Can you keep a fucking secret? That's not a rhetorical question.

When you tell no one about your plans, you eliminate your chance for external validation. That is a great first step for the newly unplugged man. We quickly learn that our domain is action, not words, and begin making large scale changes without a lot of talking. Actions without words create secrets by default. This is good, because we're likely to make a lot of mistakes, and our frame might not withstand much criticism even when we are succeeding.

But what's next? Self-validation is healthy, and STFU is good advice to follow - but even those rules will be displaced as you become your own mental point of origin. A high value man with an indomitable frame may not care about secrets, and that freedom is our end goal. While that frame is being built, there are good reasons for the developing man to keep his mouth shut.

Learn to keep small secrets now, because they will be greater in your future. Realizations about your own frame, your plans to fire your boss, your next BJJ belt, your mission. Maybe you have goals that are so grand, you don’t dare speak them out loud yet.

Learn to keep secrets because you are The Natural - the kind of man who just gets it. "How is he owning his shit at home, killing it at work and still waking up at 5? Why does it seem like things are just working for him?" Like a jacked Gandalf, you pull good things out of nowhere. It will seem like magic to others - because they will see your results, but none of your effort.

Secret #1: Fight Club

48 Laws of Power, Law 30: Make your Accomplishments Seem Effortless

“Your actions must seem natural and executed with ease. ..When you act, act effortlessly, as if you could do much more.”

One of the first things you learn in the sidebar is to STFU about Fight Club. Maybe you mistakenly followed the advice in NMMNG and told your spouse about the book. Maybe your wife found your Reddit account. It’s still not too late for your personal progress to be kept secret.

Remember that most people aren’t capable of making large changes and maintaining them, especially in silence. If you've been Owning Your Shit for 90 days, you’ve kept a habit longer than most people - your wife included. But once you’ve been working your MAP for a year without stopping? Or you celebrate 18 months of passing shit tests, or two years of going to the gym regularly? 99% of the people in your life won’t be able to fathom that kind of commitment.

You should be a man who has his shit together, as though it comes naturally to him. As though it always has. The guys in OYS know that your progress has only been made through blood, sweat, tears and a little cum, but why does anyone else need to know that? Your wife doesn’t care how you’re finally learning to be a man - it may as well be magic. Why would you tell her otherwise? When you tell other men about your personal lessons, you may be casting your pearls before swine. That’s not an insult against Blue Pill men; it’s advice that you shouldn’t dispense your powerful secrets to those who won’t understand their value.

“Your actions...(and) all the toil and practice that go into them, and also all the clever tricks, must be concealed.... Avoid the temptation of revealing how hard you work - it only raises questions.”

Use headphones when you’re practicing the guitar in your basement. Don’t tell randoms about your crazy effort at the gym. Tell none of your friends about your new side hustle idea, until the business has been registered for 6 months and you’ve landed your first client.

One day people will notice that, when they weren't watching, you got your shit together (you're probably more attractive too, which doesn't hurt). Don't ruin it by blabbing about all your hard work to get here - keep the wizard behind the curtain. Act like you didn't read this in a book, because it's true - you're a natural. This is just how you are, right? Damn your wife is a lucky woman.

Secret #2: Your Defense, Explanation, Excuse and Rationalization (DEER)

Law 9: Win Through Your Actions, Never Through Argument

I have had the perfect excuse, a really valid justification for my actions. It would have disarmed the other person, and lessened the sting of their criticism. But I didn’t offer it up - not now, and not 6 months from now. There are good explanations that I’ll carry to my grave. Why? Because defending myself is weak, even when it’s true.

Whatever bullshit you would have normally spewed to lessen the conflict, or reduce the sting of disappointment in their eyes - you never say it. Don’t assume that because the other person has stopped talking, you must speak more. The awkward silence you create will speak more about your frame than your last 10 OYS posts. Every time you don’t DEER (to your spouse, your coworker, u/SBIII, your son/daughter, your parent, your plate) your frame grows a little stronger.

Secret #3: Your Plans

Law 3: Conceal Your Intentions

As a man, you should be capable of making drastic changes to yourself without telling anyone about it before, during, or after.

You know that guy at your office: he’s constantly announcing his intentions to join his next gym, ask out that pretty girl he’s friend zoned, or get his motorcycle license. Did you notice that he never commits to anything longer than 30 days? His gym membership is unused, he never got the motorcycle, he won’t talk to the girl, and all for the same reason:

He already received his pleasure from the goal by talking about it.

Talking about your goals before you start them might make you less likely to achieve them. This was certainly the case for me. It feels good to announce goals, and receive validation for them (from your wife, your friends, or MRP). But that is taking pleasure now, at the expense of delayed gratification later. We need that delayed gratification, because it is the foundation for virtuous habits - the good things we do every day to make our future better than our present.

Law 6: Create An Air Of Mystery

You should absolutely be going to the gym but no one should hear about it from you. Instead, let them notice your arms that magically appear next summer. The magician knows that the only “magic” is lifting hard and eating right, but explanations aren’t sexy. You should absolutely be riding a motorcycle - but let people find out when you arrive on your Harley. Don’t show anyone that you learned 3 chords on your Fender; let them see you on stage (“I didn’t know he played guitar!”) as the wet spot forms in their panties.

Are you seeing the pattern? You make a commitment, tell no one, and start grinding. For new guys: This is the way to earn your own approval, which is a necessary replacement for the validation you formerly sought from others. Do it once and feel badass. Do it twice, and you’ll find that your own approval is worth more than the approval of your wife.

Once you know that you can take a mission from inception to completion entirely in secret, then telling others about your plans becomes a powerful invitation. You’re no longer sharing a goal with the hope that it will succeed - now you’re bringing someone else on the journey with you. You’re a proven entity now, because you’ve done it before, alone.

Don’t be transparent by announcing your plans to everyone, especially to those who don’t matter. Leave them wondering: “I wonder what else he’s up to?” while accomplishing your goals in secret.

Secret 4: Your Journal

Dear diary,

Diaries are fucking gay.

You keep a record of your lifts at the gym to show progress, to keep yourself accountable, and because you’ll forget. You take pictures to compare the progress you’ve made on your physique. Why wouldn’t you do the same with the progress in your frame? If you are not keeping some kind of journal, you are missing out.

Your journal does not care about your day or your crush. This journal is for YOU to selfishly grow in two ways: Writing That Shit Now and Reading That Shit Later. As an added benefit, the practice of keeping a journal should make your OYS posts shorter, better and easier to read (or maybe that’s just wishful thinking on my part).
Write about your failures. Write about how your frame is making your life different. Notice what you’re grateful for, and write it down. Be honest about what you did that makes you cringe with embarrassment, be honest about what keeps you awake at night. Write it down. You might surprise yourself with new connections that you hadn’t put together before, and you’ll remember a lot more of what you write. You’ll find you write about important things, especially if you make this a habit.

Reading my journal from the past is like passing cheat codes into my own future. I realize things like:

"I used to struggle with that? That’s weak. What am I struggling with now, that might seem easy in the future?"

"Many of my desires have not changed in years - maybe I should seek out those things as being meaningful to me. Maybe those desires aren’t as shallow as I thought."

"Where I am today is far from perfect, but damn I have so much gratitude for how far I've come."

"I completely forgot this part! I had to work really hard to make that a habit, now it's automatic. That's why systems are so important - I can do that again."

"There is no way I could have handled my current situation with that old frame."

"LOL I had oneitis for that girl like a faggot. Now I barely remember her name."

It may be helpful to read your own journal like it was the biography of someone else. See the past years and realize: you've had little gains, incremental wins, and the audacity to wake up every day. You’ve journaled through hard times. Maybe some of those times were so hard that you never quite recovered the same way. Maybe now you're a different kind of beast with scars because of it. Listen to your story objectively and realize you're still here - with more successes than failures, if you're being honest. Read your own words from two years ago and think: If I saw someone else make it through all that shit, wouldn't I believe that they are going to succeed in the future? What advice would I give that person, if they wanted my advice and I cared about them? Now, give that advice to yourself. That is a secret worth keeping in a journal.

Secret 5: Your Successes and Your Failures

Law 4: Always Say Less Than Necessary

― "Powerful people impress and intimidate by saying less."

In my former life, I would tell Mrs Barracuda about my bad days at work. I would have defended it as "healthy communication" so that we could “solve problems together”. It was actually "me seeking sympathy and agreement" about my "whining, stressed frame." I would tell her about my good days, too - seeking a little acknowledgement from mommy for doing a good job. I was ruining any chance I had of being perceived as a guy who "just gets it". Saying these things made me appear weak, so I stopped. When my wife asks about my day, regardless of what happened at the office: “It was good!” And I mean it.

If - by Rudyard Kipling (excerpt, emphasis mine)

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings
And never breathe a word about your loss;
...If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds’ worth of distance run,
Yours is the Earth and everything that’s in it,
And—which is more—you’ll be a Man, my son!

We all fail. When we’re growing, we might fail even more.

Do you wallow in your failures, inviting others to celebrate your pity and blame outside forces? Or do you weaponize failure as your own secret source of power? I remember why I failed last time. When the opportunity presents itself again, I’ll make a different choice, because I want a different outcome. This motivation is stronger than shame, it’s my own endless desire to be better. Next time, I won’t fail to ask for the sale, to dance with the girl, or to stand up to my boss.

Secret 6: The Good, Upstanding, Virtuous Shit You Do All The Time

It needed to be fixed, so you fixed it. Your wife forgot to restock that important thing, so you did it without a word. That guy who needed lunch, the flat tire on your daughter’s car, and that bill that would have become a collection.

You took care of it all, and no one noticed, and you’re fine with that. This is exactly the type of accountability that will make your wife think you have magic powers - but you’re not doing any of this for her. You’re a high value man who takes care of the necessary things in his universe, and that puts you in a better position to do more for yourself and others. You’re living by your own standards these days, right?

Law 38: Think As You Will But Behave Like Others

“If you make a show of going against the times, flaunting your unconventional ideas and unorthodox ways, people will think that you only want attention and that you look down upon them. They will find a way to punish you for making them feel inferior. It is far safer to blend in and nurture the common touch. Share your originality only with tolerant friends.”
* or intolerant misogynist strangers

You’re becoming a man of quiet power, and you’re giving from a place of abundance. In fact, you may be giving far greater gifts than lunches and errands - but you don’t need to tell that to anyone. The silent gratitude you have for your own life is more valuable than the desire to share your secrets with others.

Conclusion

Become a high value man whose massive frame doesn't care about secrets. On your way there, leverage those secrets to your advantage. Don't reveal the source of your magic powers, and don't brag about your efforts. When you share with your inner circle, do it wisely. Stop saying things that make you appear weak, and consolidate power by controlling your own mouth first.
I almost lost my marriage of 32 years and turned it around in 3 months.

by vabab8 | October 25, 2019 | Link

First off I want to thank both u/SorcererKing and u/Over60_FireTempered3 for telling me to post this.

BACKGROUND

I have been married for 32 years (me 55 yo, wife 57 yo). I have two kids one daughter 22 years old and son 20 years old. My son is a special needs child. He has Angelman’s Syndrome. He is missing his 15 chromosome. This affects his motor skill development and he is also undersized for his age. My son cannot walk, talk or is potty trained (he is in diapers). I guess the closest to Angelman’s Syndrome would be Cerebral Palsy. This is important because my wife is a Certified Nurse’s Aide and her full time job is to provide our son with all care he needs 24/7 365 days a years. When my son was born we went through hell because he had tactile defensiveness. This meant he did not want to be held and cried all the time (constantly) until he just ran out of steam and collapsed. He refused to drink milk and lost 2 lbs after being born. We went from Pediatrician to Pediatrician asking how to turn the “colicky baby “around because he was “failing to thrive”. This lead to extreme stress in our marriage as we were both exhausted from lack of sleep and the constant crying. During that time period, my wife felt it necessary to go sleep with him because she was concerned about his health even though other families with Angelman’s kids did not do that. I slept alone for 20 years. We fell into a deadbedroom (sexless marriage). I remained committed to marriage because of my religious beliefs but was lonely, sad, angry and resentful of my son because he took my wife away from me (completely irrational thoughts). Although this sounds weird, it was like my wife was having an affair with my son. She was no longer giving me any attention and was giving it to him. She was distant, bitchy and never happy. It was like me and my wife was roommates and not husband and wife. I had numerous conversations with her for over 12 years asking for her to meet my needs as a husband. She always agreed with me and said that she would “TRY”. She would always say that she was in “mommy mode” and did not feel sexual. It was always her and not me. I tried to do more “choreplay” (do the dishes, vacuum, dust, cook etc.) and nothing changed. Brought her flowers, gifts and all of that and still nothing.

MAIN EVENT

Then last winter it all came to a head with a “main event” on Christmas 2018. When it was time to pass out and open presents what do you think my loving, devoted wife of 31 years (at the time) got me for a Christmas present? NOTHING, NADA, ZILCHE. She got everyone else hundreds of dollars of presents. I was hurt and embarrassed beyond belief. She said that she did not know what to get me so she just didn’t think to get me anything. Folks the opposite of love is not hate ……. It is indifference. At that moment I knew that she truly did not love me anymore. She did not know what to get me so she just didn’t think to get me anything. Folks the opposite of love is not hate ……. It is indifference. At that moment I knew that she truly did not love me anymore. She did not love me or was “in love” with me. I wasn’t even a thought to her except my paycheck. There was one incident 2 years prior in which I was demoted at work due to “political” issues. When I phoned her to tell her the news, what would you think her first words were? Were they “I am so sorry, how are you doing”? Nope, her first and only words to me were “did you get a pay cut”. She never asked me one thing about how I was feeling. The only thing I was to her for years was “a paycheck” to keep her in her life style. Christmas day I threw a fit (like a little child). We got into a major fight and she accused me of ruining “her Christmas”. Of course I did not give a shit and told her as so much.

EPIPHANY

In the past I had always reassured her that divorce was never an option and truly believed that up until that day. I realized that she took my commitment to her and this marriage for granted. She took me and this marriage for granted until I let her know that my commitment to this marriage is not guaranteed. The fights continued and also the discussions. I had a “cognitive disconnect” (AKA mental breakdown) at work and was offered “counseling”. I was a broken man. Had no sense of self-worth, no confidence, no happiness. Even though I was in a deep hole, I was not going to go down without a fight. Counseling was stupid. All she did was let me talk and offered nothing. I stopped going after 4 sessions.

MY SEARCH

I went on the internet and searched deadbedroom. I came upon Reddit. Did some searching found r/marriedredpill. Started reading the sidebar. I also searched YouTube and found the Bluepillprofessor. I have a special place in my heart for him. Learned that my wife was not attracted to me because I stopped being the dude she fell in love with and married and had become a bluepill beta fat f*ck. I stopped leading my family. I found out and realized a family is like a ship and I am the captain. My wife is the first officer. She is very important but the ship is my responsibility not hers. She took over my duties (literally) and deep down resented me for it all those years. I was a drunk captain and she had to run the ship. I learned through the Red Pill and r/marriedredpill and bluepillprofessor to take responsibility for myself first and my family second. I needed to become my own mental point of origin. Stop being a “nice guy”.

GET TO WORK

I was a mess. 5’10” 225lbs and of fat f*ck and couldn’t lift shit. I began to lead. Lift weights (now bench 260lbs max lift and 210lbs 8x3). I dress better. Act better. HELL JUST BE BETTER. Dropped 40lbs 3 months. Began reading . The first book that I have ever read cover to cover in my life was Rollo Tomassi’s “Rational Male”. I am currently working on No More Mister Nice Guy and others to follow. I run 3 miles a day. I am in better shape now than I have ever been (too bad I waited until 55 yo to do it)

THE SHIFT

OMG girls/women began to notice me. Never happened to me before (or at least wasn’t aware). I didn’t really understand what was going on but liked the attention. I could see my wife noticing. Especially when “Amy” walked up to me and gave me her number. The wife flipped 180 degrees in 3 months. No longer deadbedroom. Sex is back to the frequency when we were dating (33 years is a long time to remember). Now things that were never on the table (sexually) are now on the table with gusto. We are acting like we are dating again. We go out at least once a month (by ourselves, we hire a special babysitter) and I take her to dinner at a 5 star restaurants. I do not tell where she is going. I keep it exciting. I tell her that her job is to look pretty and have fun. For more years than I can remember she stopped wearing dresses. She stopped acting feminine. That has all changed. She has bought a new wardrobe of dresses. She now is concerned about how she looks (to me). We now have lots of fun. It is like we have started dating again.

REALIZATION/CONCLUSION

All that I have seen and read tell me that all relationships go through this. You start out the Alpha dog that got her interested in you. You get married and/or start living together and BAM!!! You get lazy. You get complacent. You gain weight. You stop the hobbies you once did. You dress sloppy (you know jeans with stains and holes and a faded teashirt). You now just sit around binge on Netflix. You become needy. You are thirsty for her attention. You got no options and you are a like a needy child. She is busy with her own life. She now sees you as another child and mothers do not have sex with children. You get angry. Now the fights start or get worse. You go to your corner and she hers. If you’re lucky, no one cheats. (but more likely give opportunity, someone does). Then it’s over before anyone had the opportunity to really ask “WHAT THE HELL JUST HAPPENED OVER xxxxx YEARS”. I was fortunate, neither of us cheated (but oh how I was tempted). The day I realized that this shit works is this: my wife NEVER comes into the bathroom when I shower. We have a glass shower so you can see in. One day I was taking a shower and I turn around and she is standing there leaning against the vanity just staring at me. Then she just says “you have really stepped up” and she had the look, you know that look. That look of adoration that cannot be faked. I was freaking out. You always hear of thing that claim to work miracles. You try and try and all you get is disappointment after disappointment. You lose faith that there is something out there that really works. Over Christmas holiday season I gave one last chance before I filed for divorce. At that point you could have stuck a fork in me because I was done.
I had resigned myself to failure.

WHERE ARE WE AT NOW

We do things now together now. I have to personally thank the bluepillprofessor for the “10 second kiss”. It’s my personal favorite. It sets the tone for the day. At first she said “what the dell do you think you are doing?” I just persisted, grabbed the back of her head along with a handful of hair and continued every day. Now she begs for it. We walk 2 miles every day with my son pushing his chair as we walk and talk. I took a chance not knowing exactly how to implement KINO and as she took her turn pushing our son, I lightly placed my hand on the small of her back and just held it there kind of showing love and support for her. One day I forgot to do that and she kept looking at me and finally asked “is there something wrong”? I looked at her with a stare and said no. She said that I wasn’t touching her and she thought that I was mad at her. Guys, THIS SHIT WORKS. It’s freaky how this works. My only regret is it took me 20 years to find out. I, for the first time in my life climbed a 14,000ft mountain (Mt.
Evans). I zipped lined over the Royal Gorge (1500 ft drop). These are things I would never do last year. I am a new man, new life, new mission. That’s my story.
“This is your last chance. After this, there is no turning back. You take the blue pill - the story ends, you wake up in your bed and believe whatever you want to believe. You take the red pill - you stay in Wonderland and I show you how deep the rabbit-hole goes.” – Morpheus

Steel’s Guide to Married Red Pill (A)

Given some of the recent changes and the jump in subscribers, it is a good time to give a brief overview of MRP. Hey dude, got a minute? (A)... Let’s have a conversation (A).

What Is The Red Pill

For an answer to this, take a gander at podcast #31, start at 22:40.

Rollo’s answer - It will always be about intersexual dynamics.

Rian Stone – Game is red pill. You have to understand why things are happening and the way they are happening. He references this post (A) from back in 2009.

Rollo – Red pill is the theory, game is the testing of red pill.

Donovan – Not only understanding a woman’s true nature, but being man enough, or having the balls to act on what you know with red pill awareness.

Steel’s answer – The red pill, to me, is the truth behind intersexual dynamics between men and woman, and taking action based on that truth. Simple as that. The red pill is not “sit back, relax, and keyboard warrior away”, nor is it a wretched hive of scum and villainy. No, scratch that. We’re taking that label. MRP – A Sexual Wretched Hive of Married Scum and Villainy™.

Too many people are trying to define red pill, or have corrupted the definition. Make it simple. Intersexual dynamics and Game. That’s all.

What Is Married Red Pill

From the FAQ:

“We are men that subscribe to The Red Pill (TRP) philosophy of sexual strategy, and are dedicated to applying it in marriage or in Long Term Relationships. This sub was created independently to address the needs of married men to discuss relationships issues.

Our approach is different from /r/relationships and /r/deadbedrooms because those don't work. Instead, here we focus on how to become stronger men to lead our marriage and LTRs to happiness.”
Married Red Pill first is a locker room. There will be trash talk. Married Red Pill also is a laboratory. There is practical advice here. But sometimes you get a lot of spaghetti thrown up on the wall to see if it sticks. Keep that in mind.

Ultimately, Married Red Pill is a bunch of men swapping notes on what works and what doesn’t from a married perspective. If you don’t like that, don’t let the locker room door hit you on the way out.

For additional perspective on MRP and AskMRP, read this (A).

Rule Zero

Rule Zero: Stay On Topic

From ye olde TRP forum – “TRP's mission is to discuss men's identity, sexual strategy, and options in the context of our current global culture for the benefit of men. Anyone who does not share that goal will be banned the instant we detect them. We are not interested in debating or defending our experiences to those who disagree with the red pill, nor do we want to clog up our threads defending the morality of our choices.”

So, what does that mean for MRP? Rule Zero there is the same as Rule Zero here – mostly though we are married. Stay on topic. If you do not stay on topic, you will be banned and your post deleted.

If your post does not add value, your post will be removed. The moderators will continue to work to ensure the signal to noise ratio is correct.

What Do I Do First

You are expected to read the sidebar – all of the sidebar. You are expected to SHUT THE FUCK UP. You are expected to get up off your fat ass and go get a gym membership, and actually go to the gym. You are expected to lift heavy weights until it hurts so good at least three times per week. You are expected to stand outside on the porch for three days without food and endure all sorts of humiliation. Well maybe not standing on the porch. But you get the idea.

What don’t you do? Get an itchy trigger finger and write up a post without having done these items.

What do you do? You read this guide (A).

You chill out (A).

You start your work on the sidebar and wiki.

You make a decision to get better.

You make a damn plan.
You get to work.

STFU

If you are new, and reading this, I guarantee you that you have no idea how to STFU. Even guys who have been here a while still struggle with their STFU.

First of all, let’s cover this: you do not talk about fight club. You DO NOT TALK ABOUT FIGHT CLUB. YOU DO NOT TALK ABOUT FIGHT CLUB! However you want to phrase it, you STFU about fight club. There’s no point in stepping on your own dick.

Second, when your wife is fighting with you, you do not engage. Do you think that arguing with her and having verbal diarrhea of the mouth is going to get you anywhere? No. Are you trying to argue with a woman’s hamster? Newsflash: women’s hamsters eat logic and shit more hamsters. You need to STFU unless you want to deal with a shitton of hamsters.

Third, don’t open your mouth if what will come out of it is unattractive. Be attractive. Don’t be unattractive. Call it the attractive filter on your mouth. Don’t say stupid stuff. Don’t say stuff that makes you look bad. Just shut up.

Fourth, don’t go to your wife for validating behavior. So you lost five pounds. You fixed the things around the house you said you would. You bench-pressed more than the bar. You took the car for repairs and an oil change and got it running again. Good for you. Take that cup of STFU and drink it deeply. You shut up. You don’t talk about the stuff that you should have been doing anyway. You act like a man who has their shit together. Let me repeat that: YOU ACT LIKE A MAN WHO HAS THEIR SHIT TOGETHER. Men don’t go to mommy and say “Look at me and how well I did.”

Fifth, with regards to shit tests, if you are a beginner, you need to learn how to STFU. You will be tested once you start making positive changes in your life.

Sixth, verbal intercourse is optional. (Note - read the comments as well as the original post).

Seventh, you have to calibrate your use of STFU. You don’t eat paint and STFU like someone with autism. Adjust and modify your use of STFU as appropriate. This is one of the best definitions of STFU out there.

Eighth, if you are new, you are not doing enough STFU.

From our resident RP philosopher:

“We tell you to STFU because you play the victim, you overshare your fee-fees, you ruin any respect people might have had for you. As you learn, you want to get validated: Look, I’m figuring it out! Don't do that. If you do, you'll undo your progress. Cue bad feelings, poor self-concept.”

Drink your cup of STFU. Wash it down with some more STFU. And don’t forget to STFU.
Lift

Lifting is not optional. Lifting is your foundation for what you are doing here. If you have been a fence sitter, reading the books, but not doing any lifting or taking any action in your life, you’ve done nothing.

You need to get up off your fat unhealthy BMI ass and get to the gym.

Let me give you an example from a recent u/OsmiumZulu post:

“Pick up artist Owen from RSD and fitness YouTuber Connor Murphy.

Both of these guys get a ton of response from women. Owen overcomes his sub-average appearance by having extraordinarily tight game. If you watch some of his in-field videos you will see the that most of his pick-up goes like this: 1) Approach 2) Resistance and a gauntlet of fitness tests 3) Hold frame 4) more tests 5) eventually she becomes attracted to him despite his appearances On the other hand, Connor's physique works like a cheat code in a video game. His approaches basically go like this: 1) Approach (or get approached) 2) take shirt off 3) Get number close, kiss close, F close, whatever. “

Now I’m not saying that you are going to look like Connor Murphy. But let me ask you this question. If you were fit, hot, and in shape, do you think that it would be easier to attract your wife?

Would you be attractive to all women?

Just sayin’.

The sidebar has some information here (A), but you’ll find more on places like the Stronglifts subreddit or other similar subreddits. Similarly, you can find more information here.

You want some comparison lifts? Here you go (A).

And absolutely do not get fuckarounditis (A) at the gym. You have to understand, the iron will never lie to you (A). You need to focus, have a plan, do it right. Here is a great lifting post and plan. (A)

Personally, there are lots of choices for your lifting program, but I believe the best program is the one that you can stick with, the one that gets you to open that gym door over and over. u/bogeyd6 said it best, 75% of your problems can be fixed by lifting (A).

One final note. You will not be able to outlift a bad diet. You need to figure out what are macros – these, not these (this place needs more Excel jokes). You need to eat right. Check out the references below for some links (60 DoD section). Calculate your TDEE. Decide for yourself whether the food you are eating is helping you or hindering you. I’m a big fan of keto, but you have to figure out what’s best for you.

Firstly, get the fuck out!
by fuckmrp | February 1, 2019 | Link

When she cheats on you, you burn that shit down. The only position of power after being cheated on is to scorch the earth and allow time to regrow new fruit.

I’m seeing too many guys coming in here letting their women rug sweep infidelity and controlling the outcome of their disloyalties, fuck that.

Even if you want to give her a second chance, you burn that shit down. She gets demoted to negative priority and can audition amongst the new pussy you’re now entertaining. If she’s truly remorseful she’ll crawl through shit to get back into your good graces, if not then the truth is exposed.

I’m not proposing this as a plan to take her back because I’m wiling to bet once new pussy is in play and the smoke clears the fields, any man of value will have moved on.

Beyond that most of your wives won’t put in the effort, beyond lip service, to get back to being worthy of your time. They are not willing to do much more than continue to try and manipulate you, wake the fuck up!

And realize any resistance to this is derived from your weakness. So much of the problems I read here are rooted in weakness. Your need to seek comfort and unwillingness to accept immediate pain is the reason for your suffering.

Lean into the pain, learn to be grateful for it. It’s there you’ll find change, growth and progress.
Field Report: Year One.

September 2015: I turn 40. Wife throws me a big party. Tons of family and friends filling my house, yard and driveway. My parents come and my dad grills fifteen pounds of flank-steak for tacos. Kids everywhere, margaritas, bonfire. People tell funny stories about me into the night. I love my friends, my three sons, my life, except...

October: Except my wife won’t have sex with me. I can’t sleep. Spend hours in the night negotiating, pleading, crying on the edge of the bed. Escape the pain with alcohol, weed, porn. Google tells me “low sex marriage” is extremely common, and a leading cause of divorce. I find Ironwood’s blog which leads me to MRP. Eureka! Finally, some people with answers and an action plan. Except, wait, it’s MY fault? And I have to do WHAT? Ok, fine. I read MMSLP and the Book of Pook. I take a good look in the mirror and now I can see the dad-bod, the beer gut. I wouldn’t fuck me either.

November: Fuck. My dad goes in for bypass surgery on November 17th. Complications ensue in Intensive Care, and he’s gone. The mid-life crisis I avoided on my birthday comes crashing in. I plan the funeral, write the obit, re-evaluate my life. I am now the oldest man in my family. I have to stop being the Prince (and the frog) and start being the King. Suddenly I can see how the sex is not the issue, but a symptom. Choking. Down. The. Pill. My dad was the Man. Now he’s dead. I must become the Man. At least I have a MAP, I read the Mindful Attraction Plan, but I am mad.

December: Anger. I walk into the gym for the first time. Listening to Professor’s podcasts, Art of Manliness, Order of Man. I had been TRI (athaloning) ing for years but lifting heavy weight is different. Read NMMNG and skimmed WISNIFG, that sucker is long. I Learn enough to stop DEERing, start to STFU and begin to establish something called “Frame.” I start noticing the principles in daily life and popular media. Still fat, sad, and angry. Recognizing shit tests, still failing.

January 2016: Start passing shit tests. My wife senses something is different, chalks it up to grief. Shit tests increase, so do feelz. Sex goes from once a month to once a week. I experiment with OI, which is new to me. I still appear butthurt, can’t STFU, and am not even close to a DNGAF attitude. Still a huge amount of my self-worth wrapped into my marriage. Read The Rational Male 1 & 2, also Fight Club. Starting to control the anger, replacing it with sore muscles. Starting to enjoy the journey and the pain, but still digesting. Nothing internalized.

February: Start improving diet and wardrobe. At least paying attention to them by controlling portions and ironing clothes. Realize I have been self-medicating with porn, so I give that up easy. Feel the hunger, how it energizes. My wife starts working out more, shit tests intensify, but she’s starting to be less harpy and more sweet. She is still pretty hot, hard to keep up. We have sex twice in one weekend. But I’m still a bitch and I take it as validation. There is still a part of me that is doing this for the wrong reason: her. Visiting my mom more often, a few hours drive. I realize her happiness is not my responsibility either, but she needs help so I help. Take advantage of those weekends to lift, journal, read, and start approaching women. Begin reading Way of the Superior Man. Holy fuck. Mindset changing.

March: Mindset changing. I have a huge realization that my anger has all come from fear -- the fear that I am not in control. I realize I can take control if I take responsibility -- If I decide to be the Captain. For me, this is the beginning of understanding Frame. That if I can start acting, I can stop reacting. I am the Captain, the spirit of the family begins with me. If I want something to turn out a certain way, if I want a vibe of respect and joy, I must embody that. I make friends with the anger. I read Meditations, slowly, and consider the power of stoicism. I realize the Rage has always been there, and always will be. But I can channel it into heavy weights and the pedals of my bike -- not my kids, my wife. Springtime.

April: Spring forward. I begin my first cut. Low carb, low calorie. Lots of water. I cut back on masturbation, stop chugging beer and start sipping whiskey. I am enjoying the hunger, it energizes. I am enjoying the feeling of exercising my body and my will. I feel in control. People are starting to notice me, and I notice them. I had not allowed myself to really feel attracted to women in years, but now I am getting hugs and giving them back. I have now lost 25 pounds of fat and probably gained 10 pounds of muscle. 6’1, 190lbs. My pants are too big, my belts are too big. My wife is MUCH calmer and more receptive to my advances. I am still getting hard No’s on a regular basis, but also a lot more openings. Now, I have a new struggle: ED. What? I realize I am still WAY too focused on sex (it’s now ME who can’t relax). I have a long way to go. I read Models and Billie Lynn’s Long Halftime Walk.

May: The test. On a warm Friday night I stay home till my family is in bed. Restless, I head back into town. Great band at a local bar, tons of people, great energy. I have always been a good dancer, so I’m having fun. It’s weird going in to a party scene with all this new knowledge of game, SMV and Laws of Attraction. Dancing with lots of cuties, lock into one in particular. Young, blonde, HB7. She invites me home for a backyard fire with some friends. I help make the fire. We sing songs, she cuddles up to me. It’s late and we are pretty drunk. She says she is tired and invites me in. I walk her inside and she is on me. There in the doorway, she kisses me like I haven’t been kissed in a long, long time. Whoa. What just happened? I tell her I should put out the fire and goodnight. Another kiss. Next day I text her that I’m leaving town with my wife and kids. Wife and kids? I don’t remember what I read in May.

June: Man-cation. Once a year my boys from back in the day pick a random city to meet up in. We have a fantasy football league and spend the year conspiring about where to go and what to do. It’s great. I recommend mancation to any MRP guy trying to re-boot. It’s so fun to just totally screw around and remember my roots. I can’t bullshit these guys. One friend asks me what’s up and I explain some of the journey, and about kissing the girl in May. He confesses that his wife caught him with an escort last month and they are on the brink of divorce. We are not alone, guys. Some of my friends want to see strippers but I convince them it’s more fun to go to clubs and talk to real girls. We have a great time getting shit-tested by some babes at a pool hall. One can’t stop feeling my shoulders and arms. I have a great run at pool winning like 8 games in a row before losing the table and my boys drag me out of there. When i get home my wife, surprisingly, missed me “a ton.” She lets me know with her actions as well as her words. I read One Flew over the Cuckoo’s nest -- MRP principles abound.

July: My family flies out on an extended trip overseas. Something we had planned for a long time. A little bit of work and a lot of traveling, exploring, adventuring. Cool to see my kids adapting to new cultures and countries. My wife and I traveled a lot in our early days, and I remembered what it was like. When we first met, I had the vision, I bought the tickets, I lead us to amazing places and experiences. We had crazy fun and crazy sex. What had happened? Life, I guess. We came home, found stressful jobs, started raising babies. Somewhere in there, I stopped leading and started to defer to her. Attraction went down, distractions went up. I can see it now. And now that we are on a new adventure I am in the lead again. The excitement is back, and the laughter, and the sex. Finally, I understand what it means to have Abundance Mentality. I had forgotten how wet she could get, and how hard I could get. The ED is long gone, because the pressure is gone. We are having so much fun, doing things in bed we have never done before. Afterward, I have to ask if she is OK. Of course, she smiles. Of course. I read the Martian and the War of Art.

August: Off course. While we were out of the country, I lapsed on exercise, ate too much food, and drank too much beer. Gained back some fluff, lost some gains. Not only that, but we are now back to work, back to school, back to the grind. More stress equals less sex, and the honeymoon, as they say, is over again. Then, while I go to visit my mom, my wife finds a document on the laptop where I have been journaling and drafting OYS posts. She discovers The Red Pill and devours it for a weekend while I am gone. When I get home, I know something is up because she is being a shrew and, strangely, we have sex every night for a week. Then she tells me that she read everything. I hold frame and don’t hide. I’m sorry you had to see that, now you know and you can’t not know. Now we have to talk about it. It takes a while for me to explain the difference between TRP and MRP. I tell her how I found it, and why, and that I credit this sub for helping me get my head out of my ass and my ass into the gym. Yes, it’s harsh, but so is the fact that over 50% of marriages these days fail. You may not like it, but all this work, all this reading, started out as a way to keep this family together. Finally, she gets it. She realizes that she likes what’s happening and it’s none of her business what I am reading or writing. Exactly. I get back to work on diet and lifting. I read No Country for Old Men.

September: Forty-One. So, here I am. From the outside, things are much the same as they were a year ago. Same job, same wife, same dog, same bed. From the inside, though, everything is different. I have a mission and a MAP, I sleep well. I Initiate almost every night and still get turned down half the time. The difference is, the hard No bothers her more than it bothers me. More importantly, there is a lightness in my house. We have fun, mess with each other, flirt with each other. My kids are much calmer and happier and we have genuine conversation and laughter daily. I have internalized OI, abundance mentality, and I have FINALLY STFU (my biggest hurdle. As you can see by this post, I have a tendency to be...verbose), and I am actually starting to NGAF. As in, I feel in control of my destiny, my household, and my temper. I can visualize a life on my own, beholden to no-one, master of my domain. Sometimes I fantasize about that freedom. But for now, I am happy with hard-mode. I enjoy the company of my family. I will continue to take care of the shit I need to take care of and improve myself every day. Currently reading The Fountainhead and Manson’s Subtle Art of Not Giving a Fuck.

Thanks for reading, and for writing the posts that saved my marriage, possibly my life.
I've been asked before on here about strategy. I am slightly conflicted about posting this for two reasons.

1. You probably aren't ready.
2. If you are, you probably don't need this.

I'm not putting this here to say you should do this, but because I think there is value in here. I enjoy reading the theory and philosophy in the sidebar and experiences of others in this subreddit. I have taken away many lessons by reading your stories and the comments. I wake up every morning at 5 and study for an hour or so. That could take the form of reading a book, or browsing TRP/MRP. Many forms. Either way, I have taken a lot of value from this place so I have decided I want to share my experience with the goal of adding some value back. I approach women as a married man.

You will see some parallels to the 12 Levels of Dread and other concepts in this community. This is essentially how I tied it all together for myself. I encourage everyone here to take this through Phase 3, but the final step is not something I'm going to ever encourage or promote. These are phases, but they augment each other in sequence. What I mean is, you don't STOP Phase 1 when you enter Phase 2. This is not to be done at a certain pace. You will know when you have graduated a phase. Although I am calling this Married Man Game, I'm actually not going to talk a lot about the actual process of gaming a woman or OPSEC. These are covered.

This is about you, and how you can progress through the phases of your journey towards being a man with options. You have to decide what you want to take from this.

Married Man Game Phase 1: Get Comfortable

When you're new to this, getting started, it's a lot to take in. You're angry, your world is crashing down around you, there's a ton of material to read, and you're overanalyzing everything. The problem is that it's easy to enter analysis paralysis. We say: lift weights, get your anger out in the gym. Read. Lift. STFU. Yes, you should do that. The problem is, you're not going to get anywhere just reading. You really have to do the work, as I covered in my last post. At this stage, it's simple, and you are not going for K or F closes. Very important.

Game your wife

You should be practicing game on your wife. AA, AM, STFU, Cocky Funny, etc, Come on. You have a woman here who knows you better than anyone, who you've probably been a complete fucking mess with, who is going to be the hardest woman in your world for you to game. Practice on her relentlessly. Your wife should always be the woman you are running your highest levels of game on, as long as you are married, period. So read your books, ask your questions here, and game your wife. As the 12 Levels state, learn to recognize and pass shit tests.

The goal is to become a natural at talking with people you don't know. We get in these bubbles where we see the same people every day, have the same friends, do the same routine. It's not good. There is a huge world out there for you to experience. As I said in Do the work, if you're not putting yourself out there, being vulnerable, sharing your gift with the world, you are a virus in the human social sphere and should be ashamed of yourself. I spent years like that. My God. What a waste. Start frequenting places. Get to know a barista at your local coffee shop, or a bartender. Learn to observe people, notice things like the hat they are wearing or a piece of jewelry, and open them. Get comfortable with being like "Hey, I have to run but you seem cool we should grab a beer (or do X activity we happened to have in common) sometime. What is your number?"

Last night I just walked up to some dude and was like "yo, what beer are you drinking?" Next thing you know we're having a 10 minute conversation about travel and the West Coast. Another guy walked up besides me and I heard his accent: "Australia? You must live here now since you're wearing that American flag hat." Then we're having a 5 minute conversation about his investment company and the Hurricanes in Florida. It's simple. You can master this like anything, but you won't if you don't ever get in the world and make the effort. I talk to everyone. I'm like that guy who gets in line at the Post Office and starts chatting people up. Some people think it's annoying but most people are happy that someone with a good, positive vibe is noticing them and making them feel special. My wife has witnessed this and pulled me aside: "How the fuck do you do that?! Is there a book?! Teach me how to make friends!" Read Patrick King's Conversation Tactics series. Make sure you are small talking with women as well as men, obviously.

Get Fit

You aren't going to be running shit for Married Man Game if you're a fat and ugly lazy dude so handle this during this phase. Make a diet plan, workout routinely, etc. Everything you need for this is on the internet, so figure it out. Jesus, just lift weights man. We put a lot of value on that here but let me tell you the reality is that in the real world almost no one works out. You're going to stand out majorly. I'm a tall, fit guy, but I'm not a professional weightlifter. It's extremely rare that I see anyone, ever, in better shape than me other than on the internet. I live in a big city too. Not at the beach, not at the bar, nowhere. Most men (90% I'd gather), their weekends consist of sitting on the couch watching football and eating junk food. Most men are AFC's and it's so prevalent that it's pathetically easy to stand out. Even the 10% who are in shape, most of them are still Blue Pill. You have to understand what an advantage you have.

Married Man Game Phase 2: Build Your Character and Get Sexual

Know Who You Are (Build Frame)

You need to know who you are, what you're after in life, and what you enjoy (hobbies). What makes you different? No one is boring. I used to think I was boring but the reality is I just value things differently than most modern men. For example, I like artistic pursuits and writing obscure music with dark lyrics. I like landscaping. I like doing renovation projects. I like experimenting with diets and trying different food. I've traveled to interesting destinations for business. I don't watch sports, rarely watch TV, and never go to the movies. I give absolutely no shit about Fantasy Football. This makes me more interesting actually, because people are so used to meeting basic dudes. So, find yourself a little bit and be okay with setting a definition of who you are for yourself. This is fluid, you should always be building and refining your character. This is where your frame is cultivated.

Elevator Speech

You should be able to describe yourself to someone in the same amount of time it takes to ride an elevator (30 seconds). Write this down and practice it.

Cultivate a Style

This is simple, but cultivate a style. My style is I look like a business guy who could also walk into Home Depot and start slapping 2x4's together to build a shed in the middle of my office to store my hiking gear and motorcycle. All girls think I have tattoos. I don't. My clothes conform to my body. I never wear a shirt with a logo on it. I have a few different types of boots I wear, a nice pair of white sneakers, one pair of jeans, a few pairs of shorts, dark dress socks, a few pairs of dress pants and a handful of button down shirts, as well as some more casual shirts I rotate through. Keep it simple, but you should have a "look" to you. Not just a basic dude wearing your baggy jeans, New Balance sneakers with white socks, and matching 49ers hat and t-shirt. I was with a girl last night, sitting next to her, she was complaining about all the dudes in the restaurant and how they all looked boring. Then she confessed she hasn't had sex in almost a year. Don't look boring. This bitch would literally rather have no sex for a year than have to fuck a guy like you. I don't blame her.

Mirror Game

If you're going to get good at this, you need to practice seduction and presentation. This is cheesy, but you need to put in some time in front of a mirror practicing your expressions. AM can be done completely with expressions, not a word said. Know how to pull off a seductive eyebrow raise? What is your expression when you are sitting by yourself somewhere, or walking around? You should know how you appear to other people, and you should know how to look sexy. I walked into a place last night and a girl just walked up and handed me her number before she left. We had no conversation. This was done completely by how I carry myself. I'm easily 2 points above her SMV, but this doesn't just happen to someone who doesn't know how to have sex appeal. My first text to her was "Nudes or we never met".
Study up on posture, power positions, etc. All the info is out there. It's covered in a lot of the sidebar material even.

Game Other Women

All the strategies of gaming women are covered here and TRP sidebar material. You should be N closing at this phase with regularity.

Always wear a condom

Buy a condom and carry it with you while you're out socializing. The idea here is that you are allowing the conditions for sex with someone other than your wife. You'll likely feel very weird about this. That's a good thing. If you aren't doing things to push your comfort zone, you're not doing this right. If you can't even walk into a store and buy a condom, knowing you are not getting it for fucking your wife, you won't be able to push to other levels. This is a mindset thing that helped me a lot. Reminds me of that post from TRP that was taken down where the guy said he walks around imagining himself with a massive set of antlers. I still do this.

Ditch the ring at first, if you must. I did.

You're going to also probably be uncomfortable hitting on women while you're wearing a ring. As you get comfortable with talking to random women (small talk), you'll start to see openings for making it a little sexual or flirty. Take them, that's good, but you need to get comfortable with overt sexuality and it's best to do this with women you'll never see again who have no idea you're married or else you will likely have a mental block up (and so will she) because the BP Angel on your shoulder is going to be like "Hey! You're married! Don't even look at another woman!" and she's going to sense your apprehension. You might even feel guilty about it. It's insignificant. This is simply a step for you to unplug. If you already don't give a shit and can be overtly sexual with women while wearing your ring, just skip this advice.

Married Man Game Phase 3: Two in the Kitty

At this phase, you are going to be gaming women openly, overtly, sexually, as a married man. You should be fucking the brains out of your wife at this point, or else I seriously hope you are about to give the FMorFY speech. If not, and you have a good reason that you have decided is right for you, then fine. The point is still not to K close or F close. Either way, Commandment VII of the 16 commandments of Poon: Always keep two in the kitty. If you don't have some women you could easily go fuck, regularly, if you and your wife got divorced, you're pussyfooting about and she's your only option. You're holding back and not making the effort. My opinion.

Know Your Story

Why are you being so sexual with this woman? She's going to want to know about your marriage. If it's a shit test, you shouldn't answer her, you should tease her. You'll know if it's a shit test. If you want two in the kitty, well, girls man, they want to know they have a chance at locking you down. That's their fantasy. Bagging a high value male. So what are you going to say? They're probably going to ask if you're happily married. If it's a comfort test, I say, "Look, there's no sob story. I got in a serious relationship very young, before I knew myself, and then got married. I have kids now, so things are complicated. The judicial system isn't exactly built in my favor, and it's very important to me that I have influence over my children's lives on a daily basis. I don't know what will happen, but I'm just trying to make the most of it. It is what it is." I say this because it's true.

Maybe your story is "I'm very happily married, period" in which case there's absolutely no room for plausible deniability, the relationship is only about sex (which she can get easily), and you have to understand that women are BP conditioned and will be turned off by this in the majority of cases. I'd leave some room for plausible deniability, as you always should when it comes to women.

Accept Rejection

You are going to get rejected a lot. You have to be purely OI and DNGAF at this stage. You are going to get shit tested like crazy. This is TRP on hard mode, not because your wife is hard to game, but because you are going to be met with so many more challenges than you ever would experience as a single guy. Get over it. This is good for your character. Most of the girls won't even let you N close because of that ring. The key is that, for most of them, it's actually pretty exciting to get hit on by a married man so overtly and they're going to be very curious. At the same time, they are conflicted. This is good, but it means you likely have to be more persistent and much more OI, as I said.

For example, I was with a girl last night. I'm extremely OI with this chick. I'm not like following her on Facebook and texting her to hang out all the time. I told her straight up, "I'm attracted to you and I'm not ashamed of that". She told me to keep her in mind and contact her if I get divorced. This was months ago. Then I randomly talked to her Sunday and next thing you know she's setting something up for a few friends and I... and her and I are flirting. Slapped her ass before I left and she said she wants to see me soon, just us. I planted the seed, and I just let it go. She saw that I was okay with being rejected. She still shit tests me relentlessly. I don't care. Things are moving the direction I want them to, and I don't care how long it takes because I have other options, like, duh, my wife.

Accept the Risk

There's always the risk one of the girls you hit on is going to track down your wife and tell her. It is what it is.

Married Man Game Phase 4: Spin Plates

As I said, I will not be promoting this. This is new territory for me, but all the information you need is in the sidebar. This is you running TRP sexual strategy as a married man and there are consequences for these choices. I'm not encouraging this. This is on you, and once you get through the other phases, you will know if it's what you want. Here are some lessons I'm learning.

You're Losing Time With Family

Something to consider here, how important is this to you. Every date you go on with another girl is a date you could have taken your wife on. Every minute you're away gaming other women is a minute you could have gamed your wife (and a minute where another man could be gaming your wife). Every dinner you eat alone, you are not eating with your children. Think about this.

You Care Less About Connecting With Your Wife

You'd think having options would make it easier with your wife but in a way it makes it harder. For example, I have this girl texting me "Omg you're so fucking hot and bad and I love it, I can't wait to get you alone!" and I'm getting a text from my wife at the same time that's like "Well, I just cleaned throw up off the couch again!". My wife sends me the dirty texts too, but with the other girl it's purely sexual and low effort. You will be less invested in your marriage, which is good in many ways, but it has side effects.

Conclusion

I'm going to continue to refine and update this on my journey and as I think of things I forgot to include. My purpose here is not to write a guide to say This is How You Cheat On Your Wife! I hope there are some helpful things that you can pull from my experiences.
"Give me an example". The easiest rebuff to any statement you could possibly make for any argument. Recently one of our men was thrashed when he tried to help others who are in a situation many of us found ourselves in. "Give me an example." was often shouted. And there's no easy way to sum up one man's progress. Well, I've been here about a year and a half, and after the introspection I did after reading both DB and TBP comments and thinking to myself, "what has TRP done for me", I'm going to give you an example. Buckle up, because I'm about to take you on a journey to a low you may not have thought was possible.

Lifting: I did not lift before MRP. I ran, a lot. I still run, a lot. But I didn't lift because I was afraid that I did not know what I was getting into. I was afraid of tough guys at the gym, what they would think of me, and if I would look stupid not knowing what to do. I was afraid I would hurt myself, that my friends would think of me as trying to change into someone I'm not. Do you see that none of those reasons involve anything about not lifting because I don't like it or because I wouldn't like the results it would give me?

I lift now. I did the research on what exercise works what muscle as well as how to perform compound lifts correctly. And from within the depths of my soul I will tell you that every time I am finished a workout, I feel better than when I started. And that feeling lasts for at least 24 hours. And there are times afterwards I feel like a GOD. I look at myself in the mirror and see each and every muscle ripple and I see all the hard work I put into myself and I AM PROUD. The emotional good vibes I get from staring my limits dead in the face and pushing through are insane. MRP convinced me to lift. I mean, it stuffs this message into your brain how could you not?

Eating Right: I had some experiences with dieting and calorie counting before MRP. But a lot of it was me flying by the seat of my pants. It helped me know how to slim down (calories in v. calories out), but I did not really pay attention to what I was putting into my body. I ate a lot of sugar, and was hungry often. And when I get hungry, I get HANGRY. And it's bad.

Now I have done the research on how much protein I should be getting. That I should refuel with carbs before and after my runs. That lean meats and whole grains will make me feel fuller and that eating 4-5 smaller meals a day combined with protein will keep me from getting hungry. I cut chips entirely. I cut any sugar drink entirely. It's milk and water now. I researched documentaries and studied how different types of sugar are actually broken down, what they are broken down into, and how they are used by the body. How eating certain sugars enough leads to metabolic syndrome. How certain sugars like alcohol don't break down to the glucose your muscles need. I got myself down to 5% BF and have been hovering between 5 and 10% for 6-8 months now. The combination of lifting and eating right got me from this to this and I honestly cannot pass a mirror without it boosting my pride. It's not about vanity and how I must look for others (although that's a bonus), but it's about the pride I feel in MYSELF. MRP pushed me to take that control.

Hygiene: I did not wash my crack when I took a shower. I did not wash my feet when I took a shower. There I said it. Just never did. I used whatever soap was on hand, because soap is soap right? I let my neck hair grow when I felt too lazy to shave it. I had ear hair, and a rat tail. I had nose hair. And I shaved my facial hair on and off whenever with no real reason for it other than to change things up a bit now and then. I used Axe deodorant but never researched an antiperspirant before, and I sweat a lot. When I would smell someone out in public that stunk I would look at them with disdain, but somehow I thought it was okay when I climbed into bed to fuck and a cloud of funk wafted out from between my legs.

My feet and shoes stink a lot. I notice this now. I manage the smell with Lysol whenever I take them off now. I wash my entire self now in the shower. I took notice of my hair and how idiotic it was to keep drying it out with head and shoulders and not using conditioner. MRP mentioned using conditioner. I use conditioner now (big difference). I took a few weeks this fall to drive to the mall on the way home every day to sample a new cologne, to pick one that worked for me. I found a website that breaks down what scents are in each cologne so I can track what I'm smelling and try to pick out the smells I like. I picked up a body wash to match my cologne so smells don't conflict. I now have a spring/summer smell (C.O. Bigelow White Elixer) and a fall/winter smell (Armani Code, it's simply insane how good I smell now). I have an antiperspirant now. It works when used right (at night before bed people). I cut my nails, trim body hair (nose, ears, crotch, unibrow) weekly. I have an alarm set to tell me to do it. MRP taught me ALL these things. You are saying to yourself, "There's no way MRP had a hand in all this, this is common sense". It really fucking wasn't. I told you we were going low. MRP pushed me to take notice of myself and to improve. It asked me Would you fuck you? and made me admit, No.

Hair/Looks: After college when I cut my long hair short, I did not style it at all. How I woke up was how it looked that day. Sometimes it was oily from not washing it (see hygiene above). I wore jeans with holes in the knees. I wore shirts that I had been wearing SINCE HIGH SCHOOL (I was 29). My underwear also had holes. I wore white socks with my shoes, which were always running shoes and had my pinky toes bust through the side. I did not own a belt.

MRP convinced me to put in the work to actually look good and take pride in it. I went to the store and tried on every single number style of Levi's jeans in every waist and length size near what I had been wearing to find out what actually fit. 501s 541s 505s 511s 514s 34-32 33-32 skinny jeans, slim jeans, boot cut and tapered I know what all this means now because I DID THE RESEARCH. I bought belts for those pants...which matched my shoes, shoes other than for running like the nice black boots I bought for winter, or the boat shoes I bought for summer. I started shopping clearance racks to find polos and button down shirts because I had an entire high school wardrobe to replace and knew it was going to be expensive. I gathered mens' opinions on /r/malefashionadvice and searched "mens fashion fall 2016" or "mens outfits black boots" or "mens button down shirts summer 2016" and picked outfits I thought actually looked really good. And they looked really good on me. A talk of hairstyle on MRP got me to research face shapes and what kind of hair style would suit me. I grew my hair out a bit and went with a killer short mow hawk variant for the summer and toned it down to a combed front spike-up for the winter. MRP pushed me to do all this, to take pride in the way I look. To put in the research.

Social: I am an adrenaline junky. I am a fit, active guy. But I wasted DECADES of my life playing video games. I was literally addicted. I would come home from work, fire up Call of Duty, play for 4 hours, and by the end I was MAD. Like head hurts I may have a stroke mad. "Fucking campers sitting around corners and dealing with game lag and fuck you and your noob tube you AWP no scope camping f@gg0t." At one point I actually kept saying to myself, "Why am I playing this if it makes me mad??" But the truth was I had no other hobbies and I was addicted. I got in with a circle of friends but always felt like the outsider. I was very quiet and reserved at gatherings unless I got enough alcohol in me. I had this mentality that I'm still trying to shake that I don't want to hang out with this or that person because they're losers and I'm better than them. But MRP made me realize it really is just my fear of getting out there with people, and that in fact I was the loser. I used to be paralyzed by the fear of people judging me, or not liking me. When I would meet another person with my group of friends I would always confide in them later: "I think (new person) doesn't like me." and they called me out on this a few times.

After finding MRP I joined a co-ed social sports club in a city near me. I play everything from soccer to volleyball to flag football with them now. The social club pushed the team to go to the sponsor bar afterwards for drink specials, so often we do that. I use that opportunity to practice talking to people, stringing conversations along, studying conversational dynamics (how to stay on topic, when to let a topic go if we've switched to a new one, when to let them talk and when to push myself to talk). Since I'm around bars, even if no one goes out after, I'll explore the city and other bars not only to converse with complete strangers, but to scope out spots I can take my wife. And there are a few spots I found that have made great dates since then. I picked up meetup to go out and meet people. It doesn't matter who they are now, my viewpoint now is that everyone out there has potential to give me joy in my social life, so let's see what I can find. The local board game club is meeting for trivia? Shit I'll go. 30s/40s group going to play paintball? I'm there. By examining mine and others' social dynamics and allowing me to really get inside the head of other people, MRP allowed me to push myself confidently out there and meet new people and do new things.

Self Worth: People live by the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you". I lived by the Platinum rule: "Do unto others, as they want done unto them". My wants were completely cast aside. Someone said jump and I said how high? Then wondered if it was good enough. I thought I was accumulating brownie points. I thought one day all these points could be cashed in. I was completely selling myself, my wants, my goals, my desires out for other people. I used to rush home from work, like literally skip out early and rush home to 'relieve' my wife from watching the kids. I would make covert contracts that if I did this, or if I watched them for the night, or if I cleaned up real good, that she would repay the favor or have sex with me. I actually had that thought process, and got mad when she didn't.

I learned how to say no. I learned that it was okay to say no. That your friendship would not fall apart because you did not feel like helping build some guy's party patio that day. I saw how illogical covert contracts were. I often, when deciding whether to do something, live by the mantra: "I am single, I don't have a wife" to avoid slipping back into making decisions based on someone else's happiness. This doesn't mean I snub her or ditch her for selfish reasons, I'm talking about situations where: Hey I want to go look at shirts at the mall on the way home...but what will the wife say?. So I go to the store to look at shirts on the way home. I also learned that everyone is out there living for #1. I said in a post recently I used to say to myself, "Why am I doing things for everyone else but no one seems to want to do anything for me?" I learned life is a hard lonely road to walk. You absolutely walk your road alone. That's not to say your road doesn't meander through the paths of other people, and sometimes you can walk parallel on different paths at the same time. But at the end of the day they walk theirs and you walk yours, and if those paths diverge then that's life. MRP taught me that. That if I become the person I want to be and others don't like that that's OK. That you take pride in what YOU do and what YOU are. That's self worth. I learned that from the MRP sidebar books.

Do you realize that everything I've written so far has NOTHING TO DO WITH WOMEN. MRP pushed me to better myself in all these ways. Guys when we say MRP's focus is to make better MEN and not better MARRIAGES we fucking mean it.

I'm going to skip writing about my problems with women and how MRP is solving them save for this last piece. A lot of times we question whether 'another way' is better, since we've never tried it before. I'm here to remove the doubt:

Ladies (but mostly gentlemen) I USED TO BE A BLUE PILLER: In high school I used to HATE with a fiery passion the alpha guys. I saw how they got the women. I was even planning to beat one up (with my stick sized arms) once just because of the persona he had. I thought pickup was manipulation and wrong. I thought flowers and feelings were right. I was an orbiter. I was a friend they could cry to. No really, I often had women cry to me about how bad their guys were, then go back and date them still. Some guys only read about this stuff in The Rational Male and MMSLP. I lived it. I fucking lived it all. (Let's go lower) I would confess to women I dated for a few months how strong my feelings were. The word love was used. I believed so hard in that fairy-tale crap. They were disgusted. (Let's go lower) After 1 month of 'going out' with a girl in high school I bought her a rose, gave it to her in front of her group of friends at school. They all awww'ed and said I was sweet. When they walked away to give us some space SHE DUMPED ME RIGHT THERE...Rose in hand. And walked away. I threw it in the trash completely baffled. (Let's go lower (Someone screams "No blarg don't to it!") I had a conversation early on with my wife once about how if I died before her she wouldn't really remarry right? I mean if there was a heaven, I would wait for her at the gates and wanted her to be devoted to me forever and ever." I saw her recoil at my almighty omeganess. Can I go lower? I actually can. And time and time again, through gritted teeth, I can tell you:

IT.

DIDN'T.

WORK.

But wait, there's more:

Ladies (but mostly gentlemen) I USED TO BE IN A DeadBedroom: And maybe to your disappointment I'm not going to sit here and say that I went from sex once a month to sex every other day. I didn't. What I will tell you is that the reason I used to need sex that often was because it was the only way to get some kind of validation in my life. Sex meant that I was actually worth something to someone. MRP showed me that sex shouldn't be my end goal. And now I get a feeling of worth every time I look in the mirror at my body or my style, every time I go out and be social, every time I get a random woman to laugh or smile in public, or every time I cross something off my to do list. And if you had told me a year and a half ago that with RP I wouldn't need sex as much now, I would have called you a liar. If you had told me that with RP my success rate for initiating to fucking would go from 10% to 85% I would have told you to shut up you liar. If you would have told me that with RP my wife was willing to do new things, get into sex, or talk dirty to me during sex I would have told you to fuck right off you fucking liar. And none of this ever came from me forcing myself on her. I come home now and kiss her hard for 10 seconds and she likes it. I warp my arms around her and she's melts into them. This comes from a relationship where I had "the talk" at at least 5 solid times, 3 while dating and 2 while married. She said she would change, she was sorry, she felt bad, she cried, but then nothing changed. I actually had times where she would push my hand off her leg when I weakly initiated, or when she would physically recoil when I wrapped my arms around her. These stories are sometimes written about by Rollo or in DB and I've lived this shit. This all happened to me.

Until RP. Guys. Look at what I just wrote. It was all my fault. And RP helped me get out of it. TFA helped me. Whinemoreplease helped me. Jacktenofhearts and stone and BPP, chomite, persaeus, whitetrasch, schreech, Shockley, Rollo, Roissey, Ironwood, Pook, christ everyone who posted and inspired that manly fire on our boards helped me. The kindling was there, RP lit the fire. I feel more satisfied, more complete, more accomplished and capable that I ever have in my life. And I'm not done. Not even close. I have big plans for me. Stuff to keep working on. I often think of Hunter S. Thompson's quote: "Life should not be a journey to the grave with the intention of arriving safely in a pretty and well preserved body, but rather to skid in broadside in a cloud of smoke, thoroughly used up, totally worn out, and loudly proclaiming "Wow!"") And I can tell you if this last year and a half was any indication, it's going to be the latter.
I've been here for years and it's the same shit that trip up new guys. Instead of repeating their mistakes, read this.

You don’t lift hard enough

Lift. Not work out, lift.

And by lifting we mean lift heavy free weights with compound movements, and either be on a bulking or cutting diet. You should see your strength increase, if not you’re not pushing yourself hard enough in the gym or your diet is off.

You should see 2lbs gained per month when bulking (most of it muscle, and with newbie gains double that, can last 6 months for untrained guys). You should lose 1lbs per week on a cut (fat guys can diet much harder). Track your weight daily, track your calories, if your moving 2 week weight average isn’t hitting your goal, adjust calories.

You mistake your idea of a real man for being alpha

Men have a lot of ideas about what is important: success, money, being a leader, honorable or a good father. Good for you, you do you. But don’t for a second think any of that is alpha, it will not make girls wet.

Alpha is frame, game, and looks. A dumb poolboy or a lowlife criminal can hit peak alpha.

So don’t whine about how she doesn’t respond to what an amazing leader and entrepreneur you are. Focus on alpha.

You listen to your wife

What she says has no relevance to making you or her happy. It’s not a guide to a better marriage. In fact, it’s the opposite. Anything she says about you and your marriage is all deception and traps, it’s shit testing.

The only thing you should listen for is hooks for your A&As. Other than that, you don’t need to give her answers and under no circumstance should you actually do anything based on what she says.
For the autistic: you can still have normal conversations about stuff other than you or your marriage. But you’re not supposed to some frameless dancing monkey performing the ordered act.

You’re upset your wife is angry

First off, you shouldn’t worry about her moods.

Second, the end result of MRP is usually a happier wife but the process to get there sure doesn’t make her constantly happy. You’ll be upping your alpha and she’ll be shit testing you like crazy to make sure that you’re actually becoming fuckable. She’ll throw anger, tears, and scorn at you to see if she can find flaws in your frame. She’ll say she's unhappy, that you're a cold asshole, that she needs love.

Don’t expect her to welcome your changes, in fact she’ll fight them. There will also be times when she’s sweeter and more horny; it’s perfectly normal that she’ll be responding to your higher alpha one day then being a shit testing harpy bitch the next.

Her cycle goes like this:

- hmm, maybe he is more alpha than I though, better shit test him harder than last time
- He passed, that’s hot!
- Repeat

Get used to the cycle. Learn to see her increased bitchiness as an interesting challenge to your frame, as flirting, as the lead up to better sex.

It’s not until the Main Event that she’ll calm down and submit. Until then, expect a rollercoaster.

You think your wife is a puzzle you have to solve Sometimes guys come on here and explain how his wife does X and maybe it’s a sign she wants Y. No, she doesn’t want Y. She wants what it says on the sidebar. She’s not a snowflake, she’s a human female who gets wet from alpha and comfort from beta.

Even if she has physical or mental problems, she still functions like a human female. Her issues can result in other behaviors manifesting in addition to what we describe here on MRP, but it is in addition to. The fundamentals of attraction remain the same.

Yeah, it’s fucking unfair. Grow up and deal with it. No one gives a fuck about the female imperative or hypergamy outside of internet forums. Don’t talk about it, don’t get butthurt over it. It won’t fix you, it won’t improve your sexual strategy, it won’t convince your wife to become submissive.

Also, no one cares that you wife should have told what made her wet, or that you should have figured it out yourself, or whatever is making you bitter. It’s called the sunk cost fallacy because it’s stupid to worry about it but for some reason we're wired to do so. Now be a man about it and move on.

Let’s first talk about what going rambo is not. It’s not putting all the effort you can into lifting, dieting, doing fun stuff, being social. Some guys suggest that going rambo is putting in too much effort. It’s not, effort is good.

What is not good is expecting your wife to come around before you’ve seen the results of your work. Rambo is initiating too hard and getting angry at rejections, it’s talking dirty when your SMV can’t back it up, it’s thinking your wife is a bitch because she’s not submissive, it’s telling her to fuck you or fuck off because you’ve been hitting the gym for 2 months.

Relax, man. You’re supposed to build attraction. Be more attractive, don’t rage or be creepy.

You won’t play dread

You have to play dread. That doesn’t mean walking around and overtly flirting with women. But you should be social, talkative, demonstrating high value and seeing women respond with IOIs towards you. There’s a number of reasons for this: your own abundance mentality, your wife’s response to experiencing it, and as a measure of whether or not you’re actually high value. If strangers aren’t sexually interested in you, why the fuck should your wife be? Lack of IOIs is a clear sign you’re still unattractive.

You half-ass it

Some guys waste months twiddling their thumbs, working out a bit, trying to be funny, then wonder why it isn’t working.

Look, we’re not being hyperbolic when we talk about how we do things here. We can do one armed push ups. We grab our wives by the pussy. We make fun of them when they’re angry. We don’t give a fuck what they think. There’s a level of effort applied here that some guys for some reason think is unrealistic. It isn’t. Apply yourself.
You don’t switch into dominance and boundary enforcement

Eventually, she’ll be attracted to you but attraction will only take you so far. There will come a time when you have to become more dominant and enforce your boundaries. Some of her final resistance is next level shit testing, some is learned behaviors or issues she has. You have to power through that. Once she likes sex and affection from you, you’re going to plateau until you step it up and demand submission from her.

Becoming a high quality man with a horny wife is just phase one.
10 Ways to Keep Your Wife on Her Toes.

by TrainingTheBrain | August 31, 2015 | Link

If you are reading MarriedRedPill then you are with a Woman who is either your wife or LTR. When it comes to daily interactions with the same person the possibility of complacency is amplified. It is human nature, the more you’re exposed to a stress the more you adapt to it ultimately becoming desensitized.

This is why, as the Family Alpha you need to consistently change the stress you’re exposing your wife too (Mix It The Fuck Up). This post spawned from an observation I had made reading /u/theultmatecad's post here where he and RedPope laid out these two gems:

“However loyal, faithful, and dependable you may have been -- I have no doubt you were a great father and provider -- after 19 years of daily companionship, your attention is valueless to her.” - RP

“Women dont love men. They love how men make them feel” – UC

I responded to these points with a comment that can be found in the cited post talking about not becoming complacent, etc. Then /u/BluePillProfessor mentioned making a sort of list where we can all drop some of our best ‘Things I do so my wife is never comfortable with Me’ moments.

I will provide 10 and I encourage any and every Man on this sub to share what you do to keep your wife’s Fire of Tingles from going out.

Before I share my 10 actions and let you see inside /u/TrainingTheBrain ‘s marriage, I want to reiterate something to you. Women do NOT Love you in the manner you love them.

As Men we are the more Romantic of the Sexes and it only makes sense that the burden of keeping the Fire of Tingles alive lands on our shoulders. Do not be discouraged by this as women are simply acting in accordance with their nature. As Masculine Men we embrace challenge and find comfort in the discomfort of knowing society is against us and our success. We still, do not give a fucking fuck we will act in the manner that Men act and whether it’s viewed as acceptable or not, we do not care. Our successful Marriage will speak for itself, fuck approval from the majority.

This list is something you can take and apply, today, in your marriage. I hope others contribute so we have a thread of ideas that will keep marriages from getting stagnant for years to come.

Keep what you think will work, disregard the rest.

1. Sex Outside The Bedroom
One of the biggest ‘routines’ that couples find themselves in is only having sex in the bedroom and at night.

You are adults; you no longer have to sneak around your parent’s house to fuck. You are (probably) living in your own place, claim it all. Fuck in every room, on every piece of furniture, at every point of the day.

- Kids are napping? Fuck on the couch.

- Kids are watching a show? Sneak downstairs to get a blowjob.

- Wife is doing dishes? Pick her up, carry her to the garage, pin her to a wall, and makeout with her hard and fast; then just fucking leave and go sit somewhere with a book. She’ll be in the garage dripping wet wondering what in the actual fuck just happened to her.

The reasoning behind this action is twofold. Not only are you breaking routine by fucking in a ‘foreign’ place, but you’re also making new ‘sexy’ inside jokes & memories with your lady.

For Example: When you have company over and someone asks if the table they are leaning against is sturdy, you and your wife will flash back and smile to the time you were railing her on that exact table. Whenever you see any room or piece of furniture in your house, it will have a story.

2. Surprise Vacations

The routine of wake up, go to work, come home, do whatever, weekend time, start again is all too common in our day and age.

People get stuck in these loops, I hate loops. In the Navy I called it, ‘Redundancy without Progress’ and in the military there is quite a bit of that, but I digress...

To break the loop I had saved some cash specifically for this trip, didn’t tell the wife anything. On a weekend where I knew we had nothing going on I booked us a room at the Great Wolf Lodge a hotel that is aimed towards kids (waterpark, arcade, interactive stuff, etc.).

I then messaged my wife that when she got out of work (this was Friday) that she needed to pack our stuff for 3 days and be sure to include bathing suits and that we’d be spending our Weekend at the Lodge.

She responded with, “well what about the cat & dog?” (I’d handled it) “& Money” (I’d handled it) “This is short notice” (I told her that I’ve given her instructions as to what I wanted done and that when I got home she needed the gear packed, kids ready to go, and everyone standing by)
She had them ready, the trip was awesome, and she kept ranting and raving about how excited she was and that it was an amazing adventure, sex was awesome the entire time.

(Follow behavior, not words)

3. Removing ‘Vanilla’ Sex

There is a time and place for your standard missionary position. That time is not every time. You need to make sex your fucking play place. It is completely fair game to turn your sex into something from a Lewis Carroll Novel.

Yesterday I bought a bunch of those glow sticks that are necklaces. We were at the Dollar Tree and I saw them and an entire fucking fantasy filled my mind. Without telling anyone why, I put them into the cart.

Fast forward and it’s getting dark so I let the kids crack them and run around the yard playing. The kids get put to bed then I tell my wife to go to the room and get undressed and that we’d shower together.

I cracked the rest of the glow sticks and hung them from everywhere inside the shower. The shower head, the water knob, the bar that holds the shower curtain and then I through a few on the ground.

She came in and it was fucking game on.

I then got out and took the glow sticks with me. She was drying off and I staged them in our bedroom. I had them hooked to the fan, everywhere. Sex was had again and she said at one point she “Didn’t know which way was up”. It was awesome.

This can be done in any way you’d like, I recently got some white rope, new white boxer briefs(fancy), installed black lights in our room and tied her hands up while I stood over her in white and had my way shooting my glowing load like a shooting star over her.

If you are in shape and own your shit your wife will do anything, and I mean anything.

4. Be Mysterious

When guys on MRP give the advice to just, Get Out and Go somewhere Alone I think some people think it is this complex Rubik’s cube of advice.

Let’s clear it up now.

Men, when another Man says something, obviously think it over as to whether it is good or bad advice. If the person giving the advice has proven their worth, just fucking listen and don’t become some fucking scientist looking for all of the how’s and whys, just follow the advice.

Men Do, Women Talk.
Let the women ponder all of the ramifications, you can just do. So don’t over think it like a woman - “do what? Go Where? Do I tell her? Etc...."

I will just leave and do anything randomly. The kids go to bed or some other opportunity where you know you aren’t needed, it should go something that ‘roughly’ follows this outline:

Man: “Hey babe, I’m heading out, I’ll be back in like an hour.”

Woman: “Where are you going?”

Man: “Out/Who knows/I’ll figure it out when I get there/To Slay Dragons/To pick up a hooker/etc……….”

Woman: “HamsterHamsterHamsterHamster”

It doesn’t matter if you fucking drive to the closest parking lot and read a book or you go to the bar or you get a hotel room and call an escort, you do whatever you need to do ensure that you’re making time For. You. It’s healthy and it allows your wife time to miss you. (Stolen From /u/IanIronwood)

Your wife needs to miss you and more importantly you need to have an aspect to who you are as a Man that she is not involved in. If she isn’t involved and you aren’t spewing your life to her daily, then there is an element to you that she doesn’t know, and that is a good thing.

Mystery fosters the growth of tingles.

5. Being Romantic

I won’t lie, my most recent ‘romantic’ action was ripped completely from TheRedPillRoom’s Perfect RedPill Date. The kids went to bed and I told my wife to throw a hoody and booty shorts on. She asked why, as she was looking to just sit and read. I told her to just do it and I’d be back.

I went into our basement and opened the bulkhead which leads to the back yard where I had pre-staged a picnic.

I lit tea candles on the steps leading up to the yard, the moon was full, and the sky was clear. It was sweet, I brought her down to the basement and towards the bulkhead door; She was overwhelmed by the candles before she even saw the blanket.

The sex was awesome.

As Men, we are the Romantics. If I ever text her ‘I Love You’ I always capitalize the words, I go out of my way to make the ‘little things’ line up for her, and a whole host of other things. It will be dependent on the Man, but remind yourself that you’re doing these little things for you not her. She is a woman and won’t see your actions the way you do.

She’ll appreciate them, but it won’t hit as deep as it does in your heart. That’s fine, she’s a woman and you’re doing it because you find joy in doing romantic shit, Own It don't make.
covert contracts just own your role as a Romantic Masculine Male.

6. Goal Setting/Leading

You are the Family Alpha, the leader of your clan. How are they supposed to flourish under your guidance if you are unwilling to set aside time to their development?

My wife is a PreSchool teacher; she’s very organized and has a solid understanding of Early Childhood Development and dealing with special attention kids, as well as their parents. What she lacks is the ability to set goals for herself and take actions towards those goals.

She says she wants to weigh a certain weight, run a certain time, and achieve a certain life goal. But when I ask how she is making progress towards those goals, it’s aimless actions (See: Redundancy without progress).

I sat my wife down and together we grabbed a notebook and wrote down what our short term goals were individually. One of hers is to write a children’s book so we’ll use that as an example, I then had to create a rough timeline/map towards her achieving that.

Now, she’s well on her way.

Your wife needs YOU to help her stay on the straight and narrow. If she is stagnant, don’t come to MRP saying my wife is unmotivated, sedentary, etc. Because that’s your fault for not motivating her and if she doesn’t give a shit and has no passion for life, what value is she bringing to yours? If there isn’t an answer to that question, then why are you keeping her around?

Because it’s easier, ??? Fuck that, step up and make it happen.

This isn’t just your wife. Are you putting the necessary time in with your kids as well? Your entire family is operating under your guidance. Set the time aside to mentor, assist, and guide them all to where you/they want to go.

7. Educate her

I believe that as Men we are all walking our path alone. What I say will work and won't is based solely off of my experience.

I’m not guessing, these things have worked and I have used them in real life With MY Wife, your mileage may vary, especially when it comes to discussing sociology, psychology, etc.

I wrote a post a while back about how my wife had told me straight up that she wanted to be a submissive women and has been reading about Dominant/submissive relationships. I told her I thought that was what we had going and she said it is, but that she wanted to tell me that she’s always wanted to be a submissive woman and be told what to do and that she feels that is wrong.

I have always taken the Dominant role in the relationship, never saying, “I don’t know” always taking point and leading to where we needed to be. I’ve used the word Dominant to her and on these forums, but I realized that she’s never spoken the title ‘Submissive’. She hadn't owned it.

It was then that a few things clicked and while she was crying like a son who had come out of the closet as gay to his dad, I knew I had an opportunity at a critical moment to make a lasting impact.

I explained how all of the modern day feminists had warped the word submissive, how all of the SJW who make a domestic wife a bad thing are fucking wrong, and I clarified to her that her biology as a woman makes her more submissive where mine as a Man is more dominant and that she was simply at the point where she wanted to be open about the dynamic of our relationship.

Your woman may not understand why you are making the life improving changes that you’ve implemented. Share some of it, educate her on why you’re eating better, lifting more, reading more, fucking more.

Don’t let it just be the ‘new you’ let her understand that you’re raising your standard and tell her that never again will she be forced to assume the leadership role of your clan.

Women do not want to wear the pants and when your weaksauce behavior forces them to, the build resentment. You may even want to explain that aspect so she understands why she feels angry towards you.

This is entirely dependent on your woman, but explaining these things made my wife not feel alone like she was the only woman to have these feels. It allowed her to embrace her submissiveness towards me and not make her feel ashamed when she says, I follow TrainingTheBrain’s lead. Now, she owns it.

You have to understand your wife and how her hamster works, then you make the call on what knowledge would make her better understand the path you’re taking her and yourself down.

8. Text Game

A lot of guys here keep texts to logistics and for 90% of the guys, I agree. For those who know how to use texts as a sort of IV drip of arousal until you see her in person, I think texts have their place.

For example, one morning I fucked my wife. It was nice hard sex followed by a shower then off to work.

A few hours into the day I was rock hard daydreaming about the sex. So I went to the bathroom and took a dick pic and sent it to my wife telling her apparently I didn’t get enough that morning.

Her response was, “It looks as hard as granite, I love when you’re that hard inside me, I feel it spread me wide.” Then I went radio silent, 15-20 minutes later she sends me a text saying how wet she is, then she sends a pic of her tits, then a message about if I like them, etc.
My text elicited the response that sent her down the rabbit hole all day and solid sex was had when I got home.

If you do it right and don’t come across as needy or creepy, you can use text and pics to set the stage. Do not solely rely on texts, but you can certainly use them as accessories to your arsenal of weapons that are employed to reach your end goal.

9. Fuck With Her

I fuck with my wife constantly. You know the whole, Pick on the girls at the playground concept? I do that and I have since we were together.

Why?, because it fucking works.

Talking shit, pulling pranks, just straight fucking with your wife in a tactful way leads to a solid relationship. I would never pull the chair out from under her as that would make her look stupid in front of everyone or she’d break her ass. But I would replace her incense with a sparkler.

I’ll hide shit, put things where she can’t reach them, refuse to give a direct answer or give an overly complicated answer to any questions that she should know.

There is a fine line between being a mischievous Man and being a Dick. Be mischievous in your dealings and always have her looking over her shoulder. It can also be sexual.

We were having a barbecue and I saw my wife go inside to get something. I snuck in, pulled her to the bathroom, fingered her to just before she came, then I hopped out of the bathroom and heard her yell how big of an asshole I was. The rest of the party she was giving me the ‘angry eyes’ with a head shake showing she was pissed, she came hard that night.

10. Refuse to Lower the Standard From Which Excellence is Measured

You set the bar Gentlemen.

You set the bar from which your wife will judge other Men and you set the bar from which your family will perform to. If you are out lifting and improving yourself, then your family should reflect that.

If you are doing all of the steps provided, then your wife should be so busy trying to keep up with your next move that she doesn’t need the ‘newness’ of another Man.

It’s on you.

I have shared some insight into how I’ve kept my wife leaking and craving my dick for the past 7 years of our Marriage and I hope to get some ideas from you to help me keep it fresh.

As of right now this post is roughly 3,000 words. That’s irrelevant as I could write a novel, if we do not apply what we read and write, then it’s useless.
At the beginning of last summer I asked a 16yo kid named Aaron that lives down the street to mow my grass. Every time he finished, we exchanged a few words – I asked him how he was doing in school – he asked me about my motorcycle in the garage - and he told me a story about how he was saving up to buy one. I wished him luck and gave him a quick piece of advice: “Best decision I ever made was getting a bike at 16. Couldn’t keep the girls off of me.”

“Yeah, Mr. Horns…. I don’t even know how to get a girlfriend. That would be so cool.”

In the next few weeks he bought a used bike. I guess he mowed 15-20 yards a week. The next time on early Saturday morning he showed up on time and began mowing. I went to lift in the garage and when he was done we had our usual exchange. Except this time he asked me: “Mr. Horns – do you lift weights a lot?”

He was 5’10” – 150lbs. Shaggy hair, loose oversized t-shirts with baggy jeans.

We chatted a bit and I told him exactly why I lift weights. He said he thought about doing it before but only the athletes at school lifted and he wasn’t really into sports... didn’t really know what to do... and he had gone to Planet Fitness a few times that summer since it was free for students but just kind of messed around. I told him that didn’t matter – and if he wanted someone to show him the basics I’d be happy to. He was enthusiastic. He joined me in the garage gym next week and I showed him Stronglifts and gave him my copy of Starting Strength. At the end of the summer he was talking about how much stronger he felt – how he was going to “get big like The Rock” and other silly things teenagers say. He even let me know he got a girlfriend finally, and I saw him walking down the street with her a few times afterwards.

His girlfriend had a nice face, but was chunky and unattractive. She dressed in baggy clothes every time I saw them walking and holding hands around the neighborhood.

The rest of that summer and fall he would stop by weekly and would ask me questions about things he was doing lifting, what should he be eating, shit about girls, I just dumped whatever knowledge on him that I knew to give him what he asked for. He kept lifting 4x a week all summer and I started to notice he was getting noob gains. At the end of the summer I showed him PHAT and PHUL programs.

Fast forward to last week - a year later. He sent me a text and asked if I still needed him to mow my grass this year. I shot him a text back and let him know that yes, next week would be about right. He said OK, and then asked if he could come lift with me since all the gyms had closed for Coronavirus. I told him 5pm would work.

Aaron drove up right on time as expected in a late 90’s mustang that he told me he had saved for a year to buy. What stood in front of me blew my fucking mind. I asked him – “Holy shit. How much weight have you gained, son?”

“Oh, Mr. Horns... I don’t know... I guess last summer I was 150lbs before you showed me how to lift weights. I think I weigh about 185 now?”

He looked all of it. As we lifted together he updated me on his life since last summer. His last girlfriend dumped him because of some stupid teenager reason. He said he was upset at first but then after about a month he got over it and started dating a lot of other girls at the same time. Then he “picked one” he liked the most and they’ve been together for a few months. We talked about his lifting – and we traded sets on the benchpress of the same weight. He had been going non-stop since last summer and told me that he could never stop lifting the rest of this life. He loved the way it made him feel and he was noticing that other dudes respected him more. He also noticed that he got way more attention from the girls. He thanked me numerous times for showing him the ropes and I just told him that I wished someone had done it for me when I was his age. His dad had started to lift weights with him about 2 months ago because “he is fat and feeling like he was behind”. And then he said something that blew my fucking mind:

“You know, Mr. Horns, it’s like.... I dunno... I used to care about what everyone else thought of me and made me do before. Like my ex-girlfriend... when I was with her I wasn’t even like.... being myself. I was doing all these things that weren’t me and I was like... a whole different person. But now it’s like I don’t care what they think.”

“Oh. I see, Aaron. Ha! Kind of like.... you don’t give a fuck?”

He perked up quick. “Yeah! It’s EXACTLY like that! I just don’t give a fuck.”

Then he proudly showed me this bracelet that his new girlfriend had made for him out of some kind of yarn or some shit. On it she had put some beads and letters. “Check this out, Mr. Horns.”

It spelled BIG CHAD.

I told him that until this Coronavirus stuff blows over he is welcome to come lift with me anytime. Or if I’m not home or busy I’ll open up the garage for him with enough notice.

-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

I saw him yesterday walking down the street with his new girlfriend. She’s prettier than the last one. But something was noticeably different. He still had his shaggy hair, but he was wearing a solid form fitting v-neck shirt that showed off his pecs and biceps with athletic cut jeans on.

All it took was a kid to start lifting and another man giving him some pointers to figure all this shit out without a sidebar, MRP, TRP or anything. If a 17yo kid can figure out how all of this intersexual-dynamic shit works, so can you. He didn’t know shit, so he just STFU, Lifted, and figured out what worked. He bought a cool car like every teenage boy and just had fun.

Be like Aaron.
It's not that fucking hard. It wasn’t meant to be hard.

Of course I’m envious of him having figured out what took me 35 years to realize, but I guarantee you that if he asks more questions I’ll give him the truth.

And no shit – before I could even finish this post – he just texted me: “Are you lifting today?”

Of course I am, Big Chad.

Ok, you “swallowed the pill 3 weeks ago,” whatever the fuck that means. You used to be like tooooootally alpha, but you got in a relationship and you caught feelz. And now you not alpha anymore. You’re in “great shape,” but you don’t back it up with any stats like height, weight, and lifts. Your wife is “legit” 9, and she is 42 yrs old. Of course , no numbers on her either.

Next, you want to go into a long play by play assessment of what happened between you and your wife over the last week. It reads like a train of thoughts from a drunk person. You may have even had a “main even” or a mini-main event, whatever the fuck that is. Your story is filled with your DEERing, and you even DEER to us because getting internet strangers on your side is very important, maybe even vital to your self esteem.

You talk about she... and her... there are 50+ She’s and hers in your rambling autistic, overthinking essay. Now, you just need to find out how to be alpha again. She’s sleeping in a different room than you because she finds you repulsive physically, mentally, and emotionally. She has tested your fitness as a leader, and you continually fail to even recognize them as fitness tests because you’re a drunk ass captain (figuratively and possibly literally). You react, engage, and you play her game on her home court.. By the way, her home court = her frame.

You want to know how to stop reacting.

We tell you to STFU, but you continue to DEER and engage in meaningless power struggles that only exist because your leadership is non-existent, and you live in her frame.

Sound familiar?

Here are your solutions , but they might not be complex enough for you:

1) STFU This does no men go mute and brooding. It means to not let her trivial BS shake your frame. Simply change the subject, Use fogging, A&A, or AM.

2) lift I mean lift, really lift... several times a week. If you are skinny, increase your caloric intake and hit heavy weights. If you are a fat-ass, decrease your calories, and hit the weights 5 times a week.

3) Read the whole fucking sidebar don’t just read WISNIFG and NMMNG over and over. That won’t get you very far. Read the whole thing, and then reread it. Rinse, repeat. The sidebar material will work alongside your experience and you will start to get intuitive answers to all situations

4) Slow the fuck down, Rambo. You won’t make big progress until at least a year in, and that’s if you are working extra hard. There is no fucking graduation. This is a lifelong journey, and you need to continually recommit.
5) Don’t overthink it  Also, don’t make big sweeping changes right off the bat. Your changes should be almost undetectable, and then one day you wake up and realize your a fucking stud. Other women will probably see it before your wife, so be ready for that. I’ve had a few women try to fuck me just in the last couple weeks. MRP is amoral, so do as you wish. I choose to remain faithful because my wife fuckks me whenever I want, and she follows commands... if I say “suck my cock” she just does it, gladly. I’m not bragging- it’s just a fact... but, it took time and work to become an attractive high value man where she wants to follow commands. Also, she knows that if she doesn’t, another woman will. I don’t need to verbalize it. She just knows. She also adds a shit ton of value in many areas. She’s no fucking unicorn, but she adds way more value than when I first started this journey.

6) Mission first Always

7) Don’t be a pussy Don’t complain about anything Make iT a habit to not complain. It will transform the way you think and act. It will help you be the man you want to be. You will start to believe there is nothing you can’t do with some smart effort, focus, and drive. You will Transform your life in all areas.

So, make up your mind today. Do you want to be a pussy, or do you want to be a gladiator. Own your life circumstances, and you you don’t like them, get off your ass and change it. Unplug from the matrix, one connnectiona at a time.

The choice is yours. You are the architect of your life, and you are the reason for your current circumstances.

Make up your mind to Quit being a fucking pussy Men are horny. Women are bored.
by redpillerobert | April 17, 2018 | Link

Put another way: Men want sex. Women want fun.

"But," the fool sayeth "sex IS fun. Ergo... women want sex!"

No, simpleton. For women, sex is not fun. Fun is fun. Sex is the price they pay for fun. Fun is what they're after. And they fuck the guys who give it to them (alphas) in order to convince them to keep giving it to them.

Likewise for men, fun is not fun. Sex is fun. Fun is the price they pay for sex. Sex is what they're after. And the smart ones (alphas) offer fun to beautiful girls knowing full well the reward for doing so.

So if women want to have fun, it behooves them to be beautiful.

And if men want to have sex, it behooves them to be fun.

Well, we know what beautiful is, but what is fun?

Fun is that which an alpha male provides.

And what is that?

A plan.

And what kind of plan?

Any plan that gets her out of the house, out in public, trying new things, meeting new people, testing her limits, facing her fears, and accomplishing her goals.

That's what an alpha male provides: a life. a fun fucking life.

Can an alpha have muscles? Yes. But there are alphas without them.

Can an alpha have game? Yes. But there are alphas without it.

Can an alpha benefit from the sidebar? Yes. But there are alphas who haven't read it.

But what an alpha has to have in order to be an alpha, independent of all other things is this: Plans. And the will to carry them out. And his plans involve other people. Because alpha is a comparative term. It refers to the one in charge, the one who leads, and thus, without others present, he can't be an alpha.

So he has a socially-centered mind. He's the king of the world and all are his subjects from whom he knows he derives all of his blessings and power. So he loves bringing them together and making sure they have a good time because doing so opens him up to every single opportunity and possibility imaginable.

He's a facilitator of fun. And women are bored.

So...to MRP. I'm glad you're lifting. You should be. I'm glad you're avoiding arguments and reading the sidebar. That's great.

But if your marriage sucks and your bedroom is dead, let me ask you: What kind of life have you given your wife?

How often do you take her out? What kinds of things do you go do together? How often do you go somewhere new? Meet someone new? Try something new? How many friends do you have? What kinds of friends do you have? How often do you make new friends?

What kind of novelty, variety, and excitement do you offer your wife outside the home that makes you think you deserve the kind of novelty, variety, and excitement you crave inside the bedroom?

Oh! You work hard at your job. How brave!

Oh! You go to the gym, own your shit, vacuum your own room, and wipe your own ass. Super!

For those feeling like they got the marital bait and switch in the bedroom, how much you wanna bet your wife feels like she got the same thing with her whole fucking life?

What kind of life did you make her think she would have with you when you were dating? Did you do what you do now--she sits at home all day watching babies, you come back from work tired, hangry, and annoyed. Grab a beer. Watch a game. Then make a last-ditch grab for sex right before bed. Was that how you locked that shit down?

Probably not.

So go on and lift your weights. And comb your hair. And clean your room. And STFU. And learn "game." Be my guest. All that stuff is great and there's no reason not to do it. But without plans, without the will to carry them out, without a life that men can envy and women want to be a part of, you'll never be an alpha anywhere but reddit.

Plus that shit takes time. Sometimes more than some of you have left in your marriage. And yet the standard advice from the MRP manchurian choir no matter the situation is "lift, STFU, sidebar."

Which is great, but not one peep about what will buy you time TODAY. Improve your relationship TODAY. Improve your sex life TODAY. I'm all for the long game, fellas, but a good golfer doesn't just know how to drive. He can putt as well.

So...do you know what you're doing this weekend yet? Is it different from last time? Did you line up a babysitter? Have you called any friends? Have you made any reservations? Do you have any fucking clue whatsoever what you're going to do for fun with your wife this weekend at all?

Do you ever?

It's not rocket science. Men are horny and women are bored. Give her the fun alpha life she thought she was getting and she'll do damn near everything in her sexual power to make sure she doesn't lose it. Because that's all she's ever wanted.
Imagine this.

You're alone with this hot girl, her tight sweater suggesting a perfect rack underneath. You slide her sweater up to take a better look and find a pair of perky, bouncy tits. She looks at you seductively and says "let me show you more".

She pulls out a scalpel and cuts off the nipple, pointing out the many nerve endings. She peels off the skin and goes through the layers of fat and muscle, explaining the anatomy.

I'm a guy who likes to know how things work. Stars, enzymes, engines, I want to know how they do what they do, I love seeing their inner workings exposed and understanding them.

But a pair of hot boobs, they're only hot when they're put together. A dissected cross section doesn't do shit for me, on the contrary. In the context of the girl in front of me, seeing their bloody inner workings is revolting.

As a man, your frame is your biggest asset for attracting girls. The poise and calm, the easy dominance, it's like crack to them.

When a girl shit tests you, that's like you pulling off a girl's sweater. She's doing it to get a better look at your frame. Flex your frame, pass the shit test. She'll like that.

But some guys, they just can't help themselves. They think she challenges them because she wants to see the inner workings. So they pull out the scalpel and begin dissecting their frame: "this is my vision for our marriage, I'm doing this to become a better man, I said X and you said Y but then did Z and that's unfair, yadda yadda".

Stop fucking doing that. It's all over the side bar - STFU, don't DEER, hold frame, pass shit tests, don't listen to your wife. There's a reason for that. She wants a cocky guy that's above her little games, not some beta chump she can pull around by demanding that he justify his actions.

So don't do it. Don't take her shit test, her probing of your frame, as a request for you to explain your magnificent vision, great plans and deep understanding of relationship dynamics. Not only does she not give a shit, she's disgusted by it.

Keep that image in your mind. You DEERing is like her dissecting her boobs. It's revolting.
As many know, I practice divorce law. I also recently watched the red pill documentary on Hulu - definitely worth the watch, although it addresses the MRA side as its primary focus. Some of the stories got me thinking about the financial inequality in many cases working against men - even more than what I'd previously believed (though for reasons beyond what's explained in the documentary).

So, I decided to try an experiment in court and my client was on board. Rather than just explaining, I'll make it fun and give you an abbreviated approximation of the transcript.

RELEVANT STATUTES

As background, the law in my state specifically says: "Each spouse shall be considered to have contributed equally to the production and acquisition of marital property." Now, at first glance this looks like it shouldn't affect spousal support, but the spousal support section has the following two among other factors: (1) "The standard of living of the parties established during the marriage," and (2) "The relative assets and liabilities of the parties, including but not limited to any court-ordered payments by the parties." Because the equal contribution law so heavily ties into these factors, it is imputed in our case law as a spousal support rationale as well.

Our case law also specifically says that a primary purpose of spousal support is to equalize the standard of living of the parties. Because of the equal contribution presumption, the court must assume that the value of the wife's house work is equal to the husband's financial contribution.

Other jurisdictions may not have parallel laws, but for those that do, track with me. Even if you don't, the principles might still apply.

THE HEARING

Within that statutory framework, I was handling a textbook case - guy's the breadwinner for 22 years, wife stayed at home and took care of the kids (not at issue because the youngest will be 18 in a few months). I had my client (guy) on the stand and coached him to try this new line of testimony for the first time ...
Q: Do you understand that the court has the ability to make a decision under the statutory framework regardless of everything you've said? [This question could have ticked off the judge, but it was worth the risk to set the stage.]

A: Yes

Q: Under that framework, what do you believe would be an appropriate allocation of support?

A: Well, if both of our contributions are considered equal, then to maintain both of our standards of living, I should give her 50% of my paycheck after the divorce just like I historically did during the marriage, which would be $4,748.55 per month ... and she should come over everyday and do all of my housework, laundry, cooking, etc., just like she historically did during the marriage.

Q: Now, legally the court can't compel behavioural performance, as that would be too akin to forced labor. So, what alternative do you suggest?

A: Well, if after the divorce she doesn't have to maintain her contribution to the marriage, I shouldn't have to either - at least to the same value as her contribution. So, if our contributions are deemed equal by law, then if she doesn't have to contribute X value in service, I shouldn't have to contribute X value in financial support. By making me pay any support, that would be an acknowledgement that our contributions to the marriage were not equal.

Q: And if the court decides to proceed on the presumption of unequal contribution? [Hand out an exhibit and have it marked]

A: I prepared this document [he authenticates it] demonstrating the variety of services she performed during the marriage and how much it would cost me to pay someone else to do these things, and relevant classified ads as proof of the market rate.

Q: And what is the significance here?

A: I'm expected to work to the same degree as before and now also to do everything around the house that she used to do, so I'm doing my job and hers. She won't likely be expected to work given her years out of work and her age, so she'll just have to take care of her house and collect my check - her job but not mine. So, to even the lifestyle balance I should get a discount in support by the cost for me to get that housework done, otherwise our lifestyles wouldn't be equal. [We then calculated that difference and proposed a new number that equated to around an 85/15 split of the joint income, other factors involved too.]

The judge (female) let out an audible "Huh" with a bewildered tone like she'd never thought about that before.

Result? My county has almost never deviated from their 50/50 to 55/45 split range (one of the worst in the US). In this case the judge did a 67/33 split in my client's favor, which is unprecedented.

My interpretation is that if she went too much more in my client's favor she couldn't justify it against historical case law and would get reversed on appeal. So, she found a middle ground that would preclude reversal, given that there are other counties in my state that will do a 65/35, so it's not totally beyond historical precedent in other jurisdictions in my state.

This isn't necessarily a groundbreaking argument (and it's far from perfect), but this judge had clearly never considered it before - and it may have just changed how she allocates support in other cases going forward, giving the other judges a precedent to follow in her footsteps as well.

Conclusion? Maybe you can't get a prefect result, but a novel argument (at least from your judge's perspective) can go a long way with appropriate documentation to back up the math. This is the best result I've seen from any argument yet (other factors notwithstanding). Don't give up hope.
Both mid-40’s. Married 16 years with 2 kids, 10 and 11. Grew up with a hard-working and dedicated beta father and stay-at-home alpha mother. My father taught me a lot in life, but nothing about sex/women/marriage. I married an average girl with average looks and average weight. I was scrawny, good personality, +$100k job and no sexual experience. I didn’t know the potential I had. She loved me and gave me sex and was my best friend, but we were both clueless about what passionate, toe curling sex was like. I knew I had an orgasm when I stuck it in and that was it. The idea of great sex, teasing all day, wanting each other was the stuff of movies.

We married and both gained 20lbs. I lost all of it plus a little more – she lost 10lbs and stopped. I should have seen the rest coming.

Before kids we went to the gym together off and on. Over the her weight went up and down with various stress levels and child responsibilities. She has always been a stay at home mom (great mom!) and I always made ~$100k and was active. I was never is stellar shape usually soft around the middle because I never lifted, but I ran and played basketball all the time. We moved to Dubai for my work 8 years ago and enjoy living overseas tremendously. Over the last 4 years her weight has steadily gone up and up. My weight probably got a little low because I went through a love-to-run phase in the hot Dubai weather.

4 years ago when I saw her weight going up I got her a full-time housekeeper and the kids started going to school full time. I thought the free time and he seeing me exercising would motivate her. It did not. She complained about her weight. I told her 80% of weight loss is food, but she was unconvinced and the weight increased.

3 years ago she started getting foot pain and knee pain and she can’t run because of the pain. When I said it might be weight related she went ballistic and said her doctor told her it wasn’t. She’s 5’6” and ~180lbs at this point. I’m 6’3” 195lbs, but little muscle. Sex is fading fast and I soon I need Viagra to get an erection because of the site of her naked. I don’t tell her, hoping she’ll self-motivate with me staying in shape.

2 years ago I’m asked to take a 9 month contract in Djibouti. Good for my career and wallet. She and kids stay in Dubai. I tell her I’m going to really start working out so she can have a hunk of a man when I’m back. Between her full time maid and kids in school, and stay-at-home status I’m sure this will be the turning point for her body. A week after I’m gone she takes a part-time job as a secretary with my same company so she can “stay connected with the community while you’re gone.” We have no financial need for her to be working. I have a bad feeling there will be no change. I get to Djibouti and every morning I’m up at 5am lifting, running, eating right. Sometimes I work out twice a day.

I come home to visit after 3 months and everyone is floored. My shirts are busting at the seams and my pants falling off so loose. Everywhere we go people are complementing me on how muscular I look. My kids go crazy feeling my biceps and seeing how many times I can do pushups with them sitting on my back. She is proud of me. Her weight is the same and her foot pain has increased. I’m still up at 5am running. When I get back from running I make the kids breakfast and help get them to school. She does no exercise and says she’s eating right and can’t figure it out. I’m disappointed and frustrated and start popping Viagra to do my sex duty for 2 weeks before I go back to Djibouti. When we have sex she’s feeling on my muscles and loving it. I’m distracted by the “thwap thwap” of my body slapping against her fat gut. I’m now 6’3” and 210lbs with a lot of muscle.

Angry and frustrated I go back to Djibouti. Within a week of getting back, a divorced Fillipina-American with no kids, no boyfriend in a long time, same age as me, and really into yoga tells a friend of mine she thinks I look good. She’s knows my status and can be discreet. I politely decline as I’m married…even if unhappily so. Next day I see her coming out of yoga class after I’m through lifting. We’re both sweaty and amped after working out…and we start talking…and we start kissing and she’s back in my room and we’re fucking like crazy. Same thing the next night and the next night and for the rest of my time in Djibouti. Every day, often twice a day we were fucking. She’s buying school girl outfits and surprising me; we do roleplays; we fuck in our offices and in stairwells; we spent one evening trying to get my cock in her ass just cause neither of us had ever done it. We licked sucked and fucked every way possible. We were so sexually compatible (and fell very, very much in love, but that’s another discussion). When you read about women wanting to be led by a strong man…she was it. She took care of me and that made me take care of her. We were both sexually and romantically neglected for so long that we did everything possible to make each other happy. It was beautiful.

Three months after my return to Djibouti (now 3 months left in my assignment) I’m still lifting and getting bigger. My wife sends me a picture of her and the kids. My jaw dropped…she’s even heavier. I went online and found a nutritionist in Dubai and workout coach and sign her up for a 10 week program. I tell her I found someone online who can help her and she agrees to contact him, but never does. I get the guy to call her cell and she signs up for the 10 week program. Over the next 10 weeks she loses 10 lbs….I’m thinking this is the 10lbs she had just gained. Her foot and knees still hurt and that prevents her from activity. She claims she’s eating right, but I know she’s snacking.

I finish Djibouti assignment and back home with the family August 2017. So happy to see my great kids. I’m very depressed at the loss of my affair partner and angry at my fat wife. First day back and I’m popping the Viagra and she says lets’ try a new position. She’s really never been up for it and after just having 6 months of multi-orgasmic sex with a yoga babe – I’m up for anything other than missionary. She wants to try 69 and the view of her huge ass and hanging stomach as she put her elephant leg over my head made me gag. Not even a full 100mg Viagra could keep me hard. I apologized and said I was tired from the move back home and we just did missionary the next day.

Everything that’s gone on has left me depressed and angry like I’ve never felt before. Were it not for 2 wonderful kids who love their mom and dad, love Dubai, and love the closeness of the family – I’d be gone…even after 16 years of marriage. I went to an British marriage counselor and told him everything. He is very sympathetic and we end up having a group counseling session to talk about the marriage problems and why I’m frustrated. I tell her about the weight gain, but not the affair. I say I love her, but my sexual and physical attraction is less when she has so much weight. We all know her reaction – unconditional love you shallow asshole, etc… Why don’t you love me anymore? Blah, blah. She doesn’t talk the next day. The following day another session and I’m still a shallow asshole. The counselor pulls me aside and said I need to make a choice to stay or go. I agree to keep trying - after 16 years and 2 kids I can’t give up yet. I agree to help her through weight loss, not be so focused on appearance and she agrees to do better with eating etc...., but she still has the caveat that her foot hurts even though diet is how you lose.

Back at my Dubai desk August 2017 and every day at work I’m googling “hate fat wife” “help wife lose weight” etc....I’m trying to find hope and to stop thinking about my affair partner. September 2017 I stumble on red pill...best and worst day ever. At 43 years old, 6’3”, 215 lbs, muscular, good dresser, abs starting to show, making ~$150k per year, speaks 3 languages, knows how to cook....I learn about SMV. I learn I’m the prize. I burn a whole day at work reading. I’m a solid 7 and when I’m confident an 8. She’s a 3 or 4. That’s a huge gap and it’s a problem. We go to places and I’m dressed better that 90% of the guys. Confidence like crazy expect that I’m with a fat woman and I know I’m being judged. She’s very personable and friendly great mom, but 5’6” and just shy of 200lbs I’m guessing. Large flowing shirts to cover body or (even worse) sleeveless dress which makes her look terrible with bingo arms. The extra weight makes her look in her 50’s and slightly masqueline and over the last year she’s got a layer of peach fuzz on her face that I feel when I kiss her. Several of my buddies have Asian wives that have kept their figure…I know they pity me.

She’s a great mom and my kids don’t know any of the problems. The kids are thriving here in Dubai and are getting a top notch education and learning French and Arabic and all sorts of great things. They snuggle on the couch with us at night to read together after dinner. This is why I stay, but I’m seething.

I want to leave, but leaving would break me financially and I’d have to go back to the USA to be with the kids. They’d be in public school in Oklahoma with all of the dumb fucks. Sex is down to 1 time per two weeks only because I feel like I have a duty to give it to her as a man. Glad I can get Viagra here without a prescription. But I can feel the resentment building up. Once a month I’m going to a backroom massage parlor and getting happy endings from a Thai girl just so I can have some good release with a pretty girl. Regular porn user now. I have a video my affair partner and me fucking. I jack off to that to remember the good times. Wife emailed me yesterday and said she realized she was stress eating and that’s why she can’t lose weight. Stay-at-home mom, kids in school, full time maid, part time gardener, she now volunteers for an NGO 8 hours per week and helps in the school library, I make breakfast every morning for the kids, every Saturday I take them to swimming practice....and yet she’s stress eating. And then she says please don’t discuss this with her as she figures out how to lose weight and deal with what I said in counseling about her weight. I write back and said I’m here to help. She does spin class twice per week. That’s great. Yesterday I found a Starbucks receipt that included a chocolate chip cookie. I know she’s undermining the gym with snacks.
I’m fearful I will reach a breaking point and tell her off – I mean nuclear because I have so much anger inside. It’ll will set off a chain reaction that will lead to my children’s lives unraveling and going back with her to Oklahoma and me settling for a “regular” job so I can be with the kids. Even more horrifying, if she ends up as a middle-aged, fat, divorcer with kids – she’s going to attract an equally wretched man and I don’t want that kind of man around my children. THAT scares me the most. For now I keep it bottled up. She has a habit of eating the kids French fries if we go out to dinner. I keep my mouth shut and go home and do planks or jumping jacks. She eats a cookie, I go do 3 minutes of planks.

That’s how I deal with it until I can figure out what to do. Let me have it guys….skewer me cause I’m at a loss right now.
There is a long story to my life. But the lesson from it is “no one cares”

People only see what you are now.

They don’t care that you grew up poor as shit

They only see the nice car and house

They don’t care about the risks you took.

They only see the winnings.

They don’t care whether you had to literally try to overcome a crippling physical impairment.

They only see you as you are now.

They don’t see your struggles, your addictions (for you drinkers and druggies).

They don’t care about your anxiety or that your Mom or Dad or whatever set you up for failure despite or because of good intentions.

There are no points for working hard or trying hard.

Your wife doesn’t care. Your kid doesn’t care.

Your dog may care though.

So for those of you who still think that you deserve a thing because you worked hard-

No one gives a shit. They can’t. Not in a way that will matter to you.

So go forth and make your own plan and your own mission and be your own judge.

No one will ever know how hard you worked for it. And if they do?

Those aren’t chips you can cash in.

I promise there is a story to this.

What it is doesn’t matter.

What matters is what you did today to make your life what you want it to be.
This is not new information, this is MRP 101. Most of the newcomers here still need to read this.

Your wife is not your Mission. Your Mission is your Mission.

What do I mean? I mean that if we were to sort your thoughts by category in terms of time spent, many of you would have your wife as #1 or #2. You guys simply spend too much time thinking, worrying, guessing, complaining, resenting, etc. about your wife. Take your focus off of her and put it on your Mission.

Your Mission and the small steps you take to execute on it should take up almost all of your focus.

How to be a Faggot Signs You Are Too Focused On Your Wife

Why shouldn't you spend so much time thinking about her? Here's why. If you are focused on her...

1. Then she knows she is the prize, not you.
2. Then you don’t have goals bigger than sex or a “peaceful” home.
3. Your frame is guaranteed to be paper thin.
4. Your life is boring.
5. You are needy.
6. You are weak.
7. It’s unattractive.
8. You are literally drying her vagina out.

There’s more but you should get the point by now.

Ignore the Disney / romcom / Twilight nonsense where a guy wins the girl via his undying devotion. That’s emotional spankbank stuff for young women who don’t know what they really desire. Women don’t want your undying devotion / affection for more than about 6 minutes, and even then only if you are attractive.

She Wants To Be On An Adventure, Not The Main Attraction

Your wife wants you to be a man on a mission which pulls her and the family in a positive, fun direction. She wants to be a part of the adventure, the hot damsel clinging on the buff guy’s arm, not the treasure at the end. Why? Because if she is the treasure, then the movie is over when the hero gets her. That’s boring and limiting. However, if the hero merely has her as part of the team, then she knows there’s always more around the corner. Plus, she knows all her own shortcomings. She knows that she really isn’t all that great so someone who is willing to settle for her as the capstone of his life must not be that great himself. Ironically, that means he's not even worthy of her.

Incel Fantasy 101 The Sexbot

Here’s a different way to approach it. Recognize that, as a man, you are wired to appreciate feminine submission far more than a woman is wired to appreciate masculine submission. So picture the hottest girl you know, in real life or media. Imagine she is 100% into you and will do whatever you want. Any sex act, with complete passion. She is completely yours. The only downside is that she is also incredibly needy. She calls you all the fucking time. Blows up your phone. Tells you what she ate and how much she worked out. Asks your opinion on everything and gets extremely emotional if you don’t cater to her every whim, fantasy, and emotion. And it doesn’t stop. 24-7-365.

How does that sound? To me, it sounds fun for about 3 orgasms and then she’s gone.

But that’s how at least half of the new faggots around here sound when they come in, moaning about their wife and how bitchy / cunty / mean she is. They do everything for her, cater to her 100%, and she's still a shrew. Of course she is. They are an overly needy faggot. And it’s 100x worse than the fictional sexbot situation above because a) women are naturally repulsed by needy behavior and b) these newbies aren’t attractive. The analogy isn’t even apples and oranges, it's apples and hand grenades.

Faggotry 101 Wives as the Mission

Here are some examples of how men make their wives their mission.

1. They spend too much time thinking about how she feels or how she will react (or how she did react) to certain events.
2. They have a need to run their schedule past their wife before executing (can I go out with the boys Friday night).
3. They think their lives would be radically improved if their wife was horny and happy.
4. Their own mood is affected significantly by how their wife treats them.
5. Their own self-image is affected significantly by how their wife treats them.
6. They need validation and approval from their wife in terms of sex (quantity, quality, certain acts, etc.) or other forms of affection (compliments, etc.).

There are others but these examples are recent to this sub.

How to Get a Mission
Maybe this is striking a chord with you. If so, here’s my recommended next step. Grab a pen and write all this down.

1. Admit to yourself that you have made her your Mission.
2. List examples of how you currently make her your Mission.
3. Brainstorm on some better Missions (include a brief Why on why that Mission is important to you).
4. Pick the top 2-3 Missions and merge them into one, usually by broadening the terms.
5. Write out what it looks like to achieve that Mission. Quantify that shit.
6. Put those quantifications into a time line (i.e. I will have $2M in the bank by age 43).
7. Make time oriented subgoals that support these bigger goals and then back into yearly, monthly, and weekly targets to hit your goals.
8. Put it all on your Calendar.

If you have areas of your life that are important to you that aren’t touched by whatever Mission you come up with, then your Mission is too small or too narrow. Broaden it to where you can reasonably say that everything you are doing fits into that Mission.

Zero Sum Calendar

If you want to get really focused, then fill your calendar for one week with zero sum. That means schedule every 30 minutes to be filled from Sunday when you wake up to Saturday when you go to sleep. Driving, work (broken down into projects, if possible), all of it. Then see if you really want to spend 6 hours on Saturday watching TV or 14 hours across the week playing Call of Duty. Do those support your Mission?

I’ve Talked Long Enough

Here are some closing thoughts. Life is tough. Life throws you curve balls. Cancer happens. Carwrecks happen. The universe can be cruel. We can’t control anything during our lives except how we choose to face each day.

With that in mind, if you are set on your mission, then you will be better positioned to endure/overcome when the inevitable shitstorms of life pop up. Godspeed.
I have STFU and lifted for a year. What results?

by viderelux | October 4, 2017 | Link

Took RP and 'side-barred up' about 1 1/2 years ago. Made some immediate newbie gains in sex life and career due to frame and attitude adjustments, but finally got serious with the lifting part 1 year ago.

My marriage is good. I have great wife who never gives me hard no's, works hard, and is generally a great partner. The marriage suffered mostly from me and my bluepill mentality. Sex was stagnant and (you will be shocked to learn) chores, romance, date nights, foot rubs....nothing worked to make it better. RP concepts have improved everything, but this is about the lifting specifically.

I was 47 yrs old 5' 10" 150 lbs, weak and skinny-fat. I purchased a power rack, weights, and bench for my birthday. I did not ask. I just did what was necessary to make it happen. I bought Starting Strength to learn the lifts, but implemented Stronglifts 5x5 as my program. At first, I had trouble manipulating the bar and started every exercise at the minimum (mostly empty bar.)

Current stats: 48 yrs old 178 lbs. about 16% body fat down from 18%. Best lifts - Squats: 230 5x5 DL: 260 1x5 BP: 150 5x5 OHP: 105 5x5 Rows: 140 5x5 I'm about to go 3x5 on squats and OHP (in second deload cycle). I have often only been able to workout twice a week because my joints do not recover as fast as my muscles these days. However, they are becoming less and less of a problem as I get in more time.

Though my frame is strengthening and my behavior is changing slowly, I STFU about RP and the matrix. I'm mostly observing how the small changes I do make affect the environment around me and especially my marriage. MRP truths are true and have very tangible and practical results.

Results of lifting:

- Generic confidence and feeling better - It just feels great to do hard things, to surmount a difficult weight, and feel more capable. Difficult to quantify, but I just have more energy and lift.

- Better posture - I have always suffered from bad posture; rounded shoulders, stooped etc. Lifting has been a virtual fucking miracle in this department. My body knows how to hold itself now and I have the muscles to actually stabilize myself. Fewer neck problems and fewer headaches result. Plus, I look better.

- Passive Dread - Incredible results here. My teenage daughter, home from college, saw me changing shirts and remarked, "Dad! You're so buff!," which is pretty funny because most of the time my kids waste no opportunity to insult me if possible. Her reaction was almost involuntary. It caused my wife's head to snap around to look at me and she got lost in thought. Later that night, my wife initiates a conversation..."So, what are your goals with the lifting...what are you trying to accomplish...?" Ha ha! Hamster wheel in full hyperdrive mode. This is a small example. There's simply no doubt my sexual experiences have been on the upswing lately. I'm probably nearing a full 3 point difference in SMV (2 for sure, the 3rd is getting there) because she has dropped 1. She's way more into it and at 48 yrs old I'm having the best sex of my life. The best part is there's still MUCH room for improvement.

- She tells me things like, "your arms feel incredible!" during sex. This is a huge step up from the silence I was used to...plus, it makes me feels great and redoubles my efforts at the time. She touches me a lot more in general.

- 1st unsolicited BJ of our 25 year marriage. - Yeah. Coincidence or not? Lol. Anyway, it sucked because she was terrible at it. Who knew it actually took some skill? I thought it looked easy...

- A late-20's girl flirted with me at my daughter's soccer tourney - Out of town at a soccer tourney. I'm looking fairly good in my t-shirt (relative to my previous look) and get hit up by a 20 yr old asking me about a logo on my t-shirt to start a random conversation. This is notable because girls simply never talked to me first before lifting. Ever.

- Better Sex - OK so I had no idea that Squats would be so valuable here. My new found power and stamina in my core, hips, and rear have given me much better abilities in the bed. I'm not sure anyone wants more detail than that, but I'm here to tell you, it makes a world of difference...it ups the confidence, the dominance, and she has responded to it more than I believed possible.

- Backpacking Gains - It's my go-to hobby and passion. Lifting has increased my pace on fully-loaded brutal uphills from about 1.5 mph to 2.25 mph. I'm tearing up terrain that used to make me suffer.

What's the point of all this? It's to hammer home the point that lifting is absolutely required for the MRP man. There is no downside and the upside is enormous. There is a reason it's a cornerstone piece of advice in this forum. Even older guys will benefit. It does piss me off that I took so long to get this advice and I am going to make damn sure my son understands the value of lifting.

I've got a long way to go, but I'm trying to change the simple things first, not everything all at once. I hope that this will inspire someone to buy that rack they've been eyeing and get to work.
Hey all. Long time veteran deciding to come back to give you all some perspective. I see there's still a very large number of users here trying to "get it", and a small group of approved guys who actually do "get it" in the sense that they've got a model that works. But I wanted to give a perspective to old and new alike, who want to have more than an amorphous idea of what life at the end of the tunnel looks like coming from a marriage that actually works now, one that didn't end in a savage divorce, as well as offer a path to those more experienced who may be doing all the rights things and reaping all the right rewards, but who still has some internal conflict about themselves, life, and who they are.

And just to be clear, this is a (long) post talking about living the experience. You're not going to learn anything new here related to MRP, but you'll be able to relate to the end game with a better understanding, which is important because no one really talks about it. The material you get here is all about getting from one place to the other. But nothing talks about living it. It's a silently accepted mental burden. And it's kind of why we all got here at MRP in the first place, because no one talked about actually living this stuff.

Just for the reference, here's me 1/3 through my transformation, here's me 2/3 through my transformation, and here's where I left awhile ago to go put this stuff to the test, and really find what happened when I asked what I wanted of the world unconditionally.

What Happens When You Ask Unconditionally

Basically the universe has opened up to me both externally and internally in a way that I basically dreamed it would since I first started. There's this global understanding of others and myself, and our possibilities, and our limitations, that has made it so that I feel not only empowered, but can actually read the code in the matrix for what it is.

There's a buzzphrase that used to go around here and that is that we shouldn't be worried about the why, MRP teaches the how. But I don't believe the why isn't important. You shouldn't just be looking for the instruction manual, the right "moves" you need to do in life to get to where you want to go.

You should want to get to a point where you understand why all these tools work the way they do. In that way, you come to a better understanding of other people as well and how they are flawed, and how you are flawed, and why we end up like this. Don't just be a puppet, understand what's going on.
And the reason I include "our" in that last paragraph is because of one key idea that, since the beginning of my journey in August of 2015, that I've kept asking myself through reading all the books and all the posts and all the experiences. And that idea is:

What if the misunderstandings, the unguided, lethargic, ad-hoc approach that men are applying to their lives and failing with that seem to bring men in here to ask "how do I unfuck my life and mental models", what if that is not a men problem?

What if the Disney fairytale isn't just believed by men? What if it is a HUMAN problem? What if the fact that people as a whole were left to grow from child into adult without any kind of guidance whatsoever except the mainstream strategies that the media bombards us with, and the strategies that we come up with are merely our best attempts to make life work with what we know?

And this really doesn't go against much of the behavior Rollo talks about in a lot of his books.
But I dare you to go back and read/listen through them again and at each example think to yourself..."do guys do this kind of thing too?"

Women Have Been Lied To As Well

I know. Because we all grew up watching Disney films where all a princess has to do is twirl a few times and bat her eyes at a guy and he gets it. (A butchered quote from a woman, on women's misunderstanding of how to flirt with men, found on reddit).

Consider for a moment the analogy of the matrix. And how you were raised from a child to believe in Disney fairytales, happily ever after, and the undying love of a woman. And how after growing up and realizing that a lot of what you told was just some bullshit feel-good to help you stay in line and be kind to one another caused you to find some place like MRP to unplug you from the matrix, after which you saw that life really had different social dynamics than you originally thought.

Now consider for a moment, would it REALLY be a stretch, for even the POSSIBILITY that MAYBE women too were also groomed with lies in such a way as to have a near completely flawed understanding of how relationships truly worked, and that their actions were merely efforts to live their lives in a way that tried to understand the truth between what they've been told, and what they're seeing in real life?
Is it that much of a stretch, that women, too, are living in a type of matrix?

Think about it. You never see (in a Disney sanctioned film) Belle getting her ass reamed out by Gaston. Or Cinderella swallowing a load from Prince Charming. These parts of a relationship aren't taught in the Disney fairytale. Literally the idea of hot fucks that she does in her college dorms and the guy she's going to live happily every after with are two different constructs in her mind.

And not because of the hypergamous alpha and beta shit. It's because she never learned that they can be the SAME PERSON. So when you lead her to a new reality, where these ideas are broken, it's literally like unplugging her from her own matrix.

And this doesn't mean there aren't differences between the sexes. There are. Chemically, biologically, socially. But the fact of the matter is, we are both flawed. And we both need fixing. And once you realize this, that what your wife is trying to do is simply maximize what she gets out of life given the limited available set of tools that she has in her mind, you see a very clear parallel between the person you were when you began this journey, and the person she is before she starts trying to catch up.

You also realize that in order to catch up, it doesn't simply require a falling in line. The end game, for me anyways, to ensure desire driven compliance instead of negotiated compliance, was to have a wife who also understood the dynamic that we BOTH work off of, who is also intelligent enough to see what's going on and how we both erred, and to change into the person she wants to be to make the dynamic work.

It Works...For Both of You

See, a lot of what I see in this place is still taking place from the perspective of "I'm the prize, you just need to bring enough value to capture my attention". And that in itself is full of conflict. AND MAKE NO MISTAKE, YOU NEED TO HAVE THIS MINDSET ON THE JOURNEY UNTIL SHE COMES ALONG.

But her end drive shouldn't be one of "I need to get enough value points to stay on his good side" but "I need to understand myself and him, to the point that we both work".

I don't want a relationship based on conflict. I don't want her to just fall in line. I want a relationship based on mutual understanding. I want her to understand why we were flawed, and develop herself how she needs to to make this work.

In the end, I want to say that "we're the prize". And it's funny because now that I got to where I am, and she got to where she is, we do say that. Often. We tell each other "we so work together" when we understand each others buttons and how we operate. We say "we are totally hot" when we point out each others muscles and talk about the flabby men and women we see out in public. We say "No one else is even trying" when we talk about people with no lives.

Anyone who remembers J10, he once wrote about the three levels of the relationship where in level 1 you're keeping score, level 2 she's keeping score, and level 3 she finally asks where the scoreboard is, and you tell her "oh that dusty old thing, it's in the back". Well level 4 is when she looks at you and says "and that's where it should stay".

There's no questioning that the old ways of doing things were not the right way. She's not a passenger on the ship, she's helping to run it because she wants it to go to the same place.

I cannot tell you how many times I've seen myself lead my wife into some new territory sexually, emotionally, in the way we talk to each other, in the way that we search out the joys of life, that right before I make that breakthrough with her, she lets out some acknowledgement of "I'm sorry" or "I didn't know it could work this way".

In fact more times than not, the growth of our relationship has come NOT from me finally adopting some manly role (that I'm truly doing for myself) that finally clicks with her innate need for that kind of man, but from me leading her to ways of life, trains of thought, methods of communication that she just did not know existed. I'm literally, very slowly, unplugging her from her programmed matrix. And she's loving me for it.

The kicker, and I come back to my phrase of "A man doesn't desire complaince, a man desires desire" is that actions due to ignorance are a better fit to the adjective of compliance, whereas actions driven by choice are a true measure of desire.

When I unplug my wife from some small part of her matrix, when she sees both the way things operated in her matrix, and the way I showed her things can operate, and chooses to now operate in my frame, THAT is desire.

What isn't desire, is if you raise yourself to a standard and do things truly for you, but that also click into her pre-programmed illusion that is her matrix. That really is just her complying with the reality that she's been forced to live in so far. Compliance, not desire.
That said, we don't go into the future living in the post apocalyptic wasteland that is the unplugged matrix. I don't explain it to her down to the depths of taking her to the vats of harvested humans every time we interact. That level of explanation is just depressing. That's autistic. Instead, i show her just enough of how there's another way that i open the door. After she chooses to walk through it, to create an even more powerful bond, we then both step back into the matrix with the knowledge that we have now, and play with the previously imposed ideas as if they were a GAME.

When I act macho and she giggles, it's not because I'm fitting her hypergamous model of acting macho and she's fitting my validation need for giggles, we both understand the roles we play and the meaning behind it on both levels, plugged and unplugged.

And that's all I have to write about the successful marriage. And you might be thinking that our pie in the sky marriage is totally the place to be and easy to live with. It is. But at the same time, it isn't. The success of my life now comes with the knowledge of infinite potential, and infinite work.

I'm Flawed

You know the phrase "It's all your fault?" It's that, rephrased to "You have the power to do whatever you want, like WHATEVER you want, if you are simply able to take on the work, risk, and negative baggage associated with that." And I don't mean associated negative baggage that comes from other people's thoughts and opinions.

But it's an understanding that anything we do, from lifting, to socializing, to internalizing, comes with some form of, with no other way to put it, shit that we have to deal with, and take on, in order to achieve it. You want to learn to X? Here's a list of baggage you'll need to carry. Can you carry it?

And that's the shit I'm going to talk about in this second part. See the main purpose of this part of the post is to level with you, newer guy, and to relate with you, more experienced vet, about what getting what you want actual means both internally and externally.

Because we often look at people that we think have 'made it' and get wrapped up in the social media bias that what we see on the outside IS everything that's going on. There's no negative, that guy just gets to reap the benefits of being totally jacked all the time. There's no negative, that guy can pickup any chick he wants with 100% success. There's no negative, that marriage is perfect.

But that's not really what's going on. What's really going on is an unseen level of sacrifice and risk and personal strife the likes of which we just cannot fathom until we've walked in those shoes.

But I'm going to give a warning, and this is my only warning, that when I open up to you, and when I relate to you, if you choose to use that as an EXCUSE to not achieve...then, it is all your fault.

Why am I doing this? I'm doing this because I compare myself really closely to the personality of Owen from RSD, who has said he found himself to be lightly autistic growing up, but with an unnatural ability to just fucking grind in career, socially, in relationships, and whatever he set his mind to, to arrive at the success he has today.

And Owen most related to me and meant something to me, and I connected with his internal struggle when he tells not of the conquests he's had, but when he shows the actual human mind behind those conquests. The one who, while he looks like a god on the outside, is still building, and following mental models on the inside that attempt to guide him to peace, happiness, and success continually.

The relatable characteristics made him human. And the fact that I saw him as human, and also as a man with the ability he has, allowed me to relate and further push myself because there was no barrier of "this guy's different" anymore. He's like me, so I can be like him. And so I begin:

Looks: I am god damn sexy. No, like really. Like fucking really. I have heard this through both guys, and girls directly, and heard through friends and my wife, that people will stop them and comment on it.

I keep myself fit. I lift heavy and often. I run a lot. I trim and style and groom myself to a point where, when commenting on it online, people have said that behavior is well past obsessive compulsive and no one in their right mind would be able to duplicate it. I am absolutely aware of how good I look. I catch people, men and women, looking me over as I walk down the street. And I bask in the gloriousness of my success. When I run, and take my shirt off, I honestly believe it provides a standard that guys think "wow I need to get in shape like that" and women honk their horn and shout as they drive by. Yeah, it happens.

But I'm going to level with you: I go through periods of body dysmorphia. I will look in the mirror and see right past my 6-8 pack and giant pecs and v shape and adonis belt and see something I'm just not happy with. I keep myself below 10% bf and will totally believe one day that I'm set to be the best looking mf on the beach, and then stress the next day over an extra 100 calories I ate with dinner. Those calories you cannot even see, if they actually made it to any fat cell I have and if I didn't really underestimate what I burnt that day after working out, running 10 miles, and rock climbing.

Chicks are thinking about how good I look? No way I tell myself. I just succeed because looks don't matter I tell myself. That girl that was giving me fuck-me eyes, a fluke I say.

Lesson: I truly believe that what we find pleasure in in life is the journey and the change, and so when you're at sub 10% body fat and are everyone's 8/10 or above, that feeling is great some moments, but other times the glory of it fades. You're still heads and tales above everyone else, you know it, you're happy for it, but that happiness is not sustainable. It comes and goes.

Men who are at this level will relate to both the good and bad that comes with this experience and understand that the act of being at the top entails all the positivity AND negativity that comes with being at the top, while those who are not at this level will simply look at good looking guys and say "It shouldn't matter that you battle this feeling every now and then, you're gorgeous."

It's some shitty way of saying "be grateful". And part of that negativity is feeling that you're garbage, even though you know at the same time you're the prize. It's not a healthy thought. But it is part of me and is a thought. I accept it, and move on.

Socially: I am the guy who's throwing an awesome party. Who's hanging with all the guests, men, women, and kids and having a blast. I'm the guy going around to everyone and talking, saying hi, making friends out of nowhere, and generally being open and outgoing. I'm the host that your wife will whisper to my wife "I wish my husband threw events like this and gave that amount of effort."

I make it a point to always be more outgoing than what I see people doing in the normal world. When I walk up to a bar, into a room, or out with a group and I see people looking at their phones, into their drinks, or generally around the room I am the guy who says to himself "I'm going to open you, just to share the social bliss I know you're suppressing."

But I'm going to level with you: I'm still fucking scared to approach people. If I haven't been social that day up to that point? I walk into a room of people and sometimes I say in my head "Fuck, I don't want to do this." Or "Maybe I can just lay low." Or "Everyone's already made friends and I'll just fail anyway so why bother."

No scared doesn't mean I don't do it. It just means those negative emotions you get, that you base your excuses on like "I feel afraid, and feeling afraid is bad, and I shouldn't do things that are bad, therefore I wont" are bullshit, because we all have them.
Lesson: Owen said it himself, you never lose that approach anxiety. You just look at yourself and believe that regardless of it, you'll succeed anyway. You succeed in spite of it. Not because it's gone. Not because you have control of it. But in spite of it.

No one conquers their approach anxiety. We have it, and we approach anyway. So while I am the guy who will approach, that doesn't mean I'm not having any kind of negative feeling in my head. That doesn't mean I didn't have to talk myself into it to do it. But the key is that I do it anyway. I approach in spite of all that.

And I don't seek to eliminate those bad feelings in myself. Instead I learn to accept them as normal emotions that are a part of me. They're supposed to happen. You're putting yourself at unnecessary social risk and anything could happen...of course you're going to feel some kind of pull not to and invent reasons you shouldn't. That's NORMAL.

Those voices will ALWAYS be there telling you not to. This is why pros talk about warming up. It's a real thing they use to help them. Being a pro doesn't mean you've got your performance red-lined every second of every day. It means you know how to and can get yourself to that maximum performance when you want.

Value: I spread value when and wherever I can. I'm big into raves and find it akin to the "spread love" vibe that people give off there. I enjoy making other people feel good. Bringing them out of their shell. Making them smile. Making them laugh.

People look to me for value in love, guidance, self confidence, and willpower. And I give it because it means something to me to spread my value to the world. I don't expect anything from it, I give it freely.

As men we are idealist, and I imagine a world where everyone casts off this self-imposed oppression and defensive nature that we're all holding onto and embraces the ability to spread love and value. Make no mistake I do not allow myself to be taken advantage of. There's certain boundaries you have to be aware of when you embark on a journey to spread love. And one of those important ones is to make sure your love, just like it is spread freely, is received freely as well.

The closest state to emotional bliss you can have with someone is to come as close to that line of fully giving and them fully receiving without either taking advantage, keeping score, or letting that value diminish as a result of ego protection in anticipation of either of you straying from that balance.

But I'm going to level with you: A lot of times in the world I perceive an imbalance between what I give and what I receive. And let's be clear that the very first book on the sidebar has already burned the idea of expected value out of me. So it's not expected value return, but i would say it's like idealized value return.
Sometimes that imbalance gets to me. And sometimes the awareness that someone has ventured from free giving and receiving of love and morphed it into a tool for their own gain is severely hurtful. Sometimes I look at people in the world and wonder why we're all like this...why if it is possible to give and receive freely, if we all seem to choose over time to take more than we receive. Almost as if we all learn over time to withhold spreading value as a defensive measure to us all being burned at one point. If giving value is even worth it if everyone else is taking more on average.

This takes you down some really dark places, ultimately ending in ideas of somehow everyone else seems to be ok with the exchange rate of value and you're just flawed, or sensitive. Or alternatively people come to the point that value exchange is so unfair that they take themselves out of the equation (think guy who sits at home playing video games his entire life, or old man grumpy and complaining about how the world hates him, or guy, literally, taking himself out of life) and their entire ability to give value has been corrupted fatally. And if that's the case I don't want to live in a world like that.

Lesson: Giving is at the far end of the spectrum. And pure statistical odds say that if you give more than average, you will receive less than average in return. And by default, because everyone's so scared to act, and interact on a social level, then if you want to, you're going to have to be the one to put in the initial value.

People will often say you have to expect 40% back for the 60% you give. But I believe this is just a pessimistic rule we have to tell ourselves in order to not allow our giving to be destroyed by an inevitable thought-chain of "if this is the way it is, why bother?"

But in the same vein as any activity, where the struggle constantly seems harder than the rewards: Lifting, dressing well, eating right, etc...we know these are the things we need to do anyway. And somehow it is worth it. Even though you've put 500 hours into the gym, and all you get is a 2 second lookover by a passing chick or an honest compliment from a guy, that's worth it.

I said I've been to raves where people give this free love. And to see the ability of people to be like that, even for a brief moment in time, restores my drive to want to be just like that. It's really a feeling that cannot even be put into words. Being at events like that is like seeing the full capacity of value giving in action. And I know it's unsustainable. It's also emotionally exhausting.

It's kind of like the fact that you can't deadlift your 1RM 40 times in a single day. You do it once, you're done, drained, you need to recover. But I won't allow myself to not ever do it because it makes me vulnerable or because it's hard. I see the fact that sometimes I'll get bit or feel the imbalance, and I give anyway.

Ability: I have found in my life, be it through luck, a divine power, or something else, that no matter what I try, I succeed in. In some way, even if that success is a morphing of both the goal and my overall perspective on what success is, I end up succeeding. I have the power to just grind. Just simply grind. And keep going knowing that anything I do I'm moving toward success.

Lifting weights, running fast, making time with friends, keeping a positive outlook, making money, people look at me and ask "How? How can you be successful at so many things?" And it's just because when I set my mind to it, I achieve it. It happened with MRP too. I knew what I wanted, and I got there.

But I'm going to level with you: It still feels like anything that I am not currently, that that is out of my reach. Becoming a landlord? Out of my reach. Starting my own business? Out of my reach. And it still feels like when I'm grinding on something, I think "Why am I doing this? I'm a failure. This won't work." I still have that shitty belief that other people have abilities that I don't through some kind of gift, as if they just poof got that power.

Lesson: So I know in myself, that things that I thought were out of my reach before I've achieved. I've seen it. And I can see in myself now both the feelings that "Well it seems like most/all things are within my reach if I simply do what is required" AND "There's no way I could do that" at the same time. How can both thoughts exist at the same time? That I don't know. But what I do know is that they're both there, and one will hinder me, and one will drive me. I am flawed, both are there. I just need to have the willpower to pick. Just make that decision to go for it, and I've got it.

Peace: Contentedness, happiness, acceptance, yin and yang, enlightenment, the combination of whatever name you want to call it. You know that internal struggle, that feeling that you're fighting a raw element of nature itself, like being in the ocean with some rough surf where you can barely keep your head above water? Where you don't feel like you have control? I don't have that anymore. Things just seem to make a lot more sense now. I don't have the 1000 yard stare. I'm not confused by what happens to me in life on the small or large scale.

But I want to level with you: Because it's not like I feel this way all the time. I don't walk around with a permanent smile on my face. I don't sit here and not feel the anxiety of dealing with a lazy, unintelligent boss. I'm not in some zen state where no negative feeling ever gets in. From all I've written about my marriage above, sometimes we fight, and I question our compatibility.

In the moment, I feel frustration, I feel worry, and fear, and anger just as much as I feel happiness and bliss and euphoria. When life strikes at me I do fall back on mental models I've constructed to hold me in place. And I understand that if those mental models fail then my mind will open the flood gates to the feeling of chaos that will consume me.

Lesson: A lot of the time, in the now, I still feel the struggle and the emotions, but after the fact, I see how I almost NEED to feel those things in order to feel the peace and completeness that come afterward.

In it's purest logical form, it's as if now I know, understand, and have come to peace with the fact that there is no path in life to that peace that doesn't include those feelings of conflict. So in the moment, I can be at peace knowing that I will feel negatives and I will feel positives, but if I know that the path I've chosen is one that will bring me where I want to go in life, I will arrive, look back to the past, and remember it all in a peaceful, understanding, bliss.

I said before that I went and asked what I wanted of the world unconditionally...that means I ask without holding anything back on my part. And I learned that in order to truly be at peace, you have to be able to receive back unconditionally too, even if that means receiving negativity.

And there are books out there that try and teach you to become present to the moment. Letting everything in, and not being defensive about it, and knowing that this is necessary for that peace. I stop by here often enough to see new and older users still being angry or frustrated at trying to progress.

I believe that MRP, while on the surface having everything to do with Rule 0, is simply a vehicle for a greater understanding, which allows us to establish mental models which we simply did not have before. And in fact when you get it, you'll see that the very lessons learned here can be applied to many other aspects of your life as well.

Acceptance

I could go on. But ultimately the goal of this was to humanize the life of someone who doesn't feel like they're at a disadvantage in life anymore.

So that when you see the athlete, or player, or successful marriage, that you don't have any disconnect in your head that makes you believe that this person isn't like you, isn't dealing with an internal struggle, and isn't making compromises but also grinding continually at the same time.
And now I want to leave you with one more lesson. Because last time I left, I said to keep in mind that the combination of all the feats that you see guys doing here seem to morph into this superhuman male you have in your mind, who holds all the positive attributes and non of the negative ones. And holding yourself up against that idealism may make you constantly feel you aren't good enough.

But what I didn't say, through correlation, is that you also do the same thing with women too, and take all the positive attributes you see here, and morph them into a perfect wife as well.

What you need to understand is that with the understanding that you, we, us, them, while striving to be the best person we can be, all deal with internal struggles and aren't superpowered, so is your wife. She is not your ideal. Your ideal may not even be out there.

And for those who have wives that just aren't trying at all and who you see a runaway train heading for divorce this isn't for you.

But for the guy who has a wife that seems to at least be trying. Who makes effort to come along...even if it's not at the pace you want...even if it's slightly off the destination you want. Understand she is trying. You know how you started off and you weren't entirely clear of the path yet...how you did some sloppy improvements, and messed up in some places, and needed guidance and time? Holy shit your wife will do that same thing when she tries to follow.

Ultimately you will be the judge of where your ship is going and who comes along, but remember that just as you are working with what you have, with a full understanding of your limitations, she is as well. So she's not ideal. But she's growing and improving just like you. Can you live with that?

There's no right or wrong answer here. And I did lie, I'm giving you another warning. Just like I said before if you use anything I've said as an excuse not to work on YOU, then it's all your fault...so too if you use any of what I've just said as an excuse for HER, then again it's all your fault. It's not an excuse. I'm not advocating for more slack that you're ultimately willing to give.

But you still need to ask, can you live with that? I'm flawed. You're flawed. She's flawed. Come to terms with that. It took me three years to get to where I wanted to be. And my wife has really only been solidifying her improvement for maybe 1. But on more than one occasion, unprompted, she's already said looking back she's glad we're out of that rough spot, and that she's happier than she ever has been. And I agree.
The Red Pill has made us all very aware of the basic Beta Bux covert contract of provisioning for sexual access to his wife. Swallowing the red pill means giving up this covert contract. There are other, less apparent validation needs and covert contracts common to many new men here that will also poison your sexual relationship with your wife, which you must also recognize and remove before you can have the great sex that you (and your wife) desire.

Many a husband takes every word, action, or denial regarding sex by one woman (his wife) as a profound affirmation or rejection of his attractiveness, or even his fundamental worth as a man. For some, this may be confounded with unresolved self-esteem issues as nerds or "losers" from their formative teenage years, conflating their value and status as a person with their sexual success.

Many people pointed out that I had my wife on a pedestal, but it was more than that - I'd built my entire self-identity around being "the nerd that made good and got the dream girl." I felt like I'd won at life...and having that ripped away was a direct attack on my self-image. Which is why you shouldn't build your self-image on a foundation of validation from others. Lesson learned.

This is all wrapped up in validation as well, because I don't FEEL attractive because she doesn't ACT like I think she would act if she felt I was attractive, so I give in order to get that reaction. No reaction, no validation, hurt feelings, etc. Best to stay in the comfort zone in order to avoid that.

These men often orbit their wives seeking sex more for affirmation of their self-worth than from authentic desire. This is toxic to their sexual relationship for several reasons:

- Their neediness for validation and lack of self-confidence is unattractive.
- Their wives sense the lack of authentic desire to be responsive to, and lose their own validation and motivation for sex.
- The need of the husband for signs of attraction and desire from his wife makes sex tiresome emotional labor for her, in which she has to regulate or fake her emotions and response to validate him. This makes sex unappealing, inauthentic, effortful, and emotionally risky for her should her act fail to provide the validation comfort he seeks.
- Both husband and wife are incentivized to stick to an unchanging, comfortable sexual script: he to be assured of getting the validation he needs, and she to avoid the danger of misreading a new situation and failing at her emotional labor of providing the signs he needs to feel attractive.

These issues make sex unappealing and unrewarding for the wife, so she avoids or rejects sex with her needy husband as much as possible, and strongly resists any change to their standard sexual script.

Even if she agrees to sex and performs well all desired acts, he may be unhappy if he didn't perceive her to be sufficiently attracted. Many such husbands want their wife to initiate sex as further validation.

Diagnostic: If your perception and enjoyment of a sexual encounter depends on what you imagine your wife is thinking, you have a validation problem. Stay out of your wife's head!

Good or giving lover validation

Validating their prowess or performance as a lover, or as a generous lover who takes care of his wife's "needs," is important to the self-image of many men. For example, giving his wife an orgasm often becomes a symbolic metric validating the husband's performance, so he insists on making her cum every time even when she would prefer not to. This leads to bad sex for her and makes sex an emotional labor in which she feels pressured either to fake an orgasm, or tolerate and perform a sexual act she doesn't desire then. It also objectifies the wife as a female orgasming machine that the husband "plays" like a video game to induce orgasm and thereby win his validation, making their sex impersonal rather than intimate.

Paradoxically, the more the wife cums, the worse the sex may be for her.

By all means bring your wife to orgasm if she wants one or more, but don't force it on her, or pressure or shame her about her sexuality just to meet your own unhealthy need for validation.

Special sex act / submission validation

It's quite common for an insecure beta to seek validation through the performance of specific sex acts, where the symbolic validation matters more to him than the physical sensation or the quality of the overall sexual encounter.

- "If she really loved me she'd allow me anal sex."

- "I'd be OK without anal if she had refused all previous boyfriends, but she let her boyfriend Chad fuck her ass, so as her husband I should get it, too."

Obsession with being validated by her submission to a specific sex act can hold the entire sexual relationship hostage to its performance, ensures resentment on at least one side, and at best deadlocks the sexual relationship into its current poor state while they struggle over that one issue.

This case often arises when the existing sexual pattern is locked into a narrow range due to the various issues discussed here, or by the man's limited range of sexual expression within his sexual comfort zone, so the desired act assumes outsize importance as the only safe way he can see to add novelty or variety to move the sexual relationship forward. In my own experience, as I've developed a richer palette of Emotion and Variety to play with, I care less and less about any specific sexual act; there's always other interesting new things to try.

Mainstream society promotes the ideal that men be polite, respectful, and chivalrous with women, and that courteous men avoid open discussion of personal sexual matters and desires. (Nice Guys create covert contracts that such behavior should itself entitle them to sexual relationships with women, or their wives.) Many of us, including myself before MRP, have unthinkingly carried these polite social conventions over into our LTRs, and paradoxically have frank, intimate discussions with our wives about everything except sex, which should be the most intimate of all.

These public conventions of politeness and respect made me avoid dirty talk, frank sexual discussion, and uninhibited expression of Emotion as in SGM with my wife, until reading NMMNG pointed out the complete incongruity with all other aspects of my life and marital relationship. Now we speak openly about sex, and I talk with Emotion during sex with my wife.

Some guys build their self-image as a good person on being scrupulously fair and egalitarian. Many are also Nice Guys who build covert contracts expecting complete sexual reciprocity and symmetry from their wives

- "I never deny her sex, so it's not fair that she rejects me."
- "I give her oral, so she should give me blowjobs."
- "Each of us should initiate half of the time."

and then resent their wives for not fulfilling these hidden expectations.

I still, even after so long, find my wife's attitude towards sex difficult. Even now, when we're having more sex than I ever really thought possible, it's always me focusing on her. She never goes down on me, doesn't focus on my pleasure outside
As with Good and Giving Lover validators, these Egalitarian validation-seekers may impose bad sex and emotional labor on their wives in the name of strict fairness and reciprocity in order to validate their self-perception as fair, egalitarian partners. The Reciprocal Covert Contractors will experience the usual disappointment, resentment, anger, and butthurt as their wives resist or reject bad sex.

Hypocrisy is common here, as the "fair" Nice Guy generally only "gives" in ways that he sexually enjoys, and then expects a second reward for his "sacrifice".

Intimacy

I'm not sure what sex without any need for external validation even looks like. At that point, is anything that produces a similar physical experience equivalent? Is having sex with a robot the same as having sex with your wife, or having sex with a stranger, provided they produce similar physical feelings?

The great advantage of LTR sex over a ONS or STR is its potential for intimacy; sex with the deep emotional and physical interplay based on profound knowledge of and raw, unfiltered interaction between each others' bodies, minds, and emotions. Validation-seeking and covert contracts prevent intimacy because they are self-focused rather than focused on open, uninhibited interplay with the other person; they make sex transactional and constrained within limiting boundaries. Great sex requires eliminating all covert contracts, and all need for validation and ego support, to create the conditions in which intimacy can emerge.

The following scenario may help you identify hidden needs for validation or covert contracts that are limiting your sex life:

You come to bed after a long day, shortly after your wife. You find yourself incredibly horny, so you initiate sex. Your wife says "Honey, I had a long and difficult day, and I'm totally exhausted. I don't want an orgasm, I'm not up for giving you a blowjob or handjob or riding you or even moving ... but I would enjoy just lying here passively and letting you take your pleasure with my body."

Could you embrace her offer, or would you refuse because

- "receptive starfish" sex doesn't validate you? [Attraction validation]
- her refusal to perform a blowjob or other acts of obedience or submission doesn't validate your ego? [Special sex act / submission validation]

- not giving her pleasure fails to validate your sexual prowess? [Good lover validation]

- you're profoundly uncomfortable focusing on your own pleasure rather than hers? [Giving lover, or egalitarian validation]

- you're unable to believe her statement that she wants you to? [Attraction validation]

- you're too uncomfortable with your own sexuality to express or expose it without the cover of pleasuring her? [Respectful validation]

Would you "accept" her offer like a Nice Guy but

- then push for more from her during the action to try to get your validation or fulfill your covert contract?

- not fully enjoy it because of butthurt about not getting validated?

- not fully enjoy it because you worried about what she was thinking or feeling?

- not do what you really desired for fear of what she might think?

Could you [overcome your need for Egalitarian validation and] fully embrace and fully enjoy her offer, by

- turning on the lights and uninhibitedly telling her every dirty thought, feeling, and desire [Overcome need for Respectful validation] as you stare at her naked tits, stroke her hair and skin, slowly insert yourself inside her, and focus on having the perfect orgasm? [Overcome need for Good or Giving Lover validation]

- eating her pussy entirely for your own pleasure without making her cum [Overcome need for Good or Giving Lover validation], while telling her how she tastes and feels? [Overcome need for Respectful validation]

- climbing right on and pounding away, if that's what you really desire at that moment? [Overcome need for Good or Giving Lover validation]
You're not fully comfortable with your own sexuality or with hers, or you're hung up by validation needs or covert contracts, if you couldn't.

This post grew out of a discussion with u/resolutions316 following his most recent OYS, at the suggestion of u/weakandsensitive.
I posted a 1 yr update on here and I wasn't intending to post a 2 yr update. But after a few comments from the wife, I thought I would. If nothing else, its for you lurkers and guys grinding it out to realise that this shit works.

A few weekends ago we managed to get a babysitter, so I told the wife that we were going out for dinner. It was only a quick dinner out, not a huge special occasion.

We are out at dinner, and we are talking as adults. (For those of you with kids, its important that when you take your wife out that you're not taking out the mother of your children, you treat her like a girlfriend. Flirt with her. Make her feel young and girly.)

It was during this conversation we were discussing what we wanted to do in the next few years. I was telling her some of my plans for the future (study and work) and she said:

"you know, I don't think you would have chosen to be with me if you had the option now"

It was a complete non-sequitur. But that one sentence demonstrated the difference I'd made in two years. Two years ago - a skinny-fat, drinking, fake-it-til-you-make-it asswipe that she regarded with contempt. Now she thinks I wouldn't choose her if I was single...

What was the difference? What makes me a different person now than before?

I stuck to the gameplan.

I made a MAP. I stuck to it. I review it and I update it.

I joined the gym. I lift. I'm not going to lie, I'm not a yuuuge guy but I'm trim and well built and looking better in my 40s than I ever did in my 20s.

I upgraded my wardrobe, got a stylish haircut. I made new social circles. I became more involved in the local community.

Sure there were some times when I ground out and didn't lift for a while, or lost frame. But never for long, and when I did, I came back more fierce than ever. It's simple. I stuck to the plan. Don't confuse this post with a humblebrag. This is me... telling you... that I've been working this for over two years and I really dig the person that I am. My marriage still isn't perfect, no way. But I am one-thousand times the man I was before, and that's what MRP offered, and that's what I got. I never came here looking for marriage fix-up, I was here to fix me.

I'm proud of the person that I am now. A man that two years ago my wife wanted to kick out, but who now thinks is well above her station. I'm not perfect, I've still got work to do. I'm confident and secure about myself. MRP has made the man.

So boys, are you going to stick with it?
So... you got the "I love you but I'm not in love with you" (ILYBINILWY) speech?
by HornsOfApathy | March 12, 2020 | Link

Sucks. You got the “I love you but I’m not in love with you” speech? Around here we use the acronym ILYBINILWY – because it’s a very, very common thing for women who are unhappy with the men in their lives to tell those men... and it often arrives VERY unexpectedly in your lap and you're thinking "what the fuck?"

/u/KoolAidMan7980 said it so perfectly:

Most of us who have heard those words instantly think they can save the marriage if they lift more or stfu more or do something else more. That our wife is different or our situation is different. I think its mostly ego trying to shield us from the fact that our situation is no different than the 10,000 guys that have heard it before us.

Maybe you even found MRP by googling this term. What does this mean?

It doesn't mean you're fucked.

It means your woman is. Your woman is fucking someone else.

And if by the grace of a unicorn-woman-God and the power of leprechauns in the sky she isn't fucking someone else right now... it doesn't matter. Your relationship is already over.

Look dude, I know. It sucks. I actually am giving you an internet bro-hug right now... I really am. I wish I was lying to you, or had a better outlook, or something positive to tell you – but I don’t. I’m just going to straight up tell you the truth. That's what you really want, right? Your wife is 95% fucking someone else, 5% thinking about fucking someone else, and 100% has someone that she is wanting to fuck other than you.

There have been thousands of men JUST LIKE YOU who got the SAME SPEECH. You are not a special snowflake. You are no different than those other men. In EVERY. SINGLE. EXAMPLE.... it was the same outcome.

How do I know this? When your woman gives you this speech it usually means that all of her feelings for you have not only been drained, but she is also actively seeking to get feelings from someone else. Women run their lives off of getting feelings fulfilled (good or bad) and you just aren’t cutting it for her anymore because she found a better participant (95% of the time) or prospect (100% of the time) to fulfill her feelz needs.

You just don't do it for her anymore like another man has.

For that last 10 years I’ve been listening to men tell me their stories of how they got the ILYBINILWY speech from their wives. Because guess what dude? I got one too. Yep. You’re looking at him. Even this guy here right here once got the ILYBINILWY speech a very long time ago in another life with a different woman. Would you like to hear my story?

My Story:

I don’t talk about this often here – because it doesn’t fucking matter – but when I was much much younger, I knocked up a 19yo girl and married her. My alpha quickly wore off and the beta faggot underneath emerged as expected. She lost tons of respect for me, and over the course of a few years I had the ILYBINILWY speech a couple of times. Each time in my gut I suspected something was going on, but could never prove it. I lied to myself every time. I let my ego protect me from the fact that I knew something was off.

At one point I exposed or thought I had found an EA.

But she doubled down it wasn't that - sort of apologized - not really - we stayed together. This just got her better at hiding it.

On Father's Day she sat me down and gave me the ILYBINILWY speech (again).

6 months or so later, I got a phone call from Chad. I was getting ready to sign over 50% of my salary for 10 years and 100% of my assets that morning. He called me and said, "Dude, you don't know me, and we're never going to be friends... but I've been fucking your wife for a year. And I know of at least 3 other guys she has been fucking too. I know you're going to sign paperwork today. Don't do it, bro."

He handed over all the proof I needed. Even Chad had some bro-honor that day and refused to let another man go down in flames - no matter how pathetic I was.

I never once suspected a physical affair, even though I had the exact same red flags as you. I fucking SWORED 100% she would never do it. She cried anytime I brought it up. Or accused me of being paranoid. Or accused me of cheating. Tons of gaslighting. I begged her just to fucking TELL me she was cheating so it would make sense in my head. Instead, my years of beta worrying and behavior made her better at hiding it. So yeah - I've been there. And I am not projecting on you. I have seen this hundreds of fucking times at MRP and even lived it myself. We're just men here sharing notes. You can take it or leave it.

What to do?

When a faggot arrives here at MRP, I internally debate this every time this situation comes up and he asks for advice or tells his story. Presume he reads this post in all scenarios we tell him to get a divorce.

- OP sidebars. Gets a divorce at the beginning. Retains time, sanity and may become less of a faggot.
- OP doesn't sidebar. Gets a divorce at the beginning. Retains time, sanity and is probably still a faggot. Will repeat past.
- OP doesn't sidebar, waits until Chad fucks her. Lost time, sanity and is still a faggot. Might divorce her.
- OP sidebars. Divorces her anyways later, but loses time and sanity.
The only thing that matters in these scenarios is sidebar. So I’m writing this post to tell you this: Dude, I just want to give you your time back and tell you to sidebar no matter what.

Bottom line: I think time is a man's most valuable asset. I think in the cases of betrayal such as infidelity, my observations are that the male ego prevents 99/100 men from internalizing it was their fault.

This is why I struggle with the advice here. I've been in your shoes. And I burned it all to the fucking ground (eventually when I found out) like most men do. Do I give the advice for the guy to bail now knowing he'll never get it (right now) and save him time? He'll still get the suffering and heartache. Or do I just say, "Yeah dude, sucks. Hang in there, waste your time, you still won't get it.. but hit the sidebar" Truth is I can tell you all day that your woman is fucking someone else, but you won't believe me.

So, rather than just TELL you what’s going to happen and has happened before you, I’m going to show you, Neo. Just this morning I searched all of MRP and ASKMRP for the term “ILYBINILWY” and I’ve put ALL the stories here that I could find with a quick and cursory search.

This is what ILYBINILWY looks like:

/u/aita2899 - Wife being nice during separation? - got ILYBINILWY, she moved in with affair partner after knowing him 11 days. Fate: She divorces him.

/u/themerovingian01 - What’s next? - got ILYBINILWY, wife wanted “space” and moved out. He discovered she fucked another guy, did not take her back. Fate: He divorces her.

/u/processedfoodkills - A little more every day - got ILYBINILWY, two months later wife has “gone out with her friends to watch a movie at their apartment” DRESSED UP while she is ovulating. Later he finds her email open and conversations with another man and finally had proof. She slept there multiple times. Fate: He divorces her.

/u/mikeMRP - ...looking for Feedback - got ILYBINILWY, right after she had a weekend “away at a festival”, stalked the guy after, he snooped around and found out - confronted her and sex dried up. He posted for a few months at MRP then disappeared. Fate: Unknown.

/u/RecoveringBPAddict - Passed 1st Major Shit test - 18 years married, high earning beta bucks. Wife suddenly moves out saying ILYBINILWY. Then moves back in later when branch fails. Last we saw he was being re-deployed in the military but right before, wife suddenly suggests trying anal and “was proud that she could” on the first try. Fate: Stays married.

/u/fruitylad - Thanks MRP - got ILYBINILWY, then things were getting better and his wife even wanted anal sex for the “first time”... and then 5 months later he discovers she’s had an affair the entire time. Fate: He divorces her.
/u/Diesel_Dragon - Wife approaching the wall and wants freedom... - got ILYBINILWY, She said “I know we have had this conversation before but I don't feel like kissing other people is really considered cheating.” Six months later, he is on vacation with his wife where she magically can have anal sex for the very first time effortlessly, but then sticks her tongue down another guys throat in the same bar as her husband. Fate: He divorces her. Edit: Post-divorce update

/u/stay_plan_is_go_plan - How to tell if this is a divorce shit-test - got ILYBINILWY and hasn’t had sex for a year. Her sister got divorced 18 months ago, and she would spend hours every day “supporting her sister” then suddenly his wife starting having a “midlife crisis”. He sticks his head in the sand believing that if she’s not fucking him she is not fucking someone else. Fate: TBD.

/u/keepingittogether20 - His OYS #2 - got ILYBINILWY, wife moved into the other master bedroom and asked for divorce. Has not had sex since. He attempts to hide from everyone at MRP that an affair did not go on - but reveals eventually it was just an “emotional affair” with a coworker. We get him to dig deeper and he reveals it was actually kissing, holding hands, and another man grabbing her tits. As far as he knows. Fate: TBD.

Edit - Update: 3/31/20

/u/elgath3 - His OYS #1 - got ILYBINILWY after giving everything up for his woman he met in college, ending a 6 year relationship where she cheated.

/u/AlohaMaui808 - Wife cuts off sex 11 months ago - got ILYBINILWY, requested to be added as an example. Finds MRP after a year in a deadbedroom. Makes great progress but then finds evidence wife cheated. Doesn't tell her. Fate: He divorces her.

Edit: Update 4/17/20

/u/DrBeaufort - His OYS #1 - 9 years ago his wife "kissed another guy" and almost left him. Has spent last 3 years being beta, recently got ILYBINILWY speech and wife expressed interest in being a lesbian. Continued to DEER she was just depressed, but after discovering some new hidden sex toys - the sex toys went to work with her after the Coronavirus quarantine lift. He admits she has been cheating. Fate: TBD.

I know it sucks, brother. Really, I know what it’s like. But I know you probably won’t believe any of this and your ego will think your situation is different. That’s OK. Keep posting here. Keep grinding. Keep sharing your story. I’ll edit this post and add you to the list someday so that you can become one of the other notes we share with men here in this place.

But deep down - in the part of you that is most painful and scariest to confront - you know the truth. You do. Stop hiding from it.

Strength, motherfuckers
Reddit has banned the Red Man Group sub
by Rollo-Tomassi | December 8, 2018 | Link

Apparently the Red Man Group sub was so threatening to the mods that they needed to ban it. Their excuse? RMG was trying to circumvent the baseless continuing quarantine of TRP. Essentially they feared our podcast sub would evolve into the next TRP style forum.

This is complete nonsense, but this is the age we live in. Men gathering together in any way is either gay or misogynist. Men discussing intergender dynamics is a seditious act. They fear ideas. They fear the crucible of open debate, because they know their own ideas fail in it.
You don't get a break from being the Oak

by RP_PO | August 24, 2019 | Link

I haven’t put this out here on MRP, because I frankly didn’t want the pity or the small loss to anonymity, but I now want to put it out there because it may help somebody understand AWALT. And because it’s pussy shit to not put it out there. I’ve taken from this place for months, and I want to give back. I know a couple of you other guys on here have gone through some similar shit, and have the scars to prove it.

So here it is: my son died at a little under a year old last year. He spent a little over a month in the ICU with meningitis, and I could see how poor his hospital course was going. I could see how the seizures were progressively getting worse even on the Phenobarbital. I saw how awful his most recent head MRI was. I saw how my wife was pretty much clueless that we would come to a point where we would have to make a decision to remove care or not. So I slowly prepared her for it. Eventually the time came. The outlook for him was awful. We chose to withdraw care and let him have his peace, and I know we made the right choice.

So I planned the funeral. I wrote his eulogy. I stood up in front of family and friends, and delivered the eulogy. I cremated my boy. I did all of that without shedding a tear in front of a soul. When alone, I screamed at God and the universe. I sobbed and bitched and screeched. I did it right, by my own standards. Until I didn’t do it right....

In December of last year, my wife and I were on a trip together for my work, and it all hit me. All at once. I got low as shit. AND I LET IT SHOW. I got quiet and overtly sad as shit, and I let my sweet, loving, unicorn of a wife see it. I thought that somehow she would be there for me, as I had been there for her. Guess again, fucker: AWALT.

Here’s how she handled it: She wanted to get a plane ticket, and leave me there for my work trip. She framed it as giving me the space I needed, but she literally had no idea how to handle a “man” who was acting like that. She couldn’t know how to handle it. She was so clueless and repulsed that she wanted to buy a fucking ticket to get away from me. And I can’t blame her. I had been strong and stoic through it all, but I slipped one fucking time and she wanted to bail. This is what eventually opened my eyes and led me to this haven of faggots and Wise men (and the fact that we had been heading to a dead bedroom for years). This is what eventually led me to the promise to myself that nobody will ever see me cry again.

This is what you are up against if you think your wife is some kind of unicorn. This shit is as real as it gets. You don’t get a break for the worst thing that could ever happen to you. Ask u/johnyapocalypse. If you think your sweet wife will be there for you through thick and thin, you better damn sure be the Oak during those times of thick and thin. She will travel through miles of shit to be there with you, if you have the value she craves. She will also travel through miles of shit to get away from your sorry ass if you slip, even one time. But understand that it doesn’t matter if the direction is down the shit stream, or up the shit stream: You’re alone. Anything else is a compliment to your awesome or shitty life. Might as well make it an awesome life. Be the prize, be your own source of happiness, and live out your mission and vision.
Two years ago today, I discovered MRP and swallowed the pill. I've made plenty of mistakes, but I've never taken my foot off the gas since I unplugged. I started with internal changes, avoided going Rambo, and implemented slow change in myself over the course of months and years.

First and foremost: I am happier and healthier than I have ever been - even though the past year has been one of the hardest of my life. I have more responsibility, more discipline, and more freedom than I've ever enjoyed. I am deeply grateful.

• Rule 1: MRP works as a sexual strategy. Early on, I forced myself to cold approach, get numbers, catch and release, get shut down, practice, calibrate. I went out alone to approach women, went out with new friends who didn't know I was married. I got phone numbers and made bold plans, had dates in the hot tub and made out under the ferris wheel. I met women and refused to buy them drinks, I snuck away into alleys with pretty girls who loved their boyfriends. In year two, I realized that having a woman in my life brings a kind of balance and benefit that far exceeds just sexual gratification or validation. Now I'm focused on implementing more authentic strategies and attracting women through honesty, but the foundation set by RSD and Day Bang (and similar resources) helped get me to this point. Women react differently to me now - and I remembered what it was like to be desired by a woman, and to give my attention to her as a gift (rather than supplication or a Covert Contract). In my second year, I spent a lot less time masturbating (about twice a month). I also noticed that my sexual tastes started changing when I spent less time looking at porn, and more time getting laid in real life.

• In Year Two of MRP, my wife asked me if I would ever cheat. I told her honestly that I wished I could say "No". But I told her that the truth was, it would take a lot for me to cheat. It was true then, it's still true when she asks me now.

• In my second year of MRP, I kept my beard long all year - and now I wish I'd started sooner. I started seeing my dentist, flossing every day, and using a face lotion that is meant for faces (not just the same body lotion I put on my arms). I bought a tongue scraper, and continued working on my posture. I got my testosterone levels checked last year (6.04 ng/mL) and this year (6.43 ng/mL), both are "normal" but not as high as I'd like. I continued going to the gym 4/5 times every week, ate clean, consumed a lot of protein shakes. I'm still scrawny, but I look great naked. I cut some fat (155lbs, 12%BF), and added 20 pounds to my max benchpress (190lb 5x5). I bought a lot of new underwear - the good stuff; my wife rolls her eyes, other girls love them. After 9 months, during a routine hair cut I was told that the finasteride is working - lots of new growth means my hairline is advancing again before it could get noticabley thin up front.

• In year two of MRP, I stopped wearing my wedding ring. Wearing it was a "right" thing that I was doing for the wrong reasons, which is exactly what I told my wife when she finally asked me about it. It's also what I repeat broken-record when she occasionally shit tests me about it now. I put my ring back on for a special family event honoring her dad - when we came home, it went back in my nightstand. She wears her rings every day.

- I improved my social life. I started doing things exclusively for myself, by myself. I made goals to get out of the house more, and started accepting every invitation that came my way. The first few times I went to concerts by myself, my wife had questions. Now, it's not uncommon for me to plan trips to festivals or to visit friends out of town, or just to be by myself for hours or days. I joined fraternal groups, I went out and made friends with new guys with like minds. I met up with strangers, forced myself to do things that were uncomfortable. When my guy friends wouldn't come with me, I went to parties and networking events alone.

- Texting other women used to be a problem for me - I knew my wife would check our shared cell phone bill, and there would only be one or two phone numbers that she didn't recognize. My problem was my lame social life which required no texting. A few months ago, my wife said "Your dad texts a lot of people" to one of our kids. I immediately knew it was because she snooped through my cell phone records, saw the many people that I'm now talking to on a regular basis, and couldn't identify that several of them are conversations with other women.

- My marriage has improved. The 1 Month/Year of Beta Rule was accurate: after being together for 14 years of my mostly beta bullshit, it took at around 14 months for the tides of the marriage to begin to change. The 1,000 foot rope is still getting tighter every day, but the power dynamic in my marriage is completely in my favor. Unsolicited BJs returned, and anal sex happens now because I stopped obsessing about it. For the first time, I came in her mouth (to be clear, this is because I told her "I want to come in your mouth" while she was blowing me. I had tried in the past and been rejected. I stopped arguing about it, and waiting until I became the type of guy who gets head from his wife.) I also acknowledged subtle Oneitis that I've had for most of my life, that I had accepted the Disney fairy tale bullshit for so long that it still loomed in my mind in spite of my RP awareness. I learned that it's really okay that no one will ever love me like that, especially not my wife. It's my job to love myself like that.

- I quit most TV, news and radio. I don't get worked up over politics of news anymore, and it makes me glad. I don't know about the latest shooting, but I learned how to repair my motorcycle. I am behind on Game Of Thrones, but I play more instruments now. I am so far behind in Hearthstone, you guys, I don't even think my decks would be competitive anymore.

- I fulfilled lifelong dreams without asking for permission. I refused to apologize, unless I meant it. I lived out actual fantasies, and told no one. I stopped saying things that I didn't mean (like "I'm sorry") and things that made me weak ("just", "I want", "can I?"). In Year Two, I grew into the frame that I was learning to set in my first year.

- I started seeing RP truths everywhere - at work, with my friends, in my parents. Every day, I recognize the DEERing, Egos, Excuses and Self-Sabotage that I used to be subject to. I learned that the same rules apply to my wife, my coworkers, and most men. I've learned the hard way to be a little less trusting of everyone. I have now been RP aware long enough to watch beautiful young women get married, get lazy, get fat, get pregnant and enter BP states of marriage. Pretty girls I used to admire, slowly hitting the wall - and I've traded places with them on the SMV scale. I used to lust after their little bodies - now they check out my arms in the lunch room. Shit changes fast.
concentrated effort, men like us can age like a fine wine, at a time when most women are aging like organic cheese.

- Today, I celebrate 1 year without tobacco or nicotine, and I've told no one (except you fuckers). I was a smoker for years, then used chewing tobacco (dip) for many more. I had to become completely disgusted with my attachment to the habit - and I hated how addicted I was. I would plan the number of cans of chewing tobacco I would need for vacations or overnight trips, and I would have anxiety when I was in a place where I couldn't have nicotine. Here's how I quit: I bought a vape, and manually cut the amount of nicotine down to zero over the course of about a year. After that, I still sucked that metal dick (the vape) even with zero nicotine in it, because I was still addicted to the habit. Typing this all out makes me even more aware of how weak I was! As I was doing this, I told no one. My wife and kids eventually noticed that I quit, but it took months. I continued my habit of drinking very little alcohol this past year.

- In year one, I wrote 52 pages of journal entries, 74 pages in my second year (not including my OYS or other posts here). This has been extremely valuable.

- In my second year of MRP, I quit freaking out about my mission. One of the best lessons I took away from WOTSM is that my mission can be like layers of an onion. It doesn't have to be a perfect, profound encapsulation of my life's work. It just has to be the thing that's bigger than me, that is the driving force behind everything I do. Once I realized that my mission doesn't have to be perfect (it's just another layer of the onion that I'm peeling back) I felt a lot more freedom. At times, my mission is shallow and it involves building my body at the gym, or focusing on how I dress at work. At other times, my mission is highly personal, and inward facing - requiring quiet introspection, and meditation.

MRP has helped me in far more than just sex and relationships. The last year has been one of the most challenging of my life. I survived a brutal job layoff because I'd been practicing discipline and stoicism, as a direct result of what I was learning through MRP (months later, my wife would thank me for not letting her know how bad it was). I've done a lot of reading, but more putting into action what I'd read. Learning to speak up, confronting other men face-to-face, and even being the aggressor on purpose when it's called for. Year two was the first time I related to my own childhood bullies, and how they must have viewed me.

I still ain't shit yet, but Year Two of MRP has been the best of my life. This year is going to be even better.

Good sex requires Emotion
by man_in_the_world | December 26, 2018 | Link

I found r/marriedredpill while looking for ideas to spice up my boring, same-thing-every-time sex life with my postmenopausal wife.

I've naturally followed most MRP principles throughout my 30+ year marriage, with the notable exception of those directly related to sex (flirting/game; behaviors toward and during sex). The very predictable result has been an otherwise great relationship with a wife who respects and likes me, who rarely rejects sex, but who claims to have zero sex drive (for me?) after menopause, with purely responsive desire and very slow arousal during sex.

The big new revelations for me from MRP have been The Sex God Method and DEVI, Chapter 10 of NMMNG about sex, and Game. My still-poor application of these ideas has already improved sex with my wife. As I progress, I'm beginning to appreciate the primacy of Emotion over the physical in sex and sexual response, especially for women for whom sexual arousal is primarily mental and emotional. As from Practical Female Psychology

"A woman is dependent upon the actions and attitude of her man with respect to how aroused she is able to become. ... in order for her to be sexually receptive, she still has to find within a man a combination of ... male sexual dominance, and the skill of verbally stimulating emotions within a woman"

As I see it now, effectively SGM's DEVI is at root all about emotions: the strong feelings surrounding submission or resistance with Dominance; stimulating different emotions through Variety; experiencing these emotions to their fullest through Immersion.

Emotionally limited sex

For the recovering Nice Guys of MRP, sex is primarily about covert contracts and validation. To avoid upsetting or offending their wives, their emotional expression with sex is both very limited and inauthentic. (This may often account for much of her lack of interest in sex with him.) As he struggles to avoid DEERing and validation-seeking, demonstrate OI, and STFU, the MRP novice often brings even less Emotion to the bedroom. This leads to bad sex that fails to engage her emotionally, which very often leads to

- relationship improvement but without much sexual improvement
- unenthusiastic wives who resist any sexual changes
- wives who feel emotionally disconnected and "you only want me for sex"
- more Dread-induced bad sex that wives eventually reject, with a return to a dead
Like most guys, I'm most comfortable with the physical aspects of sex, and purely physical sex is at least momentarily satisfying, so in the past I focused primarily on physical acts and stimulation. Reading SGM convinced me to immediately add more Dominance and Variety to sex with my wife (as well as Emotion, which was less clear to me), but it was mostly physical Dominance without much emotional effect. Variety to me was also at first about different positions/acts/body-parts/holes. After an initial increase in sexual interest and response (which I now realize was mostly an emotional response to the novelty), it tapered off again for my wife, and for me as well. I soon found that without a strong emotional component (whether accidental or intentional), Dominance and Variety have limited effect and are mostly an irritation or a distraction from the better sex I sought for me and her.

Sex with Emotion

I eventually realized that seeking variety only through different physical acts was mostly about allowing me to stay within my own (physical) sexual comfort zone by pushing her out of hers. Now, I'm mostly pushing myself beyond my own comfort zone in learning to use emotion effectively in sex.

- Before this change, I was a silent lover. Now, I work at talking before, during and after sex; and not just over-the-top phony dirty talk as in porn videos, but to engage a variety of emotions such as laughter as well as "sexual" emotions. I express my raw thoughts, pleasure, and desires rather than censor them during sex.

- I've introduced a lot more variety and novelty in "foreplay" activities with emotional context, instead of just physical stimulation. I've also added "preplay", a variety of physically active sexy or sexual things that I lead my wife to do (such as sexy games or dancing nude, often outside the bedroom) that turn me on and engage my wife's emotions, only some of which involve physical contact.

- I focus on the emotional content of Dominance, Variety, and Immersion, and often choose what I do for a desired emotional effect.

- I try to engage a variety of emotions when flirting and gaming.

Learning to bring Emotion to sex has been a challenge for me and I still suck at it, but to my initial surprise it has already brought me more interest and sexual satisfaction than "unlocking" another act, hole, position, or location. (And I don't think this is just because I'm getting old.) This also places positive change within my control, not hers. And when I'm successful at bringing Emotion to sex, my wife is much more easily aroused and sexually responsive.
Many guys here seem obsessed with getting their wife to perform some specific sex act. I suspect this focus often arises from a lack of Emotion, leaving them stuck with boring sex and only new physical acts to provide validation or Variety. As I've made sex a richer and more varied emotional experience, I've found that I care less and less about specific acts; by the time we get to the physical sex, the specific act or position is usually incidental to the predominantly emotional experience.

One Year In
by FossilGuy16 | May 25, 2018 | Link

One year ago I was occasionally pissed about by sex life - once every 4 - 8 weeks. The low point was having a sex talk with my wife was on vacation where I was almost in tears - looking back, I can see she was mostly indifferent to me. I stumbled across MRP when googling sexless marriage. The other turning point was going to my 20 year high school reunion, realizing I was one of the most successful people in my graduating class but still didn't have a good sex life. I found out that all of my friends from school had cheated on their wives - I laughed initially until I thought of my own situation and decided I had nothing to laugh about.

Starting out I weighed 155 pounds and was skinny fat - approx. 20% BF. Starting lifts - BP 95 lbs, OP 75 lbs, DL - 135 lbs, Squat - 115 lbs. Me - 38, wife - 41, 2 kids, 7 and 5. I was playing hockey a couple of times a week, so in decent cardio shape, but no muscle mass. I wore glasses, shaved twice a week, haircuts once every two months, drank a beer a night, baggy clothes, deferred to my wife on everything, made nice with my kids always. Being introverted, I used that as an excuse to be socially isolated at all outings. My initiations with my wife were beyond weak. My diet was ok, but too many carbs, sugar and industrial seed oils. I did not take the reins when registering my kids for sports. The only thing I was doing right was made the move to run my own company 6 years prior and was becoming successful. I always listened to what my wife said and not what she did. Not sure what my starting Testosterone level was, but I am guessing it was extremely low (200 - 250) based on my libido. I masturbated daily to porn.

Early Changes I started at the gym 4x per week, wearing contacts and getting shit done at the acreage. I became more confrontational with my wife, I had never been confrontational with anyone - it came as quite a shock to her and myself. I started shaving every 2nd day, hair cuts every 3rd week and following style on twitter. Bought a wicked pair of aviators - my wife questioned me and I just replied that I liked them. I was reading like a maniac - jumped all over the place on the sidebar...should have started at the start with NMMNG and WISNIFG - came to these later than I should have.

Early Success After a great day of canoeing at the river, the kids were playing at the cabin. My wife and I were hauling stuff to the truck - we were both flirting and I mentioned that I felt like taking her behind the quad right then and there. She laughed and said we would be seen by the kids. A couple of minutes later she was going to jump down from the trailer, I held out my arms instead and she jumped into them - I carried her to the front of the truck and fucked - she told me not to get used to it because it wasn't going to happen again.

Early Rambo Domineering became a problem that lasted early until 9-10 months in. Attempting to make all of the decisions on my own without any input from my 1st officer was a problem. My 1st officer is smart and has good ideas - I would make decisions without even talking to her which would drive her nuts and lead to talks. She would talk and berate me and I would stay too autistic.

Power Struggle The domineering led/contributed to a big power struggle which lasted most of the year. My wife is a doctor, runs her own business and had run the family for the previous 9 years, she wasn't going down without a struggle. We were having more sex - once a week to once every second week, but she was holding sex over me to maintain control and I had covert contracts all over the place for sex.

Sex Moratorium - 5 months in I decided to take a sex moratorium for 3 months for a couple of reasons - stop getting validation from sex, uncover my covert contracts and assist in the power struggle - I also stopped masturbating to porn. Within a couple of days of starting the moratorium, my wife initiated and was the most engaged I can remember in a long time and was extremely deflated when I told her no sex. I found that without sex on the table, I would still flirt with my wife and I generally liked her. I stopped the moratorium after a month since I had discovered my covert contracts and it was having a detrimental effect on my marriage and my wife. My wife told me after, that the one thing she learned from the month off, was that I couldn't live without sex - I laughed, since I knew she was talking about herself - she was struggling to deal with stress without it.

Making Good Decisions Getting closer to the end of the year, I started to realize the difference between domineering and making decisions with input from the 1st officer - even though she doesn't agree. The first is being a tyrant who everyone despises since they are out for themselves. The 2nd took some introspection since my 1st officer had a lot of good ideas. I generally accepted the good ideas she had - but occasionally I would disagree - during those times I would not make a decision right away and go over the problem before making the decision - telling my 1st officer the plan before implementing - not for approval, just to keep her in the loop and to prepare her. She doesn't always agree and can be a little shitty sometimes, but she is starting to trust my judgement and support with less anger.

Parenting Stepping up to the plate in parenting has helped my kids and my marriage. Setting down boundaries and not having the kids at the center of the family has helped everyone.

The one moment that stand out is when my daughter got angry and wouldn't stop yelling at the top of her lungs. I kept escalating to the point of being stern/berating her - she ran to her bed scared and hid. My wife tried to berate me and tell me to apologize since our daughter was scared. I stayed stern with my wife and told her that my daughter should be scared and needed to apologize to me. My daughter did and then snuggled on the couch with me. My wife snuggled up to me later as well. Owning the parenting direction may be the single biggest factor of contentment in my house and marriage.

Style Hired a style coach after fumbling around for the first 8 months. Dialed in my clothes and with muscle from lifting, I look good. One of the big things I have applied is not overdressing - looking good for the occasion. My wife somehow found out about this and how much it cost - looking through email maybe? - when she brings it up I mostly ignore and it has not become an issue.

Social Coached my son's hockey and my daughter's ball team this year. At social events, I approach and talk to people I know, even if it is just a little, and open people all of the time when I am out. I organized a trip to go see JBP talk and then formed a book club after with... some men in my area - first book we read was NMMNG. The book club has been a good way to discuss RP concepts with men I know.

Mission Prior to the year beginning, I was progressing in part of my mission but it was mostly a loose concept. I have decided what my 25 year plan looks like and am actively building towards it. Started a second company this year and got a grant from the gov't to build the prototype - currently being built.

After 1 year I had 3 compliments from old friends in the last week about how good I look. My lifts are DL - 1x320, Sq - 5x185 (knee injury is preventing more weight), Strict OP - 5x120 lbs, BP - 1x205. Weigh 165 lbs, 13.4% BFI. Sex 1 - 2x per week. Testosterone was 450 around 3 months ago. Wife is more content and defers to me almost always now - her moods affect me less - not totally where I want to be, but getting better. Kids are more respectful and more independent. I planned our most recent vacation with input from my wife - best vacation for everyone involved to date.

Sex after 1 year Frequency is up to once or twice a week - still getting turned down about 50% of the time. Some of the best sex has happened in the last 3 months - contrary to her numerous protestations, she does like ass play. I have had my first couple of BJs in my 9 year marriage. She is submissive enough out of the bedroom but I have struggled with consistently being the dominant in the bedroom - the times I have been dominant are the best sex we have had and she is gooey soft and pleasant then next morning. I have not totally overcome the mind hurdle of being dominant all of the time in the bedroom.

The best sex we have had in the last couple of months was in a hotel with kids sleeping. I poured the bath without consulting her. She rode me in the tub while I pulled her hair and had a finger in her ass - that may be the most into it I have ever seen her.

Room to Grow I still have a ways to go - my initiations are still too weak, I still listen to my wife's words too much and not her actions. I need to find ways to isolate my wife more when the kids are around. I need to apply more of SGM and dominate my wife more during sex. I need to be more vocal during sex. I need to get my knee fixed (seeing a specialist next week). Once fixed I want to start a martial art. I am good at opening random people but still struggle with opening good looking women in public.

Final Thoughts It took close to a year to realize how much of a long game this is - incremental improvements over time are what wins the race. It takes time to change yourself and even longer to change your mindset. Once you change, everyone else changes in their interactions towards you - hence, worry about yourself - quit trying to change everyone else. You will make mistakes - don't worry about the mistakes - just learn from them. Owning your shit gives you control over your life and what your future holds. I am glad I found MRP - my life including sex life is much more satisfying.
How to divorce your wife
by 88Will88 | January 23, 2018 | Link

Firstly this is not an exhaustive post, there is already some great information on this sub, read it and get a full picture. Secondly, this post will only touch on legal remedies and seeing a lawyer. I am a lawyer so I know one thing for sure, the standard advice of “lawyer up” is exactly what I tell people. Why? Because I know that lawyers are the only people who profit from being involved in a divorce. My post will focus on doing the exact opposite of seeing a lawyer, the main emphasis of this post will be a satisfactory result for you, your kids and (gasp) your soon to be ex wife. So let’s proceed with my method of divorcing your wife.

STEP ONE

You need to make your ex wife into a friend. You need to fake it until you make it. You need to walk the fine line between being Machiavellian, and genuinely forgiving this person for all of their failures and faults. FAKE IT TIL YOU MAKE IT! How do you do this? That depends on the reasons for the break up and your past relationship. This could be broken down into an infinite number of categories but your approach will be largely the same in any situation apart from some minor variations on your mantras (see below). The most common scenario we see in here is that you were predominantly a hapless beta or you gradually became one and now your wife has told you “I love you but I am not in love with you” or you have found out she is fucking some other dude or she has commenced an emotional affair.

At this point her hamster is busily justifying why she did what she did and she will happily throw you under the bus just to avoid feeling any responsibility whatsoever for sucking Chad’s dick and abandoning all morality due to her tingles. She does not care about you, her children or anything else on the planet. Her primordial desire not to be murdered has kicked in and she does not even think she has done anything wrong. She will gaslight you, she will lie, she will make fake allegations to the police, her family, her friends and social circle and she will do literally anything other than act like an adult and accept responsibility. The time you raised your voice in 2010 becomes evidence of a long relationship of abuse. So here is the hard part, even though you are either crying into your pillow clutching your childhood teddy bear or seething with rage, you need to swallow your emotions and proceed as if she actually did not do anything wrong.

STEP TWO

You need to just say shit like “relationships have a use by date and it appears our relationship has run it’s course”, “we had a good time together but now it is over”, “you were a great partner and you are a loving mother. I just want us both to move forward”, “I want this to be as easy as possible for both of us”, “I do not want our hard earned money going into the pockets of some greedy lawyer”, “We are adults, we need to act like adults and talk this through”. These are your mantras, you do not say “You are a worthless whore who does not give a shit about our kids or our past” or anything like that, you just act stoic and hold the line and keep repeating the above phrases until she is 100% certain that she is escaping from responsibility for her actions. Then you need to turn her into a friend and ally for the sake of money and the kids.

