that’s a much bigger and far reaching problem.

This post is already super long so I’ll break it up into two parts. In the next part, I’ll address what I’ve found in terms of concrete ways that other people try and address these problems.

As always, thoughts, criticisms, etc, are appreciated.
Big Fish
by Rollo-Tomassi | June 19, 2018 | Link

The Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2018/06/18/big-fish/

Excerpts:

Big Fish and the Cookie Lady

There is a larger dynamic at play in all this, one I probably could add an addendum to in my second book, Preventive Medicine. An aging Beta male, and particularly one with a notable amount of money, success, fame or status is a big fish for a necessitous woman. A woman who’s long practiced in using her sexual agency to its best advantage with men knows a prime target in an older man who’s never unplugged himself from his Blue Pill conditioning. Bourdain was one such big fish, and his Blue Pill conditioning, his eager white knighting and immediate deference to the feminine, his soul mate idealism would’ve been instantly recognizable to a 42 year old woman long accustomed to being the center of orbit for many a prior Beta.

I don’t want to call it an epidemic, but there is a set of women who look for aging men with resources to befriend and pretend they have a genuine interest in. Men with even moderate means and a Blue Pill conditioned idealism that ‘love springs eternal’ are prime targets for women who can read and assess that man’s state from years of practice. A woman who shows interest in a man who’s been starved for affection, sex and a real connection with a woman (married or not) will seem like more than an oasis in the desert. She’ll appeal to his romantic, idealistic Beta soul; a last chance at ‘true happiness’, a true miracle, as he enters his old age.

My own father was one such target for a woman we called the ‘cookie lady’.

My dad passed away from complications of Alzheimer’s/dementia before he was 72, but before his dementia had really become apparent the ‘cookie lady’ had already made a mark of my dad. My father was also what I’ve called a terminal Beta. He never unplugged to his dying day and lived a life based on the old set of books, being a good provider, dUTiful, responsible and he was perpetually disappointed by the women in his life never reciprocating with their intimacy and appreciation the ‘rules’ clearly stated should happen. They never loved him in the way he thought women ought to be capable of loving him. Nevertheless, dad always clung to the (noble?) belief that if he saved his pennies and was of the highest service to women that eventually, one day, his efforts and quality would be appreciated by the right woman. He was a good example of the Savior Schema.

The ‘cookie lady’ understood all of this – all of dad’s Blue Pill conditioning, the way he thought the world and women should work, the old social contract investments, his idealism about women, everything – all of it in less than a week. She really wasn’t all that different from my step-mother in that respect, but at this late in the game, at her age, and noticing the subtle hints of cognitive degeneration in dad, the stakes were much higher for her long term security. I should also add that I would include my own mother in this schema; she’s a lovable loon, but she knew a good opportunity for security back in the 60s, so it may be my father had a knack for attracting this type of woman due to his Blue Pill idealism.

The reason we called this woman the ‘cookie lady’ was because she always brought my dad fresh baked cookies when she was trying to play into his Blue Pill end-of-life last ditch hope for happiness. We never knew her real name and if it hadn’t been for my dad getting very upset with us for preventing him from rewriting the ‘cookie lady’ into his will and power of attorney within the first month of her ‘dropping by’ we may very well have been suckered into her scam too.
I always wondered if I would get to this moment from the minute I first found MRP. 10 years to the day that I asked my wife to go out with me I found this place, to today. Three long years of working, improving, and focusing my life. I've been through a lot, and seen my body and especially my mind transform.

A lot of learning came from eye-opening texts on the sidebar of how other people thought, how to influence what they think, and how to think differently myself. I think most of the texts can simply be summed up in one sentence as: Everyone including you is their own person with their own thoughts and feelings and frames.

That's it. Interacting is learning to accept (or reject) that, and own that decision. There's no magic key to make people do what you want or think what you want. But understanding why they think the way they do does take away some of the frustration. And knowing that most people are lost souls simply looking for a leader makes assuming that position easy.

After 3 years, as much as I thought I had my thoughts locked down, I recently had a mind-altering experience. I dropped acid on a trip I went on. I did my research going in. I knew I was going to experience some funky thoughts. But nothing quite prepares you for an experience that shows you a glimpse of mental processes that normally run through your mind, that affect how you think every day, and how they might not be as ideal as you thought.

The experience basically broke down my current worldview and let me see it from a different perspective. The truths didn’t change, but the way I saw myself interpret them did. And what this made me realize is that the way our minds organize these truths involves taking the life experiences we each have and trying to put them into frames we consciously AND unconsciously construct to protect our minds from the chaos that is the random world we encounter. Each of us can see and know the same truths. But the framework the mind uses to make rules to govern our thoughts and actions about these truths can be different.

It also made me realize that MRP is simply one of those frames. And I had been using a lot of mental energy filtering the world through this worldview to try and make sense of it. Everything I experienced, I thought “what does this mean through an MRP lens”. But I now realize that the energy I spent trying to filter actions of other people was energy I was burning for no benefit to myself. I was so busy trying to put everyone into a box, trying to out-think everyone, that I wasn't getting any joy filling my own box.
And that doesn't mean I didn't have a filled life. I was and still am going out and expanding my life all the time. But I'll compare it to going to practice a sport, versus enjoying playing the actual game. Learning about a hobby, versus enjoying the hobby. Going to college, and getting a job in that field. And of course you need both. And of course you can derive joy from both. Pushing yourself and learning is a path to fulfillment. But actually living gives the learning purpose.

The experience didn't provoke this thought, I had been thinking about this for a little while now. I'm ready to hang up my MRP handle. I'm ready to stop mulling over sexual dynamics and instead simply pursue sex, and life, unapologetically. To be clear about my wants and needs, my intentions and boundaries, and accept the acceptance or rejection other people have of those.

Am I abandoning the MRP framework? Not at all. Like I said, the truths are still there. And I've seen a lot of it work:

-I've grown from a guy who didn't take care of himself to a guy who takes pride in his looks/style/appearance.

-I've learned that the actions I take have consequences.

-I've realized that I'm not owed anything from anyone, but that I can pick the people I'm around.

-I've studied closely my feelings and motivations and found that while I'm don't have direct control over them, I do have control of the situations that cause them.

-I've expanded my options and seen that many roads are open before me. And that only by learning about all my options and their consequences can I know that the path I choose to take is one I can own.

-I've seen my life fill from passions I know I want to pursue, and from experiencing the passions of others when keeping an open mind and not stifling my options by protecting an ego identity.
-I've seen my wife follow my lead in how we speak to each other, how we discipline our kids, and how we take responsibility.

-I've seen my wife respond to me when I make my intentions and boundaries clear and known.

-I've seen my wife take pride in her body while training and lifting for a bikini competition to, in her words, "keep up with this jacked guy over here".

-I've seen my wife ignore the words coming out of my mouth, but follow my example when I lead and clear new paths for us.

-and I've also seen my wife, and others, choose not to open their lives or follow my lead...and have learned to accept that they think that way.

To those new to the journey: This place will help you. RP doesn't solve your problems, it gives you the tools to handle them like an adult. Guys here will push you, teach you, and slap you upside your head. Remember though that you don't learn here. You simply see a door opened to a new way of interpreting the world. When you go out and actually experience that, that's where you'll learn and create meaning behind the words. And sometimes you'll even see the words aren't entirely true, but they do get you to live by the framework that enables you to move forward.

Remember too that we are all at different points in our lives. Guys here are married, divorced, young, old, and have different passions, schedules, and thoughts about what a good first mate entails. And these things will evolve over time. You will see men doing great things with their lives. Don't lose focus of what you want while trying to emulate the superman you've created by combining all these great things into one man. Do expand your mind by being open to the experience of other men.

I had a huge essay of other notes and thoughts, but like I said you don't learn that here. So I'll leave it at that. I wish you all the best in finding your ways. And appreciate everyone who has helped me find mine.
The Real You
by Rollo-Tomassi | February 12, 2019 | Link

Essay

https://therationalmale.com/2019/02/11/the-real-you/

Excerpt

All of this takes time, persistence and introspection, but it starts with an act of will on your part. You will only get what you have gotten if you keep doing what you have done. I can teach you Game. I can teach you the habits that would make others believe you’re a self-sufficient Alpha success, but only you can change your authentic personality. This is where a lot of guys lose the trail when it comes to being Red Pill aware. They read my books, they open their eyes, but they don’t know what to do with the information. Rich Cooper once told me that reading The Rational Male was like drinking from a firehose. There’s a lot to digest and a lot to confront with regards to how that information shows you, convicts you, of how you lived your life up to this point. But what do you do with it? Knowing is half the battle, the other half is action. The other half is implementing that knowledge to your own advantage.

Ever since I started writing I’ve always referred to myself as a Lesser Alpha. Some people think that’s self-deprecating, others think I’m just a married Beta with delusions of Alpha. Whatever. Either way, I’m a guy who took this knowledge and applied it to serve my own best interests and forge a truly authentic personality based on what I understand of what we call the Red Pill. I created a me of my own volition based on a realistic understanding of intersexual dynamics, but also of a better understanding of myself in that Red Pill paradigm as a result of it.

So, who is the real you? Who decides what your real personality is and what is authentic for you? What is the estimate that your personality is based on? I get sick of hearing women and men talk about finding themselves. Women love the idea of a journey of self discovery. This is a fantasy of Blue Pill idealism meant to, again, keep one in a state of helplessness and hypoagency. Women use this garbage as a convenient rationale meant to excuse their past bad decisions.

Red Pill men don’t find themselves, they build themselves.

They forge themselves into a creation of their own choosing based on realistic assessments of themselves, their conditions and the world that challenges them not to build himself. I wrote this essay to encourage you, but also to warn you that this building takes time, and you will meet all manner of resistance to the masculine project that is you.
I don’t give a fuck! Beta bucks. Fuck you! What a whore. Oscar Wilde said “Everything in the world is about sex, except sex. Sex is about power.” Make no mistake here, sex is a form of currency. Ask yourself a few questions: Are you buying or selling? Do you use your sex to buy assets or liabilities? How valuable is your currency, ie: is your sexual currency more like US dollars or more like the Indian rupee? How many dollars (or rupees) are you carrying with you now and how much do you have in the bank? Were you born with a lot of currency or do you need to acquire a lot? The answers to most of these questions will be determined entirely by your gender. If you were born a woman then you have an asset/ cheque book between your legs which will remain valid until you are around 45, to sell your currency you only need to get out of bed, dress and maybe wash yourself. If you were born male then you most likely have a liability/ debt between your legs so you will need to spend a lot of effort and energy acquiring some currency.

There are exceptions to these rules, if you are female and you are in the bottom 10% of appearance due to terrible genes then you were probably born in debt. If you are a male in the top 10% of appearance due to great genes then you were born with a cheque book. Obviously this is a guideline like the Pareto principle, not an absolute. It is a spectrum, like alpha and beta and you can find yourself with credit, debt or a zero balance subject to your life choices. On top of this there is a lot that both genders can work on to increase the amount of currency available to them. So you can drop out of the top 10% or you can work your way into the top 10%. Indeed if you can get into the top 20% of either male or female sexual currency then you are going to be much better off than the bottom 80%. Both genders can modify their chances by lifestyle and mental choices.

So depending on your luck in the genetic lottery, the effort you put in, your lack of discipline, your good and bad decisions you will shift up or down the spectrum. Love and war are both just stupid games that adult humans play with each other. Most of the time neither player knows the rules that well and they have no real idea why they do anything. Whether you have a lot of currency or just a little, the next big part of the equation is what are you spending your currency on? Women are the gatekeepers to sex and men are the gatekeepers to commitment so you need to ask yourself are you giving your currency away too quickly?

If you are a female then as the gatekeeper to sex, you should not give your sex away cheaply. Why do you think there are at least 42 million prostitutes in the world, with 80% of these being females and the remaining 20% of male prostitutes generally servicing men? Only 11% of male sex workers have female clients, that means that almost 98% of the money spent on prostitutes worldwide is spent by men. Truly a man’s appetite for sex is voracious and all consuming. So the smart tactic for a woman is to optimise looks and remain chaste in the hopes of securing a high value man. Of course you can cheat, and lie about your n-count but that will still leave you with a lower quality man, high quality men have the experience to know the difference between a woman who chooses to give her currency away cheaply.
If you are a man then you should not give away your commitment cheaply. If you are the sort of guy who lacks sexual currency then you are the sort of man who gives up his commitment easily. Maybe you are working your ass off in a job you hate and you are scared to tap on your wife’s shoulder and ask her for your bi-monthly installation of starfish duty sex. Maybe you allow an angry fat woman to boss you around. Maybe you take women out for expensive dinner dates and listen to her stories about her job. Maybe you cried when your girlfriend dumped you because you value your relationship more highly than she does. Worst of all you are a beta orbiter and you dangle your worthless offer of commitment to a woman who has absolutely no desire to cash that cheque. A lack of abundance/ currency is a very bad thing for a man. Unlike a woman who can just lie about her n-count, faking abundance is much harder for a man. Women have antennas and they can sense your weakness. You can lie and cheat like a PUA but at the end of the day, you will never have a decent or significant relationship with a high quality woman.

Most of the above applies more to sex and relationships but sex is still a currency in the context of casual sex. People use the most common form of currency, money, to buy all sorts of things. Some of these things are good for you and some are bad. You might buy something on impulse and get buyer’s remorse afterwards. You may buy something which is for pure indulgence and has no future value, indeed you may buy something that actually reduces your assets now and in the future. In this case you have used your money to buy a liability rather than an asset. If you had a burger and fries for dinner rather than lean meat and veggies then take a guess at whether you just purchased and asset or a liability with your money.

No one should imagine I am being puritanical or prudish here. We all buy liabilities, we all love liabilities and guilty pleasures, life would barely be worth living unless you have some things which provide just pleasure. In the context of sex as currency casual sex is a guilty pleasure. It has been estimated that $186 billion dollars was spent on prostitutes in 1 year. Given that almost 98% of that money was spent by men it is a very clear example of a currency exchange. The prostitutes are spending their sexual currency in exchange for money, and the men are using their money in exchange for sex. In a dating context a woman riding the CC is exchanging her currency for a liability. I could go on here with more and more examples but these are red pill subs, we all know the score.

So to summarise, try and keep a budget and have some idea how much currency you have, what your currency is worth, and be careful what you spend it on. If you want to know how to optimise your sexual currency, then you know where to look, it’s all on the TRP, MRP and Red Pill Women sidebars.

Peace ❤️
You're an animal
by simbarlion | June 21, 2019 | Link

You do realise you are an animal right?

You are an animal that operates according to inbuilt biology but also within societies man-made rules, Yeah? It's a balance, and society can only tolerate so much animal, even though it's your natural state. If you go too much animal, well you will get your animalistic ass put in a cage. I bet you were more animal as boy, and were taught over time to only use your animal eyes with the filter dictated to you by society.

But if you’re an animal, your wife must be too. That means you’re kids are animals, and they are being tamed into the ways of society too, right now if you are doing your job. So you’re in your Den with big and small male and female animals. And just FYI, the big male leads the pack. But your also a societal human too, you like comfort, you like community, you like intellect and theory. You like that someone made the medicine that helps you along in your day. You like the civility within which you engage with your wife. You like society norms, like blowjobs. Have you ever seen any other animals doing that? No. That's a society thing.

And you’re here for sexual strategy, which lets be honest is >80% animal behavioural traits. So as much as I love the theory that comes through, and hey, I am as much a part of that as you, lets just remember that if you want to be alpha, you need to be spending more time on 'animal you' and less time on 'society you.'

She's mostly looking for the animal, y'know.

----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------
--------------------------------------
The following verse was deleted as far as i know, so I have just pasted the whole thing in. Its a good read, one of my favourites. credit to redpillrobert - deleted

THE LION AND THE LIONTAMER

Over time a lion's loyalty begins to overcome his rationality. He loves the lion tamer. Even if sometimes she forgets to feed him. I mean, she always feeds him eventually. Even though it's only one kind of meat, and frankly, he's getting kind of bored with it. He really misses the variety that the wild provides, but the lion tamer told him that if he leaves the cage and eats anything else, she'll get mad and his gravy train will stop. So he fights his natural urges and repeats to himself over and over that this meat is all he needs. It's safe, it's fairly reliable. No reason to risk that.

Sometimes he has to perform tasks for the lion tamer in order to get fed. But they're not very big tasks. Not like leaving the cage and trying to hunt again. And it's been so long since he last hunted, does he even remember how? In fact, he's gotten pretty out of shape since being in there, even if he knew how would he even be fast enough to catch any food? But he knows he can do those tasks though. So no problem. He'll just keep doing that.

But as time goes on, he notices that doing them doesn't always result in being fed. Sometimes it does and sometimes it doesn't. And frankly, the quality of the meals has really dropped. Not only are they infrequent and unreliable but they're bland and dry. It doesn't even taste that good. Sure some of that is because he's used to it but he can tell when a meal takes effort and when it doesn't. She's not even tenderizing it anymore.

So the lion starts to get angry and starts to roar at the tamer. But that only seems to make things worse. So in desperation the lion starts searching for ways to please her--tries to crack the code. He does everything she asks, and even things she doesn't. But his meals remain so sporadic and unpredictable he can never get his bearings and develop a rational plan for securing his food. So he just tries everything every day all the time and hopes for the best. She's become like a volcano goddess and all he can do is grovel and pray.

Until one day the lion wakes up and he sees that while he slept, another cage has been constructed during the night right next to his and his tamer is with another lion inside, giving him all the juicy, tender, deep-red meat he wants (she even lets the lion fuck her in the ass).

He roars at the other lion, he roars at the lion tamer, but she merely glances at him in contempt and tells him to get lost. So he leaves. Stunned, hurt, humiliated, angry, and hungry, he's forced to hunt again but his muscles are weak, his senses are dull, and his memory of how to survive in the wild is faint.

And so off he goes to rebuild himself again, if he can.

Spend more time on your wild lion and less time trying to crack the code.
The Cheating Game
by over60_stupid_loner | November 19, 2015 | Link

Note: The following is basically a re-post of my piecemeal posts on MRP about my cheating. Though not a frequent poster, I was encouraged by theultimatecad to tell my story.

I am closer to 70 than 60 now; 2 marriages; financially successful businesses beyond my wildest dreams. Consider myself to be the luckiest guy I ever met.

My first marriage was to a woman with issues that she would not address. After 3 years of marriage, I lost all desire for her and decided to take care of myself. My goal was to get the kids to college age then split, which I almost did. I ran out of gas a few months before the second and last one graduated.

I was amazingly free of guilt, as my goal of raising children that I dearly loved was working for them, and in an unconventional way, it worked for me at that time.

I did as I pleased with my girlfriends with 2 rules. 1) Don't ever embarrass my family and 2) don't get too attached so as to nuke the marriage before I was ready. I was always home on the weekends for the kids and managed to keep up with their activities during the week. But the nights were mine. Often I stayed out all night and returned at 5-6 AM before everyone got up. Occasional business trips and camping trips provided extended time to play. If the SO ever asked, and she seldom did, I told her I was working at my business.

Many here say that you can raise great kids and be divorced. In my situation, I did not, and still don't, believe that.

Their mother (ex-SO) was just too weak a person to produce viable adult outcomes for my children without my daily help and direction. The sacrifice of me having a great marriage, I mitigated with many extramarital affairs. Because of my rule of not getting too attached, the body count was high. I lost count at 100.

I still don't know if I was Alpha or Beta mindset or just a space cadet. It's just what I did and it worked for me, then. Bottom line is, don't judge; but for the luck of your circumstances this could be your story too.

If I could do it over again, I would have never married her, but the child was created and I was pregnancy trapped. At that time in my life, my personal code would not allow me any other alternative to marrying her to begin with.

Based on my experience, I had some good times, maybe the word is bitter-sweet, BUT, I wouldn't recommend it to anyone unless there was no better choice.

By the way the total cost of the divorce was just north of $750k. It might have been less if I had not waited until the kids were grown.
Once a Cheater Always a Cheater Is a Lie: After the first marriage, I was intentionally celibate for 6 months. Then I met my current SO. This LTR, for most of 25 years, were my happiest years. I never cheated, never even thought about it again, until things cooled off the last few years. Now I am working on me and slowly getting the results I need for me. If I do start cheating again, it will be my last act of desperation; top level dread, the dead cat bounce of this LTR.

Conclusion: Don't forget that you really are the prize. There is more pussy out there than you can ever do. I loved the chase, but a good LTR were the best years of my life.

Cheating is about you and no one else. It will not fix your LTR, and will probably nuke it sooner or later.

Be happy, be wise, be careful; and get a reversible vasectomy. (and if all you can do is judge me – get smiley face fucked.)
So I've come out of my hole for a day or two. I'll go back soon. In the spirit of MRP I am obligated to pass on what I've learned so far. Then offline I go to make more shit happen.

Waste no more time arguing about what a good man should be. Be one.

Marcus Aurelius wrote this. I believe this to be the essence of Red Pill and MRP specifically. The argument can be made until the sun goes down about women, sexual strategy, and how they should be treated and how we should expect to be treated. Yep. Sure it's all that. But at the end of the day none of the shit matters.

What matters is how you view yourself, your world, and how you interact with it. Are you in charge of your life? Are your needs being met? Are you a quality man? You came here because of your lack of sex. Your desire to be respected, recognize now that you have hit your low point. Because these most basic needs and desires are no longer being met you have hit rock bottom. For some that rock bottom may be more horrific then others, but it is rock bottom. What's more interesting is that I am not the first to say this, nor will I be the last. In fact you have probably read this before. Though I have another angle to it.

Ever hear the parable of the elephant? 15 blind men are feeling an elephant. One touches it and describes the tail he feels. Another the ear, and yet still another the foot. This goes on until each one describes what he is touching. each one believing that they know what the elephant is. The Red Pill is very much like this. Not one person can truly understand the entirely of the concept. It takes several to put it together. To examine it and understand it. From each we learn what this elephant looks like.

You will spend time here on MRP examining everyone's stories, gleaning any insight you can and in fact you will be creating a playbook. A step by step manual if you will. All fine. Again recognize that this won't work. Yet it is the first step. I did it. Others did it.

You will hear do this do that, talk less talk more...blah blah blah. All good advice. Yes do that. Do all of that. Most important of all....do what you want. Find your way. Following the advice is good, better is to just do it, take your lumps as men should and learn from it. Waste no more time on that matter, put it into practice. Fail and just sit back and say well fuck. That didn't work.

Smirk at yourself, laugh at her, because it's all bullshit any ways.

Today was just another day.

When I was an Army Cadet the cadre (active duty officer and NCOs) would tell us in order to be a leader you have to study and observe good leaders. You then have to model yourself after the ones you think best exemplify your style, your personality. I'll be damned but that advice is accurate here. Pick the flared guys that best represent your view. The way you think you want your life to be...then go do that. YET be very aware that as you are faking this new found persona you will in fact begin to craft your own.

Each of our circumstances are different but the advice, the situations, the behavior....very much the same. You only have to read a few newbies post to see that. MRP can prepare you. Show you the tools, the stories, put you through the crucible that it is, but at the end each man has to find themselves. Find their way. How is that done? I have no idea. That's your job.

You just do it. Waste no more time. Study no longer. Be afraid no more and get into the world. More work and less talk. I'd respect a man who dove in and started kicking over the hornets nest then a man who sits reading and puts nothing into practice. At least the first is learning. Doing. Making his way.

Some days nothing will go on. This isn't a war. There isn't a constant battle. Sometimes starting at the wall is all that's needed. After while your family will see you doing nothing maybe inside you are all turmoil, thinking, wondering, working shit out. To them? You are going to be collected, calm, and they will think you are planning the next big thing. Yet only because you have demonstrated this in the past. I cannot tell you how many times that has happened to me.

Waste no more time. Sure, MRP is all about having a plan. Yes do that. Yet I will also let you in on a secret. Those that are flexible, that seem to be spontaneous and it all works out are those that plan previously. Once you have mastered planning and the ability to organize then the magic starts. You can turn in an instant and create something from nothing. Be a master of time. This is why you must waste no more time in making this happen. Learn the value of each minute and what it means. You will be amazed how long it actually takes to do something once you do it.

I spent too much time here reading, commenting on the things I had already understood, and yet there was so much more. you cannot learn them until you act. Until you do. Then one day. You no longer have to. It just becomes the way it is.

| Men are not troubled by things themselves but by their thoughts about them.

Epictetus was so correct here. Men stew, they brood. Stop. That's the path of weakness.

Get out of your head, out of your thoughts. Put aside the negative emotions and embrace the good ones. Don't hide your emotions. That is not healthy and others will see that you are battling something. Embrace everything there is about the world and yourself, but move on quickly. Let the fear, the anger, the sadness happen but not happen to you.

Put into action. A bad plan, violently executed, is still the right one.

Stop wasting time.

Be a man.
The following is a worked example of one of the time management approaches outlined in Caleb Jones' Unchained Man.

For context: I'm a disciplined guy with strong habits and I'm good at sifting out the priorities in a project and attacking them. My former time management approach was typical of "7 Habits..." and the other usual suspects, mixed in with some basic project management and an indifference to anything else that doesn't "move the needle" as it were. I applied this both personally and professionally and it worked pretty well.

That being said, my life is getting more complex, likely yours is too. And I have been conscious that successes in one area were increasingly coming at the cost of others. I would also rather drop something than stress over it. So this has meant a great deal of Sophie's-Choice-type triage while I struggle to implement a more comprehensive approach that is not too cumbersome.

In other words, "Make a better MAP" has been at the top of my MAP for a while.

So when /u/SBIII mentioned using The Unchained Man for the same purpose: I was like a rat up a drain pipe.

The Unchained Man

The book itself is kind of like if TRP did 4 Hour Work Week. It’s not bad per se but after skimming it quickly, I relegated it to the bottom of my reading list and have still not completed it.

Running Your Life - Unchained Man Style

What I did do is skip to part 3, which contains a complete, nuts-to-soup, idiot’s guide to “running your life”. I am that idiot, so I’ve read this section several times since then and implemented a great deal with success.
In it there are 5 chapters which cover:

- Areas of your life;
- Formulating a personal code of conduct;
- Defining a personal mission;
- Setting societally independent goals;
- Managing your time.

None of the concepts are new or original however Jones unpacks them well and most importantly, outlines the execution in great detail.

In particular he describes two methods for time management:

1. The “Check” method and
2. The "E3D" (Every Three Day) method - a more complex, multi-document approach.

There are other helpful nuggets in there, such as goal setting tips and examples of mission statements with "do's" and "don'ts" but the time management systems made the most impact on me and I'll run through a sample.

Check Method

Jones explains the Check method as a way to build habits and more suited to visual, fly-by-the-seat of your pants types. I agree, I fit the description and a similar system has helped maintain strong habits. It's nothing more than focusing on a few daily tasks and checking off compliance.

E3D (Every Three Days) Method

The output of E3D is a prioritized “to do” list (That you check Every Three Days). The input is basically your entire life. Mine is a multi-tabbed worksheet in Google Sheets. I had something similar before however refining it and adding Jones' rules for executing it have been very effective.

A worked example is as follows:
Step 1 - Establish some goals:

- Complete relocation;
- Reduce office hours to <30 per week;
- Clear unsecured debts;
- Cut to 8% bodyfat for beach vacation;
- Find and settle in new home;
- Buy vacation home;
- Hold 100k USD in free cash/equivalents;
- Vacations x 3;
- Increase total from 1300lbs to 1350lbs;
- Mother’s Day, family birthdays, anniversaries;
- Read a book a week in 2019;
- Improve two languages;
- Learn fourth language;
- See the Terracotta Army.

Jones recommends phrasing everything in the past tense, as in “I spend less than 30 hours in the office per week”. I won’t re-write it, you get the idea.

Step 2 - Assign everything an A, B, C priority\NOTE 1\):

- A Complete relocation;
- C Reduce work hours to <30 per week;
- A Clear unsecured debts;
- A Cut to 8% bodyfat for beach vacation;
- B Find and settle in new home;
- C Buy vacation home;
- A Hold 100k USD in free cash/equivalents;
- C Rebuild asset portfolio;
- A Vacations x 3;
- B Increase total from 1300lbs to 1350lbs;
- A Mother’s Day, family birthdays, anniversaries;
- A Read a book a week in 2019;
- C Improve two languages;
- B Learn fourth language;
- A See the Terracotta Army.

Step 3 - Add a timeline to your A’s, using 1/3/5/10 year brackets:
- A Complete relocation (1 year);
- A Clear unsecured debts (1 year);
- A Hold 100k USD in free cash/equivalents (1 year);
- A Cut to 8% bodyfat for beach vacation (1 year);
- A Vacations x 3 (1 year);
- A Mother’s Day, family birthdays, anniversaries (1 year);
- A Read a book a week in 2019 (1 year);
- A See the Terracotta Army (1 year).

Step 4 - Prioritize your 1-5 year goals\(^1\)\(^2\) and sideline everything else:

- A1 Complete relocation (1 year);
- A2 Clear unsecured debts (1 year);
- A3 Hold 100k USD in free cash/equivalents (1 year);
- A4 Cut to 8% bodyfat for beach vacation (1 year);
- A5 Learn fourth language (1 year);
- A6 Vacations x 3 (1 year);
- A7 See the Terracotta Army (1 year).
- A8 Read a book a week in 2019 (1 year);
- A9 Mother’s Day, family birthdays, anniversaries (1 year).

Step 5 - Pick the top two goals to focus on, make em big and assign a date:

A1 Complete relocation
(by end-May 2019)

A2 Clear unsecured debts
(by 15th May 2019)

And that’s all you’re allowed. At this point you break them down into individual steps.

My goals are fairly simple but for the avoidance of doubt, relocating breaks down something like: healthcare, find house, furnish house, kids in local school, sort utilities, sort tax liabilities etc.

Step 6 - Projects
Now we move onto the projects list. This is where I started to get some real value out of the approach: I had dozens of projects over all kinds of timelines with little direct link to my mission or priority goals. Again, you pick 2 projects, break them down into prioritized steps and execute.

I did some mopping up first: I broke out furnishing a new home as a project and attacked it with the same intensity I would anything else. Same for my wife’s birthday (because I wanted to: calm the fuck down): small gift, babysitter, transport, nice restaurant, called ahead to ask them to bake her a cake. Same for some forthcoming trips.

Then, since my immediate goals were mainly financial, I prioritized a new business venture to get some more cash in. However since my mission is also (words to the effect of) “travel and have fun”, my second project was to really nail the planning on a forthcoming trip and execute it well and I've continued with that split so far.

It seems to work for me and any doubt on what comes next is normally resolved by referring back to the mission and goals tab.

Step 7 - Inboxes

Jones recommends processing all your inboxes down to zero here and replacing them with “to do” tasks. Personally I am 99% paperless and 90% of my emails just need a one line response, so I just do some cleanup here to ensure I've <10 or so items and any big items are being addressed.

Step 8 - Once A's

Then you take your “Once A’s” (as in “once a day/week/month) and schedule them.

I am pretty good with calendaring (auto-correct confirms this is a real word) but I did make a checklist here and double check everything in the next three days is scheduled and any forthcoming event has been considered as a possible mini-project. I also block out meeting/call prep (immediately before the event if possible) to cut down on tasks.

NB: I also reviewed my daily habits here e.g. I read an hour, train an hour, MRP an hour, sleep well, weigh myself and track my macros everyday and I checked those off to see if there was any improvements to be made. I got a surprising amount out of this exercise and I suggest you throw it into the mix yourself.

Step 9 - To Do List

Finally, from your project priorities, inboxes, upcoming "Once A's", process improvements and other “stuff”, you produce an “active” To-Do list for the next three days.

I'll also email/text my wife, business partners and employees about their priorities at the same time which adds a bit of leverage.

Conclusion

This simple approach has allowed me to:

A) Manage my life in a far more granular level of detail;

B) Deliver more goals and extrapolate new ones from my overarching mission;

C) Increase the leverage I get from my team toward my own personal goals.

Jones covers it and more in detail, with a step-by-step guide and flowchart.

If curious, read Section 3 of The Unchained Man for more. Worth the price of entry.

Notes:

1 I started off without a “mission” tab - as that seemed redundant - however adding it in, completely changed my A, B, C’s so I suggest you don’t skip it;

2 I have no long term priorities, so something for me to revisit;

3 I added a title of “6 Month Projects” in this tab to keep me honest;

4 I produce two, To-Do, lists now:
   - one in a Google Sheets tab that I do in the office, 9-5,
• a smaller one on a post-it note that I take home with me.

There’s no split between personal/professional tasks, it’s just what is practical to get done at each location and a nice side-effect was significantly reducing my screen time out of office hours, which feeds back into my goals.

5 I do this twice a week: Monday which is mainly professional and Thursday, where I’ll make sure I’ve covered the weekend. And I’ve scheduled a monthly review of my goals.
A MRPer's Divorce Tale

by rp_findingmyway | April 12, 2018 | Link

Background: have 5 kids, was in a 20 year marriage that's now over, late-40's.

Married the first real girlfriend I ever had and I thought I was set for life. Solid 8 in looks. Daily bible-reading church girl, n-count of 1. Good small family whom I got and get along with. None of that ultimately mattered. We met in grad school when I had already a signed offer letter from a blue-chip firm with a great starting salary. In hindsight she of course was looking to lock down a controllable beta bux. And so this marriage was ultimately destined to fail if and when I veered off the path she had in mind for me.

Things went off the rail pre-RP about 6 years ago when I finally had enough of the corporate life, working for other people, putting up with the PC nonsense, keeping my nose down and waiting to fully enjoy a self-actualized life when I hit 60 or something and retire. So I up and quit my job, devoting myself full-time to (in not necessarily this order): hobbies, managing our investments (that were largely on auto-pilot and spitting off enough income to get by at a decent level), actively participating in raising our kids and spending time with my wife.

It's been a great six years for me. Cross-country adventures, great hobbies and sports, bro time, being with my kids every step of their way. But the bitchiness really stepped up. She'd been bitchy for years (in a "my way or I'm making everyone's life unbearable" way) but it was turning into regular cuntiness. I led the family in many ways (vacations, finances, owning shit at home, being pretty social, etc.) but did not lead the family or my life in ways that mattered to her (but not at all to me), such as making a big salary, driving a fancy car, wearing a suit and tie to work, working regular office hours. Finally, about 1.5 years ago things changed. She started showing unmistakable signs of a branch swing. Called her on it. Stumbled onto Rollo, Heartiste and MRP. Had a reconciliation, hysterical bonding sex, you name it. But it was all just a band-aid. About six months ago she asked if I wanted to continue like this (i.e., her having my balls in her handbag). I said fuck no. We agreed to wrap things up.

The divorce paperwork is now 100% agreed and signed and sent to our state for processing. Hasn't been stamped by a judge but that's just pro forma at this point. Move out date is about 6 to 8 weeks out. We live in an apartment so I agreed to move, probably within 2 miles or less for school district reasons, etc. Waiting to generate some cash, and pay off all debt, from a pending asset sale before that happens. It can be awkward between us, I'm not sure and don't ask who if anyone she is talking or meeting with, I don't like the feel of the couch, but it's a temporary condition and I can deal with it for a bit longer.

Just wanted to share a few points for the guys in case anyone finds it useful.

1. I got the divorce terms down to paying a token $125 a month total for child support. No alimony. 50% asset split which hurts obviously. 50:50 on custody which of course rocks. Have many, many adventures planned with the kids. Without her and the constant harping, it will be so much more fun for all of us.
2. She used an attorney and paid about $2k total. I was pro se. I had a few FREE consultations with divorce attorneys late in the process (why'd I wait? dunno) and I will join the chorus and HIGHLY RECOMMEND all you mf's do the same if you're even kind of in the same boat as I was. Like many of you, I have friends who have been ass-raped in divorce and a judgment resulting in me paying a couple of thousand dollars a month didn't seem that far-fetched. As a result, I had initially agreed with my ex that I would pay $700 a month total plus 100% of medical and dental until the kids were 18. After the consultations, in which the attorneys I talked with after giving them our facts and tentative deal basically said I would be way-overpaying, I had enough information to sit down with her and her attorney, deflect her attorney's veiled threats of doom and gloom if I were to litigate this and get the terms I mentioned above.

3. My ex-wife was a SAHM for all but the past 2 or 3 years. Now she works part-time. That coupled with the fact that I no longer work a job that pays bookoo $$ means I did not have to fear a divorce raping after all. I dodged a big one in that she didn't initiate this divorce a few years ago. I'd be a cube monkey until I was 65 if her timing had been better. Lesson - think long and hard about letting your wife be a SAHM. You couldn't have convinced me that wasn't a great idea when we started doing that 12 years ago, but the reality is is that you're setting yourself up for a drubbing when things change (and they will change partner).

4. Impact on the kids? Not sure. They don't know yet as we're waiting to tell them until my move-out date is about two weeks out. I've got a lot of work to do to make sure their life isn't turned upside down and they keep on being the hard-charging and high achieving kids they are. I've tried to take 88Will88's advice and keep her as a friend and keep the whole process non-adversarial for the kids benefit and frankly my own benefit, but that hasn't gone all that great.

5. My buddies have been helpful and mean well. Everyone is concerned about the kids, as they should be. Some of my buddies were worried about me!! Counseling, they'd ask? Do you just need to talk, they'd inquire? LOL. They have no idea. No idea what a truly free man is capable of or wants. Can't imagine ever co-habitating, let alone marrying, again. A series of short-term, overlapping relationships sounds about right.

6. Ultimately I'm living and going to continue to live the life I want. If it was all about saving the marriage, I knew how to do that. I just wasn't interested in being married on those terms. So off I go back into the world a free man. When I got out of the Navy 25 years ago, my dad used to like to tell the story of when he was waiting to pick me up on my last day as I finished up formal out-processing at a Naval facility a couple hours from our house, i was walking towards his car, seabag over my shoulder when, without breaking stride or dropping eye contact with him, I slung that seabag off my shoulder and into the dumpster I was passing by. He was incredulous. "Don't you want your uniforms, your medals, son"? "No dad, I've got my freedom and my memories, that's all I need". Hmmmm, that reminds me, I've still got some photos albums in my closet with pictures of her scantily-clad in lingerie that she had professionally taken that I need to take out with the trash this morning....
[FR] "Just spooning, no sex"
by Chinchilla_the_Hun | January 17, 2017 | Link

Context: My 1yo was at the tail end of a teething episode and needed to be re-sleep-trained. Another kid was midway through a bout of some kind of infection and waking up multiple times during the night. Difficult kids coupled with overtime for me at work and home life, while bearable, was in survival mode for the past few days.

Two nights ago: I was actively gaming my wife throughout the day but received a preemptive "no" to sex in the evening before I even initiated. I backed off given everything going on and redirected my attention to a couple projects.

Last night: Everyone seemed to be mostly back to normal and it was looking like we were actually going to have a decent night's sleep. The Mrs. floated the idea about watching a movie but I was focused on making headway with my projects. I still had another hour or so of work by the time she was getting ready for bed, but paused to make myself some tea and help her apply some back pain ointment. Waiting for my tea to brew, the following exchange took place:

Me - Listen, I would like to spoon for a few minutes before getting back to work.

Her - That'd be nice.

Me - But I want to be clear that it's just spooning...no sex. WHATSOEVER.

Her - (laughing) No problem!

Me - I'm serious! Don't get ideas about any funny business.

Her - (smiling big) Oh I won't.

Me - I don't care if you flex your sexy butt cheeks or tear off your pants and mine and press your naked ass against my naked crotch...no. sex. Got it?

Her - (still amused) Ok then. We'll see.

Me - None of this "we'll see"...just spooning.

(spooning ensues, we both keep it PG)

Me - (after 5-10mins) Alright, my tea should be ready and I better get back to work. (start to leave)

Her - (relaxed and slightly fading) Wait, don't you want to have sex?

Me - Hey, I told you, just spooning. Besides, you're clearly tired.
Her - Well, I...

Me - Oh if you insist!

It didn't take much foreplay as she was already wet and things progressed quickly to full-on caveman. Towards the end of it, I was concerned she was going to wake the kids (rare for her).

