Definitely Rambo-ed until recently I know now that the anger phase is behind me.

As the weeks and months rolled on and I digested more books, it started to really make sense. Every piece of red pill lifestyle and theory works together. You can't push one aspect any harder than the rest, and you certainly mustn't let any one aspect fall behind. You lift in order to experience your natural manpower firstly, and the side benefit is you get ripped hence more attractive. You read at night and on rainy days to figure out why you'd been so faggy for so long and to develop the mindset you need to work thru it and improve. With your new knowledge and your body getting transformed, you can start getting your wardrobe together.

Meanwhile, your wife is starting to actually respect you because you're keeping your word and being firm with the kids thanks to your new mindset. You're having more sex than ever and she's even initiating half the time! What!? I thought she was asexual! Nope. She was married to a guy who thought it was ok to grow manboobs and be sloppy.

I noticed her energy and cheerfulness levels have been through the roof lately. She acts like a carefree little girl now that her man has taken the reins. I've retaken my seat at the head of the dinner table, among many other examples of leadership.

This is all pretty surface-level shit and I know there'll be choppy waters ahead, especially when we get to the real roadblock on my mission. I'm going to remove us from the church we grew up in (which is very important to her and her parents) but that'll be another field report.

Edit: fucked up my age and added some spacing
As many of us prepare to watch the Superbowl (including myself) take a moment to consider if you are one of the many men that need to cut back on their consumption of sports as entertainment.

As a general rule, men shouldn't be so wrapped up in other people's achievements. Excessive devotion to watching sports is pure beta territory. Of course I enjoy a good football game like the rest of us, but when you find yourself spending every Saturday watching college ball, Sunday watching NFL, Monday going over your fantasy football results, mid week planning your fantasy football trades, looking up stats, etc. it is way too much time wasted with no gain or self improvement.

It is hard to hear for some guys because it is so ingrained into the culture (much like excessive alcohol consumption, a topic for another time), but for real, take a step back and evaluate why you are so vested in this particular form of entertainment as if it is something more important. You wouldn't be proud to tell people you spent 20 hours each week watching Real Housewives, why is this different? You are not next in line for a head coaching position, you are not a team recruiter, you don't need to know the stats for some 19 year old kid playing college ball, none of it is important.

Are you one of the guys who talk about the games like they are on the team. Who is this “we" you refer too? Spending (wasting) hundreds of dollars on team jerseys doesn't mean you are on the team.

Imagine if you were to take half of your wasted sports viewing time and spend it towards learning a new skill, researching career opportunities, gaming your wife, or even (god forbid) PLAYING sports? Going to sporting events is a great time, lots of social interaction and fun to be had. Even following a particular team is fine, just don't be one of the hoards of men who let it dictate their life. At the superbowl party today, are you going to be the guy glued to the TV, watching every moment of every play like it is your job, or are you going to be with me and mingling, having a fun time, talking to new/interesting (especially attractive) people, and generally living an enjoyable life? And for god's sake, don't mope around like a child if your team loses.
(I've seen lots of posts here and on r/askMRP from relative newbies lately; thought this would offer some encouragement)

Quick background: been RP aware about 3.5yrs, on the journey about 2yrs now. I'm still a work in progress but have been experiencing some confirmation recently that not taking your foot off the gas and sticking to the plan is mandatory. After all, this is a marathon, not a sprint.

The FR: I recently bought a weight set, rack, and bench so I could lift in my garage and typically get my workout in before the rest of my family is awake. A late night last night lead to sleeping in a bit this morning so I was lifting during the morning breakfast routine. Somewhere towards the end of my session, Mrs. the_Hun pokes her head into the garage and sarcastically asks, "Are you having fun playing out here? Is this your play-time?"

Having just finished a set and catching my breath, I simply smile and beckon her over. She walks over and continues her line of questioning..."Are you having fun, leaving me to do all the work and slave away in the kitchen with the kids?" She can't keep up the facade as a smile grows on her stern face. "Well, are you?" I grab her hips and pull her close, "Yes...yes I am. You should join me."

She looks at the bench I'm sitting on and says, "You know, we haven't [had sex] on this yet." I wasn't expecting this response at all, so my raised eyebrows prompt laughter from her. On that note, I invite her to help me "finish my workout" but she declines to go clean up the kids and eat her own breakfast. I give her a long kiss before sending her on her way.

Lessons Learned:

- Owning my shit and recognizing and passing shit tests meant this was a fun exchange for her rather than an inquisition of whether or not I was using my time wisely.
- Gaming my wife and treating her like a sexual being means that she now voluntarily speaks the that language.

This experience and about a dozen other reference points from the past month have served as validation points that the overall RP body of knowledge WORKS. Fixing yourself fixes your life - and often the lives of those closest to you - as long as you put in the work consistently. And once you've established that virtue, you don't stop, as resting on your laurels will ensure failure. The masculine life is a constant struggle and only dead fish go with the flow.
The Trident of Masculinity
by TheFamilyAlpha | October 24, 2017 | Link

Authentic masculine expression comes from the harmonization of the three different ‘selves’ which exist inside each man.

These three selves are the:

Physical Self

Mental Self

Spiritual Self

Like any tripod these legs are all independent of one another yet are entirely dependent on the supporting strength the other two provide.

If you are looking to live the most optimal of lives and achieve the greatest sense of physical strength, mental joy, and spiritual satisfaction, then each of these aspects to who you are as a man must be cultivated and a balance must be struck between them.

Have you seen the gurus who are entirely spiritual, yet would never be able to lift their fellow man if he were to fall as he simply does not have the strength?

What about the brilliant minds who can understand the most complex of formulas yet lack any ability to connect with those around them as they simply cannot tap into the spiritual connection which exists amongst all living things?

Lastly, have you seen the man who sculpts his body to replicate that of a Greek god yet he cannot tell you the last book he read or education he pursued?

These are simple stereotypes which I can find plenty of people who break the caricature, but you get my point. More often than naught, a man is exceptional in only one area or none at all.

So how do you develop these three different aspects of the ‘self’? How do you reach and maintain harmonious levels within your heart, mind, and soul?

You know the answer, it’s always the same.

Hard Work

You don’t just get the life that you want, you’ve got to work for it. Nobody is going to hand you anything, you aren’t just going to become more intelligent, healthier, or happier by willing it.
No, you’re going to have to make yourself uncomfortable and you’re going to have to do the things you’ve been putting off.

This is the entire premise of my book 31 Days to Masculinity. When I wrote that month long program the aim wasn’t to get men laid or help them reveal their six pack.

Instead, I focused on the entirety of the man to help him rebuild himself without the influence of a weaksauce society. Similar to the 21 Convention, I set the goal of helping men develop every aspect of who they were, developing the ‘Ideal’ man as Anthony Johnson puts it.

This is why the book sends each man on a different journey, what he has to do to get himself to optimal living if different than what you’ll have to do. Each journey is unique, but there are some universal overlaps and that is what this essay is about.

When you work to develop your physical, mental, and spiritual self you’ll find that the challenges you face, the pieces you find easier/more difficult, and final results are going to be entirely unique to you. Yet, the other men who also go through this transformation will understand exactly what you feel as they’ll of experienced the same thing, differently.

Physical

Without resistance, the body will not grow. Without putting stress on the body, you’ll never be able to appreciate the beauty of it nor will you ever know what it is capable of.

There are plenty of men out there who watch movies and think to themselves, if that happened to me I’d rise to occasion.

If you’re one of those guys, I’d like to ask you, why do you think you can do those things, have you practiced any of them? Have you put yourself in those situations in a training environment? Or, as is the case with most, you just assume you’ve got the natural skillsets to do what takes others years to achieve at the whim of fortune?

Our body adapts to the stress placed on it. I’m not going to tell you what it is that you must create with regards to programming as I know nothing about you. You’re reading my blog and are a man, that’s all I know at this moment.

Here is what I can tell you. Weight lifting and strength training as a whole are instrumental in an overall development of the physical self.

You must lift weights.

I don’t care what your program is, I don’t care if you choose to implement a mixed martial art or running, and I don’t care the frequency, intensity, or preference you may have. Lift weights, get active, and ensure that you’re putting your body in motion and that you’re recording your results so that you can look at trend analysis and adjust the programming accordingly for the most efficient means of training without injury.
Remember, you cannot ‘out exercise’ a bad diet.

This means that you must pay considerably more attention to what it is that you’re putting into your body.

Proper nutritional programming is essential for sustained superior output. Again, I don’t give a shit what your diet looks like so long as you’re ensuring it is high quality and conducive to a healthy body. Your physical, mental and spiritual self are completely dependent upon what it is they are using for energy.

TL;DR: Put good fuel into your body.

Do not let focus on the food cause an oversight on the importance of the fluids you’re consuming. Water is essential, it is the only thing that you have to have, all else is optional. Some find supplementing their water with electrolytes or other vitamins helps keep the intake from feeling monotonous. It’s much easier to drink a gallon of water a day if you’re enjoying each sip.

It is this combination of proper stress, fuel, and hydration that you’ll create your most optimal physical self, and each of those also plays into the health and capability of your mental self.

Mental

It seems to me that the majority of men out there know that their minds are in shambles, yet they have no fucking clue how to fix it. So they add more to it, create more stuff, and fill it with more thinking that they’re lacking in something.

Gentlemen, I will tell you now, you do not need more, you need less.

In order to reach the greatest heights and develop the strongest mental ‘self’ you can, you’ve got to remove the unessential. Get rid of the shit that is clogging up your daily life. Not just inside your head, but the environment in which your head spends its time as well.

There is a reason I deleted my Facebook.

I could make more $$$ if I went onto that platform with TFA, but there is no fucking way because Facebook bogs my mind down. Seeing people ‘act’ happy, while living miserable lives was driving me insane. Instead of keeping fakebook to stay in touch with my Navy brothers across the country, I just deleted it.

What’s the point?

I chose facebook as my example because that is what a lot of people find themselves getting caught up on.

You’re watching other people do shit and comparing your life to theirs and it is absolutely detrimental to your mental well-being.

It doesn’t have to be facebook though, your mental clutter could be:
1. Seeking approval from your parents.
2. Keeping the wife happy
3. Playing it ‘safe’ and doing what you’re “supposed” to do
4. Keeping up with the Jones’s
5. Trying to control things you have no control over
6. Giving Time Vampires your most valuable resource – Your Time
7. Confusing accumulation of ‘stuff’ as accumulation of happiness
8. Identifying with MSM or Politics
9. Avoiding confrontation with who you are vs who you want to be
10. Living in the mold created by society

Each of these things plagues plugged-in men in society, some more than others. The fact is, until you tackle whatever issues you’ve built in your mind, you’ll never achieve the optimal level of mental health.

I’m not happy all of the time, but I’m a happy dude. I’m happy because there is no clutter in my mind anymore.

How did I reach this point?

I faced my demons head on

Not only did I go through and delete people, things, stuff from my life which I did not find value, but I also removed physical pieces of ‘stuff’ from my home.

If there is clutter in your bedroom, how can you sleep peacefully?

If your writing area is a mess, how can you remain focused when writing?

If your living room looks like it came from a magazine, how can you say it represents who you are as a man?

Read the entire Piece at The Family Alpha: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/10/13/the-trident-of-masculinity/

I’m more active on Twitter than Reddit: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha 33yo, 5'10", 175lbs, 11% BF Together 6.5 yrs, married 2.5, no kids

Our relationship is pretty good. I'm out of town one week a month, I do my thing with plates. She sends me nudes while I'm away, takes care of the home/pets, and makes it clear that she "misses me". We had sex immediately on my return but it's kind of duty-ish again. She been pushing me off a lot, or is a starfish, so I wanna turn up the heat a little. I give her lots of comfort and cuddles for the first day because I know what I'm going to do is gonna require some comfort to pull off.

So last night I'm going to a party that her work is throwing. I know her friends and co-workers are gonna be there so let's instigate some jealousy. I come in and she gives me a kiss, but sort of perfunctory one, no passion. As I'm talking to her, an unknown woman comes up behind me and puts her hands on my shoulders and says "Hey DownVote!". I assume it's one of her female co-workers so I grab her hands and bring them down around my trunk and pull her into a hug, flexing my abs and running her hands over them. Spinning around it's the "hot co-worker" and she's giggling and smiling to see me.

Well after that moment my wife followed me around the entire party like a bloodhound. But since she also had to work the event, I was mostly alone and made my rounds to talk to every beautiful girl. At which point my wife would suddenly show up and put her hands on me until she had to go back to work. I spent most of the night at a table with 7 very attractive girls who were all asking me questions about what I do and openly flirting with me. One girl in particular - a HB9/10 - asked for my IG handle and I follow her back.

Early on at the party the wife said "You're making me jealous" in a teasing sort of way. But later that night after we fucked, she started saying it in an accusatory way (basic comfort test). Normally this is where I provide comfort but I decided to A&A and AM. She says "How would you feel in my shoes!" To which I respond, "Your shoes? Babe you know I could never fit in your shoes!" She goes to bed supposedly angry at me, but clearly she knows she's the one that lost ground.

This morning she takes a shower, pulls her tights up over her tits and comes to show me. I initiate but she pulls away, which she does constantly. She teases or implies sex and then when I kiss her she acts like I'm some kind a sex pervert. So after she pushes me off, I switch on IG and start browsing the HB9/10 girl-from-last-night's profile. I chuckle to myself and wife says "What?" I show wife the first post which is her in Miami wearing a red swimsuit ala Baywatch and running slo-mo with her tits bouncing.

I tell wife that me and this girl were both in Miami last weekend and isn't that funny? Holy shit, the wife didn't find that funny? Cue a 20 minute convo on her feelings. I take it to DL10 and tell her it's okay if it's over, that I'm not mad if she's just not a very sexual person. "I mean it's getting hard to push off other women when my wife is pushing me off at home." No guilting, just accepting that she isn't as sexual, while demonstrating my options. She just begged and begged for me not to leave her.

Well it all ended with a unsolicited blowjob, a pussy pounding, and I finished by draping her head over the foot of bed and cumming down her throat to which she swallowed and smiled.

I do DL10 about every few months. I hate unnecessary drama, but I've learned that my girl needs to be put on the edge. She treats me better for the next month or two afterward. All women love push/pull but the dosage and delivery varies. A steady DL8-9 with a quarterly dose of DL10 is what works for my wife. YMMV.

I'll be rebuilding comfort again tonight... because there's a birthday party on Sunday and who knows who'll show up?
A Guide for Beginners to MRP

by SorcererKing | February 15, 2015 | Link

One of the most frequent questions we see here at MRP is “How do I get started?” This is a legitimate question; the sidebar is rich with blogs and books without much direction. So to help out the novices let’s do a quick overview of the materials there, some common scenarios new guys face, and thus a couple different curricula. The main focus of this post is how to get started with the readings provided on the sidebar. But first...

A Public Service Announcement

As a newbie to RP the first thing you will hear from any RP veteran is “start lifting.” This is because weight lifting is the cornerstone of any self-improvement plan for a male, and self-improvement is what you need. There have been volumes written on this topic, so I won’t go deep here. Let’s leave it at this: you start lifting you will not only look better, you’ll be healthier, have more confidence, and start to see yourself differently. YOU MUST LIFT.

Now, on to the academics here...

I’m not going to review the Graduate Level Material or the Advanced Material, since this is a “how to get started guide.” This is not to undercut those materials; on the contrary they are great as well, just not strictly relevant to this current discussion, which is how to help new guys.

Quick Review of Core Materials

The Sixteen Commandments of Poon: A concise list of “rules” for your interactions with women. Things we all either knew at one time and forgot, or else things that, after you learn them, you’ll wish you knew all along. A must-read.

The Rational Male, Year One: A series of blog posts (also compiled into a book format) that explain many of the core Red Pill concepts. A perfect introduction to RP principles for the total beginner. Many of the posts are brutal for the uninitiated, but absolutely essential.

No More Mr. Nice Guy (NMMNG): This is a self-help book that deals with the so-called “Nice Guy Syndrome,” a mode of thought in which men engage in continual self-sacrifice and covert contracts in their relationships (romantic and otherwise). Nice Guys are resentful when these efforts go unappreciated – another fact they often conceal. This book will help you learn to express your wants and needs honestly and stop the cycle of resentment towards others.

When I Say No, I Feel Guilty (WISNIFG): Another self-help book which helps one deal with being a pushover. The tips and strategies here will help you reclaim your life from unwanted obligations; a good companion to NMMNG.

Married Man Sex Life Primer (MMSL): This excellent work offers a practical guide to building attraction within the confines of a marriage. The program is easy to understand and will give you tips and tricks to get and keep your woman interested.

The Mindful Attraction Plan (MAP): A how-to guide for living intentionally and getting what you want out of life, especially women. Useful for reformed Nice Guys and those who find it difficult to set goals and follow through with them.

Now that we’re oriented to the basic materials, let’s review some common scenarios and the curricula that will help them. In all scenarios it is assumed that the reader has basic knowledge of RP principles, such as those found in The Sixteen Commandments of Poon and The Rational Male, Year One. If that is not the case, then those are the starting point of any program.

Scenario 1: The Stale Marriage

Guys in Scenario 1 are not in dire straits. Instead, the marriage needs to be freshened up a bit. Typical concerns in this scenario are the frequency, and often the quality, of sex. The man and/or woman may have just plain lost attraction for each other, even if the relationship is still generally cordial. The man has not slipped into total Beta territory, but he probably has pedestalized the wife a little bit and is at a loss as to how to dial up the bedroom fun.

The best course of study for this scenario is to first read MMSL and then MAP. The point of study here will be to integrate RP knowledge into the approach with the wife. Understanding how women think and what gets them turned on is paramount. Reading, understanding, and applying the MMSL’s tips and tactics and putting together a MAP are going to be your primary activities.

Scenario 2: The Slippery Slope of Beta

Guys in this scenario were, to varying degrees, Alpha males at some point in their lives, but over time have slipped into Betadom. In fact, many such guys initially attracted their woman through their innate Alpha behaviors, but now have lost their way after 5 or 10 years of marriage. They engage in Beta supplication at every turn, walk on eggshells, and try ever harder to appease their wives and make sacrifices to gain her admiration. This scenario is similar to The Stale Marriage inasmuch as the sexual frequency and quality are definitely not good, but this scenario is overall more serious because the stink of beta is starting to eat into the fabric of the relationship. The woman may have not only lost attraction, but is also starting to lose respect for the man. Shit tests are escalating in both frequency and intensity for these men as women try to assess what’s left of them.

The best curriculum for this scenario is to start with WISNIFG, followed closely with NMMNG. Then turn directly to sections 3, 4, and 9 in MMSL. The objective here is to accept that self-sacrifice is not attractive to women, learn to express one’s wants and needs in a healthy manner, and stand up for one’s self. Then change the approach back to Alpha again. Then and only then, can you try to establish a better dynamic with the wife (Captain/First Officer being one model of this). In other words, a complete transformation of how one treats and prioritizes himself. After those lessons have been learned and applied, then progress to the rest of MMSL and NMMNG. Expect the transformation to take time, especially if Beta behaviors have been in operation for a while. A general rule of thumb you’ll often see here is a month for each year of Beta marriage.

Scenario 3: It’s About to Jump Off

Men in this scenario are in serious trouble in their marriage. The attraction and the respect are fully gone in the marriage, and the woman may be downright rancorous. Emotional and/or physical cheating has either happened or is on the horizon, and the man is seriously thinking divorce may be the only option.

This scenario calls for swift action. If cheating is going on, turn directly to section 27 in MMSL, which deals with busting up cheating. Then immediately get into NMMNG. If no cheating yet then start with NMMNG followed up with all of Part Two in MMSL (which deals with putting together a Male Action Plan). If after that things improve, downgrade yourself to Scenario 2 and follow that curriculum.

These are but three somewhat stereotypical scenarios. There are a lot of gradations in between these, but if you’re totally lost these three should get you started. Find the one closest to your situation and run with it. I’m sure others will disagree with me on some of this or fill in things I forgot to say; put it all in the comments and the resource will grow!

EDIT: Thanks for the positive response fellas! One thing I would like to add is that I appreciate that the materials I listed here are not comprehensive and we could certainly add more resources for every category, including things like Book of Pook and pretty much the entire main RP sidebar as basic theory reading. What I was aiming for was to build out programs using only the materials listed on the MRP sidebar so that noobs have all they need right at hand. By all means keep listing out more materials, but when you do so try to attach them as additional reading in one or more scenarios.

EDIT 2: See also my Guide for the 4th Scenario: The Career Beta Greetings! And chill the f*ck out.
by Countpudyoola | August 17, 2016 | Link

I see a lot of new faces which is a good reminder that although we have fairly static methods, we have a good rotation of users.

You don't end up here because your life is going great... specifically because you feel like your marriage is not working in some capacity to varying degrees of extreme.

So I'd like to address all the guys just stepping in.

Being thrust into the REAL can leave you flailing and gasping.

You're handed a pair of keys, and without ever actually stepping into a car (or being so rusty at driving you've forgotten what it's like) and someone shouts "DRIVE"!

And depending on where your marriage is at: you hit the gas too slow and stall, full throttle and crash into a wall, or luck out and stay within the lines while figuring out the controls.

A key factor to success here is to be able to take a moment to stay calm and really digest what's going on. As a FIGHT or FLIGHT response will hinder your ability to appropriately apply what the tools have to offer.

Reasons we can instinctively get TRIGGERED (couldn't resist) into panicking

- She's said she's filing for divorce.
- She took the kids to her parents this weekend.
- I'M SO FRUSTRATED AND ANGRY I'M ABOUT TO DIVORCE
- MARRIAGE IS A SHAM, I HAVE NO PRENUP, WHAT THE F*CK, I'M GOING TO GET DIVORCE RAPED
- I found her talking to Chad on Snapchat.
- Walked in and found Chad's got her screaming with his giant man stick pelvic thrusts.

Step 1 : Stop freaking out

If you must, get someplace soundproof and do what you have to in order to exercise that emotion safely. Whether it's to

- Run a few miles
• Scream in a car

• Lift something until exhaustion

• Cry like a baby that lost his favorite stuffed animal

Got that out of your system?

No? Repeat or change emotion expulsion activities until you do, or it's apparent you're stuck.

Chances are good you can get that initial edge off. If not, you're going to need to go find a real friend who can calm you the fuck down. If not... take a look at some basic panic reduction techniques.

Step 2: Once you've calmed down...think

Baseline the most negative outcomes and realize you could end up in a world of suck. But you would have ended up there with the socially acceptable avenues of approach. Now, at the very least, you have some paths you haven't known of before. Unorthodox methods and mindset. If it doesn't get your marriage where you want it, it will at least give you a better start without it. EVEN if you ended up in the same place you feared you were going originally.

Step 3: Carefully start introducing change in yourself and behaviors

Some feel delight and encouragement, some anger, apathy or depression.

All roads lead to Rome.

Whatever you are feeling, just keep plodding along the trail carefully.

The only real WRONG thing you can do is: Nothing at all.

Addressing some specific common scenarios

1) Threat or talk of divorce with no papers

A threat being something like leaving with or without kids. Or saying everything meaning you'll be divorced without the actual words DIVORCE.

If it's not in paper in front of you then start assuming it's simply a last ditch attempt to whip you back into shape(her frame).

It's worth the paper it's NOT printed on.

Likewise, we coach not even bringing up divorce as a spoken option until you're having to sit her down at dead level 10. Keeping in mind most of the guys here who successfully turned their marriages around did so at much lower levels (myself going a little higher to 8 and a probably unnecessary overkill shot to 9).

So reiterate: If you're not signing something or sitting in court then it is not a current concern.

2) YOUR reaction is the one startling you or surprising you

"Once I found this place, I realized my wife had no value"

"I was looking up divorce attorneys"

"She actually wanted to fuck, but now I feel NO attraction to her"

These seem like easier to handle internal scenarios, but can be the most difficult to overcome as your ego is manipulating your worldview where everything you see is painted, not to kill a metaphor but, in stark RED.

If you think that "Now you've found MRP it has somehow shined a more negative light on your woman then you are suffering textbook NOT OWNING YOUR SHIT. It is no coincidence it's the first place we encourage newbs to post progress. YOU are in charge of this process and YOU are responsible for the direction it is going.

Yes. After a lot of effort, and testing every facet some women get left as a guy progresses. There are guys who post about certifiably insane and damaged women. On rare occasion we'll see the severely unhelpable fuck who has mommy issues, but generally they aren't usually willing to work on anything once they find out our techniques are SELF IMPROVEMENT and not the manipulation parrots. It's hard for the manipulation mantra to stick once you own that at any point she's weighing her choice to stay or go based on your SMV. That can disappoint some sociopaths, and we can't really help you.

So there was something you saw in this woman you decided to legally bind yourself and women are a reflection of YOUR progress or slide into betadom. YOU are the problem.

A real exercise is to think back on the reasons you married her in the first place. If she was there to begin with... she CAN come back. You're essentially creating an environment that allows her to. Or, if you never saw that side of her before, then you're allowing it to come out unhindered by the fear it's wasted on a low SMV mate.

Beware pent up resentment which also can manifest these feelings that she's the problem still. It will turn A.A. A.M. into bitter/butthurt blurts, or comfort destroying daggers to her self esteem.
If it truly isn't meant to be, and she is the insufferable hag you now see her as, that won't change over the next several months and you'll end up doing both of you a favor with a divorce.

But don't trust any of your gut reactions when you're in the beginning of this process.

3) Someone else is potentially in the picture

The ONLY thing that changes about your self improvement is the extra emphasis of STFU and MONITOR.

Your self improvements may turn her around from the edge of infidelity. Or not. Either way you are left BETTER at the end for it.

NOTHING YOU CAN DO CAN PREVENT HER FROM CHEATING OTHER THAN HER DECIDING IT ISN'T WORTH IT.

AWALT. Branches are always there to swing to. You can only force a cheater underground by confronting or exposing a weakly covered track too soon.

Keep your shit together. Work on self improvement and MONITOR. Helpful place for how to do so if you suspect infidelity.

4) There is indisputable evidence for infidelity

Here's a good place to think panic and fight/flight is in order.

But it still isn't.

GETTING YOUR SHIT TOGETHER is in order.

The damage is done.

The choice: fairly clear.

And the angst of not knowing your near future...out the window. She has taken herself out of the equation and now ANY and all improvements you do are no longer going to be complicated with worrying what THIS PARTICULAR SNOWFLAKE will think.

Divorce can be ugly. But it's a known.

The only worse thing I could envision is her continuing to cuck you unabated while you VOLUNTARILY foot the bill and dangle out hope and continue to eat your most precious resource away: TIME aka your life.

There are some here who have worked through such. Maybe some could weigh in here. I think a lot occurred before finding MRP and applying the techniques. Or it was already going on. Reason I personally couldn't is I see it irreparably hindering her ability to believe I'd ever walk away.
It is a choice we all don't agree on that we put back to you and what fits your worldview.

Either way. PANIC, ANGER, BEING OUT OF CONTROL OF YOUR EMOTIONS will only hinder and hamstring your future and force you to make quick and bad decisions with potentially LONGER THAN LIFE decisions (considering children).

So welcome. Don't PANIC. And move ahead at speed that you can handle.

---

A last notes to the new arrivals

BEWARE a SURGE to the other side of the pole if you see a dramatic change in your wife as a result of your improvement.

Too much too quick and you can over-dial and destroy comfort or you.

"Things were going great, but now she's asking me if I'm cheating and crying!"

Or you can get complacent and blindsided by a main event.

"Things started to turn around, sex was on the rise...then over a choice of restaurants a fight escalated and tested me and she brought up divorce!"

MRP is a FOREVER UNTIL DEATH marathon. Not a quick fix sprint.

Main events don't have to be a one time thing.

Sometimes you'll find yourself riding this path of marriage more like a wave of up and down.

MRP is the surfboard in this case.

It's the same ocean but now you just don't have to drown and the more ingrained this becomes the better you'll be at deciding which ones to ride and where to ride them.

[ALSO] : If you ARE a new user then the place for asking questions and making FR posts with newb questions is on /r/askMRP and we 100% you to post in the weekly OWNING YOUR SHIT thread although it may take us a second to manually approve it if your account is brand spanking (today) new.
3-2-1. Counting. Success or Failure?

by johneyapocalypse | November 21, 2018 | Link

God damn, god damn, god damn. That's from a movie. I forget which one, but it's apropos.

In three months, three mother-fucking-months, I get the news... the news I've been anticipating... the news I've been expecting... the news I am willing into existence... the news I have been waiting for with baited breath... the news that few other than rulezerodad can appreciate: the news that I am cured.

8 mother-fucking years of hell. 8, mother-fucker, 8.

2 god-damn-mother-fucking years of something-worse-than-hell. 2 worse than hell.

Fuck. That.

And the news may/might/could (1) come to be, (2) bear fruit, (3) be my new reality, (4) change my life yet again, this time for the better... or it (5) may suck.

I choose to believe... to know... to feel in every atom of every cell of my body that it will be good. Damn.

It's intense but it's my reality. Just like you have your own reality. And your reality is not - not - always good.

I know you all don't care, but I care.

- My kids care.
- My wife cares.
- My family cares.

My employees - numbering a lot - well - the overwhelming majority care only so far as it relates to their own paychecks and nothing more. A handful might actually care.

- But jesus, dudes, and very important: I care.

I check in every six months or so to provide a progress report. Not to those (cool) dudes I've been hanging with here for three years or so (and there are a lot), but, instead, to the new dudes, the dudes who are (1) lost, the dudes who are (2) bummimg, the new dudes who are (3) flailing and don't know what to do.
I, weirdly, do kinda care.

Lately the new dudes here seem like first-class homos... but I won't let that get me down. I don't want to digress.

To the rest of you... know this:

I stumbled upon this dumbass place not understanding why my wife was seemingly disinterested, not understanding why my money didn't buy me happiness, not understanding why my marriage, well, sucked.

Why? Why? Why?

Lots of dudes, two in particular - stoney and steel - but don't let me get sentimental and gay - they helped me see the error of my ways and helped me stop acting like a helpless fucking victim - there are plenty of those in the world by the way, hence why your shtick doesn't work here - and instead, why it forces you to act like a man - a man on a mission - a mission of god (per blues brothers not bible) - a mission that was my mission - my family's mission - and, whether she likes it or fucking not, my wife's mission.

- God damn.

- God damn.

- God damn.

Jesus, bros. Your problems are probably - in terms of probability - much, much less challenging than my own. After all, I can't very well get my wife to blow me better or give me a rim job if I'm dead.

Yet I've gotten through it. Butch up faggots - and heroin addicts alike - of which there are quite a few of late - and especially fairies-feeling-neglected by the RP quarantine - butch the fuck up...

Keep it in perspective and know this:

- I now have a six-pack. Thanks MRP.
- I now know stoicism. Thanks MRP.
- I now have (great) sex. Even (better) sex. Actually, (amazing) sex with my wife.
- This same wife - who never blew me (if you're in need of details) - now seeks me out to blow me often.
Results, mother-fuckers, results.

Perhaps more importantly, I can now deal with crazy, crazy circumstances that are about as insane and awful as they get. And I can survive. And I can thrive. And I can win, mother-fuckers, I can win.

I will win.

And so, too, will you.
So, my wife's friend was going to come over Saturday to pick up my wife, head out to a mall, hang out and be girls.

No problem, have fun, give me a rough idea when you will be home, call me if plans change. See ya.

She showers and gets ready. Looks good. 3pm comes and goes, friend isn't here, apparently she fell asleep. 6pm, still no friend. Wife calls the store they were going to go to, they are out of the thing they wanted to get, so no point in driving out there.

Alright, so friend is scheduled for 8pm now.

I make sure the kids are good and tired, get them ready for bed and have them in bed by 8:30.

Wife's friend arrives at 9. I say hi, be pleasant, excuse myself to my office to "catch up on work" but really just to give them the time alone they wanted to hang out and catch up without having me hanging around.

Anyway, they get to drinking, invite me out, I have a couple of shots and a jello shot, and since they are getting rather tipsy and I am not, I offer to make their next round of drinks and some snacks for them.

While I am making their drinks and snacks the friend starts talking to my wife about chemical peels and microdermabrasion and some sort of needle therapy and all kinds of shit.

My wife says she is interested and here is where I fuck up, I ask her:

sweetheart, you are 35 years old, we have been together for almost 17 years, you have never once cared about moisturizing or anything of that nature in all the time I have known you, and you have near perfect skin, why would you start poking your face now?

She responded that she wasn't really sure, but it would be interesting to see the results, I said fair enough, brought them their drinks and snacks, played a round of Uno with them and excused myself again as they were getting giggly stupid.

I find out from my wife today that her friend refuses to come over here anymore, that I insulted her and that I was abusive to my wife.

She messages my wife on facebook (and my wife showed me the conversation), and says that I said some really hurtful shit and that I don't know what I am talking about.

My wife was confused and asked what's up, the friend repeated what I said but in a different way.

He said something like "Why wait until you're 35 to start taking care of yourself? You should've taken care of yourself all your life. What's the point now?"

Which completely changes the context of what I said. I was complimenting my wife on having great skin, not saying she was a lost cause.

My wife says "he was talking to me, not you".

To which the friend responds,

First of all I'm 34 and I have ALWAYS taken care of myself. Just because I gained a lot of weight over the years does not mean that I have stopped "taking care of myself." And if I want to make some changes to improve my health and appearance that's my choice. Fuck his observations I have a few of mine own but I know how to control my mouth and not say something hurtful to someone I don't even know.

Now, this chick did not win the genetic lottery, and so she tries to make up for it with a shit ton of products and makeup she doesn't know how to use and peels and shit that just leave her face looking red and irritated and shiny as a new phone screen. But I would never say shit to her about it, it isn't my place.

My wife reiterated I was talking to her, not the friend.

And if he was talking to you that's even worse. You're the mother of his children and what he said was so disrespectful. I'm gonna leave it alone though cause I know you guys are going through a lot. It's not my place to complain about your husband. I love you girl and will do whatever I can to help you and your children. I'm done with his ass though. And that's all I have to say about that.

I have hung out with them once, went to dinner with them once, and have maybe spoken 100 words to her. And this weekend was the most I have ever said in her presence. And her interpretation of it was wrong.

So I read this, don't really know what to say to my wife and she just says she didn't think it was mean and apparently this chick is just straight up fucking looney, she ghosted on my wife for like 2 months because she had a mental breakdown. So she isn't gonna say shit to her, which annoys me, defend your spouse ya know, but hey, her choice. I just know not to say shit in front of this woman now.

Let this be a lesson to you folks, your wife's friends hear what they want to hear, no matter what you say. And they will hamster like a motherfucker to make you look bad.

Have fun pointing out the hamstering.
Can you ever know if it is desire?
by LatePillSwallower | January 20, 2018 | Link

So about 18 months ago my wife (36F HB6) of 11 years tells me (38M) she is not now and never was physically attracted to me in the butterflies in the stomach tingly (her words) way.

She says she never felt that way about anyone until recently — when she got all lustful for some guys we know. She says nothing happened with them. I believe her; not because I trust her — just don’t think logistics would allow it — but I could be wrong.

Now our past before marriage was a fucking shit show — I was beta as fuck (still am to be honest). I played captain save-a-ho. Put up with her friend zoning me. Letting her use me as beta bux — we had 5 years of on again off again bull shit — her cheating and me believing it was because she had a drinking issues (blackouts and shit) and depression. I was the nice guy who cared for her while others fucked (basically just used her for pump and dump ONS) her in the apartment I was paying for while she went to school. I “forgave” these because she “didn’t mean for it to happen” she was in a “dark place”, blah blah.

She gets sober — relationship stabilizes — she gets pregnant and we get married. We become your typical rural family - 3 kids, I work a good job, she stays home or works part time if she wants, church members, private school, etc.

I thought we were good — never had a dead bedroom — and we were enjoying being a family — and the past was buried. I realize now how fucked this sounds and I should have never hooked up with such a damaged girl (broken home, promiscuous, messed up drunk) — I was 22 got onitis and thought we could be something.

My background — fat slob — but got girls in college because I was strong and played sports (D1 lineman; took up powerlifting after football).

After her telling me she was never attracted to me - I was butt hurt and angry for three months — found TRP and MRP — read the sidebar, kept lifting (I never stopped to be honest — I still compete regionally in powerlifting and occasionally strongman stuff).

I realize my tragic mistakes; but fuck I wish I had a time machine.

I also realize attraction can’t be negotiated. I decided to add some significant cardio into my routine, shore up my diet — at 6’3 I averaged a body weight of about 280 and ~ 30% BF during our marriage (maintained about the same size since the day I met her). I’m currently 250 and ~20% BF (goal is 235-250 with 15% BF). I’ve always got attention from women for my strength (obviously if I was leaner it would be more - not trying to deceive myself — even in college the QBs and defensive ends got more tail then the lineman) but being strong does seem to buy you a little bit of a pass for being pudgy.

I’ve started going out on my own a bit — small town so I basically just go to a couple dive bars (with cute bartenders) after the kids are in bed. I’ve also started lifting once or twice a week at the local Y (used to just stick to my garage gym) - this has been interesting — my wife’s friends are usually there doing cardio and have started noticing me more — I guess seeing someone squat over 6 plates gets the panties wet. I’ve also N closed on a few girls; so that’s nice.

Sometimes the wife will get a sitter and tag along.

Passive dread seems to make her want to fuck and suck more - which isn’t a bad thing.

But she has gotten extremely jealous when a bartender gets flirty. One actually gave me her number (in front of the wife) and said I should call if I wanted to know if she was working or not. When we got to the car; my wife said it was just because I left a big tip — I agreed and said I can’t help it if she wants the big tip. She acted like that was rude (but did blow me in the parking lot)

Or one of her friends makes a comment. She told me the other day that at coffee with two of her girlfriends — they both started going on about how strong I am and asking what it was like to be with someone who could just throw you around.

She has been asking why I’m trying to slim down and what I think of all the new attention — I said I want to lose some weight for my health and comfort (true) and I can’t control other people if they like what they see — that’s their deal.

So while we never had a dead bedroom (never less then 2 times a week) — she is initiating a lot more and we are at around 4 times a week — I took her anally the other night (never really my thing - but I wanted to push the boundary I guess). Wakes me up with blowjobs about once a week. It is like she is terrified to let me leave the house with a loaded gun.

Questions:

So I see how swallowing the pill works and find how creating an abundance mentality and not tying your satisfaction to her greatly improves confidence and outlook. But how would you ever know if it is desire driving her or if it is just fear of losing her provider?

I have a desire to not cheat (maybe my own morality holding me back). But it would be nice to fuck some girl who just wants to fuck me for the man I am and know it’s not because I pay the mortgage and am a good dad.
What is MarriedRedPill, what is askMRP?

by Rian_Stone | July 5, 2018 | Link

Lately I have noticed some off-topic and varying levels of usefulness in the posts between the two subs, and I'm offering some clarification for everyone on the purpose of MRP and askMRP.

Marriedredpill is the space to discuss RP strategies, produce field reports, and provide value to each other from within a committed relationship. It's since grown to encompass a few other properties:

1. Demographically older, and all the nuances that comes with it
2. Generally focused more on pragmatism, and less on over arching systems. Getting your own house in order, and not worry so much about society crumbling around you
3. A much lower tolerance for self pity; our one-victim-puke rule
4. No fat chicks

When I first started my MAP, there wasn't an askMRP. It's still not universally accepted among the readership. It was a solution to the simple questions How do we filter low quality, un researched, value leeching questions without turning MRP into The Oliver twist forum, always asking for more?. Is there any way to polish those turds into something useful?

So askMRP was created. I'm surprised people post there as much as they do, it's always been I'm too lazy to start, so I need spoonfeeding. the users who respond, mostly do so because teaching a thing is the best way to learn a thing.

So, we are where we are. regression to the mean. Having said that:

1. Questions end with a question mark. If you post a field report or a navel gazing post onto askMRP, we both know you know it's shitty quality, and think it goes into the shit pile. It doesn't. Your post would have been better in the weekly OWS thread to begin with (that stickied post thats always updated), you're just too lazy to post more than one navel gaze before you Rambo your shit.

2. If it's a field report, I don't give a shit if it's not up to Caddy McCadderson standards. If it's got some value for another person reading it, post it to MRP, thats the point. If you have a theory that ties together multiple field reports, it goes in MRP. If you're worried about getting grief, don't. I could give a 100% foolproof guide to banging supermodels, and someone would complain that superdupermodels will see right through it. Taking grief with a little good grace is good practice anyways.
3. OWS posts aren't about what you wish you could do, or what you'll do tomorrow, it's about what you've done, and fleshing out your process. Others chime in to teach what they've learned, and point out the blind spots.

End of the day, if someone reading it can carve a success out of their life with the information therein, it's an MRP post. Don't worry if it's not 10/10, none of us will ever post a magnum opus, so don't worry it's not. If you have a question and can't be arsed to learn, askmrp and hope that someone else needs to refine their understanding of the same thing. OWS is for action, not pontification.
Our Father, Who Art Red-Pilled, Brodin Be Thy Name, Thine Shit Be Owned.

The weekly OYS post has been, by far, the highest-value activity I've started since coming here.

Just the ritual of sitting down, taking stock, and getting feedback - even if nothing particularly major happened that week - is incredibly useful.

I wanted to thank everyone who regularly comments there. I am challenged every week by the things that regular men - men with jobs, families, lives - take the time to post. It makes a difference.

Last week I was in a real tail-spin, thrown off by some pretty rough sexual rejections, then my wife bringing up her ex (and the subsequent downward spiral of comparison I indulged in).

I was feeling depressed, down on the marriage, frustrated, angry, bitter - all the typical shit. I was, at the very least, AWARE of why I was feeling these things, a big step forward from my bluepill self. Still, I was having a tough time managing those emotions. I made sure to vomit that into my OYS post.

The comments I got were varied in their takes, but almost all illuminated something I hadn't thought of. I'm going to try and distill a few of the lessons I learned here, in order to internalize them better.

I hope these lessons are general enough that they can be of help to guys who are still working the process, not quite new, but not where they want to be yet, either.

1.) Can't Escape The Anger Phase? You Haven't Really Swallowed The Pill.

"I get it..." No you don't. Not as much as you think you do. You are stuck between the two dichotomies. How you think it should be (the unfairness) and how it really is.

Hence...cognitive dissonance. You will never move further until you get beyond her past. Everyone has one. There's little you can do about it. So why let it bug you? Hypergamy is selfish, brother. There's only one way to combat it. - /u/ReddJive

I think the term "anger phase" is a bit misleading. I get the comparison to the "stages of grief," but phase makes it sound like a point of chronology, something you move through
This isn't necessarily the case, though. The anger (at least in my case) is directly connected to the active destruction of my blue pill fantasy life. That destruction comes directly from trying to swallow the red pill.

The fact is, I can intellectually talk RP, but I haven't fully accepted it. And most days, it doesn't matter - I can lift, game my wife, try to pass shit tests, etc, without a deep and abiding understanding of inter-sexual dynamics. After all, "trying to fix my marriage" and "trying to fix myself as a man, regardless of what happens with my marriage" have almost identical curricula.

When something comes up that reveals the gap between the blue pill fantasy and reality, however, the difference between understanding and accepting is thrown into sharp relief. When my wife brings up and is clearly thinking about her (shitty, abusive, garbagsecye) ex, my blue pill self reacts with righteous indignance - "How DARE she? I've been doing so much WORK! She MUST be a low value woman!"

I am reacting in this instance like she is changing the rules - we are all supposed to live a certain way, the blue-pill way; she's supposed to fuck me, I'm supposed to be happy, she's supposed to be attracted to these things and not those things. I'm attempting to control her, and becoming upset that she isn't controllable.

All of that is a foundation built on fear, insecurity, and a fundamental misjudgement of how the world works.

Meanwhile, RP me just shrugs his shoulders, thinks "AWALT," makes a joke, and fucks his wife a bit more dominantly when he gets home.

Swallow the pill - really swallow it - and the anger will dissipate.

2.) Your wife isn't attracted to "assholes" - she's attracted to FRAME.

Dude, she doesn't want a terrible person; she left him for you. She desires a man with frame, who imposes that frame on her. Find your frame, and your balls to impose it! - /u/man_in_the_world

You and dirty_pr are missing the forest for the trees. It is not necessary that you become a psychopathic asshole shitbird. It is necessary that you become your sole point of origin (aka FRAME). This means giving zero fucks about her past, present, of future. This means deciding your course, executing; and not worrying what she thinks about it. - /u/Persaeus

I was getting extremely torn up (in the butt-area) about my wife bringing up her ex. He was the guy right before me, was "alpha" in many of the ways I am not, but was also a demonstrably shitty person.

In my mind, then, this led to the reasoning:
a.) terrible people apparently have sexual success with my wife; 2.) I am not that person, nor am I willing to become that person, therefore 3.) I am fucked.

This, besides being self-pitying, was highly judgmental on my part. Obviously, you can't control who you're attracted to. It's not productive to blame my wife for who she fucked in the past.

What's more, though, I was framing this incorrectly, focusing on the fact that she fucked this guy, rather than on the fact that she left this guy, hates his guts, and married me. It's like winning the tournament, but getting hung up on the fact that I lost a match or two along the way.

Now, yes - admittedly, I won this genetic tournament through a BB strategy, one which has had side effects I'm not particularly happy with. But I've fucked my wife alot more than this guy ever will, and besides - the past doesn't exist. It's gone.

The self-pity line of thinking also misses the forest for the trees. The lesson isn't "My wife loves shitty dudes." The lesson is "My wife responds to a strong frame, so much so that she'll even stay with a shitty dude, as long as he holds frame."

My wife is a very strong personality. She's been on her own for a long time, never knew her biological father, hated her abusive step-father. She left home in high school and never looked back. She's worked her way up, learned to do everything herself, and has had to fight for everything she has. I respect the hell out of her for that.

Because of that history, I always thought she was a dominant personality. But I no longer think so. I think my wife has a very strong submissive side - but she sure as hell is not going to reveal that side to just anyone.

She's been hurt by authority figures all her life; she's learned the hard lesson that she can't trust the people who are supposed to take care of her. To open up and allow herself to be vulnerable, she needs to know - not just think, but know - that I not only am capable of taking care of her, but that I have her best interest at heart.

She's seeking a strong frame. And while I was willing to prostrate myself at her feet and provide literally unlimited amounts of relationship comfort, I didn't demonstrate that I had the inner strength to protect her. I fundamentally misunderstood the question she was asking, and nearly all of her relationship troubles stem from that fact.

3.) Focus on Progress, not on End Result.

Unfair is the kid born in Chad Africa. Fuck your unfairness. Also, your physique is so skinny fatty meh - /u/weakandsensitive

Patience! You're not anywhere close to the man you can and intend to be. With your super-butler BB anti-frame and your dadbod, you're not yet anyone's type; there's no greener pasture out there for you yet, and I suspect that yours will green up nicely when you're worthy of a green one. - /u/man_in_the_world
I've noticed a pattern in how I feel about my own progress in MRP - I'll work hard, start to get some validation, feel good, and then...something will burst the balloon. A comment, a bad day, whatever - then I get frustrated, sad, depressed, etc.

Of course, as the comment above points out - this is whining, pure and simple. Beyond that, I'm getting frustrated because I'm comparing where I want to be to where I am, and that's not productive.

The fact is, I'm not in great shape yet. Sure, I'm better than I was, but I'm hardly Dick Hardbody (Chad's cousin) yet. I still fuck up, still lose frame, still dress like shit sometimes. I shouldn't get up my own ass on the one day an ab shows up, parading around the house while "casually" lifting up my shirt in the one very particular way that reveals my lonely, single ab.

That doesn't mean I need to wallow in frustration, however...because things are improving. It's far more useful (and motivational) to keep track of where I started.

When I first came to MRP, I:

- hadn't had sex in a year in a half
- wife was depressed and having massive trouble taking care of the kids
- got almost no physical affection from my wife
- was 15 pounds overweight
- weakest I'd ever been
- almost never saw friends
- hadn't done anything creative in nearly a year
- was buying clothes specifically to hide my love handles

As of today, I am:

- having sex about once a week
- wife massively stepped up, doing much better with the kids, moods much improved
- much more casual physical affection/hugs/etc
- Hit my target weight, eating better than I ever have, slowly adding muscle
- Hitting personal bests every single week, lifting 4x/week
- Seeing friends regularly, becoming the guy who gets everyone out and re-establishes connections
- Hitting a creative stride, producing more than I have in years, big events coming up
- Clothes fit better than ever, dressing better, exploring personal style, grooming game on point

In every way, my life and marriage are better. If you had told me 6 months ago that I would be where I am, I would have laughed.

The goal is not to be complacent, but also not to abandon what's working just because I can't go from zero to hero quickly enough. There's always more shit to work on, always a struggle, always stress and challenge....because that's what makes you grow.
Nothing worthwhile is easy. Nothing worthwhile comes quickly.

4.) Don't Avoid The Hard Shit.

If he is a loser, a piece of shit, is that an objective one? Or is this you pissed that someone who didn't spin his wheels in the sand, driving in the wrong direction got to enjoy the trip to Disneyland, meanwhile you're stuck in Delaware?

You know what she's into, you know what gets her off, but you refuse to go there. Consider your ego wants to defend your life choices, more than it wants you to be happy, driving down to disneyland instead. - /u/stomepimpletists

Make a list of all the household tasks that you do, and identify the ones that you really think that your wife should be doing instead. Of those, identify the ones that you could simply refuse to do without causing undue harm to you or your children (for example, ones that mostly benefit her, or are nice but not essential). These ones represent enforceable boundaries that you can impose without your wife's consent. Pick one of these, and tell her that you're no longer going to do that one. Hold your new boundary and hold your frame, and see what happens. - /u/man_in_the_world do this https://www.reddit.com/user/resolutions316, this is all the drama you need for awhile. your relationship has plenty of natural drama setting boundaries; and establishing you as a captain. - /u/Persaeus

If you look where I've made the most progress - lifting, dress, grooming, initiating, etc - these were all relatively challenging areas for me to grow into.

The areas where I've had the least success - specifically, holding frame, assertiveness and direct conflict with my wife - are extremely challenging areas for me.

While I've made some progress on the hard stuff, if I'm 100% owning my shit? I've worked on those things less. Because they're harder, and the payoff for success is less immediate (Initiating well gets me sex. Holding frame against my wife might lead to sex at some point, but it mostly just makes the house tense).

I think I had so little frame when I started MRP that ANY gains felt massive. Starting from 1 and getting to 10 is a 10x improvement - and the effect can be massive.

But if that 10 is out of 100, you can't stop there - you need to keep pushing. And if I'm being honest, I've avoided the hard work that takes, in favor of easier gains elsewhere.

If you have not checked out "Slaying The Dragon Within Us" by Jordan Peterson, I highly recommend you take 15 minutes to watch it now.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZGIU0FtXr9o

Here's the summary: Whatever scares you most - whatever you feel the urge to avoid, because it's uncomfortable, or hard, or painful - THAT'S what you need to be working on right now.
The fear, the difficulty, all that is life telling you: “Here is the challenge you need. Here is what will force you to grow. Here is what will give you the skills you most need to live fully.”

The discomfort is a feature, not a bug. Lean into it.

5.) Read the sidebar? Re-read the goddamn sidebar.

You aren't going to like my response, because you probably think you have done it already.

I was having trouble with some things that I PM'ed u/UEMcGill about. His suggestion to re-read WISNIFG has been of tremendous help to me. The book WISNIFG really addresses approval seeking. What I missed the first time I read it, was the beginning chapters that outline the reasons for the way things are done. I missed the most basic meanings of the book, looking for very specific ways to assert myself. - /u/FireTempered

I read the sidebar when I first joined up here, but I hadn't revisited anything from there.

After this comment I went back to WISIFG, which was not a personal favorite of mine the first time around. And just like Fire Tempered predicted, a lot of it hit me right in the fucking face.

“The right to be the final judge of yourself is the prime assertive right which allows no one to manipulate you. It is the assertive right from which your other assertive rights are derived. Your other assertive rights are only more specific everyday applications of this prime right.” - WISNIFG

Being your own judge is a simple enough concept, and it’s referenced on here so often it’d almost become non-sensical to me. “I’m my own judge - got it, yup, no problem.” But what does that actually mean?

The repercussions of being your own judge are, in actuality, profound - you no longer allow others to tell you you “should” do something...and, in turn, you let go of the ability to tell others they “should” do anything.

Your wife doesn’t have to have sex with you - she isn’t breaking some rule, if it wasn’t explicitly stated or agreed to up front. YOU aren’t your wife’s judge - SHE is. This is why getting butt hurt after sexual rejections is emotionally manipulative - you’re guilting your wife into having sex with you, hoping the guilt she thinks she’ll feel after turning you down is worse than the prospect of just fucking you and getting it over with. And lo, many a starfish is born.

Before I re-visited WISNIFG, I was thinking about posting on here, asking for advice or examples of how RP guys divide up their household chores with their stay at home wives. How often should I do the dishes? Am I doing too much? Is it unbalanced?

But of course, it doesn’t HAVE to be balanced at all. It doesn’t have to be anything. I can earn all the money AND do all the chores, if that’s what makes me happy. I can do anything. There are no rules, no “shoulds”, no gods, no masters - only actions, and consequences.

The goal is to pursue a set up that makes both my wife and I happy. If we can’t do that, we’ll deal with that conflict - either by splitting up, or by compromising if we think the marriage is of higher value than what we lose through compromise.

I don’t have to ask the internet for a guide - I just need to be assertive in asking for what I need, and be honest and open about the conflict that ensues.

All of this was like a lightbulb going off - and I’d read this book already. Hell, I had all these passages ALREADY HIGHLIGHTED. Obviously, I thought they were important the first time...but in the avalanche of MRP posts, manosphere blogs, and other books I’d just forgotten it.

——

There’s a lot of material aimed at new guys here, which makes absolute sense. Hopefully these lessons are helpful to guys who are a bit further along, but still not where they want to be.

Cheers everyone.
TLDR: A natural alpha confronts becoming beta after a 30+ year marriage. Initiates changes after reading rep pill reddit and MMSLP. Very positive results, solving issues that have dogged the relationship for 30 years.

Background: I am an engineer and an entrepreneur having owned a number of moderately successful businesses. Met my SO in College and have been together for 35 years (married for 29), we have four kids and my wife is also a very smart professional who has worked with me in my businesses. I am used to leadership being the CEO and owner and am normally fairly aggressive and perceived as an alpha by my peers. When my wife confronted a significant health issue about a dozen years ago I flipped to absolute supportive beta in our relationship because I thought I had to put my needs on the back burner to support her.

Once the health issue passed she became more and more focused at worked just as our business was doing better. We both worked 90 plus hours a week in the early days and then spent the rest of the time was on raising four kids. In effect the business was our mistresses for both of us, taking significant focus away from our relationship.

The Change: Our sex life was always OK (2 times per week average) and I was lucky that she was always in great physical shape (BTW a hint to the younger red pillers out there take a look at the mother of your prospective LTR if she is not in good shape in her thirties of forties the odds are against your future wife being able to keep her figure). I had slacked off on exercising and had gained about 30 pounds even though we always ate relatively healthy because I love to cook and we both hate fast food.

The problem I was confronting was how my life was going to look like with the last kid leaving for college. The business was in decent shape, I reduced my workload to about 50 hours per week and had great flexibility to go out and vacation often. Our financial position was very good, and I was looking forward to enjoying my time. My wife was still addicted to work and despite numerous arguments over the years never figured out how to reduce the workload. She would work late into the night in her office at home, checking and double-checking the work of her employees. This was not a traditional affair but it still stood in the way of my happiness.

I discovered red pill and MMSLP and read through it voraciously in April of this year and realized that the first thing I had to do was fix myself. I started lifting and working out every day in our home gym. I stopped acting beta towards my wife, if she asked for a glass of water I would no longer “be a gentleman” and rush to get her one but pretty much ignore the request. There were some shit tests earlier on along the lines of why are you working out so much? It quickly escalated to “is there someone else? “ I could not apply direct dread since we worked together and I did not want to shit where I eat by hiring a 25 year old “executive assistant” so in addition to just swatting the shit tests away I casually mentioned that a few of my friends where so happy after their divorce and had cute younger girlfriends.
The sex life increased dramatically and quickly we were up to 10+ times per week and I was seeing the payoff of the testosterone shots I was taking. As a result of MMSLP the sex changed, I was much more demanding feeling comfortable telling my wife that I wanted to start the morning with a good BJ. Unfortunately my wife would still get up after sex and go back and work in the office until 1 or 2 am.

The Event: I continued to improve myself, gaining confidence and loosing weight was down to about 210 my wife would join me on morning walks stating that she needed to get fitter to keep up with me. However even after two months of reading and applying MMSLP the underlying dynamic of my wife’s attachment to work did not change. I was fed up and did not want to waste the rest of my life sitting around the house while she worked. I explored restarting my hobby of flying but fundamentally wanted a partner that would be there to enjoy the fruits of our hard work. On a weekend walk in June I dropped the bomb on my wife, I told her that I was opening a separate bank account and moving a significant amount of money there. I told her that I wanted to separate and move out, that divorce was fine and I had no problem with her continuing to work as many hours as she wanted to make my 50% of the business worth more while I take vacations and enjoy my life with someone else.

For the first time in her life she began to see her work as the addiction it was and she spent the rest of the day crying and apologizing for the last decade. I proceeded to open the bank account on Monday morning. She met with her department that day and told them that she was going to change and distribute her workload among them. I really believe that my increase in self-confidence and a true OI attitude on the choice she wanted to make was the key to achieving something that decade plus of arguments, beta covert contracts and bitching did not.

The Result: What prompted me to write this post was not just gratitude for the impact that MRP had on my life but my wife’s comments in the shower this morning. She said she had one of the best weekends ever with a college football game on Friday night, comedy show on Saturday followed by drinks and tapas, an eight mile hike on Sunday as watching some football with me. The weekend ended with us sitting in the yard and watching the sunset on Sunday while having a drink followed by the 3rd time we had sex that day. She is walking around the house in either lululemon stretch shorts or a something lacy, is not allowed to wear panties to dinner and enjoys when I give her great ass a good spank.

I know that I need to keep up my game, so I am amping up the outside interests taking up SCUBA to enjoy on our week in the south pacific at the end of October.
The real problem with me on r/Deadbedrooms, I waited too long.

by CasperTFG_808 | August 12, 2016 | Link

Following up from the post, The problem with people who post in r/DeadBedrooms - and how you can avoid it. I too had spent 3-4 years posting on /r/DeadBedrooms before finding /r/marriedredpill. In the past 3 months I turned shit around real fast.

1. I worked on myself. I have been improving myself for a few years now, lost 40+ lbs put on good lean muscle mass looking more fit than when we met. I also started going out with my friends and making new friends with no excuses for wanting to live my own life.
2. Told SO I can't make her want to fuck me, I can only decide what I want to do about it. If she doesn't want to fuck me then we are roommates and I have no interest in having a roommate. I want an intimate partner, so I will give her a few months to decide what she wants before we discuss the final direction of this relationship.
3. I decided to stop feeding her anxiety and her bullshit. By that I mean I stopped enabling her to be lazy and feed into her anxiety by making decisions for her. I called her out on the fact that she is a failure as a SAHM and If this was the work environment I would fire her today, I also told her that she is an adult and she needs to start acting like one and take on responsibility I was no longer going to shoulder all the responsibility.

As a result;

1. She has been working on herself, actually sticking to diets and doing the actual fucking work that her therapist has been giving her to do to work out her own shit because I am not putting up with it anymore.
2. She also started fucking me again, 2-3 times a week. She even had a really bad yeast infection for a week and gave me 2 BJ's that week. The more important thing is she has actually said yes when I initiate.
3. She is off her ass, off the couch, off of facebook and getting shit done around the house. She is even talking about looking for a full time job, after 10 years she is finally admitting to herself that she hates being a SAHM, she liked the idea of it but hates it in practice.

The problem,

1. Now that I am looking and feeling great, I passed her big time as far as scales of attractiveness. I kinda feel like I could do a lot better as far as looks, attitude and overall sexyness.
2. I waited too long, I had to get so low and soo pissed off with her to actually stand up for myself and speak my mind that I really don't give a shit. I get sex, okay well it's sex but I don't really find her attractive anymore, she is not sexy anymore and well I think 8 years of her being a cold fish totally turned me off of her.
3. I am finding myself happy that she is thinking about getting a full time job not because it will help our marriage, but because maybe I will have to pay less Alimony?
Summary, If I had done what I am doing today 7, 6 or even 5 years ago our marriage would have been saved, but I am so deeply scared by this relationship that I don't think I even care if it is getting fixed. This is not turning into the marriage that I want, it is turning into a marriage that I can find bearable which is sad.
Its not about her. Or: its a marathon, not a sprint

by alphabeta49 | February 18, 2016 | Link

INTRO

We all get that the reason you found MRP had something to do with your wife not providing the hot, porn star sex that you - like most every guy - dream of. But if you can take your pathetic, loser obsession away from her for one split second, you'll realize that the world is much bigger than your marriage. As you improve, she will fade to a mere segment of that world. It comes down to mental discipline and not being a pussy.

Pussy

noun

'posi

1. A woman's genitals.

2. A weak, cowardly, or effeminate man.

You want to go out with your guys for a beer. Your buddy texted you that he was going to hang out in the hip area of town, and you know there will be other people there. Probably girls. Your knee-jerk first thought should be ANYTHING except:

| How do I tell/convince/play this off to my wife?

If you're doing anything except planning logistics - and of course informing your wife when those plans are set - then you're on the wrong track. What would make YOU happy? Then fucking do that. Don't DEER a single fucking thing except to smile a pleasant "bye bye" as you waltz out the door. Because you know what? You should be fucking enjoying your socks off with the knowledge that you are an awesome, improving, masculine man in a sea of pussies (both kinds).

But this is what trips up most of us at first: we love sex more than almost everything else. We obsess over it. We can't stay away from it without killing a part of us inside. So naturally the automatic response to a sex-withdrawing harpy is to do things to manipulate her into sex.

But desperation, like negotiation, kills desire.
What I hope you come to understand is that the alpha male, the man on top of his game, the one in full control of his life, doesn't worry about sex because sex is plentiful to that guy. So the answer for you, new guys, is to work steadily to become that guy. The big irony of the Red Pill is that taking sex off the pedestal gets you more sex. Mind fucking, right? (Pro tip: this is true of just about anything in life. Parenting. Career. Friends. Abundance mentality is powerful.)

That's why it's a marathon. That's why it will take time. Because you've been such a pussy (see above definition #2) for so long, your journey will take lots of time. Which means you won't get the awesome sex right away. I know, I know. You don't want to hear that. But it's your own fault. I hope you understand that by now.

Calm your raging boner that your wife so rudely rejected, you big captain you. You deserve a little denial for tucking those balls up into your abdominal cavity for so long. It's a natural consequence. And it's also going to be ok. You've survived with blue balls this long, you can handle a couple more months until your wife starts to realize you are a man deserving of her best, most feminine sexuality.

When you are truly an improved and improving man, and she trusts that it's not just a fad, and you get the awesome sex and affection you've been desiring, you'll wonder why you ever stressed about it.

---

DISCLAIMER

I'm not contradicting this, however. You do need to start acting like a Captain, even if she doesn't hold the same opinion of you. You might have to... gasp... disagree with your wife.

---

Set your mind on this: it's a marathon, not a sprint. A sprint will get you divorced. Your wife, being an emotional woman, will need time to acclimate to the new you. It may take months, or for the particularly stubborn screechtard, years. And there's always that chance she never will. Does that change your game plan? Why should it? Who are you doing this for, anyway?

You've heard that if your wife doesn't like you being the Captain, there's tons of other women who will appreciate you. I'm going to take it a step further and say that nothing, NOTHING, should be done with a woman, real or imagined, as the goal. When I lift, I assert my place in society as a strong man. When I flirt, I gain insight into the human process. When I kill at my job, I build myself a legacy. None of this is to get into anyone's pants.

Therefore, you cannot look at this as a quick fix. The means is the end.

---

WRAP UP
So just hang in there, soldier. It gets easier. Don't demand shit, STFU, work hard, don't worry about her. The sex will come - either with her or another chick. You'll enjoy the fruits of your labor once you've kicked your addiction to instant gratification and start developing some \textit{REAL} goals.
Bros, Dogs, & Beer
by TheFamilyAlpha | September 9, 2016 | Link

Bros, Dogs, & Beer One of the earliest fuckups almost every new ‘unplugged’ man will make is that he will spew his confused, twisted, sad & angry emotions all over his wife. He will have come to the realization that up to this point he has been wasting his life and his wife is not attracted to the weaksauce pussy he has become. The pill is a bitter one to swallow, but I will always choose the pain of the truth over the comfort of a lie.

Pride will be injured, the ego is too involved, and the desire for immediate results will be alive and well - all ingredients leading towards a hurricane of emotions.

Like a Somali pirate this newly unplugged man will look to his wife and say, “I’m the Captain now” to which she will laugh or snicker and say, ‘yeah, ok...’ leading to further frustrations.

He will want to weep and apologize for being so pathetic and not leading her or the kids - which is what has caused them to be so disgruntled and lost in this life, having never developed their own genuine sense of self.

He will resent himself for letting things get so bad and will decide to make a desperate plea to the world, making posts on twitter & reddit about how he has decided to ‘man up’ and take ownership of his masculine nature.

He may get drunk and tell his wife he loves her and now that he is a man she should submit to his lead. He will get angry and sloppy and yell about respect and the way it should be.

All of this will happen, and all of this will work against him.

Myself and several other frequent contributors here at MRP at have shared the message that all of these emotions – they are for your bros, your dog, & your beer.

Your wife is not your emotional tampon. She is a woman who is always judging your status as a man. Her shit tests are nothing more than checkups on your leadership & frame. To have you come to her spilling your guts about whatthefuckever – weaksauce, and she will take note.

Here is the kicker, in these initial stages – you have no idea what you need to do or who you truly are or What’s expected of a masculine man. You’ve been plugged in and stuck inside a bluepill mold that was forged by some weaksauce white knights over the years for so long that you have no idea how to even ‘man’. Because of this the last thing you want to do is lay out a plan that you’ll be changing the very next day/week.

For these reasons, you need to just start taking actions, making small permanent changes and then let your results do the speaking for you. There is a reason that Lifting is Step #1.
Your wife isn’t your mother. You don’t need to run to her and say, “Hey look at me, I worked out three days in a row this week” She doesn’t need another child to be proud of; what she needs is a husband – the masculine man you were and she thought you’d always be when she married you. The better way of doing that is to just start working out and during one of your romps in the sack she’ll say, “Wow, your arms are big or Whoa, your back is so hard.” You just shrug it off like that’s normal – because being a jacked muscular masculine man IS normal.

Men are the more romantic of the sexes, I’m not saying don’t feel - what I am saying, is be deliberate with whom you are sharing those feelings with.

Read the rest of the article on The Family Alpha blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/09/08/bros-dogs-beer/

Twitter
“You’re so predictable”

This is a death sentence in marriage. A man who is living life according to his masculine terms is a man whose wife cannot predict his every action. She may be able to predict that he will take the path of a masculine man, overcoming obstacles rather than skirting them. But, she does not feel that he is a man that could be classified as always doing what is ‘expected’.

If you always order the same food, fuck her the same way, give the same gifts, and speak in the same manner on the same subject, then you’re predictable and therefore you are boring. It has been said time and again that the worst thing a husband can do is bore his wife.

Boredom is death, boredom leads to a wife looking elsewhere to feel something, boredom is the reason other men don’t have to be better than you, just different. I could understand being beaten by a better man; I could never come to terms with being beaten by someone who was just different than me. It just wouldn’t sit well and I’m sure that it doesn’t sit well with all of those ‘predictable’ husbands whose wives went out and found that passion and intense feelings they were missing from that different man.

When I have sex with my wife, she never knows if I’m going to grab the rope or the flogger. She doesn’t know if I’m going to turn on the Christmas lights around the bed or the black light. She doesn’t know if I’m going to bring her in the shower with glow sticks, put her against the wall in the living room, on top of the kitchen table, or in our bed.

Maybe I go brutal caveman or maybe I’ll gently caress her every inch, fucking her mind through intense emotional stimulation, getting her close to climax before I even get her booty shorts off – she has no fucking clue who I will be each night, and we’re only talking about sex at this point.

Now take the same amount of paths I could choose in the bedroom and apply them to everyday living. Some days I will email her back and forth, other days I won’t respond to anything via email or text. There are times where I actively dread her when we are out and there are times where I have eyes for no person but her.

Have you ever gone to a party, bar, club, or ‘event’ with your wife and literally ignored everyone, only engaging your wife and whispering in her ear the nasty shit you’re thinking? Pulling her to a corner, brushing off the attempts to distract your attention by others, eyes locked in, hand exploring her body, making her feel as though the two of you are alone even though you’re surrounded by bodies?

Maybe the very next day or the next bar you go to you straight up disappear for some time, talking to the world, gaming and working Kino on every pussy that passes and not even acknowledging your wife’s existence.
This roller coaster of emotion has kept my marriage from ever entering a deadbedroom situation and it’s been going for 12 years. I have recently decided to take courses on American Sign Language and I’ll be honest with you guys, that seed was planted from this Santa video. I watched it and it cut straight to my core, I have a soft spot for kids and the elderly, whatever.

I came home and told my wife I was signing up for classes at a ASL University that is local to us. I didn’t ask, I didn’t warn her, I just made the decision which to her was a very ‘unpredictable’ one. She didn’t know of the research I put into classes, the deaf community, or anything and she didn’t need to; all she needed to know was that her man was working to improve himself in another arena.

She works with children and is looking to get into the medical field so it actually piqued her interest and now we both will be attending the course together and practicing together, another bonding moment that keeps a ‘freshness’ to our relationship. Always improving, to the grave, it’s the MRP way.

Side Note: Always challenge her to be better through consistently raising the standard from which you measure yourself.

Whether you are comfortable with whom you are or not, your wife is the one that needs the emotional stimulation and if you aren’t going to provide it by mixing it up, someone else will - AWALT. If you want to be the same dude who day in and day out follows the same routine, so be it you do you, but don’t be surprised when your wife says she needed something (someone) new.

As an individual who is implementing TRP you won’t be faced with this issue, or I should say you shouldn’t be faced with it as lifting, dressing better, interacting with people, dread, leading, and living life on your terms prevents her from truly knowing what you’ll do next. It’s the guys who are still purple that need to take note, looking good naked isn’t the answer and neither is dread, it’s the combination of it all that keeps you from being the boring dude who tells that same joke at the party or does that same thing day in and day out.

This is not to be confused with family rituals. I read to my kids every night, we go for ‘adventures’ every weekend, etc there are rituals we do on a consistent basis, keep those as they are needed. I’m talking about you, the husband, you need to keep your wife on her toes so that when she sees Chad walking down the street cat calling or what the fuck ever, she won’t view him as a chance to ‘get away’ from her boring life because, as an unpredictable alpha man, her life isn’t boring.

It’s up to you the Family Alpha to lead her to that point.
"FR" about congruency
by drty_pr | October 6, 2017 | Link

I had a day off a few days back. I normally get up early enough that I can work out, eat breakfast, take a shit, a shower and be ready to take the kids to school. I was tired on this one, so I slept til 730.

I come down stairs and start making a cup of coffee to take with me to work out. Kids are rambunctious and being kids. Wife comes down and says "how come you get to go work out while I make breakfast/lunches". I say "cause I'm going to clean this shit hole up when I get back home this morning" pointing at the disaster of a house. Probably should have said nothing, but oh well.

I take my coffee and proceed to go work out. Kids are still going off the walls and she starts yelling. Comes into the room and says "I'm done! They can fuckin get themselves ready and make their own lunches! I gotta get ready". I smile and continue doing my thing. She storms upstairs. (I'll add the disclaimer here that she makes breakfast and their lunches. Someone will surely chime in with "way to OYS bro!" This is part of what she has to do on my ship)

I stop, go to the kitchen and say "alright guys, playtime is up and it's time to make your own breakfast. I'm working out". Then I go back and finish my routine.

I come back into the kitchen and hammer a protein shake. I say to the kids "ok guys, time to go upstairs and get dressed". I then make their lunches as I cook up a plate of eggs. I put them in their their back packs and set them by the door. Grab my eggs and another coffee an head upstairs to get ready. On my way by the kids are on the couches in the living room, fully dressed and playing iPads. I say "alright guys, when I get back down I expect you to be in shoes and on your way to the van".

Go upstairs and wife is silent. DGAF. Eat my breakfast as I get dressed. Come back down stairs and 2 kids are outside already; only need to help youngest find a sweater. Get to the van and wife is sitting shotgun, full on ice queen. I drive the kids to school, give them all a hug and watch them venture on towards their days.

Once we start driving away wife suddenly starts telling me about a comical situation from the day before. We laugh and go get some coffee from Tim Hortons before driving her to the mechanic to get her car. She is all laughs and happy as a pig in shit now. Get to the garage and jump out to pay him while she switches vehicles. Give her a kiss and she goes off to work.

Why say this story?

When she came at me that morning about absolutely nothing, I treated it as such, like nothing. My wife rarely comes at me with shit like this. Every once and a while she will pitch me a congruency test. I bat them out of the park every time.
Moral of the story?

Don't take her so seriously and have the frame to do so
A large number of gentlemen finding this subreddit have the same story:

"I was alpha before I got married, then something, something, something, and now I am beta. How do I correct this?"

For many of these men, attaining a bride was the goal. In their view, they achieved that goal, so why should they put in any extra work?

Thus a trend began: These men then started to defer to their spouse on increasing occasions. They would not go out of the house without the approval of their wife. They would not make decisions on what to eat for dinner, or where to spend their money. They were no longer the men their partners married. Instead, they were a burden on their spouses. They feared disapproval and desperately craved validation from their loved ones. In essence, their wife became a substitute for their mother.

After months, years, or decades of this, dissatisfaction set in. Looking for an answer to their calamity, the clueless men stumbled into this subreddit and asked: "Why has my wife forsaken me? Why will she not make love with me?"

For these men, the answer is simple: You have become your wife's adopted child, and women are not sexually attracted to their children.

So, when a man finds this subreddit and begins reflecting on himself and his relationship with his spouse, an important question to he should ask is whether his spouse is: "Married, with children" or "Married with children." The comma makes a difference here. A woman has no desire to be married to her child.

For instance, consider the following:

- Does your spouse need to cook for you? If so, is it because of her desire to please you, or are you, just like your children, simply another mouth to feed?

- Does your spouse need to clean up after you, just as she does with your children? Have you become another chore for her to complete?

- Do you waste your days playing video games, watching television, or engaging in otherwise childish behavior?

- How about when you go out. Do you need permission? Do you feel like you need to check in if you're going to be late?
If "yes" was the answer to above questions, take heed. You are needy. You have not "made it." Marriage was not the goal line, it was just a hurdle to surpass. Rather than gloriously leaping over this hurdle, you have collapsed upon it, and are now a pitiful figure writhing in pain on the race track. For you have given up the one thing that your spouse initially found attractive in you: your independence.

Become the independent man you used to be. Stand on your own two feet and do not remain reliant on your wife. Grow up and never look back on the man-child you were.
You can spend a lifetime writing down great quotes you find in books, films, songs, etc. But I've narrowed my favorite down to one simple, ancient one, that I carry in my head- "Take what you want and pay for it."

It applies to red pill because you really do pay for all the things you take in life. It is comfortable and easy to have a marriage where you go to work, came home and flop on the couch to watch tv without making much of yourself. You have a job that pays the bills and you put a little bit away towards savings and 401K. Maybe you BBQ on the weekend and occasionally have some beers with the friends. You have taken a very easy lifestyle, but without realizing the actual cost of it.

There is a cost to not working out. There is a cost to letting days slip by without reading, increasing your knowledge and working on your further development. There is a cost to bingewatching stuff on Netflix instead of tending to a more productive project. There is definitely a huge cost to you sitting back and deluding yourself with the idea that you've done enough, you have achieved enough and that you can ever stop learning, growing, moving.

Take any path you want in this life, but be aware of the costs tied to it. There is always an accounting. It took me 15 years and a lot of sidebar to realize that.
So I have listened to Rollo and the RMG podcast and a couple times I have heard Rollo talk about Bigfoot erotica in reference to how women want a story, they want imagination and a dominant man even if its Bigfoot and thought how absolutely ridiculous it sounded. So one night I am in bed and ask my wife have you ever heard of this shit before. She laughed her ass off and said, "no is it a thing?!?" I said yeah apparently. So we laid in bed and proceeded to look up titles to these books and laughed our asses off for over an hour. Over the course of the week it became an inside joke to us. I would use the titles of the books to flirt with her and keep things sexual even though it was totally ridiculous. She loved it and still does a couple weeks later. She started calling me Bigfoot as a joke and I will pound my chest and grunt at her to bend over. She always complies.

One of the titles of the books is "Bigfoot and the Bride" or some shit like that. I will come up with ridiculous stories about how she is my bride and is lost in the woods etc. and she laughs her ass off and says I am ridiculous. Heres the thing though. When I use them to initiate as a joke it makes sex fun and shows I can use my imagination to take her to another place even if it is an absolute ridiculous place. I mean fuck man look how popular Twilight was!! The thing is my wife isnt like this. She hates Twilight, romance novels, 50 Shades of Gray etc. ...until she doesn't. She just wants to be taken somewhere else to let her imagination go and have fun.

So the take away here is have fun, use your imagination and own it. Even if it is ridiculous.
Newbies - don't be this guy
by weakandsensitive | August 17, 2017 | Link

https://www.reddit.com/r/askMRP/comments/6u7dhp/why_ask/

I thought this was supposed to be a place for camaraderie and to learn more about being a man from other men who walked the path further than you have. I've tried to be active here and on MRP, reading sidebar material, lifting, etc. Had a main event with the wife three weeks into the journey, ask for help and perspective and get crucified, shamed, and treated worse than I have ever been treated in my life in any realm online or IRL. I will continue to study and improve on my own, but if this is your idea of "helping" guys get out of betadom by chastising the shit out of them for BEING FUCKING BETA and asking for HELP...no thanks. I asked for encouragement and help because I don't know what I'm doing and you supposedly do and your responses were so full of hatred and anger that it made me feel physically ill. Why "askMRP" if that's what you get? You all keep telling me to STFU and that it means keeping your mouth shut and weighing your words very carefully. Maybe you all should try practicing that a bit more before posting anymore "advice". And I don't care if this is a DEER post. I'm my own judge, right? Eat a dick.

Read that. Pretend you're a woman. And ask yourself - does this make you wet and horny? Is this the guy you want to fuck and please? How much worse do you think this victim is in real life?

The lesson here - recognize your own unattractiveness. Don't be blind to how unattractive you are. Then fix it. Or cry more - whatever.

To me - this is probably the most perfect example of unattractive behavior I have seen on these subs in a long time.

Rule 1 is covered by the things you do. Rule 2 is covered by the things you don't do. Both rules matter.
Gentlemen; A practical thanks
by Riding_Officer_CCI | March 17, 2016 | Link

tl;dr - epiphany leads to forward motion. TRP is neither a sprint, nor a marathon. Let go of the idea of a 'finish line' or fail.

Intro

Early 30's man. Young ish marriage. Young son. Been red pill aware for 3-4 years. (Talk About Marriage forum > Athol Kay> MMSL forum> wider manosphere) Landed at reddit/MRP 6 weeks ago. Have read extensively on masculinity, red pill thought etc etc. Read NMMNMNG and, MMSL, SGM, Rollos's works, etc. The Manosphere seems to me in great part to be outrage whoring on the latest SJW transgression. I get it. The wider world is fucked. Feminism has ruined everything.

Except in my world, my tiny sphere of influence.

I don’t live in the wider world. I live in my world. I choose who to spend time and attention with, who's opinions are of value to me, and all the rest of it. My world contains: my wife, our son and my dog. That’s it - my duty is to them. I must lead my wife, I must guide my son, and my dog - he's my oak. A woman will never love a man unconditionally - a dog will, always. Friends and family pass in and out, strangers sometimes, but everyone is here by my invitation. It takes much more digging through the Manosphere to find gold than shit nowadays. MRP gleamed like a shiny gleamy yellow nugget to me.

I’m refreshed to find a place where Men are held to high standards by their peers, and they give each other help rather than bleating on about how fucked everything is. I have a son, therefore it is my duty to raise him to be a Man. That’s my purpose. He will follow my example, whatever that is- so it’s on me to make it an exemplary one. My catalyst to recent changes has been a mindset shift, which I may expand upon in later posts. I've lurked for long enough, I want to thank you for inspiration and advice by chucking my own philosophical hat in the ring and testing a concept.

I'll run with the caveat that as there is nothing new under the Sun, that another man has said the same, more eloquently than I will- however, this was my epiphany and I share it both to thank you for making fireside conversation which has been valuable to me, and as an introduction of a little value as I push my way onto a log with you by the fire.

Body

Only you have the power to end the anger phase - and it is simple, but not 'easy.' Here's how I did it:

Abandon the mental objective of one single 'finish line.'

Why? Because you are a man. There is no finish line, no destination, no prolonged respite.
Your wife will not be waiting with a glass of beer, a sloppy beej and a sunny disposition at the tape. She will not be transformed forever into your perfect vision of wifeliness in reflection of your development. This is why you must be utterly at peace with the fact that as a Man, the only validation worth paying attention to is internal. You are a Man. Marching into a headwind is your lot in life, just as her eggs running out is hers. Embrace it. Revel in the sensations of each boot striking the ground in front of you, rather than some nebulous goal which doesn’t exist.

How many of us have started this journey, seen progress, gotten complacent, and lost Dem Gainz, all because our mental point of reference is calibrated to the idea of an ‘achievement’ being distinct, finite, attainable? Study a course> pass exam> rest. Train for a competition> do competition> rest. Life isn't like that - sorry you've been told it is. We all were.

Lesson

My journey started because I finally understood the nature of what I had to do. What is different this time around is I know what I have to do, and how to do it.

The sooner you accept that your path to being a Man is perpetual, rather than finite, the easier the anger will smoulder out, and you will learn to take satisfaction from placing one boot in front of the next, and revelling in the scenery.

External validation is for women. You must learn to abandon your reliance on it.

‘Alpha’ (Fuck I hate that term) cannot be a destination. For the newly awakened, it is best that you accept it now- your life will always be a struggle. She will always test you.

The game is always being played.

Edit: typo, expand on 'my world' point. And F'ING formatting.
You are not allowed to stop working out: You could be and should be working out much harder and in a more innovative manner than ever before. I have more than 20-years of lifting under my belt, but what I'm learning by partnering with my son and seeing all the crazy shit on youtube is insane. We have not missed a single workout (he's a beast), which is cool in and of itself; but we have not repeated a single workout either. Parkour + MMA exists? Fuck yah it does. I haven't looked forward to working out this much in a long-ass time. Blue sky, sun, no clouds, light breeze, coconut palms, and 85-degrees certainly helps.

You are not allowed to stop tracking your food, fattie: Have you been getting fat? If so, learn from it. There are really only two kinds of people, those who exercise self-discipline and those who don't. If you've been getting fat it's largely because your "schedule" - the majority of which is likely imposed upon you by others - is itself contributing to your ability to remain - or try to become - fit. Maybe you even suffer from full-on external locus-of-control syndrome, which is itself a bitch. Learn from it. Your job provided a schedule? Make your own. Your boss compelled you to rely on the company calendar for meetings? Use your own. Learn to be your own man - if nothing else - guiding your own decisions. Start with a simple nightly plan for the day after. But don't fucking get fat, fatty. You know that fat is like a magnet for this shit, right? And fat looks awful to your wife? And fat is disgusting? And it's utterly useless though uses energy so is actually running net-negative in terms of usefulness? Leave the fucking fat for that fucking 600-lb surgeon who's making a boatload of money 'cuz so many fat fucks are now morbidly obese fat fucks.

You are not allowed to stop showering: I once read that gamers don't shower. I recently read that professional gaming is pandemic-proof. So if you're a professional gamer, then to hell with showering. For the other 32,345 of you, however, take a fucking shower. Christ. My children wanted - wanted - to take showers by the time they were about seven. If steele needs to remind you to shower then you're just a god-awful creature who should be living in a cave and if you ever want your wife to shave her sasquatch vagina again you better fucking remember that. Steele is way too kind to fat fuckers who don't shower.

You are not allowed to stop dressing appropriately, you lazy fucker: Sadly, I've been reading the last many years' worth of style guides and am convinced that no one here knows how to dress appropriately anyway. Unless they live in NYC, San Francisco, LA, Miami, definitely Miami Beach, Paris, Barcelona, Sicily, particularly Ibiza, maybe Houston, definitely not Monaco, South Korea if you're a lesbian and into cartoons, and 50/50 Buenos Aires. 'Merica is largely fucked except for those within 30 minutes of a coastline, in about six states.

You are not allowed to stop brushing your teeth: Jesus steele, ye of little faith, that's just disgusting. Any dude here reading this who needs to be reminded to brush his teeth is not now, nor ever will likely be a man or even a functioning human being. I get it, depression and all, but shit. Enough. I dealt with hardcore anhedonia and worked my way through it. Besides, fucking Joe Tiger King ruled over dumb-asses, monkeys, and lions, along with toothless, showerless, smelly assholes, so clearly, if you're not brushing your teeth, you're either a gay douchebag or a monkey.

You are not allowed to stop trimming your fingernails and toenails, and your nose hairs: [Oh, steele, the masses cried, clippers are not essential items. Whhhaaaaa.] For fuck sake, just bite your nails off like I do - after washing your hands for 20 seconds while singing happy-birthday twice - then follow-up with a pristine shiner nail buffer. What the fuck else are these teeth for? Regarding the nose hairs, be sure to double-check your ears, between the eyebrows (fucking mongoloid), back, and - puke - ass-crack. Conversely, if you have light, blonde hair and play tennis you can skip these strategic maneuvers.

You are not allowed to stop shaving your balls: Fuck shaving your balls you bunch of metrosexuals. I mean sure, if your balls are covered in moss then go for the trim, but shave? Jesus. The Surgeon General today said - while bemoaning having been born a gay, black man - "wash your hands more often than you ever dreamed possible... and speaking of testicles... stay at home if possible... we need you to do this for your mother... we need you to do this for your abuela... do it for your granddaddy, like I do... do it for your big mamma... do it for your pop-pop." He's talking about your balls, dick, those veritable underwater volcanoes of covid activity, key to flattening the curve and saving humanity, so get your act together. These are challenging times. And stay away from your granddaddy.

You are not allowed to stop being the oak: Part two, so poignant during this time of strife, this time of fear, this time of panic, this time of no fucking postings on MRP... well, I will thrust it upon your wife's ample bosom, and upon your own waiting eyes, wanting hands, and less-than-muscular bodies, this weekend. H-O-M-O-S.

You are not allowed to lose all of the discipline you've gained: Presuming of course that you've gained discipline. Some of you have, most of you haven't. Why? Well, most likely because you're lazy. We all know reddit skews 'merican, we all know 'merica also leans lazy and entitled. "Why should I be disciplined," you wonder. "Why should I be fit," you ask. "Why can't I have my cake and eat it too," you shout to the gods. But most of all, "why (1) won't my wife let me fuck her ass, or (2) lick my balls, or (3) fondle my anus, or (4) rub her hands lovingly along my ripped physique, pausing slowly along each of the three heads of my deltoid, running idealistically along my intercostals, pausing briefly at my obliques, and then stopping - and gazing - in wonder - at the "fuck wings" - is that what you call them perseus (?) - did I get that right (?) - shit I still don't have those things. (Fuck I lost track of my closing quotes need some help.) Well, you know those vertical muscles that point to your cock - sheeeit - so my point is that you're a homo and you're fat and you don't shower or shave and all sorts of other crap, that's why. Oh, and you probably still don't have discipline you faggot because you're here under false pretenses. Douche, you're here not for you, you're here for your fucking wife. Let me spell that out: f-o-r---y-o-u-r-v-i-g-a-n-a (wtf formatting). Dumbass, you're not fooling anyone, so until you develop some discipline for you - just for you - rather than for your wife's vagina - then you haven't even developed discipline - instead you've just developed quasi-you-vagina-discipline-syndrome. Hydroxychloroquine will not cure you of this. Only authenticity will, and you know nothing about authenticity anyway until you de-fag yourself. Besides, it only takes 40-days to develop a habit that sticks. 40 days. That's just .00137 of your entire life, lazy-ass.
You are not allowed to not have a damn plan for the pandemic, even now: I had a plan for this in fucking December. So did MCT. I prepared all of my employees in January - largely because the world was descending upon us for the goddamn super bowl. My fucking son has a plan. My daughter has a plan. My wife, oh what a surprise, does not have plan. I am her plan. Yet you don't have a plan? For fuck sake. If you're gonna "bathe in the blood of jesus" and that's your plan - yup, real, live quote on the news here - or you're just not into planning much - then you're about one hundred million steps behind the dumbest of the dumb. If you're really this dumb, like a character in a Doctor Seuss book, then perhaps you're just fucked and, well, the apocalypse is coming, it's a dog-eat-dog world, and in that world, some dogs are simply dinner.

You are not allowed to stop preparing for the future: Preparing equals plan. I wrote three paragraphs and deleted them because it really is that simple. Well, now, in thinking it through, there is another important message. Many of you are fucked. Many of you likely cannot get over how fucked you are. Many of you have lost your jobs. Many are losing your businesses. Many will be losing marriages. Many will suffer hardships not seen since the Great Depression. So what's a good man to do? I've thought about this often, and it segues into the next bullet point below: how can you really be an oak, really be stoic, and really weather any storm, with a laissez-faire that Adam Smith would admire... without staring death in the eye, without looking at the end, without expecting it, and without becoming at peace with it. My answer, sadly, is that I don't know. I really wish I did. I could offer up so, so much to the thirty-thousand dudes here, but the reality is that mine has been such a fucked-up, crazy, unique set of circumstances, that it's just not really practical. Know this: I'm in my 40's now. My health only went to hell in my 30's. I had plenty of years before when I failed, and succumbed, and blew it up, and deteriorated, and fucked myself, and fucked others, and generally fucked-up everything. The earliest ones seemed to be the hardest. So much invested: My ego. My identity. My sense of self-worth. Exactly like this: (too many colons) walking along a desert and encountering a hill: (see, I told you, that's three) strength gone, passion gone, confidence gone. Yet I stumble up and across that hill. And I keep going. Only to find a bigger hill: Thirsty now, starving too, perspiring, and fearful. Yet I climb and cross that next hill. Only to find that the hills keep coming. A simple parable, sure, but really it's the easiest way to communicate what it has taken for me to reach this point. Long before death forced me to embrace stoicism, I was already doing the work. I was trying and failing. I was experiencing life. I was picking myself back up and trying again. And as each year passed, I recognized that this, too, shall pass and it rarely is as bad as we think, and even when it is actually as bad as we think, well you know what, it's still not so bad, it's just life.

You are not allowed to let the things you can't control you: Look back in my post history if you like, you'll find my come-to-jesus realization that I can only control so much. That I can, and will - because I choose to - excel with those things that I can control. But at the same time, perhaps paradoxically, I, a control freak, will extinguish control over those things I cannot. Focus on differentiating between the two. I spoke to a client today. He's worth 8 figures. He's bemoaning the problems in our particularly-hard-hit industry, and while his wife is a legitimate cunt, he had driven to his house in the keys, sat on his pier, and gazed at the sunset - while finally recognizing that this - this - he cannot control. Why, I asked? Because, he said, for those things I control I think and plan and stress and stay up and own. But today, he added, for this thing I cannot control, I will be at peace. That dude is older and in his 50's, but his is a valuable lesson, one you would do well to focus upon.

You are not allowed to stop having fun and stop gaming your wife: Jury's out on this. I'm convinced that a man and a woman should only spend so much time together. So for those dudes spending entirely too much time with their wives, I'd say: get the fuck out of the house, if you can, or mark off some part of your domain. Personally, I can only stomach so much of my wife, and if the duration goes above a certain point, I'd rather game her fucking shitszu. Then again, I never did all this: -- MRP = good | blue pill = bad | TRP = acne | -- for anyone else. P.S. I misinterpreted - or just misread this. Steel's right. My point was meant to be: don't spend too goddamn much time with your wife if you'd like to retain your sanity. Unless you dig spending all your time with your wife. Which is just fucking weird. And unnatural. "Come on baby, hold my hand, we'll get our nails done and then shop for dresses, yay, didn't you say you needed more cosmetics, let's grab some sprouted chia seeds as a snack" said no [m-a-n] ever.

You are not allowed to stop fucking your wife because you're stressed: Okay steele, explain how to do this. I'm sure our readers would like to know. I'd certainly like to know. I don't fuck my wife for validation. But these days, there are times when I'd rather fuck one of my beautiful coconut trees. Certainly the Japanese Maple that's blooming. How the fuck do you pull this off? Vet asking though vet doesn't particularly care, lol.

p.s. Thanks, steele... for your post and great insight. If I believed in that whole Morpheus-gay-crap that HOA is always talking about you'd be 1/2 of mine.
One Year Field Report

Background

37, married 15 years, 3 kids (all under 10), career beta, wife is 35 SAHM, swallowed the pill almost exactly a year ago. Found MRP looking at random subreddits looking for entertainment and it hit me like a ton of bricks. It took me a couple months from finding the red pill to actually swallow it knowing that it was entirely possible that rocking the boat could end my marriage. I decided I was willing to take that risk to unfuck myself and my life.

Physical

6'2", 190, 10.6% BF, bench 265, squat 335, dead 395. Lifting at home 3x a week, bball once a week. Two months into a bulk at 500 calories over TDEE. Trying to put more mass on arms and upper body with 5 sets of 8-12 reps at 75% of 1RM, starting to see some progress. Watching ab definition disappear during a bulk is a bummer, but I know they’re just a cut away and I’ll look even better with more muscle mass.

Looking at where I started a year ago, it’s hard to believe how far I’ve come. My big 3 lifts were a combined 600 pounds a year ago. Today I’m at 995 and on track to hit my year-end goal of the 1000 pound club in the next couple weeks. I’ve lost 15 pounds of fat and added 10 pounds of muscle. I feel confident with my shirt off, and more confident generally in life. For anyone just getting started, lifting is key. I’m still far from my long term goals, but I know how to get there.

Another plus of eating better and lifting is I’m demonstrably healthier. I had my health screening at work and my blood test came back perfect. The nurse said to just keep doing whatever I’m doing. In the past, I did tons of distance running and thought I was in shape, but I couldn’t get my HDL or triglycerides where they should be. Turns out being able to run 10 miles doesn’t mean you’re in shape, but now I am. I also noticed I haven’t been sick once in the last year even with my germ factory kids bringing home all kinds of bugs and my wife being sick a few times.

Reading

Finally finished Bang this week and restarted MMSLP. Still finishing Thinking Fast and Slow by Daniel Kahneman. On my second re-read of NMMNG putting together an outline. Rational Male 2x, WISNIFG 2x, SGM, MMSLP, Way of the Superior Man, How to Win Friends and Influence People, The Subtle Art of Not Giving a Fuck.

Career/Finances

I’m debt free, working on long-term financial goals. Need to increase my income (looking at some passive sources) to hit some loftier targets. My promotion was made permanent last month and I was supposed to have an evaluation of my performance in this new position for a raise in 6 months. Boss gave me the raise last week instead. I think my boss sees I have options and wants to keep me where I’m at. Applying for a higher position today. Nice to have a little career dread.

Captaining

I used to defer to my wife on planning activities. I used to feel bad about scheduling my own activities that I enjoy because it would require her to do more child care. In the last year, I’ve changed tremendously and I live my life for me. I’ve planned lots of family activities and trips that went great. I do the things I want to do and I’m so much happier. I used to go on business trips and the whole time worry about how hard it was for my wife while I was gone and wish she was with me to enjoy the new places I’d visit. I was never fully enjoying where I was if she wasn’t there. And when I did bring her along, I wasn’t fully enjoying it because I was following her moods in the moment. The last few business trips since swallowing the pill have been drastically different. I’ve enjoyed myself so much more and I don’t worry about how mad she is that I’m in a hot tub at a hotel while she’s wrangling 3 kids to bed.

I’m also more direct leading my wife in the direction I want with stronger language “let’s do x” instead of “do you want to do x?” It doesn’t always work, but she knows what I want and often falls in line. This direct language works well in the bedroom too.

Relationship

The last year has been a roller coaster. I saw early gains and a big increase in her interest early on. Then she confronted me on my changes and I overshared giving her my journal where I tracked my progress. Things went downhill for months culminating in false rape accusations, increasing distrust on both sides, her attempting to kick me out of the house, going months without sex or even touching each other, and consulting with divorce attorneys. I made the decision that I would not and could not go back to being beta (you can’t plug back into the matrix). I was ready to end it and figured out the logistics and made peace with living life as a single dad. But at the lowest point, things started to slowly shift and have improved significantly since then.

The last month I’ve been batting about .250 but that’s a significant improvement from the dead months we had during the summer. Quality has increased significantly and she follows my lead in the bedroom willingly now that I’m doing a better job leading. Starfish was a weekly occurrence in the past, but it hasn't happened in the last year. The one time she offered starfish, I turned it into much more.

I’ve also noticed a correlation between the intensity of her shit tests and shark week. I’ve learned from the way of the superior man to treat those shifts like changes in the weather and maintain my positive outlook. When I handle the blustery weather well, it seems I always get to enjoy sunny weather a day or two later.

We’ve been going to marriage counseling for several months and the tenor has shifted from her listing and complaining about all the things wrong with me to discovering the source of her trauma (likely from her childhood) that’s driving her sexual hangups. We’re making slow progress, and I’m providing more comfort than MRP recommends through the process, but it’s worth it to me.

I think the best example of my progress is comparing at 2 massages. The first one was when I was 2 months in. I started giving her a massage to warm her up for sex and when I initiated at the end and she shot me down, I stopped immediately and started reading a book. It came across as very butthurt and ended in an argument where I DEERed like a champ. I hadn’t learned to STFU or about removing presence in a more controlled way instead of an abrupt 100 to 0.

Contrast that with last week, I decided to give my wife a massage because she’d done a ton of good work that day and was sore. She had turned me down the night before, but I laughed it off and reset in the morning. I had no intention of initiating that night. I gave her a good massage and didn’t try to initiate, but then she initiated and it was fantastic. The mindset was totally different. I was giving because I wanted to give, not so I could get something in return. She picked up on that and apparently that did it for her.

One Year In Thoughts

I’m nowhere near where I want to be in my own progression, or in my relationship. I’ve made some mistakes and made it so much harder on myself. But the bottom line is MRP works. Sometimes it’s slower than I’d like, but it works. I’m making progress and my relationship is on the right trajectory. I’m out of my wife’s frame, but I need to do a better job establishing and communicating a compelling vision for the future. I need to show her my frame would be a good and safe place for her to be.

It’s also been fascinating to watch my sister in law's hypergamy in full force as she branch swings. My wife is baffled, but it's like she's following a script Rollo wrote for her and I'm not at all surprised.

I’m keeping my foot on the gas and I’m betting my 2 year report will reflect much more progress.
I love anal sex. My wife loves it too. But it is my “trigger” when it comes to sex. The one thing that will push me over the edge every time like clockwork. But it is a desert for us sexually and we use it sparingly. About once a week. I can’t resist it though when it is time. And it turns me on even more when she begs me for it without me having to ask. And she knows this of course.

This week, there was something she wanted. And she explicitly offered to barter anal for that thing.

This is when I nipped that thing in the bud before it became a thing. Exchanging sexual favors for other favors directly is a power play which poisons sex. You should never entertain sexual favors if you feel you are being manipulated by them. Always show some restraint and say no when you feel this is happening.

Now my wife does get off on treating me like a king sometimes and will treat me sexually to something that doesn’t directly turn her on but I can see it gives her pleasure in the way that giving any present to someone feels good to the giver.

But learn to recognize the difference between good faith sexual favors and bad faith manipulative ones, and never accept the manipulative favors. Not only does that poison sex, but it allows her to manipulate you, and eventually could lead to a decline in sex in general. If she learns she can use sex to get what she wants, it works even better if she can restrict the supply even more and make you even more desperate. And then she can even subconsciously restrict sex even below what she would want because she knows she can get more from it if it is scarce.

And that is why my wife and I have an agreement if one person regularly refuses sex with the other, the denied party has the pass to step out. This takes that card out of her playbook.
Give your 'self' a gift this Christmas.

by TheFamilyAlpha | November 26, 2016 | Link

Read the entire post @: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/11/26/give-your-self-a-gift/

This post is about giving something to your ‘self’ this holiday season. This something isn’t of material value; it goes way beyond a new Jeep, gun, or tool. What I want you to give yourself this holiday season is the Gift of Independence.

I want you to shift your perspective on life to the point where you know that if your wife were to cheat or file for divorce you’d still have a smile on your facing knowing that you are the fucking man.

There’s no better time than today for you to start pulling the training wheels you have in your life. For the ‘plugged in’ married man it’s their wife and marriage that are the two wheels which keep them balanced. These men feel their masculinity and position in society is derived from their relationship status, as if being married signifies they are real men. This is unacceptable.

Take a look at the masculine man, he’s riding his life free from support.

The man who has embraced his masculinity is the guy who has a mission and it’s not his wife. He’s the guy who has a wife that knows her man’s vision and she is aware that he does not need her. Have you ever noticed that the men who don’t need their woman are the men who have the most loyal women?

The reason for this should be clear, but for those just tuning in to the Manosphere women want a man who doesn’t need her to take care of him. Women will submit to a masculine man as she is his lover and she knows that he will elevate her status in society while he pursues his mission.

Men who need their women are men who treat their wife like their mommy. Women want a man who can ravish them then continue marching towards whatever goal they have set. They don’t want to have to raise a man-child. My wife and I have two kids together, the last thing she needs is a third body to raise. Because I keep her in the role of lover, our marriage is still enjoyable and filled with passion. If I were to be the doting fool that most men have become, she’d resent me and either find another man who could treat her like a woman or she’d lower her standards to becoming a bitter hag.

Men, you don’t need your woman taking care of you – in fact you don’t need your woman at all. This is the gift you need to give yourself this year; it’s also a gift that will ‘keep on giving’. As you accept the reality that your wife could leave at any moment, you can then begin to embrace the confidence that you would be alright. Go through the thought experiment, create a negative visualization in your mind and feel everything that you’d feel if she were to leave. Realize that with her gone, you should still be entirely secure with your ‘self’.
Now dial yourself back in and realize that your woman is still in your life. Find joy in that, smile at her, and appreciate the time you guys have together.

The fact of reality is this, the less you show ‘love’ the way society has taught you to show love, the more your wife will love you.

TV, movies, music, etc the all are pushing the female imperative, they are telling you to entirely devote yourself to your woman, to always self-sacrifice for her, and to make her the top priority in your life.

Negative.

Read the rest of the post @: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/11/26/give-your-self-a-gift/

Follow on Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
She already thinks you're a fuck... Own it.
by stonepimpletilists | May 19, 2016 | Link

Quickie on the lunch hour. Get shot down at 10pm? Don't want her to think you're butmad?

Ever consider that if you're newly unplugging that she already does?

Don't want her to think you're a Pussy, so you don't leave after a rejection. She shot you down, she already thinks that.

Own it.

Go fucking take a walk, hit the Starbucks, take dogs for a walk, head to the office after hours and just cry at your desk. Doesn't matter, the key here is a process.

If you absolutely must manage her perceptions, leave with a smile, come back with a smile. Shower as soon as you get home if you really want to be evil.

If she asks, cant your head and laugh. Remember my post on shit tests, how about no? This is what it's for.

Go be happy, go pretend to be happy. Eventually you'll start to believe it.

Won't do this because of some bullshit excuse? Check my post on thinking less, and doing more.

You can't think your way out of a sex shut down. Plus, when you're out side, alone at 10pm, you're able to actually trying something new. Walk into Starbucks, maybe there's another guy in there who Hates his cunty wife, start up a conversation. Make a friend asshole!

Another lady walking her dog. Ask if you can socialize your guy with hers, always guaranteed 10 minutes of company right there.

That social interaction may just cheer you up, and that smile you cone home with might just be real...

And go take a shower, it's filthy outside, spread your good mood to her. After all, girls get cranky when they don't have a good dick in them on the regular.
I had a hiccup a few weeks ago, but generally things with me have progressed by magnitudes over the past couple of years.

Things are going well....

Took the kids over the long weekend to the other coast to see family, wife stayed home, essentially 5 days to herself. Communication while I was gone was essentially a video call when I arrived at my brother's so she could say hi, and 2-3 texts (i.e. "On schedule, see you at the airport"). Other than that, radio silence. It was wonderfully relaxing.

Upon my return, after the kids are in bed, building up to caveman time, she informs me that she masturbated twice while I was gone, thinking about me & my hands around her neck. This from a wife, who, a couple short years ago, just was NOT interested in anything sexy.

Now if you would've told me when I first got married that women wanted aggressive fucking (NOT lovemaking), and get turned on by you minding your own business & essentially ignoring them, I would've thought you were crazy. After having my eyes opened in the past couple years, and judging from the muffled screams on Wednesday night, I'd say the proof is in the orgasmic pudding.

Thank you gentlemen.

The road is long, and takes effort. But shit, it's worth it.

Edit - fucking typos
So, it really pains me to put this out there. Reason is, because it's so simple, it's so easy, that it's embarassing to admit that I ever didn't behave this way.

Took the pill a little over 6 months ago. Still a fatass, but I lift heavy 3 times a week, have lost 4" on my waist and probably moved those inches to my chest and arms. I own my shit and hold frame. All the shit you read here. As a result, my confidence is up. My happiness is up. I don't get in arguments with her. I spend less time on shit I don't care about. I'm a different man than I was 6 months ago and I'm much happier.

Two things have happened in the past week that are worth sharing.

1) Kino: We were in the middle of an hours long sex session. Taking a break to eat some cheese and strawberries. My wife compliments me on how much I touch her. She said "I've noticed how much more you touch me now and I really like it. It puts me in the mood more, and I like that you touch me all the time and not just when you want sex."

This is so fucking simple that I'm an idiot to have ever not been doing it. I touch my wife all day everyday. We have sexy time 3x a week, but I touch her all day every day. Previously I'd only touch her in the 15 minutes (hell maybe the 1-2 minutes) before trying to get her naked.

I started this months ago, and it's paid off, but it was interesting to hear it from my wife.

KINO my fellow chimpazees, KINO.

2) Step up: Little shit, but step up. Don't be a beta-faggot. Own your shit, own your life. My wife emailed about a special offer she received yesterday. Wanted to know if I was interested. I responded "Yes. Interested. I'll handle it".

The first time I saw her, she ripped my cock out and and bent over in front me. She literally said "I've been wanting to have sex with you since you said the words 'I'll handle it'"

Previously, I put so much of the responsibility for stuff on her that it was a major turn off. I handle a lot, mind you, but the little crap liek this I had always put on her. More and more, I take action. And my wife has notice, and literally said it makes her want to fuck me.

This is brief, I know, and the stuff is so fucking simple. But it works. MRP isn't about manipulation. It's not about conditioning your wife. It's about fixing men. It's about making you into a man that women want to fuck. And yeah, some of it's hard, but so much of if it is so fucking easy. It's about being attracting, and not being unattractive.
A kinder gentler oligarchy... Said no one ever.

by UEMcGill | December 23, 2016 | Link

Put’s on mod hat....

So there was a great debate on the MMSLP forums being closed down the other day. In particular u/ImSteveMcQueen felt vindicated about some statements he made in the thread and some opinions on how the tone of the boards should go.

Every now and then as the cultural memory starts to erode we have to remind ourselves what the mission is here. I personally am here for very basic reasons, rule zero. I come here every day as a way of hitting the mental gym. I watch people fuck up and remind myself, “Don’t do that!” or “Hmm that’s a good approach I would have never thought of”

This sub, and the r/askMRP sub are laboratories. They are not group hug, circle jerk centers designed to make guys feel good for fucking up their marriages to the point of failure. We are not relationshits, askwomenz or any of those kinds of places. This is not a safe space. In fact, we will ban you for tone policing. We call people faggots for a reason. It’s harsh, shocking and gets them to think.

"Lift and read" might be the answer to most of the questions that newbies ask, but there is also the application of lift and read that they can be confused about. I don't think that half the posts that get removed should get removed. Ever heard of "there is no such thing as a dumb question"? I teach from time to time and I can guarantee you that if someone asks a "dumb question" there are 10 more people out there that have the same question that didn't ask it. Are these forums for learning or for moderators to express their dominance?

So when things like this get posted, I want to reach for the ban hammer. Not because he was questioning the method, but because it’s tantamount to tone policing and concern trolling. In fact in prepping for this essay I’ve read the quoted material several times, and more and more it comes off as concern trolling.

Here he opens with, Hey I think such and such is great. Then he presents his concern. “I don’t think that half the posts...” Followed by his “Well I teach and I can guarantee..” It was in fact classic concern trolling. Every graduate student worth his salt has had a professor tell him point blank, “Yeah I don’t have time for this, this is the basics, go to the reserve library” In undergraduate I remember having grad students sit in a class because the prof in question told them, “I’m teaching it today if you really don’t understand”. In graduate classes I remember sitting in the library with 5 other grad students reading reserve literature, for hours just so we could complete the homework.

So if a new guy comes in and threatens to blow up himself, or more importantly the laboratory we get heavy handed. “Hey stupid! Don’t smoke in front of 2000 gallons of methanol!!”. I personally employ the 2x4 of love. Men are dense, and ego driven. You have to call out and tear them down to a base level to get them to understand, you are fucking up.
I don’t care if you storm off because we weren’t nice. I don’t care if you don’t like our methods. This is a man’s laboratory for practical advice on how to get laid. That’s it. Just like MMSLP, if we the mods start letting women in, or being kinder and gentler it’s tantamount to blowing up the fucking lab. MMSLP has proven that already. Some of us were handpicked from the founding mod, some were elevated because of their fast mastery of the concepts. We rule as an oligarchy, with iron fists for a reason. Is it the right way? Don’t know, but MMSLP sure shows what the wrong way is.

So I say this as a personal challenge, for anyone who wants to take it up with me. Instead of bitching and moaning about the atmosphere, go make yourself better. Go be the best person you can be, and become a fully integrated man. When you’ve accomplished all that, when you get sex on demand or wake up with her mouth on your cock (rule zero), when your SO will follow you into the gates of hell and only ask, “do I need boots?” you will be accomplished and can have a say in the tone of this board. Until then, quit being a faggot, go read the sidebar and lift.
The Dual Mating Strategies of Men and Women

by El0vution | April 22, 2020 | Link

Alpha Fucks and Beta Bucks is a well documented phenomenon in the Red Pill. It’s the so called dual mating strategy that describes a woman’s instinct to seek sexual opportunities from the alpha (Alpha Fucks) and provisioning opportunities from the beta (Beta Bucks.) It seems generally assumed in the ‘sphere that this strategy is exclusive to women, so this will be my brief attempt to show that a dual mating strategy is also present in men.

Across the ‘sphere we see RP men constantly admitting their dual mating strategies. We want to fuck hoes, and marry virgins (low n-counts.) We want “a lady in the streets, and a freak in the sheets.” Men seek sexual opportunities from the whores, and provisioning opportunities from the virgins. Sigmund Freud expressed this dual mating strategy in his Madonna/Whore Complex: the tendency in men to view any particular woman as either a Madonna or a Whore. Madonnas (don’t think of the superstar by this same name, it will confuse you) are women we perceive as pure, submissive, obedient, and faithful. Whores are women we perceive as sluts, large n-count, tattoo-ridden, disobedient, and unfaithful. History is full of men who were in love with their Madonna wives, only to cheat on them with a Whore. In fact many RP players have made careers out of fucking hoes only to eventually marry a woman they perceive as a Madonna. We all carry this Madonna/Whore instinct inside of us, and it’s quite clearly a dual-mating strategy, if we care to admit it.

This dual-mating strategy for both men and women may be a result of pre, and post, Agricultural Revolution societies. The findings of evolutionary psychology suggest that before the Agricultural Revolution sex in humanity was far more polygamous, liberal and free. People tended to sleep around for various reasons without taboo or stigma. There’s a lot in our biology that is evidence of this. This doesn’t mean a woman’s hypergamy wasn’t in effect, it just means being a hoe wasn’t looked down upon. If this is true it’s safe to assume that women were hoes for a very long period of time. And this would explain our natural attraction to hoes. Further, pre-Agricultural Revolution, there was no such thing as property, assets, and marriage.

Post-agricultural revolution introduced property, assets, and marriage, and this changed sexual relationships forever. People began to think heavily about guarantying their property and resources was passed on to their progeny. Men became interested in women who could guarantee this bequeathment, and women became interested in men who would share their resources. Suddenly virgins and beta men became more attractive. The forces of this new social pressure conditioned women to look for men who could provide provisioning (betsas), and those same forces conditioned men to seek women who could be trusted with their resources (Madonna’s.) Virgins can be trusted with property and assets more than whores, and beta men can be relied upon to share their resources more than alphas. In this hypothesis, a dual-mating strategy evolved in both men and women out of our ancient past of free and unbridled sex (pre-Agricultural Revolution) and the relatively recent development of commitment sex (post-Agricultural Revolution.)
In the RP there’s this idea that you must maintain alpha-ness in your relationships at the expense of beta-ness, so that your wife doesn’t cuck or leave you. While there’s obvious truth to this, we should condition this view against our own dual mating strategy. In the life of a man, a virgin is perceived to be a prize. Sure, nothing turns us on more than a whore, and some married men will fuck them given the opportunity, but many won’t. Many married men will stay faithful to their Madonna, even though she doesn’t turn them on like a Whore. Understood in this way, we can see that while women may be attracted to Alphas, for them the prize might very well be a Beta. This is why we teach comfort tests. And while some women in relationships will still fuck the Alphas, many of them won’t, and will stay faithful to their Beta. AF/BB is not a black and white line, it’s just an evolved tendency in women, just like the Madonna/Whore complex is an evolved tendency in men. But neither of these tendencies dictate with any certainty how a particular man or woman will act. This is not an excuse for a man to be a little bitch, a real RP man knows how to be both Alpha and Beta.

I admit that the theory of AF/BB and Madonna/Whore instincts evolving out of a pre, and post, Agricultural Revolution society might simply be conjecture. But, the evidence that men have a dual mating strategy (like women) is overwhelmingly evident and universal.
Why do we keep hearing the redundant “read the sidebar?”

by BobbyPeru | November 23, 2017 | Link

“A scorpion asks a frog to carry him over a river. The frog is afraid of being stung, but the scorpion argues that if it did so, both would sink and the scorpion would drown. The frog then agrees, but midway across the river the scorpion does indeed sting the frog, dooming them both. When asked why, the scorpion points out that this is its nature.

ASALT

The red pill initially is a tool to open up a man’s eyes to reality. It should be a jarring, yet challenging new perspective about the nature of women, women’s imperative, and how a man can become betaized in an LTR or be beta before a relationship by a lifetime of blue pill brainwashing.

However, that is just the beginning of the journey Focusing too much on the AWALT characteristics and less focus on one's self will keep the person in the anger phase and stunt growth.

Why do the seasoned guys constantly ask which sidebar readings OP has read?

Reading the sidebar, and applying it to your life is where the transformation happens, over time

Ok, there is an “and” in that statement, which implies it is a two part process. When practicing principles of the sidebar is attempted, the new man to MRP will find that there is an element of trial and error involved. In other words, experience, and learning from experience through self honesty, OYS, and listening to feedback of seasoned members (instead of DEERing), is a high-value process. It is not an overnight undertaking, and patience is necessary. Years of betaization do not come undone overnight. It requires a transformation of thought, and the sidebar contains the elements for that transformation

How many times do we get guys come on here spouting about how they read WISNIFG and NMMNG? These 2 are good starters, but often guys (for whatever reason), will read these 2 and go “Rambo.” Then, they come on here and try to get a bandaid or quick fix on how they screwed up royally. They have not internalized solid frame since the prerequisite work was not completed.

The sidebar should be read completely in order to get the 30,000 ft, big-picture view. The new guy should be focused on lifting and STFU until the entire sidebar is read and our new man has some practical and valuable experience.

TRP and MRP are not bandaids to give you advice on how to fix all the DEERing you did last night in a useless argument with your LTR or wife. If you actually take the time to read all of the sidebar and learn from your mistakes, you will find that all the answers really are in the sidebar. That way, you can come up with real personalized solutions for yourself instead of asking strangers on the internet.

Once again, the real answers come from internalizing the sidebar principles

Internalization of frame takes time. So, don’t try to put in a couple months of reading and then be a kid playing with dynamite. You will get blown up. Take your time. Be honest with yourself.

This is about fixing you and your personal journey, not about fixing your relationship. The sidebar is one of the biggest tools to get you there.

TL;DR: Don’t read 2 books and then go Rambo. Read the entire sidebar, practice it, and learn from it. Transformation doesn’t happen overnight- be patient, and get back on the horse if you mess up, and you will mess up. But, messing up is part of learning.

Read the damn sidebar.
Start thinking and acting like the Man you want to be, right now.
by TrainingTheBrain | June 26, 2015 | Link

When I was in the Navy I had a friend who played the role of Funny Fat Guy in our group. He was the guy who emulated Peter Griffin & Homer Simpson, the guy who did the Truffle shuffle you know the type; and guess what, his Marriage was shit, his bedroom was dead, and his 4 kids looked at him as their pathetic friend.

Before one of our deployments we had a party to bring the families together before we disappeared for 8 months. During this party we were drinking and he decided to do the truffle shuffle to get a few laughs. I noticed his wife’s embarrassment as well as the sadness behind his laugh.

Fast forward to deployment; I’m coming back from an intense Kettlebell session and see this dude crying. I approach and ask what's up. To save your eyes I’m not going to share the whole conversation..

In a nutshell, he hated his fucking life, his family, being deployed, everything.

I did what every Man should do in a situation like that. I listened to it all, processed the information, and then told him to suck it the fuck up. I then took him on as a client (little did I know this would start my passion for personal training) and began to train his body and mind.

He always said shit like I want to act like you do, I want people to respect and fear me, I want to have sex that doesn’t feel like I’m fucking a dead fish.

I told him that you don’t wait until you lose the weight to start acting like the Man you want to become. I was able to get him down 30lbs, from 0 to 13 strict pullups, and confident and assertive. He’s out now and his marriage is functioning like a well oiled machine. a Machine that is driven by a Man who knows where he is going and is leading his clan to that promised land.

This brings us to the point of this post.

Gentlemen Unplugging on MRP - You do not start acting like the Family Alpha once you read all of the books, drop to at least 15% body fat, or once you reach this or that goal.

You start right now

You do this by

- Talking less to your wife about your feelings. Treat words as currency. you earn more words through having solid thoughts; and don’t spend them all in one place.
• Not thinking of the time you’ve lost and how you wish you had MRP/TRP 3 years ago. Everybody used to be somebody, who gives a shit, be somebody now.

• Taking action. Fix the yard, fix your wardrobe, fix your fucking self without telling her that you’re doing it. Just do it (Dread will increase, don’t acknowledge it, but recognize it)

• Spontaneously lift her up, order for her, take her hard in or out of the bedroom. Be an interesting dude who isn't in a pattern of wake up, go to work, come home, veg, eat, veg, sleep. Marriages are not meant to be a routine set of patterns. Start a business, schedule a random trip, take off to the national park, go to a VFW and volunteer, do something every week that she doesn’t see coming.

• Don’t demand shit; a wife who is forced to take actions is not genuinely respecting you. She’ll do whatever you want if you’re worthy, because she’ll know you can and will get it elsewhere if she doesn’t provide. If you say Wife you will blow me daily you didn’t earn that blowjob. Sure you got one, but is that the goal or is full improvement of self the goal? Being the guy who is pushed into the bedroom and sucked off while your wife says my vagina wants you feels fucking good.

Have you seen the fat bodied dads walking around? They all share the same disgusting personality: Funny Fat Guys, Weakness, misplaced priorities, sadness, and shit marriages.

Be the fat guy who operates like the fit guy, then you’ll become the fit guy who, through habit, is operating like a masculine Man should. We are what we repeatedly do. Excellence then, is not an act, but a Habit - Aristotle

TL;DR Don’t wait until you look like Brad Pitt from Fight Club to act like Brad Pitt from Fight Club [Mod Announcement] No more posts only saying how "X Time since I took the pill" with a useless field report by strategos_autokrator | August 11, 2015 | Link

One of the truths of TRP is that nobody thinks you are special nor cares about you. There are almost 5000 users here all that are going or have gone through a transition. Your transition is nothing special.

When you post something, make sure it adds value to the community.

Posts that add to the community:

- Post an insightful question regarding a concept you are struggling with. When in doubt, shut up, read more. It is ok to post if you are reading but don't understand some concepts, but the questions have to be specific.

- Post an original insight regarding a concept you have internalized. This often happens as you put into practice what you learn here, and after many mistakes, you figure out how it best works for you. A Field Report is just a way to exemplify the concept you are discussing.

If you aren't sure if your post falls in one of these categories, don't post. If you are posting out of insecurity, or fear, don't post. Posting that kind of crap only reinforces your beta patterns, and detracts from the community.

Posts that do not add to the community:

1. General stuff that reveals you haven't done the bare minimum only makes you look lazy. If you aren't committed to change, why should we care for what you have to say? If you are not reading the Course Prerequisites, then your question will not be insightful, and won't add anything to the community nor to yourself. If you haven't tried wrestling the concept for a while, then you aren't trying to understand, you just want validation.

2. Posts titled "X weeks in" or "Day X" or shit like that are all weak insecure stuff. Keep a personal private diary instead, and read it with a critical eye. Do not make MRP your diary. We have the "Own Your Shit" if you want to hold yourself accountable. Posts that just say "Update" of "Field Report" with nothing concrete are just about your transition and don't add to the community. Posts that are essentially titled "Just unplugged, advice me" also are low quality posts that signal both that you have not unplugged yet, nor have done the bare minimum work to unplug.
3. Posts blaming your wife for the problems in your relationship. Posts bitching about your wife and asking how to fix her or change her. Fuck that shit. MRP is about YOU changing. Go to /r/DeadBedrooms with that butthurt weakness.

4. Posts thinking you are very special because you are in the anger stage and arguing back to her shit tests. Unless you have gained some insight that can help others, or have very concrete questions, most likely your post is one of the low quality ones we get every week on the subject. Posts about "How did I do?" or "Advice on shit tests" reveal you aren't reflecting enough, nor owning your shit. The post isn't about shit tests, it is really about your own insecurity and need for validation. Instead of wasting your time and that of the community, spend your time in the Course Prereqs in the sidebar.

5. If you are posting very regularly, you are posting shit. If you are posting regularly and your posts aren't upvoted, you are posting shit. If you are posting as frequently as /u/Rollo-Tomassi/, /u/IanIronwood or /u/BluepillProfessor but you don't know what you are talking about, you aren't adding to the community.

6. If you think MRP is like /r/asktrp, your post is a shitty one. /r/asktrp is just insecure betas seeking validation from other insecure betas. Very few people there give good advice. If your post is a cross post from there, or could belong there, there is a good chance it is a low quality post. Think hard before you post here. As married men, we like a more mature tone and expect our users to be insightful.

7. If your post is just a few lines without a deep insight, it is a low quality post. If your post needs paragraph spacing and doesn't have it, it is a low quality post. If your post is poorly written, it is a low quality post. If your post doesn't have enough information, it is a low quality post. If your post has too many details about who said what without insight, it is a low quality post.

8. If the question you ask is addressed in the Beginner's Guide, in the Wiki or in the FAQ, then the post is low quality. If the question you ask is something that we get every week, then it is low quality. If the question you ask is something with an answers that could be found by a simple reddit search, then it is low quality. If the question is something that is answered in the red pill sidebar, then it is low quality.

9. If you can't refer about specifics concepts from specific books in the sidebar, then, you haven't done the bare minimum, are not adding to the community, and shouldn't be posting. If most of the replies in the post just tell you to read the sidebar, it signals you shouldn't have posted in the first place. Open your eyes, swallow your pride, put your head down, and impose yourself a lurking moratorium until you are done with the Prereqs before you post again. This is really what you need to transition. Otherwise, you are just spinning your wheels in insecurity seeking validation from strangers online.
Stop being a little boy asking for validation and help without doing your work. Yes, we all know the transition is scary. Face that fear. That is why you become an alpha through it. While you face the transition like a pussy beta, you will not transition. Men do their work, and from these, they create their own insights. That is what this sub is about.

I believe that everyone, including newbies, can post insightful stuff if they kill their hamster, take a very hard look at themselves, swallow their ego, read the books on the sidebar and do the hard work of putting things in practice. Posting because you don't understand and want to learn is fine. But posting because you are lazy haven't done the background work or you are scared of implementing things are not fine. When in doubt, post in the Own Your Shit weekly threads to make yourself accountable.

MRP is not a support group. MRP is the captain's table, a brotherhood, a place where steel sharpens steel.
Occam's STFU: Cognitive tool to calibrate how much or little to speak when in doubt [Repost TRP]

by MentORPHEUS | November 24, 2016 | Link

I mostly lurk here at MRP, but today I wanted to say I am thankful for your work here and appreciate your contributions to the body of Manosphere knowledge.

STFU, or lack thereof, is a common thread on MRP, in problems brought and advice dispensed. I hope you find this post useful.

Occam's Razor is a cognitive tool which states that when there are competing theories or explanations for a given thing, the one requiring the fewest assumptions is probably correct.

Occam's STFU is simple: When men communicate, the way requiring the fewest words is probably best.

Talking, lots of talking, is a woman's stock-in-trade. Women are even perfectly content to have entire conversations where no conclusion or resolution is reached. Much of the communication is emotional and nonverbal; the words sometimes don't matter at all.

Men, on the other hand, tend to be more goal-oriented in their approach to life, which is reflected in their more parsimonious and direct, often blunt conversational style. Form follows function; short and to-the-point communication is expected, and introducing filler material or emotion into the message is a faux pas, particularly in business.

In attracting women

Avoid the friendzone Women enjoy wordy conversations with each other, but don't make the mistake of thinking long conversation alone will get you into any panties; this will entrench you into the friendzone. If attraction is your goal, use fewer words and more nonverbal flirting and plying her emotions to make the connection you're seeking.

Active conversation is an essential element of push-pull, attraction, and escalation. Guide the conversation, but don't dominate it; keep a healthy banter going. Lots of women are quiet and shy at first; the solution isn't to filibuster all evening, but draw her into the conversation, with her 3:2 you being the golden ratio. People can see from across the restaurant when a woman wishes her date would STFU and let her get a word in edgewise; shouldn't you from right across the table?

Relationship talk is the woman's prerogative. I prefer LTRs, even at the plate level, and used to babble on about how important relationships are to me, how I wanted something long-term etc ad nauseum. I honestly thought this was exactly what women were waiting to hear from a man and was necessary to get them to sleep with me. Instead, I learned the hard way that this is an attraction killer. As the man, your job is to build attraction and escalate physically. STFU and Let her bring up relationship discussion; you might be surprised how late it comes and how little is demanded.

Never talk about your problems to a woman unless attraction doesn't matter, like with a relative or colleague (about relevant business matters.) Sparingly seek commiseration and advice from your bros, but complaining to women signals weakness, thus worthlessness to them according to Briffault's Law.

In managing LTRs and conflict

Lead more by example than decree. Acta, non verba becomes more important when establishing boundaries and roles in longer term relationships. Being the type of Captain who upholds in himself the high standards he sets for his First Mate and subordinates inspires loyalty and respect with few to no words. A hypocritical or unjust leader can talk and shout till he's blue in the face, and only inspire grudging compliance at best, which will be undermined or abandoned absent his attention.

You'll never win an argument with a woman using words and logic. Once things have escalated, words don't even matter; she's operating in the emotional realm. This is why an air of Amused Mastery is so important, and techniques like fogging so effective- they let the emotions run their course and exhaust their energy, and keep you from being drawn into her frame. When she's presenting an attack that is total BS, don't engage; STFU and let her exhaust her energy, then quietly and briefly state your position verbally and nonverbally, then stop.

You can't negotiate attraction. Whether sex quality/quantity has been slipping, or if you've got a dead bedroom to turn around, lots of words will not fix it, whether through arguing, begging/pleading, or counseling. Where a simple discussion and leading fail, employ Dread Game, and if necessary, invoke other options available to you.

At work and in business

Your colleagues are NOT your friends! Everything you say will be stored and catalogued away to be used against you someday. Be careful what you disclose; adopt a "security culture" mindset. Fit in with the established quantity of small talk (below established average, but above conspicuously out of element), but make sure your content is devoid of details that can be turned against you somehow.

Avoid developing a reputation as the office complainer, and don't let the existing ones draw you into their frame. Pick your battles, by importance and fixability mainly, and when you do speak up about legitimate problems, bring at least one workable solution to the table.
You absolutely will NOT successfully whine nor complain your way up the social or corporate ladder.

When someone in a superior position is stonewalling, such as a displeased supervisor, unenthusiastic sales prospect, or hardball negotiator, the temptation is to filibuster in order to keep the silence filled. While this may be appropriate in certain particular situations, a power move is to present a strong and/or appealing position or offer, then STFU and stonewall yourself. Let the silence go on beyond the discomfort zone, before yielding to the temptation to babble a conciliatory amended offer. One of the tenets of power and negotiation is, whoever speaks first loses.

Limits and exceptions to Occam's STFU

This is not a prescription to avoid naturally lengthy conversations, such as early dates with a new partner, long road trips, intimate vacations, weekends getting to know each other, at social functions etc. When conversation is flowing naturally, enjoy it, wallow in it; this is indeed the stuff of (social) life.

Occam's STFU applies primarily to situations where you're UNSURE or IN DOUBT about how much to speak.

Use finesse, especially when you're newly unplugging and changing your patterns in established relationships. Often, the prescription is for 10-20% less than you'd normally speak, not 90-100% silence. Overdo it for the context and you might come off as butthurt, socially inept, or fail to make your case sufficiently.

Part of Leadership is knowing when to take the initiative speaking to another or a group. When nobody else seems to know what to do, be that man and step up and take charge of the situation. Bystander apathy can be steered toward a decisive solution to many a crisis; timing and choice, not quantity of words is what matters in these situations. People respond well to short commands in a crisis, but you can quickly cross the line to haranguing annoyance and being ignored if you keep laying it on. The simple corollary here would be, Speak up, but not on.

The lesson of Occam's STFU is straightforward. As a man: when in doubt, USE LESS WORDS rather than more.
First ever* video of Rollo Tomassi - 22 minute full interview on The 21 Report

by Dream_21 | October 26, 2017 | Link

- YouTube link https://youtu.be/xEBm9nXhquk
- Vid.me link https://vid.me/waUiz
- Facebook link https://www.facebook.com/the21convention/videos/10155040654202405/

This is the first ever video of Rollo Tomassi (*without his sunglasses on or otherwise concealing his face), filmed just after his first presentation at The 21 Convention.

Most videos we film are published with advance access (by weeks or months) at 21university.com. However interviews like this will be published for free on the same day or close to it.

You can also check out over 300 event photos here

https://www.facebook.com/pg/the21convention/photos/?tab=album&album_id=10155032008637405 Differentiating Between Her "Following the Leader" and "Stroking Your Ego"

by InChargeMan | November 29, 2017 | Link

Some recent posts and discussions about leadership as well as some real world examples I've noticed (discussed below) got me thinking I should share some not-so-secret insight into pre and post marriage dynamics, specifically regarding the difference between your LTR truly following you because she trusts you as the leader vs. allowing you to think you are the boss while she works you deeper into her frame.

The general point is this: Women (i.e. humans) are generally intelligent creatures. When you show a strong history of leadership and good choices she will recognize and happily fall into her preferred role as the first officer. This can happen any time during your history with her, and your rank as captain can also be revoked at any time (whether you realize it or not). If you are more of a buffoon who constantly feels the need to "mansplain", make shitty choices, or choose the wrong time to pick your battles with the world (like arguing over which chair your alpha ass needs to sit in), she will definitely notice. Depending on where you are in the relationship (i.e. has the trap been sprung yet) she might make you feel like you are king shit, but rest assured, she knows you are a fool, but sees your other benefits (i.e. beta bucks) as her goal, and she knows she can “fix” your foolish behavior when the time comes.

MANY BP guys will assert "I used to be Alpha, but ....". I have news for you, MOST of you were NEVER Alpha, you were tolerated. When you are in the dating phase, she will laugh at your immature jokes, nod politely as you explain your conspiracy theories, and act impressed when you try to explain how shit works when you have no fucking clue. This is ENTIRELY DIFFERENT from the differentiation between Chad and Creep. In this case, she is laying the trap, stroking your ego, and waiting for whatever her break-even point is to start reeling you in and putting you in her place. This is how you came to find yourself in the position you are now in. This is why you used to get BJs but now have to ask for sexual favor "coupons" for Christmas. She played the part and you fell for it.

Now, you find yourself married with kids to a wife who has no need to stroke your ego. When you have stupid ideas, say stupid shit, and fail to lead, she will let you know, silently kick herself for not finding a better guy and daydream about Chad in marketing. Doing shit like insisting that she get up from her seat because she should have let you chose first doesn't make you Alpha, it reminds her that you are not to be trusted.

Recently I was on a flight next to a young couple. The guy was a complete ass-hat, said the dumbest shit the whole time, talked like a big-shot, mansplained obviously incorrect scientific facts, dressed like a white kid trying to imitate a 90's rapper, and was just straight-up annoying. At one point he made some poorly constructed joke about how she can borrow his headphones ( these to be exact ) if she signs a contract to clean the apartment topless. She laughed, "hehe, you would like that, hehe". From a mile away you could hear disgust in her voice. I don't know anything about him, but I'm sure he is NOT her Chad.
Today a married women told me all about her buffoon of a husband, and about how she had to "force" him to do something that was important for the well-being of the family, and how her instincts were correct, and she is glad she didn't listen to him when he said "it's fine, don't worry about it." She even said something like "he needs to just do what the fuck I say, I'm the one who knows what is going on around here, I just let him pretend he is in-charge."

So, the bottom line is: Don't assume that you have "lost" your Alpha, you likely never had it, and you have terrible instincts regarding "leadership". It is important to differentiate cause and effect. She will follow your lead if you have a strong history as an effective leader ( one of my past posts ). If you lead her wrong once in a while, no biggie. If you make her walk in the rain too many times, you will spend your capital and no longer be her captain.

tl;dr: Don't go RP Rambo and start forcing shitty decisions down her throat, it will not assert your dominance, it will assert your dumbassness.
In case anybody gives a fuck, here’s a couple of tricks that I have learned over the years to increase your deadlift:

“The Deadlift: 20% Physical and Programming, 10% Mental, 70% Technical” - Dave Tate, EliteFTS

Assistance Exercises to Improve Deadlift:

- GHD Back Extensions (posterior chain development with heavy emphasis on lower back and hamstrings to improve hip extension and core bracing throughout entire movement)
- The “Bro Pulls” aka Barbell Rows and Pull-ups (develops the grip, biceps, lats which all help maintain structural integrity and power output during the deadlift)
- Single-Leg Dumbbell Deadlifts (develops obliques, deep muscles around lower back and upper hamstrings, to increase core stabilization and balance/stability throughout the pull)
- Pulls from a Deficit (develops the ability to brace the core, and generate more power output when pulling from from the floor aka making it harder so the “real thing” is easier)
- Rack Pulls (Develops the lats, grip, Rhomboids, and traps without the CNS fatigue of pulling from the floor.. strengthens the pull from the knee to full lockout)
- Hip Thrusts (develops the glutes and hamstrings to fire and exert maximal hip Extension power output without loading the spine/ develop CNS fatigue, training maximal strength through extension of the hip)
- experiment with different grips and stances to emphasize different muscles more (ie. heels touching, with feet pointed in a “V” shape, with a snatch grip for increased trap and lat development))
- Stiff-Legged Deadlifts (hypertrophy of hamstrings, glutes, core, lats and traps for a faster, more stable pull and increased power output throughout the entire movement)
- Thoracic-Extension Mobility Exercises (poor thoracic Extension is the hidden secret of many a’failed squats and deadlifts)
- Hip and Hamstring Mobility (better positioning, more stability, better power output, better lifts)
- Ankle Mobility (see above)

Mental Cues of the Deadlift:

The key to a stronger deadlift is a combination of strength, positioning, and speed. You want to initiate the deadlift by first setting your stance. A solid and common stance for the conventional deadlift is to stand with feet hip-width apart, the bar directly over your mid-foot, and toes pointing forward. Then, you want to bend over and grab the bar with a shoulder-width grip, while bending the knees until your shins touch the bar. Now that your grip and stance is set, with the bar resting against your shins, you now want to “lift your chest up” (thoracic Extension), and straighten your lower back to maintain a neutral spine. A key thing to remember is to look straight ahead, not up, or down, but straight ahead at the floor to ensure maximal power output with no breaks in the kinetic chain. Now that your stance, and grip is set, while maintaining a neutral spine with chest up for thoracic Extension, you now want to take a deep breath, pulling into your diaphragm, hold it, and brace your core. You are now ready to engage the pull. As you engage the pull, the first thing you want to do is to maintain a neutral spine, keep your chest up high, core tight, you want to drive through the floor staying on your mid-foot (not your heels or balls of your feet), while pulling with your hamstrings. Throughout the entire movement, you want your arms (remaining fully extended) to hold the weight, your legs to be straight as possible, your hips to open like a door hinge (from a side-view), and your core to remain neutral and straight as possible from closed-position to lockout. This would entail your spine being perfectly flat, minimal rise and lowering of your hips from the beginning of the movement to lockout, and focusing on bracing the core, chest high, pull with the hamstrings and use the glutes. As you pull the bar from the floor through the sticking point (portion of the pull from the floor to lower-mid thigh), these mental cues will remain crucial and constant. The key to getting though this “sticking point” is to engage the lats, with neutral spine, keeping the chest high, while driving your mid-foot through the floor, pull with your hamstrings and glutes, bracing with your lower back, and bracing the core. Continue driving through the pull, keeping the bar close to you (as the bar passes the shin, then the knee, then the mid-thigh, maintaining a neutral spine, bracing the core, continue by to stay on the mid-foot, pull with the hamstrings, glutes, and lower back). As you approach lockout, you want to maintain these mental cues, while using your lats to pull the bar into your hips, maintaining neutral spine until lockout.

Reasons you may be failing and how to improve:

Positioning, timing, and speed, are important factors in the deadlift, but you also want the strength to be able to do so under maximal load. As with all kinetic chains, there is always a weak point and the deadlift is no exception. If you struggle with pulling from the floor, your hamstrings and glutes may be weak. You also may be over-trained. This is arguably the most taxing portion of the movement in terms CNS activation, and if you have an excess of accumulated fatigue, you are more prone to getting stuck here. If you struggle with getting past the knee-mid thigh, your glutes, hamstrings, and/or upper back (traps, rhomboids, lats) may be weak. If you struggle with keeping the bar close to you, you “cave over” at any point and drop your chest/ arch your upper back, and lose structural integrity of the spine, you may have weak upper back, lats, and glutes. Also, keep in mind that doing mobility work to improve thoracic extension, hip and ankle mobility, and core strength - will basically guarantee you lift more weight, because instead of wasting energy by fighting to stay in proper position, you’ll instead be in proper position and using all of that energy to focus on maximal power output through the kinetic chain. Again, these are common points where guys hit plateaus, and how they can overcome them with the deadlift. Will post again next week with the bench press.
I'm going to keep this post short and sweet because I'm very new to MRP, but getting started comes with its challenges.

Since I've started applying the MRP principles and observing my wife's behavior, I've found that a few times I've been failing in a different way when my wife makes reasonable requests.

Once I started identifying shit tests, I saw them everywhere in her behavior. Sometimes she would ask me a direct, reasonable question with zero attitude - "Did you bring the garbage cans back in?" and I thought I was trying to agree and amplify - but really I was stuck in her frame. I hadn't disconnected from the validation and I thought I knew exactly what was coming next: a shit test about how I just left something else for her to do. In short, I was seeing a lot of false positives. She had trained me to expect the shit test.

The problem: I was still stuck in her frame. I was worrying about what was in her head. It made it easy for her to gaslight me.

Once I started to understand and implement stoicism and the DNGAF philosophy, I saw those questions for what they were: questions. My wife just wants to know if I packed our daughter's lunch for the day. If I'm handling my shit (I take care of our daughter's entire morning routine by myself), there's no need to get defensive. The shit tests are definitely there (usually even in the same conversation as a reasonable request), but it's so much easier to pass them when you see them for what they are.

Just starting out, having an ego and being a little bitch was holding me back. I was being a sarcastic prick. My wife pointed it out, and she was right.

I've had way more success once I identified shit tests more clearly. I'm not passing every single one of them, but my reaction time is better and if I didn't pass I'm making a mental note for next time. At least now I'm looking out for number one every day and staying in frame. She's told me she appreciates that I'm not just reacting, and she's been sweeter and more affectionate toward me. We're making progress because I'm making progress.

Obviously a big caveat here: most guys are probably failing actual shit tests, and that's obviously a greater risk than overreacting to a reasonable request.

The big lesson for me was if I just focus in on the true shit tests, my reactions will become more powerful. For me, right now it's more effective to have a slow transition. If I do fail a shit test, I make a mental note to be ready for the next one.

TL;DR - Problem: if you treat reasonable requests as a shit test, you can do more harm than good. Caveat: you're most likely fucking it up by failing shit tests. Lesson: get good at reading the pitches: hit the fastballs down the middle, but also don't swing at shit that's outside of the strike zone.
YMMV
by TrainingTheBrain | January 29, 2016 | Link

Read Full Article Here: http://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/01/28/ymmv/

Your Mileage May Vary, it is a phrase that I have seen often enough in the Manosphere, but never has it been so profound than when I was forced to face the fact that maybe I don’t bring it up enough. I was giving /u/RPMutiny advice on this post when saw this quote:

“Don't be tempted to look for problems that aren't there. Don't just go with the flow of "she's a bitch" that you hear so often around here. Yes, AWALT, and yes, most of the men on here have shitty, entitled, shallow, western wives; we have a good cross section of culture here. But some are less shitty, entitled, and shallow than others. The phrase “YMMV” is the most understated one around these parts.” – /u/Alphabeta49

Nobody else in the entire thread had mentioned it, I hadn’t thought it, and the original poster may not be aware that everything he is reading is anecdotal, biased, personal opinion advice. While I assume every man is aware of this, I’ve learned the hard way never to assume anything and assuming was exactly what I was doing.

After I read that quote from AlphaBeta49 I took my hands from the keyboard and sat back like, Fuck, he’s right this guy has to remember that this is his life and the choice must be 100% his.

We all have a unique relationship with our wife. Reading my blog or the other forums and blogs on the Manosphere will arm you with more information than you could have ever hoped for at any other point in history. We have everything we need at our finger tips. The issue I am seeing and am addressing in this post is that you need to take that information and apply it to your specific situation. I have written about what works for my wife, what her kinks are, what kind of environment I’ve fostered, and how I parent. None of this has been written for you to ‘copy’ action for action and word for word then applied to your marriage. I created all of this content without any template. There was no Manosphere when I was married. I didn’t have TRP, MRP, no Rollo, or illimitable man it was just me knowing what I wanted and then working to get it.

That’s what I want you to recognize, you have to lay your own foundation and take the advice as a sort of recommendation and not a specific direction. Your wife is a beautiful, sexy, feminine creature – until you recognize that and remove the ‘harpy, nagging bitch’ labels and resentments you’ve made - you’re never going to understand what she is capable of. Here are a few factors I want you to think about when you see ‘success’ stories online.

- Your failed performance

- Your wife’s history
Your failed performance

One of the first things you need to factor in to getting the most from The Red Pill is assessing where you have failed to lead and to live a masculine life. It isn’t until you remove your ego and take a look at reality, a look at where you have fucked up and are continuing to fuck up your life, marriage, and ability to pursue your mission as a man. Only when you can see your shortcomings will you be able to overcome the damage you’ve done. Basically, you need to stop digging down – dig up!

If you have failed to keep up your physique, hit the gym. This is actually one of the universal laws of The Red Pill as well as step #1 to taking ownership of your life and ‘self’, you must lift heavy weights. This is not just for the aesthetics either – it’s for the confidence, discipline, destruction of instant gratification and development of appreciating long term commitment and hard work.

If you have failed to maintain your fashion sense (or you never had one) it’s time to develop your style. How you go about this is up to you. Find someone you respect and emulate their style until you find your own. Don’t copy anyone; we need voices, not echoes in the Manosphere.

If you have failed to lead your woman and/or children, start inserting yourself into those decisions. If your wife asks, “What do you want for dinner?” Give an answer, give your honest answer and skip the fucking ‘I don’t know/care’ routine, it’s weak and both your wife and all the masculine men you know are sick of it. The same applies to your professional life, finances, and mission in this life start taking ownership of all of it.

Your wife’s history

If your wife was on the CC before you got to her, so be it. At some point you didn’t give a fuck and put a ring on her finger. Don’t expect her to fuck you the way she fucked ‘them’. You have to get over your ego and any resentment you hold over her past, she is your wife and if you want the best from your wife you’ve got to cater your message in a manner that will get her on board and supporting your growth and decision to take charge of your clan.

If you fuck this step up and take the approach of ‘I’m the man and I am in charge’ after being a weaksauce fuck for x many years – you are going to have a woman who is going to fight you tooth and nail because she does not respect you, she does not agree with/understand your vision, and ultimately she does not trust you to be able to handle the role of the Family alpha, Leader, King, etc. She views you to be a weak bitch she resents and she will continue to view you this way until you go back to your role as beta bitch or your marriage ends.

How do you most effectively and efficiently reclaim your role as the leader of your family? You gradually, with your wife, go over your vision and game plan for your clan. You let her know that you recognize that you were a fucking pussy and that you are done being that type of ‘man’. It doesn’t have to be some sort of ‘Coming to Christ’ moment with all sorts of dramatic one liners and shit, just let her know that you see what is going on and that you are going to fix it. Let her know what your goals are for your ‘self’, the finances, the direction the family is headed. Make her a part of your team, boost her ego if you need to in order to get her on board. You can say you’re glad she was able to step up when you lost your way and that you’ll ‘reward’ her behavior by giving her a husband all the other ladies are drooling over.

Make it fun, make it a ‘team operation’ and most importantly, make sure you are playing towards the history you have with your wife. You know what she likes and what she hates, cater the message and your vision to accommodate those things. Don’t be afraid to make her angry, but if she has always had a hard time with finances, don’t go in guns blazing telling her it’s her fault the finances are fucked, because all of the failures are yours. Remind yourself of that when you want to rage at her or your kids, they are fucked up because you failed to lead them and make them better.

Kill the ego.

Read the Full Article At TheFamilyAlpha.com:
http://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/01/28/ymmv/
"Resistance is the most toxic force on the planet. It is the root of more unhappiness than poverty and disease. To yield to resistance deforms our spirit." -The War of Art

This is going out to all those fence sitters out there. Not just the new guys, but every guy every time you've felt your inner voice light up and start convincing you of all the reasons you shouldn't do something. That inner voice is a fucking pansy. It is your hamster. It is there to reason and rationalize EVERYTHING. It makes you overthink. Thinking about what could go wrong. Thinking about how you can't do it. Thinking about other 'better' things you could be doing. Thinking.

The truth about it is all that little fucker can do is think. It does not control your body. It cannot make you not do something. It can only convince you not to do it. It will spike your addrenaline, tie your gut into knots, and make you sweat. But it cannot take control of your legs and make them walk away. It cannot force your mind to concede.

I wrote a post about going to a dance club not too long ago. In it I did not speak of the hamstring my inner voice did that entire night. The schedule was: Work out, go home and shower/dress, go to the club. On the way home my hamster was reasoning that I should just stay local. Hit up a bar around town. I said no. I passed by a new microbrewery that I've been wanting to visit. "Go there" it said, "you've been wanting to." No I said. The entire way down to the city I could feel the addrenaline. My hamster was going nuts. At one point it flat out said: "Look you're married, you're scared, you're inexperienced, you can't do this." And I laughed and answered it with, "Watch me."

I can honestly tell you, every time I can recall that I've just said "fuck it" and went at a problem, I've succeeded beyond what I'd ever imagined. Back in college when my social anxiety was high, I was invited to a rich girls' house party. Said fuck it let's go and had a fuck it attitude the whole time. The girl who was the host lead me up to her room to bang.

When I first met my wife, I had about had it up to here with my BP ideals failing with women. I went to her house thinking in my head "fuck it and fuck women...if this doesn't work I don't care." We were making out on our first date.

When I found MRP, I had had it with the sexual rejections, with my life being in shambles. I said "fuck it" and dove right in.

I was on the fence yesterday about joining TFA's Men of March. And I said fuck it there too and joined up. I expect great things from this.
I listened to a part of The Game yesterday when Style was describing an important book he read which had the premise of: Life turns out how you will it to be. If you put your mind to being a body builder, a great speaker, a PUA, an athlete, a great dad, whatever...you will become it. But if you only want to be that, but feel it's wrong/you don't deserve it/you won't put the work in...it'll never happen. If you feel that resistance, and you allow it to hold you back...you're dreams will stay just that. Don't just be a yes man. Be a fuck it man. Because fuck it isn't just yes. It draws from that primal place of motivation. It silences the hamster by saying "I know all this shit you're saying, but I'm going anyway". It says, "I'm going to do this because all the times I allowed myself to be talked out of something, I felt like shit afterwards...and the decision to quit got me nowhere." It's saying, "fuck all those negative feelings, fuck the rationalizations and societally imposed barriers, just fuck it all. I'm going in."
Choose Wisely
by Rollo-Tomassi | May 22, 2019 | Link

Essay:

https://therationalmale.com/2019/05/21/choose-wisely/

Excerpt:

Making Choices

All of this presumes that a woman is in some way testing for a man’s potential. Even women’s autonomous shit testing is a confirmation of this. So yes, women do look for potential in men. Some better than others. The Hypergamous Filter is an imperfect tool which is exactly why women needed to mystify their feminine intuition in popular understanding. Men had to be kept in the dark as to a woman's motives because their filters have always been intuitive guesswork. This is a vulnerability that men might exploit – with good Game for instance – if women were ever honest about it.

Not all women can fuck the winners so they have to make calculated bets on men. This is also a reason women rely on social proof and the preselection cues of other women. If other women find a guy to be a 'good bet' it provides her a short cut to getting to intimacy. Again, Hypergamy cannot afford to miss out on a socially confirmed 'good bet'. And yes, this is also a vulnerability in women's vetting process that men with good Game regularly exploit.

So, the tradeoff is this: when a woman is at her peak sexual market value (SMV) she has the leisure to fuck the winners at the finish line. The more her SMV decays the fewer her options become, and the more likely it is that her necessity requires her to make a ‘bet’ on a man’s future potential. This is the primary reason women opt for the Beta in Waiting around her Epiphany Phase. Necessity forces her to go with good potential.

One of the ways feminism and female-primacy sabotages women’s ability to vet for good potential is in the mythology surrounding their sexual viability as they get older. Social conventions constantly reinforce the false idea that a woman’s SMV is indefinite – and by extension her agency over men should also be indefinite. This is why Blank Slate idealism and Social Constructionism are a preferred mythology for women. Without the Blank Slate a woman would be forced to accept the evolved realities of her sex. The Blank Slate is a prime source of women’s solipsistic denial of her own nature.
You found this post because you either either searched for divorce, cheating wife, or dead bedroom. Things have gone awry and you, as a an upright man, can't figure out where you went wrong. Your lover has gone another way and you have literally done everything you know how to make her happy and save your marriage. The marriage your grandparents had. The love each other forever, common goals, and raising a long generation of families. The one person in the entire world you were supposed to trust has failed you. This was the one person who shared your goals, vision, and bore you children. Twists and turns aside, this was all down hill now. Work hard, stay loyal to your company, never cheat on your wife, and care for your children. Keep bringing home that paycheck, treat your loved ones the way they should be treated. Loved. That's all you had to do.

You've grown up. Time with the friends were spent with friends who were married and having children. Breaching that age where it was time to just settle down with "the one". She had her baggage, but so what? You had yours too. Ex lovers, Ex friends, none of that mattered now. You exchanged vows, rings, and this was it. Make or break. You forgave her for her past and even she told you she was ready. Ready for children, ready for monogamy, ready to submit to her lover. Family or bust. That's what you told yourself.

You did everything you know you were supposed to do. You broke your back, sacrificed everything you loved before you got married and buckled down to raise a family. All the nights you spent with friends and brothers. All the free time you had to chase your own goals. You gave all that up for her. She was supposed to praise you and love you unconditionally for everything you spent to make sure she and her children were raised proper. God damn it, you did everything you ever knew to do.

You do what any real man would do right? You reach out to friends and family. You ask your father, maybe your preacher what to do. Invariably they all come back with the same answer. The same things you have been doing over and over. The marriage counselor? He told you to communicate your feelings more with each other. Embrace the individuality and figure out a way to compromise. The issue was, you have already been doing that. What no one ever told you until now, she was keeping score and you weren't. You didn't know the real rules and you didn't know how to make points.

Maybe she is withdrawn from you, maybe she is talking to that guy you seen friend her on facebook. The point is you have spent so much time building your legacy and it's all falling apart before your eyes. No one is helping after all you have done for everyone else. What has gone wrong in your life? No one understands what you are going through. You keep on trying though. You aren't giving up this easy. You keep on moving. After all, anything in life worth doing is worth over doing, right? You are alone, no understands what you are going through. They don't know the history or the shared struggles.

What if you take a step off the train?
What if you let go of all that?

What if, you stopped for a moment to work on yourself and stop working on everyone else? Then, you allow wondrous things to occur. Number one you realize that your happiness is only dependent on you and absolutely no one else and not even your children can provide you with true happiness. You hit the gym and get the body back you had before marriage, you know, let them muscles show again and get some confidence back. Get the diet under control and start losing body fat. Go back and rekindle old friendships with old friends that might be frustrating but some of them are still there with you, not for you. That's the key difference.

The wife gets put on hold while you rebuild your fatherhood with your children. You spend time with them like you always knew you should but didn't really have the time do that. Work and wife was always in the way. Take a moment and spend time with your children and learn what motivates them. As a father, you would be absolutely surprised how much you mean to your sons. After all, they learn how to be men based on your actions. Your daughter? That's the most important. She learns to love through you.

What will then happen to your life and family when you put yourself first? Everything.

The problem? You are on a fast train and it's going on the rails.
I don't need sex
by MAGAManARFARF | March 16, 2018

Last night I was talking to my wife about a book I was reading, part of a men's group (blue pilled church thinking). I was frustrated with it. They were steering these men in the absolute wrong, and terrifying, direction. "You struggle with sexual immorality simply because you were born into it, because men are pigs (see, all the wives agree), and you need to monk-up to protect yourself and please your wife. You need to be more like your wife, look how pure she is, like snow." Wrong answer. Wrong problem.

Our discussion was brief (less of a back and forth, and more of me sharing some thoughts), and at the end I said simply - "I love sex, but I do not NEED sex". Cool, seems like a strong stance. I'm happy about my frame here - not my frame just in the moment, but in life. Its a good frame. I am not a slave to sex.

This, admittedly, is a new concept for her. She knows beta me. Shackled to sex, leg humping me. Following her around, pleasing her for sex me.

That's not me anymore. Because I have removed my need for sex. Not my love of or desire of, just my need.

Enter Hamster.

Wife goes to the restroom, comes back, agitated. "Anon, I don't know about all these changes, I cant keep up with you." Nervous, hamster, nervous.

What happened?

She lost power. And she knew it, in that instant, she lost power. And it terrified her.

I held frame, joked with her, picked her up like a child, kissed her, and put her in bed. This morning I was greeted with the most passionate kiss from her I have ever received in the morning. She needed me. So I told her I would have her tonight.

Men. YOU ARE NOT SLAVES TO SEX. Own your shit, all of it.

EDIT

This concept of not needing sex was an internal acceptance, which I realize would have been better kept internal. Is there a benefit I will see from sharing this with her? Possibly, but at my point in the journey I accept that it is probably better to not take that chance. Trying to throw curveballs when you can barely hit the mit consistently.

Also, the concept isnt that a man shouldnt desire sex, but that a perceived need for sex does not control you. Sex is not a finite resource that we should be chasing after, dedicating our lives to. Sex will come as you become better.
There have been a few mentions on askMRP about wives having 'emotional' affairs, or even the possibility of an outright affair. Nothing paralyses a man to inaction as the thought of his snowflake welcoming the attention of a stranger.

Some men find the Redpill while searching for answers on how to deal with the affair, after the fact.

The verdict is in, it has been found that prevention is better than cure. Even Sun Tzu gave us the heads up:

So the rule of military operations is not to count on opponents not coming, but to rely on ways of dealing with them; not to count on opponents not attacking, but to rely on having what cannot be attacked.

What the good gentleman is telling us, is that Chad is real. Chad will game your wife, he will flirt. You cannot play Repunzel and lock her away, she is a functioning adult living in the real world.

If you are living your life the way you want to live it, you will satisfy her hypergamy and branch swinging drive. You are the prize. Once she realises it she will not put herself in 'harms' way, in other words she will prevent getting herself in a situation where she trips and falls on Chad's dick. She will be the one fortifying her position with you, because......you are the prize.

And if you are late to the Redpill party and Chad is banging at the gates? Remember, this, it is only your turn with her. There is no justice, fairplay or karma on your side. It just is. Mate guarding is a contentious issue on MRP. Do it wrong and you prove to her you have no abundance. Do it right and she is thrilled with her silverback alpha.

Violence. Nothing proves you have no abundance like trying to beat up another guy, for a girl. Going to jail and losing it all makes no sense. Owning your space around another suitor, solid eye contact and an air of a man that can take care of his woman is all it takes.
Over the past year or so, I've spent most of my self-improvement efforts on mastering my emotions. While I don't expect to ever fully 'arrive,' I am much farther along than I was at the start of the journey. This process has been rewarding but has developed in spurts. Here's my most recent realization.

A wife rules her husband to the extent she controls his emotions.

You can substitute ‘wife’ for just about anything but this is MRP so we’ll focus on that interaction for now.

Whether we want to be or not, humans are emotional creatures. We think, feel and then we act based on a mixture of those thoughts and feelings. Our decisions are not purely rational but instead derived from a complex interchange of desires, emotions, analyses, and goals. If we were purely rational, everyone would be in fantastic shape, customer debt wouldn’t be an issue, and we would basically be a society of robots. Obviously, that isn’t the case.

EMOTIONS & MRP

Let’s get more personal. Let’s look at the ‘average’ husband or the average guy visiting MRP for the first time. He probably wants to get laid more. He wants his wife to be more passionate. More slutty. A bit more active. More eager to follow his lead in life. More respectful of his time and goals. Whatever. He has desires and he may even communicate these desires in a direct and thoughtful way.

His wife, on the other hand, has different desires. She has different goals. She wants something in exchange for this type of behavior even if she doesn’t consciously process the interplay in such direct terms. She wants him to be worthy of that type of investment of her time, efforts, energies, and passions. There’s a problem though. The average husband isn’t worthy. He doesn’t command nor does he deserve that type of response. That’s why 50 Shades of Gray was so damned popular.

We’ve established that humans are emotional creatures. We’ve agreed that most men who come here for the first time do so because they have desires which are not being fulfilled. Neither of these statements is controversial. So what do we do with that information? How do our emotions affect the degree to which our needs are met?