A couple of small amendments to this, for those of you in the minority of guys who visit this sub who were actually the bad guy and who got caught fucking around on their wife, you fall on your sword. You let her rage at you, cry, threaten you abuse you, hit you, and you take it all like a scalded dog. You admit to everything, you give her every opportunity to scream hysterically at you, in fact you seek out these opportunities to vent at you. You tell her it was all your fault (even if she was a frigid dragon from hell) you accept 100% responsibility and the only thing you deny are false criminal allegations or false allegations of abuse. Even then you let her rage at you until it is out of her system and you never attempt to offer up an excuse for allowing your selfish demon spawned cock to control your rational mind.

So as you can see, both options essentially absolve her of any responsibility or need for introspection. In scenario 1 (95% of you) you have forgiven her and you just want to move on like adults and do what is best for your kids and your hard won finances. In scenario 2 you fall on your sword and don’t blame her for anything. Now that you have your modus operandi you stick to the mantras, you need to move from the position of putting the past behind you into the position of an alliance. This may be a temporary alliance which allows you to file consent orders with your family court, or it may be a permanent alliance so that you can mutually decide the best way to deal with the kids and the money. Your feelings are absolutely fucking irrelevant, she does not give a fuck about your feelings, the courts and the government do not give a fuck about your feelings and I do not give a fuck about your feelings. We are here to achieve a goal, not to obtain some form of existential justice. It is your own stupid fault for getting married anyway, marriage is an abomination and humans are not monogamous, get over it.

STEP THREE

Now you must establish a regular and friendly way to communicate. Those of you who achieve the best outcome should have no issue at all having coffee or even dinner with the ex and having a friendly and even enjoyable time discussing how awesome your kids are, helping each other out with problems or anything else which comes up in normal discussions between two adults. The next lower step is you just do everything by telephone and keep it civil, ideally this is a step which ends up as face to face communication. Thirdly and the least desirable outcome is that you stick to writing only, by email or text. This has some advantages during the early hostile stage so it is often the first of three steps. If you are stuck on this step then you are a butthurt little bitch or your ex is a sociopath, either way it is your fault for marrying her so STFU.
That’s it, it is not rocket science. Once you remove the emotion from these issues things should fall into place pretty naturally. Do you both love your kids? Check. do you both like money? Check. Then why on Earth would anyone go and see a lawyer except to punish the other person. Now I am not a child, I know that there are plenty of women who think divorce is an opportunity to extract maximum revenge, children and money from their ex husband and there are plenty of lawyers who will tell her that is exactly what she should do. I have seen so many people waste 10s if not 100s of thousands of dollars essentially punishing their ex. Even the most hardened lawyers are often astounded at just how much people are willing to spend on petty grievances. Do not be one of these people. Make an ally out of your ex, or she will sure as hell become your enemy. Take your pick.

- “Do I not destroy my enemies when I make them my friends?” — Abraham Lincoln

Finally, if your ex has already started legal proceedings, made fake criminal allegations, or has a restraining order on you then the above is not likely to be an option for you. You then need to revert to the standard advice of “lawyer up”. Even then you should try and see if you can change her mind. Ask her why you need to talk through lawyers at a cost of $100s of dollars each per hour, for all of your communication. Ask her why you cannot just act like adults and sort this out between the two of you. Try and avoid mediation and conciliation as well, this is just an interim step to seeing lawyers. Why do you need to pay someone so that two adults can talk? It will not be an option for everyone but it is definitely the best option for you, your kids and your ex wife to keep the state out of your lives.

You can not fear her emotions

by fuckmrp | August 27, 2017 | Link

It's not your job to keep the peace. Nothing changes while you avoid confrontation. Choose your battles but know, when you change your behavior to avoid her emotions, she's controlling you.

Never argue with her, she's not interested in solutions. Make your statement about the issue and then broken record if need be. Do not explain yourself, your logic. You're only offering her ammunition.

Be happy even when she's mad. Ignore her silent treatment, talk to her as if you don't notice. Tease her and see how childish that shit is so you never behavior that way again.

Be assertive when boundaries are crossed. The best time to address shitty behavior is while it's happening. Bringing up old shit makes you look weak.

You don't have to answer every question. Not everything needs a response. Take time to choose your words, let her wait or wonder.

Never deny your emotions, she knows when you're mad. Own it, just don't direct it at her. You are allowed to be angry!

Be comfortable making her uncomfortable. Do not rush to fix things. Do not initiate apologies she should be making.

Your time is what she wants most from you. This is the best thing you can take away in response to bad behavior.

Her only weapon is your fear of what she will do.
Abundance
by resolutions316 | September 15, 2017 | Link

Hey all,

I wrote this for myself earlier today. I’m working through some issues with my wife now, and I need to constantly re-center myself, remind myself what my frame is.

I realized that the more wrapped up I become in what I could lose - my wife, my source of love and affection, my financial security - the more I lapse into her frame.

The more centered I become in my own agency in the world - the more I focus on what will not change, and what’s possible - the stronger my frame becomes.

I’m always working on internalizing these things, and I thought some people might get value from it.

I passed by a construction site on my way to work this morning.

I noticed a man walking - helmet, big toolbelt, thick boots, cigar - almost the stereotypical “gruff construction guy.” He was wearing a sleeveless t-shirt with huge words printed on it:

“MONEY OVER EVERYTHING.”

My initial reaction was to roll my eyes, but I kept thinking about him.

To me, it seems clear money shouldn’t be anyone’s primary goal in life. It isn’t correlated with happiness, and I find it hard to believe that anyone would willingly opt for a future filled with monetary wealth if it, for example, meant living alone and miserable forever.

So why did this guy seemingly feel the other way?

If I had my guess, it’s because he didn’t have much money - either now, or while he was growing up. He felt that absence - it was a powerful force in his life. There isn’t enough. You need to get more.

No abundance.

Now, I didn’t grow up rich, but I know enough now to realize that our family was better off than most. We had a nice house in a quiet town, enough food, enough clothes, took a simple vacation every year. It all seemed normal at the time, but that probably puts us in the top 1% of the world in terms of income.
The absence of money wasn’t an issue. Sure, I’d be told I couldn’t have something or other - couldn’t get my own car, couldn’t get those shoes, couldn’t insert stupid thing a kid wants - but we never lacked. There’s a difference.

And because I never felt the scarcity of money, I internalized the fact that money would always be available. Even when I grew up, and knew for a fact that money was not always available, I never doubted I’d be able to make more if I needed it.

Things we haven’t directly experienced are much less vivid in our mind’s eye. I’d never felt hopelessness, or the crush of true poverty - the direct knowledge that I needed more than I had and wouldn’t be able to make it up.

To me, money wasn’t - and isn’t - a big deal. I need more, I make more. If I lose it all tomorrow, I’ll be hurt, depressed, frustrated - but I know I’ll rebuild. And so money has no hold over me.

For Construction Guy, there’s never enough money. He knows that. And so Construction Guy will do whatever he needs to do to get more, and money has a hold over him.

To turn this to MRP, what’s the root cause of so much of the suffering on here? Hell, what’s the root cause of MY suffering?

The dead bedrooms, the late-night fights, the lack of compassion and warmth, the feeling of being disrespected...

If you post in here, sooner or later you’ll be told: “Oneitis.” “No abundance.”

What the really means is that you’ve internalized the fact that there is not enough female affection in the world.

ONLY your wife can love you.

ONLY your wife will have sex with you.

ONLY your wife can show you compassion.

ONLY your wife can show you the respect you crave.

You’ve gone your whole life thinking female affection was hard to get, difficult to find, that you had to put in incredible effort, HERCULEAN efforts, to get even the slightest hint of it. Female affection, to you, is rare - the equivalent of digging a diamond out of the fucking earth with your bare hands.

When it happens, you hold on to it. You can’t lose it. You’ll do anything to keep it.

It’s just a fact of this life we all share that the harder you hold on to something, the more it slips away. You squeeze and squeeze your previous diamond until you reduce it to dust and it slips through your fingertips.
You do everything for your wife. You do anything for your wife. You abandon your friends, your interests, your passions, your mission. You stay at home, eat ice cream together, never leave her side, and get fat, complacent, weak, and boring.

And when the passion dries up, and the connection dries up, and the sex dries up, you panic - because you know there isn’t enough female affection in the world. You know that, the same way Construction Guy knows there isn’t enough money. And you do what all of us do: double down, try harder, plow ahead, all the while making everything worse.

So how do you stop?

If a lack of abundance - and the inner, felt reality of SCARCITY, is what’s at the root of our suffering...how do we reverse it? How do we feel abundance if it’s never come easily?

There are two ways:

Lift, STFU, read the sidebar, practice game, connect with your passions. What does this do? It makes you more attractive. As you grow more attractive, you grow more confident. As you grow more confident, you grow more attractive....a virtuous cycle that changes your entire worldview, if you put in the work.

The reason everyone here says to “slow down” and not “go rambo” is because you need to internalize these changes for them to be real, for them to work...and you only do that by noticing how the world reacts to you. It isn’t that you use some cool new “trick” on your wife and she gets all hot and bothered; it’s those moments when you notice the looks in the street, when your boss respects you more, when you just feel more “yourself,” more comfortable in your own skin...

...Real evidence, in the real world. “Hey, this is working.” And your conception of who you are, and what you can expect, shifts.

I have only just started to feel this kind of abundance. And it only started when I noticed a few women make eye contact, look quickly down, and bite their lips. I thought, “ahhhhh. OK. I get it.” I realized, for the first time, that female affection was abundant in the world, if I wanted to pursue it.

And suddenly, abundance is not an idea - it’s a fact. I knew it to be true. You can’t rush, or fake, that moment.

There’s another way you can feel abundance, and that’s through...

2. Acknowledgement of the transience of all desires.

A bit woo-woo, maybe. But...

You have incredible inner strength within you. You are the recipient of millions of years of human evolution. The tools the universe has given you - your hands, your eyes, your brain, with it’s millions upon millions of neurons and inter-connected electrical signals - these are the tools of the adaptive species.
We’re not the strongest, nor are we the fastest. We don’t have claws or fangs. We didn’t get wings.

We got adaptibility. Put us in the desert - we form packs to run the big mammals to death.

Put us in the arctic - we learn to hunt through the ice using only a spear.

Put us in the forest - we learn to camouflage and set traps for creatures far more nimble than us.

Anywhere we go - we adapt. We survive. We THRIVE.

It is the same with you. You have the capacity, the inner strength, to survive despite any degradation, any attack, and loss. You have the power to not just survive but THRIVE despite anything the world throws at you.

I started reading about the holocaust recently, mostly because I was too much in my own head, wrapped up in my own problems. My wife was angry, refusing sex, not speaking to me...and it hurt. And I was upset.

And then I would turn the page and read about how prisoners at a concentration camp would need to carry huge metal blocks back and forth, using only a few wooden planks to hold them on their shoulders. How getting the right partner cold mean life or death - someone much taller than you would result in your end being heavier, and trudging through the snow for too long with a too heavy a weight would mean almost certain death.

But the author of that book (Primo Levy, Is This a Man) - he lived. And he thrived. He wrote books that impacted the world...that impacted me, many years later.

So if your wife won’t fuck you? You can handle it.

If you get divorced? You can handle it.

If you lose everything - everything - you can handle it.

Our hurts, and our suffering, is temporary. Our ability to adapt means that very few shitty situations are permanent.

And meanwhile - the world, this life, is infinitely beautiful.

That’s another kind of abundance - the kind that acknowledges that you don’t truly need anything beyond your basic subsistence. And while scarcity isn’t fun, or enjoyable, it also isn’t permanent.
Any grown-up human who fails to "adult" is a worthless drag on society, and on anyone unfortunate enough to be attached to them.

Similarly, any adult male who fails to "man" is just a sterile, androgynous, inferior sort of dude/woman-with-a-penis who adds little value to any woman.

Edit: What follows lists representative behaviors and traits expected of all men; it is not intended as a complete checklist. These "masculine" traits are mostly not "Alpha" (sexually attractive) traits per se, but their absence when called for is a highly unattractive display of low value (DLV), quickly resulting in lack of respect, contempt, and loss of sexual interest. First, don't be unattractive!

Because occasions calling for Manning behavior inevitably arise in ordinary life, Manning 101 is particularly critical in LTR's to avoid the ongoing erosion of respect and attraction that eventually brings men here.

Manning 101 minimum requirements

Physical:

- strength: bench press at least body weight; perform at least 8 pull-ups/chin-ups; able to pick up and carry your wife across a stream, or to your bed. (Possess "male superpower" of strength greater than that of almost all women)

- run a mile

- belly circumference less than that of both hips and chest

- Edit: throw and block a punch and kick

Mental: assertiveness and frame to

- give your honest opinion; state and defend your position

- negotiate a better price when selling or buying a car/house/lease/...

- send back an undercooked steak or the wrong order; interrupt a salesman to say "no", and cut him off if he persists

- cut off and protect your wife/child/friend from someone who starts harassing her

- express and enforce your boundaries

- tell your wife "no"

- acknowledge and sit with your wife's feelings, without being uncomfortable or controlled by them

- remain in your frame when someone criticizes you

- control your emotions, and controlled expression of emotion (Amused Mastery; showing controlled anger)

- look your wife in the eye and say "Let's have sex now."

Social:

- groom and dress yourself appropriately and well

- organize and host an event or party

- make small talk; introduce yourself and work a room

- build and maintain a circle of male friends

Skills:

- change a tire

- mow a lawn; trim a tree; dig a hole

- rough-house with and discipline a child
• stereotypical male skills expected from men of your culture and class: throw a football/bowl a wicket/kick a goal/shoot a gun/build a campfire/mix a drink/sing a song/...

• hold a steady job/run a business and make a decent living

• Edit: know your way around a woman's body and give her an orgasm

A male exposed as lacking in any of the "Manning 101" capabilities risks dismissal and contempt, and utter loss of attractiveness to women.

Why all?

Just as a castle wall must provide protection from all directions to be useful, a man must maintain all Manning 101 requirements to protect and provide for his wife and family in all circumstances. An obese weakling with great career and social skills can't shove off a man harassing his wife; an inarticulate hulking brute with no other skills will leave her stranded with a flat tire alongside the highway in a blizzard, or embarrassed to be seen with him, or be physically overwhelmed by a group of men turned against him by someone with social skills.

A "Man 101" has the physical power, mental/emotional assertiveness and control, and social and life skills that make him a force to be reckoned with. Man 101 can find a physical, social, or assertive path by which to command attention --- from an employer, vendor, or customer -- or a woman he finds attractive. He can demand consideration and will receive at least a polite rejection, not just the dismissal or open contempt too often given to the guy who fails to Man.

Man 101 doesn't always win, but at least he's in the game. Guys who aren't Manning 101 aren't even playing.

Practical implications for the early phases

For newbies:

Until you're performing passably on all aspects of Manning 101, you're not yet in the game. Focus your energy on Manning 101 (avoiding being unattractive), and don't even fantasize about trying any Active Dread, or of cutting off all beta value-adds to your wife.

You're not yet worth keeping! Your wife would rather divorce you than accommodate any (more) inconvenience or bullshit from you, or give up much of the beta value that's your only worthwhile contribution at this time.

This is why we see so many Rambo n00b posts along the lines of "Help! I flirted with a waitress in front of my wife to 'dread' her; now my wife thinks I'm cheating and wants a divorce."

"Help! I quit helping with the kids and chores to go out and do Alpha things; now my wife is threatening divorce."

"Help! I completely quit talking with my wife because STFU; my wife says she feels no 'emotional connection' and refuses to fuck me."

"Help! I started acting like a dominant alfalfa asshole by pulling her hair out and then cumming on it at least twice a day. She still refuses to give me anal BJ's, and last night she mentioned the D word."

Please, faggots; NO. Don't Rambo. There are no shortcuts or fast tracks until you're a man worth special consideration.

For the weary MRP apprentice:

| Lifting really isn't my thing. Can I leave that part out and do all the rest? Who needs it in this day and age? |

NO. Manning 101 is a package deal; you need a passing grade on all elements to get your Man 101 card.

| I don't quite get this 'frame' thing, and my wife's emotions make me really uncomfortable. Can I just get really buff, own all of my shit, and act Alpha by always choosing the restaurant without ever risking pissing her off? |

NO. Package deal. Dance, monkey. Dance!

The MRP end game

"Congratulations on earning your Manning 101 card! Welcome to the club. You're free to try any door now, although I can't promise that the occupants will let you in without a fight. But I'm sure that many will welcome you."

"What are you looking for? Perhaps I can guide you..."

For the journeyman transitioning to master:

| Lifting bores me. Can I stop now? |

NO. Maintaining Manning 101 standards is necessary to stay in the game. Most of us have sedentary occupations, and can maintain our male superpower strength differential only through regular weight work. You're in this for life ... or at least as long as you want good sex.

This holds for all of the Manning 101 elements. You have to do whatever work it takes you, forever, to keep them up to at least the minimum standards.

I'm not yet fully satisfied with my sex life. To progress, must I increase my time at the gym, take steroids, and follow the broad, muscular path of u/red-sfplusplus and u/bogeyd6?

NO. (Or not necessarily.)

Here's the deal...

You now command respect, and can demand consideration wherever you go. (Edit: Manning 101 doesn't necessarily make you attractive, but it does make you not unattractive.) You have many options, and you get to choose where to grow from here! But ... There's only 24 hours in a day, and there are so many facets of attractiveness that there's simply not time to excel equally in all of them. You get to choose, but you also must choose.

What kind of man do you want to be? What comes naturally or more easily for you? In which facets do you want to excel?

- You can choose to focus on your lifting and attract women who lust for massively muscular physiques.

- You can switch to a minimal maintenance or slow gains program, and spend your extra time making music, building your band's following, and fucking groupies. Or not fucking groupies, if you just love making music and prefer to remain faithful to your wife.

- You can practice game and become a master PUA, and sleep with a different woman every night.

- You can concentrate on SGM and having crazy hot sex with your wife.

Look ...

- You can also decide that you're content enough with regular, mediocre sex with a mildly attracted wife, and instead focus your main effort on your missions, if this is your true passion.

- Hell, you can even decide that your true talent lies in making money, and you can max out the beta bucks, marry a gold-digging HB10 supermodel, and keep your bedroom alive by maintaining the basic Alpha attraction and Dread.
So long as you keep Manning 101, you've always got basic passive Dread and the ability to create options. Make your fucking choice, and DNGAF what others here would choose for themselves. This is your journey, and the toolbox yours to apply as you see fit.

For the MRP master:

Carry on doing you!

Don't get arrogant or lazy. Don't neglect the basics.

May your Frame always be with you.
Your woman's most wonderful gift: The Epic Test.
by HornsOfApathy | February 20, 2020 | Link

I wrote the something nearly a year ago in this post, and lately I’ve been thinking about it more as I see men struggle in the intermediate stages of MRP. As I read through OYS for the last few weeks I see lots of men that have been “stuck” in MRP for some time and not making progress. Years even. I think it is because you have not recognized the largest shit test that is MRP and changed your mental models to pass it.

Passing this shit test is not a combination of STFU, AA, AM, DNGAF, or Fogging. It can’t be learned from WISNIFG. It comes from reading and INTERNALIZING the sidebar and as a result living and breathing the simple act of becoming your own mental point of origin. Rollo did a pretty good job of describing what this is, but I also think there is another final step to getting the kind of relationship that some men here desire.

This is what I wrote:

For those struggling with validation... Not a single time did I get encouragement from her. Not a single bit of praise. Not a mention of anything that would resemble a wife who is proud of or to be with her husband. Not a single comment on my physique, style, new haircut, sexual position, or attitude. Nothing.

And I still haven't heard her say a nice thing once about any of my changes.

This is the marathon, epic shit test. If there was an Ironman for shit testing, this would be it.

This is your woman’s ultimate test of congruence. Are you as awesome as you really believe you are? As you say you are? Are you as great as your AA and AM responses claim you are? Or is it entirely still bullshit? Only you know. No one here can tell you the answer to that question. But if you’re still stuck... you’re probably still full of shit.

Your Ego, it shall not pass:

That is the underlying theme I keep finding here in OYS. /u/RstonePT answered one of the most fundamental questions at a talk once: What is the most common problem that men at MRP have when they arrive? Ego. Your fucking ego.™ Until you admit that you’ve been full of shit and full of yourself, you will never pass this shit test. It’s just not possible. It’s only after you break your then known self into rubble that you will be able to rebuild a man that you are proud of.

There is a reason you came to MRP, and it certainly wasn’t that you were proud of the man you are.

You don't end up here because your life is going great... specifically because you feel like your marriage is not working in some capacity to varying degrees of extreme.
We all came here because deep down, in the place that hurts the most, where you are most vulnerable and will not let even your own thoughts go - that place is an awful place to be. It hurts there. It's painful to visit. It is a place that we tell ourselves lies in order to avoid. It’s a place that we fear.

Let’s presume for the rest of this post you’ve managed to destroy that first ego. What then?

Then you must let go of another layer of EGO, again:

Fuck, does this ego thing ever end? Short answer - no. Never.

As you lift, sidebar, read, STFU, learn how to pass shit tests, fuck your wife fairly well, and get random IOI’s from beautiful women other than your woman... your woman still appears clueless to your changes. You continue to build resentment against her for not seeing your changes. This is simply ANOTHER layer of ego that you must shed: you are the dreaded dancing monkey.

As a dancing monkey you will never get to your own mental point of origin - by definition a monkey is doing it for someone else, not himself.

So what to do here? Your woman isn’t going to appear to notice any of your changes anyways, so why do you even care what she does or thinks? Oh, I know why. Because you’ve spent more time inside of her head instead of the sidebar. Back to class, young man.

You’ll likely build resentment overtime for her lack of approval which is a step in the process most men go through. This is all part of her masterful plan and beautiful test to get you to your own mental point of origin.

The Final Step:

If your journey is anything like mine, it was full of what I now recognize as nonsense. I heard things like: I liked you better when you were fatter. I don’t like muscular men. I wish you wouldn’t spend as much time in the gym. You can cheat a little tonight on desert. You’re selfish. You don’t think about anything but yourself EVER or the kids anymore. On and on and on.

We all recognize them as shit tests in the moment. But what you likely didn’t realize is that those shit tests – focused on capitalizing your time or demeaning your progress - are about your progress – lifting, reading, STFU. She will pretend to be clueless about how awesome you are becoming. She will cast a web of doubt and hope that you fall into it. Meanwhile, all of your friends, family and coworkers are saying how great you look – how much more energetic you’ve become – how much happier you seem – yet, you hear nothing of the sort from your woman. In fact, you hear the opposite the entire time.

Why does she do this?

Most would answer here that it’s because she wants to put her little beta-boy back in his box. I can agree with that. But it’s also because she wants to protect her own SMV. If she ever admitted you were better than her, it would require her to admit that there has been a power shift in the dynamics of the relationship where you start to hold the cards of your own outcome. Until now, she has controlled that outcome and needed to do little to keep her SMV up. Now that you’re starting to show promise, or in fact have great promise that she secretly knows about – she will deploy every manipulative tactic in her arsenal to protect her own ego against the truth.

The truth? You are becoming a high value man.

Instead, as you pass those tests and improve you own mental point of origin, she will silently hamster everything away to continually protect her ego.

But here is where most men stall. They do not understand that the progress that you’re making is invigorating her hamster to test in even more manipulative and creative ways. The tests become harder and you start to question your own progress. “Doesn’t she think I’m an attractive man? Can’t she see it?”

When you ask yourself one of those questions – you’ve already lost. She is still your mental point of origin, and you will never break free of her web of doubt to be your own judge. Therefore most men stall here. You are not your own judge and still seeking validation. You MUST push through this.

This is why we hate “she” statements in OYS. It shows us that your thoughts do not begin (mental point of origin) and end (no dancing monkey) with you.

Having this shift in the power dynamic is not something that will happen easily for her. It requires her to kill her ego entirely about who she is - in the same way that you were required to kill your own. It will not die easily. Her ego dies when her judgement is meaningless to you and you are a high value man - your judgement of who you are should win in all cases because that is the masculine direction that she seeks in her life. Without that self-judgement, you are not worth following. Knowing that your way, even if you consider her thoughts (and perhaps feelz) on the matter and recalibrate as necessary from understanding a valid test – will your masculine judge be the authority to govern YOU. Your actions. Your feelings of yourself. She does not possess this masculine gift of direction and she will always look to you or another high value man as a sense of her own self worth and direction. She is afterall, a little girl at heart that feelz warm and fuzzy from the approval of a man she admires and respects.

The question is, do you believe you are that man who is his own mental point of origin?

If so, you will no longer be angry at her epic shit test. It will be a meaningless test that no longer serves your growth. She never wanted to influence your idea of who you are, and until you can congruently show this through your actions will she never relent and submit her ego to this powerful masculine force that is who you are.

Why is this a wonderful gift?

I really believe that this is a greatest test of all time, and it’s a gift from your woman. She has the ability to test you to the ends of the earth on the three hardest concepts that we speak to here at MRP: Mental Point of Origin is required for Outcome Independence, and is not possible as the Dancing Monkey while your ego is involved. This epic test has been so beautifully crafted as a gift to you so that you might pass it... and you know what? She Wants you to pass this test. She desires in the darkest parts of who she is as a woman for you to fucking crush this and make yourself a man of high value. This woman has likely been on your team all along.

Why? Because women are solipsistic and... this test, pass or fail, serves her.

Beyond the epic test - Dominance, submission and her dark desires:

MRP is broken into a couple of different camps on this next thought process. Some think it’s not worth the effort and can create negative feedback loops – and while I agree that this can create more behaviors that could feed the Dancing Monkey, I think it’s also possible that it doesn’t if you hold the frame and worldview similar to the one I’ll describe here.

Even after men have found their own mental point of origin, I still see them stuck. They simply do not express their Outcome Independence for these (often) useless tests like a man would. And furthermore, they do not know how to covert this acute awareness of their own frame to be the leading frame of the relationship – but more importantly, how to convert this frame into one that feeds a creates positive feedback loops for a submissive woman.

This is where some disagree it’s “too much work”. For me and my worldview the work has been worth it. This is where I diverged from a lot of people here and chose to live in a formal D/s relationship. There were a lot of contributing factors to that decision and journey – but I chose D/s because it was what was best for me, long term. She is a reflection of me, so this is what serves her as well.

I think this is accomplished - surprise - by actions. Over time your actions become more congruent to your frame and your mental point of origin about yourself and as she adopts YOUR worldview of yourself as a high value man, you can feed the submissive woman by making sure that her mental point of origin becomes YOU. That is what a submissive woman is afterall. A woman who looks to you for all approvals.

You allow and encourage her to openly seek validation from you and grow her through praise. The feminine grows through praise. If you want an extremely submissive woman you must be willing to take on the leadership required to make sure you are at her center of most thoughts and approvals. She looks to you for a validation tool of her own self-worth and you are the one trusted person in this world that she gives the gift of submission to.

If you want to have a woman living so extremely within her submissive and feminine frame, you must be able to live within this dynamic knowing it will require you to live within your dominant and masculine frame in polarity.

Living in vary degrees of this polarity of relationship doesn't require full submission such as a formal D/s arrangement, but I think the more you adopt this frame as two people together - the closer you get to that type of informal relationship dynamic. It's all a matter of what YOUR frame is, and how it serves you. She serves you as an opposite (polarity) to that established frame.

I think this is a true unexplored area of MRP. If her focus and thoughts are centered on you - what can you do to best influence the enrichment of your vision and mission? And yes, that's highly manipulative which you both will be aware of, openly. But is that such a bad thing if it creates a worthwhile and worthy life for that woman and you? I do not think so. But be wary - the responsibility is more than what most men would likely want to take on. It's not for everyone, but you give it as a gift of who you are in exchange for her gift of submission. This is the mutual cycle of effortless gifting.

Use it to varying degrees in your own relationship and determine if this is something you wish to honor as a gift in her dark desires.

Why was this test important for me? This beautiful test was for her submission and my dominance both mentally and physically all along. This was a test of polarity that serves her in the relationship, and you in the world.
MRP has totally transformed my life and I’m in the spirit of giving back. After I unfucked myself and started gaming my wife, sex is back on the menu, so I started fine tuning every aspect of my life—which was the next logical step.

I learned the Razor’s Edge concept from a book (I’ll give the reference if anyone asks me, I’m not here to promote any books) and want to share with you. It helped me tremendously at work and even start my side business. I used it to advance my career and continue to use it today. I’m teaching it to my kids. It’s a great mindset to have in business.

Like always, use this mindset from a position of strength – because you are a professional and take pride on your work. Don’t use this from a needy little bitch mindset who tries to impress other people like your wife or your boss. You are you OWN JUDGE.

So here it is:

The line which separates winning from losing is as fine as a razor’s edge… it really is. The real winners in life are, more often than not, only two or three percent more effective than those who lose. You are only one inch … one step … one idea … away from turning onto the boulevard of beauty in your own life. You need to understand that you can be every bit as effective as anyone you read about or even hear about.

The Razor’s Edge is simply doing a little bit more … a little bit more than others … a little bit more than is expected … and a little bit more than is necessary. And it doesn’t really take any special skills or talents to do it. The good news is you can have the Razor’s Edge working for you. It can totally change your life. It did for me.

Always Fall Down Forwards…(Second Effort Concept)

Vince Lombardi, former football coach of the outstanding Green Bay Packers football team, described the Razor’s Edge concept in football very well when he said, “Most games are won or lost in the last two minutes of the first and second half.” But what Lombardi is best remembered for—with respect to football’s Razor’s Edge—is the “Second Effort” concept, which he introduced for the edification of his players. In a nutshell, the “Second Effort” concept simply meant, that when a player was initially stopped by the opposing team, he would always surge forward a second time, with the added thrust of a “second effort.”

Now, just consider the tremendous difference you could create in your own life if you were to adopt a similar mental attitude. For example, if you are a person who is working in sales and currently selling only three units a week, what would the consequences be for you if you were to decide to make one additional sale per week, through a conscientious application of the second effort concept?

Well, on a weekly basis, it might not appear to be a major breakthrough. However, viewed over the time frame of an entire career, it would actually amount to well over two thousand extra sales. Moreover, from a monetary standpoint, it would mean you would actually receive an extra ten years’ income over the span of a forty-year career. Yes, that one sale would be the Razor’s Edge difference, which could catapult you into “the big leagues” in your chosen career.

At the end of a work day, I always “Fall Forward”… I clean my desk off, organize shit, make a To-Do list for tomorrow, send that one last email to close the loop on something, sign up from that training class, etc..

In 1947, the race horse named ARMED won $761,500. But the horse who finished second in earnings that same year won only $75,000. Now, if you were to look at their winnings alone, it would appear that ARMED was thirteen times better than his closest competitor. However, when you compare “the times” that were actually registered by those two horses in their races, you learn that ARMED was a mere four percent better!

There was only a little difference between the two horses, but that little difference made all the difference in the world. And it’s a truth I see repeated over and over again … in every profession of life. The “greatest” golfers … like Tiger Woods … are only 3 or 4 strokes better than the “poorest” golfers in the tournament, but their winnings are dozens of times higher than those who come in second, third, or fourth place.

So, it’s rather obvious, “The line which separates winning from losing is as fine as a razor’s edge.”

It’s simply doing a little bit more … a little bit more than others … a little bit more than is expected … and a little bit more than is necessary.

- One person ‘just about’ starts a project, the other person starts it. - One person ‘just about’ starts eating healthy, the other person actually starts eating healthy. - One person ‘almost’ completes an exercise, the other does complete it. - One person sees an opportunity, the other acts on it. - One student ‘nearly’ passes the exam, the other does pass it... and although the difference in their marks may be only one percentage point out of a hundred, it’s that one point that makes all the difference.”

How can you get the Razor’s Edge working for you?

There are dozens of things you can do.

1. Refuse to Settle for the Basics:

   For example, you may have mastered the basics of reading by the fifth or sixth grade. But have you done anything since then to improve your reading skills? And you may have mastered the basics of arithmetic, but have you gone beyond that to master the skills required for saving, investing, and budgeting for your future? Get off your ass and go for something bigger and better.

2. Decide to become an expert in Something:
You see … once people understand the basics of something, they usually stop their learning in that area. Only a small percentage of people ever go on to become the acknowledged experts in a particular area. And they are the ones, of course, who typically receive the largest incomes. That’s why you should look at what you’re doing, and ask yourself, “How good am I at doing it?” and “How much better could I be?”

3. Dedicate Your Time to Study:

All you have to do is study one hour a day in your chosen field, and in five years you will be an expert in that field. “If you were to follow this schedule rigorously, in a relatively short span of time you would stand among your peers like a giraffe in a herd of field mice.”

4. Turn Your Car into A Library:

Turn your radio off and your CD player on. If you’re like me, you drive thousands of miles to work or errands each year. In fact, if you drive as many as 25,000 miles per year, you’re spending the equivalent of thirteen forty-hour weeks sitting behind the wheel of your car. So you’ve got the time to listen to educational, motivational CDs. And whether or not you consciously focus on what you’re hearing, it’s virtually impossible to keep on exposing your mind to good, clean, powerful, uplifting information and not be positively influenced by it.

5. Add the Razor’s Edge Element to Your Job:

Perhaps you’re in a customer service position. You will be astounded at what happens if you change your attitude towards your customers. If you tend to see customers as an interruption of your business … instead the reason FOR your business … you’re bound to lose some customers. But if you think of ways to sharpen your customer service skills … and then actually do it … you’ll see an amazing difference in how you feel and in how much they buy. Try smiling at every customer. Give everyone a genuine, welcoming “hello” instead of perfunctory “hi.” And make sure you go out of your way to thank them for their business.

Practical Applications of the Razor’s Edge:

1. Studying for a test?

Work one or two extra practice problems a day, it will add up over time. Does that take any special skill? No. It can totally stack the odds in your favor. I also used the Razor’s Edge when I wrote my first book, which was 182 pages. I didn’t write that book in one sitting. I wrote 1/2 page each day for an entire year and ended up with a complete book at the very end. Little things add up to bigger things.

2. At work:

I also used it and got my first big promotion at work. Every Friday, we are required to enter the status of all the projects we were working on in an online website. I was in the construction field, so most engineers would write out what was going on the jobsites, etc.

However, I noticed that there was an option to include a picture in your report. I also noticed that no one else was attaching pictures in their reports. It was all words. So, I made a point to snap a photo with my phone every Friday morning when I visited the job sites of my projects. When I wrote my weekly status reports, I made sure to upload my jobsite photos. It only took a second to upload it. But it made a huge impact for the managers who read these reports in the main building every Monday morning.

When I was promoted, my manager told me that I was the only project engineer who attached photos to his reports. He also told me that a picture was worth a thousand words and he could really understand what was going on my jobsite and loved visually seeing the work that was completed. Taking a photo and uploading it took such little effort, but had a HUGE impact on my career.

More Examples:

1. Last week, I bought a travel chess board for my kids from an online company. I’m teaching my boys how to play and one of them accidentally broke one of my wooden pieces. So I decided to buy them a board that has plastic pieces so I wouldn’t have to use my nice board.

Anyway, when we opened the package, the online chess company strategically put several candy bars in our package. My kids were so happy and tore into them! What a nice little surprise. To see my kids’ faces light up over a candy bar was awesome. They were more excited about the fucking candy bars than their present from me. Something that took a second to do and maybe only reduced their profit margin by .1% had a huge impact on my first impression of this company. If I ever need to buy anything related to chess again, I will buy it from them.

2) I was sick and visited a new Urgent Care near my house. They gave me a shot and some meds.. Few days later, I received a phone call from the Doctor who treated me. He asked me if I felt better and if there was anything else he could do for me? Wow! I never had a doctor actually call me before to check up on me, especially from an Urgent Care. Simple little things like that... you bet if I get sick again I will go back to that place.

Summary:

1) You are only one inch ... one step ... one idea ... away from turning onto the boulevard of beauty in your own life.

2) It’s simply doing a little bit more ... a little bit more than others ... a little bit more than is expected ... and a little bit more than is necessary.

3) The line which separates winning from losing is as fine as a razor’s edge... and it really is. The real winners in life are, more often than not, only two or three percent more effective than those who lose.

4) You need to understand that you can be every bit as effective as anyone you read about or even hear about.

5) And it doesn’t really take any special skills or talents to do it.
6) Always “Fall Forward” and take the “Second Effort”.
Dread Level 3 Supplement: Take Your Kids Away
by man_in_the_world | November 11, 2016 | Link

Been lurking here for several months and have found many useful ideas, so I'll try to give something back.

One good way to build a life apart from your wife and to get out more when you have young kids is to TAKE YOUR KIDS AWAY.

Take your kids to the park, and don't just stand there like a lazy fuck; play tag, kick a ball around, make up and play silly games, engage with them. If the weather is too poor, take them to a different room in the house as far from your wife as possible and wrestle and roughhouse on the floor; use your manly strength (because you lift) to lift and throw your kids high in the air and catch them; make up fun, physical games that challenge them. Bring the fun, so that Daddy Time is the highlight of your kids' days (and of yours as well).

You really should be doing something active and fun with your kids EVERY. SINGLE. DAY for at least an hour ... so that they don't become fat fucks like you.

It is particularly important that you take your infant away from your wife for at least 30 minutes every day, to stop that constant libido-suppressing oxytocin drip, and to condition her to spend half an hour without worrying about the baby (which might come in handy when you want to have good sex with her). After baby nurses or feeds, take your infant from your wife's arms for Daddy Time. Take them away: outside, out of earshot and out of sight, and spend some solid one-on-one time with them, or carry them around while you chase the older kids. Any just-fed infant can go for at least 30 minutes or an hour apart from Mommy, so take your baby away to bond with you, and to do fun things they don't do with your wife.

By building your own unique life and activities with your kids APART from your wife, you both add great value to your family and implement Dread Level 3, and you can easily do it every day. Even better, your kids are also Dread Level 3'ing her at the same time, so she's losing that additional validation from them. There's a bonus form of "Mommy Dread" here as well; you are showing her that you can take care of the kids all by yourself (and in fact that the kids even prefer that special hour every night with Daddy over yet another hour with her), so she's not such an irreplaceable special mommy snowflake. You also get daily practice building and holding frame and setting boundaries with opponents who aren't nearly as formidable as your wife, in a fun, low-stakes context.

This is the rare situation in which your MRP interests actually align with the prevailing blue-pill paradigm; the whole BP world tells fathers to spend more time with their kids and to relieve the mother's burden of childcare, so everyone will support you in this. Thus you can implement this early in your MRP journey without overtly rocking the boat and can appeal to scientific and even feminist authority if your wife is a mommy martyr or control freak and resists, even if your frame is weak and you end up DEERing your way through to it.

Just remember, you have to disappear for the dread, so playing with your kids in the living room while she scrolls facebook doesn't help. Take your kids away ... and have fun!
Cuddles are required
by red-sfpplus | September 28, 2018 | Link

In order to fuck your wife/girlfriend/SO, you must do one very important thing with her.

You have to cuddle.

You have to cuddle with her, let her bury her head in your chest in that sweet spot between you chest, armpit and massive bicep.

You have to hold her back, stroke her hair (from her forehead back), rub her cheek (using the back of your index and middle fingers) and rub her eyebrow.

Her arm should rest across your built chest, and her hand should cup down your opposite side and grab you lat. The arm that is not supporting and caressing her head should be extended above your head as this makes you lat pop out more, which is a good thing.

Your hips should be slightly tilted towards her body. So if she is on your right, your left hip is slightly elevated.

She must feel 100% safe with you, in the clutch of your massive body, safe and secure in order to fuck her.

And did I mention you should under no circumstances, ever have a shirt on during this process?

If you never cuddle with your woman, you will never get fucked.

And I am going to tell you why.

If you do not treat your woman like a woman you will never, ever get to treat her like your little slut.

Under little to no circumstances, should you ever perform cuddles with your woman prior to fucking. Cuddle before Sunday morning sex? That is cool. But we are talking about fucking here, not sex.

The purpose of cuddles, is to remind your woman that you value her a person and not just a fuck toy.

If you do not use your woman as a fuck toy, and only ever cuddle with her, both you and her are missing out on the other 50% of the equation.

If you do not properly cuddle with your woman, after treating her like a slut, she will never feel appreciated the same way, begin to think you only want her to be a slut (no woman wants really be a slut) and she will not respect you.
I am telling you right now. After you are done ravaging your woman, and she is laying there on the bed. Her body covered in your sweat and fluids, legs shaking from whatever, the single best thing you can do at that moment is to get up, start the shower, return to the bed and pick her up like a sack of potatoes (because you fucking lift right faggot?), take her to the shower where you both clean up.

Then return to the bed for cuddles. This is your moment. These are the cuddles that will make your NEXT sex session with her, the next best sex session. Very few things put money in the bank with a woman (see deposits in the bank post) but cuddles after fucking, DO.

This makes her feel safe. It shows her you care, and let me tell you - if you want your woman to fully give herself to you, then you need to fucking listen. She is only going to give herself fully to a man she trusts.

In a proper DOM/SUB relationship (read man/woman) the care of the SUB is the single most important thing the DOM cares about. He takes great pride in the fact his SUB can fully trust and immerse themselves in the release to their DOM. If you do not honor that, and take it is a deep sense of responsibility, then you will never be successful.

So there you have it.

This post is my cuddles post to the group.

I have called you all faggots, I have fucked some members in the ass, throat fucked others, but my time here is just about up.

Keep lifting, keep working on your goals and keep kicking ass. For you fuckers who are just starting out, well don't fucking quit.

Just remember. The only person on this planet that truly gives a fuck about you, is you.

Peace out.
13 Tips For Developing A Solid Frame
by drty_pr | December 19, 2018 | Link

• People are far too worried about themselves to truly give a fuck about you. When you walk away, they're not thinking about you anymore.

• People aren't out to get you, they're for themselves. Far more often than not this is the case and using this to see what they want is a way to still get what you want.

• It's easier to ask for forgiveness that permission. Do what you want when you want and deal with the repercussions afterwards.

• Life is what happens while your waiting for life to happen. Enjoy every minute of it.

• Putting expectations on people is a exercise in disappointment. They'll do what they're gonna do and expecting them to do what you would is useless. Instead, use their actions in a givin situation to determine how much you allow them into your life.

• Everything that happens to you is your fault. Embrace this and use it advantageously. The only way to truly grow is to use your failures as lessons so you can succeed next time.

• Powertalking is one of the most underrated skills. When you talk to someone about a topic of mutual interest and only after they walk away do you realize "Fuck I shouldn't have said that", they won.

• Life is as much about perception, as it is about reality. How you choose to see the world becomes your reality.

• It takes effort to be happy/sad/angry. Don't ever forget this. When you're stressed out, understand that you're doing it to yourself.

• Getting drawn into an argument is almost always a waste of time. At best you stroke your ego. At worst you look like a total fool.

• People love telling other people what they should do/think. It's a coping mechanism for their insecurity. Ignore that shit and also don't do it.
• It's fine to admit when your wrong, but never apologize for it. Nothing wrong with being wrong, but feeling the need to say you're sorry is for pussies.

• If you need to tell people how awesome you are, you aren't very awesome. Bragging is for the weak.
Stop. Thinking.
by resolutions316 | March 1, 2019 | Link

I recently took a break from MRP, and since I've been back I have noticed a LOT of overthinking.

Everywhere I turn, in every post - people making things more complicated than they need to be.

This guy, for example - is fucking talking about Quantum Mechanics.

QUANTUM. FUCKING. MECHANICS.

No matter how much you wonder "Will my wife fuck me tonight??!!??" it doesn't mean that she has Schroedinger's Pussy.

For fuck's sake.

Look -

I am not trying to gang up on the dude above.

In fact, I only notice posts like this because they remind me of any one of the fifty-bajillion posts I have made on here over-thinking everything from frame, to sex, to validation, to alphas, to betas, to hypergamy, to the manosphere, to....

Well, you get it.

Here's the thing:

Most of us on here are pretty similar.

We're smart.

We're motivated.

We're good at a lot of shit.

Many of us are very successful at work, or in the gym, or at leading people, or at fixing things.
When we experience something traumatic - our marriages falling apart, our sex life drying up, the realization that all isn't exactly as we thought - we tend to fall back on our strengths. To try to fix things using the skills that got us here.

And what is our strength? What's gotten us this far, what's behind the success we've enjoyed?

Thinking.

Always thinking!

Rationality, logic, trying to be objective, taking data, tracking numbers, setting goals, advancing towards milestones.

When you find MRP, there's a huge sense of relief....because it gives you something to do. It gives you something to master. There are even fucking levels for christ's sake.

"WHOA - I'm learning so much new shit! I'm seeing things differently! There are all these books to read, blogs to subscribe to, videos to watch! I'm getting feedback, I have new goals, I'M GOING TO TURN THIS FUCKING SHIP AROUND! I CAN DO ANYTHING!"

This is GREAT, don't get me wrong. Nothing wrong with goals, or books, or dread levels.

But here's the reality:

It isn't that complicated.

You know what MRP looks like, in practice? What all this boils down to?

At the gym, day in and day out.

Failing tests, day in and day out.

Initiating and getting rejected, day in and day out.

Trying to lead and having people laugh, day in and day out.
Trying as hard as you can to think for yourself, day in and day out.

Day in.
Day out.

And guess what?
Little to no thought required.

Now...after a while, you start to get stir-crazy.
You read some Rollo, you think about how "western society" is becoming "feminized."
You think, "I think I'm understanding frame in a new way."
You think, "I have a theory about how shit tests work."
You think, "The best way to understand how to talk to your wife is through quantum fucking mechanics."
BULL.
SHIT.

None of this is work. None of this matters. None of this MEANS ANYTHING.

This is your brain, getting bored.
This is your brain, rationalizing failure.
This is your brain, procrastinating.
People have been fucking other people for as long as there are people. You don't need a theory, you don't need something to think about.

You need to look at who fucks who - that's everything you need to know, out in plain daylight.

The levels, the terminology, the posts, the books -
They only help if you get out there and fucking do the hard-ass, boring-as-fuck, no-thinking-required
WORK.

Everything else is masturbation.

And look - masturbation is fun! Go ahead and jerk it a little if you've got the time.

But for fuck's sake -

No wife ever fucked her husband because he wrote a sick ass Reddit post.

So -

And, as always, this post is written as much to myself as to anyone else -

STOP.

FUCKING.

THINKING.

Love,

resolutions316

P.S. And yes, I wrote this post INSTEAD of writing some dumb-ass post about something else because I am a procrastinating fuck. Now I'm going to go lift weights before band practice. The end.
This is long as fuck. It’s a compilation of the journal I kept for the past year documenting my thoughts and observations along my journey to reclaim and embrace my masculinity.

Calibration and Correlation

Throughout this post, I’ll frequently describe my wife’s actions. Applying concepts from NMMNG and WISNIFG means decoupling my judgement of myself from her judgement of me, but as is frequently stated around here, she is a reflection of me and filling the container I provide. I have consciously not adjusted my MAP in response to her actions, but observing her response to my changes and using that data as feedback has been effective when refining my tactical actions. I’m not doing anything specifically so she will fuck me, but when she does fuck (or respect), I pay attention to what I did that worked. I am mindful of her macro response because eventually it will be her response (or lack of) to my action that determines if I continue my married relationship with her.

Tuesday, May 5th 2015, I took the pill.

Starting stats:

Me:

- 34 years old
- Skinny-fat (6’3, 190 lbs, 20%+ BF), obvious jiggly beer belly
- Haircut I’ve had since High School
- Sloppy dresser (always had good hygiene though…)
- Career Beta-bux
- Lots of Omega behavior
- Serious, intense personality with my family; not a fun guy
- Gregarious with nearly everyone else, but lazy about making friends

My Marriage:

- Married for 8.5 years
- Dating for 7 years before that
- We’re each other’s only sex partner (as far as I care to believe)
- 2 young children, 1 and 3 at the time

Here’s how I got to the starting line.

The morning I “took” the pill was literally the first day of the rest of my life.

I can’t remember any event in my life that brought so much sudden clarity. Like every captain’s journey, mine started out as a quest for sex, but I immediately realized [RED PILL LESSON] what I was missing was respect and the sex I wanted was just an expression of my wife’s respect for me.

Anger? Of course I had a little but it was just so clear what the problem was and that I was the one who caused it. Why be angry with myself when I did what I judged to be the right thing with the information I had?

In my profession, I always tell people that anything can be done in two steps. First, define the problem; Second, solve it. Right there on the screen were both of those steps. As an engineer, the 12 levels of Dread was a clear path to a reality I desperately wanted. MRP was a community of guys who knew exactly what was missing in my life and had done the same thing I needed to do to find it. The recommendation is to work one dread per month and to expect the MAP to take as many months as you had years in your relationship. We’ve been together 16 years so I decided to take things extra slow and work each level for two months and give her time to reflect properly.

Day 1:

The very first action I took was to get dressed that morning and tuck my shirt in. I haven’t done this ever except when wearing a suit and tie.

- I got to work and created a new Amazon account and ordered hard copies of the side bar books to be delivered to my office.

- I found PDFs of the Sex God Method and Book of Pook, bookmarked them on my phone.

- I called a clinic and scheduled my vasectomy, something I’d been putting off for months.

- On my family Amazon account, I ordered Starting Strength.

- I found all the gyms within a reasonable radius from my office and house, researched their cost and hours, and called to ask about their free-weight arrangement.

- I found the r/fitness bodyweight beginner routine and printed it out to take home.

- I picked the dates and destination for a yearly camping trip we take with out-of-state friends, then sent an email to the group telling them the plan. I assigned each family a meal responsibility, and I booked the campsite. In the past, the logistics of this event were typically handled with the “IDK, what does everyone else want to do?” method.

- I installed the Clue and MFP apps on my phone and also apps for my bank and both our credit cards.

- I normally eat at my desk and work through lunch, but today, I drove to a nearby park to eat and read MRP on my phone.

I got home that night with my game-face on. My wife is a serious clutter-bug and I am the opposite. It always pissed me off that she wouldn’t clean up her own shit, so I passive-aggressively just left the mess (like that would show her...) [COVERT CONTRACT]. My new attitude was: I want an orderly environment in which to live, therefor it’s my responsibility to make it so. I went through the house and mentally noted all the things that needed doing. I knew I was in no position to order my wife around, so I got to work. I picked up and put away all the kids toys, cooked dinner, did the dishes, then sorted all her clutter on the table into keep and recycle piles. During all this, my kids were buzzing around demanding attention but my wife kept them occupied, saying “Don’t bother your dad; he’s mad about something.” Then she would sort of side-glance at me with furrowed brow. In hindsight, my “game face” was probably way too serious and my behavior was probably too drastic of a change for day 1... whatever.

I didn’t drink any beer for the first night in years.

That night after kids’ bedtime, I dug out my old workout clothes and started the BW routine. My wife, sitting on the couch with her phone and TV, snickered and asked “Uhh, what are you doing?” I told her “I’m going to get in shape. I don’t want to be the slow dad when our boys start sports.” This would have been a great time to Agree and Amplify, but on Day 1, I would have just been a dick about it. The workout kicked my ass. I showered and went to bed after pecking my wife on the lips.

Day 2:

Again, I tucked my shirt in. Wife asked if my customer was in town. “Nope.” I answered, and left it at that. Again, I spent my lunch hour (and many breaks during the day) reading the MRP wiki. I got home and blitzed the house to knock out any outstanding chores I saw. We have always read to our kids, dozens of books per day. I continued that routine, but consciously made my reading more animated than usual and the kids ate it up. The BW fitness routine is every other day, so tonight after the kids were in bed, I went for a run. When I got back, I showered and got in bed. My wife came in, undressed and got in bed too. Tonight, she was wearing a thong, which is unusual for her. Her style of initiating is to lay in the middle of the bed, turn her back to me, and allow me to gently touch her body. That’s what happened, but when I saw the thong, I outwardly showed my excitement. From then on in the session, everything felt a little forced and we had some gentle missionary sex. [RED PILL LESSON] Women dress sexy to please alphas all the time, reacting to it as if it’s a treat just proves I’m faking it.

Week 1:

Throughout this week, my mission was to begin good habits and eliminate bad habits (AKA get myself in order)

- I stopped asking for permission to do anything, especially spend my time or money.
- I continued to sharpen up my current wardrobe by only wearing my best looking shirts and jeans, tucking them in.
- I shaved every other day instead of every third day.
- I stopped talking about work at home.
- I worked out and ran on alternating days, resting on Saturday. Ehrmagawd, the DOMS... felt SO good!
- I stopped watching TV and surfing the web in the evenings (Spent that time working out or reading Starting Strength)
- I stopped drinking beer (other than one at band practice or at a show).
- I felt disgusted by the weakness associated with porn and fapping, so that was easy to stop.
- We already eat healthy, but I stopped raiding the sugar-snack drawer at work.
- My books arrived and I started reading them on my lunch hours, NMMNG first. Jebus what an eye-opener...
- I created a spreadsheet (I know...) to track my fitness progress, my sexual progress, and my MAP categories.
- I stopped asking or thanking for sex.

I initiated sex every day, sometimes earlier than usual. As usual, my wife always had an excuse (too relaxed, too tired, whatever). Upon rejection, I either did something else or went to sleep. But on day 5, she gave in. During foreplay, I took some advice from the sub and just put my dick in her face without asking; she sucked it for the first time in over 3 years! Fuck yeah! I was on a roll so I spun her around and pounded her doggy-style until we both came. Now, DS has always been one of the allowed activities, usually once per month, with the rest being missionary or spoon positions, but this time I didn’t hold back on the intensity and by her wetness, I could tell she enjoyed it. Looking back at my collected data, this was at the peak of her ovulation. [RED PILL LESSON] She WANTS to be dominated.

Two days later, she initiated again by wearing a thong and climbing on top when we went to bed (also highly unusual). This session, we went through two new positions and ended with a hard pounding in missionary. Afterward, she told me “That was fun!” I just smirked.

The next night, we both knew what was up and mutually initiated. This time, I asked no permission and ate her pussy, fucked her doggy-style to cum (in my condom), then fingerblasted and ate her out to cum again. This was a big deal, as I hadn’t given her multiple orgasms in a single session in a very, very long time. And suddenly pussy-eating was back on the table...

During the waking hours, I was still (overly) intense about getting my ship in order.
Week 2:

My goal with the BW program was to get in the habit of exercise and gain some basic functional strength while I shopped for free weights and read Starting Strength. I started reading all about nutrition and tracking my calories and macros. I bought some ON Gold Standard whey powder to balance my macros to 40/40/20 and got an inquisitive look when I brought it home (I just STFU).

- Finished NMMNG; my mind was blown. Started MMSLP.

- Sex this week was interesting. We had it every other day, she appeared to be into it, but she was dry each time and got kind of pissy that I took longer than she did to cum. During the last session before her period, she demanded to have a talk about “communication” before we fucked. She sensed a disturbance in the force! I said very little, but her main curiosity was to know “my plan for working out.” I just [broken record’ed] that “I want to get in shape. I don’t want to have a dad-bod.” I really didn’t get many other shit-tests; my wife was mostly indifferent towards me. We weren’t somewhere new with other women she had to impress with her control over me, and I was generally pretty busy just doing everything around the house that I wanted to be done.

- I stopped rushing home after work, band practice, and gigs. We generally don’t text that much, but I used to send her an “OMW” whenever I left some place so I stopped doing that.

- I started calmly enforcing boundaries and building my frame with my kids. TBH, this is still my toughest struggle, even nearly a year in. Now this, my wife did react to; “Why are you being so strict with them?” I DEER’d with “It’s my job to teach my sons appropriate social behavior”, but said no more about it.

My wife’s birthday was at the end of this month and I wasn’t quite confident enough to be a Skittles man this early in the game. I usually buy her some new electronical thing or something more masculine like a camping gadget. This year, I got her a nice cooking pot for the kitchen and no card. I took her to a restaurant where I wanted to eat and didn’t tell her where. I only texted and said “We’re leaving at 6, wear a dress.” She did, and her voice was quivering when we drove up to the valet at one of the swankier places in town. It was shark week so the covert expectation for sex after was easy to break.

Around week 4, my wife decided she ought to be working out too. She used to do a stroller fitness class that worked well, but had dropped that during her second pregnancy. She found her own BW routine and did it on my running nights for about two weeks then quit because she was sore (I never gave it much notice except “Awesome!” when she told me she was starting).
At the end of Month 1:

- Dread level 0, 1, and 2 were in effect. Some elements of level 3
- I weighed 192, lost an inch around my belly, gained 2” of bicep circumference (11-13”), and I felt healthy and invigorated. My posture and gait was greatly improved.
- I finished NMMNG, MMSLP, SGM, and started WISNIFG during lunch and Book of Pook on my phone.
- Had sex 8 times; lots of the old moves are back on the table.
- I started paying attention to my family’s finances (which are good and stable), but didn’t do anything to take control yet.
- Attitude wise, I was very distant and laser focused on getting my self and my shit in order. I broke my oneitis by comparing my attitude toward my career (definitively successful) with my attitude toward my married relationship (definitively unsuccessful) and adjusting my thoughts accordingly.
- Pussy, in general is still on a pedestal, but it’s down a notch because my mind is on finding holes in my boat.
- Socially, I still didn’t have any bros to hang out with other than my bandmates. I made a conscious effort to be relaxed and gregarious at gatherings with my wife’s friends and families. This felt like such a performance. With my manosphere knowledge, all I could see was the Beta-bux dynamic every couple we knew. I chuckled to myself and it was all I could do to maintain Law 38.
- My only hobbies were the band, planning trips, and working on our camping van.

I got my vasectomy. The two nights before, she was waiting in bed for me, naked; presumably because she thought it might be a week before I was recovered and she was ovulating (thanks Clue!). After the procedure, I never said peep about my nuts aching or needing to take it easy, I just spent more time reading to my boys. I was on the lookout for shit tests, but didn’t spot any. Two days later, I felt up to it, so I initiated and escalated kino on the couch, got her so teased up, we ended up fucking. [RED PILL LESSON] Don’t show weakness.

I continued to initiate about every other day and got rejected about 1/3 of the time. Some nights my wife was all about it, wet, and down for multiple positions. I’d finished SGM and I was slowly ramping up the Dominance, tracking the Variety, but still struggling with consistent immersion and failing with Emotion.

Sexual milestones this month were increased wearing of sexy underwear and compliance to my direction to touch herself during sex.

I started eating surplus calories, still hitting my macros, and I started taking Creatine.

Besides playing shows with my band, I started going out with my bandmates to see other bands, about every 2 weeks. I started going to the trap range every few weeks; sometimes by myself, sometimes with coworkers. It felt great to just do what I wanted. Just like NMMNG says about self-sacrifice, the family didn’t really even notice and just adjusted themselves to deal with my absence. [RED PILL LESSON] Have bros, do hobbies.

I kept the same haircut, but got it touched up every 4 weeks instead of 8 weeks.

At the end of month 2:

- Dread level 3
- 6’3, 198 lb, 14.5” biceps, belly is still there. Wife commented that my chest looks more developed, but the measurements don’t confirm that.
- Dressing sharper with the clothes I already have. Bought all new underwear.
- Finished Starting Strength, grinding away through Book of Pook and WISNIFG
- Had sex 9 times
- Hobbies are medium-strong
- My house, yard, and vehicles are in top shape.
- I’m debt-free and saving.
- Struggling to establish my frame with kids and parenting.
- Social life needs the most work.
- Game is clumsy.

Month 3

I started the month with a new haircut; “Mad Men” style side-part instead of the “Nick Lachey” that I’d worn since High School. Wife asked “Trying something new with your hair?” “Yep.”

- I’ve been wet shaving for a few years, but I changed up my aftershave for something new.

- BW routine isn’t wearing me out anymore. I need to find some iron to lift. The time when I can workout that fits with all my other commitments is at night, after kids’ bedtime (usually at 8). All the gym options near me close shortly after that so lifting at a gym just isn’t going to happen for me. That’s unfortunate because I was really looking forward to using that as another social opportunity. I started adding a backpack full of milk jugs to my BW routine, changed my jogs to The Hardest km, and started scouring Craigslist for lifting equipment.

- I had run out of things to fix on my house, yard, and cars, so I went looking for other projects.

- I wanted to start building a stash of liquid fuck-you / bug-out money that the wife doesn’t know about just in case I needed to quickly retain a lawyer or put a deposit on an alternate abode. I started clearing out my basement of surplus hobby gear and shit that I hadn’t touched since my last move, 2.5 years ago. I sold what I could on CL and donated the rest. I did the same with my garage. Then I went through my closet and donated everything but my favorite weeks’ worth of clothes (and specialty/seasonal items).

I REALLY like fireworks so I bought a SHITLOAD of them for July 4th. They’re actually illegal to set off in town, but everyone in my neighborhood does it anyway. My wife rolled her eyes but she watched the show anyway and I could tell she was enjoying my boyish excitement over the event. [RED PILL LESSON] Watch what they do, not what they say.

The sexual milestone this month happened the night I brought home all the fireworks (also her ovulation week...); while I was reading on the couch, she came out of the bedroom wearing a skirt, tanktop, (and no panties), then proceeded to suck then ride me like a stolen bike. This was a milestone because she rarely wears something so classically feminine and it’s even rarer that she “dresses up” for sex. I tried to be calm and dominant; she was receptive to some dirty talk, which she usually isn’t. She repeated this performance a couple days later.

I finally got my first major shit-test the next day. She scraped her car against my truck tire when parking and broke off a piece of her bumper. She came in all pouty and I just laughed about the whole situation. She flipped her pouty attitude to “You think this is so funny. You’re probably thinking ‘that bitch, it serves her right!’”. I just walked away chuckling. She was mad all night and I just did my own thing. The next day I went to the dealership, bought the broken part, popped it on there before coming into the house after work. I didn’t say anything about it but my son noticed it immediately when they went outside. That night, she jumped my bones in bed, I held her down and ate her pussy to cum, then caveman’d her for myself, pulling her hair.

- I started intentionally initiating right before I had out-of-the house events planned so I could leave when rejected. In hindsight, this may not have been effective conditioning, because I still left whether she fucked or not.

Right as I finished my 12th week of BW routine, I found the deal I wanted on lifting equipment. I set that shit up in my newly-spacious basement, installed the Stronglifts 5x5 app, and got to work. [RED PILL LESSON] LIFT.

End of Month 3:

- Dread level 3, easing into 4.
- 6’3, 200 lbs. Body is looking proportionally bigger, but no definition.
- Diet is clean, I’m gaining weight.
- Haircut is sharp, clothes are sufficient.
- Finances are stable and I’m squirrelling my F-U money.
- Read Bang, Day Bang, kept grinding on WISNIFG and Pook
- Physical “ship” is in order, crew is catching up but still resisting. Both kids are super clingy to Mom any time but bedtime and there’s not much I can do but keep trying to be the fun dad they like to be around.
- Sex happened 10 times, 4 of which were exceptional and boundary-pushing for my wife. I was rejected 40% of the times I initiated.
• Social life is still weak. When I go to shows, I only engage with the folks I went there with. I need to branch out. After a gig, I caught some IOI’s from some girls but I hesitated to approach and they left.
• Game is nonexistent. I don’t really try anything new on my wife and she doesn’t respond to the things I already do.

Month 4

• Lifting was going great, it was difficult to resist adding weight too quickly in the first few weeks of SL5x5 but I stuck to the program.

• Game was the name of the uh, game this month. I intentionally increased my “handsyness” with the wife and initiated some stuff like water hose spraying or washcloth snapping fights with my older son that turned flirty when my wife joined. Both of these times, she skipped panties after bedtime.

• When planning my son’s birthday party, I took an active role and my wife deferred to me to make some choices. This is new. I confidently made my decisions and executed them.

We got my son a pedal bike for his birthday since he’s mastered the balance bike. Teaching my son to ride has been something I’ve looked forward to my whole adult life (maybe a covert contract…). On the first ride, I was guiding and instructing him and things weren’t going perfectly, but they were fine. My wife steps in and tries to override my instructions. I took her aside and said “I’m doing this. It’s my job as a dad to teach my son how to ride.” She got mad and responded “A mom can teach a kid how to ride too! My mom taught my brother.” I calmly said “That’s true, but I’m doing it right now.” [FOGGING AND BROKEN RECORD] She fired off “Well you’re too mean to him” then went to sulk with our younger son. I continued, un-phased.

• I tried to order a HJ during shark week, got denied, countered with “Oh, you’d rather blow me instead?” and got shut right down.

• Had sex 11 times this month; 2 of which were exceptional. Sexual milestones were a few new positions, fucking with company in the house, and cumming on her tits (something I’ve wanted but she’s never allowed). My goal is to try one new sexual milestone each month. I don’t ask or discuss each thing, I just go for it. Surprisingly (to me), she has offered no resistance to trying new things. Of course she doesn’t come up with her own new things to try, but that’s not her job- it’s mine.

• 40% of my initiations were rejected. Usually the morning after I get rejected, I get ready just a little quicker and go to work a little early. Sometimes I stay later. If I get rejected before lifting, I’ll do a few extra sets of curls or something, just to take longer.

- Our yearly road/camping trip was coming up and I executed all the prep like a Captain.

End of month 4:

- Solidly in Dread Level 4.
- 6’3, 204 lb, filling out my clothes pretty well.
- Read the Ironwood Collection of Alpha Moves, still struggling through WISNIFG and Pook
- Diet is still clean
- Hobbies are strong- played a lot of gigs with the band and crushed it at the trap range.
  Built lot of Lego projects with my sons.
- Parenting is getting stronger.
- Game with the wife is improving but still a little rough.
- Social life is still weak. I’ve tried to engage other parents watching my kid’s swimming lesson, but everyone just wants to flick their damn phone.

Month 5

- I started growing a beard.

- I’ve started opening all the mail and paying our bills. She still thinks she’s running things because she checks balances every few days (so do I, I just haven’t told her I’m doing it). I haven’t asked for permission to spend money or time on anything since I took the pill.

- I got a large bonus at work and didn’t tell her. It hit our account and she asked “Whoa, what’s going on with your paycheck?” I just shrugged and said “I got a bonus.” She asked if I was going to tell her about it and I said “meh, you’d find it eventually.”

- Took our road trip and halfway through, our van broke down on a remote highway. I had prepared for this event and executed the extraction plan like a Captain. I handled the repair and subsequent change of plans with a calm and steady head. My wife and kids still talk about this adventure.

- I started amping up the banter game with my wife. After building some wood project with my son, I turned to my wife and asked “Does anything else around her need to get nailed?” (Thanks Athol!) One night I invited her over text (from the kitchen) to “Come over. We can Netflix and Chill”. That one turned into a great sex session.

- I bought a magic wand vibrator and brought it out (without warning) during shark week.
No resistance to trying it; she came hard and I busted all over her tits and stomach.

- Once when I got rejected, she asked for a massage instead. I said “Sure, after we have sex!” She “humphed” and I went to sleep.

- In general, my wife is a pretty low energy person (around me...). Thanks to a few MRP posts, I’ve started to recognize that I’m boring as fuck too and way too serious. She’s reflecting me.

- My older kid started school so I’ve been going to school events and looking for opportunities to engage other parents. Turns out, not a lot of dads go to these things and 99% of the moms are fat, sloppy, bossy, and bitchy; not useful for preselection.

End of Month 5:

- Dread level 4, easing into 5.
- 6’3, 207 lbs, gains are starting to show.
- Beard is thick and manly.
- Diet is clean. I’ve started tracking my sleep to make sure I get 8 hours. Started taking ZMA and it really does make me sleep hard.
- Game is getting tighter, but I need to bring more energy.
- Social life is unchanged and still weak.

Month 6:

We took a plane trip to see my extended family. If you read my post Road to Zion, you’ll remember that air travel with my wife and kids was the tipping point and the trough of my beta existence. This time, I instructed my wife to buy the tickets, which hotel to book, and which car to reserve. At the airport, I handled all of our paperwork (and held all four boarding passes), got the kids through security like a boss, and calmly read a book (The Art of War) while my kids went bonkers in the waiting area. On the plane, I was on-the-spot with snacks, toys, and iPad whenever I detected they were about to get bored with the current thing. Since I was expecting this and took it as my job, it was no big deal. [RED PILL LESSON] If you decide to be happy, you can be.

I have had enough of dealing with the questionable reliability of my camping van. I told my wife I was going to sell it, sell my current truck, then buy a bigger truck and a new kind of camper. She was a little apprehensive at first, but I was confident in my plan, and didn’t actually ask her anyway. I cleaned up the van and sold it with little fuss, exactly breaking even other than the money I’d burned on parts to constantly repair it. A couple days later, I got up after dinner and said “I’m going to look at a pickup truck.” I grabbed my keys and checkbook, pecked her cheek, and cheerfully walked out the door. I already knew exactly which truck I wanted, I’d worked some deals over the phone and had quotes from two other dealerships, and just had to make the deal in person at my local place. I handled the negotiation like a boss, paid the price I wanted, and made arrangements to take delivery the next day. I came home, sat down on the couch with my wife and started watching the show with her. She asked “How many trucks do you have now?” so I said “Two.” A few seconds later she asked “were you going to tell me?” I said “Yep, tomorrow when I bring it home.” She just smiled and rolled her eyes. That night she was waiting naked in bed with a candle lit and we fucked all kinds of ways.

We had sex 10 times this month, with a 60% rejection rate. I attributed the increase in rejection to the fact that I was trying out lines and moves I’d read about and was probably not delivering them with the confidence and flow needed to pull them off.

At a show I attended, I was approached and asked to slow-dance by an HB6. She swolested my triceps. After, I chatted with her and her HB8 friend. I wasn’t smooth, but I wasn’t awkward either. Just a light, relaxing conversation with a couple chicks who laughed at my jokes. I shared way too much free information and didn’t get a lot investment from either one of them though.

I’m getting kind of bored with the healthy meals we’ve been cooking; we have maybe 10 or 15 that we rotate each week then repeat. I signed us up for Hello Fresh and Blue Apron (they mail you 2-person quantities of 3 meals each week with prep and recipe instructions. The ingredients are fresh, whole food, and rarely repeat. It costs about $60 per week.) As soon as I did this, my wife started calorie counting.

End of Month 6

- Dread level 5 but without the clothes.
- Acting like the Captain.
- Crushing the weights. 6’3, 206lbs, my thighs and butt are swelling up and making my pants tight, but my waist is shrinking so my belts fit funny.
- Diet is in line. I’m cooking a lot more of our meals.
- Read the Art of War, started Mindful Attraction Plan, grinding on WISNIFG and Pook
- Sexual milestones this month were use of a sex toy and anal fingering.
- Learning about better Game and trying out some stuff on the wife and others
- Forcing myself to leave my group in social settings

Month 7

My dominance game is getting better. One night she walked out of the bathroom wearing a thong (which likely would be for sex later), but instead of letting her go put her couch-mode clothes on, I picked her up, put her on the couch, and went straight to sucking tits. I pulled her panties to the side and ate her out, then switched to 69. This went well; she sucked with more enthusiasm than ever and moaned when I came in her mouth (first time in ~4.5 years). I ate her out some more, then I moved her to the bedroom to use my vibrator for a couple more O’s.

Our wedding anniversary was at the beginning of this month. I got her a card that said “I’m glad I picked you” [POWERTALK] and a bag of Skittles. The one time per year when she ever considers wearing lingerie is on our anniversary, and when she does, we’re both super awkward about it. I consciously avoided this (or having sex at all) as a covert contract. This year, she came out in a new outfit that I’d never seen. She was awfully proud that she’d bought it herself but I made things awkward by focusing too much on her outfit and not enough on taking it off. [RED PILL LESSON] Women dress sexy for the man they want to impress. Acting like it’s a treat just shows her that I don’t think I deserve it.

She threw a big ‘ol shit test during shark week. She gets up whenever our boys wake up, which is usually around 6. I stay asleep until about 7 because that’s what it takes to get my 8 hours (also one of the Omega behaviors I need to cut out- the Captain should be the first one on deck). So my wife tells me that we’ll be alternating who gets up early. I STFU, intending to just not do it. The next morning, she kicks me awake at 6 and says “Your turn!” Thinking I was [Agreeing and Amplifying], I said “Awesome! So I’ll see you at 4 to work the last hour of my shift?” She huffed a little but I got up anyway. I set my boys up with breakfast then unloaded the dishwasher and a couple other kitchen chores. I’m not sure if I “passed”, but I didn’t really care. That night, she apologized for making me get up then initiated an enthusiastic HJ. A couple days later, I noticed her doing more chores...

One night I went to hear a band by myself (so I HAD to talk to strangers). I approached and chatted up an HB6 who was VERY receptive to conversation, but I ran out of stuff to say. Later, an older HB5 with nice fake tits approached me, wanting to dance, but we ended up just chatting. When I got home, my wife was sleeping. I was feeling energetic, so I started kinoing her legs and eventually got up to her pussy. She woke up and started moaning, so I set my boys up with breakfast then unloaded the dishwasher and a couple other kitchen chores. I’m not sure if I “passed”, but I didn’t really care. That night, she apologized for making me get up then initiated an enthusiastic HJ. A couple days later, I noticed her doing more chores...

• Interesting observation: I rarely wake my wife up for sex. Twice now since I’ve been paying attention, I’ve done it and noticed a significant increase in her level of immersion.

About a week later, I initiated again in the evening, didn’t get any response, so I lifted and went to bed. I woke up about 1AM with an erection and started kinoing her legs again, I fingered her pussy and ass, then ate her out to cum. I thought to myself “this is the night.” I kept eating while I lubed up my dick, then went for anal. I was too focused on the task, my erection became weak, and I couldn’t finish the job. She tried to finish me off with her hand but I was done for the night. I chalk this up as a milestone though because I went for it and she didn’t resist. [RED PILL LESSON] Take what you want.

Toward the end of the month, I had been on SL 5x5 for 16 weeks. I had deloaded OHP and squats once each, but wasn’t quite recovering from squats every day. I was getting bigger and stronger for sure, but my physique was very bottom-heavy. Strong is cool and all, but what I wanted for myself was to fucking fill out my shirts. I started researching other programs and decided to try out Wendler’s 5/3/1 Boring But Big.

End of Month: 7

• Dread Level 6
• Still crushing the weights, still making gains, knees are suffering- audit my squat form.
• 6’3, 211 lbs, 18% BF guess based on internet pictures.
• Diet is still strong, but I’m getting tired of eating 4k calories per day.
• Finished reading Mindful Attraction Plan, WISNIFG (finally!), and Wendler’s 5/3/1. Pook is on hold until I can get back to it.
• Hobbies are strong.
• Social life is getting stronger
• Game is getting tighter. Abundance is becoming evident.
• Sex 12 times this month, 3 times were exceptional. 50% rejection rate. Struggling with emotion and immersion.
• Parenting needs some work; I have some covert contracts about how I think my kids should act and respond to my corrections, especially in public and at restaurants.

Success Stories
by trp_dude | November 4, 2018 | Link

Over the several years I've been on this sub, I've collected success stories. There isn't a good way to search for them, and since I don't frequent the sub regularly, I thought I would post links to them. Enjoy.

"After breakfast I'm sitting on the sofa reading; and she comes over, pulls down my pants, gets me hard with a nice blowjob, and proceeds to take her clothes off and straddle me. GENTLEMAN, I have had a deadbedroom for NINE(ish) YEARS. STARFISH SEX A FEW TIMES A YEAR IF I'M LUCKY."

Field Report: Year One by u/SubPrimeMate

"Thanks for reading, and for writing the posts that saved my marriage, possibly my life."

My wife 34F has stopped putting forth effort into our relationship A series of posts by u/Fing_farted_on_me. MRP in action, although he didn't know about the sub when applied its principles. Guy's wife stops having sex with him. When confronted, she tells him she's no longer interested in having sex, that she was just pretending so she could have kids and a good life. He does a 180. He comes out on top. The entire series should be read.

"I used to think of my wife as the sun. My life orbited around her. I derived my happiness and joy from her, and everything else was secondary. Now I realize that I am the center of my own universe. My happiness comes from within. "

Evolution of a Low Sex Marriage Male on Reddit by u/luckie_duckie

"After turning myself around, I am a better father, husband, businessman, and lover. My wife is more sexual than when I met her which is hard to imagine. For example, and I think this should be added to MRP in order to boost I(mmersion), I took my wife on a vacation without the kids so there were no external stressors. She was able to let loose without the I(mmersion) being broken, so my focus could be on DE as V(ariance) was being met simply by being on vacation. My wife found out that she is bisexual/curious and enjoys the touch, taste, and feel of a women. Honestly I never thought this was ever on the table, but our relationship is so incredibly strong at this point that she feels comfortable bringing other women into our bedroom. In fact she has enjoyed the chase so much she now entices other couples play. Obviously I am still very cautious as I feel like a kid running around with a stick of lit dynamite. I just wanted to share my personal experience and the main point, that /u/BluePillProfessor should be required reading for any man about to get married."

[FR] The second try by u/HandsOutOfMyPockets

Field Report From a New Guy by u/parkerfiveone
As a divorce attorney I have the privilege of seeing (1) why most marriages fall apart; and (2) how different family and parenting structures function in the context of the new relationships of my clients and opposing parties. As to the first point, that's why I'm at TRP/MRP - it's just plain truth, and I can't imagine a single male divorce attorney who would deny it (female attorneys have stronger hamsters, so I rarely trust them).

As for family structures that work, I've developed the theory I call "biological step-mother." It is based on this one infallible law of divorce and custody cases:

Men don't get custody after marriage because they don't live like they have sole, exclusive custody during the marriage. (Shared parenting is a conversation for another day). Men must develop subliminal custody of their children in their wives' minds.

LEGAL CONTEXT

Although laws are changing, custody matters always involve judicial discretion. This will never change. Period. That judicial discretion will always tilt slightly toward mothers, regardless of what the statute says. Why?

- Judges inherently respect history, even when it has been overruled. History dictates that mothers are default custodial parents. Many judges have been in the profession since before the law change and can't get the old ways out of their heads.

- The law still (and always will) assume default custody to a mother simply because the baby came out of her belly, whereas men can't know for sure who the father is (no matter how faithful she says she's been) until that DNA test comes back. Divorce law is slightly different from custody law in that it presumes shared parenting, but the legal bias from juvenile law is still subconsciously present because most DR (divorce) judges are also the JV (juvenile/never-marrieds) judges.

- Abortion law implies that children are the property of the mother. It's her body, so she can decide whether the child lives or dies. When the child is born, there is a slight change, but the legal context of "she decides what happens to her baby" subliminally carries over to DR/JV law.

- Most DR/JV judges are women. As to the few male ones, they are virtually always closet betas who put women on a pedestal. They act alpha because it's their courtroom and they have positional authority, but they have no internally radiating authority. They still crack jokes from the bench: "You're here because you didn't do the dishes like she told you, right?"

Can dads win custody? Absolutely, I do it all the time. But women don't believe this until it actually happens. This is key. Women make decisions based on their perceptions, not actuality.

Here are the two parenting structures that often result in stressed marriages.

TRADITIONAL BIOLOGICAL MOTHER

The biological mother has a unique and unashamed relationship with her children. She carries them in her womb, nurses them when they're young, and often takes primary responsibility for their basic growth and development. For all practical purposes, they are her kids. This is especially true for SAHMs.

You, as the father, are involved to the degree that she finds your involvement advantageous to the development of the children. If you start doing things she doesn't like, she throws a hissy fit or just leaves. More significantly, she will undermine your relationship with the children in any number of ways.

TRADITIONAL STEP-MOTHER

Step-mothers respect the fact that her husband is the ultimate authority figure over the child. If the relationship went sour, she accepts the fact that she will have no custodial rights in the child. As a result, she does not take personal responsibility for the growth and development of the child, giving it to her husband. By placing him in charge, she sees herself as a helper who comes alongside him to assist in raising the child.

Unfortunately, step-mothers often maintain a subconscious emotional detachment. This is because of the custody issue. They don't want to form a close bond with someone when there is a possibility that they may never see that person again. I've heard it said many times: a woman's greatest fear is abandonment. In this case, instead of a romantic abandonment, it's a parent-child relationship that's lost. For women, this is too close a bond to risk, so step-mothers remain subliminally detached and allow their husbands (the birth fathers) to be the final authority and emotional rock for the children.

BIOLOGICAL STEP-MOTHER

This is a relatively rare phenomenon, but I find it often occurring when divorced or nearly divorced couples decide to reunite - particularly when the father has demonstrated that he is likely to get custody of the children, or at least shared parenting and that she would not be the default custodian. To be clear, if the father convinces the mother of this through emotional abuse ("You'd better never leave me or I'll take the kids" and she believes him), a different maternal structure develops that is distinct from the biological step-mother. I won't go into that here, but suffice it to say that it is harmful and usually results in unruly kids. The biological step-mother is when the woman respects the father's authority, rather than fears it.

When the traditional biological mother finally acknowledges that she does not have exclusive ownership of her children they become "our children." Many traditional biological mothers will use this lingo, but do not actually feel or experience this until it's concretely rooted in their heads: The law won't back you up. I have a distinct advantage here, being a divorce attorney. My wife knows that I will not position myself in a way where she would get custody and I know how to break through false accusations. For non-divorce-attorneys, the key in developing this frame of mind is to convince her this: YOU, the father, are the PRIMARY CAREGIVER of the children, NOT HER.

The perception of the "primary caregiver" is the overwhelming majority of custody law, even in states (like mine) where that phrase has been uprooted out of the statutes. Traditional biological mothers subconsciously rely on the default assumption that women are primary caregivers when they develop their approach to parenting. When custody is at risk, if they want to preserve the marital relationship their approach to parenting issues changes drastically.

This is when the biological mother takes on specific traits of a step-mother without losing the important value of the traditional biological mother connection either:

- She shifts parenting responsibility back to the father, accepting that he is an authority figure over the children [because he has subliminal custody].

- She lives as if she is a helper whose job is to implement the leadership decisions her husband [the subliminal custodial parent] makes, as they pertain to the children.

- Her lifestyle around the house changes. She enjoys the comfort of living in his home rather than her home or their home [because he has subliminal custody and her parenting time is in his home on his terms].

- She still has the same loving bond with her children that traditional biological mothers have, but she does not use that as a motivation to draw authority away from the father. [She won't disrespect the subliminal custody arrangement, but will still love and long for her kids all the same.]

- The children are lovingly bonded with mom, but now are able to develop both a love and respect for their father, which the mother fosters rather than undermines [because the children also subliminally understand that dad has custody - and side bonus, if you do get divorced, guess who they want to live with now?].
YOU DON'T HAVE TO BATTLE CUSTODY TO GET THERE

This is where OYS is extremely vital. If the father doesn't follow OYS principles, the mother will never respect him as an authority figure over the children. He is essentially saying, I want you to do all the responsibility stuff of a custodial parent, but I still want to have the positional authority. Per John Maxwell, leadership is influence, not position.

The father/husband must take the following attitude, regardless of whether or not it makes legal sense to do so (remember: women do things that don't make a lot of sense too):

- It's my house. I have provided a place for my children to live and thrive. I've invited her to live here with me because that's what I want. I'm going to take care of the house as if it's my responsibility, just as I would if we were dating and she just came over a lot.
  - NOT: It's our house and we both have equal responsibilities to care for it. She'd better hold up her end.

- My time is my time, which I invest in raising our children. I invite her to enjoy my time alongside me because I like having her around. I'm going to use my time in a way that balances efficiency, productivity, and enjoyment for our family. As my wife, I am inviting her to participate in that efficiency, productivity, and enjoyment (with a few boundaries), but she does not rule my time.
  - NOT: We're married. We both have obligations to each other. We must allocate our time in a way that meets these mutual obligations.

- It's my money, which I invest in our children's upbringing. I set the household budget. Even if she's working, it's because I am leading her in her fulfillment of that role instead of her maintaining a SAHM role. I allow her to spend money within the confines of the budget that I have set for the family because it is helpful to me and builds trust for her.
  - NOT: We can each do whatever we want with our own income. Or, we each contribute to the marriage in different ways, so we both have a say in how the finances are spent.

CHANGING BRAIN PATTERNS

As a matter of fact, these assertions would not stand up in court if you were to get divorced. But remember, women don't want to feel like wives; they want to feel like the hot girl who's dating the bachelor who has it all together. That's why they felt all tingly before they were your wife and stopped when you started treating them like a wife (in the modern cultural context of how wives are understood, of course).

The stable husband mentality is, essentially, to live as if you are a single dad with sole custody of his kids dating a hottie who you like having around. It says: "I have an established life, but I'm inviting you into my life. You are an outsider, but I want you here anyway. As you respect the fact that I am inviting you into my life, you will learn to enjoy the safety and comfort that my life has to offer you. I respect that you have independent wants and desires, but they will be exercised within the boundaries I establish for your participation in my life."

The above mindset establishes step-mother thinking in her. Step-mothers often accept the fact that they are joining in on a pre-established system. They do so because they like that system. If the guy is beta, he'll let her change the system, but often she doesn't like what she makes it become, hence repeated divorces and remarriages. As has been often said before: Women don't know what they want. When they think they do and try to get it, they are often disappointed. If their husband tells them what they should want and then fulfills it for them, one of two things can happen:

- She finds that he's right and respects him for knowing her so well and making her happy; or

- He's wrong, but she chalks it up to her husband trying something and it didn't work; it's his fault she's not happy, not hers. Incidentally, she's happy that she can blame someone else for her unhappiness.
  - This is unconscious salvation from the alternative: she fails to make herself happy, causing a mini-crisis because happiness becomes an elusive concept that is always beyond her reach. Take away her control over her own happiness and, ironically, she will be much happier.

PERSISTENTLY UNHAPPY WIVES AND FOOTBALL-LOVING GUYS

Some people complain that nothing they do makes their wives happy. They're just always sour. To them, I say: Keep up the stable husband mentality. Even if his method fails to make her happy repeatedly, she eventually learns to love his system anyway - not only because it gives her an excuse for her own internalized emotional ignorance, but also because she will feel fulfilled contributing to something beyond herself.

It's like when a man is happy that his favorite sports team wins a game. He experiences happiness vicariously through the players. His life has not actually improved in any way, but his emotional state does because their emotional state does. By developing an emotional commitment to that team, he has entered their system and allowed his emotional state to be tied to their successes and failures. Your wife does the same thing with you.

The problem is that if you've been failing for too long, she stops believing the victories matter. I grew up in Cleveland. Nobody really gets excited when the Browns win a game. There's a half-hearted cheer, but at the end of the day, they all know they're not going to the super bowl. But when the Cavs won the NBA championship and the Indians made it to the world series, now those are teams we can get excited about, even when they lose a few. Why? Because the potential victory is there. If your wife sees that you could be a super bowl champion kind of dad and husband, her emotional satisfaction will latch on to your victories, even if they're small ones, like the first couple games in a season.

It's also worth noting, if you see a team of fat and/or scrawny video game/porn addicts romping out on that football field, even if they win the super bowl by some miracle, you're not all that excited for the win, and you have no confidence in them for next season. You chalk up the victory to a fluke. That's why fitness is key: she has to believe you're a consistent winner, not a fluke-winner.

REGAINING THE STABLE HUSBAND MENTALITY

I'm not going to say much here other than to follow most of the rest of the advice on this sub and do the required readings. I'm done with the "course prerequisites" and will be starting the 101 series after developing my ability to apply the material from the prerequisites first.

But from what I see, the most important factor in regaining the stable husband mentality is simply to take over. Act like you're a single dad dating a hottie and you invited her to live with you. Even if you don't think she's hot, treat her like she is anyway. When she feels sexy, she'll try harder to be sexier. I started this process a few months ago (officially discovering TRP/MRP about two weeks ago) and am already seeing tremendous results.

- I consolidated calendars so I'm the one scheduling the kids' doctors appointments, birthday parties, swim lessons, etc. She sees that I am the lead parent and she helps implement my plan.

- I started organizing the crap shelf that's had mail and who-knows-what items sitting on it for the past month. She sees that where she brushed responsibility aside, I get stuff done.

- I straightened out the garage so it's an actual part of the home again, not the aftermath of a tornado. I fixed the floor of the deck that caved in a week and a half ago. She sees that her rule threatened our shelter [read: biological necessity] and mine restores and bolsters it.

- I keep my car clean, whereas hers is a mess (even though I do most of the driving with the kids). She sees that her life is chaotic, but I bring order in those exact same issues under harsher environments. Next up: clean out her car too.

SUMMARY: Every woman looks at the rest of the world and thinks, "They have it all together. Why can't I have it all together too? I wish my life was like theirs." This is how cheating starts - desiring things outside the home. You want her to think: "My husband has it all together. I wish my life was like his." Now she is desiring you inside the home. She sees your system (which I now see is just another word for "frame") and genuinely can't resist wanting to attach herself to your life. She will still feel like an outsider for some time, but that's okay - you want to foster that a little. If she sees you as an outsider [Edit: assuming no other psychological barriers):

- She will respect your decisions.

- She will let you parent your children and not undermine you with her emotional connection to them. Bonus points: when she sees you as the primary caregiver of the children, she internally realizes that her legal basis for custody is whimpering away, making her less likely to do anything that would instigate divorce.

- She will be happier because she is no longer responsible when things go wrong (it's not our mess; it's his mess).

- She will desire you. A simple note on this: ever wonder why people think marriage commitment sucks the life out of sex? Because she's no longer the outsider operating within your system; she sees herself as your co-equal peer. You don't even need dread for this to work (though it certainly helps). [Edit: Desire doesn't always mean sex or action conformity. Women desire things but don't do anything about it all the time. All you're doing is fostering a psychological condition in her that opens doors for active conformity and puts shiny things on the other side; she still has to choose to walk through, and women don't always make the logical choice.]

Best wishes guys.
There are two types of affairs: Emotional and Physical.

I have had an ongoing physical affair with Shelly (Mormon mom) for the better part of four years. Since my divorce process has started, that physical affair has turned emotional over the past 3 months or so. She is clearly testing me as a branch. Just to give you an idea, for the past 6 months I have sex with Shelly at least once a week, sometimes multiple times a week.

I will go on record of saying that while both types of affairs are "game enders" in my book, the emotional affair is far more nefarious than the physical when you talk female -> male types of affairs. I would also argue that for any faggot noob who says his wife or LTR just had an emotional affair and it was never physical, you are sadly fucking mistaken.

Yesterday I had lunch with Shelly. We spent about two hours together eating seafood, have a few cocktails. She bought by they way, or should I say her husband did...Saw her later at school pickup...anyway I digress...

During our time together she revealed to me that over the past 6 months as we have spent more time together, fucking, etc. that she refuses to have oral sex with her husband anymore. They used to practice Shibari, and that has stopped as it disgusts her to submit to him like that now. She threw away all his ropes after she blamed their two dogs for chewing them up, which caused an argument in their home.

Shelly's husband works an 8-5 job. My job is remote, so we have all day to see each other if I want. She goes out of her way to let me know anytime he is going to be out of town overnight. We are very active sexual texters and we rarely go more than 24 hours w/o some form of communication.

Women want something to think about. If you are not giving your woman feelz and tingles, you can 100% be assured she is getting them somewhere else. Facebook, Buzzfeed, some guy like me.....SOMEWHERE.

The physical affair can be chalked up to so many things. A little hormones here some tequila there, but the emotional one, well that takes time, effort and commitment to keep that going. Which is why, if you want to be a cuck to a physical affair, whatever I suppose an argument can be made, but the emotional one you can never succumb to being a cuck to that kind.

Could a woman have a genuine physical only affair? Absolutely. I would say it is a snow balls chance in hell that she could have an emotional only one.

Yesterday Shelly told me things like:

I want to sleep with my head on your chest like the other day.
I want to curl up next to you where I feel safe and secure.

I treasure my time with you, all of it.

Shelly and I didn’t have sex yesterday, nor did we do anything very physical at all. But I decided to spend some time with her, which she and I greatly appreciated and I got some nice seafood and companionship.

Shelly is testing the branch, I can feel it. I can see it playing out in slow motion and it validates every single thing we talk about here.

So what is my point?

All I want to do with this post is show what it is like from the adulterer side of an affair, as so many of the people coming here for help are on the opposite (receiving) side.

All the men who come here, looking for answers on how to save their marriage, get their woman to love them, suck their dick and want to drain their balls.....

If you suspect or have proof of an affair, you have lost. Period, end of story. I can see it in her eyes. She hates being around her husband. She wants to vomit at the thought of making love to him, or even touching him. I have alpha widowed her and there is no going back. She is forever ruined and I forever ruined him.

Shelly asked me yesterday what I thought about her asking one of her friends to cover for her on a Saturday night so we could actually go out and do something like a "couple". I shot that idea down, and reminded her that as soon as other people know her risk exposure goes up, I am not officially and finally divorced, etc. What I didn’t tell her, was that I am not ready for that, I am not that stable of a branch. That’s the amoral part I suppose. I also don’t think I would want to LTR a cheater, but that is kind of hypocritical as I am a cheater as well I suppose...there is that hamster.....

When you call your wife/LTR - do you have your own ringtone? Shelly's husband does. That way she knows it is him, and she can either answer and lie as to what she is doing, or send him to VM. Shelly has incredible OPSEC on her phone. I should know, I set it up for her.

Shelly's BB husband doesn’t know her password, has no TouchID on her phone. Doesn’t know her FB password, nothing. Is it blind trust or stupidity? Trust but verify we say...

Is Shelly your wife? Is this story your wives? Do you think it is? How many of Shelly's behaviors does your wife have in common?

Her husband has his head so far deep in the sand. After our last sex encounter I sent Shelly home with a bruise on her ass from me slapping her ass so hard. A literal bruise in the shape of my index and middle finger. She wore it proudly and even told me when it was gone.

How in the fuck does her man not notice another mans handprint on his wives ass over the course of 3-4 days? What in the actual fuck?
Get your fucking head out of the sand. Everything you do, it has to be FOR YOU. NEVER FOR HER.

The game is over, and she has won when you start to live your life on her terms, and work to appease her.

I am an amoral fuck when it comes to this stuff. Red Pill is amoral. But I know what I want, and will not stop and never quit.

I hope this post pisses off some of you faggot noobs. For you vets, I hope it gives you a stark reminder as to why you have to always, 100% w/o question BE THE PRIZE.

I hope it feels like I hit you with a 2x4 in your face.

And let me tell you why.

I would rather get hit by a 2x4 in my face by a semi-anon internet stranger who gives half a single fuck about me, vs. be taken advantage of by an adulterer.
Depressive and Anxious Wives: How it's all your fault.

by HornsOfApathy | February 20, 2019 | Link

Having been on this MRP journey for a while now, I often see new and old folks continually providing information in regards to depressive wives but I’m not sure if it’s been covered yet in extensive detail for the crowd here that actually want to take ownership of the problems. For the record, my wife is diagnosed with a severe anxiety disorder that leads to depression and bi-polar tendencies. She also has family history of anxiety disorders. That’s what the doctors tell us, anyways.

Like a lot of people here, I came to MRP with some or all of the following ideas. Maybe you have found yourself saying the following:

- My wife is suffering from depression.
- My wife is on some type of medication(s) to help treat that depression so I’m lucky - meds will help me solve this.
- My wife is crazier than the average AWALT woman. She has <insert disorder here> and that makes her crazier. I am contemplating if my woman picker and vetting method was wrong.
- If she would just get her shit together our lives would improve.
- Intimacy and sex in my marriage is lacking or an IV drip, and I want better. It's due in part to her depression or anxiety.

First statement: Your wife is suffering from depression.

Remember, way back when, you were dating your wife and she was bubbly and fun to be around? She perhaps even acted like a little girl - wanting to please you in any way she could. That was awesome, right? Well, it’s not like that now, right? It’s because she’s suffering from XYZ ailment or depression, right?

Wrong, faggot.

Now picture this: You’re truly OYS. You are as close as you can be to the man you want to be right now. radiate positive warm energy with zero ego. When you come into a room, that room literally comes alive. People remember your energy from last time and greet you warmly. You’re a man of strength and impeccable truth. You meet an old friend at a local bar for a single malt scotch and in two hours you have three women give you their number without you asking - and you’re 100% certain that two of them would have fucked you in the parking lot given the opportunity. You say goodbye to your buddy after two drinks only and head home. What would you expect as you entered your home? The same energy you felt in that room.

How long has it been since you gave off that masculine energy in your home that literally brings your wife alive? Through your humor and deep understanding of who you are, can you guide her through her depressive moods into being alive again? Are you that skilled at winning this shit test?
If your wife is depressed, it’s all your fucking fault.

You’re not being the man that you need to be. Yet, you continue to live with your depressed wife because…. Well, why do you? Because you innately know that you’ve at least contributed to her depression and know the “fixer” inside of you must fix this. Men are great at fixing shit. Especially when we’ve broken it ourselves. Here’s a wakeup call for you dude: you didn’t contribute to her depression - you set the stage for it and all she did was fill your container. But your container was a sad looking one at that because even you don’t know your own fucking potential. Your wife knows your potential and is a mastermind of seeing right through your bullshit excuses. She only desires the best in you. It’s programmed in her DNA. She’s also programmed through hypergamy to stay with your Beta non-achieving existence until she literally has a depressive breakdown and runs to Alpha Chad. So, what do you do?

Accept that this is all your fault. Sidebar. Lift. Let go of your ego that it’s her fault she’s depressed. It’s yours. Sidebar. Lift. STFU. Post here. Get advice. Get as close as you can be to the man you want to be - and watch your house and container have the opportunity to be full of great energy again.

If you’re not giving your wife the opportunity 100% of the time to fill your great container, you’re enabling her depression. Everytime you say to yourself “but she is depressed” you are DEERing and making excuses. DEERing is enabling behavior, and in this case you’re essentially saying: I’m not strong enough to handle her.

Maybe you’re not strong enough right now. The greatest teacher you will ever encounter is usually your wife. She will test you to the ends of the earth for congruency so that when you enter the world you are primed to deliver her the best slab of meat, pile of money, healthiest children, and happiness. She looks to you to provide everything in her life and the only way she can ensure you deliver is if she tests the fuck out of you. She wants to submit to your greatness and fill the container provided more than anything she has ever wanted. It’s in her DNA.

Will you be the man that’s capable of doing that?

Second Statement: My wife is on some type of medication(s) to help treat that depression so I’m lucky - meds will help me solve this.

You’re trying to rationalize medications = fix her depression. DEER some more, faggot.

This is a touchy subject. Most of the medical community agrees that there are chemical imbalances in the brain that can cause certain behaviors to outshine others given certain triggers, situations, or lifestyle. Instead of focusing on those things it’s a lot easier to recalibrate the brain chemical balance nowadays to placate people with an easy way out. That’s the faggot way out.

Personally I do think there is a time and place for SSRI’s or similar. But only when you’re not strong enough to handle that on your own. Maybe you need a bump to get you through to your next mission. That is still DEERing, but it’s controlled and with forethought. If you have goals in mind like: I will take this, knowing it’s not going to help me long term, but will help me short term to get back on track…. Take the SSRIs or encourage your wife to do so.

However, it is not a long term fix. The only long term fix for recalibrating the brain is unfucking yourself and leading your wife to do the same to fall into your unfucked frame.

Medications like SSRIs also decrease libido in both sexes and well... we know how scared you are of that. So, stop making excuses or rationalizing pill popping.

For the record, my wife was on 4 different medications until about a year ago. You name it, she’s had it for years. For some reason I encouraged her to drop all meds. She did. It was a mistake. I did not yet have the frame required to lead her to filling my great container because frankly – I didn’t have a great container to show her. I lacked frame. I would suggest encouraging your wife to come down/off of medications once you’re confident you can hold frame and lead her.

My wife is now medication free and happier than I have seen her ever because now I can hold frame. She still has depressive waves and crazy anxious moments, but the oak tree gently sways in her storms and provides a safe place for her. You become the solution to the depression and anxiety – not medications.

Third Statement: My wife is crazier than the average AWALT woman.

This could be true, but you win in both scenarios:

1. She is crazier than the average AWALT woman. Great! You’ve been given the opportunity of a lifetime to become an even better and stronger version of yourself than you ever knew possible. You’ll learn a lot from her. You’ll learn to be the best fucking oak tree there is. If you decide to next her after learning everything you can and because it’s actually that serious, you’ll be primed to take your training with you. Be thankful your wife is crazy. You’re in the top 1% elite motherfuckers out there and will slay them all.

2. She is not crazier than the average AWALT woman. Great, then you probably recognize that when she does act like this you’re DEERing and enabling shitty behavior most of the time. You probably recognize this is all your fault. Give her a better container and you’ll be fine.

Fourth Statement: If she would just get her shit together our lives would improve.

Well, yeah. Duh, faggot. Of course you want her to get her shit together. But how can she get her shit together when she is married to Captain Fucktard? She can’t. She will continue to test you and your congruency until she is satisfied. Only then will she begin to look inward at herself and make changes to not let the 1000ft rope slip out of her hands. In my experience there is always a rope. You will have learned to be patient and strong enough to notice even minor efforts and failures for her to get her shit together and follow you. In my humble opinion, the greatest men that I know have the most patience and are willing to play the long game to get exactly what they want in the end.

You will have to ask yourself how patient you’re willing to be. That’s personal to you.

Fifth Statement: Intimacy and sex in my marriage is lacking or an IV drip, and I want better. It's due in part to her depression or anxiety.

Of course you want more and better sex, faggot. “But my wife is depressed”, right?

Wrong.

It’s all your fucking fault. If you truly are willing to work hard for what you want it will require just that: hard work. Stop being Captain Faggot that feels entitled to your wife’s sexual desire. You will not change your sex life overnight. Your wife won’t suddenly get a magic pill that will make her Mrs. Cocklover and cure her depression. Your wife won’t suddenly wake up one day and realize her man is getting a little bit better. Your wife will fight you tooth and nail not to follow your lead and hard work. Only when you have achieved abundance will she submit to you.

Your wife might have sex with you, but she won’t fuck you with all she’s got. Why? Because you are enervating and literally sucking any bit of good energy out of her. She can only generate so much good energy on her own. Do you like sucking dick? Because it’s not your job to suck on her, faggot. It’s her job to suck on you. So give her something good to suck on: your true self, direction, power, love, ambition, direction, sexual energy, and strength. Let her suck it out of you. If you’re truly that man you’ll be so full of abundance it will feel like a drop of water missing in the ocean. Or alternatively, it will feel like she blew your so hard and passionately that when you cum you still have enough in reserves for her to suck on you all over again, and again. That’s power.

She will suck that out of you faster than you’ve ever seen. That’s why we talk here so much about abundance. You have to hold more than just for yourself so that the container can be filled with what she sucks out of you.

The more often you have abundance for her to suck down her little throat, the more often she will know it’s available to be an escape to. She’s seeking escape from her depression. Give her the best you’ve got, and she’ll come back to you time and time again.

Final Thoughts:

This is how I’ve moved my wife from clinically depressed with a severe anxiety disorder to a place of peace – or as peaceful as her physical mind will allow her to be. She still has manic moments, but they are quickly resolved by an abundant frame if I have it available. And now she immediately gets into bed every night and the first that she does is grab my cock because... it’s safe. It’s an escape. She doesn’t want to lose this safe place that she can come to anytime, without judgement. In turn, she feels that power of the oak and is undeniably attracted to it.

But, you have to like your wife. Yes, you love her. But you really have to like her to want to go through this journey with her. You have to want to be the best version of you ever.

Strength, motherfuckers.

_Edit:

Looks like there needs to be some clarification for the noobs that come here since you all tend to take anything written as Gospel:

1. You’re not a doctor. Make sure she has one. No one is suggesting you encourage a person on meds to treat depression or anxiety to completely go cold turkey on them. I did that, it was a huge mistake. My wife very well could have had a psychotic break - but I was lucky. Don’t do that. Guided tapering by a qualified medical professional is essential here.

2. The idea behind tapering meds is that once YOU HAVE AN ABUNDANT FRAME it will allow you to re-baseline the relationship and your/her behavior. You may be able to uncover covert contracts in this way. My wife may need to re-balance with medication in the future, but it will come from a different and more powerful frame.

3. You need to calibrate to your own personal situation. Don’t go Rambo. This shouldn’t read like a “how-to”.

4. I agree that some (note: minor %) people could be inherently bad picks and have serious issues. I agree that exists. The difference is from which frame you hold with them. If you can do all the hard work you should be able to make a very, very easy decision as to whether or not they are irredeemable. But until you do that, you’re DEERing and operating from a weak frame making weak assumptions and weak decisions.

Strength, motherfuckers.
"I hate you!" my wife said, hiding a crooked smile behind her hands. I had just pulled another one of my signature pranks: the forgotten child. I picked up the kids from day care and sent them to play in the yard. She gets home a few minutes later and asks where they are. What? I thought you were getting them today! Hysteria ensues.

It's easier to have fun with a wife who's extremely gullible. Mine has learned most of my tricks, which only forces me to amp up my acting skills and power of persuasion. It's actually good practice for life skills that help elsewhere anyway. After all, being able to maintain a normal face through an emotionally charged situation is foundational to your frame - only this time you're employing frame on the other end of the emotional spectrum.

Something is Better Than Nothing

Women can't resist a man who can make her feel something. It seriously does not matter if it is deep hatred or abounding joy. Emotions are confusing. There's an old saying that you cannot hate something that you don't first truly love. The idea is that you have to be emotionally invested before you can hate. The same concept applies to anger, jealousy, fear, and a host of other negative emotions.

For women, any emotion is better than no emotion at all. It's like a drug to them. It doesn't matter if it's designer weed and high-end pharmaceuticals or some hash a guy grew in his back yard. One end of the spectrum is preferred, but it's all good, regardless.

What a man must really avoid in his relationships with women is indifference. When a woman stops caring about him enough to be either elated or enraged at him, he has lost her attraction.

Push-Pull

Women want to know that their man cares about them. "Does he really love me?" she subconsciously asks herself countless times a day. Unlike men, she doesn't look to objective measures to answer that question. She looks to her own feelings. A woman's perception of the extent of a man's love for her is not defined by the man's behaviors toward her; it's defined by her emotional state. A guy could wrestle a bear to save her, buy her a mansion, or take her on an elaborate cruise - and if her emotions aren't into it she just assumes he doesn't love her. "He must have some other agenda - like getting sex from me," she thinks. That's another of many reasons why it's so important that she live within your frame. That's when your point of origin defines her emotional state.
How do you get her emotionally charged? The push-pull technique is a great one. This is really the broader category behind the art of teasing. The idea is that you want to create an emotionally charged environment by precluding a sense of normalcy and complacency.

- If you push her away all the time, the angst normalizes and just becomes a way of life. It stops helping.

- In the reverse, if you're pulling her toward you all the time, showering her with wonderful gifts, passionate poems, and all the time and attention she could ever want, these wonderful things normalize and stop holding any value. Rather than it being an emotionally charged treat, she just expects it.

That's one of many reasons why the blue pill "nice guy" strategy doesn't work. By creating a destabilized emotional environment, where the dynamic is always changing, a man's bride is kept on her toes, never knowing what to expect. If the fluctuating dynamic is maintained appropriately, her anticipation will be a longing for what he has to offer rather than a fear of what he might withhold.

TYPES OF TEASING

Teasing can be employed in different ways to effectuate a push or a pull. The story I opened with is only one of three main types of teasing. Can you guess which one?

Passionate: The most positive and enticing form of teasing is to unveil a restrained passion - enough to show the person all that's in store, but not enough to satisfy their fill. This is why lingerie is so freaking attractive to most men. Why would adding clothes to raw, naked flesh make a woman more appealing? Because ripping them off is gratifying. Because a little taste leads to a larger hunger. The very existence of lingerie is a form of passionate teasing.

- Look: Men can wear forms of lingerie too, but it's rarely quite the same. A better bet is to buy some form-fitting clothes and let your shape shine through. But women aren't nearly as visual as men.

- Touch: A better bet is to get her feeling the trickle before the flood. Ever notice how much she loves it when you sneak up behind her and hold her in your arms, kissing the back side of her neck and breathing lightly in her ear? Kino is powerful. It gives her a small taste of the full entree.

- Talk: The pen is mightier than the sword. A man's words are more powerful than his sword. You could certainly send her a dick pick or grind your crotch on her, but few things will rev her up more than taunting her with thoughts of what you're going to do to her. Women love to fantasize. That's why romance novels are consistently one of the top selling genres. Get her fantasizing about you before you even start.

Playful: This is when a man just has fun with his wife. He's not necessarily foreshadowing his momentarily veiled desire. He's enjoying life at her expense. The effect it has, though, is to bring her out of a state of emotional neutrality toward him. It's not enough that she is emotional at all - she must be emotional about him.

My wife has 4 months out of the year where she works 80+ hours a week. That's major stress. She occasionally comes home in tears (though it's far rarer since I have learned to be her oak). She is emotionally invested in her job. The more invested she gets in her job, the less invested she is in me. This isn't always a bad thing, as there is value in her being invested in her career. But it does preclude me from being able to lead her through the emotional whirlwind that she experiences during these busy seasons. How do I break through? I get her emotionally invested in me again. Rather than her employer's frame, she needs to come back to mine.

Engaging in passionate teasing doesn't work when she doesn't have enough time to be interested. She might want it, but she'll still intentionally avoid it, as work is the higher priority in the moment. So, if I want her emotionally invested in me again during these times instead of her work, I can't use temptation toward sex. Instead, I play with her. I get her riled up over something - or even better: over nothing. I play pranks, make silly jokes, or prey on her gullibility. Sometimes she laughs (pull) and other times she becomes frustrated (push) - but in either case, she's feeling something toward me again. Once I have her emotionally invested I can steer that emotional investment whichever way I want to lead her - whether into happiness, comfort, joy, or lust.

Piercing: The third form of teasing is that biting form of word-play that's thinly veiled by a light-hearted attitude, usually coupled with AA. For example, my wife once complained about one of her male coworkers being a total douchebag. She went on for about 20 minutes with her story about how frustrating he was being. She was emotionally invested in him. I called her out on it: Aw, I think you like him. "No, it's not like that," she insisted. You want to screw him, don't you?" Yuck! No." You think such dirty things, and you won't even admit it. She punched me in the arm, saying with a smile, "You're so mean!"

My wife has a "good girl, holier than thou" image of herself a lot of the time. Accusing her of being anything less is a blow to her ego. The fact is: she is less. Nobody's perfect. Rather than getting wrapped up in her emotions about this guy, I redirected her emotions to be toward me. I was a little mean ... but also a little playful. She liked it. She'd rather be mad at me than him. At least she trusted me. If I could get her to care about me, she'd stop caring about him. Problem solved - and to my great advantage, as the power play was quite arousing.

You have to be careful here because too harsh a word can leave the realm of teasing and become outright cruel. While that can still get her emotionally invested in you, it's a more difficult emotional investment to steer in a more arousing direction. Of course, once again, any emotion is better than no emotion. There may be times when a straight-up neg is appropriate, though the motivation behind it matters greatly.

Adapted from a post created for r/RPChristians.
"Look in the mirror. Would YOU worship you?"

A little over year ago, I posted a begging, whining, plea for help on the askMRP forum.

"You weak shit. Help yourself. Read the sidebar."

The scales were pulled from my eyes and I saw a glorious and terrifying truth.

As far as I had managed to go, I was still just treading water, bragging about nothing, while my family was slipping through my weak fingers, and she was not on my side.

My BMI was 32.9, 61 pounds over the healthy 24 range. I had no regular exercise routine. I was between jobs. I was DEERing, engaging on shit tests, acting entitled and being bitchy when shut down. The word divorce was entering our arguments. I am completely shocked that I didn't get to "I love you but I'm not in love with you." THAT is a tribute to HER commitment, and has NOTHING to do with what I was.

July 9 2016, MRP helped me to light a fire under my own ass that pushed me to become what I was always meant to be--an insignificant speck, who decides, fuck it, I'm going to do awesome things.

I started lifting and running regularly. I had never lifted weights in my life. I networked hard and managed to land a new, better paying job that rewards hard work and dedication. I read the sidebar and listened to BPP’s podcasts. He, Athol Kay, and RooshV have become my philosophical buddies.

Six months into my map, all hell broke loose. Can't say too much without revealing personal details, but the take home you should all be getting is that following this formula teaches you that it really doesn't matter WHAT happens. All that matters is how you hold to your frame.

What I have learned is that OI is an absolute must. You start TRP path thinking, "I'm going to save my marriage" and you quickly come to the conclusion that there is nothing to save. You have fucking ruined it already. She hates your guts and merely tolerates your bullshit, and even THAT doesn't matter.

All that matters is that YOUMOVE.FORWARD and do what YOU think is best for YOU. This is the essence of what has become my frame. All of my game, all of my work, all of my self improvement are focused on me becoming my best self, independent of her response to it. And here is where my mind got blown, gentlemen:

Not giving a shit whether your marriage survives is the only way to ensure that it can.

You have to let go entirely of the notion that your marriage is something YOU can fix. You can only fix YOU. The rest is up to the universe. But if you are fit, strong, active, and productive, the universe is a lot less scary.

It's not about being a stronger honey-do-man. Doing shit around the house is ONLY a means to display your manly attractiveness to ANYONE who might see it--it's about being the best YOU, not about saying "hey look over here, am I good enough for you now?" If you ask her whether you are good enough, in word or deed, the answer will ALWAYS be no. Men don’t ASK. Men DO.

I have had to drill down HARD on my covert contract and come out the other side. That showy, “aren't I great” shit was STILL a weak ass begging for approval.

Do yourself a huge favor—right now. Stop thinking you deserve anything at all from her. She will never appreciate you in the way that you think she should. That appreciation is a fantasy inside your head. So turn it on yourself, and do all of your own appreciation. Then you don’t need anyone else to do it for you—but be WORTHY of that appreciation.

I had to find the place in myself where I said, IDGAF about what ANYONE thinks. I am my own judge for all things. I had to turn everything on its head and start saying, "This is awesome," and be completely disengaged on anyone else's opinion of my judgment.

I do things around the house now because I want the fucking kitchen clean, and it looks best when I do it. I fold laundry because I like the way it looks when it's put away neatly. I am completely indifferent to her comments on the matter.

A year later, I am STILL walking this path, and it is STILL uphill, and there are always new ways to flesh out my frame, improve my game, and become a better MAN.

So far, here’s what I’ve done:

- track her cycle. Track her cycle. TRACK HER CYCLE. Get the Clue app and pay attention to the bathroom garbage can for when the girl products go in there every month. This is imperative if she isn’t on the pill.

- Stop engaging on shit tests. Say as few words as possible. Entertain only respectful, positive talk. The second it becomes a “DISCUSSION” disengage and find another thing to occupy your time. Under no circumstances do I allow myself to NEED her conversation for validation. I got pulled into an argument once where “we need to talk more about this” was her vent. I looked at her with disdain and said, “the shit I’m about right now is shit you DO and if you talk about it you aren’t fucking doing it.” And I walked out of the room. That ended up with some awesome sex.

- own your finances and own your life. Include her as a bonus, but not for “earning points”.

- plan EVERY couples moment. Wipe the words “I dunno what do you wanna do?” from your vocabulary. Always have a preference or an opinion about things. Never appear to have no idea. Sometimes, she says, “why don’t we go do...?” I have learned to respond with some form of, this seems like an interesting idea, or, I will entertain this plan. SOMETHING that lets her know that her suggestion is pending my approval. The rest of the time, it’s something like this: “I’m taking you to lunch.” “where are we going?” “I’ll pick you up at noon.” -radio silence. -run game, ask for sex when you want it. WORK HARD not to appear pissed if you don’t get it. Being good looking and passing shit tests = sex.

-Exercise and eat right. I am starting to look really fucking good. My abs are showing, and I am toned. I have some residual gut under my navel that I’m trying to fast off, but that is OLD FAT from when I was a teenager. I ran a half marathon in less than 2 hours. Like I said, I never lifted in my life, and I am up to a 75% body weight one rep max on bench (I usually do 3x 10,12,15 on just over 50% body weight for bench). I usually eat one meal a day because my work isn’t active. I started out at total vag and moved slightly north of vag six months in. Now I am working on achieving beast mode.

-start hanging out with dudes more. This helps to compare notes on frame, and also allows you to relax. It’s odd, I used to always feel self-conscious around dudes. Now I don’t feel self conscious around anyone.

I’ve bored you to death long enough. I wrote this to help and encourage the brotherhood. This shit works. I’m still married, but the amazing thing is that I stopped caring whether the marriage survived a while back. I work and perform, to maintain a home that is safe and comfortable for her and our children. Then I invite her to stick around. She knows where the door is. Men never beg. Being right requires might. When you become a “selfish asshole” who stops seeking external approval, that is when you will finally start getting it.
How to fuck your wife's friends.
by weakandsensitive | February 7, 2020 | Link

We've had a couple of guys post on this topic -- asking how to make a move on your wife's friends.

It's really EASY!

Don't.

I can't believe I even have to write this. If you have to ask for advice on how to do it, do you really think you're getting good vibes on the situation? And if you get it wrong, do you realize how badly you've just fucked yourself strategically?

If they want to fuck you, they will make a move on you. And it won't be something like "hey... let's organize a kid's play date."

If you're regularly fucking other women on the side, and you can actually read a vibe and communicate intent non-verbally, this doesn't apply to you.

If you're already fucking your wife's friends, obviously this advice doesn't apply to you either.

This advice is for these types of retards.
My wife and I were out for dinner last night. It was nice. Great meal, nice wine and terrific conversation. One of those dinners that serves as a reminder of why I married her.

Driving home

"I think you were flirting with our waitress"

"Was I?"

"Yes, you were certainly flirting with our waitress" remained quiet, smirking to myself and actually trying to remember whether I was or wasn't

"I want you to admit you were flirting with her"

"ok"

"Ok you'll admit it or ok you were flirting with her"

"Which would you prefer?", smirking

"You're not taking this very seriously"

Put my hand on her knee, kiss her on the cheek

"no, I'm not" a bit of silence. And then she breaks the silence:

"I read on reddit today the National Park may get transferred to State ownership making them a target for sale in the private sector, isn't that awful?"

And a nice conversation about Parks ownership commenced.

The bonus: We're getting out of the car and the Uber driver, after she has gotten out, looks at me and just said, "nicely done brother, nicely done"

So, here's something: 2 years ago, I would have denied flirting. The ride would have been sour and the memory of the evening somewhat spoiled.

The only thing WORSE than 2 years ago was the 18 or so months after discovering MRP and trying to manage these situations. Seeking out clever (what I thought were clever) retorts to these tests. Lots of words, both of us somewhat confused as to what the fuck I was doing.
Those were shit times. My guess is a lot of you (and sometimes me still) are in that.

Last night served as a reminder that doing the right things, coming here and reading (sometimes posting) is a great exercise. Serves to reinforce what works as we've learned from guys that keep it tight.
Just a quick thought for everyone today.

On Christmas Eve, I had this vision, this desire, after the kids had gone to bed, to sit by the tree, watch the lights, sip a bourbon and listen to Handel's Messiah. I pictured doing this with my wife. She was tired after a long day of making food, getting kids ready for church and helping me prepare the tree with gifts. I asked if she wanted to join me. She preferred to watch the rest of The Christmas Story and go to bed. I didn't push. I said "ok," and went into the living room to do just what I had planned. And you know what? I enjoyed the solitude, the time with myself and the calm evening. I had a good time all by myself.

Women can add value to our lives but should never be the focus or integral to our happiness. It may sound harsh and cold to newbies... but you don't need her. You can desire her, but you don't need her.

You don't even "need" your kids. You love and value them, but you don't need them or her. Yes, I would be devastated if something happened to my kids, but at the end of the day, I am still who I am when I stand alone. You don't need your wife. What you do need is to be comfortable in your own skin, by yourself...

Alone.

As men we are designed, biologically, to be self sufficient. To survive on our own. A woman can enhance your life-- but she doesn't define you. If you find yourself in a place where she is defining your existence and your happiness and purpose... you're wrong and you will be disappointed.

Women can add value to our lives but should never be the focus or integral to our happiness.

Be ok with solitude and your thoughts.

Be better.

Be enough.

Merry Christmas, men.
If you’ve previously read my posts about Depressive and Anxious Wives (Part 1 & Part 2), this is a journey to continue that topic. I would suggest that you read both posts before continuing with this one. As usual, keep this in my mind: It’s all your fault.

Part 1: Depressive and Anxious Wives: How it’s all your fault

Part 2: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Transformation and Building Escape

In this post I’ll continue to build a frame of two elements – extreme ownership and masculinity. By this time in your journey you’ve likely seen the real message I am trying to convey with all these posts: You are the leader and creator of your relationship, everything good and bad is within your control, even if it’s not with your wife.

A little about me: I began this journey blue-pilled like everyone else here. I had little sex. My wife did not respect me. I failed shit tests constantly. I was angry at something... and wasn’t quite sure where to place that anger. That anger was misplaced. It should have been burning within me, rather than setting the forest on fire around me. Your job is to take that fire within you and transform it into ownership and direction through leadership.

As I grew I began to figure out how dread worked within my relationship and used it as needed. For my wife, she responded hysterically to even the most covert dread. It was a fucking whirlwind with even the slightest 2 hour trip to work from a coffee shop. The least amount of dread sent her into a needless tailspin, but always resulted in great quality sex. After many months of doing this, I knew that dread was not the answer. It produced results, but not the results that I was looking for. Rather than produce desire because of this dread, it produced sexual anxiety. She was fucking to stay alive. This was a cycle that would eventually drive my wife to the brink of insanity.

My ideal relationship was one filled with genuine desire... to where I could just give her a smirk and wink and watch her come to me. Or, I could deliver a set of eyes that said “I am disappointed” and she would feelz the masculine power behind those eyes. I began to imagine a life where this was possible, but knew that any motivation from dread was not the way to achieve that. Rather, I would use dread to inspire desire.

Somewhere along the journey you’ll discover that your wife is replaceable. Sure, it wouldn’t be ideal to leave your wife – but you would be alright. You’re a man and by this point you’ve realized that you can rebuild if needed. No big deal. You have the drive and determination to get what you want out of life, and use dread on your wife to help her move along. It wasn’t until the discovery of the “replacement” mantra that I was able to shift from dread to desire.

Somehow, you need to instill in your wife that dread = disappointment. You’re a man with limited resources and your most valuable resource is your time. If you’re spending that time with a woman who doesn’t express gratitude, like most men here, then you likely feel dread isn’t working for you. It produces sex when done well, but it’s not the type of sex that you want. Then... through true OI you figure out that STFU doesn’t work anymore, and it’s time to express your emotions in a masculine way rather than let them sit and eat you alive.

When my wife finally came to me experiencing enough covert dread to last a lifetime for her anxious mind, I took just a few moments to develop a narrative that explained why I was not interested in spending time with her (dread): As a man, I have amazing gifts to give this world. These things that I give come with no strings attached. Of all of these - my time is the most valuable. I choose to spend that time where it is most rewarding and cherished for those that receive it. You do not have gratitude for this. That is why you are no longer receiving my gifts.

After delivering a narrative similar to this one (in your own words), there was a dynamic shift in which her hamster will become aware of exactly what dread is: It’s how a high value man spends his time and resources, and she’s well aware that he enjoys spending time with a woman that wants to fuck from her own desire. She becomes aware that with your reluctance to give her that time, she needs to step up to earn that time.

This is where dread is converted into desire.

From this point forward, you are able to give your gift of time where it is best deserved to those that are most gracious for it. Cunty wife for the day? “I’m leaving for the afternoon, babe. Your attitude is not working for me right now.” And.... Leave. Go do something you desire to do. Take the kids if you want to. But the biggest mistake you can make in this scenario is to say nothing. You’re upset that she is being a bitch. Express your emotions like a man: “Your attitude is not working for me right now.”

I will warn you – if you’re trying to make statements such as this and truthfully don’t believe them, it will not work. Your wife knows you better than anyone. She sees every crack and fissure in your frame whether you see it or not. That is her job - to find those cracks, try to exploit them, and then turn those cracks in your frame against you as a test. It’s in her nature. You should be thankful for it. It is one of the many tools that gives you clarity (if you can read through those tests) in your leadership and direction.

When you make statements like this at first, you will be fearful. It’s natural. If you practice mindfulness or meditation (10-20 minutes per day is recommended) you will have learned how to center yourself quickly. Learn how to get to that space quickly in front of you wife. For me, I inhale deeply into the belly first, then continue to breathe in as it fills my sternum, then lungs, and finally my outer chest. As I begin to speak I imagine the air in my lungs being pushed into my belly as I exhale - and then I speak from my core.

There is nothing more attractive when it comes to words than a man who can say with extreme ownership and conviction: This is not working for me. Or, maybe it is working for you. Both feelings are owned by you. Express them from your core.

It is my belief that if you are able to truly own that fire inside of you - which are your emotions and reactions, fuel that with the powerful gasoline that is clear and direct.
masculinity – and be willing to share that burning fire with those that cherish it, you will have converted how your time is spent using dread into something much more:

Your time is valuable, and it is desirable by many. You choose how it’s spent. No one else. If you wife wishes to receive this gift from you, the only way she will receive it is through genuine desire for it.

For me, when I reached this point my wife was still full of ego. ASD and Madonna/Whore were very real. She would never acknowledge how great sex was, or how much she needed it.

You must find a way to appeal to that ego and point it out to her if she has it. I looked her in the eye after one of these episodes of trying to rewrite recent history - knowing she was using ego as a protection from being vulnerable - and said to her the most simplest of things: “You are a liar.” You know what? She was. She lied about her true desires and feelings and used ego to crush them. Sometimes this takes the forms of shit tests. Sometimes it’s comfort tests. But all tests are both a congruence test of your ability to cut through all the bullshit straight to the heart of the matter… and take action as a masculine man would. Sometimes, just sometimes, that takes words generated from the core of who you are as a man.

Your direction and leadership to cut through the bullshit is one of your greatest gifts. Give it, and give it freely to those that deserve it.

The next time you accidentally inspire dread (as it always should be – over dread is for retards), take a step back. Watch what she does. If she shit tests – call her out if you think it’s time. If it’s a comfort test – praise her and open her heart to the idea of being honest through your own masculine honesty of who you are.

Rise to the challenge of leading your woman to authenticity. Free her from the ego that she builds to protect her own mind. Set it free with your masculine energy and watch her femininity soar into your life with the burning desire to give herself to a man of high value. If you are, she will give herself through desire. Over, and over. To the ends of the earth.

Because you know what?

Through you direction, leadership, authenticity and great capacity to love.... There aren’t many men in this world like you anymore. You are the prize. You are the man who draws desire out of your woman.
How to Smell Amazing: A Man's Guide to Buying and Wearing Cologne

by rocknrollchuck | September 13, 2018 | Link

I have recently discovered that I have a real love for wearing cologne. Cologne is something that many people enjoy wearing, although obviously there are some who don’t care for it at all. But there are tons of choices out there today, and many of them are somewhat pricey. So I thought I would share what I’ve learned so far.

Unlike women, no one teaches men about fragrances. Mothers often take their daughters perfume shopping. It is rare for a father to do the same. The lack of knowledge and openness about fragrances pushes many men to choose between two bad options. First, play it safe and wear nothing. Second, wear something light and clean, so that you don't offend anyone.

Smell is the greatest memory trigger we, humans, have. Sniff the shirt you wore last night and memories of a great evening out floods your brain. Roll over to the other side of the bed and smell the pillow where your partner slept and you may catch yourself smiling. In short, fragrances capture memories. They do more than that, however. The cologne you wear communicates to those around you who you are.

I'm sure you've already heard tons of advice about cologne. The one I hear most often is that men should wear perfume that girls like. Sales associates often tell me to get this or that juice because it's a best seller or popular with the girls. There is, however, a tiny problem: it doesn't work. Here's why:

First, no guy has ever gotten a girl just because he smells good. A good scent might improve your chances, by say 10%, but that's about it.

Second, reeking of cologne that every other guy is wearing smells of desperation. Trying too hard repels any woman faster than you can spritz some more Armani Code on you.

The one piece of advice you need to forget right now is to buy perfume just because the someone else likes it. Here's the piece of advice you need to remember: the only person you wear perfume for is you. Your scent should say something about you. This is why you wear something you like, just for you.

“But Chuck, what if no one else like it on me”? When someone tells you they don't like your fragrance, they usually mean any of these three things:

1. They may not like a certain note in it. If someone doesn't like the smell of vanilla, they won't like any vanilla perfume, not just yours. It's not that it is a bad scent, it is just that they don't like that note. (I personally don’t care for vanilla in a cologne)

2. They may not like it on you. This is usually the case when your fragrance doesn't match any or all of the three: your style, age, or the occasion. If you are a hardened biker dude, wearing a light floral scent would make you the butt of countless jokes. It's not that the scent is bad, it just doesn't fit your cultivated image.

3. You put on too much of it. This is probably the main reason why people tell you they don't like your juice. Putting on a fragrance is like putting spices in your food. You want to put just enough to give it a nice flavor but not too much to overpower the dish.

Cologne is the same way: you want to put just enough to enhance your image, not to overtake it. You want people to notice you, not your cologne.

Now let’s talk about the terms used when discussing fragrances – knowing these can be very helpful for finding exactly what you want:

Notes

Simply put, a note is like an ingredient. Notes are divided into three categories or levels: top, middle (or heart) and base (or bottom) notes. The combination of all these notes together is known as the “accord.”

Top notes

Top notes are the first notes you smell when trying a fragrance, so they are the ones that shape your first impressions of a scent. These often fresh, fruity scents are usually light and burst on your skin as you spray, fading 10-15 minutes after applying. How many times have you tested a fragrance only to be turned off right away? Why? Because the top notes didn't make a lasting impression on you. It is hugely important that the top notes not only succeed at luring you in, but also smoothly transition into the heart of the fragrance.

Heart notes

The middle notes, or the heart notes, make an appearance once the top notes evaporate. The middle notes are considered the heart of the fragrance. These notes form the core of the fragrance. They last longer than the top notes and have a strong influence on the base notes to come. A perfume's heart is generally pleasant and well-rounded. It is often a smooth combination of floral or fruit tones; sometimes infused with spices like cinnamon, nutmeg or cardamom.

Popular heart notes include lavender, rosemary, black pepper, geranium, and juniper.

The base (or bottom) notes are the final fragrance notes that appear once the top notes are completely evaporated. It is these notes that you remember most and that help create a memory in your mind, the lasting impression. The base notes mingle with the heart notes to create the full body of the fragrance.
These often rich notes linger on the skin for hours after the top notes have dissipated, but are typically associated with the dry-down period - that final stage of wear, when the top and middle notes give way to the base note. The amount of time it takes to reach the dry-down—and how the dry-down will smell—is unique to every individual, which is why the same perfume might smell different on you than it does on others.

Next, let’s look at the different concentrations of fragrances available. Keep in mind that although I’m mostly writing about men’s fragrances, these descriptions apply to fragrances for the ladies as well.

Eau Fraiche - Usually contains about 1-3% essential oil, making it the lowest of all available fragrances. The term Eau Fraiche translates to fresh water. It doesn’t last as long on the skin but is still very popular, especially among those who cannot afford the often-prohibitive cost of true perfume.

Eau de Cologne (or just "Cologne") - EDC - 2-5% perfume oils. Top notes will be the most prominent, and the scents themselves will last only a few hours. These are usually the least expensive as well.

Important to note here that when we use the term “cologne,” this is often a generic term for men’s fragrances and does not necessarily refer to Eau de Cologne.

Eau de Toilette (EDT) – (pronounced "twɑˈlet") Toilette was the name given to the ensemble worn by the French aristocracy in the courts of the 18th century, which eventually came to mean the process of preparing oneself for polite company. Eau de Toilette was a key part of this, splashed on the body or clothes for a more pleasant aroma. These days it usually contains around 5-10% essential oils, and can be reapplied throughout the day.

Eau de Parfum (EDP) - 10-15% essential oils and can last five or more hours at a time on one application. Middle notes flourish here, as the scent has a greater longevity. Typically the strongest concentration you are likely to find at a conventional fragrance counter.

Perfume - the finest, most expensive and strongest formulation available, with 25-40% essential oil content. Perfume has a significant depth of scent, can last a full day on one application and allows the wearer to experience all three levels of fragrance. It should be applied sparingly and, in contrast to its high concentration, is intended to be a far more subtle aromatic experience.

Keep in mind that when we use the term "perfume," this is often a generic term for men's AND women’s fragrances and does not necessarily refer to pure Perfume.

A couple of other terms that are important are Sillage and Longevity.
Sillage (pronounced “see-yazh”), or projection, is a French term that describes the ability of a scent to be smelled at a distance; the bigger the distance, the stronger sillage is. It is the “trail” that the scent leaves, sometimes referred to as "the sense of a person being present in the room after he or she has left".

Longevity, on the other hand, refers to how long a fragrance lasts on your skin once applied. Important to note here that due to evaporation, alcohol content and a number of other factors, a fragrance will smell slightly different over time, and this is part of the longevity factor as well.

And the two don't necessarily correlate - sometimes we encounter fragrances with huge sillage but short longevity, and vice versa. Performance is an objective measure of sillage and longevity against the actual fragrance itself.

How Much is Too Much?

One of the biggest mistakes you can make when it comes to cologne is over-spraying. You know a guy, or worse you are the guy, who announces his presence with his cologne. He’s the guy whose cologne gets there ten minutes before he does, and EVERYONE knows when he’s arrived.

Even if your cologne smells great, you don't want everyone to smell it. It's tacky and shows ignorance about cologne, style and social manners in general. This can be tough because it is hard for you, as the wearer, to tell whether you've put on too much cologne.

Here's what you can do:

- Start with one spray and see for how long you can smell it on yourself. If you can barely detect it within 30 minutes, then you can allow yourself to put some more.

- Ideally, on the following day put on two sprays. If you can smell it comfortably (i.e. it doesn't make you choke or feel uncomfortable) within 30 minutes, then this may be the right amount to put on.

- Remember that you, as the wearer, can smell your cologne less than other people can. The reason is that you get used to it - your nose gets desensitized. This is why others can detect it at much smaller amounts.

- If, within half an hour of putting it on, you can smell your perfume by moving around without it overwhelming you, you've put on the right amount.
HOW NOT TO APPLY COLOGNE

Applying cologne is simple but people have made it complicated. Let's start with some of the more popular bad pieces of advice on how to apply cologne:

1. Walk Through the Mist

In theory, applying fragrance this way works. You spray your perfume in the air and you walk through the mist. The fragrance mist will stick to your body, clothes and hair distributed evenly. The only problem with this advice of applying fragrance is that it doesn't work. You end up wasting it.

2. The Aftershave Approach

You pour a small amount in your palm and you slap it on your cheeks and neck. For unknown reasons, someone decided that the most manly way to apply perfume is by slapping it on your face. Unlike walking through the mist, slapping cologne on your face and neck works but it has some adverse unintended consequences.

Since perfume is usually a lot stronger than any aftershave, your palm ends up reeking of your cologne. That on its own is not a bad thing... until you have to shake someone's hand. Having your hands smell of another guy's cologne, no matter how good it is, makes you wonder what else he has transferred over. Did he wash his hands when he went to the washroom? How many times has he washed his hands since he applied this cologne that his palm still smells?

3. Rub and Dab

The rub and dab is another approach to applying fragrance. You spray some perfume on one of your wrists, rub your two wrists together and then you rub your wrists on your neck or behind your ears. Rubbing your perfume "bruises" the fragrant molecules and the scent doesn't develop as it should. You end up destroying the Top notes and blunting the Middle notes somewhat as well.

THE RIGHT WAY TO PUT ON COLOGNE

It's really quite simple: spray directly on your skin and you are done. It's that simple but there is a trick to it. The tricky part applying cologne is not how you put it on but where you put it on. The human body has certain areas that are naturally warmer, called hot spots. These are usually places where you can feel your pulse (neck, wrists, the inside of your elbow, etc.). Since warmth helps fragrance develop better, it makes sense to apply your cologne on those areas.

Through experience I found out that if there is only one spot you want to put on cologne, it is your chest. When you spray there, some of the perfume rubs off on your undershirt and the smell ends up lasting longer. The chest area is also warm, which helps your cologne bloom more if you were to spray it on your forearm.

HOW TO FIND “YOUR SCENT”

If you’ve never really given this much thought, then a good place to start is the Fragrantica website. You can search by name, Notes, etc. If you know some fragrances you already like, you can enter each of them in the search bar, go to the page, and there will be a section on that page suggesting similar fragrances.

There’s also a page on Fragrantica called What fragrance do women love on guys? that has comments suggesting a ton of popular fragrances that women tend to like. There’s even a pie chart that one of the commenters posted that breaks down fragrances by “main notes that women appear to like.” This is based on his own personal experiences, so YMMV.

Not that you would be buying a fragrance to impress anybody, and you may not like any of the suggested ones in this list, but it’s a nice start.

There’s also the Fragrance Wheel, which is another breakdown by Notes to help you understand what kind of fragrance suits you best.

In addition, Fragrantica has their Fragrantica Awards Voting section, which shows the most popular selections based on votes by Fragrantica members. Some good ideas there.

Ultimately though, you’ll have to go and try some out and see what works on YOU. Everybody’s body chemistry is different, so that cologne that smells amazing on your friend may smell funky on you. So go to a Perfume Store, or a Fragrance Counter at your local department store like Macy’s. If you know what kind of scent you’re looking for, give them the info you have so they can help you find something that fits you. If you haven’t done your research and just want to get your feet wet, ask them for some suggestions. They will spray different colognes on slips of paper for you to smell. Make sure you don’t touch the paper with your nose, otherwise it will color the rest of the samples you smell. Also, any good perfume counter will have a small jar of coffee beans available – you smell these in between each sample, and it “clears and refreshes” your nose to separate the scents. Otherwise, they all start to blend together after a while.

IMPORTANT - Once you have settled on a fragrance you like, ask them to spray it on you. Give it ten or fifteen minutes, walk around, and really get an idea of what it smells like on you. Then ask for a sample and try it out for a couple days before committing to a purchase. Not a big deal if you’re buying something relatively inexpensive, but when you’re buying a bottle that’s on the pricey end, you want to make sure you don’t change your mind on how much you like it after you’ve worn it for a couple days (ask me how I know). Then go back and get a bottle if it passes the test for you.

I’ve been doing this for about 3 years now, and I’ve got about 10 different fragrances, ranging from inexpensive to fairly pricey, that I wear pretty much every day.
I almost never leave the house without applying some, because I like to smell good. Unless I’m going to the gym - don’t be that guy.

Bonus: If you want to try out some high-priced colognes, then head on over to the Frag Splits Reddit page. There you will find people who have made a hobby out of taking an expensive bottle of top end cologne (usually in the $300-500 range) and splitting it up into small bottles that you can buy for $20-50, including shipping. A great option to be able to try some fragrances that would be out of many people's price range!

Edit

Things I've discovered since the original post: there are scents for men, scents for women, and there are also Unisex scents. Some of the unisex ones are quite nice, but most lean to the feminine side. I found out the hard way that I don't really care for unisex scents much (except for Creed Millésime Impérial), they smell like something a girl would wear. So I gave those to my wife. She especially likes the Tom Ford Ombre de Hyacinth, of which I won a 5 ml decant in a giveaway on Reddit.

At least I bought decants instead of full bottles - that's why I do it this way. So I learned something, and I'm still learning. I have at least 20 or 30 more scents that I want to try. I have found that almost everything by Creed I've tried is awesome so far. Tom Ford's scents for men are pretty great too, but most of the unisex ones are not for me. And Azzaro makes some of my favorite scents as well.

Also, if you're buying online, especially Ebay, watch out for fakes. Here's a great article on BaseNotes that gives tips on how to spot fakes when shopping online. Not as big an issue if you're buying relatively inexpensive stuff, but when you're paying $300-$500 a bottle for the good stuff, make sure you're getting the real deal.

Here’s some of my personal favorites:

- Terre d’Hermes EDP - Citrus, woody, spicy.

- David Beckham's Instinct EDT - very inexpensive, amazing scent, smells like nothing else out there. Citrus, aromatic, woody, warm spicy.

- Acqua di Gio by Armani EDT - a light, summery scent (wearing it right now). Citrus, aromatic, marine, fresh spicy.

- Azzaro - Wanted By Night EDP - Elegant, bold, classy. Just got this one, it’s very strong. Woody, aromatic, fresh spicy, citrus, warm spicy. Lasts all day, 16 hours or more.

Edit - so after getting a nice selection of decants since I posted this, here's an update with an additional list of what I like and don't like:

-----I LIKE THESE-----

Creed Bois du Portugal EDP - sweet, very fresh & pungent spice, reminds me of Christmas spice. Supposedly this was Frank Sinatra's signature scent.

Just bought a full bottle of this, it's become my new signature scent.

Tom Ford for men EDP - smooth, clean, masculine - this would be a good "interview" cologne

Creed Aventus EDP - fresh, sweet, fruity but disappears to my nose after 15 min

Creed Green Irish Tweed EDP - my wife's favorite - smells like lemon and fresh cut grass

Azzaro Chrome EDT - my wife loves this one too, it's bold, heady, warm, sweet - performance is awesome - 12-14 hrs on me. This is my favorite summer scent.

Mont Blanc Legend for men EDT - dark, warm, boozy, rum, spicy, sweet classic barbershop scent.

Dior Homme Intense EDP - powdery, sweet, vanilla, fresh baby powder-type scent. My wife loves this one too, but I read that it's recently been reformulated and doesn't last like it used to.

Tom Ford Italian Cypress EDP - sweet, minty, sharp, citrusy, unique; dries down to a spicy cinnamon-type scent - I've smelled nothing like this before. This one is discontinued, but you can still find it online. It has recently been re-released at an insane price.

Creed Tabarome EDP - warm, cozy, comforting, gentlemanly scent - just wore this today for the first time, it smells very "familiar" but can't quite put my finger on why. Very classy scent.

I bought a full bottle of this.

Creed Millésime Impérial EDP - warm, cozy, gentlemanly scent as well. Classy.

I bought a full bottle of this too.

Creed Himalaya EDP - love this one, it smells like a winter version of Green Irish Tweed.

My wife bought me a full bottle of this for Christmas, she loves it.

Maison Margiela Replica By the Fireplace EDT - got a 25 ml decant of this, it's fantastic.
Starts out smelling like roasting marshmallows over a campfire. After a couple of hours the smoky campfire smell fades and it smells like roasted marshmallows. This stuff lasts for days on my clothes too.

I will probably buy a full bottle of this at some point.

Gucci Envy for Men EDT - this one is discontinued, but you can still find it on Ebay. Recommended to me by my best friend. Awesome peppery, gingery scent. The closest comparison I can make is it smells somewhat similar to the original Tom Ford for Men.

Amouage Jubilation XXV for Men EDP - smells like incense. I like it, bought a full bottle.

Mugler Alien Man EDT - has a 90's feel to it, but it's different than anything else I have. I got a sample of this, not sure if I want a full bottle. Lasts over 12 hours on me though.

Mugler A*Men Pure Tonka EDT - This one is the sweetest one I've smelled yet. I like it - it reminds me of vanilla-flavored coffee. My wife sarcastically remarked that I smell like Starbucks, so I won't be buying a full bottle.

Lalique Encre Noire A L'Extreme EDP - love this, it smells very different from anything else. Earthy, rich, dark. Better and more potent than the original Encre Noire, but my wife doesn't care for it.

-----I DIDN'T LIKE THESE-----

Viktor & Rolf Spicebomb EDT

Viktor & Rolf Spicebomb Extreme EDP - I actually had to wash this one off, it was so strong I could taste it.

Prada l'Homme EDT

Jean Paul Gaultier le Male EDT - smells like Spicebomb to me

David Beckham Intense Instinct EDT

Yves Saint Laurent La Nuit de L'Homme EDT - smells somewhat similar to l'Homme. Longevity sucks on the current formulation, I got 3 hours and it was gone. Buy vintage (pre-2013) if you want this one.

Eau Sauvage Parfum EDP - similar to Spicebomb, more smooth less intense, nice drydown. Of my "didn't like's", this one was right on the cusp. But there's too many others I really like.

Yves Saint Laurent L'Homme EDT - current formulation sucks, get 2016 or older if you want longevity (mine lasted 16 hours on me).

Hermes Un Jardin Sur Le Nil EDT - sour lime citrus. It's on the feminine side, and the longevity sucks.

Guerlain L'Homme Ideal Cologne EDT - starts out somewhat similar to Azzaro Chrome, nice, sweet; dries down 30 minutes later to a soft, warm ordinary baby-powder scent. Decent, but not worth buying a full bottle.

Creed Royal Oud EDP - meh, on me this smells exactly like the incense they use in Catholic Church.

Creed Original Santal EDP - this one was okay, but nothing special, kinda boring.

Mugler A*Men Pure Malt EDT - meh, has a "whiskey" smell to it, and doesn't last very long.
A note for the Latter-Day Saints, Mormons, and frankly anyone from a traditional Christian background...

A big thank you to u/becoming_alpha for proofreading and fixing this giant wall off text.

We've noticed a ton of Latter-Day Saint posters come through here and thought this might help you get started. You may wonder if this is for you. Read this long post before you decide.

Why You Are Here

You’re a Latter-day Saint. A member of the Church of Jesus Christ. And you’ve got marriage problems. You feel like you were bait and switched, sold a bill of goods. You probably found this place Googling something like “why won’t my wife have sex with me” or “why doesn’t my wife desire me” or “how can I get my wife to desire sex with me.”

Or maybe you were sent here by a well-meaning friend. You’ve taken a vow of chastity. That is that you will not have sex with any woman other than your wife.

What do you do when she won’t have sex with you as often as you want, as passionately, or even at all?

You feel stuck. You’ve covenanted to be sexual with her and only her, but she doesn’t want to be sexual with you. You feel like you’re a roommate that she’ll occasionally have sex with to keep you around.

This Isn’t What I Signed Up For

Why do God and the Church command you to remain faithful but very little is said about her responsibilities? Doesn’t she have a duty to you just as much as you have a duty to her?

You were told during your entire time in the Church that sex within the bounds of marriage is good, beautiful and holy. But you can see it’s just a chore for her. Perhaps as a youth you were told that if you could just hold out until marriage that this wonderful world would be open to you with your beautiful bride and you would be free to explore and do whatever you want with her forever. Maybe it started that way.

Why now will she not have sex with you now?

After all, you’re “Peter Priesthood”. You Protect, Provide, and Preside. You do all the stuff in the Family Proclamation... but she seems less and less interested in you.

You do what’s right. You follow the Commandments most of the time. You go to church on Sundays. You magnify your calling. You dutifully go to your job to make money to provide for your family. Maybe you figured out that whole protect thing (chances are you have, most US based male Saints are gun owners). But do you really preside? (I’ll get to that later)
Duty Sex - Lack of Desire

Your wife doesn’t seem to be attracted to you like she was when you were dating and couldn’t wait to have sex. Maybe you made it to the finish line before going all the way, maybe you didn’t but the Honeymoon is officially over. She has dutiful boring sex with you once every while.

She complains that she “needs to feel more loved to have sex” or that “she’s just not very sexual.” You notice that she just wants to get it over as quickly as possible. It feels like she’s just checking another item off her list. You can tell she has no desire for you. Do you really want sex if it’s just a duty?

You may think that something is better than nothing here, and you’re trying to be grateful for any little affection she shows you.

Blaming, Bargaining, and Guilt

You secretly blame the kids you have had with her, they came along and took her tight body, her hormones, her time and attention, her unconditional love she was supposed to have for you forever, and now she is just tired. You love the kids, but that doesn’t make it any easier.

You secretly blame the Church for sexually repressing her desire. Maybe she feels visibly guilty after sex and dries up even more. Your clumsy attempts to “spice things up” only making things worse?

You see she’s busy, so you get the idea that if you do more around the house she’ll have more time and energy for you, and you’ll get the intimacy you need. You’re doing extra chores around the house trying to take the load off her after a long day of watching the kids.

You’re disappointed when she would rather sit in bed and scroll through Facebook than be with you. You’re frustrated that she didn’t even notice all you did to help her, and you’re bitter she doesn’t give you the attention you give her. After all, she knows what you want. How can she not?

You’re still frustrated and feel guilty when you’re having sexual thoughts about other women. If your wife would just have sex with you, that struggle would be a lot easier. You’ve talked or tried to talk to her about your needs and desires. You do your best to negotiate something that works for her. Maybe she said she understood and would try, and maybe you had better sex for a week or two. But then you’re back to duty sex.

There is an extra layer of guilt layered on here as Saints. Let’s be brutal and say that sometimes the frustration and rejection is just too much, and maybe you look at a little bit of porn, take care of yourself, and then feel guilty about it for weeks. You know it’s not right, but if she’d just have sex, or really if she would just desire you, you wouldn’t turn to porn or other fantasies.

You might find yourself reflecting on what attracts you to pornography and realize that yes, it’s the sex and the beautiful women but it’s also the desire. It’s that validation feeling of a man being enthusiastically desired by a woman. It doesn’t matter that she’s on the other side of a screen, she has desire and it’s aimed at you. Whether she’s just acting or not, it’s way more than your wife does.

Maybe you even repeatedly go to your bishop and wonder why you can’t break the addiction. Why does porn keep pulling you back?

Does the cycle sound familiar?

You really aren’t allowed any vices. Except food. So you’ve put on a few or a bunch of pounds of fat after a few years of this. Who cares anyway? Who do you need to attract? You got married already and she’s not sleeping with you anyway.

Lack of Respect

Furthermore, she doesn’t respect you. She tells you what to do and because “no authority should be exercised by virtue of the priesthood” you do your best to downplay that whole patriarchal bit.

You don’t want to exercise unrighteous dominion, so you back off and defer to her opinions on just about everything. You want her to be happy so you put her on a pedestal and do everything you can to make her happy, all the while secretly hoping that if you make her happy, she’ll make you happy (sexually).

You walk on eggshells around her because if you make her upset you’ll feel guilty and you for sure won’t get any sex. She plans all the activities, spends 99% of the money and dictates your schedule around the kids’ activities.

So you find yourself feeling like a bank account for your family. Your wife and children don’t respect you and the sacrifices you make. You are a comic relief sitcom dad. They don’t respect what you do in your church service, your job or in your life.

You stop hanging out with most of your friends. You don’t really have any hobbies aside from the odd game of golf that your wife lets you play. You always get permission from her to take time away from home to do things you want. You’re lonely. You find yourself headed to 40 years old, (maybe 40 is in the rearview mirror) you are depressed and wondering: Is this God’s plan for me?

I’m here to tell you that it’s not.

Rewarded for Being a Nice Guy

Perhaps you grew up in the Church. Maybe you’re a convert. That really doesn’t matter. In any case you’ve been told that if you do the right things and live the right way that you’ll be blessed for your efforts. If you’re nice enough, and serve enough, and endure to the end, you’ll get your reward. And the reward is awesome. You get your wife and family in this life, then you get to be exalted, become like God, and have eternal increase with your wife forever. So, super cool resurrected God-sex making spirit babies for eternity. Sounds pretty good.
In many ways this is right, but in one fundamental way it gets twisted into what is essentially one of the worst lies ever told. As we know, that’s Satan’s favorite tactic: take a truth and twist it a little. No amount of good works on your part (or grace of God) can overcome the free will of another person.

Let me repeat that. God will not undermine the free will of another person to prevent you from getting hurt.

Free will is the essence of this life. It is the reason there is so much joy in this world, and so much suffering. God allows all the atrocities we know of happen because he gave us free will.

More importantly, free will is what you and I stood shoulder-to-shoulder to fight for in the great war in heaven. The moment you chose a side in that war was the moment you accepted every struggle, every joy, every pleasure and every ounce of pain in your life. What if I told you that you chose this fight?

Whose Fault Is It?

What if I told you that one person is responsible for all of this: the lack of sex and respect, the loneliness, unmet expectations, and sadness? It’s you. Yes, you. Look in the mirror. No, take your shirt off and look in the mirror. Now honestly ask yourself, would you want to have sex with you? If not, you have some low-hanging fruit and improvements you can make quickly and easily. The deeper and more important changes happen on the inside.

What Do I Do?

You fix yourself. I’ll tell you the secret of why your wife doesn’t want to have sex with you. You’re not attractive. And you don’t fix yourself just to be attractive to her, you fix yourself because that’s the man you want to be.

In the (paraphrased) words of Rian Stone – you came here for sex, but left with self-actualization. The best bait and switch in history.

This only works if you do it for yourself. If you want to fix yourself, there’s hope. But it’s going to suck, it’s going to be hard, and it’s going to require you to give your best.

Just like Neo in the Matrix, you are at a decision point in your life. Take the blue pill and keep doing what you’re doing with that gnawing emptiness inside you, or take the red pill and discover the truth and what you need to do.

“And now that my soul might have joy in you... arise from the dust, my sons, and be men.”

If you’ll listen and fix yourself, you’ll learn or re-learn to be a man (not just a male).

Redpill is Amoral

All that said, if you’ve done ANY browsing here you might have been turned off by the swearing, (J. Golden Kimball has nothing on me) the talk of cheating or “spinning plates” and the general worldly attitude.
The science behind the redpill and understanding of female hypergamy and human sexual dynamics has its roots in the pickup artist community.

 Doesn’t change that fact that it works.

 Guys here came from all walks of life. They do not share your morals. Some will be purposefully grating to test your resolve and toughen you up in a locker-room environment. I implore you to look past all of that for now and into the motives behind the message.

 You have chosen a moral path that raises this stuff from hard mode to original Nintendo-hard. Good for you. Now get into the gym, lift weights, read the materials on the sidebar and start owning your shit.
Together 7 years, married 2.5 years. I'm 33, she's 31.

November

I’m midway through a 2 month 15,000 mile business trip. I send postcards, gift boxes, everything to keep the peace. After a blow out fight with wife on the phone over money and attention, I find MRP and devour the entire sub. The more I read the angrier I get… at my wife… at all women… at all people, anyone but me. I feel completely used in my marriage… in my life as a whole. What the fuck is happening? It slowly sinks in that I blame others because I don’t know what to change about myself. Now I’m angry at myself.

The bedroom ain't dead but the fun is. I've nuked this marriage with my temper and attitude and I don't want to admit it. Everything says hit the gym so I do.

December

I come home from the two month road trip and EVERYTHING IS WALL TO WALL SHIT. My car dies, my phone cracks and dies, the handle on my fucking mug breaks and dumps tea into my laptop, which dies. Ironically, it’s okay that my shit breaks because I have barely any client work to do anyway. I’m thoroughly and embarrassingly broke. I honestly believe that I’m too broke to buy any of the sidebar books. Dark fucking times.

Wife is having an emotional affair with an ex, maybe more, I’ll never know. He’s a big part of her friend group and work group. I never had a problem with her friendship but I was away for 2 months and now she’s texting, snap chatting, wanting to hang with the friend group (him) constantly. It’s my fault for letting the marriage get too serious and tense. Now she gets her feels elsewhere. I bring up my concern and she throws a fit. I ask her to cut off all communication, but I don’t have my shit together to pull an ultimatum. I’m too broke to go nuclear, and maybe it's time to learn a new tool besides anger. I decide to self-improve and maybe force the issue later. I watch BluePillProf’s youtube series, the TFA’s blog, and digest the sub some more.

January

I have a few small clients, like a few hundred bucks a month each and it gets me through hard times. I begin landing a dream client with steady 10hr/wk work for the next 9 months. I decide to put in for a major opportunity.

My mental focus is absolute dogshit. I work from home and hit a wall at 1pm everyday, where I start playing computer games and jacking off. Shame is intense. I decide I want mental stamina and therefore I want 100% control over my focus. I decide that I’m going to start and stop a habit every month. First month: I quit computer games for a month and read every morning. I read NMMNG and WISNIFG. I hate both books initially and then realize that I need to drop my judgements and just read. Just do the right thing. Good feelings follow good actions.

February

The emotional affair rages on. She openly mocks my concerns, telling me her ex slept with a client of mine, how much he's on Tinder. My trust in her is being absolutely destroyed, she's creating a huge issue by mocking my concern. I lay my ground rules again - no communication - and she throws a fit again. I don't back down from my demand, instead I just make it clear no communication, end the conversation and focus on myself. I don't care anymore if the marriage ends or even if she cheats on me, what I really want is better options than this.

I've been exercising with high reps and low weight. I want to see progress so I start cutting, taking creatine, protein and amino acids everyday. I go from 15 endurance reps to 8 strength reps with higher weights.

I receive the major opportunity. I put together a website for the project. I decide to start saving up for a new vehicle instead of repairing my shitbox. I quit chewing my nails and start journaling. I read MMSLP and Book of Pook.

March

This was perhaps the hardest but most transformative month of the year. Why? I was one of the “Men of March”. I didn’t watch porn or touch my dick for the whole month. I did all of the challenges or substituted a harder one. For example, I substituted in 10 minutes (5 x 2 min) of planks instead of 100 push-ups a day. I’m already overdeveloped in the chest but an underdeveloped core so this was a much more appropriate challenge.

I take a trip with wife to the southwest. Do some hiking and site-seeing. It’s been weeks since I’ve had sex or a fap. At a hotel, I need release but wife “is tired”. I take a shower and wife offers sad duty sex. I head out to a dive bar, and a woman gives me her number. She’s pretty skanky but now I understand the power of options. I come back to the hotel and wife initiates next morning.

Start couples counseling because what the hell. Read RMY1 and 16 Commandments of Poon.

April

I read The Art of Seduction and the seducer / seduction types are incredibly insightful. I realize wife is the “Idol Worshipper” and I’m the “Charismatic” seducer. Conversely, her strategy is “The Coquette” and I’m “The Rescuer” victim type. This book is as much about being a successful seducer as it is recognizing how women manipulate me. I read HTWFAIP by Mr. Carnegie. Best book for me. I do the thing he suggests and reread each chapter as I go.

I continue 10 minutes of planking a day, and watch FailArmy videos to make me laugh so it’s that much harder to plank. A good chuckle and a good sweat at the end of the day.
I feel good about my progress and so I “celebrate” on my birthday by giving myself the day off from work, getting high, watching porn, jacking off, and eating junk food. Guess what? I feel a massive wall of depression by mid afternoon. It hits me hard, so fucking hard. It eclipses everything I’ve worked on and every good thing I was feeling, almost blinds me to all of my progress. Guys on MRP tell me that’s natural. It’s good that I notice. Keep going.

Couples counseling is hell. Even wife says the counselor is biased against me, but I “stick with it” even though it doesn’t feel right. Week after week the two of them take a shit on me. I fog and broken record, but I keep getting more and more angry.

You’re wondering why I’m still in this, patiently allowing an emotional affair and the blame game to drag on. In short, wife is a trust fund kid and the trust owns our house. We’re equal in providing but she has the true financial assets. One day my wife is going to inherit several million, and I have no family to lean on. I’m still somewhat broke so divorce on a whim puts a lot of my progress in jeopardy. But it’s clear I’m butthurt about the emotional affair and staying for practical reasons is definitely letting my value slide before her eyes. You can’t save your ass and your face at the same time. This isn’t about pride anymore, it’s a future where I live the life I want live. I apply for a project 1,000 miles away, knowing that if I receive it I’ll never come back.

I take a trip to west for a week to help my sister out. I get several offers from women there. I don’t want to cheat - sex wasn’t the major motivation for me finding MRP - but catch and release is helping me understand how options are a side effect of personal progress.

May

I’m still naive about power but I slowly realize my near complete inability to notice when I’m being influenced is a massive part of my struggle. It’s my job to prepare so I start a journal called “Measuring Mindset” where I document the non-verbal cues from other people. body language, subtext, innuendo, word choice, tone of voice, omissions, plausible deniability, et al.

I catch wife getting a text from her ex. At counseling I subtly bring it up and counselor asks if she’s been in communication with him. She says no. I reveal her lie and walk out. Later I tell her that this doesn’t work for me. You know my terms, end the “friendship”. She cries and tries to guilt me that she’s losing a “friend”. I don’t care. She uses plausible deniability, he’s texting her. Like it fucking matters. I take off my ring and move into the office.

I read MAP and get to the end part about confronting your vampire. I prepare divorce papers over the next two weeks. I tell wife if she doesn’t end the “friendship” completely, then I have the divorce papers printed out for her to sign. With venom in her eyes, she deletes every social media account. She’s pissed, won’t put her ring back on. Neither do I.

I go down to one cup of coffee a day and decide I can only swear when I give myself permission. I start 5x5 and enjoy it thoroughly. I have a bum knee so squats have to scale really slow.

June
Read 5 Habits of Effective People. I do the tasks. One of them is to schedule a time to write a mission statement. I journal my thoughts for a week and when I sit down, my mission statement comes out literally in seconds.

My mission is to meet as many people as I can, know them as much as I can, and celebrate with them as much as I can.

Immediately I start cutting out anything that doesn’t serve my mission, or anything that isn’t providing maximum energy for my mission. Conversation getting boring? Nice talking to you, gotta go. Underpaying client? It’s been great working with you, off to research new clients. Nagging wife? I’m going to the gym.

Still ringless in the office but it feels good to be alone. Wife begs me to come back into the bedroom, I do and sex is better. Still no ring for either of us.

July

I take a trip to Atlanta and practice catch and release. I stay at an AirBnb and one night I go out with the host and her guy friend for a drink. At this point I’ve realize that idol worshippers want my undivided attention, so I just pour it on the girl. I realize by the second drink that this guy’s come to town to try and fuck her, but she won’t even look at him, she's just straight gazing into my eyes. By the third drink he’s sputtering because he’s practically invisible to her now.

Wife fucks me thoroughly when I come back. I mean like not in years. I say hey let’s watch porn. She wants threesome porn. Holy shit my wife wants a (MFF) threesome.

Remember that opportunity I received? Huge success. I meet important people and get some great press. I’m in great shape and fun to talk to. I go to the beach with a hot client who is clearly into me. No pursuit of sex, just thoroughly enjoying her attention, it fuels me.

August

More progress with the project. I am living my mission. I send an email blast to the 3,000 contacts I’ve made over the years. My in-box explodes with praise and more opportunities. “This project is so you!” and “Wow this is so helpful!” I’m offered another project in the spring of 2018. A massive institution (one of the most prestigious of its kind in the world) reaches out and offers me a spot in the fall of 2017.

Wife is noticing the attentions of several other women. She starts saying how so-and-so looks at me, that the women aren’t innocent about their intentions. I play dumb, which fuels her hamster. “I’m worried that you don’t notice WHY they’re talking to you.” I continue to feign ignorance of their intent. Catch and release increases.

Threesome porn again. Definitely not a fluke, she has a full-blown fantasy. Her victim mentality makes a threesome a total powder keg. But suddenly I feel like I want to try at this marriage again. Maybe I could stay in this? Steady the course, something’s working, find out where this leads.
September

Someone gives me a temp tattoo and I put it on my bicep. Wife says I look good with a tattoo. I post it on social media the next day and it blows up. Wife’s coworkers say “Holy shit. Your husband’s jacked!” The next day wife and I take a long anticipated trip overseas for 10 days. Social validation of hot husband is indeed a massive aphrodisiac. We’re fucking everyday, twice a day, three times a day. First time road head, second time road head, as I drive around a lake and through towns. My dick feels like crumpled paper but she’s still horny.

I read WotSM on this trip. My mission is clear. I show up and own everything on my way to mastering my mission. When we get home, she puts her ring back and asks me to do the same. After a few days I do.

After planking for months, ab curls and all sorts of stuff the six pack finally starts showing up. I get knee compression sleeves and finally post some good numbers on the squat.

October

Bring my project to a second site - the super prestigious one - it pays me more in 10 days than my last one does in 3 months.

Take my wife on a crazy surprise weekend birthday trip. Her favorite museum, her favorite show, a hike on the tallest mountain, a dog parade, a restaurant I knew she’d absolutely love. Then on the ride back to the hotel, she says the cute waitress was flirting with me. Is this a threesome fantasy or a hot husband kink? Let’s find out... “Huh well I’d be okay with being with other women”. Not smooth at all but I wanted the intel.

Cue an hour long convo at the hotel. I hold frame. "I want what I want and I’m not sorry I want it, just being open, does that work for you or not?" She won’t say but finally she says it doesn’t, but I think it’s more of a comfort test. Her complaint is not based on my dick in other women but that I "might hurt the other woman's feelings" and it's "not fair". Pretty sure this is all a morality cover up for her being afraid and feeling a power slide. To build comfort, I invite her to meet my counselor for a sesh and she loves him. She realizes her counselors suck, they basically treat her like a victim every week.

At the end of the October, I’m busy getting ready for a month long project out of state. Wife invites me to her work’s Halloween party but I’m too busy getting the project on wheels. Guess who shows up at that party? Her ex. I process this info, then decide I’m done being drubbed.

"You could have told me." I say.

"But you would have gotten angry!" she replies (blame).

“And now I’m angry anyway. You knew he was invited and never mentioned it to me (omission). Then when he showed up it couldn’t possibly be an issue (plausible deniability).”

I take off my ring and tell her I’m taking a break while I’m out of town. I move back into the office that night.

November

She wants to talk ground rules and discuss the separation while I’m gone. I tell her that discussing rules in the past didn’t go well and that’s why I’m taking a break.

I pack up my project to head out on the month long trip. She really wants to talk, actually sends me some pretty nice emails. We agree to try to enjoy our time together for the last week and for the most part we do. I decide what the hell and force the issues a few nights before we go. I tell her that her combativeness pushes me away, that I want better than that. She admits it, but then she kept throwing in jabs one sentence later. I begin to understand that she needs a fight in order to be a victim in this relationship. But I’m tired of fighting, I have more important things to do.

I work my goddamn ass off getting ready for this trip. I hit the road and I’m having a great time. First week of the project is a blast, I meet so many new contacts and new friends. I decide to spin a plate. Get several numbers. At a party I spot a beautiful girl. I approach and tease. We go out and I teach her poker at the bar. No money, we play for "truths". It goes how you’d expect and at the end of the night I’ve had my first fling in 7 years.

ONE YEAR

So here I am. This is what a year has brought. I was broke, now I’m a less broke but I've also bought a new vehicle. I can't tell you what I do exactly because it would destroy anonymity but I'm doing something I fucking love, something that gives me press instead of giving my clients press. My "favorite" things used to be complaining about my wife, jacking off, watching porn, eating crap, and playing computer games. Now I'm 100% living my mission, traveling around the country, meeting amazing people, and being invited to awesome things. I'm the same weight - 173 lbs - but I've dropped from 17% to 11% BF. Some people start their conversations by talking about how buff I am.

I won’t lie and say everything is better now. Anxiety, anger and insecurity still plague me. Will the marriage work out? Will I cheat again? Did she cheat? I’m caring less and less about the details. I'm living my mission, the rest is background.

Year 2 will be harder. I can feel it. I welcome it.
Seven months ago, u/SteelSharpensSteel wrote the ultimate guide to MRP. It is by far the most comprehensive guide you could read on the forum. A truly awesome piece of work. Between that - with all the links to various books and articles - and all the posts you'll find on the forums, all your answers are there. Everything you need to know about frame, game, lifting, STFU, divorce, OYS etc, etfuckingcetera. It's there. You just have to read through it and find the answers that you are looking for.

Despite that - some of you fuckers are apparently too lazy to read. Some of you fuckers are too lazy to do the work. Steel is practically spoon feeding MRP down your necks, yet you are too fucking lazy to open your fat fucking mouths for anything other than a donut.

Some of you fuckers even think it's OK to look for a quick fix by messaging people like me asking questions like this..

"My wife drops hints at a bj like "yeah you eat that pineapple". She knows damn well she's getting me riled up for a bj and then later when the time comes. Shoots it down hard no style and puts up massive lmr/asd. I've lost my cool in the past from her "teasing" and i think it's a shit test?

Nothing I do can pass this though. Every time i know it's happening but lose my cool and punch the wall. Any ideas? Fyi my smv is ~8 hers is ~3. Probably part of it is not being able to fathom a 3 turning down an 8. Just to keep power over me?"

The problem that brought most of us here is the same one.. pure fucking laziness. We got lazy in life, we got lazy about our health, we got lazy about our careers, we got lazy about gaming our wives, we got lazy about getting up early in the mornings, we got lazy about going to bed on time, we got lazy about our style, we got lazy about our grooming, we got lazy about owning our shit, we got lazy about planning the weekends, we got lazy about planning our lives, we got lazy about making money, we got lazy about saving money, we got lazy about everything.

We got married, we had kids, we put the feet up and we got lazy.

Lazy is unnatractive. Lazy makes you weak. Lazy makes you fat. Lazy makes you rub your cock to Hentai porn rather than putting the effort in that it takes to get your dick wet. Lazy makes you reach for the pack of Doritos over cooking chicken and veg. Lazy makes you watch 3 hours of GOT instead of going to the gym. Lazy makes you hang around the house doing fuck all instead of going out and having fun. Lazy makes you the fat, unfuckable slob that you are.

Lazy is unnatractive. Lazy will get you nowhere.

Quit being a lazy cunt.
Start doing the fucking work.

And if you can't do that, then don't fucking message me with your fucking lazy cunt questions about why your fucking wife won't blow your fucking cock.

I'm not going to name and shame anyone here, you know who you are.

Quit being a lazy cunt.
I'm not married any more. I found the red pill too late to save my marriage. If I had found it 2 years before my divorce, there would have been a chance. Instead I found it two years after my divorce.

When I found the red pill, I read a hypothetical scenario on a random post:

Girl spends her life up until her mid to late 20's riding the cock carousel. Then she finds a good provider. They get married. "I don't want kids", she says. She turns 30. "I want a baby right now". Two years later she says, "You've changed. Divorce".

It was as though a little camera was hovering over the shoulder of my now-ex-wife. What a fool I was.

Two years after the divorce, I was still in utter confusion as to what happened, why it happened and what I should have done differently.

The Red Pill told me: Lift. Read. Lead. It told me how women think and why they think the way they do. Women will take care of you? No, women want a strong man who leads them. If you show weakness, it's a huge turnoff. Showing weakness puts responsibility for it on the person you show it to. So don't be weak. Shore up your weaknesses. Get help where you need it, but don't victim puke all over your girlfriend, fiance, wife, or HB9 you took home from the bar. The can't and don't want to help you in that way.

I found someone new. The relationship has a completely different dynamic. I lead, I rule, we prosper. I make all the critical decisions. I take her input, but the ultimate responsibility is on me. The bad things that happen to me are my fault because I am the one in control, I am the one with responsibility.

"Oh, I didn't see that one coming!" I could say to some tragedy that befalls me, but I don't. Instead I say, "I should have seen that coming." Now, I have to think about how to recover, shore up resources, and if I can't avoid the next bump in the road, I'll mitigate the damage. The long term problems (paying for my kid's education, for instance) are ones that I worry about. I know my ex won't, and can't. She will always have vision that extends only to the end of today, or, if she's very very foresightful, then to the end of the week.

So, I'm sorry to see TRP go from Reddit. I think that the people who made the decision to quarantine it are dumb, ideologically motivated, and misguided. I think that, while there are some men who misunderstand and misapply TRP, it helps men like me, raised fatherless, to know how to be a man and to do what's actually expected of me, instead of just what my single mother told me was expected of me. It helps men like me to be what society needs: builders, creators, protectors. Leaders.
When you first begin this journey that is MRP, you were told to stick with the plan and work hard, the gains would be enormous. It’s true. After six months you likely look at yourself entirely differently than you did for many years before. You wife has likely responded in some positive way to your changes, and your family has as well. You begin to lead, and lead from a place of abundance. Things happen that don’t go according to plan, but your extensive MRP training (sidebar & lift) has you prepared for nearly anything that you can come your way and you’re well underway being the captain of your ship and crew.

When it comes to improving yourself, I think that many of us reach a point to where the gains are very small incrementally versus when we first began. It’s in this stage that we begin to understand if the 1000 ft rope will tighten or not. Most see progress, some do not, but this post is for those of you who see progress in your wives and the willingness to follow her captain.

Your woman is one of your greatest creations. You may not believe it, but anything great about her is because of you. You are the one who draws out her inner feminine spirit that shines in the most peculiar and routine ways. You are the man that allowed her to find a place where she…. can be happy.

What a gracious gift that you have the ability to give this to someone else. Your energy, your attention, your time... all pieces of you that you give willingly to your woman so that she can grow from it all. She is a reflection of everything good and bad in you. She is moldable through your leadership and giving. Through your gift of her happiness, she adds value to your life in those peculiar, mundane and often sexy ways.

When you look at your woman remind yourself of your ability to give her this gift. You are the prize. In return she will give you the gift of femininity.

Recently, I found myself reflecting on how much my wife has changed since I began this journey nearly a year ago. Despite a few dealing with Rambo, I’ve found my new self is accepted and adored by my wife in most cases. Now she has begun her own journey of following her Captain, tugging at the rope trying to reel herself in to the ship that has been sailing on course for some time.

The only thing my wife did a year ago was take care of the kids (badly) and clean. She was a horrible cunt to be around. By the time I discovered MRP, she was only doing laundry and taking care of a 2 year old and I decided to pick up my life and do all the rest that was required for a home. Fuck her, right? Sex was starfish 1-2x week. I was angry.

Now one of my greatest creations – a reflection of myself – is nearly a perfect housewife. Cooks, cleans, takes (better) care of the kids, plans activities, joins a pottery class, enjoys... vacations, gets ready everyday with makeup and hair, and fucks with enthusiasm and desire. And I’m only at the beginning. The thoughts of her improving more as I do are exciting. The journey itself becomes fun and challenging.

Realizing that everything she is doing now is a reflection of my hard work is astounding. I’m grateful. I’m beyond speechless. I can not believe that the biproduct of all this hard work on myself is a woman that I have lead to be a better version of herself.

And all of that without a single word.

For those struggling with validation... Not a single time did I get encouragement from her. Not a single bit of praise. Not a mention of anything that would resemble a wife who is proud of or to be with her husband. Not a single comment on my physique, style, new haircut, sexual position, or attitude. Nothing.

And I still haven’t heard her say a nice thing once about any of my changes.

The fact is – we should have never let ourselves get to the place where all of this feels like work. It’s not work. It’s how we were designed to be and designed to live. A man is only as strong as his knowledge of this world and we were unfortunately sold a lie. Finding MRP just brings us back to what we were designed to be. It shouldn’t have been, but it was hard work for me.

The comfort testing will increase. She will be seeking praise for her accomplishments along the way, and unlike her – I give them willingly because I honestly am proud of her. The feminine grows with praise. The masculine grows with challenge.

To me, that is the sense of pride that a man can have in seeing how his hard work has benefited someone else, and more importantly someone he cares deeply about.

For a willing wife, MRP can save them too.

You can lead yourself, and a willing wife to a place where she will be most happy and simultaneously add the most value to your life. You are the creator of your life. YOU can create a marvelous relationship with or without your wife. That’s your choice. For fucks sake, make something. Always be creating.

You’re the fucking captain now. Get to work.
The night before Christmas
by threekindsoflucky | December 21, 2018 | Link

Twas the night before Christmas, and a glass was left out Beside it a pill, red and bright, filled with doubt
With a promise of change and a new way of thinking
He grabbed the glass, and started drinking

The man took the pill in his hand and he swallowed
But he was not ready for that which followed
He spat it back out with a great deal of force
But his life was the same and he lived with remorse

So he tried it again, and this time it went down
It got caught in his throat and he started to drown
After coughing and fitting and making a scene
It slipped into his chest and he started to dream

He began to fit, and dance like a monkey
His wife, not impressed, would not be his flunky
Hoping for sex and a life much improved
His cute little wife had turned into a prude

He came to a forum online filled with strangers
They laughed and insulted, highlighting the danger
‘No change will you get if you don’t shift your mind’
‘your lifts don’t impress me, and we are not kind’

‘realise you are one of many dumb men’

‘and your wife will keep you as a sheep in a pen’

Disgusted with life and hoping for change

The pill reached his head and he felt rather strange

He realised he must do things for him only

His wife, quite bemused, thought he was a phoney

As he changed his perspective to become like the rest

He weaved, and dodged, and avoided the shit-tests

He no longer cared if they banged all night long

As the girl at the counter clearly wanted his shlong

He knew he could bang any girl that he wanted

And his wife knew he could not be confronted

The wife, feeling tinges down her spine

Decided to bang like her life was on the line

They went forwards and backwards like a man in a fight

By the end, a new kind of man came to light

He did what he wanted and lead a tight ship

And her cute little pussy was starting to drip

For a man he was now, no longer a boy

And his wife could finally be his fuck toy
Merry Christmas gentlemen. I am no poet but hey.
Field Report /fēld rəˈpôrt/

Noun: The subjective account of one man’s experience
Not a guide, recommendation or moral position
Informational, not instructional

I knew who she was years ago. In her late 20s, a brunette with a body chiseled by marathons. A few visible tattoos betrayed that there were more under her clothes, and her body was exactly my type. I was with mutual friends at a large event, and I thought we locked eyes; I was wrong, she was looking at my buddy’s huge arms (and I wanted to be him). I would often fantasize about her when I was in the shower, but I never spoke to her. I was skinny-fat, frameless and thoroughly BluePilled.

Fast forward a few years. I had been lifting, reading and STFUing for long enough to change the way I interact with people, women in particular. I was un-learning my unattractive habits, and my physical appearance had changed. I was having fun outside of my marriage, but I wasn’t actively seeking anything. One week, I volunteered for a program working with kids in the city, and the brunette was there too.

I learned that her name was Lucca, she was married with 3 kids at home. She was also 115 pounds of sarcasm and bourbon, so we quickly became friends. I would make logistics for us to be alone together, and soon we were flirting, texting and touching. Because I am a bad man, I watched her little ass as she moved around the classroom, and she found excuses to touch my arms.

Lucca knew I went to hot yoga on Tuesday nights, but I was surprised when she joined me one evening. She hugged me after class, while we were both shirtless and sweating. I placed my hand low on her hip, and left it there. I changed venues so we could be alone and get a drink. At the bar, she made excuses for us to touch (“Feel how cold my hands are!”), and I escalated until we were touching non-stop.

"If you think you can kiss a girl, you probably could have kissed her 10 minutes ago."
Mark Manson, Models

Remember how married women describe kissing Chad? “We were just laughing and having a drink and, I don’t know, it just kind of happened?” It's true, because I made it happen, and soon we were making out in my backseat like teenagers.

I started seeing Lucca every week, and for a while we were amazing together. No drama, no expectations, no talk of leaving our spouses to run away together. Just lots of sex and genuine friendship, which evolved into a closer attachment. For once, that closeness wasn't ruined by my neediness or supplication. I would hold her close while she melted into my chest, and whisper in her ear: “I’m only here for the sex, not this cuddling bullshit.” would kiss me with a knowing grin and say “Yeah, me too.” The sex was great, but the intimacy was wonderful.

One day, Lucca took a picture of <redacted>. Her husband found the picture, and shit hit the fan. She lied, saying we only fucked one time. The next time I saw Lucca, her eyes were exhausted and puffy from crying. She explained that she couldn’t see me any longer. She had to fix things at home, where her husband was wildly alternating between wanting a divorce and another baby (what?). I wasn’t butthurt, I didn’t ask her to stay, and I wasn’t afraid of her husband contacting my wife. Instead, I told Lucca that I wouldn’t make this any harder than it already was. Her husband made new rules, and changed her logistics to make it impossible for her to see me. Lucca deleted me from all social media, and it was over.

Did you believe me? Just now, when I said it was over. You believed me? Haha, I can’t believe you fucking fell for that. Seriously, that’s like MRP 101.

Of course it wasn’t over, we just learned to be more careful. We were caught over a year ago, and I still see Lucca every week. Sometimes we walk by the water, holding hands and kissing in the park. Sometimes we get stoned and try the new Thai place downtown. But most of the time, I fuck her like it was my last day on earth.

Here’s What I Learned:

I’ve been told that extramarital sex will never be as good as you expect, and never as meaningful as it is with a spouse. I’ve been told to expect that the amazing, new sex of an affair will fade quickly. I’ve been told it will be replaced by guilt, once morality catches up. None of those things have been true for me, and I’m still a bit shocked.

Lucca only knew me as a Red Pilled man. One who was cocky, not needy, bearded, social, lifting, dominant. This was my first time starting a ‘relationship’ that was entirely in my frame, and the differences are staggering. I was dominant from the first time we slept together - ordering her to her knees and rewarding her when she said “Yes SIR!” (she tried so hard to swallow it all, it was adorable). Lucca works hard to keep me - sending me nudes (Snapchat only) and canceling her own plans so she can see me instead. She acts exactly how a woman should respond to a high value man, but I never knew how to maintain that before MRP. She didn’t have to overcome my years of beta, because she never knew that guy.

“As you fix one area of your life, the other areas will start clicking into place more easily, to match the more positive energy set... all it takes is one of those factors in a different energy set to come into play and it makes all the other efforts in that set more likely to happen.”

Athol Kay, Mindful Attraction Plan

I experience tremendous personal growth when I have an abundance of intimacy/connection/sex in my life. It brings a balance to life that works very, very well for What are the signs of a man having an affair? Every Cosmo magazine and female website will tell you the same thing. Lifting, new clothes and upgraded appearance. Confidence, new friends, change in schedule, increased sex drive, new interests and new music. I was already making these (new, permanent) habits because of MRP, so nothing changed when I started seeing other women. When guys ask: “How do I make excuses to get out of the house to see my plate?”, they’re asking the wrong question.

There were repercussions for getting caught, including new rules that allow Lucca’s husband to keep track of her. She promised to always answer his phone calls - so she always answers, even when she’s in bed with me. Lucca has a good thing going on at home, and doesn’t want to mess that up. Her husband is a good provider and father, he’s tall and has a good job. He is also ‘the emotional one’ in their marriage. He gets drunk and starts fights, becomes defensive and insecure, and points out her failures. She feels like her husband is another child she has to care for. His actions literally drive her to me - she'll go to "the office" to get away from him, and I'll be waiting for her in the city. Man, I learned a lot hearing a woman talk about her loving husband while she was naked in my arms. And because of MRP, I wasn't surprised by any of it.

Having an affair before I had an established frame would have been a disaster (see also: Children With Dynamite). It's foolish to think I could have been having affairs as a BP guy (or even back as a newly fledged MRP lurker writing posts like this one). First I had to address my needy habits, sloppy “nice guy” game and an inability to keep secrets (I would have been tempted to reveal my affair during arguments, or when my wife insulted my ability to attract other women). Earlier affairs were ruined before they began by my need for validation. I also had to learn how to generate attraction in the long-term, rather than succumbing to easy, beta habits once I’d grown comfortable with a woman. We learn about game/frame/RP and we think we're ready to go slay some strange, but for a long time my frame was too weak to deal with the fallout of getting caught in an affair. If the thought of getting busted makes you shit your pants, you should probably keep them on.

Kino fucking works, DEVI works. I wish I had known years earlier, this is exactly what women want. Take control of the situation, logistics, and the plans for the night. That works because you’ve been attractive and generated more attraction through your actions, which is why it doesn’t work for simps. Be bold. When the time is right, take control of her physical position. Grab her ass and lift her off her feet, push her into the wall. Wrap your arms around her and make her feel small - that shit is the best. In fact, I learned that it’s my role to keep escalating, to be the catalyst. I used to try to figure out the “right time” to make a move on a woman. I used to think about what my next step should be in flirting - fuck all that. My objective now is to keep escalating until she says No, or Until her pussy is on my beard, whichever comes first.

Ain't like them guys who wine and dine to keep they women
My bitches only want two things, that's to get high and kick it
-Wiz Khalifa

I've never put so little effort into a "relationship". There’s no dating with me and Lucca, no gifts, no flowers. The only gifts I’ve given her are the panties and perfume I tell her to wear when she sees me (her husband should have noticed this). I need to clarify here, because I read the stories of so many faggots who turn their plates into new, shitty LTRs. There are no I love you’s, no compulsive need to talk on the phone, no covert contracts. Me and Lucca have only two rules:

- Don’t get caught, and
- Either of us can walk away at any time

That brings me to my biggest lesson: Abundance changes everything. I’m starting to think I won’t go back to having less than 2 sexual partners, ever again, for the rest of my life. I haven’t gotten “hard no”’s from my wife in a long time, but do you know what it’s like to watch my (165lb) wife throw an epic shit test, or to imply that she’s holding out sex on me? That shit used to hurt so bad, and now it is _fucking hilarious_. The only thing that changes is the size of the nut that I blow onto the next girl’s face. Me and Lucca will be over some day, which is why I’m perpetually lining up more girls like her. Abundance changes everything - and we can pretend I’m just talking about pussy.

