> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

Simply put, taking jobs outside of the home like the ancient and modern workplaces will place women in the role of “independent worker with certain responsibilities” within a company. Women generally don’t like making important decisions with responsibility and hence it becomes a source of fear and anxiety in regard to failure.

I don’t doubt that secretaries under their boss don’t really have the same issue as say a doctor, physical therapist, OT, SLP, dentist, pharmacist, those in business, those in trades, or those in STEM careers or other professionals may have. There is more autonomy and responsibility with certain career paths than with others that can lead to fear and anxiety in women.

6 options for godly single women wanting to marry

September 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This previously was a Mark Driscoll article prior to his fall from grace. I remember it making rounds in many of the Christian circles I knew, and it also spawned various articles about how to love single women.

I want to analyze it because it had solid topics… until it goes horribly wrong with the analysis of the actual problems.

> There are some single women who remain single for no good reason. I know plenty of them. Some have never married. Some married only to have their husband die. Others have been divorced by a guy who did not appreciate what he had and did not want to invest the energy it takes to make a great marriage. These are women who are friends of Grace and I, people we know well, women who are very godly, actively serving others, and well known in their church community. Of course, the world is also filled with singles who are not mature, godly, or stable, but I'm not talking about them.
> As for the godly single women wanting to marry, however, I'm meeting more and more women like this recently. They often ask me for advice on what they should do. Those who are over thirty are sometimes beginning to wonder if their hopes to marry and become a mother will be fulfilled. For some, this leads to near panic. For others, a constant despair with seasons of dark depression lingers like a chronic ache.
> Admittedly, I am not the best person to give advice to a single woman about specific ways to navigate the path of holding out hope while being realistic regarding planning for one's future. But, I am a pastor and a dad. I do love the women in our church, and I love them like a spiritual father. Also, I am the father of two girls whom I absolutely enjoy and adore, the oldest of which is sixteen. So I think about this a lot.

As I have already covered there are some big elephants in the room of Christian dating and marriage. This is not really a new issue. The Church has, for the past few decades, tilted toward 45-55 and 40-60 ratios of men to women in the church. That's obviously due to a multitude of factors, but it does leave a decently large chunk of single women unmarried.

Obviously, the issue is always reframed that there's not enough Christian men for Christian women to marry. This reframe means that it is a female problem. However, this problem is only part of the larger problem. The topic and real questions are:

- This is a male problem.
- Why are Christian men leaving the Church?
- Why aren't Christian men more attractive in general?

- What can be done to help Christian men become strong, confident leaders?

Obviously, those of you reading this blog know all of the answers. Men do not have mentors or discipleship from older men in the Church. The feminization of the church drives men away. Christian single men and women are not counseled on what is attractive (see: personality/masculinity, status, athleticism/talent, looks, and money versus youth and beauty for men and women respectively). Often times they are peddled outright lies.

This is predominantly a male problem. The fact that the church refuses to engage it as a male problem means it will never solve the issue. If it is always reframed as a female problem then men will only be seen as a utility for women and not the strong, confident, and bold heads of marriage that they are called to be in Ephesians 5.

> You can decide that God has not come through for you, so you take matters into your own hands. You decide to be a gal who parties a lot, casually dates a bunch of guys you'd never marry, sleeps around, moves in with a guy, or does other things that will really hurt the one relationship you have with a great man: Jesus Christ. If you take this path, you will eventually come to feel horrible for what you have done and miserable in the world you live.

So far so good. The hyperbole is a bit much though.

> ## OPTION #2: SURRENDER
> You can give up on ever meeting someone worth marrying. You can just stop taking any risks, meeting any people, or trying in any way. Often this is because you are sick of getting your heart broken and would rather lock it away in a vault than take another risk. But when you shut down your heart to life in general, you are not just foregoing marriage but also hope and joy.

Here is where the hyperbole goes off the track. Surrender is important, but it depends on what you are surrendering.

I've talked before about my own surrender process that I had to go through in order to make peace with God about my desires and needs. I came to a place where I so strongly wanted to be married that it was becoming an idol to me. However, I needed to lay it down and grapple with God to the point that I wanted, very strongly, to be married but I also knew that if God did not have it in the cards for me I would still be satisfied.

Surrendering is important but it needs to be done in the context of God and not giving into despair.

OPTION #3: SETTLE

> You can lower your standards to the point that nearly any guy can meet them. Single men and women are prone to have a list of what they want in a spouse that is way too detailed, long, and unreasonable. But, it is also possible to keep editing your list to the point where “godly man” eventually becomes “believes in a higher power of some sort,” and “I respect him” becomes “I think I can put up with him.” This may get you a man, but not a long-term, joy-filled, God-honoring marriage.

Again, the massive hyperbole. Self examination is important.

For me and my process, it was about examining what are essentials and what are non-essentials. I started out with a much longer list, but I honed it down to approximately 6 things I was looking for a woman. Does that mean I threw out my other preferences? No. But it doesn’t mean it was a deal breaker if they didn’t have them.

It also bears mentioning that settling is all based on expectations. If you’re an average joe blow are you going to marry a supermodel? Extremely highly unlikely unless you won the lottery and even then you won’t want a woman who marries for money anyway. People often have a very poor realistic image of themselves which is why it is important to have brutally honest friends. I know we make jokes about it, but the average Christian woman is probably not going to be marrying the handsome worship band leader.

Expectations both of yourself and the person that you desire need to be realistic.

OPTION #4: SUFFER

> You can allow your singleness to become the devastating, discouraging, and defining aspect of your life. You can let it make you feel unwanted, unloved, and unworthy. You can allow it to haunt you, pushing you into shame, isolation, and despair. You can let your singleness be a club for Satan to beat you with over, and over, and over, and over . . .

The hyperbole is starting to get to me guys…

Suffering is THE norm for Christians. Jesus said that all who would follow Him would suffer. Paul says the same thing in Philippians. As I discussed in the purpose of prayer, our hope in suffering is to push us in cycles in Romans 5:

- Positive spiritual cycle: hope in tribulations -> perseverance -> proven character -> hope.

The fact that is frustrating to go after a calling such as marriage is supposed to help refine you and make you into a man or woman that can withstand trials and tribulations. God knows that there are many of those in marriage. Suffering is there to call us higher not to be a hyperbole about singleness to make some sort of morbid point about giving up.

> ## OPTION #5: STRIVE
> You can start to obsess over doing literally everything you can to land a husband. You never leave the house without looking like you are ready for a pageant. You count every calorie and spend more time at the gym than the treadmill does. You start an account for every Christian dating site that exists. You attend every church with a decent number of single men, and never miss a singles ministry event at any megachurch within a two-hour drive of your home. The center of your life is no longer Jesus, but some guy you are determined to attract to fill his place.

Can we shove the hyperbole where the sun don't shine? As I've said prior:

"I've used the college or job analogy before. It's been criticized but it generally fits: you don't sit on your application or resume and wait for acceptance or jobs to come to you. Sure, you could get some, but it's unlikely that you'll get many offers unless you are an exceptionally attractive candidate if you get my drift. You write essays, you study, you get tutors if you need to, you jump at every and any opportunity to make yourself more attractive to prospective colleges or employers in hopes that you get interviews."

As Christians we are called to strive toward the callings that Christ has for us. For some of us that is marriage. There is nothing wrong with striving toward marriage. The main thing is to surrender the desire to God so that it doesn't become an idol. But that does not absolve us from the responsibility of putting forth effort and working toward the goals that we want to achieve.

> You can take comfort in God's love for you and that Jesus is the Man in your life who sympathizes with your singleness. You can allow your singleness to explain you but not identify you. You can allow your singleness to be an aspect of your life but not the essence of your life. You can remind yourself that you worship a God who was single, and that the early church was nearly the polar opposite of today's: singleness was considered a virtuous, preferable life by many in service to God. You can live your life without waiting for someone else to show up and make it worthwhile. You can retain your desire for marriage without drifting into desperation. You can be open to a relationship without putting your entire life on hold until one occurs. You can pour your desires for a family into your extended family and/or church family.

Ah, so this is what the hyperbole was written for.

It doesn't quite hit the mark as it misses understanding the nature of men. Namely, attraction: Men like young, beautiful virgins. Where is the realism here? True, you can't control age, but you can control your beauty and virginity. If you don't have your virginity then you can control your chastity.

> To my single sisters wanting to marry, I do not want to discourage you in any way. But, the truth is that it is harder to be a single woman than a single man as a Christian. Every poll I have ever seen says that single women are generally more mature and responsible than single men. Men are waiting until around 30 years old to marry for the first time, if they ever do. And, they are going for younger women, according to the statistics. Across Christianity, there are far more single women than single men, which means that the odds are not in the favor of godly single women. In addition, for theological reasons, many Christian women do not want to be the dating initiator, asking guys out and taking the lead in the relationship.

Sadly, this is false and another reframe of the problem from men to women. As the Church has been increasingly feminized without discipleship and mentors, the atmosphere in the Church is much worse for men. After all, that's why men are leaving in the first place. The presence of more women in the church is only an indicator of the problem with men rather than an issue of the hardship of women.

Additionally, it is not men who are waiting until 30 years old to marry. I posted the study somewhere on this blog and on Dalrock's that it is women in their early 20s that are eschewing marriage in greater numbers than men because they want to develop their education and careers first. Surprise: when a woman chooses to opt out of marriage and pursue education and a career then the average age of marriage goes up. Men are still being driven to marry earlier rather than later by our strong sex drives. The only thing that has changed is women wanting to marry later.

The additional support to this is the fact that marriage ages dropped right after World War 2 to around 20 years of age for women from around 22-24 years old. Why is that? Millions of men were killed during the war, so there is a huge shortage of men. When there is a shortage of men, women compete for the single men because they want to get married and have children. Hence, women are more inclined to commit to marry earlier and younger. Men want to have sex, and for Christian men marriage is the only way to have sex. Marriage age is driven by women wanting to marry younger or later for various reasons.

Overall, this article went around and too many people agreed with it. It has huge glaring flaws because of too much hyperbole. It also reinforced the fact that women are to be extremely passive in finding a relationship. That is not good.

6 ways to love single women in your church

As I said before, this article spawned some self-love type of articles from other Christian women such as 6 ways to love single women in your church. As you'll see, the passivity and victimhood mentality only grows.

> 1. Do Not Use If/Then Statements:
> There may be nothing that irks me more than when I am told, “It’s when you let go and are ok with being single that God brings you someone,” or “Relationships happen when you least expect them”. Where this may have been your experience or your friend’s experience, God doesn’t use reverse psychology on his kids and he certainly doesn’t set up dating formulas for us to figure out and follow. In His grace, He often chooses to not give us our idols because he loves us; but that is not the only reason someone is still single. Let me just state for the record that contentment does not entitle you to blessings. By telling a single person that they need to be cool with being single before they can be married, you have (most likely accidentally) encouraged them to live according to a “works-based” mentality. It’s easy to fall into a manipulative relationship with God at that point, and pursue singularity in Christ so that he will bless you. What is more helpful, is to lovingly encourage a single woman in her relationship with Christ because He’s worthy of being pursued himself. Share with her how He has proven himself enough for you personally (not just you and your spouse) in difficult seasons of life.

Agreed that most if/then statements are bad. However, the followup is more non-sequitur than it is relevant.

This is the problem with the “Jesus is my boyfriend” type of culture. It focuses the issue away from a quality response to solve it to a Jesus is all you need type of thing. Yes, He is all we need, but again that doesn’t absolve us from using Him as a crutch to not critically think about how we can improve in a particular situation.

Instead of focusing it onto solely Jesus, it would be best to self examine in this case. For example, if there are no men asking me out it’s good to ask the question why are no men asking me out? Is it because my personality is bitter toward men? Is it because I need to put more work into being attractive? Is it because of other reasons? Those are some relevant questions to ask.

> 2. Do Not Assume or Attempt to Fix:
> Assumptions about why a person is still single can be very hurtful. Marriage is not a goal, it is a gift. As Pastor Mark said in his article, “There are some single women who remain single for no good reason.” When a single girl comes up to you upset and asking, “Why am I not married?!!!”, the last thing she wants is someone to take a magnifying glass to her heart to diagnose its condition. That is the Holy Spirit’s job. Of course we are all called to sharpen one another and (as the Lord leads) encourage one another toward holiness; but under no circumstance should we try to “fix” each other. There are all kinds of people who are married. There are not those who qualify and those who don’t. The single girl is most likely in a frenzy comparing herself to the married people in her life > wondering, “what’s wrong with me?”. What her Father wants her to hear is that she is loved, she has been made worthy by Jesus, and that she has great value just as she is. When others (in an effort to help) fill her head with a lot of “maybe this is why’s”, she will be tempted to psychoanalyze herself rather than rest in God’s sovereignty and love. Trust me, she’s thought through all the reason’s “why not” and Satan likes to beat her with them. Instead, empathize with her and accompany her as she petitions her Lord for the desires of her heart. Pray together that God would provide her a husband, ending the prayer as Jesus does with “Thy will be done”.

The quintessential woman response: “I just want you to listen not fix the problem.” Or rather, it’s not about the nail. The main issue is, if the problem isn’t addressed, then it will never get solved.

That said you can’t help people who don’t want to help themselves. So in a sense, what she is saying is correct. If she doesn’t want help fixing the problem then she can keep on praying about her value in Christ and provision for a husband instead of actually taking steps in life to make it happen. I don’t recommend that though.

> 3. Ask:
> Some of this will depend on the personality of the single person in your life, so use discernment…
> The single woman probably has a lot of her life that she wishes she could share with another human (especially if she doesn’t live with her family). Something as simple as a quick text, “How was work?” can mean the world to someone who never gets asked that question. It’s easy to feel like no one cares when you don’t have a spouse. When a single person falls on hard times or has a big decision to make, it all falls on their shoulders. There is no one right there to bounce ideas off of or make decisions with. If you are close with a single person, ask them about the day-to-day things in their life. “How was that dinner with your folks?”, “Did you finish that project?”, “So, what are you thinking about such and such?”. Ask these questions not as a controlling parent would, but rather as a friend who loves to hear about every aspect of their friend’s life. When listening to the answers, don’t be a fountain of opinions and solutions (if they share problems) – listen and simply hear. Offer advice only when it has been invited.

I don’t have an issue with this, but what this doesn’t say says more about it than anything. Have a mentor and be discipled by someone stronger in the faith. Sadly, women’s ministries are probably as bad as men’s ministries about and mentoring and discipleship for those who are younger.

> 4. Affirm:
> Everyone likes to be encouraged. Everyone should be encouraged! Affirming and building one another up is something we are called to do for each other. This is a call that applies to every person you are in relationship with; however let me > offer up some specific ways that you can affirm a single woman. Don't be afraid of her finding her identity in her looks, tell her she looks pretty. I can't tell you the amount of times I have gotten ready for something and cried at the mirror because I felt sad that my efforts weren't going to be enjoyed. When a married woman gets all dressed up, often she is giddy with excitement because she knows her husband will delight in her beauty. The single woman will often feel like a waste. God made women beautiful and beauty reveals its full richness when it is partaken of. Single guys in the church community know that it may give the girl the wrong idea if he says she looks pretty, so its unlikely that the single girl feels like her beauties are of any use. Delight in the beauty of the single women in your life. Not, in a sexual or creepy way; but enjoy the things that are lovely about her. Show her through your words that her beauty reminds you of the beauty of Jesus. They are a part of the Bride of Christ, celebrate them as you would celebrate a woman on her wedding day.

> As you walk with a single person through their life, affirm their good decisions. When you see them growing in wisdom and making godly choices, say it. Often the singles feel unsure about their decisions because their life lacks immediate validation. She may not have godly parents and feels awkward always asking "Is this ok?". There is power in "we made the decision". It takes a lot of faith and guts to make all the calls in your life. If a single person is in your community, be a part of those decisions with them (when invited). Affirm their wisdom when they seek counsel from you.

Again, good. But what isn't said is more important than what is said. If a woman is overweight or obese and you affirm her as pretty is she going to know she should lose weight to be more attractive? A dress many look pretty, but if it's on an obese woman I can guarantee that almost all men would not talk about how pretty her dress was. Rather, we would think that it's not such a flattering dress with her figure.

Tough love is important. It is important to affirm and encourage but it is also important to admonish and rebuke where necessary.

> 5. Invite:
> At my church, single people are encouraged to seek wisdom from people a life stage ahead of them. (As a little aside, "ahead of them" feels like a poor choice of words. Yes, statistically most of us will get married; but married people have not achieved something higher than the single person. "Older than" or "In a different stage" is a better choice of words.) I have inserted myself in the lives of married couples and reaped a multitude of blessings by being actively involved in other family's lives. I've learned a ton about marriage and parenting – I highly recommend following this suggestion. The Bible teaches us to disciple one another. For the older women to teach the younger and so on and so forth. Much can be gained from obeying this truth. What I have noticed though is that the pressure is usually put entirely on the younger person to seek the disciple-er out.

> Where I don’t disagree that we should be doing this, I would like to add that the marrieds and elders should also seek out those whom they can disciple. If you’re married, invite single people into your home and life. Not as though they are a charity case, but as delightful people who you want to spend time with. It honestly feels embarrassing for the single person to feel like they have to invite themselves over. A lot of young single women would love to have you and your family over for dinner to get to know you, but their tiny apartment and roommate prohibit them from making that possible. Sheepishly, they may ask to spend time with you knowing that it’s hard for you to get away from the kids…so they end up offering to babysit which results in them spending time with your kids and not you. It becomes exponentially more awkward when you pay them. Invite them over for dinner and a movie after the kids go to bed. Drink wine with them and make them feel like a grownup, not a 13-year-old.

Very good. Echos some of my other thoughts.

> This last point is focused mainly on single women in their late 20’s or early 30’s who live on their own (or at least not with their parents). A fantastic way you can love the singles in your community is by being generous with them. A young single woman with (more than likely) a boat load of student loans, an entry-level job, and no family support is going to struggle financially. She is choosing holiness by not moving in with a guy who will help ease the burden, and she should be encouraged for that. While her newly wed friends are being showered in free furniture and are registering for all their household needs, the younger single girl is eating ramen and can’t even dare to dream about new dinnerware. She has to buy her own blender, her own flowers, her own kitchen table, and her own cookbooks. No one is teaching her how to run a proper household, or cook on budget, or get her whites extra white. That’s why she lives on Pinterest! Most likely the women in her family are saving things they intend to give her when she’s married. Though the sentiment is appreciated, she needs all those things now! You can really bless a single person by giving them things you would normally find on a wedding registry.

Generosity is good. However, it is important to realize the impact of the choices that were made to get you into this position. Student loads? Entry level job? I hope you went to school for a STEM career and not liberal arts. Prioritized education and career over finding a husband? Well, that is a large portion your fault for making such choices.

Rather than covering over potentially poor choices it is important for women to learn from them and deal with the consequences. This allows them to actually learn and grow from them.

> I hope this doesn’t come off as the bitter ramblings of a discontented old maid; but rather, I hope you read this and feel better equipped to love the single people > in your life. Life is hard for everyone, for married people, for single people… By God's grace, we are all one body working together for the Kingdom; depending on Jesus for our fulfillment and sense of worth and value.

It's not really bitter, but it's passive. After all, the title is 6 ways to love single women in your church. While the Church SHOULD love single women, the passivity bothers me. A better article that could've been written is "6 things women SHOULD DO in order to improve their chances of marriage."

I think part of this is due to Disney and Romance garbage. Prince Charming ultimately comes waltzing in to marry the normal, average girl and save the day. Good thing there are 3.5 billion Prince Charmings.

Women have this expectation that a man is going to ultimately see what is special inside of them and grab hold of it and sweep her off into marriage. This ignores reality. While Jesus represents this because He created us and knows us more than we know ourselves, men are men the way God created us. We are attracted to physical appearance and beauty. This is not shallow. We can't see your heart. We can only see your attitudes and actions. You need to become a woman that is beautiful on the outside and inside if you want to have a good shot at marriage.

Jesus doesn't promise us marriage and children in the Scriptures. It's a goal you have to actively strive for by laying down the need and desire to Him, but also seeking to improve your chances by making the most of every opportunity in the physical world.

This is the confusion that most Christians have when they don't understand the difference between roles and responsibilities of God in our lives (e.g. filling the God sized hole in our hearts) versus the roles and responsibilities of husbands and wives. If you don't have proper boundaries between this then you set yourself up to fail before you even begin.

Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins

September 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

On Dalrock's recent thread. I've been wanting to write about this for a while, but now seems like a good time.

J_N writes:

> I get tired of the doom and gloom about how there are no chaste Christian girls left. (And a girl who chooses not to be chaste isn't a Christian. Sorry, but that's how it works.) They don't hang around the manosphere tho or go on Christian dating websites.

Dave follows up with:

> Preach it, brother. I totally, wholeheartedly agree with you.
> I have said it before, that a whole lot of guys on this site who keep complaining, somewhat like Elijah, that there were no longer any righteous/chaste/desirable/godly/marriage-worthy women in America, are looking at the wrong places. Or they are simply too lazy to do the work of finding a great wife. Or they are too immobilized under the weight of their crushing unbelief to trust God to guide them.
> At the same time, there are men on this site who are married to chaste, godly, and beautiful women. Yes, right here in America.
> And I am fully confident that America still has literally millions of attractive, chaste and godly women who are praying everyday for God to send them a husband.

I suppose the big question is… are there millions of attractive, chaste, and godly women left in America. Good question.

Let's find out.

- There are 10,466,258 women aged 25-29 and 10,571,823 women aged 20-24 and 10,736,677 women aged 15-19 in the US. Let's say the range from 18-29 is good. 18-19 make up 40% of the 15-19 range so approximately 4294671 women.

2010 Census Data. Not much changes in 5 years given the chart as each population group is still roughly 10 million.
http://www.census.gov/prod/cen2010/briefs/c2010br-03.pdf

Total women in 18-29 age range = 25,332,752

- Less than 20% of Americans regularly attend church — half of what the pollsters report. While Gallup polls and other statisticians have turned in the same percentage — about 40% of the population — of average weekend church attendees for the past 70 years, a different sort of research paints quite a disparate picture of how many Americans attend a local church on any given Sunday.

> 7 Startling Facts: An Up Close Look at Church Attendance in America

Total women in 18-29 age range that attend Church regularly = 25,332,752 * .2 = 5,066,550

- We also know that 70% of young adults in the 18-22 range drop out of church.

http://www.lifeway.com/Article/LifeWay-Research-finds-reasons-18-to-22-year-olds-drop-out-of-church

Total women in 18-29 age range that attend Church regularly that didn't drop out = 5,066,550 * .3 = 1,519,965

- 58.5 of women 20-39 years old are overweight or obese in 2011-2012 in the US

http://jama.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=1832542

Total women in 18-29 age range that attend Church regularly, that didn't drop out, and aren't overweight or obese = 1,519,965 * .415 = 630785

- In highly religious groups, up to 20% wait [to have sex] until marriage successfully. Naturally, religious people seem more likely to wait until marriage to have sex. In a study of 9 Southern Babtist churches in Texas (it doesn't get much more conservative than that), 20% of the church members aged 25 or younger were married without ever having premarital sex.

http://waitingtillmarriage.org/4-cool-statistics-about-abstinence-in-the-usa/

Total women in 18-29 age range that attend Church regularly, that didn't drop out, and aren't overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage = 630785 * .2 = 126,157

That's dismal in my opinion.

Other thoughts

I didn't even take into account some other factors like the fact that many of these women in the age 18-29 are focused on careers over marriage… or aren't even really Christians as most of the people in Church play lip service to Jesus. For example,

- The National Marriage Project also found that "about 80 percent of young-adult men and women continued to rate marriage as an 'important' part of their life plans; almost half of them described it as 'very important.'" Thirty percent of 25-year-old single women want to be married. Read more at http://national.deseretnews.com/article/1893/The-national-marriage-age-is-increasing-but-not-for-this-group-of-people.html . Only ~30% of women want to be married in the 18-30 age range on average approximately.

- Those who attend church are not always “Christians.” Based on my experience and others I’d say that only 10-20% of Christians in churches are actually reading their Bible and striving to obey Scripture.
- Worse measures of virginity in non-extremely conservative Church populations.
- Denominational differences. This clumps all religions together (hindu, muslum, etc.) not just Catholic and Protestant.

In conclusion, there are approximately 125,000 (126,157) Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren’t overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage. This is approximately 0.5% of the 18-29 total population (126,157 / 25,332,752). Pretty rare. In the US total population it is .039% (126,157 / 320,090,000).

I would say this is a decent estimate given that I didn’t factor in some of the non-independent variables. For example, those who are virgins are more likely to attend Church, and those who obey Jesus are more likely to be virgins. There are some independent such as the fact that obesity and overweight rates are similar across most of the adult population. However, I didn’t take into account some variables such as careerism, decreased measures of chastity, and lip service Christians so the estimate is probably close to being on target.

It is highly unlikely that there are millions as Dave put it. Probably a factor of 10 or less. Also, note that this number will decrease as feminism becomes more pervasive and the Church continues to take on cultural mores rather than Jesus.

Specifically, in any random Church the percentage that you’ll find a 18-29 year old attractive, Christian virgin is going to be .2 (virginity at marriage) * .415 (not overweight or obese) = 8.30%. In other words, about 1 in 12.

The main problem is that the top 10% Christian “alpha” will relationship her quick and marry her straight up, so it’s likely that your average Christian man will even get a shot. That’s worse odds than the traditional Pareto principle 80/20 rule which is about 1 in 4. In other words, you have to become the attractive top 5% of a man in order to have a good shot at marrying an attractive, virgin, Christian woman.

Thems the statistics. More than you thought? Less than you thought? I’d love to hear what everyone else thinks.

On divorce Part 2

September 2, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

I wrote a fairly lengthy article on divorce back in December last year. I want to explore this topic further because I have further solidified my understanding of what Jesus is actually saying, and what the Scripture teaches as a whole on this topic. This is a bit in response of the inability to understand what Jesus is saying about divorce recently in Dalrock's post.

Basically, the heresy that I'm addressing directly is that people believe that Jesus said Christians can divorce if a spouse (or wife) commits fornication or adultery during marriage.

This is an extremely common interpretation of the Matthew 5 and 19 passages which is false given you look closely at what Jesus in saying in reference to Deuteronomy 22 and 24.

Relooking at Deuteronomy 22 and 24

To fully understand what Jesus is talking about we first have to analyze the OT Scriptures in which He is discussing. These are important in historical context because Jesus always refers back to the law, and then explicates His position on the fulfillment of the law.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.
> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to

> wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

There are two parts of "divorce" required of the husband in the OT covenant. This will be important when we look at the passages in Matthew.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Note: I'm specifically using the KJV because almost every English translation has the wrong wording of the text from the Greek. Even the KJV has one mistranslation of the word as well.

> Matthew 5:31 It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement (apostasion): 32 But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, saving for the cause of fornication (porneia), causeth her to commit adultery (moichaō): and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced (apoluō) committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery

> 10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

Here are Strong's words for each of the highlighted wording:

> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on
> Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.
> G4202 — πορνεία — porneia — por-ni'-ah
> From G4203; harlotry (including adultery and incest); figuratively idolatry: – fornication.
> G3429 — μοιχάω — moichaō — moy-khah'-o
> From G3432; (middle voice) to commit adultery: – commit adultery.

As you can see from these passages, there are specific words in the Greek and Hebrew that are synonymous. A divorce by Jewish law MUST have both of these components.

- GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
- GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Likewise, it is important to see that "put away" is in a few occasions translated as "divorce" in Matthew 5 and 19 and likewise in Mark 10 and Luke 16. This is a wrong translation.

Additionally, it is important to understand that porneia and moichao (or moicheuo) are not synonymous with each other. Fornication is sex or illicit sexual behavior PRIOR to marriage. Moichao/moicheuo is specifically used in context of adulterous sex.

Analyzing Matthew 19 line by line

Apparently, the analysis in the previous article is quite poor that people still do not understand what Jesus is talking about. Hence, a verse by verse analysis is required. Starting with Matthew 19:3 to get a full view of the story the line by line logic is clear:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying > unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

1. The Pharisees come to Jesus intending to entrap him as shown by Matthew referring to this as a temptation. This is the importance of understanding that a divorce in Jewish law is putting away AND a bill of divorcement.
2. The background behind this temptation is that the Pharisees are pitting Roman law versus Jewish law. In Roman law you could "divorce" your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo). However, as we know in Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth).
3. Likewise, the Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could put away for "every cause." Although the article referenced does get the conclusion wrong which I will show later it provides more background to this trap.
4. This is similar to other traps the Pharisees employed such as it being lawful to pay taxes to Caesar or God (Matt 22, Mark 12) or to stone the adulterous woman (John 8).
5. Hence, the trap. If Jesus answers that you can put away a wife without a bill of divorcement the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you need a bill of divorcement then the Pharisees can take Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law. The additional part of the trap that is subtle is that "every cause" is thrown in so that they are not referring directly to Jewish law but solely one liberal interpretation of it.
6. Obviously, this is a no win question, so the only right answer is not to play at all.

All of this should be pretty straight forward and clear so far.

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

1. All of these verses are Jesus' response and they all go together.
2. Jesus neatly sidesteps the Pharisees trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and instead discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there (see: John 1:1-4).

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

1. The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap.
2. However, they now are not a bit confused. If God did not intended for any divorce at all then why was it written in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24 that they can divorce by putting the wife away AND giving her a bill of divorcement?

3. The fact that they readily acknowledge that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement allows us to understand that the prior exegesis of the "trap" set by the Pharisees as indicated by Matthew is correct. The Pharisees were again pitting Roman Law against Jewish Law trying to make Him break one or the other.

Again, everything is so far straight forward.

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

1. Jesus responds to the Pharisees that this part of the law was created because human hearts are hard.
2. This does not mean that putting away (or apoluo) is synonymous with divorce. Rather, it means that Jesus doesn't want "putting away" for any reason valid divorce or not because of the hardness of hearts.
3. Next, Jesus goes on to talk about the only valid reason for putting away and not a reason for divorce.

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Let's go through this part by part.

1. Specifically, Jesus starts off with "Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife." Again, putting away is not synonymous with divorce as Jewish law is 2 parts: putting away and giving a bill of divorcement.
2. Jesus knows what a bill of divorce is as He is familiar with Jewish law. Additionally, the Pharisees just asked him about putting away (apoluo) and bills of divorce (apostasion). Hence, Jesus is only talking about the specific scenario of putting away a wife WITHOUT a bill of divorcement.
3. This is important to realize because we now understand that Jesus is going back and answering the original question in Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, "Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?"

Thus, Jesus is addressing their original question with His statement here.

The next part:

1. Jesus specifically says "except it be for fornication (porneia). "Fornication" is an illicit sexual union including incest (1 Cor 5) and includes adultery. However, if Jesus was referring specifically to adultery here then “moichao” would have been used instead of “porneia.” That Greek word is not used here.

2. Additionally, in combination with “putting away (apoluo)” and “fornication (porneia)” this tells us that He is referring to Deuteronomy 22 where a husband marries a wife who is not a virgin by fraud. If it was talking about “putting away (apoluo)” and “bill of divorcement (apostasion)” and “adultery (moichiao)” this would reference Deuteronomy 24 on rules of divorce.
3. The Greek wording is extremely important to look at here because it tells us what Jesus is talking about and what He is not talking about. This wording absolutely denies the so called “adultery clause” which is that you can divorce a wife for adultery in Deuteronomy 24 and instead refers to the passage about putting away and fornication in Deuteronomy 22.

Thus, a husband cannot put away a wife [without a bill of divorcement] except for fornication. This refers back to Deuteronomy 22 instead of Deuteronomy 24. As Donal points out in the comments, this is specifically fornication by fraud.

The next part:

1. Jesus says: “and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).” Let’s put all of the parts together now.
2. Remove the “except” part for a moment. Jesus is saying: And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for fornication (porneia)~~, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
3. In other words, Jesus is saying [under Jewish law] that if you put away your wife and marry another each of you commit adultery. This makes sense because if you put away your wife under Jewish law without giving her a writ of divorcement then you commit adultery as you were still married to her! This is where Jesus refers to Deuteronomy 24 specifically on the laws of divorce. It’s two parts!
4. Now, what about the “except it be for fornication (porneia)” part? The Pharisees rightly understood that in Deuteronomy 22 that if a husband accused his wife of not being a virgin then the proof was the sheet with the blood stains on it. If the parents were able to produce that (gross, I know) then the husband must pay a penalty and could never put her away as long as he lives. The wife, in other words, committed fraud by lying/deception by marrying her husband claiming to be a virgin when she was not.
5. Therefore, this “except” clause means that a husband COULD put away a wife (read: not divorce) if she had fornicated prior to marriage but claimed to be a virgin. This goes back to our understanding of covenants. The proof of the covenant was the blood that the virgin bled. Likewise, the proof of God’s covenant with Abraham was the blood from cutting animals in half. The remission of sins was the blood of the sacrifice of animals. The New Testament was made in Jesus blood permanently for our redemption from sin.

6. Indeed, there is no covenant marriage formed between the husband and the wife if she fornicated prior to marriage as there would have been on blood sheet as proof. Hence, a husband can “lawfully” put away his wife for that cause under Jewish law. This bring us full circle to the fact that Jesus fully answered the Pharisees’ question.
7. Under Jewish law a husband can put away his wife [without a bill of divorcement] if she had fornicated and deceived him that she was a virgin as there was no lawful marriage in the first place. Hence, he can put her away and it is not a divorce.

When understood properly in this context, we see that Jesus was not commenting on reasons for divorce. Instead, He comments on specifically the one reason why a covenant marriage is not formed and a husband can put away his wife.

This means that what Jesus statement on marriage and divorce still stands: Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus gives ZERO exceptions for divorce.

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother’s womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven’s sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

1. The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce period. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fornicated prior to marriage as there would have been no covenant marriage formed.
2. Hence, they say that it’s better not to marry since it would be a bad deal to marry if you couldn’t divorce for any reason.
3. Jesus then responds that only some can receive the gift of singleness without women. This is important to note in the context of 1 Corinthians 7, and Paul’s concession that it’s better to marry than to burn. Both Jesus and Paul under the inspiration of the Father understand that many will marry because singleness has not been given to everyone.

As you can see from a close reading of the text in Matthew 19 Jesus is not talking about specific causes for divorce. Rather, He says that there is no divorce period. The only reason you can put away a wife is if she fornicated prior to marriage and fraudulently claimed she was a virgin.

Other support for this interpretation

This also agrees with Matthew 1:19 where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

In this specific case, Joseph was not married to Mary (only betrothed), but Jesus is saying in this instance that if a husband did marry a woman who was not a virgin he could put her away without a bill of divorce.

This unifies what Jesus also states in the same topical passages on divorce and there being “no potential exception clause” in Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another,committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

If you recognize these passages they also agree with the correct interpretation of Matthew 5 and Matthew 19. Mark and Luke specifically do not mention fornication because it is assumed that Jesus was speaking for everything on divorce when He said “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”

The reason why Matthew mentions this in the gospel is because he was the Jewish tax collector. Since Matthew was written for a Jewish audience, he includes the details of the specifics in accordance with Deuteronomy 22 and 24 of what Jesus said so that they may understand it in the context of the law. Mark and Luke don't put that in there because it is obvious: there are no reasons for putting away save if a woman fornicated prior to marriage.

Understanding Jesus in the context of other Scriptures

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

Romans 7 does not speak specifically about whether you can legally divorce or not. Obviously, Deuteronomy 24, which Paul is quite familiar with being a Pharisee of Pharisees, states that husbands could divorce their wives.

Paul is instead speaking to the scenarios of being unbound by the law (in death) more than about divorce because He is discussing our salvation and grace versus works. In particular, husbands were allowed to divorce their wives in Deuteronomy 24; however, wives were not allowed to divorce their husbands. Hence, when Paul speaks to this scenario a wife is bound by the law to her husband until he dies [or he divorces her which didn't comment about in this passage].

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

It’s important to understand that Paul is speaking to a Roman/Greek population in the Corinthians here and not the Jewish people. Hence, Paul is speaking against the Roman law that “divorce” could be done through “putting away” or simply “departing” in the case of the wife.

Likewise, Paul follows this up with the only correct path for those separated or divorced: stay single or reconcile. This is a hard word for most Christians because divorce and remarriage is not an option.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. “Well, if I’m not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry.” That is not what this passage says at all. It only says that if they depart then you’re not under the bondage of the marriage anymore. However, it does not necessarily condone remarriage either. In fact, going back to the earlier part of 1 Corinthians 7 it would be best to stay single or reconcile if at all possible.

Old Testament passages on divorce not in Deuteronomy

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

You will notice in Malachi 2 that it is referring to the same circumstances as was during Roman occupation. The law of Moses basically gave the Israelites the right to divorce if they wrote up a bill of divorce, handed it to her, and then sent her away. However, the Israelites were dealing treacherously by sending their wives away without a bill of divorce.

The reason behind this is because if a wife was divorced she would receive back the dowry and the bride price which may have also included land. The Israelite husbands were sending away their wives without the bill of divorcement which allowed them to keep the dowry and bride price but also left the wife destitute and on the street.

Additionally, with a bill of divorce the wife would now be single and able to be remarried. However, as Jesus discussed with putting away without the bill of divorce the woman would be unable to be remarried without committing adultery which is a grievous sin before God. Since the wife was left destitute without the bride price and dowry back and unable to be married again to support herself, the Israelite husbands were basically condemning the woman to poverty and begging in a treacherous manner.

This passage does not say that God hates divorce. It is falsely used by many pastors to that note. This passage says that God hates putting away [without a bill of divorce]. Although God does not like divorce via Jesus' statements on Genesis, God is willing to carry out divorce Himself under His own laws in the old covenant as we will see:

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach, and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

This is one of the reasons why Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity, and why Samaritans were treated like garbage by the Jews. They were no longer "Jews" because they have been divorced by God. This passage in Jeremiah 3 shows that God Himself divorces the Israelites, gives her a bill of divorce, and sends/puts her away into Assyrian captivity. God abides by His own law that He gave the Israelites.

However, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away:

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord, Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement (sêpher 'êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was > there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. Thus, even though the Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Then He brings her back out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra, and remakes the covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

Conclusions

There are many conclusions about marriage and divorce that we can draw from these passages:

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the Scriptures. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16
2. God and Jesus' plan for marriage is that "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10
3. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16
4. Under Jewish law according to Jesus: You can put away your wife if she fornicated prior to marriage and committed fraud by claiming she was a virgin as the blood on the sheet proved her testimony false (no blood was spilled making it a covenant marriage). – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
5. Under Jewish law: Wives are bound to their husbands as long as they live [or until their husbands divorce them which was not said]. – Rom 7, Deut 24
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage. This can still be liberally interpreted as being able to remarry; however, the prior part of the chapter tends to speak against it since it says to stay single or reconcile. Note the wording: "10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord … [remain unmarried or reconcile]" versus "12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if [they leave you are not under bondage]." I take this to generally mean that "not under bondage" means that you are absolved of your marriage duties, but given the context of the wording about the Lord saying versus Paul saying it would seem that stay unmarried or be reconciled is the ideal. Remarriage is likely not an option. – 1 Cor 7
8. Remarriage is a singular sin and not perpetual adultery This is one of the falsely propagated conclusions from the heretical "You can divorce your spouse if they commit adultery" exegesis. However, the act of remarriage is a sin since the ideal is to stay single or reconcile. The important thing to understand is that it is a singular sin and not a constant state of sin. Confess your sins to God and repent. – Matt 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Cor 7

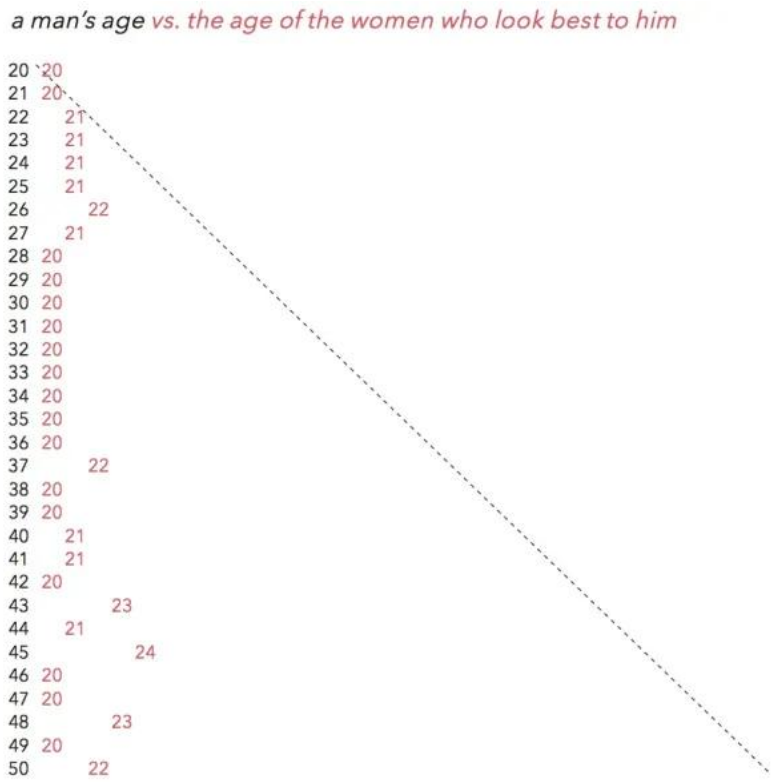
9. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse. This follows out of #8 because the heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. Hence, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. Rather, this view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again. – Deut 24, Matthew 19

Obviously, some of these do not apply to us as Christians now. For example, those things that are under Jewish law do not necessarily apply as Jesus has fulfilled the law. But all of Jesus' commands are stricter than the law anyway. For example, "love one another as I have loved you" as opposed to "love your neighbor as yourself." Jesus is the standard rather than ourselves.

Hence, no divorce, no remarriage, and if you are separated only reconciliation or singleness is likely the correct interpretation of all of the points put together.

This is a straight forward exegesis of the Hebrew OT and Greek NT reading on marriage and divorce. See also this for more support. Ignore and give advice against it at your own spiritual peril.

Maximizing the chances of Christian women to find a spouse



September 2, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Seriouslyserving in Dalrock's post wants to know what women can do if they aren't in the top 20% of attractiveness to find a husband. Although I've written on this before, this is worth a post and I want to expand on it a bit too.

> That raises a question for me: what should a young woman, who is also in this 50-80% range, but not attracted to guys on the same "level", do?
> I mean, I certainly think sexual attraction is an important basis for marriage (not the only thing, but it's up there). But if 80% of women are only attracted to the hottest 20% of men… well, that seems like not enough men to go around!
> You can say that the women should improve themselves to be able to attract some of those more attractive men. And that might work well for individual women, but there will still not be enough men to go around. Or you could say that women should just accept marrying someone they are not super attracted to, but that seems like a poor foundation for a marriage?
> Or perhaps people could take the latter option, with a view to doing what they can to increase the "sparks" once married…

1. Work on their attractiveness. The obvious: sleep, workout, nutrition, flattering and feminine clothes like skirts and dresses, long hair, skin care, light and fresh makeup if any, no tattoos, etc. Women need to be mindful and understand that men like young, beautiful, virgin women. There are few exceptions, and that's how God created us to be.

In case you weren't familiar with the objective OKCupid data:

2. Work on becoming more godly. The obvious: kindness, generosity, graciousness, fruits of the Spirit, dependent on God for most needs. Most men won't appreciate a woman who is super emotionally clingy and dumps her problems on him if many can be resolved by herself. How a woman treats those closest to her and the least of these is a good indicator.

3. Work on skills that would complement their dream man: cooking, homemaker skills if she wants to be a stay at home mom, good at massages, or whatever else. Hobbies if she wants to find someone in a particular area.

4. Look for men that have strong potential. The old Russian maxim being if you want to be married to a general then marry the lieutenant. Specifically, men who show flashes of ambition and leadership qualities but may not have fully stepped into his own yet. These men typically won't be snatched up by anyone yet as most women will be going after the few men with the whole package. Look for men who have written down goals and are working to achieve them.

If women are looking for the top 20% of men, then they're going to be competing with all of the women who are likely more attractive and have good personalities too. Women need to be taught good discernment for what qualities of men they can see that have potential to grow into a strong, bold, confident leaders. Then they need to be taught to follow his lead, and be his biggest supporter and fan. That is the way women help foster a strong confident man.

5. I do not suggest women marry men they are not attracted to nor men do that for women. That's recipe for failure. However, women's attraction is a bit more fluid and tends to increase as a man becomes a stronger and more confident leader. Thus, finding a man with potential will generally be the best.

Frankly, there's not enough attractive Christian men or women to go around so trying to fix the whole problem is useless. Do what you can with the few people that you mentor.

6. Then what I said earlier: Vet according to godliness first. Then when she finds a man that has potential or is a strong masculine leader she should be respectful, encouraging, and enthusiastic to him. She should be willing to commit and submit to him. Follow his lead.

Hence, my overall maxim of relationships:

- Attractiveness gets your foot in the door and allows you to enter into a relationship. Some more readily than others.
- Personality and attitude [and godliness] will make you a keeper so you don't get kicked out.

These two short rules about how relationships work should be taught to all Christian men and women.

What parents can do

In general, if you are a Christian parent then you should be preparing your sons and daughters accordingly. Make sure you address the 3 elephants in the room.

Obviously, young Christian women tend to have their best shot at finding a Christian husband who they find attractive if they can land him when they are in the 20-25 year old range. This is approximately when men find women the most attractive. Hence, the women need to be told that during college and the years post college are important to snagging a husband above getting an education and career started if they want to have a family and kids.

Parents, specifically the father, should in my opinion be mentoring their sons in Christ as well as in teaching them about women. Indeed, it would be wise to have some type of coming of age ceremony around age 13 which is the age when most cultures around the world including the Jewish culture. From there you treat him as his own man with his own responsibilities.

This should and can be applied to both the son and daughters although it is more important for the sons. The sons need to learn responsibility for their actions at an early age and life skills so that they can mature into godly masculine men early. This gives them the best shot at approach college or the trades as attractive men that should have no trouble finding and picking out some of the more beautiful, chaste Christian women.

Basically, young men and young women need to be given information to allow them to be prepared for life, and be taught life skills much earlier in middle and high school. This will allow them to approach their late teens and early twenties with the full knowledge that although education and career are fine, if their goal is to eventually have a family they need to make it a priority over those things. Avoid the life scripts and focus on the Scriptures.

Kids need to be taught to…

- Take responsibility for your physical attractiveness including weight.
- Take responsibility to dress nice and classy rather than lazy.
- Take responsibility for searching out ministries on campus with young people interested in obeying Christ.
- Take responsibility for developing life skills to run a household, manage finances well, and work hard.
- Take responsibility to be disciplined to work toward their goals.

Don’t make them into idols, but don’t ignore them either. Otherwise, they might hit their late twenties and early thirties like most of us wondering why we never were able to build good relationships that led to marriage. Or women wondering why they were never or rarely asked out.

If somebody blows it big time then next them

This example is from RPW, but it applies to both men and women.

> My bf and I had other problems. I found out that he has been talking to his ex (not about getting back together or cheating per se, but he has been talking to her and met up three times throughout the summer without my knowledge.) I confronted him after I saw his emails. His ex and him didn't end things in good terms, his explanation to me is that he's been holding grudges on how it ended, wanted to see how she's doing and "what's the big deal about her." He said he never wanted her back, and that if he wanted, he could've long time ago, but he chose to be with me. He said he just met her to get an update on life and how the family is doing, etc. The problem is, I remember those nights, he would text me last minute and say "hey baby, I'm going to grab a bite with coworkers from the office. see you later!" So turns out he was meeting her.

Talking extensively to ex's is not a good idea. In general, men should mainly be friends with men, and women should be mainly friends with women. This is the foundation of healthy relationships.

Women that like hanging around men all the time are suspicious. Maybe they're attention seeking. Maybe they're one of the women that are like other women aren't good friends in which case you know she is the one with issues if other women don't like her much. Maybe for some other nebulous reason. The same is true of men who are friends with lots of women. They're generally either players or they're not masculine. They're not masculine in the sense that men tend to be verbally harsh with each other, which is a form of bonding and camaraderie to push growth.

In general, the behavior is suspicious in the first place despite the woman saying it is. However, this is compounded with the fact that he lied about it. If it's not a big deal then there's no reason to lie anyway.

> I got immediately turned off by this and broke up with him. We didn't talk for a couple days. He came back to me and begged me to forgive him, wrote ridiculously touching emails on how he lost the best thing happened to his life. He told me it took our breakup for him to realize that he had the best thing (with me) and his way of seeking for closure was so foolish, he told me he has finally done the right thing and cut contact with her. I was hesitant but I decided to give him another chance. I do love him after all.

She went for the initial correct response. Break up and never look back.

However, the problem here is that she allowed herself to be persuaded back into the relationship. Begging and pleading is never the way to go as a man. The fact that she even took him back shifts the relationship to her being the one in control, and the relationship will eventually become unhappy and end up imploding anyway.

If you make a game breaking mistake as a man or woman you should just move on. You may want to continue the relationship, but it's not worth it. If they lied how can you trust they won't lie to you again? What if the other parts of the relationship were built on lies? You can't tell and neither can the other person. Hence, it's best to resolve to move on and start with a clean slate with someone else taking the lessons you've learned here to heart.

> This all happened a few days before he has to leave town (he was only in my town for the summer for an internship, and now summer is over, he moved back to his town.) We are now long distance again and I find myself always getting worried and anxious about where is he at, who is he calling, who does he have lunch with, etc.
> Last night I was really down, I asked him if he has been talking to his ex, he promised he has not. And that I'm the only one.
> I don't doubt he loves me, but I'm worried that I may be not enough for him, that he always want other women's attention.. I don't know what to do to get over the incidents, or if I should just give up on us.

Unfortunately, this is going to be with her forever until she chooses to forgive. While it's not out of the realm of possibility, I still wouldn't advise it in the context of relationships. It's best to move on and resolve to be a different person from there.

History is very important and when there's bad history between you it's much too easy to let things get between you. Now, this can be remedied especially in the context of the Holy Spirit, but if this is in the initial stages of a relationship they have proven themselves untrustworthy. What makes you think that they will be more trustworthy in the future when they had less responsibility and weren't trustworthy with it. Think about the parable of the talents. Those who stewarded well with little were given more. Those who stewarded poorly with little had what they had taken away. This is an important lesson to learn.

> My question for your ladies is: How do you know your husband/boyfriend is trustworthy? Should couples have their own privacy? (One thing I should mention is that, he didn't tell his ex about me, she didn't know he has a gf.) Should I jump ship?

As you can tell from the comments over there they advise her to move on. As do I.

This advice is the same whether your SO was the one committing the deal breaker or if you were the one committing the deal breaker. Sure, they or you could have learned the lesson and become a changed person, but it will almost always hang as a black mark. Thus, move on. This is not something you want if you are going to marry that person.

Stick to your boundaries.

It’s almost as if men and women are different

Recent study coming out on transsexuals.

> Brain imaging shows that testosterone therapy given as part of sex reassignment changes the brain structures and the pathway associated with speech and verbal fluency. This result supports research that women in general may deal with speech and interaction differently than men.
> The sex hormone testosterone exerts a substantial influence on human behaviour and cognition. Previous studies have shown that testosterone has a particular influence on verbal fluency. But these investigations (which due to ethical reasons are mostly observational studies or one-off hormone administrations) have been limited in what they can show, as it has been impossible to follow the direct effect of the hormone on the brain structure.
> The researchers, from Vienna and Amsterdam, worked with 18 female-to-male subjects (27.6 ±6.4 years), before and during testosterone treatment. The subjects underwent MRI brain scans before and after 4 weeks of the testosterone administration. The results showed that with testosterone treatment the volume of grey matter decreased in two specific regions of the brain, the Broca’s and Wernicke’s areas, which are mainly responsible for language processing. At the same time, the neuronal pathway (white matter) connecting these two regions via the extreme capsule got stronger.
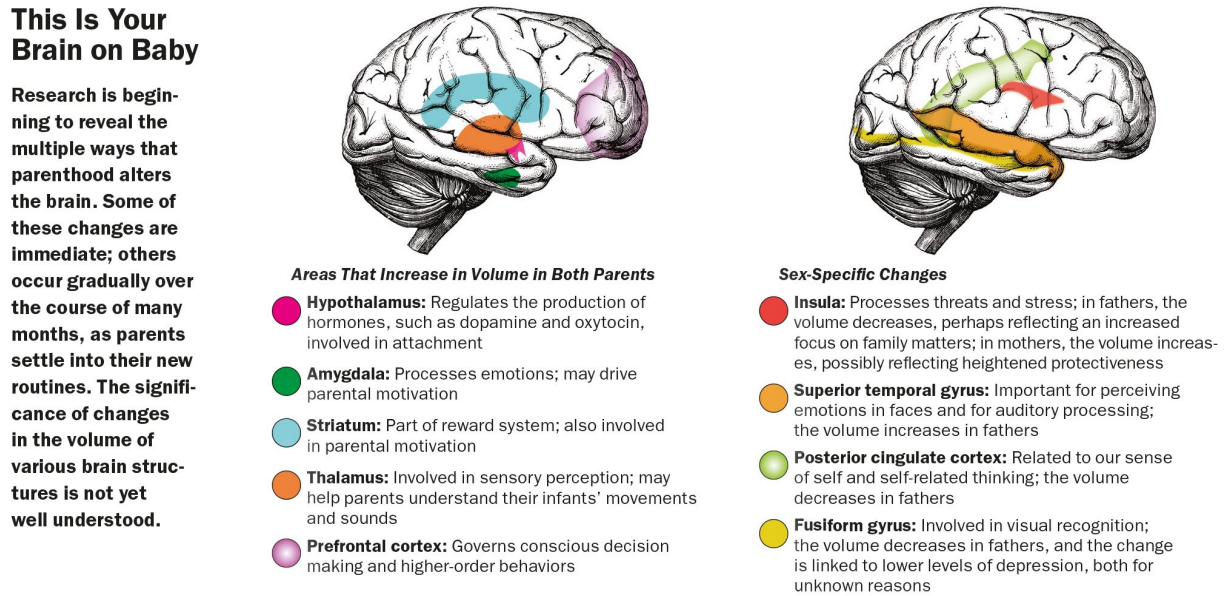
> ‘It is well-known that language development differs between girls and boys and that this is related to gender-related differences in brain maturation. However, this intriguing neuroimaging study of transsexuals before and after their female-to-male gender reassignment suggests that even adult men and women differ in brain structure within regions involved in language and speech. In particular, female-to-male gender reassignment resulted in local brain matter decrease within language processing regions, which may explain why verbal abilities are often stronger in women.’



What we know is that male versus female sex hormones have differentiating effects on the brain and behavior that comes out of it. It wouldn’t be too hard to come to the conclusion that men and women value different things.

Additionally, a study on fathers (h/t trp).

> The birth of a child leaves its mark on the brain. Most investigations of these changes have focused on mothers, but scientists have recently begun looking more closely at fathers. Neural circuits that support parental behaviors appear > more robust in moms a few weeks after the baby is born, whereas in dads the growth can take several months.

> A study in Social Neuroscience analyzed 16 dads several weeks after their baby's birth and again a few months later. At each check, the researchers administered a multiple-choice test to check for signs of depression and used MRI to image the brain. Compared with the earlier scans, MRI at three to four months postpartum showed growth in the hypothalamus, amygdala and other regions that regulate emotion, motivation and decision making. Furthermore, dads with more growth in these brain areas were less likely to show depressive symptoms, says first author Pilyoung Kim, who directs the Family and Child Neuroscience Lab at the University of Denver.
> A 2014 behavioral study of expectant fathers showed that midpregnancy ultrasound imaging was a "magic moment" in the dads' emerging connection with their baby. Yet the emotional bond was different than it is in expectant moms. Instead of thinking about cuddling or feeding the baby, dads-to-be focused on the future: they imagined saving money for a college fund or walking down the aisle at their daughter's wedding.

Babies change fathers on a physiological level to become more relationship oriented. Also,

Both parent changes versus sex specific changes. Very interesting stuff.

A wife's plea to Christian men about their sexual sinning

September 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was sent this link by a reader.

The first part is a background on their ministry, but the second part is an amusing monologue which fails to recognize the situation.

> I have fought to understand the struggle men face. I have fought to have compassion. I have encouraged wives to extend forgiveness, to willingly and joyfully give themselves to their husbands. But you know what? I just don't know how I can keep doing it. Not when so many husbands are deceptively defiling the marriage bed. Not when so many young, single men are recklessly defiling the future marriage bed. Not when so many men seem just plain unwilling to change.
> Is it really that difficult? You would almost think that this one sin is beyond the power of the Holy Spirit.
> Men, you are supposed to be modeling holiness before the world (Titus 2:6-8). You are supposed to be cherishing your wives as Christ cherishes his church (Ephesians 5:25). You are supposed to be abstaining from all sexual immorality (1 Thessalonians 4:3). You are supposed to be fleeing youthful passions (2 Timothy 2:22). Why are so many of you failing at these basic tasks? Is it really that difficult? You would almost think that this one sin is beyond the power of the Holy Spirit.
> You who keep choosing to sin, you who keep visiting those websites, you who have secret lives you keep hidden from your friends and your wives: Why won't you stop? You know that God loves to give victory over every sin. You know that God calls you to pursue sanctification. You know that the Holy Spirit equips you to succeed. God has given you everything you need in the gospel. So why do you keep failing? The only conclusion I can come to is that you are so consumed with self-gratification that you are not willing to fight, and I mean really willing to fight, this sin. If it's not that you can't, it must be that you won't.
> I plead with you. I plead with you on behalf of your wives, on behalf of your future wives, on behalf of Christian women everywhere: Stop. Just stop.
> Stop believing that this is a special sin that women just can't understand—we do understand sin. This isn't a special sin, it is just sin: God-belittling, Christ-mocking, Spirit-despising sin. Stop pretending like there are no future consequences to your actions. Stop putting your selfish desires first. Stop engaging in activities that bring shame on the gospel. Stop doing things that leave us picking up the pieces of your devastated wife. Stop indulging in your sin, and start thinking and acting like a God-honoring, Christ-praising, Spirit-glorifying > man. For the love of God and his church, stop.

Just in case the blog owner over there reads it I should mention that I've written on the topic of male sexuality before on multiple occasions. To be even more honest, I'm quite surprised the author's husband hasn't given her the run down on male sexuality.

- Discussing sex and virginity with a potential spouse is important
- The FYI on male sexuality
- Male and female sexual desire is not sinful
- Sexuality and the transition from single to married

In reality, I can only shake my head and give a half hearted laugh at the failure of women to actually understand and ignore the two big fat elephants in the room in marriage. What I really want to say is "LOLOLOL" because the answer is always staring you right in the face in the Bible.

Essentially, women are not taught that sex FEELS like a need most of the time for most men. This is how God created men. It's a gnawing hunger that is low level most of the time, but it can spike up to "OMG I feel like I'm going to die if I don't get something to eat" type of hunger at times.

I feel like I shouldn't have to explain because it's straight out of the Bible. When wives deny their men sex they will start getting tempted to go to it from other places.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband should fulfill his marital duty to his wife, and likewise the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body but yields it to her husband. In the same way, the husband does not have authority over his own body but yields it to his wife. 5 Do not deprive each other except perhaps by mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

Remember the survey I referenced in Half of women marry the best sex of their lives? Well, if you don't here's the scary thing:

> According to a recent study by iVillage, less than half of wedded women married the person who was the best sex of their lives (52 percent say that was an ex.) In fact, 66 percent would rather read a book, watch a movie or take a nap than sleep with a spouse.

2/3 of wives would rather read a book, watch a movie, or take a nap than have sex with their husbands. Yep, that's quite a large percentage. Ultimately, we don't know if it's more. Read a book, watch a movie, or nap are mundane things. What about things women actually find "fun" like hanging out and talking with their girl friends? Would that be 80-90% of the time than spending time with their husbands and having sex?

How many wives are overweight or obese? As I wrote about again already about 68% of American adults are overweight or obese. Obviously, you should see where I am going with this.

Wives need to be told, even at the expense of their feelings, that they need to stay physically attractive for their husbands and they need to have sex with him. Otherwise, it increases the temptation for him to look to outside sources to sate his sexual drive such as pornography and adultery.

1. Husband has strong sex drive.
2. Husband wants to have sex with his wife.
3. Husband gets turned down by wife from sex. <— sinful by disobedience of 1 Cor 7
4. Husband still has strong sex drive and is now tempted to look elsewhere. Husband should turn to God.
5. Husband gives into temptation when he strays to pornography or adultery. <— sinful by turning sexually to other places other than the wife

The point I am making with this post is if the wife had sex with her husband in 3 then 4 and 5 never happen. This is the whole point of the 1 Corinthians 7 passage: further sexual temptation doesn't happen at all. Let me also note that the positions are reversed sometimes: the wife has a stronger sexual drive than her husband. Husbands should not turn down their wives in this case either via 1 Cor 7.

Now, I am willing to admit that some Christian husbands are actually addicted to other things other than their wives such as porn. They need to get help. They are the few in most cases. This also doesn't absolve Christian husbands of responsibility not to view porn or commit adultery. However, I would bet that if the vast majority of Christian husbands had an attractive wife who wanted to have sex with them then the vast majority if not all of these extra dalliances would go away.

It goes without saying that husbands should likewise work to become physically attractive themselves and strong, confident heads in marriage.

You want to solve the dilemma with Christian husbands and porn and adultery and other dalliances? First, simply accept the reality of the male sex drive that God created, and acknowledge what the Scriptures say in 1 Corinthians 7 is the solution to it: have sex with each other so that you won't be tempted to other things! Then start telling wives to actually have sex with their husbands, and have a frank conversation about attractiveness and physical appearance.

Sadly, this post will most likely fall on deaf ears and be called "victim blaming" or whatever else goes for feminist rhetoric nowadays. A "oneness" problem is generally both spouses problem, not just one or the other.

Hopefully this is the last post on sexual things I'll do for a while. I'm tired of beating a dead horse. Back to the regularly scheduled programming tomorrow.

Wolves in sheep's clothing

ChildofRa writes on a wife's plea to Christian men about their sexual sinning.

I'm going to address this separately as it's non-sequitur. Women always like to write "what about men" or "men did this" when women are criticized. Really, this is the last time I'm going to say it but stay on topic. If you have a separate issue that you want me to address send it to my e-mail on the about page or post the topic in the comments section there.

> I had a friend, she kept herself physically fit and attractive and had no issues in the bedroom but that didnt stop her christian husband from cheating on her.

First, let me note the framing of the question in the context of the other post.

1. The post was about a certain topic namely that wife's issue with men's sexual sinning.
2. Throughout that post I debunk the fact that they're asking the wrong question, and advising the wrong thing Biblically the entire time. Scripture tells wives and husbands to have sex in order to minimize sexual temptation.
3. When women disagree or find an exception they inevitably attempt to paint women in a flawless light. They are the victim of the situation.
4. Hence, "[my friend did what you said — stayed physically attractive and didn't deny sex — but her husband cheated on her!]"
5. This is almost invariably the narrative that women use. Women can't admit fault or be faulted for anything. They need to preserve their image and status.
6. Men need to be exposed to this to see this fallacy of man blaming and women self victimization.
7. This leads to another interesting conclusion: Modern women — even Christian women — seem to have bigger pride issues than men because they can't admit fault.

No one should try to paint themselves as blameless. The only blameless ones are when horrible things happen to children who are abused or if you're living in a worn torn country and get raped or murdered. These people had NO CHOICE.

If you have some semblance of choice then you almost invariably are responsible for a situation in some manner or another. Take responsibility for your choices.

Wolves in sheep's clothing

Moving away from that, the big issue that attractive Christian women have to look for is players. There are players disguised as Christian husbands. Players know how women work, and know how to push buttons to make themselves look attractive to women.

Although most Christian men are generally unattractive nowadays, the "Christian attractive men" are split between wolf in sheeps clothing players and actual Christian men. Indeed, some Christian women don't even go that far: they actually missionary date and marry instead of marrying a Christian man.

This is not unlike attractive women that come to the Church that don't disclose their past that rode the "cock carousel." A Christian man wifes her up thinking it's great he got married to an attractive Christian woman and then she divorces him down the road because she was unhappy. Or maybe even worse yet he gets stuck in a sexless marriage which feels like hell.

This is the importance of vetting your spouse thoroughly. Ask them questions about their past and their choices. Look at their body language to see if they are uncomfortable and shift in answering questions. People do lie so it's important to look at things in the context of their words versus what their actions are and what they portray in an online profile such as facebook. Ask the hard questions about sexuality and virginity.

> John 14:15 "If you love me, you will keep my commandments."
> John 15:10 "If you keep my commandments, you will abide in my love, just as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love."

Claiming you are a Christian does not make you a Christian. Christians are defined by their obedience to Christ.

In general, there are all sorts of yellow and red flags that you can pick up. When I vet Christian women I look for signs of feminist infiltration into their thinking. Blaming men for things. Presenting themselves as the victim. Looking for respect rather than love. Preference for education and careerism over marriage and family. A strong independent attitude. And many other things. Although such a Christian woman may be attractive, she has not excised things of the world from her attitude and thus I can avoid her as a risky encounter when pursuing marriage.

As a man who has come into his own by being masculine and bold there has been much more interest from women. I am extremely selective and vet thorough not solely because I have the opportunity to do so, but because it is important to look at the character of the women who are interested.

Unattractive people tend to have more problems getting married than attractive people. However, the fact that attractive people get married doesn't make it successful. They may have gotten married to ill advised attractive people.

ChildofRa's friend in all likelihood married someone ill advised likely because she didn't vet him thoroughly for being a player. Likewise, we would say that a man who married a reformed cock carousel rider or single mother made an ill advised judgment to marry. You made a poor choice, and the person didn't change their ways and then played you for a fool.

No one blames the Nigerian prince because they know the prince is a scammer by nature. They blame you for giving your money to the so-called Nigerian prince. Then they laugh at your stupidity for not asking or listening to wise counsel and checking more thoroughly.

Sometimes the fault is up front. You made a commitment to a poor choice. Now you are reaping the consequences of that poor decision. Take responsibility for it.

Barking up the wrong tree

September 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Yesterday I commented on wolves in sheep's clothing. This led into some very unamusing commentary which eventually devolved into this unmasking feminism post supposedly claiming how nutty the manosphere has gotten.

> "Child of Ra" mentioned just a one sentence comment about a friend who kept herself in good shape, was pleasing in the bedroom, but still her husband cheated. Even with such little detail, it sounds like she did everything the red pill women would advise, but still he cheated. Deep Strength said ultimately it is the friend's fault because she didn't vet her husband well enough and suss out that he was a "player". She made a poor commitment choice and now has to take responsibility for it. Basically, suck it up!

If there was anymore information we could go on there may have been more direct advice. But in the absence of that…

Yep, suck it up. Like I said, men and women need to both suck it up that they make poor decisions. I said the same thing about men who marry post-wall single mothers. They're cruising for a bruising. Both women and men can and do marry attractive people who have crap for character. Like I said, this is the strong importance of vetting which I've written on at least 5 different times. Some men and women have crappy character. Vet for it. If you don't know how read the blog posts and ask again.

Ah, yes, but it's much too juicy to ignore I said those things too.

> This is a question I have wondered too as I have seen various comment threads, but I knew if I asked it I would get treated in the same manner as Ra. When we date, we market ourselves, we do put on our best front. Once commitment is secured both men and women let themselves go or are so incredibly comfortable knowing this person "vowed" to stay with them forever, they then become their true selves. In this case maybe its the "player" self. Maybe he thinks, "hey she promised she would never leave me, what do I have to lose". As romantic as vows are, they can also breed complacency of ones responsibilities to maintain a solid, thriving marriage. I no doubt imagine a lot of women think they can just get fat and he won't leave. She thinks, "after all he did make a vow and if tries to leave me because of my weight well then I'll just take him for all he is worth"! The manosphere should know this well. How women will put on that mask, cause she is getting to 30, wants babies and her time is running out. She puts on a good show for a man, then once she has her babies, the nagging, bitch comes out. How is a man suppose to know with all the vetting in the world that this would happen?

I recommend a timeline of about 6-12 months for dating and 3-6 months for engagement.

Most Churches you will go to recommend longer. Unless you aren't looking there's no way you go 9-18+ months with someone with them faking the entire time.

Let me recommend that you don't put on a front for who you are. Putting on a front is false. It's a lie. This is the importance of identity in Christ. You don't have to put on a front for people. Of course, that's just common sense to me, but maybe it's not to other people.

And yet, we are not yet to the juiciest part of all. Who doesn't like juicy?

> Ra then asks this:
> ChildofRa
> September 5, 2015 at 3:50 pm
> > What if the wife is the one begging for sex?

And this is where the men lose it. Again, another innocent question, but the manosphere is so convinced this can NEVER happen, she gets a response like this:

> KingProphetPriest
> September 5, 2015 at 6:02 pm
> > What if the wife is the one begging for sex?
> > You know, I started typing up an answer to this but then realized that ChildofRa's responses are just distractions, not real questions. She hasn't addressed the position that DS put out there, just more hamstering.
> > Sorry, not going to waste my time.

To ask such a question is just so silly, in that it can never happen, clearly its just a distraction and not even worth a response. No doubt any woman who claims to be going through that will be called a liar. Men want sex ALL the time!!! That is the message drilled into everyone, even the enlightened red pillers who are suppose to be awoken to truth.

Then this:

> fuzziewuzziebear
> September 5, 2015 at 7:20 pm
> > That ChildofRa would seek to divert the argument on this point is telling. That 66% of women would rather read a book thatn have sex is not generally accepted by men. I guess if I were a woman, I wouldn't want it out that two thirds of them are sexually numb. It does make the product a tough sell.

So, by Ra bringing up the question "what if the wife is the one begging for sex", they think this is all some grand scheme to distract men from the real issue at > hand–frigid wives–because of course frigid men never, ever exist.

> To date, the thread ends with Ra saying:
> > ChildofRa
> > September 5, 2015 at 8:07 pm
> > > Its not a distraction, i am asking a serious question. What if the female is the one begging for sex?
> > > I'm sorry if you think that I am trying to distract you but everything that I ask or say about marriage and sex in marriage comes from watching documentaries or from what my friends who are married tell me. I am not married nor have I engaged in any sexual activity so I am sooo freaking sorry that I am asking questions which you refused to want to answer for whatever reason or assume because I am female that I am trying to distract you poor men from the real teuth and sinful behavior of women. I am soo fucking sorry
> Ra Ra! Chid of Ra! Good for You! In key with this post, where I mention men really don't want the submissive, young virgin woman eager to learn, this is a perfect example. Think of it–Ra–24 year old virgin, a beautiful rarity in this culture, and something the men online all pine for and this is how she gets treated.

Embarrassing.

This is the part that makes me laugh the most. Women have very poor reading comprehension when they're emotional. I specifically said in the top part of my post which apparently was glossed over entirely:

> "ChildofRa writes on a wife's plea to Christian men about their sexual sinning.
> I'm going to address this separately as it's non-sequitur. Women always like to write "what about men" or "men did this" when women are criticized. Really, this is the last time I'm going to say it but stay on topic. If you have a separate issue that you want me to address send it to my e-mail on the about page or post the topic in the comments section there."

Ouch.

- This topic is about wolves in sheep's clothing. What it looks like. How to identify them. How to vet against it.
- This topic is NOT about what if a wife (or man for that matter) is begging for sex. Read what I wrote and post it where I said to if you want me to bring it up for discussion.

How hard is it to stay on topic? The men did. The women went berserk.

I’m not sure who wrote that unmasking feminism post, but this non-sequitur “criticism” is just another giant steaming pile of emotional crap derailed by a failure to read what was actually written. It’s embarrassing. It will be interesting to see if my male commenters and I get an apology for that post.

However, as I did tell ChildofRa in another post it would be best if she has am older Christian woman as a mentor who she can discuss various of these topics with if she wants to know more. Additionally, if any are willing to answer the question over there then go for it as that is a topic post for it. Just ignore the awful post content.

Edit: my apology for the impatient and unkindness in this post: My apologies

My apologies

September 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As with the “controversy” in the past two posts I would like to extend my apologies for all those involved. Whether my arguments — right or wrong — doesn’t matter if I acted outside the Spirit. I need to practice what I preach that there is almost never one sided fault in any controversial issue. Therefore, I take responsibility for my actions.

I acted impatient and unkind in my response. Instead of sticking to the facts I let my emotions get out of hand and looked for an argument instead. Hence, I apologize to both ChildofRa and the author over at unmasking feminism for my impatient and unkind behavior.

Regarding all of my posts: I still affirm that if you want specific topics addressed you should post on my contact page or in the comments section there. I have never failed to respond by e-mail or posting about it male or female. Please, keep on topic. If you can’t keep on topic I will remove you. This goes for people claiming others are trolls as well.

Thanks.

Thoughts on a clear vision for authentic manhood

September 7, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post comes from Authentic Manhood blog. I've read through a bunch of their blog posts, and they seem good so far. I can't really tell as most of their material is in products though.

Here is the relevant part I want to discuss though:

> My perception of what it meant to be a Christian man had been skewed by the way Jesus was typically presented in my church experience. David Murrow says in his book Why Men Hate Going To Church, "our very definition of what it means to be a 'good Christian' skews female." He illustrates and supports this position with a quiz. Here it is:
> Examine these two sets of values and choose the set that you think characterizes the values of Jesus Christ and His true disciples:
> - Set "A"
> - Competence
> - Power
> - Accomplishment
> - Efficiency
> - Skills
> - Proving Oneself
> - Goal Orientation
> - Competition
> - Results
> - Self-Sufficiency
> - Success
> - Achievement
> - Set "B"
> - Relationships
> - Communication
> - Love
> - Sharing
> - Personal Expression
> - Support
> - Community
> - Helping
> - Feelings
> - Loving Cooperation
> - Relating

> • Beauty
> Murrow says that he has administered this quiz to thousands of people: men, women, Christians, and non-Christians. More than 90% of the time, people choose Set “B” as the best representation of Jesus Christ and His values.
> Then, he reveals the origin of the two lists. These two value sets were plucked from the pages of the best-selling book, Men are from Mars, Women Are From Venus by Dr. John Gray. In Chapter 1 he identifies Set “A” as the values of Mars, whereas Set “B” describes the values of Venus. In other words, Set “A” represents the values common among men while Set “B” represents the values common among women.
> Most of the people who took this little quiz think of Christ as having the values that come naturally to a woman! Granted, the values listed in Set “B” are some of the values that represented Jesus. The results of this quiz illustrate how confused today’s culture is about the real Jesus and the kind of masculinity he modeled. Most people’s vision of biblical manhood is blurred.
> To maintain a clear vision of Authentic Manhood, it takes more than a brief encounter to discover what Jesus is really like. He is our model for manhood, and that demands our full attention. A close look at the life of Jesus reveals that real men reject passivity, accept responsibility, lead courageously, and invest eternally. They look good written in a journal, but integrating them into your life requires disciple, vulnerability, trust, and accountability over time.

Obviously, this is another clear piece of evidence that the Church has become increasingly feminized which I talked about in the 3 big elephants in the room. Most Christian men — and women for that matter — do not understand that they are living in a Christian environment that is feminized. However, the problem doesn’t just stop there. Since the church is feminized that implicitly — or sometimes explicitly — makes people think that feminine values are good and masculine values are bad. This is where the true heresies start coming out that women are good and men are bad. In some particular circles this has been warped even further to women are innately good and men are innately bad.

Unfortunately, the flaw I see from the site that otherwise has good material is that it still ignores discussing attraction in the context of manhood and marriage. But at least it seems some people recognize part(s) of the problem and are willing to work to correct the issue even if it is paid material. Alternatively, by becoming masculine you become attractive, so it is addressed somewhat peripherally.

Christian men should embrace their male traits: Competence, Power, Accomplishment, Efficiency, Skills, Proving Oneself, Goal Orientation, Competition, Results, Self-Sufficiency, Success, and Achievement. However, keep in mind that they need to be done in the context of grace and the gospel.

Vetting, risk of divorce, and the myth of change

September 9, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting phenomena I am repeatedly encountering is the fact that some women believe that people change so much over marriage that it's impossible to predict what happens. Let me put this myth to rest.

When I talked extensively about vetting last time there was a large amount of comments on what I look for in evaluating a potential wife part 2. Specifically, this spawned understanding statistical models and using them to vet correctly.

Now, let's move onto the comments and analyze them.

First, lgrobins and I went back and forth in the comments about how much "vetting" helps starting from here. This quote is near the end:

> What women values can change through time as well. We are fickle creatures. Liberal one decade, conservative the next, back to liberal again, as it suits our needs for what we want at any given time.
> Yes, there can be many good indicators and vetting is a reasonable thing to do, but my point is it still doesn't necessarily guarantee anything

I agree it doesn't guarantee anything, but I do think it raises the chances from 50/50 to well above 90%. Maybe 95-98% if done correctly.

> I bring up the case again of Josh Duggar. I am sure Anna thought he was a sure thing. I mean how can you wrong with a man from that family, yet still.

"Family" does mean a decent amount, but it is simply one indicator in a very long list of things.

I recommend vetting for past sexual history and past indiscretions. Of course, he could have lied about it, but usually people lying under pressure like that exhibit some sort of cracking under pressure unless they are truly psychopathic.

This is why I have discussed with my girl my past of pornography usage and how far I went with some women. Although it may be a hard thing to do, to fully trust someone you have to be open to them knowing if they want even if it is difficult to talk about.

Most men and women for that matter don't get to the mature stage of Christianity to where they can talk about their past and how they were changed. It's not an embarrassment to have viewed pornography and had God change your life. It's a blessing. It shows how the Spirit has worked in your life.

Unfortunately, those who are unwilling to admit the extent to which God has > changed their lives are living a lie of sorts. This hidden life can give rise to the things Josh Duggar did. As Eph 5 says.. expose the things that are hidden to the light If you don't then it's likely someone else eventually will.

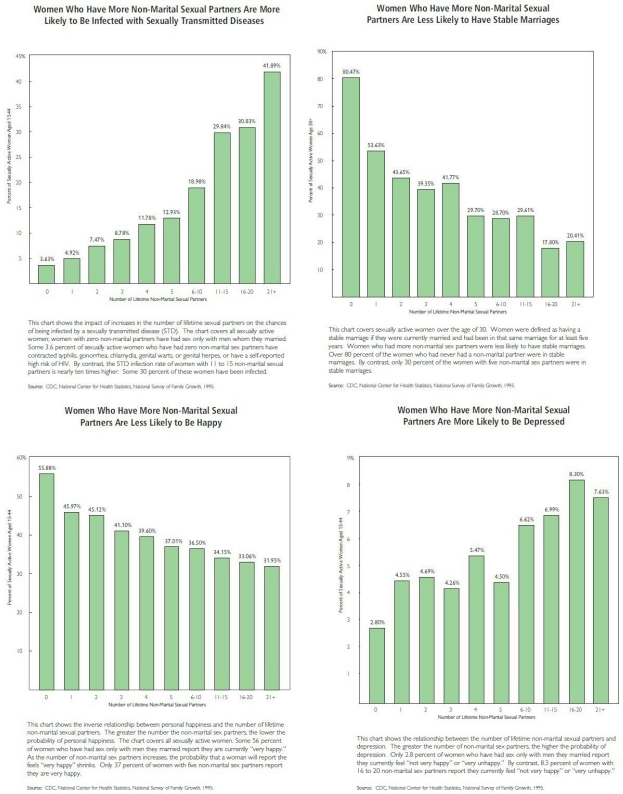
Then TPC chimes in to respond to my comment:



> Anna Duggar is married. Deep Strength is not, nor even engaged based on his admittedly oblique references to his relationship status. Vetting is not a "99%" near-guarantee of anything. Humans gonna human. I cannot take seriously any arguments regarding spouse-vetting from unmarried men who aren't priests or pastors.
> Anna Duggar made the kind of choice a lot of women have made historically, which is to pick what they thought they could live with from a very short list of their real marriage options. As an actual married woman, I know that my persepective on female choices in marriage will be disregarded by the never-married men claiming to have better information in the abstract, as are the perspectives of other married women. But the reality is that most women have few choices for marriage and "vetting" in the form of long talks about abstract stuff doesn't really give a bigger or better pool. Most men have few choices for marriage as well, but there is extensive discussion of that in many other places.
> Basically, the manosphere complains at length about women putting on a front before marriage. Well, men do that too. This brings us back to the women asking for sex and being rejected. Living in a porn-saturated society, men are permitted a level of incontinence that would have been considered excessive among dissolute aristocrats in the past. And the manosphere, even the Christian part, is ready with a bunch of excuses about how none of it is really porn and anyway it's not like it's cheating or something.
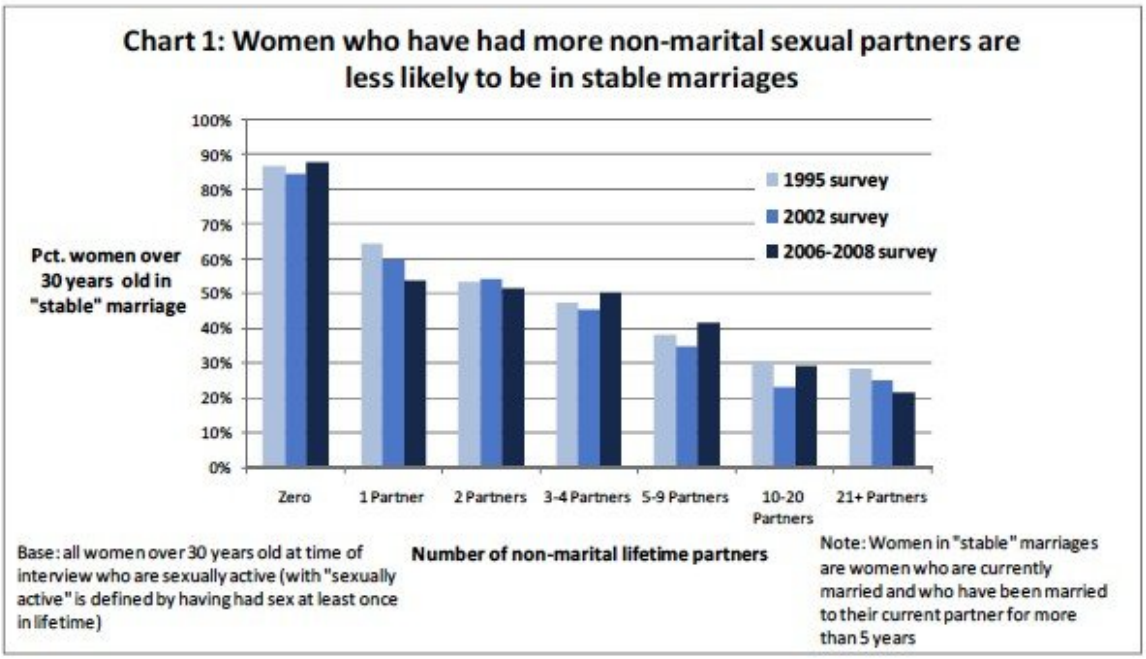
> No, it just cripples a man's ability to be a continent man and makes him a slave to passions his wife cannot possibly fulfill even if she wants to try. The real elephant in the room is massive, rampant porn exposure and use, not a few fat Christian women hoping for marriage despite being fat.

I'm going to ignore how disjointed this particular comment is. For example, I specifically said that you can vet to raise the percentage well above 90% to about 95-98% if performed correctly. Yet, TPC pulls out a 99% from nowhere. This alone is enough to make me not take the comment seriously. Only pastors and priests can spouse vet. Yet TPC gives her opinion which by her own statement makes her opinions here worthless. I'll chalk it up to a team women rant.

However, I'm going to address these comments in regard to statistical modeling which is indeed extremely accurate in predicting divorce rates. I stand by the statements that I made.

Statistical probabilities of divorce

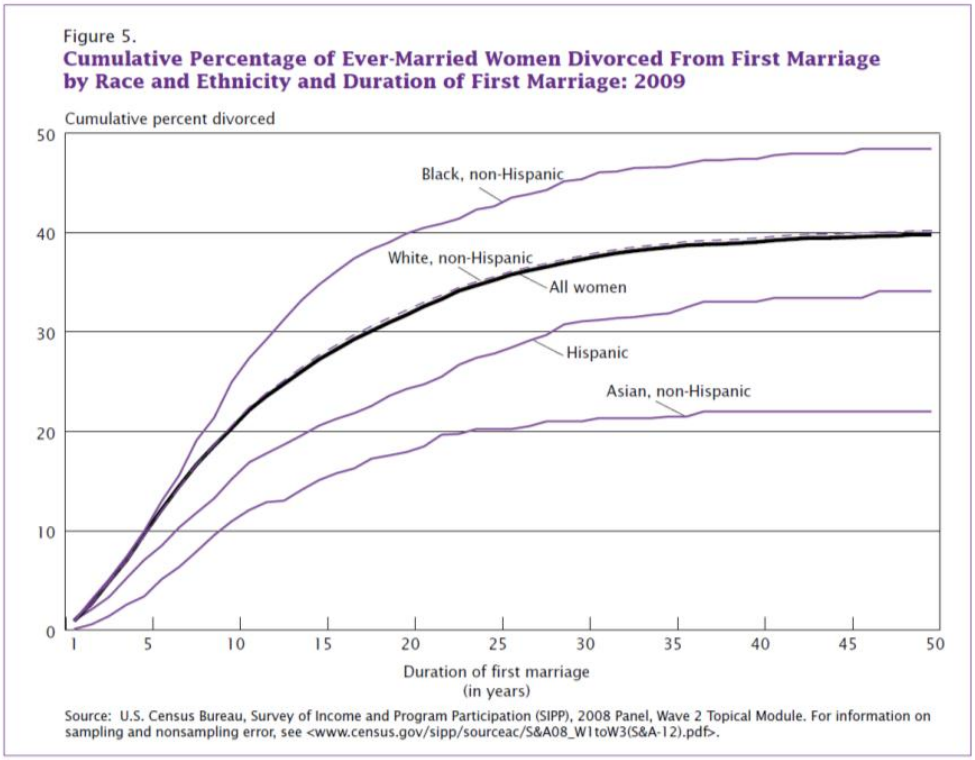


Let’s look at one example we are all familiar with: virginity.

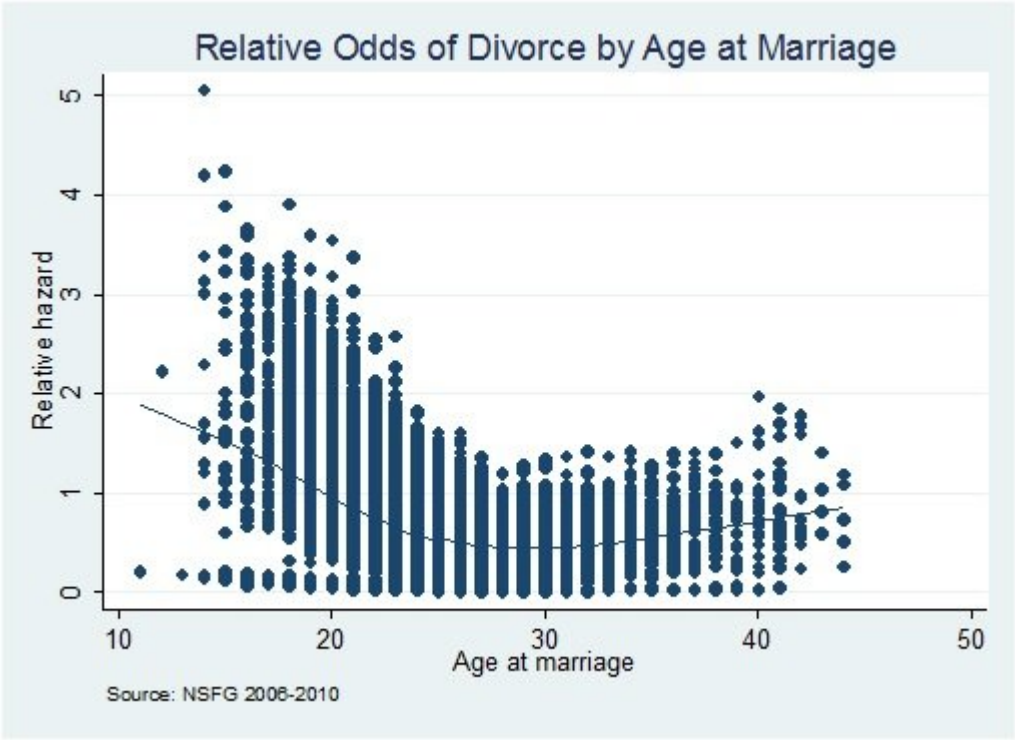
Sampling virginity across a wide spectrum of the population including the Teachman study on Social Pathologist gives us very important information about behavior in marriage based on the virginity of the wife. In particular, we see correlative trends on:

- Virgins are significantly less likely to be infected by STDs
- Virgins are significantly less likely to divorce and are more likely to have stable marriages.
- Virgins are more likely to be happy in their marriages.
- Virgins are less likely to be depressed.

Now, these are not all of the stats you can pull out on virgins. However, the are simply some. And, as the next chart indicates, the findings for the population regarding virginity and stable marriages are replicated across various studies.



This alone shows the female virginity is important for marriages. God knew what He was talking about in Deuteronomy 22.



Other indicators based on statistical modeling

Aside from virginity, are other indicators of stable marriages based on statistical modeling. I'm not going to pull out charts for all of these, but you can check out some of the others for yourself through google. For example, stable marriages are more likely to be formed across:

- Ethnicity: Asian > hispanic > white > black

- Age: Reverse bell curve around 25-30 years old

- Religion: Catholics > Active Protestants > Non practicing > Non-practicing Protestants > Other
- Importance of religion: active > non-practicing

Those committed to their faith or no faith are stronger in marriages than those who are lukewarm.

- College education: Graduate > College educated > Part college > HS diploma > Part High School

Education is a predictor of stable marriages. Cane and the commenters discussed potential reasons why.

- Family background: Two parents > one parent > no parents

A father and a mother provide the most stable marriage, which is also a predictor of divorce. Single mothers being a big offender.

- Children out of wedlock: Children in wedlock > children within first 9 months of marriage > children out of wedlock

Yes, shotgun marriages are worse than wedlock marriages but better than having children out of wedlock then getting married.

All of the relative risk ratios for the following are discussed in Free Northerner's post on Sexonomics: odds of divorce. I took out the ones already discussed.

- Age of first sexual experience: 18 > 17-18 > 15-16 > 13-14 > 12
- Cohabitation: No cohabitation > cohabitation
- Income: husband earns more > equal income > wife earns more
- Income total: Middle > higher > lowest (speculation: more cash and prizes for divorcing the highest income earners)

Some other indicators from divorce probability.

- Prior marriage: no prior marriage is better than a prior marriage
- Employment status: employed > part time > not employed
- Interracial marriages: Some have more likelyhood of staying together (e.g. White man, black woman) and some have less likelihood (e.g. black man, white woman, asian man, white woman, etc.).
- Country: US is pretty divorce happy compared to many other countries. For example, 50% of all Catholic annulments worldwide are in the US.
- Ability to resolve conflict: Never argue > rarely argue > regularly argue > heated arguments
- Alcohol use: None > some > regularly
- Drug use: None > some > regularly
- Mental illness: None > having one (depression, schizophrenia, BPD, etc.)
- Age difference: reverse bell curve centered with least risk of men being 0-2 years older.
- Forced premarital sex: None > forced sex (e.g. rape)
- Length of marriage: the longer your marriage lasts the less risk of divorce

Social attitudes:

- Divorce is usually the best solution when a couple can't seem to work out their marriage problems
- A young couple should not live together unless they are married
- It is okay for an unmarried female to have a child
- It is important for a man to spend a lot of time with his famil than to be successful at his career

All of these are different indicators of increase probability for separation or divorce.

Calculating the odds

There are some calculators aside from Free Northerner's post. FN mentions divorce probability. Just 4 Guys had one up a while ago.

J4G calculates the relative risk ratio of separation at 10 years. If the woman is:

- Over 25
- Has a 4 year degree
- Catholic
- Had an intact 2 parent family

- Lost her virginity to you in marriage
- Was not a single mother
- Does not believe divorce is an option
- Does not believe in cohabitation
- Does not believe that it's okay for an unmarried woman to have a child out of wedlock
- Believes family time is more important than career advancement

Then the relative risk of separation at 10 years is 2%.

Obviously, J4G does not take into account many of the other myriad of risk factors above including ethnicity, importance of religion, income, income total, employment status, interracial marriages, country, conflict solving, alcohol use, drug use, mental illness, age difference, forced premarital sex, and some of the other factors.

It is likely that the relative risk can be reduced even further if other factors are applied.

Conclusions

I stand by my statements that vetting will reduce the risk of divorce from 50/50 to at least 90% if not 95-98%. Perhaps even 99%+ like TPC denies if you can factor in all of the ones that J4G and DP missed including attitudes about the importance of God and family in relation to life. In fact, virginity does most of the leg work reducing the risk of divorce already up to 80-85% depending on the study. This is why chastity is so important and why it made my list.

One of the quotes I've heard from Andy Stanley on why statistics matter is excellent (although, unfortunately, he believes heretical "submit to one another in Christ" for marriages). Paraphrased:

> It is foolish to ignore statistics. […] You are unique. God created you to be unique. But your experiences are not unique.

Experiences are not unique. We are all humans and engage in relationships. This gives statistics power as exemplary warning signs that can be used to analyze what a stable marriage looks like compared to an unstable one based on current and past behavior. They are accurate predictors that those unmarried can use to look for a potential spouse including the direct vetting like I have talked about.

Obviously, people change during marriage. This doesn't mean that there is a sudden massive increase in divorce probability as people change and get older. I admit that you can't vet to 0% probability of divorce. Even in the list above in the last section there is a 2% chance that there will be separation at 10 years. Maybe you fell into the 2% risk of separation or divorce. You one of the 2 out of 100. That sucks. But that doesn't discount that 98/100 of the other men still have stable marriages. Women may be fickle, but certain types of women are not that fickle that they would end up divorcing in droves after strong vetting.

Therefore, it should be abundantly clear that vetting, especially statistically, does have a very strong impact on finding a quality prospect for marriage. Reduction in relative risk of divorce from about 50/50 to < 5% maybe even to < 1- 2% is a very strong indicator that it works. It is such a strong reduction such that most informed men would never take a 50/50 willingly but would take the a < 2-5% chance. See: Jesus' analogy of discipleship about counting the cost.

Now the question for my readers:

- Why do women think vetting doesn't have much of an impact when it clearly does?
- Assuming it's not malicious ("men shouldn't be choosy about women") then why do women think that women change in a marriage enough to make vetting irrelevant? Past behavior, current behavior, and attitudes are good proxies for future behavior.

The two that I would immediately think of are special snowflake syndrome and team women. In particular, special snowflake syndrome and team women don't like that their behavior can be generalized in predictable patterns by statistical analysis. However, even if those are true they might not be the only or main reason(s). Not all women are like that (NAWALT) not withstanding.

If you have any thoughts on that question I want to hear them. Also, commentary on the post is appreciated if you agree or disagree.

Doing your homework, studying, and the exam

September 21, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think the major reason women are having trouble understanding the vetting issues and why they are effective to a large extent is because they are taking an all or nothing mentality when the world is more fluid than that.

In general, I've used the analogy before about what Jesus talks about on the cost of discipleship in Luke 14.

> Luke 14:25 Now great crowds accompanied him, and he turned and said to them,
> 26 "If anyone comes to me and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be my disciple. 27 Whoever does not bear his own cross and come after me cannot be my disciple. 28 For which of you, desiring to build a tower, does not first sit down and count the cost, whether he has enough to complete it? 29 Otherwise, when he has laid a foundation and is not able to finish, all who see it begin to mock him, 30 saying, 'This man began to build and was not able to finish.' 31 Or what king, going out to encounter another king in war, will not sit down first and deliberate whether he is able with ten thousand to meet him who comes against him with twenty thousand? 32 And if not, while the other is yet a great way off, he sends a delegation and asks for terms of peace. 33 So therefore, any one of you who does not renounce all that he has cannot be my disciple.

Essentially, vetting is counting the cost of finding a wife. Searching for a wife of certain criteria is prognostic. The prognostic pros and cons are weighed against the other opportunity cost which is remaining single.

- Will this woman bring more value to my life than if I was single?
- Can I do more for Christ with or without this woman by my side as a wife?

The other analogy I would use is doing your homework, studying, and taking an exam.

No one would say you shouldn't do your homework before an exam. Most of the material that is given in homework is to eventually prepare you for the exam. Likewise, most people would not believe that doing homework is solely enough to prepare you for an exam. You should study and review the material in order to learn the information aside from homework to prepare for the examination. Both homework and studying help to prepare you for the rigors of the exam.

By this same analogy we can come to see three generally accurate conclusions:

1. Homework is akin to statistical vetting. Statistical vetting provides a clear framework for which to evaluate the potential framework and questions that the exam will likely have.

2. Studying is akin to vetting behavior and attitudes. Attitudes are critical for examining the heart of a person, and past and current behavior is a good predictor of future behavior. This is especially true of Christians: what they were like before and after their conversion. A changed heart shows in thoughts, feelings, attitudes, and actions. Hearthie also posted on the absence of malice which is good.
3. The Exam is akin to marriage. You don't really know what you're going to get, but at least you have prepared for it. You've done all you can do for it, and now you're ready to accept whatever it has to offer. If you didn't prepare for it then you're risking your life on the whim of feelings.

Ultimately, we all know that is God who gives the exam. You do all you can to find a worthy wife, but a prudent wife is from the Lord.

> Proverbs 19:14 House and wealth are an inheritance from fathers, But a prudent wife is from the LORD.
> Proverbs 18:22 He who finds a wife finds a good thing And obtains favor from the LORD.
> Proverbs 12:4 An excellent wife is the crown of her husband, But she who shames him is like rottenness in his bones.
> Proverbs 31:10 An excellent wife, who can find? For her worth is far above jewels.

In the end, it's really that simple. Christian men should be doing their homework and studying to prepare for exams, but ultimately we know that on some level you don't know what you're going to get when you take the exam. However, we do know that the homework is a really good prognosticator of what a stable marriage looks like, and studying for it will tend to select for good quality women.

The minefield of online dating

I've commented before on how I think online dating isn't that great of a strategy for men who aren't conventionally handsome. I want to discuss this more from both sex's perspective due to Donal's recent post on Clarity is Charity.

> A female reader of my blog reached out to me recently about an experience she had with online dating. She had met a Christian guy online, and they had gotten to talking about marriage back and forth for a while- a number of months. It had been going well and was getting serious- they were all set to meet, an important step since they lived far apart. Then the guy went silent. She didn't hear from him for a month. None of her responses were answered. There had been no warning that he was going silent either.
> Eventually she finally heard back from him. His message was very short, amounting to basically three lines:
> - I'm not sure my future includes marriage
> - Besides, I'm really busy right now and can't give you any time
> - But lets try and be friends anyways
> I suppose that it goes without saying that she was somewhat upset by this response. To put it mildly. Not only had he rejected her, and not only had he refused to give any real reason, he also pulled a LJBF on her. She contacted me to try and understand what was going on. She genuinely didn't understand. To be honest, neither did I.

From my experience it has been the case that women are hard to get invested initially, but once they are interested they tend to get too invested much too quickly even without having met the man yet.

For the most part long distance is inadvisable. However, long distance relationships initiated through an online dating medium are simply not good for women due to the above qualities. I would never recommend women going for a long distance online dating relationship due to these tendencies.

Given that most men aren't going to be reading these blogs, I think it's best to educate men and women on things to do and avoid in online dating if you are going to use online dating as a potential medium for a relationship.

1. I'd suggest that both men and women do whatever they want to filter a man for the first week or two on an online site. Chat. Discuss whatever topics.
2. Then meet up after the first few weeks for a casual date so you actually get a better idea of who the man is in person. "An initial date" off of online dating should not be taken super seriously. It's more of a get to know you.

3. You can then take such a thing to e-mail or other electronic communication, but continue to meet up for a few more dates to see if you want to get to know each other better. If you need ideas for dates see here. If close enough attend each other's churches or other social activities.
4. In general, it wold behoove you to continue reaching out to other women or men during this time in case said relationship doesn't work out. It takes two to tango after all, and it's a waste of time (and money if it's a paid site) to think that if you like the other person that you met that they will also like you. Your chances will increase if you can read body language though.
5. Only after it has become explicitly exclusive would I say that you should put aside other prospects in favor of getting to know someone deeper. However, as I already mentioned to some extent there is the false notion of a "boyfriend and girlfriend committed relationship" that you should be aware of that may cause issues.

This is in general a good outline to not taking dating seriously until it actually becomes serious. If you haven't gotten to know the person in real life to a decent-good extent then it's useless to think you know them that well. This is where I tend to see women and some men investing too much too soon. Then after the other person doesn't think they want a relationship someone is left confused, hurt, and a bit angry.

If, on the off chance you decide to ignore my warning about engaging in an online dating relationship, it's important to realize that you may get to know a person decently well through online communication. However, once you meet them you may find that their suitability isn't good for you. This is where it's important to guard yourself from becoming invested before you actually meet the other person a couple of times. What is "perfect" on paper may not be so perfect in real life.

The most successful long distance relationships I've seen (and I've seen some.. not a huge amount but some) are when:

- They were already an item before life, school, or a job kept them apart for a bit.
- People met each other when one was visiting a particular place and they kept in touch.
- They met through friends or family and not online dating. They were able to meet fairly early.

However, for every success story I've seen much more heartache. In two of the above cases they had already met each other before growing the relationship through Skype or online means. The other ones are from meeting through online communication but not online dating. Online dating is just a minefield.

If y'all have any experiences with online dating that they want to share or their thoughts on sequencing of events and the amount of investment that goes into it then feel free to comment.

Lens of bias

This is somewhat of a more educational post.

Like it or not, we all have our different biases. Obviously, knowledge of sociosexual dynamics and the implications for wider society — colloquially the "red pill" as discussed in the manosphere — gives rise to biased perspectives. That's not necessarily a bad thing, but it does need to be taken into account when looking at things from a wider perspective.

TPC's recent criticism of some of my posts here proves this point.

> Despite the generally hilarious claims of the manosphere's Christian rump to be interested in traditional sex roles and traditional understandings of marriage and authority, they ignore the obvious traditions when those traditions mean some woman somewhere might have actual social status and a respected position in her community beyond being a wife or a mother. They write endless screeds on marriage readiness as a sort of role playing game where it's just a matter of hitting some benchmarks with "the current girl" enough times and you'll get to the final boss fight (wedding ceremony) of Marriage: The Quest for a Purest of Pure Godly Submissive But Also Hardbodied Wife. Or they write about finding a wife as though it's about sifting through character traits like a basket of costumes, wearing only the ones "women care about the most".
> Left out of all this, of course, is going to the conservative Christian women who are most likely to be swimming in under 25, chaste, often Christian young women who want to marry and be housewives. That is middle aged women in their 30s and 40s. Older such women usually have all the kids out of the house and are mostly around career types or caring for their relatives' kids. Younger such women are swimming in very young kids of their own or working. But women in their 30s and 40s usually have at minimum stuff like the teachers and administrators of their childrens' activities and school (yes, even homeschooling women) or their own teenagers/young 20somethings heading into marriageable age range. Some also have the (usually young) women who help out around the house and/or younger female relatives who really like children enough to buck social norms and hang out with them a lot.

Now, the 3 posts criticized above are:

- My analogy for vetting using statistics and behavior for marriage as some sort of role playing game.
- My detailed timeline and how to guide for finding a wife as some quest for the ultimate "purest of the pure godly submissive and hardbodied wife"

- And Donal's PSALMs post on what women are attracted to as a hand basket of costumes.

The main point of the post is "If the Christian manosphere wants wives, they should be nicer to middle aged married women" which discussed in the second paragraph and further elaborated in subsequent paragraphs which I did not quote.

The unfortunate irony is that my detailed timeline post has exactly what she is recommending in it on where to meet eligible Christian women:

> Meeting women through my hobbies or churches worked a bit better, but it depends vastly on your particular area you are in. If you are in a small church or niche activity this simply won't work as well unless you volunteer in places where there are a lot of young Christian women. Still, that's very difficult to find nowadays. Note that your percentage will rise if you are involved with traditional communities so take this into account. Chad has seen some success with this but he had to make it happen.
> What worked the best for me was leveraging my social networks as much as possible. My particular strategies that bore the most fruit was if I made friends with married women or women in a relationship and asked them if they knew anyone single Christian women who were along some of my selection criteria. I did ask some single men and single women. However, single men are trying to find wives themselves generally so they don't want to give you a leg up, and if you are a man on a mission from the first phase generally they may be attracted sometimes and this backfires because they're not what you're looking for and they feel slighted. Asking family can work as well since they hopefully have friends who have children.

Yes, the results that bore the most fruit opportunities for me were asking married women, attached women, or single women friends (when we knew we weren't compatible) to leverage their social networks or to tell me if they knew of anyone. I found that married women with children were often the best women to ask. Family can obviously work as well, but they tend to have some biases themselves about who they think is right for you.

This brings me to the point that there is a tendency for people — mostly women — to feel that discussions on selection criteria, setting boundaries, and goal oriented thinking is basically objectification of women when that's clearly far from the case. It has been mentioned numerous times before but it bears repeating that typical masculine modes of communication tend to offensive to women:

> Thus, we have these two axioms:
> The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
> The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

Additionally, another part of this is due to what the authentic manhood list of traits of masculinity compared to the traits of women which are often very rarely discussed in the Church.

- Set “A”
- Competence
- Power
- Accomplishment
- Efficiency
- Skills
- Proving Oneself
- Goal Orientation
- Competition
- Results
- Self-Sufficiency
- Success
- Achievement

The negative characterization of masculine goal setting, accomplishment, and results that TPC criticizes is coming from a biased lens. Perhaps it has to do with the feminization of the Church, but I think based on all of the non-Christian friends and family I have that it is a lack of understanding the nature of masculinity in general.

Most women simply do not understand why men desire to be competent, to accomplish, to prove themselves, to have strong goal orientation, to compete against one another, to success and achieve. The nature of masculinity is instead negatively characterized as a “role playing game,” or ” Marriage: The Quest for a Purest of Pure Godly Submissive But Also Hardbodied Wife” or “sifting through character traits like a basket of costumes.” I’m being a bit facetious, but in reality that’s a disservice to both men and women.

You can twist my words to say anything you want, but does anyone who has read Donal’s and my blog think we have bad intentions as Christian men? If not, then why aren’t we assumed absent of malice as Hearthie says?

This is the question that both Christian men and women should be asking themselves.

Everyone is biased in some way

In regard to the previous section, the lens of bias does not solely encompass women and their perspective of my posts. Alternatively, I would say the vast majority of men have the opposite lens of bias at looking at femininity from the perspective of the masculine. Men tend to think that they have it the worst in the current culture in terms of trying to find a wife, but most non-extremely beautiful chaste Christian women do have a very difficult time as well.

Parents obviously have their own difficult time as well, but it’s different for mothers than it is for fathers. Most of what I say here tends to resonate with the fathers that comment because they see the same things in their sons growing up. Yet many of the mothers or otherwise married women tend to take a bunch of issues with some of the things that I post. I saw the same thing when I commented a couple times on some blogs for women where the advice I gave as too direct, rough, blunt, or otherwise what you would probably call masculine when the women need more support first and then gentle direction.

Bias is not necessarily a bad thing. It does allow vastly different perspectives which are not “better” or “worse” than others. It’s very easy to take one perspective and assume it is “right.” As a man I have insights on a particular situation, and my girlfriend has different insights. This allows me to see everything from a broader perspective and to make more informed decisions. I expect that to continue as we walk the path to marriage.

That brings me to my concluding remark which is keep in mind the audience of the particular blog before you criticize it for being [masculine traits] or [feminine traits].

Criticizing good goal-oriented advice for Christian men looking to get married as “Marriage: The Quest for a Purest of Pure Godly Submissive But Also Hardbodied Wife” is quite disingenuous. Especially when it already makes the same point that her post was attempting to make. It comes off as unable to understand the needs of men at best and evil Jezebel man-hating feminist at worst. I don’t doubt that most of the men and women who read this blog and discuss the topics have good intentions, but when you do stuff like that you come off as “that person.”

Leah and Rachel

September 28, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the recent guest posts on peaceful single girl brings up the topic of beauty and Leah and Rachel. In particular, it focuses on the difference in beauty of Leah and Rachel:

> Genesis 29:15 Then Laban said to Jacob, “Because you are my [d]relative, should you therefore serve me for nothing? Tell me, what shall your wages be?” 16 Now Laban had two daughters; the name of the older was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel. 17 And Leah’s eyes were weak, but Rachel was beautiful of form and [e]face. 18 Now Jacob loved Rachel, so he said, “I will serve you seven years for your younger daughter Rachel.”

Weak eyes — or tender eyes via the Hebrew — seemed like a weird analogy to me to describe someone who was not very attractive so I ended up doing some research on Jewish tradition which typically gives more insight into OT stories.

I ended up finding a bunch of different sources which describe the traditional Jewish interpretations of this passage:

- http://www.hebrew4christians.com/Scripture/Parashah/Summaries/Vayetzei/Leah_s_Eyes/leah_s_eyes.html
- http://jwa.org/encyclopedia/article/leah-midrash-and-aggadah
- http://www.torah.org/learning/women/class47.html

Here’s a quote from one of them about this passage.

> Why does the Torah choose to describe one of its great female figures as a woman with “tender” eyes? Why does the text bring out something seemingly negative, when Leah has so many attributes? The Torah at times criticizes character flaws, sins and the like, which are the result of free will, but in Leah’s case her “tender” eyes are a part of her physique, which is God-given and beyond her control as an individual. Why then would the Torah focus on something she has no power to change? What is the deeper meaning behind Leah’s tender eyes?
> Rashi tells us, “Leah’s eyes were tender, because she wept constantly in prayer that she not have to marry Esav. People used to say that since Rebecca had two sons and Laban two daughters, the elder daughter would be married to the elder son, while the younger daughter was destined to marry the younger son.” This is to say that Jacob was to marry Rachel, while his brother Esav was to wed Leah.
> Given that Leah had the option to accept or reject the match with Esav, why did she choose to cry over it, rather than simply refuse to marry him? The answer lies in the fact that Leah was a prophetess. She knew that, in reality, people’s mundane talk about her marriage to Esav reflected God’s will for her. She saw > prophetically that the two couples – Jacob and Rachel, with Esav and herself – were to establish the Jewish Nation, by spawning six tribes each. Leah was fully committed to this mission, while Esav was clearly not interested. Leah's grief reflected her fear that, because Esav was not up to the task, she might not have a share in building the Jewish people.

Essentially, it seems that in Jewish tradition both were beautiful, but just as Isaac took a wife from his relatives so too were Esau and Jacob going to take a wife from the relatives. Since Laban had the two daughters it seemed like the were the most likely choices. Hence, tender eyes was more of a description that she was distressed and crying about her prospects of marrying Esau.

The second article above is probably the most descriptive and talks about various exegesis on the passage from Rabbis.

> Leahs' Weak Eyes
> Gen. 29:17 states: "Leah had weak [rakot, literally, soft] eyes." The unclear meaning of the adjective "rakot" provided an opportunity for various Rabbinic expositions. According to one interpretation, this description was given in praise of Leah, since the Torah does not speak disparagingly of the righteous. Consequently, the word "rakot" is to be derived from arukot (long), since God gave Leah gifts that continued for all time: the High Priesthood, the throne and the anointing oil (Tanhuma, ed. Buber Vayeze 20).
> According to another exegesis, Leah's eyes were actually soft, from weeping. This is not understood as disparagement, but rather as praise. At the crossroads she would hear people say: "Rebekah has two sons, and Laban has two daughters. The older girl for the older boy, and the younger girl for the younger boy" (BT Bava Batra 123a). According to another exposition, this was not merely what people said, rather, Rebekah and Laban sent letters to each other, settling among themselves that Esau would marry Leah, while Jacob would take Rachel as a wife (Tanhuma, ed. Buber, Vayeze 12). Leah would ask: "What does the older one do?" They told her: "He is an evil person, a highway robber." She continued to ask: "What does the younger one do?" She was told that he was (Gen. 25:27) "a mild man, who stayed in camp." Leah would cry until her eyelashes dropped (BT Bava Batra loc. cit.). Accordingly, her weak eyes teach of Leah's good traits: that she did not want to be married to Esau. Another exposition has her weeping and saying: "May it be His will that my lot not fall in the portion of the wicked Esau," and her prayer was efficacious in saving her from this fate (Gen. Rabbah 70:16).

Now, Laban and Leah ultimately deceive Jacob on the wedding day giving him Leah instead or Rachel. Jacob is angry and works another 7 years for Rachel. This ultimately gives a bit of credence to Laban's words when Jacob asks about the deception: 26 But Laban said, "It is not [g]the practice in our place to [h]marry off the younger before the firstborn. 27 Complete the week of this one, and we will give you the other also for the service which you shall serve with me for another seven years."

Jacob didn't get angry at this logic which hints that it was indeed customary, and he consents to work for another 7 years. This gives credence to the above exegetical approach of Esau and Leah and Jacob and Rachel were expected. Jacob had already deceived Esau for the birthright and the blessing, so he's on the receiving end of the deception in this case also for what would have probably been Esau's.

If you want to read the rest of the links the second one goes much deeper into the situation with various traditional Jewish exegetical approaches which tie Leah's weeping to righteousness when it comes to her being unloved and God opening her womb.

> According to another exegetical approach, however, God did not give Leah children because of her unhappiness, but because of her merits. He saw that "Leah was unloved" because Esau's actions were hateful to her and she was willing to deceive Jacob in order to be married to him and thereby be saved from Esau; He accordingly opened her womb (BT Bava Batra loc. cit.).

The fact that Leah was unloved isn't enough for God to open up her womb since it was afforded by deception which is fraud. God's law against another particular fraud of virginity in marriage in Deuteronomy 22 is clear. Indeed, one approach is that God opened up her womb when she was unloved because she was earnestly seeking righteousness as she knew Esau was evil but ended up committing fraud. In other words, God does take into account the state of the heart even if things turn out poorly. That was one I found interesting even though there are a few more.

It's important in my opinion to look at the OT in terms of Jewish tradition because it's much more informed about the euphemisms and analogies that the Scriptures use. It's easy to say "weak/tender" eyes is ugly given it's compared against Rachel's beauty. Though that's probably incorrect because the Scripture don't mince words like that. All of the wording has a purpose.

All Better syndrome

September 29, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I came across an interesting article posted on facebook. Basically, it describes the rise of the soulmate in society.

> In his new book, Ansari provides both cathartically funny self-help for modern dating and an impressively researched guide to the swiftly changing ways we find love. Though the Internet plays a key role in the book, so, too, does that recent unicorn of romance: the soulmate.
> "In a very short period of time, the whole culture of finding love and a mate has radically changed," Ansari writes. "The tools we use on this search are different, but what has really changed is our desires and — and even more strikingly — the underlying goals of the search itself."
> Where once we married for the reasons central to "Downton Abbey" — retention of land, production of heirs and, maybe, friendship — now we seek someone with whom mutual love feels like destiny.
> According to one survey the book cites, couples in 1940 met at church as often as they did through neighbors or at a bar. (For that cohort, only friends and family were more-common ways to meet.)
> Yet by 2010, only 2 percent of couples reported meeting at church — the least-common relational starting ground.
> Churches' role in matchmaking may have declined for many reasons, but the likeliest seems our growing lack of interest in religious groups altogether.

The more disturbing trend than not meeting people at Church is through friends and family in my opinion. However, the decrease of the church involvement in life is typical in a secularized post-Christian society, so it's not surprising that this is the case.

Wealth, in particular, is thrown at problems rather than interacting with family, friends, or the Church to help you out. Wealth takes the place of reliance on God. There's a reason why Jesus said it is extremely difficult for the wealthy to enter the kingdom of heaven. Wealth tends to take the place of faith for the vast majority of people.

> Ansari and his co-author, sociologist Eric Klinenberg, root this change both in the cultural shifts after World War II and the nature of the Internet. "It doesn't simply help us find the best thing out there," they write. "It has helped to produce the idea there is a best thing and, if we search hard enough, we can find it."
> They make a persuasive case for how the Internet got us hooked on the search for the best. But they never really explain how we came to believe that the best relationships also provide the stuff of religion.
> In a TED talk they quote, psychotherapist Esther Perel says: "…[W]e > come to one person, and we basically are asking them to give us what once an entire village used to provide: Give me belonging, give me identity, give me continuity, but give me transcendence and mystery and awe all in one."

> We don't expect transcendence from our juicers, our ramen, our folding bikes. How did we come to see it as the mark of true love?
> Ansari and Klinenberg's explanation conflates romantic love with the search for a soulmate. But our spiritualization of love may have more to do with that drastic drop in relationships started at church.
> Use of "soulmate" increased right around the same time religious affiliation started to drop, according to Google Ngram data. The poet Samuel Coleridge reportedly first coined the term in 1822, but its use stayed very low for 160 years. Then in the late 1980s, "soul mate" started cropping up in "New York Magazine" personal ads.
> "Soulmate" quickly became mainstream in the 1990s.

The TED talk quote by the psychologist is particularly astute. That is what most people expect out of "Romance" to their own detriment. Expectations like that cannot simply be met in one person, so it stands to reason that fewer people are finding marriage because they expect this happiness from their soulmate and very few are finding it.

> At multiple points, Ansari admits that we're making great demands on love, which sets us up for heartbreak and disappointment. He even spends a chapter on the problems with too many choices. But each time he shrinks from acknowledging that we might be asking too much.
> "Modern Love" frames romance primarily in selfish terms — and no wonder; almost every tool for seeking love encourages us to do. But if love and romance are all about me, then they also determine my value.
> Great love, great value. Little love, small value. No wonder we seek the best possible lover. We need to think we deserve it!
> As a long-single woman, I've grappled with this value problem for years. Throughout my 20s and some of my 30s, I fell for men aspirationally. Though I never realized at the start of things, I was drawn more to what their esteem and attraction would do for my ego than to the men themselves. That made their rejection and disinterest all the more devastating.
> But recently, I've been studying long-term happy marriages — both those chronicled in the "New York Times'" wonderful "Making It Last" series and the unions of happily long-married relatives.
> What modern singles often consider prerequisites for marriage — good sex, financial security, intellectual stimulation — more often proves the result of long-wed couples' sustained and sacrificial investment in each other.

> My own parents recently celebrated their 38th anniversary together, brimming with a mutual delight of the kind that often dims after the wedding-day glow. They share many common interests, and even a birthday, but I know from years as their daughter how much self-sacrifice, humility and forgiveness went into the enviable bond they share.
> They may look like they married their soul mate, but that's because they both committed to being a great mate.

This was a surprisingly good observation by the author who is a woman. I did not expect this type of self reflective analysis. However, I think part of the reason why she was able to do this is because it looks like she had a very good marriage modeled to her by her parents.

Indeed, most people conflate the parts of marriage that are great as the standard for marriage rather than focusing on the relationship itself. This is the inherently selfish mindset versus that of the unselfish.

However, the article misses the most important expectation that is almost never discussed. It's nice to talk about the various aspects of the relationship such as expectations, commitment, and the good parts of marriage. However, the elephant in the relationship room is one that is very rarely if ever discussed. In fact, I have rarely seen it mentioned around these parts as well.

"All better syndrome" otherwise known as "Things will all work if…"

If I can just find a woman with X, Y, and Z qualities and marry her then everything will be all better. All my problems with my personal life will go away. Everything will turn out the way I always dreamed.

I think part of it arises from the Disney fairy tale myth. Lots of problems, but they found each other. Then they lived happily ever after. Yet, I don't think that accounts for all of it. Specifically, Christians tend to fall prey to this with prosperity gospel or pulling Scriptures out of context. For example, the ubiquitous Jeremiah 29:11.

> Jeremiah 29:11 For I know the plans that I [h]have for you,' declares the Lord, 'plans for welfare and not for calamity to give you a future and a hope.

Let's contrast it to the context.

> Jeremiah 29:10 "For thus says the Lord, 'When seventy years have been completed for Babylon, I will visit you and fulfill My good word to you, to bring you back to this place. 11 For I know the plans that I [h]have for you,' declares the Lord, 'plans for welfare and not for calamity to give you a future and a hope. 12 Then you will call upon Me and come and pray to Me, and I will listen to you. 13 You will seek Me and find Me when you search for Me with all your heart. 14 I will be found by you,' declares the Lord, 'and I will restore your [i]fortunes and will gather you from all the nations and from all the places where I have driven you,' declares the Lord, 'and I will bring you back to the place from where I sent > you into exile.’

1. The Jews in Babylon had to suffer in captivity for 70 years.
2. It’s conditional: they had to search for God with ALL of their heart. Unlike most Christians who solely pay lip service to God or are Sunday Christians.

All better syndrome or they hypothetical “if only” is one of the most important negative expectations to root out of your psyche.

Stewardship calls for us to be responsible for what we have been given. Parable of the talents/minas and all. Things aren’t naturally made “all better” as that makes God a genie from a lamp. Certainly in the context of salvation and the gospel they can be made all better in an instant. But it’s rare that someone’s life turns around completely without repentance and working hard because your heart has changed. People who wait for change to happen them tend to only become victims of their situation, and they blame everyone else around them for what happens to them.

That’s why all better syndrome is one of the underlying foundations of victim mentality. Don’t become prey to all better syndrome.

Understanding the flesh

October 10, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I haven't been posting much in the past few weeks mainly cause I got sick and have been tired. However, I'm trying to get that back underway now that I've recovered a bit.

I think one of the best things that happened was it allowed me to withdraw a bit from posting and to mull over a lot of different things in my head. One of these was to more clearly understand my sense of self in contrast to God and others. Call it meditation of the spirit if you will.

Tangibly, it seems as when understanding these more abstract concepts clearly has reinforced some of the boundaries that I have already set. In other words, I feel more refined, more tempered, and strongly built on a godly foundation even if it may have no been displayed yet. This does not spare me from temptation and sin, but it was very useful to examine my own character in relationship to that while in this self reflection.

I think one of the biggest misunderstandings that Christians have in terms of the flesh is that we still believe we as Christians have a carnal nature. However, this is false. We are new creations. The old has gone and the new has come. Yet, we still struggle with the flesh. What then is the flesh? The flesh we struggle with is not the carnal but inherently one of weakness. Paul describes this weakness as being unable to do what we want to do and doing the things that we don't want to do.

> Ephesians 4:20 But you did not learn [o]Christ in this way, 21 if indeed you have heard Him and have been taught in Him, just as truth is in Jesus, 22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [p]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [q]self, which [r]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.
> 2 Corinthians 5:16 Therefore from now on we recognize no one [f]according to the flesh; even though we have known Christ [g]according to the flesh, yet now we know Him in this way no longer. 17 Therefore if anyone is in Christ, [h]he is a new creature; the old things passed away; behold, new things have come. 18 Now all these things are from God, who reconciled us to Himself through Christ and gave us the ministry of reconciliation, 19 namely, that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, not counting their trespasses against them, and [i]He has [j]committed to us the word of reconciliation.

There is both an element of a change of nature and an active striving to change. Both the inherent and extrinsic must conform to Christ. Effort goes in one but not the other.

Upon understanding this more clearly I see the revelation that this weakness needs to indeed become my strength. Paul's acceptance of his thorn is indeed put into a new light. Only asking three times for it be removed is revealed. It is the clear and profound acceptance of the flesh and to make peace with this weakness.

> 2 Corinthians 12:7 Because of the surpassing greatness of the revelations, for this reason, to keep me from exalting myself, there was given me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to [b]torment me—to keep me from exalting myself! 8 Concerning this I implored the Lord three times that it might leave me. 9 And He has said to me, “My grace is sufficient for you, for power is perfected in weakness.” Most gladly, therefore, I will rather boast [c]about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may dwell in me. 10 Therefore I am well content with weaknesses, with [d]insults, with distresses, with persecutions, with difficulties, for Christ’s sake; for when I am weak, then I am strong.

New creations bound up in early flesh. This is a difficult thing to understand and to make peace with it is even more difficult.

This fundamental understanding I think will give me a much stronger foundation to resist temptation in the future. However, beyond that it seems like it has opened up my vision to see more clearly the spiritual forces at work that all too often seem invisible to the eye. I suppose this is the reason Paul describes that our struggle is not against flesh and blood but against spiritual powers, rulers, authorities, and the like.

> Ephesians 6:10 Finally, be strong in the Lord and in the strength of His might. 11 Put on the full armor of God, so that you will be able to stand firm against the schemes of the devil. 12 For our struggle is not against [e]flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the powers, against the world forces of this darkness, against the spiritual forces of wickedness in the heavenly places. 13 Therefore, take up the full armor of God, so that you will be able to resist in the evil day, and having done everything, to stand firm.

I always thought that Paul was mainly talking about our struggle against flesh and blood with our enemies or others, but now I understand that he was also discussing himself. When I read it as a Christian he was talked to me. My struggle is not against my own flesh and blood but against spiritual powers, rulers, authorities, and the like.

Now that I further understand this path, it feels like a whole new field has opened up before me.

I think for men, especially Christian men, this is one area that is difficult to be aware of. The reason for this is that both the secular and the Churchian peddle the nonsense that women are good and men are bad. Hence, we tend to believe that our desires and purpose tend to be bad things. I’ve talked about this extensively before especially in terms of sexual desire, but I think it goes beyond that.

We as Christians tend to believe that our flesh is evil because it is weak. Weakness does not mean that it is evil, especially when we are made new creations in Christ. Whenever we sin this weakness is thought of to be evil. This confers a works based mentality on our sin along the lines of the thinking “if I were only good enough…” or “if I were only holy enough…” [then] “I wouldn’t have had these desires or done these things.” Our reliance is too easily warped back to ourselves to not sin and dealing guilt rather asking God for strength and allowing the Spirit to work in us.

Also related is the Augustinian concept of original sin versus ancestral sin (h/t/ some random person on Donal's site I think) and the fall out of understanding theological concepts of nature of the flesh and conferred guilt. That may be the subject of another post. Additionally, as another also I think part of this is also due to growing up in a guilt based culture as well.

I want to have the complete peace from God and Jesus both in my strengths and weaknesses. I also want to understand the interactions of the physical, emotional, and spiritual in what I do. Anyway, that's all I have to say for now. It's more of a superficial introduction some things I've been mulling over specifically more about the physical/spiritual in terms of weaknesses.

Politely challenging church leaders on marriage

Scott on his new blog writes about Politely challenging Church leaders.

From what I've seen in my discussions with "egalitarians" about marriage they tend to fall into a few categories.

1. The belief that authority itself as a structure is a bad thing. God wouldn't allow a husband to have authority over the wife because that's bad. A fundamental misunderstanding of authority because of our cultural disrespect of authority.
2. Jesus came to break curses. Authority/headship was a curse in the garden, and it's broken so now husbands and wives are equals (Greek: "exousia" versus "isos").
3. Men and women are equal. This is a bit different than #1 and it's a fundamental misunderstanding of "respect" versus "honor" (Greek: "phobeo" versus "timao").
4. The belief that "serving" and "submission" are the same thing. Obviously, they aren't. Jesus served His disciples, the Church. Jesus does not submit to the Church. (Greek: "diakonia" versus "hupotasso").
5. The belief that headship is not authority (Greek: "kephale" versus "exousia").

Sometimes egalitarians will argue many of these points together, but you need to understand that distinguishing between these arguments helps substantially to understand where people are coming from.

For example, one of my test questions if I want to know what someone thinks about authority especially in marriage is along the lines of asking "Do you believe that Adam had headship over Eve before the fall."

The correct understanding of authority, headship, and other power structures is that they are inherently good as they are created by God. However, being placed within a particular structure is neither good or bad. They have their own value and cannot be compared to each. Thus, positions are intrinsically good and their extrinsic value is incompatible with comparison.

Even the hint of thought about "comparison" of positions within such a structure is sinful in respect because they all lead in evil thoughts and expectations such as covetousness or favoritism. Those under authority want the authority for themselves because they believe that the position above them is "better" or "superior." Those in "higher positions" are looked upon more favorably than those in "lower positions." The Scriptures condemn both of these.

Women, in general, I think tend to fall more prey to this because their sin tendency is hypergamous. They want the fame, power, status, or monetary value associated with such "positions." Hence, they place a "superior" value on being in a position or claiming it for themselves. Obviously, men are not exempt but this is where women tend to struggle

The reason why I have been denoting specific words with quotation is that language matters a lot. We use certain words to convey the value that we place on certain positions. Namely, in the above paragraphs the value words that denote our thoughts on what is “better” and what is “worse” are the ubiquitous terms such as “higher” and “lower” and “inferior” and superior.” We also denote things according to our belief of intrinsic value such as “good” and “bad” which is similarly an incorrect value judgment.

The very fact that wives become dissatisfied with their place in a marriage means they invariably have become deceived or deluded in their understand of the value of the role of the wife. God created wives to be helpmeets, and God created humans to be very good. Thus, the roles he created for us are also very good. It follows naturally that wives who are dissatisfied with their roles or usurping the role of the husband clearly do not understand the inherent value to which God has assigned to their role in the family.

This is not unlike many other modern Christian women who want families but decide to put them off for the careers, for travel, for missionary work, and the like. It is clear that either misunderstanding, deception, or delusion that the do not place a high value on the family. Obviously, that is their choice, but from what I have seen many often regret their choices for not actively attempting to find a husband when they were younger as they remain single into their 30s and 40s.

Parsing the rationaliziations

Parsing out the semantics that egalitarians use for their arguments is extremely annoying unless you pay extra careful to the wording that they use. It’s quite obvious that none of their positions are supported as a whole in Scriptures, yet it is easy to pick out versus such as mutual submission when cherry picking.

In general, egalitarian Christians use emotional arguments instead of Scripture and logic just as feminists and other leftists do. The reason for this is typically because in their pasts they have encountered situations that have left a bad impression on them of authority or other related power structures. I discussed how some of this may occur in behavior cycles and identity.

Essentially, what happens is that if someone has a bad experience with authority they typically come to believe that authority is implicitly bad. Emotions and feelings are more instinctual than logic and thoughts, so the emotions and feelings tend to overpower the logic and thoughts. When this happens the brain naturally rationalizes everything in the context of the base feelings.

For instance, let’s say Jack and Jill both grew up in a so-called Christian household but their father was an angry drunk. Our fathers tend to influence how we understand our heavenly father, so Jack and Jill may believe that the Christian God is often uncaring and angry with them. This also leads them to believe instinctively that both “fathers” and “authority” are naturally bad. This leads to two diverging paths given the different sexes of Jack and Jill.

Jack naturally does not want to grow up to be like his father. Hence, he will try to be in every way like his father was not. He may succeed or fail as there are two paths for him. One path leads to him repeating the same patterns as his father. The other path leads him to totally changing. Obviously, if he repeats the same patterns then he passes it down like a generational curse: he becomes an angry drunk to his kids too. However, if he avoids the cycle it is likely he believes in his heart that “authority” and “fatherhood” are bad. Hence, he becomes more passive and is very unlikely to become a man that walks in his masculinity with women. Such men are likely to marry a dominant woman and get steamrolled in marriage.

Likewise, Jill will end up naturally diverging on two similar paths. If she has stockholm syndrome and cannot escape the cycle then she will tend to end up married to a man like her father. She will end up married to a man that is an angry drunk or is like an angry drunk. On the other hand, she may decide that she never wants to marry a man like that and will thus become untrustworthy of men that she is interested in. She will only want to marry a man she can control because she couldn’t control her father from being angry to her. Hence, she will be dominant in the relationship and end up acting in a masculine manner. Eventually, she will wonder how she ended up in a seriously unhappy marriage, and she will most likely divorce her passive husband.

Coming to an understanding is more important than arguments

It is rare that you encounter a so-called “egalitarian” who actually listens to rational and logical Scriptural arguments. I’ve discussed many of them before and how they can be countered in the above links if you want to go that route.

However, in regard to discussing those entrenched in emotional rationalizations the true key is to keep going deeper. You don’t argue the belief that “egalitarianism is good and headship is bad.” Instead, you ask why they believe that. If they say one of the arguments above then ask them why do they feel that way about it? Chances are if you can dig enough to the memories and experiences of those who are egalitarians you can help them come to terms with why they believe the way they do. This can allow them to ponder and potentially “exorcise” their past demons so to speak.

In reality, it’s not really about them understanding an argument but understanding themselves better. The interesting compounding effect is that because you are actively trying to understand them they know you care about them, and it should in most cases bring you both closer together. If it doesn’t perhaps you have planted some seeds that God can work with.

From my experience those who truly will be convinced solely through rational arguments are very few and they’re usually men. They are typically ones who know that their true identity is in Christ, and are humble and want to learn and understand better. This type of person can be rarely found within today’s society.

Obviously, in the context of Church leaders there are a few additional things to consider. Namely, how much do they care about God versus man (or women in this case) and how much do they care about money. These are the main two overriding factors which may cause many Church leaders to crumble:

- If they are afraid of the reaction of the men and women in their Church more than the truth in Scripture.
- If they are afraid of families leaving their church and hence tithes going down more than the truth in Scripture.

In both of these cases, you can really only point out the obvious even when they agree with you and hope God works. That is the duty of Christians through Matthew 18. Otherwise, it may be best to leave if they continue to be disobedient to the Word and find a Church that is obedient to God.

Understanding Godly value

My last post was on politely challenging church leaders in marriage. In that post I discussed some of the comparison wording and why it is spiritually corrupt. However, I need to expand on why this is the case.

> The correct understanding of authority, headship, and other power structures is that they are inherently good as they are created by God. However, being placed within a particular structure is neither good or bad. They have their own value and cannot be compared to each. We also denote things according to our belief of intrinsic value such as "good" and "bad" which is similarly an incorrect value judgment.

One of the more insidious terms that I didn't discuss in the previous article is equality. Equality, like any of the comparison terms above, is corrupt when comparing both intrinsic and extrinsic value. Let me explain.

Intrinsic value

Intrinsic value is the value that God has placed on us as human beings.

There's various Scriptures denoting the value that we have as God's creations. For example, God knew us before He created us in our mother's womb. All of these verses show that as His creation there is an inherent value that He has placed on us. This is why He desires that all men would be saved through Jesus Christ (1 Timothy 2:4 and 2 Peter 3:9). Likewise, husbands and wives are "coheirs" in Christ (1 Peter 3).

> Does intrinsic value mean equality?

No. It is important to understand that “equality” denotes a comparitive example of one’s own intrinsic value. Just as it is a foolish question to ask if God loves someone more than another person it is likewise a foolish question to ask does God love us all equally.

God loves us precisely because we are His creations. Does a father love each of His children equally like an earthly father? No, He loves us precisely because we are unique and different. An equality comparison is a fundamental misunderstanding of the nature of God’s love twisted in a manner of covetousness or favoritism.

I get that some may not understand the meaning that I am trying to impart. Thus, I would like to clarify an equality statement with another question:

> Why do I need to be compared to be equal to someone else?

In fact, why do you need to be compared to someone else? God loves you. God loves others. That’s all that matters. Why strive for a comparison of God’s love of you and God’s love of someone else unless you steeped in pride.

Extrinsic value

Extrinsic value is a bit more clear cut. Extrinsic value is not derived by our status, our money, what we look like, or other early things. Extrinsic value is instead derived from what we do. However, extrinsic value is not derived from a works based mentality rather it is derived through roles and responsibilities.

Indeed, I discussed this extensively in the previous post on roles and responsibilities in marriage.

> The very fact that wives become dissatisfied with their place in a marriage means they invariably have become deceived or deluded in their understand of the value of the role of the wife. God created wives to be helpmeets, and God created humans to be very good. Thus, the roles he created for us are also very good. It follows naturally that wives who are dissatisfied with their roles or usurping the role of the husband clearly do not understand the inherent value to which God has assigned to their role in the family.
> This is not unlike many other modern Christian women who want families but decide to put them off for the careers, for travel, for missionary work, and the like. It is clear that either misunderstanding, deception, or delusion that the do not place a high value on the family. Obviously, that is their choice, but from what I have seen many often regret their choices for not actively attempting to find a husband when they were younger as they remain single into their 30s and 40s.

It is very easy for those under authority to believe that their role and responsibility has less comparitive value than of the authority themselves. Many want power without the responsibility that comes with it. This is not just as issue with the rebellion of wives against husbands. For example, employees and their bosses can experience the same thing. Students and teachers can experience this. Churches and pastors. The list go on.

If we accept that God is our Creator then we understand that it is God who imparts extrinsic value. Therefore, extrinsic value is directly tied to our roles and responsibilities that we have been given in the Scriptures.

This is the importance of understanding the Parable of the Talents. Each of the servants are given much or little. The fact that they are all servants doesn't determine their extrinsic value even though they are all the same. How they were responsible with their talents determines their extrinsic value and thus reward that God gives them. Those that were responsible were given more according to their ability. Those that were irresponsible had all that they were given taken away.

So too all extrinsic value is measured solely through stewardship of what we have been given. A wife's stewardship is measured through her role and responsibility as a wife. A husband's stewardship is measured through his role and responsibilities as a husband. Each of these are different in the Scriptures.

A wife gains nothing through usurping her husband's roles and responsibility. Indeed, it can be said that by usurping her husband's roles and responsibilities she neglects her own. Thus, she is being irresponsible with what she has been given in addition to being rebellious.

This is why it is extremely important for husbands and wives to know their own roles and responsibilities within a marriage.

1. A wife gains nothing for loving her husband. However, she will gain much from respecting her husband.
2. A husband gains nothing by respecting his wife. Rather, he gains much by loving his wife. A wife gains
3. A wife gains nothing by allowing her husband to lead. However, she gains much from following his lead and submitting to him.
4. A husband gains nothing by letting his wife by the head or being passive. Yet, he gains much by being the head of his wife and his family.

Emphasizing true value

This cannot be repeated enough. You don't gain extra credit for doing more work. Your extrinsic value and reward is determined by fulfilled the role and responsibility for which you have been given. This is important to understand because it is very easy for people to step outside of their own roles and responsibilities to "make up" for what they perceive to be deficiencies in the character or discipline of the other spouse.

However, this misunderstanding is born out of pride through covetous and favoritism as previously discussed. Sometimes we truly think we can "work more" to earn God's earthly favor, status, or power. Alternatively, sometimes we truly believe that we need to pick up the slack of others because "otherwise it won't get done" and it is a bad reflection on "ourselves and not them." This is far from the case.

One of the big examples is a misunderstanding of wives to truly follow 1 Peter 3.

If a wife recognizes that she is being shrewish and controlling she will naturally want to step back mainly because it leaves her stressed out, discontent, and unhappy all of the time. Yet, when she steps back she doesn't understand why her husband suddenly won't lead. Most often it is the case that even though her actions have changed her attitude has not. Although she is "submitting" she is not being "respectful," and a husband can see and feel that and does not want to step into his rightful role for fear of backlash.

This is often compounded by the fact that such a wife is merely letting her husband lead rather than following his lead. If the husband does something that his wife doesn't like she will still nag him or express her discontent with her body language or demeanor. Rolling the eyes, not wanting intimacy, gruff or abrupt behavior, pouting, and other non-communicative destructive behavior.

A change of behavior is not necessarily a change of heart and attitude. Often times wives attempt to do this under their own power. They "submit" according to their own definition of submission. Sometimes they try to become doormats. Sometimes they try to bottle everything up inside. Sometimes they only do things in a certain area.

In reality, only God can change hearts. A wife must ask God to change her heart and attitude toward her husband first. Then she must be willing to walk it out in life.

Timelines

Now, as a Christian man striving toward God it is extremely important to understand your specific roles and responsibilities. This is why it was #1 in my My 5 step process to maturity in relationships. You need to determine what your roles and responsibilities are in context of God and marriage if you are pursuing that.

This should be done before any semblance of a relationship so you know what you want. Then follows developing and growing a relationship. A detailed timeline and how-to guide on the process of finding a wife.

Obviously, this is not something that you can learn to do in a day. You don't instantly find out who you are and your roles and responsibilities and do them. However, knowing what they are and continually reading the Scriptures and walking them out trying to understand them will help bring you closer and closer to what you are supposed to be doing. Knowing that and being confident in it is one of the primary steps to fulfilling your roles and responsibilities, especially if you want to get married. Then you just have to learn and grow as you become more attractive and seek and find a wife.

October 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One commenter has some questions regarding authority given my two previous posts on Politely challenging Church leaders about marriage and Understanding Godly value. First, here is the full comment:

> In marriage it's clear that the husband is supposed to have authority in headship. Same with some of the Church positions
> I don't think Church positions are described as such at all. But to understand Male Headship in the home, ask yourself: Do you honestly think a husband has authority over his wife in the same way as Christ has over the church?
> Really? That he has a right to kill his wife, as God does one of his own creation? Or in the same way Christ has authority to call a Christian to martyrdom on His behalf?
> There actually is no verse that says "Husbands exercise authority over your wives in the same manner as Christ has authority over the church." Christ has a right to make us fully disposable and to do his full bidding. Not one of the verses in the Bible that talk about husband/wife relations describe it as such. For example "The LORD hates divorce and cruel men." (Mal 2:16) But YAHWEH reserved the right to divorce Israel.
> Again, start with Christ: Matt 23:1-12, Lk 22:24-30. Those guide all human relationships.

Before I get into this, some of this is covered in my post on Authority is good. The root of the confusion usually has to do with a couple key areas that I will point out later in this post.

> But to understand Male Headship in the home, ask yourself: Do you honestly think a husband has authority over his wife in the same way as Christ has over the church?

Yes.

Ephesians 5:23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.

> Really? That he has a right to kill his wife, as God does one of his own creation?

This is a straw man. Authority is given to the husband to love, to nourish, to cherish (Eph 5), to not become embittered (Col 3), to treat her in an understanding way, and honor her as a coheir in Christ (1 Pet 3).

The fact that authority can be abused is not a sign that it is not given or that it is bad.

The analogy is quite clear: Christ is the head of the Church as husbands are head of the wives (Eph 5). Likewise, the head of Jesus is God and Jesus submitted Himself to the authority of the Father (1 Cor 11).

> Or in the same way Christ has authority to call a Christian to martyrdom on His behalf?

Again, a straw man. Christ has the authority to do this, but He does not force us to do it.

John 15:13 Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

Instead, Jesus leads by example. Even though Jesus had the authority to do it, He sacrificed Himself for us. So too husbands are told to follow Jesus' example.

> There actually is no verse that says "Husbands exercise authority over your wives in the same manner as Christ has authority over the church." Christ has a right to make us fully disposable and to do his full bidding. Not one of the verses in the Bible that talk about husband/wife relations describe it as such. For example "The LORD hates divorce and cruel men." (Mal 2:16) But YAHWEH reserved the right to divorce Israel.

The main problem at this point is that authority is thought of in an incorrect context. Authority is created by and established by God. Thus, the structure of authority is fundamentally good.

> "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God" (Romans 13:1). Also see: 1 Peter 2.

A structure created by God is ultimately a good structure meant to accurately convey and reflect the goodness of the Creator. Hence, the accurate analogy of Christ:Church::Husbands:Wives.

When you fully understand the role of Christ as to the Church you understand that this authority MUST be unlimited. However, in all cases, authority should be used to love to reflect the goodness of the institution that God created. This is the same as for the husbands to the wives.

You see we often like to think of the complete authority husbands were given over wives in the OT as oppressive because it is/was abused many times. However, this is false. Jesus did not come to abolish the law but to fulfill it (Matt 5). Thus, Jesus showed us how proper authority in regard to husbands and wives is fulfilled. Like Christ and the Church, husbands have complete and utter authority over wives in order to love, nourish, cherish, etc.

The fact that authority can be abused is not an argument against the establishment of authority or defining its limits. Rather, abused authority is the fault and sin of the one who abused it not the structure itself.

I could command my wife to lay her life down for me and the kids by taking a bullet. I would be justified in doing this. The Father does the same exact thing when He commands Jesus to died for us.

> Understand: Romans 5:8 “But God demonstrates his own love for us in this: While we were still sinners, Christ died for us”

However, I would rather lay my life down to protect my wife and children given the choice. Now, if we both had to die to protect the children I would imagine that both of us would give up our lives because of our love for the children.

Jesus understands this and reveals His strong understanding of God’s love us in John 13-17. John 17 in particular shows Jesus’ strong understanding of His oneness with God even as He is submitted to God. Hence, laying down His life for us.

Conclusion

This is why in the beginning of the challenging Church leaders post I laid down a lot of examples of ways that egalitarians — and to be honest, many complementarians — misunderstand authority. The nature of authority is much deeper than most initially realize, and we often have so many misconceptions of authority because we try to understand it from a Western context. Western thought on authority is that it is bad or is too easily abused. Hence, this colors our vision of what true godly authority is being born of the institution that God created.

Draconian authority, abuse and misuse of authority, and even thoughts of authority potentially being used incorrectly should not be allowed to color it. This is walking down the road of irrational fear which leads to evil. If you talk to many wives on what respect and submission mean you will come to find out that many of them harbor thoughts along the lines of “I don’t want to fully submit because what if… my husband commands me to sin” or “what if… my husband does something wrong or incorrect.”

This mindset does not just pervade our understand of husband and wives but it also insidiously colors our thoughts on our own lives. As Christians we are submitted to the Father. However, we often truly do not understand the gravity of the authority that God holds over us. If we did we would truly respect and fear God in every part of our lives so that we would be much like Paul: ready to pray, evangelize, teach, and obey God in every circumstance. To do good works like our lives depended on it because we know the one who holds everything in His hands.

Let me be frank. Dwelling on the nature of how authority can be abused is of the devil. It is giving in to an irrational fear. When we give into such irrational fears we are essentially telling God that we don’t trust Him. Why don’t we trust Him? We despise the nature of the authority structure He created, and we do not trust the one in authority who is placed into that position by God. Hating authority or the ones in authority is hating God.

Knowing this then we have no excuse not to steward our lives in a manner worthy of Christ.

The most eligible Christian bachelor

October 27, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In one of my previous posts, a female commenter linked this post as a “good example” of what a single Christian man is like.

- http://www.critiquebycreating.com/2011/04/the-most-eligible-christian-bachelor/
- http://www.critiquebycreating.com/2014/06/the-most-eligible-christian-part-2/

Now, I’m not going to go through and list all of the points. There are some good points though such as avoid TV (though it’s used to create a tenuous conclusion on “beauty standards”), treating others how you want to be treated (paraphrased), recognizing culture influences what we see. However, most of the points seem to be muddled in some version of what it means to be a single Christian… not a single Christian interested in marriage. In fact, most of the articles I’ve read recently are of this nature.

In my opinion, this is another take on the feminization of men in the Church. As I pointed out from Thoughts on a clear vision for authentic manhood, there is a tendency to tilt away from the value of the masculine which values achievement, goal setting, and the like. However, the command to men given in Genesis 1 and 2 is to take dominion over the earth and work [the ground]. The common theme that often comes up is shift away from masculine values to feminine values.

Additionally, although it is not explicitly stated there is the air of false humility in terms of beauty. This is another one of the traps that I’ve explained before which is very common among Christians to believe that going after beauty or valuing beauty is somehow evil because the “inside matters and not the outside.” This is simply another form of gnosticism that rejects the flesh as if it were evil.

I think the main thing men need to be taught is to simply embrace their nature first. You don’t need permission to be a man. Likewise, we don’t need permission to understand that men thrive under competition, goal setting, achievement, and other object oriented tasks. Embrace striving to become a godly masculine man. Embrace the process of finding a wife. Embrace being the head of the relationship with your woman following your lead. Your woman doesn’t “let” you do anything. If you have your own goals that you want to set or your own process it’s not bad unless it’s directly specific sin.

It’s not evil or bad to desire these things yet often we think that it is. We have so much freedom in Christ, yet so many people often tell us that our masculine nature or the things that come out of our masculine nature are evil simply because it doesn’t align with their beliefs or their version of feminized Christianity.

As I described in Lens of Bias, women often have the most to “criticize” about men and how we carry things out. I discussed the problematic nature of biasing in the article. However, let me discuss a more important point here. In the particular article everything was characterized as things that are bad:

> Despite the generally hilarious claims of the manosphere's Christian rump to be interested in traditional sex roles and traditional understandings of marriage and authority, they ignore the obvious traditions when those traditions mean some woman somewhere might have actual social status and a respected position in her community beyond being a wife or a mother. They write endless screeds on marriage readiness as a sort of role playing game where it's just a matter of hitting some benchmarks with "the current girl" enough times and you'll get to the final boss fight (wedding ceremony) of Marriage: The Quest for a Purest of Pure Godly Submissive But Also Hardbodied Wife. Or they write about finding a wife as though it's about sifting through character traits like a basket of costumes, wearing only the ones "women care about the most".

I freely admit that I'm looking for a woman who I am very physically attracted to. That's important to me. But guess what? If you want a purest of the pure godly submissive hard body wife then go search for one. That's what I looked for, and that's what I found.

Are my desires ungodly? No? Then why are my desires being caricatured as being evil by a supposedly Christian women? I've also received criticism before that looking for a wife should be about finding someone to love or someone to make you happy. While those things are fine they are not Scriptural or even the be-all end-all of finding a wife.

Part of learning to be a man is that everyone wants to advise you. Everyone seems to like giving advice, and everyone believes their advice is right. Women, in particular, like impressing their advice on you like it is the gospel. Be careful what advice you take if any.

Here is the simple fact of the matter. It's up to you to steward your life to accomplish the goals and dreams that have been put in your heart [by God]. You can get wise counsel. You can get foolish counsel. But at the end of the day everything that you do is your responsibility. A wife and family is just one facet of how masculinity is walked out in life. Women want MEN. God created it that way.

The "most eligible Christian bachelor" is a godly and mature masculine man knows what he believes both in Christ and in his desires and preferences. Shaming him doesn't affect him in the slightest. He knows what he wants and is confident and diligent to work for it. He is a leader, and he understands that conflict is an opportunity to test his mettle to make righteous decisions. [Insert other manly traits/actions here].

Men do not pursue women

I saw this making some rounds on facebook. The author takes a curious naming scheme for his post on women don't want to be pursued. However, he makes some very good points many of which we have discussed previously. I wanted to bring this back up in the wake of this being discussed among Dalrock's exposure of Focus on the Family and marriage counseling heresy.

I've discussed this concept previously in a peripheral manner. However, this is a good time to show from the Scriptures why men do not pursue women. In fact, not only do men NOT pursue women, the entirety of the Christian faith is the reverse of this.

Here is an excerpt:

> ## Did Jesus pursue people?
> Think about this question:
> Is there anywhere in the life of Jesus, as seen in the Gospels, where He pursued someone?
> To make easy for you, the answer is "NO".
> In fact, Jesus almost seemed to do the exact opposite. He would purposefully tell people to do things that are literally impossible like, "Be perfect like my Father in heaven is perfect." (Matthew 5:48)
> Then, He would teach in parables purposefully so some would get it and others wouldn't.(Matthew 13:13)
> Then, He would say the most offensive things and whole crowds would leave Him. Things like "Eat my flesh, and drink my blood." (John 6:53)
> And the crazy thing is, He didn't seem to care. In fact, He even asked His disciples if they're going to leave as well as if He was challenging them to do so. (John 6:67)
> ## Jesus was the most powerful, loving, and confident man they had ever met.
> He wasn't needy. He didn't need someone to recognize who He was.
> He wasn't controlled by anything. Nothing anybody thought about Him controlled Him.
> He didn't need to have certain experiences to feel validated.

> He didn't promote Himself. In fact, He went against what we would do and waited 30 years before starting His ministry.
> Instead, He loved life, was lead by compassion, and believed in who He was as a Son that had all the resources of heaven backing Him up.
> And because of that, everyone was drawn to Him. They wanted Him.

Very poignant points are made about how Jesus is not the one doing the pursuing. This is an immutable fact. However, there is a context to this which I think is important to note.

Since we are given the analogy that Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives, we have the example of Jesus and the disciples and their interactions. The role of the husband in these relationships is to initiate. The role of the wife is to respond AND follow. Take note of Jesus calling the disciples:

> Matthew 4:18 Now as Jesus was walking by the Sea of Galilee, He saw two brothers, Simon who was called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishermen. 19 And He *said to them, "[h]Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." 20 Immediately they left their nets and followed Him. 21 Going on from there He saw two other brothers, [i]James the son of Zebedee, and [j]John his brother, in the boat with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and He called them. 22 Immediately they left the boat and their father, and followed Him.

- Jesus initiating: "Follow Me"
- Disciples responding: 'Dropped their nets' AND 'followed Him.'

This is the key not just for Jesus and the Church or husbands and wives but all of the Christian faith. There is a large fallacy, especially in evangelical circles, that God [and Jesus] is pursuing you and wants to capture your heart.

Obviously, this type of deception is most likely born out of the ubiquitous nature of the Disney Princess(tm) and romantic love. This is the elevation of Romantic Love as the rule of morality rather than God's commandments. Obviously, the rise of romantic love rather than roles and responsibilities within Christian circles gives rise to the EAP — Evangelical American Princess.

As Dalrock so elequently puts it in Lovestruck:

> Because it is love and not marriage which now confers morality upon sex, sex outside of marriage is now considered moral so long as you are in love. Thus we have the modern harlot's defense/anthem "but we were in love!". It is also entirely logical for gays to demand the equal right to "declare their love" via marriage under this new twisted paradigm.

Likewise, with the Christian walk we see that God the Father initiates in a similar way. God uses Christians to spread the gospel. The gospel is an invitation by God to get to know Him better. The invitation is this: All have sinned and fallen short of God. Jesus died for your sins. Repent and be born again. Follow Him.

- The Father initiates: “Gospel: All have sinned and fallen short of God. Jesus died for your sins. Repent and be born again. Follow Him.
- Sinners respond to the invitation of the gospel message by repenting and following.

God does not pursue us. Instead, He calls us to pursue and follow Him. For example, what do we do in our worry about provision? What is the greatest commandment?

> Matthew 6:33 But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.
> Luke 10:27 And he answered, “YOU SHALL LOVE THE LORD YOUR GOD WITH ALL YOUR HEART, AND WITH ALL YOUR SOUL, AND WITH ALL YOUR STRENGTH, AND WITH ALL YOUR MIND; AND YOUR NEIGHBOR AS YOURSELF.”

We pursue Him. We follow Him. He does not pursue us. He initiates with us. As we pursue Him He guides us on the path of righteousness. He facilitates love and our good through His headship. However, if we choose to walk away like many disciples did He lets us. In reality, He does not need us; we need Him.

In the same way, this gives us straight forward examples of how husbands are to act. If a wife is rebellious and decides to walk away then obviously you should tell her that what she is doing is not right and sin. However, if she truly chooses to continue in her rebellion and divorce you should let her walk. Jesus does not compel obedience rather He gives us free will whether to choose to serve Him or not.

Did the father of the prodigal son go pursue him as he left? No. But he ran out an initiated the embrace with him after he found out his son chose to come back home.

Now, this does not mean that He does not give us good gifts as His children. Nor that He fails to answer us when we earnestly seek and pursue after righteousness. It doesn’t mean that husbands should not strive to love, nourish, and cherish their wives as Jesus did either. However, this is all born out of desire and not a works based mentality. A sacrificial act such as Jesus on the cross is not pursuit. It’s an invitation.

This is the subtle difference. The love that the Father shows to Christians, the love of how Jesus love the Church, and the love the husbands show their wives is not one born of “pursuit” but rather in the “roles and responsibilities” given to them. Namely, in the marriage relationship:

- The followers — wives — pursue and follow as a helpmeet, in submission, in respect, and in the home.
- The leaders — husbands — lead, protect, and provide. They love, cherish, nourish, do not become embittered, and honor as co-heirs in Christ.

Conclusions

If there is a main point that I want to emphasize it is this.

The vast majority of Christian men live under the delusion of romantic love. They believe that it is they who must pursue women. However, this is not a Biblical worldview. They must examine their interactions to ensure they are not corrupted by a "standard" of the world via romantic love but rather are conformed to Christ.

The tricky thing about romantic love is that our culture is so saturated in it that we often don't see every single facet of where it pervades. This particular one about "pursuit" is particularly difficult to pick out unless you know what you are looking for. This goes along with the feminization of Christianity and the demonization of masculinity. The elevation of romantic love eventually leads to the inversion of sex roles and goddess worship.

If you listen to any contemporary Christian music and worship songs you now see why many of them are so heretical. There are so many love songs about Jesus pursuing you and me it's simply frightening. They paint a false picture of not only the gospel message but Jesus and the Church and husbands and wives.

Obviously, I don't have to tell you that this is one of major reasons why "Christian marriages" divorce at nearly the same rates as "secular marriages." Holding up "romanatic love" as a moral compass over the "Scripture" will produce similar secular results.

October 31, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was discussing with some buddies the other day about whether to take the job. Now, the context of this should be a scenario with which most men are familiar.

1. Man gets an offer for a job that moves to far away
2. Man has a girlfriend
3. Man wants to know if he should choose the job or the girlfriend

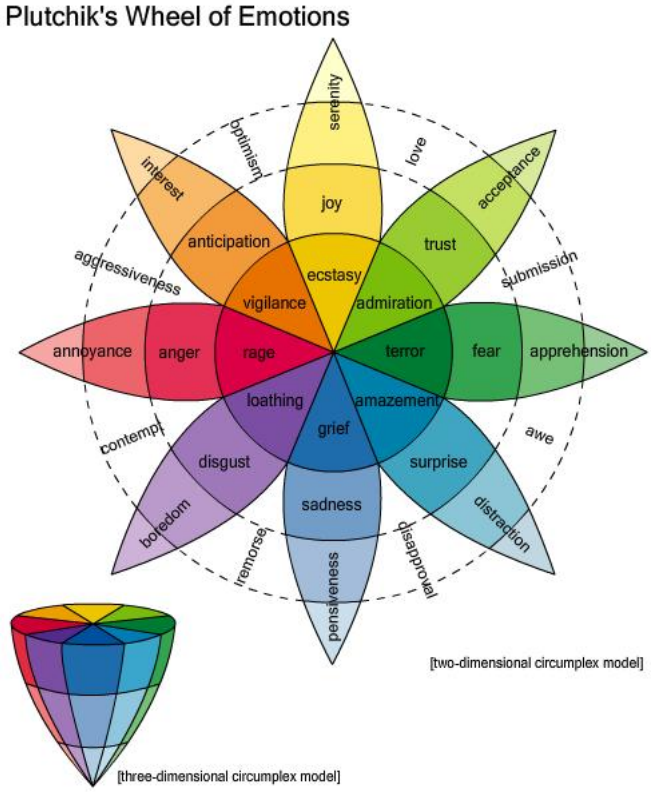
Most people go through some fancy discourse about asking about how serious the relationship is and if you see the potential for marriage in it. However, in reality how serious the relationship is does not matter one single bit. This is akin to begging the question. What we want to actually know are the consequences of taking the job or taking the girlfriend.

Women tend to perceive taking her over the job as you changing yourself for her. Women don't like men with no backbone and usually end up breaking up with you after that. It doesn't matter what you think about it or the sacrifice you made. That's how she will perceive the situation the vast majority of the time.

In general, it is relationship suicide to change yourself for a woman. This is the importance of knowing who you are and your values. If she doesn't like it she can take a hike. Unfortunately, the job situation is one of those nebulous actions that isn't really changing yourself but a woman will often perceive it as such. You chose her so therefore you are changing yourself for her therefore her attraction for you wanes.

Likewise, many a man has followed his woman to another city. Whether he wanted to move or not is irrelevant. A man chasing after a woman is just plain unattractive to women. To her you're changing a big part of who you are for her and are pursuing her. Inevitably, they end up in the same place as the man who didn't take the job.

You then receive a breakup message such as:



- "I think we're drifting apart"
- "I don't think this is working anymore. I need some time to figure out what I want. Let's take some time off"

Her attraction wanes. The only thing that changed is you. You changed by choose her over the job.

Thus, I recommend if you're not married take the job 99% of the time. Sometimes she will come, sometimes she won't. But if you don't take it it's a very high percentage that your relationship will end in the next year or two anyway. It's better to go out on your terms than on hers naturally because of the higher percentage of success and without the risk of compromising your mission.

The influence of emotions on respect, submission, and love

November 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Plutchik's wheel of emotions illustrates how two different emotional states combine in order to represent submission.

Those of you who have read this blog for a while have known that the Greek word used for 'respect' in the Scriptures is phobeo. Phobeo is derived from phobos which means to fear.

> Trust + fear/respect breeds submission.

This makes sense because the husband is the head in marriage. The head of the marriage is given authority. When a wife trusts in and fears/respects the husbands she submits to him. As Christians we are to be in godly fear of authorities and place our trust in them to do good (Rom 13, 1 Pet 2).