Good question so let’s go back to emotions. Most people do not realize the degree to which your emotions affect your behavior until it is too late. There’s an older movie with Michael Douglas where he is pushed, in his eyes, too far and he snaps. He loses control and does a whole lot of crazy shit. That’s an easy (and obvious) example but there are plenty of other examples. Let’s look at a few from the perspective of husband and wife.

Your wife declines sex or provides starfish sex so you become angry about it. Your wife nags at you so you snap back at her. Your wife misbehaves in front of others and disrespects you so you bitch to your buddies about how she is such an ass. In each of these examples, her behavior manipulates your emotions to the point that she is the direct cause of your actions. In simpler terms, she controls how you behave. You are her slave. You are her bitch. She owns you.

THE PROBLEM

This is problematic for several reasons. Why, you ask? First, a man should cannot truly respect himself if he does not rule himself. A man should be able to look himself in the mirror and see that he is his own master. Whatever weakness controls you cannot be hidden forever; it will be found, analyzed, and exploited again and again in life.

The second reason this is problematic is that women do not respect men who they control. That’s why betas don’t get laid. The woman owns him and thus doesn’t desire him. He has become a solved puzzle, a useless toy, and a stale joke. An emotionally controlled man cannot surprise his woman, he cannot woo her, and he cannot generate desire from her. Most women don’t want truly sex from men that they truly own and control. They may still use sex to maintain such control but it almost certainly isn’t the type of sex that the man truly desires.

This is why STFU is one of the first instructions to men who come here. It removes the most obvious and immediate sign that a woman controls the man. We communicate with words and tones and body language so shutting the fuck up is an important first step of limiting the damage.
STFU isn’t the end game though. It’s merely field triage. It’s putting the proverbial finger in the hole in the damn. It doesn’t fix the problem… it just helps you not make the problem worse. Let’s look at a couple of examples of STFU to see what I mean.

First Example

Husband comes home from difficult day of work to a wife that doesn’t welcome him home in any direct or indirect ways. She immediately starts in with a honey-do list and nags about some of his failings. He snaps and gripes back at her about some of her supposed flaws. She wins.

Why does she win? Because she controls his emotions. Her antics manipulated him into a response that he probably didn’t want to actually give. Not many guys drive home thinking “I’m gonna lose my shit at my wife tonight… yeah, that sounds like a good bit of fun!” Nope, she wins because she is miserable in her shitty life (which is almost certainly partially his fault) and thus takes it out on him as a means of spreading the misery.

Second Example

Husband comes home from a difficult day of work to a wife that doesn’t welcome him home in any direct or indirect ways. She immediately starts in with a honey-do list and nags about some of his failings. He sighs in a resigned fashion and listens without much of a response except maybe a muttered apology. She wins.

Why does she win? Because she controls his emotions. Her antics manipulated him into a response that he probably didn’t want to actually give. Not many guys drive home thinking “I’m gonna act like a subdued bitch tonight… yeah, that sounds like a good bit of fun!” Nope, she wins because she is miserable in her shitty life (which is almost certainly partially his fault) and thus takes it out on him as a means of spreading the misery.

See the connection? See how both are different facets of the same control? STFU is great but it’s not a panacea. It’s a tool you overuse temporarily until you master other tools (aka “Frame”) which are better suited to the occasion.

FIXING THE PROBLEM

So how do you fix this? The answer for me was simple yet difficult. You must master your own emotions. Mastery of your own emotions requires real self-awareness, constant vigilance, and a good deal of practice. I’m by no means an expert and so would appreciate it if some MRP vets would chime in on this post.

For me, here’s what helped. First, I’ve read quite a bit. My reading list includes the standard MRP sidebar material (NMMNG, WISNIFG, etc.) plus MA’s Meditations, The Subtle Art..., Boundaries by Cloud, Extreme Ownership, JP’s 12 Rules, and a whole bunch of other stuff. Some of the books were great. Some of the books weren’t. I picked up at least one thing from each.

Second, I started taking the time to self-reflect each day about why I felt the way that I did when something occurred. Most of this centered around my interactions with my wife. I started to dig into and analyze why I responded in the way that I did. My wife threw out some duty starfish so I got butthurt. Why? My wife nagged about a chore I should have done months ago so I pointed out four things she was behind on. Why? I had to stop and really start to think about these things and what really drove me before I could start to master the impulses that grew to make up these emotions.

Third, and perhaps most importantly, I simply decided that I would no longer accept being a slave to my emotions and thus my wife. This seems trite but was pivotal for me. Once I internalized that declaration of intent, it made everything else fit similar to pieces of a jigsaw puzzle snapping into position. My internal repurposing that I would control myself and my emotions was a proclamation that served as the spearhead behind which I improved my life. I’m not talking about positive self-talk. I’m talking about branding an intent upon my soul.

This post isn’t intended to be an instructional post as much as a report on what has worked for me. It’s the realization of one guy on how to get his shit together just a bit more. As such, I’m sure there are things that you would change for you.

So let’s hear them… we are in this together.
The idea behind it is that in nature we see that birds poke and prod on the rhino, it remains unphased. For me, the birds that poke and prod have been thoughts and feelings of insecurity and lack. In my work with the TRP this has been one of the toughest things for me to come to terms with, to get comfortable being uncomfortable and "doing the opposite". Up until recently I would say that I definitely made myself too available to my LTRs (2 years) emotive ups and downs. This typically happened when the lady would get into a mood and I would constantly try to see what was on her mind. Whatever it was, I thought the best route was "communicating" about it, easing her anxiety, for me to be her safe space. However even after we spoke about what was going on in a particular situation, I have had the realization that it wasn't about my genuine care about her or where she was, but about soothing my anxiety through her communicating to me what was on her mind.

Much of the time, what's been on her mind has been innocuous emotions about the day, her own insecurity, etc. I recognize there are times when it is necessary to overtly address issues, and there are times when I have to let things pass and just STFU. However, I found myself having to know what was going on, not because I cared, but due to my own insecurity and need for immediate gratification and soothing.

Sex has never been an issue in the relationship, the frequency and intensity has consistently been on the incline since she was promoted from plate. My thing was to take the dominance from the bedroom, and the DNGAF attitude to our everyday interaction. My turning point was this past weekend when she visited her family, 6 hours away and I didn't hear from her for four days.

I hamstered all weekend, recognized what was going on and just got comfortable with being uncomfortable. This has allowed me to develop rhino skin against not so much my woman's tendencies, but my own insecurities. She got back, and was in a mood of some sort before a meeting we had. I did the opposite and did not play into it. I went to the gym afterwards because as opposed to sitting around and trying to "loosen her up, etc." I focused on investing in myself and fitness goals. Got back from the gym, she was ripe and ready. The quality of sex is a side product of one's focus. The more I focus on myself and follow Pook's 2/3 rule, the more she craves me, does things which overtly communicate her desire for me to fuck her.

To develop the Rhino skin is to maintain frame and be the oak. This experience has been an incredible lesson for me to learn and is why I pass it along.
I read lots of posts here that say stuff like "my SMV is higher than her's" or "I've been lifting, dressing better, etc and she's not responding." And the standard response is "increase your SMV." So this post is intended to boost your SMV a few more points.

So how's your body language?

Are you a slouched-over beta? Or a relaxed alpha with good posture? If the former, let's fix that and add some immediate SMV points, points that the women in your life will notice right away.

Let's start with retracting your scapula (by the way, I just added 5-10 lbs to your bench press, you can thank me later). Pull your shoulders back, drop them down into your back pockets. Feel how your chest just lifted up? Your chin likely did as well. Check out this video for more detail.

So you've retracted your scapula. Good. Now lift your chin a half inch. Hold that. Get used to that. That's your new default. You're a relaxed, confident man.

How's your eye contact? Learn to lock eye contact with people. Here's the dichotomy: an alpha with solid eye contact displays presence, a beta with solid eye contact display creepy. Be present, not creepy.

You're standing up and drinking something (water, soda, beer, whatever)? No "beer shields." Drop that beverage to your waist. You'll stand out from the herd. Look at dudes holding beverages the next time you're out. Drop your's to your waist, people will show an interest in you. Damnest thing, but its true. Try it.

I've mentioned this next one before, but consider the contrapposto as your default stance. I've mentioned it once and one of the guys said, "I don't want to stand around drooped over like some Renaissance painting." Fair enough. But this has become my default, and it stands out from the herd. Plus, it's the ideal masculine stance, according to history, so that's good enough for me.

How about your walk? Your movements? Ssslowww down. Everything. Slow your walk down, slow your movements down, turn your head slower. Don't fidget. Try it, it's fun to walk slow.

How's your Bro Nod? You're displaying alpha traits now, so dudes are going to bro nod you. You've probably already noticed. Well, switch your bro nod from down, up to up, down. This subtle change will help establish dominance. Don't ask me why, just try it.

How warm are you? Not very? Well, smile more. People like people who smile.

How about your sitting posture? Spread out, take up space. You're a big man, and big men need lots of space. Sit back, lean back. Spread your legs. Bonus points if your knees are wider than your feet. I do this in meetings when I get bored. The others will actually defer to you. "Redneck, what do you think?" Try it.

These are just a few cues that you can consider to get an immediate boost in your SMV. Try some of them. Try all of them.

You're smiling right now, aren't you?
I’m still a beginner.

Not a Red Pill Rambo 2nd week “Noob”, but still very new to serious self-improvement. I’m sure this post could be seen as validation seeking, but really it’s to help guys that are in the very, very early stages….like I was a few months ago.

I’ve been reading/lifting/changing diet/getting new clothes/ focusing on me etc...etc..for 3 months or so. I’ve seen improvements in pretty much every aspect of my life. Work is better. My home life is better. I’m in the best shape I’ve been in since I was 20 years younger. I’ve reconnected to my interests. I’ve taken leadership roles in fucked up situations and made real differences in peoples lives. I feel like things are really moving forward in the best possible way. And the only reason ANY of this happened was that I just FOCUSED on self-improvement

MRP attracts guys looking for ways to “get their wife to fuck them”. It won’t work. Abandon that thinking immediately. FOCUS on SELF IMPROVEMENT. It really is that simple. If you are checking over your shoulder constantly to see how your wife reacts to every little thing you do or say, she will smell that weakness 100 miles away. ANYWAY This has all been covered over and over, but I mention it to frame the rest of my story...

So there I was, FINALLY focusing on me. And as I said, things had improved in all areas....EXCEPT SEX. Frequency was still abysmal, but when it did happen I could tell she was more into it. All in all, still pretty pathetic. But I wasn’t really worried about it, and honestly I’m too goddamn busy doing other shit to devote energy into chasing my wife’s attention. Sure, I’m a dude so I get horny ..but a “tension release” session tends to do the trick for a few days. So SOMEHOW I find myself well and truly arriving at a place of OI. NICE! So THAT’S what it feels like!

Then something started changing, Saturday night she initiated out of nowhere. I couldn’t even tell you the last time that happened. At first I didn’t think too much about it, it had been almost a month since we had fucked and it was fun. I just figured she was horny and wanted to scratch the itch. Next day,... I’m back at it... Up early for an 8 mile hike by myself. Things are “back to normal”....or so I thought.

Last night she tells me that she had a nightmare that I was fucking someone else...and that it really upset her. I have two sets of friends divorcing right now and I could see that she was really wanting me to give her a gallon of beta reassurance sauce. I tell ya, the squeaky little Beta in me was SCREAMING to say something. Just FREAKING out that I needed to reassure her and tell her that “she was the only one for me” or some other horseshit. But I didn’t to that bitch. It kind of disappointed me that my gut reaction was to “talk” to her, but I was able to resist easily and was over it quickly.

I just gave her a big hug and kissed her on the forehead. The only thing I said was “I’m sorry you had a bad dream”. I treated it like she was a little girl having a dream about the monster in her closet. Then I made some stupid joke and moved on. She was pretty chatty the rest of the night. She sent some pretty clear sexy time signals later and we ended up having sex. Now THIS was unusual!. A week night AND twice in less than a week! AND it was her initiating! NICE!...Buuuuut. I’m still getting up a 4am to go to the gym. In other words, the train ain’t stoppin’. 3 months ago my wife initiating 2 times in three days would have been unthinkable. It’s cool that I got laid twice in three days, but not as cool as the hike I’m planning for Sunday. I can tell I’m on the right path because of how UNIMPRESSED I am with my "success" in the bedroom. THAT is the real success. In the beginning I thought this was about getting laid more, but it's not at all. Increased sexual desire from the wife is a SIDE EFFECT of self-improvement. NOT A GOAL. It's not even the best side effect.

I’ve started to see the first REAL glimpse of what MRP promises (as it relates to sexual strategy that is). But that promise has become less and less important to me. Planning a trip down the Ozark Highland Trail is WAY more exciting than getting my dick wet has EVER been.

NOW is the time for me to double my efforts at the gym. NOW is the time for me to plan cool shit for the future. NOW is the time for me to focus EVEN MORE on self-improvement.

I’ve been “red pilling” for a few months now. But in some ways I honestly feel like this is day one. Like all the work up to here, was just lacing up my gloves and putting on gym shorts. It’s time to get in the fucking ring.

So the big picture stuff I want to express to the TOTAL beginners. Focus on YOU. NOT her reaction to you. What you are doing could be working on her without you even knowing it’s working. BUT THAT'S TOTALLY NOT THE POINT. The point is.. are YOU seeing improvement in YOURSELF? Are you making goals FOR YOURSELF? Are you making plans FOR YOURSELF?

Again, I’m just restating stuff that has been said over and over in here. But I think it’s a fundamental misunderstanding that a lot of the new guys have, I sure as hell did. It's worth repeating and it's also a good "True North" for anyone that might feel like they are spinning their wheels.

When I first started it used to piss me off that the answer to every question was “LIFT, READ THE SIDEBAR”. I think that’s MOSTLY true, but I would add that you will fail and fail and fail until you focus on self-improvement. Again, sexual desire from the wife or girlfriend or hot chick at the bank is a side effect, not a goal.

Thanks for reading, and thanks to all the guys that kicked my ass in the very early days. I still have a long way to go and a lot to learn.
The Myth of the Alpha Female
by Rollo-Tomassi | August 12, 2018 | Link

Essay:

Excerpt:

The Alpha Female is really the woman who best embodies what men’s evolved, biological imperatives determine what makes her an attractive breeding and long-term mate choice. Men’s criteria is very simple; fitness, youth, assertive sexuality, playfulness, conventional femininity and genuine desire to please him. Beyond this, submission, respect, nurturing (potential mothering qualities), a natural deference to male authority, humility, admiration and an unobligated desire to recognize that man as her complementary partner are just some of the long-term attributes that make a woman someone a man might want to invest himself in a family with.

Unfortunately all of this criteria is counter to the message ‘alpha’ Females are taught are valuable today. They are taught that anything a woman might do for the expressed pleasure of a man is anathema to the Strong Independent Woman® meme. The presumption is that a desire to meet any of this criteria is a failure on the part of a woman who demands to be the ‘equal’ of a man. Even acknowledging the innate, complementary natures of men and women is an affront to the equalist narrative. Furthermore, any man who would base (much less express) his own decision making criteria as such is shamed via social conventions. The narrative is that he must be needy, or threatened by a “strong woman” or he must want this woman to be his Mommy substitute. All of this is a social mechanic meant to force fit that natural complementary criteria into the box of egalitarian equalism.

Value Added

I don’t write for a female readership per se. In fact, I don’t really direct my writing towards any audience, but in this instance I want to end here with a message for my female readers. Take this message to the bank: the sexes evolved to be complementary to each other, not adversarial. But that adversarial feeling you get when you read me describing some unflattering aspect of female nature is the product of your own Blue Pill conditioning that’s taught you the lie of egalitarianism-as-female-empowerment. If you truly want to ‘empower’ yourselves set aside your self-importance, look inside yourselves and ask this question -

What is it about me that a man would find attractive from a naturalistic perspective?

What do I possess that a man would truly believe is Value Added?
That may feel a bit counterintuitive to you, but understand that the reason this introspection is alien or offensive to you is because you’ve been conditioned to believe that your masculine qualities are what men should find attractive about you. You turn this offense back on men and make it their fault for not finding your ‘alpha femaleness’ the root of their attraction to you. Is the idea of changing yourself, to add value to your package, for the pleasure of a man a source of anger for you? Why is that?

I see far too many otherwise beautiful women who destroy themselves on the lie of the ‘alpha’ female and a never ending struggle to perfect an equalist archetype in themselves. They rail on about infantile men, or bemoan that men are afraid to ask them out, or ask “Where are all the good guys nowadays?” Understand that these efforts to shame men into finding something attractive about you based on your masculine criteria for attraction will always fail; leaving you a lonely childless middle aged wreck all because you refused to accept that you need to be someone worth marrying.

Men and women are better together than they are apart. We evolved to be complements to the other. But, feminism, the Feminine Imperative and an endemic Fempowerment culture have taught you to believe “you are enough”, you are complete, you don’t need a man because you can satisfy all of your own needs. This is the most damning lie ever perpetrated on womankind – that you can be it all – and only when it’s too late do women realize that they’ve been had.
Start Small, Change Your World

by anythinginc | August 17, 2017 | Link

The following are the MRP-as-fuck remarks by Naval Adm. William H. McRaven, ninth commander of U.S. Special Operations Command, at the University-wide Commencement at The University of Texas at Austin on May 17, 2014 that I have slightly abbreviated. Frame, AM, OI, DNGAF, shit tests, attitude, vetting, partner adding value, the MRP community, swallowing the pill, always be improving, it is all here, personally, I'm going to start making my fucking bed:

So, here are the 10 lessons I learned from basic SEAL training that hopefully will be of value to you as you move forward in life.

Every morning in basic SEAL training, my instructors, who at the time were all Vietnam veterans, would show up in my barracks room and the first thing they would inspect was your bed. If you did it right, the corners would be square, the covers pulled tight, the pillow centered just under the headboard and the extra blanket folded neatly at the foot of the rack — that's Navy talk for bed.

It was a simple task — mundane at best. But every morning we were required to make our bed to perfection. It seemed a little ridiculous at the time, particularly in light of the fact that were aspiring to be real warriors, tough battle-hardened SEALs, but the wisdom of this simple act has been proven to me many times over.

If you make your bed every morning you will have accomplished the first task of the day. It will give you a small sense of pride, and it will encourage you to do another task and another and another. By the end of the day, that one task completed will have turned into many tasks completed. Making your bed will also reinforce the fact that little things in life matter.

If you can't do the little things right, you will never do the big things right. And, if by chance you have a miserable day, you will come home to a bed that is made — that you made — and a made bed gives you encouragement that tomorrow will be better. If you want to change the world, start off by making your bed.

During SEAL training the students are broken down into boat crews. Each crew is seven students — three on each side of a small rubber boat and one coxswain to help guide the dingy. Every day your boat crew forms up on the beach and is instructed to get through the surfzone and paddle several miles down the coast. In the winter, the surf off San Diego can get to be 8 to 10 feet high and it is exceedingly difficult to paddle through the plunging surf unless everyone digs in. Every paddle must be synchronized to the stroke count of the coxswain. Everyone must exert equal effort or the boat will turn against the wave and be unceremoniously tossed back on the beach.

For the boat to make it to its destination, everyone must paddle. You can't change the world alone — you will need some help — and to truly get from your starting point to your destination takes friends, colleagues, the good will of strangers and a strong coxswain to guide them.

If you want to change the world, find someone to help you paddle.

Over a few weeks of difficult training my SEAL class, which started with 150 men, was down to just 35. There were now six boat crews of seven men each. I was in the boat with the tall guys, but the best boat crew we had was made up of the the little guys — the munchkin crew we called them — no one was over about five-foot-five.

The munchkin boat crew had one American Indian, one African American, one Polish American, one Greek American, one Italian American, and two tough kids from the midwest. They out-paddled, out-ran and out-swam all the other boat crews. The big men in the other boat crews would always make good-natured fun of the tiny little flippers the munchkins put on their tiny little feet prior to every swim. But somehow these little guys, from every corner of the nation and the world, always had the last laugh — swimming faster than everyone and reaching the shore long before the rest of us.

SEAL training was a great equalizer. Nothing mattered but your will to succeed. Not your color, not your ethnic background, not your education and not your social status.

If you want to change the world, measure a person by the size of their heart, not the size of their flippers.

Several times a week, the instructors would line up the class and do a uniform inspection. It was exceptionally thorough. Your hat had to be perfectly starched, your uniform immaculately pressed and your belt buckle shiny and void of any smudges. But it seemed that no matter how much effort you put into starching your hat, or pressing your uniform or polishing your belt buckle — it just wasn't good enough. The instructors would find "something" wrong.

For failing the uniform inspection, the student had to run, fully clothed into the surfzone and then, wet from head to toe, roll around on the beach until every part of your body was covered with sand. The effect was known as a "sugar cookie." You stayed in that uniform the rest of the day — cold, wet and sandy.

There were many a student who just couldn't accept the fact that all their effort was in vain. That no matter how hard they tried to get the uniform right, it was unappreciated. Those students didn't make it through training. Those students didn't understand the purpose of the drill. You were never going to succeed. You were never going to have a perfect uniform.

Sometimes no matter how well you prepare or how well you perform you still end up as a sugar cookie. It's just the way life is sometimes.

If you want to change the world get over being a sugar cookie and keep moving forward.

Every day during training you were challenged with multiple physical events — long runs, long swims, obstacle courses, hours of calisthenics — something designed to test your mettle. Every event had standards — times you had to meet. If you failed to meet those standards your name was posted on a list, and at the end of the day those on the list were invited to a "circus." A circus was two hours of additional calisthenics designed to wear you down, to break your spirit, to force you to quit.

No one wanted a circus.

A circus meant that for that day you didn't measure up. A circus meant more fatigue — and more fatigue meant that the following day would be more difficult — and more circuses were likely. But at some time during SEAL training, everyone — everyone — made the circus list.

But an interesting thing happened to those who were constantly on the list. Over time those students — who did two hours of extra calisthenics — got stronger and stronger. The pain of the circuses built inner strength, built physical resiliency.

Life is filled with circuses. You will fail. You will likely fail often. It will be painful. It will be discouraging. At times it will test you to your very core.

But if you want to change the world, don't be afraid of the circuses.

At least twice a week, the trainees were required to run the obstacle course. The obstacle course contained 25 obstacles including a 10-foot high wall, a 30-foot cargo net and a barbed wire crawl, to name a few. But the most challenging obstacle was the slide for life. It had a three-level 30-foot tower at one end and a one-level tower at the other. In between was a 200-foot-long rope. You had to climb the three-tiered tower and once at the top, you grabbed the rope, swung underneath the rope and pulled yourself hand over hand until you got to the other end.

The record for the obstacle course had stood for years when my class began training in 1977. The record seemed unbeatable, until one day, a student decided to go down the slide for life head first. Instead of swinging his body underneath the rope and inching his way down, he bravely mounted the TOP of the rope and thrust himself forward.

It was a dangerous move — seemingly foolish, and fraught with risk. Failure could mean injury and being dropped from the training. Without hesitation the student slid down the rope perilously fast. Instead of several minutes, it only took him half that time and by the end of the course he had broken the record.

If you want to change the world sometimes you have to slide down the obstacle head first.

During the land warfare phase of training, the students are flown out to San Clemente Island which lies off the coast of San Diego. The waters off San Clemente are a breeding ground for the great white sharks. To pass SEAL training there are a series of long swims that must be completed. One is the night swim.

Before the swim the instructors joyfully brief the trainees on all the species of sharks that inhabit the waters off San Clemente. They assure you, however, that no student has ever been eaten by a shark — at least not recently. But, you are also taught that if a shark begins to circle your position — stand your ground. Do not swim away. Do not act afraid. And if the shark, hungry for a midnight snack, darts towards you — then summon up all your strength and punch him in the snout, and he will turn and swim away.

There are a lot of sharks in the world. If you hope to complete the swim you will have to deal with them.

So, if you want to change the world, don't back down from the sharks.

As Navy SEALs one of our jobs is to conduct underwater attacks against enemy shipping. We practiced this technique extensively during basic training. The ship attack mission is where a pair of SEAL divers is dropped off outside an enemy harbor and then swims well over two miles — underwater — using nothing but a depth gauge and a compass to get to their target.

During the entire swim, even well below the surface, there is some light that comes through. It is comforting to know that there is open water above you. But as you approach the ship, which is tied to a pier, the light begins to fade. The steel structure of the ship blocks the moonlight, it blocks the surrounding street lamps, it blocks all ambient light.

To be successful in your mission, you have to swim under the ship and find the keel — the centerline and the deepest part of the ship. This is your objective. But the keel is also the darkest part of the ship — where you cannot see your hand in front of your face, where the noise from the ship's machinery is deafening and where it is easy to get disoriented and fail.

Every SEAL knows that under the keel, at the darkest moment of the mission, is the time when you must be calm, composed — when all your tactical skills, your physical power and all your inner strength must be brought to bear.

If you want to change the world, you must be your very best in the darkest moment.

The ninth week of training is referred to as "Hell Week." It is six days of no sleep, constant physical and mental harassment, and one special day at the Mud Flats. The Mud Flats are area between San Diego and Tijuana where the water runs off and creates the Tijuana slues, a swampy patch of terrain where the mud will engulf you.

It is on Wednesday of Hell Week that you paddle down to the mud flats and spend the next 15 hours trying to survive the freezing cold mud, the howling wind and the incessant pressure to quit from the instructors. As the sun began to set that Wednesday evening, my training class, having committed some "egregious infraction of the rules" was ordered into the mud.

The mud consumed each man till there was nothing visible but our heads. The instructors told us we could leave the mud if only five men would quit — just five men — and we could get out of the oppressive cold. Looking around the mud flat it was apparent that some students were about to give up. It was still over eight hours till the sun came up — eight more hours of bone-chilling cold.
The chattering teeth and shivering moans of the trainees were so loud it was hard to hear anything. And then, one voice began to echo through the night, one voice raised in song. The song was terribly out of tune, but sung with great enthusiasm. One voice became two and two became three and before long everyone in the class was singing. We knew that if one man could rise above the misery then others could as well.

The instructors threatened us with more time in the mud if we kept up the singing but the singing persisted. And somehow the mud seemed a little warmer, the wind a little tamer and the dawn not so far away.

If I have learned anything in my time traveling the world, it is the power of hope. The power of one person — Washington, Lincoln, King, Mandela and even a young girl from Pakistan, Malala — one person can change the world by giving people hope.

So, if you want to change the world, start singing when you're up to your neck in mud.

Finally, in SEAL training there is a bell. A brass bell that hangs in the center of the compound for all the students to see. All you have to do to quit is ring the bell.

Ring the bell and you no longer have to wake up at 5 o'clock. Ring the bell and you no longer have to do the freezing cold swims. Ring the bell and you no longer have to do the runs, the obstacle course, the PT — and you no longer have to endure the hardships of training. Just ring the bell.

If you want to change the world don't ever, ever ring the bell.

To the graduating class of 2014, you are moments away from graduating. Moments away from beginning your journey through life. Moments away from starting to change the world — for the better. It will not be easy.

Start each day with a task completed. Find someone to help you through life. Respect everyone.

Know that life is not fair and that you will fail often. But if you take some risks, step up when the times are toughest, face down the bullies, lift up the downtrodden and never, ever give up — if you do these things, then the next generation and the generations that follow will live in a world far better than the one we have today.

And what started here will indeed have changed the world — for the better.
Every morning you have a choice
by TrainingTheBrain | December 30, 2015 | Link

You wake up every day with an opportunity to do it better. Each morning you wake up with the choice of Weak or Strong.

It's time to choose Strong and it's past time to make that your habit.

If you do not have enough time in your day to workout, read, pursue your hobby then you are choosing the path of weakness.

The reason being is you could go to bed later or wake up earlier; you manage your time like a pussy and are choosing comfort over necessity.

- Why can’t you wake up at 0400 instead of 0530 (whenever you wake up) so you can get your workout, reading, or writing in?

- Why can’t you write out a meal plan and adhere to it?

- Why can’t you read the posts on TRP & MRP and actual apply them to your situation instead of just reading and then suffering analysis paralysis?

Because you’re weak and you’re used to choosing the path of weakness, it is sad that many husband’s default choice is that of the Weak path.

So Fix It!

I fucking hate when people say they are making a ‘New Year’s Resolution’ as it implies they are waiting to improve themselves instead of taking immediate action and ownership. Since we are wicked close to New Year’s, fuck it, make it a ‘resolution’ or whatever you have to call it, but make a change.

Wake up earlier or go to bed later.

- Will you diminish some of the gains you could make in the gym?

Probably.

- Will the added time allow you to accomplish more goals than you could have otherwise?

Definitely.

I’d rather be a little more sore and maybe a little less shredded if it means I am able to get my blog more active and complete the book I’ve been writing. You do whatever it is you need to get accomplished that you couldn’t otherwise during a ‘normal’ day. Most of you have used up all of your ‘Zero Days’. It’s time to make a change in your default choice making.
Choose the hard path, set that goal and then write down the steps you will be taking to reach it, then take the necessary actions.

If you need a buddy to help with accountability I will do that. I’m looking to create a means of keeping in touch with a few people who have already messaged me. But even a PM back and forth will work. If you need that, message me. If the mods have any ideas to keep guys progressing, tracking, & keeping accountability with others throw it out to the group.

I’m not the most tech savvy guy, but there is a way to do anything. Find out what you want and let’s come up with a game plan to make it happen.

You want to read 30 books this year? Get a visible six pack? Deadlift 400lbs? Write a book?
Fuck your wife in a Target changing room (is that just me?)? Whatever the fuck it is you want, get it out there and fucking Make it Happen.

For further motivation
When I say no, I don’t feel guilty.

I'm an arrogant prick. As such, I skimmed parts of WISNIFG and dismissed it, thinking it had nothing to offer someone who is already assertive. I was wrong.

There is nothing more satisfying to me than pushing people to question their basic beliefs and assumptions. My favorite tool is logic. I relish exposing beliefs that lack internal validity, promoting cognitive dissonance, and ultimately crushing a system of beliefs passed down from family, friends, and society. My friends envisioned for me a career in cult leadership.

Though I have more in common with Tyler Durden than William Osler, I chose a career in Medicine. In medical education, questioning beliefs in this way is lauded. Evaluations of my teaching are among the highest in the faculty, on average, but there was something amiss. The evaluations are either 5/5 or ⅕. I am loved or hated, never average. Why is my teaching a polarizing influence? How can that minority feel intimidated when I am so nice to everyone? Never angry. Never flustered. Always calm, rational, logical. Shouldn't my use of logic be justified? Am I not simply exposing the truth and enlightening the learners?

The answer in the Red Pill

My eyes were opened by one simple, recurring interaction with my wife.

She sat in front of the TV every evening, pointless reality TV, drifting in and out of consciousness, fatigued beyond reason by toddlers and marriage to a husband who works long hours.

Me: We should go to bed.
Her: I want to watch this show.
Me: You complain that you always feel exhausted, that you don't get enough sleep. Now is your chance to sleep. Let's go upstairs.

My wife lay in bed, browsing Facebook posts and Pinterest pins. She’s so tired every day. She complains about it constantly. She knows that she needs 8.5 hours in order to function and be civil.

Me: We should sleep.

These interactions were met with frustration and rage.

I want to watch this show!
Reality TV? That makes no sense when she is constantly complaining of how tired she is.

I don't get any downtime!
More than I get, and didn't she spend an hour on Facebook over the course of the day already?

She's irrational!

STFU and read the sidebar

I finally read through WISNIFG properly, and the light bulb went off. I use logic to manipulate.

My wife’s desires were irrational, but her reaction to me was not. She recognized that she was being manipulated.

Application with my wife

I stopped trying to manipulate my wife into doing anything. Focusing on myself, maintaining a mindset of outcome independence, and giving her the opportunity to follow has worked so much better than trying to change her behavior directly. I'm going to bed. Are you going to join me? I am no longer the boring husband. She seeks attention from me, where previously it was met with annoyance. Since I have become a more attractive, interesting, and positive person, she would rather fuck me than watch reality TV. Coming from a dead bedroom that is no small victory.

Application with other friends and family

I have stopped trying to manipulate the people my personal life with logic, and those relationships have improved.

Application at work

I contemplated changing my behavior when I'm teaching, but it's too much fun. Instead of suppressing it I am upfront about it. They know what they're getting into when they step into one of my lectures or join me on the hospital wards.

TL;DR

Those of us who lack dark triad characteristics have no hope of competing with our wives’ instincts for manipulation. Stop trying to manipulate her thoughts and behaviors directly and you may be surprised by the result. STFU and read the sidebar - that includes WISNIFG whether you like it or not.
Emotion, Not Content

I don’t know where I heard it first, maybe it was Redpill, and maybe it was on the NMMNG boards. But it was a pretty simple statement, the message is the message. This is a corollary to watch her actions, don’t listen to her words.

A recent discussion from a thread had a guy new to MRP lamenting that he got a hard no from his wife. Our hero had done well in owning his shit; he kept OI well enough but failed to see an important clue in his wife’s behavior. Namely, the message is the message.

Two items stick out like a sore thumb. This passage here:

she actually went out of her way to kiss me on the forehead before she headed off to bed last night and said Goodnight?.

And this passage:

Got a "text" from her that next morning while I was lifting that she had sent me an email that she wanted me to read. It was labeled "Trust". 100% hampster. I've checked out the the marriage physically and emotionally...she doesn't want to share anything we me...doesn't Trust me...can't be physical with me if she doesn't Trust me....a dozen examples of where I've failed her and now how she doesn't really even want to talk to me about much of anything except the day-in day out stuff with the kids.

Now I don’t expect our hero to pick up on the subtleties of this yet, he’s fighting for his life right now, so picking up on this is not a big deal.

Mommy make me feel better

My littlest boy is a quiet, trepidatious kid. He’s nervous about doing things like riding his bike or scooter, so when he makes a mistake he tends to get really embarrassed. The other day he was riding his bike, not paying particular attention and ran into a parked car in the drive way. No harm was done but the neighbor across the street saw and started laughing. My son immediately got up and ran crying to his mom. When he’s hurt, mentally or physically, he runs to mom for validation. So she did what she always did. She asked him, “What’s wrong baby?”

He spewed out what embarrassed him and she promptly kissed him on the forehead and dismissed him. Her actions were simple. She validated him and sent him on his way. Her words were one thing, “Ohh baby... what’s wrong... I know. Feel better...” but her actions were different; move along...

In the second passage, our hero receives a text directing him to go to an email. Again, my favorite pet peeve, text and email are for logistics. I say again, text and email are for logistics. Our hero’s wife gives him a heartfelt email delving in to the deep crevices of her fee-fees about how she can’t trust him, how he’s failed her, yada yada yada. If we go back to the original postulate, the message being the message on its surface her message isn’t clear. But if we step back and look at it, the message starts to clear up. Here she says, “I want to control the medium; I want to decide when and how to communicate.

Where does this come from? Maybe the winds of change are becoming obvious to her. Maybe she’s checked out of the marriage and this whole email was the equivalent of “I love you but I’m not in love with you,” (it is by the way).

So if we go back to the hero’s story and look at it for what it is, the reality becomes very clear. Her message is clear, I’m not invested in this marriage. She’s trying to let him down easy.

What is a hero to do when in these situations? First of all be cognizant of the messages at hand. When your wife gives you a peck on the forehead let that seethe into you, and be a motivator to push the iron at the gym and pencil in the right hand of the ledger.

Leadership is tackled head-on

The second one is a bit more serious and really comes from a lack of leadership. If your wife is so fed up with you, and so disgusted by your actions that she writes you an email, an actual dear John letter to tell you how much you disgust her, you’ve got some major problems that need an immediate reset.

In this case or any for that matter, all emails or texts of the like should be refused upon receipt. “I don’t talk about serious marriage issues over email.” Full stop. She may hamster and try to rationalize why she needs to do this, but again that’s just her controlling the means of communication and therefore controlling the message. The correct answer here is, “If you want to have big girl discussions, we will have it face to face. If it’s that important to you for me to address it I expect the courtesy to do it face to face.”

Here she complains about trust and this stems from his lack of leadership. Her words were one thing but reality is she doesn’t trust him through years of inaction to do what he needs to do.

He could have got her past her hamster by giving her an out, “bring the email and read it to me if you need to.”

In the end he had another failure of frame. He kowtowed to her email temper tantrum and replied to it with “noted and received”, aka I accept your frame. Reality is if he pushed her to tackle these things head on, pushed her out of her comfort zone, he may have started to restore a little of that trust.

I don’t mean for this to be a punishment of him or scolding him for his actions, he’s new and still learning. More so, it is a reminder for those Journeymen of Married Redpill to watch her actions and remember the message is the message.
FR: Strategic Application of Rambo
by discobolus_ | August 11, 2017 | Link

With the school year and football season being at the doorstep, my family's schedule is about to fill up in a big way. But right now, we're kind of in the no man's land where summer trips and activities have wrapped up, but the new year of school & sports hasn't quite started. This lull makes it easy for me to not be on my game. Lazy evenings & weekends....I've been spending a lot of unnecessary time side by side with wife. Running errands together and shit like that. I like being around her, so it's just fine with me. And I know that in two weeks, between my coaching schedule and her work schedule, we won't cross paths very often. But lately it's been a near nightly thing....and it kills attraction.

The incident that led me to this conclusion was another night of lackluster sex. It had been a nagging frustration over a couple of weeks, and last Friday I was finally fed up. Over these few weeks of frustration, wife is always DTF, but it's kind of vanilla. Seems like she's just happy to let me fuck her. It's not starfish, but it's not exactly hot either. I got irritated with it on Friday, and decided I had been getting soft with my Merping. Too much beta comfort. Too much attention given. So Saturday, I decided to sprinkle in what tends to be misclassified as Rambo over in askMRP

In the morning, I got up early to read. When wife got up and asked her usual "what are you doing" questions, I took my book out to the deck and closed the door. I spent the morning ignoring my wife. Took my boys out to play Pokemon for most of the late morning. Told my wife what to do for lunch when we got back. We had to drive into another town to drop off my daughter's friend. I just STFU the entire drive. No conversation, nothing. Put a podcast on my headphones. Each time wife tried to talk to me, I treated it like an Are you paying attention to me? test. I'd usually answer them with "Can this wait? I actually really want to listen to this" or a look that said "bitch, this better be important".

Wife's Are you paying attention to me? tests intensified, to the point where she's muttering to the kids about how she doesn't know why I'm mad at her. She says "Why can't you just be nice to me!?!!" all throughout the day. We finished up our jaunt and start heading home. Again, STFU mode the whole way back. We get home and I tell her what to make for dinner. I head outside and hang out for a bit while I burn some trash.

After I finish up the burn, I walk in to the house for dinner, and wife seemed to have resolved to get that goddamn attention she wasn't getting in the car. She's throwing herself at me hard. Like those hugs you'd get from a clingy high school girlfriend where her arms choke you as you try and escape the PDA. Grinding her pussy on my knee when I sit down. I tell her how she needs to compose herself so I can eat. After dinner, she hurries the kids off to bed, I have a beer. I walk into the bedroom and start tearing her clothes off....she urgently climbed on rode hard until we both finished. Then....the kicker for the night....she says "See what kind of sex you get when you're finally nice to me?" HA! At no point leading up to sex was I ever behaving differently to her. I'm "nice" because she was starved for attention, and finally at the end of the day, she got that attention...in the form of a hard dick.
Anyway....lessons here that I take away:

1. In comments, we see a lot of "an alpha does what the fuck he wants to do". And this is true. However, the act of simply "doing what the fuck I want" does not make a person alpha, or attractive. "Do what you want" = "Just be Yourself". An alpha doing what he wants is usually doing attractive, alpha things. And a beta doing what he wants to do is usually doing beta things. It doesn't make beta behaviors attractive just because the beta behavior is something you want to do. So while I enjoy spending 'hang out' time with my wife, walks with her, grocery trips with her - all things I'm perfectly happy to do - they are still panty driers. Even if I do them while passing shit tests and being awesome, they are still beta.

2. Sometimes I forget about that basic idea of my attention being the most valuable currency I have. As I've moved through this mrp 'program', I have done a lot of work on the internal game side of things. Aligning myself and my family toward something resembling a mission. Becoming comfortable with being my own mental point of origin. Recognizing the rationalizations and thought processes that sabotage me. Essentially, being aware of myself. I've done all of this. I own my shit. I pass shit tests. I game my wife and get the chest-slap-&-smile "asshole" comment twice a day. I'm tall, strong, and fit. I'm the fucking Oak, and it's an internalized natural state of being for me now. But all of this just sets the table. If I'm all of the things we pat ourselves on the back about over in OYS, that's great. Usually it makes for better life quality. Makes you a more valuable partner to potentially lose. But without some ratcheted up dread, your wife just gets complacent with the more awesome version of you. The Oak still needs to pull back on the attention to cultivate some urgency, even if the wife is generally well behaved.

3. Don't fear Rambo. It's become a peeve of mine that the Rambo term is invoked over in askMRP every time a wife reacts negatively to a Merper's changes. All the new guys say "I don't want to go Rambo" like it's a cliff they are afraid to fall off of. But despite my objections, a word only means what it is understood to mean. So if Rambo is now being defined as removing beta comfort to a point that the wife is made uncomfortable, then guys can't be afraid of going Rambo. If you live in the Rambo zone for too long, that's going to wear on a wife. But if you fear ever hitting the Rambo point, and take everything sloooowly, the wife never gets the wake-up call. She just gets accustomed to life with an ever improving husband. Learn to use Rambo and control him.....he can be used to advance your goals.
This was what my wife said to me on Wednesday.

"I don't know what it is... I just want to serve you."

She felt odd saying it but I could tell she had felt it for some time. It was a relief for her to finally admit something that most of people in our East Coast city ("progressive" but totally repressed & blooped) would crucify her for saying. We were sitting down at our favorite pub, and we had just come from a couples session. I don't think I'd recommend couples counseling but I'd invited her to come with me to my counselor a few times because she's been broken up about the 7 ONS's I had last year.

I broke that news to her 6 weeks ago. At that time it was exactly 1 year since the first ONS, and exactly 2 years since I found MRP. The first year was a frameless grind: improving money, looks, social status. The 2nd year was all about building frame based upon those routine improvements.

When they ask you here "What's your mission?", it shouldn't be about your wife at all. It should be a life mission that she can be a ridelong if she chooses. This isn't RP - it's MRP - and so you should have a purpose to your significant relationships, especially your wife. My wife is my ride-or-die, my social advocate, my private counsel, my financial partner, and I've made it clear to her that she is my primary lover. Not my only option, but my go-to. I've lived the last year in tune with what one commentor said on my one year post:

she'll want to be head slut in your harem.

But first, a YMMV caveat. My wife had absolutely no response to DL 1-10. The milelong chain was all slack until I told her, "Things were getting tired between us, so I went on a date with Natalie." or when I got multiple girl's numbers in front of her, or when her co-worker felt me up. I usually engage in DL 11, 12 or 13 on a quarterly basis. Call it 3D chess, YMMV. She actually thanked me for having ONS's out of town.

So on to the point of this post. About 16 months ago she confided that she has a FFM threesome fantasy. Which a lot of men here said is a trick to push an eventual MFM or a universal get out of jail free card for whatever she wants "I gave you a threesome with Shelly so I don't have to ________". And I too thought this can't be real so I'm here to reveal a RP truth in FFM clothing.

Let me catch you up on the last 16 months: lots of FFM roleplaying, tons of FFM porn, talking about girls we meet, but we've yet to have a threesome. This is my fault/choice. I sense the dynamite here and it sounds fun but I had no idea how to play with it. And frankly, it's logistically easier to just have ONS's on the road while exploring a FFM at home. I understand now that my wife is not sexually expressive (your typical good girl in Practical Female Psychology) but "women can't be prudes, only men." If you know anything about RP, you know that it's 100% up to the man to provide a safe place for her to explore a FFM fantasy.

So here's the RP lesson when it comes to a threesome fantasy. For the last week, all of our sex has been initiated by her and she wants FFM roleplay each time using a ONS as the "other girl". She asks me to look the other girl up online (op-sec be damned), stares at their face and body, and slides her pussy on my cock, imagining she's face sitting on the other girl's tongue til she cums.

How is this fantasy logical? Welcome to the dark, hidden side of sex. Dudes are out front with their cocks in their hands, thinking logically about how to get a FFM. Women's sex organs are on the inside and they are feeling their way thru sex, exploring like it's a dream state, seemingly random desires pop up and make them feel good or bad. Our minds are the most powerful sex organ (read SGM). So the question isn't about what her pussy wants - pussy is a tool - what does her brain stem want? The answer is that she wants to win the competition, something I've felt thru her response to dread and now she has explicitly said to me.

6 weeks ago, when I revealed that I'd been "having a cross country fuck tour" (her hilarious choice of words not mine) she then fucked for me 72 hours straight saying, "I can't explain why I'm so horny" but today she can and here's why. When I got a big titty THOT's number in front of her co-workers, or told her I went on a date with a Russian blonde, she got wet as fuck because she gets competitive. Men compete differently, we don't get a boner if our wife flirts with another dude - at least not MRP men - we'd dump her on the spot without so much as a wiggle in our pants.

My wife's pussy is a gladiator. When it sees a beautiful woman saddling up next to me, it greases itself in war paint and challenges her to a duel. That's what a FFM fantasy is for her, it's about the other woman far more than me. I mean yes she's wet because my cock needs to slide into her eventually (read: I am the prize she fights for) but the function of the FFM fantasy for her is that she wants to defeat the other set of tits and be powerful. Case in point, her fantasies always follow this storyline:

1. Facesitting on other woman (her dominating)

2. Me fucking the other woman (me dominating)

3. Me cuming in my wife (wife wins)

I'm a total noob in threesomes (obviously) so I should throw out there that threesomes and sex in general is about many different things to different people, but they follow basic power dynamics. For example the Unicorn in this situation is not going to "win" in the same way as the wife, but she definitely needs some pay-out and it's probably about power: power to tempt, being dominated, etc.

Okay that's all for today. The real FR will be when I have a threesome. Who the fuck wants to read a FR about thinking about lighting the dynamite? Yesterday after counseling wife showed me an online profile she's made to find another girl, and tonight we're going on vacay for 4 days and her fantasies always explode on the road. Onward.
Suspect wife is starting emotional affair
by justthenewman | December 14, 2016 | Link

Gentlemen, I'm in a dire need of advice. Recently I wrote a post about mate guarding possibly being a good thing at times. It seems I have been dead wrong.

Background: Married 5yrs. Ltr 10. No kids. We basically grew up together through high school and college. Pre red pill - sex 1 time/week. Lots of drama, spiralling into oblivion.

Wife very emotional, impetuous. 8 when she makes an effort. 0 sex partners before me (well, at least that's what she said).

Lifting 1y+. Red pill apprentice 3rd month in. WISNIFG, NMMNG, PFPFPM done, MMSLP in progress.

Body: Me, wife and mister X work at the same company (Working with wife is wrong, I am aware, pre red pill decision), different departments. Usually don't see her during the day. At the company bash I got drunk and approached X after he's been talking to wife for an hour. Told him I didn't like the way they talked. At the end of the party bumped him, he almost fell. I ranked him at similar SMV to mine but now I think he might be a bit better built, tatoos, hobbies somiliar to ms justthenewman. Next day had passionate sex and everything looked exceptionally good compared to my gut feeling.

Next month was a bliss. Wife was really SWEET and I got laid multiple times despite she was sick and then on period (pre red pill 0 sex when she had any excuse). We started experimenting for the first time in years. We had a lot of fun. I had a first unsolicited backrub ever. Lots of compliments all the time (you're now so big, i like your stomach, lots of touching etc). Lots of affection, she comes to cuddle all the time.

Also been out to see boys few times for a night, had a blast. Focused on my career and I expect a promotion. Reading, diet, hobbies on track.

I think I missed some comfort tests but did well on shit tests.

All of a sudden wife starts dressing better. Make up and hairwork. Sex is great. I feel great. She is like a little kitten. I see the light in the tunnel. Life is great.

Then all of a sudden cracks appeared.

- she took her phone out of my hand when I grabbed it once (we shared them often) nervously
- noticed she logged out of work mail (never did that) . Being paranoid I tried to login and found out she changed password
- we play tabble football at work. Colleague invited me once and I came last. X and wife there. Ahe looked shocked and was playing nervously. It was weird.
- when she was bathing I looked through her phone. Long chat history with X, just got few sentences.

X "wow i didnt make anything to make you upset?" W "not yet"

He proposed to make her a cake. Her reply: "mr newman would kill me if he knew you made me a cake"

Also some personal info. Too much personal info.

I found out they swapped books. She put a piece of paper on his book while it was on her desk at home. At home when i asked what book is that she said she borrowed. Casually asking from who I got uneasy "X"

Today I took a day off because I was giving a lecture. Wife insisted, supposedly so I could prepare.

And guess what. My bro tells me they ate a cake together at caffeteria. Alone. Usually when someone brings cake many people share it.

That's not fucking ending. Employees went out in the evening to play board games. She said she will go with me to the lecture but last minute decided to go gaming. Bro confirms her and X come early and play one on one.

Bonus: Mr X is married, this June apparently.

Even though we spend 95% time together I cannot rule out cheating. Window is small but exists. Last sex 2 days ago, didn't observe decline, she's eager and receptive. Cuddles, talkative, sweet. Does lotta chores.

It seems she is actively trying to spend time with him. Keeps it secret.

I'm preparing to get full chat history and will act based on that. I feel like going nuclear is highly possible.

I don't see how I can save it right now. Maybe you will. Don't know if it's worth it. We don't have kids. I feel like she woke up when I surpassed her SMV. She responded quickly and here we are.

UPDATE

Asked her if anything nice happened in work. She said no and presented detailed review of her day and ommited the cakey-tingly-girly-thingy. I take that as a DIRECT lie in the face. She didn't blink.

UPDATE 2

OP here. Got the logs.

No overt signs of isolation or getting physical, but lots of nasty stuff.
He suggested to drive her back home when I had day off, points out he lives close to us (how does he know where we live? Jesus). She refused, because I set this up with reliable coworker before.

She wrote she 'had so much hassle to get out of going to my husbands lecture so we could get to play board games', he responds 'for me? I'm flattered'.

One sexual comment about the content of the comic book they swapped. He says that 'fucked up stuff gets him going.'

Generally - he pushes, she does not remove herself. Lies, manipulation and flirtiness. Personal details.

Gentlemen, decision has been made. I'm off to see the lawyerino. Will be back.
FYI - the MRP sidebar is now also on the wiki by weakandsensitive | July 20, 2019 | Link wiki link is https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/wiki/index.

this should make it easier for those of you who are charitable enough to point newbies to the sidebar.
My wife turned me down for sex, then got angry when I didn't care...

by 1Who Watches | January 10, 2016 | Link

Last night, I made a move, she said she hadn't showered and that we could today after she took a shower. I said "OK cool" and went to sleep.

Today after her shower, she was getting dressed and I walked in. She immediately said no. I simply replied "If you don't want me to own your body for a few minutes, fine by me" and I started to walk back to my office.

She shoots back angrily "Don't act like you don't care!" I simply said "I really don't."

About 23 seconds later she is in my office, rubbing my cock, kissing me and still telling me no...LOL. Women are so confused.

Edit: I'm convinced that if I had flinched here or shown any sign of a complaint, she would have walked away. She was watching my face very close!

Long story short, she pulls me back to the bedroom by my crotch, takes her clothes off, sucks me for awhile...and we finish up.

I was very affectionate AFTER for the next few hours. I'll continue giving attention for the rest of the day. This shit works.
At the request of /u/BluepillProfessor, I’ve moved this saga over here from /r/askMRP.

Without a doubt, this is victim puke; my situation and the script I followed to get to MRP is in no way unique but I’m using this to identify a bunch of covert contracts and some red pill lessons in hindsight. Writing things out helps me self-audit and if it was important enough for me to write it for myself, I might as well get some peer review. What did I miss? Where are the holes? I’m picking through my puke to look for clues as to WTF I ate that made me sick in the first place. Get ready to cringe. As this is my second ever posting on Reddit, mistakes will be made with formatting. I’ll take my knocks and learn by doing.

Contents

- Calibration and Correlation
- Background
- Oneitis and College
- The Southwest
- The Rockies
- The West Coast
- The PNW
- The Tipping Point and Finding MRP
- Starting Stats at the Beginning of My MAP

Calibration and Correlation

Throughout this post, I’ll frequently describe my wife’s actions. Applying concepts from NMMNG and WISNIFG means decoupling my judgement of myself from her judgement of me, but as is frequently stated around here, she is a reflection of me and filling the container I provide. I have consciously not adjusted my MAP in response to her actions, but observing her response to my changes and using that data as feedback has been effective when refining my tactical actions. I’m not doing anything specifically so she will fuck me, but when she does fuck, I pay attention to what I did that worked. I am mindful of her macro response because eventually it will be her response (or lack of) to my action that determines if I continue my married relationship with her.

Background

As much as I’d like to be a former drunk captain, I’m a career beta when it comes to women. I’ve always been “alpha as fuck” among my male friends (leader of activities, captain of sports teams, organizer of trips, etc.). But, with women (and girls) since early elementary school, I was the textbook Nice Guy. I had a few very hot girlfriends in Highschool, but I was too “respectful” of them (I was too much of a pussy) to do anything past third base, so nothing ever lasted long. Interestingly, I was never able to date a girl at my own school, only girls from other schools. [RED PILL LESSON] It’s clear now that I was initially attractive and mysterious, but once they spent some time with me and experienced my supplicating ways, it turned out that I was also unattractive and had zero game—just a beta who was pleasant to look at (facepalm). I literally ripped off the crux moves from many teen-romance, nice-guy-gets-the-hot-girl movies and tried to pull that shit with girls I liked. How’s that for some shit to own? Of course I got rejected and would “make some (other) girl really happy one day.” [RED PILL LESSON] looking back, it was a huge cover contract and I was enraged at the time; it’s too funny to hold any anger over.

Oneitis and College

The week after graduation, I made out with the hottest girl in my group of friends, who I’d had a crush on since freshman year, a month later we had sex (first for both of us). Then we fucked every day for the next few months. It was awesome. [RED PILL LESSON] I realized that during that time, I was definitely the AMOG and drove the party train among my social group all summer. I was a state-champion swimmer and working as a lifeguard so I was tall, jacked, and tan, I likely had a lot of preselection and dread going because I worked with a bunch of young hotties. But because of my definite oneitis, I didn’t realize any of that. I also remember never explicitly defining what would happen at the end of the summer when we went to different colleges. I never defined my commitment because I was scared of facing the reality of “losing” her, but she probably saw it unconsciously that I wasn’t committing and she could earn it with sex.

We went to separate colleges, me away and her in town, but continued to be exclusive and during visits home we would fuck like crazy, all ways, all places, all times. She would borrow friends’ clothes and dress slutty for our dates. [RED PILL LESSON] She didn’t know WTF I was up to when I was out of town and probably hamstered all sorts of things. In fact, during one of my blue-pill victim pukes while trying to negotiate some sex later in life, she said she was scared that I wouldn’t like her if we didn’t have a bunch of sex in those days.

After a year, she transferred to my college and even into my same major. Now that we were around each other ALL THE DAMN TIME, sex dropped off to once per week with all the usual excuses that old married women use. Sex became starfish nearly all the time and she didn’t like to do 80% of the moves I like any more. I LOVED eating pussy (I still do) and that suddenly felt weird to her. She suggested we move in under the promise that we could do “stuff” without the roommates hearing so of course I was in, but in reality nothing changed. I bought lingerie for her that never got worn, I planned dates that got shit on, all the usual stuff. [RED PILL LESSON] I now know that it’s because she saw that I was whipped and she had nothing to dread. I kept telling myself that having THIS girl locked down was better than dealing with the dating scene. At the time, it probably was better because I had no game and completely backwards training.

The Southwest

We graduated and got jobs at the same company then bought a house together. Seeing it as the easy path, I gladly relinquished control of our finances to her. We combined accounts and I had to start asking permission to spend my money on my hobbies. We made plenty though so it was rare that my request for funds allocation was denied. [RED PILL LESSON] Even though the actual resources weren’t scarce, the power she gained when I felt I had to ask permission to spend my own money was crippling, but I didn’t realize it at the time.

Under the excuse of “professionalism”, she started dressing more androgynous, bordering on masculine, and stopped wearing makeup. She made sex promises that were instantly forgotten. I did the usual, ask-beg-wish for change, smother her in attention, did a shitload of chores, and pouted. I still had my hobbies and social group though, and they were adventurous. [RED PILL LESSON] I didn’t workout but my activities were physical, usually competitive, and kept me from getting fat, so that’s likely what kept any hint of attraction.

At this point, I’m a couple years in and was crushing my young career and she was doing well but indifferent [RED PILL LESSON] I don’t think she actually likes our degree field but she followed me through it because aside from interacting with her, I’m a natural leader. I got some IOI from some cute little interns, but oneitis aside, I knew better than to mess with women at work.

I proposed (of course thinking sex would increase...), we got married. On our honeymoon, we had sex once per day and then not again for a couple weeks after. This set me off more than I could self-soothe with pouting and I doubled down with the angry unattractive behavior. We had talks, lots of talks. [RED PILL LESSON] Actions, not words.

The Rockies

A few years into my career, I decided my current company was holding me back and to get a better job at another company in another state. She was on board and did the same. [RED PILL LESSON] I remember the sex picking up drastically during my job hunt, probably because I suddenly had a mission for myself and wasn’t focusing on her. I got my new job and moved first after preparing our house for sale, she stayed in town until our house sold. I secured a house to rent and set up all the utilities. I immediately made a new social group in my new state and started doing all kinds of fun shit, basically living like a bachelor except without the dating. During these couple months, our visits included lots of sex and me taking her on adventures with all my new friends. [RED PILL LESSON] Apparently handling your own shit like a Captain is attractive.

When the old house sold and she joined me, she “earned her keep” by cooking, cleaning, and fucking. I liked it and joked about living in the 1950’s but as soon as she got a job, we were “equals” again so all that stopped. Having no kids yet, we were still very social and she made friends with the wives of all my friends. I was still the organizer and social driving force behind nearly all of our activities. I started a band with some friends and the whole crew would come to our gigs and have a blast. But [RED PILL LESSON] my supplicating, pussy-whipped behavior toward my wife neutralized any of my AMOG tingles.

A year or so later, my company hired an intern that looked just like my wife looked at her hottest in college. Girl Intern (GI) and I had some instant mutual attraction, some cocky/funny natural game emerged from somewhere, and we started flirting heavily. Sex with the wife had dropped off to 3x per month, and despite knowing better, I consciously decided I was going to cheat on my wife with GI. So I engaged my plugged-in training, dropped my natural flirty game and started spraying GI with ffeeeeelings and whining about how pathetic my current sex life was. I was immediately friendzoned and she used the shit out of my orbiting resources. No sex was ever had. [RED PILL LESSON self evident].

There I was, 30 years old, the lead engineer of an elite team known among our portion of the industry for kicking all the ass, all the time, and I owned that shit. I’m making a lot of money, intellectually stimulated, and developing at a rapid rate. I hadn’t heard the phrase “Iron sharpens Iron” until MRP, but that’s exactly what was happening at work. But I was still “following the rules” and frustrated as shit with my married sex life. My team would deploy to work on-site for projects at various places around the country, and we would go out and live it up at the local bars. I remember getting plenty of IOI from the local ladies with my natural DHV among my peers, and a couple times I engaged, coming awfully close to the line, but my commitment to honor my wedding vows kept my balls blue. I’d come home, get a trickle of starfish sex, and convince myself that this was my lot in life. Around this time, I got an iPhone, discovered online porn, and started fapping nearly any time I was alone. Feeling desperate, I suggested we start trying for a kid, knowing that one must have sex in order to become pregnant. Of course she agreed. [REDPILL LESSON] When women hit 30, they also want kids, especially if they’re in a situation with guaranteed resources. She dropped the pills, we fucked a few times, she wore lingerie once, and then boom- the Dr. said we were in love. Sex tapered off again due to prego exhaustion and actual vomiting and I was sympathetic.

The West Coast

About this time, a former VP of my current company started poaching my team. Some of my guys and I got (very lucrative) offers to air-drop into a struggling startup company with some obvious potential. It was another out-of-state move and exciting. I took the offer and moved within 2 weeks. Again, my wife stayed to finish up her current work commitments and assist with the sale of the house. I lived like a frat boy in a fancy, company-subsidized house with a bunch of my friends / coworkers. We repeated the cycle of work-drink-sleep for a couple months straight and it was glorious. I took a trip to visit the wife a few times (and had a bunch of sex because [RED PILL LESSON] she missed me), then back to pack up all our shit and drive it out when the house sold. During this time, again with no input from her, I secured a house for us to rent, set up utilities and all that. When she arrived, I had a whole crew of new friends (whom she’d never met) to get our shit out of the truck and into our new place. [RED PILL LESSON] Having bros who’ll happily help you move is a pretty good DHV.

We sold our old house, which was our only debt, and my job paid well. We have always both embraced living in a non-extravagant way so even with one income, we built our savings. Since she would soon be having our kid, and the plan we’d come up with was for her to not take a job, she didn’t. She spent the days lunching with the wives of my friends (AKA the “work widows”) and nesting in our new place. I was still on the intense work pace, but we had sex nearly every night for a couple months. During one of her prego checkups, the Doc advised us not to put anything in her cooter for a few weeks and gave an actual reason. Without me asking, my wife started giving hand and blow jobs nearly every night. Aside from our early dating months, I had received (and asked for) zero BJs. Shortly after she was cleared for action again and PIV sex returned. [RED PILL LESSON] Nesting is beta, but handling your own shit like a Captain is still attractive, especially when you have a mission.

A note on some of my habits during this period: In order to keep up the pace (or at least that’s how I rationalized it) at this job and the last, I ingested 5-7 cans of caffeinated soda per day and was constantly snacking on gummy candy. I dressed down in an attempt to identify with and close the social gap between myself and the mechanics who were executing my designs. I did no exercise and dropped nearly all my active hobbies. My coworkers and I would eat out and drink a lot of craft beer nearly every day after work. I had never heard the term “skinny-fat”, but that’s what I was.

Kid 1 is born and I shift into Super Dad mode, deacon in the Cult of Child and my wife steps right into the Martyrdom of Motherhood. I couldn’t boost her up into the Captain’s seat fast enough. You know, because that’s what you do when you’re plugged in. I dropped all my hobbies and stopped hanging out with my friends after work. Things get a little fuzzy in my memory here, probably because of all the booze, lack of sleep, and general chaos a newborn brings to first-time parents. “Frame” wasn’t a concept for me yet and I had no vision other than “get through work, get through dinner, get through bedtime, get rejected for sex, do it again tomorrow”. I frequently lost composure and deeply regret some of the things I muttered to my infant son. [RED PILL LESSON] With no social outlet, hobbies, or exercise to consume my energy (which I thought I didn’t have), I became very angry. You need outlets and you need a mission. Work became my outlet and I would go there to “hide” instead of spending my time at home with the wife and kid. Since the wife was getting her dopamine and oxytocin from the kid and my “sacrifices” to provide don’t matter in Marriage 2.0, suddenly I was suddenly a shitty husband and a shitty dad. [RED PILL LESSON] She is a reflection of me and she was fucking right; I was a whiny-angry-man-child who happened to be very good at one facet of life, which she never saw first-hand. Obligation sex was had every couple weeks, usually preceded by an afternoon of me clinging and hinting and an hour of massage once she gave in. [RED PILL LESSON] Desire isn’t negotiated and doubling down on beta behavior makes things worse.

My wife now had motivation to go out and make a bunch of mommy friends instead of hanging out with the “work widows”, so her social life skyrocketed. I tagged along and had shallow, distracted, fragments of conversation with the other dads, while quick-stepping to fetch whatever the wives ordered and pack-muleing around all the shit that outings with kids require. We were all the dopey caricatures of dads on TV, just chuckling it off when the wives rolled their eyes and plucked the fussing baby from us when we demonstrated our incompetence with whatever natural parenting magic mommies use. Mommies always think they know what’s best for everyone. In hindsight, I’m certain all those dudes were exactly as frustrated as I was, but we put on a great show. [RED PILL LESSON] “Happy wife = happy life” is just not the way things work.

I was at least self-aware enough to realize how dependent I had become on the sugar and caffeine from all the soda I drank, so one day I stopped it cold-turkey. That was one of the toughest self-discipline exercises I may have ever done. In the past 5 years, I’ve had less than 10 sodas. Luckily there was beer, so I ramped up my beer drinking from a pint or two per night to 4-6 each night during the week and a constant stream after noon on the weekends. I paid no attention to my weight or physique so I really can’t quantify the effect, but passing out sure made skipping sex easier. [RED PILL LESSON] More beer = less sex. At the wife’s suggestion, we started camping again, which was something we hadn’t done in a few years due to busy work schedules, pregnancy, and other excuses. I wanted to enjoy the experience, but of my own accord, I spent the entire time stressing about creating perfect conditions for the wife and kid. I tried to predict and mitigate any risk that might cause us to deviate from the ideal experience. The outings were exhausting for me and boring for everyone else. [RED PILL LESSONS] These were huge covert contracts and perfect is boring.

This shitty, stressful, sexless, miserable, day-to-day existence wasn’t getting better, but it also wasn’t getting worse. Then one day my company was acquired by a major competitor and the startup-lotto paid off. It wasn’t the jackpot we’d all been promised when we were issued our stock options, but it was a nice windfall and we all still had jobs in the new organization. I wasn’t particularly stoked about becoming a worker bee for the new company though, so in one of the very low moments of my betadom, I asked my wife for permission to find a new job. There were no alternatives in our small town, so I started looking in one of the larger cities we had found attractive earlier in life. In a couple weeks, I had some interviews, got an offer, and put in my notice to resign. Together we took a trip to find a house to rent, bickered the whole time, and finally compromised on one she liked but I was lukewarm about. I handled all the utilities setup, but proudly presented my basic adult achievements to her for approval. In the past, we’d always self-moved with rented trucks. She made piles, I packed boxes, I loaded and unloaded the truck, and she unpacked and nested. She arranged the move this time and it was a shit show. I basically did all the labor while she occupied our son, but we ran out of boxes and the POD she hired didn’t fit everything so she had to order a second at the last minute. [RED PILL IN-JOKE] TRP constantly jokes about women being terrible judges of the physical size of things. It’s true, even STEM women.

The PNW

I started my latest job, which I am completely satisfied with. But, being a family man now, I passed on the invitations for after-hours comraderie with the other young guys. This was a huge mistake and fixing it is a major part of my MAP. Being in a new town, new job, and engaging none of my hobbies meant my only social contact was my kid and wife. And the cashier at the beer store; I saw her frequently. I instinctually knew having no local friends was a problem, so I grabbed a tiny bit of my balls and told my wife I was going to find a band to join, then asked “would that be OK?” I eventually did, and the twice-per-week bro-time was a godsend. It was also a new mission and I spent many hours after the wife and kid went to bed practicing and learning songs. I still felt I needed to ask permission to use my time and spend my money. I constantly thanked her for “letting” me be in a band and have a hobby. The wife again found a bunch of mommies to become friends with and I tagged along, joking with the other dads about how we don’t have any time to any of the shit we like. They were all clearly envious that I was allowed to be in a band. [RED PILL LESSON] You need a goddamn hobby!

Being in a new town, making new friends, all that other new stuff was stimulating and keeping the wife from being bored, so sex picked up a little bit to once per week. I was still begging for it and doing lots of choreplay and she was using all the typical excuses.

We took a couple camping trips. We now live in the PNW so it rained. Camping in the rain with kids and dogs is excruciating when you’re trying to prevent any discomfort for the other people in your group. I proposed buying an expensive camping van and eventually talked the wife into permitting the use of funds (that I earned). Having and using this vehicle definitely made camping much more comfortable for everyone, but it turns out this particular model had a history of questionable reliability so the stress I saved by providing a warm, dry place to sleep I allocated to planning for and trying to prevent the inevitable breakdown. [RED PILL LESSON] Risk aversion is weaksauce pussy bullshit. I should have taken comfort in the discomfort of not knowing what would happen because I’m confident to use my skills in the moment. When that breakdown eventually happened (after unplugging, thankfully), all my preparations were used, I executed my extraction plan like a Captain, and that “adventure” became a feature of the trip for the wife and kids.

Dealing with a vehicle that needed maintenance and upgrades became my new mission, as well as planning trips for the family. Unconsciously I rarely consulted my wife on these plans, I just told her about them when I’d worked them out. I would inform her of the strategic plan, tell her how many meals to buy, then leave her to the tactical job of getting herself and our son packed and ready. I would prepare the vehicle, load everyone up, and we would go. Action-wise, this was pretty strong capturing, but I still stressed a lot about the potential for catastrophe and shared my fears with my wife, which led her to be stressed too. [RED PILL LESSON] Be the oak, don’t show weakness.

I’ve always had a project vehicle in addition to my daily driver, but the project I already had was dormant since having my son. Now I had two project vehicles (and twice as much cost to fuel, license, and insure). I taught myself how to do all the mechanical maintenance on a modern diesel and executed some large jobs that would have cost thousands of dollars had I paid someone else. I shared my triumphs with my wife and got a little mad when she didn’t share my enthusiasm [COVERT CONTRACT], but I actually enjoyed the self-validation of proving my new skills to myself and I felt manly working in the garage again. [RED PILL LESSON] Have a hobby!

Shortly after I started planning and taking the family on trips, sex picked up to once every 3 days, but it was starfish, mechanical, and I’m certain she was consciously metering it out. Maybe there was a spark of attraction from my masculine activities that made her think we should be having sex, but I still looked like a skinny-fat slob, was almost always at least buzzed while I was at home, and showered her with complements and affection so she had to force herself to do it. She’d been working out in a stroller class for about a year and a half and looked pretty good in her workout clothes. She still dressed androgynous and sloppy otherwise though (mirroring my effort evidently). I thought thanking and praising her for the sex we were having would encourage her to step things up. We had talks and I started searching the internet for solutions to fix her libido but only found the usual blue-pill advice. I was still sexually frustrated so I jerked off a lot in secret. Our family growth plan was to start working on another kid around this time so she stopped BC again and was pregnant in about a month. This time around, none of the awesome prego horniness happened, partially due to our 2 year old energy vampire but mostly because of my beta and omega behavior.
Son 2 was born and from his original birthday has been a strong-headed child. Neither my wife nor I had much energy for sex, but I still was angry that I wasn’t getting it. I continued to drink a lot of beer but I continued my music, camping, and vehicle hobbies. I self-imposed a lot of pressure on myself to hustle home after rehearsal or gigs because, maybe I could get a scrap of sex. I was angry with my kids for being an obstacle between me and my hobbies. I still didn’t really have any local friends. I was crushing it at work, ascended the learning curve of my new company’s processes quickly and after a year and a half, was again a technical lead and the subject matter expert for many areas. I got bonuses and raises but was bitter when the wife didn’t reward my achievements with her pussy. [RED PILL LESSON] I’ve come to understand this is typical and women don’t want to know how the sausage is made.

Sex was happening, but it was drip-fed at exactly twice per week, excluding shark week, and it was boring. I brought this up a few times and was met with “That’s just what happens in married sex lives. I’m OK with it.” Instinctually, I knew this was just not true but I had no idea what to do about it. I started having shower thoughts wishing for the low testosterone and damped libido that was supposed to happen as I aged. At least then I could focus on something other than the sex I wanted but couldn’t get. I felt shame for my masculine desires. My kids were a pain in my ass and they walked all over my wife and me because we essentially set no boundaries. That’s how we interpreted all the modern parenting crap we’d read. “Let them figure things out and make their own choices.” My wife is incapable of withstanding any tears, complaints of discomfort, or demands for attention. I could do this and tried to take the roll of disciplinarian, but she frequently overruled me with the phrase “You need to pick your battles”, which really meant “You need to pick the battles I would pick, which are none.” [RED PILL LESSON] Kids need boundaries and they need parents with a strong frame.

The Tipping Point and Finding MRP

The tipping point came when we took a plane trip to our home town in the spring of 2015. As I trudged through the airport in my cargo pants and baggy work shirt, carrying the diaper backpack, my kids’ carry-on, and my wife’s breast pump in a bag that was essentially a purse, she strode ahead, holding the baby and pulling the toddler along, glaring at me to keep up. She had the whole trip planned out; who we would see and when. It was mostly going to hanging around her mom’s house. I had given no input other than my money. The first thing I did upon arrival was get to the store to fill my mother-in-law’s fridge with craft beer. Then I spent the time in the corner of the living room drinking beer and finger-fucking my phone. Wife’s parents were divorced when she was very young. Her dad was barely present in her life since then and managed to not pay child support or alimony. MIL never did anything about it and just moved on. I respect my MIL quite a bit; she cooks, sews, and cleans very well and generally handles her own shit like a boss. She worked to pay for her own college degree (after divorce) and saved enough to pay for both of her kids to go to college. She saved enough from her job to pay off her house right about the time she retired. She actually IS a strong independent woman who don’t need a man. Unfortunately, her successful independence made her quite androgynous so my wife really never had a feminine or masculine role model in her life. [RED PILL LESSON] Evaluate your woman’s role models when vetting her for marriage.
But MIL is aging and naturally short, and I'm pretty handy. So every couple hours, my wife would pop her head in and order me to do some handyman task that her mom needed a tall guy to do. [RED PILL LESSON] This was a typical shit test; wife showing off to her mom how tight she held my leash. I’d do it then go back to drinking beer and being bitter about not getting thanked [big ol’ COVERT CONTRACT]. So as I’m googling around, I must have used some search phrases like “wife doesn’t respect me” or “Wife only wants my money” or “why does my wife suck at sex”. Whatever it was I’m CERTAIN I didn’t search for “How do I become a man women (possibly including my wife) want to respect and subsequently fuck?” So I stumble on MRP and read a couple posts and think “These guys all had the same situation as me but now they don’t. They all say it was their own fault? WTF? My sex drive is fine; it’s my wife who has the problem!” Still, I read the FAQ and the wiki. Some of the shit I read instantly brought flashbacks of my life and suddenly those events made sense. I spent the next few days with those thoughts festering in my mind. I wanted the problem to be my wife, but I couldn’t un-see what I had read.

The weekend after I got back from the trip, I played a gig with my band at a well-known local venue. The house was packed and we killed it. For as sloppy as I dressed 99% of the time, I put on the Ritz for the stage; fancy embroidered western shirt, tight jeans, exotic leather boots, and a big white hat (I play country). For as beta and omega as I was around my family, I’ve always been alpha as fuck as a performer (on stage with a band or in technical presentations). I get off stage, high from the performance, and get a couple IOI’s (now that I knew what these were) from some women in the crowd; I suddenly have some thoughts of “Eye Contact, AMOG, DHV”. I straighten up my posture, throw my shoulders back, make eye contact with these chicks, and soak their panties. I offer a band sticker to one of them who happens to be holding two drinks, saying “Here, have your boyfriend hold this for you.” She responds with (giggle) “I don’t have a boyfriend!” I was in such shock that I lost my frame and awkwardly handed my sticker to her friend and scampered away like a 13 year old who accidentally saw a boob at the pool. [RED PILL LESSON] Be attractive; don’t be unattractive.

Monday morning, I sat down at my desk at work, pulled up MRP and read all day. I couldn’t sleep that night because my hamster was burning up the wheel. It was ALL so obvious! It was ALL MY FAULT!

Tuesday, May 5th 2015, I took the pill.

Starting stats:

- 34 years old
- Skinny-fat sloppy dresser
- Career Beta-bux
- Lots of Omega behavior
- Married for 8.5 years
- Dating for 7 years before that
- We’re each other’s only sex partner (as far as I care to believe)
- 2 young children
Read about the first year of my MAP here.

edit to add link to MAP report
Calibrating your Time, Attention and Commitment

by JDRoedell | July 20, 2017 | Link

As a member who's been around here for a while, I don't post much. I do a lot of reading while making small, calculated improvements and occasionally chiming in about them. But I want to share some of my observations regarding conditioning your wife's behavior. I've noticed a common theme on MRP from new guys (to include myself from over a year ago). That theme is a struggle to successfully grasp when and how to employ the praxeology of Dread level 4 (DL4: Condition your time and attention to her sexual availability and pleasant personality). See this post I made almost year ago called "The Gift" of Genuine Desire and Balancing RP Strategies

In this post I tried to understand this dynamic and got some good feedback from members and mods. Below are a few things to keep in mind for those starting into DL4. But most importantly go forth with the frame that you are the prize. This mentality will both; 1. get you to a place where you are worthy of using proper conditioning/DL4 skills and 2. allow you to pull it off like a man who makes himself his mental point of origin and a man she perceives as being higher value.

For those new guys or those not done with the sidebar (and why aren't you?) look up the /u/bluepillprofessor's 12 levels of dread for context.

Improve yourself first for the sexual strategy to have any teeth:

This is nothing new yet still many seem to miss it. MRP is about improving the man and not the marriage, but we have to remember at it's core Red Pill is a sexual strategy. It's why most men end up here. As Rollo says, for one gender's sexual strategy to prevail, the other must fail. It's arguable that just by being married we've already ceded the advantage to the woman but that's another discussion. When Rollo talks about how to get the "upper hand" in an LTR, he's essentially talking about DL4. MRP is about how to be a more masculine, happy man within the confines of Marriage 2.0. How to make the best of the situation, live life with minimal compromises to your mission and be prepared for all eventualities. Trying to implement DL4 before making yourself a man worth fucking just makes you look like a faggot.

DL4 is such an important lynch-pin for a successful "Red-pill marriage" because it's the level where the man is actively changing his behavior in a manner that begins to make his frame and his strategy the priority. Even if you aren't going to spin plates, to be successful you need to be able to ACT like the man who would. Many mods and flaired men here contend that the pinnacle of a healthy LTR exists when dread levels are kept around 4-5. You've improved your physical, social and intellectual self but you're not "in her face" about it, now it's time to condition her.

Find the balance of Push/Pull:

This is where DL4 is made or failed. So what does this balance look like for the men of MRP? At it's core, it's a macro-level push/pull balance. Unlike the single PUA guy who is making judgments and balancing this dynamic literally in minutes or hours, married men need to look at DL4 and push/pull with the long game in mind. Some guys come in here and say, "my wife rejected me and so I went silent for two weeks and ghosted all texts." You're wrong. Or, "the wife rejected me and I went in the other room for two hours and came back and tried again." You're wrong. The right answer is in between these two extreme, aspie reactions and the real answer probably has more to do with calibrating the value you provide her on a Long-term consistent basis, rather than a day to day basis.

For example, say you've been consistently leading, being fun, flirty and in your frame. You try to initiate sex on Sunday - Hard No. You try again Monday - Hard No. If she's making excuses instead of exceptions for you, then you need to revisit DL 1-3 to shore up leaky joints in your ship. Are you lifting enough? Are you spilling feelz and worries to her? Are you leading? Are you displaying other unattractive behavior? Is your fashion on point? If you've got all this locked down, then you need to look at how your DL4 game is. But how do you adjust your treatment of her at this point?

Some recommend to always be initiating (when you feel like it) and to have a positive attitude when she rejects you. Others say, "why continue to give her the 'good husband' treatment when she isn't providing value to you (even after you've improved consistently over months or even years)?" If it's been two or three weeks of rejections then continuing to be Mr. fun/flirty/kino is being autistic. This will only condition her to continue to see you as a provider of resources and good feels who she doesn't have to put out for. Some women "get it" pretty quickly. Others need it spelled out more clearly. For those women, it probably goes something like this;

The wife's internal monologue could be:

"Ugh, he wants sex AGAIN."

Your subcommunication via actions should convey: "Yes princess, I do, and there's many other women out there who'd be happy to oblige."

If she is only rarely sexually unavailable then simply go on your merry way. Do you feel like watching TV with her or listening to her talk about her day? Then do so. Do you feel like heading out with buddies or working on a hobby, then do that. But do it without butthurt.

Is her sexual availability akin to the availability of bread and eggs in Russia during the height of the Cold War? Then your actions at this point need to be OI, but they don't necessarily have to be rainbows and sunshine. At this point, you should start withdrawing for more than just a day or so. Over a longer time frame your new focus needs to be YOU. If you get verbally challenged about why you are "distant" or "gone all the time" (and your DL1-3 game is on point) it's ok to explain that physical intimacy is something that you value. At this point, it's ok to openly verbalize that. This is essentially advanced WISNIFG stuff.

Calibrate your conditioning: Know your woman:

I see new guys here get frustrated with their "progress", try to remove time and attention for a few weeks or months, see no result and move right to DL 7 or higher. This is the definition of Rambo. Depending on the woman, a few weeks of reduced time/attention/affection is not enough. Remember, that 1,000 foot rope may not even be taut yet. For some women that rope may be 2,000 feet. You have to calibrate your conditioning behavior not only to the "length of your woman's rope" but also to the pattern of her good behavior. The longer you were a useless unattractive fuck, the longer that rope tends to be.

My wife does not require constant kino and attention, even when all is well. In fact, too much attention has the opposite effect on her. It took me a long time to realize this. Sometimes I'll go days without even initiating conversation now to keep her guessing. I'm not sulky or retributive, I just don't seek her out for anything beyond logistics. It also helps reinforce the reality that I don't need her. When she starts to feel "neglected" she'll come to me. Your wife may be different and you have to figure out that balance of attention vs. aloofness that works best in both the short, day to day, and the long game. Trial and error will be the game at first.
Married Game - Is your woman improving herself? If so, make her FEEL appreciated, the Red Pill way.

by A_Rex | May 18, 2016 | Link

Tl;dr - if your woman has genuinely improved, provide genuine praise and make her feel appreciated. Reap the benefits.

By now everyone on here should know that you do not reward a woman's shitty behavior. You do not act like a supplicating bitch buying gifts and doing chores in response to a series of hard No's. We should also know that you do not simply reward women just for being women. Bringing home flowers everyday and telling her how great her tits look does not generate tingles. However, if your woman makes an effort and attains tangible, improved results, then praise her improvements.

If you read any survey of employee dissatisfaction, a chief complaint you hear over and over again, and with more emphasis than the long hours or the pay, is that workers hate it when they feel like they aren't appreciated. We can debate the reasons they aren't appreciated all day, but it doesn't fucking matter, because whether they are unappreciated because they suck or because their bosses suck, the point is that that's how they FEEL. Want to keep them happy, motivated and dare I say emotionally invested in the success of the endeavor? Let them know their contributions matter, and that their efforts are truly appreciated (IF, and only IF, they truly are valuable contributors).

Our domestic captain/first mate dynamic is no different. Experessing appreciation for exemplary work is appropriate. Similarly, if your first mate has noticed your example, and taken it upon herself to improve herself, praise is in order. And done properly, will pay dividends.

In my case, I had devolved to a beer-bellied bellicose beta bitch over the last few years. My wife followed my example to a fucking "T", herself becoming overweight and evolving more and more into a raging bitch with each passing month. Well, since swallowing the pill about 8 months ago, she's seen me religiously get up early to hit the gym. She notices how jacked I'm looking in my good-fitting shirts. She sees how women interact with me in public and, gentlemen, she's pregnant - pregnant with the idea that I could have a different pussy in her bed with minimal difficulty at this point if I wanted. She's also seen my change in attitude over the months, and through this dedication she understands that my improving is not a phase. It is real. It will continue. I will keep getting better.

Once it clicked in her head that it was real, she started following. She took it upon herself to join a gym and got personal training sessions (good idea since she would know what the fuck to do in one other than an elliptical machine without a trainer). She now dresses hotter when we go out in public. I don't get hard no's anymore - sex is 4 times a week or more and the quality ranges from good to amazing. Shit testing is very rare and is flirty rather than nasty.
Comfort tests have been on a slight rise. She has initiated anal 4 times since my initial FR on the subject.

I praise her efforts at the gym. Her ass is looking much better and I compliment her on that, because I know she's literally busting her ass at the gym doing squats and stuff to get her legs and ass in gear. The compliment is genuine, and she knows it.

Which brings me to this. It was our anniversary recently so I went to the store to get a card and write something thoughtful. First, 99% of the cards had the most revolting BP bullshit I've ever seen. Stuff like "I could never live without you" that damn near had me vomiting in the aisle. So I got a funny one (actually kind of RP too) with plenty of room inside for me to write my own piece. (The card itself said on the front: "I got you the best gift ever this anniversary" Inside: "Me!")

Then I wrote this on the inside:

- I'm proud of the life we're making
- I'm proud of the family we've created
- I'm proud of how we've handled the few bad times that have arisen. Weaker people and couples would not have survived so heartily, and would have had more bad times of their own making (bad times being a miscarriage, and death of a family member)
- I'm proud of how we're raising our child
- Most of all, I'm proud that we're carrying on a torrid love affair after 17 years together.

I gave her the card the night before the anniversary, after we had already basically polished off a bottle of champagne. After reading, she looks at me, and says in a soft voice "Jesus Rex, your making me cry". She then gets up, comes to me and gives me a longer version of the 10 second kiss. I give her another gift - coupons for free "total body pleasure sessions" at the coconut spa. She laughs, we polish off the champagne, and head upstairs. Turn lights all off, I get on top, and she pulls my head in to kiss me and doesn't stop, except to moan, for the whole experience. She lifts her legs as I bang her missionary so I can pound her as deep as possible. She cums twice and soaks the damn sheets. I finish, we kiss for a bit, the eventually roll over to go to sleep. Not 2 minutes later, she rolls over on me and says "I want you to fuck me again." So she gets on all fours and I give her round two.

The takeaway:

Never reward or praise shitty behavior, or just for having a pussy. But if she goes above and beyond, genuine praise is due. If she's really working hard and improving all aspects of herself - make her truly FEEL appreciated. Score a direct hit on the feelz like i did, and the reverberations will vibrate that pussy like you wouldn't believe. You don't have to wait for an anniversary either. Like /u/thefamilyaplha keeps saying - keep her on her toes. Drop this kind of thing on her after a little wine on a random Friday and watch her heart melt while her pussy trembles. Note: be smart do not overuse this. This is a once in a while thing as part of your repertoire to keep her on her toes. Do it too much, and you might as well pay a lawyer to draft that covert contract for you.

Good luck and as always YMMV. Note2: pardon the formatting - mobile Meditation’s best kept secret: learning how to open to and experience pain. Befriend your complete experience, the only way out is through.

by yyiii | October 2, 2017 | Link

My last post was well received here. This is the follow up, it's also not structured according to the /r/mrp template Broken bones, flesh wounds, and illnesses are one thing. But often it’s easier to just be with physical pain because the body can be so noisy when it’s suffering. Emotional, and psychological or cognitive pain can be far trickier. If not reckoned with and allowed to heal, reacting to pain in a million little ways will steer your path through life without your consent. That’s suffering.

Depending on who you’re talking to ‘pain’ and ‘suffering’ may be used differently. I think about the difference is in terms of choice and duration: pain is involuntary and temporary, suffering is voluntary and prolonged.

Ken McLeod’s distinction from a Western Buddhist perspective is more pragmatic:

| “Pain is a sensation. It’s a sensation which can be physical, emotional or cognitive that arises in certain conditions. |

| Suffering is reacting to the experience of sensations. So you can have pain, but if you just experience the pain then there’s no suffering. If you react to the sensations, that’s when you suffer. People react in all kinds of ways. Our body tenses up and we try to stay away from it emotionally, and we get all kinds of stories about it.” |

Suffering can hide from conscious awareness, and at first, only be glimpsed in the periphery of our experience. But it can have just as severe an impact on your wellbeing as leaning your forearm on a glowing oven element, or a haymaker to the jaw.

The ability to experience pain in attention is an incredibly valuable life skill but it’s not necessarily a new skill. In the following clip Jordan Peterson offers many useful ways to work with pain rooted in speech and actions. His iconic “clean up your room and put your house in order” is a great action-based instruction, and “stop saying things you know to be lies, then tell the truth” is also a helpful way to improve communication skills.

One thing I haven’t heard Peterson talk about much is ways of working with cognitive and emotional pain. How do you ‘pick up your suffering and bear it’ or ‘get over past experiences’ exactly? What are the steps to follow to ‘accept your suffering’?

Peterson also advocates to “pay attention to what you say and do,” and “accept your suffering and move on.” But in my experience, this practice of emotionally and psychologically “shining yourself up a little bit, then a little bit more” is really difficult. It takes patience, capacity, skill and hard work. But it is possible.

Experience pain in real-time to get an HD picture of your life

Luminous Ground’s principal teacher Paul Baranowski has been training me in some techniques to train attention for a few years now. So far they’ve been working. My hope is that sharing what I’ve learned will fill in some of the gaps for others too.

After a while, being with painful emotional reactivity—without taking action, giving it a voice, or buying into its stories—becomes easier, and that a good thing. It was literally all I could do at first. You cannot will yourself through force, coercion, or any other means to heal emotional and psychological pain. If all you can do is stop making things worse that’s a great start.

To the extent that you’re able to befriend and rest in your complete experience, moment by moment, suffering becomes optional. As you rest during particular reactive pattern’s operation, you will not unintentionally harm yourself and others as much. Then your options become: Stay in your body and open to pain in a given moment and allow yourself to completely experience it until it passes.

Slide (or flee) into obsessive attraction, escapist aversion or numb indifference to cope. In Buddhism, these strategies are known as ‘the three poisons’. If you can’t tell from their name, they don’t work, they just hurt more and produce more reactivity.

A word about hurt and harm from Ken:

- “Hurt occurs in relationships. Whenever two people interact in a way which doesn’t fulfill the expectations, wishes, hopes, or aspirations of the other.

- Harm is when relationships are damaged in some way.”

Harm happens when we make matters worse in spite of our best intentions.

Suffering arises from the discrepancy between what is actually happening in the present moment—each and every moment—and what we perceive through the filter of our hopes or wishes of what might happen, or our memories of what has happened.

The smells in the room you’re sitting in, the sensations on your skin, the tension in your muscles, the taste in your mouth, the light of your screen and the shadows dancing across your peripheral vision. When you notice these perceptions as they occur, you experience life in the present moment. It is what it is, sometimes its comfortable, sometimes its not.

The tendency is to compulsively and ignorantly cling to past experiences or expectations of future outcomes to guide ourselves through life’s challenges. But this is not the most reliable stance to make decisions or take action from. I’ve personally suffered from this habit most of my life, and its left me disconnected, overwhelmed, and confused.
When you’re in your body, the constant toggling between grasping at what has passed, being grounded in the present, and fantasizing about the future creates a sense of nausea. Suffering can feel something like a faint, uncomfortable low-frequency drone, or a screeching discord that utterly warps your being.

So why is all this good news again?

The closer your experience is to the latter, the easier the decision becomes to change your approach to how you manage suffering, stress, unsatisfactoriness—call it what you will. I made that decision four years ago in a moment of terror after quitting ADHD meds cold turkey and experiencing mania and uncontrollable hallucinations. It was a pretty easy decision at the time. Enough was enough.

When everyday life takes place buried in field of invisible, unbearable pain and chaos, there’s a chance to know it is there, to befriend it, to learn to pay attention to it, and to uncover and experience its source. Sometimes it takes a bit more pain than your used to, or a bit of distance, time and/or space to recognize the commonly recurring patterns of thought, speech and action keeping us anchored amid the chaos, and to be able to do something about them. But it is possible.

Realizing that I had (and have) views and beliefs, ways of talking, and habits of behaviour that come from a place of unacknowledged, unseen, suffering was tough to stare directly at for very long at first. And it may be for you too. Admitting it to yourself is the first step—that’s a big deal. Then the best way to get started is to squint at it, peer through the cracks of your fingers when hiding behind your hands for safety. It’s ok if you can’t bear it for too long, if you’ve never done this before, it’s going to take practice.

As you learn to stabilize real-time conscious awareness through mindfulness practices and anchoring your attention in your body, your ability and capacity to be with and experience pain in yourself and others will grow. Being present with and experiencing the full spectrum of emotion while interacting with people who haven’t been trained to, is a bit like watching a film in IMAX 3D with AVX surround sound while everyone else is staring at their phones using those crappy out-of-the-box earbuds.

Target reactive actions, thoughts, and words

Last time, I said that this post would dive into the specific actions, thoughts and speech habits I’d developed that kept my marriage stuck in a caustic feedback loop and the practices I used to transform them. But as I sat down to write, I thought it would be useful to first give a bit more detail around the mechanics of psychological and emotional pain and how I’ve worked with it.

In the next post, in practical terms, I’ll go through how I looked at the specific, observable patterns of reactivity in thoughts, speech and actions, and how they radiated out into my marriage, so you can compare and contrast them to your own experience and dig down to their roots.

I’ll show how I learned to do this by taking responsibility for my complete experience and how meditation has been a crucial support for and compliment to the positive masculinity practice that are bringing balance to my relationships with women.

original post
There's a post on here where a guy is worried about his wife getting hotter as she improves her SMV along with him. I'm betting some other guys have these lingering thoughts as well.

Hells to the nos.

If you're doing all this right, the narrative of her journey to oozing sexuality is to please her hot, masculine husband. If you're where you should be, you should be gawd damn ecstatic to watch her progress. You should be getting random ass boners left, right and center as she struts her hot stuff around. You should be praising whatever God you believe in that you can't help but get a raging erection when you wife strips to jump in the shower. And it should be mutually awesome for both of you.

I'll use a sports car analogy. Sexy sports cars are fun as hell. Let your wife be your own walking, svelte sports car. Shoot, get her all souped up and modified. Did her body take a toll from birthing your kids and she's been depressed by her now droopy boobs and jiggly bits down low that exercise just won't fix? Well if she wants it (yes, the idea should be hers) and you have the money, get some surgery to hoist that shit up and stuff it all back where it started. Hell, if she has her boobs done smack her on the ass and joke not to go too big. Damn...I love boobs...perfect bits of femininity...all soft and inviting... ...and I'm back...I get sidetracked with boobs. Have I mentioned I like boobs? Anyway, don't fear your sweet ass sports car. Take that shit out, show it off and DRIVE it... Turn some heads. People will look at her. It's hot. They'll look at you and think that dude is a fucking stud.

Listen, one day she'll get all dolled up and gorgeous as the ultimate culmination of all her hard work. She'll look over at you and you'll see a little girl with a slight twinkle in her eye waiting for her strong man to give her a little validation of how beautiful she looks. You'll give it to her and she'll beam. She will beam. And you will beam. And all that is wonderful about the natural balance of masculine nature to desire and the feminine imperative to be desired will be fulfilled. And it's spectacular.

So don't worry about your wife getting too hot. Be hotter and more masculine. Maybe you will keep your sports car until it's a collector. It's nice to grow old with something special. Maybe some slick dude will come up and steal her right from under your nose. Oh well. Go find another sports car...oohhhh...go get a newer one with a V12...those just purr.
Leading Sex
by GargantuaBlarg29 | June 26, 2017 | Link

I'll have to admit. There were often times in the past when reading this forum when guys described the level of slut their wives became and I've questioned whether or not AWALT; rationalizing things with the necessary continuum of slut levels ranging from promise ring wearing girls to pornstars getting the train run on them. Because AWALT, but NAWALT right? But how far will women slide on this continuum? Now that's a good question.

There's one thing that I kept in the back of my mind while I constantly mulled these thoughts over, and that's that I'm going to try to create my slut anyway, while continuing to move on in the levels of dread in parallel so as not to wait on my wife for my life to keep improving.

Well it turns out that those parallel paths were more the same path than I could have ever thought. By reading through the books on pickup, I came to learn much more than I expected on: levels of attraction and how to recognize where you are on that continuum, timing of how long to stay in a level and when to move forward, and what other people are looking for and how to make that work for you. It was generally a guide to a more conscious approach to the entire process of approach, initiation, and escalation; and I found a lot that I could actually apply to my marriage. Here's a few key areas:

Plausible Deniability: This is a lesson you'll find Rollo, Mystery, and the authors of Practical Female Psychology (to name a few) talk about. The basis is that women put a lot of personal value in society's perception of them. Whereas you and me may be able to do many uncomfortable things based on the ideas of: 'I don't care', 'I'll never see these people again', or 'If they don't like it they can take a hike', women really really care about what other people think of them. So much so that they will restrict their actions based on how that action will make them look in the eyes of their friends, peers, etc; even if they truly WANT to do the opposite. Even if you overtly declare they can do the opposite. And I'm not talking about restricting action based on situational fear like social anxiety, I'm talking about a deeper more permanent fear of lasting opinions they make of themselves based on actions they do or do not do.

While women may restrict themselves based on pressures to their social image, they have learned to leave themselves a back door to still get what they want, and make it so they are not responsible for that thing happening. Plausible deniability is the option for her to say... something like: "Ok, but we're not having sex", still get fucked, and then tell that little voice in her head, or her friends if they ask, that it just happened; and that it wasn't her fault since she clearly said it wasn't happening. It's a way to leave a door open to doing something, but not taking on the burden of making that decision.

"Hey we've got to stop at my house I want to show you my tropical fish" (search "plausible deniability") allows for plausible deniability, since she didn't overtly go to your house for sex.

LJBF is a form of plausible deniability since she is not responsible for YOUR decision on whether to be friends or not.

Please break up with me is also plausible deniability since she won't be the one responsible for the breakup when you end it.

These all seem really silly. Logically, she should just be able to say and do what she wants. But she won't. Red pill, PUAs, and numerous posts from users here will show the same.

How does this apply in marriage? It doesn't change at all in marriage. Even in the confines of your home she holds herself to this standard she thinks society has set for her. You can take advantage of this because you don't have a problem as captain with taking that responsibility for the decisions that are made. I've used the fact that she responds to plausible deniability several times to my advantage. From planning random nights out where I've simply told her: "get this and wear this", to situations I've had lays by saying: "The shower feels nice and warm, come join me". Had I told her we're going to a comedy club or to drink wine and watch the sun set, she very likely would have said: "That's dumb" or "I'm not sure if I'll like that". If I had said: "Come have sex in the shower, she would have flat out said, "no". But in thr case of manufactured plausible deniability, it's not her fault if the outing turns shitty, or if I escalated in the shower...she never agreed to that particular thing.

Take the responsibility of making the call onto you, off of her. In a perfectly fair world does that sound unfair and retarded? It sure does. But that's not the game being played in this world. And in a self-centered kind of way, if you make all the calls, that gives you the advantage because you are able to decide to do whatever the hell it is you want to do. Would I rather take some social pressure and NGAF and do what I want? Or have to deal with someone else's possibly shitty ideas and go along with something I don't. The former please.

Last Minute Resistance: I first learned about this when reading Bang The Pickup Bible, and then hearing more about it reading The Game and Mystery Method. Bang I found in pdf form, but you can buy it for 10$. Mystery Method is on audible. So is The Game and I highly suggest it, as Neil reads it himself and tells a great story. When PUAs teach about last minute resistance, they will usually focus on it being the very first time you've tried to sleep with this girl, and thus she will give excuses like: "We shouldn't" or "We're moving too fast". Last minute resistance in this sense is explained to have a lot to do with the evolutionary pressures women face at this time. This includes the fact that they are about to take a risk, and that there are a lot of thoughts running through her head ranging from: "What if I get pregnant?" to "What if I get a disease?" to "Will he stick around after?" as well as "How does this make me look to society and how does he feel about it?".

In short, LMR is basically the flood of worries that comes into a woman's head, and revolves around the question she's asking of: "What does this mean?" As guys, we don't care what it means. We just want to fuck.

How does this apply in marriage? I find that this resistance comes a lot in marriage as well, in the form of what we call here soft no's. These soft no's exist in a very similar manner to why women have that need for plausible deniability. Think about it, when you're initiating, your wife isn't stupid. She knows what you're trying to do. But her inner social vibe is saying that she can't just give it up too easy, or she is complicit in just allowing sex to happen. So you'll hear about how she has a headache, or how she's hot, and this reminds me of what PFP talks about when they explain a double bind, where any answer directly acknowledging the seriousness of the statement is wrong. If you try and argue, "It's not hot" then you've acknowledged that these words she's saying has meaning (they don't). If you accept what she's saying and stop initiating, well, no sex for you, and you have demonstrated how easily you fold. As discussed in PFP, a solution is to completely ignore the statement at face value, and either tease her about it: "It's about to get hot, for sure", or otherwise plow right through it and continue escalating.

Rest assured that while these soft no's are signs that you should push on, hard no's will come about due to your failures outside the escalation, mainly: Not sensing the mood (talked about below), not flirting throughout the day, or simply nor being the man she wants to fuck.

There have been times where I've literally been thinking in my head that as I'm teasing, kinoing, and escalating that there's no way this is going to get anywhere, and I start getting quite fed up with all the soft no's. But then a few more teases and advances and pushes and we're fucking. Lessons learned. It's retarded, but it will happen.
DEVI: First, for all those looking, Sex God Method is not on amazon (for under $100) or on audible. And the 4 page .pdf you find online is NOT the book. There are links to it on red pill reddit sites. I'm not sure if this is where I found my copy but here. It took me too long to find this book.

This book centers around DEVI (Dominance, Emotion, Variety, and Immersion). The fact of the matter is that the sexual experience for a women involves a lot of (surprise surprise) feelings. In fact, it has been said that as opposed to a guy who would really have no problem having the same freaky hot sex every time he wants to get off, and derives joy from getting off; a woman finds sexual pleasure in the feelings she gets during sex, and may or may not even care if she gets off by the end.

How does this apply in marriage? If you have a woman that's not on hormonal birth control, you can easily spot and keep track of her cycle. Often, when ovulating, a woman will be down to have more wild sex punctuated by dominance (rough play, light choking, anal, dirty talk) and variety (trying new things, in new environments, new positions, and responding to you ordering these). When approaching her period, she may feel the need for more comfort through forms of emotion (the feelings in the words you say, the actual connection of sex) and immersion (letting go and totally swimming in those emotions). Interestingly enough, you will read that some PUAs can even say which women in a bar are ovulating based on their behavior in the bar (watch this entire video BTW, great information).

My application of DEVI has been on the upswing, and I've noticed a change in the way I approach sex (by knowing what aspects of DEVI I want to hit this time and sticking to those) and a change in the way she is receptive to these scenarios. Even though my girl is on hormonal BC, I can still get a sense of where her mood is at that day from the flirting I do during the day. If I tease and flirt and kino and she's snappy, shit testing, and telling me "hands off"; I've said a few times to myself and even to her overtly while laughing: "You just need a good dickin". Other times when she responds to teasing with emotion or relaxes into my kino, I'll put on more of an emotional game in the bedroom. And this emotional reading works. This is why I've said 100 times it's important to built up to sex during the day. Put in the work, feel where she's at, play along with that. She's telling you what she wants. Betas will address her feelings overtly by trying to calm her down when she's upset or be supernice when she's emotional. She's not asking for solutions, she's sharing her state. Take advantage of that knowledge and fuck her how she wants to be fucked that night. And oh does she want to be fucked...read on.
Lead...SLOWLY: "It is up to you, the masculine man in the relationship to create an environment that allows your woman to be her dirty, slutty, nasty self."

To be clear to the newbs...she is not going to drain your hose into her throat the day you swallow the pill and demand it. That's rambo. Don't go coming back after a month either saying: "Oh well it didn't work out, I guess I must do what must be done and serve papers." You know what that is? That's chick speak. That's plausible deniability. "I'm not responsible, it just is what it is."

It really is like everything in life. Take incremental steps. She's not used to your initiations in different places? Work on kissing and kino in those places but then taking it away. Create that doubt in her mind that: "Is he going to initiate here? In the kitchen? I don't know if I want that. Oh he pulled away? Huh, maybe I did want that...?" She's not used to being spanked? Do softer swats as playful kino once in awhile around the house. Then start doing it once during sex. Increase frequency. She will LMR you before sex, she will LMR you during sex when you try something new. Don't get butthurt over it. Don't lie and say it's ok when she says, "sorry I don't like that". Smile and assert that you want it, and if she hard no's it, use the magical antibutthurt phrase: "That's disappointing / I'm disappointed".

All the topics above lead up to this. YOU need to create the plausible deniability. YOU need to push through the last minute resistance. YOU need to recognize the covert communication your girl is telling you. And YOU need to lead her to the hot sex that you both want. I'm telling you this because recently I've had some experiences with my wife that beta me dreamed about at the beginning of this adventure. Both of us talking dirty. Both of us teasing. Biting, being rough, multiple positions and commanding IE "watch me fuck you". Where did /u/470_2_700_nm go? I've had her voluntarily not pull off at the end of a blowjob for a second or two of her own free will. I know she wants it. I wrote that post 7 months ago, and now I believe I merely need to gently lead her there to accomplish this. But I need to lead to it...make her feel like it's ok...but give that plausible deniability even if it's only: "well he told me to...it's not like I wanted to do it". My last OYS has me lamenting her lack of overt outside the bedroom sexuality...I need to lead to that as well.

As I said at the beginning of this post, I sometimes questioned AWALT on this road. I started with light spanking every now and then. Now I do it at will. I started with a few commands: "Get on your knees", "Turn around". I started with very little dirty talk: "You like that?" She even said a few times she doesn't like that kind of talk. Said it turns her off. But now she pleads, "Fuck me" when approaching orgasm? AWALT. A-fucking-WALT.
I am practicing approaching and just got a cold blooded rejection. Two girls sitting at a table in a bar. I walk in solo, get a drink, and after scanning the room and having a few sips, I walk up to them and say, "Hey, I'm killing a little time before I meet a friend, you two look like you're having the most fun out of anyone in here, want to do a shot??".

I was going to try to play a game of rock, paper, scissors for who was going to pay but before I could even finish one of the chicks abruptly stops me and says tersely, "We are having a serious conversation." I can't capture in text the disgust she expressed as they both stared at me blankly with dagger-eyes. Just a few seconds ago they were laughing and seemed like a good couple to try to open.

"Soooo.. no shots?" eyebrow raise
"No".
"Okay, what are your names?" with a smile
I shook their hands, introduced myself and went back to my spot to shoot the shit with the bartender. Minutes later, another chick approaches me and asks me to join her at the table across from the two originals. We had fun and I noticed one of the girls (the one who didn't shut me down) watching. I later left, looked at myself in the mirror, laughed for a minute, said "dude, you have work to do", put on my gym clothes and hit the gym for a late night lift.

You know what would have been worse and what I would have regretted? Never having said anything to them to begin with. So uncomfortable but so necessary.
Completely unplanned example of lifting working happened last night. Short version: Been lifting for about 4 months now, and I can see gains, and my wife can too, but so far she hasn't had that tingle moment. One thing I noticed is that with the right lighting, gains can be more dramatic.

So last night, she was taking a shower after her workout, and I needed to take a shower, but instead chose to take a bath. In the 5 years that we have been in this house, I have yet to take a bath (only showers), so I was not expecting what happened next. After she got out, she turned on the light over the tub and said "Did you even know there was a light over the tub?", then walked over to do her post shower girly crap in front of her mirror. Well as I stood up and started getting out of the tub I saw myself in her mirror and DAMN... I looked good. So I got the right pose on, and when she stood up and noticed, I saw her jaw drop a bit, and her head pull back a bit. Normally if we do fool around, it's me pushing the gas peddle; not last night. She dropped her towel and led me to the room.

TL;DR: Keep lifting fellow bros... It works.
This past weekend the wife has been away at some BS training. This left me alone with the dogs for the weekend.

Friday:

-Had some lite plans with couple dudes that fell through so I said fuck it and went to a movie alone (probably first time alone in my 38 years). Enjoyed the movie.

Saturday:

-I fasted from 8pm friday till about 7. Felt good to discipline myself like that. I already do time restricted eating which helped

-Buddy came over and we started mocking up the rear diff in the race car project, I'm getting excited to see things start to come together on this.

-Did a few hours of house/yard work groceries etc. OYS

-Good bro who is also on a RP journey of his own came over for dinner, we had a fire out back and talked about life till about 1am. Only had one drink. Good times.

Sunday:

-Slept in a bit.

-Did some chores.

-Took the dogs to a car show then to a park where I hung out and red a book in the sunshine. Alone again but felt really chill.

-Said fuck it and went to Deadpool 2 in the evening.

-Its cruise night here so all kinds of cars and bikes out Sunday evenings it was cool do drive around a bit.

-Was gonna go home but said fuck it and hit up a local blues bar. Ended up having a convo with some dude from out of town for a bit watched some awesome music and was home by 11:15 and asleep about 15 mins later.

Last night it occurred to me I literally did everything I wanted all weekend and nothing I didn't. If people were with me it was cool, if they weren't it was cool. I don't know that I've ever lived like this and I fucking loved it. Did I fuck the wife or some random? No. Did I just chill in my own frame? Yes.
I guess the moral here is that I've spent so many years modifying my behavior/desires to match what I thought someone else (often wife) may or may not want, that I don't even know what it is I really want sometimes. Haven't felt that content with shit in a long time.

Did everything I wanted and nothing I didn't...
I'm writing because I gained insight from a somewhat strange source that helped me to more fully process a concept as a newbie. I want to give back and hope it can help others who are just getting started like me.

I'm really not covering anything new here but it's coming from a different angle so it may have value for some of you.

I watched this movie called After Earth last night. Shit movie overall, but my subconscious found truth in certain themes in the film.

One of the main characters is a guy who is the only one able to fight aliens genetically designed to hunt and kill humans by smelling their "fear" pheromones because he was able to master himself and his reactions to his environment to such an extent that he doesn't release those pheromones. He's literally invisible to the aliens.

The part that made me think, is when he describes how he does this. He basically describes his frame:

"Fear is not real. The only place that fear can exist is in our thoughts of the future. It is a product of our imagination, causing us to fear things that do not at present and may not ever exist. That is near insanity. Do not misunderstand me, danger is very real, but fear is a choice."

The application to MRP is obvious.

When I fear arguing with my wife because I want to avoid that conflict and so I modify my behavior to avoid even the possibility of that conflict, that entire scenario never actually happened. It was all in my head and I let my fear control me.

Fear of rejection is never worse than the eventual regret of the missed opportunity. Even at my young age of 30, I can look back and see all the times in my life where I regret having not stepped up to a challenge, not talked to a girl or even a guy, not stood my ground in a confrontation. All the places where I let the fear in my head lead my life instead of living it authentically the way I really wanted to.

How many other areas of my life are being limited or controlled by my own frame (or complete lack thereof?)

All of them. Every single area of my life is being controlled only by my own thoughts.

This can be either good or bad.

When we have frame and we actively grab the reins of our own destiny, when we embrace Abundance and truly believe our possibilities are limitless, we set ourselves free to create the life we want. Obstacles, rejection, and setbacks become welcome additions to an otherwise boring path. It's all in our perception.

When we allow our hamster to run wild and dictate to us what can and cannot be, we stifle our innate ability to create. We wallow in fear and regret, instead of simply feeling what we feel and then mastering our responses to those feelings.

We hold ourselves back out of fear and fear alone.

There is no other logical reason but fear to not ask for that raise or promotion when you know you've put in the work, to not game and initiate with your wife even if it's been years since you last had sex, to not start that business you've had an idea and passion for, etc etc etc.

We are the masters of our lives, and Fear Is A Choice.
What follows is the story of my boss. I sometimes wonder the utility of these sorts of stories, but I like reading them and it's been on my mind lately, plus it's kind of a way to check in with reality every once in a while, so here we go.

My boss is a somewhat wealthy man. I'd estimate his annual income in the mid-six figures, but he's also very investment savvy and from what I gather, he's got a diverse and well-performing portfolio.

He is a minor celebrity in our city, in the field of health. So it is his job to look healthy--and he does. He's in his early 40s and could pass for late 20s. He's fit as fuck (but not really stacked) and he is a helluva sharp dresser. All in all, I have a lot of respect for this guy and what he does and what he's built.

Then there's his wife. Up until six months ago, her "job" was to take care of their two children--but the nanny does that. So she spends her days doing yoga and going to spas. Fine, whatever. I'm not judging. If I could pull it off, I probably would. But she's a ridiculous bitch. She brags about how she's an "alpha female," talks shit about anyone and everyone who doesn't meet her standards (which is everyone because she has no friends to the point that we, the employees, were paid by our boss to throw her a party once), and generally walks around like she's so busy and stressed even though it's hard to imagine she's ever put in a full day of work in her life.

Well she gets the idea that she's an "entrepreneur" so her and my boss come up with this absurd business idea (I won't say the details for obvious reasons). Over the course of several months, they (meaning he) get this business going. My boss showed me the bill, it was about a quarter million dollars.

So finally the business is up and running. Grand opening, ribbon cutting, the mayor turns up and everything. Good times.

My boss is invested (literally) and being the business-savvy guy that he is, wants to make sure it's successful so he's working overtime managing employees, doing marketing, etc.

Wifey thinks that's an infringement on her supposed alpha status and "fires" him.

Well, he's invested, so he's still handling shit behind the scenes, figuring she'll just think things work out on their own because, let's face it, she's pretty incompetent and useless when it comes down to it.

But she finds out and they get in a huge fight.

Meanwhile, wifey's business has been hiring us employees on the side. We're very much underpaid (another way he's pretty savvy) so we're all looking for side gigs. Myself and another employee start part-timing at the new place. Boss starts coming in and telling us with this terrified look on his face that we can't bring anything to wifey that might "stress her out," which is apparently anything at all.

The business isn't doing well (predictably) so he starts secretly getting involved again. And again, she finds out. They have another knock-down-drag-out over it. He comes in the next day and tells the ones of us who were working for the other business that we should quit because there are conflicts of interest, and that (for real this time), he's going to leave everything completely up to her.

We know and he knows that it's going to tank under her leadership. Rather than informing his wife that she's incompetent--or better yet, telling her it was a dumb idea to begin with--he'd rather let a quarter million get flushed down the tubes.

So what happened? Obviously, he indulges her "Alpha female" bullshit. He protects her from the real world, any stress, presumably to get pussy--which I doubt is happening. He's scared shitless of her. And honestly, even though I know this might alienate a sizable portion of this sub, his stupid Jesus bullshit gets in his way. He could never dread her because Jesus and marriage and everything (they were both virgins when they got married).

And the worst thing. I fucking KNOW that when that business finally tanks (I give it six months on the outside) that she'll blame him for it.

Lessons learned:

• Don't be afraid of your woman.
Big Lessons 1 Year In
by CaptainWasHere | September 17, 2015 | Link

MRP continues to be a cornerstone of growth in my life. Thank you all! I'm far from perfect, but I'm a better man today than I was a year ago. Here are some big lessons.

- Diet - Lifting is huge, but diet is also crucial. I went 70/30 paleo and love it. Basically, I cut out 90% of carbs and sugars. I'm now slim w/ abs poking out 24/7 even when I miss the gym for a while. There are guys around with bigger muscles, but they all have the gut. And plenty of positive comments from the ladies has assured me that they'll take trim and athletic any day over muscles and fat.

- Sass - Holy crap, once you see shit tests for what they are, you can understand everything. Seriously, I just started replying to women 80% of the time with funny sarcasm and it couldn't work better. Be quick and sassy. They eat it up. They love the banter. If you're a logical planner dude like me, it can be a bit hard not to address things head on, but trust me it's worth it. Amused Mastery & Agree and Amplify are magic.

- Dress - Gain an SMV point or 2 overnight with better dress. I still highly suggest the slim-fit button down and flat-front pant (or clean jean) look for 90% of occasions.

- Attitude - Life is rough. Some people have been through things that I can't begin to comprehend. Wars, accidents, deaths, disease, poverty, and more. If you're reading this then you've either lived through some rough stuff or been lucky. Either way, you choose to be here every day. So, choose to be positive to. Be your own man. Don't let your fat harpy, idiot boss, lazy coworkers or anyone else ever determine your attitude. You set it. You stick with it. Outcome Independence and Holding Frame are crucial. If your positive/optimistic and calm attitude is stronger than the shit around you, you will succeed. People want to be around someone who can stay calm and happy when others crumble.

- Puppy - I got a puppy and she rocks. Jesus I'm learning a lot about non-verbal communication. If you want to test your basic leadership skills, get a puppy and train it. I've learned that everything she does that I don't like is my fault, because I haven't trained her on what to do and what not to do. She's begging for guidance from me. Note - if you already have kids, this may not be as helpful.

- MMA or Self Defense Classes - They get you out of the house regularly while learning a valuable skill. You'll feel more confident. You'll battle as men are built to. You'll come home happy and sweaty.
• Bull Shit - Learn to BS. The most successful people I know are ones who can confidently BS when their luck or skill runs out. Luck, BS and skill are the 3 things you need. Don't say more than you need to. Don't justify when you don't need to. Say what you need confidently then get back to work.

• Motorcycle - I don't see them mentioned much here, but they are pretty much all that is man. I just got mine 6 months ago. There's so much to appreciate about it. You need to stay 100% focused while riding. When you go riding you don't need to have any other plan than, "I'm going riding". It's a great solo activity. It's also a great activity with your wife. Mine loves riding to small towns for a meal with me. Getting on the back and squeezing me tight on back roads definitely gives her the tingles. Walking around with sexy ass motorcycle jacket and gear also gets the looks from everyone else. This is one single amazing source of manliness satisfaction.

• Be Engaged - I find myself not entirely focused all too often. I'm half engaged at work or at home. The goal is to be fully engaged in whatever activity we as free-willed men choose to do.

Rock on MRP men. You are truly changing your life and the lives of others.
What is the Family Alpha?
by TrainingTheBrain | November 26, 2015 | Link

Prelude

I’ve been with TRP & MRP from their beginnings and I’ve written millions of words on these subs. I’ve also mentioned a few times I was working on a book. With all that said I wanted a place to launch the book from as well as a place to reach a larger audience for the message of embracing masculinity so I decided that I would join the proliferation of Red Pill blogs out there. I only have a few posts and am working to dial the little shit in, but I felt it was acceptable to get out for critique/viewing. It enables me to add pictures and get my message across a little more clearly and with my own touch vice the Reddit format. While MRP has a growing base of subscribers the amount of men who need TRP and don’t Reddit is too damn high! This will be my only post on the subject of the blog, from here on out I will just add a link to the bottom of my posts.

With it being 0005 I want to say I’m thankful to all of the men who have helped me along with my journey and those who are continuing to raise the bar from which married men are measured. I hate the father/husband stereotypes and am but a drop in the bucket of men who are working to change that image. Masculinity has been repressed for too long and bit by bit we are taking it back.

Whether you’ve been RedPill from the womb or are choosing to unplug today, you are a part of the movement that will not only help you find joy and tranquility in this life and who you are as a man, but you’ll also set the ripple effect in motion and your actions will help others. Embracing masculinity and being the Family Alpha is what MRP is about, I hope everyone has a solid Thanksgiving.

www.TheFamilyAlpha.com

Now the post.

The Family Alpha

The Family aspect of The Family Alpha is easy to understand. It means you, a man, have taken on the responsibility of another life. Whether it is just you and your wife or you, your wife, and kid(s); when you take on the responsibility of another life, you have a family.

The concept of Alpha is a little trickier to explain. People latch onto this concept of the ‘top’ wolf in a pack. They think of being an Alpha as being muscular, the strongest, best looking, and an asshole that is only looking out for numero uno. The issue here is that these are ‘alpha’ tendencies or behaviors. The Family Alpha has found a way to display both alpha & beta behaviors at the correct times and with the correct frequency. He knows when to push and when to pull. He is focused and self-motivated, generating his own happiness. He knows what his family needs and he gets them there. Most importantly he embraces his masculinity and pursues his mission in life, taking the family along for the ride.
The Family Alpha is consistently looking to improve himself and walk this path in life in a manner that is consistent with his views as to what is right. Regardless of what the ‘majority’ of men are doing, he does his thing. Complacency has been removed and conformity does not exist. The Family Alpha displays traits that are uncommon in this day and age. It is this uncommon behavior that leads to the uncommon lifelong Marriage that is ultimately the goal of every Married Man.

The Family Alpha pursues advancement in his professional career as well as self-improvement in every facet of his personal life. As a Family Alpha you are going to give your wife the best sex she’s ever had, have her laugh the hardest, and keep the fire of tingles alive to the grave.

I’m married with two kids. I don’t have much of a nightlife, I don’t party or go on traveling adventures by myself, and I don’t have chicks on the side... am I an ‘Alpha’ Male? – HD

I asked myself this question from time to time, wondering if marriage revoked my ‘Masculine Man’ card.

It wasn’t until I read a post on Reddit where a user broke down the Alpha Male into subcategories that made it easier to understand the different types of guys that are out there. I took his observations and applied them to my specific situation. This is where I came up with the term & category of the Family Alpha. The universal aspect of each category was that the man owned his shit throughout it all. Married, single, bi, gay if you do your thing and fully embrace it, you’re an Alpha mother fucker and nobody is going to argue with that.

We, as masculine men living in this modern feminized society, are a part of the minority who have been able to avoid (or break free from) the conformist mold that wants to repress our manhood and promote the destruction of who we are and what we represent – Masculinity.

Choosing to start a family and raise children does NOT make you any less of a man, nor does it provide you with the option of becoming complacent and relaxing your standard of self-growth as a Man. Personally, I feel that there is honor in marrying a woman and pledging your life to her and your children. Then again, masculine men are more romantic than any group out there. It is our responsibility, as Married men, to hold ourselves to a higher standard. We must reach a level that is continuously being raised in order to maintain a healthy, fulfilling relationship until death.

It is our responsibility to raise our children according to what is right and not what is popular. Teach your son about honor, loyalty, masculinity, and how to live a full life dedicated to a cause and not to a woman. Raise your daughter to not to seek validation from men or advancement through her physique but rather to honor themselves and their body and not to use it as a tool for advancement in any endeavor. The next wave of men and women will raise the current standard of our society IF we, as their parents, teach them the ways...

We are the Alpha males who lead our family and maintain a strict standard from which we hold ourselves and our family accountable to. Marriage is not the end of your manhood, it is but another phase you go through on your journey in this life.
Whether you have chosen this path or it was chosen for you, you are here and you need to make the decision to do what is right and not what is easy. Work hard, set the example for others to follow, and find comfort in the discomfort of knowing that society is against everything you represent and expects your marriage to fail.

Be the Family Alpha, prove everyone wrong. Refusal to conform is required for masculine men to remain in society and for The Red Pill of knowledge to be swallowed and spread through the body of humanity.

What We Are Up Against

“If you know the enemy and know yourself, you need not fear the result of a hundred battles. If you know yourself but not the enemy, for every victory gained you will also suffer a defeat. If you know neither the enemy nor yourself, you will succumb in every battle.” – Sun Tzu ‘The Art of War’

It is important to know who it is you will be up against during this journey through modern society as a Masculine Male and a Family Alpha.

#1. Your ‘Self’

Your mind will try to rationalize everything you are doing wrong.

- It’s OK to have gained a few pounds, I have kids and we’re Married.

- I’m content in my job; I don’t need to strive for advancement and professional growth.

- I used to be a jock, I will be able to pick up where I left off – I’ll just wait until New Year’s Eve and start then – I deserve this break.

- Sex is supposed to decrease after Marriage & Children...

- Why do I need to hit the gym? I’m not that bad and as my wife- she owes me sex.

- If I do a lot of chores I will get sex.

- Attraction is negotiable

- She loves me the way I love her...

- She will tell me what she wants.
Every single one of these are thoughts are wrong.

Every. Single. One.

#2 Your Wife

Your wife is biologically programmed to test you. In the ‘Manosphere’ it’s called shit testing because that’s exactly what she’s doing. Your wife will give you shit about everything all of the time, constantly testing to see what you’re made of, to see if you truly are a Family Alpha.

She will test you to see if you believe in yourself, if you can handle the pressure of leading her and the children. She wants to know if you can protect the family, if you are the leader of your friends, and she’ll measure the amount of attention you get from her friends and other women. To put it bluntly, she wants to know if guys want to be you and girls want to be with you.

Then she’ll test you about that attention, it never ends – nor should it. As The Family Alpha you should be tested, it enables you to show that you are worthy of her love, attention, and sex. I will tell you now, some of the best sex I’ve ever had came after passing my wife’s shit tests.

#3 Society/Feminists/Social Justice Warriors

There are people whose sole purpose is the destruction of others and I’m sure you’ve met them before. They are the people who say it is OK to be fat and anyone who says different is wrong. Or maybe you’ve encountered the guy who says he doesn’t need to lead his family as they are all an equal part of the clan. Maybe you’ve seen the news reports that condemn men to jail without any evidence whatsoever because the victim was a female.

Gentlemen, everyone is against you becoming what you were born to be, a Man. As you grow as an individual and embrace who you are as a man you will face some backlash. Welcome it, you do not fear confrontation, you embrace it.

All I am doing is writing words with the hope you will take action. It doesn't matter how much you know if you are unwilling to apply. Be the Family Alpha and enjoy your marriage and life to the end of its days.

Acta Non Verba,

Hunter Drew
Reflections on the Journey
by bismarck8888 | December 20, 2016 | Link

My Red Pill journey began two years ago. At that time, my life had reached a new low. I had been married for five years, had two small children, and I was a pathetic sack of shit. I was weak and twenty pounds over weight. All athletic endeavors I enjoyed were given up on to be at home more often. My business had the least profitable year since it's formation. I did anything my wife told me to do, thinking following her commands would make her happy. I had no social life, and actually thought going out with friends or even by myself would upset her. I was entirely in her frame. My hobby at the time was drinking. Every night I would pour two stiff bourbons and settle in on the computer. I even tried to hide drinking from my wife so as not to make her upset with my actions. Again, I was totally in her frame and literally a drunk captain.

We would fight. We were losing money. My sex life sucked. I was miserable. I knew things had to change. So before I found this place I started to make some changes.

Change number 1 (pre-RP):

During the first month of 2015, I took the first step. Even though I was still Blue Pill, I knew I could not continue to live like this. The first thing I did was hold a meeting with my secretary telling her how things would be different this year for business. Because of circumstances outside of my control, the way I had always done business no longer existed. I needed to right the ship and form a new path with new strategies. I would lead by example, getting to the office first and being the last to leave. I made my business my dream and my creation and I was not going to let it fail. Business slowly began to turn in the right direction.

Change number 2 (pre-RP):

A couple of weeks later (very early 2015), I joined a soccer team. I didn't know anyone on the team, I just posted online that I would like to join a team and bam! I had my first consistent social activity since the arrival of my first born. Getting out of the house every week was liberating. There is also something about team sports that makes you want to win and become better than you are. I began wanting more.

Change number 3 (pre-RP):

I was drinking at the time, and I remember googling things like “why is my wife such a bitch” at night while sipping on a whiskey. At first it would pull up articles advocating for me to “do more housework” to make her happy. I remember cleaning the kitchen with extra vigor for a couple of weeks. Of course no change in her behavior or my sex life happened. She was still a nagging, harpy bitch I hated to be around. I was still a drunk captain.

One night, I got pretty drunk, more than usual, and went to bed after her. After being asleep for ten minutes, the baby woke up, and that caused my wife to begin screaming at me. Seriously yelling for no reason (except, of course, that she was married to a drunk captain).
Well, I said some mean and nasty shit back at her and don't remember what I said. Those words hurt her, and it was no way for a man to act. I quite drinking the next day. Here is the kicker, at first I did it for her. I was seeking her approval about it, wanting affirmation about what I was doing and doing it for her because I was showing my love for her through this action. Fucking god, I was pathetic.

Change number 4 (Pre-RP):

Instead of drinking at night to unwind, I began to read reddit with the intention of self-improvement. It started with r/stopdrinking. I don't believe I was an alcoholic, but that sub gave me a new perspective on life and made me realize my hobby was alcohol or events revolving around alcohol. Even without drinking, my wife and I still fought all the time. She was still cold, unloving, and just a general bitch to be around (I understand why now and accept it was my fault). I still googled “wife is a bitch” at night. It somehow lead me to r/deadbedrooms. My bedroom was not dead, but it certainly was nothing to brag about. But more importantly, dead bedrooms somehow in April of 2015 got me here! Holy fuck, it was like lightening striking. “Why is my wife a bitch?” Here is the answer, you look at him in the mirror every day. I started to get my shit together.

I began to read. I read the side bar. I read the 101. I read the advanced material. I read this sub and TRP. I started with MMSLP and it was by far the most relevant 101 material for my situation. The most influential book was not read until early this summer, The Rational Male. The Rational Male should be required reading for any man with a pair. In any event, I started to read and I have not quite reading yet. This is a life journey, remember that.

Change number 1(post-RP):

At first the change in my business was slow because I had to totally transform it. However, it is wonderful what a dedicated male can do. Business started flooding in, and I noticed I used Red Pill principles in client interactions. I went from 2014, my worst year financially, to 2015, my best year financially. 2016 blows 2015 out of the water. I own this sub and the great stoic advice a debt of gratitude for my current financial success, thanks guys!

Change number 2 (post-RP):

I loved playing on my new soccer team. Once I became Red Pill I had a better understanding of the socialization and dread aspect of joining, so I actually joined a second soccer team and made tons of friends. I go out with the boys (old friends and new friends) all the time now. It is never too late to make friends, just get involved and it is easy. And of course, once I did find this sub in April/May of 2015, I started the thing that literally changed my life. I started to lift! I dicked around at first, but finally got on a program. Stronglifts will make you strong as fuck. Looking in the mirror is fun. The attention from women is mind blowing. The confidence boost cannot be understated. Lift!

Change number 3 (post-RP):

I realized I enjoyed life more without alcohol in it. I also realized I had quite drinking for the wrong reason: her. I rededicated myself and this time did it for me. Once I internalized that not drinking was something I wanted to do, I flourished. Surprisingly, I am more social and fun to be around without booze. I am never too hungover for the gym. I never lose control of my emotions like I did pre-RP. This advice is not for everyone, but it did in fact help me.

Change number 4 (post-RP):

I call this change internalization of frame. Really, this is the point of the the post. My wife did not become sweet and nice overnight, just like I didn't change over night. If you look in my post history, my last post was about a main event after she returned from a two week vacation. I realized I was completely happy without her at home and would be just fine without her, and she came home as cold and bitter as she was pre-PR. That night I dropped a nuke and meant every word. I gave myself a deadline of January 1st for the marriage to be enjoyable or I was moving on. Her behavior improved significantly after the main event, but was still not acceptable for what I envisioned for my life, even one year after I had adopted the Red Pill.

It took another mini-episode about a month later where I again had to hold frame and explicitly tell her what was expected of her for it all to finally sink in. After this mini-event, I contacted prominent divorce attorneys. She didn't know this, but it is almost like she could intuitively sense it. For the last three months, my marriage has maintained a level where it is a net positive in my life. It is the best it has ever been.

The journey has almost been two years now. There was never a quick fix. Some marriages, like mine, will not change overnight once you start acting like an alpha. Some women will never change, and you cannot make them change. You can only change yourselves and control your own destiny. After the main event this July, after I set a termination deadline, after I spoke to divorce attorneys, things changed. But there was also the pull. I was a better leader, I was more fun to be around, I was not drunk, I was sexy and athletic, I had friends, women hit on me, my wife found me sexy again. There was a push and a pull. There was a long process. Ultimately I got the ship heading in the right direction and intend to keep it that way.
One of the younger kids in my platoon is having serious issues with his wife. She is fat, disgusting, and lazy. I told him that he is leaving his house and coning with me to talk about it. We find a quiet stop in a bar and I start telling him some basic RP truths (Lifting, AWALT, SMV, covert contracts) and he is looking thoughtful, and enthusiastic. Then it happens, one guy starts standing next to us, listening, nodding his head. Then another, then another etc. Before long there were no less than 7 people around me, asking questions, listening. I get a phone number shoved I to my hand by a post wall slut on the GNO and she pretty much yelled in her drunken sloppiness that "You need to fix my husband! He is suuuuch a pushover, and lazy, blah blah blah!" To which I said "its not up to me to fix your husband. Each man must improve on his own initiative. But maybe if he had a loving wife at home, instead of at a GNO talking shit about him in front of other men, he might not be such a lazy person. Maybe you shouldn't be such a nagging harpy to him. Thanks but no thanks, you may go now." It was surreal. What started as me talking to my new kid almost turned into a group therapy session. I got some numbers from some guys and will check in on them in a week or so. As per FC rules I never mentioned RP but talked about MMSL, and The Rational Male.

Has this ever happened to any of you guys?

Stay manly, gents.
I've seen a lot of comments lately about what it means to be a leader. So often men think being a leader means micro managing every detail of your household. This isn't leadership. It's coddling and yes you can coddle your wife.

I work in the industrial sector. Sure security isn't at an all time high, but I make good money doing it and I like what I do. In typical fashion, we go through a fair amount of supervisors. There are 3 different types.

The Dumbass (drunkin captain)

- This is the guy who really has no concept of what's going on. He can't really organize anything. He defers to everyone on what he should do. People like him, but they don't respect him. So predictably, he gets taken advantage of. People use him kindness as weakness to get what they want.

The Micro Manager

- This guy has a good concept of what's going on. He over organizes everything. He steps on people toes trying to make everything run as smooth as possible. He pisses his employees off with his pretentious attitude. People don't like him or respect him. None the less, his ship sails and it gets to its destination, because people have been clearly tasked on what needs to be done.

The Leader

- This guy also has a very good concept of what's going on. Unlike The Micro Manager though, he gives people the space they need to do their jobs, while also solving any problems that they may encounter. People both like and respect him. There is an unspoken agreement between him and his employees. The workers know that he is accountable for failure, but because they respect him so much, they do their best in an attempt to keep him as their supervisor.

You can probably guess which one is the most successful.

Becoming The Leader

As with the leader in a managerial sense, you need to take responsibility. Your wife needs to know that if she makes a decision and it fucks up, you'll own it. You still need to reward when she does well, but you can't punish for mistakes. The punishment for a mistake is you doing it yourself next time. If your dread game is on point, this will be enough.

Over time you will cultivate a confidence in her that she can make decisions on her own and because she knows you'll fix any potential fall out, she makes them out of a positive frame (your frame) and is more likely to succeed.
If your wife can't get a vehicle to a mechanic and get it fixed because you're unavailable, then you're failing. Maybe she makes a mistake? Is fucking up your plans to come wipe your wife's ass better than fixing it when you are around next?

If you think being a Leader is making every fuckin decision in the household, you got your shit twisted homie.
Kudos to /u/vandaalen for putting me onto this.

I believe that the definition of definition is reinvention. To not be like your parents. To not be like your friends. To be yourself.

Completely.

When I was young I had no sense of myself. All I was, was a product of all the fear and humiliation I suffered. Fear of my parents. The humiliation of teachers calling me "garbage can" and telling me I'd be mowing lawns for a living. And the very real terror of my fellow students. I was threatened and beaten up for the color of my skin and my size. I was skinny and clumsy, and when others would tease me I didn't run home crying, wondering why.

I knew all too well. I was there to be antagonized. In sports I was laughed at. A spaz. I was pretty good at boxing but only because the rage that filled my every waking moment made me wild and unpredictable. I fought with some strange fury. The other boys thought I was crazy.

I hated myself all the time.

As stupid at it seems now, I wanted to talk like them, dress like them, carry myself with the ease of knowing that I wasn't going to get pounded in the hallway between classes. Years passed and I learned to keep it all inside. I only talked to a few boys in my grade. Other losers. Some of them are to this day the greatest people I have ever known. Hang out with a guy who has had his head flushed down a toilet a few times, treat him with respect, and you'll find a faithful friend forever. But even with friends, school sucked. Teachers gave me hard time.

I didn't think much of them either.

Then came Mr. Pepperman, my advisor. He was a powerfully built Vietnam veteran, and he was scary. No one ever talked out of turn in his class. Once one kid did and Mr. P. lifted him off the ground and pinned him to the black board. Mr. P. could see that I was in bad shape, and one Friday in October he asked me if I had ever worked out with weights. I told him no. He told me that I was going to take some of the money that I had saved and buy a hundred pound set of weights at Sears. As I left his office, I started to think of things I would say to him on Monday when he asked about the weights that I was not going to buy. Still, it made me feel special. My father never really got that close to caring. On Saturday I bought the weights, but I couldn't even drag them to my mom's car. An attendant laughed at me as he put them on a dolly.

Monday came and I was called into Mr. P.'s office after school. He said that he was going to... show me how to work out. He was going to put me on a program and start hitting me in the solar plexus in the hallway when I wasn't looking. When I could take the punch we would know that we were getting somewhere. At no time was I to look at myself in the mirror or tell anyone at school what I was doing. In the gym he showed me ten basic exercises. I paid more attention than I ever did in any of my classes. I didn't want to blow it. I went home that night and started right in.

Weeks passed, and every once in a while Mr. P. would give me a shot and drop me in the hallway, sending my books flying. The other students didn't know what to think. More weeks passed, and I was steadily adding new weights to the bar. I could sense the power inside my body growing. I could feel it.

Right before Christmas break I was walking to class, and from out of nowhere Mr. Pepperman appeared and gave me a shot in the chest. I laughed and kept going. He said I could look at myself now. I got home and ran to the bathroom and pulled off my shirt. I saw a body, not just the shell that housed my stomach and my heart. My biceps bulged. My chest had definition. I felt strong. It was the first time I can remember having a sense of myself. I had done something and no one could ever take it away.

You couldn't say s--t to me.

It took me years to fully appreciate the value of the lessons I have learned from the Iron. I used to think that it was my adversary, that I was trying to lift that which does not want to be lifted. I was wrong. When the Iron doesn't want to come off the mat, it's the kindest thing it can do for you. If it flew up and went through the ceiling, it wouldn't teach you anything. That's the way the Iron talks to you. It tells you that the material you work with is that which you will come to resemble.

That which you work against will always work against you.

It wasn't until my late twenties that I learned that by working out I had given myself a great gift. I learned that nothing good comes without work and a certain amount of pain. When I finish a set that leaves me shaking, I know more about myself. When something gets bad, I know it can't be as bad as that workout.

I used to fight the pain, but recently this became clear to me: pain is not my enemy; it is my call to greatness. But when dealing with the Iron, one must be careful to interpret the pain correctly. Most injuries involving the Iron come from ego. I once spent a few weeks lifting weight that my body wasn't ready for and spent a few months not picking up anything heavier than a fork. Try to lift what you're not prepared to and the Iron will teach you a little lesson in restraint and self-control.

I have never met a truly strong person who didn't have self-respect. I think a lot of inwardly and outwardly directed contempt passes itself off as self-respect: the idea of raising yourself by stepping on someone's shoulders instead of doing it yourself. When I see guys working out for cosmetic reasons, I see vanity exposing them in the worst way, as cartoon characters, billboards for imbalance and insecurity. Strength reveals itself through character. It is the difference between bouncers who get off strong-arming people and Mr. Pepperman.
Muscle mass does not always equal strength. Strength is kindness and sensitivity. Strength is understanding that your power is both physical and emotional. That it comes from the body and the mind. And the heart.

Yukio Mishima said that he could not entertain the idea of romance if he was not strong. Romance is such a strong and overwhelming passion, a weakened body cannot sustain it for long. I have some of my most romantic thoughts when I am with the Iron. Once I was in love with a woman. I thought about her the most when the pain from a workout was racing through my body.

Everything in me wanted her. So much so that sex was only a fraction of my total desire. It was the single most intense love I have ever felt, but she lived far away and I didn't see her very often. Working out was a healthy way of dealing with the loneliness. To this day, when I work out I usually listen to ballads.

I prefer to work out alone.

It enables me to concentrate on the lessons that the Iron has for me. Learning about what you're made of is always time well spent, and I have found no better teacher. The Iron had taught me how to live. Life is capable of driving you out of your mind. The way it all comes down these days, it's some kind of miracle if you're not insane. People have become separated from their bodies. They are no longer whole.

I see them move from their offices to their cars and on to their suburban homes. They stress out constantly, they lose sleep, they eat badly. And they behave badly. Their egos run wild; they become motivated by that which will eventually give them a massive stroke. They need the Iron Mind.

Through the years, I have combined meditation, action, and the Iron into a single strength. I believe that when the body is strong, the mind thinks strong thoughts. Time spent away from the Iron makes my mind degenerate. I wallow in a thick depression. My body shuts down my mind.

The Iron is the best antidepressant I have ever found. There is no better way to fight weakness than with strength. Once the mind and body have been awakened to their true potential, it's impossible to turn back.

The Iron never lies to you. You can walk outside and listen to all kinds of talk, get told that you're a god or a total bastard. The Iron will always kick you the real deal. The Iron is the great reference point, the all-knowing perspective giver. Always there like a beacon in the pitch black. I have found the Iron to be my greatest friend. It never freaks out on me, never runs. Friends may come and go. But two hundred pounds is always two hundred pounds.
It’s not often you get the privilege of being present for someone’s death. If you’ve never faced it you will be surprised at the power of the experience. In the past, I had the experience of caring for a close relative in the last days of his life, a man that had a formative effect on me growing up, a good man.

It was a long journey. I drove through the night and got a hotel in the early morning hours. I woke up and drove over to the house where he was dying. I knocked and his daughter opened the door, she saw me and started to cry without a word. I wrapped her up tight and saw the look in her eye that I was needed.

Leading the Weak

I descended the stairs and turned the corner to get my first glimpse at death. This strong and sweet man I had grown up with was now a shell of his former self, gaunt and tired. The moaning when he breathed was haunting and I can still imagine it today. His strength had deteriorated so much that he could no longer hold his vocal cords back.

He was suffering and he was selfishly moved home to die with his family, four women of differing personalities. There was lots of crying, inaction, and emotional moments on behalf of his girls.

I had to stoically take charge from the moment I got there and took it upon myself to make his last moments as comfortable as possible. I had to change his bedding, jury rig broken medical equipment, hold his cock while he painfully peed into a bucket, make sure he was getting regular pain medication, hold his hand and comfort him.

The room filled with a vile smell as a piece of medical equipment failed and I had his fluids all over my hands as I worked to fix the problem without experience. The women wretched. I put them in charge of making sure the aroma therapy machine was stocked with oil. His wife of 40+ years told him that he was always right.

I learned that if at all possible, make sure you have someone you trust to take action for you as you endure death.

Endurance

Endurance is the way of men, the power of enduring an unpleasant or difficult process or situation without giving way. Men do not give way, even when enduring death, and death is inevitable. Your actions and decisions in life will live on well after you are gone, make them lasting!

The dying man still had his brain and intelligence inside his failing body. I held his hand while we talked about his favorite sports in his moments of consciousness, I told him I loved him.
Out of the blue and without context he told me,

| “I must have wished myself dead 1000 times.” |

I nodded in agreement and left it unspoken.

You know those times when things don’t go right; a project fails, your wife cheats on you, you suffer loss and all hope is lost. I’ve experienced that hot flush in my face when you feel you can’t take one more ounce of stress or can’t make sense of the information in your head.

The regrets and thoughts of a dying man taught me that men endure. We face failures, suffering and loss with courage, incredible effort, and resiliency. When you are on your deathbed maybe you will think back on all the times when you wished you were invisible and didn’t take action, gave up, or took the easy way out. The clock has always been ticking and there is no one coming to save you.
I have picked up the baton dropped by BPP in 2015 when the MRP Basic Class was completed. The Basic course is now available (in order) as a playlist on BPP's Youtube Channel:

https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCRCcXsjScfwYHP5kHJqNbg

The "Advanced Course" Playlist by RPC on the same channel already has 3 videos that incorporate my Coaching experience and a Gottman Focused therapy approach viewed through a Red Pill lense. The 4th video will go up today and I will be putting out weekly content from now until I run out of things to say. I wouldn't hold my breath!

RPC Married Red Pill Advanced Class

Week #1: Introduction to Red Pill Coach and Coaching: Topics include Why the name "Red Pill," what is Coaching and how is it Different than Therapy and Marriage Counseling

Week#2: Introduction to Fight or Flight (Flooding) in Marriage

Week#3: Two MRP Mindsets that Control Flooding: DNGAF & STFU

Week#4: Five More Strategies to Control Flooding

Week#5: The 4 Horsemen of the (Divorce) Apocalypse: Criticism, Contempt, Defensiveness, & Stonewalling.

Week#6-?: Taming the Horsemen: Harsh and Soft Start Ups

Week#??: Taming the Horsemen: She's Just a Girl Brah! Chill!

Week#??: Taming the Horsemen: Stonewalling as a Conscious Tactic

Week#??: Repair Attempts

Week#??: Assuming Good Intentions

I will also put out content such as interviews with prominent manospherians, MRP/TRP Moderators, and social commentary rants. Comments, thoughts, and ideas for future episodes are always welcome.

I waited until I had some decent content before posting this so please bear with me on the first 2 vids! I am still working through learning how to use the video editing software, how to film, arranging the lighting, and getting back into the swing of teaching and lecturing. I almost forgot how much I love it!
A Process for Letting Go of Anger
by cj_aubrey | March 24, 2016 | Link

TL;DR - This (very long) post outlines a process for letting go of anger (and a lot of other things). Broadly, it involves writing everything down in specific format, analyzing it to own my shit, reading it to someone, fixing things and living right in the future. In a lot of ways my emotions are a black box. Experiences go in, different feelings come out. This process opens it up, shows me how my anger works and lets me fix things.

Overview: I hope that this can help some of the men here as it has helped me. This post was prompted by an AskMRP discussion on letting go of anger. Frequently a person wants to let go of anger but cannot manage to do it via contemplation and relaxation. This is a common experience: we can't just choose to stop being angry or fearful. I can understand intellectually that anger doesn't help me, even agree philosophically that its the path of weakness, but I need to experience something in order to change my internal reality and let go of anger and fear. Its not quick, pleasant or easy, but that's what the below process does. Some anger evaporates when its seen clearly. Sometimes I forgive the people and my anger towards them to goes. Some people must be helped in order for me to let go of my anger. If I am not willing to see clearly or let go of my anger, I don't really want to be rid of it. If I'm not willing to help or apologize to someone you hate, that's normal. I don't worry about that for now. I'll be ready once I get to that point in the process. People who believe in god would do well to ask for his help but that is in no way a requirement.

There is a group of people who have to let go of their anger if they want to stay alive: recovering alcoholics and drug addicts. If they hold on to their anger it will drive them crazy, they'll relapse and they'll die. As a consequence the anonymous recovery programs have figured out how to let go of anger even in the most extreme circumstances. The general concepts of this process are borrowed from the 12 step recovery process but I think its applicable to all people. Anger works the same with everyone.

As a part of this process I'm going to fearlessly face what is in me, own my shit, learn everything I can from it, let go of the things that don't help me and try to be the strongest person I can be in the future. I think this is consistent with what we do here. Anger is a beta trait and a loss of frame. There is no circumstance where it is more helpful than peaceful focus. If you have to choose between fear and anger, choose anger. But the path of strength is neither and anger will corrode my life from the inside out in the long term. We need to be convinced of this in order to let it go.

Perspective: Anger is victim based blame directed outward at something that threatened something important to me. Sometimes this is understandable, like if someone did something stupid that threatened my daughter's safety. But that's like 0.1% of what I've been angry about in my life. Most of the time my anger is me choosing to play the victim regarding shit I should be accepting and owning. A resentment is to re-feel anger or hurt. To play it over and over again in your head. If I have a resentment there is a reason. I get something out of it. Maybe because it makes me feel safer, smugly superior or it deflects accountability in some way. When our past is accepted we no longer need to replay resentments in our head. Fear is the weaker flip side of the same victim coin and closely related.

The Process

Step 1) Write down all the Anger. Expand it. Disassemble it to see how it works and what its made of.

There is something about writing things down that makes them real. I need to make a list of everything I am angry about. I like using a password protected spreadsheet on a laptop. The spreadsheet should have 5 columns. If you have a problem with fear you can make a second similar sheet for fears. You will find that anger and fear are very closely related.

Column 1) What am I angry at. People (my wife perhaps), places, institutions, ideas. If someone did something to you in the past and you're still thinking about them negatively, that's a resentment and they probably belong on this list.

Column 2) What did they do that I'm angry about? Nothing counts here but honesty. If you're angry about something they did, write it down. Don't worry about whether you should be angry, or if its silly or childish. Write it down. But this has to be physical actions that they took. No labels like "she was being a cunt" or "all those privileged fuckers were stuck up". What did they actually do? If you are angry because someone didn't do something OK, but you need a column 4) entry that you expected them to do it. If you have something where you're angry but you cannot identify any physical action or omission, you need to ask yourself where that came from. Complete these first 2 columns totally before going on to the rest. List all things you're angry about. You need a different row for each thing you're angry about. I will have different rows for my wife denying sex and shit testing me. I might have different rows for my wife shit testing me in front of other people and shit testing me at home, if I feel differently about them.

Column 3) What was threatened? You cannot be angry without something you care about being threatened by something external. Next to each item from column 1, write down what their actions threatened. Think about the incident and ask your self really, what did you feel and what did they threaten? A list to start with is ego, financial security, sex, friendships, other relationships, career, relationships with your kids.

Column 4) My part in it. Ignore the others person's behavior entirely. We are trying to fix ourselves. For each event from column 2, what did I do, or fail to do, as a part of each of those incidents to bring them about. How did I allow the person to threaten that thing in column 3? Did I instigate something to cause the other person to react and hurt me? How could I have reacted better to the event? What unreasonable expectations did I have for this person? How could I have gotten over it quicker? How could I have let it effect my life less?
What was the other person thinking? What did I do that fell short of the standards of behavior of a perfect captain? Imagine I posted in MRP saying "I'm angry at (Column 1 person) because they did (column 2 action) and then told the whole story" what would /u/whinemoreplease and /u/TheFamilyAlpha call me out on? All that stuff.

Important Note: People who had things happen to them before the age of 14, which they are still fucked up about in adulthood generally have no part in the original event. This is also true for victims of random crimes and misfortunes. Those things should definitely be on this list as we want to heal that pain and let go of the anger and hurt. But, for instance, people who were abused as children have no responsibility for that. That being said, they are responsible for how they chose to deal with it in adult life.

Column 5) What should I have done, owned or been on top of. This is plan for the future. I'll give you a hint here. This will generally involve you owning a part of your life that you felt was threatened (from Column 3) that you previously blamed something external (from column 1) for fucking up. Again imagine you posted in MRP saying "I'm angry at (Column 1 person) because they did (column 2 action)" what would the mods/approved guys tell you that you should have done? The men here can provide you a good set of tools for owning or managing almost any element of you male life here. Read. Ask people.

I'll provide a brief example row.

Row 1 - Sex denial

Column 1) I am angry at my wife.

Column 2) I'm angry because my wife doesn't fuck me as much as I want.

Column 3) What was threatened? This threatens my ego and my sex life.

Column 4) What was my part in it? I married a woman that was not attracted to me. I did not make myself attractive. I displayed low value. I got fat. I tried to obligate and berate her into giving me starfish sex. I whined and got butthurt when I got rejected. Lots more here.

Column 5) I should have married someone else. I should have made myself attractive, studied game, displayed high value, dreaded my wife and owned my attractiveness like a man.

Step 2) Gain Insight.

If you made a thorough list you now have a blueprint for how you relate to the world. Review your list. Ask yourself the following questions.

- What patterns do I see? Do you have the same anger pattern with every women you've been with? How about every boss? If so there's something there you need to own and the individuals are probably not the one causing the problem.
Do you have unreasonable expectations that are not supported by the way actual humans behave in romantic relationships.

Look for covert contracts. Many places I'm angry at someone else for not doing something I expected is going to be a covert contract.

What am I letting someone else decide in my head? Use the ideas from WISNIFG. On my list, most places where I am angry at someone for criticizing me its because I chose to let them decide how I should feel about myself or what is acceptable for me. I have to see and then own that.

Do you recognize any patterns of behavior from the home you grew up in? Those anger patterns with your wife, how do they compare to your parents? The purpose here is understanding.

Where do you still see blue pill thinking and behavior?

Are there areas of life where you see a lot of anger? These are the areas you need to look hard at fixing.

Do you see how the individuals involved were irrelevant and that you were really just externalizing blame for the difficulties and conflicts inherent to life and the natures of men and women?

Do you understand why a woman behaved the way she did and AWALT? By this time you will probably see that you have very, very little reason to be angry at individual women.

Do you see how you were doing the best you could and its OK to forgive yourself? Do you see how other people where the same?

Other people who are farther down the MRP path than I am can probably come up with better questions than I can here.

Step 3) Read everything to someone.

This is scary. Grow a pair and do it. Go take you list and read it to a close mouthed, sensible person. Maybe your minister, uncle or male friend. I don't know why, but something about doing this will cause you to accept everything on the list. Unless they are red pill themselves they will probably tell you a bunch of things are not your fault. Don't listen to them. You are not doing this to seek their counsel, only their presence. This will not be a fun experience. Sometimes we talk about killing your ego. This is a good way to go about it.

Step 4) Making things right: Repair and Right Living

By this point most of our anger should be gone. All of the small things we were angry about should have disappeared after we wrote them down, analyzed them, saw them from the other persons point of view, realized their futility and read them to someone. Usually, at this point, there are only the more significant people left that we are still angry about. For those people we make amends. In doing this we want to resolve the mistakes of the past and set our ship on the right course for the future.

There are a few ways to do this.

- Apologizing. Look at the column 4. What's there that deserves an apology? I think we need to be careful here. In our beta past we have abused apologizing as a part of covert contracts, manipulation and validation seeking. I think that apologizing to someone you care about for your beta fuckery from a position of Alpha strength can be a positive action. However, apologizing to seek validation is not. I would be interested to get the communities opinion on when apologies are appropriate. But at this point, if I am angry at someone and I have harmed them, it is very likely that I will let go of my anger by apologizing to them for what I have done.

- Helping. Trying to do something to help someone I am angry at will frequently allow me to let go of my anger. If I'm angry at my Father, I can go visit him the nursing home every week for a while. Yes, he'll still be an asshole. That's fine. I'm doing it to help me, but in order to do that I have to legitimately help him. Sometimes I am angry at a category (race, religion) of people. I can give some money to a charity that helps them.

- Living right. This is probably the biggest category. If my wife criticized me for being unreliable, my part in that was I was unreliable, I will make amends by being reliable in the future. Alot of what we do here follows this pattern.

- Prayer. In very rare circumstances there may be some people we are still angry at even after thoroughly completing the rest of the process. Its rare but it happens. There is a technique that has been know to work where all other methods fail: pray for the person. You don't have to pray to a god or be christian. Talk to the universe then. Ask the universe to give that person all of the health, wealth, love and happiness that I have ever asked for myself. I have never heard of a case where doing this solemnly, seriously, every day for a couple weeks didn't work.
Step 5) Continue to journal.

At this point I have cleared away the wreckage of a lot of my anger. But my experience is that the previous sequence will be a revolution but this will then become an evolutionary process of growth. When new things make me angry I make a list with 5 columns. I then complete the rest of the process on that individual point of anger. Anger teaches me the weak points in my head. If I use it correctly it can be a valuable tool for improvement.

Conclusion: I hope this process can help others as it has helped me. I intend this post to be a first draft of an idea that is refined based on people using it for the purposes we focus on here.

EDIT: Added content about expectations based on input from /u/theultmatecad.
First, we were given the word of the Lord written down in Holy Scripture. We were told to worship God as one God, to be fruitful and multiply, and to love your neighbor and even love your enemies and most important, be nice to other people as you would have them act towards you. We were told in great detail and in clear and unambiguous language the model for a successful marriage.

Next we were given the Iron Rules of Tomossi which explains Frame, discretion, the consequences of waiting for sex and living with your lover before marriage, the true meaning of true love, birth control directives, and various lessons on Game.

Today I present for your delight: Bluepillprofessor's TITANIUM LAWS OF THE MANOSPHERE:

APPENDIX C: BLUEPILLPROFESSOR’S TITANIUM LAWS OF THE MANOSPHERE

*FOLLOW THESE AND YOUR LIFE WILL BE FULL AND RICH. TRANSGRESS THESE AND MANY THINGS CAN HAPPEN BUT MOST OF THEM ARE BAD AND A LOT OF THEM ARE CATACLYSMIC.

1st Titanium Law: BE ATTRACTIVE. DON’T BE UNATTRACTIVE

This is so self-evident most people don’t even think about it. That gives you an advantage. Work on increasing your attractive behaviors and attitudes and deleting your unattractive behaviors and attitudes. Sure this is blindingly obvious! Now start doing it consciously.

2nd Titanium Law: ACTUS NON VERBA- ACTIONS NOT WORDS

Corollary 1: Watch what they DO, not what they SAY. The men of the manosphere are in overwhelming agreement that you are a fool if you believe what a women tells you without verifying it by observing her behavior. This is especially true about anything related to sex. Women are mostly unaware of their sexual attraction cues and will at a minimum mislead you about this verbally. If you observe behavior this will often tell a different story. WAKE UP AND PAY ATTENTION!

Corollary 2: Women talk. Men Do. The concept of Action Not Words can almost always be broken down into 4 words: What...Have...You...Done. We get new guys commenting all the time vomiting rage, promising they are going to do this or do that. Great! Now what ACTIONS have you taken on this issue? What are you setting in motion to solve the problem? Are you in motion?

3rd Titanium Law: TINGLES UBER ALLES- Tingles Above All

If you learn to be attractive and can bring the vaginal tingles your woman will behave in a completely different way. Trust us, you will agree it really is all about the tingles!

4th Titanium Law: FEELS BEFORE REALS
This is the default condition of women. Some are more so than others but this is an AWAELT (All Women are EXACTLY Like That). If the woman feeeeeels that she is under attack or somehow blameworthy of pretty much anything you WILL get a reaction. If she feeeeeelz that you are a worthy (or unworthy) husband then guess what the reality is in her mind?

Corollary 1: Fake it before you make it. A favorite piece of PUA advice. Feelings and the rationalization hamster are just a couple reasons why girls are more prone to just go with it so that if you can pretend you are calm and cool, and sexually experienced and mysterious, then you can create your own reality.

Corollary 2: A man unwilling to lie to protect a woman’s feelings cares little for them. There are sensitive spots and we all know them. Don’t hit her there.

5th Titanium Law: YOU CAN BE HER CHILD OR HER LOVER- PICK ONE.

Many men in low sex marriages are not there wife’s lover. Guess what that makes them? No, it doesn’t matter if you make $10 million per year. What matters is which of these you pick.

Finally: Credit /u/theultimatecad and Fight Club)

6th Titanium Law: KILL YOU’RE EGO. YOU ARE NOT SPECIAL. YOU ARE NOT A BEAUTIFUL AND UNIQUE SNOWFLAKE.

You are made of the same decaying organic matter as everything else. We're all part of the same compost heap. We are all dancing monkeys in a sea of crap but it is only after disaster can we be resurrected. It's only after you've lost everything that you're free to do anything.

Corallary 1: Nobody else is "special" either. Are you so impressed with authority that you give respect and credence to all that claim it? Do you read everything you're supposed to read? Do you think every thing you're supposed to think? Buy what you're told to want? Get out of your apartment. Meet a member of the opposite sex. Stop the excessive shopping and masturbation. Quit your job. Start a fight. Prove you're alive.

Corallary 2: You are going to die. On a long enough time line, the survival rate for everyone drops to zero. You have to know, not fear, KNOW...that your going to die.

From: Saving a Low Sex Marriage: The Man's Guide to Dread, Seduction, and the Long Game
Your greatest asset is also your greatest liability
by SorcererKing | November 18, 2016 | Link

Sticking feathers up your butt does not make you a chicken. -Tyler Durdin, Fight Club

One of the things that's great about being a man is that you try to apply reason to your problems. But you know that already, because you're reading this right now, most likely because you realize you have a problem and you're seeking help. Q.E.D.

That manly reason is your greatest asset. Women will perceive a problem and immediately go down an emotional rabbit hole, basking in the feelz their problem generates. They'll hit Facebook right away and let the world know, so they can reap the validation and sympathy - more feelz. But not you, brave reader. You STFU about it and start working the problem, right?