Edit: Redacted a couple of details.
Divorce brings it all full circle
by red-sfpplus | August 13, 2018 | Link

Divorce (or the divorce process) is, based off my personal experience - the last phase of a man fully becoming Red Pill.

All of the reading, training and all we talk about here, it all comes into focus during the divorce process. AWALT is 100% real, and the hunt for new pussy allows you to see everything from the start through the Red Pill lens.

Months into the process, I now live two very distinct lives.

Life #1 is the life I am untangling with my wife. It has gotten to the points of daily threats from her. She has withheld prescription medications from our children in an attempt to hurt ME. Hacked my cell phone account (embarrassing considering I am an IT guy) and had my phone shut off. Stalked me on social media to the point I had to block her and all her friends and family, and even tried to remove me from our family car insurance plan - a policy I pay directly. I have her on video coming up to the marital home, looking in the windows, etc. to see what is going on.

The amount of fucks I give in Life #1 is in the negative at this point. My lawyer is costing me a ton of money, but my "cost to fuck" is going down. She is up to six different infractions of standing orders. Her payout goes down, each and every day as she sinks her own ship. When someone is so focused on drilling holes in your ship, when they finally get kicked out of yours, and they are in their own - they do not know better and keep drilling holes.

Life #2 is the other life I live. In this life I have completed my second Big IT certification. I am now double certified in my field. This is huge for my career, and I have been wanting to do it for some time, but my energy was focused on trying to save my marriage and tame my wife. Now, I use that energy on myself. Also in this life I continue to kick ass with my kids as their primary custodial parent. No need to say anything further, other than the amount of energy I now have to focus on myself, kids and career is at least 30% more now that I am no longer dealing with the Mrs. and her daily drama. And I thought I was doing pretty good before. You will never know the full extent of being gaslit, until that person leaves and tries to do it from afar.

This life also contains an endless supply of Bumble pussy. I have it down to a science at this point. In the last few months alone I am somewhere between 12-16 different women I have dated and fucked. I don't even bother to count anymore. I was at three plates pretty consistently, but I only spin two plates now. I broke the 28yo smoke show a few weeks ago when she dropped the marriage/kids conversation after only 3 weeks of fucking. Personally, I like the 32-37 year old women at this point. Little more mature, and I am OK with that. To many 25-30 year old's just want to day drink on the weekends and week nights. Whatever, not my style. There is no one at this point in their life with no baggage, and I am fine with that. I don't give a shit about their baggage, and manage my own.
In this life, I now have a complete and full understanding of the word NO. I have had women that I have rejected go absolutely ape shit on me.

"What kind of man tells me NO!?"

"Men do not tell me NO!"

I had a woman who is fairly close to my men’s social circle overtly ask me to hook up. Nice gal, but I point blank told her I "do not shit where I eat" in so many words. The hamster is strong on this one. She still texts me every 3-4 days asking me to reconsider, and go out for drinks. She even said the fact I told her NO, makes her want to fuck me even more. Unbelievable? Nope, it is not.

The point of my post is somewhat obscure. I will argue that I am somewhere between still being in the MRP group, but trending towards MGTOW but without the Incel part of it. Its why I do not post on the main TRP sub, and I do not read MGTOW, but I understand the concept.

The reason I make this post, is because I now look at the askMRP and MRP threads with a different lens. The last few weeks have had some posts related to the infamous GNO epidemic, a few threads here and there about women wanting to be unicorns, shit tests, a fucking post about a wedding ring and some dumb motherfucker who doesn't know how Finasteride works.

All of these posts disgust me now, because they are all about the WOMAN. Who fucking cares? There is an endless supply of pussy out there, and like I was at one time these men are still trying to save a woman from being a woman, or a marriage from failing. Walking away from my marriage, has set me free. I was dodging bullets and no doubt taking one or two in the arm before, but now I can see the code and I stop them dead.

These men, and parts of this sub need to go back, focus on the Dread levels and boost up your Abundance Mentality. Go and download Bumble. Put a pic on there of you in a nice suit and see what you can get. I am not telling you to close, but I am telling you that after making the SAME fucking mistake these men are, for 10-12 months - you are wasting your life.

You will not give a flying fuck if your wife goes and whores it up on GNO. She is replaceable.

You will not care if she wants to be a unicorn. She is replaceable.

You will not care about a ring. That ring means shit to her, me, her friends and any other Chad out there.

You motherfuckers need to sidebar the fuck up. Get your heads out of your asses, get into the gym and stop letting a woman who is 100% replaceable run your lives.

Since my wife left, I have fully replaced everything she did, either with maids, dry cleaners, or 28-35yo smoke shows who will do ass to mouth on the 2nd date.

Since she left, she still gets a lousy amount of money from me, drives a car I gave her, lives with some old empty nesters, continues to look for a job, and sees her kids 4 days out of every 14. I am the prize, and if she didn't know then, she sure as fuck knows now.

I am going to state, for the record that the single most important attribute a man needs in his life is ABUNDANCE. You need it in everything. In women, career, money, all of it. If you have any single points of failure, you need to fix them right now.

If it is Monday, and you cannot fuck another woman than the one you are currently fucking by Saturday night - you fucking suck.

If in your career, you cannot go from fired to hired in 90 days or less - you fucking suck.

If you cannot walk into the gym tomorrow and lift your body weight on the big three - you fucking suck.

If you lay awake at night, butthurt over something she did, or that you didn't get your balls drained how you wanted - you fucking suck.

If your kids treat you like shit, are little disobedient fucks, are on ADHD meds because you cant fucking parent or because the need an ass whopping - you fucking suck.

If you ask your woman where to go for dinner, if she drives the family car when y'all go out, if you have not been on a family vacation in the past 12 months, or if you have not even been out of your own state in the past 6 - you fucking suck.

What is the point of living if you let another person run your life? What is the point of living if you walk in fear of what she will do? Why would you let someone, who is replaceable fully in less than 90 days, even take up that much space in your brain?

You need to act. You need to take control of your life, and you need not wait 10-12 months like me to do it. That is 10-12 months of MY life and my kids life I will never get back.

Pissed? Yeah - I am pissed at the man I used to be.

You faggots need to learn the power of the word NO. You need to understand the power of NOT GIVING A FUCK. The minute you really, truly understand this single item - it makes everything 75% easier.

You cannot and never will truly, not give a fuck when you lack abundance.

Are you going to learn from my mistakes, or at least put an end to making your own?

Or are you going to continue to fucking suck?
I have long touted the position that sexual attraction and emotional intimacy are completely separate pillars of a relationship. This flies in the face of popular modern thinking. Women, marriage counselors, and modern society as a whole insist that for women, emotional intimacy is an absolute prerequisite to sex. That if she’s not in love with you, her legs are crossed.

Of course, female behavior flies in the face of this assertion. You need look no farther than your nearest bar to see women going home and having sex with guys they barely know. The sexual attraction is there, but emotional intimacy is not. Many married couples find angry sex, when the two of them are fighting, and even the subsequent make-up sex, to be some of the best sex they’ve ever had. At that particular time, sexual attraction is there, but emotional intimacy is not.

On the flip side, one need only look as far as the internet, any marriage counselor’s office, or even a modern sitcom, to see the opposite situation. People who love each other and are emotionally close, but the sexual attraction isn’t there, so sex is absent, infrequent, a chore, a fight. Emotionally intimacy is there, but sexual attraction is not.

Sexual attraction and emotional intimacy are two separate pillars of a relationship. While society tends to prioritize “love” and insist that a focus on sex is shallow and trivial, a relationship that lacks sexual attraction is every bit as much of a failure as a relationship that lacks emotional intimacy.

However, while these two pillars are separate, they are not unrelated. If a woman does not think you are sexually attractive, this often manifests in her behavior. A wife trapped in a marriage to a husband she doesn’t want to fuck tends to be disrespectful, bitchy, and downright mean. He may be the nicest and most thoughtful husband in the world, but if he’s an unattractive chump in her eyes, nothing he ever does will be good enough. Conversely, if a wife is married to a husband she, and every single one of her friends and neighbors, wants to fuck more than anything, she’ll respect the hell out of that man, even if he barely lifts a finger to do things for her. Most guys are somewhere between these two extremes.

If you’re a random guy at a bar, picking up random women, you don’t need to worry about emotional intimacy. You can just be attractive. But if you’re a husband, the relationship between sexual attraction and emotional intimacy is a factor you need to consider in your dealings with your wife.

The core of the issue is that women contextualize sex. A woman will have a random threesome in college, just to see what it’s like, with people she doesn’t even like. She will have six one-night stands with strangers from the bar, one of which included her only experience with anal, all of which included blowjobs. She will consider all of this to be positive, enriching experiences. She will be raped one night in the bar parking lot and consider that to be the worst experience of her life. She will date her husband-to-be and make him wait six months before having sex for the first time, marry him after two years, and have once a month, missionary-only sex, no blowjobs. And all of these different sexual standards for different experiences will all make sense to her based on the roles each of these guys played for her.

Women will hold different guys to different standards, based on the role that guy is currently filling in her life. When a woman goes to the bar looking for a random dick to have some fun with, it doesn’t matter if the guy is a bit of an asshole. He’s hot, he’s confident, so he’s good for a fuck. The lack of emotional intimacy doesn’t matter, because she’s not holding him to any standard of emotional intimacy.

Conversely, when a woman is with her husband, she’s holding him to a different standard. Her husband is expected to fill the role of husband, not the role of random dick from the bar. If her husband isn’t measuring up and fulfilling his role for her and for the family, she is going to feel resentment, anger, even hate. Essentially, negative emotional intimacy.

While emotional intimacy isn’t a prerequisite for sex, if your wife feels a whole lot of negative emotional intimacy – anger, resentment, hate, etc. – then this negative emotional intimacy may serve as a barrier to sex, even if she’s attracted to you sexually. Even when, had you been a random guy at the bar instead of her husband, she’d have fucked you.

Your wife holds you to a higher standard than she holds other men, and if she feels resentment regarding your failure to meet that standard, this will keep her from fucking you even if the attraction is there. When you married her, you promised to fill the role of husband, not the role of random dick from the bar, and if your shit isn’t handled and you aren’t filling that role properly, the hate she feels for you for breaking your promise – that negative emotional intimacy – will cock block you worse than any nosy toddler. And all of the muscles in the world and all of the flirting with your neighbors imaginable won’t fix this.

What’s worse is that the next random dick at a bar she sees on girls’ night, who isn’t being held to the same standard as you, will seem a lot more emotionally close to her than he actually is, simply because all of that negative emotional intimacy isn’t there. The absence of resentment and hate will feel like love to her.

The normal advice of “be attractive, don’t be unattractive” works just fine for random guys at a bar, but once you’re married, you have the added burden of owning your shit. Getting you shit handled. Keeping your wife comfortable that the shit is taken care of and that she doesn’t need to worry her pretty little head about the shit.

Married life is harder than single life primarily because you’ve agreed to additional responsibilities, for the same sex you could have had while single, usually because you’re planning on making some babies. Essentially, the transaction is that you promise to be better than a random guy from the bar and she promises to have your kids. If you’re cheating your wife out of what she thought she bargained for by not owning your shit, more muscles won’t help.

Unmarried guys can disregard emotional intimacy in a way that husbands can’t. Although trying to trade good behavior for sex is a huge error, handling your shit like an awesome husband so that your wife doesn’t hate your guts is critical to getting laid, and every bit as important as lifting weights.
I'll make this quick. I'm a good looking guy who modeled for a short period of time in my 20's. Athletic, less than 8% bodyfat and very comfortable around women. There's a group of about 8-10 people who workout together at my gym including several women who all know I'm happily married, so the IOIs are minimal other than occasional poke when I make fun of them.

We've never discuss jobs or anything personal, we just lift, joke around and leave.

Yesterday one of the guys in the group told the women that I own a business that they recognized as a popular brand in the fitness industry. Instantly their attitudes changed. For the remaining 40 minutes the IOIs increased 10x. I was watching this group of women aged 25 yrs - 40 yrs go from casual to aggressive. Hair tossing, needless giggling, personal questions, and standing in close proximity. To be clear, it was obvious that their interest was fueled solely by their discovery that I own a company they recognized.

Women are unbelievably shameless when they see something they want. I'm not even sure they can control it.
Three ships with three different captains were sailing alongside each other. Ahead of them was a huge storm forming.

On the first ship, the 1st officer came running to the captain.

- "Captain, captain, there's a huge storm coming, I'm so scared our ship will sink and we'll all die! You have to turn the ship around!"

The Captain replied: "I can see you are very upset and frightened. I don't want any of my crew to feel like that, so I'll turn the ship around." As soon as they reached the harbour, the 1st officer signed off and never sailed again.

On the second ship, the same thing happened. There, the Captain said:

- "1st officer, you are clearly not in shape to be of any assistance at this point. Go to your quarters immediately!"

With his 1st officer trying to calm his nerves with a bottle of vodka in his quarters, the captain then radioed the weather services for the latest reports, checked the radar and the chart for alternative routes, then made his decision. The 1st officer became an alcoholic and eventually signed off.

And behold, the same scene played out also on the third ship. This ship had the most experienced captain of the three, and he said to the 1st officer:

- "Dont worry, I've seen worse and there's no doubt our ship can handle this. What I need you to do now is to radio the weather service for the latest reports, meanwhile I'll check the radar and charts for alternative routes, then we can see how best to handle the situation." The ship reached it's destination, although a little late, and the 1st officer sailed with the captain until his retirement.

End of story.

Was out at a bar with my wife and two of our married friends when a couple of single dudes making the rounds stopped at our table and starting chatting us up. Our wives were easily the hottest girls there that night so it was obvious what they were up to.

They were good looking guys. Imposing. Tall (quite a bit taller than me actually) and they were doing what I do when I'm trolling for pussy: moving from table to table and group to group making friends with everybody (or at least appearing to). It's an incredibly effective way to build social proof when you're alone or only with a friend or two and you're not already known for something else generally (athlete, musician, etc).

I'd never been the guy on the other side of this before and I felt the power dynamic shift away from me and my friend and you could sense our wives instant, primal, autonomic reactions to it, then sudden recoiling when their brains took back over. They shot us these looks that seemed to say "I can tell what they're doing, you can tell what they're doing, please make them go away, but please don't embarrass me."

Do I think my wife would leave with either of them? No. But if I wasn't me she might. Not that I'm that special but my game is solid enough that's not a concern I have. Admittedly they're not the kind of guys I want her running into on a girls night, but these are the chances we have to prove ourselves so that when we're not around, guys like that fail to adequately impress them.

My natural instinct was telling me to resist these guys. To take my wife's hand and make a hard exit. Or to ask them to leave, or to tell one of them he had something in his teeth or some shit like that (the teeth thing is a great response to someone insulting you in some way--in that instance, since he hadn't insulted me, it would have looked really weak).

But my brain, luckily, was there to bail me out. Instead of resisting these guys, I EMBRACED them. I asked where they were from in order to retake the position of asker (they were asking way too many questions for my liking). I paid them a couple compliments. ("Man, you're a big motherfucker, aren't you? Did you play football??") I stood up. I told my wife and the other couple with us to make room, and I told them to grab a couple chairs and join us.

This threw them off. You could actually see them shrink somehow. I made my offer grandiose. I was louder than them. I made bigger movements. It felt somewhat like agreeing and amplifying, but in actions, rather than words. I wasn't threatening at all. I was warm. Too warm for their liking anyway. Because it was obvious that they weren't actually there to make friends with me.

It was like I had suddenly turned into a king who was welcoming some exotic visitors into his court, and that's what they suddenly became--my entertainment. A part of MY show. They had lost their identity within mine. They felt the shift, and they excused themselves quickly. Threat neutralized. Frame maintained.
When I sat down my wife winked, smiled, and squeezed my hand. Sex was good that night.
Hi Faggots, Social Distancing is killing most of you betas out there. Despite what she says about being stressed with homeschooling the kids or adjusting to telework at home, lack of attraction is why you aren’t getting laid. It’s also why she is acting like a sexless cunt and bitchy first mate right now. I already see it happening to friends and coworkers.

Look, if you ain’t Gaming, you ain’t Fucking. MRP is red pill on hard mode because you have to find a way to game the same woman every day. Once you find it, you must internalize it as your own so it flows out naturally.

Especially now, she is seeing you all the time. All of your weaknesses are magnified. For you fat beta fucks, it’s like trying to light a fire with damp wood. She simply isn’t attracted to you. You aren’t getting laid for a reason and she is probably shaming you for even trying.

If you ain’t Gaming, you ain’t fucking. Your wife isn’t yours. It’s just your mother fucking turn with her. Don’t be mad that Chad fucked her back in college in the foam party on spring break, he earned it. He gamed her. She thought he was hot. She didn’t need an emotional connection.

Mystery’s Cat String Theory still applies. If you just give the string to the cat it will be bored and stop trying. What the typical wife does when she marries beta billy. He turns into a blue pill faggot and she loses attraction.. If you put the string too far away from the cat it won’t try to chase it. You must keep the string just out of reach of the cat and tease it. Keep the attraction going, drive bys, DHVs, teasing like she’s your bratty little sister, kino, Fuck with her mind..always.

Now more than ever, keep her mind busy or she fill it in with a bunch of nonsense. 100% chance it will be directly proportional to money too. Your wallet will pay for it. More than ever, women are in competition with each other to display their resources. I know dudes not getting laid but getting suckered/ shamed into expensive kitchen upgrades, building pools, etc. all because they’re failing to guide their wives during this time. Women stay plugged in and spend all fucking day long on instafuck, fuckBook, tik-fucking-tok these days comparing and contrasting their resources with other women, if you aren’t providing the tingles or feelz, she’ll start bitching about the next expensive home renovation or vacation that she REALLY needs.

Keep your emotions in check. Don’t show weakness, save it for your bro’s or keep to yourself. She doesn’t give a fuck about you. She only cares how you make HER feelz. Keep your DHVs going. Also keep the illusion of work going. Never break Kayfab. Pro wrestlers never give the act away no matter how silly it is... Always stay in character. Even if you’re considered non essential at work, she doesn’t need to know that. You just got promoted congratulations. Let her know the important work you’re doing. Tell her about the task force you were just assigned to. Wear a fucking headset and act busy as fuck during the day at your laptop. Print out a schedule and mark it the fuck up and tape it on the wall. Get dressed for your skype presentation. If you have free time, start a side business online. Women are attracted to high status and value. Must keep your high value going. If you appear to be doing nothing all fucking day long she’ll dry up. Let her see all your work wives emailing and texting you. Keep giving the gift of Dread. Let her see how much they miss working with you in the office.

What have you done for me lately? They don’t give a fuck that you took them on that expensive vacation last summer, what did you do for them right now? Always add right now after everything they say to give it context. Woman are always after more resources, trinkets, and prizes.

Don’t get lured into arguments if she says you never do this or that. You never take me on such and such vacation - you’re right, I reserve those for my girlfriends smile and grin. Keep AA at all times. She’s flooded with emotions right now, bet your ass you’ll be shit tested. Don’t take the bait. Lead her. I ordered from XYZ restaurant, I’m leaving to pick it up have the kids ready when I get back. I’m grilling steaks tonight so go ice down the beer. Don’t ask what she wants.

Take her on a virtual trip. Everyday around lunchtime, I take her out on the back patio. No kids allowed. Tell those little assholes to stay inside. MCT bought a bottle of red and bottle of white, told her to get her ass out on the back patio. We watched some videos on Napa valley.. travel channel, etc have fun, joke around. NLP terms it’s called future pacing.

Talk about the future and what you plan on doing. Keeps her childlike and gets her into her hindbrain and out of her mommy mode forebrain. She feelz stressed from the kids, work, and all the Karen’s out there. Take her on a virtual trip and learn about these new places. You’re doing this for you, she’s welcomed to join you. Let her feelz your strength, confidence, and DGAS attitude. Watch when she post pics of the 2 wine glasses on fuckBook and how all the other women swoon over what you created for her. Don’t compete with anyone, let them compete with you.

Keep Prizing yourself. Be the Prize- by Prizing yourself. This is a great old school Swing Cat PUA move. Guy is a legend. Make it seem she is trying to win you over. Tease her, neg her. Did you just come over here to flirt with me? Keep that up babe, you’re earning points with me. First time I told my wife she was earning points with me was at a party with her friends. They couldn’t believe I said that. IOIs and all over me for the rest of the night. Also the opposite of that is good too-, babe, you’re losing points with me- if she drops something. Cheeky smirk, ass slap, walk away.

A healthy marriage is one where she submits to you - you have to keep a higher value then her. Doesn’t work the other way around despite what mainstream advice says. Best marriage is one where your balls remain empty. Must have male and female polarity for it to work. You can’t be a walking doormat.

Keep your T levels up. Don’t eat shit all day. Workout, pushups, chin-ups, squats, walk around the block,. Punch yourself in the balls if you have to. Stop fapping like a bitch. Low T level, means being weak, means not leading, means bitching wife, means No sex, means expensive kitchens in your future.
Don’t be a lazy piece of shit. After your work is done for the day, for fucks sake clean up. Do yard work, pressure wash, clean all the shit up you’ve been neglecting the past year. Don’t lose your day gaming skills -I’m not talking about fortnite either you faggots. Revisit the basics and why it works.

Reframe everything. This is a chance to double your workouts. Clean the fucking house. Spend more time enjoying your kids. More time honing your skills. More time to fuck.

Cool, calm, and collective. Don’t be a keyboard jockey these days. Don’t become obsessed with politics and the news. Check it once a day to stay informed. But stop being a bitch about it. That shit is purposely designed to make you feelz powerless. Conquer and divide tactics. They’re pitting sides against each other.

A grown man doesn’t get angry over politics. It makes you look extremely unattractive. It’s a weak example for your son too. It’s a victim mindset. Shows that you aren’t the center of origin.

When is the last time you got a great blow job? Strong powerful man get great blow jobs. Say what you want about Bill Clinton, this dude was a champ at BJs. Go watch YouTube videos of him playing Mayor Game - how he just owned a room when he walked in.. dude could drop panties like no other. .

How you act today will remain with you for the rest of your life. Did you get shit done? Act like a little bitch? Failed to lead? Fail to help your kids?Did you work on yourself? Did you set goals and start action towards them?Become the King. The king doesn’t complain or whine to the queen. When you act like a King, you start getting treated like a King. Women are preprogrammed to reward their prize with sex.

I use to blame everything and everyone out there. I blamed the weather, politics, the company, company policy, mission statement, the economy, the news, the president, the party in power. It’s a fucking lie. You were lied to. It’s all a set up. It’s a joke.

You are the only one to blame. The world is abundant. You are the key to your better future.

If you ain’t gaming, you ain’t fucking.

MTC
It is a universal human (and higher animal) trait to test others to determine their actual boundaries and expectations, which usually differ from those stated.

- A child refuses to pick up his toys or to go to bed.

- A motorist exceeds the posted speed limit.

- An employee arrives late for work; a boss asks an employee to work late without additional compensation.

- A wife tells her husband to fetch something for her she could more easily have gotten herself, or overspends the monthly budget, or denies sex for months at a time.

- A boyfriend pushes beyond his girlfriend's sexual boundaries.

- A dog steals food from the table.

If those being tested assert reasonable boundaries and consequences, as is expected of any competent adult, mutually acceptable norms are established and satisfactory relationships emerge. But when someone consistently abdicates this responsibility, bad things result:

- Kids become spoiled brats who disrespect their parent.

- Everybody speeds, some dangerously so, leading to deadly accidents.

- Employees show up very late and gossip instead of working; employers exploit or abuse their workers.

- A wife loses all respect and attraction for her husband, resulting in a dead bedroom or an affair; some wives abuse their husbands.

- A girlfriend is taken advantage of or abused sexually.
• An out-of-control dog terrorizes its beta owners, until a Cesar Milan teaches them alpha behavior.

Enforcing reasonable boundaries and expectations is a central obligation of all adults in every relationship, notably including a marriage. For various reasons (Fear of conflict? Naive notions about romantic love? Misguided belief that Nice Guy covert contracts and behaviors will get his desired outcomes? A morbid fear that his oneitis unicorn will leave him alone and sexless?), some husbands abdicate this normal adult responsibility in their marriage, even some who exercise it elsewhere in their lives. Their wives gradually "discover" this in the normal course of largely unconscious boundary-testing common to all human relationships, and meeting little resistance the liberties granted and taken (again usually unconsciously) expand into relationship-damaging territory.

Having no independent personal agency and constantly seeking positive validation from others by mirroring their frames, our frameless reactionary betas mistakenly project all agency and responsibility onto others, and in particular misattribute their wives' natural accidental or opportunistic testing of boundaries, or her anxious insecure attachment behavior, as a deliberate, aggressive campaign to betaify him so overpowering that he is helpless to resist. In truth the causality operates in exactly the opposite direction; the constant force driving the betaization process is the beta's commitment to appeasement to fulfill his covert contracts, and to avoid upsetting and losing his oneitis wife.

This standard beta pattern of actively promoting their further betaization by unconditional acceptance of boundary violations is starkly demonstrated in this post by an intelligent beta idiot whose steadfast refusal to reveal his boundaries and expectations to his anxious, insecure, codependent wife drove her over a period of months to ever more extreme BPD behaviors in her desperate but hopeless attempts to get some clarity from her ultra-Nice Guy husband.

Our hapless, still-beta hero continues to operate from a wife's frame by attributing primary agency and malice to her rather than to her husband (and thereby absolving his ego of the primary responsibility for his beta behavior), and his "solution" focuses on changing her rather than himself, which is both misguided and mostly out of his control. Avoid this unproductive, ego-protecting way of thinking.

Let us never again read "My wife made me a beta!" here at r/marriedredpill. This is simply male hamstering and solipsism that hinders your progress. YOU chose to betaify yourself, and YOU drove the process forward with your misguided Nice Guy covert contract strategy, and with your neurotic fear of upsetting and losing your oneitis unicorn. Quit blaming your wife for YOUR failure.

The good news is that since it was always you betaifying yourself, it requires only you to reverse it.
PSA: Lockdown and You
by SteelSharpensSteel | April 8, 2020 | Link

This is a public service announcement.

Odds are you're in the midst of a lockdown due to Covid-19.

- You are not allowed to stop working out.
- You are not allowed to stop tracking your food, fattie.
- You are not allowed to stop showering.
- You are not allowed to stop dressing appropriately, you lazy fucker.
- You are not allowed to stop brushing your teeth.
- You are not allowed to stop trimming your fingernails and toenails, and your nose hairs.
- You are not allowed to stop shaving your balls.
- You are not allowed to stop being the oak.
- You are not allowed to lose all of the discipline you've gained.
- You are not allowed to not have a damn plan for the pandemic, even now.
- You are not allowed to stop preparing for the future.
- You are not allowed to let the things you can't control control you.
- You are not allowed to stop having fun and stop gaming your wife.
- You are not allowed to stop fucking your wife because you're stressed.
What I'm saying is, you are not allowed to stop being attractive. You have to be attractive. Don't be unattractive. Even in a pandemic.

I got a few doctor friends. They are all saying that their patients are getting fat. Every. Single. Patient. And booze sales are up 55%. Gee, I wonder why.

"But... but... I'm stressed, Steel. I need some comfort food. I NEED that drink." Well boo fucking hoo, you weakass.

Just remember, the next time you reach for that cookie or beer or what have you, and think to yourself, man, I deserve this...

Yes, yes you do. You reap what you sow, after all. In fact, that's what got you into this mess, isn't it.

Now get back to work. Summer is right around the corner.
The biggest piece of advice I've taken to heart is to not rambo MRP. I've been reading, planning, and acting slowly. Over time, I've seen myself respond MUCH better to shit tests, and it is completely changing the dynamic of the relationship.

A few things happened this week that were interesting. I got the standard "get me a drink" shit test. I've read enough MRP now to recognize this for what it is. I ignore the first request. She mentions it again a few minutes later and I quip, "Busy. Are your legs broken?" She huffs, and then gets up to go get her own drink. I push my luck with a smile and immediately say, "While you're up...". Pure confidence. Deep down inside the woman inside her was pleased I passed that shit test. There's been a lot of "man servant" tests lately, or maybe I'm just observing them finally.

I've stopped asking to do things with her. All my phrases are now, "I'm doing X, you're welcome to join me." It's not "Do you want to do X?" "How 'bout X?". It's flat out, "I'm doing X." Many of these things are things I know she'd enjoy. Some are for me. I don't care. Here's the trick though: you have to say this because you want to do them. She will test you and say "no" sometimes to see if you're serious. You MUST do activity X ON YOUR OWN if you suggest this. If you don't follow through you'll look weak and lose huge amounts of progress.

I'm giving out more hard "no"s about life. She's constantly testing me. I'm eating more healthy and giving up restaurants for a month. She noticed I've stopped talking about going out, and asks me about it. A week later we're out running errands, and we go to one of our regular stops. I recognize this as a test. We sit down, smile, laugh, she orders her food, I pleasantly look at the waitress with a smile and say, "none for me, thanks." Wife says, "I thought you were hungry?" I say, "I am, I'll make something when I get home." I'm not angry, I'm simply holding true to a promise I made for myself. Test passed. There's several other examples of "No" not worth going into.

Finally Saturday morning, we're up doing our morning thing, and she comes into the bedroom with, "can you rub my calf for a bit?" (She's had a nagging running injury). Again, I finally recognize this for what it is: this is as forward as a woman asks for sex. She gets a good calf massage, one thing leads to another. She's happy, I'm happy.

tl; dr: came from deadbedrooms and hard nos. had sex 3 times this week alone. Passing shit tests and recognizing minor clues leads to sex when I want.
I like watching the couples on those house hunting TV shows.

Last night was a fat betabux accountant and his wife looking at a house to renovate, and the ruggedly handsome contractor holds up some bright patterned backsplash tile. The wife hates it, and when the guy points out that it's basically the same color and pattern as her husband's shirt, she says she hates that too.

The shocked husband turns and says "but you buy my shirts for me!"

I also work with people who readily admit that they wear "whatever shirts my wife picks out at Costco". They're always bright colors like orange or pink and they never fit correctly.

My wife used to help me pick out clothes at the store. She used to buy stuff as gifts that "would look good on me". Looking back years later, there were fundamental problems with almost every piece of clothing I owned.

And just like the accountant in the show, my wife would regularly critique my appearance:

"You should wear more <color>"

"You should wear more <some style>"

"You should wear this hat"

"Your hair should be more <something>"

I NOW SEE THERE WAS NO VALUE IN THESE SUGGESTIONS. THEY WERE FASHION SHIT TESTS. The other night I was looking through old photos and laughing at how I looked. She agreed and joined in the fun. As I realized she was the one who suggested I let my hair grow shaggy and wear that oversized dress shirt I laughed even harder.
A few months into my RP journey I learned how to fix my appearance. I built a new, smaller wardrobe from scratch. I learned how to get my hair cut properly. I read by myself like a big boy and followed basically none of the advice she had bothered me with for years. And all that stopped. She no longer makes any comment about my clothes other than "you look good" and a smile while looking me up and down. She no longer buys me any clothes unless it's something I specifically asked for (still get softball shit tests about how she "can't buy me anything" because my standards are too high).

- Unless you've got the money, keep your wardrobe small and simple. It's going to cost money to do it right. Do it right. Do not own or wear a piece of clothing that is not flattering and appropriate for the time and place.
- Find a good tailor and make friends with them; you'll be there a lot. Tailor your long sleeve button downs in the torso and sleeves. Tailor your chinos in the waist and leg. Show the body you're building in the gym.
- Don't show me your white Hanes undershirt. Gray v-necks are invisible.
- Consider shirt-stays to keep your dress shirts tucked with clean lines and no "muffin top". The military uses them for a reason.
- Learn about suit fitting, then find and tailor your suits.
- Learn how to match ties to shirts.
- Learn how to tie a tie in a symmetrical knot.
- Find a brand of t-shirt that fits you well (looks tailored). Don't tailor t-shirts.
- Same with jeans. Stretch material is great.
- Once something fits correctly, don't put it in the dryer if it can shrink. Buy a drying rack (they aren't just for weed).
- Learn which brands fit your upper body best, and which your lower. That's your go-to for each. For example Express dress shirts leave a gap at the back of my neck that looks weird. Banana Republic cuts lay flat against my neck.
- Study advertising to learn what kinds of clothes should be worn together and how they should be worn. They know what looks good, because they are literally selling it.

This will all take time, effort, and money, but it's worth it. Your clothing is a reflection of you, and you have high standards.
Why refusing bad sex works.

by sabresixtwo | April 8, 2018 | Link

Lurker of about 2 months. Both of us early forties. Married 14 years, together 20. 3 school aged kids.

Making like Eric Clapton and had enough bad love?

I swallowed the pill and have some intel to share with my MRP friends who, like me, may just be starting down the MRP path. Having sex on average 5 to 6 times a month with wife which is what led me here. It’s ramped up slightly after RP; but still not anywhere close to where it needs to be. At Dread Level 3 now with plenty of work and hobbies outside of the house. Still getting hard rejections about half the time – but not being butt hurt about it.

My advice is this: if you settle for, or moreover, allow, bad sex then you will receive more bad sex.

After swallowing the pill I hit the gym and went a little too Rambo to start. I remembered reading here and also in Sex God Method that you should never be the nice guy who asks his girl, “Can I put my dick in your mouth?” You should tell her, “I’m going to put my dick in your mouth.” DIVI. Well, after initiating with the wife one morning we get into it. She just came from me fingering her so I decide to keep it going with my fingers while I put my dick in her mouth. Being a newfound Sex God, I announce, “I’m going to put my cock in your mouth.” Well, you can guess what happened next...”You need to ask me instead of just doing it.”

“No.” I say.

“What do you mean, ‘No?’”

“I’m not doing that. I’m not asking to have my wife suck my cock.”

“You think you can do whatever you want to me?”

“I understand how you might feel that way, but I don’t think sex is a game of ‘mother-may-I.’ You are my wife. I’m here in bed with you out of desire and love for you. I hope that’s the same reason why you’re here with me. If you want me to ask permission before every act, that’s not going to work for me.”

A little DEER’y – I know – but I felt like an explanation had to be made as to not come off too autistic. After that explanation my answers became much shorter. Broken record. “No, I’m not doing that.” “No.” “No.”

It went back and forth like this for a minute. I kept the talking to a minimum but stuck to my guns that while having sex with my wife, I wasn’t asking for shit. Old me would have tried to smooth it over – anything to get the pussy; especially while she’s wearing my favorite lingerie no less! Gotta get the pussy!
But new RP me isn’t settling for shitty sex where I have to ask all nice-nice to have my dick sucked. So, I waited for her to end one of her diatribes, paused, maintained good eye contact and said, “OK, I’m out.” Took my stinger, got out of bed and started getting dressed to go and do something else.

She followed me. She was drop-a-nuclear-bomb kind of mad and blabbering a mile a minute. At one point she said, “...so what’s your answer?” My response was, “I don’t know, I wasn’t really listening there for a minute, what was the question?” IDGAF.

I continued to get dressed and prepared to leave while she blabbered on. She accuses me of cheating. (I’m not.) When asked direct questions about asking permission instead of announcing, I just kept giving her more broken record, “No. I’m not going to do that. I’m not asking.”

I stayed calm and matter of fact when I had to respond, but mostly tried to STFU as much as possible at this point. She was bullshit. Her hamster must have been spinning the wheel quite hard as she was feeling a tiny bit of power slip away. The pussy always got compliance; this new dynamic will not stand! As she continued her yelling/blabbering/accusations, I thought of a great post here about holding frame. The advice was this: imagine you have antlers. Not any antlers, but a majestic 24 point, 6 foot-wide set of antlers the likes of which the world has never seen. You can’t help but smile while you think about your gigantic rack. I am the king-shit buck of this house. And that’s what I did. I had to stop myself from laughing as she’s frothing at the mouth about how I will ask to do things to her instead of announcing that I was going to do it. Old me would have been so worried about making it all right again and worried if we would make it through this existential crisis. New me? No shit to give. Me and my 24 point rack don’t have time for this foolishness.

I continued to STFU and get my shit together so I can get out of the house. She finally runs out of gas and offers a compromise in the face of my “no” broken record. “I would rather you just put your dick in my face for me to suck instead of announcing that you’re going to put it in my mouth.” OK, I can live with that. I still leave but I do my best to be stoic; giving her a kiss on my way out like I would my daughter.

We had sex the next day and that’s exactly what I did, put my dick in her face. And she sucked it. Problem solved. The sun also rises.

I think the important difference from the past is that after this “disagreement” I didn’t get butt hurt that day or the next. I was sweet, happy, smiling – ratcheted up the kino and pretended like it never happened. She needs the feelz, give her something positive and lead her to being happy too.

Fast forward to a few weeks later and we are in bed about to get started doing the deed. She is wearing probably my second favorite piece of lingerie today. This is going to be good. Oh, what’s this? She’s yawning. I ask her, “Are you here right now or somewhere else?” This degrades into some kind of argument, and, quite honestly I can’t remember what the hell it was about because again, I just looked her in the eye and said, “OK, I’m out. I don’t have time for this. I have to get up at 5am to go to the gym, so I’m gonna go to sleep.” I got up, turned off the light, got on my side of the bed and set myself up to go to sleep. I left her on her side of the bed to pout in her lingerie which, I am sure, made her feel uneasy. Honestly, I was hoping that she would reach over and try to smooth it out, but she didn’t and I was OK with that. 10 minutes later, she gets up in the dark and puts on her pajamas. I didn’t say another word and neither did she. Old me would have DEER’d it out and it would have ended with starfish/duty sex. Fuck that. I’d rather have no sex than bad sex.

The next morning, my alarm goes off at 5am and I’m out of bed to the gym. When I get back I help out with the kid’s morning routine and get myself ready for work. Morning pleasantries with wife, happy, smiles, a little kino drive by... After kids are on the bus, I walk into the bedroom to finish getting ready for work and she’s wearing nothing but the lingerie from the night prior. (She never initiates.) “Want to try to do this again?” Of course I do...and it was good sex where she actually put an effort in. Different positions, oral, dirty talk, acting slutty – she checked all my boxes.

Executive summary: If you are given bad sex, don’t take it. You don’t have bad sex anymore. You only have good sex. Even if you’re balls deep and she’s not putting in the effort, walk away. It will pay dividends.
Make your fucking choice.
by weakandsensitive | October 9, 2018 | Link

Common theme among unattractive men - they just can't make a fucking choice. This is for the most part just a rant.

You see it all over r/askmrp. Every post is effectively the same thing - "Help! Help! Help make this choice for me!"

Just randomly picking from the current front page, we have

- I want to leave my wife, but probably not for a good reason. Me 30 - wife 25
- Want a LTR, plates too distracting
- Want to improve my fiance's domestic skills. Classes?
- How to become more successful in initiating sex? Share your strategies.
- Do you feel closer to your wives after MRP?

You might think the last two were really about discussion. You'd be wrong.

And please give input on mine. I don't have much experience in LTRs.

Do you guys feel like you have a closer relationship with your wife after making the change from beta to Chad? Or am I misguided to think those two things are possible at the same time?

The real translation is this - "I am scared shitless of doing it wrong, so I want to shift the burden of ownership". Other people might be more charitable and call it analysis paralysis. But either way, it's just weak men being pussies - more afraid of failing than they are of the odds of doing something and possible learning something along the way. Active, engaged analysis and learning apparently isn't a thing anymore these days.

But why's that so bad - you might ask? I mean, does indecision really lead to bad consequences?

Yes. It makes you insufferable - and a generally awful person to spend any time with.

Two weekends ago, I spent the weekend in Vegas with a 22 year old buddy of mine. Really nice guy, pretty personable, decent looking but jesus christ did I lose all respect for him after that weekend. Frankly, it's unsurprising why he doesn't really succeed with women. The whole entire weekend, I could not get a single preference out of him. The whole thing was painful - "Thoughts on food?" "Oh you know, wherever." "Steak or sushi?" "I'm good with either." Passive, reactive, and oh so fucking boring. It was as if he weren't there, completely inconsequential. His existence literally did not matter to me. Hell, it didn't even matter to him apparently. How do you engage with someone like that? The answer - you can't, and so you don't.
The power of choice is that making a choice means having a consequence. For the path that is chosen, there will be a path that is rejected, and with that comes ownership of the consequences of the decision that is made. To make a choice, to be decisive, is to embrace that risk and potential uncertainty. It's much easier following than leading - and unless you really incompetent, most people are happy following. Just pick a path - and maybe you'll learn something along the way.

- Re-write the kitchen lighting, and get zapped a few times. Residential voltage won't kill you.
- Try to fix the garage door opener, and bust the entire thing - so now you're stuck replacing the 20 year old opener.
- Eat that escargot from that shady dive bar in Miami - realize snails are nasty.
- Choose to not fuck with the engine, and pay $2000 to the professionals instead.
- Fuck that sketchy hooker. Most STDs are curable.

Or simply make the choice to not choose, to not care, which is very different than being ambivalent.

Making a choice is really easy. Just go do something. Sure you might be wrong, but at least you'll stop being one of those jackasses who are at a fork in the road, sitting around twiddling theirs thumb in their butts, waiting for someone else to hold their hand and lead their way. Those guys aren't making progress. And no one wants to hold your hand if your thumb has shit on it.
Most of my life I had no confidence. Whenever I would reach out to people, they'd reject me and I'd take that as validation of my self-perception that I was socially inept. My confidence was further broken - but I embraced this because I was a validation-seeker at that time, and even negative validation of my own self-perception was still validation all the same. This happened in my marriage over years as I would initiate with my wife. Rejection after rejection broke my confidence that I would ever succeed, until I eventually gave up and welcomed a long dead bedroom.

Fast-forward a couple years. Shortly before finding the red pill, I started working out initiating sex again, expecting that because of some of my peripheral improvements I should see a changed response from my wife. I didn't. This was a covert contract: "I improve myself, she responds sexually." But I hadn't really improved myself. Sure, my physique got better from the tub of lard I'd been, but what I thought were improvements to my frame were actually hollow projections of what I had not yet become. What I thought were confident initiations due to my external behavior was really an internal way of dabbing my toes in the water. It was feigned confidence. Because I was merely playing games at confidence, when it didn't work I took that as further validation of my being a sexual failure.

After swallowing the pill, I realized a subconscious shift in my interpretation of rejection.

- Before: Frequent initiation and rejection validated my perception that I was a failure, killing my confidence.
- After: Frequent initiation and rejection immunized me from the pain of rejection, improving my confidence.
- Now: Confidence is authentic, rejection is rare.

I had given up on initiating sex with my wife for a year and a half at one point - all due to the pain of rejection. When that pain had become severe enough, I developed a natural DNGAF attitude. I had hit rock-bottom so hard that her rejection no longer mattered to me. It was another drop in the ocean. When I started getting affirmation again, there was a brief temptation to salivate at the carrot dangled in front of me, hoping not to get the stick again ... but the next rejection quickly reminded me that I couldn't trust my wife with my emotions any more than I would trust a teenager with my financial portfolio. It's a bad investment.

Here's where I screwed up: more recently, I've stopped initiating. I didn't feel like I had to.
After all, she was doing most of the initiation for a while anyway. So, after a couple weeks, I caught myself asking: "Why isn't she initiating like she used to?" Now, I start rationalizing that it's because she worked over 90 hours last week due to a busy-season deadline. Probably some truth there. But there were also openings I didn't take. At the end of the day, the answer to my question was simple: Because she's a woman. Women are primarily sexually responsive. I had stopped giving her anything to respond to.

What's more interesting is the small voice in the back of my head that used to be a dominant air-horn, now whispering: "She just worked 17 hours today. If you initiate, you'll get rejected, so it's pointless to initiate." Tell that voice to screw off. I stopped initiating, my anti-confident thoughts started returning.

In reality: so what if she rejects me due to her 17 hour work-day? First, maybe some sexual release would be good for her to relieve the stress - but even that is still in her frame. Better just to initiate and either (1) end up having hot stress-relief sex (is that a thing?), or (2) get rejected, making it clear to my subconscious that it's pointless to try taking away my confidence because rejection is not a fear that cripples my confidence, but an invitation that bolsters it.

Axiom: If you develop confidence through successes, your confidence only lasts while you are successful. If you develop it by immunizing yourself against failure, the confidence can never be broken.
What is MRP success? Is the sole purpose of this place to get laid like a porn star? That is rule zero after all. If that is the end game of this sub, then I suppose I'm the biggest failure here for someone who has spent as much time as I have on this journey. Is that what this place is? A playbook for the journey of life as a real man? These questions have went through my mind too many times to count as I've traveled down this road. As I've made my trek, I've had some realizations that I'd like to share.

The Love for Lifting

Every man in his heart of heart wants to be the strongest man he can be. You show me a man who says otherwise and I'll show you a man who's full of shit. I have 4 friends who have all used this exact line on me. "I don't want to lift to get muscles. I lift for endurance". Do you know what they all have in common? They half ass the gym. They go for a while, off for a while, let the membership expire, get a new one, etc. The guys I know who lift for the love of lifting are regularly at the gym. Pushing, learning and growing.

When I first started this trip I lifted dumbbells at home. My heaviest set were 120s. I had a very regimented routine. I pushed myself and limited out on what I could accomplish. End of the day, I was putting in too much and getting too little; I always knew this too. I wouldn't say it was wasted time, but it wasn't optimal in any way. After joining a gym and running my limits on the 5x5 stronglift program, I have found the true love of lifting.

Everyone's love for it is different. Some guys wanna pull 700, so they work towards that. I still do regular compounds, but I like the accessories just as much. The guy who is the biggest at my gym only touches a barbell to bench. I'm 5'8"/200lbs/15%BF. I fuckin love how I look. For me everytime I start a new lift, everytime someone gives me a tip/I give someone a tip or everytime I meet an interesting person at the gym, it's part of my journey.

Finances, Employment and Fulfillment

I'm losing my job in 8 months. If this was happening 3 year ago, I'd be stressed to the max. I'm not even worried a bit. Truthfully I'm excited. I have been smart with money since I found this place and I have a hefty severance coming my way as well.

I could go get another job in the industrial sector or go to school for a trade. Both would bring in decent change. I live a simple life, so money really isn't the issue. The thing is, I've never left work and said "Fuck I feel accomplished today. I really made a difference". I could have a week on a machine and get numbers that nobody else can, get a pat on the back and a gift card and still look at the clock wanting to go home while dreading the next day. I'm done making someone else rich.

Furthermore, I want to help people. I want to work with people and know that I made a difference in their day. If I make less money, but know that my efforts are going towards a greater good, I'm cool with that. If my wife isn't, well she can fuck off. My journey is going in this direction and this journey is about me.

Marriage Post MRP

When I first came to MRP, I wanted my wife to change. I wanted her to be the woman that I always thought she could be. Fuck me did I keep that covert contract running in the background for way too long too.

I had a vision of her fucking me like so many of the dudes on here claim to be receiving. I ran the steps of Dread and seen marginal success. Even then only when it hit a point of Hysterical Bonding. That kind of manipulation is taxing and not for me.

Shit, there is a chick who has became friends with us. Probably more so me, but my wife really likes her too. We ended up at a house party last month. She was all over me. Touching me at every opportunity she got. At one point, she was sitting beside me with her hand on my leg and biting her lip as she gave me the fuck me eyes while my wife stared in disgust. We were saying our goodbyes in the kitchen and she started arguing with me that I'm an asshole for not staying and letting my wife go home alone. As my wife is standing right there! If that's not Dread, I don't know what is.

The thing is, I don't want to fuck someone else. I always thought that I was gonna have cutie playing second fiddle, but when I became a man who could accomplish that, I stopped yearning for it. This summer I had a chick (100% dime too) literally taking her clothes off and trying to undo my belt. I full stopped it and left. I don't want other bitches. I want my wife. Maybe this is purple as fuck, but I really don't care.

We kiss all the time, hold hands in public, dance in the kitchen while we cook and listen to music, drink together while we talk about life, etc. When she is sad or stressed out, I fix it. Not by asking her what's wrong and doing things to make her happy, but by being an immovable stone that she can lean on in these times. We have a genuine love for one another (not soulmates or any of that unconditional BS) and that's all I want. MRP has given me the tools to navigate this love and see it for what it actually is and not what a beta thinks it should be.

Farewell Faggots

As time goes on, I come here less and less. I think the MRP portion of my journey in life is coming to a close (there is a tear in the corner of my eye as I type that). The stuff I've learned in this community has had an immeasurable impact on my life and will continue to do so for the rest of it. So this is Drty checking out. I won't delete as my journey could bring me back here someday, but I'm signing out and moving on.

As I stand in front of this mirror, I'm reminded of the person who used to stare back at me in despair. NEVER AGAIN
We have all the weapons
by InChargeMan | October 8, 2018 | Link

I once had a mentor well skilled in various fighting arts. He once told me (ad-libbed) "When a person has a weapon they put all of their energy, concentration and faith in that weapon. When you take that weapon away they are now lost. Don't put your faith into a weapon that can be taken away." Your body, strength, intelligence, instincts, and willpower are your weapons.

A woman's weapon is withholding sex and divorce-rape. Everything else is noise. Take away those weapons.

How funny is it that men all over the world put up with a harpy cunt who won't fuck when her only weapons are to remove her shitty presence and continue to not fuck them? Seriously, what weapon does she have? It is all smoke and mirrors if you are a man of value.

Divorce rape? Yeah, if you've fucked up to the point where you are now a prime candidate for divorce rape, then that sucks. But, what's done is done. Sunk cost fallacy applies here. In your mind, take half your shit, everything that you will "lose" in divorce and bury it 6 feet under. Consider it gone. Money is a tool, you can always get more. Don't let the fear of losing something as arbitrary as money allow you to squander the limited time you have in this life.

"I spent my life unhappy because I was afraid I would be unhappy if I lost money." and "I don't want to piss off my wife because she might give me even less sex than the non-existent amount I get now." Sound pretty fucking ridiculous, don't they?

You are the only person who has power over you. Be the master of yourself, use your weapons to shape the world to fit your vision. If your wife doesn't fit your vision, give her the tools to adapt or send her packing. If you are doing this right there is no negotiating, no arguing, no conflict. If you are upset that it is raining do you yell at the clouds? No, clouds DNGAF about your feelings, you are operating within their frame. Your choice is to stay out in the rain or leave, the cloud is going to do what it does either way. Be the cloud.

You are going to live a life with as much quality sex as you want, spending time with people who are respectful and add value, and doing things with your time that make you happy. If she wants to be a part of that vision then great, if not, great. She has no weapons, you have all of the weapons, use them.
OK, so first post here, I normally wouldn't post, but I feel obligated to in order to potentially contribute to saving other's marriages.

Because I feel like I've finally had a breakthrough due largely to reading info here, and other red pill sources.

And I want to thank you all here, and also give hope that it's possible for you as well.

Also, I feel like I need to document this before the details get fuzzy, and I want to be able to look back on this myself to mine it for experience in case my frame/mindset slips in the future.

I feel like I was in a rare spot in regards to my red pill prior knowledge to marriage, and my recent situation.

I had to approach things a bit differently but I would not have been as successful without reading here.

And I feel like I moved fast. So there's a shred of hope here as well in terms of timeline.

Anyways here it goes:

My wife and I have been together for 15 years. Married for 10. We have two small kids at home.

Things have been generally good in the relationship, but not sexually fulfilling enough for me. Or really, even physically affectionate enough for me. It's felt pretty platonic for the last couple years. Last year even more so.

We had sex about once a week, but it was "duty sex" or "starfish sex" or whatever you want to call it.

She'd complain if I touched her, recoil. Complain during sex. Saying I "last too long", "can you hurry up already", that type of stuff.

Sex was almost always scheduled, and became to the point where we'd like have "contracts" around it. "Can we have sex this Friday?"

If it was less than a week she'd say "It's not even been a week yet."

You probably know the drill. (Hopefully you haven't experienced it...)

I have not been super red pill aware in the traditional sense. Before meeting my wife, I had been familiar with the PUA communities. I knew some "game", and went out regularly
"sarging" girls, or whatever they call it, I forget honestly.

I met my wife doing that, we didn't meet online or through friends or anything like that. I picked her up on the street.

She became my long term girlfriend, then wife. I believe I maintained frame mostly throughout.

But over the last couple years I was losing it.

It's a delicate process to keep frame with her. Mostly my fault. But I like to take her with me on most of our adventures. I don't run "dread" in a way where I'm gone away from her. I take her places with me. Active places.

Boating, hiking, skiing, long camping trips, etc.

I also work from home a lot, and help out with the kids.

This FEELS like my frame to me because I always have wanted to stay at home with the kids, that was my vision. And I didn't want my wife to work either. I kinda wanted to "retire" while raising kids. That's been my vision from the beginning.

So I help out with the kids because I want to. My choice. Not a chore, or duty.

I also like to cook. I find it fun, challenging, and rewarding.

I don't like to clean but I keep things pretty tidy. (This is one area I think I lose frame.) Because my wife is not as clean as me. And if I let her clean, she does, but her definition is much lower than mine, and as a result I've taken to cleaning dishes and I'll go on tidying up sprees around the house. I DON'T enjoy this, and probably lose frame as a result. But I do it because I want it cleaner than she seems to be able to get it.

Anyhow, I was losing frame there, and getting frustrated with sex declining.

I believe my frustration started to bleed through, and I began to feel resentment. As a result of that, I started to fail shit tests, and then the shit tests amped up.

Then I failed more.

Big mistake on my part.

I want her to get back into shape. She's not too out of shape, but not to the level before kids.

We've always worked out together, I feel like I'm a good trainer and I've essentially trained her for 14 years.

I've been lifting for 20 years, (yes, deadlifts, squats, and all that jazz, and so has she.)

So that weirdly also makes "dominating" her a little harder. She's very athletic, and strong, and even moreso when she has extra weight on her. She could legit take on most average guys no problem. She also has martial arts training.

Anyhow, I feel like "dominating" her is on pretty hard mode and I've made maintaining frame really difficult on myself. (Whoops...)

Regardless, she's a great mom and has many feminine qualities as well. But jeez, she can sure be a force to recon with if she wants. And her shit tests can be downright scary.

Mostly I pass, but damn I was slipping.

I unconsciously started to up my "game". So I would try more keno on her, touch, kiss, etc.
But she was increasingly pushing me away.

I would go on more adventures, be fun, spontaneous. Take the kids without her around. Go fancy places to eat. I never got out of shape. I never got lazy. I believe I've gotten better at work, even made more money.

She doesn't work. She's more out of shape than me. I believe her SMV is at least one below if not two below mine. I also really believe I could go out and "replace her" if I wanted to without a whole lot of work. But hell, I don't want to do that. I just want her to be more affectionate towards me, and not reject my affection towards her.

I also want to kick this "starfish sex" to the curb and get her to honestly desire me again.
(She's never been that great in bed, but it was really sucking, and not literally.)

Anyhow, I searched around, and found the red pill.

Lots of things I'm familiar with, but wow, did the shit testing thing stand out. So I started there.

In the meantime, I read two of Rolo's books The Rational Male, and the 3rd volume of the same name.

I also checked out Donovan Sharpe and liked a lot of what he had to say.

I upped my game, but it wasn't budging.

I even went on a week long mountain climbing expedition with a friend away from her and the kids and risked my life and had fun while doing so.

Not cool enough for her I guess.

Anyways. I looked in the deadbeadroom community and wow that's depressing. That didn't seem to help.

But then I saw the "dread game" post. The 12 levels of dread.

Donovan Sharpe has a 9 level version that sounded better to me, but is very similar.
That sounded great, but was super depressing because I felt like I had most of those bases covered.

I was reading through level 1 and was like "check did that."

Level 2 "Check"

Level 3 "Check"

Level 4 "Check"...

All the way up to Level 8 which is "Talk to pretty girls in public" and I freakin even do that, but for fun I amped that up more. And no response. I think she just expects me to do this now.

So where the heck do I go from there? It felt like the nuclear option. But I was ready to go nuclear at that point. Like honestly.

Meanwhile, back in the bedroom, things were getting worse, she now wanted 2 weeks between sex. (Based on her saying it hurt to have sex.)

I told her that was OK, but I needed something in-between, like manual stimulation, blowjob whatever. Meet me halfway.

She wouldn't do it.

When I confronted her about it, she got pissed off and began yelling.

So here's where I went a bit off script here, and I hope it worked (long term) because it did short term at least.

I backed off my request for any type of sexual encounter, and asked her just to touch me. Because it was so hard to even get anything affectionate out of her for so long. (And I had been requesting her to reciprocate back rubs, or to pretend I'm actually with her while sitting on the couch instead of ignore me and look at her phone, etc.)

I said, "OK, then, just touch me. I mean, like I'm setting the bar super low here, just touch me on the shoulder or something right now. Can you do that small of a thing for me?"

Nope.

She wouldn't do it.

And that's where I felt like I had a right to go nuclear.

I escalated to the 9th level of dread, and basically said: "OK, that's really disappointing, I'm not really even mad, I'm more shocked and disappointed, I mean I love you, but I love my mom, I love my dad, I love our kids, I love your parents too, but hell I'm not going to have sex with them. You're my wife, you are special, sex is what makes you my wife. It's the difference between the love I have for our family and the love I have for you, my wife."

Then I think I took it to weird town, but I was going from my zen place. I said, "I just don't think you love me like that anymore, especially if you won't even touch me. You obviously hate sex with me, you complain when we have sex the whole time, and you recoil from me when I touch you outside of sex. I have to bribe you into sex, and I hate feeling like I'm raping you. I think you're done with me, and I hate that but I love you so I'm going to let you go. I want to stay together for the kids sake, but you go out and find someone you can be affectionate towards, and can actually enjoy sex with. Because that something I certainly need, and I'm not getting it here. I don't want to deny you of that either. So we can co-parent, I'll respect your boundaries, you respect mine. You go get a Tinder account or something, I'm sure you can find someone, and I'll do the same. I can take the kids while you go out if you do the same for me. We can make it work."

Boom. Mic drop. And I was serious.

She was silent for awhile. Then got a pissed off and yelling again. I forget what happened next. But I laid down in bed in the dark as she stormed out of the room.

I laid there for a long time.

Honestly, I was afraid for my life. I was afraid for her life.

I imagined her grabbing a knife and coming back in and in one swoop opening the door and stabbing me 19 times in the stomach.

I imagined her doing the same thing to herself.

It was heated. And she is no joke when she's pissed.

I really had to make peace with that being the end of my life there.

But I did not get up. I knew if I got up it would be worse. I would be failing yet another shit test on an epic scale.

So I had my life flash before my eyes, vulnerable under the sheets, moments from defenseless potential deadly attack. And I stood my ground.

The next day was weird.

I pretended to be normal. I went out and did some stuff away from her. Escalating the dread game by going back down the levels and moving back up again in a way (skipping around really).

I worked out without her. Went running, and also lifted. Did some stuff away from her and the kids.

Next day the same.
She was holding her ground too.

It was a weird standoff for a few days.

I did my best to feel the honest feeling of being free. Having the opportunity to find new affection.

I really was worried about how this would shake out with the kids if she took me up on this offer for real. But I was already living it.

I took my wedding ring off in public. And suddenly realized... She hadn't had her ring on in years! Her fingers swelled from the weight gain and general body changes of having kids. And we never got it resized.

That kinda got me pissed honestly. But it was a double edged sword for her, cause I could take mine off and feel free, she didn't have that little luxury.

I decided that if she wanted to come back and try and fix things that I would make it a requirement for her to get her ring resized and start wearing it ASAP.

Anyhow, after a long standoff and another night laying together in bed, pretending nothing was wrong...

She said, "Can you tell me again what happened the other night?"

I was like, "We were both there, and lived it. What do you mean?"

She said, "I mean what exactly did you say again?"

I very calmly said, "OK, the only way I can tell you this is if we do not argue at all during this. I will state mostly facts, and then some of my opinion. If you're OK with that then I'll give you a recap...."

She agreed.

Then I went through the whole co-parent thing (and she did try and argue a few times, but I shut that down quick.)

She started breaking down and crying. Sobbing.

She blubbered, "I feel so sad, I've been crying for days, I even got a hug from a stranger because I was crying so hard. I feel so sad."

I don't think she's very good at resolving things on her own. But I did get a vibe that she did want to change. This is where I was glad I read about "comfort tests" here. Because that was a totally new concept for me.

So I gave in to it and said, "Well I told myself I wouldn't do this, but here..."
I gave her a giant bear hug and told her: "It will be OK, we'll figure this out, I love you, we can make this co-parent thing work, I'm not sure how, but we'll make it work." (Staying in frame.)

She then really broke down and said something to the effect of "I want to make US work, I'm really sorry, I messed up, I didn't know how much this meant to you."

I wasn't going to let her get away with that and said, "See that's the problem, I made it as clear as possible, I started small and kept escalating over months, until I simply asked you to touch me and you couldn't even do that. You clearly knew how much that I needed your affection and you couldn't even do that. I don't know how to make it more clear, and you are unable to process it. I really just don't think you like me that way anymore, and I've come to terms with that, it's OK, we'll figure it out."

Lots of backpedaling from there on her part, I forget most of it. But I just stuck my ground. Until she was basically pleading with me to have me back.

And I was happy about that. But it did feel kinda "too little too late".

So this is where I felt my opportunity was to turn things around.

We broke things down and now we rebuild.

So I put some terms.

"OK, I do love you, I want us to be together, I never wanted to stop trying, I felt like you were checked out. So I let you go. But if you really want to give this a shot, you have to do some things differently."

She seemed open. So I continued.

"One, you need to be ok with me touching you. No recoiling in disgust. No rolling your eyes. No pushing me away. I need you to find me in the morning, walk over to me and be OK with us kissing for at least 10 full seconds if I want that. I need you to be alright with me casually slapping you on the ass, even in public if I want. And you're going to like it. I need to be able to touch all over your body with no restrictions. No complaints.

Two. I need frequent enough sex. And I'm going to define this. Nothing crazy. But no 'drip feed' sex. I don't want to be starving and barely make it to the next week. Sometimes every day, sometimes twice a day. Sometimes twice a week. No rules, but stop restricting. If you have a legit physical issue, then you make concessions, give me something another way than sex. Figure it out.

Three. You get your wedding ring resized ASAP. Like tomorrow. And wear it. Start acting like my wife."

She agreed.

To all three.
So I said, "OK, if you're serious, let's give it a try. Let's start now."

Then we had some of the best sex we'd had in years. (Surprise, no physical problems related to sex suddenly...) But hey no complaints from me. (Still so strange how that magically resolved.)

Thanks to this community I'm aware of hysterical bonding, and have done some research around that. I think we are in a bit of a dual hysterical bonding phase right now. Because I legit thought I lost her. And she seems to believe she legit lost me.

But I'm hoping to use this bonding as an on-ramp to make lasting change.

It's been a week since this happened. And every morning, she finds me, and a big LONG kiss.

Sex has been an average of once a day. Much more spontaneous. Not scheduled.

I'm trying out the "caveman sex" and "sex god" method (I'm half way through that book). I actually did some dominance stuff the other day. Dirty talk. (Never done dirty talk before.) I even picked her up, ran her down the hallway and slammed her against the door then threw her on the bed.

I'm aware this may not last. But I sure hope we can use it to our advantage.

I'm telling her that I feel more free now to be myself now that she put her "shields down" which is totally true. And as such feels like a real reason for my behavior change in the bed. And she agreed to the terms.

By the way, she really seemed to like the dominance/dirty talk. And I alternated it with the emotional talk too. I like that combo. We also had sex with the lights on for the first time in ages and that was cool.

Anyhow. Wish us luck going forwards. But man... I woulda been totally lost and crazy frustrated, maybe on my way to a divorce.

This place shot me towards essentially divorcing, but with a real chance of also making things way better.

I felt like it was the right move. I hope it turns out to be the long-term right move. I honestly feel like it's the right move for her too. We were obviously both miserable and desperate on some fundamental levels. And this hopefully shook us loose of the trap we laid for ourselves.

I hope I can keep up this level of effort in being a better man. I can feel it draining my energy right now, I feel hyper vigilant. Like I really am keeping my foot on the gas. And it's hard.

I want to keep pushing. Thank you for the help in doing so.

You have my gratitude.
[Married Game] If you're not flirting with/gaming your wife, you deserve celibacy (looking at you intermediate MRPs).

by A_Rex | February 13, 2017 | Link

Post after post after post here and on askMRP lately have been something like this:

OP: "I've been doing MRP for 4-8 months. Lift religiously, solid gains, dress sharp, killing it at work, 2-3 cool new hobbies, IOIs from random bitches. But wife still barely fucks me. What do?"

Comment: "do you flirt/game/initiate?"

OP: "no, because reasons".

Comment: "are you fun?"

OP: "no, need to work on that".

See the problem? If you don't flirt with and game a woman, she's not going to fuck you. It doesn't matter how "hawt" you're getting. This is just as true for your wife as it is for some club girl or Tinder slut. No game = no fun = no pussy.

We tell newer guys to go slow and not go Red Pill Rambo. Nowhere do we say not to initiate until you've won more Super Bowls than Tom Brady. In addition to lifting, dress, frame and the other dread levels 1-5, you need to be working on game. And you need to be fun! The last thing you need is to go from being a fat, supplicating bitch to being her boring, old, stodgy, all-business father. She doesn't want to fuck either of those archetypes.

Flirt with your wife. Give her the same body language, smile and eye contact we tell you to give strange broads in public. You know, Be Attractive. Now she's your wife, so you can and should push the hell out of the envelope with her.

We have a litany of posts on how to get your wife to be a slut (check my post history, /u/TheFamilyAlpha's post history, The Family Alpha blog, MMSLP, etc.). But if those are too advanced for your marriage right now, and they might be if you aren't hawt enough yet or don't have total frame, here are some beginner basics and tips that have worked for me:

- Give her a kiss and firm ass grab when you get home.
- Pinch her ass or push up on it if she bends over in front of you.
- Pass shit tests with A&A laced with light hearted sexual innuendo. (here's the subtlety. Sex and sexuality must always be at the forefront, but do it smoothly. Even if you are six-pack jacked with bitches throwing their panties at you in the supermarket, most women do not like downright raunchy sex talk out of nowhere. It activates their latent anti-slut defense and makes them feel dirty. Then they feel like you are being creepy. Don't do that - that's unattractive.)

- If she says something mundane, pretend you misheard it as something sexual, then laugh about it together and give her a knowing wink.
- Kino. Do it regularly, without being creepy. Sitting on the couch together? Quit being the scared little boy we all were when we were 13 and went to the movies with a girl for the first time. She's your wife; put your arm around her. Pull her in for a quick kiss. It doesn't need to be 10 seconds or bust. It needs to be fun. Give her the butterflies in her stomach. Make her feel alive.
- If she puts her feet near you, rub them. Run your finger gently up her calf.
- try tickling her next time she acts bratty
- if kids aren't around, rock out with your cock out unexpectedly from time to time. If she comments, say "stop looking at my penis, you little pervert!" In a joking tone.
- if you wake up before her, roll her way, gently rub your hand on her mound while leaning in to give her a good morning kiss. Judging her reaction (and based on logistics), this can lead to wake up sex. Bonus points if you have raging morning wood. (Pro tip - women are shit judges of cock size, so use this to your advantage, no matter your size. If you wake up raging hard, prop yourself up so that your torso is sitting at about a 45 degree angle to your bottom. Say "oh my god, hunny, you gotta wake up and see this". This angle will make it look like your dick reaches your navel, which is one way chicks measure dick size. It's retarded from a mathematical standpoint, I know, but remember women don't have any concept of actual measured length. They go by feels, and the relative size comparison here is what a lot of women use to judge whether a cock is average or huge. Many a morning I've done this, and even though I know it's the same size, I act like its unusually huge, and the result is her saying "holy shit! I need to feel that - let me pee real quick. Keep that thing hard!")

Bottom line - unless you in the act of withdrawing time/affection, be fun and flirty all the time. It won't always lead to sex on the spot and generally won't unless you escalate it - but it doesn't have to. You are setting the tone (frame) that sexy fun is just something you two do. It's part of your marriage. Do it all the time, and it won't seem weird to her and activate any latent slut defenses, because that's just what you do. If you have logistical opportunity, escalate if you want. If she no's, go about your business and try again later/tomorrow.

Come up with your own moves, but remember: Girls just wanna have fun. So be fucking fun!

Edit: best I can do with formatting on mobile.
It works...

MRP... You are making a believer out of me. This is long. Grab a drink. You might just relate.

I have been married 2 years, LTR 7 years. Just had a kid. I started out strong, but over the years, I have slowly let the Alpha I had from my dating years melt away and have become a full-scale beta bitch. A real "nice guy".

Sex started out great back in college. All kinds of freaky shit. Multiple times per week. I am happy. Then we move in together, and things get a little more "plain". "OK, maybe this is just how it is growing up" I think. We are both busy professionals, and I'm stacking paper like never before. Maybe I just let it slide...

We buy a house together. I'm killing it in my career (busted through $100k. Pushing $200k consistently), but it takes all my time, so I quit going to the gym...

I am busy AF at my career and she is a licensed accountant with a Masters degree. I'm looking for places to delegate, so I hand over the household finances. Totally. Just makes good sense right? (fml...)

She whines about work a lot when I get home and it pisses me off, so I tell her to just quit her stupid job. I make more anyways. She does. Whining decreases, which is nice... but sex continues to decrease. Was hoping for the opposite once she wasn't stressing. I let it slide, but it's eating away at me...

I start whining like a bitch to her that I need more. When it's been too long, I have tantrums like a child. This is not me. But in the moment, I just freak out. Punch a hole in the drywall, cry about it, etc.

I keep trying things. Dates, gifts, massages, every covert contract you can imagine. Nothing brings the sex back. In desperation I break down and visit prostitutes from time to time. Wife is still totally disinterested. What the fuck happened to me?

Fast-forward a bit. Wife wants to start trying to get pregnant while off of work. Sex is OK while trying, but really just a lot of missionary, and ONLY when she is sure she's ovulating... this isn't as fun as I expected. Whatever. We get pregnant. Suddenly sex basically stops dead. FOR. A. YEAR. Are the rules changing? What is happening now? By the end of pregnancy, I'm down to a disinterested duty hand-job every two weeks or so. Sex? Yeah right. I could get a duty starfish if I massaged her for an hour or some shit. Awesome.

Our kid was born 6 weeks ago and I beta'd even harder. Staying up all night to help with feedings. Getting no sleep. Cleaning the house constantly (why is a man who makes $200k doing fucking dishes every night? Because my wife doesn't like the idea of a maid... and doesn't like cleaning... and doesn't mind living in filth. Fuck me right?). I'm hanging out with the in-laws, running errands, changing diapers, Basically "serving" in any way I could. I had never been so miserable. Made this throwaway and victim puked about it on /r/daddit (go read the post if you're curious. It's shameful. I won't delete it. It's a reminder to me now of how low I was).

The big 6 week appointment where it's "OK" to have sex again came and went. Tried a few times. Whined when she wasn't interested. Had a full scale tantrum about it basically where I cried again (yes this is humiliating to admit).

The low point: One night, I am getting my beta on hard. Gifts, dinner, massages, etc. Baby is asleep. In bed I try to get a hand on her down there. Trying to be a little assertive, but she's just laying there. She worms away and says "It makes me uncomfortable when you touch me like that". This is it. This is my breaking point. I have no more fucks to give.

A switch flipped in my brain. I stared at her and couldn't say anything for a while. I wanted to freak out and throw another tantrum, but had already had a tantrum just a few days back. What was the point? Didn't change anything.

I just stared for a while. Then I rolled over, laid back down and started to think hard. Divorce? maybe... pretty shitty with a new kid. More prostitutes? maybe... but it doesn't make me feel any better really. An affair? maybe... I'll try anything. Just checking-off the options in my head with an open mind. I must make a change, even if it kills me.

She tried to talk to me, ask whats wrong, offer duty hand job, etc. I ignored it all. Got up, and left quietly. Was planning to set up a divorce. Got on my computer.

I started googling. ended up in /r/deadbedrooms. Yes, there are lots of people like me, all here whining... but they're just whining. No-one here has answers or success (sex). Someone mentions TRP in passing on deadbedrooms. I had heard of it before, but never took it seriously. That's for cartoonish "players" (right?). But I decide to reserve judgment. I'll try anything at this point. How much worse can it get? I end up at MRP...

Read a few posts. Sounds too good to be true, but the concepts click and make sense to me. I look over the side-bar. "Huh... TWOTSM..." my dad gave me this book years ago and I stuck it on a shelf to gather dust. I go grab it right away. I get a copy of NMMNG and start reading... just a chapter a day. Learning all the definitions slowly: Frame, shit tests, fogging, covert contracts. "Oh my god they have names for all the shit I'm going through why haven't I seen this before?!" Thanks dad. I'm a stubborn asshole. I will listen to you more often.

NMMNG is basically inside my head now reading my life back to me. It's terrifyingly accurate. OK. They got me. I'm a statistic. Learning time.

Rebuilding from the ruins: I. stop. taking. shit.

I never realized how many times per day she asked me for stupid tasks. Just little stuff like "can you grab me a water bottle?" I know it's low level, but Nope. Ignoring it all now. She notices. This pisses her off.

Friends coming over and I clean the whole house spotless (a mistake, I know. More on this later.). She makes herself breakfast and leaves her pan in the sink right after. I normally would have grabbed it and washed it. No biggie. Instead I scold her like a child and say "clean up after yourself when you cook". This is not like me. She is stunned and shoots back "I will when I feel like it". Me "I just cleaned every other thing in the house. That is your fucking mess, and your fucking problem. You clean that shit up". Her "You're the one that wants to impress our friends, you deal with it". She has me. I realize I'm failing this shit test. "I like a clean house, and if you don't respect that and clean up after yourself, I am going to hire someone to do it until our divorce. I don't give a shit if they steal your jewelry or whatever scares you about that" She has no words. IDGAF. Doorbell.

Her only contributions to conversation are nagging bullshit or correcting me in front of friends on immaterial facts. I'll be telling a story and say "4 years ago X happened". She will butt in and say "it was 5 years". This happens CONSTANTLY. I usually respond "oh lol her memory is great. she knows best." no more. I ignore her and bulldoze over that shit in conversation her while friends are over. She notices. She gives me shit when they leave. I said "if you continue to disrespect me in front of our friends like that, I will continue to ignore your useless contributions to our conversation. Say something useful next time". She is angry. I leave the house. IDGAF

No more getting up to help feed the kid. I am now sleeping all night which feels AWESOME. No more cleaning the house. The garbage starts to pile up. Her fucking pan is still in the sink. I ignore it. Shopping maids... IDGAF

Queue her a day or two later "I feel like you're not contributing any more". IDGAF. I laugh it off and move on with my day doing things I enjoy.

I stop wearing my ring. She notices. Pouts about it but doesn't say anything. IDGAF.

I start working out again. Slowly. Push-ups. Pull ups. I know I need to take this out of the house. It feels so good still. Doing it every day.

Watching movies I enjoy at home instead of fucking rom-coms and feels-y bullshit. "Oh you don't like Rocky 2? IDGAF. Anyway you should go feed the bab... OH LOOK HE JUST PUNCHED THE SHIT OUT OF HIS ENEMY! LOOK AT ALL THE BLOOD! BAHahaha." feels good. I feel alive again.

She whines later about how I'm being "harsh". I kiss her on the head like a child and tell her it will be OK. I have it under control.

Things come to a head: She is whining again after putting down the baby that I am "harsh" lately. I go in to give her a little hug and kiss on the head as-usual. She turns away from me looking down to avoid it and I stop dead. It happened so fast it's hard to remember, but instinct took over. I reel back and slap her ass. Hard. Nice loud noise. Hand is tingly. It was a good one. Look her in the eye and say "Do not pull away when I go to hug you bitch." This surprises her. Frankly, this surprises me... I am unsure what I have just done, but hold frame. This is pretty far out of character for me.

She says "Don't hit me". I say "I will hit you again if you try that shit again." She has no words. To my surprise, does not cry about it or anything. Just silence. Processing... Respect? Who knows.

Now as an aside for any SJWs out there worried about "hitting". Let's just get this out of the way. I would never strike my wife in a way that would harm her. This was a hard slap on the ass. Don't talk to me about it. I know the difference.

Anyways, to my surprise, she softens a bit after that. Looking at me for direction while minding the baby. Confused maybe?

I have an idea "Babe, I'm pissed off because we haven't fucked in way too long. I have an idea. Give me a blow-job". She looks angry/amused/intrigued. Baby is up so we can't right away, but she actually seems receptive to the idea. Last blow job was... idk, 6 months ago? This is completely new territory for us. My heart is racing. She says "what do I get?" LOL. "Nothing. This is for me". She has no answer to that.

We put the baby in the car to go for a drive (gets her to sleep) and after I close the door, I turn in the garage and push her head down a bit. She is actually considering it. I am surprised by this. Baby starts to cry so we quit and go handle that instead, but the whole drive feels like foreplay to me. We actually laugh and talk like friends(!) Go get ice-cream. I feel like I'm dating in high-school again. It's electric.

We get home and put the baby down. I can feel it coming. I shove her on to the bed. Normally for a BJ, I lay down and she does the deed. I do not lay down. Kneeling. She rolls with it and gets into position. This is awesome. My thoughts are racing "So the trick is hitting your wife more! Figured it out!" (jk lol, but still...).

Then... (and this may be a defeat. Input welcome). She stops. Mouth on tip of my dick. And says "Will you put your wedding ring back on after this?"

FUCK. THIS IS A SHIT TEST AND I KNOW IT. FUCK. I scramble for a good answer but... dickbrain... best I come up with is "maybe?"... lol FAIL. She continues to tease. I cave. I say "sure babe." Please tell me men, what is the right play here?

Anyhow, I know I failed, but commence awesome enthusiastic blow job. This is not duty sex. This is good shit. I feel like a man getting a glass of water in the desert. Enjoy every moment. Finish up playful. Grab her hair when finishing up and kiss her/pin her to the bed and make a mess of her because I know she was trying to stay clean. She complains but obviously likes it. So good.

We clean up. Kiss. go to bed. She comes in to cuddle. I allow it.

The next day, I get home from work. THE HOUSE IS CLEAN. She cleaned the whole house. This... this does not happen in my life. I go from "maybe TRP isn't so dumb" to "I will live by the good word of TRP as long as I have breath in my body". I am converted and I see the light. My mind is open to your strange, mysterious, and powerful ways TRP. Teach me.

That was today.
I am feeling excited but apprehensive. I feel like a toddler with a handgun. I have just been given more power than I know how to handle.

Men... I must have more. how do I not fuck this up?
Fuck You, that’s why

Welcome back to another episode of what kind of shit can old Scurve (those who know me from back then) stir up.

Nah. You wouldn’t believe me if I told you I had a good college educated girl want to get tied up and fucked with a knife.

Now. No one was injured. Relax.

This isn’t about sex.

Not directly.

It’s not about your wife. Or your job. Or your kids. Or that single mom you’re trying to fuck on the side. It’s not about creating drama. Not directly.

It’s about power dynamics in any relationship. Love. Work. Anything in between.

There is only one secret to this whole thing.

Not giving a fuck and being willing to walk away. From anything.

Fuck you. I said willing. I didn’t tell you to divorce her. That’s your choice.

Here’s the deal. One of the reasons we tell you to go lift is to give you confidence about doing hard things.

The reason we say to get money to walk away from your shitty job is to make it logistically easier to do so.

But nothing can help you if you’re not willing to say “fuck it” and walk away when you’re not happy with the company you keep.

If you’re not willing to burn that shit down - it’s all for nothing and you’ll still be in your dead bedroom.

If you can’t tell your scared inner boy “fuck you, talk to women” - I don’t care how jacked you are.

I’ve seen too many jacked guys who are in the 1k club, 9% bf be scared to talk to girls to still believe that’s all it takes.

Build your inner game. Be willing to take a risk. Be willing to open a girl up with “nice shoes, wanna Fuck?” Jus for laughs. (this works waay more often than it has any right to).

So do the work that makes you able to say “fuck it” and walk away.
Thank me later.

Fuck you.
Are you new? Let's have a conversation...

First off, you found this place. Good work. Welcome down the rabbit hole. There are men who take their last breath never learning the knowledge you could potentially gain here. And sadly most of them needed it. You are now among the few indoctrinated men who get to decide between the blue pill and the red pill.

Should you accept the challenge and swallow that red pill, what you learn will change your life. With a lot of time and self-reflection all the changes you work towards will give you peace. But first you will get angry. Embrace it. The anger will be your fuel. Store it up. Unleash it at the gym. Watch your body become a glorious, physical manifestation of your anger.

Outside this here manly Garden of Eden, you've been taught to talk with your wife about your feelings. What you want. What you NEED, damnit. These talks often centered around sex. Have you had this talk? Did the talk do any good? Nope, it didn't. You've been duped. You were never quite sure why these talks didn't work, but you had this feeling that something wasn't right. Well, here is what was not right...

You can't negotiate desire.

Say it again...

You can't negotiate desire.

Now hang on. You're about to face some tough love and some shocking language. Don't like that sort of thing? Leave now. Never come back. We aren't here to convince you of anything. But know we're here to help...somewhat...

Does your wife boss you around like you're a child? Does she treat you like a bumbling idiot who might shrivel up and die if she left for a few days? Sound eerily familiar?

This means you are her child.

And your wife doesn't want her child to fuck her. That's disgusting. And by the transitive property of fucking, you're disgusting. It's time to fix that. You fixing this problem does not involve your wife and definitely does not involve further conversations about your feelings with your wife.

Oh don't worry, I hear you. "But I go to work...I bring home money and put a roof over her and my kids' heads!" Doesn't matter. There are penniless but cocky, confident men out there who can slay gorgeous, female Heads of State. Any...time...they...want. Your wife's nether regions don't care about your paycheck. If your income and what you buy her alone... guaranteed sex, then what you married is a whore. Don't treat your wife like a whore. That's also disgusting.

If your wife fell off a cliff tomorrow (this is not a suggestion), could you go out and get a date with an attractive woman easily? Do you physically look like a man a random woman would want to fuck? No? You're going to fix that.

Come on over here. Take my hand and let's go for a walk of knowledge. I'm going to hand-hold you through every step of learning the Red Pill.

Sucker. Let go of my hand. Fuck that. Jesus Christ, you're worse off than I thought.

Guess what? No one cares about you. No one. Nada. Zero. Zip. Not even your wife...at least not the way you thought she did. To all of us here on this forum you are a username with a post history. You are a set of 1’s and 0’s on this vast Internet. You could die tomorrow and we'll never know.

It's time for you to care about you. And by caring about yourself, others will want to be in your presence. They will want to bask in your attention.

Your job right now is to shut up. Stop engaging all your problems and feelings head on with your wife. Assume you know nothing. Because you know nothing. Don't read a few posts on here and go all Red Pill Rambo trying to shoot down your wife's bad behavior like a seasoned professional. You will fuck shit up. Your wife is an innately trained Red Pill Ninja that has been skillfully subduing your pathetic ass without you even knowing it. So until you've immersed yourself in this knowledge and have truly internalized these concepts, don't go launching a Red Pill rocket at your marriage. It will blow up in your face.

Now, look to the right of this webpage. Do you see that Sidebar with a list of information? Do you see the Course Prerequisites? Read all of that. Seriously, read it. As you read it and sometimes get confused or stuck, THEN come here and post well thought out questions. If you are doing the work and you genuinely need help, the guys here will write novels trying to explains things to you. It will be the closest thing to caring you will find. But if you come here looking for easy answers and have not started the work, you're not worth anyone's effort. Oh and especially not your wife's...

So get reading. Get ready to be a better man. Everyone in your life is waiting for you to get this journey under way. They're rooting for you even if they don't know it. And you will be rightly rewarded for your hard work.
There is a saying in the manosphere that is so notorious that it has been labeled by some as the "kiss of death" to a marriage: ILY, BINILWY. "I Love You, But I'm Not In Love With You." This is usually directed from a woman to a man. It's an expression of her hypergamy and hamster brain at its finest: "I'm not a bad wife. I still love my husband. But someone else is giving me the tingles. That's reasonable, right?" 9 times out of 10, when you hear this phrase, it's over. Only the top men will figure out how to recover from this - and doing everything you can to make her happy isn't the answer because that's what got you into that mess in the first place. But this isn't the only "kiss of death" out there - it's just the only one that gets verbalized.

As many of you know, I see a lot of broken marriages. It's my day job. I've noticed another kiss of death, and this one is usually directed from a man to his wife. It doesn't roll off the tongue as nicely, but here goes: IH, BINHFY. "I'm Horny, But I'm Not Horny For You."

THE PEOPLE

Women talk. Men do. Women are willing to say ILY, BINILWY. Rarely will a man communicate IH, BINHFY.

For these men, their wife is willing to have sex with him, but has no personal desire. She wears jeans and a t-shirt everyday. She spends all her time on social media, primping her house (because you know it's not really his), or binging Netflix. She may have been attractive at one point, but she no longer feels the need to put in the effort.

The men themselves are boring. They waver between work and vegging out. They don't have a mission. They don't employ kino. They're not hitting the gym. They may have been attractive one point, but he no longer feels the need to put in the effort.

THE PROBLEM

What's unique here is that these guys have willing wives. How do I know? Because the thought of not having sex with her doesn't cross his mind until she actually offers and he realizes he's not interested. After that it delves deeper to the point where he's not interested in initiating either.

If she's willing, what's the problem? The problem is that he's not attracted to her, which is closely related to the fact that she's not attracted to him. If she was, she'd see his disinterest and try to spark interest again. Married men have standards too. When talking about SMV, most men size up a woman by her looks, but most of us agree that this isn't based on the raw material alone (weight, symmetry, etc.):

- How she dresses. This is a part of her looks. An attractive woman who hides what she's got isn't attractive anymore. To pick on an easy example: have you seen Jennifer Lopez in sweats? Not bad. But have you seen her in actual sweats? No thanks. Outfit matters.

- Makeup. This is also part of her looks. We've all seen before/after pics of celebrities without makeup. Dear goodness, most of them look ... normal? Some women can pull off normal and still make me want to screw them. Others can't.

- Posture/Pose. This is all about how she presents her looks. It's the difference between "There she is on her phone again" and "Dang, I gotta get her off that phone again!"

- Seduction/Attitude. This is less about how she looks and more about sexual behavior, speech, mannerisms, etc. When you talk, does the conversation go like this? Or a little more like this?

There are more I could go into (hair style, skin tone, muscle toning, accessories, etc.), but you get the point. Having a hot wife doesn't mean squat if she's only hot on Friday nights when you happen to have a babysitter, and even then only if she feels like it. Yes, I've been there.

Ironically, his non-attraction to her often makes her feel more validated in her sexuality within the marriage, not less. Her hamster spins, "I'm ready and willing. All he's got to do is initiate. He must be the problem, not me. I'm fine." How can she get away with this false-validation? Because he's too big of a pussy to tell her plainly: "Screw off, woman. I don't cum on to just anyone. I have standards," or even, "I'm horny, but I'm not horny for you."

MISTAKES/SUCCESES

Now, when a man actually has this conversation with his wife, it rarely goes well. I tried that in the past. My wife is naturally attractive, but doesn't always put in the effort I like to see. Progress is progress, but here are some mistakes from my past.

- "You should wear more tank tops and skirts. I think they look really sexy on you." ... didn't result in her wearing more tank tops and skirts. It's good for her to know what I like, but simply telling her didn't cut it.

- She's riding me, but I'm not even close. I tell her to bite her lip and moan. Mistake. She goes off about how she's not going to fake it, and she already finished and just wanted to be done because she was getting sore. Blah, blah, blah.

- I've also tried outright saying "No" to sex when she initiated, giving a clear cold shoulder and explaining that I'm just not feeling horny toward her in the moment. Huge butthurt moment. No, this did not inspire her to start perking her chest when I walked in the room from then on in order to make me horny.

Want to know what did work?

- Buying her a skirt. She wore it.

- Making her moan in bed, then sticking my dick in her while she was still moaning.

- Initiating sex in a way that made her feel sexy and want to keep feeling that way.

See the difference between how "saying" failed, but "doing" can succeed?

TEMPORAL HOTNESS

Now I'll note, this is still something of an ongoing struggle with my wife. Every now and then I catch myself thinking, "What's the point of having a hot wife if I don't get to see her being and acting hot?" Then I remember that "hot" is not just about a woman's potential for hotness, but about her actual hotness in the moment.

To that end, my wife was not hot yesterday. There were a couple days last week when she was hot, though. See how that works? Yesterday she was a harpy. There are other days when she's an incubus. Some days she's all business, other days she's all play.

RETENTIVE ATTRACTION

The degree to which I am attracted to my wife isn't temporal, though. Guys seem to have a weird lingering subliminal memory for how we view women. About once every 6 months I'll go on Facebook and see pictures of people from high school. My ONEitis from back then looks fine today, but for some reason I still see her as a goddess. My wife is 11 years older and 10lbs heavier than when we married, with stretch marks from 4 pregnancies, but there's a part of me that still sees the girl I dated when I look at her.

Yet my attraction toward her does waver. Why? Because I see the dissonance between my memory of her hotness and the present reality in front of me, when they're not aligned. But instead of a sharp spike in attraction from day to day, it's more of an average. If she's hot 6 days in a week, I'm still horny for her on the 7th, regardless of how she's wearing her hair, posing her body, or that she's not wearing make-up. But if she's only hot 1 day in a week, suddenly I'm more interested in the girl with the tight midriff walking down the street. Did my wife's facial features change? Did her weight take a massive hike that week? No. But in those times she does make it hard to visualize the hotness my memory wants to recall.

WHY DOES THIS MATTER?

For guys out there whose wives already make them horny 7 days a week, it doesn't. For that matter, if you're the type of guy who would bang a brick of cheese to get off, it probably doesn't matter for you either.

For those of us who find ourselves sexually disinterested from time to time, acknowledging when you're not horny for your wife makes a difference. For some guys, this is the "kiss of death" in the relationship that leads them toward divorce. They've given up before they even started. However, instead of cutting off hope of things getting better, this recognition can give a guy motivation to take action to improve things - especially if you're the kind of guy whose mission and MAP includes keeping her around.

IMPROVE THE MAN

We talk a lot here about "fixing the man" and general self-improvement. That's great. But in my experience, a guy's self-improvement doesn't automatically make his wife start improving all on its own. It does increase her attraction to him, but if he wants to be more attracted to her, she's got to make some changes too. Her being more attracted to him might give some underlying reason to improve, that reason doesn't manifest into action until there's something prodding the action. Remember, women are told all their lives that they're perfect and any guy would be lucky to have sex with them. If you keep positively reinforcing her through your expression of your sexuality toward her, all she thinks is: "This is awesome! I'm getting a better husband and I don't need to do anything at all, except have sex more often with a more attractive man."

This is one of the greatest shortcomings I see in MRP. I completely get that "you can't change her, only yourself." I also get that self-improvement is foundational. I also get that there aren't to be any covert contracts: she may never actually improve. But none of this is a license to ignore all conversation about how to get her to improve beyond "improve yourself first." What after that? The imbalance of content on MRP in favor of male-improvement leaves the implication that men shouldn't nudge their wives to improve themselves because we're so used to reading, "Just work on yourself and if she responds, great; if not, leave. Abundance, blah, blah, blah." The posts about how to "train up your slut" are either incredibly narrow in focus or otherwise extremely rare. I'm not saying to make this a 50/50 - but 90/10 is better than 99/1. Improving the man is only the starting point.

THEN IMPROVE THE WOMAN

Last week I made this post about "gravitational centers", which tracked a common journey from "ILY, BINILWY" to bliss. Bob had thought "IH, BINHFY" toward his wife before. But Bob's wife didn't improve all on her own. It wasn't some magical thing in her that she suddenly decided to do when she saw him making progress. He was inviting her to improve with him all along the journey.

- "I'm going to the gym. Want to join?"

- "I need a new suit. Want to go shopping together? You can do a fashion show for me in the dressing room."

- "I'm going to cook a new meal. Want to help?"

He led by example. Instead of affirming her, he stretched her.

Most wives don't ever realize "IH, BINHFY" is a thing a guy thinks from time to time. I remember my wife at one point thinking that sex was just about ejaculating and that it didn't matter how she acted, which outfit she wore, etc. "I'm naked. Why aren't you hard yet?" She had to be taught that guys don't get hard on command. I remember a radio host doing a prank call with a woman, sharing embarrassing stories, who commented, "This girl must be hot because apparently she grew up believing guys were always hard. She'd never seen a naked guy in front of her who wasn't!" The sad thing is: in today's culture where just saying "Do you want sex?" actually will make a dozen men nearby hard, there's not a lot of reason for women to believe otherwise.

That's why dread is so powerful. You've got to be high enough quality to make her want to keep you happy. But even after that, you've still got to nudge her to work on herself too. It's not enough to tell or show her what makes you happy: you have to make it an express expectation.

SUGGESTIONS

How do you do that? A few things I've tried to get the conversation rolling:

- Buying clothes that I like to see her in. I actually went to an "adult superstore" recently, for the first time. It wasn't as absurd as my pious sensibilities were expecting. I bought a pair of leggings, looked around for a while at some lingerie and toy options, and left. (Funny: I commented to my wife about how I heard the store was going out of business and she replies: "Good. Less of that kind of sin to worry about." She'll get there).

- I also downloaded a free app that offers sexual ideas and matches them between partners (Kindu, if you're interested). Every now and then she'll do one of their "packs" [of options] and press the "wink" button, which sends me a signal that she wants to try it. This gave her some inspiration to start working with.
• Instead of averting my eyes as soon as my wife sees me glancing at another girl, I let her see me linger. She doesn't like it, but it tells her what catches my attention. It was easy to start with steamy scenes in a show, then move everyday life.

Figure out what works for you. But don't just assume that self-improvement by itself is going to get her on the self-improvement track too. It might give her the energy to change, but you've still got to make clear that you expect her to change.

If you all have any more tips, feel free to share. I'm far from an expert on the how of this, but given how little conversation I see on the subject (other than "improve yourself and see what happens"), I bet there are some good answers to go around.
A Practical Guide To Building Frame

by resolutions316 | March 30, 2017 | Link

A few notes:

This guide is largely untested. I’m in the middle of this process myself, and the act of laying it out in this way is meant to help me better understand the process and, hopefully, get feedback from the community to make it better. I am not setting myself up as an expert in this area. The techniques below are cobbled together from multiple sources, all of which are cited at the end.

I was sitting at my desk - lost in thought, why isn’t this working? Let me check the code... - when she walked in, pulled up a chair, and sat down next to me.

Her long, gray hair hung down to her lower back. She had a billowy scarf wrapped around her throat, but no winter coat - despite this being mid-winter in New England. Her dress seemed to all be one piece, the kind of rough, gray thing you’d see hanging up in a shop that sold crystals and tarot cards. She started rummaging through her messenger bag and pulled out a tattered notebook.

“You do websites, right? Here’s what I’m thinking - we open in a few weeks and I’m going to need several pages completed before then. We’re also going to need a pretty substantial social media presence - we really want to make our presence known. Do you know the cancer treatment center nearby? No? Pull it up on your computer and I’ll show you what I mean....”

I turned and opened up the browser. I started to type in the address she gave me when I suddenly realized:

I don’t have an appointment right now. I don’t make in-office appointments. This woman looks homeless.

And, finally:

I don’t do websites.

After she left, 45 minutes later, I called the law office that she told me would handle the $20,000 payment for my services.

I wasn’t surprised when they told me they’d never heard of her, and I wasn’t surprised when I googled her name and found absolutely no evidence that she was the head of cancer treatment at the hospital she mentioned. I had, more or less, suspected that from the moment she walked through the day.

So why the fuck did I spend 45 minutes talking to her?

The answer: she had one of the strongest frames of anyone I’d ever met. She acted 100% as if she was supposed to be there and I fell immediately in line.
And that was when I started to think about frame….and wonder why my own was so weak.

WHAT IS FRAME?

Before we define frame, it’s important to understand that there is no universal definition of frame as a concept. It’s used, by various communities and fields of study, in a variety of ways.

“Frame” as a concept seems to originate in NLP (neuro-linguistic programming). In NLP terms, frame is broadly the mental “boundaries” we place around an event. It is our (normally) subconscious “perceptions of our world based [on] our mental template or our internal representations.” (http://www.mindtrainingsystems.com/content/introducing-frames)

In plain english, NLP “frame” is a specific method of viewing a particular situation, designed to elicit certain results. For example, you may view a situation through the “ecology frame,” which asks “how will this event affect the larger community or environment?” Or, you may approach a problem through the “As-If Frame,” which asks you to act “as if” the intended result is already true.

In Manosphere or MRP terms, “Frame” is a more amorphous concept. Rollo Tomassi defined frame as “an often subconscious, mutually acknowledged personal narrative under which auspices people will be influenced.” (https://therationalmale.com/2011/10/12/frame/) This is often broadened out to encompass an overall “personal reality” - as Tomassi asks, “Whose reality are you living in” - yours, or your wife’s?

Frame is also used in a general way, to refer to a sense of overall confidence or personal strength of will. This is the broader sense of frame used in the excellent series of MRP posts on Frame by /u/strategos_autokrator (https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/337uvx/the_elements_of_frame_0_introduction/). Frame, in this broader context, incorporates your intellectual, emotional, and physical “stability.”

None of these definitions are “right” or “wrong” - but they have strengths and weaknesses when it comes to effectively using the idea of “frame” to better your life (which is my primary goal).

So I’d like to suggest a definition of “Practical Frame” - one that largely avoids the broader, philosophical questions around frame and instead focuses on what regular men can do, right now, to start improving their lives.

Here it is:

Frame is the meaning you bring to any situation.

Only physical events exist. Everything that’s ever happened between you and your wife, or your kids, or your boss - those events consisted only of certain bunches of chemicals bumping into certain other bunches of chemicals. None of those events meant anything in any real sense. But how we interpret those events - how they make us feel, and the stories we tell ourselves about what events mean - is fully subjective. That’s our Frame.

FRAME CONTENT IS IRRELEVANT

What gives our day to day lives emotional meaning is our subjective interpretation of the events that happen around us. Things occur, and we supply the meaning after the fact. That meaning - again, the meaning that we supply - is neither more “right” nor more “wrong” than any other meaning, and is not intrinsic to the event itself.

The only practical difference, then, between any two subjective interpretations (“Frames”) of an event is whether or not they serve to bring us closer to our goals.

A positive frame is any frame that allows us to move closer to our goals, to better ourselves, or to improve our lives.

A negative frame is any frame that doesn’t.

To fully appreciate and utilize frame in our day to day lives, we must realize that the beneficiality of any frame is content independent. We are not trying to find the “right” frame or the frame that is “objectively” the best - interpretations of events are fully subjective, and so no frame can be more “right” or “wrong” than any other.

What your frame consists of - it’s content - does not matter. All that matters about a frame is whether it serves you.

FRAME IS IMPORTANT BECAUSE IT DRIVES BEHAVIOR

If frame was completely internal, it would be meaningless.

Frame is only important to the extent to which it influences our behavior.

Our interpretations of the world around us influence how we act towards it. If we’re walking down the street, and see someone scowl at us, it could mean any number of things. Which of those possible meanings we choose to latch on to will affect how we react in a number of ways:

If we interpret the scowl to mean that the person hates us and is aggressive towards us, we may drop into a defensive pose, ready for a fight; If we interpret the scowl to mean that the person is having a rough day, and is in need of compassion, we might open our arms to embrace them; If we interpret the scowl to mean that the person sees someone behind us doing some questionable, we might spin around to see what they’re looking at; If we interpret the scowl to mean that the person has a physical defect with their facial muscles, we might avert our eyes downward so as not to make them feel awkward.

All of these actions will then influence the actions of others. Striking a defensive pose, for example, may cause the oncoming person to do the same; opening our arms to embrace them might startle them out of their bad mood.

We are constantly taking in information from the world around us and incorporating it into our running narrative of the world - what I’ll call the Reactive Frame.

The Reactive Frame is largely unconscious, and is driven primarily by our upbringing, culture, and the immediate events surrounding us. We are continually plugging events from our day to day lives into this frame, expanding or altering it as necessary.

This frame, in turn, affects our behavior. In fact, we will often act in accordance with our Reactive Frame in such a way that the frame becomes reinforced; thus, Reactive Frame is self-reinforcing, which is why it is often so difficult for us to see it for what it is.

Let me give an example:

Let’s say that you grew up in an abusive household. Your father drove wedges between you and your older brothers; bullying and violence was commonplace. Because of this, you internalized an unconscious “frame” that “People are shit; people will take advantage of you any chance they get.”

This internalized belief changes how you act. You are suspicious of strangers and tend to hold them at arm’s length. You are rude when people approach you and are emotionally unavailable to friends or lovers. As such, the people around you find it very hard to form emotional attachments; that leads them to betray you, treat you poorly, or abuse you more often than someone they felt deeply connected to. These experiences serve to deepen your entrenched belief - “See?! She cheated on me! All people are shit; they’ll take advantage of you any chance they get.”

The Reactive Frame is thus a feedback loop, strengthening itself over time.

Because frames influence our behavior, and our behaviors affect how the world reacts to us, positive frames (that move us towards our goals) have increasingly positive effects, while negative frames (that move us further away from our goals) have increasingly negative effects.

HOW FRAMES INTERACT

Frames, being completely subjective, often come into conflict.

Take the interaction above, with the scowling man coming down the street. Say that the scowling man believes that all people are shit, and is simply acting in his own perceived best interest - scare people away and they’ll have no chance to hurt you.

Meanwhile, the man coming up the street has internalized a frame of “This guy must be having a very stressful day; he needs a hug!” Acting in what he perceives as his own best interest, he sets out to comfort the scowling man by throwing his arms wide for a hug.

These two men are harboring competing frames - differing interpretations of the event that is occurring. What will happen?

Human beings have incredibly sensitive tools for analyzing the actions and intentions of others. In Thinking Fast and Slow, psychologist Daniel Kahneman describes this system as System 1 - the pre-rational portions of our brain that evolved to enable incredibly fast - yet sometimes messy and inaccurate - decision making and analysis. System 1 is contrasted with the slower, rational System 2 - capable of making incredibly accurate decisions, but much more resource intensive.

System 1 is essentially on all the time, subconsciously analyzing thousands of data points - a facial micro-expression, the position of someone’s arms, a darting of eyes - and giving us a vague “instinct” or “feeling” about a situation. We turn down a dark alley and instantly feel uneasy, though we’re not sure why; we get the sense that a coworker dislikes us, even though they’re always nice to our face; we get a seemingly innocuous text from our wife and instantly feel a pit in our stomach, sure a fight is incoming.

System 1, then, is largely how we “sense” another person’s Frame. Any situation in which the actions of another person are directly in contrast to our intuitive understanding of a situation - when they’re acting as if our Frame is incorrect - we experience a sense of cognitive dissonance, a discomfort and creeping suspicion that maybe, just maybe, we might be wrong.

In the world of Early Man, being wrong about a situation, or striking off on our own against the advice of the tribe, often resulted in death. As such, the experience of frame conflict is unpleasant.

In any situation where frames are in conflict, there will be a subconscious urge amongst all the people involved to “decide on” the strongest frame and adopt it. If everyone adopts the same frame, the conflict - and cognitive dissonance - disappears.

HOW DOES ONE FRAME OVERPOWER ANOTHER?

What determines whether one frame or another becomes the dominant frame?

The dominant frame in any situation is the one which the group adopts.

That's it. Remember, since frames are subjective, no one frame is better than any other (although it is true that frames can be better or worse for you, based on your goals). The “winning” frame is purely defined by which frame “wins” - it’s a popularity contest, pure and simple.

If you hold your frame, you win. If other people abandon their frame, you win.

So - what determines whether you hold or your frame? What makes other people abandon theirs?

The truth of the matter is that in nearly every situation you will encounter, every one has an incredibly weak frame.

Most people are unaware of frame as a dynamic and thus aren’t conscious of whether they are holding or abandoning frame at all. Most people do not have a strong preference for one frame or another; they seek consensus more than they seek any particular outcome. Most people have no specific frame at all, resting entirely within their Reactive Frame.
Because of this, the primary characteristic of a “strong” or “dominant” frame is simply the extent to which it’s owner is willing to hold it.

To put it simply:

The person that holds their frame the longest will usually see their frame adopted by the group.

That’s it.

This is the reason that “fogging” works in When I Say No, I Feel Guilty: the fogger makes no attempt to explain themselves, defend their position, or provide any kind of rational argument to the other person. Instead, the simply continuously insist on a particular outcome until the other person abandons their frame and gives them what they want.

In all instances where the competing frames are weak, simple insistence on holding your own frame will triumph.

However, in situations where the other frames are strong - for example, when emotions are running high, or the other participants perceive the stakes to be high - both sides are likely to insist on maintaining their own frame. In these situations, what determines which frame is “stronger”?

CHARACTERISTICS OF A STRONG FRAME

Frame “strength” is best described as the extent to which people - including the frame holder - perceive a frame to be “objectively true.”

Now, we know that frames are not objectively true or false - they are subjective. But a preponderance of evidence - either that our frame is true or that it is useful - will make holding a contested frame much easier.

The elements that determine a frame’s strength are:

Social Proof

The frame is consistent with the stated beliefs of others. “I’m definitely going to pick up a girl tonight; after all, all my friends say I’m a total catch and I had ten Tinder matches tonight.”

Experience

It's much easier to hold a frame that you've successfully held before without any trouble. “I’m definitely going to pick up a girl tonight; every time I approach girls they’re into me.”

Belief

Having positive beliefs about yourself, and your capabilities will help a great deal. “I’m definitely going to pick up a girl tonight; I’m hot as hell.”
Strong Goals

If you are committed to getting something, you won't likely be dissuaded. “I’m definitely going to pick up a girl tonight; I’m 100% motivated to hook up tonight, it’s been a long time.”

Instinctive

In line with our basic instincts and needs (sex, food, shelter, etc). “I’m definitely going to pick up a girl tonight; I’m horny as hell.”

Examples of instinctive drives:

Food Social acceptance Relationships and sex Self Actualization - “This situation means I am going to gain knowledge, insight or skills that will put me closer to my goals."

Frames that align with one or more of these elements will tend to be easier to hold and thus “stronger” than competing frames that do not align with these elements.

Note that, even with all of these strengthening factors, the ultimate factor in determining a frame’s strength is simply the ability of its holder to maintain frame longer than everyone else.

It is possible, of course, for no frame to become dominant; if two people with conflicting frames simply refuse to accommodate one another and leave with both of their frames intact, then neither frame was “dominant”; the conflict ended in stalemate. This is not necessarily a bad thing!

FRAME IN PRACTICE: HOW TO BUILD A STRONG FRAME FROM SCRATCH

I found MRP in the same way that many of you did: Googling “why won’t my wife have sex with me?”

Coming into MRP from that perspective can be extremely frustrating. I was looking for some kind of quick fix to make my wife horny; instead, I found a bunch of advice on “ownership” and “leadership” and intellectual discussions of hypergamy.

The common thread through nearly all of the discussions I read was Frame - it came up over and over again, especially in comments on my OYS posts. People seemed to think I had lost the frame, or was in my wife’s frame, or needed to work on my frame….but what the hell did that actually mean? What, specifically, was I supposed to do to work on my frame?

The paragraphs above should give you a fairly detailed understanding of what frame is, and what it means to lose it:

Frame is your subjective interpretation of the events that happen around you. Frame is important because it influences our behavior and can create powerful positive or negative feedback loops. All frames are equally subjective; frames are good or bad only in the sense that they move us closer to or further away from our goals. When frames conflict, the person that holds their frame the longest will typically see their frame adopted by everyone else.
Aligning your frame with the core characteristics of strong frames will make it easier to hold. If both people hold frames indefinitely, the conflict is simply a draw and nothing changes.

Holding frame becomes important when we realize that being dissuaded from a positive frame will move us further from our goals.

Likewise, if we can promote a positive frame and get others to adopt it, we can enable the people in our lives to move closer to their goals.

This was one of the major shifts in my thinking on frame, specifically in the context of MRP:

It is our ethical duty to help others adopt frames that are positive for them.

For example: let’s say we’re in a fight with our wife. She’s in a completely negative frame, blaming you for what’s wrong in her life. Her frame is inherently self-sabotaging, and doesn’t allow her to take responsibility for her situation and grow past it.

(This is assuming you are owning your shit and aren’t actually the cause of her problems, because if you are….you know. Knock that shit off.)

Now, your wife, despite all her problems, wants to be happy. We all do. We all want to be self-actualizing human beings, capable of pursuing our own dreams, resourceful enough to withstand an uncaring world. She may not know that she wants that, but she does.

If you allow her frame to overwhelm yours, you not only are moved further away from your own goals (by adopting a negative frame), but you allow your wife to move further away from her goals (by maintaining a negative frame).

Conversely, maintaining your own positive frame will both move you towards your goals and allow your wife to adopt a more positive frame, one that will enable her own growth and development.

Thus: it’s an ethical imperative that we do not allow the negative frames around us to overwhelm our own positive frames.

So, the question becomes:

How do we develop a strong, positive frame - and hold it?

PHASE 1: BUILDING A FRAME

There are three steps to building a positive frame:

Determining the frame Strengthening the frame Internalizing the frame

Let’s break those down, with specific exercises.

Determining the Frame
Consciously determining your frame ahead of the time is probably the single most powerful thing you can do to improve your overall frame control.

The plain fact is that most people do not have a frame in mind; they do not have a specific goal when entering a situation, nor make a conscious effort to think about how they will interpret the events that are likely to occur to them.

Most of us simply float through life, deep in our Reactive Frame, allowing our instinctive reactions to guide us.

Because of this, in most situations our frames will be both unconscious and weak. This is true of the people you interact with as well.

In a world filled with unconscious and weak frames, the consciously-chosen, strongly held frame will win out 9 times out of 10. It is a MASSIVE game-changer.

The method for this is simple: before you enter a situation, simply take a moment to pause, consciously decide on your frame, and hold that frame in your mind.

To remind myself to do this I practiced consciously deciding on a frame whenever I walked through a doorway. You could choose a similarly arbitrary trigger, or simply try to keep this task in mind while moving throughout the day.

The situation also doesn’t matter. Going to the grocery store? Pick a frame. Walking the dog? Pick a frame.

The specific frame really doesn’t matter in this instance; instead, we are simply practicing consciously choosing our frame in advance, and remembering that frame throughout the subsequent event.

Eventually we want to get to the point where we are intuitively and automatically selecting positive frames throughout our day. This will do more than anything else to strengthen our overall ability to hold frame and get others to adopt our frame.

Strengthening the Frame

So, we’re supposed to be setting frames throughout the day - but what frame do we set? How do we set a frame that’s both positive and strong?

Setting a Positive Frame

Remember, “positive” frames are entirely defined by their ability to help us in the pursuit of our goals. That means that, in order to set positive frames, we need to know what our goals are.

This can be surprisingly difficult. For many of us - myself included - we’ve been so bombarded by instructions on what we should want, from our wives, from our families, from society at large, that we’re profoundly out of touch with what we actually want.
In a very real way, the modern American man does not truly know himself or his desires. That puts us at a profound disadvantage when it comes to selecting positive frames.

It’s not up to me to tell you what you should want; only you can determine that. I also happen to think that that’s going to require deeper, more introspective work than can be addressed in this post.

So, for the moment, let’s simply leave it that you should be trying to get in touch with your deepest self, and finding out what it is you really want when freed of the influence of the world around you.

In the short term, though, you can work on setting short-term goals for the events you’re running into.

Need to return an item? My goal is to return this item even though I don’t have a receipt. Fight with the wife? My goal is to simply not apologize, because I don’t feel I did anything wrong. Got the kids for the day? My goal is to have fun, no matter what happens.

Don’t worry too much about whether your goal is the “right” one - in the beginning, just focus on having a desired outcome you can build a frame around.

Something I find very useful when setting goals for specific events is to make the outcome completely within my own control.

For example, I wouldn’t set a goal to “convince my wife she’s wrong;” after all, I don’t really have control over that. If I walk into that fight with that goal in mind, I’m giving my WIFE the power over whether I succeed or not.

Instead, I can set a goal to “hold my frame,” or even just to “practice holding frame.” These goals serve my needs, but are completely within my own control...regardless of what my wife does.

An example from my own marriage: over time I’d developed a real fear of initiating sex with my wife. I’d been rejected so many times that I experienced intense anxiety whenever I thought about initiating; that led me to half-ass my initiations, trying to save my ego by not putting too much effort into it. After all, if I got rejected I could console myself that I “didn’t really try.”

This obviously led to a lot of problems and, as negative frames tend to do, a feedback loop of rejections, leading to hurt feelings, leading to weak initiations, leading to more rejections.

To counteract this, I changed my goal from “get sex with my wife” to “practice initiating without acting hurt.” This way, the outcome was completely within my control - all I was trying to do was practice initiation. Whether or not I was rejected, I could be successful....breaking the negative feedback loop.

I can’t stress enough how important these small wins are, especially if you’ve had a track record of losing frame. Breaking the negative feedback loop and establishing a winning record - even on small, seemingly insignificant goals - will have HUGE positive effects on your ability to hold frame. As long as these small goals are moving you towards your ultimate desires, it’s better to focus on small wins early on, rather than swing for the fences and fall apart.

Setting a Strong Frame

Now that we’ve covered setting a positive frame, how can we make sure our frame is also strong?

To set a strong frame, we simply take the list of characteristics of strong frames mentioned above and work on internalizing evidence that our frame aligns with those characteristics.

As an example, let’s take the frame of “I’m a charming person.” That’s a powerful frame for driving us into positive social interactions.

But what if we’re secretly afraid that we’re a loser, and we’re not charming at all? Those negative beliefs will sabotage our ability to hold our new, positive frame.

To strengthen this frame, let’s go through the characteristics of strong frames and literally write down (or mentally catalogue) pieces of evidence that support it.

Social Proof

I have a bunch of friends, and they think I’m charming! I have a whole bunch of Twitter followers, too. Remember that girl, last summer? She said I was charming.

Experience

Whenever I hold this frame, things go really well for me.

Belief

Charm is a learnable skill, and I’m a great learner. I’ve been reading a bunch of blogs and I’m very good at internalizing information I read.

Strong Goals

Holding this frame will drastically increase my chances of finding a girlfriend, and that’s one of my big goals for this year.

Instinctive

Holding this frame will help me be more sociable and meet people, which will help me eventually find a mate.
You don’t need to go through every characteristic for every frame, but the more evidence you can amass and really believe, the easier it’ll be to hold the frame.

One of the nice things about this method is that, every time you successfully employ it, that success itself becomes further evidence that the frame is strong. After a while, you’ll fully internalize the frame, and actually start to take it for granted. That's as strong as a frame can get.

Internalizing the Frame

OK - so, we’ve deliberately set a positive frame for an interaction beforehand.

We’ve also, either in the moment or beforehand, gone through and established a strong set of evidence that strengthens our frame.

Now - how do we internalize, and actually hold, the frame during the event?

This is where deliberate practice comes in.

Deliberate Practice is a process by which we push ourselves just beyond our capabilities, expanding those capabilities in the process.

For frame, the best practice is to simply concentrate on holding frame during an event. Simply hold the frame in your mind, don’t lose track of it, and don’t abandon it during the event.

If you’re in a fight with your wife, and your frame is “this is not a big deal,” simply continue acting like things are not a big deal, no matter what. If you’re returning an item, simply continue insisting that you can return the item until they accept it back. If you’re watching the kids for the day, and your frame is “I’m going to have fun no matter what,” simply continue having fun no matter how bad their behavior gets.

Simple, right?

Well, it should be. But it isn’t! It’s actually incredibly difficult - at least, it is for me - to maintain my frame in those situations.

Setting the frame deliberately, and strengthening the frame ahead of time, will improve your abilities by a great deal. But those two techniques alone will not be enough. In order to hold your frame in challenging circumstances, you’ll need to develop your overall Frame Control with deliberate practice - just like strengthening a muscle over time by lifting weights.

Below are a list of training exercises you can use to gradually increase your frame control over time:

Quick Pre-framing Drills Go into the supermarket with the intention to only buy one item, no matter what. Do this when you are starving. Buy something other than food. At a fast food restaurant, give your entire order while holding eye contact and smiling with the cashier. Go into a coffee shop with the intention of getting the staff to suggest your order. Hold eye... contact until they make a suggestion. Don't give them anything to go off of. Choose three words you've never said before, and use them conversationally with friends. Choose a specific word to elicit from someone else without you telling them or using the words. Choose words people don't usually use. Go into any social situation with the intention of getting three names from three strangers. Work the area until successful. Do this is typical situations (parties, clubs, etc) as well as in the general public. Practicing Frame Conflict Return an item recently purchased but leave the receipt at home. No matter what the clerk says, practice saying "I understand that, and I'd like my money back." Set the intention of saying it at least ten times. Look out for disagreements among friends (for example, on where to eat). Whatever they say, agree, validate, then restate your case without trying to prove them wrong or yourself right. "I know that pizza is the delicious. I know that it's got a long history. I agree that it's the cornerstone of western civilization. These are all valid points that I unconditionally agree with. And I think bacon cheeseburgers are perhaps the best invention of mankind." Join any group where disagreements are common (book clubs, etc) and practice defending a specific frame. Daily Frame Review Find a situation from the day where you lost the frame. Review it in your mind. Slowly go through each step and think of something you could have done or said differently. Then imagine the situation in your mind as if it actually happened that way. Review this "new memory" several times. (For more on intense visualization, I recommend checking out the book “Psychocybernetics.”)

Daily Practice Exercises Frame Observations - Watch other people. For each person, come up with at least three intentions and three potential frames for their situation. What do they want? What meanings are they giving to their environment? Find pairs or groups that are sitting. Try to determine who is controlling the frame. Do they hold it? Does it shift? Reframing - At the end of the day, review any event that made you feel like a victim. How did you interpret that event? What would be a different way to interpret it? Can you find any evidence that supports this new meaning? Any evidence that counteracts the negative interpretation? Pre-Framing - Do this as often as possible. Before going into any situation, ask yourself: What do I want? Be as specific and reasonable as possible. State your intention before going in. I will get X or something better. Ask yourself before going in with a pre-set frame: How will I interpret events in light of what I want? What meanings support me getting what I want?)

My suggestion on using these exercises is to simply schedule one for each day. Go through the list pick one you haven’t done in a while, and focus on practicing it a few times as you go about your business.

As I said in the beginning, I’m not some weird Frame Grandmaster. In fact, the only reason I have all this information to hand is because I’ve had to consciously explore, research, and practice everything about frame.

I hope some people find this useful, and I’d love feedback. I will do my best to answer questions to the best of my ability.

Cheers, everyone.

Much of the exercises mentioned above were taken from the book "Frame Control", by George Hutton. That was a fantastic resource, although sometimes confusingly organized. I recommend it if you want a deeper dive, and it's a short read.

This excellent series of posts was a real eye-opener. I don't THINK it was ever completed - hopefully it will be. You can find the rest by searching for "elements of frame" in /marriedredpill.
I don’t know how this will be received, but I believe every once in a while, it’s worth reminding that we have to carry ourselves into a World hostile to an unplugged man’s life. Outside of our much focused and sometimes myopic quest of getting what we want out of this short existence, we forget that the self-deluded are all around us. Every rough edge to any circumstance has a tendency to appear like the head of a nail peeking out from some weather-beaten timber needing to be smashed flat.

The matter-of-fact, come along or get left behind mindset, is excellent for dealing with your spouse, kids, business associates, and friends. Men learn quickly that most people prefer to defer, and if they can follow your vision to a beneficial place, everyone is happy. Men understand that being the supplier of resources, be it time, fun, money or leadership, is a burden to be accepted. If a man is lucky, those around him provide value in return, and life is interesting.

My mother is a self-identifying victim. A Boomer hippie, she decided commune life in California was “more free” than collective life in the Midwest. I think it was the farming she grew to hate, when she really wanted drugs instead. So she and my father, the prototype soy “gentle” son of a WWII Marine, decided to leave me with “friends” at a Utopian style collective when I was three. No one from any state authorities knew my parents were gone, and a check from the government came to the residence to help the community take care of me. I went to school with the other children, and I was none the wiser until I turned six.

New regulations were passed as I was entering first grade, and every kid had to have vaccinations, or a religious reason to decline. Regardless, physical parents needed to be available to sign documents and appear at school to answer any questions. Needless to say, this was too much of an administrative burden on the group, and a number of us kids immediately became wards of the state.

I was in a group home until nine, when I was adopted. My adopted parents worked hard, gave me a very stable foundation, and I succeeded in their care. I thought that would be the end of any family revelations, but 40 years later, things changed.

Victims don’t understand burdens or value. Victims only understand pain. “Victim” has been allowed to become an identity for far too many people, including many of those into whom men pour vast resources. Our own desire to make things smooth makes men forget nuance, and become the hammer.

With this in mind, my mother reappeared needing something. I came to find out I am her only child and she has cancer. She has adult leukemia, with complications from Hepatitis C. My mom is a dirty whore with a blown immune system and failing liver. Of course science has come to the rescue of the Boomers with a Hep C cure, so all she needs is bone marrow from me to hopefully make her strong enough to put the cancer in remission to save her liver.
At first, my mother asked if I would donate a portion of my liver. I told her to fuck off.

Here is where nuance and setting an example for others came into play. If I would have cast myself as a victim, and focused on the numerous times some predator tried to grab my dick as a child in that group home, or getting beat up weekly for being “Orphan Boy,” I would have let the selfish cunt die a jaundiced emaciated death.

What I did, instead of focusing on this one person from my past, I registered on a national marrow system, so hopefully she will be but one of multiple people I help, because it’s what I choose to do. It’s altruism from my mental point of origin.

Of course, I was the bad person and aggressor in the end anyway. I don’t talk with my mother for obvious reasons, but from her long-winded facebook postings, she is heartbroken, I’m ungrateful, she did the best she could, I should be more supportive, a mother’s love is forever, I ignore her financial problems, I deny her the “right” to see her grandchildren, etc...

As surprising as her tone-deafness, are the responses to her posts in support of her nonsense. She has a complete support system of old, dried out, Caucasian whores (and thirsty old men) that tell each other every minute of every day that they are the victims of society. I literally saved this woman’s life, so that she may libel me.

The silver lining in all of this is that I don’t have facebook, and that I’m anonymous on Twitter. I’ve come to value my wife more through this experience, because she is the one who reads the garbage and summarizes everything for me. She’s very cute and careful about it too, which makes it fun. It also lets me know that she values my worth over the drama that could be generated for her hamster. I let her get outraged for me, and for some reason, having a common enemy also gets her in the mood.

We choose to be victims or not, and we choose our own tribe. Don’t let your past tear down what you are continually building.
Farewell to my friend
by ProbablyAMonkey | April 19, 2017 | Link

I'm out of town on a business trip, and tomorrow I have to drive home and put my dog to sleep.

I've had him for longer than I've been married (12 years). He was diagnosed on Monday (without me there) with systemic cancer. He's failing fast.

He was always a faithful companion and loyal to me. He got along fine with my wife, but when I was at home, he was always by my side. Not only that, but he was very protective of my children.

When going on walks, if we passed by another dog or person that he didn't know, he would run right up to my son--putting himself between my son and the danger. Every time.

While I'm still working on oneitis with my wife, there's no question that my dog was the one. I could not ask for more from any companion.

Being perfectly honest, I've cried my eyes out tonight. I can't remember the last time I cried in grief.

"You have power over your mind—not outside events. Realize this, and you will find strength."

I've been reading Marcus Aurelius. It feels empty now.

"Loss is nothing else but change, and change is Nature's delight."

Seems silly to be so upset over a pet, but tonight I grieve.

Tomorrow, I will be a rock for my wife, my children, and my faithful friend.

Tomorrow, I will be a rock. Tonight I grieve.
Sitcom Dad is a babbling idiot. He doesn’t get laid. Nothing on the menu other than maybe yearly anniversary sex at 10pm missionary style with the lights off to a dead fish pillow princess. Look at these Dads on any sitcom, he is pure BETA and can never do anything right. His wife runs the household and wears the pants (literally…man pants..) She’s domineering, scolds, and disrespects him in front of the kids…que the laugh track! It’s hilarious! Don’t be that Dad. Before the pill, there was a running joke in my family that DAD didn’t know how to do anything around the house... He was smart as shit, but goofy and couldn’t figure out simple things like how to work the fucking microwave. I was Sitcom Dad. Always deferring to my wife.

It was a challenge actually weaving MRP principles in everyday life. Sure, my inner game was developing nicely, passing sh$t test like a champ, but how would I really pull this off when you come home from work and have little kids running around, a wife trying to prepare dinner, she has a headache, cranky, the fucking dog balking, a million things to do on the weekend, and the house is a mess? These are immediate things you MUST do to own your shit and start LEADING your family. Use these things to start framing yourself as the LEADER. At first, she will not like it, you have been a drunk captain for a long time – you would trust you?- slowly, overtime you will regain power. But she will not relinquish it very easily.

Bottom line is, you must own you shit because b/c that’s what a fucking man does, but also you need to get to the point where you can show her that you really don’t need her around anymore... for anything... You are capable of washing the fucking dishes and laundry (correctly) and get the kids to bed on time, etc.. At one point she will realize that the only thing that she brings to the table of any real value is her wet fucking pussy... And she WILL bring it once you get your shit together. There will be a HUGE comfort test eventually and accuse you of leaving her... Pass it.. and then you can make it a point to tell her that you do want her around b/c she does have value, great mom to your kids, fun loving, etc. ass slap, walk away.

1. Assume the Captain Seat at the head of the table:

When I awoke from long slumber, I realized I was sitting next to my wife at the side of the table while she was sitting at the head of the table. I was sick to my stomach. My Dad ALWAYS had his seat at the head, my brothers and I wouldn’t DARE sit in his seat. He was extreme RED Pill. How did I end up here? Different story. I assume that you are sitting down together as a family at dinner time… if not you need to start. Sitting at the HEAD of the table FRAMES you as the LEADER of the family. My wife bitched at first and wouldn’t let me sit in “her chair”. Don’t get butthurt, keep at it, eventually you will regain power. Then, you can use your kids as leverage. My oldest now tells the younger kids that DAD is coming and he better get out of the King’s chair! It’s awesome. Or I will simply point at him (like saying get the fuck out of my chair) and he will immediately move to the subordinate chairs. Get control of the HEAD of the table. Then you can work on going around the table and talking about how the day went, etc.. but that comes later.. Get fucking control. Would Spock ever sit in Captain Kurt’s chair?? Hell no, but Spock could command the ship as co captain. Eventually work in that dynamic and explain Captain vs Co-captain roles to your wife and kids. Mine bitched at first, but explain she has just as much authority and command as I do, but ultimately it all falls on ME as the captain. It’s my responsibility to lead. (I’m starting to think marriage is more appropriately similar to a pirate ship and first mate dynamic, b/c some wives will gut you in a fucking second and have a mutiny the minute that they see you weak).

2. Get a Dry Erase Board Calendar:

When I awoke from long slumber, I realized that my problem was that I never knew what was going on that week or weekend. Kid’s birthday parties, soccer practice, band lessons, etc.. all that bullshit. I would always defer to her and ask what our plans were for this weekend. Stop deferring to her. You need to know WTF is going on. How can you LEAD the TROOPS if you don’t know what the plan is???? That way, on Thursday, you can TELL her and Decide that we’re going here, and then there, etc.. I realized that my wife was working off of 4 different calendars.. WTF! One in her purse, one on the inside door of the pantry, etc. Women are horrible leaders.. don’t tell me that your boss is a chick and she is great.. bla bla bla.. Those are exceptions to the rule. Outliners. They suck at leading. She had all of the calendars and we were still a fucking train wreck. Go to fucking Walmart and get a dry erase calendar board and a fucking fine tip sharpie so you can actually write legible words with it. Hang it on the refrigerator with a fucking magnet. Compile all on her calendars into one. Don’t tell her what you are doing. Don’t DEER. Don’t run off to momma to show her what you did either. If she questions you and says that’s unnecessary, just say it’s for you. Write EVERYTHING on it. Treat this like a fucking business. I guarantee that you know everything that’s going on at work and are sharp and owning your shit, but why would you treat the most important aspect of your life like a drunk captain and leave it up to chance..or a woman..? TELL your wife that little Johnny’s birthday party is at 3pm Sat, let’s hit the waterpark early that day, & we’ll pick up the present on the way home, etc.. LEAD your family. She wants you to lead. I just did our July calendar, wife walks up behind me and says that she LOVES when I make the new monthly calendar… then she slaps my ass and walks off.. Golden.

3. Family Meetings:

I started doing Sunday night family meetings. I make everyone sit on the couch. I grab my kid’s ninja turtle sword and wear a fucking superman cape.. It frames you as the LEADER. At first, this will backfire very badly.. wife will roll her eyes, kids don’t know what to think.. You’ve been drunk for so long what do you expect them to think? I start off with a little pep talk. Tell them that there’s only 3 weeks left of school, to finish strong, etc.. I then let each person say what’s on their mind or ask a question – but only if they are holding the SWORD. I pass the sword around the room and they take turns. Keep at short at first. Sometimes if I’m too busy or forget to do the meeting, my kids will remind me! Kids fucking love it. Wife will eventually get TINGLES. Few weeks ago, we’re out with some other couples, the Cackling Hens are talking about how hard it is keeping the kids focused, etc.. My wife says that we do family meetings… The HENS were blown away in amazement and asked if she saw that idea on Facebook or Pinterest? She said that Alpha_engineer99 runs the meetings.. Que all the HENS looking at their Sitcom husbands with their Dad-bods sipping their little beer with faces beat red... Losers.. Hens were all over me that night. Wife rode me like a champ later that night. Be a fucking man.

4. I’ve Decided:

Start making fucking decisions. Start announcing them. Even if it’s something small, insignificant, and funny. It’s even acceptable to tell your wife that you decided that you will let her handle this one. – even if it’s obviously she is the only who can... Do you like the black or brown shoe with this outfit? The brown one. Make a decision, don’t change your mind. Do you want chicken or steak. Steak. Immediate decision. Don’t DEER. I TELL my wife that I’ve decided that she will bring the kids to little Jonny’s birthday party on Sat 10am while I cut the grass. Once they come home, we have Kid # 2’s basketball game at 4pm. Let’s hit Outback for dinner after that. Beta me would have been forced to go to little Johnny’s birthday party.. Now, I get to decide if I want to go to his bullshit party.. (being miserable and only thinking about how fucking high the grass is)

Start implementing these things NOW. Regain the POWER. Frame yourself as the one in charge.
Establishing an “Emotional Connection” With a Woman

by RedPillCoach | May 21, 2018 | Link

I am not just a coaching graduate of a top school in the International Coaching Federation! I am not just an attorney or a PhD or published author!

I am a very fortunate man in possession of the Hamsturlator. This is a device originally devised by prominent manosphere blogger “Deti” and given to /u/bluepillprofessor in order to help him write the book. He has kindly loaned me the device for the time being, and indeed, the Hamsturlator is a sophisticated piece of equipment, possibly of alien origin, and likely made entirely of Vibranium. The Hamsturlator interprets the language of “Womaneese” into comprehensible English.

One of the most common complaints we hear from men is that their wives are telling them some version of “I need to feel an emotional connection to you before we can have sex.” Therefore, I found it necessary and prudent to run this phrase through the Hamsturlator. Unfortunately it started beeping and smoking!! Luckily, I was able to unplug it before it exploded!

After the device cooled down I powered it back up and tried again. This time I just input the phrase “emotional connection” and the green lights started flashing. After several minutes, the humming and steaming hot machine spit out a 21 page 14,000 word answer which I will attempt to summarize in this post to identify what women mean when they say “I need an emotional connection.”

Before I go there, however, I want to remind you of some ancient wisdom from Heartiste (where pretty lies perish) taken from The 16 Commandments of Poon which explains exactly what we are discussing:

IX. Connect with her emotions Set yourself apart from other men and connect with a woman’s emotional landscape. Her mind is an alien world that requires deft navigation to reach your rendezvous. Frolic in the surf of emotions rather than the arid desert of logic. Be playful. Employ all your senses. Describe in lush detail scenarios to set her heart afire. Give your feelings freedom to roam. ROAM. Yes, that is a good word. You’re not on a linear path with her. You are ROAMING all over, taking her on an adventure. In this world, there is no need to finish thoughts or draw conclusions. There is only need to EXPERIENCE. You’re grabbing her hand and running with her down an infinite, labyrinthine alleyway with no end, laughing and letting your fingers glide on the cobblestone walls along the way.

The bottom line according to Heartiste is that you connect with a woman’s emotions by experiencing them with her. You have to let your own (tightly held) emotions roam free. There is no destination, no logic, no answers. There is only the experience of leading her on a fun adventure!

Are you leading your wife on a fun adventure? Are you experiencing her emotions like a duck experiences water? That is, do you let her emotions wash over you like a cool relaxing shower as the oil (YOUR FRAME) causes the droplets to bead and roll off your feathers. Or do you let her emotions “flood” you and ruffle your feathers?

THIS “FLOODING” BY THE MAN IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ESTABLISHING AN “EMOTIONAL CONNECTION” THAT MAKES HER FEEL SAFE, LOVED, AND READY TO BE SEDUCED AND FAILING TO ESTABLISH AN “EMOTIONAL CONNECTION THAT MAKES HER TENSE, ANXIOUS, AND FEARFUL ABOUT YOUR LOVE AND COMMITMENT AND LESS LIKELY TO BE SEDUCED

If you are not familiar with “flooding” I briefly describe this in My Post on Marriage Therapist John Gottman:

Flooding occurs when your sympathetic nervous system activates while having a discussion with the wife. That is, you get nervous, increased heart rate, sweating etc etc. Flooding means that YOUR WIFE activates the fight or flight instinct in you. This is not good.

Another way to interpret this is that “Flooding” occurs when you mentally and psychologically lose your frame. Think about it! That is what MRP guys mean by "Holding Frame." We simply mean don't get flooded. Don't let a mere woman rattle your cage. Smile at her and acknowledge where appropriate, engage where appropriate, and walk away when appropriate. Just remember, as Vladimir teaches us: “It is usually best to avoid arguing with a woman.”

MRP focuses mainly on overt behavior because that is something you can observe and learn to control. However, it turns out that internal mental processes are almost as easy to control as behavior! The entire field of Cognitive/Behavioral Therapy is predicated on the idea that both our thoughts and our behaviors are closely connected and that you can learn to control them. For suicidal thoughts the cognitive behavioral solution, stated in simple terms is to stop thinking about killing yourself. One way to do this is to substitute “good” thoughts for the “bad” thoughts. For example, a therapist might tell a suicidal patient to think about his love for his children whenever his thoughts turn to killing himself. One cannot (usually) think of love for your progeny and entertain the idea of hurting them by killing yourself at the same time.

The Cognitive-Behavioral solution to “Flooding” is very similar. When you, as a man, begin to feel “Flooded” or you feel that you are going to blow your top over the seemingly unending provocations from your wife the solution is to stop. How do you do that? Well the best way is to train yourself to stop. Practice Meditation. Learn how to breathe. Read the Stoics, in particular The Meditations by Marcus Aralius. Develop a strong, indefatigable frame that is loving, giving, kind, positive, affirming, happy and strong. Substitute “good” thoughts for the thoughts that are “flooding” you. For example, I recommend when you feel flooded to step back and realize exactly who it is that you are dealing with, and why. Take a moment to laugh internally with amusement. This provocateur who is aggravating you is just a woman. In MRP/TRP terms she is a child who needs a Daddy to correct and protect her.

If your 11 year-old daughter were Shit Testing you and pitching a hissy fit how would you react? If she were stomping her feet and crying how would you act? If she were calling you names and telling you she “hates” you then how would you react? Would you get butthurt and sulk? Would you get mad and try to hit her back with the same level of emotional pain? Would you “Stonewall” and storm out of the room so you can “punish her” for treating you badly?

OF COURSE YOU WOULDN’T DO ANY OF THOSE THINGS! You would probably take charge of the little girl. You would know that her words of anger are temporary. You would understand that she is a child and you are the adult. You would not tolerate abusive language from your children and you would calmly explain to your child how language like that is not used in this house.

Why does this work so well with your kids but not always with your wife? Because YOU ASSUME GOOD INTENTIONS when dealing with your children. How often do you assume “good intentions” when you and your wife are arguing? Probably the answer is never or almost never and that is a problem because guess what guys? That little girl is your wife.

Take a few minutes to try to understand how life must suck to be a woman. Every day she wakes up feeling different. Her emotions change day by day and minute by minute. She cannot describe how she feels because our language does not even contain the concepts. She wants conflicting things in a man, which sucks for us- but imagine how it would feel to be like that. You would probably also cry at random times for no apparent reason! She thinks she wants a man who will do things for her and take care of her and most of all help her check off the ever growing, unending items on her unending lists. Yet when she finds a man willing to work 24/7/365 to complete that incompletatable list she realizes sooner rather than later that such a man is not worthy of her. Such a man who is willing to sublimate his own thoughts, emotions, and desires just for a chance for weekly Starfish Sex is obviously not a “worthy man.”

Then once she realizes that her man is no man at all her anxiety ramps up and her Hamster starts running full speed. How can this accommodating man protect me and the children? I am so alone in the world with nobody to protect me! I don't have an Emotional Connection to this man.

Guess what else happens? The list continues to grow no matter how many items you cross off. It’s not about the nail and it was never about the lists.

To paraphrase the great /u/Jacktenofhearts she doesn’t want you to help her check the items off her list. She wants there to not be a list at all for her to worry about. She doesn’t want you to do more Choreplay and housework. She doesn’t want you to do the dishes. She wants there to be no dirty dishes in the sink!

Similarly, she doesn’t want you to go out of your way to establish an “Emotional Connection.” She wants there to BE an emotional connection. She wants to FEEL an emotional connection with a man to whom she is sexually attracted.

So how do we as MRP Men achieve this nebulous, ever changing target? Actually, we have several options. These were largely taken from a Coaching session I had with one of my clients. He can chime in and take credit if he wants to be known but I can’t identify him: Thanks Broh! This is good stuff!

• 1. Avoid flooding: As described above when you get that uncontrolled, pulse pounding adrenaline rush at the moment you start to perceive your wife is criticizing you then you should mediate and seek first to understand, only then to be understood. Assume good intentions and don’t be touchy or butthurt. Learn to recognize the signs of flooding. Control yourself, your thoughts, your emotions, and your feelings. When you have control of yourself, you will have control over her. A healthy dosing of IDGAF often helps in establishing a mindset that avoids flooding. Cool off brah. She’s only a woman.

• 2. Speak using the language of women

A. Use light and nonsexual Kino during the day and initiate using progressively sexual Kino. Kino is the secret language of women that they use to convey this nebulous “emotional connection.” When we say STFU we don’t mean stop communicating. Dummy, you thought we communicate only through words? Try again. 70% of communication is nonverbal and if you would just follow our advice and STFU you could probably start actually communicating with your wife. B. Spend 20-30 minutes every day actively listening to your wife. Listen with full attention. Listen with interest. You married this woman so there must be something interesting about her life. Her friends divorce drama can more entertaining than a UFC match! I recommend that you cut this time short if your wife starts using this time to complain and moan about you or to criticize you. That is a boundary that should not be crossed but beyond this, if you want an “emotional connection”

I suggest you spend some time every day talking to your wife while at the same time you STFU. I know it is a contradiction but it is what they mean by “communicating.” Get it? YOU STFU and SHE talks and talks and whines and complains and emotes. See how that works? Remember, to a woman “talking” is not about exchanging information or reaching a solution. It is about listening with sympathy and interest and encouraging her to tell you more while showing empathy:

Example:

Her: “My boss did blah and blah and blah.” You: “Aww, that sucks dear.”

Hopefully you can see how easy this really is! They key is to genuinely be interested in her silly drama and to not offer solutions. Don’t be condescending, be interested. Offer interest and sympathy. It is not for long. If you are good you can get in your 20-30 minutes of active listening during dinner.

3. Be the fun captain: Start every day with a reset no matter what level of Dread you are on. Throw a lifeline to your wife every morning. It may take quite a few casts but eventually she will understand and begin to eagerly grasp onto it. Be in charge but include her in decision making and if she has a good suggestion go with it. Give her the respect due to her as your First Officer and wife. A Captain must have deep and abiding respect for his First Officer and that is also what she means by “Emotional Connection.”

Have a positive, affirming attitude. Women are empaths. They sense emotions from others and if yours are tumultuous and churning and you are angry or sad she can feel it and it starts to rub off on her and she starts to feel it. Conversely, when you are upbeat and confident and fun, she starts to feel that. You want to be FUN and a POSITIVE influence, not a downer and a negative influence.

• 4. Tell her “NO!” Many guys claim that the sexiest thing you can say to a woman is the word “no.” It is entirely counter-intuitive but has been reported so often we cannot ignore the results. If women are children like some guys in the manosphere claim then they are certainly smart children who know they need boundaries. When you say “no” with conviction, love, and calm confidence, it very often juices her up and creates a powerful emotional connection in her mind. Be careful using this power and use it wisely.

• 5. Be a master. Heartiste teaches us: “When you have mastery over yourself you will have mastery over her” but mastery does not mean perfection. Even Eddie Van Halen makes mistakes when he plays the guitar but he continues on with the near perfect song so the notes blend together seamlessly. I doubt even the most expert ear can pick up Eddie’s mistakes! In the same way you will make mistakes. You will misinterpret emotions, respond to Shit Tests with supplication (and fail) and respond to comfort tests with anger (and fail). None of that matters. A master sees the overall picture and continues on as if nothing has happened and to his audience, nothing bad has happened. It is all good. When you feel it and know it in your soul then she will also feel it and know it.

• 6. Be the leader: Lead her on an adventure. Lead her negative emotions to more positive emotions. Lead her to bed. Be the benevolent Captain. If she won’t follow, imagine that your giant ship has charted a course and it is traveling East. You are unraveling a 1,000 foot rope tied to your wife. If you travel in one direction for 1,000 feet, the rope will pull taught and she will be forced to follow behind you. Your job as Captain is to reel her in slowly so she doesn’t slip the rope and so that eventually she is at her place by your side and close to your heart. Of course most guys prefer her by the side of the Captains bed working on that slurping “emotional connection” that all men crave but one step at a time guys. If you are still working on the whole “emotional connection thing you are not ready for Sex God Method but don’t worry. There is a time for everything under Heaven.

• 7. Don’t be autistic and fuck it up by continually treating Comfort Tests as Shit Tests. This is one we see all the time. Guys, let me say again: YOU ARE NOT GOING TO AGREE AND AMPLIFY YOUR WAY OUT OF A COMFORT TEST.

Many guys (and girls) mistake Dread Game as a prescription to "cheat." By no means! Dread Game is a prescription to not cheat. When a wife has The Dread and starts whining how you don’t care about me, or accusing you of flirting, THAT IS THE TIME TO TAKE HER IN YOUR ARMS AND REASSURE HER. During a comfort test you can usually be a smart ass and agree and amplify so long as you are holding her. If you are sniping and carping across the room you are not only failing the Shit Test, which lowers her attraction. You are failing the Comfort Test which can and will completely destroy the relationship.

The difference between a Shit Test and Comfort Test is simple. If she is carping and bitching and rude it is a shit test. If she is whining and complaining and rude and she is saying some version of "You make me feel bad" it is a comfort test. For a Shit Test you agree and amplify and make fun of her antics. For a Comfort test you take her in your arms and reassure her-then you agree and amplify and make fun of her antics.

If your wife is sexing you regularly there is usually no good reason for advanced Dread game (above level 6). If she throws a comfort test when you are regularly having sex it is usually easy to take her in your arms and whisper something supportive to her.

However, if your wife is in sexual denial mode this is when you use Dread Game. When she responds and complains about you "flirting" or not having an "emotional connection" she will often push you away violently and refuse to let you comfort her. The answer is to laugh, stay upbeat, and don't get butthurt. Then leave her alone if she wants to continue ragging and raging. You don't have to tolerate this behavior from a frigid shrew. You need to teach her that she will get one response from you when she is in sexual denial mode and she will not get what she wants. However, you have to leave the door open for showing her another response when the issue is no longer "Why do you always think about sex....I fucked you last month."

This is the big secret they don't want you to know guys and it is the essence of the Red Pill. If you know it then you have taken the Red Pill. If you don't then you are still gagging or you spit it back up.

Women don't know what they want and they change every day anyway so they require a strong man to lead their emotions. Sure, it is a royal pain in the ass for us guys but imagine how much of an endless source of angst and pain is must be for them! It does not need to be so for you.

You should not get mad at the tide any more than you should get mad at a woman’s emotional fluctuations. You simply take a few moments to understand the tide and perhaps even appreciate its majesty, beauty, and grace. When the tide is coming in strong you just calmly step out of the way and even when it is rushing far out across the beach you can know with absolute confidence that it will return.

Moreover, you don't run away to another beach because the tide came in and got your towels all wet! That would be pointless you see because that damn tide is just going to do the same thing at the other beach unless you change your behavior first. Sure you can argue that some lakeside beaches have gentle waves lapping on the shore and no discernible tide at all but you will find that even the most pristine beach is not fun all year round. Some freeze over all winter and some have entire seasons with biting gnats and mosquitos. Not all beaches are the same but trust us on this one, all of them have hazards designed to entrap and then test a man.
Knowing and appreciating the woman’s perspective makes you more likely to assume good intentions and avoid being “flooded” so you can respond to her like a calm, strong, \textbf{masculine man}. The key is to also be the man who can speak in her illogical, emotional language, hear her, understand her, appreciate her, \textbf{and} can steady her, and be an Oak Tree and a rock who stabilizes her emotions. This is what women mean by “establishing an emotional connection.” No Problem! We will get right on it.
My youngest son is a high school junior. He was recently assigned to have a parent write him a letter of advice, similar to the advice Polonius gave Hamlet. Here's what I wrote him. Comments welcome.

Dear son,

Your grandfather taught me a great deal during his life, both by precept and by example. I've always tried to do the same with you and your brothers. The idea that I'm supposed to write down all my distilled life experience and advice in a single letter is pretty daunting. What if I leave something important out, like "always brush your teeth?" I'll do my best to stick to the most important things in this letter but it may get kind of long.

As you know, I have had the good fortune to travel the world, work in a fascinating career, serve our country in the military, and meet fascinating people from all over. Here's what I think you need to know.

"Brush your teeth and pay your mortgage early." This was one of your grandfather's favorite pieces of advice. When he was a little younger than I am now, he had all sorts of dental problems (including bad gum disease that led to him having several teeth pulled). Don't be that guy. More generally, two things: take care of your body and be very, very wary of debt. Lift heavy weights to strengthen your body; find an endurance sport you enjoy to complement that. And seriously... brush your damn teeth.

Find your mission. Throughout your life you will often wonder why you're here or what the point of your life is. That's something only you can answer. My mission is to be the best man I can be and to live the best life I can. That would still be true if I had a different career or different life circumstances. "Best" means trying to live up to the standards I set for myself, some of which are outlined here. Your mission shouldn't be just "make money" or "get women." Focus your mission on who you are (or aspire to be), not what you do. No one but you can determine what your mission is or whether you're accomplishing it.

Always add value. In every personal or professional relationship, you should always be able to identify what you're bringing to the party. Be the kind of man who has something useful to contribute in every endeavor: your knowledge and skill, your physical strength and endurance, your stability and reliability, your sense of humor, your work ethic, your love... the list goes on. It's OK to feel like you don't have much value to add, or that you don't have all these things right now—that's a sign that you need to work on developing them, which we all need to do. Find or enhance your skills, talents, and capabilities so that you can add value. Other humans, whether employers, friends, or potential lovers, will always seek the highest value they can Always expect value. Over time you will learn to identify what value others bring to your life. Watch carefully what others add to your personal, family, and work relationships. If they are not providing the value you need, know when it is time to move on. Your friends, coworkers, acquaintances, and lovers over the years will each show you through their actions what they can and will do to enliven or improve your life. Ever have a friend who always took attention, time, and energy but never gave any back? Avoid that type of person. This is not a "what's in it for me?" piece of advice, more a recognition that anything which does not push your life upwards will drag it downwards.

Never stop learning and growing. You and your brothers like to make fun of the fact that I didn't start liking avocado or sushi until my 40s, or that I didn't run my first triathlon until age 45. But that's objective proof that you can always try new things, learn new things, and grow as a man. As you grow you will find new opportunities, new interests, new people, and new value to enrich your life. When I was your age I had no idea who I would be in 2018. In just my 40s alone, I have drastically improved my physical fitness and health, made amazing new friends, found hobbies I never would have thought I'd enjoy, traveled to exotic places, and had remarkable experiences with my sons. Never stop. You can't achieve your mission if you don't know anything.

Work hard and earn your leisure. If there's work to be done, do it. You're really good about not procrastinating your schoolwork. I hope you never lose that trait. The world is full of people who are content to sit on their asses playing Xbox or reading crap on the Internet, then complain that they have a crappy job, no worthwhile relationships, and no meaningful purpose in life. You may even know some of these people. Don't be one. Playtime is awesome once you have put in the work-and that includes exercise and self-improvement, not just the literal work you do at school or at a job. Your ability to accomplish your mission is directly tied to whether you do the important stuff first or turn into a Dorito-eating couch-locked neckbeard.

Seek the best. You wouldn't try to fuel an airplane with dirt and rocks. Don't fuel your mind with crap. There's nothing wrong with enjoying good entertainment but don't waste your time with stuff you know (or suspect) is low-quality. Stay away from crap on the Internet. Read the classics. There's a reason why people are still reading Epictetus, Seneca, Shakespeare, Dickens, and Carnegie hundreds or thousands of years after their deaths. Read non-fiction books on topics that interest you regularly. See what you can learn from the experiences, knowledge, and lives of others. Someone who passively consumes entertainment can't add any value to his own life or anyone else's.

React to what people do, not what they say. The world is full of people who will say one thing and do another. Want to know if someone is truly your friend, or really loves you, or actually has your best interests at heart? Ignore what they say and watch how they treat you and how they behave. Watch how people treat others who are less powerful than they are—a waiter, a clerk, a subordinate at work, a child.

Be your own man. The world is full of people who will tell you how to live your life. There is nothing wrong with listening to their advice, then evaluating whether that advice is good for you or not. You are ultimately the man who has to look at himself in the mirror each day and judge yourself. There are plenty of other people who will judge you. But you know what 311 said: “fuck the naysayers.” Also, they only entered in one contest that they made up themselves, you feel me?

Do what is right, and stand up for what is right. At any given moment, you will almost always know what the right thing to do is. Sometimes you have to figure out the least-wrong choice from a series of bad alternatives, but usually not—it will usually be pretty obvious. Never tolerate or accept bullying of yourself or others. When you see a wrong being done, correct it. That doesn't mean arguing with people on the Internet, by the way, or defending people who have acted badly and are now facing the consequences of their bad actions.

This seems like a lot of advice, and it is. I encourage you to go back and look at Ben Franklin's system for journaling, where he identified a single aspect of his mission to work on each day, each week, and each month, and then tracked his progress. (In fact, I strongly advise you to read his Autobiography on general principles.) You don't have to—and probably can't—implement all this advice at once. Pick one piece of advice to implement at a time and then focus on it. Just like your lifts are progressing in Stronglifts, or like you get more fit on the bike, the more of these things you do, the more you'll be able to do.

I love you with all my heart and look forward to seeing you grow into manhood and excellence. I'm always here for you.
Background: MRP for 13 months.

My woman and I are headed out for dinner the other day. She starts a serious conversation.

She says: (to the best of my memory) "You know the saying that a man marries a woman hoping she won't change but she does, and a woman marries a man hoping he will change but doesn't?"

"Well I want you to know that the life I have today is better now than I can ever remember with anyone else. I'm very happy and so much of that is because of things you've done yourself without me."

"I tell my friends all the time how you've changed and worked to face the demons of your past and how you still go to the gym constantly. I want you to know that I have benefited greatly from all your effort. Thank you."

"It began when you started X and Y [weeks before joining MRP - the support systems suggested in NMMNG] and... I was really unhappy when we first got together but now it's like you're not the man I married anymore."

At dinner she expresses dread about how she was devastated when men in her past left her for other women and how she hopes I never do that. I tell her she knows exactly how to keep me interested with a lewd smile. Later she does exactly that.

Translation: I was Pussy McFaggot [thanks scurve] when she met me - not a man, but she needed a beta bucks provider, and a woman desperately wants a man to lead her.

She acted the way any woman will who feels desperate enough post wall to be sexual with a beta male: "abusive" emotionally, sometimes physically and trying to branch swing. A total bitch. AWALT.

I started improving and didn't talk about Fight Club with her. Men here told me the truth and ripped me a stainless steel asshole. I didn't run away butt hurt. I started the side bar material. I learned what true feminine nature represents. I regained the Outcome Independence I had in my early 20s. I learned to pass shit tests and eventually to not fail comfort tests. I took control of the treasury. I starting steering my ship as captain. I built frame. I earned respect that she never had for the faggot I used to be. I changed and became a man.

Note that in the Female Social Matrix she's invoking jealousy from her single friends by telling them how great her man is. AWALT. They're in competition and when a woman has the highest value man she thinks she can get, then she will express it to her friends verbally (and to the man himself while she's on her knees with a load half swallowed and the rest on her face.)

This post reads like MRP Porn, but for the new guys: I was an ordinary average douchebag who'd been a complete fucking loser for 30 years although at times on the outside I looked like anything but, and I decided to do what men do around here.

Could I trade mine in for a 15+ years younger model? Confirmed. Should I? That's the point. Who cares? If she left, I wouldn't care. Life might be easier but also less rewarding until I chose a replacement. Or didn't.

And this is the winning side of AWALT. She brings value to my life even when it's only a smile. I enjoy her company and...I've been with enough women to know that any of them can become the most beautiful girl in the world to me, when her eyes light up while I'm inside her.

The difference is that: the one I've got is now in my frame, and it didn't start that way. The one I've got now is a good fit and the grass is only greener when it's full of fertilizer shit.

Stay strong gents.
Red Pill Truth- Nagging LTR/Wife? You are the one at Fault. Not Her by Victor-James | December 4, 2018 | Link

First of a little about me. I am 34 in a LTR with a 26 year old woman. Fully took the red pill many years ago but am constantly still learning and evolving.

My gf was initially was one of my plates but over time she proved worthy of a much more serious commitment so I dropped everyone else I was seeing at the time and became exclusive with her. For the first 8 months of the relationship, everything was great. I fully embraced my role as a masculine man and she was able to relax and flourish with grace and femininity. I am the captain and she is my lieutenant. Things were great, until slowly but surely I lost sense of who I was and reverted back to my old blue pill tendencies.

As the relationship progressed, my love for her grew more and more. Gone was the idea that she was replaceable at a moment’s notice to thinking she was a rare Unicorn who I was going to marry and have children with. The thought of losing her started to become unfathomable to me. With those feelings came my beta like behavior. Never wanting to disagree with her. Making sure she was happy, without regard to my own happiness. Allowing her to change certain aspects of myself because I thought that is what she wanted (my hairstyle, what I ate, etc).

It was pathetic. When she was a plate, I never would have tolerated any such behavior because I wasn't scared to walk away. But over time I fell in love and slowly my masculinity drifted away and I was slowly letting her have my balls on a platter. As you can probably imagine, things between us became terrible. The more I was pleasing her, the more bitchy she became. We started arguing more, sex was less, and it never seemed like she was happy. To say I was resentful is an understatement.

I vividly remember the moment the lightbulb clicked in my head. I was at her parents house celebrating her birthday. She was being a bitch as usual and my phone happened to be on the table. She knew the password to my phone and started looking through my messages. I was very uncomfortable with the fact but I was too much of a pussy to upset her. I noticed she started to look through messages between my mother and I. I told her if she would mind giving me back my phone. She said no and kept reading. I asked her again. She ignored me and kept reading. Then the third time I regrettably whined and yelled at her and grabbed the phone from her hand. She then proceeded to scold me like a child and demanded that I never talk to her like that again. And then, it all made sense to me. I realized the problem wasn't her. It was me.

I lost my way as a man.

It was as simple as that. I no longer was this masculine man who was the leader of the relationship. I no longer was a man that people wanted to respect and follow. I no longer was a man who believed in himself and was willing to set boundaries and walk in a moment’s notice if those boundaries were crossed. Her frame became my reality.

How can a man expect his girl to love and respect him if he isn’t fulfilling his role as a man should be in a relationship? How can he expect his girl to be feminine and sweet if his actions are causing the polarity between the two to fade away? Her bad behavior was a result of my inability to be the man she fell for in the first place. Her bitchiness and nagging was her way of crying for help. It was her way of indicating I needed to change and be the man I know I am capable of being.

From that day forward the entire relationship changed back to the way it was before. Even though I love this girl, I realized that I had to respect myself first and foremost and make myself happy. Setting boundaries, telling her no, not changing my unique quirks just to please her. I had to adopt the mindset that things may not work out between the two of us but even if it does I WILL BE FINE.

Once I did that, the bond between us grew exponentially and things couldn’t be better. She no longer nags or complains because she knows I will walk. She is completely comfortable now being in her feminine because she can finally feel my internal strength again. She feels that if she pushes me to far, there’s another girl ready to take her place.

A women will never love you unless they respect you. In order to get that respect from her, you have to be the leader and never lose sight of that for one minute. Fellas, never play the role of victim. You are responsible for your significant others behavior. Be the captain and she has no other choice but to follow. She’s either in or she’s out. It’s as simple as that.
This post is an adaptation of a comment response in a recent AskMRP thread. For the guys with kids in the 0-10 range, read and consider how much this applies to you. I’ve been married for a while and have more kids than I can keep track of so I think I’m semi-qualified to talk about this.

The Obvious but Misleading Problem

MRP tends to focus a lot on the basics like lifting, getting your shit together, developing frame, dressing better, owning the finances, etc. That’s all important and necessary and valuable. You can’t run before you crawl.

However, for many guys, that just isn’t enough. This is especially true when you have little kids. When a woman has a baby, her body undergoes massive hormonal changes that affect many areas of her life including libido, values, personality, long-term goals, etc. This response is designed to ensure the survival of a new tiny human who cannot do anything for itself for years. Our species simply won’t survive if moms didn’t have this type of response.

So, for you newer guys who are getting into MRP and you have kids under the age of 5-6, you have a tough road to hoe. You can become more fit, make more money, develop frame, internalize RP truths, etc. and still not see the types of results you want because you have two 800lb competitors who are ready to kick your ass.

Your competition? The tiny human and Facecrack. You have to remember that women engage the world through their feelings and right now, she is getting a shit ton of hormonal opium from her kid and the validation that it brings on Facecrack. She is a "mommy" and that means that most of the time, she is the most important creature on earth and the bestest, most wonderfulest thing ever. She may be terrible at cooking, screwing, and cleaning but she can simply take a couple of ‘cutesy’ pics of the little one and immediately get 50+ comments of “OMGZ SO CUTE” and “YOU ARE SO AMAZING” and “YOU ARE THE BEST MOMMY EVAR!!!” You think your ‘passive dread’ stands any chance against that shit? LOL! You are a damn fool if you think it will.

The Real Problem

So, she's fucking lazy. You guys aren't boning like you want, she's soft and pudgy, she isn't interesting, she sucks. Guess what? It's probably your fault. You aren't leading. Leadership is influence and right now, you are losing the influence battle.

Women tend to be reactive to their environment and not proactive to making changes unless they are uncomfortable. Right now, her environment is mostly dominated by mommy hormones, mommy stresses, and mommy affirmations from Facebook. This is all much more potent than anything you can passively bring. And if you are passive about it, that won't change. She doesn't care how badass you look now, how strong your frame is, how much money you make, etc. if you aren't making her life an adventure. She has something that gives her far more feelz than that and it will stay that way until the urchin is 5-6... unless you guys have more.

The Proof is in the Pudding

That's why you see so many families pop out a few kids, the dad gets fat, the mom goes into full mommy mode for 8-10 years. Once the kids are a bit older, she looks up and realizes that without mommy hormones, her life is boring as shit because her husband is terrible at creating an adventure. So she goes the gym, hits up the trainer, gets a decent body back, and then "has no idea how it happened" when she has an affair with the lawyer who works out on his lunch hour at the same gym.

The ACTIVE Solution

So, for a lot of guys, the basics aren’t enough. Looking good, dressing better, lifting, more $, none of it works like you want. Maybe she isn’t quite as passive in bed. Maybe she comes around a little but not the ways you were hoping for. She still basically sucks and not in the right way. What’s the answer? Divorce? Cheat? Listen, I’m not here to moralize but I will say that you brought a tiny human into the world and you, as a man, can probably do better for it than cheating on its mom in the first few years of its life.

So, what’s the answer? You. You are the answer because you are the problem. Your leadership sucks if you can’t influence her. Leadership is active, effective influence. You to lead her to something better than the comfortable shit she is probably used to.

Right now, she is probably in a familiar rut of getting up early with the baby, feeding the baby, posting 26 pictures of the baby to FB, getting enormous validation from everyone else about the baby, etc. You need to sell her a better vision. You need to appeal to her feelings, her emotions, her desire for the dramatic and adventurous.

After that? Purposefully make her life more fun together. Woo her. Do some fun shit. Figure out how to make your lives an adventure both with and without the baby. Did you guys do anything physical together before the baby? Find a babysitter and book that shit. Go rock climbing, biking, hiking, whatever. Find a way to do something reasonable (entry level) that will still exhaust her and make her realize how out of shape she has become but how in shape you are now... while not rubbing her face in it.

In other words, a beach trip is probably a bad idea if she has a baby that's 3 months old and still has 20lb to drop. Don't be autistic. Baby steps are important here or she will go into full retreat mode. You want her to think "damn, I forgot how fun that was but I need to get in shape again so we can do that some more!" Make her remember that there is more to life than burping the baby, posting pictures on Facebook, and getting way too absorbed in the latest crazes in all the mommy blogs.
Create adventure. Dream a little. Talk to her about your vision for the kid. Talk about fun stuff you guys will do together as a family and then start to incorporate some of it now in a way that makes your wife realize she has to get her shit together. Give her a vision or adventure she wants to be a part of because a good physique, solid frame, and money handling skills won't make a bit of a difference versus tiny baby + Facebook.

Lead her to better. You are the man. Sell her on the promise (and then fulfillment) of more exciting experiences.

TLDR:

You have competition for her right now in the form of a tiny human that basically causes her body to release some of the most potent chemicals known to man every time it looks up at her or latches on to the titty. And that's ok. But you don't overcome that or compete with that by being a fit, money-handling autistic robot. You overcome it by being fun. Women perceive the world through interactive emotions. Give her a better experience than baby + Facebook.

Sell her on better.

EDIT: For the autistic crowd, this post is about DOING, not talking. Yeah, you gotta talk a little because people aren’t mind readers. But do it during a hike. Talk about vision riding up a ski lift. Do it on a break during mountain biking. Don’t do it while on the couch in between episodes.

You sell people on actions, not speech. I should have clarified that.
A few thoughts from an OG
by Jalakee | July 31, 2018 | Link

So I'm an occasional lurker here. To give a bit of background, I became red pill before the term "red pill" was actually coined---back in the day when SoSuave.net was one of the few corners of the internet where this stuff was being discussed. The birthplace of Anti-Dump, RT, even the esteemed Pook. Before Heartiste, and wayyyyy before Reddit Red Pill.

Like most of you, I started off as a dyed-in-the-wool beta chump. I had a father who in many ways was a great man, but definitely passed his blue pill philosophy and behaviors down the family tree. I had an introverted personality, poor fatherly example, a mother that died young and a host of other negative experiences with girls at a young age that set up the perfect storm for a lead-footed beta sinking to the bottom of the blue pill sea.

Long story short, a cataclysmic LTR and depression forever altered my path and set me on the straight and narrow with regards to women. I slowly began selecting better and learning that I was ultimately responsible for the way women treated me, not the other way around.

I racked up close to 40 lays in those formative years and dated probably double that, and became quite deft at the simple yet elusive art of NEXTing. It is partly through all this experience that I was able to attract and recognize the rarity in my now-wife. By RP standards, I did everything right: I met a virgin (a true virgin) 7 years younger than me (I was 30), was more educated than her, made more money than her, I delayed exclusivity until I took her virginity, I held a dominant frame from day one, I had tons of experience prior to her, and didn't marry her until she had confessed to me unprompted that she would stay with me no matter whether we married or not, had kids or not.

To be frank, experience allowed me to select and attract 'good stock', but there is certainly an element of Providence here, or luck, however you define it. To this day I am grateful and yes, even blessed.

What I came here to say is that EVEN if you have done everything right---self-actualized as a man, gained experience, screened redundantly, established frame from day 1, ruled out all sorts of common pitfalls and checked the right boxes---you can STILL revert to betaism within a marriage or LTR if you become complacent. And the onset is quite insidious.

Red Pill in a Marriage, and to a lesser extent an LTR, can be summed up like this: If there is a leadership void in your relationship, your wife WILL fill that void, and it will never be to your benefit.

That's it. Don't make it any more complicated that that. All the other stuff; the lifting, the clothes, the behavioral tactics; all of those are just mechanical means of faking it till you make it. And that's ok, by the way, but they are means to an end. Leadership is first and foremost a mindset, and all actions flow from this origin.

It does not matter what stock your woman comes from. It does not matter how good you were yesterday or how much of a stud you used to be. Does not matter how much other shit you have going on in your life. This is a law of nature, as real as gravity and thermodynamics. If there is a leadership void, it will be filled. Not surprisingly, this was even validated Biblically long before any of us clowns thought we made some scientific discovery.

What's really driven this home for me in the last few years is how easily you can lose frame. Married guys can relate. And as an aside, I truly believe you do not know what it is like to be married until you are married. This is evidenced by the sheer number of unmarried guys who tell me or other married men how marriage "should" be.

In marriage, things get routine. You both get lazy in your own ways. It's human nature. You cant be "on" all the time like you are when single, because when single after your bitch time you get to go home and power down for a while. You arent constantly being tested. And that's another law of nature to embrace: ALL WOMEN WILL TEST YOU. And the closer you get to them, the more they will test you at your weakest moments. My wife loves to shit test me when I'm high. Yep, when I'm trying to get my relax on, smoke a little weed and just contemplate life on my front porch, that's when she decides to come out and ask me all sorts of weird personal questions. Or start a relationship conversation. They do it, it's uncanny, and you have to always be ready; or at least remove yourself when you know you are vulnerable.

These little moments of shit testing and frame shifting can add up, until one day you wonder why she doesn't suck your dick like she used to, why is she gaining weight, why is she giving you attitude all the time, etc. It's a lot like being cold when you are outside: it is much easier to stay warm than to get warm.

Leadership in a marriage is a crucial, critical skill to master. It's not even so much a skill as it is a discipline you practice. Even the icons have beta moments in their marriage/LTRs, I guarantee you. You just arent privy to them.

While I'm far from an expert, I think there are some basic tenets on marital leadership that maybe I'll touch on in another post. But to be honest, there is nothing new under the sun. It starts with an extreme ownership of your life. None of us are reinventing the wheel here; we are just repackaging timeless wisdom and making it applicable to modern times.

I dont believe marriage in and of itself is bad. When done correctly, I actually believe it is a net positive; good for the individual and good for society. Whether or not you chose to marry or remarry is up to you. There is no right answer, but dont believe that avoiding marriage absolves you of these trials. Sure, you remove some legal risk. But eventually you will be confronted with these laws, and you and you alone have to pony up.

Peace!

TL;DR: If there is a leadership void in your marriage/LTR, your woman will fill it, and it will never be to your benefit. You will always be tested, even if you do everything right, and usually at your weakest moments. Avoiding marriage does not absolve you of these laws.
I was inspired by this and this to address the issue of discussion sex with our women.

Too many men are telling their wives they’re not getting enough sex, even doing it in frame, and finding what they think is success. Let me knock this solidly into your brain: you’re doing it wrong. You’re a pussy if you thinking discussing sex, even in frame, is going to result in anything hot, dripping, AND lasting.

Active dread and discussion can lead to higher quantity, but there is a ceiling in quality. What blasts through that ceiling like Wonka’s Elevator is passive dread, a.k.a., becoming awesome. There’s dozens of great posts on awesomeness, my favorites are here and here. This is why we broken-record the newbies to STFU and work on yourself.

Negotiating For Sex, a.k.a. Doing Dread Wrong, a.k.a. Abusing Your Newfound Power

You read a few sidebar books, enough to understand the basic theory and light a fire of righteous indignation under your fat ass. You start exercising, even lifting heavy, and go from 300 lbs to 285. You’re developing hobbies and man friends so you can check them off the Master MRP Self-Improvement List™. You’ve left the house a few times when she gives you the hard no, but most of the time you just go to another room and read.

So you think you’ve dropped enough beta to say something about your sexual needs. You tell her in no uncertain terms that you won’t take just her bare minimum anymore. You’re a husband who deserves sex with his wife, goddamit. You might say things like:

- I deserve better from you
- You should fuck me because we’re married
- I don’t want to have sex with a woman who isn’t into it

It’s probably not a pretty conversation, but your bravado seems to leave an impact. Her beta is gaining some self-respect, she better up her game. She truly longs for an alpha husband... plus, she gets off on the drama of it all. You think, “Cool, that was easy. I’m The Man now. I communicated in my frame, and now she understands that she should fuck me more. Oh yeah. Red Pill accomplished.”
Here’s the problem. She’s still fucking you out of obligation. Sure, she might be temporarily aroused by your chest pounding, and she might even logically understand that husbands and wives should have sex. But SHE IS STILL NOT ATTRACTED TO YOU. You simply cannot negotiate that.

I once foolishly told her, “I cheated on you because you ignored my need for sex.” My wife will NEVER give me a hard no because I said that. But that doesn’t mean she can’t get enough of my cock down her throat. It’s still starfish sometimes, and ya know what, I gotta deal with it until I’m attractive in my own right. I upped my negotiating power, but it’s still fucking negotiation.

You read. You devour both sidebars. You start lifting, and not just fucking around the gym. You’re taking your fitness and diet seriously. You actively research hobbies you want to start, then you go out and fucking start them. You STFU about problems at work. You internalize that you are alone in this world, and it comforts you because you also internalize that you’re powerful enough to accomplish anything on your own.

You don’t need a supportive, loving wife by your side. You actually don’t pay her much attention, and you’re not obsessed about your sex life because you’re too busy becoming awesome. Your desire to jack off wanes, you start to feel invigorated and free from the shackles of a sexless marriage. She denies you? Fine, you have better things to do, so you go do them silently and cheerily. You have no conversations about sex.

You dive into your hobbies, you’re out of the house often, and when you’re at home you’re working on projects and staying off the game console. You own the shit out of housework like you’re single.

Your wife starts to take note of your absences. She’s seeing her BB transform into an AF, and on top of that he’s not mentioning sex. “What the hell is going on?! My husband isn’t a loser anymore. What if he’s getting some on the side? What if he’s prepping to leave? He’s too valuable to lose now. Other women will want him. Plus, he’s HOT.”

Guess what? She’ll start fucking you with abandon. It won’t happen as quickly as Option 1, but the results will fucking last. Sex will come from her own desire and it will be hotter. She’ll not only indulge in your fantasies but will come up with her own. You’ll do things to her you wouldn’t be able to dream of with Option 1.
The Fucking Conclusion

Your wife won’t let you do doggystyle? You’re not attractive enough.

Wife still shit tests you regularly, especially during sex? You’re not attractive enough.

Sex is still sometimes starfish, even though she seems to want to please you? You’re not attractive enough.

She asks for things in exchange for sex, like speaking her love language, being more romantic, doing more chores, or giving her more massages? You’re not attractive enough.

Sure, you can wrangle some decent sex out of her, and it might be good for awhile. Don’t fucking discuss these things with her. Be constantly awesome and quality, lifelong sex will follow.

When she, unprompted, offers to do that one fetish you mentioned way back in your beta years sloppy, enthusiastic blowjobs, you’ll know you’re starting to get it.

Everybody wants to be an Alpha, but nobody wants to read the sidebar.

by RP_SuitScholar | May 14, 2017 | Link

This post title gets its inspiration from Ronnie Coleman's famous quote:

“Everybody wants to be a bodybuilder, but nobody wants to lift no heavy-ass weights.”

I don’t think I have to insult this community’s intelligence with an in-depth explanation of the principle, but for the faggots I see posting shit daily that like to think of themselves as part of the community, I think some explanation is warranted. Don’t get your feelings hurt boys, to quote /u/stonetempletilists, “You ain’t shit yet, but that’s okay!”

Here is the three-part answer to every fucking question you want to ask on any of these forums or their sub forums:

1. LIFT.
2. Read. The. Fucking. Sidebar. All. OF. IT.
3. STFU

LIFT

As in be on a program consistently, at least one that puts you under heavy ass weight three times a week. If your wife won’t fuck you it’s because you’re doing too much cardio. This was how the RP took ahold of me. I am sad to report I did nothing fitness related in my entire life until 3 years ago. I now follow a PPL Program but have done Starting Strength, 5x5, a 6 Day Bro-Split, and a few others over the past few years, losing almost 50 lbs of bodyfat and building up several pounds of lean muscle mass. I ain’t shit yet, but that’s okay, because the journey continues and I am consistent with it. I see the results and people treat me differently as a result. Yesterday, I was overtly flirted with by three different women just going about my business doing errands. That never would have happened before the Red Pill and my commitment to fitness. It did my ego good but I reminded myself that it took years of consistent effort to get to this point, and if I give myself permission to eat like a slob and stop following my program, I will go back to being a fat fuck no girl would want to play “50 Shades of Pound my Pussy” with. LIFT you fuckers LIFT.

READ

I have read all the sidebar here and at TRP, some of the books more than once and have also read several other books that are not necessarily sidebar material but they are relevant to the Red Pill and have changed my life both personally and professionally. You must read and keep that shit to yourself. At first, you will be tempted to share the information you are getting with others, some of you even share the shit you’re reading with your wife. What a fucking joke. Never do that, ever. Instead, read and internalize, read and internalize. It is not the reading in itself that is helpful, it is the internalization, which takes time. Sometimes you will be reading one book and it will make another click and make perfect sense. Reading Rational Male is a great start, but when you read The Red Queen both books gain more depth and understanding because of how they overlap. You think reading No More Mr. Nice Guy is enough? Buddy you ain’t even close to getting your Red Pill Associates of Art, stop talking like you’re a god damn PHD of Big Dickery.

STFU

This is the one we all slip on at first. It separates the men from the boys when you learn to do this. STFU means exactly that. SHUT THE FUCK UP. When your wife is giving you shit. STFU. When your gym gains are giving you the power to sleep with your HB5 co-worker STFU. When you are pissed off because the Red Pill has shown you the stupidity of the Feminine Imperative controlling every aspect of your life...STFU. You are a fucking baby on this journey. You don’t get to say shit until you have been in the gym following a lifting program consistently for over a year and have read most if not all the sidebar material. Only then can you to some degree of finesse and control begin speaking to the bullshit that surrounds us as men. Even when you have mastered all the other tools in our arsenal (Agree and Amplify, Amused Mastery, Fogging, etc...) STFU remains fucking powerful to use. Just learn to look like you don’t give a fuck and be quiet even if the rage of POSEIDON is churning underneath. Telling a woman how pissed you are makes you no better than a fucking 2-year-old who can’t have a cookie. Be better. STFU.

TLDR: LIFT!
InChargeMan's Story
by InChargeMan | June 22, 2019 | Link

Per some comments and PM request I'm posting my "story". My goal was not to make this a TL;DR (I can see that didn't work out). Summary is: Was BP, did the monkey dance, wasn't happy, found MRP, fixed me, helped wife find her submissive nature, now live in a wonderful 24/7 D/s relationship and I've now gone a full 360 and do believe that the fairy tale relationship can exist, you just have to re-write the book. Feel free to ask questions.

Disclaimer 1: I am no guru, these are my experiences, I am a sample size of 1, take value where you see it. I am not special, I make no assertion otherwise.

Disclaimer 2: I'm open to any questions, but OPSEC will be observed. If I choose I might respond with particulars through PM to flaired members.

Disclaimer 3: Some details have been changed for anonymity, but the core content is there.

Disclaimer 4: I did not/do not do everything "by the book" regarding MRP. I don't know if I could have gotten here a different way, but I'm very happy with where I am now and where I am headed.

Keep in mind, a man's journey is never complete, each new day is the first day of the rest of your life...

Starting point - Typical life/career progression: I followed society's step-by-step guide for success. I was naturally smart, somewhat lazy in HS but also very competitive when I cared, middle of the pack for popularity, above average athletically but didn't pursue athletics beyond HS and for personal enjoyment, had little/no game, had little direction from my father on women/dating. Met my wife-to-be early on in college, fell in love, stayed together for a long time, got married, had kids. Went to college for a hard degree in the sciences (found my motivation, kicked ass), worked really hard, went to grad school, worked really hard, supported my wife to pursue her career goals for years, worked really hard to support the family, worried endlessly about being the only source of income while wife pursued her goals and we have kids, ran my business all this time, stuck it out through very hard times, built it into something very successful, in my industry I am known. I am mid 30's, married, 3 kids, nice house, wife and I have respectable careers, nothing special. I have more money than most, lots of people have a lot more, so what, money really doesn't buy happiness once you get past the point where you are living paycheck to paycheck.

Relationship progression: Never got to deadbedroom, never got to harpy cunt, really most guys would have been in my shoes and been "happy". My wife is a naturally good person, very beautiful (side note: I know everybody has wife goggles, but as a stupid test the other day in a busy public area I wanted to see how many random women within a +5 - 15 year age range I would consider equally or more attractive than my wife, I got to 100 and stopped counting, although I live in USA, so that might not be saying much...), very smart, thin, healthy, weighs about the same that she did in college, good mom, etc. At first everything was peachy. We dated for a long time before being engaged and eventually married, waited a few years then had started having kids. We have great kids.
Act 1: Something seemed off. Before the wedding there were occasionally (I now know) shit tests. I didn't understand, I failed. At my wedding my Dad advised me "happy wife, happy life". Thanks Dad. Occasionally (once every couple of months) my wife would flip out about bullshit, I would DEER like a pussy, eventually things would calm down, but in the back of my mind I was always hyper aware of her emotional estate, wondering when the next egg shell might be stepped on. Sex never dried up, but it just wasn't a priority, and was only occasionally "hot". I tried negotiating desire, which was super effective. Unrelated to sex, sometimes I would just be plain confused, "I thought we were on the same team, why did you do/say that?" Eventually I found myself feeling more and more stressed, particularly when she was around or if I knew she would be soon. Then I started hearing voices. Not in an insane way, but in the way where I could hear what my wife would say if she were present, in my head, all the fucking time. She was a huge fan of declaring into the ether that something needs to get done, then complaining later that this thing didn't get done, even if it was some bullshit that didn't really need to get done. She might say "we", but she meant "you". For example, viewing media: I couldn't watch a goddamn movie in peace, it was like I was personally responsible for everything that ever happened in the world. "I don't know why they chose to have that actress dress that way and run in slow-mo, I didn't make the fucking movie, maybe call the director to complain, can I just relax and watch a movie please?" Sigh... A typical night where she was away at work I would sit in peace, enjoy the silence, watch a movie, then delete the viewing history to avoid having to justify my actions. A grown fucking adult who is very much in charge outside the home constantly in a state of stress about what his wife might think. That was my life.

Act 2: Remember when Neo saw the cat and had Deja Vu? I started to sense the presence of the matrix. I looked around at all of the other examples of relationships I saw with people I interacted with frequently. I observed how "men" spoke when they were not around their wives, I observed how the women spoke. Nobody was happy, everybody was delusional, and in many cases it seemed like everybody was trying to find a way to deaden the pain. The men were binge drinking, obsessing about TV sportsball and hiding in "man caves". The women were having ladies nights, complaining, trying to out-do the other moms at the PTA bake-off, and putting ALL of their energy into their kids, not into their husband. Shit, I did what they said, I'm highly educated, I work crazy hard, I have good money, nice house, nice neighborhood, I try so hard to make everybody happy, I do more than my fair share around the house and with the kids, I'm in decent physical shape, why am I not happy? Then there was the fight that broke the camel's back. The stupidest, gayest, you couldn't make this shit up kind of fight. What the actual fuck is going on here? (feel free to PM if you can stomach just how gay, too specific for OPSEC) Then I stumbled into TRP somehow, I don't remember why, probably one of the typical "Why doesn't she" google searches. It was interesting, but I'm not trying to bang randos, then I found MRP. It all clicked, in a fucking hurry too. I had the anger phase for sure. I lost attraction to my wife for a while too. It was like a mask had just been taken off. I thought I married this thing, but I got something else, I don't know who you are, that isn't who I love... After enough reading, studying, learning, I started to get really into the psychology and behavioral side of things, then I got to the point where I realized that she is not to be blamed, she is a victim of her biology, her upbringing, and society. I didn't lose something, I never had it. We both got what we wanted, just not what we needed. I was ready to change that. The biggest point though, is that my goal was NEVER to change her, it was to fix me.
Act 3: Tractor pull, not 3D Chess

So many guys are trying to use TRP to outwit, outplay, outlast (thanks survivor) their wife. I am lucky to have not fallen into that trap, thanks for the heads up MRP! I have one life to live, I am not going to spend another minute worried about what some other person thinks, period. With that being said, I never stopped loving my wife, and honestly she never did anything wrong, she did what her programming told her to do. She really is a genuinely great person, she was just dancing to the wrong beat just like the rest of us. My plan was to fix me and while I'm at it see if I can help get my first mate on board, but that was always a secondary target. I was careful not to go rambo, but at the same time I had the mentality that I'm not getting any younger, and now that I can see the truth, I can't live a lie pussy-footing around, to me that is living in her frame still. During the process I learned about D/s relationships and it immediately clicked. This is what I need in my life. When I am away from the home I expect to be constantly under attack. When I get home I want zero conflict (not necessarily zero stress, there is a difference.) Why do some guys love fixing up old cars, or even changing their own oil for that matter? It for sure isn't less stress, that can be a lot of work, I believe it is the sense of contentment that comes from knowing that you have shaped this thing in your image, you are fully responsible for it, but you know that it will serve you well if you care for it. That is when I started really focusing on the concepts of needs and wants. IMO this is one of the most important things you need to understand. I plan on making a post soon specifically, but the point is that until you really understand yourself you cannot shape the world around you. I constantly maintain a list of needs and wants. That list can absolutely change over time, but you must never waiver once you have determined what non-negotiable things you NEED in this life.

For me, on the early days, the list of what I needed was short. I needed respect, peacefulness at home, and good enthusiastic and frequent sex. I had been with my wife for 15+ years at this point. I planned for up to one year grace period, then after that if my needs were not being met, well, that wasn't an option, I decided that my needs will be met within 12 months of that day. I repeat, I decided that my needs would be met, period, no more, no less. I was hoping that would include my wife in my life, but that was on the want list. From that point to the mini-main event it was somewhat routine, you could do an MRP montage. Bringing us closer to D-day. There had been a number of push-back events, I was ready, every fucking time, I was ready. I had been learning, studying, thinking about this shit for 6+ months and she thinks she is going to put me back her her frame about something stupid, LOL, fat chance, this train only goes one direction now m'lady. I had my needs and wants down solid, and once you have that, it is like a goddamn cheat code for life. "Oh, you want me to ________, well, let me check my list.....nope, it doesn't help me with either my wants or needs list, so, you're going to have to draw a card and roll again." Sure, I was accused of being selfish, immature, insensitive, compared to a rapist (for real, you can't even make this shit up), but my resolve was relentless. I had spent most of my life experiencing the discomfort that comes from hard work, I can eat hard work for breakfast. From a relationship standpoint, I was steel. Now, is this Rambo? I don't think so. I didn't do shit to provoke her, I didn't argue, act immature, walk out of the house and disappear for 3 hours, threaten my wife about how I can get someone else, and I didn't tell her how to behave, at all. But, once I had my plan, once I knew the man I wanted to be, I flipped a switch. I was now version 2.0. I wasn't going to do the frog in boiling water thing. One day my wife discovered that she was now legally married to a different man. I was going to give her lots of room to get to know him, but there was going to be no slow introductions, he was here and this is his life to live. Every person who is allowed into my inner circle is in my frame, in my box, period. She checked every nook and cranny of that box, trying to find a weak spot, but there were none. Once the banging stopped, once she had accepted that my reality is the only reality relevant to me, I knew it was time for D-Day.