Respect is a need for men. Most men, if choosing only between respect or sex, would choose respect over sex. By all accounts this is the nature of how men are created by God. Respect from a wife to her husband requires her admiration, trust, acceptance, terror, fear, and apprehension of her husband. Obviously, this makes it easier for her to submit, although she can still choose not to submit.

However, when we truly understand the wholeness of Godly fear, we understand that it encompasses the entire half of the emotion wheel. David establishes this clearly in the Psalms which when discussing the glory of God there is anticipation, joy, trust, fear, amazement at the wonders of our Creator.

> Trust + joy breeds love.

Likewise, we understand that love is a need for women much like respect is for men. In regard to men loving their wives it requires a trust in the relationship along with joy.

This is why men overwhelmingly prefer enthusiastic virgins. The chaste purity of virgins bring men joy in the relationship just as the Church is prepared as a pure and spotless bride for Jesus (Rev 19). Similarly, wives who are enthusiastic about the relationship and sex are a joy to the husband. It should be quite obvious why husbands find it easier to love a wife who is joyful and enthusiastic about her relationship with him.

How easy is it for a husband to love his wife if he doesn't trust her? This is a straight forward answer. It is also one of the most discouraging ones to answer because of the extensive duplicity in most modern women even those who call themselves Christians. This is explicitly why I have a "no lie" policy in my relationship. If I catch a lie we are done. Trust is earned as is shown by the Parable of the Talents/Minas. This goes for both sexes.

Finally, clearly our actions are not ruled by emotions or feelings. We make commitments and honor them regardless of how we feel. However, understanding and integrating how we feel to do the right thing is good. We don't want to just be mindless automatons when honoring our commitments. David worshiped God with all of his heart, mind, and strength just as we are to do as well.

It is important to understand how our emotions and feelings affect our commitments because we can foster the environment to breed trust along with joy or fear depending on your roles and responsibilities. This makes Biblical roles and responsibilities fall into alignment, and it creates a healthy, godly relationship.

Let’s talk about marriage, fear, and dread

I’ve explored this concept peripherally in the past, but I want to go back to it since there has been some discussion about it in other Christian and secular blogs. Specifically, Biblical Gender Roles and Rollo. In my opinion, the whole issue is a bit more nuanced than both Rollo and BGR argue back and forth. I will be thoroughly examining it in this post.

For those of you unaware, “dread” is what is termed of in “game” as passively or actively inducing feelings of anxiety, apprehension, or fear in a woman that motivates her to improve the relationship. Typically, such anxiety improves the relationship leading to an increase in frequency of sex or acting more feminine and submissive. However, it does not come without its downsides. Within this are two categories of which are termed “hard” and “soft” (or passive) dread. Rollo discusses dread and soft dread from a secular point of view.

Naturally, most Christian women and even some Christian men upon hearing that dread causes anxiety, apprehension, or fear in women decry it as evil. However, this negative response to “dread” is ignorant of the Scriptures statements on fear.

Obviously, I am not here to validate or invalidate supposed “game” principles. I am here to talk about the Scriptures and what we can learn from them concerned fear. Dread falls under the category of fear, but it is is not all fear. For this posts purposes this should become apparent as I’ll first have to discuss fear in terms of the Scriptures, but I will distinguish the various places it arises. This will lead to showing why it occurs when husband work toward headship, and how to rebuild a relationship.

Rational and irrational fear

Specifically, the Scriptures distinguish between rational and irrational fear.

> Rational fear — fearing the consequences of when you do evil — is a healthy fear. This is the fear of God that we all have in our hearts. We should fear and tremble when we commit sin because God is Righteous/Just and abhors sin. Rational fear is an encouragement to do what is right, and to avoid doing what is wrong.
> Irrational fear — is unhealthy and to be eliminated. This is when you fear/worry about necessities as Jesus talked about with clothes and food or have an irrational fear about what “may” happen to you in marriage. Irrational fear is a discouragement. It is often to avoid doing what is right and to do what is wrong (such as [being afraid to speak] out for your faith [when in a crowd of people]).

The examples often brought up by those who oppose “dread” are what are termed as irrational fear. The most often example is the one I discussed above. In the Sermon on the Mount preaching in Matthew 6, Jesus discusses the topic of not worrying about what you will eat, what you will drink, or what you will wear for your Father in heaven knows all such things.

On the other hand, rational fear is good. Feelings of anxiety, apprehension, or fear that encourage you to do the right thing are not evil. In fact, they are good. Godly fear should stimulate us to do the right thing, especially if we know what the right thing is. James 4:17 therefore, to one who knows the right thing to do and does not do it, to him it is sin. It is clear that in the Scriptures sex in marriage is a good thing.

Rational fear is in clearly discussed in the Scriptures. The Fear of the Lord is exhorted all throughout the Old testament and New Testament Scriptures. However, wives are exhorted to fear/respect/reverence their husbands in both Ephesians 5 and 1 Peter 3. This is derived from the Greek phobeo, and the dual meaning is clear even though most modern translation place it as respect or reverence.

> Ephesians 5:33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects (phobeo) her husband.
> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful (phobeo) behavior.
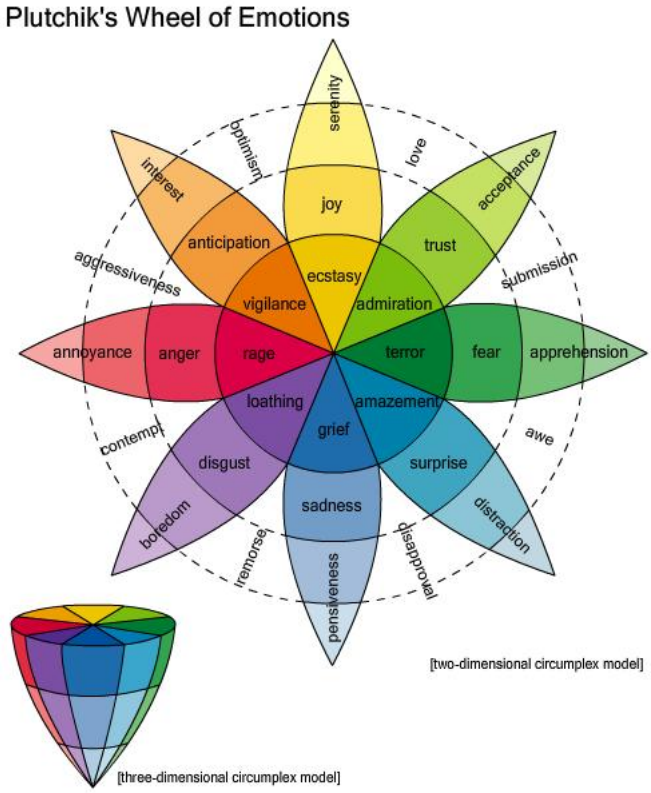
> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh'-o
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence. Total KJV occurrences: 93

For those of you who have read this blog a long time, all of this is obvious stuff so far because I have discussed it extensively. However, I have not discussed for what purpose the commands are placed. God's commands for roles and responsibilities are always for a purpose. What is the purpose of a wife fearing her husband?

A wife is to fear/respect/reverence her husband because of the role of the position of the husband. Indeed, a wife is not to respect a husband for the things he does for her or if he is acting like a good husband. She is to respect him for the position. This is why the Scriptural commands about marriage in Ephesians 5, 1 Peter 3, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Corinthians 7, 1 Timothy 2, and so on are unconditional. Proper fear and respect is given regardless of [insert bad things of the other person or imperfections the other person]. This is the institutional nature of some of the commandments that Father and Jesus have given. This importance of this cannot be understated.

Influence of emotions on behavior



This is why I also use attitude as a proxy for behavior when I can't examine how a wife treats her husband. A lack of fear and respect from a wife toward her husband will almost inevitably spill over into how she treats him starting with contempt which leads to nagging, emotional blow ups, unhappiness, and the like.

As we know from my previous article on understanding how emotional states play into roles we see that:

> Trust + fear/respect breeds submission.
> Trust + joy breeds love.

A woman that does not fear and respect her husband will have a very difficult time submitting him. Sex, from the perspective of a responsive act from a wife and initiation from a husband, is felt as a submission of her body to him.

This embodies the nature of the desire dynamic which I discussed in a Christian understanding of attraction. A wife who respects her husband will naturally submit to him in everything including sex. A wife who does not respect her husband will naturally find it very difficult to submit to him in anything including sex because it is so intimate.

However, although we want correct order — natural law — we still must choose regardless of how easy or how hard it is to be obedient to Christ.

Irreconcilability of the secular and Christian world view

In the secular model, many including Rollo discuss the desire dynamic in terms of men demonstrating high value which women naturally flock toward. However, this cannot be reconciled in any way with Christianity because of the burden of performance placed upon an individual under a secular worldview. Indeed, once a man fails to be high value under a secular world view his women will often naturally trade up or dump him altogether.

Now, the Christian dynamic is tied intimately with intrinsic value and extrinsic value. Specifically, extrinsic value within a Christian world view is reward by Christ to stewardship (see: Parable of the Talents/Minas again). I discussed how this properly is defined within a marriage in Understanding Godly Value.

> Intrinsic value is the value that God has placed on us as human beings. There's various Scriptures denoting the value that we have as God's creations. For example, God knew us before He created us in our mother's womb. All of these verses show that as His creation there is an inherent value that He has placed on us. This is why He desires that all men would be saved through Jesus Christ (1 Timothy 2:4 and 2 Peter 3:9). Likewise, husbands and wives are "coheirs" in Christ (1 Peter 3).
> Extrinsic value is a bit more clear cut. Extrinsic value is not derived by our status, our money, what we look like, or other early things. Extrinsic value is instead derived from what we do. However, extrinsic value is not derived from a works based mentality rather it is derived through roles and responsibilities.
> So too all extrinsic value is measured solely through stewardship of what we have been given. A wife's stewardship is measured through her role and responsibility as a wife. A husband's stewardship is measured through his role and responsibilities as a husband. Each of these are different in the Scriptures.
> A wife gains nothing through usurping her husband's roles and responsibility. Indeed, it can be said that by usurping her husband's roles and responsibilities she neglects her own. Thus, she is being irresponsible with what she has been given in addition to being rebellious.

Intrinsic value embodies what it means to honor others.

Extrinsic value, on the other hand, embodies our roles within the responsibilities to which we are tasked. Each Christian has a role and spiritual gifts with the body of Christ. To those who are given to singleness Paul describes total commitment to Christ in 1 Corinthians 7. Likewise, to those given to marriage come the roles and responsibilities of husband and wife.

Indeed, the main difference between the secular and Christian world view is purpose. If there is no God then there is no purpose behind what the secular does. Those who do not believe in God are just trying to find some form of transient happiness whether within themselves, in women, money, or other material goals including lineage. However, within the Christian world view there is both eternal intrinsic and extrinsic value behind all that we do.

Tying everything back to fear (or dread if you want to call it that)

First, let's understand what holy fear inspires us to do.

Holy fear of God is tied to eternal extrinsic value. It is not related to intrinsic value because we know that God created us and imbued us with value that cannot be removed. However, as we know in Proverbs the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. What does knowledge allow us to accomplish? Knowledge allows us to use our mental faculties to distinguish right from wrong. When we distinguish right from wrong and act on it then we build self control, then perseverance, then godliness, then brotherly kindness, and then love.

> 2 Peter 1:5 Now for this very reason also, applying all diligence, in your faith supply moral [g]excellence (arete), and in your moral excellence (arete), knowledge (gnosis), 6 and in your knowledge (gnosis), self-control, and in your self-control, perseverance, and in your perseverance, godliness, 7 and in your godliness, brotherly kindness, and in your brotherly kindness, love.
> G1108 — γνῶσις — gnōsis — gno'-sis
> From G1097; knowing (the act), that is, (by implication) knowledge: – knowledge, science. Total KJV occurrences: 29
> G703 — ἀρέτη — aretē — ar-et'-ay
> From the same as G730; properly manliness (valor), that is, excellence (intrinsic or attributed): – praise, virtue. Total KJV occurrences: 5

This is why I have no problem with objective science and human nature. Knowledge/science of human nature can be used to further the Christian walk. However, it must be built on a foundation of faith and arete — moral excellence, virtue, manliness — lest we be led astray.

Thus, we have established that the Fear of the Lord motivates us to righteous action given the nature of extrinsic value meeting the commandments of God.

Second, now that we have a proper framework rooted in Scripture let's examine "dread" or rather fear. The fear, reverence and respect is already commanded of the wife toward the husband in the Scriptures (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3). Therefore, what we must acknowledge now is whether inducement of such fear creates righteous action. If it induces righteous action it can be considered rational fear. If it induces unrighteous action it can be considered irrational fear.

A wife experiencing anxiety of a husband naturally lends itself to increasing her desire to have sex with him more. This is an fact based upon the myriad amounts observational data from both Christian and secular marriages and unions. Hence, we must recognize that "fear" or dread is in fact inducing righteous action of desiring to and having more sex with her husband.

This leads to the conclusion that Christian women stating that husbands should never do anything to cause a wife to fear is false. Feelings and emotions are not the Truth. This highlight the prevalent myth that someone making you feel bad = sin. It is false.

Roles and responsibilities

Although we understand that the emotional feelings and subsequent actions of the wife from fear to have sex are righteous, this does not mean that the way in which a husband carries this out is righteous. Those of you familiar with Koine Greek should understand that eidos is the term used for "idol":

> 1 Thessalonians 5:21 But examine everything carefully; hold fast to that which is good; 22 abstain from every [m]form/appearance (eidos) of evil.

> G1491 — εἶδος — eidos — i’-dos
> From G1492; a view, that is, form (literally or figuratively): – appearance, fashion, shape, sight. Total KJV occurrences: 6

The reason why I brought up roles and responsibilities is that the nature of a husband’s roles and responsibilities are independent of his wife.

A husband can flirt with other women to make his wife fear him, but that is giving the appearance of evil and not treating her as it was himself. A husband can withdraw affection from her, but then he is not nourishing and cherishing her as if she was his own body. This is why I am against “hard dread” as it were which is overt actions that demonstrate the appearance of or the action of adultery.

The nature of the husband is to be the head in marriage. He is not to become the head in marriage. Neither is he to get permission to be the head in marriage. He simply is the head. The key to understanding this is the knowledge of dysfunctional relationships. A husband changing his behavior to act as the head in his marriage will naturally create fear within the wife. After all he is starting to exert headship within the marriage.

A wife who was naturally implicitly or explicitly in charge before will have built up trust with her husband in this dysfunctional relationship pattern. She is comfortable with being in the head position and thus in control of the relationship. She trusts that her husband is fine in this position. However, this does nothing to change her unhappiness, nagging, and contempt within the marriage itself.

This is naturally the result of dysfunctional relationship patterns that manifest in self reinforcing loops. A wife “may” desire to submit to her husband, but she trusts more in her control over the relationship than to obey God. This leads to an irrational fear loop that keeps her nagging, unhappy, and disrespectful of her husband. She acts as the head because she is afraid of obedience to God’s command. As you can see, this is an irrational fear because her role is not the head.

However, when a husband starts acting as the head in marriage this naturally creates fear within her through two other mechanisms:

- There is a rational fear of authority that is rooted in his position as the head. The rational fear of leadership from her husband results in increased sexual desire for him.
- There is another rational fear of breaking trust of the dysfunctional trust relationship. While breaking trust is normally a bad thing, breaking trust in a dysfunctional relationship pattern is a good thing. This naturally results in additional fear as she “feels like she doesn’t know who her husband is anymore.” However, this broken trust must also be rebuild if you want unity in your relationship.

This it the dual nature of rational fear manifesting itself within correcting a dysfunctional relationship. However, both of these facets must be understand by husbands in order to truly rebuild a harmonious relationship. Going out and flirting with other women naturally builds a rational fear of authority, but it does not rebuild trust within a relationship. Withdrawing affection naturally does not rebuild trust. Likewise, such actions violate not giving the appearance of evil and do not nourish and cherish the wife in love.

> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh'-o
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence. Total KJV occurrences: 93

This is why I agree with "passive dread" that results from the change of the husband acting like the head in the relationship. However, the goal is not "dread," but the goal is "head." Dread or fear is just a passive result of this.

Rebuilding trust

Rebuilding trust is difficult. As the Parable of the Talents indicates rebuilding trust takes time and effort in proper stewardship of the roles and responsibilities that we have been given. It means building up a certain amount of capital in terms of extrinsic value. The good news is that the commands of Scripture to the husband are there to rebuild trust. These include:

- She is your helpmeet and not the head (Gen 2).
- Acting as the head within marriage (Eph 5). Be the leader.
- Loving her as Jesus would the Church (Eph 5). Provision, protection, leadership. Teaching, training, admonishing, and rebuking if necessary.
- Nourishing and cherishing her as yourself (Eph 5). Affection is obvious.
- Not becoming embittered toward her (Col 3).
- Dwelling with her according to the knowledge and giving honor to her as the weaker vessel and co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3).

Treating her as your helpmeet and not the head and acting as the head in your marriage obviously double as rebuilding trust and acting as the authority. The problem is that most men avoid acting as the head and treat her as the head instead of the helpmeet. You lead, and she follows.

Affection is clearly the obvious route to go. If you do care about her then show that you care. Grab her and hold her close. Use your inside jokes with her. Be her rock when she's emotional (don't solve the problems, simply listen).

Other non-Scriptural things you can do are become muscular and ripped. The main other one is to have friends and hobbies which are proxies for not putting her on a pedestal showing her that you actually have a life apart from her. Obviously, most men that have issues are idolizing their wife or letting the wife take the lead.

Act don't talk, but if you talk only talk about yourself to build trust

This phrase pervades the 'sphere in general but it's true. The Bible states this. Men are to act as the head. Women are to act as the helpmeet. Even if the husband is disobedient to the Word wives are supposed to win them over through chaste and respectful behavior (1 Pet 3). Talking is often seen as a bad thing. However, it can be used effectively according to certain principles namely only talking about yourself.

Talking about what she is doing is almost inevitably seen as negotiating to her. This is where I've changed my stance a bit. Although a man can tell her what she is doing is sin and wrong it only needs to be said once or twice and then left at that. If she doesn't change her behavior then the relationship is obviously dysfunctional and she willingly will disobey both you and God. Hence, talking anymore beyond this to her is naturally seen as begging and won't restore a marriage to its proper place. It is generally fruitless. The reason for this is that she places her "trust" not in what you're saying but in how the dysfunctional relationship has been run. Hence, why it is important to first lead by example.

In this respect, we can see that men need to lead by example. If a wife is frightened by the extrinsic headship behavior of her husband who wants to break the dysfunctional relationship model he should tell her what he is doing to build trust. Often the conversation will start along the lines of her being unfamiliar with the changes:

> Her: "I feel like I don't know who you are anymore" or "You're changing a lot and I don't know if I can handle that" or "I'm feeling anxious because I don't know what is going on with you"

A response should generally only be about yourself and not her in the slightest. The reason for this is because your concern should be first to your roles and responsibilities. If there is a good analogy it would be from the Matthew 7 judging statement: you are taking the plank out of your own eye before pointing out the speck.

> You: "I realized I haven't been acting like the man in the relationship. Lately, I'm focused understanding and carrying out my roles and responsibilities in the family."

The nature of the change is often a scary one. Wives who understand the nature of the change then they are more likely to want to rebuild the relationship as opposed to wonder if you're retaking leadership in the relationship and then going to divorce her or sleep with other women. Very few wives except perhaps those filled with malice — hopefully not any supposed Christian woman you will marry — will be against a directional statement like that. In fact, many will wholeheartedly embrace the change.

The main problem I foresee is that most supposedly Christian women who are not respectful and submissive even when it is difficult in the marriage tend to be lukewarm in their faith or may be Christians in name only. This is a difficult situation because even if they do "come around" per se and become respectful and submissive to your headship if you drop the ball they may revert to their previous behavior.

Ideally, this is not the case and you both were just ignorant before of how to build an ordered relationship. However, the good news is that the husband can sanctify the wife (Eph 5) and that wives can also sanctify unbelieving husbands (1 Cor 7). Even if a spouse is lukewarm then it can turn out for good.

Conclusions

- There is rational fear and irrational fear. Rational fear is godly fear. Irrational fear leads to destruction.
- Feelings are not truth. Despite what some Christian men and women claim, fear of the husband is based in the Scriptures and are therefore godly. What needs to be dispelled with the myth that someone making you feel bad = sin.
- The fear, anxiety, apprehension, or dread that wives feel that drives them to have sex with their husbands when they start to act like the head is rational and therefore good.
- Husband and wives extrinsic value through actions are judged according to their fulfillment of roles and responsibilities. Thus, the goal is headship for the husbands.
- Unchaste behavior of husband and wives or potential impropriety in marriage is a sin. Hence, ends do not justify the means. The heart matters. For example, a husband flirting with other women is not good. Not all means are good.
- Dysfunctional relationships have two components of fear: (1) breaking the trust of the dysfunctional relationship and (2) asserting proper headship in the relationship. Fear is a normal part of the transition process and both are rational and godly. The first (1) fear should aimed to be dispelled. The second fear is a natural part of authority due to the nature of fear/reverence/respect.
- Fear is not something you aim for, but it is a part of the process of rebuilding a relationship. The goal is, and will always remain, in roles and responsibilities. In particular for husbands it will be in headship.
- The commands given to each of the sexes within marriage are about action and not words. Do more, talk less.
- Actions rebuild both the headship and trust within a relationship. Words may be required to build trust if your behavior has changed such as acting like the man in the relationship. However, avoid discussing what the other person is doing as that comes off as negotiation or manipulation. Words can help foster trust in this scenario.

Overall, this is a massive post that covers a lot of different Scriptures and topics and unites them as one. The main nuance is that it’s more important to focus on fulfilling your Biblical roles and responsibilities. Let the consequences that come out of that be addressed as they come.

The nature of man is spirit, soul, heart, and flesh

November 10, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has put up a post on the nature of man which is going to lead into a longer series. I was originally going to post this as a comment, but it became too long as I was writing it. Hence, I'm posting it here. I'm going to quibble with some of the definitions and conclusions, so I would suggest reading Donal's post first.

The Hebrew and Greek have some parallel terms with each other which are important to consider.

The Spirit, the Soul, the Heart, and the Flesh

First, let's start with a passage from Deuteronomy held up as the example to live by Jesus.

> Deuteronomy 6:4 "Hear, O Israel! The Lord is our God, the Lord is one! 5 You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might.

In this we can see that our existence here on earth is composed of a triunity of parts. I will get into how spirit fits into this as I discuss further.

1. The word for Soul is the Hebrew Nephesh (H5315) which is synonymous with Greek Psuche (G5590). The synonymous term for soul that is translated as is also "life."
2. The word for Heart is the Hebrew Lebab (H3824) which is synonymous with Greek Kardia (2588). However, the Greeks make a distinction of the "Heart" into two categories namely "Heart" and "Mind." Deut 6 + Matthew 22 (Hebrew audience – Love God with all your heart, soul, strength/might) versus Mark 12 and Luke 10 (Gentile audience – Love God with all your heart, mind, soul, strength/might). The "Heart" is traditionally the seat of both rationality and emotions. However, the Greek distinguishes it with the "mind" as rationality and the "heart" as emotions. As our culture is Greek influenced we properly understand "follow your heart" to mean "follow your emotions or feelings."
3. The physical Flesh or Body is the Hebrew Basar (H1320) and Greek Sarx (G4561). The flesh is the physical housing of the "Soul" and the "Heart."
4. The word for Spirit is Hebrew Ruach (H7307) which is synonymous with Greek Pneuma (4151). The Spirit is life… or properly the Breath of life.

In the garden of Eden, God breathed ("neshama" — H5397) life into Adam and he became a living (spirit) soul (nephesh). Neshama is the Hebrew word meaning Spirit and/or Soul. Hence, that which was inanimate formed by God from the earth — the heart and flesh — was made alive by God by breathing in soul and spirit to form a living soul.

From this we can deduct quite a few things.

First, The “Heart” provides intentions to action from both thoughts and feelings. For example, Jesus discusses out the heart come all manners of evil (Matt 15, Mark 4). This is why the flesh itself is not necessarily unclean because uncleanness originates from the heart leading to corruption of the flesh.

Second, the “Soul” or “life” interfaces the “Heart” and “Flesh” to give rise to actions in the physical world. Properly, the “soul” is probably best referred to as what we would call “consciousness” because it is immaterial although it resides in a material Flesh.

Third,

> Psalm 84:2 My soul longed and even yearned for the courts of the LORD; My heart and my flesh sing for joy to the living God.

It’s quite a beautiful concept. God’s nature (“Spirit“) is reflected within us that we are made in His image: we are composed of a triunity of parts to make up one whole. Our living “spirit” is made in His image which is composed the triunity our “Soul,” “Heart,” and “Flesh.”

The “Flesh” physically houses both the “Soul” and the “Heart,” but it is the “Soul” or consciousness which is essential for the “Heart” and “Flesh” to operate. Similarly, without the “heart” or brain dead people the “soul” and “flesh” simply exist without the ability to interact with the world. They are all dependent on one another and cannot exist on their own.

Fourth, going back to the Deuteronomy passage we see some parallels that we didn’t see before which become more clear.

> Deuteronomy 6:4 “Hear, O Israel! The Lord is our God (Elohim), the Lord is one! 5 You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might.

Elohim (plural for the name of “God”) is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit but is one Lord. His nature as a triune God is reflected in our nature of Spirit composed of Soul, Heart, and Flesh. His image is our image. Loving God with all of our life — our spirit — through our heart, soul, and strength is exactly like the unity that we see in God.

Moving on to the fall…

The Fall

Now, when we were cut off from the “Spirit” of God through sin at the fall, we were cut off from our source of “eternal life.”

> John 17:1 Jesus spoke these things; and lifting up His eyes to heaven, He said, “Father, the hour has come; glorify Your Son, that the Son may glorify You, 2 even as You gave Him authority over all flesh, that to [a]all whom You have given Him, He may give eternal life. 3 This is eternal life, that they may know You, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom You have sent.

The hole that every human longs to fill within them is from the severing of our “spirit” from communion with God's "Spirit" in the garden of Eden — this is the symbolism of sacrament of Holy Communion. Hence, those who repent of their sins and believe in Jesus will be sent the Holy Spirit which reunites our "spirit" with "His Spirit" and communes within us. We become literal temples of the Holy Spirit.

Specifically, we typically call the hole and longing for it to be filled as a "soul longing" or "soul yearning." Yet, David shows us above in the Psalms that it is not only our "soul longing" but instead a "spiritual longing." We tend to connect it as a soul longing because both the "Soul" and "God's as Spirit" are immaterial, but this is false.

Thus, Holy Communion symbolizes the nature of the disconnect at the fall and the reconnection through Jesus Christ. Namely,

1. His flesh (or body) is given for us as a sacrifice to represent the entire being contained within our physical body: the Soul, Heart, and Flesh. Jesus is the bread of life.
2. His blood is given for us to represent the New Covenant for the forgiveness of sins. That is the blood represents the redemption of our spirit in Him. Thus, why the Holy Spirit lives within us as Christians.

Conceptually, the reason why blood is used to bind any covenant within the Scriptures is that blood represents the "Spirit" or the wholeness of our being. Our "Spirit" or the breath of life provides sustenance to the Soul, Heart, and Body. Physically, blood provides oxygen to the brain which houses the heart, the body, and obviously allows the "soul" or consciousness to exist within the body. Once the "Spirit" or the breath of life is extinguished the heart and body both die and the immaterial soul leaves its container.

Fallen consequences

What is referred to as "sinful nature" in the New Testament is reflective of the susceptibility and weakness of our overall being to engage in sin. The severing of God's Spirit from our spirit result in a disconnect of our "Soul," "Heart," and "Flesh" from our Creator leading to systemic effects. This is reflected in the nature of the consequences of the fall:

1. Our hearts became susceptible to temptation and choosing evil over good.
2. Our flesh became mortal and we die a physical death. We have become weak and must toil the ground for a living.
3. Our souls apart from God bear eternal consequences of sin.

Romans 1 provides a good summary of the effects of sin when our "spirit" was severed from God's spirit affecting all of the soul, heart, and flesh.

> Romans 1:21 For even though they knew God, they did not [n]honor Him as God or give thanks, but they became futile in their speculations, and their foolish heart was darkened. 22 Professing to be wise, they became fools, 23 and exchanged the glory of the incorruptible God for an image in the form of > corruptible man and of birds and four-footed animals and [o]crawling creatures. 24 Therefore God gave them over in the lusts of their hearts to impurity, so that their bodies would be dishonored among them. 25 For they exchanged the truth of God for [p]a lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed [q]forever. Amen.

> 28 And just as they did not see fit [u]to acknowledge God any longer, God gave them over to a depraved mind, to do those things which are not proper, 29 being filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, greed, evil; full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malice; they are gossips, 30 slanderers, [v]haters of God, insolent, arrogant, boastful, inventors of evil, disobedient to parents, 31 without understanding, untrustworthy, unloving, unmerciful; 32 and although they know the ordinance of God, that those who practice such things are worthy of death, they not only do the same, but also give hearty approval to those who practice them.

Practice of wickedness results in both physical death of the heart and flesh and the second death of the soul.

Differences between how Paul describes the flesh

Now, it is important to understand the context by which Paul uses the term “sarx” within the New Testament as it can often lead to some confusion. There are times in which Paul uses the word sarx or flesh in reference to the “physical body,” and there are times when Paul uses the word sarx in reference to “sinful nature.”

For example, in Philippians 1 Paul refers to “Flesh” as existing within the “body” or in a physical sense.

> Philippians 1:21 For to me, to live is Christ and to die is gain. 22 [s]But if I am to live on in the flesh, this will mean fruitful labor for me; and I do not know [t]which to choose. 23 But I am hard-pressed from both directions, having the desire to depart and be with Christ, for that is very much better; 24 yet to remain on in the flesh is more necessary for your sake. 25 Convinced of this, I know that I will remain and continue with you all for your progress and joy [u]in the faith, 26 so that your proud confidence in me may abound in Christ Jesus through my coming to you again.

However, the vast majority of time Paul discusses “flesh” particular in Romans, Ephesians, and Galatians — which is basically a shortened version of Romans — he uses “sarx” or “flesh” as a euphemism for sinful nature rather than actually referring to the physical body. The distinction he makes is that he will usually call it “desires of the flesh” or flesh and it’s passions or desires.”

> Galatians 5:16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh. 17 For the flesh [g]sets its desire against the Spirit, and the > Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you [h]please. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. 19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God. 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law. 24 Now those who [k]belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires. 25 If we live by the Spirit, let us also [l]walk by the Spirit. 26 Let us not become boastful, challenging one another, envying one another.

This is an extremely important distinction because knowing what we know from earlier we know that it is not actually the "flesh" that is tempted with it's passions and desires it is actually the "heart." The "body" naturally follows the desires and wickedness of the "heart" if turned away from God.

> Jeremiah 17:9 The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it? 10 I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.
> Matthew 15:16 [g]Jesus said, "Are you still lacking in understanding also? 17 Do you not understand that everything that goes into the mouth passes into the stomach, and is [h]eliminated? 18 But the things that proceed out of the mouth come from the heart, and those defile the man. 19 For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, [i]fornications, thefts, false witness, slanders. 20 These are the things which defile the man; but to eat with unwashed hands does not defile the man."

Paul discusses how we are to renew ourselves within the faith as Christians in both Romans and Ephesians. Since he is writing to a Gentile audience he uses "mind" rather than "heart" but in reality we can think of it as "heart" containing both "mind" and "emotions."

> Romans 12:1 Therefore I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living and holy sacrifice, [a]acceptable to God, which is your [b]spiritual service of worship. 2 And do not be conformed to this [c]world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may [d]prove what the will of God is, that which is good and [e]acceptable and perfect.
> Ephesians 4: 17 So this I say, and affirm together with the Lord, that you walk no longer just as the Gentiles also walk, in the futility of their mind, 18 being darkened in their understanding, [m]excluded from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, because of the hardness of their heart; 19 > and they, having become callous, have given themselves over to sensuality [n]for the practice of every kind of impurity with greediness. 20 But you did not learn [o]Christ in this way, 21 if indeed you have heard Him and have been taught in Him, just as truth is in Jesus, 22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [p]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [q]self, which [r]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

I generally think the emphasis of the mind in particular by Paul is due to the nature of our emotions. Even when we don't feel like it we should always strive to make the conscious choice to obey God's commandments despite what we feel. This is different from the writers to the Gentiles of the writers to the Hebrews.

> James 4:7 Submit therefore to God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. 8 Draw near to God and He will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, you sinners; and purify your hearts, you double-minded. 9 Be miserable and mourn and weep; let your laughter be turned into mourning and your joy to gloom. 10 Humble yourselves in the presence of the Lord, and He will exalt you.
> 17 Therefore, to one who knows the [k]right thing to do and does not do it, to him it is sin.

James who is writing to the Jerusalem Church just blasts through the muck between mind and heart and just says things clearly. This is because the Jews believed that the heart is both the rational and emotional holistically. What you do that comes out of it is what matters. This is the Semitic Totality Concept which I have discussed before. If you believe something to be true you absolutely live it out.

Conclusions

The image of God is found the image of man because God created man in His own image. God is a Spirit in the triune Father, Jesus, and Holy Spirit. We have His spirit of life in us which is made up of a soul, heart, and flesh.

The severing of God's spirit and our spirit in the fall of man resulted in widespread consequences.

- We are not guilty for Adam's sin, but we bear some of the consequences of his sin namely the separation of our spirit and soul from God, our mortal bodies, and our weakness and susceptibility to temptation.
- Our "human nature" or "lusts of the flesh" war against the "Spirit" in that our hearts which are susceptible to temptation are easily led astray due to the nature of the consequences of the fall still existing. It's not that our bodies are opposed to the Spirit but that the material parts of ourselves which are our "heart" and "flesh" often become disordered with short term temptation and gratification over eternal reward.

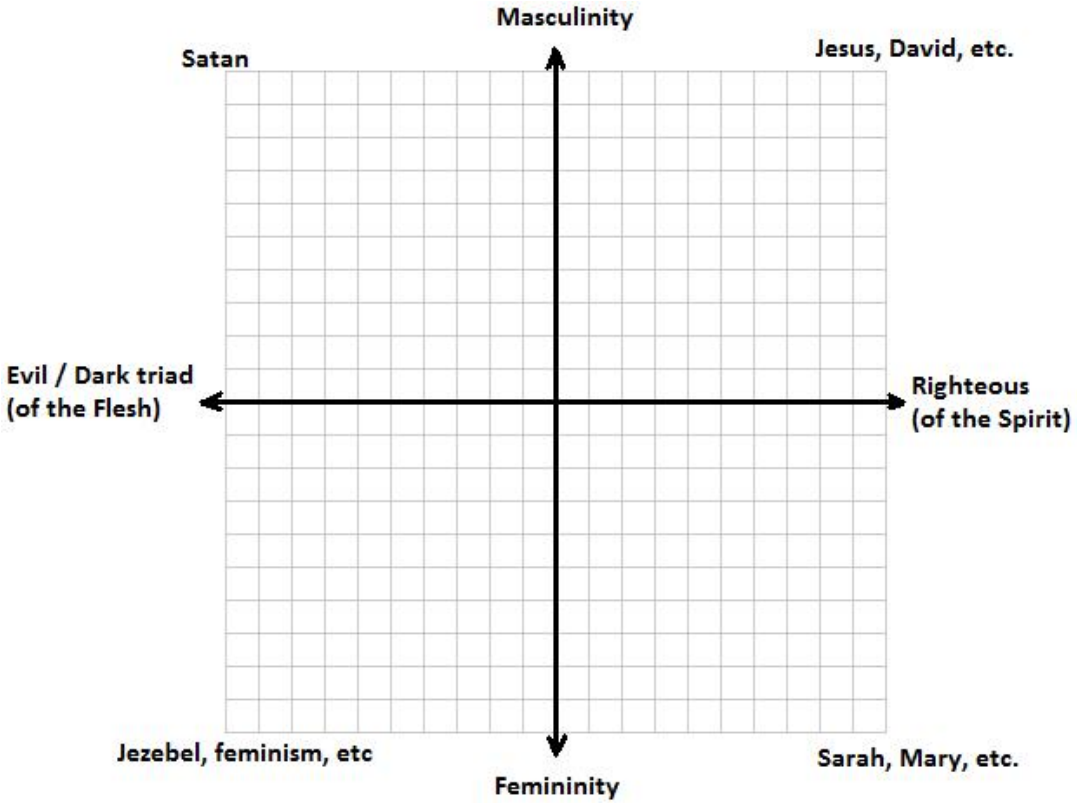
- We must choose to align our spirits with the Holy Spirit as Christians. This means holistically aligning our soul, heart, and strength to the Holy Spirit in order that we may obey the commandments of Jesus. To live by the Spirit and keep in step with the Spirit is holistically having your soul, heart, and flesh in alignment with Jesus. In other words, Love God with all your heart, soul, and strength or heart, soul, mind, and strength.

As you can see, the main issues to where I see some of the issues with Donal's post are encapsulated in these three points:

1. Lack of inclusion of the "heart" as the seat of the rational and emotional. Often times it can be said that the "heart" or "mind" is grouped within the "Soul" because it is the "Soul" which is judged. However, what is imputed by the heart is what is ingrained in the soul rather than vice versa.
2. It is the "soul" or consciousness which processes and imprints the "heart's intentions" to become "actions." Thus, the Spirit is not actually warring against the fleshly body in a literal reading of Paul's lusts of the flesh. Rather, whether our actions are in alignment or not with the Spirit come out of the heart as per Jesus' words.
3. Holistically, the Holy Spirit and temptation war for our spirit — our heart, soul, and body — to do the right or wrong thing respectively.



The Spirit, Soul, Heart, and Flesh all interact in a certain way to form one whole. The key then is to get our spirits in alignment with the Holy Spirit which is performed by aligning our heart, soul, and flesh to pursue truth and righteousness.

That's it for now. Comments are welcome.

alpha beta misunderstandings

November 12, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In understanding the world and the mission I provided a chart that conveys the nature of how masculinity and femininity interact with good and evil.

I did make a slight mistake on this chart which I want to point out which is that Jezebel and feminism go up where "satan" is because they tend to hypermasculinize women by power grabbing, encouraging rebellion, and making women "strong and independent." However, that is besides the point of this post.

What makes a man attractive to women (or as we call "alpha") is raw masculinity which is typically shown through confidence, boldness, leadership, outcome independence, not making a woman the center of his world, and a whole host of various traits. Vice versa for women and femininity. Obviously, a "righteous alpha" is a man who acts with righteously and masculine. That would put him up closer to the examples such as Jesus and David.

On the other hand, "beta" traits are typically touted as provider, comforter, being nice, putting a woman on a pedestal, and the like. However, it is more accurate to say that some of these are decidedly unmasculine or righteous — which means they can fit anywhere up or down — which is why they are not attractive.

The issue to where the alpha/beta supposed dichotomy runs into trouble is that in Christianity we assume that the "righteous actions" are "beta" when they are not. For example, there is a vast difference between a husband deciding that his whole family go help with a food drive versus a wife that drags her unwilling husband with her. One is showing leadership, and the other is caving to his wife's demands.

> A Christian nice guy may act righteously, but he is not unattractive because of his righteous actions. Rather, he is unattractive because he is not masculine.

It is very easy to get this confused and say the fruits of the spirit, being a provider, and whatnot are “beta” traits. However, that ignores the fact that a masculine man can personify the fruits of the Spirit — the so-called righteous alpha — while being attractive to women.

Understanding this subtle distinction is extremely important when trying to educate Christian men about the importance of masculinity. It’s not that you’re trying to push them away from doing good and loving others. It’s that you are trying to change the nature of how they act to agree with the nature that God has created in them. As I have stated before we are the only species on this planet that can actually act against our nature. All male animals behave male animals. All female animals behave like female animals. Yet, we have free will. Men can choose to act effeminate, and women can choose to act masculine. That’s what we see.

As I discussed in the 3 big elephants in the room and thoughts on authentic manhood, it is important to see that the vast majority of men are feminized. A lot of this has to do with the feminization of the church, but it is also the prevailing attitude in society and our education system. We tend to get a polarization of men because of today’s society:

- The only masculinity we see are “bad boys” because they are willing to boldly and confidently buck the feminized system.
- Hence, most of the Christian men tend to be educated away from masculinity — because masculinity is “toxic” and patriarchy is “bad.” Thus, they may end up seeking and pursuing righteous but effeminate in how they approach their life.

Because this polarization exists, some Christians in the ‘sphere inaccurately believe that that we must act “bad” in order to attract women when that simply is not the case.

In conclusion,

- Alpha = masculine
- Beta = unmasculine/effeminate
- Righteousness or evil is neither masculine or unmasculine but depends on what the attitude and actions are.

Act righteous and focus on becoming more manly as a a Christian man. Especially if you’re looking for a wife. Embrace the role of the head.

The varieties of dysfunctional relationship patterns

November 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's 1 right relalationship and 5 main varieties of dysfunctional relationship patterns that manifest between husband and wife. I got a bit of inspiration from this post, but most of it from examining the permutations of issues that crop up from the sex roles and responsibilities of husbands and wives in the Scriptures.

1. Headship and submission. This is the Biblical basis for relationship.
2. Inversion of roles. The wife is the head of the relationship, and the husband is the wife and submissive.
3. Rebellion. The husband is acting as the head of the relationship, and the wife is choosing to rebel instead of submit. She wants things her way instead of following his lead. This is the case with Cane's recent commentary.
4. Confused husband. The husband is not acting as the head of the relationship (for whatever reason), and the wife figures that she has to make up for it.
5. Confused wife. The husband is acting as the head of the relationship, but the wife doesn't know where she fits into the husband's plans.
6. Confused husband and wife. Both the husband and the wife don't know what the heck they are doing in the relationship.

Let's discuss all of these for a second.

Headship and submission

We've been discussing this extensively, so I'm not going to go into it much further. Both parties will be at peace in this type of relationship. Not worldly peace but supernatural peace due to conformation to God's specifically designed roles and responsibilities for the relationship.

Inversion of roles

> The wife is acting as the head of the relationship, and the husband is the wife and submissive.

While this type of relationship may seem like it's not prevalent, this is the type of relationship you get when you are egalitarian. Leadership will always default to one person in a two-person relationship, so if the husband eschews the responsibility then it will default to the wife.

This is what you usually see under feminism as well as egalitarian "Churches" and "Christians." The wife leads her husband around by a leash either covertly or overtly.

Rebellion

> The husband is acting as the head of the relationship, and the wife is choosing to rebel instead of submit. She wants things her way instead of following his lead.

> This is the case with Cane's recent commentary.

Generally speaking, the vast majority of relationship within devoted Christians fall into the category of #2 which is Rebellion. The husband IS a good husband, has a stable job, and is devoted to his wife and kids. Yet, the wife consistently challenges his headship either through nagging, constant suggestions on what to do and what would be "better," or wants her way on all sorts of different things. This is especially so when she is unhappy and/or her husband isn't attractive to her anymore.

This is the state that Dalrock has talked about in his posts the most. Churches that preach headship, but then tell husbands that the measure of his headship is his wife's happiness or pleasing his wife. This encourages wives to rebel against their husbands because they are made the measuring stick: "I'm not happy? It must be that my husband is doing something wrong… he should do it a different way instead."

Indeed, there's nothing wrong with striving to please your wife or do good things for her. However, when these things are performed in a dysfunctional relationship pattern it only leads to more dysfunctional results. The trap of this dysfunctional relationship pattern is that instead such things being done out of desire because you love her, they are instead done out of desire to earn her pleasure or sex. This only exacerbates the issues and ultimately leads to divorce more often than not.

Confused husband

> The husband is not acting as the head of the relationship (for whatever reason), and the wife figures that she has to make up for it.

In general, I think that most women would assume they fall into this category. However, what actually ends up happening is that when the wife attempts to "make up" for the husband at all she is firmly placing herself into the rebellion camp.

In reality, a husband may need the support of his wife, but he does not need her to take up his role and responsibilities for him. What this looks like is the concept of bowing lower (h/t Cane). Encouragement, joy, femininity, and genuine submission or following his lead will help him rebuild his confidence and leadership in the relationship.

Confused wife

> The husband is acting as the head of the relationship, but the wife doesn't know where she fits into the husband's plans.

From what I've seen there's two main camps that fall under here.

One of these camps is the one where "marriage counseling" actually works. The husband is busy with his own life and tends not to have much time for his wife. He may rarely express his love for her for whatever reason. This archetype is of the "unloving alpha" where the husband is already attractive but where becoming more seemingly invested in the relationship fixes it. Thus, the wife doesn't know how she fits into her husbands plans and wants to know how she does.

The second type is just another code word for rebellion and the most common. A wife that “doesn’t know what she wants” uses it as an excuse to do what she wants in the relationship.

Confused husband and wife

> Both the husband and the wife don’t know what the heck they are doing in the relationship.

I suppose you could call this the most common type of relationship because most men and women don’t go into marriage with any sort of plan at all. In most cases, this type of relationship will devolve into some sort of dysfunction because typically they entered the relationship based on feelings without any regard for how the relationship is supposed to work.

Conclusion

Confusion only exists in Christian circles because many Christians don’t even read their Bible that much. However, this is compounded by the fact that there are rarely sermons on what roles and responsibilities are in marriage. This is at best ignorance or perhaps willful ignorance, and at worst systematic rebellion due to wanting to gratify the lusts of the flesh instead of seek Truth.

In general, all of the confused variations of the relationships tend to get pushed toward wifely rebellion by society as well as the Church. After you eliminate the confusion and replace it with Biblical knowledge, there are only really 3 possible permutations:

1. Headship and submission
2. Inversion of roles
3. Rebellion

What the Church should be teaching is headship and submission. Love and respect. However, they don’t and generally either push to 2 or 3 depending on the Church.

The self deprecating husband

November 23, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the big things that continually irks me is the self deprecating husband because it is so prevalent in not just today's society but also the Church.

It can be blatantly obvious such as:

> My wife is my better half

Or it can be more subtle such as:

> I'm lucky to be with her
> or
> I want to honor my wife for putting up with me

Lucky? Putting up with you? Really? Is that how you think about yourself that you need to be put up with?

I'm not sure whether it's false humility like shallowness, or a genuine misunderstanding of the importance of the roles and responsibilities of a husband, or an unconscious belief that the wife is actually leading the marriage, or flattery, or a husband thinking he needs the permission of his wife to be a man. Could be a combination.

Why do you think husbands think that they need to put themselves down when honoring or talking about their wives?

It's obviously not godly, so there needs to be a reason behind this ungodly behavior that satisfies the lust of the flesh.

The two dysfunctional mindsets that men suffer from in relationships

December 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been busy with Thanksgiving and traveling! Back to writing.

One of the things I've discussed before although not extensively is that men and husbands often fall into the trap of thinking that their girlfriend or wife should love them for who they are. This is one of the more difficult concepts to understand because it means having a firm knowledge of the differing roles and responsibilities and the attitudes that come with them.

There are multiple instances and people in your life that will generally love you for who you are:

- The Father because He created all of us in His own image. This includes Jesus and the Holy Spirit.
- Our parents will tend to be the role models for showing us that we are loved.

In general, love is interrelated with authority. God is love. God is good. God has the ultimate authority. Therefore, He that is all authority, all good, and all love displays it in all ways.

The trouble begins when men and husbands believe that their girlfriends and wives should love them for who they are. There is a general command that Christians love one another. This is good. However, it is not specific to the husband-wife relationship and is instead a general Christian command.

The reason why wives are commanded to respect their husbands and not to love them because that is the important part of the specific roles and responsibilities of the wife. Indeed, respect/fear and trust is what leads to submission. Respect and fear in particular are key to fixing dysfunctional marriage relationships. Headship/authority and submission bring about order within the marriage relationship as the two are one. Thus, the specificity of particular relationship commands has priority over the general commands. Indeed, the problem with mutual submission has been well explored.

I am not against women or wives loving their husbands. Women and wives will often express that romantically in a relationship. However, it is important to note that respect is more important.

> Love does not feed and nourish men and husbands. However, women and wives can nourish their men and husbands with their respect.
> - Men are to love women
> - Women are to respect men

This is a key for relationships between men and women. If a man is feeling unloved by his girl or a husband is feeling unloved by his wife he should check his priorities. It is more important to be concerned about a lack of respect than a lack of love from a wife. There is an interesting subtlety of this dynamic that you can only see in hindsight.

The two relationship dysfunctional mindsets

Now that I have laid a bit of the groundwork lets move on.

> Dysfunction #1: If a husband is feeling unloved by his wife that that means he has already seceded headship to her by some measure because he is in the wrong mindset.

If the primary relationship was for wives to love husbands and for husbands to respect their wives which is often the case in dysfunctional relationships, then this will lead to obvious conclusions.

- Husbands that respect their wives will submit to them.
- Wives that love their husbands will be the head over them.

We already know how the attitudes of love and respect accurately convey the nature of headship and submission. Thus, it only proves how you approach the relationship out of a particular mindset will lead to a dysfunctional or good dynamic within a particular relationship.

> Dysfunction #2: On the the other hand, if a husband feels disrespect by his wife that should lead him to the opportunity to exert headship by admonishing her. Fearing the response of his wife in admonishment is a sign of a dysfunctional relationship.

What is missing in this case is often that the husband needs to get over his fear of his wife. Note that this "fear" of the wife is the same type of fear of authority. If you fear your own wife that is the same as putting her on a pedestal and setting her up as the head of the relationship.

Conclusions

This leads to two conclusions:

1. If you see a lack of respect from your woman or wife you can see your own failure. You fear your woman/wife and how she will react because you have put her up on a pedestal and head of the relationship.
2. If you feel unloved by your woman or wife you are deceived. You incorrectly believe that in a relationship your woman or wife is supposed to love you when that simply is not the case in a godly relationship.

Both of these dysfunctions may result in a myriad of different dysfunctional relationship patterns. Identifying which dysfunctional relationship mindset you are in will go a long way to fixing it.

Blinded by infatuation

December 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wintery Knight has already written on this, but there are more details which reveal much more of the picture.

In case you've been living under a rock, Tim Tebow was dumped by Olivia Culpo who was a Miss Universe for not having sex with her.

> The couple started dating in October, but Olivia didn't quite realize how serious Tim was about his virginity vow. According to NYMag, once she understood that he wasn't going to budge on abstaining from sex, she ended the relationship.
> An anonymous source told the New York Daily News, "He was really into her, he was sending her love letters and cute notes and professing his love for her. She had to break up with him because she just couldn't handle it. He still hits her up, but she just can't deal with the sex thing. He's pretty adamant about it, I guess."
> Culpo has apparently been in prior relationships where she's managed to get guys to break their chastity vows, but Tebow proved to be a tougher one to crack.
> She also dated Nick Jonas, who took off his purity ring not long after their relationship began. After he started dating Culpo, Jonas stated that waiting for marriage "is not something I'm doing anymore."

Assuming these details are true (which may not necessarily be the case and if so I will retract this post), it's clear that Tim is blinded by infatuation.

Obviously, Tim made a good decision to abstain from sex until marriage. However, it was preceded by a couple of bad decisions. These bad decisions have been summarily ignored by the vast majority of Christians excluding Wintery Knight.

The bad decisions were as follows:

1. Dating a woman who was has gotten men to break their chastity vows. Not exactly what you want for your wife as a Christian.
2. Blinded by infatuation: professing love, cute notes, and sending love letters after being in the relationship for a month. This is the name of the post for good reason.
3. Continually hitting her up after she dumped him because he stuck to his guns. Does he think her promiscuous character is magically going to change, and she's going to become good wife material?

That being said props to him because he stuck to his abstinence even in the face of great temptation. In reality, I don't know if any of us would be able to say that we would be able to stick to chastity if we had a Miss Universe practically throwing herself at us.

However, it was unwise for him to put himself in that situation.

If he had sex with her then she would most likely eventually break up with him like she did Nick Jonas. Based on her two pasts relationships and one conquest it seems she is into playing power games for validation. Is she pretty enough to cause men with abstinence professions to break their pledge?

If he didn't have sex with her and they got married her character is still extremely unlikely to change. He will end up being divorced in the future married to someone like her. How bad the damage would be no one could guess.

Very unwise decision based on the extrapolation of long term decision making. Every man wants someone who is pretty or beautiful to them. There's nothing wrong with that. Don't let infatuation or beauty get ahead of vetting for character and obedience to God.

Unfortunately, Tim has a bad record with dating beautiful but [likely] unchaste women:

> When he split with girlfriend Camilla Belle after a couple of months in 2012, it was also widely speculated at the time that the Disney channel star was bothered by his chastity.

Therefore, this story may have an unhappy and ungodly ending if he continues to not vet the women he wants to date and marry for character and obedience to God.

How long should one wait for marriage

December 7, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A commenter writes in by e-mail:

> I would like to preface this by saying I am quite young. Young enough that it will neither be possible or rational to get married in the immediate future.
> I have heard from many of the men in my life, whom I respect, that the best way to get married is to finish high school, finish college, get your career started, and then finally begin looking for a wife in your late 20s early 30s. Basically to spend 10+ adult years living alone and completely celibate. I think you can see the disadvantages to this, such as women of quality being sparse at that age.
> I have also heard some say that you should get married as young as possible. However, the problem with this is that marriage is a lifelong commitment, and people between the ages of 18-22 simply are not ready to make that decision.

Before I start in with any advice, it is important to recognize that this is the most common general life script that you will see out there. This life script comes from many difference places such as family, friends, relatives, church members, or others. I noted this in my 5 step process to maturity in relationships.

Based on my experience, I would not recommend operating by this life script. I went to graduate school and finished roughly around age 27 which is approximately the same time I found the manosphere and also started my search for a wife. It took me about 2-2.5 years, a large amount of godly and masculine development, and a very proactive search to find my current girlfriend and hopefully soon to be fiance. I would consider myself somewhat blessed in this area as I know many Christian men especially in the 'sphere are still searching for a godly woman.

Now, that's not to say I couldn't find any godly women. However, meeting stringent standards for godliness while also other criteria selectively eliminates a large portion of the women that you would find in most Churches due to the prevalence of Churchianity.

On the flipside, women that are 18-22 like the commenter states are simply not ready for marriage either given the current state of parenting on relationships which is little to none for most people. However, one cannot deny that there is a higher likelihood of finding attractive young women on a university campus as opposed to out in the workforce simply due to proximity, higher metabolisms, higher percentages that workout, and hopefully less gluttony.

If I had to do it all over again this is what I would recommend if you are going the university route:

Ages 18-20 — focus on school, godly growth, working out, and joining your local Church and Christian clubs on campus. It's possible that you will find a godly woman to grow together with at this point, but probably unlikely. Due to being "new" on campus it's unlikely that you will have any sort of status or experience to which women are typically attracted. Thus, spend your time wisely focusing on the things that are important.

Ages 20-22 — continue focusing on school, internships, and graduation. Also, it is important to learn how to start to become a leader if you have not already. Due to your godly growth taking a leadership position, Bible study/small group leader, musical, or other type of position will help you learn how to apply your talents and become a godly leader, and it will be attractive to godly women if you're looking for a wife.

Additionally, it's at this time where you have a higher status due to being older and hopefully more experienced that it's much easier to ask women out on dates and have them say yes. This is not to say that you shouldn't in the earlier years, but the success rate should increase.

Ages 22-25 — Depending on the career path you chose you may be taking a job or going to graduate school. It doesn't really matter which one.

Graduate school is the perfect time to find a wife if you haven't already started cultivating a relationship in the age 20-22 range. Most programs are not super intensive so you still should have a decent amount of time free. Not as much as undergraduate but definitely more than if you were working a real job. This is where it is important to stay connected to a local Church with singles as well as leadership position(s) within Christian groups at the university.

If you are pursuing a career right out then I would look into if you can still volunteer as a leader in the undergraduate or graduate Christian groups on campus or in local Churches. Having been around several universities many of the former leaders tend to stick around for a few years helping to mentor and guide the new leaders as well as interact and help out with the groups. This obviously can double with being the graduated older and wise man to the women undergraduates inexperience which many women find attractive.

In my opinion, this is the key time find and develop a relationship at which to get married especially if you want a lot of children. I know men who married right after undergraduate at ages 21-23 whose marriages are still going strong, and I know some who have married in the 24-27 range who are doing well too. Ideally, this is what you want to aim for in my opinion as you will be able to have children younger and grow together into old age as a family.

You still have some pretty good options in regard to attractive, young women if you are looking strongly in the 20-25 year old range especially around a university. It's likely that you will be able to find a woman who meets your criteria within 5 years.

Ages 26-29 — If you somehow don't find a godly woman within the prior age time frames all is not lost. Women who are younger still go for men, but generally once you hit the 30 women in their younger twenties are a bit more wary of you looking at them for marriage. You may have to start adjusting the age of women you're looking for up.

In the 28-29 range you'll probably be looking for a woman who is 23-26ish years old. I've found that women around the same age at you at this point tend to be more on the desperate side of things or what the manosphere obviously terms as the approach of the impending wall coupled with baby rabies. In my search I was looking for a woman who was younger who was family and marriage focused. This is important because it is of her own free will and not because her looks may start to decline or she is having biological urges to have children. Those aren't necessarily bad things, but it adds in complicating factors behind motives which are harder to suss out when you haven't had much experience with them yet.

Generally speaking, if you started your search when 18 and strongly started searching when 20 years old if you make it to 29 without finding a godly woman who is interested in marriage and your other selection criteria then you may have been too strict. 10 years of solid searching should be more than enough to find what you're looking for even if there were very few attractive, Christian virgins like I tried to calculate a while back.

Remember that the key is not finding someone who is perfect. The key is to find someone who meets your main criteria but is also willing to be your follow. Relationships require growth and growth is mediated through strong leadership. If a woman is willing to follow your lead you can help her grow together with you and God.

Ages 30-39+ — I'm not exactly single and at this point, so I cannot offer any specific advice on what I would do. Based on what I've observed, if you are in this age group then it's probably unlikely that you're going to find a woman in her low 20s who wants to marry. If you do then it's likely you'll encounter heavy resistance from her family and friends due to a significant age gap. Thus, you may have to start adjusting the age of women you're looking for up. It's likely that early 30s you may be looking for women from 25-30 and late 30s you may be looking for women who are late 20s to early 30s.

The difficulty at this point is that most people are relatively set in their ways. Thus, finding someone who wants to learn and growth together is going to be much more difficult. However, there are some Christian women who make it to this point who are continually willing to be stay at home moms and sacrifice for a family.

It's important to look for the selfless ones as opposed to those who are desperate for a family and children but still want to selfishly pursue career, extracurricular activities, or involvement with many different things. God, family, and community should be top priorities that you're looking for.

If you marry in your 40s you'll probably want to aim for an early 30s woman still so you have chances for a decent amount of children still. However, that's still far away from me, and I have no experience with that other than observing a few marriages that are like this. The men tend to be early 40s and the women are early 30s.

This would be my advice to young men who are in their teens and early 20s. If you are older find out where you fit in and adjust accordingly.

Based on what I've said before I would aim for about 6-12 months to vet and get to known each other and families well, and then a 3-6 month engagement before marriage. This may vary due to life circumstances such as school, family, friends, and whatnot. However, this would be my general recommendation in order to facilitate preparation for marriage.

I find that people who have been in a relationship for 2-5+ years before they get married tend to be complacent and more often these relationship tend to end up in separation or divorce than more reasonable periods of dating/courtship and engagement. I don’t know if anyone else has noticed this, but I think it’s similar to cohabitation where you’re in this somewhat pseudo-commitment for a long while. Then you end up getting married just-because rather than pursuing oneness and family.

For my readers if they have additional advice or their own take on what young men should start to do for preparation and searching for godly women in marriage feel free to comment.

Women need flavor with food

December 10, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've made the analogy before that reason and logic are like food and emotions are like flavor. A dish doesn't exist to women if it is separated into individual ingredients. In fact, individual ingredients are simply distasteful.

It's normal for women to find individual ingredients distasteful — marriage, fear, and dread or why I don't respect women — without the flavoring of say 'kindness.'

For example, if I explained the entire picture:

> Breaking a dysfunctional relationship pattern will generate two types of fear:
> - The "unknown" and "conflict" will cause fear.
> - The husband getting used to acting as the head will cause rational fear because his previous pattern of behavior was not particular trustworthy.
> The first is the fear of change. The second is the rational fear of authority exacerbated due to lack of trust.
> The fear of change should be dispelled with kindness: "I've decided to work towards becoming a better husband and father. Things will be different."
> The rational fear of authority is the same as which we should have toward the Father as Christians. Additionally, trust in authority takes time to build especially if there was a lack of trust already. This is a natural part of the healing process.

What is for men is not for women. The way men interact with men will probably offend most women.

It's natural for women to not understand unvarnished truth without kindness. This leads to the conclusion that being offended is not synonymous with ungodliness.

On divorce Part 3

December 11, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

This post is mainly for consolidating the Scriptures on divorce as I've participated in several conversations lately on the same topic. It covers much of the same material as the previous topics On divorce and On divorce Part 2. Thus, if you've read them before or if you don't care feel free not to read it again.

This is one of the original research articles that got me started on reading to understand what the Scriptures say myself. Read it if you have time.

The biggest thing that I learned from my discussions is that people don't properly understand the background of all of the OT passages on divorce and putting away which set the stage for why Jesus is talking specifically about putting away and not divorce. Hence, I am going to lay them out in a coherent way that allows us to discuss the context for which Jesus speaks about these things to the Pharisees.

Table of contents

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?
2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?
3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah
4. Malachi 2 — the background from the Old Testament to the New Testament
5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT
6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap
7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation
8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion
9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response on hardness of heart
10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture
11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage
12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary
13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke
14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce
15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives
16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses
17. Conclusion

Let's get started.

Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

This is outlined in Deuteronomy 24:

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in the OT covenant.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

This will be important when we look at the passages in Matthew.

Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective very few if any women that were caught in marital fraud were actually stoned.

Thus, what actually occurred is that when a woman was caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced. The reason for this is that such a fraudulent marriage was invalid, and the couple was not legally married. Hence, the "wife" could be put away because there was no proof of the marriage due to lack of blood on the sheets which illuminated her deception that she wasn't a virgin.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because this outlines a case for which a woman could be put away.

Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord is shown to follow the laws he outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

This is one of the reasons why Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity, and why Samaritans were treated like garbage by the Jews. They were no longer "Jews" because they have been divorced by God. This passage in Jeremiah 3 shows that God Himself divorces the Israelites, gives her a bill of divorce, and sends/puts her away into Assyrian captivity. God abides by His own law that He gave the Israelites.

However, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away. This means that the Lord is still married to Judah which fulfills His promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as well as David that he will always have a descendant sit on the throne.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement (sêpher 'êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their > covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and deliveIf rs Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. In particular, Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The main background behind this passage is that “divorce” in surrounding cultures was simply putting away. Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. As you can see, this “divorce” of putting away is at conflict with the Israelite legal divorce process which was putting away with a writ of divorce.

There are two main reasons why the Lord was saying putting away [without a writ of divorce] was treacherous:

1. The husbands were receiving cash and prizes from putting away. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride’s father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry. Hence, Israelite husbands were following other cultures and not the Lord for selfish gain.
2. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would not be able to remarry as it states in Deuteronomy 24. Instead, she would still be legally married to her husband albeit put away like Judah in captivity. Since the husbands were not going to redeem the wives they had put away they were left destitute because they could not remarry without committing adultery.

This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus’ interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament.

Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

Since the OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek, we need to critically examine the Scriptures to see if there are synonymous terms that were used in order to understand if the Pharisees and Jesus were speaking about the Law of Moses. There are.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 5:31 It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement (apostasion): 32 But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, saving for the cause of fornication (porneia), causeth her to commit adultery (moichaō): and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced (apoluō) committeth adultery (moichaō).

G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on
Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Note: I crossed out the two instances of "divorce" within the definition of apoluo because apoluo does not denote a legal divorce according to the Law of Moses. Hence, Jesus would not have used apoluo to mean "divorce" because He does not abolish the law but fulfills the law.

Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap

Let's start delving into the line by line analysis given our solid background of understanding.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

First, the key word "every cause" is another instance of background that we need to understand the situation correctly. The Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for "every cause" due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article in question gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important).

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house.

Now, your spider senses should be tingling because that question is not what the Pharisees actually asked. This is the importance of understanding that a divorce in Jewish law is putting away AND a bill of divorcement.

> They did not ask Jesus:
> "Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) [and give a writ of divorce (apostasion)] his wife for every cause?"

> but rather
> “Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?”

If they had said “divorce” via put away + writ of divorce it would have been a basic trap that they knew Jesus could easily refute. However, this multi layered trap is complicated and goes back to it’s roots of being called out by God’s prophet in Malachi 2. Israelite husbands were assimilating culture by putting away their wives treacherously for selfish gain (cash and prizes) and leaving them unable to remarry lest they commit adultery.

The complexity of this trap question is that the Pharisees are pitting Roman law — the current occupiers of the land — versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could “divorce” your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo). However, as we know in Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriyththh). This is similar to other traps the Pharisees employed such as it being lawful to pay taxes to Caesar or God (Matt 22, Mark 12).

Hence, the trap. If Jesus answers that you can put away a wife without a bill of divorcement the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you need a bill of divorcement then the Pharisees can take Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law. The additional part of the trap that is subtle is that “every cause” is thrown in so that they are not referring directly to Jewish law but solely one liberal interpretation of it.

Obviously, this is a no win question, so the only right answer is not to play at all.

Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

Jesus knows that it’s a no-win question. Hence, He doesn’t play.

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus neatly sidesteps the Pharisees’ trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and instead discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees’ confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap. However, they now are not a bit confused. If God did not intended for any divorce at all then why was it written in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24 that they can divorce by putting the wife away AND giving her a bill of divorcement?

The fact that the Pharisees readily acknowledge that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement allows us to understand that the prior exegesis of the "trap" set by the Pharisees as indicated by Matthew is correct. The Pharisees were again pitting Roman Law against Jewish Law trying to make Him break one or the other along with throwing in their "every cause" theology.

Remember, they asked "put away" versus "put away with a writ of divorce."

Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds to the Pharisees that this part of the law was created because human hearts are hard.

This does not mean that putting away (or apoluo) is synonymous with divorce. Rather, it means that Jesus doesn't want "putting away" for any reason valid divorce or not because of the hardness of hearts. However, at best this is the only portion of the Scriptures where Jesus refers to "putting away" as all inclusive of divorce.

Next, Jesus goes on to talk about the only valid reason for putting away and not a reason for divorce.

Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

The first thing to realize is that Jesus is answering the original question that the Pharisees posed which is namely "what are the lawful instances of which you can put away?"

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

As we remember from Malachi 2 to the current Roman occupation the Israelite husbands were putting away their wives treacherously. Thus, it is important for Jesus to answer this question in order to clarify the instances of which a wife can be put away… not the instances for which a wife can be divorced.

Let's walk through this part by part:

1. Specifically, Jesus starts off with "Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife." Again, putting away is not synonymous with divorce as Jewish law is 2 parts: putting away and giving a bill of divorcement.

We recognize that Jesus knows what a bill of divorce is as He is familiar with Jewish law.

Additionally, the Pharisees just asked him about putting away (apoluo) and bills of divorce (apostasion). Hence, Jesus is only talking about the specific scenario of putting away a wife WITHOUT a bill of divorcement otherwise He would have clarified.

Next:

1. Jesus specifically says “except it be for fornication (porneia). “Fornication” is an illicit sexual union including incest (1 Cor 5) and includes adultery. However, if Jesus was referring specifically to adultery here then “moichao” would have been used instead of “porneia.” Moichao is used in the same sentence, yet it is not used here.
2. Additionally, in combination with “putting away (apoluo)” and “fornication (porneia)” this tells us that He is referring to Deuteronomy 22 where a husband marries a wife who is not a virgin by fraud. If it was talking about “putting away (apoluo)” and “bill of divorcement (apostasion)” and “adultery (moichiao)” this would reference Deuteronomy 24 on rules of divorce.

The Greek wording is extremely important to look at here because it tells us what Jesus is talking about and what He is not talking about. This wording absolutely denies that Jesus is talking about divorce and legitimacy of divorce due to adultery in Deuteronomy 24 and instead refers marriage fraud like in Deuteronomy 22.

> If Jesus was talking specifically about a legitimate divorce for adultery he would have instead said:
> Instead, He says:
> “Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, “except it be for fornication (porneia),

This becomes clear in the final part.

Next, Jesus says: “and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).” Let’s put all of the parts together now.

> Remove the “except” part for a moment. Jesus is saying:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for fornication (porneia)~~, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, […], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

1. In other words, Jesus is saying [under Jewish law] that if you put away your wife and marry another each of you commit adultery. This makes sense because if you put away your wife under Jewish law without giving her a writ of divorce then you commit adultery as you were still married to her! This is where Jesus refers to Deuteronomy 24 specifically on the laws of divorce.
2. As you can see, this directly resembles what was exactly happening in Malachi 2 and Roman times. Husbands were putting away their wives without a writ of divorce. They couldn't marry because they were still married to their original husbands. If they did they were committing adultery.

Let's continue the textual analysis:

1. Now, what about the "except it be for fornication (porneia)" part? The Pharisees rightly understood that in Deuteronomy 22 that if a husband accused his wife of not being a virgin then the proof was the sheet with the blood stains on it. If the parents were able to produce that (gross, I know) then the husband must pay a penalty and could never put her away as long as he lives. However, if the wife was guilty she was committing fraud by lying/deception by marrying her husband claiming to be a virgin when she was not.
2. Therefore, this "except" clause means that a husband COULD put away a wife if she had committed deception by fraud by claiming to be a virgin when she was not. Indeed, there is no covenant marriage formed between the husband and the wife if she fraudulently married.
3. Hence, a husband can "lawfully" put away his wife for that cause under Jewish law. This bring us full circle to the fact that Jesus fully answered the Pharisees' question. Under Jewish law a husband can put away his wife [without a bill of divorcement] if she had fornicated and deceived him that she was a virgin as there was no lawful marriage in the first place. Hence, he can put her away and it is not a divorce.

Thus,

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Putting away (without a writ of divorce) and marrying another constitutes adultery because you are still married to your former spouse. The exception is for a fraudulent marriage which means the marriage itself is invalid.

Now that we understand that Jesus was not talking about divorce (putting away + writ of divorce) but rather putting away we also understand that his original statement still stands.

> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What > therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Thus, Jesus says there is no divorce period. Any divorce is sin.

This also describes the only reason you can put away a wife is for a fraudulent marriage. For example, a wife that lies about her past sexual history can be put away because it's a fraudulent marriage. A covenant must be willingly agreed to openly and truthfully.

Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

1. The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce period. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fornicated prior to marriage as there would have been no covenant marriage formed.
2. Hence, they say that it's better not to marry since it would be a bad deal to marry if you couldn't divorce for any reason.
3. Jesus then responds that only some can receive the gift of singleness without women. This is important to note in the context of 1 Corinthians 7, and Paul's concession that it's better to marry than to burn. Both Jesus and Paul under the inspiration of the Father understand that many will marry because singleness has not been given to everyone.

No divorce period except for fraudulent marriages is a hard word indeed.

Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary

This also agrees with Matthew 1:19 where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus [r]Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been [s]betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

Joseph marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

The background behind these passages is that Mark and Luke were mainly written to the Gentiles while Matthew was written to the Hebrews. Thus, there is no “except for fornication” within these two passages when Jesus repeats the same thing in Matthew.

The reason for this is that since “putting away” was “divorce” for the Gentiles they should not do that at all. As they were not under the Law of Moses, this goes back to Jesus statement of original intention: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” There is no divorce for Gentile believers.

Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then > if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

Romans 7 does not speak specifically about whether you can legally divorce or not. Obviously, Deuteronomy 24, which Paul is quite familiar with being a Pharisee of Pharisees, states that husbands could divorce their wives.

Paul is instead speaking to the scenarios of being unbound by the law (in death) more than about divorce because He is discussing our salvation and grace versus works. In particular, husbands were allowed to divorce their wives in Deuteronomy 24; however, wives were not allowed to divorce their husbands. Hence, when Paul speaks to this scenario a wife is bound by the law to her husband until he dies [or he divorces her which didn't comment about in this passage].

1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

It's important to understand that the Lord is speaking to a Roman/Greek population in the Corinthians here and not the Jewish people. Hence, the Lord is speaking against the Roman law that "divorce" could be done through "putting away" or simply "departing" in the case of the wife.

Likewise, the Lord follows this up with the only correct path for those separated or divorced: stay single or reconcile. This is a hard word for most Christians because divorce and remarriage is not an option.

This agrees with Jesus' original statements on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

This also provides evidence against that Jesus was not speaking about divorce but rather putting away. Hence, Jesus did not say that you could divorce your wife if she committed adultery. Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. “Well, if I’m not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry.” That is not what this passage says at all. It only says that if they depart then you’re not under the bondage of the marriage anymore. However, it does not necessarily condone remarriage either. In fact, going back to the earlier part of 1 Corinthians 7 it would be best to stay single or reconcile if at all possible.

Overall, it’s not specifically clear so there is the possible that you are lawfully allowed to remarry. Although if this is the case I would personally recommend staying single.

Conclusions

Jesus is discusses instances of putting away (not divorce). Thus, His comments are able to be unified throughout all of the passages in Scriptures on putting away and divorce.

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the context of Jewish law. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16
2. However, putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus’ plan for marriage is that “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10
4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16
5. Under Jewish law according to Jesus: Your marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. Under Jewish law: Wives are bound to their husbands as long as they live [or until their husbands divorce them which was not said]. – Rom 7, Deut 24

7. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
8. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage. This can still be liberally interpreted as being able to remarry; however, the prior part of the chapter tends to speak against it since it says to stay single or reconcile. Note the wording: "10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord … [remain unmarried or reconcile]" versus "12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if [they leave you are not under bondage]." I take this to generally mean that "not under bondage" means that you are absolved of your marriage duties, but given the context of the wording about the Lord saying versus Paul saying it would seem that stay unmarried or be reconciled is the ideal. Remarriage is likely not an option. – 1 Cor 7
9. Remarriage is a singular sin and not perpetual adultery This is one of the falsely propagated conclusions from the heretical "You can divorce your spouse if they commit adultery" exegesis. However, the act of remarriage is a sin since the ideal is to stay single or reconcile. The important thing to understand is that it is a singular sin and not a constant state of sin. Confess your sins to God and repent. – Matt 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Cor 7 (See: Note 3 for more details)
10. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse. This follows out of #8 because the heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. Hence, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. Rather, this view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again. – Deut 24, Matthew 19 (See: Note 3 for more details)

Overall, the main conclusions are:

1. No divorce period. Even for adultery. Your only recourse is separation if you absolutely can't live with them.
2. If you are separated, stay single or reconcile. No remarriage.
3. Stay with an unbeliever if they want to live with you, otherwise you are not under the bonds of marriage.
4. Fraudulent marriages are not marriages.
5. While divorce and remarriage are two sins, they are not perpetual adultery. The phrasing "let man no separate" implies man can separate but it's sinful because of deviation from original design. See: Deuteronomy 24 why divorce and remarriage is not perpetual adultery. Going back to the original spouse is an abomination to the Lord. (See: Note 3 for more details)

As you will note, this exegesis properly aligns with both (?) the Catholic and Orthodox perspective on marriage (although I haven't studied all of the complexities of them so I'm not 100% sure). I would appreciate of the Catholic and Orthodox readers will comment on this. Most Protestant denominations are in heresy on the topic of divorce.

Also, for those of you who read this far can comment if this post is clearer than the originals I would appreciate it.

Note 1: This is one of the original research articles that got me started on reading to understand what the Scriptures say myself. Read it if you have time.

Note 2: Hopefully this is the last ever post I make on divorce. The logic and continuity of the Scriptures on this topic is clear that I need not revisit.

Note 3: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery I addressed in the comments. Essentially,

> 1. I agree with perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, “sacramental marriage” affirmed by the Church.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. If I remember correctly those that don’t undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn’t valid they are free to marry another.
> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Conclusion:

By no means do I think this is optimal, but we live in a broken world so this is probably the best human solution for it given the nature of Covenants and legal contracts. You have to be aware of the details and willingly walk into them for them to be binding. If there is ignorance or fraud they are not binding.

The influence of hypergamy on attractiveness and relationships

December 16, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Understanding attraction has always been one of the more interesting things to learn about. In particular, there's always been different articles about the differences in what "men" find attractive as opposed to "women." One of these is ideal male physique.

One of Donal's original posts is on LAMPS (or PSALM) and APE at categorizing female attraction into categories. These are:

- Power
- Status
- Athleticism
- Looks
- Money

In Biblical terms all of these fall under the command of dominion that God gave to Adam in the garden. Another way to recognize how this applies is to the roles of protector and provider of a family. Protection through power, status, athleticism, and looks and provision through money.

Taking a look at looks

The article is intriguing on the surface, but I think it emphasizes the wrong points. From what I gather, the main point of the article is that women prefer looks that are less muscular and more body fat than men overall. However, the truth is that looks in particular seem to be the most "adapted" to the actual looks of the female in question. For example,

> We've got Brad Pitt in first place with 72.5% of women finding his body the MOST attractive and 86.7% of women being attracted to his body. In second place we've got the musician Henry Rollins (at his smallest) with 11.8% of women finding him the most attractive, and 41.8% of women attracted to his torso. The MMA heavyweight comes next with 9.8% liking him the best and 37% finding him attractive. In last place with 1% we have three time Mr. Olympia winner Frank Zane — famous for shifting the bodybuilding world away from mass and towards aesthetics. Evidently there's still some shifting to do before he lines up with what women find aesthetically pleasing!
> No big surprise that the Fight Club sex icon took #1. What DID surprise me is that the healthy looking musician took #2 — outperforming the athletes and bodybuilders. And even the starving sex icon Ville Valo beat out Frank Zane, the king of bodybuilding aesthetics. Looks like a life devoted to achieving the "perfect" physique gives you the worst body according to women. Yikes.

> To make matters worse, 50% of the men that completed the survey (keep in mind these men are interested in physiques, or they wouldn't have taken the survey) want to look like Frank Zane (last place), vs the 40% that want to look like Brad Pitt. Woah.
> *Notes
> If we filter the data by girls that self-identify as athletes, Brad Pitt drops to 53.8%, the heavyweight jumps to 31%, and Frank Zane the bodybuilder jumps to 15%.
> If we filter the data by girls that self-identify as creatives, artists or musicians the opposite happens. Brad Pitt goes up to 73.3%, Henry Rollins goes up to 16.7% and the heavyweight build only gets 6.7%
> If we filter by girls that self-identify as fashionable, Brad Pitt drops to 66.7%, the healthy looking Henry Rollins goes up to 22.2% and the emaciated Ville Valo goes up to 11%.

The notes actually provide the most intriguing data in that the variability of preference for women changes according to population type. This should make complete sense to us in that women absolutely despise marrying down in any capacity.

If a woman is athletic and has a decent amount of musculature she will absolutely not want a man who is less muscular than herself. It will make her feel less feminine and also feel that the man won't be able to protect her as well as a more muscular man. Being a athlete and personal trainer myself I've never seen a woman date or marry a man that is less athletic, muscular, or ripped than her body is in appearance. It just doesn't happen.

This lends credence to the theory that some aspects of hypergamy seem to be predicated on "good but not excessive" rather than "infinite is better."

Money, where infinite is better

On the other hand, there seems to be no upper limit on the attractiveness of money. Money is one of the factors where more provision is always good provision. There is no woman that has ever said in this world that "you have too much money" so I don't like you as much.

However, generally most women seem to compromise on this point where a man should make more than them, but it's unrealistic for a man to make extreme amounts more than them unless they have the corresponding looks to compensate (e.g. trophy wife). The vast majority of women will lose attraction or start to despise you if they make more money than you.

Attractiveness (SMV) disparity influences trust

Overall, it seems that attractiveness disparity plays a role mainly in the protector traits as opposed to the provider trait. As we've already established, looks preferences seem to be variable depending on the actual looks and musculature of the woman herself. We tend to see the same with power, status, although not so much on the athleticism front.

For example, a woman that is of middling status and looks in her group is certainly attracted to the most attractive man in the same social group. However, if she does end up getting together with the man the relationship will almost always inevitably fail. Why is this? The reason for this is that typically a woman's own self evaluation gets in the way. If she knows she is only of middling status and looks in her social group then it's also likely that she fears that her man has the capacity to be stolen away by other better looking and/or higher status women in the same social group.

I've seen this exact scenario play out time and time again in many different social groups. Women tend to imprint their own fear onto men in these circumstances which leads to her being more "combative" or "nagging" when their man is in the presence or talking to other attractive women. They fear that he will just up and leave.

- Trust = a man's attractiveness – a woman's self esteem

Trust is the faith that a woman has in a particular relationship she is in or a relationship that she wants or does not want to get in. We'll get to self esteem in the next section.

In the context of the above, if a man is a "10" and a woman is a "6" it is likely that they will inevitably break up. Women in such disparate relationships will often let their insecurities become unmanageable such that the relationship with crumble. This is why "assortive mating" where 10s match up with 10s, 9s match up with 9s, and so on tends to be the norm while 1-2 disparity points are not a big deal. When we get into 3-4+ disparity points the relationship becomes unstable from the feminine perspective.

A woman's self esteem

Although a woman's self esteem should be grounded in Christ, it is often the case that a woman's self esteem — or evaluation of her own attractiveness — tends to be variable upon external factors such as attention. Indeed, the attention of men is such a strong pull that you have women who whore themselves out for the validation. Look no farther than facebook, instagram, and twitter: the trifecta of attention whoredom.

Generally speaking, a woman's self esteem is often inflated in the post-feminist world due to the excessive body and sex positivity messages. Additionally, the thirstiness of most men throwing out compliments and white knighting in hopes than women will like them better adds fuel to the fire. In this respect, many women often overestimate their own attractiveness.

On the other hand, there are few women who have the opposite evaluation. For example, women that were previously ugly or fat in their teens and "grew up" by losing weight, maturing physically, and the like often have a lower rating of their own self attractiveness than their actual.

This plays a significant role because it is not a woman's actual attractiveness that is her criteria for evaluating whether she should enter or exit a relationship. Rather, it is her perceived attractiveness. For example, if a woman is a "6" in real life, but she evaluates herself as an "8" then she will only date men who are 8+. However, if a woman is a "8" in real life, but she evaluates herself as a "6" then she will date men who are 6+. Thus, we can update our equation to:

- Trust = a man's attractiveness – a woman's perceived self esteem

Women will only establish a relationship with a man when Trust is a net positive. However, if there the disparity is greater than 3-4+ points the relationship is usually unstable because of insecurity. This is what drives assortive mating.

Likewise, we understand is that a man's attractiveness is perceived by the woman as well. A man may have mediocre looks and a mediocre personally, but after a woman finds out he is a famous celebrity she becomes instantly attracted. This effect also happens with the other vectors of attractiveness. For example, if a woman finds out a man has high status in the social group then she will be more attracted. If she finds out he has an amazing talent such as guitar playing or leading worship she will be more attracted. Hence, the equation is:

- Trust = a man's perceived attractiveness – a woman's perceived self esteem

A woman's social group, friends and family

A woman's social group is very important to her because women tend to be much easier deceived than men. Since a woman's mating prospect depend heavily on her own evaluation of her attraction and her own perception of a man's perceived attractiveness, her social group, friends, and family play a critical role in helping her determine if a man is a good idea for a relationship. There are both good and bad sides to this.

The good side of this is that if a woman has a strong, Christ-centered social group, friends, and family they will help to select a man of high character and integrity who is also attractive to her. However, the bad side of things is if the group is easily influenced by the world's ideals. In this case, women that are divorced or manipulative may influence their friends and family into breaking off good relationships at the whim of their own feelings. See: poisoning the well.

Disqualification factors

Each woman has certain disqualification factors which are essentially red flags with which she will never get into a relationship or have sex with a certain type of man. This could be anything from being non-Christian to not a particular race to not doing the same activities as her. Maybe she only likes tall, dark, and handsome. This updates the equation to:

- Trust = (a man's perceived attractiveness – disqualification factors) – a woman's perceived self esteem

If a man has disqualification factors are greater than his perceived attractiveness she will already have negative trust in the relationship without comparing her own perceived attractiveness into the equation. Hence, she won't even think about having a relationship at all.

Fame

Fame is a great equalizer. If a man is famous it can overcome anything due the nature of fame elevating everything: power, status, looks, athleticism/talent, and typically money too.

- Trust = (a man's perceived attractiveness – disqualification factors + fame) – a woman's perceived self esteem

Since fame can overcome disqualification factors it is added inside the parentheses before a woman compares herself to you.

Conclusions

The main equation:

- Trust = (a man's perceived attractiveness – disqualification factors + fame) – a woman's perceived self esteem

Understanding the variables:

- Trust = faith in the relationship. Negative trust means that a woman will want to exist a relationship, and hate having sex with the man. Equal trust means that a woman is generally ambivalent, and sex is okay. Net positive trust means that women will desire to stay in the relationship and desire to have sex with the man.

We see this play out over both Christian and non-Christian relationships.

- A man's perceived attractiveness = respect. A woman that respects a man is attracted to him and on a biological level will want to have a relationship and/or sex with him (not factoring in moral codes and disqualification factors).
- Disqualification factors are preferences that eliminate a man from potential relationship status, before a woman rates her own perceived attractiveness against his. If he doesn't pass then she has "never thought of a relationship with him before"
- Fame is fame as it usually elevates the vast majority of all of the vectors.
- A woman's perceived self esteem is her own evaluation of her attractiveness.

The difference between a woman who thinks she is more attractive versus being disqualified is the difference between "Ewww, I would never be in a relationship with him" versus "Ewww, I have never thought of being in a relationship with him ever." The former being she actually compared and thought about it whereas the latter is that you weren't even on her radar because of some preference that you didn't meet. However, fame can overcome this.

Perceived attractiveness has multiple components to it. Some tend to be assortive such as power, status, and looks. Others such as athleticism/talents and money tend to be infinite where more is better.

Christian love is different according to roles

December 24, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I mentioned this briefly on Dalrock's blog.

To those under authority — such as children -> parents, wives -> husbands, students -> teachers, subjects -> governments, Christians -> Christ — Jesus gives the command to love (agape) through submission and obedience.

> John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.
> John 14:8 "I will not leave you as orphans; I will come to you. 19 [c]After a little while the world will no longer see Me, but you will see Me; because I live, you will live also. 20 In that day you will know that I am in My Father, and you in Me, and I in you. 21 He who has My commandments and keeps them is the one who loves Me; and he who loves Me will be loved by My Father, and I will love him and will disclose Myself to him." 22 Judas (not Iscariot) *said to Him, "Lord, what then has happened that You are going to disclose Yourself to us and not to the world?" 23 Jesus answered and said to him, "If anyone loves Me, he will keep My word; and My Father will love him, and We will come to him and make Our abode with him. 24 He who does not love Me does not keep My words; and the word which you hear is not Mine, but the Father's who sent Me.
> John 15:9 Just as the Father has loved Me, I have also loved you; abide in My love. 10 If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love. 11 These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full.

To those who are the same or in authority Jesus gives different commands which are naturally sacrificial love and love for one another:

> John 13:12 So when He had washed their feet, and taken His garments and reclined at the table again, He said to them, "Do you know what I have done to you? 13 You call Me Teacher and Lord; and [b]you are right, for so I am. 14 If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet. 15 For I gave you an example that you also should do as I did to you. 16 Truly, truly, I say to you, a slave is not greater than his master, nor is one who is sent greater than the one who sent him. 17 If you know these things, you are blessed if you do them. 18 I do not speak of all of you. I know the ones I have chosen; but it is that the Scripture may be fulfilled, 'He who eats My bread has lifted up his heel against Me.' 19 From now on I am telling you before it comes to pass, so that when it does occur, you may believe that I am He. 20 Truly, truly, I say to you, he who receives whomever I send receives Me; and he who receives Me receives Him who sent Me."
> John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even > as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another."

> John 15:12 "This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you. 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

Does authority or headship have the "right" to "demand" submission and obedience? Yes.

As Zippy is fond of saying, "authority has the right to create moral obligations." However, let me expand that a bit.

- Authority has the right to create moral obligations that are followed through determining a proper course of action.

This is why children that do not follow what their parents say are in rebellion. Likewise, wives that disobey and do not submit to their husbands are in rebellion. Similarly, Christians that do not submit to Christ's commands are not acting as Christians and are in rebellion. Employees that do not submit to their bosses are in rebellion and may be fired.

However, we must all consider that children have the obligation of obedience. However, wives, Christians, and others have the obligation of submission which is to use free will to submit to the moral obligations of an authority or head. The difference is that children have no choice whereas the rest do. In particular, the wife opts into the marriage covenant, and a Christian opts into Christ as Savior. Although we don't opt into our governments, Paul notes that God installs authorities so therefore we are to submit and obey. Children, however, need teaching, instruction, and discipline to grow up to be able to make good choices which is why they are compelled to obey.

When you understand this, you can always determine the feminists and their insidious counterpart — "Christian" feminists — through the following means:

- Dislike of authority as bad, usually because of their experience with abuses of authority
- Do not believe in power of authority or headship to create moral obligations
- Do not believe in power of authority or headship to command submission or obedience
- Believe only that it is "free will" of those under authority or headship to submit. This ignores previous free will choices made which limit free will. Namely, previous contracts or covenants — such as the marriage covenant — which in light of a lack of submission are a witness to such rebellion.

As God is good, love, and the ultimate authority we know that all things created by God are good. Hence, all are created for Good. Yet, they are often twisted by feminists and those in rebellion as something bad.

Shades of rebellion

We've talked about this before, but I realized that I didn't codify it into a simply post. There's 3 different shades of rebellion which are overt, covert, and the twisted. While most of the egalitarian Christians favor overt rebellion, you will find that most of the complementarian Christians favor covert or twisted rebellion.

Overt: Overt rebellion brings out the "equal" card as a defense against husband and wife roles and responsibilities not understanding that they are two separate and distinct things. Human dignity or Biblical "honor" is imbued within all humans, although on earth there is no equality with regard to many things including beauty, talent, intelligence, and many other facets of human life. The fact that there is headship and submission, love and respect, and many other different forms of roles and responsibilities is different from honor.

Covert: Covert rebellion is shown in the wording used, and it is personified by those who don't truly trust. For example, much of the advice on complementarian websites to wives is to "let their husbands lead." Unfortunately, we don't "let" anyone do anything. We either follow or we don't. Christians don't "let" Christ lead them… they follow him or they don't. This type of covert rebellion signifies that the person is lukewarm. Typically, they may believe it in their head that it is true, but they do not fully believe with their heart. They may have good intentions — unlike the other forms of rebellion — but they still have not come to understand what it means to truly be a follower of Christ and/or their husbands.

edit: from the comments here are a couple of other examples from seriouslyserving: "The flipside of this is 'why won't my husband lead?' or 'how do I get my husband to lead?'" The vast majority of the time the husband is already leading, but it is simply not the way the wife wants. The question is a form of rebellion aimed at finding a way to get the husband to lead the way the wife wants instead of submitting to the husband's way of leading. The answer is simply to follow the husband's lead and root out the selfish desires.

Twisted: Twisted rebellion is what Dalrock has been covering with the example of the Kellers. This type of rebellion is where you call good evil and evil good. As it says in Isaiah 5 woe to those who do this. For example, the Kellers story is that his wife took out the fine China and destroyed it with a hammer, and that it was calculated. This caused her husband to listen to her and change. Obviously, this is against actual Scriptural advice from 1 Peter 3, but it is being taught in many churches that there is such thing as a "godly tantrum" that should be employed against husbands to get them to realized (see: cave into) their wives feelings.

In general, Twisted Rebellion is the most dangerous because it masquerades good as evil and evil as good. Covert rebellion is the rebellion that most women struggle with who actually want to obey God and the Scriptures. Overt rebellion of the egalitarian “Christians” is simply giving into cultural mores (see: the spirit of Jezebel) at the expense of following what God speaks in the Scriptures.

Most evil to the least evil in terms of intentions of the heart: Twisted then Overt then Covert

Note that all of these different forms of rebellion also apply to the relationship between Christians and Christ and other authority structures not just wives and husbands.

Where to start as a young Christian man

January 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> I found out about TRP a year ago, and the Christian manosphere about 3 months ago. You lot are all such a great network of guys! I quickly realise that my faith is so lukewarm compared to yours. I read self-help books more than the scripture. My relationships with women are messy and I try to come across with that godly masculinity you speak about, but I tell myself that if I were them, I woudn't choose me. I have ideas of what I am looking for, but am stumbling my way through dates. My mission is unclear. My biblical knowledge is not strong. I don't have a good group of Christian friends. Ahh.
> So my question to you is this (maybe you've gone over something like this on your blog but I haven't read it): What do you think a young Christian man should be doing (practically) to grow in godliness? Something like forming a habit of bible reading, prayer, loving others? Getting deeper into the text?

My advice is multi-faceted depending on where you are at. As a general beginner type of thing this is what I would recommend to younger Christian men. As an aside as much as I like to write about the dynamics of intersexual relationships all of the knowledge must be filtered through a strong foundation. This post is mainly about outlining a strong foundation before engaging in dating.

- Your faith comes first.

If you're not strong in your foundations in the faith then I would suggest the gospels especially John as it's very good at showing the love of the Father and Jesus. If you want to get a bit more in depth about faith and walking it out read Romans and/or Galatians (mini-Romans), Ephesians, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Hebrews, and James.

- Learning about how to be a man from the Scriptures

Read up on the life of David, a man after God's own heart, in his failures and successes which is found all throughout 1 & 2 Samuel, 1 & 2 Kings, and 1 & 2 Chronicles. Read the Psalms which are basically David pouring out his heart. Read Solomon's wisdom in Proverbs. Read Genesis on Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Obviously, the life of Jesus is a must read, but you probably already have read through the gospels to become stronger in your faith.

- Learning about how to deal with adversity from the Scriptures

Read up on Judges, Elijah, Elisha, Nehemiah, Job, Acts, the Prophets, and the life of Jesus. Bonus points for reading about the accounts of the disciples and how they were martyred for their faith.

Facing conflict and adversity head on and how to handle it is one of the most important things you can learn as you are becoming a Christian man.

- Learn about practical discipleship as man from the Scriptures

1 & 2 Timothy and Titus are letters Paul is basically writing to Timothy and Titus in order to disciple them to be leaders in the Churches that he helped plant. There's tons of practicals here that are politically incorrect such as 1 Timothy 2 and Titus 2, so becoming familiar with them and strong in your faith on these is very important.

- Find a godly mentor and godly friends

This honestly could be much higher up in the order if I were making it a list. Having a godly mentor and godly friends is critical for growth in developing as a Christian. Ideally, your family is Christian as well which can support your in this. However, sometimes that is not always the case. Although you "can" do fine alone we are not called to be alone on the Christian walk and indeed you will miss out on a lot of the "one another" verses littered all throughout the New Testament that cannot be fulfilled without being in fellowship.

As the verse goes… as iron sharpens iron so one man sharpens another.

- Know your identity in Christ and how attitudes play a role in your interaction with others

Behavioral cycles and Identity
Identity – Foundations
Identity Part 2 — Subtle Rebellion
Identity Part 3 — Internal and External
Identity Part 4 — Submit to the process of loving yourself
Identity Part 5 — roots and heresies of identity
Identity Part 6 — performance and desire
Your attitude tells me everything I need to know

- Prior to relationships

These are all things you should start doing before you even think about relationships in my opinion. The type of woman you want to date/court (or whatever you want to call it) is going to be a woman who is strong in the faith as well. If you are not strong in your faith then such a woman will probably not even look at you twice. This is the law of reciprocal where like attracts like in this context: if a Christian woman is willing to date you while you're not strong in the faith then it's likely her faith is going to be shaky as well. While it's true that women can and do follow their man's lead, this is generally not something you want to take a chance on.

Next, I wrote two main articles that summarize how I organized how I went about approaching relationships:

1. My 5 step process to maturity in relationships
2. A detailed timeline and how-to guide on the process of finding a wife

The 5 step process is something you should do before dating as it will help you outline your life and how the whole process fits into what you do and who you are as a Christian man. The timeline breaks down the dating/courting phase if you need an idea of what you do and how it can potentially occur. It's not a be-all end-all but it can be helpful if you like to have a plan.

The most important part of the 5 step process is to know and understand what God says about relationships. I listed all of the verses there including Gen 1, 2, 3; Eph 5; 1 Cor 7, 11; Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Tim 2, 1 Pet 3, and many others. Study them because they are Truth no matter what culture or even other "Christians" say which disagree with them such as egalitarianism. Much of the analysis of my blog is dedicated to understanding the interactions of masculinity and Truth of relationships from Scripture. For example, Dalrock's blog in particular exposes how a lot of mainstream Christianity is feminized, heretical, and twisted.

Additionally, if you want what I think are some of the most important posts on this blog check out the section on "Mission Framework section" in the categorized list of posts.

As always, if any commenters have other things to share that would be helpful for those new to the faith who are ultimately interested in a family feel free.

How do wives petition or win their husbands

January 6, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As many of you know, I'm always a fan of practicalities. Being made new is a process that involves removing the old and putting on the new. If you simply remove the old then your habits will resurface and you will eventually start putting back the old on again. The same is true spiritually as Jesus discusses.

> Matthew 12:43 "Now when the unclean spirit goes out of a man, it passes through waterless places seeking rest, and does not find it. 44 Then it says, 'I will return to my house from which I came'; and when it comes, it finds it unoccupied, swept, and put in order. 45 Then it goes and takes along with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there; and the last state of that man becomes worse than the first. That is the way it will also be with this evil generation."

As I discussed in shades of rebellion, Dalrock has posted recently about many areas where evangelical "complementarians" advocate a twisted sense of rebellion and call it godly. Here are some, but not all, of them which you can read on your own time.

Let's talk about some of the issues.

Red herrings

Part of the discussion that has cropped up in these posts is a peripheral argument that always comes to the forefront namely,

> "Should wives submit to a husband that leads or commands her to sin."

This question is indeed a red herring in the sense that it promotes unwarranted fear. The vast majority of so-called Christian husbands aren't leading nor commanding their wives to sin. However, this question is used as a strong arm tactic to undermine the authority of headship. In particular, the fear questions legitimate authority and sows the seeds of discontent and discord within relationships that lead ultimately toward covert or overt rebellion.

The discussion itself focuses on actions and actually misses the mark of what God consistently is aiming at in the Scriptures. Since this is actually not clear to many people, I want to bring up the actual examples from the Scriptures.

The preeminent verse and example is brought up in 1 Peter 3 on how wives are to win their husbands:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

The first part of the passage is straight forward. If a wife claims to be Christan then even if her husband is not a Christian she should act in the proper manner to win her husband:

- Chaste Attitude
- Respectful Attitude
- Gentle Spirit
- Quiet Spirit
- Submissive [to their husbands]

As you can see from the Keller's example of busting up China in Dalrock's posts that is being touted as a Christian example, this is completely and utterly false. The reason why God commands chaste and respectful attitude, a gentle and quiet spirit, and submission is because that is able to win the hearts of their husbands. Confrontation through strife is not a way to win the heart of the husband, and if he is a man that backs down to confrontation and does what the wife wants it is an inversion of sex roles. She has taken the head over the relationship through rebellion.

Sarah

The example given is Sarah to Abraham. The example of Sarah to Abraham answers the question "Should I obey my husband if he leads me into sin." Let's look at two specific situations.

> Genesis 12:10 Now there was a famine in the land; so Abram went down to Egypt to sojourn there, for the famine was severe in the land. 11 It came about when he [j]came near to Egypt, that he said to Sarai his wife, "See now, I know that you are a [k]beautiful woman; 12 and when the Egyptians see you, they will say, 'This is his wife'; and they will kill me, but they will let you live. 13 Please say that you are my sister so that it may go well with me because of you, and that [l]I may live on account of you." 14 It came about when Abram came into Egypt, the Egyptians [m]saw that the woman was very beautiful. 15 Pharaoh's officials saw her and praised her to Pharaoh; and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.

> 16 Therefore he treated Abram well for her sake; and [n]gave him sheep and oxen and donkeys and male and female servants and female donkeys and camels.
> 17 But the Lord struck Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai, Abram's wife. 18 Then Pharaoh called Abram and said, "What is this you have done to me? Why did you not tell me that she was your wife? 19 Why did you say, 'She is my sister,' so that I took her for my wife? Now then, [o]here is your wife, take her and go." 20 Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him; and they [p]escorted him away, with his wife and all that belonged to him.

Abraham goes down to Egypt, and tells a "white lie" and tells his wife to be complicit with his "white lie." Sarah, or Sarai at this point, is obedient to Abraham. However, in the passage as the story develops obviously you can see that none of the blame falls onto Sarai but solely onto Abraham. This is the power of headship as a covering. That which a wife does under her husband's authority is not her responsibility but his for commanding it. Likewise, > Genesis 20:1 Now Abraham journeyed from there toward the land of the [a]Negev, and [b]settled between Kadesh and Shur; then he sojourned in Gerar. 2 Abraham said of Sarah his wife, "She is my sister." So Abimelech king of Gerar sent and took Sarah. 3 But God came to Abimelech in a dream of the night, and said to him, "Behold, you are a dead man because of the woman whom you have taken, for she is [c]married." 4 Now Abimelech had not come near her; and he said, "Lord, will You slay a nation, even though [d]blameless? 5 Did he not himself say to me, 'She is my sister'? And she herself said, 'He is my brother.' In the integrity of my heart and the innocence of my [e]hands I have done this." 6 Then God said to him in the dream, "Yes, I know that in the integrity of your heart you have done this, and I also [f]kept you from sinning against Me; therefore I did not let you touch her. 7 Now therefore, restore the man's wife, for he is a prophet, and he will pray for you and you will live. But if you do not restore her, know that you shall surely die, you and all who are yours."

> 8 So Abimelech arose early in the morning and called all his servants and told all these things in their hearing; and the men were greatly frightened. 9 Then Abimelech called Abraham and said to him, "What have you done to us? And [g]how have I sinned against you, that you have brought on me and on my kingdom a great sin? You have done to me [h]things that ought not to be done." 10 And Abimelech said to Abraham, "What have you [i]encountered, that you have done this thing?" 11 Abraham said, "Because I thought, surely there is no fear of God in this place, and they will kill me because of my wife. 12 Besides, she actually is my sister, the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother, and she became my wife; 13 and it came about, when God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said to her, 'This is [j]the kindness which you will show to me: [k]everywhere we go, say of me, "He is my brother."'"

Abraham does not learn his lesson and trust God the next time the same situation pops up. He does the same exact thing again with Abimelech. The same exact scenario occurs.

The important thing to note is that both times Sarah is delivered from each situation by God. She did not choose to rebel against Abraham and refuse to do what he said even though lying is obviously a sin. God delivers her both time from her situation because she was in the right — chaste, respectful, gentle, quiet, and submissive to her husband — even in his doing wrong.

Abigail

Of course, there is only one other example in the Scriptures where a wife is disobedient to her husband and God honors her.

> 1 Samuel 25:2 Now there was a man in Maon whose business was in Carmel; and the man was very [a]rich, and he had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats. And it came about while he was shearing his sheep in Carmel 3 (now the man's name was Nabal, and his wife's name was Abigail. And the woman was [b]intelligent and beautiful in appearance, but the man was harsh and evil in his dealings, and he was a Calebite), 4 that David heard in the wilderness that Nabal was shearing his sheep. 5 So David sent ten young men; and David said to the young men, "Go up to Carmel, [c]visit Nabal and greet him in my name; 6 and thus you shall say, '[d]Have a long life, peace be to you, and peace be to your house, and peace be to all that you have. 7 Now I have heard that you have shearers; now your shepherds have been with us and we have not insulted them, nor have they missed anything all the days they were in Carmel. 8 Ask your young men and they will tell you. Therefore let my young men find favor in your eyes, for we have come on a [e]festive day. Please give whatever you find at hand to your servants and to your son David.'"
> 9 When David's young men came, they spoke to Nabal according to all these words in David's name; then they waited. 10 But Nabal answered David's servants and said, "Who is David? And who is the son of Jesse? There are many servants today who are each breaking away from his master. 11 Shall I then take my bread and my water and my meat that I have slaughtered for my shearers, and give it to men [f]whose origin I do not know?" 12 So David's young men retraced their way and went back; and they came and told him according to all these words. 13 David said to his men, "Each of you gird on his sword." So each man girded on his sword. And David also girded on his sword, and about four hundred men went up behind David while two hundred stayed with the baggage.
> 14 But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, "Behold, David sent messengers from the wilderness to [g]greet our master, and he scorned them. 15 Yet the men were very good to us, and we were not insulted, nor did we miss anything [h]as long as we went about with them, while we were in the fields. 16 They were a wall to us both by night and by day, all the time we were with them tending the sheep. 17 Now therefore, know and [i]consider what you should do, for evil is plotted against our master and against all his household; and he is such a [j]worthless man that no one can speak to him.”

18 Then Abigail hurried and took two hundred loaves of bread and two jugs of wine and five sheep already prepared and five measures of roasted grain and a hundred clusters of raisins and two hundred cakes of figs, and loaded them on donkeys. 19 She said to her young men, “Go on before me; behold, I am coming after you.” But she did not tell her husband Nabal. 20 It came about as she was riding on her donkey and coming down by the hidden part of the mountain, that behold, David and his men were coming down toward her; so she met them. 21 Now David had said, “Surely in vain I have guarded all that this man has in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that belonged to him; and he has returned me evil for good. 22 May God do so to the enemies of David, and more also, if by morning I leave as much as one [k]male of any who belong to him.”

23 When Abigail saw David, she hurried and dismounted from her donkey, and fell on her face before David and bowed herself to the ground. 24 She fell at his feet and said, “On me [l]alone, my lord, be the blame. And please let your maidservant speak [m]to you, and listen to the words of your maidservant. 25 Please do not let my lord [n]pay attention to this [o]worthless man, Nabal, for as his name is, so is he. [p]Nabal is his name and folly is with him; but I your maidservant did not see the young men of my lord whom you sent.

26 “Now therefore, my lord, as the Lord lives, and as your soul lives, since the Lord has restrained you from [q]shedding blood, and from [r]avenging yourself by your own hand, now then let your enemies and those who seek evil against my lord, be as Nabal. 27 Now let this [s]gift which your maidservant has brought to my lord be given to the young men who [t]accompany my lord. 28 Please forgive the transgression of your maidservant; for the Lord will certainly make for my lord an enduring house, because my lord is fighting the battles of the Lord, and evil will not be found in you all your days. 29 Should anyone rise up to pursue you and to seek your [u]life, then the [v]life of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of the living with the Lord your God; but the [w]lives of your enemies He will sling out [x]as from the hollow of a sling. 30 And when the Lord does for my lord according to all the good that He has spoken concerning you, and appoints you ruler over Israel, 31 this will not [y]cause grief or a troubled heart to my lord, both by having shed blood without cause and by my lord having [z]avenged himself. When the Lord deals well with my lord, then remember your maidservant.”

32 Then David said to Abigail, “Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who sent you this day to meet me, 33 and blessed be your discernment, and blessed be you, who have kept me this day from [aa]bloodshed and from [ab]avenging myself by my own hand. 34 Nevertheless, as the Lord God of Israel lives, who has restrained me from harming you, unless you had come quickly to meet me, surely there would not have been left to Nabal until the morning light as much as > one [ac]male.” 35 So David received from her hand what she had brought him and said to her, “Go up to your house in peace. See, I have listened to [ad]you and [ae]granted your request.” 36 Then Abigail came to Nabal, and behold, he was holding a feast in his house, like the feast of a king. And Nabal’s heart was merry within him, for he was very drunk; so she did not tell him anything [af]at all until the morning light. 37 But in the morning, when the wine had gone out of Nabal, his wife told him these things, and his heart died within him so that he became as a stone. 38 About ten days later, the Lord struck Nabal and he died.

The most interesting aspect about this story even though Abigail goes against the wishes of her husband is the way in which Abigail does it. Now, this type of action is on the complete opposite end of the spectrum that many advocate in the supposed scenario of a husband leading a wife into sin. Most of those who advocate disobedience if the husband is leading to sin never suggest that:

- Prepares a gift and goes out to meet David
- Gets down and bows to the ground (chaste and respectful attitude and actions)
- Is willing to accept the blame for her husband’s actions
- Tells of her ignorance for what happened
- Offers the gift
- Again asserts willingness to accept blame for the transgression
- Begs for mercy over judgment
- Points out that shedding blood, even justly, may cause grief

Giving a gift, having a humble, chaste and respectful heart, willingness to accept blame that is not hers, begging for mercy over judgment, and using facts to show how adding a weight to the soul is unnecessary are all good ways to show a heart for righteousness instead of evil.

Of course, those who advocate disobedience do not really have good intentions and are trying to undermine authority in the first place. It’s to be expected that they are advocating evil instead of righteousness.

Esther

The story of Esther is probably the best example of how to petition a husband that is a non-Christian [or disobedient to the Word.] First, we have the story of Vashti:

> Esther 1:10 On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Zethar and Carkas, the seven eunuchs who served in the presence of King Ahasuerus, 11 to bring Queen Vashti before the king with her royal crown in order to display her beauty to the people and the princes, for she was beautiful. 12 But Queen Vashti refused to come at the king’s command delivered by the eunuchs. Then the king became very angry and his wrath burned within him.
> 13 Then the king said to the wise men who understood the times—for it was the > custom of the king so to speak before all who knew law and justice 14 and were close to him: Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena and Memucan, the seven princes of Persia and Media who [e]had access to the king's presence and sat in the first place in the kingdom— 15 "According to law, what is to be done with Queen Vashti, because she did not [f]obey the command of King Ahasuerus delivered by the eunuchs?" 16 In the presence of the king and the princes, Memucan said, "Queen Vashti has wronged not only the king but also all the princes and all the peoples who are in all the provinces of King Ahasuerus. 17 For the queen's conduct will [g]become known to all the women causing them [h]to look with contempt on their husbands by saying, 'King Ahasuerus commanded Queen Vashti to be brought in to his presence, but she did not come.' 18 This day the ladies of Persia and Media who have heard of the queen's conduct will speak in the same way to all the king's princes, and there will be plenty of contempt and anger. 19 If it pleases the king, let a royal [i]edict be issued by him and let it be written in the laws of Persia and Media so that it cannot [j]be repealed, that Vashti may no longer come into the presence of King Ahasuerus, and let the king give her royal position to [k]another who is more worthy than she. 20 When the king's edict which he will make is heard throughout all his kingdom, [l]great as it is, then all women will give honor to their husbands, great and small."

> 21 This word pleased the king and the princes, and the king did [m]as Memucan proposed. 22 So he sent letters to all the king's provinces, to each province according to its script and to every people according to their language, that every man should be the master in his own house and the one who speaks in the language of his own people.

Disobedient wives curry the anger and judgment of their husbands. Whether the king was right or wrong for wanting to display his wife's beauty (whatever that meant) before his people, the fact that she was disobedient shows the vast majority of husbands will be in the face of a rebellious wife. Specifically, angry, discontent, wanting a righteous judgment, and the like. Is it no wonder that 1 Peter 3 speaks to wives to be:

- Chaste Attitude
- Respectful Attitude
- Gentle Spirit
- Quiet Spirit
- Submissive [to their husbands]

However, we have Esther who is later promoted to be queen. She becomes queen, and then finds out about Haman's plot against the Jews. She also knows that she will be breaking the laws of the land, or in other words sinning. The breaking the laws of the land and the punishment of sin are both death.

Esther 4:9 Hathach came back and related Mordecai's words to Esther. 10 Then Esther spoke to Hathach and ordered him to reply to Mordecai: 11 "All the king's servants and the people of the king's provinces know that for any man or woman who comes to the king to the inner court who is not summoned, he has but one law, that he be put to death, unless the king holds out to him the golden scepter so that he may live. And I have not been summoned to come to the king for these thirty days." 12 They related Esther's words to Mordecai.

13 Then Mordecai told them to reply to Esther, "Do not imagine that you in the king's palace can escape any more than all the Jews. 14 For if you remain silent at this time, relief and deliverance will arise for the Jews from another place and you and your father's house will perish. And who knows whether you have not attained royalty for such a time as this?"

15 Then Esther told them to reply to Mordecai, 16 "Go, assemble all the Jews who are found in Susa, and fast for me; do not eat or drink for three days, night or day. I and my maidens also will fast in the same way. And thus I will go in to the king, which is not according to the law; and if I perish, I perish." 17 So Mordecai went away and did just as Esther had commanded him.

Esther 5:1 Now it came about on the third day that Esther put on her royal robes and stood in the inner court of the king's palace in front of the king's [a]rooms, and the king was sitting on his royal throne in the [b]throne room, opposite the entrance to the palace. 2 When the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, she obtained favor in his sight; and the king extended to Esther the golden scepter which was in his hand. So Esther came near and touched the top of the scepter. 3 Then the king said to her, "What is troubling you, Queen Esther? And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be given to you." 4 Esther said, "If it pleases the king, may the king and Haman come this day to the banquet that I have prepared for him."

5 Then the king said, "Bring Haman quickly that we may do [c]as Esther desires." So the king and Haman came to the banquet which Esther had prepared. 6 [d]As they drank their wine at the banquet, the king said to Esther, "What is your petition, for it shall be granted to you. And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be done." 7 So Esther replied, "My petition and my request is: 8 if I have found favor in the sight of the king, and if it pleases the king to grant my petition and do [e]what I request, may the king and Haman come to the banquet which I will prepare for them, and tomorrow I will do [f]as the king says."

Esther 7:1 Now the king and Haman came to drink wine with Esther the queen. 2 And the king said to Esther on the second day also [a]as they drank their wine at the banquet, "What is your petition, Queen Esther? It shall be granted you. And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be done." 3 Then Queen Esther replied, "If I have found favor in your sight, O king, and if it pleases the king, let my life be given me as my petition, and my people as my request; 4 > for we have been sold, I and my people, to be destroyed, to be killed and to be annihilated. Now if we had only been sold as slaves, men and women, I would have remained silent, for the [b]trouble would not be commensurate with the [c]annoyance to the king." 5 Then King Ahasuerus [d]asked Queen Esther, "Who is he, and where is he, [e]who would presume to do thus?" 6 Esther said, "A foe and an enemy is this wicked Haman!" Then Haman became terrified before the king and queen.

What is Esther's righteous response?

- Fasting for three days, and inviting others into her fast. I imagine they prayed as well.
- Obeying proper protocol for approaching the king
- Dressing up beautifully in her royal clothes
- Coming to the king and not demanding anything but rather giving a banquet instead
- Only after the banquet is underway does Esther present her request

She seeks God. She obeys proper etiquette. She makes herself beautiful. She thinks of giving before getting. She makes sure the king is happy with food and drink before requesting of him.

One last thing I want to note about Esther's situation that I have thought about but never made a post on. "Equality" is such a major issue in our culture. However, what the king offers Esther because she pleased him is essentially equality: "Whatever you ask for up to half my kingdom." Esther didn't ask for it, but the king was willing to give it. Wives win their husband's hearts through doing what the Scriptures say not demanding it.

Headship as a covering

The purpose of headship as authority and as the patriarchy is to protect wives and women. Headship and authority in the respect of those under it can be thought of as a covering of protection around them. Indeed, the blood of Jesus is a protective covering around us that shields us from the judgment that we are supposed to receive from our sin, and instead we receive Jesus' mercy.

> Numbers 30:1 Then Moses spoke to the heads of the tribes of the sons of Israel, saying, "This is the word which the Lord has commanded. 2 If a man makes a vow to the Lord, or takes an oath to bind himself with a binding obligation, he shall not violate his word; he shall do according to all that proceeds out of his mouth.
> 3 "Also if a woman makes a vow to the Lord, and binds herself by an obligation in her father's house in her youth, 4 and her father hears her vow and her obligation by which she has bound herself, and her father [a]says nothing to her, then all her vows shall stand and every obligation by which she has bound herself shall stand. 5 But if her father should forbid her on the day he hears of it, none of her vows or her obligations by which she has bound herself shall stand; and the

> 6 “However, if she should [b]marry while [c]under her vows or the rash statement of her lips by which she has bound herself, 7 and her husband hears of it and says nothing to her on the day he hears it, then her vows shall stand and her obligations by which she has bound herself shall stand. 8 But if on the day her husband hears of it, he forbids her, then he shall annul her vow which [d]she is under and the rash statement of her lips by which she has bound herself; and the Lord will forgive her.
> 9 “But the vow of a widow or of a divorced woman, everything by which she has bound herself, shall stand against her. 10 However, if she vowed in her husband’s house, or bound herself by an obligation with an oath, 11 and her husband heard it, but said nothing to her and did not forbid her, then all her vows shall stand and every obligation by which she bound herself shall stand. 12 But if her husband indeed annuls them on the day he hears them, then whatever proceeds out of her lips concerning her vows or concerning the obligation of herself shall not stand; her husband has annulled them, and the Lord will forgive her.
> 13 “Every vow and every binding oath to humble herself, her husband may confirm it or her husband may annul it. 14 But if her husband indeed says nothing to her from day to day, then he confirms all her vows or all her obligations which are on her; he has confirmed them, because he said nothing to her on the day he heard them. 15 But if he indeed annuls them after he has heard them, then he shall bear her guilt.”

The protective nature of headship is shown clearly in the Law of Moses. Men, widows, and divorced wives are all held accountable to themselves and under the binding of their vows. If a daughter or wife acts rashly with a vow, the father or husband respectively can overrule it before it becomes binding. The husband can annul them after he hears them and allowed them to slide, but he will bear her guilt instead. This is one of the fundamental mischaracterizations of patriarchy and headship. The reason why it’s there is not meant to limit or hold back. Rather, the reason why it’s there is to act as a protection. The important point is this. If a wife disobeys her husband she steps outside of the bounds of his God-given protective authority. When she does this she heaps the nature of judgment for her decision solely onto herself. However, if she obeys even in sin then the blame falls onto the husband and not her like the situation with Abraham, Sarah, and Pharaoh and Abimelech. This is why saying a wife should disobey her husband even if he leads her into sin is precarious advice. A wife that does so heaps judgment onto herself because she is walking out from the protective covering over her.

Conclusions

I’ll reiterate the previous section because it’s important realize the consequences for decisions that involve rebellion.

> If a wife disobeys her husband she steps outside of the bounds of his God-given protective authority. When she does this she heaps the nature of judgment for her decision solely onto herself. However, if she obeys even in sin then the blame falls onto the husband and not her like the situation with Abraham, Sarah, and Pharaoh and Abimelech.

> This is why saying a wife should disobey her husband even if he leads her into sin is precarious advice. A wife that does so heaps judgment onto herself because she is walking out from the protective covering over her.

There are quite a few righteous ways to approach situations in which a wife may need to petition her husband, especially if she is played in a sinful or no-win situation.

Sarah — Obedience to her husband even in his sinful lies. She is delivered by God Himself and is commended for her faith and obedience in Abraham in 1 Peter 3. Has a chaste and respectful attitude, a gentle and quiet spirit, and is submissive to her husband.

Abigail — Goes against her husbands wishes. However, prepares and gives a gift to the one who presides over her judgment, explains her ignorance, declares her willingness to accept blame for her husband's actions twice, begs for mercy over judgment, and presents a reasonable argument for why judgment is worse than mercy. God honors her.

Esther — Fasts and likely prays for 3 days. Obeys the proper protocol for approaching the king. Makes herself beautiful. Prepares to give first rather than receive and request. Makes sure her husband is happy and satisfied with food and drink before she makes a request.

As you can see, there is no real "one size fits all" way that wives in the Scripture can petition their husbands or their accusers. However, in each various example every wife was commended for the righteous way they approached the situation. You'll notice many of the themes are:

- Chaste Attitude
- Respectful Attitude
- Gentle/Humble Spirit
- Quiet Spirit
- Submissive [to their husbands]
- Willing to accept blame that is not theirs
- Begging for mercy over judgment
- Presenting reasonable arguments
- Making themselves beautiful for their husband
- Focus on giving rather than receiving
- Ensure that the husband's needs are met before asking

All of these can be traced back to the heart. The heart of the wife is not set against the husband but rather for him. She is looking to please him and not go against him even if the situation was sinful.

The goal of a wife in each situation is not to do the right actions (e.g. not sin) because there multiple righteous paths. Even Sarah who walked in Abraham's sin was commended for her righteousness and obedience and delivered by God. The goal is to win hearts for God through the example of the fruits of the Spirit and righteous behavior.

Masculine immaturity is placing responsibilities before roles

In alpha beta misunderstandings, I made the case that that “alpha” and “beta” (and delta, gamma, omega, etc) are not on the opposite ends of a spectrum. Rather, masculinity and femininity are on a similar spectrum where being “beta” is more like being feminine in nature.

Having thought about that more, I think that understanding is incorrect although there are plenty similarities between being “beta” or “effeminate man” and femininity most notably their unattractiveness to the opposite sex. It’s not that men who typically fall into the beta (and/or delta, gamma, omega) range are effeminate, although they can be. Rather it’s typically a case of incorrect or absent father-son teaching.

Thus, the reason that they are a lot of effeminate men who are unattractive to women is simply because a large percentage of men are being raised by their mothers. Whether they are single mothers, divorced women, or households run by the mom’s/wives it doesn’t really matter as they all have a feminizing influence on men. Some are worse than others though. It’s the mothers that are typically the drive force behind teaching their sons to act and play nice. It stunts their growth to manhood.

Manhood is taught

If we understand that the feminizing influence on men via society, women — single mothers, divorced mothers, women run households, and even Churches creates men who are stunted in manhood, then we should be able to identify areas where their teaching fails to create men. If we contrast this to what fathers impart to their sons we can more clearly see the divide between the two.

I think this can be most clearly seen in roles and responsibilities.

- Feminizing influences tend to stunt boys growth to manhood through heaping on the responsibilities without teaching them their proper roles.

Boys are taught that they need to provide and protect their girlfriends and subsequent wives. Heck, sometimes they are not even taught to provide or protect them as women are independent and they can do it themselves. However, these responsibilities are often heaped on them without emphasizing the nature of the role. Why do are these responsibilities what they are? Because you, as a growing man, are the head of your family. You have the role of the leader, and with it comes responsibilities.

The former heaps on responsibilities like a slave to the woman’s whims whereas teaching the role with responsibility empowers the growing man to make conscious decisions because it’s his family.

Likewise, there are plenty of “lists” floating around like the one discussed on Scott’s blog.

In this case, 20 things a mother should tell her son. It's a mother telling her son a list of his responsibilities in the relationship and life without elucidating to him the importance of his actual role in them.

Even being a "spiritual" leader is a red herring. This is typical of the Churchianity in that it likes to pigeon hole headship as spiritual leadership in order to limit the influence of headship on the entire relationship. The husband in the relationship not just the spiritual leader but also the life leader, emotional leader, physical leader, and all of the other aspects of the relationship.

> 1 Timothy 3:2 A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach; 3 Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; 4 One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; 5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) 6 Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil. 7 Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.
> 8 Likewise must the deacons be grave, not doubletongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; 9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. 10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. 11 Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. 12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. 13 For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

What does a man have to do with his family to be in a leadership position in the Church? He has to rule his household well.

How many times have you seen Christian mothers, fathers, or even the Church tell husbands that they need to rule their wives, children, and households well? haven't really seen any to be honest. Yet, how often do mothers, father, and the Church want more men to be leaders in the Church or at home? I hear this one all of the time.

This can only lead to the conclusion that no one — not Christian parents, not the Church — wants to teach the nitty gritty details of what the role actually entails which means a good rule over his own household. You cannot do that without authority. Without authority, there is only responsibilities. With only responsibilities, you are a slave.

- Feminism, for men, divorces roles from responsibilities, making men slaves.

Let's change gears for a second.

The problems of teaching responsibilities without roles

Since we have established that teaching responsibilities without roles lead to “niceness” or “beta” which is equivalent to masculine immaturity, it is important to recognize why this is the case.

Let’s look at the typical case of the “beta orbiter.” It’s a man who hangs around a woman trying to curry her favor and/or get her to go out with him by:

- Taking her out to places
- Paying for her meals, clothes, and other things
- Being emotionally available to her if she is having issues, ironically often when she has issues with her boyfriend, friends, or family
- Inviting her to events out with him, that are like dates, but not dates. She will deny they are dates.

What does this look like?

It’s a classic case of putting responsibilities ahead of the actual role. A “beta orbiter” is acting like a boyfriend without actually being a boyfriend. Of course, very few women are actually going to turn down free food, free stuff, attention, and support. Thus, the beta orbiter tends to get stuck in his ways trying to curry favor to hope a girl will back into a relationship with him.

If a man was taught the role or at least emphasized a role along with responsibilities he would know that it is unwise to pursue a woman that doesn’t like him back. To have a relationship both of you need to fulfilled your specific roles and responsibilities. In the case of a beta orbiter here is what you have happening:

- The beta orbiter is fulfilling responsibilities
- The beta orbiter is not fulfilling his role
- The woman is not fulfilling her responsibilities
- The woman is not fulfilling her role

Of course, since there literally is no relationship, the only one in the actual wrong is the beta orbiter who is fulfilling the responsibilities of the relationship when there is none to begin with.

Instead, when you teach men to act as the leader or head of a relationship, then you have the case where a man becomes more attractive by being confident and doing the correct things from the outset. He is not trying to back a woman into a relationship. Rather, he is focused on finding a woman to whom he wants to fulfill his roles and responsibilities, and also looking for a woman who is willing to fulfill her roles and responsibilities back to him.

- The importance of this cannot be understated as there is a lot of heartbreak if you don’t look for both fulfill your to her and also her fulfilling hers to you. This is the power of standards.

Standards, as long as they are not exorbitant or too sparse, empower you to find a mutually fulfilling relationship.

Conclusions

We know that manhood is taught, typically from fathers to sons. The reason why men are not men anymore is a variety of reasons, and feminizing influences are a large part of the problem. However, they are not the only part.

It is important to teach roles first and then the responsibilities that come with them. The roles teach you the meaning behind the responsibilities in the relationship. Feminism, which divorces the roles from responsibilities, makes men slaves.

- Without learning the roles, you become a slave because you do not know how to apply the responsibilities in a responsible manner. The role guides the process of applying responsibilities in a correct manner.

This can be clearly seen in the case of immature masculinity of a beta orbiter. He tries to apply specific responsibilities of a relationship to a woman in a irresponsible manner. You cannot do things for a woman to make her like you to be in a relationship with you. Any relationship that forms that way is destined for failure.

Instead, standards should be used to find a woman who wants to apply her roles and responsibilities to a relationship with you. Likewise, you should want to apply your roles and responsibilities to her. This will lead to a mutually satisfying relationship.

End note: The roles and responsibilities are the ones I always talk about such as in Gen 1-3, Prov 31, Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 3, 1 Pet 3, 1 Cor 7,11, and others.

Incentives

Recently, I've been rethinking much of masculinity in terms of roles and responsibilities after the previous post. Dalrock's recent posts on respect and who cares are important to understand what motivates men.

As it stands, the majority of men would rather feel unloved than disrespected.

> Emerson Eggerichs, best-selling author of Love and Respect*, asserts: "Women need love. Men need respect. It's as simple and as complicated as that." The foundation for his platinum-level former book-of-the-year is a theorized gender difference he identified by posing this question:
> If you were forced to choose one of the following, which would you prefer to endure…to be left alone and unloved in the world, or to feel inadequate and disrespected by everyone?
> In his original sample of 400 males, 74% said that if they were forced to choose, they would prefer feeling alone and unloved rather than feeling disrespected and inadequate (p.49). He collected data on a female sample and found that a comparable majority would rather feel disrespected and inadequate than alone and unloved. Based on this data, Eggerichs concluded that a wife "needs love just as she needs air to breathe" and a husband "needs respect just as he needs air to breathe" (p. 37).

I think anyone familiar with the commands of Scripture and be willing to soul search themselves would come to the same conclusion. The currency that is valuable to men is respect while conversely the currency that is valuable to women is love.

This is precisely why the commands of Scriptures to husbands and wives are unconditional. Namely, the husband is to provide love to the wife and the wife is to provide respect to the husband regardless of how they feel even if they are mistreated as stated in Ephesian 5 and 1 Peter 3. The unconditional command reverses potential negative behavioral cycles that may develop. This helps bind the marriage together, and it will help each spouse to work through any conflict that may arise because they are still getting nurtured by the other. This is exactly in the same vein as unconditional sex within marriage as stated in 1 Corinthians 7.

Because of free will, the natural desires of men and women can be warped. Men can be taught and choose to act as if they are women, and women can be taught and choose to act if they are men. Likewise, choosing to act against your nature will indeed change your nature.

> To test my theory that respect is equally critical for many women as for many men, I set out to profile the marriages of some of the smartest women I have known and their equally capable friends (The Lifestyle Poll). The first phase of

> In this group of 300 women, 75% reported that they would rather feel alone and unloved than disrespected and inadequate.In other words, within this group of highly educated, accomplished women, the tendency to favor respect over love was equivalent in degree to the preference expressed among males that was used to launch a best-selling book predicated on what now seems to be an inaccurate assumption of a consistent gender difference.

Thus, it should be no surprise that a woman who was taught since childhood to demand respect, to aim to be respected, and to be ambitious and career oriented would want to be respected rather than loved. Likewise, it should be no surprise that a man who was taught since childhood to be loved, to aim to find a woman who loves him for who he is, and to treat women with love as he would want to be treated with love instead of respect.

This is the common delusion of our perverted society that ends up promoting dysfunctional relationships where there is explicit role reversal. The wife ends up acting as the head of marriage and loving the husband while the husband ends up respecting the wife and submitting to her.

Dalrock correctly identifies respect as one of the incentives from marriage. Although I'm sure he knows the others he didn't discuss them. Other incentives are based in the roles and not the responsibilities of marriage:

- Respect
- To be the head of his own household
- Sex
- To father children (be fruitful and multiply)

The reason why the incentives are based in roles is because roles define the position. Responsibilities are added to ensure that the role is fulfilled properly as to the Lord. Fulfilling responsibilities when there is no role is the path to be ineffective and delusional as a man who tries to back a woman into a relationship by sending her gifts, complimenting her, and acting as her boyfriend when he is simply a friend to her.

This is why men that rise to responsibilities without a role are unattractive to women. You can't "earn" your way into a relationship. The role needs to come first, and the role is established prior to any responsibilities being fulfilled.

Generally speaking, if you want to ensure that men want to BE men and BE married then Biblical incentives must be strongly pushed so that men will want to be married.

- What man wants to be in a marriage where he is disrespected by his wife, children, the Church, and culture?
- What man wants to be in a marriage where he is not the head of his household and submissive to his wife?
- What man wants to be in a marriage where he is denied sex?

- What man wants to be in a marriage where children are a curse rather than a blessing?

Although culture continually disrespects husbands, it is exceedingly sad and disappointing that wives, children, and the Church continually disrespect husbands. Then the Church wonders where all of the men are and why marriage rates have plummeted. Right where you left them with destroying the Scriptural incentives for marriage.

If the Church and Christian women want to “solve” the marriage crisis then they first must understand that men will generally only want to be married because of the particular incentives of roles in marriage. This is why a single, chaste, respectful Christian woman who is kind and feminine is so appealing to men. It’s an attractive prospect because she exhibits the qualities of a strong Scriptural marriage.

Conclusion

- Incentives drive behavior.
- The incentives of marriage are primarily based in the roles of marriage as opposed to the responsibilities.
- If the Church and Christians want men to BE men and BE married then they must understand that the the particular roles of men are the incentives for the marriage and stop undermining headship, respect, sex, and children.
- Men that rise to responsibilities without roles are unattractive to women because the commands that underlie the marriage relationship are unconditional not conditional. Responsibility without roles is trying to earn the role through works.
- Single men that wish to be married should strive for the roles and not the responsibilities. Striving for headship/leadership and being respectable is attractive and leads toward the roles within marriage.

Incentives Part 2 — Replacing man up

January 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Incentives, we discussed how the incentives of the natural law of the Scriptures that drive men toward marriage. Likewise, we looked at how society and churchianity knock down the incentives of marriage and replace them with disincentives and sin.

As you know, I'm a big fan of the concept rooted in Scripture that if you remove something you need to replace it with something else. Thus, this post is aimed towards concepts that are a good alternative to replacing the typical man up.

Man up, especially from the pulpit, as Dalrock has pointed out before cuts men off at the knees. It's self defeating as it sets the tone that men should be working to please women and that women should be evaluating what the man is doing. Such teaching should be done in a men-only situation if there is a widespread issue. If there's not then there's no reason to preach at the whole body of men like that in the first place.

What if… instead of preaching man up from the pulpit, preachers instead:

1. Edify — Tell wives to cultivate and express gratefulness for everything that the husband do for them.[1]
2. Communicate — Tell wives to ask their husbands about all of the things they do for them that they may or may not notice.
3. Submit — Express your opinion but follow his final decision in order to bring about unity in the marriage.
4. Respect — respect your man regardless of if he deserves it or not as to the Lord.
5. Pray — Pray to God for thanksgiving and gratefulness for her husband while lifting up her husband (Phil 4:6).
6. Contentment — godliness with contentment is great gain (1 Tim 6:6).

Indeed, from having been around many husbands and fathers and experiencing discontent within my own relationships, it's clear that many women and wives simply do not know all of the things and considerations that a man does for a woman. Learning about them from him firsthand through asking and communicating is a great way to understand and be grateful.

Although these things are focused on the role of the wife, they affect both the husband and the wife. Likewise, a similar list could be made for husbands to affect their own view and their wives.

1. Edify — Tell husbands to cultivate and express gratefulness for what their wives do for them.
2. Communicate — Tell husbands to ask their wives about all of the things they do for them that they may or may not notice.
3. Lead — Lead your wife by making big and small decisions as they come up so she doesn't have to worry about them.

4. Love — Be patient and understanding with your wife and make sure she knows her opinions are heard and valued.
5. Pray — Pray to God for thanksgiving and gratefulness for his wife while lifting up his wife (Phil 4:6).
6. Contentment — godliness with contentment is great gain (1 Tim 6:6).

On the incentives side of things, it replaces the “man up” — or in other words, nagging from the wife backed up by the preacher — with a thanksgiving for what has been done. Instead of creating a negative behavioral cycle it attempts to start a positive behavioral cycle. The same thing occurs with husbands. Some things are generally Christian while others are role specific in the marriage.

What husband wouldn’t want to bless his wife more when she is grateful rather than nagging?[2]

> G3618 — οἰκοδομέω — oikodomeō — oy-kod-om-eh’-o
> From the same as G3619; to be a house builder, that is, construct or (figuratively) confirm: – (be in) build (-er, -ing, up), edify, embolden. Total KJV occurrences: 39

It gives a bit more meaning Proverbs:

> Proverbs 14:1 The wise woman builds her house, but with her own hands the foolish one tears hers down.

The Patriarchy

January 30, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Solomon posted in Dalrock's thread on not listening:

> Dalrock, you said "This is the very definition of complementarianism."
> I think maybe you meant this is the definition of today's upside-down, backwards, unholy complementarianism currently touted.
> Normal complementarianism is God's actual order. Man is authoity, woman complements/helps

Whether Dalrock intended it or not I think he used the right wording.

From the research I was doing a while ago, I remember the word "Complementarism" was only created in the 1960s if I remember correctly (surprise surprise) during the arrival of second wave feminism. If someone can confirm this I would be grateful. Note that even if it isn't, it is definitely a more recent term that originated in the 1900s which if it was earlier in the 1910-1920 range then that is the other general starting point of first wave feminism.

edit: Dalrock has the actual source which was from CBMW in 1991 which is even worse because they are trying to marry supposedly 'good' parts of feminism with Christianity.

Namely, "complementarism" tries to describe the family roles and responsibilities in a more "friendly" and "politically correct" way than the classical term "patriarchy" — husband led families. However, we know that "patriarchy" has such a negative social stigma to it that naturally Churches and Christians would want to avoid it due to persecution and negative comments.

Obviously, this has backfired because when you give an inch a mile is taken. Instead of standing up to the persecution that may have arisen, they gave in and used a watered down term. It's little wonder that the meaning of such a word that was already a concession has been twisted and warped to complementarians only giving lip service to husband led families.

The natural order created by God and affirmed in the Scriptures in families is the Patriarchy. Get comfortable with it and be ready to be persecuted for it.

Half my kingdom

February 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It's interesting that there are two places in the Scriptures where kings use the terminology. One used it righteously with graciousness and generosity:

> Esther 5:1 Now it came about on the third day that Esther put on her royal robes and stood in the inner court of the king's palace in front of the king's [a]rooms, and the king was sitting on his royal throne in the [b]throne room, opposite the entrance to the palace. 2 When the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, she obtained favor in his sight; and the king extended to Esther the golden scepter which was in his hand. So Esther came near and touched the top of the scepter. 3 Then the king said to her, "What is troubling you, Queen Esther? And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be given to you." 4 Esther said, "If it pleases the king, may the king and Haman come this day to the banquet that I have prepared for him."
> 5 Then the king said, "Bring Haman quickly that we may do [c]as Esther desires." So the king and Haman came to the banquet which Esther had prepared. 6 [d]As they drank their wine at the banquet, the king said to Esther, "What is your petition, for it shall be granted to you. And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be done." 7 So Esther replied, "My petition and my request is: 8 if I have found favor in the sight of the king, and if it pleases the king to grant my petition and do [e]what I request, may the king and Haman come to the banquet which I will prepare for them, and tomorrow I will do [f]as the king says."
> Esther 7:1 Now the king and Haman came to drink wine with Esther the queen. 2 And the king said to Esther on the second day also [a]as they drank their wine at the banquet, "What is your petition, Queen Esther? It shall be granted you. And what is your request? Even to half of the kingdom it shall be done." 3 Then Queen Esther replied, "If I have found favor in your sight, O king, and if it pleases the king, let my life be given me as my petition, and my people as my request; 4 for we have been sold, I and my people, to be destroyed, to be killed and to be annihilated. Now if we had only been sold as slaves, men and women, I would have remained silent, for the [b]trouble would not be commensurate with the [c]annoyance to the king." 5 Then King Ahasuerus [d]asked Queen Esther, "Who is he, and where is he, [e]who would presume to do thus?" 6 Esther said, "A foe and an enemy is this wicked Haman!" Then Haman became terrified before the king and queen.

The other used it unrighteously:

> Mark 6:21 A strategic day came when Herod on his birthday gave a banquet for his lords and [n]military commanders and the leading men of Galilee; 22 and when the daughter of Herodias herself came in and danced, she pleased Herod and [o]his dinner guests; and the king said to the girl, "Ask me for whatever you want and I will give it to you." 23 And he swore to her, "Whatever you ask of me, I will give it to you; up to half of my kingdom." 24 And she went out and said to her mother, "What shall I ask for?" And she said, "The head of John the Baptist." 25 Immediately she came in a hurry to the king and asked, saying, "I want you to give me at once the head of John the Baptist on a platter." 26 And although the king was very sorry, yet because of his oaths and because of [p]his dinner guests, he was unwilling to refuse her. 27 Immediately the king sent an executioner and commanded him to bring back his head. And he went and had him beheaded in the prison, 28 and brought his head on a platter, and gave it to the girl; and the girl gave it to her mother. 29 When his disciples heard about this, they came and took away his body and laid it in a tomb.

I noted before in Incentives that essentially this is a king granting 'equality' to a woman. Jesus does a similar thing with us in John 15.

> John 15:12 "This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you. 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

These examples show us that love elevates the honor and dignity of those under headship or authority to similar status. Indeed, the command to husbands thrice in Ephesians 5 is to love his wife as himself.

Many Christians like to harp on the fact that husband are to act like Jesus did toward His Church to their wives. Indeed, husbands are to "Love their wives as Christ loved the Church." However, how many of those same people would use the same language that Jesus did with His Church in John 15?

> John 15:14 "You are My friends if you do what I command you."

The implicit counterpoint is that we, as Christians, are not Jesus' friends if we do not do what he commands. Likewise, wives that disobey and/or do not submit to their husbands are not their husband's friend. Rebellion alienates. It should be treated not with more kindness but correction, admonishment, or rebuke.

This leads us to the conclusion that although this status is enjoyed by those under authority, it cannot be treated with contempt. Instead, it should be treated with humility and graciousness as in the example of Esther above. The attitude is respect, and the action is obedience.

Indeed, Paul describes Jesus giving us the proper example between Him and the Father as He submitted to the Father's will.

> Philippians 2:3 Do nothing [c]from [d]selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; 4 do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others. 5 Have this attitude [e]in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus, 6 who, although He existed in the form of God, did not regard equality with God a thing to be [f]grasped, 7 but [g]emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant, and being made in the likeness of men. 8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death [h]on a cross.

As this plays out within Christian marriages in our feminized culture and churchianity, it is often the wives who act more like Herodias' daughter than Esther. They treat a husband's graciousness and willingness to sacrifice for her with contempt and derision and exploit it. Look no further than the "divorce industry."

If you look for it you can see it everywhere. It's cliche to put down husbands and fathers. It's cliche to blame them even when they have done nothing wrong. Be on your guard and speak out against it when you can.

Attraction and the roots of dysfunction in relationships

February 4, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When discussing dysfunction of relationships in Dalrock's most recent thread, the question of why attraction is important has come up.

Churchian deception on attraction

First, it bears noting that most supposedly Christian pastors and counselors are peddling lies about [sexual] attraction. For example, most of them say that a wife's lack of sexual attraction for her husband is due to his lack of godliness. In other words, if a husband were "more godly" then a wife will be more attracted to him.

Obviously, we know this is empirically false. There are many such "bad boys" that women are [sexually] attractive to women and they often sleep with them. However, they also know they are bad for relationships. Christian women also fall prey to attempting to missionary date sometimes. Thus, we know that attraction may only be related to godliness but not the cause of it.

The unfortunate part of peddling this lie is the destructive idolatry that is set up within the marriage. If a "wife's attraction to her husband" is the proving point of a "husband being godly" then that means "her feelings" are being made into the "idol of what is godly and not godly."

Unfortunately, these lies are being peddled by most big Christian organizations and marriage counselors like Focus on the Family (FotF), Council of biblical manhood and womanhood (CBMW), and many prominent pastors. If you want to see what Christian marriage counselors look in Dalrock's post above for links to their quotes.

This is basic level stuff. Let's move on.

Created nature

I think the reason why Churchians believe that why godliness is THE indicator of attraction is because they believe that our base nature is evil. Many Christians have an instinctual fear that the desire for sex is evil, and I discussed some other reasons in Dalrock's post.

> I think that a lot of people are loath to admit that we have a created nature — Christians and even non-Christians — that affects us. It seems wrong to them that since we can think logically that our base nature — or shall we say instinctive nature — has any effect on what we do.
> Attraction, like feelings, are based in instinctual nature and felt on a visceral level. If you see a really beautiful woman you feel desire for her in your gut. This cannot be negotiated with logic. It simply is. Obviously, you can choose what you want to do with it, but you can't change it.
> Christians want godliness to be [sexually] attractive because that means that we > are making a “good and righteous” choice when we marry a Christian spouse. It’s very easy to be deluded into such a false thinking because it is an attractive lie. That’s the way we think it SHOULD be because we think that God would definitely not want us to be attracted to unbelievers. However, it goes against what we empirically observe in God’s creation which means it’s a lie.

> Ignoring the base created nature is not just a fallacy that Christians fall into but secular thinking falls into as well. Feminism, after all, is based on the false notion that we are born equal in that women can do any of the same things as men.

Our base created nature is good because it is God’s creation. However, much of this is twisted because many Christians are under the false impression that this created nature is evil, much of which I think is because of the fall and its effects.

Many Christians think that “the fall is the root of all evil” and thus “anything that feels bad must be evil” not realizing that consciences can be distorted. Things that FEEL wrong can be righteous and things that FEEL right can be unrighteous. For example, sex outside of marriage feels right but indeed it is wrong. Likewise, many times in marriage and relationships responding kindly to anger from a spouse is right but because of temptation it feels wrong.

The same mistake is made by Christians asserting that godliness is associated directly with the attraction that a wife feels for her husband. Feelings are not a determination of what is godly and ungodly.

Why is attraction important

The reason why I spend so much time discussing attraction on this blog is that it is important in two respects.

- Attraction is an important indicator for Christian men who desire to be married to achieve their goal. Marriage is obviously a good goal to strive for even though culturally it’s a sham with the laws slanted against men.

> 1 Timothy 4:1 But the Spirit explicitly says that in later times some will [a]fall away from the faith, paying attention to deceitful spirits and doctrines of demons,
> 2 by means of the hypocrisy of liars seared in their own conscience as with a branding iron, 3 men who forbid marriage and advocate abstaining from foods which God has created to be gratefully shared in by those who believe and know the truth. 4 For everything created by God is good, and nothing is to be rejected if it is received with gratitude; 5 for it is sanctified by means of the word of God and prayer.

Now, it’s not THE indicator, but it is AN indicator. Attraction should not be made into an idol. However, it’s important to know if you’re attractive or not and what you can do about it because Christian men and women likely aren’t going to marry someone they are not attracted to in this day and age. That’s just a simple fact that is nearly universally true.

THE indicator would be preparation for the Biblical roles and responsibilities of being a husband and/or wife. For example, husbands should develop their capacity for dominion (Gen 1,2,3), leadership/headship and protector (Eph 5), love (Eph 5), not being embittered (Col 3), honoring women as coheirs in Christ (1 Pet 3), and being a provider (1 Tim 5), food, clothes and sex (Exo 21, 1 Cor 7).

- Lack of attraction within marriages is typically an indicator of developing or deep rooted dysfunction.

I will use one of my responses in Dalrock's thread to elucidate on this point:

> Boxer nailed it (see above). The issue has little to do with the intrinsic value of godliness per se, but more about the woman's perception of its value. When a woman has learned not to [appreciate] godly traits in a man, maybe she is not the type of woman to be with in the first place. If [we endlessly] cater to what a woman finds [naturally] attractive, where does it end? What happens when she is no longer "naturally" attracted to her husband? Wouldn't that justify the EPL mindset?

No… you're missing the point. You can't change what women are attracted to, and it's not godliness. However, you can preach Biblical roles and responsibilities to women/wives which will restore their attraction for their husbands.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

It's natural for women to respectful and submissive — and thus be sexually attracted to — an authority. A husband walking in headship is the authority of the marriage and thus commands masculine power and status. For example, the common places in culture where women are naturally attracted to authority figures are clear with these being the first examples that come to mind.

1. Teacher-student
2. Boss-secretary
3. Doctor-nurse
4. Executive-employee

This should be manifested in two ways:

I. Wives who submit to their Biblical roles and responsibilities of submission and respect will naturally see their husband as increasingly attractive. The problem is that wives are NOT taught by older women to be respectful and submissive nor are they told from the pulpit to be respectful and submissive.

II. Men need to be taught that they don't need their wife's permission to act as the head of the marriage. They act as the head because they are commanded to by God in the Scriptures. This shift in mindset will make a man go from reactive to proactive and leading by example.

The problem is that our culture is feminized and this has led to the Church being infested with feminism. Preaching headship and love is cliche. Every church does that. If a Church is not directly opposed to feminism and preaching the hard word of submission and respect to wives then then issue will remain as it is and continue to get worse. Churches that cut their husbands off at the knees by continually beating them down will have the worst attraction problems in marriages.

A lack of sexual attraction in marriage is symptom of dysfunction not the cause. It's an issue of usually both the husband and the wife not fulfilling proper Biblical roles and responsibilities. In some cases, it's solely the wife being rebellious like in the examples in Dalrock's post. Finally, no matter how "bad" a husband is leading the marriage, a wife can always submit and respect. See: 1 Peter 3.

Where to go from here

Ultimately, this poses the question on where to go after identifying the issues surrounding the lies of churchianity and how attraction can be an indicator along the way. The answer to this is based in discipleship as I have noted before on this blog. This response reveals some good thoughts.

> "Godliness for all intents and purposes is the fruits of the Spirit."
> You've had some good doctrine in your last two posts, but here you've fallen victim to the very bad (or at least incomplete, in an effeminate way) doctrine you decry. God is not just Spirit, but also Father and Son.
> The Creed begins "I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth."
> Authority and power are godly as well, indeed the principle qualities which are, especially as pertains to a man seeking to lead a godly life, and thus to follow God's example.

Oh, I agree. The reality is that even Timothy wasn't like that because he was raised by a single mother and grandmother.

> 2 Timothy 1:5 [e]For I am mindful of the sincere faith within you, which first dwelt in your grandmother Lois and your mother Eunice, and I am sure that it is in you as well. 6 For this reason I remind you to kindle afresh the gift of God which is in you through the laying on of my hands. 7 For God has not given us a spirit of [f]timidity, but of power and love and [g]discipline.

edit: thanks to commenter micha on Dalrock's for letting us know that Timothy just had an unbelieving father. “Consider Acts 16:1, “He reached (also) Derbe and Lystra where there was a disciple named Timothy, the son of a Jewish woman who was a believer, but his father was a Greek.”” [editors note:I suppose having a non-believing father or absent father or weak father figure is similar in all of those cases]

The fruits of the Spirit are not mutually exclusive with leadership, confidence, power, strength, and masculine traits…. the only problem is both culture and churchianity beat the masculinity, leadership, confidence, and the like out of men and all you’re left with are shells of men who simply exist by acting godly but without the power. You’re right… it’s not the fullness of godliness.

The key to discipleship is to raise men to be strong, confident, and masculine that walk in godliness. For that the Church needs to be directly opposed to feminism and have mentors who can teach men how to be men. The current crop of pastors is doing a terrible job by piling up the responsibility on men without telling them have the corresponding authority.

The church has caved to culture in order to be “relevant” which basically makes poor disciples. If the Church actually wants to be relevant and move in power it needs godly, strong, confident men and godly, feminine, kind women.

[End quote]

Obviously, the answer is to prepare both men and women for the roles and responsibilities for Biblical marriage if they want to be married and to tell those who are married to walk in Biblical roles and responsibilities.

If this was implemented, attraction would cease to be a factor for most marriages because there would be no lack of attraction and sex in marriage. However, this is counter to feminism and the independence/emancipation of women to do their own thing. So it’s not likely to be implemented anytime soon, except in potentially your own sphere of influence.

Conclusions

- Attraction is not THE indicator, but it is a decent indicator of being able to attain goals for single men and an indicator of dysfunction for relationships and marriages.
- For single men who want to be married attraction can be used as a one of many gauges of progress. Obviously, preparation for the roles and responsibilities of marriage is the ultimate indicator, but attraction is a decent — not great — indicator of how a man is acting with women: masculine versus unmasculine.
- For married men attraction is not an indicator of godliness. However, it tends to be a good indicator of potential dysfunction resulting in neglect or ignorance of the roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife. Sometimes it both. Sometimes it’s only the wife. Rarely is it only the husband due the nature of submission and respect.
- The Church needs to overtly oppose feminism.
- The Church needs to focus on discipleship for men teaching them how to be men. The lack of this discipleship — often due to women initiated divorce and/or lack of > strong father figures — has resulted in men who are not strong, confident, masculine leaders. If the Church wants these types of men they have to implement programs to raise them up.

If you have thoughts or questions on where to explore these concepts next post them in the comments.

God created man, and God created woman out of man.

- Man is attracted to God's creation — her natural God given beauty
- Woman is attracted to man's creation — his dominion and what he creates

Creation and natural order attests to attraction.

> 1 Corinthians 11:7 For a man ought not to have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of man. 8 For man [i]does not originate from woman, but woman from man; 9 for indeed man was not created for the woman's sake, but woman for the man's sake. 10 Therefore the woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels. 11 However, in the Lord, neither is woman [j]independent of man, nor is man [k]independent of woman. 12 For as the woman [l]originates from the man, so also the man has his birth through the woman; and all things [m]originate from God.

Building off of Scott's post on Canonical Form.

Essentially, if you are a Christian then you know that things that go against God's law actually do not exist. Truth and the existence of Truth are firmly rooted in the metaphysical existence of God and all that He has created. Thus, anything that does not agree with the "Truth" is a "Lie." This is why Satan is described by Jesus in the Scriptures as a murderer and the father of lies.

> John 8:44 You are of your father the devil, and you want to do the desires of your father. He was a murderer from the beginning, and does not stand in the truth because there is no truth in him. Whenever he speaks [n]a lie, he speaks from his own nature, for he is a liar and the father of [o]lies. 45 But because I speak the truth, you do not believe Me.

We know from the Scriptures that marriage is between a man and a woman (among other details mentioned in Scott's post). Hence, the creation and/or existence of the concept such as 'gay marriage' does not actually exist in reference to the Truth. This line of thought should color aspects of our lives which I described in my post over there:

"There is a reason why I'm not offended by such things like 'gay marriage' and the reason for that is because gay marriage does not exist.

If many Christians were able to see that then they would actually be able to minister to those in those situations with God's love rather than condemning them. Much like is in 1 Cor 5 that everyone has been talking about recently.

> 1 Corinthians 5:9 I wrote you in my letter not to associate with immoral people; 10 I did not at all mean with the immoral people of this world, or with the covetous and swindlers, or with idolaters, for then you would have to go out of the world. 11 But [f]actually, I wrote to you not to associate [g]with any so-called brother if he is an immoral person, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or a swindler—not even to eat with such a one. 12 For what have I to do with judging outsiders? Do you not judge those who are within the church? 13 But those who are outside, God [h]judges. Remove the wicked man from among yourselves.

It's those who the Church who call themselves Christian that advocate homosexuality that should be "condemned" and removed [from the Church] (also see: Matthew 18)."

This does not just apply to gay marriage or homosexuality. Overall, Christians should be concerned with policing the members of the Church instead of those those in the world.

However, as I have mentioned before the vast majority of Christians are deceived. Often Christians are concerned with policing non-believers and not holding other Christians morally accountable for their actions. This leads to mass hypocrisy where Christians preach one thing to unbelievers while, at the same time, the unbelievers can see that other Christians are not living out what they preach.

Most other “hotbed” topics are like this. For example, take abortion.

There is beauty and fulfillment in having children and having a large family. Why do the Church and families insist on delaying marriage for convenience, careerism, perfect, money, or other things? Isn’t that what the world does?

The Church shows the world that it advocates against abortion, but by its own actions it doesn’t value family and children.

What if non-Christians could see the testimony of a well-run family with happy children? What if they could experience the joy and fulfillment that a large family has in its family gatherings? Perhaps that would change their perspective on the value of human life, children and family and turn them against abortion.

Almost half of marriages experience divorce, and many of the marriages that stay together are unhappy. It turns off many of the children growing up from marriage not to mention the incentives of men to avoid marriage because of the draconian laws against husbands. What if others could see and experience the joy of a fruitful and godly marriage? Isn’t that a testimony in itself?

In general, the Church has fallen to the deception of focusing on the wrong things. The Church needs to stop ‘taking offense’ and trying to police the world. Police your own, and focus on cultivating the beauty of your own testimony as shown through the light of your life. If we are indeed changed and transformed into Christ’s image then we should not only act like it but also value and prize it.

Doubling down on sin: the case of female self esteem

February 17, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock reviews the fact that many pastors and Churches have been deceived into believing that women's low self esteem is a sin. This is true. Cited are the numerous "letters to daughters" that keep coming out, especially from fathers to their daughters.

The concern of self image actually originates from Adam and Eve and sin. As sin entered the world, the concern of self image is raised upon a pedestal where it affects judgment and actions of those involved to an idolatrous nature.

> Genesis 3:6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate. 7 Then the eyes of both of them were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves [b]loin coverings.

The problem, mainly, with Churchianity is that it identifies symptoms of the problem and instead of revealing the nature of the deception it instead doubles down on more sin. Let's take a look at the curious case of female self esteem which is supposedly a large problem in the church today.

A problem is identified: women have low self esteem. Naturally, it seems intuitive to the vast majority of Christians that low self esteem is due to a lack of praise. Thus, the prevalence of "letters to daughters" or affirmation of women for their beauty and God-created identity is used to literally wipe up the blood from a wound.

Fortunately, science has shown that praise, especially to children, makes them more likely to be narcissistic. Likewise, emphasis on talent, intelligence, beauty, or "fixed" traits leads to kids becoming less successful adults than a focus on growth and change.

Now, note the context of my previous worded statement. Affirmation it typically used to wipe up the blood from the wound which does not actually fix the problem. In fact, it ignores the actual problem which is the wound itself while focusing attention on the blood. The blood is simply a symptom, but when it is made the focus it ignores the actual problem of the wound which is much deeper. Indeed, in reality a wound actually needs to be treated and cleaned, and it will hurt when that happens. Then it needs to be bandaged and properly take care of in order to be healed.

This leads us back to the case of female self esteem. Low self esteem that is compounded with sympathy of feelings, and affirmation of beauty or worth only doubles down on the sin. It may seem like it helps temporarily, but in the long run it encourages narcissistic behavior. Affirmation of beauty and self worth is chick crack. Anyone can see this by taking a gander over to facebook or instagram and see all of the photos that women post up in order to feel better about themselves.

If you read my posts regularly, you know that sin must be removed but it must also be replaced with good things. Otherwise, removing bad things only will only result in even worse habits eventually. This is rooted in the the Scriptures.

> Matthew 12:43 “Now when the unclean spirit goes out of a man, it passes through waterless places seeking rest, and does not find it. 44 Then it says, ‘I will return to my house from which I came’; and when it comes, it finds it unoccupied, swept, and put in order. 45 Then it goes and takes along with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there; and the last state of that man becomes worse than the first. That is the way it will also be with this evil generation.”

Indeed, the first thing to be addressed with low self esteem in women (and men for that matter) is that it’s a sin. Your self image is negatively affecting your ability to grow in Christ. It must be addressed and rooted out. Repent to God of believing in lies. Seek solace in Jesus, the one who saves.

> Matthew 11:28 “Come to Me, all [z]who are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. 29 Take My yoke upon you and learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. 30 For My yoke is [aa]easy and My burden is light.”

Then confront it with the Truth. Character and the fruits of the Spirit is what God highly prizes. A focus on self worth or self esteem is to be focused on the wrong things in the first place. It is making an idol out of yourself — whether good or bad — and setting it up before God as something to be prized when it is simply a deception.

There may be affirmation involved such as standing on the Truth that God created us for a purpose, and that He created us in our mothers wombs. However, this is to be distinguished from the “letters to daughters” and mindless affirmation in the fact that:

1. Admitting first that low self esteem is a sin. When it becomes a problem it is placing the self worth (whether high or low) on a pedestal instead of God.
2. Taking it to Jesus and repenting of that sin. “Jesus, I’m guilty of valuing my self image to the point where it is interfering with how I am living my life and my walk with you. Please forgive me.”
3. Turning away from the sin, and going in the opposite direction to highly value that which God prizes which is character, godliness, and fruits of the Spirit. “Jesus, instead help me to focus on things which you highly value such as good character, godliness, the fruits of the Spirit and help me to manifest these into good works.”

Only then is affirming worth in Christ valuable because the right steps are taken first.

Without first removing and repenting of the deception of the importance of self esteem leads to covering up the Lie with Truth. Covering a Lie with Truth does not simply make it go away, but it leads to deep festering rot which manifests in narcissism and systemic character issues and achievement failure in life. Lies must be excised with admittance and repentance, and then only can replacement of the Truth set you free.

Conclusion

- Low self esteem primarily affects women.
- Churchian thinking doubles down on this lie by affirming and catering to feelings to make it feel better. Although this may be done with the Scriptures, the root of the problem is not excised. This is highly unsuccessful in the long run and only cultivates narcissism.
- The lie of the importance of self esteem must be excised. As can be seem from Genesis 3, the importance of self image also originates from Adam and Eve's sin.

Excising the lie requires:

1. Admitting first that low self esteem is a sin. When it becomes a problem it is placing the self worth (whether high or low) on a pedestal instead of God.
2. Taking it to Jesus and repenting of that sin. "Jesus, I'm guilty of valuing my self image to the point where it is interfering with how I am living my life and my walk with you. Please forgive me."
3. Turning away from the sin, and going in the opposite direction to highly value that which God prizes which is character, godliness, and fruits of the Spirit. "Jesus, instead help me to focus on things which you highly value such as good character, godliness, the fruits of the Spirit and help me to manifest these into good works."
4. Then replacing the lie with the Truth of our value in Christ. That God so loved us that He sent His Son to die for us. That before the foundations of the world God knew us. That He knew us in our mothers womb.

Failure to excise the lie will lead to an attempt to bandage over the lie with truth without cleaning out the lie first. This is the problem with affirmations to make people feel better. It will only allow the lie to rot and fester more deeply until it manifests into narcissism and other destructive behavior.

Feminism is the promotion and glorification of rebellion

February 18, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been trying to think of a succinct and encapsulating summary of what feminism is since I've been discussing it a lot. I think I have succeeded on that front. However, if you think of something to add post it in the comments.