You see, mankind is the only rational animal on our planet. (Maybe some whales or dolphins or some shit are pretty smart, but as far as I know they haven't built cities, brewed beer, or invented any damn thing, really. So fuck them. But I digress.) The problem with being the rational animal is that we tend to be the rational-izing animal as well. Our tendency to rationalize is at the core of things like the self-serving bias and confirmation bias. So you see, while the male go-to response of reason is good, if we don't use it right, it can be very bad.

For example, when we have new guys in askMRP who come in, clipboard in hand, checking boxes on the "How to be Alpha" checklist, utterly convinced they've changed their life in 15 days. We'll shit on them, call them Redpill Rambo, send them out with their tails between their legs. All good, it's how we do.

Here's where it can all go wrong: Some guys will introspect and use reason to decode the message, to integrate the feedback, and they will grow. But other guys will let their ego step in and they will rationalize instead. "Fuck those guys! They don't know me, I got it tough."

This is what women do: hamster. It's DEERing to yourself. It's letting your asset become a liability. Stop it, stop it now for your own sake.

A more subtle form of rationalization comes not from external criticism, but from fair-weather self-delusion. I see guys think they've changed their thoughts and attitudes but fall to pieces when the wife prods their frame even a little. This is because instead of doing the new thoughts (i.e. actually having new thoughts) they tried to understand and think about having new thoughts. They understand the need to think differently, they understand what the new thoughts need to look like, but they are not actually having those thoughts. They get lost in thinking about thinking about thinking differently. Hear this now: knowing what you need to do and actually doing it are not the same. And here again is where rationalizing has gotten in the way of reason: you're so busy cognitively knowing the answer that you're not living the answer. Your mind tells you that since you know the answer you must be 'doing RP.' No.

One thing to note here is that rationalization often comes from the need to protect self-esteem, aka letting your ego get in the way. Your ego will tell you shit like, "I don't need to change. This isn't my fault. She's the one who is in the wrong! It's how guys end up here claiming they swallowed the pill and are on Dread Level 42 but it's not working. Fuck all that noise. OYS.

Red pill asks you to enact real change. This is hard. This takes time to internalize. This is why we tell you to fake it until you make it. This is why we have so many readings. This is why we tell you to lift. Until this all clicks, give up this notion that you're doing it or that you're there. Trust me, you'll know when it's real.

TL;DR: STFU, read, lift. Be the ball, Danny. See your future, be your future... make... make... make it! Me? I'm a vege.

(Edit: correct the autocorrect)
This sub is about upping your Alpha mating game in your LTR. As you should know, this game is played 24/7. Here are some things I've read, learned, tried and accomplished that help my Alpha'ness at work, which also helps at home. Of course, not every thing here applies to every person, job or event. Use your discretion. It doesn't matter how important your title is, it's how important you make yourself.

- Walk Tall - Cock first, shoulders back. Doing Lat Pulldowns and Overhead Press are great exercises for this. Walk around with purpose wherever you go.

- Dress Well - There's a 20-something guy here that always wears a button-down and slacks (which is on the upper end of our style), but the shirts are baggy & wrinkled and the slacks are loose-fitting & out of style. Point is - Dress nice! Polos aren't white-collar work-chic, I don't care how many tradeshows you've been to. Slacks and a button down are my go-to. Make sure your clothes are fitted, clean and pressed. Get metal collar stays, they work. Spend more upfront on wrinkle-free shirts and save money on dry-cleaning. Get shirts that fit your frame (hint, they're not in sizes S, M, L)! If you're fit, then you need "Athletic/Slim Cut". Consider tailoring them. Get a work-sexy sportcoat and have it perfectly tailored. That will dress up any outfit. Get your shoes shined and have an insta-shine sponge in your desk. I wear a tie once a week. I only see the owner in a tie on occasion, so I'm mirroring him. Point is, look like you are a top dog or should be considered for the position. The right clothes, the right fit, the right care. Trust me, your SO will appreciate it as well.

- Talk with Everyone - I'm not saying to spend your day gabbing. Do NOT be that guy. But have a good rapport with anyone you come in contact with at work. Remember their name, position and some personal fact. Alphas tend to be extroverted. Amass your allies all over the company.

- Up Your Skills - Take a class on one thing that's important to your success. In our $100M firm, I am the known as the Excel master. It's almost more important than my degree. Find an online class or video series to learn more about some software or process that can make you more valuable in your current and future roles.

- Cleanliness - Whether your subordinates or bosses come into your office, what's the impression they get? Do they see a clean desk from someone they can trust to stay organized and on top of everything? Or do they see a mess everywhere, conveying that you're not on top of your responsibilities?
• Lead - If you're a manager with an assigned team, then make sure you're "leading" the people, not "managing" their numbers. Humans want a boss they can trust and follow. The majority of American workers would rather get a new boss than a pay raise. What kind of boss are you? If you don't have a team beneath you, then create one around you. I don't manage people now. But I did create a weekly meeting of our mid management. They were all whining about direction and clarity but no one was standing up. I'm the newest and youngest here, but I Alpha'd up, created and manage these meetings. If your leaders aren't leading the way you want, please accept that as the reality and choose to lead by example. Someday, you may actually be the boss.

• Take Notes - Always, always write down notes. Notes on your phone look like you're just playing. Notes on a pad are faster and let you keep your eyes on the audience. Never walk into your bosses office without a notepad. Whether you're an operator, sales or managers - we all know what it's like to forget a key part of task/meeting OR to try to tell someone else what to do, watch them not take notes, and watch them miss something crucial. Be reliable.

• Take the Pressure Off - Your goal for your bosses/customers is to take something off of their plate. Everyone is overworked and stressed. Let your bosses/customers know that when you touch something, that it's as good as done. They can rest easy as soon as they know that you're on it.

• Be Entrepreneurial - Start a side business at home or lead like an entrepreneur/boss at work. Unless you're in a company of 1/2 M employees where any step outside of your perfectly worded job description results in pandemonium. I've found that most customers/bosses want someone that knows how to get their assigned role done AND has a leadership/entrepreneurial quality to them. Why? People don't just turn into leaders when they get a new title, they are leaders 24/7 regardless of title and position. When you genuinely want to see the company grow, take unique steps to get there, are willing to take risks for what you believe, and see your projects through to completion ... then you're a leader.

• No Rough Drafts - A successful buddy of mine gave me this tip. There's no such thing as a rough draft. If you're showing a draft to team mates or bosses, it better look good. Make sure there are no typos, that it's visually close to the final and that you know what the next steps & feedback are that you need to complete it.

• Complete Things - Too many employees bounce between activities without finishing them. Be the team member that is known for finishing projects. In school you could get something "mostly" done and still earn a B. Here, it's either complete or worthless.

• Let Your SO Watch You Work - She supports you through the long hours, sleepless nights and career stresses. She believes in you. She trusts you to support level) the family. The women love to watch us do what we do best. I used to work at a vacation place. There was no greater power than walking around a group of bumbling tourists while I had a clipboard and walkie-talkie. I could get away with anything. It was glorious to watch the ladies tingle when I barked orders to everyone. I'm now doing the white-collar corporate stuff. Even now, my SO loves swinging by and seeing my cool office or chatting up my boss or sitting back and watching me finish up report. Point is, she supports you and (to some level) she gets the tingles watching you work.

All our MRP activities are meant to improve us from the core of our being. They're not something you turn on and off depending on whether your wife or kids are around. I used to work and crave validation for my projects as they were ongoing. RP me doesn't need those little cookies. Work with confidence that you're heading up the right path. If you're unsure, then seek clarity. Manage expectations and meet deadlines. Practice leading, maintaining frame, outcome independence and more at work. Build your careers so that your wife can get the tingles thinking about the impact you're making at work, how well you provide for the family ... and still find time to ravage her like a caveman.
Need help: My wife is convinced I am a gay man

My wife of 10 years is convinced I am gay following our sexual encounter Saturday night. We went out to a friends birthday party. She drank more than usual.

We got home at midnight, baby sitter left. Go up to our room, get ready.

I get in bed first, I bend over the bed to grab a few pillows that fell off on her side. She comes out of the bathroom and tells me to freeze.

Usually this means something important so I do. She comes over to me. Starts kissing my butt cheeks.

Starts fondling my balls and penis. Licks my balls from behind, sucks on my penis a little.

From here she does something she never has done and has never been on the table.

She starts licking my taint, around my anus and near it. With about 5 minutes of teasing she sticks her tongue in my anus and licks up and down, around .....all over.

First off, this felt incredible and turned all my buttons.

After a long tossing I flipped over, she then grabbed lube and put her finger in my anus and started massaging what must be my prostate while blowing me.

I cum hard 3 mins later.

Next day and still today she has closed off and all she talks about is how I am a gay man and we should never have been married or had kids.

Doesn't know why I hid it all along, blah blah. Not sure what to do here. Shes wrong and I only find women sexy/attractive.

Anyone have a similar experience and can help?

2.12.19

We are talking more about this and she seems to think this is a hidden secret I have always had. I'm suspicious this is, as some have said, a long walk to say we need a divorce. I'll post more when it makes sense

5.9.19

It looks like she wanted to see other people and I'm....ok with it. We are doing cuck play now. We have picked up a few men at bars and they come over and I get handcuffed or tied up and get to watch them go at it.

When they're done I finally get my release and needs satisfied, it's like a deeper form or edging.

I never thought I would be that guy but I'm sure it's just a phase for her, we still love each other more every day and our communication had gotten so much deeper.

So we are still together but things have changed!
The Charlton Heston of MRP himself, Rian Stone at #21CON last year, first public preview of his full speech.

https://youtu.be/6SGBohzHLyA

It's had a very strong response on our channel. To support the content, 21S, and Rian smash the like button and leave a comment on it.

The full speech is at 21 University which is free to join for a month, see Rian's post history for a link. If you want to AMOG Rian in person in a few weeks we also have 7 tickets left to 21CON where he will be a featured speaker of 21 over the course of 4 days, or 5 counting the new bonus day on Monday.

The full presentation will eventually drop for free on YouTube (this year).
[FR] Update- on main events and how far I have yet to go by alphasixfour | July 12, 2019 | Link

Warning as usual - long ass journal style post ahead. Read it or not. Your call. I think info is important or I would not have included it.

This is in part an update to this post:
https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/bxih8t/fr_losing_my_religion/

As well as a FR on what I believe to be my main event and an open solicitation of advice, calling me a faggot, whatever the hell you want. Let me have it guys. Time to knock the dust off and grow.

Figured out my religion was bullshit, wife still very religious- she threatened divorce - I immediately lawyered up and began gathering info (stay plan is now same as go plan) but took no action to initiate divorce... just notes.

She found out I talked to atty, had a meltdown, and now tries to re-frame me as the bad guy who is threatening divorce. Don't give a fuck, just STFU and execute.

Phase 1: once she calmed down and realized I wasn’t fucking around with her divorce threats anymore, she became submissive, fun, sexual. We’ve had sex nearly every day for a couple of weeks. Not overly passionate hysterical bonding panic sex but the dread was up and she seemed to respect me and desire me more.

As time went on frequency stayed high but quality slid closer and closer to just above starfish.

The church still pisses me off. Big anger phase that I’m trying to overcome. I’m working my way out and will tell you about it in detail if you want to know. For now, just know that I am leaving.
Fuck I once again see the need to STFU. I lose frame when I discuss my problems with the church with her because she feels so strongly about it and I get angry when she won’t look at it logically. Bringing up the church in any way is a surefire way to dry sex up for a day or more.

My inner validation whore wants her to realize I am not crazy but she’s going to just have to think what she likes while I lead us to freedom by example. A second 1000 foot rope to pull taut.

I’m so glad I have redpill. Porting the same tactics over from relationships/sex to this aspect seems to be the way to go.

Phase 2: As time has progressed we've entered a new phase where she will be bitchy, try to start fights etc. She will want to critique every conversation I have with people: "you shouldn't have said that" her hypergamy and solipsism are in overdrive.

Regardless of the fighting and general bitchiness, if I stay cocky- funny, STFU etc, she still fucks me. (you mean this redpill shit works? who knew?)

I also realize that I suck at comfort tests. Maybe it's the fact that with my increased TRT protocol I am at numbers approaching 8-900, or that I am just an autistic angry Rambo fuck, but I just tend to treat everything as a shit test (her comfort tests are shitty, so I have treated them as shit so far)

She is feeling the dread and losing her shit on a regular basis. Two days ago she sits me down and asks if I have been 100% faithful. My responses: "Why would you ask that?" followed by "If I decide to move on you'll be the first to know."

Then she asks if I have been looking at porn. (nope. porn is weak-ass shit for betas) answer laughing: "no, why?"

www.TheRedArchive.com
Now porn is a doubly big thing in the Mormon church. They are fucking obsessed with it. Mormon wives are taught that porn use is cheating and women are taught that bikinis and even bare shoulders can be considered porn. I shit you not.

They recently released 70 anti-porn videos in one day. They have support groups for the men who are "addicted" to porn (because no woman has ever looked at porn) and support groups for their frigid wives to bitch about their husbands who are addicted to porn. They create all sorts of shame which feed the beta male cycle. Gotta keep people sick so they stay in the hospital.

She then pulls up my Instagram account where I have exactly zero posts, 3 followers including her, and follow about 20 gun companies and 3-4 weightlifting tips accounts.

Among all those is some gal in another state who posts pictures of kickass guns but also is gasp wearing a low cut top and even has some bikini pictures on her Instagram. I honestly don't even recall following her and would laughingly own it if I did. It's a fucking nothing burger.

She gets one straight courtesy answer of No and then its right to asshole mode as she won't fucking let it go. "She's pretty hot babe, do you think she would let me shoot her suppressed m4?"

Cue snot and tears. I hug her but STFU.

Next morning I am trying to leave and she pulls me down onto the bed and makes me late for work. The whole time we are fucking she can't stop talking about how much she would like to watch me with another girl. (standard DEVI threesome fantasy that gets her going)

Outside the bedroom though it's back to the shit tests about this girl and bitchiness. Shit test after shit test about this person I've never met over the last couple of days. She can't take the joke when I fire back a witty remark every time. Gets pissed. Cries. Not my problem.

Her hamster is in overdrive. She wants total access to my phone and location. She wants to read all my fucking texts and deconstruct everything I say to other people and tell me what is and isn't appropriate. She rants that she is a prisoner because I haven't let her run the finances for the last 2 years and I have my own account. (she fucked up the finances for 17 years and I make the household money, her money from her job is hers to spend. Deal with it) Telling me she will never have sex with me (ignore what she says and just keep initiating and fucking her when I want to fuck)

She told me yesterday that she feels like she is showing up to work every day not knowing if she has a job or not... (good. dread is working)

I'm reasonably sure this is a multi-day main event.

Yesterday we were working in the yard and after some initial shit tests she became a bit reasonable and we started having a good conversation until a neighbor walked over and I talked to him. As he walked away within earshot she starts tearing apart my conversation and telling me what I should and shouldn't have said.

It's getting dark anyway so I let her rant while I STFU and pick up the tools and head in without saying a word. She can't let it go and follows me around the house trying to start shit. I calmly inform her that I'm not going to have my conversations Monday morning quarterbacked.

She can't let it go. Alternating between yelling and crying and the same old tropes about how bad I treat her and the instagram chick and how she is a prisoner. Fuck if these are comfort tests she ain't gonna get any comfort from me by being a bitch.

I hop in the shower and she keeps opening the shower door. I am trying not to lose it and playfully splash water on her a few times until she follows me into the shower fully clothed. Still yelling.

Now I have a weakness. She knows it too. Not only that, she actively uses it against me. I suppose i should thank her for making me stronger. I've had it since childhood and I probably need therapy. I can't stand being cornered. It's like claustrophobia but only with people cornering me and straight fight or flight response.
So here I am naked, cornered and wanting nothing more than to go berserker and kill every living thing I can touch. I finally raise my voice and tell her to FUCK OFF. She can't stand profanity. I'm not allowed to use it around her and especially at her but she needs the verbal punch in the face.

I get out and dry off and just try to STFU the rest of the night.

Again, pre-redpill a curse word would have put me in the penalty box for a few days at least.

Nope. Last night she fucked me good, came hard and I pushed some boundaries/took what I wanted.

It's making my head spin to see it all in action.

If I analyze it I think where I miss the mark is I'm still a drunk captain when it comes to overall vision. She has asked what I want a couple of times and I am so fucking autistic/ blue pill conditioned I can't articulate what I want her to be without worrying about how I sound. I still give too many fucks. I want to be ready to lay out a vision for our relationship and what she should be to me once we hit the snot bubbles and reconciliation here.

Any pro tips on how to explain to her once she starts communicating overtly exactly how you expect her to be and act?

I need to work on that.
Why I'm not afraid of divorce rape - and how to get yourself there too.

by Red-Curious | August 15, 2017 | Link

Many know that I'm a Christian, so I won't actively seek divorce. But if my spouse ever chose to leave, cheat, etc. I'm not afraid in the slightest. When beginning new cases I always give my clients an outline of all of the primary matters a court has to make decisions on and ask them to fill out in each section: (1) their ideal outcome, and (2) their bottom-line acceptable outcome. This gives me a framework for understanding the bounds in which I should be litigating.

I'm giving you guys that outline (the categories in bold), but am also filling it out with my life details so you can all see why I don't fear divorce and what types of things you should be doing to establish yourselves to avoid the fear of divorce rape as well.

ASSET DIVISION

Real Estate - We co-own a house. This is a straight 50/50 split of the equity. I'm not married to the house, so if we have to sell it, so be it. If she wants to keep it, she can take out a second mortgage to pay my share of the equity. Her keeping the house does not actually give her an advantage in a custody determination if you know how to argue that issue and as long as you relocate in the same school district.

Vehicles - I make sure that we both have comparable vehicles or that the car my wife drives is higher value than mine. She loves the humility I express in this, while at the same time I know that if we get divorced I'm going to get half of the equity in the car she drives less half the equity in mine. Nevertheless, due to a recent upgrade with the birth of our latest child (6 people didn't fit in my last 5-seater), my car is now on par in value with her minivan.

Bank Accounts - We maintain joint accounts for everything. 50/50 and done. Although not licensed as a CPA, I am more qualified to function as a forensic accountant than most actual forensic accountants utilized in my cases (I'm usually the one having to tell them how to do their job and when they missed numbers, etc.), so if my wife tries to play funny with the bank accounts, I'm on top of it. I don't scan regularly, but when I notice irregularities I can find the problem quickly and it's usually because she bought something big without running it by me first - not cool and that gets addressed with her. She hasn't done this in years now.

Retirement Accounts - I got a little clever with this one. I had my wife put a higher share of her income into retirement because her company has better benefits than mine offered. In turn, I chose not to have a separate retirement account (until about 3 months ago, for tax reasons). The result is that I will get half of her retirement if we divorce, while I have relatively little as an offset, yet I maintain the appearance for court purposes as being the one to pay the greater share of marital expenses (nevermind the fact that I have a slightly higher income).

Personal Property - This all gets split 50/50. If parties can't agree, the court just orders it all sold at auction, the auctioneer takes about 20-35% of the proceeds and the parties split whatever's left behind. In short, everyone works this out and I'd get half of the stuff. I have less sentimental attachment to stupid things, so I have a lot more leverage in knowing how to get what I really care about.

---

SUPPORT

Spousal - My wife earns about $110k/yr and I'm around $125k. My state has actually one of the least favorable support splits of any state in the country (between 50/50 for LTRs (i.e. 25+years) and 55/45 split for everything else), but because our incomes are so close (53/47) this pretty much guarantees that I'll never have to pay her spousal support.

If you're thinking of marrying someone who you know will not be able to compare to your income like this, get a pre-nup, as there are ways to mitigate spousal support for this. If you're already married to this person, you're going to have a harder time, but get them educated and/or working sooner rather than later to mitigate your losses. Other than his misinformed efforts at Christian-bashing that generally didn't advance the point of his post in any way, /u/redpillrobby just did a good write-up on this. Check my comments over there for more on spousal support. The tl;dr is not to feed into her being lazy and non-contributionary.

If she's not pulling her weight, even if you want to stay married and live together, get a legal separation and split all your bank accounts. It might cripple your marriage in the short-run, but if you want to salvage something long-term out of it, that's the best way to get it done, as you'll have a smaller spousal support obligation than if you wait it out, virtually no risk of future support if you play your cards right, and you can walk confidently in the relationship knowing that you're in it for her and not just to avoid divorce rape - which she might actually appreciate (I've seen this happen a couple times, although I admit it's rare because most people don't know of this tactic and get too far in over their heads on the divorce path).

- Another point on this: intermittent working is a fantastic idea if your wife wants to stay at home. Most professions have seasonal work hours available. Even in the law field, where there is no change in the case-load from season to season, I know several female attorneys who only work during the school year and take every summer off to be with the kids - and even the larger firms are allowing this (smaller firms like it even more because they get as-needed help without having to pay as much). Since your wife is working full-time part of the year, the fact that she's part-time part of the year doesn't diminish her income for consideration - she'll be imputed at her annualized full-time rate. This is true even if she's been doing part-time work like that for 15 years (assuming full-time hours will become available upon request or relatively soon). The fact that she maintains her credentials and is current in her profession as far as experience and practice makes the court all too quick to impute her at that full amount if she's not willing to go full-time voluntarily. So, you get a mostly housewife while still avoiding all of the negative financial repercussions of her staying at home in the event of a divorce. My wife has done this for a couple years in the past and I expect she'll do this again starting next summer and until the kids are all in school (i.e. another 5-ish years). Plus, if our budget is ever in crisis, she just tells her boss she wants to hop back into full-time and we're making the big bucks again. It's a win-win.

Child - In most states this is a straight calculation, but almost every state has deviation factors. Set yourself up for equal time rights and you can almost always cut your support at least in half by doing that. If your incomes are also approximately equal (as in my case), you won't have to pay child support at all.

---

CHILDREN

Custody - Most people mistakenly assume that custody has to do with how much time you get. This is wrong (at least in my state). Custody only has to do with decision-making. I have actually seen a case where one person was awarded sole custody but got no time with the children and the other person had 100% of the time, but no decision-making authority. It was idiotic, but it does happen. Here's the path to guaranteed shared parenting:

- Don't do drugs, alcohol, prostitutes, or general addictive substances.

- Don't bring plates in front of the kids until you've known them for at least 6 months.

- Don't physically, mentally, or emotionally abuse anymore or do anything that could be misconstrued if recorded as being such. Cussing her out by text, voicemail, over the phone, in person (especially in front of the kids) = a huge red flag that shared parenting won't work.

- Attend at least 25% of your kids' functions (doctor, dentist, ortho appointments, etc.; parent-teacher meetings; extracurricular games; etc.). It doesn't have to be all of them, but enough that she can't say you're not involved. Bonus points if you're the one scheduling these and not her.

That's pretty much it. You do those things and you're pretty much guaranteed shared parenting. If you're doing all this and she fails in any two of these areas, you'll actually be the one to get custody. The idea is to do these things better than she does.

Parenting Time - Same factors as above. You follow those, you get 50/50. This one's a bit tougher, though, as there are more factors to consider:

- Are you flexible with rescheduling things? I'm always more flexible than she is.
• Have you ever withheld the children from the other? Of course not, nor do I foresee a reason to unless she's abusing controlled substances or violent.

• Are you current on child support (if any)? Wouldn't have to pay it in the first place, but I make sure it's clear that where her income goes to things like retirement, savings, investments, mortgage, etc., my income is the one earmarked for the more day-to-day family related expenses, and this is clear from how our banking works, so I'd have docs to back it up.

• How well connected are the children to you? If you do their night-time routine every night, she'll love the break and you'll have a solid place in the kids' lives. That night-time routine is probably the single most important stabilizing factor for children and how they connect with each parent. My kids love my wife (their mom, but she's my wife first), but they have a closer connection with me because I make sure to do the night-time routine every possible opportunity, which is about 95% of the time. I also make sure to "take them off her hands" frequently. This gives her more time to focus on the menial chores around the house that I don't care for, while making her feel like she's getting a special treat by not having to deal with the kids. It's a win-win-win (1: she's happier, 2: closer connection with my kids, 3: she does the chores I don't want to do). This gives me a huge leg-up.

• How far apart do you live? Again, just make sure you relocate in the same school district and you're golden.

Vacations/Holidays - These get split evenly.

Medical Costs/Insurance - This really doesn't matter. I like to utilize my wife's insurance plan because it's better than what my firm offers, but also because if we were to get divorced most attorneys and parties are too dumb in a $0 child support case to remember to split the child-related insurance premium costs. Result? She'd end up paying this and I'd only have to contribute 50% to out-of-pocket costs of actual healthcare needs [I probably wouldn't actually do this to her because of my faith, but I'm guessing most of you aren't Christian, so there's a nice tip].

Dependency Deduction - We have 4 kids, we'd each claim 2; as each one drops off, we alternate one of the kids when there's an odd number. This is pretty typical and doesn't put me at a disadvantage.

Childcare Costs - These are allocated in the child support worksheet in my state as being by % of income. But, most other attorneys are dumb enough not to realize this, so with about 80% success when I represent the higher-earner I can get away with a 50/50 split anyway. Also, most child support guidelines will have a line to factor in the tax deduction, but many (about 90%) attorneys forget this and don't know how to take advantage of it in their cases. Pay attention to that and tweak the numbers whichever way work for you.
Although I never intend to divorce, I know that if it happens to me (I'm not ignorant of possibilities) I'm rock solid and have nothing to worry about. If my wife ever did anything to compel a divorce (left me, cheated, etc.) then I'd be in a better position both legally and in my personal life after-the-fact. In short:

- I'd get half of all the assets, and I keep more assets in her name to keep my income disposable, which puts me in the advantage.

- I wouldn't have to pay support (and I've given you all a huge trick that can help mitigate your potential future exposure).

- I'd get shared parenting with 50/50 time with my kids, plus my exposure for costs wouldn't be any more than equal.

For those whose wives are not capable of earning even close to your level, the next time you have a main event, instead of threatening divorce suggest: "Honey, I'd love to make our marriage work, but the longer I let this go on the more exposure I give myself to the risks of divorce and I'm not okay with that. Let's file for a legal separation so that we can have an official allocation of what all of our rights and responsibilities should be. Once we know where we each stand, we can keep living together and know that we're holding up our own end of the deal. And if it doesn't work out, at least we won't have to pay for an expensive divorce because it will already be done." This might end up leading her to give up and just switch it to a divorce anyway, but at least you're giving your marriage a chance while mitigating virtually all the risks - and with the intention to continue living together and work things out, these types of cases (at least for the 2 or so I've done) end up being extremely low-cost, low-argument. If you do it with the intent to live separately, though, then it ends up being exactly the same as a full-blown divorce, except at the end you're not free to marry someone else (I've handled many of these - it's a total waste).

TL;DR ...

- Assets: This is all 50/50 if you don't back down; be smart about things like tax-effecting and what's liquid and not.

- Support: Get her earning money or at the next main event file for legal separation to get a court-ordered allocation of income, expenses, assets, etc. (essentially: cut your losses sooner before they build further), then keep living together after that to work on your marriage without the fear of divorce clouding your judgment.
• Children: Act like a sole custodial parent during the marriage and your chances of getting custody (or at least shared parenting) soar through the roof.
Shit tests and main events. They are NOT container words

by RianStone | February 15, 2018 | Link

When I say container words, they are just that, empty words. You fill them with whatever emotions and meaning you want, and speak them at the other person, as if they will know what you've filled it with. It's like filling up, and writing "fragile" on a box. The other person knows what fragile means, and would assume you put their fragile things into your box. To them, a fragile box is filled with new puppies. To you, it's whiskey glasses. You'll both talk about the fragile box, but you're talking about different things.

Shit Tests and Main Events are specific terms to describe specific events. they are not interchangeable with bitchy, disrespectful, nagging, or cunty behaviour. If you're mistaking one for the other, it's because you want to be further along in your MAP than you are. Don't worry about the shortcuts, these things happen in due time.

Shit tests

A shit test is also known as a fitness test. Women are hard-wired with something called the commitment skepticism bias *(Taken from Dr Cindy Mestons book Why women have sex). And because of this hardwired bias, they assume you being a man who desires them is a facade. These tests are their way of reconciling that with being desired by a man and willing to give up the poon. She has to want to fuck you before you get this. If she doesn't want to fuck you, it's just bitchy behaviour, a cunty attitude, or plain old disrespect.

A good rule-of-thumb: If this isn't escalating, fucking, or otherwise building and releasing sexual tension, then it's not a shit test.

Main Event

A main event is that moment where a woman internalizes the idea of losing a valuable piece of man meat, and is out of options. It's her hail-mary pass, triggered by a visceral, emotional response. It is not measured by severity, consequence, or situation. It's pure emotion. From your perspective, it's a signal that it's time to give her a lifeline (or not) pull her onto your ship, and show her how to be the good woman.

Women tend to think emotion first, rationalization second. There is no rationalization here. Her whole body is screaming at her about an upcoming rejection. Women hate rejection, and build their entire lives around avoiding it. If you're on a main event, she's probably a shitty shitty first officer, past or present tense. She knows she has, even without the self awareness to articulate or take responsibility for it. And because of it, she's losing attention, affection, and commitment. Of course, those don't mean anything unless the guys absence is a loss. This is also why most men getting divorced don't get these events, instead getting continued rage from their soon to be ex. guys who are fuckable by at least 1 other woman get these events.
If it's an escalation of previous bitchy behaviour, it's not a main event. If it's threats of false accusations, it's not a main event. A main event is not there to hurt you or manipulate you. It's done because none of those womaneese tools are working, and she can feel things slipping. She won't be angry, she will be scared, and the nuance is important. If you're not good at body language, you may miss it. One thing which seems to be constant, by the time it happens, you've 50% checked out already. That checking out can be the trigger of the event.

A good rule-of-thumb: If she's throwing out snot bubbles and you're largely indifferent, it's probably a main event.
Greetings, gentlemen. I have been away for a month or so, which in internet time is equivalent to a century. Some of you may not even recognize me; such is the flow of our interwebz.

I am here to inform all interested parties that a new round of 60 Days of Dread is upon us! This will begin on Monday, April 3 and extend out to June 2, 2017. This will get you ready for summer.

If you weren't around here last year for 60 DoD, I will explain:

60 DoD is a simple program whereby you focus intensely on changing your habits and improving yourself for 60 days. You set goals up front and learn to ingrain new habits so that by the time your 60 days are up you have both made some kind of noticeable improvement in yourself, and, more importantly, developed lasting habits towards self-improvement that will be sustained and sustainable.

The sidebar contains last year's posts and serves as a guide to the areas upon which you should focus. Maybe you don't think you need to focus on some of these areas. Maybe you're already the shit in one or more of them - FUCK YOU. Set a goal anyway. You can always be better. I'm going into my third year on this sub, and if there's one thing I've learned for sure it's this: YOU'RE NEVER DONE.

So here's how we're going to work this, this year:

1. You all look at the sidebar and see the areas for improvement.
2. Starting this Monday and every Monday through June 1, I will create a 60 DoD thread where I will place the link to the content from last year, and invite all members to publicly state their goal for that area, and how they plan to achieve it.
3. Profit as a man with new powers and new habits.

Questions? Didn't think so. Get to work!

[Edit - here is the starter post from last year to help new guys understand all this.]
Grip Training

by PurpleVeteran | April 1, 2018 | Link

---

Why lift?

Lifting has many benefits, most of which are centered around masculinity:

- Becoming physically fit and healthier
- Becoming physically attractive
- Raising testosterone levels
- Discovering your limits
- Challenging yourself
- Gaining confidence

The longer your lift, your physical changes are increasing noticeable: broader shoulders, thicker legs, reduced bodyfat, and generally more masculine features. These cues are picked up by the people around you -- women are attracted to such men, and men will measure themselves against you.

With this in mind, I want to call out one area that many men don't appreciate as being an important physical cue: grip strength and forearm size. Popular culture (and trainers) may focus more on abs and pecs, but once you observe someone with thick, muscular forearms, you will want to get to work improving your own toothpicks.

My arms are fine

I'm not talking exaggerated cartoon arms like Popeye, but well-defined and vascular muscles, the perfect extensions to strong biceps and triceps (upper arm) and deltoids and traps (shoulders). Rock climber's arms.

Want examples? How about Andy Serkis in Black Panther, Chris Hemsworth, or Brad Pitt? Even these pictures of Redditors.

And frankly, rolled up sleeves demonstrate strength and capability as well as wearing a tight tee or tank top, without coming off like a gym bro. It works anywhere you can dress casual: in the office or the shop, on the golf course or at the game, running errands or at the bar.

Testimonial

I recall many years ago when dating my wife, she casually mentioned one of the things she found attractive about me were my wrists. It struck me as odd, because I really didn't have much going on there. My arms were "normal sized", but I grasped that the interest was more symbolic than physical. While driving, working with hand tools, or just rolling up my sleeves, my hands and wrists were the physical embodiment of strength, action, and confidence.

Thus, even after nearly 2 years of lifting and joining the 1000 lb club, my grip strength was still lacking. All of my deadlift PRs were made using straps, and my forearms simply never kept up with my upper body improvements. Following advice from /r/fitness, I jumped over to /r/griptraining and incorporated a basic routine into my workout on January 1st. Now, with nearly 3 months of progress, there is a measurable and visible improvement in my forearms. This has become one of my new favorite "lifts", and I have already made it a permanent part of my program.

In addition, it also helps in the bedroom. Not only does she run her hands down my back and shoulders, she now grabs my arms during sex. And I can use them effectively for dominance play, being both strong and gentle: a tight grip when I hold her arms above her head, cradling the back of her neck when I pull her to me, or lightly resting a palm against her throat.

How to start?

This isn't just about ordering a hand grip trainer for use at your desk, but performing specific exercises:

- Pinch Lift: Take 2 plates of the same size, facing each other so that the lip is inside and the flat is outside. Now use an overhand grip and pinch them together, then lift and hold for as long as possible (10-15 seconds).

- Towel training: Instead of gripping a heavy object directly to pick it up, wrap a towel around and grip that instead for your lifts. Alternately, wrap a towel around the pull up bar, and build your forearms while training your back.

- Barbell wrist curls: Starting with an empty or modestly loaded barbell, take either an overhand or underhand grip, and hold the bar so that your forearms are at about 45 degrees to the floor, the "back" of your hand is vertical and your knuckles are down. Now flex your wrists so that your hands "roll" up 90 degrees, lifting the weight, but keeping your forearms steady.

- Sledge rotations: Grip a full size 8 or 12lb sledgehammer at 4-6 inches from the head, and hold it out in front of you horizontally. Now rotate your wrist, so that the head of the hammer lifts up and over, and the sledge rotates 180 degrees, then rotate it back to the start position. The entire motion should be slow and controlled. As you progress, choke further down the handle (an inch at a time) to increase the challenge.

With each of these, find a weight that you can do comfortably for 3-4 sets at 12-20 reps, with 60 or 90 seconds between sets. The pump you will feel in your forearms is a reward all on its own, but seeing your skinny wrists thicken up will keep you coming back for more. And people will notice, because thick, vascular arms are a cue for strength and masculinity, even for those who don't pay specific attention to forearms.
The Wrong Girl
by Rollo-Tomassi | July 19, 2019 | Link

Essay:
https://therationalmale.com/2019/07/19/the-wrong-girl/

Excerpt:

The ideology of personal responsibility is the Swiss army knife of subjectivist rationalization. “Extreme Ownership” is a lot like the “just be yourself” non-response people will give you when they don’t know what to tell you about your lack of Game. It sounds like wisdom, but it’s really based on the presumption of knowing a guy must always find fault in himself before any other consideration. Guys rarely struggle with overconfidence, but tell him the solution to his problems lies in him self-deprecating more and that he can get behind.

In this subjectivism there are no outside variables. There is no intentional maliciousness from others, or extenuating circumstances, only how you react to them and what you did to bring them on yourself. All the blame for anyone’s bad condition rests on the shoulders of the individual:

- Your life is fucked up? Your fault.
- Your Game/relationships suck? Your fault for tolerating it.
- You think women are one way – a way counter to the popular norm? You’re just meeting the ‘wrong kind of women’.

Again, value judgements replace objectivity. If your life sucks it’s real easy to presume the individual is the cause of the suck. And any analysis (even the desire to objectively analyze) of other people’s will, motives or outside circumstance is always an excuse; a redirection away from owning the suck yourself.

Maybe that person was the ‘right’ one all along, you just were the wrong one for her? Self-doubt is a key element in subjectivism.
Men and Suicide
by Rollo-Tomassi | December 2, 2017 | Link

New essay on The Rational Male https://therationalmale.com/2017/12/01/men-and-suicide/

Excerpt:

There is no greater powerlessness for men than a lack of control over our own disposability.

Again, this isn’t some cry of victimhood for men – I happen to believe there’s an evolved component in the male psychological firmware that actually predisposes us to sacrificing ourselves in lieu of the security of our women and children. That’s not so much altruism as it is an inborn subroutine for protecting women that triggers in life-threatening situations. When a mass shooter opens fire indiscriminately at a crowd of people it is the men, not the women, who instinctively put their bodies between that gun and women or children, even the one’s they don’t personally know.

In the bigger scope of things, men will always be more disposable than women, and on some level of consciousness women’s hindbrains instinctively understand this. As such, women’s conscious process must find ways to reconcile this understanding in order for them to move on from men’s sacrifices. Sometimes this can manifest in the War Brides phenomenon, but I would argue that in today’s social learning environment of mass media, instant gratification of women’ solipsism and feminine-primary social order, this reconciliation takes some even uglier turns. Today, women have become very efficient in consoling each other’s solipsistic rationalizing of men’s sacrifices. In this environment of default female victimization and presumed oppression even men’s ultimate sacrifice, men’s ultimate powerlessness in their own deaths, cannot ever be consciously or unconsciously acknowledged in a state of fempowerment.

While I had this debate it occurred to me that even men’s suicides could never be attributed to anything less than their own ‘male egos’ by women, thus making them victims of their conditioning into “toxic” masculinity. Essentially, women were arguing that men would put a noose around their necks because they were socially conditioned to do so. Their suicide rate was attributable to their self-pity and inability to be ‘real men’ as some nebulous toxic masculinity had predefined for them. I thought this was kind of ironic when you compare this reasoning to the narrative shift away from ‘toxic’ masculinity to masculinity itself is toxic. This is really a stupid argument when you consider that it’s just another social convention used to absolve women of the guilt associated with men’s sacrifices. Men are hardwired for self sacrifice, but likewise women had need to evolved psychological adaptations to help them clear the red from their life’s ledger in this respect.
Starfish? No thanks.
by bismarck8888 | September 24, 2015 | Link

Yesterday, I get a text from my wife: “Sexy time tonight?” Cool, she is initiating. But, as we all know that should really read “I feel like I want sex tonight right now.” We flirt a little back and forth by text and then I cut off communication until I get home from work.

At home, we again flirt a little, but also get on with our routine. We both work, so when we get home with the two small kids there is a lot to do. Cooking, cleaning, baths etc. We finally put the kids in their room and hang out before they go to sleep. Once asleep, we cuddle on the couch and watch some TV. The problem here is after work, chores, and putting the kids to sleep, she is pretty tired. (I know, I know, she would not be tired for Chad).

At this point, we go to the bedroom, and I initiate. But she is saying stuff about being tired and getting this over with. Not exactly the hot sex I want. We begin having “sex” and she is complaining and making funny noises (something she does if she is disinterested, it is weird). I give her a look, and she keeps it up. At this point, I stop, pull out and say this isn't doing anything for me.

I have never stopped starfish sex before, but having read about not accepting it here, I thought I would give it a try. I do not act butt hurt, just act like I normally do before we go to bed, and leave the room to go read.

I bet you can guess what happened this morning. Her hamster was in overdrive all night. I awake to my hot naked wife jumping on top of me for some great morning sex. Women love rejection!

A couple of notes:

1. Moves like these are for more intermediate and advanced students. If you are new and are not getting any sex at all in the relationship, take what you can get. Do not reject sex at first, even starfish sex. I, however, didn't swallow the pill because of lack of sex. Having said that, the sex is now better and more consistent than before my red pill days.

2. It is important not to be bitter or butt hurt when pulling this off. If I had, she would not have been turned on this morning.

3. Finally, this is an example of keeping frame and letting the hamster work for you. You cannot pull this off if you don't have frame. So, keep lifting, setting boundaries, and being awesome.
Stop Being A Clown
by TheFamilyAlpha | October 26, 2016 | Link

Read the entire post @ The Family Alpha Blog:
https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/10/25/stop-being-a-clown/

One of the most necessary actions a man must take on his journey towards reclaiming his masculine nature is to accept reality for what it is and not what he wants it to be.

You see, we all want the same thing. We want life to be easy, we want women to love us the same way we love them, we don’t want to have to deal with their hypergamous, dissociative, and solipsistic behavior. But that’s not our reality, so stop wasting your limited time and valuable mental energy on trying to change the way the world works. Shift your perspective, focus on embracing reality and finding comfort in the discomfort of masculine living in a weaksauce society.

It’s October 25th 6 days from Halloween, a time where people dress up and become something else for the night. Human, non-human, beast, a character from a show or movie - it doesn’t matter because on Halloween you can be anything and it’s all in good fun. At the end of the night, the mask comes off and you’re back to being who you for the rest of the 364 days of the year. A few weeks ago the news was all about the creepy ass clowns that were terrorizing kids and people in towns across the US. This planted a seed in my mind, a seed that has nothing to do with these weaksauce fucks terrorizing kids instead of going to work. No, this seed grew and it brought me to the realization that while everyone else is only putting their masks on for this one holiday of the year, most married men are wearing a mask year round. Blue Pill married men, the unmasculine population of our wedded brothers are living clowns.

A clown wears makeup which paints on a permanent smile, whether he’s happy or not that smile is there. Beta husbands have put this makeup on their soul; they smile on the outside, but inside their heart and mind they are in pain, raging, struggling, confused, and alone.

Married men who’ve decided that once they had a ring put on their finger that they were no longer required to ‘man’ have become modern day clowns. We laugh at the dadbod, we have caricatures like Peter Griffin, Homer Simpson, Kevin James, and Phil Dunphy playing the fat dimwit schtick that married men have become. We have men saying, Happy Wife Happy Life and true cuckolds saying that their wives deserve better dick from someone else that can truly satisfy them. We’ve got men fighting for feminism and guys saying that men and women are equal in all aspects of everything….

There are groups of men in the manosphere who will say, “That’s why you don’t get married” and to a degree they’re right. But I write for my blog because I’m not willing to write off the 30 million dudes who are married. Let’s say 10% of those 30 million guys are masculine dudes, that leaves 27 million clowns out there, crying behind their smile – saying yes when they mean no and I don’t care when they *do care very much so about whatthefuckever. These are the guys who say divorce is not an option when the very nature of masculine men means divorce has to be an option because time and attention will not just be given, it must be earned and if a man’s wife refuses to be a woman of value, then she no longer deserves his time, attention, or commitment.

Gentlemen, if you’ve recently discovered The Family Alpha, TRP, MRP, or any of the other Manosphere blogs then you need to punch your ego in the mouth and take a long look in the mirror. I’m sure you’ll start to see the makeup that you’ve been using to hide your true self for all of these years, possibly your entire life.

Every time you held back your anger, dissatisfaction, or swallowed your pride and did what you were told ‘real’ men do – you put on a coat. Every time you told your wife you didn’t care when she asked you for guidance or forced her to lead because you were too weak – you put a coat on. Every time you skipped going to the gym or eating right because it was easier to sit, watch Netflix, and destroy a bag of flaming hot Cheetos – you put a coat on.

You need to begin the process of wiping it away, today. I’ve always said that masculinity begets femininity. You’ve got to wipe the makeup off your soul before you can ever expect the men and women in your life (including your wife and children) to respect you and give you the admiration that is taken by masculine men. That ‘aura’ you see around men who own their shit and own this life comes from letting your genuine soul shine and choosing to live a genuinely masculine life.

You cannot expect your sex life to increase in frequency & quality, your professional life to advance, or your interpersonal life with your wife and children to improve until you fix yourself. This means that you’ve got to choose to wipe off all those coats of makeup that you’ve used to repress your true self for all of these years.

Read the rest at The Family Alpha Blog:
https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/10/25/stop-being-a-clown/

Twitter https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha Household Leadership
by RP_SuitScholar | March 28, 2017 | Link

Just wanted to share a quick thought on being the leader in your marriage. The title of "husband" does not mean anything inherently. It is a title we have been using for a small fraction of our species' history on the planet. These days the only way having the title of husband can grant you any inherent authority is if your woman is religious or from a family that espouses traditional gender roles in marriage.

For the rest of us, there is only one option. If you want to lead your wife you must be an exceptional leader. My wife is an extremely independent alpha personality, yet follows my lead almost 95% of the time. She trusts me to make decisions for her because I make really damn good decisions for the both of us financially, nutritionally, what to do on our time off, what our plan for the next year should be. I lead in the bedroom, the kitchen, and the gym. At work this woman is undoubtedly the boss, but at home she follows my lead. I wasn't born this way, I had a previous marriage that failed and taught me a lot. I was lazy and boring and the relationship sucked as a result.

TLDR: The title of husband < Being an actual quality leader...also LIFT!
I am exhausted...

Wives phone rings around 8am on Saturday while we are still waking up in bed. One of her mom friends Sarah is calling. This is odd - must be important. She answers, and I get up and head to the kitchen for coffee. On my way out, I hear my wife say:

"Oh my God!"

Doing my thing in the kitchen, and I can start to hear the increasing sounds of crying coming from the bedroom, so I go back to investigate.

I see my wife in a sitting fetal position with the phone smashed into her face, crying. And I am not talking a couple tears crying, like buckets coming from her eyes. I ask her - What is wrong?

She puts the phone on mute and tells me "Emily just had her first period" (Emily is one of Sarah's' Daughters.) With zero hesitation, I give her my best "Confused Travolta" look (hand motion and all) and she responds with "She is only 10." This new information doesn't faze me, so continuing my Travolta look she then screams "Get the fuck out of here and close the door!"

Shocked, I leave the room while in the process flipping her the bird. This is all literally before 8:15ish and with zero coffee in my belly.

Kids come down, and we do breakfast and some outdoor stuff. Couple hours pass easily - wife is nowhere to be found yet. The crying stopped a while ago, but she was probably on the phone with her for at least an hour, to hour and half.

Dirty, I head to the bathroom to shower, clean up and officially start the day. I walk into the bedroom to find my wife still in a fetal position (laying now) and red eyes. I make it half way to the bathroom and she says, "We need to talk."

Before I can even process what was said, or turn around to face her she fires off something to the effect of (emphasis added - wall of text is on purpose as the delivery was the same):

"I am tired of you always being so physical with me, especially in front of the kids. Our kids are getting old enough that they do not need to see us kissing, or you slapping my butt in front of them. You daughter is going to think it is ok for boys to slap her butt, and your son is going to go around hitting girls on their butts. And when are YOU going to talk to them about sex anyway? YOUR daughter is going to have her first period soon and YOU have not told her anything about it. What is your SON going to DO when he starts realizing he has a PENIS and what a hardon is? He is going to get in trouble at school for touching some girls butt or come home and tell us he got some girl pregnant. From now on, NO MORE touching me sexually at all in front of the kids, no more slapping my ass, no more coming up behind me and kissing my neck, NOTHING. They have to be somewhere else for any physical contact."

Somewhere in here was my first fuck up. She literally had not taken a breath while talking so I interrupt with "You might want to take a breath before you pass out." Which of course started a completely second rant about who knows what (I stopped listening at this point) and realizing my mistake walk away in the middle of this rant, hop in the shower and get cleaned up.

Dressed, I had back out and she is still in bed, so I go over and give her a kiss on the forehead and say something like "You are a good friend to Sarah, keep It up" and disappear.

Woman gas lighted me like a MFer. Most of the day I spent thinking to myself - "Am I to sexual in front of the kids? Is she right? Nah, she can't be - Kissing isn't all that bad. We are talking a cheek peck here or there, or a light ass slap when she walks by." Then I start to think - Her friend dumped a whole lot of stress and negativity about her situation onto my wife (likely because Sarah's husband was zero help) and it found its way all the way to me. So here I am, essentially an oak (or punching bag) for two fucking women. Meh....

The rest of the day is business as usual. We had tickets to the Fantasia in downtown Fort Worth Saturday night, so we all get dressed and head out with the kids. She was pretty reserved all night, so I spent most of my energy with the kids. Things came to a head however, when we were walking from dinner to the show. Walking down the sidewalk we had to go single file for a minute to navigate traffic - so I instinctively place my hand on the small of her back to move her in front of me. Kids are in the front.

The second my hand touches her back she flips her arm back and smacks my hand away and gives me her best "look." No words, nothing. We get pass the traffic and I come up next to her and say "You smack my hand like that again, you will find yourself alone in downtown Fort Worth." and walk ahead faster to get up by the kids.

Butthurt? Pissed? Who knows? Maybe a little bit of both? Regardless I felt her behavior was out and maybe I over reacted, but the point was made, and her attitude changed. She was much nicer than the previous hour. Was this a shit test? Was she testing frame? Who knows...

Looking back, I am not sure I could have handled the situation any differently. Had I just taken the arm slap and felt like that would have been weakness, while what I said might have been a little too harsh, but meh...

The whole situation is like a foreshadow of things to come as my kids get older. I am charting into untested waters, which is fine but holy smokes if my main drama agent is going to be my WIFE thru the puberty years, FML.

So many questions to ponder with regards to the kids, their maturity, when to start talking to them more about these things, and how much is appropriate to expose them to?

Before you guys tell me, I am raping my wife in front of the kids, let me stop you right there.
We are talking butt slaps, and a kiss on the lips or cheek every now and again. Deep Kino, yeah, they are not around for that kind of stuff. I am aware she is dumping "all Kino" into the same bucket, which is why I did not attempt to DEER during her rant.

All I know is, like she said - it is all on me.
A ubiquitous paradigm of TRP is alpha fucks / beta bux as shorthand for female dual mating strategy: alpha generates the tingles and gets the quality fuck while beta provides the resources in return for little more than low/no-sex companionship. It is one thing to read about these concepts in theory, another thing to consider a wife being entertained by Chad out of sight of her husband; and truly amazing to watch it ALL unfold within a six foot space.

I went skiing after Christmas in Colorado. Skiing is a day game superrich environment. Plenty of lasses on the chair lifts, bars, and hot tubs with and without other men; but all in a very social frame of mind for a man with some game. I N-closed in all three venues with presumably single women. Nothing too special there beyond the Jamaican gal that was down to go “party” in my room right now on New Year’s Eve. I told her my wife was in the room; even though she was not (I wear my ring at all times now). This turned out to just be the warmup for the real fun on the flight back home.

I had secured pretty good Southwest Airlines seating order: B13. I saw her walk up during A-group boarding. She was 30/40s Korean woman (KW) with a smoking hot figure and shoulder length black hair. She was with a fatass dude that I am guessing was 10+ years older, although this is hard to estimate because being fat makes you look old. They were both wearing Clemson University swag. When I got on the plane I discovered my B13 board wasn’t worth a fuck as the plain was nearly full from folks that had remained on the plane Phoenix; and so my search began for either an aisle or window seat next to someone in the middle with narrow shoulders. There is KW in the middle seat with her husband on the aisle. I take the window seat. At the time, I had no intent besides sitting next to a pretty woman with small shoulders.

I open him with a discussion of Clemson’s victory (duh . . .). The three of us than discuss how full the plane was; and how the seats are too small for three grown men. She points out how she hates it when men sit next to her on the plane, and presume to take over the arm rest because she is small. I note that I chose the seat because she was small, and then proceed to spread out my shoulders and arms onto the arm rest. Her husband complained about how they had lost their emergency exit row seating by de-plane’ing in Denver. She tried to calm him down in the tone that a mother talks to a child, and he just kept whining. Through the three hour flight he would complain about a few more things, and each time she would attempt to soothe her man-child. Other than that, he mostly finger fucked his phone.

At first KW and I talked about Phoenix, the book she was reading, our kids, etc. She was playing with her hair, making strong eye contact, and touching my forearm at times to make her point. Occasionally, I would let the conversation die off and stare out the window. I could see from the corner of my eye that she was often staring at me; and given a few minutes of silence would restart the conversation. About 30 minutes into the flight she started ignoring me and talking to her husband, eventually rubbing the back of his head/neck until he fell asleep. She then went to sleep; and I read a book.
She was woken by drink service while her husband continued to sleep. She was pretty much on fire after she woke back up. We started talking about skiing and travel. She was a novice skier and every time she would mention her skiing style she would shift her arms forward and wiggle around in her seat rubbing her side and tit against my arm . . . lol. She told me how her husband bought her a condo in Aspen; and she had a wedding ring that looked like it cost a lot more than my truck (i.e. the BB was strong with this one). Her husband awoke after a while and complained how he missed snack service (she gave him her snacks of course). At this point, and often through the remaining flight she would cross her arms so that her left hand was under her right arm so that she could secretly rub her finger tips across my bicep. Now I am thinking: “how can I subtlety escalate?” I get out my phone, go to the note pad and type in my phone number and a bunch of emoji’s related to our conversation and then put the phone away. She tells me how she lost her phone at the big game in Phoenix; but it was found. Hubby hears this and dutifully looks up the UPS tracking status.

Hubby gets up to go to the bathroom. As I start thinking about my N-close line, she blurs out “do you have a business card”. Me – “no; but I would love to call you sometime enter your phone number” and hand her my phone. She enters her phone number, goes to my note pad and copies my phone number on piece of paper. Her – “I would love to get you out to Aspen, we would have so much fun”. Hubby comes back from bathroom. KW and I talked the remainder of the flight. The sickest exchange was after I told her about the plusses of taking private ski lessons, at $900 per day, she was cajoling hubby into paying for some private lessons while simultaneously stroking my bicep with her finger tips. This was so amazing to watch. There was absolutely no malice or hint of impropriety in her demeanor towards her husband. You will never know gentlemen. The three of us talked on the way off the plane like nobody had a care in the world.

I had a text from her last night letting me know that her phone had arrived.

Summary: if you’re a fatass man-child with an attractive wife; you might as well tape a sign on your back that says “CUCK ME”.
Riding into work today I had the top and doors off the Jeep, radio was up listening to Five Finger Death Punch, and I was thinking of how there was a Teacher Appreciation Week which led me to the thought, what would a Husband or Father Appreciation week look like?

My Answer?

Blow Jobs & Buffalo Chicken Wings

There are people who are going to read that and think:

- What a pig.
- Simple minded Red Pill man thinks it’s all about getting his dick wet.
- Could you just not share these private things?

To each of these I will follow the approach which has served me well for the past 11 years, I will not give a fuck about what people want me to do and I will do what I want to do.

This is the mindset men must cultivate if they’re ever to break the mold society so desperately wants to confine them to.

Blowjobs & Chicken Wings, few things make me happier so why should I be ashamed to say it?

I ended up in traffic, turned my radio down, and I realized that I was the only vehicle that you could hear tunes coming from. There was the slightest thumping from a few vehicles, but even they could only be heard when you strained.

Now, I firmly believe in meditation in motion. Sometimes my commute is silent the entire way, but rarely is that during the warm sunny days and I doubt that all of the cars, with their windows up were meditating.

Its summer time, the sun is out, the weather is great, why is everybody so fucking contained?

We can’t live our days hiding inside temperature controlled boxes, going from one perfectly comfortable box to another.

I don’t expect people to be obnoxiously blasting their radios, but god damn when did everyone become so fucking meek and passive?
Why are we so restrained and averse to living life with full expression of self?

I could go into detail as to how we’ve become somewhat reclusive in nature, deflective of attention which may subject us to criticism, or the despicable notion that we must “fit in” (conform) to be accepted by our peers but I will do none of these things as it doesn’t matter why we got to this point, all that matters is that, after reading this, you break free from the spell society has cast upon you.

If what you’re waiting for is permission, I am granting it now. You are allowed to turn your radio up, enjoy sex, and play with whatever toys you want.

Rock & Roll

Put your window down and turn your music up.

I’ll be honest, there have been quite a few rides where I’ve had the radio off, but my windows are down and my smile is on.

In 31 Days to Masculinity there is a day that calls for you to release a primal yell. This is one of the favorite days and challenges by-far because it allows you to fully release that pent up stress, frustration, and joy; it allows the soul to breath.

Turning your radio up from time to time has the same effect on your heart and soul; sometimes it just feels good to rock the fuck out to whatever kind of music you like.

I’ve sung Frozen, Moana, Queen, Slipknot, etc. Whatever fits your mood that day, belt it out. It’s OK to lose yourself to the tunes, even better when you’ve got the family in the car and they see that they’re allowed to be a little less serious in life as well.

Your family will follow your example, not your advice.

Lighten the fuck up and get back to listening to loud music without worrying whether people will judge you for singing along with Nick Lachey and 98 Deg or trying to figure out, what does the fox say?

Sex

Men love sex, we think about it all of the time yet we’re supposed to repress that nature and instead make sure we let our women know that we love them for what’s on the inside.

As a man, you need to embrace the raging sexual drive you have inside of you and most importantly stop choosing porn over possible rejection. Engage with real women, get out there and live. The pixels do not protect you from rejection, they destroy your chances at ever living.

You know you want to fuck, so go out there and fuck like you never have before. Let your girl know you want road-head. Let her know you’re a sexually driven man who lusts for women.
I’ve been married 8 years and when the kids aren’t around there are times where we’ll go at it like it’s our last night on Earth.

You keep your girl craving you by showing you’re not a castrated male who is content with holding her purse.

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
A Wolverine History Lesson
by RedDreadWolverine | March 24, 2017 | Link

I've been away for a long while and figured it was time for me to return. I've been training and building my life into what I envisioned after I realized I had some semblance of choice and power over what actually happens around me. I've put in the work to tweak the minor things that comprise my daily functions. I've automated a lot of basics. I've been the oak for a while now. But some of the lessons I've learned this past year in addition to everything I've learned here have been weighing on me. I've had to realize not every other man knows these things. So let me give a brief history of my exploits since I began here so we have a jumping off point.

I started my marriage as a kept man. Everything my wife knew about me was virtue signalling and lies designed to impress her sensibilities. I lied about everything and misled her as to who I was. After we said I do I began to fall apart and crumble. I gained 100 lbs in our first year of marriage, stopped working, knocked my wife up, and then couldn't be bothered to even help her with the kid at all. I completely bullshitted her as to who I really was. Who I really was... was a guy that expected others to handle my shit for me. Who I really was... was a guy that couldn't even hold down a job because I couldn't deal with even constructive criticism. But God dealt me a hand that most of you could only wish for. Basically a unicorn in a sense. A woman not completely governed by her feelings but a code of moral ethics and somewhat solid logic. And she married me, an emotional manipulating do nothing irresponsible piece of shit. I really lucked out being married to her. She's never threatened to leave me or take my kids. She's never tried to control me beyond just wanting to see me take responsibility for the shit that comes out of my mouth and make something of myself. As far as she was concerned she was only gonna be married once and she had resigned herself to us being a sexless joyless bullshit marriage.

The sexless part for me as for many of you was why I ended up here. Dead bedroom eventually brought me here somehow. And around the same time I found out about the ketogenic diet and paleo. And I lost 165 lbs eventually. I started putting in work. Lifting, running, shooting guns, archery, taking tactical combat courses, enlisting reserves, making my wife stay home with the kids, getting promoted at work, and hell I even changed political philosophies. I went from anarcho commie to fucking balls to the wall Capitalist pig and even started my own business. I've also started a men's group and redpilled plenty of men in person. People have asked me over and over how I did that. I lost my fucking job and started my business and stopped caring what people thought about me.

How did I stop basing my value on external validation? I came in here and was honest. So honest it hurt. And did it over and over until it stopped hurting. Whinemoreplease did me a great service. I carried that antagonism that said, "Ego is the enemy, stop being a faggot pussy." I stopped censoring myself. I straight up told my wife what I thought of her shit with no filter. I didn't tailor my words to manipulate people into doing what I want like I was some character on game of thrones or something. I started seeing the truth about how things really work and then spoke plainly about it.
I'm here to tell you that most of the dumb shit in your life is due to you believing some stupid lie about yourself. Most of the things that make you miserable is your truth avoidant attitude. It's the protection of your fragile pointless ego that never did anything for me you but make you a shittier version of yourself. You should hurt every fucking day if you're doing it right. Life is hard for hard men, and we welcome it. Seeking comfort and convenience is not going to lead you down the path to fundamental truths about who you really are. You can pretend to be that person or actually do it but you can't have both.

Once you make that fundamental change, you sit down at the negotiation table with the ability to get what you want as long as you have the balls to walk away from sunk cost fallacy. Once you establish outcome independence it becomes a fun game, instead of a crippling emotional ordeal of life or death. Those of you who are here seeking answers... you can't just pick and choose bits and pieces. If you want that relentless indomitable spirit that comes from actual masculinity, you have to surrender all those comfortable and convenient lies. I've never been in danger of losing my whole family because of my failures. But I was unhappy with who I was. I was unhappy with my dishonesty with myself. But those of you who are on the verge of losing everything... even if you do you can always start over. I'd give up everything I have right now before I would go back to being the idiot I was before I came here. There's value to what is taught here. So shut the fuck up, read the sidebar, and listen louder when the men speak to you.
The kids are sleeping over at their grandparents. The wife is working. Time to break out some Battlefield 1 right? Fuck you. Time to get to work on dread level 7.

Went out to the dance club tonight, first time I've been to one solo in 10 years. You see, I've been getting into EDM lately and have been searching for a location with the right beat to let loose. After pre-gaming at a few places I entered the scene. The plan was to scope out the place, dance with some women and just see what's what in general. A party comes in with about 3 guys and 5 girls. I engage them but it's early and the girls are dancing with each other. Not too long after I meet two of the guys at the bar and learn the following story:

One of the guys is here with his wife. The other is currently getting divorced. Both about my age. The soon to be bachelor is telling the hubby how he's buying drinks for the hubby's wife, commanding that she drink them, saying "you're not allowed to put them down". Saying something along the lines of "I know how it feels man, I got you". I cannot help it, I start cracking up. I join in their convo and this dude explains he's getting divorced, that he's having alternate hot ass do things to him now that he's never gotten before. I let the married dude know that his wife is following Mr. Alpha here because he's commanding that she do things, and not asking. And Mr. Alpha goes on to explain the following: "The second you don't care anymore is the second they all jump on your dick.". Gotta admit, the man was exuding confidence. The fucker bought us all a shot, then headed to his VIP area. And last I saw he had a woman on his lap talking into her ear. Meanwhile I locked eyes with a girl and grabbed her hand to head to the floor.

Whether the man found the red pill or acquired the tools through his experience with the fallout of marriage/divorce will forever remain to be seen. But there it is gentlemen. Raw and in the field. The second you walk your own path, the second you don't care what path anyone else takes, is the same second the world opens up to you.
Whose Woman Is This? Episode II
by anythinginc | September 7, 2017 | Link

Welp, apparently it is time for our quarterly edition of "Whose Woman Is This?"

During the first few months after [our year old son] was born, my husband had a mental breakdown. He couldn't handle Fatherhood and I had no support whatsoever.

Man that sucks, I sure hope he gets healthy and becomes an active participant and leader in his family and his child's life.

Please understand, Hubby has taken a backseat in life for as long as I've known him. He's always been lazy and unmotivated, so for our entire relationship I've been the "take charge" person, because if I didn't, nothing would ever get done. My sister-in-law said it best when she said, he's always needed someone to push him...

Well, he has a long way to go, but that sounds about right. Many of us started out in a similar place before we found MRP. Thankfully, we all soon learn to accept that we can only blame ourselves, accept that responsibility, and begin to "own our shit," become valuable, and take charge of our lives and fix ourselves. Surely that is what this woman watched her man begin to do...

He follows the 'marriedredpill' subreddit...his behavior became increasingly disrespectful and just downright mean....The past 6 months feel like mental and emotional abuse and I don't know how I can ever trust him again.

Oh. Well shit.

Surely he began to take care of his house and his newborn right? Started going to the gym and eating better right? She watched him blossom into a less needy and more self-actualized person she enjoyed being around right?

Examples from over the last 6 months...

Let's see...

One night he kind of hinted that he wanted sex, but it was vague so I flat out asked him. His response, "Only if you're into it. No sex is better than bad sex"... Started dressing up and insisting on leaving the house for weird reasons...When we argue, he'd just tell me the conversation was over and leave, leaving nothing resolved...He also once laughed at me when I was telling him how upset he made me...He'd make plans without asking me and would basically just tell me that we're going...If he thought I was ordering him around because I didn't say please or thank you, he'd go on a power trip...He said he was trying to "train" me.

I think some of this would be fine, or even the right response, in the right context and/or done the right way, but they can be death knells if you aren't valuable, attractive, and handing your shit, or at least generally liked or respected...but look back at that first quote of her's...this man is not, and he didn't fix himself, he started on her.

Maybe there are some positives in there that she failed to notice...

I got the phone call from his counselor, letting me know that he decided to quite after only six sessions of therapy. He seemed a lot happier, and he was helping out a lot more at home. But, when he quit therapy, he discovered the sub, which hasn't been healthy for our household at all.

Dude thought he was "choreplaying" and cut it out, versus realizing it was HIS HOUSE and taking care of HIS shit and HIS kid. So he actually went backwards according to her. Nothing about going to the gym, nothing about taking care of the house, nothing about parenting. Let that sink in. If you think you are making progress, remember that this woman didn't see shit for six months.

I think it's ultimatum time. Or else, it's time to move on, and start consulting with a divorce attorney.

That sucks; but it looks like he'll survive, maybe he has some value after all, we just won't see him around here anymore. At least he left a great lesson for the rest of us.

What are you doing here?

How do your actions look from a third person perspective? How can you be, likely objectively, lazy and unmotivated, and instead of tackling that, decide to fix or "train" your woman?

He has become friends with a few of these guys...his comments and conversations with people from that sub...He seemed to really enjoy posting and commenting on that sub, based off of everything I read. It seemed like their conversations were full of laughing, good times, and advice been giving back and forth on their situations. I know that he has had anxiety issues from time to time, like when he suffered a nervous break down, and I made sure he went to therapy to get some help.

I have no doubt many of us enjoy our time here, and I think this is an important and helpful place, but you can't be a paper tiger or this is what happens. You can't look around or ask for the "optimum MRP response" to every scenario and autistically follow it if you have no merit or game.

- Lift
- STFU
- Own your shit
- Be attractive, don't be unattractive

I want to add that I think the "valuable/attractive" variables can change depending upon your stage of life. Even the most hardcore of us acknowledge the intricacies of pregnancy and infancy. If you are not already near the top of your game, if you have not already "created your slut," now is not the time to start sprinkling alpha on it, playing dread games, or using gimmicks. Many of us have pregnant partners, or a new baby in the house, and helping our pregnant partner, owning our shit, and/or being a great parent, is the most value-defining characteristic of this stage. Can you be a sexy, valuable, attractive man to your partner without being a helpmate or great dad? Sure, but if you're starting here and now, you likely didn't have what it took before pregnancy/infancy, and now you're a shitty partner and parent on top of that...so take the easy and safe partner/parent value points at this stage if you value living in the same house as your child for the near future.

And this stage is the fucking perfect time, an expected time, for a man to turn his shit around!

| Jimmy was a kind of a dud before little Suzy was born, but afterwards he really stepped up, the house was taken care of, he started taking better care of himself, he has been a great dad, I couldn't imagine doing it without him... |

So again, get the easy SMV/MMV points, own your shit, STFU, lift, don't fix her, fix yourself. Pregnancy/infancy can potentially set the stage for the rest of your life, don't fall behind, take charge and lead, you shouldn't need to be pushed; push yourself; when the going gets tough, that is what we are here for.

I don't really care who this is, it is any of us and all of us. I do hope the man in question fully recovers from his breakdown and learns to be healthy, and I wish him and his family the best.

Shout out to u/sexyshoulderdevil for his top comment last time:

| The post could be fabricated nonsense, but it's still a good learning tool...If your wife is posting or thinking that type of shit, you have missed the entire point of this place...So you better back the truck up and really look at what you're doing. Everyone watching your journey from the outside should simply see a man starting to take better care of himself, being more charismatic, and working to be a better leader. |
How to: My thoughts on approaching
by prarrott | June 3, 2017 | Link

Since the response to my last post was primarily pretty positive, and over the past couple months several of you have PM'd me with questions on my particular approach to pick-up, I thought I'd outline some things here. The people here have helped me so tremendously take ownership over my life and change my stripes from victim to leader, if this is one small way I can give back I'm grateful to.

I thought about some type of moral disclaimer since there was some backlash to my last post in the comments and my inbox, but I decided against it. What I will say is that I am going to stop at the attraction/comfort phase, because that's where I personally stop. I have kissed a few girls, but that's it. I can't speak much to the seduction phase or how to f-close. I just enjoy the company of other women and conversation with them, and the challenge of attracting them. I'm sure most of you will understand.

I do have a career where I talk to people, and am in difficult social situations, so there are some aspects to my personality I've developed conducive to conversation. I don't know how much of a role that plays, but I'm sure its some. But I spent years in bars hoping to have conversations with girls, and the few I had were terrible. So if I did have some natural talent, I sure didn't know how to use it. I just wanted to be upfront about this, because what follows are what I'd call my "swing thoughts", whereas I'm sure there is plenty going on I'm not able to articulate at this very moment. Maybe these things will be flushed out in the comments.

Required Reading: The Game by Style (though I use very little of the mystery method in actual practice, knowledge of its concepts have informed me I'm pretty sure, and I'll reference some of those concepts here). Recommended Reading: All the Chateau Hartiste stuff on approaching, game, qualification, openers, negs, shit tests, inner game, confidence, etc. For instance, this. Recommended watching: Any scene with Ryan Gosling in Crazy, Stupid, Love (particularly the pick-up sections, to see irrational confidence in action)

I'm going to break it up into three sections I'll call Logistics, Outer Game, Inner Game.

Logistics First of all, you'll need to find the time to go out. This is going to be a guide to going out alone, at night, because that's almost exclusively what I do. I haven't had much luck with day game. I do not have any wingmen, per se. I have approached when I've been with friends, but its tricky. I travel for work, so I can go out then. But, I do in my home city some to. Sometimes I'll meet friends initially, and then break off. Other times I'll just "go out for a beer".

First of all, you'll need to find the right venue. For me, its a craft beer-type bar, with a young professional crowd. I don't really do the weekend club thing. I like weeknights a little better, and some bars have particular nights they are happenin' because of a special or something. I want it to be lively, with music playing, and a general social atmosphere, but casual also. The type of place where a good bit of people are standing around at the bar on a good night. A place girls shouldn't be surprised if a guy approaches them, but not the type of places all the thirsty PUA type guys hang out. You may need to casually visit a few venues and nights to get feels for places. I don't want waiter service, I like a place where you have to order at the bar (reasons forthcoming). It should be a place that fits your vibe, that you are comfortable in otherwise. Basically my goal throughout the night is to blend in. I don't peacock at all, my dress is very casual but kind of professional (I’ll half-tuck in my polo, mostly) I'm always on the move. Ordering a drink, walking to the patio to take a breath and check my phone, going to the bathroom, getting a water at the bar. Sometimes I'll sit down at the bar for a bit, but eventually I'll get up. Generally, I don't want anyone to even notice I'm there, until all of the sudden your a cute girl, and I'm talking to you. I have my favorite venues, and I've befriended the bartenders. I say whats up to them, but I try to make it in passing. So, I operate almost completely without initial social proof.

I almost exclusively approach girls at the bar itself, while they are ordering a drink or sitting and taking. Its a little difficult, but I do not mind interrupting them while they are talking. My approach could be called 100% indirect. I am always on the lookout for 1-3 girls at the bar ordering a drink or sitting. I don't approach sets that are sitting at tables or similar really at all. Its happened a few times (talk to a dog on the patio, or something like that) Essentially, I just happen to be at the bar getting a drink or a water, and I will casually, over my shoulder, make a comment to the girl. I don't use false time constraints, but this approach style is like an assumed time constraint because I appear to just be ordering a drink and I'll be on my way in a moment, so I believe it has the same initial disarming effect. So, if I am not talking to a girl already I am always assessing and waiting for some to be available at the bar. I occasionally will chat with the guys next to me at the bar, or something to that effect, but I try not to get tied down in a conversation where I miss that window to approach the right girl at the bar. You'd think people would catch on, but no one is paying attention to me, remember. The bar is pretty crowded and everyone is talking to someone. So I can approach a girl at the bar ordering a beer, have it not work out, and be right back to approaching another girl 5 minutes later, while ordering a water.

Outer Game As you've probably heard, the opener does not matter one fuck. This is correct. My opener is generally an innocuous comment or question about their drink. As I've gotten more bold and fearless I open with some other things, but this is still my go-to. I once opened a pair of girls that had a craft beer can and a bag of chips sitting at a mostly empty bar with "A name of craft beer can and a bag of name of chips on a Thursday night. Sounds like a good night". One of them kissed me 4 hours later, after 2 different bars. I also once said "that looks like a fancy drink" to a girl, which fell dead as shit in the moment, but you fast-forward 2 hours and she was slow dancing with me and telling me she doesn't normally feel this way about a guy this quickly. Here's the thing with the opener --- the girl will let you know in the first 30 seconds whether she is open to talking to you. She immediately judges your appearance and confidence. Though they hear what you say, it does not matter if you say it with conviction. I've had perfect situations with a good comment and a clear path, and the girl let me know quickly, with body language mainly but also general disposition, that she is not interested in continuing with me. They will make it obvious. I usually press through for another question or so, because I have turned one or two around, but generally I just move on. Grab my drink and leave, or turn and face the bar again and not engage. If she is open to talking to you she will respond with varying degrees of interest, the easiest to determine is when she is looking at you after her response awaiting your next comment. You'll just learn how to judge this moment, its come to me over time of experiencing the wide range of responses. As Chateau says, you've distanced yourself from 95% of men out there just by opening your mouth. Just getting into this initial interaction is what I think is most challenging for guys. Its like the last level in a video game in that its the hardest, and after that there are levels but they get easier. My swing thought on the approach, and really throughout the whole interaction has become -- keep a straight face. Try not to smile automatically (save them for the right moments). Act as cool as a motherfucker. Frown a few times, act like you've been there. More on the initial approach later.

By the end of the first 2 minutes you'll either be in conversation, or you won't. This is where basic conversation skills come in for a moment. I usually try to get her talking. Ask questions, or make comments I know she'll be disposed to respond to. I try to say very little here, they want to hear themselves talk early on. Let them keep going as long as they need, but they will reach this moment, and you'll see it in their eyes, where they think "wait, who is this guy that I'm talking to, he seems interesting". It can happen in 30 seconds, or 3 minutes. Remember, my approach is completely indirect, so disarmament is my main tool. I want to be just a passerby initially. I want a casual conversation. Once she starts asking you questions, that's when you know the the attraction begins. Now, she may shit test you prior to asking basic questions, but I don't get too many shit tests early because of how indirect and disarming I am. They do not feel like they are being hit on, so they don't need to test. But I have had some test very early. You'll need to learn how to deal with tests elsewhere, I won't go into detail on that much here, but generally the response is just to be unphased by it. Know what it is and smirk at it.

When they start testing you then you know it is on for sure. I never knew what a shit test was, because I had never experienced them, because I had never been attractive. Now, I get them all the time and its fantastic. Girls only test the guys they are interested in. If I can figure out what a test is, so can you. You won't know it on the first or maybe even 5th time, but as you think back on the interaction after it finishes it, you'll figure it out. And because I normally get tested after the conversation is going, I think the girls want me to pass them, so they give them away a little. She'll also be giving you some IOI's at this point - staring, touching, hair twirling, smiling. You'll just learn to pick up these cues the more you get them, but some girls still don't give them even when they are interested (see HB7 from yesterdays post). If they aren't pushing me away early on, I'm pressing on for a while to see if the IOI's come out. They always will. This is the hardest part of any night really, just having the guts and quick thoughts to press through this moment with a relevant question or something. If she doesn't give IOI's after minute or two, and you are still trying to engage her, she will turn away essentially or let you know in some way to move on. Once you have the IOI's, then you can start light kino. Study up on the escalation ladder and just start small. Light brushes, to momentary hand on shoulder, etc. It took me a while to get going at this, you just have to step out there.

Regarding teasing, negging, disqualifying --- this is where the real work in attraction is done. After you've shown yourself as confident and able to have an interesting conversation with her, she is initially interested, teasing is like "light up the eyes boys!" from 3 ninjas. I never teased or disqualified girls. It has been a learned endeavor for sure, but now it comes natural. I had to force myself to do it, like Style negging the playboy girl at the bookstore. Now, I love it. I have a couple negs in my pocket that I am comfortable with that I wait for the opportunity to drop. But the teasing can come with anything, and it does not have to be particularly witty. "whats that beer you've got? --- Its a blue moon --- oh, you must be a real connoisseur" Sometimes just frowning about something to her, giving her that playful disapproving look can be teasing. I do a lot of "is that so?" with a slightly disapproving look, to some innocuous comment on her part. Basically, playfully making fun of her for something. Disqualifying is simply setting up some statement that puts you on top of her socially, and assumes she needs to meet your standards. Man, this stuff is hard to explain, hats off to the blogs that do it. A disqualifying statement I use a lot is "....oh, that seals it, we'll never work out". I had a girl recently tell me she likes country music but doesn't like George Strait. I really don't give much of a shit about country, but I'm OK with George Strait, so perfect time to drop "You don't like George Straight?! sigh well, it'll never work out between us" wry smile. Remember, all the guys approaching her (if there are any with balls) are just happy to be talking to her. You are acting like she ought to be happy to talk to you. Hamster, hamster, hamster ... attraction. If you can get comfortable with the initial open, this is the part you need to work on the most. This is where all the gainz are made.

Also, under the heading of teasing, is I avoid giving straight answers to anything I can. "Evade, Tease, Obfuscate". --- "So what do you do for work" Me: "I'm an astronaut". You have to learn to do these things with a playful sense that conveys she is not yet worthy of learning the real answer. The less she knows about you, the more she wants to know. The less she can get you to respond, the more intrigued she is. Poon Commandment VI -- memorize it and keep it in your head. Try to say as little about yourself as you can, and nothing negative.

I also mention here that lately I've been running the cube routine to MUCH success. After I've gotten them sufficiently attracted and teased them some and they are fully invested in me - "wanna play a game I learned about personalities from some continuing education I did recently for my job?". I'll break out the cube and it really works. I have one particular version I use. I treat this as a qualifying exercise -- I'm trying to learn about her personality to see if she is worth my continued time. I always give positive comments on their responses and they eat it up at that point.

Inner Game A few thoughts here on approach anxiety and some other things.

I thought of approach initially as a challenge. When I go out, my goal was (and is still) just to make approaches. If I put in the effort, the night was a success. If I get shot down, I keep going. The two nights in the past two months that didn't end with a deep, attracting interaction with a girl -- I probably approached 8 different girls that night. I call it a success. I kept approaching until my time was up, I walked away with no regrets. The most recent night like this I still got 3 phone numbers, but I didn't really care for any of the interactions particularly. After you go out a few nights, and linger for those few seconds trying to get the nuts to approach, and then don't, and then go home and say to yourself "I wish I had approached that girl, at least to see what would have happened" -- that's failure. Approaching and crashing in a flaming ball of fire (this has happened to me even less than a month ago) is not the failure. Wrong place, wrong time, wrong girl - that's all.

I developed the confidence to approach girls like this simply by doing it. Then the fear started to subside and my initial opener was done with more conviction and confidence and I started to get a little response, and started conversations. Then that part became easier. But I would pull and pull and never teased, negged, acted vaguely disinterested and the conversations would fizzle. Then I learned the next step. Then I learned kino and kiss-closing. Each positive interaction gave me more confidence and informed me a bit, and I did not let the negative interactions phase me. Just an opportunity to assess, learn, and do it with more confidence next time.

The more I read about each aspect of game through the red pill lens, the more I became convinced of its truth. That was the first step. Once I was convinced of its truth, I was convinced to try and implement it. The most recent one was disqualification.

I'll say I look forward to the first approach, because its like getting it out of the way. Only once that I can think of has my very first approach of the night turned into the girl I spend the whole night with. The first approach usually fizzes in some fashion, but hey, now I'm in the game. Its like stretching, or warming up. It becomes easier with every approach of the night, no matter the response from the girl.

One more note here, because someone asked me about it. When I'm on my way to the bar, either in my uber or my car, I like to put on headphones and listen to a couple songs that "get me in the mood" and I close my eyes and visualize a positive, fun night, where I approach girls with confidence. The songs have changed, but for instance one that lasted a while was "Younger (Kygo remix)" by Seniabo Sey. That song made me think about closing window of these types of interactions with early-to-mid 20's (I'm 33), and the vibe just put me in a good mood. I always "hype" myself with a few songs to put me in the zone to go put in the work of meeting new people. I don't really need this anymore, but its part of the process I really enjoy.

I hope that wall of text helps some of you. I was hesitant to do this for many reasons, so I hope it works out positively. Let me know if you have questions.
The Vision Thing

A comment from a post down-thread inspired me to write this about Vision. I'll probably develop it further into a full blog post, but I thought it was important enough for a post.

One rarely talked-about element of Married Game is a subtle thing known as Vision. Most husbands don’t appreciate what a strong DHV possessing Vision is, and they proceed unaware of the power it can add to their relationship. Most husbands do this because they don’t understand Vision, what it is and how it is manifested, much less the subtle but important role it holds. Let me explain: once upon a time I was working for a personnel agency, and one of my jobs was coaching our people on interviewing techniques. I learned a lot about the process as a result, from both the interviewer and the interviewee side. When it came to my clients who wanted high-quality employees with good technical skills – real talent – I learned the sorts of things that such high-demand technical people wanted in a company. Money, of course, and security and benefits. But beyond that gifted employees want to work for a company with a history, a good culture, and (most importantly) a Vision.

What is Vision? In this context Vision is a manifested idea of the future. Everyone wants to work for a company that’s changing the world and is doing so in a positive, pro-active way. No one wants to work for the company that’s floundering, desperate just to meet its next quarter’s goals. Vision is a generally-stated plan-of-action toward a distant but achievable goal, presented in an enticing enough manner to inspire. It’s short on details and long on generalizations. It’s reflective of inner beliefs, values, and judgments, an indication of character, foresight, and initiative. It should be bold, meaningful, and challenging. Steve Jobs and Bill Gates excelled at the Vision thing, and their companies attracted outstanding talent as a result. Google lives and breathes Vision. Without adequate Vision, innovation is impossible. And inspiration is difficult to come by. But what about you and your marriage? Have you presented your wife with an inspiring enough Vision to give her tingles and gain her support? Mrs. Ironwood knows exactly when I first outlined my vision. I received a rejection notice for a novel in the mail, way back in the 1990s, and I shrugged it off. She was concerned, and when she pressed I hauled out a dozen other rejection letters I’d racked up just that year . . . and then explained how each one was a tangible sign of success. I sketched my vision of what kind of writer I wanted to be, what kind of life I wanted to make for myself, and said it with such passion, conviction and confidence that it gave her tingles and inspired her to want to be part of that vision. As the captain of your boat, you might be so focused on bailing water or keeping the engine running that you have sacrificed developing a proper Vision for your marriage. But unless your wife understands that there is an intended destination somewhere on the horizon, a lush inviting port toward which you are heading, she is going to have a hard time investing herself emotionally in the marriage. Sure, she might proclaim a devotion to you, but unless you give her some idea of who you are planning to be in the future, she’s going to be reluctant to buy in. A properly-relayed Vision gives her hamster something to chew on.

What constitutes a decent Vision? It isn’t merely financial – though that’s certainly an important element. She wants to hear about your professional goals and plans, your personal ideas of success, where you see yourself ultimately, and she wants to know what values and aspirations have shaped those goals. Your Vision may not include career aspirations, but could involve something deeply personally meaningful to you (and, if you’re adept, to her). And they should involve the marriage without being focused exclusively on the marriage.

Building a dream house, having horses someday, buying a boat and hitting the ICW for six months with her, restoring a classic car, writing a hit musical, taking her to Rome, investigating Bigfoot sightings in the Pacific Northwest – what matters most is your passion and your ambition, and a demonstration of how that passion will propel you both to a better and happier place.

Vision is hard. You should give it some thought, and then present it in a dramatic enough way to make an impact. It should be designed to engage her emotions, incite her own passions, and literally give her a positive context in which to envision her future. But every woman wants to know where you’re planning on heading the boat. She’ll want to make “constructive” additions, and that’s okay. As long as you have given her a story to inspire her, and inspire her devotion to you, the details are unimportant. It isn’t even important if your Vision changes over time. What is important is that you have and can communicate that Vision to her in a compelling way.
The Best of The Rational Male - Year 6
by Rollo-Tomassi | August 22, 2017 | Link

Well, here we are gentlemen, six years later. I present to you the annual Best Of The Rational Male for 2016-2017 (I mark the years on August 19th).

You can read the whole post here, thanks:

How to distinguish between a shit test and comfort test.

by bogeyd6 | July 20, 2015 | Link

I had a recent comfort test after sex. Maybe a few weeks ago or so. Time is compressed for me atm. Each time we have sex I caveman the shit out of her. I ride her hard and put her up wet. Then I immediately get up from the bed. No cuddling, no pillow talk. I reward her with my time outside of the bedroom instead. She grabbed my hand as I was getting up and said "Please don't get up, cuddle with me". This was a comfort test. I wrapped her up in my arms and legs and whispered sweet nothings in her ear for the next 15 minutes and one thing led to another. Round two was well under way. How to distinguish is the key. It's the tone, the body language, and her timing.

Overview

- Tone is sweet and slightly stressed? Comfort.
- Tone is shitty and snappy? Shit.
- Body language is open and inviting? Comfort.
- Body Language is closed and stand offish? Shit.
- She asks you when you are just lazing on the couch? Comfort.
- She asks right before your planned leaving time for dinner with your male friends? Shit.

Discussion

Each and every man is his own captain. You have to decide the criteria on your own but this little guide will help you alot.

Here is a scenario you may have seen before (shit test):

Your wife stands there, arms crossed or flailing in the air. Feet are spaced apart and she is harping about that 90% ground beef you had the gall to buy. She cant believe you would go the grocery store and not even buy EXACTLY what she told you to buy. She is shitty and you are almost starting to feel like a child. This is a shit test. Give her a big smile, leave the room and Ignore it. If you got enough game built up, try Amused Mastery. When she follows you and asks why you left the room? Tell her because she is being a bitch and you had to go do.

Yet another (shit test):

Your wife stands there, hands on her hips. One foot is more forward than other. Leaning towards you. Tone is shitty and snappy at the same time. You are always going out with your friends. You need to make time for me and the kids. Everytime you leave its the gym or friends. Never just staying the night in with her. You are about to leave out the door and she starts directly into you. Very direct and very accusatorial. This is a shit test. The worst thing you could do is stay home. Instead deploy amused mastery or a&a and then leave. Deal with the comfort test when you get home. Whatever you do, don't apologize for leaving and dont agree to change your plans. Change nights, but dont lower the amount of me time you have decided that you need.

Maybe another scenario you seen before (comfort test):

Your wife is laying next to you in bed and complains about something stupid you did today. You a&a it naturally. She is rolled over on her side facing you and speaking to you in a respectable tone. Her head is laying down on the pillow and you guys are about ready for bed. She then goes into all you want from me is sex and you dont show me you love me anymore. ^This ^is ^not ^a ^comedy ^scene, ^but ^I ^go ^through ^this ^alot. This is a comfort test. You need to wrap her up in your strong arms and squeeze moderately hard, give her a kiss on the forehead, and tell her "Don't worry princess, you are still my woman". Deploy some kino and get cuddly for until her storm passes. I can almost bet she initiates sex first. If she doesn't then roll over and enjoy a good nights sleep.

Finally another scenario:

Here we go. Another night of being a harpy because she had a really bad day at work. Can't seem to do anything right. She is standing in the kitchen, feet crossed and one is pointed at you, arms at her sides, locking eye contact with you. She cant believe the day she has had. Glances to the floor alot. Eyes are all big and doey. Body is straight on at you. She is stressed visibly and is attempting to use you as an emotional tampon about all the shit she has had to put up with today. She is pleading with you that you just dont show your emotions and love to her anymore. She is begging you to treat her like an equal. Dinner needs to be started and she knows this, because she said dinner is going to be late now. Comfort test or shit test?

You better know your woman, because this could be both, one or the other, she is all shaken up like a beer can. You have to be the oak and act accordingly. If this is my wife, its a comfort test. She needs someone to show her its going to be ok. Not tell her. Not get into "I would do this" or "You should do that" bull shit. She just needs a big manly hug from her rock solid oak and passionate kiss. Tell her you love her and that her big strong man is here now. No need to go into anything else. If you show that your are unphased she is going to start feeling unphased. Your showing rock solid temperament (even if it isnt) and thats going to calm her down a little.
Not really anything ground breaking - just my observation of friends at a gathering last night.

A bit about me: A few months into my journey - currently reading Saving a low sex marriage and NMMNG and generally eating my way through the side bar and trying my best to internalise. I need to continue lifting, STFU more, own my shit more and am finding it tough 'finding my mission' which I suppose is my current mission. Anyway...

The party. Headed to a party last night with my LTR and was amusing myself chatting away with some old friends and mingling with some new guys - it was a good night. New guy Louis that I met who was there with his HB6 LTR of 10 years Kelly (28F, pretty but on the larger side of curvy). He's tall and packing some muscle but fairly out shape with a decent gut having formed.

The witnessed interaction. L is Louis, K is Kelly, F1-3 are female friends in the group of couples.

- L: We saw a guy early who was massively out of shape didn't we babe
- K: Ah yeah, huge wasn't he
- L: Yeah, that's me in 5 years eh?
- K: ...
- L: That'll be me won't it? [Looks to her then around group with smug grin]
- K: [Not looking at him]
- L: You listening babe?
- K: Sorry, I didn't hear you [Looking clearly unimpressed]
- L: I said that'll be me all out of shape in 5 years and you with me [Some laughter, smug smile from him - I'm cringing inside]
- K: Ah yeah

K looks down and initially avoids eye contact with F1. Glances at F2 who gives supportive half smile. F3 catches F1's eye and raises eye brows and smirks - F1 raises eyebrows and gives a shrug. All of this happened within 20-30 seconds.

This has played on my mind all day - nothing new if you've read the sidebar etc but a few things I've interpreted / taken from it:

- Don't self depreciate - especially to show yourself as low value in front of your partner and others.
- Remember, she will ditch your ass if you keep on showing yourself as low value.
- YOU DON'T OWN HER - SHE IS NOT OBLIGATED TO STAY WITH YOU.
- Is this 'point scoring' that he was attempting? Was he trying to brag that he could be unattractive and 'keep' her?
- Her girl friends don't owe you shit and they don't have your back. They first look out for themselves, then their girlfriends if it's beneficial to them and then they will be friendly with you as a low priority.

- Don't be Louis.

Edit to format - written on phone Thoughts On Ultimatums From My Level Ten Dread Experience
by | April 23, 2015 | Link

(For the noobs, Level Ten Dread is the threat of divorce or an affair if your wife will not behave as a wife sexually).

When things were at their worst in our marriage, I mentioned multiple times to my wife that if things did not change I would either leave or find someone else to fuck. I said this off and on for about 18 months. There was no real change from her. She would trickle out the sex, but even that it was starfishy.

Eventually, I reached a point where I was ready to cheat. I signed up online and made myself available. I looked good and got immediate interest. I had an invitation from one woman to go over, but before I did I went for a walk to clear my head.

Several things mentally came together during that walk and I decided that cheating was not part of who I was as a person. Sneaking around was not something I wanted to do, nor did I want to think of myself as a cheater. So, I saw a lawyer. I told him I wanted to divorce my wife and asked what I had to do. He told me and then I went home to talk to my wife.

I said, “I am divorcing you. I have seen a lawyer and this is what we need to do. Let’s start now.”

She flipped out! At first she tried to kick me out of the house. I refused to leave. So, she went to stay at her parent’s pace for several days. Then she came back to talk to me. I stuck to my guns, but after a while I told her, “I don’t want to divorce you, but I am not willing to live my life like this.” I was determined to proceed with the divorce. We talked for a about an hour and I told her how I had made changes in myself and she acknowledged that I was a stronger person than I had been, in several key ways. I outlined the way I saw the marriage working and she accepted it.

After that, she changed. On the spot. And seemingly, with no regrets or lingering doubts. Just—bang!—chasing me for sex, blowjobs whenever I liked. And although life has its ups and downs, she has not gone back to how she was.

Since then, I’ve made a rule to avoid ultimatums. Even though things have improved enormously, on the odd occasion where I want something to happen and she doesn’t, I never threaten. Threats are weak compared to action.

Ultimatums make your wife feel coerced and manipulated. Even if she decides to become submissive and fuck you every day, at the back of her mind is the thought that this decision was not made in free will. Therefore, a part of her does not want to be doing it and it becomes much harder to maintain that situation and rebellion is more likely.

An ultimatum is like asking for her permission to do something drastic. Instead, I make my decisions and act on them. Not only does this make me a far stronger person in our marriage, but she now shows more respect for what I have to say. Of course, as I said, I also no longer need to make ultimatums, either. It seems that one decision to act is worth 100 ultimatums.
Having Frame.

Putting your own interests first.

Mental point of origin.

No matter how we like to describe it, it's vital for a truly masculine man to understand and embody these ideals.

Putting yourself as your mental point of origin is instinctual. It's ingrained in our genetic programming. In today's culture though, it has been conditioned out of men. Think about it; it’s no different than a hypergamous woman. Both drives seek to ensure the survival of the man or the woman. Self interest and hypergamy are logical, evolutionary survival behaviors. So take back your sense of mental point of origin.

When was the last time you made a decision that was truly self-serving? Something that unapologetically put you and your interests first? I find that if I think back to my high school and elementary school days I realize that my frame was better than it was when I was in college, in my 20s and most of my 30s. Why? Because I was a little more selfish. A little more "what's in it for me?" It was instinctive. It was natural. Kids are born selfish. It’s natural.

I am a Led Zeppelin fan. I have been since I was in high school. This probably isn't a coincidence that it coincides with a time in my life that I was a little more “out for numero uno.”

Let’s examine some lyrics from the first song off their first album, "Good Times Bad Times.”

“In the days of my youth
I was told what it was to be a man
Now I've reached the age
I've tried to do all those things the best I can
No matter how I try
I find my way to do the same old jam.”

These lyrics describe, to me anyway, the path our culture is trying to put men on. The conditioning to act in a way that ultimately doesn't benefit the man. Even in the 60s this was an undercurrent in society.
I've always found Zeppelin's tunes to be energizing. Unapologetic, masculine, driving, powerful music. Then in college and thereafter I listened to more and more "puss rock." It makes sense. After all, we're told women like emotional men and vulnerability. Insert eye roll emoji. I still like some of that puss rock stuff but I can't listen to it without hearing the bad advice it gives men.

Lets examine a song title...

Another great Zeppelin tune, "Nobody's Fault But Mine," to me is an OYS (own your shit) declarative. The title says enough about that one. Just listen to it.

Robert Plant understood women and sexual interaction. Maybe it was only subconsciously, but isn't that really how it's supposed to be? It's only been thrust into the overt through the manosphere because men have been lead astray.

More from “Good Times.”

“Good times, bad times
You know I had my share
When my woman left home
With a brown eyed man
Well, I still don't seem to care.”

This reminds men to have abundance. Be the one with less to lose. There are other women out there. Even if you're married, divorce is an option if the dynamics are unhealthy.

Continued...

“Sixteen I fell in love
With a girl as sweet as could be Only took a couple of days
Till she was rid of me
She swore that she would be all mine
And love me till the end
When I whispered in her earl lost another friend.“

Oooh man... these lyrics should sting for a lot of men. They do for me. Reminds me of how my “first love” ended. I was a needy bitch and it drove her away from me. Four years, over, just like that. It should Sting, and be a reminder why you have to make yourself your mental point of origin. This verse describes an awareness of hypergamy and the need for masculine frame like no other lyrical prose I know. But again, don't be bitter about it. It's just the nature of women. They aren't to blame. Just know how to navigate it. Don't drown your woman with your negative emotions. They aren't built to care.

Let's take a look at some lyrics from "Black Country Woman." Rumor has it that Zeppelin recorded this in Mick Jagger's backyard. In the beginning you can hear an airplane flying over and (I think) Plant telling the sound tech to "leave it" in the recording. Anyway, this song preaches about having options as a man.

“Hey, hey, mama, why'd you treat me mean
You didn't have to say you'd always be by my side
You didn't have to tell me you'd be my blushing bride
Hey, hey, mama, why you treat me mean
But that's alright, I know your sisters, too.”

This reminds us to never over invest or get Oneitis. Have options. This includes your wife. Your marriage doesn’t define you. Have women who are social acquaintances. Socialize. Go out without your wife sometime. Make mental notes of women who give you IOIs. This is outside the scope of this post but you get the idea.

The "Lemon Song" - a song modeled after an old revived American blues tune called the "Killing Floor" By Howlin' Wolf. It's about not seeing what a woman can do to you if aren't wary and discerning. The inspiration for the song came after Wolf's wife actually peppered him in the back with buckshot from a second story window after she suspected him of cheating. Some women are lemons, pretty on the outside but can be sour when you get to the middle. There is also some phenomenal drumming in this tune but I digress.

To me, the best way to have frame is to have your internal game on point by making sure you’ve got what makes you happy in order first.

Critics of this idea will conflate this kind of mental point of origin with being unilaterally selfish, without awareness of others' needs and feelings. They'd be wrong. That’s not what it’s about. I have a wife and two kids. Of course I want them to be happy. Of course I want them to have fulfilling, successful lives. When dad is happy, their happiness will more easily follow. The opposite of “happy wife, happy life.” I adopt this frame because I'm a better father, husband and member of society when I ensure that I'm happy, that I'm taken care of and that I'm able to be a masculine man. It's the airplane oxygen mask theory in play.

My wife still accuses me of being selfish sometimes. It’s a metric that lets me know I’m not falling into the plow horse roll. Just a month ago, my wife was ranting about something my daughter did. Something she wasn’t supposed to. She says, “she’s just like you, she doesn’t care... she only cares about what she wants.” It was all emotion. Addressing that is the scope of another post.

Look back to your childhood. What drove you? What inspired you? What did you gravitate towards? Think about hobbies. Think leisure activities. Think about your social activities.

Think about the girls you found attractive. What did the girls like about you? More importantly, Why did they? Did you tease them? I bet you did. Did you not give a fuck if they ignored you? Probably not, because you were on your way to play flag football or ride bikes with your elementary school buddies. What did you and your friends do together? Men bond over activities. Women bond over talking about feelings and things. Know the difference.

Bring some of these behaviors back into your life and you'll find yourself being more grounded in your frame, developing your internal game and being less reactive to the forces around you.

(Edited for formatting)
How to become Outcome Independent using a Stoic trick
by strategos_autokrator | December 27, 2014 | Link

A common question we get here is how to be outcome independent about wanting sex from your wife. If her main power has been closing her legs, and you came here trying to figure out how to make her open them, and then, the advice you get is “It doesn’t matter if she opens them”, it would seem like this community is useless. This is not true.

With this post I will explain how Outcome Independence works, and how to use it to get what you want.

I will use Stoic philosophy to explain Outcome Independence. Stoicism is Greco-Roman philosophy with the goal of accepting reality as the key to inner peace. This allows you to become a clear thinker so you can optimize your energy to virtuous causes that you can contribute to. Essentially, Stoicism is a philosophy of maintaining Frame. There are many aspects of it that apply to this, but for now, I’ll focus now on how to become Outcome Independent.

When confronted with a problem, a Stoic would ask if it is something outside your control, or in your control. If the problem is outside your control, then a Stoic concludes that since there is nothing you can do about it, so you shouldn’t worry. Accept that, and move on to other things. There is no point in wasting energy if you can’t affect the outcome. This is the reason, for example, I don’t even worry about the possibility of being struck by a meteorite as I type this. Yeah, it can happen, but there is nothing I can do about it, so why bother? On the other hand, if something is under your control, then, the stoic would say there is no reason to worry either because you can manage the issue! I don’t worry about breathing right now because breathing is right now fully under my control.

That is all there is to staying calm when facing problems: if something is outside your control, don’t waste emotional energy on it. If something is inside your control, plan what you will do about it, work hard at it, but don’t worry more. So far, this is all very obvious, so if this was what Zeno, Cicero, Seneca, Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius talked about, what is the big fuss?

Well, the fuss is that there are some problems that are not fully under our control, or fully out of control. One such problem is having sex with our wives. Clearly part of it is under our control, but she has a lot of power over the whole thing as well. This is why we worry so much about such problems: we can’t put it in the category of “don’t worry, I got it” nor in the category of “don’t worry, there is nothing I can do about”. It is a partial control problem, and we feel invested because we try to do well with what is under our control, but then we get frustrated for what isn’t, try to things under our control that are ineffectual or backfire because we don’t accept we don’t have full control and often beg her in desperation. These partial control problems are the ones that make us waste energy, lose frame, and lose perspective. They lead to frustration and even resentment.

The Stoics noticed that there is one power that you have to conquer all these problems. This post is about that power. This is power nobody can ever take away from you. This power is the key to having Frame, Outcome Independence, passing all the shit tests, and getting all the sex you want.

"Man is disturbed not by things, but by the views he takes of them." - Epictetus

We have the power to redefine problems. Others might define problems for us, but we should always reject that, and instead define the problem in terms of what is under our control, and what isn’t. The way to always have Outcome Independence is that we have to redefine the problem in a way that we do not depend on others or circumstances to obtain them. Why? Because others are not under our control. So instead we change our perception of the problem such that it is all under our influence. This is Outcome Independence: we define the problem such that the other person has zero power over affecting its outcome. We are not subject to anyone in this way.

To make it more concrete, I’ll go now to the reason most find this subreddit: husbands wanting more/better sex from their wives. Here lies the problem. The problem isn't the wife closing her legs. The problem is how the husband defined the issue! The husband has NO power over this as defined, the wife has all the power. She can close her legs, there is nothing he can do about that. So the husband worries and becomes resentful because he can’t control her. The Stoics would tell the husband to accept he can’t control her and stop begging her. Instead, the stoic husband must redefine the problem into something that is under his control. Decide you will work hard to become the man women want to have sex with. For example, workout, improve your assertiveness and expand your social circles. This is all 100% under the husbands control. Eat better, dress better, become the best version of you. This is all under the husbands control. Why? Because by focusing on all that, the husband doesn’t have to worry about what is outside his control. But also, this redefinition makes it more likely to make him happier because he will become more attractive, which increases the likelihood of having sex either with the wife, or with anyone else.

The Stoics would advise /r/marriedredpill: Become Outcome Independent by focusing on self improvement, which is all under your control. Read MMSLP and have a Man Action Plan of self improvement. Don’t worry about your wife's actions, she isn’t under your control. This is a form of dread, but notice how powerful it is: there is nothing the wife can do to stop you from getting to your goal now of becoming a better man. You defined the problem now so she has no power over you, but you seem more powerful to her. You changed the power dynamics only because you redefined the issue. This sense of power comes from your OI, and it is incredibly attractive in itself! Nobody likes someone that begs for stuff, but everyone loves someone that is driven to success and want to be part of his life. Note that OI frees you from resentment because she can't block your way to your goals anymore. This has a side effect that you also become happier with her, which also improves the relationship. And if she comes around and starts giving you head, great. But if she doesn’t, then you are ready to Next her for someone else. Independent of what she decides to do, you get the Outcome that you wanted. You don't demand she desires you, you just become a desirable man independent of her opinion of you.

This is the ultimate way to demonstrate Frame: you are the only person that defines the problems in your life. You do so in such a way you that the burden of overcoming them becomes all yours. You don't blame others, you don't beg to others. But you put all your energy on solving that problem you defined, and waste none in worrying about what is not under your control. Most people can’t do this. And those that do it become leaders, because others sense how they will get to the goal, and try to join them to be part of the ride. And all comes from a very simple mind hack that some dead greeks came up with. Don’t say you want more sex from your wife. Say you want to become the man women want to have sex with. This way the outcome if fully under your control!

---

tl;dr - Redefine problems always such that you fully control their outcome. This places the burden of overcoming them fully on you, but also, frees you from having to beg others to do what you want. This is Outcome Independence.
Quick background for those not familiar with my tomfoolery: 33M married 10 yrs, 3 kids. Career beta, to say the least. Still working to retire. Unplugged 8-9 months ago. Being a career beta, I've never been able to consistently attract women. Part of the appeal of the RP was I could finally see so clearly why. While the work on my marriage has been a rough ride, my game with other women has been extremely fun, eye-opening and rewarding. I have followed all the advice here on lifting (I am 169lbs, 10%bf and my 3 lifts are over 1000# right now), dress, grooming, etc. and have transformed myself on the outside. Have read the sidebar and other works on game - Working on the inside. Let me share a story from last night with some of the obvious changes I've made pointed out.

Back in January I met a girl (HB8.5) at an industry event. It was an event out of town, but we are from the same city, so we were staying at the event hotel. I was just learning game and enjoying approaching new women (was always fearful of this before). She was more attractive than any girl I have ever dated, but I opened her during the event and then found her after and we hung out most of the night. She was giving me IOI's (touching, eye contact, etc) but I wasn't able to isolate her. I did get her number and we began texting. I told her I wanted to see her again, and after off and on texting for 2 weeks I got her out to drinks. She offered minimal interest at most through this exchange, but I thought it was a good sign I got her out. I did my best to escalate and run game, I was new to kino and was trying it out. But it was all pull and no push. The career beta still believes that when you have the littlest bit of a womans attraction you must pull and pull and pull at it for it to increase. Wrong. I went in for the kiss at the end of the night and was stone-cold rejected. I actually tried twice and was rejected both times. I tried to get her out to another date, but she turned it down in essence (tried to be nice about it) It was a sobering experience, I am still not attractive to the desirable girls. I was actually a little beat up about it, but I used it as motivation to get better. GOOD, as Jocko says.

I learned more, and more.

I have been seeing her around at these same industry events, we actually serve on a board together within this organization. She always says hello, and wants to be friends. Her group of coworkers like me too and are always talking to me.

What I would have done before - cherish every opportunity to talk to her. Become an orbiter. Continue texting her.

What I did (changing stripes) - I moved on from her mentally, and even physically. I generally ignored her. I would smirk at her and give her short answers and walk away.

I saw her at another event last week. Treated her the same as I have been, but I actually negged the shit out of her this night. "Aw, those shoes are cute... My mom has those". "You blink a lot". "That is so high maintenance... do you come with an instruction manual". Had my body turned away from her. Walked away, didn't talk to her again rest of the night.
The next day she texts me (first time she has opened a text to me).

what I would have done before responded quickly with an obvious answer or try hard joke

what I did (changing stripes) waited a few hours (almost forgot to text her back) and sent back a terse response teasing her. I used to be afraid of offending women by teasing. Now, I DNGAF and do it for my own amusement.

She responds, and then I don't.

A few days later she texts again (yesterday), and invites me out with her friends. Interesting. I tell her I will come if she buys me a drink. I show up late.

She is paying really shitty attention to me all night. Keeps walking away for periods of time. Won't stay and talk to me for any length.

What I would have done before - followed her around. Keep trying to talk to her. Buy her drinks.

What I did (changing stripes) - I talked to her friends, particularly the girls. I didn't go seek her out but once. I had a great time and wanted to learn new things about new people. In particular there was another cute girl there (HB7). I am talking to her and trying to engage her a little further, but she keeps focusing attention away from me. She was telling a story, and I just walked away in the middle of it.

HB8 continues to be flaky, come and go. Later in the evening I start talking to the HB7. She is responding a little now, and starts testing me. Ok, now it's on. I have come to love it when girls test me (bitchy face, faux indignation, trying to cut me down). I just smirk and press on, unphased by the testing. The HB7 starts to show some real interest. The HB8 leaves, and I isolate the HB7. We end up making out.

As we are making out she tells me she does not want to cause any drama. What?, I say. She tells me that shortly after she first met me (when she was seemingly ignoring me) when I walked away she immediately asked one of the other girls what my deal was. The girl tells her that the HB8 and I talked once in the past, but the HB8 had a boyfriend at the time, and she just broke up with him and now she is interested in me. The HB7 admits to me that she was smitten with me right away, found me so attractive and confident and charming.

The HB8 has already texted me today asking me what I thought about some small detail last night.

Gentlemen, I am a true career beta. I once told a bartender I was trying to flirt with how beautiful I thought she was, and awkwardly smiled and walked away with my head down. I once cried in a girl's lap and asked her to please give me another shot with her, my life is miserable without her.

Now, I go on a date with a girl who used to be out of my league, and she doesn't act up to my standards? I make out with her friend. Inner game says to believe you are the prize. Even 5 months ago I could not be further from believing this. Studying game, and transforming myself, I have become the prize. All of the things I did differently last night, from the things I pointed out to all the things I didn't - it all came naturally. I have changed, it is no longer an act. I stride through interactions with women with confidence and raise my finger and salute life's absurdities with a smirk. If I can change my stripes, anyone can.

Thanks for humoring me with this story, as has been said, I have nowhere else to share this. But it was a very meaningful moment to me.
Mrs. Peru pulled a freak out about an upcoming trip earlier and stormed up the stairs. She didn't like a non-important logistical change I wanted to make. I told her I was going to wash the car, and I'll be back in 10.

After I get back, She comes downstairs about 10 minutes later, fashionably late. Showed me lol

I look at her with a genuine smile (like I would with my teenager), and I say "do you want to talk about this?" She starts going on and on taking things out of context, putting words into my mouth, and pulling info from previous conversations. I just stood there with smiling eyes and let her Hamster run itself out and break the wheel casing.

Than, I say, " that's all you want. Cool, let's do it." I give her a high five.

this is where the shit test subtly turns into a comfort test

She starts to tell me about work and all the changes they are making... She can't handle any more changes.

I just Say, "yeah there are a lot of changes right now."

Then she comes into my frame

Her demeanor changes and she starts to tell me about her rough day (and it was a tough one), And I start to feel her vulnerability seep through. Just by me holding frame, her attitude has gone from me being the bad guy to me being the rock she can lean on

I just say " I know babe," and I give her a hug.

Her head is melted onto my chest for the rest of the night (content) cuz she's dead tired.Tomorrow, will be good sex when she's not dead tired.

In my BP days, I would have been lured into a big argument like a helpless fish on a hook. I would have dug into my position, and it would have been a big blow out fight because she was on edge from work.

The battle was unimportant, so I treated it as such.

Pick your battles carefully, and hold frame. But first, you have to internalize frame.

How do you internalize frame Bobby?

Good question - thanks for asking.
• you start by stfu

• stop DEERing

• You read the entire sidebar

• you lift

• you Go through the dread levels

• you practice.

• When you make a mistake or a series of mistakes, you learn from it, and you change your thinking and behavior.

• You don't beat yourself up because that's counterproductive.

• when you fall off the horse, You get back on the horse and ride... A little bit better a than last time.

Then one day you find you have some of what all these guys are talking about, but you didn't understand it because you didn't have it...

FRAME

You can fake frame temporarily, but you will be found counterfeit eventually.

You can have frame, and then slip, but that's ok. It's a marathon, not a race.

But, Eventually, frame becomes who you are because you've internalized it. But this takes time, effort, persistent, and a continual drive to learn and be the best man you can be.
It's action, NOT vows that keep a marriage together.
by TrainingTheBrain | November 24, 2015 | Link

I had a discussion (if that’s what we call replying to posts on Reddit) with /u/adamalan where he said, “When she pledges till death do us part in sickness and in health for richer or poorer in front of her’s and your parents and grandparents who all fulfilled that vow to the end, it is reasonable to expect it to be true.”

This stuck with me as it is contradictory to everything that has been put out on this sub. I’ve been subscribed to TRP since before it had 1k subscribers and MRP from the beginning, what I’ve learned is that if one guy is saying something, another 100 are thinking it.

This post is a quick message to those who feel the same as /u/adamalan and a quick reminder to those who may have taken their foot off the gas thinking that they are at a point of ‘relaxation’ (negative).

When your woman vowed to be your wife, she was saying that in that moment and the short term future she would be there till the end. As masculine men who understand female nature, we should know that this is bullshit.

This is for several reasons:

• She is in marriage to secure a man to provide, protect, and please her. As a Man you own this shit, I am my wife’s Shield and Spear and you should be the same for your lady.

• She does mean what she says, at that point in time.

• Don’t follow their words, follow their actions.

• She will perform at the level you maintain. You get complacent she gets fat. You get weak, she gets bored. You fail to remain a masculine man, she becomes a bitch to you and is looking for chad to spice her life up on the side.

The take away from this is that everything is on you to remain the top dog. The day you get married and become a Family Alpha is the last point that you can have a ‘zero’ day. Her vows don’t mean shit. I would argue that women are utterly incapable of understanding the significance of a vow. As men we feel shit like vows, honor, and commitment on a much deeper level; which is exactly why we are the more romantic of the sexes.

So for /u/adamalan and the other lurkers who believe that your woman’s vow to you means anything, you need to unfuck your mind and get back to reality before you suffer and entirely preventable situation.

View her for what she is, a beautiful, feminine woman. She is a solipsistic, hypergamous, hamster driven woman and you should fucking Love that. The guys who have an issue with this are the ones who are fucked up; out of shape, unmotivated, and unwilling to learn or try to learn more about female nature and the female imperative we are all up against.

Your wife is committed to you so long as you are a man worth committing to. You will find it much more difficult to choose the weak path when you accept that your wife will not always be there. You have to earn her attention, work to keep her eyes on you, she measures other men to the bar you set, make sure it's a high fucking standard (thank you /u/IASGame) and you have to work to keep that fire of tingles alive.

Those vows are just words, you need to take action and make the marriage you want happen.

Acta, Non Verba.
Short FR on Wife watching me Calm her Friend down

by | December 11, 2015 | Link

[deleted]
Hey Babe. Of course sweetie. Yes I will be there at 8:00, get yourself ready. Ohh, yes. I love it when you talk dirty babe, see you in a bit...

by BluepillProfessor | May 6, 2016 | Link

This is for those whining about "communication" and why do you have to be a "jerk" and I don't want to "withdraw my attention" and "affection" from my wife and be a mean Red Pill guy. This is for you guys who think that Red Pill is "cruel" or (unjustifiably) "Manipulative" (OK, yes it is manipulative, I said unjustifiably). For you guys, I present a recent phone call I had with my wife.

Imagine the title of the post in soft, seductive, hushed, baby/lover talk spoken into the phone at a loud bowling alley. Then imagine being overheard by one of the guys in your church league. Then imagine the guy is a simp mangina and a church elder who immediately assumes that "Blue" must be talking to some girl because NOBODY talks to their wife like that.

Yah, that happened.

Simp: [seriously]- "Blue, are you and (Blue's Wife) having problems?"

Me: [curious]- "Ummm, problems?"

Simp: [Dead serious and whispering] "I heard you just talking and making plans with that woman. You were not very discrete, Blue."

Me: [Laughing]: "What? That woman was my wife."

Simp: [Angry]: "So you don't care if I call Mrs. Blue and tell her about that call?"

Me: [incredulous and looking at Simp like a rare breed of cockroach]: Didn't say a word but showed him my call scroll on my phone.

He continued to try to argue and rant with me, something about how easy it is to change the call inbox and that no man would ever talk to his wife like that and that it sounded like I was having an affair.

I finally tired of toying with him, rolled my eyes and assured him that I was having an affair. With my lover. Then I walked away.

This guy could NOT wrap his head around a man talking that way with his wife. THIS is the sea of filth and the SEWER of expectations in which we live.

Stay manly gentlemen.
Stumbled across this interview with Robert Greene wherein his wife gets pulled into the interview towards the end. The article itself is interesting if you want to know some of the history behind the author and how the book came to be, but I wanted to point out some RedPill truth that came out from his wife.

Article

Apparently Mr. Greene is quite manipulative and exercises subtle control on his wife of 16 years. When asked by the interviewer if she does not like this behavior from her husband, this happened:

> “You’re pretty manipulative,” says Biller. “But that’s not a bad thing. I used to get bored with men very quickly. The fact that I’m still here is because he’s so clever at keeping a step ahead of me all the time.”

I think some of you think that one day your efforts are going to get you a perfect little wife that cooperates with you fully. One day you can stop lifting. You can stop reading. You can stop having to work so damn hard.

Here’s the Red Pill reality: That day will never come! You have to keep ahead of her for now until the end of time. Her hamster will never rest so why would you? If realizing this reality makes you tired, frustrated, or sad then go fuck yourself because there’s not an alternative. You fucked up when you took the Red Pill, you were probably happier and better suited for Blue Pill reality instead of this. Leave this forum to the real men.

TLDR: LIFT!
In the end, Han Solo and Indiana Jones get the girl and she genuinely desires him – not because this is some odd fantasy of the writer’s imagination, but because this is (was) a standard aspect of women’s genuine attraction to men. The aberration is the idea that the attraction and affair would go any other way. Only in this feminized generation does thousands of years of male-female interaction seem at all unsettling.

So, here we have conventionally masculine archetypes – sometimes rakish, sometimes bold and dutiful – following their own path, making themselves their Mental Point of Origin, and making their mission (not their woman) their priority. Whether it was Captain Kirk, Han Solo or Conan the Barbarian the mental order was always firmly focused on the individual man and his action. Between the time of the Sexual Revolution and 2017, the Feminine Imperative has systematically erased the conventionally masculine archetype; so much so that the gender-loathing men of this generation are either appalled at displays of masculinity or they simply have no frame of reference with which to contrast it with the distorted and blurred ideas of what masculinity should mean to them.

For some ‘men’ the notion of conventional masculinity itself is rejected altogether. It doesn’t mean anything to be a man for this generation, so conventional archetypes of men are offensive.

As a result of these four to five generations of progressively more feminized men we now see the confusion and disgust at conventional masculinity coming from this generation of men. We see a generation of males who have no positive association with their own gender. They become increasingly more isolated because they are convinced that anything that might be gender-exclusive to men alone is, by default, a form of misogyny. There is nothing ‘positive’ about being a man, yet for all of the misconceptions about gender being social constructs, exclusively female organizing of women and fempowerment is still viewed as beneficial; a sign of society ‘evolving’.

I recently read an article in the Boston Globe about middle aged men’s increasing social isolation. I would argue that for all of the raising of awareness about this phenomenon it is primarily generations of men’s inability to interact with other men that is at the root of this isolation. For decades now men have been discouraged from meeting with other men in any formalized fashion. Men are either suspect of misogyny or homosexuality if they get together for the sake of being men. What were seeing now is generations of men who no longer understand how to socially interact with other men.
Furthermore, when this isolation becomes a concern of women, those men are again berated for not interacting with other men in the ways that women do. Women talk, men do, but a feminine-primary social order only approves of one way for men to associate with one another – in the way that women do. Thus, we see the confusion of women that men don’t call each other up to schedule a coffee date for the express reason of conversation. Men and women have different forms of communication, but the socially approved form is only ever from the feminine context. Men interacting “as men do” – in a conventionally masculine way – is always misogynistic. Thus, we see overseers in the locker room, if only symbolically, to regulate what and how men communicate with each other.
A recent comment thread hit a nerve with me. The OP made a comment about tunnel vision. I just got done talking about this last night in the dojo. How tunnel vision can easily overcome you and change how you see things. It's not new really, it's a fairly well taught concept these days, 10 years ago not so much.

There are several posts in AskMRP from guys who have severe tunnel vision. They are stuck in their woman’s frame. They are hell bent on something, what is I don’t know…don’t think they do either. Maybe proving to themselves they are men. Getting fucked, getting the respect they think they deserve. All that’s bullshit. Those are the symptoms to the problems. The problem is that you are weak, and lack any sort of vision for yourself and your life.

MRP doesn’t make it easy on you. Not at all. It wants you to do 40 things are all at once. Not to mention you have a sparring partner who is changing the rules on you every day...or so it seems. What you really need to do is gain control again and show her that rules are bullshit and don’t apply to you. Then hand her a new rulebook.

So you better get to work right now.

Consider this though. You will develop tunnel vision. It happens. In the world of self defense, and well....warfare in general: Tunnel Vision kills. LTC(ret) Grossman has studied this phenomenon extensively. I recommend his book ON KILLING and anything he has done on “killology”. Great mindset stuff there. tunnel vision is a process where a soldier gets fixated on his target to such a degree he fails to see the developing battlefield, and then he is taken out by someone on the flank or the grenade that just flew over head.. It’s one reason why leaders are not supposed to get engaged in the near fights. They are supposed to be head up managing the fight. Troops, cops are taught now to fire a few shots, look around, reassess. This is also being taught in civilian tactical classes.

In self defense we teach it because getting into a “fist fight” you are not going to see the haymaker, kicks.....anything else like that. In fact tunnel vision happens before the first fist flies. You get caught up in the money dance, the whole display of dominance. How dare this fuck disrespect you like that. Chest bump, push around, throw some insults, dares, challenges..yadda yada yadda. You are so wrapped up in it that you miss the body language, the precursors that something is about to go down. They are always there. The fist clenched and cocked just below eye line. The shoulder that turns ever so slightly to gain speed and power. The foot that slowly takes half a step backwards for more power and balance. You are literally too close to get perspective. And while you are caught up in the monkey dance of dominance....wham. You're hit.

The process is the same here. You are too close. You are so concerned about the monkey dance of male dominance that you don't see what your woman is telling your through her actions. It's really like two monkeys dancing. You are too wrapped up in the moment that you are missing the clues, the setups, and the opportunities. A good fighter can read the signs and signals. He can see the telegraph coming and be able to adapt to the flowing situation. Do you think MacGregor just goes in fists swinging? He has a plan and it plays to his strengths. He doesn’t let tunnel vision grab a hold of him and when it does he steps back. Reassess then adjust, go back in.

When kids spar each other they quickly develop patterns. They go through 3-4 options that have worked for them in the past and put them on repeat. The trick is to get a dynamic fighter that has a very large toolbox and throw one right after another without stopping nor repeating. Maybe even creates a few of his own. Often I will call out a kid's pattern. If he's good enough or I think he is. I will tell everyone his/her pattern. The watch them either sink or swim in the next bout. The idea is growth. Learn, adapt, overcome.

OK...I get it...we all do. Sex is a HUGE priority, but too many of you are focused on your near targets to such an extent that you have made them your long term objectives. Life is about one thing. Accomplishing your mission. You do it by achieving your long AND short term objectives. Sometimes the short ones are all on their own and have nothing to do with each other nor your life’s mission. The long term ones should always be about achieving your life’s mission. You need to create that synergy.

Get rid of that tunnel vision. Take a step back. Reassess, and for the fucks' sake laugh.

It’s all bullshit anyhow.
New essay today:

https://therationalmale.com/2017/06/13/kill-your-idols/

Excerpt:

Doing the Work – Pre vs. Post Unplugging

Recently there’s been a push to paint Red Pill aware men as bitter guys who get stuck in the anger phase of unplugging. No doubt this can happen, and considering the mass effect of Blue Pill conditioning in men it’s easy to see how it happens for them. For the larger part I concur with what The Family Alpha is suggesting here; for both psychological and personal reasons it can be all too easy for men to get stuck dwelling on an experience with one woman and then transferring that anger and regret to a self-limiting outlook that holds him back from interacting with women. I imagine some of my MGTOW readers see this as being pragmatic, but as with everything for men, isolation is dangerous.

On the other hand, however, I still think we need to guard against falling into the trap of thinking that a man’s holding onto his Blue Pill regrets, or transferring that pain to a real misogyny means that fundamental Red Pill awareness is the source of his self-limitations. The point of Red Pill awareness isn’t to make a man ‘hate’ women, but rather to inform him of women’s nature so he won’t hate what he’d never expect from women.

I really think there are two opposing sides that evolved from Red Pill awareness. On one extreme we have hardline MGTOW men wanting to remove themselves wholesale from interacting with women – largely because of their Red Pill awareness. And on the other we’ve got the Positive Mindset brokers believing that Red Pill awareness leads to the anger and resentment that causes men to limit themselves with women.

In the middle of this we have men who’ve found a new balance in their lives because they became Red Pill aware and created a new, healthier paradigm for themselves with it. It becomes a game of exaggerated nihilism vs. exaggerated optimism, but in the middle we have to find a healthy pragmatism in how we will use this awareness to redefine ourselves. It appears to me that at either extreme there comes a limiting of just how much Red Pill awareness either set is willing to embrace.
50/50 v. OYS/Value

by Red-Curious | September 7, 2017 | Link

The 50/50 attitude shows up quite a bit in askMRP. This post is an adaptation of a couple of my comments there. This is perhaps one of the single greatest discoveries I had made in my marriage prior to finding RP, which has helped me hone the craft.

50/50 is Wrong

Life is not fair. Stop training your wife to believe otherwise. We don't get ahead in life by playing fair with others, otherwise we'd all be communist peons - but even then we'd exist only to support the true alpha dictator.

"You cook, I'll clean" is garbage thinking. It's your house, your food, your dishes, your sink, your time. If you're planning divorce, yeah, don't think that way. But it's a crap life worrying about divorce all the time. If you're high enough value, why would she leave? And if you're leaving her, you have the forethought and context to prepare. Bottom line: treat everything as if it's yours.

OYS as a Mindset

When I see OYS get mentioned, it's usually in the context of what you're doing to take care of the house and improve your lifestyle. Sure, an OYS mentality leads to this as a conclusion. But you can't sustain that lifestyle without actually believing everything in your kingdom is actually yours. A citizen may own land just as your wife and kids may technically own stuff, but that land is still subject to the governing authorities, hence taxes, eminent domain, etc.

To be clearer: don't think about OYS as "I need to be responsible and diligent with OUR stuff." Think about it as you literally owning everything in your domain. It's not "some things are hers, others are mine." It's not even co-ownership. Unless she contributed separate value to get it, it's yours. And even then, if you already paid her for that value, don't let her double-dip on the reward.

EXAMPLE 1

My wife did a great job during last busy season at work and earned herself an extra $500 bonus. I rewarded her by buying her a new oven, which cost well over $500. When her bonus check came in she handed it over to me, understanding that the family finances are mine - even what she earns. She contributed an extra $500 in value to the family with her hard work.

I could have let her keep her $500 bonus as her reward and done nothing else for her, in which case she allocates her appreciation for the reward to her company.

Instead, I took the credit for rewarding her, channeled how I wanted her to be rewarded for that value rather than how she would have spent that check, and now she's overjoyed with appreciation to me at the new oven I BOUGHT HER (as opposed to her company) and I still get the $500 check to spend however else I see fit. Plus, since I do most of our cooking, extra benefit to me (hence spending more than $500 on it).

If I wanted to, I could have also just taken her bonus check and given her nothing, and I've done that before too. But most of the time I like to reward good behavior so she keeps up the good behavior. This will remain true for the $3,500 bonus she's about to get in her next paycheck. I'm not going to go out and buy her $3,500 worth of crap. I'll find other ways to reward her for adding value.

But if I reward her with my love, affection, gifts, appreciation, etc. and then still let her spend her own bonus money - she's double-dipping, getting twice the reward for the same work, and at my expense.

Contributing Value

In a 50/50 mentality, you both expect each other to do half the chores, half the cooking, half the cleaning, etc. But odds are you don't value those things equally, so no true 50/50 arrangement ever works. If you see everything in your domain as your stuff, you'll realize it's 100% responsibility on you. If she wants to use your stuff she has to contribute value. You're not a benefactor for free-loaders.

How does that value work? Maybe you do 100% of the work around the house and contribute 100% of the income and she just lays around all day waiting to give you the best sex of your life every single day multiple times a day.

Maybe sex alone isn't enough value for you, so if she wants to keep living in your house, eating your food, and watching your TV, while scrolling social media on your phone that you let her keep in her purse all day - she needs to start contributing other value. So, she cooks you breakfast. She vacuums the floors. She cleans up after the kids. She works a job. Is this enough value to you?

Sex as Value

What if she thinks she can add enough value that she can ignore sex? If she has a 50/50 mindset, sex ends up not fitting into the equation at all. It's not the same as the other household chores, and you should rightly be reinforcing that she not treat it like a chore (unless you like duty sex, then be my guest). In her mind, she's already contributing her 50% (most likely she perceives it more as 80%), so she thinks of herself as a high-value contributor and if you're only doing 50% you're just doing your fair share and she owes you nothing. Why should she care about sexually gratifying you, or even herself? That's not a variable in the 50/50 equation.

If you deviate from the 50/50 mentality to an OYS mentality, you're the one who dictates where you find value. In 50/50, there's a pseudo-objective standard. "You do this, I do that." In her mind, this has the same objective value as that. But what if this has more value to you than that? In OYS, your subjective impressions become the standard that she must meet.

EXAMPLE 2

My wife constantly tries to get affection and appreciation for doing things that she values and I don't. I've had to communicate to my wife repeatedly (sometimes even verbally), "That's great that you vacuumed the house three times this week. I'm glad you find value in that. I don't. I'm fine if it's only vacuumed once a week. You did the work, you're reaping your own reward from it. But don't expect me to pamper and reward you for something I don't value. You want pampering and rewards? You know what I value in the marriage. Go do those things instead."

She usually gets all huffy at me and says, "Well, you should value it!" I ignore her. Sometimes she'll add, "It's not fair, though, that if I do that extra work you still get the benefit of it even if it's not something you would have cared to do yourself." Sometimes I'll ignore her and go about my business. Other times I'll note quickly: "I honestly can't tell the difference between vacuuming the carpets 1 or 3 times a week. You're the only one who experiences that value."

In the past, she still harbored bitterness over this against me because I was still flawed in my execution. After refining things since discovering RP, she hasn't brought this stuff up once. Instead, she's focusing more on the things that she knows I value, including sex. That's a huge win.

---

Effort v. Value

It's also worth noting that effort =/= value. If something takes 8/10 effort for her to complete, but I only get 3/10 enjoyment out of it, that's only a value of 3/10. She feels like it should be an 8/10 because of all of her effort, but over time is now realizing that value is based on the result, not the work put in.

Decent sex might have a value of 7/10 for me, but only has an effort level of 4/10 for her. Great sex might be an 8/10 in effort, but gives 10/10 in value. When she's contributing less effort than the value her effort produces, she's in her "sweet spot" - especially when she becomes cognizant of the fact that I reward good behavior based on value, not effort.

The problem is that most women don't understand this effort-value dynamic. Why? Because they're living in a 50/50 dynamic, not an OYS/value-based relationship.
• In a 50/50 system, effort dictates what you should objectively value.

• In an OYS system, you dictate what you actually subjectively value.

If you succumb to the 50/50 mentality, you'll never be able to pull her out of it. Learn to OYS - not just by taking responsibility, but by actually assuming ownership. If she continues in a 50/50 mentality, that's on you. Lead her out of it. But don't be an idiot in how you make that transition or expect it to happen all at once.
The Coma Victim
by 0io- | October 9, 2019 | Link

I see a lot of posts on here from guys who say something along the lines of "I was in a dead bedroom for years and then I found out my wife cheated on me years ago. Now I've gotten my shit together and we're having great sex but I'm angry at my wife for cheating on me years ago when I was a faggot."

These posts bother me a little bit because the poster is upset at his wife, when in fact AWALT. Any other woman would have done the same damn thing in that situation. If you stop being a man for years, of course the wife is going to run off and get some action on the side.

If you fell into a coma for a decade, and the doctors said "We don't know when or if he'll ever wake up" would you really be mad at your wife if she had sex with somebody else five years into your coma while you were effectively dead to the world?

If it makes you feel better then go get some of your own cheating action on the side to "get even" but don't be upset at women for being women. It seems to me these posters are upset that "their wife did something wrong" and don't realize that all women in that situation behave that way. It's not a case of "your wife is defective" it's a case of "you were defective."

Channel your anger into improving your lifts.
First I'd like to thank the many of you who have read my struggling posts and provided great insight here and on askmrp. I have had success with RP on a tactical level, getting my wife to behave here and there. I've improved myself a shit ton. Got in the best shape since being a high school athlete and just won a jujitsu tournament last weekend. Without the get your head out of your ass and live life message of MRP, I would still be 20 pounds overweight begging my wife to please be nice to me.

My wife has evolved along with me. It's akin to the race for undersea supremacy between the USSR and the USA. We built the Ohio, they built the Typhoon. They built the Akula, we built the Seawolf. My wife is not meant to be a wife. Stoicism and calm assertiveness do little when she goes to my mother's room, who is staying with us from across the country because she came to help when there was a death in my wife's family, and turns the lights on at midnight, waking her up and telling her she has to leave my house - because we had a disagreement over how open the window should be.

I am her second husband and I adopted the child of her first. Love the kid, but Jesus God I fell for a load of horseshit when I married her like a white knight. God I wish her ex would have briefed me on this horseshit before he died after their divorce, because I bet he went through the same hell as me.

RP led her to respect me more than she ever has, but let me tell you that at 33 years of age, this woman has no intention of dialing it back or being led, though in the brief intervals between long bouts of insanity where she is a decent person, she is a happy wife. She is a broken specimen.

AWALT but not to the same degree. I believe that my wife has a mental illness and she can't control herself. I will tell you that I am a reasonably good leader, an attractive and fit male, with financial and professional accomplishments and ambition towards a great deal more. I was lonely and naive when I met her. The new me would never fall for it.

I met with the lawyer this morning. I am filing for divorce within a week. I wish that this marriage had worked. I wish that I could spend time with my kids and a loving wife and laugh and be happy. I am not giving up on MRP. You guys are awesome and the work you are doing here has never been more important. Since I can't have the family I want, so be it. I am going to enjoy being back on the market and dear God I am so much better equipped now than ever before. I know it will be hard at first and my wife will stoop very low before it is all over, but this is the way it must be.
Creating Your Slut
by TrainingTheBrain | December 31, 2015 | Link

Read the entire article on The Family Alpha - Creating your Slut

The Family Alpha was created by me for married men who are looking to reclaim or maintain their masculinity and status as an ‘Alpha’ male while being married in our weaksauce society and under the conditions of Marriage 2.0. I never have the intention of providing advice that will lead men to imploding their marriage, but this post covers a topic, that if not properly understood and taken on by masculine men, could do exactly that.

Once you ‘unleash the beast’ that is your wife’s inner whore, I don’t know if there is any way to turn it off. As you open her mind to getting that kind of attention from you, having her freely expressing her sexual desires and fantasies, and getting her to being DTF whenever, wherever, and however you have eliminated the possibility of things ever going back to how they used to be. You will never again be allowed to return to your ‘bluepill’ ways as she simply won’t allow it. If you pull the feminine energy and vitality that is your wife from the deepest parts of what makes her ‘tick’ it is now your responsibility to be the man who is leading her and setting the standard from which all other men will be measured, forever.

As long as you remain on point, things will be fine and you will have the exact sex life you want. But if you slip back to your old ways she is going to turn to a man who will satisfy this new craving that you have created. Once she has that taste and feels that it’s ok to let loose, she will desire raw masculine power and want to get tossed around and physically satisfied.

I had a discussion with one of the moderators about whether a woman gets turned on by men or whether she is always ‘horny’ the way men are. We pondered whether they feel that way yet only show it when around true masculine energy. It’s an interesting concept and one that I am finding more and more likely as I talk with guys and examine my wife. It seems that they like sex just as much as we do and whereas I used to think they used it only as a tool for securing a high value man or provider (or in some cases gifts/money) it seems to be more probable that when they are around a ‘real’ masculine man(alpha), they want to fuck him just as much as he wants to fuck her.

In marriage it’s not so much so that she can gain something or secure him, as she already has him, but rather because her feminine energy is pulled to that masculine energy and she knows that around this manly man, she can be her pure feminine self, to include being horny & sexually open.

It is up to you, the masculine man in the relationship to create an environment that allows your woman to be her dirty, slutty, nasty self. You know exactly what I mean, no man wants to marry or date a whore, but every man wants his wife to perform like one. He wants her to be his little slut and do all the things he has seen in porn, thought up in his mind, and desired in secret for too long. Married men not only want her perform these acts, but more importantly they want her to actually WANT to do these things to her man.
The amount of effort required to achieve this standard in your marriage varies on the type of relationship you currently have. This is The Family Alpha, so I’m going to cater my message to the married man. Keeping that in mind, there are some aspects of this post that can be used on LTRs and girlfriends. It’s actually much easier to do this with LTRs(0-2 years) and Girlfriends because you don’t have that long term bond/knowledge of one another.

Where a married man may try and get anal for the first time from his wife after 5 years of marriage, a dude with a girlfriend can try it on week 2, or in a LTR after 4 months of ‘dating’. The major difference is that the girlfriend may think he has always been like this and just waited to tell her. The wife on the other hand, she has to face the fact that this is either her husband wanting something new that he saw or heard about somewhere, or he is changing, which is something women do not like.

Another quick warning, prior to getting into the actual How To: Your Mileage May Vary

Your wife is different than mine and she is different than your buddies. AWALT still applies, yet differently. You must cater your approach to what will work best for your wife.

Another point I want to get out of the way before we get too deep is that your wife is capable of being your slut. Remove the idea that my wife just isn’t into any of that. She certainly has it in her. Whether she was your slut before you got complacent as a man or maybe you’re trying to get it out of her for the first time, it makes no difference in what elements are needed to get the slut out of her.

The steps you have to take are the same.

Full Article:  http://thefamilyalpha.com/2015/12/30/creating-your-slut/Desire Dysfunction
by exbp | February 19, 2016 | Link

Does your wife suffer from DD? Desire Dysfunction affects thousands of wives and girlfriends around the world. Symptoms usually appear 1-5 years into the relationship and if left unchecked will lead to Need New Dick Behavior, Cold-Hearted Bitch Syndrome, or even Crazy Ex-Wife Disorder. Check u/exbp's handy chart below:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Symptom</th>
<th>Outward signs</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>no kissing</td>
<td>&quot;Your breath stinks&quot;, &quot;There's people around&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no blowjobs to orgasm</td>
<td>&quot;I never liked it&quot;, &quot;You take too long&quot;, &quot;Eat some pineapple&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>lube required</td>
<td>&quot;I think my allergy pill is doing it&quot;, &quot;You need to go down on me&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>lights off / eyes closed</td>
<td>&quot;I just prefer the dark&quot;, &quot;I’m trying to concentrate&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no sexy clothes (for you)</td>
<td>&quot;Oh these? I was saving these for Girls Night Out&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no blowjobs for foreplay</td>
<td>&quot;I'm tired&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>positional anxiety</td>
<td>&quot;Other positions hurt&quot;, &quot;You finish faster this way&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>situational anxiety</td>
<td>&quot;The kids are still awake&quot;, &quot;We can't do it here&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no orgasms</td>
<td>&quot;This was just for you anyway&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pillows holding her up</td>
<td>&quot;I'm tired&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>no grooming</td>
<td>&quot;I'm just so busy&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>genetic concerns</td>
<td>&quot;Oh okay-but don't cum in me&quot;</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1-2 Symptoms? You only want me for sex

3-5 Symptoms? I need a trip with just my girlfriends

6-8 Symptoms? Facebook martial status: It's complicated

Over 8 Symptoms? She's out fucking the neighbor right now

Luckily MRP researchers have found a cure! Just a few milligrams of CHAD™ daily can turn these symptoms around. If you can't find any CHAD™ at your house, well neither can she.
I’m a volunteer paramedic. I don’t get to use every skill in my arsenal. I am not in the trenches every day all day. Though I have seen a lot I don’t get 5-6 cardiac arrests in a week or see 3 MVAs per month. Some skills get rusty and I make mistakes….not really what you want to hear but that’s why there are 2 medical at a call. We support each other.

So it becomes incumbent on me to keep my basic skills fresh. I have to review videos, be humble and ask my partners during our downtime….I go over and over them. Even still things happen.

Here’s a quick story to illustrate. We get dispatched for a patient who had compound fractures on his left leg. So we're hot to the call. Lights and sirens I'm all amped.

We get on scene, I am large and in charge. My partner is taking care of bystanders and handling vitals while I assess the injury and care options. And by golly what do you know, he’s in pain!

I set the IV, first time go...OMG I am REALLY DOING IT!!! Where's my mother fucking cape! Leg getting immobilized by my dope partner.

I do what I'm supposed to do and grab the morphine...f*ck yessssss! MORPHINE!!

This will save you buddy don’t worry.

So grab a syringe and a draw needle

And I do what I was taught to do when drawing meds from a vial. Turn it upside down and push air into it to draw it out. mother f*cker look at me. I am the shit now. I am saving lives today.

Except that when I launched the plunger I sprayed morphine all over the ground. It's REAL hard to pretend you MEANT to spray morphine on the ground!

Here’s the point. When removing your time and attention you just don’t walk away. It’s like going through all those motions I did to perform the right intervention only to get caught in your ego and ideas of self-grandeur. You don’t want morphine all over the place trying to convince everyone you meant to do it or you have no idea how it happened.

I’ll show her. I’ll just walk on out of here

Thing is women can’t overtly communicate anymore then you can covertly. Just getting up and walking away is telling her your pissed and nothing but a childish asshole. And you may be pissed BUT this isn't what you want her to see. You don’t want her seeing the morphine on the ground.

Your girl will turn you down for sex, maybe anything that displeases you enough to force the issue. You'll be tempted to just get up and stomp out of the room. Reddjive did tell you to remove your time and attention right?

AHAH fuck her!! No more access to cool guy.

Don't do this. Breathe. Push the emotion aside and focus. One of the few times I’d advocate for stoicism to suppress emotion. At that very moment, continue to do whatever you were doing. Keep watching the Gilmore Girls....look at the titties. After all, it’s all you’re getting tonight. Maybe consider how the fuck you got here. On the couch watching someone play out a fantasy on TV with a woman who can't even be bothered to dress like the character she loves so much. Better still she’s laughing at the male-female dynamics saying all she needs to do is have sex with him....and you’re like bitch, please.

Or maybe consider about your MAP. Rethink it. Consider what you need to fix.

Then when the show is done. Get up go to the bathroom. Sit down. Let it out. Get pissed off shake your fist at the world. Recognize that you didn’t make this world but you have to live in it. That these things are not you. They are just happening. True you have given them permission to happen, but they are not you. You need to change that. When done go to another room. Doesn’t matter. But find something to do maybe you just remembered something. Close the door doodle faces on some paper, I don't care just don't come here and tell me about it. During this contemplate how pathetic you are that you don’t legitimately have some important shit to do. Maybe write 1000 times I am a pathetic beta.

In the morning she is going to expect everything is fine. You know it’s not you’re still raging pissed. You’re going to be pissed that she acts like nothing is wrong. She’s going to talk, be ready for the day, fuck she’s going to give you lists of shit to do. When the fuck did she have time to do this but was too tired to fuck. All the while you’re going to wonder why she gets what she wants and you get nothing.

She asks if everything is ok? You just beta bitch out. Yeah, I am tired. Didn't sleep well.

Of course, you didn't. Your dick was pitching tents all night.

Then the texts roll in. She’s complaining about her day. about the drive, about her co-workers, why you don't spend enough time with her, or this is a good one....how you need to be more available.

She reminds you of the same bullshit she told you this morning but this time it’s as if she thinks you didn’t do it....because of course, you haven’t. Being at work isn’t really the point. She didn’t get your attention NOW.

Of course, you’re going to do it. Of course, you are. After all, MRP says you get shit done right? Most of the tasks are really home related. So show her that you can make shit happen.....

only. You’re still a loser. Still, beta because all that is giving her the time and attention she wants. You don’t have a life that says. Hey, not watching Gilmore Girls because I have a softball tournament. Or you haven't set the boundary that gym is sacrosanct. No...projects are weekend time and she doesn't set the schedule. Maybe you don't have buddies that need you to help out with some man shit.

Just suddenly cutting things off is just going to piss her off. Just STFU and walking away is the same as her cutting off sex. Ok sure maybe you do it once or twice and feel good because you got back at her but I am telling she doesn’t see it that way. IT isn’t effective long-term.

You need to have something else that gets your time over her. This is the essence of removing your time and attention. She literally has a lesser priority in your life vs that other thing or things. Then when you decide to be with her she will then know her priority in your life.

she will get the message then.
Turning the corner
by bogeyd6 | June 11, 2018 | Link

Lot's of things to learn around this place. Most of it posted around 2015 and the rest is just reiterations of the same advice. There were men who built this bridge for the rest of us. There was a particular individual who coined a phrase for every x years married you require y months of recovery.

Where am I?

Last month it has been three years since I unplugged. That's roughly 36 months and I was married for 15 years when I started. By anyone's calculation it should have taken me what, 45 months? Three months for every year of marriage.

You got guys like /u/[deleted], /u/sorcererking, /u/bluepillprofessor, /u/over60_stupid_loner, /u/strategos_autokrator, /u/sexyshoulderdevil, /u/spexer, and many others like /u/spexer. There are so many people like /u/firetempered, /u/steeltoeshitkicker, and /u/stonepimpletilists that were instrumental to me in my path that I can't even remember all of them. Too many beers and too many slept since then's.

Where did I begin?

Pretty much served divorce papers with no excuse when I returned home from a business trip. Let it roll, signed them, and went to move on with my life. Hit MRP pretty hard to save the marriage and never looked back. She lived in the same house and we were making plans with our lawyers to split up the estate. Pretty simple stuff.

Moving on to her needing a drink to have sex to pretending to have a drink to have sex. Again, this might be murky, its just been so long. I absolutely refused to deal with her unless sex was on the table. All while we were on our break and sorting things outs. A couple of months later she serves me papers cancelling the divorce. She wasn't asked, and to this day she has never been asked why. I know why.

My gym routine isn't near what it used to be. Take notes gentlemen. Don't slack off, the gym for life is the key. Not the gym till you become alpha.

How did I start?

First, I read the side bar unlike many retards who think they can google search their life problems. Then I started SL5x5 for a solid two years. I still to this day don't know which helped more. I lean to the lifting, but the reading was a nice supplement. Came here practically every day to read and post, just trying to pass on the knowledge and gain some edges I didnt knew exist. Spent the money on the SGM and put it to great effect.

Fast Forward, Where I am.

Today was maybe the first day I had the realization of turning the corner. Things had been adding up, the whirlwind, the rp concepts, and just putting myself first in everything. Realizing that if I was doing ok, that was the most important for those around me. Especially the Outcome Independence that I truly achieved. Learning from other women that I was the prize, something to be valued. Chasing women and buses only makes you tired and you will always be left behind. No longer did worry about what the wife thought, the girlfriend thought, the chick at the bar last weekend thought. It simply didn't matter, there would be plenty of others.

Yesterday I had an epiphany when the wife told me she likes when I ask to her help me. For years I looked at disdain on her not willing to just pitch in like I did. The sex has been amazing for a solid year now, on demand, whatever I want no questions asked. Shit tests, hell even comfort tests are practically non-existent. Don't get me wrong, they come and go without more than a passing thought. The fight over me controlling all of the finances is now just routine for me to handle all of the expenditures. She wanted sex this morning, she initiated, and she swallowed like she has done for over a year now. Can't tell you the last time I was inside her.

She actively comes to me for advice, leadership, and just expects that I am making all the decisions and choices. Even for dinner she just asks me where we are going. It's no longer the rigmarole of where we are going. It just doesn't happen. The huge knock down blow out fight over buying 2% instead of 1% milk isn't even on the table. Accidentally bought the 85% instead of the 90% hamburger is now just a we make do type of thing. Yeah, I literally even grocery shop and cook when I am home.

Turning the Corner

After years of controlling everything and even counseling my VP's against the very same concept. I have realized I can trust her now to delegate work to her. She wants to step up, she has earned her right to step, and through all of the denials and dismissals she is still stepping up. Quite a different woman than I married. The very one who gladly openly rebelled against me. Spoiled brat to devoted wife and family matriarch. Maybe the three months for every year is just a rule of thumb.

Much like my MRP journey, my journey of turning her into my first officer will be the same pace as before. Perhaps with a little more carrot than stick this time.

Hang in there, the light at the end of the tunnel isn't the train so just keep your foot on the gas and nevermind them brakes.
This is what happens...

by | June 11, 2016 | Link

[removed]
What Can a Marriage Be?
by GargantuaBlarg29 | February 12, 2017 | Link

The full extent of value that can be derived from a marriage has always seemed like a mystery to me. At first it was the Disney dream, but that was quickly killed after finding MRP and observing the effects of my beta experiences. After the sidebar reading, I spent months doing everything I could to make my life better and happier that involved only ME (slimming down, muscling up, getting out, keeping busy). After being really satisfied at the direction my life was going, I started working on parts of my life that involved other people (meeting new friends, red knighting old friends, finding new groups) and I found my life filling up more and more.

All the while I was applying RP to my marriage, and in the main event...sort of?, I described my vision that we would get to a point where we would give each other value, not as some form of this for that or out of obligation, but as a natural want just because. The idea is based off of some real life examples of people I've met/know now that give of themselves freely, and so much so that it makes me take a step back and say "You know what, I really APPRECIATE what these people do." It makes me feel like giving back to them, just because they give of themselves to me without expectation. That mutual value is ultimately what I want to shoot for.

Is it possible with marriage? Recently I've been looking for the continuum of just what kind of value a marriage can bring. On the low end I've taken note of posts on askMRP of just how low things can go...when a wife is slamming doors, getting revenge because her feelings were hurt, saying you can't go out, etc. And I really think to myself of how the wife and I used to play minor 'you did this to me so i'll do this to you' battles, but it never really got that vile. Then I read a lot of top posts from /u/subprimemate, from /u/2gunsgetsome, from /u/UEMcGill. I take note of the marriage /u/TheFamilyAlpha describes where he has stated before that 'friend, or lover, pick one' isn't necessarily true, and I've even ventured over to read /r/RedPillWives and see a few women who seem to take a conscious, joyous effort in their marriages. I see a lot of success posts where wives have turned around and are now jumping onto their guy's dicks with enthusiasm, but I'm unable to parse out:

Question 1: Successful men of MRP, is your relationship with your wife one that I describe above, where it's gotten to the point where there is no more scoreboard, where the value she gives she gives freely, and so much so that it makes you feel like giving that value back just out of pure appreciation for her giving that value? Does it get this good? Or is this a resurgence of a Disney outcome, and life with a wife really never turns into anything that good...it's just like success at lifting, at game, at looks, where it feels good, but it's just another piece of life?

I've also seen a lot of reports of men whose wives have found RP, or who were given books like First Kill All Marriage Counselors, which I read about in this post /u/BluePillProfessor authored. It begs the question that even though Rollo makes very clear arguments that women have the hypergamous nature they follow with their reptilian brains, and that a lot of the changes men make in RP to make their lives better influence the way their wives act (through dread, preselection, etc)...the thought has crossed my mind that women may have the capacity to change their behavior through conscious introspection. That their view of a marriage dynamic may be in part due to them being just as lost as us betas were pre-MRP, that they may just not know what they don't know yet. That maybe they aren't just lab rats whose behavior is influenced by what we do. I'm not saying I buy into this, I'm saying the thought has crossed my mind. So I ask:

Question 2: I'm not saying talk about fight club. But successful men of MRP, some of whose wives have found MRP or you have given them a book like First Kill All Marriage Counselors...or whose wives have otherwise changed their behaviors based on actually re-learning marriage dynamics from some source of information...do you think that some kind of learning process like this is ultimately beneficial in a marriage. Or do you believe that simply leading her to possible improvements, letting her decide whether to walk through the door or not, reinforcing those behaviors if she does and saying "oh well" if she doesn't is the right way to go?
60 DoD Week 6: Finances

By SteelSharpensSteel | May 6, 2018 | Link

60 DoD Week 6: Finances

By failing to prepare, you are preparing to fail. – Ben Franklin

Having a financial plan is vitally important for a number of reasons. What do you think the greatest stressor in relationships is? The lack of sex your wife is giving you? Close one. It’s money, although your shaved balls might think otherwise.

So don’t you think having a plan is critical to fixing your well-being? You have a MAP to get in shape. Why don’t you have a plan for your finances.

This post might better well be served in personal finance, but screw it. I’m going to town. For the folks overseas, some of this content might be US-specific.

On Net Worth

In order to calculate your net worth, you need to take your assets, such as your checking account, savings, house, etc, and subtract your liabilities, your mortgage, credit card debts, and loans, and you’ll get your net worth.

This is a good time to be spreadsheet guy. But instead of counting how many ladies you are seeing or counting how many times you had sex, use Excel for its intended purpose.

Start calculating it annually, quarterly, monthly. Whatever frequency you feel like you need to get a handle on where your net worth is going. For myself, I do this quarterly, though I have my finger on the pulse pretty frequently.

On Budget

You want to get ahead? You have to operate on a budget. Know what you are spending, what you are saving, and where your money is going.

For me, I’ve got it set where it takes me about 7 minutes to log into the various accounts, take certain numbers like food spend and so forth, and plug those numbers into the Excel boxes. Plugging them in allows me to quickly project the next three months spend and where I’ll be. Some numbers are easy to find, like the fixed costs of mortgage and student loans. Some numbers you have to estimate or look up, like variable food costs and gas/electric. I do this about once a month. It doesn’t take long at all – just making sure I have good cash flow and sticking to my budget.

Take the time to do a detailed line item comparison. You should know exactly how much is going where. The real key though is STICKING TO YOUR BUDGET. You have to keep to it in order to meet your goals.
On Financial Literacy

It’s key to have a good understanding on financial literacy. You have to understand things such as what is the market, what is a stock, what is a bond, what is a dividend, what is a mutual fund, and so forth. You have to know what you are investing in. Take your financial knowledge and move it up. There are literally tons of free information out there. Start going to town. And for the advanced players, go learn the ins and outs of your brokerage firm’s website and trading platform – I mean really learn it, not just “Oh, here’s how I do a buy order on a stock.” Learn how to screen for stocks, mutual funds, and bonds effectively.

Side note – If you are in the US, I recommend joining AAII. I have gotten a great deal of value out of my membership to them. A number of HNW individuals I know recommended it to me, though I had joined and got the lifetime membership before I met them.

On Bogleheads

Personally, I’m a Boglehead. Jack Bogle, man, he was the Chad of passive investing. I believe that passive investing (indexing) long term beats active investing long term. So does Warren Buffet. All my research agrees with this from a long term standpoint.

I’m also a fan of creating an Investment Policy Statement

Boglehead Resources

https://www.bogleheads.org/wiki/Bogleheads%2AE_investment_philosophy

https://www.bogleheads.org/wiki/What_the_experts_say_about_investing https://www.bogleheads.org/wiki/The_twelve_pillars_of_wisdom https://studentloanhero.com/featured/bogleheads-invest/

https://www.bogleheads.org/forum/index.php

I would highly encourage you to review these links and check out their philosophy on investing.

On Being a Contrarian

I’m also a fan of being a contrarian. Be greedy when others are fearful, and fearful when others are greedy. You see it with the Bitcoin bubble. You see it when the stock market goes up and down. Oh no, the market is going down... whatever shall we do?!? You stick to your guns. I’m not saying go catch a falling knife. I’m saying that you stick to your plan. There is opportunity when people are fearful, and caution is warranted when people are being greedy. You have to evaluate where we are in the economic cycle as well.

On a Cup of Starbucks and Retirement
You might have seen the example where someone buys a cup of Starbucks every day and then finds out that if they took that money and invested it toward their retirement, over the span of say 30 years they’ll have like an extra 200k. I have two comments on this. First, be frugal, but don’t deny yourself. Don’t let frugality control you. Second, don’t just focus on controlling the little changes like saving a cup of Starbucks every week, focus on the BIG areas. Focus on getting a new job that pays you an extra 40k per year. Focus on saving 100 bucks off your cable (1200 bucks saved per year). Focus on lowering your taxes. What I’m saying is focus on not just the small areas, but also make the bigger impact areas a higher priority. And stop drinking so much Starbucks - make it yourself. Grind the beans, for crying out loud.

On Automating

Automate your finances. Make it EASY for yourself to save money. Set up your automatic bill payments for your credit card, loans, mortgage, and bills. Take advantage of the modern tools nowadays for app/camera based check deposits. Have money taken out of your paycheck before you get it, whether it is for retirement or into a separate savings account, so you can accumulate a rainy day fund. I’ve automated as much as I can, with direct withdrawals taken out for mortgage, credit card payments, gas and electric, and for the other areas like telephone those are automatically paid from the credit card, which then is automatically paid from the checking account. Automating saves time, which is a critical resource.

On Buying a Car

Here’s your resources:

https://www.reddit.com/r/askcarsales/wiki/index

https://www.reddit.com/r/askcarsales/comments/19niva/car_buying_faqs/

https://www.reddit.com/r/askcarsales/comments/4j2okj/what_to_expect_from_your_dealership_visit/

https://www.reddit.com/r/askcarsales/comments/613jvn/askcarsales_faq_updated_march_2017/

http://fightingchance.com/ - I used these for private market research, and was worth every penny.

There’s a lot more here, but this should get you through the basics. Simply, knowledge is power. The more you know, the more power you have. If you don’t know every single line item that is going into your purchase, whether it is an accessory, taxes, that stupid coating that they try to sell you for $1000 but it’s really just worth $100, etc., then you’re not ready, and you’re more likely to be fleeced.

Just even walking into the dealership and observing other customers and their interactions with the car salesman, it’s like watching sheep. Don’t be a sheep. Be prepared. And be prepared to walk too. Cars are a commodity. You can buy the same car someplace else cheaper. Remember this - cars are a commodity, and there’s lots of dealers out there.

Side note - “But Steel, what about TrueCar? That seems awesome. I’ll just go in, get my TrueCar/Costco/KBB/XXX price and I won’t even have to do anything to get a great price.” Let me tell you this. Dealers would be HAPPY to sell you at the TrueCar price all day long. With proper preparation, you can negotiate a far better deal. Last time when preparing, I had a binder. That binder saved me over 9k. Cost me 5 bucks at the local pharmacy. Printed out all my info, was prepared as all get out, and had a prepared offer ready to go (I used my own sheet, not theirs). Be prepared, that’s what I’m saying. And don’t fall for the four square technique. I just chuckled at the different dealerships at how they try to pull that one. Hell, I went through YouTube and viewed a couple of videos on how car salesmen sell, so I had an understanding of their mentality and what they do. Be prepared.

Generally, there are five major parts for buying a car: Trading in your current car, buying your new car, buying options on a car (like that fancy heated steering-wheel), extended warranty, and financing. You should own every single area of this. As an example, when you are talking about trading in your current car, you should ALREADY have your price quote from CarMax in hand, as well as other offers from other dealers. You should know what your car is worth if it were to be sold (remember supply and demand – what is it really worth: what someone will buy it for). You should already have the KBB and Edmunds value of your used car. For your new car, you should have a breakdown of every single thing on it, including options, doc fees and ERT. For your fancy accessories, you should have the MSRP of these accessories, the actual cost of them buying (wholesale parts warehouse), and an estimate in your head on labor costs (cause parts don’t get installed by themselves). For your extended warranty, I would just say that there is a reason why this is one of the most profitable areas of a car dealership. If you simply must have an extended warranty for peace of mind, go find a wholesale warranty. Do your research. Don’t buy from the dealership. Most cars nowadays anyway are built quite well with high standards of quality control, so they’re not failing like they used to. On financing, make sure you set up your own financing before you walk in. It makes life much easier, as the car dealers get money on financing as well. If the dealership can beat your credit union, more power to them. It’s powerful as all get out when you walk in with a prewritten cashier’s check at a super low interest rate and you’re ready when they start asking you how you are going to pay for the car. “Well, I am preapproved for x amount (aka the full amount of the car), but I’d like to see what specials and discounts you have.”