Act 4: Grand finale I knew I wanted a D/s relationship, whether or not it had that label didn't mean shit to me. If I'm checking my needs and wants list then I am good, period. If a want isn't met, no biggie, I'll think about ways to get that met, but it is ok if I never get there. Needs are met, period. Eventually things had gotten to the point where sex was hotter than ever (but not good, I'll explain in a bit), I was saying NO left and right, I was saying YES left and right, I was not asking for her opinion unless I NEEDED it, and I was establishing and defending boundaries, and I learned to think a lot about her needs, while giving zero fucks about her wants if they violate anything on my list. She was stressed, she felt the shift, she felt the dread, she didn't know where she stood with me, and by extension in the world. I knew her needs, even if she didn't. Above all things she needs security, guidance, and to feel that she is of value. She would ask me THE questions, you know the ones, the questions where everybody in the room knows the answer, but the guy will lie and the woman will be happy to accept that known lie. Homey don't play that. For example "Do you think about sex with other women? Are you going to cheat on me? Are you going to leave me one day? Would you remarry if we got divorced? If I died? Do you only care about yourself?"

For fun, my answers: [Yes], [No (I don't cheat, I would tell you before I started fucking other women)], [if I'm not fulfilled yes], [Remarry, probably not, I would probably have girlfriends though], [same answer], [No, the list is kids, me, you]. She didn't like those answers, I would shrug, tell her next time don't ask questions she doesn't want to hear the answer to.

How 'bout the sex? It was getting a lot better, it was always good vanilla sex, but now it was different, hotter, but still not there, not for me. Remember my need for enthusiastic sex? The problem with "dread sex" is that you instinctively know that this isn't what she really "wants", it is what she is prepared to do to achieve her goals. The "Every unhappy wife is a rape victim" post really hit me hard. I don't want a woman to have sex with me because she has to, I want it because she wants to. Caveman? I literally cannot do it. It is just of no interest to me and an instant turn-off. Now she was in my frame, but she was still in the maze trying to figure out how to get to the point where all of her needs are met (although she didn't even really know what her needs were). Having sex out of fear that a guy will leave you (and still wondering how much is enough) isn't helping her feel secure. Eventually there were tears, she was at peak stress, had been bouncing around the maze for almost a year, and felt just generally lost. It was time to throw down the life line and see if she wanted to board my ship.

D-Day: I was about to leave for a business trip for a few days, I think she was worried I might cheat (not that I hinted like I would. I hold myself to the highest standard, and day one I was working to be the controlled and principled 2.0 man I wanted to be), she was just feeling insecure. She told me she was feeling stressed, didn't want me to leave, was worried for our relationship. I had her lay on my chest and we had a long talk. (So funny, most of my marriage when we slept she would face away and very rarely lay on my chest, now it is routine). I helped to guide her to understand why she felt the way she felt, but didn't placate her feelings, her feelings are hers, not mine. This is where I went OVERT, lots of talking, but not DEERing for sure. I told her my needs list, point blank, and that if my needs are met then our relationship is in good standing. She cried, hard. She felt bad that she had not been meeting my needs. I told her that she is not at fault, I am responsible for my needs. Those "impossible questions" came back again, they got the same answers again, but, this time it was different. She saw the light. My real and accurate answers aren't a threat, they are part of her roadmap. Her feeling of insecurity is gone when she realizes that she doesn't have to live up to some undefined standard to "keep" me, she just has to make sure my needs are met. This time my "bad" answers were the right answers. She tried to challenge, for example "So, you are saying if I don't have enough sex with you we will get divorced?" "I didn't say anything about divorce, I said that I need sex. If that time were to come, I would not cheat, I would inform you that my needs are not being met, and we would as a team discuss the options." She nodded in agreement. I explained to her that so many of our past relationship problems were related to insecurity and a constant struggle for power. She now could see that too. She had read 50 shades, so she knew about "D/s" relationships loosely, but frankly that book gets it way wrong. I told her that we can continue bouncing around through life, going through cycles of happiness and fights or depression, or we can start a new relationship 2.0, one where we are hyper focused on each other's needs. I told her to research real 24/7 D/s relationships while I was gone and we would talk when I got back.

She read until her eyes bled, learned all she could, basically took her own red pill, and when I got back we started our new relationship. It was awesome, we felt like teenagers again, and it hasn't stopped. We worked as a team to craft our relationship, take ownership of it. I am her dominant husband, she is my submissive wife. Her needs are BEFORE my needs. You read right. She has given herself over to me, she is mine, and I am responsible for her 100%. We have a signed contract, and she wears a symbolic collar 24/7. As such I am fully responsible for her needs, that is number one in my mission. The D/s hierarchy is sub's needs, dom's needs, dom's wants, sub's wants. Notice that her wants are at the end. Sometimes she doesn't get what she wants, I give her what she needs. She has rules for her behavior and rules for day to day tasks. If she breaks a rule she is punished with spankings. Every day we have time set aside to discuss her needs and wants as well as mine. She lives to serve me and make me happy. When she serves me well I make sure she feels very appreciated and valued for her efforts. This is how we meet all of her needs (Security, guidance and feeling of value), and she has unwavering guidance from me to make sure her needs are ultimately met, which really means making sure that my needs are met. She can now completely shut off these negative parts of her brain, they are unnecessary. She knows I am happy, and I make it abundantly clear if I am not. Our sex life is amazing. Not only do we do everything I could ever want, she is obsessed with my pleasure now. That is what gets her off. She can have an orgasm just from me cumming in her mouth. I of course praise her constantly for her good behaviors, but one of the worst things I can do is "let something slide", as that would tell her that I have lost interest in the relationship. She feels loved, cared for, safe, and highly valued. I feel incredibly satisfied, I enjoy my peaceful life at home, I love my family, and honestly do feel like a Disney marriage is attainable, it is just that we were looking in the wrong place. We have been in relationship 2.0 for a couple of years now, and it gets better every day.

I've already gone on way too long, if you have specific questions regarding how our day-to-day relationship runs feel free to ask. I hope this was of some value to some of you. As I said, I can't say that my path is the "right answer", maybe I just got really lucky, who knows, but I can say that I am forever indebted to all of those who have worked to make MRP what it is, and I'm all too happy to try to pass on the favor.
Google and the PUA

I stumbled across the redpill trying to game my wife; I’m here because I googled “How to flirt with my wife”. I’m an engineer by trade and my first response to any problem is to research, evaluate, apply a method and assess for results. I started trying some PUA things, got my shit together and hit the gym, read some more and eventually got to the point where I was ready to let it all go.

That was about 4 years ago. Along the way I went through all the growing pains everyone goes through. I unlocked the “Asshole” achievement. I was asked “Are you seeing other women?” I endured countless shit tests, and then she followed up with even worse comfort tests. I had my main event, and went beyond that. Eventually I was even on the phone with a lawyer and had replacements for my wife waiting on stand bye, for my new life as a bachelor single dad.

Just the moment it was already to go under, my marriage, surely my finances for years to come, all of it, something clicked. It all just started working. My wife went from being combative to sweet and attentive. She no longer saw me as an adversary, instead began seeking my advice and more importantly my leadership. The whole time I had been preparing for any outcome, even the worse I sought to improve myself. I continued to work on eliminating covert contracts, getting myself in shape, being a better leader. My attitude was simple, “I’ll have a great life, if someone wants to share it with me great, if it’s my wife that’s up to her.”

Life by the Pool

I have a fuckton of hotel points. So this year I booked a suite for me and my family at an extended stay place. Breakfast in the morning, pool bar, dinners and happy hour at night; all we had to do was drive there and get some groceries for the occasional meal not provided. I set the whole thing up, planned the dates and told my wife “It’s a relaxing only vacation; no schedule!”

She went into execution mode. She scoped out the grocery stores nearby, asked for a rough itinerary and when we would approximately arrive. Drive would be from 3 am to finish, breakfast and lunch would be a stop I told her. She had snacks and drinks on ice, me and the oldest boy packed the car like pro’s. I pads were charged and wifi was at hand. During the 10 hour drive the kids were happy and jovial, in fact they didn’t even ask for wifi until the last hour of the trip. I drove most of the way and she spelled me for an hour so I could have a brief nap.

We got to the hotel, and I checked us in. The kids were elated, as they love staying in hotels with swimming pools; this was the pinnacle of chic as far as they were concerned. She asked me to “take them to the pool to burn off some energy” so she could unpack and convert our hotel into a home for the week.

Two weeks prior I had the opportunity to take my wife on a business trip with me. I booked us a beautiful waterfront hotel in an awesome city. We ran around and just spent time with each other. We had good sex every-day and a great dinner every night. She was the girl I started dating 15 years ago, and we had a good time. She got my undivided attention and at the end of the trip she told me, “This is good. I missed you. I miss us.”

Unlike our Disney vacation this year, we only went to two tourist things. Both were small 3 hour affairs and at one point we just said, “Ok, we’re done let’s go,” with no obligation to stay to the bitter end. The rest of the time was spent at the pool or the beach. My kids loved it, my wife had far less duties to deal with, other than corralling kids and lunch it was a pretty simple trip for her. I was the master of ceremonies; every morning she would roll over and kiss me, and ask “What’s on the schedule for today.” Followed by a “oooh, that sounds great I’ll get such and such ready.”

A week later we rolled into our house, sun tanned and full of sand. After unpacking and putting the kids to bed, she came over and crawled on my lap. My wife is not a touchy feely person and has to make an effort when she does this. She whispered in my ear “I had a great vacation. Thanks for doing this.” I kissed her and told her, “You’re welcome. Go shower and I’ll meet you upstairs.” She giggled and jumped up.

Was it perfect trip? I don’t know but it was pretty close. Was she perfectly behaved and sweet and submissive? Of course not, that’s not in her nature; I married my wife because she’s fiery and passionate. She still threw the occasional shit test, but I swatted those away like flies. Did she follow my lead without hesitation? Yes. Mission achieved.

The Flywheel Effect

In business there’s a theory about the flywheel effect; I’ll borrow this analogy from Good to Great. Take a flywheel; say something like an old fashioned sharpening wheel. When you first start it spinning, it’s hard. You need a great effort to push through its momentum. In the case of starting it, you need to move it from rest to motion. Slowly but surely you push hard at first, then as it gets faster and faster you need to put less effort into it. Eventually it gets to a point where small inputs will keep it going with relatively little effort on your part. Conversely if you tried to stop it, you’d burn your hands up or need some external force to assist.

This is the path we’re all on. When you swallow the pill you’re literally pushing the wheel for the first time. Maybe it’s broken and won’t turn; maybe it’s so massive you can’t get it moving. But the first time it does turn is a revelation; “Holy shit I can move it!” So you push and push and soon it’s spinning, maybe even so fast you can’t keep up. Eventually you learn how to control the speed, you add small inputs here and there, but you’ve now become the sharpening wheel. You have a great wheel at your control that you can use to sharpen the tools of your life.
Afterglow

My wife was lying across my chest, her shampoo was still strong from the shower and the smell of sex was mingled in with it. “That was the best vacation” was all she mumbled since I met her in the bed. It only took 4 years of work to make it that way.
Stop Hamstering that your Wife is Nuts
by RedRanger207 | December 11, 2019 | Link

There are a lot of faggots on here that hamster about their BPD, NPD, depressed, anxious, bipolar, schizophrenic, etc wife. I know I’ve done it... a lot.

But...

She’s Probably Not Fucking Nuts

Very likely your wife is not nuts. There may be crazy things she does but that does not make her crazy. I used to think my wife had BPD or NPD... until about two months ago. I was told by lots of people – my family, some of her family, her ex-friends, my friends, hell my therapist, WebMd, etc. that she was.

I believe all women are capable of crazy things if not constrained by something. The more feminine the woman, the crazier the emotions – both good and bad. And you want this – you want a woman who is emotional and feminine, but you must be strong enough to handle these storms.

Because...

The Problem is You

You know what the problem was the whole fucking time? Me. I was the crazy one, for a long time. What a fucking faggot I was – at one point she had to barricade herself in our bedroom and I got a stick to try and knock to the side the chair that was blocking the door. Then I found MRP and went crazy Rambo and fucked up with overt dread and leaving a path of destruction behind. Then I refused to accept the nature of the feminine with emotion and tried to command her out of her moods (literally: “You stop being mad now”). Autistic as fuck.

If you think she’s a nutcase, first look in the mirror. Do you do crazy shit? Do you not understand that she’s going to live in constant emotion? You can guide that emotion, but you cannot command it.

My wife told me once “I’m a strong woman and need a strong man who can handle me” and she’s fucking right.

98% of the Time You’re the Problem, but even if she really has a mental issue...

We Don’t Fucking Care

So you have a diagnosis... what does this change for you and your MAP (you better have one)? Absolutely fucking nothing. Look at this series by /u/HornsOfApathy for proof.

All you’re doing when you write/think/say “my wife is nuts because of X” is making an excuse for not having the relationship you want. You’re saying “see guys, I’m fine, I’m high value. It’s my wife though, she’s crazy so it’s HER fault that I fail/can’t set boundaries/have no social life/go Rambo/cheated/can’t get divorced/am getting divorced/fucked the babysitter”.

It’s NEVER her fault, it’s ALWAYS yours.

YOU fail at setting boundaries.

YOU fail at being the oak

YOU fail because you’re the crazy one and project it on your wife

YOU fail because you’re a faggot

YOU fail because you didn’t vet properly

YOU fail because you didn’t eject sooner

YOU fail because you’re scared of her

At the end of the day, are you attractive? Are you high value? Are you owning your shit? Are you willing to burn everything to the ground to get what you want? Are you truly DNGAF?

If you can’t answer a definitive “yes” to all of these, then keep grinding, and don’t do stupid shit. It doesn’t matter if she’s crazy or not.

Caveat: Of course if she does something REALLY INSANE – pulls a gun/knife/tries to kill you, etc. then you need to call the fucking cops and exit immediately even if you’re a fat faggot who can’t lift the bar.

Next Time

Next time you think your wife is crazy – look inward at your actions.

- What are you doing that can be different?
- Could you set a boundary (and be capable of enforcing it)?
- Are you having verbal intercourse because you can't STFU?
- Are you showing your emotions like a man and then exiting the situation?
- The only person you can control is yourself - so start doing it.

Start owning your shit here and stop blaming your "crazy" wife. I've gone from 1-3 "crazy" things a week to 0... because I changed MY behavior. It's not what she's doing, it's what YOU'RE doing.
At some point, every father should have this conversation with his boy(s):

Son,

As you are coming of age, your desire to be loved by a woman is growing. To feel the daily warmth of a woman by your side. To have and to hold. This is a natural instinct and one of the strongest ones you have. With that said, it's my responsibility to make sure you enter these interactions with a knowledge that I and very few other men have had the benefit of knowing beforehand.

I love your mother. You love your mother. Your mother loves us both, but not in the same way. You see, she loves me for the life I provide her with. My humour, my handyman capabilities, my sacrifice at work and my emotional support. She loves you as the most important thing in her life that she would do anything for.

This is very important for you to understand, because when you find a girl you want to commit to, you can't expect her to love you like mom does. In fact, if you try to make her love you like that, not only will she resent you for your weakness, she will be repulsed it.

This may seem a little harsh, but it's a reality you must accept if you want to get the most out of a relationship. That same unconditional love that you want from your girl, will be reserved for the offspring that you provide her with.

The irony to this son, is that the love you feel from mom and the love your woman will give to her children, is the same love you will need to give to your woman. She will want a leader. A strong and confident man who makes her feel safe and secure.

Furthermore, she will hate the fact that you still want that love from mom. So you will also need to cut the emotional support you get from her off as well. You need only look at the people in our lives who are mama's boys. They all live in very miserable relationships. This is because men don't need their moms love. They have already gotten all they needed in their youth. I had to find this out the hard way myself.

If you absolutely need to express some of your feelings, do it with your best friends, your brother or especially me. Never with your girl, your mom, your sister or any other female in your life. They can't tell you how to be a man. From this point on, you have joined the fraternity of masculinity.

This may sound like lonely road to travel. That's because it will be. We no longer need that emotional support. Men embrace the loneliness. We learn to accept it and thrive in it. This is where you will learn who you truly are and what you truly want out of life. It's when you realize that you don't need anyones approval to be who you want to be. This is essentially where you become a man. Believe me when I say it son, being a man who lives his life like a man, will be the best decision you ever make.

I love you son
ALWAYS follow a compliment with a compliment

by 88Will88 | August 1, 2017 | Link

This is a habit that you all need to practice. Whenever a woman gives you a compliment, you must ALWAYS and immediately follow that compliment with another compliment. This is something you must do whether you are approaching a woman, with your SO, with a plate or on a date. It needs to be reflexive, natural and organic in it's delivery. It should be sincere and you must fully believe the compliment. If you deliver a compliment in a way that lacks confidence then she will smell your contrived and beta nature and she will rightfully reject you as a weak and unworthy man. I have been practising this for many years and I never fail. I never fail because my belief is strong, I have absolutely no doubt that what I am saying is the truth.

So, let's give some examples here. You are out on a date with a HB9. She says:

- "I really like that shirt" You say:
  - "Any shirt looks great on me"

You are with a plate, you have just made a clever observation about the netflix show you are watching. She says:

- "Wow you are so smart" You say:
  - "I know, you are really lucky to be hanging out with me"

You are with your LTR, she is eating and she says:

- "That steak was perfectly cooked" You say:
  - "Yes I am an amazing cook"

You are at home enjoying a glass of wine with your wife (idiot, you never should have married but here you are). Your wife says:

- "I am so lucky to be married to you" You say:
  - "Yes you are, you have exceptional taste in men" Or (for a bit of dread)
  - "Any woman on the planet would be lucky to be married to me"

So to summarise, ALWAYS follow any compliment you receive with another compliment - to yourself! You have to deliver it immediately, with confidence and sincerity. Some may call this boasting, I say that it is not cocky if you can back it up. If you do not believe it then there is no way that she is going to believe it. If you delay or stutter she is going to smell you out as the spineless beta that you truly are. This is not a move that beginners should even contemplate. It is an advanced move for competent, alpha leaning men.

The best way to deliver this is when a woman spontaneously compliments you, but there is another really fun way to apply this. If you are into daygame, this is a great opener. Walk up to a woman, do the standard day game stop, then say "Do you think it is too early in the day for a compliment?". She will either shut you down or say "Sure", if she is open to you then you say "well come one then, give me one". It pretty much always gets a laugh and ideally she really does give you a compliment. If she does, double down on the laughs (and her perception of you) by giving yourself another compliment before you advance the conversation.

Implement and enjoy. Beware of the caveat though, if you are leaning beta, then this is going to blow up in your face and you are going to get burned.
[FR] Holy Shit. Women really will do anything to fuck a man they want to fuck - including set it up in front of their kid.

Relevant Backstory: I work in a very upscale white town. I practice day game now and then at a local Starbucks - good mix of SAHM Milfs and young tail to practice on. Anyway, couple months ago, I'm sitting there at a table near the line area, and this Milf walks in in work out pants, top and grey denim jacket. We make eye contact several times, smile at each other while she's in line etc. While waiting for her drink to be made, she bends over on the counter exposing her ass to me in a very obvious fashion as she's checking her phone.

I take note, as there is no reason for her to be bent that far over with her ass pointed at me except the obvious, and when she gets her drink and walks by my table, I say "Good job matching". She says "excuse me?" I say "good job matching a grey denim jacket to your grey yoga pants. Grey isn't a common color for denim." So we chit chat about that, i ask what gym she goes to since I work out nearby, etc. keep in mind I am, as always, looking jacked and lean in a nice polo, jeans, etc.

So we're both walking out and I ask for her name. She tells me, and I ask for her number.

Her: (smiles and looks down) you know, it's funny that you should ask me for that.

Me: Be even funnier if you gave it to me.

Her: uh, um, well, see I'm married.

Me: (looked her in the eyes, smirked, raised my hand showing her my ring) Me too. (She grins back). Me: So, you know what this is.

More banter, then this from her: Look, I can't. I tell you what, if I see you again, I'll give it to you.

So I pleasantly smile, tell her to enjoy her afternoon, and leave.

Fast forward to today. I'm in the same Starbucks again, and she comes in with her daughter (guessing about six). She makes eye contact with me, I smile, she pauses and stares at me for a second or two. I just keep smirking and smiling back at her through my eyes. She looks back at me a few more times, same thing. I can tell she recognizes me, but I don't know if she remembers, and with her kid there I wasn't going to do shit anyways. So I do nothing but return her gazes, and she and the kid walk out.

About 5 minutes or so later I walk out. And there she is, walking up to me in the parking lot.
She asks "Hi, are you Rex?" "That's me". Her: "I owe you this" and slips me a piece of paper. Her "I wasn't sure if that was you or not in there". Me "so when's generally good for you, weekdays around this time?" Her "yeah". Me "cool. I'll be in touch".

All of this with her daughter in the car, windows down, not 10 feet away.

TL;dr - u/Rollo-Tomassi has repeatedly said that a woman will do literally anything to fuck a man she wants to fuck. This gal actually remembers me from several months ago, remembered my name, and wants to fuck me so bad that she waits for me in the parking lot and gives me her number (knowing exactly what will happen if I call/text her) right in front of her kid so that she doesn't miss this opportunity. Married slut confirmed.

How does this help anyone here? Two ways. One: if you are a fucking loser like her husband apparently is, your wife may just want to fuck hot alpha cock so badly she's willing to set it up, in broad daylight, in public, in front of her (your) kid. Don't be this guy. Two: if a formerly fat beta bitch like me can turn his body, attitude, posture, confidence and game around so much in a year and a half that his wife can't stop fucking him and strange women will go to these lengths just for a chance at fucking him, none of you have any goddamned excuses. Do the work, become fucking hot, and be the man that other wives want to fuck - don't be the guy whose kid watches mommy trying to line up strange alpha cum.
Three years ago I drank way too much at a concert, came home and engaged in a huge fight with my wife. When I put my fist through the drywall, she called 911, and I went to jail. I couldn’t see my children or home for 90 days, and I spent thousands on damage control. I vowed that I would never allow another human to have so much control over me. I started going to the gym and told no one.

For the next two years, I tried desperately to improve my marriage, with a side focus of improving myself as a man. I was making slow progress (and in the wrong areas) when a friend introduced me to TRP. But it didn’t click with me until I found MRP. It was here that I saw my diagnosis so clearly (Nice Guy, Drunk Captain) and also clearly saw an outline of how to fix it. One year ago this week, I swallowed the pill.

Like many of us, I came here to save my marriage and found that I needed to save myself. Here are some of my pitfalls and what I did about them:

A Year Ago, When I Found MRP:
* I was still fapping and looking at porn almost every day. This was robbing me of motivation to initiate with my wife, and stealing valuable testosterone and energy. What I did: Learned that my need to constantly get off was making me a dysfunctional loser who didn’t have orgasms with real women. I had to do more than just initiate with my wife, I also had to work on making our overall relationship much more flirty and sexual. As an added bonus, when I haven’t had an orgasm for 5+ days I feel strong, and I notice an increased sexual response in women around me.

* When I found MRP, I was still drinking every day. It was usually a moderate amount (2 beers), but it was every night. I was constantly bloated, and when 2 beers would turn into 6 on the weekends, I would be chronically dehydrated. I am convinced that even the moderate drinking was robbing my performance and gains at the gym. What I did: It was the loss of my performance at the gym that motivated me to stop drinking entirely. I felt so much better when I didn’t drink, and that created a virtuous cycle of motivation to keep going. That was over 6 months ago, and now I drink very rarely and I don’t miss it.

* A year ago, I had just started the first month of my first 5x5 program, after two years of crappy progress doing bro-splits. I didn’t do squats and deadlifts, because I was a lazy dad-bod piece of shit. What I did: stayed on my 5x5 schedule, tracked it and forced myself to increase weight. Started tracking my calories and never stopped, cleaned up my diet and added daily protein shakes. Now, lifting is one of my favorite hobbies, and is easily one of the most rewarding things I’ve ever done. It has benefited every area of my life.

* A year ago, I was still around 20% BF (11-12% now). I was still eating Jimmy Johns for lunch several times a week, and drinking red bull every morning. I hadn’t seen the bottom of a salad in years. I wasn’t fat, but I was filled with bleached flour, and was constantly tired from the carbs I was consuming. What I did: Slow, steady changes. I started purchasing healthier options while I was out at restaurants, which led to eventually buying salads instead of cheeseburgers, which led to making salads at home and bringing them to work. I started carrying a large water bottle and skipping soda and juice.

*I was on prescriptions for anxiety and depression. I thought I needed the pills, because my life made me depressed and anxious. What I did: I decided that I didn’t want to be the type of person who needed prescription drugs, and then started lowering my doses. Weed also helped a lot, and with none of the terrible side effects that the pills had. The hard work was in acknowledging that, regardless of my past, and regardless of what my brain chemistry was doing, I was responsible for my own mental health if I was going to shape my future. Now, I treat my anxiety symptoms with supplements, exercise, meditation, sunlight, and staying away from alcohol.

*When I found MRP, I was still wearing the jeans I’d purchased with my wife several years earlier. They weren’t terribly out of style, but they weren’t cool. Someone once told me: “Men wear jeans from the last good year of their lives,” and it’s true. I decided my early 30s weren’t going to be the last good years of my life. What I did: found resources online, watched videos on youtube, and paid attention to what other fashionable (young) people were wearing. But most important, I actually went to the store (by myself, guys) and put on the clothes, found what fit, and paid attention.

*I still had no idea how to be assertive. I was a classic nice guy, and a lot needed to change. What I did: Reading and practice. Once I started digesting the books and sidebar, I understood why my passive/meek nature was actually a learned behavior, and that it was making me weak. The biggest change came when I started to recognize moments as they would happen, where I would feel like another person was being an asshole and my default response was to allow it. Instead, I had to decide in that moment that I was going to assert myself. It reminds me in a lot of ways of deciding to talk to a woman - no thinking, no analyzing, just action.

*When I found MRP, I had multiple games on my phone, and would take hour-long shits at work to play them. I cringe to admit that I played games on my phone in between sets at the gym. What I did: I filled my phone with podcasts and videos about productive things, and did those instead of games. Eventually my phone became too full of the good stuff, and the games had to go. I don’t miss them.

*A year ago, my posture was the typical rounded shoulder, anterior pelvic tilt that many guys default to. I would also stand at the bar with my drink held up by my belly button, in the typical insecure dude stance. My body language communicated that I was small, insecure and boring. What I did: Admitted that my body language was garbage, and started learning. I had to re-learn to stand with my shoulders back, and un-learn habits like standing with my knees locked - basically getting rid of the shit that was making me unattractive. This one area of improvement has had the biggest impact on me being approached by women, or invited to join groups of strangers in public.

I ain’t shit yet, and that’s OK. Year One of MRP has been the best that my life has seen in a long time. Things are trending up for me and my family, and year two is going to be even better.
Four years since I took the pill. Damn.

I will skip most of the initial details, since my story in the first couple of years was almost by the book. Former jock, Division I athlete, got married and had kids, got a high paying job and worked my ass off, gained weight, became (literally) drunk captain. Wife started avoiding sex at all costs, even if it meant going to bed a 3 am, lost all respect for me. Told me she didn't want to have sex with me any more.

Found MRP, started lifting like mad, learned to focus on self improvement, took responsibility for captaining the ship, learned pickup. Sex came roaring back, respect as well.

Where am I now? Well, the last year or so has taken me on a different path than most of the other MRPers, so I thought it might be worth filling it in. I've only seen one case that is similar to mine, and his has a lot of parallels: http://archive.is/u6y9f

I'm in great shape, almost better than when I was in college. More ripped for sure. I'm centered, at peace with myself, and satisfied with my career. Sex at home is on demand. In addition, I'm having great success on the side. HB8s and 9s, models, Instagram girls left and right. As I posted recently, some of these girls are approaching me, even runway models. Sometimes I don't even have to approach them. This is purely on basis of looks, game, and confidence. I could possibly do even better if I told them what I do or how much I'm worth, but I prefer to hunt with a hunting knife, not a machine gun.

As u/therougepill said,

> Even if you are married it is easy to date women and get them to sleep with you. There are so many young women who find an older, successful, attached man incredibly attractive. Women like it if you are attached and generally don't care if you are cheating.

Wife knows. Some of you have asked me how I know. Well, there are the unexplained late night absences. And the one time she asked me if I was having an affair, I told her I was. She just said, "oh" and she hasn't asked again. The key lesson is that women will rather share a high value man than downgrade. It is not likely she will do better than me. I am a great father, treat her well, have social status, and make more money than we could spend under normal circumstances. She is much happier than she was before I took the pill, and she seem 100% satisfied with her life. Anthropologists say humans are polygamous by nature. I totally believe it now. If you're a low quality guy, no, that's not an option. But if you're a high quality guy, yes.

The point I want to make to those of you who are new to this is, when you're 3-4 years into MRP, this is a potential option for you. A lot of you are going to become very high value men. You will find when your wife goggles come off that your wife is a 6, not a 9. And some of you will have 25 yo 8s and 9s throwing themselves at you. And you may find that your wife is not just OK with it, she expects it and would find it incongruent if you weren't having side pieces. As men, we're programmed to see a marriage through a romantic lens. Women see it through much more pragmatic lens.

When I read u/therougepill's post 3 years ago, I never thought that was in the cards for me but... it's amazing what MRP can lead you to, if you put the work in. Peace.
How many of you like it when you work your butt off and your wife responds by initiating sex that night? Now, let's be honest: how man of you had that experience early in your path of improvement, but sooner than you were expecting to see such results? "This RP stuff really works!" you're probably quick to conclude. After all, you've been married for over a decade and it's only been a month or two and you're already seeing her respond. "She must be in my frame because I'm getting what I want."

In reality, there's a good chance you haven't made any actual progress with her at all. Sure, you've made progress on your lifts. You've improved your attitude. You're being more productive. But at this point, it's far more likely that you're just finally reaping the benefits of her frame.

HER FRAME

Women aren't nearly as complicated as the world would have you believe. For one example, they all suffer from a disease I call "Next-Thing-itis." They won't be happy until they get that "thing" they really want. And once they have it, they're not happy and can't possibly be until the "next thing" gets done - and then the next, and the next, and the next. I have never met a woman who didn't have this innate compulsion.

- A woman's frame is ultimately defined by whatever that thing is and what it takes to get it. If you are not that thing, she's not in your frame.

Is she begging for more of you ... or for you to fix the leaky pipe, or buy her that outfit she really wants, or to go on the vacation she's been dreaming about? Now, let me be clear about one more thing. That "next thing" she wants might be you-oriented. She might want you thinner, better groomed, nicer dressed, handier around the house, more responsible with chores, etc. In this situation, YOU are not her "thing." What you can do for her is her "thing." This is what we mean when we say that women love opportunistically.

A note on this: often-times, the reason she wants you to be more attractive is not so that she will desire you more, but so she doesn't feel so embarrassed showing you off to her friends. After all, you're not just "unattractive right now" - you ARE unattractive to her. Period. She doesn't expect her attraction to you to change because her hamster refuses to admit she's currently that shallow. If you getting more fit, nicer dressed, better groomed, etc. actually made her more attracted to you, then that means she's shallow for not being attracted to you without those things. We can't have that. So, instead she tells you she might be more attracted to you if you make those changes, hoping to use that as a sexual lure for you (that she likely won't actually fulfill), yet she's really only concerned with her own public appearances and not being embarrassed to show you in public, branding her as the girl who married the slob who calls himself a man.
YOU IN HER FRAME

Many men spend many years of marriage living to satisfy that "next thing" for her. This is the epitome of being in her frame. She may call you the "head of the household" as verbal homage to an ideological concept, but the reality is that she's the one setting the course one "thing" at a time, and you're her work-mule helping her get it done.

Now, maybe you're not all that interested in getting it done. Some guys get that far on their own. But they also find her responsive attitude enough of an annoyance that they try not to trigger her, so they'll do the minimum to appease her so they can get back to video games and football. She's still controlling your decisions/actions, so you're still in her frame.

HER ATTITUDE

Now, if you've ever been that second guy, you know how it always turns out: she wants you to help her get that next "thing," and she's not getting it, so she uses her nagging attitude as her primary method of getting you off your butt and onto her goals. Or maybe it comes in the form of whining and complaining. Or perhaps she acts depressed and sad, crying all the time. One way or another ...

- A woman's primary tool for getting you to do what she wants is her attitude - an external display of emotion meant to show disapproval of your present state.

In psychological terms, this is what's called "negative reinforcement." This is the primary mode women operate on. After she gives you enough attitude, maybe you do start making some changes. You finally hit the gym - not because you want to take care of yourself, but because she keeps making you feel ashamed for what you look like. You start doing things around the house not because you want a working toilet, but because you want her to shut up about it. Her attitude has worked. She gets what she wants from you, and she didn't have to whore herself out with sex to do it. After all, she's a woman and women are too pure to use sex to get what they want ... if they don't have to ;)

YOUR REWARD

Now, in the above case, virtually every woman knows when her man is just placating her. It's usually a longstanding enough pattern that it's obvious things will return to normal. Sometimes it's just assumed. Even if he does make certain permanent improvements to his life, she doesn't believe it will last. But at some point she might recognize some authentic changes. You recently discovered RP and decided it was time to take ownership of your household, build a body you can be proud of, and flaunt the sexy confidence you're finally learning to toy around with. She FINALLY gets a better husband, so ...
A woman will use sex as a reward to good little boys who start showing real initiative to finally become the man she has been trying to get them to be all along.

In psychological terms, we call this "positive reinforcement." Notice the frame issue here, though? A guy will think at this phase, "This RP stuff is working. She's totally in my frame because I'm finally getting the sex from her that I want." The thing is: she knew all along that you wanted to have sex with her. She just didn't want to have sex with you. And she still doesn't, much. But she does want to encourage you in your good behavior - as long as it continues in a direction that she approves. At this point, she wants to define what she believes will make you attractive; you don't get to be your own man. My wife used to try this positive reinforcement overtly back in my slobbish days: "How about for every 5lbs you lose, we'll try a new position?" In reality, even with significant weight loss, we not only tried a grand total of 0 new positions during that time - we also went months without any sex at all. She didn't live up to her end of the bargain, and I don't think she ever actually intended to (she only told herself she did).

Now, there's absolutely nothing wrong with enjoying the reward she throws your way, if and when it actually comes. I once won a prize for a contest I didn't even know I was entered into. "I'm not playing your game, but I'll take your prize" is a perfectly appropriate attitude. But the fact that I get the prize doesn't mean they're playing my game. I just happened to be winning their game, whether I intended to or not. With your wife, this is not actual progress.

DON'T WIN HER GAME

If you let her behaviors (attitude, sexuality) define your progress toward your own goals, how can you know if you're ever making progress? Seeing less attitude and getting more sex are, after all, among your goals. But you're still dependent on her for validation of your progress.

Now, it seems like it might be possible to accomplish your goals by being REALLY good at playing by her rules, right? Wrong. Because as soon as you accomplish one goal - you lose all that weight, for example - she's off to the "next thing." The rewards stop, even though the weight is gone, because you still dress poorly, for which she starts giving you attitude again. Then you dress better, the rewards come back, but after a short while they stop because you don't do enough to help around the house. And so on. Besides, you're no longer the "fat guy who got in shape" ... you're just the "in shape" guy. The effect of the change is gone.

This is why the black pill doesn't pan out. You could be the most physically attractive guy in the world, but at some point (usually earlier than you'd think) her "next thing" is going to be something other than your physical appearance, and eventually you'll be right back on the track of trying to appease her and her never being satisfied. I know countless men - especially through my divorce law practice - who are extremely fit and attractive, yet who complain about their wives not being sexually interested. It's frustrating, no doubt, but true.

YOUR GAME GENERATES FEELS

www.TheRedArchive.com
What I see, once actual progress is made with getting her on board with your mission and seeing the world the way you see it, is that she's no longer interested in the "next thing." Sure, that underlying desire is still there, but she's not as ravenously blood-thirsty over it as she used to be. Before, you told her "no" and she threatened divorce. Now she accepts it and moves on. More recently, (honey, you still reading these? eh, who cares) my wife was trying to pressure me to do all kinds of projects in our yard, wanting to buy a piano, etc., and I had no concern telling her no. Result? Instead of a bad attitude for not meeting her expectations (as used to be the case), she surprises me in bed by wearing lingerie and wanting to experiment with multiples. That never would have happened in what I would have called the "early gains" days. Those "early gains" were really just winning by her rules. But now I'm playing my own game and she finds my game more fun than her own.

- Your frame generates feels; feels generate sex.

What is your game? (1) Your mission is the thing that will make you say "I won the game" when you've accomplished it. (2) Your frame includes the rules of your game, how many players are involved, the size and shape of the arena, whether you play with a ball, puck, broom, picture frame, clock, or whatever else. (3) Your vision is the strategy you utilize to win the game. You get the idea. Does she see the same "win" you do when the mission is accomplished? Does she understand the rules of the game? Does she play by your strategy or develop her own? Does she run the plays autonomously (as intelligent players do), or expect you to have to announce every single footstep you want her to take as she goes down the field?

FEELS GENERATE SEX

All girls are mildly histrionic. They thrive on feelings, which are generated by the attention (or lack thereof) that they get. When their feels aren't being satisfied, they act out to get attention to generate new feelings. Even negative feelings are better than no feelings at all. They know their own game inside and out to such a degree that it doesn't generate feelings anymore. That's why they have "Next-Thing-itis" - because the feelings the THINK the next thing will give them doesn't actually give it to them. It can, but it doesn't, because they've been getting one thing after another that it's just a dry loop anymore.

Cue your mission. Your game. You presumably don't have "Next-Thing-itis" like her. You have a singular target so far out of reach that it's going to take a lifetime to accomplish what you're building. It's risky. There will be ups and downs. At first, she just wants to watch from the sideline. The ways to accomplish your goals are totally different from the ways she would accomplish hers and she doesn't know what to do with that. But even as a spectator, she starts to get as invested in watching you as you are in watching your favorite sports team in a championship game. Then, eventually, she actually hops onto the court and starts playing your game with you. You get to play coach and quarterback, and you tell her which position to play and at what times you need her to play them, and she's just excited to be on the field at all - something she never would have done if you hadn't invited her out to play in the first place.
There are a lot of negative feelings associated with this - fear, anxiety, uncertainty, etc. And all of those feelings fuel her. But there are also lots of positive feelings: curiosity, excitement, passion, rejoicing at new milestones, etc. These exist in a way she doesn't know how to generate herself. When she starts feeling things she hasn't felt in a while, she doesn't know what to do with it. Sometimes she'll do a happy dance around the house. Other times, she'll just start smiling more. Still other times, she'll express it through additional productivity. But another way women express deep emotion is through their sexuality. You can take it from there.
This Holiday Season- A Public Service Announcement:
by MrChad_Thundercock | November 26, 2018 | Link

Listen up Faggots. Uncle Chad already hung up his Christmas lights you lazy fat fucks.

The minute I started untangling the strands of lights on my front lawn yesterday, my next door neighbor – a hot young milf- pulls up in her driveway. She smiles at me, Uncle Chad gives her a wink, and then she goes inside. 5 minutes later, her loser fat beta husband comes outside to hang up their lights as well. My hunch was correct, as soon as she went inside she must have nagged her beta husband about decorating the house for Christmas like I was doing. The entire time, she was supervising over his shoulder and nagging the fuck of out him. She was brutal.

He couldn’t do anything right. I know this one very well. The way he put the lights in the garden was wrong, the way he positioned the snowman stakes was wrong, the way he wired the lights was wrong because she didn’t like how the extension cord went across the walkway, the clips he used for the lights were wrong. I listened as his wife bitched him out for over a hour. The best part was how he overloaded the amps because he had too much shit plugged into one outlet and all the lights went out. She got so pissed at him she slammed the door shut and went inside. He was pathetic. What a fat fuck.

This holiday season, don’t be a pussy. Take the lead. Take Charge. Don’t sit idling by.

Your wife, if it didn’t start already, is about to get pimped by the mainstream Christmas narrative. She’ll FEELZ the pressure to buy all kinds of shit you don’t need to try to impress her family and friends at all the holidays parties. Don’t get pimped. Your wife just celebrated Thanksgiving and gave thanks for everything she currently has in her life, but now she will get pimped and demand all sorts of expensive trinkets and gifts as presents. And if you don’t oblige, she’ll guilt shame you the entire time.

Here’s my advice to you:

Be mindful of your wife deliberately trying to make you more beta. Be mindful of her actively ball-busting & emasculating you during this holiday season. Here, wear this ugly Christmas sweater. Here, hold my purse while I go in this store for a second, Here, when we go to my parents house for Christmas, don’t say a fucking word, sit there like a good little boy and obey me. Here, let’s pack up the kidos and whisk them away to their 4th party this evening.
You better not fucking complain either. If they kick and scream, it’s your fault. If they act like little brats while opening their presents, it’s also your fault.

You may ask, “Why would my sweet little bride, my soul mate, purposly try to emasculate me?” Because it secures her male's long-term commitment - by reducing his options. By ball busting you into submission, she destroys all of your self-esteem.

At your lowest:
It's harder to stay on top of your health. Less likely to work out. It's harder to kick ass at your job. You're less likely to fuck other women. You're less likely to cheat. You're more likely to stay.

She knows, on some subconscious level, that male attractiveness is about your mojo, or your overall attitude. If she can destroy your self-esteem, you'll never have enough mojo to even think about getting another woman. Then you're hers to drain of resources ($). Eventually, the relationship may end, but it will be on her terms -- the way she likes it.

An aging women without a beta is fucked. Back in the day, she would have to live with her extended family and be a burden into old age. At worst, she would end up a beggar on the streets. Many female beggars in the 19th and early 20th centuries were simply widows. And these destitute women served as a visceral reminder to ALL women: you're lucky to have a provider, sweetheart. So, in their subconscious core, women are fucking terrified of not having a mate to provide for them. This fear has been bred into them as a Darwinian fitness mechanism.

The fucked up irony is that, in acting to secure her mate's long-term commitment by lowering his value, she becomes no longer interested in him as a mate. This didn't used to be a problem, because she'd only have to look at the destitute women to see what happens if she's tempted to leave. Now, however, thanks to alimony and no-fault divorce, when she's thoroughly beta-fied her man, she just leaves him and takes his money.

Take-home lessons:

Build a lifestyle that keeps you attractive and in-charge. Never compromise. Keep a strong frame in any relationship. If she ever tries to beta-fy or ball-bust you, recognize it for what it is: She's insecure in the relationship. Handle it like any other shit-test. Don't be proud of the fact that she considered you "marriage material". It just meant that you can be relied on to be there. You had limited options. You give no tingles. You might be a good provider one day.

Happy Holidays faggots. Don't get pimped.
Loyalty to Hypergamy
by Rojo-Gringo | January 1, 2019 | Link

I recently experienced just how disloyal a married woman can be. Not my wife but another woman who I was practicing game on. She’s married 17 years, has a few kids, she has nothing but praise for her husband who makes way more money than me. She looks really good for being post wall, but my SMV is a few points above hers.

All I did was practice being alpha at work with this woman...cocky-funny, said flirty things to her that stirred her imagination, light kino, talked to her about the masculine stuff I do (martial arts, guns, cars), she saw me flirting and getting IOIs from other women (pre-selection), I would lock eye contact with her, I would talk to her and then get up and go before she could get bored, I would tell her to do something instead of asking.

Before I quit my job, she gave me her phone number to keep in touch. The next week, we made out in her car twice and for the next few weeks, I sexted her about all the dirty things I fantasized about doing to her. She was thrilled and invited me to come over and do it when nobody was home.

She said she loved me (which translates to she loves how I make her feel) and told me she wanted an ongoing affair. She said she never thought she would ever fall in love with another man and expressed no discontent with her husband. She could not explain why she was attracted to me, but RP already gave me the answers. I came off as an AF that she couldn’t resist in her late post wall desperation. She sees me as her last chance to fuck Chad.

Then she posts on her social media her anniversary and heaps praise on her husband as her one and only.

Lesson learned: women may make vows, but their true loyalty is to their hypergamy.

“If you can’t attract a woman, you are, by dictionary definition, sterile.” – Mystery

Ah, 2007. Pickup artistry was going strong, and many a young man heard about this mysterious method to “get beautiful women in bed”, as well as a Rolling Stone writer exposing the seedy underbelly of pickup culture.

Before I get started, fair warning – my review will not do justice to these books. These are classics of literature here (Shakespearean in a red pill way), and as potentially life changing as the sidebar depending on where you are in life. Second disclaimer, I have not been, nor do I claim to be a pickup artist. For those of you who are, well damn, post your stories below!

The Mystery Method was the very first book I had ever read from the pickup culture. That book, along with The Game was a gift to me by a friend back in 2007, and I quickly devoured those books. After that, I bought the Rules of the Game. Similar to the books on the sidebar here, it was massively life changing (and in a few years – I got married, so technically the “get beautiful women in bed” statement worked).

A recent comment recently inspired me to read these books again and looking at them through both an unplugged and married lens, there’s quite a few gems here – you can see the building blocks of MRP praxeology.

So without further ado, let’s get started:

The Mystery Method

The Mystery Method is a model. There are three stages of the M3 model: Attract, Comfort, and Seduce. Each of these three stages are broken down into three sub-stages.

A1 – Open: The man approaches a set, runs an opener, and immediately earns the set’s acceptance A2 – Female to Male Interest: The man demonstrates higher value, while simultaneously showing lack of Interest in the target. She responds with Indicators of Interest.

A3 – Male to Female Interest: The man baits the woman to become more invested in the interaction, and then he rewards her with Indicators of Interest.

C1 – Conversation: The couple shares in friendly dialogue. A sense of comfort and rapport follows.

C2 – Connection: Both parties feel a vibe that “It is on!” Kissing occurs. This phase may last over the course of several dates.
C3 – Intimacy: Now at a seduction location, heavy making out ensues and the couple moves into the bedroom.

S1 – Foreplay: The couple begins the physical escalation toward sex. If this happens too soon, it can cause buyer’s remorse.

S2 – Last Minute Resistance: Last minute resistance is the point of no return before sex occurs. It’s often a freak out moment for the woman.

S3 – Sex: It is necessary to have sexual intercourse several times in order to ensure a sexual relationship.

Remember, the Mystery Method focuses on attraction first, not seduction. There are certain hardwired attraction switches in every woman's mind. Attraction is not a conscious choice that people make. Rather, it's a response that they feel automatically as a result of these switches being flipped.

Examples of DHVs (Demonstrator of Higher Value):

- Preselection from other women
- Appearing to be a leader of men
- Being supporter and protector of those you love
- Being non-needy
- Being unaffected
- Social intelligence
- Negging her
- Having a strong frame
- Having interesting knowledge
- Emotional stimulation
- Being socially "in demand"—other people are seeking your attention or validation (alternately they are paying attention to what you are saying)
- Connecting conversationally

MRP Note: You should be all of these things, and doing them as well. I would also add play with your wife, and not in the giggity way – that comes later. Always be having fun. Always be gaming. Also you must be maximizing your physical attractiveness. Lift. Work out. Exercise and eat right. That is also part of your game.

Examples of IOD’s (Indicators of Disinterest)
• Avoidance: She avoids eye contact. She avoids your calls. She avoids you in general.

• If she can pretend that she didn’t hear what you just said, she will.

• She won't contribute to the conversation.

• She gets impatient easily.

• She walks away or looks away.

• She leans away, turns her back, or talks to someone else.

• She is nonresponsive, or she repetitively says "uh-huh" instead of giving you a real response.

• She won't move with you, even two feet away. She won't invest.

Frame Control

Here are the early words from Mystery on frame: “The frame is the underlying meaning. It’s the context, the implication—the unspoken assumption in everything you say. If someone asks you, "Are the fish biting today?" then he is implying that you have been out fishing. He hasn't said so, but the listener will assume it is true—it’s just part of the frame. The frame supplies meaning to the content. For example, if someone says, "Yeah, that guy got off," what is the meaning of that statement? Depending on the context, it could mean that the guy just got off of work, that he beat a rap at the courthouse and was set free, or that he had an orgasm—three completely different meanings.

"Frame" determines which of those meanings becomes accepted. He who controls the frame controls the communication itself. For this reason, when people interact with other people, they constantly play frame games. Through behavioral cues and subtleties in what they say, people convey their assumptions. If this conveyance is done with enough congruence, others will accept the frame as reality without thinking twice about it. If your frame is strong enough, you can get away with anything.”

MRP Note: Frame is all. Whose frame are you in? Yours or hers? Think of the first Iron Rule of Tomassi – “Frame is everything. Always be aware of the subconscious balance of who’s frame in which you are operating. Always control the Frame, but resist giving the impression that you are.” Rian_Stone mentioned in his recent 21 Convention speech the following: “What is frame? Frame is your 30 second elevator pitch for your life. It’s your reality. It’s not power; though establishing frame can be you exercising the use of power. You are always in someone’s frame. If it’s not your frame, it’s someone else’s frame. It’s the narrative of your interaction with the world.” BPP has mentioned that frame is Dread level 1. You need to change and build your frame, and stop being in your wives frame.

Resources for frame are in the References section.

On Kino
“If she is standing there talking to you, just continue escalating. Always assume that it’s on. This is also the best way to improve your calibration. Once your dynamic calibration is accurate, all of your escalations will happen smoothly, which is the long-term goal in building your skill set.”

Some forms of kino include:

- Arm in arm
- Hands touching
- Embracing from behind
- Kissing lips
- Kissing or nibbling on neck
- Hand on knee
- Sitting on lap
- Arm around waist
- Touching face
- Smelling or pulling hair
- Hand on ass

Don’t be tentative and wimpy about touching—be natural and confident. Touching (guys and girls) is one way that alpha males like you demonstrate their dominance.

MRP Note: You should be doing these to your wife normally and naturally. If you’re not, then start doing it. If you are, then continue to do it. BPP mentions in his podcasts (in the sidebar, people) around YouTube being an excellent resource for kino – take some time and do a review. Also, you’ll have to find the right amount of kino, not too much, not too little. Calibrate what you are doing.

Having Solid Game

- Are you a healthy, ambitious, socially comfortable person?
- Do you convey a lack of neediness at all times?
- Have you otherwise demonstrated value via preselection, the leader-of-men switch (social intelligence and social proof), emotional stimulation, frame control, and so on?
- Has she chased and otherwise invested in the interaction?
- Have you been compliance testing? Do you have kino escalation and compliance?
• Does she feel that she has earned your interest? (Have you demonstrated your "growing pair bond" for her, using qualifiers and other IOIs?)

• Have you built comfort and trust, and a sense of connection, over seven hours and several venue changes? Did you use the jealousy plotline so she is sure she wants you?

MRP Note: Look at all of these classic things that you were and were doing when you were dating your wife before you were married. Time to bring this back to basics - if you need to have one thing, let it be Game - https://therationalmale.com/2012/02/23/looks-count/

Freeze-Outs

“If last-minute resistance seems insurmountable, do a freeze-out: Turn on the light, snuff out the candle, check your e-mail, head to the kitchen to make a sandwich, or pull out a checkerboard and challenge her to a game. The power of this is in its sincere delivery. If you were sulking or angry, that would show that you were affected. Just act as if your arousal circuitry has simply been shut off.”

MRP Note: What Mystery is talking about is Outcome Independence. You are independent of the outcome. This is a reminder to be sincere about your outcomes, and to not be butthurt.

Punishment/Reward

You can't do a freeze-out unless she wants your attention in the first place. A takeaway done on someone who cares less isn't a takeaway at all. It only works when you are of value to her. When she says or does something negative, then remove your attention to make her feel lonely. She feels bad and knows she would prefer talking to you. That's why a freeze-out works.

MRP Note: You have to be high SMV in order to be able to do this in the first place. Look at yourself in the mirror. Would you screw you? Now think about what you have to do in order to get higher on the SMV scale.

MRP Summary: I highly recommend reading (and for many of you rereading) the Mystery Method to get an understanding of some of the building blocks of attraction as well as MRP praxeology. A good read for the single, divorced, and married man. Remember, this is a tool in your toolbox.

The Game

Don’t hate the player... Hate the game - Neil Strauss, The Game

Practically The Game is short on tips, but it is long on substance and story, and is a fascinating look into the pickup culture that was going on. If you have not read it, I would definitely recommend purchasing this one.

Here are a few quotes from the book:

“After all, it had only been a month since my workshop with Mystery. I still had a long way to go. It was time for a motherfucking change.”

"The number one characteristic of an alpha male is the smile," he said, beaming an artificial beam. "Smile when you enter a room. As soon as you walk in a club, the game is on. And by smiling, you look like you're together, you're fun, and you're somebody."

"Look at you. You're wearing glasses because your vision sucks. You have a hat on to cover a huge bald spot. You're ghostly white. And you look like you haven't seen the inside of a gym since grade school. You're doing well because you're smart and you're a fast learner. But looks count too. You're Style, so start being Style. Just snap: shave your head, get Lasik, join a gym."

I also found his credits to be highly amusing:

“Thanks to Britney Spears, who also got married. Twice. And to Tom Cruise, who recently announced his engagement and wasn't afraid to proclaim his love from the rooftops. Every time I have to make a tough decision, I ask myself: "What would Tom Cruise do?" Then I jump up and down on the couch.

Take some time and enjoy the read – it has a lot of classic stuff in it. And now you know how to make tough decisions like Tom Cruise (man, that was a while ago... but still funny).

Rules of the Game

The goal of this book was for the reader to get a date within 30 days. Through a series of 30 missions/challenges, the reader should have changed himself and approached enough women to have a date.

From a married perspective – you guys should be old pros at this! I mean, come on... this is Married Red Pill, after all. And yet even more so than The Mystery Method, there are so many good reminders and tips here that it is worth a read and review. Perhaps you have become complacent in your marriage, or you never really had the next level to your Game - regardless, take some time to go through this and remind yourself on Game.

Looking at the sections below, these are the areas that I believe would be most impactful for the married man. Feel free to read the book and comment below.

Day 1 - Mission 1 - Evaluate Yourself

As discussed in this post - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/77mf7f/purpose_the_rules_of_the_gameway_of_the_superior/ - you need to evaluate yourself and where you stand.

Fitness programs require you to weigh in on the first day. Financial plans ask for a list of your assets and debts. So to revamp your social life, you'll need to make a social assessment of yourself.

Your first mission is to write answers to the following questions. Don't worry about what anyone else will think of your answers. Your goal is to be as honest with yourself as possible.
1. Write one or two sentences describing how you believe other people currently perceive you.

2. Write one or two sentences describing how you'd like to be perceived by others.

3. List three of your behaviors or characteristics you would like to change.

4. List three new behaviors or characteristics you would like to adopt.

Day 2 - Mission 1 - Set Your Goals

What is your personal mission? (fill out the following statement)

I will become (MY ROLE, maximum four words) who will (MY CLAIM TO FAME, maximum four words) within (NUMBER) days/weeks/years.

Day 3 - Briefing - Vocal Training

Here we learn about the basics – breath and posture. Breathing deeply (but not too deeply) allows you to give full power to your words. Having bad posture prevents you from breathing correctly. He mentions imagining a string pulling to the top of your head – but be relaxed about it. He also discusses the issues with speaking with a low voice, speaking too quickly, brain farts, monotone voice, and statements that sound like a question (hint, you need to end your statements conclusively). I was in a public speaking class earlier this year, and one of the things that people tend to do is say the word “um” when they are nervous and presenting. Slow down. Gather your thoughts. Relax and focus. Don’t say the word “um”.

Take a look at Private Man’s page (may he rest in peace) on voice - https://archive.fo/1TtEB - for some more details on this.

Day 4 - Mission 1 - Hit the Showers

For this mission, the key takeways are to be well groomed – shower, shampoo, and soap (similar to the 3 R’s of the manosphere, or the 3 M’s of cocktails). Smell good – mouthwash, cologne, etc. Shave your face clean (minus the beard – we don’t touch the beard at MRP). Clean the hairs around your ears, nostrils, and the back of your neck. Once you’re done – suit up (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TT_vf5ioXXk ) , look in the mirror, and remind yourself how awesome you are.

Day 4 - Mission 3 - Stand Up Straight

“Before you even open your mouth, a woman has formed an initial impression of you. And that impression is based largely on your body language.”

Men, this is very important. Game STARTS before you even open your mouth.
One of the key areas is posture.

This mission has you standing with your back against a wall. Make sure your heels, butt, and shoulders are touching the wall. Additionally, the back of your head just above the level of your chin should be against the wall as well.

Stay here for one minute. Reach behind your back and check to make sure there isn't too much space between your lower back and the wall. If there is, tighten your abdomen to bring the small of your back closer to the wall.

Now move away from the wall, and walk around the room for a minute without changing your posture, Commit the position and alignment of your body to memory.

Repeat this at least once a day.

There is also a post on the sidebar about this - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/3qkonn/lets_talk_body_language/

Day 5 – Mission 2 – Make a Change

Style says – “The first step to better looks is better grooming. The second is committing to the right style.

Go to the clothing store—preferably when it's least likely to be crowded—and speak to the saleswoman who seems the most helpful. Tell her you want to change your style, and ask her to put together a complete outfit for you. If she wants you to be more specific, tell her you're going to a high-profile fashion show, art opening, movie premiere, trendy club, or whatever imaginary event best suits the new you.”

Make a change in your outfits. Now realistically, I’m speaking to a more mature audience here – we all have clothes at this point in time in our lives (if not, time to up your career game).

But let me ask you this – how many of you have wives who pick out their outfits for them? Yeah, I'm looking at you, Mr. Fixer Upper. Are you in your wife’s frame again? Yeah, I thought so. Go and make a change in your outfits. You do it, not your wife.

It’s like it’s on the sidebar - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/45yz3l/60_dod_week_4_style/

Day 5 – Grooming Checklist

Here are items that you should consider when you are grooming yourself:

Change your hairstyle; Ditch the glasses; Get tan; Get a manicure and pedicure; Remove excess hair; Examine yourself closely in a mirror; Manage your eyebrows; Whiten your teeth; Freshen your breath; Get free dermatology advice (department store beautician); Accessorize; Join a Gym (MRP Note: LIFT); Eat healthier; and Make sure your clothes fit.
The only thing I would mention here is the tanning and the risks of skin cancer. Get some sun, but don’t be stupid about it.

It’s like it’s on the sidebar... again - https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/44liif/60_dod_week_3_hygiene/

Day 6 - Mission 3 - The 8 Hour Rule

This is a mere sentence where Style states that you need to get 8 hours of sleep for the following day’s mission, and yet sleep itself is an underrated part of everyone’s MAP. Yes, pussies sleep, while Men wish for sleep. And of course, Chuck Norris doesn’t sleep – he waits.
But in all seriousness, sleep has so much regenerative help on everything that it should be a key part of your MAP. Sleep helps reduce cortisol, the stress hormone, along with affecting testosterone production. And if you snore for many years, you’re at risk to get Alzheimer’s when you are older (since not enough oxygen is getting to your brain for years). Consider getting your recommended amount of sleep – it has effects on your attitude, and thus your game.

Day 6 - Abolish Approach Anxiety. The limiting mind and the freedom mind

There is a great discussion here on the limiting mind, the freedom mind, and how you have to identify your limiting mind and awaken your freedom mind. “Most fears and limits we have are the result not of nature but of nurture. We place limits on ourselves as the result of negative experiences from our childhood and the influence of authority figures.”

“The first step on most roads to recovery is acceptance—admitting that there's a problem.
The second step in overcoming the source of our anxiety is to bring it out of unconscious darkness and into the light of our conscious awareness. Only then can we begin to dismantle it, see how it works, and create procedures to nullify it.” This section talks about positive scripts to give to your mind frequently to overcome, preserver, and succeed. Additionally, there are several good points around ‘letting go of outcomes’ – think about what it would be like if you were in a sexless marriage, you’re starting to turn yourself around, and you’ve heard of this funky thing called ‘Outcome Independence’ – you have to let go of the outcomes.

Style also mentions how important it is to remove failure from your vocabulary. He mentions a famous Michael Jordan quote - “I’ve missed more than nine thousand shots in my career.
I've lost almost three hundred games. Twenty-six times I've been trusted to take the game-winning shot and missed. I've failed over and over and over again in my life. And that is why I succeed.”

Honestly, you have to have a spine as well - https://theprivateman.wordpress.com/2015/02/15/the-sexiest-part-of-a-mans-body/

Day 7 - A Field Guide to Openers

There is a quote here mentioned again that is worth repeating due to its importance - “The game begins before you open your mouth.”
In this mission, Style mentions Chris Rock, and his routine where anything that a man says to a woman translates as “How about some dick?” If you barrage a woman with generic questions, what she hears is “How about some dick?” Offer to buy her a drink, she hears “How about some dick?” Introduce yourself, comment on her necklace, ask for the time, “How about some dick?”

Now consider this from a married game perspective. Yes, you should game your wife. Can you go overboard? Absolutely. Do not let everything that comes out of your mouth translate as “How about some dick?” You have to mix it up – balancing sexual and non-sexual fun.

Don’t be like this: “How was your day?” “Ok. Yours?” “Ok.”. Also, don’t be like this: “Want some dick? Dick? How about some dick?” For a vast majority of us, that’s not going to work.

Day 9 - Briefing - The Fourteen Laws of Learning

These fourteen laws are mentioned:

• Acquire and apply knowledge in small chunks
• There is no such thing as rejection, only feedback
• It’s never her fault
• Learn actively rather than passively
• Don’t rehearse negative outcomes
• Understand how your mind learns
• Be willing to go through the pain period
• Don’t look to friends or family for approval
• Be willing to test new ideas, even if they don’t seem logical
• Once something works, figure out how and why it works
• If you don’t know what to do, don’t leave
• Hang around someone better than yourself
• Make sure your ratio of efforts to results is increasing
• Finish what you begin

This is like a guide to your MAP, and can apply to everything, not just game. Take some time and really look at these, and see how they reflect in your MAP. “It’s never her fault” – No, of course not – it’s your fault! “There is no such thing as rejection, only feedback” – Damn, are you butthurt again? FEEDBACK! This is a very deep section (yet simple), so take some time to really think about these items and how they affect both your game and your MAP.
Day 10 - Briefing - The Power of Disqualification

“One of the quickest and most playful ways to accomplish this is through disqualification. To disqualify a woman, demonstrate early in an interaction that you're not interested in her. Exert though you may he chasing her, disqualification turns the tables and makes her want to chase you. For example, telling a woman with blonde hair that for some reason you've only dated brunettes disqualifies her as a potential girlfriend.”

Now since you’re married, disqualifying someone is a bit different than dating - telling your wife that you only dated brunettes before isn’t going to get you that far. Style mentions though that they are the bedrock of flirting. They’re supposed to be playful. A disqualifier should never be hostile, critical, judgmental, or condescending.

MRP Example: Your wife is getting ready for your date night (fool, every night is date night, hard mode remember), and she asks you teasingly “I think this skirt is too short, what do you think?” Your response should be “You’re right, way too short – WAAAAY too short” while leering at her.

It’s easy – flirt with your wife. Game her!

Some examples include:

- Saving her from you
- Giving yourself a monetary value
- Go over the top
- Reversing the roles
- Employ her
- Be the snob
- Be the authority figure
- Challenge her

And so forth...

Day 13 - Mission 3 - Borrow some Culture

Style suggests picking up a copy of a local events guide – this can be a free weekly newspaper, a magazine-style going out guide, a daily paper, or even a local Zagat guide to restaurants.

Read up, become interesting again. There’s also a recommendation to read a Cosmopolitan magazine in the following mission – just don’t – you are not desperate. You have NOT sunk that low. I don’t care how low you think you are, you’re not there.
Midpoint Coaching Session

“What you get out of something is equal to what you put into it.” – Neil Strauss, The Game

He mentions this quote, and it doesn’t just apply to game, it applies to life. Every single thing that I have done that was worthwhile I worked hard at, and I truly got more out of it the more I put into it. Work, career, graduate school, sex... the list goes on.

THE SAME THING GOES FOR GAME! What he is saying here is that you need to spend time learning how to game – what you get out of it is the same as what you put into it. The same thing also goes for your work here at MRP.

Day 16 - Mission 1 - The Missing Link

This has a fascinating section about the missing link:

“The guy who fails at the game is the one who goes out looking for women to make him feel good about himself. The guy who succeeds at the game is the one who goes out and makes other people feel good about themselves.”

I remember a long time ago reading an article about a woman meeting up with a pickup artist – and afterward, she made the same comment. The pickup artist didn’t do slimy tricks, he just made other people feel good about themselves.

Think about that missing link and how it applies to your wives. I would even add there’s something more to it than that. The guy who succeeds at the game first knows himself and has built himself up into a confident, positive, masculine Man. THEN as they game, they make their wife feel good about themselves.

Day 21 Briefing - Worksheet

There is an excellent section on the anatomy of attraction - Open, Demonstrate Value, Create an Emotional Connection, Structure a Call to Action, and Make a Physical Connection. This is back to basics 101 here. Open – Meet up with your wife. Demonstrate Value – Show her how valuable you are (you do lift, don’t you). Create an Emotional Connection – Show her how you two are bonded, do something fun, give her the feelz! (http://archive.is/rZ7DN ). Structure a Call to Action – Give her an incentive to sleep with you. Arouse her with your touch or talk. Make a Physical Connection – Avoid mistakes that will cause her to change her mind (aka beta behavior, validation seeking, submissive “I don’t know, what do you want to do?” behavior), and don’t make her feel used or any other negative autopilot response.

Day 22 - Mission 2 - Constructive Reframing

This mission is about reframing something negative into something positive. “When you hear a friend, colleague, or stranger complain or say something negative, try to reframe it into something positive. For example, if a friend says that he's incompetent at something, tell him that he just likes to do things perfectly. If someone says, “My girlfriend is driving me crazy”, respond, “Why do you think she nags? It’s only because she cares. If she didn’t care, she wouldn’t nag.”
This is an excellent mission on seeing the positive. Are you still butthurt? Are you lost in the anger phase? Try reframing one item per day – call it frame practice if you must.

Even more interestingly, try it on your wife! Be unfailingly positive!

Day 22 - Mission 3 - Flirtatious Reframing

This mission is a choice – you can either choose to reframe an accident into an intention (example: if you are in a bar, and someone bumps into you, you jokingly say “Did you just grope me? You know, I’m not that easy – I require dinner and a movie first.”), or you can reframe kindness into self-interest (example: go to a store and ask for advice on a good CD to play. When they suggest a CD, teasingly accuse her of being paid to say it. “You really think I should get that CD? He you're not getting a kickback from the record label, are you?”

When applied to the married lens, this mission is fairly easy. Just have your wife bump into you and tease her unmercifully. Or if she says “Wow, you changed the sheets”, you say “Yep, I did that on purpose – we’re going to get them dirty tonight” with a smirk.

Gaming your wife should be easy.

Day 22 - Briefing - Changing The Frame

This briefing focuses on four specific reframing techniques (from Slight of Mouth by Robert Dilts): Changing Frame Size, Context Reframing, Content Reframing, and Reframing Critics and Criticism. I highly recommend reading this section as it complements other articles on frame.

Style does mention that the more you learn about frames, the more flexibility, fun, and success you’ll have in your social AND professional life, and to keep in mind the following three things:

1. Always keep a strong frame. Have her meet you in your reality.

2. Reframing is the key to both persuasion and flirtation. “It gives you control of a conversation, with the ability to redirect it somewhere humorous, positive, exciting, or, at the right time, sexual. Practice it as much as you can, and not only will you become more successful with women, you’ll become a more talented speaker and better-rounded thinker as well.”

3. Use these techniques in moderation, and don’t become obsessed with controlling the frame in every interaction all the time. Sometimes surrender can be victory.

That last point is very important. You can hear FRAME FRAME FRAME so many times that you become obsessed with it. Moderate and calibrate your use of controlling the frame.
I started writing this as a reply to this thread on askMRP, but thought it would be worth posting here. The question posed was, essentially, if arguments ever stop and, implicitly, how to handle them.

My job right now is to argue (attorney). It's rare to have a case where I'm not arguing against someone. There's almost always an attorney or party on the other end. But if I were to run for judge and win, my new job would be to hear someone else's arguments and make a decision. Which role are you playing in your marriage?

Playing Attorney

When you DEER and argue with your wife, you are putting yourself on an equal playing field with her. You're saying that you're one attorney and she's the other and you're both pushing for differing agendas. The problem is that there's no invisible judge presiding over the situation. This means that you're both implicitly assuming that there's some objective "right answer" and you're more closely aligned with that objective reality. But because that objective reality is an inanimate ideology that never acts or reveals itself, the argument itself becomes the centerpiece of the show. The argument is emotionally devastating in many such cases because there is no absolute resolution - only a concession toward trial and error based on whoever has more steel plates in their head to keep banging.

- EXAMPLE: Suppose she starts arguing that you should never spank your kids. You argue back that spanking is perfectly appropriate and beneficial. There's so much evidence on both ends of the spectrum that nobody can definitively say whose way is better. There is no magical parenting fairy who will appear to screaming parents and tell them who's right.

Whenever you engage in an argument in a back-and-forth manner, even though you're arguing against her, you're actually validating her view. By playing the role of "opposing counsel" you're communicating that objective truth has not been discovered on that issue yet. You cannot then play the, "I'm the guy, I'm the leader, so I win" card because now it comes from a place of weakness. You have not persuaded her that your way is better, and you have just proven to her that no objective reality is going to decide the case either ... so, in her mind she's following a guy who keeps getting it wrong.

- NOTE: Winning arguments and getting your way aren't methods of strengthening your frame or "holding frame." Being an argumentative jerk who never backs down might be a persona you want to craft into your frame, but it is not your frame itself. Your frame is who you are and how you project that to those around you. If you deviate from who you want to be just to win an argument or get your way, you may prove a point, but you've broken frame to do it. You've shown her that she has the power (through sacrifice of her ideas, ideologies) to change you, for better or worse. This is not a display of strength, but of weakness.

Playing Judge

Instead, you just need to take the position of judge from the get-go. At that point, you're not arguing with her - you're listening to her argument. That's a huge difference.

Interestingly, go watch a real trial (not Judge Judy crap) and you'll notice something right away: judges STFU. They sit there and listen. They don't argue. They really only speak when someone objects. When a witness is finished or the case concludes, the judge might ask some questions, but they never engage in the argument itself. They never argue back. They are only seeking more information with which to make a wise and informed decision. The judge's opinion, then, becomes objective reality. Yes, it may be subjective as to the decision itself, but the authority from which the decision is made is objective - something that everyone knows not to defy. As attorneys often tell clients, "I don't care if it's a bad decision; you better do what the judge says anyway."

Now, in his opinion the judge does address the arguments. He explains to the attorneys and parties, "I heard what you had to say and here's what I think about that." He explains himself because this builds validity and respect behind the ruling. Attorneys and parties learn from this which judges are the "good ones" and which are the "bad ones" - and it's how you preempt comfort tests, by letting her know that you heard, understood, and valued her input, even if you end up chucking it out the window. If the judge did not do this, every case would be appealed. But even if a party disagrees with the ruling, if the opinion is well-reasoned the party knows that the ruling will stand, even despite appeal. The difference is that the judge is not arguing, he's explaining. He's establishing precedent and saying, "If something similar happens again in the future, this is how I'm going to process that situation and rule on it."

Whether you're an attorney or judge, the arguments will be never-ending. The difference is that as an attorney the arguments are against you; but when you're a judge, the arguments are to you. Position yourself as judge, not attorney. Don't argue back; rather, STFU until she's said all she has to say, then issue your ruling: "Here's what I'm doing and here's why I'm doing it. I heard what you had to say, and here are my thoughts on it." If she tries to argue back, let her know that you're not arguing - you're deciding. I've had good luck often reminding my wife, "We could argue about this, but then there would never be finality. Do you want to have a decision and move forward or do you want to debate for the next three hours?" The question is, of course, rhetorical - she knows I'm not going to entertain the debate even if she says that's what she wants.
I've heard it said a million times, and even here on MRP it's taken as gospel: actions are more powerful than words.

It's true. That's why us newer guys are told to lift heavy, read the recommended stuff, and SHUT THE FUCK UP. As with all advice, however, one also has to know when is the time to move beyond the basics. That's where I find myself in my redpill journey: eight months in and I've finally got a second decent thought to contribute. Here's a link to my previous MRP post from five months ago for you lazy fuckers: https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/aol8ro/reasonable_requests_versus_testig_false_positives/

A few months ago, my father-in-law called me up after I walked out during one of the wife's full on tirades. I didn't say a word to her, I just left. I went to work the next day having not spoken to her and I got his call that afternoon. The wife thought I was gone for good, and to be honest I was on the fence about returning. Father-in-law reminded me that the most important thing was our two year old daughter (obviously) and that growing up in a broken home isn't best for her (also, obviously). I told him that neither was her growing up in a marriage where I am treated poorly and I keep coming back for more. I said that if the wife wasn't going to move beyond things from the past then it doesn't matter what I do.

He said, "then come what may."

I thought about those words for a long time. I had been projecting my frame just fine in that situation, but my outcome independence was nowhere near the level it should have been. Here is a fucking Army Ranger preaching outcome independence even if it means his little girl is going to be a divorced single mother. I've never respected that man more than I did in that moment. It was definitely a gut check.

There's a difference between formulating a plan and being an anxious little bitch, and I was the latter. I was so preoccupied with how things might go down in a divorce that I was rudderless. Not recommended.

I returned, handled the situation well, and over the past few months things got better between the wife and I. Sex quality and frequency slowly improved, and she began stepping into my frame. Once just after sex my wife said, "I feel like I'm on probation and that you're just waiting for me to fuck up so you can leave me." I kissed her on the forehead and simply told her I loved her, and the next day we spent a wonderful day together as a family. Dread is a hell of a drug.

I've stopped pandering to her insecurities, but I never forgot those words - then come what may - and the true lesson of outcome independence.

Sometimes my wife still gets paranoid that I might react poorly and act like a beta bitch.
She'll say, "I thought you were going to be mad at me." I'll just smile and wag my finger at her. "Bad wifey." Then she's shaking her head and smiling at me. I'm still not great about complimenting her when she does a good job and I need to improve at seduction, but at least she is stepping into my frame.

The point is that without true outcome independence and a strong frame for your wife to step into, there's no way you're ready to start leading her to a better marriage or connecting with her. I was silent, dismissive, and indifferent to the point where she was still paranoid about the past creeping back up. I needed to start filling that void with my frame.

Which leads me back to my original point; you have to know when it's time to start saying something.

If you don't have something truly meaningful to say, then by all means SHUT THE FUCK UP. Once you've gained outcome independence and your wife is beginning to enter your frame, however, you can begin to lead her (and your kids) by using your words to broadcast your actions. You absolutely have to follow through on what you say.

How to Not Fuck This Up: Power Phrases and Brevity.

More than likely you're not ready to start talking. However, if you are going to start moving beyond SHUTTING THE FUCK UP then let me put a couple of choice phrases in your toolbox. Many of these were suggested by other MRP veterans, but I don't have the time to hunt down sources so just assume that I stole this shit. The most important part is to say very little.

- Saying "I got this" before you take control of a situation builds a lot of stock in those words so you can use them later to assert your leadership.
- Saying "It's going to be okay" consistently during comfort tests is an easy way to turn your wife into Pavlov's dog, except it's going to be her pussy that's wet.
- Saying "I understand why you feel that way" when she's upset maintains your control. Your wife is even more tired of your defending and explaining yourself than you are; she just wants to feel heard and understood.

In all of those situations you should ask yourself, "what's the most powerful thing I can say right now." If you don't have a solid answer then shut the fuck up. Once you're ready, having a few go-to power phrases can make a big difference.
I had a history of being anxious in social situations and would rather put my head down and just go about my business when I was out and about. As part of my MAP, I decided it was time to change that and have pushed myself to talk to anyone I encounter regardless of where, when and who they are. Sure sometimes people brush me off but most of the time people are happy to chat for a minute or two.

About 6 months ago, I made friends with a barista at a local coffee shop - not what you are thinking - she's a 45 year old woman, attractive for an older woman but honestly never thought about it that way at the time. We would chit chat about all kinds of things including my boys and her daughters. On occasion, her daughters, who are like hot young versions of their mom, would come in to say hi while she was working and she introduced me and we would make small chit chat here and there - they do yoga and I do too for BJJ so that became a topic of conversation. Even though I run some day game - I intentionally have never went there with these girls because my wife frequents that coffee shop and the barista knows I'm married and even knows my kids.

Fast forward to this past weekend and I'm walking around with the wife and kids and we walk past the coffee shop and one of the daughters is sitting in the window on her computer. She waves and then excitedly motions me to come in so I pop in and she says that she actually got a job teaching yoga finally and that I should drop in some time to one of the classes she teaches because she needs to fill her classes up. I say cool yeah maybe if you are lucky some time I will drop in, she laughs and I leave it at that.

I get shit tested a few times on the walk home about how I know her and just basically leave it as she's some girl I run into at the coffee shop from time to time. The wife keeps pressing so I decide to have some fun with it and tell her that she actually one of the girls who's auditioning to be her replacement - my wife has a running thing that she thinks she's going to die this year (she doesn't take care of herself and has had a few issues in the last year - an area I need to be a better captain in for sure) and I always joke that I better start auditioning for her replacements. She huffs off and gets ready for her birthday dinner that we are having out with our friends.

Dinner goes well and we are all hanging out having drinks and she tells me that she really needs to know who that girl in the coffee shop is and that I'm being shady - I just basically keep up the teasing and sort of ignore it. At one point she says she has to go to the bathroom.
and I tell her to go to the unisex bathroom and wait for me to knock - she giggles says I'm bad and walks off. I honestly didn't think she would listen but figured its worth a shot to see so I go and knock on the door, she opens it, pulls me in and we get at it like fucking crazy.

Being social isn't just about day gaming or catch/release - it is about literally talking to everyone and anyone because you never know what might happen from those interactions. There is always something interesting to talk to people about and most of the time people just like to talk about themselves so its super easy once they get on topic. I do know that if I had not forced myself to talk to the barista then I probably would never have been introduced to her daughters and maybe this entire evening plays out differently.
23 Psychological Lifehacks - This should be basic to everyone by now

PSYCHOLOGICAL LIFEHACKS

1. When you first meet people try to notice their eye color whilst also smelling at them. It might be because you look for a second or two longer, but I can tell you that people really respond to it.

2. Pay attention to people’s feet. If you approach two people in the middle of a conversation, and they only turn their backs and not their feet, they don’t want you. Are closer conversations. Similarly, if you are conversing with a conversation who you think is paying attention to you and their backs turn towards you, but their feet are facing in another direction, they want the conversation to end.

3. Foot-in-the-door phenomenon. People are more likely to agree to do a task for you if you ask them to do something smaller first. (Goodwin’s argument...makes people think you like them)

4. Alternatively, you ask them to do more unreasonable task, and they’ll say no, so then you ask for what you wanted, a much more reasonable task, and they’re more likely to agree that way.

5. If you ask someone to do you a small favor, cognitive dissonance will make them believe that because they’ll let you, they therefore must like you. (yes you all know this – Ben Franklin)

6. If you ask someone a question and they only partially answer just wait. If you stay silent and keep eye contact they will usually continue talking.

7. Dragon your eyes when you’re approaching a situation that could make you this tense. Like public speaking or having a jump. I can’t remember where I heard that, apparently if you’re “hating” something in our brains say it 4 times you don’t feel the same (if you’re scared). So I’m not the same. Has helped greatly a few times.

8. Avoid the sidewalk shuffle by looking intensely over the person’s shoulder, or between people’s heads in a group. Your gaze shows them where you’re going, they’ll shift toward the opposing side to create a gap to avoid you.

9. When you’re studying/learning something new, teach a friend how about it. Let them ask questions. If you’re able to teach something you understand it.

10. People will remember what you said but how you made them feel.

11. Get in the room by altering your psychological state beforehand. Tell yourself “I’ve known these people all my life. We’re old friends catching up. I can’t wait to see them.” Visualize the experience, smelling hugs, eating your food, having your drinks, having your beers, etc.

12. When you’re doing something you’re unfamiliar with, think about/in your head, and afterwards, you’ll do it again.

13. Be honest with yourself. If you’re feeling stressed, you need to do something about it. If you’re feeling sad, you need to do something about it.

14. Use self-talk. Say things to yourself that are positive and helpful.

15. Use positive self-talk. Say things to yourself that are positive and helpful.

Own Your Shit - Own Her Sex
by SgtSilverBack | August 29, 2017 | Link

As requested by /u/scurvemuch, an advanced guide to living a sexual life and sexualizing your wife.

CAUTION.

1. If your wife doesn't want to fuck you. Don't try this. Feel free to learn the material but save the introduction until you can consistently game and kino your wife.

2. If you actually like your wife, then you really need to know her. I am a living example of a bull in a China shop and it caused setbacks. If she was choked by someone and it traumatized her, either skip it or work up to it slowly. Don't be so autistic that you forget or ignore hard limits and trauma.

3. The purpose of this is to Own Your Sex like you Own Your Shit. If you can't do the former, you can't do the latter.

4. This is advanced also because you will need immense control over your own sexual nature. When all you want to do is rage fuck your wife due to lust, it can fuck things up if you haven't laid the groundwork to be trustworthy and in control of yourself.

So what do you do when you have completely changed your life. You are the best, current, version of yourself. Your workout is on point. Your house is exactly how you want it. Your work is following along your plan of progression. Your wife is following you, fucking you and adding great value.

Or maybe you unleashed your slut and she sexual outpaces you.

This is where a married Dominant (D) / submissive (s) relationship becomes your new norm. For Christians this is referred to as taken in hand.

Realistically, it shouldn't change your mission at all. You have already become responsible for everything. Now you are also responsible for her sex and pleasure.

Everything short of truly serious topics are sexualized.

It is an advanced form of kino and game that have a deeper mental effect.

So what does this look like.

The possibilities are only limited to your creativity. I have been on a trip, with my wife texting constantly about how bad she needs my cock. I told her to set up the Ipad, put on her collar and ride a dildo until she came.

When I'm home I can choke her and finger her stopping just short of her cumming. She hates it, and yet she is even more ramped up and trying to find a way to have me make her cum. Since I'm not worried about pissing her off, I know it's just her sexual frustration and it leads to her wanting more of the control that I offer. I've edged her for up to 5 days before I let her cum. It was non stop sexuality. I also had to give her time after that, due to the complete overstimulation that it can cause.

Make her take off her panties at school/work and send you a picture of the panties to verify. She is sitting at school/work with no panties. In her mind, everyone knows it, she's nervous, but aroused. FEELZ. Use the wand on her when she gets home, make her gush from a day of sexual thoughts. And you didn't have to fuck her once.

Use a body safe marker to write above her pussy, “Owned” “Sir’s Slut”. She sees it when she goes to the bathroom at work and texts you, telling you how wet she got and she needs you to take care of it later.

Make her kneel at your feet while you inspect her. Make her anticipate your touch. Make a big deal about her earning your collar so it is a symbol to her of her submission, just like the ring on her finger.

Give her a day collar that looks innocent enough, except for something small like a lock charm. She know's it's there. She knows what it means.

Make her send you a tumblr pic every Tuesday that arouses her, use it to help create your Friday night scene.

Most importantly, is caring for your submissive. Think of it like this, she has given you almost total control over her, that ability to USE, humiliate and degrade her. You just got done fucking her ass, calling her every filthy name you know and leave her used with collar and cuffs on. She is in a physical and emotional ball. And you walk away, thanks babe, going to do something else. This can break her. This can be very traumatic. She must have that rock to grab onto. She NEEDS to have your presence and care letting her know she was amazing.

If she can't trust you to be the man of the house, owning your shit without one word of appreciation from her. Why the fuck would she crawl behind you wearing your collar? You think being a bank is enough to earn that level of control?

If you aren't attractive enough for her to fuck regularly, she WILL not let you do this.

If you don't have a strong enough frame to bat away shit tests. Then trying this will set you back even further. I can guarantee that if you focus on why she hasn't texted in two hours, you won't be able to handle her bratty nature if you give an order and she fights it.

Refer to https://husdom.com for more information. It is similar to TFA with a BDSM spin. It is tailored to help men become more dominant in the bedroom and MAINTAIN a healthy marriage. You must get to that point first. You really don't want to try someone of these things when you are in the anger phase. She can tell the difference between a lustful face fuck and a rage fuck. TRUST me
It occurred to me recently that many guys may not know what their wives are telling the attorney in preparation for that looming divorce filing she didn't tell you she was already planning. So, let me give you some insight on what that conversation looks like behind the scenes.

All of these are approximations of actual quotes I've heard throughout my career. They usually start with an allegation that the other side is abusive, followed by my asking: "How is he abusive?"

The Typical Conversation

This is based off of an actual conversation I had with one client in particular, but is fairly common of most:

"Did he ever hit you?"

"No," she says.

"Okay, so how was he abusive then?"

"He's verbally abusive."

"How so?" I always ask.

"He swears at me."

"Out of the blue or during arguments?"

"During arguments."

"Did you swear back at him?"

"Yes, but nowhere near as bad as he did it to me. He gets REALLY angry during arguments. Did I mention he's emotionally abusive too?"

"How's he emotionally abusive?"

"Because he gets soooo mad at me for little things or when I didn't do anything wrong at all!"

"Does he think you did something wrong?"

"Well yeah, that's why he's mad. But I swear I didn't. I just didn't do it his way - and he wants to make me feel horrible for that. That's emotional abuse. I looked it up on the internet."

"I'm sorry to hear that. Have you ever gotten mad at him over something that he felt was unjustified?"

"Oh sure. He accuses me of nagging him all the time."

"And have you ever yelled or gotten angry in those situations?"

"Well, yeah - because he's so abusive that it makes me mad and I can't help but yell and get angry! But what do you think? Can we show the court how abusive this man is?"

Other Memorable Quotes

I have added the first sentence for context, but I assure you that ALL of these quotes have included an allegation of the exact type of abuse referenced at some point in the conversation/testimony, and the second sentence on is part of the explanation given. Some are my client, others are the opposing party during my examination.

• "He's manipulative. He doesn't actually do anything that I could call abusive, but he does things to make me feel abused anyway. That's how he tries to get away with his abuse."

• "He's manipulative." I ask, "How does he manipulate you?" She answers, "By asking me to do things, and then I feel like I have to do what he wants all the time." I ask, "Does he ever threaten you if you don't do it, either direct or implied?" "No, I just know that he'll be angry. He uses his anger to manipulate me into getting his way."

• "He's manipulative. He uses the kids as pawns to get at me." I ask, "How so?" She answers, "When we're fighting, sometimes he takes the kids and leaves the house. He says he's 'giving me time to cool off.'" "What does he do with them?" "Usually they go to a park or out for ice cream or something fun, knowing that I'm at home in tears - and he doesn't care. Then he looks like the fun dad and I'm the crazy mom who they have to be saved from. And everyone thinks HE is the hero in the situation!"

• "He's emotionally abusive. Every time we argue, he just sits there silently and doesn't talk or get mad or do anything. He knows it infuriates me, but he keeps doing it!"

• "He's emotionally abusive. He loves to look at me with this smug grin on his face, even when I'm obviously mad at him." I ask, "You mean he does it when you're not mad too?" She answers, "Yeah, he's just smug all the time."

• "He's emotionally abusive. He told me if I tried to leave him, he'd fight for custody of the kids."
• "He's emotionally abusive. He told me that if I didn't handle this situation his way, he'd take the kids and live with his mom for a while." I asked, "Isn't that what you did when you filed for divorce two years ago before dismissing it?" She answers, "Yeah, but I'm the mother. That's different."

• "He's sexually abusive. He thinks I should have sex with him whenever he feels like it, and he'll try to pressure me to say yes." I ask, "Do you say yes or do you stand your ground?" She answers, "I always say yes. It wouldn't be abuse if I felt like I was allowed to say no."

• "He's sexually abusive. He made me give him blow jobs even though he knows I don't like it."

• "He's sexually abusive. He looks at me all the time, even when I don't want him to. It creeps me out."

• "He's sexually abusive. When we have sex, after he's finished he ends things and never tries to help me along, then makes me feel guilty for not finishing as fast as him. It makes me not want to have sex with him anymore." I ask, "So did you stop having sex with him or tell him you didn't want to?" She answered, "No. I just started finishing myself off afterward."

• "He's sexually abusive. He raped me many times during our marriage, forcing me to do all kinds of outrageous things, like blow jobs, hand jobs, and other stuff." I find peers in her congregation to confront her about these accusations. She tells them, "Oh, I made all that up. My attorney said I had to say those things to win custody."

• "He's financially abusive. He controls the check book and I have to ask for permission whenever I want to buy anything." I ask, "Has he ever said no to anything that you needed for daily living purposes?" She answered, "No."

• "He's financially abusive" as above (a common one). I ask the same question. She answers, "No." I ask, "Has he ever said no to anything you wanted to buy at all?" She answers, "No. But he still has all the power over the finances and I have none."

• "He's financially abusive. He keeps all the accounts in his name and refuses to let me know what's in the accounts." I ask, "Have you ever asked and he told you no?" She answers, "No. I don't feel like I'm allowed to ask. But he never gave me access."

• "He's financially abusive. He buys whatever he wants, like eating out for lunch while he's at work pretty much every day. But when I want to buy something, he always says no." I say, "Give me examples of things he's said no to." She answers, "Usually new decorations for the house." I ask, "Is he buying decorations for his man cave or his office?" She answers, "No, he doesn't value decor, and because he controls all the money, it means I can never have what I want, while he still gets to have whatever he wants." I ask, "And what is it, exactly, that he wants?" She answers, "Usually he just spends money on food." [Note: the guy wasn't even obese.]

• "He's financially abusive. He spends all our money, and then there's nothing left for basic needs. We're in so much debt." I ask, "What types of things does he buy?" She answers, "TVs, sound systems, video game systems, computer stuff." I ask, "Have you ever bought things like that for fun yourself?" She answers, "Yeah, he buys me a new smart phone every year. I also have a few ipads and a laptop. He likes to buy me jewelry too. He thinks I have to forgive him when he does that. But then when there's no money left for groceries, we end up having to put it on the credit card, and now I'm constantly in a panic over all the debt we've racked up. Can the courts make him stop? I can't handle the financial abuse."

• "He's financially abusive. He knows I can't afford this divorce, yet he keeps doing everything possible to ring up my attorney fees and make this case cost a small fortune." I think to myself, "No, you calling me for 3 hour chats 2-3 times a week to talk about your insecurities and not letting me hang up the phone is what's costing you a small fortune. Learn to shut up and this whole thing would have been 80% cheaper."

• "He's verbally abusive. He yells and screams and swears at me all the time." I ask, "Do you ever do it back?" She answers, "Yes."

• "He's verbally abusive. He lies all the time." I ask, "Do you have any proof of any of the lies you just told me about?" She answers, "No, he's really good at hiding things. And a lot of the stuff he lies about are smaller things just to get under my skin, not big things that would be provable."

• "He's verbally abusive. He calls me names and tries to make me feel bad about myself, telling me I'm worthless and that nobody could love me." I respond, "I'm really sorry to hear that. That sounds cruel. How did you handle it?" I thought she'd say she went to her room and cried. Her actual answer: "I know I shouldn't have done it, but I started breaking his things. I figured that if I wasn't worth anything, he couldn't have anything worth anything either. I get that I reacted poorly, but that doesn't change the fact that the way he talked to me was abuse, and I want the court to see that."

• "He's physically abusive. Just look at these pictures!" She pulls them out, I say, "Oh, that red mark on your neck?" She says, "No, that was a bug bite. It's the spot on my arm, where he hit me." I ask, "Oh, the dot right there?" She says, "No, the other arm."
She points to a slight discoloration that I'm pretty sure was really just a shadow. I say, "Oh, the picture must just be faded too much to notice. Can you get me one with better resolution so the judge can see what you're pointing out?" After she gets me the better resolution copy the next day, I still couldn't see it. She didn't have any other angles of the shot (presumably because she couldn't get the shading just right from any other angle).

- "He's physically abusive. Look at the pictures of the bruises on my arm!" The pictures were entered as exhibits and showed very serious bruises. She added, "I took this video of him slamming a door on my arm repeatedly." It gets marked as an exhibit and played for the judge. The video shows the two arguing, then she drops her phone, so the video goes black, but audio can be heard of her screaming and a door slamming on her arm multiple times. Later at trial, I have my client on the stand presenting a video that he was taking simultaneously, showing her slamming the door on her own arm with an identical audio track.

- "He stalks me. He walks his dog in front of my house all the time." I ask, "How far away does he live?" She answers, "4 houses down."

- "He stalks me. He constantly posts things on Facebook directed to me and he won't stop." I ask, "Have you ever told him to stop?" She answers, "No." I ask, "How difficult has it been managing your social media account with him doing this?" She answers, "Oh, he doesn't actually tag me in any of them. I only find out about it because my friends tell me about it."

- "He stalks me. He used to take videos of us having sex together." I asked, "When did you find out about this?" She answers, "I mean, I agreed to it at first, but I didn't know he was still doing it after the first few times. Plus, I didn't know he had videos of other women too - and he didn't delete them after he broke up with them! He probably still has my video too. Don't you think that's creepy like a stalker? He's out there watching videos of me naked after we're divorced. The court has to realize that's stalking, right?" I ask, "Do you have any evidence that he's actually watching those videos?" She answers, "No." I ask where she found the videos, she answers, "In a box in our shed." I ask, "Does he know you found the videos?" She answers, "No." I ask, "So, in all probability, he thinks they're still packed away in a box in the shed and hasn't actually seen them in years, right?" She answers, "Yeah, I guess that makes sense."

In all of these situations, the women genuinely believed they were the victims of abuse. I 100% believe that they were being sincere in their allegations, despite that in most situations they did not come anywhere close to the actual legal standard of abuse. To that end, I have only used examples from cases where the allegation of abuse didn't actually get substantiated in court (except a few of them, where the cases are still pending, but it's not been an issue yet). I'm not here to increase panic about the divorce-rape boogey-man.
BONUS 1. Gender Reversal: "She filed a CPO against me saying I'm abusive, but she's the abusive one!" I ask, "How so?" He answers, "For example, when we would have sex, she'd make me choke her. I was really uncomfortable with it, but she'd pressure me saying she couldn't orgasm unless I was choking her hard enough that she was actually having trouble breathing."

BONUS 2. Parental Alienation [an EXTREMELY common conversation]: "He/she is alienating my kids from me! He/she lies about me, blames me for everything in front of the kids, keeps telling the kids I cheated on him/her, tells the kids it's my fault we're getting divorced, etc. This HAS to stop. Don't the courts care about parental alienation? I read online that this is a big deal and that the Courts will put a stop to it." I ask, "How's your relationship with your children?" They answer, "Oh, they love and adore me. Our relationship is very strong." I ask, "How's the other party's relationship with the kids." They answer, "Not very good. The kids really struggle being over there because of how bad of a person he/she is." I ask, "Given what you just said, who do you think the court will believe is the actual alienated parent?" They answer, "But they're doing it to themselves! I'm the one being alienated by all the things they say about me." I answer, "Give me 3 examples of how your relationship with the children has been irreparably harmed by those things." They never get past the first.

BONUS 3. Danger to the Child: "He doesn't love our daughter. It's so obvious. He's using a size 3 nipple, which I know is the manufacturer recommended, but she had acid reflux 6 months ago, so she should only be using a size 1 nipple on her bottles to limit the flow. How does the court not see that he just doesn't care about his daughter at all?" [Yes, this one's more exaggerated because of the way I summarized the conversation, but every claim I referenced is true, nonetheless.]

Caveats

In maybe 2-3 of these cases there were more significant things that came up and these were secondary rationales. But in the majority, these were the primary reasons given.

I also have a number of cases where the abuse was very, very real. This isn't to say that abuse doesn't actually happen. Rather, it's to show that women have a grossly inaccurate concept of what actual abuse looks like.

NOT The Point

My point here is not to make you afraid that all women will cry abuse just because they can. It's also not to make you afraid of abuse charges that she will inevitably contemplate at some point throughout your marriage. I'm also not trying to make you extra cautious of doing anything that could possibly be interpreted as abuse in court.
The Point

My point ACTUALLY IS that if a woman isn't attracted to you or (even if she is) she's decided to leave, she's going to be prone to interpret any negativity in the relationship as a form of abuse no matter what you do. Sometime her feelings will be legitimate in light of the circumstances. Don't be that guy, unless it's self-defense. But none of the things I referenced above went anywhere in court, no matter how fervently she pushed the issue (some cases pending). So, my conclusion for you guys is to look at a list like this and think to yourself:

- There's no point worrying about whether or not she's going to cry "Abuse!" someday. Just assume she will.

From there, the guys who fare best are the ones who make her second-guess why she's divorcing him in the first place. And yes, that second-guessing is EXTREMELY common as well, despite how few women are willing to admit it. But they tell their attorney everything along those lines too. This is one of the reasons it's so vital to maintain a firm "stay plan is the go plan" mentality if your marriage is falling apart - not in the hope that you might win her back, but because the things that would give you that chance are the same things that are going to tweak whether she cries "Abuse!" or "Aw, I'm going to miss how bold of a person he was."
She acts like a child because she is happy

by 88Will88 | April 4, 2017 | Link

Happy women act like children all the time. They believe in romantic vampires and knights in shining armour. They believe in fairy tales, they care about the Kardashians and they are scared of moths. They sleep with soft toys and get mad at you because of how you acted in her dream. However all of this behaviour is the privilege of the alpha male. Beta males find it offensive that we would suggest women are children, because they never get to observe that behaviour. You see when a woman is in the presence of a vagina drying beta, they act much like man. Indeed they have to act like a man because in the presence of a beta, no masculinity is in the room. She is forced to act logically, solve problems and lead because there is no one there to lead for her.

This is why manginas and SJW are so offended with red pill theory. They see women as equals who want to be politicians, doctors, CEOs and scientists. In reality only a fraction of women truly want to do that sort of work, there is no glass ceiling, just women who are not attractive enough to secure an alpha male so she is forced to act like a man herself. All the while she is upset that no man finds her attractive so her anger manifests as feminism due to her victim status. The betas of society believe the lies told to them by unattractive women who went to university to waste their time on gender studies. Even some attractive women have been brainwashed into thinking that they need to act like a man and be "equal". Feminism does more harm to women than it does to men.

Alpha men see the real woman and her real behaviour. They hear her squeals of delight when he comes home or lifts her up. They feel her completely surrender her body and become like liquid in his arms. They know she does not want to decide which restaurant to go to or where to holiday, she wants surprise and adventure. They know what it is to lead and provide for her, to relieve her of the thing she hates to do the most, think. She does not want to think, she wants to FEEL. Real red pill men know this so we see her behave as a child all of the time. Often this includes childish behaviour, temper tantrums, power plays, and other manifestations of childish behaviour we understand as shit and comfort tests. Whenever she tries to lead she is only testing you. If you let her lead she will become miserable and sabotage herself and all around her in the subconscious discomfort she is forced to endure. She does not want to lead, she wants a real man to do it.

So next time your girl is acting like a baby, whining over stupid shit, upset because of a dream she had, or generally misbehaving, smile to yourself and know that this childish behaviour is her natural state. She cannot help it, you have become the leader so she is now free to act naturally. Her natural state is submissive, pliable, temperamental and childlike. Part of her childish behaviour is being naughty sometimes. Simply treat her the way you would a naughty child and the behaviour will soon pass. Never lose frame, never negotiate with terrorists, just slap her on the ass and laugh it off. Know that if she was with a beta she would not be acting like this, she would be acting like a man and vying for control.

Also know this, if your woman is constantly vying for control, attempting to take the reigns of the budget, making major non-domestic decisions, then that is all on you. It is totally your fault and you have allowed beta behaviour to become part of your habits and character. The more she seeks to take charge, the more beta you are. Any guy who has made the transformation from beta to more alpha on the spectrum knows this is true. When he was beta she berated him and complained about life, she tried to take charge on issues, she was unhappy, she refused sex. Now that he has his shit together it is like she is a new person, she fucks him eagerly, she likes the direction of her life, she seeks his approval, and she acts like a spoiled little girl. Such behaviour is the privilege and domain of the alpha male, enjoy it.
When I first stumbled across the idea of catch and release a couple of years ago, I thought, "are you fucking nuts? what a recipe for disaster..."

fast forward to last week.

I'm waiting at a place that makes a great, healthy lunch. It's attached to a gym in a pretty nice part of town. Attractive women in workout clothes are consistently coming through this place.

So I'm flipping through the paper and the girl behind the counter asks me about my order. When I answered, she sorta giggled. So I inquired, "sorry, is that an odd request for that sort of order?"

"VERY"

"You just called me odd..." I shrugged, "I've been called much worse"

And then I hear a laugh coming from the table behind me. The sort of laugh that was made to be heard. When I turned to see who it was, a really attractive 30 something year old is staring at me, smiling.

I turned and went back to reading the paper and waiting for my order.

Then something in my brain just, for lack of a better term, flipped. What would happen if I asked for her number.

So here's something you need to understand as you read the next part. It will read like I'm a cool customer that can handle something like this without worry.

Fan Fiction, right?

Inside, let me tell you, I'm fucking terrified. More terrified than I've been in years. This is not in my character, not something I ever would have considered doing. I decided 2017 is the year I start taking my personal development more seriously. It's the year I get my head screwed on right. The year I take chances. That means getting comfortable in uncomfortable situations and doing things that make me nervous.

I walked up to her table and standing in front of her, said

"hey there, how's your lunch?"

"It great, thanks"

I reminded myself to keep the body language strong, shoulders squared and a slight smirk.
"Good, listen, I'd like you to give me your phone number"

She smiles. She's wearing a wedding ring. So am I.

"hahah, umm, why would I do that?"

"Because I asked you for it"

"And what do you plan on doing with it?"

"When you give it to me, you might find out"

"I don't give my phone number to people I don't know"

And then the first great development happened. In my mind, my heart still fucking racing, I think, _I don't care if I get it or not, the goal was approaching an attractive woman, not dating her._

"Cool, look, my lunch is ready, enjoy your meal" and start walking away

"Wait"

I turn, smirk firmly on my face

"what's up?"

"Does your wife know you ask strange women for their phone numbers"

"Nope", now smiling, as is she.

"What would she think if she found out?"

"She wouldn't like it. One.little.bit"

And with that, the fucking HOOK IS SET. The old me would have likely made a /u/saint_chalet shaped hole in the drywall at the mention of my wife, running out of that place. But I realized the sheer thrill of taking another woman's man, even the possibility of it, had this woman's very keen interest. She wanted this.

"You don't even know my name"

"Nope"

"Are you going to tell me yours?"

"Nope"

"And you expect me to give you my phone number without even exchanging names?"
"I do, yes"

She is almost shaking and I'm trying not to make this sound like fan fic nonsense. This woman is beyond excited about what's happening here. For me, at this point, I'm actually calming down inside. I've come to realize that I do not care whether she hands over her phone number or not.

"Hand me your phone, I'll punch it in"

"I'm not going to do that, here's a pen, write it down"

She reaches into her purse and writes her number on a napkin.

"Thanks" and I turn to grab my lunch and leave

"So you're going to txt me?"

One last smile, "yeah, I might"

And I left. I tossed the napkin in the bin a few blocks away.

I basically floated back to the office, so fucking pumped about what just happened.

A few things became crystal clear:

- By not caring about the outcome, I got exactly what I wanted
- My wife's opinion of me used to be the prime directive in what I was willing to do. I went into this little exchange not giving a shit about whether she found out I asked a woman for her phone number. If she somehow found out, I'd say, "I was having some fun" and that's the end of it.
- a well dressed, fit, likely affluent married woman is willing to give her phone number to a random middle aged 7/10 guy in a lunch spot. So will your wife.

My wife has been pretty awful lately. Frigid. This little exchange was the log I needed to keep warm by my own fire. I walked in the door that night and just grabbed the kids and went off to do a bunch of stuff with them. I don't even remember talking to my wife.
This FR is based on /u/88Will88’s post today, about leading. A happy woman acts like a child with her man. An unhappy woman can also be childlike with a man with whom she is happy.

Situation: Major medical issue with wife, will impact not only her future but ours as a family/couple.

The other evening we were talking about logistics for what to do with given disease. She does a TON of research on it, reads scholarly articles and so on. We aren't talking Vox or whatever.

So when she tells me she wants to do X, I tend to think that she really thought it through (and that is usually the case).

We are sitting there and she tells me that she doesn't want to go through treatments X Y and Z because of pain, and low success rate anyway and so on. I put on my "supportive" side and tell her that since she thought it through, although I do not like it, we will do what she decided, because, you know, her body.

She got very upset with me. During the subsequent conversation, she said something like "You are my HUSBAND, I want you to tell me what to do. I need that".

Point fucking blank. Even when it comes to life and death, you decide. She needs you to lead, and she is looking at you for answers, because you have to be sure, even when the world is not.
My Red Pill Discovery

My Red Pill Discovery:

You can look back at my post that I made in November of 2017.
https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/7awtu5/wife_separated/

I still keep it up and I still look back at it every now and again when I need a reminder of why i'm here on some of the rough days after swallowing the pill and still going through the discovery. It's a bit long, but 10 months worth of learning and discovery:

Stats: 40yrs

6ft - 210- 18%BF

Bench - 230 5 sets of 6

Squats - 280 3 sets of 8 (Bad knees football and motocross)

Curls - 120 4 sets 8

Leg press 320 2 sets 5

Lats - 95 4 sets 8

My routine changes 3 times a week working different targeted muscles then 2 times a week working groups.

Cardio varys between mountain biking 5-12 miles 2 times a week and trail running 4-6 miles 2 times a week

My Story:

I seperated from my Ex wife July 2017, I was beta to the max just not realizing it was such a thing with the upbringing in a tribe atmosphere of feminine imperative. The typical be yourself, be honest, emotional and emotionally available. All of what most of you already know or have gone through.

Needless to say during the first 5 months of my seperation I still helped her out with whatever she needed, all while trying to get her back and begging for sex. Thinking now my known covert contracts should get me what I want then I would rambo when it didn't work out like I planned.

I fell into deep depression, didn't leave the house. Barley even got off the couch when I wasn't working. Just waiting, waiting for that woman to see the pedestal I put her on and value me as a “Good Guy”. I thought, everything I did for her in our 8 years of marriage should mean something, now realizing It was just my turn. We have a daughter together and I raise her two other sons from another man since they were 3 and 1.5 yrs old... (should've saw the writing on the wall then...)

So one day while scouring the internet for some guidance, advice, knowledge to bring me out of my slump I came across this place on reddit - Married Red Pill. After reading some posts and seeing the comments of Men that just truly seemed to care I thought I would try and get some advice from these guys. Advice I did get: you can see all 101 comment here. I believe it's probably one of the longest on this page. Needless to say I got my world turned upside down. I started deer-ing the commenters and got called out, finally i just gave up, stopped making excuses for my pathetic behavior and started to listen.

First thing I did was hit amazon, I bought NMMNG, The Rational Male all 3 books, MGTOW, The Map, downloaded the Book of Pook, What women want when they test, Open her, MMSLP, Hold onto your nuts, Dark Triad, 48 Laws of power. Also downloaded and read 95% of the sidebar. Next I joined my local Gym

I started reading in my free time at work on my Kindle app, I would read when I got home for an 2 hour. I bought notebooks and made notes of everything I read. (On my 4th notebook) Notes on the mistake I made, notes on important things to remember and just over all Ah-Ha moments I had about what I was reading.

I spent 3 months in this process and I knew I still wasn't ready to post. I didn't feel I knew enough yet. I kept reading and lifting, got new clothes, STFU around my wife at the time when she would come around. January I went on Tinder and met a woman just for friend with benefits. We would hang out, fuck, she did everything I wanted. One day she started giving me some emotional bullshit through a text that rambled on for ever. I simply wrote back, “Knock your bull shit off, if you want talk come talk i'm done now I got shit to do.” She was at my house after work, apologetic, not wanting to lose what we have. I simply said “what made you change your thinking” she said “ I needed that, I needed you to put me in my place. You were right I was being an emotional mess and taking it out on you.” Then she thanked me and blew me.

It was that moment that I realize I've grown. I've learned. I recognize the test and conquered it without even thinking. My wife even came over one day while she was at my house, left in a bitch fit cause another woman was there. I simply told her you left and are not meeting my needs. That following weekend my wife invited me out for dinner, we had a great time, I started catching feelings again. She was grabbing on me, kissing me, Putting my hand between her legs on the ride home (short skirt). I dropped her off, thanked her for dinner and left. 20 mins later I get photos of her in lingerie telling me to come back and I should stay the night. I respectfully decline and told her were seperated to work on the marriage, you put no effort in and until that is the intention there is nothing that sex is going to accomplish at this point. I also knew the only reason she acted this way was because of the competition anxiety she got because another woman was at my house a week prior. I knew if it was genuine desire to rekindle she would continue and uphold to fight for me. It didn't. A week later she told me she regretted sending me the photos. AWALT

I took the trash to the curb (She left), I would be a fool to let it come back in and treat me that way. I shortly gave her an ultimatum, she wanted counseling (which didn't work because she walked out twice after the counselor called her out on her “Victim” bullshit) I filed for divorce. She was shocked that I didn't give her more time (by now its been 10 months) I got the house, 50/50 custody. She had to have her mom move out with her from arizona to help her with the kids and purchase a house because she couldn't afford one on her own. Does it all still sting, of course it does. Do I miss her from time to time, yes but I don't miss the emotional abuse, the narcissistic behavior, the constant tests. Now I do my thing, with who I want when I want. I have 3 plates now that I spin every opposite week each knowing, and each competing for my attention. I only supply the attention based on their desire and behavior.

Overall I must say I wish I found this so much earlier in my life. It would have saved me a lot of drama. The solipsism is real, Hypergamy is a bitch, and the female imperative is a game that is constantly going to have to be in check if your ever in a relationship with a woman.

Thank you to each and everyone one of those who kicked my ass back in november, calling me out on my weak ass behavior. My life has changed for the better and I will never know all that can be learned but I look forward to the journey. Intergender Psychology / Intergender behavioral Psychology has now become one of my favorite past times to observe, read, and write about.

I hope this post helps someone or at least shows some new men that things can be better. I look forward to posting in the future with some of my recent essays I've written just for opinions and theories. Much Love MRP community, could've done it without you.
Our words make us weak or strong.

The words we choose, and how we deliver them, send a powerful message about our value and status. We need to train, strengthen, and calibrate all aspects of our lives, including our use of language. This isn't as straightforward as hitting the gym or reading a book, but like anything, it is a skill we can train.

This is nothing new. I compiled this from sidebar material, specifically NMMNG, MAP, RM, and WISNIFG. These works offer a more in-depth picture of what I list here, and those unfamiliar with them should start there. This is aimed at beginners like me who mostly understand STFU and are ready to explore the next level of linguistic strength.

For the autists who eat paint and don't understand nuance: Language is not black and white. Examples below describe general traits, but most have a valid counterexample. The key is contextual awareness. It's not just what you say, but how and when you say it. Also consider that most forms of weakness in language are matters of excess more than substance. For example: self-deprecation could be personal ownership gone too far, and an overly cocky attitude comes off as insecure.

WORDS OF WEAKNESS

DEER (Defend, Excuse, Explain, Rationalize)
Speaking with the assumption that you are under scrutiny or attack, and therefore need to take a defensive posture. Justifying your preferences or behavior to others as if they are in a position to judge you. Stating the obvious, or unnecessary rephrasing. Adding clauses to statements that begin with "because..." or "so I can..." Externalizing one's thought process for arriving at a decision.

- Why we do it: Wrongly assuming our identity, value, or approval comes from others.
- Why it's weak: Core RP philosophy states that we judge ourselves from our own mental point of origin. Our thoughts, desires, and actions warrant no explanation or defense. Our rationalizations belong to us.
- Examples:
  - "I want to go out to eat because I'm in the mood for Chinese."
  - "Let's buy this grill. It's less expensive than the other ones."
  - "I'm going for a drive so I can clear my head."

Chatty
Verbal bullshit. Speaking more than necessary to convey a specific idea.

- Why we do it: Trying to seem friendly, energetic, or fun, or out of fear of being misunderstood.
- Why it's weak: Comes across as desperate, annoying, or disrespectful. Dilutes the power of words. Actually increases confusion and likelihood of misunderstanding.

- Examples:
  - Talking about pointless shit to fill silence
  - Speaking over people
  - Finishing other peoples' sentences
  - Using 20 words when 5 will do

Disclosure
Freely offering personal info to anyone. Too open.

- Why we do it: Thinking it will make us accessible or interesting, or out of an unresolved need for sympathy or understanding
- Why it's weak: Comes across as desperate, needy, or overwhelming. Kills mystery, a core basis of attraction. Knowledge is power; divulging yourself to others gives them strength over you.
- Examples:
  - Talking about deeply personal stuff in casual conversation
  - Answering all personal questions directly and factually

Indecisiveness
Unable or unwilling to take a clear position, especially on a controversial topic. Unsure of one's own preferences or needs. Taking too long to decide. Deferring decisions to others.

- Why we do it: Genuine ignorance of one's own preferences or needs. False belief that decisiveness will alienate others, or that our needs or desires are not important.
- Why it's weak: Someone who doesn't understand them self is uninteresting and unattractive. Unsure people also come across as unpredictable and unsafe.
- Examples:
  - "kinda/sorta/maybe"
  - "I'm not sure..."
  - "whatever"
  - "I don't know, what do you think we should do?"

Hedging
Qualifying statements to soften their meaning or minimize risk.

- Why we do it: To seem friendly, non-threatening, or correct
- Why it's weak: Betrays a deeper insecurity of appearing unfriendly, threatening, or incorrect. Sounds pedantic which is unattractive. Weakens the force of statements by making them vague, conditional, or compromised.
- Examples:
  - "one of the most..."
  - Lots of "probably" statements
  - Lots of "like" and "sort of/kind of" statements

Insecurity
Seeking permission or approval from outside oneself.
Why we do it: Lacking internalized sense of value. Not our own mental point of origin.

Why it's weak: Depending on others for approval or validation is weak by definition.

Examples:
- Overly cocky attitude
- Fishing for compliments
- Starting sentences with "Can I just...?"
- Ending sentences with "right?" and "huh!"

Ownership of others
Mental point of origin depends on actions and thoughts of others. Attempt to control others through subtle manipulation.

Why we do it: If we depend on the relationship for personal stability, we take ownership of them trying to ensure our own safety.

Why it's weak: Depending on others for approval or validation is weak by definition. We have no ultimate control over others; attempting to is foolish.

Examples:
- Making baseless assumptions about the motives or perspective of others
- Excessive encouragement or compliments
- Speaking on someone else's behalf

Diminutive word choice
Using words that evoke weak or small imagery. Minimizing one's needs or wants by implying they are not significant.

Why we do it: Fear that if our needs or desires are too big or inconvenient, people will not meet them.

Why it's weak: Apart from the inherent weakness of dependence on others to meet our needs, it conveys a sense of weakness through associating one's speech (and by extension, one's identity) with small and weak things.

Examples:
- "...just a little..."
- "only..."
- "tiny bit"
- "real quick"

Emotional / feminine word choice
Phrasing things from an emotional, feelings-centered, feminine perspective.

Why we do it: For attention, or out of immaturity and ignorance.

Why it's weak: Emotions are fickle, and those driven by them have not mastered themselves. Anchoring your speech in feelings and emotions sends an unstable message. Since feelings are subjective, describing things in terms of feelings also makes it harder to discuss objective facts and reach agreements.

Examples:
- Starting sentences with "I feel like..."
- Excessive use of feminine vocabulary, e.g. "love", "beautiful", "cute"
- Excessive emojis
Emotional tone
Conveying excessive emotion through vocal tone.

- Why we do it: For attention, or out of immaturity and ignorance
- Why it's weak: Conveys lack of self-control
- Examples:
  - Using tone to convey strong moods
  - Speaking with excessive passion, disappointment, anger, or excitement

Weak tone
Conveying weakness through vocal tone.

- Why we do it: To appear less threatening or more likable
- Why it's weak: Conveys lack of confidence. Evokes childlike impressions.
- Examples:
  - Speaking too quietly
  - Speaking in a high-pitch register
  - Speaking from the nose/throat

Weak eye contact
Rarely or never making direct eye contact with the person you are speaking to.

- Why we do it: Insecurity, or wrongly assuming eye contact is threatening
- Why it's weak: Conveys insecurity. Makes it less likely that people will listen to and remember what you say.
- Examples:
  - Shifting eyes
  - Looking at the floor
  - Breaking eye contact before the conversation is over

Self-deprecation
Speaking of oneself in a negative tone.

- Why we do it: For attention, our out of a genuine lack of self-esteem (believing oneself is actually stupid, not just doing a stupid thing)
- Why it's weak: Lacking self-esteem and depending on others for approval is weak by definition
- Examples:
  - "omg I'm such a retard!"
  - "wow, I'm so stupid"
  - "what the fuck was I thinking?"

Apologizing
The opposite of excusing; taking on excessive blame. Similar to self-deprecation but directed at others.

- Why we do it: False assumption that if we do not take the blame for something, then people will withdraw their attention
- Why it's weak: Overly submissive or contrite attitudes are weak by nature
  - Examples:
    - "omg so sorry!"
    - "Please forgive me!"

WORDS OF STRENGTH

Brevity
Speaking as little as necessary to convey relevant information.

- Why it's strong: Avoids most of the pitfalls of weak speech by cutting them off directly. Words are less diluted, scattered, and pointless, therefore more concentrated, purposeful, and stronger.
  - Examples:
    - Speak as briefly as possible, then Shut The Fuck Up
    - Use 5 words when 5 will do
    - Use none wherever possible, especially early in MRP

Focus
Keeping conversation on point, dealing with one issue at a time. Avoid unnecessary tangents. Do not conflate separate issues.

- Why it's strong: Demonstrates both self-control, and control of the conversation. Distills meaning. More likely to arrive at a conclusion or agreement.
  - Examples:
    - "Let's get back on topic."
    - "Let's work this out before moving on to the next issue."
    - "Sounds like we are talking about two different things, let's handle them one at a time."

Reservation
Maintaining curiosity and mystery through restraint and selective disclosure.

- Why it's strong: Knowledge is power. Offer knowledge about yourself sparingly, and only for a return on investment. Also, mystery is a core aspect of attraction.
  - Examples:
    - Slowly revealing facts and details about oneself; not offering personal info freely
    - Being intentionally vague about one's intentions, motives, and perspectives without seeming closed off
    - Answering personal questions indirectly, with irony or exaggeration

Decisiveness
Taking a definitive stance, especially on controversial issues. Making decisions for oneself in a timely manner. Speaking with cadence; no filler words ("ah/um").

- Why it's strong: Conveys confidence and self-assurance. Reduces ambiguity and anxiety, thereby increasing a sense of safety.
  - Examples:
- "Yes" or "No"
- "I don't know, but I will find out."

Assertiveness

Stating needs and desires directly. Choosing words that are clear, specific, to the point. No bullshit.

- Why it's strong: Conveys confidence and self-assurance. Increases likelihood of getting what you want.
- Examples:
  - "I want to <...>"
  - "We should do <...>"
  - "I don't like that."
  - "Let's fuck."

Personal ownership

Directly taking ownership of one's behavior, without drawing unnecessary attention to it. Owning one's mistakes and making reasonable effort to correct them. Speaking truthfully.

- Why it's strong: Disarms the ego while preserving self-respect. Creates trust and preserves relationships with others. Maintains integrity without shame.
- Examples:
  - "Oh shit, my bad!"
  - "My fault, working on a solution."
  - "I was wrong. Here's what I'm doing to fix it."

Functional / masculine word choice

Phrasing things from a functional, practical, objective, action-oriented, masculine perspective.

- Why it's strong: Men are adapted to change the environment. Our body, psychology, and sexual essence are wired to see things in terms of obstacles to overcome and objectives to achieve. Aligning our speech to those principles strengthens it.
- Examples:
  - "Problem solved."
  - "Knocked that project out."
  - "I don't see how that will work."

Strong tone

Conveying strength through vocal tone.

- Why it's strong: Conveys confidence. Evokes solid, steady, and masculine impressions.
- Examples:
  - Speaking clearly
  - Speaking in lower register
  - Speaking from the core

Strong eye contact
Making direct eye contact to the person you're speaking to, but not in an overbearing or awkward way.

- Why it's strong: Conveys confidence, increases the likelihood of people listening to and remembering what you say.
- Examples:
  - Maintain eye contact for at least 80% of the conversation
  - Break eye contact for brief intervals during conversation to refresh your posture and not seem awkward

Humor
Elevate the tone of a conversation with humor. Serious only when the situation warrants.

- Why it's strong: Evokes trust and submission from others. Demonstrates competence, social awareness, subtlety, and command of the situation.
- Examples:
  - Irony - the opposite of what we expect
  - Exaggeration - describing things far beyond normal limits or expectations
  - Teasing - inviting others to have a sense of humor about themselves
  - Hubris - playfully cocky attitude

Controlled attitude
Tone and word choice do not convey excessive emotion, especially negative emotion.

- Why it's strong: Conveys confidence by demonstrating self-control and social awareness. Maintains mystery, a core basis of attraction.
- Examples:
  - Amused mastery
  - Attitude unaffected by circumstances; outcome independence
  - Alternate between stoic and playful attitudes, as situationally appropriate Two Years MRP: Sharing notes on the Big Picture.
by JDRoedell | December 18, 2017 | Link

It's been two years, almost to the day, since I first joined this magical place we call Married Redpill. I came in a skinny-fat, plugged-in guy, sort of a pussy and without much of an idea of what I wanted out of life, doing things like asking men here if I was being OI enough after another sexual rejection in my first ever post. I wasn't even at Dread Level Zero (don't be a pussy). I knew just enough to know things weren't right with my marriage and I wasn't happy with certain aspects. Are they perfect now? Absolutely not, but I'm still working my MAP, still tweaking my strategy and weighing the pros/cons of how far to go up those 12 levels of dread to fully center my mental point of origin. Are things better? Yes, they are greatly improved. I found this place like many others... fucking Googling some sorry-ass shit to the effect of, "why does my wife never want to have sex?" one night after my wife and I had yet another fight about sex and after she told me that she, "Just never gets horny, I don't know..." Ouch... that one hurt and was really the catalyst that made me want to find an answer to why... then to fix it, or get out. Little did I understand at the time these were just her words and I should mostly be paying attention to her actions (which at the time, were saying the same thing). It was my "Neo moment." Remember, men have to actually want to be unplugged. At first, I didn't realize that it wasn't just my marriage. I was also unsatisfied with myself. I didn't even realize I wasn't happy with myself. That took some extra introspection to come to the surface.

Where I've gone

Fast forward two years and things are different. I'm bigger (more muscular), stronger, assertive and happier. I continue to make small course corrections and adjustments for myself and to my strategy. Sex frequency and quality is improved but still not fully where I'd like. But I'm not done tweaking my strategy either and I know my wife... she's stubborn and slow to respond to environmental changes and if I'm being honest, has tendencies that make me think she has some self esteem and anxiety problems (Practical Guide to Female Psychology). I will help her to the degree I can by being the Oak, but to a large degree realize these devils are hers to conquer. I still make mistakes.

Did my wife turn into a full on nympho? Nope, not yet, but I've opened doors in that department that were not open before. I also have accepted that she may not have “full on nympho” inside her, but progress with sex is still being made. A few weeks ago while we were fucking she actually grabbed my wrist and put my hand up around her neck area. She's still not a full-fledged refined sex kitten, but that only makes me look inward and ask what I could be doing better to bring that out. Like lifting, your gains in your MRP strategy will slow the longer you’re here. My one year post

Sharing Notes

I've had a few incomplete drafts of post ideas kicking around on my Evernote app for a while. I figured now would be a good time to share that mishmash of notes I have. Men sharing notes on sexual strategy and mission and yes, maybe a little self masturb.... I mean improvement.

These are mainly summaries of these key ideas and actions I've taken that were important to my plan. Maybe it's important to you, maybe not. These are just my notes on my own experiences and strategy. You can discount, adopt, tweak, mock... doesn't matter to me. Every man here has a different road.

You can't optimize your strategy without stirring the pot

Don't just read the sidebar, stand up for yourself a little more and expect your life to turn around, and more specifically, your wife to start fucking you with abandon. It doesn't work that way. If you're here, chances are your life is in need of some fundamental, base-level changes. Call it self improvement (sorry, Stone), call it SMV growth, call it whatever. Mostly this is basic "adulting" and being a successful human. This shouldn't even really have to be taught here but it is. After all we have a whole “sphere” to teach men how to be men which shouldn’t be necessary but is. Dread Level Zero is "Don't be a Pussy." Have you stopped being a pussy? Good. In addition to that, a fundamental, ground-level re-thinking of your sexual strategy at large is probably in order, but that can't happen until you're a functioning, competent, assertive man. Remember, MRP is Redpill on hard mode, we need sexual strategy even more than the single guy. Stir the pot. This means changing behaviors, expectations (your own) and goals;

Change how you prioritize your time. Be a little more selfish and start setting goals YOU want and enjoy activities YOU like. Do them by yourself or do them with your family when it makes sense, but DOthem.

Change how you view your needs and desires Don't be afraid to make them known. Don't be shamed for these needs, especially sexual needs.

Change how readily you give up your time and attention, not only to your wife but to anyone in your life.

The first couple times I went out on my own at night after being turned down I got texts wondering what I was doing, little meme's telling me she loves me (even though she couldn't be bothered to put down her smart phone and fuck me 10 minutes earlier) and stuff like that. I'd go practice with the band, go for a walk, hit a local bar to watch open mic night, go to café to read or go for a run or bike ride if it's still light out. I'd NEVER ask. I'd just do. Slowly it just became my normal operating mode and she became less inquisitive of my activity. Don't ever suggest with your demeanor or words that your wife has any say in how you choose to spend your time (Remember Dread level Zero?). Take care of your home duties and childcare, be an adult, but beyond that, you answer only to you.

The other way you should eventually be stirring the pot is refusing shit sexual effort. I've aborted everywhere from my initiation to actually being balls deep inside. If I'm not getting a satisfactory level of investment from her, I'm out (literally). The first few times I did this she went absolutely hysterical on me. It was a great test in frame. One time it resulted in one of the most passionate "angry sex" sessions we've had as I discovered she was actually DTF that night but for whatever reason thought she didn't have to put in any effort. I crushed that belief by taking my hard-on and walking away. You have to start showing through actions, and occasionally verbally, that you do have standards and you aren't the type of man who will tolerate low effort in the bedroom, or anywhere else for that matter. Not every session is going to be porn-star level, but she should at least be showing a reasonable level of good old fashion passion. Me? I don't need sex-swings, anal, ball-gags and gimp suits to enjoy sex. That's just me. You do you.

If she's not competing for your time you're not MRPing right.

This is an idea I stole from /u/GargantuaBlarg29 and want to explore, mostly because it's one thing I'm probably still not doing well enough (as I said, I'm still making course corrections two years in). How available are you making yourself to your wife, or again, anyone in your life? It's ok to be available emotionally and physically, but make sure you aren't giving it away for free and FFS don't smother her with your presence. This does not mean 24/7 or every night of the week you are out "hobbying," hanging with the boys or learning Falconry and how to be a ninja. The balance of "keeping busy and pursuing your mission" is different for every man. HOW you choose to make yourself your mental point of origin is also different for every man. Find that appropriate balance. It takes time. Just a few weeks ago I was telling someone about my day practicing with my band and then going to see a movie with friends. They said, "well, sounds like a day all about you." I smiled, laughed a little and said, "you bet."

Being a Good Captain

This is a big one. And it's a concept that gets misinterpreted a lot and has received a lot of attention and debate lately. We could of course delve into what makes a good leader/Captain and why. I'm not looking to do that here, I'm just looking to share my frame of leadership and how I view it. I've found that these two ideas to be key;

1. Follow your passion, your goals and your interests first. Period. Everything else, including your marriage will follow in the wake you create in that effort to live life for you. Everything... your wife, your kids, your friends, your employees, your dog, etc.

The second thing is more in the weeds but some guys need to hear it...

2. Know the difference between Strategic vs tactical leadership. I think I stole this from SorcererKing or one of the other original gangsters here but can’t find the post now. The captain of a family should be focused on the strategic issues. I like to think of this in terms of striving to take care of the larger strategic things (finances, house repairs, automotive issues, big vacations, the long-term vision for our family, etc) while she handles the smaller, tactical jobs (getting kids to school, laundry, making dinner, etc). The stress I take off of her by handling the large, strategic issues far outweighs the minuscule benefit, in her eyes, of me cleaning the bathroom. Now, be capable of cleaning, doing dishes or making dinner when necessary but don't lose focus of the larger issues. Be capable of doing ALL of that shit on your own, and make sure she knows you are capable of basic adulting. Make the big decisions. Is your wife babying you? Then you aren't doing this even close to correctly.
A good leader does not get bogged down in minutiae or in micro-managing his First Officer. He has faith in his FO because he's set a good example, has his focus on the long-term, big issues and she has followed his lead. In my case, my wife is already a pretty fiscally and logistically responsible woman but she even overtly communicated to me after I took over the budget that she feels more relaxed if I'm handling the finances from a macro-level. Don't forget to reinforce and appreciate your wife when she is being a good FO. Me leading and removing the emotional burdens of the "big scary things" allows her to do her part even better. We aren't equal, but complimentary.

"Riding with the Devil" - You can never relax and are never "done."

"So that's all well and good JDRoedell, but where are you with your mission now? Are you happy? Is your dick getting sucked daily?"

Well, much like the fate of the main character at the conclusion of the film "Ride With the Devil," Jake Roedell, (and inspiration for my handle), my mission goes on. Young Jake started out timid, moldable, angry and without much frame. By the end of the film he is battle-hardened, independent and has a mission (get out of Missouri without the Federal troops capturing and surely hanging him). How's that for a specific, action-driving mission statement? This is a highly underrated movie for anyone into historical films, by the way. The movie revolves around the guerrilla warfare happening on the Missouri-Kansas border during the civil war. One of the things I love about this film is it doesn't have the classic, “good guy defeats bad guy” ending. It essentially ends with a lot of questions and the protagonist’s future being uncertain, just like real life and like MRP. By the end, Jake is by no means a complete man, nor is he without further challenges facing him. It's a good analogy for even some of the more veteran MRP men here.

My point is, this process is never "done." Even if you reach a point where you make the decision that your wife is an impediment, not a compliment, to making yourself your mental point of origin, you still can't let off the gas. Even after a decision like divorce, you are not technically at any kind of real or imagined finish line. /u/FireTempered helped me come to this thought process recently. You are always adjusting, tweaking and finding new ways to pursue your goals and mission. Those devils are always with you.

MeRP on, men.
I could have done this without using this method and vehicle outlined here but when I did, it helped reshape my mental models. I'm a Chevy guy (God I love southern women - and she looks strikingly similar to my woman). Maybe you've been driving a shitty Ford and want to take my Chevy for a test ride. Cool, maybe you'll like it. If you like it enough - keep it.

In a recent OYS, /u/Balls_Wellington wrote:

Now that the sex frequency and quality is up, I'm forced to confront another issue: I'm not reliably giving my wife orgasms during sex. I last decently long so I don't think it is a mechanical issue (or at least not entirely). My dick isn't anything special but I am dead on average so that isn't the issue either.

The obvious answer is that I am in my own head here. I've pretty much fixed my validation seeking when it comes to the availability of sex, but once I'm doing the deed I crave the validation of making her cum. I can feel this kill the vibe just as reliably as attempting to bargain for duty sex.

However, this is also something I want to figure out for more reasons than just my own validation. When she’s a good girl and does exactly what I want, she deserves a reward and it sucks to have trouble giving her that. She's been giving me shit about the rareness of her orgasms as well, which I actually take as a good sign: she never cared before because sex was a chore.

I too experienced this same phenomenon through my journey. My wife would only cum 20% of the time and only from oral. I went through a few phases of mental models (in this order):

1. I wanted my wife to cum because it meant I was good in bed (covert contract, good lover validation).
2. I wanted my wife to cum because I thought she would enjoy sex more (covert contract).
3. I wanted my wife to cum because I thought if she enjoyed sex, she would want it more often (convert contract).
4. I wanted my wife to cum because I thought she liked sex now and was attracted to me (attraction validation).
5. I wanted my wife to cum because I wanted to reward her for being a good girl (not necessarily bad in this post's context - but can be a wrong approach).

In my post linked above, the advice I was given by other MRPers was to up the dominance, introduce different toys, maybe porn... spice things up. You can see some of my early ego in that post ("I know how to make my wife cum and make her cum hard") which was quickly read through as bullshit by /u/Cam_Winston21 – he pointed out that I could only make my wife cum one way... from oral, and it was a lot of work. It was boring. I was boring.

I took the advice of the people there and did spice things up, using variety (DEVI concepts - SGM on the sidebar - out of print but available here in the RP mega book collection) - but I was left with somewhat of the same results. She never came during sex. I could get her off from oral using clitoral stimulation. Vaginal was 100% out of the question. It was difficult and a lot of work. I was a one trick pony and secretly she despised my lack of imagination and skills, and read through my validation desire to have her cum.

It ruined everything.

There were some very, very serious mental blocks. I knew that in order to create better sex I had to destroy the shitty mental model that both of us had crafted and replace it with new ones. Even the mental model of "don't care if she cums it's her responsibility" didn't work - because she didn't know how to cum. I had trained her so very, very badly from years of shitty sex. This would take a very long time.

I wanted to create my own slut.

Here's what I did:

First, it's worth mentioning some things:

1. I began playing with this idea about a month before my main event and our formal D/s relationship in rare sessions to introduce it.
2. This method may have had a large part of leading to the D/s dynamic as it does introduce some very heavy mental aspects of submission.
3. I was one of those men that used to say, "Yeah, my wife just isn't into that kind of stuff".
4. This is now a 100% permanent fixture in our dynamic.

I began experimenting with orgasm control (there is a very good series here). I did not let her cum. In fact I forbid it. I told her during sex that she was not allowed to cum. I told her this daily. She was forbidden to masturbate. This allowed her to feel used and abused, making it a forbidden thing for her to cum. It's some weird reverse psychology shit for women. It also released all the pressure of her being inside her own head of trying to cum to shockingly please me (thanks Mr. Good Lover Validation). There were a lot of fucked up mental models on both sides and taking her orgasms away completely seemed to break her (and me) of these models and replace them with another one.

I started with the magic wand (corded version - moar power), which is super fucking intense for any woman. I would just shut it off mid session while talking dirty to her the whole time and telling her "Don't you dare fucking cum unless I tell you to, you little slut." or things like "You will only cum when I tell you to from now on. I own this little body of yours."

I never let her cum. If she wanted to cum, I would make her beg for it. Beg. Sometimes she would beg in a manic angry and crazy way - nearly in tears at times. I would still say no. After a few weeks of this I would maybe let her cum 10% of the time but only after the most intense begging.
About a month of that and then I would do things like count her down from 10, but stop at 1 and end the session. Just crazy shit like that blue balling the fuck out of her, until she understood that orgasm was not the goal. Pleasure was the goal. But orgasm was a reward. Which is what I was trying to get to mentally.

After that I would only let her cum when I came. She'd rub herself while she blew me or I gave her a facial. When I came I would command her to cum. She did almost every time. If she failed to cum when she had begged for it - or on command, I would blue-ball her the next night as punishment since I was unhappy that she had not accepted my gracious reward quickly. This associated my pleasure with her pleasure. Did that for a month or so.

Sometimes I’d randomly tell her to go to the bedroom and touch herself but not cum so her pussy was tighter for me that night. Other times I’d get just to edge of cumming myself and then just stop - but have her thinking the whole time she wasn’t going to get to orgasm too since I was. Save it for later. Just random shit at random times.

After that I wouldn’t let her cum for weeks. I’d make her tell me how many days it’s been since she got to cum each night. The longest she went was 18 days. She'd grind her little pussy on my leg at night like a little teenage girl dry humping her boyfriend, begging me to let her cum - trying to get me to cum so she could cum - all kinds of crazy tricks. Random blowjobs, all kinds of shit. I would occasionally reward her for doing something really naughty. On the 19th day I let her cum because she did something exceptionally dirty.

I created a model where I consistently pushed her to her orgasm edge and would create a rollercoaster. I would push further and further each time creating a more diverse scale of pleasure - training her to dial it up and down that scale that grew larger in each session. I used the word “harder” to command her dial it up. I used the word “no” to have her dial it down. I would say the phrase “right there you little slut” or "good girl" to make her maintain herself there on the scale.

As she learned to control her own body and made it her responsibility - dialing up, dialing down, or maintaining, I would reward her with an orgasm for doing as I pleased.

Basically, I've been working this entire time to fuck her mind.

It took a good 3-4 months to change the mental models for both me and her and to remove all blocks to learn that experiencing great pleasure was the goal. Looking back now I didn't know it then, but I taught both of us that orgasm was the explosion of that already existing and constant pleasure.... and was always in my frame.

How the sidebar (TWOTSM) led me to this:

Towards the end Deida begins to talk about some fucked up shit and withholding ejaculation as a form of power. I gave an easy version explanation of that here.

I began by withholding my own ejaculation to understand this energy and power. You want to know what makes a woman go batshit crazy from a high value man? Don't cum. Serious. Just try it and calibrate. I can't explain it until you do it.
Withholding your own orgasm because you want to and have abundance that another sexual session is anytime you want it creates new mental models for you to adopt. It is abundance, not a scarcity mentality, and she feelz through that too.

Fair question - when was the last time you just had sex without ejaculating? Just for fun? Just to fuck her? And gift her your cock? (think about that mental model for a bit)

I then moved from that to me controlling her orgasms, yes. I had to learn to control myself first and strip her of that power. She knew I had control of the most primal part of my being as a man and that flipped some major shit with her hamster - or she thought I was getting my balls drained elsewhere - until I did cum and my god.... she learned to love facials. I was blowing loads like never before.

Fuck their feelz and minds and they'll mindfuck themselves to orgasm.

Why did this work for me?

Orgasm control/denial/play was just a vehicle for me to learn how to drive down the road of sexual power exchange. We say it here all the time: Men control commitment, women control the sex. Then we tell men here to play these power games of dread and manipulative nice guy ass-fuckery to get laid (at first – until they stop faking it and actually make it - or they don't and LARP themselves to divorce).

Fuck that.

I control both the commitment and the sex. Especially when she initiates. Her job is to manage the relationship.

My wife came into my office a few days ago and said, "Hey honey. Can I bother you for a minute?" I was slightly busy and annoyed. But as I look up she just drops to her knees and says, "I just need you cock in my mouth for a few minutes, please?" - I know she's doing this because she likes playing this power game too (always aware she's actually in my frame) and is trying to be such a good slutty girl because she wants to cum tonight. Maybe she will, maybe she won't. I just go with the flow.

But you bet she'll be begging to cum.

Where am I Now?

I've spent a lot of time training her to do the following:

- She has an orgasm if I put my finger in her for more than 15 seconds.
- She has an orgasm if a tiny bit of cum hits her lips.
- She has an orgasm if I tell her to. Anytime. Clitoral. Vaginal. Currently working on Anal.
- Orgasm on command through non-verbal cues (touch her collar a certain way).
- She learned to squirt. On the 19th day of orgasm denial, she squirted for the first time ever in her life. Now she regularly does so after learning to control her body.
- She still grinds my leg every night like a little teenage girl dry humping her boyfriend in
The final reward for her is orgasm on command with no stimulation. I think it’s hot as fuck that soon I’ll just be able to look at her and whisper in her ear.... "magic words"..... and she will cum. Anywhere, anytime. I've been working on that for about 8 months now. Still about a year away.

Strength, motherfuckers.
Here are a few random notes about what I've learned in my first six months of MRP with in case they are helpful to anyone who's recently started, apologies for the length:

1. The changes I originally wanted are taking longer than I thought they would.

A. This is frustrating. But at the same time, many unexpected rewards accrued along the way. So MRP was immediately rewarding, even if not in the way I expected (or initially wanted).

B. Still, even though I have a long way to go, I feel so much better about myself, and have noticed that I have an easier time dealing with all kinds of problems not just those in my marriage. Especially conflicts with other people; I'm finding my stronger frame is an effective tool or even a useful weapon (my career involves a lot of conflict). For example, I recently told an opponent that I thought his conduct was disappointing and I had expected more from him. I did this without feeling the least bit anxious, it all just felt pretty matter of fact. He DEERed.

C. My kids talk all the time now about how strong I am, feel my biceps, brag to their friends, make me do stuff (lots of pushups, using my straight arm as a chinup bar, etc). This feels great and what a difference in the kind of example I'm setting from six months ago when I was a fat dad-bod slob who looked disgusting with his shirt tucked in. Had I known only six months could make this difference I would have started a long time ago.

D. Last night my wife told one of the kids to eat his veggies so "you can get strong like Daddy." Together 20 years, never heard anything like that before.

E. Replacing my wardrobe with new better fitting fashionable stuff has been a tremendous amount of fun and feels great. Much better than what I used to have, which was a love-hate relationship with clothes.

2. When I started I just wanted more sexual access in my marriage, but what I want has been changing along with other changes. Some examples:

A. Now I'm studying bodybuilding and am fascinated. I have all kinds of bodybuilding goals; never in my prior non-athletic life did I ever think of myself in these terms. For just one example, I'm practicing to be able to free handstand.

B. As part of my MAP, I've recently begun really, seriously, asking myself "what do I want?" This is leading to a wholesale change in my goals list, the vast majority of which--if not all--has nothing at all to do with my relationship.

3. Unlike ever other self-improvement "program" I've ever tried, I have stuck with MRP over a long term. I believe that this is due to the fact that MRP clearly works and is demonstrably rewarding.

4. Re-reading the sidebar materials after being away from them for a few months is providing new benefits and insights. For example:

A. I recently re-read the practical portions of WISNIFG and understand the tools like "negative inquiry" and more importantly when to use them relative to each other.

B. I recently re-listened to MM on audio. The section on kino in particular really made an impact on me and I'm now trying to kino someone new every day as well as my wife. I realized that I was thinking of kino as either sexual or sexually suggestive but the re-listen showed me I was screwing up by overlooking strictly non-sexual touch (e.g. holding hands, arm around shoulder, etc).

C. When I read the sidebar materials for the first time, I lacked (a) the vocabulary and (b) real life practice. Now that I understand the "language" better and have actually tried to implement things in the field, re-reading the original instructions is almost as eye-opening as reading them for the first time, and it seems to me, maybe even more helpful on a practical level and less theoretical.

5. Working through the MAP takes time because it is stepwise, that is, I had to master earlier concepts through practice before I was ready for subsequent concepts.

A. One example is teasing, which turns out to be a critical and highly entertaining skill. I really couldn't begin teasing my wife effectively until I was truly OI. Before that I was just too afraid of making her mad to tease her about anything.

6. Frame takes time and effort to develop.

A. There were times when developing my frame seemed hopeless and I was very frustrated. I understood the idea from a rational perspective but internally I had no frame of my own to even "get in" (whatever that meant). I never had a frame and didn't even know what it felt like. There was only her frame. I had nothing to grab on to if that makes sense. So, I kept screwing up and proving I was still in her frame. But I kept picking myself up and trying to get my own frame built and installed.

B. In hindsight, my own frame grew very fast in a relative sense. It took me about four months to get to something like a solid frame. This now seems like a trivial amount of time in light of what I now realize is a sea change in my entire outlook on life.

C. Now, for example, during a recent power struggle with my wife, she fitness tested me at a new level, basically directly insulting me several times during the conversation ("why don't you be a man and [do what she wants]" etc.). It didn't phase me at all. I never felt like taking the bait, it didn't hurt my feelings, and eventually I told her without rancor that the conversation was over because it was unproductive. Sexy times followed. Go figure.

7. Random IOI's get more obvious and fun as I go along. A couple examples:
A. In a recent large exercise class, the coach unexpectedly told us to pair up. I immediately and effortlessly approached and paired with the best looking girl in the class (a total stranger, HB8). I kino'd her, chatted her up, and teased her about her unusual name. Didn't try to close (not my thing). Just after the class we randomly bumped into each other in a nearby grocery, I was in a hurry so I just said hi and moved on. Later I caught her pretending to look through a nearby basket of leftover Easter candy so she could see me while I was checking out. Sweet. :)

B. Lately women have been approaching me and engaging me in conversations, making jokes, etc. None that I'd have any SMV interest in yet but it is a new development and interesting.

8. The power struggles with my wife are getting bigger.

A. I think the "size" of the struggles is relative to my capacity to hold frame and deal with them. Kind of like beating a level in a video game and going on to a harder level. (According to MRP conventional thinking I'm on a 15-month program due to the length of the marriage.)

B. I can now see that if the cycles continue we will hit a "main event" and I feel ready for it, where only a few months ago I would definitely not have handled it well.

9. You literally cannot take anything your wife says about her feelz or your relationship seriously.

A. In the last six months she has told me: (a) she "hates me" (b) she wants a divorce (c) we should separate (d) I am a narcissistic asshole and (e) she can't stand the thought of me ever touching her. Even just three nights ago she presented me with a "list" of things on her phone that she demanded I apologize for before she would give me any more affection, and I flat refused--stalemate.

B. Yet last night she was flirting with me about using "that" body oil the scent of which gets a pavlovian response out of me, and two nights ago I was getting a spontaneous bj and some sweet lingerie sexy time where she set up candles and romantic music in the bedroom to surprise me. Nothing changed between three nights ago and two nights ago...

I don't know what the attrition rate is for newbies to MRP but from my experience I recommend sticking to it like glue. Most important from my experience is that it didn't take long before some benefits started coming through, even if the main sexual access problem wasn't solved yet. And for me, the ancillary benefits may be as significant--if not more so--than the problem I originally came here to fix. Peace.
Year 1 Complete
by OYS-Man | June 19, 2020 | Link

Hello.

I have been following this sub for over a year and a half now and this will be my first & only post that I share on here with all of you. I discovered this sub like most of the guys that I have seen post here and on the /r/askmrp subreddit. Instead of putting together some douchey intro post around “getting started”, I decided to STFU, hit the sidebar, make a plan, and stay on my mission and make sure not deviate. Enjoy.

Background:

Around this time last year, I just turned 30 years old. I was killing it in my career (making good money & liking what I do), bought my first place in the area of my city I always wanted, and I was ticking off some more travel places on my bucket list. I also ended up promoting my SO [25F] from the dating phase (plate) of over a year in a half [1 year and 7 months] to the relationship phase. The one that was not only around the longest out of all the women I was seeing, but it also hit me that I enjoyed being around more than most women I dated/plated. By January of 2019, she ended up moving into my place after being with her for around 8 or so months in the relationship phase. Things were going great, right?

Wrong. Just over a year ago when everything from the outside seemed to be going great for me, it hit me that things were not on point. I was bullshitting myself (AKA no mission). I noticed that I was making other things and people around me come first over the last couple of years, compared to where I was in my early and mid-twenties where I had the mentality and attitude to kill it around everything I was doing (i.e. lifting heavy, hobbies, career, personal growth, etc.). I was going through the emotions of everything in my life and not putting myself first, which I noticed was affecting my personal life, my relationship with my SO (different and not where it was), my career, and other areas of my life. This had to change.

Field Report

June 2019: Start Over

- It’s time to get to work. I put together a MAP, a mission, and started journaling. In addition, I upped my workout regime from 2/3 days a week, back up to what I was doing in my early/mid-twenties — 6 days a week. I have always had a home gym, but I decided to invest in some new equipment (i.e. Olympic plates, etc.) and figure out where I want to be (month to month goals, six months, one-year goal) [start: 6’1 & 199lbs, slim build]. I picked up NMMNG (again) and re-read the book for the first time in July 2019: STFU

- After a full month of working out (lifting heavy) 6 days a week, I’m starting to feel more rejuvenated compared to my usually 2/3 day a week BS workouts I was doing prior. Something that started to leak in with my relationship after my SO moved in with me was that I slowly caught myself bending the knee and not making myself a priority (Betatization Of 1000 Concessions). This included two major things I noticed myself slipping up on ever since she moved in - not STFUing and not DEERing. My SO threw a couple of shit tests at me, which one of them I didn’t pass. I owned my shit on it and picked up WISNIFG and went through it thoroughly.

August 2019: Cleaning Up My Diet

- Something that I was always good at since I was in my teens was eating healthy food and putting together homemade meals. When I bumped my SO up to the relationship phase; including, once we started to live together, I let my healthy diet slip from time to time. I got in the habit of picking up pizza, ordering in food from our favourite places, and just making food that wasn’t the healthiest. This was an area big on my MAP, which was to eat healthy food on a consistent basis. No more ordering in food, picking up frozen pizza’s from the store late on a Friday night for a snack — none of it. I start meal prepping on a consistent basis like I used to do back in my university days. Even though I work from home, I decided to be more deliberate around meal planning; rather, then just ‘going on the fly’. More proteins and veggies, less empty calories, and loading up on carbs. I found myself slimming down stubborn body fat and gaining more muscle with my consistent workout and diet routine after around 12 weeks (down to around 189lbs). I read through all three of Rollo’s books (books 1 & 2 I decided to re-read again — great reminders there), which included his 3rd book which I never thought of reading when it originally came out.

September 2019: Community Involvement

- One of the commitments I made to myself when I put together my MAP was to be more involved in my community since I had many other business owners, entrepreneurs, and acquaintances of mine invited me to join different NP organizations. There was always one local organization that I wanted to join, but I always made ‘excuses’ on why I couldn’t apply to join or be a part of it. My grandfather was a part of a men’s club (filled with entrepreneurs, business guys, etc.) in my city that is involved in a variety of community functions. Their club has a gala hall and hosts many events throughout the year (i.e. Christmas parties). I ended up applying and got voted in by the board. I took on a role to be one of their bartenders for events. I’m meeting new and interesting men that are much older than me (I’m one of the youngest), some of which have become mentors to me today. There is a special kind of feeling when you are involved with a group (or something along those lines) that has a vision that’s greater than your own. My MAP and mission are slowly starting to take place. I end of the month with reading ‘The Way of the Superior Man’ by David Deida (excellent read and a wake-up call).
October 2019: SO Notices Changes...

- By the end of October, I can tell that my SO senses that I have (somewhat) become that man that was seeing her (dating phase) for the year in a half prior to me bumping her to relationship status and moving in with me. The shit tests increase, but now I’m starting to see them coming in slow-mo. There was one time that I was close to buckling, but I kept telling myself to STFU and do not DEER (in my head). There was a major conversation that came up which I did not stray and held frame with her on. My SO is half Brazilian and half Mexican and her family (parents & two sisters) are from just outside Mexico City. She mentioned to me they wanted to come up for the holidays (Christmas/New Years) and she asked if they could stay with us. The only problem I have is that they are a family of 4 and I only have 3 rooms in my place (MB, my office, and spare room). I explain to her that they would not be enough room for all four of them to stay in my place. They would either have to rent an Airbnb or a hotel room for all four of them or else two could stay with us and the other two would have to get their own place. She didn’t like my answer to her question and tried to start an argument over the situation. I held frame and didn’t DEER. She made it clear that she wasn’t happy with me and stomped off. Yawn, okay... Weirdly enough, she initiates sex with me later that evening, followed by 7 more times the rest of the week... A week later she tells me that her family will be renting an Airbnb when they come up for the holiday and she mentions that her mom thought my idea of renting an Airbnb was a ‘great idea’.

November 2019: Building Up Abundance

- Ever since I joined my men's community club in my city, I found myself bartending for events almost every weekend. I was getting out there more and becoming more social with strangers. For my career (business consultant) socializing with people has never been an issue, but I found myself learning to be social with strangers in different settings. I’m teaching myself how to mix exciting drinks and new shots to share with people that come to the bar looking for something ‘fun’ or ‘different’ to drink. Some of them I offer come off as a big hit (i.e. the gladiators I make). I’m also noticing that I’m getting compliments from people on how I look (my style mixed with lifting). One of my favourite things around bartending these events is having all of this understanding around SMV, the sexual marketplace, and the dating marketplace and seeing it unfold in front of your eyes. One of the Christmas party gala’s I bartended near the end of the month left a few women that were hanging around me until the end of the night. I’m having fun with them, flirting, talking shit — a good time. One of the women I have been chatting too, let’s call her “Lindsey” (HB8, blonde) slips me a piece of paper as she leaves for the evening. I open it up and it’s her full name and her phone number with a heart on it. She even wrote below her number; “call me sexy;)”. That was one of many interactions I had which really made me appreciate the aspect of developing an ‘abundance mentality’. I end the month off by reading Robert Greene’s book, ‘The 48 Laws of Power’.

December 2019: Entrepreneurs In Cars

- Early in the month, I discover Richard Coopers YouTube channel, ‘Entrepreneurs In Cars’, which leads me to spend a solid week digesting all of his content. A lot of his videos were excellent and brought up some valid points to keep in mind (RE Videos: ‘Don’t Put Her Up On A Pedestal’, ‘She’s Not Yours, It’s Just Your Turn’, ‘Women Should Complement a Mans Life, Not Be The Focus’, ‘Daddy Issues, The Unlucky & She Competes With You - 3 Red Flags To Avoid in Women’, etc.). Rich’s phrase: “Chase Excellence, Not Women”, really did resonate with me. It made me think a lot about what Rollo & Rian Stone talk about — outcome independence. This is an area that I’m struggling with a bit, but I’m really trying to work on it. My SOs family come up from Mexico for the holidays. There stay went way better than I expected and I had a lot of fun with them. I took the lead in one of the evenings at my place and made dinner for my SOs family. I didn’t ask or tell my girl to help me, I just lead. Guess what? She followed me and helped me put together a wonderful dinner for her family. To think that if this dinner happened a year prior, it would have definitely been a shit show with me bending the knee and becoming less so she could become more. Always take the lead. I finish up reading Daniel Rose’s book, ‘The Sex God Method’ over the holidays.

January 2020: A New Year

- My consistency around my diet and lifting heavy is paying off. By the new year I’m leaning out really well (tall and slim anyway), but I love that all of the constant work I’m putting in is showing off in spades. I’m noticing the positives of what happens when you develop healthy routines in your life and stick with them for a long period of time. I find myself having fairly full weeks that consist of me doing other things than work and hanging out with the SO. One of those things I’m doing is connecting with my few close friends that I haven’t spoken with for a long time but still chat with from time to time. It’s always refreshing to get together with close friends and family members that you don’t see very often. I always find myself leaving those meetings or conversations with more knowledge than walking in with. Keeping high-quality people around your life is key to your success. It’s important to put time and effort into the relationships with people that YOU want in your life and that you want to be around (that takes work, don’t bitch about it — do it!).

February 2020: Holding Frame

- I find out that I have to go away for meetings/client work for the second week of February. I make sure I book myself a hotel that has a kitchenette in my room and a (half-decent) gym for me to take advantage of. The evening I arrive at the city, I check into my hotel room, put my stuff away, head off to the store nearby to make food (for the week), hit the hotel gym, and hit the hay. The week away with one of my clients goes really well. He’s happy with the work I’m putting in and even wants to recommend me to one of his business partners for more work if I’m interested. It hits me that all of the stuff I have been learning not only has been improving my personal life and interaction with my SO, but my career has been benefiting from it as well. It hit me that I was saying ‘no’ more to projects and things that came my way I didn’t want part of or wasn’t interested in. I come back home at the end of the week on a Friday evening. When I return home, my SO is strangely acting cold and distant towards me. She doesn’t say much at all. I go into my office to unpack and put away a few things and she comes in a few minutes later. She told me that she was cleaning the place yesterday and she saw something on my desk. She pulled out a piece of paper and opened it. Well, it was the piece of paper with “Lindsey’s” phone number and signature. She asked me who this was. I didn’t DEER. Instead, I played with her. “Oh, that? Yeah, that was one of my hired escorts from the other week!”. She rolled her eyes and preceded to try and make a stir. I held frame and said that a woman gave that to me when I was bartending one of the nights at my NP. My SO was surprised. She asked; “Have you got many of these before?”. All I responded with was; “Well, it’s one of many I have received…” (which is true). I STFUed, went to work out, showered, and got ready for bed. I was surprised with head as soon I got to bed, followed by wild monkey sex hanging from the chandelier. Wait, what…?

March 2020: Happy Birthday COVID!

- March is my birthday month and I turned 31. My birthday is in the first week of the month and my SO surprised me all day long. It was a real treat. I noticed that my SO put in way more effort for my birthday compared to last year - literally. I woke up to morning sex, followed by her making me breakfast and dinner. That didn’t happen last year... Anyway, we get hit with COVID by the third week of the month in our area and we are in lockdown. My SO is now working at home with me. This is new. Both of us are in the same place for a solid couple of weeks, other than one of us going out for groceries. A couple of days there was some tension of being locked up together. I just kept telling myself to STFU whenever any BS would come up. Holding frame can be tough; especially, when you are in a situation where you are in lockdown together. I dialed in my workouts, even more, throwing in some extra cardio on the stationary bike I bought back in December. I finally sit down and read ‘The Way of Men’ by Jack Donovan and get my ass kicked on some very good points he brings up in that book.

April 2020: Getting Through This...

- For the entire month, we have been in lockdown in my area and things are fairly status quo. I’m getting through the grind the best I can. A couple of my larger client projects are put on hold, which means some of my income is down for the time being. I decided to spend some more time on a side hustle that I started working on back in November. I’m selling some online graphic designs to a couple of websites and collecting some extra cash on products purchased and ‘likes’ on my designs. With some of the extra time I was given because of some of my work being put on hold, it allowed me to dig deep on this side hustle and bring in some extra cash. My SO and I have a bit of an argument/disagreement over something stupid (cabin fever) and I caved. I make sure to OYS, learn from it, and move forward. I finally picked up a copy of ‘Tactical Guide To Women’ by Dr. Shawn T. Smith after hearing Rich Cooper recommended his book in many of his videos. I was really enlightened with all of the linked research that Dr. Smith shared in that book around the different phases (dating phase, relationship phase, engagement phase, and marriage) and how to let women “earn” the next step. I know this book isn’t on the sidebar, but I highly suggest every guy here should read this book.
May 2020: An Awakening

- By the beginning of the month, my city announces that more places in and around the area will be opening up. This is good news for me. Not to mention that my area is getting beautiful weather (sunny days & mild temperatures). I force myself to get out more and go for walks in some of the parks near where I live. The SO joins me on some of these walks. During a walk on a Saturday morning around one of these nice trails near my place, it hits me. As I have been putting in so much effort into improving my life up to this point that whatever happens between me and my SO, my career, my life — whatever. It is what it is. I no longer feel the need for approval from my SO, the approval of others, or whatever other BS stories I have told myself in recent times. Developing and working on the framework to my life and where I want to go becomes more evident and is staring me in the face. Whatever happens, happens. I am on my mission, on my path, and living MY life. I purchase Rian Stone’s book ‘FUCCFILES: Lessons from a decade of women’ and fall in love with the read. There are many areas of his book where I can look at and see where he comes from on it (i.e. I have lived a certain situation). I also end up recommending some of the books I have read to a couple of close friends I have that are at a crossroads in their life and their relationships. It feels good to give support to your close friends that are like brothers.

June 2020: Full Circle

- Here I am. After a year of journalling my monthly progress and sticking to my MAP, I have come, as they say - full circle. I feel more fulfilled and happier with myself. I’m on my mission and living my life. If my SO leaves me tomorrow? Fine. So be it. If something changes or goes sideways in my career all of the sudden? It happens. I’ll get over it. I don’t like the room of people I’m surrounded with? Well, I’m in control of my life and I can leave it and make that choice for myself. I have to say, I think one of the most awakening books for me on this journey has been WISNIFG. Cutting out my ego investment in everything and everyone in my life and directing all of that energy in doing things I want to do. I am constantly working at improving myself - mindset change. I have gotten to the point where I no longer fear losing everything and everyone around me. I’m in the best shape of my life (slim to athletic build, 185lbs), I have a new mindset around my life (frame, abundance, and my MAP), I’m doing new activities and meeting new people, and I’m really trying to push myself to get ‘uncomfortable’ in order to grow. I still have a lot of work to do and it won’t stop now or anytime in the future.

For any of the new guys on this sub, or maybe someone passing by that comes here once in a blue moon “thinking” about making a post (i.e. asking some repetitive question). Stop that thought and delete what you are about to submit. Hit the sidebar, lift, read, and live your life. Come back a year later and share your progress with the rest of us here. I hate to quote Richard Cooper, but... Do. The. Work.

Thanks for reading.
Stop keeping score
by red-sfpplus | March 15, 2019 | Link

Stop fucking keeping score.

The question is a yes or no answer:

Are you getting what you feel like you are worth in:

Your love relationship?

Your sexual relationship?

Your career and finances?

Your kids?

The answer is either yes or no. There is no maybe. There is no maintaining "status quo." There is no fucking grey area. You are either moving forward or backward. There is no amount of data tracking and/or collection that is going to convince you that you should either say YES or NO. It is a gut feeling.

If in your love relationship she is making you happy, cool to talk to, being relatively drama free, giving you quality time, then you are likely on the good side.

Do you get the type of sex you feel you deserve and have demonstrated you can handle in your past? I would suspect for the majority of you, the answer here is NO.

Is your career moving forward, or are you working the same job making the same 3% pay raises? Got news for you buddy - inflation and interest is killing you slowly and you are to fucking dumb to realize it. If you are not averaging 8-12% pay increases YoY, you are moving backwards.

Are your kids building their little lives? Do they have interesting hobbies, or are they on ADD meds and look at their screen all day?

When I look at the OYS posts, and what is going on in the sub - I see a bunch of men who just simply obsess over getting their dick wet.

Look motherfucker, I love getting my dick wet as well. But that is a side effect of me being who I am. My main focus - MY MISSION is to keep growing and developing as a man.

There is a golden rule in business. Take care of your clients and your employees and the money will come. When you start to focus on money, you loose it all.

When you focus on sex - you loose sex. Nearly every single OYS post starts with - "I had sex 2 times this week."
Guess what - who fucking cares? And new flash - that might be two times more this week than me. Been traveling for a week. So what?

Enough with the spreadsheets, tracking data and keeping score. If you want to keep score, then you need to be man enough to act on the data.

If you feel you need to keep score - THEN YOU ARE LOOSING THE GAME ALREADY.

And keeping score is pointless. What you need to be doing is working on your shit.

I have seen a few posts about men being in a relationship for X years and they are butthurt. Guess what motherfucker - that is called the anger phase, and when you start keeping score in the anger phase that shit snowballs and snowballs till you blow your shit up like a faggot and get divorce raped in the process.

Stop keeping score and start listening to your gut. Oh, but guess what you also have to do? In order to listen to your gut you have to check your fucking ego as well.

Why am I recapping the basics?

Because there are to many motherfuckers to fucking autistic to realize they have not read the sidebar and work the system.

I didn’t start keeping score until I was ready to drop the hammer. And that was keeping score for different reasons.

She doesn’t care what the score is. You are either the man, or not. The score in her mind is how she feels in this moment.

You are the only dumb fuck in the relationship trying to build a trend chart in excel and justify it to yourself.

Stop. Go lift and STFU.
When was the last time you fucked your woman?

by HornsOfApathy | May 25, 2020 | Link

When was the last time that you actually fucked your woman HARD and FAST with reckless abandon like a wild man looking to shoot his hot load inside of her?

When was the last time you ravished your woman by absolutely demolishing her little body into a pulp, perhaps even turning her ass red, curled up in the corner of your bedroom, and maybe some exhausted tears running down her face?

When was the last time you fucked your wife so hard that she stopped being able to talk or communicate during sex, and you let out a primal roar as you grabbed her hips and thrust yourself inside of her repeatedly?

When was the last time you grabbed your woman by the hips, threw her down on the bed and ripped her pants just down to her knees and pounded her from behind like a man who has been dying to fuck?

How long?

Take a minute.

I once asked a guy here once who ironically quit (Edit: stopped posting to MRP for 3 months after doing exactly what I'm writing about here and updates us below in comments), /u/ice_walker, that same question who had been here at MRP for 2 FUCKING YEARS. You know what his answer was? “A year and a half I think, something like that”. What was his problem?

The relationship is an escape from the everyday life, a waterhole to replenish energy, a safe place for two individuals to meet for sharing their sexuality she doesn't feel connected and hence she doesn't want to be close etc etc.

I think what she means is "play by my rules, be more at home and I might give you a little bit of closeness*/sex/whatever."

That blew my fucking mind. Here we had a faggot that was on his journey for nearly two years and hadn’t figured out that he used sex to feel “close” and it validated his emotional needs. That’s not what sex is for, or at the very least it’s not until you figure out how to kill the validation needs that can poison your sex life.

Say this to yourself: I do not receive the feeling of being close to a woman through sex (right now).

When I began my journey I didn’t really fuck my wife hard and fast and ravish her. Maybe every once in a couple months. I thought that she wanted good and passionate sex that would give her emotions. I was only partly right. I was fucking her in her frame.

Sure – your woman wants to have sex full of emotions, but not the kind that you think.

There are many ways to incorporate these concepts but if you’re not getting the first one down in the beginning (dominance) you’re not going to get anywhere with your mental models since she is the most responsible teenager in the house and you will continually be in her frame during sex.

What kind of woman wants to fuck themselves anyways?

It all harks back to the one fundamental principle guiding male-female relations: Chicks love submitting to powerful men.

So if you want to spend your time learning about different ways to finger her and hit her G-spot, or maybe quietly play with her tits in the bar, or have sex with her in the backseat of the car, or light up the bathroom with candles and draw her a warm bath and slowly carress her body while playing your wedding song in the background – if you ain’t fucking her hard on the regular like you are a man that wants to fuck – none of that matters.

You woman WANTS to be taken by you. She WANTS to submit to strong, powerful, masculine man. She WANTS you to take her body as your own and do with it as you wish to please yourself. She wants her body used as a vehicle of your pleasure, disregarding her own, and in that process submit to your desire to drain your sweat, balls, and every inch of who you are into her.

That gives her the feelz she desires. Then you learn to use this concept of dominance in other ways that aren't perhaps so... in your face. Speaking of which. Cum on her face. That's a good dominant move.

You know how I keep harping here all the time that your woman can feelz through all of your bullshit and your inner most fears and ego? She can also feelz this too... and these are the types of feelz we talk about when SGM talks about emotion and immersion and dominance. Variety is easy.

Through your giving of yourself to her - giving her everything you've got and living on your edge of reckless abandon - you are taking exactly what you want. But at the same time giving her your authentic self sexually and she feels through this. If you’re hiding that part of yourself from yourself during sex, she will feel that as well. If you’re stuck in your head about “maybe I should insert one more finger and give her the spiderman for 60 seconds followed by a little tease of my tongue against her clit”... she’s going to feel that. Like a robot, dude. And that's shitty sex for everyone no matter how many EVI ways you try without the D.

So get out of your fucking head. Just go FUCK your woman. Fuck her until her eyes roll back into her head and she's blabbering nonsense. If there’s anything you should be saying inside your head during this it should be along the lines of: “I love demolishing this little fucking body with my cock. You dirty little slut. Fuck you.”

Use some controlled anger if you have to. Use those pent up emotions you've learned to control with a cup of STFU and let them explode through you and into her.

Then once you get that down? Do it again.

And again.

And again.

Free yourself sexually first

Inside of every woman is a little slut that is begging permission to be freed. Either she has met her before, or she has been chained inside of her for the entirety of her sexual history. This is the part of her that wants to be unleashed in the bedroom – and ironically the part of a woman that you want unrestrained as well. Women just want permission for it to be OK.

You give a woman permission to do so by freeing yourself first from all insecurities. As I write often: The masculine grows through challenge. It's ultimate reward is freedom. Break through the barriers of your fears and beta-shit-goblin on your shoulder saying, “She isn’t like that. She doesn’t like it when we have rough sex.”

You're a liar.

A woman doesn’t like rough dominant sex with a man that is inside his own head and doing it for her. She wants that primal, raw, unfiltered sexual version of you. The same you want out of a woman.

So fuck her hard. Then you won’t care about the spiderman, or some other crazy sex move you read about in SGM or saw in a porn (you've stopped watching porn by now, right?)... because you won’t have to. You will have given her the gift of Dominance and if accepted, your woman will complete the mutual cycle of gifting through her submission – which you gave to her as well.

That’s why we advocate often here that you caveman. Especially when your woman is giving you faked submissive duty sex. Take it. And take it how a man would. With hasty carelessness, without consequence, and the way that a strong masculine man would. Remind yourself that you’re a man. A man who is full of power and uses that power to penetrate his woman as he does the world.

Then you can do the chocolates and bathtub music if you like for some variety, but don’t expect her to fuck you like the little slut I know she is... and I guarantee she is... who’s been stuck in a sexual prison because you put her there.

Yes, it's all your fault your woman sucks at sex (with you) or doesn't like it (with you).

Break yourself free first. Then like a good woman normally does - she will follow your lead. Or maybe she won’t.

And if she doesn’t? Doesn’t matter, got laid.

Good sex is your responsibility.
Abundance is the same in every area, I'm learning.

I recently had two jobs competing for me, and I leveraged the fuck out of that situation to get the largest single raise of my career. My current job is like my cute brunette wife at home, we have a long history of mostly good reviews. Employer #2 was the sexy blonde at the gym - sending me all the Indicators of Interest and asking me to meet her at the bar, just to talk. It would have been easy to say no to her invitation - I was happily employed, and I was busy, and I was tired, and I had things going on that night.

Both knew that I could walk away from them at any time. So rather than being on my best behavior to impress just one employer, I was in my own authentic frame. Meetings were on my terms, I was never desperate to set up the next date. Of course, that made them both want me even more.

I was really interested in this new employer, the blonde. She was exactly what I looked for in the past, she was a rare find, with a sweet little benefits package that I wanted badly to get my hands on. Instead of showing my desire, I acted like the kind of guy who has an interview with a new company every weekend. If this one walked away, there are ten more just like her and I'm confident I can find them - even if I don’t see them right now.

When the new company made an offer, I was excited because she was hot and it was awesome. It was better than the offer I currently had at home, but it wasn't quite what I wanted. So, I said No. I didn't ask for more, I didn't explain why she should give me more, I didn't try to prove how much more valuable I was than the other guys she was talking to. I just said No. She came back even harder, more desperate to have me, sooner and on better terms. I told her sincerely that if anything ever changes, I would be in touch, and we parted on good terms.

“That’s great, but I don’t need abundance in my choice of jobs,” you say. “I’ve been with the same company for ten years, and we have 3 beautiful little projects together.” You assume that she wants to keep you on the payroll forever. You do great work, you’re GOOD, man, and they would have a hard time replacing you, you tell yourself. You're ready to stay at this job for life - certainly they recognize your loyalty, and it will pay off in the end.

Until one day you get a reality check that changes your perspective. My reality check came one year ago. Remember my current employer, the stable brunette wife at home? She pulled me into her office and gave me the ILYBINILWY talk. The years they spent with me have meant so much, they said. It wasn’t me, they said - it was just, the whole company was changing, they really needed to do some Eat/Pray/Love and just figure out what they want next, you know? I’m a great worker, they said, and they really hope I find another job that makes me happy in the future. And just like that, I was back on the market.

I was scared and shocked. After years at the same company, I wasn’t prepared. I didn’t have a little black book of employers to call, because my network was weak. I should have had an updated resume and an emergency fund with some Fuck You money in it. Instead, I had become the kind of man who didn't care if I could still land a new employer. Being a nice, loyal company man works out for a lot of guys, but it didn't work out for me.

Exactly one year later (down to the day), I was having a serious conversation with that same employer, under far different circumstances. I worked on myself for that whole year - I had a new title, was providing more value than ever, and others were starting to notice. I was there to tell her she had been great, but I wanted more than what she was giving me, and I was willing to go elsewhere to find it. No anger, no power struggle.

I wasn’t sure what to expect - anger? Would they try to change my mind, or shame me for selfishly putting my own needs first? Yes, it seemed like that was happening - they were defensive, questioned my reasons. I was tempted to defend my actions, to explain all the reasons why I deserved more. Instead, I stayed quiet, STFU and I stayed calm.

That’s when the mood of the conversation changed completely. I could smell the power shift like static in the air when she said, “I want to keep you, here’s what I can do.” She then gave me an offer for the largest single raise of my life. Smiling and full of gratitude, I looked at my loyal employer of so many years and said the words that many of us hope to say:

“No, thank you.” I said, as I refused the largest pay raise of my life.

Her offer didn’t meet my needs. But I didn't just say "I don’t have enough money", a phrase nearly as useless and vague as "I'm not getting enough blowjobs". I hoped we could stay together, and not just because we have these little projects together that we both love. I said: “I have goals for my life and my family and to meet those goals, I would need you to do this and this.” And then I stopped talking. My silence said: you can say yes, or you can say no, but I'm not fine with hanging out in the middle. Like I was the prize to be won. Absurd confidence, but not cocky.

Her second offer was even better, and I accepted.

“But Barracuda, why were you out entertaining other jobs if you already had a job you love? You shouldn’t even have a job, start your own business so you can be Man Going His Own Way. Besides, isn't it unfair (even immoral!) to be out flirting with other supervisors when you have a job back home?”

"Why would anyone game when they're happy?"

Because Abundance Changes Everything, that's why. I'm not angry at my boss for being a boss, any more than I'm angry at the dog for being a dog. I'm a better employee now, because I chose to be here. I’m not living every day in silent resentment because I secretly hate my circumstances. There's no power struggle, no need for me to get emotionally exhausted by my coworkers, even when they act like teenagers. I don't need to say out loud that I have other options, because it's well known and obvious. And yes, that means I'm on my own terms when it comes to what a "good man" does at his job. I used to think that I wanted to find the perfect job for me, or to fix my current employer. Then, I realized I needed to become the kind of man who is sought by ALL employers.

I love my current job, but it's only my turn. And if they fired me tomorrow?

I'd tell the blonde to put on my favorite sundress and meet me on a rooftop bar, downtown, tonight.

But of course, we're just talking about jobs.

Fuck The Red Pill.

Not long ago I used to be able to watch a movie and not pick up the subtle undertones and character relationship models I am now forced to see like an ugly stripper on stage.

Here we have a story, about a man and a woman. Their names are Ralph and Vanellope. While not in a sexual relationship they have been BFF’s for six years.

Every day they work when the arcade is open and every night they do the same thing. Chill, go drink at Tappers and watch the sunrise. It’s the same routine, day in and day out.

Ralph, being a simple minded man is perfectly fine with this, however Vanellope like all women - they want more. They want excitement in their lives.

Complaining of her job to Ralph, he goes and builds her a new track. Typical nice guy, trying to solve his woman’s problems. Well, that plan backfires as during the process Vanellope shows how selfish she really is. She rides the track to not only the detriment of her own game, but all her subjects in the game. She overrides her programming and fights the user who is playing the game to the point her game breaks.

AWALT?

As the game is unplugged Ralph and Vanellope head out on a quest to eBay to find her replacement steering wheel and hopefully restore her game.

During this process, two very significant events happen. Vanellope finds a new game with new and exciting people to be with and Ralph continuing his nice guy status, literally works his ass off making video's and meme's to save his friends game, while she puts forth minimal effort to do the same.

What is Ralph attempting to save? Her game? Or his status-quo relationship with Vanellope?

Vanellope has already moved on mentally. She was sad at first when she lost her game, but now she has a new game ran by the amazingly hot Gal Gadot (giddy). Not only does she willingly leave behind her "princess" status where she is the boss in her own game, she leaves behind all her people as well. All that security and her loyal subject for a taste of the excitement and rush of a new life.

After Ralph has slaved away getting the necessary funds to buy her steering wheel he sits outside of eBay waiting for his friend to come and give him the love and attention he deserves. After all, he literally has saved her game for her!

He is the fucking hero!
But she doesn’t give a fuck. She is sitting on the hood with Gal talking shit about her man.

Ralph over hears their conversation and gets pissed. In a final attempt to beta trap his girl back into their relationship he unleashes a virus inside her game, nearly killing his girl in the process.

Like all forms of insecurity, this all comes to a epic battle in the end that is the Ralph insecurity virus and Ralph finally coming to the realization that he needs to be a man, and let his woman go. Going to gloss over the fact that Disney delivered one final blow to male masculinity when all the princesses needed to save a "big strong man" from his death by catching him in a dress, but whatever.

Ralph moves on with his life. He accepts the fact Vanellope is going to live with Gal, and starts to focus on himself. The motherfucker already knows how to lift and is huge, so he had that going for him already. But he invests time into other areas, makes new (old) friends, hobbies and does his own thing. Even if that thing is burning pies.

There are so many Red Pill lessons in this movie, it literally makes me sick to not only have to see this shit, but to know some Disney motherfucker is thinking about this and programming it into movies and programming our kids.

But this is MRP and not the conspiracy reddit so I digress.

This is the exact same script so many of you motherfuckers run through in the attempt to save your marriage.

Just replace game with Chad and meme with marriage counselor and toss in a side of Hypergamy.

At the end of the day, the focus has to be on yourself. What if Ralph would have invested the time in the beginning - on himself. Why did Vanellope have to leave for him to start doing other hobbies, back yard BBQ's and being an expert at making burnt pies?

All of this ties back to my The Affair post.

The premise is the same. Once she has mentally checked out, the game is lost and you need to know that.

Get to work motherfucker, and not on building a new track.

No one is going to stick around for a beta man.

Purple:

As a young man I was bold, outgoing, athletic, and musical. I had a lot of girls in high school and college to choose from. I had no idea about game or any of that. I liked woman and life and wasn't afraid of either.

Blue:

Met my ex at church. I was very popular and there were at least 5 girls in my church I could have picked from and they would have married me. Ended up picking my ex, because she was the most persistent. Everywhere I was, she was. Total sweetheart. We dated for about 9 months and tied the knot.

A quick note before getting into the marriage:

- Music was my life and passion - I only wanted one kid and wanted to wait at least 3 years before we started trying.

Both of these things were known to her before we ever got married.

After 4 months the relationship took a nose dive. Here are some lowlights:

- 4 months in she demanded we start having children. Sex was completely shut down until I agreed.

- Insisted I remove all females friends I had from social media and said I shouldn't talk to other women unless it was business, related.

- Had our first kid, and within 3 months she wanted another one and shut sex down again until I agreed.

- Demanded I spend less time on my music (my chosen profession) and more time with family.

- Is a SAHM and spent the majority of the day on social media. (IE. chores around the house were mostly done by yours truly)

- Had second kid and she had severe postpartum depression
• Quit music career and got a cube job to be at home more with depressed wife

I had never even heard of postpartum depression, so I'm thinking my wife is a complete psycho and had no idea what to do. We decide to go to counseling (this was difficult to me, because I was popular in my church and didn't want anyone to know we were having problems).

Counseling went something like this: addictedtoyourface, this is all your fault, if you were doing the right things she would fall in line and do the right things back (sound familiar?). The problem was, all the "right things" that were suggested were strait out of the BP hand book (more chores, more talking, more gift giving, more romancing, etc): This was when I fell off the purple cliff into the blue valley. There is a lot that happened over the following years, but it boils down to the more I tried the worse it got.

Purple:

So, now we're 8yrs in. I'm at work early and come home late. I'm really hating my life at this point. One very nice benefit was that my outlet was the gym/sports. I got in the best shape of my life, because it was the only thing I could think of to bring relief (I was not drinking at all at this point). Well, being 5'10 and around 10% BF, I looked good. I've had attention from women my whole life, but tried my hardest to pay it no mind, because of religion. By this point I was miserable enough that I started to embrace, rather than fight, the attention of women. One day after a particularly nasty fight with the ex I said "Fuck it" Started chatting up a woman I saw at the gym. Slept with her and the flood gates opened wide. I started sleeping around like a hound dog. It was such a relief, I actually thought it would save my marriage, because for a while I was happier....but only for a while. After a few months the highs wore off and I went back to stone cold mode. Finally one day my wife asks, "what is wrong with you?" I looked her in the eye and said, I'm not happy anymore and I've been sleeping with other women for almost a year.

Tears, drama, and counseling followed. I felt guilty after seeing how hurt she was. The new councilor was better than the last, but I was done. I stayed for another few months out of guilt. One night the kids were in bed and she was hovering around me wanting me to come to bed. I didn't feel like it and she kept giving me all these covert signals. I told her I wasn't ready. She kept popping in and out all night. Finally gave in and went to bed. The next morning I got up, put my clothes on and walked out of the house. Had no plan, just knew if I stayed one second longer I was gonna snap.

A few things that happened after leaving:

• While getting the divorce the judge awarded ex over half of my paycheck, because she had the kids and didn't work.
• Had to fight just to get them to sleep over at my house.
• Lost all assets except my instrument, one car and my weight set.
• ALL friends and some family (including parents for a while) were on her side and told me to piss off. (A lot of it had to do with ignorance. On the outside we pretended to be the perfect couple, so many people thought I was just chasing tail, and didn't know the details)
- We were in real estate and owned multiple homes. Two out of the four we owned were in my name and I lost both of them, because I could no longer afford to float the mortgages while I was looking for tenants.
- Spent over 40k (Judge ordered me to pay for her lawyer fees as well as my own, because she did not work) over two years to win the rights to have my kids. Not going to get into details for doxing purposes but it was an ugly battle.
- Got super depressed and for the first time contemplated suicide.
- Became a functioning alcoholic almost over night. (I didn't drink at all until I was in my late 20s)

Red:

So, now that the sob story is out I'll discuss some things that helped me get through that time and things that have happened since becoming RED:

- I never let anything stop me from being active. The gym was my new church.

- Fought hard in the courts and Won the kids (as stated above). This was a huge burden off of me.

- Met my current wife and laid down some serious ground rules. I was happy with her, but made it clear I wasn't taking shit from anyone anymore. (This is still before I found TRP)

- Saved like crazy, did without for a few years and was able to pay off almost all debt.

- Got a new job, worked my ass off and have been promoted twice. Was making about 45k (just from cube job) to around 87k since walking out.

- Found stoicism and have been learning to meditate.

- Found TRP and took a good marriage to great.

I have been hesitant to write something like this out since finding TRP/MRP, because I never wanted people thinking I was throwing a pity part. At the encouragement of one of the mods,
I wrote this out over some days (I have edited it way down) and it's been therapeutic for me.
I still wasn't sure I was going to post, but here is why I decided to:

One of my biggest struggles going through my divorce was that I felt alone. I thought I was the only one going through this shit, and no one understood my pain. I was wrong. There are guys that go through this every day, and worse. I'm sharing this so anyone that is going through something similar can know there are others, and it is possible to come out stronger on the other side. If that's you. Grind mother fucker.

P.S: After reading through all of this, I wanted to point out that I was a complete beta bitch that let my ex walk all over me. I didn't find TRP until well after I was divorced, but I have come to realize that a lot of the bullshit I went through was my own fault. So again, if you're in the middle of this, save yourself some pain and own your shit now rather than later.
Cliff Notes: Primary Pointers for Beginners

Pointers for Beginners.

I wanted to write this after reading so many newbie posts in the ask sub, and recognizing so many consistencies in their posts. I will add more. I invite you to do the same. I think it's easy to get lost in the vast compendium of resources - aka sidebar - and thought it might be helpful to consolidate a few rudimentary pointers in one place. There is nothing new here for those who've been around a while.

- Reset every day. This is the most important - most results-producing - most life-changing - to me - of everything. Reset. Don't ruminate. Don't let bad behavior become repetitive bad behavior. Don't hold grudges. Don't count points. Don't try to win. Don't try to "one up" your spouse. Don't keep score. Remember that every day is a new day. You must, must, must practice this and execute on it effectively. Early on, I tried and tried and kept reading and reading and then one day I recognized the futility of my "internal monologue" and simply said fuck this, no more. I now reset each day and make it count. What does that mean? It can mean being aware of your propensity to hold grudges each morning. It can mean meditating at the start of the day. It can mean torturing your body at the temple of brodin. It can mean staying home an extra hour to spend time with your family before heading off to work, even if you had a fight the night before.