Take-aways:

- Game often, but know when to rein it in.
- Own your shit. I could've easily ditched my work for the movie, but then I'd be getting fucked twice, and not in any tangible way (once for procrastination and again for emotional sex).
- Outcome Independence. I was fully prepared to let her drift off to sleep after spooning. In fact, the spooning wasn't a ploy to softer her defenses, I just decided to have some fun with the game and her hamster did the rest for me.
Here’s another real-life confirmation of MRP concepts.

The ex-wife of one of my childhood friends started messaging me shortly after word of my divorce became public. “Diane” broke the ice by wishing me a happy birthday and then the conversation progressed from there. We ended up talking on the phone for over two hours and I found her story to be a straight-up vanilla case study in a husband gone Beta and a wife’s hypergamy kicking in on-que.

My buddy “Jack” was a high school football star running back. He went to college on a full ride until he flunked out. Now he has a good job in law enforcement. He and Diane got married in their early 20’s and have had three kids, two of them pretty much grown but still in the house, and one in 8th grade. Over the years, Jack has gained a bunch of weight and lost a bunch of hair. Diane stayed at home with the kids while Jack worked hordes of overtime so they could send their kids to a high-end parochial school, have a nice newer house with a pool, and drive nice cars. Jack is an involved father and has coached his kids’ sports teams when he wasn’t working a 12-hour shift to keep the bills paid and build up his retirement.

Diane lost interest in Jack to the point of being repulsed by him. Her loss of attraction for him culminated when Diane’s mother passed away and she started to reflect on her own mortality. Everything he did annoyed her, to the point where she couldn’t stand to watch him chew or hear him talk. She claimed he was uninvolved with their children, because he didn’t have the energy to play with them after a long shift, and just wanted to sit in his chair and have a beer after work. They didn’t have sex for over a year, and Jack developed a porn addiction, which Diane felt made him some kind of pervert.

Diane was at the funeral of her younger female cousin and started chatting with the boyfriend of the deceased, “Mike”. They continued communicating behind Jack’s back. Diane whined about what a terrible husband Jack was, and Mike lent a sympathetic ear and reinforced her negative perception of her husband. Every interaction with Jack turned into a huge fight until she finally drove him out of the house and Jack moved back in with his parents at the age of 49.

Mike and Diane had a short fling, until Mike grew tired of Diane’s middle-aged snatch and moved on to other plates. Diane has been single ever since, with a few short-term relationships that started with online dating but never amounted to anything. She clearly overestimated her SMV due to the interest from Mike, and now is finding out that single, middle-aged women are a commodity as common as dirt, and there aren’t a bunch of young hot Chad’s lining up to marry her. Jack and Diane are still married on paper, so that Diane can stay on his sweet government health insurance benefits. Diane works two shitty part-time jobs to pay for groceries etc.

Meanwhile Jack has had a few girlfriends and moved in part-time with a girl who is nine years younger who idolized him during his glory days as a football star and a lifeguard. He has lost weight and has been taking some sweet vacations with his girlfriend, much to the chagrin of Diane. Diane says she’s “happy for him”, but then goes on a rant of how much she resents him enjoying vacations with, and spending money on, his girlfriend. Her rationalization for resenting his new relationship is that Jack should be vacationing with his kids instead of the girlfriend. Clearly Diane expected Jack to stay at his mom’s house, lonely and pining away for her.

Eventually the girlfriend will pressure Jack into filing for divorce and get re-married. Diane will survive on spousal support and her shitty part time jobs. Maybe she will find a new Jack to support her, but she has a lot of baggage and her looks have faded. Meanwhile Jack has moved on, and is taking positive steps toward living the good life.

TLDR: Former star athlete became a tired cranky fat beta provider, wife tried to branch-swing at the first sign of attention from another dude, but the new branch broke off and she landed hard.
My married red pill success
by rpthay | March 5, 2015 | Link

I thought this sub could use a good success story. I could probably write a ton about my experiences but I thought I'd put down some key things I think are important. I won't get into specifics in my post because that would just be repeated info of what's out there (feel free to ask questions though). I just want to relay that yes, it works, and yes, the better relationship you're striving for is there to achieve. Apologies for the length!

Background

My wife and I have been together as a couple for almost 9 years now and we've been married for more than 4 years. We're in our early 30s and have two kids: an almost 3 year old and an 8 month old. Our relationship was never all that bad but I felt unsatisfied and less appreciated than I felt I deserved (but that didn't change my actions of course). Around kids arriving we had dry spells for up to 6 months. Before then sex was down to once every two weeks at times and felt like duty sex more than anything. I had mostly stopped trying to initiate to avoid the pain of rejection. Since changing myself in the manner described on this sub and elsewhere I'm happier, my wife is happier, and our sex life is better than it has ever been. So I went from feeling hen pecked and thirsty to having sex about every other day (which works for both of us), blow jobs often, etc. As an example, I came back from a out of town boys weekend that I had organized recently and after putting the kids to bed she started blowing me in the kitchen which lead to wild sex in the bedroom.

It's been about a year since I discovered the red pill (I've lurked for a long time but never posted until now). Leading up to discovering it, I had read an article posted on reddit about how couples who break down chores along traditional gender lines have more sex. This and a few other things had primed me for the idea that men and women aren't interchangeable and that perhaps we've lost something with the equivalency that we've been sold on. Although I didn't consider myself to have a dead bedroom, I clearly wasn't happy with our sex life and used to browse /r/deadbedrooms out of curiosity. Someone there posted a link to Married Man Sex Life and from there I just devoured everything I could find on the topic.

Reading

I want to take time here to reiterate the importance of reading the sidebar material. My impression is that, while support is valuable and questions provide content for others, many people would benefit from simply seeking out the answers to their questions. It's all there. Here is a list of some of what I've read and found useful:

- The Rational Male: Rollo is probably the most comprehensive and deep thinker on these topics. Take the time to read and absorb what's in this book (and his blog) and 99% of your questions will be answered.
- Married Man Sex Life Primer: Incredibly useful resource for anyone that's married. Don't bother with the blog or forum, it really has unfortunately become a feminized space.
• When I Say No I Feel Guilty
• The Sex God Method: For when your efforts have begun to pay off
• The Way of Men by Jack Donovan (and I enjoyed his collection of essays, A Sky Without Eagles): Read this book! This book is the best description of masculinity that I've ever come across. Your wife wants to be married to a man, and as Jack writes, manhood is determined by your peers in groups of men. It's important to find a group of men that you can spend time with and get out of the house with. During my journey of change, I also befriended a coworker who became my lifting partner (he also had coincidentally swallowed the red pill around the same time as me). I now consider him to be my best friend and I gain an incredible amount from interacting him. We make each other better.

Lifting

It's been repeated before but it can't be said enough. Since swallowing the red pill, I've gone from someone that looks like this:

Before

to this:

After

Which physique do you think my wife gets wet for? I saw a noticeable difference in my wife's behavior once I reached a certain level of leanness. Not only that, she's taken it upon herself to begin to get in shape herself and lose what she's accumulated throughout our relationship. This is something I know she's wanted for a long time but never had the strength to do. She looks better than she has in years and is still going. On top of my wife clearly being more physically attracted to me, I get more attention from random women and noticeably more respect and regard from people in general. If you're going to be a man, you have to look like one. It takes a time and hard work but you can do it. Educate yourself and act.

Random lessons I've learned

• It's going to be a bumpy road. You'll make mistakes. She'll cry sometimes due to your successes and your failures. But it gets better bit by bit because you get better.
• You're giving her what she wants. This was something I told myself at the beginning. Ultimately, the hope was being more assertive, practicing and internalizing the things written about in this sub and elsewhere, etc. would lead to a better relationship for both of us. And it has! She smiles more, seems more relaxed, and I feel much more in control of my life.
• Embrace the contradiction of improving your relationship by being less committed to it. I'm at the point now where I could get divorced tomorrow and truly be very happy. I think my wife is aware of this. At the same time, I've never been more content and engaged in our relationship. I used to joke about how if my wife ever left me I'd be screwed because I was hopeless with women. How repulsive! And what an insult to her! At some point along the way she threw me a comfort test about how it seemed like I believed women were always replaceable. I told her "You should be happy with that! It means I choose to be with you rather simply being with you because I see no other choice." We were banging 20 minutes later.

- She's driven endlessly to seek security, but it's not your job to give it to her. I'm sure my wife is less secure in our relationship than she used to be. But that's because I used to give the impression that nothing could ever make me consider leaving. Unconditional security does not lead to happiness.

- Kids/babies are cockblocks. Oxytocin floods women when dealing with babies and breastfeeding. It's a very lovey-dovey feeling and not arousing in the least (my wife and I have spoken about this). If you have young kids, understand that things will be harder. That just means you have to be mindful of being clear that you are a sexual being and you expect a sexual relationship (with your actions!). Also, be aware that newborns can easily create a situation where she needs help, you want to help, she's stressed, and you fall into a routine of being a servant. By all means, help, but don't let any disrespect go by unchallenged. Ultimately my wife became calmer and less stressed when I adopted this mentality (big difference from the first kid to the 2nd).

- Make male friends. I want to repeat this point because I don't see it stressed elsewhere and I think it's important. Men are meant to be part of a male hierarchy, to have peers, a gang. If you don't have this, it's important that you try to acquire it. It gives you an environment to reclaim your masculinity, and it gives you an outlet to have a life separate from your family. This is invaluable. Women, I think, will naturally want to be the center of your world. It's important to resist this if you feel her pulling that way. I think we've lost something by not valuing male friendships and spaces like we used to.

Conclusions

I've rambled on long enough. I hope this post will be of use to people. I've gotten a lot out of the red pill community as a lurker. My relationship isn't perfect. It never will be. But it's better than it's ever been and only going to get better.
Halo Effect and Applying MRP
by ishouldhaveacigar | June 23, 2018 | Link

Lifting: 6’ 187 10% BF lean Some CrossFit SS 3X5 Squat 300 Bench 205 Deadlift 345

The tendency to like (or dislike) everything about a person—including things you have not observed—is known as the halo effect*

Kahneman, Daniel. Thinking, Fast and Slow

This book is one of the best books I’ve read. I believe it’s somewhere in the sidebar over in RP. It is loaded with an enormous amount of information, yet worth the read. I’m a behavioral therapist and I had previously read this book. However, the lessons I got from this book took on new applications once I started applying MRP. Halo Effect is a human bias phenomenon. It can work in my favor or it can be a disadvantage for me. My body of work and the principles I apply in my life can be used to increase my value.

I smoke cigars. I smoked cigars when my wife and I started dating 11 years ago. She wasn’t fond of the smell, yet she like me enough to overlook the smell of cigar smoke on my face or on my clothes. At that time I possessed a certain amount of alpha qualities (albeit raw alpha qualities) which greatly contributed her attraction to me.

This is essentially Halo Effect. Her initial interest and attraction to me set the tone for how she would perceive other behaviors with which she would subsequently encounter. Halo Effect is “a common bias that plays a large role in shaping our view of people and situations” and “increases the weight of first impressions, sometimes to the point that subsequent information is mostly wasted” (Kahneman). Two important observations to note here are 1) she had just recently quit smoking cigarettes and 2) before we dated, she did not like cigar smoke. These are two notable factors to her aversion to cigar smoke. However, the tendency to like or dislike everything about a person can be a strong bias. Therefore, it makes sense that she was more than willing to overlook the occasional cigar smoke in order to get into my pants. I was working hard and going to school, which was a high value body of work at that time.

In short, she perceives: He’s attractive to me, he has potential and is actively reaching it. The good outweighs the bad, so I can deal with the cigar smoke.

Fast forward a few years. We are married, my alpha qualities have already begun to diminish, and my slippery slope into becoming blue pill began. It started with comments and inquiries about me smoking cigars. She would ask “did you smoke a cigar today?”, even when it was clear that I have. I started to notice her subtly move away from my face when we would make out or during sex. This eventually become more overt with her, asking me to wash my face and/or brush my teeth before getting intimate. I would occasionally wash my face and/or brush my teeth without needing to be asked, yet I was inconsistent with it (low value). Eventually, It was evident that she really did not like the smell of cigar on me and I began to respond by being overly apologetic (more low value). I started to be mindful of when I would smoke and rarely smoked when I knew there was a chance for making out and/or sex. I thought I was being a nice guy and, well, I was; I just thought I was killing it. I smoked less and if I happened to smoke, I would thoroughly wash my face and brush my teeth, mostly out of anxiety about how she was going to respond. Especially if I knew she was in a bad mood or I had pissed her off (low value again). This is Halo Effect happening again within the context of me not having a high value body of work at that time.

In short, she perceives: He’s doing a lot of unattractive things, he once showed potential and now he is regressing. The good and bad balance is way off, and by the way, I fucking hate cigars.

Fast forward several years and becoming quite blue pill, then swallowing the red pill and applying MRP for a while, I realized something. My wife wasn’t complaining about the smell of cigar smoke on me. Not only that, but she often encourages me to go relax and smoke a cigar. She will often sit with me while I smoke and if a cloud of smoke blows passed her face and I say, “Oops. We can swap places so the smoke doesn’t go by you”, she will say, “No. It’s fine”, all while gazing into my eyes with that look that says, “You can do whatever you want to me”. This is Halo Effect happening again within the context of me having a very high value body of work at this time.

In short, she perceives: He’s more attractive than ever, has gone above and beyond what I ever expected. The good outweighs the bad by a shit ton, and I love the way he smells when he smokes a cigar!

She did not just acquire a smell for cigar smoke. She certainly didn’t just simply start tolerating it. This would discredit the hard work I’ve done. Something significant took place, and it changed how she responds to the smell of cigar smoke...at least on me. I can think of numerous examples of this in my transformation. I recently arrived to this understanding when working with a client. I have begun to specialize in working with men in LTRs and, although I don’t call myself a Red Pill therapist, I have been implementing many of the philosophies applied here, albeit within an ethical context (gotta keep my license). I have a client who stopped fishing (one of his favorite pastimes) because his wife didn’t like him being away from home and didn’t like the smell of fish. Clients and I typically discuss frame a great deal, as well as walking their own path, among other things, such as learning how to respond to their SO’s femininity with masculinity, in healthy, creative ways. I introduced to concept of Halo Effect to this client and he has since started fishing again. He was surprised about how well she responded. I pointed out to him that much of her desirable response to this was due to his body of work and how he can recognize Halo Effect.

It is beneficial for me to consider hobbies and interests I have deviated from because she doesn’t like it. One might think that they need to wait until their body of work increases in value, but this thinking is flawed. Value is clearly an important aspect of the work here.
Believing my value is low actually creates lower value. Not understanding my value is low value. Understanding what my value is can improve it. After this, increasing my value consists of the positive behavior modification I implement. If I wait until I believe my body of work has enough value, before I reengage in those hobbies and interests she hates, I am, by default, believing I have low value, which is counterproductive to increasing my value. I simply need to reengage in those hobbies and interests in order to display that I value myself enough to do so.

Behaving this way will show value, which is attractive. Consistency is as equally important as the display of this type of behavior. It is also imperative that I understand my body of work as it improves. Halo Effect can benefit me or it can work against me. My body of work can increase my value. Therefore, the stronger the body of work, the more conducive the Halo Effect will be for me. Don't go Rambo, right?
The Mods don't care about you
by SorcererKing | November 16, 2018 | Link

I think I speak for the whole mod team when I say: we care about you so much that we don't care about you at all.

Huh?

We obviously care about all of you, in some distant abstract way, or we wouldn't post to this sub, and we certainly wouldn't moderate it. We care enough to read your problems and comment on them, to call you a faggot when you are one, and to provide a set of tools for your success. We take pride in good field reports where guys have put the pieces together and rebuilt themselves.

What we don't care about is your goddamn opinion. We don't care that you're butthurt. We don't care that you're angry. We don't care about your objections to RP, your morals, your feelz. Our caring is an overt contract: we care enough to give you this sub. We don't owe you an explanation if we ban you, we don't owe you an apology if we decide to unban you.

Does that make us dicks? Maybe. One thing it does do is keep this sub tight and useful. So if you don't like it, you have two options: hit the unsub button and piss off, or mouth off and get banned. As always, the choice is yours.
She doesn’t love you like that.

by TrainingTheBrain | December 30, 2015 | Link

How long before you accept that your wife does not love you the same way you love her? She loves you opportunistically, we’ve all read (or should have) the articles on RM, IM, & TRPR on this exact topic. Stop trying to use your masculine reasoning and logic to hamster a conclusion that creates your own little fantasy where your woman is somehow different.

She is a woman and loves you the way a woman loves anything, based on what it does for her & how it makes her feel. As a man it is your job to find your own sense of joy and happiness with this reality. She doesn’t love you the way Disney said she would, so fucking what you’re still a fucking man and the way she loves you makes no difference to the manner in which you are seizing each and every day. So long as you are her king and are filling the role of her masculine Family Alpha then you will be getting the ‘love’ you want from her. She can’t help herself, she is attracted to masculinity and will do whatever is necessary to keep that high value male (you) in her life.

As a married man you need to understand that your wife is going to constantly be testing you to see if you’re worthy of her love, sex, and commitment. If you are acting like a fucking man child, then she is just going to find a man who doesn’t. A lot of the issues that men are facing and recently posting about are entirely preventable if unspoken actions were taken and the masculine path was chosen.

The realization that your wife is like every other wife often leads to guys resenting their woman. They get mad at her for being attracted to fit men, they loathe her solipsistic nature, and the rage of her hypergamous nature bleeds through many a post that have been put up on this forum.

Women are the way they are, fucking deal with it in a masculine manner. Resenting your woman turns down the frequency of sex and interaction between you two, which leads to a shift in roles. You guys stop fucking, start arguing, and then launch attacks at one another. This leads to walking on eggshells and you become more like roommates than a married couple. Another side effect is that the husband is taking action to prove to his woman that he is her Alpha and that he is a ‘real’ Man, so he runs to her for her approval of all the actions he is taking. This puts her into the motherly role as she now has to say, Good job little buddy, I’m so glad you went to the gym/did something.

Below are a few ways to keep her from falling into the role of being your mother/roommate.

• here are 10 ways to keep her FEELING

• here is your reminder to chill the fuck out

• a post on getting out of the routine (predictable) loop
• Don't forget to enjoy the ride

You need to realize that being a masculine man comes with little thanks and recognition. You won’t get praised and you shouldn’t want it. What you will get is a family that is functioning on a healthy level where everyone is filling the roles they were biologically programmed to fill. Everything will improve, from your personal joy with your wife and kids, your sex life, the personal growth of each family member, etc. When you do your job right nobody will know it yet everyone will be happy.

It’s ok that she doesn’t love you the way you love her. If she did, it means ‘she’ has a penis.
Welcome to the Red Arena. Glad you are here, it has a nice view. I mean, it’s just a fucking field, but it offers a certain perspective. See that road down the hill. You know it well; you’ve been traveling it for some time now.

All those people walk that road because they feel it’s easy to travel. It’s got signs and tolls and watchful eyes to make sure everyone follows the rules. So, at surface level, it does appear easy. But it takes more than it gives. Which is why you are here,

Now I see you brought a sword and shield. Awesome. Because up here, something wicked this way comes. Those watchful eyes saw you crawl up here. So they geared up ready to test your resolve.

You will face a strong and independent army, battle worn and ready to rape and pillage your dumb ass for showing up in this arena. For even considering to go against their will, any attempt to change your weak behavior will be met with brutal systematic attacks. And for being so weak, this is your burden to shoulder, because I’m here to tell you -

Everything has a price.

And what you’ve historically paid doesn’t make you anything but a fool. You are not a victim and you aren’t a hero returning home. You are not a champion for what you’ve sacrificed. You will never be a king. Empires yet to rise will not whisper your name in awe. They will never know you even existed.

And for that you are free. Today, right now, right here. Free to fight. Free to fail.

Do you hear them? Those war drums signal their approach. The ground shakes. The pounding of earth as hundreds of thousands of heels stomp in unison with a single intent to demoralize you. Those roars they give; an early celebration to your impending demise. See, they want you to submit without ever lifting a hand. Because that’s what you’ve done. Your act of submission is all that you have given this world!

Until this day.

So stand against the tide! Their rank and file approach! Your enemy is upon you; staring straight down and keenly through! The old you will die so end your miserable existence with stiff spine and a pair of balls between your pathetic legs!

Ready your sword; here comes your mortal enemies - an all girl marching band! AAAA-HAHAHAHA! It’s just a bunch of teenage girls with flutes and shit! Ahahaha. The look on your face! Oh, Jesus on a lake. I thought you were going to shit yourself.

You’re such a fucking pussy...Holy fuck! Is that sword real? Put that down. Why the fuck did you bring a real sword; you are going to hurt someone. TheRedPill said you were fighting evil? Don’t be a faggot. They’re just bratty little girls. Never mind which one I mean.

Look, pay attention, you are here to battle your fears. Not women. Not your wife. She’s in that marching band somewhere. Mine is in there too. She’s in there because she’s a unique snow flake...but all of them FEEL they are.

Which brings me to my point - every damn woman on that field thinks she is a unique little snow flake. ALL of them. And all of them have turned their nose up at 80 percent of us men. Soon you will be part of the 20 percent. So fuck petrichor. Fuck geosmin. From my perspective, I smell a blizzard approaching. A pussy blizzard!

Leave the weapons and leave your anger behind. Understand the benefits of abundance mentality. Failure is growth. You were a loser. Here your failure pays you. Every rep gives you knowledge. Perspective. MASCULINITY.

Lift. Work to failure. Work for you.
TLDR - Your wife is not the enemy because you are not a victim. Winter is Cuming.
TL;DR This shit works.

It's been over a month since we went because the counselor was on vacation.

I lurked here for a while before that, but when I opened my account here, (a month ago) I also got My Fitness Pal and started logging what I eat - I'm down 20 lbs and almost half way to my target weight now. (I'd lost a little already before I started lifting.)

Then I started going to the gym 3 mornings per week. The gym at my apartment complex has no free weights but I use the machines and have been logging and increasing as I go. Then I started doing cardio 5 days a week.

I've never been much of an athletic type before MRP but wow, the improvement in ALL areas of my life is astounding.

I also did a ton of sidebar reading. Dread.

I posted a couple times and got called on my shit. Anger phase fading now. Why get mad at a woman for acting like a woman when I wouldn't get mad at a dog for barking?

So anyway we go to counselor and I have nothing to say. Wife talks about how well we've been getting on etc. The two of them talk about girl shit while I can hardly pay attention. Then the counselor says "I don't see anything else we need to work on here. There is no more tension between you two."

I don't need a pat on the back. I don't give a fuck. I just want more - a way more better me. I still got a long way to go. It'll never end. I know that.

But for any chumps reading and thinking to themselves "does this shit work?"

My answer is hell yeah. Gimme dat.
I’m leaving town tomorrow, so I figured I’d post week 8 a day early: Your social life.

The most important trait a married man can cultivate – even more important than appearance, wealth, or status – is social aptitude. Why? Because a man who is socially apt is a man who has the skills to become (and remain) successful and attain status – and a wife attached to that success and status benefits. Socially apt men are liked, admired, hired, promoted, and laid. And your wife knows it, or at least her subconscious knows it. The absolute worst situation you can be in as a married man is to have no friends and/or professional connections (or worse, to be socially awkward and have your joint social circle dislike you or think you’re strange) and for your wife to know it.

Many married men nearly entirely lack social lives, apart from their wives and children. This is completely understandable. They spend all day working, all of their free time being fathers to their child(ren), and any last remaining moments trying to steal a few minutes of time with their wives. Any time spent out with guy friends or out learning a new skill or partaking in a hobby is time away from their families, and for most men, time their wives are going to bitch at them about, to the point where for many men, maintaining an active social life outside of the home just isn’t worth the hassle and the bitching. Because when your happiness is tied to your wife’s happiness and she’s being a bitch about something you’re doing for yourself, it’s hard to have fun and enjoy that thing.

However, if you find that you live in a universe where your happiness is tied to your wife’s, you’re in a bad place. She is the most important person in your universe. Your life revolves around speaking and acting a manner designed to make her happy, and in doing so, you are happy, too. If this is how you feel valuable, then you depend on your wife for value. You are her dependent. Like a child. She validates you by acting happy when you behave a certain way. Like a mommy does to reward a child. You think you’re being an excellent husband by doting on her and doing things to cause her to act happy, yet as the days pass, she fucks you less and berates you more, and grows more annoyed with you for no apparent reason, until it finally blows up as a divorce, affair, or just a big-ass fight. Because you’re too damn needy and it’s suffocating her. You need to get a life! That same life she bitched and nagged you into giving up in the first place.

Men in this position often try harder to do more for their wives. They work hard at their jobs and make a lot of money. At that point, they’ve elevated themselves from a mere dependent to a dependent and an ATM. Many men throw themselves into the role of being an active father, ever-present in their children’s lives. So now they’re a dependent and a nanny. Many will do the housework, cooking, cleaning, and laundry to help ease their wives’ burdens. So they’re a dependent and a maid. Many will grunt with pride as they do the repair work around the house. So now they’re a dependent and a handyman.

By doubling down and doing more for your wife, you’re just tied to her even more tightly. You’re not just your wife’s dependent. You’re also her tool. An accessory in her life.

www.TheRedArchive.com
Something she can use to get various types of tasks done more easily. You think you’re being an excellent husband by doing all of this, yet as the days pass, she rejects your advances every night, finds fault in everything you do, belittles you, minimizes your efforts, and takes you for granted. She even complains about how hard she has it and how unfair her life is because she does too much around here and you do too little.

A dependent, tool of a man who tries to sprinkle a little Red Pill on top of his shitty life just becomes a dependent tool that lifts weights and dresses better. In your wife’s eyes, now you’re not only a child and a tool, but also a narcissistic ass who’s obsessed with his appearance and going through a midlife crisis. A scoop of frozen shit with Red Pill sprinkles on top doesn’t taste like chocolate.

A strong social life is key. When you leave the home and develop a social life of your own, you meet people and come to know them, and they come to know you, like you, and value you. When other people like you, want to hang out with you, possibly want to fuck you if female, and think good things about you, and you actually have an effect in the world around you, only then, in your wife’s eyes, do you actually become a real person. Before that point, you’re just an accessory in her life. She’s the real person, and you’re a tool she wields or a child she cares for – an extension of her. But when you have a social life outside of her, that means you go on existing even if she vanishes. You’re real.

Women are social creatures, so having a social life of your own is what makes you independently valuable in her eyes. Before then, you’re just one more thing she needs to care for, maintain, and keep track of. You’re mooching off of her value. This is where that feminist “emotional labor” bullshit comes into play. Making a man who doesn’t have a well-developed social life feel like he’s worth a shit is hard work for a woman – because in her eyes, he’s not worth a shit. She’s essentially coddling a child’s self-esteem when she acts pleasant toward a loser man like that.

1- Baseline

First off, a lot of you guys probably aren’t socially extroverted guys by nature. You spend your spare time on Reddit, reading and posting on a forum about relationships. That’s not the hobby of a social dynamo. You’re probably smart and educated and kind of nerdy with a nerdy, introverted job. Not all of you, I know, but enough of you that I should start with #1 here. If you want to have a social life, you need to get comfortable talking to people and realize how little it matters if you end up looking awkward or stupid. So drive to a Starbucks across town or something, or maybe walk around various stores in the mall in some other part of the city, and just chat with people. Strangers. It doesn’t matter, because you’re not going to see any of them again. You’re not trying to make friends. Just spend 10-30 seconds per person randomly trying to talk to people. Maybe it goes stupidly, but you’ll never see them again. Eventually, you find your rhythm, get used to the task, and realize how little it matters if something goes awkwardly. Get comfortable in your skin and learn to be social through trial and error.

2- Professional

It’s very common for guys to begin their social lives at work. You’re there 8+ hours a day, with the same people. This is actually a mistake. Rarely do you want to mix your social life with your professional life. And everyone, your wife included, knows that work friends aren’t “real” friends. If the only friends you have are the people you work with, nobody considers that a real social life. You don’t get much social credit for hanging out with your officemates in your spare time. That doesn’t mean you shouldn’t grab the occasional beer with your coworkers after work and make small talk by the water cooler – that’s practically obligatory to keep things running smoothly in an office setting. But rather than dedicating significant time toward trying to forge friendships and spend outside-the-office time with your coworkers, focus on relationships with other groups of people. You already have relationships with your coworkers forced upon you 8+ hours a day, so getting to know and developing relationships with a new group of people is a better use of your other time.

Exception: Professional networking functions are a great way to meet people that you have things in common with -- from other workplaces, not your own. If you hit it off with some guys or girls at a professional function, keep in touch. Just don’t be overly friendly/social or try to become a personal friend if it’s clear that the other person is primarily interested in just a professional contact.

Exception #2: Once you leave a place of work and take a new job, you definitely want to keep in touch with any former coworker that can be useful to you (or that you can help out) in the future. That’s just good networking. And now that you and your former coworkers aren’t together 8 hours a day by requirement, you can become actual friends if you like any of them. And be sure to give as much as you take – help other people move up, but do so honestly. Don’t recommend a friend for a position just because he’s your friend if you don’t think he can cut it. It reflects badly on you in your professional circles when you stick your neck out and the person you recommend doesn't measure up. But be the guy who knows people and can recommend and introduce people to each other. You want your bros to owe you favors and you want to be the guy people contact for advice, help, or positive introductions/recommendations.

3- Homefront

One of the most important places you need to be social is your neighborhood. Your wife’s friends are going to be there. Your kids’ friends are going to be there. You’re going to see a lot of the same people at the neighborhood pool and at every school function, all the little girls are going to do dance and gymnastics at the same little dance schools, all the little boys are going to play T-ball and soccer and football in the same leagues on the same fields, neighbors will throw block parties and Christmas parties and Halloween parties, etc. If you show up at the PTA talent show, or opening day at T-ball, or a Christmas party down the block, and nobody says hi to you and you don’t talk to anybody and you barely know anybody there, your wife will think you’re a piece of shit loser. Conversely, if you show up and people greet you, you know everybody, you introduce her to 20 people and she hits it off with their wives and starts scheduling playdates for your kid(s), while watching out of the corner of her eye as the slightly hotter housewife from two streets over is giggling at whatever she’s talking about with you – you’re getting laid once the child(ren) are in bed.

Becoming “the man” in your neighborhood doesn’t happen on its own. You have to take initiative rather than hoping to get invited to random shit. Invitations come after you've established yourself. Start small – invite your next door neighbors on both sides over for beers and football or a UFC fight, or whatever's going on, and just chat, eat chili, or whatever you do. Start a guys’ poker night every other week – poker night is such a quintessential guy thing that ABC's Desperate Housewives had to steal it and make it into a girl thing, because girls can totally be friends, too, right? Odds are that your neighbors already do the poker thing, but they just never thought to invite you and might if you bring it up. Or maybe they don’t have a neighborhood poker group and are dying for something to do, so start your own. Get yourself on the neighborhood radar.

Any time you have to move shit or assemble shit (usually big-ass backyard children shit) or build something around the house or do a major project like staining your deck or putting shelving up in your garage, you look like a badass when you can call some guy friends, drink beers in the back yard, small talk, and get your shit done in half the time. Plus, at least one of the guys you know will know how to do something better than you. How often have you had the occasion to assemble a playscape, swingset, or trampoline? Probably not often. Those are strange, very situational tasks. But one of your neighbors probably built the same thing for his kid just last month and would be a great help building yours. Next time around, you can be that knowledgeable neighbor for someone else. A guy who summons his bros, drinks beers, talks football, and gets his kid’s swingset built in a day with his friends looks like a badass to his wife. A guy who has to hire a handyman or call his dad or father-in-law to help looks like a loser.

Parties don’t need to be super-planned. If the weather’s nice and you’re out on your driveway, kids are running around into and out of each other’s yards and garages, and other neighbors come out to watch their kids, don’t be a stranger. A cooler of beer and a portable speaker later, and you have an impromptu block party.

Ultimately, you do you when making friends. Are you good at grilling and own a big yard with enough shade? Have barbeques. Good at regular cooking? Have people over for dinner. A gym buff? Start a running group or a kettle bell morning workout if you can get some neighbors to show up. Volunteer to coach your kid’s soccer or T-ball team, show up at all of your neighborhood community events, and just meet people. And actually remember them – nothing pisses people off more than you meeting them for the first time, again, a month later, when they remember you. If you have something in common or a reason to follow up with them later, get their number and actually keep in touch – schedule a poker night, a playdate with your kids, a trip to that local restaurant with a playscape, send them your trainer friend’s number, whatever.

4- Hobbies

Besides work and home, the only other place a married guy is going to have time to meet people and forge a social life is those extracurricular hobbies we constantly urge men to make time for. It is absolutely critical that you have hobbies that take you outside of the house. Obviously, you need to be home enough to get your shit done, spend time with your family, and lead your household, but TV with the wife every night? Fuck that noise. Your activities are every bit as real and important as your kid’s shit. Why the hell is a kid’s softball practice more important than your grown-up meeting? Your wife will try to get you to skip these things and nag you about them. Do not fight, rationalize, or explain yourself to her. Simply say, “Thursday nights are [judo/beer making/bible study/drag racing/cooking/whatever the fuck you do].” Nothing more. The conversation is over after saying that. Sometimes, your wife will follow up with, “So you’d rather [X] than be with your family?”. You simply repeat yourself, “Thursday nights are [X].”

These outings are a great place to meet people with common interests, add their numbers to your phone, and have people to hang with in your spare time, but more important than any of that is the fact that you’re gone. Your wife isn’t there, she doesn’t know exactly what you’re doing or who you’re with. You just leave and come back later. Her subconscious will do the work for you. You don’t have to say anything, nor should you. She’ll ask, “So how was [X]?” or “What did you do at [X]?” to which you reply “Fine” or “Uh…we did [X]”, the proceed to escalate toward sex.

5- Extra Credit

It doesn’t hurt to be social at the gym, too, or when you’re out running errands, or when you’re out at functions with your kid, but that’s not really social time, so keep it to a minimum. That’s supposed to be workout time or family time or getting shit done time. You dread the living fuck out of your wife when you go to your kid’s softball game, and you already know people there and the women all make chit chat with you of their own accord. It’s a lot more artificial if you’re there, with your wife, trying to meet and get to know new people in front of her instead of paying attention to her or watching your kid play – that’s essentially ignoring your family to go talk to strangers. It’s okay to show off your social aptitude a little bit when you’re out, but being so socially successful that you don’t have to sacrifice family time because you already have all the friends you need is a much better route.

6- Her Friends

One final point that bears mentioning: It’s totally cool to be joint-friends with other couples or with people in your neighborhood who like both you and your wife. You definitely want those people to like you as much or more than they like your wife (because your wife’s friends constantly talking you up = sex). But that’s extra credit. You need to have a social life independent of your wife’s social life. Otherwise, she’ll feel like you’re just mooching off of her friends and have none of your own. Your wife considers your joint couple-friends to be her friends, not yours. Even though she’s going to mooch of yours and get in good with their wives and think nothing of it.

In summary, a social life, independent from your wife, is absolutely critical. If you don’t have a social life, you’re not a real person in her eyes. You’re just an extension of her – a dependent she cares for and validates, or a tool she uses to get things done. She’s the real person, and you’re her accessory. Conversely, if you’re the social dynamo and she hangs on your arm, she becomes your accessory. And loves it.
Practicing Frame Control for Dummies
by bogeyd6 | March 9, 2016 | Link

Practicing Frame Control

This post is about Frame Control, not building a Frame. When we talk about holding/maintaining Frame we are talking about maintaining mental acuity and awareness within yourself and focusing on the items that are important to you. One of the more redpillsciencey articles you can read is located at http://www.returnofkings.com/29943/the-essence-of-frame-control and is a more metaphysical approach. I prefer a more direct easy to understand approach. One of the best I have found is:

"This is your party, homeboy, you're in charge of the direction. You are above her, she is beneath you; she is lucky to be out with you. You keep things moving in the direction that you want. Tease her if she gets bratty; tease her if she doesn't, always with a smile, always having fun. Don't lose your sense of authority, don't question yourself. Think of Frame Control as the ultimate display of overt confidence." from /u/LastRevision

Let's face it. Once the time comes to "maintain frame" its often in the heat of the moment and shit just got real very quickly. This might be the worst time ever to try and maintain frame. The more intelligent beginner will realize its time to STFU and leave. Frame control needn't be this hard. You can practice it on your terms. Lay the trap, set the wire, and bait the hook. All under your conditions. As you begin to adjust to realizing what is happening around you. Once your mental awareness gets sharper maintaining frame is just something you do.

The married man's frame is more than just control. It's building a life people want to be part of. For sake of brevity take a look at some of these practice runs and see if you can start working on maintaining your frame.

Poking the Bear

Aluded to from an earlier post by /u/stonepimpletists wherein we "poke the bear" to get a reaction. The setup is simple. Perform a lesser pet peave of your wife and let her get pissed. Then tease her about it with good humor and A&A. Have fun, and when she goes off the deep end don't follow her. An example would be to unload the dish washer and when she is in the kitchen with you, put in a dirty cup. When she flips her wig and asks why you put a dirty cup in the clean load. Just give her a playful smile and a chuckle. When she flings the door open and checks. Time to game her with a hip pull, laugh, and a quirky smile. "You think I would let my wife handle clean dishes? Not on my watch!".

ProTip: I have used this so much, my wife just starts laughing at me and says "I am onto you by now mister". Yet she still plays along for the fun of it.

The Careless Planner
This one is best done on errands day. Make a plan of all the errands you need to get done without her. Don't tell her the plan. When she insists you need to make a list or whatever you guys do, refuse and tell her you are going to handle it. When she snips at you, laugh it off with A&A or AM. Ask her about the next stop and then do what you planned. The key is that your plan should be working well. At the end of the trip let her in on the secret that you had a plan all along. You must pull it off with humor such as "Wow baby you seem frustrated! wink, I had this planned since last week, big smile".

ProTip: Whoa is the man who has the fucked up plan, then you will be practicing frame control on her terms ;)

The ol' Surly Sailor ( a nod to stone )

Come home in a snippy in a mood. When she starts calling you out on it, start A&A on every single jab she throws at you. When she moves in for the kill, pick her up and swing her around with a kiss. Then liven up the mood with an announcement of something exciting for her or yourself. Double extra bonus points if you can carry her up the stairs to the bedroom!

The Morgan Freeman

When she is mad at you start narrating out her actions or thoughts in a silly or playful voice. I do a good Morgan Freeman and it drives her nuts. As she is huffing or puffing around the house, slamming cupboards, and the like, I call it out as if I am narrating a nature documentary. If you go too far and you get the silent treatment that is the golden window. "The mother lion has resorted to silence to attract her mate. She knows it's success and often uses this ploy to arouse the male".

Cold as Ice

When you come in from the outside and your hands are basically frozen solid. Come up from behind her and run your hands up her back inside her shirt. Illiciting hoots and hollers. She is gonna be pissed and go off on you. A&A the results but keep trying to touch her with your cold hands. Thank her for warming up your hands and just walk away chuckling.

Fashion Mogul

On date night or going to a big event. Hopefully she isn't always late because you don't put up with that any more. When she is dressed to the nines and looking hot coming out of the bedroom. Look her right in the optical fibers and ask "Is that what you are wearing?". Prepare your jimmies because she is about to rustle them. Then when she gets all worked up, laugh, tell her she looks amazing, and walk away. This one is a double, because you also spin the hamster wheel for the rest of the evening.

There it is. Six ways you can practice frame control and if you fuck it up, the damage is minimal anyways.
I spent most of my work life driving process improvement in various organizations. For the past 30 years, that has centered around continuous improvement using lean tools and concepts. The idea of continuous improvement is ingrained in my business life and personal life. The journey may or may not get easier......but only you decide when it ends.

Lifting heavy is a foundational principal to Married Red Pill and is part of the beginning trinity of lift, STFU and read/implement. It can be the easiest, because it is all you and your discipline to the process. And let’s face it, lifting heavy weights, making process, seeing the progress and feeling better each month can be a great motivator.

I am not going to talk about heavy lifting in general. That has been covered here often and well. Here is a good overview of lifting programs by /u/bogeyd6.

What happens when injury, disease, pain, body condition and/or your doctor tells you no more heavy lifting...maybe temporary...maybe permanent.