It’s all about how much money you can save in each one of these areas.

Granted if you’re BETA BUCKS and your time is worth more than doing a bit of research, that’s fair. Some folk just walk in and buy a car right there with a minimum of haggling. That’s how much their time is worth to them, and I know a few people who are like this. I’m merely presenting an alternate approach. To me, it was worth the time to save more than a few thousands.

On Buying a House

For many people, a house is the largest purchase that they make in their lifetime. Many of you have already bought houses, so I won’t go into this in detail, but again, from The Millionaire Next Door – “If you’re not yet wealthy, but want to be someday, never purchase a home that requires a mortgage that is more than twice your household’s annual realized income.”

I see a lot of you going “Shit” after reading that.

On a Side Hustle

I didn’t even have to write anything, u/red-sfpplus already wrote an excellent post on this topic - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/7i7x4q/the_financial_hustle/

Learn from his example. And then buy the man a drink.

On What to Do First

"Successful Investing takes time, discipline and patience. No matter how great the talent or effort, some things just take time: You can't produce a baby in one month by getting nine women pregnant." - Warren Buffett

First of all, take stock of where you are. Figure out your net worth, and what you have and what you owe (and interest rates). I would say the first thing to do is to have a three to six month emergency fund. This can be done in conjunction with getting rid of high interest debt (such as credit card debt), however if and when you have an emergency, you’re going to need to tap into something.

Start your budgeting process. Know where your money is going. Fix it.

Most people don’t even have a thousand dollars in savings. Don’t be like that.

I would also note that the Personal Finance subreddit has this already diagrammed out in a flowchart in their wiki - https://i.imgur.com/lSoUQr2.png

On Giving Back

So you give back, right. Of course you do. But what I suggest is potentially setting up a charitable fund, so that you can maximize your charitable deduction annually. You can give a larger sum one year, and then less/none the following year – and maximize your deduction the first year. Something to consider. Plus then your charitable fund is invested, will grow with the market (remember you need a plan and asset allocation here as well), and the growth can be given to the charity as well, tax free. I’d recommend Vanguard, but really there are a number of places that do this.

On Habits of Millionaires

From the book The Millionaire Next Door, here are the characteristics of millionaires:

• They live well below their means
• They allocate their time, energy, and money efficiently, in ways conducive to building wealth.

• They believe that financial independence is more important than displaying high social status

• Their parents did not provide economic outpatient care.

• Their adult children are economically self-sufficient.

• They are proficient in targeting market opportunities.

• They chose the right occupation.

On Building Wealth

You want to build wealth? Don’t have a high consumption lifestyle! Think for a moment. How much money do you think it takes to maintain an upper-middle class lifestyle vs. how much money do you think it takes to maintain a middle-class/blue collar lifestyle? Bespoke suits. Luxury cars. Bigger house. More property taxes. And so forth. Think of all the stuff you have to purchase to keep up with the Joneses. Cost of cleaning. Cost of buying furniture for that fancy house. Etc.

“But Steel, I don’t care about the Joneses.” Sure you don’t. But your wife does. Watching that HGTV, picking out the stupid pillows that breed like rabbits in your house when you’re not looking. There’s something about a house that factors into the Female Social Matrix.

Frugality is the name of the game. Frugal being “behavior characterized by or reflecting economy in the use of resources.”

Don’t be wasteful. Don’t have a lifestyle marked by lavish spending and hyper consumption. You want to build wealth? Be frugal.

Most people will not become wealthy in one generation if they are married to people who are wasteful. You can’t accumulate wealth if one of you is a hyperconsumer.

On Offence vs. Defense

So you’re not beta bucks, you’re BETA BUCKS! You make it rain! Good for you. You play great offence. But how’s your defense? How’s your wealth accumulation? Are you spending like there’s no tomorrow? If you want to win the game, you have to play great offence AND defense.

Here’s some questions for you:

• Do you operate on an annual budget?

• Do you know how much you spend each year for food, clothing, and shelter?

• Do you have a clearly defined set of daily, weekly, monthly, annual, and lifetime goals?
• Do you spend a lot of time planning your financial future?

To build wealth, minimize your realized (taxable) income, and maximize your unrealized income (wealth/capital appreciation without a cash flow).

How do you become financially independent? You have to plan, and you have to sacrifice. You sacrifice today for financial independence tomorrow.

On Your Wife & Buy-In

As part of your plan and budgeting, once you have it all set, get buy-in from your wife. But do this not like you are seeking approval from mommy (aka you validation whore you), but matter of factly here is the plan, we are budgeting x amount for these areas. Here is our plan. Set out a vision.

On Financial Vision

Read it and weep - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/3fecgi/first_budget_discussion_leads_to_m inor_meltdown/ctnya77/

“One rarely talked-about element of Married Game is a subtle thing known as Vision. Most husbands don’t appreciate what a strong DHV possessing Vision is, and they proceed unaware of the power it can add to their relationship. Most husbands do this because they don’t understand Vision, what it is and how it is manifested, much less the subtle but important role it holds. Let me explain: once upon a time I was working for a personnel agency, and one of my jobs was coaching our people on interviewing techniques. I learned a lot about the process as a result, from both the interviewer and the interviewee side. When it came to my clients who wanted high-quality employees with good technical skills – real talent – I learned the sorts of things that such high-demand technical people wanted in a company. Money, of course, and security and benefits. But beyond that gifted employees want to work for a company with a history, a good culture, and (most importantly) a Vision.

What is Vision? In this context Vision is a manifested idea of the future. Everyone wants to work for a company that’s changing the world and is doing so in a positive, pro-active way. No one wants to work for the company that’s floundering, desperate just to meet its next quarter’s goals. Vision is a generally-stated plan-of-action toward a distant but achievable goal, presented in an enticing enough manner to inspire. It’s short on details and long on generalizations. It’s reflective of inner beliefs, values, and judgments, an indication of character, foresight, and initiative. It should be bold, meaningful, and challenging."

Now, this quote above is excellent. You need a vision for your life, but you also need a vision for your finances. What would your financial vision be? What does it look like to you? Create it, and then be ready to share that with your family.

On Love of Money

Remember folks, money itself is not the root of all evil. It’s the LOVE of money that causes the problem. When you are so driven to be a better beta bucks to get that coin, and start neglecting yourself, your relationships, etc... you’ve got problems. Money is just a tool in the toolbox. Use it, don’t let it use you. Don’t become a slave to money. Your life doesn’t consist of how many toys you have. And you can’t take it with you when you go.

On Insurance, or Lack Thereof

Would it surprise you most people are underinsured? Make sure that you have enough of the key five types of insurance: health, car, homeowners/renters, life, and disability. Preparing yourself for these situations can save you a lot of pain in the future. Also, make sure you get enough umbrella insurance. Typically they say have enough umbrella insurance to cover your net worth, but I recommend getting a bit more.

A quick note, practically, do not get whole life insurance. Get term insurance, and invest the difference in cost between whole life and term. You’ll be much better off. And yes, this is for 99.9% of situations. The remaining .1% of situations are when someone is really wealthy and there are estate and tax considerations. Aka for most of us, don’t worry about it.

And take care of your health, so you don’t get fat when you are older and have related medical problems. Put. The. Fork. Down.

On Assets and Liabilities, Rich Dad Poor Dad Edition

A number of you have read Rich Dad Poor Dad, and there’s controversy in it. I disagree with a number of items in there, but there is an interesting point in there about how he views assets and liabilities:

“You must know the difference between an asset and a liability, and buy assets. If you want to be rich, this is all you need to know. It is Rule No. 1. It is the only rule. This may sound absurdly simple, but most people have no idea how profound this rule is. Most people struggle financially because they do not know the difference between an asset and a liability.”

He has a simple, non-accounting definition - “An asset is something that puts money in my pocket. A liability is something that takes money out of my pocket.”

Buy assets. I like it. What is out there that you can buy that puts money in your pocket. Stocks. Bonds. Mutual Funds. Real Estate that produces Income. There are a ton of items.

You should also think about getting rid of your liabilities... the giant boat, the private jet, the cluster B horrible sex-depriving wife (you know who you are)... you get the idea.

On Disaster Recovery and Information Security

What were to happen if you were to croak, or your only laptop with all your financial data was stolen or destroyed in a fire along with all your financial papers (see, you should have gotten that fireproof safe)? Would you have a plan on what to do? Would your spouse? Your kids? I would suggest making a backup of your finances, statements, tax returns, and other important papers, and put that on an encrypted USB key with a password that you and your wife knows, and then storing that someplace secure. Note that you can do fancy stuff like cloud storage, and so forth - but you need to have a plan for the worst case scenario.

Additionally, make sure that you use two-factor authentication when you log into your banking accounts (if they have it), as well as don’t repeat your passwords for your financial accounts.

I would even suggest having a separate secured email for your banking accounts, and another one for your personal accounts that get those damn spam emails all the time.

Don’t be stupid with your financial accounts. Using the same password is stupid. Yeah, I’m talking to you.

On Practical Advice

Do get rid of high interest credit cards. If you’ve got a balance on your 29.99% APR credit card and are paying that interest every month, it’s in your best interest to eliminate that debt as soon as possible. You’re not going to get a 29.99% return in a month in the stock market (unless you take on excessive risk for that return, obviously). Try to transfer that balance to a promo 0% interest credit card, and work that down.

Don’t borrow from your 401k. You’re cutting out your future returns. Don’t make that 401k loan your emergency fund, but rather have a separate emergency fund.

Do use credit cards over debit cards, for a whole host of reasons (theft being the primary reason).

Do pay yourself first. Take out at least 10% of your paycheck before it hits your checking account, and start saving.

Don’t pay monthly or annual fees on checking accounts or savings accounts. You shouldn’t be paying a bank to store your money. They should be paying you for that privilege.

Do get solid credit cards that give outstanding rewards. Do your research. Get at least 2% cash back if you can. Shoot for 5% or more. For example, Discover allows you to get 5% cash back in certain categories, and then you can redeem $20 for a $25 gift card to a number of different vendors. Looks like you just got a 6.25% return.

There are plenty of other examples. Do you spend a boatload at Amazon? Get your 5% return. As an example - I get a 5% return on gas using a certain credit card. It’s unlimited throughout the year, and is redeemed as a statement credit, so I don’t have to worry about redemption. I have a certain Amex that I redeem at 4.6% points per dollar spent, plus a 2% general cash back card (some places don’t accept Amex). I could go even crazier, like getting the 3% on restaurants, or churning cards (and there are a lot of sites out there on how to churn successfully), but at some point, it’s not worth it.

Do realize that credit cards make it easy to buy things that you don’t need. Recognize that part of yourself that wants to overspend. Ask yourself, do you need whatever it is you are buying. Would it hurt more if you paid in cash rather than credit. Buying with credit encourages you to buy more than you can afford.

Do shop around for loans/services. I asked my bank what the best car loan they could give me - they said 2.99%. I asked my credit union, and they got me 1.49%. That’s a big difference in interest over the course of a loan. Generally due to how credit unions are structured (and their presence - mostly online), they will have better deals on certain loans than banks, depending on the product.

Don’t delay saving for retirement. Generally, you’ll want to be saving 15% or more of your income for retirement early on. If you don’t save early, the harder it will be.

Do try to simplify your finances. It makes it much more complicated if you chase after the best savings rate for your online bank, and then have many accounts all over the place. The 20 dollars that you get in interest is not worth the complexity and time (aka your most valuable resource) it takes to manage all that stuff.

Don’t use your HELOC unless you have to. I have a large HELOC, but I don’t use it. But who knows when I need access to a large sum of money. And don’t use it in lieu of your emergency fund. You need both.

Do some research into budgeting tools. There’s a lot of people on these threads that recommend YNAB. I personally haven’t used it, so I can’t recommend it one way or the other. I’m old school (and cheap thrifty - why would you pay for something if you can do it yourself). But definitely check those tools out - Mint, Personal Capital, YNAB, budgeting tools through your bank, etc. Also, if your credit card does an annual summary (like Amex does), make sure you look at it to get an idea on where you’re spending - it’s very helpful.

On Tips for Saving Money

There are a ton of ways you can save money. Go ahead and google “how can I save 1000”. Wait, I did that for you - https://www.google.com/search?q=how+can+I+save+1000

Take some time, call up your cell phone provider/cable provider and see what specials they have. There’s a ton of things you can do to save money quickly.

On Too Much Money

Say you’re an ostrich farmer, and are flush with cash. You’re asking yourself, ok, so I’ve maxed out my 401k, I’ve maxed out my Traditional IRA and then backdoored it into a Roth IRA for tax diversification plus the benefits of a Roth. I’m contributing to a 529 plan for the kids. I looked into mega backdooring my Roth but darn it my employer doesn’t let me do that. I’m doing all of the tax advantaged things I can. I still have this extra 300k sitting around - what do I do with it?!? First world problems, amirite. Again, this comes back to your plan. What’s the short term plan with this money. What’s the long term plan. What’s your risk tolerance. What assets can you invest in that fit in with your plan. You still have to manage your budget, even if you are a 1 percenter.

On the Best Investment and Most Important Resource
I’m a firm believer that the best investment is investing in yourself (and your family and kids), and your most important resource is not money, but time. Learn a skill. Go get a degree. Give your kids a head start. Help your wife accomplish a goal. Do what you can to save time. Money of course helps, but you know what happens when you teach a man to fish.

On Happiness

Honestly, at some point, money just becomes a scoreboard. Money will give you security. It will remove a stressor in your life. It will remove fighting and stress in your relationship (about money, fool). It will allow you to do many things. But eventually, money won’t give you happiness. You have to figure that one out yourself. And of course there’s the joke about “Money can’t buy you happiness, but it can buy you a yacht big enough to pull up right alongside it.” – David Lee Roth.

On Money and Attraction

Money by itself will not make your wife’s panties wet. Keep that in mind. Having and getting money is basic adulting. Same with saving and managing it. You want to get her wet? Get in shape. Lift. Does money boost your status? Sure. Is status one of those areas that has some effect on where you are in the sexual marketplace? Sure. Pure physical attraction? No. Do you really think that making MORE money is going to have your wife give you more sex? Of course not - https://heartiste.wordpress.com/2014/06/02/money-wont-save-beta-males/

Get in shape. Be hawt. And fix your damn teeth so you can smile like you are a somebody.

On a Brief Story

So I was talking to a friend of mine, and I asked him how he and his wife set up the finances. He told me about this system, where his paycheck goes into his checking, his wife’s paycheck goes into her checking, and they have a joint savings account. Then he went into a convoluted description on how each of them pays certain bills, and how what he’s paying is not fair since he’s paying the mortgage AND property tax AND daycare, etc etc). I thought to myself, man, what a convoluted way to deal with stuff. They would then have multiple financial meetings, and discussion on who pays what, and all this extra stuff. It was just a lack of overall ownership going on.

Just take care of the finances. Figure out a system that works for you. I’m not going to tell you which system is the best, because it’s all dependent on your unique circumstances (example: heavy spender SAHM vs saver career girl, you’ll need to put some deep restrictions on the heavy spender). But own it.

On Who Owns the Finances
You own the finances. Period. End stop. From the prior post on finances, it’s so important that I’m putting it here again:

“At the core: Who do you want in charge of your financial future?

The person interested in maintaining status quo and safety at all costs with your happiness and satisfaction a secondary or minor consideration? Or you?

If you've learned anything here it's that you need to be a captain. Putting your wife in the family alpha role breeds contempt and most of the problems that brought you here. Besides control of sex, family MONEY decision veto power is the key indicator of who is wearing the pants.”
Dark Triad: Machiavellian

by bogeyd6 | June 16, 2017 | Link

Warning: This series is going to trigger blops and reds alike. I figure it's best you know that right out before you read it.

I am going to start my series of the Dark Triad personality types. Machiavellian personality types get a bad rep for a couple of different reasons. The biggest issue is the morality of decisions or actions used to achieve your goals. The second problem is people get boiled down to what they have to offer, not who they are. The other part that people generally dislike is the lack of empathy. Many others have covered this in-depth so I am going to write it as examples vs theory.

Deceit in Relationships

When you think about it, why do you ever need to tell the truth outside of the legal system? TRP members use this every single day and is almost institutionalized manipulation. We make our judgement that it is not harmful to either person because both persons agree with the end result. There is nothing wrong with this and as we shall soon read, bloopers also engage in the behavior but to an end that is not agreeable. You can lie to another person or mislead information to gain a result.

Examples

Girl is Obese.

You could be honest and upfront with your girl and tell her that she is fat and unattractive. She deserves to be told by the person she loves most in the world that her health is at risk. She also should be told that you only find rolls desirable when they are on the dinner table. Fact is, only a few subsets of men find a busted can of biscuits attractive and you can find them at your local fair grounds. You already know how that conversation and possibly relationship is going to end. It should be noted that some men do get results with this tactic, so your mileage may vary.

The other way to actually get a result is never telling her she is obese. When she asks (oh, she will) when she looks fat in those pants you probably shouldn't answer back "it's not the pants". You could instead over time start going to the gym, changing your diet at home, and achieving results with your own body. You rub her hips, ass, and she will start notice all on her own that she is on the losing end of the attraction game. Casually mention events at the gym and new classes and see if there is any interest in going. Never pushing the issue. When and if she starts mirroring your diet and gym habits and becoming more attractive. You wouldn't have said you manipulated her would you? You did, and you hamstered that you are not a manipulator.

Why is it then that one way worked and was considered immoral, when the other way destroyed the relationship?
Sexy Times

You approach a woman in the bar who you find attractive. You project confidence, attractiveness, and begin a conversation with her. Imagine telling her all the good AND the bad things about you. You probably should mention up front that you have a three inch micropenis, one testicle, poor credit, and a debilitating health issue. Her panties are going to moisten right up and she will decide that your personality is so much more important than your health status.

Doubtful, you are probably not going to mention any of those things to her. In fact, you would probably lie about them if she asks directly. Instead you run your PUA game and manipulate her into getting sex. Women in fact use sex as a manipulative tool as well and more often than men. The post-wall woman is ready to settle down and provides sex to keep the BB around. The blowjob to convince you to buy that new washing machine with the steam option was not manipulation.

Getting a career

Most people in the work force have a pretty decent and truthful resume. They write down their qualities, job skills, past employment history. Then embellish a little bit, not outright lying, just gussying it up. They get the interview and answer the questions truthfully but don't offer up their bad qualities. Maybe or maybe not get the job. There are plenty more jobs out there.

Why not lie about your resume completely? Put down jobs you never worked at with skills you know how to do but no one would hire you for lack of experience. For each job have a friend pretend to the be the HR person and provide the employer that phone number to check. Many people work for small companies who may not be in business anymore! You can't check a job that is closed down but you can still provide your old supervisor's phone number. Show up the interview prepared for the job duty questions and just tell them what they want to hear. As long as you show up to work and actually know how to do what the job requires. There will never be an issue if you are just a little out of practice or green as long as you can complete the work. You won't be able to do that with a college degree, people can check for free. You can fudge your GPA, as that is not provided through a FERPA request.

Cynicism

Cynicism simply put is they believe that people are motivated purely by self-interest. In other words, they look out for themselves. You can trust me when I say that people are inherently evil and by extension selfish. Therefore, you could be as well and use people’s own selfishness to get what you want in life. People with a healthy dose of cynicism already look at social interactions and life events for what they are. Not as they want them to be. Did you really think marriage was a good thing to benefit you personally? Is that job actually hiring you because you fit the role? Does the 32 year old single mom sleep with your fat ass because you are great in bed? Nope. Marriage is to benefit the woman. Your job needs you only to make money. That woman needs a provider. However, to the non-cynic. Marriage makes strong families. Your job likes your work and personality. The single mom likes your sense of humor and Kleenex box color choices.
Morality

Morals are standards of behavior and belief by society. Who really gets to decide what is moral? You do. You get to decide if your actions are moral or not. The morals of your actions should be dictated by your results. As long as there is not a law against it, it’s moral. There it is in black and white.

- Telling the truth, only when it benefits you.
- Don't Gossip, just use it to spread discontent against an enemy.
- Respect others, who have something to offer you.
- Integrity, you will be the only person with integrity in the room.
- Seek justice, especially when it will get you that promotion over the guy who was caught breaking the rules.
- Serve others, but only when they are giving something back.
- Be charitable, because people need to see your “good side”.

Conclusion

Life can be what you make of it as long as you are willing to selfishly pursue your goals. Look out only for you and yours. Willing to do what is necessary to win.
So full disclosure, I have been following my MAP with fits and starts. I started getting into some new hobbies: hunting, brewing, building furniture and have put away some childish activities like playing video games. My physical conditioning and strength has improved but my weight hasn't fallen because of diet and beer. I've been getting to my workouts 4x a week but since they start at 545am, I don't always get my 7 hours of sleep. Have taken on new leadership positions at work, but finding myself stretched thin and not always able to fulfill all my responsibilities. I've led at home and on vacation, but have had at least 2 moments of butthurt in the past 3 months and lost frame with the kids and wife more than a few times. Been getting a ton of IOIs and have cheated twice, but have recommitted to be faithful with no desire to end the marriage. Cheating and hiding it from her is Beta and until I am ready to be open with her about it, I will be faithful.

What I am trying to say is that I am not perfect, my journey has not been perfect, my MAP has been an up and down journey and yet the results are evident everywhere. Here's the latest proof.

Wife and I are drinking wine and watching a movie I picked a few nights ago called, "The Family Stone". Its a movie we hadn't seen in years about a female dominated family with a storyline taken from a Shakespearian comedy. Basically, the "strong" (bitchy) women in a family don't accept a new female fiance and as events unfold, she falls in love with the other brother and her bf falls in love with her sister.

As we are watching the movie, the matriarch begins to tear into the fiance while her castrated son just sits helpless.

I say to my wife, "She's a bitch."

My wife says to me, "I hope I don't act like that when one of our sons brings a girl home And---"

I immediately cut her off, put my hand under her chin, look her in the eye and say, "Don't worry, I'll put you in your place so damn fast."

She smiles, says, "Good." Then rubs up against my side, leans into me and rests her head on my chest.

Then she says, "You do a good job keeping me in my place and not letting me get out of line."

My brain exploded. This is the same woman who I used to get in fights with all the time. The one whose mom told me, before we were married that she was, "high strung like a racehorse." The woman who once (pre MRP) told me, "Why are you acting like such a baby?" When I was complaining about not having sex.
That same woman is now secure, knowing she has someone willing to "tame" her, someone who she feels is worth being tamed by.

Gentlemen, this is progress.
Is this as good as it gets?

by TrainingTheBrain | November 22, 2015 | Link

A running theme in The Family Alpha is the disdain for complacency and the relentless acceptance of mediocrity. Men are capable of achieving so much in their life (too include their marriage) yet collectively accept so little. There has been a few posts here that have brought these following topics to the forefront of our minds. Thanks to /u/BluePillProfessor and /u/theultmatecad men are able to see inside other men’s minds and marriages allowing them to view life and marriage from a perspective that may be completely alien to their own. With all things MRP you take the knowledge to avoid the hole someone else fell in, apply what works, and disregard the rest.

Whether that means total confrontation, saying what you think without filter or regard for consequences or choosing to have your needs met outside of marriage, it makes no difference. What matters to you, the guy outside that arena is the understanding that each situation is unique and all that matters is that you, as a man, are doing your best with the cards you’ve been dealt.

This leads me to the question of What in the actual fuck is going on???

I think it’s a blend of two separate, yet overlapping issues.

1) Society’s aggressively message of, ‘take what you get and be happy you have anything’.

2) Men think women are men. Husbands think life follows the rules that exist in Disney movies. You know what I’m talking about; Life is fair, the nice guy comes out on top, it’s the inner beauty that counts (whatever the fuck that means), and worst of all, she’ll always be there.

The persistency of these patterns of thought (even on TRP/MRP) astounds me.

I’m 28 and have been with my wife for 12 years, married for 7 and we have 2 kids 6 & 3. I cannot tell you the last time I went a day without fucking or having my dick sucked. I’ve got my kids squared away and my wife has been improving personally and professionally on a level that has impressed the fuck out of me. This isn’t some sort of a humblebrag, it’s setting the stage for you to see what is capable when you truly give something your all and you are still fine with losing it all.

How I’ve been able to manhandle the two major failing points:

* ‘take what you get and be happy you have anything’

First off, fuck this message and those who promote it. I have a wife and kids, if you think that I am simply content with this fact then you Sir, are the population who needs to calibrate your mind. I set the example I hold others to. This is how it is in every facet of my life. My wife runs and lifts, this is due to me teaching her and taking the time to cater my message in a way which I knew she’d understand. She used to scroll for hours on social media. I eventually, after months, got her to realize what a waste of time this was and now she’s deleted all of it. Of course, she thinks she decided to quit Facebook/Twitter and that is fine by me. The Family Alpha doesn’t take the credit, he gives it away freely to his family. The goal isn’t praise, it’s to get the life you want.

The same is applied to sex. I refuse to accept mediocrity in the bedroom. The message pushed is that once a week is enough or whatever is good for the wife is enough. Again, fuck that message in the ass using sand as lube. I pick my wife up and fuck her on the wall, I fuck her in every room and on every piece of furniture, I fuck her in every hole and she begs for my cum all over her. Do you think I’m just a lucky dude with a horny wife?

Negative.

I look good naked, I never shut her down even when I’m tired as fuck, and I start gaming her the moment my feet touch the floor. Let’s get this clear gentlemen, if you want more than accepting having anything is enough then you need to be a man worth giving more than enough to. My wife knows that I can find someone else and that I am unwilling to keep people around who do not bring value. This has put her in the position where she enjoys giving me her body and mind, submitting to my leadership as she knows I’m a man with a plan who is going to take her and our kids to the ‘promised land’.

As the leader of your family you decide how much is enough. Don’t be a weaksauce pathetic fuck who is happier than a fag with a bag full of dicks when his wife sucks his dick once a month. My personal standard is that my dick is in my wife’s mouth daily and that we are fucking at the minimum once a day. You may want more or less, that’s your call. By allowing your wife to fuck you once a month and you still shower her with time and attention you are sending the signal that she’s giving enough and you are doing nothing more than rewarding failure.

Set the example first, then hold others accountable. Only you can determine how much is enough. Remember, your wife will always give you what you deserve as a man. Starfish sex, sexual denial; that shit can be removed from your vocabulary if you’re willing to invest the time and energy to make it happen.

• Men think women are men/ she’ll always be there

When guys get married there seems to be this sense of, I’ve got my girl for life, now I can take my foot off the gas. This is because we think she’ll always be there, she loves me for me, she doesn’t look at other guys, she’s married, etc. It’s all fucking bullshit. It’s this line of thought that has brought about the disgusting stereotype of married men. It’s this line of thought that made me feel fucking compelled to write ‘The Family Alpha’ because I was disgusted that it was expected of me as a father to be weak and overweight. Dadbods, Marriage 2.0, and IV dripfeed sex are but a few examples of what Married men and fathers have become in society.

Yet men accept it.
They keep thinking that their woman loves them the same way that they, as men, love their wife. They think that their woman is somehow different. This is when the cheating and divorce papers come in; or worse the broken man carrying the purse around target, who resents his life and has repressed his masculinity for so long that he simply gives up and takes his life.

Gentlemen, kill your ego right fucking now, before it’s too late and you pass the point of return in your marriage with the woman you swore your vows to. Are you a fat slob (above 15% bf)? If so, your wife is looking at other guys and the lack of sex is due to the lack of desire/attraction which is a nonnegotiable aspect of life. You either generate the tingle or you don’t. Being a nice guy with a fun personality means nothing, you have to be more, you have to be a masculine powerhouse who refuses to accept subpar performance.

She only knows her hypergamous, solipsistic, feminine nature. It’s your job to make those things work for you. Fat, weak, unmotivated husbands it is your fault your wife is a itch. It’s your fault she won’t fuck you, and most importantly it’s your responsibility to fix all of it. That is, if you’re willing/capable to work for it. A lot of guys here have been so weak and have refused to lead for so long that the very concept of doing so seems like trying to solve Pi.

While it certainly is a lot of work. If you want your marriage to last the long road of life, you’ve got to pick up your nuts (for some, find them) and just start the fucking grind. There are no days off, there are no minutes off, you have to be on your A game day in and day out. It is the only way to achieve what is considered a ‘successful/desired’ marriage. I have been the captain of my ship for years, if I were to slip tomorrow, my wife’s view would begin to change, women have no concept of trend analysis, they are in the moment. You had a bad day, lost your temper, and chose the weak path? Get back on the saddle before you let it go for too long. Own our shit and move forward.
You are meant to succeed

Men are goal-seeking beings. We were meant to strive for the next mission, to conquer, to overcome adversity and claim victory. In other words, each man is designed to achieve what is best in life for him. Striving for a goal is the way to success and happiness, and the two are closely related.

"True success and true happiness not only go together but each enhances the other." - Maxwell Maltz

In order to help us define and achieve our goals, MRP offers a sidebar, weekly OYS and a wealth of complimentary knowledge from its members. It is a set of tools to facilitate our continual transformation, and even the vets here continue to transform, to improve every day.

Program yourself for success

One of the best tools for transformation is not specifically called out much in MRP yet: visualization. Not to get too philosophical on you, but regardless of your belief system, for the moment think of the mind and the body as vessels for your spirit. They are similar to a machine. Machines can be trained, programmed to do what we want them to. Input a flight plan into a plane, and the machine finds its course and performs (usually) as expected. It needs a flight plan to know where to go and it needs to move to know if it is going in the right direction.

Your mind and body are the same way. Their "input instructions" come in the form of visualization, which is the domain of your imagination. Your imagination can paint the picture of you succeeding in a mission, overcoming an obstacle or even finding your next mission. What’s most important is you vividly picture your success in achieving your goal, especially how you feel while succeeding. That is how the rest of your mind and body gets the message. It's a way of communicating with your subconscious on what you want the rest of your being to achieve.

How do we know visualization actually makes a difference? Consider this example, taken from Psycho-Cybernetics by Maxwell Maltz (a masterpiece and I highly recommend it for any MRP member). In this book, Maltz references an experiment where three groups of people were baselined on their ability to make free throws:

- Group 1 practiced for 20 minutes per day for three weeks. At the end of this period, they had improved their free throw performance by 24%.
- Group 2 did not practice at all for three weeks (control group). At the end of this period, their free throw performance had not changed.
- Group 3 visualized practicing for 20 minutes per day for three weeks, but did not do any physical practice. At the end of this period, they had improved their free throw performance by 23%.

Go back and read that last point on Group 3 again. Group 3 only visualized their practice, they did no physical practice at all, yet they still improved their abilities nearly the same as Group 1, which had practiced physically in a traditional sense!

Think of the power this now gives you. There are few limitations on the imagination, which empowers you to improve your abilities in nearly any area you can visualize regardless of your physical and logistical circumstances and limitations (e.g. COVID-19 lockdowns or something as simple as not always having the time or means to train in the traditional sense).

Tips for getting started

1 - Break your inertia. You need to be moving to know if you are on course. Back to the airplane analogy, if the plane isn't moving, it doesn't know if it's on course. Weather pattern changes and other factors may take the plane off course along its way. However, as it gets off course, it realizes this and course corrects. The plane literally zig zags to its target.

Success is a zig zag, not a straight line. You need to be taking action and willing to accept many failures in order to succeed. Go look up why Ford's first commercially successful automobile was a "Model T". Almost no one gets things right the first time around. Those that fail, course correct and persist are the ones that succeed. As Maltz puts it, "Functionally, a man is somewhat like a bicycle - it must maintain forward momentum towards a goal or it gets shaky and falls down."

2 - Set aside time for visualization every day. I suggest you start with 10 - 30 minutes. Regardless of your mission, it counts almost as much as taking direct physical action. We reviewed a basketball example above, but really this can be applied to any sport, chess, hitting new PRs in your lifts, day game scenarios, night game scenarios, martial arts, playing musical instruments, even building your frame. It is all put even more within reach through the power of visualization. Yes you still need to lift, game and have friends in real life, FFS.

3 - Keep these practical application points in mind:

- Your success mechanism must have a goal or target that you believe already exists (it can exist in actuality, or in potential).
- It must be in alignment with your self-image and believable to you. For example, I'm in my 40's and have been doing BJJ for 6 months - imagining me winning a UFC championship is useless because I don't see that as realistic for myself.
- Only work on one thing at once. One goal at a time.
- Focus on the END, NOT the MEANS. When you vividly visualize the goal, your body's internal mechanisms will find a way to help achieve it.
- Making mistakes helps to direct you toward your goal. It provides an autocorrect that helps you "course-correct" towards your goal.
- You gain skill by redirecting your errors until you are heading in the right direction. Then, you must FORGET the past (the errors), and focus on the final successful choice.
that led you in the right direction.

- Trust in the process without worrying about it or trying to adjust it. You must “let it” work, rather than “make it” work. Your success comes as you act, and the proof of your success follows, so you can’t look for success before actions.
- This takes some time. Reserve judgement until you have made a practice of this technique daily, focused on a single goal, for at least three weeks.

Make it a habit

This is mostly a subconscious process you are setting into effect. The key is making a habit out of training it through your imagination on a regular basis. This is how the "machine" you have been given works. Putting it to regular use is essentially creating a habit of being happy. And, in the words of Robert Louis Stevenson, "the habit of being happy enables one to be freed, or largely freed, from the domination of our outward conditions." Try this technique out for a few weeks and report your findings below.

Edit: corrected typos
Recently, I’ve been dealing with a lack of motivation.

Others have pointed it out in OYS threads - I’ll notice a problem, resolve to fix it, and have the same problem re-emerge.

Strangely, these are all problems I thought I’d “solved”; habits and systems I’d already established and built out. I’ve been scratching my head about it for months.

What happened to my motivation?

A couple weeks ago, it occurred to me that a huge driving force for my self improvement has been resentment. I don’t just want to get better - I want revenge. I want to reverse the power dynamic in my marriage. I don’t just want my wife to suck my dick; I want her on her knees.

I’m not saying this is good; it’s not something I consciously decided. It’s just there, deep in my subconscious.

The sudden drop off in my motivation correlates with actual IMPROVEMENT in my marriage. Things got a bit better (though not as good as they could be), and suddenly the anger that underlay so much of my motivation decreased. Less angry, less resentful, less motivated.

I KNOW this is a problem. I’m 100% sure /u/man_in_the_world will come here and talk about internal vs. external validation, because we’ve had that conversation before and he was right then, too.

But so far in my life the only thing has worked to change my deep, underlying beliefs has been hard work and time. I’ve never seen a short cut to accessing your deep narratives that actually worked.

So I’d love some personal stories that I could absorb. What happened when you transitioned from anger to whatever came next? What keeps you motivated? What was your journey like?

And I swear to god if anyone talks about stoicism in here I will kick your ass. Tim Ferris roman statue bullshit.

<3

PS OH, I forgot to add. The corollary here - I worked on getting myself pissed off and crushed at the gym where I’d struggled previously. So anger clearly works as a motivator, but I feel like my odds of a sudden stroke increase at the same time. Doesn’t feel sustainable.
She Doesn't Deserve the New Me
by bogeyd6 | November 17, 2017 | Link

She didn't deserve the old you either but you served it up on a silver platter everyday. Many people think that this feeling is part of the anger phase and I postulate that it is a different thing altogether. /u/SorcererKing wrote this fascinating post https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/2xi8sc/moving_past_the_mrp_anger_phase/ damned near three years ago. The idea that you can move past the anger phase is a very important cornerstone of the MRP program. The anger phase works like this:

- Get pissed.
- Do something smart about it.
- Realize she was being a woman.

Did your wife deserve some of the blame of how your marriage ended up? To hear some around MRP tell it, it was all your fault. She was blameless in the marriage. The answer is a blend of yes and no. She acted like TRP thought she would, but she also had a conscious choice in how things ended up. When you look at it from this direction you can see why you would hold a grudge for shouldering all that responsibility. When others tell you to shut up about it and work on you, that's because in reality its the only thing you control most of the time. You can't set about fixing her, but by changing your ways into an attractive man. You are subtetly manipulating her.

She got worse as you did, she improves when you do.

Usually around this time in the relationship you have probably gotten through the anger phase. Or, at least, we hope you have gotten there. Then when you have kind of hit your stride and things are going good in your life. Why are you looking at her with disdain? My story is a bit like that. I spent the past three years figuring out how to be more MRP and less beta. When I hit my stride, I was looking back at her and wondering why she didn't improve with me. She didn't ever take up any of the cooking, she only went to the gym because I did. Hell, it seemed like she was doing the bare minimum to keep my paycheck in the bank. Flash forward to today, and she is everything I need at the moment and I look elsewhere/inwhere to get the rest.

My first thought that really this was a double secret probation covert contract. That would make some sense because it explains that you start MRP to improve your marriage. What it does not explain is why you suddenly think you are better than her. So the covert contract wraps up the problem, but it fails to make a solution. Even upon realizing the contract you still feel that way. Should this have been anger, it would fleet as anger tends to do. Your wife/ltr/plate is doing everything you want but you just aren't satisfied with it. Trying to find a solution just shows you cannot be pleased.

I am going to call this The Warrant Phase or some other equally stupid name if I can figure out just exactly what it is.
Stop trying to be someone else.

“Out of every one hundred men, ten shouldn’t even be there, eighty are just targets, nine are the real fighters, and we are lucky to have them, for they make the battle. Ah, but the one, one is a warrior, and he will bring the others back.”
–Heraclitus

Everyone thinks they’re the man who will bring others back, even though most shouldn’t even be on the battle field.

Why the dissonance?

ArtfulMan is a subject matter expert on personality types, that’s his calling and he’s damn good at it. We all have our personalities, but more and more people are trying to claim a personality which isn’t theirs and the consequences are becoming more and more disastrous.

This post was inspired by the discussion between Mark Baxter and The Artful Man which can be found here.

Before reading the post, I recommend you give Mark’s channel a listen and hear what he and Artful Man had to say. I also recommend you follow the Podcast as it’s absolute gold. Mark is bringing brilliant masculine minds to the table for a chat and they’re dropping knowledge bombs left and right.

With the credit for the inspiration out of the way...

We are living in an age where you can be anything you want to be. You can be a pilot, an astronaut, a Navy SEAL, a bodybuilder, and you can do it all from the comfort of your basement; thank you internet.

Only you know who hides behind the keyboard.

If you have ever amplified your story to make it sound cooler than it really was or if you claim to have achieved feats which you never have in your real life, it has to stop now.

In the Podcast Artful Man talks about those who put on that mask and try to be people who they aren’t and in doing so they, “create a self-parody & stream of consciousness which will erode them over time” and he is dead on with this assessment.

When I heard this I had to hit pause because it perfectly describes something I’ve discussed time and time again.

If you make yourself out to be a hero online, then when you close the screen and look into the mirror, you’re going to hate the face looking back more than you did before.
Why?

Because you realize that in your real life, you aren’t that great, you haven’t achieved those accomplishments, and you aren’t an authority on the subject which you claim to be. You’re self-loathing grows once the rush of online attention fades and whether you believe it or not, eventually you have to look way from the screen and return to the ‘real world’. In this world, you’re nothing and instead of working to make yourself something, you just rage at yourself for being nothing until you have to return to the screen and plug back into the forums or twitter where you rule supreme, but this isn’t real living and a part of you knows that.

When you aren’t living your message, your message will absolutely destroy you. Too many are sharing a message which lacks authenticity and it is going to burn them.

Everything on The Family Alpha comes from a position of genuine living. I live what I write and I share my failures as well as success to show that I’m not some superman with a family; I’m a guy who busts his ass and sometimes I hit the mark and sometimes I fall flat on my face. Through it all, I’m honest and this is why I can look myself in the mirror and smile.

I’m not eroding because there are no lies eating away inside my heart.

But those who lie and spread a false message, they’re afraid of being exposed.

They’re always covering their tracks and are forced to keep up with the lies which compound upon themselves. The web which they must navigate to remember who they are and what they’ve done takes a toll on their mental health.

Take pride in who you are and the life you’ve lived up to this point.

If you want to reach greater heights, then write about how you’re working to reach greater heights. People will connect with a pure message of working for more much more strongly than they would to a fake who claims to have obtained it all.

This brings me all the way back to the original quote of this post by Heraclitus.

You can only become the man who brings other men back, when you stop trying to be that man and you start being your own man.

You can read the full post here: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/04/25/stop-trying-to-be-someone-else/

Follow on Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha [Theory] Know your walk away point

by UEMcGill | October 12, 2016 | Link

Everything is negotiable

Early in my second career I took a 5 day class on negotiation. It was pretty good and started the foundation of my current career to where I’m at now. I’ll do a write up on it in a sooner or later, but the biggest take away I can talk about here is two points: everything is negotiable, and know your walk away point. In a sense it was another view on the age old Abundance mentality.

I’ve stated over and over again, that every man should know the terms of divorce in his marriage. It may have been a mistake to get legally married but it’s an even bigger mistake to not know how to undo it once you’ve become Redpill aware. Time and time again, noobs come to this sub and state some form of “I can’t stand my marriage but I can’t get divorced.” If you are unwilling to get divorced, you have no walk away point and will always be under the will of the other party, remember the one who cares the least has the most power.

I started down my path of improvement with the goal that I would have a great marriage, with or without my wife. Gym, check, home check, career check; All of these were in order and she still wasn’t towing the party line. The story ends that she came to me a few weeks before I pulled the plug, and we’ve been on an upswing ever since. But it’s a good lesson and something I keep in my back pocket to remind me not to let me or her get complacent.

Logistics

So what do you need to do to get divorced? Operational security should be your highest priority. In my house I’m the IT guy so for me it was relatively easy, my wife does not use the house laptop and I have a non-existent IT policy from my work. My work laptop is secure with a password login used at all times. I use two pieces of security software, Keepass and TrueCrypt (Truecrypt is unsupported now, but there’s other options). The key here is to not tip your hand. If you pull the trigger, it should be a complete legal surprise. Get a burner email address and a google drive for keeping documents. If you don’t have control of your phone or good privacy, get a google voice account with the burner email address. Google voice can be forwarded to any phone line, so if you work at a brick and motor office you can use, forward it to that. You can also use it to forward to your cell or whatever. You now have a clean cell phone bill with no ties to all the phone calls you’ll be making. Be aware, if you use the cloud and iPhone that these apps may show up on all the i-devices on the common account. I knew a guy who got busted because he installed tinder on his phone and it showed up on his wife’s phone. Only use the incognito version of web browsers, and clear memory and passwords every session. If she’s already suspicious you are cheating beware of key loggers. There’s ways around these but that’s beyond the mission scope for this discussion.
Be aware of your wife’s abilities and how to look for them and you’ll be safe.

Your next step should be to start going to lawyers for visits. I work out of the house when I’m not travelling so I can do this relatively easily. If you can’t because you work at a regular brick and mortar office, take a personal day, a vacation day or whatever it takes. Set up a consult; be prepared to spend some money and visit as many of the local lawyers as you can. This is a legal tactic called conflicting out, and it has its plusses and minuses. The upside is you just made it hard for your soon-to-be-ex to engage a local attorney. The downside is you can force them to choose an attorney who is a poor negotiator a tactic that can draw out the proceedings. I ultimately settled on a lawyer that specialized in men’s divorce and made me feel confident they understood all of my issues, and weren’t looking for billable hours just for the sake of billing.

This is a good place to find out what the divorce environment in your state looks like. I’m from NJ and it’s not very favorable to men. We have long term alimony and no fault. She can be a cheating whore and you’re still fucked if you’re not smart (on a plus side, you can be a cheating whore and it’s not going to affect the outcome substantially). My state uses guidelines for all its calculations but these are not mandatory. Realistically I was hoping for short term emergency alimony and child support. It was possible to face long term alimony and child support; 10 years for the former, and up to 15 for the latter. Child support is actually pretty favorable in NJ and is heavily weighted based on percentage of custody. Based on my six figure base salary I was looking at $1000 a month in child support and up to $3000 a month in alimony. My goal was to get out with temporary alimony and child support at $3000 a month for 2-3 years. My opening window was 1 year.

Money is a tough one. You need to build a war chest to get through this. I don’t know how your special snow-flake would go on this one. I’ve had friends who had their ex over the barrel legally and financially and they still went into divorce thinking “I’m going to get paid!” and I’ve had friends go into it thinking, “She’s a reasonable woman only to end up in a royal clusterfuck. Your lawyer will tell you what this thing may cost you, so you need to be ready to pony up. In my state, I was looking at up to $10,000 in legal fees. This was before any assets were divided, house sold etc. At the very least you need a slush fund for legal consults. There are lots of clever ways to keep this out of view, things such as visa gift cards, cash back on purchases, etc. IANAL so my simple advice on this is, don’t get caught hiding assets. If you have more nefarious attitudes proceed with caution. It took me about 2 months to save up a thousand dollars. That covered my initial consults.

Your finances should be addressed because that’s part of your MAP. You should absolutely know that status of every credit card, mortgage statement and bill coming in and out of your house. If you can have an alternate email address assigned for statements or when a password changes do this. Get a standalone checking account. Personal finance can advise you on several good online versions. Find out your direct deposit policy and in particular how many cycles it takes to get it changed. My office can do it instantly but my old work, it was like one pay period, and verification time.

Once you’ve settled on your lawyer you should have them draft two things, a temporary separation agreement and a divorce agreement. The first is so that you can start the process without being accused of abandonment and as a legal separation for things like finances and child support. In negotiation we have a term and that’s the “opening window”. It basically means setting your terms in a realistic way that you know won’t offend your counterpart yet doesn’t betray your intended outcome. If you walk into a car dealership and announce, you’ll pay five dollars for that 7 series BMW they won’t take you seriously, but if you walk in and tell them you’re looking to buy and you’d be willing to pay a fair value based on how the test drive goes, you’ve opened up a window that they may see a possibility through. It’s not about fair at this point; it’s about getting the best possible deal you can without spooking her. In my case I was willing to accept minor debt and trade home equity for my 401k. To me that was the thing I wanted protected most, and was willing to protect it or trade away other things. She was going to get a portion no doubt, but the portion she got I wanted to minimize. So I offered the house equity in lieu of 401k equity. On paper it looked like a fair trade, but for me it was future money versus present money. The alternative would be to sell the house and split the equity and other assets equally, which would be disruptive to her and the kids. I had a good bet which she would take. As a skilled negotiator I knew all of the alternatives and had gamed out how it could go.

Sitting across the negotiating table

Now I never got to the point where I needed to pull the trigger but I was damn close. She came to me and saved herself, so I put it on the back shelf. If it had gone down my plan was simple. I was going to serve her myself over lunch at a public place; she was a SAHM. I was going to ask her to get a lawyer and push for arbitration. I was going to make it clear that long legal battles would mean losing the house and disruption for the kids. At this point I would have had my check direct deposit changed and all credit frozen and cards frozen until the separation agreement was met. There would have been cash in the main account for household maintenance and food. For custody I was looking for: kids in school with her, shared weekends and summer with me. My intent was to find a place nearby and be available outside of my travel for work. My goal was to leverage the fact that she’s a good mother and we need to keep that as undisrupted as possible.

Every person has their pain points. My wife was a product of divorce, and her biggest fear in life probably stems from this. She absolutely despises uncertainty and no safety net. She told me how embarrassing it was for her to try and buy groceries as a teenager but the credit card her dad gave her was declined. She absolutely fears being in that place in life again and in particular for her kids having to go through that. She blames her mom for that as much as she does her dad, because in her eyes, her mom’s constant legal battles fucked her dad to the point he was destitute. It’s a powerful negotiating point that was going to be the main focus I highlighted. I intended to use it to mask my biggest risk, garnishment of future earnings. Go into it fully knowing what your risks are, and more importantly what hers are. If she’s a stay at home mom, lifestyle maybe her biggest pain point. If she’s a career woman, her upward mobility maybe her pain point. If she’s a family girl, her reputation with family maybe it. Everyone has it, so know what everyone’s is. This is high stakes poker and you need to mask your intentions. She may very well be fair, but once lawyers and bitter divorce girlfriends get involved it can all go to hell.
Be prepared to protect yourself. Get a cheap voice recorder and try to keep all conversations over email or recorded (know your local laws, NJ is a one party consent state). If she becomes hostile, don’t stay in the same room alone with her, and don’t turn that recorder off. Even in two party consent states, it may get your ass out of a false assault claim. If you have a BPD wife or the like I can’t tell you enough how important this aspect is. Do not tread lightly on this one.

My wife came to me in tears. The dread was showing, and more importantly it was authentic. A woman’s nature is she’s a covert communicator and she knew the jig was up because of my actions. I had left emotionally and couldn’t ‘fake it till I made it’ that level of dread. She was genuine about making it work, not compliant. She confessed her lack of involvement and owned up to her faults and actively agreed to fix them. She’s near close to the woman I married; kids make that a different proposition, so in the end I’m happy with the outcome.

From my part the deal was pretty clear. Divorce would cost me right out of the gate $10,000 and most likely about $100,000 in alimony. I don’t consider child support on this one because it’s money gone either way. So for me I put two hard years of work into myself and saved $100,000 grand. Could I find a better woman? Always. Do I need to? As long as my wife holds her end of the bargain, no.

In the end the guys on TRP are correct, the first instinct should always be to next a woman. If I wasn’t married to my wife it would have been a much simpler value proposition. But I had already made the critical mistake of legally getting married, so now I needed to make the best decision I could, given the game I was given, not the game I wanted. In another adventure I found that yes, AWALT; no matter how good they are in bed or what they tell you, all women are the same. They end up pulling the same shit, and giving you the same problems if you aren’t on top of your game all the time. So I decided that the wife I was with added the most value to my life. Did I make the right decision? For me, yes. My mission is still intact, and my wife is back to adding to it.
FR: Testosterone and Righteousness
by CaptainJackSorrow | June 21, 2017 | Link

I'm 44, LTR is 33 and we've known each other seven years and have been together 3.5 years. We were both married to other people when this started. I swallowed the pill probably 5 months ago. NMMNG. MMSP. WISNIFG. Black Phillip. Lots of Black Phillip. If you need help with DGAF, he's your master.

Sex stopped four months ago for reasons, some legit, some not. The past week it returned with a vengeance. 5 times in the last week. In an effort to figure out what I did right, here are the biggest contributors IMO.

Testosterone. I can't say it enough. Get this shit tested. I am three weeks into my second round of TRT. I have claw marks on my neck and arm. I have a gigantic bite mark on my chest. She is equally scarred. The last time I had this level of primal sex? The first time on TRT. Confidence is higher. Dick is bigger and harder. DGAF muscle is primed. Last week I fucked her in a hot tub over looking the city. With steam radiating off my body I felt like goddamned Wolverine. Placebo? Maybe except that I spent 9 weeks shooting stuff into my body that I thought was testosterone but turned out not be. Never experienced anything like this on my fake T. I am sexually aggressive now. Before I'd put my (metaphorical) toe in to test the waters and back off at any sign of resistance. Now there might be resistance, but it's token, at best, and I'm too busy turning my girl on to notice.

Righteousness: Black Philip preaches this a lot and it finally clicked. My first wife left me for another guy. Her reason was, "He just takes care of things." So in subsequent relationships I'd take care of things and expect my dick to be worshipped as a result. Covert Contract Ignored, bitterness and resentment full speed ahead. Now I do shit because it needs to be done. It's the same shit I was doing before, just for different reasons... righteous reasons. I went to her place and dish washer was full. I unloaded it. Not to get laid. Not so she'd notice what a great guy I am, but because it needed to be done. I didn't draw attention to it or expect praise. Just saw something that needed to be done and did it.

Fun. I have it. I'm an overthinker. I analyze everything. Who did she look at when she laughed for validation? What are we going to do about ISIS in Syria? I don't burden her with problems. I fix them. I don't tell her about my insecurities. That's unattractive. I don't mope and keep to myself hoping she'll notice and ask me what's wrong so I can victim puke all over her shoes. I smile. I laugh. I tell stories. I'm the kind of guy I would want to spend time with.

Manned the Fuck Up. The two lessons of intergender dynamics I was taught growing up, "If mamma ain't happy ain't nobody happy," and my dad saying, "I'm the boss and your mother gave my permission to say so." Fuck that. I make plans. I choose where we eat dinner. I'm calm and level headed. I don't talk about what I'm going to do. I don't ask permission and I don't applogize. This trickles down to the kids too. Everybody goes along and has fun. If something goes wrong, I own it. It's my fault. It's liberating living life as the one in control, the one who makes things happen, not the one who things happen to. I'm in 100% charge of her finances. I have her debit card. I pay what needs to be paid and budget out the rest as spending money over the pay period. This was at her request.

Plates. I spun em. During this dry spell I went out with four other girls, Tinderellas, and Facebook friends. Had fun flirting my ass off and getting text pictures. Slept with one, made out with another, but in all cases enjoyed OI and could see them as silly little girls playing silly little games. Old me would have played their silly little games until I got laid, but it just didn't seem worthwhile. Again, righteousness. I wasn't entertaining these girls to get back at LTR. I was having fun, crossing things off my bucket list, and doing what I wanted. LTR benefitted.

To LTR's credit she gave me a lot of the direction here that I didn't digest because I was too set in my BP ways. Over the years she'd say things like: It's hot when you let yourself be the man. It drives me crazy when you throw me around like that. You have to say no and stand up to me every now and then.

TL;Dr Get your testosterone checked. Do things for the right reasons. Be fun.
Is your wife addicted to 'The Scroll'?
by TrainingTheBrain | December 3, 2015 | Link

I’ve read several posts on the subject and have been asked a few times over the months how I was able to get my wife off social media and how I was able to get her to stop The Scroll.

You know The Scroll it’s when her head is bent over the screen of her phone, just flicking it up over, and over, and over. Trying to keep up with the Kardashians, Charlie Sheen’s AIDs, Miley Cyrus’s exposed snatch (you ain't twerkin' you ain't workin')...you get it.

Your wife will sit there, wasting hours of her time and she'll allow these people, who do not even know she exists, to stress her out. She does nothing productive with that time, just scrolling....and scrolling.

I asked Mrs. TrainingTheBrain to tell me briefly what led to her making the decision to leave social media, in her own words. She sent me this:

Why I left Facebook and other social media outlets

The question is a legitimate one, as probably 99% of Society has a social media account. Not only do they have one, but they spend a lot of their day updating, checking, and thinking of the next post they’ll make.

I want to be the 1%. I want to be a part of the 1% of society who just doesn't give a fuck about what Emily made for Dinner (I make dinner every night along with the rest of America!) and I certainly don't give a fuck that your child just pooped on the potty! I have 2 of my own and have seen enough of their poop in potties that I am set for life on that topic!

I had always known how my Husband felt about Facebook and how fake people were on it, promoting their life vice living it. But, I held on as we were in the Military and hundreds of miles away from family.

When we moved home I realized it didn't matter where we were because people are so used to communicating via Facebook and Instagram in their fake & staged life on a newsfeed that I truly didn't know my family or friends anymore.

This led to so much frustration, anger, and annoyance at people who didn't deserve it. But I simply couldn't get over how self absorbed these people, my friends and family had become. There was no 'true' connection, only electronic.

The friends that we lived near while on base now seemed so different, they were obsessed with their 24/7 selfie and perfect family photo rituals. A girl I knew that “hated selfies" began to post one every single day.

Did I mention I HATE selfies?

I understand that sometimes it is your only means of taking a photo and you certainly don't want to hand a stranger your phone, but selfie after selfie on Facebook and Instagram day after day... Bitch I am sick of your face.

I recognized that I was so annoyed and so caught up in my anger at people's self-absorption that I threw my hands up and said FUCK IT and I deleted my Facebook and Instagram.

For a few days after that, I didn't know what to use my phone for. I would grab my phone to check updates on Facebook, but it wasn’t there anymore. I went through withdrawals where my mind had to get used to the lack of stimulation that used to be there every 10 minutes.

Then something else began to take social media's place in my mind. I found myself happier...worrying about my own life and not anyone else’s. Focused on living my life and not promoting it.

Instead of trying to capture moments I was able to be fully present and immersed in the moment, not thinking of capturing a picture and not thinking of how many ‘likes’ I’d gotten.

I became a person in the now; not the future, not the past - but the NOW.

And the now has gotten me to eating right, drinking less, losing 20+lbs, joining a dance class, painting, writing a children's book, and having much more quality time with family.

I am happier now than ever just by being freed from Social Media. (I had to let you all in on my achievements since I don’t have a newsfeed to put it on! haha JUST KIDDING!)

But really... it is your one life, be the best real YOU, not the Facebook selfie you. Live your life and enjoy the moments, stop trying to capture and promote for the world. For some it is merely a tool, but for most, whether they admit it or not, social media is on their mind throughout every vacation, holiday, or 'special moment'. always looking to capture how great and happy their life is instead of truly being great and happy in your life for yourself.

Live for you. – Mrs. Drew

We always tell men to look at what women do and not what they say. In this case look at both and come to whatever conclusions you may.

The points that I brought up and the seeds that I planted in her mind were as follows.

- I asked her why her friends were writing on her wall that they ‘missed her’ even though these chicks lived 20 minutes away.

- I brought up that she was stressed out from scrolling and watching the highlight reel of other people’s lives and comparing them to her ‘normal’ life.

- I kept bringing up how conversational skills are dwindling and that I didn’t even enjoy talking to her because she was always distracted. Her mind literally wanted to keep scrolling with the instant gratification of something new being just minutes away.

- When she would scroll I would leave. No words, no anything. I would leave the room, the house, whatever I wanted to do - I would go and do that. I wasn’t butt-hurt; I just didn’t find her worth my time and attention.

It got so bad that there were times where she was mad at people for doing their thing. She was mad family members wouldn’t ‘like’ pictures of the kids, she was mad her friends kept taking selfies; she was building this anger towards people for living their life, which is not any business of her’s.

I brought to her attention the little amount of time we have on this earth and how few breathes are left in our lives. Giving attention to celebrities and getting stressed over keeping up with the Jones’ is weak and that if she was going to live like that, then I was going to go off and do things on my own and with the kids. Being in the moment with them and truly appreciating all of the beauty this world has to offer.

Eventually she recognized all of this and then ‘she’ made the decision to leave the world of social media and has been a powerhouse of productivity and improved mental health ever since.

If your wife is addicted to The Scroll you need to keep bringing up the negative affects it’s having on her. Along with that, do NOT reward failure; remove your time and attention from someone who doesn’t appreciate it.

Facebook can be incredibly useful as a tool. I didn't find it to be that way, you do you. This is for those dudes whose wives can't go a day without their phone, or without checking those sites. It's for the wives who get angry when a picture isn't perfect or their photo isn't as popular as someone else's.

If you can use it without abusing it, then go for it. Unfortunately my wife is correct, there are a lot more people who are addicted that aren't willing to admit it.

For the SJWs and WhiteKnights - I did NOT make her delete her accounts; she did that on her own.

She can say all day that she can get rid of it whenever or that it doesn't matter, but I look at behaviors. I told my wife we weren't going to be a part of her 'life promotion', she took the necessary action and I was/am proud of the results as is she.

If your wife is in the same boat, stop rewarding her failure. Remove your time and attention, give it to something worthy and not caught up in how they rank in the world of facebook.

Acta, Non Verba.
FR Spinning plates as a married man
by Incognito_plate | April 6, 2017 | Link

To start off with, this is not my regular MRP account. If you go through my post history and know me in person you could put two and two together and I would be exposed, so a dedicated account to deliver this FR, fresh from the front lines.

u/A_Rex was going on about that he wants to start spinning plates in his OYS last week. I need to give some input into the realities of a married man going down this route. The reasons why I went down this route would be a post all by itself, so I am not open to discussion on the reasons why, this is just my experience on how it went.

The plates

- P1. I list her as P1 as she is also my favourite. LTR material, low n-count. Classy upmarket, good job, early forties, divorced, 2 kids. Met online. We have crazy monkey sex for hours and leave hotel rooms in an undesirable state.

- P3. Met her at the camera club pre-unplugging. She was single at the time. Became fuckbuddies, she developed a major crush, I ghosted her. Recently met up again. She lives with a BF now. BF travels a lot so when he is out of town I visit her. No sex, but she sends me videos of her stripping down to under wear.

- P4. Works in the same building as me, different company. Known her for a while. Twice divorced. We grope and kiss each other every time we catch the elevator alone. Sexting almost daily. A good fuck is just a phone call away, but she is bipolar and crazy-crazy so this is as far as I am taking this. Red flags abound.

- Pn. There are a few more in the pipeline. P4's boss, I kid you not. A friend of the wife's, the wife of a friend. There are a few that could develop into Plates if I actively went for them.

What I found

- I have cheated before as a beta bitch. I was seeking external validation. I found there is still some measure of seeking validation. The difference now is, all these relationships, I am in command. They feel they have more too lose than me. P1 is afraid her parents will find out, P2 has a husband, P3 has a BF who pays for everything. P4 is worried everyone in the building will think she is a slut. I have power over these women that I did not know I could wield. The difference between un-plugged and plugged-in is amazing. Frame, control, dominance, sex. Worlds apart.

- Great sex. Each relationship starts with great sex, so no surprise here. But after learning how to fuck, thanks to DEVI, this is a new experience. They do exactly what I tell them to do. And potentially, each fuck is the last one. Resentment towards my wife. It is hard to game a partner when there are plates dripping in anticipation.

- Budget. Hotel rooms get expensive.

- Time. I will highlight this in bold TIME. Hindsight is 20/20, and I recently realized this is eating my time. The day I started spinning plates, is the day I stoppped improving myself as a man. Lifting is meh, diet is meh. Plates take time for a married man. Gaming them, chatting to them, sneaking to meet them. Time. Your most valuable asset.

- Power and outcome independence. As mentioned I did not know I could be the one with all the power in a relationship. Women are way more worried what others would think off them than I thought.

- I learnt about hypergamy and AWALT, from the horses mouth.

Hypergamy and AWALT

- P1 came to me and confessed she went on a date with someone. He likes her a lot and she asked my permission to let him take her on another date. I gave it. She went on a few more dates. He believes he has found his soulmate, 50 something bachelor with no kids. She then told me, and I am quoting verbatim here: "I am not attracted to him like I am to you, but he can do a lot for me and the kids, financially" So far he has fixed her appliances, they go on 'dates' as a family, her, the kids and him. Her kids adore him. I don't know the names of her kids.....

- P2 tells me her husband is boring. Drinks beer and watches tv all day. She has cheated on him for years now. She sends me pics of her tits in bed with her husband sleeping next to her. Never under estimate the sneakiness of your SO.

- P3 lives with her BF, who pays for their apartment. She would drop him for me if I gave her any form of commitment. I see them often at the shops or restaurants. Holding hands. I have been in this dudes home, on his sofa, drinking his booze. Gents, your world is not as secure as it seems.

- P1 is divorced for a few years already. The ex doesn't get the kids over weekends for reasons. She is too controlling and he is too lame to insist. When I tell her we are doing something on Saturday night, guess where the kids are, their dad. Dude wasn't up to scratch previously, but momma needs a babysitter so she can get some dick, daddy is good enough. Solipsism in action.

Gents, this is just some of it. A lot of details I didn't even include, but you get the gist of it. Redpill is a powerful tool, use it wisely, you can fuck up your relationship and those of others. The time aspect of it makes it unsustainable. I am stopping this pursuit. No regrets, but at the heart of it, it is not the outcome I was aiming for on my MAP.

Don't make pussy your mission.
This started out as a reply to another post, but I thought I'd give a try to explaining how I've been operating even though I'm really a half-tard feeling my way around in the dark with this still.

The guy was asking r/redpillcoach how to handle his wife giving him signals to initiate with the intention of shooting him down for fun. I've always thought that if it isn't an LMR and she is in fact doing that, it's their own way of showing you that their SMV is higher than yours and being cruel, or, punishing you for some perceived slight in order to modify your behavior. Remember, women are told by society that this is their right and even duty, to "Get their man squared away."

My wife did this the other day and her reaction to my response annually caught me off guard. Basically I initiate when I want and this week she gave me a hard no 3 nights in a row. I simply kissed her on her cheek (she flinched away because how dare I push her for sex when she says no) and told her "Good night, I love you" and started reading. She knows I'm reading a lot more and so it didn't come off as butt hurt (as far as I know, but at this point that's her interpretation to have)

A little background, I'm fairly OI as of now since I want to fuck about 2 to 3 times a week and by initiating 8 to 9 I am getting what I want. Those 2 to 3 times a week are when I'm going to give it to the next thing that crosses my path no matter what, bull in a China shop, I push past the LMR because I want to and they are fun, involved and getting dirtier. The other times are the next 2 or 3 days after when it happens to cross my mind and she is around. Not really "I'm GOING to fuck no matter what!" moments.

Here is what I think is the reason, and her actions confirmed it I believe. She realizes I am a sex hungry bastard and since she's getting a break when she gives her little pouty hard no 2 or 3 times, she starts having passive dread. When it happened this week I got up the next morning after hard no 3 in a row, hit the reset button and came in behind her with my morning wood while she's doing her makeup and hugged her. Then told her, busy day today, going to hit the gym early and went and lifted. I usually lift later in the day.

I got back home before she left the house (strange, she's usually gone 15 minutes before this). I went inside and was getting coffee and she was putting on her shoes. She came over, kissed me goodbye and then caught me off guard with, come and talk to me outside please, in a pleasant and almost pleading tone.

We get in the garage and she says she knows I'm getting frustrated with her and want to fuck a lot more than she is giving me. I just smiled and pressure flipped, "You think I'm frustrated because I want to fuck more?" and she came back with, "Last night I was waiting for you to keep going, I even stayed up after you stopped.". Now you will think I'm autistic but I'm trying to break her of this notion that remaining awake laying still next to me without touching is a way of initiating. So I AA and give her, "Dang it! I just knew you were trying to blow me!". And she laughed. She knows she's full of shit and that she's capable of being aggressive and initiating and that I see through her repricing I retroactive DEER trying to point the finger and give me the, "You HAD your chance" which I did, I just was more OI than interested.

Then the revelation that her hamster has been pushing the wheel. "Did you meet you girlfriend and fuck at the gym?". She's half smiling and being silly trying to play it off, she knows people can't fuck at the gym (Unless they do, of course) but she is thinking she had better step up or I could give other people. Again AA and give her, "Come on, no way. My workout is too valuable for that.". I can see her relax and she starts to turn towards her car when I add with a laugh, "It was behind the Dollar Tree you know why I bought that extended cab.".

Dirty look and slammed car door as I smile and wave as she backs out. She calls me from work later, which she never does, just to talk. That night I throw the Wedge on the bed while she's brushing her teeth and tell her to get up there and bend over it so I can finger fuck her while vibing her balloon knot. And of course she does and it's on from there.

All of that to say this, passive dread works. It doesn't necessarily have to come from things you do, it can be from her hamstering shit she ISN'T doing. Things you don't explain or get butt hurt about will burn in her brain for days if she knows they are things that you want in a relationship but that she's been neglecting.

If you can't take a hard no without being a little twat, initiate when you don't want it that badly and you will have OI. You initiate 3 times as much and get the no more often then the yes will come more often too. Even if you are still not to where you need to be for spontaneous initiating from her, she knows there's at the VERY LEAST some of the chubsters at the gym who would like to suck you off for the same reasons she's trapped you.

She doesn't want that shit to happen even if she isn't attracted to you like you want yet. Keep working at it and use this as a way to pull the old, fake it till you make it. But also, make sure you make it, too many dudes just doing the faking part full time.
Hi all. I wanted to throw this out there as a referable overview of many of the things I've learned about talking to people over the years. I know what it feels like to be in this boat of having low social skill, and I know the hard work that it takes to get out of it too. And I feel that there's a dearth of just an overall framework that people who are trying to better themselves in this area can relate to. This isn't a unique guide to specific techniques. It does not include canned phrases. It is not directed more toward men or women. This guide applies to both equally. If you're serious about learning this stuff, and you're tired of trying to put all the pieces together, then you're going to have to dedicate some time and attention to this text. Your choice.

That said, none of the excuses that you, or I make in our heads that stop us from being social, nor any amount of reading, is going to substitute for the practice of actually getting out there and repeatedly putting yourself on the line to learn first hand. So above all else, even after reading this, if you want to grow this ability in yourself, you're going to have to get out there and practice, just like any other thing you master.

Who am I you're probably asking? A guy who's single handedly dug himself out of the deep deep hole of social outcast. I've gone through the whole gamut of 'guy who literally has no friends and sits at home wondering if loneliness is my life', to 'guy who stands on the outside of a circle of friends and says nothing', to 'guy who tries to engage but it's just awkward'.

I'm now the guy who's hosting parties and talking to each and every guest; men, women, and children. I'm the guy who people at the party name as the social butterfly. I'm the guy who sets up things to do with friends, and makes new friends at those things. I'm the guy who walks into a bar, looks at everyone staring into their drinks and on their phone, and decides "I'm going to say hi to you, just because I know you're hiding it, and I know how good we'll both feel when we establish a connection." At this point it's fun to me. I talk to people all the time, and they are very receptive to it. I think anyone can do this. And I want to share what I've learned.
You don't have to listen. Like I said, the real learning is out there. But if it can give some perspective, and if it can give some structure, especially to those more rack-and-stack, logical guys like me who need it to be organized to make sense, then it'll be worth it. Again this isn't a motivational speech. This is a comprehensive overview of talking to someone.

Even Before Saying Hi: Even before saying hi there's a whole host of situational social awareness that you can cue in on to determine if starting a conversation with someone is going to be worth it for you, and/or for them. These are the things you usually don't notice because you're so in your head thinking about your bundle of thoughts about conversing, and things that can go wrong, that you don't see what's going on. You're in such a fog, and you can miss these signs when you're not paying attention. These include:

- Are They Ready For a Conversation: A good thing to try before even going out and trying to start conversations with people is to go around a public area yourself and just look at everyone. And each person you pass think to yourself: "Do they look like they would be receptive to a conversation right now?" I'll tell you that people usually rank into three categories as an answer to that:

  Category 1) Yes, they are either looking at you, coming toward you, and most likely, if you do not start a conversation with them, they are going to start one with you. You'll find about 2% of people in this category, and the majority of them are going to be people who were forced to converse with you in some way (think food service, or polite social interaction "excuse me", etc).

  Category 2) Yes, but they don't know it. This is where you'll find 90% of people...walking around in their own heads not even thinking about conversing at that moment. It's sad, we're all wrapped up and used to our normal lives and the fact that people usually don't and/or are too scared to talk to other people that we are more likely to be thinking "What's for dinner tonight" than "I wonder what that person is like."

  Category 3) No. And this is where you'll find the last 8%. These people are pre-occupied, and not even in a bad way, with what they're doing, to the point that they don't want to talk to you. Maybe their kid is screeching and they're trying the get them under control. Maybe they're concentrating on a task. The truth is, there are legitimate times where you just should not be starting conversations with someone.
But like I said it's good to be able to identify, and quickly, because many windows of starting a conversation with someone are so incredibly small that if you cannot make this determination quickly, you'll find yourself just playing it safe and moving on.

- Purpose: So you've determined that they are someone who is open to having a conversation right now. Before even going in and saying hi, you should know your purpose, or range of purposes that you're talking to this person. The purpose could be as easy and simple as "I want to talk to you" or "I'm bored and want to entertain myself" or "I'm actually attracted to you, and want to see where a conversation will go" or "I'd like to get to know you better, and maybe make friends." These are all things you're telling yourself in your head, of course. But when you get the experience and the guts to, feel free to use them as fun and unique conversational follow ups (which I'll talk about later). You'll be amazed at how many people are drawn to such sheer honesty.

The point here is, you kind of want an idea of the possibilities of where your conversation is going to end up. Are you going to hold a long, drawn out conversation with the waitress at a restaurant? Probably not. Is there more probability for making friends and possibly sharing interests with someone just sitting in a park? Probably yeah.

This is also a good exercise to do along with the above one, to go around and think to yourself "Why would I talk to this person?" Sure it may be obvious: "They're attractive, duh" or "He's on my soccer team so I should make friends" But telling yourself this always kind of solidifies in your head that there's a reason you're doing what you're doing. It's kind of a feel good justification to yourself.

- Time: So you've determined that someone is probably open to having at least some kind of conversation with you, and you have a rough range of where this conversation will go. Now think about time. You're waiting on a subway platform, the next one doesn't arrive for 6 minutes. You definitely have a good chunk of time to start a friendly conversation and steer it into at least a few topics. Or, you're waiting in line to order food behind someone and the line is moving at a pretty good speed. You really don't have a lot of time.

Knowing how much time you're going to have does two things. 1) It builds into the potential purpose behind why you're talking to someone and how far that conversation can actually go, and 2) It sets a stage in your mind for what you're in for for the time that you have. You'll be able to tell what kind of conversation this could be if you know how long it will last. It will also prevent you from making time-based conversational blunders.
If you've ever found yourself in a long conversation with someone where you're keeping your answers short, but somehow you both seem to have a lot more time than you thought, or your mind isn't prepared for a longer conversation so you're feeling that itch to get out...that can make you look disinterested and even rude. Whereas if you try to get into longer topics that take some time to talk about and the other person is looking to, or is forced to (think train is coming) leave, well that's unfortunate and awkward too.

But if you go in with an estimate of how much time you'll have to, for lack of a better word, perform, it'll ease your mind in that you can think "It's okay, just 5 minutes of discomfort and I'm done."

- Cues (Them): In addition to what we'll call the 'logistics' of starting a conversation that I just talked about, there's also social cues you can look for, that people will give off, if they're willing or want to start a conversation with you. One of them is that they start a conversation with you! I'm kidding...sort of. But other than that:

Eye Contact: Remember, everyone is going around in life doing their own thing. Unless we're doing that thing where we're in a hallway walking toward each other from 50 feet away and there's nothing to look at but wall...there's really no reason for someone to make eye contact with you unless they're at least somewhat willing to talk to you, if at least just to say hi. The brain is also good at subconsciously making people aware of their surroundings by focusing on the objects in it that create more interest to them. If you are one of those objects for someone else, you'll find eyes on you occasionally. Not staring at you. Not necessarily looking you up and down. But definitely looking at you at some point, even if it's just a glance. If you see this, think "There's one possible hint, let's see if there's more."

Location In Relation to You: This is one I've noticed both from myself, subconsciously, after the fact, and in others when they've started conversations with me. They will, and you will, subconsciously move toward that person if you want to talk to them. This is much more likely too in a crowded room, where movement around isn't necessarily going to be noticed. But take note in spots like standing in line, on a dance floor, or in a park. If there's a plausibly deniable way (meaning there's no way to specifically say "Hey you're moving toward me because you want to talk to me"...there could be other reasons) for them to move, they will, and you will too. If you see this. It's an invitation. It's another hint.

Body Position: Just like eyes have a tendency to look in the direction of interest, so too will someone want to keep their body positioned so that you remain in their field of view. Think about it too...you're in a crowded bar facing the bar, the guy to your left has his back to you and is talking to his friend. The girl to your right is leaning with her back to the bar. Which one is more likely to accept a conversation? The girl of course. Even if she's talking to a friend away from you. The body position indicated this is much more possible than tapping someone on the shoulder from behind to say hi.

Being Aware: There's two states that your mind is in, and if you're introspective, you can consciously put yourself into and come out of them. One is that your mind has narrowed its focus on a thought or task, you have that 1000 yard stare, and are really not noticing things that are going on around you. The other is you've opened up your senses to take in more of what's going on, you may actively be looking around, and are more open to stimuli. Try it right now, put yourself into a deep thinking, almost daydreaming state...go ahead...take 10 seconds...then come back...............................................now snap yourself out of it and notice all the sights and sounds going on around you.

When you see people in the second state, this means if you say hi to them, they are less startled because you're not pulling them out of their thoughts, back to reality to talk to them. If they are in the first state, pulling them out of that state is kind of akin to yanking someone's headphones out when they're listening to music. Though not THAT infuriating. But still irritating.

There are many more subtle cues that may add to this list. Whispering to a friend who then looks in your direction. Seeming to be open to talk to other people they don't know. But I'll skip more of those for now and just advise you to watch people and what they do around you...and when they say hi or when you're successful in starting a conversation with them, take note of what they were doing beforehand, and see if you find any patterns developing.

I usually use these as cues for me, sort of like permission, or a sign to tell me the time is right to start a conversation. At the point I'm at, I find myself sometimes itching for a conversation, and I'm standing there, like a horse at the starting gate of a race, waiting for one or more of these clues. When it comes, the gates fly open, and I'm talking. Just like that. It's almost like a game. Sitting next to a guy at a bar...he drinks his drink, stares at his phone for a bit, maybe orders a quick drink for the bartender. Looks at his phone some more. Then puts his phone down and glances over in my direction. Boom, that's 2 signs (becoming aware and glancing my way). I'm talking.

Remember, most people are shy, and used to not conversing. And they are also perfectly fine with giving off these clues and if you don't pick up on them, just moving on with their lives. So while you're saying to yourself "Dude, not everyone who makes eye contact wants to have a conversation with you" I'd say, "Maybe, but they are much, MUCH more likely to entertain one if you try to start one."

• Cues (You): All the above are also certain cues you can apply to yourself as well, to let you know that you're interested in starting a conversation. If you catch yourself looking their way often, if you feel like you are/want to move closer to them, then you are subconsciously selecting them as a person to converse with. There is also a certain cue that you may give off that if you pay attention to yourself...you may notice that it's your subconscious telling yourself "Hey, we want to start a conversation with that person."

And this is Energy Level. This is an internal feeling that you cannot really read in other people, but can feel in yourself. When someone comes around, if you find that you get a little burst of energy, or adrenaline, or perk up a bit...that's you telling you want to say hi. If and when you start practicing this...if the person is of the 92% that you can talk to, and you feel this feeling, for the love of god you must talk to them. This is the purest form of self-positive feedback you can give to reinforce social behavior. Your body and mind will love you for this, because it's raw "I wanted to do this, so I did."

• Cues (Situational): Lastly, there are some situations, kind of like the world has set this up so you are pretty much bound to meet, cues that you can use as good indicators to have a conversation. These cues revolve around Common Ground. If you find yourself suddenly in a situation where you both have common ground, like you're dressed up to go to a party and you step onto an elevator with someone else who is also dressed up. Or if you're out for a jog and happen to take a turn and line up next to someone else also on a jog. That's the universe giving you a free platform on which to say hi, because the topic of conversation is already right there. Other things like maybe the power flickers, or it's pouring rain outside, are also common ground situational cues that indicate that easy conversations are all available.

Getting Over Approach Anxiety: Wow that was a lot to take in. But you've done it. You've decided to say hi and start a conversation. Or, at least, you want to. But now you start to feel that tell-tale anxiety, and hear those voices in your head that act as barriers to prevent you from saying hi. This is probably the section a lot of you are caught up on. So here's a breakdown of all the problems here and some solutions, or at least mental models, that may help:
• Why Me?: You're wondering to yourself "Why am I the one who has to go through this when all they have to do is stand there and receive my hi." I get it. Everyone else is walking around and either seems to be OK with just not talking to anymore, almost like you have some flaw that you feel the need to be social much more than them, and/or they just don't need to be social WITH YOU. Maybe they already have friends, and tell themselves they don't need to talk to anyone else. Or maybe they've invented some other excuse that takes away the personal anxiety they have about talking to other people. (The key is these ARE just excuses...as I've found people are mostly happy to be brought out of their normal life pattern and talk to you).

The answer to the question "why me" is because YOU'RE the one who wants to be social. And that's not something you should take as a bad thing. But what you need to do is take in, and be okay with, that aspect of your personality. Instead of placing the blame on other people for not wanting to talk...give yourself permission to be okay with the fact that you DO want to talk. "Yes I want to talk and I'm proud of that." This hints to a bigger topic I'll talk about later which is confidence and congruency. But remember again, that most people are used to not talking. They're simply not willing to put in that energy to start.

And energy is a great way to put it. I'm a physics type guy, and there's a concept called a potential barrier. To explain it simply, imagine there's a ball that's sitting in a large dip in the ground. On the other side of this dip, there's a large down-hill. The dip is called a potential barrier because you have to put potential energy into the ball to surmount it. In order to get the ball to go down this hill, you need to push it up and over the side of the dip to get it to the hill. That's the same concept we have here. If you want the ball to roll down the hill...you need to put in energy to get it out of the dip. If you want to have a conversation...you need to put the energy in to get you both out of the social hole you're in now. If you do not accept the burden of this, and believe me it sucks, I know, but if you don't accept this, you will forever be jaded that you're the one who has to do it.

• Visceral Fear: So okay, you've gotten over the fact that you feel persecuted because the onus of starting a conversation is on you. Whew. Past that. Accepted that. Now comes the fear. You're afraid. And I'm not talking yet about being afraid because you're worried about all the what if's...I'm talking about the primal fear you feel...the tightness in the chest...the butterflies in the stomach...the fight or flight mechanism kicking in telling you to run. Your muscles tense up. You get tunnel vision, and tunnel thoughts. I know the feeling well.

You feel that way...and you associate feeling that way with BAD. That's the default, primal connection in your brain. IF I have these feelings, THEN the situation I'm in must be bad, and I must escape. It's that logical. Here's the deal: YOU'RE SUPPOSED TO FEEL THAT WAY. Let me say it again. When you are about to put yourself at risk, taking yourself out of a comfortable, low-energy situation and put yourself into a higher risk, vulnerable situation, you are GOING to feel that way. That's the way it's supposed to work.

What I'm saying here is that you need to get it in your head that the feelings you're feeling, while yes they are designed to make you feel like you're about to be attacked by a predator and need to flee for your life, are the exact feelings you are supposed to feel in this situation. And I'm here to tell you that I, from experience, and other social guru's I've listened to, in their experience, STILL feel this. Approach Anxiety DOES NOT go away. Not even when you're experienced with it.

What happens though is that when someone more experienced feels it when they want to go start a conversation, they understand "Yes, there it is, approach anxiety...I'm supposed to feel this...so things are going normally." And when you come to terms with this, you will rewire your brain to be ok IN SPITE OF feeling this, even though it still does. Because it is supposed to happen. It's kind of like when you are out for a jog or playing a tough sport, and you start breathing more heavily? That's SUPPOSED to happen. Or when you lift up a heavy moving box and walk with it. You're going to feel discomfort and maybe even pain in your muscles carrying it. You aren't going to die. It's your body doing what it is supposed to do. So when you say to yourself "I can't, because I feel scared."...we ALL do. You just need to realize that you have the capability to act anyway. You ever feel scared before going on an insane roller coaster? Yes. Do you do it anyway? Yes. The magnitude is different. This situation is different. The obstacle is the same. Fear.

• But What If...: Now lets get to the fear of outcomes. Besides the physical feelings associated with fear, there's going to be those mental barriers where your brain is thinking "What if they completely shut me down?" Or "What if they give me a funny look and laugh?" Or "What if they're even hostile toward me?" And there's nothing really I can tell you to make you feel like these things aren't going to happen. They may, and if you say hi enough, they will. But here's some things I can say to make you more comfortable about managing this fear.

The first is that this doesn't happen often. Like at all. You've heard it before, but it really is true. What you think of as really bad outcomes for talking to someone you don't know, does not happen very often because 99% of the time, people really have no reason to be mean to you. This is especially true if you don't give them reason to be upset with you. And if you're following everything I've said so far, then most likely they have no logical reason to act terrible to you. And if they do anyway, well, who wants to talk to someone like that?
That said, there are some pretty big DO NOTs that you should avoid. And while you could break social norms and do these, successfully, anyway...it's kind of just best not to. These include not coming up to someone from behind, not to talk to someone with headphones in, not interrupting someone talking to someone else to break into a conversation, in fact not interrupting a conversation when it is in a deep phase (which I will talk about later), and being mindful of personal bubbles.

The second is that all this fear, both physical and mental...all this turmoil you have going on in your head...they don't see. See the way you're coming at it is that you shouldn't go say hi because you feel all nervous and anxious and scared...and they wouldn't want to talk to someone who's nervous and anxious and scared right? But they have no way of knowing that you're nervous and anxious and scared. When you walk up to someone and say hi...that's all they can see, that some normal person walked up and said hi. Your insecurities are shielded in the fact that there's no way for them to know.

The third is, and this is really useful and I've used it a lot when I'm practicing, is if you know for a fact that it's very, very likely that you'll never see them again ever in your entire lifetime. When I'm on travel to a different state or country, I feel so empowered to talk to other people because I know that even if I make a fool of myself or they hate me, we will likely never cross paths ever again. And so that gives me free reign to basically be as open and risky as I want.

If I wanted to just walk up to someone and go "BOOGA BOOGA BOOGA!" and walk away, I could. How can their judgement matter if they're not in my life to judge me? I mean, unless you are affected that some person in some place far away from where you'll never be again happens to think of that one awkward conversation someone had with them that one obscure time...if that's the case, you should probably get some help for not being able to let that go. No I'm serious here, go talk to a therapist. That's why they're there. You need to let that go. And that's the fourth thing too...if you don't establish a connection, they probably aren't going to even remember you. Your actions will be dust in the wind in the history of human interaction. So not only does the world not see your mental turmoil, it won't remember if you mess up either. If you do establish a connection, then you've probably not done something worth fretting or being embarrassed over.

And believe me I've been in situations where maybe I had a bit too much stage fright and didn't talk to someone I wanted, or made a fool of myself. And so I left that bar and went to another. Yeah, it sucked. But that's it. It's done. I'll probably never see them again and even if I do, I doubt they'll remember me. And even if they do, they're not likely to bring it up. All this means is that all those fears of outcomes you have, they don't really matter in the grand scheme of things. Life will go on for you, for them, for everyone, regardless of whether you succeed or fail.

Are we almost to the talking part then? Almost. The last thing I wanted to talk about is if you find yourself in a situation where you are going to have a conversation, and there's just no two ways about it...you are going to have to move yourself across the room to talk to them and they are absolutely going to notice you doing it. This is going to be really rare. Because many situations you are going to be able to use plausible deniability that you just happened to move close enough to have a conversation, or they won't notice, or you manage to slowly move their way by talking to people who are closer and slowly migrating over.

If you find yourself in this situation though, know that the act of doing this, while you both know it's happening, and that person is probably going to pass some judgement on you for doing it, almost always translates to them thinking you are confident, if you can keep that confidence going in conversation. I promise, I will talk about confidence soon.

And don't give me that crap that you physically cannot do it. Because I've been there. My body feels paralyzed with fear. And I've thought to myself "Look, if I were in an empty aircraft hanger with the same amount of space between me and that person over there and I wanted to walk that distance...could I? Yes, I physically could do it. So I can physically do it here."

On your mark, get set...: Earlier I talked about being ready to talk like I was behind the starting gate at a race. And now here's where we find ourselves. You've determined in very rapid succession (that gets faster and better every time you practice it) that someone is open to being talked to, that you know why you're talking to them, you have an idea of how long you'll have to perform, so you know what kind of responses and how deep you will go into topics. You have felt the anxiety and understand that it's normal. Your brain has given you the worst outcomes and you've accepted their low probability. There will be three situations you find yourself in, and they all involve proximity:

Situation 1) You've been in a spot, and they've just walked in close proximity to you. This is easier in that you're in a comfortable zone yourself, and you don't have to move to someone to close the gap. It's hard because you have no prior knowledge of them and not a lot of time to figure out why you want to talk to them.

Situation 2) Someone else is in a spot, and you have just walked in close proximity to them. This is easier in that you can think up saying hi, and a comment about how you'd like to start the conversation before you get there. It's hard because you actually have to move to close the gap.

Situation 3) And this can be mixed into situation 2, but you have both been in close proximity, but for whatever reason, be it you were busy or they were busy, you haven't been able to talk yet.

In all these situations, this is where you need to be on high alert, ready to start talking at any moment. This is because people are really weird. They're weird in that if several opportunities have passed in which you could have initiated a conversation, and you didn't, it will inevitably be awkward if you then do. You may be familiar with the 3 second rule, in that from the time you have an opening to talk to someone, you have three seconds to do it or you may as well not, because your odds go WAY down.

The three seconds start when you've read those social cues in them, or yourself. And the reason you need to be ready and out of your head is that if you aren't, you're going to use those three seconds to think "Oh look there's a person, I could totally talk to them, but what will I say, and what will they think? Shit...three seconds has gone by."

So here's where we need to start talking. But what do you say? I'll tell you my secret conversational opener that has worked for me in about 95% of all cases that lead to a great conversation. Are you ready?

Talking: So now we're at the talking part. And if you can tell so far, I like to break this stuff down into sections with tips and goals for each part in order to chunk it up in my head, and so it's more manageable. We're taking baby steps here.

- Goal 1 - Break the Ice: The very first goal you should have in a conversation is to break the silence between you and that person. It doesn't matter how. That's your goal. Don't worry about feelings or topics or anything else. Break that ice. And here's my 95% success rate conversational opener:

"Hey, how's it going?"
I'm serious. This is it. Really, don't overthink it. This is my best and most successful ice breaker if I have nothing else to go on. It works to both open the door to conversation, and also to immediately start toward the next goal: Does this person want to talk to me now that I've broken the ice?

Other Ice Breakers: Before we get to that goal, I want to give some information on other ways to get into a conversation that aren't the standard "Hi, how's it going?"

The first, if you aren't feeling especially chatty, is smiling and extended eye contact. I cannot put an exact time on it, but there's a time between a fleeting smile and glance and an uncomfortable stare, on the order of less than 2 seconds, where if you hold eye contact and smile, there's this pull that they will feel to say hi to you first. This not only works sometimes, but will also indicate to you that they are more interested in a conversation than if they just gave a smile back.

Another popular one is to listen in on a conversation they are having with someone else. I talked earlier about not butting in on a deep conversation so I'll talk about that here. A deep conversation is one that really you have no real connection to them on, and in which they're opening up more than they would voluntarily if you were included in the conversation. If they are name-dropping other people in their lives that you don't know, or talking about something serious like illness, a breakup, their fears an insecurities, any negative topic, or about something you don't know about...this is not the time for you to butt in. It's not your business. Give them space.

But if you hear them talking about something that relates to you, maybe a concert you were interested in (even if you didn't go), or again a common situational cue that you can relate with, then a good way to get into the conversation is to say "I'm sorry I couldn't help but overhear that you were talking about ______." And then give your feelings on that topic. Pay attention, too, to where you insert yourself here. Because if two others are talking, and one says to the other "So I went to the Garth Brooks concert that we talked about!" You don't want to butt in right then and there with "No way I did too! Here's my opinion!". The person being told this story has priority over you to answer first. Let them, and when the conversation starts to dull, then you can jump in.

And a third popular way to get into a conversation is to, genuinely, talk about something about them. This is best relegated to things like what's on their shirt (I use this one very often), or if you genuinely like a necklace, tattoo, or whatever else. A warning though, if you're going to use this one, make sure your comment is genuine, because if it isn't this will absolutely show up in the follow up you have to their response. And it is generally risky to make the comment about their looks (Hair, body shape, etc.)

So you've broken the ice. That's goal 1. And the structure of the conversation that you're communicating covertly so far is:

"Hi, I want to talk to you." (Ice Breaker)

Now comes the follow-up.

- Goal 2 - The Follow up: Because saying Hi isn't a conversation. And because you're the one that said hi, people are going to expect you to be the one to continue into the real conversation. Take solace that this is past the hardest part of having a conversation (breaking the ice), but we're not quite to the hill yet. We just need one more little push.

The follow up and Goal 2 is where you're going to continue the conversation based on the reason you genuinely want to talk to this person. It's kind of a covert explanation of why you started the conversation in the first place. Whereas "Hi, how are you" is covertly saying "I want to talk to you.", your follow up is going to covertly say "and this is why."

For instance I'll give you an example. I was in the shoe store buying shoes just yesterday. I am an avid runner so I feel confident that I have some belonging there. I heard one of the employees say to the other that they were going to participate in a race this year...which happened to be one of my favorite races to run. I commented "I'll totally be there for that race." as my opener. This was my "Hi, I want to talk".

If I would have stopped right there...the feeling from the clerk would have been: "Well...that's...nice?" I would have forced awkwardness into the conversation. Instead, I followed up "The sprinklers are a unique touch huh?" (Because anyone who's run that race knows it's in July and hot as hell, and 30 or so neighbors along the route come out and either put their sprinklers out or stand there with a garden hose to cool you off).

So I got rid of the awkwardness and answered the question that I put in everyone's mind "Why did you decide to talk to me?" If you don't answer this question with a follow up, rest assured it will probably be asked or implied directly very soon...and the conversation will be dead.
So in addition to describing why you're inserting yourself into a conversation, the follow up does another very important thing...it takes the burden of thinking of what the person has to reply with off of them. They really have no pressure to continue the conversation now because they don't have to think of a topic, so they will be much more likely to do so. I'll continue to use this particular conversation further for my explanation, but I wanted to highlight the structure of it so far. The structure covertly goes:

"I want to talk to you" (Break the ice)

"This is why" (Follow-up)

"And this is what we're going to talk about" (Implied from Follow up)

In terms of effort you put into a conversation...congratulations, the ball is rolling. You did it. The hard part is over. And while you're both going to need to put in a little more effort to keep it going, from this point on, the effort is divided at least 50/50; and if nothing else, you've done what you wanted to do and started a conversation with this person.

What I want to talk about next is the most important part on their end.

(Continued in comments)
You are the leader, but what kind of leader?

by mrpmonk | October 9, 2019 | Link

I want to lead and do it efficiently, so I read to understand where I stand and where I should be. I do this for me and for those around me, in home, school, work and social events. Because the man is the true center of his social group, and as the captain, he can lead the ship to property or wreck it while trying. No third option: NO way he delegates this responsibility. If he is to lead, he can't do it without following his convictions. Thus, to build frame and acquire the wisdom of strong leaders, we tend to try and copy habits of highly successful leaders "fake it till you make it". Failing to realize what suits him at a given situation, under calculated problems may get too big of an action. We need to understand where did our goals are coming from at different stages of development as we are swallowing the pill.

How can we realize what suits what then?

"if you want to be the chief of something, you have to do it all the way" That's when you accept to work as a secretary for the chief editor of a journal, and in 2 years, you become a reviewer, an assistant editor, an associate editor, then.. you replace an editor in Chief of a journal, someone in the same position of who hired you as his secretary. But you need the vision, the conviction, the ability to make choices on the fly and take risks. Otherwise, 2 years passes by and you find yourself still in a secretary for the good times you have and the limits that you set for yourself. Or, you may have gotten sidetracked and lost yourself and vision, even though you are working directly under the chief who you once wanted to copy him in everything as your idol, instead of using him as inspiration only. Same thing applies in home, if you start as a child who was deprived of his masculinity and forced to act nice to cover who you truly are, you grow up as a weak snowflake lair who get by in life by cutting corners and deceiving people. Life throw at us the Red Pill, and it's up to us how to swallow it and apply any advice from the wealth of knowledge at a given situation.

As a beginner, take my post with a grain of salt: Here is what you need to have in your developing frame as a leader:

I want to lead everyone to success but I need to lead myself first. What do I need to know about a leader? What is he doing to perfect his role?

First, a leader and a manager are similar but not the same. The Captain should skillfully achieve both roles so he knows what is he doing at a given time and change his leadership style, if necessary, as he is keeping everything under the control of his frame and plays skillfully within limits or break given limits.

The manager: Mission and purpose oriented, focused internally on status quo. He is well aware of the rules he gave to everyone in his circle to play within his frame.

The leader: Vision and goal oriented, focused externally. He is more concerned about strategic change and unbridled possibilities and opportunities.
The manager: Approaches issues as technical problems. With authority, he leads and direct within his limited span of knowledge to the subjects he mastered. While STFU when he doesn't know what he is doing and goes to r/askMRP to seek help.

The leader: Distinguishes between adaptive and technical issues. He is comfortable with ambiguity though, and leads with his conviction, vision and charisma. He has the skills of knowing "how to learn" anything, and is able to find resources. Because he read the side bar, when he goes to r/askMRP he asks for a rod, not to be given a fish.

Now the Captain assuming the leadership role that was assigned to him based on his gender, he formulated his vision, mission and measurable goals. How does he distinguish the core type of action performed in a given situation?

He needs to measure the dose. Too much of anything can be harmful as much as too little. Thus, he has to know if he is leading in a transactional "managerial" or transformational "leadership" style.

With managerial skills: An ordinary performance is satisfactory to transactional leaders, because it's already hard to keep frame and maintain status quo. He is playing well in his rule with the knowledge he has and skills he developed.

With leadership skills: Transformational leader wants to produce extraordinary performance to CHANGE status quo, by changing the rules.

The manager: His goals arise out of necessity, quick in reaction to respond to ideas and issues. His strong frame arose from deeply embedded concepts formulated from his own experience and history. Solves problems with the limited choices he has as he rationalize and control the issues at hand. He emotionally detaches himself from his goals, he does what it takes to achieve them, nothing is personal, as his incentive is based on the exchange of needs.

The leader: His goals arise out of desires. He is active, not reactive, in shaping ideas. He may departures from his personal beliefs and history to try something completely new if it aligns with his vision. Develops fresh approaches to long lasting problems, with innovative and creative mindset. The outcomes of his goals are personal, as his incentive is based on the greater good.

What does it take to play transactional or transformational approach of leadership?

The manger: For him to play a transactional style of leadership, his locus of reward is to maximize personal benefit and for that he has to be persistence, tough-minded, hard-working, intelligent and analytic. Thus, he negotiates and bargains, uses rewards, punishment, and sometimes, he has to use other forms of coercion. All of that striving to convert win-lose into win-win situations, as part of the process of reconciling differences among people and maintaining frame and balances of power.

The leader: For him to play a transformational style of leadership, his locus of reward is to optimize systemic benefits. For that he needs to have balls. Genius and heroism are what he requires. Thus, he inspire followers, creates shared vision, motivates. All of that to create new situations and new directions without regard to reconciling groups or power.

Personal Competence is the foundation of the Emotional Intelligence for a leader to directly impact morale, turnover and relationships. This competence comes from self awareness and self management. The Captain masters himself first and must reach out to help others. Leadership can be learned by reflection, goal-setting emphasizing soft skills, practice, and assessment, challenge, and support. Challenge yourself first, be the best version you could be, own your shit!

Great leaders are made by experience, by the work of insight, by personal growth, and by learning from mentors!
I've been practicing my verbal skills and learning better timing and poise in the midst of confrontation. I do this because I used to get anxious and emotional in the midst of verbal sparring with peers. And with my practice I feel the same way socially as I do when I trained extensively on close combat and handgun skills and began to conceal carry. I feel a peace that if I'm somewhere and an active shooter is on the scene that I can save my own life and possibly the lives of others.

I have a sense of morality that makes me believe I need to protect the sheep as a sheepdog. I know we are all out for ourselves and our own happiness but I feel happy knowing I'm ready for whatever happens. They aren't owed my protection but it pleases me to be ready to strike down a man who infringes on the safety of my social group and family.

This morning I saw a shitty woman at the register in Starbucks completely verbally obliterating the cashier for telling her that her gift card wasn't valid. I know the cashier and talk to her every morning and she's a kind person who is patient and professional. Here's the conversation.

Woman is berating cashier.

I tap shoulder of woman. "You do know this girl works here, right?"

Woman turns around, "what?"

I calmly almost non chalantly look her right in the eyes. "That cashier works here, so she can't tell you that your behavior is shitty and that you should leave. Because you'll try to get her fired if she does. And you know that."

"I'm a paying customer and..." she defends.

I cut her off motioning to the long line behind me, "So are we. But we aren't going to abuse the cashier at the register. And make everyone else wait while we do it."

She starts stammering, "you can't talk to me like that" a single tear slides down her face.

I don't miss a beat, "don't cry, just be a better person."

She throws her drink on the floor that she didn't even pay for yet and storms out. Guy behind me pats me on the back. Wife grabs my arm and pulls close. Her jaw is on the floor.

In the parking lot a pathetic weak beta that is this witches husband half heartedly tries to confront me. I smile and wave him off and jump in my truck and head to church.

I'm not just bragging. I'm saying that keeping a cool head helps you say exactly what you want. And learning to do this means you spar with your betters or equals. Meditating on feelings being just that, feelings. Helps you perform under pressure. Emotional maturity is a big ally.
I encourage my American friends to be fully stocked, supplied, and able to effectively work from home by Sunday, 3/22, though EOD tomorrow would be ideal.

by johneyapocalypse | March 19, 2020 | Link

I imagine the majority here have planned accordingly. Those of you who have not would do well to make the most of your efforts over the next business day.

Focus on:

- Lube. More lube. Still more lube. Anal beads. Anal toys. Bananas and cucumbers. Skip the damn toilet paper 'cuz you're so into anal anyway.

- Skittles for MCT.

Slightly less important:

- Effective work-from-home capabilities (if required).
- Sufficient supplies.
- Home defense.
- Family leadership initiatives.
- Routines for each of your family members, particularly your children.

Maybe next week will simply be another week.

I have learned it likely will not.
I started my journey just 2.5 months ago. I've lurked and thrown in a few comments since, and I'm finally ready to post my victim puke introduction.

Background

We're both 46. We were both virgins when we started dating in college (long distance). We married shortly after graduating, and have been together for over 20 years now. We have 3 kids, I'm a professional with a decent job that gives me some flexibility, and she volunteers at a local day care.

Sex was pretty good, though we were inexperienced. I was definitely BB and eager to please -- read all the books, learned all the positions, and all the places to touch her. We had a long honeymoon phase after getting married, but fell into routine and I let myself get buried in work and the ship started drifting. I went from 200lbs when we got married to 340lbs, and while I am tall enough that I wasn't a complete blob, I still shudder when I see how beefy I am in pictures from the last decade.

I handle all the money and bills, do all the shopping, volunteer a bit, and cook 2-4 times a week. I spend time with the kids, but I still tend to raise my voice and get impatient -- but then let them slide because I don't want to be the bad guy.

So, yeah, sex dropped off quite a bit. I spent the last couple years in a DB funk, trying all sorts of desperate shit: brought toys into the bedroom, tried to get her drunk, even shaved my pubes. She was always cuddly, so I'd use naps as a pretense to get into her pants. I loved going down on her (made me feel in control), and pulled out all the stops to make her come, but it happened less and less.

By the end of 2015, we were having sex maybe once or twice a month. I figured she was just low libido, and this was the rut that married people fall into. I'd use porn to get off, so that when we would have sex, I could last as long as possible. (Not that I hadn't used porn before, but it was becoming more of a crutch.)

I stopped initiating in January, basically shut down all affection. I was gonna make her come to me. And she did... once after I returned from a business trip. Then nothing. We spent many nights lying awake silently in the same bed, not touching or even acknowledging each other.

As it turns out, she was cheating on me.

Confrontation

So, that's a little dramatic. I realized after my trip that she was spending her days off (and her libido) with Mr. Hitachi. It wasn't that she had someone else, just that a couple minutes with the Magic Wand were easier and more reliable than flopping around with a fat husband for 30-45 minutes while he poked and prodded to find the right combination to get her off.

I was pissed. I was hurt. After all the fucking time I spent trying to fuck her, begging to give her orgasms, she didn't even have the decency to tell me I sucked in bed. I'd guess she was fapping 2-3 times a week, which it turns out was what I was doing too.

Bitter Pill

I had found TRP about a year ago, read a bunch of Rollo's blog entries, and while they very interesting (I love the confluence of psychology, game theory, and trying to decode what women were thinking), I found they often wandered into solipsism and misogyny.

But after dawdling in the DB subs during January, I came onto MRP and that's when I was able to pick out the RP elements that I needed. And on February 1st this year I started my journey and started to own my shit -- regular walks, exercise, eating better, taking care of my hygiene, and working to reclaim my marriage, my family, and the sex I deserved.

Well, I tried too hard. We had a fight about it on one night, and she gave me some pity sex that weekend, but I realized she was still having her electronic fun when I left for work. I broke down, I sobbed, I gave her the silent treatment, then threw a bunch of insults and tried to negotiate sex (if I clean the bathroom, will you give me a blowjob?). It was pathetic.

The next morning, I decided to do better. I told her the worst part of the whole thing was not that she was getting off without me, but that she didn't respect me enough to just tell me that I was the problem. I told her that she was welcome to get off any way she needed, but I wouldn't tolerate disrespect. I admitted the BJ thing was crass, and I would not negotiate for sex, but I would work to become someone that she'd actually like to fuck. I was taking her off the pedestal, that I would initiate when I wanted sex, and that she was responsible for expressing her needs and finding her own pleasure. Overall, not my best moment, but it was the turning point for both of us.

My Progress

"You don't need to change, I like you just the way you are." Yeah, that's such bullshit. If you had to choose between a post-wall frumpy wife who watches too much TV, or a submissive MILF with an hourglass figure who did chores without prompting, how long would you have to think about it? That's what the MAP is for men.

Since Feb 1st, I bought a home gym, started SS 5x5, and have added accessories along the way. I've fixed my diet and I walk 3 days (twice with my wife), run 3 days a week. From 340lbs, I've lost 55lbs in 2.5 months -- almost halfway to my goal of 220. I'm still "obese", but I'm looking better, feeling better, and damned if she doesn't like the muscles that have started coming back.

I've stepped up my work around the house. While I'm not handy, I've started tackling all of the crap that I'd neglected for years: broken drawers, leaky pipes, yard work. I've set and handled appointments for car repair, dental visits, and more. I bought new jeans (dropped several sizes), a few shirts for summer, and am working to fill out my wardrobe.

As I mentioned elsewhere, she's completely disorganized and kind of a pack rat -- why throw something out if it can be saved for a project or craft later? We have months of dirty clothes stacked, and a garage full of boxes destined for a garage sale in some distant future. I've been working to pick a room, clean it out (right to the floor), and pack/save/pitch whatever I find. She's not always happy with my decisions, but the house is almost done and this week I start on the garage.

And the sex? Well, I began initiating shortly after. I've always been good with kino, and know what turns her on, and had moderate success. On the nights where she turned me down (or starfished), I moved on with only a trace of butt hurt. I even ordered some coconut oil based on suggestions from this group, and surprised her with a tropical massage night that ended well for everyone.

Then came the a night where the whole family had volunteered at a local charity. The kitchen was full of older ladies, and I flirted with all of them shamelessly like I was in college. I was in peak form, and apart from a few light jokes, I ignored my wife most of the evening. We came home, and that night, she gave me the first real blowjob of my marriage.

I began to try domination in the bedroom. Previously I'd do something, then immediately ask if it was okay and do you want to stop. Now, I slap her ass (something she never approved of) during the day, give her a 10-second kiss then walk away, and basically turned my kino game up to 11. I gave her an explicit safe word. I've thrown her down on the bed, had my way with her, and didn't apologize for not helping her get off. I sent her text messages telling her to think of something naughty to do in bed that night, and then we'd do it.

And it worked! We started having sex 3 or 4 times a week -- or more. Holy shit, sometimes she'd climb on top of me and get herself off. She gave me a soapy handjob in the shower, and I ate her out when we got back to the bed. We did things we hadn't done since we were dating, and damn if she isn't wet and willing more often than not.

My dread game is actually paying off. I have a plan, I look better, I'm dressing better, I have stopped engaging in idle banter. My wife even noted "you have your hand in your pocket, are you trying to be aloof?" I've read most of the sidebar and am applying more advice each day.

Here's what I still need to work on:

- Keep lifting, running, dieting. My goal for May 1st is 280 pounds (halfway to 220).
- Clean the garage. I expect this will take a month, and require a dumpster.
- Still find myself looking for my wife's approval, but I'm doing better.
- I need to actively lead my children and wife, not just do all the shit myself.
• I still care whether she gets off.

I even check whether she has visited Mr. Hitachi (she hasn't), but I have accepted that she's responsible for her own happiness.

Contributions

I really appreciate the tough love that this place offers. I've been blessed in many things, some of which I took for granted, but this place has set me on a better path. I'm no longer the fat, drunk captain who let life happen to him (or not).

Yes, I still hold on to my blue roots. If this is the worst trial we face in our marriage, then I'm very lucky. I'm still very much in love with my wife, and I still think she's my unicorn.

I honestly don't know if she ever cheated on me. I doubt it. I know she has a casual crush on a nearby Chad but she'd never make a move and he's never expressed any interest in her. That said, I check her email, social media, and phone GPS... and have seen nothing suspicious. (She's not very savvy, and I have access to all her accounts.)

I suspect she thinks I have cheated, as there have been plenty of business trips and I have often spoken of women co-workers and friends, but I never have. Sure, I've had IOIs and definitely entertained the thought (I could use the validation), but I've been too beta to even try.

My conversations with /u/ex_addict_bro really brought home the damage that an affair could cause to me and my marriage, even if my wife never found out. His story struck me deeply as a cautionary tale, and I've never had less of a desire to fuck someone else than I have since talking to him. Thank you man, best of luck in your journey.

And finally, /u/jacktenofhearts has provided what I consider a critical voice of reason to balance the knee jerk RP dogma that pervades this forum. After seeing the quality and relevance of his responses, I searched back through his post history and found so many gems that struck close to home, that I don't think I could ever repay him for the help he gave me.

Seriously, I learned more about my own covert contracts, codependency, and other flawed models from his dissection of other MRPs than I could have in months or years of therapy. I've never been so indebted to someone I've never met, seen, or even know their name. I appreciate it.
Feel like I need to tell you who I am and why I am here - post happy hour anyway, no doubt I will cringe tomorrow and most likely delete this by il-est-ressuscite | January 23, 2016 | Link

Have just come home from a happy hour get together with six couples......and me....

I have created and deleted six reddit accounts all with labels representing some religious implications.

Why? Who knows? I no longer have any faith. In fact I am the angriest motherfucker you will ever meet, although I keep hoping the anger is temporary. I have to admit that it is the anger running through TRP that keeps bringing me back.

Embarasses me to admit it but I guess the schadenfreude of it all really draws me in.

I read it and feel certain I am not so pathetic after all. Plus I find I miss my favorite posters (MattyAnon, Training the Brain, and that one guy Inv3okerer or something like that who makes indiscriminate use of the word fag, so belligerent and very amusing)

I should say, I am a widower of 8 months. Man I hate the term widower, but there it is. Am trying to emerge from a soul crushing grief. I haven't been incapacitated, but I've been close.

Compared to the marriages I see described here, mine was sublime.

We met in college, took turns supporting each other through grad and law school. Had four kids, all four were a joy.

Like every day was a holiday, every meal a banquet.

For real, as my youngest daughter would say. And she is so like my late wife that I just look at her and can't even speak sometimes.

Why am I even on reddit? My youngest daughter told me it would help me understand the zeitgeist of young women and that I need to develop some "game" (she says her current BF "has no game")

I apparently am "too sincere."

I've actually been on a few dates. My four children try to push me back out there. Never had any trouble meeting women even while married, that remains true, although I have to say I don't understand these 30 year olds at all. Both my dates were very much younger than me. One 28, the other 31.

They just give it all away. I guess that's adult dating.
So I guess I don't meet the "in marriage or LTR" guideline but anyway, thanks for bearing with me while I get my shit back together. Don't wish this on any of you.
Welcome lurking cuckolds! Many of you have found your way here on the advice of others from subs such as /r/relationships and /r/DeadBedrooms, or possibly Talk About Marriage: Coping With Infidelity.

Be aware! Most, if not all here, do not subscribe to feeding the Industrial Reconciliation Complex. Sincerely, if you’re looking to enter The Abyss, go to MMSL... you will get good but misguided advise there. MRP saves men, not marriages. Also, this is not a ‘safe space’. This is a Locker Room where you will be told to leave your ego at the door, called out on your bullshit, and pushed to your limits. We build high-value men here, not weak, cuckolded chumps.

Most here will call you a Troll, but I know it’s more often the truth... I know you for the lost, pathetic and empty husks that you are. From all the recent cuckold posts, I could have written this shit word for word, myself. You see, I was once one of you. Just as pathetic. Just as weak. Just as lost. I got the plausible deniability, the gas-lighting, the trickle-truth, and like you, initially believed the lies because the truth and the unknown was just too scary.

You’re not all unique, special snowflakes. I (and others here) made all the same mistakes you’ve made up to this point and, in spite of it all, still found the red pill and transformed my life into one you can only dream about.

Like I did, you will try to reconcile and during the arduous process of becoming a better man, you will realize that she is not worthy of what you have become. Cheaters must play the victim, because owning their behavior means they’re ‘bad people’ and they can’t have that! Since victims don't need to change, she will fall way behind. The lack of value that she adds to your life (if she ever did) will increasingly become the splinter in your mind's eye and the dissonance will become deafening.

Then, one morning, you will wake up, see the shit-hole you’ve dug yourself in, know that it’s a prison of your own making and finally 'choose yourself'. This is the "There is no spoon" moment... when you finally realize it was never about her, only you. When you are a man of value who has options, it all becomes crystal clear.

And what does that life look like? It becomes amazingly abundant. Nothing is out of reach. Relationships, career, passions, experiences... everything.

How do I know? I was where you’re at roughly five years ago. I remember the pain, fear, uncertainty, doubt... all of it. And, I get it... crossing that threshold is scary. Do you continue to play it safe and deal with the 'devil you know' or do you move into unknown territory? I can guarantee moving forward is the only option.

By maintaining the status quo, you give the wife a pass to (continue to) treat you like shit (as did my ex), because regardless of the progress you make now or in the future, you've irrevocably confirmed to her that you deserve everything she's done up to that point. She doesn't respect you now and never will again. You will be signing up for a metric shit tonne of misery & contempt, consigning your self-respect to the abyss if you give her the 'hall pass' she expects.

You don't realize it now, but coming here and telling your ‘tragic’ stories of emasculating cuckoldry signifies the first day of the rest of your new lives. It just takes one simple act...
choose yourself!

Because, at the end of the day, the red-pill has only one message... Live your life on your terms!

So, what's it going to be?
So the past 5 days, my wife has been in a hag state, just not a lot of fun to be around. I've opted, as a result, not to be around much. Doing stuff on my own, doing stuff with the kids, doing stuff with the dog.

I play a weekly tennis match with another woman. She's a state level player, quite nice and we get along. While there's zero sexual chemistry, my wife doesn't need to know that. Playing tennis with her has been going on for about 4 months. I know my wife doesn't like it. I also know that doesn't change the fact I enjoy it. As I said, this woman is a great player and it's a good match.

Last night, I'm walking toward the bathroom and my wife says,

"I washed your tennis stuff, would hate for you to not look your best for your girlfriend tomorrow".

Shit test, right? I'm smirking to myself. Then, for whatever reason, I think, "geez, when was the last time she was on her period?". I glance at the garbage, sure enough, pad wrapper...

So as I move along this path, I've come to notice things I hadn't before. A big one, I used to treat any sort of resistance as a pure shit test...but this, this was a wife seeking comfort. Rather than STFU, my standard practice, I opted to say:

"I know you don't like me playing tennis with another woman, do you?"

her, hardened face, softening right away, "no, I don't"

"well look, I understand...If I was married to me, I'd be worried all the time...I'm pretty incredible. It's a tennis match, versus an excellent opponent. I enjoy it. Now go put the kettle on, let's have a tea and watch something on TV"

She smiled, her body language relaxed and the air in the home become instantly less...haggish. My future dread is still in tact, my tennis match is still in tact and...

Blowjob last night and my lunch was made and waiting for me in the fridge to take to work this morning.
Just got banned from r/sexover30 for just saying that a dude needs to take the red pill.

by surfsusa | November 15, 2018 | Link

I got this message today for posting a response to a guys Mans post on his open marriage where he isn't getting any but his wife is. And how he has lost is self esteem. My response was "My advice to you is Take The Red Pill"

That is all I said in my post and then I got this.

| You have 1 new message in your Reddit Inbox

Private message from r/sexover30 • view You've been banned from participating in r/sexover30

You have been banned from participating in r/sexover30. You can still view and subscribe to r/sexover30, but you won't be able to post or comment.

If you have a question regarding your ban, you can contact the moderator team for r/sexover30 by replying to this message.

Reminder from the Reddit staff: If you use another account to circumvent this subreddit ban, that will be considered a violation of the Content Policy and can result in your account being suspended from the site as a whole."

No warning just immediate suspension. WTF?
Book Review: 31 DAYS TO MASCULINITY by Hunter Drew
by BluepillProfessor | March 20, 2018 | Link

31 Days To Masculinity: A Guide to Help Men Live

I recently read this book and wanted to plug the excellent work done by our good friend Hunter Drew, aka /u/TheFamilyalpha whose blog is on the MRP sidebar and is a man who has never stopped “Training the Brain.” The 31 Day Masculine Challenge provides a 31-day program for self-improvement that is sure to increase your masculine quotient even if you can’t complete it. Hunter provides us an overall direction for the challenge in a well-written Introduction and then, in 31 chapters, takes us through a 31-day challenge that includes a daily task that can be a physical, mental, or emotional exercise. He also challenges us EVERY SINGLE DAY to do 100 push-ups. This means if you complete the challenge you will have done 3100 push-ups in a month. 100 pushups a day is a Hell of a start but I recommend you pace them out through the day.

Hunter begins by providing general instructions that are repeated each chapter saying that part of the challenge (besides the 100 pushups) is instructing us to give up our vices for 31 days. He makes the overall Challenge very clear. He is not talking about smoking weed unless it is a “vice” or drinking, unless it is a “vice” or a problem. If it is a problem- whether it is drugs, video games, addiction or whatever- then you must give it up for the 31-day challenge. Apparently, he considers masturbation a default vice and instructs those accepting the challenge to refrain for an entire 31 days. Sex with another person is encouraged but jerkin the terkin is the first thing to go.

Hunter then provides a different Masculine Challenge every day for 31 days. Some of these challenges are physical and some are Mental and some are Emotional. For example, the first challenge on day 1 is to start reading a book and begin consciously being your true, genuine self by beginning to give the world genuine and true answers.

If someone asks if you are busy and you are not say “no.” You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self.”

I won’t spoil all the surprises but in sum, the overall goal of this 31-day journey is to start getting into shape and shed your vices. Once you start working on that and at least being mindful of your challenges, then you need to start reading books and begin building your frame by being mindful about your genuineness with other people. Each of the 31 challenges reinforces the goal of building a physical, emotional or physical and masculine presence.

Bottom Line? I have read 20 or 30 books lamenting the loss of masculinity from a huge range of authors. Almost none of them offer any solution. Most of the minority that do offer solutions focus on ‘mindfulness’ and fighting the social changes by attacking feminism and strengthening the family but almost none suggest how we can INCREASE OUR PERSONAL MASCULINITY. This work is BY FAR THE BEST BOOK EVER WRITTEN on improving your personal masculinity. “The Rational Male” and “The Way of Men” are still must reads for the theory as are several other books, but this book is unique in presenting an actual short-term plan that is achievable and doable for almost every man which will increase your masculinity every day.

I also think that because this is not a traditional book and it is not meant to be read in a few sittings as I did (you are supposed to read 1 chapter a day for 31 days and much of the material is repeated) that I think this work would actually be better as an I-Phone App than a feature length book. When you upload the app you get the Introduction as written and a button that says “Start The Challenge.” Then the app could automatically feed you day-by-day excerpts from the text with the challenge for the day along with daily reminder. You could have checkboxes for when you complete the challenge and reminders throughout the day that turns off the notices. You could even let users do the 31-day challenge and have the option to refuse a challenge that day (or simply not respond) so that then the next day you can pick right up and do the challenge. You could have an option to complete 2 or more challenges in one day with a flashing reminder to do the 100 pushups that go with completing each challenge. If you do 2 challenges in a single day it will keep reminding you about the 100 and then 200 pushups you owe until you check it off. For an app like this I would make the no masturbation and no “vice” general rule only effective on days when you accept the challenge. That way even a sex pervert like me could complete it! An App would let you assume the challenge is 31 days but not consecutive days and you could modify the challenges accordingly and make them even more difficult and thought provoking. Just some thoughts.

TLDR:

Hunter, I think this would make a great I-Phone App so you techies who know how to do this sort of thing should get in contact with him.
MRP, Feminism, Chris Hardwick and the #METOO Movement

by InChargeMan | June 17, 2018 | Link

With the increasing awareness of TheRedPill and by association Married Red Pill I think it is important to "clear the air" a bit to help those new to MRP and "outsiders" trying to understand/demonize TRP/MRP in the wake of the #METOO movement. I'm hoping that this post can help to define some of the MRP position on feminism and #METOO plain English using a "case study" with as little rhetoric as possible. This isn't really a post for those who are already on the MRP path, but those who are trying to understand it, whatever that purpose may be. With that being said, I'm asking that those commenting on this refrain from low value content, with the idea that this can try to establish the baseline/balanced position for the group, not a demonstration of an individual man's opinion about the validity of the #METOO movement or individuals who have made claims. Additionally, this is the post by me, u/InChargeMan, who is just one person. I will guarantee that some/many of those reading this will disagree with something, and I'm ok with that.

PREFACE

1. The Married Red Pill reddit sub is not The Red Pill reddit sub. Obviously the origins are related, as are many of the concepts, but you will notice that the moderators are not the same and most of the flaired members are not active in both groups. We are not responsible for the content on TheRedPill or asktrp, which is a neutral comment regarding that content, but making it clear that these are discrete groups. i.e. don't form your opinion of MRP based on something you have read outside of r/marriedredpill.

2. MRP is a subreddit, which is a place where any person on the planet with a reddit account can come and make comments and posts. There is no elected MRP leadership, no general counsel, no advisory board, etc. The short description is that MRP is a place for married men to swap notes on relationships and self improvement, no more, no less. For a more complete picture, refer to the FAQ: Who Are We? on the sidebar. Reading the comment of a single person on this sub does not make that the official stance of MRP or any of its members. Additionally, I would wager that most members who find value in MRP intentionally filter the content to things that apply to them, even if other aspects do not. If you are here to find something distasteful to write about in your next blog post, I'm sure you will find it. For reference, other places to find things to be outraged about include your local library and the bible. Good luck, I hope you get lots of retweets.

3. MRP is primarily focused on self improvement of Men, including their relationships, their health, financial security, fatherhood, etc. Nowhere in there did I mention anti-women. The concept that MRP is anti-women is purely ridiculous. We are husbands and fathers, how could we be anti-women? Is TRP, MGTOW or INCELS anti-women? I don't know, go ask them. In-fact, if you consider the concepts of MRP as well as the real-world relationships that most MRP members are currently in, you will actually see that for the most part MRP is pro-women, in the way that not only are the Men happier after "taking the pill", their wives are usually much happier. Considering that I don't represent anyone more than myself, I personally consider myself a feminist, more specifically a proponent of gender equality. I have a wife and a daughter, you had better believe I support gender equality. Keep in mind though, I support true equality, not equal and more equal. This is beyond the scope of this post, but be careful to consider the motivations of those who have co-opted the feminist movement to mean supremacy instead of equality.

4. The moderators try hard to keep MRP on-topic and high quality. They deserve a lot of credit for this. The reality is that part of the "Red Pill" progression is an anger phase. As such occasionally you will see posts that would probably be better suited for MGTOW. The members understand where this is coming from and see it as a part of "the process". While these posts may be more misogynistic, generally the moderators are very careful to remove low quality posts, including anything where somebody is promoting violence or other harmful behaviors towards women. If you find a post you don't like, move on.

#METOO Movement

This is a very complex and dynamic topic, I cannot possibly fully address all aspects with the amount of time and interest I have to expend on this post. I've decided to do a "case study" as a way of applying this to a real world situation, instead of a more philosophical discussion. Perhaps others might want to take on this task. But for me, I feel like taking a current topic and analyzing it point by point is a good way to make this accessible to all, especially the "lurkers" here. Here is goes:

Just a few days ago C-list celebrity Chloe Dykstra posted an essay where she described an abusive relationship she claims to have had with celebrity Chris Hardwick. I said "claims" because we don't know and will never know the full story. For the purposes of this post I am choosing to accept her statement as 100% true. I'm not saying I believe it 100%, I'm also not saying I don't believe it. I just don't know, and neither do you. I also believe that "victim shaming" is a thing, in the same way that false accusations and attention seeking behavior is a thing. But, if we are to try to understand how it applies to #METOO, lets assume that what she wrote is 100% true and accurate.

Assuming that you have now read her essay, I'd like to take some of the primary points and apply it to MRP knowledge.

I’ve struggled with such a great fear of talking publicly about my experience with long-term abuse...Emotional abuse is a very common thing. More common than you’d think.
This is something that applies to men and women. Plenty of men are subjected to emotional and sometimes physical abuse. Many times this is a great embarrassment for them. This is not a #METOO issue, this is a #HUMAN issue. One of the goals of MRP is to help men recognize the signs of emotional abuse that they may be suffering as a result of a toxic marriage/relationship and to learn how to take action. I would assume any reasonable person would support this goal.

Admittedly, there’s still an anger inside of me. An anger at him, an anger at myself for letting myself fall into the trap and being naïve enough to stay there.

This is almost directly out of the MRP ethos. Time and time again you will see content on MRP addressing this, which we call the "anger" phase. For happiness in a relationship a man requires love, respect, commitment, and physical intimacy. We also discuss the concept of "falling into the trap" and being stuck. A man holding up "his end of the bargain" as a husband, father, provider, protector while going months or even years without sex will have a lot of anger built up. This is natural and expected.

Within 2 weeks, rules were quickly established. Some of these included:

I “should not want to go somewhere at night”. My nights were expected to be reserved for him, as he had a busy schedule. This alienated me from my friends. I was to not have close male friends unless we worked together. All photos of male friends were to be removed from my apartment. This was heartbreaking for me, as my best friend happened to be male. As he was sober, I was not to drink alcohol. Before we began dating he said, “I noticed you have a glass of wine with dinner. That’s going to stop.” --Note, his is a recovering alcoholic. I was not to speak in public places (elevators, cars with drivers, restaurants where tables were too close) as he believed that people recognized him and were listening to our conversations. Our dinners out were usually silent, him on his phone. I wasn’t allowed to take a photo of us. (Eventually, he softened on this rule, but was very stern about me asking permission.)

While it might be convenient to look at these rules as an example of oppression, please tell me which of them is in any way a rule that is abusive within the terms of a committed relationship between consenting adult "celebrities". Especially considering that these are effectively "ground rules" established nearly day 1. If she didn't like it, she could have ended the relationship very easily. We might get a chance to demonize Mr. Hardwick later, but this isn't it. With that being said, MRP does not promote being excessively controlling.

He went to parties by himself and got a famous actress’s number with intention to date her at the same time as me. I found out months later, and couldn’t bring myself to say anything because by this time, my self-worth was in the toilet.

A man who's profession is to make acquaintance with and interview famous people got the phone number of a famous person. Stop the presses... Did he intend to date her? Maybe, doesn't matter. Did women interviewing late 90's Brad Pitt want to date him? Maybe, doesn't matter. Again, if you are looking for motivation to get your pitchforks out, this isn't it.
I was quickly pressured to take an on-camera job at his company I didn't want (I do not like to work for my significant others), because he insinuated I would be ungrateful to not accept it. Scared to upset him, I accepted the job, but I refused payment for my work, feeling uncomfortable about the whole thing (though the lovely folks at his company eventually forced me to take a check). By this time, like I said, I was terrified to piss him off- so I did what he said.

"Terrified to piss HER off" is the best way to describe many of the men coming here. Women will often use various tactics to control men, including threats of divorce and withholding of physical intimacy. To the women reader: If you are supporting women find their way to escape "toxic" relationships such as this, then you surely must support men in similar situations, right? Remember, we are pro gender-equality. I support you, will you support me?

Including let him sexually assault me. Regularly. I was expected to be ready for him when he came home from work....Every night, I laid there, occasionally in tears. He called it “starfishing”. He thought the whole idea was funny. To be fair, I did go along with it out of fear of losing him. I’m still recovering from being sexually used (not in a super fun way) for three years.

Ok, here is the meat of the accusation. To be honest her mention of "starfishing" is what triggered me to write this. While this term was not "invented" by TRP/MRP, it is often discussed here, and I suspect will lead interested parties to MRP to learn more or get content for their next blog post. Quite literally it refers to when a woman puts such little effort into having sex that she lays there, limbs spread, like a starfish. It does not imply forced sex, but it does imply that the woman is not "into it". Many a couple has had this sort of sex at some point. The most common reason is that the woman is just not attracted to the man but is trying to still fulfill her role in their relationship. That case can be as damaging to him as to her, by the way. A man who's wife is not sexually interested in him is often emotionally distraught. Rejection from the person in the world you love the most is hard for any person to deal with.

Probably one of the more controversial topics on MRP is the subject of starfish sex. Lately there has been a bit of discussion within the feminism circles regarding "enthusiastic consent". While I may not agree with the implied transfer of responsibility that this "movement" endorses, I do think this is an important concept. There is a post on The Red Pill provocatively titled "Every unhappy wife is a rape victim". If you are female you're feminism antennae probably just twitched. I get it. I suggest that you try to clear your mind of bias and read the post. I contend that this is one of the most pro-woman posts you are going to find on TRP. This is why the men at MRP strive to have a wife who is actively attracted to them, a wife who WANTS to have high quality enthusiastic sex with him as frequently as possible. MRP in no way supports forcing a woman into sex through coercion or force. Our wives are very happy :)

With that being said, one of the accepted responses to "starfish sex" is for the man to "caveman". I don't mean bop her on the head and drag her home. This is the concept that he show his wife through actions that he doesn't desire low quality sex, he wants high quality energetic sex. This is leading through example. Also, MOST women want sex with dominate and energetic men. Having a weak man flop around on her for a bit then cum is not her idea of a good time. Many times a starfish sex session can be turned around in this way. He gets into it then she gets into it. We want our women to be active, excited and enthusiastic in bed. What Ms. Dykstra described, especially crying, does not represent any MRP ideals. That is not to say that I believe it happened exactly as she describes, it also doesn't say that Mr. Hardwick perceived their interactions the same way either. What is clear is that he did not force her to have sex physically, so if we are prepping the stake to burn him, consider that she by her own description was consenting, if not in an enthusiastic way.

Is he a rapist? IMO no. Is he a douche? Probably yes. Is he an example of "toxic masculinity"? Hell no. He is not Alpha, his is not Red Pill, he sounds like an overly narcissistic and insecure ass-hat who took the shortcut of using his status to negotiate attraction and his insecurities to try and control his girlfriend.

The last quote:

I believed that, to borrow an analogy from a friend, if I kept digging I would find water. And sometimes I did. Just enough to sustain me. And when you’re dying of thirst, that water is the best water you’ll ever drink. When you’re alienated from your friends, there’s no one to tell you that there’s a drinking fountain 20 feet away. And when your self-worth reaches such depths after years of being treated like you’re worthless, you might find you think you deserve that sort of treatment, and no one else will love you.

Wow, I think Ms. Dykstra needs to get an MRP handle ASAP. Again she hits the nail on the head. These sort of feelings in an abusive relationship are not unique to women. This describes the countless men that find their way here looking for help. We help men "take the pill" i.e. understand the true nature of relationships between men and women, learn how to "unfuck" their lives, set goals, and help them execute to achieve those goals.

"We don't guarantee to fix the relationship, but we fix the man." I believe this part is what makes MRP so threatening to women. The reality is that many women are "happy" with the current arrangement. They get a beta provider who does what she wants without much fuss in exchange for occasional sex and a BJ on his birthday. For many women it is transactional, bottom line. MRP helps a man understand his true value, which helps him reevaluate the terms of these transactional relationships. Nobody would think twice if we helped women like Ms. Dykstra understand her value as a woman and why she deserves better.

Again, women, I support you, will you support me?

But, what about Mr. XXXXXXX in Hollywood who forced Ms. XXXXXXX to have sex? That is part of #METOO

This is part of the reason I made this a case study. All situations are unique. Undoubtedly there are many women who have been taken advantage of and abused by shitty men of power, men who deserve every bit that comes to them and more. Also, to be fair, there are probably women who have used this as an opportunity to put themselves into the public discussion as a form of attention seeking behavior. I have no knowledge regarding the specifics of any one situation nor the percentages of one likelihood vs the other. I can say, though, that media has used the movement for their own personal gain at the detriment to ALL parties involved, men and women. Literally ANY accusation is treated as fact and with no appreciation for magnitude of offense. Complementing a woman (even if inappropriate) is not sexual assault, if you are reasonable you understand this. I believe women are at risk for flying too close to the sun with this movement. At a certain point it will be excessively risky to have women work with/for you. When a single unsubstantiated allegation results in serious financial and personal loss, in the eyes of some rich/famous men, any woman he interacts with could potentially be a ticking time-bomb.

My suggestion is for women to be careful that you are promoting equality, not equal and more equal. I also think that finding resources similar to MRP could be useful for women, as it is in the interests of all people to have a high sense of self worth and purpose. Remember, pro-man is not anti-woman, just as pro-woman should not be anti-man. If you are taking your social cues from people who are anti-man, perhaps you should reevaluate their motivations.
The conventional wisdom about texting with your wife is to keep it to logistics only and don't always answer right away. This makes sense as it shows that you are in fact a busy man and that you won't have serious conversation over a shitty medium such as text.

In January, as part of my news-years goals, I decided to tweak that a little, to good effect. It may not work for everybody, but a big part of my frame is to keep things light and fun so in that vein, I downloaded bitmoji and Giffy on my phone. I answer almost every text with an image from one of those two apps. For example, when she hits me up with wanting and explanation for why I cook dinner A instead of dinner B for the kids last night while she was out, rather than ignore her, which is a silent "fuck off" in my marriage, I send a giff of Robert Downy Jr. (Who she loves) saying "deal with it."

The subtle difference in the message here is that I am saying "I am not answering your question," but in a fun way that tells her I don't take her too seriously. After several months of this, my wife has slipped into my frame and stopped asking me shitty questions over text all together. The added value is that it has also created the expectation of AA and AM when I am home as well.
Perspective is everything. What else is the red pill but a change in perspective? What else did the red pill offer Neo besides a change in perspective?

Several years ago I managed to catch depression like one would catch a cold. My fiancee and I had just broken up and I had a terrible case of oneitis. I think it was the way she didn't seem to mind when I demanded the ring back. It stuck with me. I came back the very next day but she had moved on already. So I questioned my attractiveness and my worth constantly for months, and I became convinced that my sadness was a direct result of no longer being with her. I put her on that pedestal and built her up into a Colossus. Every day she would weigh on my mind. The romantic beast within me had been fed too well for too long and it was now calling the psychological shots.

It was an idea that made me sick and it was another idea that eventually made me well. Luckily for me I read this book that inspired me to close my eyes when I was feeling negativity and to imagine my body flying up through my roof, up through the clouds, and finally up into orbit around the earth where it was quiet, and there wasn't another soul but mine for miles. From that perspective I would look down upon the world, contemplate the many people in it and the myriad troubles they faced, and then I would talk to myself from that position, asking me honest questions about how I was seeing things and what I thought about how I was seeing things. It was a bit like praying, only I played the role of both parties. Rather than waiting on a voice to speak to me from eternity I simply became the voice, and said what I thought such a voice would say.

I found that after I started doing that, the need to do so began to lessen very quickly. At first I would do it several times per day. Within a month I was only doing it once a week. And within six months I wasn't doing it at all anymore. It wasn't necessary to put on those goggles when I knew damn well what I was going to see with them. The invisible became the visible. By reinterpreting reality from a new perspective that perspective became my reality. And just like that...my depression was gone and my life turned around in virtually every way.

Many times in this sub specifically (not so much on the main sub) the more seasoned posters with some real wisdom to offer will go after somebody for being autistic in their advice, for missing the forest for the trees, for focusing on techniques rather than mindsets. They often quote the conversation between Neo and Morpheus we're all so familiar with by now "are you saying I can dodge bullets?...No Neo, I'm saying you won't have to..."

I know how frustrating that can be. I have always like self help books. Steps. Rules. I didn't realize what an I autist I really was, or at least had become. But there really is a better way.

I was watching the Netflix documentary, "Jim and Andy: the Great Beyond" the other day and holy shit, if you haven't see it, first of all, get ready to feel weird. But if you can brush that off you can see something truly brilliant happening. Jim Carrey did not PLAY Andy Kaufman in the movie "Man on the Moon" he CHANNELED him. He didn't sit around asking himself what Andy Kaufman would say or do in a particular situation. He looked in the mirror and FELT Andy Kaufman, and became him, and then everything he did, even if he KNEW that Andy himself would have made a different choice and even DID make different choices than he was making, something about his adoption of the character NOW was so real, so completely authentic, that he would do it anyway. Jim Carrey wouldn't show up at the set every day and play Andy Kaufman, Andy Kaufman would show up at the set every day and play Andy Kaufman. Jim Carrey was back in the trailer watching tv.

Anyway, there's a red pill principle in there somewhere. If you can get out of your head, sidestep the self-talk completely, and step right into the shoes of the man you know you should be, you don't have to wait for reality to catch up. You don't have to wait for your muscles or social circle or bank account to grow for the dynamic between you and your wife to slowly shift, for your sex life to slowly get better, nothing. You can get up from your computer right now, take a deep breath, look in the mirror, ask yourself who you want to be, and then you can just BE that guy the rest of the day, or for as long as you want, and get the results that guy would get. No kidding.

They say good things take time, and often they do, but with the mind, quantum leaps are possible. When I was 17 my best friend and I were workout buddies. I could bench 205 and his max was 175. He was tired of feeling weak so he went to the supplement shop next to our gym and asked the guy what the closest thing to steroids was that he could sell him. Some sublingual snake oil bullshit that tasted like ass was what he recommended. I laughed about it inside but felt sorry for him so I didn't say anything. The next day he comes running down the hall after gym class yelling "205! 205!" I said "205, what?" He said "I just benched 205! TWICE!"

I thought "Right. Your max bench jumped 30 lbs in 12 hours." Again, I felt sorry for him so let it drop. Until 24 hours later he comes running down that hall again yelling "225! 225!" I immediately called bullshit. After all, two days ago I could lift 30 lbs more than he could, now he's claiming he can lift 20 lbs more than me? I followed him to the gym incredulously and watched in complete disbelief as he pressed two plates two full times right in front of me.

For anyone who knows anything about steroids, you know that not even THEY can produce that kind of result overnight. Like literally no amount of steroids could ever do that. That's not how they work.

But I didn't know that. Hell I didn't really know anything. I just knew I just saw what I saw and it was real, and then something inside me snapped and I jumped on the bench myself and wouldn't you know it? I put that bitch up twice as well. 20 lbs more than my 1rep max had ever been.

The mind, guys. The mind is an amazing thing. I'm not a religious person anymore but I've witnesses physiological miracles, and been a part of them. I think the irreligious or formerly religious like myself disdain the concept or are very suspicious of it probably because we know that religious people like to use it as proof of God's existence, but for whatever reason it doesn't affect me that way. I still think God is bullshit.

But when you think about it all scientific studies have to test against a placebo group.
Expectation fluctuates so much from person to person it can be really hard to control for and it can really fuck up your study--not because people are lying about their results, but because people who are taking sugar pills, but think they're taking cancer pills, have literally been known to see their cancer disappear during the trials. This is one of the reasons researchers will often do double and triple blind studies, so they can REALLY find out what works and what doesn't, absent expectations.

I realize I'm rambling, but I think I've made my point. Stop practicing dodging bullets. Stop tiptoeing around your progress and hoping that some day this will all pay off and your wife will fuck you again the way you want to be fucked, or your job will pay you what you want to get paid, or people will respond to you the way you want them to respond to you--whatever it is. Stop TRYING. Stop thinking it has to take time. Just channel it. Summon it. Again, I'm not religious, but if Jesus was a real person who did the things he did it wasn't because he practiced being a son of God every day. He probably didn't practice walking on water. Maybe he practiced public reading and speaking but no public speaking skill is going to move people the way he moved people--not a skill that can be learned anyway. That's something you summon. Consider that.

Psalms 82:6 says "Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High."

Believe that, and you're already there.
"I am continually impressed, horrified, and saddened by the manipulative mastery of some women, and the extent to which men let that rule their lives."—Amy Larson (Female Blogger)

What is worse than a Shit Test?

A few years ago, before I came to Red Pill. There was a girl. There's always a fucking girl in these stories. And fellas, she was THE ONE. She was a HB4 maybe but before this I had come out of a Christian marriage and she was the second girl I had ever boned, and she gave me hot blowjobs, and I just could not see any imperfection in this perfect snowflake of mine and knew we were going to be together forever. Well you all know how it goes. She was BPD and banging at least one other dude on the side and when I found out I was devastated and butthurt and found TRP on Reddit and the rest is history. You can look at my old posts to learn more about where I am these days but in case you think I am some pasty faced college kid trying to give you advice, trust me I am the real MRP deal (LIFTING, the Captain, and well versed on all sidebar material and then some) and able to help you if you will hear me out. So this girl taught me something about women that I think most of us need reminding about. She taught me that women will shit test, yes, but there is something far worse that they do that can have dramatic and devastating effects on our lives. They can use mind control on you.

Now I don’t mean they take over your thoughts, but they have the power, if you let them, to subvert your will with their own. This girl from my past was very very good at that. She would tell me how she couldn’t wait for me to come over that night for hot amazing sex. She would tell me in great detail how horny she was and how dripping wet she was for me, but I would get there and she would be distant and quiet and just wanted to watch television. I would do what all Beta Billys do and beg her, yes BEG her, to tell me what was wrong. Turns out she didn’t have enough money for her seven year old’s new school wardrobe. She lamented that she was a shitty terrible mom who couldn’t provide and now her daughter was going to have to start the school year wearing goodwill. Well hell, that was an easy problem to fix, here’s a couple hundred of my hard earned money, problem solved. She was happy, I got a sloppy BJ and all was well until the next thing she wanted. Women do this shit ALL. THE. TIME. And we just let them. We either fall for it or we are too damn tired to push back so we just go along with it. This truth is going to complicate things for some of you, but the more advanced of you will appreciate this perspective. Do not just try and identify Shit Tests and Comfort Tests. Identify her subtle attempts at mind control.

Mind Control...Really?

Yes.

Now a more specific term might be Will Subversion but it is really all the same thing. Through crafty emotional manipulation she pulls you completely into her frame and gets your compliance with her will. This could be for something as simple as a household chore, or a trip to see her family you don’t want to do, or a major financial decision or something with the kids. The variations of this technique are as varied as the female capacity for manipulation, but there is a pattern and a way to recognize this technique for the wary. Essentially, at the end of the “test” she is giving you or display of negative emotions, ask yourself this very simple question:

Is she wanting something specific from you?

If the answer is yes, there is a good chance her little display of female hysteria was really a well thought out attempt to get your compliance with something she wanted. Don’t feel bad telling her no. If she wants something from you that she knows you are reluctant to give, she should approach you with respect and provide logical reasons why she would like said thing from you.

Final Note

Do not ever think giving a woman what she wants will create attraction. It can in some cases create COMFORT, but it does not create attraction. When my ex gave me my sloppy BJ reward it was not because my Beta Provider acquiescence to her will made me more sexually attractive to her. She gave me my reward like a prostitute provides her services for a fee. She wanted me to continue to provide for her and her daughter, which I did until I found out about the cheating and came to The Red Pill. Now your wife or LTR may not be using mind control on you for something so base as cash, but many of you are being controlled and are living a life where your own free will is subverted by a woman that can’t even run her own life properly. I HATE when I see men refer to their wife as the “boss”. Grow a pair, bro.

TLDR: Mind Control is a real thing...also, LIFT!
I woke up late, its 11 am already. My chest is throbbing in pain, pain from the ribs I cracked in the martial arts fight a week back. I don't see sweetie at home, she must be off to work.

I freshen up, make myself a protein shake, light a cigarette and put on the Black Phillip show. I hear Patrice screaming "Bitch. I am better than you!". For the next hour, in my mind, women are hardly on a pedestal. I wish I could have that mindset all through the day, every single moment.

Its time to hit the gym to do some chest reconditioning work and heavy isolated leg work to stay in the game. I look athletic in my gym wear, but I still feel fat. I used to be fat. I look in the mirror and I give a sigh of relief. I am not fat. I am muscular.

On my way to the gym, I grab a coffee, her favorite one and surprise her at her office. I recently worked on being a charming man and realized that to be charming means to not try to be charming. Sweetie is excited and rushes down the floors to meet me. She calls it a cute-coffee-date. We banter. I make fun of her. I make her notice bird sounds in the neighborhood. I make her act like a little chirping bird. She looks happy, but something is off. I remember Dante Nero's words:"If you feel a tingling in the nuts, you are about to get kicked in the nuts". I stay stoic.

Its been quite a while I took her out. I plan for a movie night and a circus the next day. Something is still off.

She comes home. She wakes me up from my after-gym nap like I am a burden in her life. I wake up and pull her close to me. She has fresh lip-balm on her lips. Very weird and she is chewing gum like she just robbed a bank. I ask her about her evening lip balm, minor insecurity reeking out of my half built frame. And there it comes: "I want a divorce". Bam!

I shrug an "ok".
She starts weeping and tells me how I don't care about her and tells me about all the ways I am wrong. She tells me how I am not putting in any effort to keep the relationship. I tell her:"You just asked for a divorce. I give it to you. There is no discussion anymore." She grabs her purse storms out of the house, weeping.

I start thinking about the last few months. Sex frequency had gone down like a bad performing stock. I started seeing the red flags. Her shaving right before business trips, long(er) office hours, office friends I had never met. I calm myself down. Even if she hasn't cheated yet, she is still crossing a boundary. I start scanning the house for stuff. I need to move out. I start packing.

45 mins later. Ring! She is back home. I let her enter while I continue to go about packing stuff.
And the blame game is back too. She blames me for letting her leave the house. In the past, I would run behind her. This time, I didn't.
I assert: "Sweetie. You leaving the house means you have another man waiting for you. What were you expecting from me?"
She has a look of shock on her face. She starts DEERing.
I ignore.

She wants emotional closure. She doesn't want to be an alpha widow, yet again. To get closure she wants you to act needy and helpless because that means her new boyfriend is better and she made the right choice. That's why she wants to talk, its her job to fuck you, emotionally and mentally. But as a man its my job to keep my pride.
What Makes a Man?
by Rollo-Tomassi | February 27, 2018 | Link

Essay:

Excerpt:

The Feminine-Correct Paradigm

Since the most recent school shooting in Florida, the focus on what constitutes masculinity has come to the forefront of our social consciousness. What exactly is masculinity they keep asking, and then provide definitions that only have meaning to a social order that’s founded on female social dominance. They are definitions that most men heard repeated constantly as boys from their overwhelmingly female-taught and feminine-primary educations. Since the beginning of the Sexual Revolution and the rise of Fempowerment boys and men are expected to grow up into a female-defined masculinity. Boys are acculturated in contexts that feminize them, yet we are meant to believe that all the horrors of Patriarchal masculinity are still being taught to them today:

Two decades ago, the psychologist William Pollack wrote that boys start out sensitive but through a “shame-hardening process” — told to stop crying, to be a man — they learn to hide what they really feel. And if they don’t know or understand their own feelings, how can they care about anyone else’s?

This has become something of a cliché. And the truth is, there’s no single culture of boys, but many. In my memories of adolescence, beneath the constant ribbing and occasional pyromania, we had tremendous affection for one another. And we longed to connect with women with an intensity that was difficult to contemplate.

This was a quote from Real Men Get Rejected Too. It’s a good illustration of the paradox masculinity presents to parents and educators. The idea that boys are these sensitive delicate souls who, through the evils of their Patriarchal (typically male) upbringing, are conditioned to become ‘macho’ violent men is a popular trope. After Nikolas Cruz killed 17 kids at school it was the go-to rationale. “Boys are brought up to be violent gun-loving beasts thanks to a perpetuated misogynistic culture of men” or some variation of this is common. It’s an easy, digestible, info-bite that sounds right because we’ve heard it for so long. If only boys we’re taught more like girls to get in touch with their emotions and were vulnerable in expressing them we could avoid these male-created tragedies.

That’s the pretense we’re supposed to believe – and it’s important that a larger society does believe in the inherent evilness of masculinity if the Feminine Imperative is to maintain social dominance. But the truth is boys have been systematically feminized for the past 3-4 generations. Boys are taught like defective girls. Since the 1970s it is increasingly women who have dominated academia from kindergarten to doctorate degrees. The entire western education system is founded on a feminine-primary, feminine-defined teaching methodology.
In the process of advantaging girls to the utmost efficiency in school (to fempower adult women) the educational atmosphere had to be defined by what best served girls. School and teaching became ‘for girls’ and the educational landscape shifted to teaching styles that girls were most benefited in.

In that shift the idea that boys might be disadvantaged had little bearing, but overtime the conditions of teaching ‘to girls’ defined the teaching style as the correct style. In fact, teaching in a way that girls learn best, and disciplining boys for not learning this way, is no longer a style – it is just the way children are taught. Boys and men today are the product of female teachers who actively advantage girls at the expense of boys. So normalized is this teaching that boys disrupting the advantaging of girls in class is something we’ve decided needs to be medicinally curbed. Boys being boys is diagnosed as an illness and drugs are prescribed so as to sedate them long enough for the girls to learn.

This focus on empowering girls isn’t limited to the classroom. In every form of early childhood through adolescent media, music, social networks and social exchanges this theme is continued; girls have the future in their reach, boys are potential rapists and criminals if they don’t fall in line with female-correct way of how things just are. I get asked a lot about what I think defines Blue Pill conditioning and I’d say this ambient social theme of fempowerment is a strong basis for it. Boys are not taught this old-school, much-feared Patriarchal masculinity, they are bombarded with themes of how masculinity is incorrect, laughable, and a shameful ‘act’ that boys have to put on to cover the ‘real’ female-correct versions of their sensitive selves. Boys are taught from the earliest age that being a boy is an incorrect mask, while being a girl, learning like a girl, emoting and relating like a girl is ‘real’ and the correct way of developing a personality.

Who would ever want to be a boy when so much is rewarded and praised about being a girl?
There’s so much more advantage to be had if you’re a girl. As early as five years old boys are deliberately taught to loathe their own gender, but they are also being taught a redefinition of what a female-correct form of masculinity should be for them. The best they could do would be to become female to the best of their ability. They learn they must agree and support girls’ empowerment, identify with the feminine and above all, despise the parody of masculinity they are shown is ‘illegitimate’ and inauthentic.

Boys are systematically taught to make women and womankind their Mental Point of Origin.
This is why it is so difficult for men to unplug and abandon their old Blue Pill selves; feminine-primacy was literally conditioned into them since they were kids.

Nikolas Cruz, like many other teenage shooters is the product of this feminine-primary education system, not a Patriarchal “teach boys not to cry” machismo school. He is a monster of their creation; one taught to cry on demand and emote like a girl. He’s the result of a participation trophy mentality that demonize men and masculinity to the point that he never learns how to bounce back from defeat, rejection or simply life’s adversities. No men and no masculinity is available to teach that kid how to harden up and be resilient, or how that masculine discipline is not bullying or hazing, but a necessary part of a boy’s maturation into a masculine man.

But to throw society off the trail a false narrative of hyper-masculinity ruining our otherwise feminine-correct boys is perpetuated. When the next school shooting takes place the Village will again want the public to believe it’s masculinity and men’s fault for what is really his emotional outburst. The Village will attempt to place the responsibility on men, on fathers, while in the meantime perpetuating the idea that men/fathers are superfluous at best, a societal burden at worst. Men are useful catspaws in so many ways, and in perpetuating this narrative the Village reinforces the female-correct theme for grown men too.
“Cleanliness is godliness” -Billy Corrigan

Women are affected by smell so much more than men are because their sense of smell is so much stronger than ours. Think of it as almost a superpower that you don’t have. Ever notice how certain smells bring back memories and the emotions associated with those memories. The smell/memory/emotional nerves are all interconnected in the brain, so learn to give your woman feelz by giving good smells, and don’t turn your woman off by bad smells.

Basics Okay, this sounds like common sense but apparently not so obvious for everyone. You must shower every day and get everything clean. Get in there with soap and wash that crack, crotch, pits, feet, in between toes, even if you have a hard time reaching it. Shower after the gym (you lift right?). Wear clean clothes every day. Don’t re-wear your favorite shirt again because whether you realize it or not, it smells.

Faggots- trim the nails on yours hands and feet. How would you like to get clawed in the vagina from some Neanderthal? If you do dirty jobs like fixing cars, wear gloves, or in the very least, clean the dirt out from your fingernails. If they won’t get clean, cut the dirty part of the nail off. Women notice that shit. Unless you play guitar in a kick ass band, or are some kind of renegade coke dealer, trim your nails regularly.

Use a Q-tip and clean out your ear wax- Yeah, really, every day. Cut your nose and ear hairs so nothing is sticking out. Get some really small scissors or an electric trimmer, don’t use the scissors from your desk at work.

Get a good haircut that fits your style. I shave my head but I’m told women like a man with a stylish haircut and trimmed facial hair. Trim your neck, back, chest, and pubic hair. Chicks don’t want to fuck a hairy sasquatch. I got this thing on Amazon for my back hairs because I can’t reach between my shoulder blades.

Use moisturizer for your face or anywhere that gets dry skin. You don’t want to have skin flecks or peels visible. I need it on my forehead especially. You may also use one that has a masculine scent. Use a good cologne as well, others have covered this in detail.

Oral hygiene- this is my real area of expertise I believe in what works, not philosophy or bullshit ideas with no scientific basis. Do not use a “holistic” dentist that tells you fluoride is poison and silver fillings will kill you. They want your money by changing out all of your silver fillings that have lasted for years but are now somehow harmful. The fact is that drilling out silver fillings releases more mercury into your body than just leaving them in place ever will. And they won’t tell you that white fillings may have BPA, an actual cancer causing chemical.

Find a dentist that you trust has your best interests in mind, not someone just starting off, and not a dentist that performs every procedure under the sun (nobody does every kind of procedure well, that’s why they have specialists). There is no recognized specialty of dentistry called “cosmetic dentist” or “implant dentist”. People call themselves that but it just means they like doing those procedures, it doesn’t indicate more training or skills. Don’t let the hot girls working in the front office convince you to have treatment you don’t need. Get a second opinion if you want and be wary if the dentist gets pissed (the staff may be pissed but the dentist never should).

I’m not a fan of these big corporate dental offices with tons of doctors and many locations. The dentists are employees who don’t have to build and maintain a reputation in the community. They have lower prices because it’s made up in volume with more aggressive/invasive treatments than usually needed. Find a dentist that seems legit, doesn’t upsell, and has a good reputation in the community.

Don’t take your teeth for granted. I have many patients (men and women) that are very attractive until they talk and I can see how they are essentially crippled dentally. It is really sad. If you get fat, you can work out, lose weight, and get attractive again. If you lose a bunch of teeth, you will never be the same, it’s permanent. It’s a lost part of your body that doesn’t grow back. You only get one set of teeth. You can be attractive again but it takes a long time, costs a fortune, and is really hard. OYS and have good oral health.

Bad breath comes from bacteria on the tongue that release sulfur or from foods/drinks that you ingest. Gum or mouthwash doesn't really help, you still have bad breath. The best ways to avoid this issue is to brush after every meal, use a tongue scraper daily, and don’t get cavities or gum disease. And avoid certain smelly foods. Personally, I avoid garlic and onions and some Asian/Thai sauces when I want to get close to my girl, but you do you.

Tooth decay (dental caries) is the most widespread chronic disease worldwide. Tooth decay and gum disease cause bad breath, tooth loss, and dental disfigurement. Unless you are a bad-ass hockey player, no hottie is going to want to fuck a dude with a jack-o-latern smile. I see patient's almost every day (men and women) who are losing teeth and require replacement by very uncomfortable and expensive means. A lot of this would be preventable if they just owned their shit.

Stop making excuses. The tartar on your teeth is not built up because you have bad genetics, or “my mouth just makes more tartar than other people”. You just don't brush and floss like you should, that's it. You don't get cavities because of having soft teeth. There is no such thing as soft teeth. You get cavities because of what you put in your mouth and by not taking care of them. OYS

Cavities are caused by bacteria on the teeth. The bacteria eat carbohydrate, they don’t care what type. It can be complex carbs like bread, sucrose from sweets, fructose from fruit, corn syrup from soda. They eat it and secrete acid onto the teeth which dissolves them. When enough of your tooth is dissolved away by the acid, bingo, you have a cavity. So, acid is bad for the teeth. If you eat natural foods with carbohydrates like organic stuff, you will still get a cavity. I call it an organic cavity.

Any drink with bubbles is acidic, doesn’t matter if its soda, seltzer water, whatever, it’s acidic. Lemon water is acidic- you get the point. Plain old water or milk is better for your teeth.
The other variable that is very important is how much time the teeth are exposed to the acid. It's like radioactivity, more time of exposure causes more damage. You eat/drink anything with carbohydrate and the teeth will be exposed to acid as long as it takes for you to eat/drink that item. But, if you brush your teeth after eating/drinking something, the acid exposure will be drastically shortened.

Another important factor is mouth dryness. People that have a dry mouth will have more risk of cavities. This can happen from many medications (antidepressants or blood pressure meds) or just age. I have seen this in myself as I get older.

What toothbrush do I get? It's not the toothbrush you have, it's how it's used. My advice is to use a soft bristled brush that is not too big. If your bristles splay and your toothbrush "wears out", you are brushing too hard.

Periodontal disease/gum disease - This is an infection of the gums that causes bleeding, soreness, and bad breath. When bacteria collect along the gumline, they cause inflammation that can lead to bone eroding from around the roots of the teeth. The end result is tooth loss.

It can run in families- if your parents had it, you are more likely to get it. Smoking and diabetes will make it 3-5 times more risk of disease. There is no cure but it can be managed with treatment (similar to other chronic diseases like diabetes). The best way to prevent periodontal disease is regular flossing, in addition to brushing and regular dental cleanings.

Crowded/misaligned teeth - So called “clear braces” like Invisilign or one of the others can help, but only to some extent. They can help with mild problems but you need traditional braces if your case is more involved. They probably won't tell you that because they want you to sign up and collect your money. Have realistic expectations. Your teeth will go back to their original positions if you don't wear your retainers.

Discolored teeth - Everybody wants white teeth. You can do whitening with the at home products but they only do so much. Keep in mind that existing white fillings and crowns won't whiten, only your natural teeth. Your dentist can sell you a take home tray system with an acid gel that works pretty well. The trays you wear at home will have the biggest effectiveness. There could be some sensitivity afterwards.

Full disclosure: I am a dental professional but this advice in no way should be considered as creating a legal doctor/patient relationship. You must see a dentist for recommendations and treatment regarding your specific situation.
A man from a remote village walks 5 miles each day to get water from the nearest source for his family. The walk is not treacherous as he doesn't fear for his life, but it does place a burden on him physically, as the blisters on his feet hurt during an especially rocky part of the trail, mentally as he struggles with the load, and wishes for an easier way, and emotionally as it takes him away from his sons and daughters, his wife, and his village.

But over time, the man adapts by fashioning some shoes, or by creating a new path easier on the feet...by accepting that struggle is a part of life and by gaining an appreciation of the struggle, the trail's beauty, and the purpose behind what he does...and by understanding that there's a time and place for joy with family and friends, as well as joy in solitude.

The man has come to equilibrium with his task, knowing at all levels of life there are tasks that test us, and in rising to meet them, we find ways to either bring ourselves enough value to make it worth it, or reduce the burden we bear from it such that, again, we balance or tip the scales of value the other way.

Little does the man know, but there is an underground aquifer a half mile from his hut. And if he digs a well there he will find water just as clean to take back to his family. Inevitably though, the extra time he finds for himself will result in a longing to fill it. For it is the human condition to fill that time with something. And in finding a goal to fill it with, he will again face struggles.

Do you tell him about the aquifer? In absence of you telling him, should he search for the aquifer? Is time spent searching for a solution to a problem he is already at equilibrium with time well spent?