- As it relates to resetting every day, understand that - and I say this with a level of certainty that comes solely from my own experience - she is paying much, much less attention to this process than you are. Hell, she doesn't even know the process exists. She doesn't even realize that you have found something amiss and are trying to fix it. She's still in la-la land. In other words, 99% of the time that you are upset about something - because you are newly "aware" - she is still blissfully unaware. Yet you are expecting some kind of "change" from her. Do you not recognize the futility of this? You have changed the rules, you want to win the race, and she's not even aware they exist, nor is she aware that she's racing? I did this. I pushed it hard and then I pushed it harder. There were times when my wife thought I'd lost my mind. There were times when my behavior was ridiculous. There were times when I sabotaged myself. Far more importantly, there were times when I lost myself to false mission, a mission for her.

- Don't be so fucking scared and fearful. You know, there was a time and place when your next meal was not assured, when your safety was in question, when your future was unknown. Think back to the struggles of being alive 100,000 year ago. Jesus, we are comparative pussies today; but, in our collective defense, our minds are surely making it all so much harder on so many levels. While we no longer need to struggle to escape a dinosaur, we do struggle to escape our own self-doubt, our own self-defeating behavior, our own cynical, spiteful, harmful minds. I spent so much time doing so, I still do, but I improve every day, little by little. Granted I've been through a special kind of hell, but sometimes, the day-to-day is made much, much more challenging than it need be.
• Don’t beat yourself up. It's so easy to do so. Especially after you stumble upon this place. Even more so after you read the posts and comments. More so still after you post and dudes reply. Understand that if you have been earnest to yourself and you have tried hard - your fucking hardest - everything you've got - and you have been genuine - then you have done all that you need to do. Regardless of whether she comes or goes, regardless of whether your business succeeds or fails, regardless of whether you get that job or not. Don't beat yourself up. This is a huge lesson I learned. I inflicted more harm on myself than anyone else. I wanted so much to control it all. To control everything. But in reality, I control nothing. Why, then, have I felt compelled to accept the responsibility of those many things I do not control? Christ. The pressure. It's fucking pointless. I now constantly remind myself - even in the face of a bad outcome - that I did my best (a phrase I normally hate but if I say it mean it and it means a lot Perseus) - and if that's not fucking good enough well fuck it, that's not good enough. I try every day to remind myself that while I may have failed, I have also succeeded. I am naturally the hardest mother-fucker on myself, and yet I am also learning to be merciful to myself at the same time.

• Recognize that you are going too fast. Almost assuredly. Nearly always. You are a man of action. Men = action. You see the problem, you identify the solution, you dive in to solve it. Now. Yesterday even. The thing is, as BPP has said - in one of the most amazing posts ever - it boils down to numbers and it will take time. Ten years a pussy? Okay, ten months to absolution. 15 years a pussy? 15 months. This is arguably the hardest or second hardest part of the process, next to resetting each day. You are a man, you know the solution, you believe - after reading - that you know how to make it happen. Chances are you actually do. The thing is, this is not a landscaping project, this is not a home renovation upgrade, this is not an executive report to management, this is not an audit of your finances; instead, this is a dynamic - in place for years - that involves a human being, and one who has experienced your (likely-pathetic-else-why-would-you-be-here) behavior. She does not simply fall into place because you've (1) come to Jesus and now (2) know the way home. I remind myself of this often. I naturally jump to (almost always negative) critiques about everything, step back to reflect, and recognize that this is a slow process.

• Don't go overboard and don't make your wife your enemy. Just because you have been "awakened" to something you may not have been familiar with does not mean she is out to get you. It does not mean she's a two-bit whore. It does not mean she's a deadbeat bitch. You married this woman for a reason, a reason that may be lost on you and perhaps hard to recollect, but it's there. You're both on the same side, whether you know it or not, until you're not longer on the same side. I recognize now that I am not a partnership with my wife, but instead, an individual who chooses to coexist with her. I am not an MMA opponent to her, I am one player in a two-sport team like doubles tennis. The difference in the two is so important and I lose site - often - and play against her. I reset each day to stop and improve.

• Don't say please. In fact, stop writing please. I looked at how often I added "please" to everything (email, text, etc.) and now edit and remove. This applied to wife, friends, employees, and everyone. Much easier and fewer words to leave it out. Fewer words are universally appreciated by everyone.

• Don't say sorry. I was able to stop this quickly and easily. Chiefly because after I read the advice, I observed the behavior in an employee - and a family member - and found it grotesque. I saw how often I said "sorry" and have stopped... unless it's warranted, which is rare.

- Don't get addicted to MRP. Your ultimate solution is not to read. Nor is it to interact with others who've been there. It's not to analyze, and it's certainly not to deepen your understanding to the level of PHD. Your solution is to (1) understand and (2) implement, with a strong emphasis on implement. In other words, do, do, do. Then do some more. I see way too many dudes getting hooked on the validation they receive from a bunch of anonymous Internet strangers and clearly spending way too much time here.

- Lift. For the non-believers, you'll just need to trust me on this one. I was an athlete when I was young - highest level possible - I continued to work out for years - yet I always harbored a mistrust of dudes lifting weights. Frankly, I looked down on them. Christ what a mistake. Lifting is glorious and it gets results. Vain, self-obsessed? I don't fucking care anymore. Whoever drilled that dumbass shit into my head was likely a fatass who didn't understand the sheer joy of seeing a new vein, spotting a new striation, or hitting a new max.
I haven't told my wife I joined a gym. I don't tell her that I lift weights. I didn't tell her that I went on a diet. When she asked why I'm not eating bread and rice I told her I've been on a health kick lately and I decided to do low-carb. And I for sure didn't tell her I decided to buy new clothes because of advice from men in some forum I read on reddit.

I have a reminder on my phone to cold-approach five women a day. Usually I fall short of my goal, but a few days a week I hit the target. When I get numbers or contact info I just add it to my phone.

So far in my marriage I have never cheated on my wife, and I don't plan to. But if for some reason I wanted to, I could.

If my wife left me tomorrow, I there are at least a dozen women I could start going out with, women who I think are hot and who seem to be interested in me.

I think deliberately flirting in front of your wife with someone when she can see it is OK, if that's where you are in your levels of dread, but it's kind of missing the point. The reason flirting happens in front of your wife is not "so she can see it", it's because it happens to you all the time. You're outgoing and social and interesting, and good-looking and well-dressed enough that there are always women interested in you. There shouldn't be any hint of "I'm doing this to make you jealous" about it.

The cute waitress at our local restaurant came up to our table and asked me (in front of my wife and kid) if I've been working out lately and told me that I look great. I said thanks, I've been on kind of a health kick lately, trying to eat healthy, and I told her that she looks pretty good too.

Don't do red pill for your wife's benefit. Just do it for yourself. Your wife will see the way other people look at you and how they react to you.

It's not "oh no, my husband is trying to hit on that waitress," You want her thinking, hey, was that 20-something flight attendant just hitting on my husband? Right in front of me? That's the second time this week...

Use the Force. The wife doesn't need to see you flirting to catch the Dread. You don't have to do anything differently when she's around. She'll pick up on it without your having to show off.
Owning Your Desires Without Negotiating Hers
by JDRoedell | November 25, 2017 | Link

Sexual needs are healthy, normal and valid. Don't let anyone (especially your wife) try to convince you otherwise or invalidate those needs. She may say things like; “Again? What's wrong with you?”, or "I just have a low libido," or "no married people have sex that much." My wife has a good friend who is basically sexually retired at 38 years old. A few times in the past, my wife has made comparisons to this couple and how often they do (or don't) have sex. I sarcastically just say, "and he seems like a happily married guy." (This guy has made several comments in my presence that him and his wife are not on good terms). She'll still dismiss this but deep down she realizes the subcommunication from me which says, "That might be ok for them... Not for me. You can do what you want but MY wife/girlfriend won't be like that.

You need to own and be unapologetic for your desires as a man. NEVER hide them, make light of them or act like you were "just joking," in the face of a rejection. /u/GargantuaBlarg29 has a good post on this. This is why weak and indirect initiations don't work. If rejected, and you will be sometimes, don't dwell on it in her presence. Quickly move on to something else you'd rather be doing. I've gotten to the point where I also usually withdraw from unenthusiastic sex from the wife. She gets a few points for at least acknowledging this is a need for me and trying but I just don't do duty sex, conciliatory BJs or any of that garbage anymore. My time is better spent on something else. You have to make that call yourself though. If you just discovered this magical fucking place and are basically her man-servant, for the love of God don’t walk away from starfish. I digress.

If after you've put in the work and become a man worthy of female desire, and optimized your sexual strategy to suit you (for once in your life), you should have no apprehension about making it clear that a healthy sex life is going to be a part of your relationship with some woman. It is better to communicate this through actions but some women won't get it through their female entitled heads this way or may just be "checked out" and you may have to be more direct about it.

Back to the core concepts:

Don't Try to Negotiate Desire

This is a foundational concept of Red Pill and was really hammered out by Rollo Tomassi. You see it manifested in advice here all the time. Now, for a new man here, I can see how sometimes advice given out can seem to be incongruent. For example, take these common responses/advice given on this sub regarding negotiating desire, all have a common theme of STFU and action over words:

Advice Type 1;

"That's a covert contract - you shouldn’t be doing any of this for sex..."
“No chore play”

"STFU about your feelings or talking about what you want or think you deserve - she doesn’t care."

"Acta Non Verba" (don’t talk to/at her about what you expect/deserve/require in your marriage). Sort of goes with STFU, doesn’t it.

Advice Type 2 comes in the form of being congruent and avoiding the covert contract;

"Stop expecting her to just know what you want."

"Be congruent with your actions, words and frame."

"Lead her" - In everyday interaction (respect, general behavior, being fun)... With what you expect from a good FO (good roommate stuff)... and in the bedroom.

List one should be your Default operating strategy. However, if she shuts you down for the third time in a row, there’s nothing wrong with being direct and clear (in actions and sometimes words) about your desires as a man. This effectively kills the covert contracts cold. That’s when advice to lead her out of “the maze” (source: Jack10) and owning your desires comes into play. This advice is usually handed out like this and has the common theme of being direct, leading and owning your masculinity. Another disclaimer for new men here; as BPP suggests, you have to work up to this level of owning your wants overtly. If you haven’t passed Dread Level 0 (stop being a pussy), then don’t delve into this yet.

Know what you value and know how to act congruently with that while simultaneously not expecting anything from your wife. She technically doesn’t owe you anything, nor do you owe her anything (this is true OI).

Whether you’re getting consistent pussy or not isn’t the issue or focus of this post. Remember that MRP saves the man and empowers him, but makes no promises about the woman following or the marriage thriving. Being open about your desires (with the wife and yourself) is the only way to own your desire without covert contracts. I remember one time about a year ago, I made it clear with my hands, eyes and proximity that I wanted to fuck. She said, “jeez, again? You’re horny all the time.” I said, “lucky you... you’ve got yourself a real man with a real sex drive.” Just be honest about it.

Here’s the key to this concept: You don’t actually have to be getting consistent sex to successfully pull this off. Read that sentence a few times. It doesn’t matter if your sexual advances are being rejected (to a point), it matters that you aren’t negotiating, pleading, bribing or “trading” to get her desire. Is she still not consistently putting out (i.e. less “yes” and more “not tonight“)? Well, then have a plan for that, one that fits into your larger sexual strategy. Have a plan, phased if you must, but have a plan to get your desire, that you’ve owned, fulfilled one way or another. But in the meantime, whatever you do, don’t negotiate it.
The fuck is going on in OYS? It's like every single OYS post is failing at basic frame control. Frame control is the mindset and reference through which you engage the world -- shit outside of your reality and control doesn't matter.

And the overwhelming number of you guys are failing at this TERRIBLY.

Failure 1 :: She statements

It seems like every single post has at least 50% of the post dedicated to some shit or other about your wife. The number of "She...." statements is getting to the point where OYS isn't actually valuable for most of your posts. You are spending waaay too much time and effort focusing on something that is outside of your control. If you want to focus on your wife's perspectives, responses, or thought process -- you're allowed to, but only if you have her write those sections directly.

If you can't get her to write her about her mindset, focus on the shit that you can control, which are your mindset, thoughts, and actions. Because honestly, I don't give a fuck about her -- and I especially don't give a fuck about your mental representation of her. OYS is for you, by you -- but don't waste your own time and the reader's time focusing on 1) shit you can't control, and 2) shit that ultimately doesn't matter.

As a result of this - we now have Rule 9, which states

OYS is about taking ownership of the things YOU control, not about other parties like your wife, dog, boss, etc. The vast majority of the focus should be on your mindset, your thoughts, and your actions. The primary agent for your post is a third party -- and as a result you've wasted your own time. (Standard ban duration :: 10 days.)

Failure 2 :: Your wife's golden pussy, held under lock and key

Common theme 2 is how you guys write about your sex life with your wife. And the way you guys are approaching this is from a scarcity mindset. Many guys as writing as if your wife is the gatekeeper to sex. In a world with 8+ billion people, this is patently not true. Your wife is only the gatekeeper of sex with her.

If you've made the choice that you're only going to have sex with your wife. That's on you. That's your personal decision. You need to very much own it. And as a result, when she doesn't fuck you -- you don't get to complain, because you've put yourself in that position. You don't get to lock yourself in a cage, and complain about being locked in a cage.

If you think that because you're doing all this self improvement, your wife should WANT to fuck you. Again, you're wrong. We've stated repeatedly that MRP has nothing to do with your wife -- and that doing this for your wife to fuck you is the worst covert contract you'll have. You have NO say in what she does or how she reacts. None. She is free to make whatever choice she wants. Just because you do the work, doesn't mean she's going to want to fuck you. All it means that someone will probably fuck you, maybe, but if you're locking yourself in a cage by your own choice, you don't get to bitch.

Again, just so we're very clear, MRP is not a program that will get your wife to fuck you. And this is especially true when you continue to have a shitty mindset.

As a result of this - we now have Rule 10, which states

```
OYS is about taking ownership of the things YOU control, not about other parties like your wife, dog, boss, etc. The vast majority of the focus should be on your mindset, your thoughts, and your actions. You are complaining about a situation you willingly put yourself into. That's a no go. (Standard ban duration :: 15 days.)

You don’t know how weak you are because you don’t know what strength is.

by SBIII | July 25, 2019 | Link

You’re new to MRP. Your life sucks. Your wife doesn’t. We get it. Your biggest problem is frame. Frame comes in two parts... physical frame and mental frame. You lack both.

Building physical frame is easy. You hit the gym, you lift heavy, you eat right, and you sleep well. Next time you hit the gym, you lift heavier, you eat right and you sleep well. Rinse and repeat.

One to two years later, you’re no longer a skinny / fat fuck and people take notice of you.. women in particular. It’s a long process, but relatively speaking, it’s easy - you don’t have to be intelligent to lift weights, you just need to be determined.

It’s also easy to map out your goals, record your progress and adjust your approach if things aren’t going quite as planned.

The best place to measure your strength is here:

https://symmetricstrength.com/

Dial in your latest lifts and don’t bullshit yourself with 1RM you’ve never tested.

How did you do? Score of around 30-50? Subpar to Novice Level? Sounds about right. You still don’t know what strength is but at least you know how weak you are.

Yeah, you’re a weak motherfucker. Suck it up.
Mental frame isn’t so easy. There is no website where you can measure its strength. There is no gym you can go to to make it stronger. There is no roadmap to building a better frame. The sidebar will help you get there but in the end, your frame has to be yours - it has to be built by you, handcrafted by you, made rock solid by you. It becomes - not just part of who you are - but the essence of who you are.

A good litmus test for frame is this:

- Do you struggle with the concept of frame?
- Do you think about frame a lot?
- Do you often wonder whose frame you are in?
- Do you often think about whether you held frame / broke frame in certain situations?
- Do you worry about other people’s opinions of you?
- Do you spend time thinking about what your wife might be thinking about?
- Do you have to keep reminding yourself that you “are the prize”?
- Do you ever ask yourself “do I have the frame to do this?”

If you answered yes to any one of those questions, your frame is weak. If you answered yes to all of those questions, your frame is non-existent. You still don’t know what strength is but at least you have an idea of how weak you are.

One thing building mental frame has in common with building physical frame, is that it takes time. You can't walk into the gym as a skinny fuck and expect to walk out 2 months later as a beast. It just won’t happen. The same applies to mental frame... you’re basically doing a mental recomposition and you're doing it without a roadmap. How you get there comes down to you... the road will never be the same for two people. A lot of the time you're finding your way in the dark. You’ll fuck up a lot along the way. But really, there's no other way to do it.

Mental frame must never be neglected – all the concepts you read about in MRP stem from this and form a feedback loop with it.. Outcome Independence, Leadership, IDGAF, being the Captain, being The Prize etc.. using these concepts will help you build frame and when you have solid frame, all of those things become easy.
The biggest Litmus Test of all is this – when you no longer think about frame or worry about it, when it becomes second nature to you and becomes part of your nature – that’s when you know you have frame. That’s when you know what real strength is.

Until you build frame – both physical and mental frame – you will never see any real progression. You can’t develop one and not bother with the other. There’s no point in being a strong, muscular fucker if your mental frame is shit. You’ll just be a strong muscular fucker who can still be mentally pulled apart and shat on by women.

You can’t have a rock solid mental frame and be a fat fuck because you’ll still be a fat fuck.

You need both. You need to be strong both mentally and physically.

Until then, you don’t know how weak you are because you don’t know what strength is.
On being a better man

by simbarlion | November 21, 2019 | Link

I came to fix my relationship and I learnt how to be a better man. I now see that where motherhood makes a girl a woman the same is not true for men, and we need a kick in the ass to grown the fuck up. Getting too fat, being cheated on or realising those IOI looks are actually IODI looks (i.e. dis-interest), are the kick you need; you should be grateful you finally got the message, motherfucker. The regulars here keep handing out that message fyi.

MRP for me is now ~30 - 40% about relationship and sex and the rest is all benefits to the rest of my life. Physical health, career, wealth, confidence, bravery - it all goes together, and as you know it is this stuff that leads to the solution to the problems that brought you here.

One of my favourite side effects of this process is the impact i have had on my two boys - they look up to me anyway but now i am a better version. Both of them strive to be strong and confident, both of them at 8 and 6 have the attention of the girls at school. I gently tease them but we both secretly know that little dude muscles on the side of a tank top and an aloof attitude is getting them that attention. Those same little dude muscles get ME that attention from the mum's too. In short, basically everyone in your family and everyone you know wants you to be that man you could be.

This is not intended as a long post, so my message is its time to grow the fuck up. Stop blaming her, stop blaming the world. Be the man you want your sons to be (or daughters to marry). Watch the doors open in all avenues of your life once you get your shit together.

End Rant.
Anger is almost always a "tell" of weakness in your frame, your thinking, in owning your shit, or in your situation. It is thus a great diagnostic tool for discovering areas needing further improvement. Any time I detect anger in myself, especially that sudden surge of fury at some comment or event, I note the circumstances for later self-analysis to identify the weaknesses in my frame, the holes in my arguments, or my discomfort with my social situation. However, the anger is usually misdirected to protect your ego, so it takes careful self-reflection and honesty to diagnose the true weakness behind the anger.

Here are some examples to get you started.

• Angry at your wife for not allowing you to hang out with your friend? Diagnosis: You're ruled by your wife's frame, and you're too much of a pussy to challenge her domination of you

• Angry at your wife for letting you take the heat for leaving a party early? Diagnosis: You're insecure about your status among your friends, or your wife dominates you

• Angry at your wife for not giving you a blowjob on your birthday? Diagnosis: Covert contract, and ego (you deserve a special day because you're a special snowflake)

• Angry at your wife for nagging you about taking out the trash? Diagnosis: You're a drunk captain who isn't owning his shit

• Angry with your kids? Diagnosis: You're in your wife's / mother's / peers' / strangers' / kid's frame and fear their judgment of you as a parent, or you're insecure in your leadership of your clan, or your expectations are unrealistic for their age, or you're a drunk captain who has failed to OYS as a father

Learn to use the reliable "tell" of anger to uncover your weaknesses, to accelerate your MRP progress.

Gentlemen, tell us in the comments about the last time you were angry, and diagnose the real reason. Own Your Shit!
If you’re not tracking your wife’s menstrual cycle, you need to be. We say it all the time around here and for good reason. We also say AWALT, too, but that doesn’t mean all women act the same in the various stages of their menstrual cycle. Your woman is unique in that regard. You can’t just read a book about mensuration and expect to gain valuable insight to how her behavior and emotions change throughout her cycle. You have to witness it yourself. It behooves you to be aware of how and when she acts and reacts to the chaotic hormonal cycle so you can adjust your own behavior to suit. That’s right, I just said “behooves” motherfuckers.

This is not as difficult or time consuming as you may think it is.

First, you need to use a mobile app to track it. I use and recommend Clue, but other tracking applications exist.

Whether you tell your wife you’re tracking her cycle is up to you. If you’re not sure, I recommend that you don’t. Actually, don’t fucking tell her. At least not to begin with. Early on in my MRP life I tracked privately as I didn’t have the frame to handle it being out in the open. I’m glad I made that decision. But eventually I started implementing not only the insights I gained, but the fact that she knows I’m tracking, into how I game my wife and extinguish her shit tests. Slow roll your shit.

My wife is going to start her period in a few days. I, of course, know this and have been expecting it. I also know that a day or two before it starts, she gets extremely emotional. I know this because I have been tracking her cycle for over a year, and watching for behaviors and patterns associated with the different phases of her cycle. These are her I’m-about-to-start-my-period-signs: crying at stupid things like insurance commercials, showing a general sense of being overwhelmed and unable to handle even a minor crisis, being a big ball of anxiety thinking for sure someone is breaking into our house. Sometimes she even slays her own bizarre shit tests because they’re so outrageously emotional that she catches her self, embarrassed. If I had zero awareness of where she was in her cycle, I may just think she’s being dumpy because Instagram is down or whatever, but because I have that awareness, I can expect it and see it for what it is: a natural, feminine reaction. Nothing to fear. Nothing to get worked up about. I use this opportunity to provide deeper levels of comfort, being her “rock” or “oak” as it were, because this is genuinely what she needs during these times. It also selfishly helps me stay in my own frame, and reminds myself that it’s a choice to affected by someone else’s emotions or not. I choose not to be.

Now… once you have the app installed, you need to figure out how best to keep it updated, and where to get your data.
What kind of time commitment are we talking about here? I don’t have all day to keep logs and sniff panties!

I find that it requires about 1 or 2 minutes per month to keep it accurate enough for my purposes. I collect my data by keeping an eye on our trashcan next to the toilet. Don’t worry, you don’t need to don gloves and go rooting through the garbage every day. When Clue tells you her period is looming, take note of what she’s throwing away. When I’m taking a piss, and notice tampon wrappers starting to pile up in the trashcan, I open Clue to let it know her period has started. Once you’ve been tracking for a few months, you don’t have to even tell Clue that it’s started, but I always do as I’ve found over time that she doesn’t always start at the same time every month. Giving Clue this data gives you a more accurate assessment of her overall cycle, along with when to expect the period to end and ovulation to begin.

As my wife transitions from pre-period to full on bloodbath, her mood changes as well. She’s generally still emotional, but less so than she was leading up to her period. She’s less anxious. More loving. Her second day of menstruation also delivers to her a splitting headache, which is another marker to keep an eye out for. I’m sure your wife will be different, but taking note of repeating factors will help you in the long run by making it easier to spot the trends and provide the type of support that is beneficial to you both.

When her period is a day or so from being over, my wife enters a horny stage, which lasts for a week or so. This is in contrast to the stereotypical scenario where ovulation is when a woman is typically at her horniest. I’m not saying my wife isn’t horny during ovulation, but ovulation—for us—is different. (More on that soon.) Further, her period-stage horniness is not just your run-of-the-mill horniness—it’s a more sensual, rub-me-all-over horniness. She wants to be held closer and tighter. She wants it slower, more methodical and rhythmic. She wants to feel my breath against the back of her neck. She wants to feel my cum inside of her. I am happy to oblige.

Now, what’s more difficult than knowing when she has started her period is figuring out when exactly she’s fully off the rag without asking, but it’s not impossible. Again, you don’t need to tell Clue she stopped bleeding, but doing so will provide even more accuracy for future phases. Since my wife is hornier during this period, we’re generally having more sex, and I take note of when she has to pause a session to slip off to the bathroom before we fuck. (Hey retards: this generally means she has to remove a tampon and therefore is still bleeding.) Sometimes it’s more obvious; she may be worried about getting blood on the sheets, so she makes sure to grab a towel. Maybe you’ll need to be more diligent about emptying the trashcan to be able to tell? I’m not sure. There are a ton of ways to figure it out, and you’re smart, so put on your detective hat and grab your magnifying glass and figure it the fuck out.

A few days after her period has ended, my wife enters the first of her second monthly “normal” periods. By “normal” I mean her libido has returned to a base level, and her shit tests are less thorny and easier to combat. But this doesn’t last too long, because soon we enter...

Ovulation.
This is when my wife tests me the hardest, and when I am more susceptible to losing frame. Even though I know it’s coming, I still have a harder time squashing her shit tests because they’re different. They’re pricklier. This is when my wife is at her most feminine, when she needs to be reminded the most that she married a high value man before spreading her legs. Subconsciously she knows the seed she’s about to receive counts for something, so the barriers are stronger. And even though I’ve been at this for a long time, this is where I need the most improvement.

But this is important: the reason we don’t have the most sex during ovulation has nothing to do with her or her libido — it’s because I have a tougher time with her tests, and therefore we are less likely to have sex during this time than others. Ultimately I am robbing both of us of some of the best sex we can have because of my inability to match her sexual tenacity. Before MRP I saw this tenacity as pure bitchiness with no purpose; before tracking her cycle I saw this as random bitchiness with a purpose, but no connection to sex. Now that I track her cycle, I know that she’s horny but showing it in a completely different way than when she’s horny while on her period. But when I do man the fuck up and slash her expert ovulation shit tests, watch out. It’s combative! A lot of times our sex during ovulation feels more like make-up sex. It’s more raw. It’s carnal. She wants it from behind. She likes her hair pulled, her ass smacked. I am, again, happy to oblige.

After ovulation, my wife enters her second stage of normalcy, which lasts for a few weeks until she starts her period again and the whole cycle starts over again.

Before I tracked her cycle, I had no awareness of why she may be acting a certain way. It was all random. I saw no patterns. I was flying blind. I didn’t know how or when to apply the right types of comfort to the right situations. I didn’t know that she reacted to different types of sex depending on different stages of her cycle.

Tracking her cycle is like stealing signs. You still have to play the game to win, but you’re doing it with a level of insight that can be so effective that it feels like you’re cheating the game.

38, SMV 8, one year LTR with gf, her SMV 7.

Girlfriend was having a rough couple days and she was negative and whiney. It was the first time in a year, and she had some legitimate gripes, but wasn’t handling it well. This is the woman who regularly professes her undying love, best sex ever, wants to move in/get married, etc etc AND has been saying that for the last 9 months.

I bang her, she instantly feels better, she figures out her problems. We start talking about it, and she reminds how I went through a rough patch about six months ago. Then these words come out of her mouth.....

“I remember when you were going through it, it was hard to listen to. I had real doubts about us as a couple.”

Wait, what? She was saying “We’re amazing, you’re great, everything will be fine, I’ll always support you no matter what.”

But what was REALLY going through her head was “I’m going to leave this guy if he doesn’t get his shit together.”

How not to give a F when kids are involved
by MaxyRob | August 8, 2019 | Link

Wife has episodes of severe moodiness followed by good times. After our baby she had severe post-partum depression and was just a bear to be around.

I maintained my positivity, let it roll off, killed it at work, helped out whenever I could, but to a limit. When I couldn't, I had resources ready, night time doula, nanny (which we could easily forward), but she shut on all of it. Eventually, she caved, and agreed I was right. Turns out she's worse without sleep so I'd do a lot of the night-time care until the doula's came, but I'm a surgeon, so when I'm on call, I can't step up. And, I'll be honest, once or twice a month, if I've been working 48-72hr shifts, I'm unable to wake up and ask her to take the night.

Well, despite all of it, she comes to me and says she got a lawyer and is looking to divorce. She feels unhappy with me, that I don't care for her. We talk, usual crap. I say what about the baby, she says what about her own happiness. Giant red flag to me.

So, I accept it and figure out an action plan so I can provide what I can to my baby. This involves my own lawyer, starting to build evidence that I'm a better parent than her so hopefully can win custody, but prepping for the more likely scenario that judges will award to the mother, and I'm going to have to watch her raise my kid, probably at some point with another dude, with NONE of my principles or standards or lessons. Fucking sucks.

Well, 2 months of misery at home (I don't move out, not even out of the bedroom), record everything (I know, not legal, but I want no chances for her to lie about abuse or some shit), and finally she asks "do you think we could see a therapist and try again". Fucking nonsense. Whatever, we go see the therapist. And the therapist actually to my surprise is mostly on my side. She says I need to be more in tune with my wife's feelings, but that's a separate issue. I'm living my life, I'm doing what I can where I see fit, and there is no way I can know what my wife is thinking or feeling if she's holed up and moping and bitching in silence.

My wife then cancels the divorce, agrees to be more open, and things are better. I change pretty much nothing, because, after that whirlwind of misery, I still don't see what I'm doing wrong. I lift, I'm in great shape, make a ton of money, parent, lead, control finances, make plans. It's taken a year of Red Pill reading and living and I'm not perfect every day, but there is no significant event or situation that I'm seeing where I failed.

Well, I had to get to a point in my life where I had to accept being away from my child whom I care more for than anything. It got to the point where I was talking with lawyers to build a trust, transfer my assets into it (lot of real estate), her lawyer didn't even go after the real estate stuff (thank you shared email accounts), and then briefly considered exiting this world for insurance money to round out the remainder of cash so she'd be set for life (turns out, insurances don't work that way anymore). I'm with my wife because I know where she will fail in parenting my child by being a moody bitch during her periods of bitchiness, and her standards for excellence, morality etc. were all lies, she doesn't care or live them, and she won't impart them to our child.

So, when she gets bitchy and moody and I think great, here comes the divorce, I don't care about the divorce. I care about my relationship with my child being compromised. How does one get past this? I tried to reframe my life as nothing more than a sperm donor, but I had a hard time accepting it. My goal is to get to the point that when this divorce threat invariably rears its ugly head again, I don't have to fear, not my wife, but the loss of my child. It's the only worry in my life I don't want right now, nor ever. My job, my money, my career, my businesses, my life I own completely and fully. But as evidenced above, not my family.
I still check in at the DeadBedrooms forum every once in a while, mostly because I find it interesting to compare what's going on there (mostly whining and commiserating with no real process) with the higher levels of knowledge and actual plans for improvement we have here in MRP. This week in DB a poster using a throwaway account (so take its authenticity for what you will) has been posting about how she and her husband, both in their early forties and married for 15 years (together for 20) had no sex for the past five years because the guy became a fat slob and didn't own his shit around the house--left piles of dishes, let his hygiene go, got out of shape--and she "lost sexual attraction towards him" and "started to think he was gross," so she didn't want to have sex with him anymore. Then this guy pulled a full beta and gave up on initiating with her.

Over the past year, she reports, this guy has changed (sounds like maybe he has found and been following the MRP protocol!): he's exercising, dressing better, grooming better, "he seems generally overall happier with himself and it shows in his interactions with [the wife] and everyone else," (frame, bitches!), he doesn't sit around drinking beer but instead goes and does fun shit with his friends "quite a lot nowadays" (all leading to him now Being Attractive), and his bad behaviors "have disappeared" (leading to him Not Being Unattractive).

Then this wife found out (by snooping in his phone) that her husband had been posting in the DB sub and started worrying that he was having an affair (Dread, bitches!).

And lo and behold, now that he has made all these improvements and she worries that he could replace her, she wants to fuck him again! She says, "Through the mixture of generally bettering himself, me being jealous he might cheating and him reinforcing how much he still loves me even after I put him through 5 years of feeling inadequate have brought back my attraction to him, in full force." Holy shit, that's MRP in action and a nutshell all right there. Dude in a no-sex marriage improves himself and raises his SMV, he develops frame, he is attractive and is no longer unattractive, wife gets Dread, wife magically gets tingles and wants sex now!

You can see her original post here:
https://www.reddit.com/r/DeadBedrooms/comments/9gj8h9/ll_wife_here_ready_to_revive_my_deadbedroom/

And this morning she posted a follow-up where she says that she gave the husband a spontaneous, unsolicited BJ last night:
https://www.reddit.com/r/DeadBedrooms/comments/9h4hp2/update_ll_wife_here_ready_to_revive_my_deadbedroom/

DISCLAIMER: Again, this is posted on DB from a throwaway account, so it's always possible that the posts are from a troll or even a plant from some red-pill guy (or anti-redpill guy) looking to make it a commentary on RP methodologies, because it fits our praexology so well. On the other hand, it's also possible that the post is real (she never explicitly mentions RP), and even possible that the husband in this relationship is reading MRP right now. Until proven otherwise, I'm willing to accept it at face value for what it's worth--possible real-world confirmation that the stuff prescribed by MRP works.

EDIT: One more important point I wanted to make--in the original post, this wife frames herself as "LL" (low libido), the term used in DB for the partner with the lower desire for sex. However, her recent turnaround also shows that it's not that she had no desire for SEX, she just didn't have desire to have sex WITH HIM. Her libido itself didn't go away, it just didn't apply to him when he was a fat, irresponsible slob; now that he's in shape and owning his shit, her "low libido" has turned into her posting on DB as to how she can revive their sex life and giving him unsolicited BJs while watching TV.
Learning how to "financial hustle" has been one of the most important developments of my 30's.

I believe the financial hustle is analogous to plate theory, and that is:

Do not invest 100% of your time in any job, and expect great success doing so.

Time is the one resource, that no one can create more of. Therefore, to maximize your hustle you need to devote a certain amount of time to it.

Up until the age of 30 I was a 100% dedicated company man. I did my job, punched in, served my clients and assumed that salary raises, bonuses, etc. would come my way. I was a corporate nice guy.

When I was downsized around the age of 30, I realized that I need to diversify my income stream. This job loss exposed a major single point of failure in my life. I was 30, wife and two kids with less than $5000 in the bank. This was my first taste of real fear. Me going hungry is one thing, my 6mo and 2-year olds? No fucking way. I wanted to get paid multiple different ways. After six months or so I got that new 100% job, and everything was OK again - but something was different this time.

During the six months I was without a job - I had been doing work for my old clients directly. I fired up an LLC and I was a 1099 contractor for them. I invoiced them, and they paid. But it wasn't always on time, 30 days to pay invoices, etc. I couldn't rely on it for a steady stream of income, but at the same time I had bills to pay and kids to feed, so I did what I had to.

Once I got my new 100% job, I debated for a week or so about telling my clients I would no longer have the time to service them. Then I thought - that is silly...why give that income up? Why can't I do both? So that is what I did. Some may say that this is where my moral compass broke, or was readjusted. I have certainly heard that argument from many people.

But red-sfpplus - how can you do that? How can you work a main job, then do a side hustle like that - it is unethical. Whatever bro, you do you. I decided to work my 8-5 job and still take care of my clients on the side.

As time passed, my clients who I did work for just went away by attrition. Nothing anyone did, they either went out of business, sold or whatever. But during this time, I was still working my 100% job, but I was taking that "side money" and spending it on things. I still was not making my money work for me. We were taking vacations, buying stuff, etc. The one thing I did not do was ever get "used" to the money. I never took on any additional debt during this process. It was play money.

After the attrition happened, I was down to my one job. And I was bored and underutilized. I had choice - I can surf reddit all day, or you know what? I am in IT - I can do a 40 hour per week job in 20 hours or less. I have excellent time and expectation management skills. I am very good at making myself appear busy. I always deliver on time, and rarely procrastinate on things.

I decided that I would see if I could get a second full time job doing something similar to what I was doing now. However, I did not want the exact same job - I wanted an easier one. If I made 100K at my main job - I wanted my second job to only pay in the 60K range. This was a strategic move to manage expectations. If I got two high demand, high performing jobs - it would likely be too much. I needed one high, and one low expectation job. So that is what I did.

I was an Architect at Company 1, and an Engineer at Company 2. People at job 2 thought I was greatly overqualified for the job, but they didn't care. I blasted out the work. They probably thought - What is this guy working this job for?

So here I was - I had two jobs. I worked them both remote, neither knew about the other and life was OK. But it still wasn't enough. There was something burning in the back of my mind...

I eventually came to realize, that I was not diversified. All my eggs were still in the IT basket. I still had to GET UP and do work, use my own cycles to generate that income. I wanted income coming from another source completely and I wanted it to come in passively. What happened next, was nothing more than an error turned into luck. I got into real estate by accident. I was getting close to 35 right now and we moved from our hometown to Dallas to start a new life. We could not sell our house back home to save our lives, so I said fuck it - and I rented it out.

I had no idea what I was doing, all I know is that I had to figure it out. I had the house rented out in less than 2 weeks and we moved to Dallas. A year later I read the book "The Millionaire Real Estate Investor" and learned about leverage of assets. This book, changed my life as much as The Rational Male provided clarity.

Real Estate has always fascinated me. People are programmed from the time they are kids to "buy a house, get married and have kids" - why should I not exploit that line of thinking? I do not need to sell them on the idea of home ownership, that has already happened. So that is what I did.

So now, a year later at 36 or so we have moved - I have my two IT jobs, and now I have a revenue stream coming from our home we own back home. What is next? LEVERAGE. Leverage the equity you have.

And this is when it has gone from 20mph to 100mph. In the last few years I have dedicated my time to learning about financial investment, and leverage of assets. It takes less capital than you think - you just have to be willing to lose it all. But that is OK because I have my pyramid and multiple points of fall back. No one will go hungry.

How many of you are sitting on 50K in equity in your home? What if you took that 50K and purchased another home to rent out? Now you have two assets generating income, someone else is paying your mortgage, you buy a homeowner's warranty policy to cover shit that breaks, and you just chill? What if I said that is exactly what my next move was?

I continue to grow my financial hustle. I continue to learn and grow my skill set. I have learned that the only person that gets 100% of me - is me. How many people go all out at that job they have - they put 100% of themselves into it. The only one benefiting from that relationship is your employer.

Now I take the opposite approach. I purposefully do not try to "max" myself out at any single employer. I specifically look for the job that does not max out my capabilities and skill set, I look at each one with a different lens and see what value I can extract from them to fuel my mission. All I want from these people is "X" amount of money or benefits. Nothing else. I do not expect them to ever be an LTE (Long Term Employer). Would you rather have one main job that pays you $150K a year, or two? One that pays $110K and another at $60K? Which combination is easier to get? Which one maximizes your time and abilities? Which scenario gives you a fall back in case of unexpected unemployment?

So, as I come full circle - what I learned at the age of 30, is that there is ZERO, and I mean ZERO corporate loyalty anymore. If you think that showing up 40 hours a week, punching a clock and putting 6% into your 401K is a good plan, well friend you have some things to think about.

I structure my hustle like a pyramid. My main "job" is my base. It covers all my expenses, provides benefits, etc. It is a job that is pretty close to what I would want, if I only had one job. My secondary job, I really do not care about. It gets little time and attention, other than what is necessary to "do the job." It is probably 50% or less of my actual abilities. If it last 12-24 months, then great. There are more out there.

Real Estate is my first passive income stream. I have two families that go to work, and pay my mortgage payment, plus a little more AND I own the assets. I can use THEIR equity they pay me, to leverage into other things that make me money. This is the power of leverage as you begin to understand it. It is a very powerful concept, and one that is hard to appreciate until you experience it for yourself.

Financial investing is my "passive aggressive" income stream. It takes as much time as my main job as I am still learning, but also carries the most risk/reward. I am new to this. It started about a year ago and it is so far doing OK. But we will see.

When you add up all these things, you get to the 100% of my financial hustle capacity. Even if I lose my base job - Job #1 - it is OK because I have a lifestyle that can easily be retracted if needed.

We talk about books a lot here, so I will add some of my favorites:

Total Money Makeover

The Millionaire Next Door
The Millionaire Real Estate Investor

The Power of Habit

All of these books, have been instrumental in me learning how to leverage the money I make with my TIME into more money, thus freeing up more time to do other interesting things.

When I explain this to people, people kind of look at me sideways. There was no grand plan on any of this, in fact quite the opposite. You could say it has almost been one fuck up after another. Most people shit their pants when they have a house they can't sell. Meh, turn that shit into a positive. Move on with life and grow.

I have made a personal goal, that my "retirement career" will be different than my "youth career" I do not want to be in IT when I am 50. I do not want to have 2 IT jobs at 50. Ideally 0 IT jobs at 50 would be great.

But, only time will tell...
The Contrast, The Polarity.

by JDRoedell | November 24, 2018 | Link

It’s painfully obvious that gender relations are in peril these days. It’s a cultural problem that is getting worse. The solution is a grassroots solution executed on the individual level. The more alike men and women are, the more we lose our gender identities and the more we don’t play well together.

It's a simple concept really. Be the man. Let her be the woman. As Rian Stone says, "don't get in your own way. Don't step on your own dick." The road to execution of this simple concept is not always clear though. It's muddled by external conditioning of today. "Plugged in" men don't even know the road is there.

I play the drums in a hobbyist band, and one of the most important elements when creating a solid groove is the contrast between sounds; the loud and soft, the bass and the snare. The loud and even the silence. The space between the notes means just as much as the punch of the bass drum or the cracking backbeat of the snare. It's that complimenting dichotomy of these sounds that allows the instrument to drive a song or play a catchy solo on it's own. One of my favorite drummers, John Bonham of Led Zeppelin, was a master at this. Critics would always say his use of space was like no other, which he used to great effect. Listen to the groove in “When the Levee Breaks” or “Good Times Bad Times” as a few examples. It is this dichotomy and space that makes a good groove worth listening to.

Just as the masculine is lacking without the feminine, the feminine doesn't have an identity without the masculine. This is the core of intersexual dynamics. The more alike men and women are, the more we lose our gender identities and the more we don't play well together.

This is the problem with modern Feminism, it seeks to strip men and women of our designed gender roles. Roles that have been programmed into us by hundreds of thousands of years of evolution. When I refer to Feminism, I’m not referring to the core “Civil Rights Feminism” of the late 1800s and early 1900s; The right to vote, the right to work and be paid the same as a man for the same work. Those were reasonable goals and have long since been achieved but Feminism presses on in a counterproductive, loud march, seeking some elusive status of "equality" that also seems bent on stripping men of any authority, destroying marriage and destroying the family and motherhood in the process.

Feminism of today seeks to make women more like men and turn men into more feminine versions of themselves. The result is a loss of arousal, increased conflict and the creation of men and women trying to occupy the same "space." Going back to the drum analogy, when two similar tones or audio signatures exist at the same place in time, it muddles the sound. Don't muddle the sound of your marriage or your LTR.

Be that contrast. The more you fulfill your masculine role (and that will be different for every man), the easier you make it for her to fill her feminine role. Dress like a man; pay attention to fit and cut. Pay attention to colors. There are plenty of guides and consultants in the Manosphere with good examples (Tanner Guzy, AlphaM are just a few you should check out if you're struggling in this realm).

It's ok to not be "vulnerable" and sensitive. It's ok to show emotion but make it count and don't emote like a woman. If you do, you're essentially "occupying the same acoustic space" as your wife, and over time she'll resent you for it. Don't steal her emotional thunder and she won't steal your masculine energy. If she's upset about something, then listen. Parrot back some acknowledging words, condemn the villain (or congratulate her success) in the story. Give her a hug and then go chop wood, work on your car, lift weights or something that sets you apart from her.

To bring it back to my drum analogy, many of John Bonham's fans said the notes he DIDN'T play were almost more compelling than those he did. Remember, women talk, men do. Don't be flapping your jaw every time some thought, feeling or annoyance pops into your head. Women do that. Don't steal her acoustic space. Make your words and opinions few but powerful. Leave some mystery to your thoughts, it's sexy, it's masculine, it allows her to be feminine.

Feed off of her feminine energy. Compliment your wife or LTR when she gets dolled up, wears makeup, puts on the sexy shoes. She's embracing her feminine energy. If she's emoting and looking for your attention and she's been a good compliment to your life that week, then give her that attention (DL4). This is how women communicate and how they seek attention and closeness. Don't deny her that, it's equivalent to her denying sex to you. Now, don't give your attention away for free if she's not holding up her end of the relationship (which is her responsibility BTW) but don't miss opportunities to feed off and reward feminine energy.

Create the contrast. Have a Mission. Have a drive, a purpose, a mission. This doesn't have to be some lofty career goal like running for political office or being a CEO. It could be a hobby you want to immerse yourself in, it could be a fitness goal, it could be a financial goal. Give your wife some framework, which you created, for her to work in and around. Maybe your hobby is just for you... great. Be gone more. It builds that tension and that complimentary dichotomy between you and her. And most importantly, you're not there, so you can't be talking too much and stepping on your own dick.

It's ok to display masculine power and strength. Hell, it's encouraged if you are serious about creating that polarity and contrast. Lift weights. Aesthetic results will not come quickly or easily, but nothing that matters ever does. What does come rushing into your body and brain almost immediately from lifting weights is the feeling of accomplishment, discomfort, endorphins and motivation. The effects of weightlifting will begin to change your attitude, your posture and you're assertiveness almost overnight. The physical gains come later.

Show her. Pick your woman up occasionally; for fun, for connection, just because. Trigger her biological programming which responds to things like that. Open the pickle jar when she can't, fix something around the house. There is ZERO excuse these days for any man to not be able to change a car tire, fix minor plumbing issues, replace appliance components or a light fixture. Youtube makes this so easy.
Create that contrast, be the man, and she will respond in kind with feminine energy. It may take months or even years for some, but you'll be a better, more capable man either way. I remember a time when I encouraged my wife to not wear makeup, to not dress up like a real woman. This was partly because I do find her attractive "as is" but it was also because I was "plugged in" as a blue-pill beta. Even as I said stuff like that, my subconscious screamed at me that something wasn't right. I didn't listen... for years. That's how powerful the blue-pill conditioning is. Now I show and tell her when she looks sexy. I reward it. Because I appreciate it.

Ignore the radical feminists and their "allies." Embrace masculinity... be the masculine so she can be the feminine.
I startled a skunk. Seeing the tail rise, I ran to the house, thinking it didn't get me.

"Whew! I almost got sprayed by a skunk!"

Seconds later, the foul stench caught up to me.

We ran to the laundry room, past the thongs and bras that were hanging to dry. I tossed my clothes into the washing machine, and instructed her to run it with OxiClean while I went to the shower.

"Could you fill a basin with white vinegar and dish soap? And bring the white face cloths."

Moments later, she appeared with a basin of 5% vinegar and dish soap. I covered myself in it. Standing naked behind the glass shower door, I discussed with her what needed to be done next.

After I had been soaking in vinegar for 25 minutes, she returned from the store with their entire stock of hydrogen peroxide and double strength Febreze. She provided consecutive basins of fresh peroxide, dish soap, and baking soda for me to clean my body as she cleaned and deodorized the house.

Each time she returned with a fresh bowl of peroxide, she had something to say.

The first thing it says on the Internet is not to go in the house. The whole house is going to smell!

(laughs) "Stand naked in the back yard for a couple of hours? With a skunk and mosquitos back there? No way. Besides, the neighbors might not appreciate it!"

All my delicates stink! What if we can't get the smell out?

"When my clothes are done, run the delicates with OxiClean - it will get rid of the smell. If it doesn't, then we'll go to the store together and buy you some new pretty underwear..."

If you smell like skunk, you can't sleep in the bedroom.

"Haha, yeah, maybe I should sleep in a hotel!"

Is that stuff okay for your skin?

"Meh, just a bit of a chemical burn. (laughs) Did you spray the kids' backpacks? I don't want them to stink when they go to school."

How are you doing?
(steps out of the shower, stands naked in front of her)

"You tell me."

She laid her hands on me, sniffing, laughing, decompressing.

| It's late, come to bed.

"Sounds good. Can you grab me some clothes?"

"That was fun, in a twisted sort of way."

Each of her comments was calmer and happier than the last, as she overcame her anxiety and settled back into my frame. Anger, frustration, and helplessness would have had the opposite effect. Her behavior was a reflection of mine.

It was late, so we slept. The next day, she was all over me.

Every night is date night. She will remember the skunk episode more than any restaurant or show. She excitedly recounts the story to anyone who will listen.

Prerequisites:

- Look good naked.

- Laugh about and enjoy a situation that others would consider misfortune.

- Hold frame. Your purpose is her purpose. By your side is where she is meant to be.

- Always be closing.
The Mods decided to give me the juice. Most likely because I’ve been here from the beginning spending way too much time on this sub writing millions of words for my fellow Masculine Married Men. With that said, I’ve noticed a negative trend in how men deal with quality posts and comments.

Plugged in dudes (and hordes of BP users) get angry and down vote anything that they view to be outside their realm of comfort or comprehension.

Red Pill dudes will read a quality post and then apply it to their situation or they will mentally chew on it; looking at it from different angles, and coming to the conclusion that, Yes, OP has a point and I agree or disagree with it. They will then post their comment as to why they support or disagree with the post.

The issue here is that the Vote isn’t a part of the equation. Masculine men aren’t looking to ‘give props’ to other men, they are looking to ‘talk’ with them and share ideas. This is how it works in the ‘real world’ I understand that, and I’m sure most of you do as well. But, here on Reddit, that vote is the difference between good content being seen or it getting ‘lost in the sauce’.

I am very liberal with my up and down vote for this exact reason and I’m asking that all subscribed users take this approach as well. Sometimes I feel gay for giving an upvote, but I recognize that it’s the only way we can impact the quality of information that is being put out.

Whether it is a post or comment, the only means to maintaining the highest standard is to participate. It’s kind of like voting in real life, you don’t vote you can’t complain that bullshit posts are on top and solid pieces of golden information are at the bottom. It’s on us, the Moderators to ensure that the sub-par performers are removed and educated. It’s on the entire community to collectively work together to ensure that the highest standard is maintained and that we set the bar from which excellence is measured.

We currently have 6,308 subscribers which is roughly 100 more than yesterday. /r/TRP has 138,011, /r/AskMRP 856, & /r/RedPillFatherhood 405. We are a small community, which means we have more control and more interaction between members. For those who have been here a while, I’m sure you can name 5 users off the top of your head that aren’t Mods.

With all of this said, I will again ask that you upvote the information you feel is worthy of it, and down vote the information that sucks. If you’re indifferent, then fuck it, don’t vote. But remember, we are the deciding factors as to whether this sub becomes a wasteland or it sustains the level of performance and high standard of quality posts we’ve been able to maintain up to this point.

I've been pretty lean my whole life, I could eat whatever I wanted and it would burn right off. I was skinny like that when I first got with my girl. We both had a lot of fun going out and eating junk foods and spending our time worrying about things other than what types of calories are in that meal. Unfortunately as I get older, that strategy doesn't work as well as it used to. After many years of saying "fuck it, lets just order pizza", I discovered the red pill and got my slap in the face and decided I was done being a loser and wanted to improve myself. I knew it would be hard work but there was no going back as my eyes were already opened. The biggest first step I took was cutting out junk food and eating a ton of lean protein rich foods that would allow me to keep progressing on the SL 5x5 program. I basically ate chicken, rice, veggies, oatmeal, eggs and yogurt. Like, all day everyday, and basically overnight. The day before I ate a whole pizza, and now all I want is plain grilled chicken because I realized how disgusting I was. My girlfriend didn't mind at first; she has been a sucker for quick fix 30 day diets and stuff before. She probably figured it would be 30 days of starvation, then we would go back to normal. About 6 weeks in, she started to realize that this change was permanent.

This is when the shit tests started coming, and they will come for you too.

Food isn't supposed to be as delicious and easy as it is now-a-days. Food used to be a reward for strong and brave men, and now you can roll through a burger joint in your mobility scooter and get enough food to feed a small warrior tribe. Your ancestors ate raw eye balls and hearts, so you can eat bland chicken breast with rice and hot sauce. It can be tasty if you make it right, but at the end of the day, tasty or not shouldn't matter. Getting the nutrients your body needs to keep fighting and surviving and growing is all that matters. We've been lucky enough to live in a very fortunate time (at least in the west), and many people have grown accustomed to flavor injected, sugar added and good feeling inducing foods. Mcdonalds spends 3 Million dollars a day trying to convince people to buy their food. With that much money in the game, its bound to work on a lot of people.

My girlfriend is one of those people. She has never really been fat, but she enjoys the feelings that greasy fatty junk food gives you when you eat it. She'll take pizza over chicken and rice any day. Its no secret that women are more emotional than men, and fatty and sugary foods release good emotions in humans. Because of that, it wasn't a total shock when my girlfriend started resisting my dietary changes, but what I didn't expect was how hard she would test me over them. I have a strong feeling that most of you guys who make dramatic dietary changes like I did will also experience similar resistance. So I'm going to share a strategy that helped me get through these tests and push through the bullshit during this time.

One of the biggest reasons my girlfriend was testing my new diet, aside from general testing of my frame, is that eating clean and healthy can be very boring, and women absolutely hate being bored. Its exciting ordering out, it gives you something to talk about, the food is usually tastier, and you can order something different everyday. So, how did I keep my girlfriend from getting bored with my new diet and our new routine? I put her ass to work. As the Captain of your ship, you need to take control of your kitchen and what comes out of it and don't be afraid to delegate tasks. It's been known for awhile over on the main RP sub, that one of the most successful dating strategies is to invite a girl over, cook for her, but tell her what to do and order her around your kitchen. "Chop that while I wash this", "Wash this while I chop that" "Come here...hold this"...etc. Anytime you are telling your girl what to do, and she is doing it, she is in your frame and you are doing it right. Just make sure you know how to be charming and fun while you do it. Even if she isn't eating your grilled chicken, have her make a salad or something healthy that the two of you can share. Keeping her busy by bossing her around and teasing her will help her associate positive things with healthy cooking and eating. The cooking part is usually the hardest and most boring part of eating healthy, so learn to make it fun and it will go a long way.

Next, is to just focus on you. I get home and my girl tells me she wants to order pizza and just watch tv? I tell her great, enjoy, I'm going to eat oatmeal, or grill up some chicken. Eating dinner doesn't have to be a team event, and having the mindset that you need to eat the same meals together will only hold you back. You should already be putting yourself ahead of your wife, and should be the #1 priority in your own life, so taking care of yourself while she doesn't shouldn't be a hard concept to grasp. Just because you're captain healthy all of a sudden, doesn't mean that she will be too. In fact, she probably won't give two shits about what you're eating until she can see actual results. Eating all the lean foods in the world is pointless to her if it doesn't give you abs or increase your SMV. Don't waste your time arguing, explaining or trying to compromise. You are the only one responsible for what you put into your body. The beer gut, double chin, or fat arms might have been gained together with your woman, but at the end of the day you are responsible for yourself. If you get fat because you enjoy eating junk food with your wife every night, it won't matter at all to her when she decides to leave your ass for the hot gym coach down the street. At the end of the day, you're on your own and she isn't on your team. Too many guys get caught up on trying to get their women on the healthy and fit bandwagon, and ask for tips and tricks on how to do it and get frustrated that she isn't coming along. I could have probably spent an extra hour or two in the gym a week with all the time some guys spend trying to get their women to eat healthy with them. As we should all know around here, you cannot change her behavior, you can only change yourself. Don't argue, don't fight, don't guilt or shame, just STFU and eat healthy. As she sees you getting more and more attractive and fit, she will be more likely to adapt to your new changes and come along with you, and if not, its really not hard for a fit, attractive and confident guy to upgrade to a better women if he wants.

Feel free to comment about what worked/didn't work with your new diet and your woman. Also, what's your favorite hot sauce?

Mine are:

1. Tabasco
2. Tapatio
3. El Yucateco
Franks Red Hot users please GTFO.

Throwaway due to poor OpSec in the past. I've been around for a while and she's aware of MRP but I'd prefer not to feed the hamster if I can avoid it.

My life has done a complete 180 in the last 1-2 years, due in no small part to the MRP philosophy. To put it all in context, me and wifey have been together roughly 15 years, married for half of it, with 3 kids (5, 4 and 2.5). Fortunately I was never a career beta - it was having children that made everything go sideways for me. I may not have bought into the "happy wife happy life" mentality of servitude but having no experience with children, I did let her take the lead when they arrived and that's when the trouble really started. Lots of fighting for a while - and I fought back hard, but it was just an angry version of DEERing. There was no universe where I would have remained married to her if something didn't give, but for the time being leaving was off the table because I didn't want to abandon the kids while they were so little. Somehow I ended up here, and it was the catalyst for everything that happened next.

For many the red pill is bitter one but for me it was refreshing. The truth behind it was immediately apparent. It took a huge weight off my shoulders because everything finally made sense. And then I got to work. Struggled with it at first and went a bit Rambo because I had internally shifted my mentality practically overnight. She eventually found out about this place, read all my posts and that precipitated a main event and many aftershocks - but because I wasn't a career beta any accusations that I was "faking it" or "following a script" were just met with a "shrug, if that's what helps you sleep at night." In either case, while fighting it on the surface she responded incredibly well over time, and it's gone far beyond the bedroom or my marriage - everything from my physique to my career has improved dramatically.

There was a recent situation that was the perfect demonstration of how night and day things are now compared to just a short while ago. Something that probably needs more emphasis to the new guys is how much your wife's behavior changes towards you when you man up - at first it's fight after fight and it feels like you'll be fighting an uphill battle for the rest of your life. The shit tests will never stop but they do ease up - it's not just you getting better at them. The part that I never fully recognized until recently is how much happier she clearly is now. Overtly she'd probably still say she wants no part of this MRP stuff, but her behavior speaks for itself. She's far less anxious and angry than before, we joke around like we're still dating, and it's like the discovery channel in the bedroom again. She was great in bed from the start so I've always known she's had it in her, but even just a year ago it felt like something that was lost and never coming back. I can only imagine how shocking it is to someone who's never seen what their woman is really capable of before.

But anyway, a few years ago we put new flooring in a room, and this year we did another - and the way they played out could not have been more different.
Back then: expecting that she'd fight me if she didn't like the choice, I just told her to pick it out. She begrudgingly picked a few from a website, I told her which one I liked, and of course she preferred another. Fight ensued - "why'd you even ask me then?" I say, and I tell her to just order whatever she wanted. The most expensive one of course (another fight), and I didn't care for it to begin with (but didn't say anything) - but I played along in the name of peace, even though the situation was anything but peaceful. When we received them she hated the color because it didn't match the pictures....and somehow that was my fault? Fight fight fight over literally everything, even though I was trying my hardest to avoid it.

Now: I ordered samples, decided there were only two I liked, and asked for her input. She didn't have a preference and didn't seem to want to think about it, so we left it there. I mulled it over for a day, then made a decision and ordered it online at work. She got a fraud alert on our CC - asked me if I knew anything about it, told her "yeah I ordered the flooring." Which prompted a solid shit test about how she didn’t think the discussion was settled - I simply responded with "is there a problem?" She shot back "It doesn't matter to you anymore anyway, does it?" Shrug and STFU, and instead of fuming and fighting about it. When we got back from work, it was like that little tiff never happened. That's one thing that still really takes me aback sometimes - how she can be shitty one moment, and standing my ground makes her visibly upset and ready to fight it out....and then moments later after not engaging, she's all smiles. Look at the difference already though - back then it was one fight after another and neither of us were happy, this year it was a single shitty moment that rolled off of me anyway, and we were both still in a good mood.

Back then: I asked her what she thought of the idea of us DIYing it together. She flipped out, saying I have no idea what I’m doing so why would I even suggest that, we don’t have the time for it anyway, and told me to find an installer. I find a few installers on yelp, ask her what she thinks, she had a problem with all of them. She said to just go through Home Depot, I never questioned it, and we paid almost as much as the floor cost itself just to have it installed. I was furious inside about how much it all cost but I just wanted her to stop bitching and so I did exactly what she said she wanted. Even just picking the day to have it done was another fight - my constant deference to her was an attempt to please her because she always had a problem with everything....and yet she always found another problem. I was convinced she was just an impossible woman that refused to do anything but see the bad in the situation - I was utterly convinced it was all her fault.

Now: I told her I was going to DIY it. She asked if I knew what I was doing, and I just said "I'll figure it out." No argument back. I told her what day I was going to do it and I needed to focus with no kids around, and suggested she should take the kids to her parents house for the day. No argument, she made it happen.

Back then: The installers were late. Somehow that was my fault, she even blamed me for choosing them - even though she chose them! They took all day, disrupting our weekend plans, and when all was said and done it was a great job with a few minor flaws. She gave me so much shit over those minor little nitpicks even though I never touched a plank. She said she wished we never got it done and I flipped out. From start to finish I deferred to her on everything, yet somehow I was at fault for everything that went wrong!? Even though in the end it was an expensive floor, professionally installed and looked objectively great, it was a total shitshow from start to finish. Needless to say I didn't get any that night. Not like I've been getting any for months....and it would be dry starfish anyway.

Now: She took the kids to the in-laws, and I got to work early. I started pulling up the old floor and found out the hard way that it was a lot more work than I thought it would be, but I got it done. Knowing that I couldn't finish it all that day, I asked her if she could stay the night with the kids so I could work through. She said "I guess so" a little reluctantly, but said she needed sleepover stuff for the kids. I told her I needed to go to the store anyway, and that I'd bring clothes and pizza. Back then I probably would have even asked her which clothes to pick and what to get for dinner, and it would probably have been just another failed shit test - this year I just decided and she happily went along. I worked late into the night and through the next morning - and while I got it all done I made a lot of visible rookie mistakes. When she finally saw it, what was her reaction? "Looks great! I love it! Hmm...what's happened with that area in the corner though?" Told her how I didn't realize my mistake until far too late and I'd have to pull up the whole floor to fix it then "right" way, but that I'd find a solution. She said "Ok, I'll leave you to it...I really like it though!" I told her there was one last thing I needed to nail down on the floor, and I'll leave the rest to your imagination.

Overall - back then I deferred to her at every step, we fought at every step, and even though the finished product was objectively very good, it was a miserable experience for both of us and we both hated the end product because of it. This time I decisively acted from start to finish, we didn't fight at all despite it being twice as disruptive to our lives, and in the end, even though it was a less expensive floor and an objectively mediocre install and end product- both of us were stoked with how well everything turned out. Not to mention I'm a million times more satisfied with the floor because I built it with my own hands. The thing that made the difference was my mentality and how I approached the situation proactively, decisively and dominant instead of passively and deferential.

This is how much your life changes when you take charge of it. All of the bickering wasn't because she was an incorrigible harpy bitch, the dead bedroom wasn't because that's what's supposed to happen after marriage. The reason you're not getting what you want out of life - it was you, all along. Even when stuff goes wrong how you approach it makes all the difference in the end. This is just one example but I could give 100 more. Life is generally awesome now. It's far from perfect but I'm no longer a victim to my circumstances, and I never will be ever again.
I found this a while back and it had a big impact on me. Enjoy guys. Might be a repost...but worth reposting.

IRON AND THE SOUL by Henry Rollins

I believe that the definition of definition is reinvention. To not be like your parents. To not be like your friends. To be yourself. Completely.

When I was young I had no sense of myself. All I was, was a product of all the fear and humiliation I suffered. Fear of my parents. The humiliation of teachers calling me “garbage can” and telling me I’d be mowing lawns for a living. And the very real terror of my fellow students. I was threatened and beaten up for the color of my skin and my size. I was skinny and clumsy, and when others would tease me I didn’t run home crying, wondering why. I knew all too well. I was there to be antagonized. In sports I was laughed at. A spaz. I was pretty good at boxing but only because the rage that filled my every waking moment made me wild and unpredictable. I fought with some strange fury. The other boys thought I was crazy.

I hated myself all the time.

As stupid at it seems now, I wanted to talk like them, dress like them, carry myself with the ease of knowing that I wasn’t going to get pounded in the hallway between classes. Years passed and I learned to keep it all inside. I only talked to a few boys in my grade. Other losers. Some of them are to this day the greatest people I have ever known. Hang out with a guy who has had his head flushed down a toilet a few times, treat him with respect, and you’ll find a faithful friend forever. But even with friends, school sucked. Teachers gave me hard time.

I didn’t think much of them either.

Then came Mr. Pepperman, my advisor. He was a powerfully built Vietnam veteran, and he was scary. No one ever talked out of turn in his class. Once one kid did and Mr. P. lifted him off the ground and pinned him to the black board. Mr. P. could see that I was in bad shape, and one Friday in October he asked me if I had ever worked out with weights. I told him no. He told me that I was going to take some of the money that I had saved and buy a hundred pound set of weights at Sears. As I left his office, I started to think of things I would say to him on Monday when he asked about the weights that I was not going to buy. Still, it made me feel special. My father never really got that close to caring. On Saturday I bought the weights, but I couldn’t even drag them to my mom’s car. An attendant laughed at me as he Monday came and I was called into Mr. P.’s office after school. He said that he was going to show me how to work out. He was going to put me on a program and start hitting me in the solar plexus in the hallway when I wasn’t looking. When I could take the punch we would know that we were getting somewhere. At no time was I to look at myself in the mirror or tell anyone at school what I was doing. In the gym he showed me ten basic exercises. I paid more attention than I ever did in any of my classes. I didn’t want to blow it. I went home that night and started right in.

Weeks passed, and every once in a while Mr. P. would give me a shot and drop me in the hallway, sending my books flying. The other students didn’t know what to think. More weeks passed, and I was steadily adding new weights to the bar. I could sense the power inside my body growing. I could feel it.

Right before Christmas break I was walking to class, and from out of nowhere Mr. Pepperman appeared and gave me a shot in the chest. I laughed and kept going. He said I could look at myself now. I got home and ran to the bathroom and pulled off my shirt. I saw a body, not just the shell that housed my stomach and my heart. My biceps bulged. My chest had definition. I felt strong. It was the first time I can remember having a sense of myself. I had done something and no one could ever take it away.

You couldn’t say shit to me.

It took me years to fully appreciate the value of the lessons I have learned from the Iron. I used to think that it was my adversary, that I was trying to lift that which does not want to be lifted. I was wrong. When the Iron doesn’t want to come off the mat, it’s the kindest thing it can do for you. If it flew up and went through the ceiling, it wouldn’t teach you anything. That’s the way the Iron talks to you. It tells you that the material you work with is that which you will come to resemble.

That which you work against will always work against you.

It wasn’t until my late twenties that I learned that by working out I had given myself a great gift. I learned that nothing good comes without work and a certain amount of pain. When I finish a set that leaves me shaking, I know more about myself. When something gets bad, I know it can’t be as bad as that workout.

I used to fight the pain, but recently this became clear to me: pain is not my enemy; it is my call to greatness. But when dealing with the Iron, one must be careful to interpret the pain correctly. Most injuries involving the Iron come from ego. I once spent a few weeks lifting weight that my body wasn’t ready for and spent a few months not picking up anything heavier than a fork. Try to lift what you’re not prepared to and the Iron will teach you a little lesson in restraint and self-control.

I have never met a truly strong person who didn’t have self-respect. I think a lot of inwardly and outwardly directed contempt passes itself off as self-respect: the idea of raising yourself by stepping on someone’s shoulders instead of doing it yourself. When I see guys working out... for cosmetic reasons, I see vanity exposing them in the worst way, as cartoon characters, billboards for imbalance and insecurity. Strength reveals itself through character. It is the difference between bouncers who get off strong-arming people and Mr. Pepperman.

Muscle mass does not always equal strength. Strength is kindness and sensitivity. Strength is understanding that your power is both physical and emotional. That it comes from the body and the mind. And the heart.

Yukio Mishima said that he could not entertain the idea of romance if he was not strong. Romance is such a strong and overwhelming passion, a weakened body cannot sustain it for long. I have some of my most romantic thoughts when I am with the Iron. Once I was in love with a woman. I thought about her the most when the pain from a workout was racing through my body.

Everything in me wanted her. So much so that sex was only a fraction of my total desire. It was the single most intense love I have ever felt, but she lived far away and I didn’t see her very often. Working out was a healthy way of dealing with the loneliness. To this day, when I work out I usually listen to ballads.

I prefer to work out alone.

It enables me to concentrate on the lessons that the Iron has for me. Learning about what you’re made of is always time well spent, and I have found no better teacher. The Iron had taught me how to live. Life is capable of driving you out of your mind. The way it all comes down these days, it’s some kind of miracle if you’re not insane. People have become separated from their bodies. They are no longer whole.

I see them move from their offices to their cars and on to their suburban homes. They stress out constantly, they lose sleep, they eat badly. And they behave badly. Their egos run wild; they become motivated by that which will eventually give them a massive stroke. They need the Iron Mind.

Through the years, I have combined meditation, action, and the Iron into a single strength. I believe that when the body is strong, the mind thinks strong thoughts. Time spent away from the Iron makes my mind degenerate. I wallow in a thick depression. My body shuts down my mind.

The Iron is the best antidepressant I have ever found. There is no better way to fight weakness than with strength. Once the mind and body have been awakened to their true potential, it’s impossible to turn back.

The Iron never lies to you. You can walk outside and listen to all kinds of talk, get told that you’re a god or a total bastard. The Iron will always kick you the real deal. The Iron is the great reference point, the all-knowing perspective giver. Always there like a beacon in the pitch black. I have found the Iron to be my greatest friend. It never freaks out on me, never runs. Friends may come and go. But two hundred pounds is always two hundred pounds.

The cruise.

This is long for a reason fuckers. It's because I loved doing it and it made a difference.

I went a little Rambo on our last vacation but it was awesome. I made the reservations for the cruise about 2 months after finding MRP. We were going to celebrate our anniversary and I made all the plans and basically told my wife to be ready. Of note is that my wife is a solid 9 which makes this MRP shit very difficult.

I made up my mind to hit the ship like George Clooney playing Frank Sinatra in a movie about a cruise ship. And I kept that attitude for 90% is the trip. Flew into Miami and got the Uber to the hotel in North Beach instead of foundering around. Got a recommendation for a restaurant and the first story worth mentioning begins.

Got to the restaurant and waitress is a Hb9 from Eastern Europe. Order for my wife (new thing and she likes it after she tells me what she wants) Flirt a little and when the wife goes to the bathroom ask her if she is on Facebook while handing her my phone. She friends me up and we talk. Wife comes back and wants another beer. Stop the server and while asking her for the drink decide to use some Kino and put my hand on her hip. She fucking leans in instead of moving away. When she turns to leave reach out and touch her other hip to stop her and order another drink for me. When she left my wife tells me, "If you ever touch another woman like that again I'll stab you.". I laugh it off and she laughs too.

Later back to the room, throw her on the bed and tell her it's happening. She offers the token last minute resistance and then demands I close the curtains because the adjacent balconies could see in. I do it because I want to fuck. I get her off but can't myself due to the whiskey dick so I stop. She goes to the bathroom and I put on underwear and go out to the balcony. It's 1am and we are on the 9th floor right on the beach. She comes out after going to the bathroom in a silk baby doll nighty I got her for the trip. Eventually comes over to me and I put her hands in the railing before railing her from behind, pulling the negligee up around her neck the whole time. I should mention there was someone smoking 3 balconies down, could only see their hand moving out around the half wall. So, dread got the close the curtain girl to fuck me on the balcony while I lifted her negligee around her neck. Interesting.

Next day got us from hotel to harbor and on the boat without any hesitation or asking for directions etc. Made it a point to learn all the serving staff names as well as two of the bartenders. Each night checked the schedule for the next day and programmed it into my phone the night so I had our schedule planned all day long. Obviously the food was good but I made sure we never ate at the buffet and of course my luggage was packed with my new wardrobe so we can dress up every night and go to dinner.

Next incident of note.
The first night we went to the dance club and my wife is not much of a dancer after about three songs but while we were dancing two smoke show blondes who were about 25 years old came and danced with each other next to us before my wife sat down. Then they proceeded to dance with me. Wife was shooting me some dirty looks but I just laugh back. Talk to them and find out where they are from and introduce my wife. We had some more drinks and then my wife said she was tired as well as being pretty drunk. I tucked her into bed after making sure I took care of my needs first. I basically had my way with her every night on this cruise except for one which is very unusual. I told her I would bring her up some food and went back down to the restaurant and of course ran into the two blondes with some of their friends and ended up eating with them. By the end of that meal I had to tell them to stop because I was old enough to be their dad. So now my name for the rest of the cruise was Daddy or Papi.

Next day I participate in the sexy legs connect at the adult pool. Fuck around and use a fake Aussie accent and tell the cruise coordinator my name is Shaun and the women go batshit. My wife is hating it and loving it, laughing and all the women around her giving her the feelz. Later that night and throughout the cruise people are shouting Australia! and Shaun! and waving. They are recognizing my wife in the lounges etc. even when she is without me. She was loving it. We basically are involved in every on boat game show, kareoke, and contest at my direction. By day three, tons of people are stopping us to chat and buying us drinks.

I made sure we dressed up for every dinner. After dinner on night too we were walking to the casino and I can see the two blondes further on down the aisle. We make eye contact and one of them jumps up pulling the other by hand and starts to walk towards us. The second one gives a very loud "Daddy!". As we continue walking towards them my wife looks at me with more than a little anger and ask me, "Did she just fucking call you Daddy?". I just laughed and shrugged and introduced her to both of them by name again. I was able to maintain frame and AA through the small tantrum that followed. Of course that night was a tornado of fire in the sack.

Mind you there are five thousand people on this boat, but we can call about 20 of them by name and are hanging out with a multitude of groups. My wife's having a blast and looking to me for what to do next. There's a comedy show in the big theater in the front of the boat on night four which we attend. Right before the show starts I get up to go take a piss I have to walk the length of the whole theater because we always sit on the front room for comedy. It's a lot more fun because the comedian's give you the most shit.

As I'm walking back down the stairs of the theater I catch a glimpse of those two 25 year-old blondes sitting directly in the center of the theater. This theater holds about five to six hundred people and the comedians just walking out onto the stage. One of the girls stands up and yell, "Papi, come sit with us!". I have to admit even I cringed a little bit inside but didn't react I just waved. My wife's head spun around like the Exorcist on speed and she glares at those girls before she found me. Of course everybody else is looking at the girls and then looking at me including the comedian. Now as I walk across the aisle on the front row I am a target for him and he recognizes me as fucking Shaun. He did about a minute on me and the girls wanting me to sit with them, calling me out and how you could show that nights movie across my back and that I must lift Etc. It was all comperimentary stuff which got good laughs.
When I sat down next to my wife he talked to her for a few seconds from the stage and then got to the show. She was loving the attention and hating those "fucking thots". But that's what I wanted.

And now to the last night of the cruise, the reason I'm posting this FR in the first place after posting about this the other night in ask MRP. My wife dances and drinks and gambles all night with me. Shit has been going awesome the whole cruise. She doesn't ever stay up too late at home or on vacation because she gets tired and so I put her to bed with a good fucking and tell her I'm going back down to the casino to smoke and will bring back some food for her in case she is still awake.

Go downstairs to the casino and run into the hotter of the two little blondes. Obviously I had been running into them the whole cruise and using Kino etc. to play with them. She tells me she has something for me but left it in her cabin and we should go get it. I tell her I will hang in the casino and wait for her. She asks where my wife is and I tell her in bed again. She asks if I "put her to sleep" and I ensured her that I certainly had. Then she broke out the big gun that caught me off guard, "Come upstairs, I want to suck your wife off of you."

I was torn at this point because I'm trying to stay in this marriage and don't want to spin plates, because I know the risk involved and I'm not willing to accept it yet. I just shook my head and laughed made sure I told her thanks but I was going to go back upstairs, and left. This whole trip and encounter sure certainly changed my abundance mentality perspective.

Now that we're back at home and it's been several months I am still fighting the good MRP fight everyday. The cruise was just a microcosm of what my life could be everyday once I get to the level that my home life is the same intensity as my vacation life. As intense as that whole week was, it's interesting to me how quickly the effects wear off and how consistent I have to be in order to keep the level of interest I want.

At any rate, the cruise was a great time, I enjoyed myself, got laid a lot as a side benefit and caught a glimpse of what my regular life could be if I make the effort. Give it a try.
Rollo Tomassi on the Joe Rogan Show?
by Rollo-Tomassi | December 30, 2017 | Link

Announcement:

https://therationalmale.com/2017/12/30/rollo-tomassi-on-joe-rogan/

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qygkxCKegI4

Want to help me get on the Joe Rogan show? My good friend Richard Cooper – a guy I’ve done numerous podcasts with – has put together a video submission call out to anyone who’s had their lives changed by my work. Have a look at this video for the particulars, but basically Rich is asking for quick hit video testimonies from anyone who been impacted by my books or my blog. He plans to make a demo reel of sorts to present to the producers of the Joe Rogan show.

Richard attributes his Red Pill awakening to my books and blog and his appreciation is evident in almost every podcast he does. I got to meet Rich at the 21 Convention last September (after having been on his podcast and recommending him to Anthony Johnson) and we immediately hit it off. As most of my readers know I’m very careful about who I endorse or co-brand The Rational Male with, but Rich is one of the men I would gladly give props to. If you haven’t subscribed to his YouTube channel I’d suggest you do. All of his videos are short and to the point and I know my readers will get a lot of value from them.

That said, if you have a chance please make a short video testimonial about what my writing and true Red Pill awareness has done for you and pass it on to Richard. You can contact him via his channel, or just watch this short video for all the details.
What your wife wishes she could say to you but can’t because you’re a bitch

Below is an article on the concept of “emotional labor”—a textbook example, written by a woman, of the failures of masculinity in a marriage which leads to a void of passion, sex, connection, and ultimately divorce and infidelity. It’s why many of you motherfuckers did some Google search like “why won’t my wife fuck me” and landed here. And a few of you even stuck around to realize that you were the problem. And then even fewer actually did something about it. No matter where you are in your journey, if you’re here and reading this you can likely identify with this situation. Any shred of evidence of this in your household should be eradicated like the plague. MRP is your antidote, the sidebar is your guide.

For Mother’s Day I asked for one thing: a house cleaning service. Bathrooms and floors specifically, windows if the extra expense was reasonable. The gift, for me, was not so much in the cleaning itself but the fact that for once I would not be in charge of the household office work. I would not have to make the calls, get multiple quotes, research and vet each service, arrange payment and schedule the appointment.

It’s very clear from the beginning: her husband is not captain of the ship. She is. And she resents him for it. He can be her husband or one of her kids, which one does he want to be?

My husband waited for me to change my mind to an "easier" gift than housecleaning, something he could one-click order on Amazon. Disappointed by my unwavering desire, the day before Mother’s Day he called a single service, decided they were too expensive, and vowed to clean the bathrooms himself. He still gave me the choice, of course. He told me the high dollar amount of completing the cleaning services I requested (since I control the budget) and asked incredulously if I still wanted him to book it.

Oh, got it. She handles the finances. So he definitely wants to be another child, a giant man-kid who likely pleads for affection and sex without realizing the very thing that is responsible for his lack of it: himself.

What I wanted was for him to ask friends on Facebook for a recommendation, call four or five more services, do the emotional labor I would have done if the job had fallen to me. I had wanted to hire out deep cleaning for a while, especially since my freelance work had picked up considerably. The reason I hadn’t done it yet was part guilt over not doing my housework, and an even larger part of not wanting to deal with the work of hiring a service. I knew exactly how exhausting it was going to be. That’s why I asked my husband to do it as a gift.

Owning his shit is a foreign concept to him. How much deeply pleasurable, erotic sex do you think this couple is having?
According to Dr. Michele Ramsey, Associate Professor of Communication Arts and Sciences at Penn State Berks, emotional labor is often conflated with problem solving. “The gendered assumption is that ‘men are the problem solvers because women are too emotional,’” she explains. “But who is really solving the bulk of the world’s problems at home and in the office?” As the household manager for my husband and three kids, I’m fairly certain I know the answer. I was gifted a necklace for Mother’s Day while my husband stole away to deep clean the bathrooms, leaving me to care for our children as the rest of the house fell into total disarray.

A woman will step up to the plate if her husband does not. But she will resent him for it. Replace “necklace” with literally any other gift, or even a top-tier salary. If you’re not owning your shit and leading your family, your gifts are worthless. They do not wet your wife’s panties. Strong leadership wets your wife’s panties. (Don’t forget muscles and low body fat.)

In his mind, he was doing the thing I had most wanted—giving me sparkling bathrooms without having to do it myself. Which is why he was frustrated when I ungratefully passed by, not looking at his handiwork as I put away his shoes, shirt and socks that had been left on the floor. I stumbled over the box of gift wrap he had pulled off a high shelf two days earlier and left in the center of our closet. In order to put it back, I had to get a kitchen chair and drag it into our closet so I could reach the shelf where it belonged.

“All you have to do is ask me to put it back,” he said, watching me struggle.

It was obvious that the box was in the way, that it needed to be put back. It would have been easy for him to just reach up and put it away, but instead he had stepped around it, willfully ignoring it for two days. It was up to me to tell him that he should put away something he got out in the first place.

“That’s the point,” I said, now in tears, “I don’t want to have to ask.”

Watch what she does, not what she says. She doesn’t want a clean bathroom. She wants a husband who Owns His Shit. She sees evidence of the opposite everywhere she looks. Not only is he not leading, he’s contributing to the problem actively, and acting like a bitch when his wife calls him out on it.

The crying, the snapping at him—it all required damage control. I had to tell him how much I appreciated the bathroom cleaning, but perhaps he could do it another time (like when our kids were in bed). Then I tried to gingerly explain the concept of emotional labor: that I was the manager of the household, and that being manager was a lot of thankless work. Delegating work to other people, i.e. telling him to do something he should instinctively know to do, is exhausting. I tried to tell him that I noticed the box at least 20 times over the past two days. He had noticed it only when I was heaving it onto the top shelf instead of asking for help. The whole explanation took a lot of restraint.

She had to feed his ego. “Emotional labor” is another way of saying that it’s frustrating for woman to lead and make all of the decisions and they will resent you if you force them to My husband is a good man, and a good feminist ally. I could tell, as I walked him through it, that he was trying to grasp what I was getting at. But he didn’t. He said he’d try to do more cleaning around the house to help me out. He restated that all I ever needed to do was ask him for help, but therein lies the problem. I don’t want to micromanage housework. I want a partner with equal initiative.

Read: he’s been deeply conditioned to not buy into patriarchal roles and is afraid of wearing the pants in the relationship, thinking it will upset his feminist wife if he leads the family, makes the decisions, defers to her as necessary, or otherwise behaves like an adult man. “He said he’d try” should cut like a knife to your throat if you have any self worth. Don’t fucking “say.” Don’t fucking “try.” Just “do.”

However, it’s not as easy as telling him that. My husband, despite his good nature and admirable intentions, still responds to criticism in a very patriarchal way. Forcing him to see emotional labor for the work it is feels like a personal attack on his character. If I were to point out random emotional labor duties I carry out—reminding him of his family’s birthdays, carrying in my head the entire school handbook and dietary guidelines for lunches, updating the calendar to include everyone’s schedules, asking his mother to babysit the kids when we go out, keeping track of what food and household items we are running low on, tidying everyone’s strewn about belongings, the unending hell that is laundry—he would take it as me saying, “Look at everything I’m doing that you’re not. You’re a bad person for ignoring me and not pulling your weight.”

A man’s ego is a fragile thing. This is why you must watch what she does and not what she says. She can’t come out and tell you all the ways you’re an unattractive bastard because she knows you’ll act like a little bitch. So instead she’s quietly resenting him, taking on more work, and likely rolling her eyes when he grabs her boob and winks before bed.

Bearing the brunt of all this emotional labor in a household is frustrating. It’s the word I hear most commonly when talking to friends about the subject of all the behind-the-scenes work they do. It’s frustrating to be saddled with all of these responsibilities, no one to acknowledge the work you are doing, and no way to change it without a major confrontation.

Oh how she wishes her husband would just step up to the fucking plate and lead the family!

“What bothers me the most about having any conversation around emotional labor is being seen as a nag,” says Kelly Burch, a freelance journalist who works primarily from home. “My partner feels irritated and defensive by the fact that I’m always pointing out what he’s not doing. It shuts him down. I understand why it would be frustrating from his perspective, but I haven’t figured out another way to make him aware of all the emotional and mental energy I’m spending to keep the house running.”

Oh interesting, so communicating openly and honestly with your partner about this is... ineffective? Who would have fucking thought? She is probably making him subconsciously aware by pulling back what he wants and needs most: sex and affection, whether she knows it or not. And will he ever find the connection between not being loved in the ways he needs to and his own failures? Sadly most men do not.

Even having a conversation about the imbalance of emotional labor becomes emotional labor. It gets to a point where I have to weigh the benefits of getting my husband to understand my frustration against the compounded emotional labor of doing so in a way that won’t end in us fighting. Usually I let it slide, reminding myself that I’m lucky to have a partner who willingly complies to any task I decide to assign to him. I know compared to many women, including female family members and friends, I have it so easy. My husband does a lot. He does dishes every night habitually. He often makes dinner. He will handle bedtime for the kids when I am working. If I ask him to take on extra chores, he will, without complaint. It feels greedy, at times, to want more from him.

She’ll let it slide, but do you think she’s wearing lingerie, waking him up with blowjobs, or even giving him anything beyond duty sex every few weeks when sheds a tear for it? Oh wait, but he does the chores! You can almost feel her levels of attraction for her husband spiraling down the toilet. This is why chore play is what it is. You can’t just do the fucking chores, you have to lead your household. You have to be the goddamn man in the relationship. Doing the chores is fucking table stakes.

Yet I find myself worrying about how the mental load bore almost exclusively by women translates into a deep gender inequality that is hard to shake on the personal level. It is difficult to model an egalitarian household for my children when it is clear that I am the household manager, tasked with delegating any and all household responsibilities, or taking on the full load myself. I can feel my sons and daughter watching our dynamic all the time, gleaning the roles for themselves as they grow older.

It is bared almost exclusively by woman because men have been conditioned by feminist society to be this way in their feeble attempt at “equality.” And they’re teaching their kids the same thing.

When I brush my daughter’s hair and elaborately braid it round the side of her scalp, I am doing the thing that is expected of me. When my husband brushes out tangles before bedtime, he needs his efforts noticed and congratulated—saying aloud in front of both me and her that it took him a whole 15 minutes. There are many small examples of where the work I normally do must be lauded when transferred to my husband. It seems like a small annoyance, but its significance looms larger.

Acts non verbal. STFU. This is what we mean when we say it. Do not seek validation for Owning Your Shit. You do what needs to be done not for the validation but because it needs to be done. You do not go running off to mommy to show her how clean you made the toilet.

“Children learn their communication patterns and gender roles (kids can recognize 'proper' gender behavior by age three) from a variety of people and institutions, but their parents are the ones that they, in theory, interact with the most,” notes Dr. Ramsey. So if we want to change the expectations of emotional labor for the next generation, it has to start at home. “For parents, this means making sure that one spouse does not do more of that type of labor than the other. Speaking in terms of how emotional labor is currently divided, girls will hopefully learn not to expect to have to do that labor and boys will hopefully learn not to expect females to do that labor for them. Children watching parents share that emotional labor will be more likely to be children who expect that labor to be shared in their own lives.”

The idea that we can have pure equality here is, of course, simply not feasible. You cannot have two ship captains. This doesn’t mean whoever isn’t the captain is a lesser human being, or not capable of being a captain if they needed to, but someone needs to lead in a relationship for it to work.

I know it’s not going to be easy for either of us to tackle the splitting of emotional labor, nor do I ever expect it to be completely equitable. (I’ll admit that I probably enjoy certain types of emotional labor far more than my husband, like planning our meals and vacations.) I’m also more skilled at emotional labor on the whole because I’ve had my entire life to practice it. But if we’re lucky, he’s got a whole lot of life left to hone his emotional labor skills, and to change the course of our children’s future. Our sons can still learn to carry their own weight. Our daughter can learn to not carry others’.

She gets it. She knows it’ll never be equal, but at the end of the day someone has to take the lead, deferring when necessary to other. She’s emotionally drained playing that role in her life. She wants her husband to set up and be that leader: for herself, for her kids, and most importantly: for him.
Emotions are not weakness. Weakness is weakness.

by wild_deer_man | September 23, 2019 | Link

There is a false dichotomy in the RP discussion saying a man should not be emotional because emotional men are weak men. They are not in control of themselves.

Many autists come and ask here "how do I get rid of my emotional side?"

Humans cannot willingly change their emotion. We cannot will away sadness, pain, or even happiness once this feeling arrives. However, we can do many things to avoid, repress and ignore feelings.

This question usually comes from men who were hurt and now are afraid of the pain, thinking it makes them weak. They are running and hiding from it. They try to present a strong facade when in reality they are scared to face themselves because they know what hides underneath.

What really makes you weak is the constant inner struggle to avoid the pain, not allowing it to run its course.

I am a strong believer that we are first and foremost animals, and animals have ceratin biology that cannot and should not be avoided. I see Red Pill as a biological truth, however it is not the entire truth.

When your wife ignores you and you feel hurt, you try your best not to give that pain a place. STFU and move on un-buthurt as if nothing happened. Our biology requires for emotions to run their course. An emotion that is suppressed and not allowed to be expressed gets stuck with us like a gum stuck to the shoe sole. This created inner struggle and inner struggle created weakness.

As you keep avoiding feelings more and more gum get stuck on your shoe and eventually it gets hard to walk. Like a computer that has some background process running, eating away resources making everything else slow. Like a swamp that drags you down the more you try to fight it.

By fighting your feelings you become a weak man torn by constant inner conflict, instead of becoming a strong oak of a man. You run away from yourself, becoming fearful and avoidant. It can even hurt you physically, create all kinds of health problems. It takes energy away from your mission.

Here is the good news: there is a better way, and not one which turns you into the emotional beta train wreck you probably imagine.

It is dead simple: all you need to do is to feel those emotions.

Go to a quiet place, by yourself, for 20 minutes and allow yourself to feel whatever it is that you are feeling. Don’t whine to your wife, but sit by yourself and let the feelings come.
less you resist them, the faster they will run their course.

Do not analyze or judge or try to change anything. Just ask yourself “what is it that I am feeling right now?” Make sure you don’t sit with the goal of getting rid of the feelings, the goal must be to only feel them. Like meditation.

When you accept your emotions, you no longer need to worry about what your wife, or anyone else will think of them. You OWN them, You do not dump them or wait for your wife to “heal your inner child”. Strong men don’t give two flying fucks what anyone thinks of them. They are the way they are and they OWN it.

I could cry in front of my woman, and still fuck her 2 times later, leaving her begging for more (true story). If you think you will be called a fag because you cry, it is not because of the tears, but because you are afraid of yourself and weak inside. It is easy to see the difference.

There is no getting rid of emotions. No matter how Red Pill you are, you are human and you will feel until the day you die. Instead of fighting yourself all the way there, save energy for what is really important.

I this made you curious, I also recommend this book:

Reddit is actively hostile to those not following the narrative of political correctness these days. They are the enemy of those with their eyes wide open, i.e. those that have swallowed the pill.

Why the fuck haven’t the mods migrated proactively over to a forum? Not exactly difficult to do.

They aren’t going to stop with trp.
You are the captain of your ship. When you finally took control of yourself and set a course for a kick-ass life, you had a vision in your head of what that life would be like. You realized that the woman who could fill the position of first mate was not as constrained as you once believed, but you gave her first crack to live up to the position if she wanted to come along. So you set off on that course to be a stronger man and fill your life with things strong men do, like lift, compete, and strive. You set a course to be a better looking man, and fill your life with things better looking men do like attract women, dress well, and flirt. You set a course to be a social master, and fill your life with things a social master would do, like go out to events, be the leader of the group, and meet all kinds of new people. Your wife may see these changes, and when the rope pulls taught she may even put down the fork, pick up a weight, and follow you. Here's the thing though:

Your wife doesn't give a FUCK about where you're going or what your goal is.

We are men. As David Daeda says we have a mind that works in space and time. We see ourselves here and now and want to get to a place there and then. We want to build ourselves to move mountains just because it's hard, but not impossible. And once we accomplish that feat we set a new goal.

Your wife is a woman. She doesn't care about the goal. She doesn't see herself standing there next to you in that great new place, beaming with pride because it's you and her that made it there. What she cares about, paraphrasing Daeda again, is the flow of emotions she can experience from here to there. She wants to feel.

Have you ever seen a group of women get together and try to decide something to do? Maybe yours is like mine who constantly complains that multiple friends she knows keep saying they should get together...but no one ever really sets up a plan? It's all feel feel feel and no action. Action only happens when the feel from the action is better than the feel from no action.

My wife went running with me the other day, training to join me in a timed run some time in the future. It was her idea to do the future run, but she takes no action on her part to prepare for it unless I say "Hey, let's go train." She fell about 25 feet behind in our run, and I once looped around in a circle to let her catch up. But no matter how much I slowed, she would slow more to stay about 25 feet behind me. About a half mile at a steady pace I told her...
"Hey, you're going the same pace. Come on up here next to me." She replies with "No, I'm fine." and to be honest this made me irritated. If she's running the same pace, why not come up here with me? Is it a snub? Is it to make me coddle her into picking up her pace to catch up? I'm not one to coddle progress, and it's apparent that she can run at my pace next to me, but chooses not to. So I increased to my own pace and left her behind...and she shortly slowed to a walk.

About a half mile later she gets home. And I share a vision of what us running together means. I say "You know, when I envision us running together, I picture us next to each other, running together, and chatting with each other for company." She replies "Well you kept running faster (lie) You're supposed to be motivating me (blame)." Some great bait, but I STFU, and went out to continue my run alone for another hour.

What's the deal? Why doesn't she want this as much as me? Doesn't she want to get to a place where we're the shit together? Wouldn't she be happy to run next to me and we can chat and flirt as we go along? Doesn't she envision us crossing the finish line of that race and feeling so great because we made it? No! She doesn't give a shit about that place! She gives a shit about the FEELINGS she can feel on the way. "You're supposed to be motivating me." In other words "You're supposed to be making me feel."

Does your goal not mean anything at all to her then? Do you? You do. What you mean to her is that you are a source of her feels. She not only derives her feels for herself from you, she derives pride for you, from you. She literally looks up to you as the man who can make her feel. And when you go to move mountains, she gets feels from your strife and success. Those feels aren't for you. They aren't "Yay husband for moving mountains!". You don't get to enjoy them. They're for her. They're "Wow, I feel things when my husband moves mountains". But those feels come from you.

She wants to admire you from afar. It's literally what she's doing when she runs 15 feet behind. She doesn't want to match you. Ever meet your heroes? Ever see one that is nothing special, that isn't someone to look up to? The admiration vanishes. How can she admire you if she matches you? You are literally the replacement father figure for the man in her life that she grew up thinking had the potential and strength to do anything. And who gave her those feels. And just like you will get attraction and value from her, or from someone else; she will get those feels, good or bad, from you, or from someone else.

Why you then? Why will she pick up a weight and follow you? Dread. Remember when I said action is only taken if the result of action gives more feels than the result of inaction? Dread is the sense of perceived competition, either real or imagined, for access to the feels you give. Her inaction will cut her off from those feels, and she knows this. When you start to improve, when you advance up the levels of dread, you not only provide more feels, you construct a plausible threat to her for those feels. And though moving up the ladder of dread is for you, not her; it works because it has the effect of moving her as well...or else.
The Red Queen says males are usually the ones who will battle it out to decide who is the alpha male, and then women pick from that. But women also need to figure out how to put themselves in the best position to observe the alpha male when he comes to power. So when she starts coming with you to lift or hike or whatever, she doesn't necessarily care about the goal you've set. She's there to get those feels, and to observe a man in power. If she goes out without you, also be aware that she's going to observe men in power as well.

And when it comes to sex, be aware that, especially in this case, she doesn't place value in the goal. Does she like sex? Sure. Is her goal sex? No. Her goal is the feels up to and in sex. Want to have more sex? Increase her feels up to sex by gaming and kino. Increase her feels during sex with DEVI. And at the same time instill a sense of dread that there may be competition for those feels from other women. Owen from RSD tells it true when he says that women don't care about the goal of sex because they can get to that goal whenever they want. It's easy for them. Walk into any bar, spread legs, sex. He relates it to a guy and a girl watching a movie, and the guy saying "let's just watch the end. Let's just watch the final conclusion and then go do something else." She can watch the end whenever she wants, but it doesn't mean anything. The meaning comes from the feels on her journey there. A journey you take her on...as Captain of the ship.

Shout out to /u/JDroedell who gave some great insights into the event that spawned this realization after a back and forth the other day. Men swapping notes. This is why it works.
Finding Frame and Curing Anxiety
by LongRoad_518 | June 14, 2019 | Link

One of the many areas I struggled with for a long time is figuring out what the fuck everyone meant by “frame”. Below is what I see as the stages I went through to finding frame. I hope it helps someone else accelerate their journey. I am nowhere even close to finish this journey on frame, I have certainly overcome a major hurdle and figured out what I want in life. It’s as simple of – figure out who you are and your worldview and don’t let anyone or anything shake that. Big thanks to /u/HornsofApathy for a lot of guidance on my journey thus far.

Background

Life has thrown a lot at me. I used tragedy and hardship as excuses for being a lazy pile of shit for a long time. I had struggled with depression and anxiety since around 15 years old (21 years of SSRIs and crap). This was bad anxiety – panic attacks, couldn’t go out to restaurants, shutdown socially. I’ve gone over three months now of zero panic attacks, very little (probably normal) anxiety, and feeling pretty damn good about myself. I was told there was no cure for anxiety - I had to find ways to minimize and cope with it. That was more bullshit advice. I 100% believe that MRP cured my anxiety.

Ignorance and Anxiety – Not Even Aware of Concept of Frame

Pre-MRP and the early months, I wasn’t even aware that I was living for the expectations and views of everyone else around me. I thought I was being a good son, a good husband, a good dad, a good member of society. The expectations were from my parents, my wife, and society in general.

Parents: expectations on career, doing ‘well’, how I should be raising kids

Wife: “happy wife, happy life”, she’s a princess and needs to be taken care of, she deserves to be on a pedestal

Society: divorce is bad, expect to have no passion in marriage, husbands are dumb/lazy/need their wives to survive

Is it any surprise that this resulted in years and years of anxiety and depression? A feeling of never measuring up, never being ‘good enough’ to meet all these expectations? Looking back now, anxiety was a clear, flashing red light that something was wrong. I had zero self-confidence. How could I? If I could never measure up, I was a piece of shit. It was so far away from “I am the prize” it was “I am a piece of shit who deserves nothing good”. Pretty dark place to operate from.

Finding MRP and Cognitive Dissonance

Life changed on October 8, 2018. I know this because it’s the day I first created a reddit account. I am not fully sure how I ended up here. Over the summer, my wife didn’t fuck me for 2 months. This led to buying a program on rekindling sex. Wasn’t bad, hit a few key principles such as the need for sexual polarity. But I felt it lacking. The issue was so much more so than sex – it was hostility, zero affection (no kissing, cringed at even a hug or holding hands). Best summed up early on by u/MrChad_Thundercock that it was CONTEMPT at the faggot I was being. From articles, comments, something led me to MRP. It shut me down.

It literally shut me down. For two days I stayed in bed, read The Rationale Male and MMSLP. My anxiety was at 11. My brain was going between “how the hell could this be true?” and “this makes so much sense”. It wasn’t anger - this came later - it was now knowing the truth and the matrix being shattered.

I found Frame! - No You’re Just a Ramboing Asshole

I consumed the sidebar at lightning pace, I cleared out the garage, bought weights and started lifting immediately. I devoured posts and read the advice of many of the veteran members on here. I posted in OYS and askMRP and got blasted into oblivion – but it was all to help me. So I got sidebar – done, lifting – done, STFU – much better, but I still struggled with this frame thing.

I settled on my “frame” being “I’ll go full asshole, 100% alpha, then the guys on MRP will think highly of me”. This wasn’t MY frame, this was again – perceived external expectations. Anxiety was still there but less. I erroneously thought I had figured out the solution – but I was destroying my marriage. Here’s a few things of what NOT to do:

- Tell your wife you will cheat on her
- Demand certain sex acts
- Tell your wife that if she doesn’t please you, you will find a hooker to do so
- Tell your wife she adds nothing to your life
- Shutdown emotions (latest issue)

I was just being an asshole and hurting her because “that’s what alphas do” (note: that is not what alphas do).

Being Lost and Confused

After, correctly, being told I was Ramboing on several occasions, I was confused. If frame is not doing what others said was alpha, what the hell was it? I didn’t get it. What I now realize is that I spent so long living in others’ frame, I had no idea who I was or what I wanted. There was no sense of self – it was still a hodgepodge of other people’s ideas of how I should act.

Some examples:

Spend 30 mins playing a video game with the kids on a rainy day and then feel bad about it because some guy on the internet said video games are a complete waste of time and you should never play them.

Rub my wife’s back because I like to do that occasionally – stop because I think it’s beta and a faggot thing to do, even though it’s something I wanted to do.

Really Finding Frame

Slowly, frame started to develop. It’s a work in progress, but it’s forming up nicely. I started to realize I had my own ideas on right and wrong. No one had to agree with me, but they also weren’t going to change my mind or alter these core beliefs. I started figuring out what I considered a good relationship, what I considered the best course of action at work, etc. Others were free to voice opinion – I’d take them into account, but it doesn’t change these foundation expectations and views I hold. Nothing will. Anxiety is the litmus test for me now... if I start feeling anxious I figure out why and 95% of the time it’s because something conflicts with my core beliefs. I truly do not need any single person in my life – I’ll be fine without them. If they don’t like who I am and what I believe in, that’s their issue, not mine. The crippling anxiety is gone, I’m starting to not only have my own frame but projecting it. I'm a pretty fucking awesome person, I am the prize. Fuck anyone else if they don't want the gift of me in their life - it's their loss.

Recent Event that Made Me Write This

Wednesday morning: Wife left her phone out in the morning so I changed my name to Sex God. I found this hilarious. She eventually texts me on WTF is this? You think so highly of yourself. "I LIKE TO BE TREATED WITH RESPECT NOT USED FOR ONE THING, which is ALL you care about! Wtf, do you absorb anything said to you". This is an ongoing statement from her lately.

My response was simple and matter-of-fact: I care about sex, its important, I'm not going to pretend it's not. I am not going to have walls up around my sexuality. If she doesn’t like that - well too bad, I’m not changing for anyone.

That's when I 'got it'... that's frame right there. Here's my worldview and how I view sex. If she has a different view, that's fine but it's not going to shake mine.

In case you're wondering on the result of this:

She continued to lose her shit (texting me random things which I ignored). I got home, pretended like nothing happened (because nothing did happen). Just kept a good mood, played with the kids, laughed with my wife. Had some great sex that night. Brought everything full circle by calling her my little sex goddess. She let out a small laugh and said “oh jeez”.

Her name is now Sexy Pirate Ninja Goddess in my phone. Pirate Ninja is from a conversation we had regarding what's cooler - pirates or ninjas when the kids were debating Halloween costumes. Obviously a pirate ninja is the coolest way to go.
Covert Contract: I will do this for you so you will do something for me. We will both act as if we have no awareness of this contract.

Nice Guys try to appear needless and wantless. They focus on meeting everyone else's needs while neglecting their own. They're always available when a friend needs a favor or a boss asks them to work late while simultaneously neglecting their needs at home. This ensures that their own needs are never met. They make a covert contract such as "I'm a nice guy and I work hard. My wife should give me sex."

Why nice guys "faggots" create covert contracts in the first place

The reason nice guys create covert contracts is to create distance between themselves and others in a way that ensures their needs are never met. Deep down they believe they are not worthy of love or sex or meaningful friendships and so they self sabotage in an elaborate act of self deception.

Deep down you believe you are worthless. Even as you start to take care of yourself you will sabotage your own efforts. Your subconscious works in the shadows and diligently fucks your shit up. Your own brain is saying:

- You started lifting? Well, you need extra calories! Eat a ton and call it "bulking".
- You're cutting? You should stop lifting since that will increase your calorie needs. Also cut out the protein. That's just extra calories.
- You found an attractive girl that actually likes you? Tell her she's fat so she'll stop having sex with you.
- You're hanging out with a group of guys? Better show them how much of an intellectual you are so they'll like you. Talk about how much money you have too. And how much you can lift.

How to overcome the faggot mindset

Deliberately do good things for yourself. When you do nice things for yourself you imply that you are worth something. Make a list of possible things to do

- Lift
- Track your food
- Avoid junk food
- Buy nice clothes and cologne
- Pay to have your car detailed
- Take a day off work just for yourself
- Be assertive and express what you want
Do these things without sabotaging your efforts. When you're a recovering nice guy you're dealing with cognitive dissonance by simultaneously trying to get your needs met while also believing you have no value. You must get to a point where you know you have value without any external attachments. You're not valuable because of your accomplishments, income, looks, status, a pretty wife. You're valuable because you value yourself. This is the foundation of your Frame: "I have value."

When you are able to start from a place of value you can work effectively to meet your own needs. You stop with the covert contracts because you actually want to meet your needs and you do the work necessary to ensure that happens. When you are solid in your own Frame with an internal "knowing" of your intrinsic value, then and only then can you begin to lead and help others.
Don’t use a virus as an excuse
by RP_PO | March 20, 2020 | Link

Hey guy. Yea, the one that makes an excuse for everything. Guy whose wife isn’t responding to your big alpha red pill changes because “she has clinical depression/anxiety”. Guy who can’t seem to shred any fat because of a “slow metabolism”

Your gym just closed today because of Coronavirus and you don’t have weights at home. “Man, aw shucks, I guess I can’t lift, since it HAS to be 5x5 since some internet strangers told me to“.

You’re stuck working at home because of coronavirus, so you can’t drown your wife in Rambo-style autistic dread.

Grow up and stop with the excuses. Maintain your weak gains with body weight exercises instead of sitting on your ass. Pushups, pull-ups at the park, lift your spare tire (not the one around your waist), drive your car to a parking lot and push that bitch. Work on your terrible mobility. Set up that home gym you’ve been putting off. Work on gaming your wife, leading the family during this incredible opportunity you’ve been given to lead them through.

Or just continue making excuses, continue being you, and continue getting the shitty results out of life you’ve been getting.
Wanted to share a quick FR on something that happened last week. I was not going to post, but the sub is a little drama ridden lately, askMRP is in a mess so here goes. This is for newbies and should provide a relevant example.

I coach kids ball, if you know me you already know this. This requires communication with parents most of which are female, typically ED or E2D as I have ball 6 days a week. If you know me, you also know the running gag my wife likes to toss my way during this is "Which girlfriend are you talking to know?"

That's all the backstory, so let's get to the meat. My wife also like to text, specifically her mom. Text sessions can span hours to relay the same information a 5-minute phone call would accomplish, but they are women and we know how they communicate right?

The other night we are in bed around 8:30, she is still texting her mom, I am preparing to go lights out, so I tell the wife "to tell her boyfriend goodnight so we can go to bed."

Now my wife does not surprise me often, but she did when she rolled over, looked me in the eyes and says, "good night my boyfriend and husband" with a grin and smile. I was taken back for a second, but once I processed the info I quickly escalated to sex and that was it.

What does this mean for newbs? It means that even though my wife and I have been together since HS, late 30's, married 12 years with 2 kids, you still have to fill both roles to be successful in an LRT/marriage. You have to be her boyfriend and her husband. Alpha and Beta. Risk taking and stable. You have to stroke both sides of her hypergamous nature if you want to keep things exciting and fresh in your relationship and keep her eyes focused on you.

What is the other thing you need to be on the lookout for? How women initiate sex. My wives signs are the "fuck me now eyes" will snuggle up against me and cuddle and squeeze a little too hard, but she very rarely just goes directly for the junk like many guys expect a woman to. All she does is crack the door open a little and then wants me to open it up. Sure, she gives unsolicited BJ's and has stood against the wall and said, "fuck me now" but the 80% rule with my wife is contextual actions she does to show her desire for sex. So, you need to learn your womans tell tail signs and be on the lookout for them.

Stop going to the same place for dinner, and stop doing the same things over and over. You have to always be fresh, you always have to be escalating in everything you do. Make the plans, do what you want to do and do things that she enjoys and if you have kids it is even easier to do activity dates. It is very easy to get into the daily grind of life, but you have to try and push the boundaries. Ask for forgiveness, never permission, and for Pete's sake do not ask her what she wants to do. She doesn't know - that is your job. Just tell her to get in the car and start driving.

I am sure someone is going to say my comment was beta, or passive aggressive and that is fine. It is her running joke to me, and I tossed the shit test back to her and she handled like a pro, just like I do to her. It works in our relationship and with our specific details.
The meaning of STFU and how it relates to Dread Level 4: Begin Conditioning your time and attention to her on her sexual availability to you by BluepillProfessor | January 7, 2017 | Link

A recent thread had a remarkable exchange:

(Original Poster quoted): "tonight I learned what STFU really means. I doesn't literally mean to close your mouth and not communicate. It means to say as little as you can. To stay out of those choppy waters.

I replied with my customary snark:

"Do people really think when we say STFU we mean to turn into a mute retarded autistic patient?"

The reply:

"Most of us newbs do, yes."

I have to say I was flabbergasted and a bit appalled. This is an EPIC MISCOMMUNICATION and we need to correct it NOW so let's get to it:

THE MEANING OF STFU

STFU is a common response to new guys posting detailed stories of verbal intercourse with his wife. It means: Shut The Fuck Up! However, WAY to many guys are taking that too literally!!!

When a new guy on MRP tells a long story of she said, he said, she said, he said, it is VERY common that he get's the answer: STFU. Apparently some men take this to mean they should either be butthurt and blustering or butthurt and give her the silent treatment.

STFU DOES NOT MEAN IGNORE YOUR WIFE OR GIVE HER THE SILENT TREATMENT LIKE A BUTTHURT WOMAN.

STFU can mean several things depending on the context:

1. SHUT THE FUCK UP ABOUT RED PILL OR ANYTHING RELATED TO SELF IMPROVEMENT. The 1st Rule of Fight Club (and the 2nd) is that YOU DO NOT TALK ABOUT FIGHT CLUB. If you are reporting to us how you talked to your wife about solopism or Red Pill, or AF/BB or even attraction then somebody is going to tell you to STFU.
2. LISTEN TO HER EXPRESS HER EMOTIONS AND ENCOURAGE IT TO A POINT (unless it get's annoying). Much of the time with a withdrawing "low sex" wife, you need to activate her femininity. In order to encourage her to be more of a women, and more feminine, and more expressive of her emotions you need to LISTEN. In order to LISTEN, the first thing you need to do is SHUT THE FUCK UP. However, you are not obligated to sit on the bed while you talk about feelings because VERBAL INTERCOURSE IS OPTIONAL. The balance between STFU and emoting must be carefully calibrated. Almost all of the new guys talk to their wives to much. The problem is simple and obvious: Women talk. Men do. Actus Non Verba. Actions Not Words. You are not her girlfriend. You are her husband and this is a different role. You can listen without talking much and this is important because if you talk and talk like her girlfriend, then she is going to want to fuck you just as much as she wants to fuck her girlfriends. Which is to say not bloody much. So...STFU in guy talk can mean Shut Up and pay attention to your wife! You are a hunter. She is your prey. Imagine a group of hunters approaching a herd of Buffalo. The newb comes in and starts talking and the leaders of the hunt put a hand on their lips telling the newb to STFU. They don't mean get mad, sulk, and refuse to participate in the hunt. They mean to STFU and listen. Pay attention.

3. SHUT THE FUCK UP ABOUT YOUR EMOTIONS, AND ISSUES because it dries up a woman like a severed labia in the Gobi Desert when you emote like a whiny 5 year old! The ONLY exception is when a known Alpha Fuck "opens up" a tiny bit, exposes his hard outer shell, and shows a TINY BIT of his soft gooey center. The book "Models" talks about this. Most of you guys don't have to worry about that. You need to build that hard out cover before you spew goo all over your wife. You need a backbone and a frame before you can start emoting. Most likely, the problem with your low sex marriage is you are emoting to much!! Therefore, STFU.

4. SHUT THE FUCK UP ABOUT YOUR PROBLEMS, YOUR PAIN, YOUR COMPLAINTS, AND EVEN YOUR NEEDS. Women don't want their men to whine like a bitch about his problems. You can only identify the problem and TELL her how you are going to solve it. If you whine like a little boy she will want to fuck you just as much as she would want to fuck a little boy. That is to say not bloody much.

5. SHUT THE FUCK UP AND DON'T ARGUE WITH YOUR WIFE. USE FOGGING. If you have not read WISNIFG on the sidebar then that is your bad. We didn't pull these books out of our assholes. They are important. When I Say No I Feel Guilty explains how to FOG. There is no reason to argue with a woman. She can yell and rail and bitch and moan and if you smirk a bit, and Shut the Fuck Up, most of the time the storm will pass quickly. To Fog, you simply agree with her and refuse to expound on her complaints.

Example: She says: "You don't do this and you didn't do that. You never do blah blah blah."

A NEWB says: "How can you say I don't do Blah. I blah blah blah blah and blah. Plus I blah, and blah and blah blah blah blah. Furthermore, I often blah and blah and blah blah blah.

If you do this you set up a response from her and the emotional argument is on that you can NEVER win. You are trying to logic an emotion and it NEVER works. You will doubtless be told to STFU when you tell your story on MRP. This does NOT mean you say NOTHING. That would be autistic and/or butthurt and if the goal is seduction and a happy life and marriage it is a completely STUPID lack of response.

Instead, a MRP guy says: "You are right that sometimes I don't do blah." This is "Fogging." You simply reflect her emotions back at her and give her nothing except fog to swing at. Soon she will get tired. Read WISNIFG and STFU.

STFU does NOT mean that you ignore a reasonable request or an attempt to start a conversation. It MAY mean you respond with "K" or "Yes Dear" or "Hmmmmm." You might possibly note that this type of response is VERY different than the infamous "silent treatment!"

Finally, STFU is also confused with Dread Level 4: BEGIN conditioning your:

--TIME
--ATTENTION
--AFFECTION
--PRESENCE

to your wife with her sexual availability to you. These are in ascending order of severity and you need to do this VERY SLOWLY. ONE AT A TIME OVER WEEKS AND MONTHS, NOT DAYS.

I have an entire Chapter on this in My Book but here is the summary:

First, in response to a sexual denial (or repeated sexual denial, or whatever your boundary might be) you BEGIN removing your TIME. THIS DOES NOT MEAN YOU "STFU" AND IGNORE YOUR WIFE. It is simply that your time is valuable and you don't have time in life to spend it with a wife who is not attracted to you. You have value and will not waste it. Remove your TIME by going to the gym or leaving the room after a sexual denial. DON'T BE BUTTHURT. just understand that your time is valuable and who you spend it on must be reinforcing to you or you will find better ways to spend your time. Be upbeat. Give her a kiss on the cheek and a reason to be happy before you leave.

Second, if this does not begin to change her behavior IN WEEKS AND MONTHS, NOT DAYS, then move to withdrawing your ATTENTION. This is actually pretty close to what a lot of guys understand when they see STFU. She is withdrawing and showing you her "power" so you need to show her that you also have power. You don't have to pay attention to your wife when she is withdrawing. HOWEVER, this is not a license to be autistic or do the full feminine silent treatment like a little girl. It IS a license to begin leaving the house more, turning off your phone more, getting busy with projects in and out of the house much more. It IS a license to express your displeasure but NOT by arguing. No dude! SHUT THE FUCK UP. One word answers and fogging and removing yourself entirely is the prescription at this level. It is more than STFU, but that is certainly part of it.

Third is Affection which is orthogonal to STFU so the basics are that "Affection" means that No sex = no cuddling, no kissing, no hugs = withdrawing your affection. If you do this for long your marriage is toast.

Fourth and very, very last you remove your "Presence." THIS is the total withdrawal of YOU from her life and it is so powerful it is also on the top reasons for divorce- "He wasn't "present." She does NOT mean he worked all the time. She means, he was not emotionally present and expressed no interest in her or her problems. He was gone! IT MEANS THAT HE STFU!!!!!!

If you do this it is basically a Hail Mary. You have checked out and checking back in is going to be dicey at best. THIS is the FINAL STAGE before divorce. If she does not respond to selective removal of your "presence" then it is not likely the marriage can be saved.

tldr: STFU does NOT mean you ignore your wife or give her the silent treatment unless you are ready to get divorced.
Giving her what she wants gives you zero points
by Iammrp2 | March 14, 2018 | Link

A common blue pill strategy is to give women what they want and "make sacrifices" in the hopes that you'll be rewarded. Rewards could be sex, respect, admiration, doesn't matter. You will be rewarded zero points for giving her what she wants. Why? Because she expects it. In her mind when you meet her expectations you have just reached the bar she set for you. You have not even begun to exceed her expectations. Eventually she will disrespect you, possibly cheat on you and you will say to yourself "but.. my sacrifices!" This is what living in her frame is like.

Instead decide what you want. Buying a car or a house? Paying for college together? If what you want is what she wants then this is mutually beneficial. If you're doing something or buying something just to please her then you are in her frame.

What do you want? Asking yourself this question is a hard thing to do.
Thank you all!

Thank you ...

At 38 years old I found myself accomplished in financial stability, a great company I built, a great family but I was unhealthy and had a very unsatisfying sex life. I am married 11 years, together 15 years. We have two children boy 4 and girl 7. My wife is really a great woman SAHM and since I discovered the red pill submissive in the bedroom as well. It is amazing to me how much she has changed along with me as I made my progress with red pill philosophy. I have followed the rules and NEVER talked about fight club. I can look in the mirror and see my improvements, but at the same time look at my wife and see how getting my shit together has improved our family unit completely. There is so much good that has come out of learning to literally fuck my wife the way I always wanted to.

The bad ... Two years ago I was 6’1” 310 lbs and my doctor diagnosed me with type 2 diabetes. Not a shocker to me as I was a lazy fat ass who used food to cope with the stresses of building a business and the general stresses of raising two children. I had low points before and got put on Zoloft in my mid twenties and was a zombie for quite a while. No real highs no real lows just cruising in the middle. I thought the Zoloft helped with my anxiety but it destroyed my feelings for sex. My wife and I had sex maybe once every two weeks for most of our marriage. Just standard starfish as you call it. Early on when we were dating and she would be drunk she would say things like “I’m a bad girl”, but I just did not understand the whole submissive nature of my wife back then and I was a pussy for most of that part of my life.

The number one influence on my life with women was my mother. My father was a betabux pussy his whole life and my mother ran the house. Dad NEVER talked to me about women and has never to this day even broached the subject. My Mother instilled in me that providing for a woman got me what I wanted. Being the nice guy. Prince charming gets the girl. All that. What a wrong way to go about it.

So I am a lazy fat ass two years ago and I decide to get off Zoloft cold turkey and get in shape. I need to lose weight and get healthy or I am going to die and I can’t make money if I am dead. I used that logic. I pushed myself lost 20lbs and got injured. Self pity spiral and I go into July of 2017 and then I find the needle of red pill in the haystack of the internet that opened my eyes to a whole new me.

July 2017 ... I had been of Zoloft for a year so I started to feel my dick again kind of LOL I also felt nerve tingling on the tip that the doctor said may be a side effect of diabetes. Neuropathy. That really got my attention. I took a couple days and really focused on myself and thinking how am I going to do this. I tried to step back and look at myself independently and what drove me to wake up every morning and work as hard as I do to provide for my family. It was eye opening. I basically rewarded myself with shitty food and porn. I have been addicted to jerking off to some form of porn since about 12. I started with the scrambled playboy channel and over the years learned all the internet tricks in my teen years to modern day porn hub. The problem for me was that I hit a wall with it. The porn was getting weird this past year. It was all step daughter, step mom, step whatever shit and it just freaked me the fuck out.

I know people are motivated by a reward/pleasure well my food was killing me and making me fat and my porn was going to turn me into a shameful pervert. I decided I was going to completely change my reward structure and use discipline that I knew I had but had never applied to my health and sex life. The rewards needed to be there and sex was going to be my reward if I was going to eliminate food and porn.

I googled “How to turn your wife into a slut” and found Hunter fuckin Drew “Creating your slut” Wow that was all I needed to launch me into red pill land, the side bar and I have not looked back. Lifting is the single most important thing is true. I STFU and set on making myself awesome and figured if it works the way they say I should be able to do it. In August 2017 I hired a lifting trainer two times a week (have not missed once) and started with just learning how to move my fat ass again. I progressed to lifting just the bar to almost a year later lifting with the 45lbs plates on the bench and repping out. I am now 257 lbs and have a lot more to go but I love feeling my muscular arms and legs and the TESTOTERONE it produces is awesome. I now have sex with my wife 3 to 4 times a week. It is awesome sex for me and her. I am cave manning and spanking her and talking dirty. At this point its just awesome to me. I just keep getting happier. Once a week or so I will tell her I need a blowjob and she will just get down on her knees and blow me. It still amazes me from where I was a year ago. I will end it how I started it. Thank you... to all the guys who have contributed to this wealth of knowledge that is the red pill. I really do appreciate it. There is still a long way to go but I am really enjoying it thus far.
Don't fix her problem...
by CaptainWasHere | February 19, 2016 | Link

... Fix her feelz ™.

Feelings are a drug to women. They crave feelings. Anything other than the feeling of being board. Happy, sad, in love, lust, mad, disgust... these are more powerful than any narcotic to most women. Accept this and you will better understand how they function.

As an MRP dude you are inherently logical. You accept that problems are a part of life and so you hold frame and fix them. Most women (and girly guys) are not like this. They are driven by feelings. When they are talking about problems, they are not asking for solutions. They are asking you to fix the feelings.

That's why the more often you try to give a great logical solution to a woman, the worse the reaction gets. "You don't get me!" "I just want you to listen, not to fix everything."

Examples

- Women wont take responsibility for her f* ups. Why? Because it doesn't feel good. They don't have the greater sense of righteousness for acknowledging her flaws and improving them. It doesn't feel good in the moment, so she doesn't do it.

- "Do I look fat in these jeans?" - She's not asking "How do I get skinnier?" or "Do you think another brand would fit my body type better?" She's asking you to make her feel good about her body right now... because she never feels good about it.

- "I had a bad day... Boss was a jerk... Stacy is a bitch... " - She's just venting. She doesn't want your logical answer. She wants you to confirm her feelings and move on. She wants the feeling she gets that she's worth listening too.

- Story telling - Ever notice that most women are bad at telling stories. Why? Because they don't about captivating the audience, painting a picture and keeping them on their toes. They only care the feelings they get by reliving the story themselves. Think about that. You're just an inactive, trapped audience there while she feel-jerks herself off with an emotional story.

- "I thought we'd have a new baby/house/car/whatever by now. I'm behind. I'm failing!" - No amount of reason and logic will solve this one. She doesn't want your damn rational thoughts. She feels shitty about these part of her life. Address the feelz by distracting her or fix the problem yourself.
This is why there's a hierarchy of suggested MRP responses when she's feeling negative and talking about it (sometimes shit tests):

1. Shut the fuck up - You're too new and dumb still. Anything you say will mostly likely be responding to her words, not her feelz. And will backfire. Stay quiet and just don't make it worse.

2. Give her a hug - Stay quiet! Hugging is giving good feelz. Bear hug that woman when she needs it. It gives her both natural good feelz and the sensation of safety that is inbred in most animals.

3. AM and other sarcastic responses - My life got way better when I started replying to 80% of what my SO said with well-planned sarcasm. She doesn't give a shit about your logic (most of the time). Respond by controlling her feelings to what you want!! Think about that. You're using sass instead of debate to switch her feelings/thoughts around. It's more effective and everyone is happier. This is the way to put the brakes on when she's on the highway to negative feelz and swing down the offramp of your choice.

4. Ass smack, random dance, new music... - Anything that jolts her out of the spiral she's in. She doesn't need a solution. She doesn't want to discuss it. She wants to feel something different. This is you holding frame and communicating, "I'm not going to be pulled into your emotional shit. I wont allow you to control me." And.. if you're doing it right she'll be thinking, "Thank you for stopping my spiral. I appreciate a man that can cut through the shit and get us back on track."

This is why the ass-hole got the girl. While you were determined to care about and fix her negative feelings (drawing into her frame) ... he was busy not giving a shit, being happy, and sucking them into his awesome feelings.

All of this has been said before. Shut the fuck up. Hold frame. Bat shit tests. But hopefully this helps some of you digest the importance in a new way.

tl;dr - Fix her feelz. Ignore the rest.
I'm still single ... just married.

I've written several posts and comments about divorce around here. It's literally my day job, so why not? But I think some people get the wrong idea about why I wrote many of those posts and comments in the first place. In most things I do, there's usually a bigger game that I'm working toward than the immediate context would let on. If you can take some general divorce wisdom out of those posts, great, but that's not why they're there.

Someone once asked in one of those posts: "Why are you posting this here? Doesn't this belong on r/divorce?" Here's the reason: I want men to position themselves in such a way that they are not manipulated in their marriages by the fear of divorce. It's not about helping guys through divorce; it's about helping guys stop being afraid of divorce so they can live in their own frame.

"The Marriage" Doesn't Exist

I'm currently writing a book for r/RPChristians. There's scant little RP content for Christians, so I figure I'll contribute. Whatever. I was writing a section by the same name of this post and believe this is a broader issue than my own little niche of the manosphere.

"The marriage" doesn't exist. "The relationship" doesn't exist. There's you and her. That's it.

I was talking to someone about Negative Inquiry recently. His wife told him, "You never talk with me!" The NI response: "What's wrong with not talking with you?" Her answer: Because that's what married people are supposed to do. Do you see it?

Maybe not. Let's give a series of examples:

- "Marriage is about love"

- "Communication is the life blood of marriage"

- "Married people are supposed to ..."

- "I can't do ... because I'm married."

- "Marriage is hard work."

- "My marriage is wonderful/sucks."
See how these phrases personify "marriage" (or for singles: "the relationship") as its own entity? All of these examples aren't pointing to yourself or the other person as the one whose judgment you're trying to satisfy. So, when your wife says, "That's what married people are supposed to do," she really means, "That's what I want you to do" - but she's invoking "the marriage" as some higher authority than herself. Why? Because if she stopped her hamster for a second and recognized that she's only communicating her own personal preference, then that only puts her on an equal footing with you - her preference against yours, and that's not a good way to win an argument. No, she must invoke a higher authority - in this case, one that doesn't actually exist. But as long as she can keep you thinking it does, she can control you. She creates this third metaphysical concept, labels it "the marriage" and then says that you have to keep this non-existent entity happy or else ... and then the "or else" line is never finished in your subconscious, though we can always assume divorce is somewhere in the list. Does divorce scare you? More on that later.

Removing "The Marriage" From Your Frame

When a guy says the phrases above, it communicates to me that he isn't in his own frame. He is in the frame of "the marriage." That's weird, because "the marriage" never spoke to me to tell me what it expected. It didn't write a book or post online. It doesn't put feelings in your heart to guide you. "The marriage" doesn't exist at all. Anything I learned about "marriage" is really from culture or other people. And if I let their definitions of "marriage" control what I think my "marriage" should look like, guess whose frame I'm living in!

In reality, any comments about "marriage" as its own entity can be boiled down to a series of "If ... then ..." clauses. Ignoring the merits of the phrases themselves, let's go back to each of the above and see what they're really trying to communicate.

- "Marriage is about love." What they're really saying is, "IF they want to remain together, THEN two people in a committed relationship should orient their lives around loving each other" ... and most likely there are a host of expectations on what it looks like to "love" someone. But why this particular IF/THEN in the first place? What if I want my marriage to be oriented around something else, like accomplishing my mission in life? Who's going to stop me? Who in this world is going to say I'm wrong for having a different purpose for my marriage than the next guy?

- "Communication is the life blood of marriage." In other words, "IF you want to enjoy being in a committed relationship, THEN you need to know how to communicate effectively." See how different this sounds? It's not, "I'm married, so I'd better learn how to communicate." It's, "IF I want a result, THEN I must do something to get that result." This re-wording also opens the door for challenging the concept in the first place: "Now that I think about it, is communication really what produces the result I'm looking for in the first place, or is it something else?" That's how your eyes start opening.

- "Married people are supposed to ..." I.e. "You have a moral obligation to act a certain way with and toward your spouse." Says who? This could also be re-written: "IF you don't do certain things, THEN you are not good at being a married person." If we take out the concept of "the marriage" and accept that we're just two people who have chosen to live around one another, then this really should read, "IF you want to get the benefits of the committed relationship, THEN certain behaviors are a good idea." That makes more sense, but isn't at all what the original phrase implies.

• "I can't do ... because I'm married." What they're thinking is, "IF I do ... THEN I will have a bad marriage." A bad marriage to who? Your neighbor? What they're really saying is, "People will think I have a bad marriage if I do ..." Now the frame issue becomes clearer.

• "Marriage is hard work" turns into "IF you want someone else to stay committed to you - and especially IF you want to enjoy their being committed to you - THEN you'll have to work hard."

• "My marriage is wonderful/sucks" ... isn't behaviorally oriented, so there's no IF/THEN clause, but to show a more descriptive statement, this becomes "I really enjoy/hate the fact that I'm committed to being around her and that she's committed to being around me."

I could elaborate more, but I assume you get the idea. There's you. There's her. There's ... nope, that's it. As soon as I bring "society" or "other people" or "the marriage" as a judge over how I should behave, it's no longer "my marriage" anyway.

I'm Still Single

If "the marriage" doesn't exist and is really a colloquial short hand for "in a committed relationship with legal enforcement," then things should change about how you perceive your obligations in the relationship. WISNIFG's Bill of Rights No. 4 says, "You have the right to change your mind." Okay, so the "committed relationship" part is moot, if we embrace this fully. Suddenly the "legal enforcement" part starts to matter. u/weakandsensitive once explained his position on MRP v. TRP, saying, "I'm not pro-marriage; I'm anti-divorce rape," which opens the door for a unique discussion from what you'd see on TRP. If you can rightly escape the frame of "the marriage" and can minimize the impact of the legal enforcement of your commitment, then what's holding you back anymore from getting what you want out of life?

At that point, you can function independently as your own man. You can set your own goals and achieve them. For the Christians out there, this is why I believe Paul says in 1 Cor. 7, "Those with wives should live as though they had none" (though this requires more explanation, which I'll reserve for the book).
And here's the thing: I've found over and over and over again that women aren't attracted to "husbands" - at least not as that concept is generally understood in society today. Just as "the marriage" doesn't exist, the concept of being a "husband" doesn't either. That's a metaphysical concept or label that people throw around to impute a social stigma on how you should feel or behave. It's usually associated with, "A good husband is/does/should ..." By attaching a moral judgment on such phrases as "a good marriage" or "a good husband," there's an implicit imperative for you to live by the standard that follows or else you're "not good" - or worse: you're "bad." In reality, you're just not living up to someone else's preferences. To that end, if their standard of a "good/bad" husband/marriage/relationship doesn't produce the results that you want, then why not be a "bad husband" or have a "bad marriage" by the meta definition in order to accomplish your own goals? And ... ::GASP:: ... what if the other person in the relationship finds they actually like it more that way too?!?

Let me be abundantly clear: I'm NOT saying to act like you're single. I AM saying that if you remove the concept of "the marriage" or "the relationship" from your frame, you are single. When you said, "I do," there wasn't some new entity that was born or created called "the marriage," which you must forever try to appease. You're still you. [This is more nuanced for the Christians crowd, but I'll spare that conversation here, other than to say that instead of creating a new thing, when she enters your frame, she becomes part of you - not you becoming something different alongside her; just as we become part of Christ and Christ doesn't change to become something new when he married the Church.]

... Just Married

You're a single guy who entered into a contract that has three primary clauses (at least in my state):

- Loyalty - That you are aligning your interests such that what will be good for one will be good for the other and you will not unreasonably try to harm the interests of the other.

- Support - That you have something to contribute and will utilize that contribution in a way that works in tandem with the contributions of the other (ex. one contributes money-earning skills, the other contributes home-making skills).

- Fidelity - That you will not have sex with anyone else outside the marriage.

My state's "grounds for divorce" predominantly stem from different ways of violating one of these three contractual clauses. Although these are the operative "obligations" defined in my state's statutes, people don't get married because they want to subject themselves to these obligations. There's another IF/THEN concept at play, which is at least two-fold:

- "If you keep screwing me and doing other stuff I want you to do, then I will remain loyal, supportive, and faithful to you."
Because of no-fault divorce: "Either of us can break the contract whenever we want, even if nobody violated the contract, and this triggers me giving you half of my stuff and income and you giving me half of your stuff and income." From there, whoever has more "stuff and income" is the loser.

Why would a guy want to subject himself to that type of legal contract? I can think of several reasons (ex. she has more stuff/income), but that's beside the point of this post. The point is to recognize the "marriage contract" for what it is: a contract. It is not a new entity. It is not a god that acts as judge over you. It's a simple IF/THEN clause you sign with someone else that in the absence of a pre-nup subjects you to the default laws of the state you're in.

To that end, a contract isn't a moral obligation to the terms therein. You can still do whatever you want to do. It simply lays out a penalty for your failure to live up to the terms you agreed to. If you don't want to live up to those terms, then don't - and accept the penalty you signed onto. People do this all the time at law - breaking bad contracts because they are more advantaged to go in a different direction. Do you think two CEOs in a corporate joint venture think to themselves, "I know it's not in the agreement, but I should disadvantage my company's position and make our shareholders mad in order to appease our business partner ... you know, because that's what business partners are supposed to do." I know it's not a perfect parallel because marriage isn't quite like a business, but the point still stands.

Or if you find that the benefit you get from the contract is valuable enough to you, hold up your end and keep the contract alive and going. Just recognize that in the marriage contract the person with less "stuff and income" is under no obligation to fulfill their end, and if they decide to walk away, the person with more "stuff and income" still pays the same contractual penalty as if he were the one to have breached the contract, even if he did nothing wrong.

THRILL OF THE CHASE

I didn't mean to write this section, but it kind of rolled out as I was typing the application section, so I decided to make it its own thing. As I said before: women aren't attracted to husbands (at least the way society describes them). They're attracted to the single bachelor who had his life together before he met her - the guy who did what he wanted, when he wanted, because there were no social judgments compelling him toward a certain lifestyle. She's attracted to the guy who doesn't need her - who could walk away on a moment's notice if he felt like it, and probably be even better off than if he'd stayed.

But it goes deeper than that. Consider the old saying, "Women are the gatekeepers of sex; men are the gatekeepers of commitment." Now also consider how much women enjoy dating around. Let's be honest, it's not because they're just as horny as men all the time. Just as a man considers himself to have "conquered" or been "successful" with a woman when he's had sex with her, so also does a woman "conquer" or "succeed" with a man when she's managed to lock down his commitment. Just as a man mistakenly assumes that marriage ends the chase of his wife's sexuality, so also do women mistakenly assume that marriage should end the chase of their husband's commitment. And just as men are polygamous with their desire for sexual conquest, so also are women hypergamous with their commitment conquests, which is what prompts things like branch-swinging. After all, once you've climbed Denali, you just don't feel as satisfied climbing Pike's Peak. You set your sights on Mt. Everest.

But what would happen if she climbed Pike's Peak, then the next day found that some tectonic plates shifted and the mountain's now a few hundred feet taller and harder to climb? Well, now she can't say she's really locked down Pike's Peak. She's going to have to go at it again. What would happen if she locked down her man's commitment and got him to marry her, then she found out that his commitment wasn't as locked down as she once thought? Or what if she had his commitment, but found that there were other parts of his inner-most being that he was holding back - that he hadn't yet trusted her with yet? Surely she would find it a new challenge to get her man to commit even those parts to her, which he otherwise reserved for himself, which is why a man's attractiveness goes up as the woman finds more and more mysterious things about him. It's fun for her to chase after those things, persuading him to unlock them to her.

Just as men love the thrill of the chase of a woman's sexuality and will hop from woman to woman to get it, in the same way, women love the thrill of the chase of a man's commitment and will hop from man to man to get it. It's as much of a drug to them as the high a guy gets from all the sexual IOIs he gets from a new woman. When a man views "the marriage" as a concept in itself, it puts a stop to the chase. It re-frames how men and women relate with each other into an entirely new paradigm focused on intangible standards that make the man and woman assume that "the chase" is over and there are bigger fish to fry. [For the Christian: does "the chase" of Christ stop as soon as you're saved?]

APPLICATION

The way I interact with my wife isn't oriented around "improving the marriage" or "being a good husband." From time to time, it may be convenient to use such shorthand, but looking back I see that this type of language does a serious disservice to any man who is already struggling to live in his own frame. The way I interact with my wife is oriented around meeting my goals. As I pursue my goals, I take a few steps forward. If my wife doesn't walk with me, she gets left behind. This shows her that my commitment is to my own purposes and not to her. That keeps the mountain growing. That keeps her chasing me - because she knows that somewhere along the way, as I keep walking forward she'll be left in the dust and my commitment to her will be little more than a silhouette in the horizon until she earns it back by catching up - and I reward her as she does so. This is fun for her and freeing for me.

Now, my goals aren't antagonistic toward my wife. I don't make it a point to make her miserable just to screw with her, as the blue pill objectors accuse. On the contrary, when I accept the fact that I am my own man, and I have sufficiently mitigated the risks of our "marriage contract" being broken, I am free to be the same guy she first fell in love with - the guy who had a mission that's more important than her, who had options, who didn't cave to social pressures and stigmas about what a "husband" or "marriage" should look like. That's the guy whose wife is constantly striving to help him, to please him, and to keep him committed and who is just as excited to do these things in the marriage as she was when they were dating. That's the guy whose wife is happy. More importantly: that's the guy who's happy.
Don't argue.

Here's the short version about me: i was married, i took TRP, we divorced as 'too little too late' and here I am at 40 still reading still learning still growing.

I read a lot of posts from guys where he describes that his wife did or said something -and he describes how he responded -and what he said and what she said -and how he owned it/ or he dominated/ or he was too Alpha/ or he was too beta/ and so on.

The problem is, at the point where you are arguing with a woman you have already lost because of some key fundamental facts.

The incorrect assumptions that I see are as follows: 1 you believe that your wife will recognise and respond to coherent thought 2 you believe that the woman is equal to you 3 you believe that when she understands your coherent point, that she will acknowledge that you have made a coherent point and yield the argument, while perhaps offering to change her shitty behavior, blow you and check your tyre pressure too.

Like every adult human she wants to marry up, believing that she got a catch who all her friends are jealous of. She never asked to be married to her equal, when you act like her equal you have devalued yourself to the level of a woman.

Because you have devalued yourself she despises you, and because she disrespects and despises you she cannot possibly acknowledge that you have made a valid point. No combination of words that you come up with, however logical, will make her admit that you are right and she is wrong. That would be like admitting that you are smarter than her and there is no possible dignified way for her to admit that she is not as smart as you are.

Stepping back in time a little I noticed that men are never recorded as having lengthy arguments with their wives; they may have fought but men never tried to use rational debate with their wives very often at all.

About 4 generations ago feminism taught us all that men and women are the same which is fundamentally a sexist thought of course, but I won't go into that here. Feminism also taught us that women are equal which is fine in terms of the right to vote and the right to work and so on, but women are not equally logical and should never be assumed to think like a man would think and acknowledge that you have a valid point, even when you do.

She is unlikely to be arguing because she wants to learn something; it is far more likely that she is arguing because she needs to manipulate you or express displeasure from something you said or didn't say this morning, or because she simply craves attention, or because she is simply trying to mask some other emotion that she is upset about.

In conclusion I hope that I have made this point clearly.
When you choose to argue with her you have elevated her to your level, therefore she rightly despises you, therefore you have lost no matter what else happens.

Additionally, I have made the decision to never argue with my ex-wife since that is a privilege that was part of marriage, and therefore it is a privilege that she has lost. Now my lawyer does the talking. 3 years later and she still hates it when I can't be baited and she doesn't even know why.

Instead of arguing with her; there are a few things that you can do that I have done in the past, including; Amused Mastery/ grab a pre packed gym bag and disappear for two hours/ say nothing/ or state your piece clearly one time and leave it at that.

TR;DL: If you're thinking of implementing MRP, go all in.

If you want some ideas on how to avoid completely swallowing the red pill, I'm your man. I've rubbed it, snorted it, gargled it, and tried to use it as a suppository. I think one of the reasons I rode the fence so long was I was getting sex 1-2 times a week. Also, since 2015, I've added anal, bondage, etc to the sex menu. I'd cycle between nice guy, then asshole if I was 'wronged'. I could see the path I was on; all the while using my wife as a scapegoat. Basically I'm a passive aggressive bitch, beta to the core, who gets angry and sulks when I don't get my way. I was heading towards some grumpy dad sitcom character. I cringe when I think about how I dealt with my wife and my kids. In order to avoid conflict, I'd waffle on most things. Had some WTF moments before MRP in 2010.

1. I had a couple small health issues and took a bunch of sh!t. I was thinking "in sickness and in health, ya right".
2. Around the same time as my minor health issues, I had a drop in revenue in my small business. I reeled in spending, hardcore. My wife was absolutely wild that I was "taking things away" from her, "making her life harder", etc, etc. She was like this for months until she adjusted to the new reality. This one particularly hit me hard. I remembered saying to her, "All I am to you is a walking wallet." By 2014, I had revenue back to pre-recession levels I didn't tell her and I didn't spend like I did before. I kept things tight money wise.
3. My wife has a sense of duty and pre-established male/female roles. Thank goodness for me, a wife's duty is sex with her husband. During a weekly starfish-obligatory-every-position-hurts-when-will-you-be-done-sex I had finally had enough. She was doggie style and kept pushing her ass back giving me no room to stroke. I got mad and just pounded her forward so hard she couldn't push back. She responded amazingly. I was caught up in the passion and for some reason I pulled her hair, hard. She stifled a yell "finally!". (Kids in the house.) When I asked her afterwards what she meant she clammed up.

These instances made me think, what the f&ck am I doing? I'm naturally a happy guy but resolved to handle my wife with disdain. It seemed like whenever I treated her poorly, she'd treat me well. WTF? So against my normal SOP, I became an asshole. As soon as I'd let asshole go away, complaining would come back.

Years later, I found MRP through a search on complaining wife. It wasn't the first result because all the top results were "bring her flowers", "learn her love language", "jump through even more hoops", blah, blah, blah. When I first started reading MRP, I thought, "These guys are a bunch of cult assholes." However, quite a few stories really resonated with me. So I cherry picked the advise in askMRP, MRP, and the books on the sidebar. In other words, I did not internalize the books in the sidebar. I'd read the material but not while fully engaged. I read to finish reading. I'd work one aspect. Then, I'd have some success because I 'fixed it', then back off. I was on the slooow drip progression plan.

Then, I decided to go all in and took the full prescription. Lifting, re-reading sidebar, STFU in September 2017.

Transformation

Lifting is one of the things I thought I could skip. I was in fairly good shape doing Crossfit type workouts 4-5 days a week. I joined a gym and I'm on a muscle building program. My lifting stats for 5 reps: DL 255, BP 205, OHP 120. Little things like opening jars, putting luggage in overhead compartment, and moving furniture around are so much easier. Lifting is something I really enjoy now. I can't stress enough the benefits of lifting.

Since Sept 2017, its been a very slow journey. AA, AM, and frame is still weak. I always think of things to say 15 minutes after. The biggest tool and BY FAR the most effective is STFU. A recent example: we were working on a rental house and I asked her to vacuum. "I can't."
"You should've told me before." "I asked you about this before you did X." Blah, blah, blah. All the while I just continued what I was doing. I went to go do it the next day and guess what? It was already done.

Dread is very effective in my relationship. We went to an event and only by coincidence a super pretty 25-30 year old sat right next to me. She started asking me questions while wife was sitting on the other side of me; unable to hear the conversation. Let me be clear, there was no pickup artistry or effort on my part at all. It was s total fluke. Later, my wife said nothing but did I ever get laid that night, wow.

I track cycles using Clue app. I didn't have the wherewithal to connect period to grumpiness early on but its not an issue anymore. It seems like the relationship has shifted (like a massive cruiseliner turning 180 degrees) from me in a hamster wheel trying to make her happy to her working on making me happy. I struggle with lots but I'm a slow burn kind of guy. Over the last year I've really worked at cutting my covert contracts and validation seeking. I reset daily, although its a struggle. I have a long way to go and my journey will not end. I'm simply going to continue plodding away. The reality is: there are so many nuances and subtleties to MRP, its taken me time to wrap my head around it. MRP is one of those things you have to simply start. Put one foot in front of the other. I made and continue to make tons of mistakes. After a year, I can say, my home life is much, MUCH better.

After reading MRP posts for a year, I have to give a HUGE thanks to mods. As stated, I thought they were a bunch of pricks. I've come to know they are super caring, tough love guys who are trying to save us dumb asses. Hats off to you guys.

Uhm, I don't know how to put into words the last 96 hours. My house was flooded and ruined. My family? I got safely to her parents in Austin. The last days were spent using heavy equipment to rescue folks. Thank god for the Cajun Navy, the real heroes. My heart goes out to all Texans who came together and made the worst natural disaster ever a success. The loss of life, the rescues, everything. You can't Imagine. You can't believe. I was there, with my crew, rescuing folks, and cannot believe. The break in the rain is not the end. Don't get complacent. We saved lives, yes, and we are forever linked by this struggle. The real problems just begin....

My family is safe with her parents. I myself, am safe sleeping with a colleagues family. My volunteers from work are back with their families. most of us are now safe, but we cannot find food and supplies. Everyone knows somebody, yada yada yada. The most important thing you can take away from this. You can only rely on yourself and your neighbors. No longer is that just a feeling, its a reality. If you want to see the real news watch abc13, fox26, or khou. The local news are showing whats going on.

It's early in the disaster. Most of you are asking what can you do? Not much unfortunately. Check this link and donate cash to local shelters. Check into the real heroes and donate to them. Many of these men I worked with in the dark of night to pull people from the water. Unless you have a helicopter and can airlift in supplies, donate cash to these local people.

As for me, I am headed off to sleep the sleep of a thousand sleeps. My family is safe. I am staying with colleagues, my crews went home to their families.

Texans helping Texans. That's where the real work is done.
"Be a train, not a taxi" is not a novel idea within red pill forums although you may not have heard that exact phrasing before. It basically means "plan, lead, and hold frame" but I used this metaphor long before I found TRP/MRP and I still find it helpful. It seems to root the idea a bit deeper in my psyche by making it more visual.

A train is not a taxi. It doesn't drive around town looking for passengers. It's got plenty already so it doesn't need you and doesn't have to bend over backwards for you. It doesn't ask you where you want to go. It tells you where it's going and lets you decide whether you want to go there or not.

And where is it going? Fun town. So if you don't go you damn well better have something better going on because this train is always a great time and you know it. And if you don't go, some other bitch will and will post pictures of her great time on Instagram and you'll hate your life. So you probably better go.

u/red-sfpplus summed it up perfectly on r/askmrp today in response to a question about extramarital dating:

You do not DATE. You live your awesome, fun life. You do activities YOU want to do, regardless of whether or not they want to show up. You start asking what they want, where they want to go, blah blah blah their pussy will dry up faster than west Texas in spring. I have played this game with my "wife" for our entire marriage. Always worked. Now I am doing it with 3 different women I have met in 3 weeks. And it still works. Every single time I pressure flip them, and every single time they rise to the occasion.

A common tenet of TRP is "texting is for logistics." U/red-sfpplus's advice here works out thusly when dealing with plates or potential plates: "hey i'm going to (place/activity) on (day) at (time) with (whoever else is going, if anyone else is going). you wanna come?"

If she says yes, you work out logistics. If she says she can't, and doesn't offer another day, you don't reply. If she does offer another day, let her know what you're doing that day and ask if she wants to come (same invite structure). If she says maybe, use a takeaway "it sounds like you're not sure about your plans yet. let's just hang out another time"

With a wife it's essentially the same, just a little more assertive/assumptive/bossy: "hey we're going to (place/activity) on (day) at (time) with (whoever else is going, if anyone else is going). wear (whatever you want her to wear) and be ready by (whatever time you want her to be ready)."

If she says ok, great. If she protests because you guys already had plans to do x,y,or z, consider altering the plan (if it pleases you to do so), if she protests because she simply doesn't want to use a takeaway: "No problem you don't have to go, baby. I'll just go alone or see if (whoever you want) wants to go."

If she's not ready on time and she frequently isn't, consider leaving without her.

You're a train, not a taxi. You have a plan. You're not dependent on or beholden to the plans of others. You can change your plan if a better one is presented of course--you don't have to be autistic about this just to feel in control--but this way you always get to do what you want to do (unless what you really want to do is whatever your wife/plate/friends/kids want to do, you directionless vagina).

This is an extremely attractive quality/ability/frame to have. What I love about it with plates or brand new girls I haven't gone out with yet is that, if they say no, they still know what I'll be doing on a particular day at a particular time, and that they're missing out. I've often gotten texts back from girls who had said no, but as the day/time approaches will say "hey are you still going to (x)?" FOMO kicks in and works in my favor.

(shameless brag alert)

Same with wives. Just yesterday I asked mine if she wanted to join me and this other girl for drinks and dancing this Friday night. She said she didn't really like that particular girl and that I could go alone if I wanted. I just said "ok, cool" and then she asked where we were going. When I told her where and that we'd probably just grab a hotel downtown she quickly changed her mind and decided to come.

Women don't like sitting around KNOWING what you're doing and who you're doing it with, or wondering who you might meet when they aren't there to keep an eye on you. It drives them crazy. So drive them crazy. Have a plan. Communicate the plan and invite them along (except on boys nights). Whether wife, plate, or prospect, be emotionally unfazed by whether they come or not. Stick to the plan either way. You'll be glad you did.
"I think I was just raped"

by Red-Curious | October 8, 2018 | Link

... my neighbor (HB5-ish) told me on Saturday night, standing on my front porch. It was kind of awkward hearing the doorbell ring at 10pm in the first place, not to mention the fact that she was the one woman on my street I've barely had longer than a 2-minute conversation with. She was clearly drunk, though still speaking relatively clearly. To her credit, there are some situations where a sober guy having sex with a black-out drunk chick can legally be considered rape.

She asked to use my phone because her "rapist" stole it and drove off. I let her in, direct her to my garage for some privacy, and went back to putting my kids to bed after a fun night at Chuck-E-Cheese. My wife's came out of our bedroom, confused about who was at the door, so I told her what was going on. Her heart sank as she rushed to the garage to console our neighbor. Putting her crazy work schedule aside, my wife decides this is more important, so she headed over to the neighbor's house to sit with her while she waited for the police. That way she wouldn't have to be alone after ... you know, being raped.

About an hour later my wife comes back in with a disgruntled look on her face: "She was not raped!"

What happened? I asked with a grin, already having suspected this conclusion an hour ago, based almost exclusively on our neighbor's demeanor when she first asked to use my phone. Here's how it went down - noting that my neighbor apparently had excellent memory of everything.

She was tailgating at a bar and got fairly drunk - but not too drunk to forget things. She met a guy. He drove her home. She invited him in. They had sex and cleaned up afterward. She changed the sheets. They cuddle and fall asleep for an hour. He takes a shower while she's asleep (evidenced by the fact that it was dripping when she woke up) and drives off. She can't find her phone.

In her mind, he took advantage of a drunk girl, stole her phone and fled. She cries rape. So, she drives (still drunk) to the police station, but there was no one at the desk. She rings a buzzer a few times before realizing she could be charged with drunk driving, so she leaves and drives back home again. She looks around for her phone, can't find it, then knocks on my door.

Fast forward - my wife's sitting in her house hearing this sob story about how she just got raped and had her phone stolen. She suggests calling the phone to see if anyone answers: no answer. They hop on Facebook on the girl's laptop and message her friends who were still at the bar. Her phone is there. My wife leaves. Police show up 15 minutes later.

"I'm so glad I left before the cops got there!" my wife says.

Why's that?
"Because it would be really awkward trying to tell them everything I just heard and yet listening to her call it rape. She was not raped! That was a total waste of time. She's just a girl who made some bad life choices, had sex with a guy she didn't really know - or even like - and doesn't like dealing with the consequences of those choices. But you know what really ticks me off? How do you think she's going to remember this night? In her mind, this is always going to be the night she was raped. That's just absurd, but God-forbid anyone try to tell her otherwise. And if she ever finds that guy again, who knows how she might try to ruin his life."

I'd never been so proud of my wife.
18 months in, first time reporting

by Flynnjacklepappy | May 31, 2018 | Link

Info 40 years old, 6’1”, 178 lbs, married 13 years, 2 boys: 16 & 13.

Physical Health I hit the gym 2-3 times a week for lifting. I work one area each visit: push, pull, legs, and core. I run 6-10 miles a week. I stretch for 25 minutes after all lifting days. I’m close to earning my blue belt in BJJ from training the last year. The same gym teaches kickboxing and I started that about 8 months ago and take an occasional MMA class as well. About a month ago I added yoga once a week to the training and I intermittently fast everyday for 16 hours. I started that 3 weeks ago and have lost 10 additional pounds. I completed an impromptu 36 hour fast last weekend. I think I’ll end my fasting early on lifting days now that I’m closer to my target body image. The last little gut is the hardest to lose for me and I’m close to seeing all my abs, not just the top 4. My weight at 18 months back was 218 and I’m down to 178. I’m not sure what my body fat percentage is. I’m curious so I should get that checked. I have been on a strict keto diet for the entire process and I love it. I started testosterone injections one ago, half a CC once a week. I was at 246 and last check was at 740. Currently taking Vitamin D3, fish oil, and DIM for supplements. BCAAs during workouts. I got off the Wellbutrin last August and had a vasectomy in November. I competed in a BJJ tournament last fall and enjoyed it, 3rd place gi and 2nd place no gi. Planning another this summer, pre blue belt. I’ve talked about future training with my coaches for a potential MMA fight but that will require lots more time in the gym and I haven’t even begun that process. I’m just not ruling it out as an option. It feels good to consider that I could be capable of doing that but honestly it could be crazy talk from an inexperienced and over ambitious white belt.

Frame I don’t know when it happened but when I stopped giving a shit about what she thought I was doing right or wrong I started making real progress internally. I stopped saying “I’m sorry” for all the little things I apologized for in the past and I own my shit when I make a mistake. I don’t have a problem admitting fault and remaining confident about it. Funny thing is my wife now is the one who says “I’m sorry” for all the little things and she rarely apologized for anything before. I am getting better at not engaging her drama when it presents itself and the shit tests have decreased. I feel more comfortable guiding her out of her problems when they arise. Those situations would turn into a fight in the past when she couldn’t trust my leadership and I see that now. I feel stronger and confident. I see a difference in the way others interact with me and I like it. I have become better at starting conversations with people and have little trouble opening and talking with more attractive females. I don’t feel as intimidated. My quality of conversations with both sexes has improved where I don’t feel like I’m trying to keep the interest level up just to keep talking. Most of my coworkers are men and I regularly get asked what I’m eating/doing in respect to my appearance. I have tried to direct so many guys to MRP and a couple may have actually started reading here. It has changed my life more than I could have imagined 18 months ago. I have changed my life. I feel inspired to help others see the light because it is all so simple and clear after some education. We took a trip to Colorado over spring break this year and had car trouble on the way. Then my youngest son, 13, broke his leg on the slopes. Through those 2 big issues we remained positive and kept on moving forward with our plans as they changed. A couple years ago that would have been devastating and I know it worked out because I kept my frame and handled everything strong. She even took notice on how we had a great vacation despite having setbacks.

Sex My sex life has improved, in quality and frequency, and I don’t get frustrated when I hear “no” anymore, which isn’t very often. I just vocalize to her that it will happen the next day and it usually does. The soft “no” is becoming easier to penetrate. Generally when she doesn’t want sex she’ll offer a hand job instead. She even has been wearing sexier clothes to bed in an attempt for me to initiate. Saw a thong on her for the first time in years twice lately.

Comfort Test I saw my first comfort test a couple weeks ago which signaled that my wife recognized my SMV is above hers and honestly it is way above hers now. I’ve known this for some time and haven’t really cared if she noticed it or not. Which probably aided in prompting the insecurity and comfort test. I barely passed it because at first thought it was another shit test and started flunking. Being my first comfort test I had difficulty with the experience and didn’t score 100 percent. I turned it around and eventually gained from the situation but it was a tough couple of days. She has shown interest in taking kickboxing classes and yoga with me so it’s positive that she wants to get healthier. I offered to help modify her diet to keto and she seemed interested. She got off the IUD birth control in December and I see an improvement in her overall. It has been an adjustment with the addition of her having a monthly cycle but with some tracking I can adjust my Alpha to accommodate.

Owning My Shit I still struggle with maintaining my frame with my youngest son, 13. I’m trying out new consequences for his behavior and it’s difficult to find one that works. I now have a much stronger relationship with my 16 year old and have started him on reading some Red Pill material. He seems interested and I reference all I have learned when we talk about girls and their behavior. I wish my dad had the educated advantage I now have. It would have been a great head start when I was 16. My oldest started BJJ 2 months ago and my youngest will too when he heals from the broken leg. I could benefit from increasing my male circle of friends and I’ll make a better attempt to plan time with more of my coworkers and BJJ buddies. I sometimes make the mistake of telling my wife about work problems and I’m getting better at finding friends to talk about those things. I also talk too much with her about plans for my day or week with chores around the house and things I need to accomplish when I need to just shut up and act. She doesn’t need to hear me think out loud about my decisions. My biggest help has been resetting every day. It is still difficult sometimes but I work that constantly. I also try to remember to be more attractive and less unattractive. At first glance this appeared to be silly and too simple but for me it has been great advice to follow. Thank you to all those who posted their personal stories and all the educators who shared their knowledge. It all started slow and I was optimistic about a plan for my future but results felt sluggish because I was judging my progress on my wife's actions in the beginning. I'm way past that now and I see the last year and a half as a major change slowly making my way to where I am today. I still have progress to make but it seems to get easier as it's just fine tuning and maintenance mostly instead of major life changes.
Welcome to RPAlternate's newest guide to MRP man-building.

A year ago I made a post wherein users could ask questions. We were relatively small back then, as a subreddit, so I'm not doing that again; we have too many new man-children for me to answer the same questions four times.

Instead I'm creating a guide for building your body (Someone else can build your mind). Experienced users need not apply here (you're already jacked... aren't you?) Newer man-children stand to gain the most from this guide.

This guide simply lines out the best path for building muscle. I will not be focusing on weight loss (in fact, if you follow this, you will likely GAIN weight.) I won't even be focusing on fat loss. I am only concerned with your muscle gain.

You can be 12% BF all day but it means shit for shit if you haven't got the mass underneath to make it worthwhile.

Introduction

You read in here often, "LIFT," as some sort of cure-all to your life's problems. As if going to the gym and lifting weight can somehow make your life better? It's bullshit right?

If you have to ask, then you have no business asking... you don't even know what you don't know, yet.

OF COURSE going to the gym and lifting weight can make your life better. Doing so gains you the following:

- Alone time: time with yourself and your thoughts. I even eschew male company at the gym unless the guy is comparably motivated to shut the fuck up and lift.
- Learning how to fail alone: You will fail at some point; the weight won't move and you will feel weak and shitty. But you will learn that this happens from time to time and one failure isn't a failure.
- Learning how to succeed, alone: You will succeed more than you fail, and when you fail, you will learn how to overcome that small hiccup and succeed again. You will learn that sometimes you need to fail a bit to learn how to climb better.
- Learning your physical limits: Men these days don't know what they are capable of (most aren't capable of much at all.) You need to learn what you aren't capable of as much as you need to learn what you are capable of.
- Routine: having a schedule that you don't deviate from sets a schedule and creates expectations for you and your family.
• Refuge: the gym is your temple. Most are open 24 hours, these days. Wife causing you strife? Go to the gym. Sex rejection? Go to the gym. Feel like jacking off? Go to the gym.

Nothing in this life is made more difficult by being stronger.

Where to Begin?

Perhaps you read "lift" and went to the gym and dicked around because, and be honest, you don't know what the fuck you are doing. You want to lift, but without a plan, it's very daunting.

I did a 6x6 ramp-up program once, 7 years ago... Went from 175 lb to 205 lb in less than 6 months on lifting and beer. I got huge and I also got fat. I stopped the beer part and within a month I had gone from a well-proportioned, but fat 205 to a shredded 195. The point here is that I had nothing and just said, here's a plan I just made from farts and wishes... a plan I can now run with. The point is I had a plan.

Now I know more things about stuff and I have dabbled with a few beginner plans: Ice Cream Fitness, Starting Strength, Stronglifts, etc. My favorite by far, which is also the most boring is Stronglifts. The boring part is the part I like because boring = simple. A beginner shouldn't be doing floor cleans and a beginner shouldn't be worried about what his biceps look like when his biceps can't do shit.

Move units, then talk shit and we can do this. --Dr. Dre.

Preface

This plan runs through 4 phases:

1. Stronglifts: Gain strength and size due to the novice effect; strength and hypertrophy are achieved due to the sudden change in stimulus.
2. Supplant stalled lifts with assistance work to drive hypertrophic stimulus. Strength increases begin to slow down.
3. PPL: Add accessory work and reduce main lift volume to stimulate further hypertrophy and specialize slowing strength development.
4. 5/3/1: Increase strength development by replacing the linear progression model with a high intensity, low volume monthly peridoized model.

Stronglifts 5x5

Stronglifts is a beginner program that focuses on the "big 5" lifts:

- Squat
- Deadlift
- Bench Press
- Overhead Press
- Barbell Row
The program is run over 3 days per week wherein in a 6 week period, you squat 6 times, and do all other lifts 3 times. Over that 6 week period, at the very beginning, a true novice can hope to see an increase in the 5-rep weight of 30 lbs for squatting and dead lifting and 15 lbs for all other lifts.

This program is boring, but it is simple and straight-forward each session should take about an hour. Don't worry about your biceps; the rows will take care of those, for now. Don't worry about your triceps; the bench press and overhead press will take care of those for now. Don't worry about your shoulders; the overhead press will take care of those, for now.

Nothing in Stronglifts is revolutionary or new. It simply takes the 3x5 strength-building standard and adds extra sets for volume. It then ramps the intensity up regularly and quickly to account for novices. This sort of progression is called linear progression.

http://stronglifts.com/5x5/

Download the spreadsheet and use it or... Download the app and use it.

The stronglifts site is large and has a lot of information, but I'll distill down some of the important info.

- Warm-up: Start with the bar and do 2 sets of 5 reps. Add 10 lbs (5 lb, each side) and do 3 reps. Repeat this until you get to the target 5x5 weight. Don't rest between the warm-up sets.
- Resting between sets: at least a minute when it's easy and upwards of 5 minutes when it gets harder. SCIENCE: resting replenishes the Phosphagen/Creatine/ATP energy system... 3 minutes is about the amount of time it takes to do this.
- Do no more than 5 by 5: Do no more than 5 sets and no more than 5 reps per set.
- Deadlift is 1x5: Deadlift is rough on the CNS. Keep it low, for now.
- Failing (stalling) on a set: If you can't complete a set, continue to the next set and do your best. Even if you did 5,5,4,2 and your last set will most likely be "1", do not lower the weight. This is now your new benchmark. Do not add weight for the next time you do that exercise.
- Failing 3 times: If you fail at a specified weight for 3 sessions in a row, then you subtract 10% from the current weight and start anew. The lower weight will give you time to recover physically and mentally.
- Failing 3 times in a row, 3 times on the same weight: Example: you are bench pressing at 205 and can't do all 5 sets completely. You fail 2 more times and deload 10%. Eventually you get to 205 again and fail 3 times in a row again. you deload 10% (again) and eventually make it back to 205. Yet, once again, you fail 3 times in a row. This is known as a plateau. Congratulations, you are basically no longer a beginner for that exercise. For this exercise it's now time to advance to something bigger and better. (more on this in a moment).

Drink water, eat food, eat more food, drink more water, and grow. Remember, Muscle can’t grow without resources.

The likley outcome of this program will be an increase in strength and size, better body proportions, lowered body fat, better sleep, your dick will get touched at home, and depending on how well your body reacts, more IOIs in public.

What will NOT happen: You will not get that cut, jacked look. That is not what Stronglifts is for. That comes later. Please be patient.

Moving on and adjusting the plan

So you've plateaued on an exercise, but everything else is still moving along.