January 2019, I found I have an ascending aortic aneurysm. The artery coming out of my heart was more than twice as large as it should be, like a balloon that could burst. No more heavy lifting until my operation in June. After that I will not be able to lift heavy for my recovery period....maybe never.

Ascending aortic aneurysm. The words from my doctor hit me like an anvil hitting the Coyote in the Warner Brothers cartoons. As I searched for lifting alternatives, I found research showing that one could get most of the benefits of a heavy weights, low reps program with lighter weights and higher reps. I could use lower weights at 15, 20, even 25 reps and still produce good gains. Not the same as lifting heavy...but gains with a program that fits my circumstances.

This is one of best articles I found on the subject as it covers a number research tests on this subject comparing low reps, heavy weight vs. high reps, lighter weights. Here is part of the conclusion:

The fact that it’s possible to gain with higher reps and lighter weights doesn’t necessarily mean that it’s a good idea to do so.

Remember, in terms of muscle growth at least, there were no discernible advantages to the light weight high rep protocols. They didn’t lead to superior gains in size or strength. But each set took twice as long to complete.

Plus, lower reps and heavier weights still win the day as far as gains in strength are concerned.

What it does mean is that the range of repetitions you can use to build...
muscle is a lot wider than previously thought.

Most studies out there show very similar gains in muscle size across a variety of rep ranges.

That gives you a lot more choice about the type of training you do.

We aren’t alone in being forced to change our workouts. Forget the 710-lb. deadlifts and 470-lb. back squats — workouts look a little different for Arnold Schwarzenegger these days.

Squatting and all those kind of like heavy leg exercises, I can’t do anymore. My knees are shot. I have to protect my knees because I want to go skiing.

The machines that you have today, I wish that I could have used them in addition to what I did, because they’re really amazing. A guy like myself who had shoulder surgery, hip surgery, knee surgery — they can always find an exercise around the injury that I could do.

So I cannot do dumbbell lateral raises anymore, but I can go and find the machine that does exactly the same thing and I have no pain.”

Arnold’s version of continuous improvement.

I am currently working the SL5x5 plan, but doing 5 sets of 15-20 reps. Basically, I am changing 5x5 to 5x20. I may not be setting 1 rep max personal records, but with the circumstances I have today, I am getting stronger, looking better, feeling better. My plan has changed. I am not going to get that 5x5 225 pound bench press before June. Some of my goals are revised, but still a plan I am working on.

I am not a doctor, not an expert, not a fitness guru. Just lessons learned from 40+ years of running, lifting heavy, bodyweight fitness, HIIT routines…and now lifting lighter weight, higher reps. But you do you…follow your plan…build your life. And always check with your doctor before taking off on any new program if you have health issues.

Some of you may be thinking, hey noaarpforme, you are 62 years old, does lifting really have a benefit at that point? And if it does, will anyone notice? Does SMV apply at 60+?

Everything you read from the sidebar and Married Red Pill, Rian’s daily email, etc…it all applies at 60+. My body has changed, I like to think I am wiser, kids are grown and out of the house.

I still love sweating through a good workout, hanging out with friends, a night out on the town, passionate sex multiple times per week, a tasty keto meal, a little too much rum, rock n’ roll cranked up to 11 and the latest Avengers movie.

And yes, women still check out an average dude who is lifting, well dressed, confident and has a bit of game.
OK, the iron is calling and those weights won't lift themselves.......

PS. Deep appreciation to all the regular contributors on Married Red Pill and AskMRP. I learn from you guys every week. Continuous improvement; the journey never ends. Rock On!
The Useful Parts of a ButtHurt Episode
by bogeyd6 | January 9, 2017 | Link

The is an article written on the emotion of butthurt, what it is, why you have it, and more importantly how to make it work for you. The practical base emotion is weak, but the larger construct is quite complex. The distillation of the topic requires insight into your own life and how these emotions have manifested into your personality. We will use examples and attempt to build up how butthurtness became an outcome possibility, even if undesired.

ButtHurt, The Weakest Emotion

Emotions are what make people the person they are. We all have them and sometimes they do rule our lives even for brief moments of time. We have emotions such as anger and genuine fear. Those are what I consider strong emotions. These strong emotions are actually powerful motivators and will typically force you to act. Women see these strong emotions and are thus moved by them as well in powerful ways. When she sees her man is rightly angry and she is hoping its not directed at her. She will often act in congress with your actions to attempt to solve the problem. These emotions generally come from a strong frame and a base of right and wrong. Generally they also come from external places, sometimes internal, and in whole are generally good and if not well received then at least well regarded.

The example emotions we consider weak for a man is pointless crying and the act of being butthurt. For instance, there was a post that was deleted in /r/askmrp where the guy get's mad at his wife's suggestion and spends twenty minutes crying actual tears in a locked bathroom alone. This is what I consider a feminine action and when viewed with a masculine lens shows weakness. Women do not like weakness. They abhor it. Crying and bitching to your wife is only going to be met with absolute disregard to your "feelz" and another notch taken down in the ol' SMV scale. That is a double standard, no doubt, and it plays out everyday.

Butthurt to me is simply described as an irrational angry response to a perceived insult or not getting your way. Then you compound the issue by acting out passively aggressively, aggressively, or a withdrawal from communication with your wife. These actions are done from a weak frame. Typical reactions we see are the wife offers a hard no and then men come onto the forum and cry/whine about getting the no.

Why Are You Having a Tushy Tantrum?

There are several major talking points here.

- Outcome Indepence (OI)
- Abundance Mentality
- Game
- Covert Contracts

Outcome Independence, as related to sex, is your number one problem of being butthurt.
When the yes/no doesn't really matter to you on a personal level anymore. That is when you now have the power. Think about it, the one who needs it the least has the most. You are supposed to have other things to do and sex is just one stop on the way to where you are going. This could be any number of things, but the fact that you only want one thing is compounding your issues and leads us into....

Abundance Mentality, as related to sex, is the cause of the lack of Outcome Independence. You don't know that there is other pussy out in the world that would be more than happy to drain your balls at a chance to suck your resources dry. Maybe you don't want to fuck other girls? Then don't. You at least need to know its out there. You get more confidence from lifting weights and after all the years being married to the shrew. The feeling you get from another woman being interested in you is just the next level in the game. Unfortunately, many men don't bother to go out and talk to other women for what ever kind of closing they are looking for. Which now leads us into....

Game, you don't have it. You also lack the body of Dwayne Johnson. That's two direct hits on your sexuality. My guess is you are probably screwing up your home life as well so now you have the trifecta of why your wife delivers hard no's. You can't attract other women and you don't have the practice to get any better at gaming your wife. You don't practice game on your wife. You practice your game on the women outside of your social circles. When you find things that work, you bring that home to use your now honed skills on your wife. You think by default your wife should fuck you because you are married. Now we are getting into....

Covert Contracts, yes indeed. We are at the bottom of the distillation process. The root cause. You are butthurt over the hard no because you have a covert contract that says my wife should fuck me because of the marriage vows. The secondary clause is you decided that since you are now half assedly trying to improve yourself. She will magically want to suck your cock.

How to Make Booty Bothered Work for You

Remember when you were a kid and you lost your first game? The other team cheered, got taken to pizza and ice cream! You however got to go back to the locker rooms and listen to all of your mistakes. Sitting there and thinking this coach is full of shit. Well, as a coach I can tell you I have seen two types of kids. The one's who get discouraged and quit. The other kids who listen to their coach and go train harder. They train harder because they want to feel like the winning team did. They took the loss and turned it into motivation.

You have this choice as well. You can focus your energy on getting the hard no's. Wallow in self pity. Come on to reddit and post about how much your life/wife sucks and how none of this is working for you. Probably not talk to your wife for a few days and withdraw your attention because that's going to show her. The weird thing is people really believe that works. You cannot withdraw your attention from someone who doesn't want it anyways.

You can also focus that energy on going back and fixing the basics. Figure out where along the line you decided to be mad because one out of 3.5 billion women wouldn't let you put your cock inside them. You can probably find the areas. My guess is anything you put a moral/physical limit on would be the first place to look.
Examples:

- I don't flirt with other women because I am married.
- I don't go to the gym because I don't have time.
- I don't keep my house running smoothly because it's her job.
- I don't think there is that much to improve around my home.
- And the big one, my life is good enough for me now.

Take your energy you get from being butthurt and put it into something you need to fix. If you read this entire article and thought it did not apply to you? I will tell you I have yet to meet the man who lifted to much, fucked too much, and had nothing else to do.

Final and closing note. Butthurt bosses always get their way, aint that so /u/FireTempered?
[Theory] How to build your road to safety by bogeyd6 | July 31, 2015 | Link

TL;DR is at the bottom.

- When you surround an army, leave an outlet free.

- Do not press a desperate foe too hard.

- Do not interfere with an army that is returning home.

-Sun Tzu

My friend and I were talking about the last 5 months of my marriage. We came to the conclusion that in 5 months I have largely turned this ship around. 15 years of marriage and in 5 months the tables are turned. This led us into a brief discussion of why my MRP worked more or less better than I would have thought. We came to no conclusions but I had thought on it.

When I started red pill in my house I decided on an equalizer. The fighting was constant and I could never do anything right. I chased after her happiness and did everything in my power to make her happy. You know how that ends. My life story was literally all about 90% lean beef and had been for several years. I handed over all leadership and control because she was a stay at home mom. This was different in the years leading up to her decision to stay home. Which, I might add, was completely hers and I had no input, just a phone call.

My relationship dynamic is no different than many of yours. Married, with children, and me being the sole beta bux in the home. She retained power, through her maneuvering, even though in reality I had all the power. I chose not to use it so she would feel relevant and happy and confident in our marriage. I was afraid to lose her, afraid of what my son would think, and in many ways chose to cling on to her the only way I had. Beta Bux. When the divorce papers were served to me, out of the blue, it broadsided me. How could she do this after all I had done for her?

Admittedly, I had more drive and motivation than the rest of you. I was a fat beta bux having slob that wore the same work suits for three years in a row. All of that sadness, and now facing the singles dating scene. Hitting the gym and fixing the diet were just things that HAD TO HAPPEN. Lifting and wardrobe weren't options, they were live or die necessities. That or no pussy for me. Which, Ironically, I wasn't having anyways. Turns out AWALT indeed. The very thing I became obsessed with was the very steps to starting red pill again. It never left, but I forced it to be quiet for her and her happiness.

With making all of these changes I knew that I could not just straight up next her because I do in fact love her. She stayed at my home during divorce proceedings in a separate room. I wanted to keep her but I wouldn't grovel at her feet anymore like I did on serving day. So I adopted the principles, read, lifted like my life depended on it.

When you surround an army, leave an outlet free.

When I begin this regulated journey down the road of MRP I chose an equalizer. Many people I read about in the beginning were playing the short game when they should have been playing the long game. Long term success relies on short term goals. She needed a way out. No matter how difficult things became for her, no matter how fast her hamster flew around that wheel, she had to have a way to come back. The answer for me was sex. The problem was solved two fold. Sex could bring me back around. Her being caveman'ed and straight up pounded would bond her to me. The kind of sex would be on my terms, but she had a road of retreat. Her sexual energy would be drained and leave her less chance to ponder what single life for her might be like.

Do not press a desperate foe too hard.

In the beginning of all this change she was desperate. I will never know what she was thinking and why she wanted a divorce, she wont tell me, and I will not ever ask. She needed something in life and she was striking out every possible way to find it. Think of a cat being thrown into a pool. So the red pill had to be Acta, non verba. I could not discuss anything with her, I just had to deal with her shit tests, improve my SMV, and be the kind of man my son could look up to. Never engaging in fights or insults. The first days were a war zone of nasty comments and snippets such as "Who are you getting all dressed up for?" and "Why do I get stuck with our son and you get to go out?". She would constantly engage me out of desperation so I didn't press anything. There was push back with A&A and AM. I did follow NMMNG and set my boundaries by not engaging and walking away. In a way all I did was pull as a means of pushing. She learned all my boundaries without ever being told what they were.

The problem was there was no sex to begin with. Instantly I had to withdraw and act like divorce was the only solution. Of course we had to interact on day to day business. She came to the conclusion that I had even stopped doing that. One night she had gotten a bit tipsy and in a momentary lapse of judgement she had sex with me. Only it wasn't the usual foreplay for 3 straight hours with 2 minutes of intercourse. This was passionate kissing her up against a wall, throwing her on the bed, and taking her from behind harder than I ever had in my life. She only had time to say to me "Wow, I wanted fucked but damn if I had known that..." and I was in the shower.

The next day she woke up and came downstairs. I was cheerful and she made me a cup of coffee while I cooked breakfast. We caught up some bills and paperwork and spent about an hour acting like real adults. Time goes on, wash, rinse, repeat, she is beginning to learn. At first she uses alcohol because then after two drinks she is magically not responsible for her behavior. Don't care. Then in the coming weeks she is actively seeking out sex with me without a drink or two. Attention and time is poured on correspondingly.

Do not interfere with an army that is returning home.
Now that you have been acting the part and playing the part. She is getting the hints, the clues, hamstering on things. You are being super sexy, super strong, and looking better than you have in a long time. She is going to be drawn to you. This is her returning home. If your golden bridge of escape is open, she will cross it. However, it has to be the golden bridge. You can't go beta up once she uses it and it was really just a trap. She crosses the bridge, she gives you the sex you dreamed of, then you need to start returning some attention and time.

She harped and nagged for hours last night. You withdrew as you know to do and have gone radio silent. You ignored her shit tests, got some bonus points because you used some AM, and finally left to go do something else in the middle of her harping at you. She hamsters on this all night long. Use it to your advantage.

When you come home, and she tries to make up by giving you mind blowing sex. The time is now "caveman her ass like it was never done before, hate fuck like you mean business". This is not the time to ask questions, get to the root of the problem, and validate her feelz^tm. Never the incident to be spoken of again. Get up and go shower while she lays there wondering if she will ever walk again. Remember, you don't give a fuck.

At the very start this was the only path that was open to her from me. Sex was the equalizer and problem solver, all in one solution. There were no other options. I was unwilling to discuss or even apologize, especially when I was dead in the wrong. There was zero contact often for days. She learned that if we had sex, I would give her time and attention again without a word even being spoken.

TL;DR

Offer your wife a real path of escape to your attention and time, she will use it. This doesn't need to be sex, but sex will solve alot of problems for you and her.
This Thread was attacked and completely eviscerated by TBP.

Long/Short, wife brought her entire family to vacation in their home and then denied the dude sex so he locked the bedroom door, jerked off, and went to sleep. Wife freaked out- not that she was locked out of the bedroom but because her man is realizing quickly that his wife provides very little value to his life except an occasional sock puppet cum dump and constant irritation.

The Blue Pill feminist Trolls absolutely freaked out at the suggestion that a man is entitled to sex from his wife.

Yes, The TBP position is that WOMEN ARE ABSOLUTELY ENTITLED TO SEX, PROVISIONING, SUPPORT, EMOTIONAL TAMPONAGE, AND EVERYTHING ELSE BUT THEY ARE NOT OBLIGATED TO DO ANYTHING. NOTHING!

Moreover, the MAN is not permitted to do ANYTHING to change his sexless life. If he lifts weights, he is leaving his wife. If he stands up to her bullshit he is being abusive. If he jerks off rather than lay there half the night crying and thinking about how he can better serve his wife later then he is a Shitlord.

And if you think anything except this then you are a RAPIST who beats his wife and doesn't understand consent.

For the record, the Married Red Pill position is that a man IS entitled to sex from his wife. Furthermore, if he isn't getting it and is being routinely denied, then it is the WIFE who is in breach of the marital obligations- wow! Who knew that women were obligated to do anything! This is groundbreaking stuff guys! We have made an important discovery!

In the case of continual sexual denial of the husband and wife's ENTITLEMENT to the other's body, MRP recommends the man pull back his material, emotional, and psychological support until the woman he is with decides to act like a wife.

To encourage this result, we employ game and Dread Game, improve to become more sexually attractive, and begin to mentally withdraw from the relationship. Ultimately, we begin getting our needs met elsewhere- preferably from a younger, tighter, and MUCH more pleasant model- and the sex denying harpy is free to go fuck her own used up golden vagina- just lock the door first cupcake and turn on a fan because your tangy smell doesn't do much for me any more.

Read that thread, guys. See the angst and discomfort. Notice how they bleat like fools and turn the man's power of commitment into "rape." That's right, anything that empowers men and attempts to limit the scope and stench of the golden uterus is RAPE and WIFE BEATING.
[removed]
I’ve been thinking quite a bit about Outcome Independence in my MRP journey so far. As I’ve analyzed this concept and applied it to the situations I encounter, I’ve found that most of my beta ways come from trying to get validation from external sources. WARNING: this is going to be a longer post so if you aren’t interested in reading those, skip over to something else. Regardless, this post is for me. If you like it, great. If you don’t, great.

Background
A very brief background about me and what brought me here: I’m a man in my lower 30s who came from a broken home (single mom who I now recognize as a shrew who drove a passive dad out of the home). I had limited positive male role models and didn’t understand what a healthy masculine man looked like. I naturally leaned towards more alpha characteristics due to success in sports. I married young to a smoking hot babe and we quickly started having kids. Her interest level in me gradually waned and I became more and more fat / beta with each year. I stumbled upon MRP from another sub and my mind has been fucking blown.

Validation from Others
I’ve come to recognize that a significant amount of the beta behavior in my life is due to seeking validation from external sources. I work extra hard so the boss will praise me. I cleanup around the house so my wife will be happy with me / have passionate sex with me. I coach my kids’ teams so that the other parents will see how good I am at sports / organization and praise me for it. On. And. On. If I were to list all of the “I do ABC so that person XYZ will validate me in some way” things I did, this post might set a new record for length.

What’s wrong with this? There is nothing inherently wrong with doing X to get Y. That’s the basis of cooperation and an organized society. However, when we base our own perception of ourselves on what others think of us, do for us, or say to us, we shift extraordinary amounts of power and control from ourselves to the other person. That is the absolute opposite of Outcome Independence. Let’s walk through some examples.

There have been times in the past where I would do something I knew my wife wanted me to do, like mop the floors. I would do that and then anxiously wait for her to get home. I would anticipate that she would see the freshly mopped floor, squeal in amazement, and then rush me into the bedroom with a dripping vagina. That... rarely worked. I have also gotten into huge fights at work when I’ve worked especially hard on a project, had it go very well, and gotten little to no recognition for it. I’ve been butthurt for days / weeks / months for not getting what I considered enough praise. Was I paid for it? Well, yes. But that wasn’t enough. I wanted / needed / craved the praise for it. I was like little Oliver Twist begging for just a bit more.

There are plenty of other examples but these will suffice for now. In each, I performed a certain action (mopping, extra work on a project) so that others would be obligated to do something in return (sex, praise) and I would then get validation (she wants me, they know I’m awesome at my job). When the chain is broken... when I do the work and don’t get the payout I want... I’m frustrated, hurt, and angry. “They” literally have the power to control my life because their responses determined my emotions. I engaged in covert contracts and effectively signed over my manhood to other people in exchange for validation.

Do you want to know the worst part? They aren’t “bad” or “wrong” if they don’t give me what I want. Maybe she didn’t think the floors were that big of a deal. Maybe she legitimately had a migraine or was about 10 seconds from throwing up. Maybe there was a perfectly valid reason why she didn’t throw herself at me exactly when I expected. My boss may have meant to congratulate me on my work but got distracted. He still paid me for that week. He may have come to expect that quality of work from me and thus didn’t feel it was necessary to call out one project in particular. Or maybe he just didn’t give a fuck. The point is that it doesn’t matter.

What really matters is that I was anxiously dancing for the hug. If I was good enough, tried enough, etc. then I would get what I wanted as a reward. I would be validated. As soon as I did that, I handed all of my ability to be a rationale, self-contained man to everyone else. I emasculated myself as surely as if I took a knife to my testicles.

Why do I do this? Because I wanted to be validated. Here’s the truth though that I’m coming to realize. Praise from others can be nice but you cannot use it to build your own self-worth. It’s like building a mansion on the sands of the beach. Eventually, you are going to have a bad time. Your self-worth must be built on you purposefully and thoughtfully setting and then reaching your own goals. You must build your self-image on earned self-respect. Everything else can be taken away. On that note, let’s look at another angle to this issue around validation.

Intentions, Actions, and Results

There are three broad categories of people in terms of what we expect from others. Those categories are loosely defined on whether we expect praise from others based on either intentions, actions, or results.

Lazy people expect validation from others due to their intentions. This is the fat fuck who announces he is going to start a workout plan and diet for New Years. He wants everyone to praise him for coming up with this ‘bold, challenging plan.’ /s The problem is that others don’t give a fuck about your intentions. Chances are good that he has announced these “intentions” to them many times over in the past. Betas in a marriage reach this point with their wives soon enough. She gets tired of his string of repeated promises. That shit gets old.

Immature people expect validation from others due to their actions. This is the fat fuck who is married to a hot wife and expects her to drip with anticipation when he comes home from the gym the first time, still a half-a-human too heavy. Great job, you went to the gym. Fat people go to the gym all the time. Want a cookie? You want to be validated on the one thing you did right, thus ignoring the 50,000 times you overate and didn’t work out over the past decade? The math doesn’t check out. Children are also like this. “I played a season of sports so I should get a championship medal.” Well, sorry Johnny but your team sucked ass and came in last. No medal for you. Life doesn’t care if you just tried. The lion doesn’t stop eating the gazelle because the gazelle tried to run away. This universe is a cold, hard place and trying isn’t enough.

Mature people receive (but don’t expect or require) recognition from others for their results. Tom Brady gets paid millions and fucks Giselle because he wins Super Bowls. Bill Gates is one of the richest men on earth because Microsoft is on nearly every computer on earth. Men like this are praised and given what they want because they won. Period. Intentions are nice, effort can be admirable, but success is irreplaceable. The icing on the cake is that these guys don’t even look to others for validation. Tom Brady has more haters than he can count (me included) and he doesn’t give a fuck. He just goes out and wins, drives his Lambo home, and bangs Gizelle.

Bring This Back to MRP
What does that mean for MRP? Don’t expect shit to change until your results are different. If you are a fat fuck, going to the gym for two weeks won’t guarantee your wife will salivate when you walk in the room. If you have been a lazy fuck at work for four years, don’t expect to get a giant bonus for working hard for three weeks. This shit takes time, as in months and years. The people in your life (who you have let down by being a beta bitch for years) probably aren’t going to care about your intentions or actions at this point. They will only see results. If that is too much for you, go back to video games and porn. However, if you are willing to put in the time, effort, and focus, then you will position yourself to have the results LATER. When that happens, other people will praise you. And it will be nice... but it won’t matter nearly as much. You will control your own self-worth.
Five things you can do right fucking now to increase your alpha and begin to tip the balance of power in your favor.

by hashtag6zer0s | December 27, 2017 | Link

1. Never ever apologize. Ever. You will fuck this up and say "I'm sorry" from time to time. Those fuckups are the actual allowable number of times you should apologize.

2. Make time each day, preferrably when you're in the house together, to do something productive just for you (e.g. I go to the garage and lift or go to the basement and clean my guns). Don't allow yourself to be disturbed while doing said activity. Make this time sacred...don't let her disrupt it (she'll try...tell her, "Not now...let's talk when I'm done here.")

3. Never let her mood dictate yours. Ever. Maintain your frame and be unshakeable. Never let her realize that her mood can sway you.

4. Adhere to the 3:2 ratio in all aspects of communication. If she sends you a text and you must respond, make it shorter than hers. For every 3 texts/emails she sends you, send her 2. And make them 1/3 shorter.

5. Always end a phone call first; You do the wrapping up and the, "well, I gotta go" shpeal, not her. And when it comes to texts or email exchanges, make your goal to never be the last one hanging. Let her be the last to email or text without you responding.
I was reading someplace that sick people visiting physicians 400 years ago were made worse not better when visiting the doctor.

Very little was known about hygiene in 17th-century England. People were not aware that disease was spread by germs which thrived on dirt. They did not think of washing their hands before eating or cleaning the streets, so diseases could spread quickly. People dreaded catching malaria, which they thought came from a poisonous gas called ‘miasma’ from sewers and cesspits. Doctors still believed the ideas of a Greek physician called Galen. He thought that the body was ruled by four humours, or fluids, which determined what your personality was and how you reacted to various diseases. The four humours were:

- Blood/Sanguine - hot: fiery personality
- Phlegm - cold: calm personality
- Yellow bile - dry: bad-tempered personality
- Black bile - moist: melancholy personality.

Opening up to your wife about anxieties is the same as applying leeches. Egalitarian relationships with women make as much sense as bleeding out an already weak person.

Reading about misguided attempts to cure illness in 1675 is no different than an unplugged man watching Dadbod try to save his marriage through therapy.
FR: Why the office girls are getting a divorce
by spexer | August 19, 2016 | Link

Disclaimer: Talked with a old friend that is a girl and this story comes from her... but even then so many red pill truth bombs were dropped.

So my friend Sarah has 2 girls in her department that are so unhappy in their marriages. one is filing for a divorce, and the other one is thinking she might.

Sarah asks what these husbands have done, as Sarah divorced after leaving a husband that beat her. Their answers really pissed her off, but when I explained the logic of it to her through my red pill lens, she was in full agreement.

Both these girls complained that their husbands are not there for them emotionally. They are not romantic. They are not bringing the love and making them feel special.

Hmm - maybe this is a MRP warning siren. Do you think this is because these men have taken the red pill, and have gone monk mode, have adopted the STFU and grin attitude and are out getting busy making friends and doing hobbies?

Nope. The opposite. Both of these ladies then said how hard their men were trying to win them back, with flowers, back rubs and so much attention they are being smothered.

Sarah called the girls out, sharing how bad her husband was, and how they are both so lucky that they have found such nice guys. Their girls admitted that she was right, and that they felt bad that they just couldnt love their nice guy husbands.

But they couldnt just love their nice guy husbands. Could they?

So both admitted they were flirting with other men. The one who wasnt yet getting a divorce wanted to find Mr. Right first - just to be sure.

And these nice guy husbands? Well of course they are to blame for all the anxiety and stress these wives are going through. THey want excitement - love - passion... and these men are not giving it to them.

Maybe a few more apologies and some chocolates will do the trick..
Welcome

If you are here, there is a good chance that you are in a Paradoxical Marriage.

The paradox here is that you are in a relationship where you believed you would be respected and sexually desired by your partner. You expected these things and they aren't happening.

You may simply be curious and wish to improve something that seems to be slipping away from you.

You may be frustrated, you may be angry, you may resent your wife, You may be numb and you feel the only way out is to leave her because it's gotta be easier not being married.

And maybe you're right. But Marriage 2.0 can be a treacherous path for some people and, honestly, you do want to be married to your wife but she seems to be far-and-away a different person than you married.

But what if I told you she wasn't different than back then and isn't even different now; what if I told you you that you are different and she is only changing to fit that container you've created.

And what if she could be the feminine and submissive woman you married who respects you and sexually desires you?

MRP vs. TRP

TRP, AKA, the "main sub" is what we (MRP) were born of. Because of this, TRP is required lurking (at the very least) in order to fully round out MRP. However, even though we are of TRP we aren't fully TRP. There is a small schism between us.

The biggest difference between MRP and TRP is that MRP is trying to preserve marriages whereas TRP is trying to eschew them completely. TRP understands our positions and realizes that the small percentage of the TRP community has made a bad choice (marriage) in the past, but recognizes that they see RP as a usable solution to getting the most out of that situation. They know the dangers of Marriage 2.0 and that is why TRP eschews marriage as an option, completely.

MRP, however, largely knows that getting married was a dumb idea, generally, most of us would say, if I could get in my DeLorean and go back in time, I'd intercept and kidnap my younger self, pose as him on the altar, ignore the queries about why I look older but am in such great shape, and tell my future wife, "I don't want to get married."

But we do not long for ideal situations and we accept what cannot be changed.

The Possibly Inevitable

Divorce is coming, are you prepared?

In MRP we accept that divorce is a possibility and by internalizing RP semantics, practices, and mentality, we also internalize our new divorce-as-an-option marriage. This line of thinking keeps us from getting complacent and reminds us that we are beholden to no one but ourselves.

Your wife nags you, she insults you, she treats you like garbage. She certainly isn't willing to have sex with you, and when she trickles it, you realize that if this is how marriage is supposed to be, it would be better to simply have a Real Doll... because at least she has sex anyway you want and a Real Doll never complains.

A Real Doll isn't a realistic option and besides, they cost $6000.00. Your only option seems to be to go nuclear -to divorce. You do some math and see a lawyer. You prepare for divorce. You realize that while you may take a financial hit it will never be as bad as how unhappy you are right now.

After the logistics make sense and you feel you have a handle on the act of actually getting divorced, you start to wonder about yourself post-divorce:

- I haven't dated anyone in a long time...
- I haven't had sex with another woman (and my wife) in a long time...
- I don't know the first thing about living on my own...
- How can someone my age be single again...
- I don't think I could afford a place to live AND the funds necessary to carry on with women...

You will begin to realize that the single life may not be the lush, dewey meadow you envisioned from your sandy desert hell-scape.

You may even come to the conclusion: If I can't be good enough to be married... how the fuck am I going to be good enough to get sex from younger, hotter women?

Time for Improvement

The fact is that you aren't good enough.

If you divorced right now you would find that by this weekend it would be easier to attract a woman that isn't your wife. She doesn't know you so your confidence with her may be higher and to her you are new and unknown. She sees this as a mystery that needs to be unraveled.

The problem is that the other woman doesn't know you but will eventually and then you will be left the same situation you have now: The woman you are having sex with realizes you're nothing special and she will stop having sex with you. You could continue this over and over and if you are content having promiscuous sex with many women then this is an ideal situation.

However, if you are content having promiscuous sex with many women while realizing every time that you are a man that no one actually wants to be around, then you need improvement and this is fine.

Improvement means you haven't settled and you haven't gotten complacent. Anyone that says they are perfect is lying to themselves and anyone who tells you you are perfect just the way you are is doing a disservice and may be trying to sabotage you from improving because it threatens them.

Has your wife told you this before? We'd bet it happened near the beginning... so you didn't change or try to improve yourself, and now she rewards you with no sex and a shitty attitude for not improving yourself.

Live Like You Are Single... Live For You

Up to this point you have been living your life, in your marriage at her whim and at her leisure. Your time is secondary to "family" (read her) time and having hobbies and doing things alone is "selfish." She may have told you that you don't need to go to the gym because she likes the "dad bod." You may accept that but always wonder, then why don't you fuck me?

This is all because you have been living through her and validating through her and that is garbage. She isn't putting forth any effort for your happiness so your job now is to do for you and only you.

MRP will tell you that you need to start improving yourself first and foremost. We will tell you to "Read the Side Bar," specifically the "Course Prerequisites."

- No More Mr. Nice Guy: This book will describe you; you'll think Glover followed you around for a year. This book will show you how to set your own boundaries for what you want and what to expect and that doing these things isn't "mean" but is instead the mark of a man with self-agency.
- When I Say No, I Feel Guilty: This book will describe and help you understand the different psychological methods of control people will use in relationships.
- Married Man Sex-Life Primer: This is usually the book that actually brings guys in because Kay makes two or three references to "Red Pill." in the book... but nothing in detail. This book will lay out the basics of RP in a soft way and it's actually a MarriedRedPill Primer, more than anything else. this book will explain why you don't need to hang around a wife who is sexually unavailable to you and who treats you like shit. You are your own man and you are allowed to have your own life.
- 12 Levels of Dread: this is a popular post stickied in the wiki: All new guys should be at least dread level 3. Your availability to her is the limitation on how she treats you right now. She won't stop until she respects you and fears your absence. You need to be absent to start that, and dread level 1: building your frame, is the first step to being someone she respects. Don't go past 4 until you have a body capable of getting extramarital female attention AND her attention.

MRP promotes the following tenets to improve one's self:

- Improve our outlook on life: Find happiness in yourself. Hobbies, friends, activities away from home and family that are interesting to you. Join a club or volunteer somewhere. Find like-minded individuals and play. Discover that you are happy when you are alone doing your own thing.

- Improve your body and mind: Read the side bar (beyond the prerequisites) and go to the gym and lift. Building strength is one thing, but MRP advocates for physique that approaches something similar to Hugh Jackman in any X-Men Movie. Lift for strength to be powerful... but look powerful too. Look like a man who would fit the sexual fantasies of women.

- Improve your appearance: Dress better, smell better, get better hair. Do body grooming if that appeals to you. Look like a man that women will want to get to know.

- Learn to be independent of your wife: Do your own laundry, fold your own clothes, iron your own pants, etc. Do those things your wife slacks on... but do them for yourself. A SAHW should be taking care of the entire house. A working wife should be sharing tasks with you. If she isn't doing her part... do your part.

- Make smart financial decisions: If she controls the household money, it's time to take those reins, especially if you are the sole bread-winner. Start paying the household bills, control spending, and create a saving plan... especially considering that you will need every drop of liquid assets to get through your impending divorce.

The result of this is a man who is physically attractive, powerful, has confidence and is in control of his own happiness and life. These are things women will find attractive in you post-divorce. Women notice you and talk to you and because you haven't felt this way in so long, you talk back and find it's easy to approach and talk to women!

Maybe living single isn't as hard as you thought.

Welcome to the Paradox

Now that you are an independent, attractive, and confident man, women are noticing you in public and sometimes flirting with you. You flirt back and are a generally well-liked playful man. You find that knowing you always have sexual options at your disposal makes your wife seem like every other woman... she is nothing special.

Your wife notices these things too, and while she says passive-aggressive things to deter your actions, she seems to actually pay more attention to you. Those Indicators of Interest you get from other women you are starting to notice from your wife.

She nags you less and smiles more. She talks with you instead of at you. You are starting to notice that she has taken an interest in improving the way she looks. She occasionally throws compliance tests at you to see if you'll back down like you used to, but your new self-validation and confidence allows you to dismiss these and disregard her new nonsense as a waste of your valuable time.

Then you discover something incredible... she wants to have sex with you and not just the usual starfish sex... but true desire to be fucked by her husband. You didn't expect this; you had been preparing to divorce your harpy wife this whole time and discovered that she is pleasant, feminine, submissive, and actually has a sex drive.

You have figured something out: when I live and act like I am single and not locked in a relationship, my relationship improves.

Welcome to The Red Pill.

You have only scratched the surface, but you have confirmed what you know... what you knew all along: something was very wrong in the world -in your marriage- but you didn't know what... only that it should have been different.

For you. now it is.

The Aftermath

You now realize that your wife responded to you when she felt her control of you slip away. The ultimate loss of control for her is a divorce. You shouldn't live as if you are constantly going to divorce you at any slip. However, you do need to live everyday knowing that divorce is always an option. If you live in your marriage under the auspices that you can't ever leave, then she will always have all the power and control over you. If she were to stop having sex, started treating you like shit again and you saw no way out, what is she losing? She can live at any comfort level she sets and you are at the whim of her decisions.

Of course, the truth is, divorce is an option for her too. She can leave at any time if she feels that you living for yourself and being happy without her is intolerable. The fact of the matter is that any person in a relationship who is least invested holds the greatest amount of power. By living with an abundance mentality (remember those women paying attention to you) and having outcome independence for the decisions you make you can secure a position of passive control and by extension, authority and power.

Now What?

So you've discovered that divorce is always on the horizon but that doesn't matter because your ship runs straight and true now -you are a strong Captain again... and the horizon is always moving.

Continue to lurk here, ask questions, and read posts. Study the theory posted in TheRedPill subreddit and see how this applies to your life. You can't just do the things you've read about, you need to internalize these things and know, deep down, that you are the prize that she must deserve to win.

Remember, be happy with your wife not because of your wife.
In the meantime, get a hobby, build something, and lift!
Getting Over Your Relationship PTSD Pt. II: Give Love One More Chance

by TheFamilyAlpha | June 9, 2017 | Link

In my first post on Getting Over Your Relationship PTSD I brought up the point that how things used to be do not dictate how things will be.

Many men have given the power over their inner self entirely to the women of their lives. They let their ex-relationships dictate their future relationships, trying to do the opposite of before or they'll fall into the same routine ultimately leading to a love life filled with redundancy without progress.

You need to break the cycle.

Married men, divorced men, guys coming out of a shitty LTR, and even the men who had a plate cheat on them thus scarring their soul permanently are not acting in accordance with their masculine self if they're basing decisions off how they can avoid heartache again.

If you build a fire and burn your hand, do you forever hide from the flames or are you more careful the next time you handle it?

This same level of respect and learning should be applied to the past lovers of your life.

Your last girl burned you, instead of refusing to let the next girl in and thus sabotaging yourself, how about you get out of your own way and enjoy the moment. Not every woman you fuck, date, or go solo with is going to be there for your entire life.

Men are the true romantics, because of this any notion that men should avoid love or women is telling the man to repress his authentic desires. Society does that enough, we do not need other men spouting this bullshit as well.

You should love freely, you should let the pain from your past act as a reminder, not as an obstacle to appreciating all this world has to give.

Be a genuinely happy person who smiles at the waitress without thinking "she's a slut" or interact with women without getting lost in your head thinking, these bitches will succumb to AF/bb as if a woman following her biological nature is somehow wrong of them.

Love your next plate, love yourself, smile at the nature of women, enjoy the sluts, if married laugh again with your wife and stop making every interaction an attempt to reclaim the years you had a dead-bedroom.

Some men deserve sex more than others, do not get pissed at your wife for not being attracted to an overweight, sensitive, 'nice guy'. Instead, continue to have fun and work towards becoming a man who a woman willingly submits to.
The past is the past, get over it or it will kill you.

You cannot walk through the rest of life with your fists clenched raging with vitriol at what happened to you. It's over, move on and make the best of the rest of your days. Learn to love again, let the hate thaw and start appreciating things as simple as the breeze.

Do not give women control over your ability to experience the romantic nature of your masculinity. Do not for one second allow something a woman did to you to be a part of who you are as a man.

You must learn to share that side of you again. Instead of being afraid to let others ever get that close, let them in & be aware that it may all come crumbling down and if it does you'll just smile in the rubble because that's what men do.

Make yourself irreplaceable in her life; set the bar from which all other 'Chads' will be measured. While doing so, remember that you have a limitless reserve of love and if/when your relationship ends, this time you know that you will be fine and able to love again.

Women lose a little of themselves with every man they love.

Men?

Men are limitless, yet are more prone to losing their ability to love due to their more violent and passionately romantic nature.

Control that powerhouse of love within and make every moment count.

You cannot walk the world bitter and cold because of the cards life handed you. The woman who burned you is not to be resented, she was a checkpoint in your life to better understanding yourself.

Choose to smile and find joy in the world we live in. The Red Pill is about accepting the brutal reality over the comfort of the lie and masculinity is about authentic living. Combine these two to live the most optimal life.

This post isn't about women, it's about you. Don't ever allow another person to control who you are and how you feel, you must keep that fire burning inside, hot and bright. Nobody can snuff those flames out unless you allow them to.

Let go of the hate and give love one more chance.

The Blog: www.TheFamilyAlpha.com

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Men, Woman, Children, and Dogs - Why I Treat My Wife Like Man's Best Friend - Part 1

by valvadi | June 28, 2017 | Link

Part 1 discusses how I treat my wife and why. Part 2 discusses the hierarchy and why it should be different when dealing with plates v. ltr/marriage.

Here at TRP/MRP we have a saying: "Men love women, women love children, and children love dogs" (or puppies, depending on who you hear it from.) This adage exemplifies a core belief of the Red Pilled Man - generally, love flows downhill while respect flows uphill. The love I show my woman, my child, and my dog, will never be reciprocated back to me in the same way that I love them. However, the respect I earn from my woman, my child, and my dog, will never be reciprocated back to them, unless they earn it from me. The oft used phrase assumes a hierarchy with man at the top, women below occupying the first-mate role, children further down, and dogs occupying the bottom. It is this assumed hierarchy I wish to discuss in these posts.