Now let's say there is no aquifer, but he is searching for it. Do you tell him there is no aquifer? In absence of you telling him, should he not search for it? Is the struggles he faces searching for something he will not find better than the acceptance he had not knowing about it?
A blurb to you guys here. This ones a bit more existential, but I do find it important. The kind of guy who comes here out of pure desperation, then lashes out to the guys helping because they aren't respecting him enough when they do... take heed.

Everythinig we discuss is a little vague, and unfortunately, it's fungable too.

- Stoic means 'I let my wife berate me without crying'
- Alpha means 'I am mean to that bitch because I can!'
- Beta means 'co dependant pushover'

Whether you know you do it or not, everyone builds their narratives, everyone builds their mental models. You picture yourself as an archetype, and act in accordance with that archetype. This is frame, essentially, and the difference between a good frame and a bad frame is important to understand. That and once you start to see how middle aged chicks argue and berate a guy, it's good to know how and why they are doing what they do.

I normally add something actionable to the end of anything I write, this is the one exception I've ever done.

narcissism

I've often suggested a healthy level of narcissism is required by men, in fact I've often suggested it's one of the hallmarks of the concept of masculinity itself. Healthy is a vague term that we can take to mean anything we want it to, so in the theme of this post I will look to make it a little more objectively.

Unhealthy narcissism involves a few characteristics. Create an archetype, persona, or life script, which I condense into the term deep narrative; emulate the characteristics of your surface level understanding of this deep narrative and respond with rage towards any person who does not recognize your deep narrative as their deep narrative. I use the term rage purposefully, anger is a social reaction to a perceived injustice. If I break my arm from an accident it hurts, if you break my arm on purpose it’s anger. Rage doesn't have a grievance, it’s an ego defensive measure to remove threats to ones ego investment. Whether it’s accidental or purposeful doesn’t matter. Only the deep narratives integrity matters.

And it’s built on a foundation of sand.

So when I say a healthy level of narcissism, I define it as a level of narcissism that does not require rage in order to sustain itself. The reason I make this specific is because of the concept I am introducing here
Container Words

I use an analogy to describe this. A container word is a box, a box with a label on it. You take this box with a label on it, and fill it with emotions, feelings, and ego. You seal the box and throw it at someone else. They have their own box, and it’s filled with their own emotions, their own feeling, and their own ego. Since your box differs from theirs, and everyone box benefits themselves, they use their box as a cudgel against your box. You must adopt the contents of their box or else suffer narcissistic rage.

The labels are pretty common: Alpha Male, Beta Male, a Real Man, a Man of Integrity, Playboy/Pleighboi, HighIQ, Real G; you can easily think of many more once you know what to look for. Women and men both use container words to bully you into doing something for them.

- You’re not a Real Man if you don’t do the dishes
- Only highIQ men understand this
- I would never put up with that, I only sleep with men who have Integrity!
- Real G’s only fuck 9’s and 10’s

I’ve spent way too much time arguing with middle aged soccer moms online during my learning phase of The Red Pill, and it’s something prevalent that isn’t discussed. Luckily once a man gets it, they learn to develop frame. Frame encompasses the final strategy in this essay.

more here

When you get back, keep in mind the following bullet points.

1. Masculine/rp models of the world versus Femenine/bp ones
2. How container words can be very manipulative if you’re not aware of them (similar to open and closed communication)
3. Better understand and apply the concept of frame to build a more successful you.
4. Define your terms, otherwise you'll bullshit yourself about your successes and failures Wife denied my sexual advances two days in a row. She is sick with a bad cough and runny nose, so I somewhat understand. This isn't a major bump in the road for me and I'm not freaking out, but I understand the value in withdrawing my affection and giving her some space. So that's what I've done.

She sent me a text at work yesterday stating that two of the kids broke the light switch in a bedroom (not the plate, but the actual rocker switch broken in half). No big deal, I responded with a "I'll handle it". She replied that she had assumed we would have to call an electrician. Ha, women.

Left work early (slow day) and picked up a part at Home Depot and a voltmeter from a buddy. Flipped the breaker, fixed the switch, took 10 minutes. Easy. Didn't make a fuss about it, didn't initiate conversation that I did it. When she asked if I was done already I said "of course."

Kids were grumpy after school. Son was moody about troubles on his basketball team. One daughter had a bad hair day (ugh). I knew how to handle it. I picked up dinner (DADDY GOT TACOS I announced). They ate and I hit a sweet heavy sled pull workout for some aerobic conditioning, then a quick anaerobic slamball workout.

Came back in, told everybody we were leaving in 45 minutes but not where. Piled into the car and took the fam to an NBA game.

Not great seats at the last minute (and not spending $$ on my 4 year old anyway), but it's the emotion it created. This was a change of routine, so everybody benefitted. Little kids stayed up later, a fun treat. Two of my girls went to their first NBA game. Good times. Wife thought she had me figured out-- that I'd continue to leave her alone for a while...she was wrong.

Tingles happened at some point because she was all over me last night.

Takeaway: change it up. Don't let her figure you out or THINK she has you figured out. Be an OAK. Treat everybody (even wifey) with paternal love and guidance. She'll call you Daddy eventually. Also: sometimes she is sick and doesn't want sex. That is okay from time to time. No freak out and no butt hurt, just more time for reading and lifting and focusing on nutrition. Don't sweat it, it isn't a pattern.
This is not a support group.
by addictedtoyourface | June 20, 2016 | Link

At least not in the way you might think.

I was reading through the comments of a recent thread and something clicked for me. Stonepimpletilists was responding to the OP and stated: “You were thinking this was a support group. No time for that, we are busy building men here.”

A few weeks ago I had a shit night/day and decided to post a rant about it. It was quickly deleted by the mods on the grounds of being victim puke. My knee jerk reaction was to get angry and say “fuck these guys” let them have their superiority I’m out…but I couldn’t, because I’ve grown and learned so much here. I can’t deny the truths I’ve learned, or the tangible benefits I’ve experienced from exercising these truths. So, I took a step back and tried to figure out why my post so was quickly deleted. After I read through it a few time I realized it was comprised of humble bragging plus victim puking (i.e. whining). When you add those two things up you get nothing of value and I understood why it was deleted. The reason why Stone’s comment struck a chord with me is because back when I wrote my post I had the idea that MRP was a support group. A no nonsense masculine support group, but still a support group. I was wrong…sort of. The rest of what I’m writing is to all you lurkers out there that have the wrong idea of what kind of support group MRP is.

MRP is not the kind of support group where you go to like-minded men to tell of your woes of women. It’s not a place for you to rant and vent your frustrations and have men in a similar situation pat you on the back and say: “right on brother, woman can sure be bitches”. We all know that! We’re all here because of our own individual experience with how shitty women can be. So, when you post saying “woman can be such lying, opportunistic, cheaters boo hoo”, we’re thinking yes, water is wet, what else you got? The way that TRP is a support group is that lessons can be learned here that can used to improve. You can (silently) take good information from here, apply it to real life and see results. I’ve come here quite often with questions and frustrations and self-pity only to read a post and comments that directly speak to my situation. I internalize and act on what I’ve learned from other men. And in that way I am supported.

Something important to point out is that not all of the posts I’ve learned from are the posts where the OP does something right. Sometimes he royally fucks up and the comments section mercilessly point out the flaws. The OP may, or may not receive the advice, but I can still take something away from it. The reason being, it involved doing something. Whether the actions of an OP are right, or wrong they were actions, and you learn from doing, not whining. Some may want to say it's “venting” not whining, but when guys do it they're usually worse off then before they started. I never feel good after “venting”. You know what does make me feel better when I’m frustrated? Doing something: Lifting, fixing, cleaning, building. When I need to process, I do. And when I’m done, not only do I feel better, I’ve accomplished something. You get the exact opposite when you whine about problems, which is why it’s not tolerated here.
So, to sum up. If your posts don’t involve some kind of action then it’s probably humble brag (I am awesome), or victim puke (poor me), neither of which accomplish anything except wasting time. If you’re looking to become better help is available in the form of the sidebar and quality posts that you can internalize and put into practice. If you’re looking for someone to empathize/sympathize with you and your problems: “You were thinking this was a support group. No time for that, we are busy building men here.”
Married Game - The Coconut Spa

by A_Rex | January 20, 2016 | Link

TL;dr - Buy extra virgin unrefined coconut oil, like, yesterday. But do not just break it out in front of the wife out of nowhere and expect her to be DTF. Use it to create an immersive experience and lead her to want it.

This post was inspired by the number of questions I got about coconut oil from my last post, so here you go.

Boring but necessary facts - extra virgin unrefined coconut oil (never buy the refined stuff) is an outstanding massage oil and lube, provided no one is allergic. It is a solid at room temperature, but melts quickly in your hands. The price tag may seem a bit high at first ($8 - $12 a container), but a little goes a long way, so that it is actually cheaper than specialty massage lotions and oils that you will run out of and need to replace more quickly. CAVEAT - because it is an oil, you cannot use it with condoms or latex/rubber toys. It will degrade the latex and reduce the efficacy of a condom. Be careful. Otherwise, it can go everywhere and is a fantastic lube. It smells great, but the oil itself has little flavor (wife complained that it tasted like, just oil, which wasn't pleasing)

How to use in creating an immersive experience

I'll assume that my readers know their MRP shit. They are lifting, improving their SMV, and know how important it is to game the Mrs. In that regard, we all learned that it is our duty to keep it interesting and unpredictable in order to turn our wives into the secret sluts we know they are. So here's how I did it.

After gaming your wife, suggest she come to bed for a special massage. When she asks what makes it special, say you read some article on Yahoo about how coconut oil is great as a massage lotion, moisturizer, and lube. Convey that the massage will be "inappropriate". Do not just spring a massage on her without prior game, then get butthurt when she rejects the sex part.
To make it an experience, I replaced my bedroom light bulb with a red bulb, put the towels down on the bed, and was nude. Tell her to remove all clothing and lie on her front. Any resistance at this point should be a flirty, easy shit test. The responses that worked for me were to Stay In Character. She balks at getting fully nude? You - "management insists in a strict no clothing policy". She keeps testing? "Ma'am, we can talk if you want but this time will be counted against your massage time". Stay in character and be fun.

Then, start by giving a good, real massage. /u/BluepillProfessor had a post about how to do this. Pick your favorite things out of that (or a legit massage you've gotten) and do them to her. Of course, when you get to her ass, pay special attention there and touch everything as part of the massage. Pass her shit tests as described above. When you are done with this side, have her roll over and rub her front down. Be legitimate and inappropriate at the same time. Focus on her tits, then her pubic mound, and eventually rub her pussy until she's horny as hell, they you fuck the day lights out of her. Since getting the coconut oil two weeks ago, the sex has been almost daily, with her requesting "coconut massages" (her way of initiating lately), and her offering to coconut massage me, leading to her telling me to fuck her ass for the first time in four years as mentioned in my last post. My naughty massage parlor even has a name - the Coconut Spa.

Understanding the why -

One of our sidebar books (on mobile so can't link or verify exact reference) mentions immersion as an important aspect of sex/gaming. This is the key. Instead of just throwing coconut oil in the counter when I came home, I created an experience in the red light, naughty massage parlor where she can unleash her inner slut, because THAT'S WHAT THE SPA IS FOR, and only that. It also ties into a common fantasy about the woman getting rubbed down by her "Hawt" masseur, getting so turned on in the moment that she fucks him senseless and "doesn't know what came over her". Be Chad, the Hawt naughty massage therapist, and reap the rewards.

I will continue to create new immersions to keep this from getting stale, but will keep in in the repertoire. When I find new successful ones, I'll post again. Already have an idea. My wife loves cop outfits and I have one that makes me look jacked as hell. Maybe next time she comes in for a massage, my unlicensed massage parlor gets "raided"...

Note: forgive my spelling/format as I am only on mobile.
Edit: fixed username link
My FIL thinks I'm banging my MIL
by donedreadpirate | March 28, 2017 | Link

You read that right. My father-in-law is convinced I am smashing his wife. This is the weirdest thing that has happened during my MAP. A few weeks ago, my wife said "my Dad is soooo jealous of you, your muscles, your success, just everything". I shrugged and said, "it's probably hard watching your daughter look up to another man" then asked some innocuous question about a shirt or something and never brought it back up. I cannot stress this enough: if you are going to get into an LTR, it is your responsibility to thoroughly vet her family. I failed to do so. Worse, I ignored major red flags like her father being a raging alcoholic with anger problems, because I had crippling oneitis. Now I am dealing with the reality of my decision. I blame no one but myself. I should have run far away but my little unicorn was worth it!

There has been a lot of drama with my in-laws lately. FIL berating my MIL, yelling at her and calling her names, accusing her of cheating, etc. Apparently he will just sit around staring off into Oblivion like a fucking psychopath. I believe he is suffering from PTSD (veteran) but it's not like he went from being normal or average to batshit crazy overnight. He has always been a jealous and angry man. He was physically abusive and he emotionally tortures her even today. He's always been "religious" but now he's going Doomsday level nuclear. It's fucking wild. If I take a step back, it's rational to see that he is having a nervous breakdown. This is not all about me.

I called him out years ago for the aggression he shows towards his wife because I didn't want my wife and I to be around it. Since then, things have actually been pretty good. They sort of just avoid each other when we're there and I know this might be hard to believe but they're great with my kids. Way more engaged than my parents. For now, I have instructed my wife that I do not want her nor our children near him and recommended her to encourage her mother to go to therapy. I also encouraged my wife to go talk to someone professionally. I think I will just stay out of it. He doesn't want help, her mom isn't going to leave, and now I'm caught up in the middle of the drama (not literally, I'm not engaging in any of this shit, but as far as he is concerned this is real and he has evidence!).

I spent some time listening to my wife talk about it, consoled her and let her cry on my shoulder, told her everything was going to be okay, set some guidelines and recommendations and now I'm moving on. I have my own family I'm responsible for and I am encouraging her to cut her parents out. I want it to be her decision so I'm gently easing her into the idea. If I thought there was hope, I might take a different approach.

This is Jerry Springer shit here bros. Take this as a lesson. Learn from my mistakes. If your girl has a dysfunctional family, especially if drugs and alcohol are involved, GTFO. She will either be a whore or a broken woman who relies on you to be everything for her. Or both! You have better shit to do. I could master a hobby in the amount of time I have spent listening to her family drama and dealing with the emotions. Luckily, I now have an RP lense to see this through. I'm trying to figure out how to parlay this into a threesome with her mom... wife wasn't totally into the idea but it did make her smile so we'll see (joking). The night started with her crying about this and ended with her laughing with cum all over her face so not all is lost. But.... What. The. Fuck.
I trust me with the nuclear codes
by lintheswithd | November 27, 2016 | Link

I found MRP about 18 months ago while looking for strategies to navigate the changing dynamics with a pregnant wife - the child is now one year old. I lift, I lurk, I read, I act. I have floundered, I have lead. I have failed, I have reassessed, and I have sifted through jackten's post history like an archeologist at a dig site. I silently witnessed the evolution of Dread from the answer to everything to another tool in the belt, I was inspired during the Extreme Ownership phase, and I remember BluePillProfessor storming out of his house when his wife gave him a subtle shit test and I watched in awe as the "over-reaction vs perfect frame" debate ensued.

And while I have improved myself in enormous ways, worked the dread levels, and played the oak game, my marriage continued to be the weakest link in my life... until a few weeks ago after a particularly nasty fight. The details don't matter. The chain broke that night. I walked out of the family home, stayed the night away, and made peace with the death of my marriage. Surprisingly, I wasn't sad. In fact, I was relieved at the thought of beginning the end. Mentally, I repaired the chain of my life and discarded the broken link.

I returned home the next day for the Main Event. It wasn't my first one, but I'll be damned if it wasn't my last one. I laid out a vision of life post-marriage with child support, custody sharing, everything. I then laid out a vision of life in a good marriage. I issued the ultimatum, one or the other, because I'm living out one of them from now on.

Something was different this time. Maybe I wasn't willing to walk away from my marriage before, maybe I let my wife get away with holding this covert contract over my head of "we had this baby so you're going to stay here with me no matter how shitty I am", maybe I'm dealing with someone so deep on the narcissist spectrum that she couldn't fathom me leaving, or maybe all of the above. Doesn't matter. I've seen more positive progress in my home life in the last three weeks than I have in the last year.

It absolutely blows my mind that I had to go nuclear to make progress. Mostly, I feel like a pussy for having not done it sooner. But now she knows I have the arsenal ready. So let my journey be a lesson, if to no one but my future self - I'm the President of my life and I trust me with the nuclear codes.
Intro

Much has been written about the sexual marketplace of dating. This is a nice analogy: a deep, liquid and efficient market of participants engaging in an exchange of pussy for good alpha/beta. I want to talk about the sexual marketplace of marriage, in which a lot of the analogy still holds but the dynamics are different since the market is illiquid and inefficient, but still a market.

Illiquid - Illiquid is the state of a security or other asset that cannot easily be sold or exchanged for cash without a substantial loss in value. Illiquid assets also cannot be sold quickly because of a lack of ready and willing investors or speculators to purchase the asset. The lack of ready buyers also leads to larger discrepancies between the asking price (from the seller) and the bidding price (from a buyer) than would be found in an orderly market with daily trading activity.

Anyone who has studied economics will be tell you that a market is made by two participants exchanging goods in a transaction and at ratio called a price. In hetero human relationships the man instigates and the woman reacts, so we'll think of these market transactions as the man offering and the wife responding.

Bluepill Marriage Sexual Marketplace Transaction

The problem here is that the value of what the bluepill husband offers is not high enough to pay the price for what he wants. To the wife, the commitment, attention and emotional availability of a low value man have very little value. The fact that he offers submission and wants approval and kindness make him even more low value. The domestic servitude and choreplay have the same value of a hired maid, so something, but not a lot. The dadbod varies from neutral or negative value while the butthurt and drunk captaining always carry a negative value. The financial provision would have some value but "that's just his job" and anyway the state will force the man to keep providing that so its effectively removed from the transaction.

From this low value man the BP Wife Wants: Large amounts of emotional availability, commitment and attention - if the quality is low the quantity can at least be high. The ease of consistent compliance and submission. Choreplay and doing annoying tasks for her. Childcare. The security of control.

And therefore in response, the BP Wife Agrees to: A little bit of approval. A little bit of sex - infrequent and starfish. Very little respect and lots of shit tests.

Notice how the husband can keep offering more and more of what he's offering and it will never be enough. Also a critical element of this market condition is that the wife is generally dominant and can therefore forcibly extract what she wants from the husband by restricting her provision of what he wants: mainly approval, kindness and emotional support. This takes the form of "I'm not going to start being nice to you again until you apologize for not buying the right type of hamburger meat and make it up to me with flowers and jewelry!" Men who have a deficit of approval and validation (we call this insecurity) find it very hard to live without approval and fold like a beta, cementing her dominance and establishing her price.

Now lets look at how this works when the man has unplugged and gets it.

Redpill Marriage Sexual Marketplace Transaction

Now he's offering something she feels has value. She feels this has value to same way I feel (or know) big tits and a nice ass has value. The fact that he is dominant, high value and attractive means that his commitment, attention and emotional availability has a lot of value. He is the prize. Since he leads, solves her problems and shows her a good time, he adds a lot of value to her life.
From this high value man the RP Wife Wants: Dominance, commitment, attention, emotional availability. The security of strength and leadership.

And therefore in response, the Wife willingly offers: Passionate sex. Respect (with an occasional shit test to confirm strength). Domesticity. Affection. Approval (as long as its not needed).

Now (maybe post main event) the cardinal rule of relationships changes direction. An element of this market condition is that the man is dominant, and everyone is happy with that. He needs very little from her. He has no need for approval and could easily get sex elsewhere. But he has what she needs: the attention, presence and emotional availability of a high value man. Because he doesn't need her validation, he can withdraw his attention and presence if he doesn't get what he wants, but this is rarely necessary. Because he adds a lot of value to her life (not just dread and STFU), she'll value his commitment, attention and presence. By exercising this withdrawal dynamic every now and then while still taking care of his family, he assures her that he's strong enough to lead but valuable enough to respect.

Conclusion/TL;DR

Marriage is still a sexual marketplace its just an illiquid market. This means you need to increase the value what you're offering instead of simply finding a different buyer or withdrawing from the market completely. How to increase the value of what you're offering: be attractive, don't be unattractive, lift.
The Subtle Art of Not Giving a Fuck
by Reddjive | October 27, 2016 | Link

I have been putting this review together for a few days. I wanted to talk a little bit about this book THE SUBTLE ART OF NOT GIVING A FUCK by Mark Manson. A great book, one that should be on your reading list. I also personally believe that Mr. Manson is here among us on MRP. I have read many posts that are reflected in this book.

So Mr. Manson believes that the fundamental problem of our society is that we care about everything. That everything in this world requires a call to action, that if you don't have a fervent belief that everyone opposite of you is evil and wrong then you just aren't a human being.

“The idea of not giving a fuck is a simple way of reorienting our expectations for life and choosing what is important and what is not.” --Mark Manson Far too often I read newbies coming in saying they don't GAF about this that or the other thing. I think they are missing it. To not give a fuck is more then just ignoring, or letting it happen while you do your own thing. It is literally your display of unimportance. Whatever you are no GAF about is literally not important...it doesn't matter.

Mr. Manson postulates that when we care about everything then nothing is really that important. Manson also points out, as MRP also does, that Alpha Men care. BUT it's WHAT we care about that is of vital importance. When we care, as alpha men, it should be a signal to all around us that this one thing is vitally important. If it has caught our attention, then the fires of hell about to rein down. This is the attitude that you want to cultivate. Start pulling back on what you do and don't care about. Just as you nurture your time you must also nurture what you care about.

“Because when we believe that it's not okay for things to suck sometimes, then we unconsciously start blaming ourselves. We start to feel as though something is inherently wrong with us, which drives us to all sorts of overcompensation, like buying forty pairs of shoes or downsing Xanax with a vodka chaser on a Tuesday night or shooting up a school bus full of kids. This belief that it's not okay to be inadequate sometimes is the source of the growing Feedback Loop from Hell that is coming to dominate our culture.” --Mark Manson

There are evil people in this world. I see them every day. You can't solve nor care enough about it. It is a bottomless hole that will consume everything. It's why social workers in my area burn out so quickly or become jaded. They loose thier emotions to that soulless monster. So why bother? Why bother caring about how she feels every fucking day. She has emotions, and they are normally at the extreme all the time. Why care? Why bother? There are times I will indulge my woman in her emotional turmoil but I am quick to stop and say.

"I am done talking about that. What color panties are you wearing?"

It's abrupt, sharp, and shocking to her. But it has the desired effect. First is that I don't GAF about whatever she was talking about, but I do care about her, I listened, gave feedback, but then switched to something else about her that is more whimsy. More sexual. She does want to feel needed and sexy. Even if she isn't' suddenly a purring kitty in your hands.

It doesn't have to be sexual. Sometimes I will just say. "This has run it's course....tell me a funny story." or "Tell me what Little 1 did today." You cannot overinvest in her emotions, but you have to listen to them.

Finally Manson codifies a law that best sums up a man's path either to Red Pill or to Blue Pill. He calls it Manson's Law of Avoidance. I quote:

"Chances are you’ve heard some form of Parkinson’s law: “Work expands so as to fill up the time available for its completion.” You’ve also undoubtedly heard of Murphy’s law: “Whatever can go wrong will go wrong.” Well, next time you’re at a swanky cocktail party and you want to impress somebody, try dropping Manson’s law of avoidance on them: The more something threatens your identity, the more you will avoid it. That means the more something threatens to change how you view yourself, how successful/unsuccessful you believe yourself to be, how well you see yourself living up to your values, the more you will avoid ever getting around to doing it. There’s a certain comfort that comes with knowing how you fit in the world. Anything that shakes up that comfort—even if it could potentially make your life better—is inherently scary." --Mark Manson

I have become a great admirer and reader of the Stoics during this journey. Seneca said it: It either finishes you or transforms you.

Your Red Pill journey will do just that. You will die on the anvil and come back forged anew OR you will scurry away back to your blue pill self...more deeply entrenched then before.

If you are unplugging and having a hard time understanding how not to GAF I recommend this book. It is a fun read, and insightful. it will also help turn into less of a prick when not GAF and help you to understand that GAF is more about carefully considering what's important rather considering what isn't.
First post, felt I had something to contribute. 3 months unplugged. Going well, getting in shape, working on frame, etc. 42 y/o, 3 kids, 13+ yrs married.

Started following her cycle closely when I unplugged. It's only been 3 months, but I've seen some trends already.

Last month, had decent sex day 12. Figured we'd be OK for a while given our pathetic history of a few times a month. Occasionally I need to get up for work earlier than usual and I'll sleep down in the guest bedroom those nights, and it happened that one of those nights was 2 days later (day 14). Usually, when I leave around bedtime to go down and we have no snuggling in bed, lying together chatting, there is zero chance of anything sexual. As I grabbed pillows and toothbrush and leaned over for typical peck kiss, she grabs me for longer kiss, hugs a little tighter than usual, and asks if I want to stay for a while before going downstairs. Fun ensued. As mentioned above, this was quite unexpected, and I gave no signals of being particularly interested.

Next month: Sex day 10 and 11. (things are improving some in general after 3 months, but I'm not getting cocky). Then big fight day 13 after night out with some drinks with friends. I basically took out some gasoline and poured it on my frame, set it on fire, and decided to vomit blue pills all over the place with a drawn out emotional argument. Ended up sleeping downstairs due to mutual disgust with each other, something that hadn't happened since unplugging. (alcohol is constantly fucking up my frame, but that's for another post).

In the past, when we have a fight like that and I retreat to the basement, it takes a few days before we get back to normal interactions. Not this time, though. She was texting me from work, lamenting that we fought again, being generally contrite. Long story short, comes home, long hug, clearly interested in me, I respond in kind through evening, and really good sex that night. WTF. Oh yeah, it was day 14 again.

So I guess all my mental gymnastics for 13+ years trying to figure out why she responded a certain way to my game (pathetic bp game, but still) was pointless. makes me doubt my entire mental map of what she does or doesn't like. My understanding of what variables have been affecting her sexual response has been fundamentally incomplete. Well, at least I'm learning.

Pissed off it took 40+ years to realize how important this is.

Lessons learned:

1. follow her cycle like a hawk.
2. pay close attention to how her behavior follows her cycle
3. realize your snowflake is only a woman. AWALT. Know your biology.
I have been meaning to update for anyone who remembers my wife suddenly out of character wanted to go work at a bar. I asked MRP and you guys confirmed I was not crazy and this would not end well. I don't know how to post a link to the old thread with baconreader sorry.

So I told my wife in a nice way no she can not go work at a bar. At first she was ok with it but then things started deteriorating. This became less about the bar and more about whether she was going to respect my decision as captain. Things got really hairy alot of yelling and tantrum throwing on her part. I remained strong and unmoved. Alot went on over a 3 week period and I don't want to write you guys a novel about it but the end result is great.

I just really turned on the Redpill theory as much as possible in everything especially over the last few weeks. Me and my wife believe in the Bible and when I have shown her the passages saying "wives are to submit to there husbands" she has scoffed at me and basically told me because I don't act like Jesus 24 hours a day that's why she won't show me that respect. So after almost coming to the brink of divorce it was like something changed in her. I could just tell something was different about her.

She has been wholeheartedly my first mate and she allows me to be the captain. Any time she plans anything for the family she doesn't just assume I am OK with it she calls and asks me if it's ok. She turned over our finances to me. Her attitude is much improved. We are both way happier with these new roles. When she leans on me as the captain of our ship it makes me much more loving towards her. Now she says she finally "feels" like I love her which she always complained that she didn't feel loved. And so I plan to keep things going as we are both much happier in our natural roles as Man & Woman.
My wife has always had a temper, or should I say I always allowed my wife to have a temper. Any small grievance was met with an over the top melt down and accusations of me not caring about her and our relationship. Her inability to tell me when something bothered her without giving in to hysterics was annoying and something I vowed to change. Using the tools I learned her I was able to show her that her negatively lashing out instead of coming calmly to try and find a solution would only lead to her being frustrated.

Two days ago my wife was bothered by an off hand comment I made. Instead of freaking out like she used to she waited until she calmed down and sent me a text where she respectfully explained what she was feeling and why. Issue was resolved in two messages. When we got home from work I told her that I can see how much she has grown in regards to dealing with her emotions and I appreciate the effort she has but in to handle situations more maturely. Her eyes lit up. She looked at me like I just told her we were going on a vacation to Europe. By validating her from a masculine frame I made her happier with that thank you than any gift I gave her during my beta days.

Just like we want to lead, our wife wants to follow a strong man. A captain needs to let his crew know not only when they make mistakes, but also praise them when they succeed. A small thank you from a strong captain can validate her and make her feel loved and more secure in the marriage. Praise in the bedroom is great but praise outside the bedroom is equally as important. I don't think this is something I should make a habit of, but in this case it seemed like an appropriate action to take. Fellow members of MRP what ways and when do you show overt appreciation to your first officers?
I hear talk of hamsters all the time. You guys talk about her hamster and I've never really known what you meant. I just put it in the back of my mind figuring is discover the real life meaning one day.

Friday night I'm doing something and my wife asks me a question that we both know she's knows the answer to. I don't remember my exact response but it was quite snarky.

"You're being quite a jerk, I bet it's because you haven't had sex lately"

Smiling like the asshole

"I haven't had sex with you lately, no"

And then, the furry little rodent shook my hand and introduced itself.

All weekend she's been making comments

"Going to car wash? Don't fuck any women in there"

"Stop texting your girlfriend when I'm around"

Etc, etc

Sexual fortunes reversed this weekend and I have to believe one tongue in cheek comment was the catalyst. The old me might have apologized and then defended each reference she made. Instead, I agree, make a funny comment or just smile and laugh.

I continue to feel like this is working for so many reasons. Thanks guys Because of an Air Conditioner....not really
by ReddJive | July 22, 2016 | Link

I bought an AC. First one for the house. My house is older....really unique, but it was built some decades before AC was considered standard for homes. It really didn't need it. It was perfectly situated in the wind, and there were some other structural advantages. When I replaced the roof a few weeks ago that changed and we lost most of that, other then the wind, but it wasn't enough with high humidity. The breeze didn't flow like it once did. The family was getting too hot during the day, and I figured an small AC unit would be a good idea. The electric bill isn't bad in the summer.

Install it. It's running for a few hours when she gets home. She goes into orbit About it, which then is a spring into other things, I am untrustworthy, how I didn't discuss things with her, how I just do and never talk, then of course it spirals into how controlling I am, I got the speech about how marriage is 50/50, she doesn't know what I think and feel any more... I kind of lost track from there.

I knew this was not about the AC at all or any of the bullshit. It was about the news she got at her physical yesterday.

I patted the couch where I sat. She came and sat down.

Held her for an hour.

She got up. Got something to drink, and sat back down

She smiled and said, "So what movie are we going to watch?"

"James Bond. Spectre"

The rest of the night was pleasant.
Noob, do you know how fast you were going?
by bogeyd6 | January 27, 2016 | Link

Good evening gentlemen, I present you a wall of text. If you found this in the future through a search, this post was meant for people new to the journey and need to slow their shit down.

Flying through the program, dabbling here or there, and wondering why their plans/wife are not turning out how everyone promised! MRP simply mustn't work if I couldn't do it, because I can do everything. I know what's good for me and since I've always been alpha............

My personal favorites are the men who take the shotgun approach and try to do everything at once. Get the fuck over yourself. You aren't that smart, you aren't that good looking, and you certainly aren't going to come and change the program because you are some genius who is looking for the best path. There is a very strict path of where you need to start and where you need to go. This is the foundation of MRP and what you will build everything from. Don't shortcut it and don't look for quick results. They aren't there. If there was an easy way, don't you think everyone would be doing it?

A big shout out to /u/Jang-A-Lang before he decides I wrote this post directed at him. No. I write my posts days in advance. Just incredible timing, which I am known to do. You aren't that important.

Lifting

Mental Note: Jesus H Christ, another fucking post on lifting? Can't help it, people are stupid.

Your very first journey starts with lifting. Stronglifts, starting strength, untamed strength. Get to the gym and start the programs. Make it a ritual. This is the single most important thing you can do. Look, I've said it a thousand times. Lifting is the cornerstone, foundation, and walls of your new building. Don't forget, nutrition is part of lifting. Without lifting, nothing else matters.

You need the foundation of hormones, muscles, raw good looks, and strength. When you look good in a tight shirt, then you can say I have lifted. That doesn't mean you stop, it just means congratulations. Girls notice, and I postulate that by merely being in demand will build your frame and your ego all by itself. Having other women salivating over you is going to do wonders for your OI.

UNTIL YOUR PERCEIVED SMV OUTPACES HERS, NONE OF THIS IS GOING TO GET TRACTION

Reading
Different approaches on this topic. If you have a problem with your wife walking all over you, start with the book No More Mr. Nice Guy. If you have a problem with always catering to your wife then read When I say No I feel Guilty. If you are going through an affair, jump straight to Married Man Sex Life Primer.

Simply read the books at the gym. Keep them in your gym locker. She shouldn't know about your MRP journey at all. Give each one a good once over. Read, ponder the topics, move onto the next book. You have to let your brain crunch on the material before you jump right in.

Applying

After you have absorbed some content and feel like you understand it. Then take one book and start practicing it. The books are written in plan style, so feel free to start at chapter one and work your way through it. Finish a book, keep what works, discard what doesn’t.

Maybe you want to go onto passing tests, recognizing them, and obliterating them. This is a fair way to start, after you have done the reading. At some point in your journey you are going to start fitting these pieces together. You and your SMV is going to improve. Things are going to start falling into line. Experience is the best teacher, and unfortunately MRP can only be learned through experience.

"When someone says, “I’m going through hell,” the best response is to tell them, “Don’t stop!” If we see that pain, grief and tough times are a process and that it will get better, we’re less likely to get stuck in the hell.” -Douglas Bloch

There are much more advanced topics and if you are beginning your journey. Forget it. These topics are like Algebraic topology to a kindergartner. Don't be that guy.

Career

The red pill changes everything. Mental acuity flips upside down and you are seeing things for what they really are. Alpha, AMOG, Hamster, AWALT, AF/BB, ASD, CC, LJBF, Solipsism, DLV, DQ, DT, HB, Incel, IOD, IOI, these are all just electrons flying around in the ether. Until you see them unfold in front of you, there is just no real grasp on the concept. That said, RP has a way of destroying things that need to be destroyed.

Gentlemen, this includes your career. You will either better your current career or you will move to a new one. You will find yourself striving for the best and you are going to get what you want. Maybe. You might also destroy what you have because it really isn't just for you. Then you go on to do what you wanted to do in your life. I took a step back in my promotions and hiring and analyzed them for exactly what they were. The guys who were moving up are the ones who went and got it. The guys who quit or stagnated, were the typical work nice guys. I am willing to bet that the 99% of the quitters were holding covert contracts, but I have no way to prove it. Makes sense, especially if this is you, work real hard, be nice, stay quiet about your achievements, and never get anything return. Sucks doesn't it? The red pill will teach you go get it, not just let it happen.

Example
As usual, in my submissions I like to give you a real life example. Something raw, true, and straight from the battlefield of marriage. This happened to me 6 days ago. The blow up, on her part was pretty big. The story, is not the relevant piece, neither is the build up. The application of WISNIFG, NMMNG, and Manipulating a comfort test is.

Wife flies off the handle for , and I mean really flips her shit. Passive Dread tends to do that sometimes. I leave the room and go to the garage to start cleaning it. She follows me out and forces the issue. WISNIFG: Fog, Fog, Fog, Broken Record, Fog, Fog, Fog, she gives up and leaves the garage. Employ NMMNG, as I am not about to cave and DEER with her. She was wrong, I was right. She can have her comfort, but not at the expense of her shenanigans. The pattern had gotten predictable with me and her. MMSLP: She blows up, hubby betas up and comforts her immediately.

The Rub

The real issue at hand was a comfort test and I recognized it immediately. No real reason to purposefully amplify the need for comfort but I did it more as a way to switch it up. She needs to keep guessing. I left the house and went to the gym. The hamster lifted heavier than me. 30 missed calls and 50 some unanswered text messages later, I came home. Passed the now amplified comfort test with flying colors. All is well again.

Parting thoughts. Think about that story for a moment. Frame was solid, put myself first. Applied actual MRP related material. Still got my gym time. I spent my time doing what I enjoy doing and she didn't get to take that away from me. Wife got her comfort, tingles, and life went on. Blue pills, let the down votes flow. Maybe MRP works after all.
Unplugging and dealing with a shady wife?

by stacysmomlovesme | November 9, 2017 | Link

It's going to be all about holding frame going forward. Never shout at her or get aggressive, keep to your course. Nonchalant is good, careful not to overdo it: you need more than ever to be a man of few words, and TELL her how things are/will be, do not get into "discussion" about it. Give her the impression that you are emotionally shell shocked. Very closed off, but not aggressively so, throw in the occasional bit of warmth / something pleasant for her, such as a kind word here or there, something considerate done as if you "forgot" what's going on between you. The reason for this, it helps you keep her confused; you don't want the woman to decide it's all over and she lost you, she needs to feel like there's something to fight for, then she may come out with full on remorse and so on... even if somewhat faked, it's good for you, to simply help you process this shit without going crazy. If this does end up happening and she admits it all with apologies and tears, there are effective things you can do to both symbolically punish her, help yourself heal, and set the right "tone" of healthy dread for the rest of your relationship.

You can increase dread if you can stay over at friends' or a different apartment. Let her know you won't be coming home that night, do not elaborate where you will be or why. "I have a lot to think about. We'll talk later, Lisa. Good night."

Every single time I was in a situation resembling yours, the "natural" blue pill instinct was to frame things so that I get to play the victim, show the woman how she was shitty to me, and gain concessions from her by showing how I'm hurt, unjustly mistreated etc. - which she was supposed to "see" and react with compassion to. Big mistake! Check yourself immediately if you feel things careening that way. Instead, come at it ALL from an implicit position of power, you are the decider, you do not need anything from her, things are in motion and you are going to resolve this, with or without her. Life WILL go on for you, the only question is, what role if any will she have in it. Make her dread your decision and want to manipulate you by being on her best behaviour.

When she throws shouting tantrums, do not engage her or attack back, leave without a word. This is again why you need a "hideout" to retreat to. If she doesn't tantrum or otherwise force you to play that card, be cordial and civil, but detached. Everything you normally do for her, such as any chores and so on, I would still do it as if "nothing happened". You see what I'm getting at, it's like a state of limbo. She is confused because you are not attacking her, she's lonely, she's feeling guilty, and it's driving her crazy how you are so in control, ice cold about it. She wants you to come apart and cry, throw lawn chairs, that would be what she can work with. But you don't give her that, you're self sufficient and headstrong, can't be shamed, can't be provoked, can't be gas lighted.

Eventually you'll get a sense of what you need to do. If you can stick these TRP-like ways of working through it, then after the dust settles you're in a good spot to either lord it over the wife as the man whose fortitude scares her, or if you split up, then you get to do that more on your terms, more thought out instead of forced by circumstance.
Modern Events - Peterson / Newman Debate, and Relevance to MRP
by SteelSharpensSteel | January 26, 2018 | Link

So recently, during Jordan Peterson's book tour he was interviewed by Cathy Newman in the UK, which went viral. Here's the link - https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aMcjxSThD54

I would encourage you to watch the video, as there are multiple lessons on debate, not losing your cool, redirecting, frame, and so forth.

Key points that stood out:

Newman: Jordan Peterson, you’ve said that men need to, quote, “grow the hell up!” Tell me why.

Peterson: Well, because there’s nothing uglier than an old infant. There’s nothing good about it. It people who don’t grow up, don’t find the sort of meaning in their life that sustains them through difficult times. And they are certain to encounter difficult times. And they’re left bitter and resentful, and without purpose, and adrift, and hostile, and resentful, and vengeful, and arrogant, and deceitful, and of no use to themselves, and of no use to anyone else, and no partner for a woman, and there’s nothing in it that’s good!

Newman: You’re saying there’s a crisis of masculinity. I mean, what do you do about it?

Peterson: You tell, you help people understand why it’s necessary and important for them to grow up and adopt responsibilities. Why that isn’t a “shake your finger and get your act together” sort of thing. Why it’s more like, but why it’s more like a, delineation of the kind of destiny that makes life worth living. I’ve been telling young men, but it’s not, I wasn’t specifically aiming this message at young men to begin with, it just kind of turned out that way.

Newman: So what’s gone wrong, then?

Peterson: Oh God! All sorts of things have gone wrong! I think that, I don’t think that young men hear words of encouragement. Some of them never in their entire lives, as far as I can tell, that’s what they tell me. And the fact that the words that I’ve been speaking, the YouTube lectures that I’ve done and put online, for example, have had such a dramatic impact, is indication that young men are starving for this sort of message. Because like, why in the world would they have to derive it from a lecture on YouTube? Now they’re not being taught that it’s important to develop yourself.

Newman: What’s in it for the women, though?

Peterson: Well what sort of partner do you want? You want an overgrown child? Or do you want someone to contend with, that’s going to help you?

Newman: So you’re saying women have some sort of duty to sort of help fix the crisis of masculinity?

Peterson: It depends on what they want. No I mean, it’s exactly how I laid it out like. Women want, deeply, want men who are competent and powerful! And I don’t mean power in that they can exert tyrannical control over others. That’s not power! That’s just corruption. Power is competence, and why in the world would you not want a competent partner? Well, I know why actually. You can’t dominate a competent partner. So if you want domination, ...

Newman: So you are saying women want to dominate, is that what you’re saying?

Peterson: No. I’d say women who have had their relationships with men impaired and who are afraid of such relationships, will settle for a weak partner, because they can dominate them. But it’s a sub-optimal solution.

Newman: Do you think that’s what a lot of women are doing?

Peterson: I think there’s a substantial minority of women who do that. And I think it’s very bad for them. They’re very unhappy. It’s very bad for their partners. Although the partners get the advantage of not having to take any responsibility.

Newman: What gives you the right to say that? I mean, maybe that’s how women want their relationships, those women. I mean, you’re making these vast generalizations.

Peterson: I’m a clinical psychologist.

Newman: Right. So you’re saying you’ve done your research and women are unhappy dominating men?

Peterson: I didn’t say they were unhappy dominating them. I said it was a bad long-term solution. It’s not the same thing.

Newman: Okay, you said it was making them miserable.

Peterson: Yes, it is. And it depends on the time frame. I mean, there can be, there’s intense pleasure in momentary domination. That’s why people do it all the time, but it’s no formula for a long-term, successful, long-term relationship. That’s reciprocal, right? Any long-term relationship is reciprocal, virtually by definition. So, ...

There's a lot to unpack here, but generally, think about it. Your wife does not want a overgrown child. She wants someone who is competent. She wants someone who is competent in multiple areas, physical, mental, and so forth. Women DEEPLY want a MAN who are these things. YOU should want to BE these things for yourself. You wonder why your wife is not having sex with you? Are you fat? Leaving all the work around the house to her? Treating her as your maid? Letting her run the ship? Showing her that you are as incompetent as they come? Not showing any leadership at all? Why would a woman want to sleep with that. I say it again - why would a woman want to sleep with that.

What we do here at MRP is we get people to grow up, adopt responsibilities (lifting, learning, etc), and generally become a man who is competent, not just in the bedroom, but in life.

I would even go so far to say as that becoming a competent man is a key factor in your sexual strategy.

And look at the other side - women dominating men IS a bad long-term solution. Lack of frame, drunk captain-ness, saying stuff like "I don't know, what do you want to do?"... just terrible. Successful relationships are reciprocal.

It was a interesting discussion. I'd like to hear further thoughts below.

Bonus Insight 1 - Women make 80% of consumer decisions. I had not thought it was this large.

Bonus Insight 2 - In the search for his latest book, I came across this article: https://www.quora.com/What-are-the-most-valuable-things-everyone-should-know/answer/Jordan-B-Peterson?srid=zI7t - very simple, but worthy of review as well.
It seems to me that the vast majority of new participants in the weekly Own Your Shit thread or /r/askMRP are Type 2 or Type 3 Dysfunctional Captains or career betas, and of these, the vast majority begin with what I describe here as the "Dancing Monkey Attraction Improvement Programme."

The purpose of this post is to alert newcomers to the dangers of this approach, as it rarely succeeds alone and wastes several months of true progress in the process.

The "Dancing Monkey" Attraction Improvement Programme

Most career betas and/or Type 2 or Type 3 Dysfunctional Captains have neither frame nor an independent concept of self, and are deathly afraid of asserting themselves or challenging their wives. Discovering MRP when desperate, they find new hope and search frantically for things they can do right now to save their marriages and get laid by their wives.

Lift, STFU, and Read the Sidebar are clearly called essential, so most get the message and try these. Beyond these basics, though, comes a large and bewildering array of sometimes contradictory recommendations within

- Become attractive
- Own Your Shit (OYS)
- Dread your wife
- Develop frame, mission, and leadership

Having no clue as to what "frame" is, no goals or missions in life beyond pleasing their boss, society, etc. to receive their validations and making their wives happy to fulfill their covert contract for sex in return, these guys latch onto "Become Attractive" and make a new covert contract:

| "All I have to do is become attractive, and my wife will want to fuck me again!"

So they make a MAP that includes
• Lose the fat and get abs

• Lift weights and become ripped

• Dress better

• Kino and flirt with my wife

• Initiate sex more frequently, and be OI and avoid butthurt when rejected

• Act more dominant sexually

• Become more fun

• Be more social and flirty with other women when my wife isn't around

• OYS

• STFU about my emotions and when shit-tested

Some of our diligent Type 2 Captains and Career Betas who already overown their wife's shit as well as their own add a big extra helping of and call it "Really Owning (even more of) My Shit".

• Choreplay

Our newbies gaslight themselves by hamstering that successfully STFUing a shit test = frame (when it's merely Phase 1: Stop operating in her frame) and that leadership is doing their own laundry and telling (rather than begging) her to join him in the shower. (Checked those boxes, yeah!) And then they work ... diligently, or haphazardly ... happily, or in anger or fear ... quietly, or sharing every little tribulation or triumph at /r/askMRP or in the weekly OYS thread ... for several months, or a year, or even several years, and then ...
"It isn't woooorking ... my wife still won't fuck me!"

or

"My wife is still not attracted at all to me!" Sorry to keep bringing up your obsolete past, you're making great progress, but your beautifully written post history is a very valuable resource for study by newbies!

Usually they also complain

"My wife still disrespects me!"

in spite of IOI's and other signs of attraction and respect from other women.

And they ask plaintively

- Why isn't MRP working?

or angrily declare

- MRP is bullshit and doesn't work!

with a flounce and a bounce as they delete their account (prarrott, the immortal alpha_as_wolf, ImSteveMcQueen, etc.)

What went wrong?

A hawt, ripped boy-toy with some game can attract women for a STR or ONS, but the attraction quickly fades if you're still just a pedestalizing, people-pleasing pussy who can't or won't stand up for himself, and actively assert himself and lead rather than just withdraw by leaving or STFU when challenged. You're just a clown or dancing monkey trying to entertain the princess hoping she'll throw you a few fucks for your performance. Attraction is necessary, but so is respect ... and respect comes from frame, leadership, mission, OYS, and a willingness to challenge and stand up to your wife and anyone else in their pursuit.

TL;DR

Gentlemen:

- Don't neglect frame, leading, and mission in creating and working your MAP.

- Learn to assert your frame and challenge or call out your wife or anyone else when called for. (The linked posts are probably too advanced for beginners, but they illustrate what you should ultimately aspire to.)

Don't waste your time just "sprinkling alpha" with a solely attraction-oriented Dancing Monkey Attraction Improvement Programme that avoids the challenging parts of MRP. It. Will. Fail. Create and work a complete MAP.

---

Useful Homework

- Read through this week's OYS post and note the OYS's that are merely Dancing Monkey Attraction Improvement Programmes.

- Is yours one of them?

Welcome to Hard Mode, faggot.

Edit: Formatting; more formatting; a few fewer words.
Conditioning your wife: associating sex with ___.

by alphabeta49 | July 11, 2017 | Link

A comment in drtypr's recent post brought my thoughts to the permanence and permeance of conditioning. The non-sexual part of RP's idea of "Frame" concerns manipulating the world, rather than the world manipulating you. *Blue pilled guys and newbies: this means eliciting your misogynistic, dark triad monster enough to turn the power dynamic around.

Either my wife is conditioning me or I'm conditioning my wife. There's always give and take, but someone always has more power than the other in a relationship. Because she now looks to me for the status of the relationship, I can be as creative as I want in designing my - and our - life as her benevolent dictator. And it's a ton of fun. I don't have the desire to spin plates at this point, because she is so willing to satisfy me. And ironically, she's more satisfied.

I know. I'm a terrible shitlord.

Here are two ways I've recently conditioned my wife to think of sex more.

Setting the stage: by making sex about myself, I've been less nervous about pleasing her and have been able to all but eliminate my premature ejaculation problem. The result has been much more satisfying sessions for her. Even the quickies have been nice and fulfilling. She thanks me for taking care of her and directing my sexual energy towards her.

Linking: sometimes she gets stressed with her really tough and overwhelming SAHM duties. I have said things like "you just need a good fucking" with a wink and a smirk, or "sounds like a massage is in order tonight". Not pushing the topic, just dropping the line as an afterthought, almost like I don't even take it seriously. But it plants the thought. And she knows its not just a massage.

So, because sex has actually become more satisfying for her, and because I plant the seeds, she now independently asks for sex when she's stressed. Sex has become her go-to therapy. Sex is a mini-vacation, an escape. Remember, women don't want to be responsible. They want to enjoy the ride. Yes, a pun.

Things like DEVI, caveman, coconut massages, and manhandling her are all angles to incorporate.

Are you making sex fun/relaxing/fulfilling/varied enough to be her escape?

Setting the stage: we say that the most important part of DEVI is Dominance. Whether or not you're officially turned on by BDSM, it's a great tool to use for other purposes. Learn some shibari, buy handcuffs, tease her with vibrators, throw her around. Fuck, just spank her and finger her asshole. When you're advanced, you can choke, string up, burn with wax... whatever helps you further explore your role as master.

Linking: let's say she's talking back. Getting out of line. Being harsh with the kids. Gossiping too much. Being petty and emotional. Ignoring you. Berating you. Shit testing you. Flirting with other guys. The offense doesn't even have to affect you. But reminding her (either offhand or directly) of your dominance behind closed doors immediately lets her know she's out of line, and there will be consequences. Fortunately, you both enjoy the "consequences".

So, because rough sex can be used as mock-punishment, she associates her behavior with how I treat her sexually. Sometimes I think she's bratty intentionally, with how fast she goes from testy bitch to blushing kitten.

Are you tying her bad moments to how you dominate her in bed?

Either she's conditioning you...

- I can't have sex with a dirty house.
- Happy birthday! You get a blowjob!
- Why don't you ever just want to cuddle/hang out/talk?

Or you're conditioning her. Which is it?

Don't know about anyone else here, but I like being chased. I don't mind initiating, but when my wife jumps my bones because I've laid the groundwork, I know I've done good.

Disclaimer: to the social autists out there, this isn't an opportunity to become some evil lab scientist pulling strings on a puppet. All of this advice is predicated on the assumption that you are already an awesome, fun, fit leader. This should be something you play with, not a task that the guys over at MRP gave you or a way to conquer the world. It's just fun.
PSA: Reminder On Dread Game- New Guys especially! Don't be a dumbass with Dread Game!
by BluepillProfessor | August 20, 2016 | Link

Mods and others have noticed that with the influx of new guys some are royally fucking up Dread Game. This was always my concern from the beginning and I took great pains to say GO SLOW. Of course guys who can't be bothered to read the sidebar and wiki before they post are EXACTLY the guys who ignore that advice.

I am sick of seeing: "Wait, the first time I got back from the gym I wasn't supposed to explode my marriage by telling my wife we are going to have some changes and she better fuck me more or I am going to start hitting on randoms during my lunchtime?"

No brah. No you weren't.

There is literature on Dread Game in this sub.

There is also my book- a greatly expanded version of the above post: Saving a Low Sex Marriage: A Man's Guide To Dread, Seduction, and the Long Game.

Just trust us on this point:

DREAD GAME IS EXTREMELY DANGEROUS AND CAN DESTROY YOUR MARRIAGE, ESPECIALLY IF YOU MOVE TO QUICKLY.

If you are new to this both of these sources will tell you the same thing any other MRP APPROVED guy (or girl) will tell you.

The first 2 rules are:

1. SHUT....THE....FUCK...UP.

2. DON'T....BE...A....DUMBASS

Rule 1: STFU is not just a good idea, it's the law. You have been a weak, pathetic, poor Captain, who has failed to lead, failed to seduce, FAILED TO BE ATTRACTIVE TO WOMEN, INCLUDING YOUR WIFE.

This is the problem. The solution is NOT to suddenly start spouting off and demanding your wife respect you, fuck you, or whatever you think you deserve. If you make demands she will (rightfully!!!!) see a whiny, pouting, bitchy little boy demanding that mommy give him a piece of candy.
Think about it! Do you want to be with a woman who wants to fuck whiny, pouting, bitchy little boys?

Fucking creepy doesn't cover that scenario, right?

Well THAT is probably how your wife sees you. THAT is why she doesn't want to have sex (with you).

So WHAT IS THE SOLUTION? Simple! That is rule 3:

3. BE ATTRACTIVE. DON'T BE UNATTRACTIVE.

"Mindful" Attraction is a life long course of study. I personally have read more than 70 books on the topic. You don't need to do all that, but there are 4-5 books that you DO need to read.

They are on the sidebar=

In addition you need to figure out Shit Tests and read The Definitive Guide on Shit Tests.

In order to be attractive to women you should have an idea how to fog, and be assertive without being a mindless asshole. You should know about leadership and be making good decisions for you and your family. You should be in the process of getting IN SHAPE BY LIFTING HEAVY WEIGHTS. You should understand seduction and female attraction.

After you have been leading your family and wife for several months.

After you have read the books on the sidebar and understand why you are a "nice guy" and why nice guys really aren't.

After you understand about "Mindful Attraction" (Married Man's Sex Life Primer- MMSL) and "Red Pill Praexology" (The Book of Pook), and positive assertiveness (When I Say No I Feel Guilty).

After you are in shape for several months.

After you have tried seducing your wife and have been blowing away shit tests for several months.

YES AFTER ALL THAT...IS WHEN YOU MOVE TOWARDS "ACTIVE DREAD GAME" where you are actually approaching other women. It is not something you do in month 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5. AT THE EARLIEST you do this by month 6. Before that, you should spend a couple months practicing on your wife. Treat your wife like a random woman and SEDUCE her. Your wife is probably the easiest person in the world for you to game. Make a real effort with her BEFORE you start approaching random women and flirting!

TLDR: Don't be the little boy demanding his candy. Build into a man before you overtly change anything or have a single discussion about all of this with your wife.

Finally: All the links in this post are on the sidebar.
It is right there ===========
A man with no backbone; A treatise on faking it until you make it.

by UEMcGill | February 28, 2019 | Link

A man with no backbone; A treatise on faking it until you make it.

73 points•15 comments•submitted 11 months ago by UEMcGillIntegrated Male[M] to r/NMMNG

A man with no back bone

There once was a man with no backbone. He went through life as a puddle of meat and flesh. Never ever really able to stand up for himself. Never able to lift the heavy things in life. He was constantly stepped on and walked over. His face and body were dirty with the footsteps of other people.

He decided he wanted a change. So he found the best option he knew he could find. A broomstick. He took that broomstick and thinking to himself, “It’s not a backbone but surely it’s better than not having one at all!” He shoved that broomstick up his ass so far that it went up to the base of his head. It hurt like hell but for the first time ever he could stand up and walk upright.

He started to go through his new life with his new found back bone. At first it was awkward. He looked like he had a stick up his ass. He lurched and wobbled. He was stiff and inflexible. But eventually he began to move a little better. He was able to navigate and move through life a little better each day. He noticed that he wasn’t dirty anymore; people couldn’t walk on him when he was standing up.

Eventually he got pretty good with that stick up his ass. He could lift weights, he could run, he even got a bully to back down. Slowly but surely his back had grown strong and robust. A new backbone had grown around that broomstick. In fact it was stronger than the broomstick and he started to go through life like he always had a backbone.

“What do I need this broomstick for?” He wondered. So one day, with great strength and conviction, he ripped it out of his ass. You know what happened? Nothing. He stood strong and tall, because his new backbone was stronger than the fake one he made.

I don’t know where I first read this, so credit to the author. This is why you fake it till you make it. It will teach you the ways of walking upright and standing up for yourself until you develop the habits you need to do it without thought.
So there I am, six months after ingesting the Red Pill and following my MAP. This will be my first progress report. As I'm writing this I'm on a beautiful Mediterranean island, sitting outside my tent and hearing the sea in the background. I came here alone, something I would never have done before RP. I would have been so sensitive to other peoples needs, that going away alone would have seem incredibly egotistical. Now I'm totally at peace and see this as an investment in myself.

One of the reasons I came here was for hiking the mountains. I love exercise, the outdoors, hiking and mountains. A colleague gave me this guidebook with some tracks on the island. These tracks come in three categories: blue, red and black, indicating their level of difficulty. Blue is easiest and black is hardest, where you really need some climbing experience to safely do these. So, first day, I set my alarm early at dawn just to get an early start. Before RP I would probably have been too tired because of the stresses of life and would also probably have felt entitled to some sleeping in. It was beautiful! I started in the most beautiful valley and climbed up through pine strewn forest on a 'red' track. After some hours I reached the top and enjoyed the view of the valley and the surrounding mountains. Feeling pretty good about myself I went down again. About halfway I encountered an older couple. He was apparantly not enjoying himself and had this big frown and was puffing away. He asked me how far it was till the top, on which I answered that it was probably an hour. His response was bitching and whining (not that I really understood his language) and his wife was standing there silently with a melancholic smile on her face. She was probably used to his whining and had accepted here fate, probably because he is a good provider.

Why am I telling you all this? That guy on the mountain used to be me. I would whine about my life and selfinduced fate (he did go up that mountain voluntarily I presume) and would never have the energy to actually reach one of my peaks/goals. I would also have been oblivious to the acceptant nature of my SO.

There is also a nice paralel to the track, the guidebook and RP. The book was given bij someone else, so here you have the RP-community. In this book are some tracks listed, which according to difficulty will make sure you can reach a certain goal. Here you have the sidebar. Once you are on the track its hard to miss where you are going. You just have to notice that some rocks and trees are marked with a red paint. Once you see this, there is no way you can get lost. The path is so consistently marked, that once you miss a mark for 50 metres, you have to double down, because you surely missed a bend. This has been RP for me, once you see it, there is no unseeing it. I work as a healthcare provider and since then have seen numerous guys caught in the whining of the AFC. I have also found that you can't RP another guy. It's something they have to figure out or come upon once they are ready.

Whilst on the track there is always loose rock. This is the shit-test of the path. If you take it easy and keep your balance then no loose rock can throw you of the path. If you go too fast however, i.e you want to Rambo the path, the chances are very high that you would seriously hurt yourself or even die from a fall in the ravine.

Enough of the paralels. I just wanted to share my progress, which comes down to one important decision of putting myself first. This resulted in taking responsibility for my own actions and being my own judge. Tools I use are STFU and Acta Non Verba.

What I see ahead of me is progression through my dreadlevels. I'm just now entering DL5 and see some serious hard work ahead of me. Apart from doing some great hikes I also took the time to plan my future and reflect on what I had to do to ensure succes. What became apparant is that up until now I have only concentrated on being intellectual. I have neglected developing my social domain, so flirting and being the centre of a group (being alpha) is still very unnatural to me.

I will close with my new motto that I am sure will propel me to my success:

1. Be honest to yourself and others
2. Face your fears
3. Smile to people
4. Have fun
5. Do it better every day
6. Learn something new every day
7. Take care of your body
8. Be curious of your mind
9. Contribute to the world around you
It's a deadbedrooms post referenced in askmen, but it's exactly what we talk about here.

by stonepimpletilists | February 23, 2016 | Link

EDIT: Went looking for the story... Nevermind, it's RP. Though makes me laugh, strip all the RP language from it, and it's the story of the underdog, not the evil manipulated rapist doing RP porn in his basement.

Here you go

OP figured it out on his own, no roadmap, but damn if it's not the kind of posts that bring a tear to my eye. Reminds me of the post where the guy was divorcing his frigid wife, and she blew him to completion at the lawyers office when negotiating terms. Had a revelation then, that she could have been doing this the whole time, but only bothered when he finally had enough. He finished in her mouth and finished the divorce.

Another man fixing his life, enjoy some morning uplift. I honestly like this one in combination with TRP's invol incel post from the sidebar if you have time to read both.

wonderful quote in there too

You generally don't leave if things are going just fine. You leave when you're abused, unappreciated, or with someone that doesn't appreciate life. Like you go see The Matrix or Starwars, go stargazing, go ice skating, eat at a restaurant that is $500 per plate.... and she's just not impressed, not into it. Oh look, she's checking her phone again. Generally, something has to be so wrong that a guy thinks, "I would enjoy life better if I was sharing it with someone else."
I picked up the book "Boundaries with Kids" by Cloud and Townsend. They have several books in their "Boundaries" series. The books are all an unpacking of what could be distilled down to "You do you"; Boundaries with Kids, with Teens, in Marriage. Good books IMO. They come from a Christian perspective.

Reading in "Boundaries with Kids" recently...

When you need someone's love, it is extremely difficult to confront or deprive him, as you risk losing this love via withdrawal, anger, or guilty feelings. As a result, the child isn't disciplined properly and learns the lesson that he can get what he wants if he pulls away the love. Though neither is aware of it, the child is emotionally blackmailing the parent. The parent tries to keep everything pleasant between them, so as not to cut off the flow of relationship.

Ask yourself a tough, honest question: "Am I afraid that if I say no to my kids, I will lose the love I need from them?" If that is the case, begin taking your needs for relationship to other places.

This is NMMG with a flavor of WISNIFG in a nutshell. WISNIFG deals with a much broader subject than the dependency talked about here. But sometimes that "I Feel Guilty" component is an unhealthy, dependent-type loss being felt ... not a feeling of guilt. That's what NMMG is all about. Feeling the need to make others happy and to NOT make others UNhappy drives so much of the Nice Guy's life. That's not love. This is the programming us Nice Guy's must break.

It's not my goal to get called an asshole once a week by my wife. But if I'm doing it right (especially after how long I did it wrong), then it's a decent enough metric that if I don't hear it once a week or so I probably need to re-evaluate.
Repost-a-Rama! The Sex God Method and the Meaning of "Rape"- BPP's 2nd most upvoted (and by far the most downvoted) post of all time

by BluepillProfessor | July 23, 2015 | Link

Full Post:

The Sex God Method by Daniel Rose answers and explains the age old question: What do women want?

As it turns out, what women want more than anything is a MAN. A strong, solid, horny, MASCULINE man who knows what he wants and is willing to go for it without hesitation or fear.

Understand a basic biological fact: A LOT of your woman's entire metabolisms is reserved to run her sex organs- Vagina, Uterus, Ovaries. Your woman is MADE (or evolved) to have sex. LOTS of sex. LOTS and LOTS of hard pounding sex. Her body is not made for gentle, delicate loving. She is programmed to want to be rammed hard and deep and filled up with Alpha seed. It is what she CRAVES more than anything.

Now if we put that fact alongside two others we come to an interesting conclusion:

1. Most BP Betas are NOT giving their woman hard thrusting, frenetic, deep pounding sex, nor are they flipping her around the bed and fucking her hard in multiple positions. Instead they spend hours performing cunnilingus and making sure she has an orgasm first.

2. The new definition of RAPE has been expanded to include basically any type of sex a woman decides later she didn't really want.

Thus, all you BP faggots gently 'making love' to your women are not doing what she REALLY wants! If they want pulsing, hard pounding fun....every time you have sex (which is probably not very bloody often) you are a RAPIST. Chew on that motherfuckers.

Now on to my comment which currently has 407 downvotes in the thread: "We are not going to have sex every day any more":

I have a very similar story in my 20+ year marriage. ON OUR HONEYMOON my wife informed me (after YEARS of sex multiple times a day) that: "I don't have to have sex every day."

Dumbass Bluepill me told her: "Of course not dear."

Fast forward through 2 decades of denials, shit tests, games, withdrawal of affection, and sex twice a month- an ovulation and a pity fuck every month like clockwork.

When I unplugged my wife admitted (rather belatedly I think) the proper response would have been: "Fine, you don't have to have sex with me every day- but I need to have sex with..."
YOU every day” (followed by grabbing her, throwing her on the bed and fucking her silly after kissing her mouth shut).

Shit test passed 20 years late.

TLDR:

1. Women WILL ALWAYS try to cut back the sex in order to seize control of the relationship.
2. Don't "ask" for sex; TELL her what you are going to do to her body and then do it.
3. ANY woman who refuses her man is CHEATING on him and is NOT a GF or wife; the response should be complete withdrawal of affection and time until the GF or wife returns- or until you make it permanent and get somebody better.

Not surprisingly the White Knights and fems lost their shit. The main objection from the Blue Pill faggots and womyn was the statement:

"Don't ask for sex. Tell her what you are going to do to her body and then do it.

I think many of them are so used to begging for sex that they could not wrap their heads around a MAN actually grabbing his woman and fucking her senseless. Sorry to destroy the Blue Pill/Disney/Twue Wuv fantasy but shooting the messenger is not going to change the truth of the message. I attempted to engage a few of them with the following reply:

Oh for the love of God read the sidebar. Women are responsive. They want you to take control. They want you to be the man and take charge. The number one female fantasy is to be overwhelmed and taken by a strong male who cannot control himself.

You apparently don't disagree with point 1 (women will always try to take control of the relationship using sex) so I will start with 2 and REPEAT: Don't "ask" for sex, TELL her. Asking is Beta. Asking is TOTALLY anti-seductive. Basic PUA 101 is to assume the close. You should TELL a girl you are going to fuck her good- not ask (or beg) her for her favor. If you show some passion and get really, really horny, then chances are you will get your girl really horny and then both of you can be happy for a few minutes.

Rapist? Does EVERY fucking post have to have the obligatory caveat- Oh, by the way, if she says "no" you have to stop? If the girl is not DTF, if she verbally objects or pushes you away or turns away you stop. Well no fucking shit Einstein. Thanks for reminding us.

Others lost their shit because I argued that sexual denial was a violation of the marriage contract just as much as cheating with another person.

And on point 3- when you got married for all of human history until about the last 30 years it was ASSUMED you were not going to be trapped in a no sex marriage. Of course we are SO MUCH more enlightened today. The only thing men can do is withdraw affection and cooperation if they are not getting affection and cooperation and you want to say that is also abusive? Fuck you.

I was in a /r/deadbedrooms marriage for 3/4 of my 20+ Year tenure so I know exactly what I am saying and I stand by every word:

When you get married there are 2 promises exchanged.

1. You both agree to be exclusive sexually ("Forsaking all others")

   1. you both agree to satisfy the other sexually ("to have and to hold from this day forth").

Moreover you agree to do these things "in sickness and in health, for richer or poorer, so long as you both shall live."

If you cheat you violate the first provision of the marital agreement.

If you refuse your partner sexually you violate the second.

According to The Sex God Method, you need 4 elements to be a sex god: D-E-V-I Dominance: Manhandle your woman! Wrestle her to the ground. Throw her against the wall and kiss her while you put your hands down her pants. Pick her up and throw her down on the bed while you rip off her clothes and then fuck her into the mattress. Pull her hair and move her head around so you can kiss her lips while thrusting hard (make sure you grab a big handful of hair at the skull cuz it hurts if you grab higher than the base or grab a smaller amount- all in baby). Choke her while you fuck her senseless (be very, very careful! Start with 0 pressure and just a hand on the throat- in fact, start by holding the BACK of her neck and move slowly- I would argue you should never cut off her air but some girls really dig it- google erotic asphyxia for more but from a medical standpoint I just think it is dangerous).

Emotion: Give your woman a roller coaster ride of emotions. Whisper in her ear how much you love her then spank her ass. Tell her how her pussy feels squeezing your dick. Comment how she is such a horny slut for your cock because you can feel her dripping all over it. Have her stare into your eyes the entire time you are fucking her and order her to cum just before you do.

Variety: Keep her guessing what position you are going to put her in next. Get her sizzling like a steak on the grill then flip her over and fuck her some more. Cum inside her from different positions. Don't be predictable.

Immersion: RELAX! I like to give my wife a long, sensual backrub, rubbing her body all over and gently touching her intimately for just a second, teasing and building as we go. Immersion means the total absence of thoughts. The only thing in the word is the two of you and your sex organs.

Rape- REAL RAPE- is FAILING to give your woman the kind of sex she wants and craves. Stop raping her by your pathetic attempts and gentle lovemaking you Blue Pill faggots and start FUCKING her. REAL Rape is FAILING to satisfy your woman just so you can continue the Disney/Twue Wuv meme.
So my BP frenemies, you have been given the keys to the kingdom and the secret of the universe. Ignore it at your peril or wait until your woman cheats on you with one of those "Alpha" guys who throws her down on the bed and cave mans her into multiple orgasms.

Edit 1: I did not know the shit storm this post would cause nor that I would attract a brigade of Blue Pill followers but that is what has apparently happened.

For my Blue Pill Brothers and Sisters and everybody from two-X or Ask Hamsters let me be clear. As stated MANY times by me and others downthread and above in the Original Post "real" rape is bad. Is that clear enough? Genuinely forcing yourself sexually on another person who does not consent is "rape." Rape is not good. Rape is terrible. Rape is awful. No sane person condones Rape. Rape is a soul destroying act of aggression. That said, real Rape is NOT: I went home with him, took off all my clothes, got in bed with him, let him finger me to 2 orgasms and he was aggressive and we had great sex and I came all over the place like Niagara Falls but he didn't call me the next day so Hamster. "Real" Rape is bruises and broken jaws, or the use of threats or force. Real rape is shattered looks destroyed emotions and psychological agony. There is not a fuzzy line, it is a bright and clear line.

If you don't know the difference between aggressive, hard pounding, sweaty, dripping sex with your lover and "Rape" then please go to another thread.

Edit 2:... I often have this kind of sex with my wife. I throw her against the wall and aggressively make out with her. I pick her up on my shoulder and carry her upstairs before throwing her on the bed. I rip off her clothes. I hold her by the neck and even choke her. I pull her hair and spank her ass. Other times I spend an hour giving her a slow sensual back rub. I may spend 1/2 hour just on her feet then teasingly up the inside of her legs until she is going crazy and demands that I take her. VARIETY!

HOWEVER: My wife is a ball busting, hard-nosed, strong, extremely intelligent lawyer who makes more money in a month than most people make in a year. There has never, and will never, be a time when I am unclear whether she consents. Sure there are always Last Minute Defense she might playfully throw up but her consent is NEVER in any doubt. Never.

So if you attempt any of these techniques that is the first thing you need- a CLEAR line of communication. You can't just go by her level of arousal (she may not even be aware of it) so this is actually one time- and about the ONLY time- when you need to listen to what she is actually SAYING, not what she does. Sure they joke all the time about don't picking up the bar of soap- except it is not a joke. Be warned. Have a safe word etc (Our 'Safe' word is Mr. Mr. Mxyzptlk backwards three times).
At a restaurant, a cockroach suddenly flew from somewhere and sat on a lady. She started screaming out of fear. With a panic-stricken face and trembling voice, she started jumping, with both her hands desperately trying to get rid of the cockroach.

Her reaction was contagious, as everyone in her group also got panicky.

The lady finally managed to push the cockroach away but it landed on another lady in the group.

Now, it was the turn of the other lady in the group to continue the drama.

The waiter rushed forward to their rescue. In the relay of throwing, the cockroach next fell upon the waiter.

The waiter stood firm, composed himself and observed the behavior of the cockroach on his shirt.

When he was confident enough, he grabbed it with his fingers and threw it out of the restaurant.

Sipping my coffee and watching the amusement, the antenna of my mind picked up a few thoughts and started wondering, was the cockroach responsible for their histrionic behavior?

If so, then why was the waiter not disturbed? He handled it near to perfection, without any chaos.

It is not the cockroach, but the inability of the ladies to handle the disturbance caused by the cockroach that disturbed the ladies.

I realized that, it is not the shouting of my father or my boss or my wife that disturbs me, but it’s my inability to handle the disturbances caused by their shouting that disturbs me.

It’s not the traffic jams on the road that disturbs me, but my inability to handle the disturbance caused by the traffic jam that disturbs me.

More than the problem, it’s my reaction to the problem that creates chaos in my life.

Lessons learnt from the story:

- I understood, I should not react in life.
- I should always respond. The women reacted, whereas the waiter responded.

Reactions are always instinctive whereas responses are always well thought of, just and right.
to save a situation from going out of hands, to avoid cracks in relationship, to avoid taking decisions in anger, anxiety, stress or hurry.
It's amazing

by | June 18, 2017 | Link

[deleted]
Give It Time
by alphabeta49 | May 15, 2017 | Link

Piggybacking on the recent post by u/SP_SuitScholar.

Keep in mind I've been walking this road for two years.

- When someone is recovering from a substance abuse disorder, I tell him to give his family and friends lots of time to get used to the new him. (I even stole the "1 year of loserville = 1 month of positive change" from here). Sometimes guys have to put in years of consistent, clean behavior before a loved one will trust that he's not going to drink again.

- When someone starts working out, the cliche pinterest motivational pictures say to expect a month before you notice any differences, and at least six months before anyone else does. It's true, even if it comes with a filtered pic of a girl in a sports bra.

Change is never linear. You'll have great days when you feel on top of the world, and you'll have shitty days when you feel lower than you started. And none of it matters.

The only thing that matters is that you work consistently.

The movie character that gets the most screen time is the most important character.

Doesn't matter if you cross the finish line like a wounded Iraqi. If you put in the time, you'll reap the rewards.

Yesterday, my wife said that she was suddenly very aware of how masculine I was. She's finally coming around. She used the exact words: "I guess it's just attractive to see a man handling his shit."

Two years I've been at this. Took her long enough. Good thing I don't measure myself by her recognition.
My "lesbian" plate
by Rian Stone | March 11, 2018 | Link
Mini FR- Valentines day
by Scurvemuch | February 14, 2017 | Link

Last weekend I surprised wife with weekend getaway type of vacation about 1.5 hours away. Planned most of it. I do not like having too many plans, as this was my vacation and I want to relax.

I told her two things : have a nice dress to go with my sport coat for one of the nights, and have workout clothes if you want to spend two mornings with me this weekend.

I had been working nearly three weeks straight without weekends and I wanted a getaway vacation.

Got a nice B&B with a 4 star in house restaurant.

She packed the basics for both of us and I packed what I wanted for myself. This arrangement works for me.

We get there, no shit tests about parking, nothing about "where are we having dinner, I can't have X "

All in all it was a fairly nice weekend. Went out to dinner, did couples yoga ( I may actually have to try this at home), she wore thongs for the first time in 4 years without me asking. Had a major comfort test Friday evening, followed by some of the best, "dirtiest" events I have ever experienced in our relationship. Same deal minus the testing Saturday.

No asking me if pets are OK without us, nothing about anxiety, just fun.

Went out bar hopping in college town. For those of you confused about options : I am mid thirties, short as fuck, and there were enough options to last quite a while. Flirted/chatted with a few girls, chatted with the wife about "kids these days!!".. ( she is 28), and so on.

How do I know about girls who are down to "date" an older man? Look at Vasilliy's recent posts.

Bottom line, if you do things truly for yourself, people are then TRULY FREE to join you.

Details withdrawn to protect the guilty.
Lemme just tag along, ok?

by alphabeta49 | June 6, 2016 | Link

Men who are working to improve themselves and thus improve their marriages, imagine with me for a moment...

You are with a group of other men, mountain men, ones who have trained their bodies and minds for hardship. You have embarked on a mountain climb. You too have trained, and as the going gets tough and the grade steepens, you dig deep into the strength and knowledge you have learned through trial and error. You encourage those around you, laugh when you can, and don't say a damn word about those thoughts you're fighting... I can't keep doing this for much longer... I'm not as strong as these guys... Damn it this hurts...

You learn your body's limits, responses, and feedback, and utilize that information to best propel you up the mountain. All the reading in the world didn't prepare you for the actual climb, and no other man could tell you how it was going to feel, because your body is your own. Step by step you push through your body's resistance to discomfort, as do the men around you who, by entering into this affliction willingly and together have become your friends and brothers. In solidarity and silence you gain strength from the strength of those in front of and behind you.

You finally reach a small summit, and you revel in the glory of the accomplishment. The main peak still awaits, but this is a chance for a much needed respite and check in with the other guys.

Then softly...

A helicopter's blades are heard in the distance.

Gradually the sound gets louder and louder, until the bird appears in the distance. It is approaching your very mountain top, disrupting the peace and majesty of your views.

As it loudly hovers over you, a rope drops and a man descends. He wants to take a survey of your collective experiences so he can write a book about mountain climbing. He says he once tried the climb himself, but admitted he was not strong enough. But he is convinced, like a well-meaning salesman, that the book - really just a short collection of bullet point wisdom - will help him finally complete the route you all are currently fighting through. Then he has the fucking audacity to ask to join your band.

His name?

u/fiddel_fabulous.

I have believed this since childhood, but never actually lived it until about a year and a half ago: challenges and pain will make me stronger than I ever would be if I had it easy. Embrace the pain, because it will make your stronger. As others have said, embrace the suck.

Many "men" (and I was one of them) absolutely refuse to challenge themselves, to accomplish something under their own power, to step outside of their comfort zone. Therefore, they remain weak, ineffective, and pathetic. Pretty pond boats while the giant movers are traversing the world over.

Only by plowing through our own, personal, unique struggle can we improve.

So let's assume some chump makes a cheat sheet. Let's see how that would play out.

Scenario A: Husband gets home from a long day at work, the wife is not in a good mood. She snaps at him to not leave his shoes in the entry, she just cleaned it. Aha, he thinks, I have the perfect answer for this; I've memorized all the best lines from that cheat sheet on MRP. So he delivers this cheesy, rehearsed line with all the gusto of a freshman in college, but instead of morphing into a purring sex kitten, she is incited. It did not work! She is even more tiffed now. But the lines... they were so perfect...

Scanario B: In another part of the world, another man delivers the same lines, word for word, with the same no-bullshit tone, and the wife realizes that she's just in a funk, and apologizes, and yes, turns into a purring sex kitten.

Why the difference? The second man has tried his hand at the cheesy lines, and failed miserably. He, the successful one, has over-thought, over-spoken, over-compensated, over-stepped, over-controlled, and generally botched a good majority of his attempts at becoming a better man. He has adjusted, tweaked, and altered his message to fit his voice, personality, relationship style, and desired image.

The point is this:

There is a moment... one that I have come to cherish... right at the point when I have failed, when I resolve to learn and try again. Its the moment when I have no ego, because if I did it would be in ruins. Its the moment I own my shit. Its the moment I get just a little bit better. It the only time I actually grow.

If you never are in pain, you never experience these moments.

Those are the moments you cannot get from a cheat sheet. So many men I know in real life suffer from analysis paralysis. They read about all the things they would like to do, such as getting fit. They study the best workouts, know all the muscle groups. But I have no respect for them until they actually step foot in the gym and pick up a barbell. The pain of lifting = the growth of muscles. It happens in no other setting.

No tag alongs. We despise your disrespectful appropriation of our knowledge. Yes, I'm righteously angry.

You do the work or you can get lost. Which you probably will. Again.
I copied and pasted this from my post in the OYS thread this week, hence the mention of it toward the end.

The main event came this week. Looking back I can see all the precursors, and where I could've done things better to maybe avoid it. But ultimately it was needed, and I was expecting it sooner than later.

It came after a situation exposed a difference in personal views. To avoid doxxing, I'll leave it at that. We both told the other where we stood on it, she stayed mad while I spent 2 days just moving on from it, after telling her I was going to just agree to disagree and had to explicitly tell her I wasn't telling her I thought she was "wrong", I just viewed it differently. I offered plenty of invites to join in on some fun, all were shot down and the show went on without her.

Day 3, it came to a head for her. She starts by telling me how pissed she is at me, how it shouldn't have to be this hard, and ultimately "I think we need a break, I'm going to stay with [family member] for awhile."

"Do what you need to do. I'll take care of the boys."

This led to "Now you can fuck whoever you want" and so on. When that didn't get a reaction out of me she flips it and says she'll do the same. "Do what you want. I won't stay in a marriage with a woman that fucks other men." There was some more noise, but as I refused to engage her tone switched from angry to fearful. "I'm a mess, I don't know what's going on in my head half the time. I know I'm hard to deal with and it seems like you can just walk away at any moment."

It was the perfect opportunity for me to share my life vision with her, and I told her I wanted her to be there for it all. But I wasn't going to tolerate being the punching bag. I did more talking than what I "should have", but it felt like the right thing to do/say...so I laid it out. "I'm not here for you to take your anger out on me. I understand I've fucked up royally in the past, but I'm learning how to improve that. Every decision I make is based on whether or not it will get me closer to that improvement. I'm not going to get it perfect everytime, but I'm not going to stop moving forward on it either. I want to be your rock, but I will not be your punching bag." That was the gist of it, obviously less robotic and more personal to the situation.

She melted and opened up even more than she has been here lately. She shared some dark shit. Still talking with an aggitated tone as she spoke. But the more she shared, and the more unphased I was by it, she spewed out more and more. Anger to sadness. Aside from a few "I know exactly what you mean, I've been there myself" kinds of statements, I really didn't say much at all. She ended it all by telling me she's never talked about it because she thought nobody would understand. She thought having those thoughts and being "that way" wasn't normal.
After it was all said and done, I had realized what just happen. The calmness I felt during the whole thing was so alien to me. In all honesty, there was some fear (self doubt) that I would eventually slip back into my old ways. I acknowledged that fear, smirked, and took the last drag of my cigarette.

A levy has broke in my mind with all sorts of realizations on my progress, things I need to work on to make sure they are fully internalized, and things I still need to get started on. But when I stay out of my head about it, it goes so much smoother than trying to hamster it all out. This will probably be my last OYS post for awhile, I'm going to take the u/rian_stone approach and just take shit apart then put it back together. I'm sure I'll cross threads, break bolts, and have extra pieces laying around from time to time. But I won't let any of that stop me from getting where I want to go.
Tests I have passed and failed
by demeck | September 8, 2016 | Link

As I read some of these field reports and notes about behavior, it makes me reflect on some of the shit tests I've passed and where I've failed. The results were 100% predictable based on RP theory.

I've been married now for 20 years. If you've read my previous posts, you know the history.

This got longer than I intended. If after the first minute or two, you're enjoying the reading, continue. If not, stop reading. Don't bore yourself through the whole thing and then whine like a little bitch because it was toooo looong... You've been warned.

When we were first dating, my then GF was moving from her local community college to a state university to finish her degree. She started a conversation that went something like this:

Her - "I don't know what to do. I feel like I'm falling in love with you, but I don't know who I might meet in school". The RP translation here is "I'm going to a place with a huge CC, and I need to know you will be here when I get done". I was still pretty hardcore at the time, and didn't put up with any bullshit. Me - "That's fine. I don't know who I might meet while you're away". The result: She transferred to a local school, and moved in with me.

We moved to Chicago (about 700 miles away from her family, which BTW, wasn't far enough). She bought a ticket home "to visit for a few weeks". I later found out it was a one way flight. We talked on the phone each night, and after a few weeks I drove back to pick her up. As it was time to leave, she "couldn't make up her mind". I calmly told her I would help her, and placed her belongings out in the driveway, and drove off without saying another word. The phone was ringing as I walked in the door (no telling how long she had been trying to call). She was a blubbering mess. I had just driven through the night alone. I was exhausted, and still had to go to work. I was in NO MOOD for nonsense. I just told her that if she had actually "made up her mind" she knew the address, and hung up. 2 days later she showed up at the door.

Fast forward 2 years (still not married) - She starts a conversation where she's basically asking me if I would visit her if she moved back home, giving me all of the rational for why I should (old friends and the like). I finally responded with "there's no reason for me to go back there. I sure as hell wouldn't travel 700 miles to visit a woman who left me twice." I then followed with "If you're trying to tell me you want out, just give me a ride to Bonzai Motorsports (local MC dealer) and you will never see me again". That was the last time we had a conversation like that one.

Some information that will help with the next one: my wife is a smoking hot natural redhead. I know that sounds trite, but that doesn't make it not true. She has literally gotten an offer for every job she has interviewed for. She has gotten unsolicited job offers from past clients. She has gotten free car service, food, dry cleaning, etc. It's disgusting to see how some men act
Now, on to the next test - We used to carpool together and hit the gym on the way home. She would finish before me, and go to the juice bar. I found out that a personal trainer would make a point of being at the bar just about that time each evening. He moonlighted as a model, and brought her a picture of an underwear ad he did for Rolling Stone. She had that along with his number in her purse and actually showed it to me. When I found out, I got mad. All the conversation around how he was showing me disrespect, and how she owed me the same consideration I showed her by blowing off women who came on to me. All of it went nowhere. I spent the next 2 weeks collecting phone numbers. I handed her a pile of phone numbers written in women's handwriting (with those little hearts, smiley faces and the like). She went nuts. I just told her she wasn't the only one who could collect phone numbers and shut down. At the time, I was doing STFU. I didn't know it. I was just so pissed that I didn't want to even talk to her. Not because she had someone flirting with her, but because she refused to see how I felt about the whole thing.

The big shit tests stopped, and we married. The little tests carried on, however, and I failed many of those. They're not worth mentioning other than in aggregate for the purpose of the setting for the next big series of tests...

We are now in our 40's. A few years ago, her best friend divorced her husband. For the record, he was the perfect husband (great provider, great dad, always took care around the house, she and her kids wanted for NOTHING). My wife literally told me she divorced him because she was running out of time if she was EVER GOING TO FIND ANYTHING BETTER. Keep in mind, he's a pharmaceutical sales rep, making well into six figures. They had a massive house in a prestigious neighborhood, and his children absolutely adore him. After her divorce is finalized, she starts dating again. She and my wife talk frequently, and she would tell her about all of the hot guys she was now banging. All of the younger men hitting on her in bars. All of the swipes she has on Tinder. My wife would fill me in on the details, and I SWEAR could see her out of the corner of my eye studying my face for my reaction (shit tests). As that year dragged on, my wife found more and more things to be unhaaaappyy about. One evening, having had enough of listening to her piss and moan, I simply walked over to the front door, opened it, and told her if she just couldn't be happy with what she had, she may as well just leave. She spent the next two days carrying on about how she couldn't believe I would just tell her to get out "after all that WE had been through together".

Now for a little poetic justice. My wife still talks to her frequently, but it seems the tide has turned. She now calls to cry to my wife about her predicament. She miscalculated the timing of the wall. She left her husband in her early 40s. She is a very attractive woman, but is about 25 lbs overweight. She's grown tired of being used by younger men and still HAWT older men (who then refuse to commit). She only gets offers of commitment from men she's not interested in (Beta chumps). Every year that goes by reduces her odds of branch swinging. She's expressed regret to my wife, but her husband has moved on. He's been dating another woman for about 6 months now. His new relationship is going much better, having been introduced to the RP by yours truly...
What has easy ever done for you?

by addictedtoyourface | October 24, 2016 | Link

I thought I was done with these, but...

This was inspired by the guy who stated it was easier to wank and watch porn than to game and fuck his wife.

The exact words were "And to be fair, I haven't seen reasons not to jerk off because it's simply easier."

His statement is one hundred percent true, but it makes my blood boil because, WHAT THE FUCK HAS EASY EVER DONE FOR YOU?

Have you heard of the story of the butterfly that had it easy? A man saw a butterfly struggling to exit its cocoon. He decided to make it easier for the butterfly, so he opened the cocoon for the butterfly. As a result it couldn't open its wings to fly. Nature designed the struggle to pump blood (or whatever fluids they have) into its wings. He made it easy and it died.

Easy is death. The struggle is what empowers us. Look at the world around you. That muscled guy at the gym, the building you work in, the car you drive, the internet you use; ALL were born from some kind of struggle and sacrifice. Civilized and savage alike are all improved and moved forward through struggle and sacrifice and pain. It's the reality we live in and part of the Red Pill is about waking up to reality.

We use words like spoiled and rotten to describe children who have been given everything and have to do nothing to get it. Easy makes you diseased and gross. Easy brought us the blue pill. Try doing something hard for a change. Try doing it without complaining. Try doing it for yourself and no one else. Try doing it for more than a week.

So, if you're here and you are looking for easy, save yourself some time and get out now.

P.S. As I was writing this, another post was just removed from AskMRP from a guy who wanted his food chewed up for him and puked down his throat by the adults. STOP IT! Stop looking for shortcuts and put in some motherfucking work.
This post has been in the works for a few weeks now. The reason for this lengthy ‘write time’ is I wasn’t exactly sure how I would be able to cover the concept of ‘Politically Correct’ parenting without breaking it into a ‘series’ of sorts. I’m not a fan of series, I write about a certain topic or topics a day, and then I am off to ponder another aspect of masculinity. To write at length for multiple days on a single topic just isn’t my style. So, I had to find a way to take all of what PC parenting is and strip it down to my specific gripes and what I think parents should be doing in regards to rearing their children. I am not going to tell you how to raise your child, as a married father of two I am doing my best and giving my all, but I don’t know if my way is the ‘right’ way, I just know it’s the best way that I believe they should be raised. With that said, there may not be a ‘right’ way, but there definitely is a wrong way. Raising your children under the notion that they should be groomed for blending in with society, not making waves, and tolerating everything – thus believing in nothing is not how kids should be raised.

I have a 6 year old boy and 3 year old girl, so that is where I am coming from. For those who are ready to blast me for even suggesting parents could be doing it wrong, fire away – you’re retarded if you think there isn’t something wrong with raising a kid ‘gender neutral’.

I have had people tell me that I should enroll my daughter in football and baseball to keep her ‘well rounded’, I’m sure these people will also be sending me space camp, math prodigy, and science summer camp pamphlets for her as she gets older. My daughter loves glitter, her dolls, and all things make-up, purse, and jewelry. She is enrolled in dance/ballet and loves her tutu. Why is that a fucking problem?

Some feminists and ‘Pro Gender-Neutral’ parents have a major issue with girls being girls. As if a female, acting in accordance with her female biology is somehow selling out the entire sex and ruining the work that was put in from millions of women before her time. These feminazis tell girls to not allow ‘men’ to dictate what clothes, degrees, and jobs they should have and instead, take it upon themselves to tell the girls what clothes, degrees, and jobs they should have.

It makes no fucking sense that I should make my daughter do and play masculine activities for the sake of ‘equality’. That isn’t raising her in accordance with her wishes, which would just be me pushing the female imperative even further.

Here’s an idea, let your kid choose. Let your girl tell you if she is in to science or glitter and support her either way. Same thing with boys, my son is into sports – if he was into the clarinet I’d support that too. But there is no way in hell I’d even consider forcing him into dance in an attempt to get him to understand that it’s okay to be feminine. I will watch him and listen to him as he grows, he’ll tell me what he is into and I will ensure he puts maximum effort into that thing. But I will not use him for my personal agendas.

Read the entire article at The Family Alpha:
http://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/01/20/pc-parenting-is-straight-garbage/

Acta Non Verba, Hunter
FR: Stopping my use of the 'S' word

by AustralianArm | March 21, 2017 | Link

FR: Stopping my use of the 'S' word

Ever since finding MRP and started working my way through the sidebar, I begun to notice that was overusing the word 'sorry' when dealing with my wife. I think 'sorry' has a place in a relationship (i.e. for the big fuckups), but I let it become a meaningless word in mine.

Whenever she got pissy over some miniscule thing that I did different to the way she normally does, although it was done, or didn't put something back exactly right, but it was back, I realised my standard way of assuaging her mood was to say 'sorry'. Also, the 'sorry' seemed to be the start of my DEERing. I look back now and even I wouldn't have sex with a beta pussy like that.

So I set myself a goal for the last two weeks to not say 'sorry' for the shitty small moments and only say 'sorry' when I meant it if I fucked up big time.

Two weeks down and save for one 'sorry' on day two, I haven't said 'sorry' at all.

The one 'sorry' I did say was that I went to the shop to get some stuff and she asked for something and I said I'd get it. I completely forgot. I should have made a note, I didn't. We did have a bit of PMS fuelled tit-for-tat (previous post) but no 'sorry' in there.

It didn't take too long for the wife to change her ways from previous actions. My changing from saying 'sorry' and trying to defend myself to just owning my shit and doing what I do has reduced the number of pissy moments from her. It's as if she subconsciously knows that it won't get a reaction so doesn't even try.

The inward effect of this is that I don't feel like I'm defending myself all the time. I feel more open about what I'm doing and happier doing it. It has definitely helped lift a weight from my shoulders.

Bonus benefit is that she seems to be more cuddly (not even ovulation) and way more receptive to flirting.

I've made it through the first two weeks of this and I've set a goal for the next four weeks to do the same.

TL;DR: Stopped saying sorry and DEERing, now feeling happier
So I've been adapting to the heavy load of lifting, running and biking all week. Great habits after three months of conditioning. Now I'm increasing the intensity. Getting stronger and... Well, you know-

So Friday nights are a double load. I lift at lunch. Friday, we take kids swimming. I do a second run of lifting. Helps close off secondary muscle routines to finish my week. Problem is I'm wound up at night. Like I've had 5 coffees.

Wife is on the rag, and I'm just seething with testosterone, ready to pop. I make my move and she goes cold. I'm standing there with her tits hanging out, and she is not into it. I slowly fix them back into her brah, and smack her ass to go to bed. Wipe my hands like a dealer in black jack. I'm out.

I'm Cocky in expression. Seething inside, but also laughing at how it felt like a cartoon.

I sit and try to watch 'better call saul' but I'm just too wound up. I want to move. Tired of sitting around. And I ain't gonna fap. That shit is weak and diminishes me every time.

So I say 'fuck it' and drive downtown. Walk through a crowd of club hoping teenagers. And I feel old and rusty. I lose my nerve a block later and head back to car along another path but find a chill bar. Chillwave music. Nice. Decide to push my limits.

I'm chatting with waitress. She is pleasant. I enjoy the pretend flirting. I'm just having fun. I know this is part of her job. I tell her my mood to dance. She gets the owner over and he chats me up. Gives me his card and tells me to go to dance club next door, to explain to them that I know him and they'll take care me.

Waitress makes comment about going home soon, later I realize the way she said it, was probably an opening for me to invite her. Even if not, it would have been good practice. I'll catch that next time. Now let me be clear. I'm gaming without want to score. I'm trying to oil my rusty moves, get my alpha confidence back and grow bigger muscles to game the wife.

After enjoying social time, I head over to club. Louder than expected. It was fun. Danced. Got my rocks off. Chatted it up with guy named Tyler. Girl who dropped her ID yipyapped with me. Great practice socializing. Lots more little things. It was a lot of fun.

Next morning wife apologizes for being cold. I'm cool. I don't look to mention anything. Dunno if she even knew I went out. I'm more concerned about looking butt hurt for getting shot down. She finally asks where I went. She did hear me leave.

I tell tell her some highlights. That I had fun doing the solo things like the good old days. She laughs at my stories and their delivery. Social proofed?

She pulls a sparkle from my pillow asking me whose makeup this was. Her smirk was playful, yet sinister.

I realize that the bedroom door is closed. Her intention was privacy from the kids. She never closes it to wake me. So I tear her housecoat open. Handle her body like a chew toy and aggressively lead her to blow me. It was awesome.

I clued in later that she had woken me up with an apology instead of bitching me out for partying. 180° shift from 1 year ago, when I first swallowed.

It was the first time I went out purely for my own fun, instead of doing it to dread her. Dread was simply a byproduct. Wow.

Thanks MRP. I'm getting there.
Cure the Anger through Consistency
by Scurvemuch | December 19, 2016 | Link

This weekend, I saw a comment from /u/BluePillProfessor that truly shows one of OUR core weaknesses. I wanted to take a minute to address that.

If I sound angry then you are correct. This specific issue has kept me up at night furiously angry. Women did not tell me the truth about attraction. Women either knew they were not lying- in which case they are stupid (and I was even MORE stupid for believing them) or they were lying- in which case they are conniving, manipulative cunts. Is there a 3rd option? My wife suggests it is that women are stupid because they don't think about such things (like benefiting men) so they just say what sounds right or what makes them look good. I nodded smugly at her admission but will tell you from my perspective that doesn't cure the anger.

The bold is mine.

If we believe women to be the oldest teenage in the house, we SHOULD NOT have looked to them for answers to such questions. Since we did not understand "back then", but do understand now, we need to direct our anger appropriately. Our fathers should have told us. But they didn't. Either then also believed the lie, or they were some version of Chads, or they had a 1.0 situation. They did not tell us, because they did not think there was much to tell.

If we are to talk about women as being solipsistic creatures then we need to internalize, that for the most part, they are not lying when they speak - for the most part, they fully believe what they are saying in the moment. This is called frame Gentlemen. They Have it. You did not.

That their actions are inconsistent with their words is only more evidence of diamond level frame.

Your mother likely did not hate you enough to lie to you outright. Neither did your sister. Your first two girlfriends were probably "processing their feelings" and too busy BEING SOLIPSISTIC, and living in moment to LIE to you.

let's be consistent Either they are for the most part not that insightful and actually believe this shit they say at any given moment, or they are our betters, and have been pulling the strings. Pick one.

Do not be angry at the girls, it serves no purpose and makes it more difficult to keep the mildly worthy ones.

Use your anger in the gym, on the mat, in the bedroom, at work, or while writing your next book. Use that shit. Use it up. Let it wash Through you, and power your actions. Let it be your Nuclear Reactor rather than a Bomb that blows your life to shit.
Just a thought. Rather than being angry, or even Killing your Anger, USE your anger. Use it up. Don't you worry, there will be more.
Reflections of a semi retired musician.
by addictedtoyourface | March 27, 2017 | Link

I've been coming to MRP for almost 3 years now. I lurked the first year and never posted a thing. I did do some write ups, but never posted, either because I was chickenshit, or just didn't think they had enough value. I was in the middle of a new write up and I found an old one I never posted. I read it and felt encouraged so I decided to post it as is. I'm a musician and writing as such, but the thoughts can be applied outside music.

-Music brings the tingles. But only for so long. The other stuff still matters.

-Practice makes permanent, not perfect. If you practice something incorrectly, you will play it perfectly incorrect. Which in turns makes it even harder to learn the correct way as you now how to unlearn the bad way. Make sure you've got it right before investing hours into something.

-If you find something you love, don't give it up for anyone. I gave up my calling to sit in an office cube everyday because of a woman. Music gives me a satisfaction like nothing else on the planet. If you've found that "thing", death should be the only thing that takes it from you.

-Consistency is key. Rust is always lingering just around the corner to take the place of achievements.

-There is always someone better. Pride is dumb. Doesn't matter how good I got, there was always some new up and coming 12yr old that was 10x better. Do the best with what you've got and be content in that.

-Know your limits. This goes along with pride. This happened more as a young musician, but I'd over estimate my abilities and make a fool of myself.

-One bad performance doesn't diminish all the good ones. I've learned to not wallow in past mistakes, rather, use them as motivation for the next time.

-The rests are just as important as the notes. You can be really good and play lots of notes perfectly, but sometimes one sweet note is all you need. Life can get hectic, try not to clutter it up with too many "notes" if they're not needed.

-Doesn't matter how good you are there will always be critics. They are either right and you need to improve, or they're wrong and you need to be confident enough in your ability to not let it affect you.

-Every complicated piece is a lot of simple notes strung together.

-People are fickle. Set your expectations low.

-I never regretted a practice session. Gave up many hours of "fun" with friends in my younger years to stay at home and practice. There was never an event with the "bros" I missed out on that compares to the feeling of killing it on stage.
My wife has noticed my changes and she is supportive! Is there a book she can read that will help us both?

We get some version of this question every week and we have not had a good answer except "the Surrendered Wife" and "Fascinating Womanhood." These are great but Laura Doyle, author of the Surrendered Wife just published an exceptional book that is easily the new answer to this question.

In "First Kill All the Marriage Counselors" (FKATMC) Laura discusses "6 intimacy skills that help a woman cultivate her raw female power and femininity. Once implemented, these 6 tools let any woman easily make any husband her personal slave "devoted to delighting you."

While that might not seem like such a great thing to most of you guys who are running errands and checking off your honey-do list every day, don't bail yet. You can trust me, I'm a doctor.

First let me tell you the problem with "The Surrendered Wife." The issue is that little girly's like my wife (ball busting corporate lawyer by day) recoiled from it like Dracula to the cross. YOUGOGIRLLLZZ simply cannot read The Surrendered Wife because it advises the woman to "surrender" and give up her power.

In FKATMC, Laura focuses on the other side of the surrendering coin and does a much better job illustrating the power that surrendering brings to a woman in marriage and life.

The book basically reads like the mirror image to everything we advise on MRP. We tell men to be strong and masculine and stoic; she advises women to be vulnerable, feminine and emotional. We tell men to fight the desire to cry like a bitch or vomit your emotions; she tells women to fight the desire to be stoic and unemotional. In fact she tells women to let the tears flow like a woman if she is sad and basically look for opportunities for your husband to white knight and comfort you.

Laura reminds the womminz that more than anything you want to be desired and cherished while men are different (that right there puts this book in the top 1%) and they want "pride" and "respect" which she explains is like oxygen to men. So if you feel like crying at a movie don't fight the urge because this is the real you and because it gives your husband a chance to comfort you and make him feel proud like a respected man while it makes you feel desired and cherished. Win-Win! Just don't cry fake tears to manipulate she warns. Heh, sure Laura.

Anyway, this is the basic theme of the entire book: If you act more like a sweet, emotionally open, cute little girly, your husband will step up and start to act more like a masculine, stoic, strong man who takes care of you. The default feminine state is "receptive" and the default masculine state responds to receptivity by cherishing the receptive person.
The 6 Intimacy Tools she advocates dovetails precisely with these concepts (which again is what we do on MRP albeit from the other end- IN CASE YOU MISSED IT: POLARIZING THE YIN AND YANG OF MALE AND FEMALE SEXUALITY IS ONE OF THE MOST BASIC IDEAS OF RED PILL THEORY. On MRP we focus on polarizing masculinity while this book lets a woman polarize femininity).

She also talks quite extensively about letting go of your expectations when you do something or act in a certain way because you can't control your husbands behavior. However, you CAN control your behavior and your husband will react to that change eventually.

Now where have I heard something just like that?

Oh yes, drop the covert contracts and focus on what you can change- your behavior.

Finally, she spends plenty of ink contrasting how her(our!) methods differ from traditional Marriage Counseling, illustrating the TERRIBLE advice they give by contrasting it with her(our!) advice. I found this the most intriguing part of the book.

So the "6 Intimacy Tools" are:

1. Replenish yourself with self care: I would emphasize getting in shape more but I guess if your going for feminine you would want to avoid power lifting. The basic idea is let go of all the things you control and take time every day to do THREE self care items- she mentions pedicure, hot baths, visit to the salon, shopping, something that you want to do in the moment that you enjoy.

2. Restore Respect: The chapter titles in this section are self explanatory:
   -Your husband doesn't want your opinion: STOP NAGGING AND CRITICIZING. Trust the man you married. -Why wives cause the most divorce and what to do (hint it has something to do with criticizing, bitching, moaning and complaining) -Your husband is smarter than you think -Pretend you love him more than your children -Dishonesty is the best policy (Lie like a woman to keep the peace)

3. Relinquish control of your man: Quit expecting him to change to make you happy- YOU make you happy. Now I know I have heard that before.

4. Receive- learn to receive gracefully and with joy and your hubby is likely to start giving you more stuff. In case you were concerned, this is all a setup. The last chapter in this section explains why you should also learn to receive your husbands penis gracefully and with joy.

5. Reveal your heart: Be vulnerable, sweet, cute, and feminine.
6. Refocus your view with gratitude: Learn to be grateful with what you have instead of always flailing around trying to control everything. She does some mental backflips and she fires up the hamster so hard I thought it was going to jump out of my Kindle but basically the message is to reframe your entire life by focusing, thinking, and speaking ONLY about the positive aspects.

Stop complaining and bitching that your husband "never" does this because that is a lie. Of course he "sometimes" does it- so you saying "never" is a lie! So...if you are going to lie, then why not lie for your benefit instead of in a way that harms you. (Can you hear that hamster wheel?).

How do you lie in a way that helps you? Make up a positive reality and force yourself to talk about it!! Tell your man he is "a great husband" every day even if you have to grit your teeth because you KNOW you are lying. Never criticize or complain but instead only speak and think about positive things and she guarantees in 2 weeks you will be well on your way to having that positive life.

Feelz before Reelz indeed.

TLDR/Lessons Learned: Red Pill sexual strategy works because it is the correct way.
The first thing we tell new guys here is to STFU, start reading sidebar resources, and LIFT (not necessarily in that order). There is a good reason for all of those things separately, which have been covered repeatedly in posts here and askMRP. Today I'd like to talk to you maggots about the deeper reason those particular activities are all staples of the 'program', and what ties them all together: self-esteem.

Now, I'm not talking Stuart Smalley daily self-affirmation stuff here, and I'm certainly not giving out participation trophies. I'm talking about true, genuine positive self-concept, which has always, and can only be built on honest achievement. If you've washed up on our shores here, odds are you don't have much positive self-concept, and probably could use some basic empowering achievements.

We tell you to lift because you don't like how your body looks. You're fat, you're weak, you're unhealthy. You get winded moving furniture. You take elevators up one floor instead of the stairs. You know you should do better, and you don't. Cue bad feelings, poor self-concept.

We tell you to read because you lack the knowledge of how things are and how you should cope with that. You fail shit tests, you get taken advantage of, you are not in control of your time, of your life. Your philosophy is broken with predictably disastrous results. Cue bad feelings, poor self-concept.

We tell you to STFU because you play the victim, you overshare your fee-fees, you ruin any respect people might have had for you. As you learn, you want to get validated: Look, I'm figuring it out! Don't do that. If you do, you'll undo your progress. Cue bad feelings, poor self-concept.

I'm smiling imagining those of you who, as you read this, knee-jerk reject the whole notion. "I'm not low self-esteem! I like myself just fine, it's the World that isn't fair! It's the World that doesn't recognize my value!" Don't kid yourself. You don't have any value until you make some.

I know you have low self-esteem or you wouldn't be in the mess you're in. You wouldn't take the shit you do from your family, your boss, your friends, your WIFE. So follow the program. Get fit, get educated, and for the love of all that's unholy, STFU. Then you'll start to actually LOVE YOURSELF. The rest is just noise.

[edited for improved formatting]
Bottom line: Sex with wife sucked for years. Rollo’s concept of dread game has literally saved my marriage, but again there’s a subtle and very important distinction. When I initially conceptualized dread game it was with my wife in the center of the frame (in other words “If I use dread on the wife, she’ll want to fuck me more”). The results were meh. However, when I put MYSELF in the center of the frame as in “If I were suddenly single tomorrow how quickly could I get laid?”, the results were dramatic. The difference is this: In the first scenario I was counting on my actions causing a change in someone else (the wife). In the second scenario, my actions caused a radical change in MYSELF and in my conceptualization of myself.

Dread is not about cheating or making your wife think you are cheating. Dread is nothing more than letting her see that your life is a fun life that other women find valuable. She is welcome to follow you in it. You improve your life because you want to, not because you want her to fuck you.
Confidence and Wet Panties - My Tale so Far

by bad--apple | June 21, 2016 | Link

First, this is a brand new account. My wife has made a habit of going through my 'old' account, and I'd rather not have that happen anymore. I don't care so much about the questions, or occasional shit tests (I'm a child?!?). I care more about the loss of the mystery and mystique that can be laid bare when my wife sees the playbook. I want her to see the product, not the process. It ruins the fun for both of us.

Before the Pill

A buddy early last year introduced me to TRP and at first I thought it was because, in theory, I had a traditional view of marriage. It turns out that I was actually a sad sack. My life was riddled with covert contracts.

If I do the dishes, take out the trash, mow the lawn, AND clean the living room there's no way I don't get a blowie.

If I do the laundry, run her a bath, massage her feet, and get a babysitter for the kids then she'll have to cheer up and be nice to me.

I'm pretty sure most of what I did involved a covert contract one way or another. A lot of it was steeped in validation seeking as well. I didn't have real confidence in myself, outside of my massively bloated ego, so I pulled in validation like iron shavings to a magnet. I was such a nice guy though! I did everything I was supposed to for my wife. I put her on a golden pedestal and treated her like a goddess. Looking back, it's no wonder she treated me like a dirty peon.

She tried her best to mask that though, and I was blind to it for a long time. We would fight constantly, fuck rarely, and every day was spent walking on familiar egg shells to avoid familiar fights. It wasn't all about her, just most of it. I had a go-nowhere job that I was losing interest in. I had video games and tv shows to pull me out of the depressing world I had made for myself. Sometimes I would be productive and read a book, but that was happening less and less.

Fitness? What fitness? I was skinny fat. I had love handles and was getting a gut, but I was still "skinny". I was told that I was "filling out" and that I looked good. Bullshit, even I knew I was getting ugly. I started doing a little cardio, but that was it. "Muscle men" tended to be dicks anyway, and that wasn't me.
A New Start?

When I found out what a shit test was, I was enlightened. It’s not like my eyes were suddenly opened, or like this new idea was pretty cool. It was monk-setting-himself-on-fire inspiration. I practiced A&A which came pretty naturally, after the first few days. I’m a sarcastic guy with a dry sense of humor as it is already. My favorite joke will always be a pun. A&A is my forte, and it works so well. After seeing some progress, I hurried back to TRP and devoured as much information as I could. I came across MRP and saw some guys that actually meant business. I picked up NMMNG and read it like a madman. Then the next book. I was basically reading a collection of advice my grandfather had given me over the years, without the Disney-tainted nonsense. Happy wife = happy life reversed. I started doing things for myself. I practiced saying no. I bought a weight bench, dumbbells, etc and started working out a few days a week. I went from skinny fat to fit and stronger. I’m not huge yet, but I have much more muscle, broader shoulders, a chest that's shaping into a barrel, etc.

I was still an egotistical, validation-seeking twit, but I was improving. My wife's attitude started turning around too. She was happier, stopped drinking so much, stopped saying "ILYBINILWY" types of things, and it was nice. I stepped it up more and more with working out, improving my life, and started to look at myself more critically. My ego was shrinking, my confidence growing, and my wife found my reddit account-

That was a record scratch. I was maybe 5 months into it when she first found out about fight club. I left it up on my computer, and she read it. And read it. And read it. Boy, when I got home I had some 'splaining to do! I was nervous as shit. I had read warnings about not letting the wife see anything here, that it's welcoming shit tests, etc. Over the course of that month I found that the more I addressed (read: validated) her concerns, the worse her attitude was. The more I fogged and joked it off, the better her attitude was. It was like she was waiting for my cue as to what to act like. Should she be a harpy? Or a happy wife? Fuck- I was getting a dose of the leader/submissive wife dynamic. I was becoming a container that she could conform to.

The more I improved, the better I looked, the smaller my ego became, the more we fucked. I started getting unsolicited blow jobs. I would be starting a bench workout and she would pull my shorts down, straddle, and ride as I did a set. It was like she took some magic always-wet pill and I had more sex than I knew what to do with. I remember reading field reports here, and on TRP, about this very thing and thinking they were full of shit. Some of them probably still were, but not all of them. That was now apparent.

Today

I still have work to do. A lot of work. A lifetime of work. I'm happier now though. I feel better. Stronger, and confident. I'm working on leaving my job now for something new and better. I have an interview next week, and I've been testing for the last two months now. My wife and I have frequent sex, though of course it could always be more frequent, and better. She's becoming a very good, peaceful wife. We're filling the leader/submissive marriage paradigm out nicely. She started working out and eating right after seeing the progress I was making.

Of course, this is only a condensed version of my story. I didn't talk about how angry I was, how helpless I felt at times, or how depressed I was when I found out that she couldn't love me the way I love her. I didn't talk about how I went from focusing on her to just on myself—that part is in the books. The only reason my life is better now, the only reason I'm happy now, is because I put in the work. I logged the hours, and put in every effort.

I read the material. I read the posts. I read the books. I reread. I practiced what they said. I reread. I practiced and I read. Practice makes perfect, and reading hones the practice. Lifting helped give me a more patient and stoic attitude. Reading the posts and comments here nearly every day helped me stay grounded and focused in what I was doing. I still have an ego. I still need a better social circle. I still need to improve certain hobbies. I'm nowhere near perfect, but I'm happy. And I'm confident that my life now is a better one, and that I'll be even happier 5 years from now.

If you're not sure if the red pill is right for you, if it will "work", you need to remember one thing. You are working for yourself, building a better man. Don't do any of this to make a woman happy. Don't do it to impress all the internet alphas. Do it because you want to be a better man, and live a better life. Or don't and be a faggot. It's up to you.
Institutionalized: Emasculated men NEED their walls - unless they KNOW they have a lifeline.

by TheFamilyAlpha | April 11, 2016 | Link

If you’ve ever seen the movie Shawshank Redemption then you probably remember the old librarian (Brooks) who is set free after spending 50 years of his life behind bars. I won’t rehash the entire scene, but basically he is released into a world that is so foreign to him that it might as well be another planet. At one point he says, “I saw an automobile once when I was a kid, but now they’re everywhere.” This translates to the same path that is walked by the man who has been plugged in from birth. This ‘man’ - from his very first fucking breath - has been shoved into a prison of the mind. This prison was created by those who support the female imperative; I’ve said it before and I will say it again, it isn’t women who caused this mess – it’s the white knight weaksauce fucks looking to gain favor…but I digress, this post isn’t about blame – it’s about understanding.

Each brick in the wall that contains this man is an example of repressed masculinity. A brick was placed when he was taught that women and children are the ones who should be saved. A brick was laid when he was told that being active, competitive, and aggressive were inherently wrong. A brick was laid when he repressed his urge to say that men were stronger than women when he was in health class through school. A brick was laid when he was told women loved him the way he loved them and that they were somehow pure creatures while he was a dirty sexual barbarian, etc.

Brick by brick this man was contained until there was no longer a man, but a creature that depended on the walls. Someone who adapted to the prison and accepted the prison as his home. He finds himself safe in their - comfortable with what is given to him and never breaking the rules for fear of being ‘punished’.

This picture paints the life and death of the ‘plugged in’ man. It captures the emasculated individual who has no idea that he may never reach his full potential nor obtain a quality of life that is full of the joy that comes with expressed masculinity. This man doesn’t even realize he’s imprisoned -- and this is where you will run into an issue if you present the truth.

The example of Brooks applies again when thinking of plugged in men who are exposed to the harsh truth of reality (i.e The Red Pill) whether this is through another man, the betrayal of a woman, or an event that leads to a level of introspection never before attained.

Brooks, when discovering that his parole was approved and he was being released from the prison (truth was exposed) he almost kills another inmate (who was a friend) in an attempt to stay inside the comfort and safety of the walls.

Plugged in men will lash out at the world, especially at those who are threatening to remove them from the system they have come to rely on.

These men are institutionalized, they need the institution for safety, support, and that welcome pat on the back saying – everything is fine and reality is the way you want it to be.

As a masculine man – you are the guy that a plugged in dude is going to kill in order to stay inside. Why do you think white knights exist? They try to gain favor with the guards (women) in order to achieve status ‘in the prison’ – to get preferential treatment from the guards (drip feed sex, status of being a ‘nice guy’, being liked by the masses). These guys don’t even recognize that the fear they experience when facing reality and finding an out of the prison should be used as fuel, not as an anchor towards achieving freedom.

Escaping the prison is swallowing the pill; it is choosing red over blue and embracing the brutality of reality vice the comfort of the lie. Masculine men find comfort in the discomfort and embrace the challenge which they have been presented.

Unfortunately, a majority of those who leave the prison, discover the truth, end up taking the path that Brooks chose (Suicide). They find they are too afraid and are too weak to live in the ‘real world’ so they take their own life. In the movie, Brooks hangs himself because he simply can’t find a reason to go on; the truth kills him, reality wins.

This is the reason so many men are killing themselves, suicide seems more enticing and ‘easier’ than accepting their years of weak behavior, their missed opportunities, the biological programming of women that they refused to recognize and applying it all towards improving and succeeding as a masculine male. Too many men are angry at the world for lying to them and they cannot find a way to take that anger and channel it towards driving the ‘self’ to thriving in this ‘new’ world.

Gentlemen, I’m telling you, it is only when you break out of the cookie cut mold (prison) you’ve been forced into that you are going to find the joy that comes from living life as a masculine male in a weaksauce society. The anger dissipates when you accept that people are who they are and that women are just doing what they are programmed to do. If you’re angry, let it be at the white knights and even then, use that disgust as a reminder of whom you were and why you broke free. You don’t control them, you control you – so make yourself be the best ‘self’ you can.

You are armed with the knowledge - now you need to take it and apply it to your life. Don’t spend all of your time looking at the examples that confirm your ‘RP’ truths – you don’t sit around dropping shit on the floor proving gravity is still in effect do you? Instead, take your knowledge and use it to advance yourself. You can achieve the greatest of heights if you are willing to get over being slighted and just get to work.

Remember you need to find joy in the moment and through the process of living, if you don’t let go of the past and don’t let go of your anger at reality – it will kill you.

Next I will write about the men who KNOW they have a lifeline or Why Morgan Freeman lives.
My first comfort test that I knew was real
by bogeyd6 | June 24, 2015 | Link

Last couple of days from my wife has basically been a sex fest and us pleasing each other. Yesterday she was a bit tired and stressed and I passed every single last shit test. Some of the shit tests included when I asked her to put a hot dog bun on a napkin instead of the dirty table we have been packing all night on. She told me I know how to fucking handle hotdogs, I handle yours just fine don't I. In the most shittiest of tones you can believe. I just laughed and told her she was so cute when she gets mad. Now here is where I practice my Amused Apprenticerly (Not yet master)

Her: Why are you laughing, dont laugh at me. Im pissed.

Me: You get so cute when you are mad, you get that little wrinkle in your nose. (smiling the whole time and being playful)

Her: You never take me seriously anymore, Im pissed, and you should blah blah (im tuning her out at this point)

Me: That's whatever you were talking about for ya.

Her: This is fucking bull shit (proceeds to stomp out of the room)

Old beta me would have followed and apologized profusely. Held frame, sat and finished my meal. Went back to packing boxes and then it is time to go to my step-sons house and install closet organizers. Car ride there she is pretty cold, 15 minutes we arrive at the house in complete silence. She then reaches over to me and grabs my hand. Apologizes, and then I start giving her attention again. Still with the shit tests all night. Play them all seemingly perfectly. I have become Neo and I dont even need to try to dodge them anymore.

Last night I went to sleep before her, which is abnormal, and I think her hamster went into overtime. She asks me if I am going to bed, and I respond stoically that "No, I am going to sleep". We both get in bed and I just roll over immediately and try to go to sleep. Some minutes of silence and she scooches over and asks for a hug and cuddling. Says she didn't get get a good night kiss. Give her hug, peck on the forehead, and say good night princess. Immediately roll back over and go to sleep.

Fast forward to the next morning and she wakes up and cuddles me in bed. I have to use the bathroom so after like 10 seconds I just get up and go. Make coffee and etc... When I am done with my shower and shave I come out and hand her a pen and paper. Finally doing what I should have done two months ago. I tell her to write down the username and password to the online bank account we share. Also, I want her phone account login information. She dutifully agrees and writes down the information. She comes out to the kitchen where I am reading hardware advertisements.

Immediately she launches into is there something wrong. I just grab her hands and say no dear, since I am going to pay more of the bills I need the information to do that. She keeps asking if something is wrong and I just smile and say no. Maybe after 3 minutes of this back and forth she bursts into outright crying. Asking me not to leave her and stuff like this. I only reply "I gave you clear boundaries on our condition for divorce, if you didn't do anything then why are you worried?". (NMMNG) She then tells me exactly "You are in charge now and you make the rules, and I am scared you will change the rules." Again, I go to "Are you 100% clear on the boundaries" (WISNIFG, broken record) and she says "Yes sir." (had to stifle a moment of pride) Literally said almost no more than this. She is just staring me in the eyes and crying and crying for maybe 2 minutes. I grab her by the hips and roughly pull her in for a super passionate kiss. She goes to rub my chest, I grab her by the arm and push her towards the bedroom. Lets go. She is basically skipping to the bedroom and starts to just give me a blowjob with her clothes on. I stop her and tell her to remove her bra and shirt. She responds yes sir and does it. Then halfway through I tell her I want to fuck. I flip her over onto her back and just yank her pj's off her. I proceed to pound her as mercilessly as I can. She comments that I should be proud of how wet she is by giving a blowjob. My back hurts a little bit this morning after that viscousness too, but not telling her that.

You know what? She stopped crying and being insecure. She saw that for once I really was the oak tree. She gave me the respect that I showed, not told her, that I deserve. Actions not words. She agreed to my leadership without even being asked. She has gleefully accepted her role as the first officer. My situation was helped by a woman who prefers that and actually wanted it without knowing it. Over the years when she told me that pounding her was her favorite, I kept trying to make love slowly. When she told me she didn't want me to help her while she ranted about this or that, I kept trying to help. When she goes into super hardcore bitch mode, she actually prefers that she gets her space rather than me offering every kind of help I can. She didn't like getting flowers and gifts at work, and now when I drop off a redbull and skittles I get a blowjob that night.

Try as I might, i still run into issues of recognizing the comfort tests. I am working out regularly, taking taking time for my hobbies. NMMNG helped me learn that I don't have to please other people for them to want to please me. It's like crack to my wife. The more I maintain my assertiveness the more its like crystal. The more I maintain frame the more she respects. WISNIFG is teaching me how to be assertive and early on in the book it said people only have so many no's and that is very true.
Glossary of Notes to Increase Lifts: The Squat

by NeoTheJuanDJ | August 27, 2019 | Link

In case anybody gives a fuck, here’s a couple of tricks that I have learned over the years to increase your squat:

Assistance Exercises to Improve Squat:

- Single - Leg Box Step-Ups (Gluteus Medius development to help keep knees out when driving out of the bottom)
- Pause Squats (develops ability to drive out of the bottom of the squat with no “bounce reflex”, it is upon pure nervous system strength to produce the inertia to squat-out aka making it harder so the “real thing” is easier)
- Alternating Barbell Lunges (develops glutes, core and outer-quads to improve balance and strength for the squat)
- Front-Rack Holds (120% + of 1RM Back Squat.. develops the nervous system by introducing an unfamiliar amount of weight previously never exposed to so it can adapt. Basically telling your body this will be my one rep max soon, so prepare bitch!)
- Thoracic-Extension Mobility Exercises (poor thoracic Extension is the hidden secret of many a’failed squats and deadlifts)
- Hip and Hamstring Mobility (better positioning, more stability, better power output, better lifts)
- Ankle Mobility (see above)

Mental Cues of the squat:

The key to a stronger squat is a combination of strength, positioning, and timing. You want to initiate the squat by first keeping your core tight, spinal neutral. You then want to initiate the eccentric portion of the movement (the negative) by bending at the knees AND the hips, simultaneously (initiating one before the other sacrifices positioning, and ultimately power output) with a neutral spine. As you lower, keep your knees-out, bracing your core, maintaining a neutral spine, staying on your heels (not the mid foot or balls of your feet. This will ensure you recruit a balance of hamstring, glute, and quad activation as you drive out of the bottom). Keeping your spine neutral and as vertical to the floor as possible, staying on the heels, you want to slowly lower into the bottom of the squat. As you reach the bottom of the squat, you want to keep your knees out, keep your core tight, chest up high (thoracic Extension), and when you get to the bottom you want to feel like as if you are sitting on your hamstrings, don’t sit too far back (spinal curve and loss of position), or too far forward (hard on knees), you want to find a mid-way point where you are balanced, spine vertical and neutral, eyes looking forward, knees out, staying on heels, and sitting on your hamstrings. Then, as you drive out of the bottom, you want to reverse-engineer exactly what you did for eccentric portion, now for the concentric portion. Keep the knees out, stay on your heels, drive through the bar using your quads, hamstrings, while keeping your spine neutral and vertical to the floor. As you drive through the sticking point, be sure to keep your elbows at your sides (do not flair your elbows backwards and over activate the lats, rather keep them tucked at your sides), drive through the bar, keeping knees out and stay on your heels, with a neutral spine until lockout.

Reasons why you may be failing and how to improve:

Positioning and timing are important factors in the squat, but you also want the strength to be able to do so under maximal load. As with all kinetic chains, there is always a weak point and the squat is no exception. If you struggle with keeping your knees out while coming out of the bottom, your glutes may be weak. If you struggle with the “sticking point” (aka the half-way point of the concentric portion coming out of the bottom of the squat), your quads may be weak, if you are all over the place and not “solid” or steady throughout any portion of the squat, you probably have a weak core and/or hips and need to strengthen those to improve. Also, keep in mind that doing mobility work to improve thoracic extension, hip and ankle mobility, and core strength - will basically guarantee you lift more weight, because instead of wasting energy by fighting to stay in proper position, you’ll instead be in proper position and using all of that energy to focus on maximal power output through the kinetic chain. Again, these are common points where guys hit plateaus, and how they can overcome them with the squat. Will post again next week with the deadlift.
I am writer and creator of www.bodylanguageproject.com. This is an abridged version of a longer article I compiled on nonverbal cues indicating ovulation (link at bottom).

If you are interested in material like this, please let me know and I can add more - even present some of the research (I have buckets of it). To find citations and more detail follow the links below. Feel free to x-post this to the main reddit as I am not an active contributor (but regular reader) and therefore it would not pass moderation. If you think this sucks and isn't helpful, then just downvote it and I will go away! I read here often and use it to tweak my views and also produce material that will HELP men (and woman) make their lives work better - and mine too...obviously.

Whether you are with a LTR or aiming for a short term hook-up, reading these signals and understanding what they mean is key to getting correct results.

For years, it was argued that ovulation was “hidden” or at best “concealed”, because women, unlike animals, do not covertly advertise ovulation. However, upon closer inspection, it has been found that many signals are significantly correlated to ovulation in women.

Women who are ovulating show a greater desire for sex. Additionally, and contrary to common belief, there is a noticeable difference between women in their non-reproductive phases of their cycle, versus those in their peak fertility, as we will see. While men are always fertile (and have a steady state of mind and action), woman cycle in terms of fertility and therefore so does their (nonverbal) behaviour.

Understanding the differences can be particularly beneficial for couples trying to successfully conceive, but also for men seeking particularly willing sexual partners. Peak fertility in women bolsters sexual desire. Women at peak fertility make themselves more attractive to desirable men (more prosocial - less argumentative i.e. more nice).

As we will discuss, this signals happen naturally, but only if women are cycling naturally - without hormonal contraceptives – thus for some, these traits must be done consciously so as to appeal to men they wish to attract.

As a general rule, peak fertility occurs around the center of the menstrual cycle – at around day 15 on a 30 day cycle. Absent visible cues, you could simple estimate that ovulation occurs 15 after the first onset of menses (the first day of her period). The 12-15 day are key fertility days, after those days, she is significantly less likely to be fertile and thus, nonverbal fertility signals will decline or even become absent (such as in an LTR). Keep in mind that these are ways that she signals sexual receptivity. While humans can have sex year-round, the most intense drive for sex in women, occurs, at around peak fertility at ovulation [note: women have sex for more reasons than just to get pregnant, but we have no time to discuss this here].

Interestingly, the rules of fertility and the symptoms that indicate it are not followed as rigorously in women taking hormonal contraceptives. When women take oral contraceptives, the artificial hormones trick her body into a state it believes is perpetually pregnant. She will tend to still be relatively attracted to her mate, but she won’t lust for him in the same way she would if she was undergoing a natural cycle. This will flatten out the cycle or make it less (or sometimes) more apparent - women react differently to artificial hormones. I highly recommend using the copper IUD to actually see a more natural cycle when in a LTR.

The Comprehensive List Of Female Sexual Cues To Ovulation Appearance Changes During Ovulation (14 Changes)

Women who are in peak fertility:

1. Reported engaging in greater appearance-related product (Saad and Stenstrom, 2009).
2. Do more self-grooming and ornamentation such as jewelry (Martie G et. al., 2007).
3. Preferred clothing that is more revealing and sexy rather than conservative (Durante, Griskevicius, Hill, Perilloux, and Li, 2011) especially when they were attending discotheques away from their partners (Grammer, Renninger, and Fischer, 2004).
4. Have an increased desire to wear revealing clothing (Durante et al., 2008; Grammer, Renninger, and Fischer, 2004).
5. Have a tendency to wear clothing that leads women to be judged as trying to look more attractive (Haselton et al., 2007).
6. Showed more skin (Haselton, Mortezaie, Pillsworth, Bleske, and Frederick 2007).
8. Are more likely to wear red or pink at peak fertility (Alec T. Beall and Jessica L. Tracy.
9. Spend more time putting on makeup and makeup artists evaluated their level of use to be higher and of better quality. (Nicolas Guéguen, 2012).
10. Tend to be rated as more attractive even if they had no make-up applied (Puts et al., 2013; Roberts et al., 2004).
11. Dress more fashionably (Haselton et al., 2007).
12. Report a desire to purchase and wear sexier clothing when imagining attending a social gathering at which they might meet men (Durante et al., 2011).
13. Have improved facial skin tone, vocal pitch, body symmetry, and waist-to-hip ratio (Kirchengast and Gartner, 2002; Manning et al., 1996; Pipitone and Gallup, 2008; Roberts et al., 2004).
14. Have a more attractive face shape, an “ovulating shape” which is rated be men as being more attractive, healthy, sexy, sociable, trustworthy, young, and likeable than luteal faces (Oberzaucher et al., 2012).

Behavioural Changes During Ovulation (11 Changes)

Women who are in peak fertility:

1. Have an increase in female sexual function congruence with rising free and total testosterone (Salonia et al., 2008).
2. Seek men out to have sex with them as the result of subconscious desire (Haselton and Gangestad, 2006).
3. Report greater interest in activities associated with finding and attracting new romantic partners, such as attending social gatherings (Haselton and Gangestad, 2006).
4. Report feeling more attractive themselves, have more interest in attending events where they might meet men and experience more mate guarding by their partner (Haselton et al., 2006).
5. Tend to flirt with men other than their primary partner (Gangestad et al., 2002; Haselton and Gangestad, 2006).
6. Experience increase in libido and sexual interest and attraction towards potential mates (Jones et al., 2008).
7. Are more likely to provide a phone number to a prospective male (Gueguen, 2009).
8. Report an increase in sexual self-stimulation, overall sexual desire, and number of sexual fantasies (Bullivant et al., 2004; Harvey, 1987; Regan, 1996).
9. Tend to become more interpersonally warm during periods of high fertility (Markey, 2011).
10. Have walking styles that becomes more feminine (Grammer et al., 2003) and fertile women tended to walk more slowly and for longer periods of time in front of men (Guéguen, 2012).
Mate Preferences Changes During Ovulation (13 Changes) Women who are in peak fertility:

1. Prefer men who are physically attractive (Gangestad et al., 2007).
2. Find men more attractive if they have markers of high health and masculinity (Penton-Voak and Perrett, 2000).
3. Have a preference for men’s traits, including facial masculinity (Johnston et al., 2001; Little et al., 2008; Penton-Voak and Perrett, 2000; Penton-Voak et al., 1999; Peters, Simmons, and Rhodes, 2009; Scarbrough and Johnston, 2005; Roney and Simmons 2008; Welling et al., 2007)
4. Prefer masculine body shapes i.e. muscularity (Little et al., 2007; Peters et al., 2009).
5. Prefer men who are tall (Pawlowski and Jasienska, 2005).
6. Prefer voices with masculine characteristics (e.g., lower pitch) (Feinberg et al., 2006; Puts, 2005).
7. Prefer the odor of masculine men (Grammer, 1993; Havlicek et al., 2005).
8. Find various nonphysical traits, such as dominant and intrasexually competitive behavior attractive in men (Gangestad et al., 2004; Gangestad et al., 2007; Lukaszewski and Roney, 2009; Havlicek, et al., 2005).
9. Found men who were seen to be confrontational with other men, arrogant, muscular, physically attractive, and socially respected to be attractive (Gangestad et al., 2004).
11. Find men attractive who are social dominant and have social presence (Gangestad and Thornhill, 1998; Havlicek et. al, 2005; Rikowski and Grammer, 1999; Thornhill and Gangestad, 1999; Thornhill et al., 2003),
12. Prefer men who are or appear to be creative and intelligent, though results in this regard are mixed (Haselton and Miller, 2006).
13. Use more derogating of other women’s physical attractiveness and are less likely to share monetary rewards with other women than they are during periods of low fertility (Fisher, 2004).

How Men View Women During Ovulation (2 Known Changes) Women who are in peak fertility:

1. Are rated as smelling better by men and are accurately discriminated between women’s high- and low-fertility scent samples (Kelly A. Gildersleeve et al., 2012).
2. Tend to be rated by men for certain characteristics of women (e.g., their scent, their voice, their face) as most attractive during periods of peak fertility (Pipitone and Gallup, 2008; Roberts et al., 2004; Thornhill et al., 2003).
See part I (the preamble):

http://bodylanguageproject.com/articles/part-i-40-signals-that-a-woman-is-sexually-fertile-how-high-fertility-around-ovulation-affects-nonverbal-behaviour/

Part II (the nonverbal signals of ovulation):

http://bodylanguageproject.com/articles/part-ii-40-signals-that-a-woman-is-sexually-fertile-how-high-fertility-around-ovulation-affects-nonverbal-behaviour/

EDIT: formatting
Finally talked to my wife about our finances. It went a lot better than expected.

by bikemike45 | January 14, 2016 | Link

Summary: Spent a few weeks creating a budget for my household. It's done, I reviewed it with my wife, and the results are extremely positive.

Body:

I was a drunk sailor for a while. I am four to five months in now and have my shit in order. Killing it at work, getting super strong and defined (keto diet in case you're wondering and PHUL workout), made two new guy friends and continue to expand my network, etc. Things are getting better across the board, even my relationship with my wife.

One are that was sucking was finances. We had pooled our money but then separated it after we couldn't figure out who paid what yet overdrew our account. My wife's family is better off than mine so naturally I thought she'd be good with money.....I was wrong. Then, I managed my credit cards and let her managed hers. Once the sailor sobered up I found 30k in credit card debt. It sucks, but we are high earners so I am not too worried about it. The debt was incurred by both of us and even if it is one-sided, that shit is on me for falling asleep at the wheel.

First thing I did was asked her to get all of her account information to me: checking, savings, retirement, credit cards (with balance, minimum payments, interest rates). I asked her to make a list of her monthly recurring expenses. Then I asked her what her goals were with money (I shared mine with her). With that info I made a budget for us. Boy was it a pain in the fucking ass. I must have spent 20+ hours on this. Just tracking everything down, setting up spreadsheets, etc. Huge pain in the ass.

I showed her our new budget. She said she was confused by it and I made it simple. "the number at the bottom of the page is how much money we have left over after fixed expenses, goals, unplanned expenses, and flexible spending". The number was negative at first, but will be positive after a few tweaks.

The first immediate change I saw, without me mentioning it, was she started making a food menu for our dinners and cooking for me almost every night (she used to never cook). No more wasting $100 a week on take out. She got recipes, groceries, and even cooked me enough for lunch. Secondly, she hasn't used her credit card once. I know her, this is incredibly difficult for her.

Second thing is that she got a second job. She already works full-time but has downtime at her work. She found a job she can do remotely and whenever, bringing in an extra 1.5k a month. I was impressed by this.

Some things I pointed out to her:
1. How much I make vs how much she makes (I'm almost 70% more).

2. We are paying for stuff 50-50 going forward (I was paying her share and she was using the extra $$ for clothes and shit).

3. We are paying like $700 a month just in interest. That is two car payments. She agreed that this was bull shit and is motivated to pay this off asap.

4. If you want something, you need to budget it. Don't keep just buying shit on a whim.

I was expecting this to be way worse. I think she feels reassured by my leadership, hence the desire to make changes. I am going to meet with her like once a week or once every two weeks to check-in and make sure the budgeting is working for us. Eventually, I am sure it will become somewhat second nature to both of us.

I'm happy to share any of the nitty gritty budgeting stuff I am using if anyone is interested.
So often we see a post on r/askMRP where someone really has a skewed vision on DNGAF. Almost as if "not giving a fuck" means "not caring about anything". Sure sometimes you actually don't care, but other times you should. If your response to "then she gave her # to Chad at the gym..." is "...it pissed me off, but I was pretty NGAF", that's fucked up.

My wife is scrubbing the kitchen sink and says to me "When you do the dishes, do you mind cleaning the fuckin sink while you're at it?". I'm not going to say "I did the dishes in the 5 extra minutes I had this morning before I ran out the door to work because I thought it would be nice to wake up to an empty dishwasher and also now there is a possibility you'll load the mother fucker!". I won't do her the favor of a DEER. Maybe a little AA/AM, but chances are I'll just STFU because IDGAF.

Now we have company over and she says "I swear drty just can't wash the sink after he is done doing the dishes! It's like he enjoys the sink being dirty." She has crossed a boundry and I give a fuck.

I could have said "I wash the sink enough. I'm often busy AF so sometimes getting the dishwasher full is all I have time for. How come you never empty the recycling and let it pile up til its falling all over the fuckin place?!" Again, this is showing her that her opinions affect my frame and effectively pulls me into hers.

I simply said in friendly, stoic, matter-of-fact way "You will not berate me in front of company like that or else", then hold the stare. The girls thought "drty is a fuckin asshole" and the guys thought "fuck I wish I wasn't such a pussy"

In that situation IGAF about the transgression. What IDGAF about is what people think of my reaction.

Or we are having drinks with some friends and a buddies wife won't stop shitting on him. I'd say something along the lines of "Would you mind waiting til you get home to treat Bob like shit? We are having a good time and it's bringing us down". My time is precious and wasting it listening to some harpy ain't happening.

Here again IGAF about her ruining my fun. What IDGAF about is what people think about my actions.

In both situations, it's quite possible that they become confrontational. If that happens, deal with it.

Both examples I used were of women, but you should talk to everyone like this. (Excluding actual authority. Ie: police, bosses, someone holding a gun in your face)

I also love this comment by u/screechhater
It's sad that we live in a society where far to many men are scared to say what they think. It starts from boys spending too much time with mom, to boys being corrupted by a fem-centric educational system, to what's being forced down our throats by the media, to finally what your wife let's you say.

I say FUCK THAT! Don't be afraid to ruffle a few feathers to get what you want. It's good to GAF about things that bother you. You'll see as you start to do this, two things happen.

1. You get what you want more. Instead of waiting for people to get better, you force them to or you remove them.
2. People respect you more. Everyone likes people who say it how it is, or at least how they see it.

So in closing, don't be afraid to GAF, so long as you have the frame to back it up.
Can you be alone?
by AustralianArm | November 3, 2017 | Link

"I think it’s very healthy to spend time alone. You need to know how to be alone and not be defined by another person." — Olivia Wilde

Before finding MRP, in your deadbedroom blue-pill marriages, many of you probably felt more alone than you have in your life even though you were still surrounded by people.

Have you ever been truly alone?

But have you ever actually been alone? No one to talk to, no Facebook/Twitter/email to keep you occupied, no gaming consoles, etc.?

In this modern age, we seem to be always surrounded by ways to connect to people, ironically so it seems as many of us have forgotten how to interact with people. So what happens when you disconnect from everyone and everything?

Could you do it?

Soon after discovering MRP and beginning of my unplugging, I found myself with a weekend where my wife and kid were away and I was at home alone. Holy crap was I lost. It took me 1/2 day to realise it, but I felt like I needed people to be around to validate who I was. If that had happened before I would have rushed off to the gaming console for some harpy and guilt free shoot-em-ups, parked in front of the TV watching something dumb or been trolling Facebook to see what everyone else was doing.

Instead, I set about finishing a few unfinished projects, took care of some home maintenance, read a couple of books from the sidebar, lifted, listened to some of my favourite music loud, cooked up a couple of great dinners, enjoyed a few quiet scotches on the porch and just found time to rediscover what being alone was about. Although, I still felt that need to game/Facebook/etc that I didn't indulge.

That weekend is the moment I realised that I wasn't living a life for me and that MRP is definitely the truth. I need to fix myself before I fuck up everything in my life completely. And fixing myself wasn't going to happen if I had no clue who I was.

Make it happen

If you can't spend time alone with only you as your company, you're not living the life you want.

Make it part of your MAP to spend time alone. Truly alone. Benefits of alone time:

- Decision making
• Trust in yourself

• Getting stuff done

• Enjoying a hobby

• Time of introspection

• Sparks your creativity

• Consume the sidebar in peace

• Become your own source of validation

And most importantly...

• You get to spend quality time with someone awesome
During the Epiphany Phase a woman plays a complex game of internalized mental gymnastics. Her hindbrain understands that her sexual market value has been decaying for at least a couple of years prior to this conscious recognition of it. The enjoyment of the Party Years has to be weighed against the fact that she’s progressively losing the attention of the men she would like to have ‘enthusiastic’ validational sex with, and the necessity of a long-term security with a long-term partner. Thus, the rationalization engine kicks into overdrive. She must convince herself that the less exciting (arousing) but better provisioning guy who’s happy to have her at 30 represents the type of guy she ‘should’ have been with all along.

This is a self-bullshitting contrivance of course, but in her mind the guy who she’s marrying or pairing long term with must be an example of a ‘good prospect’. This is when she does the self-conditioning of turning her necessity into a virtue. She was “so crazy in college, but now she’s matured and not like that anymore.” Or she’s “Getting right with God” or she’s “Learned her lesson in dating banging those Bad Boys” who’ve characterized her intimate life up until this point.

Those are the easy self-contrivances; what’s more difficult is convincing her hindbrain (that desperately wants the exciting validational sex with the Bad Boy) that the unexciting ‘Good Guy’ is really what’s best for her. This is where women like to rearrange what’s really important to them in a man.

This is the internal conflict that takes place in the Epiphany Phase, but what happens to the woman who never gets to consolidate on the ‘Good Guy’? For a variety of reasons (mostly overvalued evaluation of their SMV) more and more women find themselves ‘never marrieds’ and/or they follow the timeline in Preventive Medicine and find themselves divorced of their own doing. In either case, women still work through a similar series of self-rationalizations with respect to what they’re looking for, and what they feel they are entitled to, in a man around 38 to 45, sometimes as late as 50.

And this is where the Red Pill feeds that female entitlement schema. The logic goes like this:

If I’m a Red Pill woman and I agree with all of these Red Pill men who, despite all my misgivings, align with my (self-defined and sanitized) definition of what it means to be “red pill”, then these men owe it to me to unplug from their Blue Pill delusions and see me for the jewel in the rough that I really am.
I think the time a woman is most likely to discover she’s a “Red Pill Woman” is conveniently at the point in her life when she’s at her most necessitous. You will almost never find a girl of 22 who’d want to identify as a Trad-Con “Red Pill” woman – the incentives to do so simply don’t exist at this age. The fact that it is predominantly Traditional Conservative women who are either just pre-Wall or post-Wall, single-mothers, never married spinsters, divorcés or married-to-lesser-Betas who wish to redefine ‘Red Pill’ to use as a litmus test for the type of men they believe they’re entitled to is no coincidence.

Message to the ladies: Men don’t owe you shit. If you happen upon a man who shares your entitlement belief-set, a man willing to forgive your past indiscretions and marry you despite a ruthless marriage/divorce industrial complex arrayed against him, then thank whatever God you pray to and fuck that guy’s brains out to keep him happy, but don’t pretend it’s because either you or he is “Red Pill”. The fact that he would entertain the idea of a relationship with you disqualifies him from being “Red Pill”.

If you find yourself single, never-married at 38 and it “just never worked out for you” it’s time you look past your solipsism and find some real introspect. The problem begins and ends with you.
First Major Victory

by | April 24, 2015 | Link

I know newbs are not supposed to post much, and I have been posting a lot, but I just had my first major breakthrough last night. I actually fucked my wife last night after 12+ months of nothing since our son was born....and not starfish sex or caveman sex...passionate, hour-long sex at 3:00am (and with mother-in-law sleeping in the next room).

I will try to give the short version. I had to work late. Go to gym, grab a beer (bar next to gym) and come home about 1:00. Wife is upset and tries to pick an argument. She then started prodding about all my "new behavior." I did not mention TRP or any specific books. I simply told her I was working on a self-improvement plan and then basically laid out TRP principles--confidence, physique, leadership, and said there are going to be a lot of changes and I am working on being a better man and husband.

I go to get ready for bed. Throughout the day, I had been sending her sexts and suggestive e-mails. I manage to get her in the closet, force her to the ground, and go down on her. She is close to finishing, and then forces me to stop and brings up "the cheating incident." I told her I did not want to speak about it anymore. She persisted. I gave in (but for a reason), and said "last time" and then we are done. I used this opportunity to basically tell her fuck me or fuck you, but not so bluntly. I flat out said not having sex for a year is not acceptable, that men have needs, that I was tired of wacking off to porntube. Talked about marriage vows, mentioned other opportunities I successfully resisted before last week, etc. etc....[yes, I talked too much....but I was trying to get the point across without making her cry]

I walked away and proceeded to take a cold shower. She came in after me (naked--hasn't done that in forever) and started talking about how she needs flowers and romance, etc., etc. to "be in the mood." I said "No. that's what you think you want. What you NEED is a strong man that will fuck your brains out." She then started to guilt me again about "the incident", saying how she doesn't think I like her anymore. I simply responded: "I want to fuck my wife." Finally, I said: "look, do you like my cock inside you or not." She says: "its not that simple." I said: "actually, yes it is."

Get out of shower and proceed to go to bed [showing O.I.]. She follows and keeps shit testing me. I ignored most of it and occasionally would respond: "I want to fuck my wife." By 3:00 a.m. I was ready to call it quits when she suddenly leans over and kisses me. I tell her I am not interested in duty or guilt sex and would just rather go to sleep. She says: "I want you to fuck me."

An hour of the most passionate sex we have had (even better than our wedding night) ensues. I think we actually woke up my mother in law, as I heard her moving about. Shit didn't matter. It was my house and I was fucking my wife.

Fellas, I know I have a heck of a long way to go.....but after 12 months of nothing...W.O.W. This shit DOES work.
This is an old-ish concept that died out for some unknown and probably retarded reason. Guys, we are primarily visual and kinesthetic learners, so this mental image will help you fight off the very real but invisible evil that exists, whose purpose it is to beat you back into subservience to the feminine imperative, and whose primary residence is right atop your shoulder, whispering delicate morsels of comfort and mediocrity into your vulnerable ear.

The Beta Shit Goblin (BSG™), a.k.a. Shoulder Devil

He's always got a spot there. Just behind your ears, so close it sounds like he's inside, so automatic you could swear he was pulling physical strings.

It's ok if you skip leg day.

Don't be the jerk who refuses the birthday cake.

You should apologize. Look, you hurt her feelings.

Don't ask for a raise. You know how tight the budget is this year.

It's dangerous to start a business with no safety net.

Don't go against the flow. People might judge you.

You are loved just the way you are.

No one likes an asshole.

If you offended people, you probably shouldn't have said it.

How dare you approach a woman when you're married.

That EC doesn't know the fuck he's talking about.

Wife is stressed. Quick! Wash the dishes and stay out of the way!

You need other people to support your decisions.

She's different.

(Am I missing any big ones?)

You'll never completely get rid of him, because he is the yin to the yang of the Red Pill. I'm no psychologist, but I'll bet my classic car that your BSG was breathed into life by your mother when you were a wee lad. That voice ain't going anywhere for awhile because she formed our world. We believed her, assuming she had our best interest in mind. Rarely is the BSG shocking or offensive. Most of the time it appears concerned, wanting to keep us "safe" or "dignified" or "nice". Like a mother would.

(This is why I believe precious few women aren't at least somewhat narcissistic and vicariously living through their children, and its up to us fathers to mitigate that. That's another topic.)

To the dismay of the BSG, we learned here at MRP that we are alone, that the world doesn't care about us or want us to succeed. In fact, if we continue listening to the BSG we will be eaten alive by it. The BSG really wants us meek, timid, weak & sensitive, because it serves the feminine imperative.

How to fight it?

u/jacktenofhearts 's message is both descriptive and prescriptive:

- Imagining our insecurities as an external force like this is good because it allows to deal with it as such. The Beta Shit-Goblin isn't us. It's not even part of us. It's this little fucker clinging on to us. There's nothing stopping us from just outright ignoring him, or at least putting earplugs in to mitigate. No one else is paying attention to him; why should we? And when we really get strong enough, we can shrug him off no matter how deep his little gross infected nails dig into our skin.

Because most mothers consciously only want the best for their kids, it is futile for us to rage against that. This is a lesson I am struggling with right now as I am trying to let go of my resentment for my childhood. She probably did the best she can, considering that she was my dad's "oldest teenager" trying to raise me. And sure, its unfortunate that I turned out the way I did and that I can't change anything about it now. Or is it? What am I going to do with that BSG my mom made for me? What potential can I reach if I learn how to destroy him daily?

Ignore it, use Red Pill reason against it, fight it tooth and nail, kill it with the fire of righteous indignation... All of the above if needed, whenever needed. We are in constant battle. After we have post a successful FR on MRP and get our collective man juices all over the thread, we think we've wiped him off our backs for awhile and can bask in the glory of our strength until the next "shit test".

Bullshit, he's not the shit tester, women are. He's coming back, sneakier this time, and weakening you, drop by drop. When that shit test hits, you'll be shocked to find that your strength has left you and your guard has dropped. Guess what? BSG been whispering in your ear for awhile, and you've let off the gas.

You've fucked the girl of your dreams, or gotten your wife to do anal. How to keep from getting starry eyed from that expert hypnotist whispering behind your back? Fuck ten more like her, and next time try ATM. Always advance, never stop improving, develop the irrational self-confidence so you can ignore those lies that little fucker tries to make you swallow.
TL;DR: Fuck the Beta Shit Goblin. Learn to identify him, then kill him at least once daily.

The Tale of Two Wolves
Where was MPR 16yrs ago?
by crimson_chris | July 12, 2016 | Link

So this will be a quick introductory post as I navigate my way through MRP.

Quick Background

- Married 16yrs
- Met wife in college
- Two kids (4 and 6)
- Overall marriage is good (lots of bumps but overall good)
- I grew up in a single family home | mom was great but no positive male role model (aka prime environment for a beta bitch).

So, I have been lurking around on MRP for about a year and have been applying the principles on and off. Recently I have decided to make more of an effort - and it has really paid off. We are both a lot happier with less arguments and more sex. What's really crazy is that now that I am buying into MRP I see where my wife has been asking me to be a better man throughout our marriage but I was a blind bluepill beta bitch (more on that in another post).

For this quick entry I just want to provide a quick minor example of how applying some simple MRP principles can do wonders. So for the last couple of months the sex life has been a bit off. We were averaging about once a week. Not being in my MRP frame of mind, I decided to communicate to my wife about the frequency of our sex life. When I brought it up she started complaining about the last time I "left her" (I came before her). I told her that maybe if I had sex more than once a week maybe I could last longer (this was all a pretty light and humorous conversation). She actually said that was a fair comment (what?). So I proposed that Wednesday should be our nookie night with optional Fri/Sat/Sun for weekend sex. So the goal was to set a minimum threshold - not a maximum. She agreed - nice! I know that appointment sex is not the hottest thing - but I am working on making it fun (theme nights, games and shit like that).

This was going okay for a couple of months. For the most part sex was good - but not the dirty hot sex that I wanted. So some things went down and I started doing a better job or applying the MRP principles. I started owning my shit. Got stuff done around the house without being asked. Started picking up after myself and made sure the house was spic and span, taking care of finances, fixing shit - not in exchange for sex, but because it was the right thing to do. When my wife hit me with some shit test and just crazy woman shit - what did I do? Escalate or STFU (depending on the situation). During sex, I stopped asking and just started doing - and would you believe it, for 90% of the time she followed my lead (bj's, positions we had not done in a long time). Sex got a lot hotter and dirtier - but will go into that later. Another tidbit is that when we started having the sex twice a week talk - she started telling me that her libido was lower and her orgasms were getting weaker. Really? Since I have been applying MRP she is hornier than ever and I swear the last time we had sex she came so hard I could barely keep my dick in her since her pussy was contracting so hard.
(had not felt that in forever). So - not every case, but low libido and weak orgasms - it is most likely really a lack of desire (thanks MRP).

The biggest change for me with intimacy with the wife had been Kino. I used to always get those little fucking pecks on the lips as I leave for work - which I hate. I have hated those "cousin" kisses she'd give me as I leave for work forever, but never did anything. So one day after reading MRP @ KINO I just gave her this deep 10 second kiss, grabbed her by the back of her neck and held her there - she was taken aback (but in a good way). It took a couple of weeks, but she got on the kissing program - long and soft as I leave for work. Now, I am touching her at various points during the day. Patting her butt, holding her hand - rubbing her back. One day she asked me " are you a horny teenager again or something" - I just looked at her stoically (STFU) - and then she says "I like it".

Wow just realizing I have so much to tell, but I will get to the point here. Last week we missed out on our appointed sex on Wednesday and the weekend (it was a health issue) - so we ended up having sex the next Friday morning (pretty good, but nothing crazy - i just wanted to fool around in bed but she ended up taking her bottoms off, so I obliged). So on Saturday around 11am I kiss her and tell her that I am going to give her a massage tonight and then ravage her. She replies "I am tired and have a lot to do - tomorrow honey". I am like WTF? You know at 11am this morning that you will be too tired for sex tonight? Now I probably should have dialed it back a bit to build up the desire - but things had been going so well (with sex and everything else) I did not expect to get rejected with a hard no (and had not had one in sooo long). It was really unexpected. So, while I was not 100% OI - I did decide that I had better things to do and I 'd do those things instead of paying attention to her.

I got shit done around the house. Went grocery shopping (I am the better cook and buy my own shit) and bought some ribs to bbq (which I promised my daughter to cook). I read some magazines that had been piling up, and went bike riding with my son. I did not ignore my wife but I made every interaction as minimal as possible. She asked "how's your brother", and I replied "good". That was basically the type convo's we had for the rest of the day. Also, I found any excuse to do something outside of her presence (whether it was manning the bbq outside or doing something in another room).

So after we get the kids to bed we are sitting on the couch about to do some binge watching. We are sitting on opposite ends of the couch - again, very minimal convo (not being a dick, but not giving her attention). What do you know...she leans in and starts to tickle me (she never fucking does that!). She says "What's wrong grumpy" i move away and she leans in to keep tickling me. Then she ask "can I still have that massage tonight?". I say "sure". So after we are done watching tv we head to the bedroom. She strips down to her panties (a pretty good sign she plans on getting some) - I give her a long massage (which I love to do) and sex is had. What's also key to note is that I can't remember the last time we had sex two days in a row - Friday and Saturday (I know it's sad, but married 16yrs and two young kids).

Before MRP - shit would have erupted when she turned me down that morning for sex that night. I have a long way to go with MRP, but just with few simple insights, I know what my wife really wants and how to make sure we both have a happy ending. This MRP stuff is fucking awesome. More to come.
FR:Lifting is paying off
by gettingmymojoback | October 30, 2016 | Link

So, just want to add a quick update on the last week or so. It seems like the last 4 months of HARD work in the gym is really starting to pay off dividends. I've been getting more and more comments from friends, family and coworker etc about what is now very noticeable changes in my physical appearance. It definitely helps the motivation in the gym when one of your wife's hot young friends notices and says "damn, you're looking GOOD".

Went out with the wife, some close friends and younger family members recently and all the females were commenting to my wife on how much better I looked. I could practically see the hamster take off when one of them actually said to her, "he's looking FINE tonight, you'd better fuck him later". Considering that 6 months ago not a single one of them ever noticed me physically, and now they were pretty much all commenting that she was lucky to get the chance to fuck me later.

So we all head out and get VERY drunk and have a VERY late night. For most normal people drunk wife = getting lucky, not my wife. For her getting drunk would normally lead to a very early preemptive NO before she'd even finish undressing just in case I wasn't sure. Usually a laundry list of "I'm too drunk, the room is spinning, I'll get sick....etc. etc.", we've all heard the excuses.

NOT. THIS. TIME.!

Despite being VERY drunk, she came at me like a lion looking at a wounded gazelle as soon as we hit the bedroom. Truthfully I wasn't planning on NO being an option, and I had already whispered that in her ear when we were out and I was grabbing her ass, "no is not an option tonight", to which she just smiled and kissed me passionately. Based on her past track record I wasn't expecting much.

BUT, all the alcohol on both our parts led to a fantastic, long, hard, passionate fuck....something she normally would have been complaining about 4 short months ago. Now she was actively encouraging me to keep going harder. I feel like regular BJ's are just a few more months away as my BF% keeps dropping.

Amazing what just a few months of hard work in the iron temple and some new clothes can do for a man.

TLDR: Lift, eat clean, and never skip leg day.
FR - Leave Then - 15 months
by FossilGuy16 | July 23, 2018 | Link

That last 15 months have been bumpy at times and I haven't totally followed the steps of dread, rather implementing the steps (often out of order) when I feel they are right in my journey. I am 38 - an 8 at this point. Wife is 41 and a 6-7. 2 kids.

Lifts - Due to knee injury, DL and Squats are 2 months old - DL - 1X320, Sq - 5x185, BP - 8x165, OP 5x115.

Sidebar - Read entire sidebar, NMMNGX2. Started a book club and have been reading other books with men for last 4 months. Currently reading My Secret Garden - a book sharing different women's fantasies.

Coming off a busy week where my kids showed sheep at a fair, my neighbour and I were putting the sheep back in their pens in the pouring rain. I came into the house dripping and my wife asked me to feed the dog as I came in the house. I replied 'no' and went to dry off and change clothes.

The next day we are packing up to leave on a camping holiday and I can see my wife is pissed, I carry on getting everything ready. When we get in the vehicle and leave, I ask her how many days I can expect of her being pissy. She starts ranting how I was so rude the night before about feeding the dog - normally I would laugh or ignore, but this time I went back at her and asked what kind of wife asks her husband to feed the dog when he comes inside dripping wet. This sets her off and she starts wondering why we are going on vacation together and then further why we are even together if we don't like each other. I say only 2 words - Leave Then. She doesn't say any more and the 5 hour drive is pretty quiet.

Nothing happens that night, but the following night I escalate after the kids are in bed and we have the most enthusiastic sex we have had in months. The night after I tell her a modified fantasy from the book I am reading and we have great sex again.

Everyone always talks about the changes take time and the 1,000ft rope with the wife, but there is more to it than that. It has taken a long time for the changes to fully take effect in me. A major change crystallized in my mentally when I uttered the words - leave then. I have taken over the family and am acting like it - she couldn't fully respond to this until I fully embodied it.

I still remember being petrified in the first 6 months that my wife would leave me - having built myself up physically and mentally over the last 15 months, I no longer have this concern and know I have a great life in front of me either way. I also know that at this point, she won't.
The Existential Fear - Men
by Rollo-Tomassi | March 20, 2019 | Link

Essay:
https://therationalmale.com/2019/03/20/the-existential-fear-men/

Excerpt:

Patriarchy & Monogamy

Socially enforced monogamy was the least barbaric of those compromises, but in this century destroying that monogamy has been a priority for the Feminine Imperative. In theory, socially enforced monogamy was the most beneficial mating strategy for largest number of (low SMV) men to solve their reproductive problem. But the fact remained that it was still an exercise of control over women’s Hypergamous natures. In essence, monogamy worked for men, and it was beneficial as a compromise in parental investment for women, but it also assumed direct control over women’s sexual selection process.