You don't want to ruin the nice novice gains you are making on everything else just to get better at bench press. Instead, we are going to supplant some bench press with some new lifts called assistance lifts.

Here is what a week of Stronglifts looks like:

|Week 1| | | |Week 2| | :-:|:-:|:-:|:-:|:-:| :-: A|B|A|B|A|B Squat|Squat|Squat|Squat|
|Overhead Press|Bench Press|Overhead Press Barbell Row|Deadlift|Barbell Row|
|Deadlift|Barbell Row|

Stronglifts is what we call a "high-volume strength plan." Notice how you are squatting every workout? See how you do some exercises twice a week? When you get better at lifting (read: stronger) your body becomes less adaptable and requires different stimulus to continue growing. In our example, you plateaued on bench press. Since your body is less adaptive to the stress, we need to change the type of stress. We do this by continuing on 5x5, but only once a week, and adding 8-12 rep sets on the second day. The format will stay the same, but now we have a lower volume day and a higher volume assistance day:

|Week 1| | | |Week 2| | :-:|:-:|:-:|:-:|:-:| :-: A|B|A|B|A|B Squat|Squat|Squat|Squat|
|Squat|Squat|Squat BP 4x5, 1x5+|Overhead Press|BP 3x10|
|Overhead Press|BP 4x5, 1x5+|Overhead Press Barbell Row|Deadlift|Barbell Row|
|Deadlift|Barbell Row|Deadlift|

This is how you implement this:

After you plateau on the lift, deload 10% again. In our example, 205 was the plateau weight, so now we de-load back to 185.

Week 1, A1, has "BP 4x5, 1x5+". This means that you will do 185 for 4 sets of 5 reps and then 185 for 1 set of As Many Reps As Possible (AMRAP). This is the first step to increasing stimulus: adding volume at a higher intensity on the last set; programing your muscles to move past that 5 rep wall it is used to and stimulating new muscle-drive neurons (stronger muscle).

Week 1, A2, has "BP 3x10". This means you will do a weight for 3 sets of 10 reps. But how much weight?

We need to calculate your theoretical 1 RM - 1 repetition max. This is the maximum weight you can do once. Since you de-loaded to 185, you were able to knock out 9 reps on that last set. using a 1RM calculator, we find that 9 reps of 185 is a theoretical 1RM of ~240. It is unlikely that you could do 240 once... you haven't trained for it and your max ever lifted is 205. To compensate, we will use 90% of this 1RM to come up with your training max -TM. This equates to ~215. This number probably seems more logically attainable.

For the 10 rep sets, I recommend using 50% of your TM to start; 107.5... but we'll use 105 as the number. For Week 1, A2, you will do bench press for 3 sets of 10 reps at 105 lb. This is the second step to increasing stimulus: adding high volume, low intensity work to stimulate cellular growth (larger muscle)

Since you excelled at 185 for the 5x5 set, add 5 lbs to the total; next week (week 2, A) you will do 4x5 and 1x5+ at 190 lb. If this is successful, add 5 lbs for a total of 195, do the 4x5 and then the 1x5+.

Now, let's say you did 195 for 7 reps on the last set. That equates to a 1RM of ~235 lb (that's 5 lbs less than last week!) This is where you start to understand adaptability and stimulus: you can do 185 9 times, but 195 only 7. To get a 240 1RM, you'd need 195 at 8 times... but you just can't. That's okay, keep going. Do the next day's 3x10 bench press work using the original number (105) plus 5 more pounds (110 total). Next week when you hit 200, perhaps you hit 7 reps on the last set for a 1RM of 240. Personally, I'd rather have a 1RM calculated from 200 then from 185.

The likely outcome of these modifications to the Stronglifts program will be a small increase in strength in the affected lifts, larger size and definition across the affected lifts (the 3x10 will stimulate larger muscle growth.)

What will NOT happen: You will not get that cut, jacked look... but you can see how it's getting closer. Please be patient. You are learning that hard work over a longer time yields greater appreciation in the results.

Breaking down the exercises

Eventually you will get to a point where you are stalling regularly and plateauing on other lifts. The 5x5 is turning out to be a self-limiting volume (not enough stimulus at too high a volume). That 5 rep limit is becoming a bummer!

Eventually your schedule looks like this:

<table>

You've likely discovered, as well, that this is a fuck-ton of squatting.

Here's where you stop looking at exercises for what they are and start looking at what they do:
Exercise  | Muscle Groups  | Function
-----------|----------------|--------
Squat      | Legs           | Legs
Bench Press| Chest          | Push
Barbell Row| Back           | Pull
Overhead Press| Shoulders  | Push
Deadlift   | Back           | Pull

Perhaps you noticed something: Deadlift is a back exercise? Yes, it is. It utilizes the legs, to be sure, but most lifting professionals, coaches, trainers, etc. use the deadlift as a back exercise, or more succinctly, a pulling exercise.

The functions of each lift now illustrate a new way to view the Stronglifts schedule:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Week 1</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th>Week 2</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Push</td>
<td>Push</td>

<td>Push</td>
<td>Push</td>
<td>Push Pull</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pull</td>
<td>Pull</td>
<td>Pull</td>
<td></td>
<td>Pull</td>
<td>Pull</td>
<td>Pull</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Now it's time to increase and change the stimulus some more. We will do this paradoxically by removing some volume on the main lifts but adding accessory lifts. Accessory lifts are those lifts that help the main lift, but aren't exactly the main lift (like with assistance work.) For instance, The incline Bench Press is similar to the bench press, but it actually uses slightly different muscles. The Leg Press is similar to the squat, but allows you to pile on more weight because you don't have to actually support it on your back, The bicep curl pulls weight to you but doesn't use your back, you get the picture.

While you can still irk out some extra novice gains, you'll end up injuring yourself or stalling more and more regularly with this much squat volume. You'll learn that sometimes less is more.

Push-Pull-Legs

PPL (Push Pull Legs) is what I like to call a secondary beginner program. Some people jump right into PPL. This isn't wrong, it's just different. I think PPL is better suited for a better trained individual, which is why I start with Stronglifts, plain and short.

This post on Reddit's Fitness sub is a stellar example of a PPL routine.

PPL is also a linear program, which is why I label it as beginner but it has plenty of accessory and assistance lifting so that it gives the impression of being more advanced, hence secondary. The accessories also make it much less boring than Stronglifts.

PPL runs as a 6-day a week cycle: PPLPPLR - Push, Pull, Legs, Push, Pull, Legs, REST. Over those 6 days you hit all main lifts once, except squats, which you hit twice.
You’ll notice that OHP 3x10 and BP 3x10 are done on the alternating days. This allows you to hit the 3x10 sets fresher than if you piled them next to each other.

Another new change is that Squats have been reduced to 3 sets of 5 reps. This allows you to hit your weights easier, but doesn’t tire you out as much. Since you are likely going to see some new increases in squat gains from going from 5x5 to 3x5, the squat work is reduced from 3x per week to 2x per week.

All accessory work is also the same across the board (Pull Acc. is the same for both days, as are Push Acc. and Leg Acc.)

I recommend doing Pull first if doing deadlift the day before squat day bothers you.

The accessory work will help make gains in all lifts as now you are directly stimulating the stabilizing and supporting muscle groups on top of the main muscle groups. The accessory work is listed as a range: 8-12 or 15-20. This means that you can do 5x15 or 3x12 or 8-10-12, or 15-15-20-20-20. Pick a scheme you want to work with and run with it. This is accessory work and it doesn’t matter that much. If you complete your sets successfully, add 5 lbs for the next time. For some things you may only be able to add 2.5 lbs.

Continue PPL until you plateau as you did with Strong Lifts.

The likely outcome of these modifications to the Stronglifts program will be a small increase in strength in the affected lifts, larger size and definition across your body due to the accessory work, a decrease in body fat due to the extra calories and greater lean mass achieved.

What will NOT happen: You will not become incredibly strong and you may find you are plateauing in strength development... 5-rep sets can get you close, but the next phase of our plan will begin to show GREAT gains in strength.

5/3/1 refers to the repetition format for this next phase. More specifically, it is 3x5, then 3x3, then 5,3,1. This is over a 3 weeks period.

Remember when I said Stronglifts was a 3x5 program with extra volume? This is an example of a 3x5 program. But where Stronglifts and PPL use a set weight to complete the 5x5 and 3x5 sets, 5/3/1 ramps up the weight with each set.

Remember when you were calculating 1RM to find your TM for an assistance work starting point? This is where that is absolutely necessary.
5/3/1 typically runs as a program across 4 days per week. Each day focuses on a specific main lift. 5/3/1 removes BB Row as a main lift, and relegates it to accessory work.

Wednesday is a rest day, as are the weekends. You can use whatever days you want, just make sure you have some off days and that the deadlift days don't back onto the squat days and the bench days don't back onto the OHP days.

5/3/1 runs as a 3-week, periodized schedule:

Week 1

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Mon</th>
<th>Tue</th>
<th>Thu</th>
<th>Fri</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Squat</td>
<td>Bench Press</td>
<td>Deadlift</td>
<td>OHP</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Week 2

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Mon</th>
<th>Tue</th>
<th>Thu</th>
<th>Fri</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Squat</td>
<td>Bench Press</td>
<td>Deadlift</td>
<td>OHP</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Week 3

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Mon</th>
<th>Tue</th>
<th>Thu</th>
<th>Fri</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Squat</td>
<td>Bench Press</td>
<td>Deadlift</td>
<td>OHP</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
<td>Ass.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

At this point, one would re-cycle the program with new TMs and do it again, de-loading for a rest week on week 7. If you feel particularly drained over the 3 week cycle, then de-load and rest on the 4th week.

The periodized programming portion of the 5/3/1 program comes from the ramp-up for the sets.

- Week 1 (3x5): 65% x 5, 75% x 5, 85% x 5
- Week 2 (3x3): 70% x 3, 80% x 3, 90% x 3
- Week 3 (5/3/1): 75% x 5, 85% x 3, 95% x 1

This is the basic model.

Some people like to pyramid the sets (65-75-85-75-65) (25 reps total) Some like to make all last sets AMRAP sets (5,5,5+) (15+ reps total) Some combine the two (65x5,75x5,85x5+,75x5,65x5+) (25+ reps total) Some add “joker” sets (65x5,75x5,85x5,90xAMRAP) (15++ reps total) *Some combine all of these: (65x5,75x5,85x5+,90xAMRAP,75x5,65x5+) (25++ reps total)

I recommend starting wit the basic scheme and adding as you deem fit.
All percentages are run from your TM (90%1RM.) Calculate these based on the last sets you did for each lift. You will end up with a sort of mini-deload, but that's okay... you're still moving up!

Go to Black Iron Beast to have a template created for you. Play with the options to see what's what.

Combining 5/3/1 and PPL

While there are "approved" or "sanctioned" 5/3/1 templates (they come from Wendler's literature) you can mix 5/3/1 with anything, including the PPL program I already mentioned. Instead of the linear progression model, you just replace the 5-by sets with the appropriate weekly scheme for 5/3/1. My program looks like this:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Day 1</th>
<th>Day 2</th>
<th>Day 3</th>
<th>Day 4</th>
<th>Day 5</th>
<th>Day 6</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Pull 1</td>
<td>Push 1</td>
<td>Legs 1</td>
<td>Pull 2</td>
<td>Push 2</td>
<td>Legs 2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DL (5/3/1)</td>
<td>BP (5/3/1)</td>
<td>Squat (5/3/1)</td>
<td>BB Row (5x5+)</td>
<td>OHP (5/3/1)</td>
<td>Squat (5/3/1)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OHP 5x10@50%</td>
<td>Leg Press</td>
<td>BP 5x10@50%</td>
<td>Squat 5x10@50%</td>
<td>Pull Acc.</td>
<td>Push Acc.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

You'll notice that I've replaced the OHP and BP 3x8-12 with the BBB template (from black iron beast) 50% 5x10. I do leg press on Leg 1, but do a 5x10 squat on leg 2; you'll never get better at squatting unless you squat more.

I do all final sets as AMRAP sets (5+, 3+, 1+) except on Leg 2 squat day, I do a strict 5, 3, or 1 as prescribed.

Because of the additional volume of the BBB 5x10 sets, I removed some of the accessory work: I alternate tricep push downs and tricep extensions, and hammer curls and DB curls (I do incline curls) I also alternate RDL and Leg curls keeping machine work to the Leg Press day and the Barbell work on the squat 5x10 day.

Conclusion

While long-winded and possibly information dense, this is a plan. Perhaps you follow this directly and perhaps you take ideas from it. Whatever you choose... make a plan, and run with it.

I will nearly-gurantee that if you follow this plan you will be jacked, strong, and have a greater appreciation for yourself and your time. YMMV as you only get out what you put in.

And don't tell me you don't squat because you play soccer, or you run, or you do some other thing that makes you believe you don't need to squat. I don't give a shit if it's hard... nothing easy was every worth having.
On a personal note

When I first started lifting with that 6x6 plan I talked about, I didn't squat, because frankly, it was hard and the idea scared me a bit; no one ever taught me how or the benefits of it. I leg pressed, and did extensions, and leg curls, but none of that replaces the squat. Later I stopped lifting, started running all the time, read MMSLP, started lifting, found RP, lifted more.

Ever notice when someone who runs all the time walks into the room? Yeah, neither does anyone else. Ever notice when a jacked dude who lifts walks into a room? You may not have because you don't pay attention to such things, but you will notice when people notice YOU walking into the room.

When I started lifting, just before RP, I was about 180 - 185 lbs. I was wiry and strong, but no jacked. BJJ kept me in great shape and I could take on all-comers with confidence, but BJJ never made anyone jacked. When waiting on a lifting station, such as a bench, or squat, guys would look at me and continue their sets. I'm either not someone to be a bother or I'm seen as being below them.

I'm consistently 195 or higher now.

Now when I wait on a station, guys offer to have me work in and sometimes they even stop doing their sets and go somewhere else. Women, especially, will just stop doing their sets, let me do mine, and make room whenever I need it. And they do it with a smile on their face and a twinkle in their eye. I'm always gracious, with a grin, and I always offer them to work in, "no... I don't want to bother you." Suit yourself.

Before, walking through the BART station (bay area "subway") people would rub shoulders, or not move. Now, I'm given a wider berth (space is still limited on the platform) and apologies are given even when they didn't do anything wrong.

Before, my wife would say she liked the V at my waist (I was 180 and cut), now I'm a little less cut, but I'm bigger, and she says she likes my V while squeezing my arm or stroking my chest.

I used to drive for Uber. Women, when in the front seat, would sometimes do the arm touch as women are oft to do. When they do there's always a light squeeze on the arm... then they are suddenly very interested in the things I say or the opinions I have. My eyes, they earlier cared little about, if at all, are suddenly the nicest eyes they have ever seen. Sometimes the boyfriend mate-guards. Sometimes the orbiters try. I was once asked to drop a boyfriend off first because she wanted to be dropped off at her house, alone and this was after their original plan was to just to drop them both off at her house. The boyfriend didn't interject or mate-guard that time.

My point is, this is just the external, superficial value in lifting weights. Your confidence will increase, your "command presence" will increase, you will carry yourself taller, and people will simply respect you for being present.
Do not underestimate the value of lifting. Hike. fine. Run. fine. swim. fine. Do whatever else, but ALSO lift.

Good luck.
Here is a retrospective.

One year ago

- I was 60+ pounds overweight
- Body Fat was probably 30%
- Couldn't admit I was embarrassed to take my shirt off at the beach
- Relied entirely on external validation
- Was attending marriage counseling
- Was watching art of blowjob instead of getting them
- Expected women to act like grown men even though I wasn't
- Had no real self esteem
- Had never been to a gym
- Had no idea how to dress
- Had no idea how to cook
- Had no idea how to handle women
- Had no idea what women are
- Had no idea why I had banged 10s but was never been able to keep one around
- Had no idea that game existed
- Had no frame
- Had zero emotional state control
- Had no discipline
- Had no idea who I was
- Had no idea what I wanted from life
- Had no idea why I'd failed
- Had no contentment for life
- Had no idea what a shit test was
- Had no skills to pass shit tests
- Had no idea why my wife wasn't happy

Actions I took

- Went to the gym started daily cardio
- Began lifting with machines
- Read Athol Kay's books
- Wrote down answers to NMMNG and shared them in OYS here.
- Read WISNIFG and practiced the techniques
- Got fired by the marriage counselor
- Quit watching porn
- Stopped cock blocking myself
- Began to practice agree & amplify
- Learned AWALT and right alpha right time
• Read The Rational Male
• Studied game - 16 commandments of poon, book of pook, bang, day bang, the natural, models
• Read Sex God Method
• 48 Laws of Power
• Saving a low sex Marriage Blue Pill Professor
• Punched my ego in the face when it wasn't done for me here
• Opened tinder and bumble accounts and found abundance
• Bought a completely new wardrobe when my clothes no longer fit
• Learned to cook well and eat right
• Handled all grocery lists and shopping
• Made a budget and separate bank accounts for bills only
• Took over the treasury, gave wife a planned and reasonable allowance
• Lived as if I were single
• Started going out solo more often to build a life of my own

What happened afterward

• Every part of my life got better
• I have rational confidence
• I developed self esteem
• IOIs from hot women in public places
• Wife tells me openly how happy she is • Consistent sex
• Wife asks if she can help me run our life
• Raise at work
• Reconnected with the former friend who Red Knighted me, but got sick of my shit asking him to take ownership of my own life decisions. Maybe he's reading this but no fucks given because we don't talk about Fight Club anymore. We are actual buddies now.
• Younger co worker who moved here from another country and lifts weights literally says to me "you are an alpha male" and confides to me that he is practicing game.
• I have the power to choose which fucks I give, if any.

The 90/10 Rule of MRP

by BobbyPeru | September 18, 2019 | Link

The MRP approved still mess up sometimes

Even years after swallowing the pill and practicing, in my head I occasionally say “fuck this. I messed up and relapsed into BP, and it’s just not worth the effort to try and fix.” Yes, MRP guys fuck up too, sometimes badly

Turn the ship around right away (instead of digging in your heels)

But, almost immediately after I mess up, I catch my own BS, and I simply change my behavior back. What I’ve noticed is that although women are based in “feelz,” the years of practicing RP do in fact accumulate.

So, since I behave RP 90% of the time, the 10% I act BP is virtually meaningless except in the moment. The key is to just resume RP behaviors right away. I resume my now “normal” RP behavior, and she forgets about whatever I did BP almost like it never happened. This is where I see newbies mess up often. They screw up, and they get autistic about trying to find a formula to “fix it.” Most of the time, it’s a very simple fix.... just change behavior back to RP. But, newbies often want to make it super complex and dramatic.

The 90/10 rule applies in the vice versa situation

It used to be the opposite. I acted BP 90% of the time, so it was meaningless to my wife when I acted RP. She would just easily shit test me back to my betaized self. So, again she would forget about the RP action quickly as soon as I resumed to my normal BP behavior.

So, how do I change it to 90 RP/ 10 BP Bobby?

Well, do what we keep telling you to do over and over:

- Read the entire sidebar and keep re-reading

- STFU. - this is so important at the beginning because saying very little is much better than spewing all your BP bullshit and constant DEERing

- Lift. This will not only transform you physically, but mentally also. You will start to feel your balls again, and you will start to act like less of a faggot.

- Build a social life. This will help you to get rid of the oneitis, improves IOI, create dread, and get your own frame
• Be a Leader

• Work the dread levels slowly

• Make the stay plan the same as the go plan. This is about you, not her or your marriage

• OYS weekly posts. Nothing helps you more than seeing your own BS

Ultimately, it’s up to you to do the work. Guys are coming on here in droves lookin for a quick fix. It doesn’t exist. Persistence, killing your ego, constantly adjusting, and practicing will slowly get you to where you want to be. BTW, a humble brag post where you DEER in the comments won’t help you either (just thought I’d point out that new trend)

This is about you. This is not about your marriage, but it may benefit.

So, How do you quit being a faggot?

One baby step at a time.

Then, one day you wake up and you realize you are 90 RP / 10 BP.

But, you have to put in the work, and it starts with the sidebar, lifting, and STFU
How she says "I'm Sorry"
by InChargeMan | November 1, 2017 | Link

Some recent posts regarding apologies, like this shining example, show that we need a quick refresher on the language of women.

Disclaimer: This is not new stuff, all available in the sidebar and prior seminal posts, but, since we have more Rambo's than the Expendables series... Here is the process broken down nice and easy for all of the remedial students out there.

ACT 1: She does something wrong, says something in a rude tone, makes a mistake, whatever... Something happens, it crosses some line, makes you unhappy. I'm not talking about slipping and falling on a cock, but normal day-to-day oldest kid in the house stuff.

ACT 2: Through some manner of spoken words, gesture, facial expression, removal of attention, you make it clear that you are displeased with what has gone on. ONE TIME. You don't mope around the house sighing like you are trying to inflate a bouncy house, you don't text her every 5 minutes about it, you don't call her mom to complain, you don't write her letters to find in her sock drawer, you don't make bitch comments under your breath, etc. You make it known ONE TIME that you are disappointed, and depending on the severity you might accompany that with removal of attention. The point is NEVER to punish her in ACT 2, just to make sure she gets the message that she displeased you. END SCENE

ACT 3: As you should know, women speak a different language. When a man says "I'm sorry" is sounds like this. It sounds a bit different for women. It sounds like a lot of wet sloshing, some muffled whimpers, and heavy breathing. It MAY involve the spoken words "I'm sorry", but not necessarily. Some say "Women suck at apologies", this is actually extremely accurate, just worded a bit wrong, to be clear, they "suck" your dick while apologizing.

u/bogeyd6 has an excellent post about his experiences and it's relation to The Art of War. In particular, pay attention to "Do not interfere with an army that is returning home". An army returning home is going to do everything it can to save face, they aren't going to be throwing a parade for a losing battle, they are going to return home as quickly and silently as possible, and hope that the townsfolk forget all about their failure. They are done with fighting, their spirit broken. Don't try to attack them more, it will lead to desperation and contempt.

For a woman, her reactions to disagreement/arguments are to either push harder, or retreat. Once you have "won", for god's sake don't keep trying to punish her and beat her into submission. This applies to shit-tests as well as apologies. Her "dropping it" is her way of saying, you won. How you handle it from there decides if you go to ACT 3, or if you fuck things up and show her how far inside her frame you are. If the one time she does apologize for something verbally you act like you just won the superbowl, confetti is flying all over the house, and start shitting in her corn flakes, what message does that send? It tells her you are a Beta loser who usually loses at life, and her submission is a momentous occasion.

You reaction should be that of a giant ice-breaker, you are unmoved by small bumps in the ocean, and if she wants to be a part of your life she needs to tuck in behind you and stay within the path you have created.

Depending on your personality, it may be difficult to hold your tongue after she does something shitty, believe me, I know. Outside of the home life I'm accustomed to beating my attackers into submission, then a bit more to make sure they get the point. Forget that mentality, if you need to hear the words, just say them to yourself as she is sucking you dry. In the words of her Majesty "Keep Calm, and Fuck the Shit Out of Her" (at least, I think that's what she said, I can never understand that British accent.)

Side Note: I'm really loving this analogy of you being the Ice Breaker ship. You could really go far with it. For example:

- If she stays in your path, she will have a nice and smooth ride.
- If she doesn't like the direction you are going, she can try to break off, which will be a difficult path OR she can wait until you cross the path of a different BETTER ship and get behind their lane.
- She can't see around you, so you need to communicate your destination.
- You set the speed. If you go too fast her smaller boat may not be able to keep up, and it is lost. If you go too slow, she will get board, and start looking for a better ship to follow.
- Your ship is unfazed by bumps in the road. If her ship accidentally bumps you, do you care? No, as long as she gets back in-line, it's no big deal.
- Your path is wide and safe and suitable for ANY ship to follow. If she doesn't stay close, who's to say a younger tighter ship won't slip in and replace her.

It goes on and on...
What up fellas. I discovered this place 6 months ago, been lurking ever since while starting my own MAP. Figured it's about time I start contributing. So here's my story...

Been married for 3 years (together for 5) and always had a great relationship...high attraction to one another, lots of fun together, respectful to one another, good sex, all was well.

Then came baby and shit started going downhill. Sex was more and more infrequent, I was constantly butthurt about it, but nothing changed no matter how much I complained or communicated with her.

Then I found this place and it all clicked: I lost status as the alpha leader. My wife pretty much told me exactly this months prior to me discovering RP (during one of our fights about sex) - how I wasn't taking charge enough - I was just too blind to understand it at the time. But it was true.

After our baby arrived, my wife led the way and I deferred to her on almost everything. She now had two children to take care of, no shit she didn't want to fuck me!

My background: I've always been fairly fit physically, making over 6 figures in a great career, handling all finances since day 1. I've never had oneitis, and was spinning multiple plates when I met my wife. Dread is something that's always been overly abundant in my relationship, probably because my wife knows I've cheated in previous relationships; I just didn't have a word for it until now. So, mentally and physically, I wasn't in terrible shape starting out. I count my lucky stars for discovering this community before things got worse.

While I knew I had to start lifting more and get better at holding frame and being OI, one of my biggest priorities has been to regain my leadership status by simply being more proactive, engaged and decisive. I knew I couldn't lead with the baby 100%, but I could step up my leadership qualities in every other area as a husband and a father. So, for example, if she asks "what should we have for dinner?", no more "I don't care" bullshit responses from me. No more waiting for her to ask me to fix something, either. It was time to man up by doing and answering everything like a man who knows what he wants. That's the simple frame I gave myself and try to stay within at all times now. Easier said than done, I know.

Anyway, I've had plenty of ups and downs over the last six months, but the point is: this shit works, if you put in the work.

Here's a brief overview of some of the successes I've seen:

- Sex has increased from 1-2 times a week on average to more like 3-4 times per week or more.
• Quality of sex has improved dramatically. Ass play is now a staple, whereas before RP it was never even on the menu. She's never been open to anything other than traditional foreplay and PiV; yet just this week she admitted how much she loves it when I DP her. Yes this is a humblebrag...it's only a matter of time before full on anal happens. (Thanks SGM!)

• I'm also way less butthurt after getting rejected. I'm still not all the way there, but my anger and frustration has subsided significantly. After putting it toward lifting weights in the gym for months, these resentful feelings just seem to have evaporated. I find myself NEEDING sex way less now. I'm not sure why, but it just doesn't matter as much to me anymore.

• I'm finally slipping into the Amused Mastery mindset now that the sidebar material is coming more naturally. I'm able to spot a shit test from a mile away, and don't panic and overthink my responses as much as I used to. They just amuse me now more than anything else. Whereas 6 months ago, any attempts at AA usually blew up in my face, probably because I was coming from a place of anger. And she could tell.

The biggest fuck ups I've made have been:

1. accidentally letting her discover fight club by leaving RP content open on my phone
2. DEERing like a bitch when confronted about the "toxic" and "misogynistic" stuff I'm reading. When this happened, I basically explained that I'm reading anything I can to become a better man (for her). She knew enough about RP already to not look into it further, and thankfully leans toward traditional gender roles anyway. If you have a woman that is particularly prideful and full of fem-power, I can see how this would be a complete disaster...but for me, it didn't seem to affect my progress too much. I wasn't going to let something silly like this derail me and I basically told her to "let me know if you don't like how I'm acting and we'll talk about it, but I will read whatever I please." I made sure not to go Rambo, and she hasn't complained or brought it up since...but YMMV.

All that said, I've still got a lot to improve on. I find myself DEERing every now and then when I shouldn't, and my frame is still more fragile than I'd like. If she's being shitty, it can make me act shitty too. I try to prevent this by always being fun and flirty, which totally works at getting her to relax and lighten up, but sometimes I just don't have the energy.

But I also realize there is no "end"...you are always working on yourself, and the moment you think you've made it is the moment you start to backslide. So fucks ups be damned. They're going to happen. The main point though is to make sure if you fail, you fail forward. Take every fuck up as a lesson and a step toward fewer fuck ups and you'll be fine. Don't dwell or obsess over them, bc in the grand scheme of things, they don't mean shit.

So yeah. That's me in a nutshell.
Some of you guys are so damned nerdy that it makes even a spreadsheet-loving faggot like myself cringe awkwardly. So, because it’s Friday and I’m better than you, I’m going to pander to your sperginess and make this easy for you to grasp. There is a very simple formula for generating true, lasting tingles. Get our your fountain pen, faggots, and start writing this shit down. Here is the formula with the variables on a 1-10 scale (obviously 1 being you guys and 10 being me).

Frame + Game + Attractiveness = Tingles

The higher your score, the better / hotter chick you can land. Simple, right?

There’s one big catch. This formula is completely wrong because women aren’t fucking robots. They are real people and real people have different preferences all the time. Some bitches like tall guys, others like taller guys. Some bitches like strong guys, others like stronger guys. Some bitches like rich guys, others like even richer guys. You get my point?

However, for the autists that need a formula, I’ll allow my inner sperg to come out just a bit more. Write out your formula on a piece of paper. Maybe you would give yourself a 6 on frame (we both know it’s a 3 but fuck it, it’s Friday, stick with the 6 you lying cunt), a 2 on game, and a 6 on attractiveness (lol, you fatass). So you do some highly complex mathematical equations, jerk off to some hentai, and arrive back at a formula that looks like this:

$$6 + 2 + 6 = 14$$

Almost average, right? That’s got to be good for something, right? Wrong. Go ahead and scratch those 6s out and round those bad boys down to 2. Now you have:

$$2 + 2 + 2 = 6.$$

That’s more like it. That’s why you can’t get her wet. That’s why she has a headache and thinks about her friend’s husband when she starfishes you 1x a month.

Why? Because you are your weakest link. So replace your other two scores with your lowest score.

For example, If you have a 7 figure salary and have decent frame but shitty game, you will end up with a woman who throws pity fucks your way occasionally but is otherwise completely content to live an expensive lifestyle on your dime. You aren’t generating tingles and you will eventually find your way in here or somewhere like this bitching about how she can’t throw some passion fucks your way even though you threw a Mercedes her way.

Or maybe you have game and are attractive but have terrible frame and are a whiny bitch. You wonder why the marriage bed now is so damned starfishy compared to what it used to be. You are your weakest link.

This shit is not complicated. It’s pretty damned simple actually. You want a woman who is fun to be around, fun to look at, and fun to fuck. You probably won’t be satisfied with a chick that is a 2 in one of those categories. If she fucks like a champ, loves sports, but looks like Shrek, that’s a hard pass. Now, if you are a piece of shit, maybe that’s the best you can do. That’s on you.

Similarly, women want a man who has frame, has game, and is attractive. You can exhibit a huge amount of control over the first two and a moderate amount of control over the last one.

So step your shit up. Get off the damned formulas. Stop getting lost in shit like “durrr hurr durrr my bench is 180lbs, why won’t she fuck me” you weak, autistic faggot. She won’t fuck you are about as worthless as a deflated kickball. You have the personality of a well-used sponge.

Think this shit isn't fair? It isn't. Life isn't fair. It never was. But you bitching about it not being fair simply retards your progress, retard, and makes it just a bit easier on the rest of us by you contributing to the lowering of standards due to population means. So play the game correctly or get the fuck out, I don't care. But whinging and whining and making complex spreadsheets doesn't fucking help.

And just remember autists, the formula is simple.

Frame + Game + Attractiveness = Tingles... but you are your weakest link.
I’ve seen a lot of posts here of men saying “I can’t lead because my wife is too strong/too smart/too bossy/too powerful/doesn’t like it/is a feminist/doesn’t give me a captain’s hat”. Sometimes this is hamstered differently “What books I can give my wife so she trust my captaining?”. These are all just versions of the following BP thought pattern: “I want wife to authorize me to lead.” In this post I’ll discuss some ways you can start changing to become that leader your woman wants to follow.

Leaders don’t need permission to lead. They just lead, period. Those that like your vision follow willingly. Those that don’t, well, they are useless to your vision, so you won't miss them when they stay behind. It is that laser-beam focus of the vision of the leader and doing whatever takes to get to the goal what inspires others to follow. Thinking others have to follow so you can lead is having it all backwards, and this backward thinking is why she doesn’t trust you to lead. Thinking you can’t lead because she doesn’t let you is like thinking you can’t be a man until she gives you your balls. It isn’t she doesn't want to give you the balls, it is that she doesn’t have balls for you, your balls are right there between your legs and have always been. Stop the Freudian bullshit, and just act like a man.

Leading is an action on itself, independent of followers. A samurai leads his life always, even while he trains in the woods alone. He doesn't need students to be a leader. However, often, students will come looking for him to lead them. Was the samurai a leader only when the student showed up and begged to train under him? Of course not. The student came because the samurai was always a leader.

When we are not leading our life, we can’t lead our family. And when we aren’t leading our family, we are just a drunk captain. Many of us that find MRP found ourselves realizing this, and want to captain right away. Some here argue with their wives telling them they have to follow their lead. This doesn’t inspire leadership or trust, in fact, it erodes it. Think of any boss you have had that is bitching that employees don’t follow his orders: that only makes you respect and trust him less. If your wife is not following you, it isn’t her fault, and words won’t change that. It is your fucking fault, and only actions you take will change it.

Leading is the hardest job. Everyone in the ship can bitch about their hard work except the captain. If you are bitching about how much work you have, you aren’t acting like a leader. The captain is responsible for everything in the ship. He can’t say “It is the navigator’s fault that I sunk the ship.” even if the navigator did plot the wrong course that led them to a reef. All the captain can do is fire the bad navigator, but the captain still takes responsibility for the fucked up ship. Blaming others is irrelevant.

The leader takes responsibility for his vision, not from the vision of others. If you are in a situation where you are used to your wife telling you which chores you need to do, and you bitch back at her saying “I’m not in the mood, I’m playing X-Box”, well, you are not leading because you are acting like a child, so you have forced her to lead like a mom. No wonder she isn’t attracted to you sexually, it is your own fault. Man up.
Transitioning from the frame where she is the mother and you are the child is disruptive because the only way to do is without her approval. Think about it, if she has to approve it, it means she is still leading. Leading is not achieved with verbal arguments so she recognizes your leadership. That is like the teenager that is pissed at his mom for telling him to clean his room saying "I hate you! I'm not a child anymore". The way you start to lead is to take more responsibility following your vision. Nobody can stop you from doing this except yourself. The more you do this, the more you will start to understand your vision. Vision is something you can’t explain with words, but with your actions.

Here are some ideas of shit you can do to start taking more responsibility and leading:

- Wax her car regularly without telling her or asking for her permission. You budget the time for that according to your priorities, and if she wants you to do something else, just say you are now waxing the car. No need to explain anymore. The same goes for other manly responsibilities: fix the house, mow the lawn, change the oil in the car, install furniture, fill out the taxes, all that. The more responsibilities you take of this kind, the more you are leading.

- Regularly scan the house for things that need to be fixed and done, write them down as a to do list. Write down what you need to buy to do them, and go get the things, and do it. Prioritize the list according to your vision. Do the things.

- When you do stuff that needs to be done, never proudly show it to her. That is seeking for approval “Mommy mommy look, i cleaned my room”. The job itself is its own reward because it contributes to your vision. She won’t notice 90% of them, but what matters is you know what is the maintenance the ship needs and you do it. That is what makes you the captain.

- If wife tells you to do something, think about it, and if it makes sense, decide you are responsible for it. Don't register her nagging, because leaders don't have time for that, they solve problems. Listen to her request, and prioritize it according to your vision, not to her emotions. Just saying “Babe, I got it.” and ending the discussion is enough. No need to say “I have so much to do, it will have to wait, blah blah blah”. The leader always has too much to do and he doesn’t need to explain his reasons for prioritizing. This changes the dynamics from her bossing you around to you listening to her suggestions, and all that you had to do it was to take responsibility. By doing this consistently she will learn that nagging only wastes her energy, and when you say you will do something, you do it.

- Stop playing video games, watching TV, being on reddit when shit needs to be done around the house. Men prioritize. You can only demonstrate this with actions, bitching how you are tired from the long day and want to watch Game of Thrones is what a teen would do. Just accept the leader works harder than anyone else, go unplug the kitchen.
drain now, and only after, watch half an episode.

- Plan a vacation/family activity. Don’t consult her if she would like it before hand, just plan it saying you want to do this, and inform her of the logistical details. Then carry out the plan. And if something doesn’t work out well, don’t bitch, it is your job to manage the problem and fix things. You will do this because this is part of your vision for the family, and you don’t need her to approve your vision. If you need, start with something small, an afternoon hike or something, this will help your confidence and will help you fine tune things. And if you forgot to bring water for everyone, it is your problem to solve, don't bitch about it.

- Take care of yourself without seeking approval. Make time to lift regularly, and have guy friends. If you can’t budget time for the captain’s table, then, you aren’t leading, period. If you think you are too busy, well, that is just an excuse. Vladimir Putin is busier than you and he works out every day. An essential part of leading is to being able to prioritize responsibilities and allocate resources, and then not bitching about your choices. The only person responsible for your body is you, so if you can’t manage that, then, why do you think others will trust you lead with stuff that affects them? Instead of bitching about what you don’t have time to do, accept that you chose to prioritize, and you have done all you could do. And a leader is always looking for more stuff that needs to be done, so always think hard and change priorities according to your vision.

- Stop fighting with her. Focus on problem solving. If something doesn’t affect concretely the problem, change the topic to the concrete problem. If she is bitching about you not cleaning the garage because you chose to build the new shelves, instead of pointing that out, just say “I’m responsible for the garage. Don’t worry about it.” and ignore the rest. You prioritize your way, and you show it with actions, not words.

After a few weeks of doing this regularly, you will start to trust your vision. And by acting on it, she will start to trust it too, and you will see she pushes back less. She will start doing her chores better as part of your vision. The reason why this works is that, since assuming responsibility is so much work, almost everyone prefers not to take responsibility. All you have to do to lead is be the person that assumes more responsibility, and others will follow you only because it is easier for them.

Is this more work? Fuck yeah. But that is what makes you the man and the leader. Stop bitching and just do it. And when she is PMSing and angry, just budget more tasks for those days. Instead of engaging her hamster, just do productive shit. That is why you lead: you work harder for your clear vision.

This works independent of how strong/bossy/smart she is. In fact, I think that the stronger a woman is, the more she wants the man to be strong to submit her. It is your job to be that strong man. Leading strong people is more useful than leading weak people anyway. So become that leader that your strong wife wants to follow, and she will want to add more to your life. As you start leading this way there is a good chance she will respond better to you and will start requesting clarifying information because she wants to contribute to your vision. However, that comes after she trusts your leadership, and this only will come after you have lead successfully for a long time.

If you think the problem is she doesn't let you lead, you aren't leading because you are being a punk-ass lazy teen. Man up and do your work. That is the way to lead.

[FR/Testimonial] Got anal for the first time in 4 years. MRP is the real deal (long)

by A_Rex | January 18, 2016 | Link

Tl;dr - decaying bedroom revived by MRP to the point where I'm getting laid daily and fucked her ass for the first time in 4 years.

Background: Forgive me initially for format and spelling, as I must be on mobile, which is a pain in the nuts. Me 36M, her 35f, married 11 yrs, together 16 years. Met when we were 19 &18 in college, not the TRP ideal but the internet was a baby then, and TRP didn’t exist. We have a 2 1/2 yr old girl.

Fast forward to 2 months ago. My bedroom never died, but I came to this place for help because it was stale and decaying. Sex was maybe 2 times a week and unenthusiastic leg spread starfish "masturbate with my pussy if you must" sex. Worse, she was becoming a raging bitch all the time, fighting over every stupid little issue and driving me insane. HERE's the straw that broke my camel's back - during a fight, she screamed "if you die in a car accident tomorrow. I will be happy. I will be so fucking happy you have no idea", with a maniacally large-eyed stare. It not only pissed me off but broke my heart. Here I was, a devoted husband and father and she gleefully tells me she wishes I was dead. Can't get worse, right? It does, because when I confront her about it the next morning, she fucking gaslights me and claims she never said it, and that I was crazy for thinking she would. Reason would not prevail, and I was devastated about how a woman I loved, and who was so good to me all these years (to be fair, she invested her youth, a substantial sum of her parents' money, and her own money in me and my career) could say that and pretend it never happened. I took all the traditional advice, such as talking to her, trying to do what she needed, and none of it worked. I felt that it was all slipping away somehow, and nothing I tried was working. So I found the deadbedroom sub, which took me to TRP, which brought me here.

Journey - after finding and swallowing the pill, I looked inward instead of outward. I got naked in front of my mirror, and said to myself "if I was a chick, I wouldn't fuck you". And it was true. Not my insecurities speaking, but the truth. Even though I was an attorney that made good money, I knew that no chick would ever want to fuck me at this point. And then it clicked with the red pill. My wife is not my happily ever after princess. She's a chick. A pretty decent one as chicks go, but she's still just a chick. No wonder she doesn't like fucking (being used as a blow up doll by) you. No wonder she's pissed. Look at you. You are 70 pounds overweight 6’1, 255 all fat), and you are a surly, miserable, unhappy little shit that's 2 steps away from alcoholism. She's falling out of love with you because you made yourself unworthy of a woman's love, and she's losing it.

I internalize the sidebar (and especially Rollo Tomassi's stuff) and get to work. I join a gym and get up at 5 am every day to either lift and commute to work, or just get to work ballsack early. I revamp my diet. I work on projecting an Alpha personality in looks (dress and grooming), posture, and most importantly, attitude. She notices right away, and we go from stale bedroom to outstanding sex twice a day on the first weekend since swallowing the pill. I learn to pass most of the shit tests and comfort tests, and do my best to maintain frame without going fucking lunatic Rambo on dread. Critically, I read and effectuate as much game material I can, and I flirt with this girl constantly, before I get out of bed, throughout the day, and when I get home.

The early results are good. She's enthusiastically fucking (and loving it) almost every day, I get a naughty pic text for the first time ever (after begging for years as a beta bitch), and she's treating me better than ever. Shit tests are getting infrequent, and are more flirty than bitchy. I'm not getting blown (which she never liked to do, haven't been blown to completion in about 6 years), and I'm not getting anal (last time 4 years) but it's looking up. Hey, at least I'm getting great PIV every night, right?

Patience, superior game, and anal:

In addition to lifting and frame, I made sure not to forget about gaming my wife. I tease her, fuck with her, flirt with her, and basically started treating her like a girl I wanted to bang, not one I felt entitled to bang. THIS IS KEY. Raising SMV is not enough - you need to seduce your wife like you did when you first bagged her all those years ago - every goddamn day. This includes being unpredictable (thanks /u/TrainingTheBrain), and knowing what she likes. My girl's soft spot - massages. We had some leftover kinky massage lotion, so I incorporate it into part of my game. It's good stuff, but for external use only. I research things further and learn the best thing I've learned in ages - Unrefined, extra virgin coconut oil is a great massage oil and great lube, all in one, provided no ones allergic. So I start my naughty coconut oil Massages, which lead to caveman every time, and got so popular that she would initiate sex by asking for a "coconut massage". In only 2 months this has become a thing, and I ask her if she wants an appointment at the "Coconut Day Spa". This also gives her an easy way to initiate, by asking for an appointment. All this time though, I had my eyes set on anal again. Thus, with each full body naughty massage, I make sure to devote time to her asscrack and asshole. No penetration, no sneaky shit, but explore and bring to the forefront.

Fast forward to today. She wants to return the favor and give me a coconut massage. We banter all day about anal, with me throwing it out there but putting no pressure. She acts indignant, repeatedly saying "Rex, I don't like anal and you're not getting it. Get it out of your head." Anyways, we get to her massaging me. It's good, and she works me pretty good till she gets to my cock. She massages that like a champ until I'm hard, then she climbs on top (this bears a pause. This is probably the first time in 4 years that she's mounted me. Keep in mind). So she rides me until she cums from me fucking her back from underneath.

Then this. Her: "get some coconut lube on your cock and get it in my ass". I do. We fuck doggy with me in her ass, but it's sliding out due to the lube, so I tell her to get on her back with me standing by the end of the bed, and I start fucking her asshole again. Her: "I'd better feel you cum a lot in there because this isn't happening again for a while."

As I fuck her ass harder missionary, this from her: "Put your finger in my pussy". So I do. She's fucking drenched. Me: "my god you're soaked. Did you cum this much from me fucking you in your ass?" Her: "Yes. Now keep fucking my ass and come inside there". Which I do, obviously.
Conclusion:

MRP/TRP works. It got her wanting to do something with me that we haven't done in ages, and seem like it was her idea. This was not duty anal - this is genuine desire, and the proof was the river of cum and begging me to continue.

NOTE: YMMV. Since coming here and reading the stories, I consider myself pretty fortunate. My bedroom hadn't yet died before I found this place. Additionally, my relatively quick turnaround can be attributed to the fact that my wife did not meet and marry me as a beta provider. I was a frat guy party animal when we met. We hooked up our first night meeting and were fucking 4 days later. We spent the next 2 1/2 years fucking like rabbits even though I had a shitty GPA and no direction. She pushed me to law school, and the rest is history. I was her AF that became AF/BB, then began sliding into full fatass dadbod betadom. Your turnaround may take longer depending on your wife, your status in her eyes when you met, and how far you've slid. I will continue To improve my ass and hope you all will too, because this shit is real. And it works.
I’m a guy who like conceptual frameworks. MRP works, but as I said in a prior post, I had become resigned to accepting that it’s a empirical/heuristic system, of techniques that don’t really hang together in a coherent theoretical framework. Just a collection of things that “work.”

But after reading a PUA by Tyler’s called Blueprint, I think there is an underlying theme that can tie everything together.

Women always say the number one thing they look for in a guy is confidence. What the fuck is confidence, you ask? Yeah, I never understood what that meant. Or to be more accurate, I misunderstood it. I would look at guys who girls said were confident and all I saw were jerks.

I would think, “hell, I’m confident. I have a good job, I have a good education, I am comfortable with myself. What women actually say when they say confidence is arrogance.”

After I read TRP, I was thinking “what women say they want and what they actually want are different.”

Now, that is a true statement but in the case of confidence, what they’re saying is just misleading, not wrong.

When women say they want confidence, what they mean is they want a guy who is confident that they deserve the girl. A guy who is confident that his SMV is higher than the girl’s. A guy whose frame is stronger than the girl’s. They don’t mean a guy who’s confident in his job, who’s confident in his video game skills, who’s confident with his friends. The only confidence they care about is how confident he is with her.

Or to put it another way, they don’t want someone who is needy, who is overwhelmed by the girl, who puts the girl on a pedestal, who wants to “woo” the girl, who think he needs to buy expensive presents in order to “win” the girl. (pedestalizing... thinks his wife is a 9... covert contracts... sound familiar?)

What she want is a guy who thinks “does this girl deserve me?” and “is this girl good enough for me?” and “what will this girl do in order to woo me?”

She doesn’t want someone who thinks he’s better than everyone else. That is arrogance. She just wants someone who thinks he’s better than her when it comes to the sexual marketplace.

Or to be more specific by what I mean by “want,” she is attracted to someone who’s like that. She may not like the guy. She may not actually “want” him in a logical sense. But she is turned on by that. It’s an evolutionary reaction beyond her control.

This is because women are evolutionarily programmed to mate with the highest quality male possible. And the best predictor of highest quality, other than social proof, are the subtle signals that the man gives with regard to what he himself thinks he’s worth. Who’s a better judge of the guy than the guy himself?

So if guy believes he’s punching above his weight class with the girl and he signals that, then it’s an instant turnoff. If he thinks he’s dumpster diving and he signals that, then it’s an instant turnon.

We say on MRP that your SMV is what your wife thinks it is. That’s true. But what she thinks it is is based on the signals you’re sending to her about what you think your relative SMV is. Do you snap to attention when she says something, either good or bad? Are you leaning into her when you talk? Are you watching her face like a hawk to see if she approves of something you said or did instead of not caring (if you’re doing this right, this is what it looks like: your buddy sees that you shaved your beard and asks you, “what does your wife think?” The right answer is, “She hates it but who cares?” The best answer is “Why would I even know what she thinks?”)?

These signals are very very subtle. That’s why she will often be unusually receptive after you come home from a good catch and release. That’s why the turning point for a lot of guys on MRP is the day after they decide they’ve had enough and are going to push the eject button, even though they haven’t told her yet. The subtle shift in your demeanor, which neither you nor your wife may be conscious of, triggers her response.

The reason that arrogant guys often get women is that they naturally give the signals that they have high SMV. This is because they believe that they are better than everyone else. Incorrectly high self-confidence -> signals of high SMV -> women Good looking guys often get women because they naturally give the same signal, because 1) they have inner confidence of knowing they are good looking and 2) they have had success with women before. Good looks -> inner confidence -> women. However, we all know good looking guys who end up with FUW - fat ugly women. I had a friend in college who was tall, athletic, etc.

Neither of these are necessary, though. If you have the inner confidence you can get women. It’s just that if you have neither of these, it’s extraordinarily difficult to build the kind of inner confidence that allows you to go up to women and through the strength of your frame overpower them psychologically.

But it can be done. One cheat is to learn the outer game PUA techniques that disguise your inner non-confidence. The other is to become at peace with yourself. PUA have a saying: “I am enough.” It’s similar to “I am the prize” saying we have here but not quite. They mean that you need to get to a point where you purge yourself of your insecurities. You don’t worry about qualifying yourself to the woman.

Women are women. What works for PUA on women they don’t know should work for us with our wives.

So, many of the things we do here on MRP can be boiled down to this question: “if you knew you were way out of your wife’s league, would you be acting the way you are?" Would you be buying her expensive presents? Would you be running to fetch her water? Would you be butt hurt if she didn’t kiss your booboo when you fell (physically and mentally)? Would you be engaging in choreplay? So the Golden Rule could be Act like you’re way out of her league.

So… am I saying women are attracted to guys who are out of their league? No. They are attracted to guys who think they’re out of the girl’s league. Subtle but important difference. Girls would rather screw guys who are not out of their league but think they are than guys who are actually out of their league but think they’re below her league.

For example, let’s take a guy who’s 6’3”, ripped, CEO of a Fortune 500 company, engaging personality, and maybe even a massive alpha at work. But if he’s placating to his wife, at her beck and call, buying her presents all the time, rearranging his schedule to accommodate her, then her neurons in her reptilian brain responsible for sexual response will undergo what’s known as autophagy. That’s when the cells self destruct by eating themselves.

On the other hand, with a 5’8” out-of-work bum who comes around to paint the stucco who acts self-assured, teases her, and projects all the subtle signals that he’s out of her league, her neurons are going to be firing so fast they become radioactive.

I am not saying physical attractiveness is not important. It is important because it makes everything easier. It is important because it is very hard for most guys to have good inner game without good outer game. It is important because physical attractiveness is the only thing that can trigger sexual aggression in women (as PUA define it, e.g., women approaching you), vs sexual receptiveness, which is really what we’re talking about on MRP, and which make up most of women’s sexuality.

Being ripped will get you halfway there, and it will be much easier. And you need to get thin if you’re overweight—there doesn’t seem to be any successful fat PUA, in the same way there are hardly any fat Fortune 500 CEOs—but there are a lot of not-so-good looking PUA. Obesity seems to an overwhelming single of low SMV. But it won’t get you all the way there. We know that there are guys on here who are ripped and in shape and are yet getting no sex. We tell them to give it time and to raise the dread level. And almost all of the time, that works.

But is it that the wife changes, or is it that during that time, the guy’s inner game strengthens, as he find more success with other women and his psyche catches up to his physique?

So how do you get to the state “I am way out of her league”? You have to believe it. If you try to fake it, and there is even slightest incongruence, she will pick up on it. There are a thousand signs. Like how much effort you put into building rapport (smiling, turning toward her, nodding, etc.) vs how much she puts in, etc. PUA can put up a front for 4 to 7 hours it takes to get laid, but we’re living with these female creatures for a long time.

One way of course is to become a high value guy of course. Lift. Get your life in order. Another good way is to do a lot of catch and release. Meditation. And definitely read Blueprint.
But the best thing? Stop trying to win her over. That simple act alone will get you halfway there. When you try to win her over, you’re doing the opposite of what you should be doing. Stop scoring on your own goal, and realize that where you need to get to is for her to try to win you. Turn around, and realize that you’re supposed to score on the other side of pitch.

So good luck.

Oh, and lift, bro. Not for her. For you.
My reddit posts happen IRL on average 2 months ago. It takes me that long to post up, and TBH it takes me that long to come to peace with what happened. I try to post when my brain is calm, and emotions are in check.

65 days ago I filed for divorce from my wife of 13 years and my high school sweetheart. Things have not been the same since Nov of 2016 when I had my breakdown between job loss and Xanax dependency which put me in a detox place for two weeks. While I was in there she took our kids and ran home for two months, I got sober went and got my kids flew them back and she came back a few weeks later.

I knew to not dig thru the trash, but I wasn’t ready then. I needed to fix myself – I caused this so I can fix it. If I can fix me, then I can fix US.

But I was not stupid, I never trusted her again. The sex was good at times, but at the end of the day she simply was not interested in rowing the boat with me anymore. She was too busy drilling holes in it to see that I was fixing what issues I had, and becoming a highly valuable man in terms of SMV, career and overall life.

The decision was made a year ago, but it wasn’t until I sat with my lawyer, calculated my “cost to fuck” and realized that I would rather buy her out then deal with being around a negative person for the next X number of years. I think we still love each other, but her turn is over. She has burned way to many bridges with me, and even when I lost my shit in Nov 2016 it really was self-inflicted. 18 years we were together, but it took 2 months to burn it all down. She has never looked at me the same, nor I her.

An Alpha can never be a Beta to his women, even for a minute and hope to survive, anymore than a Beta will ever been seen as an Alpha in his woman's eyes.

Two weeks ago she moved out of the marital home. For three months I have been carrying a voice recorder with me 24/7 and I upload it to Dropbox nightly. I have arguments on there, but more than that I have 3 months of overall positive interactions with her on recording.

I did this because I am not a fool and like /u/Red-Curious said – women will always try and pull out the DV card, and my wife did that. After she was served she ran to the cops and asked them to keep an eye on the house. A week later they show up at our house, pull her and I outside and did a wellness check and found nothing. Two weeks ago she moved out for “fear of her safety” and I have just LOL’d at it all. Go ahead and bury yourself. Her lawyer advised her to leave the marital home. Yeah, not the best advise even since we have not had the official temp orders hearing yet.

The kids are with me. They have slept with her one night in two weeks. She gets them during the day when I am at work, but they sleep with me, in the marital home in their beds. How can a woman who is so afraid of her husband be OK with leaving her kids with him essentially 24/7? It is all rubbish and she knows it. My lawyer is one step ahead always. His favorite line is to "be nice, be professional but have a plan to kill everyone in the room." Yep, he is a good Texas old boy, and I love him.

I do not want her to not see her kids, but I am going for primary custody and a 50/50 split (probably a 2/2/5 roll) of kids. For now, she is on the receiving end of a SPO which means she gets them Wednesday night and every other weekend. I hired the best $400/hr lawyer in town and he is already setting me up for EXACTLY what I want. We are talking about months of careful planning and execution. The money is nothing to me. My kids are all I care about. She is a good mom, but I am a better father. And I will be the 1/10 father that the 9/10 fathers talk about when it comes to divorce and how men get fucked over.

I worried for days about sitting them down and having "the talk" with them. I cried in my closet, in the bathroom, on the side of the bed and tried to think of how I can spin this conversation. But then I personally sat them down and explained to them “mommy and daddy time” and all that. They are 9 and 8, and not stupid. It was the easiest conversation I have had in a long time. I could see it in their eyes - they ALREADY knew. I pumped myself up for nothing. All the stress was my hamster and my own ego. All those tears, for nothing.

Now we get to live how we want, do what we want and not have what is essentially a BPD wife ruining our bowling evening, or Dave and Busters fun. We sleep better, we eat better and there is zero drama with her gone. I have crossed the bridge. The last two weeks have been the best weeks I have lived in a long time. My kids are happy and accepting.

I now cook and do all the household stuff that she used to. I have a maid out every 2 weeks. What I cannot get from Amazon I get delivered to my car at Kroger. It takes me less than 30 minutes a week to get food. I have put the kids to work with more of their own chores (putting their own clothes away, etc.) and it has gone over very well.

I went thru the main level of the house and took down all family pictures and replaced them of just the kids and I. I am slowly tweezing her out of our life and her presence from the marital home.

But what about sex?

I called it off with Shelly a while ago. She is too close to my wife and I do not need that kind of drama, so for now it is a dry dick. But at the same time I have been on Bumble and Tinder for 2 weeks. Already met one woman for coffee, and I get 2-3 matches a day. There is absolutely no shortage of woman out there. Be a high SMV man and they will come. Just putting myself out there to kick the tires.

You cannot buy happiness. You cannot fake it till you make it in marriage when the other person sabotages you daily. If you are not both rowing in the same direction, you will never get anywhere.

It is going to cost me a lot of money to buy her out. But it is worth it to be happy, and to raise my kids in 1.5 happy homes, as there is no way I can be happy with her again.
I also know that I am going to save myself a lot of money by doing this now, vs later. And I am likely saving years of my life as well. It gets to be a point where when you are with a toxic person you can feel them sucking the life out of you. And it is like an anchor pulling you deep into a deep ocean.

I am an extreme example.

We tell people all the time on here to be ready to burn the motherfucker down if you have to. I am doing that. When you get to the point of DL10 and higher, you just do it, or you fucking don’t. There is no fucking talking about it. But it took me 18 months to get to this point, and it has taken me 4 months to start to accept it. But once I did it, it was like dropping a 100# rucksack off your back.

I have cried myself to sleep, I have gone days without sleeping. My hardest month was when I fucked up my back doing PR’s of squat and dead in the same week. Well now you know why.

I had no outlet for the stress. Nothing for the pain, and nothing to keep my mind busy.

I fought the urge to find a Xanax. I fought the urge to drink myself to sleep. I fought the urge to go get anti-depressants. Every fucking day I had to pull myself up out of bed, and go to work and look myself in the mirror and realize that I am alone in this. I have to do this ALONE. And it was a long month brothers. A long month.

I channeled all my anger, frustration, rage, hope, planning and excitement into the Iron. The Iron did not lie, it showed me the way and it finally convinced me to man up and do what I need to do. That a single person can only give so much, before they just say FUCK IT!

I am not perfect, and I accept that. But I can only fix me. And since I cannot force her, nor motivate her to fix herself, it is time for her to leave.

And that is where I am brothers.

You make your own future. You define yourself on a daily basis. I love and miss my wife, but the woman I am married to now, is not the woman I married. And I am not the same man either.

I am a man who knows what he wants, and will not accept anything less than that.

A main event does not just happen.

This is how you execute a main event.
I’m convinced that this is the most difficult post I’ll ever write.

It will quite possibly also be the longest. As usual I am a wordy motherfucker so buckle up.

I have often used my posts for journaling and introspection and this one requires some additional background for most of you to understand and perhaps give me some actionable advice after you are done calling me a faggot.

That said, I’ll try to be as sparse as possible so if there is more that needs to be explained please ask.

MRP for 1.5 years

Dread Level 6-7 I am fit, attractive and well dressed.

And, if you didn’t already know… I’m a Mormon. Born and raised.

Yeah I wrote this shit :
https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/a3692n/a_note_for_the_latterday_saints_mormons_and/

Here’s my problem, and I’m going to offend all my fellow Mormon MRP brothers when I say this.
It’s bullshit.

Now two days ago I got to this point and had a whole cringeworthy, beta-as-fuck, bluepill DEER heavy victim puke all composed in my mind.

You see, my RP progress has been stalled. It was my own fucking fault.

What happened?

5-6 months ago, almost immediately after writing my dissertation on Mormons and the Red Pill, after duking it out in the responses with one notable prick who thought to enlighten me to all the faults of Mormonism, I went through a faith crisis of my own and realized a few major things.

Things that were parallels to the Red Pill and my experience with it. You see, I had discovered bits of the red pill a couple of years before finally swallowing the damn thing. I had spat it out as incompatible with my religion and being a good Christian/Mormon.

Once I realized that the red pill was my only path to self-actualization and that I couldn’t deny the truths of intersexual dynamics any longer I immediately set out to shoehorn the red pill into my life, and my religious upbringing/beliefs.

Hell, it worked at first. The LDS church talks a hell of a good game when it comes to traditional family values and often gets criticized by the feminists for being “patriarchal” etc.

Redpill fits even though most of the guys in the church are still blue pill plowhorses with their wives running the show from atop their marble pedestals.

I could be better. A warrior-priest. Faithful to his religion and to masculinity.
There is hope in the core doctrine... at least I believed that.

Since that time the LDS church has made a hard left and embraced more feminism, liberalism and blue pill positions and convinced me that they don’t really have men’s backs on anything at all. They just want to be popular, fit in and keep cashing the maximum number of donation checks.

10% of everyone’s income for life. I’ve willingly paid it since I was 8 years old. Hundreds of thousands of dollars over my lifetime.

Just like taking the red pill, there are a ton of things that had previously been red flags that I spat out and set aside in order to maintain my cognitive dissonance. Once I saw the cracks for what they are, I realized how little they had my back at all, changing teachings all over the place for better marketing optics, then gaslighting the rank and file that we have always believed certain things.

Things that we called anti-mormon lies a decade ago are now admitted because with the documentation readily available they can’t hide anymore.

In doing so, they made a liar out of me when I defended their positions and teachings on my two-year mission and in countless conversations.

I won’t get into the details here, but the LDS church has severe problems with honesty about its own past history, origins and beliefs. It is run as a corporation for maximum profit and the image is finely polished by lawyers and marketing firms. As times change, they triangulate like any good business to the most virtue signaling and profitable position.

If there was objective truth, that wouldn’t happen.

If there is a God, and I’m still willing agnostically to believe there is, I’m now convinced that he isn’t found in an organized church on the earth today, and there certainly doesn’t exist a man on earth who has the authority to dictate my behavior in His name.

Just like with redpill. I’m taking my balls back.

So why the stall in my progress?

Well, it’s taken a ton of time and research to process and figure this shit out. During that I’ve lost confidence in my worldview and frame.

Worse, my wife is still a true believer. Any criticism of the church results in fingers in the ears “la-la-la I can’t hear you” So I STFU and don’t bother DEERing

It’s patently obvious that I’m still a shit captain, because she is not following my leadership and doesn’t believe or respect a fucking thing I say. I’m the bad guy.

Mormonism is complicated, with a hierarchy of priesthood authority and an emphasis on couples who stay faithful together get to stay married forever after we die. Those who leave the faith are abandoning their family in eternity even if they want to maintain a relationship.

Apostates are ostracized, pitied, seen as lazy, deceived, sinners etc.

Once my retraction from the church goes public, the neighborhood gossip will immediately turn to the favorite cause du jour. “What’s wrong with him? Is he cheating on his wife? Is he addicted to porn? Does he gasp drink coffee or beer?”

My family will be a project for church leaders, and since I will have stepped away, a degree of my authority within the household will be cucked to local priesthood leaders as we will no longer have the blessings associated with having a “worthy” priesthood holder in the home. (as my priesthood will be null and void)
My wife will have the local bishop to turn to for moral support, and the moral high ground in bravely raising her children essentially as a single mother even though... I am right-fucking-here.

That’s the dynamic. It’s fucked. But it is what it is.

Coming forward to my wife about having questions has created a high degree of tension and dread, and not the good kind.

So why is this not more of a cry-fest victim puke? Because I fucking finally did what the sidebar tells me to do and took measures to make the stay plan the same as the go plan.

She threatened me with divorce being on the table if I choose to leave the church. I STFU and went on with my day. Next day I stopped being a pussy, called an attorney and sat down for a consultation to find out exactly how badly I am going to get raped if she follows through.

I had been purple pill justifying not doing this for ages.

Guess what? Aside from the fact that we would probably have to sell our house and destabilize the kids, financially I would likely be slightly BETTER OFF than I am now.

What’s more, I would have legally mandated half say in major decisions regarding my children’s healthcare, education, and religious instruction. That’s fucking easy mode compared to passing shit tests against the weight of her moral church high ground.

Major surprise to me and game changer. Now I have true outcome independence.

Time to weaponize that shit.

So I do my best to go Sun Tzu with it. “When you are weak- appear strong. When you are strong - appear weak”. Suddenly her shit tests are 100 times more hilarious. The fear is gone again and more than ever, I can truly give less fucks. I am less angry and more fun. But I take no shit.

Now maybe things will sink in and I’ll get the main event I deserve.

Here’s why.
I took a few notes during my meeting with the lawyer. Just basic stuff. Left them in my truck between the seat. Didn’t tell mommy I was doing it, didn’t leave them out as a covert contract threat for her to find and come running back, but didn’t give a fuck either. She almost never uses my truck and rarely rides in it.

 Turns out we did have to swap vehicles and she decided to clean my truck for me. She read my notes and called me in tears.

I kicked ass and maintained frame to a higher degree than I have since my confidence got broken by my faith crisis.

Simply told her that I take threats seriously and educated myself. She is free to do what she likes. I don’t care if she chooses to stay in the church. I won’t be told what I have to believe, and I won’t be threatened. Ball is in her court. Ended the call and went back to work.

Her response to the dread so far has been underwhelming. She’s done her best to flip this into a lecture about how she can’t be with someone who is half in and half out of the marriage. Blah blah blah about how she is expected to change for me and be my whore and walk on eggshells or I will just leave.

I’ve chosen not to engage other than reminding her that she made the threat.

Unfortunately, AWALT revisionist history makes me the aggressor. No fucks given. Stop engaging and STFU.
In addition to being a shit captain it is obvious that I am still her beta provider, since all she has been doing is looking at second jobs. Its already about the $ and lifestyle loss for her.

My plan is to make my way forward in the way that I see fit and now free of having my life held hostage by her or any church.

If she wants to come along for the ride, she is free to do so. She still adds value for my kids and potentially for me, I still give 4.5 fucks. Half of one for her and one for each of my kids.

She has power over one-half fuck. She can take that away, but I won't be zeroed out.

I am the prize.
The End of the Beginning
by Taipanshimshon | February 11, 2018 | Link

Two months ago I filed for separation. A month later I made a comment that I would put a post about apathy being the end of the beginning of MRP.

So here it is:

We all came here in one way or another looking for a way to get respect from our wives. Most of us were in the Deadbedrooms. We were looking for a way to have our partner show us the respect that only a woman can show a man for being a man by the sole virtue of being a woman. We came here because none of the ways that we learned – or were taught – that this form of respect should be earned – worked.

For some it was about sex. For others it was about having a ride or die bitch with us. But it all comes down to one thing. We wanted that respect that a woman shows man by her desire for him. She can respect you as a good father, a good provider, a good listener, a good problem solver and a and a good man. But unless she shows her desire for you do not feel her feminine respect for you as a woman.

We become the man women describe in their dating site profiles. Funny. Witty. Charming. Muscular. Outgoing and handsome.

Suddenly shit tests are cute and funny. Suddenly she wakes up to get laid - by you !!- in the middle of the night. Suddenly a “not tonight babe” is just that - because your dick is sore from her anyway.

But just as she can not unsee the years or decades of billy beta - you may not be able to unsee the years of disrespect.

And now you transition from earning respect - to living a life that expects that respect.

And you no longer care if that respect comes from her or not. Suddenly you expect more - not just from yourself - but by extension of that - from the girl you chose to bring along on your ride through life. Some girls no longer deserve that invitation. In fact - you can say a different person invited her originally. Or if you really were “alpha turned beta” - you can’t quite convince yourself that this girl who disrespected you for so long should get to continue being your partner.

It’s not that you don’t love her. Or that you hate her. Or that you’re angry with yourself for years spent in quiet and not so quiet misery.

It’s just that her respect is no longer important to you. When you look at her - you don’t see the girl who wants you now. You expect that. It’s a given. And if All she adds is that - you feel apathy about her. About her needs and wants. About her moods. About tracking her cycle or passing her shit tests. You simply cease to care.

For me - and I think for others as well - this is the end of the begging of MRP. This is when you choose to keep her or leave her. This is when you can actually make that choice again - to add her back to those things you care about - or to leave her behind.

This is when you can start to decide where you will Start to go from here - and which parts of your old life get to come along.

End of the Beginning
"I feel worthless," Alex told me recently. Why's that? I asked. "Because my wife doesn't love me." That's an awful thing to feel. Why don't you think she loves you? "She's just not excited when I walk in the room anymore."

I asked Alex several more questions about his relationship with his wife. They were having regular sex. She was respectful of his requests and things she asked him to do. She fulfilled her responsibilities around the home and they maintained a reasonable budget with an exceptional income. They didn't argue very often. For all practical purposes, from the outside looking in, a casual onlooker would have assumed they had the perfect, American-dream marriage. But Alex was broken. Why? Because his wife didn't feel excited about him. His sense of self-worth was completely dictated by his wife's feelings rather than his own accomplishments, life purposes, motives, etc.

Validation is one of the core issues underlying every aspect of human existence. I have yet to meet a single person who doesn't require any validation. As a Christian, I believe that God has intentionally placed a longing in our hearts for something beyond ourselves (Ecc. 3:11; Genesis 2:18), but even if you want to take an evolutionary psychology approach, we have been conditioned for millennia to be an interdependent species, needing community and relationships to advance, and those in isolation and outside of community fall victim to "survival of the fittest."

Validation-seeking is not unique to men, but the way we are meant to engage with it is certainly distinct from women. Biblically, men are to find validation from God and not their wives, but women are designed to find their validation through their husbands. I'll let the evolutionary psychologists among you figure out how this plays out in the secular world. Suffice it to say that men don't need women; we just prefer to have them around, for a vast multitude of reasons. Women, on the other hand, do need men - whether you want to say this is because of how God created the world or to satisfy their biological hypergamous drive, I don't care (they're really the same thing, from my view). The point is that women will always seek validation from men, and we can't (maybe even shouldn't?) change that; but for men there are both proper and improper ways to approach validation and seek it from others.

HEALTHY VALIDATION

Validation is the product of evaluation. It presumes a judge over your identity. In the absence of perfect faith or a mental health disorder, I believe validation-seeking is at least subliminally present in virtually everything we do as a species.

For most of the world, the best form of validation-seeking is when we are able to function independently, setting up standards of self-evaluation and letting ourselves or our self-created goals be the judge over our sense of self-worth and accomplishment.

A man who sets no goals, merely scathing by in life, will (appropriately) feel as though he has nothing to offer his world, creating a negative feedback loop that then discourages him from setting any goals. This is my brother, still living in my dad's house at 32, drinking beer and playing video games every night until 5am, having given up on women since his ONEitis left him several years ago.

On the other hand, my friend Dan is self-motivated. He doesn't care about how the world judges him; but he does have an internal drive to succeed. There's a stirring within him that won't let him sit idly, so he sets goals and experiences internal fulfillment when he accomplishes them. He is validated by self-created objectives. I suppose a man could experience self-validation even in the absence of external objectives that he creates, simply liking himself for who he is regardless of any other judgments on him, but even that becomes dangerous, lending itself to a feminist mentality: "You're perfect just as you are," which often translates to: "You don't need to improve or have ambitions - you just need to be placated in your place in life, and not challenge anything I try to do to you and our country."

For the Christian, the answer is similar. God sets the goals, but there is an incredible biblical latitude we have in the way we go about accomplishing them or how we evaluate our successes, and there is even greater grace from God in the evaluation process than we might otherwise give ourselves if we were self-evaluating. This creates an exceptional balance in that grace gives us freedom to fail, thus we can remain objectively validated by God through our efforts to grow and accomplish even when we fail from time to time - which is furthered by the fact that God is perfect and stable, so we know the standard he sets is reliable, unlike other people whose standards over us are imperfect and unstable; and having an external standard from God also prevents us from being lazy with our goals and squandering our lives, overcoming the trap that many people like my brother fall into.

There are other ways that validation-seeking can be helpful as well. For example, if you want a promotion at your job, you're going to want to seek the validation of your boss, as he is the judge over your qualification for the position. If you want to win a court case, you must seek validation from the judge about your arguments, honesty, and competency, for the judge is the actual judge over your case. It's appropriate for him to validate your arguments, honesty and competency. The difference is that he is not evaluating you as a person - in both cases, they are evaluating your behaviors and what you produce.

HARMFUL VALIDATION

I opened this post with a brief snapshot of a conversation I had with Alex - and that is a shining example of harmful validation-seeking. He allowed his sense of self-worth to be dictated by something external and didn't allow any room for grace in his failure to live up to the self-imposed judgments he created on his life. He didn't merely look to his wife for validation on certain behavior patterns he had; rather, he extended it to his internal sense of identity.

And that is a significant thing to consider. Harmful validation seeking is not merely letting someone else be the judge over your life, identity, and sense of self-worth. In most cases, the person from whom we seek validation never signed up for that role. We are voluntarily giving them that job, often-times not even telling them we are - and then they don't communicate validation because they never knew that was their job in the first place.

Men, this is a significant thing in your marriage and it's the reason why I started with the difference between men and women in validation seeking. Your wife needs validation. If you want to have a successful marriage, you must validate your wife when she acts appropriately within your judgment, because she has allowed you to be a judge over her. This is healthy and appropriate.

But a man should never voluntarily allow his wife to become a judge over him. Doing so is grossly inconsistent with biblical theology, the history of any successful society, and basic principles of underlying evolutionary psychology. Men are conditioned by God or by time to set goals outside the home and strive to accomplish them. Making your home your goal sounds nice, but we're not here to be Nice Guys - and Nice Guys are the biggest validation-seekers, and one quick glance at NMMNG will show you how that validation-seeking can ruin a man's life.

MANIFESTATIONS OF VALIDATION

So here is a non-exclusive list of different forms of validation-seeking that can get your wheels spinning to help you recognize when you're in that rut or if you're on the right track. If you're having trouble feeling a sense of wholeness as a man, look to see if you fit the bill in any of these areas.

- OVERT: When my 5 year old daughter shares her candy with her siblings, she runs up to me and says, "Daddy, I just shared my candy. Wasn't that so nice of me?" This is an obvious and overt example of validation-seeking. She is directly asking for my validation of her behaviors. Sometimes it goes even further and my son will ask: "Because I did this, doesn't that mean I'm a good person?"

- SUBTLE, INVALID: Picture a husband who plays video games all day while his wife is away. She calls and says she'll be home in 10 minutes. He continues playing for 8 minutes, then turns off the game and starts cleaning the house. She comes home and sees him cleaning, which he timed so that she would be impressed with him. He's not overtly asking her for validation, but he's implying it. It's invalid for two reasons: (1) because it's false validation; her being impressed by him isn't for his actual character, but for an image he fabricated for her to see; and (2) because this demonstrates an internal insecurity in him that he must impress his wife or that she is somehow a judge over him. Her feelings toward his behaviors becomes the judge over how he acts and behaves. What's interesting to note is that the man doesn't care to actually be a valid person under his wife's standard, otherwise he would have been cleaning the house the entire time she was gone. Instead, he only cares that she perceives him in a way that validates him, as evidenced by the fact that he only lives up to that character when she is watching.

- SUBTLE, BUT VALID: I've already mentioned that there are healthy forms of validation-seeking. Unlike the man above, the case of the employee or the attorney show us that we can do things without directly asking for approval, yet knowing that our superior's validation of us can have a positive impact on our own agendas. So, if a man sets a goal to have a certain level of income, seeking the validation of his boss to get that raise by exceptional performance in front of his boss is perfectly appropriate. If a man is wise, he has incorporated into his own goals the prerequisites of external interpersonal dynamics necessary to achieve those goals.

- COVERT: Alex's story is a great example, and this is the most common form of validation-seeking. This is when a man's emotional state is dependent on how his wife (or anyone else) feels about him or acts toward him, and he may not even have processed himself the connectivity between his emotional state and her feelings and behaviors. Getting butthurt is a clear and obvious sign that a man might struggle with covert validation - because if he were self-validated, then her feelings or behaviors toward him that caused him to get butthurt would otherwise have rolled off like water on wax. He doesn't need her to feel or behave in a certain way toward him in order for him to experience fullness in his life, so her negativity doesn't diminish his fullness either.

- COMPARISON: When one person's validation comes not from how someone feels or behaves toward them, but from their superiority to them. A sports team feels validated in their skills and accomplishments when they win a game against another team. Similarly, the losing team feels de-validated at the loss. In marriage, one person's sense of validation may come from feelings of superiority over their spouse, and this can lead to significant troubles when the allegedly "lesser" spouse either (1) accomplishes something that threatens this superiority, and therefore he cannot rejoice with his wife or empathize with her successes, or (2) attacks the superiority of the validation-seeker by criticizing aspects of his life that validated his feelings of superiority. He will then do things to re-establish his superiority as a means of seeking to re-validate himself. Note: the "I am the prize" mentality doesn't mean a man should seek validation in the fact that he is better than his wife; rather, it is a simplified way of communicating confidence, independent of validation-seeking, that cuts out a lot of the nuance.

- PERCEPTION: When a person's validation comes not from who they are, but in how they think and what they know. A philosopher may recognize that he is of little value in the grand scheme of the universe, but finds validation in the fact that he understands how that universe functions. When something challenges his understanding and perception of how the world and people function, he must argue against them to maintain his sense of validation - that he was right and they are wrong. This can also apply not only to one's perception of the external world, but also a self-perception. An athletic man who looks to his physical accomplishments as the foundation of his identity... will lose that sense of validation when: (1) even though he is still athletically successful, a higher priority in life comes along that stretches his sense of self into an area where he is less successful (ex. he has a kid and realizes he is failing as a father), or (2) he is no longer able to compete with other athletes, such as due to age or injury, and thus he has to redefine his sense of self and identity.

• CONTROL: Some people find validation in life through power and control. They don't care if they're better than someone or not, or if their wife loves them or not, or if their perceptions are right or wrong. If someone else is better, that's fine - as long as they can control that better person. It doesn't matter if his wife loves or cares about him, as long as he has adequate assurances that she'll behave the way he wants her to. As long as he is in control of his world and anything that might threaten his world, he is happy. If something happens that is beyond his control, either he emotionally unravels or he takes measures to regain control.

• PURPOSEFUL: When a person looks to an external objective and allows the accomplishment or failure of that objective to be the source of validation in his life. This can either be healthy or harmful, depending on the appropriateness of the objective. It would be harmful if a 4-foot-tall white man sought validation in his mission in life to be an NBA star. It would be perfectly appropriate if that same man sought validation in his mission to become a partner with a major national law firm.

• NEGATIVE/INVERSE: When a person takes on the victim mentality and refuses to be happy, despite opportunities for happiness that are thrown their way. They refuse to feel or accept any suggestion of validation over their lives, determined to live in the view that they are invalid, worthless, broken, unloved, or the like. If someone tells them they're beautiful, they snap back and honestly believe, "No, I'm hideous." If you tell them they're successful, he replies with sincerity, "No, I'm a failure." It's virtually impossible to convince them otherwise. Why? While they may seem to reject any validation-seeking on the surface by their direct denials and refutations, they are actually trying to find validation in their own self-perception. That is, they care more about being right about their worthlessness than they do about finding value in their lives, and thus they feel validated when something else goes wrong for them, as it proves their perceptions right. This is where many people with depression, mood disorders, bipolar disorder, or borderline personality disorder live.

This is, of course a non-exclusive list, and many of these things overlap one another. They're just common ones I see among my clients and people and general.

OVERCOMING VALIDATION-SEEKING

I'm sure there are a multitude of strategies for dealing with harmful validation-seeking.
Here's my suggestion out of those options, but do what works for you.

FIRST: Figure out when you're validation-seeking and when you're not. Look for signs of emotional instability, a controlling nature, an internal need to win debates, a desire to show off your accomplishments, etc. are all indications (though not de facto criteria) that someone is validation-seeking. The list of indicators can be very large and wide because, as I said above, validation-seeking is inherent in the motivation for most human behaviors.

SECOND: Once you've identified when you're validation seeking, figure out if it's helpful or harmful to your life and mission. Is it increasing your power, wealth, influence, etc. over your environment and those around you? Continue doing it. Is it causing you to become emotionally volatile, unattractive, and destroying your sense of self-worth? Cut that crap out.

THIRD: Once you've identified the negative forms of validation-seeking, two things can work in-tandem for you to overcome them:

1. You must find another source of validation. No one can be functional in the world without any validation at all. The primary safe sources are God (for Christians) or oneself (for everyone else).

2. Second, you must experience failure in your destructive validation-seeking tendencies in order to shift your psychological foundation from the old source to the new source. That is, you must see, experience, and understand that the new source of validation is sufficient for you even when the old source fails.

In order to accomplish these, I recommend specifically placing yourself in situations where you know you may not get the validation you seek. For example, if a guy sees his wife's attraction to him as a source of validation (covert, perception, subtle, etc.) he should initiate sex with her a lot. For one, he will likely actually end up having more sex that way. Second, it will also give him an opportunity to recognize that he can be stable and hold frame on the inevitable times that she turns him down, thereby learning to rely on his newly found internal sources of validation.

CONCLUSION

In all of this, remember that Thoreau is not the model man we should all be striving to become. We should not all be leaving society to become hermits in the middle of the woods. For some, if that's your goal, go for it. But the majority of people are rightfully interdependent with others. We cannot isolate ourselves from all relationships. And interdependency brings with it an inherent drive for validation from others, lest we be involuntarily cut off from the community and forced into the Thoreau life.

In his book Understanding People, Dr. Larry Crabb hypothesized that all men have two core longings: (1) relationships with others and (2) to make an impact on our world. If he is right, and I believe he is, we will always be finding some way to look for validation in these aspects of our lives.

What I propose is that we take control of the means by which we experience validation, not placing it in the hands of our wives, friends, or societal perception, but by recognizing that we are in control of who we allow to judge our lives and placing the degree of validation we seek from different sources with the appropriate sources and in the appropriate weight - validation in our work performance from our boss, validation in our sense of identity and self-worth from ourselves (or, for Christians, from God), etc.
Something as a subtitle

Great year for Rational Egosim fellas. If you've not been paying attention, a lot of people have been learning what the fuck the red pill is ... thats a good and bad thing.

The good thing is that guys are sharing notes like you wouldn't believe. The bad thing is that a lot of people are coming out of the woodwork to get their little bit of clout.

It's not a new thing, some 5/10 feminist (Cassie Jaye) made a movie about "it" which was really all about "her" Youtube is jam packed with hundreds of hours of content on "5 ways to be more alpha male, number 3 will surprise you!"

It's all garbage.

Having said all that, I figure why not take something simple, our sidebar, and go through it with a fine toothed comb. I hope to eventually add it to the sidebar here once the series is done. We re add the 60 DoD every year, the books largely don't change.

I'm going through Robert Glovers No More Mr. Nice guy with a fine toothed comb. If you've been here a while it's nothing new. If you're new here (or just pretended to read the sidebar so you could crack jokes about butt plugs and call people faggots) it's a nice supplement to you pretending that you're fucking your wife on the regular and not fucking around on Reddit.

It won't spoon feed it to ya, but some people learn better by reading, others by talking and listening, and some learn the hard way. I unfortunately cannot fuck your wife for you to learn the hard way, talk to one of the CAD's and I'm sure they will hook you up on the hard way lessons

No More Mr. Nice Guy

- Chapter 1
- Chapter 2
- Chapter 3
- Chapter 4

Eventually I plan to have the entirety of the damned thing up. Once it's finished I'll see about adding it to the sidebar, assuming it is a good fit. I am also doing the TRP sidebar, but it's not as relevant as this, feel free to browse around Enjoy.

Forward: Lately I've noticed an increase in noobish posts and comments that seem to be seeking the konami code for MRP. I was going to post links, but I've decided that calling out new members publicly is counter productive. Much of this is revolving around when/how to say please, what to say/do when she asks you to do something, what to do if she makes a mistake, how to divide chores "fairly" (i.e. keeping score), etc, etc. This post is not for experienced MRP, but those new to this need some direction in this way IMO. Remember, MRP is a lot of things, but in no way an "easy" button. Beware the "zero to hero" field report posts.

The Mirror Image of an Alpha/Beta

To beat a dead horse, epic quote from The Matrix:

| Neo: What are you trying to tell me? That I can dodge bullets? |
| Morpheus: No, Neo. I'm trying to tell you that when you're ready, you won't have to. |

This can be applied to many MRP principles. In this case, I'd like to point out that in many ways the moment-to-moment interactions between an alpha man and his wife can look similar to the actions of a beta man. Of course in the big picture alpha and beta are drastically different, but much of the difference depends on your state of mind, not on whether MRP rules allow you to say please or if you need to punish her for making mistakes.

Not universally, but many times alpha and beta can look nearly identical if you don't know the underlying nature of the relationship between a man and his wife. Here are some examples:

--You ask your wife to do something, let's say empty the dishwasher. Beta Bob might say "Honey, can you please empty the dishwasher." In this case, Beta Bob is waiting for his wife's response, hoping she doesn't say no, hoping she doesn't give him attitude and tell him to do it himself. He is living in her world. When I want my wife to empty the dishwasher, I say the same fucking thing. No cheat code, just normal decent conversation. The difference is that she is happy to please me and inherently trusts me as a leader. I don't wait on baited breath to hear her response. I'm not asking, I'm telling, she knows it, I know it, we're all happy. I'm not a dick barking orders, I'm her calm and collected husband who needs something done and she is just the girl to do it. "You won't have to dodge bullets" i.e. you won't have to change your behavior to be "alpha", her behavior will change to suit your frame.

--The other day I had a busy day, got up early, handled tons of shit around the house, kicked ass as usual. In the early evening we had more stuff to get done around the house to prepare for an event the next day. We had a nice to-do list going, most of it was crossed off. Around 7pm I felt like taking a short nap. She stayed at it, took care of the kids and crossed more stuff off the list. A bit later I was up and she was telling me all the stuff she did (looking for praise). I gave her praise, told her how sexy she is when she's cleaning, and some nice kino. Later we fucked like rabbits. In a parallel universe, Beta Bob did choreplay on her to-do list all day, and when he tried to take a nap his wife got pissed off and started texting her girlfriends about how she is busy cleaning while her loser husband is napping. "I've been cleaning all day and of course, Bob is taking a nap while there is still work to be done...sad emoji". She is tired of having to be the backstop for getting important things done. Beta Bob is drunk at the wheel, so she needs to make sure things get done or they won't get done. My wife knows that the list will get done, I'll make sure of it, she is just happy she can be productive and help make it happen. Keeping score is prime Beta territory. Beta Bob gets inherently stressed and nervous when his wife starts doing a chore around the house, he jumps up and helps to show her that he is useful. He is worried that she will call him out on some shit that he didn't own. I know I've owned my shit. If my wife comes up with a task and starts working on it I'm not stressed, I'm proud that I have a great first mate who I can trust to own her shit.

--Beta Bob is "so needy" when he is constantly trying to talk about sex and doing repulsive things like grabbing her butt. Chad "has a lot of positive energy" when he is around the house. That's what she'll tell her friends. The same actions are perceived differently depending on her attraction to you and your frame. "Oh no, he keeps touching me again, he's probably going to mope around sighing all day tomorrow if I don't let him have sex with me tonight. sad emoji"

--You're wife scratches the car. Beta Bob is really mad, but he's been trained not to challenge her mistakes. He says "It's ok honey." She is pissed that her car is damaged. Of course it couldn't be her fault, the boxes in the garage shouldn't have been there. Beta Bob was supposed to move them weeks ago. She resents that he has forgiven her, "of course it's ok, I didn't do anything wrong, your fucking boxes shouldn't have been there." Two weeks later she is still pissed that he hasn't gotten it repaired yet and Sally from accounting noticed the scratches. If my wife scratched the car she will be very upset, she will be disappointed in herself, she will apologize to me, and I will forgive her immediately. She will be grateful that she has an understanding and loving husband who doesn't try to make her feel worse for her mistakes when she already feels really bad. I'm her rock, I'll make her feel better. Beta Bob is not her rock, he is a source of stress. Conversely, I actually scratched the car once, and she didn't say shit, just "bummer...". i.e. she knows I'm not happy about it, and she also knows that I'm generally very reliable and rarely make mistakes like that. Beta Bob would get reamed out because he "always does shit like this". She doesn't trust or respect Bob, so assumes that he was being his loser self when he scratched the car.

The point of all this is that if you are looking for small changes to make in what you say or do you are missing the big picture. Think less about what an Alpha would say/do and think more about making yourself the prize. When you are the prize a lot of what you naturally want to do is the correct answer, it is all about frame.
How to Handle Apologies From Your Wife
by man_in_the_world | December 1, 2016 | Link

Like the proverbial "Does this dress make me look fat?" question, there is no good straight answer to a wife's apology for bad behavior toward you.

Our BP culture holds one responsible for others' feelingz, fears overt conflict or disagreement, and insists that everyone pretend to be friendz, so we have been conditioned to unconditionally accept any apology, however insincere, and to validate feelz around it as well. Weak, passive-aggressive, or manipulative people often use apologies as a get-out-of-jail-free strategy to avoid consequences for bad behavior. Thus, an "It's OK" or "No worries" or even "Apology accepted" may suggest that an apology afterward is a free pass to avoid consequences for bad behavior, or that you are too beta to enforce consequences. But replies like “You SHOULD be ashamed,” “Don’t let it happen again,” or “I expect more respect from you in future” just display butthurt and that you're trapped in your wife's frame, which is even more beta.

Your two good choices: Oak, or Rock

You should choose either an Oak (to give comfort without supplication or compromising your standards) or a Rock (to emphasize boundaries or expectations) response, as appropriate.

Oak responses. Oak responses providing mild comfort could be "Glad you're feeling better now," a smile and a kiss on the forehead, or "Hang in there, babe;" these give comfort for her bad feelz about her mistake ... but still reaffirm that she made a mistake and that it is hers to own. In addition, such responses show that you are (or at least are now) emotionally unaffected by her bad behavior; you're the Oak that wasn't hurt by the storm. This is perhaps a kind of fogging with which you can adjust the amount of comfort to the level you think appropriate.

If it was an out-of-character lapse on her part from typically good behavior, you’ll likely want to accept the apology and downplay the event; in this case, A&A or a funny change of subject work well. Using a recent text message example from this post, a decent reply to

I apologize for being bitchy. The kids are really bugging me. Kid 2's inability to do anything and Kid 3's attitude might be

What's for dinner? Kid stew?

or the ever-favorite turn to sexual innuendo

"You HAVE been a bad girl, haven’t you? Remind me to spank you in bed tonight!

These are higher-comfort Oak responses.
Apology after hard no. Men here have reported apologies after hard rejections for sex. And /r/DeadBedrooms is rife with get-out-of-jail-free apologies and partners stuck forever playing the direct comfort game. To an apology after an occasional hard no from a generally responsive wife, a kiss on the forehead and “Hope you’re feeling better soon. Goodnight” is an OI Oak response that provides some comfort without absolving her of responsibility for the rejection. This can be adapted in various ways as you see fit for your current situation; for example “Hope you’re feeling better soon. Hey, I’m too wired to sleep right now; I’m going to the gym to lift. Sleep well, babe.”

Or (only if you can pull off funny with a big smile, total OI and complete lack of sarcasm or butthurt)

“Hope you’re feeling better soon. Hey, I’m too wired to sleep right now; I’m going to the gym to lift. If you hear a loud boom echoing across town, that’s just my balls exploding.”

Of course after a year-long dead bedroom, comfort is no longer appropriate, and a Rock response such as /u/Scubastyles reports in this post is called for.

Rock responses. The best Rock reply is usually simply no reply (STFU). "OK" or "Acknowledged" or "Thanks" are weaker; STFU is best unless you deliberately choose to soften the stone a bit.

For major transgressions with necessary consequences, this is the time to enforce them, without anger or overt emotion (be an immovable Rock). For example, “I’m glad you recognize that withdrawing all of our retirement savings to buy shoes was a bad idea. Because we need to manage our money better, I am taking over the family finances.” For extreme violations such as physical attack or illegal drug use, “I will immediately divorce you if this ever happens again” must be overtly stated in response to the apology. (But never state consequences unless you are 100% committed to following through.)

Rock, or Oak?

Whether a Rock or Oak response is called for depends on your good judgement of the specific situation. If she means the apology as an affirmation and acceptance of your boundaries and leadership, an Oak response is in order (unless the infraction is too severe or repeated too frequently to comfort any more). But when it is merely a too-often-repeated get-out-of-jail-free-for-bad-behavior request, or a "shitty apology" to test how much you're willing to let slide, a hard Rock response is required. No reply to a text. In person, a silent stare for several seconds (well into uncomfortable silence, duration calibrated to the level of the infraction or test), followed by a change of subject. If she presses for a verbal response to break your frame, "Thank you for your apology," "I acknowledge your apology" (not "accept" unless get-out-of-jail-free is your deliberately chosen intent), “I’ll take that into account,” “I heard you,” or “This subject is closed” as fits your intent and WISNIFG Broken Record or leave from there. Always, always remember that “verbal intercourse is optional”. You decide your response only as you see right and appropriate; you have absolutely no obligation to accept an apology or to validate feelz when someone has wronged you, nor even to respond at all, but you may deliberately choose to do so, in whatever manner, in congruence with your values, vision, and leadership goals.

Many apologies will be a mixture of sincere and shitty (or at least some hope for a get-out-of-jail-free card), so you'll have to evaluate both the original infraction, the larger context (first time or repeated), and the sincerity in determining your Oak or Rock response.

Own your own shit

And if you are a weak beta using apologies as a get-out-of-jail-free strategy for avoiding the consequences of your own poor behavior, FFS stop it, become a man and OYS.

Edit: This outstanding post on Why you shouldn't care if you wife doesn't apologize by /user/strategos_autokrator is a must-read addressing some different aspects.
Guy who rescued a deadbedroom after stumbling onto RP tactics is now angry and getting propositioned by hot young women by trp_dude | October 16, 2015 | Link

This guy originally posted several months ago the following. They're painful to read but ends with an awesome ending.

On this post he says about his wife:

You don't respect me, even a little bit. In public, you are demeaning, degrading, insulting and you hit me sometimes IN FUCKING PUBLIC. If I try to put my arm around you, or kiss you, or do anything affectionate you push me away, or passively resist and other people laugh at me. You know why they laugh? BECAUSE THAT BEHAVIOR IS NOT FUCKING NORMAL.

We haven't had sex in 8-9 months. Before we got married, you were like a private pornstar. Sex happened all the time. Now, you tell me you aren't attracted to me anymore, but you won't hesitate to mention when some other man is "cute" or "fit" or "attractive". You aren't even affectionate. You keep weird hours, just so you can sleep at times when I won't be in bed.

He even TRIES TO KILL HIMSELF:

Last night, I tried to initiate. Got met with a very loud, clear, active almost yelled "NO!" and pushed away. Then she went to bed without saying a word. I stayed up 4 more hours, drank a bottle of Sake and tried to work up the courage to shoot myself, but I'm too worthless to even be able to do that.

Then, enlightenment. This post was previously discussed on this MRP thread

At this point, I was completely out of fucks to give about anything. I quit caring at all about my wife's needs. I basically just pretended like she didn't exist. No dating. No little gifts when I went on trips. No celebration on her birthday. Nothing. As far as I was concerned, she was invisible. I had spent YEARS caring about her needs while she didn't give a shit about mine. It was time to rectify that balance.

Instead of focusing on her, I focused my energy into myself. I got back into old hobbies I had been neglecting during my depression, started spending 3 or 4 hours a day at the gym doing heavy compound lifts fueled by repressed anger, and running until I made myself puke. At home, I'd channel my attention in to maintaining a clean bodybuilder's diet. I completely eschewed alcohol.

About three months in to my new lifestyle. My wife stopped me at the door while I was leaving and said she wanted to talk. I said "I don't want to talk to you. You know what I want." and I left for the gym. The next day as I was leaving, she stopped me and said pretty much nothing before initiating sex. That day I missed the gym because we fucked for four hours.

That was in April.

Now he returns with anger with this post

Now, it's a year after I made those changes. I live in the polar opposite of a dead bedroom. A slow day with my wife is a day where we only have sex once. Normally it's more like 2 or 3 times a day. Every sex act you can think of is on the table. Its all there on demand and she'll be a loud and enthusiastic participant. She even wakes me up in the middle of the night sometimes, because she's horny and can't wait for the morning.

By all accounts I should be happy. I should be on cloud 9. For a while I was, but then I started thinking about how quickly and drastically she's changed. About how the change was about as quick as flipping a light switch. I feel like she could've been behaving like this the whole time. Like the 4 years where we were married and she was terrible and I almost killed myself could've been completely avoided. I had no sex life in my early 20's and that was her doing. I was horribly depressed and I wouldn't have been if she had just been like this back then. I'm never going to be 21 again, and neither is she. I missed 4 years of sex during what should've been some of the best years of life, when I was in great shape, had a high libido and should've had a hot, early 20's lady to play with.

I feel like I got cheated, and I resent her for it.

And other women are hitting on him:

A girl who lives in our apartment complex [19F] started texting me unsolicited nudes with long, extremely vivid descriptions of what she wants me to do to her. Dark, stuff. Stuff that would embarrass a hooker.

I don't know how to get over this, or what I should do.

As you might predict, /r/relationships are completely bewildered and confused. Offering crappy advice.

The title of this post is a quote from the Lion King, where Nala is disappointed in Simba for being a pussy.

For a while I have been thinking of some different topics to post about, as I like to give back to this invaluable resource. It occurred to me I have never really done an update / download, so that’s what I decided to go with. Part FR, part worldly wisdom, hope you learn something....

____

I came here with textbook problems – we had been together forever. I had become physically, emotionally and mentally weak, and defaulted to my wife for everything. My friends joked how she wore the pants. We became distant emotionally although the sex was ok, the rest was falling apart, she was a career obsessed exec. I was the doormat at the end of the flight home. Below is a summary I had written for myself as a start to MRP (August 2017). It shows my weak dependence:

· Most clearly, I need to grow as an independent person. Life as a pair is not over but it is significantly reduced, I need to be doing my own thing.

· Enjoy the boys (my sons), make it a priority

· STFU when an issue comes up. Just DON’T raise it, deal with it in whatever way you have to.

· Move on from my preconceived views about what our life would be like together. Its not like that anymore.

· Give less fucks. It is what it is. She does what she wants and gives no fucks. I need to do it too. If it pisses her off, well that’s what she is doing to me.

· Remember things change over time. Life’s energy flows both ways, ying and yang. Persevere through this difficult time.

· Learn the lessons the universe is providing you. Until they are learnt, the problems continue Although very gently written, these points are about my lack of independence. I had not started lifting. I still believed in Disney.

Enter MRP.

I followed the plan. Got fit, grew frame, put a Dr at the start of my name. It took ages, all of it. But it taking ages is what helped me find my own frame. It also helped me ditch the oneitis. Not because I could necessarily pull better immediately, but it made me realise that was a possibility. The IOI’s started coming. The physique looked the business, I’ve got good arms and the school mums touched and commented. I got back my self-confidence - I relied on my own opinion. I realised dread is great but it is often short term, and usually fleeting, getting me a bit of attention here and there. Don’t get me wrong its important to maintain over the long term, but dread alone is a poor mans tool as it causes a fear based response that will never allow her to enjoy her natural state - it will never induce that real feminine submission.

Frame is the game, for me its mostly leadership mixed with some fearlessness and selflessness, like Mayor game. She loves that, and like you all know it’s the natural dominance dynamic a man should have in a relationship. So we are pretty good now, but nothings permanent. I’m happy, she’s happy. Sex is good + willing and fun but not adventurous like Red-sffplus’ posts. No D/S, not sure if I have the time for that. The importance of sex in my life went down a lot once the balance of the relationship returned, providing beyond doubt, it was neediness and validation based. At some point I gave myself the goal of being how I was when we met. I achieved that and better. Simba was King.

My Understanding of MRP

There is so much to MRP to take in and understand, DEVI, TWOTSM, Practical female psychology, (and the rest) fuck me it all different and it all expands your mind overnight, but that doesn’t mean you understand it. That’s takes time - give it time. Take your newly learned theory to the field before you test it out on your wife. Observe - observe what you learn in your own environment, it’s all different for you than me or in the books, I can assure you of that. Observe at the nightclub, the pub, the workplace, the bedroom (but don’t go too existential). Read up on Horn’s and Blarg’s posts on communication and understand more about how she works. Its different for everyone one and you’re at the eye of the storm trying to work it out for your context. A bag of tools at your disposal you did not have before - the tools I used will be different to yours. Your tools are relevant to your context, and context is everything.

I recently revisited some of Rollo’s work, I was amazed at how well it aligned with things I had been thinking about myself recently - how all of us are running and alternating between two internal behaviour programs. One is your (“alpha”) biological behaviour – natural urges and thoughts; One is from your society (context) – what you have learnt about how to behave. Its important shit, it changes over time. It makes me realise how there is so much going on in the interactions between two people day to day that you will see it is just not possible to ‘solve’ with the relatively blunt MRP tools. You need to sharpen your game and look at the fine detail, and you need to open your eyes to the subtext just like you have been taught to through ‘acta non verba’. I’m far from suggesting you need to do MORE work; Rather that you still can learn to be a better craftsman. A good craftsman makes hard tasks effortless. Work smart as well as hard.

If you have already graduated to “Man” , you will know that it is through Frame and the willingness to do it your own way that sets you apart. It's not MGTOW, it's confidence and leadership. Yes, you still need to look the business, and you should be successful. Your tripod should be strong. You should also be brave - you should be in control of your fears, you won't defeat them. You need to be MORE aware of context, detail and what's going on around you, step up to the plate when the opportunity arises. If you have kids, it's time to realise you are now the head of the family, not just yours, but the extended, the grandparents and anyone else loosely involved. One of my greatest 'growing the fuck up' victories was realising my own decisions meant more than my own fathers. Fuck that Pop, I am in charge now.

And for fucks sake you should be outdoors a lot. I have not been strict on my lockdown lifting, but I am sore every day from digging / building and fixing. Diversify your physical activity. Diversify your learnings, your skills and your strengths. Pecs, shoulders and biceps not a strong brave man make. You conquered your relationship, go next level and conquer the respect of men. Get better again.

Has anyone ever live trapped raccoons?

I grew up on a farm and one of the things I would do was make sure the barn was free from Raccoons. As a kid it was easy to live trap them and then take care of them however needed to be done. One way to do this is to get a jar. About the size of a raccoon’s paw. Place something shiny down inside. Raccoons love shiny stuff.

Then you place some pegs at an angle so when the raccoon reaches in and grabs the shiny they can’t pull it out. Their fist is now too big for the opening. They won’t let go either, sometimes one did, but for the most part it wouldn’t cross their mind. It was against their nature to do so. This is also called the monkey trap.

This is the same with human behavior. Few can break out of it. Some can’t. This is why men have to wrestle with their ego. Breaking free of that ego will allow you to let go of the shiny and not get caught in the trap. Even if you are right let it go. If you keep speaking you will lose your authority and fail to miss something in the conversation. There is always something to learn even when you know everything.

Women tend to have a harder time with this. Letting go. Even the best of them can follow rabbit holes that go nowhere. Their emotions can overwhelm them which is why they seek the calm and security of an Alpha, only they don’t really know it these days. I don’t see this as a weakness but as an opportunity for me to show my Alpha virtue. It’s those moments I live for. Believe me no matter how independent she may say she is, she will come around and realize that it was all full of shit. Those walls she built up were weak and meaningless. Women seek things and events to give them that calm they seek. It’s the valleys between the emotional highs and lows that give them that calm. That feeling of completeness. They can’t let go. Men? We are that calm. It’s who we are once cultivated correctly. A SIW in the presence of such a beast will realize exactly what it means to have this in her life and she won’t want it to go. As I said she will see everything was bullshit. Something doesn’t always have to be said. You don’t always have to have a fantastic amazing time. Things can just be ok and that’s just fine.

Before you can do that you yourself have to let shit go.

| Women do not always go looking for a Chad just because you are failing.

/u/boeyd6 brings this up.

This is a key piece that many men don’t get, and well…frankly a lot RP men don’t quite understand. It’s what causes the boogey man effect. You can see it on nearly all new guy posts....and frankly until you actualize most men do get freaked out about it. Unless you are in a situation that demands it don’t worry about Chad. Odds are he isn’t really there and you created this monster in your mind. Red flags can appear to be red flags but then again, a cigar is just a cigar but they can’t let it go.

Still men that live in this constant fear of the boogey man have failed to understand feminine psychology and how it relates to everything else they are supposed learn. Yet it’s brought up because there is value in punching men in the gut to get them to wake up and realize that their little girl can and will fk another man. Which is why we say it. Why? This is because men prize sex above all else. Remember women want a relationship. In the simplest terms, it’s AF/BB dynamic BUT it can and often does present as far more complex. There are countless women who won’t cheat. They prize the beta bux. We know the mom jean wearing types. Remember it’s a matter of right time, right place, right set of circumstances, and that’s not all decided by Chad. For every “I fked a married woman” story there are 3 others that didn’t. A good portion of that has to do with you. A woman, who is with “her Alpha” will not just suddenly cheat and sleep with a guy, just because. She will if that “man” has given her reason to. Like I’ve said…for men life is a hero to zero moment every day. Otherwise every relationship is doomed to fail and Red Pill is bullshit. It isn’t and it isn’t.

The Feminist Imperative is lying to women as well. Telling them they can be one thing and they aren’t that. So is the state of things and as RP men we take advantage of that. Yet everything she does is her seeking an Alpha to enter into a relationship with. It’s just that simple but they can’t let shit go so they seek other things early in life only to realize that….it was all wrong and by then it’s too late.

First and foremost AWALT is a range. RP is a study in this range of behavior. So when I read men that puke back RP tenants without insight, growth, nor introspection I immediately know they haven’t quite grasped what is going on. They haven’t let go of the shit that brought them here. They can’t read the situation without ego or moralistic intention.

All women exist on the AWALT spectrum and will move along it at various times. Others are firmly entrenched where they are. As Bogey points out women don’t seek Chad all the time, oh sure they will admire the local Chad (who may or may not be RP minded but represents an ideal), yet for the most part women will settle because they want a relationship. I have seen relationships that seem to defy Red Pill convention until you accept that even betas can have long term and lasting relationships. Yet it’s despite of what they do. Anyone could fill their position. It isn't because of who they are. But I can also tell you those men are in a constant state of seeking joy and relaxation. They can’t let go. They can’t just be. They are no better then the basic drug seeker on the street.

Let go of that shit.

Where all this is going?

Gentlemen, you cannot hope to begin to dissect your situation without study and letting go of the shit you brought with you. I mean far deeper than just reading the latest and greatest reddit post scanning for your favored flared man’s comments. You need to deep dive. Get into the manosphere. Rollo, Illimitable Men, Chateau Heartiste…. just to name a few. Remember all behavior is the same, the circumstances are different. You need to pursue this like life and get out there rack up success and failure. Then when you speak you will do so with authority. That Authentic label that’s been thrown around lately. You can’t even begin to be authentic if you are not speaking with authority from experience.

Red Pill forces you to look at your behavior. To step outside yourself and see things as they are really happening. No judgement. No moral code. You get into that trap where you are watching football 3 days a week for hours, and drinking beer and every time you are rationalizing why you deserve to. That you are the man of the house and god damn it you deserve some time off. Yet you make $10 an hour. The lawn hasn’t been cut, cars need some attention, your wife is busting her ass to keep the house in order while you are sitting there thinking how great it is to be a man and can’t figure out why she won’t fuck you.

The life time beta can’t break out of his behavior. He can’t let go of the shiny and can’t figure out why he is trapped. He doesn’t understand and doesn’t want to. Yet the same can be said of an Alpha. He can get caught in the trap. We can become one trick ponies. Whether your focus is lifting, banging women...all the Red Pill things, you have to continue to develop all the aspects of manhood. Not just because some dude on the Internet says it’s the best way to get women, have a slut, or getting ripped, but because it’s what being a man is all about.

The PUAs of old had this issue. While they were on top of the sexual game (the core of Rule Zero right?) they lost sight of the fact that they were, in the end, seeking validation. They had nothing else left, a few figured out that all this stuff they were learning and doing to get girls was in fact making them interesting people, but that was few and far between. You have to let that shit go. Go full circle to come back again.

I had a roommate in college. He was a PUA before PUA became codified. It’s why I know this shit works and is truth. He wasn’t much to look at but he dressed well and was in unbelievable shape. He was short, but had a very loud personality. Yet like all PUAs and one trick ponies, he was given to being melancholy. If he got a zit. Just one. The bathrobe went on, and he stayed in the apartment for days until it cleared. And quite literally begged us to stay in at night playing board games.

He had failed to do the one thing that we know. He failed to be interesting, to develop a rich life. To speak with and be an authority on the things that make a man interesting. You may have a cut body today, but one slip, one medical issue can cause it to go away. You need more than that one thing to pull you through. You need to cling to more than one trick to be Alpha.

I’ve developed a long list of experiences. I’ve saved lives and taken lives. I have recently achieved master level in the martial art of my choice. I have students, and I am a student. My career is going places I never thought, and I am developing two other ones. I have taken up new hobbies and ditched childish ones. My life is a constant flow. I will never settle and never be in the same place I was last year. Among it all I lift and I have setbacks. They don’t stop me.

Pursue life don’t end up in it.

Let that shit go.
Recently /u/SorcererKing made a timely post about "Taking out the trash" and it got me thinking. I deal with contracts as part of my job. I sit down and hammer out a sales contract, when it's all agreed too, money changes hands, and deliverable's are met. If I do my job right, they get a product that helps them in their business and if they do their job right they give me money. I'm also in business to keep doing business with said customers. Life is easier and better all around when we are all mutually benefiting from the relationship.

Now there's deals where you don't ever care about the future relationship, buying a car, or something off craigslist, so in those cases you are only aiming to get the best value right there and then. Today, I'm talking about continuing value, farming a relationship in business and harvesting the results.

I once had a customer spend six figures with me to buy two very technical, very industry specific machines. They were customized to meet a specific market niche; this would make them very hard to sell outside of this industry. My industry delivers on terms, and in order to start a project we take 40% down. For the next step, just prior to delivery we take 50%. I call the contact I had, and no answer. I call the front desk, and they just patch me into his voicemail. After 2 weeks of run around, I call a very old contact hoping he'd pick up. He informs me that there were 'problems' and quite a few people were let go. My guy was one of them. He made some calls on my behalf and got me in contact with the person who would handle it from there.

Soon, a woman calls and informs me that they no longer needed 2 machines, and would in fact only consider 1 machine. Long story short, through a series of emails I explained, they already committed to 2 machines, already put money down for 2 machines and we expected payment in full. She was out of her league. No one realized they had actually bought the machines. finally the head engineer calls. He explains what happened, and begs me for some help.

Now I've had a good working relationship with the company for awhile. We've done a lot of repeated business, and have never had any problems. Turns out they had some legal and regulatory problems, and I got caught in the hub bub. In an effort to keep that relationship alive I worked out a good option for him. I would deliver the first machine, hold the second one, and charge him a moderate holding fee (so I could move the machine off my books). In a year they would take delivery of the second one, and improve their cash flow. Everyone was happy.

A year goes by and the machine is collecting dust, so I call up and say in polite terms "Pay me". I get a phone call and this head engineer guy starts yammering on about "oh we think we want to wait another year" and "We're trying to go public" and now all I can think is "not my problem."

He continues to impress on me that we've had a long relationship, they're gonna be a billion dollar company and the future is bright for me. I asked the guy, "If you went and had a builder build you a huge custom house, and then right before closing told him, 'hey were going to wait a year' do you think he'd wait?"

"Well no, but this is different."

"How so?"

"We need our vendors to help us in our flexibility. We need to maintain a certain cash flow, but be able to respond at a moments notice to market demand."

"Well I think that's great, but you can't tell me after the fact." I said, "I need to know so I can structure the deal that's mutually beneficial to both of us."

"Yeah well that's the deal that works for us."

And that was the point I realized he was no longer in it for mutual benefit. I stood up and fired him as a customer. "Thank you, but no thanks. I expect payment in full by weeks end."

I walked out to the front desk and asked for the CFO by name. I wasn't able to see him of course, but I left a typed letter, explaining to him that his company was reneging on a financial business deal, that I would publish this letter to the credit rating agencies and that he had over a half million dollars invested in two machines and I would sell them at auction to get my money back. Unfortunately I knew it may come to this, and had prepared ahead of time. I also sent the letter to him and their corporate council. I knew they were trying to go public, and this kind of information could severely hamper that process. I played hardball.

This customer is still not a billion dollar company, they still haven't gone public, and in fact they are a money pit. As a customer they have been put on the "Cash up front" for spare parts, and any quote for new equipment goes out to them as "Down payment and a letter of credit." In the end all they did was fuck themselves, because they have a huge investment with us, and now we wont even talk to them unless they show cash money. Machine goes down, fuck you pay me. Don't know how to fix something, fuck you pay me. They threaten me with 'We're gonna switch to [a competitor]!', so I told them 'Cool, here's their number. Good luck!'

The moral of the story is this company tried to abuse the relationship based on the past. Unfortunately it became apparent they treated me like I was Home Depot and could walk down the street to Lowes; they forgot how much they had at stake. They thought I had way more at stake then they did and tried to hold me over the coals for it. In fact all they did was emphasize they were costing me more than they were providing me in value.

Time and time again I hear the same story in marriages. People forget that it's a mutually beneficial contract, that is and should be based on right now. Just because a woman pops out a couple of fuck trophies doesn't mean she gets to take the rest of her life off. Or if she gets fat and decides you should "love her for all her faults." In fact this is the biggest fault of the blue pill I see. Time and time again, we get a fat lazy fuck with the emotional maturity of a 5 year old boy who comes here and lays it all out. "Why won't she just shut up and fuck me? Why doesn't she respect me?" Frankly he's lucky it's so hard to get out of marriage in this regard. Because if it was a business contract, he surely would have been terminated for not meeting his terms. Marriage is still, and always be a business relationship. You supply the awesome, she supplies the intimacy. Your the vendor, she's the customer. Your product is being a high-value male, she in turn pays you in the currency she has, emotional and physical commitment. Once either of those are not being met, the relationship has to be reevaluated.

I have a friend who spews out shit like, "She deserves it." and "She won't let me" and "the customer is always right". He's beta bluepill through and through and just doesn't realize, it's time to fire the customer. His wife is low quality, and treats him like another pet in the house. Just something to be fed and cleaned up after. As a vendor, he's failed and turned into a fat fuck who wallows around the house looking for mommies validation. It kills me, but here they are just going through the motions because "Well that's the deal. The customer is always right!"

Now not every relationship you're in needs to be mutually beneficial. You don't have to send Christmas cards to the guy you bought a car from. Black nights choose to only have self beneficial relationships, but in terms of an LTR that's either unsustainable or inviting crazy; not really for MRP. In terms of redpill you need to ask yourself, what am I selling and what are they buying? Is this good for both of us? Every relationship from friends, mom and dad to your wife you need to evaluate for value. If you're not better off, it's time to renegotiate, or fire the customer.

Confronting the Need For Validation
by resolutions316 | April 25, 2019 | Link

I think a lot about the need for validation, mostly because it gets brought up in response to nearly everything I post here.

There have been some excellent posts in MRP recently on validation-seeking behaviors and an increased understanding of where this fits into many people's marital problems.

Even posting on MRP is great for detecting validation seeking in yourself (Do I need everyone to agree with me? Do I feel the need to jump in and "defend myself" when someone calls me out?) /u/RStonePT called me out on my most recent OYS for putting something into my post specifically designed to elicit approval; I felt the immediate need to disagree, but upon reflection, he was right. The need for validation can be hard to spot within yourself.

Knowing this is an issue, I've been seeking out different approaches to removing the need for validation that I can bring into my own life. That's included listing out personal fears and then deliberately exposing myself to them each week; training myself to be mentally aware of validation seeking in my own behavior and then purposefully resisting it; and working to focus on my own pleasure and sensations during sex, rather than focusing on whether my wife is "into it" or reacting a certain way.

Though not RP, the book Passionate Marriage by David Schnarch also addresses the need for validation in depth, so I've been re-reading it on my current business trip.

Below I've collected Schnarch's suggestions for "Constructing Your Own Crucible;" i.e., learning to address your own need for validation and using that personal development to challenge the status quo of your marriage. I've found it useful in terms of understanding how I can directly address my own need for validation, and conceptualize what a relationship would look like without it.

I'm hopeful other people get some value out of it.
How can you confront your own need for validation, and grow beyond it? How can you stop "selling yourself out" within the context of your marriage?

Confront yourself for the sake of your own integrity and personal development. It’s good for you, but it isn’t easy and won’t feel good. Stop trying to prove there’s “nothing wrong with you;” it’s not a question of whether you’re “good enough the way you are,” but a question of who you want to be.

If you’re having difficulty identifying your own issues, look at both sides of your “two choice dilemma.” How is the style or content of the dilemma personally relevant or familiar to you? Have you been through something similar before and dodged it? Think about what your partner frequently says about you, which you dispute. In what ways is it true?

Stop taking your partner’s reaction personally. Ask, why am I taking my partner’s reaction personally and getting defensive? If you think you should, what have you been doing that leads you to believe it’s all about you? If you’re not culpable, why take it personally?

Don’t count on your partner to confront herself in return. You don’t untie the Gordian knot, you cut through it. If you demand reciprocity, your partner controls you.

Forget about “working on your relationship” or the idea that “the relationship is the problem.” It doesn’t work. When you change, the relationship changes. Get what you want out of yourself, and you will either like your relationship more...or be able to do something constructive about it.

Stop focusing on what your partner is (or isn’t) doing. Focus on yourself. Focusing on yourself increases pressure on your partner to change. People who like themselves are discerning about who they spend their time with.
Stop trying to change your partner. Pressuring your partner actually reduces the pressure on both of you for change. Stop disputing their position and actually pay attention to it. Pressuring causes the partner to “dig in her heels.” Instead, clarify what you want and what you are willing to do to get it.

For solutions, look in different directions than you’ve looked in the past. Reconsider options you’ve previously rejected. Ask, “What about me would have to change - or what would I be willing to give up - in order for this to be a real option? Would I like myself if I could do this?” You will either find new options or realize what is truly non-negotiable.

Stop trying to make your partner listen, accept, or validate you. Listen to yourself. You can’t see the situation clearly without seeing yourself clearly. Ask yourself, “What is it in me that predisposes me to see my partner in this way?”

Keep your mouth shut about your partner’s issues - particularly concerning those you’re certain are true. “Sharing” your insights about your partner’s behavior is often an expression of a need for validation. Let your partner fight with themselves, not you. Remain quiet about their issues.

Don’t identify with your feelings. The feelings we defend are often not the ones we want to keep. Stop making your feelings a core part of your identity.

Pay attention to your tone. Tone colors what you say. Not being able to modulate your tone tells you a lot about yourself and your issues. “Quietly determined” is the tone of people who have truly hit critical mass.

Own your projections as a matter of integrity. We have distorted our perceptions of reality based on our own anxieties and weaknesses. Own this reality and be able to confront it without needing your partner to “forgive” you or letting them use it to trigger you.

Acting differentiated interferes with being differentiated. Don’t try to “act” the way you think a “truly differentiated” person would act. This prevents you from actually going through the work to achieve differentiation. Stop worrying about how your partner perceives you.

Let the best in you do the thinking and talking. Difficult situations are an integral part of life. Confront the reality of your own life. Accept it as an opportunity for growth. It’s hard to admit our lives are filled with error and deception. Only accepting this, and facing the truth, gives you the opportunity to grow.
[FR] "You have 10 minutes to get ready, wear something fun."

TL; DR: AFC finds MRP, starts reading like crazy, sees early signs of progress. Gentleman, this is the puzzle piece I've been missing for years.

Background: M46, F45, together 17 years, married 10, 2 kids. Relatively successful, deadbedroom for 7-10 years with me being textbook beta. Found MRP several months ago, and have been STFUing, owning my shit, and reading like my life depends on it.

Sometime many months ago I stumbled across MRP, not exactly sure how. Started reading, and things started coming together. After reading mountains of advice that was useless, MRP finally started providing foundations that seemed to produce results. Taking the advice of the community, I've been moving slow, shutting the fuck up, and reading like crazy. My weight has cycled for many years, I took control of that and am down 25 lbs (200 to 175 on 5-9), and will start lifting again when biking season ends.

Yesterday was just like every other day, with me showing the tiniest bits of self-gain every week over the last many months. It's a wonderful snowball effect. In the morning, I get a call from the wife asking, "Would you bring the backpacks to the kid's school? I forgot them." Without even thinking about it I responded simply, "No". She mumbled something about her having to drive back and get them and slowing down her morning. There was no family logistical optimization here, she was headed to her Moms to chat for a bit, then off to the gym and groceries before coming home. AFC would have been out the door in a second to please her.

I got my ass on my bike and went for a long ride, absolutely loving every moment of it, basking in the goodness of health, fitness, and good weather. Came home, cleaned up, got busy with some work, and went on about my day. Life was good.

In the evening, we discussed dinner, eventually settling on making something at home for health and financial reasons. We were sitting around after dinner being boring (which isn't always a bad thing)--but I wasn't in the mood for that tonight. A quick flash of "what would an MRP man do right now?" flashed in my mind. (kids were gone tonight). I went upstairs (without telling her), changed into some nicer clothing with some confident accessories, and walked downstairs and said, "we're leaving in 10 minutes, wear something fun." Without hesitation she pranced upstairs to change.

Exactly 9.99 minutes later she comes downstairs looking VERY cute, her outfit mirrored my own sense of adventure and fun. We head off and she asks me in the car "where are we going?", I simply respond, "out to have fun." And we DID have fun. Simple laughing, playing, people watching, being seen, etc. She was enjoying herself and enjoy having fun with me. She made a few comments about "I'm getting checked out", but I was aware enough of the environment to know that she saw me getting checked out, too. (which was really what she was commenting on...)

We get home late, unwind, and pass out. This morning I get up first and take the dog out on her long morning walk, and when I get back breakfast is being made for me and she's flittering around the room like it's her birthday or something. After breakfast I'm sitting on the sofa reading; and she comes over, pulls down my pants, gets me hard with a nice blowjob, and proceeds to take her clothes off and straddle me. GENTLEMAN, I have a had a deadbedroom for NINE(ish) YEARS. STARFISH SEX A FEW TIMES A YEAR IF I'M LUCKY. I bask in my manhood as my woman pleasures me, and enjoy every moment of it.

Lessons:

- Be attractive, don't be unattractive.
- Be fun.
- You come to fix your sex life, you end up fixing your masculinity.
- Women fill the container they're given.
- Marriage is a thousand times harder than you imagine, but only now am I understanding why.
6 Months of Owning My Shit: A Retrospective

by BirdManBrrrr | December 12, 2017 | Link

One can have all the knowledge but its useless unless one puts the knowledge into action in some form. OYS did that for me, and here is a review after 6 months of holding myself accountable to strangers on the internet and myself:

The Background

34, 6’2, 190. Somewhere in the 13% bf range. Married a year and a half and no children. Reasonably attractive, reasonably athletic, and with a comfortable 6 figure income.

Career Nice Guy, son of a decade deceased strong woman mother and a passive, weak, martyrdom complex, yet honorable father. Depressed for the decade after mommy died; career went well but personal life was sitting at home jerking off and watching TV while dating intermittently. 2 year LTR prior to wife failed due to the same issues that would tank my marriage. Met the wife immediately after the LTR: an ambitious, extremely intelligent, beautiful girl from a broken home and fucked up childhood. The predictable self-esteem and emotional issues are present, and beneath the hard charging façade is a scared little girl.

Things were great the first two years then the bedroom starts dying prior to the wedding for reasons I couldn’t figure out at the time. Things continued to decline after the wedding—which went on due to momentum—and both of us settling for a cordial but not flourishing relationship. It was just good enough to not end it. The DB was a symptom. Like most of us, I found MRP via DB and don’t actually start doing the work via OYS after hitting rock bottom after this post. The replies were a swift kick to the nuts; I realized I needed to put in the work and quit lurking or else things wouldn’t improve.

The Assessment

The Reading

NMMNG x3, WISNIFG x2(text & audio), SLSM x2(made everything click), WSM, MAP x2, MMSLP x2, Pook, Rational Male, Models, Ironwood Alpha, Extreme Ownership, Gorilla Mindset, every week’s OYS, MRP & AMRP top posts and ongoing submissions.

The Priorities Starting May 2017 (In order of importance)

- Mental health & reversing the depression
- Physical health, inclusive of lifting, diet, and sleep
- STFU
- Building a life outside of home: hobbies, doing things I like, etc, inclusive of social life.
- Building a sense of self (Frame, mission, OI, DGAF, etc)
- Gaming the wife/sex/etc
- Gaming women in general

I came to the conclusion that I was not attractive enough to be a better option for my wife’s time compared to her job and her work social life so I decided to become mostly internally focused and deemphasized the marriage. I embraced live like you’re single and dropped the thought of trying to compete for my wife’s attention, which at that point would just come across at neediness. Sex was not a priority, and given my lack of libido this was not difficult. This is counter to what a lot of folks here do and perhaps led to some other issues with the wife but I’m OK with how I approached things. Wouldn’t recommend it, necessarily.

The Work

- Stopped complaining about my problems to my wife No more victim pukes about my health, interpersonal or work problems, feelings, any of it. STFU
- Started posting to OYS and started logging RP truisms and notable posts in a series of google docs.
- Sidebar. Plenty of business travel meant isolated, alone time on planes and hotel rooms with no excuse to not read.
- Got a physical for the first time in 7 years. Testosterone was in the 630s therefore all of my problems were in my own head. Made a dermatology appointment for some skin issues. Got a trazadone rx for sleep, although improved this by other means.
- Made an appointment with a therapist immediately, although therapy turned out to be useless after a handful of sessions and I got better perspective on fixing my problems from MRP/OYS than I did from sitting in a room talking. Introduced to DBT by a friend and found a bunch of free online resources to use as mental health support in lieu of shitty therapy.
- Restarted some mix of 5x5/Starting Strength and additional upper body accessory work.
- Continued training and became more engaged with my Masters swim team. This doubled as a fun social group of weirdos and nerds I fit into well. Quickly became “the hot guy” somehow.
- Planned some solo trips hiking and doing outdoor shit. Became comfortable being alone and doing things alone.
- OYS at home: started keeping the place clean regularly, organizing, throwing away useless shit, doing long awaited projects...all of it.
- Started to be mindful and hyper aware of my behavior towards my wife, and my wife’s behavior towards me with regards to DEERing, shit & comfort tests, my emotional state, etc.
- Tried to be busy in general and cut back dramatically on wasted time. Terminated Facebook usage altogether and the only indulgent social media I have is Instagram for memes and fitness chicks.
- Actively worked on becoming more engaging with others in the office and embracing social situations as opposed to avoiding them.
- Actively worked on making better eye contact and being quicker to smile and engage with strangers, especially pretty girls.

- Came to realize I had an authentic personality—goofy, smartass, and a little cocky, but genuine and caring—and came to view it as an asset. Actively worked on removing mental blocks that held this back in most situations...especially with the wife.
- Simplified my wardrobe: Slim fit everything complimenting my body type (swimmers build). A clean business casual of the same style dress shirt and pants in assorted colors with slim fit pants; a casual look of jeans that fit well and black t shirts. A simple continuum up and down the formality scale and largely interchangeable. Clean, simple, and well fitting.

The Result

- I’m a hell of a lot happier. Not saying my depression is resolved but I have received comments from people who I’ve met in the past year who have noticed a visible change in my demeanor from consistently mopey to consistently happy and even I no longer feel the preverbal cloud hanging over my mood.
- My emotional control is also much improved, mostly measured by my impulse to react to things and a secondary metric of me actually having an emotional outburst for any reason. Most of this manifests with my wife for whatever reason and I’m much better at this.
- Related: DGAF is taking hold in a major way, mostly driven by asking myself the question “Does this even matter?” in any particular situation. Well no, most shit doesn’t matter in the grand scheme of things therefore most things aren’t worth getting upset about.
- Despite fits and starts due to travel or some nagging injury, lifting has borne fruit. Recent lifts include DL 375 x1, high bar Squat 225 3x3, Bench 205 x1. Bodyfat has dropped from 15%ish to 13%ish and I am in a position to make gainz the priority for the winter bulking season.
- I have a small yet odd group of friends who like the same shit I do, although expanding my social life is an important goal going forward, as is expanding the stuff I’ve wanted to do but never followed through on.
- Between demeanor, dress, and how I carry myself I’ve started to get IOIs from women, sometimes noticeable by others. Also from dudes, which is awkward but whatever. Not uncommon are the comments of “Dude she just eyefucked you” or “She thinks you’re hot”. For the first time in my life I’m realizing I am attractive and possibly have options (OI) although that hasn’t been fully internalized yet.
- I’m starting to say no to things I don’t want to do, and I’m not feeling as guilty as I previously did at a decreasing rate of guilt over time.
- I’m starting to build Frame, but prior to having frame (IMO) one must have a reasonably developed sense of self, identity, wants, and needs...which I didn’t. I’m slowly starting to define what those are and as they develop my worldview is starting to change, especially with regard to my marriage.

So, what now?

The stay plan is the go plan, or so I’ve read. I have good momentum on such things as mood & mental health, lifting, a small but budding social life, outside interests, and so forth but the next 6 months will be focused building the sense of self, frame, mission, and ultimately figuring out what to do with my marriage. Plenty of work to do and the farther I progress in this process the further I realize I need to go.

Truth is I married a girl who needed an immovable rock to support her particular brand of crazy, and instead I 1. Made her my rock and 2. Wore her down with my bullshit. Moreover, I look back on all the red flags, all the times I rationalized away something that wasn’t quite right, the nagging sense something was wrong prior to the wedding but didn’t quite know what it was until I found this place...in hindsight my preselection was weak and I wasn’t the prize either. Nor did I have the balls to call it off, obviously. I have some decisions to make and they may not be pleasant.

I’m reversing 34 years of poor emotional control and shitty social conditioning; I know it isn’t going to happen overnight but it is absolutely necessary if I’m going to have a good, fun, and fulfilling life.

My advice to the noobs out there: Kill your ego and accept your failures as a man. Realize only you and you alone can fix your problems; get solid self-awareness, identify your weaknesses, and get to work. Yea, it's hard, but trust me: it's worth it.
The Red Pill to save your Marriage - elevator pitch
by spexer | April 5, 2016 | Link

There are a lot of great guides, in depth posts and instruction on how the Red Pill can save your marriage. Here it is in a nutshell:

- Your wife doesn't want to fuck you because you are not turning her on. Look in the mirror. Look at how you act. This is why.
- Choreplay, being a nice guy, earning money, taking care of the family, being in decent shape and making a good argument on why she should have sex with you... has and will not work. You cannot negotiate desire
- MRP gives you the alpha that she wants, and not so you can use these behaviors to trick her. The goal is to become this alpha man. The oak. The captain.
- This is done by reading the MRP Prerequisites then put together a plan and then make changes through actions - not by talking. Acta Non Verba.
- This will take time, and she will fight it. Your marriage might end- by your choice. Likely outcome is that your marriage will become alive again, and she will eagerly suck you dry. Remember: You are worth this effort.

And that is the heart of it. Here we learn how women operate and then become the man worthy of fucking. Here is a longer friendlier intro.

Don't think this will work? Of course it won't! Just try these 5 little things for 1 week, just to test the waters.

1. stop all apologizing
2. stop asking for sex. (have sex if you want, but do NOT ask for it or what to do once you have it)
3. stop asking for input. Be the leader and make all the decisions, (being open to feedback to consider)
4. spend the majority of your free time away from your wife and busy exploring your interests
5. Lift weights. Get a gym's free 1 week membership if need be, but LIFT.

And that's it. 1 week. Your worth that, right?

Don't worry, of course this won't work! We are all crazy here. At least you could say you tried.....

good luck!
The Realization

I wrote this once through with full back story, since I hadn't shared full details of my story in one narrative yet. It ended up being way to fucking long. So I cut out the "Here's why my story is special" preamble and put it in last week's OYS. I've been around long enough to know that every story is basically the same, and probably doesn't change much with regard to this post. But if you want my 'here's why I'm special', it's posted at the link.

To get to where I am right now took just short of 3 years. Audible says I bought The Rational Male in July 2016, which is what I count as my real starting point. A more aggressive, less introspective person probably could go faster. But it took me this long to get here, and I don't know that I could have gotten to this point any sooner. Over those 3 years, my own life got immeasurably better. My marriage got better, it had its fits and starts, but I found it generally satisfying.

A recent...regression...for lack of a better term, made me realize my level of dissatisfaction. Or maybe it made me realize I have been shooting too low. I assessed myself, and decided it was time to get out there and actually test my options. I had been 100% faithful my wife since 1999. But recently I was out of town a few times, so I started using dating apps on the road. Out of state, Tinder, hotel, Yadda yadda.

After that experience, the thing that I could never quite articulate about my married sex life hit me square in the face. I couldn't ever reconcile why I found sex with my wife dissatisfying, despite the fact that it was as frequent as I could physically handle, and better than it had been in a long time. And the thing with Tinder gal made me realize....My wife is happy to get fucked by me. She's happy to let my dick please her. And make no mistake, I get off on pleasing her. But she gets nothing out of pleasing me. She'll do it - she'll reciprocate, and it's fine. Not starfishy anymore. But there's a stark difference between the ONS chick enthusiastically seeking it out and a wife who is simply "willing" to do it. And once I experienced the difference, this thing that I couldn't quite figure out was clear as day. This is 101 stuff for the RP aware married man, but you just don't know until you actually know. And so now, I actually know.

The Setup

Since having this realization about willing vs. enthusiastic, my desire to fuck my wife cratered. Starting about 2 weeks after I got back from that last trip. We didn't have sex for about 2-3 weeks. It wasn't anger. It wasn't butthurt. It just wasn't there. And I knew that, in order to come to some sort of resolution, I was going to need to have a Main Event. For me to actually get what I want - one way or the other - there was going to have to be a conversation. The time of simple subcommunication and leading was over. So I started sketching out my stance and what I had to say. I'm glad I did this, because I'm terrible off the cuff speaker. Having an indexed list of talking points made this much more coherent for me.
It helps me to not ramble, and to not attack the person I'm talking to with those unproductive "you never X, and you always Y" tit for tats.

I also knew I couldn't be the one to bring up the talk - I had forced 'the sex talk' too many times in my past. And if I had sat her down and talked at her, this would just come across as another ploy to manipulate her. So I continued to decline her initiations, and wait it out. The merp keyboard alpha may disagree with my not initiating the talk, but it was a tactical decision. This wasn't about me spitting out a monologue to jerk myself off. I wanted there to be a conversation, and so there needed to be a real opening. The opening is only there if she wants to have the conversation.

Also, knowing the conversation was inevitable, it took the urgency off the table for me. I had framed this as "by the end of May, I'm going to know if I'm getting divorced". And so, I was cool with letting it happen on its own terms.

The Main Event

We had a nice beginning to Easter weekend. Spent the Saturday out landscaping together, had a cool project turn out pretty well. Had a nice Sunday with our families. After we got home, she initiated sex again. Again, I declined.

Then she said, "Are we ever going to have sex again?"

I give her a look - "I'm not sure this is a conversation I want to have today".

"Tell me....are you divorcing me? Did you find someone else?"

.....OK, timing isn't perfect, but now is the time. I walked her into our bedroom and said my piece.

Essentially this:

- What I want in my life is a woman that gives herself to me sexually. All of her. I don't want obligated compliance with what I want. I want a woman who wants to please me. I don't know if it's the baggage of our past, that you don't trust me, that you're too familiar with me, or that you think there's some sort of sexual retirement coming for you post 40. But this isn't something that will get out of my system. It is who I am as a man. For a long time in my life, I didn't understand it - I was never able to articulate it to you. I thought it made me a selfish person for wanting it from you. But I understand it now, and I'm not ashamed of it. I'm telling you that in my life, I am going to pursue this. Our sex life right now can be summed up as this: You allow me to please you. Much of the time, I am fine with that. Pleasing you pleases me. And so as long as I keep my head in the space of getting my pleasure from pleasing you, I enjoy myself. But when I want something other than what pleases you, I am left cold. This isn't about having a list of the places I want to put my dick, and my mouth, and your mouth, and we check the boxes. This is about how I want someone who seeks out what I want and is excited to be the person who gets to do it with me.

- I allowed you to hold the cards all this time, by taking my options off the table. But when it dawned on me that all I will ever get is to be allowed to please you, my willingness to go along with these terms shriveled and died. I'm telling you now that I know what cards I hold. (I took my shirt off) Look at me - this is what your husband looks like. I know what options I have, and if you ever pay attention when we're out in public, I know you know what I could find in an hour if I walked out the front door looking for it.

- I always wanted this with you. I like our life, our kids, our house, and I like you. But my life will not be what I want it to be without this. I want it more than I want it to be with you.

So I spit all that out, mostly coherently. While I talked, she actually agreed with everything I said. She butted in with a few "but I was stressed about...." , "But you just...", I held my ground said - "I'm not arguing about this. Excuses mean this isn't a priority for you. Which is fine - it's fine if this isn't you. I'm telling you what I'm going to have in my life".

We had a mature conversation about how to potentially proceed. I did not expect her to handle this well - she's the type who shuts down at any real criticism. And she made a pretty frank point about how maybe we're just together because we're together (together since we were both in HS). So maybe someone else might be better for me.

I reiterated that she always had first crack at me, and how this is about having the sexual relationship that I want, and that I like our life otherwise. Her next comment was "Well what if I try all this and it's still not enough for you." I held my ground again - "If this is something you have to try, I don't want it. Either you are going to be this person or you aren't."

Then she said "Well I'd like to see if I can", and started undressing. I didn't decline her initiation this time and went with it.

Aftermath and Analysis

So right there, we had sex....during which I blew past some of her prior boundaries and she was hot for it all, not a word or even hesitation. And this continued in the immediate aftermath. I'm under no impression that this is the new normal. Hysterical bonding, for sure. But it was fun to play in this end of the pool with her.

For a bit, anyway. If I were to describe what I want vs what I'm getting, you wouldn't be able to tell the difference. I can't quite put my finger on it. The desire seems genuine, but it still feels forced. Stoney likes that old 'naugahide remorse' post. This feels like a naugahyde imitation of the sex life I want. /u/Persaeus said to me on my background post "Once you've had filet, you won't want to go back to hamburger". And that is true. I know that's a big part of it. My wife's even offering the special reserve hamburger she didn't realize she had. It's still less than satisfying.
In addition to that, I continue to be struck by how she dropped the "maybe we're just together because we're together" thing in the conversation. Seemed to me to be a rehearsed line. Something she'd been thinking, not something she just spit out off the cuff. Either an out-loud rationalization by her to make herself OK with me potentially leaving, or a blatant hint that I should kill the puppy. The mrp commenter in me sees "kill the puppy", but the guy close to the situation doesn't.

So this is where I stand today. I thought the Main Event would be the resolution - either I get what I want, or I move on. And instead, I'm getting exactly what I asked for and it's not turning out to really be what I want.

I intended to end the post here chronologically. But the situation appears to be still developing....So I'll just stop off here. I'm in a new phase here, and so I'm sure I have some massive blind spots. Appreciate the feedback I got on my other post. I'll appreciate whatever comes out of this one.
Getting started? STFU
by spexer | June 22, 2016 | Link

A quick reminder to a lot of the new people starting MRP in their relationships. (1-6 months into your MAP)

Shut the hell up.

There have been plenty of posts lately where people have fucked up their progress by talking. Remember the Maxim for MRP - "Acta Non Verba" this means "Actions not Words."

This is a key concept. You SHOW the new you through ACTIONS. We are men of action, and words are cheap.

Simple rule to help: If you are unsure how best to respond to a shit test, Shut the hell up and use the 3 Gs (Grin, Get up and Get busy).

But don't:

- DEER
- talk about red pill
- talk about the new you, or the new future you will have.
- talk about sex frequency or quality
- use the word "Sorry" (unless you kill the cat)
- ask for permission- for anything
- complain about your life
- blame others - for anything
- share your emotional self doubt and weaknesses
- tell her how she needs to change
- have the fuck me or fuck you talk

NOTE: this does not mean you become a withdrawn butthurt jerk - and some posters have shown how they have gone to this other extreme. We know it hurts, but fake it until you make it and instead use your mouth for the following:

- joking, telling fun stories, celebrating awesome stuff
- fogging, A&A and snickering
- being a smart ass, dripping with sarcasm and wit
- bragging, stroking your ego, complimenting yourself
- FLIRTING, talking dirty
- sharing your interests
- conveying the IDGAF attitude
- logistics
- to tell what You are going to do, as statements.
- to take ownership on solving a problem "I got this"
- to express affection, often for comfort tests
Remember, you are a rock. All the emotional drama, the gossip, the problems that come at you will also stop with you.

oh, and STFU
Happy New Year, Sons-o-Bitches
by johneyapocalypse | December 31, 2019 | Link

I think I can sneak this in 'cuz W&S is off eating chowmein and drinking saki and riding rickshaws and fondling cambodian girly-boys.

... Happy-fucking new year's, douches.

Remember this:

- If you're "planning to do this" or "planning to do that" or "waiting for the new year," then you're already fucked. You don't need a special day. You don't need a special month. You don't need a special year. And you most certainly don't need to "wait until monday."

Just start it up. Make a change. Even a small one.

Those 1% changes add up over time, even if you might struggle to remember that in the "here-and-now."

If, however, it's the end-of-year holidays and you're feeling down, remember this too:

- You can get through it, you can choose to get through it, you can put your mind toward getting through it... whatever it may be... even when all the odds are against you, the world is conspiring to fuck with you, and your own mind is saying you can't make it.

You can, fuckers, whether it's 2019, 2020, or beyond. You have much strength inside. Day-to-day you forget, but I assure you, it's there when you need it.

Hallelujah.

p.s. I failed you rpeed.

p.s.2. "I'm a bad mother-fucker."
It is all your fault - so man up.

by spexer | July 6, 2016 | Link

It is not your wife. It is not that you stuck your dick in crazy. It is YOU. You are the fuck-up, and here is why this is the best news ever:

Because by being 100% responsible, you are no longer the victim - you are a powerful person with control over your destiny. You can make you and your life better.

Ah - but I see the argument coming. I see your wall of text about everything she is doing wrong. For example, here is a quote from a recent thread:

I don't know what is wrong with you, but who the fuck doesn't know that women are selfish bitches that only have their own well being at heart

Ah yes. Either you use AWALT as an derogatory slam against women being "eveel" creatures that are to blame. --OR-- you post something like this gem I grabbed from another thread:

Ummmm.... i know the common theme in RP is AWALT. But your wife seems even a bit on the far side of crazy.

Yes - the special snowflake argument. And it is just as flawed here as it is on TRP when someone says a certain alpha widow CC Rider is worth marrying because she is not like the rest.

They are like the rest. And that is a good thing. I argue that it is the best thing - that women are amazing creatures and I am thankful MRP has given me an instruction manual on how bring out their best.

So why is your wife a screeching harpy hellbent on your misery? Again, because of YOU. Because you are failing.

Take the best wives out there - the ones married to the success stories of this subreddit. You think they are special? Take them out of their current life and submit them to 10+ years of your beta-ass marriage. Where they have to step up, be the man, lead the family, make the hard decisions, take care of an adult man-child in addition to the kids, be the emotional tampon as their beta-husband cries about not getting his dreams... and I guarantee you will find her an unhappy harpy bitch.

Hell, take the best nympho on the planet and submit her to 10+ years of passive aggressive covert contracts as a way to guilt her into sex with a haunched over dadbod slob... and you find a woman who suddenly claims she has "Low libido".

So when you read posts here and on ASKMRP about a hell of a woman cuckolding her man, keep in mind that this is a woman who is in a leaderless, betadom marriage of broken dreams. It is the husband's fault.
I see you itching to post your exception to this rule.. So I will give you one.

IF you have become the alpha captain, the unshakable oak, and you have turned the marriage around, implemented MRP the full distance for a year+ and you have created a good, strong, fun-loving red pill marriage... and she is still a harpy bitch?

There is your exception. There is the door to hit her ass.

And more importantly, you are finally at a place where you deserve better.
Married Man Game Part 3: Sexting
by Red-Curious | March 5, 2019 | Link

My wife decided to snoop on my computer last week and managed to find this account. Hi, babe! No, I'm not creating some stupid throwaway account or changing my profile. The first post she read was The Consciously Crazy Wife. Yikes! Haha. "I knew you were hiding something, and I just wanted to know all of you," she said. It was a clear invasion of privacy, and I called her on that, but women are gonna do what women are gonna do. So, I ask her with a smile if she'd read my OYS comment about enjoying her dripping wet juices. She had, and we laughed together, though she was a bit embarrassed.

I think she likes being a bit embarrassed when it's just between the two of us. She'd never admit it openly, but her behaviors in those moments don't lie. Another thing that I haven't done often, but also gets her embarrassed, is sexting. So, I figured I'd write a post on it. Let's see how embarrassing this can get ;)

SEXTING FRAME

Texting is only for logistics, right? As a general rule, yes. But there are times, especially for married men, where it can be advantageous to rev up the engines even before you get home from work or while one of you is away on business. I do not sext very often. But when I do, I really enjoy it. It's a fantastic experience. Sometimes she seems to get into it, whereas other times she's quite dismissive. Unless she's sexting right back, it's not always easy to gauge how she's receiving it, but I'm not as interested in that, as the stage it sets is usually quite fruitful when we're back together again.

What makes it difficult to gauge is that you have no behaviors to observe. All you get is what she says, which isn't always reliable. While a particular line might make her feel warm and blush, she could very well respond: "Stop it. This is uncomfortable." Or she might say, "Aw, that's cute. Are you picking up the kids today?" and totally dismiss what you said until you get home and she's ready to go. Other times she may play along. If all you get are her words, you have no idea what's really going on in her head.

Conclusion? Sexting is less about how it makes her feel and more about how it makes me feel. I simply enjoy talking sexy to my wife. It shows confidence and dominance, especially in those times that she doesn't engage. It sets a plan and expectations for how the night is to go. It makes me horny all day so I'm rock hard by the time the kids are in bed.

Now, I'm married to a reserved "good Christian girl" type. Any form of "naughty talk" makes her feel awkward and uncomfortable. Just taking a selfie showing some cleavage is groundbreaking for her. As a result, her ASD is remarkably high when it comes to these types of things. So, it's automatic for me not to expect or look for any validation in her responses (not to say she doesn't give it). But I still do it anyway. Why? Because I find it fun. And it's great when she does respond anyway.
DEVI

I'm sure there's a lot of nuance based on the particulars of each person, but bear with me. While I'm a lawyer by trade, I love writing in my spare time. I've written both fiction and non-fiction books - but fiction writing has been particularly helpful to me. When I'm thinking about how I want my night to go, it doesn't just run through my head like a scene in a movie that I'm watching. As with writing fiction, I can place myself in the scene and experience the fullness of the moment yet to come. That's what makes sexting come alive for me - it's not just imaginative foreplay; it's a whole new world of anticipatory gratification. Instead of wishful expectation, I find myself immersed in a world of my own making and inviting my wife to join me there.

Even beyond the principles you'll find below that I draw from my experience as a writer, there are some basic concepts that are valuable to making sexting a fun and enjoyable experience for me, and hopefully for you too, and which can set a solid stage for evening activities. I have found Daniel Rose's "DEVI" system quite helpful in creating a framework for me to really get into it, which I hope and often find gets her into it as well.

• Dominance: Sexting works best for me when it comes from my frame as something I'm leading for my enjoyment and I'm inviting her along for the ride. I set the stage, she follows. I push boundaries and make her feel uncomfortable. I'm in charge of the conversation and say what I want, free of restraint. I also don't place pressure or expectation on her to respond a certain way. My sexual energy directed toward her through text is not dependent on her approval. I can just be me.

• Emotion: I have to be feeling it. My emotional state matters most. If I'm into it, she can get into it. To transfer my enjoyment into her, I must target her feels, which is when reciprocation is most likely to occur. With no emotional transference, while I may be having fun, she'll ultimately write me off and not engage back. This is where I screwed up the most recent time I tried this - I hopped in too far too fast and didn't get her feeling it right away. When she wants it, she'll play along.

• Variety: I'm sure you can imagine what a boilerplate sext conversation looks like. I'm a lawyer and even I hate reading boilerplate, no matter how interesting the document is otherwise. If she doesn't know where you're going to go with the conversation, it leaves room for anticipation of what might come next.

• Immersion: This is the single most important aspect of sexting for me. It's what makes it most enjoyable. When actually having sex, immersion often happens naturally. When sexting, it takes a lot of work to leave your environment and feel in the moment. Why? Because you're looking at a screen with the lights on and not actually experiencing anything that's being said. Yet romance novelists are able to create immersion for women in airports, coffee shops, and even public restrooms all the time. It's doable. But it requires creativity and stage-setting. I have found myself so immersed in these types of conversations that I must step away from my office desk to make sure I'm not leaking in my pants.

With those principles in mind ...

PRACTICAL TIPS

Of the list below, take what works for you and leave the rest behind. These are just things that have been helpful to me in maximizing my enjoyment of sexting with my wife.

Be Authentic. What makes sexting most enjoyable for me is that I authentically want to do everything I'm texting. That doesn't mean I can't embellish, but my words are coming from raw, genuine desire and expressing parts of my intentions that often go left unsaid. And they usually should go unsaid if you're not at a distance. Do, don't say. But there's still value in saying it from time to time and expressing your sexuality in a different way. Besides, if you're not authentic and just screwing around, she'll see through it and it ruins the experience.

This is Not a Joke. While you can joke, don't let the entire exchange become a joke. There's sometimes a temptation (especially if sexting is brand new to your relationship) to maintain plausible deniability by doing something in a way that it can be played off as a gag.

Example of what not to do: Take a dick pick. She responds shocked and confused rather than engaging the way you hoped, so you say, "Yeah, that was funny. Can you imagine if we actually did those things like other people do? Haha. Glad we're not like those weirdos." No. Don't do that. Own it. Again, be authentic.

Strategically Limited Use of Emojis. I prefer to avoid emojis whenever possible. However, sometimes the situation calls for it. The best use of emojis seems to be for transitions. You're having a serious conversation about who's getting the kids to practice, then you transition with a wink to change gears from logistics to flirting with a transitional phrase.

Example: "Thanks for taking care of that. I'll have to reward you later ;)

Saying this with a straight expression, no emoji, some people might not get the hint. Once you use this singular emoji, because the context of the conversation has already changed you shouldn't need to overdo it afterward. She should recognize the suggestive nature of your speech.

Be Different. Abuse the impersonal and tone-deaf nature of texting by acting out of character. If you're normally a serious, straight-shooter, add some humor and light banter to your sexting. If you're usually a comedian in the home, imagine your persona as that of a secret agent trying to get a Russian spy into your hotel room. This change of character adds an air of mystery that's a little exciting. Even if she doesn't know you're doing this, it can also give you slight hints of role-playing if you've never yet introduced that into your marriage.

Ex. You're typically a funny guy in the home. While you can incorporate humor into your sexting, maybe you shift from humorous flirtation to serious. "I want you. Against the wall. I'll look you dead in the eye. My left hand will hold your face. You can't look away as my fingers slide inside you. I want to see that moment in your eyes."

The reverse should apply as well. If you're typically a straight shooter, try to add a bit more humor and light-heartedness.

Use Strategic Pauses. Long paragraphs are great for novels, but they don't let her linger on the moment. Sexting should build over time and take time. Novels can get a girl going because there's enough content for her to read for an hour straight to keep the tingles alive. When you're texting, you can't type that fast. You have to let her linger from phrase to phrase, waiting for what comes next. Put periods in sentences that you'd otherwise string together.

Ex. "I want you against the wall so I can look you in the face while I slide my fingers inside" becomes the example in the previous point, broken up with a new text where every period is, maybe leaving 10-20 seconds between texts.

Make Her Feel Like the Perverted One. ASD may cause her to present as sweet and innocent, maintaining her self-image (particularly true among Christian women). Nevertheless, if you ignore her self-perceived innocence and act like she's making the dirty comments, this can open up the atmosphere for further conversation. If she feels like you already think she's a little kinky, she has the freedom to feel a little kinky and engage in-kind.

Ex. After the "I'll have to reward you later ;)") text (above), my wife replies: "Flowers? :D" Total ASD. She knew what I meant. So, I respond: "Hmm ... props for being creative. I never thought about using flowers that way before."

Lead by Example. If you want her to say something flirty, be flirty first; if you want her to say something dirty, say something dirty first; if you want her to send a naughty picture, send a naughty picture first. Just don't run faster than she's willing to go if you're expecting her to respond in-kind. Pace the escalation.

Ex. I was once flirting with my wife while she was in an air port and I was at work. I was escalating to the point of exchanging pictures. She was shy and unwilling to show cleavage. So, although my ordinary tone of texting is serious (and therefore I'm employing more humor in the banter), I take a pic of myself pulling my work-shirt down with my pecs pressed together, making a kissy face. "See how easy that was?" It made her laugh and she returned in kind.

Use Additional Technology. I have Google Home and Amazon Firesticks set up in my house, each linked to my Spotify account. While at the office with my wife working from home, in the midst of sexting my wife I pulled up Marvin Gaye's "Let's Get it On" and remote-casted it to one of the devices in my house. Apparently it scared her at first (note: check your volume levels before you leave the house), but got her to laugh and pulled sexting out of her phone and into her ears.

Don’t Ask or Beg. "Can you send me a nip pic?" is not cool. "C'mon. Just do it. You know you want to." Even worse.

Do Give Instructions. "Tell me ..." or "I'm going to do ... then you're going to send me a picture of your ..."

Don’t Tell. Show. Not just with pictures. Craft a narrative. Think of details that are highly suggestive without saying what you actually mean. The imagery of "pants around your ankles" is far more titillating than telling her you want to pull her pants down. The small details are what make the experience come alive for the imagination - not just for her, but for you as well.

Don’t Be a Poet. The offset of the previous point is not to go crazy with metaphors and grandiose language. It destroys authenticity. When you evoke her brain, you ruin immersion. You want your brains to be shut off from the fact that this is all text and living in the scene you're setting.

Use Your Senses. Don't just talk about what she looks like. Consider your five senses in the way you paint a picture.

- What do you see? How are her clothes resting on her body? Are they sliding down her shoulder? Are they in a heap on the floor as you walk over them? Are her nipples standing upright? Are her breasts clenched together? What does she see? Is she staring into your gaze? Are her sight and thoughts lost in the black behind her eyes? Are the lights on or dim or off?

- What do you feel? Are there goosebumps? Does a rush of cold air blow over you? What does the room smell like? Are you imagining lit candles? Clean bedsheets?

- What do you hear? Is she moaning? Is the ceiling fan gently humming? Is there a sexy playlist on in the background? Are the springs creaking?

- What do you taste? How delicious is it for her body to run across your tongue? Are you toying with strokes of sweet strawberries or frigid ice across her tongue?

- What do you smell? Are there candles in the room? Does your nose catch the scent of her southern aroma? Is she riding you so hard that you can smell the energy dripping off her skin?
You have any other tips that have worked for you? I'd love to hear them. While I've immensely enjoyed my experiences with sexting, especially as one of the few areas where I get to express my writing prowess with my wife, I recognize that I don't do it often and would love to hear more about what works and what doesn't. Given the fact that my wife travels quite a bit for work during busy seasons, this is an art I'd like to continue enhancing and practicing more frequently when the situation calls for it.
You ever feel a weight fall off your shoulders? Between two closely scheduled trials, the last month has been insanely busy. My wife's also in her busy season at work. Even though she's at 70% instead of full-time, the stress was more from the nature of the work and the fact that even at 70% she's working over 60 hours a week.

On Wednesday the judge realized she had a scheduling conflict and decided to continue next week's trial. Woohoo! I'm ecstatic. My wife ... less so. "I'm quitting my job." "I hate my life." "I just can't do this anymore." "By not letting me quit - that's abuse. I am being abused." She was mad. I don't blame her. She hadn't seen me for the last 48 hours because I was working until after 2am each night, so she's dealing with her busy season, horrible clients, and our 4 kids all on her own for 2 days straight.

My joy at the alleviation of my schedule was confronted directly against her rage, stress, fury, hopelessness. It had gotten so bad that she actually hung up on her boss mid-conversation. She's expressing all of this hate toward me. I'm standing in a puddle of tears. Let's go with the typical comfort maneuver: hug, hand on her cheek, look her in the eyes with my forehead on hers, tell her everything's going to be fine. "Everything's NOT going to be fine. I hate my life." Yeah, the usual wasn't going to cut it this time.

But she couldn't bring me down even if she had the equivalent of an emotional bazooka. My best was pitted against her worst. I won.

"Babe, I can see the stress in your face. The problem is, it's stuck there and not coming out. Open your mouth for a second." She did. "Yep, it's in there alright. Hmm ... what are we going to do about that?" So, I picked her up, held her upside-down and started shaking her like a bottle of ketchup. "Get that stress out. Open your mouth. Let it pour." She starts laughing. "Is it all gone yet? No? Okay, let's keep going, I know there's a little more in there." The kids thought it was hysterical: "Do it to me too, Daddy!" So I start taking turns with each of them one by one.

I look back at my wife: "Well now you're just empty. I suppose I gotta fill you up. How about I give you some of my joy?" So, I start kissing her in front of the kids. Magically, she's happy again. Or maybe it wasn't magic but ... you know ... the power of frame.

Your BEST against her WORST - whose emotions win that battle?

If you're feeling funny and she's mad, do you stop cracking jokes to deal with her anger? That's emotional compromise - you tone your humor down, she brings her attitude up. You're joyful and she's depressed. Do you empathize with her depression to cheer her up? That's emotional compromise. You drop your joy, she ups from her depression. Emotional compromise has its place - empathy can be a powerful tool in the right circumstance.
Settling for a tie is also acceptable. You keep being happy, she keeps pouting in anger. That's her prerogative, if she insists.

But I've found much more success getting my wife into my frame through unstoppable emotional inertia than through emotional compromise or even settling with a tie (though I do that at times too).

As a man, you are strong. Your emotions are stronger than hers. Women believe that because they are more emotional, somehow emotional acuity is their forte. It's not. Emotional volatility is, and those aren't the same thing. Men have strength not only to control their emotions, but to express them as well. If your emotional strength is greater than hers, you will win. This is how you draw her into your frame.

In this situation, my wife thought she wanted two things: (1) for me to cave and let her quit her job, and (2) for me to experience the weight of her pain and frustration alongside her - to empathize with her (emotional compromise). I wasn't having either because I knew better. She doesn't know what she wants, but I do. She really wanted to have fun, so I gave her fun. I had more fun with a fun wife than with a harpy wife. Win.

I'm a bit of a junkie for musicals - they're partly what pulled me out of the emotionally robotic crappy frame I grew up with. If you want to see what unstoppable emotional inertia looks like, watch The Schmuel Song, from The Last Five Years. Anna Kendrick slams the door after a bad day, huffing and puffing, repulsed at Jeremy Jordan's efforts to cheer her up. But he's a writer and is excited about his latest story, so he's going to tell his story instead of screwing around with trying to fix his harpy. Cue the video.

While pseudo-fiction (the play is closely based on the author's own marriage/divorce), it's the best visual example I've seen of maintaining frame and drawing a woman in, if guys don't know what this looks like. It's much closer to a realistic picture (minus the singing, unless you're me) than what you'll find in other works of fiction where it just seems forced.
Why You Must Be Willing to Nuke Your Nuclear Family
by HornsOfApathy | May 5, 2020 | Link

Here's short version of this post:

Your wife holds a trump card you don’t want to admit she has, but you both know it. Take her card and burn it. Otherwise, you will fail.

That card?

Your nuclear family.

-----------------------------

Edit: Based on feedback here, I think it's important to say the following things as a disclaimer before you read this:

- The keyword in the title of this post is "WILLING".
- I'm not advocating pushing the button. Nor am I condoning it.
- If you aren't at least 6 months into your journey and past the anger phase, please save this post for later. You will blow shit up otherwise.
- This is MRP endgame. This is very advanced stuff. All of this is predicated on the fact that you've done the work and you're now a worthy and high-value man that isn't bullshitting himself in any area of his life.

-----------------------------

A long time ago somewhere along the line in your lizard brain you evolved to have an instinct to protect and serve your woman and children. The difference today is that this instinct (and great trait, I believe) has been manipulated to be used against you - and to prey on these masculine so that you give them from a place of neediness rather than abundance.

No better social programming that relies on your hard-wired evolutionary psychology than this: The nuclear family. It draws on your desire to protect and provide for those closest to you - at all costs. AT. ALL COSTS. But now, you likely approach this act of giving to keep your woman and children.

Only low value beta men do things to keep a woman.

High value men provide as a gift without covert contracts. Because they can gift through abundance.

From a new poster here, /u/DrBeaufort, he said this -

> My internal dialogue was that I would normally never let someone treat me this way, but in this case my infant son and struggling wife needed my help, so I couldn't leave or set any boundaries. I felt trapped.
Most men do (and continue to) aspire to the idea of the Nuclear Family. Shitty parents? I’ll do better. Great parents? I want to do that too. It is programmed into our DNA to love, protect and provide security to women and our children. It's not wrong, it's just all the rules have changed.

Hypergamy is hard-wired into a woman's DNA. The desire to protect and serve their tribe is also wired into a strong masculine man’s DNA.

Cavemen would go out hunting and gathering to support their (notice the ownership?) cavewoman and raise their cavebabies. If she stopped doing her part by taking care of the kids and him, giving him easy access to sex, and keeping the cave tidy and meals cooked - he would kick her out and get a new cavewoman - because there would be a line of cavebitches outside his cave who are in line to be with a high value caveman that could hunt, gather and protect little cavewomen and cavebabies. This was how a man provided value and was a fair arrangement between the sexes. She would spend her entire youth learning the skills required to be a good cavewoman so she was valuable to a caveman. Conversely, the caveboy would spend his entire youth learning the skills required to be a valuable caveman and if he chose, to gift that to a cavewoman. The man had the power of choice. He was the gatekeeper to commitment.

Even with choice, the caveman was more likely to function higher in the dominance hierarchy by having a cavewoman to add value to his life. The women did not have a choice – as their skills were developed to amplify and enhance that of the man’s. Together they could rise up the dominance hierarchy where their odds of survival were higher with access to more resources. Men experienced freedom and challenge from the tribe. Women experienced protection, security and praise from the tribe. And so the bond was formed that allowed both of them to fulfill their deepest desires and fulfill a mutual cycle of gifting.

Until recently (1950 and 2nd wave feminism), that shit worked. It was the same caveman/cavewoman dynamic. Enter child support, government subsidies for women, and equality. Now a woman can freely pump out a few kids, stop doing her part as the cavewoman, become a cavebitch, and take half of her caveman's shit while being supported by all the other cavemen who pay taxes, AND continue to get half of his moose carcass every time he makes a kill... until her children can support themselves. And what prevents her from doing this? Nothing. Not even fucking another caveman!

So why would she keep giving access to sex? The first reason she'll do that is if you're that high-value caveman that's willing to say, "Look cavewoman. You ain't cutting it. I'm going to give you first shot here - but if shit doesn't change to meet my needs, I'm going to the line of cavebitches outside to get what I need. No hard feelings. And yeah, you'll probably get half of the caveshit and the moose I kill next week - but as you get older and less valuable to other cavemen, well... you'll be last in line at the next cave. Just look objectively at the line. So STFU or get in the back of the line behind all hotter and younger cavebitches waiting outside."

The second reason that you would have access to sex is because you have proven that you’re the highest value mate available. The muscular caveman from good stock who won the annual rock carrying contest last year against his other local cavemen and is respected by all the other cavemen. By proxy, it gives her the best mate and social status.

Women have always understood this at a subconscious level - but then enter 3rd wave feminism where women lie to each other so that they can let hypergamy run amok and level the playing field. "Oh my fellow cavebitch, listen. You don't need no caveman! You can take half his shit, set yourself up in your own cave and do you own thing for a while - other cavemen will be coming to your cave! They'll see how awesome you are. You can do anything a caveman can!"

Problem is, men admire other men for that type of behavior. We don't admire that in women. Women believe that since we admire that masculine direction of freedom that it will make them attractive to us. It doesn't - and is the huge feminist lie. We admire femininity, beauty, and a woman who supports us and the cavebabies we make as we explore that which is outside the cave - and secretly gushes at our 12-point buck we hauled in from the field that we proudly display on the wall. Everytime she sees it on the wall she is reminded that she fucked the winner.

Why did you listen to this fucked up shit?

This is where the blue-pill comes in. Modern-Cavewomen™ say to you: "Look, everything is going to be fine! Yeah, cavewomen are hard work. But if you just listen to what I need, and compromise, and take good care of ME, and give ME everything I WANT... ME... I mean WE.... can have an equal partner marriage and be happy. And if you decide you want to fuck other cavewomen - well that's just wrong! You're a not a good caveman for doing that! Now, come over here and let me suck your little cavedick."

How can you not see the manipulation in that?

How can you not see the solipsism in that?

Since when has being a fantastic man had anything to do with making her the prize?

Do you know what a high value caveman would do if he heard that shit? He'd nope the fuck out and get another cavewoman. In a matter of weeks the she would die, find another suitable protector and mate, or find a way to get Chad McCavetroll to throw her some food scraps for fucking him on the side of the cave, or somehow adopt caveman skills like hunting (which hold no value to a caveman) and adapt to living alone in a cave lonely as fuck with her 4 sabretooth cavecats.

Do see the pattern here with Modern-Cavewoman?

Your woman will become selfish and ungrateful for how many fields you plow and how great you look because in the back of your mind you always are trying to live up to her equal standard of being a “Good Caveman” and wouldn't dare fuck another cavewoman.
She LITERALLY has you BY THE BALLS.

Inevitably, we know this doesn't fulfill their hypergamous desire to fuck the winner in the long run. The entire focus is on her and controlling the outcomes - which is a masculine caveman strength. Not feminine.

Basically, this is a long way of explaining RP 101 Rational Male concepts to you (sidebar already dude).

Without changing your mental models, you're letting your woman know that all those cavebitches that will be lined up at your cave are off limits, which cancels out every need for her to do her part to complete the cycle required for mutual success. She doesn't have to fuck, clean, look pleasant with a soft demeanor, or cook because... why would a high value caveman turn down hot as fuck cavebitches who really desire to fuck him when at the same time, she is not giving him that same desire and doing her part?

Because deep down he's a cavefaggot.

And dread is ALWAYS meaningless and backfires on faggots.

Yeah, it’s waaay fucking backwards.

I mean, kind of.

Let's bring it all back full circle now. I wrote in this post:

```
She WANTS you to pass this test. She desires in the darkest parts of who she is as a woman for you to fucking crush this and make yourself a man of high value. This woman has likely been on your team all along.
```

And here's the big secret that I want to share with you, brother.

She WANTS you to be willing and able to NUKE it all.

Your woman wants you to be able to take your pick of the best cavebitches outside your cave waiting on you, but you still pick her. This signals to her that she is higher value than all those caveTHOTS, has better skills, is better in the cavebed, and makes her more worthy than any other woman out there. She doesn't even have to say anything. Even if the other cavebitches give her shit; maybe telling her they cook a better venison roast, or they can suck cavedick better, or they're prettier and younger, or have some kind of great value above and beyond what she can offer....

All she has to do is look at them, look at you, realize that this high value caveman is with her over them, and that's all the proof she needs to say: "Look cavebitches, whatever. Look what I have. Ya'll can fuck off - I've got the best and you don't. How 'bout them caveapples?"

And every time you she secretly knows you'll refuse to pick one of the other cavebitches because of some retarded bluepill indoctrination, she secretly feels less and less valuable to her hypergamous cavesisters and moves further down the dominance hierarchy where she has more unattractive options. But, if you don't need side-cavewoman because YOURS is doing her part very well – and you let her know with an acceptable amount of praise through your ACTIONS - she knows she's the most valuable woman in line. Period. Even Modern CavewomenTM derive their greatest sense of value in the world from this feeling.

Do you ever notice how happy women are to be on the arm of a high value man in public?
Take a look next time you see one. They are beaming with feminine energy and light up a room. Because they are happy.

Otherwise, your woman feelz like her man isn't as valuable, and in turn, she holds no value either. That's the worst thing that can happen to her in this world, so her epic test either serves her by weeding you out - or making you high value. A side effect of this high value is that you then have your pick. She desires in the darkest parts of who she is to be your first pick.

Coming Full Circle

If you have worked yourself up the dread ladder and come to the FMOFY speech (also in the sidebar MMSLP by Athol Kay) then you likely understand the power of what that speech can do. Frankly, I think the FMOFY speech is bullshit. I think if you’ve worked yourself up that high onto the ladder and are forced or coerced to have that speech, you are still trying to negotiate desire. And who the fuck wants to negotiate desire by holding your wife and kids hostage? You want your wife to fuck you with crippling anxiety? I never did. I knew that at some point my woman was fucking to survive and I see the FMOFY speech as a retarded way to overtly declare “Fuck me, or you’ll suffer the loss of me.”

Weak. If she hasn’t figured out by then you’re a man who likes to fuck – and needs to fuck – then you’ve been fucking up all along anyways. Why go overt?

I’d rather change that mental model here. I don’t suggest the FMOFY speech, but the reasoning behind it is all the same.

Your woman wants you to not need her. She despises your neediness in every hidden corner of your mind and will prey on it. Only when you no longer need her or your nuclear little family will she understand that you have the power of choice and she can NO LONGER hold the power of the nuclear family hostage against you. Valuable men are always the gatekeepers of commitment, and she’s not valuable enough to commit to – even with all the new fucked up Marriage 2.0 rules. Now that, sir, is a statement to her ego.

She knows how much you have always dreamed of having a nuclear family with loving parents and children together. She feels through all this – and is reinforced by your actions and words. She feels through every fiber of your being that you love your children in a powerful way and wish to be a part of their lives.

But she also knows that the rules have changed in her favor. AWALT? Yes. Don’t think for a fucking second that they haven’t hamstered and questioned their security (along with their children) if you two split up. She knows it would suck, but she could probably milk you of enough resources to make everything “ok”. This is a game you cannot win.
So what to do?

Nothing is more powerful than a man that knows his own direction, is his own leader, and does not give a fuck what the world wants from him – but creates and takes what is his. That is freedom. That is direction. This is what a man does.

Everyday that she feels you not pursuing your core desires for freedom she knows that you are not being true to your core of masculinity and she still holds the trump card over all your passed shit tests.

Yes, you might be reading this and saying “Wow, Horns. You are really going fucking Rambo here.” If you read through my history you’ll see I was the least likely man here to go Rambo, yet, I know that when you have achieved Outcome Independence and become your own Mental Point of Origin – there is one final test that you have created for yourself since you were a young boy.

Can you live in this world and forsake everything just because you choose to be who you are? Can you nuke fucking everything so that you can make your own choices and not allow even your own children (who you love) prevent you from pursuing your deepest and most powerful core masculine desire of freedom? Are you willing to nuke it all so that you can pursue your rightfully desired passion for joy?

Or are you going to remain trapped?

This is the test you give yourself. If you cannot pass your own test, you will fail, and she will always use this to her advantage. It will be a small cloud looming over your head for the entirety of your life that you will try to ignore but she will always see. If you choose the idea of giving your children an intact family over your own happiness you will never succeed.

You know who I think did this? Jeff “Chad” Bezos. Richest motherfucker on the planet. Got ripped in the gym. Nuked it all because... well, I can only suspect - but let’s just presume he got woke and was willing to nuke it all to pursue his joy and happiness. Lost billions. Do you think he cared?

You can have a preference. And yes, you can prefer that your little nuclear family survives.

But let's be clear about one thing up front.... Preference implies you have a choice.

You are a man with the nuclear codes. Sure, you could hit the button at anytime. But the difference between TRP and MRP praxeology is this: your kids and your woman are standing right next to you and that nuke. This idea of “nexting” (nuking) is rooted in TRP logic and is the most powerful tool in your arsenal – your ultimate trump card – your ability to remove all you time and attention permanently.

Take back the nuke button, but don't use Rambo to get it. He'll use it on the way back to you for fun.
You must be willing to push the button to pursue your own joy and happiness. If you flinch, you fail.

You don’t have to press it though. But you sure as fuck better be willing and able to.

And when you can – with complete congruence to your desire for freedom and release from constraint that which could trap you – your woman will feel through this. She will know. And if you’re not a LARPing faggot she might just shut the fuck up, get in line, and get back to doing what a good woman does for a valuable man.

And maybe she won’t.

Your finger is on the trigger, motherfucker.

Dare yourself. Stop being afraid.

Dare yourself to live or die trying.
If you're here, I hope you know of the Captain/first mate relationship dynamic. To adequately pilot a ship, someone has to be Captain. As a man, that's YOUR job. You can listen to suggestions if you have a proven first mate, but the ultimate decisions are up to you. You can't co-captain a relationship any more than a ship or a plane.

So, your boat is chugging along nicely, why not go down to the cabin for a few drinks? You've been mostly keeping it on the designated heading, despite the busted compass and clocked rudder. The first mate is capable at the wheel for a few hours. She can keep it on course. Damn it's nice down here. Big screen, lots of snacks. Can't even hear the kids. Start getting more and more comfortable, letting the responsibilities of life slip away and not really caring where the ship is headed. Shit I drank too much.

But the first mate never wanted to be captain. That's why she chose you all those years ago. She resents how she has to pick up your slack, resents how you felt somehow ok just being a couch potato all day, resents how your mutual hopes and plans have somehow faded away without a whimper. Doing a job she hates because somebody has to keep the whole thing afloat. Where the fuck is this thing even headed?

You've become a fat, lazy, whiny drunk. She sees you as one of her children, just another need she needs to fulfill. She's your mommy, your cheerleader, your babysitter, your co-captain. No respect, no sex. You're just not an attractive person. So she gives up. Finally stops the boat and jumps ship into her own little life raft. You're still tied together by this long line, 1000 feet of rope coiled between you, but you're essentially on separate vessels.

As you awaken from your stupor, hangover pounding, low angle sun streaming painfully in, you realize the engines are silent. You are alone. But nobody delivered breakfast! You come up on deck. Dead in the water. First mate nowhere to be found. You're drifting towards the rocks. Shit. How did it get to this?

You have to do something. Where are the damn keys? Fuckfuckfuck....Under the visor, stupid. Ok, started. Choose a direction leading away from the rocks, apply a little gas. You remember how to drive this thing?

If you freak out and push the throttles to their stops, the propwash will rock the life raft, and the first mate will wake up, get up and grab the keys away. Rightly so, you've been a fuckup for years, why should she suddenly start trusting you, Captain Rambo? Your balls haven't grown back yet, so you'll let her regain/retain control. Back to your rum. You have no business wearing that ridiculous hat. Mommy is so mean!

You have to ease it away, slowly, gradually picking up speed. Be gentle. Don't tell the fucking first mate anything. She won't believe you anyway. Takes discipline and patience and most importantly, SILENCE. STFU. SSSHHH!
As you continue to get up on plane, speed rising, you start to realize how cool it is to be captain of your own vessel again. You're enjoying life again. Holy shit! I don't need a first mate at all! Engines humming, buzzing the hot houseboat hotties, getting a tan in the hot sun, like is good. I'm on a boat!

The first mate has been left behind, still slowly drifting towards the shore. The 1000 feet of rope is paying out, faster and faster. She hasn't noticed any difference from her perspective. Matter of fact, the removal of the burden of taking care of your lazy ass is a bonus. She can sleep in, as long as you don't chop the throttles when you see a log floating in front of you. Made a decision, steer around it smoothly. You don't need to check in with her for a second opinion. You're relearning mastery of your trajectory.

Eventually the rope gets taut, starts to tug. By this point you're so far ahead, jumping wakes, enjoying your cruise, that whether she comes along for a fun ride or not is up to her. You've rediscovered your passion, your drive. You are outcome independent. Almost forgot she was still tied on back there.

She may accept you as her new captain and decide to come along, or not believe you and simply cut the line. Either way you'll keep on doing what you choose to do as captain of your own ship. You can even cut the line yourself if the drag gets too bad or if you decide you'd rather tow that inflatable hot tub full of spring breakers. You get to decide where you pilot your own damn ship.

But be very aware of the 1000 foot distance between you. It takes a long time for something on the end of such a long lead to respond to changes at the front. Give it a minute.
On the topic of "dating." Whether it is your wife, girlfriend or plate, there is one simple thing you need to get across.

I found myself sitting at the bar in a Shreveport, LA this weekend with "Mandy" whom I met on Bumble less than 14 days ago. As we sat there eating our lunch of beans and rice and gumbo, with her hand in my lap she looks and me and tells me that the most attractive thing about me, is the fact that "I do not need her."

I do not need her....let that sink in for a minute.....

When she told me that, I looked at her, and gave her a nice kiss on the lips. In a fun/cocky way I affirmed what she said, "Yes, I do not need you, but I choose to spend my time with you, and like you say choice is far more attractive than need."

One way or another, she gets it. She understands why she is there, sitting with me having lunch at a restaurant I chose to go to after spending the weekend with me going to a wedding she was invited to. A wedding where she was grinning ear to ear introducing me to her friends and extended family.

She savored the looks on their faces when I was able to carry on a conversation, fit into her circle with seamless effort. When I took the 80 year old grandma to the dance floor for a dance. When I danced with flower girl, the bride and most importantly when I spun her around on the floor like a little girl. She knew that she had the most high value man at that wedding. I would argue I worked that room harder than she did. She had to come and find me, and pull me back.

She loved how I already knew what club we were going to after the reception was over. There was no discussion, just hop in the truck and lets go. We are both dressed up, the night is young and we are on vacation, so lets go build a memory.

She knew two things going into this weekend.

1. I love wedding cake and never pass it up.
2. I love LA Gumbo.

So for me, beyond the fact I fucked her brains out before and after the wedding. Beyond the fact she gave me road head for 20 mins on the drive back to Dallas. Beyond the fact that she did not wear underwear all weekend under that short dress she wore to the wedding....

All that aside....

I got what I wanted...Wedding cake and Gumbo.

Everything else was a bonus.
What is the main event?

Dread and the Main event. What you think you have is probably not the main event.

Also read it here

I, along with other who are actually smart and capable here talk about Dread. If you don’t know, Dread is the process where a man prepares himself to be the most attractive man he can be while giving a girl he is currently married to, or in a long term relationship with, a chance to step up her game and meet his challenge before he moves on to someone else (or no one at all). One thing that isn’t discussed nearly enough is the main event, or that moment when the power dynamic in a relationship shifts for the better, and a guy receives the mother of all comfort tests, or a girls anxiety about her relationship security.

I’ll paint a picture. Imagine a guy who generally puts everyone except himself first. This could be you, your dad, your brother, or a guy form work who talks about his marriage way too much. He marries the first girl who shows the slightest appreciation for this. Maybe they have kids, maybe they don’t. The one thing that happens is that the sexual thrill of having two people, a girl desperate for unearned validation, and a guy desperate to work for it; that thrill starts to waver. Two codependents cannot stand alone, someone has to become the narcissist, and the wife begrudgingly takes the role. Sometimes the girl has some serious daddy issues and refused to accept anything but that role. A lot of women try their whole lives to be men, they always seem to be really good at becoming the worst that men have to offer.

Some men just light themselves on fire to keep others warm. This couple used to have sex like rabbits, it’s now on a schedule: monthly, quarterly, annually? Then, it’s just done. Some of the worst guys I’ve seen an spoken to have gone on in this personal hell for as long as a decade or more. I should say it breaks my heart, but they did it to themselves. The average man can get laid if he wants to, the question is what else is he attached to that gets in the way?

Hint: It’s validation seeking co dependence.

Even the single guys have it, they don’t get to pat yourselves on the back. What, did anyone seriously think that proclaiming ‘the juice isn’t worth the squeeze’ to every woman at every opportunity was being above it all? Who exactly do you think is supposed to hear that message and validate it?

Back to the relationship co dependents. They eventually find their way to our space. We get these cookie dough men, we show them the shit from the sidebar etc. I, or someone else (mostly someone else now) berate them like a drill sergeant to crush that ego, and until they come out the other side, forged out of iron.
They get into shape. They work out years of frustration inside the squat rack. They get their mind right, they replace their shitty mental models with healthy ... more importantly, with successful ones. And another concept, the thousand foot toe rope; The concept of where a mans progress isn’t reflected in their woman, much like a ship towing something at a thousand feet doesn’t change direction for a long time.

We can all say we are a married team, but you’re alone. Never forget that you ain’t shit, and that’s OK.

At it’s core, Dread is about you learning how to become attractive, or how to be attractive again, and to learn learn how to stop being unattractive, to start looking the part. The part is of a self actualized, charismatic, lovable man. Insert whatever masculine words into this box. It’s a mans individual box, labelled ‘masculine.’ Just make sure enthusiastic sex is in there somewhere.

When this happens, men start to build and experience options, or abundance. Women in general love charismatic, fun, lovable and attractive men, they love them a lot. That wife or long term relationship that a man has been experiencing purgatory with for months, years ... decades? That woman is completely clueless as to why any of this is happening, and he isn’t telling her. Why would he? Guys have tried to, Robert Glover suggests it, in fact plenty of guys in my experience have tried to, or accidentally let her find it herself. Consider this a warning, use open communication like this, and you’ll either get her assuming you’re not going to follow through —as she should — you’ve not followed through on stuff before right?

Or she’ll assume you will follow through and it makes her feel bad, so she subconsciously sabotages it. She doesn’t mean to, it’s mainly how women think in this situation. She feels bad, she feels worse as you get better, and she does things so she doesn’t feel bad. Want an ice cream? You deserve a reward for a good week at the gym. Lets have a drink and see what happens!?

Instead, keep all that work to yourself, no woman wants to hear it and it makes it harder for you if she did. Then eventually, eventually something happens. It doesn’t happen all the time, and it doesn’t happen with everyone, but it does happen. People around you, your woman in particular start to act right by you. They do this because you’re worth a damn for once.

If you’re lucky you got a good woman. she’s switched on with no daddy issues. Shes emotionally damaged no more than your average girl. They see a guy step up, and they fall into line. She trusts her instincts and does what she has to do to keep her man, to keep you happy. If that’s you, great, you’re one of the few, the proud, the top 20%. welcome to hypergamy, where a woman defers to her best option, try the crab cakes, they are delicious!

But for most of you, most of us, that’s not what happens. A woman will be utterly confused. Her man is getting better while she is falling behind. There’s years of built up baggage, so seeing such attractive behaviors in an unattractive man is confusing. This story only ends one way. She goes to her tool box and uses all the tools that used to work:
• She tries nagging

• She tries getting angry

• She tries feigning being hurt so you protect her

• She tries feeding you during a cut

She still doesn’t feel sexually aroused by this, there’s just too much baggage in her head from how things used to be, but in the back end of her girl brain, she kind of starts to feel something, a spark. That spark turns into a fire, and when it does she can’t ignore it anymore.

This is the main event.

If you’ve not heard of the term comfort testing, it’s where a girl attempts to get assurances that you won’t leave her. The Main Event is the mother of all comfort tests. It’s a last ditch play to find some stability. You always know when a woman is desperate, and she switches over to a direct style of communication in an emotional situation. Where is she in your life? What does she have to do to be there? What are you trying to accomplish? Why do I feel genuine desire for this dufus?

It’s all subconscious, and it’s all there.

A lot of guys think they have a main event, but they don’t. They get a girl who starts getting angry, starts trying to communicate, starts all kinds of antics to pull you back in to her frame, to make things revert to the way they were before. We are creatures of habit, and nothing bothers us more than when people don’t act how we expect them to act. That’s not a main event.

A main event is a visceral thing. If there’s no snot bubbles, if there’s no tears, if there no genuine fear that she may lose her best option, and if she’s able to form a sentence without stammering, it’s not a main event.

It’s the strongest emotional reaction you’ll ever see from a woman. We talk a lot about submission, it’s an emotionally charged word, but that is exactly what this is. This is the strongest display of submission a man will ever see in a relationship. It’s when, in a girls heart of hearts, she submits to you: the strong, aloof, sexy, charismatic man of value. The guy who has the right mix of desire and comfort, alpha and beta qualities, serotonin and dopamine. What, did you think Alpha meant good and Beta meant bad? Don’t kid yourself, these are edgy shorthand terms to describe the lover and provider behaviors in men. No guy does anything if you call him a lover, but call him an Alpha and his peacock plumage starts to flair out. the main event is where a guy knows that he’s no longer faking it, it’s where a guy has actually made it.
That man has got the reins, maybe for the first time, maybe after a hiatus. He’s leading the relationship so don’t screw it up. The first step to getting there is what’s called the Come to Jesus speech. That’s a topic in and of itself, for another time.

Dread and the Main Event

To sum up, with Dread, you’re going to receive one of thee positive outcomes. well, two are positive, one is just positive for you:

- A man’s wife or girlfriend steps up to meet the challenge, or

- A man’s wife or girlfriend fights him every step of the way until the main event.

The last option, maybe her daddy issues run too deep, she just checks out, she never wanted a good man, she wanted a whipping boy. One can’t do anything about that, just be ready to interview her replacement, because, and this is another old saying The stay plan is the same as the go plan.

Also, you can read it here, with photos so you don't get bored

And here, you can make a simple tuna melt while you listen
One of the first things we would do when we would bring a new guy into our church's Red Pill type group was always to find out if they were a porn addict or engaged in any other repeated addictive pattern. I always believed that this was just a Christian aspect of the group. But actually giving up porn is very RP. Porn tends to distort your perception of sexual and relational reality in the same way that only consuming biased mainstream media distorts your perception of world events. You're not gaining a sober picture of anything, because you're looking at sexuality through a specific lens. You're lusting after low value but high attraction women and it's evident even in mainstream society because the lowest value men worship them and mid to high value men generally use them in secret and never reveal the compulsion.

And don't get me twisted, I'm not saying abstaining from porn has an end goal of respecting women, rather the end goal is respecting yourself and your own value. Very much in the same way that if you believe your body is a temple that you abstain from junk food you don't consume pornography for the same reason. It's unearned pleasure. Cheap. Anything cheap and temporary cannot provide lasting impact to your life.

I would much rather tell my wife I look at porn and not actually do it then I would live the other way around. Because jealousy has it's rewards... but delusional perception of sexuality does not. Most men in the group I previously ran learn a great deal about their patterns of self sabotage when they remove all the consumption based coping mechanisms. They come out and show their faces. With that warped lens of distraction and cheap "self-fulfillment" gone, you are forced to fight your ego for a peek at your true situation. You have to live in reality. And that's a fight worth fighting. Now tell me I'm wrong. I'd love to hear why.
Handling a Fearful-Avoidant Wife
by Sepean | May 18, 2019 | Link

I have a fearful-avoidant wife and over the years I’ve learnt a lot about handling it - what to do and what not to do. I’ve given advice to some other men here with FA wives and it works.

If you’re not aware of what’s going on, FA can really throw you for a loop. She’s sweet, you stroke her hair - suddenly she’s disgusted with you. She’s an utter bitch and saying horrible things that makes you want to kick her out of the house - but soon after she’s all submissive and wants to suck your dick.

That’s a classic cycle for an FA girl: you being nice which makes her mean which makes you angry which makes her nice which makes you nice, repeat.

What is Fearful-Avoidance

A person with FA has low self-esteem and high distrust of others. They realize they need and want intimacy, but when they are in a relationship that starts to get close, their fear and mistrust surfaces and they distance.

If your wife is fearful-avoidant, you will likely have seen a cycle of you being nice which makes her mean which makes you angry which makes her nice which makes you nice, repeat. She also likely reacts with disgust or distancing to signs of affection like cuddling or intimate talks.

This describes it well: https://jebkinnison.com/bad-boyfriends-the-book/fearful-avoidant/

I can also recommend this book: https://www.amazon.co.uk/Attachment-Across-Lifecourse-Brief-Introduction/dp/023029359X, it will give you a deeper understanding but it isn’t big on actionable advice. It helped my wife reading it, and it helped with how we raise our kids. If either or both of you have insecure attachment styles, for the sake of your kids read this book so you don’t pass on your dysfunction to them.

Attachment theory is one of the best researched and most well documented areas of psychology outside of pathological conditions, it isn’t just some pseudo-scientific mumbo-jumbo. Don’t confuse it with attachment parenting though, that is just some homegrown stuff (seems designed to sell books to moms seeking to justify their overprotective parenting iirc).

Make sure she is FA before taking this advice

FA girls are a special bunch - don’t make the diagnosis to cover up your own shortcomings and then proceed to fuck shit up. Secure girls won’t react well to this.
There is an excellent test for general attachment style here (this is a real psychology test based on thousands of subjects across 60+ countries)

The MRP playbook is still king

MRP is still the foundation. It’s still about SMV, frame and game. She’s still a woman, and AWALT.

The way to think about FA is that 95% of the time everything is normal, but certain things will trigger abnormal behavior in her.

And don’t fall into the trap of using her FA as an excuse for your failings.

If she's not fucking you, it's because your SMV is low, period.

The limits to happiness with an FA partner

This is not a guide that will make everything rosy. That’s not an option if your wife is FA. All the literature I’ve seen suggests these people simply can’t make relationships work. With MRP tools you’re at another level and it can become good, but FA is a serious issue that won’t go away. Manage your expectations and focus on mitigation, not cure.

If marriage is hard mode, FA is nightmare mode. Not all the time, there will be plenty of good periods, but there will be absolutely awful periods.

Understanding the fearful response

When her fearful response triggers, that’s pretty simple. She is hit harder by the fear of losing you, and she’ll become more needy and try harder to get you to stay. It’s worth remembering when she’s freaking out about something - there’s a fearful response at the end of it that will pull her back.

Understanding the avoidance response

The avoidance response is more complicated. She's still a woman, she still wants intimacy and comfort. But these very things can trigger her avoidance response. Deep inside, an FA feels there’s something unlovable or even repulsive about her, and if you ever find out her true nature you’ll leave her. This means that when she feels the level of intimacy grows, she’ll begin to panic with a bizarre fear of you discovering her true nature and being disgusted with her, and when her feelings grow stronger she’ll fear the (to her) inevitable separation will just end up hurting more.

The reaction is to push you away and reduce the intimacy. Major avoidance episodes get so bad that part of her wants out of the relationship, but the fearful response keeps her from actually ending it. She’ll try to provoke or taunt you to end it instead - saying she’ll never be able to live up to your expectations, that you might as well end it, she’ll say stuff she knows you hate or that disgusts you.

Don’t ever give her ultimatums about what she can’t say in arguments, like “if you threaten to leave again, we’re over”. When her avoidance response takes over, she wants you to end it. She can’t and won’t do it herself, but if she can goad you into it, that’s an easy out. She’ll regret it once her avoidance episode ends, but in the heat of the moment she feels differently about it.

She’ll also say the stuff you hate to hear the most, stuff that will make you disgusted with her. Your core values, she’ll belittle them, she’ll shit on whatever identity you have of being a family man. Don’t give her ammunition - don’t tell her what really gets to you or what disgusts you, don’t tell her she can’t say shit like that again, even during calm times. Opening up about these things or warning her is giving her the argument manual for the next major avoidance episode.

This is important, so I’ll say it again: during major avoidance episodes, she’ll try to ruin the relationship, she’ll try to drive you away. She’ll say anything and everything. She’ll regret it later, but you’ll have to live with what she said. Telling her what you absolutely can’t live with her saying is exactly what she’ll be yelling at you in the future.

The avoidance response also sends her hamster on overdrive, it’ll warp reality far beyond the normal hamstering and there is no talking it down.

Minimizing daily avoidance stress

Signs of affecting like cuddling, stroking her hair, intimate talks, they stress her out, so you should stop it.

Instead, be her oak. She can cuddle up to your chest, but don’t be affectionate back. Protecting her and the body language that goes with it is fine, seeking intimacy is not (by intimacy I mean the emotional kind, it’s not an euphemism for sex or flirting). Grabbing or groping her is also fine. It’s the emotional intimacy that makes her scared - it’s fine that her man is dominant, protective and sexually interested in her.

It’s like she has a hideous scar under her shirt - don’t make her fear you’re going to lift it up and look at it. Once she gets comfortable knowing you won’t probe deeper, she’ll have a much easier time cuddling up to you and showing weakness and need of comfort. If on the other hand you teach her that you’ll get affectionate when she is, she’ll refrain from it.

Even if she needs comfort, you shouldn’t try to pass comfort tests it with too much intimacy.
It is much better to fail a comfort test than trigger her avoidance. Try to get a feel for what she can handle - hopefully a hug and a kind word won’t trigger it.

The best way to provide comfort is often just doing non-intimate beta. Work on the house, do something with the kids. That shows you’re there for her and the family without triggering avoidance. If she’s throwing a comfort test, it is often better to go clean something than to talk to her.

Withdrawing affection

We often recommend guys with a misbehaving wife to withdraw affection but continue owning his shit. The problem with an FA wife is that not showing her any attention but still doing stuff around the house and with the kids is probably the state she is most comfortable in. In MRP this may be the default OI behavior for her not living up to your standards, and women without attachment issues will become slightly uncomfortable and seek to regain some attention, but an FA wife will not do that. To correct her behavior you will have to "check out".

You emotionally check out of the relationship for a period. Leave the house. Be selfish. Shift chores you’d do unto her. Hog the TV and watch stuff she doesn't like. You need to do this more often and for smaller things than secure girls. Make her earn her way back in your good favor. And don't be afraid to ramp it up, go really cold and aloof - at this point the other end of her attachment issues begin to work in your favor. The fearful response kicks in and she will freak out more than women without attachment issues and be willing to do more to get back in your favor. As always be careful of not seeming butthurt since that isn't sexy, shoot for something more along the lines of her not living up to your expectations, so why does it matter what she wants. Down the line I had to stay disappointed for longer even as she tried to earn her way back in, because she seemed to get the idea she could be a bitch and then just fuck me when she wanted me back. If you’re new to MRP, reward good behavior right away, but you may have to change tactics later to beat her girl game.

The curse of high alpha and being happy

Surprisingly, the real problem with an FA wife shows when you’re further in the process, when your alpha is high and she’s being submissive. At this point, she’s more attracted to you and loves you more. For someone with FA, that just means the stakes are that much higher for when you finally “figure her out and dump her”. It’s more avoidance stress.

Submissiveness is a very intimate experience, again an avoidance trigger.

You’re happy with your sweet, submissive and kinky wife - but for an FA that triggers feelings of suspicion and mistrust. They deeply believe there is something wrong with them and you being happy with her makes her fear that you’ll soon figure out her true nature and it ends.
I have seen a clear pattern that whenever I felt that life with her was really good, a major avoidance episode was coming. We’re talking her breaking stuff, assaulting me, threatening to take the kids away, saying the vilest shit you can imagine.

This is by far the worst problem with FAs. All the other stuff is manageable, but that your relationship being really good is in itself what breaks it, how do you get around that?

I tried being less alpha for a period, and while that saw a real reduction in avoidance behavior, I couldn’t live with it. It felt fake, and I missed the high levels of submissiveness and kinkyness from her.

The solution is to never be content. In this case, good is the enemy of perfect, and even of good itself. There’s no standing still, no enjoying what you’ve achieved from her, with her. Always be dominating and demanding. Expect more from her. When she gets everything you asked for right, expect more.

She will try to fuck everything up the second you’re happy with what you have. It’s not that you have to be grumpy all the time. Think more of it like the entrepreneur that loves what he’s doing, loves his business and leads his employees well and celebrates success, but he’s always fucking pushing for more from everyone around him. Don’t settle for less.

If you’re happy and content, you’re seconds from disaster.

Overcoming sexual inhibition

FA girls have low self esteem - they don’t think they’re good enough, and they don’t trust that people will react well to what they do.

This means major inhibition. Even when they’re turned on, they’ll hide their feelings and control their expression. Like insecure teenagers make weird faces when their picture is taken (better goof off instead of taking the risk trying to look pretty), they’ll do the equivalent in bed and be purposefully silly or awkward. It’s incredibly hard to get them to loosen up. The problem is rarely any physical boundaries, they’ll be up for trying most stuff. The problem is usually all the emotional stuff like eye contact, moaning, sexy body language.

On top of those inhibitions, there are the classic FA insecurities: what if she tries her best and that isn’t enough for you, and the fear of deep emotional connection in itself.

The basis of all of this is still your SMV: alpha, frame, game, looks. Don't try to force shit you don't have the SMV to back up.

But you will need to push her more than other girls. You need to have talks with her, explain exactly what you expect. You need to be dominant with her. You need to not accept less than her best performance.

Start with one thing, tell her exactly how you want her to do that thing. If she doesn't, tell her again - if she messes it up (she'll do that on purpose), correct it. When she doesn't comply, put on your pants an leave. Check out, and be frank that you're not interested in someone not willing to put in effort to please you.

Repeat with the next thing. We're talking small stuff, like tongue action during BJs is one thing, lots of saliva is another, etc.

Increasing alpha and SMV only got my wife from "low libido" to horny but very inhibited. Then I had to wear down each of her inhibitions, now she'll talk technique while sucking dick, she licks my nipples while riding me, etc.

Being OI about it and hoping it'll get better just by having high SMV will get you nowhere or at best it improves so slowly you hardly notice, you'll just be disappointed with her performance forever. Push it and push hard, one thing at a time. There's a lot to go through, it'll take time even if you go at it, so might as well get started once you have the SMV for it.

The toughest part is when sex is only really good and you have to put on your pants and walk out because you want it to be super awesome. It's hard to walk out on good sex, but if you don't it is not likely to get better no matter how much you increase your SMV. You're dealing with strong fears and inhibitions, it takes some pushing to get her out of her comfort zone.

The good news is, if you put in the effort it works. She can get comfortable doing new stuff and learn to approach it with enthusiasm and pride.

Dealing with avoidance episodes

Her avoidance is triggered badly, and she's being an utter bitch, trying to taunt you to end it. What do you do?

Her hamster goes into overdrive, the stuff she’ll imagine is like something from a paranoid schizophrenic. If you STFU, she’ll take it to mean she’s right. If you A&A it, she’ll take it literally. You have to counter any unreasonable accusations - once. It might be DEERing, but if you don’t you’ll have to deal with a deeply rooted delusion.

After that, the usual shit testing methods apply, just be careful with the A&A as she takes it literally, and remember what I said about avoiding ultimatums.

Don’t give any ground, and under no circumstance go for comfort and affection - that just makes it worse, the real problem here is her avoidance, not what she’s accusing you of, including that you don't love her. Correct her once, matter of factly, then pressure flip or whatever. Don’t fall into the trap of showing affection during an avoidance episode.

Another thing I’ve found works well is just being laid back about it and saying she’s so predictable - “we got close, so you freaked out, and tomorrow you’ll be all sweet trying to make it up to me. Just like last time. It’s not like what you’re feeling now is relevant.”

If she’s on her way to go really off the deep end, don’t hold your temper back. Just go full caveman angry. If she’s going there, it is better for you to go off early, otherwise her shit just keeps getting meaner and meaner until she crosses a hard boundary. And trust me, her crossing hard boundaries is not fun, you both have to live with what was said and some shit just erodes your connection. Put a stop to it early, get angry and/or leave.

The bad episodes usually take 1-3 days for me. In the end, she comes to her senses by you yanking on the fearful chain, it’s not until she fears she’s losing you she’ll back down. One way or the other, that’s where you end up so even though she’ll act like the sky is falling and your marriage is over for sure, it’s just warm air. Don’t worry, her fearful response yanks her back in.

And the fearful response is strong, she’ll do exactly what you like. It’s a good time to work on her inhibitions.

Dread and jealousy

FAs are very mistrusting and prone to jealousy. Dread still has its place, but go up the dread scale slower than you normally would. Less will do more for you, and too much will set off a much worse reaction.

When combined with avoidance, jealousy will kick into absolute overdrive and reach pathological levels. Be really careful with any level of dread if intimacy is high.

A great life with a fearful-avoidant wife?

It’s doable. You need to get your SMV up, like any other man, and you’ll get a sweet and submissive wife. But you need to put in a ton of work to overcome her inhibitions, one at a time. You need to manage intimacy levels and never get content. You’ll likely still see bad avodance episodes, say once or twice a year, and at high SMV they’re much, much worse than what you saw previously. The main trick here is to not reveal to her how she can really piss you off, and to shut the episodes down quickly - three days of escalating provocations is much worse than one.

But put in the work and 95% of the time, things are great. She's sweet, we touch and kiss a lot during the day, at any time I can unzip and she’ll give a BJ like a camgirl, she’s lively and enthusiastic during sex. The other 5% range from annoying to a nightmare, and you just have to suck that up if you want to live with a fearful-avoidant wife.
Listen up faggots. Normally, I say fuck Theory post. But this is important so listen up. I’ve always been a fan of Game Theory and starting to make connections with mrp.

In Game theory, there’s two types of Games: Finite and Infinite Games. A Finite game is defined as known players, fixed rules, and an agreed upon objective. For example, baseball. We all agree on the rules that whoever has more runs at the end of the game is the winner and we all go home. No one can say that “if we just play 3 more innings, I can beat you”. An Infinite Game is defined as known AND unknown players, the rules are changeable, and the objective is to keep the Game in play – to perpetuate the Game. It’s limitless. In Infinite Games, players drop out of the Game when they run out of the will or the resources to continue to play.

When 2 Finite players or 2 Infinite players are playing against each other, then the Game is stable. Everything is cool. Infinite Games, for example, would be the Cold War. There couldn’t be a winner or loser so they just kept the Game in play. We didn’t win the Cold War, the Soviets just dropped out when they ran out of resources.

Problems start to occur when a Finite Player plays against an Infinite Player – because one is playing to win while the other is playing to keep on playing. In this case, the Finite player will always find themselves in an awkward or complex situation. This is comparable to the Vietnam War. We were fighting to win while the North Vietnimease were fighting to survive. A very different set of standards! In this situation, Finite players will leave and drop out of the Game. Same with McGregor versus Mayweather match, obviously it was a staged event for the payday, but McGregor was trying (foolishly, of course) to knock Mayweather out, while Mayweather just danced around the ring to prolong the fight. That way, everyone gets paid faggots.
This post is trite by my standards, but legit by the standards of the universe.

My mother lies dying, my father sleeps, defeated, perhaps worse than death...

Know this: Your body is your temple. Your temple is where you pray. Your prayer helps you endure. Your endurance makes you stronger. You strength helps you overcome.

Overcoming adversity brings it all full circle.

While it may seem trite, it is real.

I always write what is real - trite or not.

I have the body of a Greek God. Seriously. I've worked so, so hard for it.

So, so hard for it.

Nothing gives me more satisfaction, as long as I recognize that there's more to life than a body.

When I was told "you will not live" I said "I will live and reach the peak of life."

I did.

When I was told "you cannot beat this" I said "I will beat this and prevail."

And I did.

When I was told "you will not recover" I said "I will recover and reach even higher levels."

And I did.

When I learned, through MRP - through Stoney and Steele, and Bogey, and BPP, and SK, and others - that I was winning only one war and losing another - I fortified my defenses - and moreso, I fortified my offenses - and I went on the attack.

When I was a "businessman" who'd reached lofty heights, I became a "laborer" who would round out my life.

When I was a "thinker" who thought high and mighty I reinforced that same "laborer" because I'd forgotten how important his contribution was.

I posted last week that my mother is dying - hardcore like the revenant - my father is succumbing.
I am here. I am making choices. I am enduring hell... after a special kind of hell I'd already endured... jesus, don't I get a break (?)...

No, fucker, I don't... and nor do you.. and you better get your weak-ass used to it.

They all turn to me. Why? Because they can.

Because I am strong.

Because I am solid.

Because I will not waiver.

Because life goes on... cruel and uncaring, sometimes, yes... but it's true...

... and I stand sturdy.

... and so should you.

...

... You can be me. And be strong. Even if you don't know it. You can.

Nothing in weeks has given me more personal satisfaction than coming home from the ICU, consoling my father, and flexing in the mirror. Gay, sure, I can see how'd you'd think that.

... But adjust your point of reference... and see what that means... and understand... and believe...

... What I see in the mirror is a facsimile of what I give back...

... They count on me to be the rock...

... I see the rock....

... I am the rock.
Each year of Married Red Pill discipline, vision and frame is better than the last. I still grow every day, building on the habits from years one and two. Every area of my life has improved on the path of Read, Lift, & STFU, and every year I add more miles to my motorcycle and pages to my journal. My dudes, this is the way.

Life is far from perfect, however, and I had plenty of failures in Year 3. My own failures, financial goals and bills, and the occasional shit test. Failing to get up to 160 lean pounds, failure to be further along with my side business. There were times where I let my circumstances overwhelm me, times where I forgot that I was the hero in my own story. But for every one of those failures, there were ten successes. Some of my lofty goals from the week I found MRP have been overcome and replaced. Some things that seemed impossible now feel like stepping stones that I travel every day.

My third year began and ended with authentic gratitude, and that has altered my mindset. I've never been so thankful for my life, even the shitty parts, while simultaneously being so willing to change it all. I've never been so grateful for a day job, and I've never worked harder on a plan to be free from it. I'm more grateful for my family than ever - simultaneously, becoming more willing to nuke it all. And last year, I spent a lot of time being thankful, intentionally and out loud. For the first time, I'm earnestly seeing opportunities in my challenges, rather than trying to "convince" myself to adopt a positive mindset. If I can be thankful during the worst times, it's even easier to maintain that gratitude when my circumstances finally change.

In this last year, I did more good for my wife and kids, and for my parents and others. I have a lot more to give these days, but I'm not referring to money. Some day, I want to give that like crazy, too.

In Year 3, I took a long guys trip in the mountains. I did some truly epic stuff, and spent introspective time in amazing places. I was honest with myself about the excuses I was making, and my fear of failure that drove them. In particular, I was putting off the work, cost risk and potential rejection needed to take my side hustle to the next level. I made it happen the day I returned home.

On that note: In Year 3, I stopped killing my own abundance. Since I was a teen, I've noticed that abundance in any area of my life would come and go in waves that I couldn't control. I'd have seasons of success with money, sex, friendships, etc. - but that abundance was always followed by another season of lack and scarcity. To call it 'luck' would be dismissing my capacity to influence it - it was abundance. This year, I had a simple, profound realization: "What if I could cultivate abundance?" As it turns out, a better question is: “How can I quit fucking up my own abundance, so I can keep this up all the time?”

To cultivate abundance in my career, I had to get rid of oneitis for any one job. Being attached to anything so much that I'm afraid to lose it, that's onitis, and I've had it for jobs, homes, friends and circumstances. To cultivate abundance, my focus had to be on me and my options first - which was impossible to do when I'd placed a single job on a pedestal. Cultivating abundance in my career means I'm constantly taking action to put myself in front of those opportunities; I'm able to notice them because I'm not fixated on the source of my onitis. And cultivating abundance means that I've been disciplined and practiced to take advantage of the opportunity when it presents itself. And because I'm actually independent of any one outcome, I'm not afraid to lose any of it.

Self-focus, awareness of options, no fear of loss. Taking action to be in front of those opportunities, discipline and preparation to take advantage of them. The same rules seem to apply to abundance in any area - careers and side hustles, friends and social lives, wives and plates. I think, talk and act with authenticity when I have options. Boldness comes naturally when I'm not battling a fear of loss. And in year 3, I learned that abundance has a lot more to do with me and my mindset than I realized.

I learned that my mindset was limiting my vision. Like a prisoner dreams of a larger window, my aspirations were small and limited by my mindset. Instead of another job to pay more bills, what I really wanted was freedom from a boss. I didn't desire only sex or peace in my marriage, I want the companionship of a sweet woman I love. Instead of chasing friends and status, what I really wanted was to become a fully actualized man. I don't want a longer chain - take the shackles off my feet so I can dance.

Instead of deodorant, I used baking soda all year. That's not a metaphor or anything, it just works really well and doesn’t stick to my balls.

In Year 3, I realized I can do anything for 90 days. And when it gets worse, anything for 180 long-ass days. Crawling through five hundred yards of shit and finally emerging, I didn't run for the first field of daisies I could find. Instead, I doubled down and took on the next river of shit with freedom on the other side.

I started a better Fuck You fund this year. For too long I made the mistake of putting my household budget above my own needs - never realizing I should have been able to fund both without compromise.

In Year 3, I learned that I'm going to be polarizing because I'm being authentic. Attraction or repulsion are the only acceptable outcomes - I'm intentionally not going to hang out in the middle. I had to be okay if my authentic actions pushed some people away. Authenticity is more important than popularity, and I’m learning that’s as true with my wife and kids as it is in the office. I had to practice saying “No”, without any gentle padding words.

In Year 3, I started thinking more about my future than my past. I used to think about my future only when I was dreaming of hitting the lottery; I’d think about my past to ruminate on things I wished I could change, or to plot revenge against those who I blamed. It’s been a subtle change, but now I dream about my own future. What can I accomplish if I don’t give up? The only way I lose is by giving up completely. What types of things do I see when I envision my future? I get to judge what that success looks like. What is the ROI of Barracuda, and what do I need to give him to make him a success? These plans eventually shape reality.
In Year 3, I spent more time being content in spite of my circumstances, choosing to be happy and grateful instead of waiting for outside forces to make me feel a certain way. My gratitude enables my patience for my kids, wife, and the long-term willpower to have patience for my own plans. From this place, I’m much more confident in choosing the things that I want to include in my life for the right reasons.

I ain’t shit yet, and that’s okay. Year 3 of MRP was the best year of my life, and next year is going to be even better.
Starting a little early, Welcome Rollo Tomassi Everyone!

Famed marriage therapist John Gottman and wife: The Good, the Bad and the Ugly
by RedPillCoach | February 22, 2018 | Link

I am completing my BCC (Board Certified Coaching) specialization in Life and Relationship Coaching with a top school in the International Coaching Federation and am studying the works of John Gottman, best-selling marriage therapist through a certified Red Pill lens. I have completed both “The 7 principles of making marriage work” and “The man’s guide to women.”

Let me express my extreme disappointment. While he offers a number of improvements over traditional marriage therapy and spends time rightly dissecting the failures of therapy, his Blue Pill conditioning and no doubt his co-author and oneitis wife for life ultimately overwhelms his work, making him miss critical pieces of the puzzle.

First THE GOOD. Gottman has some good ideas and correctly identifies the problems with traditional marriage counseling but unfortunately, he offers an insufficient solution with gaping empty spaces the size of supermassive black holes.

Trad-Counseling is all about “COMMUNICATION” and “CONFLICT MAINTENANCE” and Gottman points out that in traditional marriage counseling you will learn how to talk and talk and talk and talk. Then you will learn how to “argue effectively” and to practice “active listening.” That is, you sit their and pay attention while your wife screams at you. Your job is to SHUT UP AND LISTEN and then reflect back your wife’s pain until she understands that you care about her and she feels “safe.” (I just puked in my mouth).

Gottman points out that, surprisingly, this strategy works less than half the time. In fact, most couples are made WORSE by this type of marriage counseling!! Yes, we know!

Gottman managed to singlehandedly improve counseling success when he figured out the Four Horsemen of the Divorce Apocalypse which are detailed in my previous post and which are: Criticism, Contempt, Defensiveness and Stonewalling.

Couples who have 1 or more of these as a regular part of the relationship do very poorly and are at extremely high risk for divorce. Gottman claims that he can predict with 71% accuracy whether a couple will divorce in the next 5 years after a simple 15- minute conversation simply by watching for verbal and nonverbal cues for signs of the 4 horsemen: Contempt, Criticism, Defensiveness, and Stonewalling.

Gottman systematized it even better and added the concepts of “flooding” and “failed repair attempts” to the 4 Horseman. He also added “harsh startups” (being a bitch and a cunt from the beginning) and negative memories (focusing on the bad things that happened instead of the good) to complete his predictive method. Flooding occurs when your sympathetic nervous system activates while having a discussion with the wife. That is, you get nervous, increased heart rate, sweating etc etc. Flooding means that YOUR WIFE activates the fight or flight instinct in you. This is not good.

Finally, there are “Failed Repair Attempts” which occur when one party tries to defuse the problem with a joke or some other way and the other party interprets the “Repair Attempt” the wrong way. This is also not good. A big subset of couples have learned to control the horses using “Repairs.” However, Couples who “flood” and do poorly with “repair attempts” AND have the 4 Horseman AND remember their past less than fondly AND start out in default bitch mode with each other are very likely to have a failed marriage.

In short, Gottman can predict 91% of the time who is going to stay married and who will be divorced in 5 years using the following major criteria. Let me analyze them one at a time:

1. Flooding (nervous, pulse pounding response to your spouse and not in a good way);

Gottman solution: Breathe

MRP SOLUTION: Give less fucks. Read the Stoics.

   2. Failed Repair Attempts (Somebody tries to defuse it and the other whines you are not taking me seriously).

Gottman Solution: Educate the couple

MRP SOLUTION: We have good success teaching the men to not take it personally and to get over it but not so good with women. However, if the man doesn't get butthurt and takes charge of the conversation the woman can't do to much damage.

And;

3. The 4 Horseman,

- Contempt:

Gottman Solution: Imagine your wife as a strong-independent woman worthy of respect (Basically Cognitive Restructuring, STOP thinking about her like that!)

MRP SOLUTION: Become a man who is not contemptible. If your wife is contemptible then get a new wife or learn to appreciate her for her feminine charm rather than her pontificates on religion and politics.

- Criticism:

GOTTMAN SOLUTION: Stop it.

MRP SOLUTION: From the wife- IGNORE, it's a shit test. Nothing to talk about. Shred it like toilet paper. From you: Stop! Does a good leader spend his time whining and criticizing?
-Defensiveness:

GOTTMAN SOLUTION: Stop blaming the partner. Defensiveness is just externalization although if it is a woman being defensive it must mean the husband is attacking her.

MRP SOLUTION: Don't be a bitch. If the wife is Defensive THIS IS A COMFORT TEST. Provide comfort and stop attacking.

and Stonewalling

GOTTMAN SOLUTION: Primarily men stonewall so it must be bad. Stop it. Even though "talking" doesn't work you must talk.

MRP SOLUTION: Use Stonewalling to ACTIVELY PUNISH your wife for bad behavior. Manage the conflict by periodically offering an olive branch and realize that Stonewalling is very aversive to women. They hate it when their complaints are ignored. Stonewalling can gravitate quickly to "checking out" so be very very careful when using this.

Let me summarize Gottman's “Good” ideas: First, trad-therapy has almost no success teaching the whole talk, talk, talk thing along with a bit of strategy to avoid getting into an emotional fight (aka “pass her shit tests”). Second, therapy improved when therapists offered the advice to “look for the good” rather than assuming the bad (because this improves the odds that a “Repair Attempt” will succeed rather than fail. In other words, talk, talk, talk didn’t work so they added the advice to avoid being a total cunt to your partner and that seemed to work a bit better.

Now for the Bad. Gottman watched married couples over a 40 year period and in some ways did the exact opposite of MRP. Gottman figured out what successful couples do and then assumes that teaching not successful couples how to do that will help them to be successful. On MRP we took the NOT successful couples and figured out strategies to move them towards the man’s definition of success. Alas, Gottman is far more concerned with the woman’s idea of success.

Like almost all “counselors” he views men and women as totally interchangeable if it requires the MAN to change but completely immutable if it requires the woman to change. They are only interchangeable to the feminine, NEVER to the masculine. See if you can identify the pattern:

On the issue of SEX, he repeatedly claims that women need lots of hugs and touching and “friendship” in order to “feel safe” to have sex but men need to completely change their biology. Men need to be like women and realize that the goal of sex is intimacy, not getting an orgasm. Women don’t need to orgasm to have a fulfilling sexual experience so obviously men don’t need it either! Men should be content to hold the wife and sweetly caress her and this will make her more likely to have sex later. Amazingly he goes further and suggest that the low drive partner- the wife- should be given ALL the power to decide when and where and how the couple will have sex. He even states that a husband should REWARD a wife who is denying him sex by being affectionate!
MRP SOLUTION: Activate the known attraction triggers in women. Become more masculine, lift, build an attractive body, lead, don’t get butthurt with Shit Tests or Sexual denials. Ultimately, if the wife won’t put out, you should have options so that it doesn’t matter if she want’s to play her silly, hurtful, and extremely harmful game all by herself. Also, Shut the Fuck Up about your pain (this is part of being masculine) but when your woman is behaving decently towards you take the time to actually PAY ATTENTION AND LISTEN TO HER for several minutes every day.

On the issue of HOUSEWORK his “solution” is different and so over the top and in your face I am still stunned. The answer is (he helpfully bolds and capitalizes it for us) THE MAN NEEDS TO DO MORE. In fact, he goes even further and says the amount of housework a man needs to do DEPENDS ON THE WIFE. If SHE FEELS you need to do more then you need to do more. I need a drink after puking in my mouth twice now.

MRP SOLUTION: Lead! Lead your home, your house, and your wife and your family. If work needs to be done then fucking do it. It is your house and your wife, not the other way around.

On the issue of IN-LAWS, his “solution” is ALWAYS TAKE THE SIDE OF THE WIFE AGAINST YOUR MOTHER. No word on whether the wife is supposed to take the husbands side with her mother but I can guess how he would advise couples. Ultimately the wife decides.

MRP SOLUTION: You are the man and while it is true that publicly you want to take your wife’s side most of the time, this depends on whether the wife is actually right. A strong Red Pill man would lay down the law with both women in his life. You two need to get along etc. A RP man is not going to play Captain Save-a-ho even if the ho is his wife and it is hardly “Red Pill” to side against your mother even when she is right.

On the issue of FINANCES and MONEY the solution is to compromise and make a list and a budget. Leadership? What is that? Women want to have sex with men who negotiate with them. Everybody knows that. Ultimately the wife decides.

MRP SOLUTION: Man leads, woman is the helpmeat. Budgets are great. Leadership is better.

On the issue of CHILDREN the solution is THE HUSBAND NEEDS TO BE MORE INVOLVED. MAYBE HE COULD GET AN ARTIFICIAL BOOB THAT HE STRAPS ON AND DELIVERS MILK. For the first time in two books and some 500 pages he actually suggests that the woman has some responsibility- she should back off and let the Dad play with the baby- however, she should carefully watch him to make sure he is not harming the baby. Mom decides.

MRP SOLUTION: Leadership does not include strapping on fake boobs. Good Gravy!

Finally, the Ugly. There is not a single word in either book devoted to “attraction” and this “world-renowned” therapist clearly has NO CLUE about the difference between making women wet and making women warm and comfortable. He thinks they are the same thing and tries to get men who have already been friend zoned by their wives to be MORE BETA and MORE weepy/emotional/emotive/talkative with a sex denying wife. He views pornography as “cheating” (unless the wife gives her royal permission) and while continually mentioning that the man has to do this, and that, and this, and that, and this, the only time in two full books he instructed the woman to do something was telling her to “let” the dad be a father but then spends almost twice as much ink telling wives to watch carefully in case this horrid beast harms the child.

I appreciate the effort moving the ball understanding the dynamic of the 4 horseman, repair attempts and flooding but on balance I award you no points....and may God have mercy on your soul.
You've made it through CN1, Cliff Notes - Primary Pointers for Beginners...

So what happens next?

- You are prioritizing your needs. Always. Regardless of outcome. You have since learned how liberating this is. And how surprisingly easy it is. And how void-of-any-downside this is. You no longer feel guilty about your needs. You no longer barter for your needs. You no longer focus on someone else's needs. You no longer look at needs as anything other than something you own and are entitled too; you were born with them, they were anointed yours, and they are yours and yours alone. If you were prone to think of logic - which you now realize is often futile - you will appreciate how logical this really is - after all, you've been put on this planet earth for you, and only you, so why focus on anyone or anything else?

- At the same time you will come to realize that the world is not logical, that logic can only take you so far, that the world is full of chaos, disorder, and anarchy, and that you must be - or at least be comfortable rolling with - chaos, disorder, and anarchy - especially if you want more than to simply succeed, but instead, to thrive and to win. I get it, your slide rule gets your spreadsheet done, but there's more to life than your fucking spreadsheets.

- You are a demanding mother-fucker. You are bossing your wife around. You are even pushing her around, sexually. You will push her boundaries, sexually. She will surprise you - perhaps - and push your own. You won't (1) second-guess this, (2) over-think this, (3) wonder why she's doing this, (4) ask questions about her past sexuality, or (5) wonder - as so many of you assholes so regularly do - if she's [a] cheating, [b] thinking about cheating, [c] contemplating cheating, [d] analyzing cheating, [e] looking at photos of nude men, [f] dreaming of cock, [g] browsing plenty of fish, [h] dialing hook-up numbers at the back of the times, or the like - but instead - you will simply enjoy it. E-N-J-O-Y. There's no "wondering," "speculating," or "worrying" in enjoy.

- You might even realize that the dude who wrote - last week - in this same sub - that you can't have as much passion twenty years into a relationship - or 15 in my case - as you could at the beginning - might possibly be wrong - and that some people can actually have more - way more. It's weird, perhaps, but it's true. I wouldn't have believed it myself.
At the same time, you will stop focusing on your wife anyway and instead focus elsewhere, perhaps even too much, reminding you occasionally not to get your dumbass back in this same position again, and reminding you further, maybe, that you were prone to ignoring her in the first place and, hey, look where that got you. Your shit is so together, now, that all you need is the brief reminder and nothing more. While perhaps putting on a belt was hard for your prior, you are now juggling a hundred things, even a thousand, and prioritizing and executing and succeeding. So all you need is that one simple reminder and nothing more. No longer is the proverbial ship hurtling towards inevitable wreck on a dark and stormy night; instead, you simply adjust, you move, and you evolve.

Your body will be holy-fucking-shit hot. Even to you. Yes, you will be surprised by how hot your body is. You will think "damn, I used to envy a body like this on the cover of a magazine like that" and then one day you will catch your reflection in the mirror, or the passing pane of a bus stop, or in the window of a nearby parked car, and you will think "holy shit." You might instinctively want to think lots of other things but you are, simply, amazed. Stunned even. This is perhaps the hundredth time you've had such a thought, but this time it hits you hard.

If you've been thinking things like "holy shit" then you will start thinking even crazier things, like "look how fucking muscular my neck is and how good I look wearing v-collars - not dumbass musclebound meathead asshole v-collars down to your waist - but cool v-collars that you'd see on a part-time model sunbathing in Formentera on a warm summer's day."

Above all, though, you won't fucking think "damn, if only"...

"If only I'd done this sooner."
"If only I'd done that sooner."
"If only."
"If."
Fuck that sailor. Even if you're not a sailor, like stony was, fuck that.

Speaking of which, you stop catastrophizing in general. Yah, that's a word. And a behavior. Sure those reactionary behaviors were helpful once when you lived in fear for your life each day because a sabre tooth tiger had been hunting your tribe since you left eastern Mongolia, but shit dude, they're not so helpful today just because your TPS reports aren't ready.

Back to the v-neck above, you will occasionally think "damn, I've become shallow and I am focused on looks and muscles and veins and protein powder and creatine and testosterone and my neck" and that will only last a minute - and those minutes will become even smaller over time - turning into mini-minutes - and you'll think "fuck you asshole of course you are hot and of course your neck looks good and right now I have the hottest neck amongst this sea of collared-shirt-wearing, not-so-good-neck-showing assholes, and you know what, that's the goddamn real way of the world and that's my reality and that's the way it should be and forever will be."

- And your wife, whose past boyfriend was a bodybuilder, whom she injected in the ass on the regular, well, she is insanely hot over your body. My body. Shit, how'd my wife get into this. Well, we'll give her one entry and that's it. My body makes her wet.

- Oh, and since the wife got one mention I have to point out how you won't think "wow, do I make her as wet as her hot, bodybuilding ex-boyfriend?" You won't think that because you're neither (1) an asshole, nor (2) an inbred west virginia coal miner, nor (3) an anemic homosexual dumbass who doesn't know his ass from his elbow, nor are you (4) a douchebag who knows by heart the lines of every rick and morty show and where all the loot is hidden in fortnite... fuck you.

- If you have struggled with X, or Y, or Z, then you will have conquered those struggles. Why? Because you have finally recognized, months, maybe years ago, that those struggles, perhaps struggles with addiction, were defining you, and maybe they were beating you down, and maybe they were even defeating you until that day you chose to win, to win it all, to win at all costs, and let nothing defeat you. That thing you want, to be the best man you can be, it is your new mission, or maybe it was always your mission, but now you're like the bionic man who can beat anyone and anything, even the bionic sasquatch, so you have a bionic mission. Just remember, though, your mission is but a part of your larger vision, and your vision is the most important of all. It took you years, but you finally figured that out.

- You will write a post like this and for a brief moment you will think of the dumbass blue pill - stupidest phrase ever - next to red pill - assholes who will look at this post and criticize, and point out how pathetic you are, and they'll have lots of valid and logical and understandable reasons why - and you will realize that many men thinking that would love a day in your shoes and many women would love more - even if, of course, they cannot admit that and never will 'till their dying days - even if, further, they can't even appreciate the error of their ways because they have not traveled along the path you have traveled - they have not scaled the mountain you have scaled - and they have not arrived at the promised land - a land that - with jaded eyes and a clouded heart - you yourself did not believe in when simply putting one foot in front of the other so long ago.

- You will find within you the mastery of your mind, that beguiling beast of a creature that has martyred you for years. You will find satisfaction. You will find peace. You will learn to conquer your mind and understand that it is but one part amongst many, a piece of a larger whole, and you may even learn to turn down the noise, and tune the radio to one station instead of listening to them all at the same time, drowning out your mission and your vision with so much rumbling in the background.

- But you will not be satisfied with that peace because you are chasing something larger, something fleeting, something running faster than your own abilities to harness it. But you will chase it down and defeat it - and that is the next big thing, the next new adventure, and the next world to conquer.

p.s. This is real. No homo, homo.

p.p.s. One last point, for advanced³ - next chapter, next year - which this in some ways already is - understanding that I rode the expedited route, sort of like the crazy train:

You fear nothing. You fear no one. You live for yourself. You conquered that one last thing that challenged you - anhedonia - and you suspect it took nothing more than an increase in testosterone. Real anhedonia. Real adrenal fatigue. And real - and insane - results. All with a little injection. Of course that came after you conquered your early death itself, which took a little longer and was a little harder. But did result in what you were looking for. Shit.

You will approach any woman at any time. You will defend yourself and your family under any and all circumstances. You will not put up with shit, ever, while remaining cognizant of the craziness in the hearts and minds of men. You will beat your opponents, you will catchup to those who have lapped you, you will want it more than anyone else, whatever that "it" may be.

You actually believe all this crazy shit above.

But, balancing the scales, you look back and realize "I've conquered so much, so often, so hard, and so furiously" and wonder "what more is there to conquer" and you'll go fucking find it and you'll do it and in the process you'll do her and you'll do her a lot.

(Shit, she showed up again. Well, I have to remember my audience.)

p.p.p.s. If you don't like my post, go fuck yourself and regret your behavior after - keeping in mind that I curse you to a life of mediocrity and servitude. Besides, if you really don't like my post then I bet even your kids don't respect you. And, your parents are not proud of you. Plus, your boss is gonna give that raise to the other dude, even worse the intern. As for your TPS reports, well, fuck you, they suck. No one would ever create an entire television series around your shitty reports. You probably like golf instead of football. And in the world of golf you are more like that asian girl than Tiger Woods, asshole.
Deconditioning the wife who is disgusted at your touch
- 10 Levels of Kino
by Red-Curious | October 12, 2017 | Link

This post is not for the vets or people whose wives actually like sex when it happens. Some women are legitimately psychologically conditioned (by you) to be disgusted at the thought of any physical contact with you. This post is for you guys. Her reaction isn't just because you're a fat slob and she's afraid of getting lost in your rolls. It happens even to in-shape men. Primary cause? Being butthurt when sex doesn't go your way.

There was a time a few years back when I tried to initiate sex with my wife and it went horribly. Despite trying to go along with it, she gave enough subtle clues that I stopped and asked what was going on. "I'm just not attracted to you. You're too fat and the thought of having sex right now is really disgusting." She wasn't saying it in a mean way - she was just being honest, but you'd better believe that destroyed me inside. These "Ick! What's he doing?!?" reactions had crept in not just during initiating sex, but any time I tried to touch her.

Why would holding her hand make her recoil? She learned over time that physical touch = "He wants sex." Because she thought sex with me was gross, that meant physical touch from me was gross too. I lived in this for 7 years with several periods of 6+ months with no sex at all, the longest being 18 months. That said, THERE IS HOPE!

PREREQUISITES

I'm not an idiot. At my worst, I weighed 275lbs. No matter how hard I tried, there's no way I was ever going to convince her that physical touch with an obese man would be desirable. Don't kid yourself on that point either. That said, to turn things around, I didn't have to be a male model either. Once you're in pretty good physical shape, you can begin your journey toward deconditioning the psychological scars you'd left behind on your spouse. "Pretty good physical shape" probably means both benching 185 and having under 20% body fat. These are incredibly easy benchmarks to hit. They are not the end of your physical fitness journey by any means, but they are prerequisites before starting this process. Try doing this before then and it may backfire. Don't say I didn't warn you.

It took me [EDITED] less than 2 4 months to go from 275 at 29% body fat down to 18% body fat and another 2 months to drop to 15% - and my bench went up from 160 (having not lifted in 5+ years) to 225 in only 2 months. That's nothing. You can do it. 2 more months in and I'm maxing the bench at 285 and at 15% BF.

The reason you need both is because just as much as 'fat' is unattractive, so is 'scrawny.' Don't be either.
LEVELS OF KINO

Anyway, once you've got a moderately acceptable body, here's the path I followed that healed the psychological scars I had given my wife about physical touch. She still has psychological scars from other people about sex itself, but that's a different story - my touch is now a source of pleasure to her - something to be desired and that she longs for, not something to be disgusted at.

LEVEL 1: Start by small acts of physical touch. Put your arm around her shoulder while watching TV. When asking her a quick question, put your hand on her upper-arm. When driving, pat or rub her thigh periodically. Most women receive it very well if you come up behind them while they're doing something and wrap your arms around them, sometimes even snuggling into their neck or kissing them on the neck. DO THIS ONLY AT TIMES THAT SEX WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE.

- Don't do anything more than this for 2 weeks unless she initiates [remember, this is geared toward overcoming psychological conditioning, not just getting sex]. If she initiates: NEVER TURN HER DOWN. EVER! If you reject her, you're training her that initiating with you = pain (incidentally, the same thing she trained me to believe, which is why I had given up on initiating for long periods of time). Even if she does initiate, don't skip any steps. After engaging in whatever activity she initiated with (making out, sex, holding hands, whatever), go right back to this path as if she had never initiated. Don't take it as an excuse to skip ahead. I tried skipping ahead at one point due to positive reactions and escalation from her making me think I was ready for the next level ahead and it backfired ... had to start over from scratch.

LEVEL 2: Start touching her out of a normal context, but still in relatively innocuous ways. Maybe you hold hands in public, but now you're going to hold her hand while sitting on your couch. Maybe you used to rub her leg in the car with a short smile, and now you're going to rub her leg while you're eating dinner. Again: DO THIS ONLY AT TIMES THAT SEX WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE. This phase lasts another 2 weeks (psychological reconditioning takes time).

LEVEL 3: Implement the 10-second kiss. As above, during some time when sex would be impossible (ex. when you're leaving for work), instead of your normal peck on the cheek or lips, hold it and keep the kiss going for 10 seconds. For the first few attempts, she might pull away - don't force it, but put your hand on her cheek or the back of her neck if it helps encourage her to hold it (don't tell her what you're doing, though - just enjoy it for as long as it lasts). If you can only get her to 2 seconds, so be it. Eventually she'll get to 5, then 8, then 10. Once you have her at 10 seconds, do this at least once a day - go longer if you feel like it and she's willing. When you've got 10 seconds for 2 weeks, you're ready to proceed.

LEVEL 4: Add peripheral touching during the 10-second kisses. Now you're not just making out briefly or holding her head, you're putting your hands on her waist, maybe sliding them very slightly under her shirt - not trying to cop a feel of her chest, just trying to engage skin to skin on a part of her body that she doesn't normally feel skin contact (i.e. hands, face, legs, feet don't count - abs, butt, hamstring, back - live there). Do this for another 2 weeks - again, at times when sex is impossible.

- At this point you should never be touching her when you're alone in a room together with no other time commitments. The reason for this is because you need context (rather than you verbally) to explain to her that the touching is not associated with sex - it's just touching. That way she can actually enjoy it and not be afraid you're trying to initiate sex with her, which she is still psychologically conditioned to think is gross. At this point, you're only trying to de-grossify physical touch itself. By de-grossifying touch, you'll be 75% of the way toward de-grossifying sex as well. So, up to now you've only been touching when in the car, about to head out to work or an appointment or when she's about to leave, when you have friends over, when the kids are up and walking around, etc.

- If she's not responding well, camp out here. Backtrack if you need to. She should be responding positively before you move from one phase to the next.

LEVEL 5: If she is responding well, the next step is tricky: engage in overtly sexual behavior at times that sex is impossible, but where privacy exists. For example, when the kids are up and playing or when you're about to walk out the door - initiate the 10-second kiss and put your hands on her front torso/belly like before, but this time slide the tips of your fingers just beneath the waist line of her pants. It should be just enough to make it clear you're going further than before, but that you're not trying to initiate sex either. If your whole hand is down her pants, you've gone too far.

Your directive here is to show her your desire without having to say it - to make her feel wanted rather than just being told she's wanted ... but to do this with a lingering ellipse "... to be continued." That sense of mystery is very attractive. "What would have happened if only ___ weren't standing in the way?" If she doesn't look for the sequel, at this point don't bring it up. If she initiates, wanting to finish what you started, go for it! Again, NEVER REJECT HER!! But at the same time, your goal here is not to get sex; it's to recondition her psychology about physical touch. If she thinks you're doing this just to get sex, that will undermine your greater goal. But if she herself wants sex, that's fine and you're free to engage.

LEVEL 6: Once you're able to accomplish level 5 in convenient settings and it's well-received (regardless of whether she asks to see the sequel), start doing it at inconvenient times. If you have company over for a meal, follow her into the pantry when she goes to get some food and start the 10-second kiss. She'll immediately backlash, but you continue. If she gives a hard no the second time, stop. If it's more an "I'm too embarrassed, what if we get caught?" with a blush, keep going. This is much easier when there's no one else around, but more exciting with the company example. Once the 10-second kiss lands, follow the same pattern as above - hands on torso, slide fingers slightly past the pants line. Let this phase percolate for a while.
People who don't understand the nature of the wife who is psychologically conditioned to be disgusted by physical touch won't understand this and will give me heat, but let me repeat: DO NOT escalate to sex yourself. If she does, go for it ... but always return to the plan right where you left off and don't skip any steps just because you think she's over her issues now.

LEVEL 7: By now you're ready for actual initiation at convenient times. Wait until there's a night when the kids are in bed, no major appointments in the morning, and no major life-stressors getting in the way. Plant your 10-second kiss, hand on her abs, fingers playing underneath her pants-line, then just pull her in close and say, "I want you." Her response doesn't matter unless it's a hard no. Your second phrase is always the same: "I seriously have to have you right now." If she does give you a hard no, respect it, smile back and say, "No worries, I'm not going to make you do anything you don't want to do," and then kiss her on the forehead to show her that you're not upset with her for rejecting you. Give her a long hug, make out for a few seconds - whatever you have to do to convince her that you're really okay with her rejection.

- Usually the hard no at your initiation in this phase is because she can't tell if you're still emotionally insecure about your sex life or not. If you are emotionally insecure and show it, she'll think that everything these past couple months has all been an act and it's not the real you. Because she doesn't want to get duped, you've then just lost a month of progress and she's once again convinced that any time sex is initiated it's a source of pain - don't reaffirm that conditioning you're trying to break. If you're not emotionally insecure about it, though, and you can convince her that you are truly okay with her rejection, then this will advance your cause of deconditioning the negative reaction to sexual initiation. She will realize that whether she wants sex or not, you're not going to blow up at her, so she can be free to express herself without fear of fostering resentment between the two of you. The key here: don't be resentful! That's on you. This is the beginning of deconditioning her negative psychological disposition toward sex even beyond physical touch on its own.

LEVEL 8: If she accepts your initiation, you actually have to be good at sex. It's got to be a mutual thing. If you're just trying to please her all the time and not interested in making her please you, this communicates that all that pent-up desire you've been communicating toward her is really fake - it's still so weak that you're repressing it and don't really need to let it out. But if you're purely acting on your own desire and not cultivating her arousal and climax (which is actually better for her than the first mistake), she's going to start seeing you as selfish and it'll affect other areas of your life, although she may want to keep trying in the hope that you'll learn how to please her now that you're actually showing desire for her. Ideally, you want to be balancing between your desire and hers. Personally, it works well for me that I just do whatever I want to do to her until I'm ready to peak, then stop myself and focus on her until I can calm down a bit, then I go at it for myself again until I'm about to blow ... then calm down again while I ramp her up. This both make her feel the full weight of my desire for her while not feeling neglected either - and that's the biggest turn-on for many women.

LEVEL 9: Once she's responding to initiations at convenient times 80%+, then move on to initiating even at inconvenient times, at your discretion and with wisdom. If she just got out of surgery, that's inconvenient, but wisdom says to maintain restraint, so restrain yourself. But if it's inconvenient because she's tired or has a headache or there's company in the room down the hall or there's an important meeting in the morning - be considerate, but don't back down. First, show her that you want her so bad that you'll overcome your own inconveniences to have her (i.e. when you're the one with the early appointment, or you're sore from working out, etc.). After that, work toward letting your desire for her overpower her inconveniences too. I'm still working on this part of the process, but I've noticed that when I am successful here, the sex is much better than when it's convenient or when overcoming one of my own conveniences. This is probably for two reasons: (1) if she's going to do it at an inconvenient time, she wants to make it worth it, but more importantly, (2) because you're showing her that she's so desirable that you're willing to fight through obstacles she used to put in your way, and that makes her feel really, really, really good inside. You have now become the prince who has fought the dragon and won. Just be cautious for spotting the hard no when it comes. Don't be an idiot.

LEVEL 10: By now your physical touch should be an expected part of daily routine and something she legitimately desires. You can touch her in pretty much any way at any time and she'll enjoy it, although circumstance may still dictate her reaction from time to time. Putting your hand down her pants while you're at a coffee shop with some friends probably won't go over well. But do the same thing at a dark theater and who knows ... that former recoil may now turn into the bashful, "We might get caught!" which might turn into, "OMG, it's worth the risk." I was here at one point very early in my marriage, but long since lost it. So, I know she has the capacity to be there - I'm just trying to get it back.

All of this said, I have noticed that once my wife disassociated my physical touch from an expectation of sex, she became far more receptive toward my physical touch and accepted and enjoyed it freely. Incidentally, her enjoyment of my physical touch then starts to make her aroused, so she ends up wanting sex anyway - something that could only happen if she genuinely believed I wasn't trying to lead her own that road. At some point, that has since evolved even further to the point where she welcomes overt initiation - she now wants to know that I'm leading her toward sex. But don't miss that important disassociative phase, which is crucial in getting there.

In all of this, just remember to be patient. This whole process took me about 3 months with my wife - and I had the benefit of being in shape before it started working for me. Good luck.
The Evolution of a Low Sex Marriage Male on Reddit
by luckie_duckie | January 10, 2017 | Link

Purpose:

It is my intention to share my personal experiences with the community in hopes others that come from a similar path can find solace in MRP and specifically /u/BluepillProfessor's book "Saving a Low Sex Marriage". No one asked me to write this and my intention is not to blindly "plug" his book. Instead I feel like I owe the MRP community but more specifically those stuck in all the subs relating to dead bedrooms, an opportunity to see my story and either accept or deny the parallels within their own experiences.

Background:

Today I am a 33 year old man with two children. My wife and I met in college, we were each other’s first and only PIV sexual partners. When my wife met me in college, I had my shit together, at 21 I was running two companies while working on a degree. I was the classic "internet kid" story of a simple idea that turned into a fortune overnight. I played sports and worked out. For much of my life I had ignored women, I saw them as too much trouble, too much effort. My entire childhood was spent learning how to program, design, and create, I missed out on the enticement of the opposite sex. Don't get me wrong, the feels were there, I just didn't put any effort into it. I was a "nice guy" I was raised in a household where women were seen as equals and they were expected to do anything a man could short of physical lifting. I wanted a women to treat as my princess/queen to be raised up on that pedestal and to be worshiped. My wife changed this all for me, she became my sexual vixen, sex was amazing and she kept the variety going. We had sex in public places, we experimented with positions and fantasies, it was an amazing experience. This is where my story and most HLM (High-Libido Men) start to merge.

Story:

After about 4 years of dating and great sex, we got engaged. The sex immediately dropped off. My simple brain attempted to justify this with things that were wrong with her, ways I could "help" her through whatever issue was preventing her from wanting to have sex. I loved her, and why should a little lack of sex now effect our union? After the ceremony, sex was almost non existent, maybe once a month. At this point in the relationship, most of us go through a period of waxing/waning on our self-loathing, then we have "the talk" with our wives, maybe something comes of it, but ultimately those talks either lead to some really shitty obligation sex, or her just despising you more. So what is a classic redditor to do when he has no one left to turn to, because most likely you don't have a lot of in-person friends to turn to? You go to /r/sex and you start reading and posting.

Sometimes I think /r/sex is made up of a bunch of teens that just watch porn and think every woman wants to go from dinner to being fucked hard in the ass. Posts in here regarding this type of issue typically result in either "leave her" or "hit the gym and better yourself" advice. There really isn't a whole lot of substantive communication that goes on over there to assist this type of issue. Typically you will be referred to /r/relationship_advice and/or /r/deadbedrooms. My journey just made me more jealous of those who seemed to be having an inhumane amount of sex.

This went on for a few years, the sex ebbed and flowed as it relates to frequency, until one moment. We decided to have children, I know, face-palm. However this was my first real view of what women were capable of, given the right emotional state. I will tell you, I have never had sex in my life up until that point that rivaled the pure passion that comes with baby-making sex. My wife was not as prudish as many, the sex did not cut off immediately after she became pregnant, but as expected it did recede dramatically. Mentally, I left this experience knowing that enticing these feelings caused my wife to turn in to a complete sexual animal. I had no idea yet that this was possible to induce and maintain.

As the years roll forward and I consume numerous posts from /r/sex; /r/relationship_advice; and /r/deadbedrooms I attempt to implement what I have read and learned. I had "the talk" with my wife on a yearly/semi-yearly basis. The results of these talks ranged from her not knowing why she just "wasn't into it anymore" to her saying things I could do to change. It was always things for me to change, which made me angry as I perceived this as our, or even more likely, her, problem. I worked through this list, and pay very close attention to this list:

- Be more kind
- Be more romantic
- Pamper her
- Workout
- Help out with the kids
- Do projects around the house (like fixing a door frame)

The problem is, I worked through the things that were easy for me to do first, the things that unfortunately based on MRP don't create "the tingles". So now my son is 2 years old and I was getting fed up with my dead-bedroom. I had tried a number of things on her list and tried making small changes but nothing was working. So like any man stuck in the 21st century I did what women told me they wanted, my new year's resolution was to pamper my wife for the next year. If nothing changed, I was done. I had purchased her an expensive piece of jewelry about once every other month, got her massages, pampering sessions at spas, etc. I brought her home flowers once a week, I worked on picking up the house and removing some of the home burden on her even though she is a stay-at-home-mom and I am the provider. I made it through those months and at the end, the result was the same. Infrequent and unadventurous sex. That is when I made my first post to /r/relationship_advice (https://www.reddit.com/r/relationship_advice/comments/2pksx3/30m_my_wife_26f_shows_littl e_interest_in_physical/). After making that post I took two major things out of it, first /r/deadbedrooms was where I belonged, and second I needed to just make myself the best version of myself I could. If my wife didn't want me, I was going to find someone out there that did, and I needed to be in great shape mentally and physically if I wanted to do that.

So after that post, my new, new years resolution was to say "fuck it" and just focus on myself. Now, let me say I wasn't unattractive by any means. I had certainly lost muscle mass from when we had first started dating but I wasn't too far off size wise from that body. I was always a bit of a reserved person which made me gravitate towards non-team sports as a kid, my obsession and what likely saved me from being a fat kid was my passion for climbing. So I found a local gym and I started re-igniting my passion for climbing which in turn was me working out. Anyone big into working out will realize my issue immediately in terms of the MRP advice and the direction I went. Climbing is for the most part a "bodyweight exercise", so what ends up happening is not that you build massive muscles, instead you become a shadow of yourself that is rock hard but visually unchanged unless the muscles are in use. This was a huge boost for my ego as my body went from flabby muscles to rock hard. While I was molding my body and shaping my mind, others took notice, I started getting hit on, people started to treat me differently than others. This was my second self-discovery into MRP. You can read my post into /r/deadbedrooms here (https://www.reddit.com/r/DeadBedrooms/comments/440nv9/positive_update_and_what_work ed_for_me/). My physical and mental "Frame" began to form into more of an Alpha and less of a Beta. Mind you, at this time RP and MRP are still wholly unknown to me. I still do not know who gilded my post, or who mentioned it to me, but somehow there was a very brief mention of "the pill that shall not be named".

Now, when I first stumbled into /r/TheRedPill I was taken back by the attitude that these people held towards women. A degrading, "I know you better than yourself" attitude where women just "need a good fucking to be put straight". As I reviewed the sidebar and the posts I made note of reading literature and even migrated into MRP, all the time making a notepad of links to go back to and books to read on the subject. I then proceeded to download every single book and load it onto my reader. There was one book I just couldn't locate online "Saving a Low Sex Marriage" so I skipped it, figuring if I really wanted to I could buy it in the future since I could not locate it anywhere else.

My first read was "No More Mr. Nice Guy" about a year ago, which helped me stop being the "Nice Guy" by avoiding (failing) her shit tests and creating "secret contracts". I didn't know it yet, but what I was doing is becoming more dominant, I saw it as being more decisive, more commanding of my opinion. For example, a situation that likely plays out in most households. Choosing where to eat for dinner, my wife is very indecisive about these kinds of things, but since I wanted her to be happy I wanted her to select where to go. I just started making decisions and sticking to them. If she struggled hard enough I would go where she wanted, but I made her start working against my decisions rather than making her make the decisions. Which looking back I realize how stupid I was to even consider this a valid strategy of letting her make the decision. After this book and what I saw it do and the tidbits I took away, I was hooked. I started working through my list of books, all the while taking studious notes of each book I read. "She Comes First", not really MRP but interesting none the less; "When I say No, I Feel Guilt"; "The Art of Seduction"; then, this is where I swallowed the proverbial pill, Daniel Rose's "Sex God Method".

So basically up until this point RP is a concept I see but to me it looks more like seduction techniques I would watch on some MTV reality TV show. "Sex God Method" changed my mentality, why might you ask? First, saw the parallels between the best sex my wife and I had ever had together and the DEVI technique. For example, the best sex I could recall was after a night of clubbing and hitting a strip club, where I needed to have her and commanded her in the bed. Recall, I was a "Nice Guy", I wanted to please her in the bedroom. "Sex God Method" made me realize a lot, particularly that it was my job to lead and drive the mind-blowing sex she required. I did this, I upped my D (ominance) like never before which essentially raised all the other levels at the same exact time resulting in the most mind blowing sex. I thought it was great, but what I didn't expect was the result. My wife was no longer that reserved woman, she was begging for more opportunities to get fucked. She would apologize to me if we didn't have sex that day for whatever reason. The excuses changed from "I am tired" or "My stomach hurts" to "I am so tired but I really want you to fuck me, can we do it in the morning?". So here I am 7 months ago with a wife who is essentially begging me to fuck her so badly that she is texting me nudes (something she never did before, and yes I asked), sending me suggestive messages, and grabbing me all the time. The tide has turned at this point, but I don't know exactly why.

I look for my next book to read, I decided I needed to take another look at MRP because something is happening here I just do not understand. Welcome /u/BluePillProfessor, I revisited his book on Amazon looking over the preview, listed in the stages of dread and the recommended books under each section. Noticing some of the books I read I was sold this guy had basically already done everything I was working on in terms of the book reports and aggregating information. Why re-invent the wheel, so I made the purchase and read his book. It was a very strange feeling, I was basically reading about myself, almost exactly what I had done. Notably /u/BluePillProfessor has some warnings and safe-guards that would have been very helpful, but I made it this far, and found I only needed to reach dread level 8 before my wife flipped the switch. If I had just picked up his book in the beginning I would have saved myself a ton of time and a ton of trial and error. I am not mad, I realize that in order to follow this plan it takes a ton of motivation and dedication, if you can do this you are an Alpha at heart. This isn't the key to your sexless marriage, this is the raw metal and a hammer, you must fabricate that key.

My Outcome:

After turning myself around, I am a better father, husband, businessman, and lover. My wife is more sexual than when I met her which is hard to imagine. For example, and I think this should be added to MRP in order to boost I(mmersion), I took my wife on a vacation without the kids so there were no external stressors. She was able to let loose without the I(mmersion) being broken, so my focus could be on DE as V(ariance) was being met simply by being on vacation. My wife found out that she is bisexual/curious and enjoys the touch, taste, and feel of a woman. Honestly I never thought this was ever on the table, but our relationship is so incredibly strong at this point that she feels comfortable bringing other women into our bedroom. In fact she has enjoyed the chase so much she now entices other couples play. Obviously I am still very cautious as I feel like a kid running around with a stick of lit dynamite. I just wanted to share my personal experience and the main point, that /u/BluePillProfessor should be required reading for any man about to get married.
How to fuck
by BluepillProfessor | July 28, 2017 | Link

This Post on TRP caught my attention. He describes a couple of hot dominant bedroom moves which I see it as a bit of SGM light for my brothers. I do think he overplayed the cold death lifeless body thing. Maybe he has a necrophelia kink because I like a warm, squirming body.

Anyway I think we can do better so I think guys posting on this thread should add one sexually dominant trick to this guys list for the crowd. This is mine:

From missionary rotate 45 degrees and lift her leg over your head (so you are scizzoring) while remaining deep inside. Now you are sideways and her remaining on the back. This is a variant of the "X-position" (which I REALLY wish I had known when my wife was pregnant).

The dominance part is when you lock your hands around her opposite shoulder. If the height is right, you can use her body to thrust her up and down (if not, hook her shoulders from underneath and behind). In addition to enabling maximum penetration she is pinned and completely helpless. However she can squirm nicely. If you let go of the tight grip you can use a free hand anywhere on the front of the body (MAJOR bonus points if you have a bullet vibrator in easy reach).

Edit:

Pics added by request:

Kama Sutra Position 224

Sexy Scizzors (the 3rd picture down).

In both pics you lock your hands around her left- opposite- shoulder). Note also the choking/hair pulling/nipple pinching possibilities as you have access to the entire front of her body. Just let your fingers do the walking.
All that we do in our lives is built of habits. Sometimes these habits are conscious, e.g., how we travel to work or how we style our hair. Often, they are not; how we inject tone into a conversation or how we stand in public.

Dr. Maxwell Maltz once described based on personal experience it takes "a minimum of about 21 days for an old mental image to dissolve and a new one to jell." This idea was published in 1960 in the book "Psycho-Cybernetics". The idea circulated and grew to the point it became common belief it had truth; an urban myth. A habit.

Identifying Habits

A habit is a settled tendency or usual manner of behavior. For those swallowing the RP, we can define habits in specific actions:

- Seeking the approval of others.
- Getting angry or upset when our wife doesn't fuck us.
- Being afraid to say "no".
- Creating covert contracts

Some of these habits we developed when we were children. Some of them came as we entered adulthood or marriage. Some of us may not even know because we had developed a habit to ignore the changes in our behavior or in others.

To identify our habits we must first make that exercise itself a habit. This is often tougher than it sounds. We can make a list of obvious shit right way:

1. STFU
2. Lift
3. Read

What about the complicated habits; the habits we don't immediately see?
1. Pessimism

2. Resentment

3. Laziness

These habits often hide deep within us because it makes up such a large portion of our mental model. Though I would exercise occasionally throughout my life, I developed the habit, and the acceptance, of being lazy. "Lift weights? Nah, I just ate a pizza. I'll start going to the gym Sunday since it's the start of a new week." Then it becomes a habit of just not thinking about it. Not recognizing a habit by definition is a habit.

James Clear, author of "Atomic Habits", identifies four stages of a habit:

1. Cue - The cue is a trigger to our brain that identifies the possibility of a reward. One example is when we receive a text message on our phone.

2. Craving - The trigger itself, or cue, has no affect without a desire for the reward; the craving. Do we want to know what the text message reads or not?

3. Response - The response to the craving is the actual habit. We hear the notification, we want to know what it is, so we read the message.

4. Reward - This is the end goal of the habit. We have made decisions in the last two phases that solidifies our habit. Are we happy with the reward of reading the message or not? We will modify our steps at each stage in order to maximize the reward.

For example, I get a dozen phone calls daily (cue). My craving for the call depends on who may be calling. My response is, if the number is not in my contacts, I ignore it. My reward is I don't have to listen to what likely is a spam phone call. Or, if the number is in my contacts, my response is to answer it. My reward is to talk to someone I enjoy talking to.

My wife takes this a step further; she has different tones depending on who sends a text message. Each tone, or cue, determines her actions in the next three stages. Both of us will make minor modifications to the cue and the craving and alter the response (habit) in order to maximize the reward. We don't really think about it, but we have developed these habits and we are constantly refining them.

Creating or Modifying Habits

If it doesn't take 21 days to build a habit, then what does it take? Once we've recognized the habits we want to change, how do we address them? How do we create new habits?

The first step is to actually identify the habit we wish to modify or create. The first habit most of us finding ourselves needing to change is shutting the fuck up. It sounds simple in premise. It seems to be the most complicated exercise.

As we read more about red pill principals we begin to learn other methods of verbal engagement; amused mastery (AM), agree and amplify (AA), and fogging (F - wait, no acronym).

Add on top of that when to apply each technique. Do I AA during a shit test? Or is it AA during a comfort test? I'M SO CONFUSED!

Slow down there, speed racer. You have yet to develop the habit.

As we recognize our bad habits and attempt to develop good habits, we may envision an end goal. If our wife wants to spar verbally we shoot that shit down appropriately, remain in our frame, and bring her back in. When we begin lifting we want to be built like Austin Baraki or Charles Poliquin. It is when we envision an end goal of this magnitude we often fail. We become overwhelmed. It seems complicated. You'll never get there! Information overload!!!

We must break these habits down into smaller habits. In Atomic Habits, we learn of Dave Brailsford, a cycling coach hired to - and succeeded in - bringing a winning atmosphere back to the perennial-losing British Cycling team.

"What made him different from previous coaches was his relentless commitment to a strategy that he referred to as 'the aggregation of marginal gains,' which was the philosophy of searching for a tiny margin of improvement in everything you do."

If we are thinking of mastering verbal confrontations with our wives, we can break it down simply into developing the habit of shutting the fuck up. To do this, we recognize the cue ("You're making that for dinner?"), crave the reward (holding frame), respond (STFU), and accept thy reward (frame held!).

It matters not that it takes 21 days or however long to develop the habit. What matters is we recognize it has in fact become a habit. It is when you sit down at night and contemplate the days events you realize, "Hey, my wife shit-tested me and I held frame. Milestone achieved!" Then we can move on to understanding AA and the other tactics.

This does not mean you should break down every goal into smaller goals and concentrate on one goal at a time. You're a fucking man! Act like it! You've begun lifting, right? You want to be big and strong and deadlift 500lbs? Yet, your scrawny ass can only do 150? Then make 155 your reward for this week. Hit the gym, nail the shit out of it, then set a new reward: 160 next week, and on and on.

Are you in a financial mess? Forget the load of debt. Break it down into smaller events, develop a habit of achieving each reward on a daily or weekly (or biweekly) basis, and knock that mother fucker out the park.
You already should have a list of the goals you wish to accomplish; your mission. Break these goals down into smaller goals. Break them down until they're so specific you can actually Put it in your calendar. Quantify it so that at the end of the period you can simply say "reward achieved" or "reward failed". Don't worry about if it is realistic or not. The core habit you are creating is the ability to modify habits accordingly. But, don't be cheap either. If you're DLing 150lbs don't you dare set 160lbs in four weeks as your goal or I and every other mother fucking RPer here will cyber-bitch-slap your ass like your mom should have.

What you don't want to do is have a list of penultimate goals and concentrate on only one child of one goal but rather one child from each goal. So, if you have five penultimate goals, you should have five smaller goals - habits - on a regular basis.

Remember, it is not just positive habits we are building. We are extinguishing negative habits. Identify the four stages: cue, craving, response and reward. Modify these stages and the response leads to which will change negative reward to a positive reward.

1% BETTER EVERY DAY

"When nothing seems to help, I go and look at a stonemason hammering away at his rock, perhaps a hundred times without as much as a crack showing in it. Yet at the hundred and first blow it will split in two, and I know it was not that last blow that did it, but all that had gone before."

Edit 2: Do not let your guard down with established, positive habits.
Divorced RP after 50
by Floaty_McBoatface | March 1, 2018 | Link

Since this forum seems to be mostly younger guys, I thought my perspective might be useful to some of the older MRPers. If the mods think it should go on askmrp or somewhere else, or just want to spike it, that's okay too, but I felt like I owed something to MRP after mostly lurking for a couple years. Hope it's useful to at least one man.

About me: Divorced six months, marriage was on the rocks long before that. I'm 54, average height, fit and muscular, handsome enough; highly literate professional, multilingual; reasonably well dressed; a veteran of my original nation's finest fighting force. I am an expat in a big European city where my language skills don't do me a huge amount of good. Joint custody (week-on/week-off) of my two kids, 8 and 10. Ex-wife lives nearby. I've been unemployed for a year, and prospects for a good job here are poor, because of my age and mediocre local language skills. I could easily improve my prospects simply by moving to one of several cities overseas. But my mission, to the extent that I have one, is my kids, and I can't bear the idea of being so far away from them.

I lift, and actually went back to squats and deadlifts after a few decades away after some encouragement from MRP. I play sports. That said, I have to take it easier than I used to because injury is always around the corner. As you age, your body doesn't respond the same way to exercise and injury; recovery time increases, a lifetime of accumulated strains and injuries haunts your days and nights with pain. Think about your future self just a little when you next feel like “working through” an injury that might cause permanent damage.

I've read the sidebar. If you haven't yet, do so, there's a lot of wisdom accumulated there, collective and otherwise. I would give anything to go back five years ago and learn the MRP basics. It might have saved my marriage, my family; maybe it will save yours.

The most helpful things for me were Robert Glover's “No More Mr. Nice Guy,” Mark Manson's book “Models,” and pretty much everything Rollo Tomassi has written. Indeed, Rollo and Chumplady were instrumental in me grasping that I had to end it with my ex-wife. Still I think because Rollo and a lot of manosphere writers have not reached late middle age, they don't yet understand the sexuality of the 50-plus woman. For example: A lot of these older gals have their hands full with shagging men in their 40s and younger (the guys who swipe “like” for every woman on Tinder). SMV calculations therefore look rather different than you might have expected.

An aside on the “truth” of Red Pill logic: One of my economics professors at university told me long ago that the value of a theory comes solely in its predictive power; if you can make accurate predictions using the theoretical guidelines, then it is “true” for practical purposes. TRP passed that test for me, unfortunately.

I discovered MRP a few years ago, after my ex-wife began having an affair and refused to talk about it, even though it was obvious to me – even without a smoking gun – that it was happening. Trust your gut, as they say. I was the proverbial drunk captain, once more or less RP, but worn down by years of going-along-to-get-along and accepting a lot of really stupid bluepill dogma. I'm getting back to myself, but it's been a rough and rocky road, and it's going to take a while yet.

Here are a few thoughts:

SAVE YOUR MARRIAGE, if you can. A middle-aged man can fall a long way and may never get back on his feet. As you are no doubt aware, the risk of all kinds of bad things – heart attacks, downward spiral into alcoholism, suicide, etc. – increases sharply for older divorced men. You probably love your wife, and I know you love your kids. Do everything within reason to save it; that means going all out to be the man your wife wants to be married to.

KNOW WHEN TO GIVE UP. I couldn't believe my ex-wife would actually destroy her kids' security for the schmuck she was seeing, and I hung on for two soul-destroying years, sacrificing my job, my self-respect and the respect of a lot of other people (including orbiting women who could have become lovers). You MUST set boundaries early and ruthlessly enforce them. Every time she crosses your red lines without consequences you decline further in her eyes. Never, never, never, never trust what she says; only what she does. I often read here that you have to be “willing to walk away.” No, you have to walk away.

YOUR MISSION COMES FIRST. I sacrificed my career for her (my higher-paying career) four times. Yes, four times. I can see you shaking your heads. I now believe that the timer started ticking the second time I did it. That was absolutely a mistake. Don't be like me.

DOES SHE HAVE TO SPELL IT OUT FOR YOU? If you find yourself constantly saying things like, “I don't understand why she...,” and “I can't believe that she...” - It's already over bro. You are in a fog because her words and her actions don't match. You don't understand because you don't WANT to understand. In my case, it was her constantly saying “I'm committed to saving this marriage, this family,” while lying about what she was up to with other guys. Lawyer up and salvage your life – NOW! Count yourself lucky that you caught it before you lost all self-respect.

POST-DIVORCE LIFE, particularly for people with a strong support network, will almost certainly be better than the living hell of a scorpion-vs.-tarantula marriage with a pathological liar. But getting out is only the first step. Part two is rebuilding. I lost half of my friends, my retirement plans, my pets, 50% of my time with my kids; I'm far from home without a job and can't leave if I am to stand by my kids. Aching loneliness and self-doubt come with the territory. When you “zero out,” though, you're at rock bottom, meaning you've got a firm place to build your new foundation. Life is way too short to waste this time. Limit the computer games, the drugs, the drunkeness. Get out. Lift. Learn.

MY BIGGEST SHOCK: My ex-wife paid absolutely no social penalty. Not one of her “friends” took her aside and said, “Hey, what the fuck are you doing, destroying your kids security?” No, even people who'd been quite distant rallied to her side. Even women who knew the whole story were not bothered by any of the shit she did. Somehow I doubt that's how it would have worked if it had been me wrecking my family (and the other guy's).

ALCOHOL: JBP said in one of his talks that something like one-third of men end up ruined by alcohol. I see it every time I go out in the faces at the bar. I don't want to see it in the mirror. One of my friends for a New Year's 2017 resolution vowed to have more non-drinking days than drinking days; he did it, and I'm trying to emulate that example.

DATING: I've had mixed results so far. I'm a naturally flirtatious, sweetly teasing sort of person, but my confidence was in tatters and my bitter one-itis and indecision are blindingly apparent to everyone. I've had a few short relationships, but none that I wanted to continue. Maybe that's for the best; probably the last thing I need is to plunge into something heavy without working out how I fucked up my marriage.

DATING APPS have made it so that the woman you're hitting on at the bar might be simply killing time talking to you while she waits to see if her date with any of those chads she connected with on Tinder is going to happen. And it came as a shock that when I have matched on dating apps the woman showed up 100% DTF, like they don't have time or bandwidth for anything more. Just a quick screening to ensure that I'm not Jack the Ripper. Not at all emotionally satisfying, but trying to adapt.

Final thought: No little girl ever thought at six years old, “I want to be a crack ho when I grow up.” None of you, as a kid, dreamed of becoming a drunk loser on skid row. A ruined life results from either a glitch in your psychological software, about which you can do nothing except pray; or, more likely, from a series of bad decisions that piles up over the years and leads you to a place that you'd never imagined going. Use what you learn here to stop that process of disintegration.
Why we don't talk about fight club
by InChargeMan | June 10, 2018 | Link

I saw some posts asking about sharing parts of their MRP journey with their wives.

Don't talk about fight club.

Women/people generally react poorly to the success or improvement of others. Whenever somebody succeeds at something while another person fails (or never tries at all) that person's failure must be justified in their own head, which is usually done by minimizing the success of others. Often the word "just" is involved.

"I could have done that if I just ...."

"Of course he is successful, he grew up ...."

"Anybody can do that if they just ...."

"They are just lucky"

Or my personal favorite: "I had that idea years ago"

So, regarding MRP, when you STFU and work to improve yourself, there will be no "just" to explain your improvements and changes. This begets respect and dread. You are a natural alpha that was hiding in sheep's clothing all these years, lucky her! Conversely, if you tell her about how you are following a TRUE ALPHA's plan for you, you are telling her that you are not now or ever a natural, you are merely pretending. Your progress will always be minimized, since you are just playing make believe or at best just a shadow of some greater man out there.

Furthermore, once you start forecasting all of your plans you are now under the microscope, the shot clock is counting down, and you will only be known for your failures. Why? Remember "just"? Well, you "just" had to follow the steps that the real men at MRP had laid out for you, but you failed, and your BF% is only 18%, you still get emotional (it just takes one), you still ... It doesn't matter, any gains you have are somebody else's gains that you are copying, any failures are 100% yours.

Evidence: Once my wife was made aware of a PUA book that somebody was reading (not me). She said "That's gross." I said, "What do you mean?" "He is using that book to trick women into having sex with them." "How is it a trick? It's not like he is drugging them, they are doing it on their own accord, and quite enthusiastically as I understand it" "But that's not really him, he is just pretending."

Be the wolf in sheep's clothing, no the sheep in wolf's clothing.
What follows is an idea I've shared with few but I think MRP needs to hear. It goes full circle back to the very first lesson we learned when we got here. And I wouldn't be surprised if it ruffled some feathers. But I am confident and prepared to stand behind this message. For those that are new, this is a big summary of the entire journey, and will arm you with many sticks of dynamite. Use at your own risk. For those more experienced, I would advise start at Part 2.

Part 1: Your wife the black box

So let's start somewhere at the beginning of your journey. Where you went and watched Keanu Reeves in the matrix. And learned that the ideas and things you had been taught and created yourself in your head up to this point may not be exactly the way life really goes.

And you look back at your life and see that the ideas that you had that led you to the point you were before you found MRP came from mental models you developed from your parents, from your babysitters, from your school, and all the leaders you seemed to look to naturally as you grew up. And you seem to have just carried that expectation of someone else being in charge (up on that pedestal) to the woman you married.

All these false expectations, like a Disney fairytale marriage, unlimited possibilities, morality, and friendly faces all around you you now realize were just ideas put into your head to control your behavior, guide your decisions, and then make you act in the best interests of society when you got older. And as a parent (if you have kids) I'm sure you have seen and rationalized the necessity of these tools in order to keep a growing mind on track. Hoping that one day your child will also be able to see the light like you have and breakout of those mental models.

Now you tell me the difference between the sexes where women, too, do not undergo this same type of behavioral and societal control while they're growing up. Show me where they would not likely come to the same place as you were where the mental models of how they should act and run their lives are all delusions based on what they were told and promised growing up. IE:

Women are stuck in their own matrix

But you've been at this awhile. You've been grinding. Making yourself better. Getting new perspectives from new books on life, how to act, how to deal with situations, your emotions, and others. You've "unplugged" from that matrix. I bet if you were to compare what you are and know now to what you were and knew before MRP you would be astonished at the change.

And you would also have to be pretty thankful for having been exposed to these thoughts and books and ideas. Because no matter how sure you thought you had your life before...you kept running into a wall between what you were, and how you wanted your life to be. And that's what drove you to find MRP, and unplug from the matrix.

The matrix is the draft working model you have in your head about what life is, what happens in it, and what you do and feel about that. And this working model changes over time. Some time in your life you went from being a baby to being a kid. And another time you went from being a kid to being a teen. And then again you went from being a teen to being an adult. But if I ask you when the day was you thought you switched from one category to the other...I bet your couldn't identify it. It just kind of...happened over time. But these areas of your life are clearly defined due to you having to adopt wider and broader mindsets in order to get through them successfully.

Now I argue that you have reached a point where you have expanded yourself from what you used to be before MRP, to what you are now after MRP. And I ask you with all the growth that you've made with the resources you had, all the books on the sidebar, all the notes we share around here, all the feedback you get...how is it you expect your wife to make growth in the same leaps and bounds without those resources? IE:

Your wife has not received the same help and guidance you have to build herself a working mental model in adulthood and marriage

We talk about leadership and leading our wives and the 1000ft rope often here in MRP. We try to address problems in our marriage using things we learned like agree and amplify, negative inquiry, and dread. We employ these things in response to things our wives do and in response to their following (due to our leading) or their not following (due to the 1000ft rope).

But when I look at these behaviors and MRP, and notes from many of the more popular books and mantras, we seem to build our actions and reactions as if our wives are just a black box of unknowable emotions and ideas that have concrete, non-flexible structure. I've mentioned this a few times in my posts but if you're not familiar with what a black box is in technology terms...a black box is a piece of software, system, or something where you get to put inputs in, and observe reactions that come out, but you are not privy to anything that goes on within that box.
A lot of MRP describes the wife as run purely by feels and evolutionary drives. Almost as if there is no pilot at the wheel in her head. (Sound familiar captain?) As if she is a black box that you merely put actions into and look at results.

And I don't know about your wife...but mine...mine has gone through life and proven that she has someone at the wheel. She went to college, got a nursing degree, has a stable job, attempts to parent our kids, juggle schedules, and occasionally has fun. We talk about serious topics. I see her try to follow my lead. And that's a really important part.

We see women out on the street or pursuing their career or sport or attending a business meeting and it shocks us to learn that they actually have a full fledged life, baggage, emotion, and drive to their lives. They absolutely have the ability to follow a lead, but they also have the ability to make decisions too.

Do you think your wife has someone behind the wheel making decisions in her head? Have you seen your wife try to follow your lead? When little things pop up like she's talking angrily at you and the kids and you tell her you don't approve of her talking to the kids like that and want her to talk a different way. Does she? So then I ask you how and why we seem to treat them from MRP as black boxes, if we know they are actually someone with a life, passions, and reasons (albeit possibly misguided) for their actions. IE:

Your wife is not a black box, you can see and inquire about the inner workings

Part 2: Feelings and Actions

But a lot of what MRP teaches when they say that you cannot change her, so just worry about you, is to almost to take a hands off approach to addressing her issues. It's kind of like "she is what she is and does what she does...so I'll handle me and my guidance will simply be my actions." And so we believe that the change we cause is based on action.

And I believe that in our action, we are speaking volumes, but we're really not saying much. I believe in our actions we're still secretly hoping to affect change in all the layers of her emotional paradigm. This emotional paradigm I believe consists of four levels and draws from base emotions all the way in the hind brain to social and societal ways to deal with those emotions. And I believe both men and women deal with very similar levels of this paradigm:

Level 1) THAT we feel: This is a base, natural driven thing. I've been in more scenarios than I can count where something makes me feel (angry, upset, happy, bitter, whatever) and I cannot change that feeling within me. Or I've seen my wife wake up angry, or upset, or happy and when I ask why she's feeling that way she replies "I dont know, I just do". Sometimes I'm having a bad day and have no idea why, but I know I'm feeling it, and I cannot change it. It's almost like that set of initial conditions that you cannot affect, that life (or your brain) gives you. "This is your problem/emotion. Deal with it."

Level 2) What we THINK about those feelings: We build mental models in order to deal with those feelings. We shield ourselves from them. We spin them into beliefs of what they mean or what we think we can believe in concerning how or why we think this way. We explain them away. Or we "ignore" them...ignore meaning don't allow ourselves to feel them, but bottle them up instead. Or, contrarily, we let the problems affect us internally. We swim in those problems in our head.

Level 3) What we DO about those feelings: This, as opposed to 2, is more action oriented. When we are angry we strike out in action. When we are afraid we recoil in fear. When we are attracted we open ourselves and get close. This is actually taking the step to do an action oriented response to deal with the problem/emotion. It's communicating that we're moved...but not exactly why, or what to do about it. It's basically screaming to the world "I AM FEELING SOMETHING", but not what or why.

Level 4) How we COMMUNICATE those feelings: This is more along the lines of communication. Not acting the feelings out, but expressing them openly and honestly, or openly but dishonestly. IE, "I have a problem and I want you to know it" vs. "I have a problem and you should do something about it." It's hoping that by letting the problem be known and offering it up in it's entirety, that the world will help take care of it, rather than having you bare the burden yourself.

These 4 are listed in order of increasingly being open about the problem. In 1 we keep it totally to ourselves. It just is. In 2 we decide to tackle it within ourselves using our thoughts. In 3 we outwardly express the RESULT (action) of the problem. In 4 we outwardly communicate the feelings themselves. 1 is least vulnerable. 4 is most vulnerable.

MRP seems to handle the first three. They get you to explore yourself and realize that yes you do feel emotions. They give you framework to think about what those emotions mean within yourself. And they give you ways to show the world via your actions that you are feeling. And after you get deep on the dread ladder, MRP even suggests some of 4, the "I have a problem and if you know what's good for you, you'll fix it". But MRP almost shuns open and honest communication of a problem. And I think that's because deep down, MRP is afraid of the potential for rejection of that problem when it's laid bare. The point being:
We are speaking volumes through our actions, but not really saying anything.

So I want you to consider for a second...and this is going to go against every fiber of what you've learned so far, but if what I've said is true, that women have their own matrix, that they have not received the guidance to improve like we have, that they aren't a black box and thus can learn about this guidance (and we can learn about them), but also that if we simply rely on our actions to speak for our intent...that the message becomes clouded...i think you have to conclude that a measure of what I call Open and Honest communication is necessary for a relationship.

And I know what you're thinking....that this goes against everything that we've said here at MRP so far. And I'm with you in experience that I've had conversations with my wife about what I need and they've gone unanswered. I think it's very nuanced with what you need to say, how you need to say it, and when you need to say it.

For instance I've had several conversations to my wife about how I need physical affection. Not just sex, but holding hands, hugging, cuddling, kissing, touching, that kind of thing. I've said that very openly to her and gotten no change in behavior. And this is what draws us to the conclusion that talking doesn't work.

But I also have to say that in any instance that you try to change someone's mind about a behavior, and they're not ready or don't have the mental structures in place to receive that change, that that change is going to be met with inaction or resistance. Think about red-knighthing for example. If you do this with GUYS who aren't ready to hear what you have to say, then they too will not change and may even resist you, and change. Why would your wife be any different?

How then does someone become ready to hear that change? There's two ways. The first is the way we're born with and operate on for most of our life. I believe that our internal mental models are so ingrained in us, that we don't really make an effort to change them until we run into the harsh reality that they don't work. It's the reality you felt when you had to look for MRP. It's why when you constantly enable your wife and her life is fine and dandy while you desire change, why she doesn't change. And yes it's why if your wife doesn't think there's a possibility that you'll leave her, that she won't change either. Being ready to receive change happens only when we choose to search for change. And that's why I'm sharing all this with many of you, because I believe your gut feeling is searching for this change.

The second way is a learned experience. And I've said this several times in my posts as well. The second way is one can receive change through open and honest communication when they come to learn that the mental models that they have in life can be WRONG. Before this, back before MRP, back to your rebellious teens, even back to your childhood where you believed you knew how to act. In all those times the thought wouldn't even cross your mind that you could be wrong. That there could be other ways. But once you come to the conclusion that you have the ability to be wrong about your ways...only then will you be ready to hear and accept change through the suggestion alone that change may be needed.

The things we do say to inflict change, our audience needs to be ready to hear.

So I want to take a second to discuss what I think the key aspects of open and honest communication are. Because this gets to some piece of the feeling I had, and the feeling it seems you may have, with leaving something on the table.

I think what I felt I left on the table was the ability to just talk to someone in a way where, just like I learned in MRP when flirting with women to be open to rejection, to not let it affect you, to feel like you are a prize...open and honest communication is taking those feelings you have within you that make you you, that your ego is constantly trying to protect, and handing them to whoever you're talking to and going "Here's who I am. Here's what I want. Do what you will."

It's literally like taking your heart and handing it to your wife and allowing her to either smash it, or acknowledge it. Her choice. And then being okay with her choice. Not okay as in you accept whatever she chooses to do with your true self you handed her, but okay that she GETS to choose what to do with it. It's being confident enough that you put yourself out there as a self contained unit and you allow the world to affect you. It's being okay that they have that choice.

I've read a lot of posts around where people are talking about how they've read about the stoics. How they no longer let life impact them. They are a rock. And I feel like that's an easy trap to fall into when trying to be stoic. Being stoic doesn't mean walling yourself up so much that you don't let life affect you. It's being vulnerable enough to let life to impact you full force, feel the resulting emotions you're programmed to feel biologically, and then having a mental model in place so that you are still in control and can deal with life despite those emotions. I don't want to not feel. I want to feel everything, and then be able to handle it. So I'm sure you've seen a few times in my posts:

Open and honest communication is being able to give and receive what you think and feel, and what others think and feel, freely.

Part 3: Communication Doesn't work...or...we just weren't ready for the answer.

So then the big question is why does MRP explain that open and honest communication is not the way to what you want? That's it's negotiating desire. That we crave a natural born desire for value from our wives. I think this craving for natural born desire drives at the heart of the problem.

Recall back to the start of your relationship, where you met someone and formed an opinion of them based solely on looks, and maybe a few words. And she did the same to you. Back when this happened each of you had in your heads this ideal person whom you were seeking. This person embodies many interesting and unique characteristics. And since you knew so little about this person (or they you), what they did to fill in the rest was idealize the best possible scenario for all those unknown attributes.

After the first date, and the second, and the third, where you were excited to learn all these new and interesting things about this person, there was still a lot of draw and mystery to them. I mean you have their entire lives that they've lived so far to figure out.

But as the weeks turn into months turn into years, you start filling in all those mysterious parts you didn't know with the facts of who they truly are. And some of those facts fit who you wanted them to be, and some did not (and the same happened to her of the mystery that was you). And at some point we marry and settle into a workable pattern of roles given our jobs, hobbies, kids, sleep needs, sexual needs, etc.

And then we look back and remember the rush we had when we first met and that potential. Or we look at other couples either in person or showing their best sides online, or we watch a Disney movie where a couple meet and are living in that moment where the mystery is still there. And we, again now as a third person observer, fill in everything we don't know about the dynamics of that couple's relationship with the best possible scenario of how their relationship could be.

It's called observer bias...and we do it on Facebook, Instagram, and Snapchat all the time. You only get to see the best of times and thoughts people have posted to their Facebook. So we (in our own heads) extrapolate that that must be their lives all the time. Fun, sun, excitement, and family. But that's not the case.

I ask you then why it's so easy to accept when we come to MRP that the Disney fairytale BS we've been fed our whole lives isn't true...which, if you think about it was never FED to us...but WE made it up because WE filled in the blanks with our ideal thoughts of the relationship they would have in the future (all the story said was "happily ever after"...we invented what that meant)...why can we accept that as truth, but not the idea that:

Natural desire is merely an idealized version we project onto the mystery that is someone else.

So what about all the talk of evolutionary born desire? What about the feeling that emotional inner workings of women can be exploited to produce natural desire if we don't tell them about the sauce? Because "Don't talk about fight club" has always been a saying here. And I argue two things:

1) That the natural born desire that can be brought back out within our spouses is based on you changing enough of yourself that that mystery she saw in you in the beginning begins to show again. That she asks herself "who am I married to? I thought I had them figured out. But now I don't know." And that mystery comes in part because we act in accordance with #3 on the emotional paradigm I mentioned earlier: Actions without clear messages. She sees this and knows we're saying something...but not what. And that uncertainty breeds mystery.

2) That I would wager most of the more experienced guys on this forum's wives at some point have found MRP and seen the sauce. That through time and effort, action and communication, enough has been revealed that their wives understand that there is a drive out there for us guys to find our true selves and make the best of our lives...and that actually is a good model to follow (hence, also, the existence of the MRP wives subreddits).

So I believe that there can still be scenarios where if we really wanted to, we men could live lives where the women in them still run on this natural born desire that derives from the mystery of the unknown you create and maintain. You could do this either from continuously keeping one women in the dark about who you are, or you could, over time, keep multiple women in the dark by switching whenever things started to get too familiar (playing the field).

And you know what? Depending on who you are and what you want...those methods may just fit into exactly what you need, what you're capable of, what you want out of a relationship, etc. And I definitely see the allure of breeding such a feeling in a relationship. Everyone is different and has different needs. But I feel like that feeling specifically negates the ability to actually bond truly with someone...BECAUSE of the fact that you always have to distance yourself from them.

For me, honestly, I really think in my head there's an idea that there exists some form of magical raw love/desire. But I sat down and talked the idea out with someone not too long ago. And they asked me what specifically I defined as love, and how my wife could go about bringing that feeling out. And it felt almost ridiculous and childish explaining it...my idea of love was that my wife intuitively knew what to do and what made me feel loved, and acted to bring out those feelings in me, WITHOUT me having to explicitly tell her what she needs to do. In other words:

We feel genuine desire is the drive and ability to read our minds and respond to our needs, without us having to communicate them.

And I think, again, that the above clearly accents that our resistance to having to communicate our needs is a buffer because we are AFRAID to communicate our needs, in the belief that it reduces that "magical" natural desire of getting them fulfilled without communication, AND because we are afraid they could be rejected. And much of the time they will be rejected because those who we tell them to are not ready or able to change themselves. That is a slow, methodical process that we work with them on. That's what marriage is. That's her following your lead. But getting her to a point where open and honest communication is possible, while it does necessitate a killing in some form of the magical mysterious natural desire, puts in it's place a CHOSEN desire...the decision for your wife to understand what you want and CHOOSE to fulfill it. Which, in my mind, I'm quite alright with. Negotiation is settling and unwanted compliance. But chosen desire is a different beast.

This has been a lot of information. I'm sure you don't necessarily agree with it. Especially because I came out of left field when you've been marching along to the MRP beat for some time now. I'm not saying there's anything wrong with what we've been taught. What I am saying though is if we put a small twist on it, we may find that we feel just as content when our wives DO understand our needs and CHOOSE to fulfill them, rather than us playing games trying to get them to "naturally" fulfill them.

I'm gonna drop the hammer here. See the thing about my marriage now is: I use communication on a daily basis and it is one of the most important aspects of my marriage. Which on the surface seems extremely blue pill. But with all that I've said before, the piece that makes the communication blue pill is that communication is covert, it's guarded, it comes with expectation that is not given in the over communication.

Communication as we understood and used it before was simply one big covert contract because "I want" meant "I expect", and was always covertly followed by "and if you don't." We would assume that we communicated our idea and it would be acted on as if simply stating something meant others had to consider and act on it. As if our communication set an expectation that through some unseen force had to be met...just because we are who we are...we are special. But then we would contradict our own uniqueness in our head. We would almost instantly devise the scenario of what we would do if that need or want that was communicated was not met, how we would react down the road as punishment or reward for following our communication.
What communication in my marriage is however is a direct line to and from my vision. And that direction is given freely, with the option to be followed or ignored freely.

Is this a mode you want to operate in? As I said, it's your choice. And I'm communicating my thoughts to you openly and honestly and allowing you to make that choice yourself. I could have mysteriously pointed you in that direction through coded messages and suggestions in your OYS. Or I can just come out and say it because I think you're in a place to accept it.

Thinking of other people as potentially working from a place where they value different things than I do gives a whole new perspective to the intersocial and intergender dynamics I learned through my MRP experience. And that doesn't negate much of what I've learned so far either. It's just looking at it a different way.

At the end of the day, you wife still may choose to either not listen, or not follow. And at the end of the day you may have to take the path of divorce or an affair to find what it is you need in your life. But I think we're all trying to make sure that we've done everything we can do before we give up. And I think for me, that feeling of leaving something on the table, again, included the ability to just communicate what I'm feeling with no strings attached, and have those feelings heard and acknowledged.
A Simple Trick For Damaging Self-Talk
by resolutions316 | August 17, 2018 | Link

Although most of us come here focused on getting something from someone else...

(i.e., sex from wife)

...I'd wager that most of us end up finding out our work is primarily internal.

Even if we're fighting with our wife and it's driving us mad, it's really our own reactions that are difficult to master.

Even if we're struggling with a Dead Bedroom, it's our own inability to leave - to risk loneliness in search of something better - that's the root of our issues.

One of the most common of these internal obstacles is negative self-talk.

It's quite easy to internalize the critical voices of parents, teachers, and even spouses...to hear their put-downs and vitriol in our minds before anything is ever spoken out loud.

When many of us stumble upon MRP, that inner critic is given a whole bunch of ammunition with which to demean us.

"She won't fuck you because you're fat"

"They don't respect you because you're weak"

"Be more alpha; what the fuck is wrong with you"

Our inner critic simply changes form...same old shit, same old insecurity, just now it calls us "faggot" and knows the word hypergamy.

MRP - and as an extension, owning your shit - are predicated on brutal realism. See reality for what it is, accept no half-truths.

The inner critic is not reality, however. It is overly negative, as unrealistic as any pie-in-the-sky pollyanna.

While owning your shit, and accepting things as they are, is the foundation of self-improvement, negative self-talk only breaks you down...it never builds you up.

It's this sense of helplessness, hopelessness, and impotent rage that fuel so many "anger phases." We may be upset about our situations, but we're just as angry at ourselves...unable to forgive ourselves for things we didn't know, weren't taught, couldn't do.

Somehow, we feel we should have known all this shit already...how could we be so stupid?
We go from letting others cut us down to just doing it for them.

We may even manage to convince ourselves it's for our own good. Time to get tough, pussy. Time to MAN UP.

-------

It never really works that way, though.

That inner critic? It never goes away.

No matter how ripped, how "alpha," how confident you get...there will always be part of you that thinks it isn't enough.

Sometimes, you can use that inner sense of disgust to propel you forward....to get you to the gym, to get you out of your room, to take that next big step.

Most of the time, though? That inner voice convinces you it's hopeless. It isn't a risk-taker; for all it's talk, it isn't the thing that's going to get you off your ass.

Remember back to the last time someone really motivated you; when someone pushed you past what you thought was possible...whether that was a coach, a teacher, a boss, or a friend.

Chances are, they didn't spend all their time telling you what a giant piece of shit you were.

It's only by shutting down that voice of self-doubt and self-pity that we find the strength to try new things, to push through adversity, to push past our comfort zones. You can't make a pass at your wife if you're telling yourself you're doomed to failure, and you can't flirt with that girl at the bar if you're busy convincing yourself she'd never give you the time of day.

-------

The Trick

If, like me, you find your inner critic to be relentless...to fuel the worst parts of your personality (the need for validation, the vindictiveness, the sad-sack helplessness)...

Then feel free to borrow this simple trick:

Whenever you become aware of your inner critic laying into you - whenever you overhear your own negative self-talk?

Imagine that voice as the voice of Donald Duck.

Whatever it's saying to you, let it go - but hear it in Donald Duck's voice. (Elmer Fudd works as well)

Somehow, re-framing the voice as outside of yourself - and as objectively dumb-sounding - takes away much of its power.

At that point, you can think more clearly about the kind of shit you want running through your brain. After all, "states become traits," and the more we re-focus our mind on the positive, the more we can enjoy ourselves on our journeys to better lives, better sex, and better marriages.

Hope this was helpful.
I would do it again.

There have been several instances where I was told that I would not get married again. Meaning if I could go back in time, I would not put that rock on my lady’s finger. Each time I have to correct whoever is saying this – because I would. So this post is to set the record straight for good.

There seems to be this notion that ‘RedPill’ men don’t get married. Who the fuck said we were ‘redpill’ men? Choosing the ‘RedPill’ means choosing the harsh truth of reality over the comfort of the lie. Did Neo become a ‘RedPiller’ when he chose the truth? Fuck no – he just embraced the reality of who he was and what he was capable of. Choosing the truth means choosing to embrace your masculine nature over remaining what you have been told to be.

With that said, who in the fuck is going to tell another man whether he should be married or not? We Walk Our Path Alone so if your marriage sucks and you wish it never happened:

- You’re a pussy.

- Don’t project your shitty vetting and relationship onto others, it is weaksauce as fuck and it is getting annoying.

‘Marriage 2.0’ certainly favors women in the event of divorce, but marriage itself favors the man. If he is a masculine man, there is no better (in my opinion) way to raise a family.

I knew I wanted to be married at a young age – ‘bluepill conditioning’ possibly. But I didn’t just go with the flow of society; I measured out all of the paths that lay before me. I thought of being a traveler, I thought of being single and serving in the military, and I thought of just doing my own thing – running a business or something similar to the end of my days. After playing out all of these scenarios, I realized more than anything I wanted to be a father and have a family.

I chose to live my life and also have a house with children and an awesome wife waiting for me to get back from my adventures. That is exactly what I’ve done and I couldn’t be happier. I made my wife wait a deployment before we got married, to show her what military life would be like – she passed. I kept myself in shape – so did she. I made sure that sexual freedom was embraced and this enabled me to Create the Slut. I guarantee I am fucking my wife more frequently and in kinkier ways than a majority of the guys who are again telling me, that sex dries up in marriage.

It (sex) doesn’t drop if you Keep your woman on her toes and remain an Unpredictable man.

The married men who are bitching about their wife have yet to internalize one of the more bitter aspects of the truth – she is a mirror. Your shitty wife is reflecting your shitty leadership and emasculated behavior. You think she is a bitch? Maybe it is because she has had to deal with your weak ass for so long it has built up some resentment. Many guys say, “I’m angry at my wife for not recognizing the changes I’ve made the past 3 months.” You dense motherfucker, you have not led your family, treated your wife like a woman, or displayed any traits of a strong man for years – she should be angry.

The reason marriage gets such a shitty wrap is because a bunch of weak sauce ‘men’ are getting married. There are plenty of successful marriages out there; you just don’t see those guys on reddit. There are a few on the MarriedRedPill subreddit, but unless you track their posts you aren’t going to realize that they are there always helping others. I didn’t find The Red Pill because my marriage sucked or because I wasn’t getting sex – I found it because I was searching for ways to save masculinity from becoming obsolete. I got out of the Navy and was disgusted by the pitiful men that I came across. I focus on Marriage and fatherhood because that is where I’m at in my life – that is the area that I’m an SME in so it’s what I write about.

I see these weak husbands and sad wives - I’m in the ‘married man’ category so they are in a way making me look bad – fuck that.

I want the Dadbod to be something you strive for – not something that is soft and disgusting. I want marriage to be viewed as the relationship where you get the best and most frequent sex you’ve ever had – overall I want the standard of marriage to rise.

Do I advise men to get married? Negative. Why? Because I have yet to meet a man in person who is willing to work as hard as I do to keep things running smoothly. Being married is difficult and a majority of those I talk to on this blog, over email, and on reddit aren’t able to bear that burden. With this said, you have to remember – there is no shortcut to any place worth going.

This doesn’t mean marriage is fucked up, it means the men are fucked up.

If I could go back in time, I’d marry my woman again. Not because I’m some plugged in fuck who romanticizes marriage – I’m past that. I’d marry her again because I have a woman who is bringing value to my life and two kids who are growing up in a home where the men and women are able to fill their biologically programmed roles. I’m living the dream of my youth, not many men can say that.
Going to the Moon and MRP
by LongRoad_518 | July 25, 2019 | Link

Last Saturday was the 50th anniversary of Apollo 11 landing on the moon. Good shit - as I watched/read/listened to documentaries and podcasts about it the parallels with MRP became apparent. Men went to the moon, men built the rockets, men were in mission control, men died on the launchpad, men willingly plunged into the unknown and achieved greatness.

Choose Motherfucker

“We choose to go to the moon in this decade and do the other things, not because they are easy but because it is hard…” – JFK

Look at this statement. Read it and read it again. The first step is to CHOOSE. Do you want to live in a sub-par life? Or do you want to live life to the fullest? Your options are to 1) live sub-par (easy) or 2) work your ass off and become a high value man (hard). But YOU need to choose – there’s no middle ground. MRP is hard, it’s very hard, likely the hardest shit you’ll do. But you CAN do it. So, make your choice.

Once the choice was made to go to the moon the rest was simply technology, engineering, and a shitload of hard work. MRP path is straightforward, but it’s a shitload of hard work.

The biggest waste of time is sat deciding the path forward. What lifting program should I start? What book should I read next? What diet should I try?... I am of the strong mindset to pick a path and then reassess frequently and adjust as necessary. Otherwise you have non-value added time sitting there just theorizing on what you should do versus actually doing it.

Why Choose the Hard Way?

There’s more to this quote...

“... because that goal will serve to organize and measure the best of our energies and skills, because that challenge is one that we are willing to accept, one we are unwilling to postpone, and one which we intend to win.” - JFK

THIS is what MRP offers - this is what we do here. This is not a “Top 10 tricks to make your wife have sex”. We work to give the BEST of ourselves - our masculine energy; we hone our unique skills as men - leadership, strength, emotional stability. We are doing this NOW. To the lurkers and those who is still looking at the RP or licking it – be unwilling to POSTPONE any longer.

Incremental Improvement

We didn’t go from sub-orbital unmanned flight to landing on the moon. We went from sub-orbital unmanned flight -> sub-orbital manned flight -> orbital flight -> extended orbital flight -> space walks -> docking with another spacecraft -> lunar orbit -> dress-rehearsal to land on the moon -> landing on the moon.
This is the area I struggle with and see it in a lot of posts lately. It’s the thought of: “How do I accelerate my lifts/diet/frame to be the best in the shortest possible time?”. Rephased: “What cheat codes are there to get the quickest improvement with the least amount of work?” The answer is: there are no cheat codes. You build a realistic plan, execute, and make small incremental improvements.

If you look at the steps going to the moon, each one really wasn’t much difficult than the previous one. The key is to continually have small successes. You don’t go from never lifting to u/red-sfspplus level. You go from being able to bench the bar -> benching the bar +5 -> bar +10 -> etc. Do you still suck in comparison to others? Sure... but do you suck AS MUCH as you did before? Hell no. So... stop comparing yourself to others.

The only question you should be asking yourself every week is “Am I better than I was compared to last week?”.

Failure

In reaching the moon - men died. Equipment failed. Shit happened. No one threw up their hands and said “this is too hard we quit”. They figured out what went wrong, why it went wrong, corrected it, and moved on.

You will fail. You will have a bad week. You will fail across the board – shit tests, lifts, diet, comfort tests, maintaining frame. You’ll be butthurt, go Rambo, get angry, create covert contracts (and not even realize it). You’ll take two steps forward and one back. Sometimes it will be two steps forward and three back. This is why the OYS thread is so critical – you have the opportunity every fucking week to reassess yourself, look at what you failed on and elicit feedback to tweak your plan as needed. Shut down your ego and listen to the advice. Objectively look at what’s being suggested and really consider it.

If you want to know what the secret is to success? It’s moving forward after failure and not fucking dwelling on the failure. That’s it, that’s the secret.

When you screw up:

1. What went wrong
2. Why did it go wrong
3. How do I fix what went wrong
4. Then you fix it/tweak it/take a different approach and move on

You screwed up – it’s in the past, you learned something from it and now you’re better.

Don’t Stop Improving

If you look back at sci-fi movies from the ‘60s and 70’s, the thought was we’d be much much further along in terms of space exploration than today. Colonies on the moon, colonies on mars, travelling to the outer solar system, space hotels, space tourism. So, what happened? What the fuck happened? The pace we went from effectively nothing to the moon was less than 10 years.
We said “it’s good enough”. Why would we want to improve more? Hell, America doesn’t even have a viable spacecraft right now. This is not the place to argue the merits or money in the space program, but what happened was we grew complacent.

Don’t grow complacent. Always be striving to improve. Keep setting new goals and work to achieve them. The moment you stop improving is the moment you start deteriorating. Always choose to improve yourself.
We all know (or should know) that your wife is the most responsible child in the house. I want to point out that this isn't just a statement about the way she makes decisions based on emotions, or how she hasn't matured past 18 (IMO this is BS, by the way), and in general it is not intended as derogatory towards women in any way. This isn't just about how you need to treat her, it is about how she WANTS to be treated.

You love your kid, and you want them to be happy. You know what would make them happy? A 1/2 gallon of ice cream for dinner. Well, you said you love them, why can't they have it? It's precisely because you love them. You know what's best. If your 3 year old demands ice cream for dinner and you say no, you are a "big meanie" in her eyes, and she believes it. If you 10 year old demands ice cream for dinner and you say no, you might still be a "mean Dad because Jenny gets ice cream whenever she wants", BUT, there is a big difference. By that age kids have a sense of what is appropriate, and they will understand that you are defying their WANT because you are caring for their NEED. Parenting experts will tell you that children crave structure and fair/consistent discipline/rewards. Or, said another way, if you cave for your kids on stuff they intrinsically know is bad for them they will be temporarily happy that they "got their way" but will eventually be saddened that you didn't care enough about them to make the right choice for them.

How does this apply to MRP? Remember that when your wife says something, you can follow it with "right now". Well, if she shit tests you, makes unreasonable demands, or challenges you directly, those emotions are "in the moment". Afterward, she will eventually be saddened that she doesn't have a man with enough backbone to stand up to her and who doesn't possess the leadership qualities necessary to know that her NEEDS are more important than her WANTS. If you defy her temporary WANT she might feel that you are a "big meanie", but later she will have a sense of calm when her feelz remind her that you are a strong man willing to fight for your ideals and lead the family, even in the face of adversity.

Examples:

"We should trade in my 3 year old car to get the newer model, it has seat heat." I'm sorry babe, I maintain our budget for vehicles considering a trade in no sooner than every 6 years. "But, all the women at the office have the newer model." This car is still under warranty and in great shape, that would just waste money prevent us from meeting our savings goals. "But, we can afford it." We're not discussing this further. In a few years you'll get a new car. "Big meanie" Yep.

"I really want a LV purse for my birthday." Nope, not wasting money on an expensive purse. "But, all the girls at work have a LV purse." Good for them. "Don't you love me?" Yes, so much so that I'm preventing you from looking like an idiot that would spend $2k on a handbag. "Big meanie" Yep.

"If you go out of town you have to call me every 2 hours." I'll call when it is appropriate, definitely before I go to bed so I can say goodnight. "No, I want you to call more often so I know you are safe." Sorry babe, not happening, I'm busy entertaining work clients. "Well, if you loved me you would call." I love you. That has nothing to do with when I call you, so knock it off. "Big meanie" Yep.

The reality is that her feelings are temporary, and they should have zero affect on your feelings. Do you feel sad when your toddler is mad at you for not letting them eat paint? No, so why would her emotions affect you? Now, if I step on my toddlers hand by accident, darn right I feel bad. That also goes for your wife. You need to be your sole critic. Is she legitimately mad at you for a fuck-up, or is she calling you a "big meanie". If her feelz are mad at you, so be it, that will change. What won't change is her appreciation and comfort from having a strong man who can lead her and the family.
I stumbled into something that has been a great parallel to TRP for me as I develop and understand myself in an alpha role. It’s a natural fit with TRP and something I’d recommend to a guy trying to pull out of a LTR’s frame and build his own own or a bloke wanting to learn to stop being a beta faggot and learn TRP. Latin Dance.

Some background. I grew up in a conservative christian home. Our church taught that dancing was sin and so I never learned how to dance. I did dance shittily at both my weddings per tradition, but always had the thought it would be fun to actually learn to properly dance in the back of my mind. Fast forward I’m now 38, reading MRP books etc and I decide to try dancing. I text an old buddy who owned a dance company about what to try and he says, “Salsa”. In May I went to my first class, took the wife with.

My first class was in May and I did a few on and off till the end of June. July to now I’ve made it a regular thing every week. I currently do a salsa and bachata class every Sunday. I really think it should be a close second to lifting on a mans TRP journey. STFU, Lift and dance fuckers...

Some circumstances that I’ve experienced that I would recommend you seek out: 1. You want a class where partners are switched throughout, ie you don’t want the old couples class. 2. You want the beginners class. 3. My wife has joined me about 4 times, I go weather she wants to or not. I have the same amount of fun if she’s there or not. 4. Most importantly you have to be willing to learn and grow.

Here’s why this has been so good for my journey (and probably useful for yours):

1. If like the most men you don’t know how to formally dance with a partner (flailing like a retard on the dance floor does not count) this will be a solid challenge. Especially if like me you have the rhythm of a retard cave dweller, this is a solid starting from zero skill builder and an opportunity to challenge yourself to learn a new skill. For me it has been a full step out of my little box. Don’t be afraid to start with a beginner class. You’ll likely suck at first and that’s part of the charm in the future.

2. You’ll learn how to move your body in a light, fun and sexual way. Latin dance is a sexual interplay between the partners. It is built around concepts of tension, leadership, submission, display and fun. As a man who is by default the “lead” you have to display some confidence in your body as you move.

3. You’ll learn how to “lead” a female partner in a light, fun and sexual way. So as your learning to move and be light, fun and sexual in your body you’re going to be learning how to lead the female “follow” in how you want her to be light, fun and sexual. This is the most relevant to leading your family as it gets. You properly cue the follow and she spins, shakes her ass etc it’s up to you.

4. You’ll get comfortable with being close to multiple women, some are gonna be hotter than you think you can close. Yes there are a few HB2/3s that’ll want to do this but ur also gonna get a lot of HB7+ that are there too. You’re going to have to touch them, talk to them, make them laugh etc. They’re essentially a captive audience for as long as you’re dancing together. Unless you’re being a giant douche creep, it’s just you and her for a few minutes and you gotta do something. Also you don’t have to close a single one. Building DNGAF in this circumstance is pretty fuckin easy. I have been nervous around women my whole life, this has changed a lot.

5. The women there are I trying to learn how to follow a man’s lead. I was clumsily dancing with one HB7.5 and she literally said “I’m trying to learn how to follow”. Every woman there is looking for a lead partner to follow. Think on this a bit.

6. Dread game 101. Basically it’s all there. You’re out doing something you choose, there is guaranteed to be women there, your gonna have fun etc.
These are stressful times. And nobody experiences stress more than wives. I wrote 80% of this post before my computer crashed, so I'm going to skip my original introduction and hop right in.

A lot of guys right now are struggling with wives who are going crazy having the kids home all the time now. There's no school, no daycare - the daily routine and ability to keep up with housework is changed for the foreseeable future. One of our users recently commented: "The more I help the more I enable her, however the less I help the more distraught she becomes and the house becomes a place of strife instead of peace." Heck, I felt that way at one point even before all of this - and my situation is exacerbated by the fact that my wife also balances a part-time job.

The SHORT ANSWER is obvious: Do what you want to do; and (1) if that means more strife, part of being a man is learning how to deal with that while maintaining frame - not just the outward appearance of frame, but the internal sense of peace about it. This is why stoicism is so important. A man MUST learn to deal with difficulty in life without being emotionally phased by it. I don't always succeed, but I'm certainly always working to excel at this. (2) Alternatively, if you want to be a more active dad to your kids, go do that too. Don't get hung up on whether or not she'll feel enabled. The goal isn't to train her (I tried that route early in my RP days and it doesn't work). It's to be your own man and let her figure out how she's going to respond to that.

Apart from that, here are some additional insights my own experiences and observations have given me that may be of value in the conversation.

KIDS

The Nature of Women

I mentioned in a previous post that women suffer from a disease I call "Next-Thing-itis." Because the "next thing" will always require work and effort to accomplish, another way to word this is that women are always seeking out things that increase stress. That's right: women chase stress. Personally, I believe this to be a subconsciously desire-driven positive feedback loop for them:

- Women chase after men to help them feel better about the stressors in their lives.
- Women chase after stressors to make them feel better about the man in their lives.
This is why single women are always so boy-crazy. For them, the "Next Thing" is always related to their man: first date, first kiss, getting engaged, getting married. They believe that with increasing measure these things will add security that they'll have a man to help them get through all of life's greatest challenges - whether by physical provision, emotional support, companionship, etc.

On the flip, wives are more interested in things outside their man - buying a house, improving the yard, building a playground for the kids, building up that 401K. These things take work to accomplish and it seriously stresses a wife out when she wants them done, but they're not getting done. Often-times she'll let the stress build until she lashes out at her man just to see if he can weather the storm. And suddenly she feels good again, if he does.

And what is the easiest, most common focal point of a mother's stress? Kids. They're always on her mind, provide easy and obvious examples, and it's culturally acceptable to talk about.

The Nature of Children

An r/RPChristians user recently commented:

> I can handle a tremendous amount of risk and stress while she becomes overwhelmed within a few minutes of waking when the kids argue. In the past I have tried to give her tips on how to better manage the kids but they run all over her and I believe she doesn't want the advice. When I am home their demeanor changes drastically. They are much better behaved kids because I am a stern disciplinarian while my wife is a negotiator. "Please go wash your hands and come eat lunch. Please, stop hitting your brother and go wash your hands! GO WASH YOUR HANDS! UGHH, WHY DONT YOU EVER LISTEN TO ME!" My children aren't bad kids, they are simply little sinners who manipulate, backtalk and rebel against mom who gets emotionally drained disciplining her kids. They can smell mom's weakness and exploit it.

Sound familiar? It certainly reminds me of the way things used to be in my own household years ago (and yes, it can still creep back periodically). While he puts the primary focus on the discipline issue, he only alludes to what I believe is the more significant issue: She does not understand the true nature of children (or at least she forgets it in the moment, replacing it with her own expectations). Don't blame her for doing this with the kids because you've probably done it with your wife many times through your RP journey. This causes her to have great difficulty understanding how to interact with them. Consider:

- Just as a man needs to understand the true nature of women to interact properly with them, so also do parents need to understand the true nature of children to interact properly with them.

A friend of mine once commented: Women go into relationships hoping to change their man; men go in hoping she'll always stay the same; in the end, neither gets what they want. That's always stuck with me. It illustrates that women are always focused on what SHOULD be (at least to them), not what ACTUALLY IS. This is part of why they contract "Next-Thing-itis" in the first place. They cannot be satisfied with the present - they're always pushing for some ideal in their mind. This is true of their view of kids as well.

Now, every wife will say, "This is absurd. I don't expect my kids to be perfect," usually with an obviously exaggerated understanding of that word. "I really just need them to change these few small things. I don't think I'm being unreasonable here." But as soon as those few small changes are made, they'll move on to the "Next Thing" that needs changed, and so on - and they will never be satisfied until their kids actually are as close to perfect as kids ever were.

But the reality is that those kids will never be even half of what her mind would take her to if we let the "Next-Thing-itis" play out on this. The true nature of children is that they are children, not adults. They are chaotic, mischievous, loud, manipulative, etc. We cannot expect children to behave like adults. Sound familiar? Oh yeah: Just as you can't expect your wife to behave like a man; don't expect your kids to behave like anything other than kids.

You married a woman because you wanted a woman at your side. You had kids because you wanted to raise kids, not because you wanted your wife to squeeze out a 180lb athletic Harvard PhD grad from her vagina. Part of the fun of parenting is actually parenting.

• Just as you had to come to your "red pill awakening" about the true nature of women, parents need to have their "red chewable tablet awakening" about the true nature of children.

Let me be clear: embracing this true nature doesn't mean you stop expecting them to improve. After all, as a parent it's your responsibility to raise your children into responsible adults. But this doesn't happen overnight. You have to accept them where they are right now and not place unrealistic expectations over their behavior.

Loving Your Child

Entertain me down this rabbit trail, as I think it's relevant here. The feminist agenda strongly pushes this notion that women love their children more than men do. Consider one of my recent cases and the impact that this mind-frame had on my client's life: The parents have a baby together, they split up, Mom hates Dad (my client) and wants sole custody. She argues:

• "Dad won't use the right nipple size on the bottle, which proves that I love my child more than him, because I pay attention to these things." The reality is: he was using the pediatrician-recommended size (which we proved) and she was using a smaller size. She explained that it was because the child had acid reflux problems and that he was being unloving to his child by not accounting for this detail in his nipple size selection. The reality is: the child only ever had one week of documented acid reflux problems 7 months before and it never showed up in any monthly checkup notes again. Mom sent literally dozens of e-mails to the Guardian (GAL) and forensic psychologist about this issue, ultimately costing my client nearly $7,000 (not just to me) to research the medical notes, pediatrician and bottle manufacturer recommendation pages, conduct discovery on the issue, reply to numerous phone calls and e-mails, pay the GAL's and psychologist's fees to investigate the issue also, etc. ... all because Mom and the GAL wanted to condemn him for not loving his child enough to pay attention to these details (the forensic psychologist was a man and less concerned). Yes, we won the point. But how absurd is it that a guy has to pay $7,000 just on that one issue alone in order to prove he does actually love his child!?

• "Dad doesn't buckle my child in the car tight enough, which proves that he doesn't love her enough to care about her safety in the car, but I do love her enough to pay attention to these things." I kid you not: the GAL actually conducted a surprise visit to one of the parenting exchanges, hid in the bushes to watch the child get buckled, then popped out to inspect how tight it was. It was perfectly fine. But doggone it, if mom was right and Dad didn't pay attention to pulling that strap 3.5 inches instead of 3, that could have hurt his case. How petty. He was paying 80% of the GAL's fees to investigate this complaint (because Mom was unemployed when the case started).

My original draft had more examples from the same case, but you get the point. What is it? Women think that because they are more obsessed about details involving their children, they ultimately are better parents than men and love their kids more than men. Personally, I think this couldn't be farther from the truth. In fact, I take the exact opposite position: A mama bear's "protective" and obsessive attitudes toward her children unnecessarily interferes with their ability to learn, adapt, and grow from life's challenges - and this sacrifice is made only to satisfy the woman's insecurities about her kids. Men and women alike have been raising children for millennia without nipples gradated in size for age and milk flow, without car seat straps (including after cars were invented), without foam pads to put on the corners of tables, and without hand sanitizer. I'm not saying mothers don't love their children. I'm suggesting that when they become overly detail-oriented, their love becomes tainted by their own insecurities - a trait that doesn't hinder most men from authentically appreciating their child.

Back to the True Nature of Children

Similarly, when a woman gets stressed out because her kids won't behave as she believes they ought to behave, she diminishes the authenticity of her relationship with them. This stress often causes her to yell at them, overly discipline them, or otherwise temporarily abandon them (the "I can't handle them anymore; you deal with them" approach).

In u/OsmiumZulu's latest post (Most Christians Do Not Love Women), he gives an appropriate example:

| Imagine two men who each claim to love sports cars. One says, "I love sports cars because they can tow my boat, haul a load of wood, and fit all my dogs in the bed." The other says, "I love sports cars because of how fast they go, how quick they accelerate, and they were built to handle a windy road." Which man actually loves sports cars? |

I submit that the same concept is true: that a person cannot truly love their child if their operative focus is on what they wish their child was than who their child actually is. This doesn't mean you can't want better for your kids. It does mean that you must set your expectations on their capacity to implement what you teach them at realistic levels in light of their present maturity and the incredible amount of time it takes for a child to understand the world the way an adult does, even on singular points. You cannot focus on one concept with a child, help them completely master that concept to an adult level, then move on to the next item.

Yet this is what the "Next-Thing" approach with kids tries to implement. The reality is that kids will work on 90% of things in their life simultaneously and make maybe 1% improvements every month or two until after 120+ months they're finally reasonably able to apply these concepts at an adult level ... just in time for puberty and hormones to throw it all out of whack again. The "reasonable" improvements most mothers want to see in their kids immediately are really things that will likely take several months - possibly even years - for the kids to learn and implement.

This is also why I've never been a fan of the "let's work on <this> with our kids this season" approach. Having a particular emphasis on a focal point isn't a bad thing, but it's also not an effective strategy if it (even unintentionally) results in the exclusion of other things they need to be working on simultaneously.

HOUSEWORK

The other aspect of a wife's stress is often associated with housework. I don't feel like re-writing what I had on this section, so let me summarize.

Most women are stressed about housework because they overstep their bounds seeing the house as primarily theirs. Their husband just lives there. She might let him lead "the relationship," but she gets to run the house. In her mind, that's a woman's prerogative.

Contrary to popular opinion even among traditional-valued conservatives, I believe the house is still the man's domain. The fact that he may delegate to his wife certain aspects of its care and then choose not to oversee or micromanage how she does it doesn't in any way diminish the man's authority over the home. But it does give the woman the psychological excuse to usurp his authority in areas where he hasn't actually given it to her.

More to the point: this is the core of a woman's stress when it comes to managing the housework. She places more responsibility on herself than is actually on her. In reality, she fell in love with a bachelor who had his own place and managed his own home and dreamed of helping him when she got to move in to his house/apartment; not the guy who punts all the responsibility for its upkeep to her - with cognitive dissonance, usually because she makes every subliminal effort to usurp the responsibility she will eventually despise him for letting her take. For more reading on this, I stand by and reaffirm my first two substantive posts on MRP from nearly 3 years ago now:
• The Biological Stepmother - delving a bit further into the concept of women being attracted to bachelors, not a husbands

• Dealing with the Stressed Wife - providing a pragmatic short-term solution to the problem

NOTE: In all of this, PLEASE do not walk away thinking that it's now your job to teach your wife the true nature of kids so she can have her "red chewable tablet awakening" and stop stressing so much. Don't worry so much about her. If she's interested, let her have it. But this post is more about YOU understanding what YOU're working with so YOU can make an informed decision about what YOU want to do with YOUR life in the midst of the present chaos and stresses it brings. To that end, I defer to my "short answer" at the very beginning of this post.
If you put her on a pedestal then she has no choice but to look down on you

by 88Will88 | May 3, 2017 | Link

This topic has been well and truly covered before but it is a reminder of a fundamental red pill truth, and some instruction on what to do if you still have this tendency. This post is for newbies and those who are yet to fully swallow the pill. Search yourself for these behaviours, and be honest.

I would not even post this in here except for the recent field report dealing with going back to an ex. That post was upvoted so it is a sign that there are many in here who have forgotten fundamentals.

Pedestalising women is one of the most beta, repulsive, vagina drying things that a man can do. Seriously if you are more into a girl than she is into you, then just walk away, or alternately grow a fucking pair. If you are looking up to a woman then mentally, physically and metaphorically, she has no choice but to look DOWN on you. It is entirely your fault, do not blame the woman for treating you like a lap dog bitch, you put yourself into that position 100%. I will break this down into three categories:

1. You like a girl you are not having sex with. This is the worst case scenario. You think about her before sleep and as soon as you wake up. Your balls tingle while you visualise her. You get butterflies in the stomach when you think about her. You dream of a life together. If the above Disney movie description of your fee fees is accurate, do not feel too bad, we have all been there (except Chad). However we at the red pill are here to wake you up. Seriously if this is you then I wish I was in the room with you right now so I could slap you upside the head and tell you to fucking grow a pair. Women are repulsed by this behaviour and rightfully so. Your options are either: A - sidebar, man up and initiate kino the next time you see her or B - just forget about her. You repulse her and she is busy getting railed by Chad while you are at home crying into your pillow.

2. You are in a sexual relationship with a woman and you think she is great and you are in love. If you love her more than she loves you do not ask me how you can tell this, if you are unsure, then you definitely love her more than she loves you. You do shit like text her then worry when she doesn't text back, you accept her bullshit excuses as to why she is late or cancels a date (do you think she is slow to text Chris Hemsworth or she cancels dates with him?), you miss her a lot when you have not seen her for a while. You have two choices here, A - walk away or B - flip that shit. The second option will not be easy, I give you at best a 25% chance, after all she already knows you are pissweak. So if you are foolish enough to try option B then head to the sidebar and read it again because if you are in this position, you have not swallowed the pill. Cancel the next date you have with her, go to the gym, go out with your boys, visit your family, fuck another girl who likes you more than you like her. Just know that you need to be ready to lose her. She already thinks that you are a weak little bitch, so changing her mind is going to be hard work.

3. You are either married, in an LTR of several years or more, and maybe have kids. Now as pathetic as category 1 is, your situation is almost as bad. Either you started alpha and went beta, or you were always beta. The signs and symptoms in this case: you are scared to lose her (not scared of losing your kids and money - that is a different and reasonable fear), you buy her expensive gifts and she does not reciprocate, her SMV is higher than yours, she speaks to you or treats you disrespectfully. If this is the case you need to do one of two things, A - GTFO of the relationship (especially if there are no kids, seriously just run, you cannot fix that shit and even if you make it better it is not worth it). or B - Read Rollo's "The Reconstruction" ten times, then start the long, difficult, painful but ultimately rewarding path laid out on the MRP sidebar.

This stuff is so basic it should not need to be written down. Search your feelings, are you more into her than she is into you? If yes or you are unsure then you are pedestalising her, fucking stop it. If you put her up there, then no wonder she is pissing on you from a great height.
Ten Rational Male Posts by Rollo Tomassi that Changed My Life

by BluepillProfessor | September 15, 2016 | Link

In honor of our September 30 AMA with Rollo Tomassi I present the top 10 most impactful posts to me on The Rational Male. I encourage you to add to this list and discuss:

*1. There is no one

Hard and fast and in your face. Rollo explains why their can be no "one."

At some point in a ONEatitis relationship one participant will establish dominance based on the powerlessness that this ONEitis necessitates. There is no greater agency for a woman than to know beyond doubt that she is the only source of a man’s need for sex and intimacy.

He just left out the part about her not fucking you when you "give a woman no greater agency."

*2. War Brides

This one hurt me a lot. I admit this one sent me into a spiral and fucked up my entire world. This was one of the first posts I ever read in the manosphere and the implications of it were so disturbing I ended up taking valium and ambien to get to sleep for the next week. It is that powerful. To me this was like a shot to the stomach. I immediately realized it meant there was no "one." She can and will turn on you if you stop providing what she needs you to provide. I had seen it in court so many times in divorce cases but this piece explains EXACTLY what is going on in the hamster's brain.

*3. Amused Mastery

This makes the list for the pic alone. Check it out! That pic explains precisely what we mean by "amused mastery" (which is an excellent way to respond to shit tests).

*4. Your Friend Menstruation

Rollo explains "Period Game." On MRP we are "clued" into that whole thing. Dance Monkey Dance!

*5. Artificial Joy

Are you a Cypher? Are you thinking about plugging back in? Do you ever sit around and say: "Why oh why didn't I take the Blue Pill?" Do you just want to quit improving and go back to enjoying your steak? This post is for you. Trust us guys, Cyphers never get to enjoy their steak.
6. Casualties

My brother-in-law hung himself as a response to having the unthinkable happen to him; his ONE, his soulmate, a woman he was very possessive of, was leaving him after 20 years of marriage.

7. Not-all-women-arent-like-that Anyone who’s spent more than a month reading comment threads on manosphere blogs understand the reason NAWALT has become a trope worthy of its own acronym. “Not all women are like that...” is the most common, default, go-to response for feminine personal offenses.

8. Women-in-love

This is top of the sidebar on The Red Pill for a reason. Women don't love you the way you think. They love opportunistically and situationally based on ever changing emotions.

9. Men in Love

Men believe in love for the sake of love, women love opportunistically. It’s not that either subscribe to unconditional love, it’s that both gender’s conditions for love differ.

In short, men are the romantics. Women love differently, get over breakups much faster, move on more quickly, and will stop loving a man when he stops providing what she needs from him.

10. saving-the-best

This is one of the most profound glimpses into female nature ever written. NAWALT my ass. Rollo ends on a pessimistic note:

He wants her sexual best, but her 7 years of unwillingness to give him that while enjoying the benefits of his provisioning, his patience, love and perseverance only puts her strategy, the Hypergamic strategy, into perfect focus. Her genuine desire, her sexual best was never intended for him in the first place.

On MRP we have the solution- own your shit and become the kind of man who can command her sexual best.

This guy in the story- he is a bitch. The guy is butthurt that others fucked his woman like he never did except he never TOLD her what to do and what he wanted. He never DEMANDED she comply. The second he threatens to leave she folds like the cheap whore she is. The dude could have imposed any conditions he wanted at that point but instead was "disgusted." Yah, because looking in his little sluts eyes reflected his pathetic weakness right back at him.
Status Quo
by red-sfpplus | November 17, 2018 | Link

Status quo:

noun: the existing state of affairs, especially regarding social or political issues.

Status quo is the greatest bias of the court.

Status quo is why your wife will not suck your dick, or swallow your come.

Status quo is why you work the same job, praying for a 3% pay raise to offset 6% inflation.

Status quo is why you get laid 2 times a month if you are lucky.

Status quo is why you are fat, can't lift heavy shit and why you can't close at least one woman within 7 days.

Status quo is what is keeping you from becoming a high value man.

If you want to get ahead, you have to tell status quo to fuck off. You have to be willing to change. You have to put in the work, and you have to grind it out. Rent is due every single day.

People are lazy. Status quo is the byproduct of people being lazy. Status quo is the worst fucking thing there is if you want to become a better person.

Breaking status quo will test your resolve. It will test your frame. Your confidence. Your backbone. It will point out every single area where you are weak, where you need to improve.

Status quo wants to steal your dreams. It wants to keep you, exactly where you are. In a sad, miserable life getting pity starfish sex from your fat harpy wife on birthdays, valentines day and anniversaries while you are working at an underpaid job that will replace you two weeks after you drop fucking dead from a heart attack.

Status quo will scare you into compliance. It will tell you things to manipulate you into not making the change you want to. It will give you doubt. It will tell you that you will fail. It will tell you that you shouldn't do something, because it is not what society demands from its subjects.

Status quo will fuck with your brain. It will tell you things like "not all change is positive." You know what? Fuck that and fuck you. Maybe it is, maybe it isn't, but anything is better than status quo. Even if the change is bad, you know what you fucker? I can learn and then change again! So fuck off status quo. I would rather change, fail and learn than hang out with you.

Your wife LOVES status quo. Why do you think she loves it so much? Because it is far easier for a woman to hang out with status quo, than a high value man who is always on the move, changing, growing and as a result - she has to keep up. Sure, there are high value women who hate status quo as much as I do, but lets face it - most of y'all are faggots who hang out with status quo.

If you are not willing to give status quo a big middle finger while you grab your balls and yell "fuck off," then you will never grow. You will never excel, and you will be just like every other plugged in faggot there is.

The will to act. It is the single biggest threat to status quo there is. All your training, all your reading, this sub, the MODS, loud mouth offensive fucks like me, legends like EAB, UCAD, Jack10. None of it matters to someone who loves to party with status quo.

I have put a name to your primary enemy you faggot. His name is Status Quo.

Tell him to fuck off and go build the man you want to be.

The will to act.

When I first found this place, I thought to myself: "man, you're going to be just like TFA! You'll start OYS, bitches will find you irresistible and your wife is going to fuck you like a pornstar constantly!". Well that never happened. Anyway, here is my take. (Apologies for the length)

HOW I GOT HERE

Growing up, I suffered from serious depression. This was the result of abuse I sustained at 9 years old, at the hands of a boy who was 5 years older. I mean, if people found out, I'd be labeled a homosexual and persecuted for the remainder of my life. This caused a paradigm that lasted until I realized it wasn't my fault.

I dealt with it in predictable fashion. Drugs, alcohol, masterbation and a crippling fear of women. Cause if they found out about my secret, life was over. The irony being all I wanted in life was a girlfriend.

Obviously, depression left untreated turns to suicidal tendencies. Actually came very close on Christmas night when I was 18 with a demerol patch and a 1/5 of vodka. A guy I went to school with killed himself over a bitch shortly after this and I realized you only give your pain to others. The suicidal thoughts left, but the depression remained. So did the drugs and alcohol.

Then my friends set me up with a girl. I finally got a girlfriend. Life was perfect! We fucked daily, my confidence soared and I was on top of the world....until that depression crept it's ugly head again. The results being jealousy, insecurity, her loss of respect for me and ultimately her loss of attraction for me. So began the next 10 years of my life.

Again I resorted to drugs and alcohol. I'm not an addictive person, but it helped me to forget about my shit.

I always wanted kids, so we had some. I became very complacent. I never rocked the boat, she always got what she wanted and berated me for no reason. I became the shell of a man. I developed a paradigm again. Only this time it was I wish she would leave me to free me of this shit, but I'm scared if she leaves I'll never find another girl. A real scarcity mentality.

She finally convinced me to buy a house 2 years back. This was the beginning of my new beginning. The first time I started to be responsible for my actions.

Shortly after we weighed the dog. Stepped on the scale at 270 and thought "fuckin dogs getting heavy". Put the dog down and stepped on again. 200lbs! Looked in the mirror and said "I'm a fat fuck!". This started a crash diet. Lost 36lbs in 4 months. Not the best way to do it, but it's done.

Shortly after I discover MRP and started to implement small changes. Nothing too crazy, simple leadership/shit test stuff. Then after a couple months I feel I'm ready to post. This was one year ago.

WHERE I AM NOW

Body

While I lost my weight preMRP, it wasn't until I started lifting and eating better that it came around full circle. I weigh 169 lbs with a 14% bf. My combined lifts are 640lbs. Not impressive, but it seems to be working. Muscle is growing steadily, due to a honed in diet. Not to mention how great I feel physically due to both.

I shower/shave daily, whiten my teeth, cut my nails weekly and always make sure I smell good. Upped my wardrobe completely. While I don't wear Chino khakis, Polo's and leather shoes, my clothes are very form fitting, well kept and my shoes are spotless. I present myself exactly how I want to all the time. If I don't like something, I stop wearing it.

- Always put your best foot forward

Frame

This was a tough area to overcome. My wife had a tendency of getting under my skin, smelling blood and going in for the kill. Since I've developed a near bullet proof frame, this no longer happens. She can't make me mad and she knows it. She actually loves it, but at the same time she misses her beta. The odd time she catches me with some shit and I slip up a bit, but I see it in real-time and squash it immediately.

- She can only treat you like shit if you let her

Sex

Not my most successful part of my MAP. Went from once a month duty to 3x a month; probably still duty. While it's not starfish as she rides, sucks and screams, it's not the quantity I'd like. I've came to terms that this is possibly the best it will get with her and threw away the covert contract.

I still like the idea of a side piece. Time will tell if I actually go through with it. Again, it's not a deciding factor of my happiness. I put a lot of thought and effort into trying to spin one. Came real close, could have blown up in my face and in the end, I only wanted it cause I was thirsty. She wasn't worth it. Regardless, if I choose to, I'll own it and have the frame to do so.

A couple weeks back I approached a girl at the grocery store. Hot solid 8. PreMRP, I wouldn't have dreamed of talking to her, nor her me. This time I started to tease her on some of the choices in her shopping cart. She got all giddy and weak in the knees. Couldn't stop laughing or keep eye contact. Not saying she was looking to fuck me, but clearly she loved the attention from a hot guy.

If my relationship tanks, I'll do just fine
• Don't make sex the mission

Leadership

This is one of my most successful parts of my improvements. My wife defers to my lead constantly. From plans for day trips to ideas about home reno to parenting decisions, she looks to my guidance. Thus absolving her of the responsibility if it goes sour. Sometimes she tries real hard to make a plan on a free day before I can, as if to try to keep some power. I still end up taking charge in the end.

Even the kids have came a long way. They crave that structure. Rooms are getting cleaned more, chores are now a thing and responsibility is becoming a part of their fabric. I struggled to get them to put a toy away a year ago.

This all makes my life easier, having people follow my lead instead of fight me tooth and nail for simple shit.

• It's not easy driving the ship day in/day out, but knowing that everything is your fault makes life a lot easier

Social Life

Still needs work, but it's came around a lot. Something I now realize is I hate going to a bar on my own. My town is full of the same bar flies at every bar and everyone is looking to cut lines. Not my type of people. I don't mind going with a friend, but not solo.

I've always had a good group of friends to hang with when I need to get out, but it's not exactly being social when you're not meeting new people. I've joined a group that does charitable work. This provides great social opportunities. It gets you out in the community and known as a good person. Plus it's a good way to make contacts and friends.

• You don't need to bar hop to meet new people

Depression

Funny thing is that after I got healthy and went through a rigorous procedure of self improvement, I'm never depressed. I'm actually happy all the time. Never felt better in my whole life.

• The power of positive thinking is a real thing

A lot of guys on here have givin me really good advice. A few stand out in particular and I wanna give a shout out to them.

u/persaeus - The man who always makes you feel good when you deserve it and likewise makes you feel like shit when it's due u/weakandsensitive - While you gave me a lot of real solid in depth breakdowns, the real advice you gave me is being unapologetic for the asshole that I am.

u/firetempered - Kinda like the old uncle that gives out golden nuggets of wisdom.

u/stonepimpletilist. The man who always asks the question you don't want to answer, but the answer is always the answer you need.

Lastly, the mods. Thank you for not only allowing, but actually encouraging a no pity, no bullshit, man the fuck up faggot mentality within this community. That's the corner stone and always should be.

Not really a success story in terms of sexual strategy, but I've came a long way towards becoming the man I want to be. Part of my MAP was to give a full year to bettering myself before I make any decisions on where I go with my life. I now know though, that whatever I do, I have the ability to do it from a position of power.

To those who are regulars, keep on keeping on. To those who are new, Stop being a fuckin pussy. What's the worst she is going to do? Get mad?
Fred learns about cows and milk

There was a man named Fred who heard about a cows. His friend Henry told him they contain a delicious white liquid called milk. Henry told fred about how to milk a cow and get this delicious and natural drink. He also described what a cow looks like to the t.

Naturally, Fred was intrigued by this new thing he heard about, cows, and he wanted to go out and taste this delicious drink called milk. So, Fred searched statewide for a cow, everywhere, both high and low. He had a hard time finding one.

Fred finds a cow and milk

One day, just as Fred was completely discouraged, he looked up and he saw what his friend described. He knew it was a cow because it fit the description perfectly. But, not only that ... as a bonus, as Fred came close to the cow, he saw a bucket with white liquid, and he knew that someone had already milked the cow, and finally here was some delicious milk before his very eyes.

Fred was so excited, he immediately grabbed the bucket and began chugging the milk. This didn’t taste like he thought. As a matter of fact, it tasted pretty horrible. Then, he began having severe stomach pains

RIP Fred

Fred died shortly after sting the milk. Had Fred’s friend led him astray?

What happened

What he thought was a cow was a statue of a cow. The cow was painted that day with white paint, so the was a bucket of leftover paint sitting next to the cow. He drank the paint thinking it was milk and died.

The MRP lesson

Learning the MRP way of life takes time and most importantly, experience. One of the most common mistakes is guys coming on MRP, reading a few posts/comments, and then thinking they have all the answers. This is what we call kids with dynamite.. They don’t have enough knowledge to make positive lasting changes in their life, but they have just enough knowledge to blow shit up.

They are eating paint

Lots of guys want a quick fix, and easy answer, a magical way to get frame, become great at agree and augment... etc
But, they usually lack patience. The solution lies in making small, barley noticeable changes. Many go Rambo instead. We keep saying over and over to read the sidebar, but experience and practice must occur alongside the reading. But, the experience should be from small changes... test the waters a little... start slow... which leads me to....

Lift, sidebar, STFU

Yes, start simple. Quit engaging in meaningless arguments with your wife... which, is pretty much any argument. Learn to keep it brief and then STFU. It will be u comfortable at first. Becoming a man is an uncomfortable process that requires you to take different thoughts and actions.

Don’t automatically assume you understand and can apply a concept just because you read about it... unless you enjoy drinking paint. If you try A&A too early, you will probably fail miserably. When you do start trying it, start with very simple slam dunk A&A’s. If you feel uncomfortable before you’re about to talk, that means faggotry is about to come out of your mouth, so STFU

Bottom line is this thing takes time and lots of effort. Expect it to take at least one month for every year you were a married beta faggot... and that’s if you are reading the entire sidebar, not just the same 3 or 4 over and over, you’re lifting, and you are practicing STFU.

If you are newer, Don’t be a kid with dynamite. Don’t eat the paint. Do yourself a favor and build in lots of learning time so you can learn from experience before you blow shit up or eat the paint.

- Reading without action is almost meaningless...
- Action without reading is most likely to result in just more blue pill objectives...
- Too much action with a little reading will blow shit up

So, the key is to find the right amount of action to fit your readings and circumstances
Today the American Psychological Association issued its first-ever guidelines for practice with boys/men’s. In it the concept of conventional (traditional) masculinity is outlined as ‘harmful’.

The main thrust of the subsequent research is that traditional masculinity—marked by stoicism, competitiveness, dominance and aggression—is, on the whole, harmful. Men socialized in this way are less likely to engage in healthy behaviors.

It would be easy to refute this basic presumption with countless examples of how all of these traits, most of which are innate parts of men’s evolved mental firmware, have been key in developing a civil society as well as healthy masculine identity. But what we’re seeing in this is a corruption of language that is leading to the standardization of the corruption of thought.

Stoicism, competitiveness, dominance and aggression are evolved aspects of the male psyche that have served men for millennia. To the Red Pill aware man this is self-evident. What is less evident is the new context in which these ‘educated’ men apply meaning to these terms. Academia has been so thoroughly assimilated by the Feminine Imperative that the men making official decrees about psychological principle no longer have the insight to understand that their perspective is informed by ‘female-correct’ thought.
What if TRP is wrong?

What if TRP is wrong?

The premise of this is flawed, and every time I hear someone say it, it just says the other person just isn't getting it. Do you want to know a secret? Do you really?

When I was first unplugging, /u/ultimatecad said something that perked my interest. That he never says I love you. Not unless he's getting sex on the regular. It was because I want to train her to fuck for comfort. Pretty crass huh? I liked that, told him I was stealing that one (and I find it is a rather good thing in my relationship too, it's a nice subtle signal that it's been a while babe, time to step up) And he basically summed up the entire RP manosphere with his response:

^Paraphrased: There. Right there, for all you fucking feminists who keep talking about this like a flawed ideology, that's all it is. Men talking to other men, swapping notes, and learning... thats it.

Thats all it is. I know Rollo talks about it like a praxeology (which it is), and when you read the description of that...

| Praxeology (Gr. πρᾶξις (praxis) “action”, λόγος (logos) “talk, speech”) is the deductive study of human action based on the notion that humans engage in purposeful behavior, as opposed to reflexive behavior like sneezing and inanimate behavior.

You realize, this shit isn't any different than PUA. Hell, when you read 'manosphere' it kind of makes the same conclusion, though a hell of a lot more words to get there.

We are just guys. Some of us had absent dads, shitty blue pill dads, some of us had great dads, and didn't listen. A few had great dads and did listen, but didn't actually understand, and just happened into being a natural. A big nasty ‘feminism' appeared and changed the game, but because we can't combine to talk about problems too well, took us a generation or two to figure out that we had better get together and start talking. (I argue it's the general civility of the modern life of abundance, and feminism just took credit for it, but thats another talk for another day)

Where do you think the professors 12 levels of dread came from? Where the Iron rules came from? Where do you think any of it came from?

Dudes, just like in the old mystery PUA days, wanted something, broke it down, came up with a theory, and told other guys. Other guys took it, implemented it, swapping notes, and eventually refining it to these wonderful axioms that we use today. Know why /u/gaylubeoil calls single moms whores and degenerates? It's because of the hundreds of guys before him that were/are dating and wifing up single moms, talking about their experiences. He takes all that, and comes to a very reasonable conclusion.

Does it work 100% of the time? Of course not. But generally, it's pretty on-point. That goes for just about everything. Should you 'never' say I love you unless you have had sex in the last 48 hours? the answer is yes/no/maybe.

And that's why TRP isn't wrong, it's not a thing that is right or wrong.

It's like calling the scientific method wrong, because we find out black holes aren't really black. Nothing wrong with the method, it's the conclusions were off, so we adjust, and carry on.

And this carries over to each one of your failures.

- Wife won't fuck?
- Hands too cold?
- Tattoo artist claimed you as his prize?
- Wanted to move the furniture around to teach her a lesson?
- Fessed up to 'making out' with a dude in a car?
- Wife is low quality, and only around because the law hangs over your head like a sickle?
- Wife decided to gain weight, because why look hot anymore?
- you decided to gain weight, because why bother?

None of this is TRP fault. None of it. Because TRP isn't a thing, it's just a word we use as shorthand, describing 30 some years of guys swapping notes. If something in here doesn't work for you, don't use it. You are responsible for yourself, as a man. Yeah, it sucks that women get to blame the world for their problems, and a lot of the time, someone else fixes it too. Except it doesn't. Imagine a life where your only tool is to complain about something. Talk about drudgery. You were blessed with the ability to raise and fall, based on your actions. Its a double edged sword, but beats the hell out of mediocrity.

I argue that everything you are bitching about in life is largely your fault (exceptions aside, if you're a black guy in Baltimore with a broken taillight, might just be out of your hands). you could have either cut loose, acted to rectify, or changed your outlook to put up with it and stop complaining.

So yeah, TRP didn't fail you... you failed you Me: 31, 126K/year, Ph.D. 155 pounds, 5 8'.
Her: 27, 5 3' 135 pounds, probably 8.5/10.

No kids.
So I just found out my (now) ex-wife has been cheating on me for the past 5 months.

What is fucking ridiculous about this is that I am very well aware of game - I started talking to girls in bars/clubs/coffee shops as a PUA back in 2010. That is how I met my current wife - I picked her up at a coffee shop and fucked her in her car the day after we met (I was 25 at the time, she was 21). I am now filing for divorce after 1.5 years marriage (together for 5 years total).

So yeah, I had never considered myself someone who would pay for a wife that was fucking some rando dude. But that is exactly what happened. I have no fucking clue why, other than I lost my game principles after getting married. So there you go, MRP is legit and necessary, even for people like myself who were thoroughly red-pilled before getting married!
I hopefully won’t be mauled by the moderators, but I want to share to the newbies. I had a lot of experience as one. Not an expert by any means, but this is what I learned and has been working for me. Do your own research, there’s a million videos online, weed out the BS, practice the basics. Few fundamentals practiced every day.

Thinking back, my parents never showed much affection to each other. Never touched or held hands as much as I can remember. But they never fought and still happily (?) married, and still do daily crossword puzzles together and other activities. More like the kind of love my grandparents had. But that type of love is over these days. I got my ass handed to me in my marriage. I guess that’s where I modeled my behavior... but that sh$t backfired and kept me in a dead bedroom for 10 years. It made me boring and predictable. When I started to apply Kino and learned its concepts, it felt amazing. Still does.

Girls like my wife have responsive desire. They respond to certain behaviors and the buildup of tension overtime. We see a hot girl and we automatically get a hard on and ready to go fuck, they see a d$ck and get disgusted. But GAME them for a few games (your wife) and then she is primed ready to go. You have to build the tension up in her mind. They love the tension. You have to let her know that her body is turning you on so badly and eventually you can’t take it anymore and just have to fuck her...You have to Game your wife. Build the tension. Push/pull her and use Kino during the week. Search for "Creating your slut" by the family alpha.

Always be touching her: Looking back, I only touched my wife when I wanted to have sex...at night time. She saw it coming a mile away. I didn’t know what I was doing. I rarely hugged, kissed, put my arm around her shoulder, picked her up, held hands, guided her through the door, etc. I prouded myself on being the “perfect” gentlemen who never “bothered her” and always “treated her with respect”. – but who also never got laid.

Need to make it a point to touch her every day. When you do Kino it doesn’t, and shouldn’t, always lead to sex. You doing this for yourself. Keeps you unpredictable.

-When walking through the threshold of a door (restaurant, etc..) lead her, but let her go through first, & put your hand on her lower back and guide her through the entrance way. The hand on the lower back is a great move to use. When out to eat with friends, double date, walking around, etc. She can feel it. Put it there likes it no big deal.

-Ass slap. Everyday. Use it playfully, especially if you just did AM, bonus points if you get “asshole” with a punch in the arm.. but keep on moving, don’t wait for a reaction. I slap her ass everyday now, it’s almost a habit. That’s called a Drive-By. She’ll eventually start doing it to you. Just yesterday, she said , “ wow, you already took out the trash? thanks.”. I simply said, “of course (ass slap...keep walking)”.

-Touch her anytime you pass her in the hallway or in a room, etc. You can also do the fist bump, pick her up and spin her a few times, pick her up and pin against the wall, counter, etc. kiss her, sometimes grind her hips or ass, etc. Doesn’t always have to be sexual. Mix it up. You can also do the cheers (toast) move at dinner time with glasses. Just fucking touch her.

The point is, you have to remind her that there is a man in the house at all times who wants to FUCK her. Not by words, by actions. I also want my boys (3 boys: 8, 6 (twins)) to see what a healthy marriage is supposed to look like so they can model themselves after me when they grow older. Of course, leave the sexual drive-bys out -in front of them... But they do see me gently spanking (patting) my wife’s ass in a light hearted way, or hugging her, or twirling her around like we’re dancing, or picking her up. Etc.

Other good moves that I do:

1. I sit on the bar stools in our kitchen – mainly when I help the kids with homework- but also because my wife is short and I can pull her into me for some good kino moves. Sitting down at the stool, wrap your arm around her as she walks by for a short hug. If she is facing you and talking, sometimes I put my index finder out and put it into the top of her jeans and pull her towards me. Maybe a little ass grab or kiss, and then she’ll stop all the verbal intercourse she was spewing about her “bad day” at work. Kelly is such a bitch at work, Terry did this and that,, and you will also get credit for “listening…”. If kids aren’t in the room, pull her onto you like she is straddling you..while on the stool. Grind it. Have some cocky sayings..

2. Have the radio on, and for no reason start spinning her around like an impromptu dance lesson. Is she starts dancing with the kids after that -bonus points.

3. Pick her up like a little child, show her your strength, spin or carry her to a different room, put her on the sofa and kiss and maybe a little grind. But immediately get up and walk away acting all confidently and cocky. Have something to go do though. “I’m going to check on the kids..” don’t let it lead to sex.

4. In the kitchen, go up behind her and kiss her neck, ass slap, grind on that ass, etc... I pick her up a lot and put her on the edge of the counter for a few seconds, having my way with her. Then immediately put her down like it’s nothing to you. Be cocky & playful with her.

5. When passing her in the living room, if she’s sitting down finger fucking her phone, put your hand out and just graze it over her shoulder as you walk by. Let’s her know you are there.. Tell her your going to the garage to lift and to have these panties on when you get back.. Don’t look for a response. Eventually, she'll have them on for you.. :)

6. By fun & flirty. Ask yourself ,” What would the guy – who’s she secretly cheating on you with- do in this situation?” and then do that. I was never touchy flirty with her, so that’s easy. Chad would be flirting with her, touching her in all different ways. It’s like cat nip for them. He would be cocky and playful.

7. Kino has to be timed with her cycle though. I never do it around days 22-25. She gets pissy around that time. It backfires on me. I’ll keep the sex undertones low and just do a hug or something. Also never on days 1-3. Shark week, at least on the first 3 days, I don’t touch her at all. Let that sh$t bleed out. But days 4,5,6 I ramp it up big time. On Day 6, I always fuck her. Never fails. The night of day 5 and early in day 6, I’m telling her that I can’t wait to pull her panties off later that night, I’m so f$cking horny I can’t take it. Tell her you can’t wait to get home to fuck her hard. I’ll even send a sext during the day about what color panties she’s wearing, etc.

Coupled with good kino, her knowing that you are a touchy feely type person now whose all about sex, & when your social value starts to increase and dread kicks in...when you go out with the boys to the bar one night for a drink or two, she’ll make it a point to please you and beg you not to go.... Trust me
Sex Addicted v. Sex Starved

by Red-Curious | August 7, 2018 | Link

Defining the Difference

Sexual addiction is a real thing that affects many men in our country. There are probably a few dozen, at least! Props to these guys for dealing with a very serious struggle. For the rest of us, I'm increasingly confident that what the world shames men for as "addictive behaviors" is really the product of starvation of an important biological imperative. Of course, one can't discern between an addiction and starvation until their desire has been sated.

For example, a true glutton is addicted to food. This is, unsurprisingly, quite common even under the very relaxed psychological standards that try to avoid labeling people as "food addicts." Here's what it really boils down to, though:

- The addict will keep on eating even after he is full.
- The starved person will stop eating once he has been filled.

The same is true for any other biological imperative, including our sexuality.

Many of you may know my background as a Christian. One thing the church is great at doing is shaming men for their sexuality. I can't count the number of men who have told me, "I'm a sex addict," as some big confession for which they're looking for my cure. I'd ask them about their behaviors and it would line up - they'd be thinking about sex constantly, be watching porn constantly, fantasizing about all kinds of things that their wives would never do with them, cheating on their wives, etc. I always ask two questions after I hear their confession: How often do you have sex with your wife? And is it good sex or duty sex? Sure enough, "We have sex about once a month, and it's usually duty sex." Hmm ...

These men, and countless others, are controlled by their sexual desires - but they are not addicted. They are merely unfulfilled. This distinction matters.

Why This Matters

We want sex. That's a good thing. Society tells women it's a good thing and that they should embrace their sexuality. For fun, I googled "women should embrace their sexuality." The results are pretty expected: 10 straight links of encouragement to women to embrace their sexuality. This is a good result. I like it. What if I change it to "men should embrace their sexuality"? I get 1 link shaming men for being toxic and blaming male-kind for school shootings (?!), 1 link that encourages male sexuality, 2 links about the "masculine" in a BDSM relationship, and 6 links telling women to embrace their sexuality. Surprisingly, despite my search history, none of the manosphere blogs came up. I changed the search again to ask: "is male sexuality good or evil?" I get 6 links shaming male sexuality, 1 link encouraging male sexuality, 2 links shaming male use of porn, and 1 link of sex tips.

In short, if a man misunderstands his own sexual desire as an addiction rather than a starvation, he's likely to buy into the lies that society feeds him, making it harder for him to swallow the pill and embrace some of the best parts of being a man. If society can convince men that their mentality about sex is a disorder, then those men will be compelled to look for a cure. And believe me, there are countless people selling all kinds of "cures" - from physical pills to psychological strategies, and even philosophical ideals that advance someone else's agenda.

People as a whole are easily suggestible. If someone tells you, "You're fat," even if we know it's objectively wrong, some part of us will wonder if there is any truth in the statement. Likewise, if someone says, "You have a problem. I have something that could really help you with that," we're most often curious. If the world tries to tell you you're a "sex addict," at some point you'll probably question whether or not they're right. This type of questioning is good, but the suggestion often lends itself to a particular conclusion. That's why attorneys always ask leading questions on cross-examination: because when you suggest a conclusion that doesn't seem far-fetched, people are more inclined to agree, and this often even changes a person's internal memory and point of reference on the issue once they have a present verbalization of assent to a concept that really should have gone the other way. But let's not get too sidetracked on that point, as I'm probably preaching to the choir.

What To Do?

I remember the days where I attempted to suppress my sexuality altogether. I just wrote my story on r/RPChristians, if you want to read more about it, but the TL;DR of the relevant part is that my wife reasonably didn't want to have sex with me, but her and the church shamed me for use of porn, leaving me with no sexual outlet at all. I was told I was addicted to sex because of how frequently I was using porn at one point. Once I embraced the fact that I was sex starved and not sex addicted, things started changing.

For one, my internal desire for sex is now easily sated. Shortly after discovering RP I would engage in mental masturbation, getting excited about all the sex I would have once I was "man enough." Of course, the time soon came when I could have sex on demand. I found that I no longer wanted it as often as I thought I would when I was in my starved state. I remember fasting for a week once. When the hunger truly set in all I could think about was how much I would eat when the fast was over. Then the fast ended. I loaded up my plate with all kinds of goodies ... then ate half of it and went off to do something else. That doesn't mean I don't want sex anymore - I certainly do. Rather, it means that I can now enjoy my sexuality to the brim and appreciate it for what it is without an insatiable desire that forced me to pedestalize that which could momentarily appease me.

Second, once my desire for sex was sated, I was no longer controlled by my wife's sexuality.
This meant that I was now free in my marriage to do what I wanted to do, and when I wanted to do it. If I wanted to have sex, I'd have sex. If I wanted to go to the gym, I'd go to the gym. If I wanted to do something to advance my mission, I'd do that too. My life became mine to control because I no longer demanded her supply; she supplied on my demand ... or more accurately nowadays, I am the supply that she's demanding, and I make sure I'm a commodity she doesn't get or see anywhere else - especially among the other church men.

Third, once I was no longer controlled by my wife's sexuality, she became controlled by mine. Because I didn't need her in order to be happy and fulfilled, the balance of power shifted, per Rollo's Cardinal Rule of Relationships: The person with the most power is the one who needs the other the least. When I didn't need to bend to her will, she bent to mine - and she was happier for it.

As I've noted on RPC often before, women are empaths - and that subject deserves a post of its own. But the basic concept is simply that when a man sacrifices his own happiness for the sake of his wife, she empathically experiences his unhappiness alongside of him and it makes the relationship miserable. When the man pursues his own happiness, even at the expense of his wife's interests, she empathically experiences his happiness alongside him, and it makes the relationship enjoyable for both of them.

Conclusion

Don't pedestalize your sexuality anymore than you pedestalize your wife. Believing society's lie that all men are sex-craved maniacs leaves a power of suggestion that you'd be better off rejecting - and not because you want to prove a counter-point (that you're not a "sex-craved maniac"), but because you have a healthy point of origin about why you crave sex in the first place.

ONEitis is dangerous, whether the object of your affection is a tangible woman or a sexual ideology. If you find yourself sexually hungry, don't become obsessed with your hunger. Accept that either you're not in a time of feasting and embrace the fast (monk mode) or go have sex and curb your appetite. Either way, by re-framing your thinking away from an addictive mentality and toward a regulated (not restrained) desire can give you a greater sense of control in how you express your sexuality, which both improves your attractive draw and ultimately makes you more satisfied as a man.
I often write about the positives of my life. I write about how well my son and daughter are doing, how great my wife and I are doing, and that my life, as a whole, is awesome.

Today, I want to talk about the deep valleys I’ve walked to reach these peaks. I want to do this not so I can feel that fresh stab of past pains in my heart, but rather, because I want men to see, there is a light at the end of the tunnel and you just need to keep walking through hell to get there.

I’ve been there. I get it.

I’ve been in the car, unable to hear the sound of music or wind because I’m so lost in my head. Heart pounding, pulse in my teeth, with the loudest voice in my head saying, “What would happen if you just pulled the steering wheel into that tree, pole, or median...?”

I’ve been in the shower, the only place I could truly be alone and just sat on the floor, staring at the drain, letting the hot water scald me while I regressed into the abyss of my mind wondering, “Where did it go so wrong...?”

- I’ve punched through the walls.

- I’ve had the drunken nights.

- I’ve screamed into the pillows.

- I’ve cried my eyes out until there wasn’t a drop left to shed.

I’ve told myself, “It wasn’t supposed to be like this, I did everything right, there’s no point to this fucking life...”

I’ve reached the point where I didn’t care if I was alive or dead.

The point where my only relief was sleeping because that was my only escape from reality. All I wanted to do was retreat to the realm of unconscious and even there I was at risk of attack from the self-hate and loathing which I felt in my day to day existence.

Retreat only prolongs the pain; it kicks the solution to the suffering down the road.

I decided to stand up and choose risking death on my feet than to continue ‘living’ another day on my knees.

_I did this alone._

I should have had my brethren there to help me.

Society has recognized this and in an attempt to deconstruct and eradicate the masculine man, they’ve made it so men cannot find one another.

This is why I’m writing.

This is a rope being thrown to you, hoping you find it and climb out of the hole before you choose to end it all, or worse, quit and remain ‘living’ in your grave.

Living in a constant state of anxiety, fear, and self-repression isn’t living at all, it’s barely existing and it is this state which I’m hoping this piece helps pull men from.

You don’t have to be Perfect, you have to be you.

The anxiety, suicidal thoughts, depression, and self-hate stem from the thoughts of how things _‘should be’_:

- You look at who you are and you compare it to how the perfect self would be.

- You think of your life as it is and how you feel your life _should_ be.

- You’ve said the nice things and walked the righteous path, yet the ‘asshole’ is winning and here you are, chopped liver.

Listen to me now brothers, your life is exactly how it should be and you are who you’ve decided to be.

At _any point_ you could make the decision to _flip the switch_ and start living a genuine life. It isn’t easy and it isn’t quick, but it beats living another minute hating the fact that you’re still awake.

We can destroy that voice inside telling you how terrible you are, how inadequate you are, how stupid you are...

We can silence it through action.

Last week's post about a wife going to drinks with coworkers struck a cord with me because I noticed 99 comments and 2 distinct camps. I added my 2 cents but later realized the logic of the other side. To summarize, a wife has been going out with male ex-coworkers to get drinks. Husband wants to know if he needs to draw a hard line or let it go and play aloof.

I was staunchly in the draw a hard line and don't back down camp. I see it as a sign of disrespect, and once a man loses that respect, it's difficult to recover. Now, after following the thread I see the strategy of playing aloof so the underlying problem can be addressed first, which is the lack of feelz from her husband and the desire to get it from a group of fun-loving, partying male co-workers. Of course she could just want attention from every guy she meets, but let's just go with the more probable scenario that her husband isn't providing enough stimulus and she's bored.

What struck me in the comments was the tendency for both camps to criticize the other side instead of realizing they both could be valid depending on the circumstance.

Play out a couple scenarios because the wife/husband dynamic determines which course is more effective.

Scenario One: I tell my wife if she continues disrespecting me with these guys then it will jeopardize my monogamy which is already hanging on by a thread. Tell her if she wants to open the pandoras box of drinking with the opposite sex, then let's do it but don't get hurt feelings. Result: Either she calls my bluff and we now have a semi-open relationship, she stops seeing the dudes, feels guilty and has loyalty to her husband, or she still sees them but behind my back.

Scenario Two: I play aloof and crack a few jokes but make an effort to add some feelz back in the relationship. Plan some trips, have a few date nights, and generally be more fun to be around so she gets that validation from me. Either she stops boozing it with dudes because I'm once again Mr. Goodtimes until she gets bored again, or she now double-dips and gets entertained by both groups and I really have to work on DNGAF.

Wrapping up, my conclusion was that you know which approach is best for your relationship. I could also see using both at different times - acting aloof until she crosses some line like being out past midnite then going ultimatum.

The point is that I didn't see anyone in the comments mention that we're all on the same team working for the same results and sometimes it's just two different but equally effective strategies. The discourse can turn into the Democrat v Republican or Christian v Atheist debates where one takes a stand and anyone who disagrees is a moron. Most of the topics of MRP are black and white and listed clearly on the sidebar. But the gray area does exist and it would be beneficial to identify those early and keep it constructive. I'm here to improve. I can't learn and change if I think my opinion is always and only correct.

Also, coming up on my 1 year MRP anniversary and wanted to say thanks for the help.
Your wife really doesn’t want your love...

by psychosis2020 | September 24, 2018 | Link

Your wife really doesn’t want your love, well not in the way that I think most men define love.

I had a realisation the other day at work, as I’m the boss, so part of the role have to show an interest in peoples personal lives and it is interesting discussing the dynamics of their relationships (both male and female), as they often come to me for insight.

One thing I noticed is that whenever they made statements about love with their partners or the use of the word in messages (SMS etc..), I spotted a trend.

Take this first statement told to me by a women (there has been some infidelity on the part of the man and he is acting extremely needy now trying to placate her and get relationship back to where it was, although I think she is losing attraction to him - I don’t want to go into details but it wasn’t a very alpha way of cheating);

| “I can see now he loves me more than I love him”.

What is interesting is that if you replace the word love with the word need it makes total sense to the loss of attraction i.e.

| “I can see now he needs me more than I need him”.

We all know this spells trouble, especially for a women’s ability to be attracted to a man.

Another thing I saw in a message from a male to female (who has severely lost frame and experiencing massive issues from his women - I suspect she may be cheating on him) was;

| “I will always love you” and “I love you with all my heart”.

Let’s translate these to;

| “I will always need you” and “I need you with all my heart”.

Clearly not a good position to be in with a women.

When you are thinking about or professing your love for you wife or partner I would ask you to firstly try the same substitute and evaluate the statement again. If the one with need makes as much or more sense then I would seriously evaluate your frame and definitely not be verbalising this.

From reading MRP and ASKMRP I think that some guys, even though they think are in frame, as they are handling shit tests and STFU, however until they can untangle the concept of love from need, they will never truly be.

This isn’t an easy thing to do as our first experience of love was towards our parents and this was definitely formed out of need as obviously we couldn’t survive without them.

The love for our children, is also interesting IMO as it is largely reciprocation of the need they have for us and the result of evolution to ensure the survival of our genetic material via our offspring.

A good discussion point (with the exception of the obvious; release of chemicals such as oxytocin and dopamine which serve an evolutionary purpose also) is it possible to have love for your wife without need and how would you define it?

We can talk about reciprocal needs being met but we know generally women aren’t the best at this Briffault’s law etc..
Success and Coffins

I once heard the phrase, “The only successful marriage is someone standing next to a coffin” and couldn’t help but chuckle in side. The bluepill harpies love to laugh and wallow in the supposed failure when one of our brethren is about to end his marriage. The funny thing is, where’s the failure? In investing there’s the sunk cost fallacy and it applies to life too. It’s a value we discuss often here; we challenge the guys in shitty relationships to not get stuck in it. Yet there are the naysayers laughing at those guys, “Oh look another merp has sabotaged his marriage”

Several threads in the past week or so have discussed the states of marriage. This is a supposition on my part but in one of those threads I posited that probably 80% of marriages are just ok. If you were looking at a bell curve, maybe 10% on either end were extreme. 10% were disasters, and 10% were excellent. But that middle hump is likely just meh. Divorce now stands at 40-50% depending on your source. The supposed positive; Divorce numbers continue to decline, but those numbers are likely skewed. Men and women are living together and marrying less. Men are opting out of marriage, likely due to the penalty of divorce among other things. It’s possible that many of the divorces of the past are not happening simply because people cohabitate, the relationship ends, and they move on. So the question still remains, if you’re marriage (or LTR) ends in divorce was it a failure?

Of course not; that’s simply the attitude of someone who has no outcome independence or abundance mentality. Let me give you a simple analogy. You set up a great vacation, and take the trip of a lifetime. You go to some amazing tropical paradise or old world destination. You eat drink and be merry. One day before the trip is over, your wallet gets stolen. Would you call that trip a failure? Hardly. The end may have sucked, the fallout may have been a pain, but in the end you’ll look back at those pictures and say, “Ohh wow that was incredible. I can’t wait to do it again.”

Vacations and Wallets

I’ve been lucky enough to have three serious relationships in my life. One was in college; she was a fun, party girl who was down for anything. She was the first girl I thought I could see myself with in the long term. The second was a girl I met just out of college. She was finishing up her degree in grad school, I was a young budding engineer, and she really knew how challenge my intellect. To this day she was the wittiest girl I have ever dated, searing, dry and goofy would spill out of her mouth in a matter of seconds. She’d leave you gasping and wondering, ‘was that an insult or was she flirting?’ Currently I’m in my most recent. I met my wife through work and she had a proper resume for being my misses. She was funny, attractive, low n-count, wanted a traditional family; the package. Throw in dating in between, some short term flings and plenty of frogs instead of princesses and you have the sum of UE McGills love life. These were and are still all successful relationships, and to date none have ended with me standing next to a coffin.
I talk to my wife about aspirations for our kids; how to teach them when a relationship has met its natural end. My biggest fault was those early long term relationships probably went on too long because I didn’t know how to say, “yep this has run its course.” I was too invested in the memories of the past and the romanticized version I had in my head. I think especially guys with a nice guy tendency get so invested in trying to fix things that they forget to say “yep, not worth fixing time to move on and put energy into something else.” I hope that I can impart this on my kids that it’s ok to say “We’ve changed and the relationship is different now and not for the better. Maybe it is time to end it.”

People get caught up in the past; they romanticize it for what it was, and not for what it is. What it ‘is’, is in the past. It will have no ability to change the present from where you are now. It’s like that great vacation where you learned a lot about the world but had your wallet stolen. You may have learned about the Louvre or that Elephants are matriarchal but you also learned to keep your wallet in your front pocket and not advertise it.

My relationships were fundamental in changing me and allowing me to grow to a different point. The girl in college taught me to never go back to a party, the girl early in my career taught me that sometimes someone is too insecure and demanding, no matter how much they make you laugh. My wife has taught me what it means to raise a family and give beyond just you. You know what? I wouldn’t give any of those relationships up, or the experience they provided. So how could I call them failures? If my wife asked me tomorrow for a divorce would it be a failure? Three kids, and at least 15 years of good times would be hard evidence against it.

Backstory to you 2.0

Sometimes people sabotage their marriage. Maybe they sprinkle some alpha on it. Maybe they vetted wrong. Maybe even both partners woke up and went, ‘meh’. Surely that’s not a failure, just a change in the circumstances. I think many people sabotage marriages, jobs and friendships because they just don’t have the courage to stand up and say “This aint working!”

So remember our mission isn’t to save marriages, it’s to save the man. You need to be able to step outside the situation and ask yourself, ‘has this met its natural end or is the value worth me putting effort into it.’ If you embrace abundance mentality you know you can replace the contents of your wallet. You know that you can always look back and remember the fond memories. And you know you can always look back and say, “this is where I learned to do...”

So if you’re miserable and she’s miserable be a leader and end it. There’s no failure in that. Your mission should be and should always be focused on rule zero. If circumstances change, acknowledge and move on. Don’t be afraid of failure, because if you can walk away from something and say “I learned to do xyz” it’s not a failure.
[Married Game]. How to initiate quality sex by covertly communicating your explicit expectations.

by A_Rex | February 14, 2017 | Link

I've gotten some questions recently on how I initiate, and on how I get my wife to engage in the more involved sexual experiences I concoct.

95% of the time, it boils down to this - covertly communicating an explicit expectation.

What do I mean by this? Well, let's review the main ways to communicate the desire for sex:

- The covert contract. AVOID. The covert contract is the epitome of Beta faggotry. For our purposes, This is where the man performs a non-sexual act with the unstated hope/expectation that the woman will have sex with him as a result. This is why choreplay fails. This is why the Nice Guy^TM who takes the girl to the fancy dinner goes home to masturbate after the date while she gets drilled by Booty-Call Brad. Notice the key here is that the desire to fuck is not stated by the man in any format. There is no communication of the desired outcome.

- Overt request/demand. Depending on you, the context, and your woman, this can work. This is where you tell her, in plain English, that you want to fuck/be blown right now. It can be hot in the right circumstances (you've got her pretty worked up at dinner and tell her you'll be ravaging her the minute you get home, then pick her up and toss her on the bed the minute you get in the door). Certain women also get a kick out of her man telling her to suck his cock right then and there on the couch during the news.

However, a lot of women don't respond well to that a lot of the time. Mine doesn't (about 5%) - for this to work she's already got to be horny as fuck. I need to put in the work to get her to my desired horniness level, and gentlemen, I love my job. So how do you get her into the full immersive sex experiences like my Coconut Spa, my dirty cop-on-cop handcuff session, or just get her wearing a sexy outfit for a nightcap of debauchery? Here's how:

- Covertly communicate the explicit expected outcome. Here's how I make sure that the Coconut Spa stays different than a covert contract to give her a massage in exchange for sex. When I set up the experience, I got into character. I told her the benefits of coconut oil (great massage oil and lube) with a wink and smile. I explained that it was a full body massage experience culminating in the internal massage finale and that no one in the Spa was allowed to wear any clothing. I then asked if she wanted a session.

See what I did there? I never told her explicitly that the coconut massage was an excuse to oil her up and fuck her senseless. But through my words, inflection and body language, I made it abundantly clear that's exactly what would be happening. We know women prefer covert communication, and we know this kind of banter is literally foreplay for them. I had no doubt that my wife understood exactly what I meant. So it's up to her to accept or decline, with complete understanding that this was all about sex. Stated differently, this is how you ask her if she wants to fuck without turning her off by using blunt language. I keep the Coconut Spa entirely sexual too. Once she asked for a coconut massage without the sex. My reply "We must insist on maintaining our integrity and commitment to excellence here at the Coconut Spa. We will not perform any less than the full body pleasure experience at

You can do this with literally anything. We don't drink any alcohol during the week (my rule), but the other night she wanted to have some Prosecco with me. My response - "only if you're dressed appropriately". With those words, what I really told her was "I'm not cheating on my cut unless you're wearing something slutty and fucking me properly after". Women aren't stupid - they get it and love this stuff. This is fun. She knew what I meant. Her options were: accept the offer, decline and not drink, or decline and drink alone. She went with option 1, and a good time was had by all. (Note: the very idea of her dressing naughty for me is a turn on for her. My covert communication was foreplay. Her spending an hour in a sexy teddy for the purpose of being pounded like a slut later was a turn on for her. All of this shit is fun for her, and should be fun for you too. And it's not a demand or forced - she can easily decline).

It doesn't even have to be that intricate (though you should be inventing some intricate experiences - you're the man, lead her to the sex you want). It can be as simple as escalating kino and whispering "take off your pants" or "want to go upstairs?" You are initiating sex in a fun way with no room for misinterpretation.

Edit: Here's my newest idea. Steal it if you want: There's a cool secluded spot in a public park overlooking a small river near our town. When the spring arrives, I'll set up a picnic with wifey. Little wine, cheese, all that crap. It'll be a surprise. When she asks what to wear, I'll tell her dress/skirt. When we get there, I'll pull the picnic stuff out of the trunk. When she figures it out, I'll tell her that if she wants to come with me, she'll take her panties off right there in the parking lot and leave them in the car. If she puts up a fuss I'll stick the basket back in the trunk, pull out a basketball and start walking to the courts. THAT's how you run the picnic sex. I'm covertly telling her that I want her to be a total slut without using blunt language. Her taking off her panties like that is an act of submission, and her walking to the picnic spot pantiless and knowing what's going to happen will be a turn on for her. Or not, in which case I'll work on my 3-pointers.

Remember: Be Fucking Fun!
[FR] "Twist my nipples. I want to feel you desire me"
by Red_Rising | February 22, 2016 | Link

Summary: Women want to be dominated by a high SMV man. Do whatever it takes to raise your SMV.

I entered my marriage in betaland, marrying a LTR of about 3 years. We've been married about 4 years and it's been bluepill from the beginning, complete with starfish dutysex 2-3 times a week. I got tons of resistance such as "Mabye I have a low libido" "It's painful for me" "I'd be more willing if you would [follow my commands more]" "I don't know why I'm always tired!"

About 6 months ago, I was browsing through a post on "The most hated subreddits ever" and came across TRP. I began reading, and I couldn't stop. I literally stayed up all night reading. It was like all the truth that I knew deep down inside but couldn't bring to understanding literally jumping out of my phone screen into me. Truth is like that.

Change started with me. My wife wouldn't let me get a gym membership [at first], so I began working out with whatever I could. I'm tall lanky guy, so gaining muscle mass was a matter of eating more and working out. I did pull-ups and dips on a rafter in the attic, used gallon jugs of water for curls and side raises, and did calisthenics. I read the books and tried to implement the principles as best as I could (This was by far the hardest part). I failed and failed and failed some more.

My wife took notice of me trying to improve myself and went through different stages. First, she mocked me (especially with lifting). Then she took the concerned motherly position of encouraging me like I was her kid with dreams of one day becoming an astronaut or president, but I could tell she was just waiting for this "phase" to wear off. I began to tell her that I needed to lead. This was a mistake. She came up with 1,000 reasons why I sucked at leading. It wasn't until I stopped trying to negotiate and just began taking charge that she began to relinquish control a little.

I began to own my shit. She used to ask me to do chores around the house. I now did them without being asked and when she did, I learned the WONDERFUL PHRASE from NMMNG: "I'll handle it". The frame was: i'm not my wife's bitch, but my house is my house and I'm taking personal responsibility to maintain it.

I also began owning my shit at work. That's where the FR begins. I stayed late to finish some paperwork a few nights ago and was planning to go out with some coworkers afterwards. I called to let her know I'd be late Her: No, come home now! Me: I have some important things to finish, and I want to go out. Her: I'm busy, please come help me (this is common. I help her a ton) Me: I'll let you know when I'm on my way home.

I finished my shit and then thought of implementing something I saw on TRP:

[later on] Me: I'm on my way home, see you in a half hour Her: complains about all the stuff
she has to do ok well i'll see you soon Me: Hold on, before you go... I want you to put on [specific lengere she has] Her: (dumbfounded, we had sex last night) ...ok Me: Great, see you soon.

When I got home, she had put a robe on over the clothes I had requested, and was finishing up her work on the computer. She had also made the bed: Something she hardly EVER does. She immediately tried to get me to become OI by kissing me and then pulling away. I maintained OI and told her I'd give her some time to finish up and went to take a shower.

She came at me with more intensity than ever. She said things I've never heard her say before. She even attempted deepthroating me. Then came something I never thought I'd ever hear her say in a million years: "Twist my nipples. I want to feel you desire me". She came hard. and... oh yeah, so did I.

Case in point: Women want to be dominated by a high SMV man. It is your duty as a husband to continue to raise your SMV. As you do, she will begin to want you.

Lessons Learned:

1. Low libido/Sex hurts/I'm busy is bullshit. All of those things are only true when the man has a low SMV. Raise your SMV, watch them evaporate.
2. Be patient. This was 6 months in the making. It takes a long time to unwind all the bluepill conditioning we've all been through. MarriedRedPill is about self-improvement. Your wife is probably going to judge your self improvement the toughest. You have to have real results before she notices. It won't happen overnight BUT! When it does happen, it will be lasting, and I am convinced it will be worth it. Read the entire sidebar, read the books, set goals, and figure out what you have to do to get there. Then go fucking do it.
STFU and you
by weakandsensitive | December 7, 2016 | Link

I tend to post when I see common themes here at MRP. The most recent theme that I see popping up is the inability to STFU appropriately.

What does 'STFU appropriately' mean? Lets start with what it doesn't mean. It doesn't mean not talking and trying to silent treatment your wife like a retarded 5 year old. It doesn't mean, stop talking completely and retreating back to the notion that it's "better to remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak and remove all doubt". Neither of these two methods meet the aim of STFU.

The aim of STFU is to say exactly what you mean, no more, no less, embracing the uncomfortable silence, and demonstrating comfort in this discomfort.

My first real exposure to the power of STFU was when I read about and tried out the 'Apocalypse Opener'. Effectively, it goes like this..