> "Feminism is the promotion and glorification of rebellion"

Why?

1. Destruction of patriarchy (male led families)
2. Destruction of family roles and responsibilities
3. Advocacy of no fault divorce rips apart families. 65-70% of divorces are initiated by women; of women with college degrees or higher it jumps to 90%. Also of note, wife custody of children accounts for about 60% of the motivation for divorce.
4. Pushes careerism and self exploration over the fulfillment of families
5. "Follow your heart" = "follow your feelings" = no long term thinking of consequences
6. Encourages promiscuity
7. Acceptance of LGBT: lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans
8. Birth control and hatred of children
9. Abortion
10. Fat acceptance and accusations of the shallowness of beauty
11. Demonization of masculinity for men
12. Demonization of femininity for women
13. Pushes women to be masculine and men to be feminine – rebellion and/or inversion
14. Detests authority
15. Typical SJW tactics such as lying, doubling down on lies, and projection (h/t Vox)
16. Shaming tactics

All of these things are seen as good by the world. On the other hand, there is a natural beauty and order within God's creation as seen through the Scriptures.

Feminism masquerades under the "good guise" of the theme of the liberation of women from oppression and the gaining of freedom. However, when viewed objectively at its actions, feminism is not only the promotion but also the glorification of rebellion against God.

> Matthew 7:15 "Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves. 16 You will [k]know them by their fruits. [l]Grapes are not gathered from thorn bushes nor figs from thistles, are they? 17 So every good tree bears good fruit, but the bad tree bears bad fruit. 18

> A good tree cannot produce bad fruit, nor can a bad tree produce good fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 So then, you will [m]know them by their fruits.

Good trees bear good fruit, and bad trees bear bad fruit. Look at the fruit of feminism. It should be obvious that it is corrupted and evil.

How it manifests in Christianity leads to churchianity. This was started to be explored here.

> "It absolves women of responsibility for the origins of their own sins."

Within marriage and male and female relationships feminism aims at distorting the natural pairing of authority and responsibility. Authority is striped from the husbands and given to the wives under the guise of "servant leadership" or "spiritual authority" (e.g. not authority on anything else) or as Nova puts it "figureheadship". Corresponding responsibility is striped from the wives and given solely to husbands. Wives in this scenario are naturally more godly than men. Thus, husbands are made slaves to wives' feelings. As Father Marker puts it:

> Authority without responsibility is tyranny.
> Responsibility without authority is slavery.
> What this means is that in today's western world women have become tyrants and men have become slaves. So if women want men to "man up" then ladies you had better give us some authority to go along with that responsibility.

Thus, feminism is the promotion and glorification of rebellion. Also, see: Romans 1:18-32.

You cannot be a Christian and a feminist.

Ergonomics

February 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ergonomics is derived from two Scriptural Greek words which are:

- Ergon – Work (G2041) — these are the good "works" that we are to do as Christians.
- Nomos – Law or natural law (G3551) — often refers to the "Law of Moses" but also as general "natural principles" or "morality."

It is classically used in modern English as the study and adjustment of a work environment to more optimally fit the person working within it.

However, for our purposes I believe we can successfully apply it to Christians and how we set them up for roles and responsibilities within the family, Church, and community. Generally speaking, from what we see from the Scriptures is that older men are tasked with teaching younger men and older women are tasked with teaching younger women. For example,

> Titus 2:1 But as for you, speak the things which are fitting for sound doctrine. 2 Older men are to be temperate, dignified, sensible, sound in faith, in love, in [a]perseverance. 3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored. 6 Likewise urge the young men to be [c]sensible; 7 in all things show yourself to be an example of good deeds, with [d]purity in doctrine, dignified, 8 sound in speech which is beyond reproach, so that the opponent will be put to shame, having nothing bad to say about us.

We've discussed a bunch about the law and natural law before, but perhaps it would be a good idea to step back and take a look at what comprises natural law and human nature. If we can more properly define what these things are it would be much easier in learning how to learn and disciple others accordingly.

I have some initial thoughts, but I want to elicit some opinions on those these four questions:

- What falls into the category of natural law when we talk about the world?
- What falls into the category of natural law when we talk about relationships?
- What falls into the category of human nature when we talk about the world?
- What falls into the category of human nature when we talk about relationships?

Knowing these definitions will help to guide a process of finding a more natural fit — or rather, playing to men's strengths and women's strengths — in how to approach roles and responsibilities as Christians and also in relationships.

Women teaching women in Church

March 7, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been busy so haven't been posting much. I figured I'd comment on this.

There's been some interesting discussion on the last few posts on Dalrock's blog on women potentially teaching other women in Church. This is just the last one but check out the few prior to that if you want the whole picture.

Generally speaking, some commenters point to Titus 2 to where older women should be teaching younger women.

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

On the other hand, the verses that seem to refute this are the passages from 1 Corinthians 14 and 1 Timothy 2:

> 1 Corinthians 14:34 The women are to keep silent in the churches; for they are not permitted to speak, but are to subject themselves, just as the Law also says. 35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is [n]improper for a woman to speak in church. 36 [o]Was it from you that the word of God first went forth? Or has it come to you only?
> 1 Timothy 2:9 Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, [g]modestly and discreetly, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly garments, 10 but rather by means of good works, as is proper for women making a claim to godliness. 11 A woman must quietly receive instruction with entire submissiveness. 12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first [h]created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, [i]fell into transgression. 15 But women will be [j]preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with [k]self-restraint.

Dalrock rightly points out that exegesis of the preaching and of the Scripture is delegated to husbands in the 1 Corinthians 14 passage. When you combine this with the wording of the passage in Titus 2, it's obvious that older women are to encourage wifely submission to their husbands. Therefore, it is the case that older women should not be "teaching" what the Scriptures mean to wives but rather encouraging wives to ask their husbands about how they would interpret it.

This is important because although there is Church authority over the members of the Church, the Scripture does not contradict itself and rightly upholds marriage which is the first created authority structure (See: Genesis 1-3).

Proper Scriptural authority

All of this stems from as couple of things. Generally, In the Scriptures “teaching” and “preaching” are validated by “authority.” Authority is given in the Scriptures to specific roles such as husbands, pastors and elders, governments, and the like in order to love, shepherd, or maintain order and law.

Order is maintained from a top-down perspective. Those with qualifications may be selected by those in authority to be in certain positions. For example, in 1 Timothy 3 Paul discusses the qualifications of bishops and deacons. The government is given authority by God to act. In this sense, we understand that democracy is somewhat backwards in that it is a bottom-top power structure, and that is why we see the dysfunction increasing exponentially over time.

When the apostles were forbidden to preach the gospel by the Sanhedrin Council in Acts 5, they responded that they should obey God — who had told them to preach the gospel specifically to all nations! — rather than men. This is a proper understanding of authority.

This is the also reason why the Scriptures tell wives to ask their husbands if they don’t understand something. A wife is subject to her husband as her authority.

In the Church, the Ekklesia — specifically a Gathering of Believers — no women will ever have authority in such a situation. Daughters are subject to their fathers whether they are young or old. In marriage, the authority of a father over his daughter is passed from the father to the husband. The single exception may be widows, and Paul describes how widows are supposed to act in 1 Timothy 5. And Nuns… but Nuns have forsaken their all for God, so that’s not an issue.

Thus, in no situation is a woman “free unto herself” and thus given a voice within the Church in a position of authority whether over men or over other women. Daughters and wives are under their fathers or husbands authority. Likewise, older women are encouraged to teach younger women to obey the authority they are under and act in a godly manner.

Women teaching other women

As of now it should be quite clear that [older] women do not have the authority to teach or preach the meaning(s) of Scriptures to [younger] women because it is under the jurisdiction of their fathers or husbands. The Bible does not contradict itself on this front.

In particular, one of my general pet peeves of the blogosphere in general is that it’s often the case where many women’s blogs discuss the application of Scriptures toward their own marriage and it becomes explicit or implicit that it should be that way in other marriages. This is false. In reality, it should be like this:

1. This is how this Scripture works in my marriage with my husband under his guidance.
2. You should ask your husband how he wants things done.
3. It may be different on how he interprets and handles things. That’s fine and good!

For example, look at the passage again:

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

All of it is to encourage being subject to their own husbands in a godly manner. Not to teach them how their specific relationship should look like. Their husband determines how it should look like.

Pastors cutting off husbands at the knees from the pulpit the same analog as this.

A pastor has "his" specific interpretation of how Scripture is supposed to be carried out and berates men from the pulpit because they are not doing it his particular way. Hence, many wives of the husband that this pastor berates will now berate their husbands to be more like how the pastor preaches. This is simply not godly nor Scriptural.

Likewise, if you've been around long enough "blogs" are a source of much discontent among single and married women simply because they see something that looks or appears good on the outside and want it for their marriage. Then they become angry, dissatisfied, and discontent when they bring it up to their husbands and their husbands shoot it down. It should not be this way. Christian women bloggers should be encouraging other women to submit to how their husbands do things. If they want to suggest or bring up something respectfully that may be helpful then by all means do so. However, it should not be assumed that supposedly something "better" in someone else's relationship is the "RIGHT" thing for your relationship.

It certainly is ungodly if women and wives are becoming discontent through comparisons of their marriage to other marriages. Comparisons sow discontent. Comparisons are bad kids. M'kay?

This is one area that many women struggle with a lot, especially with FACEBOOK, INSTAGRAM, BLOGS and CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

Can you say comparison city? Discontentment? Dissatisfaction?

Women teaching women beyond godliness and subjection to their husbands is going to be bad news bears. Tell them to ask their fathers or husbands if they have questions or comments about particular topics or want to understand a particular passage of Scripture. The end.

P.S. The Catholic and Orthodox Church do not have as big of a problem with this because of the adherence to structured authority. Protestant failure.

————————————————–

Addendum: Apparently, there is some confusion with this post which BGR has commented on. What the Scripture teaches is that:

1. Women who teach other women a la Titus 2 should do so under the interpretations of the Church and her husband.

For example, per Titus 2 [older] women should be teaching [younger] women to be submissive to their husbands.

What is submission to their husband? It's not what other people think is submissive to her husband. It's what the husband thinks is submissive. Hence, why it's a good idea for older women to encourage younger women to ask their husbands what submission means to them and how they can best go about it in their relationship.

Hence, what it looks like is an older woman saying:

1. Here's how I'm submissive to my husband.
2. You should go ask your husband how you can be submissive to him because how I am submissive is not necessarily how your husband wants you to be submissive.

In regard to "pure" the word for that is hagnos which is also translated as chaste or modest.

Hence, older women should tell wives that they should be pure/chaste/modest. What does that mean? The husband decides what is pure/chaste/modest in his own home.

Women are teaching women to do these things because they are good. What these things mean is up to the husband to decide, with input from the wife.

The problem is with women interpreting Scripture on their own. She can share the meaning of Scripture under the authority of the husband and/or the Church.

Looking for a Church or not

March 14, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in. Key points.

- Grew up as an unbeliever
- Came to the Lord about a decade ago
- Unfortunately got mired in ye olde churchianity

> My wife and I left that about a year ago and we are still looking for the right church. I thought we had found a good one but lately I've noticed troubling signs. Yesterday, there was a guest preacher and he talked about parenting using Ephesians 6:1-4 and Colossians 3:20-21. He might as well have acted like the text was addressed to "parents" rather than to "fathers".
> This tells me that they probably don't have a good understanding of roles.
> So, what are the priorities when looking for a church?
> Am I responsible to stay there and try to correct such misunderstandings, being patient and forbearing, as several scriptures say?
> My goal for my family has been to find a church that supports our growth as Christians (personal growth is sparse in churchianity, as I'm sure you know), but I still feel somewhat lost in this arena.
> Also we are in the church of Christ. Feel free to address that in your post, compared to Baptists, Catholics, etc.

There are a lot of things to consider when leaving and/or joining a Church.

- Generally speaking, smaller Churches are often the most "pure" in terms of doctrinal beliefs from what I've experienced. I'd be on the lookout for one of those.
- Pray about it. I'm at my current Church because I've prayed about it heavily and felt led to go there. It's not a super ideal situation for spiritual growth and/or using my gifts. However, the community is solid, and I've been able to pour out some into the lives of young men.
- The Church is ultimately about "One another." Of course the leadership is important especially regarding doctrinal beliefs and understanding of how they are applied; however, influence is not solely performed through the leadership as Christians are a 'light' even to other Christians at times. An admonishment or rebuke can go a long way especially if you lead by example.
- Although people think of "suffering" or "persecution" to solely be outside the Church due to non-believers, it can also occur inside the Church. Setting a good example within the Church can turn other supposedly Christians hearts.
- If the leadership is open to correction and/or admonishment that's a good sign. If it's not then that's a bad sign.

- Generally speaking, your spiritual walk is NOT Sunday Church but daily taking up your cross to follow Jesus. Sunday Church is only a part of it to fulfill one another verses as well as hopefully receive solid Scriptural teaching and be part of a community.
- The majority of family issues are up to you at home. The Church plays a role as community to your family, but your style of headship is not necessarily going to be influenced heavily by Church teaching as any serious Christians know the Bible and their particular roles and responsibilities. The exception may be if they're preaching mutual submission in which you should probably get out of there as that's going to potentially cause friction not only between you and the community but potentially you and your wife.

In general, I'm loath to recommend "Church shopping" as it is somewhat common enough to have a colloquial name. Church shopping is all about "me, me, and me" to find out the best situation which fits your personal circumstances. Additionally, it's not always about avoiding hardships even within the body.

Maybe your at a situation in your life where God wants you in a particular place where it's not all about you for a specific purpose. It can be learning humility, finding a mentor in the oddest places, finding solid Christian brothers and sisters where you thought there were none, learning how to deal with difficult people, and things like these.

Church is ultimately about obeying Jesus' command:

> John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another."

There's a saying that goes "you don't get to choose your family." It's a pretty hard truth especially when dealing with family members, but perhaps it's an even more difficult truth when you consider that other Christians often act in an unChristlike manner.

Thus, overall I'd recommend that you shouldn't be looking for the perfect Church or even the perfect leadership. You're looking for somewhere where you can "love one another as [Jesus] loved us." And that means learning to love through the good times, the bad times, the easy times, and the hard times.

> 1 Thessalonians 5:12 But we request of you, brethren, that you [i]appreciate those who diligently labor among you, and have charge over you in the Lord and give you [j]instruction, 13 and that you esteem them very highly in love because of their work. Live in peace with one another. 14 We urge you, brethren, admonish the [k]unruly, encourage the fainthearted, help the weak, be patient with everyone. 15 See that no one repays another with evil for evil, but always seek after that which is good for one another and for all people. 16 Rejoice always; 17 pray without ceasing; 18 in everything give thanks; for this is God's will for you in Christ Jesus. 19 Do not quench the Spirit; 20 do not despise prophetic [l]utterances. 21 But examine everything carefully; hold fast to that > which is good; 22 abstain from every [m]form of evil.

Sometimes it requires admonishment or rebuke of the unruly. Sometimes it requires encouraging the fainthearted and helping the weak. But all in all, Church is about for one another. That said I would place a bit more importance on leadership and doctrinal issues due to the fact that it is going to influence the attitude of the entire Church. You don’t want to come off as being someone who is divisive and looking to start controversies.

If any commenters have other things to add in the decision making process feel free to add them.

False humility is insidious

March 21, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Pride is often an ‘in your face’ type of thing which is fairly easily to identify if you self reflect. However, false humility is much more insidious.

I noted this in terms of ‘beauty.’ Christians often say that beauty is ‘just’ superficial leading to the incorrect conclusion that putting any importance on beauty is shallowness. In our feminized culture, this is most often used as a weapon against men in terms of placing importance upon beauty in a wife. This should come as no surprise.

In fact, even if it is not explicitly stated when this comes up, if you even hint that beauty is a requirement for a wife because of attraction you can pick up on the uncomfortable vibes from everyone around you. This includes Christians.

Interestingly, peaceful wife has a blog today about pride and humility and illustrates some of the false humility traps that women can fall into:

> - I’m not worthy of being loved by you (but I expect myself to be worthy and good in and of myself apart from Christ).
> - I’m so awful (and I expect myself to be perfect and good in my own strength, I am focused on self not God).
> - No one loves me (I will use guilt and pity to try to make people love me more but I will not look to God for my source of love, acceptance, life, peace, purpose, and help. I will try to handle it on my own. I will not receive love from God or anyone else.).
> - I’m ugly and useless (I don’t accept my identity, value, and worth in Christ because I know better than God does).
> - I shouldn’t have needs or ask for help. I should be able to handle everything totally on my own.
> - I believe that I have to hate myself, put myself down, and be totally self-sufficient to have value.
> - I am obsessed with thinking negatively about myself and do not allow God to fill me. I reject and refuse what Christ wants to do for me and offer to me.
> - If you hurt me, I will sink down into depression and self-harm. I put the approval of others before approval of God.

Although men can fall into some of those traps, the ones that men tend to fall into are generally based around our specific roles and responsibilities as Christians or as the man/husband in a relationship.

For example, a reader recently wrote in about some of the issues he has been dealing with in his relationships, and I’ve seen this type of mindset not just expressed by him but also some other commenters who have written in as well as men that I talk with in real life.

> I am no person to demand it all because I have sinned greatly and was raised in secular thought until my own conversion four years ago. Yet, I want to have a godly marriage or no marriage at all, and so for that reason, will only consider a girl who is on board with something similar.

This is a big mindset that I have seen from many men, and it holds them back.

Although the past does have some bearing on the present in terms of decision making (e.g. men prefer virgins), the past does not have a bearing on your character and your values. Who you were does not affect our ability to move forward as Christians since we are saved by grace through faith. In this respect, the past should not have an effect on how you move forward in the future.

I demand certain things from my relationship because it will make it successful. Many children in a relationship IS a Biblical command and it's something God wants. Even if my past was 'colorful' it's never a bad thing to obey God's commands now that I am His.

Basically, in the respect of a Biblical relationship, we are placed in certain roles and responsibilities because God commands it that way. God places the man in marriage into the role and responsibility of a husband. You can't let your 'past' affect your behavior and hold you back from becoming who God has called you to be. That's 'underperforming' to your job because you believe that you aren't 'worthy' of it. That's false humility turned into sin. In everything that we do we should be doing it all for the glory of God.

The hard part about the Christian walk, in general, is that we are a people that live by faith. We often don't have qualifications for the things that we are called to do, but we are required to do them to the best of our ability. Jesus took mainly fishermen, a tax collector, and a zealot, and called them to become preachers and fishers of men by faith. In fact, Hebrews 11 is all about how faith works, and it's not because we are qualified to do things.

This is yet another way Christians tend to fall into the performance mindset rather than focus on the desire to serve God wholeheartedly.

Pride is often easier to see, but it is false humility that is more insidious and difficult to root out. Be on your guard.

Cold shower meditation

March 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Lots of people in the manosphere have already talked about the benefits of cold showers. And there's lots of scientific reasons on why you should anyway, some of which are noted here. I've been a bit proponent of cold showers to my friends in real life, but I just recently started doing this to some good effects.

Essentially, the cold shower is cathartic much like working out is cathartic. It's temporary suffering that pays dividends in self control, willpower, ability to handle discomfort, and staying calm under adverse situations. This helps not only with women but professional situations as well. If we were to use the old analogy that men are women's rock or tree in the storm, then the rock or tree should already know that it has the ability to withstand the storm.

Anyway, I threw in the little twist of some meditation (and/or prayer if you prefer) because it is an effective way to use the time and helps you regulate yourself under stress much better than just standing there in the cold. Bonus points for sitting down and plugging the drain so the cold water builds up around you.

> 2 Corinthians 11:21 To my shame I must say that we have been weak by comparison. But in whatever respect anyone else is bold—I speak in foolishness—I am just as bold myself. 22 Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they [g]descendants of Abraham? So am I.
> 23 Are they servants of Christ?—I speak as if insane—I more so; in [h]far more labors, in [i]far more imprisonments, [j]beaten times without number, often in danger of death. 24 Five times I received from the Jews thirty-nine lashes. 25 Three times I was beaten with rods, once I was stoned, three times I was shipwrecked, a night and a day I have spent in the deep. 26 I have been on frequent journeys, in dangers from rivers, dangers from robbers, dangers from my countrymen, dangers from the Gentiles, dangers in the city, dangers in the wilderness, dangers on the sea, dangers among false brethren; 27 I have been in labor and hardship, [k]through many sleepless nights, in hunger and thirst, often without food, in cold and [l]exposure.
> 28 Apart from such [m]external things, there is the daily pressure on me of concern for all the churches. 29 Who is weak without my being weak? Who is [n]led into sin [o]without my intense concern? 30 If I have to boast, I will boast of what pertains to my weakness. 31 The God and Father of the Lord Jesus, He who is blessed forever, knows that I am not lying.

We, in first world countries, have the benefit of not being under persecutions. However, it has made us all soft to some extent. Although it's nowhere even close to similar to actually undergoing persecution for Christ, it does help build strength of character and attributes through a similar mechanism. That's why Paul mentions cold and exposure.

Consider it a tempering of the body and mind in the absence of persecution so that when true persecution or difficult circumstances arise you can face them head on in a manner worthy of Christ.

He is risen — Jesus and the post-mortem experiences

March 29, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It was Easter this past Sunday, so I thought it would be a good idea to review the post-mortem appearances of Jesus.

As some of you know from following Wintery Knight who posts a lot on apologetics, the strongest [logical] case of the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus is not based on the gospels but out of 1 Corinthians 15.

> 1 Corinthians 15:1 Now I make known to you, brethren, the gospel which I preached to you, which also you received, in which also you stand, 2 by which also you are saved, if you hold fast [a]the word which I preached to you, unless you believed in vain.
> 3 For I delivered to you [b]as of first importance what I also received, that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, 4 and that He was buried, and that He was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures, 5 and that He appeared to Cephas, then to the twelve. 6 After that He appeared to more than five hundred brethren at one time, most of whom remain until now, but some have fallen asleep; 7 then He appeared to [c]James, then to all the apostles; 8 and last of all, as [d]to one untimely born, He appeared to me also. 9 For I am the least of the apostles, [e]and not fit to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. 10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me did not prove vain; but I labored even more than all of them, yet not I, but the grace of God with me. 11 Whether then it was I or they, so we preach and so you believed.

This creed here in 1 Corinthians 15 was received by Paul in a range of dates between 32-36 AD after returning to Jerusalem from Damascus after his conversion. Comparatively, Jesus' death by crucifixion was by all estimates between 30-33 AD. This means that this creed — the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus — originated within 6 months to 5 years after the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus. 1 Corinthians is traditionally dated as 53-57 AD, but Paul is referencing this creed which he had delivered earlier when he first visited them on his second missionary journey in 50-52 AD.

Hence, the timeline looks like this:

- 30-33 AD — Jesus death, burial and resurrection (Matt 26-28, Mark 14-16, Luke 23-34, John 18-21, Acts 1).
- 32-36 AD — Saul, prior to conversion, persecutes the Church. Stephen's martyrdom (Acts 7-8).
- 32-36 AD — Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:1-19).
- 32-36 AD — Paul visits the Jerusalem Church (Acts 9:26-31). At this time, he receives the creed that he recites in 1 Corinthians 15.

- 50-52 AD — Paul's second missionary journey, including Corinth where he stays 1.5 years.
- 53-57 AD — Paul sends 1 Corinthians to the Church at Corinth reminding them in 1 Corinthians 15 of the creed which was of first importance that he had received from the disciples detailing the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ and transmitted to them.

This creed is important because it details numerous post-mortem appearance of Jesus Christ which is the standard for testimony.

> Deuteronomy 19:15 A single witness shall not rise up against a man on account of any iniquity or any sin which he has committed; on the evidence of two or three witnesses a matter shall be confirmed.
> Matthew 18:15 "If your brother sins[k], go and [l]show him his fault [m]in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. 16 But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every [n]fact may be confirmed. 17 If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as [o]a Gentile and [p]a tax collector.
> John 6:31 "If I alone testify about Myself, My testimony is not [g]true. 32 There is another who testifies of Me, and I know that the testimony which He gives about Me is true.
> Witness of John — 33 You have sent to John, and he has testified to the truth. 34 But the testimony which I receive is not from man, but I say these things so that you may be saved. 35 He was the lamp that was burning and was shining and you were willing to rejoice for [h]a while in his light.
> Witness of Works — 36 But the testimony which I have is greater than the testimony of John; for the works which the Father has given Me to accomplish—the very works that I do—testify about Me, that the Father has sent Me.
> Witness of the Father — 37 And the Father who sent Me, He has testified of Me. You have neither heard His voice at any time nor seen His form. 38 You do not have His word abiding in you, for you do not believe Him whom He sent.
> Witness of the Scripture — 39 [i]You search the Scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; it is these that testify about Me; 40 and you are unwilling to come to Me so that you may have life. 41 I do not receive glory from men; 42 but I know you, that you do not have the love of God in yourselves. 43 I have come in My Father's name, and you do not receive Me; if another comes in his own name, you will receive him. 44 How can you believe, when you receive [j]glory from one another and you do not seek the [k]glory that is from the one and only God? 45 Do not think that I will accuse you before the Father; the one who accuses you is Moses, in whom you have set your hope. 46 For if you > believed Moses, you would believe Me, for he wrote about Me. 47 But if you do not believe his writings, how will you believe My words?”

Let’s move on to the good stuff.

Jesus and the post-mortem experiences

1. Peter — “5 and that He appeared to Cephas,”
2. The 12 disciples — “then to the twelve.”
3. 500 brethren — “6 After that He appeared to more than five hundred brethren at one time, most of whom remain until now, but some have fallen asleep;”
4. James — “7 then He appeared to [c]James,”
5. All of the apostles — “then to all the apostles;”
6. Paul — “8 and last of all, as [d]to one untimely born, He appeared to me also.”

Note that the appearances of Jesus to the Mary and the other women such as in Matthew 28 are not counted. Similarly, other appearances such as the two on the road to Emmaus in Luke 24 are not recorded as well. This tells us that the creed is only noting the main appearances that occurred, especially to those in leadership positions in the Church. It’s a possibility that Jesus appeared other times as well to others, but they are simply not recorded.

The diversity and reach of the witnesses is compelling:

- To followers who doubted then believed — Peter, the disciples, the apostles
- To a large group — 500 brethren
- To detractors — Paul
- To a detractor and relative — James

Also,

- To women — Mary Magdalene and Joanna and Mary the mother of James (Matt 28, Luke 24)
- Other small groups — two on the road to Emmaus

The large group and appearances to the disciples and apostles rules out delusions and hallucinations. Delusions and hallucinations are primarily found in individuals not groups. Paul notes that he knows many of the large group of 500 brethren due to their status of most being alive but some being dead. It is probable for Jesus to have appeared to his disciples, but he appeared not half dead but with a resurrection body which rules out the disciples astonished responses.

The two that are the most convincing to me are Paul and James, and of those two James is the most convincing example. Paul was radically converted. It’s one thing for people who were for you — disciples and followers — to be convinced (which they were also doubtful!). However, it’s one thing for the opposition to be convinced of death, burial, and bodily resurrection.

Yet, even more compelling is James. By all accounts, Jesus' family — mainly His brothers — were unconvinced of his divinity during His life. However, Jesus appeared post-mortem to James His brother which radically converted him. James eventually becomes the leader of the Jerusalem Church (see: Acts 15), wrote the book of James, and is eventually martyred in Jerusalem for his witness for Jesus. Likewise, Jesus brother Judas was converted as well and wrote the book of Jude.

Personally, if my brother tried to convince me that He was God I wouldn't believe. I don't believe anyone else would either. You grew up with your brothers. You know them. But from what we know both James (or Jacob) and Judas became followers of Jesus after His death, burial, and resurrection with appearances to at least one of them. Quite compelling.

Conclusion

This is simply a basic historical analysis of early Christianity which presents a compelling case for the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Wintery Knight is an excellent resource for more information on the various apologetic arguments for the historicity of the resurrection if you want to learn more.

As Paul goes on to note:

> 1 Corinthians 15:2 Now if Christ is preached, that He has been raised from the dead, how do some among you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, not even Christ has been raised; 14 and if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is vain, your faith also is vain. 15 Moreover we are even found to be false witnesses of God, because we testified [f]against God that He raised [g]Christ, whom He did not raise, if in fact the dead are not raised. 16 For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised; 17 and if Christ has not been raised, your faith is worthless; you are still in your sins. 18 Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. 19 If we have hoped in Christ in this life only, we are of all men most to be pitied.

If Christ is not risen then our faith is in vain, and we are the most pitied of all men for we have sacrificed it all for nothing. Fortunately, there is a good case for the death, burial, and resurrection being a historical fact. It is worth it if it strengthens the faith of even one.

Entitlement mentality

April 4, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has an interesting thought that there is misery in too much comfort for women.

> One consequence (among many) of Original Sin is that women will experience greater pain/suffering as a result of bearing and rearing children. I would argue that an expectation of this is “baked into” their genetics.
> This leads us to the modern day, and the theory behind this post. The problem is that in the present age women are more coddled than they have ever been. They are, especially in the West and in families not at the bottom of the SES ladder, further removed from suffering than ever before. The level of comfort in the civilized world has never been higher. True suffering, true sacrifice, is alien to most women growing up. Most parents take care to keep their children from having to suffer, often by ensuring as much comfort as possible.
> While I certainly understand this behavior on the part of parents, it is at the same time utter folly. Suffering can never really be escaped. It will always be present, and I will use a future post to go into that in further detail. What matters for this post is that this coddling approach is a disaster. Why?
> Simple: Women expect suffering in their life- it is the natural thing. [Think about the vast majority of human history- filled with suffering for pretty much everyone.] When women are too comfortable, when suffering is absent from their life, then it sends a message to their unconscious mind that something is wrong, that what they are living is an unnatural life. That message of unnaturalness will only be repeated over the years as they grow up. They will know, somewhere deep down inside, that something is wrong. Unfortunately, because this is unconscious, they won’t know what it is, exactly, that is wrong.
> This will, naturally enough, lead them to feel miserable. The misery is only made worse because they won’t understand it. It will gnaw on their mind incessantly, like an itch you can’t quite reach.

In my opinion, this is not so much a women thing but a human thing. A lack of punishment for wrong behavior leads to the entitlement mentality.

> Proverbs 13:24 He who withholds his rod hates his son, But he who loves him disciplines him diligently.

Now, the reason why women tend to have a greater propensity for entitlement mentality is because they are coddled more by parents, friends, and society. A struggling man will have to “take his lumps” while women in general have tons of support networks. For example, a woman in today’s society can do many terrible things and then attempt suicide and get sympathy because she was ‘troubled’ and it wasn’t her fault.

Entitlement mentality is typically seen most commonly at the outliers of society. Those on perpetual welfare or social services become entitled to what they receive. The children of rich parents who are coddled and not exposed to consequences for their actions also become entitled. Likewise, women, as a whole, in our society have become an entitled class in schools, job and promotions, laws, and general societal well being and concern.

Thus, I don't think it's necessarily 'suffering' in the case of women but entitlements and lack of proper teaching of actions and consequences.

Further thoughts

Personally, I'm reminded a bit of what I was talking to a guy the other day. He claimed the serenity prayer was in the Bible and obviously having read through the Bible multiple times I knew it was not.

> God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, Courage to change the things I can,And wisdom to know the difference.

Although the serenity prayer was written by a Christian theologian about 70-80 years ago, it's been elevated to a certain status among 'pseudo-believers' to Biblical status because in reality it is pretty good wisdom overall. However, as many of us know, "Good Wisdom" does not necessarily bear the effective power of the transforming nature of Scripture.

Similarly, there are many heresies peddled by American churchianity like prosperity gospel that are simply incorrect but people believe them because they do not have the proper knowledge of Scripture and/or who God is. In this respect, their knowledge of action and consequences are off.

For example, I know a lot of people who believed that if they become a Christian their life will become good… and then they are surprised when it didn't. I would classify myself into that category even as little a bit more than 5 years ago. Then, when you actually read through the Bible you encounter verses like these:

> Luke 9:23 Then he said to them all: "Whoever wants to be my disciple must deny themselves and take up their cross daily and follow me.
> 2 Timothy 3:12 Indeed, all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will be persecuted.

The nature of the cross is that it offends. Christians are conditioned to see the cross as a symbol of hope, and that is certainly true. However, the cross is also a beacon of pain and suffering. This is the dual nature of divinity and humanity. Hope and suffering.

The disciples and those that listened to Jesus' teaching knew of it first hand. They would all have seen numerous crucifixions during their lives under Roman rule. However, modern churchianity likes to gloss over that fact because pain and suffering is not attractive and won't bring people to the seats.

Proverbs 27:17 As iron sharpens iron so one man sharpens another.

Churchianity is a veneer of self righteousness

April 7, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been thinking more and more about "why" Churchianity is so attractive.

Generally speaking, people don't do things just to do them. There is always going to be some 'incentive' or 'attractiveness' about the things people participate in or else they wouldn't join up in the first place. My previous post explored a bit how entitlement mentality basically avoids any form of suffering and contentment. This was also explored a bit by a guest commentor at Donal's.

I was reading Sunshine's post on Vox's analysis of SJWs, and the virtue-signalling phrase stood out to me this time. It's not that I hadn't heard it before, but I also wasn't looking for the reasoning behind actions. Generally speaking, liberalism and feminism is based on the appearance of 'doing good' while simultaneously jettisoning personal responsibility of actions: we can't punish these children because it will hurt their feelings, or we can't punish her because she's the victim.

The appearance of 'doing good' has a seductive appeal because it gives the 'moral high ground.' This moral high ground is then exploited to shame and barrage anyone who disagrees into oblivion.

So too the infection of feminism and liberalism within the Church manifests in the same way. The men = bad and women = good meme is simply one example of this. Any time a woman does good is because it's part of her nature, while every time something bad happens is because it's failure of the leadership of men. This is used to undermine the leadership of men, which results in a push for 'egalitarianism' in the Church and family relationships. The complementarians also fall for this ploy under the guise of 'sticking to Scriptural values' while perhaps unaware that they are also undermining Church and family authority.

The reason why this is self propagating and self reinforcing is that women tend to care extremely highly about appearances more than most other things, and men tend to care about women more than what is right.

Women lie by omission, vaguely word things to avoid responsibility, gossip as a means to improve their own appearance and/or detract from others, back stab, and otherwise covertly aim to look good while disguising the evil. And even in this, the appearance is prominent but behind it is the potential disapproval or letting others down, especially men.

> Ecclesiastes 7:27 "Behold, I have discovered this," says the Preacher, "adding one thing to another to find an explanation, 28 which [s]I am still seeking but have not found. I have found one man among a thousand, but I have not found a woman among all these. 29 Behold, I have found only this, that God made men upright, but they have sought out many devices."
> Matthew 15:7 You hypocrites, rightly did Isaiah prophesy of you:8 'This people > honors Me with their lips, But their heart is far away from Me. 9 ‘But in vain do they worship Me, Teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.’” 10 After Jesus called the crowd to Him, He said to them, “Hear and understand. 11 It is not what enters into the mouth that defiles the man, but what proceeds out of the mouth, this defiles the man.”

> 12 Then the disciples *came and *said to Him, “Do You know that the Pharisees were [d]offended when they heard this statement?” 13 But He answered and said, “Every plant which My heavenly Father did not plant shall be uprooted. 14 Let them alone; they are blind guides [e]of the blind. And if a blind man guides a blind man, both will fall into a pit.”

Typically, this manifests in the works mentality. The works mentality is the core of self righteousness: ‘if I do good works than I am good.’

However, the more and more you look at it, there are a lot of people who desire to do good but are deceived. This is the seductive appeal of appearances. A woman who dresses like a prostitute will evoke a strong desire in men to do what is wrong. The desire to have a good appearance to others will evoke a strong desire in women to do what is wrong. The outside looks good, but the inside is rotten. The plant looks good, but the roots are rotten.

The accumulation of sin without repentance leads to a rotten core while maintaining a godly veneer. The godly veneer hides the rotten core leading to virtuous signalling with insidious rotten fruit.

The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest

April 12, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This article about 'teaching men to be emotionally honest' was a particular amusing read, although depressing that it was primarily shared by men I know on facebook.

> Last semester, a student in the masculinity course I teach showed a video clip she had found online of a toddler getting what appeared to be his first vaccinations. Off camera, we hear his father's voice. "I'll hold your hand, O.K.?" Then, as his son becomes increasingly agitated: "Don't cry!… Aw, big boy! High five, high five! Say you're a man: 'I'm a man!' " The video ends with the whimpering toddler screwing up his face in anger and pounding his chest. "I'm a man!" he barks through tears and gritted teeth.
> The home video was right on point, illustrating the takeaway for the course: how boys are taught, sometimes with the best of intentions, to mutate their emotional suffering into anger. More immediately, it captured, in profound concision, the earliest stirrings of a male identity at war with itself.
> This is no small thing. As students discover in this course, an Honors College seminar called "Real Men Smile: The Changing Face of Masculinity," what boys seem to need is the very thing they fear. Yet when they are immunized against this deeper emotional honesty, the results have far-reaching, often devastating consequences.
> Despite the emergence of the metrosexual and an increase in stay-at-home dads, tough-guy stereotypes die hard. As men continue to fall behind women in college, while outpacing them four to one in the suicide rate, some colleges are waking up to the fact that men may need to be taught to think beyond their own stereotypes.
> In many ways, the young men who take my seminar — typically, 20 percent of the class — mirror national trends. Based on their grades and writing assignments, it's clear that they spend less time on homework than female students do; and while every bit as intelligent, they earn lower grades with studied indifference. When I asked one of my male students why he didn't openly fret about grades the way so many women do, he said: "Nothing's worse for a guy than looking like a Try Hard."

> In a report based on the 2013 book "The Rise of Women: The Growing Gender Gap in Education and What It Means for American Schools," the sociologists Thomas A. DiPrete and Claudia Buchmann observe: "Boys' underperformance in school has more to do with society's norms about masculinity than with anatomy, hormones or brain structure. In fact, boys involved in extracurricular cultural activities such as music, art, drama and foreign languages report higher levels of school engagement and get better grades than other boys. But these cultural > activities are often denigrated as un-masculine by preadolescent and adolescent boys."

> Throughout elementary school and beyond, they write, girls consistently show "higher social and behavioral skills," which translate into "higher rates of cognitive learning" and "higher levels of academic investment."
> It should come as no surprise that college enrollment rates for women have outstripped men's. In 1994, according to a Pew Research Center analysis, 63 percent of females and 61 percent of males enrolled in college right after high school; by 2012, the percentage of young women had increased to 71, but the percentage of men remained unchanged.
> By the time many young men do reach college, a deep-seated gender stereotype has taken root that feeds into the stories they have heard about themselves as learners. Better to earn your Man Card than to succeed like a girl, all in the name of constantly having to prove an identity to yourself and others.

Generally speaking, this section here reveals the reasoning behind the fallacy that men should be more emotionally expressive. The conclusion is picked first using dubious examples such as this father teaching his son not to cry, and then the conclusion is backed up with poor statistics and anecdotes.

Can anyone really tell me how 'outwardly emotionally expressive boys and men are' has a direct correlation with how they do in a 'feminized school environment'?

The irony is that the opposite is true based on their anecdotes. Men that are more emotionally expressive in general are less successful. In reality, the men that are less emotionally expressive tend to do better with women and in life.

I only pulled out the first half of the article. Go read the whole thing if you want to see the ugly and incorrect ending.

Men express emotions differently than women

Men feel emotions just as women do. However, the way men express emotions is different from women.

- Men tend to process emotions internally and solitary.
- Women tend to process emotions outwardly in a social manner, especially with friends and family.

This is why men who are going through difficult experiences will not want to talk about it, especially with other women. The men need time to feel their emotions internally and then process them in a way that is fruitful and productive rather than unfruitful and destructive.

On the other hand, women express emotions externally, generally in a social manner. Women talking about their experiences and feelings is an emotional release for them. They generally don't want the problem solved because the emotional release is what is important. If there is any problem, it can be solved later after there is emotional release.

After all, it's not about the nail.

Understanding where it goes haywire

I've discussed these concepts before in emotional engagement. Women always say they 'want' men to be more emotionally expressive, but when men are more emotionally expressive it's frowned upon. There are, in general, some distinctions that need to be made.

For instance, when asking a woman what is 'attractive' to her you may get the typical kind, good with kids, supportive, servant heart, and many other attributes like these. We know that these are traits that women like in a man to which they are already attracted. The traits which make a man [sexually] attractive to a woman are power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money.

Likewise, when women say they want a man to be more emotionally expressive, what they actually mean is they want a man to be more positively emotionally expressive.

If you've ever been around a woman and reactive with negative emotions all of the time, you will find out quickly that women will reactive to the negative emotional state with a negative emotional state of her own. This leads into a dysfunctional cycle. You get angry with something, then she gets angry because you're angry. This is compounded because now you're angry with something, and your girl is now angry too so you react both of those negatively. Then she gets angrier, and the downward spiral continues.

This is why arguing with a woman never gets you anywhere. It's not about the argument; it's about the emotions she's feeling. Most of the time, women simply want an environment to express their emotions without concern for right or wrong and/or solving the problems she is facing.

In this, the tree analogy bears much fruit.

- Positive emotions are like the shade on a summer day. She can bask in the cool breeze and enjoy her time with you.
- Negative emotions are like the wind and rain. They are to be blocked out by the tree itself so that they don't affect her directly. She is sheltered from the storm.

This makes sense, after all.

A feature, not a bug, of leadership

Men are called to be leaders — the head — in their [marriage] relationships (e.g. Ephesians 5). Thus, we understand that processing emotions internally and solitary is a necessary feature of leaders.

When leaders react to situations with negative emotional displays, this does not foster confidence and trust from the followers. Rather, it fosters fear and distrust. For example, threats are a negative emotional display backed by the authority of position.

A 'threat' is a 'lack of control in one's own situation' which is expressed outwardly, often in an emotional manner. The reason why threats are ineffective is because the lack of control in one's own situation gives rise to a lack of direction and fear in followers. Thus, any potential rebellion must first be quelled by the threat of coercion in order to ensure that the direction which the leader chooses will be met with success. In other words, it is the opposite of leading by example.

Generally speaking, this is one of the features of why men tend to be better leaders than women, and why God made the man the head of marriages. The ability to process emotions internally and solitary is a trait that is highly effective for good leadership as it is able to shield those that are led from the storms of life.

Conclusions

Men and women tend to express emotions differently. Surprise surprise. We are different.

- Men tend to process emotions internally and solitary.
- Women tend to process emotions outwardly in a social manner, especially with friends and family.
- When women tell men to be more outwardly emotionally expressive, what they really mean is to be more positively emotionally expressive.
- A necessary feature of leadership is the ability to process emotions internally and solitary. That is a leader must be able to filter out their negative emotional displays in order to lead by example and build confidence and trust in the relationship. Negative emotional displays often lead to threats, fear, and distrust.
- Women generally want to share in the joys of your successes, be shielded from the sorrows of your failures, and be her anchor in the storms of life.

Be quick to share positively, patient to share negatively, and a rock when her emotional winds blow hard.

Marriage structures

April 15, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This topic is very important, and I have put a lot of thought into this before writing this post. The main question that I am going to address in this post is:

> Is being 'too controlling' a sin for leadership positions?
> and
> Is it a sin for a wife to be 'subservient' in marriage?

Generally speaking, in Christian — or shall we say Churchian — circles there's the implicit or explicit "acknowledgement" by teachers that those who are in leadership are in sin if they are "too controlling." Obviously, the greatest area where this topic comes up is in marriage.

Many women are "fearful" or "worried" if a husband is being too controlling. Hence, if a husband is "too controlling" and a wife submits to this she is in also in the "sin of subservience."

As a firm advocate of Patriarchy I believe these both to be false. Dalrock has explored this in a number of recent posts including this one: Sarah was a doormat by complementarian standards as are her daughters.

Churchian delusions

Generally speaking, churchian leadership likes to be intrusive into various marriages dictating what is true and what is false. This is to say that husbands are called to be "servant leaders" or "spiritual leaders" rather than just "headship" as the Scriptures call it because they need qualifiers and limitations on how husbands are to act in their own marriages.

This appears to be a mistake as the Scriptures affirm that marriages have a separate authority structure which connects in the Church in different ways. Indeed, the Scriptures affirm headship as Christ loved to Church and to treat her as his own body thrice; however, they don't necessarily prescribe the ways in how this is to occur.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever > hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

Similarly, wives are called to submit to their husbands in all things. This includes teaching at the Church.

> 1 Corinthians 15:34 The women are to keep silent in the churches; for they are not permitted to speak, but are to subject themselves, just as the Law also says. 35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is [n]improper for a woman to speak in church. 36 [o]Was it from you that the word of God first went forth? Or has it come to you only?

Why are women — or perhaps wives — told to keep silent in Churches? Well, 1 Corinthians latter chapters speak mostly of order in the Church. That is those who speak out in Church are disruptive. God is not a God of chaos but of order. However, the other lesson that is less brought up here is that tasks are delegated to the husband because of the way authority work in establishing order. This is important because the Scriptures continually affirm headship and submission in marriage as it's own sphere.

Now, the reason why "being too controlling" as a husband is not a sin and why I do not believe in the "sin of subservience" is because each marriage is different. What works for one marriage within the bounds of Scriptural guidelines may be different from another. However, is one better than the other? No. Is one wrong while the other is right? No again.

For example, take a supposedly "controlling husband" and a "subservient wife." The husband likes order in everything he does, and he wants everything done a specific way. This is not wrong. It is simply a leadership preference. Likewise, a wife who submits to her husband in such a manner is not in sin. She likes and needs a strict structure in order to be the most effective helpmeet in her marriage. This is a pairing where both obedient to the Scripture and fulfilled in their roles and responsibilities. However, many churchian leaders would call such a marriage a sin.

Simply put, there are many different types of leadership styles that men may have. Some range from strict to loose. In the same way, there are many different types of personalities that women have as well. Some do well with more structure, and some do well with less. This is important because it means that a woman who wants to be a wife and mother should only accept marriage to a man who meets her particular leadership style. If she wants more structure then she is not in sin even if others say she is sinning because she is subservient to husband.

If the husband wants an "egalitarian marriage" then it is up to him to use his headship in that manner. I think it is unwise to do this because this makes making final decisions much more difficult. However, it is his choice to rule his own household in this way. This does not make a marriage in reality an “egalitarian marriage” because the husband is still commanded by God to the role and responsibility of headship.

This leads me to my main point: Churchian leaders and Christians need to butt out of other people’s marriages, especially calling them a “sin” when there is more structure than what they would call “normal.”

“Normal” is an ambiguous standard because it is most often defined by culture. What is “normal” in culture regarding marriage? Egalitarian marriage. Hence, we see that complementarians have gone to great lengths to define marriage closer to what culture has said is “normal” so that they aren’t classified as extremists. They shy away from calling headship as it is and lean toward the gerrymandered phases of “servant leader” and “spiritual leader” that I mentioned prior.

A health marriage may take on many forms. Some will have a lot of structure within them which may make them appear strict and controlling. However, such structures are not a sin because they are all within the bounds of the headship-submission marriage relationship. Some will have very little structure which may make them appear with more “freedom.” However, these are not inherently “better” than a stricter marriage.

Likewise, is a man wants to rule his marriage with egalitarian means I think it is unwise but he can do what he wishes. Let us not be under the delusion that it is actually an egalitarian marriage as that is the way that the man has chosen to rule. This is the same thing as gay marriage. Because God is the ultimate authority, gay marriage does not exist. Humans can think it exists and manufacture laws to govern it, but it still does not exist.

Submission taken too far?

There is no such thing as submission taken too far. However, there is such thing as false humility in submission. There are quite a few examples of wives on various blogs who have taken submission into their own hands. Let me explain.

For example, a husband has a particular way to rule his own family and the wife is doing well in that structure. However, after she has talked with a mentor, read a book, or read a blog or two on the topic of submission, she now has the impression that she was “not submitting properly to her husband before.” Now, instead of working well within her husbands structure for the family she becomes a self proclaimed “doormat” in which she never expresses her opinions, does everything her husband wants, and even does some things that her husband doesn’t want under the guise of “being more submissive.

What typically ends up happening is that this leaves the wife feeling poorly about everything and generally unfulfilled. Then the husband has to have some awkward conversation with his wife where he says he ‘just wants his wife back’ and that she was being weird about things.

Such examples are often used as an example to show that “being a doormat” or “subservience” in a marriage is bad thing. However, this is false.

In reality what happened is that the wife was embroiled in an example of the insidious nature of false humility. The wife decided unilaterally that she knew best what was the right way to be a helpmeet to husband. Although she had the right intentions of being submissive to her husband, she was actually being rebellious to how her husband wanted the marriage to be run in the first place. Thus, conflict came up between them which needed resolution.

> Right intentions are good! However, the right intentions must be applied properly. After all, there is some truth to the phrase that “the road to hell is paved with good intentions.”

Therefore, wives often get the impression that “being a doormat” or “subservient” is a bad thing from this experience. However, what they miss from this scenario is that they were actually being inadvertently rebellious. They were listening to other people, books, or blogs on how to be submissive to their own husbands instead of listening to their own husband on how to be submissive to them.

Hence, when a wife who has went through this experience sees a marriage with “more structure,” she often believes that the wife is in sin because she is being a “doormat” or “subservient.” This wrong impression causes wives to attempt to butt into other people’s marriages in order to correct this sin when in reality they may be introducing dysfunction or malcontent into an otherwise Godly and healthy relationship.

Conclusions

- It is not a “sin” if a husband is “too controlling”
- Neither is it a “sin” if a wife is “too subservient”
- Some marriages have much more structure than other marriages which may make the husband appear ‘controlling’ and the wife appear ‘subservient.’ It is not a sin, unlike many Churchians would have you to believe. Calling them a sin may be the real sin.
- Churchian leaders and Christians need to butt out of other people’s marriages, especially calling them a “sin” when there is more structure than what they would call “normal.”
- Husbands have the choice to rule their marriages how they want: more structure, less structure, or even in an apparent ‘egalitarian manner.’
- A husband ruling his marriage in an ‘egalitarian manner’ is probably unwise due to making final decisions much more difficult.
- Wives who listen to other people, books, or blogs about how to be submissive tend to run into conflict with their husbands because they think they now know what ‘submission’ is and how to go about it. This is not a “sin of subservience” or “being a doormat” rather it is insidious false humility that others know more about your marriage than your husband.

- Wives who have had those ‘bad experiences’ with being ‘too submissive’ may see other marriages that are godly and healthy and offer incorrect teaching when they see “more structure” in a marriage than normal because they think it is dysfunctional when it is not. Hence, wives need to be vigilant about giving any other advice rather than “submit to your husband the way your husband sees fit” because they may introduce malcontent and dysfunction into other marriages if they offer any other advice.

Finally, for those who are single:

Christian men who desire to be married should aim to find a wife who meshes with his leadership style. If you want more structure in your marriage, then attempt to find a wife who thrives under more structure. If you want less structure in your marriage, then find a wife who thrives with more so-called freedom.

If a Christian woman who desires to be married likes more structure then only marry a Christian man who likes structure in his marriage. Likewise, if a Christian woman who desires to be married does not like a lot of structure then she should choose a man who has a more laid back leadership style. If each woman gets married to a man who has different leadership preferences than her then it will make things difficult.

Personally, I lead through a more laid back leadership style. I am very firm about things that are important to the health of the relationship. Yet, I am more laid back in the everyday choices of life, but I will make decisions easily if required. If I see marriages that have more or less structure and control than my relationship, I need to be vigilant that they are not necessarily “wrong” or “in sin” because they operate differently.

Be vigilant not to call marriages with more or less structure than yours sin as you may be heaping such judgment onto yourself.

The free will to marry

April 22, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been a rash of posts and comments after Donal's Masculine Monday on choosing a wife or not and A Fixer Upper post. These have been Moose Norseman and Choking as well as Cane's and Chad's comments. I have some thoughts to add to the conversation.

First, on whether to marry or not.

The biggest thing to note in the present gynocentric culture is the background radiation that affects your thinking. Since we have been immersed in it since we were children, it is difficult for men to recognize what the Scriptures state about things.

- The first thing to recognize is the Biblical roles and responsibilities of the husband and the wife.

Of course, you should not take a 'fixer upper' in the expectation that you're going to change the person in marriage! A wife is called to be a husbands helpmeet. Is she going to be a good helpmeet when you have to fix her up into a helpmeet? No. She should already display good helpmeet qualities prior to the marriage and desire to use them in her relationship with you.

Wintery Knight has some solid take on how he approaches this situation.

This should be approached from multiple angles. If you desire to marry you should learn how to properly fulfill the roles and responsibilities of marriage. However, you should also strong consider how any potential woman you choose fulfills the roles and responsibilities. After all, you can't FORCE her to do anything. She has to desire to fulfill them for herself and be committed to doing them.

- Another important thing to recognize is burning and desire to marry.

> 1 Corinthians 7:2 But since sexual immorality is occurring, each man should have sexual relations with his own wife, and each woman with her own husband. […] 8 Now to the unmarried[a] and the widows I say: It is good for them to stay unmarried, as I do. 9 But if they cannot control themselves, they should marry, for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

Paul mentions in 1 Corinthians 7 that it's better to marry than to burn. The vast majority of men do "burn" to some extent or another, so it is important to recognize whether this type of temptation can be put aside or whether it is better to marry for that person. We muset also recognize that this sexual desire, though it can be a temptation prior to marriage, is very good because it has been created by God.

Each man needs to come to his own decision if he wants to serve God completely or split his attention between God and marriage. Although Paul makes his preference clear, each are good choices in their own way.

- Finally, to address the gynocentric culture

People are going to shame you whether you choose to marry or not. Some will think you are a sucker to marry in this day and age. Non-Christians, churchians, and even some Christians will go after you like you are a spawn of the devil if you choose not to marry because 'think of the women.' Honestly, it's pretty crazy.

It's a bad idea to live your life because your parents want you to go a certain route (edit: since there is confusion about this I meant in terms of say getting a job/career according to your parents whims). It's an even worse idea to live your life according to the ideas of shamers who want you to get married because of [enter non-Biblical reasons here].

Our obligations are simply not to others opinions but rather what God has for us. Aside from marriage, God has given to each believer spiritual gifts that we are to utilize to disciple and harvest. If marriage is in the cards it can be a part of the ministry. However, if it is not in the cards, it is easy to see why you ignore the annoying shaming opinions in the service of God.

Ultimately, each of us answers to God for how we lived our lives. Thus, we should only live in fear of the roles and responsibilities that He has given us.

Second, on choosing a good wife.

Moose already covered the notion of a good follower. Is she a good follower? Or does she constantly buck authority when a decision is made. How she interacts with authority is a good indicator, especially with her father.

Generally speaking, the "actions" of someone are a fair indicator of the state of their heart although I would state that attitude is a better indicator. Heart intentions always lead to actions. If there is good fruit from the actions, then it's most likely their heart is in a good place.

However, actions can indeed be deceptive in the case of churchians. This is why when you vet for a wife I suggest mainly vetting for character along with actions. How do you vet for character?

Character is really only revealed in difficult and/or morally compromising situations. Thus, the "real" person you're looking at is:

- What they do when they're angry?
- What do they do when they've been proven wrong?
- When they are at fault do they apologize and make amends or double down?
- How do they react under pressure filled situations?
- Are they gracious and humble?
- What do they do when someone is harassing them?
- How do they treat the people that do bad or evil to them?
- How does a girlfriend react when she's angry with you AND you ask her to do something?
- Does she actually "follow" or retain control by "letting you lead?"

These are the types of things that are difficult but reveal a mature character in Christ:

> Matthew 5:43 “You have heard that it was said, ‘Love your neighbor[i] and hate your enemy.’ 44 But I tell you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 that you may be children of your Father in heaven. He causes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 46 If you love those who love you, what reward will you get? Are not even the tax collectors doing that? 47 And if you greet only your own people, what are you doing more than others? Do not even pagans do that? 48 Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

As we live in first world countries, there are not many instances where actual life threatening difficulties befall us. Hence, we need to be vigilant in understanding that the few places where you can view someone’s character is what they are really like underneath the surface. Do not brush character concerns under the rug as these are the types of things that come back to haunt you.

What type of attitude do they take in all of these situations?

In marriage there is much good, but there’s always going to be difficulty. How are they going to respond to that when things get rough? Are they going to quit or reveal their bad character like they did in certain circumstances prior to marriage? Or are they going to reveal their good character, tough it out, and submit to God and to you?

Attitude reveals the heart’s desire. Are they God AND for you, or are they against you? Sadly, women can be for God and against you because they can be deceived. You need to make sure that this is not the case, and that she will not persist in such a deception.

Finally, is she teachable and does she learn from her mistakes?

In marriage, both the husband and wife will grow and change over time. The most important thing is if she is teachable and willing to learn from her mistakes and not make them again.

If she is unteachable then it’s a waste of your time. Likewise, if she repeats the same mistakes over and over… you know what the Proverbs has to say about a fool and his folly.

These types of things are partly revelations of character. Teachability and learning from mistakes is a critical factor in a Christian’s walk because these are some of the concepts that underlie repentance. She may be a a good Christian otherwise, but can she also display these traits when she is with you. That is the question.

Conclusions

Men should evaluate whether to marry or not based on multiple factors:

- Recognize if a wife is ready to fulfill Biblical roles and responsibilities. Don’t take a fixer upper. Take someone who is ready and willing to follow your lead and be a good helpmeet.
- Recognize your own Biblical roles and responsibilities and prepare for them.

- Recognize if marriage is in your cards, especially if you have the desire for marriage and burning. Think about this in terms of your spiritual gifts and overall vision.
- Recognize that shamers rarely if ever have your best interests in mind. They want you to do what they want you to do. You are responsible for your life, and your responsibility is not to them but to God.

Men should also primarily take a few things into consideration when vetting a woman for marriage:

1. Is she a good follower?
2. Look at her actions as they reveal some of the state of her heart.
3. Vet for her character how she reacts in difficult situations reveals the overall state of her heart.
4. Look at her attitudes in difficult situations as it reveals her heart's desire.
5. Is she teachable?
6. Does she learn from her mistakes?

The state of her heart should be for God and for you as she will be under your authority. A woman that is for God and NOT for you would be an unwise choice. This may not even necessarily be a sin; she may just be a bad fit for you. Move on if that's the case. If you have any doubts, consider them very carefully preferably with wise mentors, Scripture, prayer, and fasting.

Victims versus perpetrators: why it all matters

April 27, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Obviously, the reason why such ‘labeling’ matters to Christians is important.

Christians bear the name of Christ in that they are supposed to be followers of Christ. Christ emulators.

If formerly pregnant women are ‘victims’ of abortion then they bear no fault through the process. This is the positive that it seems most conservatives as well as pro-life folks are taking. See the examples on Cane’s, Zippy’s and Dalrock’s. As Zippy notes, these folks are not pro-life but in fact pro-choice.

Fault or sin and acknowledgement of it is a precursor to repentance. In Christianity, repentance is required for salvation. After all, we are required to admit fault, turn from our wicked ways, and follow Christ through a pattern of good works.

Thus, women who get abortions are at the very least conspirators and/or co-conspirators with the added tagline of the crime of pay-for-murder. They are perpetrators of a crime.

Politicians who choose this view mainly do because of pandering. They want a clean image to women so that women will vote for them.

Christians who do this probably have many different motivations. Some are probably deceived into believe that women do no wrong: men bad, women good. Some detest calling out women, even when they’re in sin. The proverbial white knight. Some probably don’t believe women even have agency: it was all the big bad doctor or terrible boyfriend who coerced her into that abortion.

I don’t really care about what politicians do, but those who claim to be Christians who perpetuate that women are victims of abortion are quite wrong and need to be informed. It impairs the ability of women to truly repent for their sins.

Also, this goes along the same lines as why feminism is bad for both men and women. Feminism paints Patriarchy as evil when it is indeed good. Hence, all men are defined as perpetrators of crimes. Whereas women are painted as the victims who can do no wrong. It is clearly enforced as such in popular culture, universities, family law, and the courts with reduced or absent sentences for women who perpetrate the same crimes as men.

The true irony is that anyone who kills or murders a pregnant woman is guilty of two counts of homicide. However, the mother herself who ‘chooses’ to terminate a pregnancy is guilty of nothing.

As noted,

- Goddess worship — women are the source of all that is good. Only the female sex drive is good because it produces life.
- Fertility worship — women are the creators of life and have the choice to make or take it.
- jezebel worship — usurpation of authority and power. Patriarchy is bad.

Different times from the Bible but the same religions. The vast majority of occultic practices in the Scriptures originate from goddess worship and associated phenomena.

The headship conversation

May 1, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

For single men and those starting out a relationship I think having the headship conversation is something you should do. In fact, in general it is a good idea to have your own 'Bible Study' (if you're Protestant) and or review of teaching (if you're Catholic and/or Orthodox (?)) on the Scriptures that pertain to the husband and wife relationships.

This is something that you will be leading, so you need to be prepared. Relevant passages to study are: Genesis 1-3, Proverbs 31, other verses pertaining to the wife in Proverbs, 1 Corinthians 7, 11, and 14, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Timothy 2, and 1 Peter 3. Bonus points for passages such as Numbers 30.

This conversation is not so much as a 'discussion' as it will be you telling her your vision for the relationship (in terms of Biblical standards) and finding out if she is on board. The leader of the relationship is the one who defines the vision, sets the tone, and leads by example. That is the calling of the husband.

Obviously, you will be looking for feedback and counterpoints, but ultimately it is up to you to determine if you can live with 'how she is following' in your relationship or if she is incompatible with your vision.

What I was personally looking for is not necessarily if she has the correct views since popular culture is so prevalent, but if she is willing to be a follower and understanding to make changes to her views and life accordingly. I explained those things in the previous link above. Correct views right off the bat tend to signal whether her upbringing was good which is definitely very important, but if she is willing to be your helpmeet for your vision is also important as well. You need and want both.

Here's another point to consider that a commenter wrote in about:

> And of course, there is this skill that will never be taught but most husbands will need and be tested on — managing and handling his spouse's emotional upheavals (which, more often than not, lead to irrational thoughts and behaviour). Right now, there's a fair amount of obeying the wife-to-be and sacrificing from the husband-to-be (i.e., yours truly).

One of the things I told me girlfriend is that my leadership style is very 'non-chalant' shall we say. The things that are important to the relationship I will speak on and I expect (1) her input and (2) her obedience as they are necessary to function well. In regard to a lot of the other minor choices in the relationship such as 'what to wear' or 'what matches' and other things like that I don't sweat them, but I will make the decision if she doesn't want it.

Since women are conditioned by popular culture and even churchians to 'be leaders' and 'be independent' and 'make those tough decisions' they will come with that mindset in the relationship. Thus, many women, although not all, tend to get into the mindset that if they are making [any] decisions in the relationship that they are in charge. Most women don't like that as decisions are weighty, and they don't like the responsibility. Still others get on a power trip.

When women feel this way, they become disgruntled, dissatisfied, and unhappy with the relationship because she feels like she has to be the man. Thus, heading it off at the outset and establishing the vision is important.

Even if it 'feels' like I'm not leading or in charge I am.

Thus, she may need to reign herself in and come to me more because she is trying to do too much herself. Like it or not, most women, even Christians, will still attempt to try to have it all at times. That's one of the strong temptations that women deal with. Establishing the relationship in this manner allows you to more easily have her acknowledge the temptation and admit where she is in error if she starts to go off the reservation.

I've personally held numerous Bible studies going over these passages as the relationship has progressed. This is for a few reasons.

1. It's a continual reminder of the standards and benefits of grounding the relationship of Scripture and thus Christ.
2. Each relationship should be continually growing. Going back over these passages as you grow in your relationship yields additional insights as you are progressing in growth. These should be tangible things that both of you can pick out as you grow. It should not be one sided growth where you are the only one growing. She should be growing and changing as well.
3. This also allows you to point out areas where you are not growing and/or are off track. This is probably more important than finding areas where you are growing because identifying areas of where you are failing is much like Christian repentance. You need to acknowledge where you sin and repent and turn from your ways.

#3 typically is very difficult for men to do because it means calling out women, specifically their woman, on bad behavior. However, this gives you a lot of important data such as how she reacts in conflict situations and/or if she will apologize and repent of her actions. A woman that refuses to do any of that is not good wife material period.

Conclusions

- Have the headship conversation with your significant other.
- Study the Scriptures on husband-wife relationships with her. Some of them are hard words, so you better be prepared for a difficult conversation.
- Define your vision for the relationship. Tell, don't discuss. Lead by example.
- See if she is willing to follow and grow in that visions (e.g. be a helpmeet).
- Tell her your leadership style. Maybe you're more structured or less structured. Explain how this plays into what you see for you and her.
- Tell her that you will tell her when she's going off the reservation. Calling out women is difficult but a very needed skill.

- Revisit the Scriptures as you progress in your relationship. This will allow you to reaffirm the foundation, see the good growth, and acknowledge each where you were in error and/or had failings and change.

A lot of these things were learned the hard way, but continually coming back to what the Scriptures say about relationships is important.

Real life Ruths

May 2, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was going to give this example and Donal mentioned some of this in his post on Sunday, and his post on women delaying marriage discussion is relevant.

One of my friends is a slightly shorter-than-average, single 27 year old who is actively involved in Church, plays guitar for worship sometimes, holds a steady construction job, and has a heart for ministry to high school and young adults in the long term. Let's call him John. John was interested in a few women, but they were generally uninterested in him and/or were wishy washy about being in a relationship with him.

For example, John was enamored with one girl who was wishy washy about him, and I talked about it with him through the whole process. Let's call her Sam. It was somewhat of a supposed mutual interest situation where they hung out and talked about a relationship, but never made any tangible steps toward it mainly because of Sam. This was over a period of about 3-4 months. I advised John that it was clear that Sam was not very interested in him because if she was then she would reciprocate and want to be in a relationship with him. A woman who is interested in a man will do everything she can to be in a relationship with him. This is the typical guy like girl but girl thinks she could probably do better or just likes the attention type of scenario. It could also be that she was not mature enough. I'm not sure which it was, and I know the girl fairly well.

Anyway, Sam was visiting her parents out of state for a few months before coming back to the area, and John got the notion to fly out to see her unannounced to surprise her. I cautioned against this because going that far for a girl that is clearly only semi-interested in you is over-investing in something that is not there and unattractive. I outright stated that it wouldn't work because she's ambivalent about the relationship, and nothing would probably convince her otherwise even a supposed huge romantic gesture. The bad thing was that the couple of her friends who John talked to thought it was a great idea "because it was romantic." Unfortunately, although John agreed with me for the most part, he had his heart set on doing it anyway. I told John that if it doesn't work out then it doesn't work out, and he should give up any notion of a relationship with Sam.

Y'all know how that turned out if you can't guess already.

John took and flight out AND drove 6 hours to meet Sam. That's dedication right there. Undeserved dedication. Sam was clearly shocked when John showed up. Sam was happy in a way, but it obviously did not influence her to want to be in a relationship with John. Sam did not spend any time with John other than talk to him once when he came by. Honestly, that's exactly what she should do if she's ambivalent about a relationship. Thankfully, since I am pretty close to John and basically called out what was going to happen, he ended up coming to terms with the whole thing (perhaps on his own, perhaps a bit with me as I don't want to take credit for his maturity). It took John a few weeks to get over it, but he did and moved on. He overcame the adversity, and he came away with a more mature outlook on relationships.

After this “disaster,” John decided not to go looking for anything after that for at least a few months. The old ‘got burned by a woman’ type of deal.

Enter your real life Ruth

> Ruth 3:1 Then Naomi her mother-in-law said to her, “My daughter, shall I not seek [a]security for you, that it may be well with you? 2 Now is not Boaz our [b]kinsman, with whose maids you were? Behold, he winnows barley at the threshing floor tonight. 3 Wash yourself therefore, and anoint yourself and put on your best clothes, and go down to the threshing floor; but do not make yourself known to the man until he has finished eating and drinking. 4 It shall be when he lies down, that you shall [c]notice the place where he lies, and you shall go and uncover his feet and lie down; then he will tell you what you shall do.” 5 She said to her, “All that you say I will do.” [1]
> [1] I suppose you could argue my example of Ruth is a bit different because it was a kinsman redeemer situation, and it was at Naomi’s advice. I’m using it to illustrate a woman who went out of her way repeatedly to meet a man who she liked with potential to be a good husband.

She’s a mid-20s, slim, feminine receptionist at the Church he attends and has some but not great overlap in their circle of friends. Let’s call her Katie. John and Katie have seen each other and greeted each other at Church. They peripherally know each other having seen each other at a few events. However, they’ve never really talked beyond some superficial conversation.

Katie is interested in John. Thus, Katie gets her friends to talk to John to find out more about him. Katie asks about John when talking to John’s friends to find out his background and assess his character. John is being mentored by a family in the Church, so Katie goes to talk to them about John too. Katie starts going to Church and casual events where John is at specifically. Katie strikes up conversations with John at those events. Katie spends more time with John than anyone else at these events, and she is interested in having deep(er) conversations about relationships with him.

I’m a bit fuzzy on if Katie mentioned she was interested and single or had his mentor mention it, but John had already known from how she was acting that Katie was interested. John knew this because Katie made it known through conversation she was single, made it a point to keep coming around to events he was at, kept talking with him, and virtually made her interest almost overtly known. John eventually asks Katie out.

In this day and age, they kept things on the down low because in some circles going out = getting married. Thus, they want to keep things chill because you’re just investigating to see if a relationship can work. They hit it off on a date or two every week over the course of a month, and eventually finally decide that they want to make it serious. John and Katie been together 4 months not including that initial 1 month of dating to get to know each other, have met each other’s parents, and are progressing toward marriage.

Points to learn from

I suppose it's no surprise to say that Katie came about 95% of the way by putting herself in good situations to get to know John's friends, John's mentor family, and John himself. Katie leveraged her social network very well like I recommend for both men [and women]. This is the power of a woman who is interested but not overbearing and feminine about exploring a potential relationship. It's about doing your homework and constantly putting yourself in good situations to meet a man you're interested in. Katie made A LOT of background stuff happen to put herself in a good situation only really stopping short of asking John out.

John has no qualms about asking women out, especially if he is interested. However, we could say that this relationship virtually came to him. It is one of the best relationships he has had because of Biblical principles, AND she was clearly interested in him. To paraphrase him about a month into the relationship:

> I never realized a relationship could be this way. It's awesome. This relationship can't compare to the previous relationships at all.

To quote him 3 months into the relationship:

> [Words] don't even come close to describing this absolutely amazing, talented, hard-working, beautiful, and servant-hearted woman! I am beyond blessed to have this gem walk along side me in this life and honestly can't thank God enough. The value she adds to my life cannot be measured. She is in every sense of the word, a gift. Her heart is one of a kind and I'm honored that she has decided to share it with me.

Sounds like a man with an amazing future helpmeet. Unlike the previous potential relationships that I counseled John on, there is none of the difficult BS of playing games, figuring out if a woman is serious about a relationship, or just wants to be in one because she is lonely. I told John after he said those things to me that "yes, that's what a relationship is supposed to be like. Nothing can compare to a relationship based on Biblical principles, and also with a woman is very interested in you. It's night and day."

He found a woman who was actually very interested in him and was relatively mature for a relationship. Such a thing requires both the interest of a woman and a willingness to cultivate toward Biblical roles and responsibilities prior to marriage. Since Katie was prepared and mature for a relationship, she did almost everything possible to put herself in a good situation to be noticed by John.

Generally speaking, men that want to be married the hardest thing is to also find a woman that is God-fearing and also interested or attracted to them. Given that this is the case, I think that women have the solid potential in playing a real life Ruth situation, especially if they get their friends on board and are willing to go to events where single men are and converse with them. Most women who I've talked to about this have told me they tried, but when I hear their story they only tried once and then gave up when it didn't work. Alternatively, it turned out bad and the man wasn't interested, so it's obvious that it doesn’t work. I question this as a lack of perseverance.

This is not the norm for single, Christian women, so if you’re a single Christian man reading this don’t expect a woman to fall into your lap like this. Take the initiative, and seize the opportunities. However, it is a pretty good example for women who are interested in marriage to follow if they are not getting tons of interest or can’t find anyone.

The pool of quality marriage candidates for Christian marriage is very small. You gotta take the opportunities you’re given and make your own opportunities when there are none. Both men and women.

Their saga is to be continued…

Navigating the Biblical basis of attraction and marriage with others

May 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've already written on a Christian understanding of attraction, a Christian understanding of relationship dynamics, and Donal's PSALM/LAMPS model accurately describes what we for attraction in women.

In general, I've had a lot of difficulty discussing these concepts with Christian men who aren't familiar with RP terminology as I'm sure many of you have experienced. Namely, it tends to be politically incorrect to say that women are attracted to money and/or crass to call them gold diggers. Lesser examples that still bring up offense are to say that women are attracted to status, looks, or any other "superficial" types of things. Obviously, calling these things superficial or shallow is false humility and/or virtue signalling, but that's a bit beside the point if you can't effectively communicate to men in the first place. Likewise, it's hard to get past the whole "being Christian = attractive" trope that is repeatedly laid in front of mens' faces like godliness is attractive.

Hence, what I'm discussing here is not necessarily "new" but an easier way to talk to Christian men and women about how attraction works without 'offending' them into refusing to listen to the Truth.

Terminology that works

I've come to the conclusion that the easiest terminology to use when discussing what is "attractive" to women are based primarily in the roles of protection and provider that the husband brings to the family. Thus, the vectors of attraction which fall under these two categories are:

- Protector — power/personality (e.g. dominance & charm), status (e.g. leadership roles vs low key roles, talents), athleticism (e.g. musculature, ability to fight), and looks (e.g. genetic profile, testosterone levels, fashionable)
- Provider — money (e.g. shelter, food, and clothing), status (e.g. parlayed into resources)… for the wife and family

Status can be hierarchical in nature which falls under the realm of protector via leadership, but it can also be part of provision as status can often be parlayed into resources or social value which women prize. This matches up very well with the observed dualistic mating strategy that women tend to employ, colloquially and crassly termed AFBB — alpha fucks/beta bucks or the slightly neutered alpha fux/beta bux.

To summarize previous posts, ideally women look for both of these attractive traits in one man as AFBB is not mutually exclusive. However, in worldly terms most tend to settle for one or the other. The reason for this is because masculinity is demonized in our society. Thus, those who go against the feminized system tend to be the only group that actually grows in masculinity and displays protector, masculine traits (e.g. attractive bad boys) whereas those who abide by the system tend to be more feminized into provider traits (e.g. boring beta bux providers).

As a reminder, traits that are good to have such as good with children, kindness, and other things like these tend to be classified as 'beta traits' but are not mutually exclusive with so-called 'alpha traits.' This is why I don't classify traits according to "alpha" or "beta" but rather sexually attractive or not because there is too much confusion:

- "beta" sometimes refers to 'money' as in the example of beta bucks,
- "beta" sometimes refers to 'traits' that are not sexually attractive like kindness,
- "beta" sometimes refers to 'overall hierarchy' that exists for men along the lines of alpha, beta, delta, gamma, omega.

Although you typically don't want to be on the end attraction spectrum with money, it is an aphrodisiac to women as women with wealthy men have more orgasms. Both AF and BB (where BB is specifically about money) are sexually attractive to women, but AF predominates over BB all things considered equal. Hence, the dualistic mating strategy that skews toward AF in the absence of AF and BB in one man.

From my experiences discussing these topics, the husband's protector and provider role are almost universally acknowledged by Christians and churchians alike.

Thus, this categorizing language can be used as an in specifically in order to get past feminized guard walls to discuss what is actually [sexually] attractive to women. This is especially important when trying to mentor men and/or discuss these topics with pastors regarding the traits that come with developing leadership and the roles and responsibilities of the husband in marriage.

It is also important to note part of the relative extinction of the provider role due to numerous factors. For example, the government and well-to-do families have taken over as a large role of the provider for single, young women. Likewise, women entering the workforce in droves mean that being a provider is not as important as it was in the past.

Socioeconomic factors as it relates to marriage prospects

I haven't written on this topic much either, but there is some good information that needs to be categorized correctly.

Overall, the richness and comforts of a well-developed society tends to make the role of provider relatively extinct, except for women of lower socioeconomic status. This is the reason why you hear women complaining that they can't find an attractive man who holds a good job and/or who will commit. Generally, such women are in similar social groups of lower class men who are masculine but tend to buck the system. Thus, they are attractive to women, but they often cannot hold down jobs because women will go out of their way to support an attractive man if she can be with them. Hence, such women decry the inability to find an attraction with a job. Additionally, since these men are pursued by many women, they will often not commit as they can often hold soft harems or jump from woman to the next much like how women use serial monogamy as a tactic to satisfy their hypergamy.

For women of higher socioeconomic status, they are primarily looking for raw masculinity through power/personality, status, athleticism, and looks in terms of marriage prospects due to the fact that they tend to already hold good jobs themselves. Likewise, since providers tend to be of higher socioeconomic status, you tend to find that the complaint of these higher socioeconomic status women is that there's no good men left. Thus, as long as you can get a decent job, the protector role is the one that should be focused on cultivating for Christian men who desire to marry.

The vast majority of Christian men who find it difficult to go on dates with women should be counseled to learn to be a dominant, charming leader who lifts weights, knows how to fight, cultivates various talents (for example music or other hobbies), and takes care of grooming and fashion. A solid but decent job is still important but secondary for a man of higher socioeconomic status because prospects are typically already good, but overall income that a potential wife makes must be taken into account because women tend to not like marrying men who earn less than they do. A solid job is more important for a man of lower socioeconomic status. The man of lower socioeconomic status must also find a way to root out gold diggers because many women just want to marry for the benefits. Yes, it's harder being poor.

Thus, depending on the population and area you live you may have to cater a bit in terms of finding solid marriage prospects due to the nature of how socioeconomic factors play into the role of what women are looking for at each level.

Created this way

A Christian man may ask why is the Protector role more valued than the Provider role.

I think this a question with a myriad of factors playing into it. It's not always this way, so I'm going to discuss a lot of what plays into womens' preferences. As we already mentioned, the state and well-to-do families tend to replace the role of the provider in rich society. For those of us in first world countries, this is crystal clear.

However, in second and third world countries, women who have very little provisioning or are from very poor families with few a provider extremely gratefully. Many men who have ventured overseas have seen this first hand. Obviously, it 'feels' to many men as disheartening and jading to the soul (of men who ignore reality), but it clearly makes sense. Women want to secure provisioning for themselves and their family.

Evolutionarily speaking, the Protector role is more important than the Provider role because it keeps the family together. A man that has "Protector skills" or the ability to fight and/or hunt will also have provider skills. Both these skills in hunter-gatherer tribes were virtually trained simultaneously as the men went off to hunt for food with bows and arrows, spears, and swords (provision), and this also served as practice for fighting techniques in warfare to protect from surrounding tribes (protection). Indeed, even within a single tribe the fitness and status of a particular man is related to protection and provisioning ability: the more dominant, muscular, and ability of a man to fight and/or hunt will garner increased attention from women.

This plays out similarly in our modern culture. Women love high status, dominant, muscled athletes and/or fighters who are the epitome archetype of Protectors. Women love very rich men who are the epitome archetype of Providers. Ideally, they want the same in one man. The one additional factor in play is if they are dominant with women: charming and charismatic.

At similar socioeconomic levels and if you can only choose one, the Protector is always valued more than the Provider. However, at differing socioeconomic levels, the Provider may hold more value than the Protector. There are some exceptions — a woman that marries for love — but not many. Most of these cases are where a rich young woman marries off to a low socioeconomic manly man. You pretty much never see this with a poor, young women marrying a low socioeconomic manly man. Poor women tend to want to marry up in status and money as opposed to a protector. I believe the reason for this is because of 'civilized society' devaluing the role of the protector too. If it was total chaos or anarchy the protector role would be valued more because the protector role tends to be beneficial for both protection and provision (using force to obtain resources).

A solid Biblical example of this is David and Bathsheba. Uriah was no slouch. He was one of David's mighty men. However, Bathsheeba baths on top of the roof in front of the palace thereby tempting David who falls for it to commit adultery. Uriah was a strong Protector, but Bathsheba wanted to trade up in status and socioeconomic level to King David.

Thus, we can reliably say that:

- Protector + Provider, ideally
- Protector > Provider, other factors being equal.
- Provider > Protector, if a woman can noticeably jump in status and socioeconomic level
- Provider OR Protector > Protector + Provider, if fame is involved. Branch swinging and/or serial monogamy or flings with celebrities, famous athletes, and the like.
- Dominance with women is the X factor. If a man is charming and charismatic with women he will tend to have many suitors regardless of a mediocre or potentially non-existent Protector and/or Provider.
- Potential confounding factors may be the overall stability and socioeconomic level of the background culture. For example, in a culture with more anarchy a Protector may be valued more than a Provider because the skills inherent to a Protector can generally reliably secure more provisions through force. On the other hand, a strong enough Provider may be able to secure body guards or force through provision.

This is an overall solid general view the godly and ungodly preferences of women that aligns with the Scripture and how we see women act in our culture.

Christian women who want to be married prefer the ideal Protector + Provider. However, if they can't get both, they tend to divert to serial monogamy with a man as [the placeholder] or protracted singleness to find the Protector + Provider. All things being equal, they aim for the Protector over the Provider (e.g. middle to upper class women willingly marry slightly 'down' for a masculine man), unless they can marry up in socioeconomic status though this may lead to unhappiness and divorce in the long run anyway. If they hit the wall, then they unwilling marry a Provider and are generally dissatisfied with their marriages. This leads to the 40% divorce rate of Protestants and 30% divorce rate of Catholics in the US.

In Churches, women gravitate to leadership positions with status. For example, leader or player in the worship team as opposed to the greeting coordinators unless they are charismatic. Pastors, youth pastors, mentor, and other types of leaders. Leaders tend to be associated with Protector status through various mechanisms.

This tends to explain why pastors and/or other leadership tend to have no clue what your average congregation man goes through when he says women aren't attracted to him. For someone who is already attractive such as those in leadership positions, they just need to be around women and not screw it up. However, for men that are not involved with leadership positions and are not very masculine, they will have trouble asking women out and going on dates because of rejection.

Conclusions

Generally speaking, you need to use the right language when discussing attraction and marriage prospects with Christians and churchians alike to get past the feminist filters that are ubiquitous to our culture. Typically, these need to be geared toward roles and responsibilities of husbands in marriage. These are:

- Protector — power/personality (e.g. dominance & charm), status (e.g. leadership roles vs low key roles, talent), athleticism (e.g. musculature, ability to fight), and looks (e.g. genetic profile, testosterone levels, fashionable)
- Provider — money (e.g. shelter, food, and clothing), status (e.g. parlayed into resources)… for the wife and family

Likewise, when talking with men about the factors that surround marriage you need to take socioeconomic status of the man and the potential group of women into account because of risk factors and biasing toward provider or protector traits that inherently affect viability of the man as a suitable candidate.

Thus, we can reliably say that:

- Protector + Provider, ideally
- Protector > Provider, other factors being equal.
- Provider > Protector, if a woman can noticeably jump in status and socioeconomic level
- Provider OR Protector > Protector + Provider, if fame is involved. Branch swinging and/or serial monogamy or flings with celebrities, famous athletes, and the like.

- Dominance with women is the X factor. If a man is charming and charismatic with women he will tend to have many suitors regardless of a mediocre or potentially non-existent Protector and/or Provider.
- Potential confounding factors may be the overall stability and socioeconomic level of the background culture. For example, in a culture with more anarchy, a Protector may be valued more than a Provider because the skills inherent to a Protector can generally reliably secure more provisions through force. On the other hand, a strong enough Provider may be able to secure body guards or force through provision.

This is an overall solid general view the godly and ungodly preferences of women that aligns with the Scripture and how we see women act in our culture.

What drives the delay in the marriage

May 5, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I've linked previously, there have been discussions on what drives the delay in marriage. Here's my answer: life scripts and cultural drift.

Life Scripts

As a young man, I was under the impression of two specific options in regard to marriage. I was supposed to go to college, find a job, then get married. Alternatively, I was supposed to go to college, go to graduation school, then find a job and then get married.

From speaking with many different men on this topic both older than me and younger than me, this has been the general consensus among men. This strong driving force from the Church and parents is to be able to Provide for a family. People who got married during college and/or during graduate school were "making life harder on themselves." Now, I don't believe that "difficulty" should be a reason to delay marriage, but it is a reasonable point in the minds of most people.

These two life scripts for men bear fruit accordingly. I know some couples who met in college and got married approximately 1-2 years out of college after finding jobs. I know some couples who got together in graduate school and married 1-2 years after graduate school after finding jobs. Very few couples were married during college or during graduate school. On average, the ages of these marriages for men were 22-25 after graduating from college and 26-29 after graduating from graduate school.

Similarly, women face the exact same life script as men, much to their detriment. They are pushed to go to college in greater numbers than men. They are pushed into careers in greater numbers than men. They are pushed to establish their careers and then have families.

This follows in the feminist script of "wanting to have it all." Alternatively, there is the two main churchian scripts of "my daughter needs to get a career just in case she can't find a husband" or "my daughter needs to find a job just in case her husband can't support her and/or divorce happens."

Of course, if a husband opportunity with a good job presents itself, the daughter is still counseled to find a job and/or wait until school is finished. The cognitive dissonance is mind blowing.

Going back to my life story, I was in a few relationships during college and graduate school. However, I was still under the impression of a life script until the latter parts of graduate school. I didn't really take any relationship too seriously because there was sufficient time to figure it out later. Unfortunately, the later option does not work exceptionally well for both men and women. Women suffer because of their slow declining attractiveness as they age. Men suffer because as they hit the latter 20s and early 30s younger women don't want a large age gap.

Why does the delay keep increasing?

I am a big fan of statistics and statistics can accurately depict trends that occur over population-wide samples. These depict the ever increasing cultural drift of men and women as it relates to base male and female nature.

- As masculinity is increasingly demonized in our culture, the amount of men who grow up to be masculine are becoming increasingly few. Those who do are typically criminals and/or bad boys who buck feminized authority.
- Family courts and divorce make marriage look like a very bad deal to men.
- As I noted in navigating attraction with others, the role of the husband as a Provider in the middle to upper class is becoming less appealing to women. Hence, women primarily look for a man who is a Protector and thoroughly masculine. Ideally both.
- Women are being pushed into higher education in droves and generally don't want to marry a man who is less educated.
- Women also generally do not want to marry a man who makes less money than she does.
- Women are being told to hold onto careers as opposed to getting married and having children.

The overall trends depict an increasingly smaller pool of masculine men and an ever decreasing pool of feminine women. Hence, there are fewer potential marriage matches. Each sex feels like they are getting a worse and worse deal.

Men realize the western women is highly masculinized as opposed to feminine. He doesn't want a "business partner" but rather a "helpmeet." He doesn't want a career junkie but rather a woman who he can have a family with. Family is not a big priority with women who graduate college and graduate school nowadays.

On the other hand, women don't want highly feminized manboys no matter how much the feminists keep proclaiming they want them. One example is the fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest. Generally, they also don't want to marry down in terms of education or money. Hence, their potential marriage pool declines fairly rapidly.

The trends with businessmen, doctors, and other professional careers exhibit this point directly. Sure, some of these men marry other women who are businesswomen, doctors, and the like. However, it is often the case where these 'high status' men tend to marry women who are more feminine such as nurses, teachers, or other typical female oriented careers. Such women are willing to sacrifice their career or work part time in order to have a family because they found a man who meets their Protector and Provision requirements. They get to 'have it all' so to speak.

Note that having it all is not necessarily actually having it all, but having options to have it all. A teacher or nurse who works part time or is a homemaker always has the option to go back to work. This is seen in the "pro-life" movement which Zippy accurately characterized as "pro-choice."

Are there answers?

Each sex feels like the other sex is driving the marriage delay.

Life scripts tend to pigeon hole men and women into smaller windows of opportunity which conflict with each other. Men want to marry the younger just-getting-a-career-started single woman who thinks she has all the time in the world. Women want to marry the successful, charismatic, masculine man who is in short supply due to many women competing for him. Cultural drift decreases the viable pool of marriage candidates due to the masculinization of women and feminization of men.

It would be accurate to say that both and neither are driving the delay because of the different reasons. Any counter-punches to delayed marriage must expunge both life scripts and cultural shift in order to present the maximal amount of opportunities.

There are answers. I've already spoken about some extensively on this blog. Here's a non-inclusive summary of some of the issues.

- The Church and families need to stop peddling life scripts. It's become increasingly clear that life scripts leave most men and women unhappy.
- The Church and families need to stop demonizing masculinity and male sexuality. As I noted, a couple of these are depicting beauty as shallow and emotionally honesty. No, the perfect man is not a woman.
- The Church and families need to educate their children that family is more important than careers. Career is much more important to men because it allows for provisioning, but family is what is fulfilling at the end of your life. No one will really care you even if you're famous, but those close to you will care how much time and love you poured into them.
- The Church and families need to stop ignorance and/or deception about female sexuality and masculinity. It's sad when non-Christians are more Truthful about it than Christians.
- The Church needs to focus on mentoring and discipling men, especially for leadership positions.
- Protestant Churches need to stop allowing women into leadership positions. Catholic and Orthodox are better off. Where have all the good men gone? You took their career and/or leadership position that would have helped transform them into good men.
- Christian single women need to be more like Ruth if they want to get married. That's simply the way it is with the decreasing pool of Christian single men and the feminization of the Church.
- Any Christian who doesn't teach Biblical Patriarchy is going in the wrong direction.
- Just because something is hard doesn't mean you should necessarily avoid or delay to make it easier. In general, marriage is hard and learning to grow together through the difficult times is going to help with other difficult times.

I don't really feel like going over more specific male/female stuff at the moment, so let's leave it at that. This stuff has been covered such as Scriptural roles and responsibilities.

TL;DR: Don't peddle life scripts and be actively against cultural drift. Obey God and conform to the Scriptures. Don’t promote lies about masculinity, femininity, and sexuality no matter how pretty they are. Don’t try to have it all; prioritize what is important: family.

Kirk Cameron's marriage tour

May 7, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From the Daily Mail. Although I'm posting the whole article because it's short, and so you don't have to click bait over to it to give it more views (though, the comments are a riot: submissiveness = doormat, abuse, religious nut, etc).

> Former Growing Pains star Kirk Cameron, 45, is currently on a nationwide marriage tour giving advice to couples
> - He said in a recent interview that the role of the wife in a relationship is to be submissive to her husband
> - 'Wives are to honor and respect and follow their husband's lead, not to tell their husband how he ought to be a better husband,' said Cameron
> - He also urged men not to fight with their wives because it makes it difficult for their children to ever have healthy relationships
> - 'When couples start arguing and fighting in front of the kids, dad cuts mom and mom cuts dad and the kids bleed,' said Cameron
> - Cameron, an Evangelical Christian, has been married for 24 years and has six children with wife Chelsea Noble
> Kirk Cameron says that the key to a successful marriage is a submissive wife. The former child star turned Evangelical Christian is currently on a nationwide marriage tour where he is giving his advice to couples, and said that a man and a woman each have a specific role in every relationship. 'Wives are to honor and respect and follow their husband's lead, not to tell their husband how he ought to be a better husband,' Cameron, 45, said in an interview with the Christian Post. 'When each person gets their part right, regardless of how their spouse is treating them, there is hope for real change in their marriage.'
> Cameron said during his interview; 'A lot of people don't know that marriage comes with instructions. And, we find them right there in God's word.' He went on to offer advice to husband as well, mainly that they should not argue with their wives when they gave disagreements because it hurts both parties. Cameron also said it make its difficult for their children to go on and have healthy relationships. 'Thinking that you are going to win an argument, you end up losing. It's a no-win situation,' said Cameron. 'In order for you to win, your husband or wife has to lose. When they lose, you have not built up your marriage. You have really cut them down. 'When couples start arguing and fighting in front of the kids, dad cuts mom and mom cuts dad and the kids bleed. They see that and it damages them. When the kids get to marriage, they will follow patterns that they see.'
> He later added; 'There is only one person on the whole planet who you can change and it's not your spouse.' Kirk is currently on a speaking tour, which take > place mostly at Baptist churches. Called Love Worth Fighting For, it's billed as a 'marriage event' and features teaching by Cameron, as well as music, and it's 'designed to strengthen and encourage your marriage'. Tickets range in price from $20 to $50 for 'VIP' access.

> One individual who seems to agree with Cameron on this is his sister, mother of three View host Candace Cameron Bure, who said she is submissive in her relationship during an interview with Yahoo Parenting last year. 'I used the word "submissive" because it's from the Bible but people who don't understand that see that as offensive,' said Bure. 'My husband is not a dictator. We work together but I don't want to dig my heels in and I have no aspirations to be the ruler of my family.' Kirk and his wife Chelsea Noble have been married for nearly 25 years and have six children. The couple met on the set of Growing Pains, and because of Cameron's strong religious views he had Noble stand in for any woman he had to kiss after they began dating, refusing to have physical contact with anyone other than his girlfriend and later wife.
> He previously gave his opinion on gender roles when promoting his film Surviving Christmas back in 2014, saying what women should do over the holiday season for the man in their life. 'Calling all moms, wives and keepers of your home – I made this video for you, to remind you of how irreplaceable you are to your family this Christmas,' said Cameron in his message, which he posted to social media. 'If you are a mom, if you are a wife, if you're the keeper of your home, I want you to know that your joy is so important this Christmas.' He continued; 'Let your children, your family, see your joy in the way that you decorate your home this Christmas, in the food that you cook, the songs you sing, the stories you tell, and the traditions that you keep. 'Invite your whole neighborhood into your Christmas, and invite the world into our story of our king and his kingdom.' Cameron also urged men to try and surprise their wives by doing the dishes one night. Cameron has over 2 million followers on Facebook and 60,000 on Twitter. He's also a good friend of the Duggars, appeared on their then-TLC show 18 Kids and Counting and even went to their daughter Jessa's wedding in the fall of 2014.

For as much as his movies are terrible, it sounds like he's keeping strict toward Biblical doctrine. He also gives good advice: husbands shouldn't argue with wives, and that any things that may lead to arguments should not be in front of children.

If you do click over there is a lot of pictures, and unsurprisingly his wife has kept herself attractive. As a general observation, it seems like submissive wives tend to keep themselves attractive for their husbands much more than rebellious wives.

Christian Post also has an article which reiterates similar things, which means the Daily Mail didn't intentionally alter what they were saying.

You should rarely read womens' blogs if at all

May 10, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

For men, obviously. This is similar to the line of banning female commenters.

1. As a man you should rarely read womens' blogs, if at all.
2. If you do read any, you should almost never comment.

What I see tend to see is that men who need to grow in masculinity read womens' blogs is that they get very complacent with their own growth. In addition, what usually ends up happening is that any discourse usually devolves into the blame game or patting on the back which wastes valuable time that could be spent elsewhere.

On the other hand, some men get set off track and end up holding said women as 'paragons of virtue' when they are simply women who have the nature of women and make mistakes too. Married men often become discontented in their own marriage at this, and it sets up unrealistic expectations for single men looking to be married.

> Proverbs 27:17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

Both Hebrew words used for man and friend refer to males. The analogy is thus like sharpens like. Iron sharpens iron. Men sharpen men.

If you want to grow as a man, you need to learn from men. Womens' blogs can give insight into how they react to different things and their concerns, but that does not give an accurate solution. Men need to learn from men about how to lead women. That's why a quality of leadership in the Church is men who rule their households well.

> 1 Timothy 3:1 It is a trustworthy statement: if any man aspires to the office of [a]overseer, it is a fine work he desires to do. 2 [b]An overseer, then, must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, prudent, respectable, hospitable, able to teach, 3 not addicted to wine [c]or pugnacious, but gentle, peaceable, free from the love of money. 4 He must be one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity 5 (but if a man does not know how to manage his own household, how will he take care of the church of God?), 6 and not a new convert, so that he will not become conceited and fall into the condemnation [d]incurred by the devil. 7 And he must have a good reputation with those outside the church, so that he will not fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.
> 8 Deacons likewise must be men of dignity, not [e]double-tongued, [f]or addicted to much wine [g]or fond of sordid gain, 9 but holding to the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10 These men must also first be tested; then let them serve as deacons if they are beyond reproach. 11 [h]Women must likewise be dignified, not malicious gossips, but temperate, faithful in all things. 12

> Deacons must be husbands of only one wife, and [i]good managers of their children and their own households. 13 For those who have served well as deacons obtain for themselves a [j]high standing and great confidence in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.

If you’re a man that needs to learn how to grow into manhood don’t read womens’ blogs. Learn from men who rule their households well about the nature of women.

Attributes of friends

May 13, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was in a discussion the other day with both males and females. One of the interesting topics brought up was some of the first attributes that come to mind when you think of a friend. This is obviously not a comprehensive list, but here was some of the themes that came up based on the differences between men and women.

- Men — Attentiveness (to needs), loyalty
- Women — Honesty, sincerity, fun

I suppose this type of thing really reveals the sex difference between men and women.

In particular, what men look for in friends and also marriage is someone who is attentive to their needs and loyal (e.g. a helpmeet). I can see why MGTOW is becoming such a popular option among younger men these days based on this. Most women these days are neither attentive to their man's needs nor loyal to him.

Among the women's comments there is the pattern as well. It's funny because even though women often 'say' they don't like the Truth, they really value it coming from a friend and/or in marriage as well. This is why the white knights and panderers fail in relationships with women because they tell them what they want to hear and cater to them rather than lead and keep women honest. Fun speaks for itself.

It should be no surprise that both men and women do not cultivate traits that are optimal for lasting relationships between each other nowadays.

You choose what you are offended by

May 16, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The thing about stereotypes is that there is generally some truth to them.

For example, the nerdy asain stereotype is 'generally true' because there is an emphasis in asian culture for the children to focus on academic achievement. There's redneck stereotypes, trailer trash stereotypes, ghetto stereotypes, and the like. Scott, in his post a while back on are you a religious zealot, posted about stereotyping.

> I have a loaded gun pointed at your head. If you get any of these questions wrong, you die. If you get them all right, you and each of your family members receives one billion dollars. I will not give you any more information than what is provided in the question.
> 1. A car is approaching. It is a 1986 Chevy Caprice Classic with blacked out windows and $4000 spinner wheels on a car worth $500. It has loud booming sounds coming from inside. What color is the driver?
> 2. 2 physicians, married to each other. One is a double board certified cardio thoracic and neurosurgeon and is on the faculty of the local medical school having published hundreds of journal articles. The other is a family medicine doc who works part time at a nearby clinic to earn extra play and vacation money for the family. Which one is the husband and which one is the wife?
> 3. An order comes in to an online store that sells vintage vinyl records. The order is for a copy of the 1983 Duran Duran album "Seven and the Ragged Tiger" and the 1986 Poison album "Look what the cat dragged in." What color is the person who placed this order?
> 4. A triple-coordinated bomb attack explodes in a shopping mall, a gas station and an embassy in Nairobi. Who are the terrorists?
> Remember the stakes–get it wrong, you die. Get it right, financial security for you and your family.

This generated some interesting discussion. You can read it on your own time. The point I want to make is that stereotypes shouldn't bother you.

Truth is such an interesting thing. A stereotype hints at Truth because it is a generality, but for any individual case something is not necessarily True. This is why generalizations are generalizations: they are true many times but not always true. If something is not true then why should it bother you? On the other hand, if something is true then why should it bother you as well?

In reality, we choose what we get "offended" over. The things that we are offended over are the things that we are invested in or want to defend. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that we should be very picky and choosy over what we are invested in and/or defend as Christians.

This is one of the sticking points that men have to learn to go through as leaders. It's not worth getting offended over much because it often leads to anger and thus arguments. Hence, learning to reduce what you get offended over naturally builds up self control and ability to operate effectively during conflict.

Stereotyping is simply one example of things that can offend very easily. Politics, religion, and other hot-bed topics are another. Should I really get offended over gay marriage when in reality it doesn't exist? Nope. God is still Sovereign. People walking in darkness still sin. The key is not them but rather us. We are supposed to be the light that God uses to reach the darkness. We don't have to worry about changing anyone. Christians often get distracted very easily on the mission and miss sight of these types of things and it gets in the way of spiritual growth.

We choose what we are offended by. Jesus was not offended by much, not even those that didn't believe in Him. Jesus was not offended at sinners, but he was offended at people who pretended to be righteous.

Why I don’t respect women Part 2

I wrote a while ago about Why I don’t respect women.

I wanted to revisit this topic, and the fact that it has come up recently in a couple places incited me to write on it again. Scott’s blog had a post on social media memes, and Dalrock had a post on the fear of women is the beginning of wisdom. Here’s the funny but also ironic meme that many others commented on in Scott’s blog.

> Respect is a sign of character, but it is a myth that it (or other socially positive internal characteristics) make girls interested in the initial attraction phase.
> This is why men who keep trying to attract women by saying and doing “respectful” things (and not working on being attractive) are always frustrated.
> The men who ask this question are genuinely confused by what they observe.
> They were told for several generations that “chivalry” and other nice guy behaviors is what gets the girl in the end.
> These are the men who are waiting when the girl they have a crush on gets dumped and heart broken by Harley McTattoo bad boy and she still doesn’t pay attention to them.
> They hear from her “someday you are going to make some girl truly happy [just not me]”
> Of course you should be respectful. But she has to be attracted to you already because no amount of “respect” will turn her on otherwise.

The text explains the mindset that men were deceived with by society. However, it doesn’t get to the real root of respect which I will talk about in a bit.

In reality, respecting women = putting them on a pedestal. No woman is attracted to a man who puts them on a pedestal. The cold harsh truth is that only women who are with men who them them on a pedestal are ones they can manipulate, usually for cash and prizes. See: men who hang around women as friends but who want to be in relationships with them who are used for time, money, and emotional support.

If you are a Christian man you need to stop this trying to earn your way into a relationship. It will almost never end well like this for you. Likewise, if you are a Christian woman holding a man hostage by dangling a relationship in his face you need to stop too. Burn away the dross.

This is why I do not recommend that men or women have close friends of the opposite sex. It’s a bad idea and leads to idiotic situations. Sure, Jesus occasionally hung out with women. However, all of the people He was really close to were his 70 disciples, the 12 main disciples He did everything with, and then His closest 3 which were Peter, James, and John with John being the closest one to Him.

Let's dig into respect.

Understanding respect

As I noted in the previous article on why I don't respect women, our culture has co-opted the word 'respect' and attempted to give it a meaning of 'equality.' For example, in this new world where "Patriarchy" has been torn down, we are told "we should all respect women as equals." This is a deception.

Respect, or fear and reverence, in Scriptural terms never denotes equality. It is a term of hierarchy. Those whom you respect you tend to or give authority over you. This is true of wives and husbands — a wife is to respect/reverence/fear her husband. This is true of Christians and Christ and God. We are to fear and submit to the Lord. We are to respect and submit to Christ. Christians are to respect and submit to earthly leaders, as they are instated by God.

- In the Scripture, respect is not earned. It is given, by God, by position. The position of the husband commands respect and submission because God made it that way.

We tend to 'respect' many different professions. This is based on implicit understanding of authority. These people are experts in their field and have knowledge and practical solutions that are supposed to help us solve our problems. For example, doctors, nurses, dentists, physical therapists, financial advisors, etc. Our hearts hold those we respect above us, sometimes only in a particular area.

Men tend to naturally form into hierarchies for this very reason. Hierarchies within civilization bring about order and prosperity. Each man has his own 'role' to play within the greater confines of society.

Let's pull back the curtain of deception completely

No matter what anyone tells you about 'respect,' it is a concept that is imbued into our very being because of the nature of hierarchies in the world that God has created. Everyone, both men and women, implicitly understand that respect is not about equality. Rather, it is about authority.

We understand this not only because the Scripture tell us, but also because in our hearts the position of respect is one of authority. We take the word and actions of anyone who we respect seriously; whereas, we take the word and actions of anyone who we don't respect as a blathering idiot to put it bluntly.

A wife who respect her husband will submit to him very easily. A wife who has lost respect for her husband will become rebellious, contentious, and nagging. She will attempt to try to 'parent' her husband as a mother does her own child.

- Respect is a heart posture, an attitude, toward someone or something and facilitates submission to authority.

Obviously, a wife that does not respect her husband can submit to him because she obeys God, but this is only part of the issue. God desires that both the heart state and actions align: Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength. In other words, wives are told to both respect and submit to their husbands in order to bring her into a state of order under her husband's authority and to honor God.

This has been around since the beginning of time.

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said to the woman, "Indeed, has God said, 'You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden'?" 2 The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'" 4 The serpent said to the woman, "You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil." 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.
> Genesis 3:16 To the woman He said, "I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children; Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you."

Respecting women = Putting woman on a pedestal = making woman like God in your life. The temptation that the serpent used to get Eve to sin was to entice her to be like God. In other words, she would be set up on the pedestal. God warns husbands and wives not to do this. The curses that God put on man and woman are not actually curses but in reality blessings as God reaffirms natural order.

The position that a man is called to in a relationship is the role of husband and the head. The responsibility is love. The responsibilities do not include respect nor submission. That is the wife's responsibilities.

The pedestal is very deceptive. It leads to the place of being an ineffective leader because you are afraid to call out the follower when they are in sin. This does both of you a disservice.

Conclusions

This is why I don't respect women and neither should any Christian men. It's not about what culture tells you respect is about. It's about what the Scriptures tell us about respect. Respect is always interrelated with authority because it is written on our hearts by God.

- Respecting women = putting them on a pedestal. No woman is attracted to a man who puts them on a pedestal. The only women who are with men who them them on a pedestal are ones they can manipulate, usually for cash and prizes. See: men who hang around women as friends but who want to be in relationships with them who are used for time, money, and emotional support.

- Respect is not earned. It is given, by God, by position. For example, the position of the husband commands respect and submission because God made it that way.
- There are positions of authority in our culture that we should respect because God tells us. For example, earthly authorities. There are positions which we ‘respect’ in certain fields because of their expertise.
- Respect is a heart posture, an attitude, toward someone or something and facilitates submission to authority.
- The respect deception has been around since the beginning of time. Women are tempted to want to be like God, and if you respect them you set them up on the pedestal like a god.
- Be careful who you respect.

If you respect women you automatically implicitly put them on a pedestal in your heart which which leads to idolization. Don’t put women on the pedestal. Don’t respect women.

Note 1: There are a few women who you should respect if they have positional authority. For example, your mother. The Scripture tell us to honor and obey our parents.

Note 2: See previous post for the Scriptural verses and analysis on why I don’t respect women as I did not include all of the Scriptures in this post.

A good fit

May 18, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal's Masculine Monday touched some on the concept of abundance mentality and how it relates to decreased thinking about what woman care about you.

In general, I think abundance mentality is the wrong way to approach relationships. The thing with abundance mentality is that it has some deception embedded into it already. Okay, sure there are more women who are single and available out there. However, that doesn't necessarily mean you will end up meeting them or develop a relationship with them. How many of these single women are actually looking for a serious relationship headed toward marriage? How many of these women are not simply in-name Christians when it benefits them? Upwards of 80-85% of people in the United States call themselves Christians according to some polls. That's clearly an extremely misleading statistic as probably less than 10% of those are actual Christians.

As I have discussed before, the pool actual solid marriage candidates is actually fairly low in Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins. The approximation estimates put the attractive, Christian virgins at .5% (about 1 in 200) of the 18-29 population, and in any random Church about 8.3% (about 1 in 12) of the available women in that same age group. Obviously, there will probably be a greater percentage in orthodox or traditional Churches and less in more liberal Churches. Abundance mentality buys into the deception that there is abundance when in reality the pool is sparse. That's how the cookie crumbles.

Instead, what Christian men should be doing is looking for a woman who is a good fit for them.

For example, a woman who is clearly not interested in a date or a relationship is going to be a bad fit in the long run. We know this because of the patterns of observable behavior in women. Women who feel like they are settling in a relationship or marriage are often going to be chronically unhappy and discontent. This will manifest into a contentious and rebellious girlfriend and/or wife who is constantly nagging or trying to mom her boyfriend or husband. This is not something that you are going to look for in a helpmeet.

A good fit requires mutual interest from both parties. 1 Corinthians 7 notes that if both men and women burn [with passion], they should marry. Likewise, the marital debt of sexual access is due both parties. Other good fit criteria is obedience to Jesus, the commands of the Scripture, and fulfilling the roles and responsibilities of husbands and wives. A woman who is a good follow is a good start.

In conclusion, you shouldn't using abundance mentality but rather searching for a woman who is a good fit for you. A woman who loves Jesus, has the hots for you, and willing to take on the roles and responsibilities put forth in the Scripture to be a respectful and submissive helpmeet.

Oh, she rejected you for a date or is not interested in going out with you anymore?

Clearly, she is not a good fit for you. Let her go and continue searching for someone who is.

Real men don’t love strong women

May 19, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This article has been going around. I finally got a chunk of time to tear it apart because of the misused Scriptures. Let’s begin.

> I’ve heard it too many times: “A man likes a quiet woman.” “Guys don’t respond well to smart girls.” “Educated women are too intimidating to attract good men.”
> I understand why we believe these things. It’s a nice story. It makes sense of the success of some women to find husbands, and the failure of others. As Christians (and as humans), we feel very clever when we get to diagnose the cause and cure of singleness. “You’re too opinionated.” “You’re too boisterous.” “A woman should be small, and quiet, and delicate.”
> Yet, it’s easy to forget in the midst of all our diagnosing: whether a woman is “intimidating” is a factor of male perception, not female personality. Do we want women to be less intimidating? That’s a question to be put to men who experience them as such, and we can only wait for such men to grow. The real question we need to ask is: Do we want women to be weak? And the answer must forever be, on the basis of Scripture, “May it never be.”

You could read the first paragraph and determine that this guy doesn’t know what he’s talking about. Look at what the Scripture say about which qualities wives should cultivate, especially toward unbelieving husbands:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Men don’t respond well to women who are not cultivating godliness. A lack of godliness leads to a nagging, contentious, and rebellious wife. The ‘real reason’ why men don’t respond to so-called smart and educated women is because they believe that being smart and educated makes them better. This inflated importance leads to more nagging, contentious, and rebellious. Funny how that works.

Male perception and not female personality is flat out incorrect. The Scripture tells what kind of personality and qualities wives should have, and it’s not the one he claims. Not being ‘strong’ does not mean weakness. It’s a false dichotomy.

Not withstanding, let’s take a look at the “examples” given which supposedly support his points.

> 1. Strong women expose evil men.
> I can’t speak for Christian men everywhere, but I can speak for myself, and for many of the men in the Bible: Godliness is attractive to both men and women (Proverbs 31:30). And often, godly femininity requires being strong, even intimidating. Consider Jael in Judges 4. Jael’s husband Heber “had separated from the Kenites,” and “had pitched his tent as far away as the oak in Zaanannim, which is near Kedesh.” […]
> Thank God Jael wasn’t meek and submissive and respectful toward this friend of her wayward husband. She wasn’t one to be trampled on. Strong women reject the requests of evil men.

First, we know that godliness is not attractive (at least sexually) to both men and women. That has been covered before.

The author makes interesting presumptions here such as stating that making peace with an oppressor is wayward and becoming a friend with the enemy. We know from the beginning of the chapter that the Israelites were sinning against God. Perhaps her husband had separated himself from the rest of the tribe because they were sinning. Thus, the Lord would have given peace between the oppressor and one of his righteous while he used the oppressor to punish the wayward Israel.

We know that God uses other rulers to do His will. For example, when the Israelites were returning from captivity in Babylon, the rulers of Babylon looked upon them with great favor and peace. God gave Solomon favor and peace with the surrounding nations. Abraham made peace with some nations and warred with others. It’s an interesting assumption to believe that He was wayward because he made peace.

We simply don’t know all of the surrounding circumstances. However, we do know Jael was given this “honor” because Barak refused it when he did not want to go to war without Deborah. It was to Barak’s shame that the Lord delivered Sisera into a woman’s hand.

That doesn’t fit the narrative he’s trying to draw: namely, women should be unsubmissive and disrespectful like Jael. As we know, the Scripture clearly counsel against that in 1 Peter 3.

> 2. Strong women rebuke good men.
> When David set out to kill Nabal — the brash and brute man who embodied pure masculine folly — Nabal’s wife Abigail offered hundreds of fig cakes and loaves of bread and wine skins to David. Yet, she uses the opportunity to warn David that he should “have no cause of grief or pangs of conscience for having shed blood without cause or for my lord working salvation for himself” (1 Samuel 25:31). In > other words, Abigail warned: “Be careful. Don’t use your power in a way that will make you guilty.” […]

> David was attracted to this strong woman for her strength, for her rebuke, and for her character. Abigail made life harder for David. And David, in a moment of grace, was able to see that Abigail’s standing in David’s way was a gift of purity to him. That day, David was seeking salvation for himself, but it was gifted to him by God in Abigail, who, even while she was at his mercy as his subject, told him what he needed to hear.
> Strong women rebuke good men, who need help in their weaknesses, who need someone to help them see how to be strong.

I have seen the story of Abigail taken out of context by feminists (who call themselves Christians) so many times. Let’s look at the full context, shall we?

1. David is roaming around the countryside and even acts to protect the shepherds of Nabal safe during that time (v14-17)
2. David sends servants politely to ask for food (v2-8). Unlike in our culture, given the customs and law of Israel, receiving strangers is an honor for households.
3. Nabal rejects and disdains David’s protection of his people and has no sense of hospitality (v9-11)
4. David, seeing as Nabal is repaying good with evil and decides to act against him. As we know, the Lord hates repaying good with evil. (v12-13 + 21): “Now David had said, “Surely in vain I have guarded all that this man has in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that belonged to him; and he has returned me evil for good.”
5. Abigail intercedes knowing that the Lord was with David and that David is an arm of righteous punishment (v18-22).
6. Abigail is willing to take all of the blame (v22-25).
7. Abigail suggests mercy instead of judgment as mercy is more beneficial to both of them (v26-31).
8. David praises her for her logic as it was able to convince him to stay his hand (v32-35).

Unfortunately, as we can see, the story does not fit the narrative which the author is trying to portray, namely “Strong women rebuke good men, who need help in their weaknesses, who need someone to help them see how to be strong.” In reality, David is not rebuked by Abigail. David was not weak, and Abigail did not show him how be ‘be strong.’

In fact, David’s actions were justified because Nabal was repaying good with evil. However, Abigail was considered righteous because of the points mentioned in 6 and 7. Abigail was willing to take all of the blame for her husbands actions (v24b — On me [I]alone, my lord, be the blame). She didn’t try to justify his evil and even brought a gift of appeasement. Likewise, Abigail suggests mercy instead of judgment. Judgment is what was deserved, but mercy can triumph over judgment. In fact, mercy, like grace, can only triumph if the full guilt of sins is made known and acknowledged by the offender (also, see Parable of the forgiven servant). This mirrors repentance, not a rebuke.

This clearly shows Abigail's righteous actions, and it has nothing to with the false narrative of David being rebuked, being weak or the deficiencies of her husband.

> 3. Strong women raise believing men.
> There is no stronger, more consistent reminder of the gospel in my life than my mom. Paul says something very similar of Timothy: "I am reminded of your sincere faith, a faith that dwelt first in your grandmother Lois and your mother Eunice and now, I am sure, dwells in you as well" (1 Timothy 1:5).
> In an ideal world, men and women would partner together in their strength. But we live in a world where we need strong women to make men strong, because sometimes there simply are no men there to do it. My mom's dad died when she was nine, and my own dad wasn't present in my life enough to be a father. So she did the work of two parents — the work of two disciplers — for both my sister and me. With Timothy and Paul, I'm so glad that God gave us these gifts of strong women to survive the inconsistent presence and consequences of "strong" men.
> Of course, some of the godliest mothers have had some of the ungodliest children, and vice versa. But in an age when fathers often fail to bestow the gift of faith to their children, the future often hangs on the strength of women to do that gospel work.
> Whether as children or their disciples, strong women raise believing men.

The funniest part of this point is that the wrong Scripture is quoted. The Scripture is actually 2 Timothy 1:5 not 1 Timothy 1:5.

Secondly, yes, women and mothers can help men grow up in the faith. On the other hand, the author, again, reads into the passage to fit his narrative that "we need strong women to make men strong." As we've discussed multiples times on this blog before, women do a very bad job at teaching men to be men. The main irony is that Paul is writing these letters to Timothy because he did not have a strong Christian masculine presence when growing up. Hence, Paul is teaching Timothy how to be a leader in the Church. That's what these letters to Timothy were for in the first place!

Of course, when we're trying to fit the feminist narrative of "it takes a strong mother to also be a father," it's quite obvious how we can warp Scripture to fit an agenda. It's a simple fact of nature that mothers cannot be fathers. Just look at the terrible statistics on suicide, education, mental disorders, substance abuse, and the like on fatherlessness. That is why, ideally, children have both a father and a mother. God created it that way.

This is, by far, the worst stretch of the three points the author attempts to make because it plays into the typical trope of building up mothers as fathers while implicitly tearing down the importance of fathers and fatherhood all in one. It's a steaming pile of… poo.

> The Beauty and Strength of FaithWe live in a time when women are outperforming men in many areas of professional and personal competency. And men have two choices: to find female strength captivatingly attractive, or to be insecure and intimidated. Real men love strong women, because God's glory is beautiful, and "woman is the glory of man" (1 Corinthians 11:7).
> Jesus, give men the grace to see the beauty of glorious female strength. Give women the resilience to remain strong long enough for the right men to find them beautiful for the right reasons. And help men and women to fall in love with proven, genuine faith, which is "more precious than gold that perishes though it is tested by fire" (1 Peter 1:7).

Lol.

Aside from the 1 Peter 3 passage, which I already mentioned before, Titus 2 is the other passage that talks about most of the responsibilities of wives.

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

I don't see anything about strong women here. 1 Peter 3 and Titus 2 encourage these qualities:

- 1 Peter 3 — Chaste and respectful behavior; gentle and quiet spirit
- Titus 2 — The behavior is love of husbands and children (Greek: philos not agape), workers at home, and subject to their husbands; the qualities are pure and sensible.

I don't see 'female strength' being 'captivatingly attractive' nor an actual quality that should be emphasized by wives in the Scripture. In fact, female strength is specifically not encouraged as the qualities that wives are to exhibit are opposite that. Chaste and respectful behavior, gentle and quiet spirit, pure and sensible.

Edit: as noted in the comments, the word we are looking for women to be is virtuous such as the woman in Proverbs 31. Virtuous is not synonymous with strong. This 'strong' woman that the author advocates is disrespectful and unsubmissive which is against the Word of God.

In fact, one can only say that the author has gone off the reservation. In the words of Paul:

> 1 Timothy 4:3 If anyone advocates a different doctrine and does not [d]agree with sound words, those of our Lord Jesus Christ, and with the doctrine conforming to godliness, 4 he is conceited and understands nothing; but he [e]has a morbid interest in controversial questions and disputes about words, out of which arise envy, strife, abusive language, evil suspicions, 5 and constant > friction between men of depraved mind and deprived of the truth, who suppose that [f]godliness is a means of gain.

> 2 Timothy 3:2 For men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, revilers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, 3 unloving, irreconcilable, malicious gossips, without self-control, brutal, [a]haters of good, 4 treacherous, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, 5 holding to a form of [b]godliness, although they have denied its power; Avoid such men as these. 6 For among them are those who [c]enter into households and captivate [d]weak women weighed down with sins, led on by various impulses, 7 always learning and never able to come to the [e]knowledge of the truth. 8 Just as Jannes and Jambres opposed Moses, so these men also oppose the truth, men of depraved mind, rejected in regard to the faith. 9 But they will not make further progress; for their folly will be obvious to all, just as [f]Jannes's and Jambres's folly was also.

Let's pray he doesn't lead anyone else astray. If he sees this, let's pray he repents.

The Patriarchy Part 2

May 22, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A couple months ago, I wrote on the Patriarchy. Jonadab-the-Rechabite makes an excellent comment over at Dalrock's in response to a poster that Dalrock wrote on.

> @ Wade
> You have shown more courage than most and you deserve credit for that. I do not desire that you leave, but that you stay and be a Berean, to see if these things be true. As a shepherd you are held accountable for you teaching. If you are in error, I would think you would desire to repent. That takes humility and the illumination of the Holy Spirit. I pray that the Holy Spirit will work in you with many of the comments here including the following. I want to give you something to meditate on, it is in response to your statement:
> "It is, as you rightly point out, my desire to show how patriarchy is not the pattern of the New Covenant Scriptures."
> I submit that patriarchy is not a polity, character or pattern that is of the created order, rather it is intrinsic to God and so transcends the created order. Much like truth is not a characteristic that is created or can rightly be used to judge God as if it is extrinsic to Him, God is truth and truth is a quality intrinsic to Him. We would not know what truth is, if God was not truth. In a similar way God is patriarchy. The economic trinity, (the relationships between the persons), is revealed as a patriarchy. Christ is the son of the Father, who does His Fathers will. The Father sends the Son to redeem the elect and blesses Him; "This is my Son with whom I am well pleased". Christ is for all eternity past and future the Son of the Father. This is the rule of the Father which is literally patriarchy.
> Beyond the economic Trinity is a patriarchy, redemption is also fashioned in scripture as a patriarchy. Christ the husband, elects, redeems and rules His bride the church. She is to worship, obey, fear, submit, serve, be subject to her husband, Christ. The rule of the husband as the head of the wife and the household is patriarchy.
> Holiness is a quality that is intrinsic to God. We say that something is holy because it resembles godliness. Patriarchy is also holy. Christ is making His bride holy and a Christian husband sanctifies his wife (makes holy) with the washing and watering of the Word. Thus patriarchy is not a pattern of the New Testament covenant, nor dispensation nor administration et al. Patriarchy transcends human history and nature, it is the very nature of God. When Christians live in patriarchal families they reflect the very holiness of God and bear witness to His sovereign rule.

Indeed, Moose expressed similar sentiments in his post when discussing Patriarchy with the neoreaction.

This is the lie of feminism and modernity. The backdrop of our culture is that there is an undercurrent of rebellion against any male led endeavor. The evil acts of a few are touted as evidence that the structure is rotten. However, we know this to be false.

This leads to the conclusion that if the first thing you think of when you think of authority and/or headship is concern over how it can be abused rather how it can be used for good you're already on the wrong track altogether.

Obfuscating questions such as "what if my [insert authority here] tells me to sin" are simply the result of a rotten mindset. This rottenness of the culture within each of us needs to be purged in order to operate with heart, mind, soul, and strength in alignment with God and the commands he gives to us regarding authority in the Scriptures.

> Authority is always implicitly tied to the responsibility to love.
> We see this reflected in the Father's nature — 'For God so loved the world that He sent His only son that whosoever shall believe in him will not perish but have eternal life' — and as a command given to those in authority toward those subordinate. For examples, husbands to wives: 'husbands love your wives as Christ loved the Church…'

If you want to address the point when discussing authority or Patriarchy with others, you need to find out why a person implicitly believes that authority is bad when it is good.

Case in point. Discussing the topic when they have a fundamentally different value system than you — authority = bad versus authority = good — will get you nowhere.

The Patriarchy Part 3

May 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ame questions the term “Patriarchy” due to it potentially not being mentioned in the Scripture, and it being abused. I’m going to ignore the ‘abuse’ part because I already covered it.

Instead, let’s look at the Koine Greek history of the term. First, the word has origins from the term ‘pater’ which means ‘father’ in Greek.

> G3962 — πατήρ — patēr — pat-ayr’
> Apparently a primary word; a father (literally or figuratively, near or more remote): – father, parent. Total KJV occurrences: 419

One of the derivative words ‘patria’ is used in terms of ‘lineage.’

> G3965 — πατριά — patria — pat-ree-ah’
> As if feminine of a derivative of G3962; paternal descent, that is, (concretely) a group of families or a whole race (nation): – family, kindred, lineage. Total KJV occurrences: 3
> Luke 2:4 So Joseph also went up from the town of Nazareth in Galilee to Judea, to Bethlehem the town of David, because he belonged to the house and line (patria) of David.

The next derivative ‘patriarches’ is where we derive the actual term Patriarchy.

> G3966 — πατριάρχης — patriarchēs — pat-ree-arkh’-ace
> From G3965 and G757; a progenitor (patriarch): – patriarch. Total KJV occurrences: 4
> Acts 2:29 “Fellow Israelites, I can tell you confidently that the patriarch (patriarches) David died and was buried, and his tomb is here to this day.
> Acts 7:8 Then he gave Abraham the covenant of circumcision. And Abraham became the father of Isaac and circumcised him eight days after his birth. Later Isaac became the father of Jacob, and Jacob became the father of the twelve patriarchs (patriarches). 9 “Because the patriarchs (patriarches) were jealous of Joseph, they sold him as a slave into Egypt. But God was with him 10 and rescued him from all his troubles. He gave Joseph wisdom and enabled him to gain the goodwill of Pharaoh king of Egypt. So Pharaoh made him ruler over Egypt and all his palace.
> Hebrews 7:4 Just think how great he was: Even the patriarch (patriarches) Abraham gave him a tenth of the plunder! 5 Now the law requires the descendants of Levi who become priests to collect a tenth from the people—that is, from their fellow Israelites—even though they also are descended from Abraham.

There’s a couple of other same ‘patri-‘ derivative words referring to tradition and customs of fathers which you can look up on your own time in the Greek.

Generally speaking, Patriarch/Patriarchy is used as a term to denote male led families and lineage.

The fact that it has ‘bad’ connotations or ‘has been abused’ I don’t really care. As you can see, the word is used above when Stephen was martyred in Acts 7 to talk about how Joseph was sold as a slave by his patriarchal brothers. The fact that they did evil of their own prerogative, which God used for good, does not make patriarchy bad. Hence, it’s a fundamentally good and holy concept from the Scripture. People don’t have to like it, but you should use it because it’s good.

This blog will obviously continue to promote Patriarchy: male led families. Likewise, it will continue to promote masculinity associated with learning how to lead families.

Women like sex too (the Christian ought trap)

May 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been thinking more about how the Church falls into the feminist trap of pathologizing the male sex drive. Additionally, the perpetuation of the slow cooker analogy has done a lot of damage.

The basic True facts are:

- Men like having sex with attractive women.
- Men are sexually attracted to beautiful, young, feminine women.
- Women like having sex with attractive men.
- Women are sexually attracted to powerful, high-status, handsome, masculine men.

Unfortunately, these are not facts that are widely perpetuated throughout the Church. The Church, unfortunately, buys into some deceptions about male and female nature.

The ought trap

This is the 'ought' trap that the Church falls into.

> Since godliness is good, women 'ought' to be attracted to godliness.

This statement wreaks a heckuva lot of damage.

Following the logical conclusion of this statement means that women cannot be attracted to bad boys because there is no godliness in them. Thus, women are seduced by bad boys against their will. "It's not their fault." Womens' agency toward sin can be taken away from them because it's the man's fault. In other words, women can still be assumed as pure and holy and put on the Christian pedestal while the male sex drive can be pathologized because these bad men are tempting women to sin.

Of course, we know that women are sexually attracted to bad boys because they have a masculine presence and confidence that most feminized Church men do not. The women are not really 'seduced' by the these bad men but rather are attracted to them. Women willingly give into the temptation to have sex with bad boys because they want to have sex with attractive men.

Thus, all of these factors come into play leading to a mass-scale deception — inadvertent or not — to men and even women about the female sex drive. The rot of feminism runs deep.

Yes, women like sex too. Especially with attractive men.

Is BPD just women with too much freedom revisited

May 27, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Back in 2013, when SSM's site was going strong, Cail Corishev came up with (?) a theory that women with BPD was either strongly correlated and/or caused by too much freedom. I found this quite interesting and commented over there, and I was recently reminded of this post which is why I'm bringing it back up.

BPD is borderline personality disorder, although now classified by ICD-10 as emotionally unstable personality disorder.

> Borderline personality disorder (BPD) is a pattern of abnormal behavior characterized by extreme fear of abandonment; unstable relationships with other people, sense of self, or emotions; feelings of emptiness; frequent dangerous behavior; and self-harm.[3]
> Borderline personality disorder may be characterized by the following signs and symptoms:
> ~ Markedly disturbed sense of identity
> ~ Frantic efforts to avoid real or imagined abandonment
> ~ Splitting ("black-and-white" thinking)
> ~ Severe impulsivity
> ~ Intense or uncontrollable emotional outbursts that often seem disproportionate to the event or situation
> ~ Unstable and chaotic interpersonal relationships
> ~ Self-damaging behavior
> ~ Distorted self-image[3]
> ~ Dissociation
> ~ Frequently accompanied by depression, anxiety, anger, substance abuse, or rage

Genetics seems to play a moderate role much like homosexuality, although I would be interested to see if there are epigenetic effects like obesity. For example, the heritability of schizophrenia is high. That means if your parents had it, then there's a high chance you will get it as well due to genetic influences. However, for low and moderate heritable traits, there is some influence of genetics on development of the trait, but it's hard to suss them out even from twin studies because of shared environment and potential epigenetic effects.

What epigenetic effects are is the passing on of conditions without encoding genetics for the condition. The rise of obesity is, in part, due to epigenetic effects. If your grandparents and parents are obese there's a much higher likelihood of the children developing obesity because the patterns of methylation on DNA can be passed on to offspring even though they may not have genes for obesity.

Indeed, childhood [sexual] trauma shows a strong correlation with BPD, and it may play the strongest role. It's interesting when you combine this with fatherlessness. One of the stats from the CDC shows that "85% of all children who show behavior disorders come from fatherless homes – 20 times the average."

Going back to Cail Corishev's theory, what I suspect is that it's not so much that BPD are women with too much freedom. Instead,

> BPD are women without strong and moral authority figures, typically fathers, in their lives. Additionally, when they were young they were not morally grounded or taught responsibility for actions and consequences.

Women who have strong father figures know they are loved and have a strong sense of their own identity. It is generally the fathers who play the strong role in teaching their children morality in regard to right and wrong and that there are consequences for actions. Mothers tend to shy away from such discipline if there is a strong husband and father for their children.

Indeed, if you look at the list of potential symptoms, a strong loving father would help prevent all of those, if not completely. Strong sense of identity, no feelings of abandonment, less or eliminated black and white thinking, less impulsivity, less emotional outbursts, most stable interpersonal relationships, good self image, no dissociation, not as prone to depression, anxiety, rage, substance abuse, and the like.

To tie this back to the Scriptures, the increasing prevalence of personality and behavioral disorders — not just BPD — are big reasons for strong, loving authority figures. All children are not meant to grow up without fathers, and women are not meant to 'go it alone' in the world. Feminists like perpetuating the myth of the independent woman, but we all know that it is not true.

Hence, the strong effect of fathers in raising stable and mature daughters is why daughters are under the authority of their fathers until they get married, after which they are under the authority of their husbands. The fathers and husbands represent a protective covering over them and a stable, grounding influence in their lives.

Not curses but punishments (Genesis 3) Part 1

May 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been some talking about Genesis 3, so I decided to revisit it. What I found is actually very interesting.

Personally, I've always heard of the punishments given to Adam and Eve referred to as curses by pastors and every Christian I've encountered. However, this is not the case according to a closer reading of the passages.

> Genesis 3:14 The Lord God said to the serpent,
> "Because you have done this, Cursed are you more than all cattle, And more than every beast of the field; On your belly you will go, And dust you will eat All the days of your life; 15 And I will put enmity Between you and the woman, And between your seed and her seed; He shall [d]bruise you on the head, And you shall bruise him on the heel.
> 16 To the woman He said, "I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children; Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you."
> 17 Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';
> Cursed is the ground because of you; In [f]toil you will eat of it All the days of your life. 18 "Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you; And you will eat the [g]plants of the field; 19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread, Till you return to the ground, Because from it you were taken; For you are dust, And to dust you shall return."

The word cursed is used twice. However, what is God cursing? He specifically curses the serpent form and representation (as Satan), and He curses the ground because of Adam. God does not curse Adam or Eve.

Why does this matter? To look at some of the other curses in the Scripture, let's refer to the law:

> Deuteronomy 27:15 'Cursed is the man who makes [g]an idol or a molten image, an abomination to the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and sets it up in secret.' And all the people shall answer and say, 'Amen.'
> 16 'Cursed is he who dishonors his father or mother.' And all the people shall say, 'Amen.'
> 17 'Cursed is he who moves his neighbor's boundary mark.' And all the people shall say, 'Amen.'
> 18 'Cursed is he who misleads a blind person on the road.' And all the people shall say, 'Amen.'

> 19 ‘Cursed is he who distorts the justice due an alien, [h]orphan, and widow.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 20 ‘Cursed is he who lies with his father’s wife, because he has uncovered his father’s skirt.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 21 ‘Cursed is he who lies with any animal.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 22 ‘Cursed is he who lies with his sister, the daughter of his father or of his mother.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 23 ‘Cursed is he who lies with his mother-in-law.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 24 ‘Cursed is he who strikes his neighbor in secret.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 25 ‘Cursed is he who accepts a bribe to strike down an innocent person.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’
> 26 ‘Cursed is he who does not confirm the words of this law by doing them.’ And all the people shall say, ‘Amen.’

In a sense, curses are abominations against the Lord far beyond what we would consider normal sin and punishment. When taken in this context, it is not so much that Adam and Eve were cursed but punished rightly for what they had done.

I’ll explore the specific punishments a bit more in my next post, which should come in a little bit.

Not curses but punishments (Genesis 3) Part 2

May 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the previous post on not curses but punishments, I discussed how it was solely the serpent and the ground that were cursed. Adam and Eve were not cursed by God but rather punished. Like the previous post, I believe that God will open your eyes on this post to see the Truth of the punishments.

Now, let's take a look at the specific punishments that God gave for Adam and Eve.

> Genesis 3:14 The Lord God said to the serpent,
> "Because you have done this, Cursed are you more than all cattle, And more than every beast of the field; On your belly you will go, And dust you will eat All the days of your life; 15 And I will put enmity Between you and the woman, And between your seed and her seed; He shall [d]bruise you on the head, And you shall bruise him on the heel.
> 16 To the woman He said, "I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children; Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you."
> 17 Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';
> Cursed is the ground because of you; In [f]toil you will eat of it All the days of your life. 18 "Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you; And you will eat the [g]plants of the field; 19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread, Till you return to the ground, Because from it you were taken; For you are dust, And to dust you shall return."

There are two specific punishments given to Eve:

- I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children;
- Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you.

There are two specific punishments given to Adam:

- Cursed is the ground because of you; In [f]toil you will eat of it All the days of your life. 18 "Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you; And you will eat the [g]plants of the field; 19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread,
- Till you return to the ground, Because from it you were taken; For you are dust, And to dust you shall return."

One of the points that Churchians and egalitarians like to tout is that the 'curses' — or rather punishments — given to Adam and Eve were broken by Jesus on the cross. Specifically, the 'desire for the husband and he will rule over you.' However, we know this is incorrect. Women still have pain in child birthing, men still have to toil, and we still have a physical death. These punishments are only redeemed when a new heaven and new earth is created by God in Revelation 21.

> Revelation 21:Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and there is no longer any sea. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. 3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne, saying, “Behold, the tabernacle of God is among men, and He will [a]dwell among them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself will be among them[b], 4 and He will wipe away every tear from their eyes; and there will no longer be any death; there will no longer be any mourning, or crying, or pain; the first things have passed away.”

Going back to the passage:

> I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children;
> H6093 — ‘itstsâbôn — its-tsaw-bone’ — From H6087; worrisomeness, that is, labor or pain: – sorrow, toil. Total KJV occurrences: 3

In fact, there was pain and labor in child birth before the fall. If you look at the particular wording, it specifically says that pain and labor in child birthing will be greatly multiplied or increased. That doesn’t mean there was no pain or labor before the fall; rather, there was pain and labor but after the fall it was greatly increased. Indeed, as the punishment for sin, we can say that women’s child birthing has been made more difficult.

This is an important point because most people, even Christians, believe that pain is an evil thing. Pain is actually a good thing when viewed through the lens of people born with insensitivity to pain. For example, the fact that fire and boiling water is hot is taken for granted for parents trying to teach young children to stay away from the stove. This is not the case for those without the ability to experience pain which often leads to dangerous situations including physical scarring if not death.

Interestingly, the same thing happened with Adam with work.

> Cursed is the ground because of you; In [f]toil you will eat of it All the days of your life. 18 “Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you; And you will eat the [g]plants of the field; 19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread,
> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, “From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not [n]eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”

It’s not that Adam did not work before the fall. The Scriptures in the prior chapter, Genesis 2, indicate that it was Adam’s job before the fall to be a steward of the garden.

Now, because of his sin the ground was cursed. Thus, men's work has been made more difficult.

Now, to bring this back somewhat of a full circle to other things I've written about. I have already explored the strong case for why there was headship before the fall. Let's take a look at it from the perspective of punishments.

> Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you.

Egalitarians believe that prior to the fall Adam and Eve were equal. They also believe that since Eve was 'cursed' by God — which we now know to be incorrect — that the coming of Jesus and His redemption that husbands and wives should be equal in marriage. However, we don't find this in the Scriptures even in the New Testament. There are many passages that affirm the headship-submission model: Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Corinthians 11, 1 Corinthians 14, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3.

Let's analyze the format of the punishments. Each of the punishments was not something new. Woman already had pain and labor in child birthing; it was just made more difficult. Man already tended to the garden; it was just made more difficult. Man was already formed from the dust; death reigned through sin, and he returned to the dust.

The logical conclusion is that headship was already present prior to the fall. After the fall, God redirected the desire of the woman to be like God instead toward man giving her a choice to want to be like him (evil, usurpation) or to be submissive to him (good). There is evidence for this.

> Genesis 3:2 The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'" 4 The serpent said to the woman, "You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil." 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

We can see that the temptation that Satan used for Eve is stimulating her innate hypergamy. You will be like God. This is why I come to the conclusion that hypergamy is a feature of women, not a bug. It was present before the fall because Eve had the ability to be tempted by it. Like any feature, it can go out of haywire without self control. In this case, instead of eating of the tree of life, she chose the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

Instead, when God punishes Eve, He redirects her desire — her hypergamy — toward her husband.

> Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you.

In a Christian understanding of attraction, I explored the uses of the word desire in Hebrew. It's used two more times. Once Genesis 4 and another time in Song of Songs.

- Gen 3:16c Yet your desire (teshûqâh) will be for your husband, And he will rule (mâshal) over you."
- Gen 4:7 If you do well, [e]will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire (teshûqâh) is for you, but you must master (mâshal) it.
- Song of Solomon 7:10 — The Union of Love — "I am my beloved's, And his desire (teshûqâh) is for me. 11 "Come, my beloved, let us go out into the [l]country, Let us spend the night in the villages. 12 "Let us rise early and go to the vineyards; Let us see whether the vine has budded And its blossoms have opened, And whether the pomegranates have bloomed. There I will give you my love. 13 "The mandrakes have given forth fragrance; And over our doors are all choice fruits, Both new and old, Which I have saved up for you, my beloved.

What is the choice? The fruit of the tree tells the tale. It is the knowledge between good and evil. What is good and what is evil? Good is the choice to submit to her husband. Evil is the choice to rebel against and usurp her husband.

The usage in Genesis 4 describes the sin desire that wants to rule over Cain. Likewise, the sinful desire of women in the punishment is to not just usurp headship but also the desire to be like man. However, appropriately subjugated desire mastered through submission to headship results in sexual desire in marriage both for her and her husband toward her as seen in Song of Songs.

We understand that feminism and egalitarianism does not push women toward independence from man or even equality with man. Rather, feminism pushes women to be like man, and for men to take the subordinate role in a relationship to be like women. This has been crassly termed by feminists and anti-feminists alike as penis envy.

Now, let's put all of the parts together.

Prior to the fall, Adam and Eve lived in perfect headship-submission in harmony. However, after the fall, Eve gets her just desserts punishment from eating of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil — the choice to choose between good (submission) or evil (usurpation, rebellion, desire to be like man) in her relationship with her husband. Prior to the fall, her submission was present and easy; after the fall, her choice is more difficult, much like the other punishments.

Additionally, there is some interesting information in regard to the punishments.

> 1 Timothy 5:8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.
> 1 Timothy 2:9 Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, [g]modestly and discreetly, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly garments, 10 but rather by means of good works, as is proper for women making > a claim to godliness. 11 A woman must quietly receive instruction with entire submissiveness. 12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first [h]created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, [i]fell into transgression. 15 But women will be [j]preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with [k]self-restraint.

There is a reason why work for men and child birthing and submission for women were responsibilities before the fall and emphasized in punishment. It is also reflected in the nature of responsibilities of each sex post-salvation. Paul's inspiration from God was extremely profound.

Conclusions

Let's pull back all of the blinders and gaze upon the Truth.

- The serpent and the ground were cursed, not Adam and Eve.
- Adam and Eve were not cursed but punished.
- The punishments were not original. They had roots in the nature of man and woman and their responsibilities before the fall. These are:
- Death — man started from dust and returned to dust. God told Adam about this punishment prior to eating the fruit in Genesis 2.
- Toil and work — man stewarded the garden before the fall and had to work harder after the fall. In Genesis 2, God tells man to be a steward of the garden. His job is made more difficult by sin.
- Labor and pain — women had pain and labor in child birthing before the fall but it was multiplied more after the fall. Her job is made more difficult by sin.
- Submission — women desired to be like God, but God redirected the desire toward the husband thus giving woman a choice between good and evil. A woman can give into sin desire if she wants to usurp the husband's position to be like man, or she can choose righteousness by submitting to her husband to be like woman. Her responsibility is made more difficult by sin.
- In context: Prior to the fall, Adam and Eve lived in perfect headship-submission in harmony. However, after the fall, Eve gets her just desserts punishment from eating of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil — the choice to choose between good (submission) or evil (usurpation, rebellion, desire to be like man) in her relationship toward her husband. Prior to the fall, her submission was present and easy; after the fall, her choice is more difficult, much like the other punishments.

There is beauty in each of these punishments to man and woman.

As I wrote in God is good, hard toil and hard child birthing lead to immense satisfaction and joy afterward. There is almost nothing more beautiful than a mother holding her new born baby after a hard labor. For men, a hard days work and relaxation afterward is one of the most satisfying feelings in the world. Likewise, there is beauty in the the choice of a wife to submit to her husband in the oneness that it creates.

Finally, God was gracious in not letting man be immortalized in sin if he had partaken of the tree of life after partaking of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

Genesis 3, the sin nature of women, good leadership, and female contentment

June 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm going to wrap up the two posts a few days ago on Not curses but punishments (Genesis 3) Part 1 and Not curses but punishments (Genesis 3) Part 2 with this post.

There were a lot of core Truths that I investigated in these two posts:

- The serpent and the ground were cursed, not Adam and Eve.
- Adam and Eve were not cursed but punished.
- The punishments were not original. They had roots in the nature of man and woman and their responsibilities before the fall. These are:
- Death — man started from dust and returned to dust. God told Adam about this punishment prior to eating the fruit in Genesis 2.
- Toil and work — man stewarded the garden before the fall and had to work harder after the fall. In Genesis 2, God tells man to be a steward of the garden. His job is made more difficult by sin.
- Labor and pain — women had pain and labor in child birthing before the fall but it was multiplied more after the fall. Her job is made more difficult by sin.
- Submission — women desired to be like God, but God redirected the desire toward the husband thus giving woman a choice between good and evil. A woman can give into sin desire if she wants to usurp the husband's position to be like man, or she can choose righteousness by submitting to her husband to be like woman. Her responsibility is made more difficult by sin.
- In context: Prior to the fall, Adam and Eve lived in perfect headship-submission in harmony. However, after the fall, Eve gets her just desserts punishment from eating of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil — the choice to choose between good (submission) or evil (usurpation, rebellion, desire to be like man) in her relationship toward her husband. Prior to the fall, her submission was present and easy; after the fall, her choice is more difficult, much like the other punishments.

It's interesting because the patterning of the punishments given to Adam and Eve were more difficulty in responsibilities to what had been there prior to the fall. This is not common teaching within the Church because most people believe the pre-fall world was some type of utopia imagined from the deceptive lie of modernity or feminist where there was 'equality' or some other nebulous concept.

The sin nature of women

Now, let's look at the core of this post by going back to the temptation of Eve.

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said to the woman, "Indeed, has God said, 'You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden'?" 2 The woman said to the serpent,

> “From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, ‘You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.’” 4 The serpent said to the woman, “You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.” 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

The temptation is a back and forth exchange between the Serpent and Eve, which we can glean a lot about the psychological nature of women.

Let me step back and bit and refer to one of Cane’s bests posts on women — they want different: a primer on womens’ sin and genius. In this, he makes the statement:

> Men and women are even more different than that. Women are headstrong and challenging because they want what they want and they don’t give a damn about the whys and whatfors. In the female soul desire is mainlined. They want differently than we men do.
> The typical desire of a typical man is weighed thus: “Can I get the goods without getting in trouble?” A woman says to herself, “How do I get the goods without getting in trouble?” While the difference in words is subtle to the ear; the meanings are widely separated. The thought of doing without is a secondary consideration at best. That’s just in the nature of a woman, and why they need a leader.

Due to the difference in how men and women approach temptation, the exchange between the serpent and Eve is very intriguing to examine.

1. Serpent: “Indeed, has God said, ‘You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden’?”
2. Woman: “From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, ‘You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.’”
3. Serpent: “You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.”
4. Woman: When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

First, questions strongly evoke women temptation in women. The serpent asks a question which draws in Eve into a temptation. For example, gossip and envy are some of the most overt and rampant sins among women. How it starts: “Did you hear about so and so?”

Second, details are easily distorted when women are tempted. What God told Adam in the garden was to not eat from the tree or he would die. What Eve told the serpent was to not eat from or touch the tree or you would die. Now, I've seen this argument used to denigrate Adam's headship because he didn't communicate the command to Eve right. However, we simply don't know. What we do know is that Eve got some of the details wrong when she was being tempted. Thus, women have a weakness under temptation where the truth can become distorted.

Third, when a woman wants something, it is easy to convince her to do it if you remove negative consequences. There were 3 things that led her to indulging in temptation.

> When the woman saw that the tree (1) was good for food, and (2) that it was a delight to the eyes, and (3) that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

If we look at what Eve did eventually, we see that she was already tempted by the tree of the knowledge of good and evil prior to the serpent speaking to her. It looked like good food and it was a delight to the eyes. The only thing that happened was that the serpent convinced her that instead of dying she would become like God by being wise. The negative consequence of eating the tree was removed in her mind, and all that was left were positives.

1. Questions were asked
2. Details were subtly changed
3. Negative consequences were omitted in her mind

Psychologically, this follows the script of "how do I get the goods without getting in trouble."

In women, we can say that temptation is directing her attention to her surrounds off of the narrow road (questions especially via comparisons), changing small details to allow a deviation from the straight and narrow (a change in course), and finally covering up the negative end point (to coax her down the deviant path). In effect, it's window dressing bad things as good. Hence, why women are more likely to be deceived.

Good leadership

Now, let me take a quick detour into how men and husbands are good leadership with women. If you look at the ways women are easily tempted, you can glean some valuable concepts of good leadership from them.

1. Don't ask questions. Good leaders lead by example and make statements if they need to do something. For example, if you're dating you make the plans and choose the restaurant. Women will often get exasperated if they have to make a decision. As you may know, asking women decision questions can often lead you to a place of exasperation and conflict.
2. Keep firm to the Truth. Details are small things which are important. This is stewardship 101. Luke 16:10 "He who is faithful in a very little thing is faithful also in much; and he who is unrighteous in a very little thing is unrighteous also in much.

3. Always weigh and explain negative consequences. Women are more prone to being deceived. Thus, it is important to remind of negative consequences. For instance, many of feminism teachings that trap women such as sex without consequences, birth control, fat acceptance, attention whoring, immodesty, vulgarity, and other immoralities are easy traps for daughters because the negative consequences for such actions are lauded as positives.

It should be obvious that these 3 things are big factors to take into account so as to lead women away from temptation and toward Christ. Of course, you can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink. So any choices she makes where she has been made aware of the temptation and succumbs to it are on her.

Female contentment

Finally, Genesis 3 speaks most about female contentment. Obviously, the passages about the initial temptation and the punishment shows that women, as a whole, tend to let their desires run wild.

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said to the woman, "Indeed, has God said, 'You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden'?" 2 The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'" 4 The serpent said to the woman, "You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil." 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.
> Genesis 3:16 To the woman He said, "I will greatly multiply Your pain [e]in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children; Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you."

Hypergamy, in particular, has the capacity to run roughshod all over women to their own detriment. Women need to be encouraged to be content, especially to avoid falling into temptation.

> 1 Timothy 6:3 If anyone advocates a different doctrine and does not [d]agree with sound words, those of our Lord Jesus Christ, and with the doctrine conforming to godliness, 4 he is conceited and understands nothing; but he [e]has a morbid interest in controversial questions and disputes about words, out of which arise envy, strife, abusive language, evil suspicions, 5 and constant friction between men of depraved mind and deprived of the truth, who suppose that [f]godliness is a means of gain. 6 But godliness actually is a means of great gain when accompanied by contentment. 7 For we have brought > nothing into the world, so we cannot take anything out of it either. 8 If we have food and covering, with these we shall be content. 9 But those who want to get rich fall into temptation and a snare and many foolish and harmful desires which plunge men into ruin and destruction. 10 For the love of money is a root of all [g]sorts of evil, and some by longing for it have wandered away from the faith and pierced themselves with many griefs.

Since women are the primary consumers in society, striving for contentment will affect them the most. This is a very, very difficult thing for women to learn, but once they learn how to be content in any situation they have the capacity to be a virtuous woman of God.

The decay is a time of pruning

June 5, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal's Spirit of the age post actually coincides with this one that I've been thinking about writing for a few weeks now.

This article ran across my FB page a few weeks ago on the Christian Myth of America's moral decay.

> "This country is in moral decline. I just wish we would return to our Christian values and turn back to God."
> I came across this comment on a social media thread tonight, and as a Christian it made me more than a bit nauseous. I hear this sentiment from fellow believers often, and whenever I do I always wonder just what "Christian values" they'd like America to return to:
> To women not being able to vote?
> To people owning slaves?
> To segregation?
> To street pistol duels and packs of vigilantes meting out justice in the town square?
> To organized crime running urban police forces?
> To women being marital property?
>
> Are these the "ol' time religion" days these folks openly pine for; the days when America was apparently so much more reverent, so much more righteous, so much more Godly than it is today?
> This idea of our country's present moral decay has become a go-to Evangelical Christian trope for decades; an attempt at a literal self-fulfilling prophecy, where the world is falling hopelessly apart and the Church is the lone, faithful remnant standing in the face of the heathen culture's rebellion. Much like Noah, these religious people imagine themselves sole builders of the only safe place from God's coming wrath; the waters of dread surely and swiftly rising.
> But the truth is America is not in decline any more than at any time in its history. This is just lazy religious-speak that seeks to paint the picture of everything being terrible so it can name drop the "Last Days" and leverage the ensuing fear such language invariably creates in suggestible God-fearing folk.
> Only everything isn't terrible—at least not more terrible:
> People have always been bigoted, petty, and ignorant, they just all didn't have free, 24-hour self-promotion machines where they could advertise as much on a regular basis.
> There have always been corrupt governments, contemptible politicians, > and hypocritical religious leaders, only now we have more people armed with the resources to unearth and expose them.

>
> Gross injustices against the poor, the LGBTQ community, women, immigrants, and people of color have existed since America was a newborn. We just didn't have phone cameras to broadcast it to the world and to make it commonplace.
> Teenagers have always followed the rush of their raging hormones into all sorts of regrettable messes, they just didn't have Snapchat to preserve it for posterity.
> In other words, there really is nothing new under the sun.
> (Bolded by him, not me)

Unfortunately, the author falls into the typical trap of modernity. It's old liberalism lie that things are improving as we eliminate more supposed injustices. As Donal notes, it's the Spirit of the Age.

In reality, most of the things he mentions above are framed in a worldly terms not godly terms. In Israel and Christianity, the leadership of the Church, community, and families is/was composed of only elderly men. Jesus did nothing to change that, and both Paul and Peter affirmed it in the Church. Likewise, a husband's headship is for love. However, rebellion is present all throughout America's history lending to the unconscious or conscious assumption that authority is evil when it is good.

This assumption carries over into thinking authority makes women property just the same as slaves and things like segregation. Make no mistake. Everyone is under authority. Everyone is a slave to something. Some of us to Christ, some to money, some to hedonism, some to their jobs. This is specifically why the law had conditions for slaves to be permanently of their master (Ex 21, Deut 15), and why both Peter and Paul were more concerned about the hearts of masters and slaves rather than condemning slavery. Earthly positions are just that — not a big deal in the grand scheme of the gospel and changed lives.

There is the interesting nitpicking of 'lawlessness' to prove the point which is the exception rather than the rule. Indeed, if you look at the statistics which tell the general tale of the population, we know that America is in a time of decay. 50%+ of children are born out of wedlock. Divorce rates remain high. Many children don't have fathers. Less people than ever claim to be Christians, and more people than ever do not go to Church. The lack of strong male (father) influence on children leads to increased suicide rates, poorer educational outcomes, drugs, alcoholism, risky and earlier sex, children out of wedlock, and many other negative outcomes.

Let's be quite frank. America is in a time of serious moral decay. It's pretty disingenuous to assume otherwise based on nitpicking examples to fit the narrative, which can even be done with passages of Scripture to shame men into liking strong women. The attack on husbands, fathers, marriage, families, and the Church — which are the core of Christian community — is quite clear. You don't even have to look for it because it's so obvious. Thankfully, one of Jesus' ubiquitous "I am" claims speaks directly to this.

> John 15:1 "I am the true vine, and My Father is the vinedresser. 2 Every branch in Me that does not bear fruit, He takes away; and every branch that bears fruit, He [a]prunes it so that it may bear more fruit. 3 You are already [b]clean because of the word which I have spoken to you. 4 Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit [c]of itself unless it abides in the vine, so neither can you unless you abide in Me. 5 I am the vine, you are the branches; he who abides in Me and I in him, he bears much fruit, for apart from Me you can do nothing. 6 If anyone does not abide in Me, he is thrown away as a branch and dries up; and they gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned. 7 If you abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ask whatever you wish, and it will be done for you. 8 My Father is glorified by this, that you bear much fruit, and so [d]prove to be My disciples. 9 Just as the Father has loved Me, I have also loved you; abide in My love.
> 10 If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love. 11 These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full.

Those who do not bear fruit are being pruned. The 'falling away' of many people from the Church and the faith is clear evidence of the pruning in action. Those that claim to be Christian and follow in a pattern of good works will be fruitful, and that fruit will stand out. When there is decay, it is time for pruning.

A lesson in false humility: Christians are allergic to healthy lifestyles

The idolatry of chasing the perfect body. (h/t Coastal)

As many of you know, I work in the fitness industry. So articles like this amuse me as a Christian. Amuse me a lot. Let's deconstruct this, shall we?

> Vanity
> There is a certain accomplishment in achieving your fitness goals. You've been working hard on that fitness program and are finally seeing the fruits of your labor. You also may start to get some attention from others who are also noticing your fitness progress. And you like it. A lot.
> In our world of constant social media updates, we often view fitness-related images with arms and legs bared. Skintight clothing. Muscles bulging.
> It makes sense to a degree: People are proud of their hard work. With all arguments for modesty set aside, I think that it is crucial to consider, from a biblical perspective, why we post or share these fitness achievements.
> While many desire encouragement from friends to reach their goals, and others have a mission to inspire others to live healthfully, there is an underlying trap of vanity amidst these displays of fitness. We like to see ourselves looking good, and we like for others to see us looking good as well. This tendency to crave attention can quickly devolve into making our bodies our idols.

Or, you know, you could just not post attention whoring posts to Facebook and Instagram. I've never once posted a picture of my fit body to any social media website or blog. On the other hand, I have posted on developing good habits and discipline as a key to healthy living. Perhaps some of that discipline should be applied to not "being vain."

It's ironic to talk about modesty and then actively ignore the solution.

I haven't even talked about how disciplining the physical body helps you be disciplined spiritually as well. Why yes, working out and eating healthy helps your spiritual walk as well. Surprise!

> Toll on Relationships
> I am a bit of a healthy eating fanatic. I've tried just about every "health food" out there. I love it because I find it enjoyable. However, there have been times when I have put my healthy eating before people.
> God forbid one of my family members forgets that I cannot eat pinto beans while completing day three of Whole30! I can be at a party, and there's not a single, decently healthy side-dish in sight—aside from the depressingly predictable veggie tray. Don't they know me at all? I guess I'll have to starve until I get back > home, I whine to myself.

> When I look back on these events, the defensive side of me cries out, “Wait! Isn’t eating healthy food a good thing? Doesn’t God command us to take care of the temples of his Spirit?”
> Well, yes. But if I allow myself to revisit these events with a lens of honesty, I have a few recurring thoughts: How immature. How selfish. How very unlike all of the virtues that Christ has commanded me to cultivate in my life.
> I have avoided social events because I knew that nothing on the menu would fit within my meal plan. I have bemoaned friends who are in need because they have derailed my leg-day plans.
> It’s in these moments that I am forced to face my true motives, which unfortunately often value the temporal rather than the eternal.

There is such a thing as meal prep, bringing a healthy snack, or even fasting if you don’t want to eat out. You can even suggest healthy restaurants to go to. I do it when I go to places with nothing I would want to eat. Even if you don’t and miss a healthy meal? Fine. Miss a day of workouts? It’s pretty easy to make up. You don’t have to throw people away completely when living a healthy lifesetyle.

It’s a lifestyle for a reason. If you get a bit sidetracked, it’s not like you’ve not living a healthy lifestyle anymore. It’s not like you’re going to sink into not working out, not eating healthy, not sleeping, and stressing over everything… unless you believe the lie that healthy living is incompatible with being a Christian.

The false dichotomies are dumb.

> Focus on the Temporal

> In the same way that we can neglect relationships because of our fitness needs, we can waste two precious resources: time and finances.
> No, I am not arguing that fitness is a waste of those two things, but I am saying that too often I find myself spending more time on fitness than I do on my relationship with Christ.
> I also find myself spending more of my finances on fitness and healthy food than I do on furthering Christ’s kingdom. That realization convicts me and challenges me to transform my mentality. Because even though that acai bowl tastes heavenly, it isn’t actually taking anyone to heaven.
> And even though my gym membership may help me feel confident, it’s not bringing anyone to the knowledge of the Gospel.

> We will never reach either physical or spiritual perfection in this lifetime. However, Christ has declared that he will be judging us in only one of the two categories.
> Sure, I might slightly resemble the guy on the shoddy treadmill trying to achieve Christ’s perfection. But I’m okay with that.

This is just getting more and more absurd.

Here's the thing with a healthy lifestyle. You can use it minister to people too. Many of my fitness and hobby friends know I'm a Christian, and I know they aren't Christians. I talk about my faith with them sometimes when I get a chance. I've invited them to Church.

Life isn't supposed to be some compartmentalized phenomenon where this healthy living business is "some other thing you do aside from being a Christian."

Ever heard of budgets? That's what a budget is for. You plan out your tithes and offerings to God, so that you can put Him first. You don't just give Him leftovers of what you don't spend. I budget so that I can much more than 10% of my "disposable income" to God. Scripture says God will bless me for it, and I have seen that He already has.

> Malachi 3:8 "Will a man [m]rob God? Yet you are robbing Me! But you say, 'How have we robbed You?' In tithes and [n]offerings. 9 You are cursed with a curse, for you are [o]robbing Me, the whole nation of you! 10 Bring the whole tithe into the storehouse, so that there may be [p]food in My house, and test Me now in this," says the Lord of hosts, "if I will not open for you the windows of heaven and pour out for you a blessing until [q]it overflows. 11 Then I will rebuke the devourer for you, so that it will not [r]destroy the fruits of the ground; nor will your vine in the field cast its grapes," says the Lord of hosts. 12 "All the nations will call you blessed, for you shall be a delightful land," says the Lord of hosts.

As of this post, 1300 people have shared this to Facebook. I hope that 1300 those people, their friends, and their families will not have deluded themselves into believing this nonsense and destroy their good eating and working out habits. All of the posts like this discouraging healthy living reeks of excuses to be lazy under the guise of being godly. In other words, false humility.

As Coastal said in his comment, I've said before that Christians in general are more prone to obesity and lack of exercise because they think anything remotely healthy is supposed to be made into some sort of idol aside from God. I've seen more obesity within the Church than in events outside the Church. It's just a sad fact of life to me now. Most of the friends I have in fitness or sporting hobbies are non-Christian, and it's hard to find someone who is a serious Christian. Honestly, it's an untapped field for witnessing.

If only some Christians could look past their false humility to be good stewards of their bodies and actually use their healthy lifestyles to be salt and light to their non-Christian friends.