Patriarchy and monogamy answered a woman’s Hypergamous doubt for her, and that is the crux of women’s Existential Fear - to have the control of her Hypergamy, her selection process, and ultimately the cost associated with that choice determined for her. This fear is exactly why the primary goal of feminism has always been the maximal unlimiting of women’s sexuality and the maximal restricting of men’s sexuality. It seeks to replace the social-scale compromise of the Cardinal Rule of Sexual Strategies with the total capitulation of the male strategy. Today, the Gynocracy has achieved this almost entirely.

But for one sex’s strategy to succeed, the other’s must be compromised or abandoned. For a gynocentric social order, only men’s abandonment of their own strategy is acceptable – and this abandonment insists men deny the evolved imperative of their own Existential Fear - insisting on paternity.

In the evolved scheme of things men’s reproductive best interest involves sacrifices. When a man commits to parental investment with a woman he takes on sunk cost risks. The time he spends investing himself committed to one woman and the children they produce comes at the cost of reproductive opportunities with other women. Women’s sexual strategy necessitates he compromise or abandon his biological imperative. Naturally, both men and women have adapted ways to circumvent monogamy to optimize their sexual strategies (infidelity, short-term breeding schema), but the basic equation is the same; if a man is invested in one woman it limits him from seeking other (potentially better) reproductive opportunities. If you want to know why Plate Theory irks women so much look no further.

The only way this compromise of sexual strategy can be advantageous to men is if he can be relatively assured that the child he’s raising is his own. This is where men’s Existential Fear of paternity fraud begins. He cedes his own strategy and the sunk opportunity cost for reproduction in exchange for the certainty that he’s invested in a child that bears his name and his blood.

I call this men’s Existential Fear because denying men the certainty of paternity presents the same existential anxieties as a woman’s control of Hypergamous doubt taken from her. Women fear the idea of being forced to birth and raise the child of a suboptimal man not of her choosing, while men fear the idea of being deceived into raising a child not of their own genetic lineage. And until the advent of DNA testing only a woman could be certain that the child was her own.

This is root level stuff here. So important was the determination of paternity for men that an obsessive concern for it was written into our mental firmware. The risks of falling for paternity deception was that important, and the men who evolved this compulsion were selected-for. The reason we Mate Guard, the reason our hindbrains default to jealous suspicions, the reason we cannot bear the thought of another man mating with our woman is rooted in the fear of investing ourselves in a child not our own.

In the previous essay I mentioned the natural revulsion response humans have towards things that are inherently harmful to us. A reservation or revulsion of snakes, spiders, feces, rot and necrosis are part of the evolved firmware we’re born with. I would also argue that the revulsion women feel towards “creepy” (low SMV, Beta) men and the revulsion men feel towards “slutty” women is part of this. Both these revulsions are adaptational protections against our respective Existential Fears. Each represents our Instinctual Interpretive Process letting us know what our ancestors had to avoid.
[removed]
Operating at level 8 24/7/365
by red-sfpplus | September 5, 2017 | Link

Had a few large life changes over the past six months. I went from a home office/travel role at my firm to an 8-5 desk job with little to no travel. I have greatly increased my lifting as well during this time as the consistency the 8-5 job give me.

I am up, and out of the house every day by 6am. Most days I am home by 4:30, collect the kids and go to their practices where I am coaching them in either softball or baseball (see last week’s post). My wife helps with softball, but not baseball practice. We each handle our own shit 90% of the time, so I have no major complaint areas.

I operate at dread level 8 all the time. I do not actively game women, as it is just second nature. I have no issues talking to women in public, 1:1, with the wife around. It doesn’t matter. I game my wife non-stop. I get numbers from women, but never follow up, or give out my number or contact info. I have no need for any of that.

I know my wife is on a 1000-foot rope, but it’s been a few months and some of her behavior is starting to cause me to pause and asses the health of her hamster. A couple times over the recent weeks she has told me that “she never sees me anymore.” Yes, it is true, I am spending more hours away from home than previously, as I am either at the office, gym or practice, whereas before when I didn’t travel I worked from home and would regularly see her at least a few week days a week, in addition to the weekend. My feelings here, is that she is still adjusting to the new schedule and availability, and while we do spend plenty of time together in the evening, and obviously the weekend it is less than before. Perhaps up the comfort, or just let it fix itself?

Per my previous post, as head coach I am in communication with at least 20 different moms a week, many of which are single/divorced. Any time my phone alerts lately the comment from my wife is “which one of the moms is hitting on you now?” They have absolutely no shame in approaching me, touching my arms or outright flirting with me at practice, even when my wife is present (however never when she is directly around). I do not overtly flirt with them, but I am naturally fun to be around and they see me Kino my wife so they know what is up, however it doesn’t stop them.

This past weekend when I was sending out e-mail updates on practices and schedules for games this week my wife wanted to look at my phone, after I had been texting one of my workout buddies about something completely random. I honestly do not care, so I handed it to her and she proceeded to spend about 15 minutes reading every single text message I had on there from parents about their kids.

Once I realized what was up, I pulled some AM and told her I have already deleted all the nudes except for hers, and she wasn’t going to find anything with a grin on my face, to which I got ZERO response on – which is expert level for her. So, I just brushed it off and went about my businesses of smoking some ribs.
My plan on all this, is to honestly not do anything and just let her work it out for herself. This is new a behavior from her which I find partially amusing, but at the same time if I am missing something obvious or need to address sooner rather than later I am all ears.
Knowing When To Take A Knee
by HunterDrewTFA | July 5, 2019 | Link

This has nothing to do with Colon Kaepernick

Instead, I'd like to talk about knowing when to sit out of the Reindeer Games.

As men, we have an innate desire to compete, to be in the mix, and to simply lead things. For myself yesterday highlighted this, around 4th of July I'm expected to lead the party, get crazy with Patriotic Fire Water, and ultimately be the guy making sure everyone else is at that same operating level.

This year I didn't; this year I enjoyed the day with my family and let others go to town on Beer Pong, rocking out to the music, launching fireworks, and getting loud and crazy.

I had nothing to prove, even though I was asked to join I didn't want to. I knew I had a Morning Brew to run the next day and it was hot as fuck, so I didn't want to have my body absorbing alcohol just so I could feel like shit today.

You need to know, you don't have to be "that guy" at the party, even if it's the role you've filled for years. For those unable to expand on this yourself, what I'm saying applies beyond the realm of house parties; your job, family day to day living, your hobbies - there's a time to push to the brink and make sure you're leading the charge and there's a time to sit back and let others run the show while you take a knee.

So long as you aren't pouting about it, this does not compromise your ability to lead and thus your wife will not be wondering what's wrong with you. Make sure you aren't forcing yourself to be "that guy" lest you burn out and become the guy who "used to" be able to hang.

Intentional breaks and breakdowns are not the same.
PS: Things have changed both layout and content wise, I look forward to getting involved with this group again. A lot of solid work is happening inside these walls.
Quick FR: She Doesn't Love You
by RP_SuitScholar | October 31, 2016 | Link

Refresher

Just a quick example of female psychology. So the wife and I are sitting on the couch enjoying some wine and watching Westworld last night. We attended a sexy Halloween party on Saturday. So anyways, we are sitting on the couch and she is on her tablet looking at Facebook, specifically the pictures she uploaded of us. As she reads the comments and takes in the "Likes" she squeals to herself, "God I love us!"

I just chuckle to myself. Gentlemen, she doesn't love me, and your lady doesn't love you, at least not like you love her. Women love how you make them feel, they love how your relationship appears to the general public, they love the relationship not the man. That is why your value to her only stretches as far as the relationship you create around her. You don't get a pass for being an uninteresting fat twat, because she doesn't unconditionally love you like Mommy. She loves what you bring (experiences, feelz, etc.), and if you don't bring it then she will look elsewhere. Hell, sometimes she will do that anyway, you never know when Chad will come a callin'.

Iron Rule of Tomassi #6 Women are utterly incapable of loving a man in the way that a man expects to be loved.

TLDR;; LIFT
When I found MRP just over a year ago, I hadn't had any sexual contact with my wife for three months and even then nothing too great for years. You can read about it in my first OYS, but she initially got heavy dread from finding MMSLP lying around and we had a fuckfest for a while right afterwards. My journal notes from a year ago today:

"Got a blowjob again last night and today was even more. After the kids opened their xmas gifts this morning, they started playing a video game from Santa. As they were absorbed in the game, I started messing around with her on the couch. I had to leave with the kids in ~5 minutes to go to a family event so I figured this would just be a little fun and maybe get her warmed up for later. Instead, after about the 3rd push-pull, she says, "do you want to leave the kids here and go upstairs?" 5 min later, I'm upstairs getting another blowjob (my dick has literally been out of her mouth for a matter of hours at this point). Wanting to give back and also redeem a little for not fucking her hard two nights ago (which she seemed to want), I bent her over and went in hard and rough doggie style. It was a great pounding and she loved it. Then I pushed her down on her stomach so I was literally on top of her, all over her. From there, I grabbed her hair rough with one hand and her throat with the other and wailed on her until I came (very hard and unfortunately VERY fast). There was no time to do anything else - I had to leave for the family event. Afterwards she seemed to want way more and complained of being horny now. I laughed and told her we'll pick it up later tonight. Can't. Fucking. Wait.

Evening update: Well that went great, yet again. After the kids went to bed, I went down on her right away and she loved it. Then she gave me amazing oral yet again and I finished by doing her missionary. Pounded her hard and rough again, this time with her sucking two of my fingers (which drove me nuts) and yet again she loved it. Need to learn how to last longer but other than that, things are amazing right now. I never knew this woman had it in her. My god does she. I feel like her libido is higher than mine at times now. Unreal. Awesome, but unreal."

Eventually the dread wore off and she settled into duty sex (mostly BJs). Frequent duty, but still duty. Got a BJ today but man everything has been dialed back from where we were a year ago. Her finding MMSLP was a temporary acceleration; a glimpse at what might be with any woman regardless of where you are at right now. Despite the setback, I've gotten better in every way.

Women will find the minimum it takes to keep you and hold it right there. That minimum has been raised significantly for me compared to where I started. but it's still not where I'd like to be and it's nowhere near where it could be.
The best damn gift I ever received was finding this forum. It taught me that the best part of being a man is you have the potential to get better every day. Increase your SMV, your abilities and your enjoyment of life every damn day. It's amazing and almost devastating to those trying to keep up with you. Here's to another year of constant progress with OI.
Used Simple Kino, Got Shower Sex
by | September 21, 2015 | Link

[deleted]
Climbing out of the Rabbit hole.

by TheFamilyAlpha | May 22, 2016 | Link

In my last post several users got into a discussion over an array of topics ranging from endorsement of marriage to my rage on the 'DadBod'.

Discussion is good, a problem with discussions online is that when a user stops commenting it means they have run out of words to say, that was not the case.

/u/RedPillSchool and /u/Adderallabuse (not sure if same guy from what I've seen) cannot fathom a man saying his marriage works. To the point that any time it is mentioned, they just fucking pop up to push the message that masculine men should not say they believe marriage can work because that means other men might get married.

Guess What? Other men can do whatever the fuck they want and some of them might end up in an awesome marriage that lasts to the end of their days.

TRP supports monogamy - good to go. I am married and while I am fully aware of the risks and how stacked against men the laws can be, I know a man can make it work.

Something that I couldn't let go unanswered was when /u/Adderallabuse said - "Third, let's be frank. This was an easy win. The concept of FAMILYALPHA is a pipe dream. He, you, and me. Not alpha. More like learned alpha. Alphas in the wild don't play house"

It was his comment about it being an 'easy win' that struck a chord. Obviously I'm competitive so there is that aspect to it but on a deeper level, there is no 'winning' here.

The goal is to help all of those men who have fallen victim to the female imperative. I don't 'win' by getting views on my blog, upvotes, or being recognized as a respected contributor to 'The Manosphere'.

The only victory comes from other men embracing their masculine nature. Fuck anything aside from that. I do not care if you are married, spinning plates, leading your LTR, want children or don't - none of that matters so long as you are doing this as a man who embraces his masculine nature.

And /u/BluePillProfessor said "He made an argument, held frame, stuck to logic (mostly) and most important, he won the argument. This is no ordinary troll."

What the fuck BPP? Neither of these gentlemen (or 1 dude) contribute to MRP. I see them in my posts and that is most likely due to the fact that I refuse submission to their agenda. Why would users, who only come into this subreddit to combat support of marriage be given any special treatment?

They are nothing more than ordinary trolls. RPS does NOT have the license/copyright/official stance of all things RedPill
I like RPS in the sense that he is an intelligent dude who wants men to remain men. The problem with this is that I am a man and I am saying I want the same thing and the division occurs when I say Masculine men are responsible for their actions and RPS says 'RedPill' men do this or that. There are no 'RedPill' men as 'RedPill' is a fucking tool to be used whereas masculinity is the nature from which all things a man does is (should be) derived.

A man can use the Red Pill to help break from the mold that the female imperative have placed him in, but once he sees the harsh reality of the world, he should then choose to not place himself inside the mold TRP has created.

- I write for the men who repress their sexuality and physical desires.

- I write for the men who have been raised by weak men or women who did not push them to test their bodies and instead allowed their youth to be nothing more than comfort and unlimited access to food and sedentary activities - accumulating things instead of experiences.

- I write for ME and my desire to help those men. I want to find the lions and run with them, when I realized that there weren't many lions, I decided it was time to help create some. Masculine men who push themselves and in turn push me. Iron sharpens Iron.

- I write to provide another resource, another drop in the flood of embraced masculinity. I do not write for MRP or TRP I write for the men who are a part of these groups. If MRP or TRP were to disappear or were to change their goals and take another path, I'd continue to write as my goal is to reach the guys who need the info inside these subreddits.

- Most importantly I write for the men who fucking hate themselves. They hate that the have to repress who they are, they hate that they did not receive the prize that was promised if they acted and played a certain role their whole life, they hate reminiscing on all of the lost opportunities to live in accordance with their desire out of fear of being ostracized or ridiculed. Men have died by the thousands because they fucking hate who they are because they feel they aren't supposed to think and act that way. These men drive me, because these men suffer due to someone trying to gain favor with women. I write because the white knights don't stop and nobody is telling these men how to stop hating themselves and to embrace and release their true masculine nature.

To /u/Adderallabuse - Men don't play house. Leave that to the children. The Family Alpha is the man who maintains responsibility for leading his LTR, wife, or wife and children.

Of course it can be done, it's been done for thousands of years - the only problem we face now is that the whole fucking world went 'PC' and it resulted in several generations of men who have repressed their true nature. Afraid to show aggression, competitiveness, sexual desire, anything other than being a 'Nice Guy'.

---

www.TheRedArchive.com
Something else that I wanted to share.

I try to remain as open as possible with myself, my life, my marriage, etc so you can see and feel as though you are dealing with a 'real' fucking dude.

I'm not a bot nor am I some neckbeard in a basement who created this reality. I share with you my life and I fucking hate not using my real name.

/u/IrateMD made the comment, "Life-changing decisions can mess with you. You left a world with clarity of purpose and were trying to find your way. It's easy to find yourself acting out of character. Now the decision is made and you only have to wait."

He was right, I've been dealing with some shit in my life. Since my business trip a month ago I haven't felt the same as I once did.

I had considered just deleting the blog and my username on reddit, I considered just putting it away, and I considered making a 'good bye' post on reddit then only using the blog from time to time.

I chose a completely different path and sporadically posted and made this post which I've reread and recognize my 'flow' is not the same, my verbiage is different - I wasn't me I was distracted and unsure as to where I was going with anything. My writing has not flown from me as confidently and I wasn't sure why.

irateMD's response helped align a few things for me and it sort of 'clicked'. I was forcing it, I was going through change and instead of embracing that change - I was trying to make things the way they were (not very masculine).

I've embraced the change and felt a weight lift from my mind - this is why I remain on MRP and this is why I will keep writing.

Masculine men helping one another. Men choosing to be honest and direct with other guys, unfortunately this doesn't occur too often in the 'real world' but on these sites we can get that help and then go back to owning our shit in our lives.

To prevent any questions or conspiracies - I de-modded myself.

I recognized that my mission and my vision are separate from that of the 'Red Pill' brand. The guy who took the mod spot is /u/stonepim破裂ists and they couldn't have made a better choice, even though he is just a metrosexual fuck who hung out on a ship in the navy - catching a tan and traveling while the rest of us fucking worked.

I will continue to post, respond, and blog and I look forward to the growth of this sub and the increasing population of men who are embracing their masculinity and finding comfort in the discomfort of the harsh reality in which we are living.

Remember: Acta, Non Verba
I posted about a month ago asking about how to handle a sex coupon my LTR gave me.

original: http://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/2x0ne3/sex_coupons/

I thought I would share how it played out and an important insight that I had after reading some of the comments you guys had posted. All of which were very helpful to me.

After reading through the comments I was in a state of mind where I didn't even want to have sex, I just needed to reevaluate where I was in life and how I had gotten there. Many of the comments were very helpful ideas and tips that I have been using since, and many others were difficult truths that I hadn't fully accepted.

My gf came home shortly after, complained of feeling ill and went to bed without mentioning the coupon. I stayed up and thought long and hard about the kind of person I was and the kind of person I wanted to be and what went wrong along the way. I was especially frustrated because I had been trying to be the "Red Pill Man" for about 5 months and saw little to no real change in the dynamic of our relationship or her attitude towards me. I was the most depressed I had been in a long time. It was at that point I realized that all this depression and negativity I had been feeling was because, despite implementing OI, passing shit tests, getting in better shape...etc, I was doing all of these things to make my gf like me more when I should have been doing them for myself and no one else.

This realization got me thinking about the past 10 years. After swallowing the pill, I had been dwelling so much on how much of a blue pill pussy I had been in my relationship with my gf, that I had completely forgotten all the awesome "alpha-ness" that existed outside of the relationship. I spent too much time worrying about if what I was saying was beta or alpha, if it would turn her on if I passed this shit test, if it would make up for some beta bullshit I had done 3, 5 or 6 years ago. Just like that all of the alpha moments from my life came pouring back into my memory and I was filled with an old confidence I thought I would have to rebuild from scratch.

I remembered girls who had shown obvious interest in me, but that I had turned down because I was a loyal and devoted boyfriend, despite them being much more attractive than my gf. I remembered the two girls that offered me a threesome, that I again turned down. All of the girls with boyfriends or husbands that openly flirted with me in front of them. While thinking about this I didn't dwell on the blue pill response I had, but the fact that I was and still am, an awesome guy that girls want. Even two girls at once. While those two girls were probably 4's or 5's at best, a threesome with two 4's is still better than duty sex with a 7.

At this point I said "fuck this coupon bullshit". Not from a place of anger at my gf, or even a place of anger at all, just because I realized I didn't need a coupon to get laid, and it was a good feeling, I had a smile on my face. The next day all I could think about was all of the cool alpha stuff I had done in the past. I sent my gf a text telling her I was coming home for lunch.
and to be naked and have a sandwich ready for me. She responded with "we'll see". I didn't say anything back because it didn't matter to me anymore. Sex or no sex, I knew I was awesome and becoming more awesome every day and her turning me down wouldn't change that.

I came home and she was just getting out of the shower and putting lotion on. I was checking her out for a minute and she says "can I help you?", I said "we'll see" and I picked her up and carried her into the bedroom and fucked her brains out. I didn't worry about making her feel good, or using any of the SGM techniques I had read about earlier that day, I just had my way with her because I knew I could. I then got up, got dressed and asked her if she had my sandwich ready. She said not yet but she would do it right now. I hung out in the kitchen eating an apple while she made the sandwich and she asked if I liked it when she made me food naked, and told me she would have to do it more often. The "old" me from the day before, despite having taken the red pill months earlier, would have sent that text with a nervous energy, then spent the rest of the afternoon thinking of witty things to say in response to her shit tests or whatever she wanted to throw at me. Letting that go has helped me tremendously. She hasn't mentioned the coupon since but I still have it. I'm going to take the advice of one of the comment's and bring it out at an inappropriate time just to fuck with her. It will be fun. Maybe at her families Easter party or something.

Since then I make it a point to think about alpha instead of beta things I have done in the past, while continuing to improve myself daily. I have gotten sex or a bj almost everyday since then, all while spending less time planning responses for shit tests or thinking about how i'm going to act "alpha" when I see her later. There have been times where I actually turned her down for sex after being too tired from the gym. I can't remember the last time I turned her down before that.

Many will ask why I am still in this relationship, not being married and having nothing to lose with a girlfriend who seems to have given up. My gf has many positive traits, she hates feminism, believes in traditional gender roles and is submissive when she has a strong man to submit too. She gave up on me only because I gave up on myself. I don't want to spin plates, I want a solid family and a happy relationship in which we are both fulfilled, and the red pill has helped me understand how to achieve that, but I had to find myself again first.
Modern Day Agoge: A man’s path to raising a masculine son in a feminized society

by TheFamilyAlpha | September 7, 2016 | Link

Read the entire article @ TheFamilyAlpha:

I've always been a fan of historical warriors – then the movie 300 came out and it planted the seed in my mind that someday I would have to raise the next warrior.

The movie came out in 2006. I had just graduated boot camp, and I felt like I could single handedly take on the world. I had finished my Rite of Passage into manhood and was now on my own, in the best shape of my life, and fucking motivated as all hell. I was radiating limitless energy & confidence; basically I was like every other masculine 19 year old that just entered the military.

I distinctly remember watching the movie in A school and discussing with a friend the scene where the boys enter Agoge. I told them that at the age of 7, my son would begin his Rite of Passage.

Fast Forward 3 years - The little man turned 7 last week and it has begun.

I Color Coded the days to make it easy

The calendar we have (you can see on the blog) is color coordinated (with some help from his 4yo sister) to show what days we are training each topics.

I do not homeschool my kid, yet I educate him enough that it may as well be considered homeschooling.

I feel that as a parent it is your responsibility to foster the mental and physical growth of your child, because it is your child. Teachers are on a budget, limited to a certain amount of time/curriculum, and they teach a class that is geared towards the female student population.

Nobody is going to invest more time or energy into my kids than me. While the teacher educates them on how to pass a test, I will educate them on how to learn, how to improve their thinking, and educate them on topics that will help with life and not just a test.

Because of this I have broken down his education to:

Philosophy

Teaching him to actually think and not just memorize. To question the fundamentals of life and get to the why he is doing what he does.
Boys need to expand their mind, have those deep discussions and ponderings. I used to think that philosophers were pussies who stayed in the city while real warriors went out to fight. This shitty preconceived notion came from the fact that my dad never taught me a thing about philosophy or the badass philosophers whose were written down and passed on through the ages.

I missed out on Socrates, Aristotle, Plato, Seneca, Descartes, Locke, and Epictetus plus many more until I was 28 – my son will not have to wait so long.

Art

Getting the boyo to appreciate the beauty of reading, writing, painting, woodworking, cooking, etc. My wife will be involved with this as she has a very artistic personality. The kid needs to recognize that he does not have to rely on ‘mommy’ to make him a fancy meal as he ages.

He will not rely on getting a girlfriend in order to eat a quality meal at home. Too few men are capable in the kitchen. My wife loves to cook and does it 90% of them time, but we both know that if I wanted to, I could also cook my ass off.

Even if it is as simple as watching some YouTube videos on how Da Vinci was both artist as well as inventor and showing him that the arts can be as masculine endeavor as the rest of them.

Read the rest @ TheFamilyAlpha:

-Hunter
Shutting down a girls weekend and being totally OI about it.

by The_Litz | October 24, 2015 | Link

For about the last 2 months my wife and her sister have been talking about going away on a trip, just the 2 of them, no kids, no husbands.

From a tropical island to a greek island was mentioned. I did not pay it much heed, just dismissed it as daydreaming.

Fast forward to this week and she comes up with a plan. SIL lives in city A, we live in city B. SIL has to go to city C for business in 2 weeks time. My wife will fly there and join her for a long weekend. Now city C is a beautiful coastal tourist destination. Very nice, we have been there before.

Some background on SIL, she cheated on her fiance to marry her current husband, whom she has also cheated on. Her infidelity is still a secret and they don't know that I know about it.

In my blue pill beta past I would have encouraged this. Even offered to pay. This morning I sit my wife down and tell her I don't think her trip is a good idea. She gets into a huff and wants an explanation. Knowing not to DEER I just say it is the kind of trip we should be going on, not her and her sister.

She now tries another tack, almost tearfully ' I never get to spend time with my sister' which is not true, we visit there or the come here a few times a year. I just shrug and say we can meet THEM halfway between City A and B for a nice weekend away, all of us, including her husband. Puff puff.

She now attacks my bachelor friend and me that go out to pubs. 'You act as if you are single!' I don't take the bait, just smile as if remembering a memorable evening out and say we are now talking about city C.

She still demands an explanation. Not wanting to be a total asshole I relent slightly, keeping in mind to stay in my frame and not to DEER too much. I tell her SIL is on a journey to discover herself. She is looking for a reason to end her marriage. Her husband doesn't give a fuck about her. It is not normal for couples to go on holidays separately.

If she thinks she is in the same boat as her sister and needs to go and "Find herself" (yeah I did the Dr Evil quote marks by hand) she can go but I will then take it as her and me being in the same situation as her sister and husband ie. Not giving a fuck about each other.

She became resigned, sighed, then she said she won't go. I was expecting her to be in a shitty mood for the rest of the day.

Now this field report might just seem like a little tiff to most of you, but for me, looking back where I started a few months ago, this is real progress. I knew when to talk, when to STFU, not to DEER and just stand my man.

Knowing about AWALT, and knowing how SIL bashes me in texts to my wife (Thats another story for another day) I can see no good coming from them going on a girls only trip. I said what I wanted without fear of upsetting my snowflake and being totally OI about it all. And the cool and calm frame from which it was delivered put it to bed.

And now? That was this morning, this afternoon she is herself, nice and friendly. I was expecting her to be bitchy. None of that. I am even suspecting, in a way she liked that I shut it down, she knows I care enough for her to stop her from going. Don't know about that but will see over the next few days.
Red Pill and Cooking: Techniques [Rian Stone's Youtube]
by weakandsensitive | February 22, 2019 | Link
Why Valentine's isn't the worst (or at least it doesn't have to be)

by | February 15, 2017 | Link

If you live in an sort of multi cultural part of the world, you'll appreciate that the folks you bump into daily have different beliefs. They have their special days; Ramadhan, Diwali, Pesach, whatever.

Would you ever, for a moment, attempt to convince someone of Muslim belief to stop observing Ramadhan? Of course not. It's their day (or, if you're Muslim, your day). Far be it for me to tell you how to go about your days with your beliefs.

I was wandering through some boxes in our storage unit and came across a Valentine's card I gave my wife a few years ago. This was a couple of months ago. It hit me, right there and then. I don't believe in Valentine's Day but she does. Rather than work on convincing her that it's a misplaced belief or trying to participate in a level that is so far beyond what I rationally believe (huge array of gifts and over the top gestures ie. Covert Contracts everywhere), I tried something different this year. I went along with it.

What does that mean? I dropped off some simple flowers and a card saying "Happy Valentine's Day, I love you" while running errands. She was out at the time, came home and seemed to appreciate them. I have no idea if she was thrilled, disappointed or indifferent. It's her day, not mine. Just like saying "I wish you a joyous Diwalhi" to a Hindu guy I work with, it's not about changing beliefs or trying to participate fully. It's just acknowledging some day she believes in is happening. Casual observation.

Let me tell you, for the first time in 20 years, it was a perfect Valentine's evening. No pressure, no disappointment. Great sex, great food and such an air of relaxation.

So as you prepare your posts today denouncing Valentine's Day, give your approach some thought. Is it really worth it to make the point you're trying make? Is the disappointment from an unfilled covert contract worth the effort? We both know the answer is no. Let them have their day. Consider it a great training day for you and your new mental outlook on the home. A chance to happily wander up to the ship's wheel and navigate calmly.
This is going to be somewhat of a hybrid OYS/FR that I want to put out there for the new guys. Perhaps others will see some value too, but my observations will primarily be geared towards guys in their first year here at MRP.

About me- I’ve been at this about a year now and it has truly changed the way I think and act. I spent the first several months reading the sidebar, trying to internalize, practicing what was preached on the forum, and reevaluating how I judged myself. Lifting was never a problem; I’d done that all my life. It was my attitude that needed work. Looking through the Red Pill Lens, I have been able to have a good hard look at my past and gain valuable insight...I could see where I’d been alpha, cringed at the various beta moments (and transition to beta), fondly recalled those times I was Chad, and realized at other times I got had by Chad. I soaked up everything I could...and expected things to start changing with my LTR. They didn’t, until I realized a couple key things, and that’s what this post is all about.

Comprehending is not internalizing- This one stumped me for months. I had read the sidebar, it made sense. I reread, bought more books, etc...why wasn’t my LTR responding? It hit me like a ton of bricks when I finally made the connection. I had to internalize the information. It had to incubate. My thought process had to change. This doesn’t happen overnight. If you read something and comprehend it, great, but understand that you have to allow time for that new found info to work its way into your consciousness. TheFamilyAlpha made a great post about burning your ship...100% commitment. Read that and remember that the more you commit, the faster this process happens. I still have a long way to go, but now that I can see the difference between thought comprehension and internalized action, the way forward seems clearer.

Your fear of rejection may be what’s holding back your sex life- It has been said on here time and again, “Initiate when you want it”. Truer words haven’t been spoken, but I get the feeling a lot of guys have a hard time with this. I know I did. There is a certain part of everyone that wants that validation of being desired by a partner...the feeling of someone desiring you enough that they come to you seeking sex. My LTR almost never initiates, and it took me a long time to understand why it bothered me so much...and even longer to internalize why it shouldn’t. Honestly, how many guys have run the ‘I won’t initiate and wait for her to initiate’ experiment? I did. We all know how it goes...someone on here said women are like camels in the desert, and that’s true. All you really accomplish is denying yourself sex and reinforce to her that you aren’t man enough to act on your desires. Part of the internalizing process has been the realization that the more you initiate the more sex you will have...but to do that you absolutely must be prepared to kill your fear of rejection and address your validation seeking habits. I realized that being OI and not acting butt hurt are only possible once you have a good hard look at the underlying reasons- if you base your sense of self worth or sexual attractiveness upon her willingness to fuck you, you’re in her frame and seeking her validation. You fear sexual rejection because you view it as an assault to your ego. Once you have given yourself permission to have an abundance mentality, realize that while she may be your first choice, she certainly isn't your last choice...things get easier. Initiate early and often as they say. Or to put it another way, you miss 100% of shots you don't take.

I'm only now, after almost a year, really beginning to feel competent at this...but I certainly have a long way to go. So, to those just beginning- put in the work, and have patience.
Recently I found myself torn between one decision and another.

One: easy, but, frankly, shameful. Especially now.

The other: more complicated. It would have consequences and it would have risk.

Fuck it.

I'm never again letting a goddamn soul on god's green earth fuck with me 'till I'm breathing my last breath, buried underground, or generally screwed and institutionalized.

These choices have been rearing their exigent heads for four decades. They started when I was a kid. They continued into my teens. They kept going into my twenties. They occurred again in my thirties. And they're still happening now, in my forties.

There are just too many goddamn assholes on this little planet for this shit not to happen and demand of you either (1) placating obeisance or (2) firm, decisive - and if needed - combative, consequential action.

Maybe not like Iraq-combat and maybe not like the Canadian-navy-combat (go stoney), but instead, the kind of combat that happens day-in and day-out - to every tom, dick, and harry - and the kind of combat that can dictate whether you go to bed feeling like a panzy-ass douchebag or a man of strength and conviction.

I took action. I struck first.

When I was diagnosed with "my little issue," I was extremely fearful of my personal challenges being sniffed out and discovered. I felt like I had a lot on the line and recognized that it could be damaging to my companies, my career, and my livelihood. It was made more scary when not too long after, Steve Jobs died.

While I'm not Steve Jobs to the universe, I am - in my little world - Steve Jobs' fucking boss.

(After all, each of us are the center of our own worlds, the master of our own universe, and, frankly, who gives a fuck about a shiny phone anyway.)

That fear - since MRP is talking about fear a lot lately - stalked me and burdened me and gave me something more to endure - as though I needed more - to add to the steaming pile of shit that was already being spoon-fed to me after the news I'd just received - and it was being spoon-fed every goddamn, mother-fucking day.

Fuck it.

I'd clearly conditioned myself to be fearful of anyone who could be - or might be - or would be

www.TheRedArchive.com
- or was - in a position to know my little secret - and even worse - to use it against me. Like, you imagine and perhaps know your wife can use your weakest moment of truth against you. Hell, I'd even let myself buckle in a lawsuit because of it. In the beginning.

God damn.

Granted, I had been sick. Real sick. At that time, I could have been dead any day.

After all, competition never ends and in the real world, nobody is "honoring" you anyway. It's dog-eat-dog, mother-fuckers, and you better butch up to that if you want to get where you're going.

That said, I should have never capitulated, even if briefly, and I should never have given any fucker on this planet that kind of power over me.

(They didn't even know the power they wielded. It was largely in my head. )

That conditioning - my pernicious foe - like an insidious monster, had burrowed its way through my very being and had clearly fucking weakened me.

This time, not too long ago, under equally scary, risky circumstances - titan v. titan if you will - I chose to strike first.

And strike I did, details irrelevant.

The point of this little post is this:

Do not let anyone ever fuck with you again.

__________________________

Seriously.

What you believe you risk is returned a-thousand-fold by what you gain, no matter the outcome.

Your risk is imagined (though possibly true), while:

- The courage of your convictions...
- Your self-respect...
- Your dignity...
- And simply your ability to continue waking up and going to sleep - feeling like a man...

... well, they're all real. And I know this from experience. And I assure you it's the truth.
• Be strong.
• Be bold.
• Hit your foe first.
• Hit him where it hurts.
• And hit him hard.
• But most importantly, don't ever back down, even if you're weak inside.

You do that each and every time you face true adversity and it will have no choice but to seep into your day-to-day life with the little missus. That behavior is magnified by 100.

Because, after all, you're a titan. She may not know it yet. You may not know it yet. But soon, you will.

p.s. This dude got me thinking about fear, initiative, action, and consequence, and he inspired me to post.

p.p.s. Important postscript. I was thinking about this post wondering why I'd come up with it, why'd I posted. Was I simply peacocking? Look, it's the dude who beat death again, look at him go. So tough.

No. I now introspectively recognize that a few times in my life, exactly and oddly correlating with my lifespan at once-per-decade - so four fucking times - I have been wronged. Hugely wronged.

But that is not the crux of the matter.

That I did not fight back and fight back hard, well, that is the issue. And it can stick inside like you some insidious creature devouring your innards though more cunningly chasing your soul. And - perhaps a bit dramatic - it has.

So don't fucking let that happen.

• Get your ass beaten, but kneel before no one.
• Lose your shirt in court, but don't kowtow to your wife.
• Close your business, but don't sell your soul to the devil.

Does this mean to be risky, irresponsible, or stupid?

Fuck no.

But it does mean this: when you've lost it all - in my experience - the only thing left to cling to is your dignity and your self-respect. I used to watch those prison shows and their silliness about "respect" was just that: silliness. But when it comes to self-respect, it's the real deal.

You don't ever want to wake up and realize that while you had lost everything, you've also lost your self-respect. There is no more fallow feeling than that.
Choose pride, choose integrity, choose self-respect.

Always.

No failure, no financial problem, no fucking nothing has hurt me like losing sight of my pride, my integrity, and my self-respect.
Statistics on Office Affairs according to Forbes
by weakandsensitive | February 15, 2019 | Link

Saw this article from Forbes in my Linked in feed. It gives some data about office affairs and relationships.

Particular highlights include -

- More than half of employees have engaged in an office romance.
- Almost one in five employees who were in a committed relationship have had an affair with a colleague.
- A whopping 18% of employees reported having a random hookup with a coworker.
- Almost three in four (72%) would participate in an office romance again if given the chance.

The big one for us is the 2nd bullet point. 1 in 5 people in a committed relationship had an affair. If I gave you 20% odds, you'd most likely be fine, but the odds of the miss aren't insignificant. For context, psychology today has rates at 20-25% for men vs. 10-15% for women - so the numbers line up well.

Remember these numbers are over time, so we're talking about integration of all experiences, not a single time window calculation. This just means that any given time, the chances of this being true is much less than 1 in 5.

The analysis behind the article is more of a HR-based assessment instead of human psychology. It makes a lot of sense why people would be so open to office romances. These factors include:

- Alignment in Socioeconomic Status - the people you work with are general at your level in terms of income and values, completely different than the bars or online dating
- Alignment in Education/Attainment Levels - the people you work have similar levels of education, skill sets, capabilities, and mindsets.
- General exposure and constant relationship building - we spend 1/3 of our lives with the people we work with. that means there's probably more time to build relationship with co-workers than with your wife.

And finally, work relationships are a fun, novel fantasy. It's not a day-to-day grind. Which begs the question - if your relationships can be described as a "day-to-day grind", what are you actually doing?

Edit: I just wanted to share this incel's comment on this very interesting topic du jour.
First time at the beach after a winter of lifting

by 4TBhdd | July 27, 2015 | Link

Last Fall, I got a visit from an old friend whom I hadn't seen in a while, and he had done a great job of bulking up. OK, challenge accepted. So I dug out my old weights and got to it. I also researched everything from lifting form to diet and made very good (natty) progress over the winter months. I hadn't even heard of these redpill subreddits until about 2 months ago, so none of this had to do with any redpill lift mantra. (though I totally agree with it)

Earlier this month we made our first family trip to the beach for the summer and my transformation was obvious. My wife (who sees me everyday) felt compelled to say "wow you do look defined". As I'm standing out in the waist-high water, I'm getting other mom's saying little conversation starters to me like "do you think there's sharks near here?" and "these waves aren't too bad don't you think?". My teen daughter actually seemed a little perturbed at one persistent (and busty) mom trying to chat me up out in the water. We'll go back a few more times in August.

TLDR: lifting works.
Wow, where to begin.

Context

I got married very young (just turned 21) to an overweight oneitis. First serious girlfriend, first sex for either of us. Had no idea what I was doing. The first when you are in love is like it always is. You'll do anything for each other. You say I love you and have it said hundreds of times. But after a decade and a half and two kids you find things out.

I won't paint her as the bad guy but one day I woke up in my mid 30's and saw that she had done nothing but gain weight. I did the RP stuff. I dressed better. Bought a nice ass car and motorcycle. Got a better haircut. Hit the gym until I was cut with abs. Started flirting. Kept a good job. Flaunted my achievements when I could.

Gentlemen to say that none of that mattered to her would be a huge understatement. She got fatter. She hit 300 and is still pretty much right there. She told me she only really needed sex from me once a week, maybe every two. She disrespected me at every turn.

I had told myself I was gonna cheat before. It seemed like my only option and that I would just cheat with a married woman and get my jollies and I could deal with this bullshit. I could deal with the once a week sex from her for 15 mins and the disrespect. But after I found a girl 6 years her junior and over 100 pounds lighter there was no going back.

Now before you ask she is not my new oneitis. I care for her and I've dabbled and that's all I'll say on that. But she is fantastic in bed and super submissive and basically everything I've wanted that my wife didn't care to be.

So one day my wife finds, let's say, some evidence. I cop to everything but sleeping with this girl. Cue the hysterical bonding. Suddenly my wife is sending me nudes, asking for a threesome with another girl, doing things in bed and asking for things in bed that she hated before. Suddenly she not only is ok with them, she WANTS them. You would think this would make me happy or at least not unhappy. But it pissed me off. 16 years and it took me on my way out the door to get her to do any of this. Suddenly she respects me, doesn't care if I change careers. Asks my opinion on everything. But like I said, I was pissed.

So finally I told her it was over that I'd get the lawyer set up and we'd dissolve this. Should have done this first I know.

Here's the funny thing. She's still been asking for sex. She's been on Match.com ever since I told her it was over ever. She's talked to a few guys and she cops a week ago that a guy she sent a picture to asked her to have sex with him. Long story short she meets him "for drinks" on Friday and within the space of an hour after meeting him she's fucking him. I didn't really care except that it just confirmed the final redpill truths. She thinks he's a total tool and he doesn't things that are unattractive like drink too much. But she goes to the town he's in to "go shopping" knowing she's going to bang him but hamsters it away. Here's the funny part.
He doesn't call or text her for 3 days after that. She's irate. Tells me well it was a one night stand and she needed it to get over me. Good I tell her. But she's pecking out page long nasty texts to him all day about why he used her and dumped her. I mean she's 40 with two kids and a good 150 pounds overweight. He was pretty desperate in my opinion but so was I.
But she feels good about herself she tells me and she'll do it again. If she can.
Excuses
by TheFamilyAlpha | December 28, 2016 | Link

Read the entire post at The Family Alpha:
https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/12/27/excuses/

The saying goes, “Excuses are like assholes, everyone has one and they all stink.”

This is something I’d like you to recognize and truly wrap your mind around. Everyone makes an excuse as to why they can’t do the things they need to do. Only a very select few people out there are making excuses to do the things they need to do.

Ask yourself these questions and see if you can come up with an answer that isn’t complete bullshit which you know to be a lie you tell yourself to justify mediocre performance.

1. What excuse do you have for not gaming your wife these past few years? Why don’t you treat her like a lover anymore yet expect her to act like one?

2. What excuse do you have for plugging your kids in front of a screen day after day; refusing to put your phone away and educate, play with, or lead them?

3. What excuse do you have for the weight you’ve put on?

4. What’s your excuse for giving your time and attention to those who are not worthy; hanging with deadbeat friends who do nothing but complain and waste your time with booze or pot?

5. What excuse do you have for how weak you have become physically, spiritually, & mentally?

6. What is your excuse for all of the times you didn’t speak up and tell the world how you truly felt because you’d rather play it safe and not make waves; making yourself like everyone else in an attempt to be accepted by them?

7. What’s your excuse for putting everyone ahead of yourself?

8. What’s your excuse for letting society tell you what you should like, how you should act, and what you should accept?
9. What’s your excuse for rewarding failure time and again?

10. What excuse do you have for repressing your masculine nature?

People will make an excuse as to why they didn’t go to the gym, yet the winners out there are making excuses to go to the gym.

When is the last time you said, “Hey man I’m going to be late to your (insert event) because I need to hit the gym.”? When is the last time you made the decision to not go to bed but rather stay up late because you had to knock some project out?

The issue we have is that of too much comfort and too little appreciation of time.

Comfort

People have become so fucking comfortable that they’d rather suffer a mediocre existence than put in the slightest effort required for improvement. People choose to complain and seek validation through those complaints instead of just shutting the fuck up and putting in the work.

I had a husband email me talking about how his wife refuses to follow his lead and that they have a deadbedroom. I found out he was fat. I asked him why he thought his wife would want to fuck a fat dude. He went on to explain through 6 paragraphs how a knee injury from high school football (when he was really cut and strong of course) prevented him from lifting weights, running, etc.

I’m 4 classes away from my MS in Exercise Science; I was able to call BS on this one fairly quickly. He was upset about that and hasn’t responded since.

Instead of complaining about the problems you have in your life, start working to solve them.

Stop being so comfortable sitting on your couch talking about how the world is holding you down, you are holding you down – get up!

Stand up and start doing.

Read the rest at The Family Alpha: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2016/12/27/excuses/

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
There has been a lot of talk about this book recently. I prepared this review for those who read it and want a reminder of its key points and for those that have not to motivate them to action.

This review is by no means a substitution for a proper reading of the book, which I believe should be on the sidebar.

Extreme Ownership is a book written by Jocko Willink and Leif Babin, both are experienced US Navy SEALs. This book takes life & leadership lessons, written in blood from the battlefield in Ramadi and translates the message from the battlefield to businesses and your own family.

Extreme Ownership

PART I: WINNING THE WAR WITHIN

Chapter 1: Extreme Ownership

The book starts with a combat story told by Jocko, in which the inevitable confusion inherent to combat situations causes a blue on blue situation (friendly fire). Jocko is in charge of the unit and he starts seeking for the person to blame for the incident. This is when he realizes that the person to blame was himself, it was his fault this event occurred. He was in charge, no one else. Anything that happens is his own fault because he is the captain.

We need to internalize this concept, as married men we need to truly let it sink in.

YOU are the one responsible for everything in your life. You are the leader of your family, your work, your happiness, your sex life, your ‘luck’. A famous golfer once said, “the more he worked and harder he worked, the luckier he got.” This is true for everyone and everything in your life.

Stop blaming your ‘bad luck’ for your failures; it only makes you look pathetic. It is on you and you alone to *Own. Your. Shit

Chapter 2: No Bad Teams, Only Bad Leaders

In this chapter, Leif Babin tells a story from his experience in BUDs training. Trainees were split into 6 teams and they were to compete with the other teams throughout all of ‘Hell Week’. Team 2 was winning all of the boat races and Team 6 was consistently pulling up the rear and finishing in last place. Team 6 was heard blaming each other, their bad luck, and just complaining at how it wasn’t their fault they were failing. A seasoned SEAL Instructor who was in charge of the course decided to switch the leaders. He took the boat leader from Team 2 and put him in charge of Team 6 and vice versa. This change resulted in team 6 winning the very next race! Team 2 ended second, because despite of having a horrible leader, they had the momentum and Ownership of Self instilled in them by their previous leader.

I tend to relate this chapter to AWALT. We all can complain on the circumstances, yet no one has ever gotten something out of complaining. You think your wife is an unbearable bitch? Guess what, it is your fault. Do you work with a lazy ass team? Stop complaining about their sub-par performance and Lead them.

You must be capable of motivating and setting short term goals that are attainable. The leader must point to each milestone and not just focus on the finish line. Small victories not only ease the path, they also get the team fired up and confident in their capabilities.

Chapter 3: Believe

If you don't believe in the mission, you and your subordinates have a reason to fail - and you will.

Why does this happen? If you do not fully believe in the purpose of your mission, you won’t take the risks that are necessary to fulfill it. Not only do you need to believe in your ‘self’ and your mission, you also need to share that vision you have with your team (family) so they see why they are doing what it is you are asking of them.

It is imperative that you fully believe in your mission as a man and commit to it consistently. The masculine path is a never ending improvement of ‘self’. With your limitless reserve of self-confidence and strong conviction you will take whatever risks are necessary to accomplish your mission, achieve your mission, and reach your goal for both your ‘self’ and your family. Your wife will constantly question your methods, your plan, and your actions. You need to be able to clearly explain the why so that she can see and believe in your vision. She should be able to see how she fits into the equation and how her actions play a vital role in completion of whatever objective you’ve set.

The WHY is the most important thing in human lives. WHY are we doing what it is we’re doing? Humans are animals evolved to have a conscious mind, we constantly need to have a purpose for our actions. If we understand the purpose or the why, not only do we feel more motivated towards attaining the goal, but we also can find alternative ways to achieve it. You can’t say how you’re going to lead your family if you (and they) don’t know why you need to.

Chapter 4: Check the Ego

It is always good to be confident. But do not get cocky or complacent.

The hardest ego to deal with is your own. It won’t let you see what is best to the mission, just what is best to the ‘self’. This can (and will) lead you to making the wrong decisions when your leadership and guidance is needed.

Be humble and listen, be ready to repair your mistakes before the damage is too great. Listen to your wife and kids, you may think you know better but if their input makes sense, not changing your mind would be a very foolish thing to do. You aren’t always right and you need to be able to admit that. Share your success as well as your failure, OWN it all.

I suggest you watch the movie "Revolver" by Guy Ritchie. I found it to be a very meaningful movie that left me thinking a lot about killing my own ego and how it would I would be a better man for destroying it.

PART II: LAWS OF COMBAT

Chapter 5: Cover and Move

This chapter is about team work. Look outside the box and realize the resources that are available to you. Sometimes we get caught up with the action and don't take a step away to look at the situation and call for support. Maybe your wife is better with the finances, or maybe your wife is in better shape than you. Use her knowledge, get advice on proper lifts, have her (or whomever) educate you on an area you knowledge is lacking. Don't be the tough guy on Isolation Island who is too afraid to ask for help. That is weakness and it does not comply with Owning your shit. Admitting failure and owning it is key to growth.

Get help if you need it so you can focus in the mission while others keep you covered. Be aware of your resources and utilize them in order to prevent risks when going forward.

Chapter 6: Simple

I am a lawyer. Lawyers tend to over complicate things just for the fun of it. However, I was told that in order to know if I truly understand something I should be able to successfully explain it to a 9 year old. Whether it is Einstein's relativity theory or the chores my son must do, I should be able to take a complicated subject and deliver it in clear, easy to understand manner so that those I am instructing know exactly what it is I am telling them and what I want from them.

Throughout the book the authors emphasize (frequently) that the mission must be completely understood by the lowest common denominator. The lowest ranked guy, the E-2 sailor playing a support role from HQ needs to know what is required and what the 'end goal' is.

Even your 5 year old must know and understand why the decisions are being made. Do you need to explain your reasoning to him? No, but he should know what his role is and why he is doing a certain action a certain way.

Again, this principle is elemental to execute decentralized command (chapter 8) and to Believe (chapter 3). Each and every one of your crew must know exactly what to do and why, so they can make timely and effective decisions always towards the team's goal.

Chapter 7: Prioritize and Execute

It is impossible to multitask effectively when you have no time and immense amounts of pressure. You need to prioritize and execute the most urgent task at hand, tackle it and proceed to the next.
Remember how when you fly they tell you to put on your own oxygen mask before helping others, to include your own children? The priority is to keep you functional, then assist the ones that can’t help themselves. In our case, we need to figure out what needs immediate attention, then so on, until all ‘issues’ have been corrected. If you are immersed in fixing everything, then you’re stretched too thin and ultimately you fail. Figure out what needs to be fixed, prioritize, delegate, supervise.

Again this is all closely related to chapters 3 and 8.

This also applies to The Red Pill in the sense that you should tackle and focus on one problem at a time to keep it simple. For example, you should get lost in the levels of dread or AA & AM immediately. Focus on the most urgent task at hand. Lift.

Then when things are becoming clear and settling out, move to the next issue then again, stop, look around and make the call.

Don’t go Rambo.

Chapter 8: Decentralized Command

A leader must be that, a leader and not a boss. It is of fundamental importance for the leader to have a clear view of the bigger picture.

If the leader is constantly on the front line, so immersed in being near the fight, he will lose control over the situation because he will not be handling the rear or providing an overview of direction. Let your unit (family) do their job, allow them to tackle some of the issues so you are free to see what is happening on the overall situation.

A leader works harder than anyone and never complains. That does not mean that the leader should do everything. It’s quite the opposite, the leader must be capable of of doing everything, and must know what needs to be done, but his job is to get others to do what he wants because they want to do it. As an effective leader you must be able to and 2) Back them up for the decisions they made, even if they were wrong. Otherwise, they won’t be confident enough to make the decisions in the first place, and inactivity will cost your mission a great deal. If they fail, at least they tried. Show them support in their effort and provide better education.

1. let junior leaders(wife/older kids) make decisions for themselves, even if you are certain you would do the task better/more efficiently. You need to let others spread their own wings on certain matters.

Their failure is your failure as they would not have missed the mark if you had trained, educated, or been more clear on what you expected.
PART III: SUSTAINING VICTORY

Chapter 9: Plan

You will never be able to preview all the problems that can arise from a certain situation. But, if you have standard procedures that your crew is aware of then there is a standard upon which they can base their decision making. If you aren’t around and shit hits the fan, your wife or child will know what it is you expect of them.

If there is an accident, if the car breaks, if the kid needs new clothes - there must be a standard procedure rehearsed so that your wife & kids know what to do in certain situations and act quickly and effectively.

Chapter 10: Leading up and down the chain of command

It is very likely that your boss does not entirely get the situation of your sales team, and therefore he is taking decisions that will only take your team further down. He may not be aware of the situation on the front lines, which is a communication issue, which is his failure as he has not ensured that there are open channels for sending and receiving information. However, you can do something about it.

Ask yourself this question: Does my wife want us to fail the mission? More often than not the answer will be no. If you don’t understand why she keeps making a certain decision ASK HER WHY. Maybe she pays the bills in a certain order because she believes it is the most efficient way to do it. Your wife is not actively trying to sabotage you, view her as your teammate, not the enemy. If she is constantly fucking something up, there is probably a reason and that reason could be discovered if you communicated. She may be right, just because you are the leader does not mean you are immune to mistakes. Lead from the front and be humble enough to learn from those following behind you.

This action (opening up communication up and down the ‘Chain of command’) is also on you! You are the one responsible for your wife & kids actions when they are originated in a lack of knowledge that you are supposed to provide them. Think out of the box and make things happen up and down the chain of command.

Chapter 11: Decisiveness amid Uncertainty

There are times where immediate action is required with limited information and analysis paralysis could mean failing your mission.

The picture is never complete and leaders must be comfortable with this. As the leader of your clan you must be able to make decisions properly and then be able to adjust said decisions based on the evolving situations and new information.

As the Family Alpha you must develop this skill. You must be able to make the most accurate decision possible using the information you have at hand. If you let your wife take charge of this, the mission will fail or it will succeed due to her ability to perform under stress, but she will see that you are unable to care & lead her under stress and that is going to have some severe blowback on you and your position in your family.

The decision taken in this manner (emergency with little information) will never be the optimal one. But it must be made and you must prepare for it by planning in advance what you will do if x, y, or z ever happens.

Chapter 12: Discipline Equals Freedom - The Dichotomy of Leadership

There is an old Japanese saying that says that discipline will one day beat intelligence. This could not be more true. The Japanese did not invent the car, motorcycles, the radio, the television, photography did they? But guess who owns Toyota, Kawasaki, Mitsubishi, Panasonic, Toshiba, Canon, Nissan, etc?

Discipline is the cornerstone of self improvement and therefore of true masculinity. You simply cannot lead without it.

Motivation is excellent, but you can't rely on it. Motivation eventually fades (usually very quickly), and you are left naked, alone with your discipline. If you have not cultivated it and trained it through repeated use, then you are going to fail.

Discipline is trainable by waking up early, taking cold showers, maintaining focus in work, eating healthy foods, going for that extra rep, making yourself usefully uncomfortable. This can be made easier by having a clear sense of purpose (Believe). You must find comfort in the discomfort of living life as a masculine male in a weaksauce society. Yes, everyone around you will be more 'comfortable' but that isn't the goal is it? Our goal is to effectively lead our clan and get the most from this life.

CONCLUSION

This book is a must read for everyone. Especially for those who struggle with taking responsibility for their actions and the failure of those whom they are expected to guide. You are not 'unlucky' or special in any way, you need to overcome that "Victim mentality" and assert your Ownership over your life and family.

You can find the book HERE.

PS: Special thanks /u/TrainingTheBrain for being the editor

Best of luck,
The New Polyandry
by Rollo-Tomassi | December 11, 2018 | Link

Essay:
https://therationalmale.com/2018/12/10/the-new-polyandry/

Excerpt:

What’s really ironic is that this girl discounts what so many men discount when they consider Hypergamy. She couches her total perspective on the Beta Bucks, long-term provisioning side of Hypergamy while conveniently omitting the Alpha Bucks side of Hypergamy. The only consideration she has is for resource transfer – again perpetuating the Beta sex experience – and ignoring the fact that even poor men still get to bang women like her if they’re “hawt”. ‘Monogamy is made to benefit men’, no it’s made to benefit Beta men; Alpha men solve the reproductive problem irrespective of (in spite of) socially enforced monogamy. ‘Broke men don’t get women’,…unless they’re hot broke men.

I’ve seen Jordan Peterson and more than a few notable evo-psych professors make a similar mistake. They deliberately make Hypergamy solely about the Beta Bucks side of a dualistic mating strategy. Mostly this misdirection is due to personal bias or a want to present the feminine in a positive light. But likewise we also tend to see focus of men’s sexual strategy centering on what long term resources a man has to measure his worth by. Historically, women have generally been the losers in a social order based on a monogamy that tries to ensure that the most men (majority Beta) are solving the reproductive problem. Because women lacked the same resource generating capacity of men, because up until 50 years ago women needed men to solve the Beta Bucks side of Hypergamy, monogamy was a at least a workable solution to their own reproductive problem.

In 2018 this is no longer the case. For all of the bleating of women wanting a ‘good man’ once they exit the cock carousel, the reproductive problem they’re trying to solve isn’t founded in the Beta Bucks side of Hypergamy it’s on the Alpha Bucks side. For as much as the women in this video tried to defend their mercenary sexual strategy of being justifiable gold diggers they really didn’t need to. All of the provisioning needs side of Hypergamy is relatively provided for for women in western cultures today.

The monogamous priority – the one that tried to ensure that most Beta men reproduced – that priority has now shifted to a neo-polyandry. This new social mechanic attempts to solve the Alpha Bucks side of the reproductive problem for the largest number of women. Just as patriarchal monogamy attempted to aide men who wouldn’t otherwise reproduce, the new polyandry seeks to ensure that even the lowest SMV women are entitled to breed with an Alpha male of their choosing.

Once all social stigma and religious buffers were removed from Hypergamy (since the Sexual Revolution) it has been a rapid shift from a male-beneficial monogamy that’s been the social norm for millennia to a form of polyandry that benefits the female sexual strategy.

I’ll be continuing this post in the next essay, but before I leave this essay let me reiterate the Cardinal Rule of Sexual Strategies: For one sex’s strategy to be fulfilled the other’s must be compromised or abandoned. Think of this on a sociological meta-scale.
A Man of Substance

I enjoy those Most Interesting Man in the World commercials. The whole thing is a marketing tool to sell beer, but dammit I was always a fan of how Hemingway lived his life in his prime days (before his wife beta’d the hell out of him and he took the shotgun express to get away from it). It always entertains me to see this guy based partially on Prime-Hemingway, appear on screen, older, well groomed, well spoken, and covered in hot young bitches. This is a man walking through life with a DNGAF attitude and an abundance mentality.

One of the very high ranking people in my company, my mentor, is like The Most Interesting Man in the World. He dresses very well, is a great conversationalist that can talk to the janitor or the CEO with equal engagement, and women love him.

I compare this type of man to the other type that features prominently in my upbringing. My dad was/is a beta but my uncle was/is a factory working alpha dog that DNGAF and has beat the shit out of dudes for looking at his wife the wrong way. Between his factory gig and odd carpentry jobs he works seven days a week to provide for his three kids and three grandkids. He’s a muscle bound giant that doesn’t talk much, but when he gives his “opinion” on something, no one argues anything different.

I see these as two different manifestations of Alpha. I think if you look at Beta and Alpha as a 0-10 scale, where 0 is a Betabux that watches his wife gets railed by gangbangers and then goes down on her after and 10 is a fucking psychopathic violent offender that beats and controls women whenever he isn’t in jail, I think most of us here want to be somewhere in the 6-8 range for Alphahood. I want to make a post about this at a later date but I bring it up now only to make the case that you do not have to be a Man of Substance to be an Alpha (like my uncle), but any Man of Substance will inherently be an Alpha (Most Interesting Man and my mentor).

What is a Man of Substance?

Here are the five major components of a Man of Substance:

1. A Man of Substance is well read on various topics and can speak on them with little to no preparation.

2. A Man of Substance knows how to facilitate and navigate a conversation with people from various walks of life. Just because he has a wide range of knowledge does not mean he spews this information out at random or ad nauseam.
3. A Man of Substance looks like a developed man. This is where lifting heavy weights, keeping a low body fat %, and knowing how to layer well-fitting clothing create the non-verbal message that a man is self-actualized before he ever opens his mouth. Impeccable grooming is a given here as well.

4. A Man of Substance is a teacher. I do not care if it is a wine class, a leadership group, or a little league sports team, women recognize a man as having substance when others shut up and listen when he is in front of the group.

5. A Man of Substance demonstrates interest in those that enter his frame and non-interest in those that do not. You will not find a Man of Substance railing against those that have a differing opinion than him. He simply DNGAF about those that have a different frame than him. If you want his attention you come into his frame.

A Man of Substance is well read on various topics and can speak on them with little to no preparation.

When Aristotle wrote On Rhetoric, the seminal guide to public speaking, he talked about Ethos (credibility of the speaker), Pathos (Emotional Connection with the audience), and Logos (the logical content of the words) as being the key to a successful speech. What I am talking about here is the logos floating around in a man's head. Most men have an approximate knowledge of many things, and that is good, but for a man to truly be a Man of Substance he needs to be well read on various subjects, which is a higher level of Logos than having an approximate knowledge. Imagine a conversation with a group of people where the cherry notes in a particular wine comes up as a conversation topic. Compare the first man’s interjected comment to the second:

Girl in Group: “This wine has cherry in it?”

Man of Approximate Knowledge: “No, they don’t put cherry in it, it’s just the flavor of cherry can be detected.”

Girl in Group: “This wine has cherry in it?”

Man of Substance: “In a way it does, the same chemical compounds that give cherries their flavor are present in the wine due to the winemaker’s fermentation process.”

Which of the two comments will create additional questions/conversation while demonstrating the man’s knowledge? Obviously the second.

This begs the question, what subjects should a Man of Substance be well read on? This is for you to decide and I believe the answer is different depending on your individual situation. Some safe subjects include the mechanics of politics (how government works not political opinion), science, art, and history. These are good subjects to have on lockdown because they allow you to dazzle people with “aha” moments. These subjects tend to give you broad opportunities to demonstrate your depth as a man. If you want to use this for gaming women
I would also recommend some deep knowledge of bullshit subjects like astrology, tarot cards, palm reading, etc. Women love it when a man can teach them about those stupid things.

A Man of Substance knows how to facilitate and navigate a conversation with people from various walks of life.

This component is different than the first. This is the Pathos that Aristotle talked about. Your ability to connect with another random human being and pull them into your frame during conversation. The knowledge you possess will aid you if you do not inappropriately spew it at an uninterested person, but this is a component that exists independently from Logos. Think of this as having high Emotional Intelligence. Like my mentor, you are able to talk to the janitor or the CEO and both men feel kinship towards you during and after the conversation.

A Man of Substance looks like a developed man.

The key word here is “looks”. This is the unspoken message when people see you for the first time. This is the first impression component, part of the Ethos. If you look like a developed man, people will automatically assume you are. This is the one that many men avoid due to laziness and an addiction to shitty food. Most men are too intimidated to focus on their physical development and even men who do so still avoid upgrading their fashion.

I wear very expensive suits almost daily and deck myself out with the right accessories, and my shoes are top notch. When I walk in a room everyone, male and female, eyeballs me and anyone important in the room makes time for me if I want to talk to them. You do not have to spend a lot of money to look good though, just wear the best you can afford. Looking like your best self is like gaining a super power and if you’re avoiding it because you feel it’s unmanly to wear tailored clothing or keep your grooming impeccable, I am not going to say you’re not alpha, because you very well may be, but I will not call you a Man of Substance.

A Man of Substance is a teacher.

This one is fairly self-explanatory. Teach something. Teach anything. Just telling a woman you teach a certain subject, regardless of what it is, will enhance your credibility and bring her more into your frame. If it is a subject she is interested in, even more so.

A Man of Substance demonstrates interest in those that enter his frame and non-interest in those that do not.

This is a big one. A Man of Substance simply DNGAF if you aren’t on his train. He does not call people names because if he disagrees with them, he NOTHINGS them. No hate, no anger, no disgust, just NOTHING. He is on a journey in life and anything outside of that journey is a waste of his most precious resource: his time.

TLDR; LIFT
Men of March: Day #5
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 4, 2017 | Link

Day #1, Day #2, Day #3, Day #4

Yesterday’s Recap: Each day I’ll do a brief recap from the day before. Day #4 consisted of removing the bullshit clutter from your life.

In our consumer focused society pushes the message that More = Better daily.

This couldn't be further from the truth, and they know that.

The men who went through his home and cleared out the excess crap which served zero purpose said they immediately felt better.

It's because you feel you can breathe again when the walls aren't closing in around you. I live a minimalist lifestyle and couldn't be happier.

I don't have as much shit as other guys, but the stuff I do have all have a purpose and value. I don't need to bog my life down and clutter my home because society told me to buy stuff and horde it just in case and neither do you.

Now that you have more room in your home and what you own has purpose and value, we can now discuss how to stop being distracted from it.

Keep grinding brothers

Daily Reminder

Reminder: The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don’t give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.

4. You must start reading a book. Even if it’s just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don’t have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.

5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go.
This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Life isn’t about hiding from storms, it’s about learning to dance in the rain.

Day #5: A Spiritual Sunday

We live in an amazing point of time. The fact that we have hundreds of men reclaiming their masculinity and taking ownership of their life across the globe at the same time is a testament to that.

This level of connection with the world can be amazing; it can also be detrimental to the development of the ‘spirit’.

We are so distracted by updates, new releases, gadgets, responsibilities, and expectations that rarely to we ever find ourselves alone.

When you're alone I am willing to bet that there is a distraction in hand or nearby such as your phone, computer, the radio, something is keeping you from being entirely alone with yourself.

I am not a religious man, I am a very spiritual man.

I believe that the amount of distractions we have in our lives is killing the spiritual aspect of masculinity, few talk about this.

I've written plenty of posts on the subject of irrational confidence and complete immersion in the moment. The only way to achieve that level of living and spiritual expression is to be comfortable with who you are.

In order to know who you are as a man, you have to listen to that voice inside you. You have to stop distracting yourself from what it's saying and you have to find a way to do this daily.
Once you are able to dial in to that voice you'll find that you don't get distracted from tasks such as reading quite as much. Very few people can sit down and read a book for 45 minutes straight without checking their phone, talking to someone, or doing something else, besides their task of reading.

It's unfortunate as total immersion in a book is an incredible experience. The only way you can achieve 'flow' in writing is if you're entirely immersed in that moment.

Give yourself the gift of immersing in the moment.

Start making time to listen to that voice in your head, the genuine self whose been repressed, ignored, and tuned out for years and replaced by songs, shows, and distractions.

Once you do that you'll find yourself noticing you truly feel a breeze again, appreciate the ability to see the trees, hear the world around you.

Give yourself this gift and through your example you'll give your family and friends the same gift and though they'll never know it, their entire life experience will have improved because of you.

Challenge #5

1. 100 Push-Ups

2. For an hour straight you're going to be alone with yourself today.

Maybe you sit and meditate, go for a run, walk, or drive whatever you want to do, do it.

During this time you remove all distractions from the mind. This means there will be no radio in the car, your phone won't be on or near you, no music, nothing; it's just you for an hour straight.

Wrapping up Day #5

Weekends are a time where families do a lot together, I get that which is why I'm publishing this post early, I wanted to give you time to plan an hour to get away & search for who you are.

For most, this time is going to be gained by waking up an hour earlier, don't say you didn't have ample warning.

Remember, the purpose of this is to connect with that voice inside your head. That genuine self who has been repressed for too long.

Find the voice and see where it takes you, you may discover that you've been worried about something or excited about something and you didn't even know it.
When I drive my hour commute to work with the radio off I think through problems, build essays in my mind, etc. It's meditation in motion for me and I truly believe it's one of the reasons I'm not a stressed out dude. I'm meditating for 2 hours every day Mon-Fri.

'Un-Plug' from the barrage of updates and distractions society is throwing in your face, find comfort in being alone with yourself.

Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/04/day-5-a-spiritual-sunday/

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Men of March: Day #7
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 7, 2017 | Link

Day #1, Day #2, Day #3, Day #4, Day #5, Day #6

Yesterday’s Recap:

Each day I’ll do a brief recap from the day before. Day #6 forced men to take an account of where their time and money is being spent. More than one of our brethren identified multiple areas where they are being drained by Time & Dime Vampires, which was the point of the challenge.

I'm not writing these challenges and asking you to review your life because I want to hear how great you're doing, I'm writing because I want you to know where you are failing.

This movement is not about sucking your own dick and talking about how you are a masculine man. It's about reclaiming and strengthening your masculine 'self'.

Find the cracks in your foundation and find the areas where you're weak. Once you can objectively identify your failures you are able to isolate and destroy them.

It's like the day #2 challenge, you don't get to avoid where you're failing and complacency in one area while strengthening another is failing.

This is not your average challenge or campaign to reclaiming your sense of self;

We're building the Men of March here and I am not fucking around with your feelings or comfort; I'm here to help you man the fuck up and in order to do so, you have to make honest assessments and come up with a plan to execute and implement a solution.

The following challenge requires an honest assessment, are you capable of removing your ego and taking a look at your performance in life?

Daily Reminder

Reminder: The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don't give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.

4. You must start reading a book. Even if it's just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don't have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.

5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go. This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Life isn’t about hiding from storms, it’s about learning to dance in the rain.

Day #7: The Gas Pedal

If you're not first, you're last.

Quite a few men have said that they were able to do x challenge, but not y goal. To this I'm calling bullshit.

The trait these men exhibit are remnants of their 'Pre-March' self. They feel that because they put effort in over here, that it justified their lack of performance over there.

Like a gas pedal sometimes you have to punch it down and burn some rubber while other times you’ve got to release some pressure and just coast.

This would make sense, but in the real world there isn’t one pedal.

Each area of your life, each goal you set and responsibility you have has its own pedal and you are either pushing it to the floor and grinding in pursuit of that goal, or you're coasting for a reason you feel justifies it.

The Men of March is a challenge you decided to take on. You chose to commit yourself to a program for a month. This means, that at no point, are you able to coast because the commitment you took on clearly stated that it required you to be grinding 'all in' for the month.

Are there times to 'coast'? Yes.

At one point a few years ago, I almost deleted TFA because I was overwhelmed and wasn't sure whether anyone was understanding what it was I was saying. So, I took some time away from the keyboard.

During this time, I was coasting with regards to blogging but I was still coaching, fucking, and killing it at work. Just because I was bogged down in one area does not mean I am allowed to justify poor performance in another.

Maybe work stresses you out, that doesn't mean you can come home daily and 'relax' as that just makes you stressed out dad and husband to your wife and kids when in fact you should compartmentalize work from home and come home motivated as hell.

You need a different compartment in your mind for every area of life and each one of those compartments shall have its own pedal.

Don't justify coasting because something else wore you down. Keep grinding and when you're ready, go back to what you took a break from and get back to work.

The masculine man doesn't have time to look for people to support him as he cries his problems away. You have work to do, remove excuses and identify where you're coasting, the push the pedal to the floor.

Challenge #7

1. 100 Push-Ups

2. Take an honest assessment of how well you're performing in every area of your life.

In challenge two you were forced to face the inner demon which you'd been avoiding for far too long.

This is different than that.

I'm asking you to look at your performance and identify the areas where maybe you aren't doing as well as you thought. A few examples:

Sex:

Look at the quality, are you giving her a good dicking where she is left their quivering or are you a two pump chump who really doesn't have a fuck to give whether she enjoyed it at all or not? What about the frequency, are you playing games or too busy to fuck your girl? Is it fun, are you guys laughing as much as you're moaning? Do you make it naughty, using rope, glow sticks, road head, etc.? Are you fucking her bowlegged at times then mixing it up and making total sensual love?

Work:

Are you a wage slave who says you hate your job yet you aren't applying elsewhere, fixing a resume, or open to the idea of moving to a different region? Do you complain about lack of appreciation yet do nothing to make it happen or find another branch to reach your goals?

Parenting:

Have you read my posts on Modern Agoge? If so, have you gone further and made your own? Do you read to your kids, actually educate them, or do something aside from sit on the sideline at their events?

Fitness:

Do you feel your physique is good enough because when you suck it in and flex you can sort of see abs? Do you think that because you aren't as obese as the other dads out there that you are by default, 'the hot dad'? Can you answer what your 1rm of Bench, deadlift, and squat is?

These are but a few examples, there are many more you've got to go through today and take an honest assessment of whether you're coasting or accelerating.

Before you can decide on what you're going to do with that gas pedal, you've got to answer honestly, are you giving this your best?

Wrapping up Day #7

There are a lot of areas in our life where we want to think we're owning and taking charge, but often time's pursuit of one goal means the sacrifice of another.

For the masculine man, he puts his entire effort into everything he does.

There are only so many minutes to the day, you cannot achieve every goal you'd like to achieve, but for those which you are pursuing, ensure that you aren't coasting when you should be putting the pedal to the metal.

Blog: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/07/day-7-the-gas-pedal/

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Hysterical Bonding
by asguiltyashell | May 15, 2017 | Link

Okay, I'll keep this short: 50+, married 17 years, 3 kids/Lifting for 10+ years. Last year, my wife is increasingly disinterested in sex/me. Happens over the course of the 18-24 months. I try $$dates, wine, massages, begging...nothing works. Get a couple of pity fucks, and I mean a couple, literally, over 12 months. End of the year, it hits me: it's done. She's going got stay in the cushy marriage (doesn't work hard, lost of $) and not care. I'm going to spend the last quarter of my life jerking off to Pornhub while she watches Housewives and gets fatter. I confront her several times and tell her this marriage is going to shit. It'll be over unless she puts some effort in. “Hell, can't you see where this is heading,” I scream. “I'll end up having an affair!” She get furious and accuses me of being dramatic and essentially goes, Pfftt and walks off. So I sulk, then up the lifting more, drop excess BF and, co-incidentally, head off on a fitness camp with a buddy. Lo and behold, I meet a single recently separated wife, who's got a tight bod and wants to fuck. We fuck a couple of times and it's hot and heavy. There's sexting and dirty calls but it quickly becomes apparent she's after another meal ticket. It ends messy. Meanwhile, wifey is oblivious, too wrapped up in her psycho suburban friends' lives to notice I'd disconnected for a couple of months. I start talking about slitting up, figuring where there's one bit of willing pussy, there will be more. Wife does start to acknowledge she's been selfish and unappreciative. I don't believe it, so keep her at arm's distance. But after a couple of months, she's seems genuine. So I confess about the affair, partly because she had some evidence and her suspicions were growing and partly I just didn't give a fuck anymore about holding this shit in. Let the chips fall where they may, sort of thing. She goes ape. There's screaming and yelling, bags are packed and lawyer threats made. I tell her she has to own it. We both fucked up, not just me. We talk, we fight then after a day or so, she drags me to bed and fucks me like a mad woman. We have sex 3 times that day. (I'm 50+, btw). Same the next day. And it's good, dirty sex. This is nearly 3 months ago. Been that way since, with a couple of fights...Apparently it's a real psychological thing, called “hysterical bonding”. Has anyone ever experienced like this?
Order your wife around

by Archwinger | April 11, 2015 | Link

So my mother-in-law is a bit of a pack-rat. We’re talking VHS tapes of shows that haven’t been on the air since the 80s, newspapers and magazines from the 90s, and so forth. I have a lot of theories why she does this crap, but that’s not the point of this post. Instead, I’m starting with something more important than women: pooping. I’m sitting on the pot, taking a shit, and my book and my cell phone are still in my suitcase, so I grab a magazine from a basket near the toilet. We’re in luck. It’s one of the newer items in her hoard. A Redbook from 2009, or was it 2007. I forget. 200X is close enough. I flip through and find an article about women lamenting their shitty husbands.

I know, I know. That could have been any Redbook, any article. But this one talks about the super-wife. The woman who “does everything around here,” often while working, too, and resents her husband for it. This article goes on and on about loser men who prefer a life where all they do is work, maybe take out the trash once in awhile, and sleep, while their wives do all the thinking and run the house. That’s actually a pretty popular and common modern trope. The queen rules the roost, or something like that.

These women hate their husbands. They don’t consider these men their husbands. They consider them another child. But the bottom line wasn’t surprising: You don’t desire someone you resent. These women had unsatisfying sex lives with their husbands. Many were cheating, many wanted to, many were thinking about divorce. But whatever their end-goals, sex was less frequent and less satisfying for the women who felt like they were in charge of their households.

So obviously, you think a woman who feels like she’s unfairly burdened and like her husband “doesn’t do anything around here” would do what all blue pill people recommend for any failing relationship: communicate. Tell her husband how she feels and ask him to do more instead of being a passive aggressive bitch while he wonders why she’s such a cunt and why he ever married her. But these women never do something so obvious or direct, for a variety of reasons.

First, however much a super-wife may hate her husband, women like feeling validated and important. Knowing that the home just plain can’t function without you and you’re absolutely indispensable is validating. Some of these women feel powerful. Telling your husband how she feels and ask him to do more instead of being a passive aggressive bitch while he wonders why she’s such a cunt and why he ever married her. But these women never do something so obvious or direct, for a variety of reasons.

Second, a loser man you browbeat into showing an occasional winner quality is not a winner. He’s just a bigger loser. Most women feel like if they have to actually ask their man to be less of a loser, and while in the course of obeying their orders, he does something non-loser-ish, that’s even worse than just being a natural-born loser. Parroting Rollo’s words, women want a man who “just gets it.” If you have to be told how to be a man, especially by your woman, you’re not a man. You’re just another child she has to take care of.
Third, and kind of in line with the above, women don’t trust a loser to lead their families. He’ll just screw it up. Giving a man some control over your household means relinquishing that control yourself. Worse, even if a man is competent at a task, he might not do it the way she would have done it, and women can’t stand it when someone else thinks or feels differently than they do and is still somehow successful in life. If you’re going to do something she could have or would have done for the family, she’s going to try to insist that you do it her way, because it’s a slap in her face if you do it your way and, worse, if things actually work out as well or better your way. And while it’s 100% true that women don’t want to be the CEO of the family organization, the one thing women would hate even more is to be an employee. A woman’s preferred role is the business owner. The guy who sits back and collects checks while other people run the place. And run it her way.

A lot of women out there really, really hate their husbands. So many of them hate their husbands so much that you can print an article about hating your husband in Redbook. But you can manage a woman’s expectations like you would any other employee in your organization.

First, women need to feel validated and important. Even indispensable. But this needs to be because you carved them a niche in your universe. Not because they took over your household on account of you sucking. Ask your wife to do things for you. All the time. Little things. Big things. Have a few things around the house that are “her things.” Things you specifically assign to her (even though you could do them yourself faster, easier, and better), because if she’s doing those things, that frees up your time to do other things. Let her feel powerful and important, but as an essential cog in your machine.

Second, take initiative. You run your household. Pay attention. You can’t drink beer and cuddle in front of the TV. And think your wife’s happy. That’s the path of the loser. Your job is to see something that needs to be done. Then just do it or if you need another set of hands or if she’s capable of doing it while you do something else, have your wife help or take care of it. But you need to be the one who notices a thing needs doing, you need to be the one to plan the solution, and you need to be the one who either takes care of it or utilizes your wife to take care of it. In woman-world, it’s the person who notices the problem first and complains the loudest about it who gets all the credit when it’s fixed. Not the person who does the work and solves the problem. So notice problems and fix them. When your wife brings you a problem that’s not on her list, tell her it’s not on your list today because you’re doing X today instead (X being the next thing you noticed needs doing), but ask her to get started on her thing. Pretend like it was your idea and another thing on your list and order her around.

Third, trust your woman to take care of some shit while you’re gone. At least twice a month, go out with guy friends or go to a professional networking event or take a class or something. Be gone. But tell her to try to get X, Y, and Z done or at least started. Make sure X, Y, and Z are trivial tasks that are easily within her abilities, because women have self-esteem issues and hate doing things they’re not already good at.

The modern sitcom trope is a wife who rules the roost ordering her bumbling husband around as he fails at everything he touches and she angrily declares that he’s never having sex.
again, but at the end of the episode, everything is all right, she reassures him, he feels comforted that she loves him despite his faults, and she makes everything better. As with all things marketed to women, this is just telling us what they want. Women want a man who rules the roost and orders them about, is invested enough to care whether they succeed or fail, but at the end of the day, loves them no matter what. Women want a father.
TRP is amoral – I know this, and you do is well. This weekend I decided to go ahead and break an 18-month long streak of monogamy with my wife. I don’t have much to complain about in terms of my marriage. I love my wife and my kids. She is an 80% FO and does a good job around the house and sex is not an issue.

The older I get, the older my kids get the less and less I see the value of marriage and knowing what I know about marriage now – I would never get married or advise someone to do it.

But being married, is not going to stop me from getting what I want out of life and doing the things I want to do. As a result of that I have to accept being both a moral and amoral person is necessary.

I am on week ten of my current stack, so my hormone levels are at mars levels. I am in the 1200# club for bench/squat/deadlift, and TBH I look juicy AF. My physical appearance is 100% on point right now. I have a PL competition coming up in Sept. 5’10” at 215 this morning. 38 years old. I walk around like a brick house.

This weekend there was a crawfish party we were invited to. Pool party, kids, etc. You know the drill. I do not miss these events. It was also on the 5th, so you know it was going to be a good time. Wife was out of town this weekend, so it was the kids and I.

The party is at the home of the Mormon married MILF (let’s call her Shelly) I used to fuck a few years ago, but other than heavy kino between her and I when we see each other there has been no sex for about 18 months. She is my age and is married to an obese highly beta 50 year old guy that is 100% her BB. She is a solid 7 for her age.

Kids and I show up around 6pm and the party is going. About 30 adults and kids there, so I work the room. Shelly re-introduces me to her friend Rene (HB7 as well) that is also our age, recently divorced and with her rebound boyfriend at the party. I have seen Rene a few times before but no major conversations. I chat with them for a few minutes, show off my new tattoo sleeve and talk about kids. Shelly closes on me and puts her hand on my ass while we are talking 100% in view of Rene. Right then I knew what she wanted.

Later on, I am outside by the pool playing with kids and Shelly comes up and gets all up on me again. I have not paid her much mind at this point, but I start to return kino to her. Keep in mind, that her husband is in the front driveway working some crawfish boiler machine. Eventually we are alone for a minute, and then I just grab the back of her neck, pull her in a give her a nice, deep kiss. 10 minutes later I was upstairs with her in her guest bedroom cave Manning her. 10 minutes after that we are back to the party and she is as giddy as a school girl with soaked underwear and my smell on her.

Did I feel bad? No. There is something about a woman who has to have you that just drives me crazy. I can do whatever I want with this woman. My wife is the same way, but it is different with her. The way she talks “I need your come inside me” “You are so addicting” all those things, it really blows up your confidence - I am not going to lie. You want abundance - this is how you get it.

The great thing about Shelly is that all she wants is to get fucked. She is exactly like me - no emotions, no BS. But Shelly is a perfect example of the type of women we talk about here.
Her solipsism, how she will cheat, how she knows that she wants to be fucked by me but provided for by her husband. And above all, how quick the cheating happens. The old days of people going and getting hotel rooms and doing all that is BS. It takes 20 minutes for me to meet Shelly in the parking lot of Krogers and fuck her in the back of my car.

We return to the party and keep going about our business. A short while later Rene comes up to me and is giving me the eyes now. Rene is in heat and I can see it, just like I can size up her boyfriend. It’s about an hour later that I take Rene into the same guest bedroom and cave man her as well. You would think I am making this shit up, but I am not.

I just met this woman seriously a few hours ago. Sure, I have seen her around, at other kid’s parties and such but no serious conversations. That didn’t stop me from pulling her hair and choking her while I had her pinned against the wall.

I know Shelly tipped her off, or at least made it well enough known that I was DTF and all Rene had to do was show some interest. My intention at this party was to just have a good time. I didn’t intend to go there and pick up women, but I was also not going to say no either.
Before I left for the night, I took Shelly back to the room one more time to top the night off. I am going to promote Shelly back to plate status for a while, after she gets her girl parts waxed like I told her.

TRP is amoral, there is no doubt about it. I simply cannot stress how important the physical parts of TRP are. Lifting is critical to both your physical and emotional states.

Women (people) are going to cheat. Some will say I am a SOB for cheating – and that is fine. I also loved the fact that there were two women walking around that party bowlegged with soaked underwear and wearing my smell because of me.

I also had zero issue talking to either the husband of the boyfriend of both of the women I just cave manned upstairs. Weird? Fucked up? Perhaps. I figure if they are going to cheat – they are going to do it anyway, so it might as well be with me...I don’t judge these men, they are what they are. It is emotionless for me. They are both good guys (nice guys) that do nothing sexually for their women.

It is my decision and I own it. Like I said, I love my wife and kids but as I get older, and my kids get older the arrangement of marriage becomes less and less valuable to me.

The hard fact to face is that if you are in a dead bedroom, or you are with a woman on the first date and you can’t f-close then you simply are not attractive enough. And ensuring we are attractive is why we are all here.
Wage War on Inactivity
by Don_Draper27 | February 18, 2019 | Link

Edit: This post's intention is not to tell you how to lose weight. The purpose is to spread awareness of inactivity and provide some ideas on how you can be more active in your life.

If you want to lose weight, get your macros and nutrition dialed in right.

Last week I weighed myself and noticed that I was about the same weight as I was a few years ago when I was trying to "dirty bulk" and had weighed the heaviest I'd ever had in my life.

It was a huge slap in the face.

I'd not weighed myself in a few months because I read somewhere that "the scale doesn't matter as long as you're making gains in the mirror".

I was confused. I've been going to the gym at least 5x a week. In the past few months I've only had a handful of beers in total. I had turkey beef and broccoli all last week for lunch and I've been intermittent fasting. How the fuck did I gain 20 lbs in the last few months? I'm not gonna flatter myself and convince myself it's all muscle.

My stomach does look bigger. There are a few more rolls on my ab area when I sit and lean forward. My pants have been fitting a little tighter. It's not because the laundry and dryer machine are shrinking them.

Fuck.

After some online research and lifestyle reflecting, I realized that my habits and actions lately have been completely sedentary.

Besides lifting weights, I've been a lazy fuck. I sit all day at work and only really get up to take a piss. I don't even walk down the street to the Mexican spot on my lunch anymore. I fucking drive there and convince myself that it's too cold out. Even in the fucking gym, I spend 2-3 minutes on rest times. I don't push myself on supersets and I've hamstered to myself that I don't need any cardio to lower by body fat %.

Weekends are even worse. Sitting down and playing video games a little too much or binging movies and TV. Convincing myself that I deserve the "break from all the mental energy I've outputted during the week".

Too many cheat meals on the weekends too.

This post is a bit of a rant but I hope it's a wake up call to some of you.
I've recently moved into a new apartment with my SO so I've seen it as an opportunity to set new habits.

Below I will provide habits and ideas I've already implemented or will implement to get the fuck up and wage war on inactivity.

- All weekend I've been drilling shit into walls and moving stuff around. Whatever needs to get done in the house get it done. Use a screwdriver when applicable instead of a power drill to work your forearms and wrists.

- I personally prefer hand washing the dishes vs. using a dishwasher. Me and my SO have an agreement that she will tackle laundry and I take care of dishes. Dishes aren't the funnest thing to do but when listening to an audio book (currently listening to "The Game") it flies by. Standing, scrubbing, moving large pans around is an easy way to burn a few calories.

- We live upstairs so instead of trying to muscle and awkwardly try to carry multiple trash bags and boxes towards the dumpster, I can just carry one thing at a time and lightly jog up and down the steps.

- We just got her dog back from her mom's place. I've never owned a dog but now I have a responsibility and excuse to go out on walks or runs every day. I plan on implementing a HIIT cardio on my runs with her. My new running shoes are arriving tomorrow, but fuck it, I'm taking her running in my vans when I get home from work tonight.

- I've pulled the sports watch out from the bottom of my misc. drawer and now carry it to the gym to time my resting. 45 - 60 seconds on rest times. Unless I'm doing supersets in which case I get no rest times. Implementing standing workouts vs. sitting (standing shoulder press vs. sitting). It feels good actually breaking a sweat after so long.

- I'm keeping a jump rope in my office at work. If for some reason I can't go to the gym, 10-20 minutes of HIIT jumpropping will do the trick.

- Taking my own trash out at work. Excuse to stretch my legs and give my mind and eyes a break from a monitor.

- Just doing some pushups and lunges in between chilling at home.

These are just some changes and habits I've implemented or will immediately begin doing in order to burn more calories and prevent myself from being a lazy fat fuck. Feel free to share your own below!
So I find myself out at a nice restaurant last night having a couple of drinks with my wife. We were just talking and I happened to notice a coworker or of the corner of my eye. I mention this to my wife, but she can't see her.

My wife didn't know, but Lisa is a solid 8/10 and really nice too. I don't pay anymore attention to Lisa and continue talking with my wife. About 5 minutes later Lisa sees me and waves and I wave back, but otherwise ignore her. This must have got Lisa wondering, because of course she can't see my wife either and I'm totally not giving her any attention, because that would be rude to my wife. I also wanted to see how well abundance mentality works.

Ten minutes later, Lisa's hamster got the better of her and she wonders over to my table. I introduce her to my wife and she sits down and chats for a few minutes. We leave a couple of minutes after Lisa returns to her table.

On the ride home my wife was asking me all sorts of questions about Lisa. She was clearly jealous of Lisa and worried that Lisa had come over to our table to talk to me. She said something about being worried that she might hit on me. My reply was "You can't really blame her, I'm a great catch."

My wife couldn't wait to fuck when we got home.

TL;DR TRP works like a champ.
What Do I Know About Lifting?
by bogeyd6 | January 19, 2017 | Link

Not much.

The First Week

The fat fuck has decided to do something about himself because being single got real very quickly. The gym has pretty much become a second home to me over the last 21 months. Day number 1 (a sunday) was at a public gym and I felt so weak and stupid that I was doing my SL5x5 with only the bar (45lbs), and struggling at that. My first squat was on a smith machine, because the squat racks were full. The bench press was just as unimpressive but easy. The row actually had an employee come and ask me if I needed help because they never seen that lift before and thought maybe I didn't know how. The truth is, I didn't. The next day was incredible. I was telling my legs to walk but they wouldn't move. I could not believe how sore I was. Monday was a day of reckoning for me and I wanted to quit. The chickens had finally come home to roost.

Tuesday I was back at the gym with my legs barely moving and was completely sore. Barely made the trip up the stairs and cursing myself for not using the elevator. Popped two aleve as aging men are known to do and hit the bar. This time I was squatting 50lbs and the soreness had actually started to lessen as I completed the sets. My legs were fine again and I did not fear walking down the stairs. Completed my first deadlift without hurting my back. Overhead press was actually easy for me. My upper body never really gets that sore because all the years I spent in the field. Left the gym feeling great and thinking the worst was behind me. I could not have been more wrong. The next day I basically considered going to the hospital because I broke my entire lower body.

Thursday went back to the same gym but by now the feeling dead sore was mostly past and I was feeling up to the 55lb squat. Excercise went as normal and I cannot express in written words how happy I was to have the next two days off from the gym. Met two guys at the gym that day. We still meet up for beers and wings monthly. Played on a poker tour with them and they have pretty much replaced the people who were using me in my life. I called in that Friday for work and spent the whole day in bed sleeping / emails. The next month pretty much was ok, I was still sore every single day and figured I just needed to keep moving. You could ask anyone who knows me. I don't quit.

My Breakthrough

The 85lb squat for me was a turning point. This was the first time I felt like I couldn't complete five reps. Those last five reps got everything I had and even almost threw the bar down on the safety catches. The point is, that even when you think you are at the bottom there is always something more you give. That day proved to me that I could do this and I am going to keep doing this. Maybe the next gym day I fail and that would have been a blow I couldn't recover from.
Problems

Personally I do not consider myself an expert on weight lifting. What I do consider myself an expert on is all the problems and mistakes the new lifter is going to make. Pretty much have made every mistake there is, took the injury in turn. Figured out why and knocked that shit off.

- Shoulder Injury? Check. Grip to narrow on bench press.
- Elbow Injury? Check. T-rexing the bent row.
- Knee Injury? Check. Wrong foot placement in the squat.
- Lower back is sore? Check. Bad deadlift technique.

You Don't Know What You Don't Know

Over time I was starting develop a problem/injury in my upper middle back. I suspected something was wrong in my OHP because it hurt when I would straighten up from a slouch. I setup this video to record my squat at 300lb's back in Jan of 2016. One full year ago. The video is heavily redacted but I kept in the part that is relevant.

The first issue is the bar is not going straight up and down. There is a curve from front to back right near the top. So basically I am squatting and then using my posture muscles to inch it the rest of the way up. I knew right away when I seen the video the cause of the problem. The second issue was my choice of footwear causing a slight balance issue. New balance is not proper lifting shoes. The crossfit shoes are excellent.

This lead me into another direction as well. If my squat was bad, what else was bad? Alot. In all those gains I was pretty much doing a small part of the form wrong in one way or the other. This was leading me up to bigger and bigger issues and also meant I was training the wrong muscles.

If you have a question, you better ask somebody

Don't even think about the trainers in your local box gyms. Don't bother researching all over the internet. The trainers are not trained in lifting very heavy and doing it safely. You could probably squat 65lbs completely with bad form, deadlift it with worse form and be ok. You don't want to carry the bad habits further.

You can easily find a local powerlifting coach. You can go to http://www.powerliftingwatch.com/node/4421 and search for gyms somewhere near you. Give them a call and ask about a few sessions or just to come and hang out during a practice. Typically they will either do it for free or you can pay to go once or twice for form checks. Most of them are quite reasonable and the two I went to were super friendly. These guys are professionals and have been training new people for years. If you decide to make it your gym, then that is even better.

My First Competition
Fast Forward to Dec 2016. I decide to lift in two powerlifting meets in the NGPF and USPA. Leading up to the second competition my tested numbers were:

Bench Press: 355lb Deadlift: 385lb Squat: 455lb

With my weight and age I was in the submaster 242lbs weight class at 269lbs. I hit 355, then 365, and missed the third at 370 for my bench presses at both competitions. They were pretty close together. It was during these two competitions I learned that my squat and bench press are not up to competition forms. Most of these guys are benching 400+ and squatting 500+. Fuck it, I wanted to make my numbers official.

Crossfit/Cardio

The last thing I have to say about MRP and Lifting. Crossfit is not going to help you much. You are going to miss all the things you get from lifting heavy that you will not get in crossfit. Being tired at the end of a workout doesn't mean it helped you. Typically after I complete my routine I am tired for about 15 minutes and then I have endless energy the rest of the night. Nine months of crossfit wouldn't have gotten my squat to 300lbs.

Closing

- Go lift heavy.
- Ask for help.
- Don't give up.
- Get your diet in check.
- Pick a routine and stick with it.
...Is how my last anniversary there ended. That was 3 years ago. So last weekend I decided to try again, but this time I did it right.

Two weeks ago I planned out an overnight trip to Vegas, and I didn't worry myself with questions about whether or need to my wife will have fun. I planned the trip for me, what do I want to do? Where do I want to stay? Where do I want to eat, have fun, etc? I told my wife I had planned our anniversary and invited her to join me. She laughed, but enthusiastically accepted the invitation.

We stayed at the D in downtown. After check-in, we walked through Fremont Street to a bar called Park on Fremont. I'm a sucker for a good pun, so I chose this place because they have a bunch of stuffed birds framed on the wall, and one scene has three stool pigeons, stuffed pigeons perched on fucking stools! It was hilarious and once my wife figured out that was why I chose that place, she lost it, in a good way.

Afterwards, we walked down further because I wanted to check out the container park, a shopping plaza where all the stores are built out of shipping containers.

Then we walked back to the hotel and lost some money at the casino. This is all stuff I wanted to do, I didn't ask for her input, and she happily went along with everything.

When it came time to end the night, she came to me in bed, I initiated and we had some great sex.

The next morning I took her to the hash house a go go for breakfast. On our drive home, she told me she had an amazing time and said that it was the best anniversary to date, we've been married for 16 years. She said what made it the best is that it's something I planned completely, with no input from her.
Why is a stupid fucking question.
by stonemimbletists | September 27, 2016 | Link

They were built for a time when the gods used to make the sun go away, time to let them go. --Me

This is an illustrative example.

One of the biggest peeves that bored college women and housewives have is the lack of Rigor in TRP. Show me the research paper where it says that I want to fuck alphas and marry betas? If this is the message you take from this, it's your own fault for being a retard.

Why Vs How

Why is what got us the Greek mythical gods, how is what got us the steam engine. Why developed the idea of equal genders, how got us laid with PUA. Why is the question of a 9 year old, how is the question of a man.

For some background, if you have 30 minutes, and remember back when they weren't progressive feelgood circlejerks, one of the better TED talks out there, David Deutch Talks about good explanations versus bad ones.

Before the Scientific Revolution, they believed that everything important, knowable, was already known, enshrined in ancient writings, institutions, and in some genuinely useful rules of thumb --which were, however, entrenched as dogmas, along with many falsehoods. So they believed that knowledge came from authorities that actually knew very little. And therefore progress depended on learning how to reject the authority of learned men, priests, traditions and rulers. Which is why the Scientific Revolution had to have a wider context.

I think TRP, and the manosphere in general, follows along the same thread as the scientific revolution. None of the enlightenment had replicability errors in their research papers, or research papers at all. They tried things, reported findings, and came up with explanations, simple. If it didn't work, you'd find out in the obituary the next day. The key part, is explanations that aren't able to be varied to fit the facts. The red pill is in it's infancy still, and broadly speaking, the manosphere has only been around since the dawn of the millennials, created by the GenX demographic. And there's a lot of why questions in there.

They are all garbage, all of them.

Women are AWALT because of all kinds of reasons.

- Because shitty fathers
- Because beta males validation
- Because internetBecause tinder
- Because no-fault divorce
Because globalism.

I mean, at the end of the day, does any of that really matter? Is it really anything more than mental masturbation? I don't see it as useful. Maybe there's some magic formula, some legislation that will make the world work for me, one wouldn't be the first egomaniac who thought they could change the world. Point is, TRP is never about changing the world, you can't control the world is the prevailing theme. It's guys swapping notes.

That's all. Guys swapping notes

This easy variability is the sign of a bad explanation, because, without a functional reason to prefer one of countless variants, advocating one of them, in preference to the others, is irrational. So, for the essence of what makes the difference to enable progress, seek good explanations, the ones that can't be easily varied, while still explaining the phenomena.

Again, this is why why is a shitty question. You'll maybe get it right, but there's too many variables, so you probably won't. AWALT because of X? Well, all it takes is one dude who brainwashed his daughter into thinking she's a man, some autistic girl with a boob job, and it all comes crumbling down. To what end? So that you can dismiss the obvious things happening around you? Fuck that. Guys weren't learning PUA to learn why they weren't getting laid. They did it to learn how to get laid. And you need to learn how to be a man, ask men who have done it, hear what worked, apply it for yourself.

Keep it simple, do what works, ditch what doesn't

I can't make it simpler, more actionable, and harder to bullshit yourself than this advice. If you have to think of a reason to explain why you're doing dumb shit, then you're bullshitting yourself. People aren't that hard to figure out, once you learn to put the ego away. Women want the toy on the top shelf, the toy that doesn't want them.

I could go on. The only thing in the way of you getting what you want, is you, and your bullshit expectations. This is simple, to the point where everyone laughs at it's core. What, you guys just lift and be confident? Don't go into a situation where you have at least a 50/50 shot at getting fucked? Dude, everyone knows that already, it's common sense! Except it isn't. Everyone is confident, and thinks they are in shape, just like everyone goes into a fight with a gameplan... Which works until you get punched in the face.

Stop it

Stop worrying about why, why they do what they do, why you should lift, and shut your stupid whore mouth when you want to cry. Stop thinking you need to have her on board with your every decision, and why you can't persuade her to suck your dick while you're telling her your plan for the house. Why, why, why, are you a faggot?

Stop thinking in why start thinking in how.

- How do you get valuable people to adore you? Be valuable.
- How do you get valuable? Be the guy women want to fuck.
• How do you get your dick wet? Be attractive, don't be unattractive.
• How do you be attractive? Dress well, lift, eat clean, lay off the vices
• How do you be not unattractive? Don't cry like a bitch, be irrationally confident, internalize you're the prize, own your fucking adult life.

I guarantee, if you start building muscle, losing fat, and stop acting like a child/woman, 80% of your work is already done. I never figured out why this stuff works, it's outside the scope of the plan.

Your plan is to be valuable, for it's own sake, why is the question of the lazy, because why gives you a bullshit reason to doubt things, instead of seeing them for yourself. Why is the question you ask people more valuable than you, to give you any reason to dismiss what they say, if they even bother to answer you. Most truly valuable people won't waste their time on some child asking why they need to eat their vegetables, they are too busy to waste time spinning their wheels.

So stop asking why, start asking how
This is not a post about creating an idealistic plan (that is blue pill), and “shooting for the stars”, this is about checking YOURSELF on how consistent you are, how disciplined you are, and whether you even know what the fuck you want now, in a year, in five/ten/fifteen years from now. In order to do so, you have to be willing to critically assess your performance in these three areas with 100% honesty and accountability. This is to wake up motherfuckers.

Discipline, backed by consistency, applied towards a well-thought-out vision (or MAP) is the most important and effective recipe for success. What do you want? It’s clear here we all want to get common areas of our lives together to meet our vision. But how do you figure getting your dick wet more often is any different (in terms of work, time, and energy applied) than making that sale with that big client? What makes you think getting proficient in Brazilian Jiu Jitsu because you don’t feel confident you can protect you and your wife when you’re out at night, is any different than learning how to dress well, correct your poor posture, and to refine your social skills and game?

How you do anything is how you do every thing. I see guys on here all the time saying they want things to match their vision but aren’t staying disciplined in their actionable steps, who willingly aren’t staying consistent day-to-day and falling off the path, all of which is required to follow your vision and to move towards what YOU want for yourself. Are you serious about this? Because I’ll remind you there are guys literally killing themselves because they never found the information you have saved in the “bookmarks” on your phone. Guys that may have actually implemented these tools and strategies to fix their situation, had they known, as if their lives depended on it. Do you act like that? Be honest with yourself. Are you doing everything you can to fix your situation, knowing how to do it, like your life depended on it? Or are you half-assing things again (sound familiar? - like your old “former” self??). You want the changes, they require discipline, consistency, and in the direction of and moving towards your vision. You are either serious or you’re not. You have a second chance. Don’t keep that on the shelf to collect dust. Do it, everything in your vision, like your life depends on it.
Comfort tests and attachment theory
by Sepean | May 11, 2015 | Link

I've read a lot on the mainstream psychology field of attachment theory due to me and my wife both having attachment issues, and we were well on our way to passing them on to our kids too.

Attachment theory is very well documented, and it covers what we call comfort tests. And I think it offers some additional insights that are typically not covered in red pill material.

When humans experience from loss, stress, criticism, whatever, we get anxious and this activates attachment behavior where we seek physical and psychological closeness with our attachment figures - typically parents and partners, or very close friends.

If we get that closeness, we feel secure, our anxieties are alleviated, and we can go back to our everyday activities and dealing with our problems.

If our attachment figures instead reject us, it hyperactivates our attachment system, and our anxiety and attachment behaviors increase as we try harder and harder to get our attachment figure to respond and give us the closeness we need, which may escalate to clinginess, crying, threats.

As an alternative, we give up, suppress our anxiety, distance ourselves of emotionally from the attachment figure and consider finding a replacement.

A lot of this is just basic comfort test knowledge: if you treat your wife's comfort tests as shit tests and reject them, she'll just get more hysterical and eventually leave you. Nothing new here.

What attachment theory brings to the table is the finding (and this is very well documented) that the attachment figure just needs to bring physical and emotional closeness. You don't need to fix the problem or change whatever she is complaining about. Attachment behavior is a basic survival strategy - it is an instinct in a social animal that senses trouble and just needs to check that there are pack members who are close and who has the emotional connection that will motivate them to help out if the problems get worse.

That's why when your wife is all worked up, you can fix it just by holding her: you don't need to fix her problems, she just needs to know you are close and you love her.

This is also why children still love abusive parents and why women often stay with abusive partners: our attachment wiring didn't develop to deal with things of minor evolutionary importance like not getting a black eye once a month, it is about ensuring that there are people who will have your back when predators attack or you're too ill to find your own food.

I used to have a lot of problems with telling shit tests and comfort tests apart - my wife like all women is cunning and will disguise shit tests as comfort tests. I still have trouble telling them apart, but a few weeks back I made the mental connection between attachment theory and comfort tests and that made me realize I don't have to be able to tell them apart. When I suspect it might be a comfort test, I treat what she says like a shit test and agree and amplify or whatever, and hug her (or display physical and/or emotional closeness some other way), and it's golden. And even when it is clearly a comfort test, I don't actually have to deal with the issue or give in to her demand; I just have to let her know I still love her even though she isn't getting her way on this matter either.

This works great on kids too. When they get hysterical because you tell them no, don't yell or ignore them, hug them and tell them no. Then they'll quickly calm down - the hysteria is not because of the incredible hardship of not getting cookies for dinner, but because they need reaffirming that you're not denying them cookies because you don't love them.

EDIT: clarification that I don't hug (or something similar) with all shit tests, just when I think it might be a comfort test.
Starting reading The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People by Stephen Covey. Here's an excerpt.

To me it exemplifies the RP on hard mode idea. It's something to strive for, but I believe you can still find happiness and contentment being independent without reaching leader status. Bear with the formatting, posting from mobile again.

"...On the maturity continuum, dependence is the paradigm of you—you take care of me; you come through for me; you didn’t come through; I blame you for the results. Independence is the paradigm of I—I can do it; I am responsible; I am self-reliant; I can choose. Interdependence is the paradigm of we—we can do it; we can cooperate; we can combine our talents and abilities and create something greater together..."

Emotional Dependence

"...If I were emotionally dependent, my sense of worth and security would come from your opinion of me. If you didn’t like me, it could be devastating..."

Emotional Independence

"...I would be validated from within. I would be inner directed. My sense of worth would not be a function of being liked or treated well. It’s easy to see that independence is much more mature than dependence. Independence is a major achievement in and of itself. But independence is not supreme. Nevertheless, the current social paradigm enthrones independence. It is the avowed goal of many individuals and social movements. Most of the self-improvement material puts independence on a pedestal, as though communication, teamwork, and cooperation were lesser values. But much of our current emphasis on independence is a reaction to dependence—to having others control us, define us, use us, and manipulate us. The little-understood concept of interdependence appears to many to smack of dependence, and therefore, we find people, often for selfish reasons, leaving their marriages, abandoning their children, and forsaking all kinds of social responsibility—all in the name of independence.

The kind of reaction that results in people “throwing off their shackles,” becoming “liberated,” “asserting themselves,” and “doing their own thing” often reveals more fundamental dependencies that cannot be run away from because they are internal rather than external—dependencies such as letting the weaknesses of other people ruin our emotional lives or feeling victimized by people and events out of our control. Of course, we may need to change our circumstances. But the dependence problem is a personal maturity issue that has little to do with circumstances. Even with better circumstances, immaturity and dependence often persist. True independence of character empowers us to act rather than be acted upon.

It frees us from our dependence on circumstances and other people and is a worthy, liberating goal. But it is not the ultimate goal in effective living. Independent thinking alone is not suited to interdependent reality. Independent people who do not have the maturity to think and act interdependently may be good individual producers, but they won't be good leaders or team players. They're not coming from the paradigm of interdependence necessary to succeed in marriage, family, or organizational reality. Life is, by nature, highly interdependent..."

Emotional Interdependence

"...Interdependence is a far more mature, more advanced concept. If I am physically interdependent, I am self-reliant and capable, but I also realize that you and I working together can accomplish far more than, even at my best, I could accomplish alone. If I am emotionally interdependent, I derive a great sense of worth within myself, but I also recognize the need for love, for giving, and for receiving love from others. If I am intellectually interdependent, I realize that I need the best thinking of other people to join with my own. As an interdependent person, I have the opportunity to share myself deeply, meaningfully, with others, and I have access to the vast resources and potential of other human beings.

Interdependence is a choice only independent people can make. Dependent people cannot choose to become interdependent. They don’t have the character to do it; they don’t own enough of themselves..."

I think this a great breakdown of the MRP journey that the Family Alpha often talks about. About having fun with your woman and realizing you're on the same team. But you can't get there without breaking free of your BP dependence first.

It also should be said that independence will not guarantee interdependence. Like MRP says over and over, it might not work with your current wife.
The Elements of Frame 0 - Introduction
by strategos_autokrator | April 20, 2015 | Link

Frame is the most important concept for TRP self-improvement. However, the concept is not defined very well in TRP. Everyone "knows" what it is, but when pressed, everyone says a slightly different definition of an incomplete definition. When I came here, it seemed like it was something that you only know when you got it, as a weird spiritual enlightenment. It is not weird or occult. But, I haven't found any good attempts at demystifying it. Because of this, it is very difficult as a beginner to understand how to maintain frame. Most of the posts in this subreddit are simply men struggling with this, as they don't understand what is weak about their frame and how to improve it. There is very little written about this. I think this is a big conceptual hole in TRP and MRP.

In this series, I’m going caveman on that big hole to fill it up. Based on my own transition, I propose a structure of the Elements of Frame. This is the first in a series of posts on this subject. Even if you disagree with my proposed structure and its elements, I hope that this will lead to fruitful discussions in the community. I'm writing this not because I want to wank about it, or because I think I know what it is, but because some have suggested that my way of talking about frame helped them work on their frames. Developing your way of understanding your frame is the most important tool to help you detect weaknesses in your own frame. It will help you feel more confident, improve sex, be happier and lead in your marriage.

In this introduction, I’ll discuss the basic elements of Frame. The point of this post is to define the main concepts and their relationships so I can expand on them in future posts.

Frame is a tetrahedron.

If you like, think of it as a tripod instead, it is the same. The three points where the tripod touches the ground are the Intellectual, the Emotional and the Physical basis of Frame. Each must be strongly grounded for the Frame to be balanced, strong and stable. If one isn't good, the Frame collapses to that side. I define each of these basis as:

- Intellectual Basis - It is having the knowledge, the know-how, and the logical means to get what you want. An example of this is simply the logical understanding of the women’s cycle, being aware of it, and understanding how that affects your sex life. There are a lot of other examples, and I will discuss them in a future post, but they all make sense in the logical part of your brain. This subreddit, the guides and the books in the sidebar are simply a resource to help you make this basis strong, nothing more nor less.

- Emotional Basis - It is understanding your emotions such that you can use them to get what you want. An example of a strong emotional basis is not acting butthurt during a shit test. Having a strong emotional basis means that you understand and accept your emotions, and know how to properly display them to get what you want. Your own inner work to really understand and accept your emotion is the source of having a strong basis. Emotions are the way women understand their relationship to you (they don't see you, they only see how you make them feel). This is a very powerful component in your marriage. I will discuss this in much more detail in the future, including resources for improving this.

- Physical Basis - This is having the physical tools to get what you want. The quintessential example is lifting heavy weights. There is a lot said already about lifting, but my definition goes beyond this. Other areas of this basis, including posture, voice, grooming, diet and your own sexuality, all which affect the way your wife sees you. I will discuss these in a future post. This area is underscored for beginners because it is the easiest one to improve in a systematic way. It is hard to measure how you are improving on your emotional or intellectual basis, but it is very easy to know if you are lifting more, or if your posture is better. You can just see it in the mirror. So if you don't know what to do, instead of crossing your arms feeling helpless, work on this area.

You have to work on all these areas in your self improvement. Depending on your specific needs, you might need even more work in one area than in another. But if you ignore one, your frame will weaken and will topple. This subreddit only can help you with the intellectual basis of your frame. The rest is work you must do on your own, not here. This is why this is a path for yourself, by yourself. You won't have frame only from reading here.

So far, I talked about the basis of the tripod, but I haven't mentioned the cusp of it. The tip of the tripod is the frame element of “Vision”.

- Vision - It is the strength to see everything in the world and your interactions with it clearly. From this, you can see clearly what is that you want in your life. You have the clarity to work hard on what you control, and you plot a path to obtain your goals regardless of what you don’t control. From your vision, you can be economical with your resources, and you don't get dragged into crap that doesn’t add to your vision. And if someone tries to fuck with you, you can clearly see how it doesn’t add value, and you just ignore the shit and move on. Concepts that are part of this vision are, Outcome Independence, Leadership, and clear goals of self improvement. When you have a strong vision of what you want in your relationship, you become an Oak that makes your wife trust you and look for safety and strength in you. Your vision also allows you to self reflect on the basis, and helps you tweak things to always make it stronger.

When you have a strong Intellectual, Emotional and Physical basis, and they come together in a way that they support each other, you have a strong Vision. This, like the tripod, is a very strong and stable structure. This is Frame. Frame is understanding the world and yourself in it so you work hard to get what you want. It is reframing the whole universe to where you are the unstoppable force that will get what you want. It includes accepting the universe and people in it for what it is, but also, owning your shit and constantly changing yourself to be better. It is changing your perception from a victim to the hero of your story. It is the most personal thing you can have because this is the way you define your whole life. This is what inspires leadership in your marriage. As I flesh out the structure, I hope I can make define Frame in a more concrete way.

As you start in your transition, you struggle to “maintain frame”. This is because some of the tripod legs are on a very weak basis, or poorly positioned. It will take time and hard work to get them to a strong basis. It takes a lot of self reflecting and owning your shit to understand your weaknesses in the frame and plan to improve them. However, once you have a good basis, you will see how the three legs of the frame come together very nicely, supporting each other. This is the “Aha” moment of the TRP transition. From here on, instead of you struggling to maintain frame, you can rely on your frame instead to feel strong. It is when you have reached this point that you really have frame.

In future posts I will expand on each element of the basis. Later in the series I will discuss how the elements come together, and how an uneven frame sometimes makes one weak base element affect the other basis. I will also explain how different strong basis elements come together as part of familiar TRP concepts. I will try my best to put in this structure a lot of TRP concepts. I plan to even discuss the different ways women test these elements of frame, and from this, as you have a strong frame, the specifics of the details of what they are testing become less important, so if women push/pull one area, it is unmoved because all the parts in the structure support each other. Thinking this way has helped me a lot simplify how to pass shit tests, how to feel better about myself, and how to worry less about the stupid stuff. The results are a better marriage.

This will be a long series of theory posts, as it will take me a while to complete the picture. However, since Frame is so essential, I'm going to tackle this topic. I understand that right now this all seems very abstract and incomplete, because this is simply the introduction. I hope that as I add more parts of the structure, the series will become valuable to the community.

This series continues here.
Warning: I jerk myself off pretty hard in the following text. Get a napkin and deal with it. Most of this should align with general RPT, but this is more of a FR/overview on what I bring to the table in my relationships and why it works. The anecdotes below bounce between my wife's perception of me and people outside of my marriage. You'll need to read between the lines. Mods feel free to nuke this if you feel it's irrelevant or doesn't adhere to the "quality post" standards.

Me (for context): Married a year or so. Compete in a team sport twice a week. Not lifting often enough - no excuse. Work from home. $155-160k annually, projected to triple within the next year through equity and investments coming to fruition - live in an area with median household income of $20-30k. I handle the finances and make almost every decision when it comes to our unit while allowing input from her as my first mate. Wife was a super feminist. Now mostly supports equal pay and doesn't think women should be in positions of power. Huh.

Introduction

Due to growing up poor, my wife typically hung out with other poor or “alternative” kids in high school as she had more in common with them - no vacations or small luxuries to talk about or use together. She also grew to despise wealthy people and the lifestyles they lived because from the outside looking in, it appeared to be wasteful and greedy. This habit continued throughout her life and bled into her dating life. She dated low quality men with little drive or a slew of mental health problems because she felt like that’s what she deserved. The result was a very negative and toxic outlook on relationships, marriage, and men in general after being continually let down due to her poor choices in men. As most of us know, women who don’t have their needs met become controlling and anxiety-ridden beasts who can’t bring themselves to trust even the most diligent leader.

Be Valuable - Professional Life

Soon after meeting me, my wife realized that I have a significant network of high-profile contacts within my field that bordered on the professional/personal line. She sat in my office while I was in a conference call with a venture capitalist who was asking me for insights on a tech company. She listened in on another one where a close friend/CEO/multi-millionaire told his employee that I was the best INSERT_PROFESSION_HERE that he’s ever met. It didn’t take long for her to realize that I was not only extremely competent in several branches of my field, but that I was influential to very powerful and well-known people.

After these conversations, she expressed (almost embarrassingly) that she loves having a partner that is valuable to society and important people. She loves the fact that I have money and the potential (and the ability) to increase that exponentially. We don’t worry about financial stability, which takes away the reason most couples fight in the first place. No worry = no stress = minimal emotional shit tests.

Take-away: Be an asset to whatever your career or business venture may be. You should be doing this anyways unless you’re a dumbfuck with no ambition.

Be Valuable - Social Life

I rarely meet anyone that doesn’t like me after speaking with me for a few minutes. I make people comfortable, ask questions, and engage them. I’m witty, generally outgoing and happy, and my humor can be tailored to the setting that I’m in fairly easily. I have many hobbies, play multiple musical instruments, enjoy working with my hands, and have experience in many different fields of work.

My social clout within my wife’s friend group is fairly good as well. She’s constantly posting to Instagram/Facebook about our general activities. Anniversary trip to a luxury retreat, entirely new makeup collection so she can look nice for me (holy fuck this shit is expensive), cooking nice meals, my professional accomplishments. I’ve had her female classmates come up to me on multiple occasions stating that they wish all men were like me.

Take-away: Be the guy everyone’s feet point to in the circle, whose words are met with eagerness.

Be Valuable - Sex Life

This topic I feel is over-covered in this sub, but I’ll go over my thoughts on the matter regardless. I’ll focus on having better sex more than “just getting it”.

In the physical/touch realm of a woman’s psyche, they only really want/need a couple of things - Dominance & Comfort.

If you’re not a valuable man who your wife doesn’t want to submit to, you’re probably not going to want to even try to lead out of the gate with dominance. You have to train her to accept that her role - initially at least sometimes - in the bedroom is to be submissive and purely a tool for your release. Chances are you’re not getting the sex you want and are pesterling her for that shit, which is going to make her less likely to want to be nude or anything less than pyjama’d around you. You’ve got that engine seized up, buddy. You’re going to have to apply the oil liberally and probably replace a gasket.

The easiest way to unlock this need to be dominated is to prime it with some comfort - they crave the rollercoaster. Spoon her. Rub her abductors and inner thighs with an oily/lotion-covered hand. Go slow so that she gradually Put your dick in then take it out. Repeat, but delay each entry by 30 seconds each time until she realizes that she NEEDS dick and asks/begs for it. This puts her in the mindset that you’re in charge for this encounter and she needs to submit to you. Tell her what to do. Don’t ask her to change positions - pick her up and move her where you want her. If she’s clitoral, don’t let her touch herself for awhile and tell her she’s not allowed to climax. Slap her ass, choke her with her own hair, push your thumb down on her asshole, stand up and make her blow you while she’s on her knees (this is beneficial to the whole dominating persona as it puts her in a “serving” position. Make her ask permission to orgasm. Caveman her and finish wherever is most disrespectful. Get her a wet wipe and some paper towels because you’re a gentleman.

The aforementioned sexual dominance tactics are all things I employ with my wife and she typically orgasms 4-6 times per encounter. This is entirely due to her willingness to submit to and focus on the rollercoaster with me, not the size of my tool. She’s comfortable, trusts me, and loves what I do to her. I also take initiative and make her pick out sexy underwear from VS, nighties, nice makeup, etc. If your lady doesn’t feel sexy, she’ll have a harder time being comfortable with you. Supplement her appearance and react accordingly depending on how it looks - you’ll run into comfort tests here. AA/AM.

Take-away: Don’t jump in the pool if it’s not filled yet. It’ll be dry and unforgiving.

Enjoy Your Life (and by proxy, your marriage)

My wife and I have a very happy, loving, and mostly traditional marriage due to my personal developments as a man. I saw value in her and brought her along with me for my journey. I’ve told her what my goals are and she’s fallen in line with them completely.

She knows that if she ever has the desire to be a SAHM, I’d be okay with that. She has the choice to either follow her career and give me children in a few years or choose to not pursue it and give me them sooner. She respects me greatly when I’m leading appropriately and shit tests me when I slip up - which is something I truly appreciate as it keeps my leadership in check and pushes me forward. I get the quality and quantity of sex I’m okay with (I always want better/more), the right dose of female companionship that I can handle, and somebody to just generally enjoy my life with.

I had to fix her anxious and controlling behavior by showing her that everything would be okay with me at the helm. She pushed back hard at first, but has fallen almost completely into the traditional wife role. She was heavily invested in 3rd/4th-wave feminism theory and now spends her free time reading TRP and occasionally this sub - a feat, indeed. She no longer has ill feelings towards wealthy people now that she has a small taste of it.

I live a fantastic life because I focus on myself, and my wife adds value to my life in many ways so she gets to come along for the ride.

Conclusion

You’re constantly in competition with other men. You can succeed in any number of areas, but if your wife sees someone doing better than you, she’ll almost always wish that was her man. We can’t all be tall with great bone structure and monster dongs, however we do have the ability to be physically fit, mentally sharp, stoic, and financially secure. These are all things that can be achieved through persistence and hard work. Be the guy other men don’t want their women around - the one they make excuses to avoid socializing with because they feel - and are - inferior. Let your wife hit social media and brag about all of the awesome shit you do. Make her friends seethe with jealousy and anger because Billy Beta just isn’t cutting it. Make your money and flaunt it every once in awhile - the abundance mentality that you should have doesn’t stop at gaming women. And for the love of god, fuck your woman hard and frequently until her ears ring and she can’t walk to the bathroom to cleanup without help. Only when she passes out have you done your job.

Are you the husband your wife brags about, or the one she hopes doesn’t come up in conversation because you're such a miserable embarrassment?
The Pill, Ego, Depression, and Brainwashing
by Acerp321 | December 13, 2018 | Link

It’s amazing the situations we find ourselves in seemingly not within our control. I don’t think my situation is all that unique of stumbling onto TRP with much bigger issues than just a lackluster sex life. After all, we know that WE are the problem there, not her. Depression, in all its forms is pretty much an epidemic in western societies. We are living lives so far removed from what our mind and bodies have evolved into. A Fight Club quote that convey the point:

“Advertising has us chasing cars and clothes, working jobs we hate so we can buy shit we don't need. We’re the middle children of history, man. No purpose or place. We have no Great War. No Great Depression. Our Great War’s a spiritual war... our Great Depression is our lives. We’ve all been raised on television to believe that one day we’d all be millionaires, and movie gods, and rock stars. But we won’t. And we’re slowly learning that fact. And we’re very, very pissed off.”

The majority of all people in this world are lead by their ego. The ego is not your self esteem, pride, or confidence. It’s that internal dialogue where you think you are problem solving. Consciously thinking things through. It’s that part of your brain that gets triggered when someone says something insulting EVEN though you know it’s just plain false. It’s the part of your brain that tells you you are not the man you should be because you don’t have that house, car, job, etc. it’s worse if you are very intelligent and know it, because you KNOW you can solve anything if you just think it through.

Well, that’s how you up being the crazy guy on the bus having an argument with himself. He’s just that far gone. Let that ego lead your life, and you just may end up there. We have things too safe, too easy, and too plentiful these days. It leaves too much time for the ego to rule you.

Those thoughts passing by or zipping by at 150mph in some cases are externally influenced. We are in the Information Age, and nobody has ever been exposed to so much to think about at once in history. Advertising intends to get in your head through your ego. The media with their narrative? Same. Politicians? They’re not stupid. Master manipulators. Coworker challenging your frame? Take a guess.

If you can come to the realization that you are not your thoughts, you are not your feelings, and a thought or emotion can be absolute bullshit, you can gain mental clarity. Everything slows down inside your head, and your day to day can suddenly be on easy mode. Fucked up at work? Take note, plan action, forget it. You won’t feel compelled to mull it over for hours or days. Move on.

You can see how this applies to all aspects of life. Shutdown the ego, and all you really have to do is live and die. The rest, including your RP mission will be done by calmly making choices and accepting whatever outcome that nets.
[FR] Men, don't let your wives raise your boys.

by UEMcGill | March 16, 2015 | Link

We have a group of friends that all have kids our kid’s age. They range from, dysfunctional and married to a single Mom. My own observation is that I am the only Redpill husband. Sometimes this presents problems because there’s a little too much governing by feelz and trying to make the boys behave like girls.

I raise my boys with this in mind. Over the last year or two I’ve had a quite a few discussions with my wife about the mind of a boy, and how it’s not the mind of a girl. Things like “not feeling guilty because of someone else's feelings" and how to blast a 7 year old girls shit test (fucking AWALT, right?). One of the biggest things I’ve asked my wife to do is "Leave the boys alone, let them figure it out on their own" and to not coddle to his feelings. He’s welcome to them, but they’re his to deal with. There was an incident where my son, UE- Jr (age 8), where he and a couple of his buds were hanging out, and one of them had a bag of fruit snacks. Like thieves divvying up loot, they all split the contents. Later that day he relays us the info that Little-Ashley-Shit-Tester (8 and well versed in shit test theory) came up to them while they were eating said snack, she proceeds to cry and run away. She later told her mom, who told my wife, “The boys were being mean! They wouldn’t share with me!” My boy is honest to a fault. He will tell you the absolute truth. So my wife starts to let him have it. “Why didn’t you share with little Ashley-Shit-tester? That’s mean!” He was like “Ma! She never said anything, we were eating, she came up and left crying. I didn’t know why.” So I asked him, “Did she ever ask you for some?” . “nope”. My wife starts back at him “Well you should have offered...”. I quickly shut it down. “Nope. She’s a big girl, if she can’t speak her mind that’s her fault. Don’t worry about it Jr.” My wife reluctantly agreed. The back story is, Little-Ashley-Shit-Tester is an 8 year old master of shit-testing. I’ve seen her make her own father go fetch something because she could, then when he scampered away, look at me, tilt her head and snicker. AWALT gentleman! They are bred to do it.

One of the hardest things I have to deal with is the dreaded Single-mom. My wife picks up her son from school to help out, and while I don’t care, there’s a lot of interference I have to fix because of his home life. Typical Single-Mom shit. There’s a Deadbeat dad, he’s not in the picture, never married, etc. She lives with her parents, but dad is an old grandpa who isn’t very involved. Single-mom’s boy is a good kid, but it’s obvious there’s no good male in his life. He’s emotional, entitled, manipulative, and he tries to guilt me with his feelings about “fairness” (sounds like a woman huh?). I’ll reprimand him and two minutes after his mom gets to our house, he’s complaining to her about it, and trying to get out of it. I’ve made it clear that if he can't follow my rules, he's not welcome. His mom has learned to quickly shut down his fits of entitlement in front of me.

Fast forward to a couple of days ago; I walk into my house to find my wife, and Single-Mom standing in the kitchen. Single-Mom is balling, and my wife is giving her advice that came right from my mouth! I hear her tell her “They’re boys. You can’t coddle their feelings all the time. They were bickering, tried to get me involved when I told them ‘figure it out or you can all go home’”. Yet the moment Single-mom came back, her boy started wailing like a little girl about “it’s not fair....” This is what sparked the discussion from my wife. Single-mom was crying that she feels so guilty, she doesn’t want to fail, etc. but here’s my wife, telling her “He’s a boy. They fight, and get over it. Until you came he was fine. He only started again because you coddle him.” My wife was ecstatic to tell me the story, ecstatic to tell me how she gave Single-mom my advice.

Gents, raising your boys to be alpha is your job, not your wifes. Don’t let her teach your boy how to fail a shit test. Don’t make her a single mom even when you are home. That’s your job, and if you set the standards, she will follow your lead. In fact, do it well and she will preach to the unconverted.
Being a man who wants to be perceived as a perfect dad is harder than ever by Rian Stone | October 23, 2017 | Link

From here

And my response.

A suggestion you never asked for, and will probably not use:

Hamsters and Covert Contracts

Sex god method was written for this. OP has the same issues a lot of easygoing guys have, or at least guys who want to have the world believe they are easygoing. You make it your mission to be happy-go-lucky, and assume girls will follow suit, and get irritated when they don't (and they will). It's called a covert contract and "No more mr nice guy" lays that out well. Moving on, there's a difference between a reason and a hamster. Know what it is? It's whether it comes before or after the action. I mean, when one is raised on the gold standard nuclear family, can you expect anything BUT a level headed, easygoing guy who has his shit together? Not to mention, a "self-destructive nihilist" for a flared sciatica would be either a reason or a hamster, guess which one it could be? I find it obvious, but there's a lot of it in men, so I may be looking for it too hard. You'll have to judge for yourself.

Sex God Method

Notice, yelling in front of the kids is a huge no no, so what's the strategy? Give her a warning, then do the same thing. How is that different? How is that frame? I mean, wee little girl has a temper tantrum, so you do too, only a little bit better, because hey, I warned her first! Not my fault! As for the kids he values above all, they won't know the difference, I'm wondering if the kids are what he values the most?

- At three years old, my kids are taller, more active, and smarter than kids five to six years old from what I've seen

This says two things. One, that this is important to him, and two, that he's looking for it.

- My wife once in a blue moon tries to shit test me over my kids but realizes they like me far more than her Again, shit testing is a woman's way to see if you're alphafux, or a paper alpha, but he's turned it into the same thing. That one, the kids liking him more is important to him, and two, that he's looking for it in a fight that does not involve them. I'm wondering if the kids are what he values the most?

For something more positive. here I link this for the one line, He’s on a quest and it’s really hard for me to keep up.

the strategy

The solid strategy here is leadership. Want your woman to lose weight? You lose weight, knowing full well that women can only lost .77 cents on the dollar. She is a reflection of you. Is it any surprise she's ego driven and emotional, albeit with a different set of reasons for them?

So my thoughts on this are the same. If the wife is freaking out all the time, stop freaking out. If you don't lose it 100% of the time, she will keep it together 77% of the time. As for the remainder, like anything, lead.

Me and one of the other mods at MRP have found this to work swimmingly. DEVI, taken from sex god method. Create manufactured outrage, build some emotions, then let them back again, usually by great sex. She will have some outbursts, chicks just can't help themselves. However, you can take charge of them, it's no different than a PUA push/pull, the difference being it has to be natural, you can't just use canned scripts anymore. relationships are game on hard mode, and in this case, hard means 'internalized'

To sum up. I don't think OP is putting lots of work in, at least not to the backbreaking extent he posts in here. I think he does do a good job raising his kids on the stuff that matters to him, namely rubbing the other families faces in it. Well behaved kids aren't the goal, they are the side effect on a social validation seeking identity that he curates. Of course, the wife isn't on his team, so it creates friction and tension. As per a typical narcissistic injury, his response is to lash out and destroy shit. If he takes charge, ignores this Identity he is trying to foster, and stick to the end goal (by any means) I guarantee her freak outs will become small, and usually controlled by his random spouts of emotional engagement. I also guarantee that he will trust his parenting skills enough to trust them to have a friend who eats cheeseburgers without crumbling the whole house of cards he's built up. It sure as fuck beats him using the kids to berate their friends parents.

After all, you're family isn't as good as mine, I can't bear to let little johnny be influenced by plebs, only my divine parenting.

Remember, the whole point of Dark Triad is to foster a balance of Narcissism, Machiavellian, and psychopathy. Too much 1, not enough 2, and a pinch of 3 is enough to quash any squeamish feelings on causing manufactured drama to keep her focused post script

The one thing that makes me wonder though. Most the people reading this have commented in one specific place only. As a pity party. Woe is me, women ain't shit, see what I mean? The entire lesson was missed. Especially if you juxtapose it with the EC's. Their responses are great, if you signed up for it, do it right. If you don't think it's worth it, don't sign up. They understand it for what it is (and what GLO wrote about today) it's an opt in problem.

Opting in is not the time to complain that it's hard, or that she's fighting you on it.
If anything, it's a great example of "reciprocal determinism." Or as I like to call it, self sabotage. This is a topic for another post though.

Am I off, am I not? Is there something missed? There's a lot to unpack here
Female thinking vs. Male thinking in an LTR

by dll142 | February 12, 2019 | Link

Female thinking vs. Male thinking in an LTR

118 points•35 comments•submitted 11 months ago by dll142 to r/askMRP

My experience with the red pill has taught me more about the behavior of women in the last six months than my first 40 years on the planet. I’m QUICKLY learning A LOT on here and in this journey, I want to share my experiences to help and to keep improving on myself. One behavior that I have noticed is what I refer to the MACRO vs. MICRO principle. I will do the best to explain my thoughts and experiences and want to hear your takes and experiences on this subject as well.

Most men experience and do relationships from a MACRO standpoint. I define marco as the big picture, considering things such as overall long-term feeling trends. Examples of this type of thinking are long term personal growth trends, relationship equity (this is a big one), future or forward looking, prioritizing logically, beginning with the end goal in mind and looking at the ALL OVER sum of actions that get you there, and value of personal growth. These traits I describe are all masculine traits that we all strive to gain and develop in our MAPs. For example, if you and I have been friends for a long time, assuming we have a good rapport and trust each other, I can screw up and do something you find offensive, but we can quickly come to a reconciliation and understanding, then move on. You may be pissed at me, but you will look at my past behavior (i.e. relationship equity) and draw your conclusions about me and our friendship based on that. I can count on that and you will value and continue our friendship based on “how good of guy I am and always was.”

Women on the other hand tend to think on a MICRO level. They see interactions and experiences on how it makes them feel in a particular moment AND it’s almost ALWAYS tied to an emotion. For example, if I do something that pisses my wife off and irritates the hell out of her, she will feel like I was ALWAYS bad, ALWAYS behaved like that, and will assume that is the way it will continue. She will rant, she will bitch, and call me an asshole. It doesn’t matter if I was James Bond for the last three years and been “perfect” in every way, if I fuck up in her eyes THAT DAY, I’ve always been a fuck up. Then, days later, I can have fun with her, be playful, show her a great time, and kino effectively (i.e. give her positive feelz), then she’ll fuck my brains out and lay with me afterwards and tell me how much she loves me and wants to be with me forever. This behavior can seem alien to a man, because it is, and we don’t think this way. Women deal in irrationality and in the moment. The way they feel right now is their validation of their entire reality. It is one way this day, and different another.

THAT is a huge reason that arguing with woman in a fit of rage is completely pointless. They honestly don’t give a fuck about your past behavior or how good of a husband you are. They NEVER want to validate you either (I’ve learned that too). They almost seem cruel and downright amoral. I’ve made the mistake in the past of arguing with my wife. DEERing is the absolute WORST thing you can do. It puts you in a position of submission. I admit, I have struggled with this behavior, and still do on occasion. It is a hard one to kick, but it is essential. When you DEER, she sees (in that moment) a weak man... then her female mind draws that conclusion that he’s showing weakness... therefore he must be and has always been weak... I have a BETA bitch on my hands and I’m not fucking that!

That is another reason she will test. Her mind is a turbulent chaos. Our minds can be that way too, BUT most of the time we are able to tell ourselves that what we are feeling in the moment, is NOT an accurate reflection of the MACRO or big picture. We feel the MICRO, but are capable of subordinating that feeling to a value and thinking, “If I act on this, what will that do for the big picture as a whole?” In an example not in the context of marriage, sometimes we’ve all had rageful moments where we’d like to punch our boss in the face for being a dick, but we don’t because we know it would be detrimental to our long-term future. That’s the thing, in the context of your marriage, your wife doesn’t give a fuck OR think about how her negative MICRO or momentary feelings effect you, she just feels the uncontrollable urge to “unload” that on you, so she’ll feel better. That is her nature... accept it if you want to get or stay married. That is the hardest thing for me to understand and wrap my head around.

Women need to feel these emotional swings, in fact they crave it. This concept is called fractionation. It’s ironic that this very chaos, which we as men find baffling, is one key element that gives her the feelz and turns her on. It would torture us, and we’d probably beat someone’s ass for doing this to us, but women need us to do this to them. Those MICRO swings are the fractionation she needs (and your relationship) needs to create interest and desire in her.

I’m going to use another metaphor to illustrate my point. This same universal principle can be seen in the stock market, especially in short term traders vs. long term investors. Most of us think big picture while investing. We invest in good companies and stocks, hold them for a long time and sell them years down the road at a nice profit. This is MACRO or masculine thinking. Assuming it was a good investment in a good company, looking at the chart over a period of years will show an overall uptrend and positive growth. However, if you look closely at and zoom in on the line (daily level), it’s not smooth and always up trending. On a closer or MICRO level (day to day) it may have down trended and lost money over a given short period. For example, If you had solid research and you KNEW the company in which you were investing was solid long term, then you paid attention to and got sucked into the doom and gloom every day drama on the MSNBC and Fox Business channels saying “the stock in XYZ company is down today and yesterday and we don’t know why... traders are dumping it short term and it’s taking a hit.”, you may have gotten emotional and sold at a loss, or not have realized the gains you could get long term.

In conclusion, what I’m trying to say, assuming you have a good wife or picked a good wife (which any woman that is not a BPD or psycho can potentially be a good wife), she is STILL going to throw those MICRO fits and make the stock in your company (i.e. your LTR) take a small down blip. If you give in, panic, and “sell” (i.e. get sucked in and DEER), you will lose. That behavior pattern in investing and in your LTR will make you a loser in the long run. Are there times you would select a stock in your portfolio that you initially thought was good, then for some reason or another changed for the worse, or turned out to be bad company to begin with? Sure, then you’d dump that stock and move on. See your wife or LTR the same. Watch for the long term behavior patterns and discount the short term shit fits. She is a woman. She will throw short term shit fits, but her goal, be it conscious or unconscious, is to validate your strength and leadership. Woman NEED validation, you must understand that. That is why they HATE when you seek that from them. Shit testing is validation seeking. It is a feminine behavior at is core. It embodies insecurity (the opposite of confidence). Women find security and confidence attractive because they are masculine traits. That creates polarity, which leads to long term happiness for both you and your wife.
A couple years ago (I think) I read a post on TRP from a guy who said that when he goes into a restaurant with a date/gf/wife/whatever, he looks around the restaurant and picks out a table he wants, and if the hostess doesn't take him to that table, he would simply request the other table.

It made for a bit of an awkward situation for the hostess because chances were good that she took him to that table because it was in the designated area of a particular server/waiter/waitress who was up next on their little merry-go-round system, or some system based on the size of your party or whatever, but he swore that by doing this, by feeling comfortable with that awkwardness, by asserting his desires at the expense of others' and their expectations, he would make a subtle impression and conjure an energy that he carried with him throughout the night.

When I first read that I thought it was lame. Kind of a dick move. Why not just go with the flow? Why make a scene?

But I've come to learn that a huge part of being a leader, of communicating your worth, your value, your dominance, your alpha-ness to the world, is simply refusing to go with the flow. To be swept into other people's plans.

It's being perfectly comfortable with holding up a line. Or disrupting a system. Or stating an unpopular opinion. Or going to a different concert or party than your friends had planned to go to. Or doing something alone or with other friends/women if your date/gf/wife doesn't want to, etc.

It's stupid, but I do it now every time I go to a restaurant. In fact, I even take it right down to the chair at the table. If my wife forgets for a moment and picks a chair before I pick mine and she picked the wrong chair, I will simply ask her to switch. She doesn't want to make a scene, so she relents.

But I'm quite comfortable making a scene now--or rather, daring the other person to make a scene. And what's funny is, it's obvious that she likes it. She HATES confrontation herself. But she knows it's my comfort with it that ensures we enjoy certain things in life that we otherwise wouldn't if I had just gone with the flow. Whenever I do it she rolls her eyes and then responds with an increase in physical affection (holding my hands across the table, rubbing my leg with her foot, etc).

But here's the thing: when I first decided to do this, I looked around the restaurant and simply didn't see any tables that looked any better than any other tables. I had absolutely no preference where I sat. After 3 or 4 trips to a restaurant I started to grow ants, because this was a small and simple way I wanted to start becoming more assertive and dominant but I couldn't take advantage of it because I really had no preference.
I actually had to put some mental effort into this. I started asking myself where in a restaurant an alpha would sit. As I did, for some reason I thought of those mob bosses in the movies. They always sat in the very back of the restaurant, facing the door with nobody behind them. This felt like a very strong position to me. It seemed to lack.... vulnerability.

So that stupid little thing became my guiding light. When I walked into a restaurant I would ask myself where a mob boss, with multiple enemies who probably want to kill him would sit, and that’s where I would request. If it’s not at the back, at the very least I sit in the chair with the most visibility of the restaurant, and preferably the entrance.

Seemingly stupid, simple little thing, but it honestly made a difference.

After this I realized there were LOTS of other ways I could assert myself and be a leader with my wife and in larger social situations (not at work, work is different), but hadn't, simply because I'd given no thought to what I actually preferred. I really think we're societally conditioned to simply fall into whatever frame, into whatever expectation, into whatever system we happen to encounter. To not rock the boat. To not cause a scene. To just go with the flow. To eat whatever shit's in front of you for fear of offending the chef (or the hostess).

Anyway, a lot is made about leading on here, and I totally agree. But if you're struggling to lead, as I once did, perhaps you simply haven't taken the time to really think about what you prefer and what you don't. And where you find a lack of a preference in something, to work on forming one.

At home and at play a leader doesn't just go with the flow (again, work is different). He makes his own plans and he carves his own path and he takes ownership of his own good time. He does this by taking note of his preferences and giving his preferences primacy among competing preferences. He remains calm and comfortable during the conflicts that inevitably ensue, which is frame.

He's sometimes thought of as a dick or an asshole because of this, but he is also looked up to as a leader. Those who are less comfortable leading fall into his frame and become relaxed and happy there because they are relieved of the burdens associated with planning/leading/problem solving/etc. Leaders are rare and people, especially women, crave what they offer.

There's another way this works too: when meeting women, how can you communicate your SMV if you don't come off as...picky? And how can you appear picky if you don't have any preferences when it comes to women? Or at least SAY you do? We all know there's magic in criticism. In disqualification. In telling a blonde you only like brunettes or vice versa. In telling single girls you prefer married girls or vice versa. In saying you only date girls with college degrees or in a STEM major, etc.

Losers will accept anything. They'll say yes to any plans. They'll sleep with any girl. They'll go along for any ride. They'll keep their opinions to themselves (if they have any). They'll avoid contention and controversy at all cost just so they'll be accepted.

Leaders do not. A leader is seasoned. He's seen the world and thus, knows which countries one should visit and which one should avoid. He knows which wines are worth your time and which are not. He knows his positions on politics and can back them up with confidence. He knows people. He knows women. He has so many friends and concubines he has to now be selective about who he lets into his circle. And women pick up on this. Such a man communicates in a way that's congruent with that reality—a reality of abundance, and that abundance has made him selective, and his speech reflects that selectivity.

Anyway, now I'm rambling, but the main point is simply: you need preferences. If you do not have them, start acquiring them and then hold them sacrosanct.
How I failed and passed a shit test by being a grumpy bitch and losing frame.

by CptButtertits | February 23, 2019 | Link

I will preface this by saying that the following altercation is a result of my wavering frame in the last few months. I have a lot of balls in the air currently and my stress level has been through the roof. So rake me over the coals if need be but read my following Field report.

So as I have said I have been under a lot of stress recently with work, school and large financial and life plan decisions and as such have been admittedly a pretty shitty captain. Bring work stress home and other beta level shit.

Obviously this has had an effect on my wife who is getting all sort of anxiety and who takes on all of her pent up hamster but me, so vicious karma cycle of my creation and well-deserved. While I self-reflect after the arguments and realize my fuck-ups lately I have been just waltzing into her frame eagerly and just taking out my aggression in the form of screaming my point like that dude from West Coast Choppers.

So fast forward to today. I am in a ton of pain due to tearing a ligament in my knee so I am half in the bag and in a generally shit mood. I look up and see my wife is watching some murder/kidnapped show on Netflix. As one of the women was graphically describing her rape scene when she was 12 and the rapist's 40 year old dick. I say, "What the fuck are you watching?!?"

LET'S GET READY TO RUMBLE!!!

After the fight which basically covers every fucking grievance I have ever made against her and some regrettable puking from me. She gives me this little gem.

"I trust you with everything. I love you with my heart and soul. I am sorry I think emotionally. I can't help it. You know that when you decide something that is what we are going to do. We do what you want because I know you are looking out for me and it is what is best for us. But I still want to have my say. So if I want something and you say no or when I come up with plans and you say no. I know it is because you want what is best for us but I can't help it that I get upset and then shut down for the rest of the night but usually the next day I am fine.

In conclusion while I did regrettably lose frame and intentionally walked right into that shitstorm of an almost 2 hour flight. I ultimately came away with a new sense and perspective of why my wife shit-tests.

In conclusion, while I would never advocate losing frame, If you are already in the middle of a fight if you poke the right nerves and are viewed favorable as her Capt. She may just actually give you valuable information that you may have never even considered.
Disclaimer As always, my posts are advanced level MRP. Newbies beware, do not try anything like this until you've been doing this correctly for at least six months (preferably a year), are objectively attractive, and have already built a solid frame, or shit like this could nuke your marriage. Keep stuff like this in your back pocket, as they say.

So if you've seem the movie The Usual Suspects (and you should)(mild Spoiler Alert), you'll recall the scene where rival cartels try to intimidate Keyser Soze by breaking into his house and holding his wife and kids at gunpoint. Keyser comes home, assesses the situation, draws his gun, and shoots...his own wife and kid! He then shoots the thugs, who are too shocked to react, letting one live to tell his bosses what transpired. The message: there is literally nothing that you can threaten to take from Keyser Soze to make him bend his will.

(Obviously I don't advocate this or any type of violence whatsoever, but this is here for my fat girl admirers from TBP and their mangina friends - ‘Sup bitches!)

So last Friday I'm reading some of Rollo's new posts, and this line stuck with me. To paraphrase: "No moment of pussy is ever worth a loss of frame". Little did I know that phrase was foreshadowing things to come.

So after a fun and sex filled weekend, I tell my wife Monday that I want her in her white lingerie so I can handcuff her to the bed and ravage her later. She says she'll put the outfit on before bed when we go upstairs after our cocktails. Whatever. So we discuss this trip she planned for a few Saturday's from now - a night at a hotel in a nearby casino city. She has a restaurant booked, arranged for the kid to stay at her mom’s that night, the works. Anyways, I earlier in the weekend floated the concept of going to this Halloween themed party at a sex club in this city, and told her to look for good superhero costumes online. She doesn't shoot it down, initially plays coy. So Monday night I ask her if she found any good costumes.

her: Rex, wait, is this some kind of sex club?

Me: yes, I told you it was

Her: I told you I don't want to be a swinger

Me: me neither. We aren't doing anything with anyone. We're going to do something different by having some drinks, observing, and hanging out.

Her: So people can just be having sex there?
Me: yeah, they have areas for that if the mood strikes

Her: (now explosively angry) that sounds disgusting! Why would you ever think I'd want to go to a place like that!

Me: (probably should've STFU, but) Hey, it's a different, once in a lifetime thing to do for the experience. If it's hot and heavy, maybe we get hot and heavy. If everyone there is fat, old, and ugly, we'll have something we can laugh our asses off about the rest of our lives. Either way it should be interesting.

Her: shut up Rex! Just stop even talking right now, or I'm canceling the trip!

Me: [STFU and thinking about her threat to deprive me of something in order to end a simple discussion]

So as the show were watching is ending, I silently start cleaning up. She asks what's wrong with me. I keep STFU. We go upstairs, get ready for bed. Her: I'll still put on that outfit and have sex the way you wanted if you can be a nice boy. (Remember Rollo's line here. She doesn't actually want to fuck me right now, she wants to use her pussy to pull me into her frame).

Me: not interested.

Her: why not?

Me: (could've STFU here, but) you are acting like a child, and I don't fuck children. Goodnight.

Her: if you're going to have this attitude, then maybe we shouldn't go on this trip

Me: then cancel it

Her: I will

Me: pick up your phone and do it now

Her: I'll do it later

Me: OK.

So I get up, go to the computer room, cancel the trip, and bring her the confirmation sheet.

She explodes with all sorts of rambling, I keep saying "goodnight", she won't shut up, so I tell her I need to sleep and can't do it with her babbling, so I leave with my stuff and go to the guest bedroom.

We maybe say 10 words to each other the next day. I don't kiss her goodbye, nothing. I show no interest in returning to the main bed.
Yesterday morning, I realize that if I want normalcy, it's my job to lead her there. So before I leave for work, I give her a kiss and tell her to "be safe" like usual. Only one text during the day, telling her I'll meet her at my daughter's gymnastics class later.

I show up at gymnastics, my Starbucks in hand, nothing for wife. When I see her, I act as though nothing ever happened - happy to see her, joking with kid, etc. Turns out she bought me a candy treat at the store, and commented on how I didn't get her anything from Starbucks even though I knew she would want something. Me: "I'll let you try some of mine. It's the new Chile Mocha". Evening proceeds as normal.

So later at home I'm going through the normal night routine getting daughter ready for bed. Wife comes upstairs, says she forgot her water downstairs, could I go down and get it? Me, jovially: "are your legs broken or something?" We banter for a minute, then she says she has a surprise down there for me. I go, and she has two glasses of wine poured, a lit candle, and a note asking if we can be friends again. I find out later that she has put on the white lingerie underneath her sweats, so she brings that out after kid is asleep. Passionate sex ensues. DEERing does not (before we have our wine she says "I'm not apologizing." Me: "me neither", give her a wink and a slap on her bare ass.

The takeaways:

1. Nuking a nice trip like I did should only be done very sparingly, and only for a damn good reason. Why did I do it? Because I wanted to demonstrate to her that there is nothing, literally nothing, that she can threaten to withdraw or deprive me of that can alter my resolve (that I will not be browbeaten, disrespected, or made to capitulate under any sort of threat from her). Be careful with this men. Nuking shit like this too much for no good reason will make you come off as an unbearable, no-fun, mega prick, which equals unattractive. Don't be unattractive.

2. Whether nuking the trip was the correct move or not, owning that decision and holding frame thereafter is critical. I nuked the trip. I withdrew affection (leaving her to go to the guest room). I let her know that she was welcome back into my frame (good morning kiss two days later). I'm then given dark chocolate, wine, and porn star sex.

3. You must be "hawt" enough and have a frame made of solid titanium before you do something like this. You must have total, internalized abundance mentality, and you must truly give no fucks whatsoever as to her reaction. If you have not fully internalized this shit and have been living it every day, your wife will see right through you. You'll come off as a spoiled baby with a ridiculous attempt at wrestling power away from mommy, and it will backfire on you hard core.

Edit: formatting (fucking mobile)
Edit2: my "resolve" was not to force her to go to this club - it was that I will not tolerate being threatened in any way, shape, or form.
This morning wife and I are getting a long laughing, etc.

Wife says "you must be spanking your monkey, you have not touched me in 4 days."

Translation: I want you to dress me like a whore and fuck me tonight.

Less then a year ago I would have DEERed like a little child and started a fight. Today I stfu and smile. She knew what she was saying was untrue. But, she is a "good girl" who does not know how to ask for sex.

MRP is amazing. Changed my life. Today, I will be outgoing, kino like mad, and take exactly what I want from life.
TheFilthyPapist’s Guide to Managing Your Divorce - Part I
by TheFilthyPapist | February 20, 2017 | Link

I’ve dropped some tips for guys going through a divorce, or building up to one, here in the past and some members have asked that I write them up in a formal post. I’ve decided to break all my advice down into three parts. Part I will cover preparing your life to be in a good position should you find yourself going through a divorce, Part II will cover tips for actually executing a divorce, and Part II will cover your post-divorce landscape. What do I know about this stuff? I’m divorced and managed to keep my house, my kids almost full time and even her dog. I don’t pay child support and my alimony is minimal. I cannot stress enough that I am not a lawyer and these guides are the result of my observations as a layman. Take what you think will help help you, leave the rest and consult with your attorney.

First, understand I’m not a big believer in divorce and I hope to God nobody uses my advice to execute one without a damn good reason. To put this in perspective, my ex drank and smoked most of the family’s disposable income (and then some), and was selling pot to my kids for extra drinking funds. Toss in her emotional manipulation and physical threats against the kids and things were bad enough that filing was the only reasonable course of action. The best way to survive a divorce is not to have one, so lift and read the sidebar to get a handle on yourself and your relationship with your wife. Regardless of whether it is you or your wife who initiates legal proceedings, if you want to get out of a divorce with the least damage done to you financially, you need to make it hard for the court to not give you at least 50% time with the kids. Below are some things that will make your life in general better, even if you are nowhere near getting a divorce, but will come in handy if you find yourself needing to file.

Money

Get your finances in order. Strong financial health is going to alleviate stress in your life and give you more control over decisions that you make. If your wife is a SAHM, put her on an allowance for groceries, gas, clothes and spending. One of the first things that will happen during the divorce process is you will both have to put a budget together and disclose finances. If you can show she’s capable of living on N% of your salary a month, you’ll go a long way toward making the alimony negotiations go easily.

Children

In many states, the judge’s primary interest during the divorce process is to make sure that the best interests of the children are served. I’ll go into how they go about this in Part II, but for right now, understand that you need to show you can care for your kids. If you can’t, you’ll end up with one night a week and every other weekend, not to mention the child support payments.
Cooking

Make sure you’ve got a decent sized crock pot and a rice cooker. A few days a week, get up a little early, throw some meat, veggies and potatoes in the crock pot and set up the rice cooker. Go shower and get ready for work. All set? Good, the rice is done. Throw it in the fridge. By the time you’re home from work you’ll have a pot roast or stew of some sort ready in the crock pot. Congrats...you just made dinner for the family. Sit down and eat and then get everybody organized to clean the kitchen.

Clothing

Learn your kids sizes and preferences. Take your kids shopping once a month or so for the basics...underwear, socks and shoes. Big stuff like winter coats are on you as well, and for God’s sake don’t be that guy that lets his 8 year old daughter wear thongs.

School

Know your kids’ grades? Most schools have a website that let’s you see grades and upcoming assignments. Get on that. How often do you help with homework? Every night, champ. Are you making parent-teacher conferences? You are now.

Be Social

Your kids need to see you with adults other than your wife and other adults need to see you with your kids. Do drop off and pickup for sleepovers. Organize a sleepover and make sure to have the parents come in for a drink and a little small talk. Plan weekend activities with your friends’ families...you and your buddy take all the kids to the zoo. Religious? Make sure your kids are dressed for Church according to your standards and take them. Don’t let that fall on your wife’s shoulders.

Work-Life Balance We’ve all got busy jobs and need to blow off steam, but if you leave work, hit the gym and then go grab drinks for an hour or so, you are missing out on important time at home. Be flexible in managing your down time. Take your kids to the gym with you. If they are old enough to workout, get them a membership and put them to work, otherwise drop them at the gym childcare. Schedule your drinks for after bedtime and don’t be that dad that goes out with the guys multiple nights a week. It will come back to bite you in the ass.

Wrap up

Executing on all of this will be tough, and it will seem like a lot to take on, but trust me, it is absolutely critical that you focus on this part of your life. I will reiterate, the goal here is to make it more difficult for the court to declare your wife the primary caregiver in the event of a divorce. If things jump up to an actual divorce you are going to be the one under the microscope and mastery of these things will be important, but if not, you will be a stronger leader at home and have a broader relationship with your children.
Sexual Dynamics Are Like a Motorcycle Ride (x-post from TRP)

by UltramanShow | June 21, 2016 | Link

Synopsis: Relationships are like a motorcycle ride... the man needs to be focused on the road and his destination in order for the woman to enjoy the ride. If he turns his attention to her she freaks the fuck out.

Body: I think the problems in most relationships stem from men not understanding the difference between the sexes from a biological phycology perspective. Humans at our base instinctual level are the product of hundreds of thousands of years of evolution and learned behavior based around survival traits. Women behave the way they do because they can't help their biological (emotional) wiring. Men behave the way they do for the same reason.

Men want sex.

Women want safety and security.

Unfortunately most men think that in order to make women feel safe and secure they have to emote and connect with women to make them feel emotionally safe. While this is needed sometimes, the majority of the time this has the opposite effect. It makes a women feel less safe and secure because her man is acting not like man but like a woman.

I liken it to a motorcycle ride. You are the rider and you are cruising down the road (You living your life). You see a little hottie on the side of the road and you pull over to talk to her (You meeting your SO). This shows her you have some cajones since you weren't afraid to approach her. Upon talking to her you think she's cool shit so you invite her to join you on your ride. You don't ask her where she wants to go because you were already heading somewhere specific (Your life goals). She likes that because women hate making decisions, so she agrees and comes along for the ride (marries/moves in, whatever, she is joining your life).

As you are cruising down the road you are controlling the direction, speed, etc of the ride. You are watching out for cars and other hazards. You are in complete control and your attention is on handling the bike and getting where you had in mind. She is on the back holding on to you, looking pretty, and leaning into turns to slightly assist the handling of the bike. She is not navigating or telling you where to go. In fact if she was you would kick her off for ruining YOUR bike ride. She is an accessory that compliments your ride, gives you some assistance should you ask for it, and looks good doing it.

At some point most men though fall into the trap of starting to worry about what the woman thinks. They start to ask her which way they should go (women suck at making decisions and navigating). They start to focus not on the road and the hazards around them, but on the woman behind them and her feelings and thoughts. They literally turn around and look at the girl behind them.

What does a women do in response to this?

She freaks the fuck out!

I mean why wouldn't she? Would you ride in a car with someone whose attention is on you and not the road in front of them? Of course not.

Most men are to stupid to realize this most of the time. They just sit there and say, "God, why is she freaking out? I'm just trying to find out what she wants."

What she wants is for you to stop worrying about her. She wants to know that her man is taking care of shit and providing for her safety and security. Does she want some attention and love. Sure, but at an instinctual level she knows it is in her best interest to wait for a rest stop or a break to get your attention.

The moral of this story: Make your mission and not your women your priority. You'll be happy. The women in your life will be happy. Everyone will be living there purpose.
My dogs hates the gravel park, and I can't control that.
by stonepimpletilists | July 21, 2016 | Link

Frilly writing aside, this is a true story. The names have been changed to protect the innocent.

I go to the park often with my three Italian greyhounds. An exercised dog is an obedient and happy dog. They have such delicate, small feet. Eventually, they toughen up in time, albeit slowly. I walk to the end of my block, cross the heavily trafficked boulevard, and into the park. Sometimes they like the walk, most of the time, they resist once they see the gravel.

'This hurts my feet bro! I would rather run on the grass.'

"I do too, though the grass is beside the road, and that's the surest way for you to get hit by a car."

'I do not care, I want my grass'

I am the master, and I lead him to the park. They play on the gravel, they toughen their feet, and we go home. They forget all about their grievance, and move on with their day. They know not why they are happy, they just assume that's what life is, happy. It's all they've ever known. The fact their bodies flood them with happy drugs because of the signalling of the sunshine, the movement of their muscles, and the toughening of their feet isn't connected, because they are dogs, not scientists.

One day, as I am walking, the clasp on the leash breaks. The dog is Free! I worry now. He speaks so often of wanting to play on the grass, surely a car will hit him, he will die, and it will be all my fault!

I panic, I run to him, want to take him in my arms and protect him from the world. He runs away. Then stops, waits for me to catch up, then continues to run. He runs through the boulevard, has the sense to hit the crosswalk, since I've done it every time we've ever gone out, looking back occasionally to see that I'm still chasing him. It's like a game. It is not a game for me, I have to save him from himself.

'Does he not know that the grass over here is more fun than that shitty gravel?'

Does he not know that there is fun over here? I always am in a good mood over here, and he should let me be, I know what I'm doing.'*

He stops at the door to my house, sits on the stoop, and I open the door out of sheer relief he survived. He walks inside, has the time of his life. About an hour later, he's restless again, and wants to go out. I don't take him out.
"Are you crazy? You tempted fate, and are alive by sheer luck little dog."

'What are you talking about? I know not what you speak of.'

About 9 months later, it happened again.