The inspiration came from an observation I made when dealing with my wife. A recent change in schedule resulted in her arriving home from work earlier than I do. The last couple of months my 70 lb mutt greets me at the door, tail wagging, jumping, barking, etc. - this is the norm, he does this everyday. My wife, on the other hand, while glad to see me home, did not offer the same enthusiasm at my return as my faithful canine. Sometimes she stood up from the couch to kiss me, sometimes she was in the kitchen, sometimes she sat there and said the stereotypical "Hi honey, glad you're home."

My reaction to my dog is similar in kind to his greeting of me. I eagerly pet him and let him jump on me. Then I calm him down and offer him some love because I left him alone for most of the day. My reaction to my wife mirrors her greeting as well. It is usually a quick kiss on the lips, a quick hug, and a quick smack on the ass as I go to change out of my suit. It is noticeably subdued compared to my dog. After a few weeks of these greetings my wife tests. "Honey, do you love the dog more than you love me?", "You always have such a loving greeting for him as soon as you walk in the door! I just get a peck, a hug, and a smack!" Some of us view this as a shit test while others view it as a comfort test. Whatever type of test it was the response should be the same. Agree and amplify verbally while escalating physically. Typically something along these lines: "Of course I love him more! Look at him, he's a stud and gets all the bitches, but he doesn't have your ass!", as I grab her, slap her ass and plant a huge and enthusiastic kiss on her lips. This quelled the questioning (and led to some good sex) but didn't actually solve the problem. She didn't change her daily greeting.

So I changed.

Another core tenet of TRP is that women are children. But in my case, I have no children, and her complaint revolved around my treatment of her when compared to my treatment of my dog. I pondered "what if when I get home, I greet her as I greet man's best friend?" The next day I did exactly that. After greeting my dog with the usual enthusiasm I immediately went to her and greeted her in the exact same way, using nearly the exact same words, with the exact same tone. Obviously I changed the names and gender pronouns to the feminine, but I was astounded at the immediate improvement in her response to my homecoming. This upbeat, enthusiastic, even juvenile greeting completely brought her into my frame, lifted her spirit, and helped provide for an exciting, fun, and sexual night. With each successive day her mood and spirits improved. After a week she now opened the door as I pulled into the driveway and she and the dog both came to greet me before I even entered the house. Currently, I get a mix of her meeting me at the door with enthusiastic kisses, coming to meet me in the driveway, having dinner waiting for me, and occasionally laying scantily clothed on my bed.

Why did this change happen? Why did my wife respond better to being treated like my dog as opposed to being treated like a grown human being? The simple answer is Feelz before Reelz. A more in-depth analysis reveals that my wife did not want to be treated like my intellectual peer. Telling her I was glad to see her and offering her a token kiss did nothing to satisfy her emotional needs. Yes, I verbalized my feelings but she did not want to be told. She wanted to feel that I love her. She wanted to be treated in a way that gave her a physical and emotional experience. Xtreme's More than Words comes to mind. Greeting her in the same way that I greet my dog was more fun, more playful, and more emotional. It allowed her to be caught in the moment and caught in my frame. As a consequence of now being in my playful frame, she was more willing to follow my lead for the rest of the evening. Whether I wanted to go fuck or go to my workshop to work on my business, my wife was more than willing to follow my lead. Why? Because her emotional needs were met. Now I have to admit, I treat my dog more like a young human than a canine. So I guess our tenet of "treat women like children" still holds true. But that wouldn't make for such a catchy title. I have extended this principle to nearly every other area of interaction with my wife with similar success, and oddly, I don't think she has caught on to the fact that I am treating her like the dog. She enjoys the enthusiasm, the playfulness, and the emotion of our interactions.

Part 2 will be forthcoming and will discuss the difference in hierarchy and treatment: Men -> women -> children -> dogs/puppies (1st mate thinking) v. Men -> women, children, dogs/puppies (treat them all like children thinking) And how to mix both.

Lift, Lead, DGAF

-Val
Joe Rogan Experience #1080 - David Goggins

Do the Work

Joe: “[You] have to do [these] things, you have to suffer, you have to live in it, you have to be comfortable in it, and then, maybe, some of that shit will help you a little bit along the way.”

David: “You read a bunch of fucking books, and you think you know how the mind works? ... Theory is bullshit. Yeah, there’s a lot of good stuff out there you can read from people but ... when you put yourself in Hell, that’s the only time you can figure out how the fuck to get through that motherfucker. You can’t... you can’t [just] read somebody else’s book about some theory on how to do shit ... I want to see that guy who immersed himself in fuckin’ Hell and he thought about quitting and leaving and his wife and kids and why am I here? Is it worth it? All this crazy shit and still ... found out a way to get through it ... We all want to read about how we can quickly get somewhere ... You may get some results from it but they’re not permanent ... the permanent result comes from [suffering] ... If you haven’t endured shit, you’re just blowing smoke, man, and you’re not gonna get through anything.”

Face Your Fears

David: “You can be this really fucked up dude, and with the right mindset ... you can [do it], but you have to go into those dark chambers that we often shut off, and you have to open them up. You have to open them up and fight that fuckin’ demon. Get in there, talk to that motherfucker and say what’s up.”

Create Your MAP

David: “We all like to take this four lane highway. The easy highway ... We all love that four lane highway. We always step over the shovel. And all I did, was I picked up that fuckin’ shovel, and [with] that shovel, I made my own path. And you may have big boulders and shit, they may be gettin’ 200 miles up the road faster than you, but goin’ trough this path of life, this journey over here, that you make yourself, that’s incredibly difficult. What comes out the other end of that motherfucker is some glorious shit that you can’t even explain to people ... It’s easier to accept the fact that I’m just not good enough.”
Be Persistent

David: “It’s a difficult motherfucker where you’re gonna fail, and you’re gonna be in your head, you’re gonna be saying I’m not good enough ... It’s how you get through that on a daily basis ... The worst thing that can happen to a man is to become civilized. You lose that fuckin’ fight. You lose that why the fuck am I doing this shit? I’m good. You ain’t good, man. You ain’t never fuckin’ arrived ... You may have more, but you never fuckin’ arrive. You want to be uncommon amongst uncommon people, period.”
Preface:

Think it’s important to give a bit of a bio so you can make up your own mind whether the source is credible. Mid 40’s white male – divorced, was married 17 years I called quits, and we remain close/amicable/friendly. High School Athletic, but didn’t have the skills ability to make it at a higher level. USMC Infantry, LEO (Homicide Detective), Government Contractor Overseas, and now upper level management type.

5’10” 230lbs, visible abs first thing in the morning, but first cup of coffee washes them away. Ideal weight is around 212-214lbs. Bench: 335 Squat: 405 DL: 675 OHP: 205 *more on bench below.....

How to develop or reinforce Alpha Traits as an older guy

This is for guys that are either naturally beta or how let themselves side into beta mode. The main difference between alpha and beta comes to two interrelated things:

1) Excellence 2) Confidence

Excellence first guys! If you have confidence but no excellence it’s only a matter a time before someone pulls your chain.

Step 1 – Find something or develop something you excel at, and make it be something that’s life defining (Career, Education, Athletics, Hobby). No one is Alpha in all situations or circumstance. You could be a MLB All-Star pussy snatcher MVP, but your first day in BJJ you are not the Alpha in the room. Know your excellence and carry it with you, but be self-aware enough to recognize a situation and always seek improvement. Once you find your excellence work on your weaknesses – AKA conquer your fears.

The good think about being 40 or over is you’re probably already an expert at something. Hopefully it’s work so that you have secure financial stability. There are three statuses in life advancing, stagnant, regression. Find what matters to you and always strive to be advancing. Start out in the mail room to one day running the company. Once you except “eh this is good enough” you’re no longer alpha – that’s just not what alphas do. If you’re a mid-level manager you need to be working towards upper management and then executive. If you’re cutting lawns with one lawn mower out of the back of a pick-up you’re working towards owner a fleet of trucks/crews, etc.

Step 2 – Development confidence. A lot of confidence will just be derived from recognizing you excel at X, Y, or Z. The other way to do it is to test yourself. Every day you should test yourself in some way.

Personal anecdotal evidence: Up till 40 I was in career fields where “being tested” was organic to the environment. In the infantry everything is a fucking test – against yourself or against others. Alphas do alpha shit….wanna be squad leader? It’s all through a trial by fire. As a cop you get tested as soon as you say “you’re under arrest” and dude replies “I not going to jail”. As a detective it’s about who’s solving the most or toughest cases. And overseas it was who’s going to run what mission. My current job I’m not tested. My title alone makes me the defacto alpha. I come to work – do my shit and go home. My first year I wanted to shoot myself until I realized I’m not being tested – I’m not validating my alpha status, and complacency kills everything; Including Alpha status. Develop/Improve/Maintain Status

Education Always be improving your education – hopefully your career is set and this can be more of an “at leisure” endeavor. Pick something and go for it. Pick up a degree, or another degree, or advanced degree, or technical certificate. Point is always be educating yourself in some manner. Challenge yourself – suck at Math? Start taking some higher level math courses. Treat it as a challenge and succeed. Take some classes at the local JCC or College/University. Also great for socializing and meeting people outside your work/neighborhood.

Exercise This here is the simplest and easiest way to change your patterns of behavior. Forget all the bullshit programs.....just pick one and BE CONSISTENT. This is again an avenue to find something you excel at – fitness in general (that alone birthed the Crossfit community), or sport, but find something. This is personally what works for me:

1. Cardio – if you’re fat, as in you don’t have abs, you have to do cardio. Me personally, the easiest and best cardio I’ve found is running and here’s why. It’s actually functional – better than that it’s an actual lifesaving skill. It behooves you to do two things really well – quickly get away from a threat and put distance between you and a threat. So that’s what I concentrate on. 30 minutes every day, alternating between HIIT and LISS. For HIIT I vary my sprints; suicide drills, cone drills, stair/hill sprints, 100m, 200m, 400m, up to a 1 mile all out sprint. LISS is as basic as it gets; a 30 minute jog which for me is about 3.5 miles.

2. Lifting – I put my PR up top. Bench is just for reference as I very really bench now. My pressing is comprised of Strict Overhead Press only. Why? Because it’s manly as shit to push big weight overhead. I lift 6 days a week. I train “movements” not body parts.

Monday - Squat Tuesday - Standing Overhead Press Wednesday - Deadlift Thursday - Squat Friday - Standing Overhead Press Saturday - Deadlift

I use the “wave method” for all movements. Look it up on T-Nation. Works great for me. I lift at home in a power rack from rogue fitness. Track my lifts weekly and fractional weights are priceless. Always aiming to go up 1lbs per week. Again – lifting is a basic lifesaving skill. Stronger you are the harder you are to kill.

3. Kickboxing – Buy yourself a heavy bag and some gloves. I probably should have put this as number 1, because this probably has the biggest payoff to confidence building and lifesaving in general. Guys it’s impossible to be Alpha if you don’t have clue one as to how to throw a fucking punch or kick. Cardio and Strength definitely help in fighting/self-defense, but if you’re a 200lbs guy with a 400lbs bench and are an “arm puncher” there is a great chance you’re gonna get laid the fuck out by someone with a year’s worth of legit martial arts or training. I do this anywhere from 1 – 6 days a week depending on how I feel. Intensity varies. Sometimes I just to skill/drill work and sometimes up the intensity to where it’s a secondary HIIT/Conditioning workout.

Diet This whole post is the KISS approach to ALPHA and this is no different. Look, you can’t be alpha if you’re a fat fuck. Watch your diet – this isn’t rocket science – calories in/calories out and make wise food selections to fuel your education/work/exercise pursuits. Now I will say what works for me is a Keto diet, but honestly there are too many great tasting foods you can’t eat on Keto, so I stick with intermittent fasting – google it if you don’t know, but the Mr. Slippery Cliff notes are:

8 hour eating window for bulking (this is only for truly skinny fucks) 6 hour eating window for maintenance 4 hour eating window for reasonable weight loss 2 hour eating window for I need to lose a metric fuck ton of weight. My sample day might go like this: 6:00 Cardio – either HIIT or LISS 7:30 Coffee – black if you can, but a tablespoon or two of sugar/cream isn’t gonna wreck your fast 2:00 Break fast with lunch. Usually a small meal – equivalent to a kids meal in terms of sizing/calories because I don’t want to be feel bloated for my workout. 5:00 Lifting followed by Kickboxing 7:00 Dinner and for me this is huge meal. If out I might do appetizer, salad/soup, dinner with sides, etc. If it’s pizza night with the kids I order my own meat lovers and go to fucking town. Big think I avoid is sugar…..yeah, no cakes or treats, and no calories from liquid. I stick with quality protein sources (beef, bison, chicken, fish, eggs, pork) and quality sides (fruits and veg). My one weakness is breakfast for dinner when I kill some pancakes (usually after squats on Monday). Drink lots of water

Hobbies Another avenue to work on excellence; sure it can be poker, or chess, tennis, softball, kickball, or flag football, but to get the most bang out of your buck and transfer to confidence make it something MANLY, functional and a life skill. Things like: Shooting, Archery, which both lead to hunting, and camping, or potentially fishing……..boxing, kickboxing, BJJ, coding, construction, etc.

BONUS - Supplements I think all the above is pretty straight forward, but I want to throw out a bonus kicker that might be taboo or frowned on, but if you’re over 40 for the love of all that’s Masculine and Alpha look into getting on TRT or if you’re so inclined steroids. I read a lot of guys say “back to when I was 20” well Testosterone replacement therapy will definitely bring about alpha tendencies. Sex drive/libido back to early 20’s, workouts are more productive, nutrient absorption is better, literally everything is better. Then there is the darkside of supplements – depending on where you live obviously, but other compounds can literally turn a 120lbs beta into a 190lbs alpha REAL FUCKING QUICK.

TL;DR: Quicksteps to confidence: take 1 college level class a semester to increase knowledge, prestige, standing, and for social networking. Workout hard and keep it basic - think preparing for combat, not the beach. Diet and eat healthy. Pick a hobby that’s transferable to a real skill and interesting - no one gives a shit about a stamp collection. If over 40 look into TRT to supercharge you results.
Submission
by Rollo-Tomassi | April 30, 2017 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2017/04/30/submission/

Excerpt:

When a woman submits herself to a man it reinforces the idea that her doing so is imparting him with something of value. Very few women can completely submit themselves to a man’s authority. I overheard a conversation between a mother and her adult daughter once. They were discussing the details about how and why she decided to marry her father. The adult daughter was dating and Mom was offering her matronly wisdom. In the course of the conversation it was apparent to me that although she’d been married for almost 25 years Mom was an Alpha Widow. What she said to her daughter was interesting, she said, “I love your Dad very much, but there are parts of me he will never know.”

What she was saying is that, although her husband was a great guy, he wasn’t the guy who she could totally submit herself to. After 25 years of marriage she knew that he would never be the man to make her feel comfortable in total trust, but also he would never know the sides of her she keeps reserved (usually sexual) because he’s not the kind of man who can bring it out in her.

Much of the modern divorce-porn (Eat, Pray, Love) narrative centers on exactly this dissatisfaction in women. The hope that’s sold to women is that it’s not too late to divorce your boring husband and fly off to the Bahamas to meet the kind of guy whom she can completely submit herself to. Even if it’s never the case that she takes action on the fantasy the popularity of that fantasy speaks volumes about the state of women and their submitting to men.

In the manosphere we have a maxim that states women hunger after a dominant masculine man. It’s a Red Pill tenet that it’s exactly this masculine dominance that women want to submit themselves to. It’s a large part of what contributes to the tingle effect of women’s arousal, but masculine, confident dominance also stimulates the desire to submit herself to a man who will know how to take care of her and any potential kids. Just as there are two primary aspects of women’s Hypergamous filter, so too does masculine dominance attract and arouse both the short term sexual and long term provisioning aspects.
Quick clarification on nukes and the nuance of "What is she going to do, leave?" statements.

This is for mostly newbies.

When we use dread, or defend boundaries, then tell ourselves, mentally and in field reports:

"whats she gonna do, leave??"

we are not doing these things out of a need to prove we have power, or worse, as I can see some guys thinking..

"Well here is my chance to be shitty to her, so I am going to storm out of a restaurant like that Flaired Guy on MRP! That'll show Her"

And if she leaves... "oh well, I am not the bad guy, right.. I am just defending this boundary right here, being Alpha!"

Fuck that noise.

Do not do things just to see how far you can push your woman before the leaves. Don't make her do the dirty work. If you want to leave your marriage just fucking do it. No need to set up a scenario where she is the "bad one".

End of rant.
Over the years, I've learned the difference between being judgmental and being observant. Sometimes, this is a fine line. One thing I have observed on MRP is new guys often think it's a "race" to become alpha, and a little bit of progress can be easily mistaken as a total transformation. This is the ego

After a lifetime of being lied to by the media, friends, family members, and your own mother, unplugging from the matrix is no easy task. In fact, many of the people that have lied to you are simultaneously lying to their self. So, the line between truth, lies, reality, fantasy, and wishful thinking can become blurred. MRP can often make things more muddy before the clean-up starts It's kind of like cleaning out a garage - it will look more messy than ever before the real progress is revealed.

One of the biggest issues is ego. All too often, we either see a newer guy come on here posting about a situation he needs to fix right now, but in reality, if we provide solutions, they are band-aids, and they generally will not help the new guy's progress.

These type posts start with tell-tale signs of the markings of ego. For example, when I see a guy start off with 'I've always been alpha, but blah blah blah'... or I'm probably a 9 SMV (snd then gives no details about lifts, height, and weight - yes, all three are required for a reasonable analysis)... or 'wife is shit testing me about folding the socks,'... or 'wife gave me a hard no, but I didn't show any butthurt.'... etc... the problem is usually the ego is in the way of the beginning of progress

Progress begins when the new guy has finished all of the sidebar readings and is starting over.

Progress begins when the new guy can honestly post all physical stats Height, weight, and lifts.

Progress starts when the new guy doesn't lace his post with pats on the back or please tell me I'm a pussy pleadings.

Progress begins when the new guy realizes he's been brainwashed and is still brainwashed, and he wants to do the work to deprogram.

Progress begins when the new guy realizes there are guys on this board who have put in a ton of effort, way beyond what he has put in, and he is willing to listen to feedback, no matter how much it stings.

Progress begins when you hit your first lifting plateau after adding 5 pounds a week on all lifts for many months straight.

Progress begins when the new guy has cleaned up his diet, is under 15% BF, and has the Progress begins when the new guy realizes he is a pussy with no frame, and he becomes willing to STFU and lift, and then gradually add A&A, AM, fogging and other frame builders.

Progress begins when the new guy has internalized frame and no longer is faking frame, which his LTR will see right through and break easily anyway.

Progress begins with all of these acts, thoughts, and behaviors of humility.

Progress begins when the stay plan becomes the same as the go plan.

Progress begins when the new guy can admit he has a long hard road ahead, and he starts to become comfortable with small but valuable strides of progress.

Progress begins when a new guy can come on here, present objective facts, and not lace it with implications of the grand ole alpha days, the great resent victories on who should fold the socks, and not present us with paragraphs of he said/she said dialog. You will not find progress within the mundane details of every day BS conversations between you and your LTR.

Progress begins when your LTR isn't giving you hard no's anymore, and you realize that your sexual strategy is a combination of things in this post, and it is working.

Progress beings with killing the ego because then the new guy can tear down the sand castle he has built and build a solid rock fortress

The enemy is not women

The enemy is not your LTR

The enemy is not the media and the brainwashing you received

The enemy is your ego.

Kill the enemy
I am a few months in now. I have lifted at least every other day since March, joined two soccer teams, revitalized my business, stopped drinking completely, and reestablished boundaries in my marriage. During this time, I have been trying to work on understanding Frame, faking it until I make it.

Well, I think I am starting to make it.

Today, the shit tests came as if they were in slow motion. My emotions were in check the entire time, I am starting to live in my frame.

I left work a little later than usual and was talking to an old friend on the phone the whole way home. My wife calls twice. Old me would have hung up on my friend and picked up her call. Not anymore.

I get home to a hungry, pissed off wife. She wants to know why I didn't answer her calls. “I was on another call.” She does not like this answer and storms out of the house to get dinner. Old me would have been pissed the way she left or tried to reason or argue with her. New me was not even tempted to be sucked into her emotions.

She leaves to pick up junk food. I decide to make a steak dinner with rice, bread, watermelon and ice cream.

She comes home still pissed right as I am plating my dinner. I am goofing around in the kitchen and having a great time with the kids. I even joke with her. Her emotions are hers and I am in my own happy world.

The kids ask for my dinner instead of hers proving my point that cooking is just as quick as heading out to pick up food. It also tastes a lot better. However, I didn't mention it or rub it in. Old me would have and likely been drawn into her emotions.

I bring out the watermelon cut up in a big bowl. She tells me to bring it in a smaller bowl with spoons for the kids. Old me would have jumped at the command. New me tells her if she thinks that is necessary, she can do it herself. She tries to draw me in here again. Water off my back, no comment at all from me. I just enjoyed my delicious meal with the kids hovering over me for bites of daddy's steak.

After putting the kids down and going to the gym I return home. Old me would have assumed my wife was still a bitch and been drawn into her negativity or tiptoeing around her. But I came home happy and fulfilled. And you know what, she was drawn into my frame! Happy husband, happy wife.

I know these are just small, stupid shit tests and really don't mean a great deal. The point is, she was not mad that I didn't pick up the phone or jump to her demands. Old me would have assumed as much. She actually felt more secure because I didn't give into her or enter her frame. The best part is it all happened in slow motion and it was no longer fake. It has been a long, ongoing process, but I am starting to make it.
Turn off your brain

by stonepimpletilists | March 4, 2016 | Link

---

Chad

Man, there's some asinine questions in AMRP lately, reminds me of the old adage I was told early on. It was mostly geared towards working out, but I'll bet it would help in most areas.

That image of Chad you have in my head? Muscle-head who gets girls, etc. In traditional Nietzsche fashion, that envy of a cock sure man who gets girls taught me a few things. (envy is inspirational/aspirational IMO)

You know what Chad does? Wakes up, he eats, goes to the gym, comes home, talks to his phone harem about his needs, gets them, or moves on and eats lunch. What an idiot. If only he was more self aware. It's just too bad that he's focused on his singular vision. Happiness.

Thinking isn't helpful in singular focus

Know what? You know what thinking does? Thinking helps think up excuses asshole. Thinking points out all the reasons something won't work. The "smarter" I am, the more I think, the more these excuses make sense. I had an early OYS that I admitted I was a very smart guy, and it wasn't meant as a compliment. I truly believe that.

The greatest curse of the intelligent person is that he can rationalize anything

Here's where I ramble:

You know what smart guys do? Have most things come easily and naturally. Know what to do when something isn't immediately clicking? Give up, because I am 'a smart man' and if something doesn't come naturally, just quit:

1. I'm smart, so I'll build up a narrative that placates my ego, and I don't have to test my identity further.
2. I could have done better if I applied myself, so it's clearly that I didn't, and not that I'm not gifted in everything.

So I used to ignore things that you don't immediately master, because the alternative is to admit that this ID I have of being the 'intelligent man' is more important than truth, growth, or success. Tell me that's not the epitome of BP bullshit. I don't miss that shit at all, kind of freeing really. I no longer have anxiety for being less than perfect in things, and no one cared anyways.

The point(back to)

Want abundance?

Have a situation you don't know how to deal with?
Don't know how to deal with being locked out of your own house?

Just stop thinking. Go to the gym, have some rolled oats and a fried egg, hit on the chick at home. If she shoots you down? Go do something else, pay it no mind, turn off the brain. Stop thinking about how she hasn't desired you better, stop thinking that whatever reason she's chirping at you has any importance. She starts ‘talking’ at 10pm? Go to sleep, tell her to write it down and you'll read it in the morning.

Personal story.

Had a good laugh this morning, realized I was doing it.

I finally got the perfect styling of my hair today after my cut last week. Was going to skip the gym, because then it would be all fucked up and I won't shower till tomorrow, spouse is in need of comfort today and ...

oh FFS, so I'll throw up a post, and I'm headed downstairs afterwards to work out. Then I'm going to have another 4 coffee's. Fuck you brain... fuck you.

Know the alternative?

Spouse is having some overthinking panic at work this week. Totally normal for her situation, and I've been there. It's not something wrong with her, it's just a matter of not getting sucked into everyone else's bullshit. Gave her my old navy smarties (adivan) and told her to leave them in her purse, just having them available if needed will be enough, call me if you decide to take one.

Morning of shit tests. Just like /u/bogey06 said this morning in a comment, try poking fun at her pet peeve and holding frame. Thought for a moment he was watching my life and commenting. She gets pissy, then she laughs, then pissy again. It's all in her head, and the last thing anyone needs is to make it a reality.

this could have gone the other way so easily

I could be in damage control mode, walking on eggshells, treating her like she was made of porcelain, assuring her (because I can fix other people right?) and sitting at Starbucks, running my hands through my perfectly trimmed quaff, getting fatter off of vente fraps, worried about how I can keep this house from crumbling around me.

Granted, by writing this, I'm thinking about it a lot more than I should, but we can't all be Jesus now can we?

---

Just stop thinking so damned much. Do things that make you happy, take care of your responsibilities, and carry on. Want to know what to think about when X happens?

Don't, you got better things to do.
Communication and signals

by Sepean | March 6, 2020 | Link

The MRP model of communication and signals

First, let us look at what we signal with our communication, divided into categories that are relevant to sexual strategy:

Trivial signals: This is all the mundane topics - what happened at work, planning the next vacation destination. It can be small or big, you and your wife can have aligned goals or you can be at odds. It is trivial in the sense that it doesn’t have much relevance to sexual strategy. Note that a given interchange can be about something trivial and have elements of sexual strategy like she is also shit testing you. To make things clear, we separate them out - part of the interchange is trivial, another part is sexual strategy. I’m not going to consider trivial signals in the rest of the post.

Alpha signals: This is communication that signals alpha. Confident body language, passing shit tests, cocky remarks, etc. This increases attraction, which has obvious benefits.

Domination signals: This is making her do what you want and enforcing boundaries. Being dominant can have elements of signalling alpha, but there are two important differences: First, this stuff matters to you: life is better when she makes you sandwiches, deepthroats you, and doesn’t fuck other men. Second, with high SMV you can be dominant and she’ll comply and it signals alpha, while low SMV men are ignored and only signal their weakness by trying to be dominant.

Good beta signals: This is stuff that signals beta but doesn’t hurt your alpha. It is passing comfort tests without coming off as weak and supplicant, or sending signals similar to that. Women have a dual sexual strategy and especially in the context of an LTR, they do need beta - giving too little will make her freak out from lack of comfort. As a side note, a lot of good beta signalling can be done actually doing shit - fixing stuff in the house, taking care of the kids, making money.

Blue signals: This is what we at MRP consider the bad signals, where you signal lack of alpha, weakness, supplication, insecurity, fear, sadness, unconditional loyalty, self sacrifice.

Imagine that the signals are the rows in a table.

Now let us look at how we choose to communicate (and I don’t mean you necessarily choose rationally, you can have very little conscious say in the matter). You get an idea, how do you communicate it?

STFU: You say nothing.

Habit: You just say something out of habit, it’s what you always say. “No, you don’t look fat in that”.

Emotional: You communicate mainly based on emotion. Maybe you’re scared of her reaction so you can’t help but say what you think will calm her down, maybe you’re angry and say something you don’t really believe, etc.

Tactical: You say not what is on your mind, but something that you believe will manipulate her to your advantage.

Honest and open: You just say what is on your mind.

These are the columns in the table.

So all your ideas come tumbling down from the top, and depending on your emotional state, level of self control, ideological beliefs about communication, sexual strategy insights, it goes down one of the columns and ends up in a given row.

Most people aren’t aware of the signals distinction that we use, so they communicate based on the columns. Their emotions guide them, or their belief or personal preference for honesty, or their desire to manipulate.

Here at MRP, we teach guys about the signals and tell them to look ahead in the table, see what signal row you’ll end up in and choose your communication based on that instead.

New guys, we tell them Blue Signals, choose STFU. Domination, choose STFU (stop nagging her for sex, you don’t have the SMV to back it up). Alpha signals, be honest or tactical (fake it till you make it).

As they get their SMV up and their wives become more submissive, they can choose to be open and honest with their domination signals.

And once they get to the endgame and they settle into their masculine identity, most of their ideas fall in line, most of their impulses go into open and honest column and ends up in the good signal rows naturally and they don’t even get the idea to say blue shit very often.

Does communication work?

When people talk about if communication works, they rarely mean in the broad sense of “everything is communication”. They usually mean honest and open communication.

Does honest and open communication work?

The MRP position is that good relationships are based on signalling alpha and good beta, not signalling blue (or at least very little), and being dominant once your SMV is up. We should all be convinced in how well this works.
To the extent that your honest and open communication results in those signals, sure communication works.

In Communication Doesn't Work....or Maybe... u/Blarg_Risen outlines his thoughts on communication, which go quite a bit further than sticking to MRP signals. There's a lot of good, really red stuff in the post, and that's a big part of the problem. With that much red, and from a guy who obviously has his shit together and a good relationship, it's easy to miss that some of it might not be red. It's not uncommon on MRP or TRP to see alphas who have an easy time with women think that everything they do improves their relationship (leadership and wealth being two common traits that often gets mistaken for something that turn women on). In this case, it's communication, where Blarg outlines his thoughts on how MRP doesn't understand communication and is afraid to try honest communication.

When someone comes along and says MRP is wrong and gets a 97% upvote rate, we have to examine it further. Is MRP wrong?

If MRP is wrong and that there is intrinsic value and benefit in communication, regardless of what it signals, there has to be value in blue signals.

Does anyone really believe that? Is signalling low alpha somehow good? If that's not the case, where does the benefit come from? Trivial signals?

If you're saying that honest and open communication is good, but only to the extent that you're signalling alpha, good beta and domination, you're saying the exact same thing as MRP. There's nothing new here. If there is an MRP end goal, it is to build a masculine identity where that is the case.

Let's take a very alpha guy, 90% of the time his honest communications signals alpha, domination and good beta, the other 10% he signals blue. Can he get away with that, and have a wife who is attracted to him? Sure. Is it optimal? No. Is it good advice to signal blue 10% of the time? No.

It's like a shredded guy eating ice cream, sure he can get away with it because the rest of his diet and lifting is good enough, but it isn't optimal and not something you'd recommend outside of letting people relax a bit to stay sane.

And I agree with relaxing a bit, especially once your SMV is up. I don't believe you should constantly be keeping score of your alpha points: enjoy the leeway you get from having a huge surplus of alpha.

The simple truth is this: when she thinks her man is hot, and she knows that he doesn't tolerate too much lip from her - he can say some stupid shit, and she'll nod her head and go along with it anyway. And I can't overlook how Blarg points out that if she doesn't agree with him, they'll just part ways.

But there's a fucking big difference between saying that you can relax a bit once you're alpha, and saying that honest and open communication is good in itself.
So does open and honest communication work? To the extent that you signal red, sure - what matters is what you signal. Does it matter much of it is honest? Not really. Is honest communication that signals blue good? No.

The dangers of an believing that open and honest communication is good Humans are terrible at self evaluation. How we see the world is greatly influenced by emotion, beliefs, ego protection, cognitive dissonance and many other biases. Anyone who hasn’t read up on the extreme degree our biases muddle or thinking should do so, right now. Get Kahneman’s Thinking, Fast and Slow.

We can combat our biases, and regarding communication we do so by looking at what we signal.

If we don’t, we very easily get caught up in the traps of thinking that whatever we want and feel is good. I’ve written about this before, how our desire to explain our vision early is usually a mistake (“Do you like my dissected boobs?) or how many men think their beta desires are something women respect them for (Most men's masculine ideal is not alpha).

In the recent post on the merits of communication, it even went so far as to praise having the courage to be vulnerable by communicating weakness. Just no. Women don’t think you’re hot because you have the balls to share your fears and sorrows with her. It's not ballsy, it's just sharing weakness. This is exactly the sort of cognitive dissonance you fall into when you begin believing that “communication is good”, you twist reality to fit your beliefs instead of thinking critically.

Nothing indicates that communication is good. It is about the signals. You want to signal alpha, good beta and domination, and you want to avoid signalling blue. You should stay away from any idea that removes you from that understanding and makes you uncritically pour your heart out with open and honest communication, without being aware of what you're signalling.

The other coin of communication - listening to her

The standard MRP position here is to have your own vision and follow it. Don’t listen to your wife, respond with A&A or STFU to her requests and criticisms (with regards to your personality and your relationship - we’re not talking about her asking you to lift a heavy box or planning your vacation).

There are good reasons not to listen what she says, some of the issues are:

Lack of introspection: People very often have poor introspection. They are often not aware of what they want, and especially common is lacking the ability to predict future enjoyment. As an obvious example, take how women react to the red pill (typically disgust that we’re learning how to cheat them) yet once her man actually alphas up, he’s suddenly so fucking hot and she can't believe she has a man like that at home.

Timidity, resistance to change, laziness, inability to delay gratification: People refrain from doing smart things all the time. They’re scared trying something new, they’re too lazy to go to the gym, they really want to eat another serving of dessert. Yet I don’t think anyone would disagree that enjoying what life has to offer and being fit and healthy is way better long term. But they’ll hamster their shortsighted desires to no end.

Tactical communication: People say shit to manipulate the other person into doing what they want. Maybe they don’t want to argue, so they say what the other person wants to hear. Maybe they’re afraid of the consequences of saying no.

Shit testing: The main reason for not listening is shit testing (or compliance testing). Women have a dual sexual strategy and one way this manifests itself is to compliance test men, often with something very unreasonable - if the man complies, she gets him to service her and she knows he’s a beta she shouldn’t fuck, if he passes the shit test she’s learned he’s a fuckable alpha. It’s a brilliant strategy.

When you go down the “communication is a two way street” route, you have to take a different stance. You have to trust and respect what the other person says - if you think you're mostly hearing bias, justification, manipulation and shit tests, you're not listening. And trusting and respecting what someone says, that's a very weak position to take. You're suddenly easily vulnerable to manipulation and deception, or even just taking an honest mistake they make and running with it because you "hear what she's saying".

In the post on the merits of communication, it was described (correctly) how competent women can be in their lives. This was major premise for the whole idea. If they’re not competent, why respect what they want?

But competency is not relevant. Someone competent can still be manipulative and tactical in their communication. In fact, the more someone has achieved, the more likely they are to be very adept at making people do what they want.

This holds doubly true in a relationship since women shit test. Women are not solely interested in a cooperative effort with honest communication to maximize relationship quality - for them to enjoy a relationship they have to feel their man is alpha, and they do this by shit testing which by its nature is bullshit and deceptive. You’re supposed to disregard it.

Believing in communication before you’re very alpha and she’s very submissive is disastrous. You absolutely have to pass shit tests and not listen to her initially.

Once she submits, this behavior largely subsides. But shit tests still happen from time to time. You have to be ready for this and respond correctly. Even vets, if they fail a shit test by taking her seriously, it can spiral out of control. Women probe for frame weaknesses and if they find one, they’ll keep hammering on that flaw, harder and harder, insisting that you understand and respect this feeling she has, and the more you do the less alpha you signal. You put yourself in a weak and exploitable position by believing in the merits of communication.
Maybe there’s some level of alphaness where women stop shit testing at all, but I doubt it. And if there is, it is not a place you got to by communicating, it was something you achieved with high alpha and dominance.

The degree to which she is on board and being cooperative is entirely based on high alpha and dominance where she submits and accepts your vision. From that position of position, and to the degree that she submits, sure, communication can be productive and mutually beneficial. u/HornsOfApathy has great posts about the level he has taken this to with their very intimate D/s relationship, and while most vets haven’t gone so far many of us enjoy that the shit testing is rare and our wives communicate honestly most of the time.

But this is an effect of her submitting, and that happened because we were dominant instead of listening back when she was still shit testing and challenging us regularly.

Observations on relationships with varying degrees of communication

If we look at bad relationships, where the man is low alpha and has communicated his needs and feelings very openly, this never works. Seeking the help of a marriage counsellor that helps them communicate better, again, it doesn't work.

When such a man limits his communication to signalling what MRP suggests, we see massive improvements in attraction and relationship quality.

The path to relationship happiness certainly isn’t through honest and open communication.

If we look at the high end, we have dominant men with submissive wives. Some of them praise communication. Some of them don’t.

Take a guy like /u/red-sfpplus. Does anyone believe that if he settled down, his steady girl wouldn’t be crazy about him and super submissive even if he didn’t communicate with and listen to her?

There are other vets here who are alpha, married and don’t place much value on communication. Are they doing well or not? I’ve had periods at high SMV where I didn’t listen to or respect my wife at all, and it worked just fine.

Take the vets who communicate with and respect their wives. Let’s take away the communication except for the MRP suggested signalling. Does anyone really believe their alpha wouldn’t carry their relationship on its own? That their wives would stop submitting because they stopped?

Let’s take one of the communicating vets, and his wife suggests something he doesn’t like - and he goes along with it. What is the probability that she won’t ask for a bit more next time? And where does that spiral end? Does it stop before he either puts his foot down, or she loses respect? Does communication and respect work outside of a dominant frame, without a “my way or the highway” principle?
No matter how I look at it, I can’t see communication outside of MRP style signalling being productive - it is irrelevant, counterproductive or an indulgence (and there’s nothing wrong with being indulgent, all else being equal).

Conclusion

For a lot us, communication is great. We love to talk, to be heard, to be understood, to explain things, to be agreed with, to have our vision shared.

MRP has identified the problems that arise from this desire when it signals blue - as it can easily end up doing.

Luckily, many men are able to settle into a masculine identity where they are very red - naturally alpha and dominant, with some good beta sprinkled in. That’s who many of us are, and to the extent we are, communicate all of that freely without inhibition. And heck, with enough frame whatever blue shit comes out once in a while, don’t sweat it, you got the SMV buffer to handle it.

Those that aren’t so lucky, if there’s too much blue in you and not enough alpha, exercise some self control, stick to MRP style signalling.

This is drastically different than saying “MRP doesn't give enough credit to communication, there is great value in communicating honestly and openly, and your wife is competent and will work for the relationship”.

Let’s go back and look at the communications/signals table - MRP has no problem with anything that ends up signalling domination (provided sufficient SMV), alpha or good beta. It is only the blue signals we don’t want. Are honestly communicated blue signals really beneficial?

I don’t believe that, and I’m not sure Blarg believes it either. I don’t think Blarg is blue, on the contrary I believe he is alpha and dominant enough that his wife is submissive, which is why they can communicate. His understanding of the role communication plays is just flawed, but he has lots of other shit going for him so it all works just fine anyway.

Most of the vets are there, with wives who have submitted, who work to provide value for her man and her family, who communicate properly most of the time. It’s a natural consequence of the man being alpha and dominant, it’s exactly what the classic MRP first mate metaphor is.

If you contrast Communication Doesn't Work....or Maybe... with u/HornsOfApathy's writing, there’s a clear difference. Horns obviously values their communication, the deep connection they have, their shared vision and their mutual respect. But Horns doesn’t highlight his ideas as different than MRP's, and he clearly understands that all of it is possible because it originates in a D/s dynamic. It’s his dominance and her submission that lets them connect this way, not the other way around. I'm not even sure he communicates anything but alpha, domination and good beta, which is exactly what MRP suggests.

I completely understand the desire for communication and connection, and the satisfaction that can come from indulging it, but it has to happen in the context of the MPR understanding of what you’re signalling. For the true alpha, this is not important because he doesn't signal blue, but some guys are more blue and really need to understand the distinction, and what I find especially unfortunate is that “honest and open communication” is almost an ideology that many were raised with, making it very easy to be led astray.

Another unfortunate concept I’ve seen thrown around is that this thing with communication and connection is the next level of MRP, some transcendent state. It is not. Maxing dominance and alpha is. If we want to give guys solid advice, that's what we need to tell them. If guys want that deep intimate connection and their wives aren't meeting them, 99% of the time they need more alpha and dominance (and that doesn't mean aggressive or oppressive - true dominance is calm, confident, assertive), not better communication.