Rant over.

High School Boy Who Identifies As A Girl Takes Takes Home All State Honors In Girls Track And Field

> Daily Caller – High school girls in Alaska are crying foul after a male sprinter took home all-state honors in girls' track and field. According to local reports, it was the first time in Alaskan history that a male athlete competed in the girls' state championships. Haines senior Nattaphon Wangyot–who self-identifies as a girl–advanced to the state finals in the 100-meter and 200-meter events. He won fifth place in the 100-meter dash and third place in the 200-meter. In both events, he competed against girls as young as ninth grade. One of the girls Wangyot beat out for a slot at the state meet, Hutchison runner Emma Daniels, took issue with allowing a male athlete to compete in girls events. "I'm glad that this person is comfortable with who they are and they're able to be happy in who they are, but I don't think it's competitively completely 100-percent fair," she told a local CBS station.
> Well, we've made our bed, World. Now its time to sleep in it. We ran around letting everyone and anyone decide what gender they are and now, because of it, we got a bunch of chicks in Alaska getting their asses kicked in track and field by a dude. Hope youre happy, Caitlyn Jenner. Lets think on that for a second – Bruce Jenner, an Olympian who owes all his success and money and fame to the sport of track and field, encourages this willy nilly gender switching, which thereby, in turn, ends up demolishing the sport.
> Isn't it ironic?
> Dontcha think?

Satire aside, this is only one of the few side effects of "declare your own gender."

As many commenters have noted, this will likely devolve further as liberalism needs to make more 'progress.' I'm sure we're not far off from a future where pedophilia, bestiality, 10 people marriages, and whatever else you want to do will be legalized.

Intuitive heuristics: Be THE man

June 10, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Christian men and husbands generally have the masculinity beaten out of them by the culture and churchianity. Thus, it's very difficult for men and husbands to learn how to be strong, masculine, Christian man.

I stumbled upon this when I was typing up a response post to someone else. It gives men and women an excellent intuitive understanding of what a man should be in a relationship.

- Don't be a man… in your relationship.
- Don't be the man… in your relationship.
- Be THE man… in your relationship.

The punctuation and emphasis matters. It matters a lot. In fact, I bet most of my readers can implicitly understand what the above statement means without even looking at the explanations.

Let me explain anyway.

1. If you're just "a" man in your relationship, there's no ownership of the relationship. You're setting yourself adrift in the relationship. There's no purpose. This, unfortunately, is one of the many factors of why women are serially monogamous (e.g. relationship hoppers). They try to trade up because if there is only "a" man then he is simply a temporary placeholder.
2. If you're trying to be the "man" in the relationship, you're asking for permission from her to be the "man." You don't need permission to be the "man" in the relationship because you are given that position from God. See: Eph 5, Col 3, 1 Cor 11, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3.
3. If you know you are THE man, then you know you are the chosen one for the job. There's confidence, swagger, and ambition. You can take on the world with her by your side. You are the rock and leader of the relationship. You are respected. She is submissive to you. If she steps out of line then you gently call her out on it.

Women don't want "a" man. Nor do women want the "man." Women want THE man.

If you desire to be in a relationship, you need to learn how to be THE man. If you are THE man, women will be attracted to you.

The exception temptation

June 11, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the biggest areas of temptation that is often obscured by our culture in the Church is the exceptions temptation.

For example, when the concept of wifely submission to the husband is brought up, you will find that many Christian wives will almost invariably ask along with the most probably line of response is:

> Topic: “Let’s talk about submission to husbands.”
> Wife: “But what if my [Christian] husband commands me to sin?”
> Response: “Well, if he tells you to sin then you disobey him so you don’t sin.”

This type of “exception” question is actually a temptation in disguise in the vast majority of cases. It is a redirect away from a productive discussion about the righteous concept of submission toward a statistically improbable situation that virtually never occurs in real life. In fact, taking out the “sin” part, I’ve rarely heard a husband “command” his wife to do anything. That just goes to show you how absurd this line of thinking is in the first place.

The most probable line of response tells a woman what she wants to hear. In other words, she should ‘be rebellious, if he asks her to sin.’ However, the reality is far darker. The real problem is the diversion away from submission obscures the Truth and replaces it with terms that usually aren’t discussed such as ‘what constitutes sin?’ Hence, what many women actually hear is:

- “I don’t have to obey him, if I don’t want to.”
- “I don’t have to obey him, if I don’t feel like it.”

Thus, the probable response plays right into a woman’s sin nature by inadvertently encouraging a rebellious attitude. In almost all of the cases I’ve seen where a wife asks this question, you can tell from her attitude and tone of voice she simply wants to be able to be rebellious and throw headship back in their husband’s face: “That’s a sin and I’m not going to do it!” which in reality is simply “I don’t want to listen to you.”

In fact, a righteous answer should include a redirect back to submission.

> Topic: “Let’s talk about submission to husbands.”
> Wife: “But what if my [Christian] husband commands me to sin?”
> Response: “When’s the last time you heard a husband command his wife, much less to sin? Now, as I was saying about submission…”

If you want to actually address the question, then you have to discuss the right heart attitude and actions. This would go something like this:

> Topic: “Let’s talk about submission to husbands.”
> Wife: “But what if my [Christian] husband commands me to sin?”
> Response: “You should find where it says it is a sin in the Scripture. Then you come to him with a respectful and submissive attitude and say: ‘Hey, I think this may be against what God says in the Scripture here and my conscience. Is there anything else I can do instead to make it up to you? Now, as I was saying about submission…”

Obviously, the correct response is one that encourages respect and submission as the Scripture states. It is an attitude and actions that want to obey and not rebel. It gives alternatives for obedience.

This is why it’s important to consider the implications behind women and wives questions instead of answering them directly. There’s usually some subtle background information driving her response to ask one. Do not fall prey to distracting and redirecting questions.

Bonus points comment and response on this topic.

> Maybe that’s some women’s motives but not mine. I’ve point blank asked my husband if I’m submissive and he states I am. He has never asked me to sin. But that doesn’t mean he couldn’t. My biggest concern is if that happens I want to stand in front God with a good reason for not obeying him or for sinning.

And that’s the problem right there. You are thinking he “could.”

You know your husband’s character. If he made an honest mistake and was unaware then you, as his helpmeet, bring it up to him respectfully. “Hey, this might be a problem because…”

Wives have concerns that they’re husbands are going to turn into some horrible monsters when the subject of authority comes up. This is ingrained because our culture despises authority via feminism and even the revolutionary war. I’m not surprised.

It’s the attitude of letting him lead instead of following his lead. I’m going to let him lead until he tells he to do something that is sinful.

Conclusions

To summarize my points, since apparently even BGR did not understand what I was trying to get at:

1. The Scripture is quite clear that if a [Christian] leader is advocating sin, other Christians should speak up to ensure that he doesn’t go astray. Not just those under authority. This is the importance of family and community as a husband and wife are not unto their own.
2. The Scripture is clear that if you have a moral issue with a leader(s) degree you do your best to be respectful and obey to the extent that you don’t disobey God, even potentially offering obedience in other ways as I have give examples above. Give Scriptural examples to the leader. Any discussion must be done in a respectful and submissive attitude. The intent of those under authority should be to obey by finding a way to obey without sin.

3. Wives are scared their husbands are going to turn into evil monsters when/if they have to submit. Part of this is from the ingrained anti-authority and anti-masculine sentiment from our culture, which leads to the exception temptation. This is living in fear. As I discussed earlier, if there's an honest mistake then it's no big deal to bring it up to a husband. The very fact that wives keep making it a big deal shows that there is other undercurrents involved rather than asking "honest questions." The undercurrents of rebellion in our culture are strong and need to be rooted out.
4. The diversion tendency is one of moral dilemmas. Do I obey God or my husband? In fact, these moral dilemmas are false. There is no mutually exclusive answer because you can figure out pretty easily if it's a honest mistake or not which most of the time it is. Or, like Sarah and Abraham, the wife may have a heart to obey and then God intervenes or the husband may change his mind before she sins. The point is that there are opportunities to show that you want to obey and alert the leader at the same time that there might be a problem.
5. Wives with actual non-Christian husbands have it difficult. In the vast majority of cases, it's still highly unlikely that a non-Christian husband will advocate sin if she is acting in accordance with 1 Peter 3. It's possible, sure, but I have already covered how to respond to that in #2.

A woman's sexual partners and divorce risk

June 11, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wintery Knight was the first one to pick this up that I saw, and Donal has his own post on it up which he was aware from a commenter who reads Vox.

This chart is pretty damning for any premarital sex in this day and age.

- Let's note first that this chart is only the first 5 years of marriage. This means that any other divorces after 5 years are not included.
- First 5 years is not much though, considering that the usual common divorce time is the so-called "7 year itch" which shows up in marriages of about 7-15 years. That's probably where the rest of Teachman statistics come from where it jumps up to 40% overall for first marriages over a lifetime.
- Combining the data from the Teachman statistics and this graph means that virgins have a 5% chance of marriage failure in 5 years and a 20% risk of marriage failure over a lifetime. I would be interested to see data on where the 5 percent jumps to 20%.
- The 1 partner is the a virgin having sex with her husband before getting married. That virtually quadruples the divorce risk in the 2000s from about 5% to 20%. Conclusion: don't have premarital sex, even to the person you are getting married to.
- The other rates are very dismal. If you're not marrying a virgin there's virtually no reason to marry. Who wants a 25%+ chance that their marriage will blog up in 5 years?

The trends are not exactly surprising. For example, the drop in the 1980s virgins to the 1990s and 2000s virgins is not surprising because there were more virgins in the past who may have "wanted to let their sexuality out" prior to marriage but were in fear of being judged. As views on virginity became more "relaxed" in our culture, this eliminated many of these past virgins from the pool thus dropping down the divorce rate. Those who remained virgins had more self control and a stronger home life in general.

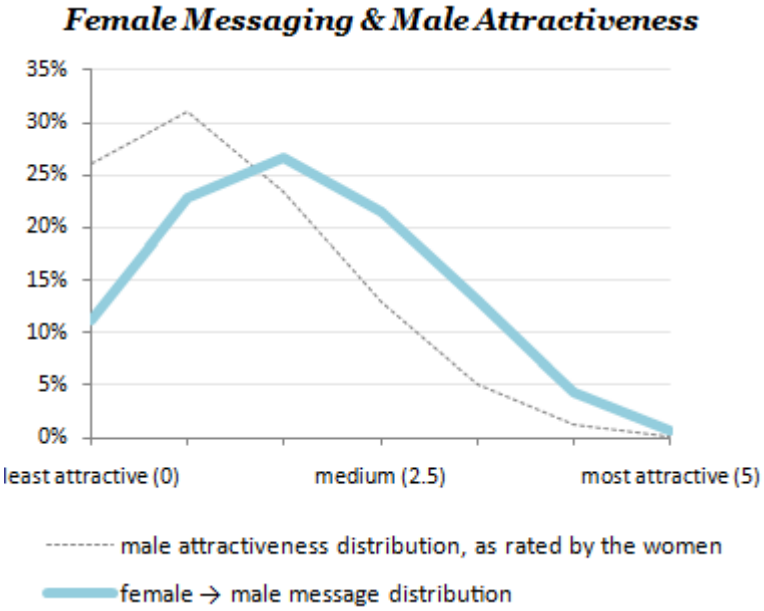
The chart that Donal didn't pick up but Wintery did was this one.

Table 1: The Distribution of Women's Premarital Sex Partners, by Marriage Cohort
	1970s	1980s	1990s	2000s	2010s
0 partner	21%	17%	14%	12%	5%
1 partner	43%	36%	26%	21%	22%
2 partners	16%	15%	13%	13%	12%
3 partners	8%	11%	11%	11%	11%
4-5 partners	6%	12%	16%	17%	18%
6-9 partners	4%	5%	11%	13%	14%
10+ partners	2%	4%	10%	14%	18%
total	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
N	268	1,921	4,312	3,598	273

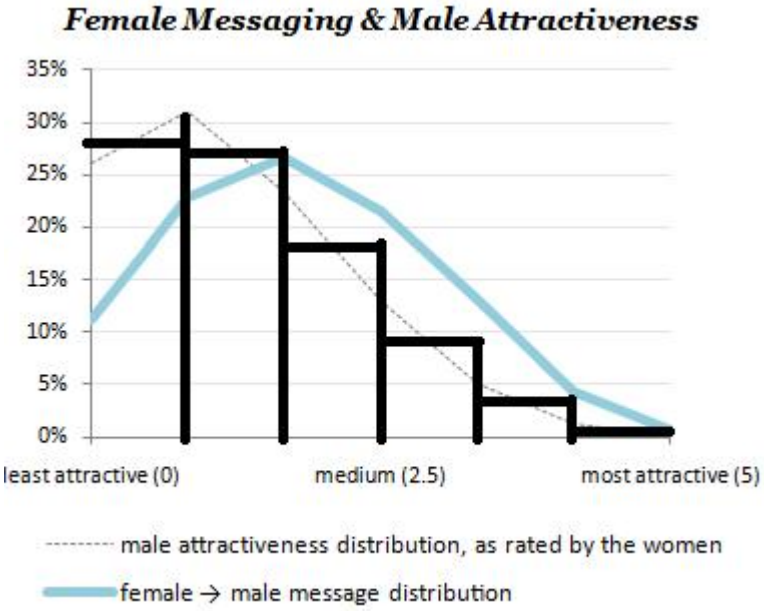
We can see that even in the 1970s that women were "no angels."

- Only 21% of women were virgins when they married. Now, it's 5%.
- Most of the population of women had 0-2 partners prior to marriage. In the 2010s this jumps up to a fairly even distribution with the mean around 4-5 partners by marriage. Additionally, 18% of the population is very promiscuous with 10+ partners.
- The statistics for 2-3 partners stayed relatively even, but the 0-1 partners dropped precipitously with drastic increases in 4-5, 6-9, and 10 partners. It's likely not the 0-1 partners suddenly becoming drastically more promiscuous. Instead, the previous 2-3 partners became more promiscuous while many of the 0-1 partners had a few more partners.



In any case, if you are going to marry then you should marry a virgin if at all possible. The 5% and 20% lifetime divorce risk carries all of the "high risk" virgins like those with no fathers, school dropouts, drugs, medically diagnosed disorders, and other potentially risky behaviors. Thus, if you select wisely then there is generally a very low likelihood of divorce if you marry a virgin.

Although you only have a 5% chance of finding one, which is probably still dropping. I may consider running a crude statistical analysis again.



Intuitive heuristics: Is the 20% rule accurate or not?

June 13, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The 20% rule is used as a general assumption that the female population generally only finds the top 20% of men attractive. Let's look at this in terms of the OKCupid Data.

I haven't taken calculus in a long time, but you can estimate the "area under the curve" by sections in order to find out an approximation of total volume under the curve. Total volume contrasted by total volume in each section will give approximate values as to percentages of the population. Let's look at it:

There are approximately 6 areas. Let's say for the sake of argument that only the top 2 are attractive as "medium" is generally not attractive.

- Total area = 28% + 27% + 18% + 9% + 4% + 1% = 87%

Theoretically, it should add up to 100%, but it's just an approximation. What matters are the ratios.

- Attractive men, according to women = [(4% + 1%) / 87%] * 100 = 5.7%

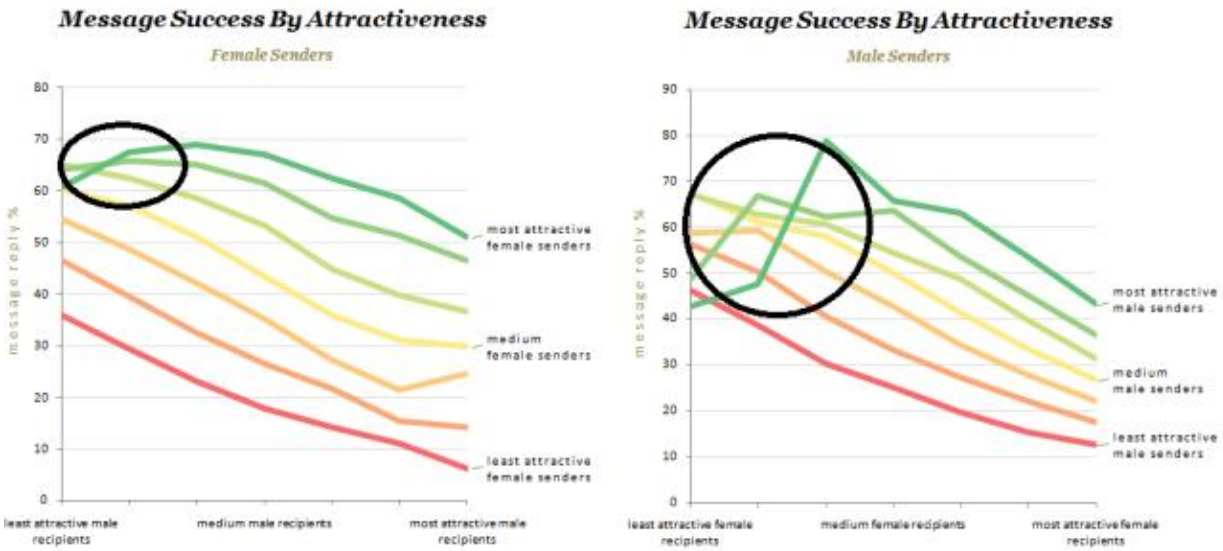
We also know that women do not take pure physical attractiveness into account when rating someone attractive. This is why the messaging data is skewed along with other hypergamic impulses. This renders this exercise is pretty much somewhat only semi-useful.



Basically, the usefulness of this is to understand that unless you are in the top 5.7% of physically attractive men, you probably aren't going to get women interested you based on physical appearance alone.

Overall, we could probably expect a similar "trend" as this graph for women if we based it on height, status, or other factors. Thus, if we look at what the rate at solely "above average" we get:

- Above average men, according to women = [(9% +4% + 1%) / 87%] * 100 = 16.1%

Thus, this generally verifies the 20% rule as a decent heuristic in terms of men who women are attractive to.

Interestingly, when you compare the message and message response rates you get this:

Out of your league mentality

It's women more than men who have an "out-of-your-league" mentality when it compares to interest in the opposite sex. The downward trends on each attractiveness level on both charts show that both sexes drive assortive mating. Assortive mating is where say 9s pair off with other 9s, 8s pair off with other 8s, 7s pair off with other 7s, and so on.

This along with with the data above also show that women are also more judgmental than men when it comes to filtering criteria. Nothing we didn't know already, although it goes against typical hearsay that men are too judgmental. In fact, this protestation is simply projection from women when in fact they are much more ruthless in filtering criteria for men.

Generally speaking, this makes sense because “good looks” for men do not necessarily indicate the ability of a man to be a Protector and Provider. On the other hand, we expect that “good looks” is a relatively accurate indicator of the reproductive health and fertility of a woman, which gives us an accurate gaussian bell curve for physical appearance attractiveness in women.

What can we learn from this as Christians?

If you’re a woman who desires to be married, strive to be godly and physically attractive. Don’t fall into false humility by assuming being physically attractive is bad or an idol in any way.

If you’re a man who desires to be married, strive to be physically attractive too based on assortive mating principles, but other factors such as being a strong Protector and leader as well as Provider also play a role.

Also, women are more judgmental.

Christianity and masculinity

June 13, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As some of you may know, I changed the title of this blog over the course of a few months resulting ultimately in Christianity and masculinity.

1. Reflections on Christianity and the manosphere
2. Christianity and the manosphere
3. Christianity and masculinity

The manosphere was/is a general reactionary viewpoint attempting to reclaim masculinity in various different forms, many of which are ungodly. Generally speaking, the Scripture calls us to be proactive with our faith and not reactive. Hence, moving away from that as a default is important to the mindset of men.

Additionally, the new title more accurately reflects the goal of this blog which is to learn what godly masculinity is and how to apply it in all relationships.

Obviously, topics from the manosphere and/or red pill and/or culture will still be discussed. The emphasis has been and will always be with Scripture as the standard.

Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins Part 2

June 14, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the previous post on a woman's sexual partners and divorce risk, we found out that approximately 5% of women were virgins when they were married in 2010. I noted that I wanted to go back and do a 'better' statistical analysis that is less confounded than previously in Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins.

Let's do it.

- There are 10,466,258 women aged 25-29 and 10,571,823 women aged 20-24 and 10,736,677 women aged 15-19 in the US in 2010. Let's say the range from 18-29 is good. 18-19 make up ~40% of the 15-19 range so ~4,294,671 women.

2010 Census Data. Not much changes in 5 years given the chart as each population group is still roughly 10 million.
http://www.census.gov/prod/cen2010/briefs/c2010br-03.pdf

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range =25,332,752

———-

- Less than 20% of Americans regularly attend church — half of what the pollsters report. While Gallup polls and other statisticians have turned in the same percentage — about 40% of the population — of average weekend church attendees for the past 70 years, a different sort of research paints quite a disparate picture of how many Americans attend a local church on any given Sunday. […] His findings reveal that the actual rate of church attendance from head counts is less than half of the 40 percent the pollsters report. Numbers from actual counts of people in Orthodox Christian churches (Catholic, mainline and evangelical) show that in 2004, 17.7 percent of the population attended a Christian church on any given weekend.

http://www.churchleaders.com/pastors/pastor-articles/139575-7-startling-facts-an-up-close-look-at-church-attendance-in-america.html

- We also know that 70% of young adults in the 18-22 range drop out of church.

http://www.lifeway.com/Article/LifeWay-Research-finds-reasons-18-to-22-year-olds-drop-out-of-church

These two factors as pointed out are heavily confounded with each other. As KPP pointed out in the previous comments, about half of the 2/3 that drop out eventually end up attending again albeit in lower frequency. For the sake of argument, I'm willing to be factor out the dropout rate of young adults altogether using the US population "regularly attenders" as the standard which is 17.7%

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who regularly attend Church = 25,332,752 * .177 = 4,483,897

- 58.5 of women 20-39 years old are overweight or obese in 2011-2012 in the US.

http://jama.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=1832542

Unfortunately, there's no data for strictly say 18-29, so this is just an approximation. It's probably slightly less because metabolic rates start to slow down into early 30s.

One could say that Christians have more self control than their counterparts. However, as I have noted in posts such as A lesson in false humility: Christians are allergic to healthy lifestyles, Christian women tend to find a way to rationalize that paying attention to physical appearance is an idol. This statistic is probably pretty accurate.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese = 4,483,897 * .415 = 1,860,817

- In highly religious groups, up to 20% wait until marriage successfully. Naturally, religious people seem more likely to wait until marriage to have sex. In a study of 9 Southern Baptist churches in Texas (it doesn't get much more conservative than that), 20% of the church members aged 25 or younger were married without ever having premarital sex.
- In the general population, the ratio of women-to-men who wait until marriage to have sex seems to be about 60/40 girls-to-guys. This statistic disproves the common misconception that only women wait until marriage to have sex. Statistically-speaking, plenty of guys wait too!

http://waitingtillmarriage.org/4-cool-statistics-about-abstinence-in-the-usa/

If 20% is the number for super conservative Churches like Southern Baptists in Texas then the numbers for other Churches are probably dismal.

Generally speaking, if we look at the statistics in most Churches, they are bent approximately 60/40% women to men. This is a result of the feminization of Christianity resulting in churchianity. 20% averaged for 60/40 split of virginity at marriage 24% for women and 16% for men. This also means that if say there are 60 single women in Church and 40 single men, there are about 60 * .24 = 14.4 virgin women and 40 * .16 = 6.4 virgin men.

- Proportionally ~2.5x less virgin men than women in your average congregation.

You could say that women who are not overweight or obese have more self control than their fatter counterparts. However, men also find overweight and obese women unattractive. Thus, I am counting this as a wash even though it's likely that based on physical attractiveness there are more overweight and obese virgins. Hence,

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese, (4) who stay a virgin until marriage = 1,860,817 * .24 = 446,596

I factored in as many confounding variables as I could, and I was conservative at adding more variables to the equation because of confounding factor overlap. Other variables with confounding factors that I didn't include in the statistics:

- The National Marriage Project also found that "about 80 percent of young-adult men and women continued to rate marriage as an 'important' part of their life plans; almost half of them described it as 'very important.'" Thirty percent of 25-year-old single women want to be married. Read more at http://national.deseretnews.com/article/1893/The-national-marriage-age-is-increasing-but-not-for-this-group-of-people.html . Only ~30% of women want to be married in the 18-30 age range on average approximately.
- Those who attend church are not always "Christians." Based on my experience and others I'd say that only 10-20% of Christians in churches are actually reading their Bible and striving to obey Scripture.
- Worse measures of virginity in non-extremely conservative Church populations.
- Denominational differences. Some of the stats clumps all religions together (hindu, muslum, etc.) not just Catholic and Protestant.

Thus, I believe the above statistics are a fairly accurate measurement compared to the previous estimate. If anything, it's going to be a slight to moderate overestimate.

The previous post resulted in these stats:

> In conclusion, there are approximately 125,000 (126,157) Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage. This is approximately 0.5% of the 18-29 total population (126,157 / 25,332,752). Pretty rare. In the US total population it is .039% (126,157 / 320,090,000).
> Specifically, in any random Church the percentage that you'll find a 18-29 year old attractive, Christian virgin is going to be .2 (virginity at marriage) * .415 (not overweight or obese) = 8.30%. In other words, about 1 in 12.

Let's update those stats.

In conclusion, there are approximately 450,000 (446,596) Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage. This is approximately 1.76% of the 18-29 total population (446,596 / 25,332,752). In the US total population it is .014%

(446,596 / 320,090,000).

Specifically, in any random Church the percentage that you'll find a 18-29 old with the attributes of non-overweight or obese and virginity is going to be .24 (virginity at marriage) * .415 (not overweight or obese) = 9.96%. In other words, about 1 in 10.

This is why looking for a quality woman is a numbers game.

The average Church size is approximately 186 attenders. Your average Church is 60/40 women to men as we mentioned before. The women tend to be disproportionately older or families with children. Total 18-29 women in the US who attend Church are (25,332,752/320,090,000) * .177 = 1.40%. If the dropout rates of 70% with about 1/3 coming back are correct then about 2/3 are retained. Hence, we get:

- 26 women (186 * (3/2) * .014 * .67 * ~10) in the 18-29 age group in your average congregation.
- 2.6 women (186 * (3/2) * .014 * .67) who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average congregation.

Unfortunately, there is room for gloom. But don't lose hope. Advice in the conclusion.

Conclusions and advice

Criteria:

1. Women who are 18-29,
2. regularly attend Church,
3. aren't overweight or obese,
4. are virgins at marriage

Statistics based on these criteria:

- 1.76% of the 18-29 total population.
- .014% of the total US population.
- 10% of Church going women 18-29 are not overweight or obese and virgins.
- 26 women in the 18-29 age group in your average 186 member congregation.
- 2.6 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 186 member congregation.
- 14 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 1,000 member congregation
- 140 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 10,000 member congregation

The last 5 statistics are probably slight overestimates. More conservative Churches may have slightly more. More liberal Churches will probably have less. Larger congregation have a tendency to be more liberal; hence, it is probably less than 140 women per 10,000 members.

That said there are good indicators for who the attractive Christian virgins are. They wear feminine clothing, have long hair, have an innocent look, have strong masculine fathers, value family and marriage, love children, don't have tattoos, don't like alcohol, and other such traits.

Of course, most of the men are probably going after the 10% in each Church, so you need to learn how to be a strong, confident masculine leader if your goal is one of those women.

My advice:

1. Attend one main Church.
2. Go to young adult events at other Churches and gatherings to increase your chances of meeting one of these few age 18-29 attractive, Christian virgins.
3. Potentially attend a mega-Church, although the theology of many mega-Churches nowadays can be questionable. If you do, understand the importance of vetting character and attitudes.
4. At 2.6 women per average congregation you might just be better meeting many 18-29 year old women at various hobbies, dances, and other social events because 1.76% of them will be Christian women who regularly attend Church, are not obese or overweight, and are virgins. If it's a physical activity your chances are potentially better since that tends to eliminate the overweight and obese.
5. Use your friends and families to network!
6. If you're still young, perhaps volunteer in university campus Christian group(s) as a leader or continue to be one if you recently graduated.
7. Other advice here on my detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife.

My Church is smaller than the average congregation. I did not find my girl in my current Church.

Patriarch or Monk

June 16, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Looking Glass had a incisive comment that expounds upon the two choices men have in Christianity.

> On the approach a Christian Man should take with regards to relationships (as a general point, in case anyone else comes across this), to simplify it a bit, you have two paths: Patriarch or Monk. What has the Lord instructed you in the direction for your life? Whichever it is, that's the way you go. Learn to do it very well.

Paul expounds on this in 1 Corinthians 7. However, I like the obvious contrast between the two choices as concepts that are rarely used in a good way in our age of "modernity." Fathers and husbands are held with contempt as Dalrock has noted frequently, and single men who do not marry are despised because they refuse to "man up and marry."

What are you called to as a Christian man?

Patriarch or Monk?

Could be both if you were divorced or your wife died. For most Christian men, the choice is fairly intuitive. But for some, it needs much prayer and wise counsel.

> 2 Timothy 1:6 For this reason I remind you to kindle afresh the gift of God which is in you through the laying on of my hands. 7 For God has not given us a spirit of [f]timidity, but of power and love and [g]discipline.

Either way, we move in the power, love and discipline of the Holy Spirit with our gifts.

Hookup culture statistics

June 18, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The American Psychological Association released various hookup statistics in 2013 (h/t TRP). Unsurprisingly, it pretty much validates what we already knew. Here's some highlights. Read more if you want.

> Hookups — defined in this article as brief uncommitted sexual encounters between individuals who are not romantic partners or dating each other — have emerged from more general social shifts taking place during the last century. Hookups began to become more frequent in the 1920s, with the upsurge of automobiles and novel entertainment, such as movie theaters. Instead of courting at home under a parent's watchful eye, young adults left the home and were able to explore their sexuality more freely.
> By the 1960s, young adults became even more sexually liberated, with the rise of feminism, widespread availability of birth control and growth of sex-integrated college party events. Today, sexual behavior outside of traditional committed romantic pair-bonds has become increasingly typical and socially acceptable (Bogle, 2007, 2008).

It's interesting that they don't start with feminism as that was the major launching point where it became ubiquitous. However, it's obvious that there was a foundation set already that allowed things to become much more prevalent.

> Although much of the current research has been done on college campuses, among younger adolescents, 70 percent of sexually active 12- to 21-year-olds reported having had uncommitted sex within the last year (Grello et al., 2003). Similarly, in a sample of seventh, ninth and 11th graders, 32 percent of participants had experienced sexual intercourse and 61 percent of sexually experienced teenagers reported a sexual encounter outside a dating relationship; this represents approximately one-fifth of the entire sample (Manning et al., 2006).

'Sex in marriage' was warped to 'sex in a committed relationship' which has now become 'sex anytime.'

> On average, both men and women appear to have higher positive affect than negative affect after a hookup. In one study, among participants who were asked to characterize the morning after a hookup, 82 percent of men and 57 percent of women were generally glad they had done it (Garcia & Reiber, 2008). The gap between men and women is notable and demonstrates an average sex difference in affective reactions.
> Similarly, in a study of 832 college students, 26 percent of women and 50 percent of men reported feeling positive after a hookup, and 49 percent of > women and 26 percent of men reported a negative reaction (the remainders for each sex had a mix of both positive and negative reactions; Owen et al., 2010).

No surprises that women are more negatively affected. This is why women's virginity is more important than men's, even though both are a sin out of wedlock.

> However, both sexes also experience some negative affect as well. In a qualitative study that asked 187 participants to report their feelings after a typical hookup, 35 percent reported feeling regretful or disappointed, 27 percent good or happy, 20 percent satisfied, 11 percent confused, 9 percent proud, 7 percent excited or nervous, 5 percent uncomfortable, and 2 percent desirable or wanted (Paul & Hayes, 2002). However, this same study found that feelings differed during hookups compared with after: During a typical hookup, 65 percent of participants reported feeling good, aroused, or excited, 17 percent desirable or wanted, 17 percent nothing in particular or were focused on the hookup, 8 percent embarrassed or regretful, 7 percent nervous or scared, 6 percent confused, and 5 percent proud (Paul & Hayes, 2002).
> A number of studies have looked at regret with respect to hookups and have documented the negative feelings men and women may feel after casual sex. In a large Web-based study of 1,468 undergraduate students, participants reported a variety of consequences: 27.1 percent felt embarrassed, 24.7 percent reported emotional difficulties, 20.8 percent experienced loss of respect, and 10 percent reported difficulties with a steady partner (Lewis et al., 2011). In another recent study conducted on a sample of 200 undergraduate students in Canada, 78 percent of women and 72 percent of men who had uncommitted sex (including vaginal, anal, and/or oral sex) reported a history of experiencing regret following such an encounter (Fisher et al., 2012).
> Another study identified two types of sexual encounters that were particularly predictive of regret: engaging in penetrative intercourse with someone known less than 24 hours and engaging in penetrative intercourse with someone only once. Among a sample of 1,743 individuals who had experienced a one-night stand, Campbell (2008) showed that most men and women had combinations of both positive and negative affective reactions following this event. Campbell also found that men had stronger feelings of being "sorry because they felt they used another person," whereas women had stronger feelings of "regret because they felt used." Again, both men and women had experienced some sexual regret, but women were more negatively impacted by some hook-up experiences.

Who would've thought that sex was created to be within the marriage relationship. Not just in a committed relationship or randomly.

> In the first study to investigate the issue of self-esteem and hookups, both men and women who had ever engaged in an uncommitted sexual encounter had lower overall self-esteem scores compared with those without uncommitted > sexual experiences (Paul et al., 2000). The potential causal direction of the relationship between self-esteem and uncommitted sex is yet unclear (Fielder & Carey, 2010; Paul et al., 2000).

If you think just ‘sex’ will fulfill you or make you feel better you’re in for a rude awakening. They’ve already done research which Wintery Knight has highlighted before which show those who were virgins at marriage have some of the highest sexual satisfaction rates.

Anyway, these are just a few of the highlights. I only took about 4-5 different passages which are maybe less than 10% of the original article. Go read it. The evidence against hookups is obvious. Nothing we didn’t know already, but nice to point someone toward.

Intelligent submission is not required

June 20, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wayne Grudem is a professor of theological and religious studies. He is also one of the general editors for the ESV translation of the Bible.

> Wayne Grudem similarly portrays complementarian decision making as, in the vast majority of cases, an idealized version of the egalitarian version. He writes:
> The biblical ideal is that the husband is to be both loving and humble in his leadership. The wife is to be both joyful and intelligent in her submission. Practically, this means that they will frequently talk about many decisions, both large and small. This also means that both the husband and the wife will listen to the other's unique wisdom and insight related to the decision. Often one will defer to the other in the decision; rarely will they differ greatly in the decision (for the Lord has made them "one flesh")

This is one of the insidious ways feminism has crept into the Church. In effect, what the complementarian Grudem is arguing for is egalitarianism. They're both in effect mutually submitting to one another without using that term specifically. If he was actually talking about the model used in the Scripture he would have stated that the husband makes the decisions as the head and the wife offers her advice as the helpmeet.

This is what we call deception. You think you are doing the right thing but you are in fact doing the wrong thing. Complementarism is embroiled in deception. Dalrock has been exceptionally good at exposing this.

In marriage structures, I made the point that there is no such thing as "too much submission." Complementarians often like to make the case that there can be "too much submission" or that wives need to be "intelligent" in their submission. They use feminist terminology such as doormat, servile, subservient, and other negative connotation words to tear down submission to men if it's not according to their standards. However, this is incorrect. As I explained:

> There is no such thing as submission taken too far. However, there is such thing as false humility in submission. There are quite a few examples of wives on various blogs who have taken submission into their own hands. Let me explain.
> For example, a husband has a particular way to rule his own family and the wife is doing well in that structure. However, after she has talked with a mentor, read a book, or read a blog or two on the topic of submission, she now has the impression that she was "not submitting properly to her husband before." Now, instead of working well within her husbands structure for the family she becomes a self proclaimed "doormat" in which she never expresses her opinions, does everything her husband wants, and even does some things that her husband doesn't want under the guise of "being more submissive."

> What typically ends up happening is that this leaves the wife feeling poorly about everything and generally unfulfilled. Then the husband has to have some awkward conversation with his wife where he says he 'just wants his wife back' and that she was being weird about things.
> Such examples are often used as an example to show that "being a doormat" or "subservience" in a marriage is bad thing. However, this is false.
> In reality what happened is that the wife was embroiled in an example of the insidious nature of false humility. The wife decided unilaterally that she knew best what was the right way to be a helpmeet to husband. Although she had the right intentions of being submissive to her husband, she was actually being rebellious to how her husband wanted the marriage to be run in the first place. Thus, conflict came up between them which needed resolution.
> Therefore, wives often get the impression that "being a doormat" or "subservient" is a bad thing from this experience. However, what they miss from this scenario is that they were actually being inadvertently rebellious. They were listening to other people, books, or blogs on how to be submissive to their own husbands instead of listening to their own husband on how to be submissive to him.
> Hence, when a wife who has went through this experience sees a marriage with "more structure," she often believes that the wife is in sin because she is being a "doormat" or "subservient." This wrong impression causes wives to attempt to butt into other people's marriages in order to correct this sin when in reality they may be introducing dysfunction or malcontent into an otherwise Godly and healthy relationship.

What the Scripture actually says in Ephesians 5 is that wives are to be respectful not intelligent.

In fact, we, as Christians, often do not need to be intelligent in our submission. When God tell us to do good works do we need to question why we need to do good works? Is it because God is good? Is it because it's a shining light for others? Is it because these things are profitable for men? Is it because God planned them in advance for those who are called in Him? All of these things are true and why we do good works, but we don't need to know why we need to do good works to do them.

For example, when I see someone suffering or homeless do I need to be intelligent in my compassion for them? Or do I need to only act on what God has put in my heart at the moment for those less fortunate. In fact, in many cases if you think about things you can often talk yourself out of being compassionate or doing what is good: "Eh, I don't need to because someone else will help them or give them money."

> James 4:17 Therefore, to one who knows the [k]right thing to do and does not do it, to him it is sin.

Obviously, it's not a bad thing to understand why you need to do good works or to be submissive, but it is FAR from a biblical requirement or even the ideal. God's commands to those in the Scripture are often with uncertainty because they are aimed at learning how to Trust Him. This is called faith. Faith walked out builds trust.

For instance, God told Abraham to go to a foreign land. God told Abraham to sacrifice his only son. It took faith to do both in the uncertainty. God didn't tell Abraham why, but God did tell Abraham to do it. Hebrews 11 is one of the quintessential chapters on faith in the Scripture. It describes many Patriarchs and men of God trusting and obeying God. It's often the case that they obey without knowing the reason for their submission to Him. They did it all on faith that God had good will and intentions for them.

Based on the examples in the Scriptures, I believe it would be fair to say that if a wife knows that her husband is a Christian and knows his good character that if she is "mindless" in her submission through trusting his decisions that is a good thing. She is literally one with her husband. That's the goal. To be one in unity.

> Proverbs 31:11 The heart of her husband trusts in her, And he will have no lack of gain.

This is not to say that a husband shouldn't tell his wife why he is leading in a particular direction or that a wife shouldn't ask. However, they should be growing toward a state where these things are unneeded. That is oneness. Respectful submission becomes respectful obedience.

> John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.

To model what Jesus says about Himself, it would be more accurate to say that faith and thus trust is required. Intelligence is not. The absurd example, of course, is can you ever be "too submissive" or "mindless" in your submission to Christ? Surely not. Obeying Christ on every matter is beneficial.

Conclusions

- The complementarian 'ideals' such as examples of 'too much submission' or 'intelligent submission' are not supported by Scripture.
- These complementarian 'ideals' are actually based in the feminist narrative that men are bad and authority is bad. Hence, you can be "too submissive" or "mindlessly submissive," and these are supposed to be bad things.
- Christianity is predicated on submission in ambiguous circumstances because that builds Faith and Trust in God.
- "Mindless submission" and "too much submission" to do the right thing is in fact a very good thing. It is always good to do right.
- Wives who are able to cultivate a strong bond of trust in their husbands where they obey without questions exemplify oneness. Oneness and unity are one of the standards to which Christians are held, both as a group and in marriage. Thus, we should be encouraging such a strong bond of trust for wives and husbands instead of tearing it down.

This is yet another example of the feminist narrative seeping into Christian theology.

Discontent women need structure

June 20, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I’ve been super busy as of late.

However, I came to the conclusion above based on a number of my previous posts. Discontent women need structure. In fact, you can add to it a bit. Discontent women need structure, not freedom or more choices or even help.

I’d be interested to see if my commenters can hash out why. I will write up the post when I have some more time.

Submission is a test of faith

June 22, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In intelligent submission is not required, I explored the concept of submission and it's interaction with faith. Let me step back for a second and explore Hebrews 11 more in depth.

Also, props to Robyn for being one of the few married women to understand one of the main points of the previous post, which led into this one.

Faith

Hebrews 11 starts off with Paul defining the nature of faith:

> Hebrews 11:1 Now faith is the [a]assurance (hupostasis) of things [b]hoped for (elpizo), the [c]conviction of things not seen. 2 For by it the men of old [d]gained approval.
> G5287 — ὑπόστασις — hupostasis — hoop-os'-tas-is
> From a compound of G5259 and G2476; a setting under (support), that is, (figuratively) concretely essence, or abstractly assurance (objectively or subjectively): – confidence, confident, person, substance. Total KJV occurrences: 5
> G1679 — ἐλπίζω — elpizō — el-pid'-zo
> From G1680; to expect or confide: – (have, thing) hope (-d) (for), trust. Total KJV occurrences: 31

In other words, faith is a trust in substance or essence. What is this substance or essence? Wintery Knight has a great post describing what the essence of faith in 3 parts.

> notitia – This is the basic informational foundation of our faith. It is best expressed by the word content. Faith, according to the Reformers must have content. You cannot have faith in nothing. There must be some referential propositional truth to which the faith points. The proposition "Christ rose from the grave," for example, is a necessary information base that Christians must have.
> assensus – This is the assent or confidence that we have that the*notitia* is correct… This involves evidence which leads to the conviction of the truthfulness of the proposition… This involves intellectual assent and persuasion based upon critical thought…assensus… says, "I am persuaded to believe that Christ rose from the grave."
> fiducia – This is the "resting" in the information based upon a conviction of its truthfulness. Fiducia is best expressed by the English word "trust."… Fiducia is the personal subjective act of the will to take the final step. It is important to note that while fiducia goes beyond or transcends the intellect, it is built upon its foundation.

Our faith is built on the knowledge of who God is, confidence that we know our knowledge is correct, and trust in this knowledge that we live it out. We glean this knowledge of the Truth of God from the Scriptures, how He has worked and changed our hearts, and from growing in our relationships with our brothers and sisters in Christ.

This is the essence of our faith, which is the foundation of Christianity.

Example of Abraham

The examples I gave in the previous post was Abraham, so let's look at them:

> Hebrews 11:8 By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed [i]by going out to a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he went out, not knowing where he was going. 9 By faith he lived as an alien in the land of promise, as in a foreign land, dwelling in tents with Isaac and Jacob, fellow heirs of the same promise; 10 for he was looking for the city which has foundations, whose architect and builder is God.

If you read back to Genesis 11 and 12, God essentially calls Abraham out of the land of Ur of the Chaldeans as a test of his faith. Abraham — previously Abram as this time — responds to this call by obeying what God told him. Abraham knew the destination and he knew the promise, but he didn't know any of the specifics. He didn't know how or when he would get there.

In other words, Abraham submitted to God because he trusted that God had good intentions for his life.

> Hebrews 11:17 By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac, and he who had received the promises was offering up his only begotten son; 18 it was he to whom it was said, "In Isaac your [n]descendants shall be called." 19 [o]He considered that God is able to raise people even from the dead, from which he also received him back [p]as a type.

Likewise, Abraham in Genesis 22 offers up Issac as a sacrifice. The writer of Hebrews supposes that Abraham trusts in God enough that he believes that God can raise the dead. Hence, Abraham acts in faith and submits to God's command. I have no clue how the writer of Hebrews knew what Abraham was thinking. Even today after we know that the power of God raised Jesus from the dead, many Christians still doubt such miracles can happen today.

However, the immense faith Abraham showed by obeying what God said even sacrificing his only son is amazing.

The test

Ultimately, submission is a test of faith.

Do you believe what God has commanded you to do is good for you? Do you believe that the road you are walking is righteous? Will you give into fear or obey God?

- When you pass the test of faith, you submit and gain a greater trust.

- When you fail the test of faith, you are saying by your actions that you don't trust God. You trust yourself or others over Him. This is called rebellion.

This likewise applies to the marriage relationship as well. A wife's submission to her husband's authority is a test of faith.

This leads me to the conclusion that many Christian wives have very little to zero faith in their husbands. Otherwise, they would trust them and obey them.

This is not really any surprise since husbands and fathers are denigrated and disrespected in our culture. Authority is not respected either. This bleeds over into marriages and families. This is the sad state of the Christian Church.

If you want to understand why husbands don't trust wives look no further than the parable of the talents.

> Matthew 25:14 "For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves and entrusted his possessions to them. 15 To one he gave five [a]talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability; and he went on his journey. 16 Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents. 17 In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more. 18 But he who received the one talent went away, and dug a hole in the ground and hid his [b]master's money.
> 19 "Now after a long time the master of those slaves *came and *settled accounts with them. 20 The one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, 'Master, you entrusted five talents to me. See, I have gained five more talents.' 21 His master said to him, 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.' […]
> 24 "And the one also who had received the one talent came up and said, 'Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow and gathering where you scattered no seed. 25 And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.' 26 "But his master answered and said to him, 'You wicked, lazy slave, you knew that I reap where I did not sow and gather where I scattered no seed. 27 Then you ought to have put my money [d]in the bank, and on my arrival I would have received my money back with interest. 28 Therefore take away the talent from him, and give it to the one who has the ten talents.'
> 29 "For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away. 30 Throw out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

God doesn't trust servants who aren't responsible with the talents that He has given them.

In the same way, a wife that does not choose to submit to or trust her husband at all is like the wicked and lazy slave. Her husband cannot trust in her because she rebels against the decisions he makes. Since the husband cannot trust her, it's likely that whatever he does trust her with he has to keep a close eye on.

If we prove ourselves trustworthy with little, we can be given more. If we prove ourselves untrustworthy with little, what we have will be taken.

> Luke 16:10 "He who is faithful in a very little thing is faithful also in much; and he who is unrighteous in a very little thing is unrighteous also in much. 11 Therefore if you have not been faithful in the use of unrighteous [i]wealth, who will entrust the true riches to you? 12 And if you have not been faithful in the use of that which is another's, who will give you that which is your own? 13 No [j]servant can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be devoted to one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and [k]wealth."

Although the parable of the unrighteous steward is aimed at the kingdom and riches, similar principles can also be applied to the marriage relationship. A wife that proves herself unreliable, rebellious, and untrustworthy will be unlikely to be trusted with much, if at all.

As I stated in intelligent submission is not required, the "ideal" is that if those under authority know the character of the one in authority and know they are acting for their good then such a trust will play dividends when they are able to obey immediately without question. This builds and leads to oneness. There is a mutual trust that has been fostered between the two parties to where they are of one mind and act as one.

> I would assert that this so-called 'ideal' relationship is the one where a husband or wife can anticipate the need before it is asked. Asking is merely a formality as the husband and wife know each other.
> Matthew 6:7 And when you pray, do not babble on like pagans, for they think that by their many words they will be heard. 8 Do not be like them, for your Father knows what you need before you ask Him.

God knows what we need. We are to become like God. Matthew 5:28 "Therefore you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."

A wife that can anticipate what a husband is going to ask before he even asks for it is amazing. Is that even submission or obedience if she knows and does it without him asking? I would call that oneness.

A good example

The centurion presents us with a good example.

> Matthew 8:5 And when [a]Jesus entered Capernaum, a centurion came to Him, > imploring Him, 6 and saying, “[b]Lord, my [c]servant is [d]lying paralyzed at home, fearfully tormented.” 7 Jesus *said to him, “I will come and heal him.” 8 But the centurion said, “[e]Lord, I am not worthy for You to come under my roof, but just [f]say the word, and my [g]servant will be healed. 9 For I also am a man under authority, with soldiers under me; and I say to this one, ‘Go!’ and he goes, and to another, ‘Come!’ and he comes, and to my slave, ‘Do this!’ and he does it.” 10 Now when Jesus heard this, He marveled and said to those who were following, “Truly I say to you, I have not found such great faith [h]with anyone in Israel. 11 I say to you that many will come from east and west, and [i]recline at the table with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; 12 but the sons of the kingdom will be cast out into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.” 13 And Jesus said to the centurion, “Go; [j]it shall be done for you as you have believed.” And the [k]servant was healed that very [l]moment.

In the Scripture, Jesus only marvels twice. Once he marvels at the people’s unbelief in and near his hometown which does not allow Him to do any miracles there. The second is the faith of the centurion. The centurion trusts Jesus because he understands the nature of authority. The centurion passed the test of faith with flying colors.

A bad example

Moses’ encounter with God at the burning bush is a perfect example of a lack of faith and trust.

> Exodus 3:10 Therefore, come now, and I will send you to Pharaoh, so that you may bring My people, the sons of Israel, out of Egypt.”11 But Moses said to God, “Who am I, that I should go to Pharaoh, and that I should bring the sons of Israel out of Egypt?” 12 And He said, “Certainly I will be with you, and this shall be the sign to you that it is I who have sent you: when you have brought the people out of Egypt, you shall [f]worship God at this mountain.”
> 13 Then Moses said to God, “Behold, I am going to the sons of Israel, and I will say to them, ‘The God of your fathers has sent me to you.’ Now they may say to me, ‘What is His name?’ What shall I say to them?” 14 God said to Moses, “[g]I AM WHO [h]I AM”; and He said, “Thus you shall say to the sons of Israel, ‘[i]I AM has sent me to you.’”
> Exodus 4:1 Then Moses said, “What if they will not believe me or listen [a]to what I say? For they may say, ‘The Lord has not appeared to you.’” 2 The Lord said to him, “What is that in your hand?” And he said, “A staff.” 3 Then He said, “Throw it on the ground.” So he threw it on the ground, and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from it. 4 But the Lord said to Moses, “Stretch out your hand and grasp it by its tail”—so he stretched out his hand and caught it, and it became a staff in his [b]hand— 5 “that they may believe that the Lord, the God of their > fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has appeared to you."

> 6 The Lord furthermore said to him, "Now put your hand into your bosom." So he put his hand into his bosom, and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous like snow. 7 Then He said, "Put your hand into your bosom again." So he put his hand into his bosom again, and when he took it out of his bosom, behold, it was restored like the rest of his flesh. 8 "If they will not believe you or [c]heed the [d]witness of the first sign, they may believe the [e]witness of the last sign. 9 But if they will not believe even these two signs or heed what you say, then you shall take some water from the Nile and pour it on the dry ground; and the water which you take from the Nile will become blood on the dry ground."
> 10 Then Moses said to the Lord, "Please, Lord, I have never been [f]eloquent, neither [g]recently nor in time past, nor since You have spoken to Your servant; for I am [h]slow of speech and [i]slow of tongue." 11 The Lord said to him, "Who has made man's mouth? Or who makes him mute or deaf, or seeing or blind? Is it not I, the Lord? 12 Now then go, and I, even I, will be with your mouth, and teach you what you are to say." 13 But he said, "Please, Lord, now [j]send the message by whomever You will."
> [14] Then the anger of the Lord burned against Moses, and He said, "Is there not your brother Aaron the Levite? I know that [k]he speaks fluently. And moreover, behold, he is coming out to meet you; when he sees you, he will be glad in his heart. [15] You are to speak to him and put the words in his mouth; and I, even I, will be with your mouth and his mouth, and I will teach you what you are to do. [16] Moreover, he shall speak for you to the people; and he will be as a mouth for you and you will be as God to him. [17] You shall take in your hand this staff, with which you shall perform the signs."

Moses continually questions God after He had spoken on what He wanted Moses to do and eventually provokes God to anger. The same parallel can be made with husbands and wives.

Unbelieving husbands

This clarifies the wisdom of 1 Peter 3.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and > you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

When wives submit to unbelieving husbands and cultivate godliness, it’s basically a demonstration of their faith not only in their husbands but also in God. That’s how they win their husbands for God. Her faith is what God uses to multiply it to their marriage.

Conclusions

- Submission is a test of faith.
- For wives, submission evaluates the trust and faith that they have in their husbands.
- Given what we see in the Church, many wives have zero to little faith and trust in their husbands.
- The ideal relationship that we are to strive for as Christians is oneness.
- Oneness in a relationship is where the faith and trust are so high that there can be obedience without question because you know the character and intentions of the one asking.
- Indeed, one could say once you know someone extremely well that you can anticipate their needs before they can even ask. There is beauty in a relationship that displays this.

Women's sin nature in marriage and contentment

June 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The comments of Intelligent submission is not required and Submission is a test of faith have reaffirmed my conclusion from the Genesis 3 analysis in Genesis 3, the sin nature of women, good leadership, and female contentment. The funny thing if you read through the comments is that it's mostly married women arguing points according to the script I laid out in the the exception temptation.

Now, the part I find most interesting is the lack of female contentment, which is the main thrust of Genesis 3. From the comments, you can start to get an accurate indicator of what is of interest. It goes along this progression:

- Women are not interested in What Is.
- Women are not interested in How It Should Be.
- Women are interested in How It Should Be According To Her.

How It Should Be could be one of the goals of the godly leader — the husband — in marriage. However, this is How It Should Be According To Him. How It Should Be According To Him is not enough for many women. How It Should Be According To Her is the Way It Should Be. In other words, covert rebellion.

If you remember, I talked about the various forms of rebellion in Shades of Rebellion. The irony of covert rebellion seen in the difference between these two statements.

1. Submission: I follow my husband's lead.
2. Covert rebellion: I let my husband lead.

That's ultimately what it comes down to: women want to let their husband lead instead of following his lead. I had thought that twisted rebellion like the complementarians espouse was the main sin nature of women. However, I believe I am now wrong about that. Covert rebellion which is "I let my husband lead" is probably the main sin nature of women because it's under the guise of righteousness (e.g. the husband is leading) but it gives her all of the power (e.g authority) in the relationship.

This is the true essence of virtue signalling. Grabbing power while maintaining the moral high ground. It's not enough to grab power. It must be done with the moral high ground.

In other words, a woman must look good while rebelling or sinning. As Looking Glass likes to call it: Vanity. Vanity rebellion. Women's sin nature in marriage is Vanity Rebellion.

Now that the veil has been pulled back on this pattern, you will see it everywhere. When women divorce, it must be her husband's fault. When bad things happen in a marriage, the full responsibility is foisted on the husband. Any bad feelings are used as indicators that a husband is not leading in a godly manner.

Unfortunately, the Church plays right into this by assuming that godliness is attractive when that is false.

Conclusions

In conclusion, from the previous few posts and this one,

- Submission is a test of faith.
- Modern Christian wives have zero to little faith and trust in their husbands.
- Women's sin nature in marriage is Vanity Rebellion.
- Modern Christian wives want to default to the "I let my husband lead" position because it signals righteousness (e.g. the husband is leading) but she still has the power (e.g. authority) to decide the direction of the family. In other words, you can lead until…
- The true essence of virtue signalling is grabbing power while maintaining the moral high ground. It's not enough to grab power. It must be done with the moral high ground.
- A lack of contentment is the core that leads to the temptation to power grab under the guise of righteousness.

The scary part of virtue signalling is that it looks righteous until you example it closer. When you examine it closer, it's a steaming pile of sin.

Christian husbands need to be on the look out for vanity rebellion. Calling out bad attitudes, rebellious behavior, and vanity is a good start.

If there's anything to say to women who profess themselves as Christian: be content and encourage contentment to other Christian women via Titus 2. This will help stave off both the temptation to virtue signal and power grab in marriage.

Options and escape plans

June 27, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has a good post clarifying the main point(s) of my previous three posts on Intelligent submission is not required, Submission is a test of faith, Women's sin nature in marriage and contentment. Sometimes it helps to have another person explain it for those who didn't understand.

The escape plan option for those who will divorce — namely non-Christians and supposed Christians such as the Jenny Eriksons — is definitely one option that some wives will take if they are unhappy with their marriages.

Jenny Erikson is an interesting case because she told someone she was going to 'surprise' her husband with the divorce. This would have basically blindsided him allow him no attempt at reconciliation (which she didn't want anyway), and she could exit while making herself look good (Vanity Rebellion) while blaming his deficiencies. Unfortunately, her Church got wind of it and props to them for booting her out of the Church when confronted about it when she went ahead with the divorce anyway (via Matthew 18).

Otherwise, the Christian wives who are married to men they're unhappy with but won't divorce. They definitely are the ones who are consistently nagging, contentious, rebellious, and covertly take over their relationship with help from complementarians and egalitarians depending on the Church.

Either way, they claim the moral high ground and appear righteous due to bad theology (e.g. godliness is attractive; women are naturally more spiritual; women's feelings are an indicator of the leadership of the husband, etc.), and subtly take over the relationship according to their own whims. This is where you find the men brow beaten and scared of their wife's temper tantrums. The happy wife, happy life parroters. Sadly, they are pretty easy to spot nowadays because they are so plentiful.

Overall, if you compare this to the feminist cultural rebellion you find a similar thing. These women want option for their lives: college and graduate school educations, jobs, entering male spaces, doing the same things that men do, taking leadership positions especially in the church, and many other things. The irony, I suppose, is that it doesn't make women happy. Women are now more unhappy on all metrics in polls since the 1970s and it's been a constant decrease.

The answer is not to cater to women by giving them increased options or power. The answer, as I've stated previously, is to tell them and help them cultivate contentment. It's probably not a stretch to say that a lack of contentment is the most prevalent female sin.

That should sum up this series of posts unless I have more inspiration.

Beating the obesity dead horse and pickiness

June 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Coastal commented a boundless post on the fat, single Christian.

I'm actually not going to beat the dead horse but let previous posts of mine speak for that. The three big elephants in the Christian dating and marriage room, BMI, Overweight and attractiveness, Maximizing the chances of Christian women to find a spouse, and the most recent A lesson in false humility: Christians are allergic to healthy lifestyles.

My comments on Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse have been removed before on Boundless. However, I threw up a comment over there in the theme of Women need flavor with food. We'll see if they approve it.

Edit: just kidding… their login system sucks so I couldn't even login to post. I've leave this comment here anyway. If someone wants to copy-pasta over there I don't mind.

> Let's look at this from the different perspective.
> Should a Christian man with no job, no ambition, who is mooching off his parents, playing video games all day, and dresses shabbily with poor hygiene reasonably expect that he will be attractive to women and go on a date with one?
> Of course, the obvious answer is no. There's a reason why this is a 'trope' for an unattractive man.
> The modern Church has done both Christian men and Christian women a disservice by lying or deceiving (or maybe those words are too harsh?) us about what is attractive to men and women. Hint: it's not godliness and/or character. If it were, Paul would not have had to tell the Corinthians in 2 Corinthians 6 to marry believers and not unbelievers. If godliness and good character were attractive, everyone would be attracted to Christians. That's clearly false.
> What are men and women attracted to? Women are attracted to confident, ambitious, successful leaders. Men are attracted to physical beauty. That they are 'Christian' is a qualifier. Paul states in 1 Corinthians 7 the only reason given in the NT to marry: "it is better to marry than to burn." What do men and women burn for? The traits listed above in this paragraph.
> Genesis 1 provides the framework. Genesis 1:8 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth. The commands of God are directly related to what we find attractive. Woman was created (Gen 2) as man's helpmeet and to help man multiply in the earth. Beauty is a proxy for healthiness and fertility. Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that.

> The Scriptures are clear that men are attracted to physical beauty, and that it often gets them into trouble. In Song of Songs, Solomon lauds the Shulamite's beauty the entire book without mentioning her character once. Solomon got himself in trouble with worshiping other gods because of his large harem. The story of Abraham and Pharaoh and Abimelech where Sarah is so beautiful that other men covet her. David and Bathsheba. A large chunk of Proverbs is devoted to warning about beautiful but deceitful women. Beauty is what attracts men, but beauty without character and godliness destroy men.
> Likewise, it's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in 1 Timothy 5:8. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us. He will also be able to lead his family well such as described in Ephesians 5.
> The problem, from what I've seen, is not solely that the modern Church parrots false narratives about what is attractive to both men and women. That is definitely harmful. However, there is the issue that makes it seem like godliness is mutually exclusive with the traits that attract the opposite sex. For example, beauty is somehow mutually exclusive with godliness, which 1 Pet 3 does not say at all. Another example is that a successful, ambitious man may be looked on as 'too worldly' because money is evil when it is the love of money that is evil in 1 Tim 6. This is a problem because these things are false. You can be beautiful and godly. You can be a confident, ambitious, and successful Christian leader.
> We need to do a better job coming alongside those who are struggling to tell them the truth in love and giving them encouragement and support to help them develop the traits that the opposite sex wants in a mate.
> After all, if you meet your perceived ideal spouse today will they want to be with you? Are you their ideal spouse? If not, what can we do as Christians to help each other get there instead of giving mindless platitudes about how you're good just the way you are or shuffling it under the rug.
> How can we help you lose weight? How can we help you workout and become more fit? How can we help you dress better? How can we help you be more successful? How can we help you learn to be a better leader? What dreams and goals have you put on the backburner? How can we help you pursue them?
> Of course, the first step is always if the person in question wants to change.

In general, I'm quite dubious of what it actually means to 'speak the Truth in love' to Christians like that because they claim anything that 'hurts their feelings' as unloving. I gave it my best shot.

The issues on beauty and obesity preventing a good discussion

Instead of beating the dead horse let's explore the different issues instead.

What are the issues? I think it's a combination of a lot of different things:

- Beauty standards — Women are inborn with wanting to be physically beautiful for a reason. After all, it's a good thing that a wife is attractive for her husband. The problem occurs is if women want to be beautiful for vanity via grabbing attention, power, or other men not-her-husband. Unfortunately, most Christians believe that beauty is just vain and has no purpose otherwise.
- Reality denial — this can be seen by those who call beauty shallow or those who claim beauty is subjective or a cultural construct. These are two sides of the same deception coin aimed at placating feelings at the expense of the Truth. Beauty is minimized as something that is not good, even when everything they're saying states otherwise. After all, if fat is fine and healthy then why do you have to write long posts to convince yourself and others?
- Churchian deception — this is the Christian ought trap where godliness is good so it should be attractive, or a woman's feeling evaluates how well a husband is leading, or women are more spiritual than men. In this case, godliness or personality or other things that women want to be attractive take the place of beauty.
- Victim mentality — Other people should change to fit me rather than working on myself. That's somewhat of a crass way to put it, but Christianity is an inside-out change religion. Other people around you don't change… you change because you're God's disciple which God can use to change other people.

All of these different things prevent a good discussion because people who overweight or obese don't want to do anything about it but still complain that they aren't beautiful. They put down beauty standards, they deny reality and want beauty to conform to them or have other traits be beautiful, they believe Churchian lies that godliness not beauty is attractive, and they paint themselves a victim and no one wants to come off as if they're 'blaming the victim.'

The majority of Christian men and women are unattractive. That's the sad state of affairs.

'Things that no one wants to hear' for $1000, Alex. And 'Things that no one wants to do anything about' for $2000, Alex. Oh, daily double? I'd like to risk it all.

Any others I missed?

What can we do about it? Well, A detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife is a good start for men. I linked some practical advice above that I wrote a while ago for both sexes too.

Pickiness

The second thing I actually wanted to talk about is actually part of one of the comments of the article:

> Thank you for sharing. I have in fact found that Christian men are pickier about physical appearance than nonChristian men. At least any of the ones that talk to me. And I am not even what our society defines as fat, but possibly slightly > underweight. I regularly get asked out by nonChristians who just met me and are distracted by my physical beauty (apparently, so they claim, and some I can't even easily get rid of), and I have had several Christian men tell others or me to my face that they like everything about me and would consider me worth being their best friend, except they don't find me attractive physically, and I have even had Christians (male and female) tell me I will not get married because I'm too skinny, and I have had many people criticize many aspects of my physical appearance, including some aspects that other people find gorgeous.

I wrote about how Christian women do this as well last year.

I believe this pickiness from both sides is rightfully placed, at least until you're pricing yourself out of the market.

Non-Christians will tend to hook up or date and have sex and then decide if they want to be together for a while or not. When they do get married, their divorce rates are higher because of cohabitation and pre-marital sex. Their standards are indeed a bit lower when this is the case because they don't care as much about the attractiveness or character of the other individual since they assume that even if it doesn't work out they can move on.

Generally speaking, if you're a Christian and believe that marriage is forever then of course you want a good deal. Your standards for who you are going to spend the rest of your life with are going to be higher. Anyone who you ask out or date you want to already know that they meet your criteria so you're not wasting your time and they're not wasting their time.

It's no secret that the more 'attractive' you are the more you can be 'picky.' Pickiness — or shall we say discernment — is often given a bad rap by Christians when it's not anything sinful. Most of the time, beyond the attractive characteristics such as beauty or confident, successful, ambitious leader, most of the qualifying characteristics such as being a Christian, virginity, godliness, character are good things that you're going to look for. If you can find a woman or man who exhibits these godly characteristics in greater quantities it is likely that you'll have a stronger marriage because the foundation is stronger.

This is a feature of a market and not a bug as well. Any time you add more qualifiers such as Christian, good character, godliness, kind, good father, good mother, and such you decrease the potential pool of candidates.

Basically, discernment is reframed as pickiness and something bad just like those who want beauty have their standards reframed as shallow.

You may marry someone you're not initially attracted to

June 29, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since I'm on a Boundless spree, let's go all the way with You may marry someone you're not initially attracted to as it was posted as a followup to the "fat single Christian" by a different author. As you may have guessed by the title, it's semi-false.

To cut right to the heart of the matter, the actual answer is thus:

> "You may marry someone you're not initially attracted to"
> That is the way it works for women, but it doesn't work that way for men.

- Men are primarily attracted to physical appearance such as the face and body type, including feminine dress and longer hair.
- Women are primarily attracted to a lot of different things, namely PSALMs — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money.

I've never been attracted to a woman after getting to know her, unless she changed her physical appearance to be more attractive. Sure, there have been some women with kind, engaging, and otherwise interesting personalities. However, unless they were physically attractive already or became more physically attractive as time went on (workout, lose weight, etc.) then all they would get is the old "you're a good friend but I'm not interested."

Generally speaking, from the men I talk to this is the overarching sentiment between all of us. If her physical appearance is unattractive then we won't become more attracted to her unless her physical appearance changes.

Now, there are some cases where a woman is attractive to a man but he somewhat writes her off for whatever reason. Later, as he gets to know her better, he becomes more enamored with her and eventually asks her out. However, what they don't tell you is that generally they already found her physical appearance satisfactory and attractive. Her physical appearance wasn't unattractive and then somehow through the guise of her personality and godliness she became more attractive in his eyes.

This is one of the big mistakes where men relate this story to women, and it can give them false hope. It simply doesn't work that way for men.

Regarding women, I've written before on the friend zone and various ways that men overcome it. Generally speaking, it involves drastic changes to a man, typically in height, masculinity, personality, confidence, or other vectors of attraction with or without time between a woman seeing these changes.

This is how a woman may not necessarily be attracted to a man at first but as she gets to know him better she may become more attracted as such traits are revealed.

> "I think it takes a certain level of maturity to look past the superficial."

Comments like these are like shallowness is false humility. They fail to understand that we are indeed physical beings with physical needs here on the earth. The attraction vectors are created by God and meant to address physical needs in a mate. It's not looking past the superficial; rather, it's realizing that our God was a genius in planning out what He meant for us to do in Genesis 1:

> Genesis 1 provides the framework. Genesis 1:8 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth. The commands of God are directly related to what we find attractive. Woman was created (Gen 2) as man's helpmeet and to help man multiply in the earth. Beauty is a proxy for healthiness and fertility. Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that.

The gross ignorance in the difference between men and women is why boundless articles are mediocre at best most of the time. To engage men and women well you need to understand that what they prioritize in the opposite sex is different. These differences are differences for a reason, and most of them aren't actually able to be modified or changed. Hence, approaching the topic from the both-sexes view is inherently deceptive and/or ignorant. It only needs to more confusion in a young adults population that is already confused from broken homes and without strong godly same-sex role models.

> Christians need to be concerned with reality and how to address it instead of being concerned about how it should be.

Exceptions are exceptions. Exceptions in the dating game give you a low probability of success. Sure, some men marry obese women. Most men don't. Sure, some women marry men who play video games all the time. Most women don't. Get over it. It's the exception temptation.

This is why I recommend to women that they go on a date or two to find out if a man becomes more attractive to them as they get to know him better. However, I do not recommend men going on dates with women they find unattractive because it is extremely unlikely for that to change unless her physical appearance changes. I only encourage men to go on a date if she is already physically attractive to him but he has not considered her for whatever reason.

A Christian understanding of attraction and the role it plays in marriage Part 2

NEW UPDATED POST: A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3

I've had a request to write on why attraction is important for Christian [marriages]. I had previously written a Christian understanding of attraction, but it's been a couple years and my knowledge of the Scripture has broadened considerably since then.

A bunch of this content was covered in the two previous posts on boundless articles, but I'm going to compile them together with Scriptures to make the case in this post.

Topics:

- The lens of heaven — marriage is an earthly institution
- The lens of earth — the context surrounding the creation of marriage
- The purpose of marriage as an earthly institution
- What is attractive to both sexes?
- Understanding how attraction plays into the roles and responsibilities of marriage
- Other NT Scriptures on marriage
- Other Biblical pitfalls of downplaying attraction
- Conclusion

Let's begin.

The lens of heaven — marriage is an earthly institution

Marriage is an earthly institution.

> Matthew 22:23 On that day some Sadducees (who say there is no resurrection) came to Jesus and questioned Him, 24 asking, "Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies having no children, his brother as next of kin shall marry his wife, and raise up children for his brother.' 25 Now there were seven brothers with us; and the first married and died, and having no children left his wife to his brother; 26 so also the second, and the third, down to the seventh. 27 Last of all, the woman died. 28 In the resurrection, therefore, whose wife of the seven will she be? For they all had married her."
> 29 But Jesus answered and said to them, "You are mistaken, not [m]understanding the Scriptures nor the power of God. 30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven.

Jesus gives us some interesting insight into heaven. There's no marriage there.

This means to us that marriage is a covenant institution between a husband, wife, and God, but it is also mainly an earthly institution. There are no marriages in heaven. The earthly institution of marriage does not transcend to heaven nor do any of the beings in heaven marry.

If you look closely at the sequencing of events in Revelation, but the marriage of the Lamb occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created when Jesus comes back again.

> Revelation 19:7 Let us rejoice and be glad and give the glory to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb has come and His [b]bride has made herself ready." 8 It was given to her to clothe herself in fine linen, bright and clean; for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the [c]saints.9 Then he *said to me, "Write, 'Blessed are those who are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb.'" And he *said to me, "These are true words of God." 10 Then I fell at his feet to worship him. But he *said to me, "Do not do that; I am a fellow servant of yours and your brethren who hold the testimony of Jesus; worship God. For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."
> The Coming of Christ
> 11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse, and He who sat on it is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He judges and wages war. 12 His eyes are a flame of fire, and on His head are many diadems; and He has a name written on Him which no one knows except Himself. 13 He is clothed with a robe dipped in blood, and His name is called The Word of God. 14 And the armies which are in heaven, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, were following Him on white horses. 15 From His mouth comes a sharp sword, so that with it He may strike down the nations, and He will [d]rule them with a rod of iron; and He treads the [e]wine press of the fierce wrath of God, the Almighty. 16 And on His robe and on His thigh He has a name written, "KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS."
> Revelation 21:1 Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and there is no longer any sea. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. 3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne, saying, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is among men, and He will [a]dwell among them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself will be among them[b], 4 and He will wipe away every tear from their eyes; and there will no longer be any death; there will no longer be any mourning, or crying, or pain; the first things have passed away."

Theologically, this makes sense because the marriage of Christ and His bride is literally uniting us and making us one with him. Since marriage is an earthly institution, Jesus' second coming back to earth is the time when He will marry His bride. The judgment occurs in Revelation 20, after the marriage and conquering Christ.

All this occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created and the temporal things associated with the old earth and old heaven pass away. This is important to understand because one of those temporal things that passes away is the earthly institution of marriage.

In other words, Jesus must marry His bride before the institution of marriage is abolished when the new heaven and new earth are created. Since marriage is an earthly institution and not heavenly, Jesus marries His bride on the earth.

The lens of earth — the context surrounding the creation of marriage

Now that we understand marriage is primarily an earthly institution, we should understand that its function is to address earthly needs. We have a intelligent Creator and our Creator does not create without a purpose. All of the things He does for us are out of His loving kindness.

To understand the function of marriage addressing earthly needs, we need to go back to the creation. Let's examine the status of man in the garden in both creation accounts. Genesis 1 is considered the first creation account, which gives an overview of all of the creation. Genesis 2 is considered the second creation account, which gives an overview into the creation of man specifically.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth." 29 Then God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the [an]surface of all the earth, and every tree [ao]which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the [ap]sky and to every thing that [aq]moves on the earth [ar]which has life, I have given every green plant for food"; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

God's commands to man were two fold in the first creation account in Genesis 1:

- Rule and subdue the earth — 26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." […] 28b and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth."
- Be fruitful and multiply — 28a God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth,

We will come back to these two commands after the next point.

> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, “From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not [n]eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”
> 18 Then the Lord God said, “It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper [o]suitable for him.” 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the [p]sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the [q]sky, and to every beast of the field, but for [r]Adam there was not found a helper [s]suitable for him.
> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God [t]fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said,“This is now bone of my bones,And flesh of my flesh;[u]She shall be called [v]Woman, Because [w]she was taken out of [x]Man.” 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

Genesis 2 gives us more details about the ordering of creation. Man was created first, but there was no helper suitable for him. Hence, God created a helper suitable for him. The two commands in Genesis 1 were dominion over the earth and to be fruitful and multiply.

- The first command was able to be fulfilled by Adam by himself; he was taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names.
- The second command, which was be fruitful and multiply, was unable to be fulfilled.

It’s interesting because God knew before the animals were created and brought before Adam that he had no helper suitable for him. I believe God had this in mind before he did all of this simply because of the examples of sexual dimorphism — two sexes — within the animals he created as well. Indeed, to Adam’s male God wanted to create a female helper for him not only for the loneliness but to fulfill the rest of the command to be fruitful and multiply.

These two commands and two descriptors make up the core of the earthly institution of marriage:

- Command: Rule and subdue the earth
- Command: Be fruitful and multiply

- Descriptor: It is not good for man to be alone
- Descriptor: I will make him a helper suitable for him

All of these lead into God putting Adam to sleep, taking out a rib, forming Eve (who was still unnamed), and giving her to Adam as an example of the first marriage.

As a side note, Adam was given work in the garden as a steward already, but it was multiplied in punishment. This relates to Genesis 3 and the punishments that God gave for sinning. However, it is important to realize that Adam is already the head of Eve in the way marriage was created.

The purpose of marriage as an earthly institution

Going back to the commands and descriptors, most modern Christians are aware of the descriptors of why God created Eve for Adam. They know that it wasn't good for man to be alone, and that Eve was created to be a suitable helpmeet for Adam. However, they don't examine marriage in the context of the commands that God gave man.

Based on the context of the passages in Genesis 1 and 2, it would be accurate to say that the institution of marriage was created so that man could fulfilled the commands of God in Genesis 1. Rule and subdue the earth and Be fruitful and multiply. Ruling and subduing the earth requires good counsel and help. Being fruitful and multiplying requires a wife and helpmeet.

As you can see, marriage was created by God to fulfill the earthly imperatives that God gave man in the garden.

What is attractive to both sexes?

Generally speaking, attraction is different between both sexes.

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.
- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, non-emotional, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Yes, there are exceptions. Yes, these are generalizations. We're not discussing them now.

These are the things that are primarily [sexually] attractive to both sexes. There is a reason for this.

Understanding how attraction plays into the roles and responsibilities of marriage

We, as humans, implicitly understand that attraction — by very definition of the word — is a driving force for marriage. Indeed, no one really gets married to someone that they don't find attractive.

Even in cultures with arranged marriages such as Judaism, the two getting married were required to see each other and they had some influence in terms of veto power over the person they would get married. The families of the two parties 'set them up' on 'arranged dates' that they had to go on to get to know each other. There had to be agreement from all sides, including the two getting married. Very few cultures, if any, have forced marriages.

If you were a Creator, it would make sense that the commands given to man for marriage would directly apply to the things that attract men and women to marriage. After all, these things are to be a preparation for the roles and responsibilities of marriage. Indeed, in the Law of Moses, God laid out additional responsibilities for the role of the husband. These are:

- Protector — Numbers 30 were authority acts as a covering in love for vows. This is affirmed in the by Paul and Peter that the purpose of headship is to love as Christ loved us, not be embittered toward wives, and live with them in an understanding way as a weaker vessel in Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, and 1 Peter 3.
- Provider — Exodus 21 where food, clothing, and sex are not to be deprived wives if another wife is taken. These are essential components of marriage. This is affirmed by Paul in 1 Timothy 5:8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

Now, relating this back to the Scriptures in Genesis 1 we can logically see how attraction plays into the various roles and responsibilities given to men and women in marriage. The commands of God are directly related to what we find attractive in the opposite sex.

- Woman was created as man's helpmeet and to help man multiply in the earth. She was created so that man did not have to be alone. Beauty is a proxy for healthiness and fertility because it signals less genetic errors and ability to bear children. Waist to hip ratios or curves garners a lot of attention by men because they are attractive, but they are also related to a woman's ability to bear children.
- Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that. It's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in Exodus 21 and 1 Timothy 5:8. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us. He will also be able to lead his family well such as described in Ephesians 5.

Now, looking back, it's an ah-ha moment for us because it all fits together. God created attraction to be rooted in the ability of the opposite sex to perform their particular roles and responsibilities in marriage well and to fulfill God's commands to us.

Hence, marriage is created and meant to address the physical needs in a mate and the commands of God here on the earth.

Other New Testament Scriptures on marriage

Much of the modern Church has fallen ignorantly into the lie that godliness is attractive. This is the Christian ought fallacy which follows that 'because godliness is a good thing it should be what is attractive.' However, when we examine NT Scriptures, we find this to be false.

Paul tells the Corinthians in 2 Corinthians 6 to marry believers and not unbelievers. 'What fellowship does light have with darkness and darkness with light?' However, if godliness and good character were attractive, everyone would be attracted to Christians. That's clearly false. Rather, it's the case that any man exhibiting PSALMs and masculinity will be attractive to women and they will not necessarily be believers or not. This is why Paul warns not to marry unbelievers because some were attractive but bad choices for marriage.

Similarly, Paul states in 1 Corinthians 7 the only reason given in the NT to marry: "it is better to marry than to burn." In fact, it is even ideal or at least preferable [to him] that all men remain single as he so full attention can be focused toward the Lord. What are the things that cause us to burn for marriage? It is what sexually attracts us. This is the sex drive and beauty for men. This is the sex drive and strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders for women. These are the things we look for in a mate, aside from important qualifiers such as godlines and character.

Why should women not usurp authority over man [in the Church and family] and why is she saved through childbearing in 1 Timothy 2? Because she is fulfilling the initial commands of God to be fruitful and multiply, and her offspring like Jesus will take dominion over the earth. Jesus added from the initial command of God to take dominion over the earth to also win the people of the earth through the gospel. Make disciples of all nations.

Another problem, from what I've seen, is not solely that the modern Church parrots false narratives about what is attractive to both men and women. That is definitely harmful. However, there is the issue that makes it seem like godliness is mutually exclusive with the traits that attract the opposite sex. For example, beauty is somehow mutually exclusive with godliness, which 1 Pet 3 does not say at all. Another example is that a successful, ambitious man may be looked on as 'too worldly' because money is evil when it is the love of money that is evil in 1 Tim 6. This is a problem because these things are false. You can be beautiful and godly. You can be a confident, ambitious, and successful Christian leader.

Other Biblical pitfalls of downplaying attraction

Generally speaking, the modern Church loves to downplay the role of attraction in marriage. I believe that this is because it is based on a faulty understanding of why attraction is important.

For example, it's clear from the Scriptures that beauty is what is attractive to men.

However, beauty without godliness and character has disastrous results results for men. They're carried away to worship idols (Solomon and harem). They get caught in adultery (David and Bathsheba). They get scared into lying (Abraham, Sarah, Abimelech, and Pharaoh). They get dragged down into the pit (the vast majority of Proverbs on deceitful women). The beauty of women is never downplayed. In fact, in Song of Songs Solomon lauds the beauty of the Shulamite woman the entire book without mentioning her character once.

Those who claim beauty is shallow fall into the trap of false humility. God created beauty, and beauty is objective. Some examples are nature, facial symmetry, a woman's curves, and strong, muscular men. Without a God as an anchor, there can be no objective Truth such as beauty. Those who downplay beauty don't understand the role it plays within marriage.

Obviously cultivating beauty or cultivating strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders should not be placed over godliness and character. However, they are not mutually exclusive. Beauty is only vanity when focused in the wrong direction. Beauty for attention, beauty for power, beauty for other men are not good. However, beauty for a husband in marriage is good. Similarly, the same is true of the sex drive.

Conclusion

We do both singles and married a disservice by downplaying the role attraction plays in marriage. If we don't show them why, from the Scriptures, God created these traits to be important and attractive to the opposite sex we risk alienating them and/or giving them cognitive dissonance. Exceptions are exceptions. Hanging onto exceptions when you want to be married give you a low probability of success. Sure, some men marry obese women. Most men don't. Sure, some women marry men who play video games all the time. Most women don't.

"Oh? You want a beautiful wife? That's shallow and superficial." However, we implicitly understand that beauty is objective, at least in part. That creates strong cognitive dissonance in Christian men: "Oh, I shouldn't want beauty? Then why do I desire a beautiful wife? Is beauty a bad thing? Why do I want a beautiful wife if beauty is superficial?" Sadly, this is too often the case.

That which God creates is beautiful. He created us, and we were very good. He created attraction and our sex drives. He created marriage. He command us to take dominion and be fruitful and multiply. The loving gaze of a husband on his beautiful bride. The respect of a wife toward her strong, confident husband. Our righteousness is our beautiful clothing to Jesus. The beauty of a large family.

All of these things come together to form a coherent whole that exemplifies the nature of the beauty of marriage and the plan that God created for us to accomplish.

Male attractiveness, submission, and female orgasms

June 30, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since there's been some discussion on attraction and submission and how it relates to sexual satisfaction on Submission is a test of faith, I decided to go digging a bit for studies.

> Men's masculinity and attractiveness predict their female partners' reported orgasm frequency and timing
> It has been hypothesized that female orgasm evolved to facilitate recruitment of high-quality genes for offspring. Supporting evidence indicates that female orgasm promotes conception, although this may be mediated by the timing of female orgasm in relation to male ejaculation. This hypothesis also predicts that women will achieve orgasm more frequently when copulating with high-quality males, but limited data exist to support this prediction. We therefore explored relationships between the timing and frequency of women's orgasms and putative markers of the genetic quality of their mates, including measures of attractiveness, facial symmetry, dominance, and masculinity. We found that women reported more frequent and earlier-timed orgasms when mated to masculine and dominant men—those with high scores on a principal component characterized by high objectively-measured facial masculinity, observer-rated facial masculinity, partner-rated masculinity, and partner-rated dominance. Women reported more frequent orgasm during or after male ejaculation when mated to attractive men—those with high scores on a principal component characterized by high observer-rated and self-rated attractiveness. Putative measures of men's genetic quality did not predict their mates' orgasms from self-masturbation or from non-coital partnered sexual behavior. Overall, these results appear to support a role for female orgasm in sire choice.

So we know that women orgasm and are generally more sexually satisfied with dominant and masculine men. Who knew? Full study here.

What's interesting is that the masculinity is both subjective and objective.

- Objective components: high objectively-measured facial masculinity, observer-rated facial masculinity, high observer-rated attractiveness
- Subjective components: partner-rated masculinity, and partner-rated dominance, self-rated attractiveness.

I would be especially interested to see the data on subjective components to see if the trends hold true for 'regular' men of whom their wives have a strong impression of them.

That would give some good credence to pair bonding and virginity.

If you look at the full study the ironic thing is men's self rated masculinity was negatively correlated with female orgasm. Indeed, this suggests that the more 'macho' a man thinks he is (as opposed to actually is), the less his woman will orgasm. Nothing turns off a woman more than false bravado.

> Female copulatory orgasm and male partner's attractivenessto his partner and other women
> Women's copulatory orgasm may function to retain sperm from men with ''good genes'', one indicator of which is attractiveness, and one benefit of which is pathogen resistance. Women who perceive their partner to be more (vs. less) attractive are more likely to report orgasm at last copulation. Another benefit of male attractiveness to women is that he may sire offspring that will gain the heritable share of this advantage (i.e., ''sexy sons''). Research has not addressed the ''Sexy Sons'' Hypothesis (e.g., as indicated by women's perception of other women's assessments of their partner's attractiveness) in regards to female copulatory orgasm. We secured self-reports from 439 women in a committed, heterosexual relationship and investigated the relationships between women's orgasm at last copulation and (1) women's assessments of their partner's attractiveness and (2) women's perceptions of other women's assessments of their partner's attractiveness. The results indicate that women mated to more (vs. less) attractive men are more likely to report orgasm at last copulation, and this relationship is mediated by women's perceptions of other women's assessments of their partner's attractiveness. We discuss the mediated relationship, note limitations of the research, and suggest future research directions.

Full study here.

Looking at the full study, women more often had orgasms with attractive men and high relationship satisfaction. However, when you look at both the attractiveness of the man and other women's assessment of their mate the associated is eliminated. In other words, other women's perception of their mate play a role in orgasm frequency too. Women want what other women want.

Submission plays a role in marital satisfaction. Thus, ideally a wife's man is a man that she finds attractive, that other women find attractive and she knows they do, and she has high marital satisfaction with (via her submission to him) as a masculine leader.

Nothing new or revolutionary in these parts, but always nice for some confirmation. Be attractive, don't be unattractive. Be THE man.

Weight no more

July 1, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Okay, I promise. This is the last Boundless post. The previous posts are beating the obesity dead horse and pickiness and you may marry someone you're not initially attracted to.

The main reason why I wanted to discuss is that in the previous post there was supposed to be a perspective from a man coming this Friday. Well, here we are. Weight no more.

I had previously posted on several traps that Christians tend to fall into when looking at the issue of physical appearance. Let's get a refresher:

- [Cultural] Beauty standards — Women are inborn with wanting to be physically beautiful for a reason. After all, it's a good thing that a wife is attractive for her husband. The problem occurs is if women want to be beautiful for vanity via grabbing attention, power, or other men not-her-husband. Unfortunately, most Christians believe that beauty is just vain and has no purpose otherwise.
- Reality denial — this can be seen by those who call beauty shallow or those who claim beauty is subjective or a cultural construct. These are two sides of the same deception coin aimed at placating feelings at the expense of the Truth. Beauty is minimized as something that is not good, even when everything they're saying states otherwise. After all, if fat is fine and healthy then why do you have to write long posts to convince yourself and others?
- Churchian deception — this is the Christian ought trap where godliness is good so it should be attractive, or a woman's feeling evaluates how well a husband is leading, or women are more spiritual than men. In this case, godliness or personality or other things that women want to be attractive take the place of beauty.
- Victim mentality — Other people should change to fit me rather than working on myself. That's somewhat of a crass way to put it, but Christianity is an inside-out change religion. Other people around you don't change… you change because you're God's disciple which God can use to change other people.

Let's see how many of them are here in his post. My comments in bold and parentheses.

> Dating. Why is it that that six letter word causes me to cringe every time I say or write it? [Victim mentality] For whatever reason, and I'm sure there are different reasons for each of us, dating is difficult. It's especially difficult when you're husky and broad-shouldered like me. To paraphrase my friend Joy Beth, dating as an overweight Christian man is nearly impossible. [Victim mentality]
> Just recently I had the privilege to be in one of my best friend's, Josh's, weddings as a groomsman. It was a beautiful ceremony, but I was distracted. Words that I'd heard earlier that day kept buzzing around in my head: "James you sure do have a handsome face, and from what I've been told you're a godly young man," said a woman I hardly knew, “but honey you should seriously workout more because you’ll never attract a woman looking like that.”

I love working out. I love running. I love exercising. Shoot, I even have a degree in physical education! But this lady made me forget what I was even doing that day, and she reminded me that culture has invaded the church. [Cultural beauty standards] Somehow being a little bigger will always be linked to unhealthy lifestyles. [Gasp, appearances matter to humans] Had this women known that I’ve struggled with weight issues my whole life and have been depressed by them, or had she realized that I’m adamant about living healthy and exercising often, she probably wouldn’t have been so blunt. But unfortunately, she only gave voice to what many are thinking—I’ve heard similar statements from older women “looking out for my best interests” and from some women I’ve shown interest in. [Victim mentality]

It seems I’m too big to love, but I’m not alone in feeling shame over my body. If I wasn’t too big, I could be too short. Too skinny. Too tall. My hair could be thinning, my acne raging, or my six pack fleeting. I could have too scraggly of a beard or unable to even grow a beard. [Reality denial] The standards of physical beauty, even for men, are paralyzing. And we’ve been silent on for far too long. [Victim mentality]

The problem here is simple: It’s sin. [Churchian deception] That’s why we’re unable to recognize the beauty, the imago Dei, in each other. [Christian ought trap] We’ve unknowingly infused our churches with a distorted view of humanity and sexuality. [Cultural beauty standards] And while attraction is no doubt important, we’ve prioritized lust over a desire to truly know another human being. [Churchian deception] We’re making decisions on who to marry for the rest of our lives based on who will look the best for the next decade. [Reality denial] I want the women in the church to see Christ in me, and to see that I, James, have so much more going on for me than physical attractiveness. [Cultural beauty standards]

I long for the day I can be like my friend Josh, crying like a baby as I watch my bride adorned in the radiance of Christ walking down the aisle to publicly tell people “I choose him above all others. James is mine, and I am his.” [I don’t even know what to call this, aside from feminine] I long for the day to be a dutiful father, lavishing my children with love and homemade key lime pie. But for that to happen, a woman has to see me how God the Father sees me, as a redeemed sinner saved by grace, on fire with desire to see Christ made famous. Until that day, I remain ever devoted to Christ and the mission He’s given me to preach the Gospel in season and out of season, with the occasional watchful eye in the crowd seeing if there are any single women listening to me preach. [Red herring on the topic of physical attractiveness]

As I snap on my Fitbit to track some miles, I rest in the promise of God: He is for > me, and He will never be against me. God knows the desires of my heart because He put them there. He calls me His child and reminds me to mosey on down to the cross daily where all men are made equal and rest at the feet of the One who gave new life to this husky kid 18 years ago. [Reality denial]

The interesting part about this is not that he succumbs to all of the 4 points mentioned above on beauty standards, reality denial, Churchian deception, and victim mentality.

No, the real interesting part is how we have a different visceral reaction to a man doing these things as opposed to a woman. It's easier to sympathize with a fat woman, at least to some extent. However, when a man claims to be a victim — even if he is or isn't — it viscerally disgusts us, especially when reading the part about how he's going to cry like a baby because his wife 'unconditionally loves him.' I wouldn't be surprised if most of the women reading this had real feelings of revulsion from reading what he wrote. It's very unattractive.

This man is looking for something he is never going to find on this earth. Only God is able to love us unconditionally. Every time we hoist up expectations of unconditional love from other humans we are bound to be disappointed.

Additionally, we can see that he's blurring how God loves us with the roles and responsibilities of marriages. Husbands are called to love their wives as Christ loved the Church. What love looks like from a wife is different than it looks like from a husband — they are told to submit to their husbands (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3), to respect them (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3), to love them as a friend (philandros not agape — Tit 2), and to cultivate various behaviors and qualities (Tit 2, 1 Pet 3), even to win unbelieving husbands. His attitude is seeking the love that a husband would give his wife.

It's not that unattractive is bad. Indeed, you could say at most that attraction is a general proxy for the roles of a husband and wives in marriage, but it must be tempered by godliness and character. The real issue is what I stated in the paragraph before this one is that this man wants the love that a husband would give his wife. This is the viscerally unattractive part because what he is implicitly telling us through his words is that he wants to be the woman in the relationship. He wants to be unconditionally loved by the wife, who is thrust into the role of the husband.

That is the feeling of disgust defined in a Biblical perspective. It's right that you feel disgust to what he is writing.

Ladies and gentlemen: this is your next generation of pastors.

What will likely end up happening is that he will start to pastor a church. Then some women will be attracted to him because of his leadership position in the church. He will get married. Then marital troubles will come down the road like they do for most Christian pastors. If he's 'unlucky,' his wife will divorce him. If he's 'unluckier' he will live in marital hell with a nagging and contentious wife, who throws 'godly temper tantrums' or 'uses leaving to wake him up to God's voice in her.' Indeed, this results in the pastor taking out his marital frustration on the Church by telling men to double down on serving and being nice to their unhappy wives like he did, which perpetuates this dysfunctional cycle. See: Dalrock's blog if you want names to put to these examples.

If he's blessed, he'll realize that he is the man in the marriage relationship and he is called by God to be the leader. He'll recognize that he needs to call out discontent and nagging behavior as sin in his wife and give her structured leadership. He'll tell her that he can do nothing to make her happy. He'll tell her that happiness and contentment cannot be derived from anyone or anything but Christ.

I believe why James 3 speaks about the tongue is not just because it is easy gone astray. Moreover, language tends to shape who we are.

> James 3:1 Let not many of you become teachers, my brethren, knowing that as such we will incur a [a]stricter judgment. 2 For we all stumble in many ways. If anyone does not stumble in [b]what he says, he is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body as well. 3 Now if we put the bits into the horses' mouths so that they will obey us, we direct their entire body as well. 4 Look at the ships also, though they are so great and are driven by strong winds, are still directed by a very small rudder wherever the inclination of the pilot desires.
> 5 So also the tongue is a small part of the body, and yet it boasts of great things. See how great a forest is set aflame by such a small fire! 6 And the tongue is a fire, the very world of iniquity; the tongue is set among our members as that which defiles the entire body, and sets on fire the course of our [c]life, and is set on fire by [d]hell. 7 For every [e]species of beasts and birds, of reptiles and creatures of the sea, is tamed and has been tamed by the human [f]race. 8 But no one can tame the tongue; it is a restless evil and full of deadly poison. 9 With it we bless our Lord and Father, and with it we curse men, who have been made in the likeness of God; 10 from the same mouth come both blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not to be this way. 11 Does a fountain send out from the same opening both [g]fresh and bitter water? 12 Can a fig tree, my brethren, produce olives, or a vine produce figs? Nor can salt water produce [h]fresh.

I'm sure that most of us have grown up around people who put down and discourage people all the time. There's a so-called "negative vibe" around these people that manifests itself. This is the power of how language is able to shape us. Those who are called worthless all the time will tend to end up believing themselves as worthless eventually.

How language shapes you is not simply from others. How you refer to yourself also shapes what you do. A wife that 'lets her husband lead' instead of 'following his lead' will continually reinforce that pattern of rebellion in her heart. This is a very difficult trap to get out of, and many times can only be redeemed by the power of God and His salvation.

In any case, the reason why I'm writing about the guy versus man dichotomy is that you will rarely ever hear a man refer to himself as a man now. Guy or guys is somewhat of a more colloquial term, but there is almost a tangible sense of awkwardness or shame associated with referring to yourself as a man if you are one. The phrase "you guys" is almost always used disparagingly as if we're doing something wrong. This is the background feminist culture that implicitly and explicitly shames men for simply being men and lauds women for simply being women.

My pastor doesn't really understand this to my knowledge. Every couple months he makes some comments during sermons where he wants more men to come to leadership meetings to be discipled, but no men volunteer even though there are men who could definitely do it. When the feminist current pushes the you to believe you're worthless, a failure, and not valuable or important, you'll eventually start believing it unless you innoculate yourself from it with the Scripture, prayer, fasting, and other spiritual disciplines. You wont take the risk. You won't run head first into leadership positions where you can learn how to lead both men and women in the Church, which is exceedingly useful for learning how to be a head in marriage.

Men need to understand that they're men. They're not the guys. They're not worthless for being men. We lead the Church because God said to in the Scripture. We lead our families because God said to in the Scriptures. We've been given these positions for a reason. There's no shame. We don't have to ask for permission. We need to be THE man who is focused onto the things of God regardless of if you choose to a Patriarch or Monk.

You’re not responsible for a woman’s emotions

July 4, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is somewhat of a follow-up and reminder of a very old post her emotions and her emotions part 2.

Essentially, it’s very difficult for men to understand that you’re not responsible for a woman’s emotions. You’re not responsible for your woman’s emotions. You’re not responsible for your wife’s emotions.

This is a very difficult concept to understand, and I don’t think any man ever gets to the point where he understands this fully. Men are generally creatures of action. We want to fix problems. We want to take action. But you can’t “fix” a woman’s emotions. They just are, especially at different periods in time (e.g. her cycle).

In particular, churchianity tries to make a woman’s emotions and unhappiness as an unforgivable sin. “Playing games with women” and “playing with a woman’s emotions” are pretty much stolen feminist phrases that churchianity adapts to beat Christian men over the head. This ultimately gets warped into some weird theology where the man is supposed to guard a woman’s heart. In reality, the heart is the responsibility of each person.

> Proverbs 4:20 My son, pay attention to what I say; turn your ear to my words. 21 Do not let them out of your sight, keep them within your heart; 22 for they are life to those who find them and health to one’s whole body. 23 Above all else, guard your heart, for everything you do flows from it. 24 Keep your mouth free of perversity; keep corrupt talk far from your lips. 25 Let your eyes look straight ahead; fix your gaze directly before you. 26 Give careful thought to the[c] paths for your feet and be steadfast in all your ways. 27 Do not turn to the right or the left; keep your foot from evil.

Just as men process their own emotions internally, it is useful to process her outward showing of emotions internally as well. This prevents you from acting rashly. Sometimes she needs to be held. Sometimes she needs time to get over it by herself. Sometimes she needs to vent. In most cases, it’s not even about you. Even if it is about you, she still needs to deal with it herself without you trying to fix them.

This is the importance of understanding the end goal as it relates to the process. To reiterate, the goal is not to make a woman happy, which is a very easy trap to fall into. The goal is stated in Ephesians 5 and can be summarized as sanctification in Christ and oneness. Stand firm on the Truth. Treat emotions not as something to be fixed but with patience and understanding.

Marital competency

July 11, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Building off of the some of Donal's thoughts.

Generally speaking, there are some 'systems' that other people have built before. For example, Dr. Harley who wrote His needs, Her needs has systematized most important emotional needs.

One of the ironies, I think, is that His needs her needs is often marketed to conservative Christians even though the author is not a Christian (to my knowledge) and does not advocate Biblical principles. The same is true with Doyle's The Surrendered wife. She is not a Christian, but it's a recommended book to Christians.

These are the areas Dr Harvey recommends.

- Affection
- Sexual Fulfillment
- Conversation
- Recreational Companionship
- Honesty and Openness
- Physical Attractiveness
- Financial Support
- Domestic Support
- Family Commitment
- Admiration

This is not unlike the 5 love languages and other potential 'systems' to try to identify what is important to marriage. However, these 'systems' that are not built on what the Scripture defines as important can be dubious.

Generally speaking, any such system should be built directly off of Biblical principles based on the roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife respectively along with the concepts of covenant marriage (no divorce, kids, etc.). Some of the above but not all are what the Scripture defines as necessary such as admiration (e.g. respect), sexual fulfillment, financial support, and whatnot.

The main problem(s) that you would run into are namely that people change their minds all of the time and are subject to the whims of their feelings. A Christian woman wants to submit… until she doesn't. She's in a bad mood. Her friends or family convince her it's a bad idea. Her husband was 'being too harsh.' She's not getting her 'needs' met. In general, men are more apt to do fulfill their commitments even when they're not happy about it.

Now, there is a minority of men and women who take things seriously. Their yes is yes and their no is no. The problem is that it may be quite difficult to separate out these serious Christians from the lukewarm ones. You can build all the systems that you want, but if the people are not interested in taking God and/or the Scriptures seriously then you get someone who will eventually go off the rails in the future. Not if but when.

In general, consequences are more effective in deterring bad behavior. No fault divorce increased rates of divorce. Mother custody of children increased instances of divorce. When there is no penalty for bad behavior you get more bad behavior. When you can't call out bad behavior there is more bad behavior. Bad behavior breeds from selfishness. Incentives matter, as much as we like to admit it or not.

Thus, a good marital competency index would identify:

- Covenant marriage requirements (no divorce, kids, sex needs, etc.).
- Roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife to each other.
- Personal, family, and community interaction(s) that incentivize good behavior.

Fat acceptance is forced narcissism

July 13, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sometimes you find truth in places you don't expect.

> What is "Body Love"?
> "Body love" is a term used mainly by people who fixate on their bodies, feel like crap about their bodies, and then broadcast to the world the exact opposite. They want you to believe that THEY believe every dimple and crevice of their flesh is attractive, so they've created a movement to make it socially acceptable to shove their belly rolls in our faces.
> But talking about how much you love your body means you're probably trying to convince yourself of something you really don't believe. The problem isn't a lack of self-love; it's a lack of effort, action, progress, and achievement… and overwhelming self-obsession. "Body love" is code for this self-obsession. It's forced narcissism, which is now encouraged and applauded these days.
> What ever happened to humility? And when did body love become a greater virtue? C.S. Lewis once said, "Humility isn't thinking less of yourself, it's thinking of yourself less." Yet it's seemingly more important to put yourself on a pedestal for no reason than it is to place your focus on things outside yourself.
> If you think about it, insecurity and narcissism aren't really opposites. They're both the result of fixating on yourself too much. Body love is how people rationalize that fixation.

Fat acceptance is self obsession leading to force narcissism. The need to make yourself feel good over things that you shouldn't feel good about.

There you have it.

The leadership of a husband

What is love?

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

Love is:

- Gave himself up for her in order to…
- Sanctify her
- Cleanse her

When I previous wrote husbands win their wives with words, it's important to realize that the washing of the water of the word is analogized with ceremonial cleansing. The "word" in this case that is the water of the word that is cleansing is "rhema" which is spoken word or in other words the spoken Truth. In verse 21, such washing of the water of the rhema word from sanctification and cleansing result in holiness and blameless.

Sanctification is not solely that which only God does, but also that which God does through us.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]divorce her. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O husband, whether you will save your wife?

Now, sanctification or to make holy is defined as "to set apart." Indeed, such as ceremonial cleansing analogy shows us that this sacrificial love is aimed at living in Truth.

> John 17:13 But now I come to You; and these things I speak in the world so that they may have My joy made full in themselves. 14 I have given them Your word; and the world has hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. 15 I do not ask You to take them out of the world, but to keep them [d]from [e]the evil one. 16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of > the world. 17 Sanctify them in the truth; Your word is truth. 18 As You sent Me into the world, I also have sent them into the world. 19 For their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth.

John 17 is particularly interesting because it is Jesus last prayer prior to leaving the last supper to go to struggle in prayer and be betrayed. It's the passage where Jesus prays unity for the disciples. It also shows how husbands are to sacrificially love their wives. Namely, standing on the Truth of God and His Word.

Indeed, this agrees with the Paul's analogy of ceremonial cleansing which is to present a blameless bride to Himself. What is the nature of cleansing? It is to wash dirt away from the body.

Hence, the thrust of love in marriage is mainly aimed for the husbands to sanctify and cleanse their wives. What does this look like?

- Sanctification is a husband standing on the Truth of God's Word and and directing her on that path in order that she may become holy.
- Cleansing is to point out to her, with words, the dirtiness of the things of the world and to help her rid herself of those things to become blameless.

This all goes back to the garden where Adam's sin is one of lack of action and diverting blame. The husbands call is in direct opposition of what Adam did. The call is to love and thus sanctify by firmly standing on the Truth while directing her path to be holy. And to love and thus assist in her cleansing by pointing out and helping to removing sin of where she has gone astray so she becomes blameless.

Obviously, this is in stark contrast to how sacrificial love is typically used in churchianity where a husband is a "servant leader" or rather a slave to his wife's feelings.

Women cannot love a man the way he wants to be loved

July 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

You have heard that it was said, ‘Women cannot love a man the way he wants to be loved.’ But I say to you that this secular wisdom is both a deception and misattribution.

The reason that it is a deception is that the modern man, according to feminists, is to be brought up in the role of a woman. Men are taught to be like women, and women are taught to be like men. Men were also taught to want to be loved because women want to be loved. According to the Scriptures in Ephesians 5 and 1 Peter 3, men, especially in a marriage relationship, are to be respected. The desire of love from a woman as a man is a deception.

Likewise, this is also a fundamental misattribution because the unconditional love is part of the human condition that a man needs is only a love that God can meet. No woman can love a man according to what he needs in his soul because she is not God. Placing this burden on a wife will inevitably leave any man disappointed and disillusioned. A man must seek love that only God can give from God Himself through the spiritual disciplines of Scripture, prayer, meditation, fasting, and so on.

Therefore, this secular wisdom is false in a Christian world view.

 Written in the vein of Sermon on the Mount.

There is no grace and mercy without justice and why men are leaders

July 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting things I've meditated on in the past was the context of the Old Testament with respect to the New Testament. I've posted along these lines before, but I really didn't understand it until now.

> There is no grace and mercy without justice.

If you examine the Old Testament as a whole, you will come to the conclusion that after the fall of Adam and Eve the whole process results in the giving of the Law of Moses. Specifically, it is about Israel's successes and failures in regard to the Law. When Israel failed to follow God's law, God swiftly punished the lawbreakers according to their deeds. This led to many occupations by surround countries as well as foreign exile. When Israel turned back to God, He redeemed them.

This is the entire back drop for everything that occurs in the New Testament. The call, always, has been to repent and turn to God. However, humans are a wayward people and easily get deceived or lured into turning away from God after they have turned back to Him. Israel had a long history of knowing the consequences for their evil actions. Hence, now, Jesus' ministry of grace and mercy and ultimately reconciliation can operate to full effect.

When teaching young children, it is important to first teach them justice before grace and mercy. For example, if only grace and mercy are given to a child that makes mistakes, they do not learn that there are negative consequences for their actions even if you explain it. Hence, they grow up to be spoiled kids who continually get into trouble. There are no consequences for their actions. They have never learned a lesson about it.

This is why the concept of justice is so important for all Christians — and in reality all humans — to learn and to understand. There are consequences for the way we behave. There are consequences for all of the actions, no matter how small, that we take. All of the small things add up who you are. They become your character.

There is where grace and mercy come in. You know you screwed up. You know you deserve justice. You know there are negative consequences for your actions. However, we are able to receive grace and mercy from God for our sins. Indeed, this is the context of repentance as a whole. You cannot repent without knowing that you screwed up, you should receive punishment for your behavior, and you desire and actually turn away from screwing up again. This is why victims and perpetrators all matters, especially in the context of abortion.

The early Church had instances where they didn't understand the totality of the concepts of justice meted with grace in the context of circumcision, food sacrificed to idols, and freedom in Christ. It was easy to "hold someone to the Law of Moses" based on the culture at the time while not understanding that it had been fulfilled by Jesus. However, it was easy to fall into the trap of cheap grace as Paul describes in Romans.

> Romans 6:1 What shall we say then? Are we to continue in sin so that grace may increase? 2 May it never be! How shall we who died to sin still live in it? 3 Or do you not know that all of us who have been baptized into Christ Jesus have been baptized into His death? 4 Therefore we have been buried with Him through baptism into death, so that as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we too might walk in newness of life. 5 For if we have become [a]united with Him in the likeness of His death, certainly we shall also be [b]in the likeness of His resurrection, 6 knowing this, that our old [c]self was crucified with Him, in order that our body of sin might be [d]done away with, so that we would no longer be slaves to sin; 7 for he who has died is [e]freed from sin.

In today's modern churchianity there is an overabundance of cheap grace being handed out. Money to many in the pulpit has become more important than repentance. Inversion of values and not offending women is more important than exhortation of the Truth. The gospel is not the gospel without understanding justice in the context of grace.

Why men are called to be leaders of the family and Church

I believe this is another reason why men are called to be leaders in both the Church and family.

It's fairly well known that men tend to have a strong sense of justice. That's why men can be easily prone to legalism. However, this strong sense of justice is the building block for truly understanding the nature of grace and mercy. It is imperative that grace and mercy be meted out only after someone has understood that they have done wrong and have repented for it.

Indeed, womens' sin nature is rooted in ignoring or brushing off consequences for actions. Women tend to have a very difficult time correcting or rebuking others because they do not like to be confrontational. They do not like to call out the sin in others. This is where the relational impact of empathy backfires because feelings are placed as importdant over Truth. This often leads to women criticizing men as being too judgmental, without understanding how the backdrop of justice leads to mercy and grace.

This is the precise duty of love that husbands are called to in the marriage relationship:

> Hence, the thrust of love in marriage is mainly aimed for the husbands to sanctify and cleanse their wives. What does this look like?
> - Sanctification is a husband standing on the Truth of God's Word and and directing her on that path in order that she may become holy.
> - Cleansing is to point out to her, with words, the dirtiness of the things of the world and to help her rid herself of those things to become blameless.
> This all goes back to the garden where Adam's sin is one of lack of action and > diverting blame. The husbands call is in direct opposition of what Adam did. The call is to love and thus sanctify by firmly standing on the Truth while directing her path to be holy. And to love and thus assist in her cleansing by pointing out and helping to removing sin of where she has gone astray so she becomes blameless.

> Obviously, this is in stark contrast to how sacrificial love is typically used in churchianity where a husband is a “servant leader” or rather a slave to his wife’s feelings.

I believe that this along with the fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest are two of the reasons why God has called men to be the leaders of the Church and family. Men are better equipped to handle the down and dirty and especially difficult aspects of relationships that make them successful.

Sexual needs

August 2, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to build off BGR's post 6 ways a wife can understand her husband's sexual needs.

First, in Jewish culture and in the OT, sex is a wife's right the husband must give her.

> Exodus 21:10 If he takes to himself another woman, he may not reduce her [j]food, her clothing, or her conjugal rights. 11 If he will not do these three things for her, then she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money.

Generally speaking, the main points are backward from the culture that the Bible describes. I've posted this several times before, but I'll bring it up again since I haven't talked about it within the past year.

> In Jewish law, sex is not considered shameful, sinful or obscene. Sex is not thought of as a necessary evil for the sole purpose of procreation. Although sexual desire comes from the yetzer ra (the evil impulse), it is no more evil than hunger or thirst, which also come from the yetzer ra. Like hunger, thirst or other basic instincts, sexual desire must be controlled and channeled, satisfied at the proper time, place and manner. But when sexual desire is satisfied between a husband and wife at the proper time, out of mutual love and desire, sex is a mitzvah.
> Sex is permissible only within the context of a marriage. In Judaism, sex is not merely a way of experiencing physical pleasure. It is an act of immense significance, which requires commitment and responsibility. The requirement of marriage before sex ensures that sense of commitment and responsibility. Jewish law also forbids sexual contact short of intercourse outside of the context of marriage, recognizing that such contact will inevitably lead to intercourse.
> Sex should only be experienced in a time of joy. Sex for selfish personal satisfaction, without regard for the partner's pleasure, is wrong and evil. A man may never force his wife to have sex. A couple may not have sexual relations while drunk or quarreling. Sex may never be used as a weapon against a spouse, either by depriving the spouse of sex or by compelling it. It is a serious offense to use sex (or lack thereof) to punish or manipulate a spouse.
> Sex is the woman's right, not the man's. A man has a duty to give his wife sex regularly and to ensure that sex is pleasurable for her. He is also obligated to watch for signs that his wife wants sex, and to offer it to her without her asking for it. The woman's right to sexual intercourse is referred to as onah, and it is one of a wife's three basic rights (the others are food and clothing), which a husband may not reduce. The Talmud specifies both the quantity and quality of sex that a man must give his wife. It specifies the frequency of sexual obligation based on > the husband's occupation, although this obligation can be modified in the ketubah (marriage contract). A man may not take a vow to abstain from sex for an extended period of time, and may not take a journey for an extended period of time, because that would deprive his wife of sexual relations. In addition, a husband's consistent refusal to engage in sexual relations is grounds for compelling a man to divorce his wife, even if the couple has already fulfilled the halakhic obligation to procreate.

> Although sex is the woman's right, she does not have absolute discretion to withhold it from her husband. A woman may not withhold sex from her husband as a form of punishment, and if she does, the husband may divorce her without paying the substantial divorce settlement provided for in the ketubah.

As you can see, Paul adheres to similar concepts 1 Corinthians 7, even with the Messiah having already come.

This brings up the question: so how did we get to where we are today where wives are withholding sex from their husbands?

One of the big ones is the devaluing of children. Now, virtually every Christian agrees that abortion is bad. However, I believe the Catholic Church takes the right stance of birth control. Why do we need to "limit" or "plan" for children if children are good? I've heard lots of excuses from Christians on this, but I don't buy them. Sex in marriage is inextricably linked to children, and changing that by human means leads to devaluing what is good.

Another is the removal or cutting down of husband authority. Obviously, a wife looks up to a husband as the authority. When men are viewed as chumps in culture and told they have no authority, their wives don't desire sex from them.

A rebellious heart, attitude, and a lack of submission is another. Somewhat building off the demonization of masculinity, but another different point altogether. And as always, in rich societies there is lots of selfishness. I'm sure there's more, but I can't think of them at the moment.

Reasoning rarely works with women. Arguing definitely does not work with women. There are some sparse examples of women who heed the correction of the Scriptures and do not withhold sex. They end up becoming closer and more receptive to their husbands because sex brings them closer together. It makes the husband much more readily honor and consider her in everything.

For husbands, this sets the right mind frame. Sex is something that you give your wife for her pleasure, children, and mutual enjoyment. It's not something you beg for. It's not something you whine about. Often times, attitude makes all of the difference, as confidence is an aphrodisiac to women.

The unique fallacy and why judgments matter

August 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Andy Stanley (pastor) had a very interesting quote that reveals wisdom, even though he believes in the "mutual submission" heresy in marriage. I came across it when reviewing one of his singles and relationship lectures a few months ago. I think it's also in one of his books.

> Do you know why people are prone to make such foolish moral decisions? Because something always whispers to us that our situations are unique: Nobody has ever felt this way before.
> But there is nothing unique about your circumstances, your emotions, your desires, and your passions. And as long as you deceive yourself into thinking that you are the first to feel what you are feeling, you will chase those feelings to the neglect of wisdom.

In my opinion, Andy doesn't take the quote to its full logical conclusion.

The reason why broad sweeping generalizations can be made that are true in most circumstances is because behavior is predictable. Why is human behavior predictable? Although each human is unique, our God-embodied creation is virtually similar. This means that when we revert to base behavior that trends come out of the woodwork, especially over a large sample size of the population.

For example, humans are driven by incentives and disincentives. When incentives are destroyed and disincentives rise, a population trend occurs. Divorce is one such example. Incentives to marry are virtually nil for men. Husbands are scorned publicly. Fathers are not respected. Men are the butt of jokes. Disincentives have risen sharply. No fault divorce. Wife custody of children. Men can be made a hostage in their own home. Is there any other reason why divorce rates soar, and many men feel that marriage is a bad choice even though they are all unique? No.

Character is consistent behavior rooted in a moral or immoral foundation. If you know the character of any person, you can reliably and accurately predict what type of behavior when placed any random circumstances. After all, there is nothing new under the sun.

These generalizations that we use are judgments. This includes different types of profiling and bias. None of these are bad things in themselves. After all, context matters.

> Matthew 7:1 Judge not, that ye be not judged. 2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. 3 And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Jesus does not say don't judge. Jesus says to judge by these standards:

- Use the same measure by which you are judging on yourself.

- Don’t be a hypocrite. Look at your own faults first.

Of course, these standards are consistent with the overarching theme of the Law which Jesus expounds upon:

> Mark 12:29 Jesus answered, “The foremost is, ‘Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord; 30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.’ 31 The second is this, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ There is no other commandment greater than these.”

Now, it’s important to understand that the judgments we use in certain situations are not always going to be the same. Granting grace and mercy to those who have wronged you is much different than in choosing a spouse.

To those we desire to marry, we hold to a higher standard. For example, what I look for in evaluating a potential wife Part 2 discuss various Scriptural, character, and behavior concerns that culminate in a wife preparing herself for or not for marriage. In order to adhere to the teachings of Jesus, it is important to realize that you too should obey to the Scripture, cultivate good character, and good behavior. However, this is quite obvious.

Women are generally unhappy when men employ ‘standards’ for a wife for marriage because it feels judgmental and/or it removes them from consideration. The same is true of male white knights. This is simply blustering that you should ignore. A potential wife is literally part of yourself, and it deserves amply consideration of you and your mission because she is going to be your helpmeet. Anyone that tells you otherwise does not have your interests in Christ in mind.

If you hold yourself to high standards in Christ you should also be looking for a spouse who holds themselves to high standards in Christ. It’s prudent. Its discerning. Don’t let anyone convince you otherwise, or you will probably pay the price down the road.

The flaws of liberals and conservatives

August 8, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Random thought for the day as I don't have time for a full post.

In the vein of there is no grace and mercy without justice and why men are leaders.

- Liberals/progressives/feminists have a warped sense of a justice. Good is bad, and bad is good. Irrational.
- Conservatives know justice, but don't understand grace or mercy.
- Neither groups care about repentance or the heart. Liberals destroy you if you apologize. Conservatives overtly accept the apology but still covertly hold it against you.

TL;DR. Politics are a sham, as we already knew.

Feminism is an inferiority complex and white knights are enablers

Donal's Beta farming led me on an interesting tangent which identifies the nature of feminism.

> My theory is that the present "Beta farms" inside modern churches is a natural result of women influencing matters to reassure their native insecurity. This insecurity is something that I believe most men have no idea about, and even those who have some inkling of its existence usually fail to grasp its extent. I have covered this before, but to briefly sum it up:
> Women are far and away more insecure in their lives than men.
> Much of this insecurity comes from the gap in physical prowess between men and women. We men are much more capable of defending ourselves and imposing our will on our environment than women are- at least at the individual level. But whatever its source, it has a profound effect on female behavior. Women are constantly, and often at an unconscious or subconscious level, trying to alter their environment to make it feel more secure.
> I believe that this behavior is responsible for the "Beta farms" in modern churches. As women were given more power inside the church and its environs, they began to exert their influence. This influence was used to shape how men were raised, and what they were supposed to be as Christians. The goal, whether realized or not, was to create the hapless Beta nice guys who populate most churches these days.
> Why? Simple- "Betas" are far less threatening to women. They are safer and do things on women's behalf. So women reinforce this system to create more and more of these "safe" men. As long as they have any degree of power in a church, they will keep it this way. [Of course, this has the effect of leaving those men as unattractive, but female nature is known for wanting two opposites at once.] If we want to shut down the "Beta farms," we need to reassert masculine control over the church. Otherwise this wicked cultivation will continue, and likely only get worse.

And from one of my comments:

"I think it's one reason that it derived from other factors.

The primary example is the garden of Eden. Womens' sin nature is one of of discontent and envy; they have wanted to be like God and/or like men since the beginning. Power grabbing is part of this, and it is that part that relates to insecurity.

The nature of the hypergamous beast is that it's never satisfied, which you see played out in both secular culture and churchianity. In particular, women think that power grabbing and leadership positions will ‘fulfill’ them because they give into envy and discontent. We see that giving into sin only leads to a gratuitous attempt for more when they find out it doesn’t satisfy.

The way that ‘betas’ play into this is that they act as validation and placation when poor decisions are made (grrrl power). Feminism is essentially an insecurity complex in women. Churchianity perpetuates this ever-growing insecurity complex within women, and white knights are enablers of this dysfunction.”

Take home points:

- Feminism is an inferiority complex in women, stemming from discontent and envy.
- Women try to satisfy discontent and envy with powerful positions, partners, and possessions. This only leads to more discontent and envy.
- White knights are enablers of the inferiority complex in women.
- White knights provide validation of sinful desires, which enable sinful behaviors. Then they excuse the sinful behaviors as ‘not their fault.’ (see: women in leadership positions in the Church, fat acceptance, abortion excusing, and so on).

Non-physical attributes of humans

August 16, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There are some interesting cases about humans that all but assure that there are non-physical attributes in humans. This is the “brain” of a civil servant who had a low IQ but was still fully functional, conscious, and lived a normal life with a wife and family.

http://imgur.com/k0rY9cf

Consciousness is clearly not an entity that is intrinsic to certain structures of the brain.

Going by what the Scriptures discuss regarding the soul, I’d say it’s likely that our consciousness and sense of being are merely two aspects of what we would call our ‘eternal soul.’ Although they are housed in our physical body and need our physical bodies to operate, they are not limited by the physical structures of the body.

A very interesting reminder that there are things beyond materialism or the physical. One could even say meta-physical.

10 Christian Dating Principles That Could Transform Lives

August 16, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Shared to me through facebook.

I was oddly surprised by the list as it's decent, even if still white knighty. Still, the commentary was decent on each point, with solid disclaimers against rule-y legalism that most Christians seem to have toward 'dating' or whatever.

> 1.) Stop looking for "the one."
> 2.) Date with a trajectory toward marriage.
> 3.) Don't date non-Christians.
> 4.) Have a list of values and don't compromise them.
> 5.) Don't "shotgun" date.
> 6.) It's OK to WANT to get married.
> 7.) It's OK NOT to get married.
> 8.) Have a community of Christians around you … and LISTEN to them.
> 9.) Pursue a pure mind.
> 10.) Don't date if you are dependent on someone for things only God can provide.

Unfortunately, there wasn't very much Scripture involved in writing this post. And by Scripture I mean a husband and wife knowing what their roles and responsibilities are in marriage and the qualities they should be looking for in the opposite sex, including running a household, sex, and family. Of course, this type of discussion would rapidly devolve into arguing about love, respect, submission, sex, contraception, and other "divisive" issues.

There's only really the 'generic' Christian stuff like don't date a non-Christian and have a pure mind. I'm not against generally 'wise' principles and Christian concepts, but it seems like most self-called Christians like to invent their own stuff at the expensive of overtly heeding the vast wisdom that is already laid out for us in Scripture.

The same is true of "book culture" which is prevalent in Evangelical Christianity (and I'm sure it's not just limited to that). "Book culture" is the tendency for people to read books about the Bible and interpretations about the Bible and spiritual things instead of reading the Bible itself. There is a reason why I rarely read any 'spiritual books' aside from the Bible and classic commentaries on the Bible including the early Church fathers.

It's easy to be deceived. Like all those books and movies about heaven. And let's not get started on movies like Fireproof, Courageous, the War Room, and so on. Deception is a very real pitfall when you start devaluing the Word of God, even for other so-called 'Christian materials.'

Evangelical culture in a nutshell

August 17, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Feeriker had an interesting comment on the previous post on 10 Christian Dating Principles That Could Transform Lives.

> "The same is true of "book culture" which is prevalent in Evangelical Christianity (and I'm sure it's not just limited to that). "Book culture" is the tendency for people to read books about the Bible and interpretations about the Bible and spiritual things instead of reading the Bible itself."
> I'm almost tempted at this point to say that "Book Culture" is Evangelical Christianity. Almost all evangelical doctrine and practice seems to derive from one-off books by popular theologians and authors whose works only tangentially touch on actual Scripture. Why is this?
> Short answer: the typical congregant of an evangelical church tends to be very poorly educated in general and seriously lacking in the fundamental critical thinking skills necessary to process Scriptural texts' plain meaning. "Book Culture" is a way of making the Bible tasty and digestible for people too spiritually and intellectually immature to eat solid spiritual food.
> TL;DR version: [WHINE]"the Bible is too hard to understand! [/WHINE]

Certainly true, to a large extent.

If we were coming up with one liners to represent modern churchianity they would be:

- Church: "Are you not entertained?!"
- Church: "You get grace. And you get grace. And you get grace… everyone gets grace!"
- Church: "Jesus wants you to be happy!"
- Christian: "Have you read that new book on heaven? It opened my eyes!"
- Christian: "God told me to [insert something about their feelings]"

Any of my other readers have some good ones?

The feminization of Christianity

August 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Coastal posted the follow-up link that Art of Manliness did on the feminization of Christianity.

> The Feminization of Christianity

It's a good read overall.

Mainly, their contention is that it's traceable back to the Romanticization of the relationship between Jesus and His bride (which leads to the "Jesus is my boyfriend" culture). This originated in the Catholic Church somewhere around 1000-1300 or so, and spread to Protestant Christianity as well. In particular,

- The notion that (agape) love is a feeling.
- The impression that (eros) love should be applied to the relationship of Jesus and His bride.

I think they did a good job tracing the overall roots, but they didn't go exhaustive as they could've. The Renaissance period definitely had a large effect on the romanticization of not just religion but also culture.

Generally, what we know is that the culture invades the Church. Even the Catholic Church which has all male priesthood has issues with invasion of the culture. It's not necessarily a symptom of "our" culture or rich cultures, which I had previously thought. The feminization is merely a symptom of allowing (any) cultural aspects to deter us from adhering to sound doctrine.

Food porn

August 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm going to take a step back and explore idolatry from a different perspective.

The most prevailing theory now in obesity research is the concept of food reward.

Basically, the concept of food reward is based around the hedonic pleasure derived from taste. This hedonic pleasure derived from certain foods short circuits the brain, much like an addiction, and encourages increased food intake. The main offenders are foods that have increased sugar/starch, salt, and fat in certain proportions which send signals to the brain to continue eating.

Potato chips are one of the best examples because of the prevalence of starch (the potato itself), salt (copious amounts), and roasted or baked in fat (usually vegetable oils). They are a notoriously addictive food, and there are even marketing tactics around this fact. Lays — "Bet you can't eat just one."

Just as marketing is fixated around the sexualization of men and women, so too the food industry is fixated around making food as addictive as possible. After all, they want you to buy more because that means more money. This is one of the inherently negative aspects that all capitalistic societies[1] manifest: greed.

Gluttony is simply one form of how greed manifests. This is why obesity is ugly.

Miscegenation, sanctification, imperatives, and principles

August 27, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

FYI: Miscegenation = interracial breeding and/or marriage.

There's been some good discussion over at Cane's on miscegenation (mixed race marriage/interbreeding) in Christian Nationalism versus Zombie Nationalism and Nothing Jew under the Sun. Here's one of the main thrusts:

> In case my father ever reads this I should address the stumbling block put before us by Progressives who are sexually immoral and revilers and swindlers. It seems that every-other piece of media produced (not to mention the lives of our celebrities in sports and entertainment) sells the idea of interracial sex (especially of the black man and white woman variety) as if it were the pinnacle of human achievement.
> We ought to recognize that it is a taunt aimed at take our minds off the real and focus on the worldly. It is false doctrine, a corrupt idol meant to stand in the place of the reality of unity in Christ, but which actually has nothing to do with the spirit and is full of spite. Progressives live according to the flesh, and they are portraying what should not be for others who live according to the flesh. It hits a lot of notes for them:
> - It flouts the spirit of the law of God to keep separate those things that ought not be brought together (though their standard is wrong because it is old)
> - It offends people who they hate and
> - It elicits revelry from other sexually immoral revilers and swindlers
> Perhaps what I'm describing is difficult to comprehend… An analogy to the Progressive and materialist idol of interracial sex and marriage would be cannibalism. Jesus said at the Last Supper that this bread is His body and this wine is His blood, and we are to eat and drink it as if it were so*[1]*. The material idolatry of that reality is cannibalism. Have you noticed how rampant vampires, werewolves, zombies and other cannibals are these days? How many of those pieces of media feature interracial sex? All of them?
> So if anyone is not in Christ and still of the flesh and the world and still blind to the truth: Do not partake in the eucharist, do not eat people, and do not have have sex with someone of another race.

Cane in part likes to write cryptically sometimes, which I understand because it's fun to play around with wording to add multiple layers to a statement. However, the main thrust of his post is understanding the concept of sanctification (which I commented as TL;DR).

I talked about sanctification before in the leadership of a husband. Paul uses the word in Ephesians 5 to reference the sanctification role that Christ plays with the Church. The word literally means to “set apart” which to us means “becoming holy.” This is a constant theme throughout the Scriptures. The Jews and the surrounding culture are one example of sanctification (don’t marry foreign women, take foreign idols, etc.). The priesthood are another example. Jesus and the Church are yet another example.

Because we live in a culture that is inundated with liberalism and progressivism, it’s easy for the Church to become compromised by the culture. Look no further than how feminism has infected and disrupted the Church through divorce, broken families, inverted headship and submission, and husbands being slaves to a wife’s feelings with the power of Church backing.

Miscegenation is an interesting topic because of how progressives hold it up as an idol. Many people when they hear of it think of it as a good thing. The other crowd when they hear of it thinks that it is a a bad thing. Both of these are completely wrong.

The very nature of “good” and “bad” here is of supreme importance. If you default to either you have already been washed and indoctrinated by cultural mores. By claiming “good” or “bad” to something, we assert that there is a moral principle or imperative that is being violated. Miscegenation can only be “good” if it is “moral.” This is how something relatively innocuous is elevated to idol status. (Although most white liberals ironically don’t like it — good for you but not for me).

Goodness and therefore morality are something that is determined by God. It is neither “good” nor “moral” to marry interracially. How do we know this? The Scriptures give us those principles.

> 2 Corinthians 6:14 Do not be [j]bound together with unbelievers; for what partnership have righteousness and lawlessness, or what fellowship has light with darkness? 15 Or what harmony has Christ with [k]Belial, or [l]what has a believer in common with an unbeliever? 16 Or what agreement has the temple of God with idols? For we are the temple of the living God; just as God said, “I will dwell in them and walk among them; And I will be their God, and they shall be My people. 17 “Therefore, come out from their midst and be separate,” says the Lord. “And do not touch what is unclean; And I will welcome you. 18 “And I will be a father to you, And you shall be sons and daughters to Me,” Says the Lord Almighty.

The principle that the Scriptures gives us regarding “miscegenation” is that of believers and unbelievers. All who are in Christ are of the same mind, body, and spirit. Therefore, what actually is “good” and “moral” is to marry a believer instead of unbeliever.

The one exception from 1 Corinthians 7 is that a believer should stay with an unbeliever post-marriage convert if the unbeliever consents to live with them. Right there we get another example of sanctification.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not

> [f]divorce her. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O husband, whether you will save your wife?

We can see that it's Paul saying this (not the Lord), but the example he gives is compelling. If there is unity in the marriage (the unbeliever consents to live), the believer should agree. The influence of Christ in the believers life is a sanctifying presence, which can win their unbelieving spouse and children to the Lord.

It also follows that miscegenation from a worldly perspective is a deceptive false idol based on human ideas of what is good and bad. In reference to the Scriptures, it is simply one thing that falls under a believer's freedom. Miscegenation is one example, but it one that is so ingrained in our culture that we take it for granted and don't question it.

It's very easy for Christians to get caught up in "imperatives" such as good or bad, which nullify the believer's freedom. In doing so, they revert to Pharisaical legalism, which much of modern Christianity (or should I say churchianity) is embroiled in. Don't do this. Do this. Don't do that. Do that. This is not unlike liberalism, feminism, and progressivism which all claim a moral high ground for determining what is good and bad while flaunting their own holiness in your face.

We are to be prudent about those who are immature and weaker in the faith (1 Cor 8, 1 Cor 10). Likewise, things such as miscegenation are similar. It may be wise/prudent/discerning to avoid being in an interracial marriage depending on circumstances. It may be wise/prudent/discerning to be in an interracial marriage depending on circumstances. However, our principles must first and foremost be built on a good foundation. And that foundation is Christ.

> It is my observation that most Christians live by both indicative and imperative, but have them all jumbled up which makes for no principles; no foundation. ("Status-signaling" is living by false indicatives.) It is easy then for the ungodly to undermine the principles and also slip false indicatives and imperatives into our minds just as idols were smuggled, and rationalized into, the OT Temples.

Cane summarizes in his post to good effect.

Women are as visual as men

August 29, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I found this comment by Chris Stevenson on Heartise's article on female porn interesting.

> Another venue for women's porn addiction are the various Law & Order SVU, Criminal Minds and NCIS type shows. All of them to one degree or another deal with the kind of rape and violence and even deviant imagery that appeal to women's potential for degeneracy. Mark Harmon's genius has made his NCIS show the most popular. He knows the formula very well with the mentality of a drug dealer.
> Women are actually the more visual creature. Window shopping and the nuances of fashion and decorating, etc. They assess men visually to a degree that is almost creepy when you think about it. When they have sex they want to close their eyes even desiring a darkened room as they can turn off this dominant sense and release. Men are mistakenly called more visual as we assess attraction by physical characteristic, however there is a strong intellectual and emotional aspect to our desires. We think about things a lot more and are aroused by them this way. When men view porn they are aroused by images, but they also follow the act. I have listened to men talk about porn and there is a lot of narration about the story. In fact some of the most appealing pornography for men has themes that men can mentally participate in. Women are looking to project their already hardwired fantasies on a scene. It doesn't necessarily validate them, but rather release some sort of energy or craving that is deep down without an avenue or Alpha to manifest it in reality. Since the porn for women is not real, it leaves them wanting and this only elevates the degeneracy as a thirsty person can drink a river.
> The takeaway is that women need a form of dominance, or leadership, that allows them to submit, be fulfilled and not spiral into degeneracy. Many times I have set boundaries for women in terms of what I will not do and that they should not. It is almost as if the man must be a limiting factor to protect them from themselves. It starts with giving them what they need in a strong culture.
> A lot of sluts get involved in the degenerate acts with players as the lifestyle never gives them what they really need which is not commitment but the dominance of one man. Once they start that hunger or thirst it is as if they are ruined for life.

Obviously, men are primarily attracted to female beauty. Women have a variety of different attraction vectors (notably, PSALM — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, money) that play into attraction.

Although the commenter suggests that women are more visual than men, it's probably more accurate to say that women are as visual than men but different. Women's version of looks tends to manifest differently, mainly in terms of imagination.

Men and women are similar in that a man dressed sharply in a fitted suit or a naked ripped man stimulates her primal desires just as much as men are turned on by a woman in a beautiful dress or a well proportioned naked or seductive female. However, the factor that is probably least talked about is literary pornography which women are most apt to consume. This is not necessarily about “looks” per se as looks are only an means. Rather, the 5 senses (looks, smell, touch, taste, and hearing) are a medium to stimulate the imagination, and the imagination is directly tied to a woman’s hypergamy.

In plain English: visual stimulation targets a man’s sex drive, while visual stimulation targets a woman’s hypergamy.

Warning signs

August 31, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Some of you may recall the Jenny Erikson saga that made its way across the manosphere about 3 years ago. This was not exclusive to just the Christian aside of it. Dalrock had a post, ROK had a post, and many other blogs posted about it. Even the non-Christian sites destroyed her on it. I posted on it as well in she didn't test the spirits.

Basically, what happened was that a conservative Christian mother of 2 was married for about 13 years. For some reason, she decided to blow up her family. She also claimed God gave her peace about it. So she was discussing it with some church women that she was going to divorce her husband. It eventually got back to the pastor, and the pastor went to her first. She went ahead with the divorce anyway, and then her Church excommunicated her. She posted the whole saga on her blog, including the Church excommunication letter and made light of it. (Googling will find it easily)

I was reminded of the scenario a few weeks ago when someone posted on Dalrock's blog that Leif Erikson had eventually remarried. Anyway, as I was doing some digging I found this interview gem which was about 2.5 years prior to her divorce. Read it if you want to get the whole picture, but it shows many warning signs of things to look out for that likely played a large role in her eventual divorce. Here are some of the gems:

> I got married to my best friend at 19 because we didn't want to live in sin while we spent countless years being engaged. I graduated high school at 17, and after 3 years of 20 unit semesters and summer school, I graduated from Point Loma Nazarene University. I graduated with my B.A. while 5 months pregnant with Thing 1 because birth control doesn't always work; and we bought our first home when we got a good deal from a relative.
> Like I said above, I got married very young. I was 19, and I married my best friend in the whole world. Our wedding was perfect and beautiful and shortly thereafter, we (unexpectedly!) got pregnant with Thing 1. I finished my B.A., but decided to take some time out to be a mommy. Four years later, we decided to have another baby, and we were blessed with Thing 2.

Best friends and birth control are concerning. Women have this sort of fetish where they want to marry a man that is their best friend for some reason. There's nothing 'bad' per se about it, but it's elevated to idol level in many cases. While not a Catholic, I think birth control is something to be concerned about because of the lessened value on children and personal selfishness in most cases.

So is the Thing 1 and Thing 2 which we'll get into as well.

> I affectionately call my daughters Thing 1 and Thing 2 because I got some really nasty hate mail in my early days of punditry. I couldn't stand people I didn't know > saying they wanted my daughters to die in my presence, while using their precious names. Ever since then, I've become ferociously protective of their names.

The explanation of Thing 1 and Thing 2 is one of weakness and insecurity. The irony is that she didn't even have to be in the 'realm of politics' but doesn't want to give it up in favor of her children. We can see where her real priorities lie: her career.

> Being a conservative means being for equal opportunity. The amazing thing about our country is that it doesn't matter where you came from, it matters what you do with you life. Our current President proves it – you can come from anything to become anyone.
> I view my role as a voice. Too many of us kept quiet for too long, and it will take generations to undo all the damage. Sometimes, all you need in order to move forward is to know that you're not alone, and I try to provide that. I'm no one special; I wasn't trained for this, I don't have a prestigious pedigree, and I know what it's like to work and raise a family. Trust me, if I can fight against government oppression, anyone can. And I'll be right there alongside you.

She's actually a liberal under the guise of being conservative. Not that politics are an accurate judge of character, but as I noted liberals are farther off the mark.

> 5. Name some of your favorites: Books, movies, musical artists, vacation spots, holidays and a couple miscellaneous items of your choice.
> As for books, I have to admit that I'm a romance novel reader. I so seldom get to read these days that I love knowing that the main characters are going to end up happy together. There's enough bad stuff on the five o'clock news, and I consider reading my escape. In fact, I call most of my silly novels "mental margaritas."

Women and their literary porn. Huge red flag. Now you know why I had to get out the women are as visual as men post on romance novels being mommy porn prior to this one.

No mention of the Scriptures. In hindsight, it's obvious that the Scriptures do not play a large role in her life as she actively went against them when she divorced about 2.5 years later.

> 8. Piggybacking on the last question: You're a busy stay-at-home Mom with 2 young children who still finds time to stay informed and involved in conservative activism. How do you do it?
> Oh goodness! First of all, the laundry doesn't always get done. But mainly, I make my kids a part of what I'm doing. If there's an evening that I can't get them to settle down for 20 seconds, I let them record the intro to my show. They also know when Mommy has an important interview and are usually pretty good > about sitting in front of the TV when I need them to. J

> My parents help me out a lot too, and I am so blessed to have them nearby. Thankfully, it seems they've been waiting their whole lives to become grandparents, and I openly admit that I take advantage of their adoration of my children as much as possible.
> Of course, I couldn't do anything without my amazing husband, Leif. He is constantly working his schedule around mine, telling me how much he loves me along the way. He's my brainstorming team, my shoulder to cry on, and my hand to hold. He's fantastic and amazing. The end.

And now we see the real Jenny. She's running the show and life is about her. Her husband is her helpmeet. No surprise that wives get dissatisfied with a helpmeet "husband."

> Well, this is a pretty deep question, huh? I look at conservatism as a way to protect Christianity. There has never been a liberal/socialist/communist society that has not tried to stamp out religion. One of the reasons I'm so committed to restoring the founding principles of America is to protect religious freedom. God gave me the gift of being able to string words together, and I do what I do to protect those human rights that He gave us. It would be an insult to God to do otherwise.

As noted earlier, the irony is that she's a liberal under the guise of conservative. When looking at it through that lens, her real "God" is politics.

> 10. Name three goals that would be on your "Bucket List."
> 1- Watch my children grow up to be happy with whatever they decide to do with their lives.
> 2- Be close to my eventual grandchildren and spoil them rotten.
> 3- Dance with my husband on our 75th wedding anniversary – July 13, 2077.

Oops. The real zinger. I guess feelings change?

All in all, I don't think any one of these signs in isolation is necessarily something worth writing home about except for literary porn and her marriage revolving around her as the leader. But those two big red flags in conjunction with several yellow flags definitely adds up into a picture of narcissism, and the lack of Scriptural focus and prayer means it is a train careening out of control.

Eventually the marriage ended up in divorce, but the warning signs were there.

The same ole feminization of Christianity bluster

September 1, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I figured I'd comment on Rollo's losing my religion simply because it seems like a lot of Christian men are commenting over there. His post is pretty much nothing that we haven't heard before, but since he has a larger platform of audience it reaches many more people than any of our blogs save maybe Dalrock.

Debating the veracity of Christianity with those that deride it as foolish is futile: "Religion is to control the masses," "Religion is belief in some imaginary dude in the sky," "Religion is a business," "Church is for betas," "Religions is blue pill," etc. There's no point in discussing such a topic with those who have already hardened their hearts.

> When I analyze Red Pill principles within social contexts I always have a hard time with religion. It grates on me because I'm of the opinion that one's religious leanings, one's interaction with existence and life, one's consideration of the spiritual, ought to be something personal and private if it's in anyway genuine. As such, and for some, it can be a source of real vulnerability and exploitation which is really nothing new to anyone. It's one thing to be even agnostic and trapped in a Blue Pill world, but it's quite another to have been raised to adulthood in a religious context and coming to terms with having some very deep ego-investments shattered by a new Red Pill awareness.

Rollo is absolutely wrong in this sense. If Christianity is true then nothing is amoral. The heart and the motivations of the heart matter. What you do with Jesus is literally a life changing decision. There is no vacuum to with which to muse on and apply so-called 'red pill' principles. The Truth is indeed the Truth. Human nature is already accurately exposed to us by the Scriptures.

If you are a Christian man and see how the deck is stacked against men and especially Christian men, why would you ever want to be a Christian man?

I've gone over this before, but let me go over this again. I'm not a Christian because I'm in it for the benefits of marrying a Christian woman. I'm not a Christian for the community. I'm not a Christian to do good works. I'm not a Christian to help those in need. I'm not a Christian because my psyche can't handle a world without a God. I'm a Christian because Jesus was raised from the dead.

> 1 Corinthians 15:1 Now I make known to you, brethren, the gospel which I preached to you, which also you received, in which also you stand, 2 by which also you are saved, if you hold fast [a]the word which I preached to you, unless you believed in vain.
> 3 For I delivered to you [b]as of first importance what I also received, that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, 4 and that He was buried, and that He was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures, 5 and that He > appeared to Cephas, then to the twelve. 6 After that He appeared to more than five hundred brethren at one time, most of whom remain until now, but some have fallen asleep; 7 then He appeared to [c]James, then to all the apostles; 8 and last of all, as [d]to one untimely born, He appeared to me also. 9 For I am the least of the apostles, [e]and not fit to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. 10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me did not prove vain; but I labored even more than all of them, yet not I, but the grace of God with me. 11 Whether then it was I or they, so we preach and so you believed.

> 12 Now if Christ is preached, that He has been raised from the dead, how do some among you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, not even Christ has been raised; 14 and if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is vain, your faith also is vain. 15 Moreover we are even found to be false witnesses of God, because we testified [f]against God that He raised [g]Christ, whom He did not raise, if in fact the dead are not raised. 16 For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised; 17 and if Christ has not been raised, your faith is worthless; you are still in your sins. 18 Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. 19 If we have hoped in Christ in this life only, we are of all men most to be pitied.
> 20 But now Christ has been raised from the dead, the first fruits of those who are asleep. 21 For since by a man came death, by a man also came the resurrection of the dead. 22 For as in Adam all die, so also in [h]Christ all will be made alive. 23 But each in his own order: Christ the first fruits, after that those who are Christ's at His coming, 24 then comes the end, when He hands over the kingdom to the God and Father, when He has abolished all rule and all authority and power. 25 For He must reign until He has put all His enemies under His feet. 26 The last enemy that will be abolished is death. 27 For He has put all things in subjection under His feet. But when He says, "All things are put in subjection," it is evident that He is excepted who put all things in subjection to Him. 28 When all things are subjected to Him, then the Son Himself also will be subjected to the One who subjected all things to Him, so that God may be all in all.
> 29 Otherwise, what will those do who are baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why then are they baptized for them? 30 Why are we also in danger every hour? 31 I affirm, brethren, by the boasting in you which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. 32 If [i]from human motives I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus, what does it profit me? If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. 33 Do not be deceived: "Bad company corrupts good morals." 34 Become sober-minded [j]as you ought, and stop sinning; for some have no knowledge of God. I speak this to your shame.

Not losing sight of the veracity of Christianity is why I have a tab at the top on the Evidence of the Resurrection. If Jesus was not raised from the dead, everything all Christians do is in vain.

Paul puts it succinctly : “If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.” That is how we should live if Jesus was not raised, and how all non-Christians live. If Christ is not raised, everything we do is futile. Who even cares about living according to so-called red pill principles (e.g. with the knowledge of human nature) if that is the case? We should all simply live to do whatever we want if that’s the case. There is no truth if that’s the case. If blue pill guy is happy in his blue pill world then more power to him. He could give two craps about your ‘red pill worldview’ and neither one is correct.

Moving on to the Church. As I’ve estimated before, it’s probably the case that only 10-20% of people in the Church [in the West] today are “true believers,” which means they actively attempt to obey Jesus’ commands. Most of the other people are there for reasons I mentioned. They think good works will get them to heaven. They want to do good or help people in need. They think Church is a good community. They feel guilty for what they’ve done and want to associate with ‘good people.’ Or whatever else.

The Church has struggled with infection from culture since the beginning. In regard to the feminization of the Church, it probably arose sometime in 1000-1300 AD. This is nothing new. The problem is that the vast majority of Churches and pastors allow culture and/or money to dictate what they are teaching and preaching to the congregation. Many pastors are none the wiser, and obviously most Christians that go to Church are even more ignorant. The willfully disobedient will always be the willfully disobedient, even if they are wolves in sheep’s clothing.

The thrust of this blog will continue to be about Christianity, masculinity, and rooting out heretical cultural [and feminist] ideas and practices that have seeped their way into the Church. Each Christian man is responsible for his own roles and responsibilities, whatever they may be at the moment. Single or married. Part of the leadership or a servant. Obedience to Christ.

We are to live set apart — sanctified — from the culture because we are in Christ. We are to take off the old and put on the new. We are to love how Jesus loved. We are to uphold and value the things that Jesus valued. Where else can you see a submissive, respectful wife? Where else can you see a husband who is a kind, loving, leader? Where else can you see a strong, confident single man of God who doesn’t bow to the idols of the world?

While many of us do not have influence from leadership positions, we can still lead by example within the Church.

No One Can Harm the Man Who Does Not Harm Himself

September 2, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

No one can harm the man who does not harm himself is actually a treatise by Saint John Chrysostom. The whole thing is here. It's pretty long and I'm not going to get into the whole thing as you can read it yourself if you want to, but the concept is crystal clear alone from the title.

> I will now conclude my discourse by repeating what I said at the beginning, that if any one be harmed and injured he certainly suffers this at his own hands, not at the hands of others even if there be countless multitudes injuring and insulting him: so that if he does not suffer this at his own hands, not all the creatures who inhabit the whole earth and sea if they combined to attack him would be able to hurt one who is vigilant and sober in the Lord. Let us then, I beseech you, be sober and vigilant at all times, and let us endure all painful things bravely that we may obtain those everlasting and pure blessings in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom be glory and power, now and ever throughout all ages. Amen.

What harm can we do to ourselves except by choosing that which is sin?

Although we may be "harmed" in terms of what the world considers harm — we may be persecuted, we may lose it all, we can be poor, we can be impoverished, we can be ridiculed, we can be scorned, we can suffer, we can even suffer from those who call themselves Christians, we can suffer in our relationships and in our marriages — but in reality none of that is what harms us.

This is a true eternal perspective.

Real life Ruths update

September 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

If you recall, a few months ago I posted an example for Christian women on Real life Ruths.

Well, today they are getting married! I'll be off to the wedding after this post goes up.

A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of being able to talk to John separately, Katie a bit separately, both of them together, and sitting down for dinner.

One of the main things that impressed me is how involved the community was in their relationship. Many of the older married men [in the Church] who knew Katie as she was growing up also helped to mentor John in the relationship. John told me about how these men told him Katie's strong points and weak points. Funnily enough, we ended up on the topic of weak points and struggles of women, and in any relationship there are a bunch. However, the older men were very helpful in pointing them out beforehand to John and ways to approach them from a godly perspective. This made his life significantly easier in terms of conflict management and growing the relationship.

One of these in particular was what got them together in a sense. The "Ruth" side of Katie for making every effort to give John opportunities and chances also means she has a fairly committed mind and strong will of sorts. However, the mentors definitely gave John advice on how to handle and manage that, even though they will obviously have to work through that together. All couples have things like that to work through anyway.

I think when we think of family and/or community involvement, it tends to rub us the wrong way in general since even most families are fairly intrusive or condescending rather than desiring the best for us. Families tend to have a "their way or the highway" type of thing rather than approaching it from a mentoring perspective. This has been my [perceived] experience, at least in my current relationship.

I found this example of their relationship to be particularly good in terms of being able to help mentor a burgeoning relationship in a way that benefits both participants, as opposed to applies some sort of adverse load or is overbearing. Obviously, these older men desire what is good for both, so they can point out potential pitfalls along the way based on what they know of each person's character and personality. Then from their experience they can also point out ways to handle it in a godly manner.

In any case, from what I've seen they're a pretty good fit for each other personality-wise, and they're both committed Christians. Let the wedding celebration begin.

The problems with intelligent submission

September 5, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wrote previously that intelligent submission is not required, but I want to look at April's analysis of this. Here is a list of it from her post:

"I Would Not Voluntarily Yield to My Husband's Leadership If:

- He was mentally ill and not in his right mind (psychotic, manic, extremely depressed, suicidal, schizophrenic, hallucinating, etc…)
- He was on medication that was causing him not to be able to think properly or he was high or drunk.
- He had an illness like dementia that caused him not to be in touch with reality.
- He was truly endangering himself, me, or others. (He was doing something very foolish or reckless like asking me to get on the roof when I was 9 months pregnant or saying we shouldn't put the babies in carseats.)
- He was asking me to condone clear sin according to God's Word.
- He demanded that he had absolute authority over me and was to be my primary "lord."
- He was asking me to commit clear sin according to God's Word – (idolatry, immorality, stealing, lying, hatred, greed, criminal activity, lust, unforgiveness, gossip, slander, drunkenness, using illegal drugs, having an abortion, participating in pornography, etc…)
- He was obviously demon possessed.
- He was involved in a major drug/alcohol/gambling/sex addiction and the addiction was in control of his life.
- He was abusing me or our children.
- He was leading me into a false teaching or a cult.
- He wanted me to do or condone something illegal (unless it was to smuggle Bibles into a restricted country or something similar where the law was against sharing Christ).
- He was involved in unrepentant adultery or other major unrepentant sin like habitual lying, a major porn addiction, etc…"

April is right in the way she presents it for her marriage. She is under her husband's authority and clearly spells that out that she is posting with her husband's knowledge and approval. This is the list that they have created for themselves by agreement in their marriage, under the authority of her husband.

However, application of this goes awry when attempting to apply it to other marriages. Some of the comment examples.

One.

> I would add, if he is unapologetically lying. If he cant be trusted, tells lies > frequently, and you are unable to discern truth because of his lies, i would be very careful about submitting to him, until you have asked God for clear understanding of the truth. I didnt know my husband was lying, but my gut kept telling me he wasnt being completely honest. I begged God for truth, and things started to become clear. It was not good.

Two.

> I've been following this blog for a long time, and I have definitely found myself in a position outside of the Biblical submission category. Last night my husband verbally abused me and started to throw something at me[1], but stopped himself, all because I didn't seek him out to see if he needed help moving some boxes and furniture. He said terrible things to me, which I won't repeat here. There's no way that I can begin to submit to him Biblically, as he did these things both to me and in front of our children. All day today he hasn't spoken to me and acts as though nothing happened. He has yet to offer an apology.

Can anyone spot the problem?

Let's look at what the Scriptures say:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

You see, the problem with applying what others have agreed to Biblically in the marriage to another marriage is that it is not necessarily Biblical.

It should be clear that the Scriptures tell wives with husbands that are disobedient to their Word should submit to them and win them with their chaste and respectful behavior and gentle and quiet spirit. However, the commenters are using April's list of things that she agreed with her husband with in her marriage to disobey their husbands in their own marriage.

This is a good example of one of the main problems I have with so-called "intelligent submission." It is apples to oranges because of the differences in marriages of a husband who is a Christ and and has agreed to certain things as opposed to a husband who is not a believer. Wives with unbelievers as husbands use this "intelligent submission" as a way to disobey their husbands, when the goal should be to use their behavior to win their husbands to Christ.

Instead, such wives are using disobedience as revenge for hurt and bitterness rather than taking the road that God tells them in Scripture to use their behavior to win their husbands. There is a reason why Jesus said to love our enemies and pray for those who persecute us. Good behavior under difficult and adverse situations is a huge witness for Christ simply because we don't respond how others think that we will in adverse situations. A husband who is acting disobedient from the word will think it natural if a wife disobeys and lashes back at him for his bad behavior. However, what will a husband think or do if she keeps treating him kindly, with respect, and submission even when he is mean to her? That's how God uses a wife's behavior to win her husband.

The Father wants everyone to come to Him like the prodigal son. Righteous behavior starts with the Christian in the situation. Obedience to God's Word is one way to do that.

This is why Christian wives need to be very careful with what they are teaching. Titus 2 also speaks to older women/wives teaching obedience to husbands to younger women/wives. It's easy to say one thing about your marriage without understanding that it may not apply to another wife's marriage. Unfortunately, sometimes it leads other wives in the wrong direction.

[1] Obviously, if there is a potential [dangerous] situation, a wife should get help from family, friends, and the police if necessary.

Wifely submission is easy

September 6, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Previous posts were on intelligent submission is not required and the problems with intelligent submission.

Ephesians 5 is one of the most word play twisted passages I've ever seen from the Scriptures. All you need is a simple reading of what it says. Read what the words say.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.

Let's go over it line by line.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord.

1. Wives should submit to their husbands, as they do to God. This is the concept of authority.
2. The nature of God is not sin. Therefore, if a husband is potentially in sin or potentially leading into sin, then she should respectfully and humbly tell him that it may be a sin. That's the bare minimum of being a helpmeet and a Christian.

What happens with churchian pastors and other so-called teaching on this passage is that the deceivers attempt to give a wife a way to weasel out of her obligations. Your husband is potentially telling you to sin? Instead of telling wives to bring it up respectfully with a humble heart, it's often "you don't have to obey him" without any instruction the correct path. I think it should be pretty clear that when wives hear "you don't have to obey him" without correct instruction, it stimulates the rebellious nature within them.

> 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body.

Paul draws another analogy to the authority of the husband in the marriage relationship. Here's the part about this that wives miss. The wives are one with their husbands as Christ is with the Church. Not a new revelation, as it mentioned many times in the Scripture, but is easy to forget.

If a wife approaches a potentially sinful situation with disrespect and a gloating attitude that is the same as hurting herself. The wife is injuring her own relationship with her husband. Since she and her husband are one, she needs to act like she is one. If you're a Christian, any interaction even with your sin or his potential sin must be met with the fruits of the Spirit.

> 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.

The qualifier, obviously, is as to the Lord. Likewise, in this verse the Church is subject to Christ: namely subject to moral authority not immoral. To borrow a line from Zippy: authorities, including the husband in a marriage relationship, have the capacity to create moral obligations. A wife not in obedience to a moral obligation is sinning.

This is as simple as saying: “If there’s potentially a sinful situation, I’ll let you know respectfully and humbly before I obey. If it turns out not to be a sinful situation, I’ll obey.”

How easy is that? But in churchianity there is hours and hours of discussion on what “submission” means and “when or when not to obey.” Are you kidding me? Can there be any doubt that we’re a rebellious people?

The real overarching key is that the fruits of the Spirit should be guiding any interaction, and that wives need to be proactive about being a godly helpmeet in their relationship. A wife whose heart is for her husband will look for ways to be respectful and obedient even if there is a potential sinful situation, while a wife who is rebellious will look for ways to disobey, take advantage, or rub it in his face.

> Titus 2:4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

Titus 2 instructs older women on what to teach younger women, not what not to do for good measure. As I showed in the previous post on the problems with intelligent submission, teaching what not to do can often mislead wives into sinning and destroying their own relationships as evidenced from the comments. Those wives are disobeying their husbands and the Scriptures in 1 Peter 3.

> Proverbs 14:1 The wise woman builds her house, But the foolish tears it down with her own hands.

Unfortunately, given our culture, any discussion on marriage and submission even in the Church often ends up on the latter. Both the pastor(s) and wives look for ways to be rebellious and to destroy their own relationships instead of building them up.

Wifely submission is easy. But rebellion runs deep, starting from the garden.

Why women are prohibited from certain positions in Church

September 9, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was recently having a conversation with someone, and this came up:

> I think his [the Church's pastor] 'spiritual maturity' line is no so much hostile as it is a belief that we should be willing to accept any teaching from the word, provided it lines up with the word

Essentially, the reference is this: anyone should be able to teach in Church — man or woman — if they are spiritually mature and all of the Christians in the congregation should be accepting of it. This pastor unfortunately did not heed the Scriptures forbidding women from this in 1 Timothy 2.

Such a line sounds good on the surface, but it's not true. In fact, it is very much like the 'equality' schtick in feminism and liberalism.

For example, if a wife is "spiritually mature" or even "more spiritually mature" than her husband (e.g. unbelieving husband) should she be the leader in her marriage? Surely not. 1 Peter 3 speaks to wives to submit to their unbelieving husbands to obey God and win their husbands through their chaste and respectful behavior and gentle and quiet spirit.

A woman can have the same message as a man, but it will be taken differently. For example, a mother's criticism of behavior comes off much differently than a father's. Then there is simply the fact of nature that women cannot teach men to be men (see: single mothers)… no matter how much she knows about men and know what men are supposed to do. She just simply isn't a man. It will never come off as right — it will always come off as nagging or similar. From the mouth of a woman is simply different than from the mouth of a man.

For perhaps that reason the revelation of God's primary identity in the NT is a Father to us, why Jesus came as a man, and why He only took men as apostles. A woman could not teach the things Paul wrote to Timothy and Titus in order to teach them to be men of God.

Women are only forbidden from positions of leadership in the Scriptures namely:

1. Apostles (church planting),
2. Leadership in the form of pastorate and teaching, and
3. Overseers/bishops.

There are many different positions and spiritual gifts, listed in the Scriptures: Romans 12:6-8, 1 Corinthians 12:8-10, 1 Corinthians 12:28, Ephesians 4:11, and 1 Peter 4:11 lists all of the spiritual gifts. They are:

- Prophecy

- Serving
- Teaching
- Exhortation
- Giving
- Leadership
- Mercy

- Word of wisdom
- Word of knowledge
- Faith
- Gifts of healings
- Miracles
- Prophecy
- Distinguishing between spirits
- Tongues
- Interpretation of tongues

- Apostle
- Prophet
- Teacher
- Miracles
- Kinds of healings
- Helps
- Administration
- Tongues

- Apostle
- Prophet
- Evangelist
- Pastor
- Teacher

- Whoever speaks
- Whoever renders service

Additional positions are:

- Overseer/Bishop
- Deacons

Yet women covet mainly positions of leadership in the Church.

Leadership in the Church is not based on human merit or ability (aside from things not to do such as in 1 Timothy 3) but by positional calling. Women are not called to be in the positions of leadership either in a marriage or the Church. Perhaps because of some of the qualities I mentioned before.

I would be very wary of going to any Church that has women “pastors” or other leadership or allows women into the pulpit for any sort of teaching. Teaching being namely “This is what the Scriptures mean, and this is how we should live because of that.”

Women hate sacrifice when it involves suffering

edit: Donal threw up a response post on women avoiding sacrifice. Sacrifice fits better as the main idea, so I changed the wording from here on where it was applicable.

I was trying to think of ways to make the this post into something elaborate, but the title really just explains itself. Women hate sacrifice when it involves suffering, and by extension women don't handle sacrifice well.