The clasp broke on this leash, again. About 20 feet from where it happened the first time. This time, I continue onto the park. He continues over to the crosswalk. He hears the sound of the gate open to enter the park. He looks behind him.

'Why isn't he coming? Doesn't he know it's fun over here? I can't handle being alone, it's just not fun without the master. Look at him, laughing with the other two dogs, playing in the park. I should join them!'

He came running after me. I open the gate to the gravel, he walks in, has great fun. His memories of the tough gravel are in his head, his feet are tough now, and he starts humping all the other dogs.

I realized something, that day. He is a Greyhound, he doesn't know what I know, he just knows what any dog knows. I have no chance to catch him, unless he wants to be caught, I thought otherwise because I am not thinking about what I can do, I'm thinking about what I should do, what I would lose, etc. I know now, as soon as he breaks from that leash, his life is under his control, I can't stop it. All I can do is go to the park, have a blast with the other two, and open the gate for him if he wants to join.

And what dog wouldn't join? Everyone is having so much fun, and dogs love nothing more than fun. I get what I want, a safe dog, because I now know how to deal with dogs. They do what they do, I do what I do. Those ideas cross when what I do is awesome enough to keep them at my side.

Don't be a faggot, your sphere of control is very small [Married Game] Use sex toys to turn your slut into a depraved animal.

by A_Rex | August 23, 2016 | Link

Note: my game posts assume a command of MRP concepts. There are no beginner explanations here. My posts also assume you haven been lifting, have read and internalized the sidebar, have frame, and most importantly for these posts, I assume you have a wife that actually wants to fuck you. Noobs be reminded - you cannot negotiate desire. If she doesn't desire you, no promise of kinky shit with you will light any fires.

So a lot of men are leery of sex toys. Some are afraid that they'll be "replaced" by them, or that the wife would get herself off with them rather than put out for you. If that's you, quit being a faggot. It's weaksauce enough to worry about Chad - if you're insecure about being replaced by an object, maybe you don't deserve to be fucked. Fix that first.

Here are some basic, inexpensive toys that work for me, and how I use them to drive my wife fucking wild.

1. A penis-sized vibrator. Material doesn't really matter, just make sure it's about the size of an average dick (not a giant dong). Vibrators that take AA or AAA batteries are preferable to ones that burn through use watch batteries. This is a staple. If you buy nothing else, get one of these.

2. A black silk blindfold. It has been noted that physical sexual pleasure is enhanced if there is sensory-deprivation. It also adds a mystery element (her thinking "what's he going to do next?"). These are pretty cheap.

3. Fuzzy play handcuffs or rope hand ties. These should be comfortable for the wearer. These are also cheap and widely available. (I'm not going into detail on how to use these - self explanatory).

4. A buttplug. Hear me out. A lot of guys have women that don't do anal. Some women really won't, never will, and may be repulsed by the thought of something going in her ass. On the other hand, there are a lot of women who say that, but are really just afraid to try (or never wanted to bother trying with you). Until you try, you'll never know, and a buttplug is much more palatable to the novice than a big cock. Here's my suggestion - get a very small, silicone based plug. Silicone can handle coconut oil (or other oil based lubes), rubber cannot. Make sure the flange at the bottom is significantly wider than the shaft of the plug - you really, really, really don't want anything sliding into the anus. That will likely require a trip to the ER - and the possibly the death of anal play.
All this stuff can be bought at Spencer's, or at the average sex shop, or Amazon if you must (I prefer bringing home "surprises" to having a box of sex toys show up at the house).

---

How to use them

As with every sex act, you need to properly game your wife in advance. Don't just whip out handcuffs and a butt plug after your wife finishes tucking in the kids, or you're asking for a hard no. Game her, get her tingling, then bring her to bed. Have her wear the blindfold, kiss her, start kissing her all over, etc. Then when you have her legs open, take out the vibe, turn it on low, and lay it in her slit vertically. Let the vibrations work their magic. Work it up and down, gradually increasing the intensity. Lower it into her hole after a while and start thrusting with it. Soon she should be begging for a real cock. Then you go to work. She should be soaking wet by now and fucking you enthusiastically. Bonus - have her hold the vibe against your sack while you bang her. The vibrations should send you to another world, making you send her to another world. Or, bang her missionary while you or she holds the vibe against her clit. She should have an orgasm she won't soon forget, thanks to you and your ingenuity. Another variant - have her lie on her back and blow you to completion while you fuck her with the vibe - always a solid time.

If your wife does anal - here's where the Coconut Spa can really help. Give her the full massage - start her on her back. Right before she flips over, work her pussy well and get her riled up. Then flip her over. Work the whole back and legs, and pay attention to her ass. Work her ass and gently rim her with your fingers. Take the plug, lube it with coconut oil, and when she's ready, slide it in. Work it a little then get behind her, have her get into doggy position, and put your cock in her pussy while keeping the plug in. Fuck her like crazy while fucking her ass with the plug and send her into orbit. I did this with my wife a month or so ago, and she actually fucking squirted. First time in 17 years together, and a first for her. I've never seen her cum so much. Finish strong, and she may initiate round 2 (or you might wake up to her fondling you the next morning).

Here's another variant, and what my wife and I did this past weekend. Coconut Spa again - started on her front, end on back. I had her blindfolded, and after the quasi-legit part of the massage was done, I slip the vibe in her slit and start working it. She wants it and me in her pussy at the same time, but it's not working. So, she tells me to get in her ass, so I do, doggy style, with the vibe fully inserted in her pussy. I'll spare the details, but holy shit. The filth that came out of her mouth while I did this was amazing, and she was groaning in such a low pitched voice she sounded like a goddamn animal - and I was loving it.

If your wife is on the fence with anal play, get the butt plug like I said, but don't just spring it on her during a massage or it might backfire. Let her know you have it, show it to her. Give her a week or so to get used to its existence. Use the other toys in your repertoire to get her used to idea of using toys in bed. When dirty talking, bring up the idea of the plug by playing into her fantasy of being double teamed like a dirty slut. Say "hmm, too bad you were so dismissive of the plug. You know, I bet you've fantasized about having two guys in you at the same time, haven't you?" (Because of course they all have, let's not kid ourselves). Work the idea of it in like that. Reassure her that you don't have to have anal with her, but wanted to bring that fantasy to life for her, without ruining the marriage and actually using another guy. Even if it never turns into anal for you, you can count on wild enthusiastic fucking when you are DPing her with your toy.

Keep it interesting, keep it fun, and end the line of Chads by being the best all-in-one fuck she could ever imagine.

Preemptive reply: to those who would say I'm a cuck for the DP and spit roast with the sex toy idea, I'll tell you to quit being an insecure bitch. If you think your special snowflake has never fantasized about fucking and sucking multiple dicks at the same time, you've got another thing coming. Most women might not actually want to do it (just like rape fantasizers don't actually want to be raped), but they've become soaked when imagining Brad and Chad having their way with her. Instead of being a pussy, make the analogue of her most depraved fantasies come to life - no other real dick required. Be everything to her all-in-one, and instead of fantasizing about Brad and Chad, she'll fantasize about your sessions and cum begging you for more. Reap the benefits.

Edit: formatting (best I can do on mobile)
Are you a bastion of consistency and self-control?

by ShrodingersDingaling | May 19, 2017 | Link

You expect your wife to submit to you. You want her to not only think of you as her captain, but you want her very will to be involuntarily subject to your own, but are you really equipped for this level of submission? Does your life actually reflect a level of self-control that compels your wife to feel that you're even capable of handling your own spirit, let alone, hers, or does she watch with disgust as you constantly fail at governing your own life, fueling her own need to assert her independence simply to escape your perpetual weakness and add some order to her life?

I'm rather fascinated by food and people's relationship with it, but what I'm about to say could just as easily be applied to getting out of bed on any given morning, sobering up, arriving on time, lifting (Skipping leg-day again?), or porn (I'm sure you can quit anytime). We've all seen how some men set goals for themselves. Yes sir they're finally going to do it. They're going to stop eating trash, shed that gut and get in shape! We all know how this generally goes. Most men can make it through the first day, but that's about it. Something happens, maybe a friend invites them out to eat or they're at a birthday party and well, I mean what's wrong with a little cake at a birthday party?! Your wife knows you're trying to eat a particular way and then helplessly watches (or would you prefer that SHE help YOU?) that pathetic sight as the man she WANTS to put her confidence in can't sufficiently control his own desires to behave in accordance with the ruleset HE CREATED FOR HIMSELF?! What self-respecting woman could ever turn her life over and completely give herself to a man like that? Nobody wants to ride with the drunken Uber driver who is known his accidents, tardiness and failures to deliver. That oak in my backyard will never falter until it dies one day.
Relevant to my FR: Background on my progress: At the time had been working out for 4 months. Starting weight 189lbs, down to 177lbs, estimated 14%BF, cutting, target 10%BF @ 169lbs. Well groomed beard and haircut. Form fitting clothes.

I recently had an experience that I’ve deduced was my woman’s way of bolstering her rank in her workplace female social matrix with... me.

She’s employed in a predominantly female work environment, and asked me one day if I could come in to help out with something. I’ve got some extra time on my hands, and so I agreed.

I show up, get introduced to some others I’m about to help, there is small chit chat, and my wife goes back to her office. I begin to try to immerse myself in what is expected of me.

Here is where it gets funny. I soon realise that my expertise and experience is not needed. I realise I’m just a prop, and see the situation for what it really is: I’ve been brought in so that I can be evaluated by the FSM.

Pre RP, I might have been feeling my time was being wasted, and even worse, may have begun to externalise these feelings. Not now – in this situation I’m keenly aware of the gig, and I’m up for it.

So that’s exactly what I did. I had fun. Chatted up whoever would chat me up, one of which half way through the exchange I discovered to be her one over manager (female). All the while pretending to work the “role” I had been originally asked to come in for, but knowing FULL WELL it was bogus.

After my agreed upon time to be there had expired, I was walked to my wife’s office by another coworker, and hung out for 5 min or so with a couple of her co-workers. When it was time to leave, I grabbed her behind the neck, gave her kiss and went home. Nothing needy, more of a “you’re mine” kiss with slight machiavellian feel to it.

Later that night my wife giddily recounted how some other gal had sent a text to the woman walking me to my wife’s office: “Who is that man candy you are walking with?” She said she couldn’t wait to get to work to “call her on it” the next day.

Later that night when I started to initiate she said she couldn’t, because of blah blah blalh, I ignored, led her to bed and we had a nice session.

But that’s not the point. The point is, your woman’s status in the FSM is directly influenced by you. Be sure you understand this, and use it to your advantage, however that is.
And I realise that the gains that were made that day each in our own worlds could have been two or three fold had I been further into my MAP. This is not a “Mission Accomplished” speech. This is a “Gentlemen we have come this far put your head down and keep going” talk.

Here is how you can understand the female social matrix further

---

TLDR – If the opportunity to show you off exists but needs prompting, and you are worth showing off, she will find a way. MRP will make sure you are ready for this, so that you and your wife may capitalize on this each in your own capacity.
A Sheep in Sheep's Clothing

If you’re like 95% of dudes, you either don’t know or don’t give a fuck about style. You go to work and you dress the same as everyone else. As long as your shirt is ironed and your shoes are clean, you’re good to go.

You wear the standard weekend casual wear - a pair of ugly trainers, some Dad jeans a t-shirt and plaid shirt or a hoody. Same as everyone else.

For a night out, you’ll switch the trainers for a pair of shoes and switch the t-shirt for a shirt. Same as everyone else.

And if it’s a big night out, you’ll pull out your ‘going out’ shirt. The one you bought 6 years ago and still wear because someone once told you that it looked good on you.

You wear a fleece in winter because it’s ‘cozy’. You wear cargo shorts in summer because they have handy pockets. And you wear wrap around silver tinted sunglasses in summer because.... well, I have no idea why the fuck you wear them.

You never put any effort in, you don’t do any research and you never go outside your comfort zone. And if you’re an especially lazy cunt, you let your wife buy your clothes for you.

That’s OK if you’re happy being a badly dressed sheep. That’s fine if you’re content being an average looking Joe. That’s great if you’re happy putting in zero fucking effort. But if you want to look like a man who has his shit together and looks like he actually gives a fuck, then you need to develop your own style.

What da Fuck is Style?

It’s not about matching your belt with your shoes.

“Style is knowing who you are, what you want to say, and not giving a damn.”

- Orson Welles
A High Value Man has frame and lives his life according to his own values and his own standards. An integral part of these standards is his style. Style is important to him. Looking good is important to him. Smelling good is important to him. Being groomed is important to him. And not looking like his wife bought his clothes for him in Wallmart is really fucking important to him.

Why?

Because his style is a visual representation of who he is.

It is the outward projection of his frame - a visual expression of his own identity.

"Remind yourself. Nobody built like you, you design yourself."

- Jay Z

I'm too hot - hot damn - Called a police and a fireman

Your style is for you to decide and when you define it, when you own it, it becomes part of who you are. You do it for yourself. But make no mistake - looking good makes your life a shit load easier - easier to get a job, easier to advance in your career, easier to win over clients, easier to develop relationships and yeah.. easier to get your dick wet.

It's a value add on on every level.

People will always make a judgement on you based your appearance. By dressing well, you are conveying a message and projecting your frame without speaking a word. Style is an instant language. You’d be a fool not to learn it.

"It is both delusional and stupid to think that clothes don't really matter and we should all wear whatever we want. Most people don't take clothing seriously enough, but whether we should or not, clothes do talk to us and we make decisions based on people's appearances."

-- G. Bruce
Developing Your Style

“Know first who you are, and then adorn yourself accordingly.”

- Epictetus

Developing your own style has parallels to developing your body through lifting and proper nutrition – it doesn’t happen overnight. If you’ve spent the first few decades of your adult life turning yourself into a waddling blob of fat, you’re not going to look like a Greek God after 2 weeks. It takes time and effort.

The same applies to developing your style. You’ll get noobie gains. The first time you start dressing well, people will notice, you’ll get compliments, you’ll feel great. But don’t make the mistake of thinking that you’ve nailed it. You haven’t. You just bought the first half decent outfit you’ve worn in your adult life.

And yes, I did say ‘outfit’. Suck it up, Princess.

That’s the learning curve. Just like lifting, the longer you spend at it, the harder you work at it, the better you get at it... until one day, you’ll walk by the mirror and think – ‘fuck that dude looks good’.

I can’t tell you what to wear no more than I can tell you how to live your life or develop your own frame. No one can. You need to decide this for yourself. If your style is the visual representation of your frame, then it’s your frame that will decide your style.

But there are some easy ways in which you can begin the process;

Fit is King

It doesn’t matter what you are wearing or what the occasion is - be it a business suit, a casual weekend fit or even your sweaty gym gear – fit is absolute king. It reigns supreme over everything else. Too baggy, too tight, too short, too long - if it doesn’t fit, it will look like shit.

You see it all the time – fat dudes wearing baggy clothes in a pathetic attempt to hide the belly, muscular guys wearing far too tight clothing to show their gains, skinny twats wearing skinny jeans to show how fragile their legs are, or just your middle-of-the-road average Joe wearing stuff that’s cut badly, made from cheap materials, doesn’t sit right and does nothing to enhance their visual appearance.

None of this shit works.

So learn how to nail the fit and you’re halfway there already. No exaggeration – that’s half the work done.

Stick to the Classics

"I live for myself and I answer to nobody."

- Steve McQueen

You don’t need to reinvent the wheel when developing your style. It’s already been invented – all you need to do is find the pieces that you like and put them together in a cohesive way that looks good on you. The easiest way to do this is to stick to the classics.

Steve McQueen was a master at this. He’s often lauded as one of the greatest ever style icons and features repeatedly year after year in article after article in men’s style magazines and blogs. And his style still looks good today. Not bad for a dude who’s been dead for 40 years.

If you look at how he dressed, there’s nothing complicated about it – he just stuck to classic items like polo shirts, bomber and Harrington jackets, slim fit jeans, well fitting t-shirts and perfectly fitted suits.

There’s nothing try-hard about his style, nothing fancy and nothing ‘fashion’, yet he looks cool, elegant and stylish – all the while combining classic items with perfect fit. He looks equally good in a suit, in motorcycle gear or even dressed head to toe in denim. That man knew how to dress. If you’re looking for a style icon to follow, you can’t go far wrong with McQueen.

Keep it Simple

It’s not complicated, so don’t over complicate it.

Classic items will help you keep it simple but there are other areas where you need to stick to the basics:

Colour.

Your colour friends are – neutrals and earthy colours – black, white, navy, grey, khaki, olive, beige and brown.

That’s it. Stick to a basic palete. Not only is it easy, it’s masculine, refined and makes it really simple to mix and match.

Less is more
“All it takes are a few simple outfits. And there’s one secret – the simpler the better.”

- Cary Grant

The 80/20 rule applies here. If you look in your wardrobe, I guarantee that you wear 20% of your clothes 80% of the time. That is why you don’t need a massive amount of clothes. You need a small amount of clothes that you will get a lot of wear out of.

You don’t need lots of choices; you just need the right choices.

So learn to choose carefully – or time after time, you’ll be left standing in front of a wardrobe full of clothes, frustrated that you have nothing to wear. Like a bitch.

Steal from Your Icons

“One pretends to do something, or copy someone or some teacher, until it can be done confidently and easily in what becomes one’s own style”.

- Cary Grant

If you look at any famous creative people – musicians, artists, designers, film makers – none of them are original. They have all stolen from other artists, then learned how to tweak what they liked, combined it with other bits and ‘made it their own’. A great artist is basically a magpie.

Developing your own style is no different. So find your style icons and rip them off. Yep.. just copy them. Then tweak it & develop it until it becomes your own. It’s that simple.

One of the easiest places to start is the annual Best Dressed Man of the Year Awards – the likes of GQ & Fashionbeans run these every year. Here you’ll find the likes of Vincent Cassel, Ryan Gosling, David Beckham, Idris Elba, Simon Porte Jacquemus, Daniel Craig, David Gandhy, Shawn Mendes, Jeff Goldblum, Donald Glover, etc. All men with great personal style, all worthy of emulating and stealing tips from in your journey as you develop your own style.

Show Me the Money

“It is totally impossible to be well-dressed in cheap shoes.”

- Hardy Amies
Why spend 100 bucks on a polo shirt when you can get 8 for that price? Well, the answer is easy – for 100 bucks, you get quality in terms of design, materials and fit that will last. For 12 bucks, you get a poorly fitting polo made from low grade materials that looks like it cost 12 bucks and - after a few washes - is worthless. One well selected costly item has much more value than ten cheap ones. Not only in how it looks but in how much bang per buck it gives you.

The difference is even greater when you’re buying outerwear and footwear. These are two areas where you simply cannot skimp on. Cheap shoes kill any outfit stone dead. Cheap jackets are just as bad. There’s a reason why you pay more for leather, wool and cotton - it’s practically impossible to look good in man made synthetic materials like polyester, pleather and acrylic.

If you can’t afford high quality clothes, there are numerous places and ways to get discounted quality clothing and footwear.

Shop online

A retailers job is to sell you shit you don’t need – good retailers do this by maximising lighting and mirrors to make you look as good as possible when you’re in the changing room. Ever tried on something in a shop, thought it looked good and when you got home realised that it looked better on in the shop? That’s why.

You’re also a lot more likely to impulse buy. 3 shirts for 20 bucks on the sale rack? What a bargain. That’s 20 bucks for three shitty shirts that’ll end up gathering dust in your wardrobe before you fuck them into the thrash. Yeah, real bargain.

So shop online – use retailers that offer free deliveries and returns, then try on that shit in the comfort of your own home. This also allows you to try stuff on with things you already own. There’s no point in buying something that just doesn’t fit into your wardrobe – you’ll never wear it.

Never Go Full Retail

All designers and high street shops are over-priced. Their pricing structures allow for their clothing to be sold at discount prices during sales periods and still make a profit, so don’t pay full whack – wait for the sales, use discount codes, install the Honey add-on to your browser, sign up to newsletters for discounts, use cash back sites.

Other places such as Yoox offer designer clothes at discount prices. You’d be a fool to go full retail.

“Looking good isn’t self-importance; it’s self-respect.”
- Charles Hix
I have been on a journey to draw a common thread in all this. To find the unifying theory of Red Pill. To date it seems to be a mass of theories and opinions with no cohesion in unifying it with human behavior. Much like string theory to physics, I have this feeling there is something more out there. Maybe I am wrong, much like string theory could be. Maybe I am right. I don't know. Still the journey and study have been rewarding. This is what I have found so far.

I have often said that there is no Alpha of Alphas. It doesn't exist in nature and it most certainly doesn't exist in humans. Ask a simple question: why aren't all Alpha males in nature actively fighting each other for their packs/prydes? They don't. They exist yet if challenged within their communities then the Alpha take action. It is an interesting question. Let's start with the fact that Dr. David Mech, the man who gave us the idea of alpha/beta wolf behavior, spends his time trying to remove the concept now. In his own words:

One of the outdated pieces of information is the concept of the alpha wolf. "Alpha" implies competing with others and becoming top dog by winning a contest or battle. However, most wolves who lead packs achieved their position simply by mating and producing pups, which then became their pack. In other words they are merely breeders, or parents, and that's all we call them today, the "breeding male," "breeding female," or "male parent," "female parent," or the "adult male" or "adult female." In the rare packs that include more than one breeding animal, the "dominant breeder" can be called that, and any breeding daughter can be called a "subordinate breeder.

So in nature really the Alpha is the one that fucks, and does so often. Ok makes sense. This adheres to Rule Zero. Yet is it enough for a human male? To just exist to fuck? Sex is a mens need. It's written into our DNA yet sex/women are the result of our work not the object of it. Alongside this Maslow's hierarchy is also often talked about. How do these two things go together?

It is enough to fuck all wimmens? To strive merely for physical pleasure? This is why Rule Zero is more than just fucking. It's using masculine qualities to achieve in life. To realize there is inherent risks involved in becoming someone you want to be. Making change and moving forward. Women and our relationship to them is an outward sign of this. It is one of the first things taught. Approach, learn game, keep going.

For example the Alpha may be the leader, but the Beta is the pack's protector, enforcer and goon. The Beta is also expendable. The rest of the pack has far more complex roles and services to the needs of the family. Does this play out in society? Alphas are usually also veterans, and who would deny tier 1 members not being alpha? Yet sex is not their priority yet it is a natural result of their life.

Then comes the little issue of we humans being social primates not canines. Both our brains and behaviors are more complicated than your family dog. Applying a hypothesis about wolf behavior to justify human behavior is a bit of a stretch.

However, in our cultural consciousness alpha=leader/alpha=bad ass is as ingrained in our psyche as the right to bear arms. It's not likely to let loose no matter how much KY jelly we smear on it. These days every Tom, Dick and Harry is swaggering around telling anybody who can't get away fast enough, "I'm an alpha."

Still, we're kind of stuck with the term so let's run with it --knowing it's wrong. Being an alpha is a whole lot more than just ordering people around or intimidating people with the threat of violence (that's called being a bully). It's definitely more than just being able to beat people up. An alpha isn't immune to the things Red Pill abhors. To think such is hubris. An alpha has been there and he acts accordingly, even when he fucks shit up and he will. Life grows from pain. Our biology demands it. Our bodies whither if we sit watching TV but grow and strengthen when put under stress.

In the most simplest terms a man must improve, women must forget. There is no end here. When wrong admit it and move on from it. Take your lumps. Always ask yourself:

- where am I at?
- What am I doing?
- Where should I be?

You will be amazed at how often these things are not in sync. These fundamental questions your MAP should address. Every mistake in my life I ask these things.

Being an alpha has more to do with one's involvement in a group than it has to do with striking out on your own. So the lone wolf alpha? Forget it. The hyper aggressive mad-dog that turns on his own at the drop of a hat. Not going to be in charge for long. This we see in the MGTOW of today. If you study the State of Nature it is theorized that people look for society. They crave it and need it for protection. Being an alpha is about the helping develop and maintaining a dynamic, hierarchy and the functionality of the group. One could say this strikes close to the real alpha plague we had where an Alpha is a leader but that is the end result not a skill to develop.

Caesar Milan coined the term Insecure Alpha, or that's where I heard it from. I recommend you watch his show.

Basically, Caesar's summation of an insecure alpha is a beta dog that is thrust into a leadership position. This dog lacks alpha attributes. Most of all it doesn't have the calm assurance of a true alpha. As such it is unstable and overly aggressive. An additional problem with this is other dogs in this situation also become unbalanced and aggressive. This is what I see in people often, especially men these days with the popularity of 30 Shades. Men who see the awesome porn they want but have no idea how to execute nor get it. I also see it in men who have nothing more than money. They throw themselves around. Make sure everyone knows who and what they are. I see it on the dojo floor, in the bars, on the street. Take a look around. They are everywhere.
They have these tricks they like to pull to show off being alpha. One I heard was a guy who would make a loud sound in order to startle everyone then he would strut around the room pointing out beta behavior as he saw it. Thing is noise sensitivity is just that. Sensitivity. It can be trained out of you but it is also perishable. A M109 howitzer suddenly going off next to my head never used to bother me, but years later a paper bag blown up and popped behind my ear can. There's also environment, expectations....I am not expecting a loud bang in my own home, but out on the gun line? Yeah I kind of am expecting it.

Now it doesn't take much imagination to take this out of the kennel and imagine the same dynamics occurring under a bad manager. A stressed out manager, gets the entire department upset and on edge. This is usually seen in a street confrontation, where fear of perceived loss of 'respect' will often motivate a beta (who is trying to convince everyone he is an alpha) to over react.

Face it you are not Alpha if you aren't leading somewhere in your life and delivering value to it. It is not just enough to be large and in charge. If you have access to 21 University Jack Donovan has a marvelous discussion about this. Lone wolves are rare among people. Humans are, by their very nature, social animals. Even still, some people don't want to be lead, primarily women. They don't. People aren't empty vessels to be filled, they have thoughts, and ideas, and dreams. these can and do get warped by social conditioning. Rollo talked about the Alpha Female. Problem is women do get it warped. With no guidance without proper male influence from the get go, there is no "Alpha Female" and it will be a fight uphill to get to that. Some get it once they met an alpha, some do not. For those that plan to teach their daughters consider the concept of Trophic Cascade. While it isn't ours to change the world and society, it will happen by our actions over time. The result. Not the goal.

To tangent: what we are building here are self-actualized males, with strong personalities. This requires understanding where something went off the rails and making sense of it. Sometimes this conditioning is so bad no one can see straight. Of course, over time anyone can be conditioned and reconditioned, but as a man who has achieved Alpha status you have to determine if someone is worth that level of commitment from you. While your goal is to establish and lead the group, you must also be willing to remove bad actors.

Just as our nature to love is sacrificial it is also our will to work and give. Everything a man does is rooted in sacrifice. Therefore it stands to reason a man is much more capable of dropping his world and moving forward, but it also means it's harder (sunk cost mentality). Women whom are based in Opportunistic love, do not see it that way.

Understanding the idea of the State of Nature, as an Alpha you are providing cohesion and security over the group. Your involvement, leadership and dominance brings the group together. Taking care of it doesn't mean you are sacrificing yourself, and I find it amazing that I have to add this. I know someone will point this out as a weakness. Yet it is true. Think of it more as a garden.

The Alpha tends to the group, makes sure there are no weeds, culls the dead plants, ensures it's growing and developing. When it comes to people? Do they really deserve to benefit from your presence? You can and will come to point in all your relationships where you will wonder are you giving more than you are getting from this?

Be ready to sacrifice (ie removing people or yourself, leaving your past, moving forward) for what you want. The ultimate risk is becoming who you want to be.
This shit works
by OwningMOS | July 3, 2017 | Link

I have been reading and learning RP for about 2 months now. I have read MMSLP and NMMNG, and currently reading Book of Pook. I started lifting about 2 weeks ago.

Yesterday morning I wanted some sex with my wife. She gives me, "I want to sleep some more." I did not get butthurt, instead got dressed and went to get my workout in.

I know this is trivial shit, but I was really excited that I actually did not even have to act to not be butthurt thanks to the work I am putting in.

BTW we had sex last night and I pushed her out of her comfort zone by refusing to have vanilla sex. After she got going she really liked it.

THIS SHIT WORKS!
Swallowed the pill...

by 08Winchester | July 17, 2018 | Link

Newbie here. Discovered this sub through TRP. After reading all the posts yesterday I quickly realized I need to shut my mouth, listen, swallow the pill...and change.

Interestingly, I possess a lot of the components MRP psychology requires. My problem, and I noticed this years ago but couldn’t figure out how to resolve, was I allowed my wife to mold me to her will.

44 here. Together with my wife 26 years in all. 4 children.

Met a girl at 18. Shit tests started a few months in. She comes from a severely disfunctional family. She also endured childhood nightmares no female should endure. She clung to me for safety from the start. I was not educated enough to decipher the difference between true love and comfort then. I’ve come to realize lately she has BPD.

I once had ambition full of flames anyone could see from a distance. As the years wore on I allowed my now wife to smother those flames.

It’s been years alternating between good times and bad, dead bedrooms and not, being on the same team then becoming opponents.

My mistake in everything: relenting. Always following my instincts to stand my ground on matters my common sense compelled me to, only to give in to and allow my will bended for the sake of peace.

It’s led to a ton of bad decisions that hurt our household.

Since my children have arrived I’ve been more steadfast with their futures in mind. It’s brought a world of hell. I ended up giving up a career to stay home with the kids. Looking back I know I was manipulated into it. The plus side to that is it doesn’t bother me because my work here yields excellent grades, a safe haven when she’s at work, healthy grades from doctors and dentists alike, a beautiful home and vehicles in excellent condition thanks to this guys’ skill and hands. Not to mention the plentiful kisses and hugs and lessons a solid dad provides and makes up for from a mother who knows nothing of warmth and passing on wisdom.

But I always relented. Always. Whether it be after a day, or after 2 weeks of the infamous silent treatment BPD’s are famous for. Always. And I’d always do so in front of the echoes of my previous bellyaching. And always have done so knowing my mouth should have been shut from the get-go, that I should have simply offered any of my decisions in a firm, calm matter.
I chose to finally listen to my instincts a couple weeks back and my natural inclinations to handle matters as I once did has risen from the grave. I feel better mentally and physically (this kind of life takes a serious toll on any man), but I still do not feel respected.

Then I realized yesterday I have not been taking the lead accordingly. As I should. As I always should have been.

I also realized I relied on my wife to help create my happiness when I had no business doing so.

I realized my absent sex life is in place because I created the absense through my relenting decisions to resolve arguments on my wife’s terms, no matter how I tried to camouflage the white flag I’d toss in the air with an aura of what I thought was my masculinity.

I tested the waters last night and this morning by way of simply doing as I pleased without input from her or thoughts about her.

My mind has been racing. Hell, my lack of leading as I should have been all along probably worsened her BPD and I hate that realization (and that’s not to make an excuse for her bahavior but instead to acknowledge I created my own mess). There is a lost adolescent component to that personality disorder that essentially begs to be led like a child and that went right over my head.

I’m ready to fix this because I’m ready to listen. Ready for the sake of me so I can be more successful for the sake of my children.

I’ve seen a list of recommended books throughout various posts in this sub. Can anyone recommend the top 3 books I should read immediately? I’ll of course be greatful for a list of recommended reading so long as the top 3 are at the top.

Much credit and applause to those that began MRP and put this information to the guys in need. And a world of thanks in advance.

The first rule of MRP is.... ;-) Divorce Incorporated
by Rollo-Tomassi | August 2, 2017 | Link

Read the whole essay here:

https://therationalmale.com/2017/08/01/divorce-incorporated/

Excerpt:

What we have, fundamentally, in the state of modern divorce is a conflict between old books social contracts serving as the ethical basis of a new books resource transfer from men to women (Thomas Ball even described it as such). Really this conflict is at the root of much of what Red Pill awareness (from the social perspective of intersexual dynamics) describes, but in this instance there’s an entire social complex that influences policy and profit. Judges, attorneys, psychologists and counselors all make a very good living from this fundamental conflict; and if you watch the Divorce Incorporated documentary I linked you’ll see that there’s no incentive to ever change that profitable conflict at any stage.

However, all of the people involved in even a typical western divorce are all subject to the belief sets that the Feminine Imperative has predisposed them to about men and women. We presume a default state of victimhood is to be applied to a woman and the benefit of that victimhood doubt runs deep. We see it evolve into the kangaroo court systems that govern what we’re told to believe is an endemic ‘rape culture’ on college campuses – up to and beyond denying a man his civil rights.

We’re taught that any slight appearance of abuse towards a woman is an opportunity to teach any man doing so a lesson, but should a man be the victim of the same abuse? Well, he probably had it coming. The Feminine Imperative has (and still is in some senses) prepared women and Blue Pill men to believe that women are untouchable; always to be believed, by default, in their victim status no matter the circumstance.

Now we can expand this presumption to every party involved in a divorce proceeding. We get female therapists whose livelihoods depend on following the victimhood of women and demonization of men (and masculinity) script the Feminine Imperative has laid out for them for most of their lives. We get Blue Pill Alphas eager to prove their authority by punishing any man who might remind them of their asshole fathers or who fits their idea of what the imperative has taught him is a “misogynist”. The imperative plays to the natural ‘protector’ impulse of these men. We get well-conditioned attorneys, counsellors and judges ready to follow that same script by legally enacting the retribution and restitution upon which feminism has always been based.

But underneath all of this we have the fundamental inequalities in ideology between what the old books social contract expects of men while the divorce industry enforces, almost unilaterally male, punishment based on a new books social paradigm to better empower women – presumably to right the past wrongs they believe were endemic in that old books paradigm. What we have today are new books divorce and marital laws based on those old books presumptions of men’s evils, indiscretions and addressing the toll it allegedly took on women. The result is a system that is designed to psychologically, financially and personally ruin any man whose idealism led him to believe that men and women share some mutually recognized concept of love; enough to compel him to a lifetime commitment in modern marriage. It is a system calculated to destroy the same Blue Pill conditioned men who will eagerly stand up to defend their ego-investments in it.
Econ 101 vs Econ 202
by redpillrobert | April 18, 2018 | Link

For the second time I can remember since making my way to MRP I have been accused of "refusing to swallow the red pill", and of "trying to change it rather than letting it change me."

In both cases the accusations arose after I called into question the standard assumptions surrounding the AF/BB model or schema.

They weren't GIANT changes in my estimation--they seemed reasonable enough, but to this particular poster (or perhaps it was more than one I really don't remember) it seemed from his reaction like the worst kind of blasphemy. Like I had dared to suggest to a Christian that Judas was actually the hero of the New Testament or something.

"Trying to change the red pill."

Quite an emotional charge.

I remember taking Econ 101 in college and learning about the supply/demand curve and seeing all the different ways we could use it to predict human behavior.

God, it was beautiful. It explained so much. It honestly made me warm and fuzzy. Like reading scripture. That beautiful concept just wove its way into my mind and heart and it seemed like it could explain the whole universe to me if I gave it the chance.

Then came the very first day of Econ 202 and the first words out of the mouth of my professor nearly shocked me to the core: "Models are helpful, but they are, by their very nature, woefully incomplete. They can help lay the foundation for understanding complicated concepts to the uninitiated, but when applied to the real world, other considerations must be made that often times render the original model totally useless. This is the case with the supply/demand curve. Today I'm going to show you how it is complete and utterly useless in coming to conclusions about all kinds of things in the real world."

That....really....bothered me. I really really really resisted that for the first few days of class. Who the fuck did that professor think he was--bashing the supply/demand curve like that? The supply/demand curve has been like a brother to him. The supply/demand curve was the answer to all the world's problems. It would cure cancer if we'd just fucking let it, goddammit!!!

Well, it turns out he was being a bit hyperbolic. I came to see that supply and demand were still very much in play in all the things I had thought before, and its presence within the equation was still foundational, but that I simply needed to include more variables in order to come to more accurate approximations for things that exist in the real world.

The supply/demand curve hadn't gone anyway. It hadn't been destroyed, the academic understanding of it simply matured over time. And that was fine.

Well, at the risk of comparing myself to a college professor in this particular case, let me just say to my friend who belongs to the Reddit Orthodox Church of AF/BB, that I know how you feel.

AF/BB has been, and will continue to be, a remarkably helpful model to help socially incompetent retards understand the basics of male/female dynamics. You're right. It's important to come to understand it. It's important to know what has been said about it. It's important to INGEST it and to let it change you.

But bro. You sound like you've spent a lot more time within the holy walls of a church than within the holy walls of academia. AF/BB did not come down from Sinai, and even if it did, that too was subject to revision with the New Testament.

It doesn't have to remain static an inviolate forevermore. Those with new ideas about it, with new perspectives on it, might very well be wrong, but if so, and your only response to that is name-calling, your precious religion is going to be in real danger.

Yes, I think the general understanding of AF/BB needs a slight revision. I think the obvious discrepancy that exists between the male and female libido as a result of testosterone should not simply be ignored (as even the great high priest Rollo Tomassi himself has admitted to this discrepancy).

The idea that the female libido could be equal to that of the male despite this vast discrepancy in hormone quantities is completely asinine to anyone with half a brain. Or better yet, has actually supplemented with testosterone personally (I know some of you could confirm this).

Ignoring this and simply saying "She craves sex as much as you do, she just craves it from alpha cock", while it might sound super tough when you write it to noobs on the main sub, I would think, on this sub anyway, it would be widely scoffed at by now.

How can someone crave sex as much as you when they have, according to the great high priest Rollo, "1/12 to 1/15" the amount of testosterone as you have?

Simple answer: they can't.

So, given this simple, obvious, demonstrable fact, what else can possibly explain the behavior that we see from women which demonstrates an almost inexhaustible willingness to fuck an alpha anytime anywhere as often as he wants?

Simple: It's not about the sex. It's about the alpha himself (or what she perceives as such). She's trying to get the alpha. And sex is the most powerful thing nature has given her in order to secure one.

Sex, for women, is a tool. I know that's confusing because when we're fucking them they really do seem to be enjoying themselves. "They orgasm and squirt and everything. Of course they like sex!"
Sure. Sex itself DOES feel good, to both men and women, yes. This is indisputable (I've even seen studies that suggest it's even MORE pleasurable, in the moment, for women).

So how can I say what I'm saying?

Well, we've already established that their libidos, regardless of how good sex actually feels to them in the moment, is almost invariably lower than ours, thanks to that MASSIVE discrepancy in testosterone.

So, giving my theory just a little benefit of the doubt, just a little space to breathe, how else might this be explained?

Simple: it can be explained by how men and women differ in the way they think about sex AFTER THE FACT.

And how is that?

Easy: Men feel like strikers, and women feel like goalies, biologically speaking.

Men view sex as an accomplishment (unless they're super religious) and, regardless of what happens next in the relationship with whatever girl they just had sex with, view the accomplishment of that "goal" as something to be proud of, maybe even something worth boasting about.

Women do not experience this at all (religious or not). They are almost universally ashamed of having "given it up." And, unless the sex results in the successful procurement of said alpha (assuming the guy they just fucked indeed proves to be an alpha), they will very rarely speak of it to anyone, let alone boast of it.

This reality about women, I would think, would seem elementary to most of you by now. It's practically axiomatic.

Or have you bought into the feminist notion that the shame women feel for sex is societally, rather than biologically driven?

Because you're fucking retarded if so. Our society has clearly mimicked biology on this matter, and not the other way around.

So, back to the point: if women are so fucking ashamed of "giving it up" to either someone who is not really an alpha, or to an alpha she will not be able to procure permanently, WHY DO THEY FK THEM SO GODDAMN MUCH???

Isn't it obvious?

Because acquiring an alpha is literally their prime directive.

The #1 instinct all living beings have is individual survival. And the #2 instinct is that of reproduction--which is really just more "survival."
So in walks this notion of AF/BB, absent, for whatever reason, the extremely important variable mentioned above concerning testosterone levels, and what do we hear?

"Women have a dual mating strategy. They want to reproduce with alphas (alpha fux) and have their offspring raised by nice, safe, betas (beta bux)."

Sorry guys, but that's bullshit.

Women don't want betas raising their kids. That's fucking retarded. Why would they? Cause they have money?

No. An alpha provides all the qualities a woman's DNA is seeking for, not only to reproduce, but to protect those children until they reach adulthood, whether he happens to have money or not.

The problem, my friends of the Reddit Orthodox Church of AF/BB, is found in the fact that there are simply way too few alphas.

There is no dual mating strategy.

There is Plan A, and then there is Plan B.

Plan A is to pump an alpha so full of oxytocin (via really hot sex) that he bonds with you, has children with you, and protects those children throughout adulthood, meanwhile providing you with all the juicy status you can handle to lord over other women. Yum yum yum yum yum.

Plan B is for when Plan A fails.

After a hot woman comes to the brutal realization that she can no longer procure a real alpha, although she could have when she was busy riding the cock carousel earlier in life, perpetually trying to trade up to an even truer alpha...she hits that infamous wall, and settles for motherfucking Plan B.

Again, it's about survival. Plan A is gone. But Plan B can offer her both survival/security (via his bank account, not his strength and confidence) and reproduction/children.

Better than nothing. But nowhere near ideal. Nowhere in the same universe as fucking ideal.

But her hand is forced, she senses that biological clock, she sees those wrinkles, and she goes through with marrying a beta. But she still holds out this really perverse hope that if she really works hard for the next little while, she can still convince an alpha to mate with her long-term.

So she keeps going to the gym and getting botox and doing everything in her power to maintain her youth as long as possible with the ever present hope that she can still convince an Alpha to love her and to give her the life of her dreams and fulfill her PRIME directive.

But the nature of the alpha has not changed. He's no more interested in settling down with someone like her now than he was when she was young, and her chances then were slim enough, given his options.

But he's more than happy to fuck her. And she's more than happy to let him, because she's still in denial, and believes that if she really gives it to him good (you guys wouldn't believe how much more vigor and effort post-wall women put into sex than the average college girl, it's hilarious) she'll get him to fall for her, to bond with her, and to fulfill that pesky prime directive.

But he never does. He's only interested in committing to the hottest young pussy, even if it is less experienced/talented/versed in the kama sutra.

And so we get the pump and dump. And our dejected heroin, upon realizing her failure, runs back to Beta Bob to have him pump her full of his own sperm just in case she's pregnant so she can avoid public humiliation and financial ruin.

Until she realizes, of course, that she won't be financially ruined....

Yeah you know the rest.

So look. We end up at basically the same place. Most of the terms remain the same. We've simply incorporated a fairly significant variable into the equation that brings greater continuity to the whole theory (if you ask me).

But if we end up at the same place then why should I go to all the trouble to try to correct the equation?

Well....because advice based on bad premises is usually bad advice.

Consider my post yesterday: "Men are horny. Women are bored."

If the standard advice of TRP and MRP is always "lift lift lift lift lift" how do we square the copious number of times we've seen NOT buff, NOT good looking guys land super hot, super young pussy, and even lock it down?

Why does that reality keep getting ignored?

I'll tell you: because that pesky reality does not square with the canonical doctrine of AF/BB that was brought down from Mount Sinai so many years ago and is now the veritable sword in the stone, or as one poster called it "the e=mc2 of TRP."

But when you stop thinking about alpha genetics/alpha SPERM and start thinking about alpha qualities/alpha BEHAVIORS, it makes perfect sense why we see super common looking dudes end up with super crazy hot girls. For life (I know you've heard it doesn't happen, but it does).

Because height is often something alpha's possess, but it's not what makes an alpha.

Because good looks and muscularity are often something alpha's possess, but they're not what makes an alpha.
Because money is often something alpha's possess, but it's not what makes an alpha.

Because game is often something alpha's possess, but it's not what makes an alpha.

Because aggressiveness and competitiveness are often things alpha's possess, but they're not what makes an alpha.

What's confusing here, is that hot women have been spotted fucking all of the guys above. Even those who are not alphas.

Why? Because they're shortcuts. Since those are things that alphas often possess, it makes sense for women to start there.

But a true alpha, I alluded to pretty heavily in my last couple of posts. A true alpha may or may not be one, or some, or all of the things I just mentioned above. But you know him when you see him and it's pretty unmistakeable (like porn!).

A true alpha is that man who possesses that special enlightened trinity of confidence, abundance, and pro-sociality. An alpha is an alpha in the mind, regardless of how tall, good looking, buff, competitive, or verbose/witty he might be. It's in how he sees himself and those around him. He's unflappable. He's above it. He's devoid of fear because he has no enemies. He's Jesus. He's Ghandi. He's Ferris Fucking Buhler. His frame is enormous and sturdy (whether his dick is or not). He has an energy about him that's irresistible. He's popular everywhere he goes. Humanity itself is his special domain. He knows everyone. Likes everyone. And so everyone likes him. He facilitates fun and is an inexhaustible source of positivity, hope, an unconditional acceptance. He's like a ball of fucking light.

That, my friends, is what we should be aiming for. "Lift, STFU, sidebar" is really good advice for noobs whose lives are just completely out of control, yes. They're the first three rungs of the latter for men who are so far away from achieving the above description that they need something highly tangible to hold on to.

It's damn good advice but don't let yourself drown in it. Don't get stuck in it. Don't worship it like a zealout worships a god. Always be open to the possibility that a model might need re-tweaking, because models usually do.

It's just Econ 101.
I was stopping by to check in (yes, still do that occasionally) and noted the question about whether or not you can use TRP at work.

Oh, mais ouis!

Here are a few starting posts that might help inform how you use Game at the office, and how it helps your Game overall. Let me know what you think.

http://theredpillroom.blogspot.com/2012/10/office-game-primer.html

http://theredpillroom.blogspot.com/2013/03/office-game-dominant-dynamic-kino-for.html

Something had really been bugging me with the tone of recent posts and a lot of comments. I couldn’t really put my finger on it but now I know what it was. The people who subscribe to these theories were all committing a cardinal sin, they failed to act like they were the prize. This is some 101 shit, even pick up artists know this basic rule. The people who were committing this sin were putting the cart before the horse. They were either putting too much emphasis on their wife’s fee fees, or they were placing undue emphasis on “the marriage”. I am not saying anything new here, Rollo has covered this way better than I ever could and his maxim “be your own point of origin” should be a red pill commandment.

So why is 88Will88 now using messianic language to communicate red pill commandments? Well I think we all know the reason why. There has been false prophets insinuating themselves into our church. Whispering false doctrine and corrupting the scriptures. Indeed as we speak Protestant red pill subreddits are proliferating with profligates and apostates. I say to ye all, hearken to the true faith, respect the canonical truths set out in the sidebar, keep the Rational male close to thine heart. Do not let the hamster of Satan reinterpret the scriptures handed down unto you. Keep the faith!

So beware of those who try to reinterpret “alpha” as “realalpha”. Beware of those who attempt to abduct and rebrand the red pill as something which has a moral compass. The red pill can be a sword or a plowshare, but that is up to the user. It does not change the principles of metallurgy. Those who want to reinvent the wheel or build a better mouse trap are really just plugging themselves back into the matrix and revealing themselves as soft faggots. There is no need to lure the moth if your flame burns brightly.
What should I do guys?

For the life of me, cannot remember how we got there, but walking to work is 15 minutes of chit chat (read: running her mouth, while I poke fun at her). She likes it, I would rather just keep the headset in and get my head in the game. This morning was different.. Cannot remember what popped it off, I do know I was feeling sick that day, so I throw a bit of sting on my comments.

Either way, she's pissy. Threatens to cross the street and take the alternate way to her work (I think this is a threat, was many furloughed eyebrows, so I should probably fear for my sexlife or something) I largely ignore, go back to poking fun. Head isn't in the game, so the feedback is largely negative. I STFU.

But you know chicks, can't let a sleeping dog lie. more prodding the bear. Finally, I give a quick:

Weren't you walking away?

Stunned! And gone! Jesus, she walked away! I suppose she did threaten, and I did call her on it. But damn! She actually did it? What should I do?

I put in my headset, threw on some vaporwave, and got ready for my day. Jesus, why isn't she calling to continue the conversation? Is she still mad? Maybe I should call and apologize for her not feeling perky?

I'm fucking with you, guys.

Some mornings shit is just off, she gets cunty, I tell her to fuck off. She fucks off in a huff. I take the morning to get over it. I called her up for lunch. She's curt, I don't care, I feel great now.

Meet up, shes standing on the corner, stewing. Kiss on the forehead, go grab some food, grab her some spring rolls. Here's the part that makes me laugh, and gives some tips on not apologizing.

- Are you going to apologize?
- No, why?
- You never say sorry
- OK, sorry?
- You don't mean it!
- You never I had to mean it
- Well say you mean it!
- OK, I mean it
you don't mean it
Of course not.
Do you know why you're sorry?
Yeah, you say you don't hear it enough, you're welcome
Fuck you, you're supposed to feel bad for being an asshole, and be sorry and mean it
Jesus, that sounds like a lot of work.
Fuck you!
Didn't you say you were going to go across the street (see what I did there?)
Just say you're sorry, you never say you're sorry
That is true...
Just say it!
You've got a big smile on your face babe, stop ruining this moment with your rants. Let's get a springroll. Also, stop swearing, you sound like a hooker.

Hooked onto my arm, smiles and giggles.

My interpretation, she gives two shits whether I'm sorry or not. She wants the goodfeels, so I gave it to her. I have 0 problems telling her to fuck off if she gets on my nerves. I also have 0 problems going out to lunch an hour later. Her emotions are like a goldfishes memory. It's fun when I catch myself going with the flow on my mental states. Play around, bring it up, bring it down.

I get bored easy, it passes the time.

I mean, what. She gonna leave me because I didn't say sorry? Leave because I was grumpy for a morning? Fuck no, she isn't an idiot. It's not like there's not basic bitches all over the place I can replace her with, and I kind of prefer having quiet time moreso than not. The fact I'm giving so much of it up for her is a gift, and I can retract it if I'm not feeling the bern...

So, I tell myself.

Remember when you were 28, and she was still a plate, and you purposefully poked at her, until you made her cry? That was hilarious. She didn't even know why she was crying. Called me an asshole, got over it. Chicks love that emotional shit. I remember for a while there, I wasn't paying attention, that little voice in my head. The one that told me she is mad, so I have to be placating her.

Fuck that guy, he's a douche. I laugh at him now.

I could get all cerebral now, quote the many quotes on this, blah blah air of unpredictability, blah blah love, hate better than apathy, blah blah push pull. Just go try it. If you can put a sentence together without looking like an aspie. Be a dick, pull it back, have no memory of the event at all. Be the goldfish. She is, this minute has no bearing on her next minutes emotional state.

It's a pretty neat skill, and it really only works if you know you can replace her. Maybe wait until you're not a fat fuck who can handle the house without her for a few weeks first. Otherwise, you're just a chode. I'm pretty sure being fuckable is the lube that keeps this machine going. There's your only 'don't eat paint' warning for this rambling mess.

Is there a point? I don't know, beats posting some bullshit about her being mad, and you not knowing how to deal with the situation I suppose. It's not the poetry of this mornings satire...

Faggot
Marriage, A Game of Frames
by Hunter_DrewTFA | September 4, 2018 | Link

Frame > Everything Else

I was introduced to the concept of “frame” early in my discovery of The Red Pill subreddit. I remember reading about the concept and thinking, “well duh, if you think like everyone else, you’ll be operating at the same standard as everyone else *and who wants to be average?”

I have written thousands of comments, replies, messages, and tweets stating Frame is Reality, it’s literally everything. But, I’ve never written a formal piece on the topic, so this will be my well overdue piece on Frame in Marriage.

Later on in my readings on the ‘sphere I discover Rollo Tomassi’s writings at The Rational Male and it was here that I saw another man giving this aspect to existence as much focus and intentional attention as myself.

That is not an exaggeration either, read his #1 Iron Rule:

“Frame is everything. Always be aware of the subconscious balance of whose frame in which you are operating. Always control the Frame, but resist giving the impression that you are.”

Let the fact settle in that a man who’s been labeled as The God-Father of The Red Pill decided that when penning his Iron Rules he chose frame as Rule #1, it’s that important.

When I say that frame is reality, I mean that in the literal sense. As Rollo states, this goes down to the subconscious of the human mind. It’s how you perceive the world, the lens from which you experience reality.

Let’s take a modern example:

Man A is busy at work and his boss asks him for a favor. Instead of letting the boss know that he is busy, Man A says “Yes, I’ll take care of it.” This stresses him out, requires extra hours in the office, impacts his personal life, and when he delivers his boss shows no recognition. He is upset, left with a feeling of not being appreciated, and goes on to repeat this episode another day in the future, perpetuating cycle of being a “Yes man”.

Same scenario for Man B, except Man B says, “I’m pretty busy with my project, I won’t be able to pick up the extra work right now.” Boss says, “Ok, keep up the good work” and moves to the next person. Man B finishes his task at hand, heads home, and comes to work the next day with a smile on his face and a boss who thanks him for knocking out his original task.

Who do you think has the stronger frame?

The man who is not afraid to say no to his boss, at the risk of there being confrontation or the man who always says yes, always placing himself last?
The answer is obvious and this example is but one of an infinite number of everyday moments where frame is tested, established, and can be changed.

Your frame is the point of origin from which every decision will be made in every aspect of your life.

There isn’t an area in our lives where frame is not the determinant of outcome in regards to life and self-satisfaction. Frame is the most crucial factor of a man’s mental health. It’s the difference between having a winner’s mindset and that of a loser’s; it’s what gives you an air of abundance or living with a mindset of scarcity.

So where else can frame be clearly observed as being the difference between those who come out on top and those who continuously fail?

To name a few:

- Your professional life
- Your friendships
- Sexual relationships
- Parenting

We’re focusing on the Sexual Relationships piece to frame. Everything up to this point was to prime you on the fact that your perspective on everything in life is dictated by the frame you’ve built.

The optimal marriage is achieved when your wife sees the vision you’ve created inside her own frame.

How does frame play into marriage?

When discussing the role frame plays in marriage, it is imperative you realize that your frame should be established and your selected woman should enter it without opposition. As a man looking to start a family (why else would you get married?) your frame should be impenetrable, nothing changes when you are courting your lady.

A quality woman will eagerly make herself whatever she has to be in order to gain favor and keep your eyes (and hands) on her.

As you are going through the dance of vetting, testing, and developing the roles of what is to potentially become husband and wife, you should not have to work to “break her in”. When you are completely confident in your frame and as previously stated by the first Iron Rule, this is occurring on the subconscious level. Your body and mind will act in complete accordance to your frame and the reality you’ve developed without you consciously thinking about it.

If you would never tolerate someone who was lazy, consumed with social media, or addicted to drama in your “sphere of relationships, friendships or anything else” then you would immediately remove a woman who exhibited these behaviors from any potential selection as anything more than a ONS without giving it a thought, it would happen as your brain made the decision based on your frame of reference.

Once this point is acknowledged and understood, it is clear to see that when the vetting process has reached an acceptable point, all factors have been considered, and the risk is assumed by you the man, only then can you move to the phase where you don’t entirely know where you’ll land when you jump.

No man knows what marriage is like until he is married, this is a simple fact which I feel is missed due to the staggering number of unmarried men telling me how marriage “should” be. If we are to acknowledge that every man walks his path alone and that men should be developing their own frame, then so too does it stand to reason that while marriages may be equivalent, they are not equal nor would the man and woman all be interchangeable with one another.

The frame established in marriage will be comprehensively unique to that man and woman and the history they have together.

When you transition from LTR to marriage, there will be another critical moment where you will once again have to define the previously adhered to rules of the roles.

Like any woman, your lady will test the waters and look to see where the boundaries of her new title (wife) can be found. I previously stated that frame is reality, this is again where you defend the boundaries and maintain the standard which you deem to be acceptable. While I did state that you were jumping without knowing where you’d land, I was intentionally exaggerating to make the point that life before marriage and after is different, for better or worse is going to be entirely decided by what you do when the boundaries are tested.

Are you going to be a man who relaxes once he “gets the girl”?

I most certainly hope not as you never “have her”, it’s just your turn. With this mindset you can keep a sense of self-imposed pressure on to keep you from getting complacent.

Your marriage can be one which all others are compared to and you can avoid the common tropes associated with the married man.

1. Your sex life doesn’t have to decrease.
2. Your physical health doesn’t have to deteriorate.
3. Your children don’t have to lead to your early death due to loss of drive.

All of the negative aspects to marriage which are heavily promoted (and condoned) throughout society are the result of men with weak frames. It is absolutely true that by taking on a commitment to a woman for life you are taking on a risk which will forever alter the trajectory of your life. Whether it’s for the positive or negative, that comes down to you.

When you look at the frame of your marriage, do you see the picture you want or the one someone else has placed in there?
You decide the picture in that frame

The frame in which your marriage resides will be decided by you. If you allow your wife to become a slug who stays at home, contributing nothing to the relationship or family, it is due to your poor leadership. The warning signs are there, during vetting you can always see where a woman is headed.

If your wife gains weight, you’ve got to look in the mirror and recognize that you could have prevented her from becoming 50lbs overweight by saying something (as a leader of a family should) after the first 10.

Remember Man A? He is the guy who avoids confrontation.

Be Man B, maintain a standard by defending boundaries and having the difficult conversations. Being a leader doesn’t mean being a dick, you want to be a dominant man, not a domineering one.

In your marriage you are not allowing your wife to spend countless hours on her cell phone or tablet “scrolling”.

- In your marriage your woman has a role with defined jobs. These tasks she performs are tasks which the two of you have agreed upon early in the vetting process. If she is a stay at home woman, she is to keep that house clean, tend to the laundry and dishes as well as any other necessary actions which supports you from having to do it after working your job.

In your marriage your wife does not continue to have a “Girls Night Out” weekly.

- Going to clubs and bars with “the girls” weekly is not what married women do. To go out on occasion for a celebration is fine, but to make it a habit where weekly your wife goes out with other women to locations where men are on the prowl, what woman would want to do that? Answer: One looking for attention from other men.

In your marriage there is no scoreboard *as you’re on the same team.

- Again, you want to be a dominant man, not a domineering one. You should be enjoying your wife’s company. The two of you should be having a great time with plenty of laughs, love, and joy. Remember, you never “have her” so you should always be in “pursuit mode”. The mantra I’ve told married men time and again is to Always be Gaming. Flirt, have fun, tease, and don’t be so serious now that you’re married. There will be stresses, but even those can be positively managed by a man who doesn’t let emotions get too high.

In your marriage books are read, the gym is part of your routine, and you develop as individuals as much as you do as a couple.

- Your woman is a part of your mission, she is not the mission itself. She married a man who was driven and had goals, she should be driven and have her own life objectives as well. The two of you should be pursuing your goals; she should be a complement to you achieving yours, not a hindrance. If neither of you develop as a person, then what will you talk about at the dinner table? You’ll become stale and boring, which is a death sentence for attraction. Develop apart and grow together.

In your marriage your wife is complementary to your mission.

- Using myself as a “real world” example: There is no way I would be able to maintain the tempo I’ve set for myself without the complement of my wife. Between running the Fraternity of Excellence, this blog, and The Family Alpha Podcast my time is stretched thin. If I did not have a wife who had a home cooked meal for me every day when I got home from work, took care of the kids while I wrote, or could not maintain a standard of cleanliness in our home then I would be too distracted and required to maintain my home life and could never grow the electronic resource you are reading today. She does all of this while working 32-36 hours a week. Being a SAHM is not difficult when you just do what you have to do, the fact that my wife outperforms some SAHM’s while working almost full time proves exactly that. Again, in my frame a working woman puts her wife/mother duties first and because I’d accept nothing less I have a woman who can do exactly that.

In your marriage, your children are held to a higher standard.

- We always hear about how terrible the youth of America is. Here is the real fact of the matter, most parents are sub-par in every facet of living. Most parents are lazy, overweight, dumbed down by the consumption of conformist promoting mind numbing media daily. Your children will follow your example, not your advice and they’ll rise to the standard you accept, not the one you expect. Be a father whose wife sets as high of a standard as her husband and watch how your children will follow your lead. Instead of being raised by electronics and becoming tablet toddlers, they’ll outperform their peers and live life the way humans should live, active and full of eager wonder and desire to explore our amazing world.

If and when you decide that you want children and that you want a marriage (whether it be contractual or private) you must accept that you are a player in a game where you are tested each and every day, to the grave.

The easy path is constantly promoted and rewarded. You’ve got to withstand the barrage of signs and support that is directly aimed at getting you to become a complacent (numb) man. You must remain steadfast in your commitment to the frame you create and the standard you’ve maintained prior to courting your woman.

Marriage changes nothing, the frame built prior to the ring being placed on her hand is the default operating mode that your girl will fall back to. Once married and once tested, how you respond will seal your fate.

Craig and I will be releasing a Podcast in the near future on how to “rebuild frame” and how you can transform yourself under the ever watchful eyes of your woman.
Remember, very simple things can derail a marriage and very little adjustments can save a marriage. You are the catalyst for both, as you are the one living in your frame or out of it; you are the cause and the problem to your relationship, you are also the solution.

Acta Non Verba,

Hunter Drew

Twitter

Blog
She's Schizophrenic...That's Why.
by RP_SuitScholar | January 25, 2017 | Link

One of the recurring themes that emerge from posts to this forum and /AskMRP is frustration that male action does not lead to a desired reaction on the part of the female. This is often served up in conjunction with a sense of frustration and anger (anger-phase posts especially drip with these characteristics). I want to remind our newer members and some of the veterans that have been coming here for a while to vent that even if you do everything perfect you are still dealing with a creature that is fundamentally alien from you in its ability to process logic and emotion.

At the heart of female communication is the principle of schizophrenia. This principle you would do well to internalize as deep as any other Red Pill truth: All female communication and thought is schizophrenic in nature. Webster defines schizophrenia as exhibiting contradictory or antagonistic qualities or attitudes. In other words, women do not think and act the way a man does because most men think and feel along the lines of cause and effect, action and reaction, goal and accomplishment. We too experience deep levels of emotion, but our emotions are a result of cause and effect. Spend a year investing in a small business only to have it fail and you will feel frustration and anger for a bit, but then you will dust yourself off and start again. A woman will start a business and spend every second of every day see-sawing between elation, frustration, fear, hope, sadness, and joy. Hell, they do this regardless if they are investing in their own business or they are a cashier at Wal-Mart.

Gentlemen, they cannot help it. It is their nature.

This principle is very easy to observe. Just listen to the bullshit they spout 24/7. They see problems where none exist. They go from tears to laughter in moments. They pitch themselves in battles with bosses or co-workers where alliances would produce better career results. For what? Certainly not logic. This is the nature of females because their neural pathways are firing along the lines of their emotions, not their logic. In other words, they are looking at the world through a lens that most men cannot ever truly see through. This is why traditional Blue Pill relationship advice is absolute garbage. BP relationship advice to men almost always comes down to being a better “listener” and communicating your own “feelings” effectively. What absolute garbage. If this is how you operate go punch yourself in your left nut immediately.

This leads us to the big problem, though. Our single brothers on The Red Pill forum can ghost a girl whose schizophrenic nature becomes too difficult to bear, but here at MRP we are living the Red Pill on hard mode. Many of us are unable or unwilling to ghost our wife who in most cases is the mother to our children. We must find a way to make it work, yet the Blue Pill advice is garbage and we cannot put our own minds in the same place as our woman because the result is frustration or even worse, you succeed to some degree and your own thinking and feeling becomes schizophrenic in nature.

This subject is deep, and there are a lot of implications for this principle. I am going to key in on one major implication of this truth for this post and will be looking in the comments for other perspectives as well. For me, this means that to successfully navigate the schizophrenic hamster that is female emotions and logic, I must to a degree be liquid in my own expectations and reactions to her highs and lows. In other words, I watch her actions and dampen my interpretation of her words. If my wife is extremely emotional, I adopt the mindset that I am a rock in the middle of her storm. She may crash and rage around me, but I will not be moved. And when she calms down she can rest on my strength. I allow her to do this, knowing that this too is a transitory state that will eventually change as well.

I am not angered or bothered by her sometimes-maddening communication style. I am not bothered because it is the same thing as when my dog barks or tries to eat something off my plate. It is his nature, and I will not be angry at him for it. Instead, knowing it is his nature I will adapt my actions and reactions to it. Again, there are many conclusions that can be reached from this principle, but my hope is that some married dude is reading this right now and his anger towards his wife dissipates so that he can be more clear headed in developing the next steps to his action plan.

TLDR;; Do not let her hamster pull you into its wheel...also LIFT!
Prime amused mastery examples.
by Countpudyoola | August 4, 2015 | Link

There's a video trending about John Cena beating his girlfriend in silly reality show competitions.

I'd rate her looks at a solid 10.

He's a top 1%er Alpha dog.

But still: AWALT! Being top tier doesn't get you out of testing. She's demonstrating minor shit tests and not only does he A.M. even at her (trumped up for show probably) brattiest, he breezes on through IDGAF while having a good time. All the way to her beer splash and walk off.

While any can point out that yes, it's a reality show. Who the fuck hasn't dealt with this princess like testing?

In my dating years I specifically had a girl get mad that I never "let" her win at ping pong or darts. I dutifully let her beat me in the next game and she acted like a brat after. Hmmm. Go figure.

Found some more clips on youtube and I also note half the time when she looks at him mad that once he looks away her face is laced with girlish infatuation.

She flips him off. He gleefully exclaims "I'm number one?!"

Cheesy gloating and slow-mow replay.

When she (frequently) walks off he NEVER chases.

This is amused mastery at mastered levels.

Scale and apply Cenaisms to amp up, disarm and blow through.
Are you another crab in bucket?

by UEMcGill | June 15, 2015 | Link

Everywhere I go, I am reminded of the bluepill hegemony, and reminded about how it tries to pull you down. Like Michael Corleone, they are always trying to pull me back in.

This weekend, I sat down at one of the picnic tables to shoot the shit with a couple of the other coaches at my oldest boys game. Conversation drifted and eventually someone muttered "Happy life, happy wife right?"

I answered "Fuck no. That's bullshit people tell themselves because they don't have control. My job aint to keep my wife happy." Now I know there’s some that believe you’re better off going with the flow. But frankly here I have no dog in the fight. I was just passing the time and talking with some other dads, and I really can’t stand that saying.

They all started laughing. “Oh yeah! Let’s hear you say that in front of her!” “hrumph, hrumph, bullshit, bullshit, bullshit…”

“Fuck yeah I’d say it in front of her. If she doesn’t like it, she knows where she can go.”

Dead silence.

It just goes to show you, how groupthink is pounded into the masses. These guys were flabbergasted that someone would speak up against the standard message. They just couldn’t fathom how someone could go against it.

Early on in swallowing the pill, this was a standard message from my wife. “How I am supposed to answer to people when they think you’re an asshole?” Her sister, a certified soul sucking vampire, used to pester her about shit all the time. Early in the relationship I was pretty redpill, and her sister was the first one who would ask her “why does he get to control the finances? Why does he get to say where and when you eat out? Why does…” I made the mistake of trying to rationalize and explain my decisions. Little did I realize how woefully outgunned I was. So eventually I became a beta appeaser. I started listening to my detractors, and it was down-hill-ugly from there. I became another crab in the bucket, letting others pull me down. I even became concerned about what my SIL was thinking (ewe, I shudder even thinking about it).

Eventually I found the Redpill. I’ve learned to deal with this kind of crap. I’ve learned to not give a fuck about some harpies’ feelz and the conversation she’s had with my wife. In fact the last time my wife brought up this very same argument with me I trotted out my new standard line I use in this situation “If your sister has a problem with me she can come straight to me. Second, and most important, if you’re not happy with the situation, and feel your sister is right, there’s the door, you are free to leave at any time.”

Eventually when you learn to lead well, your wife will follow, and follow happily. This weekend we were at a family party. It was late, the kids were tired and I was beat from a long day. One of the other party guests was complaining that it took an act of god to get his wife to leave. I stood up and said, "Yeah I don’t put up with that". Walked over to my wife and said, “It’s time to go.” She cheerfully answered “Ok, I’ll get the kids’ stuff together.” He watched with a deflated look on his face.

I got to the point where I stopped having fucks to give. I just didn’t care who got pissed. I found out that when you show people you don’t care what they think, they stop trying to pull you down. I also cut those people out of my life. I hardly associate with my BIL anymore. My wife knows I have no use for her sister, and in fact she’s pretty annoyed most of the time by her. I stopped letting these things bother me, and most importantly I make the right decisions because they need to be made and not because of public opinion. My family is better off for it, and I no longer feel like just another crab in the bucket.
If you check my post history you'll see that my wife cheated before we were engaged/married while in school. It happened 10 years ago, but I recently found it. This is my field report since I last posted.

After the initial anger began to fade, I tried to use these events to cultivate a better version of myself for the future. It hasn't been an easy process, but I am seeing what is capable if you are committed to change, and most importantly, have the strength to be outcome independent.

My wife knew I was temporarily in the relationship and evaluating my options (stay or leave), and this put a certain amount of dread on her. However, that alone wasn't enough to make her step her game up. I have been lifting for several years, but wasn't dressing as I should have. I upgraded my wardrobe (and importantly, this includes shopping on a semi-regular basis to keep current), stopped wearing jeans to work, and now get comments from my wife several times a week that I look great. I went from average to above-average quickly just by spending a few hundred bucks and having the confidence to wear what I bought.

Some other things I started to do:

- Stopped doing things for her with the underlying intent of receiving sex.
- Stopped asking what she wanted to eat; instead I said we're going out and took her where I wanted.
- Planned a mini-vacation on my own without her input; she didn't know where we were staying, eating, doing, etc.
- I made a major decision singularly by financing a 130K piece of equipment for our business without her input (I never, in a million years, would have done this before).
- I stopped asking her (as much) for her input, and just told her what I was doing.
- If I wanted sex and she denied me, I would continue on with what I was doing before, and not linger around in hopes of changing her mind.
- I stopped apologizing during arguments. She would persist, I would hold frame and dismiss the request to apologize. Eventually she would come back to me.

Prior to finding out about the past, our sex life was in trouble. So, as part of making progress, I expressed a need for high quality sex and intimacy, and some kinkier stuff, but I was careful not to talk about it in such a way that it was directed at her (I do not want to negotiate desire anymore). I said it was time for me to be selfish and get what I want, and when she pressed if I meant with her or someone else, I refused to answer. She fired back, in anger (assuming I meant someone else), saying she is "not that type of girl" and would not be willing to do what I wanted (like anal, etc.), so I should just go find someone else to fuck the way I wanted. We left it at that.

One thing that I didn't notice at first, but eventually picked up on, is that during sex she began to ask me if I liked owning her, her tits, her ass, etc. Implying I had full ownership of it, and it was all mine for the taking. Never in our 10+ years together had she done this. To take it a step further, she suggested getting my name or something similar tattooed on her ass, to show she is my property. When she asked if I would tattoo her name on mine, I said no, I wanted to "leave my options open" in a joking manner.

Fast-forward to a few days ago. Some light flirting through the day. She had shown interest (feeling my pecs, arms, etc.), and after sharing some wine, we went to bed. I wasn't expecting anything, but she initiated and that's when things got crazy. I'm deep inside her and she's asking how much I like owning my wife. I began playing with her ass and suddenly she grabs my hand and forces my fingers into her ass. I was like what the f is happening. Things get even more heated, I finish inside her, then she tells me to put it in her ass. Hottest... thing... ever. This is the same wife that has said no to anal since the beginning. We had some more fun and fell asleep. She did a total 180 on me. From "never, gross, ewww" to "give it to me now".

Where do we go from here? Who knows. But at least I know my wife is capable of giving me what I want, now the onus is on me to hold up my end to keep getting it.

Lessons learned? Improve SMV, implement some dread, take matters into your own hands, be the boss and you'll be treated like one.
The Emotional Rollercoaster
by resolutions316 | February 1, 2017 | Link

TLDR: Wall of emotional english-major text. Had a major blow out with the wife that took everything I had to maintain the small amount of frame I could. Afterwards, had intense sex. What I took away from it? She is intense need of emotional stimulation, and up till now I have been stable, pleasant, and boring as fuck.

Context:

I've been pursuing MRP/MAP since around November of last year. Hitting the gym regularly, dieting, reading everything I can get my hands on, coming here every day, etc.

Someone on here once called me a "100% Pushover Prince," and that's exactly what I've been. I've had a massive covert contract with the world that if I helped everyone and was nice, and pleasant, and put their needs above my own, people would love me back and I would get my needs met.

You probably have some idea how that turned out.

By the time I found MRP, my wife and I hadn't had sex in 1.5 years, since my first son was born. Even before then, we were at most once a month, a slow and steady decline over our 6 year relationship. I had and (let's be honest, still kind of have) a major case of oneitis for my wife, and spent my days doing everything I could to please her, be more agreeable, more affable, etc, etc.

I've come to realize that frame is by far my biggest weakness. Hers is strong, mine is weak. Even though she's a SAHM, I make extremely good money running my own business, only work 4 days a week so I can help with the kids, wake up early to make everyone breakfast and feed the kids so she can sleep in, do all the dishes at night, pay her each week so she has spending money, etc, etc - somehow she is always the one sacrificing, and I am the one who "has it easy."

Her Depression, Her FB addiction, lack of sex - all these things came between us, and I blamed her for them. I was getting more and more hurt, more and more rejected, more and more bitter.

Only MRP was willing to tell me that it wasn't her fault - but mine. It wasn't that she was a sexless harpy; it was that I somehow expected that I could make everyone love me by playing doormat. She needed a leader and I was acting like a butler.

The Shit Test:

I actually posted about this before the event - you can read my original question here.

Suffice to say, one night out of many I simply decided not to do all the dishes. This prompted angry silence and, the next morning, a flurry of texts letting me know she was incredibly... pissed, and that we needed to "have a talk" about it that night.

(Note that something very similar had happened a few weeks before - refused to do something, angry texts requesting a talk, which led to me simply ignoring it when I got home, on MRP advice. That evening, she cried in bed and we had sex for the first time in 1.5 years.)

I got a ton of great advice from folks on here, and so went into that conversation in a completely different frame.

- Before coming here, any disturbance in her emotional reality was a serious issue that needed to be addressed, and her emotional reality was my responsibility. Is she unhappy? I must be a bad husband!

- After coming here, I went into the conversation with a mindset of: I can't control how you feel. I haven't done anything wrong and don't need to feel guilty.

She had requested that I initiate the conversation, so I did, comfortable in my frame and approach.

What followed was a 2.5 hour long rant about how depressed she is, about how leaving the dishes in the sink in the morning causes a domino effect that ruins her entire day and makes it so she can never catch up or be happy (direct quote), how I don't care about her or her feelings, etc, etc.

The sheer intensity caught me completely off guard. I struggled to maintain my frame - and so kept coming back to WISNIFG-style replies.

"I understand that you feel that way. I don't want you to be sad. But...."

"What about my going to the gym makes you upset?"*

Etc, etc. Eventually, she caught on to what I was doing.

"Stop talking to me like a fucking therapist. Show some fucking emotion, show me some fucking empathy!"

Oh no! I thought. I'm being autistic MRP new guy. Don't be autistic MRP new guy! Say something not autistic!

"I understand that you're upset that I'm not showing you empathy. What about..."

Yeesh.

She kept escalating, trying to break my weird pseudo-frame. Eventually, she crossed a red-line for me: she spoke to me in insulting and derogatory terms, tone of voice, etc.
I had decided when I started the MRP journey that this was one of my hard boundaries: I will not let anyone speak to me this way. I never insult my wife - ever. I always show her respect, even when we disagree, and I expect the same.

Hearing the insult, I let her finish, then stood up.

"I can see you're upset. I get it. But I do not accept the way you're speaking with me. I want to talk with you, but only if you can treat me with respect. I'm going to go upstairs now. If you want to continue this conversation, I'm here for you - but only if you can speak to me respectfully."

I moved to walk up the stairs. Her face looked shocked - then quickly flushed, her face transformed.

I was halfway up the stairs...

"Don't you dare fucking walk away from me. Don't you fucking dare. I swear to god, if you walk away from me right now I'm going to LOSE MY SHIT and get in the car and drive it into a fucking...I..."

I stopped. I backed up and looked at her. We had both heard it - a line being crossed.

And now, I was pissed. Angry. Upset. I had almost killed myself, once. And I couldn't believe she would utter those words in our house - where our kids play.

I came down and sat straight in front of her. She had been holding a book in front of her, facing away from me this whole time - I made her look me in the eyes, put the book down.

I told her: "I understand that you're upset. I understand you feel depressed. But you will never, ever, threaten something like that again. If you ever did something to yourself, the effect that would have on the kids? On me? I would never forgive you."

At this point, I was tearing up. My voice was shaking. My hands were balled into tight fists. I felt energy surge through me - all that anger, that rejection, that fear of her responses, that love - This was my house my family, and I wouldn't stand for anyone threatening it. Not even her.

.....

So. Pulled into her frame? Yes. We kept talking. I treated her problems like legitimate problems. I talked way more than I needed to (if you've read this far, I'm sure you recognize this behavior). I over-explained, I DEERd.

But. I didn't offer to solve her problems for her. And I didn't let her cross my hard boundaries.

We went upstairs, and we made intense, passionate love. We were both shaking. I was more dominant. She was more submissive. It was good.

Lessons Learned:
For me, the big takeaway - besides the importance of holding frame - is about how this all feels to her.

To me, this is a fight - a needless emotional blowout over problems that are easily solved. It's about playing defense, not letting my guard down and my bad habits take over. She's the adversary.

For her, it's a huge adrenaline rush - dopamine flooding her brain as she hits intense emotional highs and lows. Her sexuality is deeply attuned to her emotional reality, and even though, from my perspective, the emotions are predominantly negative, they're still exciting to her. Creating any reaction in her is better than sitting on the couch and calmly watching TV for the millionth time.

I've initiated several times since, but only had sex once. Why? Because I'm not doing a good job of giving her those emotional highs and lows when we're not in a huge blowout.

She's bored out of her mind. That's on me. Just like everything else, attraction-wise, has been on me this whole time. Only this experience really drove that point home for me.

The more I put her on a pedestal and make her happiness the point of all this, the less happy she is. She isn't my adversary - I am.

I still have so far to go. I must ignore 40-50 MRP best practices every day. But pattern recognition is starting to take hold, and I'm starting to see subtleties where before I saw none.

Anyway, a long story. Still processing. But I wanted to share here in case anyone else has a similar experience. I hope some of you can find some value in it, the way I've gotten so much value from the comments, questions, stories, and insults here.

Cheers.
I have gradually been swallowing the Red Pill for nearly a year. I’ve posted once in ASKMRP, but I learned I needed much more work before posting again. I probably still do.

What I’ve read (including some books not in the SB): NMMNG MMSLP WISNIFG The Rational Male MAP The S 16 Commandments of Poon Still reading The Book of Pook The Way of the Superior Man The 48 Law of Power Listening to Mastery Thinking Fast and Slow The Subtle Art of Not Giving a Fuck How to When Friends and Influence People Sex at Dawn is next Started reading Zen and...I’m not finishing that one

Lifting:

6’ 175 12%-14% BF lean

Some CrossFit

SS 3X5 Squat 265 Bench 180 Deadlift 345

A little about me. I am behavioral therapist and so much of the Red Pill is about behavior, therefore I grasp the concepts relatively well. I realize a lot of guys here started in deadbedrooms, but that was not me. However, there’s not much else that wasn’t blue pill about me. I’m sure most, if not all, of us aren’t exactly devoid of any and all alpha traits, but I would say any that I had were displayed few and far between, and erratically.

Fortunately, my wife has never withheld sex from me. However, I have given her a multitude of reason to not be attracted to me. Lack of leadership is likely the #1 reason for that. I would do some random things here and there to look like a good husband, but all the other beta shit I did nearly ended our marriage. These days she worships my cock, which is what all our women should do, IMO.

My mindset during this Red Pill swallowing time has been focused on being an Oak, and what it takes to be one. This has helped me the most. Ultimately, I need be able to weather the storms that come my way. In order to do this, I have to withstand the breezes and occasional wind gusts (passing shit tests and comfort tests). If I sway at the slightest breeze, I will likely fall when the real storms come.

The easier stuff, like doing things around the house, taking care of our daughter, making decisions on things from finances to where we are eating that night, building confidence, and passing shit and comfort tests helps to maintain frame. They are subtle ways to establish leadership in my family. The hard stuff, like not being a “nice guy”, breaking away from oneitis, not taking my stress out on my family, etc, helps to clarify my path.

For me, it often comes down to frame and walking my own path. Passing shit tests has produced immediate and lasting results for me. I cannot stress enough how important it was/is for me to STFU, especially in these early stages of my transformation. Often time, I will tell my clients about the “3 second rule”. I explain to them that taking 3 seconds to respond to a question or statement allows time for several more thoughts to come to mind, possibly providing them with a more effective response. Talk about not practicing what you preach! It worked wonders for me. Sometimes it was 3 minutes, 3 hours, or even better, 3 days before I would respond certain things. This allows me to improve my responses and move towards disarming conflict more effectively. WISNIFG is great for this.

I’ve been agreeing & amplifying more and I’m seeing more positive results. Frame, man! Fucking frame!

I have a tendency to jump the gun sometimes. I’m not sure where this falls under, but my wife was giving me a pretty big shit test one day. I maintained a smirk on my face until she finished ranting and attempting to tell me what I’m going to do. I simply and gently held her face and said, “Do you really feel charge”? (adopted from Bane). She was instantly in my frame. She lowered her head, place it on my chest, and said “I’m sorry. I trust you”. Frame.

The more difficult thing for me has been gaining a better vision of my path and I’m still very novice to this, as I never effectively lead until now. My mindset is becoming one of “this is my path; you’re welcome to join me on it, but it is not an invitation for to dictate my path”. If you are on my path with me, it is because I allow you to be. This goes for anyone. My wife. My daughter. My mother. Anyone! Sometimes my path is challenging, and since my wife is my co-captain (a very good one), she is affected by these challenges. When these challenges take place, she is most likely to give shit tests because she is either fearful she will lose something she has or is fearful she will not get something she wants. It is my responsibility to condition her responses, which means being the kind of Oak she can depend on. My behavior is meant to reinforce the message I continually give her: I will give what you need and want, but I will give it to you however I see fit.

My wife and I read The Surrendered Wife. She is applying what she read and it is improving her behavior. Granted, my wife has responded extremely well my subtle transformation, which is a testament to MRP, honestly. Does she still give me shit test? Of course. Probably always will. However, the intensity, duration, and frequency of her shit test are decreasing at a nice pace.

Summary

I’m new to MRP and it has already helped a shit ton. I’ve done well to not go Rambo with this shit and I have a shit ton to learn. I’ve read a shit ton of the side and it is changing my life. I lift now and fuck like a champ. My wife worships my cock. She does a lot for me because I establish what I like and don’t like. I reward good behavior and I don’t reward bad behavior (to my knowledge). I didn’t’ come from the bottom or a dead bedroom. My marriage was not like many of the horror stories I read about on here, and that often makes it hard for me to know what I’m doing right or wrong.

Passing shit tests has proven to be a most effective skill to have. Not showing anger is a great first step for me followed by STFU, to onward. Trying new skills here and there can be awkward for me, but I do it anyway and I work to master those skills. All this helps to maintain the ever-important frame in our relationship. In all my relationships, really. Consistently working towards gaining insight to and clarifying my path is vital to my role as a leader and to be the best Oak I can be. However, none of this is possible without action.
Weak Frame Is My Biggest Problem
by Persaeus | January 11, 2016 | Link

TLDR: I have implemented various components of the red pill praxeology throughout my 25+ year LTR/marriage; but in a highly incongruent and non-oak manner that has proved unfulfilling. Ultimately, went betmax to the point of considering chemical self-castration before discovering the red pill. Now on a purposeful journey; destination wifes' ultimate role in it unknown.

Facts and bona fide

I and wife (both 47) have been married for 22 years after 2 years cohabitation and 2 years LTR in college. We are both engineers and well employed. We have two children ages 13 and 16. I am Caucasian. She is north Asian, and immigrated to USA in middle school. My wife’s parents and sister have lived with us for the last 15 years. I discovered the red pill on 9/14/15; and immediately started choking the thing down. I have read NMMNG, WISNIFG, MMSLF (twice), MAP, TRM (twice + outlined), Models, and all other “TRP 101” sidebar excluding books listed in “TRP Sidebar”. I have also read top the 100+ post on MRP, AskMRP, and TRP (>50 top). I have lifted on/off my entire life; but not heavy until swallowing pill (....I know....ignorant).

Post Purpose

I have many questions; which I will mostly address in future post. The purposes of this post are to:

• Introduce myself and situation to provide context for further inquiry. I have fully accepted that my marriage problems are of my own making, that a woman takes the shape of her vessel; and that I have been a drunk (actually high) captain for >15 years. This is a wall of text; but I hope not a victim puke. Feel free to flog if too much puke is visible.

• While neither my wife nor I are snowflakes; the overall expression of our current marital relationship is unusual when compared to the 100s of post I have read. While all of the red pill praxeology is applicable; I would like your input on my situation and my MAP.

  • My 20+ year marriage demonstrates how to fuckup a lot of red pill concepts; and the consequences of negotiating a lot of sex with little organic desire. Don’t do it this way.....

Me Before Marriage
From the age of 15 to 23 I had sex with seventeen different women and dated another dozen-plus, practicing a combination of serial monogamy and plate spinning. Women were HB6-8 with the occasional HB8+ (sorry but no HB9/10 using this honest scale [http://www.realmendrinkwhiskey.com/how-to-rate-girls/]). My “cold calling”/bar game was atrocious as I am naturally introverted (strongly INTJ on Myers-Brigg type indicator); but my inside classroom/hobbies/circle friends game was solid. In these first 8 years, I never had fewer than three plates spinning and outside of backwoods man trips never went more than 1-3 days between getting fucked/sucked. In terms of the LTRs excluding my wife, in ¾ cases I was the dumpee / not the dumper. In red pill hindsight, the being dumped LTRs were all due to a combination of oneitis/nice guy smothering behavior on my part combined with hypergamy on their part. The lone one I had to put down was just bat shit crazy (stripper…..). Sounds ridiculous in hindsight, but I had a strange combination of actual abundance and serial oneitis. My last LTR; my wife….I can honestly say I approached in a very red pill fashion. I was not aware of my own internal change at the time; but at that point in my life, I had finally just come to conclude “fuck these bitches, I am going to do my thing, and if they want to come along for the ride so be it”. I was in excellent shape, had very interesting jobs, lots of cool hobbies, and was extremely driven to rise from very humble beginning. I rode a motorcycle and had a “rebel/bad boy” reputation.

With Wife – Part 1

Ms. Persaeus and I met in a college TA (teaching assistant) session. Skipping the porno description, within a month of meeting I was into the best she had ever given (nothing off the table). Shortly thereafter I found out she had a LTR of six years with a pre-med student that originated in high school (guess I was Chad in hindsight…..and not the first time this had happened to me). She dumped him within two months of hooking up with me and had zero remorse (AWALT). The relationship was openly open-ended on my end only for the first year. She maintained I was N=2, and I have never heard anything that cast doubt on this assertion although (maybe double…..who knows or cares at this point). She professed her love first; and I was very much dominate in the relationship. I was very confident in picking her as wife material with zero red flags other than our meeting which I rationalized up to her boyfriend being both lame and a jerk (classic nice guy in hindsight). Solid family and background with very little drama. A major factor in picking her was that I found (still do) her to be the most emotionally stable, rational, and independent woman I had ever met. Not saying she was some snow flake; but everything is on a scale and she is on the non-needy end of it.

Upon graduation, we found jobs in the same large company and moved in together in a pretty rural area. As I mentioned above, in college our sex life was HOT…HOT….HOT. After moving in together, anal was suddenly off the table (“hurts too much”). We married two years later (1993) and the honeymoon was the last blowjob I would see for another 15 years. Aside from a smaller menu, our sex life was frequent but not particularly memorable (I don’t remember it being an issue). I would say it was on a very slow decline reflecting my alpha decline until we started trying to conceive at which time there was significant two year jump (97’-99’) in frequency/intensity. I was doing some things right and lot of things wrong. I was killing the career. I still had many interesting/manly hobbies away from my wife; and I would say my frame was in my head and not hers. I was sort of (not) passing shit test; but unfortunately relying almost entirely on nuclear weapons and was unaware of/not passing comfort test. Arguments typically went through an exhaustive DEER process with me ultimately nuking the whole thing from orbit. I also physically let myself go in this period, gained 20 lbs fat and stopped exercising/lifting aside from a life-long dedication to long-distance hiking. She on the other hand looked as good the day I impregnated her as when we met.

I learned in 1998 that she was spending a lot of time with a co-worker and rumors of a relationship got back to me. For the first time, I went straight to an intermittent diary she had kept. In this diary she clearly laid out my emotional inadequacies and how her co-worker met these needs. She described how he gave her the Tingles™. She also went on and on how this was all wrong, and she needed to switch jobs so as to not be around co-worker. There was never any admission of a physical relationship. This emotional affair lasted 2+ years during which I was closely following her activities in the last 6 months. I never found evidence of a physical affair. During this six months I put my balls and frame squarely in her hands in a bid to win her back. Through some combination of this and getting her pregnant the affair came to an end. Before you ask; for my own sanity I now assume she fucked him, and yes I am covertly submitting paternity test on both kids (both look like mine for what that’s worth). However IMO, she was there for the taking but the co-worker (20 years older) was just too much of a bitch (and married) to pounce. Up until four months ago, she was not aware I knew about this emotional affair. I have forgiven her largely because of AWALT and I completely brought it on myself. However, I have not been able to forget it and it has played havoc with my frame.

With Wife - Part 2

Our first child was born in 2000. In 1999 and 2000, my job required travel ~26 weeks each year. Due to some combination of being a drunk captain and resentment over the affair, I was often gone hunting/fishing or otherwise non-attentive father for first several years. This “abandonment” has been a fixation of hers ever since. I had also retaken up a serious marijuana smoking habit in 1998 that I had laid to rest 10 years earlier. This habit never interfered with work; but was serious. Typically getting high 3-5 nights a week M-F and all weekend long. Wife and family are extremely naive in this regard and I am highly functional with a mild buzz; and have never known about my drug use.

Wife’s parents moved in year-2001 primarily so she could return to work; and we could avoid having our children raised by strangers. Her younger sister moved in a year later after washing out hard from a LTR+startup business. The in-law package was also sold to me based on the premise of being able to continue with my hobbies. Of course, per Bilfrault’s Law this was rapidly forgotten and I was constantly accused of being a poor father for exercising the agreement.

Our second child was born in 2003. We also moved into very large-new house constructed for the now seven of us to live in. From 2001 on; I was steadily deleting my old life, becoming a more involved father, and moving into my wife’s frame. By end-2004, sex was down 2-4 times a month with most of that occurring during ovulation week in spite of the fact that my initiation never dropped to less than >10 times per week (giving up is not my thing). My OI sucked with lots of whining, pleading, and occasional yelling. I did often withdraw both emotionally and physically in response to the hard no. In 2005, I started keeping detailed records on her cycle, our sex life (initiation, yes, no, quality), and the amount of time the wife and I each spent with the kids. Lo and behold; I was 2:1 on her taking care of kids by this point. We argued at least monthly about the lack of sex with her reason always ending up as some variant of me being a poor father; and her being stressed/tired out over the combination of work+kids. I just continued my slide into overweight drunken captain relinquishing more and more control outside of the kids; which I continue to this day to own.

With Wife – Part 3

In the summer of 2008 the blowjob suddenly reappeared and sexual activity started to slowly pickup to around 3 per week by summer 2009. With my detailed records and red pill hindsight, the reason is clear. By this time, she was such a bitch that I started taking family vacations (i.e. kids and I) without her. One of my best friends, with kids, had divorced the previous fall and now he and I were executing lots of good times with our combined five kids. Her hamster was figuring out I could run the big show without her. Then again….maybe she was getting tapped by Chad while I was gone…..fuck I really don’t know.

In the summer of 2009 the shit really hit the fan in a good way. I started a KETO diet as New Year’s resolution and began lifting again…..sex is picking up even more. Then in August the wife and I had the following paraphrased conversation. The kids were at my mom’s this week; and everything was going well between us that week. Wife: “Oh we will move here and do blah blah blah when our kids are grown up”. Me: “I am not really sure all that will happen. Given the way you treat me and the quality of our sex life; I plan on divorcing you when the kids get older. Not sure when; but I am pretty damn sure I can do a lot better.”

Her: silence followed by rapidly changing the subject to some banal shit. I had been thinking this for years. I had no intention of saying it at the moment; and was surprised myself when the words rolled out of my mouth ice cold with zero emotion. I left two days later for a week-long dads+kids boating trip with my buddy. When I returned, the hamster had replaced my wife. The bitch and constant shit test were gone. Sex was now every weekday and 2-4 times a day on the weekend. Blowjobs were weekly and she was often initiating. We were having sex in all the various rooms of our giant house for the first time since it was built (a six year ago promise finally delivered). None of this was duty or starfish as she was full bore into it. I actually turned her down twice over the next year as she was just wearing me out. This would be the best sex of our entire relationship, surpassing the college years.

The super high intensity sex lasted for ~14 months; and then steadily dropped off to around four times per week by early 2013 (quality was maintained throughout the drop off though). The saddest thing is I was completely unaware of why these changes had actually occurred. In discussion with my friends, consensus was the “old wives tale” about a woman going through one last libido explosion around 40 before hitting menopause. Fucking ugh....wrong answer. Note during this time in no way did I start passing the slowly creeping back in shit test or earn back the helm. I continued to smoke pot all the time; and my weight started to move back up. In 2013, the starfish reappeared and it all started rapidly sliding back down the hill to around 3 per week. 3 per week might sound ok until you consider this was almost all around ovulation, with remainder of the month being sex every 5-7 days. Blowjobs getting real rare; but not non-existent. Zero initiation from her. I had a real opportunity for a major reset and blew it.

As both the sex and her interest in spending time with me in general dropped again, I began to suspect an affair for no other reason than her apathy. For the last three years I have monitored her cell phone, computer, and location with a variety of GPS tools. I have found nothing indicating an affair. In fact, I would say this activity has been a disaster for my frame and my paranoia has exacerbated my beta mindset. My wife is much focused on my health, and jokingly (but not really.....) states this is so I can live a long time and earn lots of money. She has stated plans of retiring in 10 years to pursue philanthropic work while I continue to earn. I made it clear in early 2014 that not having sex at least every other day was killing me (stress). Summer 2014 I received a promotion to a level few obtain in our corporation (still killing the job); and started KETO diet and lifting again. Sex started improving again but nothing like before as there was still a lot of starfish and “duty” feel to it.

Finding the Red Pill

By spring 2015 I was down to less than 20% body fat from >30%. I had a skiing accident in May that destroyed my shoulder; and put the weight lifting on hiatus although I continued cardio. In August I had surgery to rebuild the shoulder. As has been documented here repeatedly, my post-surgery physically weakened state brought on a drought in the bedroom and non-stop shit test. I was on narcotic painkillers that were interfering with sleep badly. The wife took a business trip which in my altered state seemed suspicious. When she returned home late at night I was in bed crying (fucking cringe); and I accused her of cheating on me (she was not). I stopped taking the painkillers the next day and just endured it; but with better sleep. Over the next week; I unleashed the mother of all beta-victim pukes on her. This included finally confronting her over her emotional (at minimum) affair 16 years ago with co-worker. At first, she said he was just a friend and more of a “father figure” (hah....). I then confronted her with her diary and fact that no one wants to fuck their “father”. She just kept insisting “nothing happened”. The only two things I learned in these pukes was “she just stopped caring about the relationship in 2006 because I just kept hurting/disappointing her”; and although “she loved me, she was not in love with me” (ugh). We discussed the possibility of counseling for the first time ever; but decided against it (thank god).

The following week feeling like I would never be satisfied in my marriage and the stress would kill me, I started researching medication to reduce my libido. Surprisingly, there is nothing that is also not highly psychoactive. My research took me to this website http://www.peoplespharmacy.com/2007/09/10/seeking-ways-to/ (aka dead bedrooms). Comments lead me to NMMNG. A NMMNG blog lead me to MRP. Reading NMMNG is like a biography of my relationships with women. In contrast, none of NMMNG applies to my relations in work or my family.

Following is a description of my current relationship with wife:

• Shit test and compliance were daily/hourly before taking pill; but have slowed down significantly since. I have implemented STFU and just ignoring many compliance test with a look of “yea…right”. I am working into A&A and amused mastery; but I am not quick witted so this needs some work.

• Up until taking red pill; I cannot remember the last time there was anything like a comfort test (because she has “checked out“). Think I passed the two that have occurred in last two months.

• She shows no interest in spending any time with me at all. I have to initiate any interaction; and often have to plead or badger to get time. Since taking pill I have stopped the pleading; and now just command the time. If rejected then I try IDGAF but it is an act...... We seem to enjoy each other’s company when together; but I am clearly the last priority in her life.

• Sex is 4-5 times a week outside of shark week. Here is the problem though, sex only occurs between the hours of 3 and 7 am in the morning and in our bed. This has been the case since the fall off in 2013. Sex at night (before going to bed) occurs less than a dozen times per year; and only during ovulation. Sex during the day or outside of our bed has not occurred in many years now. IMO, the wife has to be unconscious or semi-conscious for me to successfully initiate.

• Sex was about 25-50% starfish before taking pill; and is now down to less than 10%. When it is on; it is often quite good. I have always been dominant with a lot of throwing her around and caveman pounding. In the last year (before red pill); I started introducing a lot more dominance such as restraining and choking along with derogatory word play. Since red pill, I have went all in on this with tying her up, spanking her ass, calling her a slut, race play, etc. She absolutely loves this stuff with moaning, “fuck me harder”, and multiple orgasms largely independent of her cycle.

• On the other hand, she refuses to look me in the eye during sex. She refuses to kiss me during sex. Blowjobs are rare, only during ovulation after I eat her out, only if I jump up and shove my dick in her mouth, and never to completion. I have cum in her mouth once since we have been married.

• Implementing Athol Kay’s 10 second kiss during the day has been like pulling teeth....but slow progress is being made.

Shit I am owning:

• Diet and exercise. I am down to college-sophomore weight (14% body fat using “Navy” calculator); going to gym 4-6 times per week and really adding iron each week. On machines since surgery recovery, but planning on going back to free weights in February. It is worth noting that wife followed suit on my weight loss six months after I started, and is now down to pre-pregnancy weight (no time in gym though).

• I stopped smoking pot all time back in April 2015 primarily because it interfered with diet and was starting to impact my straight-cognitive abilities. Still hit it once in a while with my buddies; but zero when around wife or family.

• I cut porn from 1-2 per day to 1-2 per month in October. She was unhappy with my porn obsession; and knows I am off of it.

• I have bought completely new wardrobe and had clothes tailored to fit in October. Since I have always dressed like a slob; this was a major change that wife and everyone around me has noticed. I switched to contacts from glasses which I have worn since childhood. Removed some of the grey from my hair, and overall improvement to grooming. My overall appearance has changed so much that folks I do not see every day (including relatives); do not actually recognize me. I have been getting attention from random women like never before in my life.

• I have stopped all complaining or showing signs of any physical or mental weakness to wife.

• I have killed the covert contracts. I no longer do anything with an expectation of sex. Either I want to or should be doing something; or I just don’t do it.

• I am faking OI when rejected for sex or companionship about 90%. This was a drastic change to my previous behavior.

• I have been building my abundance mentality by interacting with women at any opportunity. I have also spent a lot of time on dating websites, and researching the scene. This has helped my frame because it obvious given the field and the competition; I could be into all kinds of pussy within days/weeks of divorce.

• I resumed control finances in November; and have made significant improvements to our already positive cash flow since. I have been fixing things around the house; and have taken on some big jobs that I would have previously contracted out. The finance coup brought on the only argument I have engaged in since taking the pill. However, last week she was complimenting me on how much more positive cash flow has been since I took over.

• I have been taking every available opportunity to engage socially with other folks in the presence of the wife. I have not been practicing any active dread in front of wife. However, I am getting plenty of (new) attention from the sport-moms, her friends, and sisters. Major IOIs. She has said nothing indicating she notices this…..but I think she is just maintaining frame. However, it is worth noting that sex after these types of interactions is always kicked up a notch.

• I have been re-engaging in old hobbies and with friends. Rejoined poker club and biking/paddling club. Basically, I have been working towards being the funny/cocky guy she was attracted to way back in the day. I was invited to a weekly trivia night at a local bar by some hot/female 20-something co-workers; and have been going every week for last six weeks. This appears to be inspiring some dread in the wife; and inspired the first comfort test in forever.

• I have consulted with two different divorce lawyers; and confirmed I would not be on the hook for either her family living with us or any alimony (our incomes are 60/40, but she has identical credentials and work experience/opportunities as I do).

Shit I am not owning:

• Shit test and compliance test. I still have a long way to go here. I feel like a deer in the headlights. Shit test have dropped big time since taking pill; but compliance test continues and I continue to fail. Half the time I just comply out of reflex; and the other half I don’t want to endure shit test for not complying. I need to move beyond STFU.

• Rollo says whomever needs the other the most is at risk for being used and taken advantage of..... I feel like shit admitting it, but at this point I always feel like I need/want her more than she does me. No doubt she is aware of this fact. It has not always been this way, but at this point my hamster runs laps on hers. Her frame is rock solid compared to mine at this point; and this is my main problem.

• During my brief angrier phase, I was actively withdrawing attention in particular around rejection associated with 10 second kiss. I have since backed off the withdrawal, not wanting to go Rambo, working on my IDGAF, and realizing I am not ready for anything resembling a main event.

What do I want.....?

I fucking want it all. I want a wife that is DTF whenever and wherever, and is enthusiastic about it more often than not. I want random blowjobs. I want a woman that obviously wants to be around me.

When do I want it...?

I am five years out from my youngest starting college; and I have no intent of missing any of my kids’ lives between now and then. After that and short of getting what I want/need; divorce is definitely an option with little downside and a lot of upside. Having already seen two divorce lawyers, I will continue to interview two more a year to both bone up and taint the pool. Having already fucked this up; I am trying to take a patient (not easy) and methodical approach to implementing MRP. Basically, I plan on not moving to dread level 8 for the first year and not making ultimatums for two years (24 months of MRP and years of marriage). After that....I will start looking outside of the marriage for my needs until I can leave for good.
What is my question...?

I know I need to continue increasing my SMV. I would say from an outsider perspective, we are probably equal now and I can surpass her. From her (that actually matters) perspective, it is obviously not high enough and I am quite truthfully unsure whether I can move it very much at this point. I know I need to improve my frame/shit/compliance/comfort test. Based on my reading of MRP; I am unsure of how I should handle the rigidity of our sex life. I am working on all day flirting and KINO; and I do initiate at night and during day on weekends to no avail. Should I be withdrawing attention on these hard No’s? I have considered stopping initiating in the morning; and seeing who breaks first (I wouldn’t bet on me......). Any advice on these questions or my general predicament is appreciated.

[EDIT] Formatting was a disaster. My apologies for the wall of text induced headaches.
I'm a first-time poster and longtime reader. RP and MRP have bettered my life immeasurably in the past year or so. However, my story of becoming RP'd had taken place in May of 2015, before I discovered these ideas. Looking back on those days, I realize that something extremely powerful happened. I regained frame within days, hours, and possibly minutes. Of course, long-term it wasn't that simple but here's the story. In 2015, I was 11 years and 3 kids into marriage. Not DB or a bad marriage but lots of beta flags. I jumped at my wife's command. I always went on the defensive when anything bothered her, small or large. I was not a pushover completely but certainly wasn't a sober captain. I spent as much time as possible playing video games outside of my job. I was generally unambitious. Deep down, she was frustrated with me as well. She married a good looking confident army vet. Now I was spending my evenings drinking, playing video games, and hiding from the fact that if I wanted to make it in my city, I needed to do more. We fought a lot. Petty things and not so petty things. However, a breeze had started to blow. I was unhappy with myself. I knew deep down I could do better and needed to do better.

In May of 2015, I learned that I was not being rehired at my job. It was a huge blow. I wasn’t prepared for this. What happened internally to me is a longer story, but in short, something within me decided that I was going to fight. I was going to fuck the world in the ass. I was going to take everything I wanted. I started reading voraciously, going to start-up networking events, meeting anyone and everyone for coffee. In short, I figured out my immediate plan to not go broke. I was going to start a small consulting business based on my Master’s in education. Beyond that though, I was thinking and planning something much bigger. For several nights, my wife and I sat in our living room planning and talking. She was excited by my enthusiasm. She could see in my eyes that I had woken up. The fighter she married had come back into the fight.

But it wasn’t all roses. Her mood would shift suddenly when, because of the loss of my job, my whole schedule shifted, and I started spending a lot more time out of the house, she would snap at me. Also, her uncertainty and fear would creep in and she would urge me to forget about starting a business and go try and find another similar job like the one I lost. These fights were particularly nasty and her old scorecard would come out and all sorts of old shit would be dredged up.

My eyes were opened though, and my mind was made. I was going to win. No one was going to stop me, least of all my own wife. One night, her fears and complaining reached a crescendo. She snapped at me and found some way to provoke me. She knew that certain triggers would set me off, I’d yell, she’d cry and dredge up the scorecard. But it didn’t happen this time. Instead, something that had never happened during our relationship took place. I did not respond to her provocations. At all. Within me, there was fire and calm. I burned to build my future and her bullshit had zero effect on me. I responded to her calmly, without yelling. I cannot recollect my exact words but they were something like: “Right now, I am going to do anything and everything I need to do to support my family. I am not going to be playing the same role I’ve played in this family at this time. I will be working as late as I need. I will meet with people when I need and I will not be home for dinners, or on Sundays, or any other time. I will do everything I can for the kids but right now your job is to take care of them, while I figure out how to support my family. I don't care what you think about that. If you don't like it you can leave. I am not going to negotiate with you or argue with you about this. This is what is happening."

My wife went to bed unhappy but she towed the line. She did not provoke me anymore. She saw in my eyes how serious I was. Eventually, after a few weeks of her seeing how quickly I built up my small consulting practice, she was fully on board. She was talking about quitting her job and joining up with me.

Over the past three years, we’ve reached homeostasis. My business has thrived. I’ve mellowed out and come back to take a more active role in family life to the degree I am able. But the frame has changed. She sees I am the captain. Yes, the story is longer and more complicated but I still look back at that moment and know that my frame took control of hers then and there. It wasn’t a skill I learned, or dread game, or an article I read that changed my frame. It was a deep primal instinct within me that awakened in the face of a threat. I changed myself internally. I was centered only on me and winning this fight. Nothing else mattered. Only me. I was selfish and outrageously overconfident, but it was genuine. The take away though is that my frame came only from me finding a mission and dedicating myself to it fully. Everything else fell in line, lockstep with that.
Your friends are a reflection of you

by saint_chalet | November 8, 2016 | Link

/u/thefamilyalpha posted about The Walking Dad last night. I found myself disagreeing with most of what he proposed, the people that are likely in your life. Most of the people in my life today don't fit the mold he suggested in his post.

To start, let me say that I'm in no way a completed project. I suffer the same setbacks as most of you. We're in this together. I'm fit, professionally successful and married to a great looking, high value woman. We're in our forties. We live well. I have few complaints.

/u/thefamilyalpha suggested I post on how I eliminated low value people from my life. Before I do, I'd like to say that I'm a believer in passive dread over active dread. I believe in improving for the right reasons and if good things happen as a result, all the better.

I never deploy active dread with my wife because frankly, I know she's better than that. She'd see through it and realize I'm trying to manipulate a situation. She's not immune to dread, mind you, just dread I set out to employ. When I'm out and being naturally happy and people, women, are drawn to that, that passive dread is in action.

I mention dread because I believe it's the same with the low value people in my life. I didn't actively remove them. It simply happened when I stopped engaging in their antics. You'd be amazed how quickly people stop trying to engage you when you're not a participant in their drama. I STFU at family gatherings when the topic turned toxic or unhealthy. I didn't tell people how unhealthy this dialog was, I just didn't respond. I don't believe in converting people.

If an a colleague wanted to gossip about a coworker, I would respectfully listen but wouldn't reply to it. There was no value in talking about other people so I just stopped. I found my self with fewer imaginary friends as a result. My real friends, the people I found myself wanting to be around, all started to emerge. They were the people who were working on themselves, being better and working on improving their corner of the world. I didn't fully appreciate them when my mouth and ears were filled with low value noise.

As you continue to lift, eat better, dress better and be better, consider the people you associate with. Are they the junk food/reality tv/crocs of the social realm? STFU and they too shall pass.
Social Influence and Defying Context
by Red-Curious | March 30, 2018 | Link

In the last week alone I've had 4 or 5 guys approach me with issues where the root of their problem is their inability to defy context. Consider:

- "I really like this girl, but I can't come up with a good reason to start a conversation."

- "I really think a boundary needs to be set with my wife, but the issue is in the past, so I need to wait until it comes up again to talk about it."

- "I want to do something, but it would be out of character and people might think I'm weird."

- "I really do/don't want to do this, but it would be socially awkward or unacceptable for me to do/not do it."

These (and more) are signs of a person who is controlled by social constructs.

Social Influence Matters

Given the frequency with which I see this as an issue on r/RPChristians, I'm going to have to dive into this some more over there too, but social influence and the size of your social circle matters.

When I start mentoring guys one of the first things I tell them is that if they want to earn influence with people, they must advance their social network - and I'm talking in the real world, not on reddit or facebook. Social networking is how I make most of my money. It's how I advance my mission. It's how I increase my sphere of influence. It's how I dread my wife. Etc.

A guy once told me, "I'd like to meet more girls, but I'm just not good at initiating conversations. How can I have more girls in my social circle?" The answer seems too obvious: Increase your social circle. He replies, "But I'm not good at meeting new people?" I point to a couple sitting at the table next to us and said, There you are - new people. Go introduce yourself. He couldn't do it (at least not back then). "I can't, he says." Why not? "Because it would be weird."

What he meant was: "There's no context for me to talk to them."
The Non-Importance of Context

I have spent most of my life practicing the art of defying social norms when it would advantage me to do so. Don't get me wrong: defying social norms absolutely can be disadvantageous to you in many circumstances. But complying with social norms against your own interests can be equally disadvantageous. Why do we do it? Because it's "safe." Screw safe. Women don't want safe. Safe is not sexy.

Consider many of the Blue Pill PUA strategies. A lot of them revolve around creating context or leveraging an existing context. Why? Because they're too scared to break context. Examples: (1) Spill something small on her and try to clean it up, then start a conversation. (2) Bump into her, apologize, and start a conversation. (3) Take something innocuous going on in the room and use it as a context to start a conversation. The list goes on.

This happens in blue pill marriages all the time too. Examples: (1) Guy takes wife out on a date to create a context for sex afterward. (2) Guy puts on a racy movie/TV show or encourages his wife to read the Twilight/50 Shades books to create a context for his wife to get a little horny. (3) Guy starts massaging his wife's shoulders while they talk on the couch after dinner, hoping to transition that into sex. The list goes on.

Yes, context can be utilized for your advantage. But the one who has no qualms with breaking social niceties to get what he wants - that is an attractive man, not only to his wife and other women, but to prospective employers, reporters, social media junkies, and passive follower types all across the world.

What to Do?

One of the things I've recently started assigning guys to do: Go start a 60+ second conversation with someone you've never met before and without context.

One guy came back saying, "I had a few dates with girls I met online, and those conversations were over 60 seconds each," so he thought he'd done well. But that defeated the point of the exercise. He had context for the conversation. She expected him to talk to her on the date. I sent him back out to try again. The point wasn't for him to have conversations - it was to stretch him past his comfort zone. I wanted him learning to be comfortable engaging with people in new ways, whether it made sense to do so or not.

In my younger days this type of task was scary. In college and law school I started mastering it as an art. Today, I have no-context conversations with people almost every single day.

- In the elevator? How's it going?
• At the grocery store? You're definitely going to want to pick up a box of these.

• Walking down the street? Nice day. Heading anywhere interesting?

Yeah, people think I'm weird sometimes. More often they're thinking, "That was really cool that someone I don't know wanted to talk to me." Initiating without context often makes people feel good about themselves - especially if you employ charm in the midst of your context-defying conversations.

But even beyond making them feel good about themselves, it makes them feel good about you. They think, "Most people just stick to themselves, but that guy is actually interested in talking to people. He just does what he wants. I wish I could be like that." The phrase "I wish I could be like that" is a stone's throw away from, "I'll buy whatever he's selling." If I'm selling sex, she's buying.

After you've been doing this a while, you'll be surprised how many people you end up recognizing around town. I live in a suburb of 35,000 people. No matter what side of town I'm on, if I walk into a grocery store there's about a 75% chance I'll run into someone who waves to me because they remember me from a past conversation, and maybe 50/50 that one of these people re-initiates a new conversation [and this is not counting the people who no-context initiate with me]. THEY are the ones initiating now. Why? Because they had a positive experience talking to me, even though the only other times I've talked to them have been at a restaurant or in a store at the mall or whatever. I once overheard one such acquaintance asking another, "Oh, how do you know him?" with the answer, "I don't really know, I just see him around a lot and we chat."

I suppose if I wanted to, I could really leverage this for some money-making opportunities. For now, it's enough that most places we go, my wife sees that people know me - and she wonders how. I'm not going to the movies with these people. I'm not going to meals. I'm not calling them on the phone. I'll let her hamster spin on that one.

What's Holding You Back?

Are you living the life you want? If not, what's stopping you? You ever just walk up to your wife and grab her crotch? "No! I could never do that. I have to kino her first. Then I've got to get her into bed. Then, once it's clear we're going to have sex, that's when I have context to grab her crotch." Screw context. If you want to do it, do it. Is it always going to be wise? Probably not. Oh well. Figure out discretion as you go.

Did she cross a boundary in a restaurant? You going to do something about it? "Not yet. We're in public. Strangers might see how I'm talking to her - that's a double-whammy. It's poor social etiquette to have a confrontation in public, and I can't let anyone know that I set boundaries on my wife's behavior." So, you decide to wait until you're home to bring it up, but the conversation has long since moved on and you think, "Well, things are going well now, so there's really no context to bring it up and it might spoil the mood, so I'll just let this one slide." Then you fester some resentment. If it's important to you, just bring it up. Screw social norms. Let the people at the table next to you gawk at the fact that you're not ashamed.

In fact, social norms are the constructs your wife utilizes to keep you in control. They're how she creates her expectations for the relationship. They're also what establishes a sense of monotony in many dead bedrooms because they make you predictable. If you learn to defy social norms, she will never know what to expect from you. That's exciting. That's sexy. That's what lets her know you're worth being with - because you'll do what others won't, which makes you far more suitable as a protector and provider. It simultaneously adds healthy instability and reliability in the relationship. Screw context, screw your wife.
Don't just own your shit, learn to take responsibility for experience itself

by yyiii | November 10, 2017 | Link

A few weeks ago I wrote about how I came to start working on myself using a mix of meditation and dharma as taught by Paul, my mentor, positive masculinity practices, and Jordan B. Peterson’s teachings. A few days later this happened.

The attention has been a bit overwhelming, but I am grateful for the support—so thank you! In this post I dive deeper into how I’ve learned to take responsibility for my actions, words, and thoughts in the context of my marriage.

Jordan Peterson uses the Biblical stories to talk about how to take responsibility for our inadequacies from a mytho-psychological perspective:

“Imagine that you have the capacity to live truthfully, courageously and forthrightly and then imagine why you might not do that. Hiding from recognizing their own inadequacies is what stops people, they look at themselves and they think: How in the world am I supposed to live properly in this world with everything that’s wrong with me? Well go sit on your bed for five minutes and ask yourself: What have you hidden from in your life?” –Jordan B. Peterson Peterson’s basic instruction to people just learning to take responsibility for their lives is to clean your room. The principle is: start with a small, manageable task with concrete observable results. Do it daily, see success, build from there.

There’s overlap between the pragmatic way Jordan Peterson advises taking responsibility and the collective discussions happening in the OYS threads. OYS basically functions as a mechanism to help men do just that. The core principle behind OYS and JBP is: stop blaming women for your faults, failures or weaknesses.

The purpose of OYS is to help men look at areas of our lives we'd rather avoid, to understand our weaknesses, to accept them, and to make a plan to overcome them. It works because the active, anonymous community here share an intention to take responsibility, and use blunt, anonymous feedback to hold ourselves and each other accountable.

What OYS and Jordan Peterson’s work don’t cover, is how to take responsibility for experience itself. That’s where Buddhism fits in.

Work with what is

Buddhism is all about taking responsibility for and working with experience itself. In order to work with your experience, you first need the attention to notice what is happening. Attention is developed through practice. With training, it can be refined and stabilized. Meditation develops the faculty of attention and increases your ability to take responsibility for your experience—and by extension, your life.
But what is ‘experience’?

In Buddhism, experience is broken down into categories. There are a few different models depending on the lineage you look at (the six sense bases, the five aggregates, etc.). Here’s one way of parsing experience described by a modern Tibetan master:

“All those things which appear to us as external objects — visible forms, sounds, smells, tastes and tactile sensations... [and] the thoughts that arise in your mind: thoughts of pleasure and displeasure, of suffering and joy, and so on.” - Thrangu Rinpoche

There are a limited set of ways you can exert agency over your experience of life. For practical purposes we can sort all of ‘What I experience’ into a few categories: actions, speech, and thoughts/feelings.

To start, I worked with my meditation teacher Paul Baranowski to focus on how to take responsibility for each domain of my experience. Divide and conquer.

Generally speaking, it’s easiest when starting off to bring attention to actions, then speech, thoughts, and then to feelings. I found words and actions easier to work with than thoughts and feelings because they are external: actions are visible, speech is audible. Thoughts require more capacity to notice. I’m not going into working with feelings in this post.

Developing competence in recognizing bodily sensations enabled me to start using my body like a GPS, and to notice where emotion was as it happened in my body. As I became more fluent in recognizing changes in my skeletal positioning and posture, body temperature and perspiration, muscular tension, tightness or throbbing, and skin itches and tingles, more possibilities of action opened up, when before I could only react.

Practicing with speech is pretty straightforward with a reliable framework, but takes dedication and effort. I use the Nonviolent Communication (NVC) technique to clarify and state facts, uncover emotional data, identify and connect to my own–and others’–needs, to see if those needs are being met or not, and to ensure everyone’s needs are met through direct, action-oriented requests. NVC’s definitions of each step are critical: Observations, Feelings, Needs, Requests. I will unpack them more in another post.

With a deeper, more stable connection to my body, I started to become aware of recurring patterns of thought and feeling, and to see how they related to the actions and decisions I made in my life. With all this has come an increased awareness of what I want and value, an appreciation of the people in my life, and a tsunami of gratitude for the precious, fleeting experience of being alive.

“To act differently, you have to have free attention. Free attention is energy that is not consumed by habituated patterns. With it, you see and experience events differently. New possibilities of action open up.” — Ken McLeod

Growing and stabilizing awareness of body, speech and mind has helped me plug into my experience of life in a higher resolution. It’s also helped me to more effectively take responsibility for the way I live my life.

Nervous Ticks

Last summer, after many difficult months at home, my wife went away for three months to practice meditation and rest. She left her job and visited a monastery nestled in the tick-infested Catskill Mountains in the tradition of Zen master Thich Nhat Hahn (pronounced ‘tic nat han’).

She spent her summer living with around thirty monastics. When she asked me what I thought of her idea to go away for a few months, I gave her my full support. To be honest, I was as grateful for the space to sort myself out as she was to rest and heal.

While my wife was away on retreat, I set out to examine how my recurring behaviors, words, and thoughts contributed to the difficulties in our relationship. I was done blaming her for my problems and competing in the unending victim olympics. Last summer was a crash course in taking responsibility for my experience, and my life.

Actions are noisy

Looking at actions is the most concrete way to identify reactive patterns (more on emotional reactivity in the next post).

Over the the summer, I sat with and reflected on how my actions in the moments leading up to a specific conflict would affect me, were I the one receiving them. I noticed the emotional chain reactions play out and experienced the related underlying needs they pointed to as being met or not. I wrote my inferences down, I ran them by her when she got back home. She was so surprised by my observations she started to cry tears of joy.

As I slowly uncovered the needs she had that my actions did not support, the reactive patterns operating in me started to become clear.

Here’s what I discovered about my actions:

table in original post

What these little repeated behaviours served to do, was train my wife to be needy, anxious, and insecure in our relationship. This is the opposite of what I want in a partner, and taking responsibility for my part in contributing to this dynamic of confusion for over nearly a decade is still difficult to accept.

I wasn’t trying to intentionally confuse her, hell I wasn’t even aware of the contradictions between what I wanted and how I acted until I started paying attention. But as they say in the manosphere, hypergamy doesn’t care that I was oblivious.

Hypergamy has a specific definition in red pill theory. It’s said to be a biologically conditioned sexual strategy women have evolved to always pursue high status men, and shit test potential mates.
The purpose of hypergamous behaviour is to verify that the woman’s needs are taken care of during the vulnerable pregnancy term, and safe after childbirth, protected by a man who is capable of providing for and supporting healthy offspring. Here’s a great break down of shit testing from Kitten Holiday:

“When you “answer” her shit test, you are acknowledging that there is a crack in the foundation. If you acknowledge the crack then you are liable to be responsible for it. You will be blamed for causing it and you will be made responsible for repairing it.”

— Kitten Holiday

Until doing the exercise above I was failing shit tests all the time without even realizing it, and basically training my wife to act crazy.

Evolutionary psychologist Dr. Diana Fleischman notes that in long-term committed relationships this kind of ‘training’ happens both ways, but that the actual training “is so subtle that it’s not offensive, malicious, or even something we do consciously. It’s simply interwoven into the fabric of our social interactions.” But hypergamy doesn’t care about subtlety.

By owning these habitual micro-actions I was able to finally start to reduce how much and how often I made matters worse with my wife in the following specific ways:

- I started to make eye contact when we spoke–especially about difficult topics. At first I was awkward and at times, obnoxious, but it’s gotten more natural over time.

- I began to acknowledge her comments with an audible ‘mmm-hmm’s’. This went a long way to helping her feel heard.

- I made it a point to slow down my decision making process, to loop her in as I researched multiple solutions to a problem, to share my findings along the way, and to ask for her input before making a decision. I didn’t always apply her input, but the transparency helped us connect.

- I got out of her way more and let go of responsibilities that I wanted her to own. For example: I’d always been the cook, but I wanted her to prepare meals. To my surprise, she was thrilled to learn to cook, and happy that I got out of her way!

Love is not a magic word

The next mode of being I brought my attention to was my spoken life and how I used language. During meditation, I started to notice the way I use the word ‘love’ was sloppy and often half assed. I’d use it in distraction without intention, as a means of filling up space and silence, or trying to please her.
I’d rarely pay my wife genuine, original compliments rooted in my actual experience of her. Instead I tended to repeat the same banal platitudes I’d heard in songs or movies. I started to notice that I imagined that saying the words, ‘I love you’, would somehow magically conjure up connection, warmth, and joy out of thin air and saturate her with it automatically. But that’s not how love works.

I’ve tried to use the word ‘love’ throughout my life as if it were a magic word. I used it the way my dad used it with my mom, or my mom used it with me. My parents would often use the word ‘love’ too, but just as often their actions and decisions would contradict what I thought the word was supposed to mean.

On reflection, it’s clear now that I often felt confused, disconnected, nonexistent, and powerless growing up—and glancing back up at my chart, my words and actions generated the same difficulties in my own marriage.

On some level, like my folks, I meant what I thought saying the word ‘love’ could do. But without the intention or capacity to cultivate joy and connection the word ‘love’ is just a word. I’ve learned through studying dharma that love is a skill, and it takes practice.

Even with the pain I’ve experienced in my marriage over the years, I care about my wife’s happiness and well being. Her joy brings me joy. I’ve reflected for months on why I love her. I’ve allowed my thoughts to explore nihilistic rationalizations, and they’ve all felt forced and contrived. I don’t know if she’s the one, but she is the one I chose to make a go at creating a life with.

What has become clear through investigating how I speak to my wife is that there is a disconnect between what I want, and what I say and do. Sloppy communication is really just one symptom of this disconnect, and it’s only served to train her to be unsatisfied as my woman, and leave me frustrated as her man. This is unacceptable, and so I use it as fuel for my practice.

Thoughts as thoughts

More subtle still, are the thoughts. The nonstop, yammering commentary going on in what feels like the area just behind my eyeballs. While she was away on retreat, I had no choice but to deal with my thoughts, opinions, and assumptions head on.

I noticed that I tend to assume to know what she wants or needs, or how she’s feeling or might feel in the future, rather than asking her directly what she wants or needs, how she feels—or just waiting to see what happens.

Then, as the pattern goes, I try to give her what I imagine she wants or needs to ‘make’ her feel the way I imagine she should. This strategy again, causes a lot of trouble, not only in my marriage, but in every relationship I try to use it.

Entertaining mental gymnastics like this (and the ones listed below,) leave me feeling, exhausted, confused, and disconnected in my marriage, and growing bitter, needy and resentful towards my wife. And of course they did. I wasn’t actually connecting with her, I wasn’t establishing frame, understanding her needs or speaking my own truth. I was too busy imagining her thoughts in my mind, ‘hallucinating’ her experience, and simulating a connection with that.

Looking back, it’s no wonder I’d react all sore and snarky after wasting so much energy like this and feeling alone in our relationship.

To help see thoughts as thoughts, I find it helpful to identify common patterns during formal practice. Here’s a nice map for identifying negative recurring thought patterns:

- Mind reading. You assume that you know what people think without having sufficient evidence of their thoughts. “He thinks I’m a loser.”

- Fortune-telling. You predict the future negatively: things will get worse, or there is danger ahead. “I’ll fail that exam,” or “I won’t get the job.”

- Catastrophizing. You believe that what has happened or will happen will be so awful and unbearable that you won’t be able to stand it. “It would be terrible if I failed.”

- Labeling. You assign global negative traits to yourself and others. “I’m undesirable,” or “He’s a rotten person.”

- Discounting positives. You claim that the positive things you or others do are trivial. “That’s what wives are supposed to do — so it doesn’t count when she’s nice to me,” or “Those successes were easy, so they don’t matter.”

- Negative filtering. You focus almost exclusively on the negatives and seldom notice the positives. “Look at all of the people who don’t like me.”

- Overgeneralizing. You perceive a global pattern of negatives on the basis of a single incident. “This generally happens to me. I seem to fail at a lot of things.”

- Dichotomous thinking. You view events or people in all-or-nothing terms. “I get rejected by everyone,” or “It was a complete waste of time.”

- Blaming. You focus on the other person as the source of your negative feelings, and you refuse to take responsibility for changing yourself. “She’s to blame for the way I feel now,” or “My parents caused all my problems.”

- What if? You keep asking a series of questions about “what if” something happens, and you fail to be satisfied with any of the answers. “Yeah, but what if I get anxious?,” or “What if I can’t catch my breath?”

• Emotional reasoning. You let your feelings guide your interpretation of reality. “I feel depressed; therefore, my marriage is not working out.”

• Inability to disconfirm. You reject any evidence or arguments that might contradict your negative thoughts. For example, when you have the thought I’m unlovable, you reject as irrelevant any evidence that people like you. Consequently, your thought cannot be refuted. “That’s not the real issue. There are deeper problems. There are other factors.”

Source: A partial list from Robert L. Leahy, Stephen J. F. Holland, and Lata K. McGinn’s Treatment Plans and Interventions for Depression and Anxiety Disorders (2012)

Begin again

For all the detail I’ve gone into, this is only part of the story. Just as I’m not blaming my wife for the state of my marriage, I’m not blaming myself either. I’m just owning what I have agency over without expecting her to change and seeing what happens next. I know that at the end of the day I have no control over her or anyone else, and trying to manipulate her to become some idealized woman is a futile waste of time and energy.

I don’t know if we will remain together forever, and I don’t really care. I’ve literally stopped thinking about it. When thoughts of our future come into my mind, I notice them as thoughts, let them go, and stop giving the stories my attention. Then I bring my focus back to by breathing or my body, rest for a few moment, and go on with my day.

Right now, I’m focused on developing myself as a man, uncovering my weaknesses, working on them, problem solving, and asking for guidance when I need it.

And I’m far from perfect in my execution.

When you make a decision, take an action, or speak without awareness of why—even with the best intentions–there’s the chance that an unmet need is operating outside your awareness in the background, hijacking your agency to justify it’s own existence.

I’ve been reflecting on my practice of taking responsibility for my experience and trying to write with clarity for a few weeks. And yet, just the other day I was reminded of the gallingly painful realization I’ve been operating on autopilot, speaking, thinking and acting out of reactivity.

I had borrowed Paul’s car to go do a retreat with some friends, and returned it with no gas in the tank, for, well… reasons. When he asked me a few days later why I returned it on empty, I thought about it, and with utter, disarmed sincerity, evaded ownership and blamed the world.
I got the following text on a Friday morning after a bit of back and forth with Paul. As soon as I read it, my entire body felt like it was trying to eat itself. I had to stop working, get up from my desk and practice walking meditation in the hall outside my office for ten minutes just to calm down.

In Buddhism, the meditation teacher-student relationship is a unique thing. I’ve been working closely with Paul for a few years now. The way he bluntly points out my patterns comes from a motivation of fierce compassion and an intention to end the suffering generated by reactivity in my life. It’s very uncomfortable to receive these kinds of nudges because it forces me to see things as they are in the moment, not as a helpless victim.

This technique has been a massive catalyst for transformation and development in my life over the years, and I’m insanely grateful to learn from such a skilled mentor.

What’s next?

I’ve seen first hand through my meditation practice how easy it is to slide into the victim mindset, to expect the world to take care of me due to conditioned entitlement, to shift blame around to others with sneaky semantic ploys–or to crucify myself for mistakes and getting lost in sinkholes of despair.

When I make a decision, take an action, or speak without awareness of why—even with the best intentions—there’s the chance that an unmet need is operating outside my awareness in the background, hijacking my agency to justify it’s own existence. This causes a lot of problems in my life, marriage and relationships in general.

So far, the red pill principles I’ve tested in my life have rung true, and blending them with my mediation practice, had helped me focus my energy, and prioritize my life in a way that my personal development and transformation practices come first. As I continue to sort myself out, I’m better able to stop making this worse, and to make good on my best intentions.

Though I’m far from done, this mix of practices has made me a better man, a better employee, and a better husband. What’s been really amazing to see as I’ve elevated myself through game and meditation, is how my wife has been matching me in her own life. Each of us are focused on transforming our own patterns, and taking responsibility for our own experience, and are as a result experiencing a better relationship and having more fun.

In the next post, I’ll explore how conditioning works and how to practice cutting through it with meditation practices.

edit: I’m doing a weekend retreat now. Will respond to comments Sunday night.
I’m new to MRP. Read Rational Male back in May 2018 and swallowed the red pill. Read NMMNG, WISNIFG and currently reading MMSLP.

I found MRP through the Family Alpha on Twitter after following those guys for a few months.

Married 17 yrs. I’m 38 wife same + 2 kids.

I don’t lift but do body weight HIIT 3-5 times per week. Getting stronger everyday and have lost 18 pounds.

I still have a lot to learn, but thought I’d share this field report with the community especially any new guys trying to adapt to the new world.

Getting ready for work the other morning my wife leaves 45 minutes before me to take the boys to school.

Before she left our room I said, “Hey, give me a hug real quick.”

She said, “I’m not leaving yet. I still have to get a few things put together.” And she continued out of the room.

I knew that as soon as she left the room she’d call me before she left the house wearing her laptop bag, lunch bag, carrying one of our sons backpack and maybe another item.

When she carries all of those things it’s impossible to give a meaningful hug and kiss goodbye.

In addition to that I’m working on ways to get better at her compliance tests. I know that she wants me to come to her when she’s leaving and for some reason insists on having every bag possible hanging around her as if it is armor.

So here’s the scenario when she called me to come give her a hug:

Wife is carrying 4 bags.

Our three year old is wailing about his toy being broken.

I’m in our bathroom flossing.

Stress level in the room with wife and kids is through the roof.

When she called (aka yelled) at me to come give her a hug - all I could think was I didn’t want to give her a hug in that environment plus I was in the middle of flossing.

I yelled back, “I’m busy. See you tonight when you get home.”
She got upset and said something like, “You can’t even come out here and give me a hug? Fine. We’re leaving.”

I just DNGAF.

They left. I got finished and went to work.

At work around noon. I knew I needed to text her about the incident, so I found this funny picture of a woman carrying like 7 suitcases and here’s how the dialogue went:

Me: You this morning.

Her: Huh?

Me: sends funny picture

Me: “Okay, come give me a hug.” []

Her: My feelings were hurt. You know I’m in a hurry, but you can’t put aside a minute to come say goodbye.

I’m obviously not important enough.

Me: Obviously, I’ll show you tonight just how important you are to me []

(It took me about 3 minutes to think of that response because I knew I need to AA somehow. As a result we’re both busy at work and she didn’t see my reply till a few hours later and below was her reply.)

Her: []

I was blown away!!! And couldn’t believe how well that worked.

In the past I would’ve been like, “I’m sorry for being rude... Next time I’ll do better...” and etc.

We would’ve gone back and forth, maybe things would’ve been fixed on the surface but I would’ve felt like a loser for apologizing over something that was so minor.

Anyways, I hope this inspires other guys who are just getting started with this stuff.
MRP Beginner's Guide for the Career Beta
by SorcererKing | February 18, 2015 | Link

After a challenge by one of MRP’s moderators, Archwinger, I have created this post as a follow-up to my “Introduction to RP for Beginners” post. Here I address a scenario that I did not in the previous one: saving the marriage of Career Beta. This post is going to be controversial, but I pull no punches. I don’t claim to have all the answers here, but this is how I see it.

I’ve used this formula before. Though it is never a trivial thing to help someone through a major life crisis, this is what I have done with a friend IRL, and would do to help other friends in the future. Those with different approaches are encouraged to comment. As a companion post to the first work, this can be considered “Scenario 4: The Career Beta”.

Introducing Career Beta

To the best of my (admittedly limited) knowledge, no one has previously coined a term for the sort of man about which we are here concerned. I therefore take the liberty to coin the term “Career Beta” for such individuals, and will first identify their behaviors and the common state in which we find them when they by some miracle make their way to MRP.

Career Beta is by all measures in a sorry state. For his whole life he has been a Nice Guy: he has done what others have expected of him; he has put the needs, happiness, and desires of others above those of himself; and most generally and importantly of all, he has sacrificed. Like many a Nice Guy before him, he has created covert contracts with his friends and lovers, expecting that his sacrifices would be recognized and rewarded. When this does not happen, he seethes with rage, sometimes openly, sometime secretly. The result is predictable: he alienates friends, he repels women, and he bewilders family members.

For most of his life the attitude of Career Beta is often one of righteousness. Since he is complying with what he believes to be ethical behavior, in his mind he feels that it is he who is in the right; the world and its refusal to accept or worship his sacrifice is in the wrong. And yet, his behavior seemingly never gets him what he desires most, the respect and love of his family and friends. This continual “soft” rejection can often lead to bouts of depression as well. (The see-sawing of emotion may even occasionally cause Career Beta to encounter the mental health system, but that is not strictly relevant here.)

Plugged In

In spite of all this, Career Betas do manage to date and even marry some women. The reasons for this are varied: some of the women are just plain undesirable by other mens’ standards; sometimes the Career Beta finds a woman who is at The Wall, and (subconsciously) ready for someone to pay her way through life under the guise of “settling down”; other times he finds a woman who has ideals similarly aligned with his own (often women with very little dating or relationship experience themselves).
No matter how it starts, it progresses the same way. The Career Beta is attentive, adoring, self-sacrificial at every turn. As his relationship with his woman starts to get more serious, he, in equal measure, starts to drift away from whatever male friends and hobbies he may have still had. His agenda for his life is cast aside and his life becomes more and more about his woman, her needs, and her agenda. The Career Beta will do anything and everything to please his woman, thanking his lucky stars every day just to have her. Nothing is too good for her, nothing is too much to ask of him. It is not long before the Career Beta is quite literally at the beck and call of his woman, willing to follow her every command, willing to accept her every rebuke, wondering why, no matter how much he gives, it never seems to be enough. As this cycle of ever-greater sacrifice and accommodation continues through a period of years, the Career Beta starts to literally lose his sense of self. His ego becomes subjugated to his perceived duties and his personality begins to atrophy.

Agent Smith

But what of the woman in this scenario? Isn’t she to blame for the Career Beta’s unhappiness? Shouldn’t she recognize all his sacrifice? Ironically, in most cases, the Career Beta has created the very monster he now fears. Barring the rare exception of the intentionally manipulative woman who marries the Career Beta expressly for the purpose of exploitation, women will commonly enter into marriage with a Career Beta out of honest intentions. But the behavior of the Career Beta immediately starts to reshape her perceptions and behaviors, and never for the better. Where once there was a sweet and caring woman, instead there grows a shrew, irascible and contemptuous. Confused and disappointed by Career Beta’s seeming lack of desire to stand up for himself, to set a course – to be a Man – her contempt for him builds. Forced to make not only decisions about her own life, but now those for her Career Beta, she can become downright abusive, punishing him and torturing him in myriad ways, daring him to reclaim the manhood that, unbeknownst to her, he never had to start with. Feeling totally in control, she browbeats him, hoping that he will fight back, begging him to offer her some limits. Her attraction to him is long evaporated, and she may in fact begin to cheat on him, sometimes covertly, sometimes overtly. How quickly she plots her own escape from this nightmare depends on many variables, such as whether she has a new relationship lined up to replace her marriage, the amount of money her Career Beta brings in for her, and, to a lesser extent, what her family and friends may think of divorce.

The Glitch in the Matrix

Let’s be honest: the outlook of the Career Beta is bleak. It is rare that such an individual will ever understand exactly what the root of his problems are. Still more unique is the Career Beta who makes up his mind to change things for the better, no matter the cost. For every Career Beta that appears on MRP, there are untold numbers who never make it that far. And yet, this is our mission and the point of this post. Moving forward we have to assume that Career Beta has seen the glitch in the Matrix (i.e. that his approach to life and relationships isn’t working) and has followed the rabbit far enough that he has a choice.

Step 1: Find Morpheus

So where should a Career Beta start if he wants to change his ways? Unlike the three scenarios I posted previously, where men could effectively change their ways through reading and self-actualization alone, I don’t believe Career Beta can come out of his patterns without help. So in my viewpoint the first thing a Career Beta needs is to find Morpheus. Remember that Morpheus does not only run around dispensing red and blue pills – if you take the red one, he trains you. He kicks your ass at Kung Fu, he pushes you to learn more, he takes you to the Oracle, and, perhaps most importantly, he believes in you. In this context then, Morpheus is a safe person, much like those recommended in No More Mr. Nice Guy. The safe person should be someone who can hear the Career Beta’s frustrations and shame without judgment, someone who can give the Career Beta a much-needed pep talk from time to time, and someone who understands and models Alpha behaviors, especially in the context of marriage. Even better if this friend has been down the Career Beta road himself and come out of it.

Regrettably this eliminates most professional therapists and marriage counselors, who tend to have a gyno-centric viewpoint that only reinforce Career Beta’s tendencies. I have witnessed incidents where complete strangers on MRP have filled the role of Safe Person for someone struggling, but ideally this should be an existing male friend. Again this is complicated by the fact that the Career Beta has likely torched his male relationships long ago. Nevertheless, without a Morpheus figure, the Career Beta has the odds stacked further against him.

Step 2: There is No Spoon

Supposing then that the Career Beta can find his Morpheus, the first thing he must do is reject the doctrine of self-sacrifice as a moral code. He must come to understand that his family, friends, and wife do not want or need him to sacrifice his dreams and values. In a complimentary fashion, he has to stop expecting others to do the same. Before anyone wonders what I mean by “sacrifice” here, Ayn Rand provides a concise definition for this context:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>“Sacrifice” is the surrender of that which you value in favor of that which you don’t.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

-Galt’s Speech, For the New Intellectual, 139

This is Career Beta to a T, as he has given up his whole world in an attempt to make his woman love him. Changing Career Beta’s outlook here will be the most important step in his transformation. It will destroy the beta foundation of his behavior. This will also be the most difficult step, as Career Beta will likely want to reject the egoism of RP ideology as selfish and manipulative. Career Beta must break through the altruist frame or he cannot progress.

If Career Beta can accept these ideas and truly reject altruism, he is ready for the remedial therapeutic self-help books No More Mr. Nice Guy and When I Say No, I Feel Guilty. If not, he may literally need to spend time studying philosophy: a read of Rand’s Fountainhead and The Virtue of Selfishness may help, then followed by NMMNG and WISNIFG.

Also, once the self-sacrificing Nice Guy antics are recognized, they must be stopped. Career Beta must first learn to put some distance between himself and his wife. He must strive to make his interactions with her emotionally neutral while he regroups.
Step 2 should take about 3 weeks or a month, but must continue as long as it has to, until the altruism is purged.

Step 3: Dial In

Once Career Beta has broken through his old frame of self-sacrifice in relationships, it’s time to start rebuilding him. If he has gotten this far then he has rejected altruism in relationships and accepts that women in particular want something different. Now it’s time to show him what that different looks like.

At this step in the program I recommend The Game by Neil Strauss. This is a remedial lesson as well, but the intention is NOT to teach Career Beta Game. At this stage of his redevelopment Career Beta has to understand what could be, what is possible. In other words, Career Beta needs Social Proof. For all of its dramatization and silliness, The Game can show Career Beta what is possible if he wants it to be.

During his read of The Game he should continue to maintain a neutral and somewhat distant relationship with his wife. His learning here should focus on how to avoid confrontation, how to control his emotions; in other words, continue practicing the lessons of NMMNG and WISNIFG.

Step 3 should take about 2 weeks as Career Beta reads The Game and practices disengaging with his wife from beta conflict mode.

Step 4: Learn Kung Fu

When Career Beta finishes The Game he should be ready to start transforming himself into a fully actualized man. This is the point where he starts to really change himself from no longer doing stupid, counterproductive shit to starting to do positive, productive shit.

Career Beta now needs to start lifting and improving his SMV. Many will say “Career Beta should have been lifting from the day he knew something was wrong.” This is not likely to happen unless Career Beta was lifting already. His reading of The Game however should have shown him that lifting is key to transformation. He should also be cultivating new guy friends or trying to reconnect with those he dropped because of his devotion to his woman.

His reading at this stage should be the Red Pill Antibiotic Nuke followed by Book of Pook and then The Sixteen Commandments of Poon. After that, he should work his way through the “Required Theory Reading” section of the TRP main sub sidebar, and Rational Male, Year 1. Finally, having digested all that, he should read The Mindful Action Plan so that he knows how to plot his course for what is yet to come.

Step 4 will probably take from about 4 weeks to 6 weeks, depending on the speed at which he reads and absorbs new material. Again, having Morpheus around to discuss and help digest the material is highly valuable.

Step 5: Visit the Armory

The final stage in Career Beta’s learning is all about arming himself – with Game. He should read Mystery Method, Bang, and Day Bang to understand the mechanics of game. He should then move to Married Man Sex Life Primer to see how it translates to his marriage. Finally, Sex God Method to improve technique. Going out with Morpheus to flirt with girls is necessary training in this stage both to practice game techniques and to boost his confidence. Career Beta’s workout regimen should now be paying dividends after 6-8 weeks of lifting, so now would be a good time to update his wardrobe, haircut, and hygiene. All of this will be the start of his (soft) Dread Game program, a necessary element in his married Game.

Step 5 should take about 2-3 weeks, as Career Beta practices Game with Morpheus and any other male friends who “get it”, and makes changes to his personal appearance.

Step 6: See the Code

This is the moment of truth. Let’s review what Career Beta has accomplished:

- Rejected the doctrines of self-sacrifice and covert contracts in interpersonal relationships
- Learned how to pursue his own agenda and set his own course in life
- Learned what women really want out of men by studying Red Pill theory
- Trained up on how to give women what they want by studying Game
- Raised his SMV through physical fitness, an updated wardrobe, and better hygiene
- Proven to himself that women find him attractive by practicing his Game skills

The final challenge is to start applying what he has learned to his marriage. He will of course make mistakes, but that is what Morpheus and MRP are for, to help him refine his married Game until it is natural and he is getting the results he wants consistently. There is of course no guarantee that the wife will respond positively. The relationship may be too far gone or she may not be able to accept the changes.

For continued improvement and learning Career Beta (by now Reformed Beta) should hit MRP consistently, help those behind him in the transformation, and work his way through the advanced material on the MRP sidebar.

Now, discuss.
How to tell if a woman is dating you for convenience rather than "love".
by kevin32 | January 26, 2017 | Link

I don't normally dismantle hamster wheels to showcase the inner-workings of the female mind in fine detail, but a recent front-page post on Imgur set off several red flags, and I risked opening the cage and getting dung on my hands to offer a perspective contrary to what the masses have accepted at face value, which means I think I'm better than them.

In this essay we encounter a woman who has a long-distance relationship with a guy-friend who makes good money, and says that it's "love". But the evidence suggests it's more a relationship of convenience with little to no romance. We then conclude with how to test if your wife is interested in you romantically or not. This essay is closely related to Signs she might be a former carousel rider looking for a provider.

I also don't normally do these types of essays primarily because we don't have the man's side of the story to verify her claims and thus provide an accurate picture of the relationship, which ultimately makes the writing speculative and judgmental, but I do believe the evidence so far leans in favor of a relationship of convenience rather than claims of "love", and I'm open to any feedback that my interpretations are off. Alright let's dig in.

Case study

(image) Girl meets boy - In junior high. We lived in neighboring towns and spent our teen years hanging out in the same rag-tag group of friends.

Extreme hoverhand indicates just friends.

(image) We go to different colleges and don't see each for years...7 years... I was in my last semester of grad school before I saw him again.

Pretty girl does off to cock-illege. How many turns does the average carousel make in 7 years?

(image) He was hilarious, charming, exciting... I was single. I thought I'd date him for the time before I moved on with my life post grad school.

Her wording here shows lack of attraction. Translation: "He wasn't really hilarious, charming or exciting because I was focused more on my life post grad school than wanting to be with him. But I didn't have any preferred cock at the moment, so I figured I'd 'date' him to pass the time.

( operatives) Instantly it was love. I never had a chance. I never wanted long distance, but for some reason I would make it work for him.

Hmmm, why would a woman who shows no apparent attraction for a man entertain a long-distance relationship with him? We'll revisit her statement later, but as you look at the following photos, note the cities and states in bold, and notice how her head is always upright in the photos. This will be explained later:

( Image) We spent the sparse time we had together wisely, doing the things we loved. Dirt jump biking in the Mega Cavern - Louisville, Kentucky

Note the "friendship hug" - him holding her shoulder instead of her lower back the way lovers do - though they're supposedly dating.

( Image) Camping under the stars with nothing but sleeping bags in the desert - California

( Image) Cowboy SASS matches - Brazil, Indiana

( Image) Hiking in canyons - Fall Canyon, California

Another friendship hug.

Annnnnnd she has short hair.

Annnnnnd it's dyed.

Annnnnnd it's blue.

( Image) Wandering the desert just ahead of a sand storm - Death Valley, California

( Image) Canoeing through gator infested black swamps - Okefenokee Swamp, Georgia

( Image) White water rafting the olympic course - Ducktown, Tennessee

( Image) Murdering skanks in matching outfits - Florida
Another friendship hug, and she's not even fully holding him.

Now back to her earlier comment:

Instantly it was love. I never had a chance. I never wanted long distance, but for some reason I would make it work for him.

Translation: "While it was love for him, it was personal gratification for me. I'm not attracted to him, but he wooed me with trips around the country, and with the stress of being in grad school with no real income, I needed a vacation."

We spent our time apart on the phone/texting/emailing/snapchatting. We always used snapchat to the best of it's abilities.

Translation: "When I wasn't getting my sexual needs met elsewhere, I was busy cleaning my inbox of all the spam."

Many gifts were made and given.

Translation: "He showered me with so many things, and all I had to do was show up." A woman will only use the words "love" to describe what's really a relationship of convenience when she's deriving a benefit and doesn't want to appear shallow, so either he designed that frame, or she did it to give him the impression that it's "love".

After years of searching, applying, and interviewing, I landed a job in the same town. I did what I said I never would and gave up a career, packed up, and moved home with my Mom. I had an hour long commute but it was worth it to see him more often.

Translation: "Finding employment with a degree in gender studies is tough so I moved back home with mom. He was secondary in making this decision."

A wonderful card for our next adventure together.

Subtext: "I don't want to sound mean by saying how needy he comes across because I'm benefiting from it."

Obviously I circled yes.
Interesting how the 'Yes' is circled, but also includes multiple heart-shapes. A few interpretations could be made here, but from my perspective none of them suggest her "love" for him (I can offer that perspective in the comments if anyone wishes to know as it's somewhat trivial).

Due to beta behaviors such as the friendship hug, trips around the country, and "Move in with me? Please?", a feminist is dating a Beta Bux for his resources and passing it off as "love".

To my bias, this guy had a case of the oneitis by a woman who friendzoned him, and decided to use his money to win her over. A strategy that can lead to sex yes, but it's not a gina-tingler, especially while still exhibiting beta "friendship" behavior (and all this without considering the possibility that it was she who looked him up to be her beta provider as she was nearing the Wall). So while on the surface it appears he "got the girl", it's not likely to remain a fulfilling long-term relationship that he wants because the evidence suggests she's not interested in him romantically. Which leads us to understanding why her head is upright in the photos:

A woman who is genuinely in love with a man will lean into him intimately, like this, this, this, and this. The woman in our case study shows no such affection in her photos, indicating lack of romantic interest despite her words. So any sex they have is due to her sense of moral obligation for the resources he provides, and not necessarily her desire for him. So, boring duty sex.

And while the argument could be rightfully made that LDRs rarely lead to long-term romance, in this particular case I would say the LDR is of little effect because he was attempting to buy his way into romance with her. Once a man sells his money and resources to a woman instead of his character, she will value him based on what he has (provider) rather than who he is (potential lover). And women are sexually aroused and committed to men who give them deep physical and emotional connections, not men who throw money at them.

And this is why it's important to test a woman's attraction to you by withdrawing interest in her. Show some initial interest, then withdraw to see if she chases you romantically. Because if you keep showering her with attention and gifts without testing to see if she reciprocates with affection, then it's not certain if she's with you out of love or convenience.

So the primary means of boosting a woman's love for you is through attractive looks and Alpha behavior, not your money, gifts or servitude. Love inspires commitment, loyalty and passionate sex. Convenience causes dead bedrooms and branch swinging.

For married men, a surefire way to test your wife's desire for you is to not come unto her for sex. Keep an upbeat, positive attitude, but don't express any sexual interest in her, especially when she's ovulating and most horny. Wait for her to come unto you, even if it's been a few weeks. If she's attracted to you romantically, she will come unto you for sex, which means kissing you, touching you and pulling you into the bedroom, and she may even signal her desire for you through wearing lingerie, makeup and perfume, all of which are good indicators that she's not cheating on you and is committed to the marriage. But if she only does non-sexual things like cook dinner, give gifts, or wanting to Netflix but not chill, then she's likely with you for resources and not romance.

Epilogue:

To be candid, I'm actually happy for the man in this story. It plays out like a good Nice Guy fantasy, with him being able to LTR his oneitis. Unfortunately, his friendship behavior and inclination to use money and things to attract her will likely make the relationship short-lived.
Demands are disrespectful of the marriage
by RPAlternate42 | September 25, 2015 | Link

Why don't we cater to demands?

The simplest answer is: respect.

Prologue

But why?

It's not so much to just say it's disrespectful to demand things, you have to understand what is exactly disrespectful about it. I needed to know so I could explain it to my daughter. I will likely have to repeat this to her again and again.

Demands are a shit test

When someone demands something of you, be it your wife or your co-worker, or your kids, they are testing you to see if you will comply. Ultimately they just want you to do the thing, and you're an asshole, or mean, for not doing the thing

When you refuse, you demonstrate that you are not so easily pushed. The next time they want something, perhaps they ask and perhaps they don't; whether they do or don't is dictated by their perception of your value, but that's an issue for a different topic. When you refuse, you draw a line in the sand that says I will not cater to demands.

Demands are a part of de-facto expectations

It's been said: A favor done three times becomes an expectation.

Example:

- It's a busy week. Kids are on a break from school, parents in town, whatever... and the usual routine is interrupted and some normal household tasks fall through the cracks.

- You decide that as a leader you will lead by example and roll your sleeves up with the crew and help out. You decide that the laundry will be what you will do. All week you do the wash, drying, and folding. This gives her the opportunity to make sure the floor is swept, vacuumed, and swiffered.

- At the end of the week, the parents leave town and the kids are back in school. You are getting ready for work and packing the gym bag. A shirt you want to wear to the gym is dirty so you throw a load in the wash, dry it, and extract the laundry into a basket. You pack your gym shirt.
A couple of hours later, she comes to you asking where her favorite jeans are. You don't know, but you think they are in the laundry basket. She leaves.

She returns with harping at you about why you didn't fold the laundry and that doing the laundry is your job because you were doing it all week.

Congratulations: you just turned a nice favor into an expectation and your lack of follow through for the rest of your life has resulted in her demanding that you do that job for the rest of your life.

This has happened to me. Pre-RP, right before the nuke drop I deployed but de-fuzed last year I was caught in this laundry nonsense. I had the added fun of having her also be mad at me for doing the job because it's her job and makes her feel worthless when I do it. That gem came only after I refused her demand and then argued. But this was a while ago.

Demands are a lack of respect for your time

When I want my wife to do something (non-sexual) I ask her. I ask her because I respect her time and effort in the marriage. She does a lot around the house and for the family. She isn't lazy, she is a good planner, and she keeps the crew and ship running through day-to-day operations.

So when I need something from her, I ask. Me asking with the word please demonstrates that I respect her time and that I understand that she may not be capable of doing the thing I need right now. Ol and not creating Covert Contracts forces me to wait, patiently, or do it myself, either now or when I am no longer busy. If it is so important that it needs to be done now, I will stress that in the request. A woman of high value will recognize that. I woman of high value who finds high value in her husband will recognize and comply.

When she makes a demand it means that that she believes that her time is more valuable than yours and that whatever you are doing, even if it is important, is not as important as what she needs simply because you are the one doing it.

Ultimately it is a lack of respect for everyone involved

If time is the most valuable thing we, as men, can deliver to her, then a disrespect of our time is ultimately a disrespect of us, as men, and even further a disrespect of the relationship; she no longer sees you as a husband and as an extension, no longer sees herself as a wife.

Epilogue

Ultimately the demands from the wife become requests when she starts respecting her husband. She can only respect her husband when he respects himself.

You can easily demonstrate this self-respect by simply refusing the demands; respond when things are asked of you and do the same of her (lead by example.) Make the expectations clear (this really only should be done once, but some women need reminders) by making a clear an concise statement:

"I will be happy to do that as soon as I am available, and when I am asked and not demanded of. Please ask me to do the things you need of me."

Expect a backlash of "I'm not going to ask you in a special way to do things" or something similar. Hold the line, don't supplicate, revel in the claims of being an asshole. Continue improving.
32, have been married for almost 3 years, we have a 5 month old and a 22 month old, both boys. Things have been a hurricane with two little ones. Romance was non-existent. Sex life was a in a word: embarrassing. Maybe once every 2-3 months. I had lost physical attraction in her and had also completely stopped working out and eating right myself. I was becoming one of those poor bastards I used to pity: a type B, past-his-prime, out of shape middle-aged faceless number. I do very well for myself and I used that as a crutch for not being intimate with my wife. "I can give her anything she wants, her life is perfect" is what I would tell myself to make me feel better. I found this sub today while putting my oldest son down for a nap and it WOKE ME UP. It is exactly this kick in the ass I needed (have been working out again for about 2 months now, but was still slacking terribly on the sex life). After reading the latest posts for about 20 minutes I got up, walked into the living room and gave it to her like when we were dating. It sounds weird, but I know I've already turned a corner and have re-taken the reigns in my relationship. Looking forward to learning more about the red pill. Thanks!!!!
This MRP stuff... it works, if you can man up.
by spexer | February 6, 2017 | Link

I was like many of you, finding this place on my way to the dead bedrooms sub.

My stats: Married 16 years, 2 kids. Both wife and I are in our 40s. Took the red pill about 2 years ago. I read the sidebar here, I took responsibility and I GOT TO WORK ON ME.

End result? Marriage turned around. I have the wife I want, and I like the man I see looking back at me in the mirror.

Yes, there is always improvement to be made... and the work never ends.. but I think some of you need to hear that this MRP stuff works... if you do the work.

And that is the kicker. I come back to this sub to find posts saying how SHE is the problem? Arguing that being alpha or red pill isnt what is most important... and even making a case for the dad bod? Posts here where people are looking for shortcuts or another way....

bullshit.

Do the work. Read the books. Make your MAP. Post in the "Own your shit" thread. Take ALL the responsibility and fucking LIFT.

It really is that simple.
[Theory] The best laid plans of mice and men....

by UEMcGill | September 12, 2016 | Link

The Hunt for Red October

I’m a big fan of history, and a pretty voracious reader. Early in my career I read The Hunt For Red October by Tom Clancy. This was my first Clancy book and eventually led me to many others, but it also led me to Into the Storm: On the Ground in Iraq. I picked this book up thinking it would be some nice tactiporn. Little did I know it would become one of the great influences in my management style.

The book is set up with some backstory about how the US army was in shambles from the Vietnam War and conscription. On the other side of the world they faced a numerically superior enemy with apparently vast resources. As an aside the book is fascinating story of how typical American paranoia helped build the most lethal army in the world.

The take away I’m here for is they embraced an operational paradigm called “Mission intent”; this is a direct result of the philosophy that, no battle plan survives contact with the enemy.

Plan A vs Plan B

This post sparked a good conversation that I wanted to delve into deeper, and in particular a comment lower in the thread “Having a well-worked-out-ready-to-go-plan-B will negatively influence your plan A. You're in A for 100% or not at all." that I wanted to talk about.

We’ve all been there; hell one of our biggest acronyms has the word “Plan” as a core tenant. The oft bandied MAP, whether you say it in your head as Male Action Plan or Marriage Action Plan it is still a plan. And as the title suggest, the best laid plans often go awry. As I alluded to in a previous post, my plan was set. I had started talking to lawyers, and even had a battle chest prepared.

In the book Clancy gives the decade long history of the US Army after Vietnam. How they reinvented themselves from essentially a 20 year old WWII army of conscripts and low quality capital equipment to a professional military with the best equipment the world has ever seen on the battle field.

They went through a management philosophy change too, and that was to adopt the ideal that the Army was run by the non-coms, and that they would give them flexibility and training to do their job. Officers would plan missions based on intent, and let the trained professionals fill in the blanks. General Schwarzkopf Jr.’s entire mission for the gulf war was only 3-4 lines long. It was simple and to the point, “Free Kuwait, expel Iraqi troops” was pretty much the extent of it (I wish I could find the exact statement but my google foo is lacking on this one). He would rely on the commanders below him and the training of the non-coms to fill in the blanks. His job as OPSCOM was to provide leadership and ensure that those below him had the tools to do the job.

Mission Intent

When I set out along this path, I remembered this philosophy. I stated my mission intent and over the years it’s been tweaked and it has evolved some but in its essence it is still the same.

_I want an awesome life, with intimate personal relationships._

That’s it. I’ve simplified it down to its core essence and that is pretty much it. Whenever I approach a problem head on this is the question I ask myself, “How does this meet my mission?” Intimate to me means several things, with my wife it means sexually and personally, with my friends it means I get value and they provide value. Even my job needs to provide intimacy, in the form of fulfillment and achievement.