And guys who don't want communication, they're not falling short of the final stage of MRP. Some guys are the independent type, or they're assholes. They're not lesser not, they're not worse at romantic relationships. The fact is, guys who lean blue have always looked at assholes and wondered why women put up with it. The simple truth is, all this communicating and listening, it's just not that important. Signalling alpha is.
I'm ready to create MY slut

by mrplogic | May 6, 2017 | Link

I had trouble writing that title...

posted just a few times under a different username awhile back. I realized if I was going to try this, I couldn't be doing it under a name my kids might eventually search for. This will serve as a reintroduction.

ME 47 yrs old.
Grew up as a military brat mostly overseas. Moved about 26 times in the first 21 years. Typical skinny nerd and Beta to the core. Girls were an alien species. Classic 'good guy.' I had an Apple 2 computer, fantasized about Dungeons and Dragons, and read my mother's marriage and relationship books that she constantly bought for my father to read. In college I once asked a girl out by giving her a business presentation on a flipboard while dressed in a suit. (I got a pity date out of it, when I picked her up, her football player Alpha boyfriend openly mocked me at the door.)

My mother is narcissistic personality disorder and our household was a constant drama of arguing, shitstorms, and conflict. My father was a passive, beaten man, but I give him some credit for sticking around for the kids. I would have been screwed royally if I had to live with my mother alone. The point is, I despised conflict and going into my own marriage I avoided it at all costs.

Have I established my Beta credentials?

I did bring a tiny bit of Alpha to the table in the fact I guard my 'me' time jealously and she gives it to me without question now. Also, I really DGAF about most of her petty BS and nagging and she hasn't been a nag for 18 years or so.

The Wife Good girl from a small town. Met her in a wedding where I was best man and she was maid of honor. She was smart, had just finished her degree in a medical field and was about to start work in a town about 45 min from where I lived. Our SMV's were fairly matched. I'm going to say 5's if you think of 5 as perfectly average. I'd might have been 'handsome' but 5'10 150 is pretty skinny... She had great body, face is average, no makeup skills whatsoever (usually looks like a clown). She dated one guy in HS, had a bunch of two date encounters in college (where the guys dropped her after it became apparent she was not DTF and this was in the 80's...) Super inexperienced virgin, as was I.

US Married at 23. First kid at 25. Second at 27. We loved life. Hiked all the time, had friends over for games, muddled through our sex life. She made more money than me by FAR. That stressed our relationship early, but I eventually caught up 12 years later.

So we had a good marriage. There were early problems after our second child and the sex slowed down. I had an emotional affair going online with some chick on an online text fantasy game (no graphics back then). But we were committed and have decent communication and pushed through our problems to the point where we are a solid unit. Work and family and finances were all done as a perfectly equal team. Life was about as good as a Beta male like me could imagine. Obviously, there were many issues stemming from no one being the captain...

Wife has gained 50 lbs and if she started as a 5 has probably sunk to a 3. I have probably risen to a 6 and can reach a 7 by the end of this year because of lifting and decent status of career.

Sex has always been available. I have never received a hard no. She is always willing, even if it's starfish 85% of the time. However, it's as plain as it could be. Blowjob: never. Going down on her: never. We've tried doggy style three times but she is so tense I can't get in correctly. PIV with me or her on top? Always on the table. So really, it was hard to complain. If I am butthurt for whatever reason and withhold affection for 2 weeks or so, she will attack me and I get the best sex of my life.

In DEVI terms we were D 1/10 E 10/10 V 1/10 I 5/10. Not too bad for Mr. Beta. Laughable probably, in the scheme of things.

I believe one key to our marriage being as good as it was is the fact that we were each other's first. (and it's not like we didn't really want to when we were dating) There is a trust there that has grown over 25 years that is simply awesome. Again, that does not come without it's problems.

Finding MRP I stumbled into deadbedrooms by hitting the 'random' button on reddit. Those were some fascinating stories and some post or other led me to MRP. I immediately realized I had stumbled onto some ideas that answered so many of my questions about life. I'm an academic person, so when I saw COURSE PREREQUISITES I got to work...

As many people testify, those three books changed my life.

Post MRP Everything about my life has improved. NMMNG compelled me to take a new job that nobody else wanted me to take. 1 1/2 year later I am loving my job and far more happy.

Lifting is the first key. I bought myself a power rack and a bar and about 200 lbs of weights and started strong lifts 5x5. Have been on that for 7 months now and I feel GREAT! My posture has improved with my squats, I'm gaining good weight (175 now), and I simply carry myself with more pride. The weights scared me to death at first, but now I look forward to the challenge each time. (failing that first squat at 190 was a huge milestone for getting past my fear)

Initiating strongly and not denying my sexual thirst has been the second key. Sex is improving with my dispensing of the beta games, especially in terms of immersion. Emotion has been what's kept me in the ballgame. I am on a quest to add the D and V.

Lastly, because it took me awhile to 'get it,' I realized the important lesson: that it's about improving me. I was not taught how to be a man, but I am learning now at 47. It is coming just in time for me to learn enough to hand down some of this to my son. I am slowly, slowly taking control of the ship and becoming the leader. My wife continues to respond positively to my new found decisiveness.

Creating the Slut

So this is going to be a challenge. I have read a few posts lately where a few men have the same problem as I do. If I used dirty talk right now, my wife would seize-up and lose all immersion. As of 2 years ago she didn't know what the word 'cunt' was when my daughter asked her. I've never heard her swear more than "bitch." She describes anything out of our normal routine as awkward. Awkward after 25 years!
My SMV has to be at least 2 above her if not 3 with the lifting proceeding well. I think I am in a good position to try to get this project going.

I realize this is about me. My wife is like she is because of me and my sorry sexual skills. So, I am going to change in this area and see if she is going to come along for the ride. I think she will, but I am overcoming 25 years (and more) of habit and programming. My intention is to go slow. I have a couple options on how I could proceed, but I think that will be my next post.

Is this something worthwhile to try and post? I would update at least once a month and more if anything of interest happened. Is this more suitable for OYS rather than the general forum?

Thanks to MRP and all the men who have contributed. It's appreciated greatly.
My wife went out of town for two weeks with the kids. She does this every summer, but I have been decreasing the amount of time she can go every year. This year, I told her she could go for two weeks. She did not respect my wishes and booked the trip for three extra days. I was not ready to create a hard line there, so I let it slide.

While she was gone, especially the first few days, she would shit test me on the phone, bitching from across the country about things that were going wrong at home (flea infestation, tree falling on house), which I was in the process of handling and did in fact fix. She hung up on me once. That was met with me generally ignoring her the next day and only doing facetime with the kids. She would send texts showing how sad she was. I just left those unanswered.

The day after that, I called her and acted positive and happy. She entered that mind-frame and stopped bitching. In fact, after that, she did something she had never done before. She got snapchat and started sending me sexy pictures. This is something she use to claim she would never do. This proves the importance of passing shit test even from across the country.

While she was gone I stayed busy as hell. I worked later than usually and achieved an important result at work. I continued to work out as usual. I went out with old friends and new friends and made sure to keep busy. Every time she called I was doing something important or fun. Honestly, the only shitty time I had during the entire two weeks was talking to her on the phone (some of the time).

Finally, they came home about six days ago. I am use to being shit tested when she gets back from her hometown, so I was prepared for it. I also had in my back pocket the fact that really I didn't miss her at all. I started questioning what, if any, value she added to my life at all since I have been at this for over a year. Divorce is not something I am even remotely scared of anymore and I have been working on a plan in case I determine she does not add any value in the coming months.

So, she gets back and the shit tests begin immediately. Simple ones I was expecting about things I supposedly didn't do right when she was out of town. Also things I didn't do that she would have liked me to do, but never told me she would like me to do them. For example, she was pissed I didn't come and meet them across the country. She was pissed I didn't pay her enough attention, etc.

I answered these with either AA, changing the subject, or cocky funny. This is going on all afternoon and night. Finally, we reach the point when the kids are asleep. We are hangout out in bed and I make a move. Shot down right away. I act indifferent, and that pisses her off, so she goes full force with the bitching, a more intense continuation from a day of it. She is also frigid as hell and just acting like a horrible teenager.
As I said in my last post, I am tired of bitching. I don't want bitching in my life anymore. I am no longer willing to tolerate bitching, especially this level of bitching after I have not seen her in two weeks.

I ask, "are you done." At this point I have not stopped smiling and laughing about what she is saying and have not lost my cool.

I had enough.

I looked at her straight in the eyes and said: "you need to stop being a huge bitch, or you need to get the hell out of my house. Your choice. I don't care. But I am not living with this anymore. You have the maturity level of a 12 year old. You need to grow up and control your emotions and treat me with respect and love. If you don't want to do that, I will go talk to a divorce attorney tomorrow. I will spend as much money as it takes to have my kids and get you out of this house. I spent two weeks without you and was happy every minute of it. For the last few months, I have had women throwing themselves at me and showering me with numbers. You don't think I can find a woman better than you? What do you do around here anyways? We have a maid now. I pay for everything. All you do is scream at me and the kids. Stop being a bitch. Stop being a bitch or get the fuck out. I have zero problems getting divorced, so if you want to continue acting this way, I am telling you right now I will end this and take everything I can."

After that, I walked out of the house and left. I didn't return for two hours and didn't answer any of her texts.

When I got home, I got in bed. She immediately climbed on top of me and started fucking me. We fucked twice.

We have had sex everyday since last Friday. There have been a few shit tests but zero bitching. It is like we are newlyweds again. She also handed full control of the finances over to me the next day.

The thing is, I am 100% serious. I am done with bitching and am kicking ass in all other areas of my life. She must add value or I am out and will fight. I think something clicked in her head, but if not, on to another adventure without her. I will be vigilant and hopeful. Maybe she is starting to accept my frame, but I know I already love living inside of it.
Aren't they gonna show his wife?

by En_sigma | February 8, 2016 | Link

Did my patriotic duty and watched the Underwhelming Bowl. Had the boy there so that, once again, I could show him why I am forcing him to learn how to throw a 40-yard spiral, and the wife was in and out as her Hallmark movies cycled (shiver). At one point she is sitting next to me on the couch (staring blankly up at the screen) and I ask her if she knows who is playing. The names had been up on the screen several times, as well as the team logos.

"Isn't it the....um...somebodys and the somebodys...?" And then she sort of half laughs. Yes, dear wife, at some point, a few weeks before the Super Bowl, the league makes sure that somebody is playing somebody else. Way to sum it up.

Fast forward to the presenting of the trophy and Peyton is dodging the retirement question (she had already asked if that was Eli?), and she says, "Aren't they going to show his wife?"

Now there are two reasons a woman might ask that question.

First, she believes that, being his wife, she deserves to be able to be on national TV. Even though Peyton just spent the last couple of hours getting his nuts pounded and after this he gets to soak in a tub of ice water, even though he went through years of painful injuries and surgeries and torturous physical therapy, Mrs. Manning deserves to be in the winners circle too because she, magnanimously, agreed to marry him. Essentially co-opting all of his accomplishments.

Second, and this is the reason my particular spousal unit asked, is so they can judge how pretty the athlete's wife is - which is never prettier than themselves, proving to herself that she could be the one in the limelight if she had not settled for the schmuck sitting next to her on the couch.

I tend to believe that more women would ask for the second reason, because they really don't care about your accomplishments. As long as they get whichever perk that makes other women look at them, the cause has no significance.

In the end I told her that she just missed them showing his wife. Really? Yes. There wasn't a mic on him at that point, but he leaned over and said something in her ear. What did he say? (woman I just said there was no mic on him! briefly rang in my head)

Well, from what I could see of his lips moving, and the way she ran off, I think he said, "Go get me a beer." (way to help me by talking about drinking a lot of beer tonight, Boss)

MRP is a life hack. It is not a noble pursuit, it is not fixing the problem. MRP teaches you how to be happy even though Shats Creek has passed flood stage and the crest is no where in sight.

EDIT: In my younger days, I would have asked why she asked that question. And to be honest, part of the reason I would have asked is that I did not already know the answer. Asking would have resulted in her having to explain, which she would not do, and would result in no uppy-downy. Now, after TRP and MRP, not only do I know the reason, I don't care about the reason, and I can make her laugh and go get me something to drink and STILL get the uppy-downy.

EDIT 2: Fo da PEYTONS
No substitute for doing it right
by Sepean | February 16, 2016 | Link

Lots of new guys seem to think they can substitute something half assed for the solid MRP advice given. The simple truth is that if other stuff worked, we'd list it as an option.

Here are three common mistakes:

I work out a lot.

The advice is not to work out. It is to lift. Other than lifting, working out is merely a hobby. It's a good hobby and easily beats most of the omega recreational activities people otherwise engage in, but it is not lifting.

Nobody cares how fit you are, how healthy you are, how fast you can run or how much skill you have. It's about being ripped. You need to look like one of these guys

The reason for lifting is that a) it lets you build muscle and b) it lets you lose fat without also losing lots of muscle. Since you want plenty of muscle and little fat, and no other sport gets you those effects, the advice is to lift. The only alternative is steroids.

And lifting is something very specific: heavy compound lifts combined with a cutting or bulking diet. You can't do this properly with body weight exercises or without counting calories. Otherwise you are at best doing a half assed approach, and very likely you will get zero progress.

There are a few exemptions to this, like the rare man who doesn't lift but is already ripped from some combination of genetics, years of hard work and good eating habits. If you're that guy and already look like of the guys on the above picture, congrats; you don't need to lift. But for most of us it isn't an option to take a job as an axe-swinging lumberjack and then wait 5 years to look good.

So go lift.

I try to find an argument that will make my wife accept my behavior without a fight

We don't do arguments. Don't DEER, it doesn't work.

We don't have some neat little verbal judo trick that will make your wife calm down instantly and become the sweet submissive sex kitten you've always wanted.
The program is laid out for you:

- raise your SMV
- enforce your boundaries
- learn to pass shit tests
- build your frame to be strong enough to weather her attacks

That’s it. It takes time, it takes effort, and it isn’t easy or something you can do without her bitching and crying over your "assholish behavior“ (it is in quotes because that's how she frames your behavior - you're not supposed to actually be an asshole). There's no magic word that will make this a quick fix. You're up against an evalution engine hardwired into her brain, refined by evolution over eons to weed out anything but real deal alphas. There are no shortcuts and no free passes. She will test your frame and you will have to endure that without flinching.

I work hard and make a lot of money and that should get me sex

Your job, your income, those are beta qualities. Good beta qualities (and we advice you to get plenty of good beta to go along with your alpha), but beta qualities none the less.

And beta qualities only make her want to stay with you. They don't make her want to fuck you brains out.

You will only bring out the sex kitten in her with alpha qualities, and those are:

- mostly behaviour (frame, passing shit tests, OI, game)
- some looks
- some preselection

That's it. Anything else is irrelevant bullshit that won't make her horny. Stop feeling entitled because of your job or your past accomplishments or your sacrifices. It doesn't matter.

Conclusion

The bottom line is, you can't just come on MRP, read the sidebar, and then think you can get the results without actually implementing what you've read. That's like expecting to get ripped from having a gym membership without ever going, or going there and doing Zumba classes. The advice that is on here is there for a reason. It's because it is what works. Everything you skip or substitute for something else will hurt your chances.

Lift and lead.
We all say it....LIFT! It is at the very core of MRP. It is the cornerstone on which we build our strategy.

And somehow, at the start of my journey, I thought I would do other exercises and diet and somehow it would work out ok for me.

I was wrong. And I realised it and owned that shit and now, three months later, I can wholeheartedly tell any noob, LIFT!

The results, sofar, I am still building on years of inactivity, I have made good progress, both mentally and physically.

And the unexpected benefit? I used to be an insomniac. Now I sleep. I hit the pillow and I sleep, and wake up before my alarm clock. I lie in bed and stretch, drink some water and then leap out of bed or onto my wife.

Previously, I would wake up at 2AM and just lie there and start up the hamster wheel. I would lie there agonizing and analysing my relationship with my wife. These thoughts would dominate my nightly routine of slumberless tossing and turning. Untill I eventually get up, start snacking and watching some mindless shit on tv or porn. Sleep would return at about 04h30, to be rudely interupted by an alarm clock. Ugh. This has not happened once since I started lifting.

I don't presume to know the scientific reason behind it, but my thinking is that my body now just shuts down to sleep, and in no way will a squeaky hamster wheel stand in the way. As I said, not very scientific but the body must be taxed in some way to function properly.

So, do you lift bro?
The Little Things solve the Big Ones.

by fakefalse | December 16, 2016 | Link

I'm always posting on r/askMRP cause I'm too scared to play with the big boys in this forum. But I clued into something yesterday, and wanted to share. Maybe it will help someone.

I see so many posts with questions like "she wants to go girls night out. What do I do!?" Or "Major shit test! How do I respond!?" And "she is angry and won't talk to me, what do I do?" (I used to pull this one) To me, these are last minute panic attacks that can't be solved in a simple post. They are also noob indicators that patience and gains are needed. You can't solve those questions in one move or one big confrontation. You have to slowly establish barriers and consistently demonstrate your beliefs and expectations clearly so that everyone knows what you feel is acceptable and what is not. Your actions and behaviors will bring everyone on the same page.

Examples are always expected here, so let me take a deep breath and testify.

Things have been damn good with the wife lately (why did I just jinx it?). Sure, I slip up here and there and am constantly making small error corrections, or readjusting my path as I grow stronger and develop my RP dexterity. But remarkably, there have been no outbursts. No major confrontations. We have our moments, but I've not been challenged in any big way for months now. And yes, you better believe there have been plenty of opportunities.

The thought was triggered by a friend who was bitching cause he was in the "dog house" or "sleeping on the couch" again or something similar (Shrug). But it got me to thinking. That shit ain't playing out in my life these days.

Here's what I think. (... And please challenge me if you think I'm way out in left field) It's because I'm more assertive on the little things. Like choosing a restaurant or picking the adventure for the day.

- Here's one: I'll do the gym at lunch at work. But when she loses her motivation to go herself, I'll advertise that I'm going again that evening. I may be burnt out or tired, but I know it motivates her. It startles her each time, but she is quick to pick her ass off the couch to follow. A couple times she called my bluff. I really didn't wanna go, I had already done mine- well I went without her cause I had opened my big mouth. Had a good jog on the machine. I could see the regret in her eyes the next morning both times. Hehe.
- Here's another: I'm proactive with the kids on homework and they are very engaged and excited about school lately, because of my direct involvement. She jumps in to help now, so she can be part of the fun.
- One more: I'll help do some of her jobs like if the dishes were skipped. She asked me to bring the load of laundry into the basement cause it was too heavy, just the other day. I responded that it had already been done the night before. I'm loving the look on her face. She wants to find stuff to bite into me with or nag about, but there just isn't any ammo. And if there is, it's small, therefore petty and makes her look silly. So shit tests are really just playful banter now and we are more fun about it than combative.

-Oh! Here's a big one. She now asks if it's okay to make certain purchases. By requesting permission, it frees her of responsibility or guilt if it's a luxury purchase or guilty pleasure. I got burned once. After I let her buy something, money was tight for a couple days because I have a buffer I like to maintain. She threw it in my face, that I had not managed our money properly when the constraint impeded a more practical expense. So when she asked for another big purchase for Xmas two weeks ago, I warned her that it would be tight for two weeks. Explained it to her as a choice. When she started freaking out about a missed opportunity on another xmas sale lasr week, I gave her a look and she backed down straight away. Didn't even have to explain. Her shoulders dropped immediately and her tone grew soft. She was disappointed, not angry. I patted her butt saying "Just gotta get through this week babe". She perked up and it felt more like a shared challenge rather than me being a mean old grump husband. And things were fine. I was startled by that one. It was so organic, I didn't clue into its machinations until just now, while writing this post.

So there you have it. Work on the little things. Express your attitude and beliefs through action on all the everyday shit that fills your life, and the big stuff will solve itself.

Keep in mind, this has taken a few years to achieve. And yes, despite this all sounding like a humbleBrag, I didn't mention all the crap that still dumbfounds me. I still trip up and have my Angerphase moments, as well as my covert contacts. I catch my bluepill programing slip out when her face looks grossed out and I realize I've been taking too much, sharing my feels and being her girlfriend. So I shut my trap and kick myself for going lax. I still disappoint myself by not being the man I want to be. But that's because I build myself to higher standards. I'm on the right track. The growth never ends. Once you start lifting, prepare to be forever small...

Phew. Ok... I'm ready for it. Hit me guys.
Grandpa Easy's Guide to Giving Thanks

by EasyDaysHardNights | November 21, 2019 | Link

---

Background:

Thanksgiving and other Holiday celebrations are coming. I'm sure we're all doing the right thing. Taking the lead and making sure shit gets done in preparation.

/u/reddreng posted something related to this in his OYS this week.

Took the lead on getting the house and backyard ready, and neither of us have ever done a turkey before, so will figure that one out too. Coordinating with my friends on what to bring.

It reminded me of my own role coming up next week and led me to thinking about sharing a time honored tradition from my family that you gents can use at your own gatherings.

As far back as anyone can remember in my family, the patriarch at the time led us in sharing what we were grateful for at Thanksgiving. That in itself is not overly special.

Looking back now with RP eyes however, I can see how my grandfather and great-grandfather really leveraged the hilt out of being the AMOG in those situations and anyone following their process could do the same thing.

Rather than just post this as a reply in /u/reddreng's OYS ... I'm going to use his gathering as the example here and give the rest of you guys the chance to leverage at as well.

Using this approach you will:

- Be setting expectations in advance on something to be done.
- Go first, leading in front of a group of people.
- Be setting an example. People will see demonstrated in front of them, how they should behave.
- Cast a positive Frame on the gathering and be inviting other people to join you in it.
- Demonstrate a character of generosity and magnanimity with those who are present.
- Invite your wife to assist you in a way that elevates her among her peer group.
- Generate Big Tingles ...

Execution:

Tell the people who are coming that each person will be expected to share one thing (just one) that they are grateful for that's happened over the previous year. They should be thinking about it ahead of time and keep it short. Let them know you will start that time by sharing what you are grateful for. It's generally best to start after eating is done so that everyone is fed and there's no distractions.
Once the moment is right, here's how it will go ...

You will start by sharing something like, "I'm grateful for our new baby. I was concerned about her being born several weeks early but she's fine now and is the light of our lives." If you take less than a minute, everyone else will generally take less than a minute. Keep your moment SHORT but even more important... make sure it's absolutely authentic. A moment like that among friends and family is bonding.

Next, ask your wife to share. She should join you in keeping it short and authentic. At that point most people will get the hint on how they should act.

When your wife is done, you invite someone else to share. You are controlling the decision making on who gets to speak.

Important - Ahead of time - share with your wife your concern that some folks may talk a long time or get off track. Ask her to help you by being sensitive to when those moments are happening and stepping in to politely wrap those moments up. You can give her a look when it feels like things are dragging. Women are generally better at this type of thing than guys and you're giving her a role to play in the process. When she does well (she will), be sure to smile and nod. Reward her for helping. Be sure to thank each person after they share. Your approval and generosity sets you up as even more of a leader.

Regarding kids. Do NOT underestimate how important it is for children of all ages to participate. If you are setting the right tone, they will want to share their thoughts as well. Do not force them to do it. If they decline, that's fine. If they do, however ... it can be some of the most powerful moments you will experience. Kids are nothing BUT authentic. They will absolutely set the bar on being real. If they are seeing true gratitude being expressed ... they will follow that lead.

A few years ago during our sharing time my son shared how grateful he was for how hard his mother and I were working to take care of our family. It was during a moment of extreme financial pressure for us and both my wife and I were concerned that the kids were upset. It was impossible for our kids to not know what was going on ... so we did our best to manage what happened and keep things moving in a positive direction.

Hearing my son express his thankfulness made all the sleepless nights, and ass dragging days worth it. It also bonded our whole extended family together. Everyone knew the situation we were in and of course all the aunts, uncles and grandparents were concerned for the kids as well. Hearing the words my boy shared ... brought relief to everyone in the room and gave him a relief valve for some of the emotions he was feeling himself. Years later, our whole family still refers back to that moment.

Allow the process to take time. With 20 people each taking 2 to 3 minutes, it may take an hour to do this. THAT'S OK. You are creating a special moment for everyone there at the dinner. As everyone sees the moment unfolding, if you do your job in setting and managing the tone well (Holding Frame), you will literally watch everyone sink into that moment you created. More than food, you are gathering as friends and family. Creating a moment like this is what the whole dinner is about. It's what life is about. I guarantee the rest of their lives won't be full of moments like this. GIFT them that moment.

Final Notes:

This approach doesn't have to just be limited to Thanksgiving. Any gathering will do.

- When someone is retiring at work (and everyone will truly miss them).
- Graduation day
- A rehearsal dinner
- Use your imagination. Feel free to add suggestions in the comments below.

Don't eat so much that you're tired. You want to be ready to go after everyone heads home and you get alone time with the wife. Done well, you will have delivered a big bag of AMOG FEELZ. Nuff said.

Good luck, fellas.
It's been covered before - but new guys get the concept of frame all wrong. Frame isn't some you hold or you don't, it's something you have or don't. Frame is your world view and your reality. Everything that doesn't in your reality is funny, amusing, or irrelevant.

He can not get the concept (I think) that she can possibly view anything that happened in any other way then how HE chose to view it.

So how can you quickly tell when a man has no frame? No sense of his personality reality? Because instead of being dismissive of anything that doesn't match his reality - his feel the need to try to peacock and dick measure.

OP: It's hard as hell to project positivity

Me: Because you don't project it you stupid bitch. You learn how to embrace positivity and enjoy life for what it is. Otherwise, it's all horseshit and all you're doing is pretending to be a clown. Here's a hint - clowns aren't actually happy.

By the way - everyone at MRP, askMRP, and TBP knows you autistic fucks are going to fail and fuck it up. It's on you to not be an autistic fuck and fuck it up - which you're obviously going to any so -- what's the point of this warning in the first place?

OP: Maybe you're warning yourself? It's cute how you say "YOU autistics"...

Completely missing the knowledge and taking the bait. You jar a guy's butthurt, and their blinded to everything else. It's so, so, so easy. If some random dickhead on the internet can trigger you to make you wanna amog over some stupid bullshit, imagine how much more effective people who you're emotionally invested into are going to be able to trigger you.

With solid frame, a solid worldview of what you represent, stand for, and won't stand for, you can actually pick and choose what you accept into your worldview.

For example, the only thing that was useful in my first post was - You learn how to embrace positivity and enjoy life for what it is. This is actually a really hard skill that takes significant amounts of effort actively changing your mindset. Instead, OP focuses on the completely unimportant and totally useless fluff. Great - instead of picking out the value from a conversation and figuring out how to leverage it, OP misses the point completely.

Sidenote: I don't put effort into useless newbies when there are not useless newbies making solid progress every single week at Own Your Shit - demonstrate that you have the spine to not get instantly butthurt and you MIGHT actually be able to make some progress. This is because weak men are a total waste of time.

So imagine OP's wife is bitching at him about something. Instead of focusing on the actual problem, OP gets sidetracked by being insulted by her FEELINGS on the problem. Way to go OP - you just missed the entire point, and you missed the diamond because you were too busy digging through shit because you never realized that the ONLY thing you care about are diamonds!

This happens all the time -- 1, 2, and I could find more I'm sure, but I'm feeling lazy. This was just the last two days off the top of my head.

I write in a way that if a man focuses on the insults and gets butthurt (frameless men get butthurt a lot), they'll never see the meat. And this is me, some random cunt, over text, that they'll never, ever interact with in real life.

You have the power to pick and choose what you actually waste your time and energy giving a shit about. Don't let some anonymous dickhead or your dear precious wife dictate what care about by baiting you with some stupid, stupid bullshit. Decide and focus only on the things that matter - for me, that's the potential value of each and every interaction. For you, it might be different - but decide!
Porn, Fantasy, & Keeping the Gag on the table
by TrainingTheBrain | October 13, 2015 | Link

Porn

I recently spent time with a friend of mine who was going through some shit with his marriage. Among the many things discussed was sex. This led us down the rabbit hole where it was eventually revealed that he had turned to porn.

Porn is destructive and it is addictive. It can be used as that quick fix when on deployment or an extended business trip, but too often it’s used daily, sometimes multiple times a day by guys who can't get the release from their woman.

Jerking off to porn is one of the most weaksauce things a Man can do. You lose your seed, you lose your energy, you sap your motivation/drive, and can you imagine what it looks like if you were to see yourself in a mirror?? Just sitting there, grabbing your dick until you make a mess?

Fucking Pathetic.

It desensitizes you to your woman and leads to you denying her (why fuck, you’ve already released) and then it just spirals out of control. You get this amplified image of big tits, big asses, perfect tans, and fucking clean perfect money shots...

Except you’re not the dude fucking her, you’re the faggot getting his rocks off to pixels. As soon as you finish you feel that too, that shame where you close the video and think, well that’s that. Except, what should you have been doing during that time? What improvement could you have made?

Sure, if it’s late and you are stuck in some foreign land waiting to get home then fucking go for it. I wouldn’t I’d save my load and turn the black lights on when I fucked my wife and blow my beauty fluid on her like a shooting star. If you’re deployed, I get it do your thing in the porta john in 110f heat, whatever.

But for the average dude - just fucking STOP. Subscribe to NoFap OR just use your fucking will power, self-discipline goes a long way on the RedPill Road.

Fantasy

I was driving around with a buddy who I noticed kept looking at all of the passing cars. I asked him if he was trying to break his neck. He said (and unfortunately I will give the exact quote) “No dude, I’m looking to see if there’s any hot chicks in the cars.” (See: Pathetic Modern ‘men’)

This mother fucker couldn't even live in the moment of a car ride without desperately hoping to make a connection with a stranger in another car. His desire to just see an attractive woman disgusted me as it wreeked of shame and the pitiful state of men.
To the lurkers who I fucking know are reading this. You have to stop living in the fantasy where you’re the fucking Man and someday bitches are going to know it

If you face the harsh truth of reality, swallow the pill, let it dissolve, and kill your ego THEN you will see how women just show the fuck up. Having good hygiene, a sense of fashion and being sub 15% bf is all it takes. Married or not chicks will talk to you and from there you can decide what you do with them. But trying to get 2 seconds of attention from a girl in a car, a person you’ll never talk to – how about you spend your time on something productive like learning the art of holding a conversation or keeping your focus on a topic for more than 5 seconds.

Though, to be honest, the crowd I’m trying to reach probably hasn’t made it this far.

Keeping the Gag on the table

The only person who determines how far you go in your marriage and sex life is you. If you want to tie your wife up, one night introduce her to rope and then go gently with it. See how she reacts; follow her actions, not her words.

Get the black light and wear brand new white boxers. As soon as she tries to compliment you pull out the gag you ordered from amazon for 17$ and shut her up. Then again, go to town.

You are the fucking Man, nobody tells you how far or short you can go. If you want whips, sex swings, rope, cuffs, what the fuck ever then keep that shit on the table. Nothing is off limits, wife tells you anal is off the table it means for you she doesn’t want to do anal (See: Dread + increase SMV)

If you really want to fuck her in the ass, become the Man she’ll let fuck in the ass. Use better game, kino, foreplay, whatever. You’ll get to the point where your wife will do anything if you’re the type of Man who deserves it. So keep the gag and everything else on the table.

- Fuck Porn

- Face the discomfort of reality over the comfort of fantasy

- Get the sex you want by getting the sex you deserve.

Acta, Non Verba
I've been with my wife for a little over 5 and a half years and all has usually been well.

However, after stumbling upon this sub and reading through the materials, I knew that life had to change because fuck me, I was beta as fuck and I wasn't getting anywhere. Sex happened rarely and the only time it would happen is when it was initiated by me, and you guys know how it is, you can tell they didn't really want it. It was like masturbating with a pussy.

I was fat, constantly on my computer, whilst she ran the house and essentially made myself her 'child'. Fucking hell, it's pitiful to look back upon.

So I made a change a few months ago on my path to self improvement, and to stop being such a beta in life.

I joined the gym and didn't give a flying fuck what anyone else thought. All of my anger at myself I tunneled into lifting as much as I could and I felt like a man again.

I went out more, pursued a social life, and began speaking to people again. I naturally began to open up at work and now I speak to everyone that passes me, engaging in conversation and now people look up to me more.

I changed my diet and began to make more of my own food, and found myself a new passion for cooking. This alongside the gym made the weight just melt off.

It was a sudden change for my wife to see me doing more for myself, going out more and developing a sense of masculinity. I transitioned that life into my relationship and became a man.

As I was going through life on a journey of self improvement, the pedestal I placed her upon began to lower and I took control of everything. Finances, trips out, where we would eat etc. I never asked for permission to do anything, I just did it. It all came naturally to me.

It changed every dynamic of my life and my relationship. She just can't get enough of me and sex has gone through the roof. 8 times in just the last 5 days.

Swallowing the Red Pill requires a complete lifestyle change, but fuck me, it works like a charm.

Thank you to the Red Pill community for helping people like me get to where we want to be in life. You're all doing God's work for men.
For the first time in about 2 years (not counting my own contribution) we have added books to the Married Red Pill Sidebar!

The Red Queen is sort of a zoological textbook about female manipulation of males throughout the animal kingdom based on the premise that sexual reproduction is needed to adapt to diseases and that this central fact has important implications for human social behavior (all of which align with TRP/MRP praexology).

For example: "whichever gender has to spend the most time and energy creating and rearing offspring tends to avoid extra mating. Women, though far less interested in multiple partners, will commit adultery if stuck with a mediocre mate."

It has been a while since I read it so I will just say it is extremely interesting and hope somebody else will post a summary of the book.

I just finished Practical Female Psychology so I will unpack it as much as possible in this post using my 700 highlighted notes.

First, the book is not "Red Pill" exactly but was written by 3 male psychologists who collaborated over several years on the question of "Female Psychology" and the PRACTICAL ways that men can deal with it. Who would have guessed that they would come to the EXACT SAME conclusions as the good men of Married Red Pill.

Who wants to bet if they had included a female as a co-author they would have reached some different conclusions? No takers? Didn't think so.

BULLET POINT SUMMARY OF PRACTICAL FEMALE PSYCHOLOGY

This book has it all, shit tests, hypergamy, hamsters, alpha fucks & Beta bucks, frame, sexual attraction, you name it:

--Men who become physically unfit in a relationship learn very quickly that many women have no compunction of kicking a man while he is down.....she needs to feel that he is the same strong bastard she was initially attracted to even when he is sick in bed with the flu (aka Hypergamy).

--to maintain sexual attraction from a female, we need to understand female logic but at the same time remain as real, masculine men....chick logic leads to notions such as "if you don't talk about it, it never happened" (aka emotion driven Hamster).

--tease her about her emotions, don't take her seriously and watch as she get's hornier and hornier (aka Agree and amplify shit test responses, avoid fights, fog, Amused Mastery, etc).
--in a nutshell, the female basic conflict is the need to manipulate a man into her role of provider and a lowering of her sexual attraction towards any man who lets her....women divide men into "lovers" and "providers" (aka Alpha Fucks, beta bucks).

--in many species the female kills the male after copulation. In humans, the "killing" is done on a psychological level.

--for most men, female language is incredibly imprecise, infuriatingly vague, and when exposed to it for extended periods becomes extremely stressful for the man.

--language to a women promotes and maintains harmony in her environment... they do not disclose this language to men in order to maintain power and options and because most of them have no idea their language is different than men.

--women oppose male only gatherings because they know if men are free to speak, they will quickly learn how to strip women of their power.

--learn womanese because the more a woman subcoms with you, the more she is sexually attracted and being able to transfer between these modes of communication while maintaining your masculinity is the secret to seduction.

Women attempt to set "the frame" of a relationship early on- so pay attention!!!! If you fall into her frame you are doomed because that is the way it will be. It also means she wants you for a relationship. THIS is the main screening tool. Is she looking for a STR with fun sex? Kids? Family? A provider? If so, the most important thing is HOW SHE TREATS YOU (aka if you are tagged as a provider this is just peachy...but watch for her to cut off sex (no..fucking...shit). Bottom line? You better play a part in guiding the frame of the relationship or there will be problems (yah, no..fucking...shit: aka: Have a frame and hold it from the beginning!).

--just because she is married doesn't mean your wife doesn't want to be seduced. You are married and you still want your dick sucked (I LOLLZZ hard on this one- Like I said in my book and podcast: The problem is probably that you forgot that your wife was a woman).

--Lots of tips dealing with LMR and anti-slut defense in LTR's primarily based on changing the man’s perception of the basic male fallacy- belief in the Madonna/Whore complex (aka I can't cum in the mouth of the woman who kisses my kids good night).

--If a man gives up his honor for a woman, she may pretend to continue to love him, but her love will already be dead....

--Women are divided into a 2 X 2 factorial that is NOT binary. The domains are:

High (sex) drive vs. Low Drive (HD vs. LD)

High Self Esteem vs. Low Self Esteem (HSE vs. LSE)

---A woman who is HD/LSE needs to be handled very differently than a woman who is HD/HSE and the book breaks it down for each type of woman in very specific terms.
--LSE groups will withdraw from a strong man who does not supplicate to them as will many young feminists (the authors apparently don't get the reality that feminists ARE PART OF the LSE group because the raging feminazis are not attractive. Of course they are LSE!).

--Break the trance (aka "Ignore her beauty").

--HSE women place heavy importance on safety and offspring and look the hardest for providers and work the hardest to betify their men. This may be the first published use of that term.

--LSE women have a deep seated need to psychologically castrate men....they will often consider a man a high-value prospect when he demonstrates the capability of abusing them.

--HSE women have a deep seated need to "test" their men and they will take their time to do so (aka, the Shit Tests never end).

--Lots of time spent on identifying LSE and HSE. For example, a LSE woman will not test a man before intimacy (huge red flag because "testing" is typical female behavior. If she doesn't do it, she aint right!).

--An HSE woman will target your heart...once she has tested your "alpha" and is attracted she will gain rapport and use it to control your mind and feelings, achieving an ownership over you.

---if you are a HD man always attracting HSE/LD Materialistas, then the problem is probably you...you can spot him by his preposterous lack of fashion sense and deferential attitude towards women (which is why on MRP we emphasize being strong and standing up to your women guys- because this is most of you right there).

--if you are a reformed player attracting party girls (aka cheating whore wives) the problem is you- for screening out the "Good Girls" in the beginning.

--women are experts at the "double bind" wherein they offer two alternatives and are then able to bitch about whichever the man chooses....the good news is a woman using a double bind (aka an obnoxious type of "Shit Test") is actually sexually attracted and is likely unaware of her actions.

--A LSE woman will persistently use double binds while a HSE woman will use them initially but they will decrease.

--Stages of female manipulation: include:

1. Testing the male

2. Seeking communication.
3. Putting him to work

4. Evolutionary selfishness

5. Self-determination.

--Women can also be divided into 3 main groups orthogonal to HD/LD and HSE/LSE and they are child's play to identify:

Materialistas (aka Beta Buck fuckers and gold diggers),

Good Girls (aka feminine and motherly LTR candidates) and Adventuresses (aka party girls and disloyal sluts with a high n-count and easy lay propensity).

Now we are up to 12 categories and most of the book is devoted to dealing with them: For example, a HD, HSE, Adventuress is the best fuck buddy you can have while a HSE Good Girl is the best for a LTR or marriage.

--finally but not least: in order to maintain attraction with a woman you need to have regular interactions with other attractive women.....(yes, we know that one!)

I hope this post inspires you guys to order this book!
I like browsing r/all sometimes. I'll usually find a couple of cute animal videos to show my wife. Inevitably, some incredibly beta male whining will always show up.

Case in point - https://np.reddit.com/r/AdviceAnimals/comments/45taqf/my_wife_was_very_surprised_on_valentines_day_this/

Never once is it pointed out that the guys bitching about not getting their dicks suck most likely aren't guys who's dicks are worth sucking. Choreplay, begging, blah blah blah. These guys get married and the first thing they decide to do is become incredibly unattractive.

Which brings me to my point. The reason it's so easy to fuck married women is the same reason it's so easy to fuck women with boyfriends. When a woman is single, your competition is everyone. When a woman is "committed", your competition is only 1 person. And I'd bet that that 1 person is most likely a gigantic boring turd. So when CHAD or Senile CAD (shoutout to 60year old+) rocks up and decides he wants her... holy shit. It's like eating Michelin star food after you've been eating frozen dinners for the past 9 years.