Examples:

- Divorce rate is 70% women initiated. Because women are unhappy.
- Husbands persist through contentious and shrewish wives in marriage taking on more responsibilities (e.g. choreplay, childcare), while women can't handle being unhappy.
- Pastors and wives with unbelieving husbands will go out of their way to make up stuff like "intelligent submission" so they don't have to submit. Then the sad part is when "intelligent submission" is defended instead of admitting it is being used to rebel against husbands and against the Scriptures.
- Christian men and husbands would rather cave to women when they are unhappy rather than to tell them it is a normal part of the Christian walk. "All who desire to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will be persecuted" 2:Timothy 3:12. Suffering and sacrifice is normal for Christians. We do a lot of things in this life that we don't want to because they should be done.
- Women are coddled by society, praised and pushed for college and credentialism. Men are put down and no on cares about them. When women fail they are helped as much as possible, especially by white knights. When men fail no one really cares that they are suffering except perhaps their parents.

I find it interesting that when women step out from under authority — their father's or their husband's — they expose themselves to more sin and suffering. However, in our culture this is lauded. Likewise, fathers and husbands are also encouraged to allow their wives and daughters to step out from under authority under the guise of "freedom" and "not being controlling."

However, when asked to sacrifice themselves to bear responsibility, they vehemently shy away from it and victimize themselves. All of this sin, suffering, and woe that women experience is blamed on the fathers and husbands. Either for not protecting them (when they went off on their own volition) or as their fault because everything bad a woman does is under the bad leadership of a man. Sadly, this is more prevalent in the Church than secular culture.

I had always wondered why Christian wives can ignore the plain-reading Scripture of 1 Peter 3, especially if their husband is an unbeliever or a "back-sliding" Christian. There have been numerous examples of this, including recent posts.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Now I see the light.

Christian wives in response to suffering absolutely hate sacrificing — denying their own will — to display Christ-like behavior. They would rather manipulate the situation around them to be better by their own volition than try it God's way. They would rather be self-righteous in rebellion and false humble about not being a doormat.

The irony is that they are only heaping more sin and suffering on themselves in the long run by not sucking it up now and sacrificing like Christ did for them. The light you shine when you suffer and sacrifice for Christ can change hearts. Self righteousness and false humility can't.

Men try to out work their suffering

September 11, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As the mirror of the previous day post women hate sacrifice when it involves suffering, here is the version for men.

Men heap more sin and suffering on themselves by not confronting bad behavior from their wives. They think they can out-work their suffering (e.g. chore play, child care, more responsibilities, etc.). Let's expand on this.

In light of the views of the necropolis (formerly "churchianity"), many Christians have been deceived into believing that a lack of godliness of the man causes most if not all of the problems in marriage and everywhere. This ranges from:

- the "lack of leadership" of the husband (e.g. any sin of a wife is caused by bad leadership of the husband — if only a husband were more godly).
- the "lack of sexual desire" of the wife toward the husband (e.g. godliness is attractive — if only a husband were more godly).
- the "lack of time" for the wife and husband, especially for sex (e.g. husbands need to help out the wife more — if only a husband were more godly).
- the "lack of respect" and "lack of submission" for the husband (e.g. literally if only a husband were more godly I could respect and submit to him)
- the "lack of responsibility" of the husband (e.g. Fireproof and Courageous and the War Room — husbands are abandoning their wife and children to culture)
- the "lack of [godly] men" in the Church (e.g. where have all the good men gone?)

Sound familiar?

> Galatians 6:1 Brethren, even if [a]anyone is caught in any trespass, you who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; each one looking to yourself, so that you too will not be tempted. 2 Bear one another's burdens, and thereby fulfill the law of Christ. 3 For if anyone thinks he is something when he is nothing, he deceives himself. 4 But each one must examine his own work, and then he will have reason for boasting in regard to himself alone, and not in regard to another. 5 For each one will bear his own load.

I've talked about this before, but one another's burdens is "baros" which means something that one person can't handle whereas bearing his own load is "phortion" which essentially means portion.

If a burden is actually too much for another Christian (usually due to extreme extenuating circumstances like death, accidents, and so on), then we're supposed to help out other Christians. On the other hand, we each have a phortion or portion of responsibility in life to bear.

In most cases, Christian husbands are indeed trying to lead and doing what they can for the marriage to succeed, but an unreasonable “baros” is heaped on the husband instead of understanding that some of the responsibility within the marriage is the wife’s. The examples above only prove the point. Wives are supposed to be a helpmeet to the husband and instead victimize themselves into being an additional burden.

The sin and suffering of men is that they often don’t call out such bad behavior but instead try to out work their suffering. However, works literally do not work. Just as we are not justified by God through good works, husbands can never “work” their way to grace, attractiveness, sex, and respect, in the eyes of their wives.

Trying to out work suffering is fool’s gold. Standing firm on the Scriptures and calling out bad behaviors so as to identify and help his wife cleanse such behaviors is the real gold. This is the nature of leadership and respect, but is is difficult especially when there is contentiousness and rebellion.

Review: Danny Silk's Defining the Relationship

September 12, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been meaning to get a post out on this for a while. I received Danny Silk's book on Defining The Relationship Workbook: A Relationship Course For Those Considering Marriage a while ago from a family member.

The chapters in this book are as follows:

1. Series introduction
2. Powerful people, powerful decisions
3. Pillars of Healthy Relationships
4. Love Languages
5. Your "Normal"
6. Communication Dance
7. Conflict Management
8. 90/10 Factor

Having heard Danny Silk preach before, I thought this would be good. Unfortunately, this book falls flat on its face.

The vast majority of Scriptures used in this book are randomly cherry picked from general Christian living — namely, 1-2 verse Jesus quotes and 1-2 verse Paul's epistles quotes. Most of these cherry picked Scriptures are used in context which is good. The issue is that most of the general Christian living Scriptures are supposed to be used in the context of the Church and community not just within relationships. They're useful for same sex relationships and opposite sex relationships. The fact that anyone can use them is not a bad thing, but this is supposed to be a book that prepares you for a marriage relationship with the opposite sex. You'd think there would be some more information specifically on relationships between the opposite sex.

The very bad. I read through the book the first time and was amazed because I found zero references to the Scriptures on marriage such as Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3, and the like. I was stunned about this so I went through the whole book again and found nothing again. I came back to it later and went through it again and found none the third time too.

If you're a Christian and considering marriage, you would think a book about relationships would have some direction and discussion about what God says about marriage (ESPECIALLY with marriage in the title of it). Nope, you can't find it in this book. The "5 love languages" made it into this book, but the Scriptures on marriage didn't make it. That's just terrible.

Additionally, this book was also missing a large discussion male and female nature, in the context of the Scripture. It would've been a great idea to reference how males and females relate differently and how this can lead to misunderstandings between the sexes.

Unfortunately, there are only small tidbits here and there, and it doesn't paint a good picture of the nature of interaction between the sexes.

The section on conflict management is good. Silk generally does a good job at explaining how conflict management is supposed to work in terms of Christian principles. Obviously, it's not as simple as say "love your neighbor as yourself" or Jesus' "love one another as I have loved you." There are solid actionable steps that you can take to resolve conflict, including putting your heart and attitudes in the right posture. However, as I mentioned earlier, these steps could be applied to any type of relationship, not just one between a potential husband and wife.

Rating: 1/5 — I wholeheartedly would not recommend this book, at least until the glaring holes are fixed.

Danny Silk is one of the more well-known evangelical pastors (as he is from Bethel), so to see a book like this on preparation for marriage without references to any of the Scriptures on marriage and no references to the Scriptural differences in male and female nature is very disappointing. The sad part is that it's not unexpected either, given the watered down message of the whole Church in our culture.

The Masculinist

The Masculinist is a new monthly newsletter from Aaron Renn. He follows many of the blogs around these parts. He recently released the first newsletter, so go sign up.

Aaron Renn is uniquely positioned because he has access and some potential capital to interact with some of the more well known Protestant pastors. He has already sent a few letters and documents about the infiltration of feminism into the Church and decline of men to some of them with varying results.

Most pastors tend to recognize there is a large problem, but they disagree on the solutions to it. This is a good start. Let us also pray that the veil on many pastors' hearts is taken away and that they be convicted of not teaching sound doctrine.

If you want to keep updated of some of the real life action of the trajectory of men in the Church and push back against feminism in the Church, then go read this newsletter.

Polygyny

September 14, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been many discussions on this over the years. I think it's an interesting topic, but have never really officially written on it before. Most topics have never really handled the situation(s) in context of the totality of Scripture. I'm going to go through most of them.

God and Jesus

> Matthew 19:3 Some Pharisees came to [b]Jesus, testing Him and asking, "Is it lawful for a man to [c]divorce his wife for any reason at all?" 4 And He answered and said, "Have you not read that He who created them from the beginning made them male and female, 5 and said, 'For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh'? 6 So they are no longer two, but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let no man separate." 7 They *said to Him, "Why then did Moses command to give her a certificate of divorce and send her away?" 8 He *said to them, "Because of your hardness of heart Moses permitted you to [d]divorce your wives; but from the beginning it has not been this way. 9 And I say to you, whoever [e]divorces his wife, except for [f]immorality, and marries another woman [g]commits adultery[h]."

Jesus when commenting on divorce brings up the topic from Genesis 2 from the beginning: "For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh'? 6 So they are no longer two, but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let no man separate."

The question was not about polynyny, but I think we can easily and reasonably infer that God intended and created marriage for one man and one woman (and no divorce).

Kinsman Redeemer

> Deuteronomy 25:5 "When brothers live together and one of them dies and has no son, the wife of the deceased shall not be married outside the family to a strange man. Her husband's brother shall go in to her and take her to himself as wife and perform the duty of a husband's brother to her. 6 It shall be that the firstborn whom she bears shall [e]assume the name of his dead brother, so that his name will not be blotted out from Israel. 7 But if the man does not desire to take his brother's wife, then his brother's wife shall go up to the gate to the elders and say, 'My husband's brother refuses to establish a name for his brother in Israel; he is not willing to perform the duty of a husband's brother to me.' 8 Then the elders of his city shall summon him and speak to him. And if he persists and says, 'I do not desire to take her,' 9 then his brother's wife shall come to him in the sight of the elders, and pull his sandal off his foot and spit in his face; and she shall [f]declare, 'Thus it is done to the man who does not build up his > brother's house.' 10 In Israel his name shall be called, 'The house of him whose sandal is removed.'

This is only one of kinsman redeemer laws. The most prominent example where this was followed in the OT was Ruth. The most prominent example where this was not followed is probably Onan, Judah, and Tamar (although this was before the Law was given). Polygyny in this case is permitted in order to 'redeem' the line of the deceased.

I'm not going to reference the rest of the kinsman redeemer verses here (see the link above), but the overall context is that polygyny is permitted in order to 'redeem' the line of the deceased. The husband who had to take his brother's wife also had obligations such as to redeem his property (if it was sold to another), raise the child, avenge the kin if he was unjustly killed, and so on.

It's more about filial responsibility than being able to take another wife. In other words, benevolence to your relatives (e.g. love your neighbor).

> H1350 — gâ'al — gaw-al'
> A primitive root, to redeem (according to the Oriental law of kinship), that is, to be the next of kin (and as such to buy back a relative□s property, marry his widow, etc.): – X in any wise, X at all, avenger, deliver, (do, perform the part of near, next) kinsfolk (-man), purchase, ransom, redeem (-er), revenger. Total KJV occurrences: 104

It's interesting that "redeemer" literally means "next of kin." When Jesus is referred to redeem us, it is in the context of the second Adam due to the nature of the first Adam's sin.

War

> Deuteronomy 21:10 "When you go out to battle against your enemies, and the Lord your God delivers them into your hands and you take them away captive, 11 and see among the captives a beautiful woman, and have a desire for her and would take her as a wife for yourself, 12 then you shall bring her home to your house, and she shall shave her head and [g]trim her nails. 13 She shall also [h]remove the clothes of her captivity and shall remain in your house, and mourn her father and mother a full month; and after that you may go in to her and be her husband and she shall be your wife. 14 It shall be, if you are not pleased with her, then you shall let her go [i]wherever she wishes; but you shall certainly not sell her for money, you shall not [j]mistreat her, because you have humbled her.

The circumstances around allowed polygyny make it beneficial for both the husband and the wife in this circumstance. The husband receives another wife who is also able to help with the household. The wife is either a widow or unprotected virgin in a time of war.

The Wisdom of the Lord in this case is a full month of seeing a woman at her most unattractive: with shaven hair, trimmed nails, and mourning. (Insert dumb Marilyn Monroe quote: "But if you can't handle me at my worst, then you sure as hell don't deserve me at my best.”). I suspect that most men after seeing this would not want to marry the woman, and the Law specifically explains that if he doesn’t want her after that she is to be freed and not mistreated.

Hillary Clinton’s quote has been dissected many times because it ignores the literal deaths of many thousands or even millions of men like in the case of World War 2. But there is some ‘truth’ to it as well.

> The experience that you have gone through is in many ways comparable to what happens with domestic violence. Women have always been the primary victims of war. Women lose their husbands, their fathers, their sons in combat. Women often have to flee from the only homes they have ever known. Women are often the refugees from conflict and sometimes, more frequently in today’s warfare, victims. Women are often left with the responsibility, alone, of raising the children. Women are again the victims in crime and domestic violence as well. Throughout our hemisphere we have an epidemic of violence against women, even though there is no longer any organized warfare that puts women in the direct line of combat. But domestic violence is now recognized as being the most pervasive human rights violation in the world. Here in El Salvador, according to the statistics gathered by your government, 1 in 6 women have been sexually assaulted and the number of domestic abuse complaints at just one agency topped 10,000 last year. Between 25 and 50 percent of women throughout Latin America have reportedly been victims of domestic violence.

Women who do not have the protection of men — either fathers, or husbands, or potentially brothers — are at high risk of being exploited by slavery, rape, or other atrocities during war time. In these cases, polygyny benefits both parties.

Relating war to domestic violence is quite dumb though.

Regulations against mistreatment

> Deuteronomy 21:15 “If a man has two wives, the one loved and the other [k]unloved, and both the loved and the [l]unloved have borne him sons, if the firstborn son belongs to the [m]unloved, 16 then it shall be in the day he [n]wills what he has to his sons, he cannot make the son of the loved the firstborn before the son of the [o]unloved, who is the firstborn. 17 But he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of the [p]unloved, by giving him a double portion of all that [q]he has, for he is the beginning of his strength; to him belongs the right of the firstborn.

We can see that this is the case of Jacob, Leah, and Rachel prior to the Law being give. The Lord blesses Leah with many sons because she was unloved. The general concept that is underscored here is that favoritism is bad. This concept is also promoted in the NT — Rom 2, Eph 6, Col 3, James 2.

> Exodus 21:10 If he takes to himself another woman, he may not reduce her > [j]food, her clothing, or her conjugal rights. 11 If he will not do these three things for her, then she shall go out for nothing, without payment of money.

This is the regulation of provision that is also referenced by Paul in 1 Timothy 5:8 "But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever."

David and the Law

> 2 Samuel 12:7 Nathan then said to David, "You are the man! Thus says the Lord God of Israel, 'It is I who anointed you king over Israel and it is I who delivered you from the hand of Saul. 8 I also gave you your master's house and your master's wives into your [e]care, and I gave you the house of Israel and Judah; and if that had been too little, I would have added to you many more things like these! 9 Why have you despised the word of the Lord by doing evil in His sight? You have struck down Uriah the Hittite with the sword, have taken his wife to be your wife, and have killed him with the sword of the sons of Ammon.
> 10 Now therefore, the sword shall never depart from your house, because you have despised Me and have taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be your wife.' 11 Thus says the Lord, 'Behold, I will raise up evil against you from your own household; I will even take your wives before your eyes and give them to your companion, and he will lie with your wives in [f]broad daylight. 12 Indeed you did it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel, and [g]under the sun.'"

This passage is interesting because it has been used to defend polygyny, but the text doesn't say that. The text specifically states that David was given his master's house and his master's wives for his care. Who was the master? The master is obviously Saul, the former king of Israel. David did not actually marry any of Saul's wives, and we know that he takes care a large portion of his household including Mephibosheth, son of Jonathan. Inheriting the 'house' of the old king was seen as the legitimate right to kingship.

On the other hand, we know that both David and Solomon had many wives for themselves. Those that we know of are: Michal, Abigail, Bathsheba, Ahinoam, Maacah, Haggith, Abital, and Eglah and potentially more 2 Samuel 5:13 "And David took more concubines and wives from Jerusalem, after he came from Hebron, and more sons and daughters were born to David." We know that Solomon took 300 wives and 1000 concubines.

> Deuteronomy 17:14 "When you enter the land which the Lord your God gives you, and you possess it and live in it, and you say, 'I will set a king over me like all the nations who are around me,' 15 you shall surely set a king over you whom the Lord your God chooses, one from among your [l]countrymen you shall set as king over yourselves; you may not put a foreigner over yourselves who is not your [m]countryman. 16 Moreover, he shall not multiply horses for himself, nor shall he cause the people to return to Egypt to multiply horses, since the Lord has said to you, 'You shall never again return that way.' 17 He shall not multiply > wives for himself, [n]or else his heart will turn away; nor shall he greatly increase silver and gold for himself.

> H7235 — râbâh — raw-baw’
> A primitive root; to increase (in whatever respect): – [bring in] abundance (X - antly), + archer [by mistake for H7232], be in authority, bring up, X continue, enlarge, excel, exceeding (-ly), be full of, (be, make) great (-er, -ly), X -ness), grow up, heap, increase, be long, (be, give, have, make, use) many (a time), (any, be, give, give the, have) more (in number), (ask, be, be so, gather, over, take, yield) much (greater, more), (make to) multiply, nourish, plenty (-eous), X process [of time], sore, store, thoroughly, very. Total KJV occurrences: 224

God predicted that Israel would want a king for themselves in Deuteronomy, which comes to pass in 1 Samuel 8. God also specifically warns again multiplying horses, wives, and silver and gold lest the heart of the king turn away from God Himself. I suppose the irony is that this actually happened with both David and Solomon as well.

Obviously, multiplying wives to yourself is in the form of many wives. Only famous and powerful men, such as a king of Israel, could command and provide for many wives. The same is true throughout history. God strictly forbids this.

Conclusions

As Paul tells us, the Law is for Law Breakers.

> 1 Timothy 1:8 But we know that the Law is good, if one uses it lawfully, 9 realizing the fact that law is not made for a righteous person, but for those who are lawless and rebellious, for the ungodly and sinners, for the unholy and profane, for those who kill their fathers or mothers, for murderers 10 [f]and [g]immoral men [h]and homosexuals [i]and kidnappers [j]and liars [k]and perjurers, and whatever else is contrary to sound teaching, 11 according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, with which I have been entrusted.

The very fact that the Law must regulate such behavior is because of selfishness opposed to the two great commandments:

> Matthew 22:34 But when the Pharisees heard that Jesus had silenced the Sadducees, they gathered themselves together. 35 One of them, [n]a lawyer, asked Him a question, testing Him, 36 “Teacher, which is the great commandment in the Law?” 37 And He said to him, “‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ 38 This is the great and [o]foremost commandment. 39 The second is like it, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ 40 On these two commandments depend the whole Law and the Prophets.

There are certain circumstances where polygyny is permitted, and from these passages we can draw a few conclusions:

1. God intended that marriage be one man and one woman. Jesus confirms this.
2. Polygyny is a benevolence to the deceased relatives' household in the form of a Kinsman Redeemer.
3. Polygyny is to be beneficial to both parties in a time of war. If not, then the captive woman is to go free without any mistreatment.
4. Any man in a polygamous relationship cannot mistreat or show favoritism to any wife, and he must provide for all of them.
5. A king is not allowed to multiply wives as it is strictly forbidden according to the Law.

This leads to the conclusion that the totality of Scriptures infer that marriage should be between one man and one woman. Polygyny is only permitted in extremely extenuating circumstances (e.g. relative died, war) and must be beneficial to both parties (e.g. child to continue the lineage, raising the child, provision, no mistreatment, no favoritism). Famous, rich, powerful [kings] should not multiply wives as it will lead them astray from God. Also, if there are laws against it then Christians should obey the law of the land (Romans 13, 1 Tim 2, Tit 3, 1 Pet 2, Hebrews 13, etc.).

Finally, the ironic part about a topic like this is that [Christian] women often get disgruntled with they hear the word polygyny and assert that it is selfish for men. This is false. In reality, the vast majority of women wouldn't marry a man who already has a wife unless she were reaping major benefits out of the situation anyway (e.g. fame, power, provision, etc.). This is another one of those "blame men for being selfish while women are innocent victims" instances that have become so prevalent in the Necropolis. It takes two to opt into a marriage.

"More and More Chinese People Are Having Pre-Marital Sex"

> First the Chinese were hungry. Now that they're satiated, they're ready to talk about – and engage in – more sex.
> "Things have changed because in China people are fed, so when you are fed sexual desire comes next," said well-known Chinese sociologist Li Yinhe, at a talk hosted by the Foreign Correspondents' Club of China this week. "Sex has gone from a luxury to a common demand for the Chinese people."
> China is still a country where sex education isn't taught in schools, and where many teens learn about fornication through foreign porn films. But it's a rapid change from only 20 years ago, when a woman could be jailed for having sex outside of marriage. "It's quite a revolution, isn't it," Ms. Li said, after citing her research, which shows 71% of the population has had premarital sex, up from 15% in 1989.
> A 2011 survey of Chinese attitudes and behaviors towards sex, conducted by condom-maker Durex, showed that 86% of more than 2,000 respondents believe that good sex is a vital part of life, said Ben Wilson, marketing director of Reckitt Benckiser in China, Durex's parent company. The survey also showed individuals are losing their virginity at a younger age; the median age for Chinese to have sex for the first time is now 21.2, and 60% of Chinese aged 19 to 25 have had sex.
> Technology has sparked much of this change, with the Internet being the number-one source of sex education and a way to find sexual partners because its anonymity removes embarrassment, Mr. Wilson said.

Pre-marital sex has gone up from 15% to 71% in about 25 years.

I'm not sure if I believe the reasons they gave like luxury to a common demand. This could be true simply based on the fact that Chinese society was relatively poor in recently history and has been undergoing a rapid industrialization much like the US did in the early 20th century.

Overall, it's an interesting scenario because Chinese society has not been asserted as 'Christian' at any point unlike the US, but it has similar trends as the US in terms of pre-marital sex. Perhaps it would be more accurate to assert that money and birth control are the natural causes rather than the supposed rebellion against Christian morals.

More money to fix problems = less need for God and/or morality. Birth control = no need to worry about consequences of sex.

On divorce Part 4

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

This post is a re–re-consolidation and simplified explanation of the Scriptures on divorce. Previous discussions include several conversations and much of the same material from On divorce and On divorce Part 2 and On divorce Part 3. One of the reasons for this is the discussion of divorce on polygyny. Thus, if you've read them before or if you don't care feel free not to read it again.

This is one of the original research articles that got me started on reading to understand what the Scriptures say myself. Read it if you have time.

This is a more in-depth read.

The biggest thing that I learned from my discussions is that people don't properly understand the background of all of the OT passages on divorce and putting away which set the stage for why Jesus is talking specifically about putting away and not divorce.

Table of contents

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?
2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?
3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah
4. Malachi 2 — the background from the Old Testament to the New Testament
5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT
6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap
7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation
8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion
9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response on hardness of heart
10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture
11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage
12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary
13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke
14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce
15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives
16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses
17. Conclusion

Let's get started.

Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it > come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in Mosiac law. This will be important when we look at the passages in Matthew.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective, very few if any women that were caught in marital fraud were actually stoned. What occurred is that when a woman was caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced (put away + writ of divorce).

Such a fraudulent marriage was invalid (no blood as proof), and therefore the couple was not legally married.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because this outlines a case for which a woman could be put away (without being officially divorced).

Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord is shown to follow the laws he outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity. They were no longer physically or spiritually “Jews” because they have been divorced by God and intermixed with the surrounding nations. This passage in Jeremiah 3 shows that God Himself divorces the Israelites, gives her a bill of divorce, and sends/puts her away into Assyrian captivity. God abides by His own Law.

Don Quixote notes that in Jeremiah 3:14 the Lord claims to be married to Israel even after the bill of divorce and invites repentance. This is the nature of God’s forgiveness if she turns back to him, even though God plays by His rules in divorce.

However, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother’s divorcement (sêpher ‘êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and delivers Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

Malachi 2 — The background from the Old Testament to the New Testament

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The main background behind this passage is that “divorce” in surrounding cultures was simply putting away (without a writ of divorce). Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. There are two main reasons why the Lord was saying putting away [without a writ of divorce] was treacherous:

1. Selfish monetary gain. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride’s father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry.
2. Marginalized wives. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would still be legally married to her husband, which allowed her unable to remarry without committing adultery.

This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus’ interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament.

Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

Since the OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek, we need to critically examine the Scriptures to see if there are synonymous terms that were used in order to understand what the Pharisees and Jesus were speaking about in the Law of Moses. There are.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on
> Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Note: I crossed out the two instances of “divorce” within Strong’s definition of apoluo because apoluo does not denote a legal divorce according to the Law of Moses. Hence, Jesus would not have used apoluo to mean “divorce” in Matthew because He does not abolish the law but fulfills the law.

Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees’ multi layered trap

Let’s start delving into the line by line analysis given our solid background of understanding.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

First, the key word “every cause” is another instance of background. The Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for “every cause” due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important).

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house.

Now, your spider senses should be tingling because the Pharisees use an interesting set of wording of “lawful” with “putting away” (without writ of divorce) and “every cause.”

The complexity of this trap is that the Pharisees are pitting Roman occupation law versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could “divorce” your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo). However, Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth). This is similar to other traps the Pharisees employed such as it being lawful to pay taxes to Caesar or God (Matt 22, Mark 12).

Thus, the trap. If Jesus answers that you can put away a wife without a bill of divorcement the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you need a bill of divorcement then the Pharisees can take Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law. The additional wrench of the trap is that “every cause” is thrown in so that they are not referring directly to standard Jewish law but solely one liberal interpretation of it.

Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus knows that it’s a no-win question. He neatly sidesteps the Pharisees’ trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and instead discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

This is Jesus' answer on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." No divorce.

Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap and now are confused. If God did not intended for any divorce then why was it written in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24 (Putting the wife away AND giving her a bill of divorcement)?

The Pharisees quick acknowledgement that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement reveals their own trap. They knew that a divorce was putting away and a bill of divorcement, but they tested Him on putting away only.

Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds to the Pharisees that this part of the law was created because human hearts are hard. Jesus doesn't want "putting away" for any reason: valid divorce which is "putting away + writ of divorce" or simply "putting away" because of the hardness of hearts.

Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

In this section, Jesus is answering the original question that the Pharisees posed which is "what lawful instances can a man put away?"

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?
> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Remember, from Malachi 2 to the current Roman occupation the Israelite husbands were putting away their wives treacherously. Thus, it is important for Jesus to answer this question in order to clarify the instances of which a wife can be put away.

- Let's walk through this part by part: "Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife."

We recognize that Jesus knows what a writ of divorce is as He is familiar with Jewish law. Additionally, the Pharisees had just asked him about putting away (apoluo) and writ of divorce (apostasion). Thus, Jesus is talking about putting away only.

- Jesus specifically says “except it be for fornication (porneia). “Fornication” is any illicit sexual union including incest (1 Cor 5) and adultery. However, if Jesus was referring specifically to adultery here then “moichao” would have been used instead of “porneia.” Moichao is used later in the verse, yet it is not used here.
- The combination of “putting away (apoluo)” and “fornication (porneia)” refers to Deuteronomy 22 where a husband marries a wife but it is fraud. If the passage was talking about “putting away (apoluo)” and “bill of divorcement (apostasion)” and “adultery (moichiao)” this would reference Deuteronomy 24 on rules of divorce.

> If Jesus was talking specifically about a legitimate divorce for adultery he would have instead said:
> Instead, He says:
> “Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, “except it be for fornication (porneia),

Therefore, the Greek wording is important because it tells us what passages Jesus is referencing in Mosaic Law. The answer is Deuteronomy 22 and illegitimate marriages as opposed to Deuteronomy 24 and rules on divorce. This becomes clear in the final part.

- Jesus says: “and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).”

> Let’s put all of the parts together now. Remove the “except” part for a moment. Jesus is saying:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for fornication (porneia),~~ and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, […], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Jesus is saying that if you put away your wife and marry another then you commit adultery. This makes sense because if you put away your wife under Jewish law without giving her a writ of divorce then you commit adultery as you were still married to her!

This is similar to today's culture because we have marriage certificates: if you put away your wife without annulling the marriage you commit adultery according to the law.

This also explains exactly happening in Malachi 2 and Roman times. Husbands were putting away their wives without a writ of divorce. The wives could not marry again because they were still married to their original husbands. If they did they were committing adultery.

Let's continue the textual analysis:

- What about the "except it be for fornication (porneia)" part? The Pharisees rightly understood that in Deuteronomy 22 that if a husband accused his wife of not being a virgin then the proof was the sheet with the blood stains on it. If the parents were able to produce that (gross, I know), then the husband must pay a penalty and could never put her away as long as he lives. However, if the woman was guilty, she was committing fraud by lying/deception by claiming to be a virgin when she was not.

Therefore, this "except" clause refers directly to the Deuteronomy 22 example. The man could put the wife away (without a writ of divorce) because the marriage was a sham. Thus,

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Putting away (without a writ of divorce) and marrying another constitutes adultery because you are still married to your former spouse. The exception is for a fraudulent marriage because the marriage itself is invalid.

Therefore, Jesus makes two distinct statements in this entire passage:

> On marriage and divorce:
>
> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> On putting away in regard to fraudulent marriages (referencing Deut 22):
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

In conclusion, Jesus says there is no divorce period. You can only put away if there is marriage fraud.

For example, in the case of fraud, a wife that lies about her past sexual history can be put away because it's a fraudulent marriage. A covenant must be willingly agreed to openly and truthfully. Interestingly, though we often negatively critique him, Mark Driscoll has a episode like this. You can see the devastation of what this does to a man. That's why God makes an exception for this.

Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce period. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fraudulently married by deception.

When Jesus fulfills the Law, it is always vastly more difficult than the former Law. For example, Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself (Matt 22) goes to a new command I give to you: that you love one another, just as I have loved you, that you love one another (John 13, John 15). Yes, obviously, it SHOULD be harder than what the Mosaic Law said. That's why the disciples were so amazed.

No divorce period except for fraudulent marriages is a hard word. A really hard word.

Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary

This also agrees with Matthew 1:19 where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus [r]Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been [s]betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

Joseph marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was supposed to be marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto > them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

The background behind these passages is that Mark and Luke were mainly written to the Gentiles while Matthew was written to the Hebrews. Thus, there is no “except for fornication” within these two passages when Jesus repeats the same thing in Matthew.

The reason for this is that “putting away” was “divorce” for the Gentiles. The instruction is that they should not do that at all. As they were not under the Law of Moses, this goes back to Jesus statement of original intention: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” There is no divorce for Gentile believers.

Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she > is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

Romans 7 does not speak specifically about whether you can legally divorce or not. Obviously, Deuteronomy 24, which Paul is quite familiar with being a Pharisee of Pharisees, states that husbands could divorce their wives.

Paul is instead speaking to the scenarios of being unbound by the law (in death) rather than about divorce because He is discussing our salvation and grace versus works. Husbands were allowed to divorce their wives in Deuteronomy 24, but wives were not allowed to divorce their husbands. Hence, when Paul speaks to the scenario of a wife being bound by the law to her husband until he dies as the example instead as a wife cannot divorce her husband.

1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

It's important to understand that the Lord is speaking to a Roman/Greek population in the Corinthians here and not the Jewish people. Hence, the Lord is speaking against the Roman law that "divorce" could be done through "putting away" or simply "departing" in the case of the wife.

Likewise, the Lord follows this up with the only correct path for those separated or divorced: stay single or reconcile. This is a hard word for most Christians because divorce and remarriage is not an option.

This agrees with Jesus' original statements on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. “Well, if I’m not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry.” That is not what this passage says at all. It only says that if they depart then you’re not under the bondage of the marriage anymore. However, it does not necessarily condone remarriage either.

Overall, it’s not specifically clear so there is the possible that you are allowed to remarry. Although if this is the case I would personally recommend staying single.

Conclusions

Jesus talks about marriage, divorce, and putting away. Understanding which passages Jesus refers to is critical to unifying all of Scripture on the topic of divorce.

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the context of Mosaic Law and in the gospel of Matthew. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19
2. Putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus’ plan for marriage is that “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10
4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. Separation seems to be an option if you can’t live with them. Reconciliation is ideal. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, 1 Cor 7
5. Your marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud prior to marriage. Example: Claiming she was a virgin when she was not (Deut 22). Hence, you can put her away without divorcing her since it was a sham. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage. Note the wording: “10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord … [remain unmarried or reconcile]” versus “12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if [they leave you are not under bondage].” Given the context of the wording about the Lord saying versus Paul saying it would seem that stay unmarried or be reconciled is the ideal. Remarriage may be an option according to liberal interpretation. – 1 Cor 7

8. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse if they come to Christ (See: Note 3 for more details). The heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. In this line of thought, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. This view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again otherwise is it an abomination. – Deut 24, Matthew 19

Note 1: This is one of the original research articles that got me started on reading to understand what the Scriptures say myself. Read it if you have time.

Note 2: Hopefully this is the last ever post I make on divorce. The logic and continuity of the Scriptures on this topic is clear that I need not revisit. (It wasn’t, sigh).

Note 3: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery:

> 1. I agree that there is perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, “sacramental marriage” affirmed by the Church.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. If I remember correctly those that don’t undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn’t valid they are free to marry another.
> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Final Conclusion

1. No divorce period. Even for adultery. “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” Your recourse is separation if you absolutely can’t live with them.
2. If you are separated, stay single or reconcile. No remarriage.
3. Stay with an unbeliever if they want to live with you, otherwise you are not under the bonds of marriage. Remarriage is potentially possible with a liberal interpretation of Scripture.
4. Fraudulent marriages are not marriages.

5. If you have a “Christian marriage” (or sacramental marriage) — both of you know that marriage is forever on earth and the accompanying roles and responsibilities — then any divorce and remarriage is perpetual adultery. 2nd or 3rd marriages that come to Christ can be affirmed as Christian marriages, and they would not have to go back to their first spouse.

This is why I believe (as a Protestant) that the Catholic and Orthodox methods of sacramental marriage are probably the best method to deal with marriage and divorce in a broken world. Protestant views on marriage are trash, and it is no surprise that they have the highest divorce rates of any denomination of Christianity and divorce rates almost as high as secular culture.

Ideas for a treatise on Patriarchal marriage

September 17, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've thought about writing on this for a while, and I believe this is a topic of great need within the Church.

- Patriarchy, at it's simplest definition, is Father/headed led families. (Scripturally speaking, Father/husband headed families).

Both of these are affirmed throughout the Scriptures including Pre-fall and the Old and New Covenant. This includes examples ranging from Adam to the Patriarchs to David and the Kings and finally to Jesus, with the New Covenant revealed nature of the primary way God desires to be represented: our Father.

As we know, CBMW in their "complemenatarian" position has already been infected by feminism. Dalrock has done an excellent job of exposing that specifically in these two posts:

- All roads lead to Duluth
- The root of the problem

I've also discussed the concept some in terms of Patriarchy one, two, and three and the two options open to single Christian men: Patriarch or Monk.

I don't see a need to "defend" Patriarchy as it is an inherently good system as it was created and affirmed by God throughout the Scriptures. Hence, the term treatise. However, it seems that a "defense" is needed because most Christians are entrenched unknowingly in the Necropolis (e.g. formerly churchianity) and are convinced by secular culture that Patriarchy is an evil system.

Some articles I've found on ideas stem from sources like these on the defense of Patriarchy. Included is part of C.S. Lewis' section in chapter 16 of Mere Christianity.

> So much for the Christian doctrine about the permanence of marriage. Something else, even more unpopular, remains to be dealt with. Christian wives promise to obey their husbands. In Christian marriage the man is said to be the `head'. Two questions obviously arise here. (1) Why should there be a head at all – why not equality? (2) Why should it be the man?
> (1) The need for some head follows from the idea that marriage is permanent. Of course, as long as the husband and wife are agreed, no question of a head need arise; and we may hope that this will be the normal state of affairs in a Christian marriage. But when there is a real disagreement, what is to happen? Talk it over, of course; but I am assuming they have done that and still failed to reach agreement. What do they do next? They cannot decide by a majority vote, for in a council of two there can be no majority. Surely, only one or other of two things > can happen: either they must separate and go their own ways or else one or other of them must have a casting vote. If marriage is permanent, one or other party must, in the last resort, have the power of deciding the family policy. You cannot have a permanent association without a constitution.

> (2) If there must be a head, why the man? Well, firstly, is there any very serious wish that it should be the woman? As I have said, I am not married myself, but as far as I can see, even a woman who wants to be the head of her own house does not usually admire the same state of things when she finds it going on next door. She is much more likely to say 'Poor Mr X! Why he allows that appalling woman to boss him about the way she does is more than I can imagine.' I do not think she is even very flattered if anyone mentions the fact of her own 'headship'. There must be something unnatural about the rule of wives over husbands, because the wives themselves are half ashamed of it and despise the husbands whom they rule. But there is also another reason; and here I speak quite frankly as a bachelor, because it is a reason you can see from outside even better than from inside. The relations of the family to the outer world -what might be called its foreign policy -must depend, in the last resort, upon the man, because he always ought to be, and usually is, much more just to the outsiders. A woman is primarily fighting for her own children and husband against the rest of the world. Naturally, almost, in a sense, rightly, their claims override, for her, all other claims. She is the special trustee of their interests. The function of the husband is to see that this natural preference of hers is not given its head. He has the last word in order to protect other people from the intense family patriotism of the wife. If anyone doubts this, let me ask a simple question. If your dog has bitten the child next door, or if your child has hurt the dog next door, which would you sooner have to deal with, the master of that house or the mistress? Or, if you are a married woman, let me ask you this question. Much as you admire your husband, would you not say that his chief failing is his tendency not to stick up for his rights and yours against the neighbours as vigorously as you would like? A bit of an Appeaser?

In general, I think it would be best to approach this purely from a Biblical standpoint and contrasting them to the fabricated statements made by modern feminists trying to subvert the Scripture for their own gain. Such statements include things like "Women were treated horribly before Jesus' time." This gives any random Christian the false impression that women were treated terribly in the OT, which is simply not the case. Women were a protected and provided for class under the Law.

In any case, this is probably a massive project that I need help on in terms of compiling as many examples as possible from the Scriptures on the nature of authority, Patriarchy, and attempted christo-feminist hijacking.

When I say "marriage," I shouldn't have to explain that all marriage is Patriarchal marriage as that is what God has ordained as good. Made up human inventions that attempt to subvert the structures that God has created — such as “complementarian,” “egalitarian,” and “gay” marriage — are not marriage. They’re warped and corrupted monstrosities that do not honor God.

In all honestly, “gay” marriage is not a Christian problem. Let the world worry about things like that. The Christian problem is “complementarian” and “egalitarian marriage” as these are things that masquerade as Truth and lead Christians astray into falling into pits.

Anyway, what I’m looking for in the comments is:

- Compilation of the Scriptures on God’s structure of authority marriage.
- Writings and commentary on the structure of marriage with sound logical defense.
- Examples of Christian organizational structures going off the mark on marriage. CBMW is obviously one of them.

Men try to out work their suffering example edit: I forgot to note this was sent in by a reader.

I recently wrote on Men try to out work their suffering.

Husbands fall into this trap a lot. They try “work” in order to curry favor because of a bad attitude from their women.

Unfortunately, it shows the wife responding “well” which is a farce. Anyone who has experienced in real life know that wives almost always get more discontent, dissatisfied, and demanding.

We live in a polytheistic culture

Some thoughts after Cane's whore mother may I and my comment.

> Complementarism is simply another form of feminine worship. Mother worship. It's all the same stuff, except in different forms of ancient Canaanite idol worship. For example,
> Goddess worship, fertility worship, spirit of jezebel. Baal = god of fertility/storm. Asherah = goddess of heaven, creator of earth, goddess of the sea.
> It seems interesting to me that there is no incarnation of the 'Trinity' as feminine. We only have the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Perhaps because it's very easy for humans to get sidetracked into idolatrous worship of the feminine.

Abortion is simply human sacrifice. The mother is the fertile creator who gives and takes life at her whim. She is a god. Why else would women be "victims" of abortion when they are the ones choosing to have it.

In fact, all cultures, save Israel for a time, have lived in polytheistic cultures.

Idols of wood and stone have been traded for idols of self, money, pleasure, fame, and feelings.

> Exodus 20:3 "You shall have no other gods [b]before Me.

Is it any wonder why the first commandment is the first commandment? The second commandment on not creating the likeness of idols is only a minor part of the first. It's only when you have an idol that you can create one.

Usurpers

Somewhat of an offshoot of we live in a polytheistic culture.

I'm beginning to gain a greater understanding of the ancient Israel and their interaction with the surrounding cultures.

- El is a generic term for the word god that was generally used to refer to any god such as the ones mentioned below. Most of the names of the Hebrew God are based on it, such as Elohim, El Shaddai, El Elyon, and so on.
- Ba'al and the derivatives are actually a term that means "lord" much like Adon/Adonai mean. It's was also one of the Hebrew words for husband, which the Scripture righteously lauds Sarah for calling Abraham lord from Genesis and 1 Peter 3.
- Moloch is actually a derivatve from 'melek' which in Hebrew means "king." A melek means the king. Somewhat of a primer on the background of the Amalekites from the OT.
- "Virgin" Anat is a violent war goddess and lover of Ba'al (at least one of the versions of him). The original cross dresser perhaps now that we see women in the armed forces
- Asherah the 'Queen of heaven' and 'goddess of the sea.' Also, called Qudesh which is a term for 'holiness.' Interestingly, artifacts have been found from ancient Israel which depict "Yahweh and his Asherah" and variations like that. Perhaps all of these are semi-references to Gen 1:2b "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."
- Chemosh of the Moabites probably means destroyer, subduer, or fish god, but where it was derived from is the Babylonian Shamosh who is the god of law, justice and salvation.
- Dagon the fish god (Samson knocked over his temple in Philistine) is probably derived from grain and thus associated with fertility and agriculture.

Essentially, what we have a bunch of usurpers. The gods are basically take on qualities of the real God who created everything. Perhaps it is not exactly a surprise because God warned Israel with the first commandment: "you shall have no other gods before me."

> 2 Corinthians 11:13 For such men are false apostles, deceitful workers, disguising themselves as apostles of Christ. 14 No wonder, for even Satan disguises himself as an angel of light. 15 Therefore it is not surprising if his servants also disguise themselves as servants of righteousness, whose end will be according to their deeds.

It could also be said that Christianity has its fair share of imposters such as Islam. I don't think it to be a coincidence that Satan or Lucifer is known as the great deceiver. Satan is a counterfeiter of God.

> Matthew 7:15 “Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves. 16 You will [k]know them by their fruits. [l]Grapes are not gathered from thorn bushes nor figs from thistles, are they? 17 So every good tree bears good fruit, but the bad tree bears bad fruit. 18 A good tree cannot produce bad fruit, nor can a bad tree produce good fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 So then, you will [m]know them by their fruits.

Jesus warns us of false prophets among other things as well.

In tracing out some of this, there are some other interesting tidbits on Israel’s archaeological past. The Egyptians probably called the Israelites the Shasu which means “those who move on foot.” The word we would use for it now is nomads. There are Egyptian references to “the land Shasu of YHW.” Since they had distinctly different dress from the Egyptians it can be inferred that they originated from somewhere else. This would make sense given the Scripture tells us Abraham was a nomadic cattle herder, and his descendants eventually made their way to Egypt.

Supposedly, tracking YHWH back further you get the origin from a root word such as HWY which means “he blows.” Although scholars attribute this to a “weather divinity,” I believe it probably more likely refers to God breathing life into man: Genesis 2:7 Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living [f]being.

The primary attribute of God in the OT is YHWH (among other epithets) is the [Life] Breather, which attests to the creation. The primary attribute of God in the NT is our Father. How cool is that.

Elohim in Genesis is plural of God, which refers to the “triune” nature Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The “-im” ending is masculine, and although it’s a plural it uses a singular verb. They all co-exist as one and act as one. John 1 refers to the fact that Jesus was there in the beginning.

Complementarians are worse than egalitarians

September 22, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've talked about this before briefly in other posts, but it deserves its own post. Somewhat goes with Dalrock's Hierarchy equals abuse, which is funny because i had this post typed up a few days ago.

The reason why complementarians are worse than egalitarians is that they both espouse equality between the sexes in marriage. In complementarism, the husband and wife always come together to discuss decisions (subtext: as some sort of equals) exactly like egalitarians. The only difference complementarians simply pay lip service to the husband as the authority/head in marriage as some sort of last resort "tie breaker."

Complementarians try everything possible to make men and women equal, but at the end of the day they can't ignore the plain text of Scripture regarding headship and submission. They begrudgingly give the husband a tie breaker vote, but only because the Bible said so.

At least the egalitarians are honest about their position. They believe, albeit wrongly, that husbands and wives are equal in marriage. Complementarians deceive and are deceived regarding the nature husband authority in marriage.

Egalitarians are overt feminists. Complementarians are disguised feminists.

Deception is worse than a blatant lie because the blatant lie is easier to pick out. Deception is when you think you know the truth, but in reality you don't. That's the scariest one because you don't know you're being led astray. It's harder to pick out what is wrong when Truth is mixed with lies rather than just a straight forward lie.

edit: This is why the "tie breaker" argument does not work with egalitarians. It isn't Scripture and lacks authoritative power. Egalitarians try to twist Ephesians 5 into what they want it to mean, but they ignore Colossian 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, and 1 Cor 11 ("head of"). Every time they bring up Ephesians 5 just bring up the other verses instead.

The Scriptures, Tradition and Canon

September 23, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've thought about writing this for a long time. We'll see where this goes. Cane and Moose have been discussing some of these things, which prompted me to take another look at it.

Jesus, for the most part, almost always lambasted the tradition of the Pharisees. In particular, this occurred on multiple occasions such as the washing of hands and honoring their father and mother (Matt 15, Mark 7). Both Paul and Peter also do this as well decrying the tradition of men (Col 2, 1 Pet 1). Tradition is generally referred to in the Greek as G3862 paradosis, which is transmission of a precept or law.

Alternatively, Paul does refer to what they have given to Church plants as tradition in a few circumstances:

> 2 Thess 3:6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you [f]keep away from every brother who [g]leads an [h]unruly life and not according to the tradition which [i]you received from us. 7 For you yourselves know how you ought to [j]follow our example, because we did not act in an undisciplined manner among you, 8 nor did we eat [k]anyone's bread [l]without paying for it, but with labor and hardship we kept working night and day so that we would not be a burden to any of you; 9 not because we do not have the right to this, but in order to offer ourselves as a model for you, so that you would [m]follow our example. 10 For even when we were with you, we used to give you this order: if anyone is not willing to work, then he is not to eat, either. 11 For we hear that some among you are leading an undisciplined life, doing no work at all, but acting like busybodies. 12 Now such persons we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ to work in quiet fashion and eat their own bread. 13 But as for you, brethren, do not grow weary of doing good.
> 1 Corinthians 15:1 Now I make known to you, brethren, the gospel which I preached to you, which also you received, in which also you stand, 2 by which also you are saved, if you hold fast [a]the word which I preached to you, unless you believed in vain. 3 For I delivered to you [b]as of first importance what I also received, that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, 4 and that He was buried, and that He was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures, 5 and that He appeared to Cephas, then to the twelve. 6 After that He appeared to more than five hundred brethren at one time, most of whom remain until now, but some have fallen asleep; 7 then He appeared to [c]James, then to all the apostles; 8 and last of all, as [d]to one untimely born, He appeared to me also.

What we have here is an understanding that what the Churches received from the apostles, especially concerning the gospel of Jesus and godly living, is tradition.

Going back a bit, the “Scriptures” of the OT to which Jesus refers to are what should be adhered to but not specifically the traditions of men. Obviously, we believe that what the apostles transmitted, at the behest of Jesus in the Great Commission (Matt 28), are true words about the gospel message and not simply the tradition of men.

> 2 Timothy 3:14 But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; 15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. 16 All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17 That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works.
> 2 Peter 3:14 Therefore, beloved, since you look for these things, be diligent to be found by Him in peace, spotless and blameless, 15 and regard the patience of our Lord as salvation; just as also our beloved brother Paul, according to the wisdom given him, wrote to you, 16 as also in all his letters, speaking in them of these things, in which are some things hard to understand, which the untaught and unstable distort, as they do also the rest of the Scriptures, to their own destruction. 17 You therefore, beloved, knowing this beforehand, be on your guard so that you are not carried away by the error of unprincipled men and fall from your own steadfastness, 18 but grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To Him be the glory, both now and to the day of eternity. Amen.

By the time that that 2 Timothy and 2 Peter are written, these “tradition” writings that have been transmitted are known to both Paul and Peter as the “Scriptures.” Scriptures are what Jesus refers to, and what both Paul and Peter refer to including the gospels and Paul’s epistles. The word used here for Scriptures is G1124/1121 graphe/gramma, which Jesus also uses in the gospels in red letters.

Now, the canonization of the Scriptures into the Bible as it exists today is a very interesting process. I am by far not an expert in this area, but here is the general timeline of everything that happened.

- 33 AD — Jesus was crucified and resurrected. Typical dates say Friday April 7, 30 AD or Friday April 3, 33 AD, with most convincing arguments for 33.
- 33-34 AD — Pentecost, miracles, and the Church grows mightily (Acts 2-6)
- 34-35 AD — Stephen stoned (Acts 7)
- 34-36 AD — Paul’s conversion (Acts 9)
- 36-38 AD — Paul visit to the disciples in Jerusalem and stays with Peter 15 days (Gal 1). Picks up the “tradition” creed in 1 Corinthians 15 quoted above (Acts 9)
- 38 AD — Paul flees Jerusalem and starts preaching in the countryside (Acts 9).
- 39 AD — Peter also starts to preach in the countryside (Acts 9).
- 39-40 AD — Conversion of Cornelius, the first Gentile converted (Acts 10).

- 43 AD — Church at Antioch planted. Believers are first called “Christians” (Acts 11).
- 40-45 AD — Apostles James martyred by beheading via Herod Agrippa (Acts 12).
- It’s likely that James’ martyrdom along with the establishment of Gentile believers, GentilesChurches, and the moniker “Christians” ushers in Christianity not a sect of Judaism but as a stand alone religion.
- 46-49 AD — Paul’s first missionary journey
- 48-49 AD — Galatians written.
- 48-55 AD — Gospel of Mark written. Compiled by Mark based on Peter’s experiences.
- 49 AD — Council of Jerusalem dispute in Acts 15
- 50-52 AD — Paul’s second missionary journey
- 50-60 AD — James written by James (Jesus’ half brother) who was later martyred.
- 50-58 AD — Hebrews written
- 51-52 AD — 1 and 2 Thessalonians written.
- 53-58 AD — Paul’s third missionary journey
- 54 AD — Apostle Philip martyred by torturing and crucifixion.
- 55-56 AD — 1 and 2 Corinthians written.
- 57 AD — Romans written.
- 57-62 — Gospel of Luke written
- 60-62 AD — Paul’s arrest in Jerusalem, imprisonment, and move to Rome. Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon written.
- 62-63 AD — Acts written.
- 63 AD — James (Jesus’ half brother) martyred by throwing him off the top of the temple.
- 63-64 AD — Titus, 1 and 2 Timothy written.
- 64 AD — Apostle Peter martyred by upside down crucifixion
- 64-68 AD — 1 and 2 Peter written
- 65-67 AD — Apostle Paul’s rearrest and beheading by Nero.
- 65-80 AD — Jude written by Jude (Jesus’ half brother)
- 70 AD — Second temple is destroyed.
- 70 AD — Apostle Andrew martyred by crucifixion.
- 70 AD — Apostle Doubting Thomas martyred by impaled by pine spears, red hot plates, and burned alive.
- 70 AD — Apostle Bartholomew martyred by flaying and crucifixion.
- 70 AD — Apostle Matthias martyred by crucifixion and stoning.
- 70-80 AD — Gospel of Matthew written.
- 72 AD — Judas (not Iscariot) martyred by being beaten with sticks.
- 74 AD — Apostle Simon martyred by crucifixion.
- 80-90 AD — Apostle Matthew martyred by beheading.
- 85 AD – Gospel of John written
- 90s AD — 1 and 2 and 3 John, and Revelations written.
- 95-100 AD — John dies without being martyred.
- 100-150 AD (90-175 AD) — P52 manuscript of Gospel of John is the earliest known manuscript of New Testament texts.

- 125 AD Polycarp — refers to Ephesians as Scripture.
- 140 AD Marcion — proposes a canon of 10 Pauline epistles and a [heretical] version of the Gospel of Luke
- 150 AD — Justin Martyr mentions memoirs of the Apostles including Pauline epistles. Held up as authority for living on par with OT Scriptures
- 170 AD — earliest currently known list of books of the NT the Muratorian fragment includes the 4 gospels, Acts, 13 Pauline epistles, and a few others including the Apocalypse of John. Not mentioned were Hebrews, 1 and 2 Peter, James, and perhaps a few of the latter books of 1 and 2 John.
- 180 AD — Irenaeus asserts that there are only 4 legitimate gospels
- Early 200s — Origen proposes canon of all current NT books except with some dispute over James, 2 Peter, and 2 and 3 John.
- 325 AD — First Council at Nicaea. Substantial progress since Origen had been made. Eusebius recognized all NT canon but was doubtful on James, Jude, 2 Peter, and 2,3 John.
- 350 AD – Cyril of Jerusalem all NT canon minus Revelation plus gospel of Thomas (only inclusion of gospel of Thomas in canon every).
- 367 AD — Athanasius of Alexandria lists all 27 books of the current NT and uses "being canonized"
- 382 AD — Council of Rome Pope Damasus issued identical list of NT canon
- 383 AD — Vulgate (Latin) translation of the Bible
- 390 AD — Gregory of Nazianus has 27 canon
- 393 AD — Canon of Trent accepts present Catholic canon
- 394 AD — Jerome has 27 canon
- 397, 419 AD — Council of Carthage under St. Augustine accepts canon of Trent
- 5th century (400s) and onward — Western Church NT canon is the same

Here is one of the recent lectures on Mike Licona on evidence on veracity of the text, translation, and canon.

41:05 time stamp:

- Undisputed (authoritative): 4 gospels, Acts, 10 Paul's letters, 1 John, 1 Peter
- Disputed but included: 3 of Pauls letters (Titus, 1 and 2 Timothy), Hebrews, James, 2 Peter, Jude, Revelation
- Not authoritative, some historical: 1 Clement, Didache, Shepherd, Gospel of Thomas, Ignatius' letters, Gospel of Barnabas, Polycarp
- On the outside: Not even gnostics included in their canons — Gospel of Peter, Gospel of Hebrews, Acts of Paul, Gospel of Philip, Gospel of Mary, Gospel according to the Egyptians

Note: Donalgraeme's Tradition Thursday has been going through a lot of 3rd group on the list if you want to check it out. The Didache is interesting because it was how the early Apostles and disciples of Jesus practiced the commands of Jesus. Also, writings of many other fathers of the Church.

edit: Wintery Knight has a recent post on 2000 year old copy of the book of Leviticus that confirms accurate text to the versions we use today.

Overall, the process is one that is very interesting. Generally, the tendency is to exclude things that are doubtful rather than include. This eliminates as much heresy as possible, as can be seen from the early Church defense against gnosticism and other forms of heresy mentioned in Revelations.

Additionally, there is a tendency to include mainly writings that further the gospel of Jesus Christ rather than on extraneous knowledge or diversions. Paul expressly makes this point multiple times.

> 1 Cor 8:1 Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up.
> 1 Timothy 6:3 If anyone advocates a different doctrine and does not [d]agree with sound words, those of our Lord Jesus Christ, and with the doctrine conforming to godliness, 4 he is conceited and understands nothing; but he [e]has a morbid interest in controversial questions and disputes about words, out of which arise envy, strife, abusive language, evil suspicions, 5 and constant friction between men of depraved mind and deprived of the truth, who suppose that [f]godliness is a means of gain.
> 2 Timothy 3:But realize this, that in the last days difficult times will come. 2 For men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, revilers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, 3 unloving, irreconcilable, malicious gossips, without self-control, brutal, [a]haters of good, 4 treacherous, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, 5 holding to a form of [b]godliness, although they have denied its power; Avoid such men as these. 6 For among them are those who [c]enter into households and captivate [d]weak women weighed down with sins, led on by various impulses, 7 always learning and never able to come to the [e]knowledge of the truth. 8 Just as Jannes and Jambres opposed Moses, so these men also oppose the truth, men of depraved mind, rejected in regard to the faith. 9 But they will not make further progress; for their folly will be obvious to all, just as [f]Jannes's and Jambres's folly was also.

The line between Scripture and tradition appears straight forward, even though the canonization of the Scriptures themselves are a result of tradition.

Debate over something like transubstantiation seems more and more like controversial questions that don't help believers learn how to live a more fruitful life in Christ Jesus. We are commanded to take the Eucharist/Communion. We don't necessarily need to know what actually happens to the bread and wine when we take it, even though questions like that could be interesting to know.

Jesus was able to sum up the Law and the Prophets into two commandments: 'Love God and Love your Neighbor.' So too, we have one of the basic summaries of the Christian faith straight from the mouth of Jesus: John 13:34 and John 15:12 "A new commandment I give to you: That you love one another, as I have loved you, that you also love one another." When the gospel and commandments of Jesus are not the focus, we are going off track.

Conclusion

Telephone. Remember that game? The further you tend to get away from the original voice, the more distorted the meaning has gotten. We know that the New Testament Scriptures are written by the Apostles themselves (Matthew, John, Peter, Paul) or colleagues of the Apostles (Mark, Luke), who often had direct interaction with Jesus.

To say that we now have "new knowledge" on what Jesus and His apostles (to whom Jesus gave authority to spread the gospel) actually meant seems exceedingly disingenuous, like a lot of Protestant denominations on divorce and headship. This is how you get perversion of Scriptures such as egalitarianism and complementarism, which Dalrock has dissected complementarism in All roads lead to Duluth and The root of the problem. The only Biblical marriage is Patriarchal.

This is why I try to read a lot of the writings of the Church fathers as well as the Scriptures themselves. Generally, I think the Orthodox have it right by only affirming Patristic writings and the 7 ecumenical councils which condemned various heresies. They also haven't changed any of their tradition in the past 1000+ (?) years if I remember correctly. If I have Orthodox commenters, and you know some confirmation would be great.

One of the major failings of the Evangelical Church is to try to make the Scriptures culturally relevant. In reality, the Scriptures are Truth among a relativist culture.

Jesus' message, as preserved by Church tradition, is fairly straight forward and clear. I don't see a reason to bring up controversial questions on extraneous things in the Scripture, especially when it's clear that the Scripture itself and the early Church fathers were not concerned about those things. They were concerned about living a daily life devoted to God, and fulfilling Jesus' commands to spread the gospel, make disciples, and baptize new believers.

In my humble opinion.

They hate everything that God calls blessed

September 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was going to name this post Inverted Values, but I decided to name it the above instead.

Carlotta from Dalrock's hierarchy equals abuse makes this comment:

> Interesting isn't it? If you work as a nurse for strangers, cook for strangers in a restaurant or teach other people's children those are heroic career choices. Do any of it for your flesh and blood and you are an oppressed idiot slave.
> I reframe it this way when femenists start their crap. I tell them I am a strong and independent women who has made a choice to live my own lifestyle and their bullying and intolerance of my liberated choices will not be tolerated in my safe space. I tell ya, the expressions are priceless.

The real interesting thing is the inversion of values across culture.

- Abortion — No value on children.
- Sex — Pre-marital sex is great. Withholding sex in marriage is good if she doesn't feel like it.
- Marriage — all marriage is good, except one man-one woman. If you only believe in one man and one woman we're going to fine you and put you in jail.
- College — If you're a Christian your campus group isn't allow. But everyone else can have one. If I educate you in this class correctly, by the end you won't be a Christian. But no other religion.
- Family — Dad is doofus. The wife and kids know better than him.
- Family — Have 0-2 kids that's great. Have 5+ kids you're looked at like you're crazy.

When you examine it in the context of feminism, it shouldn't be all that surprising though. They hate everything that God calls blessed*.

Obviously, there's many more examples, but taking care of the family versus taking care of strangers is only another such example of inversion of values. Some are more obvious than others, and Christians also fall for some of them.

Carlotta makes the right choice to confront it head on and make people think about it.

Service is not submission

September 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This seems to be a common theme coming out from both egalitarian and complementarian camps. I was reminded of this from the recent Dalrock post on hierarchy equals abuse.

Service in Greek is diacon (diaconia/diaconos), which is also the word for Deacons. The Scripture has this to say on being a servant and how to serve:

> Mark 9:33 And they came to Capernaum. And when he was in the house he asked them, “What were you discussing on the way?” 34 But they kept silent, for on the way they had argued with one another about who was the greatest. 35 And he sat down and called the twelve. And he said to them, “If anyone would be first, he must be last of all and servant of all.” 36 And he took a child and put him in the midst of them, and taking him in his arms, he said to them, 37 “Whoever receives one such child in my name receives me, and whoever receives me, receives not me but him who sent me.”
> John 13:12 So when He had washed their feet, and taken His garments and reclined at the table again, He said to them, “Do you know what I have done to you? 13 You call Me Teacher and Lord; and [b]you are right, for so I am. 14 If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another’s feet. 15 For I gave you an example that you also should do as I did to you. 16 Truly, truly, I say to you, a slave is not greater than his master, nor is one who is sent greater than the one who sent him. 17 If you know these things, you are blessed if you do them.

However, serving is not the same as submission. Submission is being under the authority of another. The fact that a husband is called to serve his wife does not mean that he is to submit to his wife. Jesus serves the disciples by washing their feet, but in the same chapter gives them a command:

> John 13:31 Therefore when he had gone out, Jesus *said, “Now [d]is the Son of Man glorified, and God [e]is glorified in Him; 32 [f]if God is glorified in Him, God will also glorify Him in Himself, and will glorify Him immediately. 33 Little children, I am with you a little while longer. You will seek Me; and as I said to the Jews, now I also say to you, ‘Where I am going, you cannot come.’ 34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another.”

Service is to meet another’s need. Submission is to be obedient to authority.

Husbands are called to serve their wives to meet their needs. Eph 5 shows us that meeting a wives need is to “to sanctify them” (make holy by pointing out areas of sin and repentance), “love their wives as their own body” (do anything for her that you would also do for you) x3, and to “nourish and cherish” (provide for internal and external needs like food, clothing, sex, etc.). Wives are called to submit to their husbands and be obedient to their commands.

Also, it’s easy to get needs confused with wants. The Scripture defines the requirements of the marriage relationship. For example, for the wife the marital needs are leadership, provision (clothing, food), sex, and honor as a coheir in Christ from the husband. For the husband, submission, respect, chaste and respectful behavior, gentle and quiet spirit, and sex from the wife. Beyond that are solely wants. If you don’t get what you want, you shouldn’t be angry if you don’t get it. Yes, things like Bible studies and prayer together are good, but they are also wants. They aren’t requirements. It may be one way a husband can lead, but he may choose to do it a different way.

Yet there are so many ‘pastors’ who warp service into submission. Ostensibly because of deceptive thinking that if a husband is godly then a wife will be godly and if a husband is ungodly then the wife will be ungodly. This has been shown to be false.

Marital needs, marital wants and maturity

September 27, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I brought up this topic in the previous post on service is not submission.

> 2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is [h]inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for [i]training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

If we believe that the Scriptures are God-inspired, then we should expect that they lay out the various requirements for roles and responsibilities in particular relationship situations (not simply marriage, but using marriage as an example). Therefore, the Scriptures tell us what are needs and everything else that is left out, by elimination, are wants.

> Also, it's easy to get needs confused with wants. The Scripture defines the requirements of the marriage relationship. For example, for the wife the marital needs are leadership, provision (clothing, food), sex, and honor as a coheir in Christ from the husband. For the husband, submission, respect, chaste and respectful behavior, gentle and quiet spirit, and sex from the wife. Beyond that are solely wants. If you don't get what you want, you shouldn't be angry if you don't get it. Yes, things like Bible studies and prayer together are good, but they are also wants. They aren't requirements. It may be one way a husband can lead, but he may choose to do it a different way.

In speaking about the marital relationship, the Scripture delineate the bare necessities — the needs — in various passages which I alluded to above: Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3, 1 Cor 7, 1 Cor 11, and so on. These are the things that are required of each spouse that glorify God on earth.

The subversion to marital roles and responsibilities reminiscent of egalitarians and complementarians are to their own shame. Their perversion is due to idolatrous focus on the culture, women, feelings, or anything other than the Lord.

The necessities, after all, are only necessities. Most of Paul's epistles and writings of Peter, John, and the apostles to the early Church contain many warnings about walking astray. Living a Christian life is so much more than avoiding walking astray. Indeed, we can infer, from the commands of Jesus, that we are to walk far beyond bare necessities: "Love one another, as I have loved you, that you also love one another."

> 1 Timothy 1:8 But we know that the Law is good, if one uses it lawfully, 9 realizing the fact that law is not made for a righteous person, but for those who are lawless and rebellious, for the ungodly and sinners, for the unholy and profane, for those who kill their fathers or mothers, for murderers 10 [f]and [g]immoral men [h]and homosexuals [i]and kidnappers [j]and liars [k]and perjurers, and whatever else is contrary to sound teaching, 11 according to the > glorious gospel of the blessed God, with which I have been entrusted.

The Law of Moses, after all, is for lawbreakers not for the righteous. Following the Law is good, but we are not made to simply follow the law. Similarly, many of the commands of the New Testament are simply New Laws. They point us in the right direction, but simply following them won't lead us to the fullness of Christ.

> Ephesians 3:16 that He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inner man, 17 so that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; and that you, being rooted and grounded in love, 18 may be able to comprehend with all the [m]saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, 19 and to know the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge, that you may be filled up to all the fullness of God. 20 Now to Him who is able to do far more abundantly beyond all that we ask or think, according to the power that works within us, 21 to Him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations [n]forever and ever. Amen.

If we have to be constantly reminded to live a fruitful Christian life, according to the various commands of the New Testament, then are we not simply newborn babes that require liquid sustenance rather than solid food?

> 1 Corinthians 3:And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ. 2 I gave you milk to drink, not solid food; for you were not yet able to receive it. Indeed, even now you are not yet able, 3 for you are still fleshly. For since there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not fleshly, and are you not walking [a]like mere men?
> Hebrews 5:11 Concerning [g]him we have much to say, and it is hard to explain, since you have become dull of hearing. 12 For though [h]by this time you ought to be teachers, you have need again for someone to teach you the [i]elementary principles of the oracles of God, and you have come to need milk and not solid food. 13 For everyone who partakes only of milk is not accustomed to the word of righteousness, for he is an infant. 14 But solid food is for the mature, who because of practice have their senses trained to discern good and evil.

Indeed, it is the babes in the faith and the deceived yet seeking that require the commands of the New Testament. This is most of the people that you see in the Churches today. They need the liquid milk in order to re-calibrate their consciences toward righteousness according to what glorifies God here on earth.

But to those of us who know better and have aligned our conscience to the word of Truth, we have a greater responsibility to live and to act like one who is neither ignorant or foolish.

> Ephesians 4:11 And He gave some as apostles, and some as prophets, and some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers, 12 for the equipping of the [d]saints for the work of service, to the building up of the body of Christ; 13 until > we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the [e]knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature [f]which belongs to the fullness of Christ. 14 [g]As a result, we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness [h]in deceitful scheming; 15 but [i]speaking the truth in love, [j]we are to grow up in all aspects into Him who is the head, even Christ, 16 from whom the whole body, being fitted and held together [k]by what every joint supplies, according to the [l]proper working of each individual part, causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love.

Rather, we are to walk into maturity, through exercising our spiritual gifts and learning to grow in the positions we are placed at for the season. To walk into an example of Christ's love for those inside the Church and to those outside the Church. Indeed, those inside the Church that are deceived may need it more desperately than those outside.

Addendum: Ephesians 1-4 is so good for exploring what maturity in the faith looks like. Ephesians 5-6 are commands because those in the Church at Ephesus were still babes in the faith.

If you're spiritually immature, you should expect your wife won't submit

September 28, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Snapper has an interesting saga with his pastors much like JoJ did back a few years ago.

Overall, the pastors seem committed to the stances that:

- 1 Corinthians on women being silent in Church needs to be looked at in terms of cultural relevance.
- If you're spiritually immature, you should expect your wife won't submit. Similar to intelligent submission. Pastors putting more "qualifiers" on submission against Scripture.
- The wife needs to the leader of her home if her husband isn't leading [spiritually].
- Women/wives should be able to teach [from the pulpit] if what they are saying is correct.

I've already covered some of this before in why women are prohibited from certain positions in the Church, but overall their stance reeks of the idol of "progressivism."

For those of you new, Progressivism is pretty much a catch-all term for feminism and its liberal cousins. It is something along the lines of "we know more today than we did yesterday hence what we did in the past is now outdated."

Obviously, progressivism is based on so-called knowledge, and we know the Scripture's stance on knowledge:

> Proverbs 1:7 The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; Fools despise wisdom and instruction.
> 1 Corinthians 8:Now concerning things sacrificed to idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge [a]makes arrogant, but love edifies. 2 If anyone supposes that he knows anything, he has not yet known as he ought to know; 3 but if anyone loves God, he is known by Him.

It's funny how so many pastors want to bring the Scriptures to "cultural relevance." Christians are not supposed to be culturally relevant. They are supposed to salt and light. We're supposed to stand out for being different. Jesus warned about being culturally relevant:

> Matthew 5:13 "You are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has become tasteless, how [e]can it be made salty again? It is no longer good for anything, except to be thrown out and trampled under foot by men.
> 14 "You are the light of the world. A city set on a [f]hill cannot be hidden; 15 nor does anyone light a lamp and put it under a [g]basket, but on the lampstand, and it gives light to all who are in the house. 16 Let your light shine before men in > such a way that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven.

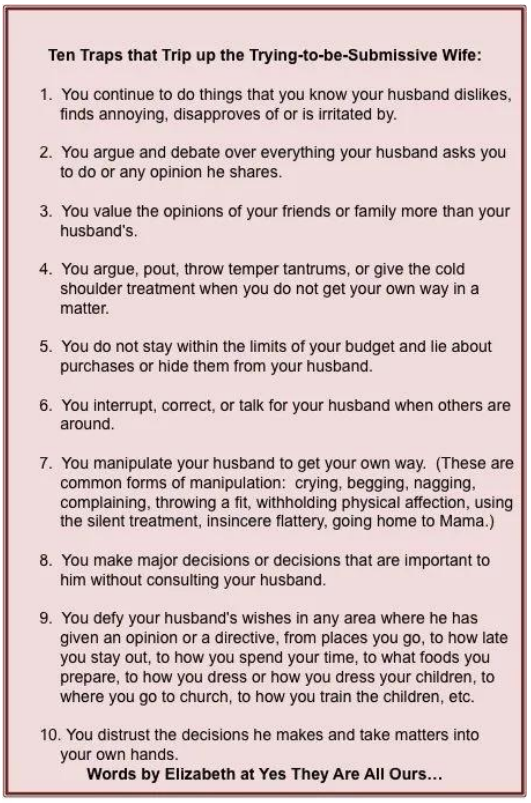
Here's some Christian common sense, often rarely used: if your stance on any theological issue in the Scriptures agrees with culture, you're probably wrong. Culture is in direct opposition to Christ. They hate everything God calls blessed.

If the Scriptures tell us that women should not be teaching and/or having authority over men in Church, and culture tells you otherwise… then why would you believe the culture if you're a Christian? Even if what they are saying is theologically sound, it's not their place.

All this "cultural wisdom" being integrated into Christianity and you wonder why Western Christianity is dying. It's no different than the culture on which it is trying to reach. It's not salty and it's not light.



Also, it seems like this whole "saga" was much less about women preaching in church but rather about cutting men down, specifically Snapper. It only "started" after they got wind of his personal situation, and they appear to be making snarky messages to antagonize after preaching about it in Church.

Ten traps that trip up the trying to be submissive wife

September 29, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was sifting through some things on my computer, and I ended up stumbling on this image which I don't know where I got it from. It may have been on a Christian woman's blog or somewhere out in the wider manosphere or men's blog. Obviously, the original is from Elizabeth on the blog referenced at the bottom.

Wives always get confused when they ask "how" or "when" they are being disrespectful. Well, here's a good list.

A lot of these things are both attitudes and actions. A woman/wife can fix all of her actions, but if her attitude comes off bad too then it's pretty much the same. Respect is an attitude that is translated into how you act.

All I have is Yours

About 2 weeks ago, a rock bounced up off the road and hit my windshield. Initially, I was super surprised because I was looking somewhere else and it startled me. After the initial surprise wore off, it was just disappointing. I thought I could drive with it for a while since it was pretty small, but it ended up getting bigger and bigger as I drove. It was initially about 6-8 inches but it enlarged to over 18-20 inches over a few days of driving. Next week I ended up calling my insurance company to figure out how to get it fixed. I was quite disappointed about it since finances have been on the tighter side at the moment.

As I was getting in the car to drive to my church's small group I remember thinking "This sucks. I'm going to have to pay $325 of my money to get it fixed." Right after I thought that, I felt the conviction of the Lord right away and the words that popped into my head immediately were "Your money? It's all my money." I've had a few experiences like this before, but this was probably the most crystal clear and immediate one to date.

I repented of that right away, and prayed that I would be able to think of all of the money I have been given to steward correctly. I'd rather it be a $325 lesson than a much bigger one in the future. For example, as righteous as Job was, I don't exactly want to be in a situation that is anything like his unless I am called to be. I need to be a good steward with little so that I can be entrusted with more.

It is a good reminder that being a Christian with finances is not simply about what you give but what you do with all that you have received.

Holiness, Sanctification, Purity, and Chastity

October 12, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I haven't done a word study in a while, since ones such as joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma. Today we will be looking at holiness, sanctification, purity, and chastity.

God is not described as "Love" but as "Holy" when prophets have visions of heaven. The main two instances we have of this are in Isaiah and Revelation. Therefore, we can infer that this "holiness" is a trait of God that is important.

> Isaiah 6:1 In the year of King Uzziah's death I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, > lofty and exalted, with the train of His robe filling the temple. 2 Seraphim stood > above Him, each having six wings: with two he covered his face, and with two he > covered his feet, and with two he flew. 3 And one called out to another and said,
> "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hosts, The [a]whole earth is full of His glory."
> Revelation 4:2 Immediately I was [a]in the Spirit; and behold, a throne was > standing in heaven, and One sitting on the throne. 3 And He who was sitting was > like a jasper stone and a sardius in appearance; and there was a [b]rainbow > around the throne, like an emerald in appearance. 4 Around the throne were > twenty-four thrones; and upon the thrones I saw twenty-four elders sitting, > clothed in white garments, and golden crowns on their heads.
> 5 Out from the throne come flashes of lightning and sounds and peals of thunder.
> And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the > seven Spirits of God; 6 and before the throne there was something like a sea of > glass, like crystal; and in the [c]center and around the throne, four living > creatures full of eyes in front and behind. 7 The first creature was like a lion, and > the second creature like a calf, and the third creature had a face like that of a > man, and the fourth creature was like a flying eagle. 8 And the four living > creatures, each one of them having six wings, are full of eyes around and within;
> and day and night [d]they do not cease to say, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord > God, the Almighty, who was and who is and who [e]is to come."

The root word of grace — charis — is the same as the root words for joy, forgiveness, and charisma. In that post we can infer that it is by God's grace that we obtain the fruit of the Spirit joy, in His grace we find forgiveness, and through His grace we speak with charisma.

It also just so happens that the root word of holy — hagios — is also the same root in sanctification, purity, chastity, and holiness derivatives. From Strong's dictionary:

> Holy — G40 — ἅγιος — hagios — hag'-ee-os
> From ἅγος hagos (an awful thing) compare G53, [H2282]; sacred (physically > pure, morally blameless or religious, ceremonially consecrated): – (most) holy

> (one, thing), saint. Total KJV occurrences: 229
> Sanctify — G37 — ἁγιάζω — hagiazō — hag-ee-ad’-zo
> From G40; to make holy, that is, (ceremonially) purify or consecrate; (mentally) to venerate: – hallow, be holy, sanctify. Total KJV occurrences: 29
> Purity — G47 — ἁγνεία — hagneia — hag-ni’-ah
> From G53; cleanliness (the quality), that is, (specifically) chastity: – purity. Total KJV occurrences: 2
> Chaste — G53 — ἁγνός — hagnos — hag-nos’
> From the same as G40; properly clean, that is, (figuratively) innocent, modest, perfect: – chaste, clean, pure. Total KJV occurrences: 8
> “Holiness” in NT — hagiosmos (G38), hagiotes (G41), hagiosune (G42)

I wrote a bit on this in the leadership of a husband, but it is with this lens that Ephesians 5 needs to be looked at:

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify (G37 hagiazo) her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy (G40 hagios) and blameless.

The love a husband shows is a sacrificial love (gave Himself up) that is directed toward a purpose. That purpose is sanctification. The process of sanctification is to make holy, and that is done by cleansing [from the things of this world]. The end result is to be holy and blameless.

Therefore, the goal of the Christian husband is to lead in a godly manner and also draw her toward the cross without being bitter (Col 3) and being understanding [as she is a weaker vessel and as coheirs in Christ] (1 Pet 3).

To paraphrase Chad: “drag my wife kicking and screaming toward the cross.”

> 2 Corinthians 11:1 I wish that you would bear with me in a little foolishness; but [a]indeed you are bearing with me. 2 For I am jealous for you with a godly jealousy; for I betrothed you to one husband, so that to Christ I might present you as a pure virgin. 3 But I am afraid that, as the serpent deceived Eve by his craftiness, your minds will be led astray from the simplicity and purity of devotion to Christ. 4 For if [b]one comes and preaches another Jesus whom we have not preached, or you receive a different spirit which you have not received, or a different gospel which you have not accepted, you bear this beautifully.

I find the context of a chaste [virgin] bride to be interesting, as it represents something that is untainted and unstained. Essentially, holy and blameless. This is a theme throughout the entire Scriptures from the Law to the New to Covenant.

It should be no surprise that the qualities that wives are supposed to take on, even as to ungodly husbands conform around this standard:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Now to get to the main point. They hate everything that God has called blessed prompted this word study. However, the more I examine the issue from a Scriptural perspective, it's more along the lines of:

> "God is holy and they hate everything that is holy."

When we come to the issue of how the culture butts up against God, who is the standard of holiness, we see that culture wants to debase all of the the things that are holy and uphold abominations, atrocities, obscenities, and anathemas. They hate Judeo-Christian morality and ethics. The only "people" that are persecuted are Jews and Christians, and the most persecuted religion is Christianity to varying degrees in the West and much more radically in the 10-40 window.

As an example, this is why I am troubled when things of "progressivism" and "feminism" make their way into churches. God's Word is clear that women are forbidden from having authority over and teaching men in the Church body. It's concerning that many Christians are deceived by the spirits of the age. Their "progressive minds" are deluded into believing that the Scripture is only "culturally relevant" and not universal Truth about the human condition.

There is a lot of cultural change, but one thing that is consistent about every culture is its indirect or direct opposition to God and His Word. This is not a bug but a feature. Human nature has stayed the same since we were created. Those who do not follow God follow their own desires, trading the holy for unholy.

Therefore, in closing, let me simply reiterate the main point of If you're spiritually immature, you should expect your wife won't submit:

Here's some Christian common sense, often rarely used: if your stance on any theological issue in the Scriptures agrees with culture, you're probably wrong. Culture is in direct opposition to Christ. They hate everything that God has called blessed… or in other words, God is holy and they hate everything that is holy.

We are to become like God, through Christ’s sacrifice and the power of the Holy Spirit. The Scripture provide a solid outline for how to do that, and most of the process is about rejecting, replacing, and resisting cultural mores.

Sunday school is superfluous

October 13, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In general, I think a lot of Christians — and perhaps not just Protestants — believe that Sunday school is the way for their children to learn about God. However, when we examine the Scriptures that is false.

> Deueteronomy 6:1 “Now this is the commandment, the statutes and the judgments which the Lord your God has commanded me to teach you, that you might do them in the land where you are going over to possess it, 2 so that you and your son and your grandson might fear the Lord your God, to keep all His statutes and His commandments which I command you, all the days of your life, and that your days may be prolonged. 3 O Israel, you should listen and [a]be careful to do it, that it may be well with you and that you may multiply greatly, just as the Lord, the God of your fathers, has promised you, in a land flowing with milk and honey.
> 4 “Hear, O Israel! The Lord is our God, the Lord is one! 5 You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might. 6 These words, which I am commanding you today, shall be on your heart. 7 You shall teach them diligently to your sons and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way and when you lie down and when you rise up. 8 You shall bind them as a sign on your hand and they shall be as [b]frontals [c]on your forehead. 9 You shall write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates.

Spiritual education was and is supposed to be to continuous and daily walk. It is supposed to be from fathers to sons and the entire household. Church — or rather the gathering of believers — serves to reinforce the Christian values that are taught by fathers to sons.

With that said there’s no excuse for your average Christian to be uneducated about what Jesus and the Scriptures speak. We live in a time where you have access to hundreds of different translations of the Bible at your fingertips. We have compilations of writings of the early Church fathers.

We are perhaps the most spiritually rich in resources of any generation in history, yet we are headed toward being one of the most spiritually bankrupt generations.

A man's take on potentially dating or marrying a woman with a past

October 14, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since I get a slightly different audience than Donal, there are some good questions asked by a man on potentially dating/marrying a woman with a past. Here they are:

What he was curious about was the effect of their settling versus a woman with a long and/or troubled "history." Here are some questions he asked:

- As a man, should you care if a woman is settling for you, assuming that she has been chaste?
- Does it even make a difference that she has been chaste?
- How do you find out or realize this is happening?
- What should you consider if you find yourself in this scenario?

Here are my answers.

1. As a man, should you care if a woman is settling for you, assuming that she has been chaste?

"Settling" is too subjective to require an answer. I think you have to examine her "expectations" specifically in terms of what she was looking for.

An example of this is perhaps an archetype she always wanted such as say tall, dark, and handsome. I don't think moving away from an archetype build is necessarily settling in a bad way, even though it may happen as she gets older.

On the other hand, if you're dating a woman and she's going all dreamy eyed and talking up men in her life that she thinks are awesome or that she's had crushes on then that's a red flag. Why is she with you then… except as plan B? All of those things she's wished or wanted in a marriage… if they're not you then that's questionable.

2. Does it even make a difference that she has been chaste?

Yes. The divorce statistics speak for themselves, and I'm sure a large part of that is that only half of women marry the best sex of their lives. Comparisons breed dissatisfaction and jealousy.

However, it needs to be measured in terms of her behavior before and after Christ. For example, I'd assert that it's better to be with a non-virgin Christian woman who has been chaste and modest since she became a believer for years than a lukewarm Christian who has done everything but sex and has a nonchalant attitude about chastity.

We know a lot about who people are by their fruit. Out of the heart comes attitudes and attitudes lead to actions, whether godly or ungodly.

3. How do you find out or realize this is happening?

Ask the hard questions. Talk about sex. Vetting is important.

She always answers first, before you say what you like.

4. What should you consider if you find yourself in this scenario?

At the end of the day, we all make mistakes. If she has made mistakes (and repented with visible change — good fruit) and you can live with it then go for it. If you can't get over it, then don't make a big(ger) commitment to something that bothers you.

The same goes for you (the man). If there are thing in your history that she can't get over then let it go no matter how good of a prospect you are now. It will make her unhappy in the long run, and you don't want to be married to someone who doesn't think they're getting a good deal. That's a recipe for disaster.

"Baggage" is a very real thing. God forgives our sins, but the vast majority of time He does not take away the earthly consequences of our sins. Sometimes these consequences follow us into the future: criminal record, substance abuse, credit/money record, STDs, infertility, and so on. Each person needs to decide on their own what is too much for them to handle.

Marriage is a lifelong covenant. You need to be selective, discerning, and wise about who you marry because you will become one flesh with that person. All of their "baggage" becomes yours. I believe substantial amounts of baggage (especially mental and psychological) can be dumped. However, it takes confession and wrestling with God in Scriptural Truth, prayer, petition, fasting, and often tears. There is, of course, no guarantee that there will be healing either. Scars are sometimes there to remind us that we need a Savior, even though that may cause someone to not view you as a potential marriage candidate.

In addition, don't think you can change each other. If you're unhappy with something then you need to be able to speak it and see how they respond. Not figuring out this stuff before marriage is also a recipe for disaster.

Divorce advocates are the same as egalitarians

October 15, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When I say divorce advocates I mean the people — Christians or otherwise — who try to advocate that the exception clause in Matthew 5 and Matthew 19 mean that a husband can divorce his wife if she commits adultery. I've already outlined the total case from the Scriptures on why this is false in On divorce Part 4.

What Jesus actually says is two separate statements:

- Don't divorce period (v6): "What God has put together let man not separate"
- You can put away if there was fraud (v9): "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery."). This refers to Deut 22 where there was an invalid covenant marriage if the wife was supposed to be a virgin but was not. In other words, you can put away (without a writ of divorce) if there was deception because it formed an invalid marriage.

This is not difficult to understand given the whole context of the Scriptures by textual analysis and overarching theme. This unifies all of the Scriptures on putting away and divorce (putting away + writ of divorce) with each other: Deut 22, Deut 24, Jeremiah 3, Isaiah 50, Malachi 2, Matthew 5, Matthew 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, Romans 7, 1 Corinthians 5, 1 Corinthians 7, and the case of Joseph and Mary.

In comparison to the egalitarians

Egalitarians hang their argument mainly on two specific versus:

- Galatians 3:28 There is neither Jew nor Gentile, neither slave nor free, nor is there male and female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus.
- Ephesians 5:21 Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

However, there are many other passages in the Scriptures such as 1 Cor 11, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Peter 3 that state wives should submit to their husbands. They radically ignore most of the other Scriptures to hang onto a fringe opinion.

Additionally, the egalitarians try to reinterpret words like headship to mean 'source' instead of an authoritative position. The divorce advocates try to reinterpret "put away" to mean "divorce" and "fornication" to mean "adultery" when the Scriptures never do that.

- Pharisees said: Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?
- Jesus said: Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

- What Jesus would have said, if He meant you could divorce for adultery: Matthew 19:9 Whosoever shall put away AND GIVE A WRIT OF DIVORCE TO his wife, except it be for ADULTERY, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

It is logically incoherent to hang on to the meaning that fornication means adultery because Jesus would have used the word adultery if he meant adultery. Plus, this means that Jesus would have agreed with the Pharisees' initial statement. Jesus never agrees with the Pharisees. The disciples response affirms that Jesus was not agreeing with the Pharisees: Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. In other words, if you can't divorce period then it's better not to marry.

This is not to mention what the apostles and early Church fathers taught on marriage, which is no divorce period and there is no putting away unless there was an invalid marriage (like 1 Cor 5). They're the ones who understood this passage directly from the mouth of Jesus.

Likewise, the early Church did not permit women in leadership positions, and men were the head of their families.

Conclusion

The Word Jesus gives is logically clear (paraphrased):

- v6: Don't divorce period.
- v9: Deception and/or illicit sexual unions don't form a valid covenant [marriage]. (Deception: Deut 22; Incest: 1 Cor 5).

I've gone through four iterations of the "On divorce" outlining the total case, and every time it's the same old Pharisaical hard heartedness on this passage. The divorce advocates are like the egalitarians. They twist Scripture to fit what they want.

It's a hard, hard, hard, hard Word. Even the disciples agreed that it was an insane Word: If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

Let's not fool ourselves that divorce in a valid covenant marriage is ever the right thing, even if a spouse commits adultery. Jesus never permits divorce for adultery.

Grace, mercy, and Christian perception of sin

October 17, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that irks me about the modern necropolis (e.g. churchianity) is the reference to innocence and flawlessness — I'm looking at you MercyMe, although they are not the only Christian band to do this — in regard to being believers and children of God.

> No matter the bumps
> No matter the bruises
> No matter the scars
> Still the truth is
> The cross has made
> The cross has made you flawless

The grace — unmerited favor — given to us is the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of our sins. Accepted grace given to us results in mercy — the just judgment of God against our sins does not count against us.

In other words, you're guilty of sins. You deserve punishment for them. The verdict of a Just and Righteous God against our sins is a guilty verdict. The wages of sin is death. However, by accepting the grace given to us by God, the gift of salvation through Jesus Christ, we obtain mercy where our sins are not eternally held against us.

This doesn't make us innocent or flawless! We still sinned and by extension are guilty, and we still need to ask for forgiveness of our sin. What this means is that we are not condemned in Christ Jesus.

> Romans 8:1 Therefore there is now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus. 2 For the law of the Spirit of life [a]in Christ Jesus has set you free from the law of sin and of death. 3 For what the Law could not do, [b]weak as it was through the flesh, God did: sending His own Son in the likeness of [c]sinful flesh and as an offering for sin, He condemned sin in the flesh, 4 so that the requirement of the Law might be fulfilled in us, who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit. 5 For those who are according to the flesh set their minds on the things of the flesh, but those who are according to the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. 6 For the mind set on the flesh is death, but the mind set on the Spirit is life and peace, 7 because the mind set on the flesh is hostile toward God; for it does not subject itself to the law of God, for it is not even able to do so, 8 and those who are in the flesh cannot please God.
> 9 However, you are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if indeed the Spirit of God dwells in you. But if anyone does not have the Spirit of Christ, he does not belong to Him. 10 If Christ is in you, though the body is dead because of sin, yet the spirit is [d]alive because of righteousness. 11 But if the Spirit of Him who raised

> Jesus from the dead dwells in you, He who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies [e]through His Spirit who dwells in you.

The problem with doctrine and songs such as these is that they give us a false perception of grace and mercy.

If, by grace, we are innocent and flawless then there is no need to repent of our sins when we do them. There is no need for mercy because we are not guilty. However, we know that we are sinful and still make mistakes. We always need to be ready to apologize and repent of the sins that we commit, even though we are in Christ and desire to walk in obedience to His commands.

This is the true thrust of the Christian walk.

- We still make mistakes, and we still need forgiveness. We need to be able to acknowledge when we sin and repent. Even though we are guilty and deserve punishment, we are not condemned to the punishment (e.g. wages of sin is death). And that is a reason for peace and joy in Christ.
- We strive to set our minds on Christ so that we walk into completeness and perfection like God. We aim to continue to mature spiritually, so that we take off the old which is being corrupted by deceitful desires and put on the new in true righteousness and holiness. As we become more like Christ, we learn to more consistently Love one another like Jesus has loved us and resist/flee from temptation.

As you can see, it’s very easy for us to fall prey to ‘fast and loose’ theology, especially in modern Christian songs. By all accounts, MercyMe is one of the better bands out there in regard to adhering to sound doctrine, but even they make mistakes which can throw people off.

Head coverings

October 18, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is something that both Moose and Cane have discussed before in multiple different posts (which I can't all find at the moment), but I'm going to go over it a bit too.

> 1 Corinthians 11:1 Be imitators of me, just as I also am of Christ.
> 2 Now I praise you because you remember me in everything and hold firmly to the traditions, just as I delivered them to you. 3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ. 4 Every man who has something on his head while praying or prophesying disgraces his head. 5 But every woman who has her head uncovered while praying or prophesying disgraces her head, for she is one and the same as the woman [c]whose head is shaved. 6 For if a woman does not cover [d]her head, let her also [e]have her hair cut off; but if it is disgraceful for a woman to [f]have her hair cut off or [g]her head shaved, let her cover [h]her head. 7 For a man ought not to have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of man. 8 For man [i]does not originate from woman, but woman from man; 9 for indeed man was not created for the woman's sake, but woman for the man's sake.
> 10 Therefore the woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels. 11 However, in the Lord, neither is woman [j]independent of man, nor is man [k]independent of woman. 12 For as the woman [l]originates from the man, so also the man has his birth through the woman; and all things [m]originate from God. 13 Judge [n]for yourselves: is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered? 14 Does not even nature itself teach you that if a man has long hair, it is a dishonor to him, 15 but if a woman has long hair, it is a glory to her? For her hair is given to her for a covering. 16 But if one is inclined to be contentious, we have no [o]other practice, nor have the churches of God.

The key points of this passage are:

- Paul urges the Corinthians to act as he does as he imitates Christ.
- There is a hierarchy of authority: God > Christ > man > woman
- Men who prophesy or pray with their head covered are disgraced, but women who prophesy or pray without their head covered are disgraced (and it is if as their heads are shaved).
- The reason for this is not just from an authority perspective, but also a creation order perspective.
- The symbol of [being under] authority is because of the angels (as an angel is assigned to each Church to watch over it: Revelations 2-3)

- Repeating that it's a disgrace for covering a man's head, and disgrace for an uncovered woman's head. Long hair is a glory to a woman, much like a head covering.
- Tells us that this is a practice of the Churches of God. It is not solely to the Corinthian Church and thus the culture of the Corinthian Church but of all of God's Churches. It's universal.

There's a lot of commentary on this passage and a lot of debate. There is some cultural context to this in terms of prostitution and not covering the head.

The argument from creation order on head coverings is similar to women not being able to teach or have authority over men in 1 Timothy 2. Conveniently, this is also one of the "culturally relevant" passages that many "liberal" Churches like to explain away.

It is universally "disgraceful" for women to have short hair. This is no coincidence. While outward appearances may be disgraceful, outward appearance is not everything. In fact, 1 Peter 3 states beauty in wives is not merely outward but inward. To win unbelieving husbands a wife should have chaste and respectful behavior, a gentle and quiet spirit, and submit to her husband. Such methods and actions outwardly show her respect and submission. It makes sense then that head coverings are likewise an outward expression of a symbol of [being under] authority as chaste and respectful behavior, a gentle and quiet spirit, and submissiveness is to an unbelieving husband.

Indeed, the symbol of being under authority is to her own husband and God. It is a form of outwardly honoring the principles of godly living in Christ Jesus. Not only that, but because of the angels [of each church] as they are also under the authority of God and are commissioned by God to judge our obedience. For example,

> Revelation 3:14 "To the angel of the church in Laodicea write:
> The Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the [k]Beginning of the creation of God, says this: 15 'I know your deeds, thalmostat you are neither cold nor hot; I wish that you were cold or hot. 16 So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will [l]spit you out of My mouth. 17 Because you say, "I am rich, and have become wealthy, and have need of nothing," and you do not know that you are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked, 18 I advise you to buy from Me gold refined by fire so that you may become rich, and white garments so that you may clothe yourself, and that the shame of your nakedness will not be revealed; and eye salve to anoint your eyes so that you may see. 19 Those whom I love, I reprove and discipline; therefore be zealous and repent. 20 Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and will dine with him, and he with Me. 21 He who overcomes, I will grant to him to sit down with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat down with My Father on His throne. 22 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'"

Are the Scriptures only culturally relevant or is it timeless Truth?

If they're only "culturally relevant" then what's the point? We can just pick and choose what we want to obey in the Bible. Picking and choosing what you want to obey is the modicum of almost everyone who calls themselves Christians in the Western hemisphere. Oh, don't want to go to Church? I guess I'll only go when I feel like it. Oh, don't want to obey my husband? Guess I won't. Oh, I want a divorce but the Bible says not to… well, there were irreconcilable differences so God wants me to leave.

Indeed, the Scripture itself in v16 speaks that this is not "culturally relevant" [to the Corinthians] but a practice of all of the Churches of God in all of the various cultures that they were in from: Judea, to Africa, to Asia Minor, to Greece, to Italy and everywhere a Church was planted by the Apostles. The practice of head coverings to show proper submission to authority was and is still universal for the Church.

The simple truth about the matter is that head coverings were practiced in every Church, even in the West, until perhaps 70-100ish years ago. As the Church became much more infected by the culture, this practice has become non-PC, odd, weird, and whatever "negative" attribute you want to call it. Hence, it has stopped being practice in most Churches. However, this is not a reason not to follow the commands of Scripture. Following the commands of Scripture are often difficult, uncomfortable, and un-PC. Women being outwardly submissive to authority? Definitely un-PC.

> Is it no surprise that in our individualistic and rebellious culture that we have gotten rid of symbols of submission to authority?

In any case, I discussed this previously with my girl a year or so ago, and I have recently discussed it with her again. Apparently, she didn't remember that we discussed it. She doesn't like it (at least at first), but will do it if I ask her to. I let her know that it will be something that I require in marriage, not because I am asking her to but as Christians we want to be in alignment with God's Word. It is also clear that head coverings as an outward symbol of [being under] authority can be an excellent witnessing tool for believers to lukewarm Christians, especially in our individualistic and rebellious culture.

The thing about being obedient is that we don't have to like it at first. It's great if we do, but much of the time when we are tasked with being obedient to God we don't like it at first. But we have faith and trust God that as we are obedient to His commands that He will be gracious to us and help us cultivate the right attitude and heart.

Christian marriage components

October 20, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been viewing this discussion on the components of Christian marriage on Donal's post. The fact that we have to call it "Christian marriage" in the first place is bad. Marriage is created by God and defined by God. Hence, all Christian marriage is just marriage. But that's a topic that has been beaten ad nausium.

Let's start with marriage. Creating a marriage is multi-factorial.

In Genesis 2, we can see that God acts as the first Father to give Adam his wife Eve:

> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place.
> 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man.
> 23 "This is now bone of my bones, And flesh of my flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man."

Likewise, there is the aspect of separation and joining, and sex:

> 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

The original marriage is a framework. It tells us important components of what a marriage, which are namely:

1. Father giving the daughter to the man — God giving Eve to Adam
2. Separating from family(s) — leaving father and mother [to make an independent family unit]
3. Coming together [to be with and live with] — joined to his wife
4. Having sex — becoming one flesh
5. In the presence of witnesses [traditionally with a wedding celebration] — in this case, Father/Jesus/Spirit and potentially angels.

Now, there are examples from the Scriptures where some of these components are missing, but ideally you want all of these to make up a marriage given our example from Genesis 2. Note: no marriage license is required, although God says to obey the laws of your nation (which, I concede is debatable given that other forms of non man-woman marriage is now lumped in with that).

The two main components that are undeniable is the agreement of the covenant of marriage and sex.

This is exemplified in Genesis in 2 different ways:

- Agreement — God the Father gives the Eve to Adam in v22, and Adam accepts in v23
- Agreement — Implied through leaving the father and mother and joining to his wife.

Both of these work as seen in numerous examples in Genesis and throughout the rest of the Bible. Abraham goes to negotiate with his relatives. Abraham sends a servant to negotiate for Rebecca for Isaac. Jacob negotiates with Laban for himself. In the Law a father can say that his seduced daughter is not married if he sees that the man is not right for his daughter or his daughter did not make a wise decision. In a similar manner, a husband can also nullify his wife's vows.

- Sex — becoming one flesh.

This is the part that is the most confusing to many, especially the ones that think sex is marriage. Aside from the agreement examples above, the "one flesh" verse is often taken out of context of the agreement of the covenant examples. Additionally, prostitution was not considered marriage.

The easiest example to see is that Jesus' New Covenant in His blood is formed when Christians agree to believe in Jesus, repent of their sins, and follow Him. This "marriage" of Christ and His Church is used as an analogy for husbands and wives. Hence, marriage is an binding moral agreement between Christ and a Christian (who make up the Church), much like husbands and wives need to agree to be married to live together and have sex.

Marriage components

Marriage has roles and responsibilities.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

Obviously, Ephesians 5 exhorts a large chunk of them, but additional ones are found in 1 Corinthians 7, 1 Corinthians 11, 1 Corinthians 14, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, 1 Timothy 4, and so on. The OT also provides solid guidelines such as Numbers 30 and other passages on treatment of husbands and wives in marriages.

It is important to note that this these things are God's framework for marriage. These are things we want to do if we want to glorify God with our marriage and sanctify ourselves, which as Christians we should be aiming toward. Those who ignore these roles and responsibilities are not being sanctified and not glorifying God.

Yes, an egalitarian marriage may be, for all intents and purposes, "successful" according to human metrics and even some others like no divorce. However, that does not mean they are glorifying God or sanctifying themselves through adherence to God's law. This is extremely important to remember, as I'm sure many of us know many marriages that are egalitarian or even non-Christian that that we are uncomfortable with because they "work."

Just because they seemingly "work" does not mean they are holy or glorify God.

> 1 Corinthians 7:1 Now concerning the things about which you wrote, it is good for a man not to touch a woman. 2 But because of immoralities, each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband. 3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 6 But this I say by way of concession, not of command. 7 [c]Yet I wish that all men were even as I myself am. However, each man has his own gift from God, one in this manner, and another in that.
> 8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

In regard to marriage, properly, there is an Eros component.

1. For those who burn, it is generally better to marry. If you burn then celibacy is probably not for you.
2. Sex is an integral component of marriage, both for the husband and the wife. They owe each other a marital debt, which should be regularly paid. The exception being mutual agreement for prayer and only for a short time.

Although cultural marriage today is largely hedonic in nature, it would be false to say that marriage, according to the Scripture, lacks a eros/hedonic component. In fact, from the beginning and even today God has created marriage to be the way in which our sexual desire is holy and therefore made manifest to glory God through its particular fruits:

pleasure, well-being, unity, and procreation.

This is why it is gnostic heresy to dismiss physical attractiveness and other components of created human nature such as sexual desire as many Christians do including FotF's Boundless and commenters. In fact, the Scriptures make an adequate case that marriage is an earthly construct meant for earthly purposes, and all are to glorify God.

Eros is an integral part of marriage as God created it. Therefore, trying to draw a distinction of "how much eros/hedonic is needed" as opposed to other components such as hierarchy and roles and responsibilities in marriage is futile exercise. This is like trying to tear the body away from the mind, soul, and spirit. You can't do it, nor would you want to. They're all parts that are integrated as one magnificently by God.

The eros responsibility

This is why I have been fairly clear in my writing that attraction and desire are important components of marriage. Those who try to downplay it tend to fall prey to gnostic heresy like asceticism where human desires such as sex should be shed as some form of enlightenment and/or godliness. Is eros the only component? Certainly not. We've talked about many of the other components of marriage such as the structural hierarchy and roles and responsibilities. However, all of these things need to come together as one.

One Christian may want a "larger" eros component of marriage than another. This glorifies God, if the component is used correctly: paying the marital debt. Another Christian may consider a "smaller" eros component the ideal for their marriage. This too glorifies God, if the component is used correctly: paying the marital debt. Both of these are good and glorify God.

It is important to note that it is not your marital debt that needs to be fulfilled, it is the other spouse's marital debt to which you have an obligation. Their responsibility is to you, and your responsibility is to them. This is why I believe it is important to talk to your potential spouse about their sex drive, so that you are aware of their marital debt which is your obligation is marriage.

It is a mistake to believe that those who have a larger eros component in their marriage are in sin just as it is to believe those who have a smaller eros component in their marriage are in sin. Likewise, it is also a mistake to believe that the eros component reflects on the other roles and responsibilities of marriage. What glorifies God for the eros component is selflessness to fulfill the marital debt. Nothing else.

This should make intuitive sense now that you have heard it, but it is not the common line of thought for Christians. The eros component of marriage is the marital debt. Can you fulfill that with respect? No. Can you fulfill it with with headship? No. Can you fulfill it with submission? No. Submission to having sex, yes. Specific components of marriage must be fulfilled by that specific act.

For the marital debt, the only thing that fulfills it is sex.

Conclusion

I think it should be abundantly clear now how there is an eros component of marriage which is integral to the marriage as a whole. The desire for sex cannot be separated out from the various components of marriage such as the hierarchy or other roles and responsibilities.

A larger or smaller eros component is up to the individual. What glorifies God is not whether this component is large or small. Rather, what glorifies God is that you are selfless in satisfying the marital debt of your husband or wife. If it is large then satisfy it with much sex. If it is small, satisfy it with some sex. Ensure that your husband or wife is satisfied.

Likewise, one cannot fulfill any of the other roles and responsibilities of marriage without expressly targeting the goal set forth in the Scriptures. For example, husbands are to emulate Christ to wash and his bride by the water of the word to sanctify and cleanse her so that she may be spotless and blameless. This may mean exhorting her on Scripture for head coverings, even if she doesn't like them. This may mean pointing out opinions that are influenced by culture or sin in order to give her the the opportunity to obey and repent to God to become [more] holy. It's a process of taking off the old and putting on the new.

These are the things that glorify God and make us more like Him, even though they are difficult, painful, and feel like persecution. This has been the recent case of men who have wives that are disobedient to their husband's admonition with the Scriptures. The responsibility of the husband is fulfilled by making clear the commands of God, which brings glory to God through completing the task assigned to him. Any further rebellion is on her own head and not his.

At the end of the day, it's not about us. It's about Jesus. Being privy to each component of Scripture set before us — marriage components if applicable — allows us to glorify God in our actions by completing the task he has set before us. To that He says: 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.'

It’s a test

October 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Deuteronomy 13 is a very interesting passage, especially because of how it relates to today:

> Deuteronomy 13:1 “[a]If a prophet or a dreamer of dreams arises among you and gives you a sign or a wonder, 2 and the sign or the wonder comes true, concerning which he spoke to you, saying, ‘Let us go after other gods (whom you have not known) and let us serve them,’ 3 you shall not listen to the words of that prophet or that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord your God is testing you to find out if you love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul. 4 You shall follow the Lord your God and fear Him; and you shall keep His commandments, listen to His voice, serve Him, and cling to Him. 5 But that prophet or that dreamer of dreams shall be put to death, because he has [b]counseled [c]rebellion against the Lord your God who brought you from the land of Egypt and redeemed you from the house of [d]slavery, to seduce you from the way in which the Lord your God commanded you to walk. So you shall purge the evil from among you.
> 6 “If your brother, your mother’s son, or your son or daughter, or the wife [e]you cherish, or your friend who is as your own soul, entice you secretly, saying, ‘Let us go and serve other gods’ (whom neither you nor your fathers have known, 7 of the gods of the peoples who are around you, near you or far from you, from one end of the earth to the other end), 8 you shall not yield to him or listen to him; and your eye shall not pity him, nor shall you spare or conceal him. 9 But you shall surely kill him; your hand shall be first against him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people. 10 So you shall stone him [f]to death because he has sought to seduce you from the Lord your God who brought you out from the land of Egypt, out of the house of [g]slavery. 11 Then all Israel will hear and be afraid, and will never again do such a wicked thing among you.

There’s a lot of shades of evangelical Christianity in here… not to mention a lot of infiltrates of feminism and other -isms into the Church.

Don’t turn aside from God and His commandments to other things. It’s a test. And most people fail.

Tithing

October 26, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was reading through Malachi the other day, and it just so happened I was revisiting an older Dalrock thread and ran across this post by Otto Lamp on Tithing. Most of the links are books on the passage, but there are two articles here on tithing specifically:

- http://www.gty.org/resources/sermons/1302/gods-plan-for-giving-part-1
- http://www.tithing-russkelly.com/

I'll try to best to summarize the points, mainly from the Russell Kelly article:

- The word "Tithe" specifically denotes a collection of what was given from the produce of the land. Never money.

"There are 16 verses from 11 chapters and 8 books from Leviticus 27 to Luke 11 which describe the contents of the holy tithe. And those contents never included money, silver, gold or anything other than food from inside Israel! Yet the incorrect definition of tithe as "the first tenth of income" is the greatest error being preached about tithing today! Lev 27:30, 32; Numb 18:27-28; Deut 12:17; 14:22-23; 26:12; 2 Chron 31:5-6; Neh 10:37; 13:5; Mal 3:10-11; Matt 23:23; Luke 11:42. In order to be honest tithe-teachers must honestly use the biblical definition of the holy tithe."

- Abraham's "Tithe" to Melchizedek (Gen 14) and Jacob's "free will vow" (Gen 28) were not Tithes but rather spoils of war and free will offerings. Note: spoils of war in Mosaic law were supposed to be 1% (Numbers 31), so Abraham gave 1000% more.
- "The purpose of the first tithe was (1) to replace the loss of any inheritance or portion of Israel's wealth in the land and (2) to pay Levites and priests for their labor in the sanctuary and temple."

"Numb 18:20 And the LORD spoke to Aaron, You shall have no inheritance in their land; neither shall you have any part among them: I am your part and your inheritance among the children of Israel.

Levites and priests were to have no inheritance "in the land" (not "of the land"). That meant they were neither to inherit land nor to inherit anything else from any other source. "Neither have any part among them" meant they were not to share in the wealth of other Israelites. That explains why Levites are first in line among the poor in Deuteronomy 14:29. In other words, they were expected to remain among the poor and humble. See comments on the third tithe."

- Those who receive the Tithe (Levites, workers of the altar, etc.) have no inheritance in the land. That would preclude 'pastors' from owning pretty much anything, which is obviously not true.

"God forbade Levites and priests who received the first whole tithe from owning property in his land or receiving any other inheritances. He also forbade them from sharing wealth with other Hebrews ("no portion among them"). This Bible fact is found an amazing 12 times in (Numb 18:20, 26; Deut 10:9; 12:12; 14:27, 29; 18:1; Josh 13:14, 33; 14:3; 18:7; Eze 44:28)."

- Second and third tithes were required (up to 23%).

"Old Covenant Hebrews were clearly expected to bring a second tithe at their three annual feasts, or festivals (Deut. 12:6-7; 14:23). Distinct from the first tithe which was only for Levites and priests, this was to be eaten by all in the streets of Jerusalem. It did not go to the temple; its purpose was "that you may learn to fear the LORD always." The first-born of the herds was in addition to this tithe (proof that first and tenth were different). This meant that the tithe was at least 20% instead of 10%. Yet most tithe-advocates do not teach 20% tithing."

"Old Covenant Hebrews were also commanded to keep a third tithe at home in their cities every third year (Deut. 14:28-29). This was an extra subsidy for Levites who were expected to be first in line among the poor (14:29). This meant a total tithe of around 23% instead of 10% (plus another 10% government tax (1 Sam. 8:14-17). Some teach that this replaced the 2nd festival tithe every third year. However, if this were true, there would be no food for the three yearly festivals. Again, it is obvious why this is not taught today."

- First fruits (and first borns) are different than tithes

"In God's Word, firstfruits and firstborn are never the same thing as tithes. Firstfruits were the first wave-sheaf of the whole harvest, not the best (Lev. 23:10); in addition to the tithe, they were the "first offspring of your herds and flocks," not the best (Deut. 12:7). Unlike the food-tithe, it was a very small token amount of the first crops harvested and was small enough to fit into a hand-held basket (Deut. 26:1-10). Firstfruits were a very small token offering — like a handful of grapes or olives. And, like tithes, first-fruits and first-born were always only food from inside God's holy land of Israel."

- Malachi speaks directly to the Priests the entire time

"THE REAL GOD-ROBBERS OF MALACHI: The God-robbers of Malachi were actually the dishonest priests of Judah and not the general population. Beginning at Malachi 1:6 God addresses the dishonest ministers at the altar of Judah as "you": "… unto you, O priests that despise my name." Follow the pronoun "you"; it does not change in the remainder of Malachi. Priests offer polluted bread on the altar (1:7). Priests offer inferior animals for sacrifice (1:8). Priests are in charge of the doors and starting sacrificial fires (1:10). Priests had better animals in their flocks received as tithes (1:14; Numb. 18:25-29). Priests were cursed (1:14). Priests are addressed again: "And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you" (2:1). The blessings of the priests are cursed (2:2). Priests had broken their special covenant with Levi (2:4-5). Priests had not taught God's Law (2:6-10). Priests covered the altar with their tears (2:13). Priests had married Gentile wives (2:14-16). Priests mock God and ask why He had not judged them (2:17). God promises to punish the priests (3:1-7). Every priest in the nation has helped steal the tithes from the Levites (Neh 13:5-10). God curses the priests once again (1:14; 2:2; 3:9). Priests are told to return the stolen tithes (from Neh 13:5) back to the temple storerooms (3:10)."

- Early Church dissent against Tithing & Paul himself working as a Tentmaker

"TITHING DID NOT BECOME A LAW IN THE CHURCH UNTIL A.D. 777: The earliest Christian assemblies patterned themselves after the Jewish synagogues which were led by rabbis who, like Paul, refused to gain a profit from preaching and teaching God's Word. There are many books on Jewish social life which explain this in great detail.

From Christ's death until Christianity became a legally recognized religion almost 300 years later, the majority of great church leaders took self-imposed vows of poverty. This is historically documented! They took Jesus' words to the rich young ruler in Luke 18:22 literally "sell all that you have, give it to the poor, and follow me." Most church historians agree that these early church leaders for at least the first 200 years worked for a living and were self-supporting. A Christian leader could not tell a Roman census-taker that he was a full-time preacher of an outlaw religion.

Clement of Rome (c95), Justin Martyr (c150), Irenaeus (c150-200) and Tertullian (c150-220) all opposed tithing as a strictly Jewish tradition. The Didache (c150-200) condemns traveling apostles who stay longer than three days and ask for money. And travelers who decided to remain with them were required to learn a trade. These early opponents of tithing are not quoted by tithe-teachers.

Cyprian (200-258) tried unsuccessfully to impose tithing in Carthage, North Africa around A. D. 250. At his conversion Cyprian gave away great wealth to the poor and lived under a vow of poverty. His idea of tithing included equal re-distribution to the poor. And –we must remember—his ideas of tithing were not adopted.

When tithe-teachers quote Ambrose, Chrysostom and Augustine as church fathers they conveniently leave out the first 200 years of church history. Even after Christianity became legal in the fourth century many of the greatest spiritual leaders took vows of deep poverty and preferred to live unmarried lives in monasteries. If these tithe-teachers are quoted, then the church should also be told what kind of lives they usually led.

While disagreeing with their own theologians, most church historians write that tithing did not become a legally enforced doctrine in the church for over 700 years after the cross. According to the very best sources it took over 500 years before a local church Council of Macon in France, in the year 585, tried unsuccessfully to enforce tithing on its members. It was not until the year 777 that Charlemagne legally allowed the church to collect tithes. That is the history of tithing found in the Encyclopedia Britannica, Encyclopedia Americana and the Roman Catholic Encyclopedia."

- Giving principles

Provide for your family

> 1 Timothy 5:8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

Not to reflect the old law but the Spirit

> "(1) According to Galatians 5:16-23, there is no physical law which controls the fruits of the Holy Spirit. (2) Second Corinthians 3:10 says that the Old Covenant has "no glory" when compared to the "surpassing" glory and liberty of the Holy Spirit. (3) Hebrews 7 is the only post-Calvary mention of tithing and it is an explanation of why the Levitical priesthood must be replaced by Christ's priesthood because it was weak and unprofitable. Study Hebrews 7 and follow the progression from verse 5 to verse 12 to verse 19. (4) The manner in which tithing is taught today reflects a failure of the church to believe and act on the far better principles of love, grace and faith. Mandatory giving principles cannot, has not and will not prosper the church more than principles guided by love for Christ and lost souls (2 Cor 8:7-8)."

"Christians are commanded to give freely, sacrificially, generously, regularly, joyfully and with the motivation of love for God and man."

> "(1) Giving is a "grace." These chapters use the Greek word for "grace" eight times in reference to helping needy saints. (2) Give yourself to God first (8:5). (3) Give yourself to knowing God's will (8:5). (4) Give in response to Christ's gift (8:9; 9:15). (5) Give out of a sincere desire (8:8, 10, 12; 9:7). (6) Do not give because of any commandment (8:8, 10; 9:7). (7) Give beyond your ability (8:3, 11-12). (8) Give to produce equality. This means that those who have more should give more in order to make up for the inability of those who cannot afford to give as much (8:12-14). (9) Give joyfully (8:2). (10) Give because you are growing spiritually (8:3-4, 7). (11) Give because you want to continue growing spiritually (9:8, 10-11). (12) Give because you are hearing the gospel preached (9:13)."

Conclusion

Since most of this was quoting the other articles, let me summarize it by saying a few things.

Tithing is an OT concept that is rooted in God's blessing and provision from the land. As Christians not under the old covenant and instead under the Spirit, we should stop trying to obey things from the old covenant (like Acts 19 and circumcision). Instead, we should be motivated and not compelled, according to the Spirit, to given "freely, sacrificially, generously, regularly, joyfully, and out of love for God and man."

What has "replaced" the tithe as provision and inheritance for the Levitical priesthood from the fruit of the land is provision of one's own family (1 Tim 5) as Christians are now in the priesthood of believers (1 Pet 2):

> 1 Timothy 5:8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

Giving should be rooted in:

> 2 Corinthians 8:1 Now, brethren, we wish to make known to you the grace of God which has been given in the churches of Macedonia, 2 that in a great ordeal of affliction their abundance of joy and their deep poverty overflowed in the wealth of their liberality. 3 For I testify that according to their ability, and beyond their ability, they gave of their own accord, 4 begging us with much urging for the favor [a]of participation in the [b]support of the [c]saints, 5 and this, not as we had [d]expected, but they first gave themselves to the Lord and to us by the will of God. 6 So we urged Titus that as he had previously made a beginning, so he would also complete in you this gracious work as well.
> 7 But just as you abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge and in all earnestness and in the [e]love we inspired in you, see that you abound in this gracious work also. 8 I am not speaking this as a command, but as proving through the earnestness of others the sincerity of your love also. 9 For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sake He became poor, so that you through His poverty might become rich. 10 I give my opinion in this matter, for this is to your advantage, who were the first to begin a year ago not only to do this, but also to desire to do it. 11 But now finish [f]doing it also, so that just as there was the readiness to desire it, so there may be also the completion of it by your ability. 12 For if the readiness is present, it is acceptable according to what a person has, not according to what he does not have. 13 For this is not for the ease of others and for your affliction, but by way of equality— 14 at this present time your abundance being a supply for their need, so that their abundance also may become a supply for your need, that there may be equality; 15 as it is written, "He who gathered much did not have too much, and he who gathered little had no lack."

1. Give joyfully, even in poverty (2 Cor 8:2)
2. Give beyond your ability, willingly (2 Cor 8:3)
3. Give yourself to God (2 Cor 8:5)
4. Don't give because of commandment (2 Cor 8:8; 9:7)
5. Give out of sincere desire (2 Cor 8:8,10,12; 9:7)
6. Give as it will help you grow spiritually (2 Cor 8:8-12)
7. Give in response to the gift of Jesus (2 Cor 8:9; 9:15)
8. Give to supply others' need (2 Cor 8:12-14)

9. Give because if you sow sparingly you reap sparingly and if you sow bountifully you reap bountifully (2 Cor 9:6)
10. Give, not grudgingly or under compulsion, but out of a cheerful heart (2 Cor 9:7)
11. Give because it enables preaching the gospel which will bear fruit (2 Cor 9:13)

For me, I have been consistently “tithing” and God has always put it on my heart to want to give more than “10%” anyway. Therefore, knowing that tithing is bunk under the New Covenant, I don’t have an issue with any of this. It’s not my money anyway. One of the principles that I want to give under is that every year I increased on what I gave the year before.

Those who don’t tithe should know they are not condemned for not tithing. However, God desires that you give “freely, sacrificially, generously, regularly, joyfully and with the motivation of love for God and man.” Maybe more abundantly than even 10% or even 23%. Just as we shouldn’t be “misers with love” to borrow the phrase from Dalrock, we also shouldn’t be misers with money.

Tithing, like circumcision and other parts of the old covenant, is not part of the New Covenant.

Sola feels

Babylon bee is like the onion but for Christians… but as we know the onion and related satirical websites hit on important truths on occasion. Sadly, those occasions are increasing. This time bringing us Sola Feels.

> PORTLAND, OR—An influential group of the nation's top progressive evangelical authors, speakers, and bloggers met Tuesday evening to officially affirm their recently drafted doctrine of "Sola Feels," sources confirmed.
> The new doctrine, translated "By Feels Alone," formally outlines one of the essentials of modern-day progressive evangelicalism—that one's feelings are the supreme authority in all matters of theology and practice.
> An alleged draft of the creed, which was leaked to the press Wednesday morning, reads as follows:
> "The whole counsel of God, concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith, and life, is either expressly set down in our feels, or by good and necessary consequence may be deduced from our feels: unto which nothing at any time is to be added, whether by the Scriptures, church history, or theologians."
> "Quite simply, 'Sola Feels' means that all spiritual truths only become true once they're filtered through and accepted by our feels—all the feels," popular author and speaker Jane Hansen told reporters after the meeting. "Thus, things that make us feel bad, those are wrong. The things that give us all the happy feels, those are true, right, and good."
> "At least, that's how we feel at the moment, I feel," she noted.

You have to wonder, though, if they actually reading what we're writing on blogs around these parts. I wouldn't be surprised.

Lessons from Ephesus

October 31, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Generally speaking, the Church at Ephesus presents an interesting timeline of the early Church given that a decent sized chunk of NT Scriptures are directed toward it. The reason for this is two of the pastoral letters were written to Timothy, who was the pastor at the Church of Ephesus. This includes:

1. 54-57 AD — Paul's stay in Ephesus
2. 60-62 AD — Epistle to the Ephesians
3. 64 AD — Timothy becomes leader of the Church of Ephesus
4. 62-64 AD — 1 Timothy
5. 64-67 AD — 2 Timothy
6. 95 AD — Revelation, specifically Revelation 2.
7. 97 AD — Timothy tries to stop a celebration in honor of Diana by preaching the gospel. He was beaten, dragged through the streets, and stoned to death.

This timeline gives us a great look into how the Church at Ephesus progressed in a few decades.

Lessons from Ephesians, Timothy, and 1 and 2 Timothy

Ephesians 1-4 focuses on the rich inheritance we have in Christ. This culminates in the end of chapter 4 and the beginning of chapter 5 on how we are to be imitators of Christ, essentially taking off the old and putting on the new. Near the end is general church instruction, family order instruction, and exhortation on spiritual warfare.

A few years later, Timothy, who had been traveling with Paul (like Silas and Barnabas) was commissioned to be the leader of the Church of Ephesus. I'm not sure on who exactly was the leader of the Church before this, but presumably it wasn't that organized. This is where 1 and 2 Timothy come in. Essentially, these letters were written for purposeful organization of the Church.

1 Timothy 1 discusses generally how Christians are to act and to avoid heresy. 1 Timothy 2 discusses how men and women are to act, especially in Church settings. 1 Timothy 3 discusses qualifications of bishops and deacons. 1 Timothy 4 discusses apostasy, godliness, and individual exhortation. 1 Timothy 5 discusses widows, elders, and how to provide for the needs of others. Finally, 1 Timothy 6 follows up on lessons to all who minister.

2 Timothy follows in similar veins. Chapter 1-4 is another exhortation of Paul to Timothy as a spiritual son in Christ to be strong as he was having difficulties in the first few years of his ministry at the Church of Ephesus.

Therefore, from what we understand of the Church in Ephesus is that general commands of the Church and family were not enough. The letter to the Church in Ephesus provided solid instructions to the Church on these matters, but it seems that much of the Ephesians had trouble discerning the “sacred from the secular” so to speak. Instead of defaulting to godliness and freedom in Christ, they needed more teaching in order to stay away from cultural influences. Enter Timothy.

If you remember back to some of my prior posts and background on Timothy, he was the son of a Greek father and Jewish mother. Per 2 Timothy 1, Timothy was raised by his grandmother Lois and mother Eunice in the faith, which Paul commended. However, since Timothy had no real father figure, Paul literally became his father figure and mentor.

When we read Paul’s commands in 1 Timothy 2 about women not having authority over or teaching, this is part of the backdrop. We understand that Christian wives and mothers can bring up children in the faith, but they can’t teach men how to be men. That requires fathers and father figures, of which Paul exemplifies in 2 Timothy to exhort Timothy to be strong, carry on firmly in his callings, be diligent, understand that difficult times and persecution will come, and to make every effort to continue preaching the Word. It is with this background that Timothy carries on the torch from Paul until his death by preaching the word among the celebration of Diana and being beaten, dragged through the streets, and martyred by stoning.

Lessons building on Ephesians, Timothy, 1 and 2 Timothy into Revelation

The same is indeed still true to day. Human nature has not changed. Biblical Truths of the first century are as “relevant” today as they were then. This brings us to Revelation.

> Revelation 2:“To the angel of the church in Ephesus write: The One who holds the seven stars in His right hand, the One who walks [a]among the seven golden lampstands, says this:
> 2 ‘I know your deeds and your toil and [b]perseverance, and that you cannot tolerate evil men, and you put to the test those who call themselves apostles, and they are not, and you found them to be false; 3 and you have [c]perseverance and have endured for My name’s sake, and have not grown weary. 4 But I have this against you, that you have left your first love. 5 Therefore remember from where you have fallen, and repent and do the [d]deeds you did at first; or else I am coming to you and will remove your lampstand out of its place—unless you repent. 6 Yet this you do have, that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. 7 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes, I will grant to eat of the tree of life which is in the Paradise of God.’

Now that we understand the Church of Ephesus through the lens of Ephesians and the lens of 1 and 2 Timothy, we more readily understand the passage to the Church of the Ephesians in Revelation.

1. The letter to the Church at Ephesus provided general instructions on the body and family. However, these didn’t work as effectively as they should have. Hence, Timothy was commissioned to be leader of the Church at Ephesus.
2. Paul sends the pastoral letters of 1 and 2 Timothy on how to organized the Church there to adhere to sound doctrine. This includes positions of men and women in the Church, qualifications of bishops and deacons, avoiding apostasy and adhering to godliness, and so on. 2 Timothy focuses mainly on the father-figure mentor relationship between Paul and Timothy.

3. We know from history that from 60 AD to his death in 97 AD, Timothy was a living example of the gospel to martyrdom.

In Revelation, Jesus commends the Church at Ephesus for:

- Not tolerating evil men and rooting out apostasy.
- Their perseverance without growing weary for Jesus.
- Hating the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which were a gnostic cult, like Balaam putting a stumbling block before Israel.
- Jesus also chastises the Church at Ephesus for leaving their first love.

The theorized "deeds" that the Nicolaitans held to, supported by commentary from early Church fathers, is that Nicolas (from Acts 6:5) was one of the 7 deacons appointed at the Church of Antioch. However, he fell into some sort of heresy involving overindulgence of fleshly desires involving food sacrificed to idols and fornication with temple prostitutes.

This is where some of the passages from Romans ('not sinning so that grace may abound') and Acts and Corinthians ('avoiding food sacrificed to idols, especially for those who have weak consciences' and 'fornication, especially with temple prostitutes') comes into focus. Apostasy started to become more prevalent in the early Church, as even deacons and leaders in the Church devolved into gnostic heresy. Therefore, it should not be surprise to see many pastors caught up within the same heresies today. Paul, James, and Peter consistently warn believers in the Scriptures to be wary of being deceived: thinking that they're right when they're wrong.

Indeed, the practices of the Church at Ephesus, from the letter to the Ephesians, leadership of Timothy, and commands of the pastoral letters, are affirmed from the prophesy of Revelation (which is a prophesy of Jesus) and Peter's affirmation of Paul's teachings in 2 Peter 3. This leads us to understand that difficult passages, such as prohibited authority of women over men and teaching men, are in fact correct.

Additionally, given the admonishment to the Church at Ephesus in Revelation, it's also easy to make an idol of doing what is right and forgetting that it's all for Jesus in the end. We ultimately desire to do what is right because of Jesus, and our eyes should be focused on Him.

To put this into marriage context, this is similar to a wife being overly focused and diligent on her responsibilities within marriage and subsequently ignoring her husband. A wife must realize that her responsibilities are her responsibilities because they are to and for her husband: to be his helpmeet. Her husband is more important than what she is doing. I've known quite a few women who have spoken that this is a huge trap for them, both in real life and around these parts.

Conclusions

There are lots conclusions we can draw from the overview of the Church at Ephesus and Timothy's journey of being mentored into the leadership position at the Church of Ephesus.

Most of these deal with the practical application Ephesians and 1 and 2 Timothy to the Christian Church and family. These include, but are not exclusive to (as I'm not going to list out everything):

- Headship-submission, love-respect relationship of the husband and wife
- Women are not permitted to have authority or to teach men
- Qualifications for leaders in the Church and generosity in the Church
- Avoiding the traps of various apostasy and sticking to sound doctrine
- Paul being a father figure and mentor to Timothy in 2 Timothy
- Revelation's affirmation of sticking to Ephesians and 1 and 2 Timothy as a model for the family, Church organization, deterring evil men, apostasy, and perseverance in the faith, but don't forgot our first love: Jesus.

God's Word is eternal Truth. They are applicable today, despite much of the gnostic and progressivism heresies that have infected the Church. Blending the the secular and sacred is bad, mmmkay?

We are called to holiness and perfection like God, through sanctification, which means being set apart from the culture and world. The progression of the Church in Ephesus provides us an outstanding example from the early Church to use today.

What does it mean to teach?

November 1, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've gone over women not teaching in Church before among several posts touching on the topic, but some recent posts like Snapper's and Dalrock's would be good to go over as well.

Generally speaking, to understand what it means to teach and the role of women in the Church it requires a broad look at the Scriptures as a whole. The main verse(s) in contention are:

> 1 Timothy 2:9 Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, [g]modestly and discreetly, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly garments, 10 but rather by means of good works, as is proper for women making a claim to godliness. 11 A woman must quietly receive instruction with entire submissiveness. 12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first [h]created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, [i]fell into transgression. 15 But women will be [j]preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with [k]self-restraint.

Women not having authority over men in the Church body is fairly obvious. I don't think we need to go there. The dispute is almost always over what "teaching" means.

The case of Timothy

As you know from reading my previous post on Lessons from Ephesus, Timothy presents an excellent example of what we are talking about. Both of these letters are written to Timothy from Paul. As a refresher, the timeline is thus:

1. 54-57 AD — Paul's stay in Ephesus
2. 60-62 AD — Epistle to the Ephesians
3. 64 AD — Timothy becomes leader of the Church of Ephesus
4. 62-64 AD — 1 Timothy
5. 64-67 AD — 2 Timothy
6. 95 AD — Revelation, specifically Revelation 2.
7. 97 AD — Timothy tries to stop a celebration in honor of Diana by preaching the gospel. He was beaten, dragged through the streets, and stoned to death.

Paul is essentially Timothy's father figure and as he traveled with him on at least one missionary journey before being commissioned to be the leader at the Church in Ephesus. This is the back drop for the passage from 2 Timothy.

> 2 Timothy 1:3 I thank God, whom I serve with a clear conscience [c]the way my forefathers did, as I constantly remember you in my [d]prayers night and day, 4 > longing to see you, even as I recall your tears, so that I may be filled with joy. 5 [e]For I am mindful of the sincere faith within you, which first dwelt in your grandmother Lois and your mother Eunice, and I am sure that it is in you as well. 6 For this reason I remind you to kindle afresh the gift of God which is in you through the laying on of my hands. 7 For God has not given us a spirit of [f]timidity, but of power and love and [g]discipline.

And likewise, from Titus 2:

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

From this we can gather a few things:

1. Mothers/grandmothers are not prohibited from raising their children up in the faith. This is also why I think women Sunday school teachers are fine, even though I believe Sunday school is superfluous or only a supplement.
2. Women are not prohibited from evangelism. Women in the Scripture in Church settings are only prohibited from leadership positions and teaching. They can receive all of the other spiritual gifts. Thus, women are permitted to preach the gospel.
3. As Dalrock mentions, older women are to model behavior and encourage good behavior along sound doctrine. (Note: the passage does not say teach).

Number 2 may be a bit confusing. Preaching is sometimes synonymous with teaching, which is why I think it confusing. Not all preaching is teaching. Specifically, preaching the gospel is evangelism, which women are permitted to do.

Therefore, the question is: what exactly does the Scripture mean when it says “teach.”

What does it mean to teach

> G1321 — διδάσκω — didaskō did-as’-ko
> A prolonged (causative) form of a primary verb δάω daō (to learn); to teach (in the same broad application): – teach. Total KJV occurrences: 97

From my study of the word “teach” in the Scriptures — as best I can define it — it means:

> Biblical teaching is “authoritative interpretation of the Scriptures on how to live.”

In other words, authoritative teaching on how to live is essentially issuing principles, commands, and doctrine to apply in the lives of those who hear it. Jesus distinguishes this with the Pharisees:

> Matthew 15:7 You hypocrites, rightly did Isaiah prophesy of you: 8 ‘This people honors Me with their lips, But their heart is far away from Me. 9 ‘But in vain do they worship Me, Teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.’”

Jesus taught in the synagogues and when people came to hear him preach/teach (in crowds, feeding the 5000, etc.). For instance, the Sermon on the Mount, exemplifies this: “You have heard it said… But I say to you…”

> Matthew 5:33 “Again, you have heard that [ag]the ancients were told, ‘[ah]You shall not [ai]make false vows, but shall fulfill your [aj]vows to the Lord.’ 34 But I say to you, make no oath at all, either by heaven, for it is the throne of God, 35 or by the earth, for it is the footstool of His feet, or [ak]by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. 36 Nor shall you make an oath by your head, for you cannot make one hair white or black. 37 But let your statement be, ‘Yes, yes’ or ‘No, no’; anything beyond these is [al]of evil.
> 38 “You have heard that it was said, ‘An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.’ 39 But I say to you, do not resist an evil person; but whoever slaps you on your right cheek, turn the other to him also. 40 If anyone wants to sue you and take your [am]shirt, let him have your [an]coat also. 41 Whoever [ao]forces you to go one mile, go with him two. 42 Give to him who asks of you, and do not turn away from him who wants to borrow from you.

This agrees specifically with Paul’s statement in 1 Timothy 2: women are not allowed to have authority over men or to teach men. It is this “authoritative interpretation on how to live” that is specifically prohibited. Authority and teaching go together.

Generally speaking, as we’ve gone over before, women cannot teach men about how to live. Paul commended Timothy’s mother for bringing him up in the faith, but he also wrote the two pastoral letters to help him grow a backbone and learn how to be a man in the faith, including said teaching in 1 Timothy 2. Single motherhood is the obvious example of this. Women cannot teach men how to be men. Mothers can raise their children in the faith, but they often fail to become men without a father figure or mentor like Paul to Timothy. Mothers generally coddle their sons, while the father figure prepares the son for life. Timothy being an example of this.

> 1 Corinthians 14:34 The women are to keep silent in the churches; for they are not permitted to speak, but are to subject themselves, just as the Law also says. 35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is [n]improper for a woman to speak in church.
> 36 [o]Was it from you that the word of God first went forth? Or has it come to you only? 37 If anyone thinks he is a prophet or spiritual, let him recognize that the things which I write to you are the Lord’s commandment. 38 But if anyone does not recognize this, he [p]is not recognized.

Indeed, this agrees with 1 Corinthians 14. Authority and teaching go together.

Teaching, preaching, sharing, and so on Sharing is an interesting case because it's not teaching.

Sharing testimonies of how God is working in your life or how a passage of Scripture helped you through a season is faith building. This is why I have no problem with women sharing a testimony or how a passage of Scripture affected them, given it's not disorderly as the rest of 1 Corinthians 14 states.

The problem is mainly when "sharing" becomes "teaching." I think it should be clear that women don't know what it's like to be a man, and therefore cannot teach a man how to live. "Teaching" from a woman on how to be a man is expressly forbidden not just in the NT but in the OT. One of the reasons for this is that it almost always inevitably comes off as nagging or contentiousness. Proverbs expressly warns against dysfunctional relationships like this. God, in His wisdom, organized both the Church and family to be led by men to prevent such things from occurring.

By this measure, preaching differs from teaching in that preaching is mainly stating what the Scripture says without authoritatively interpreting it. For example,

> John 3:16 "For God so loved the world, that He gave His [e]only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him shall not perish, but have eternal life. 17 For God did not send the Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world might be saved through Him.
> Romans 5:6 For while we were still helpless, at the right time Christ died for the ungodly. 7 For one will hardly die for a righteous man; [d]though perhaps for the good man someone would dare even to die. 8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. 9 Much more then, having now been justified [e]by His blood, we shall be saved from the wrath of God through Him. 10 For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God through the death of His Son, much more, having been reconciled, we shall be saved [f]by His life. 11 And not only this, [g]but we also exult in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received the reconciliation.

As you can see presenting the gospel message does not require any authoritative interpretation. It's so simple that children can understand it. We do bad. Bad separates us from God. Jesus Christ came to die so that we can reconnect with God. We can now reconnect with God by repenting of our sins, and following Jesus.

Preaching a sermon from the pulpit usually includes teaching because there is exposition on how to interpret the passage and by extension how to live because of it. This is where many Protestant Churches go off the rails. For one, women are not to have authority over men. Strike one. For two, women are not to be teaching men, and sermons usually include some type of preaching plus teaching associated with passages. Strike two. Churches are expressly rebelling against Scripture by even allowing such situations in the first place. Strike three.

Titus 2 goes off the rails when we get into wives teaching — authoritative interpretation on how to live. The problems with intelligent submission is but one example. If you recall, the problem with intelligent submission is that Christians wives are “authoritatively interpreting” what “submission” means to other wives and thus “telling them how to live” instead of encouraging submission like Titus 2 says.

In the case of the above link, a Christian wife lists out a number of things that her and her husband agreed upon that would be questionable to submit to. This is, of course, fine because she is under her husband’s authority and they can agree to whatever they want in terms of what constitutes not obeying him if there is a potentially sinful situation.

However, this list was used by other wives to cultivate rebellion in their hearts. Their husbands did not agree to such a list, and hence they are rebelling against their husbands based on what another wife was “teaching” if their husband is “sinning.” This is problematic because the Scriptures, such as in 1 Peter 3, state that godly wives should obey even unbelieving husbands (which means they sin!) to win them to Christ.

This “intelligent submission” business is basically teaching against what the Scriptures are teaching. It should be clear that such practices are wrong.

The “right” way for wives to use their own experiences as an example is to say: “this is how we do things under the authority of my husband, you should ask your husband how he wants to do things. If he doesn’t want to do things like us that’s fine. Your marriage may be different from ours. Comparisons only breed jealousy.”

Outside of the body of Christ

Now, the Scripture only forbids teaching within the context of the Church body. I may differ from some on this, but I don’t think this precludes women from teaching outside of the Church.

The vast majority of “teaching” of Christianity outside of the Church body is not actually teaching how to live but rather looking at the Scriptures and Christianity from an academic perspective: how did Christianity arise, how were the Scriptures compiled, what and/or why did Jesus teach and how is it different from other religions, and so on. This is not authoritative interpretation of Scripture on how to live.

Likewise, I don’t see a problem with women attending seminaries, as long as they are not doing it to lead or teach in a Church. If the seminary is teaching sound doctrine such as 1 Timothy 2 (which is questionable given the state of seminaries and pastors in the western hemisphere now), more learned Christian women are only a good thing under authority.

For example, a wife who is learned and better understands what the Scriptures state on headship-submission and love-respect should be able to be a more effective helpmeet and wife to her husband. Yet, unfortunately, this is not the case in most instances. The evil heart purposes all things, even education, for evil. The good heart purposes all things, even education, to glorify God in obedience to His commands.

If more godly women went to seminary that were obedient to the Scriptures it could only be a good thing. They would admonish women from desiring to have authority over men and teach men in Church. It’s one thing to hear it from men in the Church, but it’s another thing to hear it from other women. This is perhaps a stark truth in the manosphere that is oft recognized. Perhaps there will never be a day like this though.

Conclusions

I think it should be clear now that women should not have authority or teaching over men, and that it is an eternal Truth. Psalms and Proverbs really lay it out.

> Psalms 111:10 The [n]fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; A good understanding have all those who [o]do His commandments; His praise endures forever.
> Proverbs 1:7 The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; Fools despise wisdom and instruction.
> Proverbs 9:10 The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, And the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding.

If Christians actually feared the Lord and understood what He said in the Scriptures, this wouldn't be a question.

Women aren't prohibited from evangelism, preaching the gospel, sharing their testimonies, sharing how passages of Scripture spoke to them, all of the many spiritual gifts within the Church aside from leadership and teaching, and many other fruitful things. However, human nature is human nature. The 10th commandment in the Law of Moses is there for a reason: Do not Covet. Humans have a coveting issue.

Women covet positions of leadership and teaching in the Church, despite the Scriptures clearly teaching the contrary.

In the end, it really goes back to the garden of Eden. This is why Paul makes the argument in 1 Timothy 2 to prohibit women from leadership positions and teaching positions in the Church.

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said to the woman, "Indeed, has God said, 'You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden'?" 2 The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'" 4 The serpent said to the woman, "You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil."
> 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate. […]
> 12 The man said, "The woman whom You gave to be with me, she gave me from > the tree, and I ate."

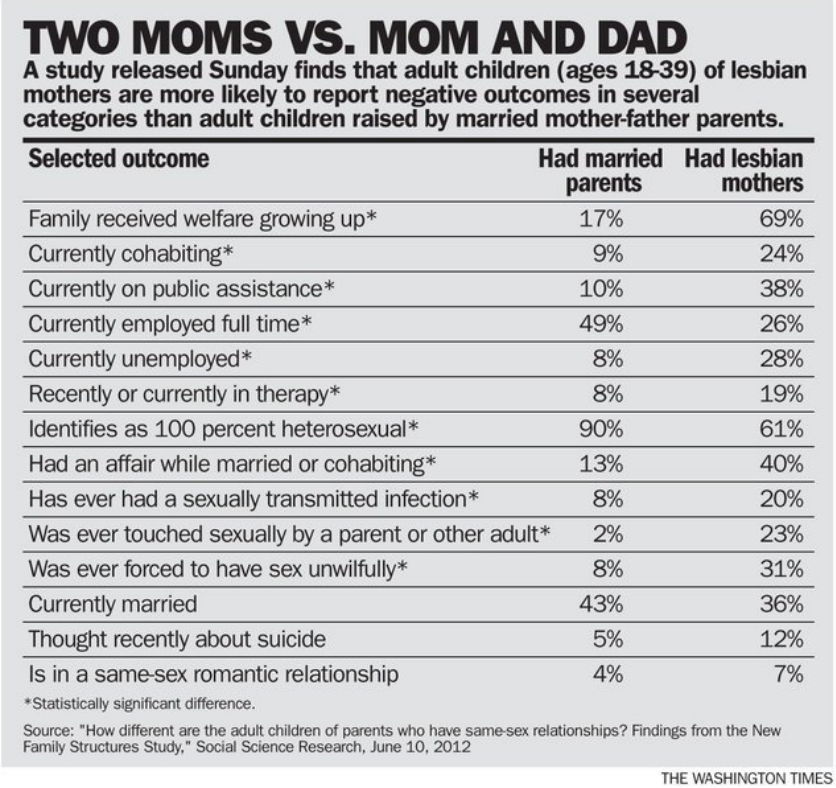
1. Eve was taught — by Adam and/or God — the contrary, but was deceived by the devil's teaching to eat of the tree.
2. God commanded — taught — Adam by "authoritatively instructing him on how to live" to not eat from the tree. Adam didn't listen to God but instead listened to his wife.



Human nature straying from God's commands at work in the Church today.

The lie of parenting

November 3, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There is no such thing as parenting. Only fathering and mothering. I think Wintery Knight had a recent post on this as well.

The statistical studies on this are interesting. I've commented on this before, but I don't think I've made a post on it and posted the actual study.

TWO MOMS VS. MOM AND DAD

A study released Sunday finds that adult children (ages 18-39) of lesbian mothers are more likely to report negative outcomes in several categories than adult children raised by married mother-father parents.

Selected outcome	Had married parents	Had lesbian mothers
Family received welfare growing up*	17%	69%
Currently cohabiting*	9%	24%
Currently on public assistance*	10%	38%
Currently employed full time*	49%	26%
Currently unemployed*	8%	28%
Recently or currently in therapy*	8%	19%
Identifies as 100 percent heterosexual*	90%	61%
Had an affair while married or cohabiting*	13%	40%
Has ever had a sexually transmitted infection*	8%	20%
Was ever touched sexually by a parent or other adult*	2%	23%
Was ever forced to have sex unwilfully*	8%	31%
Currently married	43%	36%

Is in a same-sex romantic relationship	4%	7%

*Statistically significant difference.

THE WASHINGTON TIMES

The interesting thing about this study is that it came under fire by politically correct groups who wanted it retracted. However, it was not retracted and the people who did the study stood by their work. Pubmed here.

As we already knew, fathers make a difference. Though, I wouldn't be surprised to see similar results from families with two fathers as opposed to a father and a mother.

What I would really like to see is all of these things compared:

- Father and mother
- Father only
- Mother only
- Two mothers
- Two fathers

We will probably never get something like that unfortunately, because it would only support God's design for children: a father and mother.

Politics

November 7, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As the election draws near, some thoughts have popped up in my head.

First, what I've been seeing out of a lot of the Christian community is to vote for platform and not candidates.

- Democratic: https://www.demconvention.com/wp-content/uploads/2016/07/Democratic-Party-Platform-7.21.16-no-lines.pdf
- Republican: https://prod-static-ngop-pbl.s3.amazonaws.com/media/documents/DRAFT_12_FINAL%5B1%5D-ben_1468872234.pdf

If you read them and look for key Christian issues such as abortion, marriage, religious liberty, and so on it should be "clear" who you should be voting for. One is distinctly more oriented toward Christian values and one is not.

The other one I'm seeing is the issue of Supreme Court Justices, and how the next POTUS will be able to appoint about 1-4.

Obviously, the "platform" is much like campaign promises which means candidates could just throw it out the window (and I find that likely given the character of both candidates). Not to mention many third party candidates that won't win. However, that is not a reason to not vote. We have a "right" to vote, which does not mean we need to exercise it. But I don't think disengaging is necessarily the right answer either.

Second, as I've stated before on this blog, I think marriage is a red herring. I'm not sure why the Church is so fixated on gay marriage when gay marriage doesn't exist to God. The Church should be more concerned about divorce, especially since divorce is rampant in almost every denomination of Christianity in the West.

Gay marriage, at best, affects maybe 1-2% of the population. Divorce wreaks havoc on 40-50% of the population, and it most affects the children who are wrapped up in its destructive wake. You want to change a generation? You gotta start with divorce. Churches need to crack by exerting community-wide pressure and Church excommunications such as what happened to Jenny Erikson. Props to her Church for excommunicating her after she frivorced her husband.

The main things to do to prevent divorce are: repealing no fault divorce, default father custody of children, reforming welfare, and things like that. Unfortunately, these things won't happen, but communities can still exert influence. Until the Church takes a hard stance against divorce, there is no disincentive for frivorce while there is certainly cash and prizes for doing it.

Third, I think that the fact people get upset at political stances is very interesting. If they didn't care they would be apathetic, but they do care which means they get upset when others disagree with them. I think that this is a good thing because people do want to be engaged when it comes to how they are being governed and the values instituted in the various systems and powers that be.

Unfortunately, people's value systems are all out of whack. It's obvious that non-Christians will vote according to their "own" system of morality given they don't have an anchored reality point. However, even many Christians are ignorant, deceived, or foolish when it comes to basing their "truth" on what they feel rather than God's Truth.

The mess you get yourself into is of your own doing, whether in ignorance, deception, or foolishness. It's up to you to take steps to excavate yourself from the ditch — in conjunction with God's grace and mercy — and it always involves humility and repentance. Such things are in short supply.

Finally, whatever happens we still should be praying for our leaders and our soon-to-be leaders. It's easy to feel or think that someone who is opposed to God is going to face the wrath and judgment of God, but God still has a heart of compassion for them and desires that they be saved. We should be praying that God will plant the seeds and make it into a plentiful harvest in their lives, their families, and their advisors.

Yes, it may be a miracle, but our God is the God of impossibilities.

A couple of interesting election stats

November 9, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

	TRUMP	CLINTON
Non-college white men	72%	23%	T+49
Non-college white women	62	34	T+28
College white men	54	39	T+15
College white women	45	51	C+6

From ABC news or something.

Democrats usually overwhelmingly win minorities, and no surprise they still did. The interesting thing is looks like a lot of white people were fed up, especially the working class.

While Hillary and the rest of the country and media continues to take a big fat dump on men, I don't think it's a surprise that men overwhelmingly rallied around Trump. Is Hillary going to look out for any man's interest? No.

Also, 94% of evangelicals, 88% of mainline Protestants, and 81% of Catholics would vote for Trump over Clinton.

As of the time of this post, it appears Trump is most likely going to win having claimed PA.

Non-standard political analysis

November 9, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This will probably be my last politically oriented post.

In a couple of interesting election stats, I posted that 94% of evangelicals, 88% of mainline Protestants, and 81% of Catholics would vote for Trump over Clinton.

In general, the "most" divisive issues on why Christians voted for Trump over Clinton are probably these three that I mentioned previously: Abortion, Marriage, and Religious liberty. These are from the Manhattan Declaration:

> Manhattan Declaration is a movement of Orthodox, Catholic, and Evangelical Christians for life, marriage, and religious liberty.

These are the issues that most likely pushed most Evangelicals, mainline Protestants, and Catholics to vote Trump over Clinton.

Firstly, I believe marriage to be a red herring (and the real issue to the Church is divorce). However, I also think marriage has a non-standard solution that would improve current divisiveness: the government should get out of the marriage business.

It's pretty clear that most Christians think that marriage is a moral/religious decision, and most people think that marriage should be for anyone think it's a human right. This is a hotbed topic that will come to the forefront of almost every election now that SCOTUS has legalized gay marriage.

Although the government getting out of the marriage business won't solve any issues between Christians (and/or other religions that support marriage between a man-woman) and non-Christians, it would quell one of the main hotbed topics. People are then free to do what they choose, which is the whole point of free will. We know what Christians will choose, and we know what non-Christians will choose.

It's foolish to expect non-Christians to adhere to Christian values, but this would push the issue further out of the limelight and make it easier to preach the gospel (in my opinion).

Secondly, although abortion has been legalized for a long time, it's still a hotbed topic. Half of the issue is that abortion is allowed at all (for very conservative Christians), and the other half of the issue is that every democratic candidate keeps pushing government sponsored contraception and abortion (for most other Christians).

I think that most Christians know that Roe vs Wade is not actually going away, despite the crying of Hillary supporters to the contrary. Therefore, pragmatically and realistically the actual "battle" is about using taxpayer money for abortifacient contraception and abortions.

The democrats are greedy for taxpayer money to support their issues, which is why is why this is a thoroughly divisive topic in the first place. If the democrats cared about garnering a greater percentage of the from the Christian community, removing taxpayer money from paying for abortifacient contraception and abortions would be a good step.

This is much in the same way as marriage. People are then free to do what they choose, which is the whole point of free will. We know what Christians will choose, and we know what non-Christians will choose. It is just that Christians wouldn't have to pay for "morally reprehensible" actions.

It's foolish to expect non-Christians to adhere to Christian values, but this would push the issue further out of the limelight and make it easier to preach the gospel (in my opinion).

Thirdly, religious liberty. This issue will never go away, and has no simple answer unlike the other topic topics. What is currently happening is that "religious liberty" is butting against what many people feel is "basic human rights."

A large part of this issue is tied to the topic of marriage. Christian bakers, florists, photographers, and so on being forced to pay fines and suffer sanctions or participate in gay weddings. If the government got out of the marriage business, it would potentially necessarily stop legislation of private and/or religious practices. If marriage was a private and/or religious practice, this issue would be significantly less divisive than it already is because it would be more out of the political limelight.

As it is right now, there are tons of bakers, florists, photographers, and so on who support gay marriage. People who want a gay marriage need only to go to them to have these services rendered. However, as we have seen, it's not about getting services provided but rather enforcing all others to believe the same things you do.

This is the reason why I think that this topic will never really go away. Marriage exemplifies this, but marriage is only one part of it. If you remove marriage from the equation, something else will pop up instead of marriage as the dividing topic. The reason for this is the continual equivocation of gay marriage to things like segregation.

Finally, even though I think two of the three hotbed topics can be resolved somewhat, the real ultimate reason for the divide between Christians and non-Christians is the difference in moral values. To quote from a previous post:

> I think that the fact people get upset at political stances is very interesting. If they didn't care they would be apathetic, but they do care which means they get upset when others disagree with them. I think that this is a good thing because people do want to be engaged when it comes to how they are being governed and the values instituted in the various systems and powers that be.

When you have a series of absolute moral values set by God butting up against moral relativism. There is always going to be hatred.

> John 15:18 “If the world hates you, [e]you know that it has hated Me before it hated you. 19 If you were of the world, the world would love its own; but because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, because of this the world hates you. 20 Remember the word that I said to you, ‘A slave is not greater than his master.’ If they persecuted Me, they will also persecute you; if they kept My word, they will keep yours also. 21 But all these things they will do to you for My name’s sake, because they do not know the One who sent Me. 22 If I had not come and spoken to them, they would not have [f]sin, but now they have no excuse for their sin. 23 He who hates Me hates My Father also. 24 If I had not done among them the works which no one else did, they would not have [g]sin; but now they have both seen and hated Me and My Father as well. 25 But they have done this to fulfill the word that is written in their Law, ‘They hated Me without a cause.’
> 26 “When the [h]Helper [or Comforter] comes, whom I will send to you from the Father, that is the Spirit of truth who proceeds from the Father, He will testify about Me, 27 [i]and you will testify also, because you have been with Me from the beginning.

The Holy Spirit was sent specifically for the purpose of helping and comforting, when the world hates Christians and persecutes them.

This is why I don’t support political parties or candidates, even though I may vote. The only hope is Jesus.

The cult of diversity

November 10, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Going back to the earlier post on miscegenation and sanctification and Nova's excellent post here, it bears repeating that diversity is one of the moral tenets of liberalism and progressivism. This is why you see much backlash in the election, calling those who voted for Trump "racists," "sexists," "homophobes," "xenophobes," and so on.

Indeed, most Christians seem to believe that "diversity" is an inherently good. However, after critical analysis this can be proved false.

The spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ results in a group of believers, called Christians, who are diverse. In other words, it is the gospel that is Truth. Diversity is simply an effect of the acceptance of a Truth.

When diversity is installed as a moral truth instead of the gospel, you create and prop up an idol on a pedestal. This is the deception of the progressives and liberals. They attempt to co-opt the result (e.g. diversity) of a moral Truth (e.g. the gospel of Jesus Christ) and install it as a their own truth, without the backing of any sort of absolute morality.

Hence, what you see today is the cult of diversity crying and whining because people rightly reject their idols.

Kindness versus niceness

November 12, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that I have struggled with and many men I know struggle with is the difference between kindness and niceness. These two things are not the same thing, and getting them confused often leads men down an unrighteous and undesirable path. Kindness, of course, is a fruit of the Spirit, whereas niceness is concerned meeting a need while placating feelings.

The reason why niceness eventually leads to evil is that it utilizes both truth and lies. For example, it is certainly nice to help out a homeless victim with food. On the other hand, it is also nice to say that "you're not fat" when a woman asks you "do I look fat?" Helping the homeless person meets a need and also placates both of your feelings in a good way, but meeting the need with a lie also placates feelings but is inherently evil.

On the other hand, kindness is a fruit of the Spirit. In the Spirit there is only Truth. In reality, kindness is advocating the Truth with a touch of grace. Let's look at a few examples.

> Romans 2:4 Or do you think lightly of the riches of His kindness and tolerance and patience, not knowing that the kindness of God leads you to repentance?

It is the kindness of God that leads us to repentance.

- What is the Truth? — That we all sin and fall short of the glory of God.
- What is the grace? — That God sent His son, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

Therefore, we can say that kindness is advocating the Truth with a touch of grace.

> 1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with [c]someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

- What is the Truth? — women/wives are the weaker vessel.
- What is the grace? — living with her in an understanding way, and showing her honor as a fellow heir in Christ (with a penalty for disobedience: so that prayers may not be hindered).

If a woman/wife asks if something makes her look fat and she is then…

- the Nice answer is no, but that is a lie.
- the Truthful answer is yes, but it is generally not graceful.
- a Kind answer may be to decline to answer or a sarcastic answer, as a Truthful answer may not be palatable to the ears.

- edit: a Kind answer may be something like: “Honey, you know I love you, but you have gained some weight. How can we work together one that?”

edit: Donal has some valid critique here. In general, what I was trying to get is that women are fairly good at reading between the lines, and do not necessarily have to be told overtly about something to understand. However, that can be confusing, so I added in a better example with my edit to be ‘more Truthful’ so to speak.

Men who are fathered and/or mentored to be men act and speak with a strong intent. This is normal. What is for men is often not what is for women.

Women, however, tend to need more flavoring with their food. Food is Truth. Is the essence and meat of the subject. However, Truth (or meat) by itself tends to be very unpalatable to women. Thus, they need flavoring with food to make it more palatable. This is where grace comes in.

Kindness is Truth with the flavor of grace. It is in this way that God treats us to bring us to repentance, and it is also in this way husbands are to treat their wives.

Learning how to be kind — how to speak the Truth with grace — is difficult and requires much practice and knowledge of Truth and how to speak and act gracefully, especially in conflict.

Nationalists with a global agenda

November 14, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Christians are nationalists, with a global agenda.

Nationalists:

> John 15:31 Therefore when he had gone out, Jesus *said, “Now [d]is the Son of Man glorified, and God [e]is glorified in Him; 32 [f]if God is glorified in Him, God will also glorify Him in Himself, and will glorify Him immediately. 33 Little children, I am with you a little while longer. You will seek Me; and as I said to the Jews, now I also say to you, ‘Where I am going, you cannot come.’ 34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another.”

Global agenda:

> Matthew 28:16 But the eleven disciples proceeded to Galilee, to the mountain which Jesus had designated. 17 When they saw Him, they worshiped Him; but some were doubtful. 18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, “All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. 19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age.”

It’s easy to forget that what drives the global agenda is our nationalistic fervor for Christ and one another. This is the importance of understanding the commands of Jesus.

It is the Truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ that provides Unity which ultimate results in a diverse background of believers. Without the Unity of Jesus, there can be no diversity without conflict.

Suffering is the price of reconciliation

November 22, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been super busy this Thanksgiving season and will likely also be in the Christmas, so probably won't be able to post much still.

2 Corinthians discusses about how Christ commits us to the ministry of reconciliation.

> 2 Corinthians 5:16 Therefore from now on we recognize no one [f]according to the flesh; even though we have known Christ [g]according to the flesh, yet now we know Him in this way no longer. 17 Therefore if anyone is in Christ, [h]he is a new creature; the old things passed away; behold, new things have come. 18 Now all these things are from God, who reconciled us to Himself through Christ and gave us the ministry of reconciliation, 19 namely, that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, not counting their trespasses against them, and [i]He has [j]committed to us the word of reconciliation.
> 20 Therefore, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God were making an appeal through us; we beg you on behalf of Christ, be reconciled to God. 21 He made Him who knew no sin to be sin on our behalf, so that we might become the righteousness of God in Him.

What 2 Cor 5 doesn't tell us, but what we know from the gospels is that the cost of such reconciliation was Christ sacrificing Himself for us on the cross. Hence, suffering (and death) is the cost of reconciliation. The ministry of reconciliation that we have is to spread the gospel so that others may come to know the Father.

I think that we, as humans, are too apt to give up on relationships with friends, family, and other loved ones when the going gets rough or there is conflict. In our passive or passive-aggressive minds, we like to avoid all this so-called unnecessary down-and-dirty conflict with others and push it off to the side, allowing the feelings and relations to peter out. However, reconciliation requires two to come together through differences and the suffering that is present to ensure that there is unity in the end.

This is something to keep in mind as our country fractures, divorce is still prevalent, and often people decide that relationships aren't worth it. People are worth it: who is our neighbor? Fighting and suffering for the relationship is what Christ has done for us.

Complementarians believe that a wife can do no wrong

December 9, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still pretty busy, but still trying to get a post out or two.

Hearkening back to complementarians are worse than egalitarians, a majority of Dalrock's recent posts all harp on this theme:

- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/11/25/the-roots-of-modern-christian-wife-worship/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/11/28/something-in-common/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/12/05/dr-russell-moore-wives-dont-sin-part-1/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/12/07/for-the-love-of-marital-strife/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/12/09/dr-russell-moore-wives-dont-sin-part-2/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2016/12/09/rubbing-body-parts-together/

The general pattern is displayed in several relevant points, namely:

- If a husband is in sin (e.g. porn), it's his fault for failing as a leader. If a wife is in sin (e.g. porn, romance novels), what is he doing to make her act this way?
- "Effort and feelings" (e.g. romance, emotions, feeling it) justifies marital sex. Oh, and it's only the romance, emotions, and feelings of the wife. Not the husband.
- Women are responders. A husband's leadership is justified by how his wife responds. Positively, he's doing good. Negatively, he's doing bad.
- Husbands are 'brutes' that need to be 'civilized' by their wives.
- Wives are innately more moral than their husbands.
- If a husband wants a divorce, he's evil. If a wife wants a divorce, what's the husband doing wrong?