| You rock up to a chick and, in a confident, level voice you say |
| “Hey, how's it going.” |
| She will say |
| “Fine.” |
| You then say |
| “Cool. What are you doing later?” |
| She will say |
| “I’m not sure.” |
| You then say |
| “Do you want to come home with me?” |
| Then you hold. |
| Hold. |
| HOLD……………….. |
| HOLD IT MY SON…………………….. |
| HOLD THE FUCKING LINE………………
Boom. Makeout.

When you say "Do you want to come home with me?" - there is always a total and complete dead silence for anywhere between 5 to 30 seconds while she processes what just happened.
That dead silence is a killer. It's awkward, it's tense, and every urge in your body is on edge waiting for a response.

The urge to look away, the urge to laugh "haha", or to fill in that void with some other bullshit is high. But that reaction is going to betray you - the moment you fill that void with appeasement, backing down from the clear, pointed, message is the moment you lose.

By breaking that awkwardness, by not STFUing, what you're showing is that you didn't have complete ownership over what you said and that you don't stand by it completely - you lack the congruence with which you just asked the question. If a little bit of awkward silence can get you to back down from your extremely confident stated position, what kind of spine do you really have? And I'm not just talking words here - I'm talking the entire body language projected during that awkward silence.

The responses can range from shock, laughter, ridicule, disbelief, flattery, outright rejection.
Doesn't matter. It's not about her response - it's about the fact that you don't crumble.

This is where I see the common refrain at MRP. Where STFU is used as a way to stop talking and avoiding conflict, instead of stating exactly the message you wanted to state, owning it to it's fullest, and embracing the turbulent conflict that's bound to happen - where your body language says "Here is exactly what I want. I make no apologies for what I want. Ball's now in your court." and then you wait for the response to meet your satisfaction or figure out your next steps.

When I say STFU, what I really mean is "don't crumble". Don't back down, don't break away, don't back peddle, don't look for appeasement. When you decide to say something - mean it to your fullest. And if you don't mean something, don't fill voids with unnecessary fluff because you feel slightly uncomfortable with silence.

If you've never tried anything like that opener before - give it a go. Give it a go with your wife if you really want to. For most of you guys, you'll probably surprise her.
Speaking of boundaries
by Redpillbrigade17 | October 24, 2018 | Link

Been reading some of the askMRP posts lately and it’s painful. Plus the OYS thread is a continuous head shaker.

GUYS:

1. Some of you spend way too much time online going through all the OYS details. Talk about victim puke and beating your head against the wall. Oh my I’ve been such a beta it hurts so bad. Tell you what: more than 15 min. a day on reddit & posting shit long posts on this sub is beta !

You all know what you need to do.

1. She said this she said that. Who cares. If you write any post with “what do I say to this / she pinned me with this question.” you have not yet understood the basics. You =the prize means your sole job is to build an amazing life for yourself. Be a strong, confident, accomplished masculine man. Then the woman comes with her feminine beauty and fun and distraction and energy, and she complements you. Boom. That’s the mindset. If you can’t see it that way you need distance. You’ve been living with her for years, decades and routines sucked you in? Slowly get a break. Detach. Achieve perspective. Go see an old friend in an old town for a few days. Go do do a walking trek. Backpacking. Whatever. Then come back and you’ll see her with new eyes. Anything she does or says is cute. You’ll let her talk (you WANT her to talk - a quiet woman is a bad sign), and you’ll tease her and you’ll game her. That’s your job, that’s what she needs and wants. Make her do little things for you. Then maybe bigger things. If she has good ideas - great, adopt them. She must feel your strength of character and her hamster start working for you wondering “how do I serve him better? I want this man. How do I mess with his head?” Eventually you’ll want much of that to be of course through sex - the most enjoyable kind of distraction for a man when it comes to what a female human can bring.

Read 16 commandments of poon every morning or every day before coming home from work. It could be as simple as that.

1. Lift lift lift ? Of course - mental and physical benefits are fundamental. But don’t get stuck in your head with “I need to get my 8-pack or bench press 300 lbs then she’ll fuck me”. She’s way more interested in what you do with the gains & stamina from the gym, how you lead your life and how you dominate any of your social circles. Social game matters A LOT. Make a plan to take her out with another couple where you subtly or openly dominate the other guy (not like an asshole, but like a true leader worth following). Like one of the people who work for you or something. Have her see you in some leadership/ competent role. That will give her the tingles and subconsciously tell her you’re the alpha dog way more than your muscular Rambo ass getting distracted by your own look int the mirror now that you have biceps guns. Women work on another dimension and they will smell that kind of weakness and “in your head”/ self consciousness a mile away. Of course the muscles will help you ONCE in the bedroom, and will certainly make you more fuckable to her, and sex way more fun, but it’s nowhere near enough. You MUST get social.

and lastly boundaries:

1. Other posts/questions are “how do I punish her for this”. Punishment doesn’t work. Think in terms of rewards and when it comes to negative consequences the only ones that matter (ie boundaries )are ones you can 100% control. Like remove yourself from a situation. Or not spend money on X. You cannot act like a judge / law enforcement type if you’re trying to game and attract her and get her to bed. That type of behavior is dry, unsexy and reeks of insecurity. Stop trying to control her. Quit that shit and focus on being an attractive, fun, good, tough man who rewards his lady with his time and affection- when she’s fun and engaging to be around. Otherwise you have better things to do.
Tonight some things clicked.

We're doing a major renovation to our home so we're staying with my wife's sister and husband. It's not great.

The renovation has another 4 months to go but some things were finished today. I went over to have a look and wasn't happy. There were some details missed in the work and I decided I needed to speak to the contractor about it.

My wife asked me what I was looking for and when I told her the Framers business card, she asked why. I told her things weren't in line with my expectations. She asked what my plan was and I said, "call him, tell him to fix it"

"Don't do that, they're already behind and blah, yammer, blah, moan".

And here's the click. Normally I would take the frustration from the fuckup on the job site and direct it at her. And we'd fight and well, that sorta fight you either lose or, well, you just lose fights with women over shit like that. They don't fight fair and honestly, a fight without a real prize ain't a fight I'm looking for anymore.

Before I said a thing about it, I just walked past her.

"Where are you going??!?!"

"To the house"

I believe I heard, "but what about dinner" as I closed the door.

I went to the house and called the contractor. He came by and the two of us hashed it out. Like men. Project somewhat delayed as a result but it's back on track in terms of end product. He also knows that I'm watching the work and won't tolerate shitty workmanship. If I wanted average quality, I would do it myself.

2 hours later, I'm still on the site, cleaning some stuff up and I hear the door close. Wife walks in. Plate of food.

"You need to tell me why you're so Angry with me"

"I'm not"

"why the hell did you just walk out?!?"

"It wasn't a place I wanted to be. I had things to do and so I came here to do them" the golden silence...broken by the sound of a squeaky wheel starting to turn

"did you call the contractor? what did he say? how pissed is he with us?

a kiss on the forehead

"it's taken care of"

"I brought you dinner ya know"

Old me would have said "no thanks" in that butthurt, childish tone.

"awesome, thanks". it was delicious.

She smiled and said she'd see me back home.

Now this is the part where a guy in my stage of development would say,"and then I got my first great hummer in a month!" or "ANAL, BOO YA!!"

But I'm not. It's not bed time yet and quite frankly, if I get turned down, for the first time in my entire time on this planet, I honestly don't give a fuck.

thanks guys.

tonight I learned what STFU really means. I doesn't literally mean to close your mouth and not communicate. It means to say as little as you can. To stay out of those choppy waters.

again, thanks guys.
Preempting the DV charge.

by Red-Curious | November 14, 2017 | Link

This question comes up a lot here and on TRP and I just got yet another PM about it, so I figured I'd put this out more generally: a dozen ways to nip a false DV charge in the bud before it becomes a problem. But two things to note in advance:

- This is designed for those in live-in LTRs/married people. The list would require significant adjustment for singles.

- This is all based on risk assessment. I'm assuming you're conscious enough of your relationship to know whether you're in a (1) high-risk situation, and therefore need to be doing most of these things, (2) a low-risk situation, so you probably only need to worry about the easy ones, or (3) if you're in an extremely low-risk situation, thus can ignore this altogether (which I hope is the case for most of you).

1. Call the cops in advance. Tell them your wife is mentally unstable and you're afraid she will file false allegations when she finds out you're seeking divorce. Actual DV perpetrators think they can get away with it. No one plans to commit a crime, then calls the cops to tell them, "Keep an eye out, I'm about to get accused of committing a crime." I had a case where a guy did this and with nothing more, this alone was enough to persuade the judge that she was making it up.

2. Record one conversation a day where you're talking cordially. An underlying question in DV and CPO cases is whether or not she's actually afraid of you. If you can show several days after the alleged abuse (noting that you don't know when she will allege it) that she's still talking to you normally, the same as before, it casts a lot of doubt on her and usually is enough on its own to beat the charges. The key is to have conversations both before and after the alleged charge date. Since there is no actual offense, it means you probably need to have a week's worth of recordings. If she doesn't make the accusation when you think she will and the risk seems to drop, just drop the frequency of your recordings to whatever you feel comfortable with - but as long as that risk is there don't let it go longer than 1 week.

3. Maintain a log of where you are at all times. Let Google track your location constantly. I was impressed when I wanted to go to a bakery that I hadn't been to in 3 years, so I googled it and Google said, "You last visited ____ on [date]." When I clicked on that date, it showed a map of everywhere I had driven that day and what time of day I was at each location. That's creepy as heck ... especially when I found out it had this information for literally every day I've had google maps on my phone. Nevertheless, this is great for proving an alibi. If you weren't at home when she said it happened, you win.

4. Keep friends or witnesses around whenever you're together, otherwise record any time you're alone around her.

5. Keep yourself clean of all drugs and alcohol and don't let any drugs/alcohol containers sit around your house. "He got drunk/high" is the easiest way to explain why your version of the facts don't line up with hers. Don't give her that fuel.

6. Ask her to go to marriage counseling, then hand select a counselor who will give each of you the MMPI-2 to assess for mental health issues before the counseling actually begins. This is essentially a way to trick her into revealing her mental instability, while simultaneously getting a professional witness on your side about how crazy she is. ^FN1

7. If she won't go to counseling, submit yourself to individual counseling and get an MMPI-2 done as part of the process, then feed the counselor your version of events and your preemptive concerns. This is extremely persuasive. When you have a relationship with a counselor who finds you generally sane (albeit under stress, justifying your meetings), trusts you, has data to back up that you're sane and trustworthy, and sees that you "called it" before it happened ... that's your best witness right there. ^FN1

8. Keep a journal of her erratic behaviors, or just a journal in general. Journals are admissible evidence if they are recorded immediately after an occurrence. Although much of the content might be hearsay, the "present sense impression" rule in most states' rules of evidence allows it as evidence of your mental state and perceptions at the time of or immediately after a situation occurred. Also, if you have log entries for every day and just happen to be lacking any appreciable information about having abused her, it might look self-serving, but if the journal shows other times when you've explained fights between the two of you, if you don't have any arguments recorded on that particular day, that's going to look fishy against her story. Also, she might make up crap on a day when you literally can't remember what you were doing, so journals are great for refreshing your recollection.

9. Record conversions with your kids about weird stuff she does. Make it sound natural, not like an interrogation. Although the kids can't testify, a GAL can, and if she manages to manipulate the kids after-the-fact (parental alienation behaviors, for example), you at least have them on recording saying the truth. It might not be admissible, but it's still persuasive to a GAL. Be sure to include 5-10 minutes on the recording before and after you talk to the kids to demonstrate you didn't coach them right before the recording started and there was no de-brief session afterward.
10. Document any lies or inconsistent statements from her to demonstrate her lack of credibility. Keep all of your text messages and e-mail exchanges. Keep your conversation log positive and even flirty. The more emojis she uses in response the better - this proves she's not really frightened of you and doesn't perceive you as a threat, or even that she responds well to aggressive flirtation, which could put a different spin on her version of events if the judge believes she might have been asking for it because she likes it when you get a little dominant and rough. I literally had a case where an unmarried couple (but living together) were having rough sex and managed to get the case thrown out on the grounds that we proved the woman had a history of liking rough sex and was texting her man about how she wanted him to rough her up.

11. Snoop through her chrome or IE settings to get her passwords and install a key logger. Many women actually admit this stuff either before or after the fact in writing with their lawyer or close friends, if you can get access. Even if your state won't allow this type of evidence to be admissible, the knowledge you can acquire is invaluable all the same.

12. Have a close mutual friend ask her in private and record the conversation: "I heard you two are having troubles. Has he been violent or abusive at all? Are you afraid he might get that way?" Mutual friends are usually willing to help establish a record to avoid false allegations because they don't want either party to be dealt with unfairly. Just don't expect them to lie for you; they're typically more interested in fighting against lies.

^FN1 A note about counseling: RP usually advises against it. Why? Because they give horrible marriage advice. But if you're that worried that your spouse is going to start throwing around false DV charges, I'd be less interested in being attractive to my wife and more interested in avoiding jail. Attending marriage counseling here is not about fixing your marriage; it's about covering your butt.
FR Motivation in the mirror
by ChokingDownRP | July 28, 2018 | Link

TL;DR: this shit works, it started for me by looking in the mirror (how cliche, but true). Meant for guys looking for proof that MRP works.

I'll spare you my full victim puke, my back story has been lived by a hundred other MRPers. We met when I was 22, now 40 & 39. There was something about her, we hit it off out of the gate, in a few months I was sure I would spend the rest of my life with this one and she’d have my babies one day. And so it happened (dated 5 years before marriage, another 5 before kid #1). College degrees, good jobs, House, cars, 3 beautiful kids we could easily provide for. We never fought, maybe a little bickering, but happy wife, happy life, right fellas….YUCK, I nearly always conceded to make her “happy.” You know the rest... no sex, no happiness for either of us, silent resentment both ways.

I was RP aware for about a year, but hadn't fully believed it, or I thought it only applied to the hookup culture (younger people) and PUAs. I found MRP searching for some variation of a dead bedroom search and immediately accepted this variation of TRP as true and applicable to me. I devoured the forums and sidebar.

I WAS PISSED OFF – at her, for not telling me she isn’t attracted to me, just fucking me enough to keep me around for my commitment, resources, etc. At society (my parents, uncles, teachers, friends, past girlfriends) for not telling me all of this! I did EVERYTHING I was told would lead to happiness. I was furious & it wasn't until I took a long, hard, intense look in the mirror that I got pissed off at the right person- that fat, beta piece of shit that let my once athletic body turn to mush, let my hot ass wife who was crazy for me at 22, turn into a chunky, harpy bitch who was indifferent to my existence (aside from my paycheck and choreplay). I looked intensely into the empty eyes of that fat loser. I can't remember a time when I felt such clarity and knew my way forward. “This changes now!” I started reading (NMMNG has been my greatest source of improvement), lifting, owning my shit. I talked too much, I got too cocky too fast (fine line between confident and cocky), I let my anger get to me, I failed shit tests, I lost frame... but I've kept pushing, kept trying.

Despite many setbacks along the way (read my other couple of FRs for a couple of them), I've made substantial improvements in short order. My wife fucks and sucks me frequently, enthusiastically & very well. She's texted me nudes, I've cum in her mouth, I get blown, there's dirty talk, I'm fucking her roughly, pulling hair, finger in her ass, pushing her head down on my cock and thrusting into her mouth. This stuff was either off limits or had simply stopped years ago. She's loving it. After sex she'll say things like "we're living the good life."

Is she happy now? I don't fucking know, not my problem, but she seems to be. Am I happy now - not entirely - I've still got work to do on myself, but I'm significantly happier today than the guy in the mirror 6 months ago was. Now, most of my mirror time is at the gym or flexing after a good workout - but seeing results is just as motivating as staring down the fat loser was.

My kids, co-workers, strangers on the street or elevators all seem to treat me differently. It's all very difficult to explain, or believe the drastic difference. I've gotten enough IOIs from other women now that I know I could spin plates that are on her SMV level (at least in terms of looks, she is a quality woman) or above within days of a split up with my wife. I'm considering the morality of doing so while married, but I will wait and see how it all progresses and how I feel after serious consideration of the issue. I also don't want to blow up my marriage and potentially damage my children (I'm from a broken home) over a 6 or 7 knowing in a bit more time, I will be able to pull an 8.

I don't write any of this to brag, I hardly have anything to brag about, I've merely discovered and used many of the tools necessary to un-fuck oneself. I have a VERY LONG way to go to live the life I want to live, and look like I want to look, but the difference this has made in my life, in such a short amount of time is simply astounding. I hope that a new guy reads this and takes a good fucking look in the mirror and finds the fire that I've found to do something about it!!

This. Shit. Works.
Men of March: Day #1
by TheFamilyAlpha | March 1, 2017 | Link

“From dust we came and from dust we shall return.”

I am not a religious man and even I can see that it is no coincidence that we are beginning this journey on Ash Wednesday and living the message of reclaimed masculinity through lent, a period of fasting, or in our case, personal sacrifices.

The topic of ash is a perfect way to start the introduction to the Men of March. We have all risen or are going to rise from the ashes of our former ‘repressed’ selves. Some of you are still burning free, setting all of your weakness, regrets, and desires to avoid reality ablaze. Throughout this month we will burn that repressed self to the ground and from it the true raw you shall rise.

All men will find purpose throughout the posts for the entire month, but the focus is on those men who are balancing reclamation with self along with leading, guiding, listening, and sacrificing for the lives they are responsible for.

Single & divorced men have an entirely different reality than that of their committed brethren. I am the voice for those who aren’t pulling different women or don’t have the luxury to create and follow their own schedule without limitation from those around them.

I have a seven year old son and a four year old daughter, I understand the delicate balance needed to ensure they are given the necessary time required for their personal development as well as making time to keep the woman in our life our lover and not our friend. I’m with you

I understand how full your plates are, I see that you’re suffering in silence and are frustrated that everyone is just telling you to ‘man up’, swallow the pill, and stop being a pussy.

For the next month, I need you to recognize that there are zero excuses for inability to perform the tasks. I’m not a single man providing perspective and guidance, I am a fellow Family Alpha.

For those who are aware of who I am and what it is I write about, this project is going to follow a different format than my normal format.

I’m not writing about my perspective on marriage, sex, masculinity, or the interpersonal dynamics in a marriage. In this series, I’m writing solely for the Men of March, that’s you. Take a second to look away from the screen and let that truly sink in. You’re a Man, more than that you’re the Man and you’re worthy of a life that is more than simply existing.

I won’t be doing this for you; to be honest, I won’t even be giving you a very structured program. I will be facilitating you through the path of reclamation of self.

You see, finding who you are as a man, is as unique to you as your finger print.
This isn’t about creating any type of caricatures, it’s about men being comfortable being men again. It’s about tapping back into that genuine I do not give a fuck confidence that radiates from men who own their shit and pursue their mission.

Your mission is yours and you alone know what it is.

I could never write a series for each man, so I’m writing a series for every man.

These are going to be ‘Choose Your Own Adventure’ type posts and it’s up to you to not only push yourself past your comfort zone but to do so with objective honesty.

I don’t know if you gave something your all or followed my challenge for that day, only you do. So invest in you and don’t let yourself down.

For the next 31 days I’m going to ask you some hard fucking questions and you’re going to want to provide the immediate answers you’ve been trained to give. We’re going past the walls you’ve confined yourself to for years. I’m going to force you into the wild where masculine men run.

I am going to take you, possibly as soft as sheep’s fur and I’m going to introduce you to the lions and force you to run with them.

You will make it if you truly want to.

If you’re a man who is looking to reclaim his masculine nature, then you will and you will forever look back to this moment and smile, thanking yourself for taking the necessary action to own your life and not let life own you. There will be a few challenges and a few rules throughout the month which will be covered below.

Before I get into Day #1, I’d like to preface it with this little piece of advice.

You’re reading this for a reason.

Something happened in your life which led you to a place where you recognized the need to create a masculine self or reclaim that masculine man who once was.

You’ve probably tried a few challenges like these before, at the least you’ve tried to make some changes and for whatever reason, they’ve never worked.

The reason you’ve yet to achieve the level of satisfaction you desire is because you’ve looked everywhere but inside your heart and mind for the answer to your woes.

The failure was yours.

You are the problem.

The beauty in accepting this is that you are also the solution...

Don’t quit on yourself this time.
Don’t give in to the incessant pleading from the voice in your head which says, “It’s OK to break this little rule, or cheat on this rep because it’s just a stupid internet challenge, this doesn’t really matter.”

Because brother, everything I advise throughout the next month matters.

It isn’t the pushups I will have you doing which will really make a difference, it’s choosing to do the pushups which is what you require.

You say you’re a man who deserves respect, submission, & inspires fear in his enemies.

The motto of The Family Alpha is Act, Non Verba which translates to Deeds, Not Words.

Stop telling yourself and the world how great you are and be great.

I don’t want to read a single fucking comment from a man saying, “Hey Hunter, I made it to day 10 then I watched porn because x, y, z.”

I don’t care; you failed and you know it, you don’t deserve the life you see other masculine men living. They worked for what they have and obviously it’s too hard for you.

Choose to commit to you; prove to yourself you’re worth the life you desire. Brothers, choose to be better.

Choose to place your masculine ‘self’ first.

You’ve tried all of the other programs and strategies, this one is different. This program is written by the Family Alpha, one of the most genuine blogs there is for masculine men (married or not).

I truly want you to succeed, but in order to do that, you must commit to yourself. Don’t give up on you; you’re worth it and you’re capable of so much more than you’ve currently revealed to the world.

Give me this one *month.

You can do anything for one month if you truly put your mind to it. Show yourself that you are as strong as you think you are.

Show yourself that you deserve the life you want.

Believe in you and that life will suddenly start to appear.

It starts with you.

Don’t quit.
Day #1 Marching into Masculinity

I served in the Navy for 8 years; marching is something I am all too familiar with. While most military men would agree, marching sucks; but, marching is also kind of badass, because you’re tight, those around you are crisp and mirroring your every move and you them, there’s something in the precision of movement built from hours of dedication which, when forced to display is something you take pride in.

This is exactly what we’re doing today gentlemen. We are marching into the month of March with one thing in mind, reclamation and dedication to expressing the masculine ‘self’ which has been repressed in most, never cultivated in some.

There are a few rules which are zero tolerance. This means if you break them, then you, sir, are incapable of committing to yourself.

I have zero fucks to give if you agree with my rhyme or reason, this is my program, my challenge, and all you have to do is read, commit to yourself, and fucking follow the simple rules. The rules of Men of March:

1. You will not masturbate, edge, or touch your dick for pleasure during the entire month. You can have sex, but not with yourself.

2. You will not watch porn, sexy gifs, look at provocative photos or anything of the sort as this will lead to you breaking rule one.

3. You will do 100 pushups every day. Don’t give the ‘time’ excuse, or any excuse as I don’t give a fuck, just do them. Break it up however you have to, but before you sleep at night, 100 must be done; chest day or not.

4. You must start reading a book. Even if it’s just a few pages a day at first you must be reading a book. I will be reading New World Ronin by Victor Pride this month. You don’t have to finish the book in the month, just actively read a few pages every day to build the habit. With that said, my goal is to finish the book this month.

5. You have to start giving genuine answers to people. If someone asks if you’re busy, don’t say “No” when you are. You have to stop avoiding conflict at the expense of your true self. If your wife asks a question, give an answer, “I don’t know/care” Is not an answer a leader gives to his crew. Start knowing, start caring, and start telling the world your true opinion.

6. If you have a vice, remove it. You have to be honest with yourself; if you’re overweight and drinking to numb or are smoking pot and being unproductive, that shit has to go. This isn’t a ‘dry’ challenge, if alcohol or pot isn’t a problem good to go. If it’s more than that, leave it be for the month.

7. Every day there will be a challenge, you must complete it.

Challenge #1

1. Do 100 pushups.

2. Write down 3 goals you are going to achieve by the end of March. Write down three ways, under each goal, that you are going to achieve that goal. Now do the same thing except lengthen to deadline to the end of June.

You should have six goals & eighteen ways you’re going to achieve them.

- 3 Short Term (End of March) with 3 roadmap actions to achieving each.

- 3 Long Term (End of June) with 3 roadmap actions to achieving each

Wrapping up Day #1

Day #1 included the introduction, some explanation, and the rules as well as first challenge. Understand, you set the tempo for this challenge. You decide what your goals are and you decide whether they are legitimate or not. I’m not here to judge or discuss what you should be doing.

Tomorrow will get a little more personal and will look more like the rest of the posts. This one was to give everyone a tour of the battle field. Now it’s time for you to complete your March 1st challenges and start living a more masculine life.

Day#1 Post on Blog:
https://thefamilyalpha.com/2017/03/01/day-1-creating-the-men-of-march/

I'm much more active on Twitter: https://twitter.com/TheFamilyAlpha
Long before I learned about TRP and MRP I used this metaphor to help me manage my relationships and to help friends of mine who were struggling to gain control of theirs.

Some of you may be at least somewhat familiar with it by now, as I've repeated some core parts of it many times in my replies, but if you haven't it goes like this:

By nature, men are lions, and women are lion tamers. Women LOVE wild, unpredictable, independent, self sufficient, powerful, unruly, dangerous lions. They're obsessed with catching them and taming them.

So they offer them juicy red meat (pussy) to lure them into a cage (LTR/marriage), and then feed them a steady diet of it until they become loyal and dependent. It's so easy to get red meat inside that cage--why would the lion ever leave?

Over time a lion's loyalty begins to overcome his rationality. He loves the lion tamer. Even if sometimes she forgets to feed him. I mean, she always feeds him eventually. Even though it's only one kind of meat, and frankly, he's getting kind of bored with it. He really misses the variety that the wild provides, but the lion tamer told him that if he leaves the cage and eats anything else, she'll get mad and his gravy train will stop. So he fights his natural urges and repeats to himself over and over that this meat is all he needs. It's safe, it's fairly reliable. No reason to risk that.

Sometimes he has to perform tasks for the lion tamer in order to get fed. But they're not very big tasks. Not like leaving the cage and trying to hunt again. And it's been so long since he last hunted, does he even remember how? In fact, he's gotten pretty out of shape since being in there, even if he knew how would he even be fast enough to catch any food? But he knows he can do those tasks though. So no problem. He'll just keep doing that.

But as time goes on, he notices that doing them doesn't always result in being fed. Sometimes it does and sometimes it doesn't. And frankly, the quality of the meals has really dropped. Not only are they infrequent and unreliable but they're bland and dry. It doesn't even taste that good. Sure some of that is because he's used to it but he can tell when a meal takes effort and when it doesn't. She's not even tenderizing it anymore.

So the lion starts to get angry and starts to roar at the tamer. But that only seems to make things worse. So in desperation the lion starts searching for ways to please her--tries to crack the code. He does everything she asks, and even things she doesn't. But his meals remain so sporadic and unpredictable he can never get his bearings and develop a rational plan for securing his food. So he just tries everything every day all the time and hopes for the best. She's become like a volcano goddess and all he can do is grovel and pray.

Until one day the lion wakes up and he sees that while he slept, another cage has been constructed during the night right next to his and his tamer is with another lion inside, giving him all the juicy, tender, deep-red meat he wants (she even lets the lion fuck her in the ass).

He roars at the other lion, he roars at the lion tamer, but she merely glances at him in contempt and tells him to get lost. So he leaves. Stunned, hurt, humiliated, angry, and hungry, he's forced to hunt again but his muscles are weak, his senses are dull, and his memory of how to survive in the wild is faint.

And so off he goes to rebuild himself again, if he can.

So what did the lion do wrong?

Should he not have taken her juicy red meat in the first place?

We all know what the MGTOW incels would say.

Should he have taken the meat but refused to ever enter her cage?

We all know what the 19 year old sages and jaded divorcees on the main sub would say.

But you and I know that hunting gets exhausting. We all remember what it was like. Sure it felt great to make a kill, and sometimes you make a big kill and it feeds you for several days in a row, or you get on a roll and make several kills in a week and so you're flyin high for a while.

But waking up day after day, week after week, month after month, goin out, drinking, partyin, textin, tinderin, over and over and over and over and over and over and over and over and over...

It's fucking exhausting.

Plus you wanted to live forever and thus you wanted to have kids.

And you knew that being married was the best way to raise those kids.

And you may even have been prescient enough to know that there are quite a few other social and economic benefits to being married that you wanted to obtain.

And yet, because of the red pill we know the risks that LTRs and marriages present.

So are we just fucked?

I have learned for myself that the answer to that is no.

Women invest a lot of time and effort to get a wild lion into a cage with them. And the more we invest in something, the more we value it and the more forgiving of it we will be.

We love things that are difficult to obtain. Women love men because they are unruly and disobedient and confident and horny and independent and it takes a lot of work to capture their attention and to keep it.

Likewise they despise that which comes easy to them. If a man is attentive and available and helpful and obedient and well-mannered and faithful, where the fuck is the fun in that? What happened to their wild lion?

You know, when you swing from one branch to another, you first have to feel you've got a good enough grip with one hand to let go with the other in order to make the leap. Pretty hard to do that if you can barely hang on with two, right?

And yet you're surprised when she branch swings, Mr. yes ma'am-goodie-two-shoes-faithful-husband-good-christian-daddy-man?

You never go out with the boys. Never work out. Never cheat. Never flirt. Never even look. And apologize or DEER when you do. Eat whatever she puts in front of you, however much she puts in front of you. No interests. No hobbies. No talents. No muscles. No friends. No confidence. No backbone. Come straight home after work. Never take more than 3 seconds to text back. Ask her permission to do things. Never lead. Ask her where she wants to eat. Where she wants to sit. What movie she wants to see. If she feels like hanging out with friends that weekend or not. Ask her what YOUR calendar looks like that week, and every week.

I can practically hear your wife fucking your neighbor right now.

She wants a wild lion. No matter what she SAYS after you get married, that's what she wants. AWALT.

And believe it or not, you probably used to be one. Get back to that, and you'll be just fine.
There's the ongoing debate about whether the Captain/FO model or the Oldest Teenager in the House model is appropriate. The fact is, it's probably both. Sometimes as a good leader you need to recognize which situation you’re dealing with and act accordingly.

Friday night we took the whole family to the local little league park to watch one of my oldest boys friends playoff game. My boy is on another team and is a particularly good ball player who a lot of other kids look up to. My boy’s friend had a bad call go against him, and instead of telling him tough break, my son pulled a dick move and said something smarmy. My wife is particularly sensitive about this and she flipped her shit on him, couple the fact that it sounded even worse because he is a good ball player. She made her point to him and let him know he’d be in trouble about it when he got home. He quickly tried to back track what he said, and made somewhat of an amends to his friend there and then. On the drive home they started to get into it again in and I calmly told them “Ok, let’s take this offline and not in front of the other kids”

My oldest knew he was wrong. In fact I’m pretty sure he was deeply ashamed for what he said. Hence the reason he was trying to back track it so bad. We got the younger kids to bed and he still insisted on trying to talk his way out of it. It ended up in a yelling match between him and his mom. I stood up, calm and cool, told him to get into the shower and then right to bed, I’d deal with him in his room.

I told her “Ok, take a break everyone is a little tense. We’ll deal with this in the morning.”

She started getting even angrier; I maintained even tone and calmly said “you need to shut up. You’re being a crazy bitch.” This shocked her. The look on her face was priceless. Her hamster started to rev the wheel up to full speed.

She tried to put it back on me “Oh so you don’t think he did anything wrong?”

“I never said that, you’re being crazy right now though.”

Her, “So I’m wrong in this?”

“No, but you’re being crazy right now. That’s wrong.”

“Oh so you can act crazy sometimes and I can’t?”

Me, “If I am, you have every right to say something.”

“Take a couple minutes and calm down. When you can talk we’ll pick it up from there.” And I walked away. I went and put the boy to bed, talked about why his mom was so mad at him (while reinforcing that her feelings were hers to deal with and how a bro can’t kick another bro when he’s down).
When I was all done she came to me, “I’m sorry for being bitchy”, head down, full on doe eyes. I said “ok, let’s talk about how we do this better next time”

“Ok”.

I held frame, never let her arguments distract me about her bad behavior and isolated her when her behavior was intolerable. We straightened out everything and even finished the night with some sexy times. By holding frame, it really was like a scene from the movies. I could see each bullet zinging at me in slow motion, and step out of the way harmlessly. By recognizing where I was I applied the response that was appropriate, punish the bad behaving teenager, and lead the first officer who seeks advice from her captain. In the end, everyone was better for it.
Just had a great reminder to never listen to what she says & to only watch her actions. Great example of how MRP makes her happy DESPITE what she says she really wants.

Received a text from my wife with a link to some beta bullshit “news” article with the title “Top 10 Qualities of a Good Husband”. I consult my (her) monthly cycle calendar - where I track her cycle with great accuracy- and confirm that I still have a week from her potentially acting like a bitch (my wife gets pissy around days 22-25). so I know this text isn’t her attempt at some bullshit behavior. I’m curious now, so I click on the link. It’s the most over-the-top BETA qualities…. The kind of shit I used to do when I was in a dead bedroom with her for 10 years = pussy on a pedestal.

Examples: He treats you like a princess, he is sensitive/loyal/kind, he is a good listener, he is romantic, he is honest, he compromises, he takes care of you, he considers you when making decisions, both big and small, He views you as his partner., He is willing to put effort into the relationship.

After reading this, I don’t text her back. Only winning move is not to play. Don't have time for this bullshit while at work.

About 10 minutes later, she texts me again and says that her friends were talking (complaining) about their husbands in the break room at work today and that she “loves me so much” because I “do ALL of these things!”... Apparently, they were talking about whether or not their husbands did any of these things on the list.

At first, I thought she was just joking, because I don’t do any of the things on that list?? Just two nights ago, after purposely starting a fight with her over something stupid (this is an advanced move for senior MRPer...newbies don’t attempt) and making her cry and then apologize to me, I was fucking her on the edge of our bathtub and yanking on the back of her hair- pulling her head back to the right... while telling her that I was going to fill up her tight little cunt and for her to cream all over my cock... Basically, acting like a ASSHOLE. I was extreme Mr. Nice Guy before, so incorporating ASSHOLE game has been UNBELIEVABLE and a complete eye opening for me!. God, she loves it. Always makes me breakfast in bed the next morning after acting like a big time asshole.

How could she possibly say I do anything on this list? Took me a second to realize that she was serious about her text! While I don’t literally do any of these, she honestly FEELZ like I do all of these things. By me having my head on straight, shit together, Leading the family, taking care of shit, fucking her good, lifting, teaching and guiding our kids, being social with the soccer moms, applying a little dread here and there, making her feelz, etc.. it makes her FEELZ great and she actually BELIEVES that I’m doing all these beta things on that list.

However, if I were to act like a beta bitch -like I used to prior to MRP- and LITERALLY do all of the things on this list, she would be a harpy, bossy, pissy, drama filled cunt to me and tell me that I don’t “do enough” to help her around the house. Trust me, I know. But I axed that guy 3 years ago.

Lessons Learned:

- Never listen to what they say they want. They don't know.
- They say one thing, but really mean something else.
- Be fucking man
- Play the lead role in your own life.
Books for Raising Masculine Sons

by duskyMonk | January 24, 2019 | Link

Two of my cousins recently gave birth to sons. Their dads are unfortunately pretty blue-pilled. I've decided that I need to insert myself as a male role model within acceptable family limits. Although I'd love to be the cool uncle type that takes them paintballing &c, we live far apart so mostly I'll just send them books for Christmas and their birthdays. So I was wondering what books you've gotten for your sons/nephews to raise them red-pilled?

Here's my ideas so far, the list definitely lacks sports and religious themed books since I was never into those as a kid.

Edit: To be clear, not all of these books fit my own situation (too overt/preachy/not-my-kids), but they may fit yours. Also, added your suggestions. Thanks!

Ages 0-7: Mostly just try to keep books interesting I guess. Sports, trucks, pirates and other tough/cool guys. Mikey and the Dragons was suggested. Any time spent reading aloud to them A++.

Something happened yesterday after 6 months of red pill I thought I should share.

2 years ago, blue pill me, 30 kgs (60 lb) overweight, was bothered that my wife doesn't pay much attention to me while driving.

I wanted to negotiate that (LOL). I told her I'm bothered that she doesn't turn to me or talk to me. I told her it bothers me when I saw another couple in a car and the girl is chatting up the driver. She predictably laughed out this kiddy request and said some bullshit about want me to concentrate on the road etc...

Comical stuff right?

I was obviously subscribed to this commmuniiicaaaaation and tell your feeeelz bullshit that you see so much in relationship books and in various subreddits here.

fast forward 2 years, the last 6 of which are solid red pill.

Lost 30 kgs (in 6 months, yup). 11% body fat. Can squat 1.5 my weight. My life is getting better and i feel good.

I'll just leave this dialogue that happened here, to give an example of why mainstream relationship advice is bullshit and MRP is the way to go.

Me (weekend planning mode): I have a football match at 2 PM. You said the other day you wanted to buy clothes for yourself. I'll drive you and drop you by the shopping mall at 1:30 PM, then I'll come back and pick you up at 4PM. After my shower, get prepared because my colleague invited us to dinner.

Blue pill me would have been trying to negotiate the day with her. Confusing her mind with choices and times and such, being indecisive all the way and probably ending up with a schedule that appeases her fully.

Her: OK.

Few moments go by...

Her: But I want us to go shopping us a couple, so many people do that. [Compliance test, shit test]

YMMV, but I absolutely loath shopping for clothes with her. I don't have time for carrying bags around and waiting endlessly.

Me: I've got the football match to go to.
BP me would go into full appeasement mode, fucking up the plan to make her haaapy.

Her: Why can't we act like a normal couple and go shopping.... [Shit test escalation]

Me: raise eyebrows, look at her with a grin, almost starting to laugh: Football match!

Just a calm broken record. Amused tone, "you're being funny here".

BP me would have probably either exploded with anger, or went into appeasement mode.

Her: well, ok.

End of discussion. She looked sad and I've learnt not to feel guilty at that. 30 seconds later we were back eating our lunch discussing other things.

So we head out to the car. I'm in my (European football) gear, looking lean as fuck. Shorts just at the knee. The clothes fit me very well.

Her: Oh my god how did you get your stomach so flat.

BP me would... well BP me would never had such a compliment.

I smile, and lift my shirt. Looking fit.

Her: Oh my god, I've got to do the same. What excercises do you do, tell me tell meee!!

It's more diet than excercise hon, this bit she doesn't understand, but I wasn't about to go into boring lecture mode. and yes I was doing loads of excercises, squatting my ass off and doing crunches and stuff. This was a chance to get her to start something on the road to lifting with me. Dieting will come later and she is already almost perfectly slim anyway.

Me: Squats help

Her: what's a squat...

So now blue pill me would have been giddy with pride that she's following my lead, and would have showed that off and went into nerdy explanation mode, boring her to death. but...

Me: We need to go, I'll show you later.

If she does care she'll come back.

In the car, and this is where my prelude is relevant. I'm driving and my shorts are naturally high thigh up, muscle definitions showing...

Her: Your shorts are too short...

Translation: I like what I see.

Me: no reaction.
Her: Do people see you like this? they are too short, and I know you don't like it when I wear short stuff out.

An attempt to negotiate and shit test. truth be told they are short because I'm sitting and they won't look so short in the field, and these are football clothes.

That was the thought going through my mind. but before I make the mistake of DEER'ing with that bullshit, I turn to her with a grin and see her looking down there.

Me: It's for your pleasure.

she laughs this feminine giddy laugh. bulls eye. then she starts feeling up my thighs whilst I'm driving.

Eventually she reaches for the stick.

Me: That's the wrong gearing stick if you wanna help!

She laughs again, and starts mimicking my gear changes with the wrong stick.

Eventually we arrive, after the football match as we're heading home as she's going on and on and on about her shopping choices whilst I'm nodding, we get home.

Her: So how do you do those squats?

I get her to do a few (weightless) squats. and get her to promise herself to be regular at this...

I would never had any of this in BP communicate your feelings and wants mode mode. get your shit together, lead by example, and know what you're doing. STFU as much as possible. Acta non verba. The rest will come later.
Counterproductive Desire and the Fallacy of Unconditional Love

The Problem

Women are generally more interested in sex when they feel sexy. Blue pill men seem to understand this, but make the irrational next step: "Let's just make them feel sexy all the time and hope this makes them want sex all the time." It doesn't work. At some point, a husband's expression of desire for his wife can work against him.

Someone on RPC recently noted: "I now see the respect of my wife (and her sexual attraction to me) as something to be earned." Shouldn't the reverse be true too? Just as a man wants respect and attraction, women want to be loved and desired.

Rollo does a lot of writing on the way society artificially feeds into these areas for women - online dating, social media, movies, music, etc. are all sources of positive reinforcement for women. But men do the same thing in their own homes. She's wearing normal clothes or business attire and asks how she looks: "Fantastic!" Right? The chick flick trope is when the girl rolls out of bed in ugly pajamas, her hair a mess, and no make-up on and her man is making breakfast without a shirt on, showing off his rippling abs, telling her how beautiful she looks, even on her worst days. It's so magical.

How many men here would have the gall to tell their wives - not as a joke or in a goofy way, but being serious: "I'm not attracted to you." I remember years ago when my wife had no remorse in saying that to me. Now, I know, I know ... we're on an RP forum and everyone here has to pretend his wife is a 9, right? My wife can be in the right circumstances ... but most days she's probably a 6-7. Why? Because for a long time she didn't feel the imperative to doll herself up for me or maintain her physique (thin, but not fit was her MO). There are a couple reasons for this that come to mind:

1. The standard RP answer is: Because you weren't leading her. If you don't take care of yourself, she'll follow in your example and not take care of herself either. That was true for a time, but even after I got fit it took a long while for things to catch on. While the "1,000 foot rope" analogy might explain this, there's another explanation that you can actually do something about ...

2. The lesser discussed answer: Because you keep telling her how beautiful she is and she knows you want to have sex with her. While Rollo may bring up this point on a societal level, the implications within a single household are still powerful and relevant.

Think about it for a second. Even ugly girls could walk into a bar and say, "I want sex. Who's coming home with me?" and she'll likely find someone. Societally, there's no imperative for women to improve themselves, except to find a better guy. Now take that to your own bedroom: your wife calls you into the bedroom. That's her way of saying: "I want sex. Are you coming?" She has no lingerie, no makeup, she's just lying in bed with social media on her phone waiting for you to get her aroused. Are you giving her the same reinforcement that society gives to the single girl at the bar?

Now, the single girl at the bar may have some base desire to improve herself to get a better man if she realizes that the quality she ends up with is fairly low. While all women will have that innate desire, within marriage many women are willing to balance that with a competing desire to make their marriage work. For some, those desires are balanced in completely lopsided ways, so you get women who are ready to leave at the drop of the hat, and women who for any number of reasons (kids, vanity, money, etc.) will stick it out through 30 years of hell before divorcing her husband.

The point is that if she feels like she's "off the market" for whatever reason, she won't be competing for the better guy - she's only competing for the love and desire of her husband. When the husband gives this freely, she no longer feels any need or compulsion to put in the work to earn these things (gravitational cores aside, which may be the subject of a future post). If she's gorgeous in his eyes even when she's in sweats with unkempt hair and no makeup, there's really no imperative to doll herself up. "I am gorgeous!" she thinks, rather than, "I can be gorgeous!" That's a big difference.

The Solution

Until about a year ago, my wife wasn't actively trying to earn my love and desire. She assumed from the history of our marriage that she just always had it for free. Then I started doing things to re-shape that dynamic and she has since improved her attractiveness to conform to some of my desires. There's still room for improvement, but here are some things I've found to have worked.

Positive Reinforcement

This should go without saying. When she behaves well, reward her. I have found it most helpful to tailor the rewards to things that encourage similar behavior. If she wears lingerie to bed, buying her flowers the next day doesn't quite cut it. Buying her another pair of lingerie is both rewarding and behaviorally reinforcing. If she does a great job cleaning the house, go for the flowers - it reinforces the decor of the home. If she cleaned the house when you really just wanted a crazy night in bed, buy her the lingerie anyway and not the flowers.

Negative Reinforcement

Calling out her negative behaviors as they happen can be helpful. Employing active/intentional dread can also be effective, communicating: "If you don't live up to my expectations, I can find someone else who will." Withdrawing your time and attention fall into this category as well.
Non-Reinforcement

Communicate your expectations up-front. Put her in a position where she must make an active choice to respect or reject what you tell her. Most women prefer plausible deniability, and thus skirt around overt conversations, sometimes even overtly saying, "I don't want to talk about this." As long as you never tell them something explicitly, they can find a reasonable excuse for not doing what you never told them.

To be clear, if she knows you always want to have sex with her, she may not care about whatever expectations you set around sex because she knows she can always get sex from you when she wants. It's often suggested that a man should never turn down his wife's sexual initiation, no matter how poor - reinforce that good behavior. But what if she's in that unkempt, social-media scrolling mode when she lazily says, "Do you feel like coming in here?" Is that behavior we want to reinforce? No. Solution: Rather than turning her down, say, "Sounds great. You get on some stockings while I grab the whipped cream." You're now communicating a clear expectation that she must either respect or reject, setting a higher standard for what sex will be like rather than the laziness she was anticipating.

Another option is simply not to provide any positive or negative reinforcement to neutral behaviors. If you give positive reinforcement to neutral behaviors, she assumes it's a positive for you. For example: my wife shows me a new outfit to wear to a work conference. I'm not into work clothes on women, but I recognize the appropriateness of the outfit given the occasion. Instead of telling her she looks fantastic, I say, "It looks like you're going to a work conference," pat her on the back, and carry on.

RESULT? - Instead of a 6-7 her default has upped to a 7-8 in less than a year. Progress.

For any Christians, there's additional biblical information on the r/RPChristians version of this post.
Land Navigation is probably one of the hardest skills for a Military Officer to learn and retain. The US spends 4 years training an officer, for just about all of the branches; a lot of leadership, small unit tactics, and a handful of other basic soldiering skills. Sure there are programs that can go shorter or longer but for the most part it is 4 years. The Cadet’s abilities will vary wildly based on what program and school they come from. ROTC vs West Point vs OCS; even what university if you are ROTC can matter. Even still it usually comes down to the individual.

Still there is one skill that all cadets had trouble with. Land Navigation. I never saw an exception unless that cadet had been prior service and land nav as part of his MOS. Now I don’t mean with GPS, I mean with a magnetic compass, paper map, and your pace measured out so you knew how far one step carried you. The final test would see a cadet given 5 points. All over a distance of maybe 10 miles, some points would be closer to each other than others, but you had 6 hours to complete the course.

Some would measure out both a running and walking pass count, that way they could run when they wanted. Pretty smart. It seems simple, get your azimuth, distance, and direction. Then go. Only it’s not that easy unless you’ve done it for years. See when you walk over distance you naturally drift to your dominate side. The counter to this you would be told to take a knee, recheck your azimuth every 30-40 pace counts. So yeah you had to be keeping track. This would help to make sure you are still headed towards the point. This even effected you if you walked around an obstacle such as a tree, rock, ditch, or fence. The counter here was to go left on one then right on the other. Still you had to stop and take an azimuth.

All that said it was still easy to be 30- 50 meters off your desired location. You have to really work at it. I mean you have to hump your ass off. Through all sorts of terrain.

What are you checking your azimuth against?

Swallowing the Red Pill is not an easy proposition. It tears a man down. Along comes someone who says, “I can help you. I can give you what you need.” This persuader appeals to our missing needs and because it’s a vulnerable moment for an unplugging man, it’s very easy to sell, to persuade. The problem is people too often look for someone else to solve their problems. These people are not just looking for hope. They are not just looking for examples, but for someone who knows. Someone who has the iChing. Who has solved the problem.

Rule Zero is true north. It’s a key component that cannot be forgotten. At it’s core the focus is on you. What you want and need. It places the man at the center of his world and it’s jarring because that is not what you were taught. Not what you were told would get you any where.

Get married or stay married. Plate women, get jacked, get wealthy. Doesn’t matter. These things don’t make a man. They are things to do that are easy to change. Things that help you get in a new mindset and break the blue pill mold. You can be all these things and still not live life on your terms. What are you setting your azimuth against here?

Stay focused on the larger picture. Be careful of the dangers of creating gurus, because when you create a guru you’re saying that this person is above me and it’s very easy then to become a worshiper rather than a student.

This was never about her. Them. That other guy.

It has always been about your self respect. Your boundaries and knowing what you will and will not put up with. Then holding to them.

This has always been about you.

Along the way make sure to a Take knee and check your azimuth.
We've had a few conversations over the past couple of weeks that have centered around Attractiveness.

What we've learned from those conversations are

- if you look like a midget who doesn't lift, your advice is bullshit and you shouldn't be talking.
- covert contracts are the pathway to beating hypergamy
- if you speak publically, you'll get made fun of by internet people

Seriously though - attractiveness is a complex topic that hasn't received much focus. In my mind, there are three types of attractiveness:

1. Physical
2. Emotional
3. Mental

Generally, we focus almost exclusively on physical attractiveness and don't delve into the other two. However, each is complex with its own nuances and subtleties worth thinking about.

Physical Attractiveness

No matter how hot she is, somewhere out there is a guy who's sick and tired of putting up with her shit.

Physical attractiveness matters.

It's the easiest thing to change. That's why lifting is such a big deal. If you're unattractive emotionally and mentally, at least you can look appealing.

You know the trope, the raging psycho bitch of a woman - even then, someone'll put up with her shit, at least for a night. You wouldn't invite her back to your place, but you'll fuck her behind the dumpster.

Lift heavy weights, don't eat like Jabba the Hut, and it doesn't take much effort to be in the top quantile of attractiveness.

Side benefit - most people feel way better about themselves when they know other people find them attractive.
Emotional Attractiveness

Act like a bitch, get treated like a bitch

We've seen it. The pouting, the butthurt, the tit-for-tat, all the reasons that men and women act and just the turnoff that ensues.

In my favorite post ever, I link to this thread where we have hordes of grown ass men commenting on a meme post that says

I take the same stance on valentines day as you do on blowjobs. We're married now. I don't have to do that shit anymore.

More challenging than being physically attractive, being emotionally attractive requires a sense of keel and self reflection.

Your emotional attractiveness comes out in your subcommunication - your reflexive behaviors. How many times have we seen a new guy say "She turned me down, but I was not butthurt at all."? Do you think that guy realized that his face drooped or that he instantly started pouting? It's the reason why women go and ask "What's wrong?" - because something in your body language is signifying discord.

Similarly - think about why a man gets turned into a beta. He'll say "I'm going to see some friends." The woman verbally says "Okay, have fun." But her emotional response is actually "I want you to stay with me." So the guy keys in and says "I guess I'll just stay home with you." /u/AustralianArm hits exactly on this important topic, and the virtues of being okay being alone.

OI is probably the most important concept relation to emotional attractiveness.

Mental Attractiveness

Frame isn't something you do, it's who you are

Who do we follow? Who do we trust? We follow the people who know where they're going and we trust people who won't get us lost.

There are many, many examples of this.

- CEOs who seem lost or flustered on quarterly calls take significant stock hits.
- Steve Jobs is known for his obsessive vision that position Apple to be the largest company in the world.
- You trust your boss to not get you in a position where you're starving or fired.
- Your children trust you to take care of them and lead them to grow.

When you read through the OYS posts, have you ever noticed how many of those guys don't have a vision, don't have a plan for what they expect their lives to look like? There's no vision of what the end goal is - so there is no roadmap of how to get there. If there's no vision, then how do you know what structures to build?

The concept of frame (the reality in which your world operates - that you and you alone dictate) is probably the most important component of mental attractiveness. We are all followers. It is infinitely easier to follow than it is to lead, but we are also very, very selective in who we follow.

As my wife and her friend said to me and friend on a road trip when I why they don't pay attention when we're driving, "We don't pay attention because we trust that you'll get us there. And it's way easier." It is way easier to follow than it is to lead - but it is a lot easier to get lost when you're not the one driving. We love following people who we believe in - it makes life easier and it makes life better.

However, developing a solid frame is probably the hardest thing you can do. Many, many guys fail. The reasons guys DEER is because they want others to think they're right instead of not giving a shit whether other's think they're wrong.

When you think about yourself - do you have a clear vision of your values and your virtues? Do you have a vision for your life that you have certainty about, including certainty over the things you choose not care about? Do you possess the willpower and character to execute? In short, are you the type of person that you would follow? If you aren't, why not?

If you've ever googled "Why was George Washington an effective leader?", you'll get the same answer over and over again. It wasn't necessarily his stature or his character, it was his clarity of vision.

From George Washington, Genius in Leadership (emphasis mine)

The visionary leader, first of all, has very clear, encompassing and far-reaching vision in regard to the cause or organization involved. This vision includes ideas and goals which remain constant no matter how long it takes to realize them and regardless of the difficulties which the leader encounters. Furthermore, the leader never allows any of the means or actions along the way to violate or invalidate this vision and its constituent values.

The greater the vision, the greater the wake, the easier it will be to simply follow. Here, in this part of the world, we call it Frame - because the truth is your vision might change with new information, but your certainty in your vision shouldn't.
I'm still early in my journey but you don't realise how powerful the MRP mindset is until you experience learning moments.

I've been improving my frame lately and this past weekend I tested my mental gains. The in-laws were coming for dinner.

In-law background: They're quite critical people and do not hesitate to voice their opinion on anything that bothers them (rightly or wrongly). Consequently, they don't have many friends and businesses refuse to do business with them. LTR gets very uptight when they come over because she wants to make sure no criticism comes her way. She had a pretty shit childhood, everything that wasn't perfect was dealt with very harshly.

I volunteered to cook one of my specialty dishes (paella) because I wanted to primarily and I DGAF on what they think of my cooking. A series of angry LTR moments occurred from her parental-hamster going nuts:

- LTR questioned my choices on the number of prawns and mussels I got from the fishmonger (she knows her parents complain loudly at restaurants when they don't get enough seafood). I only said "It will be enough" and didn't indulge her hamstering further.
- During entree, LTR dropped a bottle of sauce on the floor breaking it and sending it all over the place. She tried to blame me for not doing up the lid tightly enough. I just said "Let's just clean it up" and started sorting it. She ranted for a bit and then relented it wasn't getting her anywhere so got to cleaning.
- When cooking the paella, she questioned the amount of rice I was using, concerned there wouldn't be enough. "There will be enough. Don't worry, I got this." STFU Dinner went well, no complaints, more than enough for everyone.

After the in-laws went home, LTR just walked up to me, hugged me tightly and said "Sorry for being nuts. I really should trust your decisions more. I don't know how you stay so calm. You are the best". My reply "I know". It got a laugh and then she kissed me for a good 30 seconds :)

In the old days, I would have DEERed all night and it would have been tense and horrible for hours afterward. This shit works.

I'm still a noob at this but I've learnt the more you hold frame, the easier it gets. I still have a long way to go though. She won't even have to hamster further down the track.

TL;DR: Anxious LTR goes nuts multiple times, STFU to let her hamster wind itself out, get apology and loving embrace later.
It's been more than 2 years since I first found the Married RedPill subreddit and began to unfuck myself. This post is about my journey, the good, bad and ugly. Really the purpose is for my own self-awareness, I don’t really care about you assholes, but maybe you will get something of value.

I grew up in a good family with a father who told me that I could do anything if I put my mind to it and a mother who was a cold sex denying harpy. My father did what a lot of guys do and stocked up on porn and of course I found it as a teen during the time when my growing body had more testosterone than I could handle. I experimented with drugs and alcohol and got on the wagon with a deeply religious experience and involvement. Instead of getting high I would read the Bible and completed it cover to cover four times. I focused on academics and was able to graduate high school a year early and went to college with an academic scholarship. All of this with no date in high school and awkward interaction with girls at best. So this was the formation of my mental model of sex and male/female interactions.

Fast forward to graduate school, I left my girlfriend 400 miles away to pursue a professional career that promised high pay and stability. I was in the big city knowing nobody and missed fucking her but she found someone else (my first life lesson in AF/BB). My game and frame where awful, I was a shy nice guy who wanted girls to like me for “the good guy I was on the inside” and my career potential (beta provider) . I had descent looks but was not hawt. Eventually my beta game had some success and some girlfriends came and went. At one point I was spinning plates without even knowing (a Japanese girl, an Indian girl, and an Irish girl. I always go for the exotics)

Then one day I met a girl who was giggly, innocent, cute and seemed to follow me around and show interest. We met up a few times and she mentioned her long distance boyfriend who eventually was given the boot. We would make out in her apartment but no clothes ever came off and I found out that she was never with a man before. She was about 25 years old. I dropped my plates and spent more time with her. She went to Catholic church every week and I thought that she made me a better person for being with her.

At one point while making out one night she put my dick in her. Unfortunately, I fagged out and didn’t train her over time to be what I really wanted sexually. Instead, I was a nice guy, I let her drive the bus, not wanting to hurt her, and continued jerking off to fill in the gaps for my needs. We had sex maybe 1-2/month with just missionary position and she got oral.

Meanwhile she had family problems with her grandparents dying, her father becoming terminally ill, and her mother having a chronic illness. There were no men left in her family. She leaned on me emotionally, I was her rock, and her support during the whole time. Eventually we got married. I think she bought a beta plowhorse on purpose because that’s what she wanted.

Fast forward to about 2 years ago. I was frustrated and at my wits end. Why won’t my wife fuck me? I'm horny and love her but she doesn't want sex, why, how can I fix this? I found Athol Kay’s book which brought me to Married RedPill. It was an awakening unlike anything else in my life and I engaged myself like never before on a path of improvement. I read the sidebar, joined a gym, and began to change internally. I’m not going to rehash all the stuff I did, it’s pretty much the same as everyone else who’s unfucked themselves and the path is well known to those who put in the effort.

I posted a 1 year report last year and felt like I was making real progress but never felt like I had reached the top of the mountain. So many guys humblebrag here about sex on demand, squirting anal orgasms, getting nude texts, or their wife sucking their sweaty balls after a workout.... I had none of that. I did go from a baseline of sex once every 6-8 weeks to about once every 2-4 weeks. Still vanilla sex but improved frequency.

Other areas in my life improved dramatically as I became more unfucked, mostly just by asserting my frame. I was less affected by her actions or moodz, and generally she became more of an accessory to my life rather than the center of it. She was happier and so was I.

I have been called out by some for suggesting that my wife is a special unicorn. I don’t think she’s special, just that she is not typical. I know AWALT, but not every woman is exactly like that. Her deeply religious upbringing and remaining a virgin for so long created mental models that guide her thinking about sex and consequently her actions. She has a sex drive but its muted and the default thinking is one of restraint or repression. That’s why most sex with us happens after alcohol or on first waking up when inhibitions are down. I believe that she has attraction, but ultimately it conflicts with a mental model of chastity and being a proper lady. In short, yes she is a woman, but not like every woman.

As I improved over the second year there was a slight uptick in frequency to once every 1-2 weeks. She still wears old granny underwear and says that my protein shakes have made me into a pervert (she thinks there’s testosterone in them). I own it with a shit eating grin. About a month ago I turned her over and fucked doggy style, she said that it was degrading. I told her it was fun. I can’t help but think back on a comment from someone a year ago saying that I might be successful but the juice may not be worth the squeeze.

Slowly I have become more indifferent as to whether or not I have sex with her, and to our relationship in general. The topic has come up more than once where I said “why would I need to have an affair?” or “don’t give me a reason to have an affair” Her reply was always “don’t threaten me” I made my point but nothing really changed.

A couple months ago I came closer to the conclusion that I’m not going to get what I need in my current situation and there were only 2 choices: divorce or affair. After much thought I decided against divorce, at least for now. We don't have kids. A big reason is financial, she makes a lot of money and I get richer the longer we stay married. Selfish, but I’m okay with that.

For me, it’s would be hard to game women without it getting back to her in some way or without it affecting my business, so I went to an online dating site. Wow, it’s been enlightening to say the least. First off, I just posted a pic of me in a t-shirt with my arms showing. There’s messages sent every day from interested women. I guess women really do like muscles. It’s fun looking at profiles and flirting back and forth. I spend way too much time on that shit but I’m having fun. I’ve met a handful of girls and took one to a hotel room and fucked her silly.

That was a huge step. How do I reconcile my self image of being a good guy with what I did? How can I look at my wife in the eye and say I love her after that? How can I put my dick in her after that? It’s been a journey in self reflection and aligning my thoughts and actions, but essentially, it’s like I told her more than once, don’t give me a reason to have an affair and I won’t. That pretty much sums it up.

I feel like a part of me died when I was with the other girl, I realized that it was just the last vestiges of oneitis and the pussy on the pedestal. Sex is sex, no more, no less. It’s cheap and available for a high value man. If I’m denied and sent out into the world with a full tank, don’t be surprised that I come back empty.

I continue to pursue plates because it’s fun and I have a full tank. The hardest thing is finding enough time to meet these girls and the time sink of chasing them on the computer and texting. I’m trying to avoid the pitfall of making pussy my mission or seeking validation in the pursuit. I think I’m doing well so far and I’ll have to see where this ultimately goes.

I fully understand the risk posed by seeking plates and that it will eventually be discovered if I continue long enough. That will certainly end in divorce, but so be it. I don’t mean that in a butt hurt way, its just the facts. She had first dibs on my sex but passed, so I eventually moved on. I will be fine regardless, more than fine, I’ll kick life in the ass. I’m a man, that’s enough.

Edit: I really don’t care what some assholes on the internet think about this post. I’m living my life on my own terms how I want to and I’m happy. If you don’t like it, fuck off. I should have thanked those that gave their time to help me along the way during these past 2 years. You and I know who you are.
When I was college I took up an art called iaido. It is an art of Japanese sword training. Without too much explanation and the fact most of you are Google challenged, think of iaido as the samurai version of the wild west "quick draw". Literally the "art of drawing the sword".

Iaido has a tradition called Tameshigiri, which is cutting of grass mats. These mats are said to represent the resistance the human body would present to a sword. Gruesome right? It's good training because if your focus is off even a little bit it won't cut. The katana is not a simple tool to learn to use. It takes years of focus, dedication and discipline. In a good dojo it will a be minimum 3 years to black belt, most likely 4 because few people have time to get it all done in 3, but 5 is not uncommon. My iaido training was 4.

So for years I trained and studied. Every day diligently. I have a couple scars to this day when I got my live blade. In many dojos students are not allowed to use a live blade for their first year. You use bokens. When time came for me to test for black I felt ready...well as much as you can. Only those that have gone before a yudansha board understand that once in that pipeline one begins to realize exactly how much they don't know. Yudansha in iaido testing is typically once year. Have a conflict that you couldn't resolve? Then come back the next year.

Iaido test in large batches. Senior members from whatever style you are learning come to sit on the board. There were 15 this time, and you test in full open view of other teachers and students. No pressure right?. My kata was beautiful. I was in the zone and the blade was singing....literally.

Soon it was time for Tameshigiri. This all happened in less then a second. I approached the mat, performed a cut and.... my sword slide off. No cut. I had failed. I went from hero to zero. I had let Sensei down, my dojo down, myself....the list kept growing. The whole day shot. Three years out the window. I had no idea what I did wrong. As I look back I should have. I was too focused on the outcome and not what I was doing.

Sensei came up to me. He was an older Japanese gentleman. He had that stern samurai countenance you hear about. I stood at attention awaiting what he would say. Sensei just looked at me and shrugged. He said "Sometimes it doesn't cut. If it cut every time people would think it was a trick."

Then he walked away. Yeah. I thought the same thing you're thinking. Not helpful.

I didn't understand half the things he said and it wasn't because English was a second language. He was just plain cryptic most times. All these years later I think what he was telling me that that I was too focused on the wrong things.

WEALTHY, HAPPY FAMILY, GREAT MARRIAGE
This is what men become focused on. You could replace it with anything. In fact this is what the /r/realalpha crowd prided themselves about. They coined it under the phrase LEADERSHIP. Then this guy comes in and tries to convince us that the point is having a happy marriage. Hence the married in the name Married Red Pill.

These beliefs are, on the surface, fine and noble. Yet they are the reason we all came here, or close to. These ideals got warped as we sought to achieve them. Our Ego got in the way. Ego is insidious and it removes what matters and convinces you of things that don’t matter.

Men want the things in their life to be great. To be right, and to be of value. That's fine. Men want to be the best at what they do. Nobody inherently starts out the day wanting to be lazy or accomplish nothing. We end up that way because the values we hold are wrong. Ego is self protective. It tries to keep you from feeling pain, misery, and sadness. So it will do nearly anything it can to prevent it. Even to damaging your life.

So this is what happens.

WEALTHY, HAPPY FAMILY, GREAT MARRIAGE

Become....

GREED, ARROGANCE, PRIDE

The problem is that these are outcomes. Not objectives. This is why one of the first questions is WHAT DO YOU WANT? It's not asked that much any more of newbies. You see it thrown around, but each man must ask this of himself. What do I want? What is my life's mission? Answering these questions then directs your purpose in life. If your mission is Your reputation, your desire for domestic tranquility.....then continue on enjoying the life of complacency. Enjoy fulfilling what other people want and expect out of you without understanding your true purpose. your being.

This is why men must have a mission. Something higher than themselves, something bigger to accomplish. Stop denying what and who you are. First and foremost being a man. This changes the act of caring about the outward appearance into an act of doing. Instead of caring about others and what they think you focus on what you need to do and what is important to you. /u/Rian_stone has said it twice and it's true. Daily life for men is a slog. Each day is an inch stone towards the milestones of your mission. One foot in front of the other. Some days you may not even make much progress, but progress there is. There are no quick wins, and odds are you will die without anyone knowing what you have accomplished. But fuck it. We are equal once that dirt is on top of us.

I read an article about how in Maryland public health issuing out Narcan on the streets. It disappears in minutes. One guy is quoted in how he has used Narcan on his friends 5 times last month and he had it used once last week. Is this the solution we should be looking for? Quick hits and wins? Not to get into the whole opioid discussion but we are watching the strong desire for quick validation play out in front us. With a catch all to allow people to go right back at it. Narcan just creates an easy solution here. It's not a long term fix nor a "cure". What's hard is the longer more permanent solution.
The validation. The emotional highs are like opioids to men. If you didn't know when an addict takes an opioid, particularly heroin they are chasing the first high. Each hit is less and less of a high then the one before. This is why overdoses are common. It's also analogous because men chasing that validation look for more and more. Getting less and less in return.

Redirect your life. Find a mission and work towards it. Replace your value seeking with real meaningful objectives.

By the by...I returned the following year and earned my back belt.
As a simple reminder, here’s the previous 4 posts – which you should read first.

- Part 1: Depressive and Anxious Wives: How it’s all your fault
- Part 2: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Transformation and Building Escape
- Part 3: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Converting Dread to Desire
- Part 3: Depressive and Anxious Wives: Authenticity, Feelz 2.0, Shitty Comfort & Penetration

If you live with a woman who is depressed or anxious, you know how crippling it can be at times just to be happy. Despite every effort to expand your masculine energy into everything around you, it may even feel wrong inside of you somewhere deep down to pursue your own happiness in spite of her moods. You would like her to come along with you, but let me tell you something you may not know – she has built a prison around you that you’re not aware of. In order to free both yourself (first) and her (if she is willing to follow her captain), you must discover your mission in life.

First, let’s talk about what a mission is not. A mission is not a goal. Goals are measurable and attainable. A mission is nearly unattainable in your lifetime. Missions create goals. Goals do not create your mission or your highest purpose. You can even have multiple missions in your lifetime, or change your mission anytime you wish. Your mission and greatest purpose is something that speaks to your core from deep, deep within.

This post came about in a unique way. I was asked the question – Could I elaborate on discovering your mission? How does one find what your most core desire is in this world?

You cannot force this:

Forceful mission seeking does nothing but push your core desires deeper into the depths of who you are and replace it with a facade of ego. To discover your mission and your core desires they must rise organically to the surface once all ego is bare.

How does this tie into your depressed and anxious wife?

You have allowed her to build an invisible prison through her moods that prevents you from discovering your highest purpose and mission. Yes, that’s all your fault.

It’s through your authenticity and deep passion of a life purpose that everyone around you (also likely including your wife) will feel that permeate through the man that you are through your actions and minimal words. Those daily actions and words align to a man who is congruent to who he truly is. Words simply become a tool for achieving your mission through actions. And you know what? People see right into that, through it, and into you. You are a man living out real truth in the flesh.

I think for us to discover that mission we must spend a lot of time in solitude and suffering. I'm no Buddhist, but that dude was onto something with suffering. Suffering bares your core to the surface, you must face it with courage, and you become stronger because of it. A man should choose the truth of himself when faced with his darkest fears.

Discovering your mission will require all your strength.

Using the power of the little boy inside of you:

Do you remember back when you were a little boy and you wanted to explore? Did you ever look beyond the fence of your backyard and think, "I wonder what's out there?"

What do you think that fence symbolizes?

To me, it symbolized constraint. The fence of your backyard as a young boy - or whatever boundary your parents told you not to cross, that was the end of your adventure. You were bound within the confines of that little imaginary prison. Everyone told you not to do things outside of that prison: your parents, your siblings, teachers, whoever. They were also told the same things as young kids by those same people which perpetuates the cycle of the prison mentality.

One of the most brutal mental punishments that I can think of is solitary confinement with no escape. This is your wife's mind. Your wife has built a prison of emotions that want to trap you inside of her head because she gains great feelz and validation from not having to live in solitary confinement. It is a very difficult life alone. I mean, who would want to live like that? Certainly not your woman. As a man it is impossible.

Can you break free of that prison and by example show her that is possible with the gift of your masculinity?

I began to think about this heavily over the last 6 months. Why couldn't I hop that fence as a boy? There were rules, that's why. I'd be a bad boy if I did that. I'd get an emotional punishment that would hurt my core. But why was my desire to escape that prison so fucking dear to my core, yet punished when I embraced it?

Because I was a boy, who is now a man, and I wasn't designed to live in that prison. The masculine's deepest desire is freedom and release. Release from contraints in the form of a beautiful woman to look at, the wonderful sound of children laughing, breaking the sound barrier into the unknown, or ejaculation. I was designed to be free. To jump that fucking fence of the prison and do whatever I wanted. Sure, there were rules - but I should be my own judge of what was safe or not. If I was wrong, I'd have to live with the consequences. You have to be willing to live with whatever consequences YOUR choices create.
I remember reading about Teddy Roosevelt as a kid and thinking he was a badass. He traveled the world hunting dangerous animals in the early 1900's and in some cases nearly died. He has a quote I love: "No, I'm not a good shot. But I shoot often." That man had no prison. The world was his. He took every shot he could, missed a lot, but at the end of the day he still took his shot at freedom and escape.

Think of men that you admire. What about them made them badasses that you respect? I bet you it isn't a dude sitting in his mancave. Or a guy painting pictures. It's also likely not some great philosopher or one-track-braniac. It's likely a man that had a sense of adventure and wholeness, and often did it in solitude in the face of adversity. Can you think of a few? Louis and Clark? Arnold? Churchill? Steve Jobs? Who was a man that you admire?

Find something that you can do in solitude that allows you to be with only you and your thoughts.

Using the power of femininity to find your mission:

The light, the dark. The masculine, the feminine. To me, there is balance in it all. To find your true masculinity that is a mission and your greatest purpose, I believe you must surround yourself in that which you are not seeking to polarize your mind. You are seeking direction of a greater purpose which is an entirely masculine quality.

More specifically I seek out solitude with something feminine - like creation (such as art or music) or nature. I'll give you a few examples that will hopefully move you to your own discovery.

Do your best to draw the lines of this analogy as we move forward.

I grew up hunting, a very masculine thing indeed. I spend a lot of time in the woods alone, by myself, where I am my own judge. I scout for animals, look for sign and try to outsmart them. Yes, I also kill them. All masculine. But killing is not the goal, it's simply part of the journey. Once the animal is dead, I have to harvest it, clean it, butcher it, pack it, freeze it, and get it home to feed my family. Killing is only a small part of it. But if you're like most still in the prison - they can't look beyond the fence that is killing to see the adventure it gives a man. They focus on the fence and say, "Don't do that, it's bad." Again - the prison.

Everything up until the killing part is surrounding myself with the feminine (nature) and dancing this delicate dance with my masculine. I must truly understand the ways of the feminine in order to achieve my masculine goals. I fail a lot. Hell, yesterday I shot and missed because I got anxious myself and pulled a shot right. No matter how much I practice, I still fail. Nature won that day, but I'll be right back at it. I love the challenge.

When I'm out there, I have nothing to do but be with myself. I could read, yeah. I could facefuck my phone too, yeah. But I don't. Because I know that the sense of adventure of where I go, where I setup my hunting spot, and what I do is entirely 100% up to me. There is no prison in that (except for a few rules to keep me somewhat safe which I agree with).
You must physically see that there is no prison. There are many ways, but nature does it for me.

I also seek this time out for myself for the solitude - and create my own personal prison in my mind. I let it all surface while alone. I cannot tell you the number of times I go out there for just 4 hours alone and end up crying my fucking eyes out thinking about my life. Do you want to learn how to kill your ego? This is just one way that has forced me to do so.

I once killed a large animal very deep in the woods. It was a 10 mile round trip hike to pack it out, and it took three trips. On my last trip I was exhausted, it had been dark for hours, and I had to sit down to rest. Then, my flashlight ran out of battery. The modern comforts of this world were lost. Here I was - in the dark – covered in blood in bear country. I was frightened. But I had no choice... I had to break free and accomplish my goal of getting back home. So, I wandered in the dark scared for my life for 8 more hours. I felt relief in the sun finally rising against the cold darkness to complete the cycle of polarity, and through that solitude I discovered I was stronger than I ever knew.

It's just like lifting, bro. That's solitude in the face of adversity as well. That's why MRP recommends you lift.

I hope this helps you build some more mental models to reference for yourself.

And by the way, if you ever want to take up hunting - just ask a guy you know. I guarantee he will jump at the opportunity to show you the world through his eyes and teach you exactly what it means to connect with yourself in such beauty. We also enjoy surrounding ourselves with the company of other men. We want to free others from the prison too.

Shedding Ego

Open yourself by shedding ego to allow your mission to come to you. It will, as all good things do. When it does come walking by, claim it as your own by harvesting it and grab that motherfucker by the horns with pride as you raise it as your trophy. You've earned it with all your hard work. Put it on the wall as a reminder of the adversity you have overcome.

You know, kind of like hunting.

When your woman sees this great authenticity of a purpose driven man that you’ve built from your core outwards, she will either accept this as who you are or she will not. But that, my fellow man is un-testable, and gives her the opportunity to begin to free her own ego as an example of your leadership.
In my experience practicing divorce law in a firm that specializes in psychological issues, I have found that personality disorders have the most significant impact on marriages. There are certainly worse disorders to have (ex. MPD, schizophrenia, etc.), but personality disorders often go unrecognized or thought of as "that's just how she is." As much as you may have gotten used to her antics, sometimes it's good to face the music: she might actually be crazy (and you might be too!).

In this first part I will explain the basic personality disorders and general characteristics for discerning when one is present. As much as we might like to throw around "AWALT," certain PDs do require unique and special attention that general RP advice might not otherwise hone in on in a manner helpful to your unique situation. So, Part 2 will address how to interact with people who have PDs in order to maximize your chance of getting through to them. If you're all interested, I could possibly do a Part 3 on how to negotiate with someone who has a PD, such as in my area of expertise: divorce negotiations.

But first, a quote from the guy who taught me divorce law, particularly to all you who are thinking of divorcing someone who you think has a mental health problem: "All women are crazy. Every judge knows that - even the women ones. It's not enough to prove she's crazy. Your job at trial is to prove that her craziness goes beyond 'normal woman crazy.'"

ONE - Borderline - BPD is most commonly found in women, particularly those who have a history of physical or sexual abuse. Borderlines often have a mental detachment from reality. If the ordinary hamster is like driving a car, a BPD's is like the Millennium Falcon on the Kessel Run. They are often very explosive with no rational basis. They are driven almost entirely by emotion with scant ability to comprehend logic in the midst of an emotional episode, although they may appear perfectly normal when not otherwise triggered. RP men are at high risk because BPDs are typically very sexual. Their emotional explosiveness causes them to be extremely passionate and have very large libidos. They are also the most likely to cheat on you. BPDs are often very insecure, impulsive, antagonistic, and prone to depression. As a coping mechanism to deal with past abuse or trauma (existent in most people with BPD), their detached sense of reality causes them to experience their explosive fits not as their own life, but as if they are a third person in the room sitting in some out-of-body experience bleachers with a bucket of popcorn enjoying all the drama and entertainment. BPD is often accompanied by a histrionic personality disorder too.

For more information on BPD, check my comments here and here.

- BPD women are extremely likely to respond to RP men, but for longevity and peace, the strategy requires a few limitations in how to handle explosive outbursts (see my posts above), given that some advice (ex. STFU) will simply not work and will likely make the situation worse.

TWO - Histrionic - HPD is the second most common personality disorder I see in women. It's rare to find men with BPD or HPD. Histrionics are addicted to drama. They will start crap with you not as a fitness test, but just because bad drama is better than no drama at all. They are easily bored. They are prone to excessive emotionality and attention seeking. They are incredibly flirty and seductive so, once again, RP men are at high risk. What's so bad? They cry a lot, usually for no reason at all. They are the type of people who are going to embarrass you in public with flamboyancy. They are easily suggestible to being put "on edge." They can't handle being alone, making them very clingy, needy, and very likely to stalk you if they get suspicious. If you take them out on a date, you're a great boyfriend and she can't stop posting on social media about it. If you take them out on another date the following weekend, you're being too nice to her, so you must be cheating. Your car is probably gonna get keyed when she finds the flowers you bought for her because that must mean you're hiding something and trying to distract her with gifts. Seriously, they make stuff up just to increase the drama levels to feed into their compulsion for exaggerated emotional expression. Interestingly, although they seem highly emotional, it is just that: an exaggeration. In reality, they are often very vague and shallow, not lacking any substance to their emotions. Unlike BPD, HPDs can comprehend and articulate some degree of logic in the midst of their flamboyant emotional expressiveness.

- HPD women are likely to respond extremely well to RP men.

THREE - Paranoid - PPD is the third most common I see in women and is almost always paired up with another PD, although I don't see any overarching trends as to which ones. They think everyone is out to get them. They make sweeping generalizations about their susceptibility for abuse or risk of being used (ex. "Guys don't actually want me, they just want sex"). They're quick to make assumptions based on very small indicators. If you do anything to reinforce their paranoia, they will not stop fixating on you. PPDs have trouble letting go of past wounds. Although they usually just want to "get away from the jerk," they can't stop talking about how much they want to get away. They assume he is stalking them all the time because they see him everywhere. As a result, in a relationship they are emotionally distant, constantly waiting for when you're going to show your true colors like she knows you will. This creates self-fulfilling prophecies that can quickly destroy relationships. As a defense mechanism, they sometimes even strike the first blow, hoping that a good offense will be their best protection from the expected imminent onslaught you'll give them. No matter how nice you are, they believe you have some manipulative intention for doing it. High functioning PPDs will believe you are a manipulative jerk, but they will accept the manipulation and look at it as a game that they have to serve back in order to maintain a safe balance in a relationship, rather than letting you be the only one with special manipulative powers. PPDs rarely have close same-gender friends, as they don't trust anyone enough to be deeply honest. When they go out, it's usually superficial.

- PPD women are likely to respond reasonably well to RP men.

FOUR - Narcissistic - NPD is most commonly found in men, but is not infrequent in women as well. RP men are at an extremely high risk of developing NPD. NPD is characterized by a disproportionate sense of self-worth and self-entitlement as compared with reality. They believe they deserve special treatment. If their girl does something nice for them, it's not because she's a great girl; it's because you deserve it. NPDs assume they are far more brilliant, attractive, or skilled than they actually are. For the true NPD, this is not a game to set a social presence, but an undeniable fact of their identity. They often live in fantasy worlds about how far their awesomeness might take them in life. NPDs are easily angered and extremely aggressive, especially when confronted with the fact that they share common human limitations with everyone else. They lack the ability to empathize with others because they see themselves as superior and don't understand what it's like to be normal. As a result, they have great difficulty developing emotional or intimate connections. To cope with this difficulty, most NPDs become extremely manipulative, and often consider their manipulative prowess as one of their super powers. Interestingly, most NPDs suffer from other mental-health disorders associated with subconscious emotional insecurity. They have told themselves for so long that they are better than everyone else that they begin to believe their inflated sense of self. Unable to cope with the potential shatter of this self-image, they have a subconscious compulsion to seek approval of others in order to validate their perceptions. When others do not validate this, they see them as (1) "lesser" and incapable of comprehending their true value, or (2) insecure people who have to attack others to hide their own insecurities. These perceptions are often incredibly irrational, and it's absolutely hysterical to watch two NPDs trying to argue, as they both are trying to seek validation from the other on a subconscious level by asserting their superiority (dominance and authority), while consciously trying to come off as if they don't care. NPDs try to present a DNGAF attitude and believe that they actually have this attitude, but are often unhappy nonetheless and they do not understand why.

- NPD women are likely to express significant resistance to RP men. Although AWALT re: desiring a man to dominate them, these women are going to put up a huge fight. From doing divorce law, I note that the man usually has to have mental disorders of his own in order to get the job done, and then cope with the damage she made him go through on the way. If an RP man does manage to tame her, he's set for a long time because he can then feed into her sense of self-worth by helping her win "The Comparison Game."

With the big-4 done, here's a shorter description of the less common ones.

FIVE - Antisocial - ASPD is very similar to NPD in expression, but the reasons behind it are very different. Although they both come off as extremely aggressive, hostile, arrogant, and manipulative, where NPDs do so out of an inflated sense of self, ASPDs express these things because they have no care or concern with the rights of other people. They lack a core sense of morality common in most other individuals. They often come off as bullies. They are reckless, impulsive, and prone to danger - sometimes because they don't even have a healthy regard for their own rights and safety. Being manipulators, they know how to feign remorse and regret without actually experiencing it. In relationships, they are unlikely to take responsibility for their actions. They don't bother with hamsters because they see no need to rationalize anything in the first place. They are likely to be physically, emotionally, and verbally abusive.

- RP strategy is not likely to work on women with ASPD because they will insist on chewing up your frame, crapping it out, then making you eat it every meal of every day for the rest of your life ... or just leave without a second thought.

SIX - Avoidant - In contrast with ASPD, AVPD is characterized by a hypersensitivity to others thoughts and feelings. They constantly feel like they're being judged, and always feel inadequate. They avoid social situations for fear that people will think less of them for how they interact, creating a negative loop where they can never build confidence. Even when incredibly attractive, they can only focus on their own flaws. In a relationship, women may only want to have sex in the dark so their partner can't see their flaws, or may avoid sex altogether for fear of not being good enough at it. They also have trouble finding relationships in the first place and are quick to latch on to the first thing that comes along, building long-term commitments where they shouldn't.

- RP strategy is likely to work extremely well with AVPD women.

SEVEN - Dependent - DPDs experience a subconscious compulsion to have someone else manage their life for them. They require significant support structures and constantly seek second opinions for everything they do. They are terrified of conflict because friction in a relationship may cause them to lose their ability to depend on that person in the future. At their core, they are people-pleasers. In a relational context, they cannot handle being alone, often trying to live vicariously through their SO. As a result, they are very clingy. When the relationship ends they give themselves no time before immediately hopping into a new one without being able to assess clearly whether or not this is a good idea.

- RP strategy is likely to work reasonably well with DPD women.

EIGHT - Obsessive-Compulsive - Because of public perception of extreme examples, ordinary cases of OCPD often go undetected because they don't seem as bad as what you see on TV. In reality, ordinary OCPD is characterized by someone whose fixation on rules and structure dominates their thought processes. They are often perfectionists who cannot easily settle for "good enough." They are more concerned with doing "the right thing" than what needs to be done. The details are more important than the bigger picture. They are inflexible, and therefore are usually incapable of delegating because the other person might not do it as well. In relationships, OCPDs are extremely controlling and stubborn and come off as "holier than thou" or having a sense of moral superiority.

- RP strategy likely can be effective with OCPD women insofar as it may actually improve their condition; if the condition is too heavily rooted, RP men will burn out their hamsters because OCPDs won't stop obsessing about everything the RP man is doing.
"the wrong way."

NINE - Schizoid - Despite public perceptions, when most people say "antisocial" they really mean "schizoid." Schizoids have a limited capacity for emotional expression and cannot for interpersonal bonds. As a result, they withdraw from society, preferring to be alone. These are your extreme introverts, who prefer anonymity in their relationships through online gaming or internet forums without having to build actual relationships in real life. They come off as very awkward and superficial. They often don't express a wide array of facial expressions or body language, making them seem disengaged from conversation. Both because this disorder is fairly rare and because they isolate themselves, it is highly unlikely you will find yourself in a relationship with such a person.

- I have only ever once observed a marriage/divorce with a schizoid, so although I could make something up, I really don't have any evidence on the efficacy of RP strategy on schizoids.

TEN - Schizotypal - Unlike schizoids, schizotypals actually do desire human interaction, but they're so quirky and weird that they can't sustain them. They often have very extreme and unconventional beliefs that are almost certainly untrue, despite the sincerity of their belief. They are also flagrant liars - so much so that they begin to believe their own lies. They lack the ability to retain mental response standards to social situations. As a result, they do not recall appropriate reactions to social situations and often do bizarre or unusual things, like laughing at inappropriate times or moving their body in ways and at times that don't make sense in the course of conversation.

- Similarly, this is rare enough that I don't have any observable experience upon which to opine on the efficacy of RP theory on schizotypals.

---

SPECTRUM, NOT STATIC - It is extremely important to note that all of these PDs function on a spectrum. It's not an on/off switch. For example, in the DSM-IV days there was a subjective scale known as "GAF" (Global Assessment of Functioning). Someone might be diagnosed with a PD, but have a GAF score of 75, in which case they are moderately functioning with minimal expressive symptoms. However, if the GAF score was a 45 they would show serious symptoms with impairment in social environments. A GAF score of 50 or less is typically enough to qualify for most disability benefits on mental health grounds (SSDI/BWC). So, if you think your spouse might have a mental health problem, try not to lump her into a category - figure out how far into that zone she is first.
Here Ye, Here Ye all Captains present and accounted for along with any and all interested assortments of lurkers, bluepills, manginas, or women:

The big event that all of you have been waiting for with bated breath is finally upon us. The cunning linguist and master debater Blue Pill Professor has finally completed his book and it is available for purchase on Kindle for the low-low-low price of $5.99.

Follow this link:

to buy the book.

I poured my heart and soul into this thing for quite a few months and the final product came to a staggering 100,000 words and 310 pages with more than 240 foot notes.

I want to thank /u/ianironwood for inspiring me to write this and for reviewing it and encouraging me to keep working. I also want to thank a host of reviewers for this piece including: /u/jacktenofhearts and /u/FearDearg2015 and /u/Trainingthebrain along with the legendary "Deti" for their extensive reviews and input into this book.

The book follows my post on the 12 Levels of Dread and introduces them in a bit more detail. For example, the section on Level 4 Dread- which SO MANY guys have royally screwed up- ended up at more than 5,000 words as I explain when and how to withhold Time, Attention, Affection, and "Presence" from a sexually withdrawing wife and how to solve The Husband's Dilemma.

This is the Summary of all 12 Levels:

THE 12 STEP PLAN OF DREAD: RECOVERING FROM A LOW SEX MARRIAGE, RESTORING SEX, RESTORING RESPECT

Dread Level 1: This is Your Life You are A Man, descended from 10,000 generations of warriors, poets, and kings. Start acting like it! Begin to responding to your wife confidently and appropriately. Readings: Married Man’s Sex Life Primer & No More Mr. Nice Guy

Dread Level 2: This is Your Plan You Are a Man With a Plan so get one and get working on it. Put together your “Man Action Plan” and start to build. Start by building muscle at the gym and by reading books and blog entries. Take notes and understand them. Write out your complete MAP and start your new life today. Readings: The Book of Pook & The Mindful Attraction Plan Dread Level 3: Your Great Mission  You are an In-Charge Man with a busy, fun, active life. Get a hobby, some solid friends, some goals and a mission in life. Get busy. Readings: When I Say No I Feel Guilty

Dread Level 4: Your Options and Your Consequences  You are a busy man with options, and you don’t have time for negative influences, such as wives who are not attracted to you. Readings: The Rational Male & How To Win Friends and Influence People

Dread Level 5: You are a HOT guy  You Are Important: Look the Part. Upgrade your wardrobe. Start dressing a little bit nicer, even at home and especially when you go out in public. Readings: The Way of the Superior Male & The Art of Seduction

Dread Level 6: You Are a Mighty Hunter, Study Your Prey  Begin to study pickup artistry, leave books on PUA around the house and practice actively “gaming” and seducing your wife. Readings: The Natural & Bang: The Pickup Bible

Dread Level 7: The Pickup Artist  Begin to practice PUA on random women who draw your attention, practice Makes Perfect but be aware this is a very dangerous step. Don’t fail the test and cheat! Readings: Day Bang: How to Pick Up Girls during the day & Real Secrets of PUA: A strategy that works

Dread Level 8: Demonstrations  You are getting good at flirting and in matters of love, so SHOW your wife that you are capable of talking to pretty girls in public. Ideally this is a natural extension of your PUA practice. Of course, that girl was hitting on me—do you blame her? Don’t be afraid to leave some PUA books sitting around the house. Readings: The Sex God Method & The Ironwood Collection of Alpha Moves

Dread Level 9: The Soft Ultimatum  You have had enough. You have improved yourself for a year or more and are in the best shape of your life. You have read not 1-2-3 books but 10 or more. All of your skills are improved, but your wife still doesn’t respond to you. It is time to tell her exactly what you need to stay married. Readings: The 48 Laws of Power and The Art of War

Dread Level 10: The Hard Ultimatum  This Level is covered in detail in Athol Kay’s book, the Mindful Attraction Plan as “Option A or Option B” and can be as basic as telling her “fuck me or fuck you.” You must have the divorce papers already drafted before you have this discussion and, NO, I am not kidding. If you are not absolutely prepared to follow through, don’t even bother going to Level 9. Readings: The Meditations of Marcus Aralias

Dread Level 11: The Hail Mary Pass  If you can’t get what you need in marriage, and you have done what you can do to get it over a year or more, and you can’t leave the marriage, the solution is to get what you need outside the marriage. Readings: The Bible

Dread Level 12: Thermonuclear  Tell your wife that you have a (other) girlfriend(s). Honesty from a cheater? It is controversial but what do you have to lose? Yes, I have actually seen it work several times to hold a marriage together. While I wouldn’t take the bet, there is hardly a downside by this point.
Let me post the Table of Contents with the subheadings for you: I am happy to answer any questions or respond to any comments. Thanks guys!

EndNotes
If I fluently speak the language of game and seduction, but have no frame - I am only a dancing monkey or attention seeking clown.

If I have the gift of swole and understand all the mysteries of TRT and have a body blessed by Brodin himself, but do not have frame - I am nothing.

If I make seven figures and dress the latest fashion, but do not have frame, I gain nothing.

Frame is essential. Frame is congruent. It does not need to boast or protect the ego. It lives fully and openly with authenticity. It is not easily angered, it is not needy. It does not get butthurt or feel compelled to defend. Frame is physical, intellectual, and emotional.

Frame perseveres. Where there is game, it will eventually fade. Where there is lifting, it will eventually decline.

I learn, I grow, and I seek congruence and completeness with what I have learned. When I was a beta, I talked like a beta, I thought like a beta, I reasoned like a beta. But when I began to understand alpha, I put the ways of the beta behind me.

Right now, I see only a vision of the future, but soon, it will be fully realized. Now I know only in part, but then I shall know fully and be fully known.

And now these three remain: game, lifting, and frame. But the greatest of these is frame.
This is a field report and me laying down my thoughts a few months on after finally turning my marriage around.

After weeks of really bad behaviour by the wife, I told her that she has a few days to fix herself up or I'm filing. She thought I was bluffing. She could not believe the beta she has for so many years has a spine.

This was after many months of solid RP. Slowly phasing out beta me until my wife could not take any more.

The crucial thing was that at this stage stage I was 100% mentally checked out. I was divorced mentally. I had plan Bs lined up. I told my dad and her dad that we're divorcing.

The following days shit really intensified, but I stayed completely aloof. Did not say a word more than necessary.

You've got to make your words count. Never repeat instructions or statements. Never argue. State what you want, AND NEVER BACK DOWN. Do not show an inch of hesitation.

I made her get used to beta argumentative me. It will take a while to fix that.

Roughly one month on I sat her on the table, and served her the papers. The first words she said was "huh, that's fine, good by then".

The following two weeks she spent countless hours talking to friends and laywers and financial advisers and what not. She thought she was making a plan.

But it was predictable. Because I already researched everything and was 100% prepared for the divorce (remember?). Whenever she tried to catch me out I was completely cool.

Her: let's work out finances. We split the house and you go somewhere else. So why don't you go out now?

Me: (I know she can't pay for the mortgage as I make 3x her): I'm not moving anywhere for now, but sure, I'm not attached to it. Go ahead and get some mortgage in your name. Once done, I'm happy for you to buy me out. Here is how much you're going to need: X.

Her: You're despicable, you're bad, you want us to live in the street, and on and on.

Then she tried similar tactics on custody, alimony, moving elsewhere with the kids, you name it.

Everywhere she turns I showed that 1) I was completely cool (AND I WAS, I WASN'T PRETENDING) with the predicated court outcome 2) I was not going to let go of anything I have the right to. Absolutely nothing.

She huffed and puffed and shit tested and screamed. In 4 weeks time she went from this complete raging bitch to then one night, she suddenly completely reversed. She cuddled to me in bed and started telling me how it was going to be difficult without me. Then she spent an hour alternating between crying soft tears and recounting the beautiful moments we had in our life - mostly about the moments I was the oak for her (there were some).

I was so tempted to lecture her on redpill dynamics. But I STFU'ed. I let her hamster her way back to me. It was an exercise in self discipline and quite an eye opening experience that finally sealed that redpill theory for me. I just stfu'ed and watched the dark ceiling as she lay there vulnerable as a kitten opening up to me and confessing that "I have so much effect on her".

Then she said "I'm happy for us to stay together". She assumed I was - she was still hoping that she dictated the rules. I did not say anything there. Silence. Beta me would have tried to repeat what I said earlier and my intention and tried to DEER. But now my words count. And my instructions and intentions are clear the moment I say them. Silence for a few minutes where her hamster was spinning at the speed of light, she then blurts out, eyes filled with tears, "What do you want, I'll do anything".

Then came my verdict, "I'm going to pause the proceedings. I want a proper marriage. I want a prosperous family. My life has a woman in it. You can be that woman. I'm going to judge you by your actions". She shook her head in agreement. This was her finally entering the acceptance phase of losing ultra beta me.

This was a few months ago. She has been almost 100% sweet since. I say almost because AWALT. She still shit tests and has the occasional flare up. I am still showing her what the new boundaries are. Boundaries that I ignored her crossing them for years. It's gonna take a while still. You can never let your guard down. Deep down she is still in test mode, I'm still judging her actions, the papers are paused, not torn. But I never bring this up any more. I don't need to.

Moral of the story is that things can be turned around, but it's going to take the iron will of stalin, the poker face of a poker championship finalist, and unshaken persistence and belief in yourself.

I discovered more about myself. I finally accepted that I deserve better. That I can get better. That the IOIs I get everywhere actually mean something. Then I can get way better than her. And my actions show that. My outcome independence, my confidence when talking to her or to others in front of her, all of this keeps her in check. I went from years of oneties for her, believing her to be the one, to suddenly fantasizing about boning every other chick that shows IOIs to me.

Was all of that grief worth it? I sometimes wonder. It would have been far easier to just divorce and start over. But it's the damn cute kids. I fixed things for them. And now I'm hopefully teaching them what it means to lead a family. I'm so goddamn proud that I fixed years of social conditioning. There is beauty and pride in sorting out a hell of a mess. As for the wife? she has to still come leaps and bounds for me to keep her long term because I deserve the best, and she knows it.
Curing yourself of Butthurt-itis
by addictedtoyourface | May 23, 2017 | Link

If you are pained by external things, it is not they that disturb you, but your own judgment of them, and it is in your power to wipe out that judgment now.

Marcus Aurelius

Butthurt-itis can be boiled down to a very simple formula:

Ego + Expectation - Fulfillment of Expectation = Butthurt-itis.

Let's look at Ego first. Ego is your enemy. You should be working on killing that little shoulder devil lying to you that you're special. This is one of my favorite TRP articles to re-visit. It is a great ego killer to remember that you are 1 of billions and in a 100 years, most, if not all the things you're accomplished will be forgotten. Sounds demoralizing, but I love it. It frees me from the shackles of judgment and helps me formulate a healthy perspective.

Ego you should be working on killing; Expectations you should be working on managing. It's ok to have expectations. It's good to have them if fact, but it's important to manage them properly. If your 200lbs overweight, you should not have the expectation of winning a gold medal in the 100m dash.....

If you manage your expectations properly you're less likely to have them go unfulfilled.

The real key is to separate Ego and Expectation. I expect my wife to fuck me on the regular, but if she doesn’t I don't get butthurt. Why? Because my ego is not tied to whether or not she fucks me. It's hard to separate the two if you're still a fagot, but that's where managing your expectations come in. If you're obese, you should probably lower your expectations. Own the fact that you did this to yourself and make changes. She still may not come around once you're Chad, and that's ok. Again, your ego is not tied to her.

I'll give one quick anecdote, but realize this same principal applies to most situations: Money, Sex, Shit Tests, etc.

This was the last "argument" we had and it was on shark week. I don't even remember what all the fuss was about, but I know she got upset because I called her out on some BS she was spouting. Many times I let things like that go by keeping my mouth shut, but I was in the mood so I called her out. She got mad and started fussing at me. I kept pushing and eventually she call me a piece of shit. I could have gotten butthurt and listed all the reasons why I wasn't a piece of shit. Instead I laughed and said she was dumb for marrying a piece of shit. From her point of view I'm a POS because I called her on the carpet and made her feel bad. From my point of view I'm a great dad, and a good husband. For her to call me a POS is ridiculous and I responded as such. No butthurt-itis in site.
A situation is just that. A situation. Your estimation of it is what determines if you get butthurt or not. That is not to say we don't all fail sometimes or lose frame. If you do, let it go and get back on the horse. Like everything, it gets easier with practice.
I've seen this quite a bit recently on here and askMRP. A guy thinks his wife "never shit tests" him, wonders if she's special or some kind of unicorn. Or asks how to handle this "comfort test".

Trust me, if you've been a beta bitch for the past 5 years, been reading TRP/MRP for a month or two, started lifting 2 weeks ago, and just finally got laid for the first time in weeks, your wife has no need for your "comfort". Comfort tests are the result of dread overload.

You're just misinterpreting shit tests as comfort tests. Does she seem anxious, fearful or clingy when she's testing you? Those are usually comfort tests. But if she's needy, whiny, complaintive, snarky, or demanding, even if it's not directly aimed at you, then it's probably a shit test.

To illustrate, here is one of my wife's favorite shit tests:

She texts me just before I get out of work asking me to grab something from the store on my way home that she forgot, tells me what it is, but when I get to the store I find there are 2 or 3 different kinds of that thing. Then when I text her I don't get an answer. I used to sit and wait, standing in the isle looking like an idiot. I would even call several times with no answer. Then I would just pick one of them, and when I got home, she would get really upset, but not by getting angry at me, but she would act like dinner was ruined get all sad and mopey. On the surface it looks like a comfort test because I used to always try to comfort her and reassure her that dinner will be fine or that we can just order a pizza. But the shit test happened when I agreed to go to the store after a long day at work instead of telling her "tough shit, I'm ordering a pizza."

She hasn't done this in a while, mostly because it stopped "working". It's a basic manipulation where you set someone up to disappoint you so you can make them feel guilty and work harder to show "love".

Another example is that she used to poke her head in to my home-office while I was in the middle of something, and with a sweat, almost coy voice say "honey, you want to tuck me in and lay down with me for a minute?" It's one of those "ugh..." moments where you feel obligated and bothered that she would impose on you like that, but you feel guilty saying no because she's being so sweet and just wants you to cuddle with her to make her feel "loved". It's a shit test. She's testing to see if you'll drop whatever you're doing at her command. The sweat, coy voice is a cover and a manipulation.

Now I just respond in an overly-sarcastic, playful tone "nah, I'm good thanks, I decided I don't like cuddling with you anymore" and blow her a raspberry. She immediately brightens up with a grin she can barely hide and crosses her arms trying to pretend to be offended with an exaggerated and playful "humf! Why are you so mean to me? You know, you're supposed to be nice to me, that's what husbands are for!" To which I retort, "well, you know what wives are for?" in a wink-wink kind of way. Then she'll put on a cutesy, innocently seductive look, or she'll come over to grab my crotch or something.

You see the difference? Before I would comply, stop what I was doing, tuck her in like a fucking child, and cuddle with her for a few minutes before trying to sheepishly "make a move" only to get turned down with "I'm sorry babe, I'm just not in the mood, I just want to cuddle". Now I turn those shit tests in to dirty, slobbery, downright whorish blow jobs.

Comfort tests happen when you're so alpha that she's starting to get paranoid that you're cheating on her or thinking about leaving her for another woman. You'll know you're being comfort tested because she'll be blowing you and fucking you with great enthusiasm for a while only to collapse in frustration and anxiety, confessing that she feels like it's "never enough for you" or that she feels "inadequate". Those are comfort tests.

If that's not what's going on, you're probably just being manipulated in to failing shit tests that she's cleverly disguised as comfort tests. You should take some time to really think through some of the "comfort" tests you think she's giving you and ask "what does she get out of it?"
What my mother blessed me with.

I grew up dirt poor without a Father. I had terrible examples of men inserted in my life time and time again by my branch swinging mother. One thing I was blessed with was the ability to understand humans and their behavior.

I watched my mom swing branches for over a decade until she found a man to take care of her who was well off and owned multiple properties had a pension and was generally well off.

From a very early age I knew that women were hypergamous and would always take a better opportunity if it were presented to them.

Enough backstory.

I was blessed with struggle:

Being abandoned by my mother from an early age for weeks at a time and being raised by my siblings and their friends taught me that I had to become one with loneliness and thankful to those who gave me their precious time, lessons, and resources for my benefit.

Being hungry. I mean actually hungry. My mom abandoned us to live with her boyfriend(s) and would check on us every five days, six days, two weeks... She would leave my older sister with a book of food stamps and sometimes pay the electricity and water bill. Being hungry taught me that I had to get it for myself.

At the ripe age of 11 we were killing our pet rabbit and using the shake and bake in the cupboard to season him. The shake and bake and flower and a couple spices were the only things in our cupboard for two weeks. After days of trying to mix flour sugar and water together and make “bread” and begging strangers for money we decided to kill the rabbit and eat it.

A couple days later we walked the couple miles to where my mother was staying with her boyfriend and his family. She was drunk from the night before. Her boyfriend wanted to know what we were doing at his house. We told him we just wanted the food stamps and we would leave. We got in her purse and their was only the “ones” left. She was still drunk and we could not talk to her. My older sister asked my moms boyfriend why all of our food stamps were gone. We didn’t have any food in our house and she just got these food stamps. He said that they had been barbecuing and spent most the money on steaks and that she had got him some groceries. This guys fridge was full, like overflowing full, his cupboards had more food than I had ever seen in one house. We called our Father and his mother to ask for help. They called CPS, we only wanted groceries.

This taught me a very valuable lesson. My mother could give a fuck less about me. The woman who taught me what I should think about women showed me that no matter what, they would always choose what was best for them.

We sent my little sister to Taco Bell to beg people for food and we would split five ways whatever she came back with. We also stole and begged a lot.

Some lessons I learned from some of the branches that my mom swung to.

The Cop-This man was around when I was quite young. Some of my earliest memories are of this man beating my brother and I relentlessly in the middle of the night. Literally coming in and yanking us out of our beds and beating the shit out of us. Often with a belt. This man taught me that you should never trust anyone and that those in power are often the most cruel. I can wake up at the drop of a dime, a dog sleeping at the foot of my bed is the only thing that allows me to sleep heavily through the night.

The kickboxing instructor- Taught me how to fight, to mercilessly destroy your opponent at all costs, groin shots, eye gouging, whatever it takes. Knives, guns, whatever it takes, the only thing that matters is that you win and never let another man best you especially when your life depends on it.

Cruelty. This man taught me that humans are inherently evil and that there are no limits to the evil that men can do. This man molested my sisters and beat my brother and I relentlessly for years. I learned to never trust anyone. I have only lost one fight in my life, out of the hundreds of altercations that I have been in growing up I have never been severely injured. I have quickly and effectively dealt with violent and dangerous situations more often through fighting but through intelligent retreat as well (usually when guns are involved).

The Mason- This man was in my life for a short period of time. In and out for about a year. He was a bodybuilder. He taught me that if you want to fuck women you have to be in great shape. At twelve years old he bought me an olympic ez-bar and weights. He also bought me dinner (a hundred dollar lobster dinner) for quitting smoking. He taught me to pass on what little you know to the next generation, regardless of whether they are yours or not. The weights helped me fight, a lot. In high school I was able to get so many girls to blow me that my older brother and his friends were often jealous at how many girls I could pull. This guys name was Joe, and although he was a piece of shit he blessed me with lifting which I have never stopped since that day.

The superintendent- This was the highest branch she could ever swing to. Actually the father of her previous boyfriend. This man taught me work ethic. He worked harder than anyone I have ever met. I learned that you could own anything you want as long as you are willing to pay the price. This man taught me that my mother was worthless, I knew it, but when he kicked me out and I had to sleep on a park bench in a dangerous area full of drug addicts it really set in. I begged her to help me, that I was scared and I needed her. She told me “There is nothing I can do for you.” I was 14. This blessed me with an inner strength and a drive to never fail. I have never from that day been in a position where I could not pay my own way. I told myself that I would never sleep in a place where I was unsafe again.
There are many others that I have derived many lessons from but it would be an exhaustive list to go through them all.

What I took away:

I have created a life for myself and my sons that is like nothing that I have experienced. They know nothing but security and the only examples of “men” allowed in their lives are ones that I have throughly vetted. I have invested heavily in my education and am starting a new job soon that pays $100,000+ a year without traveling. (I made more than that before but I was never home.)

I dropped out of school by 7th grade (I continued through to 9th grade which I repeated 3 times before I ultimately quit). I taught myself from books to get a GED. I then went onto go to college. I am one math class away from my AAS. Which I have studied while working and raising my sons, not for my career, solely for my need to be a better more intelligent man.

I have learned to lead by example. I make mistakes all the time. I reflect, problem solve and keep pushing forward(upward). I try to become a better version of myself everyday and I pass that knowledge onto my sons and those around me.

All my friends are either in prison or degenerate filthy drug addicts. I do not do drugs and never have. I control my drinking like a man and never lose control anymore, my twenties were another story. I have stopped associating myself with any negative people.

Some of the negatives and maybe some positives:

I treat women the same as I do men. Only for what they are truly worth. I can and have slain so many vaginas that women are truly of zero value unless they have actually built value in their lives and themselves. My wife knows this, and is constantly trying to improve my life through her positive behaviors that affect me. I am happily married, but my eyes are wide open. I am truly ready to drop her like a rock if the need arises, she is eerily aware of this, and acts accordingly.

I have finally become a man that I am proud of. I feel like I am still at the bottom of the mountain, but I am always climbing.

My “Fathers” entire line is dead now other than my sons and I. It has released me from an obsession to have a positive male mentor in my life and truly allowed me to get over my past.

I have forgiven all of those who have wronged me and written them into my history, none are allowed in my future.

TLDR: Search exhaustively for lessons from positive male role models and examples of positive behaviors and insert them into your being to become the best version of yourself.

There is lessons to be learned from everyone. Sometimes how to act, sometime how not to act.
Struggle is the chisel that you craft your coliseum with.

“So many women, so little time.” Gramps.

Edit: Thanks for all of the love.

I explained this to a guy I went to college with, when he asked why I was always so positive about other mens work and never had anything but good things to say even when some peoples speeches were garbage or their skills were lacking. Always lift you brothers up never put them down. It’s amazing what a man can turn into with the right words of encouragement. None of us were born with inherent value, we have to build it, and in turn build each other.

I tried to reach all of you that messaged me. I am not really keen to give you my personal info, start a chat maybe we can get to know each other first lol.....

And to you haters-Suck it()()-------))))
Dread-game may be the most important aspect of a Redpill LTR or marriage.

Your woman must know that you can pull other women and that sex is non-negotiable. I have been with my wife since I was 17 and she was 16. We married when I was 20 and she was 19. I turned 49 last week and my marriage has no resemblance to the blue-pill marriages of most of our friends. My wife maintains her appearance, fucks and sucks because my dread game has always been strong. I maintain control ... because women want to be controlled. I do and have done all the self-improvement and maintenance inherent in the redpill philosophy. You are responsible for the nature of your own relationships. A year after we began dating, she knew that other girls found me attractive and that she had competition. Example: we are both teachers at the same school and she saw a new teacher fawning over me at the football game Friday night. Without me asking, she sucked me off in the parking lot after the game. Establish dread game early.
Do the work
by donedreadpirate | September 10, 2017 | Link

Seeing a lot of posts on here all the time, asking specific questions about how to handle x,y,z. I tried touching on this in my Macro vs. Micro post but, look, I'm not a blogger. I'm a man of action. So here is your answer, to all the questions, by all the new guys: Work hard to make yourself look good, always be escalating with your wife, fuck her like a Taiwanese whore, always be flirting with other women, always chat people up, get out of your house, read your heart out to help modify your superego but you have to go outside and make it happen.

It's amazing how you won't give any fucks about your marriage or sex with your wife when you know you can go out and F close any day you want. I wear my ring. I go for the close. Some women get pissed at me for it. Doesn't matter. I do the work. If I got divorced, I'd be swimming in pussy but I'm not and I'm still swimming in pussy because the stay plan is the same as the go plan.

This is easy but it's hard. It's easy to read about, it's easy when you're good, but it takes constant work. You should be able to walk out of your door with absolutely no plan, and end up making friends with everyone where you end up: men and women. This takes effort. Being social. Your wife will see you do this with ease. It's Social Proof. You don't need a huge group of friends for social proof. Actually, I prefer just being really likable and having casual conversation with everyone I see vs. spending time trying to cultivate deep friendship. We have to have something I am really passionate about in common and you have to serve some kind of purpose for my mission for that. I go out completely alone. You know how impressive it is to women for a guy to show up somewhere by himself and have the confidence to know everyone in the place by the time he leaves? Anyone can bring their own friends somewhere they like to go. Operate like this in default.

Sex is fun I love sex but it's just sex. You have to understand that the sex you are not getting from your wife is the same sex you could be getting from any vagina on the planet of which there are billions. And girls are really, really lame. Like on a level that is sad if you have feelings. And even the "cool" ones, the only reason I am not hanging out with a guy who has the exact same hobbies instead is because she has a vagina and I want that. Otherwise I'll chill with the guy every time. At the same time, I love feminine energy. The anxiety and the timidity is really cute to me and I love it because it leads to sex. It's really a lot of fun how they test you. It's cute. Most guys are just as anxious and timid when you talk to them. Like, I N-closed probably 8 guys yesterday. It's the same I'm just not trying to fuck them.

What's the point of this rant... There isn't a point. Take what you want. I smell like girl right now and I'm about to fuck my wife. Your marriage is not a big deal. Sex is not a big deal. You are not a big deal. We're all just roaming around here trying to connect with others because we are social creatures. You staying home, not gaming women, not talking to strangers, you are putting a virus in that process and you should feel like a complete piece of scum because of it. People are very dynamic. You have much to learn from them. Enter the world as a sociologist studying the people you meet. Read them. Manipulate their feelings. This is life.
This is how it is meant to be.

So last night I'm making out with this tight little yoga bodied 22 year old bartender and I'm thinking... Nothing. I'm just existing. Like you should. I'm just out in the world, one of many, doing the same thing everyone else is doing: trying to connect with people. And it's beautiful. So toss aside all the restrictions you have put on yourself. Or maybe that society has put on you. There is only one truth and it's the present. What are you doing with it? Your wife isn't the only vagina. You aren't the only dick. We're all doing it, it's cheap, it's easy, and it's perfect. How it should be.

Rejoice in your struggle. Always, always, always, be escalating sex with your wife because I promise you she is not that cool that you should just be hanging out with her platonically. There are literally hundreds of women in your city/town who want to get fucked by a real man so if you are one, and you aren't getting laid, then maybe you aren't one. Be attractive. Don't be unattractive. Keep your house clean, your life organized, your finances managed, your hair cut, your body trim, and just go out and talk to people and you will get what you want from life. It's easy but it's hard. You will find that rejection is fun, shit tests are hilarious, and women are easy. So is life.

I play a game I call it Schmidt Game. My wife watches this show New Girl all the time. I don't watch TV, like, ever. No sports, no movies, no series. Okay I watch Game of Thrones but I don't generally waste my life away watching other people do their mission on TV. But there's this character named Schmidt. He's emotional. He's naive and in love. He's vulnerable. He can be completely goofy one minute and completely offended the next. But it's always silly. I mimic this when I am connecting with women. Complete AM. I take them on a rollercoaster of teasing and fighting. I get offended. I tell them I am breaking up with them. And it's never, ever serious, and they know it.

So how do you close? You just DO it. You know how many women have confessed to me that they expect the guy to make the move? They all do. All of them. Then I do, and half of them get offended since I'm married. But half of them don't. You don't need a story. Ask them for their numbers. Just hand them your phone with the New Contact window open and they'll put it in or they won't. If they don't, tease a little and challenge them but if they still don't, just smile and tell them it was nice to meet them and go on your way because there is absolutely nothing special about them that isn't special about everyone else. There is no female or friend as your magic bullet. It's you. It's all on you.

When you walk into a room, the room is the Red Sea and you are Moses himself. You imagine the world stopping for you because your world does stop for you. You know The Secret. That the Law of Attraction is real and you bring to your life what you focus on. Choose your focus. As Mark Manson puts it, life is a struggle, so choose what you are willing to struggle for. Pick the people you choose to waste it with. You will die, that is for certain. Maybe today. Maybe we are already dead. Maybe death is the answer, and nothing to fear.

I was in a store the other day, and I saw a pretty girl. I imagined her being pulled towards me with electric rays shooting out of me. When I walked by, she turned and checked me out, and stopped what she was doing. I was with my wife and kids but I smiled. It works. It's real. You are attracting to your life what you choose to focus on. If you are focusing on not getting laid, you will not get laid. If you believe already that you have 10 plates, sex all the time, and a kick-ass life.... Even if you don't... Guess what will happen? So quit drudging about in the text and GO DO THE WORK. Just believe in it. Trust your intuition.

Women are not complicated. I promise you there are far greater treasures to be plundered in this flesh. But they are fun. They relieve me from my world of logic and calculation and we are able to go somewhere together that is even slightly euphoric, although fleeting. I do enjoy their company.

I am on a journey to rediscover my mission. I sacrificed it for my marriage and children and it was a very big mistake. I'm a musician. There are videos of me as a child. A little kid. I am watching musicians on TV, singing and dancing alongside them. I knew it then. I knew my purpose when I was not even 2 years old and I let it go because I thought it was a silly dream. When 5 hours go by and they feel like 5 minutes, you are on your mission. Don't question it. You are a car. The road is your mission. The present is what you see in the headlights and it's all that matters right now.

Walk outside today and talk to a stranger. Imagine yourself as already being the person you want to be. You will be amazed what happens, that I am sure of, but you have to do the work.
Does she trust you to be a man?

by suprathepeg | June 17, 2019 | Link

I’ve been listening to The Science Of Trust by John M Gottman lately and it occurred to me that the reason MRP works is that it’s about building trust. Of particular interest in the book is that they found in their studies that men and women both are happier in relationships where the woman trusts the man.

Drunk Captain = not trustworthy of family leadership.

Doesn’t clean up after himself = not trustworthy of family leadership.

Fat and lazy = not trustworthy of family health leadership.

Finances a mess = not trustworthy of financial leadership.

Oneitis following her everywhere = not trustworthy of her leadership.

Not growing or developing as a man = not trustworthy of family growth leadership.

Not owning your shit = not trustworthy of leadership period.

Whining like a bitch = not trustworthy of leadership period.

Not setting or maintaining boundaries = not trustworthy of family safety leadership.

Can’t pass shit tests = not trustworthy of her leadership.

Can’t identify shit tests = not trustworthy of her leadership.

It goes on from there, we all get the idea.

Women want you to be a man she can follow. When she sees she can trust you to be that man she is free to give in and let you lead. All the things we do here are ultimately to build trust. This is why MRP addresses the man and not the marriage. Be the man her hind brain can trust.
All,

The Red Pill became a part of my life one year ago, and I've found this space incredibly helpful. I'm in my early 50s and in a post-divorce-rape LTR. My situation isn't yours, of course. But I wanted to post on my one-year RP "rebirth day" in an effort to give back. These are some of the side effects you may experience.

If you're just getting started, you're likely to find that:

1. The anger and sense of despair fade. There is real truth to the cliche that "it doesn't get easier, but you get better." Lifting and accomplishing goals help in a big way even if the goals you achieve are small.

2. TV shows and movies will become unwatchable. Your awareness will inevitably make you recoil in anger at nearly every movie and nearly every time you turn on the TV: The fem-centric brain beating never stops. Even my enjoyment of the NFL has been ruined by anti-male commercials, forced pink uniforms during "women's health month," and nauseaing "public service announcements." There is an upside to all of this: Less entertainment = more time for self-improvement.

3. You will be tempted to drop RP wisdom on your beta co-workers, friends, relatives, and even women. Don't. It will help nobody and lead nowhere. Let your actions do the talking. As you develop frame and strengthen it, the people in your life WILL react. The subtle long-term changes probably will have more impact than trying to become an alpha jerk-boy overnight.

4. You will start to notice and resent the feminine imperative in your workplace unless you're lucky enough to have chosen a male-oriented line of work. Conniving female managers, cubicle drama queens, and HR political officers probably irritated you in even your most beta days. But now, you despise their behavior on a whole new level. You may just find yourself considering a career change.

Above all, you will experience struggle-- and hopefully come out better on the other side. I'm still climbing and it usually isn't easy. But it really is better to live an ugly truth than a pretty lie. Stay frosty, gents!
Most men's masculine ideal is not alpha

by Sepean | March 9, 2017 | Link

Time and again I see men come on here and post their manly qualities and wonder how their wives aren't fucking them. All their hard work, the stuff they pay for, the sacrifices they make, for nothing?

Or they worry how their wife will respond to something unmanly that he has to do, like have his income drop below hers or go back on his word.

Very often, these supposedly manly qualities are things that women obviously either don't give a shit about or are beta qualities.

I remember an example from months back where iirc a poster needed an investment for his business to take off. His father-in-law was rich, had himself built his business on a loan from someone who believed in him in the early, and all our poster needed to do was ask for a loan. But he was afraid it would be seen as unmanly, and if he did take the loan he was sooo determined to work his ass off to repay it as soon as possible.

I get the feeling of not wanting to owe anyone anything, but this guy was worrying about how his wife would see it. The ironic thing is that his worry, his desire to pay back the money and whatever other sort of grovelling he'd do for the FIL to show his gratitude is exactly the sort of unalpha behavior that would make her lose attraction.

There's an alpha asshole archetype that would not give a fuck, take the loan and not have the slightest intention of paying it back, and as long as his alpha qualities were high his wife would enthusiastically bounce on his dick and hamster him hustling her father as savvy or some shit.

I'm not saying that this is the right way to go about it; personally I value honest and respectable relations. But I don't pretend it has anything to with being alpha. It's a personal code that is simply irrelevant with regards to her attraction to me.

Many of us see the masculine as ideal as including things like:

- respectable
- making money
- true to his word
- loyal
- protective
- helps friends and family in need
- making sacrifices

But these qualities are not alpha. They're not negative alpha either - they're orthogonal to the alpha dimension. They're irrelevant when it comes to making women wet.
This idea that our masculine ideal is what women find attractive is flawed. Many aspects of our perception of masculinity are beta qualities - they're wired into us because women also have a sexual strategy to acquire partners with beta traits and because they help our children to survive, and we should understand them as such instead of assuming that everything we see as masculine or aspire to is alpha.

If you ever find yourself worrying about something "unmanly" you have to do, conjure up the image of jacked bad boys: Chad the poolboy, the tatted-up scumbag drug dealer, the hustling con artist. Men who lack status, prospects and honor but fuck lots of girls. If those guys could do what you're about to do without batting an eye, it isn't unattractive.

There are still many reasons to not be a scumbag. First and foremost, there's your personal sense of worth. Woman also have a dual sexual strategy and for that reason the MRP ideal to have both strong alpha and beta qualities. Many beta qualities also improve your relationship with other people.

But when it comes to attraction, love and respect from your woman, don't kid yourself that everything you see as manly will get that.

Your idea of masculinity is poorly calibrated with being alpha.

TLDR - I was pathetic and have made some solid progress to becoming less so. Many miles to go.

Realized that Sunday was my one-year redpill anniversary. Here's where I was and how far I've come. This is mostly a journaling exercise for myself, but comments are welcome, even if it's just to call me a faggot. Not looking for your validation, just putting this out there for me and for the odd newb that wonders what the progression might look like.

A year ago, I was an exhausted 40 years old, 189 lbs, 25%+ skinnyfat, didn't lift, 17 years married career beta who had sprinkled just enough fakey Alpha on myself at times to marry a fairly attractive woman and build a somewhat successful career.

My wife had had an emotional affair (possibly physical and potentially more, can never know) 2 years into our marriage that still grated on me 15 years later, even though like a beta chump I stuck around and had 4 kids with her.

Bedroom was mostly dead, with duty sex every 2 weeks or so, and anything hotter than that (when I managed some clumsy DEVI), left her in religious guilt that kept me from getting laid for 3 weeks.

My run at self-employment had ended due to my poor planning and living in my wife's frame on everything I did, and I had taken a job with a local tech company. Gave me lots of time to read and absorb this stuff.

Finances were fucked and it's an ongoing process to fix them. I am the most broke guy with an 800 credit score I know. Wife ran all money our entire marriage and it was automatic deposit in - automatic bill pay out. I never had cash in my wallet and had to ask and feel guilty for buying a coke. Wife bought all my clothes and bought herself anything she wanted. She bought me what she wanted me to have for birthdays Christmas etc. and her own presents too. I managed to hide cash occasionally or sell off stuff to buy things for myself and felt guilty every time I did.

I carried around endless guilt, covert contracts, anger and resentment and believed that the key to happiness was increased self-sacrifice.

What I did and where it got me:

1) Lift - started with 5x5 and the fucking bar. now I am 175 pounds, 12% bodyfat, visible abs, suntanned. 3 rep max - Bench 220, OHP 130, Deadlift 300, Squat 260. Tore my rotator cuff last week so Bench and OHP are off the table for a bit while I try to heal it without surgery.

I am not jacked by any means, but for a 41-year-old natural and hard gainer with no weightlifting background I look good in clothes, look good out of clothes, feel a ton better about myself and my abilities etc. Lifting is the foundation. If you are not willing to fight this battle in the gym just quit now. NOTHING is better for frame.

I get constant IOIs from women now and am better at passing shit tests, better at work and better at life thanks to lifting.

2) read and re-read the damn sidebar. it's all there. The next step for me in internalizing and growth is to do more writing. Learn by teaching it so to speak. As many know I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormon) and there are a ton of us on here. The Church has a strong doctrinal foundation compatible with Redpill but like all of Christianity has been infiltrated by blue pill feminists and allowed Beta plowhorses to thrive and be lauded for their self-sacrifice.

Many men in the Church need the redpill desperately but choke on the amoral lack of righteous prescription and the upfront brutal realities of human nature. Working on writings to soften the blow with an easy-to-swallow coating, while not watering it down or making it purple pill, (i.e. saying fuck without saying fuck)

3) Took back control of my finances last December. This was our first major fight as I went Rambo to fix everything at once. But I actually kicked ass on this shit test, held frame and simply opened my own account, switched automatic deposit and set a new paradigm. Skills were rusty at first but I’m making progress. We are still in a shitty place overall, and it’s my fault for allowing it.

I was laid off in April from the tech job but landed a new job within a week. As usual its commission, but it’s what I have done for 15 years and I have it up and running now and more than covering expenses, slowly paying down debts. Doing things for myself when finances permit and when I feel like it. Buying my own clothes and my wardrobe now inspires dread and attraction. Wife still managed to fuck up her personal finances last week and I took the opportunity to set a plan of action, remind myself that she is only a semi-responsible teenager and lead.

2018 has been a cast-iron bitch; with major medical issues for wife and son, the layoff, wife totaled her car, a significant house repair issue, wife lost the diamond from her wedding ring, my favorite grandmother passing away, Rambo radical life changes, and now my torn rotator but I soldier on. I list these things not to complain but to remind myself of all the ass-kicking I have done this year in handling and owning my shit. Beta me would have been complaining to my wife constantly and being unattractive, or depressed and giving up like I was a year and a half ago when closing my business down.

Relationship: We have had a couple opening salvos toward a main event, I went Rambo and still harbor too much anger, but I have been passing shit tests and handling things. I AA, fog and am cocky/funny. I can see the sparkle of attraction and admiration in her eyes even as she calls me an asshole. Learning from each experience how to better lead and pour her into my frame and my mission.

I am fun, I lead, and I make plans. I still fuck up all the time, but I have momentum. Hell, I actually have the beginnings of a mission for myself -finding that lack of mission was my single biggest depressing factor my entire life. Wife and kids are invited to come along on the awesome journey.

Sex has improved tenfold in quality and quantity has gone up to 4-5 times/week. I lead in the bedroom. No more guilt or “I need to feel loved to want sex” arguments from the wife. I game her constantly and operate with outcome independence and abundance mentality. Dread level is 6-7 and I really don’t see the need to go higher right now. I am witty and social again and maintain plausible deniability while being flirty and CHOOSING to remain faithful. (I would divorce her cleanly before I will cheat)

Red pill has affected everything in my life by giving me back freedom of choice. I choose to remain faithful, not because I have no options or because my religion says so. I choose my religious belief system rather than letting the local culture or her choose it for me. My relationship with God is better because I CHOOSE to operate within it and pursue it my way. Questioning all my beliefs has made me so much stronger in what I choose to believe and do.

Abundance mentality, dread and outcome independence are so effective not only in my relationship but in my commission sales job that I am having breakthroughs and growth I hadn’t achieved in a decade.

I am on the endless journey to becoming the man I am supposed to be. . I am nowhere near to arriving, and there is nowhere to arrive to. There is no damn spoon. Shit, my 3 daughters are going to be teenagers starting in a couple of years and I have a LOT to do.

I appreciate the posters here who have kicked my ass when needed and helped me figure some of this shit out along the way. I can’t wait to see what new shit I am going to have to learn in year two.

I appreciate u/red-sfpplus for keeping my eyes wide and painfully open to Mormon AWALT.

I appreciate u/Rian_Stone for taking my original pathetic IM a year ago and being hard enough on me to wake me up and patient enough with me to keep messaging when I thought I had to be a posturing hard guy and told him to fuck off.

It may yet all go to shit, but I don’t care anymore about the risks. I am finally starting to live my own life.
I had a go-to setup for first dates as a young lad. There was a restaurant downtown... let's call it Joe's Pizza... near where I live and we would go there then go dancing or to a comedy club or something like that. I did it as a first date with every girl until I met my now-wife. I didn't do it with her. Our first date was somewhere else.

Here's the problem though. I'm an idiot. So... when we got married and spent our first night of our honeymoon downtown, I thought I'd be smooth and get her food from Joe's Pizza for us to munch on in the room. I told her it was a surprise and expected her to be swept off her feet when I walked back in the hotel room with the pizza. Needless to say, at first she didn't understand and then was slightly annoyed / hurt by my mistake (though she hid it well). I still smashed though.

Over the years, it's been mentioned a few times but never really a joke topic or anything like that. We've never actually eaten there either in our years of marriage.

Fast forward to today. We are moving to a new city and had to contact one of our service providers to get the location changed. They wanted both of us on the line for whatever reason. One of the service questions was "your favorite restaurant as a couple" and without really thinking about it, I answered "Joe's Pizza for sure" with the cockiest tone I could muster. My wife laughed suddenly and the lady went on about getting us set up.

A few min later I get a text. "Ass." I texted back a peach emoji and then the kissing heart. She texted back with a very interesting selfie. Is that extremely unusual in our marriage? Not anymore. Would that have happened a few years ago? Hell no.

Here's lesson #1. Once you make some decent gains on attractiveness and frame, it's less about what you do or say and much more about how you do or say it. There are limits, of course. But... you get wayyyy more leeway to be whoever you want to be and say whatever you want to say if you have your shit together. An attractive guy can get a wildly different response saying the exact same thing as an unattractive guy. That is not a new or original thought but it's incredibly important.

Here's lesson #2. It doesn't truly matter that my wife responded well. I mean, we are all here for sexual strategies and self-improvement so it's easy to measure success in terms of her responses. However, that's bullshit. Measuring your progress solely against a woman's reactions is a validation trap and speaks to a lack of real frame. Had she been in a shitty mood or had the kids just spilled milk on the carpet, thus causing her to respond poorly to my joke, that doesn't mean that my improvements don't matter. Regardless of how she responded, I still put myself out there. I still made the move. I still made the joke because I wanted to. That's the real improvement.

That's also neither new nor original. However, it's even more important than #1. Do this shit for you. Not her. Don't hesitate to review her responses to gain a measure of how you are doing but don't let her be the only litmus test you use.
There is a scant little discussion on developing hobbies on both this sub, and on the r/RPChristians sub so I'm going to go over what's been helpful for me, and why it should matter to you:

Why Hobbies Matter

1. If you don't do what you want to do, you're always going to end up doing what someone else wants you to do. Having good hobbies is a way to maintain your own frame.
2. Hobbies are distinct from your mission, but they can certainly support it.
3. Attractive men stand out from the crowd. They don't blur in with it. Establishing hobbies that reflect who you are give you an outlet for bold expressions of passion that do for your character what peacocking does for your attire.
4. It's just fun. What's the point of being "red" or "blue", “Alpha” or "omega" or whatever if you're not enjoying life?

Identifying Hobbies that are Worthwhile

There is a difference between a hobby and a chore/work even if the activities are the same. If you use working out as a means of maintaining health and nothing more, consider it work. However if you are bodybuilding, getting bigger better and stronger, etc. This is a hobby. Part of being a man is to stay fit, but not necessarily to be a body builder.

Do not limit yourself to only one or two hobbies - especially if you are very very passionate about them. I generally prescribe 3 or more to people. These are not things you have to be constantly working on. You could take a break for a month then come back to it. (For example, if it only snows for 4 mos. a year but you love snowboarding/skiing.) Limiting yourself to a few high passion hobbies can lead to pedestalization of those hobbies, and just like doing it to women, it will But that they exist on the back-burner to be worked on when you have free time. Hobbies are major identity pieces, and just like women you can pedestalize a hobby.

The 5 primary categories of Hobbies.

1) Physical Activity/Health ex. Weight lifting.

2) Financial Gain ex. Picking up scrap metals and selling them.

3) Artistic Expression ex. Cooking, art, music.

4) Social Exposure/Networking ex. Volunteering.

5) High Mental Stimulation ex. Reading, taking classes.
While you can ultimately do what you want with your hobbies, I've found that maintaining balance in my life has been of great benefit. So, here's my model. Out of your 3+ hobbies, all 5 categories should be exhibited. Of those 3 each hobby needs to be a combination of at least 2 of these. If you have a hobby that is only 1 it either needs to be developed, or is a waste of time. For example, if you are an artist who never does anything with your art, either get involved in the art scene, sell commissions, or stop. Analyze your hobbies, can you confidently say they are all more than one?

Tips and Tricks:

Finding Forum

There are a number of places online and offline that can be resources for upping your 'hobby game'. Search for Facebook communities or events and go to them. They are worth the extra $20.00 to go to the event. Joining a club or organization. Finding peers is essential to steady progress.

Plan Your Schedule

Be deliberate about your time spent, everything needs a beginning point AND an end point. If you do not have a daily calendar yet, get one. Schedule time for working on your hobby. If you need to shop for supplies, or seek out some kind of inspiration. Give a time limit. Still not inspired? Oh well, start practicing anyway.

Seeking a Teacher

This last part is a no brainer, but seems to be misunderstood once people get out of their college age. Seek someone more experienced then than you - actively seek them out. Of the three, my guess is most of you will grow quickest from this. How do you find a teacher? By joining those forums and watch for the men who are succeeding the most. Ask them if they can help you out. Altruism is related closely to ego, and there is no short supply of that. Take advantage of it!

Further Development

I have found that the more proficient I am at a hobby, the more I enjoy it. The nuances that I didn't notice before become alive and help me appreciate not only my own effort in what I'm doing, but also even observing other people who share the same hobby, making it easier to utilize hobbies for greater social development, intellectual stimulation, or any other one of those facets I described above. To that end, one way of developing a hobby is to expand the scope or depth of how you're utilizing it, preferably in a way that adds one of those new facets to your practice of it.

Take cooking, for example. It starts off as "artistic expression." You make some food fancy for yourself because you watched Brad from BA make a pantry sandwich. Good job. Now you're interested so you start learning about abstract food - molecular gastronomy, or traditional French cooking like cooking butter in butter or something. And Damn it tastes good. So you invite some friends over to try it. They loved it or hated it, so now you have to improve. You go to a class on cooking and learn knife skills, and wow you didn't cut yourself. Now you're going to the farmers market because rutabaga or some other disgusting vegetable is in season and the hot woman running the business is impressed because "Wow, you shop farm to table?" Yeah unlike all of your friends who still by Green Giant frozen peas. You realize that all this food has made your waist grow by 2 inches, so how do I make healthy food taste good? Now it's contributing to your workouts. Seriously how do I get 150 grams of protein a day? Your coworker notices your food prep looks bomb AF. You offer to make twice as much and prep for them if they pay you. (Now you're making money for something you were spending money on.) Now you can move out of your mom's basement. Great job, killer.

"But Praex, what does this have to do with RedPill?"

A man without hobbies is an aimless man, at much higher risk of pedestalizing his wife and kids. You have to know what YOU enjoy doing before it makes sense to ask anyone else to join you in doing them. More to the point: if you don't have things you enjoy doing apart from your family, you will end up becoming co-dependent on them for satisfaction and fulfillment in life, which will give them power over you. Find things to do apart from them to bolster in your own mind that you are independently stable, which will make you more attractive.

Hobbies are also an area where a man can find something to strive for. The male drive for improvement is extremely powerful and should be fostered whenever it can. A lack of hobbies forces men to be very narrow in those things which they can build up, which can increase the risk of becoming a workaholic who doesn't know how to have fun or the guy who becomes co-dependent on his wife. Too many hobbies can, of course, spread a man's efforts too thin so that he never becomes truly excellent and admirable at anything. Find a balance and live in that balance.

Then there's dread. If your wife is the only person you go to when you want to have fun and relax, it means you're not out in the world away from her. She always has tabs on you and feels more complete in her knowledge of you. The mystery is gone. By learning how to leave your home for a hobby here and there, even if she knows what you're doing, she doesn't actually see it - and who knows if you're actually doing what you said you're doing? The goal here isn't to make her jealous. But there's value in her realizing that she doesn't have you all figured out - that there are parts of your life that extend beyond her. This also has great value in establishing a precedent that she isn't pedestalized in your life. While this can make her more drawn to you (because women love to know about "EVERYTHING" in their man's life), it's more significant for YOU that you know you can be fine independent of your family. This breaks the co-dependence, increases dread, and ultimately makes you more attractive and stable as a man ... not to mention that you learn to have more fun out of life!

Labeling your hobbies under a few of those 5 categories can help give you purpose and focus to a hobby. In regards to Redpill it will give you opportunities to test out the material you are suppose to be internalizing.(For my RPC brothers) it is essential to have focused hobbies, as this allows you to use them as a means for furthering your mission and growing your sphere of (Godly) influence. Passive hobbies like uninspired television watching doesn't add to those around you, nor does it paint you with the image of a purpose driven man. If you're going to engage in a passive, non-social hobby, like watching television, make sure you think long and hard about how you intend to redeem it - and then ACTUALLY do so. If you say you're going to watch a TV show to connect with other people who watch the same show, what effort are you actually going to take to find those people? Do you already know anyone? Are you going to use the show to build the relationship and ACTUALLY share the Gospel with them through that relationship, or are you just going to have another friend and move on? If you have to change a hobby to be more involved in it, to develop it into something that challenges you more, there will be more opportunity to influence others and to lead them.

Now, share some of your hobbies here and why you do them. Let the guys without hobbies be inspired by the things that keep you amused so they can learn from you and be inspired to figure out who they are and what they enjoy as men.
If you’ve read my previous post about Depressive and Anxious wives, this is a continuation of that topic. If you want to get anything out of Part 2, I suggest you go back and read my first post to put this into your mind: It’s all your fault.

This post’s audience is intended for the Intermediate or Advanced MRP guy. If you haven’t been at this for 6 months or more, save it, and come back to it later. Until then, you’ll likely try to implement the concepts of frame escape on a shitty weak frame which will fail. Trust me. I did.

Your wife is looking for you to not only lead her out of her depressive and anxious states, but to do so with great truth and authenticity. After watching some men who have built a decent frame come back into MRP and ask why their wives are still nuclear shit testing them everyday (this was me at many points) despite them fucking her brains out, I was compelled to write what I think is the missing puzzle piece: Transforming your frame to be a place of escape.

Prerequisites:

- Entire sidebar? If no, go do that now. Being with a depressive, anxious or crazy wife requires fundamentals to build something that resembles a frame. You must understand the concept of fogging better than anyone. STFU is equally as important.
- Once done with the sidebar, Read TWOTSM again. I prefer the audiobook version because it has great narration with a strong masculine voice. It’s also concisely broken into chapters that make sense to listen to all at once or in parts. In my opinion, TWOTSM teaches you how to move your wife from emotion to emotion effortlessly with your masculinity. Yes, it’s kind of hippie, but you’ll be moving the energy in your relationship.
- You’ve developed some form of frame, likely operating with some DNGAF. That’s foundational to creating an escape.
- You like you wife. Yes, you probably love her. But do you like her? This is a painful road and if you don’t like her, it simply will not work and she will see right through you.
- You’re willing to take the tough road and do the hard work.

So, here we go, how to take all that negative energy and turn it around for both of you.

Step 1: Build your frame. But don’t destroy hers.

I won’t spend much time here talking about how to build your frame because it’s been extensively covered in many posts here on MRP. Whatever that frame is, fucking own it.
That’s you. Don’t be afraid to be who you are anymore.

You’re probably not ready to start shifting her frame into yours because you’re still figuring out who the fuck you are. Follow all the sage MRP advice on building frame and understand that you will not and cannot change her frame. Your goal is NEVER to change her. It is to invite her into your frame where she can relax from her own. And your frame is a place of abundance, fun, and masculine power.

The last thing you want to do is destroy her frame. Later, I’ll explain how I think you can use it to your advantage.

Step 2: Learn from your wife.

She will shit test you to the ends of the earth because she desires the best in you. Your wife knows who you are and is likely more emotionally aware than you think she is. Had a bad day at work? She feels that shit, bro. Turned down for sex and you launched out of bed to go lift? She knows, bro. Take the opportunity everytime something is going sideways or you’re getting a shit test to say to yourself: What is my wife trying to teach me here? Likely, she is trying to teach you to operate in your frame, always. She WANTS you to stand in the face of her absurd emotions as the oak gently swaying in the wind saying to her, “Babe, I see what you’re doing here. It’s OK. I’m here. What’s up?” Calibrate your actions accordingly. Take notes in the beginning if necessary, but keep them hidden.

Step 3: Initially caretake by using Advanced Fogging.

If you wife is depressed, anxious and generally batshit crazy it’s likely because she is needy. She’s missing something. She looks to you to provide it to her (as she does with everything in her life). Needy women attract needy men. It’s likely that your beta behaviors have been needy which fuels this type of outburst behavior from your wife. Be aware that’s how you got here. Non-needy men do not have time for needy women because we have better shit to do. This is your long term plan.

Eventually you’ll transform her neediness into sexual emotion, intimacy and a desire to escape. Does that sound like something you want?

For now, you need to caretake a bit. This stage can last a few weeks or a few months. For me, it took about 3-4 months of caretaking from a masculine frame before the needle moved for me. You do shit for her because it makes your life easier. Pickup the extra chores. Make her some coffee in the morning when you make yours. Give her a break from cooking sometimes and do it yourself because you want to be better at it. The most important thing you can do in this stage is to take it on the chin like a boss.

She wants to talk? Listen, and STFU. She hates her life and the kids and wants to die? “That sucks babe. I imagine that makes you feel awful.” Then STFU. LEARN TO FOG. Get down in the trenches with her, but don’t be a placating emotional tampon. Maintain that you are there to listen, and nothing more. Don’t try to fix this - in fact, you don’t want to fix it. You want to harness this energy later.
Why are you caretaking? You need to let her know that you are safe. You don’t judge. You are the oak. You are a man that can take the worst of her shit tests and it doesn’t phase you. You caretake in this period to show strength.

Are you a man of strength and resolve? Do you gladly give your energy positively to her so that she can begin to move away from her shitty frame into yours? The only way to achieve your frame as being a place of escape is NO JUDGEMENT. You’ll find yourself saying shit like: “AWALT” or “She’s just being a bitch today” or “What a fucking complaining cunt all the time”. You are judging. Your goal is to get her to understand that her tests are not going to move you but rather you can use her tests and emotions to move her.

Step 4: Transition the caretaking to the bedroom.

This was a crucial step for my own personal success. A post here inspired me to rethink how I used sex to caretake – which meant that sexual contact doesn’t always equal sex.

When you awake every morning, you have a raw energy to go and conquer the world. Since the beginning of man, we woke up thinking about what to do that day – how the world was going to challenge us – and how strong we needed to remain with our energy to face the dangers and challenges of what’s out there. Often, we seek release from such constraint. It can come in the form of sports, breaking barriers, or sexual release through orgasm.

Your woman has a duality to her nature that creates dissonance. She wants to drain you of your energy in the form of orgasm because it pleases her man. But conversely, she also knows that if she can drain you she knows that the world can as well. Therefore, an orgasm that your wife draws out of you becomes somewhat of a power struggle over the long term.

Have you ever withheld ejaculation? It’s a way of taking back that power... more of my thoughts on this are here. But it’s my personal belief that learning to do this on a small scale will help transform caretaking into true OI towards your wife, which she will feel. And it will continue to feel like caretaking in a sexual way.

At some point she will be comfort testing you and you’ll respond with the kiss on the forehead, or simple caretaking. You’ll need to move that into the bedroom at some point, usually in the form of providing her comfort lying down with you. Escalate with her and eventually she might be receptive to your sexual advances. When she’s grabbed your cock – stop. Allow her to do whatever it is that she wants to. If she wants to fuck, “Baby, not tonight. I’d like to build this up through tomorrow.” STFU. Watch. She will either agree, or try to push forward. Don’t let her make you cum.

The next day she will be thinking about it – I guarantee it. Before you were a selfish lover, perhaps focused on the act of ejaculation, but now you’re focused on pleasure and intimacy. She is focused on comfort, still. And then you’re on the road to getting pleasure, intimacy, domination and comfort all in a single nice package.

Step 5: Training your wife

Remember how your wife is coming to bed for comfort? You need to continue to keep this up as an expectation that this is the way that she will receive comfort and alleviate her stress there. I started by offering covert encouragement: “I like how you’re relaxed when you come to bed now.” Or “Something is much better when you come to bed now.” You’re encouraging the type of behavior that you enjoy. Covertly let her know that what she is doing pleases you.

I just started by cuddling her in bed with her facing me, then taking her hand and placing it on my cock. And I did not initiate. If she wanted to, she could. If not, fine. But what you can’t do is take her hand and initiate in the early stages of her training. Remember – you’re trying to create a space where she can explore comfort and intimacy at the same time without any pressure of sexual release.

What does this do? It resets the scoreboard, and allows her to enter your frame on her own accord. When it comes to sex – your wife and you have probably constructed this stupid scoreboard of covert contracts that says “One point for cleaning the kitchen, I just need 5 more until I can get laid”. That’s gone, motherfucker. Eventually she will enter your frame, look around and say, “Where is the scoreboard?” (Read that link at least 3 times).

You must rebuild the trust that any sexual advances that you make are from a place of true abundance and giving. See, you’re giving your wife herself. She is no longer giving herself to you, you are taking her.

This is where you begin compliance testing her. Ask her to make you lunch. Ask her to grab you a glass of water on the way to bed. She will jump at the opportunity to give back to you within your frame. If she does not, she has yet to accept that she will enter your frame – likely with more destructive behaviors – until she submits to a better relationship dynamic of living within your frame.

Occasionally, be vulnerable and authentic to her about inconsequential matters. I once had a problem with my face breaking out. I simply went to her and said, “Hey babe, so…. My face is breaking out more often. It’s not bothering me just yet, but I’m sure it will. Would you mind picking me up some stuff at the store that would help? I know you’re good at that stuff.” All within that sentence I was able to convey: Vulnerability (face breaking out), checking in with my FO (do you have a good idea?), and leading (compliance testing).

With all this said, it’s a strategy. It’s ultimately a sexual strategy. But if you truly embrace the woman that she is and yes, you must like her, you’ll likely discover some things along the way that you too like and want to change.

Masculine comfort for the depressive or anxious wife is exactly the recipe that SHE needs in order to enter your frame. Moreso than most women. Calibrate accordingly but allow yourself to give what you want.
Introducing our protagonist, Inspector Faggot.

Who is he?

He's Inspector Faggot. No, not this guy, just make sure he doesn't look like you. What does our protagonist look like in this tragedy? He is desperately worried his wife/LTR is lying to him, cheating on him, deceiving him, etc. Whatever the fear may be, it consumes him. The thought of his relationship being in jeopardy and losing his oneitis is like a sack of bricks our man must carry around with him everywhere he goes.

What does he do?

Any of the following:

- Monitors and tracks his wife's computer, cell phone and car location
- Drives by places she is supposed to be to ensure she's there
- Calls her way too much, not because he wants to talk to her but because he's looking to investigate her story and police her actions
- Tries to use her friends to unearth her actions when he is not around
- Gets nervous when she goes out, especially on a GNO
- Secretly or not so secretly hates when she wears something sexy out, especially when he won't be around
- Hates that she has guy friends and is threatened by them
- Seeks for ways to prove his value to her and show her his love through his investigations - "it's because he cares"
- Stays home when she goes out and basically sulks and cries - he has limited to no options of things to do without her
- Checks to see if she has used her vibrator - how often, what's the last position she put it in in the drawer, what does it smell like? Is it one of u/red-spfplus's models?
- Interrogates her as to her location and activities, looks for holes in her stories, follows up on all loose ends like a good inspector would

The list goes on, but essentially our protagonist friend just gives way too many fucks.

The casting is always open

This character can actually be played by any man weak enough to audition. He comes in all shapes and sizes. The best actors for this role don't lift, don't have their own lives, don't have game and cannot stand on their own. They are the doormats that are grateful to have a spot on the floor. The role pays nothing except false hopes and dreams. It's the shittiest job you'll ever take, but it's always open for the taking.

Why he exists
As previously alluded to, Inspector Faggot plays a starring roll in a greater tragedy that inevitably plays out. He is in a powerless position in his relationship and is a slave to her frame. Her frame is weak, bending and moves at her will, such is the nature of the feminine.

He can never find his purpose and actualize his potential as a man in such a role. Yet he plays the role because he is lost. He is desperate. He has true scarcity in his options. For all these reasons, she rightfully despises him and most likely this motivates her to play out the very scenarios he is so terrified of - she cheats, betrays him, or whatever the swirling art of her mind compels her to do.

Don't be this guy

Catch yourself when you are starting to audition to be Inspector Faggot. Or come to OYS and we'll do it for you. Either way, become aware of your faggotry. As with all problems in life, you are assigning the wrong number of fucks to your relationship. If you truly have the power to walk away, then what does it matter if she fucks up? So she fucks up. Life goes on. You either wish her the best and move on to the terrible fate of fucking a rotation of 20 year olds or you decide to forgive whatever her indiscretion was. There are no hard fast rules on what action you take, but it isn't a big deal either way. Always be clear on what your relationship is - it's an exchange of value. If it ever goes out of balance, you correct it or move on. If you have trouble with this, try giving fewer fucks.

The cameo role: trust but verify

Even guys with decent frame get pulled into the trap of "trust but verify" (TBV) sometimes. Be careful with this role, because it diminishes your ability to trust the relationship and can have you on the slippery slope of auditioning for the full Inspector Faggot role before you know it.

This doesn't necessarily mean you are being Inspector Faggot, but lets face it, it usually does. Security issue? TBV. Kid's safety is in jeopardy? TBV. Some other matter that has heavy consequences (beyond losing your precious oneitis unicorn), then by all means TBV. In all other cases, if you don't trust, don't bother verifying. Again, too many fucks are being given. The only time for TBV is when outcome trumps relationship. Otherwise, realize all women (from HB2 trolls and up) will get attention from men, will do shit that doesn't make sense, will hide things from you and from themselves. AWALT. Don't waste your time and attention on this.

Play a role worth playing

Life is too short to constantly be opening investigations and working cases. Don't be Inspector Faggot. Call out yourself and others when they are being Inspector Faggot. No MRP member should be playing this role, ever. If anything, play the role of this guy instead.
The Wrong Way: Don't Be This Guy

by 0io- | December 16, 2018 | Link

Apparently this video https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Wen9pl8iDZU is making the rounds on the 'chans and some MGTOW forums. A very very bitter Billy Beta attempts to lay a guilt trip on his wife for her refusal to have sex with him in months. I find the video difficult to watch, but I'm impressed with the stoic nature of the wife, who clearly DNGAF what her nagging husband has to say about anything. It's almost like a gender role reversal where the husband comes in to henpeck his wife and annoy her while she's relaxing in bed reading her phone or playing vidya or something. And while he nags and berates her there is a small child in the room. Maybe this is an extreme example of what not to do, maybe this is not all that uncommon in a lot of marriages. But this guy pretty much does the opposite of everything we recommend around here, and it clearly isn't working for him (or her.)

1. Begging for sex doesn't work
2. Doing housework and vacuuming for sex doesn't work
3. Screaming and yelling like a little kid doesn't work
4. Blaming your wife for the lack of sex doesn't work
5. Threatening divorce for sex doesn't work
6. Calling names and making threats for sex doesn't work
7. Having zero frame and nagging and henpecking for sex doesn't work

I'm sure I missed a few more. It's like a Red Pill Public Service Announcement or After-School Video. Notice the guy doesn't say anything much about himself, it's all about her, in his mind. He probably says "you this" and "you that" a few hundred times. Shockingly the wife and kid hold frame just fine through this, like passengers on a train trying to ignore a toddler throwing a temper tantrum.

The poor bloke needs to reinvent himself from scratch almost. Instead of uploading videos of him acting like a psycho he could have done a couple sets of squats and deadlifts...

DON'T BE THIS GUY!

Why defaulting to a negative view on women (e.g. "women are harpie bitches") is detrimental to your personal growth

by | April 1, 2016 | Link

From /u/UEMcGill's post -
https://www.reddit.com/r/marriedredpill/comments/4cr8no/the_value_proposition/d1lvl88

/u/spiderman1221 asked a really good question after I took issue to his statement of "I do believe we need to be aware that sometimes women are just harpies regardless of the man" (emphasis mine). He asked,

I guess my question to you is, why do we next a woman if my statement does not contain truth? Or is it that my statement contains truth but I should not view it that way? I do understand the concept of appreciating women for being women but isn't this whole post about realizing that sometimes a woman(or anything really) does not bring value to your life regardless of you?

You're not wrong.

Sometimes women are just harpies. But the point is that that's a terrible starting point.

People see what they want to see - they find confirmation bias real easily. If you start with a negative mindset, you're going to find reasons to amplify it. Start with a positive mindset, e.g. "Women are generally awesome."

The change in mindset shifts any negative interaction from being a woman problem to being a me problem.

See, in general, we have positive self views. We think that we're cool and awesome and deserve better. This is not a bad thing. But, when you have a positive clashing with a negative, it's just too easy to deflect blame onto the negative.

In this case, if a woman reacts poorly to you and your default position is "women can be shitty", the logical conclusion would be "this is another example of women being shitty" because it can't be a me issue because I'm awesome.

If a woman reacts poorly to you and your default position is "women are generally awesome", the conclusion is much harder to reach. It becomes more of an exercise to figure out what the root cause is.

Once you have internalized that most people are decent, then it's much easier to be honest in your assessment of whether people add value or not. When there's conflict, it's a lot harder to default to "well, they're wrong" when you start off with an assumption that the differing opinion is generally right.
Get rid of preconceived biases and assess things as neutrally and honestly as possible. If I start off from the position that a woman should be X, and she's not X, all that does is feed my ego that I'm right and she's wrong. This is 100% ego and 100% bullshit. Kill the ego.

Be grounded in reality instead of your own presumptions, delusions, and arrogances.

Alternatively - if you're going to assume women are generally shitty, be sure to understand that I am generally shitty as well.

tl;dr - nexting a woman because you suck just means you'll repeat the same mistake next time. nexting a woman because they suck means actually increasing the value in your life.

The mindset with which you approach life, challenges, and disagreements is probably the most important thing that you can have as you try to do good in life.
The journey from Blue to Red: BPP's first post in the manosphere

by BluepillProfessor | March 15, 2016 | Link

There was a recent reference to my first post on the manosphere made more than 2 years ago.

https://www.reddit.com/r/RedPillWomen/comments/1vypft/blue_pill_40_something_having_problems_swallowing/

I encourage any new guy having trouble swallowing the pill to read this. When I wrote it I was literally recovering from a multi-day manic bout of insomnia. I had just gone to see a buddy (former employer actually) who was a divorce attorney and had just returned from the bank to separate our finances.

As I describe in my book: Saving a low Sex marriage: A Man's Guide to Dread, Seduction, and the Long Game:

A little more than a year ago measured from the time when I started writing this document, I was on the brink of divorce. I had sex with my wife about twice a month—which I was to learn is what we call a “pity fuck” and an “ovulation fuck” every month and in recollection it was literally like clockwork. How could I have not noticed?

Even worse than the sexual deprivation, and yes sex just twice a month is torture to a healthy male, was knowing that my wife was not attracted to me, although it was much worse than I thought. There was a period spanning several years where when we did have sex. I could tell it was just an act. Recently she admitted to me (now that we have very hot, very eager sex several times a week) that it felt like she was being “raped” every time we were intimate, and it had felt that way for many years. She told me about how she would look at the ceiling and, think about work and how this was just another unpleasant, filthy task to perform. My wife is a lawyer who works in white collar crime, so she knows all about dealing with the filthy tasks and the rotten people that somebody has to fuck around with and keep satisfied.

We spent our 20th Wedding anniversary in a Paris hotel and only had sex once the entire two week time we were on vacation. Our last night was supposed to be a celebration of two decades of love and marital bliss but it didn’t work out that way. After a romantic tour of the city of lights at night we returned to our room only to have my wife inform me she was “tired and not in the mood.” Something inside me snapped at that moment. This was when I completely disconnected from my wife and decided that I was going to have the sex life I deserved with or without her. This fiery, disrespectful little sex denying shrew was not going to prevent that any longer. This was the moment when I made my break and decided that the wife I had, and the life we had built, was just not going to cut it. I was so furious I can barely remember the trip home, but I do recall my wife trying to talk to me during the flight back and me ignoring her completely. I was not rude or disrespectful any longer, and I completely stopped mirroring my wife's behavior. I was done with the relationship and the marriage at that point.

I was not exactly indifferent and would have to say that a better description would be filled with anger, even hatred. We came home, and I was honestly preparing to file for Divorce. I was done. For a short time, I was so depressed I could barely function. Then one night I googled: “Why won't my wife have sex with me?” It did not take long to discover Athol Kay's two books: Married Man's Sex Life Primer, 2011 and The Mindful Attraction Plan, which I blew through along with the all-important No More Mr. Nice Guy by Robert Glover, in a three-day manic binge. When I discovered the manosphere, I was literally so upset I could not sleep for three straight days! I was a wreck for more than a week.

How could I have not seen it? I have a fucking PhD in human behavior and not a single class, not a single professor, not a single book or paper told me any of this. In fact they told me precisely the opposite. In taking the “Red Pill” I had to accept that my hard one PhD, at least insofar as how my discipline dealt with intimate relations, was not worth the parchment paper on which it was printed. They told me men and women were exactly the same except for some “minor plumbing.” They told me that men and women work together and any problems are due to “inequality” and that human nature is totally dependent on the social inputs. They lied. They looked right in my eyes and lied to me for many years.

So here I was, a fucking (Bluepill) PhD in human behavior with more than a decade of experience investigating divorce cases. I had absorbed dozens of books on relationships and sex and marriage. I studied the Bible for clues. I had counseled a dozen couples out of their divorce and back together. I thought I knew everything.

There was just one tiny problem. Despite all my "expertise" I was in a failing marriage. We had sex twice a month and my wife treated me with disrespect and complete contempt. She was unhaaappppy!

When I read MMSL my world exploded. I can still hear the roaring in my ears and my pounding heart when I think about it. All of that education and practice and ALL of it was wrong.

Then it got even worse as I thought back on all my past relationships.

I had some success and a partner count north of 10 in college and always had a girlfriend. Yet each relationship failed. Each girl I seemingly "loved" more than the last and each girl, one by one, either cheated on or dumped me.

What could have been the problem? I was doing what all the books said to do. Listen to her. Take time to help her with her problems. Be kind and gentle. Be sweet to her. Buy her things. Surprise her with dates and trips. Share with her your innermost feelings and dreams.
My mistake was that I listened to the advice of all my female friends, my mother, my sisters, my lovers, my classmates. I had polled all of them(!) trying to find out what I was doing wrong. ALL of the women told me the same thing: I was too loud and mean. I was gruff and volatile. I made crude jokes that "no" woman wants to hear. I NEEDED TO BE A NICE GUY BECAUSE ANY GIRL WOULD WANT TO BE WITH YOU. TREAT HER LIKE A QUEEN AND SHE WILL TREAT YOU LIKE A KING.

It "worked" every time. The loud, obnoxious, gruff, legal investigator softened for each girl and showed her my tender side. Then we had sex to reinforce it. Oh Good! It is working. So I showed her more emotion. I treated her even nicer. I even stopped swearing around them (disrespectful) and took the time to hold her in my arms and listen to her day (sensitive). I lowered my voice and stopped "yelling" (obnoxious) and stopped complaining (critical). Then she became "unhappy" and left me heartbroken each time.

What was my mistake intrepid Red Pill pioneers?

The answer is so obvious now but it was not until I awakened from the Matrix. The problem was that I listened to women. I trusted women. I thought my sisters and my mother and my lovers WANTED me to succeed. I didn't know about Shit Tests and had been educated that men and women are the same.

If you learn anything from Red Pill praexology know this: Men and women are NOT the same. If you take away any lesson from MRP know this: Women do NOT have your best interests in mind when you ask them for help.

Women are Shit Testing machines. There is a reason they like cats when they can't find a man after the wall. They ARE cats. They like nothing better than to toy with and bat around a helpless little animal squirming and squealing in pain. They play the sexual denial game not because they don't want sex, but because it gives them pleasure to torture a man. It gives them power to torment and titillate and deny. They do it very deliberately and in a very calculated way much of the time, and they ENJOY IT.

Don't ever forget that! Your wife gets a THRILL by flaunting her body in front of you and then crossly complaining and denying sex. THIS is why we say Outcome Independence and DNGAF. You MUST take away the pleasure she gets from denying sex if you want to change it. You MUST pretend like it doesn't matter to you because if you show her your pain and frustration it rewards her! Are you getting pissed yet? Good!

There are two main secrets about women: First, they are designed to trick and torment any weak man they encounter and they will do this every opportunity you give them. They will probe, and probe, and probe, and poke and poke and poke. They will attack you when you least expect it. When you need them most they will turn on you. YOU CANNOT RELY ON A WOMAN FOR EMOTIONAL SUPPORT OR VALIDATION. This is the main Red Pill truth.

The second is that they are also designed to submit to a strong man who refuses to listen to them or put up with their theatrics and unpleasantness. In fact, they desperately WANT that, yet at the same time they fight tooth and nail to destroy any man who tries to draw them into his frame.

Gentlemen, it is a long, often painful journey that is only for men willing to accept hard truths. It is a difficult task effectively "falling out of love" and realizing that she is NOT in your corner. At best she is in the crowd yelling for blood- NOT for your victory. She is most excited when a heavy uppercut sprays blood and gore all over the audience. Then, smiling, she wipes her face and tastes the salty blood, which arouses her. It doesn't matter to her whether that is the blood of her lover or the other fighter. What matters is that a man is being HURT, and THAT is exciting to women. The only thing more exciting is when a woman is the CAUSE of that hurt. This gives her power.

Don't forget that brothers. Stay manly and remember. These bitches, even your wife, aint shit and are nuthin but tricks and hoes. Act accordingly. DNGAF, cultivate other options, stop emoting, be stoic and confident- ESPECIALLY when you are not, decrease the time you spend on "quality time" with your wife and get your ass to the gym.
Everything is about sex. Except sex. Sex is about power.

Background

I’m in my second marriage. In the first one I was horridly bluepill, makes me gringe. Posthumously it is not surprising that AWALT happened, luckily before we got kids. But the divorce lead me to the manosphere and I didn’t hesitate to swallow the pill. I entered the second marriage a few years later to start a family, but I decided to do it differently this time. It isn't easy, but after finding MRP, reading the sidebar and a bunch of other books I have the resources. Lifting, reading, leading and owning my shit with varying success.

So, sex is about power.

The title is a quote by Oscar Wilde and it resurfaced after used in the House of Cards. It lead me to rephrase the basics in a way that may complement our understanding.

What turns a woman on? The desire of a powerful man. Why?

In order to turn a woman on by dominating her, she has to first know that you are powerful (have high SMV). Then, feeling how her femininity attracts the full attention of your power is a huge turn-on. This way she can feel her own sexual attractiveness becoming power. You will induce her becoming attracted also to herself. At this point using your strength on her allows her sexuality to take over her completely - her rationality and feelings can be submerged under your power. She is free from these burdens for a moment.

What is this power that becomes sexual energy then? It is everything:

- Physical power
- Powerful position in society and social circles
- Power to attract other women
- Mental power, frame and self-control
- Ability to command people and handle situations
- Skills to channel other people’s thoughts and ideas by speech and arts
- Power to protect
- Financial power
- Power to make people adopt to your mood and to induce emotions around you
- Power to go through and show emotions without shame or getting lost under them
- Power to act and be decisive when nobody in the world can tell you what you should do
- Power to remain detached, aloof, not to worry or stress
- Power to disagree, to say no, to not please, to challenge

(The list is in no way perfect. We can obviously use power = strength = SMV as synonyms in many cases, with some semantic differences in the definitions.)

A feminine woman may have some of these powers in herself, but probably not that many. But if she can attract these powers - you - sexually, she will momentarily channel them, feel them. Her sexual arousal will be multiplied by your power.
In plain language, This is why nice guys need technique to make women cum, whereas powerful men can do whatever they want and she cums. The attention of a weak man is sexually worthless. Of course, a woman can be attracted to a good looking but weak man. In this case the dynamic is likely to be reversed: a powerful woman can command a pretty boy and get sexual pleasure out of her own power.

Masculinity is power, femininity is attracting this power. Men direct power to taste sex. Women direct sexuality to taste power. Therefore, everything is about sex. Except sex. Sex is about power.
60 DoD 2020: Week 3 Hygiene; or why it's about more than washing your ass.

by RStonePT | April 15, 2020 | Link

Introduction

I wasn’t looking forward to writing on hygiene. Luckily for me the Chinese Bat gods saw fit to give me a good pretence to talk hygiene. I’m going to assume everyone has already read the previous articles on hygiene on the sidebar. If not, please do so then come back. The guys did really good work and it’s hard to write something worthwhile when the reader doesn’t know how to wash his ass yet.

Why is hygiene a thing in a space with men and dead and dying relationships?

For starters, a lot of dead bedrooms are the guys own damned fault. If you’re not fuck able, no one will fuck you, regardless on whether you bring home the bacon or put a ring on it. I used to think most people had the basics down, but after a few years reading every sob story, every victim puke, every hat in hand request for guidance pretending to be a field report I realize that yes, we do have to ensure you wash your ass before going further. In addition, hygiene is about giving a fuck. You’d not believe how many guess dress like shit because they want the world to know they don’t worry about style like a fag. Message received asshole. Enjoy your complimentary Porn Hub subscription. Giving a shit about the little things means you give a shit about the big things. It’s counter intuitive until you actually do it, then it’s god damned instinct. Finally, and this is the part that I want the reader to take home from this, hygiene is leadership, for the above reasons and more. If you've not heard, we are in the middle of a definitely not overblown manufactured crisis. Since everyone is so afraid of liability that they will ensure they do every bit of security-theatre possible to show that ‘we are doing everything we can to keep you safe.’

You know who eats messages like that up? Women. Women love that people are ‘just doing something!’ regardless of whether it helps, hurts, or does nothing. Why? Because women process the world through their feelings, and feeling safe equates to being safe.

The Slippery Slope

I’ll bet if you look into all the chores around the house that you’re nagged into doing that a lot of them never made sense to you. A quick wipe with a clean cloth and some soap and water is sufficient, but Karen nags and nags for you to disinfect the counters with bleach, right? Never mind that sandwich you just made tastes like bleach and you’re probably killing everyone in the house, it just feels cleaner. I remember from my old blue pill days, my vegan girlfriend of the time was adamant that meat not share the same fridge space as anything else. That makes sense, except where she demanded that processed meat sit beside raw meat. Thats a cross contamination nightmare.
What does this have to do with hygiene? If you know how to be clean you know how to give a shit about a level of cleanliness you hold for yourself and whomever is in your house. Karen talks feelings and you know better. On my meat example I did the serving it right course, learned how to have proper food hygiene and when I got the demands, I ignored them. I know the place is hygienic, and all the whine mouth words in the world didn't change that. I could safely ignore the nagging and maintain frame. My fridge is clean and I know it’s clean and thats the end of it. If you don’t care and she does, her feelings will eventually trump your knowledge. This is why nagging works, it taps into the ambivalence of men.

My girl fought it, for a while. Most kids do that when their usual tricks don’t work. They amplify them assuming they aren’t trying enough, then eventually give up if you’re consistent.

Hygiene

I’ve learned a lot from my military time. 12 years in the RCN. I’ve scrubbed more toilets than I can count. And we had a few simple rules for keeping a hygienic space. Since the ship was recycled air, everyone got sick if you didn’t, and your chain of command lines up taking turns tearing you a new asshole.

Bathroom

Two buckets, one with clean water and an empty one. One cloth and one brush with a little abrasion to it. A disinfectant (I like pine sol, but you can use bleach if you hate your clothes) some soap and something like VIM. Start at the top of the room and work your way down. Start with the cleanest items and work your way down to the dirtiest, everything gets a once over. Grab water from the clean bucket and wring out the dirty water in the other bucket. For the tub, sink and toilet it’s the same thing. Scrub them with the brush to get anything loose, then use the cloth to clean up the loose residue. Do the toilet last, I shouldn’t have to tell you this, and instead of sticking your hand in there just use a toilet brush. Back of the seat, underneath the seat, under the bowl, and around those stupid bolts that always have loose caps to them. Our Coxn used to walk into our bathroom and take a deep breath to give us the hint. If it doesn’t smell clean it’s not clean. Chemical smell and potpourri is not clean by the way.

Kitchen.

Same principle, start at the top and work your way down. Two buckets. This includes cleaning around the trash can under the sink. Just because you can’t see the top of the fridge doesn’t mean there’s nothing on top of the fridge. When you’re done, take a paper towel with a dab of mineral oil and wipe your stainless steel sink and faucet. If you have an induction stove soap and water and a cloth are good enough, wipe it down well and the fucker will shine like a mirror.

Laundry

If you’re with a girl, you’ve seen the standard scenario. A giant mountain of clean laundry while she roots through it every morning for something to wear. Eventually the pile mixes with the dirty stuff and it all gets washed again. Theres tons of good videos on proper folding of towels and sheets and hanging clothes in the closet so I won’t waste your time here. The point is it’s your house and you give a shit, even if she doesn’t. I wouldn’t bother folding her clothes if she can’t be bothered. Put em in a trash bag or a laundry hamper and throw them in her closet to deal with later. You will get grief on this but fuck it, if she folded her bras it wouldn’t be there. You’re not joking because you have a house you can be proud of and you take care of the shit.

Living room

Same as everything else, start at the top and work your way down. Less water is better because you want to pick up the dust, not turn it into a paste stuck to the wall. I love a damp dry mopping of the floors but I have wood floors, carpet people are on their own.

Finally, what’s the point of all this and why do I care about Landry when my wife is a bitch and won’t fuck me?

Notice how almost nothing in this so far is about your frigid wife, other than to get her lazy laundry out of your way? It’s like a metaphor or something. Ideally if you’re with a harpy who doesn’t provide any value to you, with the exception of a 9 month uterus rental why in the hell are you putting your happiness on her, waiting to do something for you? She’ll let you down, and on purpose. She doesn’t care. Perhaps you should care, hence why you have a spotless house, folded towels and a clean living room. You’ve spent god knows how long on being resentful of her being so disengaged that you’ve allowed yourself to wallow in your own misery and filth.

So you’re running Dread, you’re washing your ass, dressing better, working out etc. So many guys still have their head up their wives ass in some stupid covert contract where they put themselves in the position for her to judge his self improvement and whether it’s worth a little duty sex that month. Fuck that. Your keeping your house and hygiene up to standard because you’re living like she died last year and this is how you live if she wasn’t there.

If you’re doing this right, she may not be.

Ideally, after a year of looking hot and handling all your shit you’ll look over at frumpalumpamus and think: ‘Why the fuck is she even here?’ and you’ll finally start to realize you’re the fucking prize. A fully self actualized man who has his shit together and plenty of women would like to get to know better, and you’re wasting your time watching someone take it for granted. It makes you mad and you do something about it.

And if you’re one of the ones whose wife or girlfriend realizes that she will either step up or be pushed aside? Well the next time she mandates some stupid ritualistic cleaning hoops for you to jump through you won’t be bleaching or cross contaminating your sandwiches with raw chicken anymore. I guarantee there are guys outside, right now who are looking absolutely ridiculous with ineffective quarantine-ready feel good measures filling their houses with panic.
Guess whose broke right now for spending 80 dollars on toilet paper? Guess who is so timid that their wives dried up like the Sahara? Guess who isn’t the oak in their home and keeping their families actually safe instead of ‘feeling’ safe?

Be that guy if you want, but from what I see, guys who have their hygiene squared away and their heads on straight tend to have wives and girlfriends who are calming down their co workers who are filled with all kinds of panic. It turns out that by being the hygiene alpha male that the shit ripples to the social circles around you. I know my woman stopped watching the news, calmed down plenty of married beta-male co workers and no longer tries to bleach my food.

It’s not about being clean, it’s about belling deliberate and knowing your standards.
38m, 38f. Married 4 years. 2 little kids. I was always alpha when single and beta in relationships. Drink captain

5'9", 175 Bench 235 Press 185 Squat 315

Diet good, grooming good, clothes good. Work out 4/5 days a week and Jiu Jitsu 2 days.

Been leading 1-2 times per week (outings and such). Always leading in the house.

Went out of state for work for 3 weeks. FaceTime with the wife and kids every night. Wife starts acting weird on day 2 and doesn't really partake in the FaceTime. Oh well. She starts asking pointed questions like what am I doing at night, and with whom. I welcome the dread and answer but don't go into detail.

Come home. Spend all day with the kids. I’m in the basement after the kids go to bed and the wife passes by the stairway on her way up to bed and says she thinks her “infection” is back. She had a vaginal infection that she took meds for and got rid of about a month before my trip. Ok, no sex tonight.

Go upstairs and she’s naked in bed and says “are we going to do this?” Ok sex. We start and she immediately begins to move differently (more vigor) then she stops and goes to her go-to dead fish. She’s loose too. After I I’m done she apologizes for not cuming and says she has a lot on her mind. I notice that her pussy smells fishy, and different than the last infection. STFU

Next day is Saturday and I have a fun event planned for the family to go to a farm to pick pumpkins, hayrides, Halloween stuff. She’s been wanting to do something like this for months. I get the kids up and fed in the morning. The house is a wreck so I clean and vacuum. I have one of the kids bring her coffee. She gets up and is upset that I’m cleaning because she thinks that I’m going to call her out on the house being messy. I blow it off and continue to clean the dirt from the flower pot that tipped over.

Tell her I’m headed to the gym and will be back in an hour. On my way out of the gym I text to have the kids ready and we’ll leave by 11am for the farm. She says “I don’t want to go. Just take the kids”. I tell her I want us to go as a family. She says no, just take the kids without her. This is odd because she lives for this stuff.

Get home and she’s almost got the kids ready. As soon as the kids and I are downstairs she hops in the shower. Kids and I are about to leave and she comes down wearing yoga pants and a sexy shirt. She looks way too good to be depressed and cleaning the house. Red flags are popping up all over the place. I grab an old dictation recorder I had and stuck it in a vase by the back door where the living room is.
Come home 2.5 hours later and she’s still working on cleaning the first room (small bedroom). I grab the recorder and head out to Home Depot for painting supplies. I listen to the recorder and it’s a half hour of microwaving and watching tv. Then I hear my dogs start to go crazy at the sliding door in the backyard. Wife says “look guys, someone’s here”. She then goes outside in the backyard for 15 minutes and does god knows what.

Later that night she is supposedly at church but is gone for double the amount of time it would normally take to do that. We go to bed and I initiate. She doesn’t want to and says that she doesn’t like having sex with me anymore. She baits me into a conversation about her feelings and why she’s not attracted to me anymore. I listen and do some comforting but halfway through what I’m saying I realize that this will never end, and it’s only getting worse. I ask her why she didn’t want to come with us to the farm. She says feelings and reasons. I say who came over while we were gone? She says nobody. I say “you didn’t talk to anyone in the backyard while i was out with the kids?” She says no. I have no actual proof of Chad but I caught her in a lie and there’s only one reason to lie in this situation. I didn’t tell her about the recorder but I did give up on the marriage in that very instant. Told her I’m going to see a lawyer Monday. Later that night she comes downstairs while I’m watching football and starts to talk about things. With zero emotions she starts to tell me what a shame it is that I’m going to throw away our marriage (she thinks it’s because she doesn’t cook, clean, or fuck much). She makes no mention of the outside incident the day before that I alluded to. I’m done with this woman but I’m sad for my kids. Really sad for my kids.

Apt with the lawyer this afternoon

MMSL, NMMNG, WISNIFG, way of men, book of pook, professors book, rational male
I want to show some gratitude.

I heard about TRP then followed MRP. I didn't take it seriously. The past 2-3 years my marriage/sex life sucked.

My back round I was a US marine solid frame cut with 6 pack. After marines played semi pro soccer and became a bartender to supplement the income in a sport few people in the US give a shit about.

I had a nice body and had more game than milton Bradley. Then I met my wife. I became soft and now struggle to talk to women. It's been 10 yrs with my wife. My wife runs works out at least 3 days a week. I have become beta AF. She has became "man" of the house.

4 weeks ago I decided to take my life back. I have not taken the red pill I have only reached for it.

So far I have been reading. I have been learning. I started lifting again. More importantly I have been STFU. I hold frame. Shit that has been bothering me around the house I have been taking care of. Not for validation because half the shit she doesn't notice. I feel accomplished I feel prideful my confidence shows Already sex has increased her slutty side has come back out.

This is just the beginning I have a shit ton to learn, I have much more to gain. My road looks promising a as long as I stay on path. I havent even swallowed the red pill I'm still understanding it, and all ready benefits have shown.
When I get to the bottom...
by johneyapocalypse | December 12, 2018 | Link

When I get to the bottom I go back to the top of the slide...

Where I stop and I turn and I go for a ride...

Till I get to the bottom and I see you again...

...

Tell me, tell me, tell me, come on, tell me the answer...

...

What is the answer?

Is she the answer?

Is her love the answer?

Is your special connection the answer?

Is your made-in-heaven, gods-from-above, shining-down-upon-you marriage the answer?

Is she going to be there for all time for you, her special knight-in-shining-armor, the answer?

Is the child you share together the answer?

Is your house, and your home, and the way you make the bed the answer?

Is your vow of holy, sacred, amazing matrimony the answer?

Fuck no.

Just a reminder:

No one cares.
Your boss doesn't care.
Your family doesn't care.
Not one fucking person other than you cares.
Least of all her.
It's all about you. Remember that. It's all about you.

You are the answer. You and only you.

You care, so you better make it your goddamn job to care.
Don't fucking forget it.
Don't let the siren song of her feminine attachment let you forget it.
Don't let anything, anything at all, cause you to forget it.
You, mother-fucker, you are the answer.
In that solitary knowledge there is strength.
In that stoic understanding there is power.
In that once unfathomable comprehension there is the capability to burst through to a new you, a new tomorrow, and a new paradigm.
Use that to fuel your next step.
Use that to empower your next lift.
Use that to make tomorrow better than today.
Use that to fucking force your future reality - the one you unflinchingly deserve - the one you unrepentantly demand - the one you undeniably will manifest - use it for you, bro, use it for you.
It is that reality which you, and only you, deserve.
You, mother-fucker, you.
It's all about you.
Don't let another goddamn day go by and forget it.
It's not about your boss. It's not about your kids it's. It's not about your wife. It's not about another goddamn soul on God's goddamn green earth.

It's fucking all about you, mother-fucker. All about you.

So make it count.
Owning your shit at home covers many things and one of the most important areas for long term success are finances. Having a financial vision, understanding the trade-offs, having the frame to bring it to existence, and becoming successful has many benefits to anyone, married or not. To a degree, it is simply Adulting 101 but I see many posts all the time that betray a complete lack of understanding of how to run household finances. What follows is a summary of the path I took over the last 2 years, generalized so it is applicable to anyone.

Many concepts borrow heavily from /r/personalfinance/ (PF). In fact, it is crucial that you become familiar with the concepts that are explained on this subreddit and in their wiki. I try not to duplicate content but some concepts here will have a specifically MRP-oriented slant. MRP brings a unique set of options and skills to the table that can make you much more effective than the general population.

What is Financial Freedom and why should you care? To me it is the freedom to quit my current or future job if I choose to, and to walk away from it all if that's what my path leads to. That freedom will happen when my investment income surpasses either my expenses or my current job income - depending on what metric I want to use at that time. My plan is to reach this goal in 9 to 11 years.

The key to this plan is the magic combination of saving, investing, and compound interest. I will not explain how this works here - there are many resources available for these concepts. Most people understand this as a really long term avenue to riches but it is actually much faster in its effects than one might expect. If we use the very attainable numbers of saving 30% of your income and getting a 10% return/interest, you can accomplish the following:

- In 3 years you will have saved up one annual salary and it will generate an extra 10% income.
- In 5 years you will have saved up almost 2 annual salaries for extra 19% income.
- In 10 years you will have saved up 5 annual salaries for extra 50% income.

If you can improve your rate of return to 15% (not easy):

- In 10 years you will have extra 100% income.

Are these numbers attainable and is this something you want? Only you can decide. It is, however, important to understand that this possibility exists and if you decide you don't want to take these steps, it should be a conscious decision. Assuming your regular income improves, and/or you can get your wife to work more, you can reach these goals even faster.
The Steps

The steps are very simple in principle.

1. Study /r/personalfinance/. Learn from other people's mistakes and get to the point where you can predict the answers to most posters' questions.
2. Increase your saving rate to 30% by cutting down expenses. This is the bulk of this post and how I did it with an MRP lense. It is, however, not enough to just save. You must also invest but you have a year of work before this becomes critical.
3. Study investing and how you can generate 10% or higher returns. Not covered here except with a side note - many options exist that are not obvious but count: eliminating high interest rate debt, using employer or government subsidized savings plans, reducing your tax burden by using tax advantaged plans.

The Vision

The rest of the write-up is how you create a financial system for your household. You will be in complete control. You are the one who is ultimately responsible for it succeeding or failing without blaming anyone. With that in mind, you design it in such a way that you could do it all yourself if your spouse will not/cannot contribute but you make individual portions of it possible to delegate. The more responsible your spouse is the better and you can reward her contributions by giving her more control over individual items. It is, however, always your responsibility to track and enforce that the system is followed.

As a general rule, you will be moving to a save first, then spend model. In each budget category (see below) you will not spend more than allocated for each month until you saved up some money to buy it - by under spending in that category in the previous months. The only exception is existing loans and obligations until you find a way to eliminate them. This also creates a very simple method to determine when you should be spending on items like new cars, house upgrades etc. You create a category with a budget, and when you save enough - you can use it. In some cases this will guide you to do more if needed: E.g. if you are accumulating a lot of saved up money in the household repair/update category, you need to fix more stuff around the house.

How quickly you implement and enforce these changes is related to the strength of your frame and your ability to run this system. Do not go Rambo if you suck at this but do implement quickly if you are capable. There are a ton of areas to gradually improve so it will take time to do all of it - no need to stress everyone out with a complete overhaul instantly.

This system has had a huge positive financial impact with minimum or no negative impact on what we consume or spend on. It has had some unexpected benefits to our quality of life outside of the financials.

The Details

This is the order that I used. As you progress through the steps, the order becomes less important. The individual items are a list of options available.
Track your spending

Devise a system to track all of your spending and start tracking it for a month. A month is good enough to get a good idea of where your money goes and how to set up your budget categories. Estimate the rest. No need to tell your wife that you're doing this as this is just for your information. I use Excel because I like to make my own spreadsheets but there are many better options available.

You will likely find that your wife spends way more than you do and you will be spending a lot of energy in curbing that spending initially. How you do the next step takes that into account.

Make an initial budget

Follow the PF guidelines but I suggest adding the following features that I found incredibly useful for MRP purposes. This assumes you are the more responsible spender and you also make more money than your spouse. The guiding principle is not fairness but accountability. If in doubt, make it harder on your spouse than needed and later you can be more benevolent. You want to track accurately who actually spends what without making any judgments about it.

- Budget for saving early - more than you save now. Force the spending cuts immediately. Start with 5% more than you save now.
- Make common categories for joint spending like mortgage/rent, utilities, groceries, household repairs etc. You will control all joint spending going forward but no need to force that issue yet. (PF) has good suggestions for categories.
- Make a discretionary spending category for yourself and a separate one for your spouse. I suggest to make them equal and way less than the sum of your current discretionary spending now. That most likely will mean that your wife will have less to spend unless you are the big spender right now. The goal is to have each adult spend this money how they wish. No need to enforce this yet.
- Make a spending category for each kid you have. This is mostly for your info. You don't let the kids control this money unlike the adults' discretionary spending.
- Put everything attributable to individuals in their categories, including the kids. You might find that you spend way more on one kid than the other. I did, unsurprisingly, on my daughter.
- Put joint loans as a separate spending category where it belongs. E.g. mortgage under house. I suggest using as few loans as possible joint, in fact, I only have mortgage under joint. Rest is individual loans.
- Put individual loans in your or her category as you see appropriate and subtract the monthly payments immediately from the discretionary budget of that person at the beginning of each month. The point is to make current loan payments a direct hit to each person's discretionary budget. It also means that if one person pays off their loans faster, they will have more money to spend without gifting that money to the other person. Do not play nice here and take over her student, car, or other loans as joint spending. Think carefully who should own each loan.
- Big expenses paid with a smaller frequency, such as car insurance should be subtracted at the beginning of each month. E.g. if you pay your car insurance once every 6 months: Figure out the proportion - if your car is the cheaper one, and your insurance is lower, go through the policy and calculate how much your car costs and how much hers costs. Then divide each individual amount by 6 and subtract that from each person's discretionary spending monthly.

Inform your wife that you made the budget to align with your saving goals. Tell her how much she has in her discretionary category. She might not care in which case you leave it at that. If she doesn't care, it probably means she does not intend to follow it which is fine for now. If she does care and asks about more details, show her the budget. If she disputes that something is in her category that she doesn't agree with, just broken record that this is how you intend to track the spending.

Grocery Store

Figure out the cheapest grocery store option available that is acceptable in quality. If Aldi/Lidl are available in your area, those are amazing for quality and price. Do this immediately, while you're still doing your initial tracking period. If you have no idea what you should be shopping for, you will be educating yourself on this over the next few weeks. Make an initial shopping trip by yourself and buy one week's worth of supplies. Focus on items that you will eat/prepare yourself, relatively cheap and aligned with your diet or the diet your feel your family should follow. Don't bother buying stuff that are solely for your wife/kids, expensive, or unhealthy. If you get asked why, just say you're exploring cheaper food options and broken record/STFU the rest. Over the next few weeks make your goal is to figure out how to buy 90% of the groceries needed by your whole family in one week increments.

Grocery System

You are eventually moving towards a system with the following features:

- You buy groceries once a week only on a specific day.
- You buy the bulk of your groceries at the cheapest store only.
- There is always enough to eat without wasting. See more on wasting below.
- Everybody needs to get their items on the shopping list before the shopping day or it doesn't get bought until next week.
- The items you buy are skewed towards cost effective items and aligned with your diet.
- Items bought at more expensive stores are only bought because they are not available at the cheap option. No last minute emergency shopping trips for expensive items.
- When stuff is on sale, stock up. But only stock up on stuff you actually use, no impulse buying.

It should only take you a few weeks to transition to this as you get more comfortable what should or should not be bought. The benefit to everyone is that it's simple and works like magic. You will initially spend some energy implementing this but eventually it becomes second nature to you and your spouse and you can stop grocery shopping if she can handle it. Should you encounter challenges to this, this is when you start using your frame to communicate your vision of saving and investing for the future. The smoother the transition, the less challenges you get and the more obvious it is that you are leading the way in something good.
Household items

Some household items like detergent, soap, shampoo, toothpaste etc. very vastly in quality and price. Spend some time figuring out the most cost effective item of sufficient quality and figure out where you buy them. It might be at the cheap grocery store but it might be online. Only buy those items at those locations so make sure you have enough on hand so you avoid emergency (expensive) trips. E.g. make sure you always have at least one more extra detergent bottle in store. Once you figure that out, the time and energy spent on it is zero as you always buy from the same place.

Grocery deliveries

If you have grocery deliveries from the cheap grocery store available, use it. It cuts down on impulse buying, saves time and gas, and makes it trivial to maintain your grocery list throughout the week. Any time you remember you need something, add it to the online list, then order everything once a week and have it delivered.

Food Prep

Figure out how to prepare food in bulk in minimum time. Bake a bunch of chicken while you are frying up some other protein option. Prepare several simple protein options on the weekend and make sure they get eaten during the week. You or your wife can spend a small amount of time during the week to make a side item to go along with the protein. You will lead the way here but your wife can take over in a few weeks if she's willing/capable. Avoid lengthy daily cooking rituals that cause frustration and waste time. Figure out what you eat (all of it - breakfast, lunch, dinner) and make that yourself if needed, or delegate to your wife if possible.

This is another area where you are likely to encounter challenges. Communicate that you want to save time and money on food prep and that you like having food available at all times during the week without having to think about it. Ask her to help you with the food prep and/or with the side dish preparation during the week.

Waste

You can waste a ton of food if you just buy it but don't track that it is consumed. Use the following system to avoid waste:

- When new groceries arrive, move the old unused groceries to the front of the fridge, put the new groceries in the back.
- Check the fridge regularly and move stuff out of the back to the front that needs to be eaten. Stop buying it if it consistently does not get eaten.
- Limit the amount of fresh vegetables/fruit to what you will eat. The rest will be frozen (and cheaper). Do keep a decent amount of frozen vegetables on hand. Monitor fresh vegetables/fruit and make sure you consume them quickly or reduce how much you buy.
- If your kids/spouse put something on the list that you won't eat personally and you think it might get wasted, buy it once and monitor. Remind them to eat it. If they don't actually eat it, stop buying it.

- Clean out the pantry regularly. Stuff that has been sitting there for months is thrown away and put on the Don't Buy list.
- Do buy more canned foods such as beans, vegetables, fish etc. as they are cost effective and don't waste as readily. Follow up and consume them without piling up.
- Dig through the bottom of the freezer occasionally and consume the stuff that dropped to the bottom. Make a mental note of what does not get eaten and consider moving to the Don't Buy list.

Diet

Figure out a good healthy diet that is not expensive, e.g. Paleo or Keto. It should result in you and your family eating less and more healthy. If your diet is expensive, it might be crap.

Cars

You are likely spending more than you can afford on your cars. How do you know you are spending more than you can afford? You are not saving and investing 30% of your income. Cars are a huge money pit. You can get a 2 year old used car that will be just fine for 7-10k. If you already have something more expensive, consider selling it and getting something cheaper. Either way, subtract the car payment from each person's individual discretionary budget to force the decision. If you simply ask your spouse to downgrade her fancy car, she will fight you tooth and nail. If you make her choose between an expensive car and hair cuts, she will be more likely to downgrade. Same goes for you. Take some time to consider this - it is easy to lose even more money by constantly changing cars. Car loans can carry a low interest rate so once you get to the point where you are investing with a 10% return, it's not necessarily bad to carry a car loan. However, if you are a compulsive spender, you should avoid car loans and save up first. PF has good guidance here.

Carefully consider what you want to do here so start thinking about it early but make sure whatever decision you make is something you will enforce. If you're not sure yet, wait a bit more. But if you're bleeding money over a luxury car that you don't want, start making plans to fix this soon.

Trinkets

As a budget category - decorations, throw pillows, rugs, scented candles and other such nonsense goes to zero. Anything in this category goes against your wife's discretionary budget. Go for the minimalist look, and do in fact clean out the clutter. Sell your old trinkets at garage sales and stop buying them.

Appliances/devices

This mostly goes against the household repair budget and for the most part - stop buying devices. You don't need a new TV every 2 years, nor do you need juicers, exercise machines, stereos, espresso machines etc. This should approach zero. When you save up in the household budget, you can buy something new but preferably you just repair what's needed. Individual devices, such as smart phones, go against individual discretionary budgets. Again, save up first, then buy. Switch to older models for savings.

Clothing/beauty

This goes against individual discretionary budgets. Track this carefully. Do put make up and other beauty products in your wife's discretionary budget. Let your wife make the decisions about how she uses her budget and she will make the appropriate adjustments once you start enforcing her monthly spending budget. Likely she will reduce the frequency of her hair, nail, pedicure appointments to what she actually needs whereas before it looked like impossible to eliminate. If you shop together for clothes (don't), do separate the spending to your and her budget. For kids, if they are older, and they want to decide what they buy, give them a monthly allowance to spend how they choose to start teaching them about budgeting.

If you buy these items at a store where you already buy household items, request receipts from your wife on every purchase there and separate it into her discretionary budget or household. If she does not provide a receipt, put the whole purchase into her budget. Make it her responsibility and less work for you.

TV/Cable

This can likely be eliminated altogether. Watching TV is useless and there is a ton of content on streaming services for much less anyway. If you have Amazon Prime for deliveries, there is a ton of content available with that service. If you need additional streaming services, rotate them to only keep one active at a time. Watch the shows you want, then switch to something else. Use over the air HDTV for local channels. You can occasionally get premium streaming channels like HBO for $5 a month for a limited time - sign up, watch what you want, then cancel.

Utilities

Not much you can do there. Close off unused rooms and close the HVAC vents in those rooms. Adjust temperature to save on HVAC. Get LED bulbs. If you are spending a ton on irrigation, start replacing your lawn with trees/bushes/mulch - they are much more water efficient, less work, and more environmentally friendly.

Entertainment

As a joint category this goes to zero. Mentally replace entertainment with hobbies. All stuff like movies that you do jointly, split into individual items that go against discretionary budgets of you, your wife, your kids as appropriate. Communicate this to your wife - she needs to start being aware that spending on these types of outings cost her discretionary budget money.

Eating out

Same as entertainment - track individually. But plan to cut this out altogether and only do it for special occasions. Lead in this area - do not eat out if you don't have money in the budget to do it.

Enforcement light

After a month of making your initial budget (two months from start) review the budget by yourself. You are likely over in many categories - this is normal. But possibly you were successful in reducing a lot with the suggestions above - in which great, you are starting to make a difference.

The biggest category over budget will likely be your wife's discretionary spending. Assess how well you are doing with making progress and leading, relative to her failure. Do inform her that she is over budget and that she needs to start prioritizing to get the spending under control. If she's making efforts, do help her with suggestions - e.g. spreading out her beauty appointments over more time, buying cheaper stuff. If she refuses to follow you have to decide if you have the tools available to enforce it. If you don't - read some past posts about taking over the treasury. You will need to get these ready before you fight over it. Do not fight if you don't have the enforcement tools ready. If you decide to postpone the fight, continue tracking the same way but stop talking about it and don't make any threats.

House

So many people live in a much bigger house than they need. Most families don't need more than a 3 bedroom house. Anything above that is a luxury. Seriously consider downsizing until you can afford it. If renting, this is not that hard but selling your current house is not trivial. There are some creative options you can utilize if you have a bigger house than you need and there are serious obstacles to downsizing:

- Convert some space as a separate living unit and rent it out. Get started with real estate!
- Convert some space to use as a side business - save on external lease, potentially save on taxes.
- Rent out your whole house and move to a smaller house to test it out or temporarily until you get a handle on your finances and you can afford it. I'm a fan of real estate so this could be your first step.

The effects of downsizing are huge. Not only does your rent/mortgage go down, but your utilities also decrease. This is definitely not a Rambo area - be aware of the situation and make a good long term plan.

Mobile plan and Internet

Find out what your cheapest option is for both. There are plans out there that work well together - for example, you don't need unlimited bandwidth on both mobile and home internet. If you get a cheaper plan for data, use home wifi to avoid cell data. Alternatively, if you have unlimited cell data, get a cheaper home internet plan and use the cell data. Get the minimum you actually need for both and shop around. These plans are easy to switch so don't be lazy.
Gas

Not much you can do here except: Don't drive that much. This saves time more than the gas money so I call it out anyway because time is important. See Grocery System. Do carpool your kids activities with other parents. Do not drive your kids to school, put them on the bus. Plan your trips efficiently. Drive jointly if possible instead of taking two cars to the same location just because of some side trip someone has to make. Find out where the cheapest gas station is that is close to something you attend regularly and make a point to fill up there if you happen to be there. Don't waste time making special trips to that gas station unless it's really close.

Household help

If you are using various services to help around the house, make the determination whether this is something you want to keep doing. If your wife is a SAHM, do not spend on cleaning service. If she insists, put it in her discretionary budget and tell her. Enlist your kids in household chores - teenage kids can handle most of it. Pay them for it and let them take over individual jobs. My son does 100% of the dishes now. I pay him which goes against his budget (he doesn't need to know) and it's money I would have likely spent on him anyway.

Alarm monitoring, pest control

I cancelled all of these. YMMV. Maybe get a gun and some insect spray.

Kids items

Stop buying your kids a bunch of stuff they don't need. Encourage them to work around the house and if they are old enough, get a job outside the house. If they are old enough for a phone, get a cheaper option - older models have significant discounts. They can earn their own money if they want something better.

Kids clothes

For smaller kids, find parents with older kids and see if you can score some hand me downs. For older kids, reduce the spend and if they are old enough, give them a budget to decide what they buy.

Kids jobs

If they are old enough, make them get a job outside the house - babysitting, pet sitting, mowing, yard work, regular jobs. This takes some time so help them. Teach them some marketable skills and help them with advertising it. Encourage them to walk around the neighborhood (if safe) to offer their services because it is much more likely they will actually get a job. Go with them if needed but let them walk up to the door by themselves to make their pitch.
Gifts

We stopped buying numerous gifts because everybody is now on board with the long term plan. Gifts for kids go against their budget. Gifts for your wife go against yours, your wife buying you gifts goes against hers. Since the budget is tight, this will force some decisions. Each gift now matters. Flex that Benevolent Beta Bux (BBB) and if she's cooperating, and you are doing better than her, occasionally buy her stuff she sacrificed. This shows that you appreciate her contributions and that you know what she likes.

Enforcement

After a few months, hopefully you've become a better leader overall, and you have demonstrated value by saving money, and leading your family towards a more prosperous future. This is the time to seriously enforce the budget so you can make additional cuts towards saving.

If your wife is trying and cooperating, you just need to be more attentive to her spending and vocal when she's approaching her limit. Do enforce it verbally and be calm about it. Offer suggestions and reward her with more responsibility if warranted. Start sharing your vision with her more so that she sees the benefits.

If she is not cooperating, you will need to take drastic steps. Consider taking one more benevolent appeal if you have been improving in other areas so that she's starting to follow your leadership in other areas. But it's possible you will have to force the issue - see MRP posts about taking over the treasury. Time this right and have all your tools ready before you do this because you don't need to argue if you can't enforce.
So you're new to MRP. You're lifting, reading, and you think you're STFU - kind of, sometimes. Maybe?

The concept of STFU isn't that hard to understand, but some (most) beginners have difficulty with the execution of STFU because their mind is racing as whatever is happening causes them to panic, and they quickly crack open their pie-holes to start DEERing away. I'd like to suggest an activity for you to be doing as you STFU, to help keep you calm and focused, and as a bonus it should also help you ID some internal shit you can work on after your panic moment is over. It's especially effective for those who have a weak frame or no frame. However for more advanced MRPers this may be a good way to more deeply reflect and self-diagnose during introspective periods, or after a slip in frame.

Take it if it works for you, leave it if it doesn't. It's just another tool in your toolbox.

"Anyone can get angry—that is easy—but to get angry with the right person, to the right extent, at the right time, for the right reason, and in the right way is no longer something easy that anyone can do."

—Aristotle

The ATC Model

Gentlemen, introducing ATC - a key foundational module of the Army's "Mastering Resiliency" Training Program, adapted for MRP by yours truly, a Master Instructor for the MRT Program.

Ex: [Activating event] You try to initiate sex, and wife says "I don't want to, you're a loser." [Thoughts] You have Heat-of-the-Moment Thoughts like "I'm NOT a loser, she's just a mouthy bitch!" and/or "I deserve sex! I (insert shit you do here) don't I?" (keep in mind you are STFU - so this is a Heat-of-the-Moment THOUGHT, not something you say out loud like you used to faggot, the point of STFU is to stop DEERing) Then after these instant initial thoughts, [Consequence] you feel an Emotion and/or have a physical Reaction such as you feel anger and an adrenaline rush gives you a rapid pulse for fight or flight, maybe you even get sweaty. Or maybe your Emotion is shame and your Reaction might be that you leave the room and start drinking. Probably both of those at once.

Ex: [Activating event] Your son scores the match-winning goal at the homecoming game. [Thoughts] You have Heat-of-the-Moment Thoughts like "All that practice we did sure paid off!" and "I'm so proud!" Then after these instant initial thoughts, [Consequence] you feel an Emotion and/or have a physical Reaction such as you feel happiness and you stand up and start yelling and cheering, and telling anyone who will listen, "that's MY SON!"
So as you can see this framework is usable in both positive and negative situations. It can be used to help you find validation seeking behavior as well as your faulty mental models.

Why ATC?

ATC helps to build Self-Awareness.

The point is to identify your Heat-of-the-Moment Thoughts about an Activating Event and the Consequences of those Thoughts so you can have greater control over your Emotions and Reactions. Don't just think and feel them, be aware of them. Step One in regulating your Emotions and Reactions is to be aware of what causes them as they are happening because knowing is half the battle.

Once you get good at doing this, at accurately being aware of what is happening in your head, THEN you can start working on modifying your Thoughts, and then on modifying your Behaviors. Too many guys get frustrated because they are putting the cart before the horse - they are trying to modify behaviors without understanding why they were doing them in the first place. That's the definition of a Dancing Monkey, and its a recipe for failure or at the least for eventual recidivism back into old behaviors.

So build your Self-Awareness first. Practice ATC.

Methodology

We all have situations in our lives that we handle effectively and other situations that we don’t handle as effectively as we need to.

Emotions are feelings and are usually accompanied by behaviors and physiological changes in the body. (Reactions)

Examples include anger, happiness, fear, loneliness, sadness, love, pride, etc.

It is important to have a variety of words for different emotions. Anger - “irritated” vs “enraged” Happiness - “pleased” vs “ecstatic” This helps us more accurately pinpoint the severity of our emotions.

Thought Themes

Some people find that there is a pattern in most of their Thoughts - that they relate to a certain theme. The most common Thought Themes are: Loss, Danger (something bad might happen), Negative Comparison (to others or to standards), Positive Contribution (you made), Inflicted Harm (you to others), Trespass (others against you), Gratitude, Hope For Future Noticing patterns in your Thoughts can help you understand why you react in the same way across a range of events. It can help you see cycles you may be going through.

So what is the goal of ATC?

To separate the Activating Event, our Thoughts about it, and the Consequences

Breaking things up like this allows us better understanding and more control.

This in turn allows us to identify patterns in our thinking that make us weaker or decrease performance.

After ATC Mastery - modify the patterns in our thinking that make us weaker or decrease performance.

In Practice

So let's separate ATC: Separate the A from the T from the C.

[A]: Just the OBJECTIVE facts—who, what, when, where

[T]: Your interpretation, what you say to yourself in the heat of the moment

[C]: Your Consequences (Emotions you felt/how did you React)

Then, Detect Patterns: Identify any patterns in your [T]'s that undercut your performance and mental toughness.

The goal is to be doing this in real time as you STFU. But I suggest you start doing it first as a stand alone introspective exercise by yourself to get used to using the technique. Think of previous [A]'s, ID your [T]'s, and separate your [C]'s

So do an exercise:

Identify your effectiveness in a variety of situations by generating recent, meaningful, and specific examples of situations you did not handle as effectively as you needed to. Could be family, social, professional. Also generate other situations that you already handled well.

In which of the above situations do you need the most work? <- ATC can have the highest impact here, especially if this is a pattern of behavior. But it can also help strengthen situations you already handle well by bringing into clear focus what you are thinking, feeling, doing, and WHY you are thinking, feeling, doing.

When you work the ATC model for each of these situations you generated, what did you find? What did you learn about yourself? What patterns, if any, did you notice in your Thoughts and/or Consequences across multiple examples? In what ways are your Emotions and Reactions helping or harming you?