Which brings me to my second point. If your wife is fucking someone else or looking to fuck someone else, consider for a moment that you're a guy that deserves to be cheated on. If your wife is as high quality as you'll likely claim she is, then doesn't she deserve someone better than the sad sack of shit that you are? Now, if you're fucking awesome, then don't you deserve better than the lying, cheating, ungrateful harpy that is your cuntbag? In which case, why haven't you lawyered up yet? Because the truth of the matter is this, it's more likely the former instead of the latter.

You, my dear anonymous reader, are most likely the type of guy that deserves to be cheated on. Your wife, most likely, still for some god forsaken reason is putting up with your weak shit. So when your wife fucks another dude because you suck, why are you going to get all pissy at your wife? Why aren't you pissy at yourself? "She promised! Our vows!" you can whine. But I can guarantee you that her vows and her promises weren't to the sad sack of shit you are, they were to the great guy she thought she was going to marry. And I'm sure that your vows weren't to the harpy piece of shit that sits on the couch and eats potato chips all day either.

So take action. Either sit there, whine, mope, and complain about how it's unfair. Or go put in the time, energy, and effort to be the guy who isn't worth cheating on - the guy who can dump her ass and pick up that slut Debby from next door no problemo while your wife gets her shit out of your house.

tl;dr - most of you guys deserve to get cheated on.

Sidenote: tl;dr's devalue your efforts.
The Four Horseman of the (Divorce) Apocalypse according to Traditional Marriage Counseling: STFU IS NOT "STONEWALLING"

by RedPillCoach | January 15, 2018 | Link

A few days ago some SJW demanded to know if there was anybody on MRP who understood traditional approaches to therapy. Let me stick my hand up and offer my experience and knowledge. I have been a lurker for several years on MRP and TRP and have read all the sidebar books and lift 3 times a week.

I am also studying traditional marriage counseling as I proceed through my Life and Relationship Coaching Certification coursework.

I note one item recommended for the 3rd or 4th "Marriage Counseling" (MC) visit is to explain to the client(s) the 4 Horseman of the Apocalypse which lets you know that you are on your way to a divorce.

Displaying these features means that your marriage is on the fast track to divorce:

1. Criticism: If you spend time nitpicking and criticizing your partner then the Trad MC's say you should STOP.

2. Contempt: If you view everything your partner does or says with a derisive snort or an eye roll then the Trad MC's say STOP.

3. Defensiveness: If you are defensive and take offense at whatever your partner says or does then MC's say STOP.

4. Stonewalling: If you refuse to fight and engage the other partner who is railing against you then MC's say STOP.

Let's take those in turn:

1 + 2. Criticism and Contempt: First, observe that the these are FEMALE tactics in marriage because they work so well on men. Please also observe that the second two (Defensiveness and Stonewalling) are MALE tactics almost always in response to the female's constant harping and carping, disrespect, and contempt.

Does anybody else find it very interesting that the "Four Horseman" signaling Divorce are Female Attack Patterns and Male Defensive Mechanisms against those attacks?
The "solution" is even more interesting and clearly informed by the cultural Marxist, equality brush. They ignore the real solution and they completely ignore the fact that men and women experience relationships very differently (and if you think otherwise then you must hate women). The answer on which the MC's agree really struck a nerve with me. They think the answer is to back off.

So, MC's basically tell the Wife: "Back off and stop being such a bitch."

Then they tell the husband: "Stop Defending yourself from her attacks and talk and talk and talk!"

This is Marriage counseling summarized.

In case I was not clear, obviously Men being "Critical" or "Contemptuous" is NOT OK (and while it does occur in some relationships we rarely see it on MRP. In fact, Criticism and Contempt by a husband is far, far less damaging to the relationship than a woman being Critical and/or Contemptuous. The damage done is also very different. When a man is critical he drives away the wife because she (rightly) sees him as a spoiled little boy. Strong men are affirming and when they are critical it is a statement, followed by the solution, and then the criticism is done. There is no nitpicking, whining, crying, or complaining. If there is, then he is not being a strong man and it repels the wife.

However, when a woman is Critical, it poisons the relationship because it means she is "Unhappy!" Women want to respect their men and be bonded to a strong man. If they are critical, they are showing they do not respect their man and do not see him as somebody they can rely on.

These are two very different consequences that MC's completely miss in their fervent drive to believe that men and women are exactly the same.

Further, there are major problems with this approach. Most important, an obvious and MUCH better solution is to cultivate the OPPOSITE of these Female Attack patterns. Don't just "back off" on being critical and contemptuous! I say stop it right now! Moreover, I say women should not just decrease their bad behavior but they should work on increasing their good behaviors. Women should cultivate the opposite of these features- that is, if women would practice APPRECIATION and GRATITUDE and RESPECT they would find their marriage suddenly improved! One cannot be "Contemptuous" and critical while practicing gratitude and respect.

3 Defensiveness: The first tactic men use to attempt to adapt to a constant barrage of criticism and contempt arises from fear and oneitis- in short a lack of abundance mentality. There is no need to be "Defensive" but if you have an abundance mentality and know this woman can be replaced with a better and younger model then this is the absolute cure for Omega style, weak and unmasculine Defensiveness.

MRP constantly identifies "DEER-ing as a fundamental mistake men make in their relationships with women. When men feel compelled to "Defend" or "Explain" or "Evade" or "Rationalize" then he is being "Defensive. MC's and MRP agree that men need to avoid being "Defensive." MRP goes further and identifies WHY (so you don't look like a weak bitch and women want strong men).

4. Stonewalling: This is where MRP and traditional MC's appear to part company but on closer inspection we are really saying the same thing to men.

First, STONEWALLING IS NOT STFU. Stonewalling is AUTISM PLUS STFU. According to MC's any time a man walks away from an argument or refuses to engage in arguing with the wife he is "Stonewalling." On MRP we could not disagree more and this is the source of the women who claim that MRP is "abusive" to women. In fact, walking away from a fight and refusing to support bad behavior is the PROPER and ONLY POSSIBLE response today to a carping, harping, bitching harpy sex-denying screechtard.

At the same time, a LOT of MRP guys, especially at the beginning interpret STFU to mean walk away like an autistic savant and refuse to have a discussion with the wife. That is NOT the meaning of STFU. What MRP means is to walk away and refuse to engage a woman who wants to fight or is engaging in unacceptable (disrespectful or contemptuous) behavior. STFU does NOT mean don't talk, don't plan your day, or don't discuss issues with the house, work, or kids. It means don't fight with the wife and don't talk about Red Pill or self-improvement or anything of the sort. It also means you are correct to withdraw your time and attention from a wife who is being disrespectful or contemptuous. It is not “punishment” but merely a consequence of unpleasant behavior. You are a MAN and have better ways to spend your time!

Lessons Learned: Traditional Marriage Counseling is a flawed creation that fails to take into account real and substantial gender differences and sex roles in marriage. In their "treatment" they conflate and equate female attack mechanisms with male defense mechanisms and (in the best case scenario) they try to blunt her blades while stripping the man of his armor so that her now slightly duller blades can still do damage to the now defenseless man. Even worse, they fail to address the root of the problem (woman's loss of attraction for her husband which comes with sexual denial, unhappiness, Contempt and Criticism- aka Shit Tests) and appear to completely ignore the critical underlying issue of sexual attraction, probably because that would force them to acknowledge that men and women are attracted to different things.
I am building a theory of Dread for my in-review Book and soon to be Best-Seller when it comes out in December:

Saving a Low Sex Marriage: A Man's Guide to Dread, Seduction, and the Long Game

In the book and my posts, in particular the post on Dread Game on which much of the book is based, I suggest a strategy of slow withdrawal for sexual denial. The COVERT message must be "Fuck Me or Fuck You." When your wife denies sex you withdraw your attention and ultimately your commitment. Sexual denial is the linchpin of female power and extreme measures must be taken to counteract this nuclear weapon. Punishment of behavior is an effective deterrent and a stimulus to change that behavior.

Fortunately, building "Dread" that the woman is going to lose you magically fires up the pussy throbbing reaction. Dread inspired sex is NOT Starfish and it is not just the woman throwing out a bone. Dread inspired sex is genuinely passionate. Rollo identified this back in 2012 as The Gift of Anxiety.

However, if your wife is NOT withdrawing by refusing your sexual advances and if she is NOT being a bitch about it but genuinely trying to please you, albeit with Starfish Sex, then I strongly believe that a different strategy than punishment should be used. The problem in Starfish sex is NOT a disobedient, unpleasant, or rebellious wife. So in this case, you should not worry about punishing a wife for her lack of desire. The problem is that YOU are not attractive enough to her to sustain passionate sex every time.

TLDR: My theory is that in the case of Starfish Sex from a "never say no" wife, increasing SMV and flipping those attraction triggers should be the exclusive strategy.

Indeed, some notables such as Dalrock argues from a Christian perspective that Dread is not necessary at all and increasing SMV should be the exclusive strategy in all cases.

Desire cannot be negotiated BUT it can be created and commanded. Desire is not a choice and lack of desire is not going to be turned around by punishment. It is only turned around by subtle Dread and becoming more attractive- starting with OI and getting rid of covert contracts.
The MRP Bait & Switch - don't say i didn't warn you...
by spexer | August 19, 2016 | Link

Lots of new folks coming here (welcome!) and this might come to a surprise to many of you.

You might think The MRP Bait & Switch refers to tricks to get your wife to give you sex. And there are tactics discussed on this forum that help in seduction.

And for most, that what initially brings you here. You were googling for ways to get more sex from your wife and you ended up here. And sure enough, this place helps husbands get laid. No doubt about it.

But then an interesting thing happens on the way to a sex-filled marriage. --And this might sound crazy but there are plenty of MRP veterans here who will back me up-- Getting sex no longer becomes the goal.

As MRP'ers read the books, start following their MAP and get to lifting - they change. There is a evolution that comes with becoming the captain of yourself, and then the captain of your family and your life. Shame turns to pride and you become more and more focused on becoming the best YOU that is possible - that is the new never-ending goal.

Oh - and the sex? Yeah you get plenty of that by becoming a confident MRP man - but that is no longer the reason why you are motivated.

The bait & switch is that MRP is not really about getting your wife to have sex with you. We are building men here.

Welcome.
My kids are 9 and 7 - boy and girl. Both have played Ball since the age of 6. My son is an average player and athlete, however by daughter is a gifted athlete and exceptional player for her age. She plays 10U and is the starting pitcher.

Since the beginning I have helped on both teams as an official assistant coach. It was the best I could do with my job commitment and level of travel. Recently and strategically I moved into a new role to get off the road as I have been traveling extensively for the past 15 years, and it was getting a little old.

This has gifted me the opportunity for several things, and allowed me the opportunity to move into the head coach role for both my son’s baseball team, and my daughter’s softball team.

Coaching a kid’s team IMHO is an extreme example of OYS. You have to be on point with team communications, schedules, practice agendas, league communications. On top of that you have to manage 10-12 kids, their parents, the expectations of the parents (who sit and look at their phones all practice and game) who think their special snowflake kid that can’t catch a ball should play 1st base. All of this requires a frame of steel. If the parents (or worse) the kids detect any cracks in your coaching abilities, or if you come across as weak or non-confident then they will shit test you into an early grave.

Coaching a kid’s team gives you the stage to really shine if you have the right mindset and capabilities. You get to show off your athletic and leadership abilities to a group of kids and parents. It allows you to hone some of our most talked about topics here (Shit Tests, AA, AM, etc.)

Our kids need strong role models in their lives and I have found coaching is a great way to do that. /u/TheFamilyAlpha talks about it in some of his posts, but I wanted to expand on the topic a little and share my observations after a season of head coaching.

Some interesting statistics:

On my softball team, I have 12 girls. The primary contact for 10 of the girls is the mom, leaving 2 girls with dads as the primary contact including me for my daughter. For 6 of the girls I have no contact information at all for the Father.

On my baseball team, I have 13 boys. The primary contact for 9 of them is the mom, leaving 4 boys with dads as the primary contact including me for my son. For 7 of the boys I have no contact information at all for the Father.

My practice nights are Monday field, and Wednesday batting. Nearly every Wednesday at batting I have witnessed a low-key argument between mom/dad where one appears to be dropping the kid off, the other parent picking them up - I assume this is due to some sort of visitation schedule. Not sure, I am not divorced.

For my Softball team, myself and my wife do the main coaching with one other mom who played college ball. No Dads help with softball. My sons team, is a little different as I do have two dads who help, and do a good job for which I am thankful for. My wife is the team mom for baseball so she still helps out.

Moving away from the parents, I want to talk about my observations with the kids as this is what my main focus really is. I will start with the boys.

The boys on my team are 8+9 year olds. Most have played for a few seasons and have decent abilities. I have two gifted boys on my team, and a few that still struggle with some of the basic concepts. The boys excel at running, throwing and catching. There is a clear top 20% of boys that have the mental capacity to understand the dynamics of the game. They are in better control of their emotions, attention span and verbal comprehension. These are the boys who have a father that either coaches or is an assistant coach (my team or another), or a father in the stands. I can see a marked improvement in the attitude of my boys when a father is present, even if he is sitting in the stands just observing. For the remainder of the boys, it is not that they are bad or acting out, but I have to manage them in a far different capacity than the boys with a father present, or my girls on the softball team regardless of the parent present.

I do not have an explanation for this phenomenon other than maybe these boys lacking a father figure in the daily lives makes them less likely to listen to, and bond with another father figure who is in their presence acting as a leader. Maybe they are used to making mom happy and are not as worried about making a father figure happy, perhaps the parent is putting them in front of a screen so they have attention issues...who knows. All I know is I can see a clear difference even in 8/9 year olds, which only leads into development issues later in life.

The girls on my team are between 7-9 year olds. The contrast between girls and boys at this age, and with my sample size is astounding. The girls have a far higher mental capacity for the foundations of the game (if/then statements) than the boys. I can put the girls in their positions, hit a ball to 3rd base and my girls in all positions know where to go and what to do. With the boys, they just stand and watch the 3rd baseman field the ball. The right fielder is not running in to back up 1st, etc. like my girls do. I run these drills all the time, and I see the same behavior in other boy’s teams, so it is not me and my coaching.

My girls are shit testing machines at this age. If you want to practice AA/AM then you need to coach a girls’ softball team, you will be an expert in no time. They shit test me, they shit test each other, there is a constant battle for coach’s attention. When we all go into a huddle and put our hands in for our team cheer there is always at least 2-3 girls who fight for their hand to be on the top, where there is no such behavior from the boys.

My girls are excellent listeners, and they follow my lead extremely well. I can see that they want to “impress coach” or do a good job and they take far more pride in when I give them praise than when other team mates, or even parents do when they do a good job. My boys enjoy the roar of the crowd far more than any specific praise from any one individual.
When my girls get flustered it goes from 0 -> 100 and back down to 0 is a matter of minutes if not seconds. When one of my girls has a breakdown, it is very easy to get her to spin back into the positive with some AA, AM or other technique. I never try to fix their problem in that moment, and my only focus is fixing the girls feelz and getting her back on the field. With my boys, when they melt down it can take 10+ minutes sometimes to get them to re-focus and get their head back in the game. I can see them analyzing and breaking down their mistakes in their head, and they get hung up on it.

Rounding out, I wanted to come back to the parent’s really quick. The vast majority of the time it is the mom in the stands, or with the kid at practice. For my girls, I very rarely hear any chants from the parents when we are at practice as their noses are buried in the phones. However, the boys are quite a bit different as I will get moms and dads who will yell at the boys to “hustle, or man up, or keep your eye on the ball” during practice. I have a couple moms who I have had to pull aside and give a pep talk to as their banter from the bleachers would actually cause their son to have a small meltdown on the field derailing his practice. I have had to institute with my baseball team a “only coaches talk” policy during practice. I even had one of these moms walk out onto my field and try to coach her son over me. Let’s just say that didn’t go well for her.

The baseball moms in particular have a far different attitude than my softball moms, or perhaps it is that is just shows more since it is boys on the field vs. girls. I can detect the frustration in my baseball mom’s voices and attitudes with their boys, and it is clear to me who is divorced, or has a beta dad at home. The moms are always nice and respectful to me, and quite frankly are happy as all get out to see me (baseball and softball) but the view they push down onto their young men is quite sad.

My suspicion is that both sets of moms have this issue to some degree, but it only manifests itself with the baseball team since they are venting their personal frustrations on their son’s due to themselves having a lack of a male authority/leader in their own lives so they try to make their sons be a man. The softball moms have no need to do that to their daughters, so there is far less of that in that crowd.

In summary, all this post offers up is observations and points of reference for the things we talk about here. OYS, lift, lead, and be a role model for the next generation of kids. Men/Boys and Women/Girls are vastly different regardless of what SJW’s would want us to believe. They need to be managed differently, spoken to differently and when you can manage 12 girls on a ball field, driving your ship at home and getting laid by your wife 4+ times a week should be a natural thing.

Thanks for reading.
Lately, I've had no motivation to game women. I would say I've felt like this for about six months.

I am pretty happy with my wife these days. I'm owning my shit and I have room for improvement but for the most part she doesn't shit test, is feminine, has a low n-count, kills it at work, takes care of the house, and cooks for me every night.

For a while I was going out a lot, gaming girls, flirting, etc. After going through a really difficult miscarriage with my wife, I feel a really strong bond with her and have little desire to game other woman.

Has anyone else gone through this? Part of me feels like something is wrong with me. I understand AWALT but I also feel like I have something really good going with my wife.
Husband wants to know why men can "flirt" and women can't in a marriage (read: hypocrisy)

by RPAlternate42 | September 21, 2015 | Link

This post started as a reply to the following post:

My finance (sic) found my throwaway post! How do I make her see that she's wrong?!

He describes his wife as "sexless." Crazy is an opinion he has. Sexless is a fact.

Clearly he is still fully plugged in and just picked and chose what to take from TRP/MRP. I doubt he has read anything in the sidebar beyond a few chapters.

In the thread, he says the following in a reply:

how do I get her to understand that its okay for me to flirt with other women but her not other men? I do not think leaving my daughters mother bc she brilliantly found a way to call me out on my hypocrisy and the hypocrisy of my beliefs will make her healthier at all, actually.

Here's why this isn't hypocrisy:

^^Note: ^^This ^^post ^^will ^^be ^^written ^^as ^^a ^^one-sided ^^dialogue ^^towards ^^the ^^above ^^OP. ^^The ^^language ^^may ^^fit ^^a ^^number ^^of ^^men, ^^though.

Monogamy

Monogamy is not "one person only for the rest of time" with the subtext of unconditionally.

Monogamy is sexual exclusivity for regular sexual access.

It boils down to you ask her to marry you (you ask for regular sexual access.) she says "yes" (she agrees on the condition of sexual exclusivity); you will only fuck her as long as she fucks you regularly and she will only fuck you as long as you fuck her regularly. As long as both partners are sexually satisfied with each other, neither partner has any reason to stray and seek extra-martial sex.

The Male/Female Relationship Dynamic

In any relationship, women control the sexual access. As a BP, you see this as her holding all the cards. This is not the case. She simply holds the sex card and it's really the only card she holds. Marriage 2.0 has extended her hand with a series of wildcards that may become alimony, full custody, your house, etc. This is a topic covered extensively in /r/TheRedPill.

You, however, hold a much greater and higher-value card: The Relationship. Sure, she can pull her sex card off the table and leave you sexually thirsty as a bargaining chip for her control in the marriage... but you can simply walk away. You don't really need her for sex. You can get sex anywhere and it's easy for you to do so, as long as you are perceived as a high-value man to women.

If she pulls the sex card off the table, you can pull the relationship card off the table. If she feels she doesn't owe you sex then you are free to feel that you don't owe her the relationship (inclusively: time, attention, and resources.)

Your Card is Still in Play

She has withdrawn sex from the relationship. Sure, it may be once a month (clinically sexless), or every 2 weeks, or whatever the interval, but whatever the interval is it is disappointing to you.

Marriage is a whole bunch of agreements: some are codified and written, some are verbal (like "vows"), and some are assumed (de-facto through culture, heritage, and tradition.)

Your marriage probably had the assumption that you would have regular sex with her and would only have sex with her. It probably assumed that both of you would always work to increase the other's happiness. Well, she pulled her sex card and as a result has worked to decrease your happiness in exchange for her own comfort (it's easier for her to not have sex with you.)

She didn't feel threatened because you never pulled your card. You stayed married and never did anything to make her think you were going to start playing cards with someone else. Then she found your Reddit post (I'd like to see that post, BTW) and now she realizes that you may be pulling your card from the table and possibly go play with someone else.

The question one may ask is, why did she pull the sex card in the first place?

Feminist Chicken/Egg Dilemma

Women want sex. They want to fuck just like men. They prefer it with their ideal mate. He is typically all the beta/supportive traits PLUS all the alpha/masculine traits; they want the perfect package. Barring that option, they will gladly fuck the pure alpha. They will never fuck the pure beta.

You being as BP and beta as the sky is blue, have neglected your part of the marriage agreement. Some other assumptions are that the person you are marrying is the person you will be married to later. I'm guessing that in her eyes you have changed; you no longer do it for her. You don't smack of the guy deserving of her sex card, so she pulled it.

But why did you become so beta? Because feminism told you and her that you need to be a certain way in the marriage and that way is to do whatever she says. Both of you have been lied to. She wants your masculinity. She craves you leadership and assertiveness. She hopes and hopes (secretly) that you will just tell her no, have a better plan, and then execute it (whatever the situation.)
She wants you to do all of these things... but is disgusted by the idea of you doing them now. Because you are a beta. You are not allowed to talk to her like that. You are not allowed to direct her. And you certainly aren't allowed to fuck her like an alpha. A beta fucking like an alpha is what feminists refer to as rape. A beta acting like an alpha is what feminists refer to as creepy.

So society made you beta, she pulled the sex card, and you are now deciding to pull the relationship card. She sees this as bullshit because you are a beta... and you don't have the ability to act this way. Cognitive dissonance is setting in for her and her hamster is starting to spin up and boy is that wheel squeaky; it hasn't been turned in years!

Training to be Single

When a relationship ends (or is very close to ending) both partners start to engage in single-life-preparation activities: workout more, better clothes, new hair, more time spent on being better, socializing more, making new friends, and advertising to the opposite sex.

You are starting to do that. Your wife found the post and decided that you were actively looking for a new mate. In fact, even after the relationship is better (if it ever is) you still will be looking for a new mate... just not actively. It becomes passive. Your wife sees you as "chasing girls." Chasing women is a sort of a beta activity and she knows it. An alpha only needs to engage any woman in any situation and she will want him; the coffee barista, the cashier at the grocery store, the server at the restaurant, the girl in the park... etc. Alphas don't chase women... they just interact with everyone confidently. You specifically started an activity (volleyball, from the post) to meet women.

Instead you should be doing things that make you awesome. If volleyball makes you awesome, keep doing it... but don't do it to game women. If you are there to game women then you aren't focusing on you any more. You are demonstrating sexual thirst... you are demonstrating a lack of abundance.

Do your activities, meet new people, and in passing, women will be attracted to you as you improve. Never chase women... and never turn women away... but do flirt with them; stay loose, breezy, aloof, and mysterious.

The (non) Hypocrisy (Social)

Men and women flirt for two different reasons and it's due to the cards they hold. More specifically, women "flirt" and men, when they do it properly, just are. Men don't flirt; flirting is chasing. Men game.

Women hold the sex card so when they flirt, they are doing so as an advertisement of their sexual access. They flirt to tell the target, "I'm sexually available and I find you worthy of that sexual access."

Men hold the relationship card. When a man talks to a girl, it is non-threatening and non-assumptive. If the girl is responsive to him physically, she will flirt (advertising her sexual availability and your possible access to it.) If she flirts, he will game her by simply playing into her flirting with A&A, AM, C/F, etc. Escalation leads to innuendo and double entendre.

While it seems that he is "flirting" too there is a severe difference in the two: He is not advertising sexual availability.

When she flirts she is simultaneously allowing you to get closer for sexual access and asking permission for your relationship. A man simply needs to never escalate. As long as he is simply awesome in his own right, a simple "how are you? I like that shirt." is enough to inspire flirtatious advances. He doesn't have to do anything else... and sometimes not responding to their advances increases their desire for him.

In a marriage, when a man "flirts" with another woman he is only talking to her and it simply means he is confident to do so in front of his wife. "Hi, how are you? I like that shirt." is a harmless greeting. If he is awesome enough, she will respond in a flirtatious manner. This shows your wife that you are an awesome person and others see it. Her response will be an increase in desire for you because of pre-selection; the concept that you are clearly good if others, especially those she sees as a sexual threat, also see you as good.

In a marriage, when a woman flirts with another man she actively advertising her sexual availability to the other man while she is married. FULL STOP.

The effect is that she is telling her husband that he is not awesome (read: alpha) enough for her and she needs to get her TingleZ™ from someone else.

The (non) Hypocrisy (Biological)

Males are wired to inseminate as many females as possible because sperm is cheap, readily available, replenishable, and his ability to be sexually viable for reproduction is about as long as he is alive and he needs to get as many offspring with his genetic material into the world as possible be he an alpha or a beta.

Females are wired to find the best possible mate to give her a child (she controls the sexual access) because her reproductive years are limited, her eggs are finite, and she is saddled with the outcome of a sexual encounter for 9-months + as long as is necessary to raise the child to adulthood, she needs to be very selective with her options.

The (non) Hypocrisy (Bio-social)

When a man has several sexual options that he uses (wife + girlfriends, etc.) he only loses sperm for a few hours. He could father 100 kids and if the other woman doesn't do anything about it, he loses nothing. As long as keeps his dick wrapped up and doesn't start siphoning resources from the marriage to direct into his girlfriends (time, money, and attention) then the wife doesn't really lose anything. If he stays married to her and fucks other girls, she isn't really affected.

When a woman makes use of extra-marital sexual options, she can be saddled with a man's child... and if she is married while it happens, her husband can be saddled with that child too, especially when she says, "oh, it's yours, honey." A woman cheating has very real and very severe penalties to the marriage: the husband now has to support his cuckhold child and the woman is now dealing with the biological ramifications of her hypergamy.

The (non) Hypocrisy (Personal for /u/CKsRock)

For the OP in the post, his wife is threatening to go flirt with other men to teach him some kind of lesson; OP, you are looking for sex from other women because the person who controls your exclusive sexual access is withholding it. She threatens to flirt (advertise her sexual availability) with other men as a lesson. She is complaining that if you get to flirt (look for non-withholding sexual partners) she is going to flirt too and advertise the very thing she is withholding from you.

Womanese translation:

_You are not allowed to look for sex from other women because I don't think you are good enough to have sex with other women. I will go look for sex with other men because you are not even good enough to have sex with me. I also think that if you find someone else to have sex with you will take away all of the resources (read: betabux) that I enjoy from you and I want sex too, so I'm going to go get it (read: alphafux) while you still support me._

OP, your wife is essentially saying she's better than you and that you don't deserve to be happy unless she is happy too.
Why you shouldn't care if you wife doesn't apologize
by strategos_autokrator | December 11, 2014 | Link

This is a counter point of view to this post about how it is important to make your wife apologize. Disclosure: Making her apologize was one of my biggest hang-ups. Because of this, I've worked very hard on this topic. My post here is to challenge myself to clarify my own views.

Expecting apologies from your wife is beta.

Here are some reasons:

- Expecting an apology signals to her that she has power to hurt you. Even if she apologizes, you just taught her the bad behavior gets to you. She will only do it more. It also signals that you are offended by her behavior. Taking offense is a way to say that your self-image can be affected by her actions. This is losing frame.

- Expecting an apology gives her more power over you. If she withholds the apology, this is power to fuck with your head and emotions, it gives her more bargaining power. Why give her power to keep the fight going?

- Expecting apologies is manipulative and unassertive. It signals that there is a secret contract between you and her: If she doesn't restitute your self image, you will be a dick to her, all wrapped in expectations of guilt and secret debts to each other. It presumes you are the judge of her actions. That even if she just made a mistake, she has to somehow ask for forgiveness from being a bad person and hurting you, that you hold this against her. This is resentment; resentment is beta. Also, it mixes up two problems: the real concrete problem at hand, and the problem of your fragile ego. The book "When I say no, I feel guilty" dedicates the first few chapters analyzing precisely how this mindset is manipulative. I defer to that book for more details on this point.

- Expecting apologies is a waste of energy, it is increasing the dimensions of the conflict. Conflict only makes the ship run less efficiently. This new area of conflict now adds nothing to solving the problem at hand, only to your fragile ego that has a secret contract with this apology. She is your FO, and you are working together on getting the boat to where you want to go. All that matters is that behavior is corrected.

- Captains don't ask for apologies from their crew. They only care about making things work in the ship. When someone fucks up, the Captain corrects what can be corrected, disciplines, and even, owns up himself because he delegated on someone that shouldn't have been entrusted with this important thing. But the captain never expects or cares for an apology, because this is giving his crew power over himself. A Captain's ego and authority cannot depend on what others say or don't say.

What is the point of an apology?

Apologies are for the Giver of the apology, not for the Receiver. The Giver fucked up, and they recognize that part of their responsibility is taking ownership of the consequences of their mistakes. So they apologize, owning up to their mistake, making amends, and proposing what they will do in the future so this doesn't repeat itself. Why? Because they want to get to the task at hand quickly, and admitting mistakes is the first step towards correcting them. That is all. Any more expectations is a secret contract, and manipulative.

Apologies are not for the Receiver. Even if the apology isn't accepted by the receiver, the giver already gained more self-respect and improved on his/her mistakes by just apologizing. The receiver gains nothing from the apology, unless the receiver has a fragile ego that depends on the apology to feel like he is better than the Giver.

How to apologize like a man?

You just say you made a mistake, say what you will do as reparation, and what you will do to not do it again. Period. You move on, work on concrete things, even if the receiver still feels resentment. You don't ask them to accept the apology. That is a hidden contract, a guilt debt. Resentment is their choice, accept it, plan how to deal with it, and stop worrying about it.

A man doesn't need other people's judgement to understand his mistakes. This process of owning up to our mistakes IS keeping frame and being a man. Having a fragile ego that won't accept mistakes is beta.

But also, don't apologize only because she wants to hear you apologize. That is her problem with her weak ego. Separate the problem of her ego from the problem at hand, and deal only with the problem at hand. True apologies should only come from your judgment of yourself, irrelevant of the judgment of others.

How to accept an apology like a man?

After I started doing all this, and stopped expecting apologies from my wife, she started to apologize. That was the most surprising thing of this process. So, now that you accept that you don't gain anything from her apologies, and you don't even expect them, how do you handle them gracefully when you start getting them?

This is what I've been doing lately. When she says she is sorry for what she did, I say "I appreciate you bringing this up. Now, what are you going to do about [concrete issue]?" First, I'm grateful to the apology, but show that the apology isn't the point. Concrete action on the important concrete issue is what matters. The problem wasn't that she should feel bad for fucking up, or she should apologize for hurting me. The only problem is that we must troubleshoot things to improve to get towards my goal. By doing this, I show that the apology isn't important to my ego, that there is no resentment, that my ego doesn't care. Also, I show this doesn't erase the mistakes and problems, that we must address them. If she doesn't change stuff towards that, then I will change stuff towards addressing the problem. Sometimes, this includes withdrawing responsibilities I had previously placed on her. Not because she is bad, not because I'm punishing her, but because I need this shit to get done, and this way isn't working.

Also, this lead to even more apologies from my wife, with less drama and fights. Why? Because she learned I don't need to 'prove' that she was wrong. I only care about getting the stuff that I need done, and as long as we figure out the best way towards that, we are good. Now it is easier for her to apologize because she doesn't have to fix up my hurt ego anymore. By focusing on getting to my goals, my goals became her goals.

What to do when she doesn't apologize?

Don't care about it, but do take action to solve the issue without her. Remember, the apology is only needed if your ego is hurt. The solution to a hurt ego is: work harder to having a strong frame such that she can't hurt your ego and stop needing apologies.

However, this doesn't mean ignore the problem. Assume that the problem will happen again because she didn't propose how to address it. And then, do everything in your power to make sure the problem doesn't happen again. This means withdrawing responsibility you had given her, and it might mean more work for you. Don't grow resentment only to hide you are a lazy fuck. Just do everything in your power to address the problem, and don't blame her for the problem. Blame the problem, and deal with the problem. This shows her she has no power over you, and that you are focused on the goal.

Sometimes these actions might upset her, because she prefered the old way where she had power over this stupid crap. Don't fall for the fight, stay focused on solving the problem. She fights, focus on concrete problem, and solving it. Own up to the new dynamics to cut through bullshit: "I understand you don't like this, but I need to fix [concrete problem], so this is what I will do about it." Sometimes I add: "Since you don't like it, what do you propose you want to do about [concrete problem]?" and often she actually owns up to her actions, or we have a concrete adult discussion about solving the problem. If she says what she thinks I should do, I just say again that I recognize she doesn't like what I'm doing, but I'll keep doing it because it is the way I can solve [concrete problem]. That if she doesn't like my solution, she has to propose what she can do to cooperate. I don't tell her how to change, I'm not asking her to change at all! But I'm open to her suggestions on how she can help me solve this problem. If your wife gets to this point, do negotiate. But don't negotiate to feel like you 'won', or to 'prove' she is wrong. Negotiate to solve the concrete problem; remember that problem is not your hurt ego.

Another way to put this is to never act as if she is the problem. Focus on the concrete problem yourself, and this is the most convincing way to make her become part of the solution to the problem. If she doesn't, you are demonstrating you don't need her! When she does offer to own up, then (intermittently) reward good behavior.
TL;DR Having resentment towards your wife because she isn't apologizing is losing frame and giving her power over you. Captains fix problems to get the ship where he needs it to go. Focus on problem solving, even if it means accepting you can't count on her for solving the problem. By doing this, it is more likely she will try to change to be part of the solution to the problem.
I love good FRs. I love long, thoughtful theoretical essays. But most of all, I love usable and transferable tactics that many men can instantly apply

Your old friend Cad is at a 5 Star resort for Spring Break with the family and there is a recently divorced Movie/TV star here with his kids and a woman and her kids. She is bangable but hardly the best he can do. If I had to guess, her lifestyle (family) matches his for LTR and he has dimes back in LA, NYC, Miami for fucking. Guys like this "get away" with whatever they want.

My wife is a stargazer and comments on how pretty TV stars new woman is. I said :

"Eh...he can do better."

Cue the feigned outrage and subsequent tingles.

Men are the gatekeepers of commitment and its fine to Lord that power when you get the opportunity.

Most men today would be too afraid to be caught thinking these thought crimes so be the man who realtalks and cares little about fake hurt feelings as it applies to sinking female SMV, male dominance, and general misogyny.

Strong men are the prize. Go ahead and take your victory lap when you see the chance Finding your mission is perhaps one of the hardest things to do on your Red Pill journey. It is also unique for each man. Not only the mission itself but also how it is found. I for one believe that this is why men can't move forward in their Red Pill development. They fail to find their mission, others are stuck on objectives or goals and haven't completely defined their vision in life. I am not judging a man's mission but if you think I have then perhaps you need to reassess your mission or what you thought it was. To be sure this isn't an easy topic. While I do have firm beliefs in how it should go I also yield to the idea that the process isn't the same for every man.

Leadership is an ephemeral thing. It's hard to nail down but when you see it you know it. It's also why my dick itches when I hear about the newest leadership book from some ex special operations space shuttle door gunner. Leadership is not condensed into a trait or skill. It's a process. One that isn't easy.

All military leadership schools spend time discussing leaders of the past. They do this for great reasons. It's first to understand the lessons learned, but it also studies the men involved. Why they did what they did, how they did it, and their mindset. To learn a few skills or traits or adhere to mantras (Leaders Eat last!) is merely turning leadership into a homogenized mindset, when it is extremely complex in nature. No two leaders are alike which is why it is so difficult. I was told as a cadet to find a military leader I admired. Then emulate him. Over time you will then develop your own sense of leadership and style.

In short leadership cannot be learned it has to be experienced. I feel the same way about developing your mission. There is no other way to do it but get into the process, head down, and begin to find it.

Let's begin by breaking down some terms and gaining some level of understanding what we are talking about. To be sure that there are fine lines. Vision vs Mission? What's the difference? There is some difference and enough to make note about it but maybe not to others. Some may see this things as the same thing. Yet I contend these men have synthesized their lives and have gone through the process. To them it makes sense. Like an experienced martial artist. They see things in ways lesser experienced don't. Like when learning a technique it's taught in slow steps, maybe 4 or 5. Over time a martial artists is able to reduce it to 2 steps. Maybe even one step. The good ones will teach in the old ways, through the slow process. The mediocre ones will try to break it down into simple efficient techniques. Cutting out a lot of the learning and other important aspects that made themselves great. The bad ones just won't GAF.

What this thread should be a is discussion more than a teaching point. The post should set the stage. Developing your mission is a personal thing. Yet it starts the same way.

Defining some of the terms and the process
Vision - Outlines what you want to be in the future

Mission - describes what to do wants to do

Goals - Your goals are broad outcomes, think of them as more long term. They can be made up of objectives.

Objectives - an objective is a measureable result of your work. It's the first step. If it can't be measured it can't be managed.

Red Pill lays out some very simple and achievable goals:

- Lift
- Dress better
- Better diet
- OYS

These can be thought of achieve the Objective of being more attractive. These are core and essential. They cannot be skipped, though many of you try. As I said that study of others is the best way to develop leadership and I believe your mission.

I am going to deep dive into one objective and show through my own development how this can change and morph into something that is just a cornerstone in Red Pill to be a clear support to my Mission and vision for myself.

There is no valid argument against lifting heavy weights. It's time proven to be the way to develop the masculine form. It can be argued that running, CrossFit, and the like are fitness goals, but do not come here complaining about results if you have skipped an essential step. You are then left trying to make up the short coming in other areas. Possible, but don't complain. It's the path you chose.

Developing your masculine form is critical. My theory on way running isn't masculine is simple. Prey run. This doesn't necessarily account for the predators that run quit well, but it is just my theory. When I started red pill I was already working out pretty heavily but I was doing a CrossFit style workout. It got me lean as fuck, but I was back to my pre-military look of lanky and thin. I started lifting again, but in a lean way. Not for strength and then I found Red Pill a little later. Through that process I rediscovered my love of powerlifting.

I took heart the idea of the masculine form and lifted like it was life itself. My size, strength are always remarked on. When I am working on a paramedic shift I am called when the patient is a bariatric, or if the situation requires the presence of someone of my stature. I find my martial arts is far more effective. Techniques I was taught to do with two hands I can do with one. Yet these are nothing to me as the final vision for my life is to find my potential. To see what I am capable of. Our ancestors wrestled bears and lions on mountaintops, and while I am pretty sure I won't be doing any of that I want to see what I am capable of. I want to know I have that option. I am driven to find the lengths of which I am able to achieve in my personal abilities.
Over time I started getting injured as I hit the mid-400 range on my lifts. Every time I went to pull a 450 Deadlifts. Something happened. Everytime I went to move my bench or squat up. I had to take a break. Mind you I was merely working on the core objective here. Lift.

Earlier this year I wrecked my back, my rotator cuff was getting strained and stressed. I took a break. Lost a lot of strength over that time. I finally had to admit I needed a coach to break those barriers. I found a performance gym that specializes in powerlifting. About 705 of the members are amateur competitors on a state level. It's the gym I remember growing up.

Bare bones. Equipment beat to fuck but loved and cared for. Instead of a posted sign politely asking you to rack your weights it says

| "We aren't your fucking mother, and this isn't your fucking house. Clean up." |

I knew I was home. The move was good for the ego. After being the big fish in the fancy gym I was at, being one of the strongest, and largest dudes, I am now at the bottom again. Nearly every man there point to the wall at the far end where their record is written. I knew this is where I wanted to be.

After a few days of assessment my coach told me I was leaving a lot of strength of the table. My form was not solid. That hit the ego. I had been lifting a long time, but I accepted what he said. When I started with the coach and the performance gym I just joined I was at mid 200s on all lifts. 2 months later I am back to the high 300s and setting my sights on state powerlifting competitions next year.