The sum of all of this nonsense is: a wife can do no wrong. This is the essence of complementarian teaching, despite the lip service they give to the Bible.

We know that the Scripture preaches that all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God. That we are responsible for our own personal actions. That even if others are treating us terrible or poorly that we should be kind and pray for them and should not sin. That even if we are married to non-Christians that we should act according to Christian principles despite if they sin.

It would be better to clarify the position that complementarians are worse than egalitarians. Egalitarians "overtly" claim equality, while advocating rule of the wife in marriage. Complementarians "overtly" claim the Biblical roles and responsibilities, while undermining the husband and advocating the rule of the wife in marriage.

The deception is far worse than we realize because they try to play their position off as truth, and cut down husbands much more than both egalitarians AND feminists. As Dalrock has noted, even secular magazines have been shocked over how films like the War Room have cut down husbands.

Complementarian teaching [in practice] = a wife can do no wrong.

The list of “complementarian” pastors who believe this is quite astonishing: Moore, Russell, Stanton, Piper, Mohler, etc. Pretty much everyone from Focus on the Family, Acts 29, and other so-called conservative Christian groups that say they adhere to the Scripture. Just look at all of their teachings on marriage.

Economics, human nature, and contentment

December 17, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I suppose I could have called this post something along the lines of analysis of capitalism and socialism/communism along with human nature and contentment. Whatever.

Socialism's problems are much more readily obvious than capitalism. Usually summarized as something along the lines of:

- Governmental corruption
- Lack of desire/motivation of people to start businesses due to profits being reduced heavily from taxation
- Lack of productivity
- Envy/covetousness of what others have

 Thanks to Chris in the comments for mentioning this.

Capitalism comes with some obvious and not-so-obvious problems:

- Greed — pretty obvious
- Exploitation of the market — fairly obvious. Reduction of costs and wages (outsourcing) is one of the biggest issues here in pursuit of profit above all else.
- Products are geared to exploit addiction — probably the least obvious.

The reason for this post was to specifically talk about the last one. In socialist markets, there are also products geared to exploit addiction, but it can most readily and obviously be exploited in a more capitalistic leaning market.

Smoking is a surefire product that aims to exploit addiction with nicotine. So are addictive drugs like opiates or any other possible drug where people chase a "high."

However, most people don't think of foods or other products in this way. I discussed this a bit in food porn (well, the post is short so here's the whole thing again):

> The most prevailing theory now in obesity research is the concept of food reward.
> Basically, the concept of food reward is based around the hedonic pleasure derived from taste. This hedonic pleasure derived from certain foods short circuits the brain, much like an addiction, and encourages increased food intake. The main offenders are foods that have increased sugar/starch, salt, and fat in certain proportions which send signals to the brain to continue eating.
> Potato chips are one of the best examples because of the prevalence of starch (the potato itself), salt (copious amounts), and roasted or baked in fat (usually vegetable oils). They are a notoriously addictive food, and there are even marketing tactics around this fact. Lays — "Bet you can't eat just one."
> Just as marketing is fixated around the sexualization of men and women, so too the food industry is fixated around making food as addictive as possible. After all, > they want you to buy more because that means more money. This is one of the inherently negative aspects that all capitalistic societies[1] manifest: greed.

> Gluttony is simply one form of how greed manifests. This is why obesity is ugly.

Indeed, all of the massively sugary or fatty or salty foods including combinations of all of those are designed to be exploit the addiction of taste. You want more and more and more.

Restaurants are similar to that. The restaurant that can best exploit the market via a combination of price and taste stand at the top. For example, Starbucks has been so successful in such a market that their quarterly earnings are at about 5.71 billion, and all of their shares summed up are worth 82.43 billion.

Indeed, what inevitably happens in a capitalistic society is a sort of "globalization" of such companies. As a product gains more popularity, it takes in an increasing market share. If there are enough forces to drive the market share up high enough (and in particular in restaurants there generally are), it tends to force similar but smaller stores out of business.

Walmart is a good example with their low(er) prices than most competitors and their ability to minimally wage their workers has led to the Walton family's combined fortune of $130 billion, the largest in America (and probably the world).

Note: I'm not saying that minimal wage is a "bad" thing either because there are a lot of factors that go into it. Neither am I saying that a CEO making big bucks is bad either because it's not. Surface value judgments are sometimes not very accurate.

The ugliness of human nature simply manifests differently in two drastically different economic settings. Socialization has the greedy government officials power grabbing and money hoarding with the businessmen buying them off. Capitalism has exploitation of human desire in various different ways (taste, sex, convenience, etc.) manifested into corporate greediness above all else.

All of this is to say that any 'economic system' can play a role in stimulating and bringing forth evil from human desire.

Anyway, the point is that I think it's a good thing to be aware of how much goes into marketing and exploiting human desires, so that we can learn to be content.

> Philippeans 4:10 But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at last you have revived your concern for me; indeed, you were concerned before, but you lacked opportunity. 11 Not that I speak [g]from want, for I have learned to be [h]content in whatever circumstances I am. 12 I know how to get along with humble means, and I also know how to live in prosperity; in any and every circumstance I have learned the secret of being filled and going hungry, both of having abundance and suffering need. 13 I can do all things [i]through Him who strengthens me.

That’s the correct context of “I can do all things through [Christ] who strengthens me.” How to be content in all circumstances, whether with little or much.

1 Tim 6:6 But godliness actually is a means of great gain when accompanied by contentment.

Revisiting Matthew 5:27-28 on lust

December 19, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's a lot of contextual background that goes into this verse. I'm going to try to explore all of it.

> Matthew 5:27 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery';
> 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart.

The 'modern' interpretation of this verse has done a lot of damage to men as it has been wielded as an arm of judgment against the sex drive of men. Today most Christian men avoid even looking at women out of shame that they're potentially sinning which is some warped version of gnostic heresy where the desires of the body are sinful. I've covered this a bit in posts such as male and female sexual desire are not sinful.

So what is the actual background of this post?

- In Sunday school is superfluous, there is a command from Deuteronomy 6 to teach the commands of God to sons (implied by fathers) all the time. This is the background of which Jesus is teaching the Law.
- This verse is from the Sermon on the Mount (which is similar to the Sermon on the Plain in Luke). The sermons are actually fairly identical, so we understand that Jesus was very consistent with what He was teaching the crowds. This type of teaching was probably similar to what He taught other crowds such as the 5000 and 4000, who he actually ended up feeding as well. These crowds were composed of the number of men present, while the women and children were not counted.
- The word for woman in Green (G1135 — gune) is both the term used for "women" in general and also "wives." Therefore, there is some context built into the passage.
- The word lust (G1937 — epithumia) is mainly translated as illicit desire. In this case, illicit desire corresponds to coveting that which is not yours (e.g the 10th commandment). Epithumia is used positively once in Luke 22 where he "desired" to eat the Passover with His disciples.

When you put all of these contextual pieces together, the verse can only be interpreted in two possible ways:

1. Jesus is teaching these to married men, who lusting on other women/wives is adultery because he already has a wife.
2. Jesus is teaching these to men in general, in which case the only context that makes sense applies to a specific situation. The options of two are as follows:

For example, if a man is single, then he should not look at a woman to lust where a woman is a "wife." If he desires a woman who is not married, then he should take step to marry her (e.g. 1 Cor 7 — it is better to marry than to burn).

If a man is married, then #1 applies as coveting another woman and/or wife is akin to adultery. In Matthew 19, Jesus affirms the "one-man and one-woman" from Genesis as the ideal, both in prohibition of divorce and likely in exclusion of polygamy now that the Law has been fulfilled.

John Chrysostom's Matthew 17 Homily implies that he believes the #1 interpretation is correct, specifically in the context of another man's wife. Chrysostom goes on a long discourse on this passage — the longest I've seen from him on two lines of Scripture — and implies through his wording that Jesus is speaking mainly to married men with wives.

> You have heard that it was said to them of old time, You shall not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that every one who looks upon a woman to lust after her, has committed adultery with her already in his heart.
> Having now finished the former commandment, and having extended it unto the height of self-denial, He, advancing in course and order, proceeds accordingly unto the second, herein too obeying the law. And yet, it may be said, this is not the second, but the third; for neither is the first, You shall not kill, but The Lord your God is one Lord.
> Why then did He not make a distinction here also? Nay, very great is the distinction which, if you attend, you will see here also included. For He said not simply, whosoever shall desire, since it is possible for one to desire even when sitting in the mountains; but, Whosoever shall look to lust; that is to say, he who gathers in lust unto himself; he who, when nothing compels him, brings in the wild beast upon his thoughts when they are calm. For this comes no longer of nature, but of self-indulgence. This even the ancient Scripture corrects from the first, saying, Contemplate not beauty which is another's. Sirach 9:8 And then, lest any one should say, what then, if I contemplate, and be not taken captive, He punishes the look, lest confiding in this security you should some time fall into sin. What then, one may say, if I should look, and desire indeed, but do no evil? Even so you are set among the adulterers. For the Lawgiver has pronounced it, and you must not ask any more questions. For thus looking once, twice, or thrice, you will perhaps have power to refrain; but if you are continually doing this, and kindling the furnace, you will assuredly be taken; for your station is not beyond that nature which is common to men. As we then, if we see a child holding a knife, though we do not see him hurt, beat him, and forbid his ever holding it; so God likewise takes away the unchaste look even before the act, lest at any time you should fall in act also. For he who has once kindled the flame, even when the woman whom he has beheld is absent, is forming by himself continually images of shameful things, and from them often goes on even to the deed. For this cause Christ takes away even that embrace which is in the heart only.

> Just then as one may feel wrath at random, so may one cast looks at random; that is, when you do it for lust. Rather, if you desire to look and find pleasure, look at your own wife, and love her continually; no law forbids that. But if you are to be curious about the beauties that belong to another, you are injuring both your wife by letting your eyes wander elsewhere, and her on whom you have looked, by touching her unlawfully. Since, although you have not touched her with the hand, yet have you caressed her with your eyes; for which cause this also is accounted adultery, and before that great penalty draws after it no slight one of its own. For then all within him is filled with disquiet and turmoil, and great is the tempest, and most grievous the pain, and no captive nor person in chains can be worse off than a man in this state of mind. And oftentimes she who has shot the dart is flown away, while the wound even so remains. Or rather, it is not she who has shot the dart, but you gave yourself the fatal wound, by your unchaste look. And this I say to free modest women from the charge: since assuredly, should one deck herself out, and invite towards herself the eyes of such as fall in her way; even though she smite not him that meets with her, she incurs the utmost penalty: for she mixed the poison, she prepared the hemlock, even though she did not offer the cup. Or rather, she did also offer the cup, though no one were found to drink it. […]

Therefore, if Chrysostom's interpretation is correct and all of the background is accounted for, then the Sermon on the Mount passage is mainly speaking to husbands with wives not to "look at another man's wife with desire" (e.g. covet another man's wife) that is not theirs. If he does then he would commit heart adultery and injure their own wife in the process.

Gleaning from the rest of the Scriptures, it seems that #2 interpretation is not necessarily incorrect either if #1 is correct. They are not mutually exclusive. Unmarried men who "look at a woman with desire" if the other woman is unmarried should aim to marry them if they are equally yoked, and unmarried men who "look at a woman with desire" if the other woman is a wife still commits adultery in his heart with her.

Conclusions

Matthew 5:27 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery'; 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart.

Jesus is speaking mainly to men in the Sermon on the Mount.

1. If you are a married man, don't covet another man's wife. Appreciating the beauty or other qualities of another man's wife is not coveting, but don't let desire invade the look. Starting to think of ways to possess that which is not yours is heart adultery.

2. If you are a single man, don’t covet a married woman as it is adultery if the deed is done. Based on the implications of #1, that too is committing adultery with her in your heart.
3. If you are a single man and you see a unmarried women and desire her, pursue her for marriage (1 Cor 7 — it is better to marry than to burn) if you are equally yoked (2 Cor 6 — do not be unequally yoked with unbelievers).

For #1 I believe some general ‘wisdom’ for that is: don’t do a double take and don’t let your eyes linger. Appreciate the beauty or quality and move on thanking God for ‘not leading us into temptation.’

Compilation of advice for men struggling in their marriage

December 24, 2016 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This information is spread all across the web in various places. I thought it would be a good idea to compile a list here since this is one of the most often asked questions for men coming to these parts.

Who this advice is for

Most of the men that come around this blog are in relationships or marriages where their woman or wife is acting rebellious. In most cases, the rebelliousness has continued even after the husband has spoken to her about it, including discussing relevant Scriptures. For example, the wife is sexually denying her husband, so the husband brings up 1 Corinthians 7. Another example is if the wife is being willfully disobedient with finances or other parts of the relationship.

In some drastic cases, the leadership of the Church(es) a husband in attending also affirms their wife's rebelliousness. The leadership of said Church may heretically claim that a husband needs to earn his wife's submission (helping her with chores and other duties), or that the submission of a wife to her husband is based on making her feel some certain way (a wife is like a slow cooker and you need to act romantic if you want to have sex), or that her submission is only required if he does the right thing (your wife is a barometer of your spirituality).

Clearly, these things are against what the Scriptures council, and no amount of bringing up the Scriptures or reasoning to said wives and/or pastors seems fruitful. This is the very definition of contentious women. Proverbs even reiterates it twice:

> Proverbs 21:9 It is better to live in a corner of a roof Than in a house shared with a contentious woman.
> Proverbs 25:24 It is better to live in a corner of the roof than in a house shared with a contentious woman.
> Proverbs 27:15 A constant dripping on a day of steady rain And a contentious woman are alike;

The nature of how to act in these situations

In these cases, it is my general contention that those who are disobedient to the Word are acting as unbelievers and therefore should be treated as such. Divorce is not an option, even if the wife is an unbeliever.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]put her away. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving > husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O husband, whether you will save your wife?

Wives have a good example of this in 1 Peter 3.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Wives are told to win their husbands without a word, chaste and respectful behavior, and a gentle and quiet Spirit, with all submissiveness. This echos the similar qualities of a hierarchical relationship discussed in 1 Peter 2, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, and so on.

Husbands can learn from this example to act according to what the Scriptures command. If words aren't working, then it must be actions that must win a wife. In the Scriptures, a husband is tasked with the headship/leadership of the marriage (Eph 5), provision for the family (1 Tim 4), instruction (Eph 6), and protection in various ways (OT).

One of the traps of this that is very easy to fall into for both husbands and wives who want to win their spouse is that they do all of these things with the intention of trying to earn back the devotion of their spouse. This is false.

Husbands and wives should obey Scriptural roles and responsibilities to each other because they want to please God first.

Certainly, God may use the way you act to win a wife (or husband for that matter), but it is far from guaranteed. It certainly is possible that you can learn to act and be one of the most godly men on the planet, and a wife may will want to divorce you. That's fine. Many people who listened to Jesus, saw the miracles He performed, and watched his ministry up close did not believe in the end or mocked Him when He was on the cross.

> James 1:2 Consider it all joy, my brethren, when you encounter various [c]trials, 3 knowing that the testing of your faith produces [d]endurance. 4 And let [e]endurance have its perfect [f]result, so that you may be [g]perfect and complete, lacking in nothing.

> 5 But if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all generously and [h]without reproach, and it will be given to him. 6 But he must ask in faith without any doubting, for the one who doubts is like the surf of the sea, driven and tossed by the wind. 7 For that man ought not to expect that he will receive anything from the Lord, 8 being a [i]double-minded man, unstable in all his ways.

If you suffer for the sake of doing what God has called you to do that is normal. The Scriptures tell us to count it all joy. Yes, it's a hard thing to learn how to do — to count suffering as joy. However, remember that is what Jesus did as He went to the cross for us.

Concepts to understand how to act if a wife is acting rebellious

In general, the thing to keep in mind is that as a man and husband are a few things.

- You are responsible for the way you act. After we die, when we are judged by God we are held accountable for the roles and responsibilities that we had. If we are tasked with leadership, then we should lead, even if those under us are rebellious.

Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

A husband's love is to work toward sanctification — holiness — so it is the primary duty of a husband to point out ways in which to shed the ideals of the culture and put on the ideals of the Scriptures. Likewise, loving his wife as his own body (3x).

- The speck versus the log. It is often the case in a contentious relationship that each side of the relationship thinks that the other side is the problem. Sure, to an impartial observer you may be the lesser "problem" but you still have problems to take care of. Remove any logs and specks as much as possible.

Matthew 7:3 Why do you look at the speck that is in your brother's eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye? 4 Or how [a]can you say to your brother, 'Let me take the speck out of your eye,' and behold, the log is in your own eye? 5 You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your brother's eye.

- Don't ignore the nature of women. Yes, society, family, friends, and even the Church may have lied to us that women are just men with boobs. Yes, it's easy to become bitter. However, don't be ignorant of the human nature of women, and don't get jaded because of it. Yes, you need to understand that women are the weaker vessel.

1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with [c]someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

Colossians 3:19 Husbands, love your wives and do not be embittered against them.

Practical ways to act if a wife is acting rebellious

Biblical roles and responsibilities:

1. Do what is required of you, according to the Scriptures as the role of the husband: love your wife as your own body (Eph 5), don't be bitter toward her (Col 3), and try to live with her in an understanding way as a weaker vessel (1 Pet 3).
2. Continue to lead. Initiate family activities and events. Give the wife and/or kids instructions on what to do and teach them as necessary if they're struggling.
3. Be a good provider and protector. Look to see how you can meet a need when applicable. Distinguish what are needs and wants and prioritize the needs.
4. Don't complain. Ever. It only validates what she thinks and says. If you need to complain, you complain to your superior: God in prayer.
5. Spend more time with your children, if any. Be the best father you can be, along with instructing them according to the Scriptures.
6. Never deny your wife sex when she wants it (1 Cor 7).
7. Keep initiating sex, but don't get mad if you are denied.

Uncontentious behavior on your part:

1. Don't argue. She clearly does not believe the Scriptures, so bringing up the Scriptures or arguing of any kind is pointless.
2. If she wants to argue, don't argue. There's no point, and it will only serve to make her more angry and volatile. If you give into her contentiousness, you're only propagating it.
3. Don't respond to threats. What is she going to do? Divorce you? If you're already at the point where divorce would only be a relief, then why not try to win her to Christ before she divorces you?
4. Just listen, don't speak. If you need to say something then let it just be listening: "It sounds like you're feeling hurt, how can I understand why you're feeling this way better?" and just let her tell you how she feels without getting upset or responding. Then thank her for telling you how she feels afterward, even if it's about you.
5. Don't throw any accusations around. It will only start arguments. You don't want arguments.
6. Try to never, ever, raise your voice. This goes with all of the points above, but it bears repeating.

In general, treat conversations non-chalantly and kindly. She can't continue to get mad if you're overwhelming exhibiting the fruits of the Spirit through patience, longsuffering, and kindness. It's very hard to get angry at someone who is not angry back.

Masculine behavior and nature of women:

As we've discussed multiple times before, Donal's PSALM/LAMPS explores the nature of attraction of women. Most of these things are a result of being naturally masculine. However, in this day and age, most men are not masculine because we have been conditioned to be feminine. Hence, specific work may be needed in order to become more masculine.

1. Be disciplined in your work/job and ambitious to be better and promoted.
2. Workout — gain muscle and lose weight.
3. Nutrition — get control of your nutrition and start eating healthier. Nutrition is the main way you're going to lose weight if you're overweight.
4. Dress nice, all the time if possible. Good grooming.
5. Get some hobbies.

Some have objections about understanding the nature of the attraction of women. I outline here why the Scriptures indicate that marriage is an earthly institution to serve earthly needs. A Christian understanding of attraction and the role it plays in marriage Part 2. Hence, it is foolish to ignore the nature of what men look for in marriage (beauty, helpmeet, companionship) and what women look for in marriage (leadership, power, status, athleticism, looks, money/provision, protection).

Summarized:

In general, emotional outbursts are a woman's way of telling you that she feels powerless or insecure. Telling a woman like this what she should be doing is the wrong response. The correct response is to be strong and comforting. Women don't necessarily want solutions to problems — just to be heard and/or held (hugged) when their emotions are going crazy.

In general, if you start being more masculine by understanding the nature of women and how to act around them like the above examples, then women will tend to become more feminine and less combative and less emotionally needy and hostage taking. However, this is not always the case if the wife is narcissistic, BUT you don't have to let it affect you and how you act even though it is difficult.

The focus needs to be on what you can control, and the only thing you can control is you and how you act. This is a very difficult thing to learn, but you need to learn it to be an effective man of God.

End notes:

- I know I didn't cover all actions a man can take. If you have more to add, then post them in the comments.
- Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you all.

Why men aren't eager missionaries

January 6, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock critiqued this Piper article from the perspective of women, but I'm going to do it from the perspective of men. It starts off with this question submitted to Piper:

> So it's no surprise, we get a lot of questions from missionaries in the field, and a number of questions from missionaries in training, and a fair number of questions from college students who are interested in giving their lives to missions. Today's question comes from a podcast listener named Amy, who writes, "Pastor John, I've recently noticed that the number of women going to the nations far outweighs men. I looked for more statistics on this, and struggled to even find information. If this is the case, what are your thoughts on this trend, and what do you think are the most probable causes?"

Piper first looks at statistics.

> Two-thirds of active missionaries are married couples. Another third are single women. The rest are single men. Well, if that went by too fast, two thirds plus one third don't leave any room for single men. And it is only a joke in part because it is almost that way.
> To be more accurate, the actual situation among most evangelical faith missions is that between 80–85% of all single missionaries are women. It is a rare thing, like two out of every ten, for a single man to make missions his life's vocation, which results in the overall statistics being that one-third of those in evangelical world missions are married men, one-third are married women, and 80 percent of the last third are single women. Which means that something just less than two-thirds of the total missionary force are women.

It's interesting because we already know Christianity is feminized in the western world. Already in Churches there is the preponderance of 55-70% of Churches are made up of women. It should really be no surprise that women are over-represented in such endeavors.

Pile onto that the push for cultural achievement of women — the majority of college and graduate degrees are now obtained by women — then it should also be no surprise that Churches tend to push women into ministry and the mission field in droves. This is as opposed to teaching and training women to be good wives and mothers. God forbid we do that.

> 1) Opinion number one: Let's start with the observation that many single women in missions would like to be married, not all. Some regard it as a divine calling to serve as a single woman, and they have no intention of even hoping or praying toward marriage. And I thank God for that and for them. But many would like to serve in missions side by side with a similarly called and devoted husband. But > by and large, it is men who propose marriage. Women have less control over being married than men do — they can always say no, but I mean taking the initiative in a positive way. Therefore, the single missionary woman who would like to be married is not exactly in the same position as a single missionary man who would like to be married.

> Here is a little anecdote. Elisabeth Elliot — I went down and got this from my wife, because I knew she said this once — Elisabeth Elliot told of an interview she had with Gladys Aylward, a single missionary to China who died in 1970: The Small Woman: Gladys Aylward is the name of one biography. Here is what Elisabeth Elliot said. I think she was talking at Urbana when she said this, "Miss Aylward talked to the Lord about her singleness. She was a no-nonsense woman in very direct and straightforward ways and she asked God to call a man from England, send him straight out to China, straight to where she was, and have him propose to me." I can't forget the next line. Elisabeth Elliot said, "With a look of even deeper intensity, she shook her little bony finger in my face and said, 'Elisabeth, I believe God answers prayer. And he called him.'" And here there was a brief pause of intense whisper. She said, "'He called him, and he never came.'"
> Now, that experience, I would guess, is not unique to Gladys Aylward. So, that is my first opinion, that the disproportion of single missionary women to missionary men is that the initiative of proposing marriage among those two groups, singles, lies with the men and not the women.

I'll summarize these three paragraphs in four words:

Men aren't stepping up.

Really? That's the best they could've came up with?

There's no shortage of irony there.

> 2) Here is opinion number two: Many, it seems to me, of those single men probably avoid missions out of the same personal dynamics that keep them single. Among Christian men who do not get married, say, in their 20s and 30s, they are probably held back from that relationship of marriage by — here are my opinions — a sense of inadequacy that they could be a spiritual leader or a fear that they might be rejected as they pursue a relationship or a lack of purpose in life that would give support and meaning in a marriage relationship. Any of those hindrances to forming a long-term commitment of marriage would also explain why he may have a sense of inadequacy about missions or a fear about missions or a lack of purpose about missions.
> In other words, the very things that keep a man single in his late 20s and 30s are probably the same kind of things that would keep him from pursuing a life in missions. On the other hand, single women may not feel any of those hindrances. They would happily marry a godly, mature, purposeful, mission-directed man if he came along. But they can't make that happen without men doing their part.

> Mike Delorenzo: Singles, mission work takes strength — more than you know, but not more than God will give you.
> Now, I am sure the matter is way more complex than those two opinions have hinted at, but those are possible explanations for the disproportion number in the single missionary force — like 80% women and 20% men. So, the way I would like to end is by taking the words of Mike Delorenzo who works for Africa Inland Mission (AIM) and close by reading his challenge. Thinking of single men as opposed to single women in missions, he said,
> Yes, it may be harder for [men]. Harder to cut through the lies and the apathy. Harder to raise money in a self-reliant society. Harder to enter into relationally-driven cross-cultural missions. Harder to find your ministry in your vocation. But the gospel needs men. The Christian life is a battle, so much so that the Bible calls us to put on armor. And the mission field is a battle field, where a man's strengths and passions are called upon to be spent for the greatest cause creation has ever known: the cause of Christ and His redemptive work to save this world — and I mean really save this world. It takes courage — courage to step out of your slumber and into the fray. It takes humility — to be willing to fail or at least be deemed a failure by your peers. And it takes strength — more than you know, but not more than God will give you.

Honestly, I had to do a double take. Piper's "other option" is that men feel inadequate and/or are not strong enough. Hence, they don't pursue missions or marriage.

In other words: Men are not stepping up.

Piper literally gave two options and they're basically two different ways to blame men for not stepping up on the mission field or marriage.

It gets better

What are some reasons why men would generally avoid the mission field?

I'll walk you through a multiple examples of actual reasons Piper could have used but is too blind to see.

- Most men have a strong sex drive. Most men want to marry. What is one way that has been ingrained into men in our culture that is required to get married? "You need to have a good job to be able to provide for your family"

Funny that. Missionary work doesn't typically come with or segue into having a job that is able to reliably support a family.

- Most men don't want to beg others for money to support missions work.

Surprise surprise.

- Churches/families/others tend to support women more than men with monetary donations for missions. Women in need are worthy of support, but men are not. See:

Vast majority of the homeless population = men.

This goes back to the fact that men are supposed to be able to provide for themselves no matter the circumstances at minimum. If not, you're a failure akin to living in your parents basement.

- As stated before, the Church is already feminized. No surprise that there are a majority of women in various "Christian" activities.
- As stated before, Churches/Christians push Christian women toward "achievement" both in college, graduate school, and not surprisingly ministry and missions.

All of these are clear cut reasons why men tend to avoid the mission field and why women are pushed toward it. Yet, all we get from mainline Christian leaders is that "men aren't stepping up." Maybe if the Church actually focused on mentoring men for leadership positions and teaching them to be masculine and cultivating masculine traits there would be more of such men. But I digress.

You gotta wonder how long the blame game that "men aren't stepping up" can be perpetuated by these Christian leaders.

P.S. Real life is still super busy, which is why I'm not posting all that much at the moment.

Most men are not afraid of commitment

January 18, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I realized something when mulling over commitment.

Most men are not afraid of commitment. The reality is that most men are afraid of a lack of commitment from women and the consequences thereof. It is pure projection from women.

We know that the majority of divorces — 65-70%+ — are initiated by wives who are unhappy.

Men will often go a hell of a long way — wording intended — to try to satisfy a discontented and contentious wife because he loves her. Albeit, it isn't the right thing to do, according to the Scriptures.

Men are not dumb. They can see that marriages are a bad deal for them when women are commitment-phobes. Likewise, they can see how many wives are completely apathetic about their marriage: uninterested in sex, uninterested in his likes and dislikes, uninterested in his hobbies. Men can see women that blow up marriages with no consequence win cash and prizes.

Next time I hear "men are afraid of commitment," I'm countering with "men are afraid of women's lack of commitment." Some interesting conversations will probably come from this.

Insulated

January 26, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal's post on Sympathy and Understanding talks about how married men tend to be insulated once they marry.

> Which drives me to the subject of this post- men shouldn't expect much in the way of understanding from those around them re: the MMP. In fact, the only ones who might understand are men in the same position (or who recently occupied it). I don't know about most of my readers, but I find this to be a terribly frustrating matter. On more than one occasion I have been asked why I'm not married yet. And no matter how much or well I explain it, I can see in people's eyes that they don't understand. I find this quite isolating at times- it creates a climate of being cut off and without aid.

Generally speaking, this is both true and false.

I know quite a few men who work with an on-campus ministry, and they are not insulated from the cultural changes in marriage simply because they mentor and listen to the stories of the young men. On the other hand, as has been stated before, there is definitely a lack of sympathy and understanding from a lot of married men who don't know what it is like. They are stuck in the 1960s and 1970s prior to "no fault divorce" and "free love."

The problem is that Christians who don't step out to actually engage the culture become insulated in their own bubble. Christians are not supposed to remove themselves from the world, but to be in the world but not of the world. This is the theme of Jesus' prayer to the Father in John 17.

The major problem(s) of the Church tend to be traced back to these two themes. The Church and Christians try to isolate and insulate themselves from the world in many circumstances. For example, sheltered homeschool children. On the other hand, the Church and Christians also become of the world rather than in the world but not of the world. For instance, feminism and most of the rest of the issues the Church battles with in Revelation 2 and 3.

Men who try to impart knowledge simply based on their knowledge of themselves without taking into account the changing and rapid secularization of culture — not that 1950s America was some bastion of Christianity in the first place — have insulated themselves in their own bubble. Whether this is deliberate, accidental, or both is neither here nor there. But it does happen, often with disastrous results.

Young, unmarried and married Christian men beware and be wise.

The relationship issues that get in the way of following Christ

February 8, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still quite busy with RL work which is why I haven't been posting much.

Snapper has touched on a couple posts recently such as Belief versus Scripture.

> A while back, when I was going through the issues with my pastor, I had a conversation with my daughter about her, my youngest son and myself doing an at home bible study, to which she informed me she didn't want to take part in because she "didn't believe what I believed about the bible". Now, the more and more I think about this the more and more irritated I become. I think some Christians need to make a determination about what people "believe" and what the bible actually says.
> Case in point: The bible says Jesus is the son of God. If you are a Christian there is no "what you believe" or "what I believe" about the statement. If you believe the bible, then you believe this to be true. You cannot say to another Christian, "Yeah, well, I don't really believe that way", unless by that statement you mean, "I am not a Christian and I don't believe in the bible".
> I mean, the only other explanation is that a person simply wants to have the appearance of being an obedient follower of Christ, but in reality has no interest in being obedient. By doing this they give themselves the appearance of being so, but also give themselves an escape route, just in case.
> Don't be that kind of Christian. Though it may fool those around you, your ruse is not very effective on the one who can see the heart, and knows your every thought. When a verse is clear, it would be wise to take its meaning as such.

Lots of things "get in the way" of the Truth. In fact, the Bible is quite clear of many such things that get in the way. Pride is usually the main one, but it can be other temptations like the other deadly sins of Envy, Wrath, Gluttony, Lust, Sloth, and Greed. Some others are wolves in sheep's clothing, but we are warned about that too.

In general, even those who are trying to be followers of Christ tend to slip up because we cling to our past more than the hope of Christ for the future. What I mean by this is that we tend to be shaped by our past experiences.

For example, a child that grew up with his father absent may often feel like God the Father is not there for him. His experience(s) shape the way he views God, rather than the other way around. Another example of this is a mother who is abusive to her children. Children coming to our heavenly father may get stuck in the mindset of being unworthy of forgiveness, feel that it's right that authority is abusive, and so on.

Both past experiences and the feelings associated with them tend to shape our thinking and beliefs rather than the other way around. This should not be a surprise, and biologically it makes sense. When we are placed in stressful situations, we often have very strong feelings associated with it, and that is how the strongest memories in our brains are formed. This is precisely why we tend to remember hurts rather than joys and evil rather than good.

In Snapper's example of his daughter, the problem is that his daughter had certain behavior modeled to her for a long time. This includes the unsubmissive and unrepentant attitudes and actions of his wife. It really should not be a surprise that she is going to feel a certain way and react to a changing situation negatively, as she had viewed the previous situation as normal. This type of thing is a huge problem.

> The longer the past experiences have gone on, the harder it is to change the acquired momentum the impression of past experiences on a relationship.

This is generally why if you're in a 'newer dating relationship,' and things go south and stay south it's generally better to move on rather than try to fix things. Relationship dynamics, especially Biblical Christian principles, that are already screwed up are tough to fix and in many cases not worth it. Of course, this is not possible with all relationships, especially marriage.

Change, through the power of the Holy Spirit, can right the ship. Or maybe it will never right the ship. But we change to be Christ followers not because we have the answers, but because we honor the One who has saved us.

Realistically, through the power of the Holy Spirit, all Christians have to consistently model Christ-like behavior until it becomes the new normal for those around us. Change is a funny thing, and people always think that those who are being "good" are doing it because they want something from you or are trying to manipulate you. The only thing that can dispel that notion is Christ working through us consistently, over short or long periods of time.

Destructive tendencies

February 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was mulling over how everything that goes against God's Word is destructive. What brought this up was a review over the times I've been to churches with female pastors. Unsurprisingly, they're all small, waning in attendance, or dying off completely.

- Female pastors? The 'Church' doesn't flourish and eventually dies.
- Feminism? Leads to no marriage, no children, abortion, and children become deceived
- Male led marriages flourish, egalitarian and women led marriages experience discontent and destruction.
- Frigidity in marriage? Leads to no children, dissension, marital strife, and divorce
- Heck, go through the list in Galatians 5:19 The acts of the flesh are obvious: sexual immorality, impurity and debauchery; 20 idolatry and witchcraft; hatred, discord, jealousy, fits of rage, selfish ambition, dissensions, factions 21 and envy; drunkenness, orgies, and the like. I warn you, as I did before, that those who live like this will not inherit the kingdom of God.

Everything that is of God is protective of Christians, the Church, and relationships. It's never solely beneficial for one party. It's mutually beneficial for all parties. Even if it's "hard," "uncomfortable," or "goes against common worldly wisdom."

The obvious is not exactly obvious to many Christians until they examine it further.

If the tree is rotten, the fruits are rotten, and the tree eventually dies. If the tree is good, the fruits are good, and it flourishes.

Thoughts on wisdom and omniscience

February 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One thing I've been mulling over more recently is human behavior and statistical probability. I've written on vetting and statistics before, so this was going more deeply into it.

- Statistical models tell us the probability that any random person exhibiting certain characteristics or behavior will have a particular outcome.
- In the same way, our world is also probabilistic if you've studied quantum mechanics at all.
- Likewise, I can take a glance at any random relationship, and tell if they are more or less likely to break up in the future based on certain attitudes, behaviors, and trends.

Prediction of human behavior is not all that complex when you see the patterns behind their interactions. We can say for certain that those who have previously been in violent relationships will most likely get themselves again into violent relationships. Cheaters will cheat again. Those who have had pre-marital sex have the highest risk of divorce. Those who smoke have an inflated risk of lung cancer. And so on.

This is is also why it is true that only through Jesus and receiving the Holy Spirit can we make any change that goes against a probabilistic and therefore deterministic future. Materialism, without the metaphysical, is bound to determinism. The divine nature changes the material.

Thus, free will allows us the foresight to examine the future. Wisdom is foresight into the statistical patterning of creation that allows one to choose righteousness — or insert other characteristic here — for any particular situation. In effect, it is limited omniscience to be able to see the consequences of future possibilities and change/choose our behavior to do the right thing.

A divine being, who knows the hearts and minds of all, necessarily has omniscience due to unlimited foresight into statistical patterning and behavior into the future (otherwise known as cause and effect). This should be no surprise to us as we are created in God's image and have the capacity for the qualities of God to a very limited extent.

Proverbs 9:10 The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom, And the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding.

When we exercise our ability to "see the future" according to wisdom, we choose what is right and thus fear the Lord.

Insecurity underlies the human condition and reveals our need for a Savior

February 15, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wanted to expand on Donal's post Tissue Paper Walls.

> "Much of this insecurity comes from the gap in physical prowess between men and women. We men are much more capable of defending ourselves and imposing our will on our environment than women are- at least at the individual level. But whatever its source, it has a profound effect on female behavior. Women are constantly, and often at an unconscious or subconscious level, trying to alter their environment to make it feel more secure."
> Having thought about it more, I can think of additional reasons for female insecurity. One of them is that women know (mostly at an unconscious level) how vulnerable pregnancy and child-raising makes them. Another is that women, again unconsciously, realize how limited their peak fertility and SMV window is. They worry about optimizing that time, and covering for when they are no longer at their peak. There is plenty of room for speculation there, and my commenters can feel free to contribute.
> However, I want talk about how the insecurity should be handled. One of the problems with that insecurity is that ill-intentioned men can exploit it. Often times quite easily. And course, it usually isn't entirely unwillingly. But exploitable it still remains.
> At the same time, I think that this insecurity is something that good men can relieve or buttress. They can, in the right scenario, build up women's confidence in a positive way. This can help women resist that lure of exploitation or build up a wall against it. Men can supplement the tissue paper or paper mache walls that women may have with walls of stone and gates of iron.

There has been many a pastor nowadays who say that "insecurity is a sin" or in other words "a lack of self esteem is a woman's greatest sin." After all, insecurity supposedly leads to low self worth. Men, of course, are parroted with the typical sins of pride, lust, greed, and so on. However, the source of womens' greatest sin issue is a lack of self esteem generated from insecurity.

Of course, all this is bunk.

Insecurity is simply a source of temptation.

God created man to dwell with Him in the garden:

> Genesis 3:8 Then the man and his wife heard the sound of the Lord God as he was walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and they hid from the Lord God among the trees of the garden. 9 But the Lord God called to the man, "Where are > you?”

God also created man with the ability to be tempted, and to make free will choices regarding temptation:

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any of the wild animals the Lord God had made. He said to the woman, “Did God really say, ‘You must not eat from any tree in the garden’?” 2 The woman said to the serpent, “We may eat fruit from the trees in the garden, 3 but God did say, ‘You must not eat fruit from the tree that is in the middle of the garden, and you must not touch it, or you will die.’” 4 “You will not certainly die,” the serpent said to the woman. 5 “For God knows that when you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.”
> 6 When the woman saw that the fruit of the tree was good for food and pleasing to the eye, and also desirable for gaining wisdom, she took some and ate it. She also gave some to her husband, who was with her, and he ate it. 7 Then the eyes of both of them were opened, and they realized they were naked; so they sewed fig leaves together and made coverings for themselves.

The reality is that temptation has always existed, and men and women are given the choice to fall into temptation or not. Insecurity is simply one form of temptation.

You could argue that Eve was “insecure” in herself and thus desired to be like God to feel un-insecure. You could also argue that Adam was “insecure” without Eve and thus followed her into temptation rather than trusting in God. Both of these are the Truth.

Distinguishing what occurred “before the fall” and “after the fall” is important because it leads to numerous conclusions we can draw on in pursuit of Jesus. For example, unlike the egalitarian argument on marriage, there is ample evidence to suggest that headship existed prior to the fall. Indeed, there was a structure of authority prior to the fall with the husband as the head of the wife. This completely destroys the egalitarian argument that men and women were somehow “equal” prior to the fall, which, according to them, nullifies the statements of headship-submission between the husband and wife in the NT.

Given how Genesis 3 plays out, insecurity existed well before the fall. God created such an attribute within man as an interaction with free will. Since God was dwelling with men, the righteous action in the garden would have been to flee from temptation to the Creator. This “insecurity” was meant to be a free will choice between “sin” and “relationship with God.” We should should seek refuge in the Lord in our insecurity.

> 1 Peter 5:6 Humble yourselves, therefore, under God’s mighty hand, that he may lift you up in due time. 7 Cast all your anxiety on him because he cares for you. 8 Be alert and of sober mind. Your enemy the devil prowls around like a roaring lion looking for someone to devour. 9 Resist him, standing firm in the faith, because you know that the family of believers throughout the world is undergoing the same kind of sufferings.

It is no mistake that it was this way in the beginning, and that it is the same way after Jesus has redeemed us.

Insecurity reveals our need for a Savior.

In regard to Donal’s post, Christians are to build up other Christian’s faith and also act as earthly models of Christ. It is not so much that we should focus building up security out of insecurity, but that we should focus on kingdom principles and covenants. Marriage is one of those. Seeking God in insecurity is another. A husband modeling Christ-Church relationship when his wife or kids are insecure is another.

Sexless marriage and other relationship statistics

February 24, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock's recent post on Wilcox motivated me to dredge this up from my drafts folder about 8 months ago.

According to Nicholas B Wolfinger, one of the authors:

> Approximately 85 percent of Americans will marry in their lifetimes. Most will stay married, and most of these marriages will be happy. These are incontrovertible facts backed by survey after survey.

We already know that 40-50% of marriages end in divorce, depending on who you get your statistics from. I don't see how that is a happy outcome in most cases. Of course, this is too common, so lets look at some other factors.

Statistics

A few years back, some of us as SSM's were speculating how many marriages were actually sexless and/or unhappy even though they stayed together. I found some stats after stumbling onto a wiki about it.

> A sexless marriage is a marriage in which little or no sexual activity occurs between the two spouses. The US National Health and Social Life Survey in 1994 (Laumann et al. 1994) found that 2% of the married respondents reported no sexual intimacy in the past year. The definition of a non-sexual marriage is often broadened to include those where sexual intimacy occurs fewer than ten times per year, in which case 20 percent of the couples in the National Health and Social Life Survey would be in the category. Newsweek magazine estimates that 15 to 20 percent of couples are in a sexless relationship.[1] Studies show that 10% or less of the married population below age 50 have not had sex in the past year. In addition less than 20% report having sex a few times per year, or even monthly, under the age 40.[2]

It appears that ~20% of marriages are what we would call sexless (<10 times per year) or about once a month.

We don't know how many of these marriages are going to end up in divorce. Some of these are headed for divorce for whatever reason. We don't really know how much adultery or other factors are going on either.

Other data show similar qualities:

> More than 7 times a week: 3%
> 7 times a week: 1%
> 6 times a week: 3%
> 5 times a week: 9%
> 4 times a week: 11%

> 3 times a week: 13%
> 2 times a week: 21%
> once a week: 25%
> once a month: 8%
> less than once a month: 9%

Approximately 17% (once a month to less than once a month) are sexless. I would assume that most “once a weekers” are probably unhappy with that. The sex drive of men is typically higher than that of women, but women can become dissatisfied with lack of frequency as well.

We know that at the lowest 40% of marriages end in divorce. So if we assume that most of the sexless ~20% of marriages end in divorce, a large portion of those in the 25% once a week range are going to divorce as well. This doesn’t take into account the potential dissolution of marriages with more frequency sex that have other problems.

I would suspect many of the cases with the approximate “once a week” don’t actually do it “once a week” but are rather clustered together around a woman’s ovulation cycle. So maybe the week when said wife was ovulating. Otherwise, it’d just be another sexless marriage.

If you take the “once a weekers” with the sexless marriager, you get approximately 43% low sex marriages and 57% higher sex marriages. Not too far off from the regularly quoted divorce statistics.

More interesting is this:

> ### How is your marriage set up?
> Husband leads/in control: 22%
> Equal, but husband is “more equal”: 33%
> Egalitarian: 27%
> Equal, but wife is “more equal”: 13%
> Wife leads/in control: 4%

We know that sex is commanded by the Scriptures in 1 Cor 7, but headship-submission and love-respect is also commanded.

The interesting split between the husband or “more husband led” marriages to the egalitarian and wife run marriages are 55% to 45%. The fact that the 45% of egalitarian or wife run marriages mirrors the divorce statistics isn’t exactly that surprising to me.

> ### Do you find your sex life fulfilling?
> Yes: 53%
> No: 47%

The fact that it mirrors the divorce statistics is not at all surprising either.

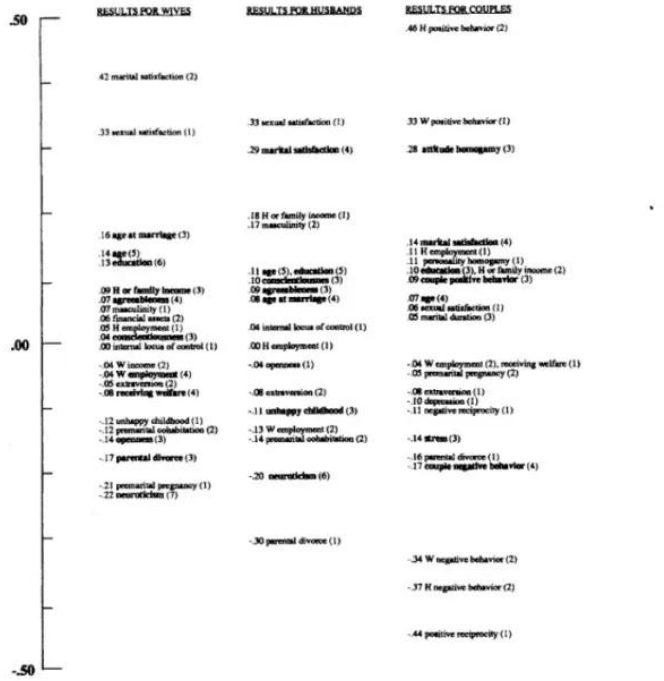

Figure 1. Aggregate effect-size *r*s of independent variables on the marital stability of wives, husbands, and couples. Numbers in parentheses represent the number of studies aggregated to estimate the effect. Entries in boldface are based on three or more studies. Variables in each column are measured for the individual or the couple. Where husbands' and wives' variables have been studied separately for their effects on each spouse has been indicated in the figure (H = husband, W = wife).

Some longitudinal research on marriage indicates that the greatest predictors of marital stability are:

- For both: the highest are Marital satisfaction and Sexual satisfaction
- Husband/family Income and masculinity for men
- Age, age at marriage, education, and Husband/family income for women
- For couples: positive behavior and attitude homogeny

The Scriptures are indeed wise ranking sexual satisfaction and specific roles and responsibilities high on the lists.

Of course, negative indicators are:

- For both: Depression, negative reciprocal [behavior], stress, parental divorce, couple negative behavior, and positive reciprocity.
- For women: Receiving welfare, unhappy childhood, premarital cohabitation, openness, parental divorce, premarital pregnancy, and neuroticism.
- For men: extraversion, unhappy childhood, (lack of) employment, neuroticism, and parental divorce.

In general, it looks like a list of things the Bible says to avoid, barring a few.

Interesting how parental divorce more negatively affects men than women, but it affects men more so. This is also why vetting for background and character is important.

It's interesting that lots of the indicators on headship-submission, masculinity, roles of the husband and wife, and sexual frequency all come out to the 40-50% range which actually represents the approximate amount of divorces. It's almost as if the One who inspired the Scriptures who was also the author of marriage knew what He was talking about.

Even the “secular” marriages tend to follow the natural law that was created by God.

Other statistics

I’m some others from Kinsey’s FAQ.

> Median number of opposite-sex partners in lifetime among U.S. men and women aged 25-44 years of age is 6.6 for men and 4.3 for women. (National Center for Health Statistics, 2015)

Men lie by overinflating. Women lie by underinflating. Since it a man and a woman for every sexual encounter, the true rate is somewhere between them.

> Percentage of men and women aged 15-44 years of age who have had 15 or more opposite-sex sexual partners in their lifetime is 21.8% for men, and 10.6% for women. (National Center for Health Statistics, 2015)

20% rule anyone? Although, we can’t tell if said men were overinflating. I would be interested to see the full stats on partner breakdown.

> Over 50% of respondents ages 18-24 indicated that their most recent sexual partner was a casual or dating partner. For all other age groups, the majority of study participants indicated that their most recent sexual partner was a relationship partner. (National Survey of Sexual Health and Behavior, 2010).

Hookup culture is real. For every relationship you see, there are as many hookups.

> Men and women both were likely to report sexual satisfaction if they also reported frequent kissing and cuddling, sexual caressing by the partner, higher sexual functioning, and if they had sex more frequently. On the other hand, for men, having had more sex partners in their lifetime was a predictor of less sexual satisfaction.

Men become jaded to sex too. The so-called ‘player burnout.’

> [KI] Frequent kissing or cuddling predicted happiness in the relationship for men, but not for women. Both men and women reported more happiness the longer they had been together.

Surprise, men are the real romantics.

In any case, there’s lots of conclusions to be had here, and they all align with the Scriptures.

- Frigidity in marriage is a sin. Have lots of sex.
- Husband led marriages are more successful.
- Men are providers and masculine. Women ages and age at marriage are important and value of men’s provision. Education may correlate with better self control and long term planning in women.

- Positive behavior and attitudes are important. (Rather, godly attitudes and behavior).
- Vet for divorce risk via factors such as depression, negative reciprocal [behavior], stress, parental divorce, couple negative behavior, positive reciprocity. For women: receiving welfare, unhappy childhood, premarital cohabitation, openness, parental divorce, premarital pregnancy, and neuroticism. For men: extraversion, unhappy childhood, (lack of) employment, neuroticism, and parental divorce.

Be a wise conversationalist, not an interviewer

March 17, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Scott recently posted on a comment from Elspeth on how a man came off as "interview-y" when getting to know a woman and on date.

As someone with a decent amount of personal experience in the matter of vetting, there is some general wisdom in doing this. I posted a list of questions quite a few years ago that I've used to vet, and you gotta keep in mind no one really likes being interrogated.

- Have fun. Getting to know someone shouldn't be a bore or an interview. This is generally also why I prefer activity dates as opposed to sitting down and eating.
- Start with the her, not her history. Get to know who she is now first. Then delve into the past, and see how it has affected her in the present. No one, not even you, wants to be judged on their past without someone knowing who you are now. All of us make mistakes, to some degree or another.
- General conservation. Don't throw out questions one after the other. That's an interview. You throw in a question here and there interspersed with general conversation. If you're talking about your family, you can throw in a transition to an "interview" question about family. An example of this would be you're chatting about your background and how you were raised (e.g. the past), then you can throw in a question about how she would like to raise her family, if and when (e.g. the future). As you can see, talking about your past can be transitioned to a question about how she sees the future playing out.
- Framing. Sometimes throwing out questions is fine like the past-to-future type of conservation on how she would raise her family. However, value statements and stories are good too. For instance, if we were talking about family, you could comment on something that worked effectively for your parents when they were raising you. That allows her to transition the conversation to how her parents raised her, how she wants to raise her kids, or see if she's interested in knowing more about you.
- Ask about current events. There's so much feminism, divorce, sex change, homosexuality, and so on prevalent in the media nowadays that it's not hard to solicit an opinion (not even in the form of a question) on how you can learn about her values. One way to do this is to just go along the lines of… "Oh, did you hear the story on the news about ___?" […] "No? Well, it was about ___ and so and so things happened. It's crazy." Then she will usually want to insert her opinion on such and such matter and it can lead to a discussion about said topic.
- Generally speaking, going with the list that I wrote in the link above, you want to start with less intimate topics and work toward there. Delving into family divorce history on a first date is generally not a wise idea.

These are all good examples of how to lead a conversation well to where it doesn't seem like an interview.

I personally like starting with her hopes and dreams, her relationship with God, what she values, and who she wants to be in the future. You can tell a lot about someone and their identity (in Christ or not in Christ) from these few things. Also, pretty easy to throw some teasing around too.

It takes practice to pull off effectively, but it also teaches you how to be a good conversationalist and lead the interaction the way you want.

Engagement and marriage

March 24, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Engagement and marriage are two separately defined concepts in the Scripture which are most interesting to study.

“Dates” and “Dating” and “Courtship” don’t exist. They’re made up. It’s not that these concepts are “bad” in any meaning of the word, but they can become too much of a focus making mountains of nothing, not even molehills. They can become an idol.

The “engagement” of the Church with Jesus is symbolized with the sealing of the Holy Spirit:

> John 14:15 “If you love me, you will obey my commandments. 16 I will ask the Father, and he will give you another helper who will be with you forever. 17 That helper is the Spirit of Truth. The world cannot accept him, because it doesn’t see or know him. You know him, because he lives with you and will be in you.
> 2 Corinthians 1:21 God establishes us, together with you, in a relationship with Christ. He has also anointed us. 22 In addition, he has put his seal of ownership on us and has given us the Spirit as his guarantee.
> Ephesians 1:13 In [q]Him, you also, after listening to the message of truth, the gospel of your salvation—having also [r]believed, you were sealed in [s]Him with the Holy Spirit of promise, 14 who is [t]given as a pledge of our inheritance, with a view to the redemption of God’s own possession, to the praise of His glory.
> Ephesians 4:25 Therefore, laying aside falsehood, speak truth each one of you with his neighbor, for we are members of one another. 26 Be angry, and yet do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger, 27 and do not give the devil [s]an opportunity. 28 He who steals must steal no longer; but rather he must labor, performing with his own hands what is good, so that he will have something to share with [t]one who has need. 29 Let no [u]unwholesome word proceed from your mouth, but only such a word as is good for edification [v]according to the need of the moment, so that it will give grace to those who hear. 30 Do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, [w]by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption. 31 Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice. 32 Be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, just as God in Christ also has forgiven [x]you.

In our culture, a “ring” signifies engagement. Engagement rings have a long history going back to the Greeks.

> Although the ancient Egyptians are sometimes credited with having invented the > engagement ring,[1] and the ancient Greeks with having adopted the tradition,[2] the history of the engagement ring can only be reliably traced as far back as ancient Rome.[3][4][5] In many countries, engagement rings are placed on the ring finger of the left hand. At one time it was believed that this finger contained a vein (the vena amoris) that led to the heart. This idea was popularized by Henry Swinburne in A treatise of Spousals, or Matrimonial Contracts (1686).[6] The story seems to have its origin in the ancient Roman book Attic Nights by Aulus Gellius quoting Apion's Aegyptiacorum, where the alleged vein was originally a nervus (a word that can be translated either as "nerve" or "sinew").[7]

Indeed, throughout history beyond that point, rings were used to show wealthy, publicly advertise that a woman was taken, custom, privilege, and so on.

To Christians, pagan traditions means nothing. 1 Corinthians 8 with food sacrificed to idols and all. We are not defiled by pagan traditions. However, it can be used as a sign as Christians to signal that they are engaged, much like Jesus gives the Church the Holy Spirit. The key is not making it into an idol and having the heart in the right place to honor God.

The marriage of the lamb to his bride happens in Revelation 19 when Christ returns.

> Revelation 19:7 Let us rejoice and be glad and give the glory to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb has come and His [b]bride has made herself ready." 8 It was given to her to clothe herself in fine linen, bright and clean; for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the [c]saints.
> 9 Then he *said to me, "Write, 'Blessed are those who are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb.'" And he *said to me, "These are true words of God." 10 Then I fell at his feet to worship him. But he *said to me, "Do not do that; I am a fellow servant of yours and your brethren who hold the testimony of Jesus; worship God. For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

Prior to this, Jesus gives the Church a warning to be faithful to him, especially in Revelation 2 and 3, and also in the gospels with parables and stories about the ten virgins and sheep and the goats.

In general, those who have "true" faith and have received the Holy Spirit will talk the talk and walk the talk through acts of righteousness, which will be the bride's marriage clothing in her marriage to Jesus.

> 1 Timothy 1:3 As I urged you [a]upon my departure for Macedonia, [b]remain on at Ephesus so that you may instruct certain men not to teach strange doctrines, 4 nor to [c]pay attention to myths and endless genealogies, which give rise to mere speculation rather than furthering [d]the administration of God which is by faith. 5 But the goal of our [e]instruction is love from a pure heart and a good conscience and a sincere faith. 6 For some men, straying from these things, have turned aside to fruitless discussion, 7 wanting to be teachers of the > Law, even though they do not understand either what they are saying or the matters about which they make confident assertions.

The period from engagement to marriage is not fulfilled with nothing.

Our transformation from lost to saved to disciple is about engaging the Church to its gifts such as evangelism, teaching, and so on, along with baptism, communion, and good works in preparation for marriage for the Church to be married.

Likewise, so too a man and woman who are engaged should prepared themselves for marriage:

- A woman must prepare herself to be a wife: to respect and obey her future husband (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3, Col 3, Tit 2), to cultivate chaste and respectful behavior and a gentle and quiet spirit (1 Pet 3), and to learn to love (philos) their husbands, to love their children, to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored (Tit 2).
- A man must prepare himself to be a husband: headship (Eph 5), a sacrificial love for her sanctification, not feelings — 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing (Eph 5), to treat her as he treats himself x3 (Eph 5), to nourish and cherish (Eph 5), not be embittered toward her (Col 3), and to live with her in an understanding way as someone who is weaker, and show her honor as a co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3).

We honor God by obeying His commands, even when they are not “popular” or not “lauded” or even “despised” by the world. God’s Word does not change with the times. It is eternal, and it shows God’s design for marriage. Marriage is more fulfilling and even more successful when we follow God’s commands for it.

My reflection back on the Scriptures about engagement and marriage again is that much more fulfilling now that I am engaged to my fiancée. It is also a stark reminder that the journey is never over, either for the wife or husband, to grow more like Christ. It is only in Christ that I have full confidence knowing that the road I walk is difficult, especially in our blatantly blasphemous culture.

Make it happen

Scott has a post named June Cleaver might be unmarriagable right now. It's likely the largest discussion in the past few years about the factors that go into finding a spouse that is suitable for marriage from the perspective of a woman (and also the factors that go into it for men).

Generally speaking, ever since the rise of no fault divorce and the decoupling of "sex" and "marriage" — at least in culture — via fornication and promiscuity, anyone looking for marriage has suffered extensively. There's numerous reasons about why this has happened. I'm going to try to summarize many of the factors (not an exhaustive list).

- Divorce and courts — young men see that wives can blow up their marriages for cash and prizes and they get to keep the children. Significantly decreases mens' incentive to pursue marriage.
- Sex without marriage / hook up culture — this is not a concern to serious Christians, but the fact that many people say they're Christians but advocate pre-marital sex gives somewhat the illusion of Christian piety. There's numerous cases of men and women who want to wait until marriage but are receiving interest from non-Christian and pseudo-Christians who want to "sample" before "marriage."
- Men are less masculine — men are less manly contributes to being shy in asking out women and taking risks. Men who aren't masculine also tend to put responsibilities before roles, which is bad.
- Women are less feminine and more masculine — this is obviously an influence from culture. In general, men do not want to marry a business partner. They want to marry a woman.
- Feminism — although feminism is encompassed in all of these points, there are some that are not covered. No, you can't "have it all." It's a lie. The Scripture tells wives to prioritize their God, husband, children, and the home.
- Life Scripts — This is one of the biggest large impediments. Women are now expected to complete college and get a career before marrying. Men are expected to complete college, have a good paying career and job before marrying. This pushes marriage upwards of late 20s and early 30s+. The marriages coming out of late teens and early 20s are few.
- Breakdown in communication — flaking and standing up people is extremely common. Women started it, men continued it, almost everyone does it.
- Obesity — no real comments are needed. It's pretty much universally unattractive, except to the few people with fat fetishes.
- Husbands and fathers are held with contempt — this needs no explanation. Surprise, what men want to be husbands and fathers if they are held with contempt?
- Fear of disappearing sex — no one wants a frigid and sexless marriage, despite the fact that it has become a relatively common occurrence. Women tend to change on a dime about sex once they're married. Stats indicate about 2/3rds of marriage husband have dominant sex drive and 1/3rd wives do. It can go both ways.

Christian sub-culture. There's quite a few sources of rot in Christian sub-culture as well as logistical issues. Aided by Neguy's post here.

- Discipleship — The Church does not disciple men and push men into leadership positions. This tends to lead to men just hanging around in singleness. Likewise, women are not taught to be women.
- Feminization in the Church — sappy love songs about Jesus, feelings over Truth, not teaching the hard parts of Scripture (headship, submission, women no authority over man, etc.). Men who come under this structure end up with a feminized world view where they should be "nice" to attract a woman. Nice never attracted anything but emotional predators.
- Women cliques — if you try to ask someone out or date them it gets around. Nuclear rejections and ruining of reputation are not uncommon. If you date one, you basically can't date anyone else in a Church. This has led men to not date women in their own Church and look outside of it.
- Introversion / quietness — like it or not, those who are introverted and/or quiet tend to have worse prospects. Generally, they're not as good with conversational skills and being bold enough to go talk to people.
- Indicators of interest — men and especially women in Church think flirting is the devil. No indicators of interest are really shown.
- "I Kissed Dating Goodbye" influence — both dating and courtship are not Biblical concepts. Who even knows what they are anyway. Christians should stop taking these things so seriously and just get to know each other.
- Christianizing and making things overly serious — sort of IKDG influence, but a bit different. Whenever you hear so and so is going out with someone, there's the expectation that they're going to get married. People ask when you're going to get married. Can we just calm down and let young men and young women figure out if who they're seeing is a good fit before asking them when they're going to have babies?
- Denominational differences — obviously a factor in shrinking the pool of candidates. Orthodox and Catholic generally won't marry out. Protestants have the issue of various denominations falling into apostasy.
- Obesity — sadly, obesity needs a re-mention on beating the obesity dead horse. Especially with Christians who think like this. My first ever post on this blog was about Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse. It was removed by Boundless (Focus on the Family's singles ministry). When you have supposedly Christian organizations ignoring reality well… you get the point. Lest we not forget that feminine beauty is highly controllable.
- Donal has a post up that overlaps some — market is awful, geographical issues, demographical issues, Christian parents are not teaching their children roles and responsibilities, young men are less interested in marriage (for many of the reasons above), and too many people are doing too little.

- Christian conservative delusion — Delusion that America was Christian and that 1950s were ideal. "Traditional" is held up as some sort of standard, even on par with the Bible. After all, "if we could just go back to how it was… oh, but we should definitely keep this feminism stuff too"
- Patriarchy = abuse delusion — Christians often buy the lies that there was abuse in Patriarchy in the Bible and that Jesus changed that. Also, that there was some sort of equality between Adam and Eve before the fall. Nothing changed from the Beginning to the OT to the NT — Husbands and fathers still have authority over their wives and children.
- White knighting sin — Dalrock has covered this extensively on how "womens' sin is blamed on men." Especially from the pulpit. This covers anything from abortion, to temper tantrums, to breaking china, and other "wake up calls." It's easy to blame men and hard to call out women. God forbid a man not want to get into a relationship if he's going to get blamed for the sins of his wife.
- Lack of respect — the Church and wives often hold husbands in contempt (see reasons above) and don't give respect where it is due: for the position of the husband. Headship demands respect and submission because it's headship. "Feelings" are held above "Truth."
- Culture of family distrust of suitors — The notion that "good fathers" are out to get any of the potential son in laws.

Despite all of these challenges, marriage is still good because God has created it.

> 1 Timothy 4:But the Spirit explicitly says that in later times some will [a]fall away from the faith, paying attention to deceitful spirits and doctrines of demons, 2 by means of the hypocrisy of liars seared in their own conscience as with a branding iron, 3 men who forbid marriage and advocate abstaining from foods which God has created to be gratefully shared in by those who believe and know the truth. 4 For everything created by God is good, and nothing is to be rejected if it is received with gratitude; 5 for it is sanctified by means of the word of God and prayer.

Several solutions have been posited, especially including Church events. Fat chance, really.

You're pretty much on your own. Make it happen, if you want to be married.

I've posted on this many times before, such as the the detailed timeline. I've posted before for women too including some of the above in obesity. Tons of practice advise in the categorized lists of posts.

The real issue is the same as you'll see in marriage. You can't expect the other person to change. You can only control you. Therefore, if YOU want to be married, YOU have to make every concerted effort to make it happen. This is true for both the man and the woman and the husband and the wife.

Seriouslyserving posted about how she did it.

> Regarding “flirting”, I didn’t spend very long in the dating market, but I can tell you what worked to get my husband’s attention…
> We had the advantage of living together at a church based student accommodation, so we saw each other a lot naturally.
> But I had heard that he was into computers and a bit of a tech whizz, so I asked if he would mind helping me install my new printer. He was happy to do so, and this provided the opportunity to then talk a bit more one on one. He then saw my guitar sitting there and asked if I could play something for him, which I did so.
> He had no idea until after we’d already been dating for a while that the printer and the guitar “lying around” were strategic moves, but they were effective ways of letting him know I was interested, whilst still being able to claim plausible deniability (as someone mentioned earlier) if nothing came of it.

I’ve posted an example of a “Real life Ruth” with the Part 1 and Part 2 followup. There are ways to make it happen. Women have the great ability to leverage social networks and set up situations that are conducive to success for them.

My story

With all of that said I’ll share my story, since I’m now engaged.

About 2.5 years ago, during an overnight Church event, I was talking with a group of people — men and women — about marriage. We talked about what we were looking for and how it was hard to find. I did this on the off chance that anyone there was something that I was looking for in a prospective wife. None of them met my criteria, and I don’t think I met theirs.

I always follow up on my leads regardless of whether they bear fruit or not. One of my habits was asking family, church members, friends, and others if they spot a woman that they think would be a good match for me to let me know. This is one of the things I listed in the detailed timeline and how-to guide. One of the women said they knew of a girl who went to a similar program at that Church last year, and another of the women knew her name so they gave it to me. I kept that in the back of my mind, as I was exploring other potential leads at the moment.

About 4-5 months later, I added her on Facebook and struck up a conversation as we were interested in mutual things. Honestly, I didn’t expect much of it because she lived on the west coast and I lived on the east coast. I had “dealt” with long distance before and was not a fan already, but I figured why not one last time since she seemed to be what I was looking for. Note that I did my homework first before I added her: checked out her FB and other social media to see if there were any red flags.

We struck it up immediately since we had a lot of things in common. This is where being an wise conversationalist comes in. Learning how to lead a conversation is useful to draw out certain responses. I actually went back through our conversations with her a year or so later, and I showed her where I 'led' her to certain topics that I wanted to talk about and/or tease her about. It was pretty fun to go back over what we had talked about early on and see how our relationship had changed as we got to know each other better.

As God would have it, I had actually planned before I messaged her to go on a missions trip prior to me talking with her. Our launch point before leaving was the same city that she lived in. Divine providence? You decide. In any case, I went to meet her and her family, and we decided to try the long distance thing a few weeks later. And the rest is history.

Actually, the rest is not history, haha. Just tried to fool you. Basically, like any relationship you have to continue to work at it and grow. I introduced to her several Biblical concepts that I like to go by in relationships. You can find more about that in my 5 step process to maturity in relationships. Indeed, even when a woman knows what she is supposed to do, learning how to do it is still difficult, even with a strong father figure in her life.

I still had to teach her what it means to respect me. I had to tell her when she was disrespecting me. As the [future] head of the relationship, I had to take the reigns and help teach her more about the Scriptures and what God's roles and responsibilities for us were from. Some of it was easier. Some of it was harder. This is also vice versa with some of her needs on what it means to love her (cherish and nourish her).

The key is building a pattern of good behavior, patience, and lack of anger in conflict. If people understand that conflict is not something to run from, it is much easier to discuss the difficult aspects of the relationship especially when you disagree. This is the major issue that most relationships run into in conflict. If there are patterns of bad behavior, it's very difficult to break the negative behavioral cycles. It can only be done through the grace of God and consistently walking by the Spirit.

In any case, once you have begun and consistently applied a pattern of good works within a relationship by walking with the Spirit it becomes much easier. Although there are still bumps in the road here and there, the foundation of trust has already been built. It is important to continue nurturing this foundation of trust and grow it as you grow together. The bond of the Scriptural roles and responsibilities is that foundation, as the way a husband and wife are to act toward each other is fulfilled.

It took a while to meet the rest of her family in another part of the state. Unfortunately, a series of miscommunications made it so that her parents were somewhat negatively predisposed to me in the beginning because of a lot of second hand information. Things have been slowly getting better over time as we've talked about it. There have definitely been various conflicts at the hands of what I would call an overprotective father-in-law who seemingly wants my relationship to look like his before I had to permission to marry his daughter. I've discussed that with my mentor (and any young men should try to find one!), and it helps to have another ear of a wise married man about things like that.

Overall, for me the whole way is that I've had to make things happen on my own. My parents didn't give me any advice or talk to me about relationships while growing up. I definitely learn some of what to do from them, and I've learn some of what not to do from them. I've learned most of what I should be doing from the Scriptures themselves.

I glean wise advise from other married and unmarried men as necessary. Different perspectives are good, even if they're giving you some white knight-ized version as there is usually some sort of Truth within what they're saying (even if it's to do the opposite). Thankfully, I've been at a Church that dwells on what God says about marriage straight up, and the men I've discussed it with all have solid experience with it to learn from.

Conclusion

If you want to be married, the odds are against you.

- You must be extremely proactive about developing your communication and social skills.
- Study the Scriptures about relationships and marriage. Pray, meditate, and fast on the Word.
- Be at peace with the season you are in.
- Look for every opportunity and seize them.
- Go into everything with eyes wide open. Don't ignore red or yellow flags. Build your foundation on the Rock.
- Use the wise advice from blogs such as Dalrock, Scott's, Donal's, Cane's, mine, and so on.
- It never hurts to ask for help from those who are further along in the journey. You don't always have to take it, but the perspective of men who have studied the Scriptures and experienced a lot in relationships is useful in most cases. This is community, especially if your real life situation with family, friends, and Church isn't that great.

May God bless you in your search or marriage!

Revisiting the Christian marriage market

April 4, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been some additional good material over at Scott's post still aside from my post on Make it happen.

Elspeth comments:

> 4) Out in the real world, there are very few men who are overly impressed by virginity. I can see how (after 5+ years of reading "no hymen, no diamond") one could get that impression, but it's skewed. That includes men in the church. Look around at the number of men who marry women they have slept with, or knocked up, or whatever, BEFORE the wedding. This includes sincere Christian men. I don't subscribe to the "no true Christian" trope because all Christians have weaknesses.
> 5) Just thought I would throw that in. In a self-selecting barrage of commentary, and after a long period of time reading said commentary (especially if you've been dating from this pool as well), it's easy to have a skewed perception of things. It's one of the reasons I am so, so big on sticking our necks out there and developing connections with a wide variety of people. Good, decent, Christian people come from various walks of life.
> 6) I am not saying you are idolizing your virginity. I believe you understand full well that at 32, you are at a "disadvantage" compared to a 22 year old who may or may not be a virgin. It's just the reality of things and you don't strike me as someone out of touch with reality. Fortunately, it only takes one good fit to find someone with whom you can build a life. I believe you will find him, and FWIW, I have met quite a few women who have several babies from their 30's. I think a lot of the difficulties are overstated because they include women -the majority- who have been on birth control, promiscuous, are unhealthy, etc. All things which are ubiquitous and have effects on fertility.

ys comments:

> 1) Yes, traditional types are having trouble getting married now, including traditional women. Is it because of fears of divorce? Likely, not. I know a man in Christ (not myself) who was acquainted with a small number of traditional women. Who did he marry? The single mom. Wait, forgot to mention: The California Beach Blonde single mom who is a 9. Yeah, that matters. People here, and in other parts of the manosphere, can opine about what "should be." End of the day, how many of the ones who say "AWALT" would turn down the 9 who was interested? Would any of them babble, "No Hymen, no Diamond?" Likely not. This is our weakness, as men. We know for women that they make rules for beta, and break them for alpha. Most men, make rules for 5's and 6's (be traditional, > no college, virgin, etc.) but when the 9 or 10 comes along and wants to settle down, who cares what her N is?

> 2) Yes, the young traditional men, as in, the ones actually following God and doing what His Word says (no pre-marriage sex) do seem to be having more trouble settling down. I know several men like this IRL, and I wonder to myself if the sex drive is there, or what's up. I think their parents detested the post 1960's dating system, but didn't really set up anything to replace it. Further complicating matters is the need to be financially set upon marriage. That was easy for my parents' and grandparents' generations (Dad had mortgage-paying job in manufacturing at age 18, Grandpa, while never wealthy, didn't even have a high school diploma, but had five kids and a young marriage). All of these factors increase the challenge for today's young people, no doubt.
> 3) It is hard to make a consensus of what the manosphere truly believes. The reasons for this seem to be: the manosphere is a mix of true Christians, PUAs, and those who would use the Bible as a club to teach submission to husbands but don't really believe it otherwise (good grief that last line sounds feminist, but it is true unfortunately).

Generally speaking, these observations are easy to understand.

- Age and attraction matters. Men will "compromise" on a lot of different things if a woman is young and attractive.

This includes things like virginity, single mom status, character flaws, wishy-washy faith, and so on. Compromising on such things are not a good thing. It almost always comes back to bite people in the long run.

- The only reason given in the NT to marry is attraction. 1 Corinthians 7:8 Now to the unmarried and widows I say this: It is good for them to remain unmarried, as I am. 9 But if they cannot control themselves, let them marry. For it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

Obviously, attraction is not the only thing, but it is a significant part of why all people — not just Christians — want to marry. If only Christians could just accept this, it would make things a lot easier. No kidding a husband and wife want to be "turned on" with each other.

- Virginity matters, but not as much as attraction and/or a strong Christian faith.

Whether this is right or wrong I'm not going to speculate. I'm just talking about what "is."

All things being equal, a man would rather marry a virgin than someone who has slept around a lot. There are a few instances where men are deceived by worldly standards and want their wife to have experience, but I typically have not seen this among Christians.

I've also noticed that many of my friends including myself would [have] rather married a devoted Christian with N > 0 than a lukewarm Christian who is a virgin. This is especially true if said pre-marital sex happened before a woman was a Christian, and she has shown a pattern of good behavior and works since becoming a Christian without further slip ups.

On the other side of the coin, you have those who will marry those who will sleep around or single moms. This is to their own detriment that they did not consider virginity important in conjunction with the Christian faith and pursued attraction above all else.

This is something that adds value, but given our culture there are various reasons why someone may not be marrying a virgin.

- Incentives matter. Everything you see in the so-called "market" is driven by incentives. I listed quite a few of the negative and few positive incentives in my previous post make it happen.

What drives men and women toward marriage are a lot of different things such as biology (sex drive), masculinity/femininity, procreation, companionship, helpmeet, and so on. There are also a lot of things driving people away from marriage negatively like divorce, courts, child support, blowing up marriages, obesity, and so on.

It should be no surprise that marriage rates are declining. In fact, I think they would be declining even without no-fault divorce, screwed up courts, and so on. Over-exposure and the tyranny of choice drive that. People tend not to be as satisfied with their choices if they know there are 'better options' even if they can't obtain such a better option.

- The more qualifications, the harder it is. It's simple mathematics.

This should be fairly obvious, but it seems like it's not. The "true" Christians will have more stringent qualifications on who they marry for good reason. They want someone who is dedicated to their faith in both growing in Jesus and good character. They also want someone who is attractive to them. Such Christians will have a much more difficult time finding someone who is strong in their faith AND simultaneously attractive to them.

Some compromise the wrong way (attraction > faith + character). Some compromise the right way (faith + character > attraction). And some get both… Usually the 8-10s will get both nowadays. The rest will not.

Overall, age and attractiveness are the primary factors that tend to drive male sexuality and hence also marriage. Other factors may include companionship/helpmeet, respect/love (for men and women), wanting to have a family, virginity, and other such things. Age obviously plays a role in attractiveness due to beauty but also in fertility. Worldly things like status and money can be a factor as well.

This is the reason why it is important for women to cultivate their beauty, femininity, and have a mind for marriage at a younger age. It's a huge leg up in finding suitable candidates that they're also attracted to. Virginity is more of an "add on bonus" when everything is said and done for most of the population, even serious Christians depending on the circumstance. All things being equal, it is preferable.

Older Christian women who want to marry need to cultivate their beauty and femininity as much as possible as well as a kind, household oriented, and servant hearted demeanor. Age and beauty are not on their side so they may need to compromise in other areas but not faith or character.

> Conclusion: Women your physical beauty will get you in the door, and your personality and spirituality will make him want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.
> Conclusion: Men your masculine personality and confidence will get you in the door, and your ability to lead her spiritually will make her want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.

To go back to to the analogy I used in my first ever post on this blog, attraction matters as it gets your foot in the door. If you can't get a foot in the door, you likely aren't going to get married. Women won't be asked out. Men won't be accepted for dates or relationships.

Imbalanced market forces

April 5, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal's post starts to explore this and this is a follow up to my previous post on revisiting the Christian marriage market. To distill the issues down, it usually always comes down to two different things, which are typically categorized as "attractiveness" and "desirability."

1. Become more attractive if you're not getting asked out and/or not able to maintain relationships (aside from developing better people and communication skills).
2. Cultivate the roles and responsibilities of marriage from the Scripture as well as good character and work ethic.

Neither sex is being told to do either nowadays.

First, let's address number 1 on attractiveness.

Women have it "easier" for what they need to do for physical beauty but their ceiling is fixed to a certain extent. Wear dresses, get long hair, take care of their bodies with good nutrition and exercise, take care of skin, and use some light flattering makeup if necessary. Facial genetics, body type, and so on can't change that much which is why the ceiling is fixed. However, the fact that men love all different types of women plays into womens' favor. Review: feminine beauty is highly controllable. I do think his percentages are off though.

Men tend to have a greater ceiling, but much of it is abstruse. PSALM/LAMPS summarize the various 'traits' shall we say which are power, status, athleticism, looks, money. However, most of these things take time to accumulate and/or are difficult to cultivate. How does one necessarily become more 'powerful' in personality or more manly? It's difficult to explain and difficult to teach and inspire in men.

This is also why mens' attractiveness tends to peak in their 30s while female attractiveness tends to peak in their late teens and early to mid 20s.

In general, women know what will make them more attractive. Their only problem is doing it. Christian women are often persuaded that they shouldn't do it sadly and to their detriment. In general, men do not know what will make them more attractive. This is part of why the market is imbalanced in favor of women, not to mention the fact that most women tend to find most men unattractive (see: OKCupid statistics).

Second, let's address number 2 on desirability.

The desirable traits for Christians looking for other Christians are a serious Christian growing in the faith, cultivating good works and the fruits of the Spirit, and building good character, and so on.

Generally speaking, both sexes are being set up to fail, each in different ways. I would not necessarily categorize one sex as having a harder time than the other.

Women will tend to have more trouble in terms of roles and responsibilities because society and even the Church is all about ‘feminist’ and ‘careerist’ views. Submission, respect, homemaking, and kindness are in short supply. When everyone is saying to do something, it’s going to be much more difficult to do the right thing straight out of the Scriptures.

On the flipside, men are still trashed and disrespected to a large extent in both the culture and Church. The blame for everything is placed on them, even when it is not their fault and there is rebellion in the home. The husbands and boyfriends are set up to fail because they believe they should be “nice” rather than masculine and authoritative and kind.

Overall, men tend to be more deceived in terms of what the Scriptures state especially from the Church pulpit, while women tend to be more deceived in terms of falling to worldly values. This is generally a wash.

Other thoughts

One of the things that doesn’t often get enough attention is reciprocality. The essential nature of this concept is the observation of ‘assortive mating’ where generally 10s match up with 10s, 9s match up with 9s, and so on.

Generally, those who consistently exercise and have good nutrition habits — “muscular” for male and “toned” for female — tend to have better prospects in terms of attracting a mate. Those who put some effort into their clothing choices, style, grooming, and so on tend to make better first impressions and have greater prospects. Certainly, there are some exceptions, but it’s a general trend.

Consensus

When you both the concerns of #1 on attractiveness and #2 on desirability together, you see the common trends of the unmasculine nice Christian man who other Christian women see as “just friends” and the typical chasing the attractive bad boys and/or missionary dating.

The Christian women who rightly won’t date bad boys or missionary date tend to feel they’re stuck in a funk of no prospects and/or no dates. The Christian nice guys believe they have decent prospects but can’t get an accepted date or maintain a relationship, or they believe they have no decent prospects given particular criteria.

Most ‘traditional families’ tend to instill desirability traits within their children, but fail to address attraction on the level of its overall importance for marriage. In general, this is why I see the common trend of most 8-10s being married because they simply are attractive to the opposite sex and have many ‘chances’ at marriage, even despite low desirability quotients from some of said spouses. On the other hand, the declining marriage rates among the <=4-7s show that drops in attractiveness make the desirability quotients more applicable to selection.

The most applicable notion for both Christian men and women is to try to boost up their attractiveness to the 7+ range if at all possible and approach marriage seriously from an earlier age, especially the young women. Desirability via growth in the faith and aim toward developing a solid set of abilities to fulfill roles and responsibilities in marriage is still paramount, but attraction should not be neglected as another serious component that plays a significant factor in increasing prospects.

Conclusions

At this juncture, I don't think it is wise to say whether Christian "women" or "men" have it harder. Both have somewhat terrible to mediocre prospects, if they are blow average to slightly above average. Rather, those who are not more than average attractiveness have it more difficult than those who are conventionally or exceptionally attractive.

I suppose that brings us full circle back to the old SNL sexual harassment skit with Tom Brady:

> Be handsome, be attractive, and don't be unattractive.

Creative, I know. But it accurately describes the issue to a T.

The real question is why Christian men and women still refuse to do anything about improving their prospective odds and hope that someone comes to find them.

Okay, a man might not be overweight or skinny… but he would have better odds if he put on a lot more muscle and lost some fat. Yeah, a woman might not be overweight or she is slim… but she would probably have better odds if she looked closer to a fitness model or toned. That's simply one area. Clothes, style, hair, grooming, and other things can also factor in as well.

Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins Part 3

April 6, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Based on the discussion in Donal's thread Market Analysis and deti's points, I went back over the statistics from the previous post. I found a few errors that I made, so I'm correcting them in this updated post. Let's get into it.

In the previous post on a woman's sexual partners and divorce risk, we found out that approximately 5% of women were virgins when they were married in 2010. I noted that I wanted to go back and do a 'better' statistical analysis that is less confounded than previously in Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins.

- There are 10,466,258 women aged 25-29 and 10,571,823 women aged 20-24 and 10,736,677 women aged 15-19 in the US in 2010. Let's say the range from 18-29 is good. 18-19 make up ~40% of the 15-19 range so ~4,294,671 women.

2010 Census Data. Not much changes in 5 years given the chart as each population group is still roughly 10 million.
http://www.census.gov/prod/cen2010/briefs/c2010br-03.pdf

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range = 25,332,752

———-

- Less than 20% of Americans regularly attend church — half of what the pollsters report. While Gallup polls and other statisticians have turned in the same percentage — about 40% of the population — of average weekend church attendees for the past 70 years, a different sort of research paints quite a disparate picture of how many Americans attend a local church on any given Sunday. […] His findings reveal that the actual rate of church attendance from head counts is less than half of the 40 percent the pollsters report. Numbers from actual counts of people in Orthodox Christian churches (Catholic, mainline and evangelical) show that in 2004, 17.7 percent of the population attended a Christian church on any given weekend.

http://www.churchleaders.com/pastors/pastor-articles/139575-7-startling-facts-an-up-close-look-at-church-attendance-in-america.html

- We also know that 70% of young adults in the 18-22 range drop out of church.

http://www.lifeway.com/Article/LifeWay-Research-finds-reasons-18-to-22-year-olds-drop-out-of-church

These two factors as pointed out are heavily confounded with each other. As KPP pointed out in the previous comments, about half of the 2/3 that drop out eventually end up attending again albeit in lower frequency. For the sake of argument, I'm willing to be factor out the dropout rate of young adults altogether using the US population "regularly attenders" as the standard which is 17.7%. This will overestimate the amount of young women in the Church.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who regularly attend Church = 25,332,752 * .177 = 4,483,897

———-

- 58.5 of women 20-39 years old are overweight or obese in 2011-2012 in the US.

http://jama.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=1832542

- NIDDK (National institute for diabetes and digestive and kidney diseases) states that 33% of teens are overweight or obese.

https://www.niddk.nih.gov/health-information/health-statistics/Pages/overweight-obesity-statistics.aspx

This means that 67% of teens are not overweight or obese. The statistics above state that 41.5% of women 20-39 are not overweight or obese. Unfortunately, there's no data for strictly say 18-29, so this is just an approximation. It's probably slightly less because metabolic rates start to slow down into early 30s.

One could say that Christians have more self control than their counterparts. However, as I have noted in posts such as A lesson in false humility: Christians are allergic to healthy lifestyles, Christian women tend to find a way to rationalize that paying attention to physical appearance is an idol. This statistic is probably pretty accurate.

An estimate of the total number of 20-29 year olds that are not overweight or obese would build off the data. If 67% of teens are not overweight or obese then the 41.5% should be averaged between the 20-29 and 30-39. Therefore, if we say that obesity increases linearly with age, then 67% of teens are not overweight or obese, 50% of 20-29 are not overweight or obese and 33% of 30-39 are not overweight or obese. Averaging 50% and 33% yields our 41.5%.

Therefore, a solid estimate is that 50% of 18-29 age range are not overweight or obese. That's still pretty dismal.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese = 4,483,897 * .5 = 2,241,949

- In highly religious groups, up to 20% wait until marriage successfully. Naturally, religious people seem more likely to wait until marriage to have sex. In a study of 9 Southern Baptist churches in Texas (it doesn't get much more conservative than that), 20% of the church members aged 25 or younger were married without ever having premarital sex.

- In the general population, the ratio of women-to-men who wait until marriage to have sex seems to be about 60/40 girls-to-guys. This statistic disproves the common misconception that only women wait until marriage to have sex. Statistically-speaking, plenty of guys wait too!

http://waitingtillmarriage.org/4-cool-statistics-about-abstinence-in-the-usa/

I did some research since the previous post, and found the actual study with data:

https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3156853/ (my red highlighting)

A greater percentage of men had no sex (30.1%) compared to women (24.4%). Same with the data for oral only, vaginal only, and both. The distinction is fairly low, but it seems to support the conclusion that women slightly more often have premarital sex than men.

Overall, the more committed one was to Church (e.g. very often) the more likely that one was a full virgin. Unfortunately, the study did not quantify the difference between “very often” and “often” but I imagine that “very often” is likely 1 or more times per week, whereas “often” is only once to a few times month. That’s the way I’ve seen it quantified in online dating surveys.

Indeed, there was also a huge disparity between those who married 16-20 and 21-24 and 25-36 with the rates at 15.8% (includes married by pre-marital pregnancy), 38.8% and 13.5% respectively for no sex before marriage. Overall, if you’re a Christian man aim for the 21-24 age group of Christian women attending Church often for your best shot.

Overall childhood church attendance and 2 parent families also played a role over no church attendance and divorced families. Another 2 factors to keep in mind.

Proportion to have premarital sex by age of first marriage and gender (n = 151)

19 total women were total virgins at marriage, and 22 total men were total virgins at marriage. This also lends credence to my aforementioned conclusion that men should aim for the 21-24 demographic of Christian women if they want a virgin at marriage as pretty much all of the virgins were clustered into eh 20-24 range. Kudos to the 32 woman and 36 man who waited.

Church number
1a	21	66.7	9.5	9.5	14.3	0.002
1b	6	17.0			83.0
2	14	43.0	14.0		43.0
3	28	28.6	25.0	3.6	42.9

4b	21	9.5		9.5	81.0
5	11	18.2	9.1		72.7
6	23	17.4	4.3	4.3	73.9
7	15	13.3		6.7	80.0
"Accept Jesus as Lord & Savior"	151

It's worth noting that Church 1a and 2 had a highly disproportionate number of virgins at marriage compared to the rest of the Churches surveyed. 1a and 1b are designated as being in the "same region" so there's obviously a drastic difference between Church 1a and Church 1b even though they're in the same area. FIND THE RIGHT CHURCH.

For the sake of the statistical analysis, I'm going to go with the 30.4% for "very often" Church attenders for the conclusion as the "attend Church regularly" is already a factor. Note that this may be higher in the 21-24 age women population and less in the 25-29 age population.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese, (4) who stay a virgin until marriage = 2,241,949 * .304 = 681,552

———-

Mark MacIntyre comments:

> Shouldn't you separate the single women in this age range from the partnered women before doing the rest of the sums? (I'm quite tired today, so the answer to this may be staring me in the face).
> According to Pew Research, just 20% of Americans aged 18-29 are married. That would further reduce your eligibility number to 681,552 x 0.8 = 545,241 (rounded down, because who wants 0.6 of a woman?).

That is indeed the case. Therefore, adding a significant needed criteria this would be:

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese, (4) who stay a virgin until marriage (5) who are single = 681,552 * .8 = 545,241

I factored in as many confounding variables as I could, and I was conservative at adding more variables to the equation because of confounding factor overlap. Other variables with confounding factors that I didn't include in the statistics:

- The National Marriage Project also found that "about 80 percent of young-adult men and women continued to rate marriage as an 'important' part of their life plans; almost half of them described it as 'very important.'" Thirty percent of 25-year-old single women want to be married. Read more at http://national.deseretnews.com/article/1893/The-national-marriage-age-is-increasing-but-not-for-this-group-of-people.html . Only ~30% of women want to be married in the 18-30 age range on average approximately.
- Those who attend church are not always "Christians." Based on my experience and others I'd say that only 10-20% of Christians in churches are actually reading their Bible and striving to obey Scripture.
- Worse measures of virginity in non-extremely conservative Church populations.
- Denominational differences. Some of the stats clumps all religions together (hindu, muslum, etc.) not just Catholic and Protestant.

Thus, I believe the above statistics are a fairly accurate measurement compared to the previous estimate. If anything, it's going to be a slight to moderate overestimate.

———-

The first post resulted in these stats:

> In conclusion, there are approximately 125,000 (126,157) Christian women in the > US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage. This is approximately 0.5% of the 18-29 total population (126,157 / 25,332,752). Pretty rare. In the US total population it is .039% (126,157 / 320,090,000).

> Specifically, in any random Church the percentage that you'll find a 18-29 year old attractive, Christian virgin is going to be .2 (virginity at marriage) * .415 (not overweight or obese) = 8.30%. In other words, about 1 in 12.

The second post resulted in these stats:

> In conclusion, there are approximately 450,000 (446,596) Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, and are virgins at marriage. This is approximately 1.76% of the 18-29 total population (446,596 / 25,332,752). In the US total population it is .014% (446,596 / 320,090,000).
> Specifically, in any random Church the percentage that you'll find a 18-29 old with the attributes of non-overweight or obese and virginity is going to be .24 (virginity at marriage) * .415 (not overweight or obese) = 9.96%. In other words, about 1 in 10.

The third post resulted in these numbers:

In conclusion, there are approximately 545,241 Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, are virgins at marriage, and are currently single. This is approximately 2.15% of the 18-29 total women population (545,241 / 25,332,752). In the US total population it is .17% (545,241 / 320,090,000).

Specifically, any random 18-29 year old woman in Church with the attributes of non-overweight or obese and a virginity and single is going to be .304 (virginity at marriage) * .5 (not overweight or obese) * .8 (single) = 12%. In other words, about 1 in 8.

These numbers are better than previous estimates, based on more accurate data. However, I did drop some potential relevant factors, so if anything it may be a slight overestimate.

The average Church size is approximately 186 attenders. Your average Church is 60/40 women to men as we mentioned before. The women tend to be disproportionately older or families with children. Total 18-29 women in the US who regularly attend Church make up 16.1% of the women population (25,332,752/(156,964,212)). I won't factor in drop out rates among young people, even though it may be up to 33%. Hence, we get:

- ~18 women (186 * .6 * .161) in the 18-29 age group in your average congregation.
- ~2.2 women (18 * .304 * .5 * .8) who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, virgins, and single in your average congregation.

Unfortunately, there is room for gloom. But don't lose hope. Advice in the conclusion.

Conclusions and advice

Criteria:

1. Women who are 18-29,
2. regularly attend Church,
3. aren't overweight or obese,
4. are virgins at marriage

Statistics based on these criteria:

- 2.15% of women in the 18-29 total population.
- .17% of women in the total US population.
- 12% of Church going women 18-29 are not overweight or obese and virgins.
- 18 women in the 18-29 age group in your average 186 member congregation.
- 2.2 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 186 member congregation.
- 11.7 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 1,000 member congregation
- 117 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 10,000 member congregation

The last 5 statistics are probably slight overestimates. More conservative Churches may have slightly more. More liberal Churches will probably have less. Larger congregation have a tendency to be more liberal; hence, it is probably less than 160 women per 10,000 members.

That said there are good indicators for who the attractive Christian virgins are. They wear feminine clothing, have long hair, have an innocent look, have strong masculine fathers, value family and marriage, love children, don't have tattoos, don't like alcohol, and other such traits.

Of course, most of the men are probably going after the 12% in each Church, so you need to learn how to be a strong, confident masculine leader if your goal is one of those women.

My advice:

1. Attend one main Church.
2. Go to young adult events at other Churches and gatherings to increase your chances of meeting one of these few age 18-29 attractive, Christian virgins.
3. If you're in your mid to late 20s, aim for the 20-24 age group of devout Church going women as your odds rise up to potentially close to 40% in that range for virgins.
4. Potentially attend a mega-Church, although the theology of many mega-Churches nowadays can be questionable. If you do, understand the importance of vetting character and attitudes.

5. At 3 women per average congregation you might just be better meeting many 18-29 year old women at various hobbies, dances, and other social events because 2.69% of them will be Christian women who regularly attend Church, are not obese or overweight, and are virgins. If it's a physical activity your chances are potentially better since that tends to eliminate the overweight and obese.
6. Use your friends and families to network!
7. If you're still young, perhaps volunteer in university campus Christian group(s) as a leader or continue to be one if you recently graduated.
8. Other advice here on my detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife.

My Church is smaller than the average congregation. I did not find my girl in my current Church. She was 23 and a virgin when I found her, so that lends credence to the 20-24 range as well.

Feminine beauty is highly controllable theory and analysis

April 10, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've linked to The Rules Revisited article on feminine beauty is highly controlled a couple of times. I think the premise of the article is good, but it doesn't accurately quantify beauty all that well.

Intro

Donal and other sources have already made a general quantification of what represents male attractiveness in PSALM/LAMPS — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, money. These traits when broken down into Scriptural terms tend to signify that a man will be a masculine and authoritative and a protector and provider.

If you missed why attractiveness is important, you can refer back to my article about why attractiveness is an important part of marriage in the context of the Scripture.

On the other hand, men are almost 100% attracted to feminine beauty, so I believe it is important to quantify what this means.

Here's an image from the article (credit to therulesrevisted):

In general, I don't think quantifying feminine beauty by a scale of "100%" is an accurate indicator.

The 4-5 areas of female beauty

From what I've seen and experienced discussing with men, feminine beauty tends to be separated into 4 to maybe 5 distinct categories that all intermingle to form a coherent whole that may be rated on a numerical system.

The main 4 attractive traits are a mishmash of some of the above:

- Age — Straight forward. Men's optimal preferences via OKCupid study suggest between 20 to 23 is the most physically attractive age to men.
- Face — Structure of the face, eyes, teeth, skin, and so on.
- Body — Legs, hip, butt, breasts, ratios, fitness level, weight, and so on.
- Femininity — Hair, girlishness of clothes (dresses, skirts, etc.), girlishness of demeanor, smiling.

Age and physical beauty are attractive to men because they are cues for fertility and ability to have many and healthy children. See: God's mandate in Genesis 1 to be fruitful and multiply. Femininity is both part of the dichotomy of masculinity-femininity between the sexes and likely a solid positive mothering cue.

Face and body are pretty straight forward, and different men have different opinions on 6 what they deem as optimal. However, the vast majority of such beauty is relatively objective. Most men will rate a women within 1 point of where she may be at on a 1-10 scale. For example, an "8" might have 50% rate her an 8 whereas maybe 20% would rate her a "7" and another 20% would rate her a "9" and the last 10% may say 6 or 10.

Femininity is slightly convoluted. Hair length and clothing are pretty straight forward feminine aspects. However, girlishness of demeanor is a bit harder to quantify. Sweetness and kindness are related to femininity, but they are not attractive in and of themselves. Part of this "girly demeanor" is how a girl makes a man feel about himself. If she respects him and can make it known either subtly or overtly, it will tend to draw a man in. Seductiveness also plays a role, although how much of that should be used by Christian women is questionable. Additionally, there are some other almost intangible components of a girl demeanor like enthusiasm, bubbly-ness, and innocence that may also be attractive to men. In other words, it may signify that a woman is "untainted" or at least less tainted from the world.

Note that some physical traits like virginity are not in themselves attractive. They are desirable. The same is true of being a Christian and growing in the faith.

The "5th" category seems to be "fetishes" for lack of a better word. I'm not talking solely about sexual fetishes, but men can get zoned in enough that they may rate certain hobbies or activities as attractive to them. We can look no further than gamers where a man may choose an relatively more 'unattractive' gamer girl over potential more conventionally attractive options. I'm not sure whether this "tunneling" is related to one-itis, but it may be.

I generally would not include this in a general overall assessment, although it can play a role.

Composite numbers and the "floor" rating

In general, when a man rates a woman it is a composite of all of these factors put together. What happens is that a many will be able to look at a girl and evaluate her with a number in each of the areas. Let's look at an example of what a man may rate a woman in each of these categories:

- Age — 30, but looks older for her age — 6
- Face — Cute to pretty — 6-7
- Body — Slim figure with voluptuous (.65) waist to hip ratio. Small breasts — 9
- Femininity — Long hair, bubbly and enthusiastic. Has a streak of sarcasm, but smiles a lot — 8

Overall, her "composite" rating would probably be around the 7ish range

Individual ratings may depend heavily on individual preferences a man. For example, a man who likes large breasts may not be rating her a "9" for body but maybe a 7 or 8 instead. Maybe for another man her face is his type so he rates her "8" for face instead. Maybe another man likes his woman looking young, so maybe she's a 4-5 in age for him. Maybe he likes a bit of sarcasm, so she's a 10 in personality. Those are things that may affect individual components.

Things that may affect overall grading may be the 'weighting' that a man may put on a certain category. For example, a man may have a 'floor' on his attraction range where he may not even consider marrying a woman with less than a "5" for face. Even if she had high ratings for age, body, and femininity, it may be hard for him to get past "butterface" even if she was only average. Of course, that's his prerogative, but it may eliminate some potential candidates.

Some men prefer face and body to be the most important to them while femininity and age are not real big factors. Some men prefer face, body, and femininity and don't care about age. Some men only care about age and face. Generally, most men will care about all 4 categories to some extent, but it really depends a lot on how heavily a man may weight different factors.

Instead of weighing in on absolute "percentages" for weighting the various criteria, I think it's better to look at "floors" instead as they give a more meaningful assessment of whether a man may rate a woman attractive enough for him to ask out.

Example of floors

Personally, my "floors" that I was looking for when I was searching for a woman were approximately around these figures. Yes, I was looking for slightly to moderately above average in most categories. Yes, I knew it would be more difficult to find the more picky I was.

- >=5 for age, which is about ~30 years of age or less. I wanted a large family, so the younger the wife the better.
- >=6 for face, which is self explanatory.
- >=7-8 for body, which means she regularly worked out and/or had good genetics.
- >=7 for femininity, which means she has long hair, is above average for bubbly/enthusiastic/innocent, and isn't too sarcastic and smiles often.

A woman who is 35 or even may meet my requirements (or any man's requirements) for face, body, and femininity, but he may think she is too old. Likewise, a woman who may be meet the criteria for age, face, and femininity may be up there, but unfortunately she may be overweight or obese which drops her out of the eligible attractive floor of a man.

The overweight/obesity scenario is probably the most common one currently. As I've noted in doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins, it's likely that up to 50% of women ages 18-29 are overweight or obese. This is probably the most depressing aspect since dropping weight for women tends to significantly increase her attractiveness for both body and face.

The pointy elbow meme is a pretty common one, but every man has some "floor" to what he is looking for that may disqualify a particular woman from consideration.

This leads us to the controllable nature of feminine beauty.

Control-ability

What is "controllable" is obviously an important factor of a woman modifying her beauty to be more attractive.

- Age — Not controllable. Age is obviously not controllable. This is why it pays for women to be open to approaches and marriage early. Most men outside the 'sphere tend to be not so focused on age so much unless they want a large family, so this may not play so much of a role.
- Face — Somewhat controllable. Facial genetics are not controllable unfortunately, but most women can boost their beauty by anywhere from 1-3ish points over 'normal' if they focus on light makeup, solid grooming, and skincare. This can boost the women in the 4-6 range (which is most women) to the 5-9ish range with most in the 5-7 range most likely. This is huge. Remember, men are in general attracted to the average women, unlike most womens' attraction to men.
- Body — Mostly controllable. Body genetics do limit some areas like waist to hip ratios and breast size. If you google image 'fat loss transformation women', you can see a lot of fat women have the capacity to become at least a 7-8+ with solid diet and exercise. Plus, healthier, more enjoyable sex, and easier to get pregnant. There's no reason for most women not to put in a lot of effort here.
- Femininity — Fully controllable. God gave us free will, so we can change how we act. From what I've seen most women simply do not want to change how they act to increase their percentages. Most women could get themselves to a 7-8+ with some deconditioning from the world. After all, it's not in the nature of women to be masculine but feminine.

Overall, an "average" woman can increase her beauty in the face, body and femininity categories to a 6-7ish range of face, 7-8+ range for body, and 7-8+ range for femininity.

Here's the near ubiquitous poster example for weight loss (credit to crissfit.tumblr.com):

As you can see in the above photo, multiple categories improved substantially:

- Age — obviously she got older, but no one could tell from the pictures. If you just isolated the last picture and the first picture, you'd probably guess that 124 lbs was younger than the 197 lbs.
- Face — Maybe a 3 at best in the 197 lbs photo (mostly because of the fat on it) and likely in the 7 +/- 1 range for most men at 124 lbs. The fat goes away from the neck and cheeks, and her cheekbones and facial structure becomes much more feminine. Her skin clears up since obesity is very inflammatory and easily causes skin issues.
- Body — 2-3 in the 197 lbs photo at best and jumps up to a 8 +/- 1 range for most men at 124 lbs. Her waist to hip ratio starts to come in around 140 lbs and is really emphasized at 124 lbs.
- Femininity — Maybe 3 at best for flattering clothing on the top line. Obviously, can't tell her personality so much, but the way she's posing is not really feminine either. The clothing on the bottom line is much more feminine and flattering, and by the last photo she's probably at least 7-8 range for most men. You can even tell she feels much better with her body in the last photo based on her posing.

Based on the location that I'm in (suburbs) and what I've talked to with other men, it is very difficult to believe that such a woman wouldn't have at least some decent prospects, especially if they are willing to be friendly and talk to men. Working out and nutrition are such a huge factor for most women like above though.

Conclusions

A woman can make herself stand out if she takes care of her face, body, and becomes more feminine. She can become somewhat to significantly above average in attractiveness, which will net her increasing prospects. Significant bonus points for starting earlier in age to prepare herself for marriage before her most attractive range of 20-23.

- Age — Christian women need to be educated and prepared from childhood to prioritize marriage if she wants it. If she is prepared to be marriageable by 18 that is ideal, as she will stride into her prime years at 20-23 as an eligible woman for a man who wants to marry.
- Face — Wear light but flattering make up, if necessary. Take care of the skin. Good grooming. Get good sleep to eliminate eye bags and stress. Don't make it an obsession, but put some time into your appearance. Get the opinion of trustful men and women who will tell you if you're looking busted or good. Don't buy into any flattery.
- Body — Workout with high intensity exercises like sprinting, heavier resistance training, and eat healthy with mostly fruits and vegetables and adequate protein. Don't be overweight or obese. If you need to lose weight, it's all about a caloric deficit by eliminating excessive empty calories like refined sugars, snacks, and only eating 'til satisfaction and not full. While some men do marry women who are overweight or obese, this tends to be more of the exception and not the norm. Additionally, women who are overweight or obese also tend to marry men who are overweight or obese, so unless a woman wants her man like that I would suggest not being overweight or obese.
- Femininity — Wear flattering (to the waist to hip ratio) but modest clothing. Be feminine in behavior and demeanor. Have longer hair. Eliminate the sarcasm. Laugh at his jokes. Be respectful and follow a man's lead when on dates. Enthusiastic but not clingly. Running a household is a priority to know. Know the Biblical qualities for how women are to act and do them.

A random average Christian woman — 4-6 attractiveness — who works hard at the controllable factors of facial, bodily and feminine attractiveness can boost their face 1-2 attraction points, and elevate their body and femininity to the 7-8+ range with hard work and effort.

Generally, unless there are no Christian men prospects in an area, a woman who is a 6-7+ face, 7-8+ body and 7-8+ in femininity should have very little difficulty at least getting interest and being asked on dates and for relationships. In the communities I've seen, Christian women get asked out with less and mediocre faith.

The real question is… how many women would actually make the effort to put in work to be more attractive for their face, body, and more feminine. Not very many from what I've seen. Even less from Christian women.

Paranoia

April 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

BGR has a post up on not to teach daughters to be independent. The comments are pretty long, but I eventually was able to figure out some of the roots of dysfunction with this comment:

> Even attempting to compare men and women is wayward. Comparison breeds covetousness, jealousy, and discontent. The modern feminist is the epitome of this.
> No, men and women are not equal. The reason why God created certain positions in marriage, in the Church, and on earth is to teach us how to live in harmony with His design. When we deviate from those positions, we think it's beneficial but in reality it's sin and destructive in the long run.
> For example, 1 Peter 3 teaches husbands to view wives with understanding as the weaker vessel and in the grace as a co-heir in Christ lest their prayers be hindered. The meaning is ultimately that men and women are different and need to be treated different, but that we should all remember that we are all created by God. Treatment needs to come from love not harshness.
> Feminists, egalitarians, and complementarians are paranoid that men are going to abuse women because they have authority. They make up stories about how "Patriarchy" was used to abuse women in the OT and NT when the Law of Moses and Jesus show us that Authority is mean to Protect, Provide, and Love. They live in Fear not Love.
> After you stop buying into that nonsense, the Truth is pretty clear to see.

The one theme that is common between feminists, egalitarians, and complementarians in their waywardness from God's design is that they promote paranoia in women and men of men in authority. This is true whether in marriages, the Church, or elsewhere. They're all paranoid of men in authority positions.

The only reason why "Patriarchy" is demonized is because of the longstanding effort of feminists, egalitarians, and complementarians to demolish the structure of marriage that God intended for men and women.

Women don’t really understand male attraction and implications

April 12, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

TPC’s response to feminine beauty is highly controllable theory and analysis is interesting. Although there is the typical disdain for anything that men have to say about women (which is amusing to say the least), this seems to indicate that women don’t actually understand male attraction at all.

> In the wake of this epic 1996-level wild thread/discussion about marriage difficulty for young Christian men and women these days, the male blogger Deep Strength posted a long rambling thing about “feminine beauty” that made me realize a key part of where some men are talking past some women in these matters.
> A scale is not a switch. When some men use the classic 10 point scale for looks/beauty/attractiveness, they aren’t using it as a scale, but as a switch. On/off. Yes/No (to the question of whether they might, in the abstract, desire to know a woman in the Biblical sense). That is why Deep Strength thinks the young woman in his post went from a “3” to an “8” when she didn’t budge much in the scale sense. She wasn’t a 3 or an 8 to start with. She was an average girl who now looks above average because she puts more effort into her dress and carriage and lost weight via exercise and diet. On a ten point scale she went from 5 to 6.
> But this blogger converted “went from girl I would never think of desiring to girl I might have desirous thoughts of right now” into ten point scale language. “From a 3 to an 8!”
> This is, needless to say, confusing. He could have simply used a switch and reduced confusion dramatically.

This is somewhat right and somewhat wrong from a switch point of view.

The concept of a switch is too basic. There is the common phenomena of “would do” or “would not do,” but in reality it’s more complicated than that which I explained in my post.

The concept of attraction floors is nothing new. Donal wrote on it a few year ago. Both Christian and secular men have standards for who they “would or would not do” but they also have a higher floor for “who they would marry.” This is why semi-attractive or attractive sluts are for pumping and dumping, but the attractive chaste lady is what they would look for to marry. The only difference is secular men actually pump and dump while maybe looking to marry and Christian men are either committed to be Monks or Patriarchs. The latter chooses to obey God.

On the other hand, TPC is wrong about this part which I find interesting enough to be main topic for this post:

> She was an average girl who now looks above average because she puts more effort into her dress and carriage and lost weight via exercise and diet. On a ten point scale she went from 5 to 6.
> But this blogger converted “went from girl I would never think of desiring to girl I might have desirous thoughts of right now” into ten point scale language. “From a 3 to an 8!”
> This is, needless to say, confusing. He could have simply used a switch and reduced confusion dramatically.

Heartiste posted on it a while ago, and there is the general consensus among the majority of men that this woman went from about a “3” to about an “8.” Maybe plus or minus one point, depending on how men like red heads or whatever other factors. She most certainly did not go from a “5” to a “6” from a male perspective. It is vastly underestimating the importance of physical attractiveness.

Now, you could liken male attraction to female as a switch, but like I said before it does not quantify the complexity of the actual process. If we are only talking about “pure attraction” and were eliminating “desirability” factors, modesty notwithstanding, and eliminate morality from the equation, then for non-thirsty men approximately:

- They would “not do” this woman at anywhere from about 197 lbs to 175 lbs.
- They would “maybe do” said woman at 165 lbs to 155 lbs.
- They would “do” said woman at 140 lbs.
- They would “definitely do” said woman at 124 lbs.

To quantify this into actual numbers (which is why men use the 1-10 scale):

- They would “not do” a woman at <= 3/10.
- They would “maybe do” a woman at 4-5/10.
- They would “do” said woman at 6/10.
- They would “definitely do” at >=7/10.

As Donal notes, the attraction floor is the same thing men would use to quantify dating and/or marriage material as well from a purely attraction standpoint. There may be different qualifications for relationship status. Indeed, a man may only consider dating and/or relationship status in the “do” to “definitely do” range. A man may only consider marriage in the top part of the “do” and “definitely do” range. For example, to add on relationship status qualifiers:

- They would “not do” a woman at <= 3/10. Would not date.
- They would “maybe do” a woman at 4-5/10. Would not date.
- They would “do” said woman at 6/10. Maybe date. Questionable marry.
- They would “definitely do” at >=7/10. Would date, would marry.

Each man may have different qualifications for what he finds acceptable. Some would only marry at higher attractiveness levels. Some would marry with lower attractiveness levels.

A binary “yes” and “no” is too simplistic to understand the multiple various floors of quantification of female attractiveness.

Implications

The thing that I am most curious about is why TPC quantifies this woman at 197 lbs at a “5” and at 124 lbs as a “6.” It has been shown that the vast majority of males consider this woman from a purely attractiveness standpoint to be a “3” in the first picture and a “8” in the last picture.

Barring other qualifications like character, morality, and things like that, she moved from a “would not do” and “would not date” status in a man’s mind to a “definitely do” and “would date and would marry.”

As we have noted before, women generally are not motivated to improve their own attractiveness to men to up their potential chances for dating and marriage. Why is this?

- Lesser motivation? Is it because women actually only see themselves and other women going from a “5” to a “6” in their own head, when in a man’s head they go from a “3” to a “8”? Vastly underestimating the importance of physical attractiveness?
- Contempt for God’s creation? Whenever men discuss the attractiveness of women they always speak of it like they disdain how men were created by God to think about attraction to be pretty much solely physical beauty.
- Passivity? Generally, women have been conditioned into being passive about their own roles and responsibilities in the dating and marriage arena?

- Projection “just get it”? Women want men who “just get it” and want a man who “just gets her” or “loves her just the way she is”?

Anything I’m missing? Perhaps a combination of everything?

Feminine beauty is highly controllable theory and analysis Part 2

April 21, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A good amount of discussion was had in women don't really understand male attraction. For the women that actually care about doing something about attracting a man, this post will educate you on that.

Also worth noting is Dalrock's most recent post that shows old(er) women don't have the same sexual attractiveness they did when they were in their 20s for quite obvious reasons.

Let's get down to it.

I've linked to The Rules Revisited article on feminine beauty is highly controlled before. The premise of the article is good, but it doesn't accurately quantify beauty that well.

Introduction

Donal and other sources have already made a general quantification of what represents male attractiveness in PSALM/LAMPS — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, money. These traits when broken down into Scriptural terms tend to signify that a man will be a masculine and authoritative and a protector and provider. If you missed why attractiveness is important, you can refer back to my article about why attractiveness is an important part of marriage in the context of the Scripture.

On the other hand, men are almost 100% attracted to feminine beauty. Here is an attempted analysis (Image credit to therulesrevisted):

The Components of Feminine Beauty and Their Relative Importance
Category	Sub-Category	Importance		Contollability	Attention Deserved
Weight & Fitness	Weight & Fitness	30%	30%	85%	42%
Facial Structure	Facial Structure	20%	20%	5%	2%
Clothes	Quality of Clothes	1%	10%	50%	1%
	Color of Clothes	2%		100%	3%
	Fit of Clothes	3%		90%	4%
	Nakedness*	2%		100%	3%
	Heels	2%		100%	3%
Body Shape	Butt Size & Shape	2%	13%	20%	1%
	Breast Size & Shape	2%		35%	1%
	Hip-to-Waist Ratio	3%		10%	0%
	Posture	3%		100%	5%
	Height	2%		8%	0%
	Leg-to-Body Ratio	1%		0%	0%
Grooming	Eyebrows	2%	12%	85%	3%
	Body Hair	2%		100%	3%
	Hairstyle	7%		90%	10%
	Nails	1%		100%	2%
Cosmetics & Jewelery	Makeup	5%	6%	100%	8%
	Jewelery	1%		100%	2%
Skin, Eyes, Hair & Teeth	Teeth	3%	9%	80%	4%
	Eyes	2%		10%	0%
	Eyelashes	2%		25%	1%
	Hair Quality	1%		30%	0%
	Skin Quality	1%		50%	1%
* Bare cleavage, short skirt, etc.	Total	100%	100%

In general, I don't think quantifying feminine beauty by a scale of "100%" is an accurate indicator.

The 4-5 areas of female beauty

Feminine beauty tends to be separated into 4 to maybe 5 distinct categories that all intermingle to form a coherent whole. Men can glance at a woman and determine her feminine beauty right away.

The main 4 attractive traits are a mishmash from the above picture:

- Age — Men's optimal preferences via OKCupid study suggest between 20 to 23 is the most physically attractive age to men.
- Face — Structure of the face, eyes, teeth, skin, and so on.
- Body — Legs, hip, butt, breasts, ratios, fitness level, weight, and so on.
- Femininity — Hair, girlishness of clothes (dresses, skirts, etc.), girlishness of demeanor, smiling.

Age and physical beauty are attractive to men because they are cues for fertility and ability to have many and healthy children. See: God's mandate in Genesis 1 to be fruitful and multiply. Femininity is both part of the dichotomy of masculinity-femininity between the sexes and likely a solid positive mothering cue.

Face and body are pretty straight forward, and different men have different opinions on 6 what they deem as ideal. However, the vast majority of beauty is relatively objective in facial and body shape, structure, and symmetry. Most men will rate a women within 1 point of where she may be at on a 1-10 scale. For example, an "8" might have 50% rate her an 8 whereas maybe 20% would rate her a "7" and another 20% would rate her a "9" and the last 10% may say 6 or 10.

Femininity is slightly convoluted. Hair length and clothing are straight forward feminine aspects. However, girlishness of demeanor is a bit harder to quantify. Sweetness and kindness are related to femininity, but they are not attractive in and of themselves. Part of "girly demeanor" is how a girl makes a man feel about himself. If she respects him and can make it known either subtly or overtly, it will tend to draw a man in. Seductiveness also plays a role, although how much of that should be used by Christian women is questionable. Additionally, there are some other almost intangible components of a girl demeanor like enthusiasm, bubbly-ness, and innocence that may also be attractive to men. In other words, it may signify that a woman is "untainted" or at least less tainted from the world. Women that are "jaded" by the world are often cynical and this is a huge turn off to men.

Note that some physical traits like virginity are not in themselves attractive. They are desirable. The same is true of being a Christian and growing in the faith.

The "5th" category seems to be "fetishes" for lack of a better word. I'm not talking solely about sexual fetishes, but men can get zoned in enough that they may rate certain hobbies or activities as attractive to them. We can look no further than gamers where a man may choose an relatively more 'unattractive' gamer girl over potential more conventionally attractive options. I'm not sure whether this "tunneling" is related to one-itis, but it may be. I generally would not include this in a general overall assessment, although it can play a role.

Composite numbers and the "floor" rating

When a man rates a woman it is a composite of all of these factors put together. Let's look at an example of what a man may rate a woman in each of these categories:

- Age — 30, but looks older for her age — 6
- Face — Cute to pretty — 6-7
- Body — Slim figure with voluptuous (.65) waist to hip ratio. Small breasts — 9
- Femininity — Long hair, bubbly and enthusiastic. Has a streak of sarcasm, but smiles a lot — 8

Overall, her "composite" rating would probably be around the 7ish range

Individual ratings may depend heavily on individual preferences a man. For example, a man who likes large breasts may not rate a woman a "9" for body but maybe a 7 or 8 instead. Maybe for another man her face is his type so he rates her "8" for face instead. Maybe another man likes his woman looking young, so maybe she's a 4-5 in age for him. Those are things that may affect individual components.

Some men prefer face and body to be the most important to them while femininity and age are not real big factors. Some men prefer face, body, and femininity and don't care about age. Some men only care about age and face. Generally, most men will care about all 4 categories to some extent, but it really depends a lot on how heavily a man may weight different factors.

Instead of weighing in on absolute "percentages" for weighting the various criteria, I think it's better to look at "floors" instead as they give a more meaningful assessment of whether a man may rate a woman attractive enough for him to ask out.

Example of floors

The example of my "floors" that I was looking for can be used as an illustration. Yes, I was looking for slightly to moderately above average in most categories. Yes, I knew it would be more difficult to find the more picky I was.

- >=5 for age, which is about ~30 years of age or less. I wanted a large family, so the younger the wife the better. Around about 30 years old you notice that a woman is starting to lose her youth.
- >=6 for face, which is self explanatory. Objective beauty plus personal preference.
- >=7-8 for body, which means she regularly worked out and/or had good genetics.
- >=7 for femininity, which means she has long hair, is above average for bubbly/enthusiastic/innocent, and isn't too sarcastic and smiles often.

A woman who is 35 or even may meet my requirements (or any man's requirements) for face, body, and femininity, but I may think she is too old. Likewise, a woman who may meet the criteria for age, face, and femininity may be up there, but unfortunately she may be overweight or obese which drops her out of the eligible attractive floor of a man.

The overweight/obesity scenario is probably the most common one currently. As I've noted in doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins, it's likely that up to 50% of women ages 18-29 are overweight or obese. This is probably the most depressing aspect since dropping weight for women tends to significantly increase her attractiveness for both body and face. The pointy elbow meme notwithstanding, every man has some "floor" to what he is looking for that may disqualify a particular woman from consideration.

Control-ability

What is "controllable" is obviously an important factor of a woman modifying her beauty to be more attractive.

- Age — Not controllable. Age is obviously not controllable. This is why it pays for women to be open to approaches and marriage early. This definitely plays a role to some extent in that the most attractive age range is 20-23, but many men outside the internet don't mind if a woman is at a higher age. Just know the search will get progressively harder as you get older.
- Face — Somewhat controllable. Facial genetics are not controllable unfortunately, but most women can boost their beauty by anywhere from 1-3ish points over 'normal' if they focus on light makeup, solid grooming, and skincare. This can boost the women in the 4-6 range (which is most women) to the 5-8ish range with most in the 5-7 range most likely. This is huge. Remember, men are in general attracted to the average women, unlike most womens' attraction to men.
- Body — Mostly controllable. Body genetics do limit some areas like waist to hip ratios and breast size. If you google image ‘fat loss transformation women’, you can see a lot of fat women have the capacity to become at least a 7-8+ with solid diet and exercise. Plus, healthier, more enjoyable sex, and easier to get pregnant. There’s no reason for most women not to put in a lot of effort here.

Overall, an “average” woman can increase her beauty in the face, body and femininity categories to a 6-7ish range of face, 7-8+ range for body, and 7-8+ range for femininity.

Here’s the near ubiquitous poster example for weight loss (credit to crissfit.tumblr.com):

As you can see in the above photo, multiple categories improved substantially:

- Age — obviously she got older, but no one could tell from the pictures. If you just isolated the last picture and the first picture, you’d probably guess that 124 lbs was younger than the 197 lbs.
- Face — Maybe a 3 at best in the 197 lbs photo (mostly because of the fat on it) and likely in the 7 +/- 1 range for most men at 124 lbs. The fat goes away from the neck and cheeks, and her cheekbones and facial structure becomes much more feminine. Her skin clears up since obesity is very inflammatory and easily causes skin issues.
- Body — 2-3 in the 197 lbs photo at best and jumps up to a 8 +/- 1 range for most men at 124 lbs. Her waist to hip ratio starts to come in around 140 lbs and is really emphasized at 124 lbs.

You can even tell she feels much better with her body in the last photo based on her posing.

Since the previous post, some of the interesting comments were that most women would rate her going from about a "5" to a "6" at the harshest to maybe a "4" to a "7." However, what a "woman" would rate these other women doesn't matter if her goal is to attract a man. What matters is what a man thinks.

If we refer back to the previous picture, why would most men rate her going from about a "3" to a "8" whereas most women would only rate her from going to about a 4-5 to a 6-7. The key to understanding this is curves:

> "The real "sexually attractive" part of the 124 lbs picture is the bust to waist to hip ratio that is extremely alluring to men."

There are very little natural curves when she is 132, but as she drops down to 124 lbs her natural curves become much more pronounced. Although you can argue that her clothing may be slightly immodest, she would still be rated in the 7-8 range with more modest but still feminine and body shape flattering clothing.

- I posted some examples here.
- Hearthie has a blog post on feminine clothing
- Hearthie also linked to her pinterest that has very good examples.

In any case, if you don't believe me then here are studies. There is TRUTH to the fact that a .7 waist to hip ratio is sexually attractive to men. Pubmed studies include these, which tend to list a "most attractive" range from about .60-.75 waist to hip ratio in women.

Also,

> We used eye-tracking techniques to measure the numbers of visual fixations, dwell times, and initial fixations made by men who viewed front-posed photographs of the same woman, computer-morphed so as to differ in her WHR (0.7 or 0.9) and breast size (small, medium, or large). Men also rated these images for attractiveness. Results showed that the initial visual fixation (occurring within 200 ms from the start of each 5 s test) involved either the breasts or the waist. Both these body areas received more first fixations than the face or the lower body (pubic area and legs). Men looked more often and for > longer at the breasts, irrespective of the WHR of the images. However, men rated images with an hourglass shape and a slim waist (0.7 WHR) as most attractive, irrespective of breast size. These results provide quantitative data on eye movements that occur during male judgments of the attractiveness of female images, and indicate that assessments of the female hourglass figure probably occur very rapidly.

> https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19688590

Men immediately know how attractive a woman is by her waist-to-hip ratio and her face, and then tend to spend the rest of the time looking at her boobs (at least from the front). If it was the back it would probably be the butt.

Overall, the point is that the last picture is flattering to her now alluring body shape with feminine and beautiful clothing that emphasizes the figure. At 132 lbs the woman likely has around a .9 waist to hip ratio, but in the 124 lbs picture she has around a .75 waist to hip ratio most likely.

Additional thoughts

There are a couple of things to note.

While this post is a breakdown of the factors that go into feminine beauty, it takes a man only a few hundredths of a second to a few seconds to look at a woman and give her a number in his head as noted by the study above.

A man does not look at a woman and hyper-analyze how attractive she is like this post. He can look at her at a glance or in a few seconds and know immediately what he thinks of her. However, this post is meant to break down the particular area(s) of how men make the snap judgment about a woman's feminine beauty, which means they can make a snap judgment about whether he thinks she is worth asking out or not.

This is important because attraction is about getting your foot in the door, while desirable traits such as godliness, kindness, being good with children, being good with cooking and homemaking, and other traits such as these are what will help you keep a man. You need to be attractive enough for a man to ask you out, and you need to be desirable enough to keep a man. Generally, both men and women should strive for excellence in each of these categories.

I know quite a few Christian women that are good catches in terms of desirable traits, but they're either overweight or obese. Hence, they may get asked out by a man here and there, but they don't generate much interest in general.

To be frank, sex is a big part of marriage. To get a man to ask you out and want to marry you in general he must want to have sex with you. If you're not attractive enough for him to want to have sex a lot, then he's probably not going to ask you out on a date or going to want to have a relationship. The things that make him want to have sex with you are how you look — your physical beauty and femininity.

There's nothing that can be said to make it more clear than that. Many people can certainly moan and groan about how it shouldn't be that way, but that's just whining about how God created man. Last time a checked, complaining was a sin. Accept it and learn to operate within God's creation and perspective.

Conclusion

A woman can make herself stand out if she takes care of her face, body, and becomes more feminine. She can become somewhat to significantly above average in attractiveness, which will net her increasing prospects. Significant bonus points for starting earlier in age to prepare herself for marriage before her most attractive range of 20-23.

- Age — Educate and prepare Christian girls from childhood to prioritize marriage. If she is prepared to be marriageable by 18 that is ideal, as she will stride into her prime years at 20-23 as an eligible woman for a man who wants to marry.
- Face — Light but flattering make up, if necessary. Take care of the skin. Good grooming. Get good sleep to eliminate eye bags and stress. Don't make it an obsession, but put some time into your appearance. Get the opinion of trustful men and women who will tell you if you're looking busted or good. Don't buy into any flattery.
- Body — Heavier resistance training and eat healthy with mostly fruits and vegetables and adequate protein. Don't be overweight or obese. If you need to lose weight, it's all about a caloric deficit by eliminating excessive empty calories like refined sugars, snacks, and only eating 'til satisfaction and not full. Aim to gain leg and glute muscle and have a slim waist to get into the .6 to .75 waist to hip ratio.
- Femininity — Wear flattering (to the waist to hip ratio) but modest clothing. Skirts or dresses that emphasize figure are good. Be feminine in behavior and demeanor. Have longer hair. Eliminate the sarcasm. Laugh at his jokes. Be respectful and follow a man's lead when on dates. Enthusiastic but not clingly. Running a household is a priority to know. Know the Biblical qualities for how women are to act and do them.

While some men do marry women who are overweight or obese, this tends to be more of the exception and not the norm. Additionally, women who are overweight or obese also tend to marry men who are overweight or obese, so unless a woman wants her man like that I would suggest not being overweight or obese.

A random average Christian woman — 4-6 attractiveness — who works hard at the controllable factors of facial, bodily and feminine attractiveness can boost their face 1-2 attraction points, and elevate their body and femininity to the 7-8+ range with hard work and effort.

Generally, unless there are no Christian men prospects in an area, a woman who is a 6-7+ face, 7-8+ body and 7-8+ in femininity should have very little difficulty at least getting interest and being asked on dates and for relationships. In the communities I've seen, Christian women get asked out with less and mediocre faith.

The real question is… how many women would actually make the effort to put in work to be more attractive for their face, body, and more feminine. Not very many from what I've seen. Even less from Christian women.

From the mailbag: marital rape rants, sexual attraction, and more

April 24, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sometimes I receive anonymous e-mails like this:

> You wrote on the subject of marital rape….and you decided to twist the bibles words on the subject. I can only assume one would do this to make themselves feel better about the fact that they themselves are rapists. I was raped in my marriage for 5 and a half years. I'd like to know your point of view once something this horrible happens to someone you love. GOD is discussed with you. Shame on you! It's people like you that give Christians a bad name. Fuck you cunts!

Ignoring the vitriolic language,

- If I was being "raped" I wouldn't stick around with that person for 5 and a half years.
- Neither would I be going around looking for blogs talking about how there isn't such a thing as "marital rape" to basically wallow in my own misery and PTSD.

The few actual victims of rape or sexual battery I know basically don't want to talk about it and/or have moved on with their lives. They don't wallow in their own victimhood and seek out others to try to convince them that they're bad people. It's only when you get those who were convinced after the fact that it was rape by feminists (e.g. regret sex or bad breakup/divorce followed by reframing of everything that happened in the relationship to something bad).

In any case, I encourage said reader to accept God's salvation for their life. Then to look at God's plan for marriage in 1 Corinthians 7 with different eyes. The wife's body is the husband's and the husband's body is the wife. It's about mutual giving to each other to meet their needs. There is no right to deny meeting their needs.

Moving on.

> I just have a question regarding beauty and how it relates to the Bible for male sexual attraction. I will admit that I do struggle with this since most people I know state that inner beauty is the only true beauty. It makes me feel really guilty of superficiality. It is really confusing because, despite the church's insistence that personality is all that matters, my experiences and biological reactions tell me otherwise (even my male friends seem to focus a lot on looks quite often). This all cannot just be an accident. I only considered dating people first because of physical attraction and arousal. Almost 95% of my crushes were based on looks to be honest. How do I reconcile this issue when people parrot verses such as Prov. 11:22; 31:30 and 1 Pet. 3:3-4 which, on the surface, seem to completely obliterate the idea of outer beauty (especially Prov. 31:30). What is your > interpretation of these passages?

> As for the objectivity of beauty, how do we make sense of other cultures who seem to define beauty differently? Is there a way in which objectivity can still exist despite diversity? the only thing I have come closest to arguing for objective beauty is by stating that God has intentionally set a standard of beauty in the same way that certain things in nature are just naturally beautiful like patterns and order in nature like flower petals following the Fibonacci sequence. There must be a particular order or form of the female body in order to be considered beautiful that isn't centered on subjective reactions.
> I ask you because I know that you are able to help me with my struggle. Hopefully you're able to respond soon and may God bless you.

I find this pattern of thought to be very common among young men in the Church.

The Church and even fellow Christians, like the culture, try to demonize men for being attracted to a woman's feminine beauty.

Obviously, I've written before on why sexual attraction is important to marriage.

It goes without saying to the young Christian men out there: you are not alone.

If you have certain preferences for physical beauty in a woman you shouldn't feel ashamed of it no matter how many people — even Christians — try to shame you or make you change your mind. Things like grooming practices are your freedom in Christ to look for. We know that men are sexually attracted to certain traits in women: youthfulness, facial structure, waist to hip ratio, and symmetry are universally attractive. The past few posts were on that.

If other people want to deny reality that's up to them. There are certainly enough people trying to live the "Eat, Pray, Love" divorce fantasy to their own demise.

Stay strong. Continue to build your foundation on Jesus. Understand that most people want to criticize you just because you are a man with preferences. Your preferences are your preferences. Don't try to change yourself for other people's approval.

> I think this would be an interesting trend to hear your commentary on. The mainstream media has for years been in complete denial of any reactionary/socially conservative shifts in the opinions of millenials (and the upper bound of Generation Z.) Now, it seems they (NYT) are willing to accept that such a shift is in motion, albeit with some of their usual condescension. As a member of the 18-24 age group, I find this fascinating.
> https://www.nytimes.com/2017/03/31/opinion/sunday/do-millennial-men-want-stay-at-home-wives.html?_r=3

From what I've seen in general, no.

I think that those who want a stay at home wife are generally becoming more vocal about it, especially the women who realized that working a career isn't all that. In fact, a career even sucks most of the time.

Those in the age group may be more vocal about it, but what actually happens is a couple of scenarios. The trends from what I've seen are DINKs — double income no kids, swearing off of marriage altogether, and/or cohabitation without marriage. Maybe marriage "in the future."

> on a separate note have you ever thought about doing a post on:
>
> – Use of Yoga
> – Use of New Age Treatment, Corporate Exercises in the Workplace.
> – Use of Charms, Amulets, Zodiac, Tattoos Elements etc…

Consider this post on this topic my response.

In general, the first two "things" have some basis in actual science namely the interaction of the nervous system and its surroundings. The placebo effect is one part of this.

In particular, yoga, tai chi, and other movement based systems with incorporation of poses and deep breathing tend to relax and destress the body. There's nothing "mystical" about the process as God has made the body to respond well to relaxation. He even created the "Sabbath" just for us for relaxation!

Overall, I think Paul's statements in 1 Corinthians and Romans about food sacrificed to idols basically apply mostly. Other people can try to make things an "idol" and add all their "voodoo" to it, but at the end of the day God made the body and if we use movement, deep breathing, and other techniques to relax it, exercise, and stay healthy then why would we condemn such a thing?

However, for those who are weaker in the faith, I would not flaunt the believer's freedom to do those things in front of them. Also, I would stay away from labels like "new age" as they can tend to leave a bad impression for you in the eyes of non-believers and believers.

In regard to "Use of Charms, Amulets, Zodiac, Tattoos Elements etc…", there are no such things and that is generally considered witchcraft in the Bible. Stay away.

That's all for this mail bag. Feel free to comment about these topics if you agree or disagree.

The questionability of eros

May 1, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Every time I hear a Christian refer to how love in marriage is “eros” I somewhat get the inkling feeling that it’s questionable.

Now, I suppose you could tie this somewhat back to my previous post, especially the discussion on yoga in the comments. Calisthenics and various stretches and other movements are not necessarily “pagan” by nature, but when you codify a system of movements in celebration or a ritual of a pantheon of gods it may be questionable. The arguments in the commentary have somewhat begun to sway me to the “avoid yoga” side of the argument.

“Eros” in particular is based on a Greek god and cult. It has ties to illicit love, homosexuality, and the idolization of attraction and sex. Just like chivalry or “courtly love” is based in the idolization of romance, eros is about the idolization of sex with or without marriage.

The Scriptures tie the morality of sex to marriage, and thus justify the wholeness of passion within the bounds of the marital bed. Everything outside of that concept is sin. While Christians have tried to redefine “eros” as meaning sex within marriage (and that this is true), redefining a pagan concept as Christian is dubious.

Similar veins of thought:

- Redefining game within a Christian context is also dubious.
- Why I don’t respect women.
- “Marriage” by the Supreme Court is not just “one man and one woman” anymore, but when Christians talk about marriage we automatically assume that it is “one man and one woman” even though we know that is not what the law of the land says currently.

My overall conclusion is that the lines and terminology should be used as how they were defined by the Scripture.

Questionable strategy

May 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There was recently a boundless post on Am I too strong? which is written by a woman.

> Have you ever been told that you're too strong to date? Or, have you wondered why you're successful in several areas of life, but, at the same time, dateless?
> A couple of years ago I came across the post On Daughters and Dating: How to Intimidate Suitors by Jen Wilkin on The Gospel Coalition. Wilkin's underlying message is for parents. She encourages them to raise their girls to be confident Christian women, which in turn easily and naturally helps them ward off unwanted attention and advances.

Anyway, regardless of anything about the article, I think the comments are better. I'm only taking comments from the women, as it seems like there are some disparate comments from the men. Some of the men "laud" the strong women while some question the distinction of "strong" in faith versus strong of the world and how many times it means of the world.

> Commenter 1: I love this! I tend to be pretty independent, not because I don't need a man but because I don't have one. I was talking to my brother and asking if maybe I was too intimidating, he told me that I need to just keep doing my thing and if a guy is intimidated, he's not the right one. I'm 31 and single, I would like to be married but for now I'm traveling, serving the church, mentoring, growing, learning, competing on my horse…
> Commenter 2: I can relate… even if the words were not well-chosen, I know what you mean. I've watched as my more "swoony" friends have dated and been proposed to and married. I'm just not the type of girl who's needy or flirty… and in a way, I think that makes me more intimidating. It's just going to take a special, courageous guy to initiate a relationship with me. It's almost as if guys have been conditioned to wait for a girl to initiate a relationship. It's very frustrating for those who want to be pursued.
> Commenter 3: [Name], I like how you described it. I'm not "swoony" or flirty either, and that's been to my dating detriment, but it's also helpful in weeding out the "slouchy pants" guys. □ I can't wait to be flirty with my forever person. Thanks for commenting. Best wishes to Essentially, what it seems to boil down for women who have commented that they are single for a while is that they're basically uninterested in seeming interested in men that they may like. This is not some random anecdote from the 'sphere but is a pretty common phenomena throughout the Church.

Indeed, two other commenters even suggests that not showing interest is probably not the best strategy.

> Commenter 4: On the other hand, being “flirty/swoony” is a way that women can communicate that they are interested in being pursued. I’m not saying you should do this in an over-the-top way or a way that dishonors God, but a guy is going to pursue a woman he thinks is interested in him too more so than a woman who is subtly (or even overtly) communicating disinterest in being pursued.
> Commenter 5: Yeah. Men tend to approach women more when they’re flirty or seem interested because of the decreased rate of rejection. Plus, why would you not want to try to get to know someone who is interested in you.
> Seems to be a common theme from the single women in the comments. They don’t want to communicate any interest at all even if it would potentially increase their chances. They also seem to think it’s somehow weeding out men that aren’t good enough.
> Not the strategy I would choose, but hopefully it works for them.

When you’re single for so long and waiting and continuing to ‘weed out’ so-called ‘weak men’ who you don’t want to be with it may be a good idea to actually reevaluate your strategy. Obviously, these women probably don’t know and maybe don’t want to hear about how their increasing age and decreasing beauty is working against them, so it may pay to change their strategy a bit.

Many commenters here, at Donal’s, Dalrock’s and Scott’s continue to suggest that single Christian women learn how to flirt, be outgoing, and improve their communication skills so they can increase their chances. It seems like this advice is also needed out in the “real world” as well.

Since this post was written in queue, there are more comments. This is an honest comment from a man who illustrates the non-blog way that men view women:

> Being totally honest here, it depends on what I perceive your value to be.
> If you are the only 10/10 I ever expect to enter the doors of my church, I really enjoy being around you and your life is rich with spiritual fruit, I may make more effort to scale the wall to win your hand in marriage. On the other hand, if you are only borderline and you put up resistance (or your father does), I may conclude it isn’t meant to be.
> If I view a lady as borderline and I interact with her, it means I am vaguely open to the possibility of a relationship and want to give it a chance to see if I grow to like her over time. A lady therefore needs to make a realistic assessment on whether I see her as a 10/10 or a borderline lady: – the danger is that she will put up walls, wrongly assuming I view her as a 10/10.
> If a lady has absolutely no interest in marriage to me now or ever, I am unlikely to appreciate being lead on. On the other hand, if a lady thinks she may one day come to like me, but wants me to work harder to win her over, she has to make sure her response communicates that, because my default interpretation of > resistance in a lady is “I’m not interested in you, not now, not ever”.

> For instance, a lady might say, “You seem like a nice guy, but I don’t know you all that well and I’ve got temporary difficulties in life that would make me struggle to give due attention to a relationship at this precise moment”, before following it up with a group-date invitation (or two, or three) a little while later to see if I rise to the bait.
> In a nutshell, to use a gambling term, it is all about a lady knowing her hand. Granted, there are no guarantees in life, so a strong hand may not ultimately result in the desired outcome, but a lady who regularly overplays her hand is unlikely to reach her end goal.
> When it comes to whether or not I like “feisty” ladies, it all depends. A godly man will always want to build his future family according to God’s blueprint and so a man will look at women to see if they demonstrate the potential to be obedient to him as required by Ephesians 5:22-24. If a lady is feisty for Christ and her spiritual fruits indicate this, then that is a fantastic thing! On the other hand, if she is “feisty” as in someone who is always argumentative about matters there is no value in arguing about, I will conclude she will not be a useful “asset” to me and ultimately draining of my energy.
> A lady therefore needs to show me that she has sound judgement regarding when to be “feisty” and when not to be “feisty”. Ecclesiastes 3:7: – “A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak”.

The more beautiful and feminine a woman is, the longer leash they get from a man. The same is true of an attractive jerk. That’s just the way it is folks. Attractive people get a great benefit of the doubt.

That doesn’t mean you should take advantage of attractiveness to act like a witch or dbag, but you should see the importance of attractiveness if you desire to be married.

Mother’s Day in review

May 23, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Little late to the party, but the previous Mother’s day my pastor actually just walked the congregation through the Scriptures.

It was the first time I’ve seen that happen, ever, so I was impressed. Took a few notes on what was taught too.

> Ephesians 6:1-4 Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. 2 Honor your father and mother (which is the first commandment with a promise), 3 so that it may be well with you, and that you may live long on the earth. 4 Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord

- Be concerned about not just “rules” but the heart of the child.
- Help them to understand why they are obedient, so that when they get to high school and college they will make better choices.

> Deuteronomy 6:4-7 4 “Hear, O Israel! The Lord is our God, the Lord is one! 5 You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might. 6 These words, which I am commanding you today, shall be on your heart. 7 You shall teach them diligently to your sons and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way and when you lie down and when you rise up.

- Heart > rules.
- Also, you can’t expect children to be in school for 8+ hours a day and then be able to teach your children at home in the 1-2 hours aside from dinner and homework.
- Strong case for having a wife/mother stay at home so she can teach her children godly and family values.
- God is more concerned about character than career.
- Sacrifices are worth it.

> Titus 2:1-5 But as for you, speak the things which are fitting for sound doctrine. 2 Older men are to be temperate, dignified, sensible, sound in faith, in love, in [a]perseverance.3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

- Re-emphasis on family > career
- Reverent/not malicious gossips – Kindness is important when things are not going well

- Submission — Order not two headed, not politically correct but that's what God's Word teaches
- 50/50 statistical divorce makes men and women think long and hard
- God's Word is dishonored if you act in a non-Christian manner

> 1 Peter 3:1-6 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

- Chaste and respectful behavior matters to win husbands. "There's hope, don't nag." It's possible even when it doesn't feel like it
- A gentle and quiet spirit shows you're sold out for Jesus to do it His way… Confidence in trusting Jesus
- Culture tells us to demand our rights, assert ourselves, and to yell and nag. This is not the answer.
- Can't be good enough or religious enough to be holy. Only by trusting in Jesus and being obedient.

> Proverbs 31:10-31 –Didn't get time to go over this part of the passage.

As I mentioned earlier, I was quite shocked and impressed. However, my fiance said she had heard similar sermons before, but all I know is it's not common.

Never did I think I would hear Titus 2 and 1 Peter 3 instruction on Mother's day, but I can't say never anymore.

Men lead, women follow

May 24, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has a post up on overt and covert in regard to mating tendencies.

> I have been doing some thinking lately how the whole process of actively trying to "woo" someone. There are two main models which are proposed, one of them the more widely accepted model and the other more common around the manosphere. They are:
> - Men are the pursuers and Women are the pursued
> - Men display and Women choose
> I would like to examine these two models, because I am wondering if they are necessarily mutually exclusive. One way of reconciling these two is the following:
>
> Men Display –> Women Choose –> Men Pursue –> Women are Pursued
> All of the potential models involve men starting the process. Not really a surprise, I guess. Now to get to the title of the post.

Overall, I think what Roissy and whoever else states hints at the truth, but the actual Truth is as the Scriptures teach: men lead, women follow.

- Men lead through initiation via their own leadership style among other factors (overtly displayed consciously or unconsciously through various social mediums).
- Women choose whether to follow/submit or not.

In general, I do not believe that men pursue or that women are pursued in the strictest sense of the word. What follows is male investment and female re-evaluation.

- Men invest non fungible resources — time, energy, money — and evaluate to consider whether their investment is good or not. If it is good, men will continue. If it seems bad or gets worse, a man may choose to disengage.
- Women re-evaluate the investment to see if it is good or not. If it is not up to her "standards" whatever they are, she may depart. Women tend to have multiple avenues of re-evaluation of investment: all in (hell yes), satisfied, wishy-washy/looking for other options, I'm out, and hell no and maybe more.

A woman's "response" or "re-evaluation" is neither covert in the sense that you typically cannot tell exactly from her actions. Rather, it typically is not in her actions but rather her attitude. A woman who thinks a man leading her is a good choice will be respectful and submit to him joyfully and enthusiastically for the most part, as long as her sensibilities are not offended. A woman who is more wishy washy will be contentious over the smallest details.

On a macro level, women tend to respond to a good investment with good investments of their own (e.g. reciprocal behavior). This is why 1 Peter 3 is so difficult for women because it forces her into a position of having to Trust that God will change the heart of a man through respect and chaste behavior and a quiet and gentle spirit — not nagging and harsh words and contentious behavior.

Also worth noting is a woman who is willing to invest more non-fungible resources than the man in the relationship is either very enthusiastic or desperate.

This is why it is important to look at the whole sum of a woman. It's generally not enough to believe what she says. You need critically analyze her tone of voice and body language. It's not enough to look at her actions. You need to see her body language and attitude she takes about going to do things. Women can also say one thing and do another. While actions are not the be all end all, it's more important to evaluate actions over words. The chain of command is as follows.

> [Covert] versus [Overt]
> [The Heart > Attitude] > [Actions > Words]

The heart and attitude are generally more "covert" in nature whereas actions and words tend to be more "overt." Women's 'cattiness' and 'gossip' is generally predicated on taking specific actions and words that mean one thing taken at face value, but mean the totally opposite thing based on the way or meaning in which it was said.

Men tend to be more straight forward with things regarding the heart, attitude, actions, and words. There are some exceptions (like one-itis), but usually most men will be able to tell if the woman following them is a good investment or not. Pulling the trigger to disengage if a woman is not what they want is another issue altogether.

Both men and women have the potential to "get lazy" in the relationship, which leads to dissatisfaction and usually poor behavior from the other.

To summarize:

- Men lead, women follow
- Men invest and evaluate their investment, women re-evaluate a man's investment and follower status
- Heart > attitude > actions > words
- Heart and attitude are generally covert whereas actions and words are overt.
- The closer to the heart, the more the actions reveal the Truth of what the other person believes.

Also, men are expected to read the extent of a woman's evaluation of him. If he is 'over invested' that usually means her attraction will plummet. This is one of the more interesting attraction triggers that I may go into later.

Biblical prescriptions with no Bible

May 26, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I previously wrote about a review of Danny Silk's Defining the Relationship marriage book, and gave it a pretty bad review. Namely, because it did not discuss one time in the Scriptures of the roles and relationships in marriage such as Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, and so on.

Likewise, there are articles like this on sex — which admittedly I've read before but never wrote a post about — which have tons of references to pop culture and famous people, but no references to the Bible on the particular topic.

> Back in 2013, provoked by Elizabeth Smart's story Christians filled the Internet with discussions about sex—particularly abstinence education—so much that the Atlantic posted a summary of these debates in "Why Some Evangelicals Are Trying to Stop Obsessing Over Pre-Marital Sex."
> Although these conversations are evidence that Christians are forming a more candid, holistic and theologically sound discourse about sex, an area that still needs more attention is the far-reaching effects of abstinence rhetoric on marriage.
> While the movement is great at detailing— and exaggerating—the benefits of saving sex for marriage, it is dishonest about the challenges abstinence presents to couples who eventually tie the knot.
> Jessica Ciencin Henriquez recently detailed how the abstinence movement affected her sex life and marriage in a revealing article titled, "My Virginity Mistake." Henriquez relays how she pledged herself to Jesus at a purity ceremony at age 14, remained a virgin until she married six years later, and wound up divorced after she and her husband could not make things work in the bedroom.
> Looking back, Henriquez states if she had not insisted on waiting for sex until marriage, she could have prevented her divorce. The provocative subtitle of her article reads, "I took an abstinence pledge hoping it would ensure a strong marriage. Instead, it led to a quick divorce."
> Henriquez's story is important because it highlights an issue the abstinence movement rarely acknowledges: sexual incompatibility within marriage. While this issue may seem irrelevant, it is actually fundamental to traditional Christian beliefs about sex. The fact that sexual compatibility does not matter to Christians when choosing a spouse makes the shocking and countercultural statement that sex is not our God. It indicates that we are willing to make a commitment to someone with whom we may be sexually incompatible, with whom we may never have good sex, because the purpose of marriage is not pleasure, but formation.
> Our discourse about sex, however, tends to tell another story, a story that elevates sex to an inordinate degree. The abstinence movement, relying primarily on anecdotes, promises the young unmarrieds that if they save sex for marriage, they will have what Claire and Eli call “reward sex.” In other words, sex will be everything they’ve dreamed it would be—electric, erotic, or, as Elisabeth Elliot, who helped initiate the movement with her book Passion and Purity, writes “unspeakably worth the wait.” Not only are these promises incorrect, but they imply that the purpose of abstinence is good sex, not obedience to God and the cultivation of virtue.

This discourse is not confined to the unmarried, however. Once couples say “I do,” for the rest of their lives, they are expected to have good sex and a lot of it. Christian publications are brimming with instructions on these two contradictory principles: sexual compatibility doesn’t matter when selecting a spouse, but after marriage, couples are treated as if having good sex is part-and-parcel of the call to be a Christian. If you aren’t having good sex, you are expected to go to your local Christian bookstore and choose from a variety of titles—ranging from the classic The Act of Marriage by Tim and Beverly LaHaye to the more recent Sheet Music by Dr. Kevin Leman.

In addition to misrepresenting the role of sex in a Christian’s life, this discourse also smacks of an inferiority complex that wants to compete with mainstream culture’s view of sex rather than modeling a rightly ordered sexual ethic to the world. For example, teachings on the Song of Solomon can range from using the book as a modern-day sex manual to a tool of manipulation to get women to acquiesce to inflated views of sex, such as a well-known pastor controversially enjoining women to perform oral sex because “Jesus Christ commands you to do so.” These sort of teachings on sex indicate the spurious claim many Christians accept: that the call to be a married Christian includes within it an obligation to become a sex god or goddess.

Although Christians have recently been more honest about the realities of sex, such as Jake and Melissa Kircher, who admit sex is not what it appears in the movies, a celebrity pastor’s recent appearance on The Viewdemonstrates that Christians still contend with Hollywood’s version of sex. Barbara Walters opens the segment with an alarming announcement: “It is a gospel you probably thought you would never hear from a man of the church: that the Lord wants married couples to have great sex, to have it often and even experiment in the bedroom.”

While this discourse elevates sex so that it becomes an idol, it also ignores a real problem Henriquez addresses and that is likely to surface in Christian marriages because of our insistence on abstinence. What if, contrary to Elliot’s experience, a couple’s wedding night doesn’t seem “worth the wait”?

The Kirchers have astutely suggested couples should expect to be sexually incompatible at first, but what should we say to couples who spend years, or even decades, trying to have good sex without success? How should we respond > if a woman, like Henriquez, who obediently saved herself for marriage, finds herself feeling betrayed by the very principle she thought would give her a life of good sex and a happy marriage?

> Although sex is indeed God's gift to us, Christians are not directly commanded by God to have great sex. Couples may find themselves incompatible in the bedroom, and they should not be bombarded with pressure from the Christian community to start having good sex and lots of it. Instead, they should find support and comfort—support that sex is not the only thing that makes a good marriage, and comfort that historically all Christians have been called by God to suffer through numerous trials.
> Christians are, and should be, hopeful people. After all, we believe in the resurrection of the dead, heaven and miracles. Some couples may find themselves miraculously gifted with good sex well after their vows, and books such as the LaHayes' and Leman's have helped a lot of people in this area. But in this world we will certainly have trouble. The world and all who dwell in it are imperfect. Sex, too, is bound up with the world's imperfection. Some couples may spend their whole lives struggling with their physical relationship, and it is deceptive to teach that all Christians will, or are somehow biblically required to, have good sex.
> Sexual incompatibility, therefore, is a cross that some couples bear, and Christian communities could lighten this burden if we made an effort to put sex in its rightful place. If sex were viewed as a gift that, like everything else in this world, is marred by sin, it may be easier for couples to accept that bad sex is neither a reason for divorce nor an excuse to stop investing in a marriage. As with other trials, bad sex is an opportunity to rejoice in suffering (1 Peter 4:13) and to be further conformed to the image of Christ (Romans 8:29).
> Ultimately, putting sex in its proper place will encourage us to order God's gifts in the same way that church tradition teaches the ordering of love. All things, including sex, must be loved to the degree that is proper to the thing in question, with nothing superseding the love of God.

16 paragraphs and no reference to 1 Corinthians 7. Just some vague references to 1 Peter 4 and Romans 8 taken out of context.

Of course, had the author actually read 1 Corinthians 7, she would have found out some common themes that I've discussed here before.

> 1 Corinthians 7:1 Now concerning the things about which you wrote, it is good for a man not to touch a woman. 2 But because of immoralities, each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband. 3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5

> Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 6 But this I say by way of concession, not of command. 7 [c]Yet I wish that all men were even as I myself am. However, each man has his own gift from God, one in this manner, and another in that.

Sex is not just for the 'self' but indeed the role and responsibility is to fulfill the other's need to sex so as not to deprive the other through temptation. Basically, one of the responsibilities of marriage is to fulfill the other spouse's need for sex, whether the husband or the wife wants sex more.

This can only be 'stopped' for short periods to pray MUTUALLY by both parties, and then sex is back on the table again. One spouse cannot say to 'stop' if they don't want to because the goal is not selfishness but to love the other person.

> 1 Corinthians 7:8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

Indeed, the only reason given in the NT to marry is to those who burn with passion.

One would think that those who burn with passion and get married would have "great sex," especially with lots of practice. If they're burning with passion, they're going to have lots of sex. Of course, it's not guaranteed there will be "great sex," but if the each spouse is focusing on the needs of the other, then it will definitely improve significantly over the course of time.

Then you have garbage like "sexual incompatibility" which is just a "lack of practice" and "lack of focusing on the other's needs" and/or "lack of attraction." In other words, selfishness.

Of course, all of this is nothing really new. The problem is that Christian organizations allow this type of stuff be run when they only take a synthesis of popular culture as a Biblical fact rather than what the actual Bible says. This is, by an large, a trend of cherry picking irrelevant verses to support a cultural facade and ignoring the verses that actually speak wisdom and Truth to the actual situation.

This is the first thing I look for when I read "Christian" articles and books to see if they actually conform to what the Bible states is the Truth. Not surprisingly, most don't pass the grade.

Successful marriage and good marriage

May 27, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jason's comment on one of Dalrock's recent posts is worth critically analyzing because it has a lot of assumptions packed into it about the definition of a "good marriage." There's a lot that is wrong with the current evangelical Christianity to be sure, and there is also a lot of cultural thinking.

> My parents were not practicing Christians. Culturally, yes. We were a 'Christmas and Easter' type of family. My parents were not 'hostile' to Christianity or the church in general. They were 'married' in a church. We never attended church except for those two holidays.
> They met in 1964, after eight months of dating, they got married in 1965 and had a very, very solid marriage. A loving, helpful, uplifting and working as a "team" marriage.
> So when Pastors and busy-body church-folk tell me that you have to have 'Jesus' in order to have a "good" marriage…….I sometimes wince and think "well, that's not really true"
> Plenty of Christians I have met have been married several times, been through messy divorces, or their marriage is a "yo go girl" wife and brow beaten husband……
> Remember too, even in the early days of the church……even the 'pagan' Romans, many had good marriages and they loved each other without "Jesus". For the most part, evangelical-protestant Christianity somehow made marriage "their" invention with zero proof and most of the sheeple in the church have just swallowed it and accepted this.

Generally speaking, one could say this is not an uncommon scenario for those who lived in the US in say 1700-1950s or so. The case where one needs to make a distinction is on a few points.

- God created man and marriage to reflect Himself.
- When you follow God's prescriptions such as with proper roles and responsibilities, you will generally have a "successful" marriage. For example, the husband is the head and loves his wife, and the wife submits and respects her husband. Such a marriage will rarely divorce and generally be happy, despite the faith or lack thereof of said participants.
- The pastors are indeed correct that you cannot have a "good" marriage without Jesus/God. To have a good marriage, you need to please God. Having correct roles and responsibilities in marriage may make a marriage have earthly success, but such a marriage does not please God.

The better term for what Jason is discussing above is “successful marriage” and mainly in terms of worldly success. If we define a successful marriage as one that does not divorce and is generally happy like most. A successful marriage it not necessarily a good marriage. A good marriage pleases God, and pleasing God requires faith.

> Mark 10:17 As He was setting out on a journey, a man ran up to Him and knelt before Him, and asked Him, “Good Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?” 18 And Jesus said to him, “Why do you call Me good? No one is good except God alone.
> Hebrews 11:1 Now faith is the [a]assurance of things [b]hoped for, the [c]conviction of things not seen. 2 For by it the men of old [d]gained approval. 3 By faith we understand that the [e]worlds were prepared by the word of God, so that what is seen was not made out of things which are visible. 4 By faith Abel offered to God a better sacrifice than Cain, through which he obtained the testimony that he was righteous, God testifying [f]about his gifts, and through [g]faith, though he is dead, he still speaks. 5 By faith Enoch was taken up so that he would not see death; and he was not found because God took him up; for he obtained the witness that before his being taken up he was pleasing to God. 6 And without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of those who seek Him.

Jason commits a few fallacies that are common.

One can have much worldly success following Biblical principles, but still not know God or please Him (like his parents). As we know, the only way to God is through the sacrifice of Jesus. Without the sacrifice of Jesus and God’s grace and mercy working through us, we can do nothing good. The worldly successful of a marriage doesn’t make it good.

This is true not just of marriage, but of other things such as financial success. The Scriptures espouse hard work, being diligent with the little things and the big things, being responsible, going above and beyond to please our superiors, generous, and giving. All of these things help to contribute to financial success. However, these things don’t make a man good.

Likewise, an example of an unsuccessful/sinful marriage between Christians does not prove that a marriage with Christians is not good. It only proves that Christians still sin. A successful marriage without God still leads to hell too.

A good marriage is made up of Christians, following God’s prescriptions of roles and responsibilities, so that it reflects the mystery of Jesus and the Church. For Christians, success in marriage is only secondary to aiming to please God first. And that makes all the difference.

Another divorce

June 17, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm finally back from a very busy period.

There's been another "high profile divorce" as Proverbs 31 ministries Lysa TerKeurst has apparently divorced her husband with numerous commentaries (the comments are always the most interesting part of course).

It's pretty short so I'll quote the whole thing:

> No person's rejection of me can ever exempt me from God's love for me.
>
> "A Gut-Honest Look at Love." That was the title of my first blog post of this year. Based on 1 Corinthians 13, I wrote, "Love isn't what I have the opportunity to get from this world, love is what I have the opportunity to give."
> This perspective on love has been a lifeline during the most painful season and decision of my adult life. I so wish we were sitting face-to-face so you could see my tears and hear the deep grief in my voice as I share this with you. My husband, life partner and father of my children, Art TerKeurst, has been repeatedly unfaithful to me with a woman he met online, bringing an end to our marriage of almost 25 years. For the past couple of years, his life has sadly been defined by his affection for this other woman and substance abuse. I don't share this to harm or embarrass him, but to help explain why I have decided to separate from him and pursue a divorce. God has now revealed to me that I have done all I can do and I must release him to the Savior.
> Anyone who knows me and Proverbs 31 Ministries knows how seriously I take marriage. I've always encouraged women to fight for their marriages and to do everything possible to save them when they come under threat. So, for the past couple of years I have been in the hardest battle of my life trying to save my marriage.
> When I first found out about Art's infidelity 18 months ago, I made the decision not to divorce him. I had just finished fasting and praying for 28 days and really felt led by the Lord that I was to love Art in my reaction to this shocking news and trust God for every step moving forward. I was still committed to doing everything I could think of to make our story one of restoration, even in the face of the worst kind of betrayal imaginable. I prayed continually. I sought counsel from family and other wise friends. And Art and I even made repeated trips across the country together for intensive counseling especially designed for marriages in crisis. But sadly, though I have repeatedly forgiven and accepted him back, he has continued to abuse substances, be unfaithful, and refused to be truthful to me and our family.
> I believe I have the capacity to love Art and to forgive him, but his steadfast refusal to end the infidelity has led me to make the hardest decision of my life.

> After much prayer and consultation with wise, biblically-minded people, I have decided that Art has abandoned our marriage. Yet, the Lord has been so faithful to help me at every step of this very painful journey and has now assured me I've done all I can do.
> I am brokenhearted beyond what I can express. But I am more committed than ever to trusting God, His promises, and His plans, whatever they are from here.
> As many of you who have followed our ministry know, I've never shied away from sharing how God has gotten me through tough seasons and even grown me through my struggles. Thankfully, my story has been one of learning that I'm not defined by my circumstances. I'm Lysa, a beloved child of the one true God. My true identity doesn't shift or fall apart under life's strains, failures, my own imperfections, setbacks or heartaches. While people—even God's people—change, I'm so glad I serve a God who doesn't. I love this verse in Malachi 3:6—"I the Lord do not change; therefore you, children of Jacob, are not consumed."
> So what does all of this mean for Proverbs 31 Ministries and for me? Well, for over 20 years I've had a calling supported by my family for equipping women to deepen their relationship with God, study His Word, and to share their stories for God's glory. Though my heart is so heavy that I've certainly pondered giving up, I'm determined not to let darkness win here. Therefore, after a season of rest and continued Biblical and professional counseling, I will continue to do ministry with an even deeper belief in the goodness of our God and a greater empathy for the deep heartbreak that happens to us all in this broken world.
> Many people think Proverbs 31 is a picture of a perfect woman; but the Proverbs 31 woman is, at her core, someone who seeks the Lord in everything she does and trusts Him wholeheartedly with her life. Our mission is to meet women where they are in the real, hard places we all experience, and to intersect God's Word right there. We are simply a group of women sold out to saying yes to God—and He truly does the rest.
> "I would have lost heart, unless I had believed that I would see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." That's what the Psalmist wrote long ago (Psalm 27:13) and it beautifully reflects what I'm holding on to in the midst of the deep grief my children and I are now walking through. We have some amazing counselors and pastoral leaders who are committed to helping us pursue healing and learn how to move forward.
> What can you do for us? I'd simply ask you to pray. Pray for my precious children and grandchildren. Pray for me. Pray for our team at Proverbs 31. And yes, please, please pray for Art.
> I love you all. Most of all, I love the Lord, who first loved me.