Some people get so focused on the logistics of the mission they march head on into a situation that clearly is tactical or strategic folly. They confuse things like lifting, and shit test dismissal as the mission, when in reality it’s simply training and contact with the enemy. If you are not moving forward in ways to improve your mission then you should eliminate those things that don’t provide you value. We lift for discipline, we bust shit tests for leadership, but these are support not the mission.

Having a well-worked-out-ready-to-go-plan-B will negatively influence your plan A. You're in A for 100% or not at all.

This in particular is a fallacy. It’s too bad the user deleted himself as I thought it would have been a good point of discussion. The reason it’s a fallacy is too many people get stuck in the logistics of the project to the point that they will drive themselves off a cliff because the map said it wasn’t there. In his book Clancy discusses how the Soviets practiced their echelon theory so strictly that there were ruts in the ground from where all the tanks and trucks drove; there was no innovation or freelancing. The largely conscript Soviet army would likely drive off the proverbial cliff because “orders were orders”

The reason this is a fallacy is you two-fold. One you should be moving to the mission, and filling in the gaps with training and leadership. Two you shouldn’t be so ridged in your plans that once you did make contact with the enemy, you drove in the ruts before you to your ultimate doom, so to speak.
A couple of years ago in NJ Hurricane Sandy Swept across the state and wreaked a bunch of havoc (/u/theFamilyAlpha post got me thinking). I approached this just like any other project, with mission intent first. What was my mission? Keep my family safe and comfortable. How did I achieve it? With logistics and leadership that’s how. For the logistics, I already had a generator with a setup to run some vital things in the house, refers, furnace and charger plugs. I also have a sizable pantry with probably 10 days of non-rationed stores; it could be stretched easily. Safety was covered via firearms, firearms training and a big dog. I also had a sizeable stash of lumber for ad-hoc repairs.

The hurricane came and went, and my house had minimal damage; A fence panel down was the worst of it. Power was out, and I had plenty of gas to run the generator. A few people occasionally had a generator stolen, but in my area neighbors tended to help neighbors. I charged plenty of phones on the block. I kept a watch on the power company website, and then the bad news came. 10 days. That was going to be how long it was until power came back on.

I had a generator, and plenty of food, but I also knew my other options. School was out for until the foreseeable future. We were huddled in one room at night, because of my generators limited capacity, but we were safe and warm. So I had a choice, follow the plan or improvise. I chose the latter. We packed up what we would need, and whatever food we could. I took the generator across the street and let the neighbor use it. On the way out the door, I flipped on the stove light and asked my neighbor to call me when they saw it on. We drove 4 hours away to a relative’s house and had a nice comfortable place to stay as long as we needed it, which indecently was right at when they said it would be, 10 days from Sandy day zero.

I could have sat there, feeding the generator, playing board games with the kids, and grilling the whole time. But on the face of it, my mission was “Keep my family safe and comfortable”. When I looked around and saw, yeah they were safe, but comfort was not very high, it was an easy decision. All the tools and material I had weren’t going to do it, so we left. My mission was still the same, I just achieved it a different way.

When it was all said and done, I look back and did a post mortem. Would I do it the same again? Nope, my mission is still the same, but in the face of another “Sandy“ I’ll leave before the storm. Frankly it’s a lot less work, and it still achieves the mission. The generator is just a backup, not the plan. I could get a whole house generator, and more food stores, etc. but what would happen if my roof got ripped off, or all the windows blown in? We just had a hurricane watch, and the new plan was simple. Leave before it gets here. When I was reading TheFamilyAlpha's link about the guy in Louisiana that was my first thought, “it’s too late, he should have left when he had the option”
Mission Achieved

Having a well-worked-out-ready-to-go-plan-B will negatively influence your plan A. You're in A for 100% or not at all.

So we see why this statement is false in so many ways. Plan A and Plan B are just options. You should always know your options. At the very least you should know what happens if you bail on your plan. In my post about the flywheel, I said I was on the brink of divorce. I had a lawyer lined up and a battle plan ready to execute. My wife came to me on actual bended knee and begged to let her back in my life. My plan was secret, my opsec was tight, and there was no way she knew it was coming. Yet I overlooked the fact that women are masters of covert communication and she felt it coming even though she never saw it. She switched to covert communication and begged me to let her back in.

I stepped back and asked, how do I meet my mission, that of I want an awesome life, with intimate personal relationships?

I put the papers in the drawer and opted to give her two weeks and watch her actions. As I stated, it was like a switch flipped in her. She became attentive emotionally and physically, she started to be the woman I dated again. You could ask the question if it was too far gone, and should I have nexted her. I had some good friends specifically challenge me on that fact, and reality is, I’ll never know. Given my mission, I felt it made the best sense to proceed with her. I could have a more intimate relationship with my children with her in my house, then without her. Could another woman replace her? Absolutely, but on the whole I’m better off with all of them. I haven’t regretted it, but I still have those papers in a folder as a reminder to stay focused.
Dont argue with wife when she is complaining

by theultmatecad | March 19, 2015 | Link

One of the "truths" that instantly turned my marriage around was changing my reaction to her incessant complaining.

Last night is a good example of what I am talking about. One kid pee d the bed at 130am...took me an hour to change his Pjs and sheets and fall back asleep. Then at 330 another kid cried with earache. Had to get that kid medicine and luckily I fell back asleep by four.

Then this morning wife complains she didnt sleep well. Is tired etc....

The old bluepill me woulda lost it. I took care of both kids all night and you were sleeping and now telling me YOU are tired????

Today I just laughed. "You sure looked peaceful when I dealt with em both last night" maybe we should get you a hotel tonight so you can sleep ok princess?"

No matter what. Do not let her upset you. Be unaffected emotionally. Dont do shit for her that she should do for herself but when she complains just listen and offer empathy at best. Amused mastery works too Butchering the Alpha Male from Mark Manson's website.

In brief, this article discusses what the definition of Alpha actually is/not. It highlights the different ways individuals could be perceived as simultaneously alpha or beta depending on your perspective, and proposes an approach to being alpha based on mindset rather than specific behaviors.

I think this article is especially relevant to us MRP/LTR. The definition (and prescription of being) of Alpha as presented by the PUA is overly simplistic and overburdened with cultural stereotypes. The introduction of many of these concepts to a newb is helpful to set a total beta loser on the right track.

However, the idolization of supposed "alpha behaviors" diminishes the multitude of ways individual men grow into their own Alpha-dom. The focus on specific tactics (and the theories on which they are based) will open up new avenues for men to pursue their masculinity. But unless men outgrow this and learn to stand on their own ideals, they will simply become bad actors in a charade. In other words, they will fake it but never make it.

A new definition Alpha Male has complete control over his boundaries, so if he chooses to act selflessly, to act compassionately, to sacrifice himself, or even to take a backseat and let others shine, he can. That's the mark of the True Alpha Male, the man who has utter control over his boundaries and how he enmeshes himself into any social situation. He feels no need to overcompensate or to dominate or to intimidate, although he can if he wishes. He feels no need to sacrifice or lay down for anyone, but if the appropriate situation arises, he can do that if he wishes as well.

In my recent post, I discovered that the undergirding of my process to become awesome was weak. My frame was weak. My mindset was weak. To a large extent this is because I was creating a situation where a covert contract overshadowed the entire process. I was doing the prescribed reading, lifting, hobbies, etc. I was reaping the benefits: sex, attention, self-confidence. But I still was operating out of the delusion that if I just do X, then she'll certainly do Y. And to a great extent I did and she did.

I came here from a DB, because I read multiple posts about DBs being turned around though the concepts talked about on here. And it worked... kind of.

Getting sex on demand, being attractive to other women, gaining strength, learning new skills, increasing understanding through study, and making better business decisions are all victories for us. But it all amounts to a pyrrhic victory if we fail to become the Alpha we ought to become: the Alpha based on our own boundaries, principles, expectations, and desires.
Reframe your victim mentality and let go of the anger phase
by druganswer | August 5, 2016 | Link

One thing I see here often is a post where the author describes a situation where he suddenly feels that he is OI, stoic, and generally for the first time realizes that he does not give a fuck.

The general points made are that he didn't get angry, was not emotional, told his wife what was up without losing frame. All good and well... except:

They all seem to contain "My wife was being a bitch to me" - "She was yelling for no reason" - "She was taking her bad day out on me." etc. etc. All of this shit might be true... but if we zoom out a bit, this type of talk is still painting the OP as a victim, and while he might have maintained frame and he might truly not give a fuck about his wife anymore, many of these guys are still dripping with resentment.

While this stage seems to be accepted as generally "getting it," I would argue that it's still the tail end of the anger phase.

To quote the anger phase post by /u/SorcererKing:

Understand that women are not malicious for acting like women. Whether you believe that women are biologically programmed to pursue their life and sexual strategies or they are simply rational agents doing what seems logical given female identity, you have to know that most women are not consciously manipulative predators. To be mad at women for pursuing their sexual strategy is to be mad at women for being women. Their strategy is a part of their identity. In other words, behaving as they do is the very definition of feminine. Just as we do not get angry at dogs for walking on four legs and peeing on fire hydrants, we cannot be mad at women for doing what they do. It's who they are.

I think those words right there nail it. The "50's" (just using as an accepted standard of "the patriarchy") had it right. I'm a little young, so my experience with this is all through mass media... but it seemed that, then, a girl crying would be granted the "Oh, she's a girl, they tend to do that," type treatment. Then feminism and "equality" came and fucked that all up. Now if a girl was crying or upset at all, the reason behind it was to be accepted as completely rational, no matter what it was. And here we have the start of the blue pill being washed over America.

So what am I really advocating here? Well, first I would like to say that I am not advocating removing all responsibility from women. If she runs off with Chad, don't let it make you angry, but do take the normally suggested next course of action and dump her. I am advocating removing yourself from the role of victim of her shitty behavior and implanting her as the victim of the female condition. For me at least, it's much easier to stay rational when I think of things as these emotions are happening to her. I go from being angry to almost feeling sorry. How shitty must it be to have your emotions run your day to day life?

One more reason I promote framing it like this, besides removing anger, is that it is EASY for newly unplugged guys. It is already programmed in BP men to paint someone as a victim AND it is already programmed in BP men to usually paint a WOMAN as the victim... unless it is their respective victim puke. So guys, for your own sake, let her be the victim. You're a man, you're strong, you don't need that shit.
[Theory] Be the Clock Maker, Not the Clock Watcher.

by UEMcGill | December 20, 2016 | Link

I must govern the clock, not be governed by it.

Golda Meir

Steven Covey in his great book The Seven Habits of Highly Effective People stated that when approaching things in life that are repeated and done often, you should approach it from the standpoint of being a clockmaker, not a clock watcher. You should build systems and processes that simplify the task, instead of watching the clock and spinning along to the time trying to get things done. Simple things like, automatic bill pay instead of writing a check out every month is being a clock maker. r/Mealprepsunday is a great example of being a clock maker. These are all things that maximize effort and minimize time for something you have to do all the time.

Leadership and Course Correction

My wife recently went back to work, after being a stay at home mom for the past 6 years. It was a financial strain, and we made it work but things are much easier now. She has a job working retail management and as such during this time of year it’s crazy hours for sure. Between my travel and her work we’ve had to rearrange some of the household duties to accommodate our new busier life.

One thing I’ve taken over is groceries. It’s a logical fit; I work from home and can get it done during a long lunch. The upside is I have a clearer vision over a large portion of the finances; groceries is the largest outlay second only to the mortgage. I used to give her $600 a month for groceries for our family of 5. That included cleaning supplies, paper supplies and foodstuffs. Every month she would come to me and complain, “I shop the sales but I’m going to run out again…” She had her budgets and I would tell her to borrow and move stuff around. She would hem and haw, and find some money; not to mention she would go to the store like 8 times a week. We eat organic for the things that count, plus buy meat and fresh veggies, but she complained she could never come in under budget. I started shopping and instead of going to the local chain megamart, I now go to Aldi’s, Costco and Walmart. I average right at $500 a month. I still buy organic whenever possible and have shopping down to once a week.

The other side of her working is I have the kids alone for most of the weekends during the holidays. Not a biggie as they are at the age where they are independent. The most I have to do is feed them, and maintain a schedule. Yet when I’m out of town the house is disheveled, the kids lack discipline, and it takes a whole solid weekend to get everything back on track.
My wife is a doer. She’s not a planner. She’s not a clockmaker; she’s a clock watcher. So I took a step back and asked, “What can I do to make things run themselves?” The groceries were pretty easy. I’m a process engineer at heart, and have a lot of experience with just in time productions. I built a list, came up with what are essentials for every trip and cleaned out the pantry and reorganized it. I stock everything via FIFO because we were wasting too much food. My wife had a bad habit of, “Oh let me run to the store for it...” because she couldn’t find it or wanted something we didn’t have. Now, if it’s not on the shelf we don’t make it. I even bought shelf stable milk, for back up. There are zero things we need to go back to the store for. I meal plan for the week, including “fast food” for nights when we have practice, and on Sunday I make 3 other meals for the week to heat/reheat. I’ve installed a chest freezer and have slowly built up a supply of meat and frozen foods from specials and sales. All the while I’m still getting my usual chores done I need to, taking care of the house, bills and cars.

The kids discipline had started to slip, so again back to building a system. My wife has a habit of doing it because it’s simpler than coercing and cajoling the kids into it. They’re master manipulators and know how to work her pretty bad so it was time to instill some discipline. I got a garbage bag and a big box. I gave them an hour to pick up all the toys and make their beds. If I found any toy out, it was going in the bag and I would give it to good will. The box is a permanent reminder, and has “Good will” written on it. A toy played with and not put away goes into the box. The house is a lot cleaner now, and I maybe missing some things but that’s the price to pay. My kids take me serious, because I’m not a victim of their feelings. I do not care if they like me or not in the moment, and don’t take them seriously. If I need to throw a few toys out to make a point, they’ll be better for it later.

Input from the crew

When we went down the road of this change, I asked my wife “What do you need the most help with?” She had no answer. I was hoping it would be easy but as captain I had to get out in front on this one. I saw the tasks I could off load and quickly did that. In the heat of it, I realized that some of the crew was lacking discipline and we needed a better system to encourage that. As my first officer, she is only capable of so much, ultimately it’s still my command to do with as I see fit. Even her lack of comment was not a no-comment. It was simply an affirmation that she didn't know where to begin.

In the end I built a better system. Before I had delegated it to the First Officer, and she did ok with what she had. I had suggested lots of things like going to Aldi’s and being more consistent working with the kids, but she just wanted to survive in the now. She just wanted to watch the clock and move to the next task when the bell went off.

As Alpha-Providers we accept that there’s always room for improvement. Even a well-oiled machine, and battle tested crew needs training, discipline and new ways to do things. You can’t expect your first officer to be the one who does these things by her own volition. It’s your ship; lead by example sometimes.
A different opinion on marriage and the red pill
by 88Will88 | February 5, 2017 | Link

I have been giving a lot of thought to the problems faced by men on this sub. Mainly it is "my wife is not fucking me enough". So this is my second attempt to take a fresh look at this problem (my first was rambling and lacked cohesion). The general advice on here is "lift, implement dread, read NMMNG, do these things for yourself". That advice is effective and will probably lead to you having more sex with your wife. Rollo's recent posts about reconstruction have made point that you cannot use red pill methods to obtain blue pill goals. He also pointed out that the red pill you probably would not even chose your current wife as a partner. Well attempting to be "alpha" enough to make a marriage into a Disney fantasy is the epitome of attempting to use red pill methods for a blue pill goal. I am not much of a writer but I am old and experienced with LTRs and bitches generally so here I go with my take on things.

I personally do not think you should need to be jacked just to get your bitch wife to fuck you. So long as you are in reasonable shape (and this would include having a dad bod in your 40s), and she is not 2-3 points above you in SMV, you have every right to expect sex. If you are not a slob, work decent hours, you have a decent personality and take good care of your family then why on earth isn't she happy to fuck you? Standard red pill logic says "you are not alpha enough", "it is your fault", "lift, be more alpha, blah blah". Well fuck that, maybe it is her fault as well. Maybe you picked the wrong partner when you were blue pill, maybe she has turned into a horrible harpy since she secured commitment from you. Maybe the relationship has run it's course or decades with the same person has just gotten old (humans are not monogamous, very few species in the animal kingdom are). I personally think that relationships all have a used by date. The idea of happily ever after is a blue pill lie.

So again, where does this leave you? Each reader will be in a different position, some will want to save their marriage because they still love her (why, she obviously does not love you), some want to avoid divorce rape, I get it, the legal system is stacked against you. You do not want to hurt the kids, a laudable and honourable concern. Still the problem remains, she is not fucking you enough so here you are on this sub. So you can get divorced, you can follow all the standard advice on here, so you get to stick your dick into the dragon that forced you onto the internet to get advice from strangers. Or - you can get out there and get yourself some strange.

My view is that it is not all your fault, fuck Patrice O'Neal's opinion that it is always the man's fault, fuck the idea that you need to be some alpha with a body like Duane Johnson. So if your wife is not fucking you, and you are a good guy in decent shape then I say go get yourself some pussy elsewhere. Why uphold your end of a bargain if she is not? That is like fighting fair when your opponent is a cheat. Before you embark on your journey into a new (or many new) vaginas, understand that you may blow up your marriage. You should fully accept that before you go ahead. Then mentally divorce that woman who is not fucking you. You should follow all the usual red pill advice, lift, learn game, follow your mission, do it for yourself. Then go out and get laid. Choose your poison, hookers are low risk, cheating is high risk, high reward, sugar babies are somewhere in between. Just stop focussing on your wife, if she does not fuck you, and you are in decent shape, then she deserves to get cheated on.

Thoughts?

EDIT: I did not say do not lift or do not improve, read back, I said do all of the usual red pill advice. I did not reduce emphasis or importance of that. I am saying that if your wife is not fucking you and you are basically the same guy she married then do not do it for her, or to save your marriage. Do it for you and stop blaming yourself for her lack of interest. Take care of you and get out there among other women.
This week one of my relatives died. Not everybody has a guy like that in their life, but maybe you can be that guy to somebody else.

My very first time I met him, he was dating my relative. Older guy, divorced, his only kid was in college. He owned a bunch of land with his farm and an old house, raised some cattle, raised some crops, and ran a contracting business. Gun rack full of hunting rifles he'd use in his woods with his family and friends. Previous president of the school board in his town.

You ever meet a guy that makes you want to be a better guy? That was him.

He proposed marriage to my relative at Christmas. He got her a big box of Craftsman tools. Inside the box of tools was a ring. She said yes. She's damn alpha and runs her own business and has her own land too.

She moved to his farm, and they moved a bunch of her operations to his land. Built some new facilities to run things more efficiently. Kept the other property going too, and put tenants into her old house and turned it into a rental property.

I'll cut to the chase: he got cancer, people rallied, he found a bone marrow match, he got better, but never as good as he was. He wasted away on the treatments, and lost about thirty pounds of muscle, and got more sick, and decided the last week that he was done. Always in control, even when he had no abundant options left. Alpha-as-fuck.

Shit I learned from him:

- how to properly carve a turkey, where to cut first, how to angle the blade. I wish I learned that from my dad. I did not. It was him.

- my family did not come from a hunting culture. His does. I'm waking up tomorrow and getting on a plane for a hunting trip. I wish I had done this years ago and gone with him. I wanted to ask him, but I didn't want to be an amateur in front of him. I thought I owed him better.

Be that guy.

Be a guy that makes other guys want to be better so they can keep up with you.
The Main Event [FR]
by | October 21, 2015 | Link

[deleted]
Since I began this blog I’ve attempted to outline the endless number of social conventions employed by the Feminine Imperative. It should be noted here that the Feminine Imperative has always evolved to fluidly reinvent these conventions to advantage women – and thus ensure their sexual strategy – at every stage of their maturity, but also in adapting to new truths that would otherwise threaten women’s insurance. There are many examples of the imperative reimagining various social convention in light of unflattering truths that previous conventions no longer account for, but are unignorable in a larger social scope.

The problem inherent in women’s Hypergamous sexual strategy has always been the balance of optimizing the best breeding potential (Alpha Fucks) with the best long-term security potential (Beta Bucks) in men. The capacity for a woman to optimize this balance is determined by her sexual agency (attractiveness & sexual availability) with men. This is why it’s necessary for adaptable social conventions, that sit outside this dynamic, to be established in order to qualify what should be attractive to men. This in turn enables women to distract and dissuade men with social narratives that comfort women, but confuse and shame men.

Yes, that flies in the face of biological truths about men’s arousal cues, but for generations these conventions have successfully convinced (Beta) men that those cues are learned, socially conditioned, triggers, and that if they’d just change their minds about attraction they’d see that they can be “attracted” to any woman for any made up reason. This is the same social constructivist narrative that would have us believe gender identity is a learned social construct (which also contradicts the narrative of being born the ‘wrong gender’), and as such, attraction cues are also learned. This narrative works well for the Feminine Imperative because it’s a means to prolong women’s artificially inflated concept of attractiveness,...that is until women reach certain stages of maturity in their lives.

There are two points in women’s lives where this contrived idea about a socially conditioned definition of attractiveness fails them. The first, you may guess, is the Wall; the point at which a woman realizes she’s no longer able (or less able) to intra-sexually compete with other women for the attentions of men she hopes to optimize her Hypergamy with. At this stage there are two social conventions prepared for her – shame for men who base their ‘attraction’ on their primary requisite of physical appeal and not her (very marginal) intrinsic qualities, and/or a redefinition of what should constitute attractiveness (“it’s what’s on the inside that should count”). The latter also having the false confidence inflating effect of making a woman believe that her ‘attractiveness’ should be an indefinite, ambiguously defined, commodity; thus encouraging the belief that a woman can prolong her quest in finding the right guy to optimize Hypergamy well after the Wall.

The second phase is what If-I-Fell describes above, a phase where peri- and post-menopausal women are forced to accept that their sexual agency is at an end, but the need for Frame control still persists. This is a stage where no amount of pseudo self-confidence will convince a woman’s hindbrain that she can depend on her sexual agency to ensure her long-term security. But, as with everything else in a woman’s life, the Feminine Imperative is ready with a rationalization and various social conventions to absolve her of her reliance on her sexual agency and, of course, place the responsibility for it squarely on men’s shoulders.

In fact, those conventions can be quite profitable if you can offer any contrived solution to those insecurities.
The Sexless Marriage
by bsutansalt | July 16, 2018 | Link
Don't go Rambo RP rogue

by BobbyPeru | November 21, 2016 | Link

Read all Sidebar, Swallowed the pill almost 7 months ago. Lift 4-5 days per week. 6' 1", 192, no idea on body fat, but pretty lean.

Biggest lesson lately is it's ok to loosen up. When I first swallowed the pill, I became an asshole, which seems to be a fairly common theme. From my observations on MRP, some of the directions after a 2-3 months of assholeism are A) Become purple, and then eventually slip back into BP and B) Dust yourself off, learn from your mistakes, keep reading and lifting, and realize that all you can expect is progress as long as you keep putting the work in, C) Blame all your problems on your wife, Go nuclear, and decide that you want to find a snowflake (good luck with that), or D) Stop reading but keep lifting, and become purple for an indefinitely amount of time.

All but B seem to keep RP seekers in the anger phase.

I have chosen B.

It has been a tough road so far, and sometimes I can still go into the anger phase, but I seem to come out of it faster as long as I keep doing the work. Usually, if I read enough status updates and comments, the answer will come, and usually the problem is in the same room as me - hint: it's not my wife.

At some point, I realized that my actions were in fact creating more sex because I was being more alpha, but I saw the end game as a dead end road. More sex is not the ultimate goal, and if it is used as the end goal, it will lead to a dead end. Frame and self improvement is the goal, and sex is a side effect.

More on that: I have always lifted, so my sex life never really went below one duty sex per week. Now, I pretty much have sex any day I want unless she is sore, which can happen since we are now having sex 3-4 times a week, and much higher quality or I need a break - I'm 48, and my body seems like 3-4 times a week is about right, and actually that's about all I want in a week. Important: I stopped jacking off and watching porn. I don't have a desire to do that now that I am getting it as much as I want, sometimes up to 8 out of 10 days if she is ovulating. I've found that when she is ovulating, I am more turned on by her.

One of the biggest revelations I've had is just try to have fun in my life. I'm rebuilding a social life, which was pretty much nonexistent for several years, and the oneitis was strong. Loosening up the oneitis is a natural byproduct of developing a social life. Women can feel the abundance on an intuitive level and it gives them the tingles. It also keeps me in a better mood and gives me an abundance mentality... in general, life becomes more fun, and my sense of humor is better. Again, this is good for me, and she gets to enjoy it, or "fill my container" if you will.

I see lots of guys coming on after 60 days, frustrated, thinking about divorce, and wondering why she's not responding to their MAP or dread. Holy crap, after years of betization, it takes time. Patience is a key in swallowing the RP. Swallowing the RP is a process, not an event. It's a change of mindset... a mindset where your frame resides, and if your significant other decides to join great, if not... still great. Abundance. Give it time, work through the anger. Never make big decisions in a state of anger. Keep reading, keep lifting, keep working on social life, keep day gaming, and most of all, keep a damn sense of humor. Don't take her so seriously, it only feeds into her mood and draws you into her frame. If she doesn't want to join your good mood, STFU and leave. Maybe she will when you get back. Maybe she won't. It doesn't matter. Life is too short to not enjoy. Eventually, as long as your girl isn't too damaged, jaded, or bitter, she will come around because leadership by example is what works.

Some other general observations: don't negotiate sex- you can't negotiate desire, and it's a turn off. Don't try to use logic too much, unless you want her pussy to be so dry that the duty sex you will get will require KY. Don't mate guard - that's something I've had to work on, and I've made progress - its a great way to be unattractive. Don't DEER - this is a big one, and this was a turning point in my BP "recovery." If you start to DEER, STFU in mid sentence. She will be very inquisitive as to what you were saying, just say "never mind, it wasn't important." Change the subject. STFU is used when shit tested for starters, but have fun when you're not being shit tested, or you will just become "brooding." Later, AM and AA can be mixed in, but don't try to mix these in too soon - you will mess up and make it worse: Master STFU first. When all else fails, leave, regroup, and come back when your frame is strong again.

I didn't think this was going to be a wall of text, but there you have it....
Dangerous Times - Part 3
by Rollo-Tomassi | January 11, 2018 | Link

Essay:

Excerpt:

The New Polygamy Polyandry

You can probably see where I’m going with this now. Since the time of the Sexual Revolution (and unilaterally female-controlled hormonal birth control) we have seen a systematic degradation of this monogamous social order in favor of a female-primary social order. This social order is predicated on women’s complete control over the reproductive fate of society. Whereas before there were social checks and balances in conventional monogamy, these have been replaced with the unrestrained, unquestioned imperatives of women’s sexual strategy – Hypergamy. In just 5 short decades men have ceded any claim to not only our own sexual strategy and interests, but to any right to paternity.

When we look at how social trends have shifted with regard to women’s sexual selection process we can see the end game more clearly. We’ve gone from ‘No Means No’ to ‘Yes Means Yes’, to itemized permission documentation of every sex act, and now to “enthusiastic consent”. Women’s end game is not unlike our original state of polygamy in that only the most desirable Alpha men will be allowed breeding rights to women – with the social contract being all women are entitled to Alpha Fucks. Enthusiastic consent is a ‘thing’ because on some level of consciousness women loathe the idea of transactional sex with Beta men. And as women’s provisioning and security needs are already met by the state and men’s own direct or indirect resource transfer, there is no longer any desire for “sex they’re really not that into.”

If not for ubiquitous, free online porn and soft prostitution (Sugaring, Tinder, Seeking Arrangements) western culture might find itself in a similar situation to the polygamous countries described by the Economist.

I think it’s important for Red Pill aware men to consider that as women consolidate more and more power via social conventions that only apply to men (MeToo, Times Up, etc.) the end game is one of polyandry for women. This cartoon was a funny one because it accurately describes women’s sexual selection process, but it’s unfunny because it also belies women’s idealized state – one in which men are either draft animals or breeding stock.

I had quite a few men ask me where I think we’re headed with regards to intersexual social dynamics and I would say that what I’m ultimately seeing is an erasure of conventional monogamy replaced with a Hypergamous polygamy in which women will have uncontested control over reproduction. I see a lot of similarities occurring with men who drop out of life, and either neglect or refuse to build their lives around supporting a family or entertaining a wife. The guys I talk to very much want to get married and have kids, but the downsides are so unimaginably dangerous for men it seems hopeless to them. The old monogamous social contracts no longer exist, but men are still being held responsible for not putting themselves on the line to take risks that only apply to them.

So, not unlike the young unemployed men in the Arab Spring, today’s drop out guy has very little hope for a monogamous future with a woman. But this hopeless circumstance is being instituted by western women, not a religious dogma. Unrestrained Hypergamy leads us back to our feral, tribalist polygamy, simply because women have no use for Beta men. Sex with Betas is (or soon will be) considered rape and without porn or some other sexual sedation Betas would likely resort to violence to solve that problem.
The Human System

I use the term “evolved mental firmware” a lot in my writing. I look at it like this; we have the hardware that is our biological reality, a firmware that is our in-born, evolved proclivities (and the psychological aspects of how men and women’s hardware affects it) and the software that accounts for the social programming we learn from our environments and circumstances. From the perspective of my theory on perceptive processes (Instinct, Emotion & Reason) our firmware influences all three of these processes.

Blank Slate equalism would condition us to believe that our biology (hardware) is insignificant, our firmware is non-existent or inconsequential, and our programming (social learning) is the only thing that makes us what we are. If this sounds like progressivist boilerplate you’re not too far off. Modern concepts of social justice use exactly this social constructionism to justify their positions on a great many issues – and especially gender issues.

However, it’s a mistake to think the Blank Slate is a religion only for leftists and feminists. Equalism is the starting point for the beliefs of many well-meaning Blue Pill conservatives too. Feminism depends on egalitarian ideals setting the intersexual ‘Frame’ for selling its ideology.

“If only men would cooperate and help smash the Patriarchy we could live in an ideal state of egalitarian equalism.”

The cover story of a ‘push for equality’ all depends on the Blank Slate notion that men and women are functional equals and all this inequality is the result of social doctrines (and plenty of evil men). If it’s all about social constructionism then all that’s needed is to change everyones’ programming and thus an idealized gender neutral world ought to be possible.

Male feminists, Mens Rights Activists and Masculinity Apologist organizations all have this in common – they buy into the Blank Slate and the feminist lie that gender equality is an achievable goal based on it. Most of them don’t realize they’re carrying feminist water in their egalitarian beliefs. They just believe in the hope of an “equal partnership” in their marriages and ignore or demonize the influence our evolved firmware exerts in themselves. and their wives. So even when they accept intersexual differences and the influence of our firmware, the next defense of the Blank Slate is moralism.
STFU, (you're still a faggot)
by Scurvemuch | August 17, 2016 | Link

One of the first things new guys and old alike will here as advice is: STFU.

But since we have a group of Rambo Red guys on here, I think we need to discuss what this means.

Warning: rant

WHY do we say STFU?

She has ceased to earn your time, and attention – why should she have your words of validation- you know, your impotent anger. You are not feared, or appreciated. You are not special. You can be replaced. You are not attractive yet. So shut the fuck up, because your rage, anger, rules, and boundaries are meaningless and ineffectual.

Also, you are much more likely to give her hamster food that, really, comes on; you know she already barely tolerates you.

TRP says “remember, you are the prize”

Around here, most do not come in as “the prize”. Chances are, you are an entitled, weak minded faggot who only wants mom to open her legs for him because he needs the validation. Or, you know, since you can’t get a woman who knows you interested in fucking you, you go out and get some girl who doesn’t know you well enough to be disgusted by you, and you rape her, trick her, fool her into fucking you.

Go lift, go unfuck your life, own your shit, get you head right, stop fapping, stop asking for validation, be more than your paycheck, and then, when you have some value, you can try out the AA/AM and see how you do. Chances are, right now, you will do it badly, come off like an aspie retard, or get pulled into a fight you can’t win because you are a faggot.

What does it mean to shut the fuck up?

Ideally, you DO NOT literally not say anything at all.

You need to shut up about your feelings, demands, reasons, excuses, rights, entitlements and so on.

You NEED to maintain a range of usual civic CIVIL (because I totes forgot English for a second) banter. You should ideally not let her get tipped off that you are “doing something” or “going through a process”, worse yet that you are “upset”.

The use of usual daily conversation keeps you from filling her head with more reasons to feel that you are a worthless POS male. Don’t worry; she has enough reasons to think this without your overt assistance.
There will be times when she does something so gut wrenchingly fucked up, especially as you are reading all about the reality in which you live, and other men’s stories, that you will not be able to help yourself. It’s ok. This is when you say nothing. Nothing at all. Breathe deep and walk away. Go for a drive, a walk, or go fishing. Whatever. She will likely test your shit when you come back. She will either do this overtly or will play games with the “silent treatment”. This is all BS, based on your failure to lead in the past. Understand this, smile, and give her whatever answer you want. You went for a walk. You went to the moon. You went to an alternate reality and saved the world, but got back in time for dinner, and speaking of which, where’s your steak?

You don’t really owe her an explanation—that is, unless you fucked up and did not do something important when you walked away. Even then, you do not owe her an explanation.

Feel free to engage with her, feel free to live your life, unencumbered by her voice in your ear telling you that you should really FIX how SHE feels. Feel free to treat her like the girl you met those years ago, or the girl you met down the block when you went for a walk. You know, the one who doesn’t know you are a faggot.

Thanks for reading.

Now go lift something.
It was suggested that I repost this here, so here goes:

I stumbled on the Red Pill thanks to Amazon's habit of recommending books based on your current selection. I bought a book called No More Mr Nice Guy after getting tired of years of duty sex despite doing literally everything in my power to make my wife happy. Amazon recommended The Rational Male, and the rest is history. I grew up poor, somewhat skinny, and socially awkward - lots of reasons to be introverted and lacking self esteem. I was fortunate enough, however, to have been born with some very important attributes (strong jaw line, very deep voice, and better than average looks). I'm not bragging here. These notes are important to understanding my experience with women. I grew tired of being invisible to girls and targeted by bullies, so I began lifting weights, and playing football and wrestling. I studied and worked hard to refine my workouts, and by the time I was in my mid 20's I even competed in a local bodybuilding competition. On the outside, I was Chad Thundercock. On the inside, I was a very nice guy. I got a LOT of attention from women (it's almost embarrassing when I look back how much went right over my head). I had grown up in a broken home, and was determined to succeed where my parents had failed (I now understand my real father was the alpha that got away, and my step father was the beta provider). I went out of my way to make my girlfriends happy, with disastrous results. After 10 years of getting treated like crap, I stopped caring what they wanted, and just focused on me. Finally - success! Time to get married. The next 10 years were filled with a LOT of hard work. I became professionally and financially successful; I worked hard to maintain my physique; and focused on giving my family everything they could want. And I failed shit test after shit test after shit test... What followed for the next 10 years was increasingly boring and less frequent duty sex (this all the while continuing to get plenty of other women expressing interest). The worse it got, the harder I worked. About a year ago, we were on the verge of divorce. I found a reference to No More Mr Nice Guy. Fast forward to my current situation. I'm still married. I still work hard. My focus is now ME. I stay busy with my hobbies (motorcycles and martial arts). If she wants time / attention from me, she has to make it worth my while. I've become accepting of flirtatious behavior from other women, even returning the attention from time to time (working on inner game). I've become adept at recognizing and passing shit tests. I don't bug her about where she wants to go to dinner. I tell her if / where we're going. If I want something for dinner, I pick it up on my way home, and start grilling as soon as I arrive. If she wants something to go along with what I'm grilling, she has to cook it. I no longer lift ONE GODDAMN finger to clean the house. Most importantly (it seems) I don't get dragged into arguments. So, how's it going? I feel like the Phoenix rising. It's been a complete transformation for my marriage. The irony is I'm happy, but I no longer care whether she stays or goes. The only reason I didn't leave her are my two boys. We have talked about the changes (she doesn't know I know about the red pill). She has literally told me she is much happier with me making the decisions, telling her what to do, and HOLDING HER ACCOUNTABLE FOR HER ACTIONS. I've read the criticisms of TRP. I assume they come from people who just can't bring themselves to swallow it. I do accept that for some, TRP may not be the right chemistry. As for me, I'll be taking the red pill the rest of my life... Just to follow up. I've gotten many responses about No More Mr Nice Guy. A very eye opening book. However, the real clarity came when I followed it up with The Rational Male. If you want to understand all of this, that book is an absolute must.
Picking the right attorney
by Red-Curious | September 8, 2017 | Link

I get asked this one a lot, so here's a short post to point you all in the right direction.

Avoid "Men's Rights" Law Firms

This is a trick meant to prey on guys like you. They claim to be experts in helping men in divorce and custody cases, as if they know some trick that the rest of us don't. This is idiotic because we all play with the same statutes, same judges, same rules of procedure. People who represent women know the same tricks as the ones who represent men. How do I know? Because I go up against those guys constantly and if they had any special tricks they would have used them by now. They're not bad lawyers. They are often just as competent as everyone else. They just have no distinct advantage and they're not fighting any harder than any other attorney.

They do have two distinct differences, though: (1) They have labeled themselves in their community, and judges are aware of these labels and reputations, decreasing credibility. (2) They're more into using marketing gimmicks to get your money, which means they're usually more interested in the money than anything else. These firms often charge way more than their competitors. Why? Because they're intentionally marketing to the demographic that they know has more money to spend. Screw those firms.

Two-Part Test

A good attorney should be able to communicate two clear things in the initial consult:

- I will be utterly and honestly real with you about case expectations and what the likely outcome will be.

- No matter how improbable the result may be, I will fight hard through trial and appeal to pursue your goals.

Some attorneys lack the second and are just pushovers. They want a quick buck, to settle the case, and then churn the mill over to the next sad sap who hires them. They'll act strong and courageous up-front, but as soon as the other side makes one good point and the judge seems to agree, they back down and pressure you into settling. These guys are usually wimps afraid of a good trial.

Others in the reverse will promise you custody, support, extra parenting time, that they'll make her pay your legal fees, and that they'll even convince the judge to make her buy the moon and hand it over to you in the final entry. Then, when they obviously can't deliver, instead of owning up to the fact that they're lying scumbags only after your money, they actually blame you for why you didn't get everything they promised. "Hey, you didn't tell me about ___ at the first meeting. If I had known about that I never would have said those things. It's your fault for doing that or not telling me about it up front."

If an attorney is both honest about the realistic outcome, but vigorous in his pursuit of your goals, that's an attorney I would trust. When an attorney has both, you almost always get a solid stream of cost-benefit analysis at every step of the process. You're getting the right bang for your buck.

Vetting

Pushovers

Ask the bailiffs in your county how often they see that particular attorney going to trial on his cases. Look up the public docket to see how many cases he files a year. Go to the initial consult with specific questions in mind: (1) ask him how often he goes to trial; (2) ask him to tell you a story about the most recent time he went to trial; (3) ask him how much appellate work he does (if he doesn't do appeals, next him); (4) pre-meditate all of the weaknesses in your own case and ask him his strategy for arguing against those weaknesses; (5) tell him point blank that you don't think this case will settle (even if you really believe it will) and gauge his reaction.

Promisers

These guys are bold-faced liars, so you're not going to get an honest answer out of them. They'll tell you story after story of their great victories, none of it actually true. One such attorney in my area was bragging to every attorney in the courthouse that he got the court to aware $220,000 in legal fees to his client. That's actually a huge accomplishment. Interestingly, though, $205,000 of that went to my firm because we represented the client through most of litigation.

How do you vet them? Ask them about the weaknesses in your own case and how they think a judge would respond to those arguments and allegations. If they're dismissive and can't recognize the seriousness of some of your flaws (and heaven help you if you don't even recognize your own case's weaknesses), don't trust them. Ask them point blank how much they think the case will cost. If they are evasive or quote you some ridiculously high number and give you no other numbers, screw them. Good attorneys will give you ranges: "If we settle before we file, it'll be around $w; if we settle mid-way through litigation, $x; if we take it to trial, it'll be another $y; and if we have to appeal, that's usually in the ballpark of $z." Each of these can be ranges or general figures - but if they refuse to acknowledge any cost estimates or give you upper-end estimates only, then they are intending to charge you an arm and a leg regardless of your actual case prognosis.

Lastly, and most importantly: ask people who work for the courts. Other attorneys will lie to get your business. But actual court staff tends to know the attorneys and their reputations and they will be blatantly honest.

Good luck.
[FR] Fill your wife with lust.
by jerry_rigger | December 3, 2014 | Link

One of my stories.

This is something(s) that helped turn my wife into a cockicidal manic. And I'm surprised I haven't come across anything like this yet.

What is it?

Fuck flowers, fuck chocolate, fuck jewelry, fuck dinner, fuck a movie, fuck the ballet, fuck the symphony, fuck that play or whatever fucking horse shit she'd get your beta ass to do in the past. Fuck all that shit in the ass with donkey sized dick using hot sauce and shards of glass as lube.

The answer like so much of TRP philosophy is pretty straightforward and simple. Committing to it and being vigilant about it is the hard part.

The answer starts with the kiss. That's right. You read that correctly. The motherfucking kiss.
Easy, right?
You got this motherfuckingshit.

When was the last time your woman kissed passionately? Not passively and not just a peck in passing, passionately. I'm talking a Sex God kiss, goddammit. Dominate, Emotional, Variety, Immersion. Fuckin' DEVI.

For some this will be the hardest part, especially if you're fed up and/or have a dead bedroom. I know, I was there not too long ago. But as stated you --need to-- ,no, must kiss your woman and make it fill her with passion. I'm talking about that immersive kiss that fills you both with raw primal desire. Lust at its finest.

Kissing my wife like this at first, with all we've been through, was a little difficult for me. I had to force it, at first that is. It also wasn't exactly well received by her either and made her suspicious. The first handful of times were awkward for a few reasons. The fire that burned in our hearts for each other was just smoldering ash at best. Also the only time a kiss like that was given anymore was when we were going to fuck or were fucking. And we didn't fuck very often, if at all.

This kind of kiss was/is tied to sex and still is, as it should be. But where I had fucked up was I reserved it only for sex. This was/is wrong.

Over time I noticed a change in my woman and myself. My forcing myself and the awkwardness faded and it began to become well received. It became natural again. It became a small show of my dominance and tenderness. And with kindling you shall build a great fire.
As it became less and less awkward I began to show more dominance and make it even more immersive. I'd grab her by the hair, push her up against the wall and kiss the fuck outta her. I still do and she loves it.

I made a habit of kissing her like this every time that we parted. Whenever we were gonna go do our own thing I left her with a hair pulling, manhandling, passionate, immersive kiss. But the after effects only seemed to last a few hours. When I'd returned home it was just a faded memory.

Then during one kiss I remembered that if I gave her just enough and pulled away before she could get her fill that she'd go fucking wild. And that's how I began to leave her and greet her. At times her desire would consume her and she'd try to continue which was my goal. I have to pull her away by the hair or push her against the wall as I turn to walk away sometimes to cut her off. Gotta leave her craving more, keep her addicted.

I noticed that the desire that filled her lasted longer than before. I kissed her the same but by pulling away at the right time she'd want me longer. But it'd only last about 4 or 5 hours instead of the previous 2.

Even though I'd leave and greet her with a kiss and pull away, I wanted her to keep that desire in the back of her mind all day. I didn't want the greeting to just be a reminder, I wanted it to add to the flames. I began thinking how to prolong her desire. So one day on my lunch break I sent her a text, not thinking.

I wrote something like "I'm gonna tie you up and fuck you tonight," not thinking about it. (Along with RP we've been developing a 24/7 D/s relationship. RP & BDSM has helped save our marriage). I was busy at work so I kept the message short and to the pointy. So I get home after work and kiss her like I've been, pulling away early and all. But this time it's different, I practically had to pry her off with a crowbar. I grabbed her by the hair, pulled her away, and said "No, not right now." After dinner we ended up having a very satisfying play session.

From this I learned I could use text messages to keep desire going throughout the day. But remember to show dominance, keep frame, and keep the message short. Keep it an "I am," not a fucking "Can I?" Take a few seconds to go over word choice before you hit send.

And lastly when I got home and said, "No, not now," it was put on my terms. It didn't matter that the child was awake and we really couldn't then anyways.

Remember all this shit takes time and consistency. Be vigilant. Chip away at your former Beta self everyday. Small acts of dominance lead to larger.

Also if anyone has any tips on how to further escalate I'd love to know them, and I'm sure the wife would appreciate it too.
Step out of the car sir

Themes

So if you've followed my posts, they have a theme. You're training your thoughts to be able to be that alpha male who owns his life. Your main brain has been scrambled by years of feminine bullshit, some more than others. While there's no shortage of Anthony Robbins out there, giving you the chemical rush that comes with the pep talk (of which I am not nearly as capable as most of them) I've taken a different approach. Instead of having a goal to aspire to, it's a process, Scott Adams 'moist robot' theory:

The best way to manage your attitude is by understanding your basic nature as a moist robot, that can be programmed for happiness, if you understand the user interface The only thing between you today, and the alpha you of tomorrow is your own head. There's no giant preventing you from going to the gym, no force that keeps you walking on eggshells. There's no one, just you, and your own faggot brain, tripping you up every step of the way, for no reason other than it doesn't know any better. Fuck you brain, I'm building a better man here.

- Step 1. Getting a proper mental model, know what you want
- Step 2. Acta, non verba, shut off your brain, it'll think you out of getting it.
- Step 3. A plea for irrational confidence
- Step 4. A simple exercise in rewiring your brain with your new tools
- Step 5.1. You're already a fuck

Step 5.2. Embrace your inner psychopath.

It's going to take more than a drop of blood. Don't save any for the swim back from the Wisdom of Psychopaths:

“When I was a kid,” Larry tells me, “we used to go on holiday every year to Hastings. One day—I’ll never forget it—I watched my sister playing in the sea, and this big wave came in and hit her. She ran out crying, and that was that. She never went in again. When I saw what had happened—and I couldn’t have been more than seven or eight at the time—I remember thinking to myself: ‘If you stand where the waves break, you’re going to get hurt. So you’ve got two choices. You can either stay on the shore and not go in at all. Or you can go out further so the waves lift you up and then crash and break behind you.’ ” Jamie gets to his feet. “The secret, of course, is not to go out too far,” he grunts. “Otherwise you wash up in this place.”

If one becomes too weak to stand up to a wee little girl, too humble to admit his commitment is a true value to be worshiped, too proud to admit where he stumbles, he's fucked. But we are doing concrete things here to get out of it. we left off at swatting away 100 shit tests without saying a word.

Now? I'm going to live in the now. Prepare all your gym gear to head to the gym. If you went yesterday, prepare all your stuff to go for a run. If you went for a run already? Prepare to go to fucking Starbucks and read some books, I don't care what you do. Make sure it's something better to do than sitting at home being a putz, shouldn't be hard, that's a pretty shitty thing to do on the weekdays.

Just before you go, go hit on the wife. I don't care if you're fat, your game is shit, or if her vagina has teeth coming out of it. Your goal is to hit on her, and get shot down. If you're just starting, it should be easy. If you can't get her to shoot you down, you don't leave the house.
I want you to genuinely try to sex her up as best you know how. A big 10 second kiss, pat on the ass, do the helicopter in front of her, doesn't matter. Once you get shot down (and the harsher the better) go do that thing you planned. Big smile when you leave, big smile when you return. Don't talk about it, don't reflect on it, don't even think about it.

What are you doing?

You're getting hit by the waves, often, repeatedly, and on purpose. Tomorrow, repeat.
Rumour is it takes 90 days to build a new pathway in your brain, you've already 'passing' 100 shit tests, right? 90 Rejections, 90 workouts, 90 reading sessions. It's a goal, and you know if you reached it, because 89 is not 90, it's worse than 0, because 0 didn't fail, he didn't try.
Don't fail, your years of blue pill training should make this your moment to shine.

Go get shot down. I believe in you.

What the fuck is this bullshit supposed to accomplish?

It's probably hard to get 100 shit tests in a few months, no woman has that concentrated bitchiness. You need to practice passing them without a second thought. And if you are busy, it's setting you up for success. You're on your way to the gym, you only have time to cant your head and chuckle before you go.

Yup, she's frigid to my dadbod, story checks out, time to go lift.

You're practicing outcome independence. Tomorrow? Go do it again. Go fuck it up again.
You'll start to care less and less. You'll start to do things you thought you wouldn't do before.
Maybe you'll challenge yourself, pick her up and throw her on the bed one day. she'll deny you, and then you go to the gym, clearly those dead-lifts were working, she used to be hard as fuck to pick up. Man, you're almost though that book, I'm going to go hit on her so I can head down there.

I highly doubt you'll get shut down 90 times. If you're going to the gym that much, if you're actually starting to have your presence, conditional on your value received from the old lady, if you are practicing the parts of the game you never learned or practiced before, or were too chicken shit to try... Eventually, eventually, you'll start actually losing. You wanted to go out to the gym, but once you throw her down and give a ten second kiss, she stops resisting, and starts submitting. You may even have a 'damn, I really wanted to work shoulders today too'

So you cuddle for 20 minutes afterwards while she runs her mouth about the 'new you'.
Sweet, shit test #74, cant your head, laugh, then get ready and go to the gym. give her a pat on the ass for being a good girl.

Want to know what makes a psychopath able to handle huge amounts of risk? Inability to bank emotions from past events. Each day is new, each day is coming from a position of 100% strength.

Embrace your inner psychopath.

If you want some light reading while you are out of the house, read through the following.
Learn to use the tools that the most powerful men around use. CEO's in fortune 500s are usually sociopaths, they are also successful, and don't deal with shit. What you think of as distasteful is a virtue for the modern man. Enjoy:

Wisdom of Psychopaths
Be slightly evil
illimitablemen
48 laws of power
Art of War
Meditations
Stop being manipulated - Part 1
by 88Will88 | March 14, 2017 | Link

https://youtu.be/py2b1g73bt4

Cross posting from TRP

For those of you who have not read Esther Vilar's revolutionary work "The manipulated man", why are you reading this? It is on the sidebar, it is compulsory reading, so stop reading this and go and read that book, all of it. Also if you have not watched the video above, watch it now. It shows our hero Esther dealing with a particularly grotesque human being, Alice Schwartzer (a convicted criminal and popular feminist of the time), who does everything in her power to provoke Esther, who is far more attractive than her. The way Esther behaves in that video is a masterclass in frame, I hereby bestow upon her a pair of honourary cast iron testicles. I am betting 90% of our readership does not hold frame that well.

I would like to revisit some of the points made in the book and take a closer look at the implications for us as men. First I will recap some key concepts and look at how these issues affect us now, so many decades after the book was published. Esther is impossibly vicious and harsh in her relentless attacks on women. The phrases and insults she uses are far worse than anything which has been said in here. As H L Mencken said "a misogynist is a man who hates women almost as much as they hate one another".

The book was popular during the time it was published (the early 70s) and it was reviewed in many magazines and the author was interviewed on television shows. When it was written it was more common for women to be housewives and be supported by their husbands than in the modern era. Less women went to university, and less women were employed. Women in university and employment did not escape the wrath and condemnation of the author however, who noted that such women were only there to gossip, learn things by rote, and secure a desirable man.

The author also looks on in disbelief at how complicit and gullible men are in their own enslavement. Gentleman, we are the canaries in the coal mine, we are among the first reasonably sized group of men to start speaking up about these issues. It is strange that it has come about in a sub regarding sexual strategy. You see the reason why we saw through women's deception was due to women dropping the ball and letting us see some of their magical tricks. It is ironic and amusing that one of the first men to do so was an amateur magician who went by the handle of "Mystery". Even before that a particularly strange individual (also, peculiarly a form of stage hypnotist) named Ross Jeffries had begun to pierce the veil.

Given that women use sex and our addiction to their beauty to achieve their goals it is hardly surprising that women would reveal themselves as charlatans in the area of sexual strategy. It is also not surprising that a woman explained it decades before men even began to wake up, and male "magicians" were among the first to see through some of the lies. After all you can't bullshit a bullshitter. Everything in the world seems like magic, except to the magician.
So where are we now as men? I would say we are worse off than we were when the book was first written. Feminism and a feminine primary society has on many occasions, through the operation of “law” in their family courts, stripped men of their children, their property, their dignity and their honour. We live in a society where a woman can commence an affair with a thug, then proceed to have an honest, loyal, hardworking man thrown out of his home, prevent him from seeing his children, have the police prevent him from approaching his former home, be forced to pay money to his cheating wife, be forced to shoulder the majority, or all of the expenses associated with raising his children while being denied reasonable custody or access to them.

We have a society which seeks to impose quotas of 50% women for top tier occupations (Corporate boards) and positions of privilege (politicians) while never seeking to gain equal representation in dirty or hard jobs, or in warzones. I could go on and on but it is all familiar territory here. Really men have few options to compete, women control reproduction (the pill), the left wing media seeks more and more privilege for women while seeking to repress and regulate aspects of male sexuality. Here in TRP we make it clear that you should not marry and the best advice we can offer is to enjoy the fall.

Now that we can see how we have been manipulated it appears our only option as free men is to refuse the institution of marriage. We also have the option of spreading the word but this is fraught with danger. We cannot use our real names, we cannot speak frankly in public, popular opinion is so in favour of feminism that to question it at all results in personal attacks, riots and censorship. In my opinion the war has been lost and there is little point in trying to change the world. So how do you live a fulfilling life as a male in a western country? We have many good articles and suggestions here. Plate spinning is a fun pastime, firstly recommended by Rollo. Following the commandments of Poon is also key here. One of the commandments which I think does not receive enough attention is to follow your mission. I intend to write some detailed posts on this in the future.

Following your mission as a man is one way to ensure that you are not manipulated. It is YOUR mission, not someone else's. You live life on your terms as a free man. No environment is without adversity, the western way of life has turned things against men. It is up to you to make the best of it. This post is written to open your eyes a little wider to the truth, to help you see some of the pitfalls, traps, illusions and hardships you need to deal with. Future posts will expand on what it is to live free and follow your mission. In the meantime please realise that you live in a blue pill illusion, every day someone is manipulating you, lying to you, profiting from you, or trying to sell you something that you do not really need. Work hard to free your mind from the illusions around you. Think for yourself, do not allow anyone's opinions (including those expressed in here) to dominate your will.
For a while I had promised some my background as I think a lot of it relates and underscores Red Pill. I think it also helps new comers see that the veterans have been there done that and the behaviors are all the same. So pay attention.

I am a second generation American. My grand parents right off the boat from the old world. I grew up in cultural ghettos. Greeks on that block, Germans over that, Italians there. You get the idea. Today the place is a burned shell full of heroine addicts and sex traffickers. My hackles go up whenever I read one of you writing “I was once Alpha”. I don’t think that is the right way to think of it. I believe it is better to say that I once understood what an Alpha should be. All boys possess Alpha traits but they lack emotional maturity to make it work and are easy prey for Blue Pill conditioning. Rollo even points this out. Women don’t need emotional maturity in order to pursue their sexual strategy. This supports the idea that Men need to learn how it works and they do this from other men.

The men in my family were all masculine. I could tell stories of them. Completely underscores masculinity and most of what we talk about. My grandparents particularly. Very much the ideal of a Red Pill relationship. My father married and moved away. My mother, is a co-dependent selfish closet narcissist. Over the years, as I reflect, I think my father resigned himself to what had happened. I don’t think he understood who she was at the time, but in a blue pill way stayed. Now that my father has passed her co dependence is even worse. I no longer talk to her, and I am nearing the day when she won’t be allowed to talk to my kids either. It doesn’t surprise me that I would marry a woman similar to my mom.

Since I was young my goal was to be a military officer. Don’t know why, it just was and I achieved it. I met her in college in my last year of ROTC. For context later, my BA is in Ancient History/Early Christianity. I have a minor in Archeology. In my current job I do nothing related to my degree, again supporting the idea that a degree is just a piece of paper. I didn’t have many girlfriends in my life, didn’t need them. It was really a distraction, at least as I thought it. I had things I wanted to do and go. Between 14-18 I did a lot. IN college things slightly changed. With my military training and marching around campus in uniform women were coming to me. I had a few GFs, and one engaged to for a brief time in college, but caught her with another guy and that was that. Done and over. In the idea that every Alpha needs his heart broken once, consider this that time. A year later I met Her. She was as Red Pill says. She claimed to have never been with a man, and her family seemed to support this idea, but I am telling you no one can do the things she did without having experience. Sex was on demand and often, and I mean once or twice a day she was after me. It was perfect for a red blooded man.

She was behind me in school so when I went off to active duty she would come out once or twice a month on her money to spend the weekend and holidays. So after a few years I figured she earned the right....married her. the first 4 years were ok it was easy to confuse what was happening with military life, I should mention she also was an ROTC grad. Sex was a chore to get out of her but 3 times a week. She tried often to make me go on a schedule. I wouldn’t. Being in the army though I had to give in to 3 times a week...just too tired otherwise. Looking back I should have seen the signs right from the honeymoon. As a note to all men. You need to see through the situation and take heart of the reality that if a woman wants to be with you she will do what it takes. Men think of priorities as competing and balance them. Women do not. They have a clear hierarchy and there are times when there is nothing you can do about it.

Our wedding was the first shot over the bow. We left the wedding dinner early at 10pm, she alluding that sex was going to be had. Teasing from her sisters and all that. Got to our room and spent the next 5 hours telling her how beautiful she looked. She demanded it. Posing, showing off....Our flight was around 6am or so. I am not joking. We took pictures of her hair. They are in the wedding album. It was a constant validation fest. So we arrived at our resort. She spent the next 18 hours sleeping. Digression: she always slept. Like a lot. 8 hours at night then a good 3-4 hour nap during the day. She was army as well so it seemed normal. In college....uhhh yeah. Sleep was at a premium. She made me wait for sex for 2 days on our honeymoon. And when we did she had something always keeping before we would start. The normal story. Even still during college sex was often. I just rationalized why it couldn’t be that way now. Remember. Humans are not rational. We are rationalizing and we will do so at any cost.

Flash forward, our first year anniversary. I was on deployment. We were talking through some chat room message thing at the time and I told her what I had planned for our first. I had booked a 4 day cabin in some historical town where we were stationed. 18 holes of golf at a internationally known golf course (we used to play), dinners at the best places, the cabin was full of chocolate strawberries, wine.....look.

I get the Red Pill rule of gifts and such to your girl. I do. Yet no one beats me when it comes to taking care of my girl. I don’t, even then, do it out of a sense of getting something out of it. I enjoy the planning, the execution, displaying what I am capable of. I am a master of pulling off amazing things. I derive enjoyment out of her surprise. if it is not appreciated then it’s over, don’t mistake my kindness for weakness. It can easily not happen. Well...somewhere along the lines I lost that and it morphed into doing it to placating her. Not to get sex, oh there was some of that (ie choreplay) but it was more to keep her docile so I could have a peaceful evening or disappear from the house. Again. I was a master at this. Back to the anniversary..... She hated it. Every bit of it. She was pissed primarily because I didn’t clear it with her what I was going to spend. It is still an ongoing theme.

Here I was in the middle of the desert. I executed a brilliant plan from that far away and I get the “how much did yo spend speech”. So the anniversary was spent with her first sleeping the first 12 hours. Missing the golf game, which I played by myself, and then spending the rest watching TV on the couch with her. This is her default “spend time with me”. Fat ass on a couch watching TV. Every night. 7 days a week. The cabin we were in even had a large hot tub in it. One you could almost swim in. Sex was had once and I had to shame her into it, but until; after we watched MASH.

In these years I was a Christian or thought I was in any case. During the time we spent on active duty we were part of the post church. I even considered joining the Chaplains Corps. I volunteered on base to teach the history of Christianity to the church on post. I did this for a few years. She got tired of that church, had a list of reasons and demanded I man up and find us a better place. Ok....maybe she had something there. So I did. Something more in line with what she was used to, which was more of the Holy Spirit Benny Hill kind of thing. And I hate that I just reminded myself of this. Thing is...once I got ensconced in the leadership there...we moved again. This time she decided there wasn't a good church any where and maybe we just worship at home. She always claimed she wanted a man to lead the family. She spoke a good game when it came to males and the role they play in the home. But she didn't accept it. When I tried to lead us in prayer, she would stop me and then proceed to tell me how to do it. What should be done. This for bible study as well. If I picked something out then came the lecture and I didn't consult her.

Thing is I learned quickly that her idea of leadership was that she had final veto over any decision. This is what lead me to trying to appease her. Not just so I could get her back to where we had started but so that she wasn't a raging witch all the time. I desired domestic tranquility.

As I look back any gift I had given her still sits in the the box it came in. She never wears anything I bought her, gave her, or even looks at it to this day. Once I had this brilliant idea. I got a box. A decorative box. I told her that it was her box. Whenever the box was out there was a gift in it for her. I used it one time. She opened it gave me the awww thank you, and closed it. That gift and box are now in the basement storage with a thin layer of dust on it. Remember the gifts...it will come up again.

Her family professes to be extremely faithful. I grew up Catholic, she more nondenominational but leaning more Lutheran. Her mom, whom I believe was a CC Rider in her day, got pregnant in college, married her father. Her dad is an alcoholic, both mom and dad are but the mom only in so far as she HAS to have at least one drink as the definition says. More then one person in the house? It's a party. Bring out the boxed wine. Any way 10 years forward for them and she divorces him because well....her friends were divorcing. TO this day no one really knows why mom divorced dad. My shrew has 2 sisters and a brother. Her mom then spent a few years riding the CC again. Even leaving the kids home alone to do this. My shrew was the oldest at 10 during the divorce and was the one that took care of things. This dynamic has made her and her mom “Friends” instead of mother daughter. So much so that my shrew still chases her mom looking for motherly approval. She will drop everything if her mom is in town. Me? She can’t even be bothered to wake up from her nap when I come home from work.

I have watched her turn something down from me but eagerly accept something form her mom. One time I bought her a new winter coat. Spent good money on it. Something that would last decades. It still sits in the closet with the tag while she wears some wool thing that smells like a barn her mom gave her. Never underestimate the influence a mother has in her daughter. Ever.

Her mom hates men. Not that she doesn’t like men in the biblical sense but she has little good to say of them. While she is 60+ she is attractive for that age group. No grey hair, when she is thinner and decides to dress up she can turn heads, but that would take work and effort. So she doesn’t but she isn’t beyond flirting to get something out of them. Hey it’s not her fault these idiots think they will get something.

She hates her age and tries to emulate the younger daughter. It’s pathetic really. The father is in no way religious. Yet like I said an alcoholic and oddly, the most functional of the family. He’s well off, does well on the stock market now that he is retired and owns 60 acres of prime property in the area he lives. Yet the mom and rest of the family use religion as a tool of karma more than one of salvation. The younger sister is like her mom. Now with 3 kids from 3 different dads. Married and divorced. The middle daughter is in a 15 year LTR, which actually is working from what I can see. The brother is a train wreck. This is a completely different tale but let me just say he is exactly the omega horror story Red Pill says, and then some. He is also why I say and believe that if you are limiting your decisions because of “the kids” or your “marriage” you are doomed for failure. Men must be willing to risk it all in pursuit of their missions. This isn’t to say forsake it all. But risk it. Trust me on this. You can rebuild. If it comes to that. Either you are right, or it won’t be your problem any more.

Back to me.

I got out of the military after a good long while. Mostly for her. Perhaps the greatest regret of my life…and the only one other than getting married. We got pregnant and this is where things got worse. I remember she was 2 months pregnant. WE were living in a very nice apartment talking about when we would start the house hunt. I got up. Got ready for my job, which is a very well paying job, she handed me lunch (which she stopped doing the next day), and as I left she leans out the screen door to the porch and says to me with the most intense hate I have ever seen. “I don’t trust you.” And left it at that. It stuck with me and as I find out was a theme that has played out ever since.

At the time we decided she would have SAHM mom. The cost of day care would literally mean she would work for the privilege of working, her income going to pay day care. Seemed like a good idea at the time this would also allow her to see her mom and family when she wanted without me using vacation time or precious weekend time that I needed to do house things. Reality was altogether different. I ended up driving 4 hours north every weekend. Then sitting in shitty homes while I listened to th cackle of women. Every see the movie Fargo? That’s the kind of décor I am talking about.

During the next 10 or so years we had another child. She had always wanted more but her attitude and overall unattractivness has killed any sexual desire in her. Sex was up and down. Schedules were created and abandoned. The best one was that it was to be Sunday and Thursday. I had to ask before 5pm so she could mentally prepare. Then at 10pm I had to tell it was time to go to bed but not later then 11pm.

She was always solidly in control and I doing a lot to get her into that mindset. There were extremely irrational things that went on. For instance I let her buy a house that was an hour commute for me. She seemed to realize this at the time but soon she demanded to know why it took me so long to get home. To her everything was 20 minutes away. She would call as I sat in traffic and yell because I wasn’t home to take the kids from her. So when we say there is nothing unique here? There isn’t. After working 10 hour days (I got every Friday off for that work schedule) I then had to take care of two kids while she slept until 9pm. Then she would be irritated if I didn’t spend quality time with her on the couch watching TV until midnight. My days home were her days off from the kids. Though I did the cooking cleaning, all the things whether it was a week day or not. I was in hell.

Watch what she does not what she says. She will rationalize her actions but the action itself will never change. One minute it will be because you did it, or the kids, or this or that, and yet the action is never changed it is still the same.

To illustrate the contempt she has for me: total up the number of gifts you have been given by your wife or girl. The total number from day one until now. In the 20 years we have been together I have received exactly 2. One of which was the wedding gift. As point of understanding and not pity she doesn’t remember my birthday. Though it shares the same day as one of her sisters, and she remembers that one. For 8 years I have spent my birthday by myself. I may take the day off work and do what I plan, or tell her I have business trip and I will take a 3 day vacation. My kids are now old enough where they ask when is dad’s birthday or where is dad’s Christmas present. As a point of fun I get a large container of selected nuts from her mom. I am allergic to nuts. I am not sure how I am to take that.

Anyhow, It got to the point where I would purposely not come home on time. Stop by a buddy’s house, or spend time at one of my hobby stores. Anything to delay coming back. I got pretty good at it and oddly dove tailed nicely with what MRP layers out as a plan. So when I say I had a head start, or I had instincts I did. I can create time at a whim now. If I don’t come home for hours it’s not noticed except by my kids. They get a phone call if I choose to be late. Yet I wasn’t doing it for the right reasons nor did I have any goal in mind. I was merely existing during this time. Sex was even worse than starfish. More like zombisih. There were bizarre things here as well. Once when she was giving me a HJ after I begged and she stopped and asked me about the bills. To her this was getting close. IN fact before sex we had to have an in-depth financial review or a long talk about why I was a complete loser. Any way again even before Red Pill I got up and left went to the gym. I did this often as well. Over time I stopped being to finish at all with her and we had no more kids. I had been conditioned by this point to no longer see her as sexual. To this day she believes I have ED and blames me for not being able to have more.

She has no desire to please me in any way. Once she told me during sex that I should accept what she wants to do…..despite the fact it brought me no pleasure. For many years I was denied touching her in certain areas of her body. The reasons changed. Once it was because she was just getting over having kids (for three years?) another time it was because she didn’t trust me, and another ....she just didn’t know. I think at this point it’s been 5 years since we had sex. It was during this...like 2 years in that I found Red Pill. I am now at DL11 and having an affair.

She will also fact check me. Prior to the internet she would call her dad or brother or even her mom in order to confirm something I said. Like repairing the sink. Call dad. Replacing windows...her brother. Then when the internet became a thing and she got a laptop she will look it up. Even as I talk to her she will, to this day, Google for information to make sure. It’s to the point where I don’t even any more.
She stopped being a wife. I stopped being a husband. I accept Red Pill’s assessment that I had/have the relationship I deserve but I have now seen things that make me more realize my situation was more of getting caught by someone who wasn’t worth my time to begin with. Perhaps I did do something early on. My behavior in the middle was certainly blue pill, but while I don’t think I was red nor Alpha I don’t think I was blue at all. I became that way. Women will spend their lives changing you into who they want you to be. Your job is to stop them. It doesn’t matter any way. Yet in this context of religious faith I find the hypocrisy palatable. I am treated with contempt, distrust, and ridicule from someone who was supposed to be the closest to me. This is supported by her mother. Who I know hasn’t liked me from day one. She uses everything she knows about me to bring me down. It hasn’t worked in several years but she still tries. I have reasons for staying at the moment but the time is drawing near. My kids see a father who is strong and there for them.

Recently /u/88Will88 broke down my mission in a post he made. He told me that my mission was to find and master myself. I guess I can’t disagree with it. I have been a Soldier. A Scholar. A Healer. I am working to be an Artist. He told me that not only have I walk a path that few dare, that I also reflect on this path and I am cognizant of the journey I have walked and have yet to walk.

As you can see my journey is not all that different though the terrain is. While society encourages the worse traits in women I also believe upbringing and her mother have influences as well. Some people cannot be lead. This doesn’t stop you from working and making the journey. Some women are not going to respond, some will and still wont stay with you. Their life priorities taking control.

As my iaido Sensei would say. “Sometimes it doesn’t cut. If it did every time, then people would think it is a trick”

AWALT isn’t exactly a sum of everything a woman is but more of a spectrum of behavior. While all women are AWALT, some are more than others.
“You have power over your mind—not outside events. Realize this, and you will find strength.” – Marcus Aurelius think about your day.

You had a hard day at work your morning was rough, I mean who the fuck likes to get up at 5am.

So you take 30 more minutes, skip breakfast but somehow your ass is still moving slow.

Fuck this.

Not enough coffee, traffic made you late, god damn did they re-time the lights?

rapid deadlines and demands stacked up all day

Everyone in the office seemed to be on their periods.

And you forgot your protein shakes, your meals.

you’re starving. So you hit McDonalds. Not like anyone on Reddit will know.

And one meal won’t hurt.

During the commute you remember you had to hit the hardware store.

On the way out you noticed a cart from the store rolling toward a nearby car.

Unfortunately your hands were full all you could do was cringe as it made contact against the paint.

You reassured yourself that there was nothing you could do in time.

Besides it wasn’t your car.

You get home. The wife didn’t go to the store

Fuck. Order pizza. Besides the kids will be happy, they love pizza

And as an alpha in training aren’t you supposed make your kids happy?
The wife seemed happy. No cooking so maybe that was a good decision, after all you made it Maybe you can turn this into getting laid?.

Besides all that other stuff you deserved it, you made the goal weight for this week and early at that.

Pretty soon that despite your presence and brilliant dinner plan the stresses at home take over

You realize all the improvement projects that have to get done, but turn on the TV.

you could get them done but the thought hardly excites you.

Even worse, you realize you still have to go to gym.

Between everything you did today, the things at home piling up it’s probably a waste of time going to the gym. Besides it fucking leg day. Fuck. That.

It’s not like you could focus and work hard enough to make a difference.

See how the negative decisions start to compound your day? Once you start letting that cycle begin it is very difficult to stop.

At each moment there you had a chance to stop and respond better. Without emotion. There was a choice at each moment. Between the flash and the bang.

In martial arts there is what is called a flinch response. It’s the time it takes for your brain to recognize something until our reflexes take over and act. Everyone has one. The professionals reduce this response time. In the military it’s called flash to bang.

You need to learn this and not float from emotional response to emotional response.

Choose the hard right over the easy wrong.
[FR] Be a nice guy with attitude by iamuser5000 | July 7, 2018 | Link

...
I'm going to try to cram several RP skills that helped my SO and I enjoy the best vacation in our lives together. Below is the list of activities with success directly related to RP.

TL;DR - RP/Alpha training, when used 100%, creates amazing dynamics for you personally, in the relationship and socially as seen on our vacation. Key elements: holding frame, OI, direct communication and lifting.

- Flight & Frame - The first leg of our outbound flight was delayed, delayed, delayed again and then cancelled. (A special FU to Spirit Airlines). I've heard that Spirit sucked so I went to the airport with the attitude that they'd screw things up but I wouldn't let it ruin anything for me. I now realize that "holding frame" does not mean being emotionless, but choosing your emotion/outcome. I predetermined to have an amazing vacation, to be happy no matter what... to be a vacation oak. By expecting the worse and setting my goal on "I'm going to be happy" it was easy to deal with the issues. It almost didn't feel like work to hold frame. I responded to every stress with "No worries. We're still going to have a great time!" That's when I really appreciated how much my SO was looking to me for her attitude check. Seeing me remain calm and optimistic definitely encouraged her to do the same. It's the same way a kid will fall, bump their knee then look up to see their parents reaction to see if she should cry or not. My SO commented several times that my frame kept her sane and made all the crap ok.

- Delegate - There were some issues we handled as a team and others we needed to split up for. I delegated clear instructions to her while telling her what I was going to do. BP me, of course, would have debated with her what we should do. Instead, I decided and delegated. She responded with swift, confident action. We rebooked another flight and got where we needed to go. Throughout the entire trip she commented at how amazed she was at our teamwork. We have firmly & overtly established a Captain & First Officer team that we both agree on.

- Room Upgrade - For the hotel, we had booked the most modest room category there. On check in, I decided to see if we could get an upgrade. They had some space open and offered a price. Alpha me decided to haggle. They accepted my offer and we ended up with one of the best rooms in the property for a steal. BP me would have waffled on the expense and ruined it whether I had gotten it or not. RP me knows that I've earned it, I deserve a darn good vacation (by my terms) and I wanted. We enjoyed it guilt-free the whole trip. My SO commented every day there that it was the most amazing room and view she'd ever had on vacation. She couldn't believe that her Alpha man got it. Of course I always playfully avoided her questions about the cost. Why? Because I decided what to do with our money and I wanted to keep the mystery to her about how well I haggled. She loved it.
• Lifting - I have worked hard at the gym and diet for several months to get a beach body to be proud of and it definitely paid off. She likes the muscles and the abs. She was literally giddy every time I got to walk around shirtless. That's why RP men lift. The body tingles her lady bits. She was very very pleased to see her man compared to all the others that had let themselves go.

• AMOG - We went on one big group activity (that was awesome) it involved climbing around outside and swimming. I used this as an opportunity to push myself and soak up every minute outside. There was one part (a rope run) that I turned into a race challenge for the men and won. Watching her smile with pride was so fun. I also jumped up and made decisions for the group when we needed to. Too much group-think and lazy-tourist syndromes could have slowed us down, but (after seeing the success of other RP vacationers) I jumped up, helped to make decisions and we kept the pace.

• Organization - RP men have a plan, a strategy and are organized. I let her plan the basics of the trip months ago when I wasn't on my game. I got all our information organized before the trip and wow'ed her by handling all the travel, transportation, checkin, tours, etc with no hassle because of the organization and my game plan. This helped me to make quick decisions, not waste time and allow both of us to relax during the whole vacation.

• Happy Wife - Not once, but TWICE during the trip, someone made mention of the "Happy wife, happy life" BS. Both times, my SO tried to jump in and correct them. Again, it wasn't me. It was her. She has fully embraced that that line and attitude is crap. I actually had to cut her off from arguing because I knew how futile it was. She get's it. She trusts me to lead and is proud enough to fight the feminist agenda. That's a win in my book.

• Adventure & OI - I booked an excursion for her that I knew she wanted where I would just tag along. It was an all day thing filled with different surprises. She got the heart pumping with some adventure we did together and got to experience something that few people do by herself (I didn't pay for me to go on that part). Give your SO adventure!! At home, on vacation, wherever! Make sure she occasionally get's to do things she's never done. Push her past her limits. Not every vacation can be baby sitting the kid's adventure. She absolutely loved the adventure and adrenalin. She actually came back with something I hadn't counted on. She said that she'd much rather do an adventure WITH me than for me to setup up a special one FOR her. Because of the strength of our team (aka our love), she was very clear that it was not same without me there. BP men like to do things FOR their SO. RP men do things WITH their SO (& solo of course). Also, I had no Covert Contracts about the excursions I booked or money I spent and what she "owed" me later. I stated my desires for her body without any attachment to the money spent. That took stress off of her and made me look like a star instead of a BP-whiney-chump. She determined herself that she owed me a reward.
• Sex - Well... yeah. Plenty of amazing sex. She even proclaimed to a group girls that she had to leave their pool-side chatter early to get back to the room and sex me up. When they whined to her about it, she explained to them how happy and proud she was of me for handling the entire trip and that she was eager to head up and reward me the way that I wanted.

• Forgiveness - There were several things she did like losing a document and forgetting something important. BP me would have used it to harass her a bit about not being mindful. My frame and OI were otherwise. We all make mistakes. She learned a few valuable lessons and it ultimately didn't cost us much. So instead of having a man that berated her, I was happily there to calm her down, let her know it's ok and assist her in fixing the problem herself. That last point is important. I did not fix the problem for her. I assisted in part of the solution that she led. She created the problem, so she needed to feel the pain of having to fix it. I know she learned important lessons and I still got compliments for my frame with her.

SUMMARY: RP skills of lifting, OI, no CC, holding frame (Choose to be happy), acting confident, etc. are for use every single day. At work, at home, on vacation. They're skills not just for you to captain your family, but to lead in any event. They work and everyone is happier for it. I can honestly say that we came back more "in love" than ever before. We have both earned more respect for the other person because we worked as a team thanks to my leadership and her acceptance.
I would never accuse Rollins of being a Beta Bitch (especially to his face) but this article he wrote awhile back is filled with RP philosophy with an emphasis on lifting. Some of you may have read it before, for those that haven't, like anything else here on RP, MRP, etc, it takes 3-4 readings for it to really sink in. Enjoy.

http://www.oldtimestrongman.com/strength-articles/iron-henry-rollins

IRON AND THE SOUL by Henry Rollins "I believe that the definition of definition is reinvention. To not be like your parents. To not be like your friends. To be yourself. Completely.

When I was young I had no sense of myself. All I was, was a product of all the fear and humiliation I suffered. Fear of my parents. The humiliation of teachers calling me "garbage can" and telling me I'd be mowing lawns for a living. And the very real terror of my fellow students. I was threatened and beaten up for the color of my skin and my size. I was skinny and clumsy, and when others would tease me I didn't run home crying, wondering why. I knew all too well. I was there to be antagonized. In sports I was laughed at. A spaz. I was pretty good at boxing but only because the rage that filled my every waking moment made me wild and unpredictable. I fought with some strange fury. The other boys thought I was crazy.

I hated myself all the time.

As stupid at it seems now, I wanted to talk like them, dress like them, carry myself with the ease of knowing that I wasn't going to get pounded in the hallway between classes. Years passed and I learned to keep it all inside. I only talked to a few boys in my grade. Other losers. Some of them are to this day the greatest people I have ever known. Hang out with a guy who has had his head flushed down a toilet a few times, treat him with respect, and you'll find a faithful friend forever. But even with friends, school sucked. Teachers gave me hard time.

I didn't think much of them either.

Then came Mr. Pepperman, my advisor. He was a powerfully built Vietnam veteran, and he was scary. No one ever talked out of turn in his class. Once one kid did and Mr. P. lifted him off the ground and pinned him to the black board. Mr. P. could see that I was in bad shape, and one Friday in October he asked me if I had ever worked out with weights. I told him no. He told me that I was going to take some of the money that I had saved and buy a hundred pound set of weights at Sears. As I left his office, I started to think of things I would say to him on Monday when he asked about the weights that I was not going to buy. Still, it made me feel special. My father never really got that close to caring. On Saturday I bought the weights, but I couldn't even drag them to my mom's car. An attendant laughed at me as he put them on a dolly.

Monday came and I was called into Mr. P.'s office after school. He said that he was going to show me how to work out. He was going to put me on a program and start hitting me in the solar plexus in the hallway when I wasn't looking. When I could take the punch we would know that we were getting somewhere. At no time was I to look at myself in the mirror or tell anyone at school what I was doing. In the gym he showed me ten basic exercises. I paid more attention than I ever did in any of my classes. I didn't want to blow it. I went home that night and started right in.

Weeks passed, and every once in a while Mr. P. would give me a shot and drop me in the hallway, sending my books flying. The other students didn't know what to think. More weeks passed, and I was steadily adding new weights to the bar. I could sense the power inside my body growing. I could feel it.

Right before Christmas break I was walking to class, and from out of nowhere Mr. Pepperman appeared and gave me a shot in the chest. I laughed and kept going. He said I could look at myself now. I got home and ran to the bathroom and pulled off my shirt. I saw a body, not just the shell that housed my stomach and my heart. My biceps bulged. My chest had definition. I felt strong. It was the first time I can remember having a sense of myself. I had done something and no one could ever take it away.

You couldn't say s--t to me.

It took me years to fully appreciate the value of the lessons I have learned from the Iron. I used to think that it was my adversary, that I was trying to lift that which does not want to be lifted. I was wrong. When the Iron doesn't want to come off the mat, it's the kindest thing it can do for you. If it flew up and went through the ceiling, it wouldn't teach you anything. That's the way the Iron talks to you. It tells you that the material you work with is that which you will come to resemble.

That which you work against will always work against you.

It wasn't until my late twenties that I learned that by working out I had given myself a great gift. I learned that nothing good comes without work and a certain amount of pain. When I finish a set that leaves me shaking, I know more about myself. When something gets bad, I know it can't be as bad as that workout.

I used to fight the pain, but recently this became clear to me: pain is not my enemy; it is my call to greatness. But when dealing with the Iron, one must be careful to interpret the pain correctly. Most injuries involving the Iron come from ego. I once spent a few weeks lifting weight that my body wasn't ready for and spent a few months not picking up anything heavier than a fork. Try to lift what you're not prepared to and the Iron will teach you a little lesson in restraint and self-control.

I have never met a truly strong person who didn't have self-respect. I think a lot of inwardly and outwardly directed contempt passes itself off as self-respect: the idea of raising yourself by stepping on someone's shoulders instead of doing it yourself. When I see guys working out for cosmetic reasons, I see vanity exposing them in the worst way, as cartoon characters, billboards for imbalance and insecurity. Strength reveals itself through character. It is the difference between bouncers who get off strong-arming people and Mr. Pepperman.

Muscle mass does not always equal strength. Strength is kindness and sensitivity. Strength is understanding that your power is both physical and emotional. That it comes from the body and the mind. And the heart.

Yukio Mishima said that he could not entertain the idea of romance if he was not strong. Romance is such a strong and overwhelming passion, a weakened body cannot sustain it for long. I have some of my most romantic thoughts when I am with the Iron. Once I was in love with a woman. I thought about her the most when the pain from a workout was racing through my body.

Everything in me wanted her. So much so that sex was only a fraction of my total desire. It was the single most intense love I have ever felt, but she lived far away and I didn't see her very often. Working out was a healthy way of dealing with the loneliness. To this day, when I work out I usually listen to ballads.

I prefer to work out alone.

It enables me to concentrate on the lessons that the Iron has for me. Learning about what you're made of is always time well spent, and I have found no better teacher. The Iron had taught me how to live. Life is capable of driving you out of your mind. The way it all comes down these days, it's some kind of miracle if you're not insane. People have become separated from their bodies. They are no longer whole.

I see them move from their offices to their cars and on to their suburban homes. They stress out constantly, they lose sleep, they eat badly. And they behave badly. Their egos run wild; they become motivated by that which will eventually give them a massive stroke. They need the Iron Mind.

Through the years, I have combined meditation, action, and the Iron into a single strength. I believe that when the body is strong, the mind thinks strong thoughts. Time spent away from the Iron makes my mind degenerate. I wallow in a thick depression. My body shuts down my mind.

The Iron is the best antidepressant I have ever found. There is no better way to fight weakness than with strength. Once the mind and body have been awakened to their true potential, it's impossible to turn back.

The Iron never lies to you. You can walk outside and listen to all kinds of talk, get told that you're a god or a total bastard. The Iron will always kick you the real deal. The Iron is the great reference point, the all-knowing perspective giver. Always there like a beacon in the pitch black. I have found the Iron to be my greatest friend. It never freaks out on me, never runs. Friends may come and go. But two hundred pounds is always two hundred pounds.
I recently read Jordan's 12 Laws. Frankly it's the first thing I have read or even seen of Peterson's work. I decided that I better get up to speed with what all the "kids were talking about". I was not expecting much. I am not usually impressed when someone claims they have condensed everything I need to know into simplistic rules or laws, or whatever. There's way too much synergy in life for it to be condensed into a simple set of guidelines. Yet when everyone on the internet started on the 12 laws/rules bandwagon I had to find out what this was.

At the bottom I listed JPs laws. I am not going to talk law by law as he does it. Each Law is a chapter with cute stories and anecdotes. Sometimes you wonder if he is going to make his point. What I am going to attempt here is give a general impression of the book.

The book has a lengthy intro. A lot of back patting and explaining how this came to be. I skipped it after a few pages. It could be titled humble brag. The first chapter was quite good. In fact it's the only thing worth reading. The chapter discusses dominance in nature and how our posture and physical presence sets the stage for many things. Including beginning stages of frame. his metaphor of choice is Lobsters. Being a simple creature he discusses the chemical changes in the brain and the resultant attitude adjustments when a lobster is defeated or is victorious. The same with men. Except that men can change that attitude and the first is your presence.

The first rule is about changing your demeanor and how that along can begin a path of confidence and assertiveness. Remember as a kid you parents telling you to stand up straight? That's the idea. In fact it really aligns well. While I wouldn't tell a newbie here to stand up straight vs lifting, the net effect of lifting is better posture. We are telling you to lift in order to build confidence, a look. To learn what hard work really is.

After that the rules are simply a homogenized breakdown of some very basic elements. It all becomes some sort of very soft purple pill at best description of what a man should do. I say men because that is whom his message has been targeted at, BUT this book is a wide audience target. These elements are then further simplified in how a man interacts with his world. Not much about mindset changing and how to be your point of origin and certainly nothing the basic tenant of Red Pill which is Rule Zero. Jordan doesn't even mention this basic drive only that a dominant male gets the mate he wants. Technically true but as we know even a dominant male can be made beta if he doesn't understand the feminine nature.

As the rules go on they tend to get fluffier until the last one, which even Peterson slightly admits was there for fun. Petting kitties? really? Some rules are even semi redundant.

He also makes a mention in dealing with Chaos men seek and create order. He makes soft statement using Traditional Chinese philosophy that Chaos is Female and Order is Male (Yin Yang), but that's where it stops. He does say that to hold back Chaos a man requires routine. Discipline. But again he stops there. This alone would make a fantastic book or post. BUT it would be largely masculine in nature. We are the ones that create routine and order within our homes. It is this alone that does it. This is the overall theme of the book. In fact it’s the core of Peterson’s philosophy. Men seek and create order from Chaos. Trouble is Peterson doesn’t see it that way Red Pill does. While I am sure Peterson would avoid the topic my gut feeling is that his undeclared premise is that men must seek Order through harmony with his environment. This is the natural order of the philosophy he touches on. Balance. Yin Yang. Unlike Red Pill which essentially seeks each man finding his own path and masculinity. At a surface level these things seem similar but they are vastly different.

If you really want to understand what Peterson is driving at learn more about Traditional Chinese theory on Yin Yang. It makes sense given what RP know, but it’s not in line. At all. You can derive something from it, but like so much we know. Take what’s useful throw away the rest.

If you need a simple set of anything it can be boiled to this:

1. Establish your frame
2. Be a Man of Value and seek Value
3. Be Attractive Don't be Unattractive
4. Have Abundance in All things (from women, to friends, to resources)

That's it. Do those things and you can then enter the next stage of understanding women and achieving your goals. In fact this is a life long pursuit. You will alter and change. You may have setbacks. It’s all part of the process, yet these steps don't change. We chop them up into Dread levels so it’s easier for a married man to implement but those 3 things are essential to a man to grow the right mindset.

Here are Jordan's Rules against Chaos in case you are curious. I could go into a complete Red Pill refutation of each of these rules. Yet I don’t have the energy. Needless to say this book is a watered down version of a lot of what JP talks about. Of course, marketing to just men is half the potential of profit so as I said there’s a lot of fluff in here.

I would not read this with an eye towards red pill. I would pick it up as another book that may have a couple nuggets in it. Again, Chapter one is pretty good just from the biology discussion alone. So I am headed back to the store to return this.

JPs rules

Rule 1: Stand Up Straight With Your Shoulders Back Rule 2: Treat Yourself Like Someone You Are Responsible for Helping Rule 3: Make Friends with People Who Want the Best For You Rule 4: Compare Yourself to Who You Were Yesterday, Not Who Someone Else is Today
Rule 5: Do Not Let Your Children Do Anything that Makes You Dislike Them
Rule 6: Set Your House in Perfect Order Before You Criticize the World
Rule 7: Pursue What is Meaningful (Not What is Expedient)

Rule 8: Tell the Truth, or at least Don’t Lie

Rule 9: Assume that the Person You Are Listening to Might Know Something You Don’t

Rule 10: Be Precise in Your Speech

Rule 11: Do Not Bother Children when they are Skateboarding

Rule 12: Pet a Cat When You Encounter One on the Street
What are you running from, Captain-sav-a-ho?

by UEMcGill | April 29, 2016 | Link

I was listening to the Joe Rogan Podcast today, and he said something that resonated with me (Joe fucking kills it; he’s pretty insightful if you get a chance, listen). His basic statement was he has buddies that are out there trying to save a girl from her problems. His guest Eddie Huang dropped the line, “Yeah like captain-sav-a-ho.”

The biggest insight was a small blurb of a comment that may have been the best line out of it. Joe said to paraphrase, ‘Yeah I think my friends like that are focused on saving these girls because they are running from what really needs to be fixed, themselves.’

Think about that and let that set in. How many guys do you know who have been the captain-sav-a-ho? I had a direct report who showed up to the office one day with a woman who looked like she’d been a truck stop hooker for 3 decades. We had a pretty loose office, so bringing the kids by to see work or maybe a new fiancé to meet everyone wasn’t uncommon. He’d wanted in on some of the office glory and was excited to show off. We found out more backstory later, she was a single mom (red flag 1), she had 3 different baby-daddies (red flag 2), and she was moving in with this guy as a ‘friend maybe more will develop’ situation.

Now this guy that worked for me was an excellent technician. He was a rule follower and loyal to me and the department to a fault. He was in the job I need him to be, and he followed it to the letter of the law and with great detail. We kept him a deep dark hole for a reason though; for the most part he was a troll. Every office has them. They bury them in the mail room, or IT, or maybe facilities, but they’re there, hidden under the bridges of the office infrastructure doing dirty, but necessary work. He had been known to say inappropriate things and was forced to take several “re-training” classes.

Sitting around the lunch table we found out she was going to move in with him and the house he inherited from his mom. She was going to let him get her a mini-van to drive around the fuck trophies, and he could be their insta-dad. It was going to be a great deal for him. He even said that she would ‘take things slow’ and ‘they could date and learn to be proper boyfriend and girlfriend’. Sounds great right?

This was the same guy who dated so infrequently we had running bets that he probably had a lifelike sex doll. He was not very savvy with women or people in general. He once bragged all week that he had a date with a girl his aunt set him up with. The next Monday we asked how it went and he was pissed. Evidently he took her out for a nice meal, told her to order lobster and the works and then drove her straight to his place assuming she’d fuck him. He swore off dating after that.

Yet here he was moving some trailer park ho into his house with the promises of maybe dating, but all the responsibilities of being a father and a husband? Here he was ready to fucking go all in, to the point where he was mentioning marriage in a couple of years. He definitely was going to be a great captain-sav-a-ho. He talked about how she had a rough life of it, how her last baby-daddy had beat her and sold all the shit for meth or something or other. He could get her on her feet and she’d turn into a great little wifey.

As he was my direct report he came to me for a vacation request, he needed 2 weeks to go down, pack her up and bring her and her stuff back up north. I made sure we had coverage and told him to go for it. A month later when he was scheduled to go down I got a Monday morning phone call. “Can I cancel my vacation?” was all he asked.

It seems she was still shopping options and at the last minute balked, she found a better deal that allowed her to stay in place and probably added some chad dick on top of it. He was devastated and couldn’t understand what happened. I was young and didn’t understand the real implications. I tried to reason with him, tell him to find a better girl next time, that kind of bullshit. He told me, “Guys like me don’t have many chances.” I haven’t seen him in 10 years, but I bet he’s still the same, still single and hidden in the basement of the office.

In my older life I realize, it wasn’t the quality of woman he was choosing. Circling back to Joe’s comment I realize, it was the things in his life that needed to be fixed that brought a woman like that in his life. His social awkwardness, his low smv are all things he could have improved (for you oldschool guys think Horshack on Welcome Back Kotter). Hell, he may not have been able to move to a 10 but surely a move from a 3 to a 5 would change the pool of girls available. There was no shortage of nice Jewish girls his aunt was always trying to fix him up with, he just couldn’t function like an adult to deal with them correctly. No, the biggest problem in his life was himself.

We all know that guy right? We look disdainfully on the woman, on the Ho, and say things like, “She’s such a leech”. We look at that guy and say, “Man you need to run like a motherfucker. This will only end in tragedy” and yet we watch it over and over again. Hell some of you might be that guy. The real question we need to ask is “what is my friend, Captain-sav-a-ho, running from?” What deep flaw is he afraid to fix? Every one of us has some sav-a-ho complex in us. We do the easy things, instead of the right things. We toil away organizing the basement, instead of going to the gym. We stay in our room at the conference instead of going down and meeting new people. We placate our wives instead of having a tough conversation about her bad behavior. My former employee is an extreme example and everyone surely can see that, but it’s the little things in life we tend to miss. We’d rather work on someone else’s shit, instead of fixing ourselves first. So the next time you find yourself toiling away on some make work bullshit, or in the extreme being captain-sav-a-ho, ask yourself what am I avoiding fixing?
Many of us work jobs and we find this little corner of the internet and learn the world is our oyster, not something to beg for. Naturally your new found leadership at home will bleed into other areas of your life, and with this comes turbidity. You quickly start seeing things for what they are, not as they are. You quickly learn that most of the middle management in your company are true blue pills. As you strike out and up, you learn things are not always as they seem but this post will help you put some tools in your toolbox. Today, as someone in executive leadership, I will share with you some of the harsh realities of private sector business.

Fuck Loyalty - Law 39

Many of you think that if you are loyal to your company and do your job better than anyone else. The company will recognize and magically owe you something. The company actually owes you nothing. You are a spoke on the wheel. Your have your job through the law of laziness. It's simply easier to keep you on than it is to replace you. Replacing an employee is more costly and expensive than moderately satisfying the existing employee. The upside of this is that the wheel is always turning. If people around you are not telling you that you should be a manager, it's time to rethink your choices.

The company will fire you tomorrow, lay you off next week by conference call, and will not give you the courtesy of letting you know beforehand. Why then are we stuck in this role?

For most of you, stuck in your dead in non-leadership job, the only way out of this position is to change companies. Many people I have spoke to simply do not want to change jobs because of the sunken cost fallacy. The others just want the security (false assumption) that they currently enjoy. You cannot be either one of these employees if you want to succeed in the game called life. The option simply isn't there. For those of you who kept reading you now have the shortcut to success. The shortcut is not easy, because if it was, it would be called the way. Polish up your resume, embellish it a bit, and come up with a plan to sell it. You need to make sure you have references, fake or not, to back up what you are saying. In most US states, by law the HR department can only reveal your last title, salary, and employment dates. If you can sell your title of "Permit Issuance" to a management position where you lead a team of inspectors to check on permitting status. The other company has no way to know. Your irrational confidence will sell it.

Lastly, always be loyal to your direct report and their direct report.

Reputation - Law 5

Reputation is the only important thing in your career. Nothing else matters and no one looks at HOW you did it, they only look at the RESULT. With my direct reports I have never dug into the details. You are assigned a project, and it gets completed with great results or it fails. You absolutely must cultivate respect and grow it like a rare flower.
I have found in life that most people don't know how to grow a reputation. They have no clue how to do this. There are easy ways to start your reputation and there are even easier ways to grow it. When you realize that absolutely everything you do will affect in negative and positive ways, the idea is to start achieving a net gain. Let's start a small bullet point list of things you can start doing today. You absolutely must achieve a me first attitude and drop the nice guy attitude.

- Failure is never an option, everything succeeds at high quality. Period. If you can't do that, don't bother.
- People need to know about your accomplishments. Market them.
- Ask the stakeholders to email your superiors and let them know whether they liked or hated your work. Make sure you don't get a negative comment.
- Cultivate accomplishments. People think in snapshots, let them all be wins.
- When your rivals are failing, let them fail, and if you can do it clandestinely, help it fail.
- If your rival asks for help, deliver it in the most smallest accountable way you can do it in the manner that you help.

Control the Options - Law 31

Continuing the saga of promoting at your current company there are some things you can control. You need to control them but not be seen to be in control. This is typically where you have already made your bed as a worker and you are trying to turn it into a management position. This could even be a promotion but you should be warned that some jobs people just do not promote from.

When dealing directly with other colleagues in your company it is very difficult. How do you motivate a colleague who does not want to be motivated? By finding what they like and play your choices you give them to their preferences. Many people just simply do not have the time to stop and think about the choices and wish to quickly give you an option. Beware the person who stops to think, they are the real threat.

Five Year Plan - Laws 28 and 29 - Goals without dates are called dreams

Story time. One year ago I made a five year plan for me. No other options existed and I only concentrated on my needs purely. Yes, as you know, I have a wife and children. I chose to make my MAP without their needs considered at all. Here are my five things I wanted to happen for myself.

1. Rebuild my current home, or find a new one in the Galleria.
2. Find a C-Level job.
3. Set up private schools for my children.
4. Make my own retirement.
5. Buy a new truck, the current one has seen better days.

As everyone knows, my house was destroyed by Harvey. I spent my hurricane days rescuing stranded people with volunteers from work. My family went back to Austin with her parents and I stayed behind to help. Upon returning home there was nothing left. We went to stay at my late grandfathers ranch (was in the process of selling) and we spent some of the best months of our lives. I realized that where we lived and how we lived was detrimental to our growth as a family unit. The house is rebuilt and we are still looking for a new house in the Galleria. Needless to say, the ranch will stay in our family and will turn into our winter home. We spent time finding schools and transportation for our children, that is handled.

Next up, and yeah I know its only year one but once I get started on something I am like a dog with a bone. My wish was to get a C-Level job and move up from division president. The problem is at my company there is no room for me to move up and the current leadership has no issue with things as they currently are. There was no weakness to attack. I was not vested in the company and was not in the league to get voting stock. The options were sealed. My job was simply to do the same job for the next 30 years or hope someone died early.

How do you get interviews? Use the words in your resume to match the job requirements or find out and befriend those who can pass along your resume.

This led me to seek employment outside of what I am currently doing. My prime management skills are in construction or environmental management. Therefore I needed to seek options outside of the current corporate environment. I applied selectively to some open positions and interviewed at all three companies for upper level management. One of the options was a non-starter, it was working with the royal family so that's a dead end. The other two were right up my alley and had much older folks in the C-level jobs. Now how to exploit my current company with the other two companies?

Reputation. I am known throughout my business area as a hard charger and especially known for my quality of work. In the old days as a Department Manager, when you saw my name on the work scope, that pretty much sold the job. Pulling off the impossible was my specialty, and that had 100% to do with my core group of employees. We were known. Those days are over, and only the ancient remember this.

One of the companies dismissed me on the interview process, and I thought the job was lost. Simply a manager of the company, but the options were there because of the C-level age. In the next decade at least two of them were going to be dead or retired. That's more time than I need to handle my business. I went to the interview and I sold myself for exactly who I was thinking that the position wasn't going to happen. Just a dream. Then I got a notice that I was not being considered for the position.

Several weeks later I got a phone call from the CEO asking me to meet him. Our schedules happened to intersect at the DIA airport and we had a chance for an interview for COO. He knew who I was from the past and exactly what I had to offer. We planned a vacation in Cabo with our families that I just returned from.

My current CEO was informed and he was completely floored. Then as we got to talking he knew he just couldn't offer what I could find somewhere else. The path to the C-Level there didn't exist for me and to be fair I was more then fairly compensated and I had points on the gross profit. My salary was directly in my control. They offered more money but he knows I am not working for money, just ambition.
In the end, the boldness my action with a solid plan has paid off in two fold. Either way I decide, I am doing it from a position of power with new understandings on both sides. My choice is not made yet and I hope to take the COO job as I shore up living arrangements and travel assignments. The new office may not be in this country.

The only reason I had the cake and got to eat it? Fuck loyalty. Go out there and get what you want, Amazon Now won't deliver it to your door.
What an exciting few days, huh? We had a subset of our subscriber base go full retard and retreat into the lobby of the Matrix to convince themselves they can do reality in a kind, "non-toxic" way. Best of luck to them. (Faggots.)

As advertised, I'd like to offer my perspective on what we do here, and how it is amoral, and how that does not equate to immoral.

I think that analogies and allegories are always helpful, so let's use one: firearms. The anti-gun types will always say firearms are dangerous and evil and most be gotten rid of. Regardless of how you feel about that statement, people who understand the science of Ethics realize that objects aren't evil, people are. Objects can be dangerous to your health, objects can be volatile (such as chemical compounds that do spontaneous things), objects can be generally harmful. But evil, and the related, immoral, are words that apply to people. We may talk colloquially and say that some situation is "evil" but what we really mean is that it the people who created that situation are evil or that the outcome is really bad.

Ideas are things, guys. They are not inherently moral or immoral, are not in and of themselves good or evil. They are thoughts, abstract concepts. So when we talk about cheating as an option for married guys you have to have the maturity and sophistication of thought to say to yourself, "Gee, let's explore that idea without infusing my own feelings/values/ethics onto it." You can think and talk about the right way to build a custom rifle, the right ammo to use, and the best way to set up a sniper's den in an urban environment, without actually intending to get a gun, buy any ammo, or hurt anyone at all. So it goes with strategies for getting laid as a man that you might entertain as morally repugnant or, for whatever reason, not something you'd do.

You're free to ignore/not participate in those types of discussions. What you don't get to do here is moralize about why it's always and everywhere bad according to your moral code. Even if you think your moral code is the most right rightness that ever made it to the top of Correctness Peak on Moral Mountain. Fuck you, there will be people who don't agree, and none of us are here for a moral lesson or theological debate.

So if you don't want to be called a "cuck" a "faggot" or similar -- don't wade into these things with the intent of saving sinners from themselves. If cheating is really going to hurt a guy because his frame is weak or he has sloppy opsec or he is just a plain moron, then you say "Hey buddy, you're a fucking moron and you're going to get caught." You don't say, "Cheating never ends well and you're not a real man for even thinking about it!"

Can you all see the difference now? The first says, "Well, if you've never shot before, are afraid of guns, and can't tell the barrel from the stock, a sniper rifle is not for you." The second says, "Guns are evil and their use always ends in tragedy!"

If you can't handle dispassionate discussion of strategies and tactics, and insist on both limiting your tool chest and agonizing over possibilities, go to r/realpha or r/rpchristians and you can get deep in the weeds about whatever you want.
Some recent askMRP threads have inspired me to review a well-known theory from social psychology: the Triangular Theory of Love. This clever theory (best summed up by the picture) talks about the three elements of human relationships, and shows you how the combinations of those things lead to different versions of "love".

On the corners of the triangle are Passion, Intimacy, and Commitment, the three basic elements. These elements and combinations of them define relationships. For example, if you have only Intimacy, you have a friend. If you have Passion and Intimacy, you have "Romantic" love (a FWB). Intimacy and commitment gives "Companionate" love, and Passion plus Commitment yields "Fatuous Love" (fucking a girl you're committed to, but don't actually like). What the theory assumes is that everyone wants to be inside the triangle, with all three elements, known as "Consummate" love.

(Now if at this point you're saying to yourself "What the hell is this guy on about?" then go to the link above and look at the picture on the Wiki page. It will all make sense, I swear.)

Too many of the new guys lately are caught in Companionate (at best) or Empty love (at worst). Companionate is the most common dead bedroom scenario. The relationship is still civil, but the sex is gone (no Passion). Empty love is where the couple is not only not having sex, but they've started living separate lives, fighting, etc. The woman is checked out, and the dude is left committed to... a dead dream. The woman is doing what she can to get him to kill the puppy or just living her life however she wants while the financial support lasts. You guys know who you are. You're probably cringing at your keyboard right now reading this.

So what is MRP's goal then? Is it to get you inside the triangle, to Companionate love? Is it to slide you over to the left so you have "Romantic" love (sex without commitment, e.g. plates)? Nope and nope. The question is wrong. MRP doesn't have goals, dummy. MRP is a collection of tools, and also the name of a stupid internet text board where we share those tools. Nothing less, nothing more. The goals have to come from you.

Looking at that triangle, only you can decide where you want to be on it with your relationship(s). But I'm willing to bet that looking at that diagram and the implications each location on it has, most of you want to be in the middle with your wives (what most of us originally wanted from a marriage), on the left edge (FWBs and long-time plates), or on the lower left corner (Passion only = ONS). Anywhere else is either dealing with crazy or not getting laid.

Given that, why are so many of you settling for anything less?
TL;DR: Wife traded down after years of unsuccessful motivation to match my awesomeness. Ideas?

I recently caught my stay at home wife of 10 years having an online affair with a dude half way across the country. She was emotionally invested entertaining thoughts of “love” at points, chatting pretty much all day long, sending sexual pics and videos while I was at work and in bed. At one point, we were a 2 hour drive from this guy and they had thought of meeting and had made future plans to meet. /u/BluepillProfessor asked for a field report on discussion surrounding my wife trading down.

I’ve done a ton of research on this guy – if you have never been through this before, certain personalities need different information about the affair to properly process it all. Unfortunately, I’m one of the types that needs information, everything. The things I’ve found out:

1. He’s been to prison for domestic violence causing serious injury and on a most wanted list.
2. He’s addicted to porn (wakes up in the middle of the night to jack off).
3. He doesn’t have car insurance.
4. He’s an anti-vaxxer.
5. He’s 5'5, fat with moobs, thuggy, and an interesting race (not black).
6. He’s poor as fuck and lives in basically a shack with zebra print sheets.
7. He’s insecure about his dick (below average).
8. He’s probably an alcoholic as he often passes out drunk.
9. He “needed” my wife.

I was able to find out a lot about this guy’s personality because of the emotional nature of the affair. They would confide in each other and receive validation from each other. He is 100% a loser and my wife was too. My wife:

1. Exhibits BPD behavior but is “depressed”.
2. Had a shitty childhood with big time Daddy issues.
3. Addicted to validation.
4. Terrible self-esteem and 100% negative self-talk.
5. Lazy as fuck.

My wife and I had been extremely fat and gross since we met. Now I am a fit, athletic god among men with bicep peaks and a 6 pack through my extra skin and she is still obese. Four years into our ten year marriage I found Athol Kay and changed my life gradually. It took me 5 or so years to become who I am today physically and put tons of effort into revamping my entire life from top to bottom.

The journey was mostly great with multiple main event style fights. We enjoyed periods of true happiness, crazy sex, another child, and great enjoyment. She has always lagged behind in self-improvement and had not followed my lead as much and fell back into bad habits every step of the way. Athol says that she will follow your example and that had been mostly true for the most part but she never put it all together to make that final push into respectability.

The real differences started showing up when I made my last push to sub 15% body fat. The differences were too big to ignore for her and she started getting very nervous. She told me that she was scared that every time I spoke to her was going to be the time where I blurted out “I want a divorce”. The various ways I led her:

1. By example. My diet and dedication to lifting, running, and athletics are unsurpassed.
2. I have maintained memberships for her at two different gyms with childcare.
3. I have personally accompanied her to said gyms and trained her in the basics of lifting.
4. I adjusted my diet to follow her fad diet ideas to foster shared struggle (whole 30).
5. I forced the family to eat chicken and broccoli every day for 3 months (even I got sick of it).
6. Imposed my healthy diet for family dinners.
7. Tried punishments for diet fuck ups, laziness and missed workouts.
8. Tried checking in on her progress constantly.
9. Fostered dread at every chance. Basically I can’t get away from beautiful women approaching me and never passed up the opportunity to do it in front of her.
10. Communicated to her at times that this wasn’t working for me and that it was imperative for her to do better.
11. Promised her a boob job and lift when she reached her goals.
12. Would directly confront her laziness about housework, personal issues, laziness etc.

Eventually after years of trying – she got tired of trying to fix her shit and hamster-ed that my family would be better off without her. I also got tired of trying and resigned myself to the fact that I would be married to a subpar woman. I made this realization gradually but did make the decision to stay in the marriage.

She wanted the person she was with to love her for who she was and think the other put the stars in the sky, as she said. The sex, of course, never stopped at any point.

Things I have learned:

1. Therapy - Therapy - Therapy
2. Be better at making sure she is taking her medication - count pills.
3. Don't start fucking off comfort tests if you want to stay married.

Clearly – I’m not perfect – I’m sure I made my mistakes, but I’m interested in hearing ideas on how a guy can foster matching discipline and personal growth in your wife during and after a RP transformation.
Are you a man-child?

I was. I couldn’t manage to register for college classes on time... in my master’s degree program. I had a dad bod before I was a dad. My friends knew me as the guys who would disappear when he got a girlfriend. I wallowed in existential confusion and social anxiety for years. My feelings were not to be messed with, even playfully, unless you wanted a butthurt, sulking, angry man-child passive-aggressively whining about how he’s not respected.

Thank god I’m past all that now. But I’ve seen a limit on the impact my improvement has on my wife. I’ve been working on myself for over two years, and it’s gotten good... but never great. So here’s my theory:

The precedent you set early in the relationship correlates to the level of alpha that she is comfortable with.

Don’t get me wrong; both my wife and I have come a long way. I got dangerously close to a visible six pack (damn my discipline plunging over the holiday). She regularly complimented my style, smell, and physique. She now reacts to my groping and ass-slapping with a playful coyness. On top of that, I’m leading in household operations, decision making, money management, man-projects and remodels, and I’m starting a business that will make us lots of money in short order. All the ducks are lined up, right?

Except the attraction is only emotion-deep; it does not lead to real, lasting, paradigm-shifting desire. She still sees the act of sex as an obligation. Once we start having sex, 50% of the time she is surprised by how much she enjoys it and says, “we should do that more often”. The precedent was not a sexual alpha man in the beginning, and so I will never be a sexual alpha man to her. I am just a more responsible, sexier, blue pill family man. Best of both worlds for her, bad deal for me.

You never get a second chance to make a first impression.

How fucking true is that? I suppose, over years of time, someone could change their perceived identity entirely and manage to not lose loved ones in the process, but it’s rare. Wherever you started, you’ve got a certain number of degrees of alpha you can rise before you hit a glass ceiling and shit either won’t be effective or, worse, might work against you. People are stubborn creatures who hate change. There’s a chance that your wife was so satisfied with blue-pill-you that her hamster wouldn’t let her understand that you are now able to satisfy the other side of her sexual strategy. It’s just not who you ever were to her, so she can’t imagine it.

Yes, I’m suggesting that those of you MRPers whose wives are really digging in their heels aren't married to bitches, you just started as bitches yourselves. You’re encountering severe resistance as you try to become someone you’ve never been. Good luck with that. Seriously.

I’m not being negative. I’m being truthful. Just like my drug-addicted clients will never be heart surgeons, a fully blue man will never be a peak alpha, at least in his wife’s eyes. She knows too much.

---

So here’s solution talk.

Is this something we must accept and make the best of? Or should we bail and find someone we can set a new precedent with? Or somewhere in the middle (i.e., cheating or open marriage)?

It’s up to you 100%. Some of you are humble enough to realize you screwed up, or were screwed up by your upbringing, and in a desire to remain a man of their word you stay married and enjoy the improvements, such as they are. You’ve weighed the options and would rather salvage your family with good-enough results.

Others, like me, are selfish and want more, now that we’ve realized our wasted potential. If this is the one life we have, why wouldn’t we achieve the absolute best we can, even if it means burning it all down and starting over? Nip that sunk cost fallacy in its ugly little ass. It’s a matter of weighing the comfort of now against the possibility of better, which is a very cut and dry process when you get to it.

Whichever path you choose, if you're improving yourself, you'll be better for it, no matter the outcome.

Last minute add on, and the point of this post: I want to help the men this applies to reach this realization sooner so they don't waste time trying to make something happen that will never happen. I had to learn this through meditation and lots and lots and lots of thinking. Hoping to save some guys the trouble.

---

PS, if you're that alpha-turned-beta and you're tempted to say that's not how real RP works, or that I’m just making excuses, or that I’m not alpha enough or haven't led enough, kindly fuck off since you don’t know what the fuck you’re talking about.

---

Edit: My kind of post. Minimal upvotes, but over 150 comments. Good discussion. Granted, most of those are u/scurvemuch and I flirting, but still.
Great DB post: Guy stumbles into RP and saves himself and marriage by exbp | April 21, 2015 | Link

Post is here

TL;DR Guy becomes nearly suicidal as marriage descends into complete deadbedroom. RedisCOVERS his own needs, buries his depression at the gym, achieves OI and dread, retakes the captain's chair.

His own tl;dr:

Ignored my wife. Worked on myself. That fixed my marriage.

Edit: Adding new link to original post: https://archive.is/pyYTz
I finally did it, I swallowed the redpill. Too little too late. Fast forward through the summer. Things were ok. But she said she wanted

by Cookiepottipuss | December 12, 2015 | Link

Last April my wife cheated on me. All the signs were there. All of a sudden she started losing weight. Very particular with her phone. Buying gum. All things she had not done since we had been together which has been about 3 years. I caught her as she is not very tech smart. She did the crying, the saying I am sorry, all the typical stuff. I...begged her to stay. I did not do the 180 like I should have. I became even more clingy, begging for sex, not taking control. I became the woman of the house. I became a pussy. I became a pussy when I found out she was pregnant with our first and lost focus of who I was. I contributed to this.

Fast forward through the summer. Things were not ok. In my head I believed they were.I realize that now. We didn't have sex. She didn't want me. She did it out of obligation and unless she was drunk. The sex was fucking horrible.

I found this forum about a month ago. I read the sidebar. I read the books. I started realizing that I was a pussy. I had become the biggest pussy I had ever know without even realizing it. Fuck all that. The person I am now is not me. I got back in the gym. I started working out. I started to analyze her shit tests and tell her no. She fought me about it. I had a MAP. I was at negative dread. So I started to put my foot down but it was too little too late.

I knew something was up when she spent 3 hours getting ready to go the mall. She came home and her hair was in a pony tail and she smelled like sex. I wanted to engage her and push her buttons and told her that night that if things don't change that I am done.

I intercepted a text on her cell phone.

Her: Hey Him: What's up Her: What't the plan? Him: To be inside you

I kicked her ass out. I told her to get her shit or it would be out on the driveway. She didn't have to go. But she did. She left me with the kids. A friend of mine is a divorce lawyer. I am getting an awesome deal.

I would not have done this if I had not read and read and found this forum.

So to everyone who contributed to this forum. Thank you.

Now this is about my kids and myself. And we are going to be fucking awesome moving forward.
Confidence is the reason Lifting is the first brick you lay in the foundation of the new ‘Alpha’ you.

by TrainingTheBrain | April 17, 2015 | Link

If you don’t believe in you, then why should your family??

Fitness is the first brick we are laying in the foundation from which you are building the new you. The reason for that is Fitness provides the most immediate effect on your psyche. Simply put - Iron doesn’t lie.

Either you can lift it or you can’t there is no place for your rationalization. Are you strong enough? Yes or No? Why?

The confidence that you will gain through your relationship with the iron will lead to a newly found believe in your sense of self. You will know your body more intimately than ever before. You will know what you are capable of and the strength you are developing will be noticed by those around you.

The commitment needed to enter the gym day in and day out is fitness for your mind. You develop more self-discipline and remove the instant gratification that plagues many ‘men’ out there. The simple act of going to the gym is, in itself, improving your ‘self’.

So let us be completely honest here. Are you working out as hard as you can? Are you lying in bed at night thinking Tomorrow I will take action and start working towards removing this flab - then waking up and not making any progress towards that goal?

You are a Man, act like it.

Embrace the pain of lifting. You cannot move forward until you complete step one and I will be honest, there have been more than a few times that guys on this sub have said I’m not building attraction / Dread isn’t working / We still aren’t having sex yet when the question of Do you lift is asked, the answer is almost always a solid NO.

You must lift weights and build that sense of self satisfaction. When you hit that PR you will think, I did that through hard work and then you’ll realize that just like you did the work by yourself for that PR you also walk this path on your own and will only reap the rewards of sex and a solid marriage through your daily efforts.

It isn’t motivation you need, it is self-discipline.

Motivation burns like a match. Hot and fast. You can get it from a speech or a YouTube video, but it doesn’t translate well to self-improvement. You will only make progress when you take that match of motivation and use it to light the ‘Log of Discipline’.

At that point you make progress and see those long term gains.
Stop living in denial and thinking being 30lbs overweight is normal. Or, that being a Dad means you can have a beer gut. You need to be strong and in shape, there’s no excuse for your lack of vascularity or any indication of having abdominal muscles, it’s just laziness.

My brother in law took This Photo of me yesterday. (he took it without my knowledge because he thought it would look cool which it does. I proceeded to call him a fag for taking pics while lifting) but regardless of how gay it is to take photos while hitting the iron, I sent it to my wife while she was at work.

Her reply was that it looked fucking hot and when she got home we role played Personal Trainer and Client with some awesome sex.

Your wife watches what you do. If you are repeatedly making excuses as to why you aren't in shape, she sees you as a weak bitch.

Stop being that weak bitch and take action.

If you want the MRP philosophy to work, then you need to stop rationalizing the Iron away like a woman, and get your ass in shape. Only then will the rest of the benefits of being a masculine Family Alpha fall into place.

Set the example for your wife, kids, and other men to follow. Be the standard from which excellence will be measured.

EDIT Formatting
Book Suggestion: "Can't Hurt Me" by David Goggins
by ChokingDownRP | February 10, 2019 | Link

I first heard of this guy on Joe Rogan's podcast, but the author of this book is a bona fide badass. From Amazon:

"David Goggins is a retired Navy SEAL and the only member of the U.S. Armed Forces ever to complete SEAL training, U.S. Army Ranger School, and Air Force Tactical Air Controller training. Goggins has competed in more than sixty ultra-marathons, triathlon, and ultra-triathlons, setting new course records and regularly placing in the top five. A former Guinness World Record holder for completing 4,030 pull-ups in seventeen hours, he's a much-sought-after public speaker who's shared his story with the staffs of Fortune 500 companies, professional sports teams, and hundreds of thousands of students across the country."

I thought it worth submitting to the MRP community because the mental concepts he uses in training are essential for anyone serious about working out and/or improving themselves. He also has some amazing experience in using his mind to get him through some shitty situations and major life setbacks. He was nearly 300lbs when he first attempted to join the military. There is great motivation in here for hardened MRP veterans and noob faggots alike! He's an alpha male among alpha males.

Can't Hurt Me: Master Your Mind and Defy the Odds
https://www.amazon.com/dp/1544512279/ref=cm_sw_r_cp_apa_i_WC3xCbEGXSKW0
How to make your B$%h sit, stay, lay down, and cum

by RedPillCoach | January 24, 2020 | Link

How to make your bitch sit, stay, lay down, and cum

This youtube Video explains time tested Behavioral and Operant Conditioning methods and serves as an introduction to CBT (Cognitive Behavioral Therapy) and NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming).

It is my most controversial piece yet!

A client once accused me of using “animal training” tactics with women and “treating women like animals.” I watched a couple episodes of “Dog Possible” about animal training and guess what buddy? You are absolutely correct and I am here to own it!

The reality is that we are all animals. I trace the evolution of Homo Sapiens from our cave man days not so long ago to the handcrafted tools and the fire that we danced around, and all the gang bang sex we had around that fire.

Yet through it all, for at least 250,000 years, until just 65,000 years ago we never showed any sign of creative thinking! Then, suddenly, beginning in South Africa something happened. Probably the Toba eruption likely wiped out almost all of the genus Homo in Africa but it was BIG because there is suddenly evidence of symbolic thinking and Homo Sapiens spread through the world with lightning speed.

Then, probably only about 25,000 years ago something else happened. We don’t know what it was exactly but it was so dramatic and so sudden that many people claim aliens came down to Earth and suddenly gave Humans the ability to plan for the future, and organize society.

While it was probably not ancient aliens, there is good evidence that religion arose immediately after that something because in just a few years, humans began burying their dead in individual graves with ornaments and personal effects. Before that, humans threw dead bodies into a hole in the ground in a communal burial. At the same time religion and temples and individual graves became a thing, agriculture and living in settled cities and towns suddenly also became a thing.

It was only around 10,000 years ago or so that actual cities began to be constructed and well after that when writing was invented. That is human history so far. Civilization has been around for around 10,000 years out of 250,000 to 300,000 years we have been on the Earth.

And that’s not all! Before homo sapiens evolved there were at least FIVE MILLION years of proto hominids walking around Africa. They did not have tools or fire, and their brains were about the size of a modern Chimpanzee but they were our ancestors. If we consider the whole timeline of human and prehumen hominid evolution, we find that human civilization comprises a tiny, tiny fraction of human and hominid existence on the planet.
We are not civilized humans with a thin veneer of barbarism. We are fucking barbarian animals with a thin veneer of civilization!

So take the Red Pill and recognize that men are animals- but women are also animals.

Having accepted this fact, what do we do with it?

We could whine and bemoan our fate like many MGTOW’s and Incels. We could rail against the light and spit up the Red Pill. Or…we could accept the facts and use them to our advantage and to the advantage of our families, wives, and children. How do we do that?

First, understand that The Red Pill is nothing more than reality. The reality is that women are animals and their animal desires control them, just as they control most men.

Second, if you need to control an animal, there are many thousands of years of tried, and true methods for achieving this control.

We shall now apply those methods to the control of women and compare the efficacy with controlling other animals. We first note that women have many characteristics in common with dogs. They are pack animals who follow the leader. They are overly concerned with dominance hierarchies. They avoid conflict, especially with the pack leader. They become extremely agitated and unhappy if placed in a situation where the dominance hierarchy is unclear. Their sexual response is closely related to their perception of your place in the dominance hierarchy. They need clear boundaries or they will destroy your home. Most important, the only way to get a dog to shut up and listen to you is by establishing your dominance. How do you do this? Can you guess?

It is through "respectful detachment." If you try to give them affection or attention or reward them too much, they walk all over you and even become aggressive. They will destroy your home if you let them. However, if you refuse even eye contact with them when they are being disobedient and reward them ONLY when they are being obedient then guess what? They start to listen. They shut up. They start to get the idea in their head that you are dominant and they need to show some respect.

Another word for all of this is establishing your FRAME!

To a woman, respect for your strong frame is keyed into her perception of your level of “Alpha” and that means her respect for you as the dominant partner is 100% keyed into her sexual feelings for you. If you want her to have sexual feelings, then she needs to see you as dominant. If you want her to despise you and be terribly unhappy then by all means, let her be dominant.

You establish dominance with a dog by “respectful detachment.” If you greet the dog with smiles and hugs all the time, they grow to expect it. They stop responding when you give them smiles and hugs as a reward for good behavior because…why bother. They always get what they want anyway. If you run to them and throw your arms around them the minute you see them, they pull away- and they KEEP pulling away so long as you keep pursuing. However, if you are indifferent to the dog, they will come to you with their nose nudging your hand, begging you to pet them.
Often owners have a “bad dog” that eats off the table or growls at a houseguest. The common solution is to pet the dog to “calm her down” but all this does is reinforce the bad behavior that you don’t want! Don’t do it! Instead, when your dog behaves badly, the solution is to avoid eye contact, ignore the bad behavior, redirect away from the bad behavior, and finally reward when they comply. Using this methodology, you can train your dog to stop pulling on the leash in a few sessions. You can get her to behave when she is in your presence with just a bit more work. Of course, getting her to behave when you are not around for her to see is another level entirely and may not even be possible!

“Respectful Detachment” is the key to dealing with all the bitches

BUT...at the same time you are DETACHED. You are not controlled externally by her whims but internally by your own considered needs and desires. This is the true meaning of DNGAF. Don’t GAF about her bad behavior any more than you care when the dog gets on the table. Define “good behavior” and “bad behavior” in your own mind and then set about paying attention and rewarding good behavior and ignoring and punishing bad behavior.

Don’t’ punish with anger or in anger. Most punishment should be simply ignoring the behavior. Punish like a stern father or the owner of your beloved dog that behaved badly. You will still have “accidents” and she will still piss on the floor if you don’t open the door quickly enough...but over time they will decrease and become less and less. Over time, you will learn to communicate with your fun-loving little sex puppy so that you learn to open the door for her before she even starts to bark. One day, she will realize that you are the dominant one in this relationship and after a period of fierce shit testing, she will finally relax, open up sexually, and suddenly decide that she is happy. Now for the final secret. THIS is what I do with clients. I am like the trainer in “Dog Possible” except I work with the owner, not the dog. smh It is true. We are freaking animals and 90% of what we do and 95% of what we think is programmed. Some of it is good code but much of it is not- and all of it can be deprogrammed if you have enough time and patience.
There are Two Types of Arguments in a Marriage
by Dark-Ulfberht | April 15, 2015 | Link

In a well-run marriage, there are two types of decisions that must be made: those you don't give a shit about, and those which are done your way. This is a core part of my general strategy, not just in marriage but across a wide range of interactions.

That said, this rule is particularly important for a marriage.

Good leaders make decisive decisions, and this lesson gets taught as gospel in MBA courses, the military and in any number of other leadership and management schools of thought. The problem with this is that inexperienced people don't know the difference between things that need a decision and things that don't. This failure to distinguish is what creates neurotic lieutenants and weak husbands alike.

Leaders who insist on "being decisive" about every little detail in their organizations typically fail, especially as they climb the ranks. This happens even if their decisions are sound. The reason they fail is that their subordinates begin to see their actions not as decisive, but as micro-management. The former is a sign of strength; the latter is a sign of weakness. Being social creatures, there is great evolutionary pressure to reject weak leaders, since for most of human history such people would get your merry band of hunter-gatherers extinguished. This mechanism manifests itself viscerally, and it is very deep.

A marriage is no different.

In all likelihood, your wife will be more sensitive to stimulus than will you. In my own marriage, 80% of the stuff that gets under my wife's skin doesn't even rise to my level of awareness. Literally, I don't even notice many things that she sees as potentially vexing issues.

The implication of this is that these things require some kind of decision. In these cases, I could not care less what decision is made. And yet, my wife will want input. This is a good time to exercise those "listening" skills that counselors are paid hundreds of dollars an hour to tell you about. Seriously, listen to what she has to say about this particular thing, even if you think it's trifling, unless there is some reason you can't (e.g. it's 2:00 a.m. and you have to get up for work tomorrow). Help her frame the problem. Provide guidance and feedback, but the decision is hers to make.

This is very different from how a good husband deals with important decisions. Remember, as the leader you are going to be held accountable, no matter what happens. That means that if you defer to her on a major financial decision and it goes bust, guess what: you are responsible for the outcome. With this in mind, by God, if it's a decision that matters, you better fucking be decisive about it. This is where you do not yield. This isn't time for guidance and feedback and "listening skills." This the time to be a fucking man and lead your tribe as they deserve to be led.
So, in short, when it matters, be a rock; when it doesn't, be water. But, whatever you do, don't become invested in trifling problems. This is critical. Remember that good leaders don't need to make every decision under the sun; they just need to make decisions that matter.

Of course the hard part is often figuring out which issues need decisive actions and which don't. It's a learned skill; even natural leaders have to fuck this up a few times before they develop an distinguishing eye. I certainly still confuse them from time to time, and I've been working in some leadership capacity for fifteen years. Given that a lot of married folks don't have as much experience in leadership positions, this can be damn hard to transfer over into a marriage.

So, I'll give you some general guidelines I use, although they shouldn't be taken as gospel. In general, important shit falls into one of these three categories.

1. It has a potentially large financial impact. This is different depending on your circumstances. For some, the details of a vacation may fall into this category. For most, a house purchase does. Ultimately, it's your call. There's also the possibility that small habits might combine to make an aggregate problem. If your wife (or you) have habits that nickel and dime you into financial oblivion, well, it's time to make a decisive change in systematic behavior.

2. It involves significant investment of time. You know what the mark of a weak husband is? A woman who volunteers his time. I've seen this happen on numerous occasions. Some woman is chit-chatting with her friend who is moving, and she says: "Oh, my husband can move for you." Bull. Fucking. Shit. Think about that; it's literally no different than volunteering her husband's money to pay for the move. However, the woman doesn't see it that way because she doesn't value his time. When I hear that, I always wish I could have a talk with the poor enslaved bastard whose wife loans him out like a fucking mule.

3. It involves major upheaval. This involves such decisions as moving to a new place, changing careers, having a baby, and so on. Likely, such decisions involve guidelines 2 and 3 as well. Nevertheless, these type of decisions deserve their own category as they represent major vector changes for your life path. Of the three categories, this is the one that is most important to recognize, and this type of decision point can indeed be subtle. Choosing a college major (if you go) is, in my view, one such decision-point. Your choice of study track begins your professional network and skill sets that may impact you for the rest of your life. You are walking through some doors and shutting others off. Eighteen to twenty year olds have to make this decision regularly, and often do so while considering such important factors as "how much time will I have to party."

Like a member of an organization, your wife will be very keen at picking up on cues about your capability as a leader. Eventually, if you prove to be a weak leader, she'll figure it out. This is when she cheats, or "finds herself," or upgrades. And when you think about it, maybe she should. After all, while poor leadership might not get you eaten anymore, it can damn sure leave you broken and destitute. Would you choose to work for a leader who led you down such a path? Of course not! Then why should you expect your wife to do so?

Of course, even good leadership is no guarantee of a lasting marriage, especially in today's toxic and family-negative culture. But, I'd argue that following these guidelines are helpful in general, and at will at least allow you to know that your choices were your own.

So, there you have it. Be decisive, not neurotic. When it counts, make the decision. When it doesn't matter, don't let it impact your blood pressure in the slightest. And, critically, know which is which.
The Principal of Least Interest: The Core of OI and frame

by SorcererKing | August 22, 2015 | Link

Since the advent of /r/askMRP I've been paying a lot more attention to the new guy posts. The questions inevitably come down to the stress the new guys feel when they challenge the frame of their wives.

Things like that boil down to either, "My woman isn't respecting me, and I'm distressed," or "My woman isn't attracted to me and I don't recognize the signs for what they are."

For those new guys, hear this now: If you care, you've already lost. Your woman is in control and you are not. Review the Principle of Least Interest.

For the rest of us, the Principle of Least Interest is really the keystone, if you think about it. It is the psychological principal at the core of OI. A "zero-fucks-given" attitude is knowing that you don't need her like those blue pill fucks do; that you can always be happy without her; that she is not a snowflake. This is the Principle; you care less about the relationship than she does. And even more importantly, you care about you more than you care about her.

Once you get to that point, shit tests are almost comical as you offhandedly destroy them. Comfort tests start to be recognized as your woman inviting you to initiate. She can't break your frame because, quite frankly, what she does or says is just not that important (barring crazy shit of course).

You no longer worry about what she'll think of your choices and decisions; if she has concerns, she'll voice them; if not she'll go along compliantly. The miracle of course is that women like this arrangement and settle into it. Or they don't. They fight you, they struggle for control. They carry on, trying to value themselves as men would, drinking the feminist Kool Aid to varying degrees. But you have a secret weapon: The Principle is your ally. As they try to resist, your psychological jujitsu kicks in and you grow even more disinterested in their bullshit, heaping value on top of riches in the gym or at work or with your buddies in whatever badass pursuit you share. The resisting woman either puts herself out of your life or she shapes up; the choice is hers and you don't really care since you have probably got your abundance on as well (and women are likely trying to get your attention).

Keep in mind you can take it too far by over-dreading her inadvertently or driving her off with your indifference. How much it takes to fuck up in this way is different in each relationship, so be mindful. On the other hand, if it only requires a small amount of indifference to drive her off maybe she's better off gone.

So think on that brothers when the shit tests are coming in hot and heavy. Ask yourself, "Am I really that interested in this game? Do I really care?" For the answer makes all the difference.
[Edit: corrected sloppy spelling]
All Red Pill Sidebar In One PDF. X post from trp
by stonepimpletlist | August 17, 2015 | Link

http://www.reddit.com/r/TheRedPill/comments/3hb0m2/all_red_pill_sidebar_in_one_pdf/

There, no excuses. A single book, everything needed
I saw this post and I feel like it applies to us as well. I’m sure many have seen it, but wanted to make it more visible to us.

Hi guys I’m new here and today I want to share with you the most important behaviors of an attractive male.

Over the years a lot of my buddies and I have been very successful with women. I was always very interested in understanding the dynamics that went into play. So outside of just having fun and fucking around, like the boys did, I also observed a lot. I have a very intuitive way of thinking and analyzing, so after a couple of years, I started seeing all kinds of patterns... This is how I came about these 7 behaviors.

1. Attractive men take care of themselves.

This one should be a no-brainer. Is it possible to feel bad, look like shit and still seduce a girl? Yeah of course. But if you’re going for a gorgeous woman with a lot of options, you should look like you take care of yourself. She isn’t interested in raising a guy or teaching you how to shave or dress yourself. Man up. Sleep enough, eat healthy, stay in shape and always dress well enough to be proud of yourself. A recipe for swag, hehe. PS: Ask attractive women for advice on your hairstyle, perfume and on how to dress. They will probably do a better job picking the right thing than us.

2. Attractive men are present and have fun.

Everybody loves to be around people who are having fun, so go for it. Always focus on doing things you enjoy. You’ll be more present, and you’ll have more fun. Don’t focus on getting girls, or kissing them... “a mind that wants to achieve an outcome, is not the same mind that achieves that outcome” - Jon Kabat-Zinn You can be doing something as simple as having an interesting conversation. (The key to interesting conversations is to be interested!) You can even take someone for a walk or play a game of darts. Oh yeah, and when you’re talking with someone, LISTEN. There’s nothing worse than explaining something and then realize nobody's listening. Nowadays people are so focused on themselves lately, that just listening to someone will already make you stick out.

3. Attractive men don’t let others affect their mood, they’re empathic but assertive.

Your mood and feelings should not be influenced by external things, in general. For example, don’t freak out when somebody cuts you off in traffic. It doesn’t matter, have some perspective. But the same goes for when other people act annoyed, sad or weird. It never helps to feed into it and let them ruin your mood, so don’t. Of course use common sense, if a buddy needs some emotional support you should give it. But when people complain and bitch without good reasons. Fuck that. Flip the conversation or talk to somebody else.
4. Attractive men make others feel good about themselves.

There are a lot of ways to do this. A good way to start is having fun and giving some genuine compliments. Be curious and ask questions. When you hear something you like, just say it. Making others feel good in an authentic way, makes you pretty happy too.

5. Attractive men are direct in their communication and say what needs to be said.

Don’t beat around the bush and point out the pink elephant in the room. Not saying what you think usually doesn’t serve anybody, it only creates tension or unsolved issues. People can’t read your mind. Of course, you can be mindful on how you put things, but make your intentions clear and be honest.

6. Attractive men are authentic. They don’t change themselves so that others will like them.

Be yourself and take off your filters. You don’t hold back when you’re with your good old buddies, so don’t do it when you meet new people. When you meet new people and act as if you knew them already, it can help create more trust in a faster way. If you think of a joke that you believe is funny, tell it. If you feel like asking a weird question, do it. You can always be mindful about it and give them a heads up about what you’re going to say, but don’t hold back. (Eg. This joke might be a bit weird, but...) You want people to like you for who you are, not for who you pretend to be. And pretending to be someone else isn’t even a guarantee people will like you. So just be real.

7. Attractive men don’t hesitate too much and take action.

If you ever find yourself stuck, not knowing what to do, action’s usually the answer. Just do something and see where it goes. No, don’t plan how to do something. DO something. Mark Manson has a great article on this, he calls it the “Do Something Principle”. Say hi to that cute girl next to you in the bus. Just go to the gym if you’re not sure if you have the energy for it. Nobody likes indecisive pieces of shit, so don’t be one please.

So here’s a summary...

Attractive men take care of themselves Attractive men are present and have fun Attractive men don’t let others affect their mood, they’re empathic but assertive. Attractive men make others feel good about themselves. Attractive men are direct in their communication and say what needs to be said. Attractive men are authentic. They don’t change themselves so that others will like them. Attractive men don’t hesitate too much and take action.

If you have any questions, do reply!

I’m also working on starting out a big ass community around dating & self-development. I will be handing out a free video crash course there so if you’re interested take a look at www.datingheroes.com

Original Post
Guy fixes 6 year DB with a textbook MRP approach (xpost from /r/deadbedrooms)
by it_is_not_the_spoon | February 4, 2016 | Link

Quick summary:

- Stop caring about wife
- Start working out, gain (back) muscle
- Socializing with new people
- Start flirting with other women

Suprise: wife suddenly initiates and has screaming orgasm.

https://www.reddit.com/r/DeadBedrooms/comments/440nv9/positive_update_and_what_worked_for_me/Motherfucker. Wife's 911 call and I'm now in a hotel by the highway.

by marxistbacon | February 9, 2016 | Link

Full disclosure: my life is a fucking disaster right now. Not stressed, just fucking pissed.

So 99% of the time, my wife is on board with me. She believes the man is the man, she expects me to lead, she wants long sexy-times sessions. We chill, we talk, we contemplate life. But then she starts to drink. And it all goes downhill. Enter the 1%.

Background: second marriage, came to PUA before dating wife #2 then TRP then MRP while dating. Figured I could handle it, figured I knew how to navigate the current, figured I could deal with whatever she threw at me. I figured I know my shit by this point. So I wifed her up anyways. Yeah, I know, I know... fucking idiot. Yes I've read the sidebar, I lift, been in the gym 5 days of he last seven, black belt, biceps, yadda yadda.

She's always had an "issue" with me having been married before and hates, I mean hates, the ex-wife. Drunk wife starts in "you still love her", ...
"you treat her better than me", ...
"you love your kids more than me",
"make her change her email address since it still has your last name"
... fucking crap. That ex was a miserable piece of work and I talk to her only to coordinate shit for my kids. Couple of times a month by email and maybe a text or two.

Six months back, drunk wife wants me to set my cell phone alarm for a seminar she wants to go to. We're at a hotel to go to this seminar, and make a day of it, she's just too fucking lazy to set her own alarm (shit test). But wouldn't you know, left my charger at the house and I'm "sorry hun, phone's dying, have to set your own alarm". This turns into a completely out-of-the-blue drunken aggressive "you're a pathetic loser! you set your alarm for your kids! set it for ME dammit". I walked out on her but this stings. This has fucking rankled me every fucking time I open my phone and set the alarm for ANY reason the last half year.

So last two nights she's had a couple drinks and starts in bitching on the ex-wife and starts in on demanding I set my alarm for her in the morning. I tell her "set your own alarm" and of course she goes fucking nuts, and starts in about how I never talked to the ex like that, and a bunch of other shit. I roll over tell her I'm going to sleep but I'm fucking fuming. Fail number 2. (No, make that about fail #150 by this point).

Despite all of this, I decide what the fuck, and take her to dinner. (Rolling my eyes, I know... honestly, the plan was to talk through some of this shit - beta comfort, feelz, but it never got that far). The night started out just fine. A nice dinner, hanging out, even some on-the-sly groping and more on the way home. But anyways, later tonight, after a few, she starts in on me about how I'm not being loving and affectionate to her in the morning. I tell her "set your own alarm" and of course she goes fucking nuts, and starts in about how I never talked to the ex like that, and a bunch of other shit. I roll over tell her I'm going to sleep but I'm fucking fuming. Fail number 2. (No, make that about fail #150 by this point).

Despite all of this, I decide what the fuck, and take her to dinner. (Rolling my eyes, I know... honestly, the plan was to talk through some of this shit - beta comfort, feelz, but it never got that far). The night started out just fine. A nice dinner, hanging out, even some on-the-sly groping and more on the way home. But anyways, later tonight, after a few, she starts in on me about how I'm not being loving and affectionate to her in the morning. I decide, fuck it, I'm going to lay it out and connect the dots for her. Explain how that shit was disrespectful and contrary to the aims of our marriage. She goes into a bunch of shit about "if you really don't love me, just strangle me right here and end my life". WTF?!?!?!?!
I should mention that last month, she drunkenly threatened suicide with a knife, I got it on video, called the cops. She denied it but I showed the recording and they took her to psych. Which did fucking nothing except I got a pamphlet from the hospital with six pages of phone numbers for battered wives helplines, and as an afterthought, they printed the URL of some men's help website on the last page. FML.

So anyways, she's laying into me tonight after I explained why I was pissed off, 115 pounds and least seven standard drinks in her, about how she never said any of that shit and it's all my fault and why am I getting so aggressive with her?. So I fucking tell her, if I'm so aggressive and you feel so threatened, call 9-1-1. Just call it if you want to end the marriage.

The officers were very professional, and they could both see she was trashed, and she didn't want to press any charges for whatever reason. So instead of cuffing me and leaving me in the cop shop overnight they said they'd let me get a few things from the house and take me to a motel for overnight. The motel isn't that bad. I think the Timmy's coffee place next door is open all night. I could use a strong coffee about now.

In the morning I'll get a cab, pick up the car from home, and get on with my life. At this point I'm not sure if I'm asking for advice, just bitching to get this off my chest, or hoping this is the come-to-jesus moment that will change everything. (Hah! I should be so stupid!)

Anyways, if you don't hear from me again, it's been a slice, I've learned a lot from you mofo's and regulars (though evidently not enough). Peace on. I'm going out for a large double-double.
2yo causing a rift in the marriage, wife hit me in reaction
by iloveairplane | November 1, 2016 | Link

a combination of things going on here - I'm really stressed at work right now and I'm trying to get on top of it, I don't EVER complain about work to wife, but tonight before bed I let her know I was very stressed about work and I was going downstairs to watch a movie and take my mind off it before going to sleep. I finally hit the pillow and less than an hour later my 2 year old wakes up screaming. History with him is that he is a little asshole (we have other kids so I know what I am talking about) and he screams and kicks and claws and won't tell you what he wants but nothing is good enough and it literally feels like he is challenging you to a game of wills. So I let her know that the baby is up and I need her to take care of him...she gets up, goes in, baby screams at her and doesn't want her to pick him up so she comes back in to bed. I'm indifferent, almost predicting that she wouldn't put much effort in, but I don't have the energy to deal with her so I get him a bottle and then try to give it to him and so then he is screaming at me and won't take the bottle...so I leave it with him and come to bed as well. After about 30 minutes of this, I tell her the baby is still up and I would like her to sort him out. (she is a SAHM - it is in her wheelhouse - I have my own problems at work and need to get rest + she is normally decently submissive), but she says "no I'm going to let him cry it out". I disagree with her and ask her again so she knows I am making a direct request, not suggestion. I get a very defiant no.

I don't have time to deal with mutiny at 2 in the morning so I sigh and get up and go in to deal with the baby...it needs to be done.

Baby is still being an asshole, I'm trying bottle, video on the phone, light on, light off, books, rocking, music, everything....he objects to everything and kicks and I reliably and firmly tell him not to kick, if he kicks harder I give him a swat to the butt and raise my voice and say "don't kick". I ask him to use his words, all of the things I'm supposed to do....nothing is working and he is just screaming and thrashing and kicking.

Wife comes in and starts laying in to me about how I am going to wake the other kids and I just say "I told you to deal with it and you didn't so either take him or get out". for some reason she went off and said "you need to check yourself, blah blah, you're scary", and I was just a broken record "either take him or get out". She finally screams "I am trying to take him but I'm too scared to get near you!" so I lift the baby to her and then as I am getting out of the rocker to head out she punches me in the head...hard. This has never happened. I have NEVER lifted a finger toward her, and never threatened or given her any reason EVER to fear physical harm - EVER. And upon immediate reflection it doesn't add up that she is feeling "scared" at my behavior yet she gets in my space and punches me? I think if she were scared she would have stayed in her room....right? watch what they do not what they say?

Anyway, I think the combination of both of us extremely exhausted from dealing with this difficult baby, she's hormonal, me being stressed at work and even less sleep, neither of us wanting to be woken up by a screaming terrorist child, and the fear of waking up other children and it escalating got us both in a bad frame... I'll be the first to forgive and move on, but I had half a mind to call the cops just so she knows I won't tolerate that.

I'd appreciate some solid insight - yes I have read the sidebar and I lift - so don't waste your time telling me I'm a faggot and deserve to be hit or whatever....if you were in this situation what would you actually really do. I'm going to bed now and not saying shit to her, and I'll probably head off to work before she wakes so that I can take some time to reflect and be calculated about my response to this.
Sober Captains
by ParadoxThatDrivesUs | July 1, 2016 | Link

We're all familiar with the drunk captain/sober captain model of MRP. But I've noticed that people have different (and sometimes limited) ideas about what kind of a "sober captain" they want to become. Here's a list:

"The Commander" -- This seems to be a common one around here. When it's working, the wife and family recognize that the Commander is in charge, and they follow his lead because they respect him and respect his ability to lead them in a positive way. If you believe in the Commander model, then your wife's obedience and respect are important to you.

"Brad Pitt," aka Do you even lift, bro? -- Brad Pitt from "Fight Club" is a pretty common shorthand around here for a man who leads not by demanding obedience, but rather by building himself into a physical specimen that his wife and others want to follow through sheer animal attraction. Turn yourself into Brad Pitt, the thinking goes, and the rest will probably fall into place one way or another.

"Donald Trump" -- This one has been cropping up a lot lately as well. The Donald Trump model is all about frame and passing shit tests. He hasn't gotten where he is by DEERing anything. He succeeds by pulling the world into his frame.

"Indiana Jones" -- This is my own label, but the concept he represents is common enough -- Outcome Independence. As depicted on the screen, he's not particularly concerned with attracting the girl or anyone else. He's just pursuing his own cool hobbies and pretty much ignoring everyone else. If people want to join him, great. If not, also great. He's also not too tied up with success or failure. Raiders is pretty much one fuck up after another the whole way through, but he's having a blast doing his thing, so he DGAF.

"The Builder" -- The Builder is making something with his life -- building a house, building a career, building a business. Whatever it is, he's building his vision. His wife and others follow him because they buy into his vision. Note, though, that he's not just dreaming about a better future. He's the Builder -- he's actually building his vision.

Reading these boards, I sometimes think people trap themselves into thinking that one of these models is always the right one. Different challenges call for different kinds of captains. Take elements of all of them and strike a balance.
The Creep – Part 1
by Rollo-Tomassi | November 9, 2017 | Link

Essay: Read it all here

Excerpt:

There are two aspects of ‘creepy’ to women:

• The sense of self-preservation and imminent danger that is associated with a man whom her hindbrain is telling her that there’s something not quite right about. The guy is directly communicating or subcommunicating that he may be a potential threat to her wellbeing. Her intuition is something that is exaggerated beyond all reasonable, realistic perception, but her subconscious only knows what it knows and the social conditioning kicks in to be overly cautious. This may or may not be the actual case, but women evolved to err on the side of over-cautiousness – particularly when it comes to men’s behavioral cues and perceptions of anger.

• The sense of insult to her capacity to optimize Hypergamy with a suboptimal male makes her “creeped out”. In this sense the “creep” offends her hindbrain’s expectation of reproducing with the best genetic partner her ego believes is really her due. As you’ll see in a moment, when a physically arousing man repeats the same behavior as a less-arousing man the feeling of ‘creep’ is diminished. Much of this has a lot to do with that guy’s sense of congruency between his behavior (sub-communications) and her intuition about his authenticity, but largely the initial ‘hotness’ of one man vs. a less hot one can spell the difference between a “creep” and “awkward-but-cute”. Arousal compensates for a lot of behavioral miscues, but the point is that this sense of ‘creepiness’ is fundamentally based in a woman’s ego-sense of losing direct control of Hypergamy and her capacity to optimize it. What ‘creepy’ distills down to is a woman’s Hypergamous-level revulsion of a man believing he may be someone she would eventually have sex with. Creepy is an insult to Hypergamy.
The Creep - Part 2
by Rollo-Tomassi | November 14, 2017 | Link

Full essay here:

Excerpt:

The Creeps

As most readers will have probably guessed I’ve timed the release of this series to address the current Hysterial of sexual assault / harassment / rape charges that are moving like wildfire through Hollywood first, and now through the rest of our pop-culture social strata. While it may be satisfying to see mealy-mouth self-righteous actors and moguls take a fall, it’s important to see the larger social mechanics in play here.

I wrote that essay over a year ago and I’ll say now that I’d never dreamed how prophetic that post would turn out. Criticizing this #MeToo sexual assault hysteria is next to impossible. For the same reasons no one wanted to question the veracity of the UVA fraternity rape hoax that Rolling Stone and Sabrina Erdley perpetrated - no one now wants to question the accusations leveled at the various personalities being conveniently outed for sexual assault/harassment that in some cases occurred 30-40 years ago. We are expected to believe the testimonies of women without question.

This isn’t to say that the celebrities involved didn’t do what their accusers are saying they did, it’s that we are expected to accept that this behavior is endemic in all men, and based on the same principle of believing whatever a woman has to say about it with no afterthought given to its truth or her motives. It’s one thing to presume that whenever a woman comes forward with a rape or assault claim we are expected to presume the man guilty until proven innocent, but we’re rapidly reaching a point where any claim a woman has about a man bears that same weight. When it comes down to ‘he said, she said’, what she said will hold the full weight of the law.

Our Feminine-primary social order is now repurposing this ironclad believability of women – and presumed guilt of men – for every crime a woman ‘feels’ she’s been a victim of at the hands of a man. At the same time we see sexual harassment being defined as something that even a wink from a man can convey, we also see the rapid criminalization of men who would dare to talk to a woman they don’t already know.

When we combine this overarching presumption of male guilt with the potential crime of men dealing with a woman with the intent of establish intimacy, and then add to it the ever changing definition of what can constitute sexual assault or harassment (and with a uniquely endless statute of limitations), we begin to get a clearer picture of the direction the Feminine Imperative has for men.
I’m sure this all seems very reactionary, but so was the questioning of Sabrina Erdley’s story about a nameless girl who was violently raped on the shattered glass of a broken coffee table by fraternity boys. Once again, I’m not saying sexual assault doesn’t happen, I’m saying that the direction gynocentrism is taking is one in which men ought to lose rights and liberties that only women ought to be the judges of.
Living life from the stratosphere is amazing.....

Male hypergamy is amazing......

On a long enough timeline, the survival rate of every relationship is zero.

The goal of every relationship should be to provide no more value than you extract.

The only relationship worth investing your entire heart, mind, soul, love and time into is the relationship with yourself.

Second to that is the relationship with your children.

Everything else is mental masturbation and a waste of your time.

My divorce has completely changed how I view the world and relationships in general. Perhaps I was always like this, perhaps my eyes were closed. Maybe this is Red Pill v3? I have no idea.

We talk so much on here about sex, and how we extract that from women. Where I am on my journey is so far past that, women and sex do not even register on my radar anymore.

Do you think about air? No.

Why is that?

Because it is everywhere, there is nothing you need to do beyond having a properly operating Medulla to breathe.

I would argue that my journey has gotten to the point where I now classify women as air. I do not think about them. If I want to fuck, I fuck. If I need more fucking, well I just go and do that, just like if I need more air to breathe due to exercise or whatever, my Medulla takes care of that for me.

The analogy ends where I actually need air to live, where I do not need women to live. But again, I am not the best writer or analogy dude so you get the fucking point.

I have a wife and a girlfriend. They both know about each other. They both fully understand their roles in my ecosystem and have come to understand that. My wife is an excellent mother. My girlfriend is an excellent girlfriend.

This is how man was designed to operate. Someone to help with child rearing and someone to suck your eyes thru your pee hole.
I do not believe for one second that this type of male hypergamy can be fulfilled by a single woman, anymore than female hypergamy can be filled by a single man. Where I have changed is that:

I am no longer willing to accept anything less than 100% of what I want out of life. No more compromises, no more maybes, no more half assed attempts. If you do not fit into my bucket, there is someone else who will be happy to try.

My life used to be structured this way, and it pains me to even write this for you all to see:

Wife, kids, me

It is now:

Me, kids

Yep, I put myself ahead of my kids. Why? Because I have learned that the only way to give them the life I want, is to be the BEST I can be. Does this mean I eat and they starve? Absolutely not.

What it means, is that I will no longer allow anyone to get in the way of what I want from life. No passive-aggressive wife telling me "no, don't do that" or my own inner monologue saying "don't take that risk, you have kids to feed"

Fuck all that non-sense. Go big or go home. If you fail, well fall back onto your backup plan. Have the balls to do it. Have the balls to burn it all down.

What the fuck have I burned down anyway?

Not a fucking thing of ANY value. And that brothers, is what hurts the fucking most. The debilitating fear of "burning it down"

Motherfucker, if you are having these thoughts - that shit is already fucking ashes.

What you are really saying is "I am afraid to do the fucking work"

That is right, I just called a bunch of you out. Are you afraid to burn it down, or do the fucking work? Are you still thinking in term of sex, or are you transcending past that?

Don't be ashamed. These are new revelations for myself as well. All in the past 90 days.

I am your Tyler Durden.

You are not burning shit down.

You are building a new you.

Get to fucking work.
Men of March: Day #8
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 8, 2017 | Link

Day #1, Day #2, Day #3, Day #4, Day #5, Day #6, Day #7(Week One Done)

Yesterday’s Recap: Each day I’ll do a brief recap from the day before. Day #7 required you to look over the various aspects of who you are as a man to ensure that your success in one area didn’t lead to failure in another.

You have to be the man who is absolutely killing it at work, at home, physically, and mentally.

You’ve got to fill the roles of husband, brother, son, father and at all times, that of masculine man.

Your success in specific areas should not lead to complacency in others, at no point should you let off the gas thinking, ‘I’ve made it.’ because you haven’t.

The name of this game called Life is continuous self-improvement to the grave.

Raise your standard in every area and remove the weak voice in your head which tells you that ‘it’s ok to take a break because you’ve been trying so hard…’

Don’t take your foot off the gas, keep improving brothers.

Daily Reminder

Reminder: The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don’t give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.

4. You must start reading a book. Even if it’s just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don’t have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.
5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go. This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Life isn’t about hiding from storms, it’s about learning to dance in the rain. Every now & then you need to stop, center yourself, bring balance to your life, then continue marching forward.

Day #8: Stop, Collaborate, & Listen

Every 8 days during the Men of March we’ll take a day to stop, look around and take an inventory, and make sure that we aren’t missing an issue that is hiding in plain sight.

Look at the three goals you wrote down on Day #1, are you marching towards their completion? Are you knocking out your push-ups or do you find yourself squeezing them in right before bed? How can you take better care of your future self and set your days up for greater efficiency and success?

There may be areas where you’re failing, today is the day where you reach out and ask a fellow man for help. Whether that means emailing me, asking for a fitness guy to create a program, etc.

You need help? Ask for it.

Challenge #8

1. 100 Push-Ups

2. STOP pushing into new territory and discovery of self and instead, look where you’re at. Look at the goals you set on day #1, are you getting closer to completion? Are you ensuring that as you thrive and feel the pride that comes with reclamation of self, is your family also being taken care of and feeling that same pride within themselves? Relax and make sure everything is running smooth.

3. COLLABORATE with your fellow man. If you’re stuck whether it be finance, fitness, sex, whatever I want you to reach out to a masculine mentor. It can be someone in ‘real life’ or it can be someone on Twitter, reddit, a blog you follow wherever. What matters is that you swallow your pride and you reach out to work with someone to fix an issue. If you don’t have an issue then work on a project with a friend, your wife, or your kids. The point is that masculine men lead and work together; we don't repeatedly discuss problems, we work towards solutions.

4. LISTEN: While you are marching to the beat of the masculine drum, how are those around you doing? Often times I find that I am aware that there is something up with my wife or kids well before they tell me, how? I ‘listen’ to their body language, tone, rate of speech, and the topics they bring up. Put your ear to the ground and truly listen to what is going on with those around you. How can you help them get through and raise their own personal standard?

Wrapping up Day #8

Every now and then you need to take an inventory of where you’re at. Like maintenance on a car, you’ve got to take preventative measures to keep yourself from having to take corrective actions. It’s why we change our oil, rotate tires, and wash the damn thing.

Every 8 days during the month of March we’ll perform some preventative maintenance to fix the problems before they ever occur.

Today is your first ‘Preventative Maintenance’ day, enjoy it and find the areas which are showing signs of becoming a future problem.

Blog Post: https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/08/day-8-stop-collaborate-listen/

Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
No Real Man Fallacy

by Reddjive | July 25, 2019 | Link

Ever hear of The No True Scotsman fallacy? It is a way of reinterpreting evidence in order to prevent the refutation of one’s position. Proposed counter-examples to a theory are dismissed as irrelevant solely because they are counter-examples, but purportedly because they are not what the theory is about.

The No True Scotsman fallacy involves discounting evidence that would refute a proposition, concluding that it hasn’t been falsified when in fact it has.

1. John cheats on his wife
   2. No real man (red pill man, alpha) cheats on his wife.

Therefore: John is not a real man (red pill man, alpha)

Therefore: John is not a counter-example to the claim that a real man (red pill man, alpha) cheats on his wife.

I call this the No Real Man Fallacy and it’s gaining traction throughout Red Pill. It’s bullshit. This fallacy is a form of circular argument, with an existing belief being assumed to be true in order to dismiss any apparent counter-examples to it. The existing belief thus becomes unfalsifiable.

Let’s be clear. Red Pill is not endorsing whole sale cheating though it doesn’t vilify it either. Such a move is reserved for the highest levels of dread and even then you have had the FMOFY speech. There are times men are goaded into it because we are proving the point that sex is just that easy to get. If that’s all you want, then get laid. Go do it and stop bothering us.

Making this move at DL11 is not for everyone. Most times things don’t get this far. Divorce happens or she jumps on board the train. It will result in one of two things:

1. Complete destruction of an already bad marriages
   2. Her utter submission because she knows you can walk out.

There are men here that can attest to either of these outcomes with the use of Dread in this way. It’s been clear that sex is part of the relationship otherwise you are seeking it elsewhere. No one can force someone to have sex yet neither can an adult be forced into celibacy.

Some of the premises used in the No Real Man Fallacy are: you create fear in her (aka negative side of dread), a real man faces his problems head on, a real man would just up and leave.....The list goes on.

The MRP premise has always been at DL11 go get laid. You’ve run the race. She isn’t listening. This step is acknowledging the final end. You are getting fucked you are getting laid. She has no control over that decision. While you can’t make someone have sex (though you can make them pay for your life) you equally can’t force someone into celibacy.

By putting yourself into fictitious beliefs as to what a “real man is and does” you are continuing the same blue pill bullshit that brought you here. Cheat or don’t cheat. That’s your decision. Focusing on this is missing the point. Sex is damn easy to get. Believe me. I am Chad. Yet don’t come here declaring you are a man of your word. I will find many ways in which that isn’t true.

The only place honor and your word exist is when you can afford it. When you have reached the position of a high value man and you can afford to keep your word then you do. Until then you are fighting your way and should not be limiting yourself. Eventually you will find you give your word less and only to things that matter. Constantly giving your word devalues its worth (see the connection?).

I remember when I had my first beer.

I was 18. Fresh out of basic training. My squad leader handed it to me at my first squad party. I was pretty nervous, like looking around for mom. Fuck, I had just graduated basic training, AIT, in my first unit.....I had never had a beer up until then. He looked at me and said:

| First beer, eh kid? |

Yeah.

| Listen. (He pulled the beer away) Don’t let any one force you to drink. If you want to. Do it. If not. Then don’t. Don’t be forced into decisions you don’t want to make but also don’t be afraid to make them. |