I want my potential. I want to see what I can do. Who I am. I want to build value relationships around me. This was all built on one objective. Simply lift. The goals could simply be the 1000 pound club, but it develops into more. Some men could just simply use this as a goal and my life vision for myself, finding my potential, could be an objective all their own. For me it crosscuts more than just my lifting. I need to know what I am capable of in all areas of my life.

I have stated before. I have been a soldier, a scholar, a healer. I am now developing the artist in myself. I haven't stopped being all those other things. I train in martial arts often. I hone the skills I learned in the military, shooting, fieldcraft. I study a wide range of subjects. Education is free. Go to the library. I maintain my medic license, and work 20-30 hours a month doing a variety of things with it. As for the artist? A lot in the work there. I may announce it. I may not, but it has nothing to do with Red Pill other than it is part my life's' mission and vision for myself.

I offer these Veteran Posts on the same topic. The ground has been covered but there is so much more to learn. This is by no means exhaustive research.

Purpose by /u/SteelSharpensSteel

Apart from your fitness and your mission, everything else is perks or masturbation /u/88Will88
You are Your Mission

Finding Your Mission and Success /u/88Will88 I couldn't find the rest of this series.
I discovered the subreddit a few weeks ago. Since then I have been reading no more mr. Nice guy and everything I can devour on this subreddit as far as posts. First a little bit of background,

I displayed all the background and behaviors of the nice guy from the book no more mr. Nice guy growing up and through college. It's painfully apparent reading the book even though it's not obvious when you're living it. I've been a policeman for the past 20 years and I'm getting ready to retire and was very Alpha for the first 10 to 12 years of my career before an investigation took the wind out of my sails. I live in a very anti-union State and tried to start a union for our Police Department. The head of the department was directed to reopen some use of force reports that I've been cleared in and to find fault which resulted in my termination. that combined with a 16-year marriage on the downhill slide took the wind right out of my sails and I turned beta as fuck.

After my divorce Paxil put me back into Alpha mode because I just didn't give a fuck and could approach anyone and screw for hours because of the sexual side effects of the medication. Found a beautiful new wife and settled down into a new career where I make pretty good money, actually really good money for what I'm used to.

I had the working out and the hygiene covered already because of my divorce spurred me to go back into the dating scene and I've continued that. I'm excelling in my career and feel good about that part. About a year after I got married my wife started shit test and comfort test and I didn't recognize them for what they were and I was giving her everything she wanted without any questions at all. It really is amazing after reading on the subreddit I can identify ways she was just begging me to take over and be Alpha.

She grew up in a very structured family with rigid gender roles and her parents have both passed away so I really don't have a frame of reference other than what she has told me. But she has literally been begging me to be Alpha over the past year. She would never permit me to talk to her about the money except for to ask me whether she should spend what she wanted to spend. She always told me to go out with my friends sometimes. always wanting me to make decisions about where to go what to eat where to plan vacations without her input. looking back now it is incredible how much she was overly communicating to me to step up and take over and make her subjective to my will. The sex has been shit and the usual whiny arguments happened after being over in dead bedrooms reading.

Over the last week I have really been stepping up putting into practice the concepts in the book and on this Reddit. Several shit tests and Comfort tests later and cut to this morning. We're camping and I've anchored the boat down the beach, we wake up and I Started a groper and kiss her but the kids were in the trailer and we were just separated by a curtain. She got annoyed and started slapping my hands away and I just kept at it and told her to calm down. I told her I needed to go down and check on the boat and was going to take it out for a ride and she immediately told me not to leave without her. I went down and started prepping the boat at the beach and she came to the edge of the hill and looked down and then walked back to the trailer where I couldn't see her. After about 2 minutes I call her phone and ask her where she is and she says, I came back to get the boys and see if they wanted to go. Old me, " Oh ok, have them hurry.". New improving me says, " I asked if you wanted to come with me on the boat, if I wanted them to come I would have asked them then, are you coming?". She said fine and hung up.

A minute later she comes to the beach and I give her my best smile. I get her on board and the first thing she says is a shit test, "Why are you being so ornery?". Which I just shook my head at and started backing out. Frowning and scowling and sighs as I sped across the lake which I ignored and looked majestic as I stood and piloted my craft while talking to her about how much I love boating.

We pulled into a cove on the other side of the lake which winds back in for about 1/2 mile. Several people anchored camping on their boats and she says she doesn't like the cove. "What's not to like? It's calm and pretty back here.". Two minutes later she fixes me with a stare and says, "You brought me out here to have sex with me on the boat didn't you?"

"Absolutely I did." I reply. Her head starts shaking and I just start nodding. " You knew that from the moment I was messing with you at camp.".

It was constant no and too many people here, they'll know etc until I beached it and opened the cuddy cabin. I motioned her inside and she acted all butt hurt but went. Once I got her out of her swimming suit I found she was already ready to go and I mean wetter than she's been in like a year. And I was expecting the Sahara. After about 10 things that would have caused a fight before when I was being beta she was more ready than ever. It's crazy how quickly things are coming together and I can't believe how stupid I have been not seeing her begging for her strong man back in her life.

After all that text, I should say that I still have to consciously make myself alpha because it freaks me out she will have beef. But I'm not going back that's for damn sure.
Even if you're Brad Pitt...
by sexyshoulderdevil | September 20, 2016 | Link

Sometimes we throw around the trite little saying that your wife would be happy doing xyz in bed for Hollywood hunk Brad Pitt...

But as it turns out, Brad Pitt can't quite compare to Brad Pitt.

Angelina Jolie files for divorce from Brad Pitt

Not even Brad Pitt can escape the rules of maintaining attraction. Once you get comfortable and hit your stride being masculine, fun and a ball of sexual energy, don't let that work slip from your fingers.

Don't become Brad Pitt...
If you're anything like pretty much everyone on the planet, your social life sucks. Why should you care? Because as much as you want to be your own man, you need other people to do pretty much anything you actually want to do in the world. In the drafting phase, I at one point split this out into a two-part post, but didn't feel like taking the time to separate it all out, and the content blends better when together, so here's the whole thing.

PART I: MENTALITY

No Man Is An Island

Most guys coming here need to learn independence. They're so heavily influenced by society that they need to pull away from everything the world and their wife tells them and develop their own kingdom that operates within their own frame. That's a beautiful thing. But it's unsustainable to go completely independent.

Let's be real: do you really want to live in the wilderness like Thoreau? Even Thoreau didn't live like "Thoreau." He made regular trips to town to visit family and friends. He didn't live in the woods, but in a cabin in a wide open field. He had visitors over and hosted an annual melon party. Nobody actually wants to live in isolation, yet many people's behaviors would indicate they do. Are your behaviors aligned with your goals? In the case of having a social life, for most people the answer is no.

The "Loneliness Epidemic"

I wrote a post about a year ago citing some stats from a survey by Cigna. The conclusion was that around half of the country admitted to sometimes or always feeling alone and having no meaningful relationships. Surprisingly, having kids doesn't decrease your susceptibility to the "loneliness epidemic." Not surprisingly, today's young adults are considered the loneliest people ever to live since we've been recording stats on the subject.

Interestingly, despite what our feminized society tells us about how women are so much better at being "social butterflies" than men, Psychology Today says otherwise:

"According to substantial research, women across all ages and lifestyles report higher levels of loneliness than men do. [Ironically:] Except, perhaps surprisingly, in one subset of people - single people. While married women inch out married men for the lonelier group, single men vastly outweigh single women as the lonelier bunch."

Sucks to be an omega. Notice the language here, though? Substantial research. All ages. All lifestyles. While the world will tell us that we should all build friendships like women (trust, communication, emotional connection, etc.), the reality is that it isn't working for them. At some point, you need to learn to build your social network like a man - and not the feminized betas and omegas who are ruining the gender curve. But we'll get to that later.

Why Does it Matter?

So you've worked on your stoicism and frame a bit. You don't feel lonely anymore. You're an introvert anyway, so why do you care about building social relationships? Because if you don't, you're still a loser. Let me break this down:

- Even the most introverted person needs some social contact. If you don't have friends outside the home, you're going to default to your wife and kids. This makes it easy to pedestalize them and become co-dependent on them as your only source of relational fulfillment in life.

- Dread is literally impossible if you never leave your house. Just as bad is when you do leave the house, but everyone knows you're not actually going to be chatting up a random hottie.

- Online forums can only take you so far. At some point, if you want to learn how to be a man you need to actually see what other men do. The movies don't cut it because you know it's scripted.

- Chances are, your mission in life involves other people. Financial goals? Unless you are forging your own currency, you can't manufacture money on your own, which means you have to get it from ... people. Athletic goals? You need someone to train you, a rival to best, peers to give you feedback, etc. Political goals? You have to have connections to get into office. Very few goals in life wouldn't benefit from an improved social game.

I could go on, but you get the idea.

So why aren't you?

Some people are dumb and needed to read all that, but for those with common sense, able to figure out with 10 seconds of thought why it's important to build a social game, you're still left with the cognitive dissonance: "Oh yeah, I guess it IS important, but I'm still not doing it."
Why not?" There are lots of answers: fear, shame, apathy, laziness, mental health issues (that you probably don't even realize you have), etc.

But there are two answers that rise to the top: (1) You're incompetent. You just don't know how to make friends. I'll address this in the "Action" section, below, so no need to re-hash it here. (2) You Make Idiotic Assumptions. When I coach guys on building their social life, I ask lots of questions about why they're not already friends with someone in particular ... you know ... like ... women. Number 1 response? "They already have a circle of friends, and it's just hard to break in." I'll address the frame issue later. For now, let's realize that this is based on a series of bad assumptions.

- Assumption 1: The other person doesn't want more friends. This excuse only applies if someone has actually made a clear decision not to have anymore friends. I doubt anyone has actually done this, so they're on the table.

- Assumption 2: The other person actually has friends. Yeah, you see them hanging around other people, but most social contexts are recurring acquaintanceships, not genuine friendships. Your neighbors and co-workers may call you their "friend," but do you really relate with them the same way you did your roommate in college? Probably not. And that's probably also the case for the person you want to connect with.

- Assumption 3: The other person doesn't want YOU as their next friend. If you're making this assumption, you need to go back to the sidebar and learn (1) that you're the prize, or if you're not, (2) how to become the prize.

- Assumption 4: It's hard to break in. It's not. More on that to come.

- Assumption 5: That there's anything to "break in" on in the first place. Are they putting up invisible fences? Again, this is something of a frame issue, so let's go there.

---

Your Frame/Their Frame

When my wife looks to make new friends, she asks herself what she could do to cause them to want to include her. This is how women think. They're naturally compelled to want to be in the frame of someone they desire to associate with. But you're a man (I hope). You should be inviting everyone else into your frame. This means that your method of winning friends isn't to suck up to them. It's to be someone they pander to be around.

Church folk are an easy example of this dynamic. The typical strategy for "plugging in" is simple: believe what everyone else believes, suck up to those in authority and praise whatever they say. If you do this, you become part of the crowd and make lots of acquaintances. But nobody actually wants to spend time with you or become closer friends.

On the other hand, have you ever noticed that the popular people are the most critical? They gossip about the secrets they hear and make fun of those around them. This is true even in congregations. Why does everyone gravitate to them? Because they're alpha enough to say what the betas wish they had the balls to. These people are fun. They run against the grain. Their controversial nature gets them attention, and that attention wins them friends, but also makes them enemies. They live in their own frame and it's alluring to everyone around.

Of course, you can live in your own frame and not be a slanderous gossip. This is my approach. Instead of running my mouth about how much better than everyone else I think I am, I actually strive to be the best man I think I can be. People respect that. At some point, they realize they want what I have (even if I have to invite them to have it with me, to get them there). This is what draws the crowd. Once the crowd amasses, I can pick and choose who I want to build closer relationships with.

Relationships and Networking

Now, there's a reason I've been talking most of this time about building authentic relationships. Yes, acquaintances are useful. This is the goal of networking - to build a vast array of people you are loosely connected to in the hope that one of those connections will one day become handy. There is a value to having a vast plethora of people who know your name in the community. I had that in my old community, and I'm working toward rebuilding that after having relocated less than a year ago. Acquaintances make you look good in public, but their utility is limited. I have set aside "networking" as a viable model for long-term success as a man, whether in my career, my neighborhood, in my spiritual pursuits, etc.

When you network, nobody has a vested interest in what you're doing unless it mutually benefits them. Most relationships aren't immediately mutually beneficial. I may meet a businessman who could refer me a case someday, but chances are that he'll recognize me in the grocery store, but won't remember me when his neighbor needs an attorney. Why not? Because he doesn't have a relationship with me. He's only thinking about me when I reach out to him or when he's personally in need.

Instead, 99% of my clients by referral come from people I've spent substantial time with. We've gotten to know each other personally. We've sat down for a meal or talked a dozen or two times, even if only briefly. I know the names of their kids. We make it a point to meet up regularly. These people have you on their mind. My closest friends refer me 2-5 new cases each year, and my more casual friends give me 1-2 cases a year. Even when I'm not around, they're thinking of me when the context comes up. [Funny story: the 1% was a client who was referred to me by an opposing party who was so impressed with my cross-examination of her that she told her friend to go to me instead of her own attorney.]

Lee Rosen used to run the #1 blog on the internet for law practice management. He coached a number of businesses beyond just law firms. I spoke with him by phone once and he told me his singular secret to building a successful career. Can you guess what it was? "Build your relationships, not your networks. Nurture people to think about you when you're gone, not merely to notice you when you're there."

Now, realistically you can't have deep relationships with everyone. You have to balance networking and building relationships to get the best of both worlds. In reality, networking is the first phase of building relationships. So let's go there.

---

PART 2: ACTION

---

Building Your Network

I wrote a post a couple years ago titled Social Influence and Defying Context. Much of what I'd say here I've already said there, so no need to make this post longer than it already is. But let me clarify an easy way to build your social network.

- Say hi to new people. It's that simple. This is where it all starts. My favorites: on a jog, at the gym, in an elevator, grocery shopping, waiting in line. Just say hi. Even if you don't say anything after that, learn to get the conversation started. If possible, focus on people you know it's reasonably possible you'll see again.

- Say hi again. Again, basic stuff here.

- Have a brief conversation. This can be done simultaneously with one of the above, if the situation calls for it. What do you talk about? It doesn't matter. Talk about how awkward you are at starting random conversations, for all it matters. Preferably, talk about the aspect of your life for which you're trying to build a network. Just make sure you're smiling most of the time (unless they tell you their dad just died ... use some common sense, foo). You can have this conversation over coffee, or on the street where you met. It doesn't really matter, though more personal and focused environments are generally going to be more fruitful.

- Exchange contact information, or learn how to locate them. When I go running, I tend to learn where the people live who I say hi to. They remember me as that dad who pushes 3 kids in a jogging stroller for 5-8 miles at a time. "Hello" becomes "Hello again," which turns into, "Good to see you're still at it." Other times, I cut the conversation short and say, "I've enjoyed talking about this, but I've got to get going somewhere. Here's my number/e-mail. Let's finish our chat soon." If possible, get their info too, then leave. Once you have their info, by this point you've established enough of a foundation that it shouldn't be too awkward to contact them if you're in need.
That's about it for basic networking. Whenever you see these people again, they'll remember you and be primed for acquaintance-like conversations.

Building Your Friendships

After your network grows large enough, you'll start to get an idea of who you'd like to get to know better. It might be someone whose career aligns well with your career needs. It could be someone whose interests are similar to your own and you just want to have fun together. It could be someone you'd like to mentor so you can gain a sense of fulfillment in passing on what you've learned to someone else and sending them out into the world. Whatever your motive is, friendships are where the real value is at. Let's continue our path.

- Follow up. Remember that contact information you got? Start using it. While I encourage people to master the art of no-context conversations, this is a weird lull where it's better to create context so the other person feels comfortable with the foundation for follow up. "I remembered you said blank, and I'm doing blank, so I figured I'd call and get your thoughts on this."

- Invite, Mild. Keep it light at first. Grab a meal or coffee together. The idea is to become comfortable hanging out in person. Once that comfort is established, the friendship itself IS the context for future conversations, so you don't need to manufacture context to keep things from becoming awkward for long.

- Invite, Serious - "Going all the way." Don't do this too soon. Rather than explain this one, I'll just leave this clip.

- Shift the Dynamic. Make yourself available and let them invite you. This only works once they're already convinced you're someone they want to be around.

---

Male v. Female Social Matrix

It's important to note that there are some key differences about how men and women engage with friends when they're in the "follow up" and "invite" phases. Hopefully by now you've become fluent with The Female Social Matrix. From this and what I've observed elsewhere, here are a few discrepancies I've seen in how men and women interact, which should help you learn how to build friendships with other men that actually help rather than drain you.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Women</th>
<th>Men</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Crabs in a bucket</td>
<td>Encourage social ascent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Equality</td>
<td>Competition</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

www.TheRedArchive.com
Women

Diss progress beyond the group dynamic  Spur on progress
Social niceties; pleasant demeanor  Ribbing, critiquing
Focused on the group  Focus on role within the group
Supporting conversation  Dominating conversation
Plausible deniability  Overt expression
Appearance of being wholesome  Raw, crude, and blunt
Being fair  Being efficient
Consensus/Democracy  Hierarchical Structure Involvement  Achievement

Men

Obviously there are going to be exceptions, and most of these will operate on a scale. This doesn't mean that men can't engage in social niceties or encourage equality; rather, it's to say that if there is a conflict between the two, or the opportunity for the male side is present, the man will engage in ribbing and competition instead. For example, a guy might prefer to look for a consensus/democratic solution before acting. But when it becomes apparent that no consensus will be reached, the women will keep trying to find one, but the man will say, "Enough is enough. We're doing this," and then do it.

You'll notice quickly that this dynamic isn't merely describing the difference between men and women, but also between feminized men and the masculine. I have found that even the most feminized men will respect the male social matrix when in the presence of the masculine. Accordingly, my point here is not merely to explain the different social matrices to you, but to encourage you to socialize like a man. In doing so, you will teach other men how to be men, while simultaneously earning the social status afforded to the masculine in your social interactions.

Ten Extra Tips

1. Take Control of Your Social Life. Even before social distancing, the world at large conditions people toward isolation and arm's-length interactions with others. Even the most extroverted people are unlikely to make much of an effort to build genuine friendships with you. If you want it, you make it happen. That's how it is with pretty much anything worth having. Yes, other people want friends too, but they're either too dumb or too socially conditioned to act on it.

2. Ignore Context. "Context" is the meta framework most people operate in, made up of the social norms they think they must follow in order to take certain actions. Those social norms are the very ones that ruin so many marriages and condition guys to be beta pussies, leading to higher divorce rates, children out of wedlock, etc. Do you really want to submit to the cultural forces that have created the societal chaos we have today? Plus, learning to defy context makes you more interesting to others and also fast-tracks your progress. See my previously linked post on defying social context.

3. Embrace rejection. About 7 months ago I wrote a post titled Initiate Often, Confident Always. The premise is that rejection should not rattle your confidence - it should immunize you against further rejection and failure, making it easier the next time. I remember having to raise funds for a ministry job I once took. The first few rejections were tough to take. After several dozen more, I didn't care. It was much easier to raise funds after that - not merely because I could get to the "yes" people faster, but because my fearless charisma started giving some of the "no" people enough confidence in what I was doing that they came around.

4. Master Asking Questions. This is the most valuable skill you can ever learn. A decent conversationalist uses questions to keep a conversation going. A skilled conversationalist can use questions to engage in deep conversations on matter's he's entirely ignorant. A master can use questions to persuade others to believe virtually anything, while thinking it was their own idea to believe it. I could do an entire post just on the art of asking questions.

5. Be a Social Sculptor. Many guys, especially those who run against the grain of culture, tell me, "I just don't want to be friends with the people I'm around. They're so liberal and weak and it's annoying." Right, unicorns don't exist. You think you're going to randomly bump into a red pill endorsed contributor out on the streets? It's not going to happen. Rather than looking for the perfect friend, create one. This is the same advice I give for relationships. In my experience, it's harder finding someone worth being friends with than it is to take someone I'm iffy about and influence them into becoming the kind of person I want as a friend.

6. Negative to Positive. Generally speaking, it's easiest to bond over shared disinterests. Many people have stronger negative reactions to what they don't like than they do positive reactions to what they do like. This creates an easy camaraderie up-front early in a relationship. Of course, focusing on the negative is unsustainable, as people don't like feeling negative all the time. Most people recognize their best friends as those with whom they shared overall positive experiences with. Even if the "positive experience" was something that landed them in trouble, they remember it fondly because of the fun they had in the process.

7. Learn Cultural Distinctions. Trying to engage with a hipster? Frat boy? Businessman? African American? There are so many cultural subsets that are misunderstood (or perhaps understood better than they want to admit). Knowing some of the unique ins and outs can go a long way.

8. Tell It Straight, Unapologetic, Yet Tactfully. Most people know I'm a Christian, so I'll use that as an example. Some people think it's impossible for biblical Christians to relate with certain communities, like homosexuals. This is dumb. I've had a number of homosexual friends. For a time, I danced around the issue, not wanting to upset them. That actually upset them even more because they knew I was treating them differently because of their sexual orientation. They wanted me to talk to them the same way I would anyone else. So, we took it a step further. He'd start talking about making out with his boyfriend and I'd tease back, "Yeah, you'll have a lot of time to do that while you're burning in hell for eternity ;)") and they'd laugh. Once the rapport is there, and it's clear that the friendship exists through your disagreements, let the disagreements be a point of humorous distinction, not a point of division.

9. Have Male Friends. You can't learn how to be a man without being around other men. Even if the guys you know aren't the types of guys you want to emulate, you can influence them to become someone you're proud to be around - and then you can fuel each other on. I've done this many, many times. It's fun and rewarding.

10. Have Female Friends. Society will tell you that a married man should not be good friends with a woman other than his wife. This is somewhat absurd. Can guys and girls actually be "just friends"? Probably not. So what? Does that mean you're going to start unzipping your pants every time you're around one of your female "friends"? Is your self-discipline really so low? The social convention on this makes sense if you're a weak man who can't control his own dick - and if that's you, and you don't want to blow up your marriage, then follow it. But if know how to keep your pants on, you'd be a fool not to take advantage of the power that women have usurped in society by building relationships with them. It's seriously idiotic to cut off half of the population from your life just because your wife might not like it. Besides, chances are she actually does like it more than she's willing to admit to herself. Dread. Preselection. Mystery. Got it now?
Last night, I came home from work and supper was 15 minutes away, so I sat down to catch up with my kids. Wife gave me her usual chaste hug, which I hardly noticed. I’ve been withdrawing time and attention lately because her behavior has been so consistently sub par. I have to leave after supper to drop my son off for a meeting. This conversation occurred at the dinner table.

Wife: “So, what do you do in town while sonny is at his meeting?” Me: “I usually hang out at a coffee house and read, or sometimes a bar if there is a ballgame on.” I answer indifferently. It’s no secret. Wife: “Oh. Well, I was going to ask you to give me a ride so I could try out some new eyeglasses, but I wouldn’t want to interrupt your reading time”. (this was delivered with a little bit of petulance).

I shrugged, and finished my dinner. Took son to meeting and hung out at the coffee house for an hour. Later I was marveling at this little bit of female manipulation. Instead of coming right out and asking me for a ride, (which I surely would have agreed to, as it was a completely reasonable request), wife tried to shame me into asking her to please, pretty please let me have the privilege of shuttling her around. I then got to thinking how many times in the past had she used such tactics to get me to give her what she wanted, and have me thank her for the privilege, and I went along with it? The answer is, too many. Had this happened pre-Redpill, I would have gotten offended, asked her to please let me take her, and then later would have been left with a bad taste in my mouth, feeling manipulated but unable to put my anger into words. I would have seethed and pouted and maybe picked a quarrel.

As it was, I had myself a good laugh thinking about it. I suppose she will sulk. I suppose she will tell her friends what an insensitive creep I have become. I suppose she will make a point of asking someone else to give her a ride, instead of condescending to ask me. But I don’t care. I’m doing Me. And Me says, “I have standards. If you want a favor from me, the least you can do is ask. If you cannot bring yourself to do that, either it’s not that important or you don’t respect or like me very much. Either way, not my problem.” QED.
Stoicism: A primer for how to be by RPAlternate42 | May 19, 2015 | Link

Stoicism

Stoicism is an ancient Greek school of philosophy founded at Athens by Zeno of Citium. The school taught that virtue, the highest good, is based on knowledge, and that the wise live in harmony with the divine Reason (also identified with Fate and Providence) that governs nature, and are indifferent to the vicissitudes of fortune and to pleasure and pain.

That's the textbook definition. But it's more functional to get to the how.

Doing is the best way to learn.

Stoicism keeps the following beliefs: ^*

- If you are unhappy, it is your fault.
- Everything is temporary
- We are social beings with a social duty
- Hedonism is not the path to happiness
- Fame & Fortune are overrated
- A philosophy of life must be lived
- Do not long for an ideal situation
- Maximize positive emotions and minimize negative emotions

Strategies

- Rephrase goals so that they are entirely within your control
- Have nothing you are not prepared to lose
- Live simply
- Negative visualization
- Exercise self-denial
- Resist materialism
- Accept what cannot be changed
- Refuse to consider yourself the victim
- Practice misfortune
- Live in accordance with human nature

If you are unhappy, it is your fault

You and only you can make you happy. Other people and other things cannot make you happy, but you can find happiness through their medium. Wood does not make one happy, but cutting, sanding, and assembling wood into a piece of art or furniture can bring happiness through the actions you take with it. Your wife may not make you happy, but being a leading force in your life, and by virtue hers, you can find happiness, once again, through the actions you take with her.

Inversely, you cannot, and should not expect to, make others happy. It is their responsibility to find happiness through the actions they take with you.

Everything is temporary

Life, relationships, your car, your marriage are all temporary. Entering into the idea that marriage is forever is an easy way of saying, I don't have to try to do better because no matter what, I'll stay married. This is laziness and sloth. Nothing is forever, but the longevity of things and relationships, and people can be extended through positive actions and regular maintenance and improvement.

We are social beings with a social duty

You are a social creature, and as such, you crave the interactions with other social creatures. You have friends, a wife, maybe children. These people comprise the network of which you have a social duty. You also have a social duty to those you work with, and your town, and your state, nation, and the world. Everything you do should be for the betterment of you circles of social duty. Starting at the lowest (your family) you raise healthy, strong, well-adjusted children, who bequeath upon the community their virtues and positive influence. In this way, your social duty to your family improves the societies around you.

Hedonism is not the path to happiness

Hedonism, a defining trait of the me generation, is the constant search for self-indulgence. Hedonism thrives on instant gratification and makes one dependent on the false idea that other things and other people can and should make them happy. Hedonism is being a spoiled child; hedonism is looking to lose weight without the effort; hedonism is want your wife to fuck you without trying to someone she actually wants to fuck. Hedonism is probably the main counter-point to Stoicism.

Fame & Fortune are Overrated

Fame and Fortune tie into hedonism; with these things, the ability, and temptation to have more and get more becomes overwhelming. Fame brings a false happiness because it depends on other people. Since only you can make yourself happy, the requirement of other people fame has nulls this ideal. Fortune is the more useful of the two, by itself. If the fortune you've accumulated is the result of fame (considering that everything is temporary, and the poor effects of hedonism) then consider that you haven't a fortune, but instead an amount of wealth that should be used to consider the future, your social duty to your family and community, and as a buffer to the temporary nature of everything.

A Philosophy of Life Must be Lived
Red Pill is not a philosophy; it is a praxeology; a science of human actions. Red Pill incorporates many concepts known through evolutionary biology, sociological and psychological studies of macor and micro groups, and some philosophies, mainly Stoicism. Stoicism is not something you are able to wade into, as with all philosophies, it must be lived to be understood. You can't know it unless you experience it, you can't learn unless you do it.

Do Not Long For an Ideal Situation

This plays into the old axiom of, "The grass is greener on the other side." To be clear, it's the idea of thinking, "my marriage sucks, my wife won't fuck me. I wish she would fuck me more." Wishing and talking about it does not make it so. Doing, makes it so If your grass is dead and dying, standing outside and talking about how it needs to be watered doesn't actually make the ground wet. Instead, remember that "The grass is greener where you water it," and then go out and water the grass. Don't imagine a better marriage... make yourself to better to provide a better environment for the marriage to improve.

Maximize Positive Emotions and Minimize Negative Emotions

Negative emotions (anger, hate, resentment, etc.) are contraindicated when trying to make something better. Resenting your wife for whatever reason won't make her change her behavior, and it will kill your mood, and by extension, hers. Instead, know that: If you are unhappy, it is your fault and that you Should not long for an ideal situation. Be happy with what you have, happy that you know how to improve it, and happy that you know you can improve it. Maintaining a positive, optimistic outlook on what is happening allows you to see the possibilities that are hidden by negative thinking. If one is resolved to not getting rescued, he will not find much use in starting a fire.

Now let's examine how we can bring these beliefs to fruition through practice.

Rephrase Goals So That They are Entirely Within Your Control

Let's pretend you want to run a 5K race. You don't know how to run well, and by extension, you don't know how to train. You get out and run, haphazardly, whenever, and however. Race day comes and you turn in a paltry time of 26 minutes. You resolve to be faster so you say, "I will be faster next time."

This is garbage thinking. There is only an immeasurable "faster" and an immeasurable "next time." That's anything over your previous time from 1 second or more for a length of time from no until whenever. Use SMART goals:

- Specific
- Measurable
- Achievable
- Realistic
- Time-limited
A SMART goal version of this example: "I will run a sub-25-minute 5K time in 12 weeks at the next scheduled race."

Apply these types of goals to everything, for Red Pillers, the best is to start with the gym: I will lose weight... I will lift x amount of lbs, and turn them into SMART goals. Once you have SMART goals, you have a time frame within you can apply a schedule and plan.

Have Nothing You Are Not Prepared to Lose & Resist Materialism

As Tyler Durden said, "You are not your fuckin' khakis."

Your car, your house, your clothes. These are things, material and simple. They are the product of your time, effort, and ability - the things you cannot live without.

If your car, house, and all your belongings burned to the ground tomorrow, you would still have the tools to bring those things back in some form. Your work allowed you the ability to pay for insurance to get new things when everything burns. Your work is the combination of your time, effort, and ability. These three things are the basis for all other material things you own. These are innate to you. Your house is not.

Live Simply

Living simply, or with austerity, allows you to appreciate the things you have. This does not mean live cheaply... or even frugally. One can own quality while living simply. Simple living leads to an uncluttered environment which extends to an uncluttered life. Your living space is a manifestation of your mind and your mind can be influenced by that living space. A simple living space has limited distractions.

Negative Visualization

Imagine a scenario where your house has burned down. Your family has no place to live, sleep, eat, etc. What do you do? Negative Visualization allows you to plan for the unexpected, or at least plan for the knowable problems that may arise. Your house is gone. Can you get a new one? If so, how? This is a good chance to exercise SMART goals. Figure out a problem that hasn't happened, and then plan for that contingency. This will give you a level of control over your life you didn't previously have. For Red Pillers, we did this early on, without thinking; we have done this in regards to our wives: what would happen if we got divorced tomorrow? Where would I live? What would I do? How would I find new companionship?

Exercise Self-Denial & Practice Misfortune

Live, temporarily, in a way that deprives you of something you think you depend on. Some Red Pillers, while unplugging do this with sex; we call it "monk mode." We distance ourselves from the thing we thought we needed and from the people we thought we needed it from. In this, we find that we survive just fine and that we now have the energy to devote to maximizing positive emotions and working to make ourselves happy. One of the classic ways men practice self-denial is through camping; we commune with nature, with very little (the bare basics in most cases,) and if you do it backpack-style, you limit yourself even further by way of what you carry and that you make yourself distant from society's technological boon, the car.

Accept What Cannot be Changed

You cannot change the way others are any more than you can change the rotation of the Earth or the expansion of the universe. In remembering that your happiness is made only by you you recognize quickly that attempting to change others is an exercise in futility. Instead, change yourself, as that is all that can be changed.

Refuse to Consider Yourself the Victim

You are not the victim. Inasmuch as you cannot change others to your whim, you need to accept that they cannot change you. If you feel the part of the victim, it is because you allowed that person, or situation, to keep you in a state of negativity. People do not victimize you, you allow yourself to be a target. Instead, stand up, defy the status quo as you have allowed it to form, and shake the foundations of what was formerly expected of you. Claiming victim-hood is founded in laziness and a lack of personal accountability.

Live in Accordance With Human Nature

As you should accept what cannot be changed directly, you should recognize that which can be changed indirectly. Humans are not special and different. While there are sociopathic and psychopathic exceptions, people tend to behave in very predictable ways. By working ourselves into that system, we can effect the changes we want to see in other simply by changing ourselves. In a marriage, by simply being a better man, we find that our marriage improves because our wives adjust, and re-set themselves in a very predictable manner to the new dynamic we have created. Trying to live as we were doing pre-Red Pill leads to similar predictable behavior, just manifested in a different way.

As you unplug, lift, read, and better yourself, examine which of these basic tents you have been following and continue to apply them, and in bettering yourself, figure out which Stoic fundamentals you are missing and add them. We are working to better ourselves for the sake of ourselves and ultimately our marriages:

- Are you unhappy? Whose fault is that? Stop considering yourself the victim.
- Is your unhappiness permanent? It is not; Set SMART goals, Accept that you can't change others, and improve yourself.
- You have a social duty to your wife and family. Have you been living up to that job? Start applying yourself to be better so that others can follow you.
- Are you avoiding your problems in order to find happiness through self-indulgence? Seek happiness through self-improvement, not self-indulgence.
- Do you wish things were better? That will not work; make things better. Improve yourself, be better at what you do, set the goals to bring the improvements to fruition.
- Are you focusing on the negative aspects of your life? A negative thinker sees only the nots, a positive thinker sees the what ifs.
• Are you depending on other people and things to make your life better? Step back, imagine a life without, practice that life without, and make a plan for when it happens.

Lift, read, improve, and be better.

^^I left fatalism* from the list as I don't believe that the idea of predetermination is unhealthy for our purposes. I think fatalism is an ideal from a time when men literally thought gods planned out our existence on a thread. Red Pill requires existentialism in order to be effective, otherwise we are looking to others to make our lives complete, gods withstanding.
Party of the Century

When I was in college I was a decent engineering student, and an even better partier. I spent my fair share of weekends drunk at football games and crashing frat parties for dirty sorority girls; “Why yes I’m in a frat, it’s called Delta Tau Chi.” Me and some bros got the idea to put together an epic house party. This would be a theme party on a grandiose scale of Boon and Otter. Kegs to be had, women galore, human sacrifices, it was going to be the highest level of debauchery. I had just broken up with a long term relationship (She said she loved me, but wasn’t in love; epic foreshadowing), and I was a man with no commitments.

We hatched a plan, created a theme and in order to entice people there we offered free beer. I made up a few flyers with the shitty free university copier and handed them out to key people. “First two kegs on us just come dressed! Tonight’s theme: 70’s disco. Party starts 10 pm.” I invited a few people, including a couple of the sorority sisters who lived next door to me and my roommate. What was supposed to be a fun bash of maybe 60 people, turned into 200, at least. The first two kegs were gone by 11 pm. 70’s disco somewhere morphed into pimps and ho’s; any costume event is really about how women can dress slutty without being judged. My ex showed up with some guy, but I hadn’t a care in the world, as she walked by me she was on ignore because I was busy trying to bed not one but two ADP’s (we called them Another Dirty Pussy behind their back for good reason). By 2 am the party spilled out into the yard next to the house and a total of 6 kegs were had in the end. I remember talking to a guy and he was like “This is crazy we heard about it on the other side of campus, I don’t even know whose party this is!” Somewhere around 4 the police showed up and the party fizzled out under the advice of the men in blue. Me? I didn’t care because I closed and was proceeding to treat my new friend from ADP like a farm animal. Unfortunately I couldn’t close the deal on both of them, but I didn’t care, one would have to be enough tonight. I woke up somewhere around noon with her naked next to me and the smell of eggs cooking. I put some shorts on and went to the kitchen to find a girl completely unknown to me wearing one of my t-shirts and not much else, cooking said eggs. Looking around I saw a couple curled up on the floor and two more girls in the same outfit; “when the fuck did people start raiding my t-shirts?” was all I could think. My buddy I planned the party with had hooked up with an old crush, I had banged a nice slutty chick, and my ex left early in a huff, because she wasn’t the center of attention. It took 2 days to clean up the mess, I lost 4 t-shirts (I don’t know why they were needed or how it got that point) and a week later we got a stern warning from the landlord that any damage done to the property would come off our deposit.

I went to class the next week and ran into people I hardly recognized, all congratulating me on and epic party. I got a promise to hook up again with the ADP and I literally felt like big man on campus. Things went back to normal, the ADP chick was crazy and slutty and fizzled out, but all in all it was a good couple of months. My buddy and I hatched another plan; repeat the party.

This time we’d start off with 3 kegs so we didn’t have to drive to the beer store so early again. Instead of 70’s it would be a toga party, and it was going to be awesome. I made up fliers, hit up the same people and we waited for the epicness to commence.

Only this time it didn’t work the same. By 2 am we still had almost 2 full kegs. My ex came and went, this time she left saying “oh, blah blah blah is having a bash over on such and such” and left taking 10 people with her. The other ADP I hadn’t closed with at the previous party showed up and split within 5 minutes, and left with a majority of the talent. By the end of the night we maybe had 50 people; funny because it would have been a good party in its own right but the expectations of the night far outgrew the reality of it. We ended up having a weekend long party where people would come and go, maybe 4 or 5 at a time, just to get rid of the beer. I couldn’t understand what was different. We literally had the same ingredients to success as the last time, save it was a little later in the semester (it was a large southern school so it was still quite seasonable).

In my entire college career I’d been to maybe 5 or 6 of those kinds of parties. The kind of party where you run into acquaintances 20 years later and they speak fondly of it, “Hey McGill I still remember the 70’s party, I got the clap but it was worth it (true story)!”

In MRP we oft use the axiom from Rollo about rooting around in the garbage in front of neighbors. It’s a good analogy of why you don’t go back to failed relationships.

Iron Rule of Tomassi #7: It is always time and effort better spent developing new, fresh, prospective women than it will ever be in attempting to reconstruct a failed relationship. Never root through the trash once the garbage has been dragged to the curb. You get messy, your neighbor’s see you do it, and what you thought was worth digging for is never as valuable as you thought it was.

In the case of LTR’s this still applies, but I’d also postulate a corollary to that you can never relive a party.
You Can Never Relive a Party Corollary

There's a post from a guy on MRP about his struggles with opiate addiction and how he feels he let his unicorn get away. Now he got the right advice and there's a lot more going on than just rooting around in the garbage or trying to relive a party, but the idea still applies for those of us that are in a LTR or married. No matter where you are in your marriage, the past has no bearing on the future. You can never relive the party, whether it was the epic slut-sex she gave you when you first started dating or how she was a good submissive girl willing to follow your every whim, you can't recreate that feeling of when she did those things for you. I think Rollo has a good point, and that's when shit is broke don't waste effort to fix it that effort can be better spent elsewhere. Often in a LTR there is a want to get back to basics, get back to the early days. There may not be a need to next, but just reset. In this case it is not about being broke, it's about some fantasy of reliving that epic party that was the beginning of your relationship. So many men come on here and complain and daydream that “If they could just get back to where they were before they fucked everything up” life would be grand again.

Our first party was new and innovative. People had never been to something like that before (at least college kids in the early 90’s). The second one was a copycat and hindsight showed people saw it for what it was. When you as a man are approaching your relationship trying to unfuck it, you need to be cognizant of what the future holds. You can never relive a party, so too can you never relive a relationship. It takes a big man to realize that he is rebuilding his relationship anew and frankly my personal advice is if kids aren't involved the default option should always be next. TRP and MRP are at discord because of this very fact, and even though I’m the first to tell a guy to move on, I've battled years of trying to relive a party. I’ve made the value judgment that the effort is worth it to stay because the cost would be too great otherwise. Kids make a compelling excuse to get back that mojo, but it takes a lot of leadership to say, “I can't make it like it was, but I can make it better whatever that means”. The real work comes in finding out what it is that makes it better.