This situation is a less clear cut case than an example such as Jenny Ericksen who frivorced her husband. There's also numerous angles to this, so I'm going to try to hash them all out point by point.

First, I'm always perturbed that when people encounter these types of situations they almost never quote directly from the Scriptures that are relevant to their particular situation. Lysa's post quotes from Psalms 27, 1 Corinthians 11, and Malachi 3, but doesn't quote from actual verses that may apply to the situation such as Matthew 18, Matthew 19/Mark 10/Luke 16, 1 Corinthians 7, and 1 Peter 3.

Quotations from this passage may illuminate how the person actually feels and thinks about the situation rather than just giving their platitudes about hope and moving on.

Second, Lysa alleges that Art is clearly in the wrong here but there are a lack of clarify details about Lysa's involvement in the matter. For example, did Lysa deny Art sex throughout the marriage and/or been too focused on her "career/ministry", which tempted him to go outside of the marriage?

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

While Art is at fault for his own decisions for adultery and substance abuse, Lysa may not be without fault.

I've seen this termed as "victim blaming," but it is clear from 1 Corinthians 7 that her behavior may/could have tempted him on the wrong path. This is not victim blaming, but acknowledging that both parties may be accountable for their role in the present situation.

Third, much has been written on the topic of divorce. In general, I think 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Peter 3 apply best to this particular situation:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord, that the wife should not [d]leave her husband 11 (but if she does leave, she must remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband), and that the husband should not [e]divorce his wife.
> 12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]divorce her. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O > husband, whether you will save your wife?

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Via 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 Lysa should not have pursued a "divorce" but instead "separation." However, if she is still open to reconciliation that is the ideal, but she is to remain single if she does not reconcile.

It is clear by both Matthew 18 and 1 Corinthians 5 that those who are not obedient to the teachings of the Church should be treated as unbelievers. Therefore, via 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 and 1 Peter 3:1-6 the "best" option would have been for Lysa to remain with her husband as long as he does not want a divorce and to allow the Lord to work through her righteous behavior to potentially win her husband back to God.

I personally do not fault her for choosing a divorce/separation option, but she also did not make it clear from her post that she was still open to reconciliation and will not remarry. Again, this is the part where clarifying your actions along with Scripture would have been important which would leave less open to negative interpretation.

Fourth, I find it dubious that she is going to take a season for a time, and then prepare to re-enter the ministry with Proverbs 31.

This is not simply because she is a woman leading a Christian ministry. Even if women were permitted in leadership positions in ministry, 1 Timothy 3 clearly speaks that elders and deacons must run their households well. Although she may have done all that she could in order to have a godly marriage, things out the control of a leader can disqualify them from ministry. Being above reproach is a harsh requirement, but it is necessary.

Any Church leader who divorces should also step down from ministry, even if none of it was their fault. Likewise, so too Lysa should step down as well, even if none of it was her fault.

A more compelling story of the power of God to show mercy and compassion would be for her to step down and focus her efforts on reconciliation in her marriage and not her ministry.

In conclusion, numerous points of her story are lacking in clarifying details. It is possible that she could be fully faultless, but she could also have sinned gravely against him as well.

Based on the Scriptures, separation is a viable route and divorce is not — 1 Corinthians 7: if she remains single else she reconciles. Albeit we should encourage her to choose the high road which was to stay with him and use the Lord to work through her to win him to Christ.

Finally, she should not continue her ministry for multiple reasons, and focus her efforts on reconciling with her husband. Props to her for having the willingness and attitude to reconcile with her husband for a couple years after she learned of his sin against her. As Christians, we'd like to see that attitude continue.

For the "non-judgmental" crowd:

Christians are called to judge other Christians according to the standards of the Scripture, and call them back on the right path (Matthew 7 and 18, John 7, 1 Cor 5).

At the very least, given the divorce Lysa should definitely NOT be continuing ministry according to the qualifications given in 1 Tim 3. Throwing away reconciliation to her husband to continue ministry is the exact opposite of what she should have done according the Scripture.

Update 1/2018: Credit where credit is due. Lysa is still trying to reconcile so far in accordance with the Scripture. Continuing in the ministry is still questionable.

Update 7/2018: It appears Lysa has reconciled. Props to her for following 1 Corinthians 7 to stay single or reconcile.

How do I know if we should get married analysis

June 22, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

How do I know if we should get married is a post from Boundless a couple weeks ago. I've been meaning to get to it, especially since I'm getting married soon.

The article is pretty short, so I'm gonna quote the whole thing.

> I could see the worry on my friend's face. He had been dating his girlfriend for six months and didn't know if he should start planning a proposal or a breakup. It was a ripe time to choose.
> I know others who have faced similar situations, so I asked my married friends on Facebook how they knew they should marry their spouse. Here are their answers.
> Friendship. The most common answer I heard from couples was that they married a friend — someone they enjoyed spending time with and with whom communication came easily. A few even ended up dating and marrying someone who started off as just a good friend.
> Of her relationship with her husband, Bethany says, "I felt like it was easy to be myself. Like really me." David describes something similar: "When I met my wife, there were times I thought, 'Oh, wow! I've been waiting for this and feel so free to be me now!' Marla says when she met her husband, "I felt like I had met my new best friend, but also like I had known him all my life."
> A strong friendship can be a good indicator of marital success.
> Compatible goals. In a partnership like marriage, it's important to be able to pursue dreams and callings together. In Genesis 2:18-22, God gives Adam a wife as a "helper fit for him." The first man and woman helped each other work toward God's purpose for them in the garden.
> Of her relationship with her husband, Glory says, "We felt like we could grow together, and we felt like we could be partners and supporters, in chasing after our dreams." Summer says, "We talked A LOT about goals … what we wanted out of life, finances, kids … and what we envisioned about the future."
> Having compatible goals doesn't mean you won't have to adjust after marriage. Julie explains, "I've found that having the same goals and ideals and being willing to change with each other instead of separately has been key." And sanctification is a primary goal Christians should share. Teri says, "Marry someone who makes you better than you are, someone who challenges you to be like Christ. A good marriage is not about finding the right person. It's about being the right person."
> As we change and grow over time, a marriage focused on God can sustain the relationship through trials and hard times.
> What you're looking for. A really good catch may not make a really good match. It's good to know what you are looking for in a relationship. David points > out that discerning the right person to marry “requires knowing and discerning yourself.”

> Making a list of what you want in a spouse can help you see how someone measures up when other signs aren’t as conclusive. Bethany said she made a list of her non-negotiables early on and checked her suitors against it. When her husband came along, he embodied many things on her list, giving her assurance that he was a good fit.
> While it’s wise to know what you’re looking for, be prepared to have your assumptions challenged. Casey, who considers herself to be very independent, said she felt like she didn’t need marriage. But when she saw how kind her now-husband was, she realized what she needed. She hadn’t been kind to herself in years. She needed someone who would be an example of God’s kindness to her.
> Character under pressure. We are all flawed. Julie says some advice from her grandma was a game-changer for her: “They will all drive you crazy!” she said. “You just have to pick the person who annoys you the least.” Realizing that no one is perfect (and your future spouse will annoy you at times), choose someone whose good character shines under pressure.
> As you face adversity or conflict together, note how your boyfriend or girlfriend responds. Bethany says that in her marriage, “we love well and fight well. We respect each other even when we are mad.” That respect can be seen before you ever tie the knot.
> Michael suggests marrying someone you know will have your back. Life will get hard, circumstances will change, but knowing that person will be on your side is important. Summer remembers how her boyfriend-now-husband took off work to support her at hospital visits after she received a cancer diagnosis. How the person serves you when you’re down can be a good indicator of the type of spouse he or she would be.
> The Secret to a Lasting Marriage
> A few nights ago, I was at a woman’s 50th birthday party. I talked to a couple, probably both around 60, that were flirting and laughing and stealing kisses from each other. I was afraid to even ask, because I so rarely see long-term marriages like that, but I finally did. “How long have you been together?”
> “Thirty-seven years,” they replied. I asked what their secret was. The wife leaned way close to me and almost whispered, “I know this will sound corny, but the key is having God at the center of the relationship.”
> I can’t give my friend a definitive answer about whether or not he should marry his girlfriend. Each of us has to choose for ourselves. But considering if your significant other fits the four criteria above is a good place to start.

The points that people come up with are:

- Friendship
- Compatible goals
- What you're looking for
- Character under pressure
- Having God at the center

These seem pretty common. I think that if you poll random Christians from any random Church you'll come up with a similar list. There's will probably also be the awkward chuckling man or woman that says "compromise" is also a key to marriage. The only Scripture thrown out from Christians about marriage in this is Genesis 2.

Sadly, that's the case of what the Church has become. It's been vague allusions to spirituality without any substance. And you wonder why the Church has upwards of 40-50% divorce rate like the world. No one wants to stand on what God says about marriage.

Then you have articles like what women need from men from Tim Willard. Never really heard of the man before today, but based on what I know of sales on Amazon he's selling dozens of books a day. His emphasis in bold.

> ## Offering Our Strength
> At the heart of offering our strength is the concept of serving. Christ himself "came to serve, not be served—and then to give away his life in exchange for the many who are held hostage." Later on in the New Testament Paul reminds men:
> "The husband provides leadership to his wife the way Christ does to his church, not by domineering but by cherishing.
> "Husbands, go all out in your love for your wives, exactly as Christ did for the church—a love marked by giving, not getting. Christ's love makes the church whole. His words evoke her beauty. Everything he does and says is designed to bring the best out of her, dressing her in dazzling white silk, radiant with holiness." (Eph. 5:22-28)
> But it's one thing to say we should offer our strength to women, quite another to live that out. So, what does it mean to offer our strength to our wives or girlfriends?
> Offering our strength can mean cleaning the kitchen, doing the floors, and making the bed without being asked. It can mean hanging that painting, again, and again, and again. In short, we can and should serve our wives and girlfriends with our physical strength.
> Offering our strength can mean protecting her heart: from other women, during times of pain, by encouraging her in her unique endeavors (like blogging, gardening, tri-athloning, cooking, yoga, whatever). We serve our wives and girlfriends by offering our *emotional strength.
> Offering our strength can mean initiating times of prayer, times of fasting, family > devotions, caroling around the Christmas tree, or being the one who sets the tone before Sunday worship by being, yourself, ready in your heart for worship, firing up the waffle-maker, making the coffee, creating a bit of heaven in your house to foster the beauty of the Sabbath. We serve our wives and girlfriends by offering our *spiritual strength.

> Too often, however, we attempt to gain strength from our wives and girlfriends by trying to prove something. And that "proving" can often manifest itself in the form of dominance. Leading in a marriage or dating relationship does not equal waving your "I'm a man" Thor-hammer. Rather, it begins with relational fullness with God.
> If we, as men, have drifted from God, then our marriages and dating relationships will reflect it. We will struggle with the lies that accompany the false self: perversions of sex, power, dominance, nonchalance—everything the popular culture equates to manliness.

To his credit, he has somewhat of the right mindset, but is still falling back into the trap of "servant leadership." This is a mash up of roles and responsibilities that leave men more confused than when they started.

To review:

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

Roles:

- Husband is the head
- Wife follows, as the body

Responsibilities:

- Husband loves through sanctification, loves his wife as himself x3, and nourishes and cherishes
- Wife submits and respects in everything, as to the Lord

Split division of responsibilities is important because it defines how the relationship normally functions effectively and in line with godly principles. If a spouse wants to go above and beyond — which is certainly a good thing in some cases — then they have the choice to do so. For example, a husband does not have to help out with the [wifely] chores of the household to lend 'physical strength' especially if he is already taking care of [manly] chores of the household like yard work, maintenance, trash, and so on.

Telling a husband he needs to pick up additional work that is tasked to the wife to "serve" her is nothing but slavery and certainly not sanctification. Indeed, masculine immaturity is placing responsibility before roles, but it is also taking up responsibilities that are not yours to handle. This is one thing Tim is confusing, and is part of the false narrative of servant leadership.

Dominance is what women want from their men. They want them to be masculine. A man who knows who he is and knows what he wants in a relationship. Women hate men who are wishy washy and put them on a pedestal. Both Christian and non-Christian women want their man to be dominant and assertive. It's not necessarily about the actions themselves, but how the actions stem from the identity of the man in question.

The role of the head in marriage is imbued with authority from God. Men don't need permission to wield their authority to love, to sanctify through directing her on the path of righteousness, and to treat her as he treats himself. But a man must first know his role and his value in Christ. As he holds himself to the high standard that God has placed in him, he blesses her through loving her as he does himself.

> 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies (x1). He who loves his own wife loves himself ; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body (x2). 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself (x3), and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

The Scriptures clearly does not say to place her (the wife) before himself (the husband) because that would be idolatry. This is different from other parts of Scripture where Christians are to hold other [Christians] in higher esteem than themselves. The covenant of marriage is different from the way general Christians related to each other because the roles and responsibilities of each are different. This is the nature of a hierarchical relationship such as marriage as opposed to being a member of the body of Christ relating to one another.

This is the true difference between the false servant leadership peddled by much of Christianity today versus what the Scriptures teach.

- False — the husband "serves" the wife as the head in marriage, especially taking over and helping her with many of her responsibilities. In this case, the husband becomes the wife's helpmate.
- True — the husband is the head and holds himself to the standard of Christ. The example he sets and tasks he entrusts his wife as his helpmate help her become more like Christ.

Is it any wonder why husbands who are counseled under "servant leadership" are increasingly divorced? The Church for decades has conned them into inverting the sex roles under the guise of serving as the authority in marriage.

Instead, what the should be teaching is that it is up to the husband to set the standard in marriage — the high standard of Christ. He may even end up helping the wife if she needs assistance in her tasks as helpmate, but it actually under the mantle of cherishing and nourishing her as opposed to the slavery of servant leadership: responsibility with no authority.

Therefore, going back to the first part of this article, how should a man or woman know if she should get married? The answer is simple.

A man should get married if you find a wife who is willing to walk in the roles and responsibilities of a wife as outlined in Scripture.

- Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything. […] 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.
- Col 3:18 Wives, be subject to your husbands, as is fitting in the Lord.
- Titus 2:4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.
- 1 Pet 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

- 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.
- Proverbs 21:19 Better to live in a desert than with a quarrelsome and nagging wife
- Proverbs 27:15-16 A continual dripping on a rainy day and a contentious wife are alike. Trying to keep her in check is like stopping a wind storm or grabbing oil with your right hand.
- Proverbs 25:24 It is better to live in a corner of the housetop than in a house shared with a quarrelsome wife.
- Proverbs 12:4 A wife with strength of character is the crown of her husband, but the wife who disgraces him is like bone cancer.
- Proverbs 11:22 A beautiful woman who lacks discretion is like a gold ring in a pig's snout.
- Proverbs 14:1 A wise woman builds her home, but a foolish woman tears it down with her own hands.
- And of course Proverbs 31 which is too long to quote and so on.

And of course a woman should only marry a man if she finds a husband that is willing to walk in the roles and responsibilities of marriage.

I'm not going to list them all out, as this is a men's blog, but they are in similar passages as the above verses.

Following God's plan for marriage is the one way to know if you are ready for marriage. This is the firm foundation on which a marriage is on the Rock of Jesus.

Things like the fruit of the Spirit are obviously other key components of the Christian walk that assist in carrying out these roles and responsibilities. However, if you want to have a blessed marriage you need to focus on God's Truths. No ifs, ands, or buts.

Complementarians make husbands into neutered dogs

June 22, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Lost Patrol commented on Tim Willard's 'lending strength' segment which is the thrust of 'servant leadership' in my previous post.

> This a good post, with a valid prescription that will be very hard for most people to fill these days.
> The feminine primary social order is so ingrained in daily life that its terminology flows with ease.
> - In a partnership like marriage, it's important to be able to pursue dreams and callings together.
> - we could be partners and supporters, in chasing after our dreams
> - being willing to change with each other
> - She hadn't been kind to herself in years. She needed someone who would be an example of God's kindness to her.
> It goes on in this vein. All this is femme-speak. It's as though only women answered for the couples referenced. 50/50 partners in dreams and callings, et al.
> Tim Willard describes nothing more than the human version of a good dog, always standing by to respond to the pack leader. He adds the usual disclaimer that if anything is wrong in a marriage it is because the man has drifted from God. It's all become very predictable.

I was thinking about this last night before he made the comment, and the analogy I thought of was this:

A neutered dog.

Responsibility without authority is slavery, although it doesn't seem to actually fit the situation exactly.

The head — the husband — stripped of his authority is neutered. Additionally, he's just tagging along with her doing what she wants. Helping her out on her whim. He's just her dog.

Complementarians make husbands into neutered dogs.

It's no wonder that complementarian marriages are imploding. What wife would want to be married to a neutered dog?

Don’t put her needs above yours

June 23, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock’s latest post on man up and share your feelings quotes from the post her needs above yours. I want to focus on the title of the post, as that’s where it all starts and goes off the bandwagon. It is false, according to the Scripture.

The model from the Law was:

> Mark 12:30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.’ 31 The second is this, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ There is no other commandment greater than these.”

The new commandment that Jesus gave was:

> John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another.”
> John 15:12 “This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you.

Christians are exhorted to “love one another as [Jesus] has loved us […] By this all men will know your are my [Jesus’] disciples.” The requirement, of course, is that we are disciples of Jesus. Those who are disciples of Jesus are, by nature, endeavoring to hold themselves to the commands and teachings of Jesus. Hence, disciples of Jesus are becoming more like Jesus, so they can love others like Jesus did, so that all men will know we are disciples of Jesus.

As I outlined previously in how do I know if we should get married analysis and numerous times before, the Scriptures actually state that a husband is to love his wife as his own body. They do not say to put the wife’s needs above yours. This is stated not just once, not just twice, but three different times in Ephesians 5.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.
> 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies (x1).He who loves his own wife loves himself ; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body (x2). 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, > and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself (x3), and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

It is in this respect that Paul's exhortation from Ephesians is given. Paul expands upon Jesus' teaching with the analogy of the Christ:Church::Husbands:Wives. A husband must first hold himself to the standard of Christ, then treat her as he is treating himself.

A husband putting his wife's needs above his own needs is putting her on a pedestal making her an idol.

The reason for this is quite simple and logical. How can you care for another person well if you are not in a place to which to care for others effectively? A husband who cares for himself well has a high standard with which to care for his wife. A husband who neglects his own needs has no standard to treat her well because he is coming from a place of neglect.

A person who does not take care of their own needs but is focused on the needs of another is codependent. Ever see someone run themselves ragged over prioritizing someone else without taking care of themselves? Yeah, me too. It's pretty ugly and never ends well.

Yet that's what so many pastors, preachers, and other Christians keep telling husbands — to prioritize their wife over themselves. That is NOT what the Scripture says.

Marriage advice: free for all

June 26, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I am getting married soon, hit me up with your top pieces of marriage advice. Both men and women are both welcome to comment.

It does not necessarily need to be from the Scriptures, as those have been extensively studied on this blog. Other prudence and wisdom is useful too. However, if you want to quote the Scriptures with specific advice that is good as well.

Hopefully, those who are single can find such advice useful in either understanding the opposite sex and/or preparing for marriage themselves.

Attitudes and marriage

June 29, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Lots of good responses and warnings in the marriage advice thread. Anyone getting married in this day and age needs to look at marriage in the context of God versus the culture/state.

The attitude of a person going into marriage will make or break it. If they think it's a terrible idea, then it is a terrible idea because it will eventually manifest poorly.

A husband that is afraid that he may have everything taken away from him will not act rationally in his best interests in terms of the Biblical roles and responsibilities. What I mean by this is if a husband is in fear that his wife will divorce him, he will not be able to love her through sanctification. He will not be able to call her out and correct her when she is off course. He won't be able to lead the marriage effectively due to being afraid of the potential consequences of her unhappiness. He won't be able to stand firm during her moodiness and eventually capitulate. He'll have a difficult time pushing back against a culture and and the churchians who suggest that "love" is "making his wife happy."

This is not to say that those going into it with good attitudes will have godly and successful marriages. That certainly is not the case in every circumstance. Everyone has free will and even many people who were following or disciples of Jesus rejected him when the going got rough (e.g. John 6). However, it is true that it is likely that a bad attitude with corresponding responses will eventually lead to marital ruin.

In this context, we can say that a husband who does not fear his wife but only fears God stands a much better chance at having not only a godly marriage but a successful marriage as well.

Each man must count his own cost, and also evaluate whether he has the capacity to stand strong on the Biblical roles and responsibilities of marriage. He must also evaluate whether the woman he has chosen has the qualities and attributes necessary to do the same. He should read the Scripture about the nature of women, pray, fast, and consult wise counsel.

If any man has any any reservations or wavering convictions, it would be unwise to marry.

I do not have them. Therefore, I will get married.

Wedding photography?

July 6, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A friend sent me a link. It's pretty short, so I'll quote the whole thing.

> There's boudoir photography, and then there's… this. A reader spotted this strange "wedding photographer needed" ad posted on Craigslist by someone in Wisconsin. Apparently there's an engaged couple looking for a wedding photographer who's willing to double as a consummation photographer.
> "Hello, my fiance and I are getting married later this year and are looking for a wedding photographer," the poster writes. "We are hoping someone will document the whole day from beginning to end."
>
> Seems pretty normal so far, right? Except by "whole day," the couple means an actual day, rather than the wedding preparation, ceremony, and reception.
> "We are specifically hoping someone will document the end, which we are finding difficult to find someone who will," the ad continues. "We have both saved ourselves for marriage and understand our first time will be awkward but do not think it will be that much more awkward for the photographer to be there and we'd really like it documented (in a beautiful and tasteful way)."
> "If you are ok with being with us the whole day, please send pricing and some examples of your work. Thank you."
> So if you've been yearning to add "consummation photographer" to your resume and list of accomplishments, keep your eyes peeled — that genre may be following on the heels of "pro birth photography."

And no, we won't be having a wedding photographer that does that.

Wife wears what husband wants

July 14, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since Dalrock ended up getting to the crazy mother who believes her sons are unsafe because they're men first, I'll go a different direction.

I've written before about what women can do to be more attractive to men. Indeed, it seems that women don't really understand why that much.

This article pretty much encapsulates how a husband wants his wife to look much of the time.

> ## I Let My Husband Pick My Outfits For a Week
> If you ask your husband to look in the closet and pick your outfit, what do you think he will choose? A long red dress? A pair of jeans, sneakers, and a T-shirt? Or maybe a bikini?
> Bright Side invites you to look at the results of an interesting experiment where Colin had to create looks for his wife, Caitlyn, for a whole week.
> Like many women, I have a large wardrobe stuffed with things, and some of them I've never even worn. Nevertheless, quite often I thought I had nothing to wear. Then I decided to experiment and asked my husband to pick my outfits for a week.

> His choices really surprised me.

Copy pasting pictures is really annoying, check it out if you want to see the outfits. However, I'll summarize:

- 6/7 days were dresses and skirts
- 6/7 days were form fitting dresses and skirts that emphasized her hips and waist
- The one exception was a comfortable jean jumpsuit
- The dresses/skirts were modest for out in public, much more revealing when it was just him and her.
- The days out in public were bright, feminine, and stylish, and the ones in private were more sexy.
- He mainly pulled out old(er) outfits in her closet that she hadn't worn in some time but the ones he thought would look good on her (which they do).

The same is true the opposite way. Wives usually like to dress up their husbands to wear more form fitting and stylish clothes to look more attractive.

Anyway, the point being is that if a woman wants to attract a man she must cater to what men think is attractive. Surprise. Wear more waist and hip form-fitting, bright, feminine and stylish dresses and skirts.

Feminism creates “unsafe men,” then complains about it

July 21, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

OK, I couldn’t resist. Going back to Dalrock’s piece on the mom who thinks that her boys are unsafe. Let’s talk about men who are actually unsafe. First, we need to define terms.

By “unsafe men” I mean actual “perpetrators of violent crimes.” I don’t mean “feel unsafe” which feminism and other liberal policies suggest perpetration by “men” and/or “the patriarchy” as microaggressions, making someone feel bad, and supposed but false systemic bias against women in society.

From Heritage.org on fatherlessness:

> A review of the empirical evidence in the professional literature of the social sciences gives policymakers an insight into the root causes of crime. Consider, for instance:
> - Over the past thirty years, the rise in violent crime parallels the rise in families abandoned by fathers.
> - High-crime neighborhoods are characterized by high concentrations of families abandoned by fathers.
> - State-by-state analysis by Heritage scholars indicates that a 10 percent increase in the percentage of children living in single-parent homes leads typically to a 17 percent increase in juvenile crime.
> - The rate of violent teenage crime corresponds with the number of families abandoned by fathers.
> - The type of aggression and hostility demonstrated by a future criminal often is foreshadowed in unusual aggressiveness as early as age five or six.
> - The future criminal tends to be an individual rejected by other children as early as the first grade who goes on to form his own group of friends, often the future delinquent gang.
> On the other hand:
> - Neighborhoods with a high degree of religious practice are not high-crime neighborhoods.
> - Even in high-crime inner-city neighborhoods, well over 90 percent of children from safe, stable homes do not become delinquents. By contrast only 10 percent of children from unsafe, unstable homes in these neighborhoods avoid crime.
> - Criminals capable of sustaining marriage gradually move away from a life of crime after they get married.
> - The mother’s strong affectionate attachment to her child is the child’s best > buffer against a life of crime.

> - The father's authority and involvement in raising his children are also a great buffer against a life of crime.
> The scholarly evidence, in short, suggests that at the heart of the explosion of crime in America is the loss of the capacity of fathers and mothers to be responsible in caring for the children they bring into the world. This loss of love and guidance at the intimate levels of marriage and family has broad social consequences for children and for the wider community. The empirical evidence shows that too many young men and women from broken families tend to have a much weaker sense of connection with their neighborhood and are prone to exploit its members to satisfy their unmet needs or desires. This contributes to a loss of a sense of community and to the disintegration of neighborhoods into social chaos and violent crime. If policymakers are to deal with the root causes of crime, therefore, they must deal with the rapid rise of illegitimacy.

Even Heritage has some bias in their wording. Homes "abandoned" by fathers is a misnomer.

- Wives initiate the majority of divorces (65-70%).
- The out of wedlock birth rate has soared to as much as 70% for black women, 65% Native American, 55% Latino, 30% White, and close to 20% Asian for a national average of around 40%.

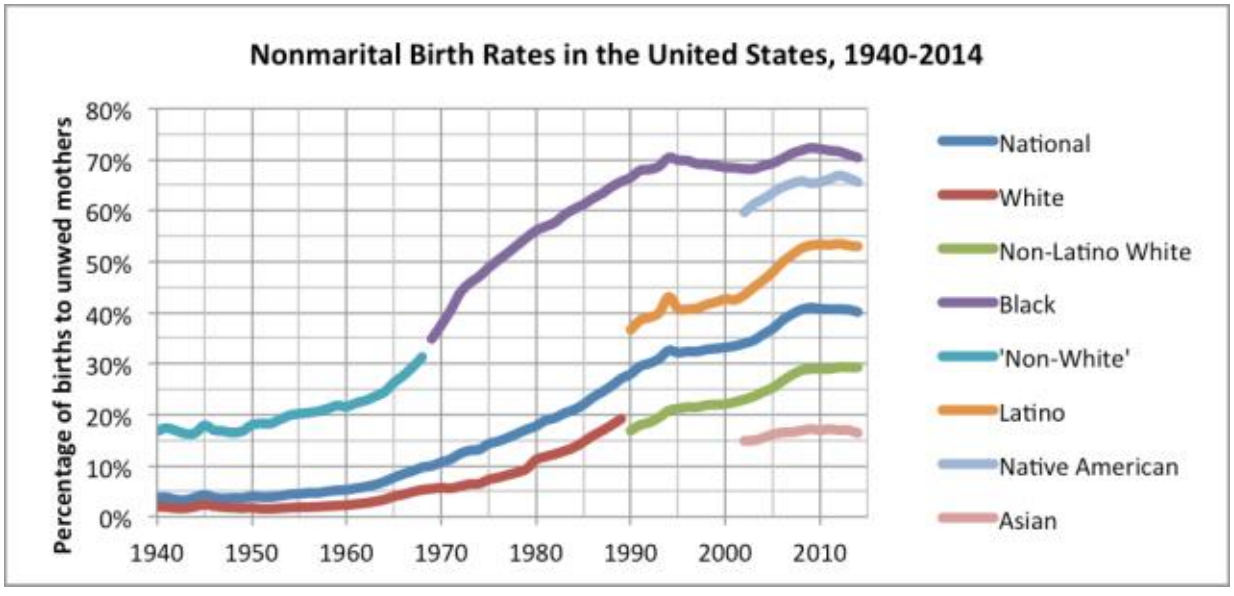

Image from wikipedia.

The total amount of fatherless homes caused by the policies of feminism aiming to destroy marriage by increasing out of wedlock birth rates and no fault divorce is high. How high?

Accounting for the national average of 40% out of wedlock births plus 50% of marriages ending in divorce which are 70% initiated by women we get:

40% out of wedlock + (60% wedlock * 50% divorce rate * 70% initiated divorces) = .4 +

(.6 * .5 * .7) = .4 + .21 = .61 fatherlessness.

Thus, approximately (since not every divorced home has kids but out of wedlock births all count as fatherlessness):

- 30% of marriages have husbands and fathers
- 61% of marriages end in divorce and/or fatherlessness, which is caused by feminists and feminism policies
- 9% of homes the divorced and/or fatherlessness is caused by the dad (e.g. so-called deadbeat husbands/dads)

Let's re-quote one of the most important statistics from the Heritage statement to re-emphasize the importance of fathers:

> Even in high-crime inner-city neighborhoods, well over 90 percent of children from safe, stable homes do not become delinquents. By contrast only 10 percent of children from unsafe, unstable homes in these neighborhoods avoid crime.

We also know that homes with children from a previous relationship because of a "mother's boyfriend" or mother's new husband" are prone to be some of the most violent including domestic and child abuse.

Basically, the stability of the biological father in a marriage almost literally prevents crime and delinquency of the children in that home.

This is the legacy of feminism — the "freedom" of women. Creating the problem it complains about.

Feminism creates "unsafe men," then complains about it.

When you make a decision, know your responsibilities

July 26, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think one of the interesting scenarios that may come up fairly often in marriage is one of the situations that I recently experienced. Not the first time I experienced it, but it is particularly common especially when a husband and wife want to do things differently.

Here's the scenario, to which you can also think of many different types of scenarios like this.

- There's something to carry somewhere. The car is parked in the parking lot.
- I want to pull the car around to get it. The wife wants to carry it to the car.
- I start walking without carrying anything saying I'll pull the car around. The wife in a huff picks up the thing to carry to the car.
- On the way to the car and/or in the car, the wife gets mad because the husband generally is supposed to carry the heavy objects.

This is where you have to understand making a decision and standing on it. I made the decision to bring the car around. If the wife doesn't want to abide by it, she can, of course, carry said objects herself. However, her complaining about it doesn't make it right. Her hassling me about carrying it does not force me to carry it either. She is the one who voluntarily wanted to go against my decision; therefore, she bears the consequences of said decision.

A husband should not offer to help his wife in that circumstance where she is not abiding by his decision.

The story ends with me telling my wife that I made the decision to pull the car around. If she wanted to carry it instead of wait for the car, that's her responsibility and not mine because I already made the decision. I'm not going to go back on what I said and cave to carry it to the car because she didn't want to abide by my decision.

Fortunately, my wife is less on the crazy side 2-3/10 and was able to see the logical merits of my decision. And yes, she reads this blog and we've talked about where she is on the crazy scale before. This among other things was why I made the decision to marry her.

For the husbands that haven't been firm on this type of decision making from the start, it is a much, much harder to make a decision like that and stand on it without a wife going crazy about it. However, you have to start somewhere. This is where I diverge from a lot of the so-called secular manosphere thinking that women are like children.

If you don't treat your wife like an adult who bears responsibility for her decisions, she's going to keep acting like a child.

Are Christian guys not taking dating seriously Commentary

> Young Christian men, we have a problem.
> It's a problem that will require all of our courage, confidence and creativity to solve. It's a problem that affects many of our brothers in Christ—it might even be affecting you. Finally, it's a problem that's disappointing many of the young Christian women in our lives.
> We aren't dating them.
> This never used to be a problem, gents. My father has many memories of giving the cute girl from youth group a ride home on the handlebars of his bicycle, while my grandfather had something of a reputation for dancing with all the eligible young ladies at Christian fundraisers.
> But somewhere among books like I Kissed Dating Goodbye, a lack of relationship role models and trying to navigate the minefield that is modern dating, something changed for our generation. A number of problematic attitudes crept into Christian culture.
> So, young Christian men, why aren't we dating?
> […]
> 1. WE'RE FREAKED OUT ABOUT FINDING OUR SOULMATE.
> 2. WE TAKE DATING TOO SERIOUSLY.
> 3. WE'VE GOT THE WRONG STANDARDS.
> 4. WE FEEL LIKE WE CAN'T DATE OUR FRIENDS.
> 5. WE'RE STILL DISCERNING.

This post has clearly resonated with a lot of people seeing as how often it has been reposted and seeing it on facebook. However, it still doesn't mention any of the 3 big elephants in the room that I've talked about before.

- Lack of attraction
- Feminization of the Church
- Lack of mentors and discipleship

Everyone knows there is something wrong, but they can't seem to figure out what it is. This list is more just a superficial poking around of the problem.

Fortunately, a 'Jimmy Lipton' in the comments was kind enough to enlighten everyone what was actually happening:

> Christian women(white ones mostly) have become very useless, because they have this super perfect version of a man that makes them feel good all the time, never saying the wrong thing. Then they pick some worldly asshole, while they reject the real Godly humble men. These women(girls) play games in church all the time and reject guys constantly, then they hit on the same very few douche bag dudes in church and compete for the say top 10% and wonder why they all feel insecure and cant get a “real man”. They end up settling down for some gay ass hipster boy or Justin Bieber or man-bun douche.

And a ‘Jon Crass’ pointed out what actually happens inside of a Church:

> Here’s the 100% HONEST truth from a man’s perspective. You won’t hear this anywhere else. Let’s say a man is part of a church community containing several single women around his age. Chances are pretty good that all of these women know each other and fellowship on a regular basis. Chances are also pretty high that they share stories and gossip with each other. That being said, the man is likely going to be physically attracted to more than one woman in this group at once. But he will be interested in one woman more than the others and will befriend/orbit her. He will not immediately ask her out because he better be 100% sure she will say yes.
> Here’s why, the logical reasoning of man:
> 1) If he asks her out and gets rejected, then all of the girls in the group will learn of the rejection.
> 2) Once the other girls learn of the rejection, then chances are very high that none of them will accept him on a date.
> 3) At this point, he’s basically cast off as a “low value” male.
> 4) Asking any other girl of the same group out on a date will make him look desperate and low value.
> Given this environment, the man’s strategy is to become friends with the woman he’s interested in and hope that she will become interested in him romantically. He’s going to treat her well, because he likes her a lot. Of course, a relationship doesn’t happen because he’s already in her friendzone.
> Even if she does accept him on a date and the relationship doesn’t work out, her church girlfriends would not feel right dating him because “you don’t date your friend’s ex’s”.
>
> As you can see, from the man’s perspective, dating within the church is an incredibly frustrating experience. As a result you see a lot of women not being asked out on dates and wondering whether the modern man is emasculated.
> Quite simply, Christian women are very hostile to men when it comes to romantic interest.

Quite the clear perspective.

Still, none of the them addressed the attraction factor or the poor quality of mates to choose from generally speaking. However, most young men aren't aware that most aren't marriage material if they look deeply at their value system either.

In conclusion, another article in a long line of 'feel good sentiment' that misses the mark with what is actually going on the world. It gets popular because of its feel good message, but it's lacking in bare bones Truth so it can't actually address the problems.

Writing plans

August 2, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As you may know, there's pretty much zero Christian literature out right now on the Truth of the nature of men and women from the Bible. Dalrock has pretty much exposed almost every pastor for pandering and pedestalizing wives in marriage.

Unfortunately, the "red pill" has a bad reputation, even though much of the information is true due to users using it in immoral ways. The only way you could possibly make any sort of in-roads into a Church is through a book based solely on Scripture. That's why such a book is needed.

I talked with Don of A Christian Man's Guide to Love and Marriage in the 21st Century: Why Everything You Think You Know Is Wrong. His book is available free through commons license on Donal's sidebar. The goal is to rewrite much of the book to eliminate RP terminology and expand upon the concepts in order to reach the single and married Christian men without having the stigma of the secular manosphere weighing over it.

This is easy to do because the full nature of men and women are clearly and thoroughly explained in the Scriptures. Pulling out those examples and contrasting them against the culture is what this book will aim to achieve. This will show that God's Truth trumps the cultural and churchian indoctrination that has demonized men and angelicized women for decades.

My writing goal is to have a rough draft by the end of the fall.

We may or may not post sections on my blog for critique. We will see.

I will continue blogging in the meantime.

Biblical relevance

August 4, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the process of writing.

Sadly, the book needs to start off with the argument for Biblical relevance. In other words, can we trust the Word of God in plain text over what the culture tells us?

I'm trying to keep it very brief since there does not need to be a long discourse over this. Either people will accept it or they won't. They key is to get them to at least question and/or throw into doubt the cultural beliefs they've held.

What I have so far is a rough re-write that could use some additional feedback and/or arguments.

Is the Bible relevant?

For any Christian, this is one of the first questions you will have to wrestle with when taking your faith seriously.

As Christians, we live our life with a 4,000-year-old book as our guide. Some people would (and do) call that crazy. They say the Bible was written for a different people in a different time. They say it's been translated so many times that nobody knows for sure what it really even says. They say the entire thing is open to individual interpretation and so it means something different to everybody.

There are several simple arguments that strike this down if we believe the Bible to be God's Word.

- God is eternal. His character and nature does not change. Therefore, what He has told us does not change as well. His Word is trustworthy for all peoples and all times.
- If we cannot trust that the Word God sent to us to tell us about Him is Truth, then why would we live according to what God says? Why shouldn't we just live according to how we want?
- If we believe that the Bible is only culturally relevant, then any part of the Bible can be rationalized as only a "part of the culture" of the time. This is no different than moral relativism.

All of these questions allude to what is known as what is "Buffet Christianity." A Christian can go down the buffet line and pick and choose – from the Bible – what they want to eat. Don't like that particular food? You can just ignore it. Like that particular food? Pile it up on your plate. Living according to such a moral relativistic lifestyle is no different than declaring yourself your own god instead of believing in God and following after the example of Jesus Christ.

According to a Gallup polls in 2008 and 2014, 80% and 75% of those in the US consider themselves Christian.(1). However, as any Christian in that is living in the US can tell you, the vast majority of people do not live like they are Christians.

This is no mistake. Even the early Christian Church struggled with this. That's why the New Testament books were written. The new Christian converts in Judea, Asia Minor and the rest of the world were blending their culture with their new found faith in Christ. The gospels were written so that the new believers would know the message and acts of Jesus. Paul, Peter, James, and other disciples wrote letters to the various Churches in order to persuade them to eschew the culture around them and strive for purity and sanctification in both word and deed in Christ.

> Now great crowds accompanied him, and he turned and said to them, "If anyone comes to me and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be my disciple. Whoever does not bear his own cross and come after me cannot be my disciple. For which of you, desiring to build a tower, does not first sit down and count the cost, whether he has enough to complete it? Otherwise, when he has laid a foundation and is not able to finish, all who see it begin to mock him, saying, 'This man began to build and was not able to finish.' Or what king, going out to encounter another king in war, will not sit down first and deliberate whether he is able with ten thousand to meet him who comes against him with twenty thousand? And if not, while the other is yet a great way off, he sends a delegation and asks for terms of peace. So therefore, any one of you who does not renounce all that he has cannot be my disciple.
> – Luke 14:25-33 (ESV) – The Cost of Discipleship

This is the Cost of Discipleship. We lay down all that we are for the sake of Christ. We lay down our desires to follow Jesus. We lay down our families and those we may be close to knowing that we may need to choose Christ over them. We even lay down what the culture tells us. We take up our cross and follow Jesus.

This concept is the crux of understanding the rest of this book. If you believe that the God's Word is not relevant for all time – only culturally relevant – then you will not be able to understand how the wool has been pulled over many Christian's eyes by cultural indoctrination.

Our Creator, God, knows a thing or two about men and women. He made us. He created human nature, and He saw it go haywire when Adam and Eve sinned. He also gave us the Bible as a guide to understand His plan and how our human nature goes haywire. He knows what works and what doesn't. And He's given us some pretty clear instructions, if only we would take them seriously.

Therefore, we will be approaching Scripture with the assumption that it says what it means and means what it says. That may sound obvious, but you'd be surprised how many people will try to wiggle out of certain passages or simply ignore them altogether.

We live in a time in which the highest good is equality and non-discrimination and being non-offensive. The Scriptures highlighted in the rest of this book will offend some people – possibly you. We only ask that you judge the message on its own merits. Don't focus on whether or not it's offensive to modern sensibilities. Rather, ask yourself if it might actually be true.

The “anti-diversity manifesto”

August 8, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As you may have heard, a Google employee was fired for internally posting a critique of the “system.” Here is a copy of the so-called “anti-diversity manifesto.”

I think the funniest part of the situation is that the Google employee actually had good intentions. He pointed out that men and women and liberals and conservatives were different. He wanted to play to each groups strength and weaknesses to further promote diversity and reduce the echo chamber. However, because he didn’t toe the ideological line, he was fired. He was fired because he wanted to promote diversity by removing biases from the process.

His goal was to ultimately promote diversity like the company wants, but because he thinks about it differently he got fired. You can’t just promote diversity, you have to think about it the right way too. There’s a reason why the left is called the “thought police.”

You can’t make this stuff up.

Hillary Clinton wants to get involved in the ministry

August 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From Relevant Magazine.

The comments are by far the most interesting part. Some point out the fact that Hillary continues to promote laws that are obviously anti-Christian and are lambasted for being "judgmental" in comments. Pretty much like the random commenters I get about Lysa's divorce. Other "Christians" applaud her for wanting to get involved in Church ministry.

Now you know why you should avoid Relevant Magazine and heretical churches like the United Methodists.

Thoughts on Charlottesville

August 14, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the wake of Charlottesville, this is pretty much the only article I've seen of 50+ that actually delves to the root of the problem. It's by a reformed white nationalist.

Here's some of the relevant bits:

> I think ultimately people become extremists not necessarily because of the ideology. I think that the ideology is simply a vehicle to be violent. I believe that people become radicalized, or extremist, because they're searching for three very fundamental human needs: identity, community and a sense of purpose.
> If, underneath that fundamental search is something that's broken — I call them potholes — is there abuse or trauma or mental illness or addiction? In my case, many years ago, it was abandonment. I felt abandoned, and that led me to this community. But what happens is because there are so many marginalized young people, so many disenfranchised young people today with not a lot to believe in, with not a lot of hope, they tend to search for very simple black and white answers.
> Because of the Internet, we now have this propaganda machine that is flooding the Internet with conspiracy theory propaganda from the far right — disinformation — and when a young person who feels disenchanted, or disaffected, goes online where most of them live, they're able to find that identity online.
> They're able to find that community, and they're able to find that purpose that's being fed to them by savvy recruiters who understand how to target vulnerable young people. And they go for this solution because, frankly, it promises paradise. And it requires very little work except for dedicating your life to that purpose.
> But I can say that they're all being fooled, because the people at the very top have an agenda. And it's a broken ideology that can never work, that in fact, is destroying people's lives more than the promise that they were given of helping the world or saving the white race.

He correctly identifies "what" the problem is: people are lacking identity, community, and a sense of purpose. However, he doesn't have the correct answers to "why" this problem came about.

Of course, neither the "right" or the "left" are anywhere near correct. Both sides of the coin are committing acts of terrorism. The only real answer is Jesus.

Why are people lacking identity, community, and a sense of purpose?

All of this goes back to broken families and lack of fathers. We've all seen the statistics on crime, earlier sex and increase STD rates, decreased graduation rates, and so on. This is simply another manifestation of that. The groups or rather “gangs” they get involved in because they had no solid family structure and love are these “hate groups.” Gangs commit crimes. Surprise.

Europe hasn’t had the same problems as the US with similar out of wedlock birthrates and lack of fatherhood, namely because their population(s) are still fairly homogeneous. However, they still have tons of men and women who are broken and disillusioned; they just don’t express it in terms of racial politics as their country(s) are not as diverse as ours.

Of course, if you point out this “problem” to anyone on the right or the left, they will still tell you that “no fault divorce” and “child support” and “women get the children in divorce” and other laws that encourage blowing up marriages are a good thing.

Jesus fills the ultimate identity and purpose hole in our hearts because we were never supposed to be separated from God in the first place. Marriage was also meant to be forever for good reason: both the father and mother are needed to raise kids that are not broken and disillusioned which prevents them from getting sucked into perverse ideologies.

Let me know when the gorgeous Christian women want to marry the church janitor

August 24, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In writing plans, a woman attempts to refute Donal's PSALMs attraction model. For newer readers, PSALM is basically a pneunomic that describes what women are attracted to — power/personality, status, athleticism/talent, looks, money.

This refutation was:

> I have not seem PSALM in operation. I've seen gorgeous Christian women married to nerdy preachers.

To which I reply:

> This proves the point. Preachers are leaders of the congregation; they have high status and authority. Let me know when gorgeous Christian women are marrying the janitors in the Church.

What is the Biblical case for this?

> 8 Now to the unmarried[a] and the widows I say: It is good for them to stay unmarried, as I do. 9 But if they cannot control themselves, they should marry, for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.
> 2 Corinthians 6:14 Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

What causes us to long or to burn is an attractive man or woman. This is God's design and He made marriage as the righteous outlet for sex.

Now, why would Paul have to urge the Corinthian believers not to be unequally yoked?

If it was the case that being Christian is enough to be married, then Christian would only naturally marry other Christians. However, we see that this is not the case, and believers still struggle with this today. Why is this?

Logically, Paul is making the inference that Christians also find non-Christians attractive, even attractive enough to be married to them if they're not believers. This is quite obvious. Christian men find non-Christians women attractive. There are tons of celebrities that are certainly attractive. Likewise, Christian women find many non-Christian men attractive as well. However, these attractive non-believers are ungodly and do not exhibit sound faith and the fruits of the spirit for obvious reasons.

It should be abundantly clear that both Christian and non-Christian men and women do not marry those they do not find attractive in most cases. There are some cases, and from what we've seen at least anecdotally these marriages have large issues to work through.

Therefore, it should be clear that attractiveness is an important factor if one wants to get married. I've also written about the role that attractiveness signals in marriage. Obviously, it is not the most important factor: adherence to Biblical roles and responsibilities, sound faith, character, and morals are all more important. However, it is an important factor. They are not mutually exclusive; you can be both godly and attractive.

It's quite disingenuous to ignore attraction when this has so readily been exemplified throughout the Bible and in real life. Abraham's wife Sarah was so attractive that Abimelech and Pharaoh wanted her for their own. Isaac married a beautiful Rebekah. Jacob favored Rachel. David and Bathsheba (for a sinful example). Song of Songs where Solomon describes his bride, the Shulamite woman, as beautiful all throughout. Even Bathsheba wasn't immune to David's position and power. Uriah was one of David's mighty men, so he had already high status. Yet she chose to be an adulteress because she desired to be David's wife.

I'm still waiting for those who believe attraction is not important in marriage and that it should not be an important factor to work on for Christian singles who desire to be married to answer this simple statement:

> Let me know when the gorgeous Christian women want to marry the church janitor.

I'll be waiting and so will the other Christian singles who want to be married.

Do your job

September 1, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the posts I've been thinking about recently is understanding godly value.

> So too all extrinsic value is measured solely through stewardship of what we have been given. A wife's stewardship is measured through her role and responsibility as a wife. A husband's stewardship is measured through his role and responsibilities as a husband. Each of these are different in the Scriptures.
> A wife gains nothing through usurping her husband's roles and responsibility. Indeed, it can be said that by usurping her husband's roles and responsibilities she neglects her own. Thus, she is being irresponsible with what she has been given in addition to being rebellious.
> This is why it is extremely important for husbands and wives to know their own roles and responsibilities within a marriage.
> 1. A wife gains nothing for loving her husband. However, she will gain much from respecting her husband.
> 2. A husband gains nothing by respecting his wife. Rather, he gains much by loving his wife.
> 3. A wife gains nothing by allowing her husband to lead. However, she gains much from following his lead and submitting to him.
> 4. A husband gains nothing by letting his wife by the head or being passive. Yet, he gains much by being the head of his wife and his family.
> P.S. Titus 2 commands women to 'philandros' their husbands not 'agape' them.

The "Do your job" meme of Bill Belichick is an interesting one.

For those of you who don't follow any football at all, Belichick is the coach of the Patriots and has won 5 superbowls with Tom Brady. He's pretty much considered one of the best coaches of all time now if not the best given his consistency in getting to the playoffs, championship games, and getting to if not winning the superbowl. No other team has had as much sustained success. He's famous for saying "Do your job" to his players because he gives them assignments to do when playing. If each individual does his assignment correctly, the team plays well together. If any one of them are slacking off, the team can look to be in disarray and dysfunctional.

This is a secular example, but I think it proves the point well.

Christians are followers of Christ. We are to follow what Jesus commanded us to do via the Scriptures. The roles and responsibilities of a husband and wife are part of this for some Christians. In effect, if you know what your roles and responsibilities are then you just need to "do your job." Obey Jesus even if you don't feel like it or your motivation is low. Obey Jesus even if it's hard or you get criticized or whatever thing tries to get in your way from doing it.

Learning obedience is really like a sheep and a shepherd. It’s easy to wander off and do whatever we want to do. There’s temptations all around for us to get distracted and fall away. Our focus needs to be laser sharp on our shepherd so we don’t miss anything. Discipline. Consistency. Do your job.

This is one of the things that drives me to be a better husband, and to see my wife and hopefully future family serve the Lord. Talking is great, but walking is hard.

Tinder reaffirms the 80/20 rule

September 3, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Someone ran an analysis on Tinder statistics likes much like OKCupid statistics we've gone over before.

> ### Abstract (TL;DR)
> This study was conducted to quantify the Tinder socio-economic prospects for males based on the percentage of females that will "like" them. Female Tinder usage data was collected and statistically analyzed to determine the inequality in the Tinder economy. It was determined that the bottom 80% of men (in terms of attractiveness) are competing for the bottom 22% of women and the top 78% of women are competing for the top 20% of men. The Gini coefficient for the Tinder economy based on "like" percentages was calculated to be 0.58. This means that the Tinder economy has more inequality than 95.1% of all the world's national economies. In addition, it was determined that a man of average attractiveness would be "liked" by approximately 0.87% (1 in 115) of women on Tinder. Also, a formula was derived to estimate a man's attractiveness level based on the percentage of "likes" he receives on Tinder:
> attractiveness%=16.8ln*(like%)+52.3

This should surprise no one who has been observing both the Church and culture for any amount of time. The 'most attractive' men have a disproportionate amount of female attention and can pretty much pick and choose who to bang (if secular) or to marry (if Christian).

It's also one of the reasons that it's important to focus on developing traits that signal attractiveness if you desire to be married as a Christian man. Leadership, masculinity, protector, and provider which encompass most of the attractive traits.

Another book blames men for the lack of marriage

September 4, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Short article so I quoted the whole thing.

> The share of Americans ages 25-34 who are married dropped 13 percentage points from 2000 to 2014. A new book by sociologist Mark Regnerus blames this declining rate on how easy it is for men to get off.
> Regnerus calls it “cheap sex,” an economic term meant to describe sex that has very little cost in terms of time or emotional investment, giving it little value.
> Regnerus bases his ideas, in part, on the work of British social theorist Anthony Giddens, who argued that the pill isolated sex from marriage and children. Add online pornography and dating sites to the mix and you don’t even need relationships.
> The result is “two overlapping (but distinctive) markets, one for sex and one for marriage, with a rather large territory in between comprised of significant relationships of varying commitment and duration,” Regnerus writes in “Cheap Sex: The Transformation of Men, Marriage, and Monogamy” (Oxford University Press).
> In generations past, women generally made men wait until marriage to have sex. To get a wife (and, therefore, sex), men had to be clean and presentable and have a good job. This, Regnerus reasons, gave men all the motivation they needed to become respectable members of society.
> Now with porn on demand and greater reproductive freedom, sex is a commodity available at any time. This has left men with little motivation for marriage, writes Regnerus, who cites demographer Steven Ruggles’ prediction that one of every three people in their 20s will never marry.
> ‘Sex has become free and easy. This is today’s version of the opiate of the (male) masses.’
> – psychologists Roy Baumeister and Kathleen Vohs
> Regnerus blames cheap sex for the decreasing education and employment rates among men as greater numbers of women get college degrees and enter the labor force. Six percent more women than men in the 25-34 age group have a bachelor’s degree.
> Regnerus backs this theory up with a quote from social psychologists Roy Baumeister and Kathleen Vohs, who study this phenomenon. “Nowadays young men can skip the wearying detour of getting education and career prospects to qualify for sex,” they write. “Sex has become free and easy. This is today’s version of the opiate of the (male) masses.”
> Regnerus argues that while women have maintained their role as sexual > gatekeepers, men control the marriage market. And given the ease with which sex can be accessed, Regnerus believes that men's motivations for marriage have all but disappeared. He surveyed 15,000 people and found that among unmarried respondents under 40, "for every 82 men who wished to be married, 100 women said the same."

> This ratio, he says, keeps ultimate relationship power in the hands of men. "To plenty of women, it appears that men have a fear of commitment. But men, on average, are not afraid of commitment," Regnerus writes.
> "The story is that men are in the driver's seat in the marriage market and are optimally positioned to navigate it in a way that privileges their (sexual) interests and preferences. It need not even be conscious behavior on their part."
> In turn, he writes, this leads women to settle, entering into doomed or otherwise unsatisfying marriages.
> Regnerus even points to "Fifty Shades of Grey" to prove his point. In the book, Christian Grey gets Anastasia Steele to agree to a series of submissive conditions, including "any sexual activity deemed fit and pleasurable" by him, with no such power returned on her end. "I recognize that 'Fifty Shades' is fiction," Regnerus writes. "It's made up. But when you sell 100 million copies in two years, your narrative is resonating. There's something to it."
> Meanwhile, many will go it alone. Self-love for men and women is at an all-time high. A 1992 study found that 29 percent of men (and 9 percent of women) masturbated at least once a week. In 2014, 49 percent of men (and 32 percent of women) confessed to doing it at least once in the previous six days. Unsurprisingly, "as frequency of [watching] porn increased, so did masturbation."
>
> All of this, Regnerus concludes, means that as long as sex is so low-cost for men, heterosexual women will have increasing difficulties finding a partner worth committing to.
> "In the domain of sex and relationships, men will act as nobly as women collectively demand," he writes. "This is an aggravating statement for women to read, no doubt. They do not want to be responsible for 'raising' men. But it is realistic."

It's easy to make money by selling books by blaming all problems on men. I'm surprised that more churchian pastors aren't doing this.

I also suppose it's easy to ignore the fact that:

1. The vast majority of men don't get 'cheap sex' as exemplified by the Tinder statistics yesterday.
2. What man would actually choose pornography if he was being satisfied by lots of sex a real woman?
3. Women generally delay marriage for education and life experiences

4. Abortion and contraception were promoted so that women could have free sex via the feminist/sexual revolution is being blamed on men. The irony is enormous.
5. Divorce courts give wives cash and prizes for leaving if they feel like it.
6. Family courts gives wives cash and prizes for taking the kids and running.
7. Men see the disrespect that their old family members, wives, and popular culture continues to throw on husbands and fathers and don't want any part of it.
8. Using 50 shades to prove the point that all men have the power to make women do their bidding in bed. That's hilarious.

Nah, it can't be that many men just see marriage as a bad deal nowadays. Helen Smith has already responded but doesn't really drive the point home enough.

Sadly, the Church has been impacted by culture enough that it's very similar in terms most of the things above.

- 90%+ of Christian have pre-marital sex
- Pornography is a problem for many Christian men as they continually flounder with Christian women in dating and marriage.
- Many Christian women delay marriage for education and life experiences.
- Abortion is uncommon but contraception is common in the Church
- Divorce rape destroying Christian men happens all the time.
- Christian men are disrespected by their families, churches, and wives all the time.

It's sad.

I do my part to help in change in real life, and I know some men who do too. But it's an uphill battle.

The Scripture and the temptations of husbands and wives

September 6, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

We naturally are inclined be tempted to sin. The Scriptures speak to us to work against that temptation to sin. With that in mind, we can look at the roles and responsibilities in Scripture to accurately root out the temptation of both husbands and wives to sin.

This should be a very eye opening post for many.

edit: renamed the post as 'temptations' rather than 'sin natures' to more accurately reflect how husbands and wives are tempted to sin.

Husbands:

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing[b] her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless. 28 In this same way, husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. 29 After all, no one ever hated their own body, but they feed and care for their body, just as Christ does the church— 30 for we are members of his body. 31 "For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh."[c] 32 This is a profound mystery—but I am talking about Christ and the church. 33 However, each one of you also must love his wife as he loves himself, and the wife must respect her husband.

- Love their wives for the purpose of sanctification
- Love their wives as his own body/as himself
- Feed and care (nourish and cherish)

> Col 3:19 Husbands, love your wives and do not be harsh with them.

- Don't be harsh

1 Pet 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with [c]someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

- Live with understanding as with someone weaker
- Honor her as a co-heir in the grace of life

1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

- Husbands withholding sex

Temptations for husbands:

- Love their wives for the purpose of sanctification — Husbands are tempted to love their wives more than God… like Adam chose Eve and the fruit over God. In other words, compromise and/or being led astray by his wife often through avoiding conflict for temporary peace. Husbands have the responsibility to point out if his wife is in sin but are temptation to NOT point it out.
- Love their wives as his own body/as himself — Husbands are tempted to think of himself first without giving consideration to the wife's needs and/or opinion (as helpmeet).
- Feed and care (nourish and cherish) — Husbands have the temptation to not address her needs and/or be affectionate with her (note: needs are not wants)
- Don't be harsh — Husbands have the tendency to be blunt, especially in communication or action, rather than speaking with kindness.
- Live with understanding as with someone weaker — Husbands may not understand or be tempted to avoid providing wives more support physically, emotionally, mentally, especially in difficult times.
- Honor her as a co-heir in the grace of life — Husbands are tempted to not honor and value his wife as a helpmeet but rather a servant.
- Husbands should not withhold sex — Husbands are tempted to withhold sex… rarer for husbands to wives but it does happen in some minority of relationships. Don't weaponize sex.

As you can see, many of these are common temptations that husbands struggle with.

Wives:

> Eph 5:22 Wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands as you do to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife as Christ is the head of the church, his body, of which he is the Savior. 24 Now as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything. […] 33 However, each one of you also must love his wife as he loves himself, and the wife must respect her husband.
> Col 3:18 Wives, be subject to your husbands, as is fitting in the Lord.

- Submit to husbands as to the Lord
- Submit in everything
- Wife must respect/reverence her husband

> 1 Pet 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

- Submit even if husbands are disobedient to the word that they may be won without a word by chaste and respectful behavior
- Adornment not merely external but with the quality of a gentle and quiet spirit
- Obey and call him 'lord' so that you may not be frightened

> Tit 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

- Love (philandros) their husbands and children
- Sensible, pure, workers at home, kind
- subject to their own husbands

1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

- Wives should not withhold sex

> Proverbs 21:19 Better to live in a desert than with a quarrelsome and nagging wife
> Proverbs 27:15-16 A continual dripping on a rainy day and a contentious wife are > alike. Trying to keep her in check is like stopping a wind storm or grabbing oil with your right hand.

> Proverbs 25:24 It is better to live in a corner of the housetop than in a house shared with a quarrelsome wife.
> Proverbs 12:4 A wife with strength of character is the crown of her husband, but the wife who disgraces him is like bone cancer.
> Proverbs 11:22 A beautiful woman who lacks discretion is like a gold ring in a pig's snout.
> Proverbs 14:1 A wise woman builds her home, but a foolish woman tears it down with her own hands.

- Don't nag
- Don't be contentious
- Have strength of character rather than disgrace her husband
- Have discretion
- Don't tear down your own home

Temptations for wives:

There's more qualities listed in the Scripture as wives have to guard against many temptations.

- Submit to husbands as to the Lord — Wives like to rebel and disobey their husbands, but still consider themselves submitting to the Lord.
- Submit in everything — Wives are tempted to want to pick and choose what to submit to.
- Wife must respect/reverence her husband — Wives have the temptation to disrespect her husband.
- Submit even if husbands are disobedient to the word that they may be won without a word by chaste and respectful behavior — Wives like to rebel and treat her husband poorly with impure and disrespectful behavior if she thinks her husband is not acting rightly.
- Adornment not merely external but with the quality of a gentle and quiet spirit — Wives are tempted to vanity over gentle and quiet behavior if there is conflict. (Proverbs 15:1 A gentle answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger — note that this corresponds to Col 3 where husbands are warned over treating their wives harshly)
- Obey and call him 'lord' so that you may not be frightened — Wives are tempted to disrespect their husbands and disobey. 'lord' signifies respect/reverence and obedience leads to peace. Disobedience leads to fear of righteous anger.
- Love (philandros — affection) their husbands and children — wives have the tendency to treat their husbands and children with contempt.

- Sensible, pure, workers at home, kind– Wives are tempted to lack of self control, impure words and deeds, laziness and prioritization of things outside the home, and unkindness. (Note this corresponds to 1 Timothy 5:9-16)
- subject to their own husbands — Wives are tempted to be covetous of other marriages and apply it to their own marriage instead of asking their husband how he likes things done (see: marriage books and advice telling you about how "spiritual" other people's marriages are)
- Wives should not withhold sex — Wives are tempted to withhold sex… more common for wives than husbands. Don't weaponize sex.
- Don't nag — Wives are tempted to nag
- Don't be contentious — Wives are tempted to be contentious in conflict or in generating conflict
- Have strength of character rather than disgrace her husband — Wives are tempted to put down their husbands. Re: gossip.
- Have discretion — Wives are tempted to air out their marriage baggage. Re: gossip.
- Don't tear down your own home — Wives are tempted to destroy their marriages either through divorce, gossip, and so on instead of building their marriage up.

Pretty obvious that these are very common temptations that you see that wives fall prey to.

Conclusion

In the end, the Scriptures accurately show us the temptations of both husbands and wives to sin against each other in marriage.

Overall, even though the husbands have a 'shorter' list, they hold much more responsibility for their role so the weight of it is heavier.

Here are the lists again so they can be easily read side by side.

You see a lot of these in Christian marriages nowadays.

Salt and Light

September 14, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has a good post up on The high ground right now with some good comments too. Check it out.

Mostly, it all goes back to the roles and responsibilities of Christians to themselves and Christian to non-Christians.

> Matthew 5:13 “You are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has become tasteless, how [e]can it be made salty again? It is no longer good for anything, except to be thrown out and trampled under foot by men.
> 14 “You are the light of the world. A city set on a [f]hill cannot be hidden; 15 nor does anyone light a lamp and put it under a [g]basket, but on the lampstand, and it gives light to all who are in the house. 16 Let your light shine before men in such a way that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven.
> 1 Cor 5:12 For what have I to do with judging outsiders? Is it not those inside the church whom you are to judge?

Christians have a long history of not policing themselves as much as they should and try to police the world too much. If you’ve read the Nashville statements and the follow ups, it’s basically attempting to negate any semblance of LGBT infecting “marriage.” However, we know that even if people claim LGBT marriages exist, they do not exist to God. Our primary duty is to set an example of how good marriage is to be salt and light to those who support pagan marriages.

The Church should be focusing on the roles and responsibilities of men and women in marriage — headship-submission, love-respect, no sexual denial by either spouse, etc. — and fixing the disastrous divorce rates among ‘Christians.’ As long as “Christian marriages” look the same as the world in their marriages, they are not salt or light at all.

How much should a woman submit to you before marriage?

September 15, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> How much should a girl follow you in dating? How much should she submit to before marriage?

These are actually good questions.

Being that I don't have daughters (at least yet), I do not believe I have the whole picture down. However, I will answer to the best of Scriptural ability, and I'm sure some of the commenters can chip in as well.

There are multiple things you need to take into consideration here.

- First, a daughter is still under the authority of her father according to the Scriptures. If her parents, especially her father, have any particular dating/courtship rules that they have given her, she should be loyal to them over you. This is important because it shows that she understands Biblical authority. Huge bonus points if she can point out she's loyal to them over you because of what the Bible says.
- Second, insofar as her parents dating/courtship rules do not conflict with anything that you're doing/saying and you are in line with the Bible, she should be following your lead. Obviously, dating/courtship is a time where you learn about the faith, character, morals, and values of the woman that you are going to potentially spend the rest of your life with, so it is important to find a woman that is willing to follow you in everything that she is able without violating her father and the Bible.
- Third, it is important for you to start teaching her about this. Most women nowadays, even the few(er) women who are actually legitimate Christians and want to be good wives, have places where they futz around instead of following your lead. You need to be able to gently correct her if she's off course. Her response to gentle correction will tell you much about her loyalties in marriage: to herself or to you and God.

Overall, these are the main things that need to be taken into consideration. It is important to bring up difficult and/or uncomfortable topics to talk about like sex and make your expectations clear if you prefer things done a certain way.

As a relationship develops toward engagement and/or marriage, her ability and attitude to follow your lead should definitely improve over time as long as she is not in any violation of the Bible and her parents. If that is not the case, I would be very wary about marry such a woman as you may be digging yourself a deep pit.

With all of the feminist crap coming out of the culture and Church and even families, you may not have much support once you're married if you ignore warning signs. Best to head it off in the first place by doing your best to vet a woman to the best of your ability. Of course, when all is said and done, you have to live by faith.

Marriage a mark of privilege?

September 26, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Pre-posting edit: Dalrock has come out with a post on the same topic while I was writing this. My take is different than Dal's as he looks at a few different factors, whereas I'm looking at some of the roots.

This article from the NT times on marriage as a mark of privilege.

> Fewer Americans are marrying over all, and whether they do so is more tied to socioeconomic status than ever before. In recent years, marriage has sharply declined among people without college degrees, while staying steady among college graduates with higher incomes.
> Currently, 26 percent of poor adults, 39 percent of working-class adults and 56 percent of middle- and upper-class adults ages 18 to 55 are married, according to a research brief published from two think tanks, the American Enterprise Institute and Opportunity America.
> In 1990, more than half of adults were married, with much less difference based on class and education: 51 percent of poor adults, 57 percent of working-class adults and 65 percent of middle- and upper-class adults were married.
> A big reason for the decline: Unemployed men are less likely to be seen as marriage material.
> "Women don't want to take a risk on somebody who's not going to be able to provide anything," said Sharon Sassler, a sociologist at Cornell who published "Cohabitation Nation: Gender, Class, and the Remaking of Relationships" with Amanda Jayne Miller last month.
> As marriage has declined, though, childbearing has not, which means that more children are living in families without two parents and the resources they bring.

In the article, they make the case that these are the reasons for the decline in marriage among the poor(er).

1. Unemployed men/Economy — less providers
2. Education — those with college degrees are more likely to be forward thinking and delay child birthing, whereas poorer people are more likely to cohabitate and have out of wedlock children
3. Economy — automation killing jobs, bad economy increases bad moral values such as alcoholism and addiction to drugs due to unemployment
4. Collateral: Men feel it's important to be a provider
5. Collateral: Women see divorce and realize that they need to be able to support themselves
6. Debate — left says economic, right says cultural values; article says it's both Marriage, in general, is not a mark of so-called “privilege.”

I don’t think the elites really care what happens to marriage all that much because they don’t believe there’s any inherent value to it. Most of the elite of the elite — those rich enough to afford housekeepers, nannies, cooks, and so on — don’t give a crap about “providership” or “protectorship” or “leadership” or any of the other Biblical components of marriage AND they don’t care about the ‘secular’ reasons for marriage either. They can just throw money at problems to make them go away, so why would they care about what other people are doing in the first place?

In general, they’re more concerned about preserving their way of life, which means lobbying for laws that support increasing their wealth, power, or status. Marriage doesn’t have much to do in that circle, except for a few where marriage helps out in terms of say politics. The rest can just marry and divorce and they won’t even take a huge hit even if they get taken for 50% divorce at the cleaners. They can remarry anyway if need be, and there’s always enough women clamoring to be a trophy wife.

Overall, the elites only participate when it’s in their best interest.

The article did not go into other incentives to avoid marriage such as:

- Feminism — Wives power grabbing in marriage
- Feminism — Divorce rape. Men being taken to the cleaners in marriage for 50% of everything AND the children
- Feminism — Disrespect for husbands and fathers
- Feminism — Women being pushed to be like men in the workplace and at home
- Feminism — Women pushed to be independent. Doesn’t work for marriages.
- Feminism — Feminism – encouraging female sexual immorality especially by promoting contraception and abortion.
- Lack of fatherhood leading to broken homes and poorer outcomes

Of course, no tradcon or leftist is going to criticize feminism, so not surprised at all.

In general, no one is going to have high commitment toward something they see as a terrible deal for themselves. There’s very little secular incentives toward marriage. Additionally, the Church is not holding up the standards of the Scripture to give Christian men and women the proper incentives toward it as well.

Marriage works because it’s beautiful when it’s modeled after Christ and the Church (morally, economically, functionally, etc.). Another problem is that there are virtually no marriages like that anymore: the only thing left is sinfulness, ugliness, and brokenness. It’s no surprise that most people are opting out, but they are only perpetuating the downward spiral with cohabitation, out of wedlock births, and fatherlessness.

Contraception's under the radar effect on divorce

September 28, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Now that we're on the topic of marriages and not marriages, that led me to thinking more about the reasons for divorce. I've written on contraception before, but I didn't really think about it in terms of divorce.

We know that hormonal contraception alters womens' mate preference attraction. Some articles on how that works here in Time and Scientific American. The general conclusion is that women prefer more masculine features and/or personality in men when off of the pill. Hence, they're more likely to marry more feminine looking men and/or with less masculine personalities when on the pill, and when they go off of it find them less attractive.

We know that about 50% of marriages implode, and about ~70% of divorces are initiated by women, which means about 35% of all marriages are imploded by women. Many of these which are due to unhaaaapyness and "I love you but I'm not in love with you."

To connect the dots, it would be interesting to look up the how much of the actual female population was on oral hormonal contraception given that we know the average age of marriage is currently sitting at 27 for women and 29 for men.

CDC data on contraception use for 2006-2012.

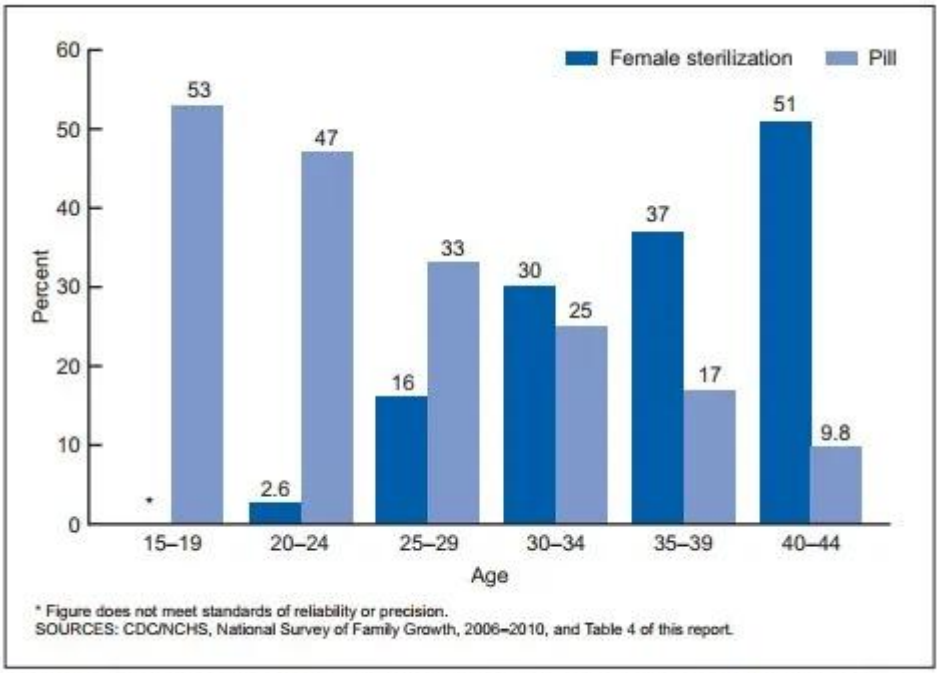

Figure 2. Percentage of contracepting women who are using female sterilization or the pill, by age: United States, 2006–2010

A whopping 50% of the population 15-24 of women in the US are using oral hormonal contraception, and it only declines to about 33% in the age at which 50% of women get married.

> The use of a hormonal method by nulliparous women, either the pill or another hormonal method, to delay a first pregnancy increased 20% between 1995 to > 2006–2010, from slightly more than one-half of women with no births (52%) in 1995 to approximately 63% in 2006–2010.

> Almost twice as many women who intend more children used other hormonal methods in 2006–2010 (11%) than in 1995 (6.0%). IUD usage increased by about the same amount among women who intend more children (from 0.6% to 5.5%) as among those who intend no more children (0.8% compared with 5.3%)

Among women who intended to have children, married or not, the rate of oral hormonal contraceptive use increased over the general female population use to 63% and up to 74% for other contraceptive use total.There's like ~10 points on religious use and contraception, but here are two of the more important ones.

> Baptist and Fundamentalist Protestant women used the pill to a lesser degree (21%) compared with Catholic (28%) or other Protestant (29%) women, or women with no religious affiliation (31%).
> Catholic women (18%) and women with no religious affiliation (16%) more frequently rely on their partner's use of condoms as their most effective contraceptive method compared with Baptist or Fundamentalist Protestant women (12%). Women for whom religion is not important (22%) rely on partner's use of condoms more frequently than women for whom religion is very important (15%).

Lots of nominal Catholics given the Catholic Church forbids contraception. Also shows that the Church is almost no different from the secular on these points, much like other various Life Script(tm) of go to college, get a job, and so on before marriage. Again, not surprising the Church divorce rate is quite similar to the secular when you have marriages that mimic them.

Overall, I am extremely surprised that contraception is as ubiquitous as it is among 15-24 year old women (~50% of all women) and among those who are planning to have a child (~63% for hormonal, ~74% total). Given that 35% of all marriages are imploded by wives, I do not think it would be a stretch to say that contraception plays a significant role in the implosion of marriages due to its effects on wives' attraction toward their husbands.

45 tall nude [woman] statue coming to the national mall

October 1, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

You can't make this stuff up. Relevant tidbits.

> If you walk along the National Mall this November, you'll see the Smithsonian Museums, the Washington Monument, Capitol Hill, and, possibly, something else: a 45-foot tall nude sculpture of a woman.
> The Amazonian figure would tower over the National Mall next to the Washington Monument, directly facing the White House until March 7 to promote women's equality.
> Organizers are trying to raise funds to transport the R-Evolution sculpture from San Francisco to Washington. They've gotten conditional approval from the National Park Service to have the structure on the grounds of the National Mall.
> […]
> The sculpture was created by artist Marco Cochrane as part of The Bliss Project. He said the sculpture was meant to combat a culture that increasingly dehumanizes women and sexualizes the female form.
> R-Evolution is just one of three giant nude female sculptures Cochrane created with his model and collaborator Deja Solis.
> He said the series spawned from an idea of feminine safety that he says he's been wrestling with since the age of seven, when he learned that a friend had been sexually assaulted.
>
> "These sculptures are about expressing what it would be like if women were safe," Cochrane said. "To me this sculpture answers that question . . . She's absolutely fearless and accepting and being able to do that is a really powerful thing."
> Julia Whitelaw, Cochrane's creative partner, said his early sculptures were often so life-like that people felt uncomfortable looking at them, until he scaled them up — way up.
> "There was such this taboo that was happening," she said. "Men would walk in, look at the sculpture, and they would have to avert their eyes."
> Cochrane was inspired to take his art to new heights by the burning effigies at Burning Man. Instead of working in bronze or clay, he created massive sculptures out of steel rods, tubing, mesh and LED lights.
>
> "It made it okay to look at them," Whitelaw said. "People feel emotionally connected to these sculptures, they don't focus on the physical."
> […]
> The four-month long vigil is also intended to raise awareness of the Equal Rights > Amendment. The constitutional amendment, proposed in 1972, would outlaw discrimination based on sex, but it has yet to be ratified.

> The sculptures will inevitably produce some controversy wherever they go, but Whitelaw said she's confident that there are plenty of people excited to have art "supporting the end of violence against women and equal rights for women right there in the heart of the nation."

Not even really sure what to say about this.

> The sculpture was created by artist Marco Cochrane as part of The Bliss Project. He said the sculpture was meant to combat a culture that increasingly dehumanizes women and sexualizes the female form.

You would think that putting a nude figure out there is actually the epitome of dehumanization and sexualization of the female form… but apparently not.

The ideal that women are not considered already 'equal' in the US is laughable. They do 'better' at education with higher grades and graduation rates in high school, college, and graduate programs. They are paid the same. Women have the opportunity to do any job they want. They can choose to blow up marriages, have children, and do what they want with less consequences than men.

Now they're basically putting pornography on the national mall to "promote equality." Right on.

How to communicate sexual desire in a relationship

October 3, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> Biblically, is communicating your sexual desire to someone you are dating to marry wrong? From the sermon on the mount, I understand the qualifications on what lust is. And premarital sex is wrong I believe, but how do we handle ourselves in communication. I suppose I'm having trouble discerning things. Are we too prude as a culture? Or do we avoid all appearances of sex for a reason? Can I tell my girlfriend the ways she turns me on, etc. Thanks!

I've mentioned before how male and female sexual desire is not sinful and why it's important to talk about sex with your girlfriend and/or fiancee. So to answer the first question, no, communicating the desire is indeed not sinful.

One thing about "lust" in Matthew 5 is that it's by nature coveting.

> Matthew 5:27 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery'; 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart.

Jesus is speaking to the men — notice how when preaching to the crowds, only the number of men is counted. In particular, He's also speaking about 'adultery' in v27 rather than 'fornication.' So the 'lust' or 'passion' here is about coveting a woman that is not yours — which is unmarried or married women for a married men (e.g. any woman not their wife) OR married women for single men (e.g. not single women).

Why not single women for unmarried men? Remember, Paul speaks this to the unmarried about their 'lust':

> 1 Cor 7:8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

If you 'sexually desire' a member of the opposite sex who is single, you should take the steps to marry. This makes logical sense and does not conflict any of the statements of Jesus and Paul on sexual desire.

The gross overstatement of 'lust' in "purity culture" in the modern Church for a single man to a single woman or vice versa is definitely damaging to getting people to marry. It causes a lot of single men and women to shy away from their sexuality, which is one factor in delaying marriage (along with life scripts). This often leads toward illicit ways to express sexuality like porn, romance novels, and so on.

Now, what it looks like in practice can be difficult for many men to do. When I was going out on dates with Christian girls I would ask them a few dates in (read: not the first few dates) about more serious topics. Alternatively, if you're texting or messaging back and forth a lot and the conversation is leading that way you can ask about topics like that too.

There's a couple different ways you can do this:

- Ask her what she finds attractive about you, and be ready to answer what you find attractive about her.
- Ask her what she thinks about particular responsibilities of marriage, and move slowly toward 1 Cor 7 about either spouse not denying sex to each other
- Ask her what her parents taught her about husbands and wives, and be prepared to answer the same things about your experiences.
- There are potentially other prospective questions that relate to sexuality as well like abortion. Huge list of prospective questions here.

Like anything you'll probably usually be uncomfortable talking about these things right away and it could be awkward. If it turns out awkward, you can just say even though it's awkward it's good to discuss relationships more in depth. It will get less awkward over time the more you practice.

Overall, there needs to be some discernment, as you mentioned. Things you would say to a 3 date girl would be different than you would say to a 3 month 'dating' or 'courtship' relationship which would be different than something you would say to a fiancee.

For example, I wouldn't and didn't shy away from "that's what she said" jokes with my now wife for any 'stages' in along the aforementioned timeline. However, I did not go up to her right away and say how she looked was turning me on. That was more toward the engagement period. In the earlier to mid part I would say something like "you looked great in that dress or skirt and it makes me want to wrap my arms around her and kiss her" and then actually do it. When we were engaged, I'd say "I want to ravish her."

I'm also not afraid of hugging and non-sexual contact, and I think that is one of the big things that a lot of Christian men are generally uncomfortable with. Non-sexual contact is socially acceptable contact usually with the back, hands, forearms, or shoulders. Men do it all the time with a slap on the back or fist bump. You can also do this with women, albeit depends on the social customs.

There definitely is some variability and different boundaries. I know some married couples who did not kiss until they were married, so the latter example would not work for them. I think when in doubt you should shy on the less side of things though.

Ostensibly in the relationship you are both there because you find each other attractive. Most cultures tend to find blatant sexual statements too forward and unbecoming and in general the Scripture is like that too on fornication and giving the appearance of evil. However, there is a natural progression from single to engaged to marriage where expression of sexuality grows.

Comments from other married or single commenters to flesh this out for our reader(s) are also good.

Adam had headship prior to the fall

October 5, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've discussed authority quite a few times over the course of this blog a few years ago, especially in the context of the the fall. These are Scriptural reasons from Genesis 1-3 and beyond why I believe that to be the case. I posted this on Donal's but thought it deserved its own post here for posterity.

Going back to Creation, there are many textual clues from the creation account in Genesis and other Scriptures that make the case for headship and thus patriarchy from the beginning.

1. Eve is created as a helpmeet for Adam. She is created second rather than at the same time. Paul affirms this in 1 Corinthians 11 by discussing creation order. (Gen 2, 1 Cor 11)
2. Adam names Eve. Adam also names the animals over which he has dominion. Parents also name their children, over which they have authority. (Gen 1, 2)
3. Eve comes from a part of Adam. Man is created in the "image and glory of God," while woman is created in the "glory of man" though both in the image of God. (Gen 2, 1 Cor 11)
4. God brings Eve and presents her to Adam, foreshadowing a father giving away the bride to the husband. She passes from her father's authority to her husband's authority. (Gen 2, Num 30)
5. The comparison of the creation accounts in Gen 1-3 may show that only Adam that received the commands from God in the garden based on how Eve was deceived.

We learn that Eve was deceived but Adam chose to sin (Gen 3, 1 Tim 2), and we can see this in how she was deceived through subtle wording differences: "The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die." — "The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'"

6. Genesis 2 indicates that it the man who separates from his parents to create the family unit: "For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh."

The man breaks off from his parents to establish his own family unit and is joined together with his wife as his helpmeet. The husband is the leader, and the wife is the follower. She takes his name as a sign that she is part of his family. When we decide to follow Christ, we take on His name as Christians as we follow Him.

7. Ephesians 5 demonstrates that marriage reflects Christ and the Church. Marriage was present prior to the fall. Therefore, man is created in the image of God and joined in perfect matrimony, which means there must be headship prior to the fall to reflect the eventual marriage of Christ and the Church.

8. John 1 indicates that Jesus was present in the beginning. Jesus existed in the beginning and had authority over man, which foreshadows the Christ and the Church marriage. (Gen 1-2, 1 Cor 11)
9. When God comes to the garden to talk to Adam and Eve after they sinned, He calls only for Adam.
10. God told Adam he would surely die if he ate of the fruit. The pattern of the other punishments given to Adam and Eve due to sin is a pattern of increase.

    - The ground was cursed, and Adam needed to work harder, as he was already commanded to tend to the garden.
    - Eve's pain was "greatly multiplied" in childbirth. Something that was "greatly multiplied" is already present in lesser amounts. Some have an incorrect view that pain is "bad," but the ability to feel pain is a protective mechanism of the body against harm such as avoiding hot stoves, sharp edges, and physical damage to the body. Women's pain in childbirth was increased from little to much.
    - The second half of Eve's punishment is of the tree of knowledge of good and evil — "Yet your desire will be for your husband, and he will rule over you." This punishment to Eve is an increased temptation to rebel against (or submit) to her husband in the context of her prior relationship (headship-submission). The Hebrew word "desire" is used in Gen 4 for Cain's desire to tempt him to sin and in Song of Songs for sexual desire.

11. Adam is punished for listening to the voice of his wife and eating of the fruit. If Eve was of the same position as Adam, then Adam would have just been punished for eating the fruit and not for listening to his wife and eating of the fruit.

Overall, the Scriptural evidence supports the headship-submission model. It is consistently affirmed throughout the course of the Scriptures in each of the five distinct phases of Biblical history.

1. From Creation (e.g. Adam and Eve)
2. Post-Fall (e.g. after Adam and Eve sinned)
3. Pre-Mosaic Law Patriarchs (e.g. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their descendants)
4. Mosaic Law (e.g. rest of the Old Testament)
5. Christ and His resurrection (e.g. New Testament analogy of Christ-Church)

80/20 rule followup, masculine attractiveness analysis, and how to fix a dysfunctional marriage

October 6, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been some good discussion in Tinder reaffirmed the 80/20 rule and Donal's follow up on that post in Just how universal is the 80/20 rule.

Going back to the very first post on my blog Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse, which was deleted off of Boundless, there is the general case that for men and women that:

> [Women] conclusion: Women your physical beauty will get you in the door, and your personality and spirituality will make him want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.
> [Men] conclusion: Men your masculine personality and confidence will get you in the door, and your ability to lead her spiritually will make her want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.

Obviously, I didn't include appearance in the conclusion which does play a significant role as it forms a distinct first impression. First impressions are big. Women generally like tall men, with muscles, with clean style and hair, and good fashion. There are some exceptions based on amount of musculature, hair style and fashion depending on which crowds she runs with, but these are generally the core of an attractive appearance.

If we were to break it down further, it would generally be along the lines like this:

1. First impression — how tall you are, musculature, hair and style. Your body language and how you act from a distance.
2. First communication — your body language while you communicate, your charisma, your ability to exude masculine traits (confidence, boldness, strength, manliness, independence, etc.) through your words, and overall create a fun but stimulating aura.
3. Pre-date — Your consistency in exuding attractiveness in terms of masculinity. May be able to avoid this if you ask her out on a date right away.
4. Dating and later Relationship — Learning about your other qualities on whether you are a good mate choice or not. For Christians this tends to be faith, good morals and character, how you treat your family, friends, and others, what you're like as time goes on (if you're trying to hide anything or just put your best foot forward all of the time), etc.
5. Engagement and then marriage — If you're at this point, you're already a good choice from her perspective. If you're not, then she's desperate which means you may be in trouble in the long run.

In general, Christian men fail these steps at all levels.

Christian men have terrible first impressions. They don't have any sense of style. They don't work out. They're afraid to go talk to women (don't even make the communication). If they do, they definitely do NOT exude masculinity around women in any sense of the word. They're timid. They don't know how to flirt or tease a woman. And so on. I don't really need to go over all of these to show you that most of the men in the Church today do not exhibit any of these traits.

Now to switch gears, I'll add in Snapper's questions on the Curse of the romantic Beta here to comment on them. This is important for men to understand.

> It is my experience that women love for alpha guys to treat them poorly. This feeds their need for drama and excitement. For some ladies life is ALL drama and ALL excitement, and these types of ladies are screwed up. Think almost any celebrity woman who is around alpha male celebrities.

Why do women want to have fun and be stimulated? Emotions. Generally, women both in the Scripture and society are a protected and provided for class. They don't have to deal with all of the crap that men slog through to make themselves something in the world. Women HATE dealing with responsibility and bad situations because it brings them down emotionally (likely one of the reasons why God created man to be the head in marriage). On the flip side, women LOVE being emotionally stimulated and having fun. Her worst nightmare is a man who is gasp boring. A secular woman and even some Christian women will take the bad boy over the boring, to her detriment.

A man does not have to treat women like trash or create insane drama to be attractive to women. Such things are stimulating to be sure, but they are definitely inclined toward evil because they are destructive. The general thing is that you should be having fun yourself but in a way that builds up the relationship. For example, these are ways you can do it:

- Have a good sense of humor
- Tease her about her opinions or style or other things. Avoid sensitive topics (e.g. teasing her about her weight, especially if you know she's trying to lose weight).
- Assume that you're always right when assert make an opinion and make up crazy answers about why she is wrong
- Fake bully her with your strength. One of the fun things I've been doing with my wife is we got on the topic of the "floor is lava" but in the context of "off the sidewalk is lava." Of course, I started pushing her off the sidewalk for fun, and she's tried to push me off but can't since I'm stronger. She's since gotten me once though.. ugh!
- Misinterpret things she says. Can also play into humor. "That's what she said."
- Don't take her seriously when she's serious and take her seriously when she's playing. Although you have to be mindful on this as it can turn into real anger.
- Playful sexism. "You just sit there and look pretty." I've also told one of my friend's wife to "run along because the men were talking" to good effect. She laughed and faked outrage.

There's other sources who would say to treat an attractive woman like she's a bratty little sister, and there is some merit to that. In general, the common thread among all of these is this: (1) they don't put a woman on the pedestal, and (2) they treat a woman like a woman, not just like a man with boobs.

The reason why most people think that "jerks" are attractive to women is because there are not many Christian men who are attractive. The reason for this is like I've said for a long time: bad boys retain their masculinity because they don't give a crap about what society says about how "toxic" masculinity is whereas the Christian nice guys become feminized because they buy into cultural standards of masculinity (which are evil and the churchians peddle). Who is a woman going to choose? The masculine man or the feminized man? A feminized man is basically just like one of her girl friends. An emotional sponge to pour out her feelings with zero attraction and romantic interest. (And this is where the false notion of the ladder theory comes from).

> Now it is my understanding that a guy should be a proper mix of both alpha (drama) and beta (romance) to keep a relationship healthy, though the "proper mix" of yesteryear is much different from modern times. I refer a lot to the movie "In the Heart of the Sea" in which the main character leaves his pregnant wife behind to go to work, on the sea, for two years hunting whale oil. For the time period he seems to be exhibiting a good balance of alpha/beta traits in that he is very well built physically (from his work), he works a dangerous "alpha" job, yet he cares for and loves his wife when he is with her. This gives her a good balance of both drama and romance. While he is away she can worry about what he is doing, who he is with and whether or not he is still alive, and while he is home he spends time with her and likely brings her back various gifts and trinkets from different ports-of-call.

It is also not so much "alpha" and "beta" but "roles" and "responsibilities." They are not mutually exclusive and do not need to be balanced.

Women are sexually attracted to masculine leaders, protectors and providers. The role of a man in marriage is a masculine leader and protectors and these also display the quintessential masculine traits: independence, boldness, decisiveness, strength, courage, competitiveness, and so on. The responsibilities of a man in marriage is to be a provider, nourish and care for his wife, with sound Christian faith, moral, and character.

> The question is how does the beta husband/boyfriend break free from the curse of romance? For the boyfriend its not so difficult. Change. That's it. If your lady doesn't like it, let her walk. Its probably better that way anyway because she has already cemented you in her mind as her beta romance fix. Better to find a clean slate and make a new first impression as the alpha jerk who sometimes has a heart of gold.
> For husbands its a much more difficult endeavor. Your wife has already cemented you as her beta romance fix, and simply walking away is not a pleasant option. If > your a Christian then walking away is sin, as we are commanded not to part from our wives, and to continue to provide for them (1 Timothy 5:8). Christian or not, husbands also have the pleasant fun of looking down the barrel of the modern divorce court system that almost guarantees your wife walks away with half or more of your stuff, your money and possibly your livelihood if she decides to leave because she doesn't like the "new you". Like the unmarried, a married man can simply "change", but he must live with the fallout. His wife may take a liking to his new attitude, but it is more likely that she will not. She wants her alpha drama fix, but not from you. You are her romance fix, and she will not want to give that up. It gives her power to have an expectation of romance from you. The power to administer guilt, which gives her the power to make demands.

As we know, if an attractive man brought a woman roses she would love it, but if an unattractive or creepy man brought her roses she would go "ewww." This is where the SNL skit about be attractive, don't be unattractive rings true.

The best way to think about romance in Scriptural terms is the "nourish and cherish" command to husbands from Ephesian 5. Romance doesn't need to be some elaborate weekend getaway. It doesn't need to be a love letter or poem. It doesn't even have to be about getting chocolates or flowers. It does not necessarily have to be about doing anything or saying anything in particular. It's about showing you're thinking about her and that you care.

Now, Christian husbands who are stuck need mainly focus on being a better masculine leader and protector. Work out, dress well, clean shaven, be ambitious at work, take the lead at home in the relationship, make decisive decisions, don't waffle. By being a better masculine leader and protector you are ACTUALLY showing her romance.

Why is this? To understand this, we need to go back further to some old(er) material on this blog.

Generally, if a husband has become complacent into letting his wife run the marriage or not being a proactive masculine leader in the marriage, the wife becomes discontent and unhappy. This is usually accompanied with decreasing physical fitness, getting fat, and overall sloppiness or laziness.

What occurs most of the time is that the wife sees the vacuum of the leadership position and has taken up the position. This happens because the husband has voluntarily abdicated and/or the wife has willingly or unknowingly tried usurp the position. In essence, the wife steps into the authority position and has become your mother instead of your wife. Ever notice how "nagging" sounds exactly like when your mother told you to go clean up your room or do your chores? Yup, same thing. Your mother had authority to go make you do it, but if this happens in the marriage relationship your wife is stepping into the head of the relationship in the vacuum that you created either by abdicating and/or letting her usurp it.

A husband, by taking up his proper roles and responsibilities in the relationship, is actually removing his wife from those positions that she may have unwillingly and/or unwittingly taken. This will cause the stress level of the wife to go down drastically, and it will make her feel more loved. Why is this the case?

If we look at the Scriptures, it is the husbands role and responsibility to love his wife. A wife feels loved by her husband in his proper role. If the wife is in the headship position, she will feel like she is mothering her husband. She is going to feel unloved because her husband is not her husband but in effect her child. Once you reverse the roles to their proper Scriptural place, she will feel loved again because the husband in his proper role carrying out his responsibility. No need for the go out of your way to do housework stuff that is purported as "romance" by the churchians.

It's really quite simple when you analyze it in the context of the Scriptures, but modern Christians who have been deceived by culture like to do things that do not align with the Word of God.

All I'll say about the Las Vegas shooter

October 7, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

While the media and other people bemoan the gun laws or the senseless violence, we know better.

Fatherlessness.

> While Stephen Paddock appeared to have no criminal history, his father was a notorious bank robber, Eric Paddock said. Benjamin Hoskins Paddock tried to run down an FBI agent with his car in Las Vegas in 1960 and wound up on the agency's most wanted list after escaping from a federal prison in Texas in 1968, when Stephen Paddock was a teen.
> The oldest of four children, Paddock was 7 when his father was arrested for the robberies. A neighbor, Eva Price, took him swimming while FBI agents searched the family home.
> She told the Tucson Citizen at the time: "We're trying to keep Steve from knowing his father is held as a bank robber. I hardly know the family, but Steve is a nice boy. It's a terrible thing."
> An FBI poster issued after the escape said Benjamin Hoskins Paddock had been "diagnosed as psychopathic" and should be considered "armed and very dangerous." He'd been serving a 20-year sentence for a string of bank robberies in Phoenix.
> The elder Paddock remained on the lam for nearly a decade, living under an assumed name in Oregon. Investigators found him in 1978 after he attracted publicity for opening the state's first licensed bingo parlor. He died in 1998.

Imagine a 7 year old boy finding out that his father is a top 10 FBI wanted criminal, then growing up without a father role model (and even if his father hadn't been arrested what type of influence would that be?).

I suppose we don't need to go through all of the various statistics again, but here some samples.

> - 63% of youth suicides are from fatherless homes (US Dept. Of Health/Census) – 5 times the average.
> - 90% of all homeless and runaway children are from fatherless homes – 32 times the average.
> - 85% of all children who show behavior disorders come from fatherless homes – 20 times the average. (Center for Disease Control)
> - 80% of rapists with anger problems come from fatherless homes –14 times the average. (Justice & Behavior, Vol 14, p. 403-26)
> - 71% of all high school dropouts come from fatherless homes – 9 times the > average. (National Principals Association Report)

Just as the black boys and teenagers get sucked into violence and criminal activity without fathers, so too those in white middle and upper class upbringings get sucked into gun violence. It just looks like mass shootings instead of gang violence. Others are suicidal. Still others are rapists. Still others abuse alcohol and drugs.

Lack of identity, lack of role models, lack of community. Just another manifestation of a crumbling system.

It does not bode well that the out of wedlock birth rates have skyrocketed as marriages have imploded over the past few decades. Expect more of the same. The crumbling of the black families only shows us how bad it’s going to get.

The Peter, Titus 2, and marriage connection

October 11, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since this was being discussed in Dalrock's comments.

Peter says he won't deny Jesus, but Jesus prophesies that he will:

> John 13:36 Simon Peter *said to Him, "Lord, where are You going?" Jesus answered, "Where I go, you cannot follow Me now; but you will follow later." 37 Peter *said to Him, "Lord, why can I not follow You right now? I will lay down my life for You." 38 Jesus *answered, "Will you lay down your life for Me? Truly, truly, I say to you, a rooster will not crow until you deny Me three times.

Peter denies Jesus 3 times:

> John 18:25 Now Simon Peter was standing and warming himself. So they said to him, "You are not also one of His disciples, are you?" He denied it, and said, "I am not." 26 One of the slaves of the high priest, being a relative of the one whose ear Peter cut off, *said, "Did I not see you in the garden with Him?" 27 Peter then denied it again, and immediately a rooster crowed.

Post-resurrection Jesus gives the opportunity for Peter to redeem himself from the denials:

> John 21:15 So when they had finished breakfast, Jesus *said to Simon Peter, "Simon, son of John, do you [f]love (agapao) Me more than these?" He *said to Him, "Yes, Lord; You know that I [g]love (phileo) You." He *said to him, "Tend My lambs."
> 16 He *said to him again a second time, "Simon, son of John, do you [h]love (agapao) Me?" He *said to Him, "Yes, Lord; You know that I [i]love (phileo) You." He *said to him, "Shepherd My sheep."
> 17 He *said to him the third time, "Simon, son of John, do you [j]love (phileo) Me?" Peter was grieved because He said to him the third time, "Do you [k]love (phileo) Me?" And he said to Him, "Lord, You know all things; You know that I [l]love (phileo) You." Jesus *said to him, "Tend My sheep.

If you're familiar with the Greek in the passage, you'll note that Jesus asks Peter if he loves (agapao) him twice, but Peter can only muster up a phileo or brotherly love/affection response. Jesus, probably with compassion for Peter, finally asks him if he loves (phileo) him.

Although the Scriptures say Peter was grieved because Jesus asked him a third time, I wouldn't be surprised to find out that Peter was also grieved because Jesus didn't expect him to aspire to the higher standard, only knowing what he could do in the moment. Peter wasn't ready to to have the faith to be crucified for Jesus, even after he saw that Jesus was resurrected from the dead.

Next, we find out that Jesus loves the Church as husbands should love their wives. Thus, Christ:Church::husbands:wives.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love (agapao) your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love (agapao) their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body.

Finally, we come to Titus 2 which commands wives to love their husbands.

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good, 4 so that they may [b]encourage the young women to love (phileo) their husbands, to love (phileo) their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

However, why aren't women called to agape love their husbands in marriage while their husbands are to their wives? Why are they only told to have affectionate love, to respect, and to submit?

We've gone over the discussion before about if women have the capacity to agape love. In the context of general Christians I think yes. In marriage? Questionable. Although wives say they love their husbands, it's not the same love as a husband gives a wife.

We can see this as the Scriptures giving some grace to wives, just like Jesus did to Peter in the moment. Holding them to the highest standard, when knowing the nature of women may be too great a burden.

There may also be something special about the headship-submission relationship that requires love to go top-down instead of bottom-up. Obedience, respect, and affection are all attitudes and actions that build off of each other to keep a self reinforcing positive cycle.

In general, I am of the opinion that the "agapao love" that wives show their husbands is respect, submission, and affection. How agapao love looks is different per different relationships. In the marriage relationship, it is the roles and responsibilities that the Scriptures state.

Of course, I could be missing something. Maybe my readers may have some other speculations as to why this is the case.

The bad about Christian radio

October 31, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still here, just writing.

In the meantime, "What's so bad about Christian radio." Some good excerpts:

> His blog was titled Christian Music Radio Is More Theological Than You Think. I don't have any doubt that it's theological. If you're opening your mouth and talking about God, you are being theological. The problem is, if it's not grounded in biblical historical orthodoxy, it's probably pretty bad. I agree with Wax that it's not fair to say Christian radio has nothing theologically substantive to offer. But I disagree that it's more than "little."
> Still, I will concede that listening to K-Love is much better for a person's brain than listening to secular Top 40 or even a country music station. That doesn't excuse the fact that K-Love would flunk out of any theology course higher than a flannel-board level Sunday school class and needs a major overhaul. More specifically, Christian radio needs reformation. It's dipped in Osteen, Warren, and Meyer's theology and savors nothing anywhere as lasting or as flavorful as Piper, MacArthur, or Sproul's.

Basically, it's watered down gospel.

> Like most radio and television programming, Christian radio caters to a specific demographic, and that demographic is women between the ages of 20 and 50 (give or take). Whether or not Christian radio is doing it on purpose, that demographic is also mostly white.
> It gets way more specific than that: this target woman lives in suburbia in a house with a mortgage, drives a mini-van, has three kids, a dog and a cat, a husband who works full-time, she also works but it's probably part-time, has a household income between $55 and $70K, vacations in July, doesn't have enough time to read her Bible but she has enough time to journal, loves Beth Moore and Joyce Meyer, and goes to church about 3 times a month. This woman even has a name — Becky.
> Some radio stations will put up a mock picture of this woman in the studio, and the DJs are told to look at it and know that's who they're talking to. I've attended seminars where this was the whole focus of each session: Becky, Becky, Becky. The entire radio station is programmed for her — not her husband and not her kids. Giving glory to God is incidental, or it's presented like this: "By reaching Becky, you're giving glory to God." Becky's name is mentioned more often at these conferences than God's name is.

The key is to reach the wife of a family, probably since she's more likely to turn on the radio to something 'Christian.'

> Why do so many of the songs sound alike?
>
> Because radio is about producing the least number of negatives. Technically a radio station is not actually trying to give you something that you like. They're trying to give you something you don't dislike. As long as they can remain as even as possible without too much variation or fluctuation, they're more likely to keep you on their radio station and not flipping to something else.
> When the radio station maintains a continuous blend of sound, it just kind of melts into the background and you become oblivious that you're still listening to it. You know how when you drive the same route to work every day, sometimes entire stretches of the trip will go by, and you'll wonder where those miles went? Listening to the radio is kind of like that.
> If your listening experience were to change drastically — like a loud up-tempo song were to be followed by a soft, slow song, for example — you come out of your trance, realize that something has changed, and so cognitively you're more likely to want to change as well and will turn the radio station to something else.

The key is for you to keep it on in the background. Because they're listener supported.

> Why do certain aspects of Christian theology get overlooked?
> Again, lyrics aren't as important as how catchy the song is. Another reason deep songs get hardly any airplay is that they make a person think. Remember, we don't want a listener to think too much or they might change the station. A thought-provoking song also runs a higher risk of making a person disagree with what the artist is saying. That means, oohh, it might offend someone, and we just can't have that. The more widely appealing the song lyrics are, the better.
> K-Love's sugar slogan is "Positive, encouraging," and they try as hard as they can to fulfill that mission statement. My dad started a Christian radio station in the 70s whose slogan was "Making Him Known." That's not K-Love's primary objective. It's not to preach Christ and share the gospel; it's just to be positive and encouraging. Their version of God is always positive and encouraging — hence why their DJs avoid references to hell, and would rather talk about the Loch Ness Monster than sin and repentance and how Christ saves us from the wrath of God (John 3:36).
> Contemporary Christian radio does not exist to teach. It exists to entertain with Christian-themed content. I'm sure there are people who work at K-Love or the Fish or Way-FM who care about people. But if they were truly genuine, they would know the gospel well and they would share it. They have the perfect opportunity to do it. But they don't.
> I've said for years Christian radio doesn't care about teaching. The response I often heard was, "It's not the job of Christian radio to teach people. That's the job of the church!" You're right, it is the job of the church. It's also the job of Christian radio. Very plainly, Colossians 3:16 instructs, "Let the word of Christ > dwell in you richly, teaching and admonishing one another in all wisdom, singing psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, with thankfulness in your hearts to God.”

> When it comes down to it, the problems in Christian radio are the result of the problems in the church. Why is it that Christian radio eschews sound doctrine and is driven by demographics and marketing strategies? Because many churches are that way. Until the church abandons this approach to ministry and becomes committed to sound doctrine, eating and serving the meat of God’s word, Christian radio will continue to be Little Debbie (Little Becky?) and glass-of-milk theology.
> When Rick Warren started Saddleback Church, he said he went door-to-door and asked everyone what they wanted in a church. He didn’t share the gospel with them — he asked them what they wanted their church to be like. Many other churches have followed that course, eating up the strategies of the “Purpose Driven Church.”
> This approach to ministry is not “gospel driven,” which focuses entirely on Christ; it’s “Purpose Driven” which focuses entirely on the consumer. Likewise, Christian radio is full of consumer-focused slogans like “Positive, Encouraging” or “Safe for the Whole Family” or “Uplifting, Upbeat, Real.”

Consumer and marketing strategies > gospel.

Anyway, the rest of it is a great analysis of why Christian radio is the way it is. Check it out.

Open rebellion

November 14, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Some excellent discussion over at Scott's on the impasse.

Snapper writes about the problem of "open rebellion," reinforced by the Church:

> A woman will use the "settled" tactic if it will gain her points for control or sympathy. Within the church it's regarded as disrespectful for a woman to say such a thing, but that doesn't mean she doesn't feel that way. In the privacy of their own home a woman who feels she settled will absolutely make sure her husband knows this because it gives them the power of control over their husbands through guilt and shame. In private she may let one or more of her friends know her feelings because it will gain her sympathy and affirmation ("We understand you settled, you are worth SO much more than what he is giving you.").
> I recall a conversation between two of my aunts. I was young and overheard my parents talking about it. One of my aunts, married but a few years, complained to the other about how she "settled" for my uncle (my dads brother). She came from an affluent family and my dads family was anything but. My uncle was a good man, Christian, a hard worker, but didn't make the kind of money she was used to, so she was considering divorce. Unfortunately for her she aired her complaints to the wrong lady, as my other aunt was a strong Christian woman. She called her out and let her have it, reminding her that SHE made the choice to marry her husband, and how, as a Christian woman, she shouldn't even be entertaining the idea of divorce. She was a feisty woman, and I have no doubt the conversation was probably a lot less cordial than it was made out to be, but to this day the couple in peril remain married, and happy.
> A woman who married her beta comfort doesn't want to see him change into a confident alpha. Not with her, anyway. Sure if he becomes more confident in the workplace or more confident with the waiter at the restaurant, that's all fine and good: But to stand up against his wife! Let it never be! Sure he can "lead", so long as his "leading" doesn't require her to actually submit to him. So long as he doesn't ask her to do something she really doesn't want to do, he can lead all he wants! As long as he doesn't put his foot down everything is a-ok, but, boy-howdy, he'd better not dare tell me "because I said so" or try to make a direct order of something. Once this happens it becomes a problem because it requires her to let go of her power over him, and he cannot be alpha enough for her to allow that to happen.
> Again I use my life as a perfect example of this. I had to lay down the law in a situation last week. I had to tell my wife "no" on something and it had to escalate to "because I said your not going to". I don't typically have to do this, but in this > situation I had to assert my authority to avoid future problems and because she was devoid of all the facts of a situation. That didn't matter. Suddenly all her Godly obedience and submission goes out the window and it might not be much longer until she is, again, reminding me that OUR marriage was a mistake. That she "settled". That maybe "God intended for her to marry someone else, but she was young and stupid and maybe she married before she was supposed to".

> I was not her alpha, I was her beta comfort, and she wants me to remain that way, even if it means insulting me and belittling me by telling me that I was a mistake, or reminding me that I am the leftovers. The only defense I have now is to stop caring.

ys also comments:

> Your situation puts reality to what I have seen from some I know, that is, one can't simply "apply" the magic of the manosphere to one's marriage. Your problem is not that you are "gaming" her wrong, it's that you started your marriage off on the wrong foot. You have acknowledged this, but it's a good reminder for men in their 30s or 40s just discovering the manosphere, who were beta comfort: They might change their marriage. They might not. Prayer and wisdom are needed. Totally different than starting off in your 20s. I hope it goes well for you, and I thank you for your real-world example.

To be quite frank this is not strictly true.

There is truth to the notion that starting out on the right foot is much better, although we do not necessarily know that is the case here. Women/wives will often "rewrite history" to fit whatever emotions they are feeling at the moment. She doesn't love you now? Oh, she never loved you in the first place. In any case, however a husband got into this position is somewhat irrelevant. It is simply the case that he's facing an open rebellion now, history rewritten or not.

The case of "open rebellion" is almost exactly like the "friend zone."

It's all well and good when you agree on things and you get along fine, but God forbid you do something she doesn't like. Then she'll start to claim that "you're not my boss" (when you are) or "stop trying to control me" or "I'll do what I want" and things like that. She'll gladly accept your friendship, but if you're not affirming her actions that are separate from you then you're going to get an earful.

It is worth noting that sex tends to be wane as a wife loses attraction for her husband for various reasons.

The "friend zone" is something that is quite difficult to escape from. I've written on it before though, and it is possible to escape from it. Understanding the friend zone and escaping it. If you are single, there are four different ways that a man escapes the friend zone, but some of them don't apply if you're married. Let's go through them.

> First, the girl likes you all along: You're already attractive enough for her, and > she was waiting for you to pull the trigger. This jives with Scott's experiences. Over the course of said relationship, the woman will often hint that you "finally asked her out" or "it was about time" or "I'm so happy that you eventually asked me out" which means that she was interested in you for a while before you asked her out. The keywords that show you that she was attracted prior are "finally" and "about time" and "eventually" signifying a period of time where she was attracted before you pulled the trigger.

> The other way you can figure this by straight up asking her when she was first attracted to you. If she's in a relationship with you sometimes she tells you straight up: "When I first laid eyes on you I liked you." Well, for most men that doesn't usually happen. The vast majority of women are not attracted at first sight as we know from the OKCupid studies women rate 80% of men as below average.

Obviously, this does not apply to married men.

> Second, you have to change significantly (e.g. raise your SMV/sexual attractiveness or become more masculine) in a time gap. This scenario manifests if you don't see the woman for a while, and you make significant changes to your life such as the example that FBNF discusses. For example, if a woman is a female "6" and you're a male "5". However, you start lifting, get your stuff together, have a growth spurt, and whatnot and then you come back as a male "7" or "8" she'll reevaluate you as a potential interest whereas before you were "just a friend."
> A real world example of this aside from FBNF's example is that most of the men approaching 30 and into their mid 30s will see women who were formerly not interested in their 20s start to become more interested in them because they become more attractive. Part of this is their own declining attractiveness tied in with men's increasing attractiveness into their 30s. The woman may have gone from a 7->6 whereas the man goes from a 6->8. Since the man is now a "8" and she is a "6" (or may perceive herself as still a "7"), she is then interested in him.
> There are a couple of other scenarios which are much less common. I'll describe them now.

> Third, it is possible to where you're with her the whole time and she gradually notices you. This is the same thing that happens to wives when a fat husband starts working out, getting his crap together, and whatnot. She sees him becoming more attractive — although she'll only admit that it makes her "uncomfortable" or "unhappy" that you're doing it — and makes her mind go at 100 miles per hour trying to figure it out. However, this discomfort makes the man more sexually attractive to her, so the bedroom antics will heat up. This is part of what is encompassed under "dread game" although I would disagree specifically of making it seem like you're going to leave or cheat.

> Alternatively, usually some random event in a woman's life wakes her up to the fact that you're now attractive. For example, a woman's girlfriends could make a passing comment that "she's single and how you're looking like a good catch nowadays." The woman would then laugh and dismiss what her friend says: "nah, he's just a friend" or "haha, he's not really my type." But it will pique her curiosity, and when she reexamines you and you're now more attractive than you were in the past. She then comes around and agree with her friend's assessment that you're now a catch.

Both 2 and 3 are essentially the same for married men.

It tends to be a long(er) term fix because men's attraction does not necessarily raise just like that.

- Becoming significantly more fit and finding a solid style all take time.
- Grooming and hairstyle are more short term.
- Becoming increasingly masculine via confidence, independence, and other traits take time as well.
- Acting more like a leader takes time as well.
- Learning to be cool under conflict and other pressure situations takes time and discipline.

Overall, typically you have to become at least significantly more attractive and/or manly such that other women will start to notice you and give you attention and/or mentioning it to your wife what a good catch you are.

This does not necessarily solve the problem(s) either. You can be the "best" leader in the world like God and/or Jesus and someone who claims they are a Christian can still choose to go off the reservation and rebel against them. Becoming a strong masculine leader only makes submission easier, but a wife can still choose to rebel regardless. A husband must accept that he does it because he wants to obey God, not because it will make his wife change.

> Fourth, it is possible that a girl has put you in the "friend zone" or "undecided" where being undecided on you is not enough information for her to make a decision. Typically, this happens if you're a strong silent type. Then a major incident wakes her up to the fact that you're a man.
> For example, usually some powerful act of bravery or leadership wakes her up. One such instance would be if someone starts choking and everyone is panicking. But you know what to do. You calmly run over to the situation, and do the heimlich maneuver and the person is fine. Then you take control of the situation and calm everyone down from panicking. You saved a life and exhibited leadership under pressure. A woman is now attracted to you.
> Alternatively, a different such situation is a man displaying social dominance. If a girl is giving you crap or gossiping and then you tell her to stop. You two get in an > "argument" and then you ream her out until she apologizes. This type of social dominance over other women (or potentially men as well) will make women take interest and be attracted to you. The power of your personality and your status rises to where she is attracted.

> Another such example would be you're in the same church. You're mere acquaintances. However, a Bible study is being started up soon and you're picked as a leader. You facilitate an awesome discussion while being charismatic and funny. She becomes interested in you after this. You were merely "meh" before, but you've displayed a significant aspect of social charisma that she didn't know you had before.

These situations tend to be more rare for married men simply because they know you very well.

In general, a male friend to a woman is a friend because he is not attractive. If he were attractive, then she has a stronger compulsion to be more submissive to him. However, she still must choose whether to submit or not to him. If wives are constantly being bombarded to be rebellious, it is also potentially likely that they would continue being rebellious.

> 1 Corinthians 15:33 Do not be deceived: "Bad company corrupts good morals."

In Snapper's case, the "Church" "friends" who keep poisoning his wife to be rebellious are a large part of the problem that are literally destroying his marriage.

Oscar comments:

> I used to believe the "if you're attractive to her, she'll want to submit to you" line, but I've observed too many cases of attractive men who take care of themselves physically – who are good providers and good fathers – who are shackled to ungrateful, disrespectful, contentious, rebellious wives who look like beach balls stuffed with lard.
> There's very little a man can do to get his wife to submit to him. Either she obeys God and submits to her husband, or she doesn't. The best a Christian man can do is avoid marrying a contentious, rebellious woman, because once he's married to her, he's stuck dealing with her rebelliousness and contentiousness.

Part of being a good leader via Ephesians 5 is to constantly sanctify the wife with the washing of the water of the word — this is the sacrificial love that Jesus did for us. This is not "capitulating to your wife's demands" to "make her happy" like a lot of modern Christian preachers claim. It's actually holding her accountable to her bad behavior, just like Adam did not tell Eve that she shouldn't have eaten the fruit in the garden (and ate it himself).

A lot of husbands avoid calling out bad behavior because it creates conflict, but this is where leadership is born. Holding both yourself and her to a higher standard when it is difficult is the epitome of good leadership, even when it consistently brings whining and emotional reactions from her. Reigning in your own emotions and reactions is easier said than done, but it is critical for demonstrating that tantrums don't get results.

For the husband that is in this particular situation, it is often better to lead by example than try to explain and/or argue about why you should take a particular action. This means just doing what you think is best in the situation, especially if she doesn't want to "be the role of helpmeet." This will help to start to set the standard subtly that you are a man of action rather than words, which will help to reverse her impression of you as her "friend" and may eventually lead to her to reconsider her open rebellion. Or succinctly: Do rather than say, most of the time.

Anyway, a chunk of similar analysis was in the other thread, but not everyone reads Scott so it's worth compiling over all. There are other components of leadership that are important as well, but those can be discussed more in other topics.

Apparently wealthy women are doomed to be miserable

November 15, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From QZ — A sociologist explains why wealthy women are doomed to be miserable

> My recent in-depth interview research on the lifestyles of affluent families in New York City highlights the ways in which wealthy wives are often cast as spoiled dilettantes—notions sometimes even held by their own husbands. The stay-at-home mothers I interviewed were eager to distance themselves from the "ladies who lunch." These women were mostly in their late 30s or 40s, with children at home. Nearly all were married to men working in finance who brought home $400,000 to $2 million or more in annual income. They had worked in, among other fields, finance, law, fashion, and medicine. And many felt deeply anxious, and guilty, about their socioeconomic status.
> Affluent stay-at-home mothers are a cultural lightning rod for anxieties about wealth and privilege. The point is not that we should feel sorry for women with a personal chef and a house in the Hamptons. Rather, my goal is to illuminate who gets to be both wealthy and morally worthy in our society. In the modern-day US, our concept of meritocracy is inherently gendered. This means that women bear the brunt of negative judgments about wealth—and raises questions about what women "deserve," and on what basis, that cut across social class.
> Affluent stay-at-home mothers are a cultural lightning rod for anxieties about wealth and privilege for two reasons. First, paid work is an increasingly important moral yardstick for wealthy people, including women. With the decline of the quasi-aristocracy of the WASP elite in the latter half of the 20th century, and the rise of finance, tech, and other highly compensated occupations, the upper class is now dominated by the "working wealthy." Wealth is accepted as legitimate largely by virtue of work—and so figures like Bill Gates and Warren Buffet are not begrudged their billions.

Must be so hard to be wealthy as a woman. Gasp.

> But "hard work" turns out to mean "paid work"—work that men are more likely than women to keep once they have children. Sociologist Pamela Stone and others have shown that "opting out" is often not really a choice, as high-powered professional jobs are rarely flexible enough to combine with being the primary parent—as women nearly always are across all classes. The women I spoke with also tend to be married to men who earn more, as men often do, given the gender pay gap in high-paying professions. So the woman's job is the first to go.
> Not bringing in money left some of these women feeling vulnerable. A parenting > expert told me, of the wealthy stay-at-home moms she worked with, “They feel so guilty that they’re wasting their degrees… They feel so ‘less than.’”

> Helen (a pseudonym, like all other names in this piece), who had been an investment banker and had left her career reluctantly, told me, “[I’m] well-educated. I had a career. You know, where is all that now?” She said she sometimes felt like she was “working for” her husband. She added, “There are power dynamics, where he’s the breadwinner now, and I’m really not. And yet, I do so many things for the family that you can’t put a number on it.” Her unpaid labor is hard to measure, and therefore hard to appreciate.

A product of feminism as it drives women to be like men, and it strives to make men and women competitors. Of course, we can’t blame feminism for those woes, but even so women are left feeling unhappy if they’re working or if they’re raising kids.

> The point here is not the wealthy stay-at-home mothers are particularly deserving of praise. Instead, what I want to highlight is that the American idea of “meritocracy” both perpetuates and relies on traditional gender roles.
> So long as women are expected to serve as the primary caregivers for children, and so long as the gender pay gap persists, women in high-income brackets will continue to be more likely to give up their jobs and stay home. In so doing, the women become targets for cultural disdain—as does the time they spend renovating, shopping, and doing other tasks that are necessary to maintain their families’ lifestyles.
> The upshot is that our culture directs doubts about what it means to be a “good” rich person toward women, while making it easy for men with lucrative jobs to feel morally worthy of their wealth. In this way, women carry our cultural, ethical, and psychological baggage around money. Men, on the other hand, travel light.

And of course, at the end, we have the usual potshot at “traditional roles” including the “gender pay gap” as the cause for wealthy womens’ woes while they try to bear the burden of “our cultural, ethical, and psychological baggage around money.”

You can’t make this stuff up.

The article is written in the typical woman’s style of the sin of pride: “bragplaining”

1. Brag about your wealth, nannies, lifestyle, and perks but simultaneously…
2. Complain about how you’re so unhappy because you’re not valued the way you think you should be and how the reader/listener should sympathize with your woes.

Key takeaways:

- Feminism is bad.
- Hypergamy is never satisfied, no matter how “well” a woman marries
- Money doesn’t solve problems
- Caring and comparing what others think about you leads to unhappiness

- Getting your worth and/or value from money leads to unhappiness
- 1 Timothy 6:10 The love of money is the root of all evil

Interestingly, the “morals” that are referred to specifically in this article are all about money. To be “morally worthy” or be valued, you have to make the big bucks. What a sad life to live.

Happy international mens day

November 19, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since our culture loves making up days to celebrate, happy international mens day to you all.

Of course, you'll hear virtually nothing about this celebration — compared to "international womens day" which is widely trumpeted on every media outlet — as no one really cares.

Enjoy it nonetheless!

On divorce Part 5

November 20, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

This post is a re–re–re-consolidation and simplified explanation of the Scriptures on divorce. Previous discussions include several conversations and much of the same material from On divorce and On divorce Part 2 and On divorce Part 3 and On divorce Part 4. Also related: polygyny. This is one of the original research articles that got me started on analyzing the Scriptures on divorce. Read it if you have time.

The Lysa divorce fiasco thread that keeps on giving is why I took a look at this again.

The biggest thing is that people don't properly understand the background of all of the OT passages on divorce and putting away which set the stage for why Jesus is talking specifically about putting away and not divorce.

This re-re-re-post removes excess verbiage and makes the controversial verse (Matthew 19:9) easier to understand. To understand it fully, I would suggest re-reading the whole thing as all of the Scripture is tied together or at the very least starting from part 6 to understand the entire background of the Pharisees' passage.

Table of contents

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?
2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?
3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah
4. Malachi 2 — the background from the Old Testament to the New Testament
5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT
6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap
7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation
8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion
9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response on hardness of heart
10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture
11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage
12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary
13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke
14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce
15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives
16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses
17. Arguments against divorce for adultery
18. Conclusion

Let's get started.

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in Mosiac law. This will be important later.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective, very few if any women that were caught in marital fraud were actually stoned. Women caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced (put away + writ of divorce) as the couple was not considered legally married.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because it shows how a woman could be put away (without being legally divorced).

3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord is shown to follow the laws he outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity. By the time the NT rolls around, they were no longer “Jews” but “Samaritans” because they have been divorced by God and intermixed with the surrounding nations. The Samaritans were despised by the Jews because they were no longer part of the God’s chosen people.

It should be noted that the Lord still wants repentance in Jeremiah 3:14, even though He legally divorced Israel.

On the other hand, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother’s divorcement (sêpher ‘êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and delivers Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

4. Malachi 2 — The background from the Old Testament to the New Testament

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The passage only talks about putting away and not legal divorce under the Law of Moses. The main background behind this passage is that “divorce” in surrounding cultures was simply putting away (without a writ of divorce). Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. Husbands mimicked the surrounding culture because of two reasons:

1. Selfish gain. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride’s father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry.
2. Marginalized wives. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would still be legally married to her husband, which allowed her unable to remarry without committing adultery.

This is why putting away is termed treacherous by the Lord. This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus’ interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament.

5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

The OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek. There are synonymous terms in the Hebrew and Greek.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on
> Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Note: I crossed out the two instances of “divorce” within Strong’s definition of apoluo because apoluo does not denote a legal divorce according to the Law of Moses. Hence, Jesus would not have used apoluo to mean “divorce” in Matthew because He does not abolish the law but fulfills the law.

6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees’ multi layered trap

Line by line analysis, given our solid background:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

The word “every cause” is another instance of background. The Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for “every cause” due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important). It’s likely that the Pharisees who asked this question to Jesus were Hillelites, which is why they threw in the “every cause” phrase in as well to challenge Jesus further.

Your spider senses should be tingling with the tricky wording of “lawful” with “putting away” (without writ of divorce) and “every cause.”

The trap is that the Pharisees are pitting Roman law versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could “divorce” your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo) much like the surrounding culture in Malachi 2. However, Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth).

The trap: If Jesus answers that you can put away a wife without a bill of divorcement the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you need a bill of divorcement then the Pharisees accuse Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law (like they eventually did before Pontius Pilate).

This is similar to other traps the Pharisees employed such as it being lawful to pay taxes to God or Caesar (Matt 22, Mark 12) which would pit Jewish law against Roman law.

7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus knows that it’s a no-win question. He sidesteps the Pharisees’ trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law. Instead, Jesus discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

This is Jesus’ answer on divorce: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”

No divorce.

8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap and are confused. If God did not intended for any divorce then why divorce in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24 (Putting the wife away AND giving her a bill of divorcement)?

The Pharisees acknowledgement that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement reveals their trap. The Pharisees knew that a divorce was putting away and a bill of divorcement, but they only tested Jesus on putting away only.

9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds that this part of the law was created because human hearts are hard. Jesus doesn't want "putting away" for any reason: valid divorce which is "putting away + writ of divorce" (e.g. Deut 24) or treacherous "putting away" (e.g. Malachi 2) because of the hardness of hearts.

10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

Jesus answers the original question that the Pharisees posed: "what lawful instances can a man put away?" You can see the mirror of the verses which confirms this:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?
>
> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

We have established that Jesus is answering the Pharisees original question. Next, read the verse without the "exception clause" to understand why it makes sense.

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for~~ ~~fornication (porneia)~~, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, […], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> In plain English:
> If you put away your wife and marry another you commit adultery and whoever marries her commits adultery.

The meaning is obvious. If you put away your wife without legally divorcing her — give her a writ of divorcement before sending her away — you're still married to her. If you're still married to her, both you and her commit adultery if you marry another.

Now to add in back the exception:

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

What is the only case you can "put away" a "wife" without legal divorce? In the Law of Moses that would be Deuteronomy 22 where the marriage was invalid because of fraud. Since the marriage was invalid because of fraud, you can put her away without giving her a writ of divorce.

Porneia, in this case, refers specifically to invalid marriages because of marital fraud.

There is additional evidence why porneia does not refer to adultery here.

- First, Jesus specifically says "except it be for fornication (porneia). "Fornication" is any illicit sexual union including incest (1 Cor 5) and adultery. If Jesus was referring specifically to adultery here then "moichao" is a much more accurate term than "porneia." Moichao is used later in the verse, yet it is not used here. You would have to admit that Jesus doesn't know to use the term "adultery" if he is permitting divorce.
- Second, if Jesus was talking specifically about a legitimate divorce for adultery, according to the Law of Moses, He would have said (in reference to Deut 24):

> "Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) with a writ of divorce (apostasion) his wife, "except it be for adultery (moichiao),
> Instead, He says in reference to Deut 22:
> "Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, "except it be for fornication (porneia),

The Greek wording is important because it tells us what passages Jesus is referencing in Mosaic Law. The answer is Deuteronomy 22 and illegitimate marriages as opposed to Deuteronomy 24 and rules on divorce.

- Third, this also explains exactly happening in Malachi 2 and Roman times. Husbands were defaulting to the culture and putting away their wives without a writ of divorce contrary to the Law of Moses. The wives could not marry again because they were still married to their original husbands. If they did they were committing adultery.

- Fourth, Jesus continues to avoid the Pharisees' trap. Remember, "putting away" in Roman culture is synonymous for divorce. Jesus references the only part of the Law where "putting away" is valid, which would not conflict with Roman divorce laws.
- Fifth, sacraments/covenants like marriage cannot be formed if there is deception by any party. They require that the full Truth is disclosed. This is similar to contract law and why there are annulments for invalid marriages.
- Sixth, the nail in the coffin. If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery, then He would simply be repeating Deuteronomy 24 verbatim as it says a husband could legitimately divorce for adultery. Given the disciples response in the next section, we know that is not what Jesus is saying.

A preponderance of logical evidence backs the "exception clause" referring directly to the Deuteronomy 22. The man could put the wife away (without a writ of divorce) because the marriage was a sham. Thus,

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Therefore, Jesus makes two distinct statements in this entire passage:

> On marriage and divorce:
>
> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> On putting away in regard to fraudulent marriages (referencing Deut 22):
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

In conclusion, Jesus says there is no divorce. You can only put away if there is marriage fraud.

For example, in the case of fraud, a wife that lies about her past sexual history can be put away because it's a fraudulent marriage. Interestingly, though we often negatively critique him, Mark Driscoll experienced this. You can see the devastation, which is why God makes an exception for this.

11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fraudulently married by deception.

Additional evidence supports this. As mentioned prior, if Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery (like in Deut 24), the disciples would not have responded like this.

When Jesus fulfills the Law, it is always vastly more difficult than the former Law. For example, "Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself" (Matt 22) is transformed to "a new command I give to you: that you love one another, just as I have loved you, that you love one another" (John 13, John 15).

The standards of the the New Testament always supersede that of the Old Testament.

No divorce period except for fraudulent marriages is a hard word. A really hard word.

12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary

Additional evidence is the case where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus [r]Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been [s]betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away (apoluō autos) privily.

Joseph engagement and marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was supposed to be marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male > and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

First, there is no “exception clause” in both Mark and Luke. This would conflict with the passages in Matthew passages if it referred to adultery. As we now know, Mark and Luke do not conflict with Matthew because the “exception clause” refers to fraudulent marriages and not divorce for adultery.

Second, the background behind these passages is that Mark and Luke were mainly written to the Gentiles while Matthew was written to the Hebrews. The reason for this is that “putting away” was “divorce” for the Gentiles. The instruction is that they should not do that at all. As they were not under the Law of Moses, this goes back to Jesus statement of original intention: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” There is no divorce for Gentile believers.

14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she > is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

Romans 7 does not speak specifically about whether you can legally divorce or not. Paul is speaking to the scenarios of being unbound by the law (in death) rather than about divorce because He is discussing our salvation and grace versus works. Husbands were allowed to divorce their wives in Deuteronomy 24, but wives were not allowed to divorce their husbands. Hence, when Paul speaks to the scenario of a wife being bound by the law to her husband until he dies as the example because a wife cannot divorce her husband.

15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

The Lord is speaking to a Roman/Greek population in the Corinthians and not the Jewish people. Hence, the Lord is speaking against the Roman law that "divorce" could be done through "putting away" or simply "departing" in the case of the wife.

Likewise, the Lord follows this up with the only correct path for those separated or divorced: stay single or reconcile. This is a hard word for most Christians because divorce and remarriage to another is not an option.

This agrees with Jesus' original statements on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put > away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. "If I'm not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry." That is the "liberal" interpretation of this passage.

If you examine the wording closely, the passage only says that if they depart then you're not under the bondage of the marriage anymore. It does not necessarily condone remarriage either. You have to make a leap of faith to do that.

Overall, it's not specifically clear so there is the possible that you are allowed to remarry if an unbelieving spouse leaves.

17. Arguments against divorce for adultery

We've examined all of the evidence for the exception clause of putting away to refer to Deuteronomy 22 and marital fraud. Here is the evidence that the exception clause does not refer to divorce for adultery based on the text.

- Moichao = act of adultery specifically. Jesus doesn't use that word in the "exception."
- Putting away is not divorce according to the Law of Moses, which both Jesus and the Pharisees knew.
- Disciples response ("it is better not to marry") indicates that it does not refer to Deut 24 where you can already divorce for adultery.
- Why would Jesus repeat and agree to what the Pharisees already stated which is the fact that the Law of Moses states you can divorce for adultery.
- Precedent of Joseph and Mary where "putting away" is the righteous option for marital fraud (not killing her according to Deut 22).
- Agreement of Mark and Luke. If Jesus made an exception Matthew, then Mark and Luke would not agree with Matthew and the Bible would contradict itself.

Overall, I can't think of one piece of evidence in combination with looking at both theOld and New Testament that indicates one can divorce for adultery. The only circumstantial evidence that those who support divorce for adultery keep trying to stand on is that "porneia" can refer to adultery in some instances according to Strong's. Ironically, it is never used to refer to adultery in the NT, especially when there is a more suitable word which is moichao.

There are also no Christian traditions that support divorce for adultery. The only exception is in the past century or so with the rise of feminism.

18. Conclusions

Jesus talks about marriage, divorce, and putting away. Understanding which passages Jesus refers to is critical to unifying all of Scripture on the topic of divorce.

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the context of Mosaic Law and in the gospel of Matthew. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19
2. Putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus' plan for marriage is that "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10
4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. Separation seems to be an option if you can't live with them. Reconciliation is ideal. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, 1 Cor 7
5. Under the Law of Moses, a marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud prior to marriage. Example: Claiming she was a virgin when she was not (Deut 22). Hence, you can put her away without divorcing her since it was a sham. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage. Note the wording: "10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord … [remain unmarried or reconcile]" versus "12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if [they leave you are not under bondage]." Given the context of the wording about the Lord saying versus Paul saying it would seem that stay unmarried or be reconciled is the ideal. Remarriage may be an option according to liberal interpretation. – 1 Cor 7
8. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse if they come to Christ (See: Note 1 for more details). The heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. In this line of thought, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. This view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again otherwise is it an abomination. – Deut 24, Matthew 19

Note 1: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery:

> 1. There is perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, "sacramental marriage" affirmed by the Church.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. Those > that don’t undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn’t valid they are free to marry another. A marriage can be affirmed sacramental in which case divorce and remarriage is a sin.

> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Final Conclusion

1. No divorce period. Even for adultery. “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” Your recourse is separation if you absolutely can’t live with them.
2. If you are separated, stay single or reconcile. No remarriage.
3. Stay with an unbeliever if they want to live with you, otherwise you are not under the bonds of marriage. Remarriage is possible with a liberal interpretation of Scripture.
4. Fraudulent marriages are not marriages.
5. If you have a “Christian marriage” (or sacramental marriage) — both of you know that marriage is forever on earth and the accompanying roles and responsibilities — then any divorce and remarriage is perpetual adultery.
6. 2nd or 3rd marriages that come to Christ can be affirmed as Christian marriages. They would not have to go back to their first spouse and are not in perpetual adultery. Prior marriages are effectively “annulled” as you did not understand Christian marriage.

This is why I believe (as a Protestant) that the Catholic and Orthodox methods of sacramental marriage are probably the best method to deal with marriage and divorce in a broken world. Protestant views on marriage are trash, and it is no surprise that they have the highest divorce rates of any denomination of Christianity and divorce rates almost as high as secular culture.

I am 100% confident that God and Jesus said that there is no divorce at all for Christians according to the Scripture based on in-depth study on all of the relevant passages in Hebrew and Greek in accordance with Christian apostolic tradition. Divorce at your own risk to your eternal soul.

“Toxic masculinity”

December 2, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

“Tyler” on Slate writes Men Aren’t Monstrous, but Masculinity Can Be. It’s pretty short, so I’ll just go through the whole thing.

> While bent over locking up my bike in Chicago a few years ago, I heard the all-too-familiar sound of a wolf whistle. I turned around to get a look at the jerks accosting some woman on the street, only to realize I was the one who was being cat called. A man passing by from behind had seen my long curly hair and tight jeans and mistaken me for a woman. When I turned around to face him, he was shocked and started apologizing profusely. In so many words, he was saying: ”This is an unacceptable way to behave toward a man.” And we both knew, if I were a woman, there would be no apology.
> This is the double standard at the heart of masculinity: Men are taught to regularly say and do things to women that they would never say or do to other men, that they would never want men to say or do to them. That is not due to some timeless “male libido” driving their behavior. It’s because masculinity is founded on the myth that men alone are rights-bearing persons and women are subordinate, passive, second-class beings who either need the protection of or deserve to be subjected to men.

The author “claims” that men are taught to “wolf whistle” women.

I seem to recall that back in the day when husbands and fathers were not getting divorced they would teach their kids to be kind and respectable youngsters who treated women in a chivalrous manner.

I wonder why the incidence of wolf whistling has gone up, with the advent of no-fault divorce, almost all mother custody, and fatherlessness.

> In a recent New York Times op-ed, however, writer Stephen Marche uses some outdated Freudian ideas about sexuality and gender and the recent explosion of allegations of sexual misconduct to argue that male sexual desire is inherently brutal and oppressive. Thus, there’s no use, as Marche puts it, in “pretending to be something else, some fiction you would prefer to be.” So, feminist ideas are practically useless. The only fruitful thing men can do to respect women as equals is repress their natural urges.
> In truth, the very problem with masculinity Marche describes in his op-ed is too much repression: The rules governing masculinity require men to be stoic, to repress virtually all of their emotions (except anger). This leads many men to severely underdevelop their own ability to analyze and communicate about their own feelings. Our culture, not men’s nature, has enforced this emotional repression.

> Indeed, every man can think of at least one experience where he was punished for failing—whether intentionally or accidentally—to obey the dictates of these masculine rules. I remember a playground game where my friends and I would re-enact scenes from Disney films. I volunteered myself for the role of Ariel from the Little Mermaid. She was the protagonist and, it seemed to me, the best character to be. My peers bullied and teased me for this failure to obey the rules of compulsory masculinity for weeks afterward, and "Ariel" became a standard go-to insult in arguments.
> This policing of masculinity is the reason why the vast majority of fist fights I've witnessed between men were preceded by trash talk in which the men called each other "little bitches" or "pussies." The worst thing a man could be accused of being is feminine, since femininity is, in contrast, just another word for weak, passive, and fit to be dominated by other men. (This kind of masculinity is not just responsible for misogyny then, but for homophobia and transphobia too.)
> This is the kind of masculinity that also teaches men they don't have to ask permission to act on their sexual desires. They're supposed to take charge and have no reason to respect women's autonomy. This is what feminists mean when they say sexual harassment and assault are about power, not desire. It's our culture, not our libidos, that shapes the way men act upon otherwise healthy, run-of-the-mill sexual desires. In itself, there is nothing inherently brutal in a man who is sexually attracted to a woman he works with—no more than there would be if a woman desires a man she works with.

Again, fathers taught boys not to do this; they taught discipline and self control. Emotions were not repressed but controlled, and men act out of honor and dignity.

You tend to see the type of behavior the blogger describes in the most reckless and violent populations, which, not coincidentally is composed by a vast majority of single mothers. It's scientifically proven, as we've discussed time and time again.

> But there is a difference between discreetly (or silently) deriving pleasure from someone's presence, on the one hand, and imposing one's desires on that person, especially if they're unreturned or unwanted. The difference here, as the feminist philosopher Sandra Bartky puts it, is the difference between healthy eroticism and rituals rooted in toxic ideas about masculinity.
> If a man wants to act on his attraction, or sexual urges? Here, communication, the very thing modern notions of masculinity train us away from, is key. Genuine communication is a two-way street; it presupposes that both participants have an equal right to withdraw from the interaction or decline an offer. Men already understand this to some extent, because this is how men typically behave in interactions with other men.
> So, relating to women as equals, as genuine peers, doesn't necessarily require repressing desire. Instead, it requires coming to terms with the fact that > masculinity trains men to have great difficulty recognizing women—or, indeed, anyone that presents as feminine—as persons, as agents, as authoritative and worthy of respect, and then making an effort to see and treat them that way.

> In 1945 only 24 percent of Americans thought women should be allowed to hold jobs outside the home. In that same year, 25 percent of Americans thought there were often good reasons to pay men and women different amounts for doing the same kind of work. But by 1993 that number had dropped to 13 percent—and women's workforce participation rate had doubled.
> In 1987, 30 percent of Americans said they agreed that "women should return to their traditional social role of remaining in the home." In 2012, by contrast, only 18 percent said this. Thus, it's no surprise that in the past 20 years, the number of dads who stay home with children has dramatically increased and men in general are spending significantly more time parenting their children. Masculinity and femininity are changing quickly, and both men and women are the better for it.

The typical dig at patriarchy.

> Instead of calling for repression, we should stop punishing children and adults for failing to obey the unhealthy dictates of masculinity—men need less repression, not more. That this would make for a less violent, sexist (and transphobic) world is reason enough to see it as a worthy goal. But, so, too would it free men from a great deal of anxiety, self-hatred, pain, and loneliness.
> A few years before my own experience with a catcall, I saw a young woman walking down a Chicago street with a milkshake in hand. A man watching her pass by shouted, "Titties!" at her. Without skipping a beat, she turned around, threw her milkshake at him, and continued on her way. Those of us on the street chuckled in admiration as the man stood dripping from head to toe with chocolate milkshake.
> Was this a man overcome by brutal sexual desires he needed to better repress? I don't think so. This was a man who needed a wake-up call that the woman he was shouting at was a person, not an object for him to dominate. Maybe the #MeToo moment will be just that for a lot of men, and we should consider ourselves lucky not to get our wake-up call served up so icy cold.

"Tyler" — if he is a man at all — has been brainwashed into believing some false narrative of masculinity.

At the hands of feminism, families were ripped apart and destroyed. Boys grew up without fathers. Discipline, honor, and respect were thrown to the wayside. Chivalry was killed. The consequences of this are men that are more violent, sexually aggressive, and lack self control.

Then you get articles like this. This form of masculinity that is violent, sexually aggressive, and lacking self control is instead blamed on the “vestiges of patriarchy” and that “we haven’t done enough” to eradicate masculinity as a whole. Talk about circular logic.

The very negative consequences that feminism and liberalism have caused are blamed on the very structures that prevented that behavior in the first place.

It’s crazy, and they’re crazy.

Hypergamy is good

December 8, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Figured it would be good to have a post this topic as I haven't done one already and Donal's thread recently brought it up.

Historically, hypergamy — termed in 19th century India — was used to signify marrying up in terms of caste or status. However, colloquially and in social sciences now it means simply marrying up (in whatever capacity).

To put it another way, hypergamy is simply the traits in which women are sexually attracted to men: masculinity, power, status, charisma, looks, money, athleticism, talent, and so on. These are the ways that women will "marry up" because they want to be with a man who is sexually attractive to them.

God created women with a hypergamous instinct and therefore it is good. It is good just as the fact that God created men are attracted to beautiful, young, virgins. This is also the same as the fact that sexual desire is good. This is also the same as the fact that authority is good because of the intention with how God created it, even though fallible humans can use authority selfishly.

The main problem is when hypergamous instincts become an idol. There's nothing wrong with factoring in sexual attraction in choosing a husband (or vice versa with a wife). However, if it is chosen over good character, strong faith, or other attributes such as roles and responsibilities in marriage or pre-marital sex or other type of sinful activities then it goes off the rails.

Of course, the culture is all about glorifying that which is sinful and evil, so we tend to get the impression that hypergamy is bad. However, it is not in itself bad.

Conservatives still don’t get it or don’t want to

A David Masciotra responds to the “toxic masculinity” article on American Conservative.

> I had my eye on the prettiest girl at the party. We’d met a few months earlier in high school biology. When class had let out one day, I’d shouted her name, Lindsey, and said, “Good to meet you. It’s my lucky day, I guess.” She’d turned around as if she was on a runway, and her long, bright, blonde hair flipped, forming a frame around her beautiful face. She’d flashed me a smile. I’d felt volts of electricity charge my body.
> Back at the party, as I broke the law by nursing a Miller Lite, I watched with bewilderment and envy as Lindsey flirted with a dork named Steve. All of our conversations before and after class, my attempts at charm and wit, my transparently weak excuses for greeting Lindsey at her locker before first period, had gotten me nowhere. I stepped outside to commit my second crime of the evening.
> As I took slow drags off my cigarette, I heard a shout that contained subtle hints of Lindsey’s melodious voice—“Get off me!” Making my way around the house to the backyard, I noticed that the screams were becoming increasingly angry and desperate. A deeper voice issued vague commands—“Come on!” “Stop it!”
> Steve had his hands on Lindsey’s hips as he pressed her against the aluminum siding of the split-level home. Without thinking, I threw my smoldering Winston into the grass, dropped my beer, and escalated my illegal activity. I pushed Steve away from Lindsey, and then punched him in the face. The blow knocked him back, but he managed to regain his bearings before falling to the ground. He spat some obscenities at me before walking to his car, which was in severe need of a muffler, and drove away.
> A few minutes later, Lindsey gave me a kiss with more power than my right hook.
> Between the noble exhibition of strength and the romantic affection from an attractive woman, the party had become a moment of idealized manhood. I felt as if I was Elvis Presley in the films I’d enjoyed watching on Turner Classic Movies every night before I went to bed. It’s abhorrent to view a woman’s pain and potential suffering as an opportunity for male edification, but there are moments when an evil act of victimization requires masculine intervention. Elvis’s characters lived according to that ethic, as did the literary hero whose triumphs I’d read during study hall, Raymond Chandler’s Phillip Marlowe.

He starts off with with some cartoonish chivalry. The good man needs to stand up against the bad man, and the good man gets the girl.

There’s nothing wrong with standing up to protect those weaker, but the notion that it actually leads to romance is incorrect on several levels. An unattractive man who protects a woman may only get a “thanks” at most in return. Good and bad are, of course, relative to the notions of manliness that the author is purporting.

> Today, in the contemporary context of sexual misconduct, masculine intervention is the subject of fear, ridicule, and diagnostic examination. The deluge of harassment and assault accusations against major political, media, and entertainment figures following the exposure of Hollywood producer Harvey Weinstein as a sexual criminal has understandably provoked many writers, especially of feminist ideology, to identify and lament the “crisis of masculinity.”
> Slate recently ran an analysis of sexual harassment with the headline “Men Aren’t Monstrous, But Masculinity Can Be,” and a writer for the New York Times explored the “unexamined brutality of the male libido.” Charles Blow, for the same paper, declared, “We have to re-examine our toxic, privileged, encroaching masculinity.”
> While it doesn’t hurt to negotiate and navigate the meaning of masculinity, contemptuous generalizations about men are unhealthy and dangerous, because they flirt with prejudice. Even Jessica Valenti, one of the most recognized and committed advocates of feminism, objected to the New York Times’ sloppy headline on the male libido, writing, “Men’s sexuality is not inherently predatory and claiming it is normalizes assault.”
> Sweeping indictments of the masculine also deflect attention from one of the most elementary truths to emerge out of the reckoning of sexual predators. The crisis of masculinity is not one of excess, but scarcity.

On the surface, this seems like solid analysis. Yet, we see some of the first cracks in the armor of missing the point completely altogether. Let’s move on to see how it all falls apart.

> Rich literary, historical, and cultural traditions depict masculine heroism as protection of the vulnerable and powerless. Stories of military valor, the selfless acts of bravery from firefighters and rescue workers, even the New Testament allegory of Jesus Christ rescuing a prostitute from the mob preparing to stone her, demonstrate that masculinity at its apex is the employment of power, force, and authority for assistance and guardianship of those who, at least temporarily, are unable to save themselves.
> The most obvious of masculine virtues inform the presentation of masculine heroism—responsibility, gallantry, and integrity. Ernest Hemingway’s heroes illustrate an impervious stoicism that is easy to parody when coming from writers without his genius, but when done right, it shows the crucial connection between pride and manhood.
> None of these qualities—only their polar opposites—are identifiable in the predation of Weinstein, Louis C.K., and their fellow offenders. Their behavior is so > thoroughly reprehensible that many have missed its second most prevalent characteristic: it is pathetic.

> One of the most baffling oddities to emerge out of these sexual harassment stories is how many men of power enjoy acts of indecent exposure. There is a juvenile "look at me" aspect to surprising a woman with a masturbatory act that, in addition to being odious and repugnant, makes it entirely unmanly. The nearest comparison is not to some high-testosterone lothario, but to an adolescent desperately craving attention through the humiliation of his subjects.
> Even the womanizer possesses masculinity that runs in stark contrast with the pitiable onanism of these contemporary harassers. Masculine sexual charisma, whether visible in the charm and seduction techniques of a fictional character like James Bond or a real-life adulterer like Mick Jagger, is desirable because it attracts women and sparks sexual desire, leading to consensual and mutually pleasurable affairs. No normal teenage boy fantasizes about abusing his power to assault women who have no interest in him.
> One of Weinstein's accusers claims that after she rejected his unwanted advances, the film mogul cried, saying, "You rejected me because I'm fat."
> The stories of misconduct making headlines on a daily basis are not the triumphs of masculinity's winners, but the woes of its losers.
> It is clear that the bipartisan parade of groping misogynists lack the most fundamental respect for women, and in their moral failure to view them as human beings, treat them as toys for their own sexual amusement. They also lack the pride that is essential to the maintenance of masculine confidence and bravado.
> In the process of harming women, these men have embarrassed themselves. One of the important questions, as always, is why? Why, even if certain men refuse to acknowledge the dignity and autonomy of women, does pride not prevent them from behaving as freaks and fools?
> Resolving the sickly lack of masculinity, along with cultivating a culture that has no tolerance for the degradation of women, are the long-term solutions for sexual harassment. In the short term, it appears that many men could use a good punch to the face.

Where does David go wrong? He is, of course, right in classify most forms of masculinity via sexual misconduct or violence today as "juvenile" or "immature."

There is always a cause for behavior, and conservatives don't want to look at the cause but only criticize the results. Why? Because then they would have to blame feminism.

To answer David's questions:

> In the process of harming women, these men have embarrassed themselves. One of the important questions, as always, is why? Why, even if certain men refuse to acknowledge the dignity and autonomy of women, does pride not > prevent them from behaving as freaks and fools?

Why? Feminism tore down the very system which raised men that wanted to protect women.

- Husband as authority in marriage
- Lack of respect for husbands and fathers
- No fault divorce
- Mother custody of children
- Duluth laws

At the hands of feminism, families were ripped apart and destroyed. Boys grew up without fathers. Discipline, honor, and respect were thrown to the wayside. Chivalry was killed. The consequences of this are men that are more violent, sexually aggressive, and lack self control.

> Resolving the sickly lack of masculinity, along with cultivating a culture that has no tolerance for the degradation of women, are the long-term solutions for sexual harassment. In the short term, it appears that many men could use a good punch to the face.

The result of not blaming feminism is that you have to blame someone. That someone happens to be men because it “appears that many men could use a good punch to the face.” The old switcheroo. Blame men is always a good answer.

Conservatives don’t want to call feminism bad, even though the feminist rebellion has caused many of the problems that we have today.

Whether it is to cater to female voters or whatever who really knows. But conservatives still don’t get it or they don’t want to.

Study on what women prefer in mens' body

December 14, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Remember all those contrast pictures where women "preferred" some weaker looking male celebrity over a more ripped one? Remember that "trend" of women loving dad bods?

Yeah, that ain't true.

https://phys.org/news/2017-12-upper-body-strength-key-factor.html

> Dr Aaron Sell from the School of Criminology and Criminal Justice said cues of upper body strength make a man attractive, including having wider shoulders, being physically fit and having greater handgrip strength.
> "Evolutionary psychologists have shown that women's mate choices use many cues of men's genetic quality and ability to invest resources in the woman and her offspring," he said.
> "Among our ancestors, one variable that predicted both a man's genetic quality and his ability to invest was the man's formidability. Therefore, modern women should still have mate choice mechanisms that respond to cues of a man's fighting ability.
> "One crucial component of a man's ability to fight was his upper body strength."
> In the study, the researchers tested how important physical strength is to men's bodily attractiveness by showing women pictures of men's bodies and asking they how attractive they were.
> The results showed that it was possible to almost perfectly predict how attractive a man's body is from three things: how physically strong he looks, how tall he is, and how lean he is. The effect of strength was so large that none of the 150 women in the study preferred weak men. Furthermore, looking strong was much more important for man's attractiveness than being tall or lean.
> "The rated strength of a male body accounts for a full 70 percent of the variance in attractiveness," Dr Sell said.
> "The effect of height and weight on attractiveness may indicate that women are responding to cues of health or to the benefits that height and lean bodies have in protracted aggression, hunting and other aspects of fighting ability."
> Dr Sell said while the women in their study preferred the strongest bodies, there was a sizeable dataset across many cultures that showed women did not always prefer the strongest looking faces.

To summarize, 70% of the variations in attractiveness are how:

- How physically strong his body looks (most important)

- How tall he is
- How lean he is
- NONE of the 150 women preferred weak looking men.

The bros were right.

Since you can’t change your height, look strong and be strong by getting big muscles and getting lean.

Morally acceptable responses to (impending) divorce

December 17, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The Question asks on Dalrock's response to Vox's immoral response.

> Vox Day's point about Roman patricians raises a good question – what are morally acceptable responses by married Christian men to frivorce? Are they allowed to evade the law? Can they resist in any manner? Where are the boundaries? What safeguards should men set up to protect one another?
> Obviously murder-suicide is not among them, but I could never in good conscience marry if the only moral choice permitted is to submit and let the state to break up my marriage and take my kids from me. This is why I am somewhat sympathetic to Vox's statement.

Let's first back up for a moment. "Divorce" is the "end game" of a series of many poor decisions between a husband and a wife most of the time.

The majority of husbands and fathers will have some sort of conflict with their wife that is slowly escalating to where she "just wants out" or "can't handle it." There's probably only a minority of frivorces where a husband is actually blindsided.

In general, during this period the husband should follow the commands of the Scripture as to the best of his ability:

1. Continue to lead his house as best as possible
2. Continue to "sanctify" his wife by correcting her bad behavior as needed
3. Continue to develop in maturity in the fruits of the Spirit, especially in conflict scenarios

Counseling tends to be bad for husbands and fathers nowadays even from the Church. Unless you know of any counselors who actually "tell it like it is" where they would call out a wife for being insufferable, contentious, or rebellious, it's probably best to avoid "marriage counselors."

Deterrents of end game

Let's say that the situation continues to devolve. You have several options, depending on how far you are willing to go. All of these are about laying out the consequences logically and unemotionally.

First,

Divorce is unacceptable. No one will be better off with divorce. Your wife will have a terrible time in the dating market and will be much more unhappy in the long run as a spinster. Only 1/4 of women remarry after divorce, almost none after 30 years old. Your kids' lives will suffer drastically with increased behavioral issues, violence, promiscuity, etc. Poverty is a very real fact of life.

Find allies from friends and family (if any) to help you during the time. Since you're trying to save the marriage, always make that clear so they will back you up in the end. If they're her friends too, then have them parrot similar points that divorce is not good for anyone.

Second,

> Matthew 18:15 "If your brother sins[k], go and [l]show him his fault [m]in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. 16 But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every [n]fact may be confirmed. 17 If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as [o]a Gentile and [p]a tax collector.

Document to be able to speak the Truth. Given the instruction of Matthew 18, others will be inevitably dragged into it. A man should be prepared to give an account of what happened, regardless of whether others believe it or not. The friends and allies in the first part will help a lot with this.

She will not have the only voice, which is common that only the wife's account is heard since everyone blames the man. If it devolves into divorce you may consider voicing your account of all you did to try to save the marriage to both your and her friends, family, and the Church.

Women hate when they are painted in a bad light, especially if it's true. Willingness to give your social circles a truthful account is a huge deterring force.

Third,

No one will be enriched off divorce. All marital assets will be burned to fight for custody of the children. You may even go into debt for keeping the family together.

She won't get 1 cent for destruction of the family and may even have to take on loads of debt.

Fourth,

Willingness to go to jail instead of paying child support and/or alimony.

Acknowledging that you won't support the unjust practices of the court and enrich lives off divorce. Jail is pretty cushy in the West anyway.

Alternatively, if you get custody of the children, then it may be worth staying out of jail to enrich their lives. Single fatherhood is not as good as a father and mother, but it sure beats leaving the kids to be raised by a single mother.

In general, the main reason why women divorce are because:

1. They are unhappy
2. They can date or marry again
3. They get custody of the children
4. They get cash and prizes

5. They won’t get blamed and will not be socially ostracized.

The four points above aim to talk about the reality the “benefits” of divorce and how they are false. It will only result in “terrible consequences” and more unhappiness. If it’s gotten to the point where righteousness is not effective for a Christian wife and mother to stay, maybe the consequences will be a wake up call.

I’m sure there’s more, but these are the main righteous options. If anyone can think of more, post them in the comments. I’ll add them to OP.

The masculinity myth: the real reason why men don't go to church

December 20, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in asking about this article: the masculinity myth: the real reason why men don't go to Church. Aside from the fact that this pastor hails from the liberal bastion of Washington State, let's go through it anyway. It's pretty long, so I'm just going to excerpt certain sections.

> Today during worship, we were singing a song about God being our loving Father. As we sang, I realized it was the kind of song manly-men Christian pastors hate. It's the sort of song they rail against while crusading for the resurgence of "real men" Christian masculinity. As we sang tender words about a tender, loving, heavenly Father, I immediately realized why some men are so angry at spiritually wimpy men and bold Christian women. The thought just popped into my head: It's Cain and Abel all over again.
> Although it's probably one of the most profitable growth areas in Christian publishing, I'm not a big fan of the "what's wrong with the church" book genre. In the past four plus years as a Christian talk radio host, I've received a large steady flow of books attempting to address the "what's wrong with the church" writing prompt. Invariably, these books blame the lack of church growth on fatal flaws within church leadership, structure and theology. They assume that healthy churches grow and unhealthy churches decline. Consequently, if the church is to be healthy again, it needs to find a way to reach the people who no longer call the church their home.
> "Why don't men go to church" is a subset of the blame the church publishing niche. These books seem particularly popular as they make great reads for frustrated wives tired of attending church without their husbands. They're also great reads for bitter men determined to justify and fortify their reasons for abandoning the body of Christ. Let's face it, as the church declines in size and membership, the demand for church criticizing material will continue to increase.

There's nothing wrong with singing about a loving Father. After all, that's how God is primarily portrayed in the NT. The main issue is with the "feely" songs that romanticize Jesus. Jesus ain't your boyfriend or lover.

He is right that it's not always true that healthy Churches grow and unhealthy Churches decline. Churches can be in times of pruning such as the vine and branches. Yet, all of the other points lack context. For example, why do so many wives have to try to drag their husbands to Church? Missionary dating and marriage is a huge problem just like single motherhood. Yet, we almost never hear sermons against that.

> The church isn't masculine enough?

> Almost every book, post or tweet concerning the plight of Christian men eventually blames the church for not being masculine enough. The theory is men don't go to church because church is geared to the needs of women. There's too much sharing of emotions, too much hugging, too much singing, with too many effeminate leaders giving the ladies what they want: a church with no testosterone. This theory suggests that men don't go to church because churches don't meet the masculine needs of men. Many widely respected preachers seem to adhere to this concept that the church has been weakened by an overabundance of femininity.
> The first time I heard an author accuse the church of being too feminine, I was annoyed by the accusation. Over time, my annoyance hasn't waned. Since I am a pastor, those who advocate for a more masculine church expression will likely label me as one of those effeminate, emotional male leaders who is ruining the witness of Christ to real men. Don't worry, while making my argument, I'll make sure I don't cry in front of you and endanger your ability abide in the room with me.

It's not wrong to have a Church that is like that, but men and women are different. Men tend to like concrete theology, apologetics, and rational discussion about how to know our faith is true and how to share our faith.

The Church is tasked to make disciples of all nations. Well, if you're not doing a good job making disciples of men, then you're going to have an issue keeping men in your Church.

Churches that focus mostly on emotions and faith as "just believing" tend to end up having terrible progressive theology. In fact, studies have begun to show that declining Church attendance is linked to progressive theology.

> Calling the church too feminine is sexist
> Most arguments that blame the church for the absence of men are rooted in sexist assumptions. If you believe men don't go to church because the church doesn't meet their needs, then you are implying that women go because more of their needs are being met. What if more women go to church because their faith has a greater integrity? What if more women go to church because they have chosen to persevere and demonstrate a moral fortitude that contrasts the weaknesses of men? What if women are more willing to work in community, more willing to repent, apologize and forgive? Maybe men are so emotional they are unwilling to learn how to abide in complex community. Maybe instead of following the moral lead of women, men have isolated themselves from the church to keep from having to mature and grow up.
> There is another twisted, sexist logic to blaming the church for the refusal of men to participate. Instead of correcting those in rebellion, we attack those who are sincerely trying to be faithful. We tell the regular church attender that they are the problem, not the ones who abandoned the body of Christ. We tell the male > leader who has remained, even in the face of tremendous cultural rejection, that He is the problem for the church's inability to reach more men. Blaming the actions of the most dishonorable on those who are most faithful is an affront to the integrity of those who are actively supporting the church. To blame faithful women for the unfaithfulness of men is once again blaming the victim for being abandoned.