We know it starts with you, you need to become compelling and people will want to be around you. Maybe that’s your wife, maybe it’s your new LTR. Have a new party for what it is, not what it was. Let go of the expectations of getting back to the past and instead embrace what the future may hold, regardless of how it turns out. By time I graduated, I’d been to a bunch of awesome parties. Some were no more than 10 people, but truly the best memories of my life. If I had chased that elusive “giant kegger” my whole college career I’d have been really disappointed. Instead I had a series of great experiences that in sum total add up to more than that one party. I've let go of the past in my marriage too, and found myself better off for it because of that.
Dear Diary,

OK, so been a minute. But this post has taken me some time to put together as it tends to be more specific, actionable things to do in the bedroom.

So, you are fucking her ass like the slut she is, and now you need to keep upping the ante. Well, here are some ideas to spice up your sexual adventures.

Maybe you are already doing all this, and hey that’s great. Why didn’t you take the fucking time to write this post then?

That’s what I thought.

Safewords and Safe Gestures

Fitchick and I have evolved to two sets of safe words. We have the standard Yellow/Red for non-rape fantasies. Then we have another set of words for rape/resisted sex play. The reason is, during the rape/resisted sex scenarios she needs to be able to say the words "No, you are hurting me, please stop" etc and you need both need to be safe in knowing these words are not real, right now. They are all actually really hot to hear, so go for it.

For this standard Yellow/Red do not apply so you need a second set of designated words. You also need "safe gestures" for you both in case she has her underwear in her mouth gagging her, or something else.

We have two safe gestures: Extreme, rapid eye blinking and/or finger snapping. In case of blindfold, you cant see eyes, so you do not restrain fingers. And vice-versa. This gives you visual clues. In the case of safe gestures, we consider then the same level of RED, so all actions stop immediately.

Level 1: Safe Words

- Blindfold her.
- Tying her hands behind her back.
- Pinning her hands above her head while you are on top.
- Biting her ears.
- Biting/pulling/pinching her nipples.
- Slap her ass when in doggy.
- Lift up her shirt to her face and use it as a gag and/or blindfold. Works well with hands above head.

Level 2: Safe Words

- Order her to masturbate while you watch.
• Order her to undress herself while you sit on the other side of the room to supervise.
• Facefucking.
• Facefucking with her hair in pony tails using them as rains.
• Order her to her knees to perform oral in front of a full length mirror.
• Grab the back of her neck during oral and force yourself deeper into her mouth.

Level 3: Safe Words

• Finger her, then order her to taste herself off your finger. Bonus points for anal, ensure sanitary conditions.
• Pull her hair with one hand, then two.
• Grab to fist fulls of hair when you are on top, placing all your weight into the mattress and order her to maintain eye contact while you pound her.
• During any sexual act, calling her your whore/slut.
• Pin her against the wall face first and fuck her while standing up.

Level 4: Safe Gestures

• Place a clothing hook over your door, handcuff her then put the cuffs over the hook. Use a leg spreader to open her legs, then fuck her from behind. Add in blindfolds and gags as desired.
• In doggy, pull her hands behind her back forcing her face into the mattress. Order her to hold her own hands while you place your non-dominate hand on the back of her head pushing it harder and deeper into the mattress.
• Tear off her underwear, and use them as a gag, in any of the previous scenarios.
• Order her to her knees to perform oral. Tower over her, and while you face fuck her, order her to maintain eye contact with you. Verbal commands and sexual name calling is required.
• Standing from behind, or in doggy reach around to her face and place your fingers in her mouth like a bit a horse chews on. Ensure lots of verbal cues are used "My dirty little slut."
• Standing from behind or in doggy, reach around and grab her chin. Pull her face up to you, forcing her to over extend and hyper-extend her lower back. This will cause great pain/pleasure if done correctly for her. Kiss her cheek during this and ensure verbal cues are relayed.
• Fuck her fully clothed. Pull her skirt/dress up, panties to the side and fuck her like that, standing, from behind.

Level 5: Safe Gestures

• Cover her mouth during any sexual act.
• Cover her mouth and pinch her nose closed.
• Use a pillow case over her head.
• Slap her across the face during sexual acts.
• Slap her breasts during sexual acts.
• Come in her, tell her to squat down and let it drip out of her onto the floor. Once some is on the floor, order her to get on all 4’s and lick it up.
Scenario Based Sex:

- When she gets home from work, spring out from a hidden area, cover her mouth, drag her to the bedroom, toss her on the bed and rip her clothes off.

- She is your tenant and you are her landlord. She enters your "office" from the garage, bedroom, etc. She is unable to pay her rent for the month. You take her to the kitchen where you have pre-staged a dinner setting for two. Use plastic plates or paper. She is going to explain the situation, and it will escalate to you offering rent in exchange for sex. She will resist verbally. You will get to the point where you stand up and violently sweep all the place settings off the table. Ensure you do this in a safe direction, and make sure you use plastic so nothing breaks. Once the table is cleared you march over to her and lift her up, roughly slamming her down onto the freshly cleaned off kitchen table where you will force yourself onto her from behind to collect your rent money. You will remind her that moving forward she will give you sex in exchange for free rent. This can then be a running fantasy for you and your wife for the entire month. You can send her texts like, "Rent is past due again, I will be collecting tonight"

- She is a runner running through the park. You spring out from behind a tree and execute a rape fantasy.

- Public library. You require a large public library. You meet each other somewhere in the back of the stacks for a sexual encounter.

There is a longer list that I am still working on, maybe that will be Part 3.

Until then, try and get your dick wet this weekend.

Come back, and tell us which of these you did yourself.

And you will notice, DEERING, masturbating and arguing with your SO are not on this list.
Cancer is taking my wife; MRP has helped make things better, but where now?

by taon4r5 | June 3, 2016 | Link

My wife is dying. We don't know when, but it's looking more like things are going downhill faster than we thought. I'm 42, she's 37.

Since discovering MRP more than a year ago, I've been implementing some of it, and I believe it's made a horror-show of a situation a bit better.

Crunching the history as tightly as I can:

Ovarian cancer was discovered during the c-section birth of our son three years ago. Immediate radical hysterectomy. Chemo, surgery, chemo, surgery, recurrence, told she had a year or two left to live. Clinical trial, sold house, moved provinces, new pathology said cancer was slower-growing than first docs had said. Certain imminent death was revised to certain death but further in the future. That messed with her head, huge. Told me she had decided to end the relationship but balked when she thought she was going to die soon, but extended lifespan made her want out again. Discovered MRP. Began applying. Two attempts at sex - too painful for her. Turns out she had a tumor roughly where her uterus used to be, impinging on her vagina. Another tumor removal surgery in January with bowel resection. Resection failed, colostomy. Colostomy failed, long wait without food for scar tissue to calm down. Another colostomy. Finally out of hospital after three months, rib pain. New tumors in bone; radiation. Weeks later, new pain in pelvis, more bone tumors. Radiation. Last week, headaches and face numbness. Tumor in skull.

That brings us to now.

What's MRP have to do with all this?

When years of DB, resentment, frustration and upset were amplified by the birth of our son and the ensuing cancer crisis, she said the marriage was done and not fixable. Then I happened upon this sub. I dove into the reading immediately.

I give five-star credit to NMMNG for opening my eyes and changing my worldview. The concept of covert contracts was a life-changer, for sure. That epiphany alone was worth the price of admission. No longer seeking the attaboys for my good deeds freed me up enormously. Embracing the notion that she wasn't going to give me emotional support -- because that was unreasonable to expect of her -- was freeing. Kind of sad, but freeing. Being able to say "no" or even "not right now" was a relief. There was pushback, and I went too far in making a point on occasion, but it's a big win overall, and I'm grateful.

I didn't get to apply SGM/DEVI. Sex is not on the table and may never be again. She's had another segment cut out of her vaginal vault, she has a colostomy, she's recovering from such vast surgery that she spent months looking like a living autopsy photo. Her asshole does nothing and goes nowhere now. She can barely exert herself without vomiting.
Did I go to the gym and get buff? No. Most of this year, I was grateful to have food on the table for my boy, clean clothes and some sleep at night.

But being left as the single dad for months with mommy in hospital did let me establish, for myself and anyone who cared to see, that I could take care of all of it, and do it well. I led and led handily. I did better than even I thought I could. I've been an excellent daddy and steward of the household.

Now that she's back home, I'm still having to lead. It's actually more work. Because she's largely immobile and dependent on help.

As much as MRP tenets and supporting materials have provided us with concepts, guidelines and case histories for a vast array of situations and variables, I've not seen any that suggest how to apply it when your wife needs to be diapered, or you need to do laundry every day because of soiled bedsheets, or you have to help change her colostomy.

Canonical texts about banging hotties seem utterly foreign to my life, frankly. This shit is a perspective-changer.

I mean, as much as I'd love to say "do it yourself, your highness" when she asks for a glass of water, she honestly can't do much herself....and she's using the water to swallow pills that are keeping her alive and easing some of the crippling pain.

So, I'm in a weird spot. After escaping that sense of being a servant to my wife's perfectionist whims by asserting my own boundaries and abandoning the idea that "doing it right" will make her love and want me -- I'm thrust back into a lot of "beta" duties. And as exhausting as it is, I'm not really bitter about it. I get frustrated, sure. I get sad, yeah.

To wind it back to MRP, I'll say that it's been a valuable learning experience overall. I'd be miserable had I not changed my thinking about my role in a marriage, role as a man, and how to lead. I think AWALT is over-used, and often in a dismissive, insulting way, but it's given me solace sometimes, in situations that would previously have eaten me up.

MRP has given me the tools to recognize how the vast majority of my upset was driven by things I was either driving or not stopping -- if it's me, I can change it. If it's her, I can work with it or around it. If it's just the way it is and not changeable, I can adjust my outlook to handle it or, I suppose, bounce. It's allowed me to take responsibility instead of blaming.

In short: in MRP I discovered the keys to what she was saying she wanted, but I wasn't hearing. Putting the same requests in a codified concept with different language let me see what I should have been doing for a long time. Too little, too late, perhaps, but what I have been able to do has made for a more equitable, respectful and productive marriage than would have otherwise been possible.

But I'm at a point where I don't know how much more I can get out of it. There are pieces I'm missing, obviously. I should be at the gym, but that's just not been possible, and as her health continues to decline, I don't think it will be for some time. I'm not about to push for sex right now, and that might not be possible again in her lifetime, either.
I don't know when she's going to die. Might be soon. Might be months or years more of this. But whatever happens afterward, I'm glad I've learned what I've learned in the past year. I think it will serve me well.

Thoughts, questions, or recommendations are welcome.

TL;DR: Wife with terminal cancer hated our marriage. I found MRP and it's a lot more respectful and tolerable now. I give most of the credit to the wonders of NMMNG, but have absorbed other useful truths. What now?
An Epiphany about Mental Capital and Becoming by wildnight98 | May 12, 2019 | Link

tl;dr: I realized I have built a little fake frame inside my wife’s frame. I need to stop using mental cycles on thinking about her and instead use those cycles plus my skills and abilities to become who I have the ability to, now, easily become.

My problem is not how my wife is treating me (or not treating me). This is what MRP has been saying since day one, and it is what I haven’t been hearing properly since day one.

The more I worry about what she is or isn’t doing, the less I worry about being ALL -I- can be and doing ALL I could do and most importantly, becoming what I am primed to become. Since I can only hold one thought in my mind at a time, when I focus on (obsess over?) her, it is to the exclusion of everything else—even especially including the things that, if I did focus on them, I could massively improve myself and be more successful in every part of my life. And when I worry so much about being with her, I am giving up mental processing time that I could be using to accomplish and create, which are the activities that are truly essentially masculine-not worrying about a particular pussy. When I spend so much mental and emotional capital on trying to please her and get with her and spend time with her, it is mental and emotional capital that I am taking away from what I should be focusing on.

And just who the fuck is she anyway? A little Polk County redneck slut who was fucking her boyfriend when she was 15 years old in front of her fucking mother who was helping her cover it up from her stepfather; and that with a pregnant teenaged sister in the house. Why the fuck should I care about anything she thinks? If she isn’t helping me accomplish my mission, what the fuck is she any good to me for anyway?

God has given me this resentful shrewish wife to force me to stop chasing pussy, and use the skills and talents that he’s given me. Analogous to what Morpheus says to Neo, when I learn how to be a complete man, I won’t have to chase pussy. Pussy will be chasing me. That’ll be my fucking problem then.

When am I going to stop thinking about acting and just start fucking acting? What the fuck am I waiting for? A gold-plated invitation?

The Reason for Inaction

It is rank bullshit to blame indecision for my inaction. First of all, indecision is not fucking manly, not at all. So, I know for sure that I need to quit being fucking indecisive. I already got this lesson relative to her, I already quit being indecisive relative to my interactions with her. I already pick restaurants and shit (although I give in to pushback way too easily). But I stopped there for some reason, my progress frozen within the circle of her. This is classic living in her frame! I only changed my behavior but I didn’t become a decisive person. Call it faking it till I make it; but I stopped trying to make it after I got faking it down pat. WTF. This is the danger inherent in the “fake it till you make it” philosophy; you can get stuck in “faking it.” At some point you need to graduate and become.
In other words, I have constructed a little fake frame of my own that is completely contained inside of her frame. In my little fake frame, I believe I am self-actualized; but every time the real frame (her frame) shakes, my little fake frame falls apart a little. And thus my belief in my own self-actualization is proven to myself to be a lie. As a specific example, if she fails to compliment my published article, I feel resentful or butthurt or something. I thought I was being manly by publishing and not making a big deal out of it; but in reality I was waiting-at some level-for some praise or appreciation from her. Only because I am in her frame do I care whether she appreciates my successes or not. She doesn’t. Who gives a shit? She never helped me a bit anyway.

Second, indecision cannot be an explanation for inaction because it is merely a synonym for inaction. I’m lying to myself when I say I don’t act because I haven’t yet decided on the best course of action. Failing to decide is the same as failing to act. In other words, if I have decided on a course of action I am acting. Deciding is acting.

Third, fear of failure is an insufficient explanation for my indecisive inaction. Everyone experiences a fear of failure to some extent; I am no exception. But I don’t pathologically fear failure, never have. I am OK failing and trying again. Look at tennis; I’m still hanging in there despite not being ready to play competitively for years. Maybe, if I’ve failed multiple times or failed spectacularly at something, then I might be reluctant to try the same thing again. Especially if I don’t enjoy whatever it is. But otherwise I can’t blame any fear of failure on not deciding to act to become a better, more actualized version of myself.

I’ve Been Stuck Here For Ages

Because I let myself get mired in her frame, I have been frozen; not becoming all that God has empowered me to become. True, I have broken out in a couple places, such as with my physical development. But overall, in the big picture, I am coasting. I am stuck. I am frozen in place. And it’s not fucking manly in the broadest sense of that word. Men create, men build, men conquer. They don’t fucking coast and feel sorry for themselves.

But What Should I Become?

Ok, I’ll allow that this may need some thought. But there are enough easy ones that immediately come to mind that the need for any additional thinking is not any excuse at all:

1. Why aren’t I shredded by now? There’s no fucking excuse. I have achieved good muscularity, I know how to fast, and I can be disciplined about my diet. What is my fucking excuse for not being shredded?

2. Why aren’t I killing it at work?

3. Why aren’t I publishing something every fucking month?
4. Why aren’t I working on putting some big fucking deals together where I could make a LOT of money? One of my high-net-worth clients, for just one fucking example, loves me and is dying to have an investment partner. I know a LOT about deals of all kinds. Fucking do it and quit making me sick.

5. Um tennis? How long am I planning to fuck around with this?

6. Being intentional about building my separate fucking relationships with my sons.

7. Why aren’t I spending my free time working my social network?

8. Why aren’t I regularly going places that I want to visit without people who fucking complain about everything?

Seriously dude, do I really need anything more than that list? What the fuck else do I need motherfucker? Get to fucking work and quit using indecision as an excuse.

I mean, really, what do I want? I want one of these boats I see floating around down here in S Florida. I want to weekend at my house in Antigua. For fucks sake, why haven’t I been to Antigua ten times already to figure out where I want the house to be?

The Good News

Good news is, I have always been a slow starter and then a massive late-game winner. In strategy games I have always marshaled my forces for most of the game, laying back, and then late in the game sprung my carefully planned strategy to massive winning effect. Many times I start to feel like I have over prepared and it is past time to drop the hammer. That is exactly the situation here. It is past time to drop the hammer.

My life looks a lot like my approach to strategic games before I start deploying assets to create the endgame scenario. Maybe not so coincidentally, given that’s how my brain works.

It is time to deploy my assets and win the fucking game. Quit fucking around asshole.

I already know how to do it. I have the personal skills that will enable me to do it. I have access to resources to help me do it. I have all the knowledge I need. I have social capital. I have leadership ability. Just fucking do it. Do I really have to beg myself? Seriously WTF am I waiting for? Get moving.
FR : Its not about the candy. Its about Bear Hugs.
by vincedecola | February 9, 2017 | Link

Woke up this morning to day 10 in her cycle. My head is filled with thoughts, thoughts of her ovulation: Is she already ovulating? Do I have a few more days to up my manliness before her ovulation peak? Shit, I was a faggot day before yesterday and I failed a few shit tests...Get frame boy, get frame...ovulation incoming...

She is just coming off of a bad fever she had for a couple of days. She is sleeping like a baby. Her head is on my chest with her feet under my calves protecting her from the cold bedroom air.

I am still sleepy. But I am experiencing the best morning wood I have ever had. I correlate that to heavy deadlifts I did the day before. During that workout, I remember, in the heat of the lifting session, my trainer asked me to switch form, from conventional to sumo for my last set... and bang! I deadlifted my DL PR + 20kg, an explosive rep I would call it.

I initiate.
She responds.
I cum, she doesn't.

I get up. Its time to get ready for work.
I come out of the shower sharply dressed. I put on wax on my beard and moustache and I comb it to perfection. I put on Polo Double Black, an EDT I bought after hours of shopping around. /u/GargantuaBlarg29, you have been an inspiration.

She is still in bed.
She: "You drove 20 miles yesterday just to perform at an event and you couldn't even get me candy on the way home."
Me:"Complaints. complaints. complaints...Why do you complain so much sweetie?"(Amused expressions, confident body language and eye contact)
She: "If you think these are complaints, I will shut up."
Me: "Yes please. Peace."
She: (raging bull mode and silent treatment)

I am ready and its time to ride to work.
Me: See you baby. (my arms wide open)
She: (raging bull mode and silent treatment)
Me: Baby, see you later, my queenie...(my arms wide open)
She: (raging bull mode and silent treatment)

I then remembered a comment by /u/addictedtoyourface...

Not sure why you added this detail, but since you did let me comment on it. Here is a perfect opportunity for you to pull your wife into your frame. My wife and daughter both do this sometimes (the reasons don’t even matter). If I get one of those pathetic hugs I step back and go, "uh what the hell was that?" Sometimes they snap out of it and give me a great big hug and kiss, sometimes they don't. If they don't, I rush them and give them the biggest bear hug ever. Try that a few times and see what happens.

Me: What the hell is that for a goodbye?!(my arms wide open and a smile)
She: You have to come to me and hug me if you want to hug me. (she forgot she was giving me the silent treatment). Do you even know how lovingly I come to you and kiss you when I leave for work before you? And look at you!
Me: Again complaints?! (Amused expressions)
She: Go and get yourself a chick who doesn't. You won't find one. I am better than most. (bitchy mode)
Me: Listen sweetie, I am going to count down from 10 to 1. If I don't find you in my arms by then, you won't like what I would do to you.
She: I would rather wait to see what you do.(resting bitch face)
Me: 10,9,....3,2,1...Beaarrrrrrrrrr Huggggggggggg!(I jump into bed, lift her off and hug her close)
She: Hahahahahahahaha.....(she laughed hard for some 5 long minutes while I tickled her with my face and breath)
She: You know you were a grizzly bear earlier. Round and soft. Now you are a horse, all muscelly and tight.(while feeling my pecs and arms)
Me: Ha, its time for your horse to sprint to work.
She: Don't ride rash pleaaaase. I don't want you to die on the road. (tears in her eyes)
Me: Never.(Wiping her tears off. Kiss on the forehead)
She kissed. And that was the best 10 sec kiss I had in a long while.
Then she did something she had never ever done in our entire marriage and dating.

As I sat on my motorbike, I heard a cute lady voice call from our 10th floor apartment window: "Bye honey"(flying kisses) and she waited there looking at me ride away until I was no longer visible in the distance.

TLDR:
Lift, morning woods are better.
Let her ride her own emotional roller-coaster.
They love the feels and the ups and downs.
Bear hugs(in your own frame) bring them into your frame. ;)

it doesn't always work, pull anchor and sail away

by trp_ocd | August 14, 2016 | Link

INTRO: you may have to finally pull anchor and sail away from port to go travel and explore the world, if the first mate doesn't want to come back from shore leave. some of you asked for my story, so here:

i will probably come out of this tunnel on the right side of the divorce, as she makes quite a bit better than me, with her burdening the debt, having everything in her name (control issues).

be those issues mine or hers, it's moot now. the end has come. sometimes, after 8 years of marriage, 5 years of dating, and 18 months applying more and more gradual dread, it just doesn't work. she was staunch that she 'was never going to change'. she was right. I wanted a better place, she wanted the same place, so that's that. good bye.

i was in a bad place when we met, i had a serious family tragedy, and she, in not so many words, saved my life. i had hibernating alpha traits, with beta tendencies (good guy). I loved to be physical, lift, eat right, smart, witty, outgoing, funny, game for days. looking back, i see every beta step along the way. submissive sex, moving in, moving away, buying more shit, buying a house, getting married, getting a dog, having a kid... then, all the way through all the same BS to r/deadbedrooms.

after a few years of once-in-a-while duty starfish missionary hurry the hell up are you done yet sex, i found the link. My eyes drank in every morsel. TRP, MRP, ASKTRP, sort by TOP, 2x, books (pirated, bought/ wtfe). I am basically a decently built, good looking, intelligent, charismatic, walking example of MRP.

After six months of hardcore application of TRP in the marriage, i sat her down. told her i wanted more from her. i wasnt getting what i wanted. not sexually, not in choreplay, i want you to be nice to me, enjoy each others company, to her everything was a battle to be won. I was no longer in war mode, i wanted my first mate. she wasnt sure what to think. she was reluctant.

i continued to lift to maintain, i didnt want to be enormous, i wanted to look good and stave off injury (forties). she was still overweight and lazy. ate junk. didnt exercise. continually bitched about how she hated her job. she refused to give me more control over finances. she refused to quit being bitchy. when she was a cunt, i went silent. i was always in a good mood. i made friends easy, life of the party. hobbies roaring. wood stuff? cutting and painting. music? playing and learning. venues booking. horizons expanding. it was too much for her comfort zone.

over the next year, we had three nuclear meltdowns. she actually sent me texts regarding divorce. a few weeks later, i gave it to her.

LESSON LEARNED sometimes, no matter what you do, she wont want to to be on your ship. pull your anchor and go be a captain. not every vessel needs a mate. am i promoting MGTOW? only if you consider you need the right FM for your ship, which may not be the one you have currently.

as far as my situation, im lucky. i have a good chance at alimony and support. she made more than me and wouldn't put shit in my name too. i guess karma has a sneaky way of biting people in the ass. OK, now we are gunna have the phone lines open, sorry if you have been on hold- first caller, what's your question?
To quote J. C. Penney, founder of the department store chain, "Give me a stock clerk with a goal, and I’ll give you a man who will make history. Give me a man with no goals, and I’ll give you a stock clerk."- Neil Strauss, The Rules of the Game

In the book The Rules of the Game, there are several missions listed around evaluating yourself, which are worthy of review as you are discovering or refining your purpose.

From the book:

MISSION 1: Evaluate Yourself

Fitness programs require you to weigh in on the first day. Financial plans ask for a list of your assets and debts. So to revamp your social life, you’ll need to make a social assessment of yourself. Your first mission is to write answers to the following questions. Don't worry about what anyone else will think of your answers. Your goal is to be as honest with yourself as possible.

1. Write one or two sentences describing how you believe other people currently perceive you.

2. Write one or two sentences describing how you'd like to be perceived by others.

3. List three of your behaviors or characteristics you would like to change.

4. List three new behaviors or characteristics you would like to adopt.

MISSION 2: Set Your Goals

Your mission is to read the following questions, think about them carefully, and write your personal mission statement. Be as specific and ambitious as possible. (Examples of accomplishments include starting a band, buying a house, getting in shape, launching a business, becoming president.)

1. What three accomplishments would you like to achieve to make you happier?

2. What are the reasons these accomplishments will make you happier?
3. What is your personal mission? (fill out the following statement)

I will become (MY ROLE, maximum four words) who will (MY CLAIM TO FAME, maximum four words) within (NUMBER) days/weeks/years.

4. List three specific results that will let you know that you've accomplished your mission. (For example, I will have earned $200,000; I will have lost thirty pounds; or I will have won five Academy Awards).

5. Why are you now fully committed to pursuing your personal mission? (fill out the following statement)

Because if I don't pursue it now, I will continue to suffer over the next years and: my (element/quality of life) will decrease/get worse/fail; x3

But if I do pursue it now, my (element/quality of life) will increase/improve/come true; x3

From The Way of the Superior Man, pages 18-19:

“Your mission is your priority. Unless you know your mission and have aligned your life to it, your core will feel empty. Your presence in the world will be weakened, as will your presence with your intimate partner. The next time you notice yourself "giving in" to your woman, postponing your mission and denying your true purpose in order to spend time with her, stop. Tell your woman that you love her, but you cannot deny your heart's purpose. Tell her that you will spend 30 minutes (or some specific time) with her in absolute attention and total presence, but then you must return to carry on your mission. Your woman will be more fulfilled with 30 minutes a day of undivided attention and ravishing love than she will with a few hours of your weak and divided presence when your heart really isn't into it. Time you spend with your woman should be time you really want to be with her more than anything else. If you'd rather be doing something else, she'll feel it. Both of you will be dissatisfied.”

From The Way of the Superior Man, pages 30-31:

“The core of your life is your purpose. Everything in your life, from your diet to your career, must be aligned with your purpose if you are to act with coherence and integrity in the world. If you know your purpose, your deepest desire, then the secret of success is to discipline your life so that you support your deepest purpose and minimize distractions and detours. But if you don't know your deepest desire, then you can't align your life to it. Everything in your life is dissociated from your core. You go to work, but since it's not connected to your deepest purpose, it is just a job, a way to earn money. You go through your daily round with your family and friends, but each moment is just another in a long string of moments, going nowhere, not inherently profound.Disconnected from your core, you feel weak. This empty feeling will undermine not only your "erection" in the world, but your erection with your woman, too. However, when you know your true purpose, which is your core desire in life, each moment can become a full expression of your core desire. Every instant of career, every instant of intimacy, is filled with the power of your heart purpose. You are no longer just going through the motions at work and with your woman, but you are living the truth of your life, and giving the gifts of your love, moment by moment. Such a life is complete unto itself in every instant. The superior man is not seeking for fulfillment through work and woman, because he is already full. For him, work and intimacy are opportunities to give his gifts, and be vanished in the bliss of the giving.”

Evolving your purpose is a natural part of growth as you live and build experiences. I’m not going to quote the whole book of TWOTSM, however it is encouraged that you read and review this to define and refine your own purpose. These are merely tools that can be used on your MAP. Working out, STFU, sidebar - they all are ultimately getting to a man’s purpose. Defining one’s purpose is a key part of your own sexual strategy - sure, you can lose weight and make some initial gains with your wife, but once you have a purpose... look out!

If you have additional thoughts or resources on purpose to help focus people as they post in the OYS threads or define their own MAP, put them below.
Life at 50
by Rollo-Tomassi | April 3, 2018 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2018/04/02/life-at-50/

Excerpt:

I’ve done really well for myself. That’s a statement of fact, though it sounds like I’m glossing myself. I still see a lot of guys I used to know who, back in the day, I was almost certain we’re going to go places and do big things. With the exception of maybe two, every one of them has fallen short of what I used to think they’d accomplish. A lot of them were the inspirations for posts about changing the direction of your life to better facilitate a woman’s plans for her own life. People hate it when other people compare lives. The standard line is “well if they’re happy who are you to judge?” or else it’s “we all find happiness in our own ways” or something suitably ambiguous. It’s one of those things we say so as not to appear judgmental. But everyone of us makes comparisons about a great many thing. There’s not a woman on planet earth who doesn’t compare herself, her quality of life and the man she’s married with her sister’s.

I could give a shit about what these guys have done with their lives up to age fifty, but I do think we need to take assessments of how our lives have turned out. It’s natural for us to want to measure our achievements, but at my age all that does now is make me realize how stupid I was when I thought so much more of other people and not enough of myself then. We shouldn’t compare ourselves with anyone else, I got that, but we should compare ourselves with what we believe is our personal potential. I’ve still got a lot to do before they put me in the ground, but I think I’ve done okay up to now with respect to my potential. If anything I don’t think I gave my potential enough credit when I was younger. Maybe we all do that?

I’m kind of scared of the future in a way. My Dad died from Alzheimers/Dementia just shy of his 73rd birthday in 2010. He had early onset too, so he started forgetting things at about 64. At least thats when it became apparent to everyone. That’s my worst fear today, but it’s also what’s driving me now. In the autobiography of Steve Jobs it was obvious to everyone that once he acknowledged he was going to die early he started pushing the limits of what he wanted to get done before he went out. Consequently we got all of these great innovations in a relatively short time. Look at Apple’s “innovations” today. *I’ve only ever used Macs, even when they weren’t cool.

I’ve done far better for myself than my father ever did. Again, that’s not a ‘slay-the-father’ sentiment it’s just fact. My dad didn’t have the same potential though. And I still have more potential to fulfill. This has become more pressing for me recently and not just because of the fear of dying early - and yes, I do fear death, but mostly because I see it as a cessation of potential to do more. I genuinely have a mental list of things I need to do that I’ve only really become aware of since I started this blog and became an author and matured into the 40-50 year old Rollo Tomassi. Don’t think of that as a bucket list of some experiences to be had before death, rather, think of it as a ‘to do’ list that I need to accomplish before I go out. And that ‘to do’ list only became apparent to me in the last 7 years.

I know what I need to do now. It kind of sucks that a purpose to life might be something you only realize later in life. I’m sure it happens sooner for some guys, but for me it was necessary to live through the experiences that made me before I could know it. I’m still an artist in my essence, and I get edgy if I’m unable to create something new every day. Seriously, I’ve been like this since I was a child. I have a need to create, even if it’s just something simple, every day. That need has carried over into every aspect of my life and career. And really, the books are products of that need, but there’s a lot more, a purpose to the works themselves and that’s what my life has been about since I began the blog and the books and my persona.

I am Rollo Tomassi now. Don’t worry, I’m not legally changing my name. At first it was a clever online handle for me, and my real name is so white-bread generic it almost serves as a form of anonymity. Now it is me, and I’m okay with that.

Having said all of that, I’m considering a kind of semi-retirement from my primary career in the liquor and gaming promo business and applying myself more to writing and speaking. I’m already kind of doing this now since reaching a state of being financially anti-fragile. I’ll never fully retire from my brands so long as I have ownership percentages and creative decisions will need to be made. I’m not sure how this is going to look, but I find myself wanting to apply more of myself to writing, speaking, maybe doing some kind of podcast or terrestrial radio show. I feel like I need to do this now with my 50s ahead of me and more potential to do good in the world with what I have and the time I hope I have left.

In the comments today I was hoping to see what my peers thought of all this. I hope it’s not to navel gazy.
When we look at how MRP helps to build better men, we are usually thinking about lifting, sidebar and STFU. While these are all essential, I believe participation is of equal importance. How often do you see a post on r/askMRP that starts out like:

*Hey guys,

Been unplugging for 6 months, lifting 5×5 stronglifts, read NMMNG, WISNIFG and MMSLP, passing shit tests and she is starting to follow my lead quite nicely...*

They then proceed reveal their situation and puke the rest of the post out. Very quickly we realize that they haven't internalized the material. The community then calls them out on their bullshit. Usually followed by some serious DEER or not responding and possibly deleting the whole works.

Shit, even my first post qualifies to this scheme. I thought I would give it to everyone real honestly, explain that I've studied and waited to contribute, then asked a question about what to do about the way my wife flirts with BIL. The community tore me a new one and rightfully so. I was fuckin mad and butthurt. I was full of feelz. "How dare someone have the nerve to call my wife fat or think she is fucking my BIL!"

That's why I say you haven't started to unplug until you have posted something. Be it askMRP or OYS. Even if you post it to the main page (pro tip: newbs, don't do this) and get ripped up. Until you have fully exposed yourself to the locker room mentality of the sub, you're still plugged in.

I'm of the belief that the single most important thing that one needs in life is a solid frame. It's impossible to have a frame if you're an egotistical little bitch. If you can't handle what a group of men you will never meet have to say about you, how the fuck are you going to be able to keep face while debating with your boss? Let alone dealing with the antics of a bitchy woman whom you share a life?

For the first 6 months, I never missed an OYS. I took a lot of flack from guys on here too. At first it really pissed me off. But as time went on, it got to a point where I was making decisions of my own accord and owning them. Not saying the advice became unnecessary. Simply that I was able to take the criticism constructively and apply it to my situation as I seen fit. The solid frame I now possess is greatly attributed to the way this community trains you to understand your ego.

You don't eliminate an ego. It's part of your natural being. You do learn however, to keep it in check and never act on it's advice without diagnosing the information it's giving.

This is why laying it out with zero fears of how the community will take it is so important. I can't think of a better way to grow than having the very fabric of life you have built up ripped... apart in front of your eyes by guys who are not only better than you, but what you are in fact striving to become.

So if you're a guy who is waiting til he thinks he somewhat has his shit together before he posts, go ahead and do it. You're not going to advance until you can learn to take criticism, kill your ego and internalize that your fucked up situation is totally your fault.

It's also a reminder for guys to be honest with themselves as they not only post, but comment as well. If you get called out on shit advice you're offering, chances are that the train of thought that's causing you to have this belief is a hindrance to your success.

Keep it real on here mother fuckers.
Widows & War Brides
by Rollo-Tomassi | October 31, 2018 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2018/10/30/widows-warbrides/

The TL;DR version is this: Women only ‘widow’ for men that made an Alpha impression on them. If their previous Alpha was somehow ‘killed’ and replaced by a lesser man, their hindbrains resist that man’s authority over her while using her previous Alpha as the lesser man’s SMV (sexual market value) benchmark. In the most extreme examples, a woman who’s been forced to accept the authority of a lesser man who defeated her former Alpha will resist him and/or plot revenge for the idealized lover.

Historical accounts and various cultural fiction are rife with this archetypal story. The woman who is married off to a lesser man or becomes the War Bride of an undeserving rival (usually by subterfuge or sinister means) is an archetype because it reflects women’s deepest evolutionary, existential, fear – to have her Hypergamous sexual selection strategy forcibly chosen for her by a man (or men) who are undeserving or are suboptimal breeding prospects. As I mentioned, this is an existential fear for women; anything less than unilateral control over her own Hypergamous destiny is tantamount to rape. The fear is that she will spend her life raising the child(ren) of a suboptimal man.

War Brides

The premise of the War Brides dynamic is thus: Evolution selected for women who could more easily transition psychologically from one dominant male to another. In our chaotic ancestral past women and girls were a commodity to be preserved for a conquering tribe. While men or boys were either killed or enslaved, fertile age women would be preserved as spoils of conquest for superior, invading, men. Simply put, women have reproductive value – men (and often their sons) were mostly obstacles in the way of resource acquisition and those reproductive opportunities.

That may seem like a bleak proposition to a Blue Pill conditioned mind today. We want to believe in some egalitarian dream of humanism and cooperation, but our evolved, ancestral past is responsible for what we are today in terms of base biological and psychological imperatives.
Happy Thanksgiving!
by weakandsensitive | November 22, 2018 | Link

Be sure to spend some time appreciating and focusing on the good things going in in life. Day in and day out so many of you are out there grinding and growing. Be sure to take the time every once in a while to appreciate the journey. The good things are out there - be sure to look. You want those positive reference experience to be part of your mindset too.
I was out picking up my dry cleaning this afternoon. A woman walks in and we smile at each other. I saw her get out of her car, she wasn’t smiling. She actually looked like one of those vein popping hell moms that wants to murder her kids. Fair enough, I’ll be her fun. Keep in mind, this is the second time I have ever asked for a phone number. I’m incredibly new to this and still scared shitless inside as I try. But as I mentioned before, fuck it, this year I’m ripping down all the safety nets and just going for whatever I think will help me improve.

So I pick up my cleaning and just have that feeling that I’m being watched. I turn and she’s staring at me. Women today don’t stare at anything but their phones. But she is just burning her eyes at me, smirking. I step aside, allowing the customer in front of her to the till and approach her “Didn’t your mom tell you it was impolite to stare?”

“I wasn’t staring at you, I was reading the price board”

And…I’m lost. I reach into my bag of lines I’ve been mentally working on for weeks and come up with nothing. And here, guys, this is where things in my life have changed. Rather than bumble around or try to make something out of nothing, I just smile, a little nod and walk out. Another example of where STFU is a good default.

I walk next door to buy a bottle of wine. I’m browsing through and you fucking know who walks in. She casually walks to the aisle I’m in and says “Great minds think alike”, nodding toward the bottle of wine I’m standing in front of. It’s a $14 bottle of wine. It’s nothing.

the STFU walk away from earlier was what I needed, I was 100% more relaxed now “I’ll be the judge of your mind, I’d like your phone number”

“I’m married” looks at my hand, “you’re married”

“yes”

in a little girl, secret on the playground hushed tone

“Married people don’t exchange phone numbers, are you crazy?!?”

“No”

silence

“You’re going to what, txt me some night you’re out with your buddies?”
“No”

“No”

“But, you will phone me?” with juuuuuust that little pang of want in her voice

STFU, smirking, staring right into those stressed out, nobody listens to me mom eyes

“I’m not giving you my number unless you promise you’ll call me”

“I can’t promise that. Now, Let’s have it”

“You’re pretty cocky, I don’t like when guys are cocky, are you always like this”

And then I realized what was happening, this was her fucking. This was as good as she would let it get, wanting a little banter in the wine store. My plan was always to release, I have no intention of boning this woman.

“Fair enough, enjoy your afternoon”

And I walked up, paid for my wine and left.

Here’s what I realized:

- The first time I tried C&R, it was an absolute thrill. I had no idea what would happen, no idea what approach such a hot woman would be like. That was the first time. This time was different. I liked the initial thrill but the fact it pretty much went to script was actually a bit disappointing. Catch and release sounds like fishing, this was almost like buying fish from the monger.

- I asked for a woman’s phone number twice and now have exactly what I need, a sense of how abundant available women are. They are everywhere and if I got divorced and actually put time in, I could have plenty. It’s like a oneitis vaccine and guys, if you feel yourself being drawn to believe your wife is the only one who will ever love you, I suggest this vaccination.

- The upside of C&R is reaching its end at the moment, I’m not going to bother doing it for a while. When I got back to my car, I realized something, I wasn’t interested in trying again. I’ll have to think on this a little and figure out what it means but without any other way to say it at the moment, the exchange with this women very quickly became boring. She was maybe a 6/10, 7/10 if she put in some work and that could very easily been why.
Field Report, 7months in by alfalfadaddy | July 18, 2017 | Link

7 months in, just wanted to share some success and hopefully some wisdom. I became Red Pill aware in January, a mumbling bumbling supersoft beta king nothing provider of a wife and 4 kids. 30 y/o. Like many others, i was inspired by Rollo and TFA to get my fucking act together and be the man I'm meant to be.

And fuck me did I push for it. Head first into the sidebar, got a home gym from craigslist, started losing weight and started noticing noob gains on my arms, chest, and legs. First thing I did with family matters is stopped raising my voice at the kids. Second thing, started STFU and owning my yard and house.