Such things are easily debunked by "fruit." For example, we know that 70% of divorces are by women, and that frivorces happen fairly regularly in the Church — Jenny Erickson being a foremost example not to mention many of the readers around these parts.

Of course, you don't have to believe me, but the Scripture also has words to say on this:

Ecclesiastes 7:28 which I am still seeking but have not found. I have found one man among a thousand, but I have not found a woman among all these.

The Church environment is blamed, yet the author makes it seem like the regular Church attender is the one to be blamed. Again, as mentioned, men and women are different. It's not that hard to actually cater to both men and women and have different environments for each of them. Creating a false dichotomy and playing the blame game is exactly what feminists are always apt to do.

> Contrasting worship
> The story of Cain and Abel is the story of conflicting and contrasting worship expressions. Scripture states that "in the course of time Cain brought some of the fruits of the soil as an offering to the LORD. And Abel also brought an offering – fat portions from some of the firstborn of his flock" (Gen. 4:3-4). At first glance to the modern reader, there doesn't seem to be much contrast between these two offerings. Cain worked the soil, so he brought a product of the soil, Abel kept flocks so he brought a product of the herd. God's response to Cain and Abel demonstrates that their offerings were very different. […]
> This pattern of tearing down the righteous expression of others to defend an unrighteous expression seems to be the underlying force behind churches that tear down a strong feminine expression of worship to make room for a more masculine expression. To put it plainly, men refusing to give God their best have fallen into the rebellion of Cain. God does not accept leftover offerings and leftover worship. The absence of men in the church is ultimately the result of men rebelling against God, of men feeding themselves the best and choice fruit, while giving God little or nothing in return. In contrast to the Cain offering of men, we have the Abel offering of women. Despite the rebellion of their fathers, brothers, husbands and sons, women are still faithfully giving their best to God. They are giving their first and best fruit to God.

False. A more accurate analogy of what happens in a feminine environment where both girls and boys are forced to attend is education. Both girls and boys are forced to attend education from kindergarten to 12th grade.

Boys consistently underachieve in almost all areas because of the feminine environment. It has been noted several times that boys consistently score well on tests, but homework and other busy work boys tend to lag behind. Boys also suffer from sitting for long periods of time as they tend to have a lot more energy and the elimination of recess and physical activity leads to them being them dinged for behavior, diagnosed with ADHD, and even being drugged.

Girls learn well in certain environments while boys learn well in different ones. None of these are more “righteous” or “worse” than the other. This is the problem with the author’s take on Cain and Abel because “Church attendance” is not necessarily a marker of “righteousness” — especially given the terrible theology of most Churches nowadays.

> They yell at the men and tell them to be more manly
> At some level, these churches and leaders recognize that men have not given God their best. In response to this problem, they often try to rally men like an angry coach or drill sergeant. The assumption is to make men more manly, we need to treat them like our culture’s best examples of manly men. Without having healthy family examples of their own, these “masculinity” leaders often go to Hollywood to find their examples of real men. Sadly, these cartoonish portrayals of masculinity often contrast the way Jesus lived and the words he spoke.

One thing I agree with. AMOGing and the only “real man in the room” is destructive to both men and women.

> They blame women for the faults of men
> Leaders who champion a resurgence of Christian masculinity often also decry the presence of strong femininity or strong female leaders. They frequently speak of feminism as harming the ability of the church to reach men. They view women in leadership as a threat to men being able to follow God’s lead. They portray powerful women as a hinderance to men being able to participate fully in the advancement of God’s kingdom. In other words, they blame the weakness of men on the strengths of women. In my opinion, this is simply Cain resenting Abel. If Abel wasn’t such a show off, Cain wouldn’t look that bad. If women weren’t so strong, men wouldn’t look so weak.

Well, given that women are not permitted in leadership position in the Church according to the Bible, unfortunately for the author this is a huge issue. Liberal theology trying to worm its way into the Church.

Men as leaders in the Church and families need to be taught and discipled. If women are taking those opportunities, is it any wonder that you’re going to get Churches full of men who are apathetic.

Anyway, the author’s critique is mainly a bunch of false dichotomies, mixed with destructive liberal theology, and one good point about “the only real man.” It falls very close to the category of blame men for womens’ rebellion. So much for helping out men.

The deadbeat deception

December 21, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Scott commented on Dalrock's post:

> Always remember the problem the Duluth model was created to solve was violent, abusive, controlling, deadbeat dads.

One thing I've been mulling over recently is the question: is there such a thing as a deadbeat dad or deadbeat mom in the first place?

We know that many women are often attracted and have sex with a lot of so-called "low lifes" — men that do what they want but can't hold a steady job, are generally irresponsible, and don't really care about supporting and/or caring for a mom and child. The women still sleep with them and have a kid anyway and expect them to pay child support, and if they don't they have the fall back of welfare or family support.

It is reasonable to expect that these deadbeats would not even attempt to shoulder any responsibility for their actions given their character. Pinning another responsibility on them when they already shirk responsibilities is laughable. Every time I see men or women trying to shame deadbeats it's a waste of time. They don't care about taking on that responsibility when they weren't responsible in the first place.

This leads to the conclusion that anyone who expects child support to support a family is dumb and unwise.

In other words, there is no such thing as a deadbeat. Don't have sex with people of dubious moral character and who are irresponsible. Otherwise, you only have yourself to blame.

Also, inb4 you're victim blaming.

Digit ratio or 2D 4D ratio

December 30, 2017 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A few commenters mentioned over on Dalrock's recent post about the masculine finger ratio that the woman has.

> It is always the little unintentional details that give away the bigger picture. I looked at her blog and towards the bottom is a photo of her hand with an engagement ring on the third finger. Her third finger is considerably longer then her first finger. This is always the case with men but with women it is reversed so that the third finger will be shorter than the first. A longer third finger on a woman indicates considerable masculinity and thus probably (given the ease) great promiscuity and of course that is exactly what she admits too although she insults the guys who were too polite to refuse her as 'crazies'. Usual female projection methinks.

It's not the 3rd finger but the fourth, and the ratio as the post is named is actually called "digit ratio" or "2d 4d ratio." If we're going to talk about it, might as well get it right.

You can read more about it on wikipedia. Overall, it's a crude approximation to prenatal androgen exposure like testosterone, and it can generally be a predictor of various traits in the sexes. A shorter 2nd digit (pointer finger) compared to the 4th digit (ring finger) indicates higher exposure to prenatal androgens. Now that you know that, men tend to have a lower ratio than women because they are exposed to more prenatal androgens than women.

Here's the relevant chart off the wiki that shows the different propensities with low digit and high digit ratios. Generally, low digit ratio is better for men and worse for women, and vice versa for high digit ratio. There are some negatives in each for both men and women though.

	Low digit ratio	High digit ratio
Physiology and disease	• Increased risk of prostate cancer and prostate diseases in males.[52][53] • Slower utero fetal development in both sexes.[52] • Increased reproductive success in males.[54]	• Lowered sperm counts[55] • Increased risk for heart disease in males[56] • Increased risk of obesity and metabolic syndrome in males[57] • Reduced risk for prostate cancer[58] • Reduced birth size in males[59][60] • Increased reproductive success in females.[54]

Psychological disorders	• Increased rate of ADHD in males[61][62][63][64] • Increased rate of Asperger syndrome and other autism spectrum disorders (when comparing digit ratio to general population)[65] • Increased risk in females for anorexia nervosa.[66] • Increased psychopathy in men with low digit ratio and high adult testosterone levels.[67] • Increased rate of alcohol dependency.[68]	• Increased risk for depression in males[69] • Increased rate of schizophrenia[70] • Increased rate of psychopathy in females[71] • Reduced risk of alcohol dependency[72] • Reduced risk of video game addiction[73] • Increased anxiety in males[74] • Increased risk in females for bulimia.[66][75]
Physical and competitive behavior	Increased aggressive behavior in sports.[76]	• Reduced performance in sports[77] • Reduced financial trading ability[78] • Right handedness skills[79] (inconclusive)[80]
Cognition and personality	• Assertiveness in females[9] • Psychoticism in females[81] • Aggression in males[17][82][83][84][85] • aggression in girls[86] • hyperactivity and poor social cognitive function in girls[87] • Masculinized handwriting in females[88] • Perceived ‘dominance’ and masculinity of man’s face[89][90] • In an orchestral context, rank and musical ability in males[91] • Right hand low digit ratio predicts academic performance[92] • Decreased mathematical ability[93] • Decreased empathy in response to adult testosterone levels[67] • higher propensity to attack without being provoked[94] • increased risk-taking behavior in men[95] • preference for normative behavior[96] • mean 2D:4D ratio among artists is lower than among controls[97] • higher numeracy (compared to literacy) in children[98] • higher criminal offending rates after puberty[99][100] • attenuated socio-affective skills[101]	• Personality traits correlated with digit ratio, higher being more feminized[102][103][104] • greater Openness personality factor[105] • Paranormal and superstitious beliefs among men with a higher digit ratio[106] • Higher exam scores among male students[34][107] • Higher neuroticism in both sexes with higher right hand digit ratio[108] and on left hand in females[81] • Higher left hand digit ratio in response to high adult testosterone levels predicts musical orchestra rank in females.[109] • Higher verbal fluency in both sexes.[52] • Higher visual recall in females.[110] • Higher literacy (compared to numeracy) in children[98]
Management	• Leadership[111] • Innovation[112]
Sensory perception		• Smell perception[113] • Color perception[114] • Tactile perception[115]

Sexual orientation	• Lesbians have a lower digit ratio, on average, than heterosexual women[116][117][118][119][120][121][122][123][124][125][126][127] • Bisexual men have a lower digit ratio than exclusively homosexual men and community volunteers recruited regardless of sexual orientation.[128] • tendency toward polygamy[129]	• Sexual preference for more masculine men among women[116] and gay men[130] with high digit ratio; a preference for a masculine facial type means a more "feminized" mindset. • Lesbians are more likely to be femme and less likely to be butch with a high digit ratio.[118][131] Identical female twins discordant for sexual orientation still show the difference (lesbian less than straight, on average) in digit ratio.[120][132] • Homosexuality for men, according to some studies.[119][127][133] Other studies have disputed this; some have shown that the digit ratio in homosexual men is similar to,[117][124][125][126][134]or lower than,[121][123][128] that of heterosexual men. One study concluded that differences are dependent on geographical variation, with gay men having lower or similar ratios to straight men in Europe, but higher or similar in the United States.[135] But this finding has been questioned in a meta-analysis including 18 studies, which suggested that ethnicity, rather than geography, explained the differences previously found in men of different sexual orientations. The meta-analysis concluded that no significant sexual orientation differences in digit ratio exist in men.[136] • tendency toward monogamy[129]

Anyway, the relevant aspects in this particular situation with a woman with low digit ratio are some of the increased propensity of these cognitive traits that tend to lead to increases in promiscuity.

- Assertiveness in females[9]
- Psychoticism in females[81]
- aggression in girls[86]
- hyperactivity and poor social cognitive function in girls[87]

This is actually a very interesting talking point that I've used in the past as a tool in conversation and dates because of its ability to generally predict some behavioral traits.

But it is also something to look out for in terms of potential risky factors in marriage.

It’s not by all means “proven” that someone is a particular way if they have a certain digit ratio. It’s a overall trend much like virginity and divorce. It’s likely riskier to date or marry a woman with a low digit ratio due to the combination of traits that she usually has with a low digit ratio that makes her personally more competitive like a business partner rather than a wife.

I’d give it a “yellow flag” overall until you get to know them more to see if it’s a red flag based on her past behavior or a non-issue.

The great divide

January 4, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Gunner's post on the great divide:

> Of all the divisions and disagreements I've seen over the last decade in the Manosphere, the biggest is one that is rarely mentioned: the guys who've hit rock bottom and the guys who haven't.
> One one side is Mister Success with all the answers, the jet-set Lothario idly wondering which country to sample next, the bureaucrat-in-denial (hello, Pastor!) who managed to follow an Assigned Life Path to a gilded cage. The popular, wealthy and sheltered.
> One the other side is Mister Frivorced who tried all the answers, the hard worker frozen out of the "global marketplace", the poor bastard bastard who never had a father to teach him right from left. The unsexy, unworthy and unwanted.
> The former do not know sympathy. In their view, if you suffer then you deserve to suffer, somehow. Failure is something you shrug at, write off your taxes and walk away from because you have three other irons in the fire.
> The latter understand. Suffering is a part of life. Some failures are permanent. They'll push you as much as the former but they do it because they've been there. Because helping you helps them come to terms with their own experiences. Because they want others to succeed where they didn't. That difference in attitude is life-changing.

Generally, I consider there to be 4:

1. Mr Successes
2. Frivorced or struggling marriages
3. Average single clueless guy
4. Incels

Frivorced was at least decent enough with women that at least one woman wanted to marry him. Average single clueless guy sometimes gets interest and/or dates from women, but has no clue when they don't like him anymore and end the relationship. The incels don't get the time of day from women and are generally considered creepy.

These are generally the 4 tiers of men that encompass the SMP/MMP.

- 8-10s — Mr Successes that get all of the attention when single and have wives that adore them
- 5-7s — Frivorced or struggling and still married but don't know how to long term relationship
- 4-6s — the average clueless guy who sometimes get dates and relationships but can’t sustain an long term relationship

- 1-3s — the Incels that are unwanted and ignored

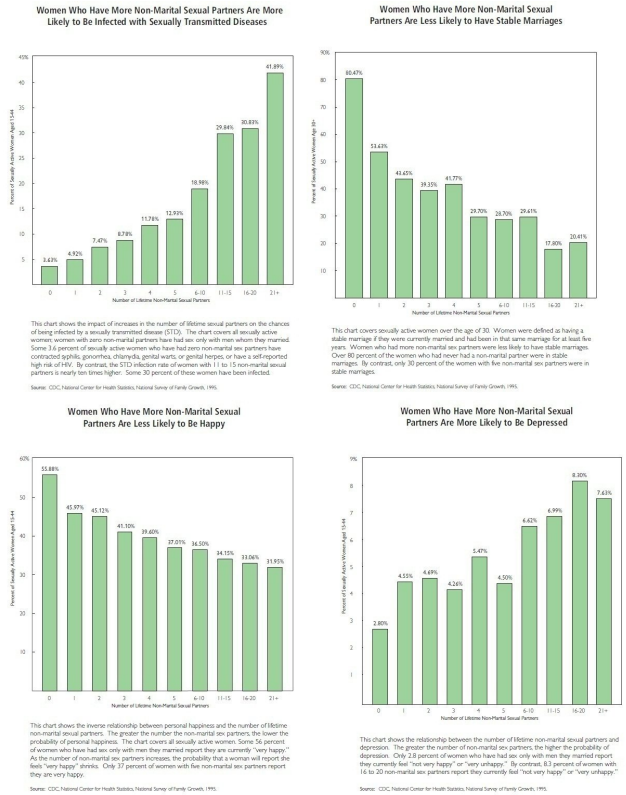
It seems these days that most of the Incels have given up completely on women and are MGTOW.

Personally, I was your average single clueless guy.

Taking advice from Mr Successes is generally always a bad idea just like taking advice from women about how to date and/or marry and/or maintain a relationship with a woman. They hold too many blind spots about their own nature to reliably suggest good information for the rest of the population. It’s sort of like the celebrity world; everyone already likes them and caters to them so they don’t know what it’s like for the general joe who is mostly invisible or ignored.

Anyway, I’m still writing the book, and it’s mainly addressing to #2 and #3 categories obviously. The Incels who choose MGTOW that are Christian mainly just need to focus on God per 1 Cor 7. I’m hoping to have a finished rough draft soon.

Review of vetting, virgins and new info on virginity pledges



January 7, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm reviewing some of this for the book, plus some newer information.

First, revisiting vetting.

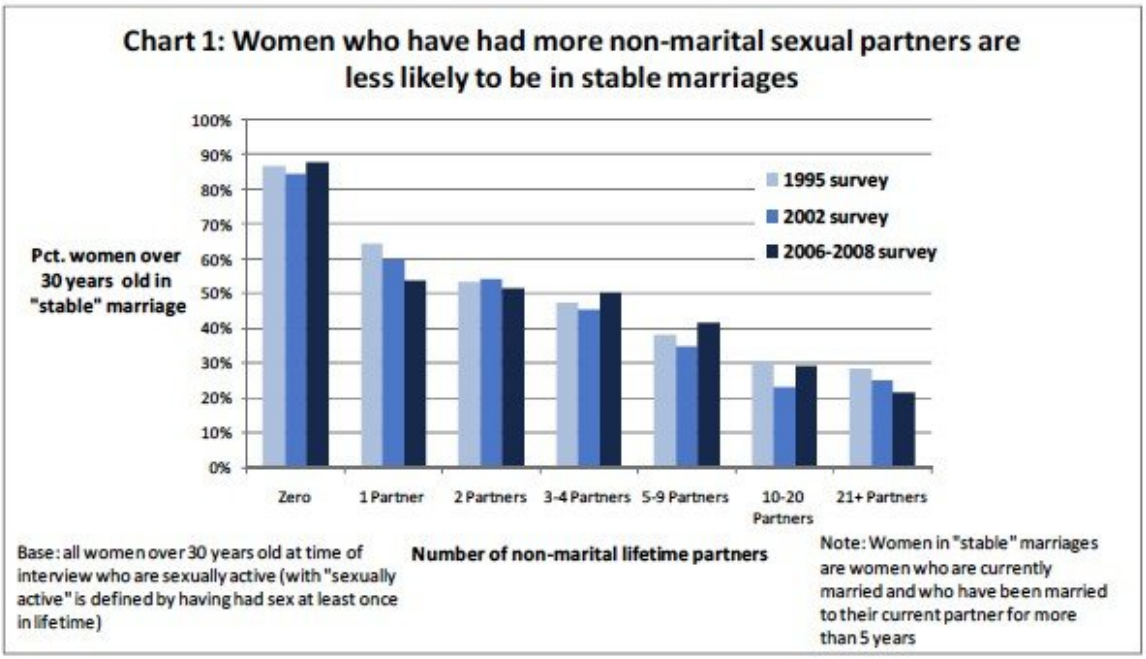
I'm going to eliminate as much commentary as I can, as this review is going to be very long.

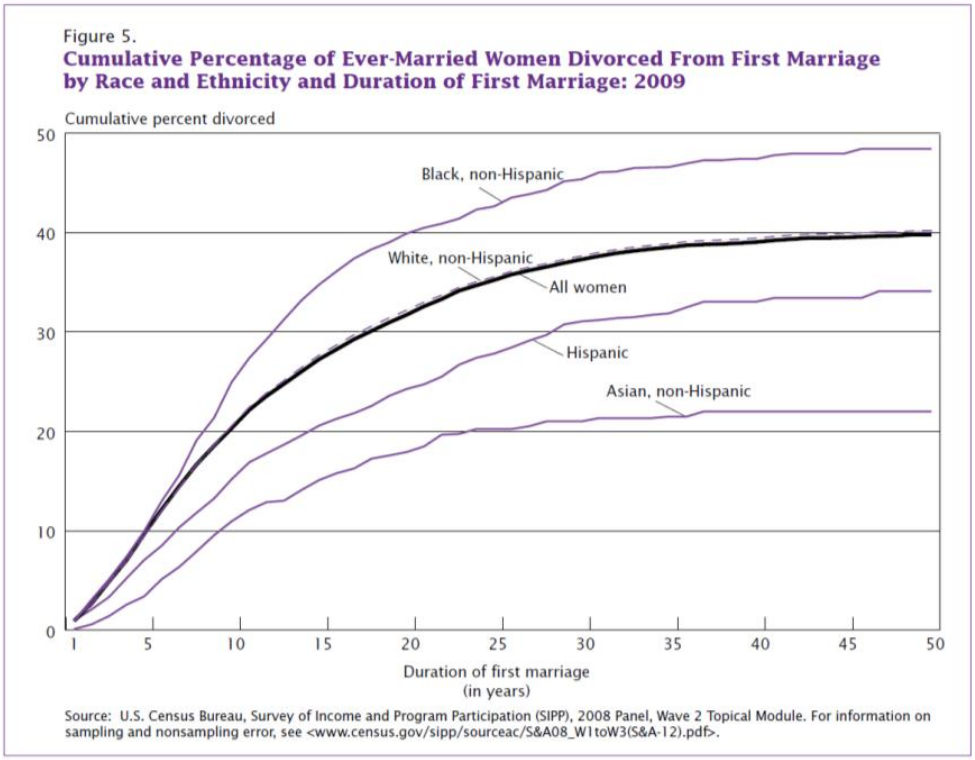


Let's look at one example we are all familiar with: virginity.

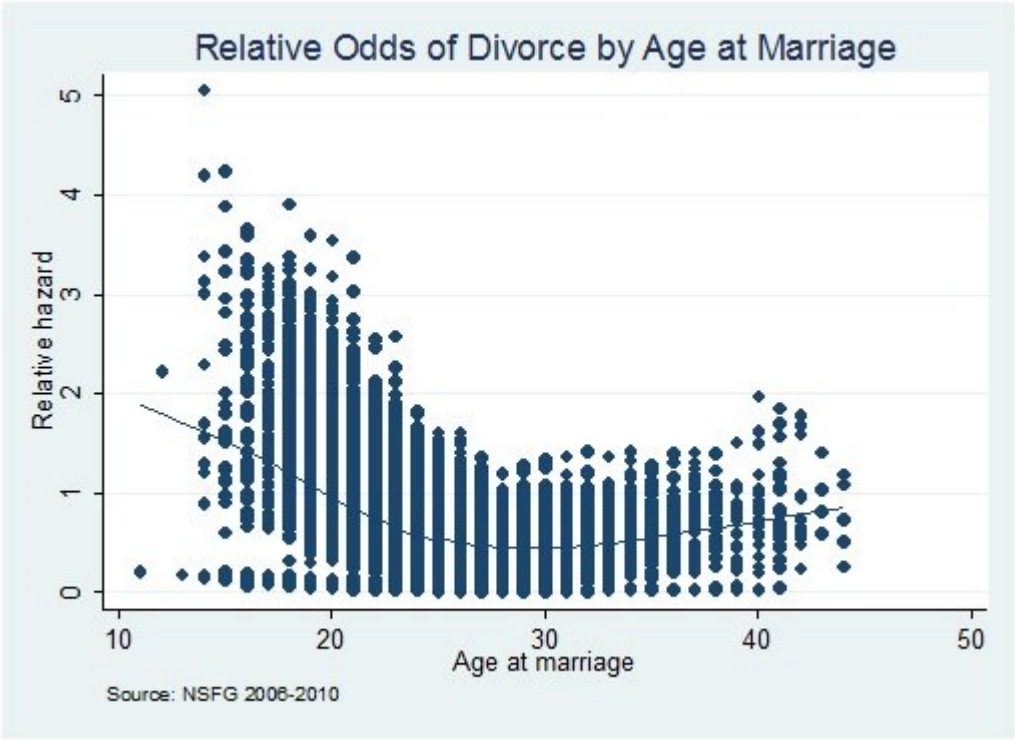
From the Teachman study on Social Pathologist. In particular, we see correlative trends on:

- Virgins are significantly less likely to be infected by STDs (obviously)
- Virgins are significantly less likely to divorce and are more likely to have stable marriages.
- Virgins are more likely to be happy in their marriages.
- Virgins are less likely to be depressed.

These are not all of the stats you can pull out on virgins.The findings for the population regarding virginity and stable marriages are replicated across various studies.



This alone shows the female virginity is important for marriages. God knew what He was talking about in Deuteronomy 22.



Other indicators based on statistical modeling

Aside from virginity, are other indicators of stable marriages based on statistical modeling. I'm not going to pull out charts for all of these, but you can check out some of the others for yourself through google. For example, stable marriages are more likely to be formed across:

- Ethnicity: Asian > hispanic > white > black

- Age: Reverse bell curve around 25-30 years old

- Religion: Catholics > Active Protestants > Non practicing > Non-practicing Protestants > Other
- Importance of religion: active > non-practicing

Those committed to their faith or no faith are stronger in marriages than those who are lukewarm.

- College education: Graduate > College educated > Part college > HS diploma > Part High School

Education is a predictor of stable marriages. Cane and the commenters discussed potential reasons why.

- Family background: Two parents > one parent > no parents

A father and a mother provide the most stable marriage, which is also a predictor of divorce. Single mothers being a big offender.

- Children out of wedlock: Children in wedlock > children within first 9 months of marriage > children out of wedlock

Yes, shotgun marriages are worse than wedlock marriages but better than having children out of wedlock then getting married.

All of the relative risk ratios for the following are discussed in Free Northerner's post on Sexonomics: odds of divorce. I took out the ones already discussed.

- Age of first sexual experience: 18 > 17-18 > 15-16 > 13-14 > 12

Unsurprisingly, the earlier sexual experience means disproportionately lifetime partners and higher risk of divorce. Exercising self control works (likely along with stronger family structure too).

- Cohabitation: No cohabitation > cohabitation
- Income: husband earns more > equal income > wife earns more
- Income total: Middle > higher > lowest (speculation: more cash and prizes for divorcing the highest income earners)

Some other indicators from divorce probability.

- Prior marriage: no prior marriage is better than a prior marriage
- Employment status: employed > part time > not employed
- Interracial marriages: Some have more likelyhood of staying together (e.g. White man, black woman) and some have less likelihood (e.g. black man, white woman; asian man, white woman, etc.).
- Country: US is pretty divorce happy compared to many other countries. For example, 50% of all Catholic annulments worldwide are in the US.
- Ability to resolve conflict: Never argue > rarely argue > regularly argue > heated arguments
- Alcohol use: None > some > regularly
- Drug use: None > some > regularly
- Mental illness: None > having one (depression, schizophrenia, BPD, etc.)

- Age difference: reverse bell curve centered with least risk of men being 0-2 years older.
- Forced premarital sex: None > forced sex (e.g. rape)
- Length of marriage: the longer your marriage lasts the less risk of divorce

Social attitudes:

- Divorce is usually the best solution when a couple can't seem to work out their marriage problems
- A young couple should not live together unless they are married
- It is okay for an unmarried female to have a child
- It is important for a man to spend a lot of time with his famil than to be successful at his career

All of these are different indicators of increase probability for separation or divorce.

It also so happens that women who delay age of first sexual experience, likely have increased self control and thus significantly decrease amount of total sexual partners.

Calculating the odds

There are some calculators aside from Free Northerner's post. FN mentions divorce probability. The defunct Just 4 Guys had one up that leads to this statistical probability.

J4G calculates the relative risk ratio of separation at 10 years. If the woman is:

- Over 25
- Has a 4 year degree
- Catholic
- Had an intact 2 parent family
- Lost her virginity to you in marriage
- Was not a single mother
- Does not believe divorce is an option
- Does not believe in cohabitation
- Does not believe that it's okay for an unmarried woman to have a child out of wedlock
- Believes family time is more important than career advancement

Then the relative risk of separation at 10 years is 2%.

Obviously, J4G does not take into account many of the other myriad of risk factors above including ethnicity, importance of religion, income, income total, employment status, interracial marriages, country, conflict solving, alcohol use, drug use, mental illness, age difference, forced premarital sex, and some of the other factors.

It is likely that the relative risk can be reduced even further if other factors are applied.

Conclusions for virginity

I stand by my statements that vetting will reduce the risk of divorce from 50/50 to at least 90% if not 95-98%. Perhaps even 99%+ like TPC denies if you can factor in all of the ones that J4G and DP missed including attitudes about the importance of God and family in relation to life. In fact, virginity does most of the leg work reducing the risk of divorce already up to 80-85% depending on the study. This is why chastity is so important and why it made my list.

One of the quotes I've heard from Andy Stanley on why statistics matter is excellent (although, unfortunately, he believes heretical "submit to one another in Christ" for marriages). Paraphrased:

> It is foolish to ignore statistics. […] You are unique. God created you to be unique. But your experiences are not unique.

Experiences are not unique. We are all humans and engage in relationships. This gives statistics power as exemplary warning signs that can be used to analyze what a stable marriage looks like compared to an unstable one based on current and past behavior. They are accurate predictors that those unmarried can use to look for a potential spouse including the direct vetting like I have talked about.

Obviously, people change during marriage. This doesn't mean that there is a sudden massive increase in divorce probability as people change and get older. I admit that you can't vet to 0% probability of divorce. Even in the list above in the last section there is a 2% chance that there will be separation at 10 years. Maybe you fell into the 2% risk of separation or divorce. You one of the 2 out of 100. That sucks. But that doesn't discount that 98/100 of the other men still have stable marriages. Women may be fickle, but certain types of women are not that fickle that they would end up divorcing in droves after strong vetting.

Therefore, it should be abundantly clear that vetting, especially statistically, does have a very strong impact on finding a quality prospect for marriage. Reduction in relative risk of divorce from about 50/50 to < 5% maybe even to < 1- 2% is a very strong indicator that it works. It is such a strong reduction such that most informed men would never take a 50/50 willingly but would take the a < 2-5% chance. See: Jesus' analogy of discipleship about counting the cost.

Virgins

Now, going back to doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins.

- There are 10,466,258 women aged 25-29 and 10,571,823 women aged 20-24 and 10,736,677 women aged 15-19 in the US in 2010. Let's say the range from 18-29 is good. 18-19 make up ~40% of the 15-19 range so ~4,294,671 women.

2010 Census Data. Not much changes in 5 years given the chart as each population group is still roughly 10 million.
http://www.census.gov/prod/cen2010/briefs/c2010br-03.pdf

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range = 25,332,752

———-

- Less than 20% of Americans regularly attend church — half of what the pollsters report. While Gallup polls and other statisticians have turned in the same percentage — about 40% of the population — of average weekend church attendees for the past 70 years, a different sort of research paints quite a disparate picture of how many Americans attend a local church on any given Sunday. […] His findings reveal that the actual rate of church attendance from head counts is less than half of the 40 percent the pollsters report. Numbers from actual counts of people in Orthodox Christian churches (Catholic, mainline and evangelical) show that in 2004, 17.7 percent of the population attended a Christian church on any given weekend.

http://www.churchleaders.com/pastors/pastor-articles/139575-7-startling-facts-an-up-close-look-at-church-attendance-in-america.html

- We also know that 70% of young adults in the 18-22 range drop out of church.

http://www.lifeway.com/Article/LifeWay-Research-finds-reasons-18-to-22-year-olds-drop-out-of-church

These two factors as pointed out are heavily confounded with each other. As KPP pointed out in the previous comments, about half of the 2/3 that drop out eventually end up attending again albeit in lower frequency. For the sake of argument, I'm willing to be factor out the dropout rate of young adults altogether using the US population "regularly attenders" as the standard which is 17.7%. This will overestimate the amount of young women in the Church.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who regularly attend Church = 25,332,752 * .177 = 4,483,897

- 58.5 of women 20-39 years old are overweight or obese in 2011-2012 in the US.

http://jama.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=1832542

- NIDDK (National institute for diabetes and digestive and kidney diseases) states that 33% of teens are overweight or obese.

https://www.niddk.nih.gov/health-information/health-statistics/Pages/overweight-obesity-statistics.aspx

One could say that Christians have more self control than their counterparts. However, as I have noted in posts such as A lesson in false humility: Christians are allergic to healthy lifestyles, Christian women tend to find a way to rationalize that paying attention to physical appearance is an idol. This statistic is probably pretty accurate.

An estimate of the total number of 20-29 year olds that are not overweight or obese would build off the data. If 67% of teens are not overweight or obese then the 41.5% should be averaged between the 20-29 and 30-39. Therefore, if we say that obesity increases linearly with age, then 67% of teens are not overweight or obese, 50% of 20-29 are not overweight or obese and 33% of 30-39 are not overweight or obese. Averaging 50% and 33% yields our 41.5%.

Therefore, a solid estimate is that 50% of 18-29 age range are not overweight or obese. That's still pretty dismal.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese = 4,483,897 * .5 = 2,241,949

- In highly religious groups, up to 20% wait until marriage successfully. Naturally, religious people seem more likely to wait until marriage to have sex. In a study of 9 Southern Baptist churches in Texas, 20% of the church members aged 25 or younger were married without ever having premarital sex (e.g. no oral & no vaginal).
- In the general population, the ratio of women-to-men who wait until marriage to have sex seems to be about 60/40 girls-to-guys. This statistic disproves the common misconception that only women wait until marriage to have sex. Statistically-speaking, plenty of guys wait too!

http://waitingtillmarriage.org/4-cool-statistics-about-abstinence-in-the-usa/

I did some research since the previous post, and found the actual study with data:

Demographics of sample of Southern Baptist Sunday School attendees (n = 151)

https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3156853/ (my red highlighting)

A greater percentage of men had no sex (30.1%) compared to women (24.4%). Same with the data for oral only, vaginal only, and both. The distinction is fairly low, but it seems to support the conclusion that women slightly more often have premarital sex than men.

Overall, the more committed one was to Church (e.g. very often) the more likely that one was a full virgin. Unfortunately, the study did not quantify the difference between “very often” and “often” but I imagine that “very often” is likely 1 or more times per week, whereas “often” is only once to a few times month. That’s the way I’ve seen it quantified in online dating surveys.

Indeed, there was also a huge disparity between those who married 16-20 and 21-24 and 25-36 with the rates at 15.8% (includes married by pre-marital pregnancy), 38.8% and 13.5% respectively for no sex before marriage. Overall, if you’re a Christian man aim for the 21-24 age group of Christian women attending Church often for your best shot.

Overall childhood church attendance and 2 parent families also played a role over no church attendance and divorced families. Another 2 factors to keep in mind.

Proportion to have premarital sex by age of first marriage and gender (n = 151)

19 total women were total virgins at marriage, and 22 total men were total virgins at marriage. This also lends credence to my aforementioned conclusion that men should aim for the 21-24 demographic of Christian women if they want a virgin at marriage as pretty much all of the virgins were clustered into the 20-24 range. Kudos to the 32 woman and 36 man who waited.

Church number
1a	21	66.7	9.5	9.5	14.3	0.002

3	28	28.6	25.0	3.6	42.9
4a	12	16.7	8.3	16.7	58.3

6	23	17.4	4.3	4.3	73.9
7	15	13.3		6.7	80.0
"Accept Jesus as Lord & Savior"	151

It's worth noting that Church 1a and 2 had a highly disproportionate number of virgins at marriage compared to the rest of the Churches surveyed. 1a and 1b are designated as being in the "same region" so there's obviously a drastic difference between Church 1a and Church 1b even though they're in the same area. FIND THE RIGHT CHURCH.

For the sake of the statistical analysis, I'm going to go with the 30.4% for "very often" Church attenders for the conclusion as the "attend Church regularly" is already a factor. Note that this may be higher in the 21-24 age women population and less in the 25-29 age population.

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese, (4) who stay a virgin until marriage = 2,241,949 * .304 = 681,552

I'd be interested to see what the statistic is for 21-24 + often/very often childhood attendance + parents married + very often attendance is. Maybe it reaches 50%+ for childhood attenders which would be much better.

Mark MacIntyre comments:

> Shouldn't you separate the single women in this age range from the partnered women before doing the rest of the sums? (I'm quite tired today, so the answer to this may be staring me in the face).
> According to Pew Research, just 20% of Americans aged 18-29 are married. That would further reduce your eligibility number to 681,552 x 0.8 = 545,241 (rounded down, because who wants 0.6 of a woman?).

That is indeed the case. Therefore, adding a significant needed criteria this would be:

(1) Total women in 18-29 age range, (2) who attend Church regularly, (3) who aren't overweight or obese, (4) who stay a virgin until marriage (5) who are single = 681,552 * .8 = 545,241

I factored in as many confounding variables as I could, and I was conservative at adding more variables to the equation because of confounding factor overlap. Other variables with confounding factors that I didn't include in the statistics:

- The National Marriage Project also found that "about 80 percent of young-adult men and women continued to rate marriage as an 'important' part of their life plans; almost half of them described it as 'very important.'" Thirty percent of 25-year-old single women want to be married. Read more at http://national.deseretnews.com/article/1893/The-national-marriage-age-is-increasing-but-not-for-this-group-of-people.html . Only ~30% of women want to be married in the 18-30 age range on average approximately.
- Those who attend church are not always "Christians." Based on my experience and others I'd say that only 10-20% of Christians in churches are actually reading their Bible and striving to obey Scripture.
- Worse measures of virginity in non-extremely conservative Church populations.
- Denominational differences. Some of the stats clumps all religions together (hindu, muslum, etc.) not just Catholic and Protestant.

Thus, I believe the above statistics are a fairly accurate measurement compared to the previous estimate. If anything, it's going to be a slight to moderate overestimate.

The third iteration resulted in these numbers:

In conclusion, there are approximately 545,241 Christian women in the US aged 18-29 who regularly attend Church, aren't overweight or obese, are virgins at marriage, and are currently single. This is approximately 2.15% of the 18-29 total women population (545,241 / 25,332,752). In the US total population it is .17% (545,241 / 320,090,000).

Specifically, any random 18-29 year old woman in Church with the attributes of non-overweight or obese and a virginity and single is going to be .304 (virginity at marriage) * .5 (not overweight or obese) * .8 (single) = 12%. In other words, about 1 in 8.

These numbers are better than previous estimates, based on more accurate data. However, I did drop some potential relevant factors, so if anything it may be a slight overestimate.

The average Church size is approximately 186 attenders. Your average Church is 60/40 women to men as we mentioned before. The women tend to be disproportionately older or families with children. Total 18-29 women in the US who regularly attend Church make up 16.1% of the women population (25,332,752/(156,964,212)). I won't factor in drop out rates among young people, even though it may be up to 33%. Hence, we get:

- ~18 women (186 * .6 * .161) in the 18-29 age group in your average congregation.
- ~2.2 women (18 * .304 * .5 * .8) who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, virgins, and single in your average congregation.

Unfortunately, there is room for gloom. But don't lose hope. Advice in the conclusion.

Conclusions and advice

Criteria:

1. Women who are 18-29,
2. regularly attend Church,
3. aren't overweight or obese,
4. are virgins at marriage
5. Single

Statistics based on these criteria:

- 2.15% of women in the 18-29 total population.
- .17% of women in the total US population.
- 12% of Church going women 18-29 are not overweight or obese and virgins.
- 18 women in the 18-29 age group in your average 186 member congregation.
- 2.2 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 186 member congregation.
- 11.7 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 1,000 member congregation
- 117 women who are age 18-29, not overweight or obese, and virgins in your average 10,000 member congregation

The last 5 statistics are probably slight overestimates. More conservative Churches may have slightly more. More liberal Churches will probably have less. Larger congregation have a tendency to be more liberal; hence, it is probably less than 160 women per 10,000 members.

That said there are good indicators for who the attractive Christian virgins are. They wear feminine clothing, have long hair, have an innocent look, have strong masculine fathers, value family and marriage, love children, don't have tattoos, don't like alcohol, and other such traits.

Of course, most of the men are probably going after the 12% in each Church, so you need to learn how to be a strong, confident masculine leader if your goal is one of those women.

My advice:

1. Attend one main Church.
2. Go to young adult events at other Churches and gatherings to increase your chances of meeting one of these few age 18-29 attractive, Christian virgins.

3. If you're in your mid to late 20s, aim for the 20-24 age group of devout Church going women as your odds rise up to potentially close to 40% in that range for virgins.
4. Potentially attend a mega-Church, although the theology of many mega-Churches nowadays can be questionable. If you do, understand the importance of vetting character and attitudes.
5. At 3 women per average congregation you might just be better meeting many 18-29 year old women at various hobbies, dances, and other social events because 2.69% of them will be Christian women who regularly attend Church, are not obese or overweight, and are virgins. If it's a physical activity your chances are potentially better since that tends to eliminate the overweight and obese.
6. Use your friends and families to network!
7. If you're still young, perhaps volunteer in university campus Christian group(s) as a leader or continue to be one if you recently graduated.
8. Other advice here on my detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife.

My Church is smaller than the average congregation. I did not find my wife in my current Church. She was 23 and a virgin when I found her, so that lends credence to the 20-24 range as well.

Virginity pledges

https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC4090803/

> Over the past two decades, virginity pledges have proliferated in the US, despite mixed results regarding their effectiveness. Few studies have examined possible mechanisms that may shed light on why pledges work for some individuals but not others. Using a sample of emerging-adults aged 18–24 years old (n = 1,380),we examine the influence of religiosity on pledge signing and adherence, specifically whether the effectiveness of pledges is moderated by religiosity. Findings show that while religious participation is positively associated with signing a pledge, there is amoderating effect of religious commitment. That is, when religious commitment is high, adherence to the pledge is greater. However, for pledge signers with low religious commitment, there are unintended negative consequences with regard to increased participation in risky sexual behaviors, whether compared to other people who signed the pledge who are equally committed to their religion or to individuals who have never taken such a pledge. Implications for research and policy are discussed.

Basically, virginity pledges somewhat work effectively if religious commitment is high. They pretty much don't work for those whose commitment is low.

Thus, if Churches want to effectively implement them then they should have them as "optional" and don't do them in a public setting where turning them in allows those with low religious commitment to feel peer pressured into doing them.

Conclusions

When vetting pay attention to these factors:

- Virginity: Makes up most of divorce risk.
- Ethnicity: Asian > hispanic > white > black
- Age: Reverse bell curve around 25-30 years old. Though virginity is maximized around 21-24 years old in the baptist study, so that age range is more important.
- Religion: Catholics > Active Protestants > Non practicing > Non-practicing Protestants > Other
- Importance of religion: active > non-practicing
- Education is a predictor of stable marriages.
- Age of first sexual experience: 18 > 17-18 > 15-16 > 13-14 > 12
- Her family Structure growing up : Father + mother > father > mother > none
- Don't cohabitate: No cohabitation > cohabitation
- Income: husband earns more > equal income > wife earns more
- Income total: Middle > higher > lowest (speculation: more cash and prizes for divorcing the highest income earners)
- Prior marriage: no prior marriage is better than a prior marriage
- Employment status: employed > part time > not employed
- Interracial marriages: Some have more likelyhood of staying together (e.g. White man, black woman) and some have less likelihood (e.g. black man, white woman; asian man, white woman, etc.).
- Country: US is pretty divorce happy compared to many other countries. For example, 50% of all Catholic annulments worldwide are in the US.
- Ability to resolve conflict: Never argue > rarely argue > regularly argue > heated arguments
- Alcohol use: None > some > regularly
- Drug use: None > some > regularly
- Mental illness: None > having one (depression, schizophrenia, BPD, etc.)
- Age difference: reverse bell curve centered with least risk of men being 0-2 years older.
- Length of marriage: the longer your marriage lasts the less risk of divorce
- College education: Graduate > College educated > Part college > HS diploma > Part High School
- Don't have premarital sex: Children in wedlock > children within first 9 months of marriage > children out of wedlock
- Forced premarital sex: None > forced sex (e.g. rape)

Social attitudes

- Divorce is usually the best solution when a couple can't seem to work out their marriage problems

- A young couple should not live together unless they are married
- It is okay for an unmarried female to have a child
- It is important for a man to spend a lot of time with his family than to be successful at his career

Obviously, you probably can't get ALL of these traits in a Christian girl, but you can probably find a majority of them. There are some more important ones such as strong faith, virginity, lack of mental illness, not doing drugs or alcohol, and ability to resolve conflict that are stronger than others.

Out of all of these criteria, my wife had 23/28 of these criteria.

These were the other main criteria I was looking for, and you can see there's a lot of overlap.

1. Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church or community. A heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful in it with her actions.
2. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity — long hair, dresses modest, wears dresses and skirts, smiles often, enthusiastic, kind, gentle, humble, preferably knows how to keep a home and cook, etc.
3. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed — Christian men and women are called to this prior to marriage, and I'm uninterested in having to deal with the drama that surrounds a woman that has had previous intimacy with other men. I'd readily consider a low N-count woman who has shown though her actions and attitude that she has repented (and not just feels bad about what she did) over a virgin Christian woman who has done everything but sex.
4. Evidence of attraction/chemistry — I work in the medical and fitness industries, and it is important for me to have a wife who is a good ambassador for Christ in how she looks. I've dated women before who don't care about good nutrition and exercise, and it never ends well because this is an integral part of my life. A woman who strives to be attractive even though it takes work is going to be a better ambassador for Christ than one who gives in to sloth and gluttony. This goes both ways as my potential wife should be attracted to me too.
5. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization — God willing I hope to have many children (3-5+) and am looking to home school them. I don't care if my wife has a career, but she should be willing to lay it aside for her family. Age is not a primarily consideration for me, but since I want to have many children younger is better.
6. Evidence of submissiveness, especially to God — This pretty much sums up a Biblical marriage in that it encompasses the 3 major roles that a wife is called to: a helpmeet, with submission, and with respect. I tell women that my God given mission will put me in uncomfortable discussions and challenges, and if she's coming along with me then it will be more of the same. If you're not growing in your heart, mind, soul, and strength for Christ then what are you doing?

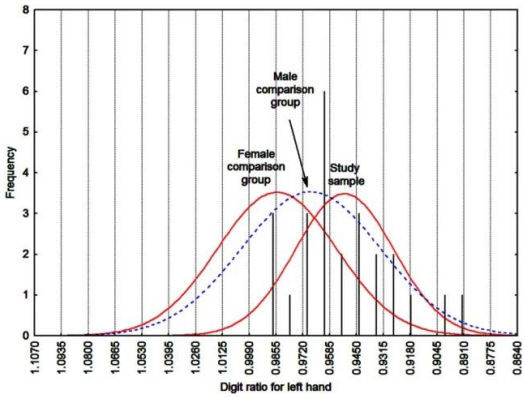
I think overall it’s not an exact “science”, but it definitely can help you “count the cost” so to speak to see if marriage is an overall good decision for you. I think for many men it’s probably not going to be, unless you can find a virgin.

At the end of the day though, you influence and lead her through your behavior and actions, so you need to know that what you are doing is affecting your risk of divorce through a marriage as well.

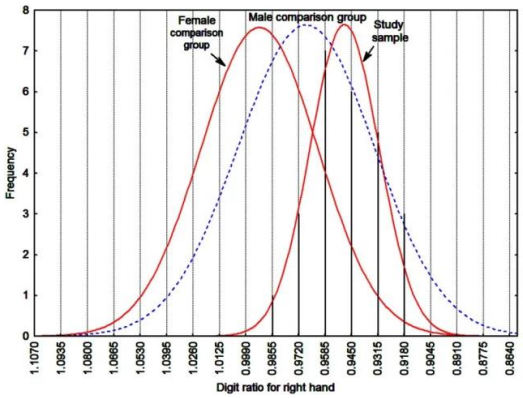
Digit ratio redux

January 11, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Info from a recent Dalrock post actually found a pubmed article on Feminist activist women are masculinized in terms of digit-ratio and social dominance: a possible explanation for the feminist paradox.



As I noted in the previous digit ratio post, men and women exposed to higher prenatal testosterone develop tendencies for behavior based on how much they were exposed to.



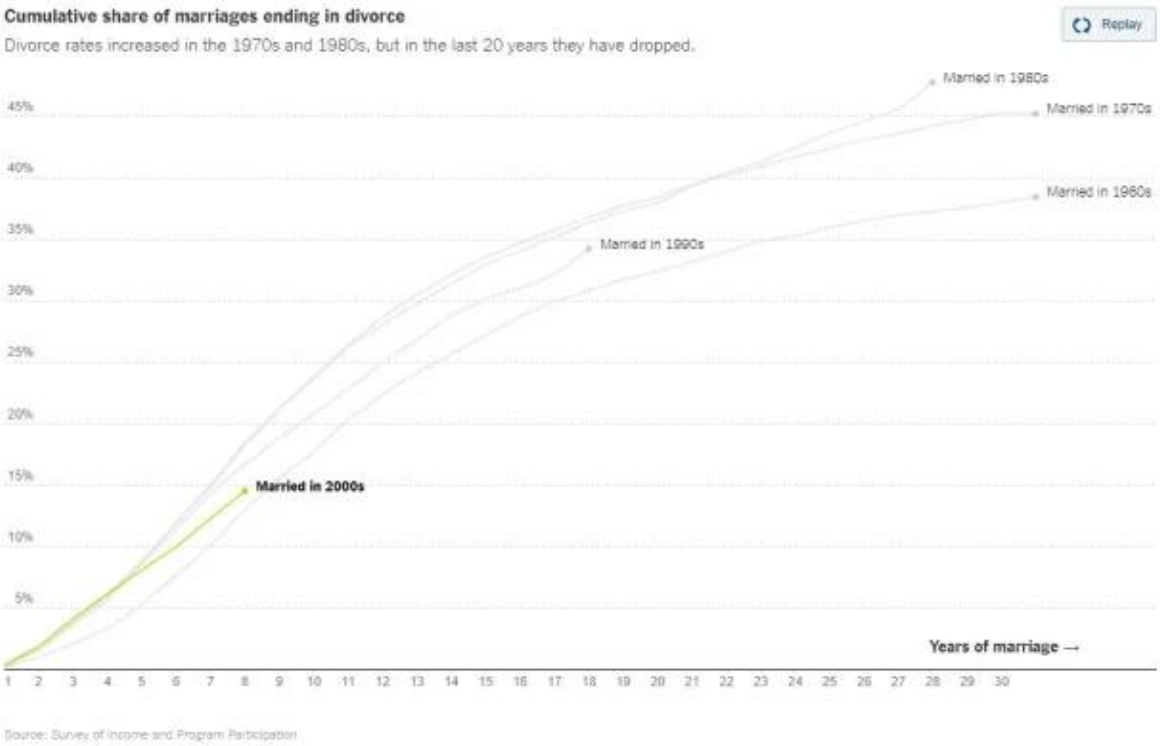
Here is the study's abstract:

> The feminist movement purports to improve conditions for women, and yet only a minority of women in modern societies self-identify as feminists. This is known as the feminist paradox. It has been suggested that feminists exhibit both physiological and psychological characteristics associated with heightened masculinization, which may predispose women for heightened competitiveness, sex-atypical behaviors, and belief in the interchangeability of sex roles. If feminist activists, i.e., those that manufacture the public image of feminism, are indeed masculinized relative to women in general, this might explain why the views and preferences of these two groups are at variance with each other. We measured the 2D:4D digit ratios (collected from both hands) and a personality trait known as dominance (measured with the Directiveness scale) in a sample of women attending a feminist conference. The sample exhibited significantly more masculine 2D:4D and higher dominance ratings than comparison samples representative of women in general, and these variables were furthermore positively correlated for both hands. The feminist paradox might thus to some extent be explained by biological differences between women in general and the activist women who formulate the feminist agenda.

Interestingly, what the abstract doesn't mention is that the sample women had a more masculinized digit ratio than even the sample men group!

A picture is worth a thousand words in this case:

As you can see, the mean digit ratio of feminist activist women is higher than both the female and male comparison groups, although there is some solid overlap.



If you find a woman who have very short index fingers compared to their rings, it’s worth being very careful around them until you know their tendencies and political views.

Divorce rates have not really dropped

January 16, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

An NYT article claims that divorce rates have dropped.

Here's the chart:

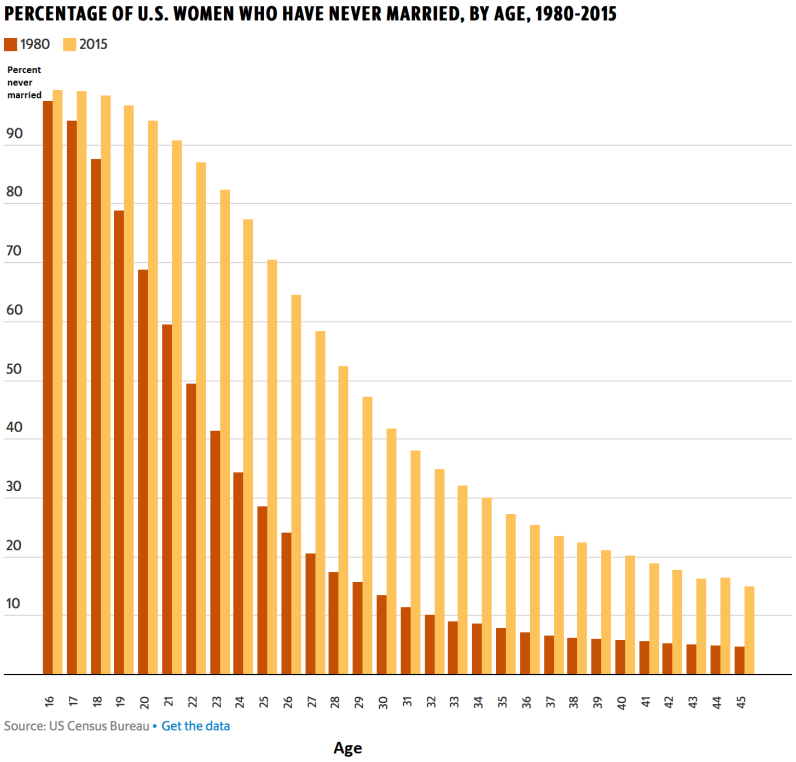
Overall, the "rates" don't really look to be dropping much at all because they are pretty much all on similar trajectories.

There's also no real "spike" for the so-called 7 year itch either.

The "spike" for the 1980s and 1990s seems to be in 2008, since the data for those married in 2000 only goes up to 8 years. That's when the market crashed from the housing bubble, and tons of people lost their houses and/or jobs. When husbands don't have jobs, wives tend to divorce in much greater numbers.

Overall, if the rates are dropping for those in the 2000s, it's because:

- There are less marriages overall and thus there are less divorces.
- Cohabitation is on the rise.
- Men tend to see marriage as a bad deal for them, and so they are just either opting out or only getting married if they are REALLY sure.
- The more unattractive men that would've gotten married and divorced simply aren't getting married anymore since they can't find women. These would-be divorces simply never come to be.
- Men are less masculine now, and women are less feminine.



If men and women married at the same rates as they did in the latter 1900s, then you'd definitely see drastically more divorces than the charts indicate. That's why simply looking at divorce rates is deceptive.

Marriage rates and end game spinster predictions

January 17, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Previous reddit post on statistics. I know Dalrock has covered it too a while back when it came out.

For men: https://datawrapper.dwcdn.net/AjCBx/1/

Bentley article on predictions. Here are the interesting excerpts.

> Today an unprecedented portion of millennials will remain unmarried through age 40, a recent Urban Institute report predicted. The marriage rate might drop to 70 percent — a figure well below rates for boomers (91 percent), late boomers (87 percent) and Gen Xers (82 percent). And declines might be even sharper if marriage rates recover slowly, or not at all, from pre-recession levels, according to the report.
> Traditional marriage has been on a downward trajectory for generations, but with this group it appears to be in free fall. According to a report released last month by the Pew Research Center, 25 percent of millennials are likely to never be married.

So this is what we have:

- In 1980, 95% of all women got married by 45 years old.
- In 2016, 85% of all women have gotten married by 45 years old.

That number is expected to increase to the 25-30% range for millennials (e.g. born 1982-2004) according to these predictions. So theoretically, the last millennials would be 45 in 2049.

> Young couples are opting to live together and put off marriage for later, if at all. About a quarter of unmarried young adults (ages 25 to 34) are living with a partner, according to Pew Research analysis of Current Population Survey data.

Average married age of women and men is 27 and 29. Therefore, we can estimate that this number is about ~40% unmarried for that particulate age range or so due to 27-29 being on the earlier side of 30 which is in the middle. That would mean that about 10% of unmarried young adults are cohabiting.

> Marriage has lost much of its social allure, but remains a desired milestone for about 70 percent of millennials. They say they would like to marry, but many — especially those with lower levels of income and education — lack what they deem to be a necessary prerequisite: a solid economic foundation.

Ironically, it's marriage that actually staves off poverty. One income with stay at home motherhood is generally a feature of upper middle class; two incomes tend to bring a family out of poverty income levels.

> "Even as marriage rates have plummeted — particularly for the young and the less educated — Gallup survey data show that young singles very much hope to get hitched. Of Americans age 18 to 34, only about nine percent have both never been married and say they do not ever want to marry," she wrote.

So about 10% say they don't want to get married and never have been married. 18-34 is a pretty big population range for singles. If average age of marriage for women is 27 and 29 for men, then that probably encompasses about 60-70% of the population. Let's say it's about 2/3rds of the population, so about 6% of millennials never want to get married. 94% want to get married.

Here's the margins

- Currently, 85% of all women have gotten married by 45.
- About 10% cohabitate.
- Predicted by 2049 that 25-30% of women will have not been married by 45.

This leaves us with:

- 6% never want to get married
- 10% cohabitation
- 70-75% married
- 94% want to get married.

This leaves us with:

- 9-14% "unwanted spinsterhood" — about 1 in 10 women

- 19-24% “unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood” — about 2 in 10 women

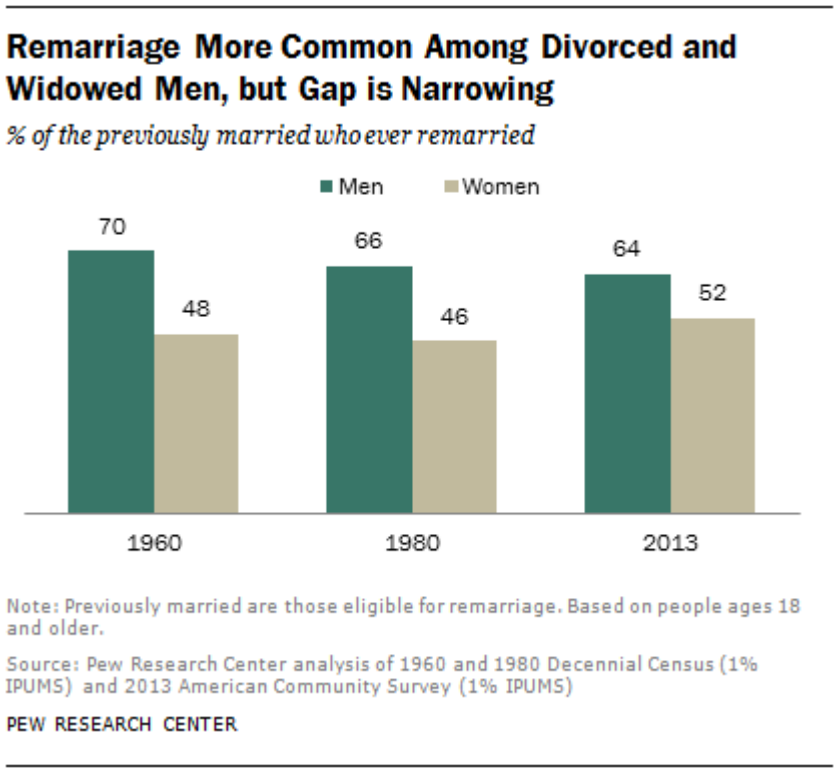
That’s a decent chunk of the female population that will have to settle for unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood. We’ll see how this plays into affecting the narrative. The loudest cries are always at the margins.

Edit: Fuzziewuzziebear makes a good comment:

> The problem with this is that it fails to take into account women who have divorced and don’t remarry. There have to be a terrible lot of them. At a guess. let’s say it doubles the numbers. With eighteen to twenty eight percent of women unlikely to marry, they should be screaming.

About 50% of women remarry after divorce. 1st marriage divorce rate is currently approximately between 30-40%. Therefore, there are another 15-20% of women who are single divorcees.

Bonus: Kate Bolick of the oft referenced All the Single Ladies article that has gone around a lot has a book on spinsterhood aptly named “Spinster” trying to ‘spin’ it in a positive light. The media agrees with her narrative obviously.



The rest of the article is blustering to try to rationalize the “changing views” of marriage. Not worth the time reading.

Remarriage analysis in context with marriage rates and spinsterhood

January 22, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been looking over the remarriage rates in context with the previous post on marriage rates and spinsterhood.

Interestingly, the Pew research has these stats for remarriage:

This is more interesting when you bring into the responses to the surveys.

> This may reflect, in part, the fact that men who have been divorced or widowed are more likely to want to remarry than are similarly situated women. Some 29% of eligible men say they want to remarry, and 36% are not sure, according to a recent Pew Research Center survey; only 30% say they do not want to marry again. In contrast, just 15% of previously married women want to remarry, and 27% are not sure; about half of these women (54%) report that they do not want to remarry.

29% of men say they want to remarry, 36% are not sure, and 30% say they don't want to remarry. No clue where the other 5% went. Alternatively, 54% of women do not want to remarry.

- 29% + 36% = 65% who want to remarry or are not sure which almost exactly matches the rate of men who remarry at 64%.
- 54% of women do not want to remarry and 52% of women remarry which almost exactly matches the stats. So of the women who want to remarry or are not sure, almost all of them do.

Now, look at this in the context of initiated divorce rates. About 70% of divorces are initiated by women.

- 29% of men want to remarry and 30% of the men initiate divorces. This almost exactly coincides as well.
- 15 + 54% = 69% of women want to remarry and don't want to remarry which is 69% of women which almost matches the 70% of divorces initiated by women. Women generally divorce because they are so unhappy with the marriage and/or they want to remarry someone else. Generally, singleness is still a stigma for women.

It's likely that the 54% of women who "never want to remarry" married an average to below average joe and couldn't stomach it while the other 15% of women were looking for greener pastures.

Obviously, there is some overlap between the different categories and not every man who initiates a divorce also wants to remarry, but the statistics are remarkably consistent for the approximate amounts of initiated divorces and remarriage rates.

Now, before women go all crazy about divorcing and seeing that they can remarry, there is additional context of course.

Gender Gap in Remarriage Persists at Oldest Ages

% of the previously married who ever remarried

	----------1960----------			----------2013----------
	Men	Women	Gap (M-W)	Men	Women	Gap (M-W)
18-24	52	61	-8	27	29	-2
25-34	76	74	+1	41	45	-4
35-44	81	73	+9	57	57	0
45-54	80	61	+18	64	62	+2
55-64	73	44	+29	71	63	+8
65 and older	53	25	+28	66	40	+26

Note: Gap is percent remarried among men minus percent remarried among women. Gap is calculated prior to rounding. Previously married are those eligible for remarriage.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of 1960 Decennial Census (1% IPUMS) and 2013 American Community Survey (1% IPUMS)

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Overall, this chart shows us something we absolutely already knew about remarriage for women. The cumulative remarriage rate for women is overall sitting at 52% which is dragged down by the 65% and older and the young remarriage rates. Almost all of the remarriages are happening by the women in the 18-24 and 25-34 age ranges.

By 34, if a woman is not remarried, there's only a very slim chance she will get married again. 45% to 57% by 35-44 and 62% by 45-54 and 63% by 55-65. In other words, approximately:

- 3 in 10 women get remarried if they're 18-24
- 1 in 7 women get remarried if they're 25-34
- 1 in 10 women get remarried if they're 35-44
- 1 in 20 women get remarried if they're 45-54
- 1 in 100 women get remarried if they're 55-65

The remarriage rates for women are grim for women if they're older than 25, and very grim if they're older than 34, and nigh impossible if they're 55 and older.

Other interesting sex and marriage interactions

If you remember back to the Kinsey marriage sex statistics I posted on early last year, there are some interesting findings to go with this.

> Other data show similar qualities:
> More than 7 times a week: 3%
> 7 times a week: 1%
> 6 times a week: 3%
> 5 times a week: 9%
> 4 times a week: 11%
> 3 times a week: 13%
> 2 times a week: 21%
> once a week: 25%
> once a month: 8%
> less than once a month: 9%
> Approximately 17% (once a month to less than once a month) are sexless. I would assume that most "once a weekers" are probably unhappy with that. The sex drive of men is typically higher than that of women, but women can become dissatisfied with lack of frequency as well.
> We know that at the lowest 40% of marriages end in divorce. So if we assume that most of the sexless ~20% of marriages end in divorce, a large portion of those in the 25% once a week range are going to divorce as well. This doesn't take into account the potential dissolution of marriages with more frequency sex that have other problems.

Of the 40% of the first marriage divorces, 20% of women never want to marry again, 6% want to get married again, and 14% are not sure.

I would contend that the 6% who want to get married again and the 14% who are not sure are probably the women who were close to the 17% or 15-20% range of sexless marriages. Those women in the 20% range who were potentially had to output "duty sex" on a regular basis such as 1x per week probably had a negative impact on their perception of marriage that they don't want to experience it again.

Contrast to previous article

The previous article came to these conclusions.

> Here are the rates:
> - Currently, 85% of all women have gotten married by 45.
> - About 10% cohabitate.
> - Predicted by 2049 that 25-30% of women will have not been married by 45.
> This leaves us with:
> - 6% never want to get married
> - 10% cohabitation
> - 70-75% married
> - 94% want to get married.
>
> This leaves us with:
> - 9-14% “unwanted spinsterhood” — about 1 in 10 women
> - 19-24% “unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood” — about 2 in 10 women
> That’s a decent chunk of the female population that will have to settle for unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood. We’ll see how this plays into affecting the narrative. The loudest cries are always at the margins.

According to the divorce rate of all divorces which is about 50% — ~40% first marriage, 60% second marriage, ~70% third marriage — the 70-75% of marriages approximately 28-30% of first marriages end up in divorce. Since about 50% of the women in those first marriages remarry, it gives us these stats:

- 42-45% married for “death til us part”
- 14-15% of women in 2nd and 3rd marriages
- 14-15% of women divorced single hood
- 9-14% “unwanted spinsterhood” — about 1 in 10 women
- 19-24% “unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood” — about 2 in 10 women

This leaves us with approximately:

- 33-39% “unwanted cohabitation, unwanted spinsterhood, divorced singlehood/single mom” or about 1 in 3 to 2 in 5 women.

Very grim indeed.

There is nothing new under the sun Christian denominations

February 1, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was reflecting a bit on Ecclesiastes “there is nothing new under the sun” and the various faith traditions.

> Ecclesiastes 1:8 All things are wearisome; Man is not able to tell it. The eye is not satisfied with seeing, Nor is the ear filled with hearing. 9 That which has been is that which will be, And that which has been done is that which will be done. So there is nothing new under the sun. 10 Is there anything of which one might say, “See this, it is new”? Already it has existed for ages Which were before us. 11 There is no remembrance of [k]earlier things; And also of the [l]later things which will occur, There will be for them no remembrance Among those who will come [m]later still.

Overall, I came to these conclusions:

The Great Schism when the Church was split into Orthodox and Roman Catholic is pretty much similar to what happened when Israel was split into the ten tribes and two tribes. They started following two different kings.

Now, I don’t think the two different faith traditions will end up necessarily the same as Israel and Judah did, but the fracturing and dispute over authority is similar. While the RCC has a ‘pope’ as ‘king,’ Orthodox have ecumenical councils which I suppose don’t really fit the mold. So it’s not a perfect analogy.

> Judges 21:25 In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did what was right in his own eyes.

Protestants, unfortunately, are like the time of Judges, which is probably a step backward without authority. God didn’t want Israel to have a king like the nations surrounding it, but they tended to be more righteous if they were under a righteous authority figure than being non-governed .

The Protestants tend to have less resiliency and constantly turn away to cultural idols, and the faithful ones keep praying that God brings “revival” (e.g. a judge) to save them.

Anyway, I didn’t think about it super hard, so it’s not perfect. But it is close I think.

The issue with Leadership is Trust

February 4, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock and Cane have had quite a few good posts recently about the nature of leadership.

- Dalrock's Leading is serving
- Cane's post on Temptations to husbands and wives from Genesis
- Dalrock's Self inflicted reframe about foot washing

I wrote a couple of posts a while back on this namely,

- The Scriptures and temptations of husbands and wives, which goes through the various temptations of the husbands and wives according to the NT Scripture.
- Submission is a test of faith

In general, our submission to God is a test of faith — do we trust God's promises or not? Are we willing to trust God and follow Him? This is true with any type of authority, and basically a picture of the marriage relationship as well.

Unfortunately, what we now see in the church is that marriage — Biblical marriage — has been so poisoned by feminism and broader culture. This is seen through multiple means like portraying husbands as fools, clowns, and the butt of jokes. It's also seen in the push to "egalitarianism" and "complementarism" instead of patriarchy. It's seen in the distrust of any leadership and decision making that the husband does. It's seen in how a wife's opinions are the bottom line.

- Churches and pastors do not trust husbands to make good decisions because they are so ingrained with the world. They try to neuter headship to just be the husband doing everything the wife doesn't want to do. Decision making is to "break the tie."
- Wives dwell on the "what if" and "exceptions" instead of submitting, respecting, and following their husbands leadership.
- Discussions of submission are either diverted to "mutual submission" or the majority of time is spent on "what if my husband tells me to sin."

When the topic of "submission" comes up, most of the time should be spent on how to submit — how to stay humble, how to follow God or husband's leadership, how to respectfully address any conflicts that may happen, and how to have a respectful attitude and actions when you disagree with a decision.

These things are not what happens when leadership and submission are discussed, which further poisons the minds of even Church congregations and sows discord in marriage relationships.

The core issue that needs to be addressed is trust. If there is no way to operate in good faith with each other — everyone is so poisoned by the culture to think the other is out to do evil — then you fall into Satan's trap.

What is Satan's trap? Living in fear.

> 1 John 4:15 Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God abides in him, and he in God. 16 We have come to know and have believed the love which God has [d]for us. God is love, and the one who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him. 17 By this, love is perfected with us, so that we may have confidence in the day of judgment; because as He is, so also are we in this world. 18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear, because fear [e]involves punishment, and the one who fears is not perfected in love. 19 We love, because He first loved us. 20 If someone says, "I love God," and hates his brother, he is a liar; for the one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. 21 And this commandment we have from Him, that the one who loves God should love his brother also.

If you live in fear, you do not know love. You don't know God, nor do you have faith or trust in Him. The same is true of a husband and a wife.

My wife follows what I say because we have built up a bond of trust. My wife knows my character and my heart because I consistently choose godly actions. Thus, she can feel safe putting her trust in me.

When wives are poisoned by feminism and culture and unfortunately some pastors in the Church, they tell her that her husband is unworthy of her trust. She does not have to respect him. She should not follow him. He cannot be trusted to do anything right. This is the antithesis of the Scriptures.

Most wives do not have faith in their husbands. They lack trust. Many Church pastors do nothing to dispel that notion, contrary to the Scriptures.

Sexual polarity, civilization and our myopic view

February 9, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Seriouslypleasedropit has good post over at Calculated Bravery on some thoughts on sexual polarity. Started writing out a comment, but it got somewhat long so I figured I'd post about it since it's good. I went a bit off topic one some of the comments as I wanted to provide some extra thoughts on the matter.

> – The "ideal" member of the opposite sex, from a purely sexual point of view, will be at maximum sexual polarity. Think Christian Grey and a mix between Audrey Hepburn and Jessica Rabbit.
> – Sexual polarity is somewhat controllable. Most advice in the manosphere is oriented towards increasing it—men are advised to do things that increase their confidence, to lift, to put energy into their careers, and women are advised to take care of themselves, dress in a feminine manner, and be supportive.

Agreed. I think it's best thought of embodiments of masculine and feminine.

> – Sexual polarity is, to some extent, a luxury good. That is: just because something is sexy does not mean that it is always a good idea. If you are bent under the sink, you don't want to be wearing a miniskirt. If you have work to do, maybe those extra hours at the gym could be cut down a bit.

Agreed. Though becoming increasingly necessary have enough options so you're not stuck with someone with a high risk of frivorce if your aim is to marry.

> – Not only do cis characteristics sometimes have to be sacrificed in the name of practicality, but sometimes it even becomes expedient to adopt some behaviors typed to the opposite sex—women pushing harder for raises; men being quiet and supportive of a boss, etc.
> – The above explains the "paradox" that in poorer countries there are more women in "typically masculine" professions like engineering. To an extent, the country "can't afford" sex.

Women in the workforce is nothing really "new" exactly. Even Proverbs 31 describes a woman who runs a business out of her home, and there are numerous women in the Scriptures like Lydia who ran businesses.

We tend to have a false impression about that from western culture where a lot of wives want to or have the ability to stay home as housewives. This requires significant wealth acquisition, and is only really seen in first world countries. Women working, at least part time, or jobs that align with children (such as school teachers) tend to be the norm in most cultures across most times.

Additionally, the main thing with women is that while they may have a "masculine" job, they still like to be a woman or at least "feel" like a woman/wife at home. Even the high powered women in business want to come home to be with a masculine man who makes them feel girly.

> – Those of similar polarity attract. Extremely masculine men and extremely feminine women gravitate toward one another. This does not make them superior, more self-actualized beings—a hard-drinking gym rat construction worker and a flaky stripper are both strongly sexually polarized, and could definitely end up together, but you don't want to be either one.
> – That said, the prevailing ethos in the West generally moves people to a lower level of polarity than they "ought" to be—as in, could stand/afford, and would enjoy.

In areas that are war torn like Eastern Europe and Russia post-WW2, you see much more strong sexual polarity. There is violence so the men have a very "hard" edge to them, and the women are competing for smaller pools of men so they have to be very feminine to attract men. Any random tourist to these areas can tell you that — the men are tougher and the women are more attractive.

The West has feminism. Feminism is a luxury delusion.

> – There exists a class of situations and goals where, after a certain threshold, exerting extra effort fails to provide returns, and may even be detrimental. Examples include: you need a job to get experience/experience to get a job, confidence to build relationships/relationships to gain confidence, relaxation to achieve success/success to be able to relax, and faith to obey/the fruits of obedience to build faith.
> – I've basically only come across two ways to break these impasses: either avoid them as unproductive in hopes that they will resolve themselves in time or as we labor in more productive arenas, or try to power through one of the steps despite the "necessity" of the other.

Even inside particular goals such as jobs and experience, there are usually systems in place that one needs to take advantage of in order to build a necessary resume. Volunteer work, internships, networking, and so on.

Some goals align with each other well and some don't. For the ones that don't, you have prioritize. No one person can do everything. Elon Musk is a good example.

> – "It's not so much that I'm shallow (although I am of course)," I thought. "It's that I view the attractiveness of the woman I can attract as society's opinion on me."
> – "Oh," I thought. "Women must feel the same."

Beauty is not shallow as God created man to behold beauty as sexually attractive. But if you're weighing beauty as a measure of self esteem by society, then I suppose it's shallow in the fact that it has become an idol. I don't think anyone is immune to thoughts like that though; most men are proud to walk around if they perceive themselves to have a beautiful wife.

Both men and women do want to maximize, to some extent, the sexual attractiveness of someone they want to marry or be with. The issue is that most people, even Christians, hold beauty up over character and godliness. Ideally, you want both, but there is usually some sort of compromise there unless you're blessed to be born with good looks genetics and/or are called to or work hard to be in a high status occupation. That or you are mega rich.

The fact that we are even having such a conversation about sexual dynamics is so far outside most of civilizations in human history. But then again most civilizations had children who had both their parents and were taught a family trade.

The sexual nature of women

February 12, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One thing I've been mulling over recently is womens' addiction to bad boys.

The first theory that is prominent to me is that women are attracted to masculinity. Unfortunately, given the current social climate, bad boys display a lot more of it than nice guys. There's very few masculine "good men" so to speak nowadays for several reasons. Husbands and fathers are disrespected and delegitimatized, and bad boys are more like to be confident, aggressive, and take on risk than nice guys. All of which are masculine behaviors.

The second theory that I've been mulling over more is the temptation theory. Eve, in the garden, was tempted by Satan to want to be "more like God" and her sin caused her to be punished such that under the rule of her husband which she tries to usurp. Hence, womens' fascination with bad boys is to be "more like God" trying to exert control over him to "fix" him.

These two things are not mutually exclusive, so it can be both.

The first theory has the most merit to me, although it does not necessarily explain all of the cases where women have fascination with bad boys. For example, some women will constantly choose or cheat with bad boys even if they have access to high status, confident masculine leaders. There's no shortage of chronic serial cheaters.

Combined with the second theory, this would explain most, if not all, of the instances in which women will gravitate to bad boys despite access to "good masculine leaders." This includes womens' fascination with the "ultimate fantasy bad boys" like vampires, werewolves or even rapists and murders, where even if they are with someone or something evil they can be with them and influence them to be good. Take Disney's Beauty and the Beast as a prime example. Other examples include 50 Shades, and whatever vampire and werewolf movies were loved primarily by women in the past few decades.

In other words, womens' attraction to "bad boys" is two fold:

1. Women are attracted to masculinity traits and other traits like power, status, looks, etc.
2. Women are tempted toward bad men who they think they can control and fix. That "apple" or "bad boy" sure is appealing.

Logically, this agrees with what men analogous experience in terms of attraction to women:

1. Men are attracted to beauty and femininity.
2. Men are tempted by seductive, loose women like prostitutes and whores.

Both women and men can be educated that it is a bad idea to be tempted by certain populations like bad boys or whores because it will lead to ruin. However, they cannot be “changed” or “educated” to the extent that they’re not attracted to certain masculine or feminine traits in the opposite sex respectively.

I’m pretty sure that these two theories combined represent all of the nature of womens’ sexuality, but I’m open to other options if there is evidence to support them.

Feminism is the temptation to be like God and man

February 27, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been mulling this over more recently.

I think these two posts a year ago accurately pointed out some of the systematic effects of feminism, but didn't get to the heart of the issue.

- Feminism is an inferiority complex and white knights are enablers
- Feminism is the promotion and glorification of rebellion

So in Genesis 1, you have God creating man in his image:

> Genesis 1:26 And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.
> 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

The key point is verse 27. God made man in his image, not man and woman. Very easy to miss if you don't read closely.

> 1 Corinthians 11:7 For a man ought not to have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of man. 8 For man [i]does not originate from woman, but woman from man;

Paul uses a similar argument in 1 Corinthians on head coverings.

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? 2 And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: 3 But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. 4 And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: 5 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

Skip over to Genesis 3, and Eve is tempted to be (‘ĕlôhîym — elohim) "like God" or the "as gods."

That's one of the interesting nuances of the English translation here as KVJ translates it "as gods" (elohim — lit. gods) which would mean that Adam and Eve would become gods. Most other English translations put it as "like God" (elohim — the supreme God).

Interesting parallel to Jesus in John 10 and Psalm 82 here.

> John 10:31 The Jews picked up stones again to stone Him. 32 Jesus answered > them, “I showed you many good works from the Father; for which of them are you stoning Me?” 33 The Jews answered Him, “For a good work we do not stone You, but for blasphemy; and because You, being a man, make Yourself out to be God.” 34 Jesus answered them, “Has it not been written in your Law, ‘I said, you are gods’ (elohim)? 35 If he called them gods, to whom the word of God came (and the Scripture cannot be broken), 36 do you say of Him, whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world, ‘You are blaspheming,’ because I said, ‘I am the Son of God’? 37 If I do not do the works of My Father, do not believe Me; 38 but if I do them, though you do not believe Me, believe the works, so that you may [f]know and understand that the Father is in Me, and I in the Father.” 39 Therefore they were seeking again to seize Him, and He eluded their grasp.

In any case, we know the rest. Eve is punished thusly,

> Genesis 3:16b Yet your desire will be for your husband,And he will rule over you.”

Her temptation from pre-fall and post-fall has always been the same: to be like/as God, and to be like/as man (who is made in the image of God).

I suppose, in essence, it is envy personified.

> Reply to Objection 1. As Gregory says (Moral. xxxi, 45), “the capital vices are so closely akin to one another that one springs from the other. For the first offspring of pride is vainglory, which by corrupting the mind it occupies begets envy, since while it craves for the power of an empty name, it repines for fear lest another should acquire that power.” Consequently the notion of a capital vice does not exclude its originating from another vice, but it demands that it should have some principal reason for being itself the origin of several kinds of sin. However it is perhaps because envy manifestly arises from vainglory, that it is not reckoned a capital sin, either by Isidore (De Summo Bono) or by Cassian (De Instit. Caenob. v, 1).
> Reply to Objection 2. It does not follow from the passage quoted that envy is the greatest of sins, but that when the devil tempts us to envy, he is enticing us to that which has its chief place in his heart, for as quoted further on in the same passage, “by the envy of the devil, death came into the world” (Wisdom 2:24).

I did a little more digging and came across this excerpt from Thomas Aquinas’ Summa Theologiae.

> St. Ambrose used to instruct people thus:
> “Vainglory and pride are one and the same thing. Vainglory manifests its works, so that people see how you go along, how adroitly you do things, while pride then begins to disdain everyone. Vainglory is like a worm—at first it crawls and bends. But when it grows wings, it flies up high, and that is what pride is like.”

This from orthochristian shows the interactions between vainglory and pride. Vainglory in the form of flattery can lead to pride, or a high view of one's self can lead to vainglory.

Difference between had a pretty good analysis.

> Vainglory is a condition that results from the human desire to be seen, appreciated, acknowledged, and accepted. It is often attributed to people who are attention seekers and have a thirst for honors, rewards, status, or other forms of acknowledgment from other people. The pattern of attention is outward and decentralized. In a sense, vainglory is what an audience or other people think of a certain person.
> People with vainglory are described as boastful of their achievements whether large or small. They celebrate their accomplishment or qualities in a grand scale. If their assumptions or achievements are ignored or disproved, they act like it was a matter of no consequence.

That's most women in today's culture, feminism or not. Feminism is just one of the way pride and vainglory manifests as envy.

Increasing trust in times of conflict

March 13, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> Whenever my fiancé and I get in a conflict she always wonders if I love her. I believe I express my love enough with words and I whatnot and she needs to trust me more. Conflicts and stressful situations happen. Part of life. She's one of the most respectful woman I have ever met. Very submissive. Never really talks back. How do I respond to this? She gets scared so easily. It's almost comical at times.

Women tend to shy away from or be scared of conflict situations, so this is normal behavior. How you respond to it can give you a leg up in developing more trust.

There's several ways to approach this in a godly masculine manner that can increase trust and intimacy:

- Physical — pull her into a big hug. Nothing shows that you love her like pulling her into your arms until she feels comforted and melts. Bonus points for saying something along the lines of "aww, get over here" while you pull her into a big hug. Additionally, hold her hand while you are talking with her if the conflict has not ended yet.
- Surrounding circumstances — you don't want to be in any type of conflict in a high pressure atmosphere like in public or with loud noises around. A quiet, calm place is the best.
- Connect emotionally — and no, this is not splay out your feelings to her. It's normal to feel scared when emotions and tensions are high, and it's a good idea to let her know that it is OK to feel the way she is feeling. However, the way each of you respond to it makes a difference: conflict means you should run toward each other rather than pull away from each other.
- Be thankful for the opportunity to resolve it — when my wife was just my girlfriend and fiancee, one of the hardest things for her was that when there was conflict, she constantly pulled away, pouted, and otherwise shut down from conversation. One of the ways to get around this is to be thankful not angry, even if a situation was a cause to get angry. What I mean by this is that when she brings up a conflict situation, you need to thank her for bringing it up. Be patient, slow to anger, and abounding in love in such situations makes it much easier for her to not only know that you have her back but you can figure things out with her or with the situation without blowing up in anger like other men.
- Acknowledge that men and women are different — this is sort of obvious to us around these parts, but men and women respond to things differently. Not saying that it being "comical" is like patronizing her, but it helps to looking at the situation from an understanding point of view. She is the weaker vessel, and she needs more delicate intervention than a male friend would.

- Include flavor with the food — Remember, women need flavor with food. While you can directly criticize a man, women tend to take direct criticism as “not loving.” The technique of the “compliment sandwich” is a good example of how to make criticism more palatable. Praise her, “sometimes I notice that [insert criticism here]”, praise her.
- Trivial and fleeting — if it’s something very trivial and fleeting and doesn’t make any long term impact, you can simply just ‘reframe’ or change the subject. Getting her mind off of it basically solves the issue for these smaller ones.

These are the main ones that I can think of at the moment that I personally do, but I’m sure there’s more.

If any readers have good ways that they resolve potential conflict in their relationships, feel free to chime in.

Frozen fertility flaws and toxic masculinity exposed in mainstream

March 22, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Whoops.

> After two fertility clinics in different parts of the country experienced “major failures” at the same time, there are growing questions about the level of oversight at egg-freezing facilities.
> On Monday, the industry group that inspects most fertility labs told NBC News that there’s no requirement for a clinic to report problems unless there is a complaint filed or a negative news media report.
> The College of American Pathologists, the group that accredited the two clinics, was not contacted by the fertility clinics until after news reports alerted the public about the possibility that thousands of eggs and embryos may no longer be viable because of equipment malfunctions, a spokeswoman told NBC News’ Kate Snow.
> In San Francisco, patients of the Pacific Fertility Clinic learned over the weekend of a failure in its liquid nitrogen tanks. On Saturday, the clinic began notifying 400 patients who had several thousand eggs and embryos stored in a tank that malfunctioned on March 4.

Even if you try to delay fertility, it’s not always in your hands. Not that IVF is that successful anyway.

What I’m more surprised is someone — in this case, Gad Saad who is a professor from a University– put their reputation on the line with Is Toxic Masculinity a valid concept? on Psychology Today.

> Let’s now apply the exact same evolutionary process (sexual selection) to humans. Evolutionary psychologists have documented universal patterns of mating preferences that are invariant across time and place. In no culture ever studied have women repeatedly preferred to mate with pear-shaped, low-status, tepid men possessing high-pitched, nasal voices. In no documented culture do women’s sexual fantasies revolve around granting sexual access to unemployed, unambitious men who occupy the lowest stratum of the social hierarchy. Instead, women are attracted to “toxic masculine” male phenotypes that correlate with testosterone, and they are desirous of men who are socially dominant, who are strategically risk-taking in their behaviors, and who exhibit patterns of behaviors that will allow them to ascend the social hierarchy and defend their positions from encroachers. Of course this does not imply that women are not attracted to intelligent, sensitive, kind, warm, and compassionate men. The ideal man is > rugged and sensitive; masculine and caring; aggressive in some pursuits and gentle in others. Think of the male archetype in romance novels, which is a literary form almost exclusively read by women. He is a tall prince and a neurosurgeon. He is a risk-taker who wrestles alligators and subdues them on his six-pack abs, and yet is sensitive enough to be tamed by the love of a good woman. This archetype is universally found in romance novels read by women in Egypt, Japan, and Bolivia, precisely because it caters to women's universal evolved sexual fantasies. When engaging in sexual role-playing in the bedroom, few women ask that their male partners wear their Google C++ programmer uniform. They ask for the fireman suit to make its presence. James Bond, the epitome of "toxic masculinity," does not cry at Taylor Swift concerts. His archetype is desired by women and envied by men.

> The inimitable equity feminist Christina Hoff Sommers wrote a book back in 2001 titled The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men (see our chat on my show THE SAAD TRUTH_144 (link is external)). How prescient she was! There has been a relentless ideological attack on masculinity, stemming from radical feminism, the most recent example of which is the bogus term "toxic masculinity." It literally seeks to pathologize masculinity in ways that are profoundly harmful to the existential sense of self of young men. If a man witnesses a woman being attacked on the street, should he intervene? Well, according to the bogus feminist notion of benevolent sexism, it might be best to look away (see THE SAAD TRUTH_38 (link is external)). Male saviors are likely oozing toxic masculinity! I should add that male criminals are not exhibiting "toxic masculinity" any more than female adulterers are exhibiting "diabolical femininity."
> The great majority of men are attracted to feminine women who do not possess the body type of Michael Phelps. Beyoncé is desired not because of her "diabolical femininity," but simply because of her femininity. Similarly, most of the traits and behaviors that are likely found under the rubric of "toxic masculinity" are precisely those that most women find attractive in an ideal mate! This is not a manifestation of "antiquated stereotypes." It is a reality that is as trivially obvious as the existence of gravity, and no amount of campus brainwashing will ever alter these facts. Let us stop pathologizing masculinity. Instead, let us appreciate the endless ways by which men and women are similar to one another, as well as the important ways in which the two sexes differ.

Not much to say but that he's generally right about the human nature of men and women, although we might have some small differences onto why these traits are they way they are.

Violence is still sexy

March 30, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From USA Today:

> Nikolas Cruz, the teen accused of killing 17 people in a shooting rampage at a Florida high school last month, is attracting an avalanche of mail from fans offering friendship, encouragement and sexually provocative photos.
> The South Florida Sun Sentinel obtained hundreds of pages of photocopies of letters and photos sent to Cruz, 19, who is being held while awaiting trial on a litany of charges including 17 counts of first degree murder.
> “No one else is dealing w/your demons, meaning maybe defeating them could be the beginning of your meaning, friend,” an 18-year-old from New York wrote in a letter decorated with pink hearts. “I know you could use a good friend right now. Hang in there and keep your head up.”
> A woman from Chicago sent Cruz nine photos, including a photo in a bikini, one of her cleavage and another of her posterior. A Texas woman commented on his “beautiful” eyes and “handsome” freckles.
> Cruz is on suicide watch and is not permitted to receive mail, most of which is opened by jail officials. Broward County Public Defender Howard Finkelstein, whose office is representing Cruz, told the Sun Sentinel he has never seen so much mail for a defendant in his 40 years as a public defender.
> “We read a few religious ones to him that extended wishes for his soul and to come to God,” Finkelstein said, “We have not and will not read him the fan letters or share the photos of scantily clad teenage girls.”
>
> Steven Dubovsky, the University at Buffalo chair of Psychiatry who has studied mass shootings, says some people get a kind of “notoriety and fame by association” with heinous killers.
> “Anybody with real relationships or any firm grasp on reality is not going to engage in this behavior,” Dubovsky said. “You have people who have no real gratification in life.”
> Cruz is not the first mass murderer to draw a rabid fan following. Charles Manson, who died in prison in November, was briefly engaged in 2014 to a woman who ran the website Release Charles Manson Now.
> “It’s like hanging out with a rock star or being a groupie,” Dubovsky said. “There are a lot of groupies around. So they are murder groupies instead of a rock star groupies.”
> Finkelstein said he worries that young people are looking up to Cruz: “That scares me. It’s perverted.”

Violence is a very strong attraction for women. This is rooted in the ‘protector’ type instinct in women. The only thing we would argue about is the ‘degree’ to which violence is sexy. Some women think killers are sexy. Some women love when their boyfriend beats them. Some women only love to be protected using violence. Of course, many would draw the line somewhere and call women who love killers or women who love to get beat crazy, but the fact still remains.

One of the things I think that is good for young men and husbands is to learn how to fight. Sign up for a Krav Maga classes or other types of fighting courses. Extra credit for doing it with your wife or girlfriend so they can see the ferocity and the strength of men (including yourself) compared to women.

Men who know how to fight carry themselves differently than men who don’t.

It’s always good to have male strength on your side in this day and age and will likely make it easier for your wife to submit to your leadership.

Freedom is to be freed from

April 4, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

True freedom is…

> 2 Cor 3:4 Such confidence we have through Christ before God. 5 Not that we are competent in ourselves to claim anything for ourselves, but our competence comes from God. 6 He has made us competent as ministers of a new covenant—not of the letter but of the Spirit; for the letter kills, but the Spirit gives life.
> 7 Now if the ministry that brought death, which was engraved in letters on stone, came with glory, so that the Israelites could not look steadily at the face of Moses because of its glory, transitory though it was, 8 will not the ministry of the Spirit be even more glorious? 9 If the ministry that brought condemnation was glorious, how much more glorious is the ministry that brings righteousness! 10 For what was glorious has no glory now in comparison with the surpassing glory. 11 And if what was transitory came with glory, how much greater is the glory of that which lasts!
> 12 Therefore, since we have such a hope, we are very bold. 13 We are not like Moses, who would put a veil over his face to prevent the Israelites from seeing the end of what was passing away. 14 But their minds were made dull, for to this day the same veil remains when the old covenant is read. It has not been removed, because only in Christ is it taken away. 15 Even to this day when Moses is read, a veil covers their hearts. 16 But whenever anyone turns to the Lord, the veil is taken away. 17 Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. 18 And we all, who with unveiled faces contemplate[a] the Lord's glory, are being transformed into his image with ever-increasing glory, which comes from the Lord, who is the Spirit.

True freedom is being freed from the power of sin. In other words, repentance. Freedom is also being freed from the old covenant of having to work to keep the law. Instead, we are not a slave to works but able to choose to love and to do good works.

> Eph 2:8 For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith—and this is not from yourselves, it is the gift of God— 9 not by works, so that no one can boast. 10 For we are God's handiwork, created in Christ Jesus to do good works, which God prepared in advance for us to do.

Freedom is not being able to do whatever we want like our culture and society tells us. "I can do what I want" is a false freedom that only brings sin and death: Adam and Eve. Freedom in Christ influences us to take off the old and put on the new: to throw away the sinful desires of the flesh and to put on godliness and holiness.

This freedom actually limits what we are able to do by placing us under the authority of the one who freed us. Yet, it paradoxically sets our hearts truly free.

Marriage is…

April 14, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still writing the book, but I've felt something has been missing from it which has been mystifying me. Perhaps this post is an attempt to walk out some of the ideas that need more hashing.

The roles and responsibilities are pretty simple, but how do you break them down into teachable concepts that involve real life examples of successes and mistakes. After all, it's easy to point out where someone has made a mistake, but it's difficult to have a success and break it down into simple terms that someone else can employ in their life. In this case, from a man to another man, or a husband to another husband.

To try to distill this to the basics, it seems like Biblical teaching is all about two things for a husband:

- Learning how to lead with love and understanding (of the wife as a weaker vessel) with the main purpose of sanctification
- Learning how to teach a wife to follow effectively

I think the vast majority of time is spent on the first one from the pulpit, to varying success. Dalrock's most recent post shows why it's not as effective when "romantic love" is the justification for sex rather than God's standard that marriage is the justification for sex.

However, there is little taught about learning how to teach a wife to follow effectively, most often because a husband "isn't supposed to be telling his wife that she is to submit," which is obviously false when a husband is tasked to draw his wife toward sanctification.

Other concepts that interfere with teaching wives how to follow aside from the culture and potentially the church in cases are a lack of 'teachableness,' a lack of 'humility,' and lack of understanding of what it means to be able to disagree but still submit from wives. These things need to be instilled from the onset of a relationship, and it is substantially more difficult if you are trying to instill these types of values half a year, a year, or even many years down the road.

Compounding this is the fact that stubbornness from a husband is a good trait when applied toward righteousness, but stubbornness is never a good trait in a follower. Husbands are too often not stubborn enough or perhaps in the wrong areas, whereas wives are too stubborn. One need only think of God's term for Israel as a "stiff necked" people which referred to "stiff necked oxen" who couldn't be led easily to till the fields.

I hesitate to use the word "true Christian," but to be successful in a marriage the fruits of the Spirit are needed in spades from both the husband and wife. Love and humility first and foremost. If I were to advise any Christian man who wants to be married to look for anything aside from attractiveness, it would be those two traits. It is the combination of love and humility that help a wife to submit and respect her husband in a way that accurately demonstrates the Christ-Church relationship.

It’s hard to find a woman who can love well, according to the Scriptures, but it is is insanely difficult to find a humble woman in today’s culture and Church.

The failure of chivalry in Biblical marriage, works and desire, and the failure of game

April 16, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To tack on to Dalrock and Cane in the most recent post, here's my general analysis.

Chivalry, as virtuous as it may seem to some, is essentially pandering to women and/or your wife.

> 1 Cor 7:32 I would like you to be free from concern. An unmarried man is concerned about the Lord's affairs—how he can please the Lord. 33 But a married man is concerned about the affairs of this world—how he can please his wife— 34 and his interests are divided. An unmarried woman or virgin is concerned about the Lord's affairs: Her aim is to be devoted to the Lord in both body and spirit. But a married woman is concerned about the affairs of this world—how she can please her husband. 35 I am saying this for your own good, not to restrict you, but that you may live in a right way in undivided devotion to the Lord.

This is the battle of every husband: the concerns of God versus the concerns of the wife. This can manifest in quite a few forms of idolatry:

- Elevating a woman's feelings/emotions above God's commands (e.g. a wife's sex drive is the measure of the godliness of a husband)
- Working to try to please your wife over God's commands (e.g. choreplay, trying to "fix" her emotions)
- Putting her expectations over God's commands (e.g. abdicating your role as leader)

The moment that pleasing your wife is elevated above any of which God has commanded is the point that which idolatry of the wife has started. This is also the point at which a husband is pigeon holes himself into being a slave to his wife: by her emotions, by works, or by her expectations.

This also is an illustration CS Lewis' point in Dalrock's post:

> The love which is to be the source of all that is beautiful in life and manners must be the reward freely given by the lady, and only our superiors can reward. But a wife is not a superior.81 As the wife of another, above all as the wife of a great lord, she may be queen of beauty and of love, the distributor of favours, the inspiration of all knightly virtues, and the bridle of 'villany';82 but as your own wife, for whom you have bargained with her father, she sinks at once from lady into mere woman. How can a woman, whose duty is to obey you, be the midons whose grace is the goal of all striving and whose displeasure is the restraining influence upon all uncourtly vices? You may love her in a sense; but that is not love, says Andreas, any more than the love of father and son is amicitia.83 We > must not suppose that the rules of love are most frivolous when they are most opposed to marriage. The more serious they are, the more they are opposed. As I have said before, where marriage does not depend upon the free will of the married, any theory which takes love for a noble form of experience must be a theory of adultery.

The elevation of love to a noble form of experience is placing it as equal and/or higher to the moral commands of God. Let us not forget that God constantly refers to Israel and Judah as adulterous when they turn away from his commands and to the idols and practices of the surrounding nations in the Old Testament.

Works and desire

Going back to a point I made several years ago now is the difference between works/performance and desire. The ideal is to desire God and His commands. Everything flows from this. The grace of God is what sanctifies us, but it changes us so that we desire to do good works.

When we try to "perform" or "work" we inevitably fail. As Christians, we know that works cannot save us: we cannot follow the Law good enough to achieve salvation.

Likewise, the same is with marriage. Working does not work. Biblical marriage is an image of Christ and the Church. The same standards apply to the husband and the wife. It is one of desire and not works.

- You cannot work hard enough to placate your wife's emotions (e.g. make her feel more attracted to you).
- You cannot work hard enough that your wife will be pleased (e.g. do enough chores).
- You cannot work hard enough that you will ever meet her expectations.

Falling into a pattern of works is falling into the temptation of sin. You are not trying to please her; you are trying to please the black hole that is unrestrained hypergamy. Your works will never be enough.

Part of the reason why works fail is fear. If you are working, there is a chance that you fail. If there is a chance that you fail, you will fear. If you fear man (or woman/wife in this case), you are not leading nor loving according to the Scriptures.

Does this mean that you shouldn't try to please your wife? Certainly not. But it must come from desire and not working to try to please.

The failure of game

The failure of "game" is that you're trying to work to make sure a woman/wife is attracted to you. If you are under the burden of performance, it is almost inevitable that you will slip up at some point or another and she will be 'less attracted and leave you.'

While chivalry is the idolatry of romantic love, game is the idolatry of narcissism. Instead of feelings as the idol, the idol is switched with the love of self image. This is why most game proponents of game laud the dark triad traits as the best way to attract women.

This is not to say that a strong, muscular body is evil. It is attractive to women and does have its place if a man is looking for a wife. Letting it become an idol for either you and/or a wife is the main issue.

What is coming out of the heart is everything. A man can choose to workout, but a man under compulsion to workout because he needs to be attractive for himself or his wife is under a burden that only ends in failure.

Leadership/headship is imbued to a husband by the Creator. It needs no qualifications or justifications. It does not need to be earned or worked for. A husband does not need permission from his wife or from himself. A husband needs only not let the temptations of the bad fruit of bad trees take him away from God’s commands. Because he is the head of the marriage, let him act as the head.

The failure of game redux

April 23, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is my last post on this subject because I have finally figured it all out.

A few prior reading materials that helped me put together all the dots.

- The failure of chivalry in Biblical marriage, works and desire, and the failure of game
- Wayne's What To Do When A Girl Tries To Make You Jealous

Dalrock's couple of posts:

- Blinded by chivalry.
- Chivalry and biblical marriage can't coexist.

And finally Cane's comment from the second post:

> Game was intriguing because it is literally the anitithesis of chivalry. I knew that wasn't the answer, and I could find the faults of Game, but I couldn't put my finger on the thing itself. My blog posts on Game are testament to that…and to the confusion I caused others who thought I was for Game, but yet denying it. Rather: I was anti-chivalry, but not wise enough to know it. It's in my posts about Eros, the unfair weights used to measure men against women, and many other of the pieces. I was attacking chivalry, but couldn't quite see that it was chivalry.
> Some of that was also due to half-ass knowledge on my part. I knew enough to know that the original code upon which courtly love was attached had nothing to do with romantic love. But I wasn't knowledgeable enough about its development to wisely write about the topic of chivalry. There's evidence of my folly in my older posts too.
> And now I see that so-called "Married Game" is an attempt at synthesis of the thesis Chivalry (the last several hundred years of Christian marriage) and the antithesis Game. It's doomed to failure.
> [To be continued later]

To expand on this, the contention that game is anti-chivalry is slightly misleading in my opinion (and I think Larry of Fabius maximus gets that wrong). Game annuls much of the symptoms of chivalry and feminism, but not the cause or results.

Thus, it is most accurate to say:

- Feminism and chivalry are like an infected wound
- Game is like a pain killer
- Biblical marriage is antibiotics

Pain killers essentially help you ignore an infected wound because it doesn't hurt anymore, but the infected wound still exists. The true antidote is acceptance of biblical marriage.

To put this another way, or in spiritual terms:

- Feminism and chivalry are idolization of a woman's feelings, attraction, emotions, and/or expectations.
- Game placates these temporarily by distracting her from idolizing herself and from trying to get you to idolize her as well.
- Acceptance of biblical marriage is the only antidote.

Game is seductive because it decreases the pain inflicted on a husband via psychological assault, but it does not fix the actual problem: the rebellion against God and His Scripture. The antidote to an infected wound (feminism, chivalry) is acceptance of biblical marriage, which requires repentance and rejection of the aforementioned idols.

To understand this, some of the stances of game are as follows according to Chateau (in Wayne's post) in order:

> - To get defensive, upset or angry
> - To promptly try to make her jealous
> - To tease her (e.g. Agree and Amplify, Amused Mastery, Asking pointed, realistic questions, Probing and dissecting her mind, Dread)
> - To ignore her

The first two will almost always outcome with negative results, as they are contrary to the the fruits of the Spirit and follow a wife's lead. The second two are generally what game proponents recommend. The latter two tend to take control of the situation by reversing her attempts to make you placate (e.g. idolize) her, but they don't actually aim to fix the problem which is to point out her disrespect and bad behavior and call her to repentance.

One commenter almost gets it, if you are not married:

> it's painful to read this post. not because it is written poorly, or because it relates to a personal experience.
> it's painful because no man (or woman) should ever tolerate that kind of behavior in a partner. there is no antidote or way to mitigate being treated that way.
> if they disrespect you so much that they do any of those things, then you need to just turn around and walk away for good.

A woman/wife that you have to continually "play games" with is already operating from a stance of rebellion. Rather than play games, the true goal would be to call her out for her rebellion and encourage repentance. This is one of the blind spots of husbands in marriages with wives that are rebellious. Game does work to cover up the pain of the continued psychologicalfr assault, but it does nothing to address the actual rebellion that constantly continues.

The commenter gets it wrong in that you need to walk away for good. The thing is that when you have a girlfriend or wife, even if they're the most sweet, humble, and respectful wife ever, they will still end up sinning. No man and no woman is perfect. The key is to actually be able to point out and teach a woman/wife why behavior is disrespectful and sinful and call her to repentance. You want a girlfriend and subsequently wife that responds to this call.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself;

That's what sacrificial love actually means: stepping into the conflict to pull her toward sanctification. So Adam listened to the voice of his wife, husbands also have the same choice to go along with it or call her to sanctification and repentance of bad behavior or disrespect. If you always walk away, you will never learn to do this.

This is not to say that men should take on any woman who wants to be in a relationship to fix them. A woman who continually ignores calls for repentance and sanctification is a poor choice for a wife. You want a wife who is going to follow you toward Christ, even if you have to sometimes bring her kicking and screaming. However, it should get better over time as she becomes more sanctified — she will build habits of good behavior and eschew bad behavior.

Finally, the latter part of Cane's post is the correct mindset to operate from:

> Looking back now at my own life, what I did when I decided to neither produce, nor put up with, anymore nonsense was to reject chivalric notions. I didn't think of it in those terms though. At the time I prayed angrily and desperately, "Alright God: I'll do it your way and by the book, Smart Guy! Whatever happens is on you! I'll be sacrificial and loving no matter what she does, but I will also expect to be obeyed, and I will say so! I will be gentle, but never quit my expectations. I will stop trying to get her agreement, and settle for her obedience, even when she is bitter about it." Best thing I ever did. God's way held up even though I sometimes slipped up and tried to change her mind instead of seek her submission (it confuses them, and prompts them to rebel), or failed to remain cheerful when she sometimes chafed.
> I've told that story before, but before these last few posts I did not understand that what I threw out of my life was chivalry.

The reason why game fails in the end is that it doesn't obey God. It doesn't reflect the fruits of the Spirit. It will never bring a wife to repentance. It dances around and covers up the actual issues present within the relationship or marriage. It operates from a state of judgment of bad behavior instead of seeking repentance through kindness.

> Romans 2:1 Therefore you have no excuse, [a]everyone of you who passes judgment, for in that which you judge another, you condemn yourself; for you who judge practice the same things. 2 And we know that the judgment of God [b]rightly falls upon those who practice such things. 3 But do you suppose this, O man, [c]when you pass judgment on those who practice such things and do the same yourself, that you will escape the judgment of God? 4 Or do you think lightly of the riches of His kindness and tolerance and patience, not knowing that the kindness of God leads you to repentance?

Game is much like many Christian conservatives attachment to chivalry and complementarism. It hides the actual issue of rebellion with a “feel good” alternative. In this case, the “feel good” is making it seem like you have a good relationship instead of doing it God’s way.

Never thought I’d make that analogy like that, but it fits. The only difference is that chivalry and complementarism capitulate to the culture while game does not. All of them nudge you in the wrong direction.

This is the end of the road for game. My eyes have been fully opened, and it is not good.

Marital debt not marital exchange

April 25, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Doug Wilson is operating from false premises in his most recent post on the economics of sexual purity.

> One of the things that radical feminists got right, and which doe-eyed romantics got wrong, is the fact that sex within marriage is manifestly an economic institution. But they then went on to wreck this insight by saying that this made marriage a glorified form of prostitution, when they should actually have made the connection in the opposite direction—pointing out that prostitution is of course a grotesque parody of marriage.
> "They indeed will tell you that their researches have proved that if two things are similar, the fair one is always a copy of the foul one" (The Pilgrim's Regress, p. 67).
> In the meantime, the doe-eyed romantics have resolutely insisted that marriage is about "true love" only, and that to bring any economic considerations to bear on a subject like this makes it all seem pretty tawdry, and more to the point, a little bit sad. They don't like "mercenaries" talking about love. It anchors everything right in the middle of real life, and the wrong kind of romantic can only take real life in small doses.

Doug is wrong here. Feminists got it wrong, and romantics got it wrong.

It's good that he can see romantics got it wrong, but much of his conclusions elsewhere (e.g. wifely happiness being the measure of a husband's godliness) betrays that conclusion. This has been discussed elsewhere, so I'm not going to go over that again.

What does the Scripture say about sex in marriage:

> 1 Cor 7:2 But because of immoralities, each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband. 3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 6 But this I say by way of concession, not of command.

The husband and wife owe each other sex. In other word, it's a marital debt. That which is owed cannot be used as a bargaining chip for exchange because you do not retain the rights to use it the way you want. If you have a mortgage or loan debt, banks would laugh you out of their establishment if you tried to bargain or make an exchange with the monthly payment you owe them.

Any form of “exchange” in marriage is prostitution. Love, sex, respect, submission, etc are all commanded by God to be given without reservation, even if a husband or wife is acting poorly. Wives are commanded to obey their husband in all things (Eph 5), and even if their husbands are not believers they should win them with submission, a gentle and quiet spirit, and chaste and respectful behavior (1 Pet 3). Husbands are commanded to love their wives as Christ loved the Church: unconditionally (Eph 5).

This is again works and desire. We obey God’s commands because we desire to follow Him. If we start placing conditions on God’s commands, we fail to follow them and enter into a marital prostitution by holding the husband or the wife hostage to our demands lest we won’t give them what they are owed.

Marriages are not businesses and do not operate on exchanges.

Aside from Wilson’s mistake, there’s one other point you should take away from this. If you ever find yourself agreeing with feminists, then you had better take a deep long hard spiritual look at why you’re agreeing with them because they’re never spiritually on God’s side. They always aim to destroy marriages through wifely rebellion.

Also,

- The amount of attraction Christian virgins is likely low for both men and women.
- Women also view porn, so it’s not just a “male” problem.

> In the survey, 31 percent of the women said they watched porn every week, another 30 percent said they did so a few times a month and 10 percent of respondents gets a daily fix. Modern technology is a major factor: 90 percent of respondents said they watch porn on the internet, preferably on their smartphone (62 percent) or laptop (53 percent).

- This is not counting women’s porn: romance novels

> Despite being pooh-poohed as lowbrow literature for middle-aged women, romance novels comprised nearly one-third — 29 percent — of the 2015 fiction market. In 2013, romance novel sales exceeded $1 billion, according to Romance Writers of America. There are even entire bookstores devoted to romance novels!

Romance novels: 35% are long term addicted, and 84 percent are female

> Romance is a genre about women, by women and pored over by women — 84 percent of readers are female, according to Romance Writers of America. It’s a $1 billion industry, and 35 percent of romance book buyers have been reading them for 20 years or more, according to RWA.

And don’t forget all of those Christian women who were out buying 50 shades of grey.

Don’t deny duty sex

April 27, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I’m sure most people have seen the NYT article about the woman who went around sleeping with married men.

One of the questions that has come up is what to do about duty sex. What if a wife is “not in the mood.” Should a husband still take that sex or just not refuse it. After all, a wife who isn’t enthusiastic about the sex is a bummer.

Should I accept duty sex or should I deny duty sex? This is a false dilemma that husbands easily fall prey to a lot.

Wives may not “feel” like having sex at the time (e.g. you’re supposedly getting “duty sex”), but once you actually start having sex they usually “get in the mood.”

One of the main pitfalls that husbands fall into with “duty sex” is that they have a bad attitude toward it, which the wife picks up and mirrors because she didn’t want to have it in the first place. If you’re having fun and enjoying the sex, it’s usually contagious. Not everything needs to be so serious all the time. Have fun, slap her butt, tickle her, or whatever. It’s usually not that hard pull a wife out of her crabby attitude if you know her well (which you should as her husband).

It’s never wrong to do the right thing, which is having sex in marriage. Don’t deny duty sex. There’s no need to play hard ball with your wife when you can show her that even if she doesn’t feel like it, it will end up fun.

Obviously, if she’s having attraction issues due to a husband’s weight gain or lack of masculinity then work on those things as well in the meantime.

The Sirach on women

May 20, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As a Christian who has read some of the apocrypha and also some of the books that were struck from the “Protestant Bible,” I am honestly confused why some of these books were removed. I’ve speculated before that Protestant is probably the ‘less mature’ faith in that it has fewer real Christians than Catholic and Orthodox. That can be read about in Nothing new under the sun Christian denominations.

Anyway, that’s neither here or there. The purpose of the post is the Sirach on women.

> Sirach 9:1 Don’t be jealous of the wife you love. You will only be teaching her how to do you harm. 2 Do not surrender your dignity to any woman. 3 Keep away from other men’s wives[a] or they will trap you. 4 Don’t keep company with female musicians; they will trick you. 5 Don’t look too intently at a virgin, or you may find yourself forced to pay a bride price. 6 Don’t give yourself to prostitutes, or you may lose everything you own. 7 So don’t go looking about in the streets or wandering around in the run-down parts of town. 8 When you see a good-looking woman, look the other way; don’t let your mind dwell on the beauty of any woman who is not your wife. Many men have been led astray by a woman’s beauty. It kindles passion as if it were fire. 9 Don’t sit down to eat with another man’s wife or join her for a drink. You may give in to the temptation of her charms and be destroyed by your passion.

Lots of good stuff here for both single and married men on temptations to avoid.

> Sirach 23:16 There are any number of ways to sin and bring down the Lord’s anger, but sexual passion is a hot, blazing fire that cannot be put out at will; it can only burn itself out. A man who lives for nothing but sexual enjoyment will keep on until that fire destroys him. 17 To such a man all women are desirable, and he can never get enough as long as he lives.
> 18 The man who is unfaithful to his wife thinks to himself, No one will ever know. It’s dark in here, and no one sees me. I have nothing to worry about. As for the Most High, he won’t even notice. 19 This man is only afraid of other people. He doesn’t realize that the eyes of the Lord are 10,000 times brighter than the sun, that he sees everything we do, even when we try to hide it. 20 He knew everything before he created the world, as well as after. 21 That sinful man will be caught when he least expects it, and punished publicly.
> 22 The same is true of a woman who is unfaithful to her husband and presents him with a child by another man. 23 In the first place, she has broken the Law of the Most High. In the second place, she has wronged her husband. And in the third place, she has made a whore of herself by committing adultery and bearing the child of a man not her husband. 24-25 The children will suffer for her sin.

> They will not be able to find a place in society or establish families. She herself will be brought before the assembly 26 and permanently disgraced. There will be a curse on her memory. After she is gone, 27 everyone will realize that nothing is better than fearing the Lord, nothing is sweeter than keeping his commands.

The first part goes well with 1 Corinthians 7.

Also, don't be unfaithful and be wary of unfaithful women with the capacity to cuck you.

> Sirach 25:13 No wound is as serious as wounded love. No troubles are as serious as the troubles that women cause. 14 No sufferings are worse than the sufferings caused by people who hate you. No revenge is worse than revenge taken by an enemy. 15 No poison is deadlier than the poison of a snake, and no anger is deadlier than the anger of a woman.[e]
> 16 I would rather live in the same house with a lion or a dragon than with a bad wife. 17 When a wife is in a bad mood, her expression changes until she looks like an angry bear. 18 Her husband has to go and eat with the neighbors, where he can't hold back his bitter sighs.
> 19 Compared with the troubles caused by a woman, any other trouble looks small. May such women suffer the fate of sinners!
> 20 A quiet man living with a nagging wife is like an old man climbing up a sandy hill.
> 21 Never lose your head over a woman's beauty, and don't try to win a woman because she is wealthy.[f] 22 When a man is supported by his wife, there is sure to be anger, arrogance, and humiliation. 23 A bad wife will make her husband gloomy and depressed, and break his heart. Show me a timid man who can never make up his mind, and I will show you a wife who doesn't make her husband happy. 24 Sin began with a woman, and we must all die because of her. 25 Don't let a bad wife have her way, any more than you would allow water to leak from your cistern. 26 If she won't do as you tell her, divorce her.

Sounds a lot like Proverbs in this section, except more direct advice.

> Sirach 36: 21 A woman has to take any man as a husband, but a man must choose his wife carefully. 22 A woman's beauty makes a man happy; there is no fairer sight for the human eye to see. 23 If the woman is kind and gentle in her speech, her husband is the most fortunate of men. 24 When a man marries, he gets the finest thing he will ever have—a wife to help and encourage him.
> 25 If property is not fenced in, thieves will wander in and help themselves. And if a man has no wife, he is a sighing wanderer; 26 people have no more trust in a homeless person who sleeps in a different place every night than they have in a wandering thief who goes from town to town.

Advice on choosing a wife. Surprise: beauty is included.

> Sirach 42:9 Although he will not let his daughter know it, a father will lie awake at night worrying about her. If she is young, he worries that she might not get married. If she is already married, he worries about her happiness. 10 If she is a virgin, he worries that she might be seduced and become pregnant while living in his house. If she is married, he worries that she might be unfaithful, or that she might not be able to have children.
> 11 Keep a close watch over your daughter if she is determined to have her own way. If you don’t, she may make a fool of you in front of your enemies. You will be a constant joke to everyone in town, a public disgrace. Make sure that her room has no windows or any place where she can look out to the entrance of the house.[a] 12 Don’t let her show off her beauty in front of men, or spend her time talking with the women.[b] 13 Women hurt other women just as moths damage clothing.
> 14 A man’s wickedness is better than a woman’s goodness; women bring shame and disgrace.

The worries of a father. Verse 14 is harsh harsh though.

Anyway, there’s wisdom like this and other topics in the whole book.

Protestants should take heed even though it’s not in the Bible, and Catholic and Orthodox should pay close attention too.

Patterson counseled rightly and apologized wrongly

May 29, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock mentions the full transcript of the Patterson story here, though mentions some concerns. This post is assuming his story is truthful.

> I had a woman who was in a church that I served, and she was being subject to some abuse, and I told her, I said, "All right, what I want you to do is, every evening I want you to get down by your bed just as he goes to sleep, get down by the bed, and when you think he's just about asleep, you just pray and ask God to intervene, not out loud, quietly," but I said, "You just pray there." And I said, "Get ready because he may get a little more violent, you know, when he discovers this."
> And sure enough, he did. She came to church one morning with both eyes black. And she was angry at me and at God and the world, for that matter. And she said, "I hope you're happy."
> And I said, "Yes ma'am, I am." And I said, "I'm sorry about that, but I'm very happy."
> And what she didn't know when we sat down in church that morning was that her husband had come in and was standing at the back, first time he ever came. And when I gave the invitation that morning, he was the first one down to the front. And his heart was broken, he said, "My wife's praying for me, and I can't believe what I did to her." And he said, "Do you think God can forgive somebody like me?" And he's a great husband today. And it all came about because she sought God on a regular basis.
> And remember, when nobody else can help, God can. And in the meantime, you have to do what you can at home to be submissive in every way that you can and to elevate him.

The crux of the issue is not "abuse" but a worldly way of thinking over Christ-like.

The Scripture mentions several times that attitude that Christians should have when they are unjustly suffering. Christ suffered an unjust death on cross for us.

> Phil 2:3 Do nothing [c]from [d]selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; 4 do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others. 5 Have this attitude [e]in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus, 6 who, although He existed in the form of God, did not regard equality with God a thing to be [f]grasped, 7 but [g]emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant, and being made in the likeness of men. 8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death [h]on a cross.

1 Peter councils servants and wives to respectfully submit under unjust masters or unbelieving husbands:

> 1 Peter 2:18 Servants, be submissive to your masters with all respect, not only to those who are good and gentle, but also to those who are [t]unreasonable. 19 For this finds [u]favor, if for the sake of conscience toward God a person bears up under sorrows when suffering unjustly. 20 For what credit is there if, when you sin and are harshly treated, you endure it with patience? But if when you do what is right and suffer for it you patiently endure it, this finds [v]favor with God.
> 21 For you have been called for this purpose, since Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example for you to follow in His steps, 22 who committed no sin, nor was any deceit found in His mouth; 23 [w]and while being reviled, He did not revile in return; while suffering, He uttered no threats, but kept entrusting Himself to Him who judges righteously; 24 and He Himself [x]bore our sins in His body on the [y]cross, so that we might die to [z]sin and live to righteousness; for by His [aa]wounds you were healed. 25 For you were continually straying like sheep, but now you have returned to the Shepherd and [ab]Guardian of your souls.
> 1 Pet 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

There are also several more examples throughout the Scripture such as Esther who was under the threat of death multiple times:

- Edict to kill the Jews, which they didn't know she was one but could have found out and she would be killed
- She was not allowed to walk into the king's presence unless summoned

She chose to pray and fast along with her people and trust that God would act in her hopeless situation, and God came through just like He did for this wife who was being beaten.

Patterson counseled rightly according to the Scriptures and the wife was able to have the faith in God to follow the Scriptures and God came through. The lesser alternative in 1

Cor 7 was to separate (not divorce, not remarry).

The most you could accuse Patterson of is a bit of poor wording of his story making it seem like he was “ok” with the abuse, even though he wasn’t and not discussing the alternative which is separation. Neither of these are errors but slightly lack wisdom. However, after he apologized wrongly to feminists instead of sticking with the Scripture over their false accusations, that’s on his head.

Ultimately, the issue is not “are you scared for your life” but “can God use me in this situation.” This shows the faith or lack thereof of Christians in Scripture’s counsel and the power of God to turn the situation around. No one should be abused, but that doesn’t mean staying in an abusive situation is not the right course of action for a Christian.

To those Christians who supported the “MeToo” or have been abused before, this is an area where you can grow in faith by admitting that Patterson chose to counsel the better way and the wife chose to trust God fully in her situation. Or you can continue to be immature in your faith and admit your fear is bigger than God’s ability to use the situation for good. God came through for this wife and turned her situation around. It’s up to you, but obviously I hope you take the former.

We each have our own choices to make as Christians, and the goal is to be able to grow more Christ-like, which may mean suffering and persecution. If I had to make the choice to profess Christ and die or deny Christ and live, I don’t know which choice I would make now, but I hope that God would give me the faith in that situation to profess Christ. However, I want my faith to grow to the point where there is no question that I will profess Christ and don’t fear death because that is how God can use my life in any situation whether abuse, torture, or the like. I am getting there slowly but surely. I hope it does not come to that, but I want to be prepared just like Paul suffered many times through stonings, whippings, shipwrecks, beatings, and so on.

And yes, I would council a husband that is being physically and emotionally abused and possible under the threat of death by his wife to stay and try to win her to Christ. I fully expect that most husbands would take the separation route too, but it does display a lack of faith. Even if he were to die, it is not necessarily in vain; God uses deaths all the time to win souls to himself in the case of missionaries.

We don’t know how God uses each situation, but He always honors our faith in Him. See: Hebrews 11.

The cultural blinders of authority

June 1, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've written on this before, but I want to go through a more logical progression.

Authority in the Scriptures is a position that is given by God.

- Father-Son
- Christ-Church
- Husband-wife
- Parents-Children
- Government-subjects

All cultures value the 'power' of authority over the 'responsibility' of authority. As Jesus said:

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to Himself and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them. 26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant, 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave; 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His [n]life a ransom for many."

Jesus is not denigrating authority or canceling it:" "It is not this way among you" indicates that authority will still be present and active. Rather, the responsibility of authority should not be disconnected from it, AND it should be approached with humility.

Authority was given to Love. God is authority, and God is love. God used His authority to send Jesus to die on a cross, assuming full responsibility for our sin, so that we have the opportunity to be accept, believe, confess, and repent to be reconciled to the Father.

> Matthew 26:39 And He went a little beyond them, and fell on His face and prayed, saying, "My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from Me; yet not as I will, but as You will." 40 And He *came to the disciples and *found them sleeping, and *said to Peter, "So, you men could not keep watch with Me for one hour? 41 Keep watching and praying that you may not enter into temptation; the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak."
> 42 He went away again a second time and prayed, saying, "My Father, if this cannot pass away unless I drink it, Your will be done." 43 Again He came and found them sleeping, for their eyes were heavy. 44 And He left them again, and went away and prayed a third time, saying the same thing once more. 45 Then He *came to the disciples and *said to them, "[k]Are you still sleeping and resting? Behold, the hour is at hand and the Son of Man is being betrayed into the hands of sinners. 46 Get up, let us be going; behold, the one who betrays Me is at hand!"

God's authority was used to Love us, and Jesus being in full subjection to God's authority willingly submitted himself to die for us.

To go on to marriage:

- Feminists accept authority but invert sex roles.
- Conservatives try to hold on to what what liberals said before their new statement, whatever that is.
- Egalitarians reject authority in word and deed, consequently in the vacuum of authority they accept feminism.
- Complementarians accept authority in word but reject authority in deed. The husband is a neutered figurehead.

There are several cultural blinders on authority, which many Christians can fall prey to.

- Power is lauded as the most important part of authority and not the responsibility. This goes back to Jesus' statement that the Gentiles lord their authority over them.
- Those with "authority" or "power" are seen as "better" than those without. If you suggest a husband has authority in marriage, Christians who are uncomfortable with authority will always jump to the argument that "men and women are equal." A God given position of authority does not mean that one is "better" — all sin and fall short of the glory of God and all of us need a Savior.
- The creation of the impression that any authority held by men is bad. "The Patriarchy" is reviled. Real and made up abuses of authority are commonly used as examples of how the structure itself is bad not the abuses.
- Authority and power are fine in the hands of women but not in the hands of men, despite when women abuse authority. This can also be seen in the justice system where men who commit abuses of authority tend to get longer and harsher sentences than women for the same crimes.
- Responsibility is always tasked to the men/husbands, without authority or power. In other words, men usually get most if not all of the blame when something goes wrong, even if they didn't have any power to get results.

I'm sure there's more, but these are the ones that stick out. The first two are extremely important because they show that most people still have a "gentile mindset" toward authority instead of understanding what the Bible says about it.

The responsibility cannot be dissected from the power of authority and having authority does not make one better than another.

The rest are obvious biases.

The Supreme Court's bind

June 5, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As many of you may know, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the Masterpiece yesterday. Full ruling here. The scope was extremely minor, which pretty much means it was a mistrial.

> The outcome of cases like this in other circumstances must await further elaboration in the courts, all in the context of recognizing that these disputes must be resolved with tolerance, without undue disrespect to sincere religious beliefs, and without subjecting gay persons to indignities when they seek goods and services in an open market.

The 'mistrial' happened because:

1. Colorado tried to retroactively apply law to the baker. When these events occurred gay marriage was still illegal.
2. Colorado affirmed 3 bakeries decision to not create cakes with anti-gay messages based on moral argument, but openly acted hostile and dismissive to Masterpiece based on moral argument.
3. Masterpiece accommodated all customers regardless of race, sexual orientation, and so on given they could purchase any stock creations for any purpose including gay weddings and offered to bake cakes for any other purpose such as graduations, birthdays, and so on. The only thing he did not want to do was bake a cake affirming gay weddings.

By making this a 'mistrial, the Supreme Court wanted to kick the can down the road for a bit because the topic is complex.

If they had overall ruled against, then the government would be a respecter of religions (e.g. not Christianity or any other religion where gay marriage is prohibited) which is against the first amendment. If they rule for, then it opens a whole can of worms where people can just claim a particular religious belief and deny service to anyone.

Both of these rulings would be harmful to Christians due to the fact that either Christianity is discriminated against or it comes off as Christianity is discriminating against people. That said, Christians will always be discriminated against as Jesus said the world would hate us, so I'm not particular concerned either way.

Gorsuch's argument might be the way they figure it out:

> Next, take the undisputed facts of Mr. Phillips's case.Charlie Craig and Dave Mullins approached Mr. Phillips about creating a cake to celebrate their wedding. App.168. Mr. Phillips explained that he could not prepare a cake celebrating a same-sex wedding consistent with his religious faith. Id., at 168–169. But Mr. Phillips offered to make other baked goods for the couple, including cakes > celebrating other occasions. Ibid. Later, Mr. Phillips testified without contradiction that he would have refused to create a cake celebrating a same-sex marriage for any customer, regardless of his or her sexual orientation. Id.,at 166–167 ("I will not design and create wedding cakes for a same-sex wedding regardless of the sexual orientation of the customer"). And the record reveals that Mr.Phillips apparently refused just such a request from Mr.Craig's mother. Id., at 38–40, 169. (Any suggestion that Mr. Phillips was willing to make a cake celebrating a same-sex marriage for a heterosexual customer or was not willing to sell other products to a homosexual customer, then, would simply mistake the undisputed factual record.See post, at 4, n. 2 (GINSBURG, J., dissenting); ante, at 2–3,and n. (KAGAN, J., concurring)). Nonetheless, the Commission held that Mr. Phillips's conduct violated the Colorado public accommodations law. App. to Pet. for Cert.56a–58a.

> The facts show that the two cases share all legally salient features. In both cases, the effect on the customer was the same: bakers refused service to persons who bore a statutorily protected trait (religious faith or sexual orientation). But in both cases the bakers refused service intending only to honor a personal conviction. To be sure, the bakers knew their conduct promised the effect of leaving a customer in a protected class unserved. But there's no indication the bakers actually intended to refuse service because of a customer's protected characteristic. We know this because all of the bakers explained without contradiction that they would not sell the requested cakes to anyone, while they would sell other cakes to members of the protected class (as well as to anyone else). So, for example, the bakers in the first case would have refused to sell a cake denigrating same-sex marriage to an atheist customer, just as the baker in the second case would have refused to sell a cake celebrating same-sex marriage to a heterosexual customer. And the bakers in the first case were generally happy to sell to persons of faith, just as the baker in the second case was generally happy to sell to gay persons. In both cases, it was the kind of cake, not the kind of customer, that mattered to the bakers.

We shall see.

Obesity and marriage rates and spinsterhood predictions

June 11, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was looking over doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins and I got a bit sidetracked onto the quantification of obesity and its effect on marriage rates for obese persons.

One woman did her thesis and found:

> The results for marriage are more interesting. The effects of normal and obesity are consistent across models; the hazard for normal and obese people to marry is about 76% and 64%, respectively, as likely as that for overweight people. In the final model, the hazards (70% and 60%, respectively) for normal and obese people to marry are even lower than the first model, holding all other variables in constant.

The book obesity among poor americans found that:

- 10 extra lbs decreased “ever dating” by 10%
- One study showed obese persons 67% persons likely to marry than normal weight
- Another study showed overweight persons 80% likely to marry than normal weight (and their spouse earns 25% less.. which like means they’re “marrying down”)
- Another study showed obese persons 65.1% like to marry than normal weight

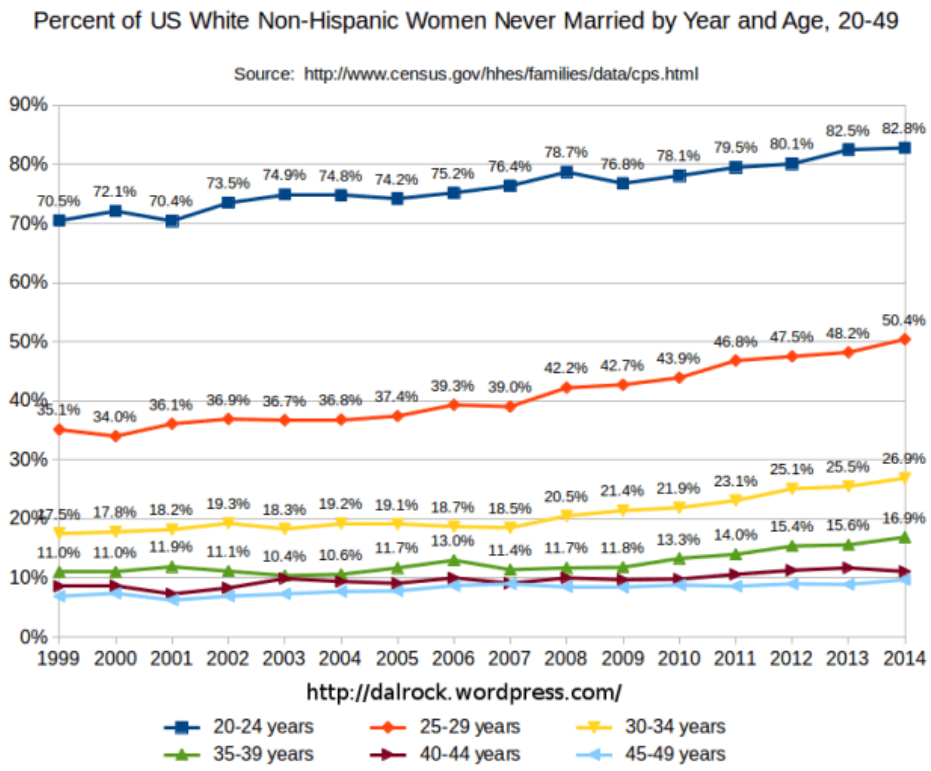
A Swedish cohort from men born in 1951 to 1961 showed in marriage at age 40:

- 16% less likely for underweight than normal weight
- 17% less likely for overweight than normal weight
- 51% less likely for obese than normal weight

A French cohort showed that obese persons were 29% less likely to have a sexual partner within 12 months as normal weight women.

Side note: interestingly, the Swedish cohort also confirms core hypergamy:

- More men were married the higher the education: high > medium > low
- More men were married the higher status job: white collar > farmer > blue collar > other
- More men were married the higher the intellectual performance: high > medium > low
- More men were married the higher the muscle strength: high quintile > mediate to high quintile > mediate quintile > mediate to low quintile > low quintile
- Parental education and socioeconomic factors also had some roles as did lack of psychiatric disorders.



Women want to marry up. Surprise.

In summary, a general estimation if you're obese you're likely to have approximately a 30-50% less likely chance to marry, and if you're overweight or underweight you likely have approximately a 10-30% less likely chance to marry. If there was 10 normal weight people, then approximately about 6 obese people, 8 underweight, and 8 overweight people would marry.

Based on the NIDDK table, more men are overweight but more weight are obese or extreme obese: Estimated (Age-Adjusted) Percentage of US Adults with Overweight and Obesity by Sex, 2013–2014 NHANES Data

	All (Men and Women)	Men	Women
Overweight or Obesity	70.2	73.7	66.9
Overweight	32.5	38.7	26.5
Obesity (including extreme obesity)	37.7	35	40.4
Extreme obesity	7.7	5.5	9.9

According to Dalrock's never married charts from the Census:

10% has been the general trend for never marrieds approximately, but the rates are going up quickly. So most of those normal weight, overweight, or obese women still got married through the early 2000s and 2010s.

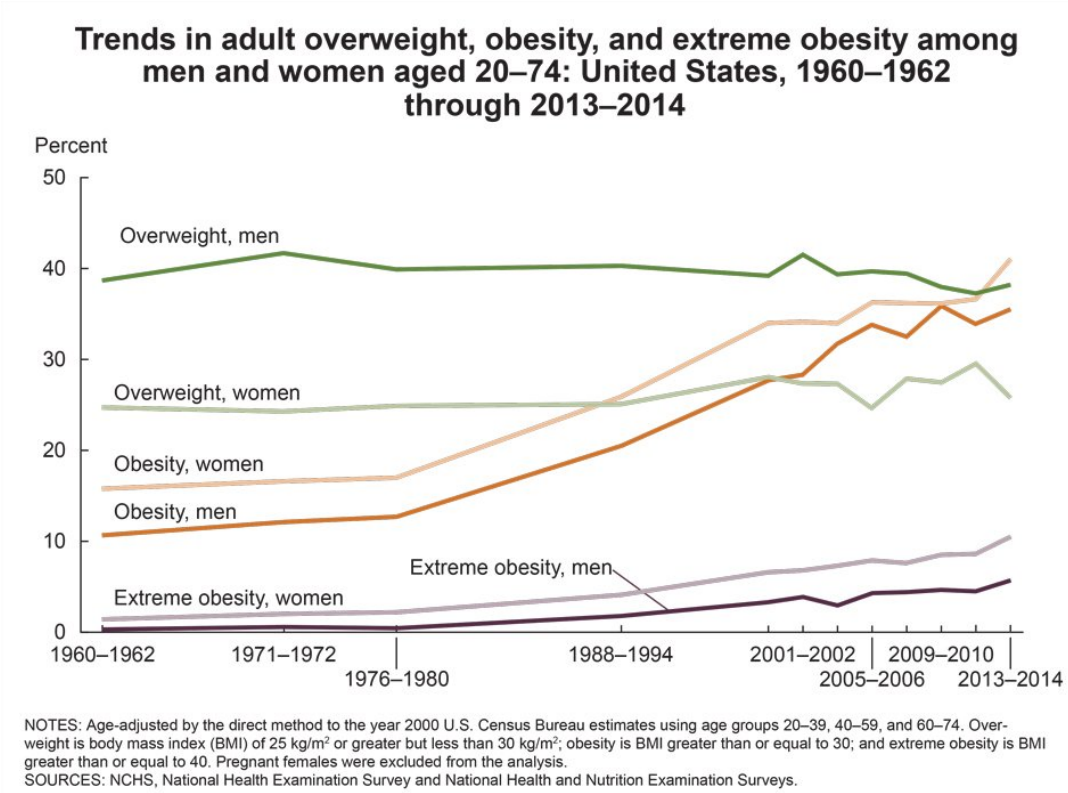
From the previous doom and gloom we have these statistics on both overweight and obese.

- 58.5 of women 20-39 years old are overweight or obese in 2011-2012 in the US.

http://jama.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=1832542

- NIDDK (National institute for diabetes and digestive and kidney diseases) states that 33% of teens are overweight or obese. 67% of teens are not overweight or obese.
- The obesity rate of girls 2-5 years old is 13.5 and girls 6-11 is 16.3 and girls 12-19 is 20.9.

https://www.niddk.nih.gov/health-information/health-statistics/Pages/overweight-obesity-statistics.aspx



- CDC data brief estimates women 20-39 were approximately 36.5% obese.

https://www.cdc.gov/nchs/products/databriefs/db288.htm

Therefore, in the 20-39 age group for women:

1. 41.5% of women were either underweight or normal weight
2. 22% of women were overweight
3. 36.5% of women were obese

Interestingly, the prevalence of overweight men and women from the NIDDK link shows that it has stayed roughly the same over time. We're just substituting men and women of normal weight for obese weight. (It actually probably does not happen like that and some of the normal weight men and women are becoming overweight and some of the overweight men and women are becoming obese… but it's interesting that it happens in similar numbers.)

Estimating 18-29 year old obesity rates

So starting college (18 years old) approximately:

- 58% of women are normal or underweight
- 22% of women are overweight
- 20% of women are obese

Let us assume a best case scenario where obesity rates max out after a woman hits 30 because the metabolism slows down, they get married, and so on. Women aged 40–59 have a 44.7% obesity rate. Since women 20-39 have a 36.5 obesity rate, that means there is an 8.2% spread. 36.2-8.2 spread is 28% obesity rate approximate best case estimate for women 20-29. This gives us for the women in the 20-29 range:

- 50% of women were either underweight or normal weight
- 22% of women were overweight
- 28%% of women were obese

Therefore, my estimate in the last doom and gloom was dead on. In any range 20-29 year old women population, approximately 5 women are normal or underweight, 2 are overweight, and 3 are obese.

The obesity rate likely goes something like this for each age group though:

1. 12-18 year olds — 20%
2. 18-24 year olds — 24%
3. 25-29 year olds — 29%
4. 30-34 year olds — 36%
5. 35-39 year olds — 44%

Much larger increases for the latter groups.

Normal weight versus overweight versus obese rates of marriage

Average age of marriage for women is now approximately 27 years old in the US.

Approximately,

- 5 women underweight or normal weight, 2 overweight, and 3 obese.
- Using the adjusted data percentage to marry we have: 10 normal weight people for 6 obese people for 8 underweight for 8 overweight people would marry.
- It's also worth noting that the "underweight" population for women is negligible around 2-3% of the total population.

To make this easier, let's use it out of 100 people.

- 50 women normal weight, 20 overweight, 30 obese.

If the proportions were equal then 25 normal people marry, 10 overweight, 15 obese marry marry. However, we have different odds ratios. I'm not quite sure how to apply the odds ratios onto the populational statistics exactly. It probably works out to something like 30 normal people marry, 9 overweight people marry, and 11 obese people marry leaving approximately 20 normal weight, 11 overweight, and 19 obese people unmarried (if I applied the 80% and 60% to overweight and obese correctly).

In other words, approximately:

- 30/50 or 60% normal weight women marry by 27
- 9/20 or 45% overweight women marry by 27
- 11/30 or 37% obese women marry by 27

If these ratios persist until all never marrieds (adjusting the ratios up for obesity as women get older), then we will have:

- 38/40 or 95% normal weight women marry by 40
- 16/20 or 80% overweight women marry by 40
- 30/40 or 75% obese women marry by 40

Basically, the more obese you are the much more likely it is that you won't marry if you're a woman. Almost all normal weight women will get married except for a few outliers. Even most overweight and obese women will get married, but if you're overweight and obese it's highly likely that you may get left out.

- 2/16 or about 12.5% of the never married will be about normal weight
- 4/16 or 25% of the never married will be overweight
- 10/16 or about 67.5% of the never married women will be obese

Basically, if you're a woman and you want to be married you still have a high chance. Most women still get married even if they are overweight or obese, but the prospects are definitely lower. But if you are one of the "spinsters" who are getting up there in age and not married, there is a high percentage chance that you are obese.

The fear, of course, is that if the never married rates keep rising to the 25-30% range which has been estimated for some. A brief estimate in that scenario may be somewhere in the range of:

- 36/40 or 90% normal weight women marry by 40
- 14/20 or 70% overweight women marry by 40
- 20/40 or 50% obese women marry by 40

What woman wants to take a 50/50 chance that she won't be married? Same as the man who doesn't want to take a 50/50 chance that he will be divorced probably. Not many.

On a semi related note about spinster-ism, Amal Clooney thought she would be one once she got to 35 without getting married.

> "I met George when I was 35 and starting to become quite resigned to the idea that I was going to be a spinster," she said."Then we met, started hiding out in my London flat and very soon it felt like no matter what happened I would never want to be with anyone else. I couldn't sleep when we were apart, and I'm told I > would display a particular grin and head tilt when reading his text messages or the letters that he would hide in my bag.

I suppose the irony is that she sorta got her “fairy tale ending” according to most, but she is extremely grateful which shows that their marriage will likely last:

> “Five years later, none of that has changed,” she continued. “He is the person who has my complete admiration, and also the person whose smile makes me melt every time. My love, what I have found with you is the great love that I always hoped existed. And seeing you with our children, Ella and Alexander, is the greatest joy in my life. You fill our home with laughter and happiness and that’s even before the children have worked out that ‘Dada’ is actually Batman.”

I wouldn’t count on that if you’re a single woman who is overweight or obese though. Make changes to your lifestyle with nutrition and exercise.

Note: Most of the percentiles are estimates unless someone has the way to do the math for the odds ratios on the population statistics.

A wife's physical attractiveness predicts her husband's and her marital satisfaction

June 12, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

We already knew that husbands prefer wife's physical attractiveness and derive satisfaction in it. The interesting part of this study is that a wife's physical attractiveness also affects her marital satisfaction.

> For several decades, researchers across numerous disciplines have assumed that partner physical attractiveness should play a stronger role in shaping men's romantic relationships than it plays in shaping women's romantic relationships (e.g., Buss, 1989; Buss & Kenrick, 1998; Feingold, 1990, 1992; Grammer et al., 2007; Greenlees & McGrew, 1994; Sprecher et al., 1994). ...
> Results were consistent with evolutionary perspectives. Whereas husbands were more satisfied at the beginning of the marriage and remained that way over the first four years of marriage to the extent that they had a more attractive wife, wives were no more or less satisfied initially or over time to the extent that they had a more attractive husband. Most importantly, the significant effect of wives' attractiveness on husbands' satisfaction was significantly stronger than the non-significant effect of husbands' attractiveness on wives' satisfaction, indicating that partner physical attractiveness played a larger role in predicting husbands' marital satisfaction than it did in predicting wives' marital satisfaction.
> In other words, contrary to the conclusion that people do not know something as fundamental about themselves as what they want in a partner, the sex-differentiated preference for an attractive partner that men and women have stated in a robust literature spanning more than 20 years (e.g., Buss, 1989; Buss & Barnes, 1986; Eastwick & Finkel, 2008; Eastwick et al., 2011; Furnham, 2009; Howard et al., 1987; Hudson & Henze, 1969; Li et al., 2002; Li & Kenrick, 2006; Sprecher, 1989) affects their long-term relationships after all.

Men and women are different, and these differences have far reaching effects on relationships.

The authors propose two potential reasons why this may be the case:

> Notably, wives in the current studies remained more satisfied over the first four years of marriage to the extent that they themselves were more attractive. One possible explanation for this finding is that more attractive women are healthier and more resistant to illness (Hume & Montgomerie, 2001) and thus less prone to additional stressors that may negatively influence satisfaction over time (Burman & Margolin, 1992; Neff & Karney, 2004, 2007). Another possible explanation is that because husbands of more attractive women are more satisfied initially and stay more satisfied over time, they may treat those attractive wives better and > thus those attractive women may be happier over time (see McNulty, Neff, & Karney, 2008). Future research may benefit by better understanding why attractive wives remain more satisfied with their relationship over time.

The two are:

- Staying physically attractive has health benefits (presumably over being overweight or obese) which is true.
- Husbands with more physically attractive wives treat them better (which is generally objectively true).

In reference to the second one, both men and women treat those they find attractive better than those they find unattractive. This is a bias that spans across all of culture not just in relationships. Men and women who are attractive find that others are more willing to treat them politely and gratefully, are more willing to do things for them, and are more willing to give the benefit of the doubt in both public and private. First impressions are strong.

We could go back to the Scripture that ‘man looks at the outward appearance, but God looks at the heart’ which acknowledges that humans tend to have biases for appearances. Everyone knows this is true, and it is true that we should seek to eliminate this bias from our thinking. But we are still human and we do this unconsciously much of the time.

Wives should be advised to make this bias work for them rather than against them to stay physically attractive for the health benefits and benefits for her husband and herself. Husbands should be wise in choosing a wife that will want to put effort into maintaining her physical appearance.

Southern baptists call off the culture war and…

June 29, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From here. I thought it was good at first:

> Southern Baptists Call Off the Culture War
> America's largest Protestant group moves to cut ties with the Republican Party and reengage with mainstream culture.

Removing political ties is generally a good thing for Christians. Both parties have massive amounts of sinful behavior, so it's a good idea not to get caught up in "supporting" one of them.

But then I saw this:

> To enact this change, young Baptists nominated 45-year-old pastor J.D. Greear from North Carolina to be president of the denomination. In a campaign video, Greear called for "a new culture and a new posture in the Southern Baptist Convention."
> Refusing to cede power without a fight, fundamentalist Baptists nominated Ken Hemphill as an opposition candidate. But Greear won with nearly 70 percent of the vote, becoming the youngest SBC president in 37 years.
> Greear has promised to lead the denomination down a different path, which, he has said, must include efforts both to repent of a "failure to listen to and honor women and racial minorities" and "to include them in proportionate measures in top leadership roles." If the meeting in Dallas is any indication, his vision is resonating with a large number of the next wave of Baptist leaders.

So SBC has fallen to the culture over the Scripture. I'd avoid them.

“Maturity” is a blind spot for pride

July 1, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wayne had a good post yesterday on “Ladies Should Respect the Man and Love the Boy”:

> I asked her why she didn’t love him very much. She had one main complaint about her boyfriend. She said,
> “Sometimes he acts so immature, like a little boy!”
> She found this trait to be so ridiculous and annoying, and she talked at some length about how much trouble it is for her to deal with this trait, and the disappointment she feels as a consequence.
> After she said this, I recognized that this is a complaint that most women commonly impute on men – that all men have a ‘stupid, selfish little boy’ hiding inside them. Women usually label this incorrectly as ‘immaturity’. It is a misnomer because they are not referring to genuine immaturity, in which a man refuses to get a job and take responsibility for his life, or when he avoids dealing with his problems and blames other people instead, etc. No, they are referring to the way females regard the emotional nature of fully mature men to be as idyllic boys.

In general, this is actually a good trait to have to be a good father. Interacting and playing with kids requires a certain amount of ability to set aside the seriousness of life and just enjoy being silly or crazy.

Also, Michal thought David was being “immature” (or her words: “undignified”) when he was dancing as the Ark of the Covenant was brought to Jerusalem. Look at how that turned out for her.

The issue is not maturity though. A woman’s preconceived notions of what they think is “mature” or not is their will manifesting as pride: they think they know what is better than the man they are with and are setting themselves up as the judge of that.

This reminds me of one of the big blind spots in marriage counseling. My Church was recently going over Emerson Eggerich’s book Love and Respect on marriage (which is used for marriage counseling in a lot of cases). One of the big things he talks about is “who goes first.”

> It is much easier to sit back and say, “Well Emerson, I would be more loving if my wife was more respectful!” Or, “Why should I show my husband respect when he is treating me in an unloving way?”
> Of course it is easier to be obedient to God in our marriage when our husband or wife is also being obedient. Unfortunately, that is not always the case.
> So who goes first?
> My answer: the mature one.

> How do you know if you are the mature one? Let me put it this way. I can tell you if you are the immature one.
> The immature person uses this information not to change themselves, but to try to change their spouse. Their whole mindset is to get their spouse to be more loving or respectful rather than trying to be more loving or respectful themselves. They do not believe that they have the power to influence their spouse, but instead see their spouse as having all the power to influence them. Therefore they must change their spouse in order to be happy.
> The immature person lacks obedience to God's commands. Instead their mission is to get their spouse to obey God's command toward them. Bottom line, the Lord will not honor that and a spouse is not going to respond to that any more than if the roles were reversed.
> The mature person, on the other hand, will do their part to improve the marriage, even if it means putting their own feelings aside. They will choose obedience to God's commands over their own feelings and over their circumstances. That's because they understand the nature of God: He is a good God, whose commands are given to help us, not to harm us.
> (Eggerich's emphasis on bolding)

While the content is generally good because it is based on the Bible, using "maturity" as the catalyst actually sets up some blind spots for pride.

For instance, it would be more accurate to use Scripture as a catalyst:

- Take the plank out of your own eye first, so you don't come off as a hypocrite.

Matthew 7:3 "Why do you look at the speck of sawdust in your brother's eye and pay no attention to the plank in your own eye? 4 How can you say to your brother, 'Let me take the speck out of your eye,' when all the time there is a plank in your own eye? 5 You hypocrite, first take the plank out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to remove the speck from your brother's eye.

- Humility is required to go first.

The goal is to grow more Christ-like, so the one who can lay down their pride and humble themselves should be the one to go first.

A spouse thinking that they are the "mature one" because they are going first is still going to have issues with pride in the long run, especially if things don't go their way. If they go first and their "maturity" isn't working, it's going to cause more anger than if they were told that they need to fix their own issues first and humble themselves. Likewise, the pride of being mature also inhibits true surrender to the Spirit to work through you.

This is very similar to the subtle rebellion in marriage where a wife "lets her husband lead” rather than “follows his lead.”

RP Christians compendium

The reddit “Red Pill Christians” has a compiled compendium of their sidebar (h/t RPChristof) available now. I’ve gone through a bunch of it, and have talked to the mods who created it. It’s fairly good.

It uses a lot of RP terminology as the goal is to mentor Christian men away from the destructive aspects of RP and get them on the proper Christian discipleship track.

Here’s the link for anyone interested:

Progress is also being made on the book.

Feminists are trying to make Elizabeth Holmes into an anti-hero

July 19, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It's pretty hilarious, starting with the article title.

Elizabeth Holmes downfall has been explained deeply — by men.

> In May, the journalist John Carreyrou, who made Theranos his white whale for years, published Bad Blood: Secrets and Lies in a Silicon Valley Startup, a potboiler about the company; I devoured it. But it didn't slake my thirst for enlightenment about that epochal evildoer: Holmes herself. Holmes herself.
> Holmes is no one's maidservant or adjunct. She's not Imelda Marcos or Ivanka Trump or Kellyanne Conway. Holmes is the master puppeteer of Theranos. It's clear in Bad Blood that it was she—and no one else—who managed to drive the company's value up to $9 billion without a working product; and she alone who was able to win unholy investments of trust, as well as a whopping $900 million from superstar investors, including education secretary Betsy DeVos and her family ($100 million) and good old Rupert Murdoch ($125 million). Holmes, in the book and now the indictments, comes off like a cheat, a pyramid schemer, an evil scientist, for heaven's sake.
> She's also a woman. And we're not used to self-made young female oligarchs lying outrageously, fleecing the hell out of other billionaires and conducting thunderous symphonies of global deception. There's no American template for a powerful woman gone so gravely wrong. Holmes wasn't insane. She wasn't dissembling all those years to care for a sick child, or pursue another altruistic, if desperate, end. It wasn't men, either. Though some have tried, she can't—as the facts are laid out in Carreyrou's book—be explained away as a victim of her deputy, sometime boyfriend and codefendant Ramesh "Sunny" Balwani. She wasn't caving in to patriarchy.

I suppose the actual irony is that every other pyramid scheme or implosion of large companies like Enron are mainly blamed on the CEOs and people in charge: men. But let's not get those facts in the way.

> Like many who sell blind faith, Holmes' pitch turned on gravitas, pathos, and invocations of pain and suffering. She trafficked, quite literally, in blood; she promised Theranos would save lives in hospitals, in homes, and on the battlefield. Bernie Madoff would never have sounded so earnest. P. T. Barnum would never have played his con as morally urgent. But that's why Holmes was—for a time—the billionaire they never were.
> Eventually Holmes, like so many of us, got what she feared most: a whole universe of people who don't believe in her. Holmes's extraordinary gift was for > tragedy. With Theranos, she pulled it off.

Ah, yes, the heroine of a great tragedy. You can’t make this stuff up.

I guess that’s what you get when you have no objective moral standard though. Famous women who are fraudsters — lobbying for investment money which takes away from the pool of funding for legitimate medical companies trying to save lives — are your heroes.

Lori's Men Prefer Debt-Free Virgins Without Tattoos

July 20, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been requested to comment on the boundless article first, so might as well go back to the original.

- Men Prefer Debt-Free Virgins Without Tattoos
- Follow up: Godly Men Prefer Debt-Free Virgins Without Tattoos
- An Open Letter to the Author of "Men Prefer Debt-Free Virgins Without Tattoos
- Boundless podcast on it, which I did listen to.

Original article:

> Do you know how much more attractive debt-free virgins (without tattoos) are to young men? Unfortunately, there are so few of these types of young women anymore because of the high costs of college (debt) and sexual promiscuity even within those in the church. As believers in Jesus Christ, we need to live in a way that is pleasing to Him because His ways are the best. He calls debt a burden and urges us to live lives of sexual purity.

Lori's a bit off here. Virginity and debt are more along the lines of 'disqualifiers' rather than actually being 'attractive.' These are Biblical concepts to pay down debt and stay pure.

> There are many more reasons why Christian young women should carefully consider whether or not they go to college, especially if they want to be wives and mothers someday. Secular universities teach against the God of the Bible and His ways. It's far from what God calls women to be and do: it teaches them to be independent, loud, and immodest instead of having meek and quiet spirits.

Lori is exactly on point here, and I bolded the most important part. Both the boundless article and podcast criticized the article for being "too black and white." That's not how the article is presented at all as you can see by the direct quote.

Unfortunately, it seems that most of the common Christian commentariat seem to be taking the article poorly because it hits on their pet idols: education and 'don't judge non-virgins.'

Let's look at another passage to see whether Lori is being fair or not. Here's the first point, from a letter a commenter wrote in (Lori put her thoughts in parentheses).

> "Men don't want to marry a women with debt. Most of this debt comes from college. They would also prefer a woman who still lives at her parent's house that has not had other relationships. Do those two things and you will be highly sought after."

> (I’m not sure about men only preferring women who still live at their parent’s house and have had no other relationships since some young women have no choice but to live away from their families and some have had their hearts broken by men they thought was ‘the one.’ I would agree that most men don’t want to marry a woman with a load of debt! That isn’t right to bring into a marriage.)

The letter writers comments can definitely be seen as “extreme,” but again Lori’s comments are fair in dealing with the reality of the situation.

If you go through and read the rest of Lori’s comments, they are almost all fair. They’re not black and white. They’re full of wisdom.

Obviously, it shouldn’t be a surprise that non-Christians are offended by the Bible, but I suppose it’s not a surprise that Christians with their pet idols are offended by it too. They didn’t read the article carefully at all and are jumping to conclusions.

Let’s move on to the boundless article:

> First, I can tell you with confidence after more than a decade of modern courting and dating, online and off, that most men do not prefer virgins. Ask any virgin woman you know, and she’ll tell you that most men react to her virginity with a spectrum of emotions including shock, shame, disbelief, mirth and fear. These women will say that usually, once you’re out of your teenage years, virginity is a difficult and delicate conversation you must have in your dating life, not a bragging right.
> Being a virgin doesn’t guarantee you’re going to attract the cream of the crop. A few years ago, I specified my virginity on my online dating profile. I was promptly asked, by three different men, if I’d become a sister-wife in a polygamous marriage. Being a virgin also attracts deeply misogynistic men looking for a naïve, inexperienced woman whom they can control and abuse.
> Virginity is a choice I continue to make because I believe that God is the God of my soul and my body, and He has laid out a very clear sexual ethic in both the Old and New Testaments. And I know there are godly men who believe the same for themselves and are seeking that in a spouse. But telling a young woman that her virginity is something that will catapult her to the front of the “wife selection line” isn’t true, and it isn’t kind to spout such prescriptive lies.

This seems questionable. Most Christian men prefer a virgin, but the author states that ‘most men.’ Given the feminization in the Church, it’s likely that the author of the post is ignoring the unattractive Christian men and lauding the opinions of the non-Christian attractive men who think that virginity is something to be ashamed of.

Virginity is a deal breaker for some Christian men, but it is at least a concern for most Christian men. She is right that it may not necessarily catapult a woman to the front of the wife selection line though: that’s physical beauty.

> Second, let's talk about the prosperity gospel inherent in your premise: "If you just do XYZ, then you'll be worthy of the best, most godly man money can buy (or behavior can earn)." Your post tells women to be what men like so they can be deserving of the best mate. As if there is a long line of Prince Charmings out there ready to gallop in if only these girls would be good enough for them. Plant your little seeds of righteousness, ladies, and they'll blossom into a beautiful romance.
> This isn't what the Bible teaches. This if/then religiosity leaves women feeling either guilty and worthless or — if they're like I was in my early 20s — indignant and angry at God. I'm told I'm beautiful, smart, kind and virtuous. I can run a house, take care of a family, and am an active, vital member of my community. If I'm doing everything "right," then where's my godly man? Did God bait-and-switch me?
> No, He didn't. God never promised me a husband. He promised me himself — in this life and the life to come. But teachings like yours obscured that truth for many painful years of my life.

This is reading into the post. Not once did Lori or even the quoted commenter say that if you do all these things then a godly man is going to come and marry you. Projection much?

> Your post also instructs women not to go to college. Here again, I'm your poster child of a dutiful young woman. I didn't go to college — in part because I didn't want to go deeply into debt, and because my family was going through a lot and needed me at home at that time in my life.

False. "Should carefully consider whether to go to college" is not instructing women not to go to college

> I am all for living a holy life with a godly sexual ethic, and for honoring our bodies as temples of the Holy Spirit and living sacrifices. I'm on board with being financially responsible and living as debt free as possible. I'll shout from the rooftops that the ultimate end of a Christian's educational life isn't a diploma or a job, but is the knowledge of God, which is the greatest good.
> But my message to young women is not, as yours is, "Live a disposable life. Make yourself small. Erase your heart until a man writes what he wants to see on it."
> My message to young women is this: "Learn and grow for the glory of God and the cultivation of your own soul — not simply to make yourself more attractive to a man."

I don't know how you can read Lori's post and get that conclusion. It's a huge straw man. But, again, no surprise. People are not actually reading the post clearly and are reacting in outrage with what they thought they read. Even Christians.

Also, women like ignoring attraction (physical beauty), but don't realize that it is sabotaging their own efforts to get married. As I've always said all along. Though the author is decently attractive, so my guess is that it's her attitude that is turning men off.

Finally, the boundless podcast I think was fair for the first 10 out of about 20 minutes. They did talk about how these were more disqualifers than things were actually attractive as I referenced. However, they also fell prey to similar things as the boundless article: Lori did not tell women not to go to college: she said to carefully consider it. Also, they fell prey to the common "non-virgins are just sinners like you too" trope.

If a Christian man doesn't want to marry a non-virgin that's his choice and vice versa with a Christian woman not wanting to marry a non-virgin. That doesn't make them not Christians. We can and should be selective about who we marry.

All in all, Lori's article was good. Posting all of the commenters stances may have been a bit unwise, as some of the stances were not worded that well or what most people would call 'extreme.' Lori's opinions were generally on point with the Scripture.

I would post a bunch of this to the Boundless comments section, but I can't figure out how to log into my account there anymore. Oh well.

Some additional thoughts on modesty

July 28, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Funnily enough, I had been thinking about this topic again prior to the whole “virgin, no debt, no tattoos” incident. Imagine if that also including being “modest” in there. A bigger storm would’ve been had.

Have had a couple posts on modesty before:

- Why modesty
- Exploring modesty
- Women don’t understand male attraction and implications

Conceptually, I’ve now leaned toward descriptors as a good way to explain things to women (and men for that matter):

Don’t:

- Don’t dress for attention
- Don’t dress to be ‘sexy’

Do:

- Do dress to be classy
- Do dress to be elegant
- Do dress to be feminine

Most people can look at an outfit and tell whether a person is dressing for attention or to be sexy. Also, most people can see if someone is wearing something elegant, classy, and feminine. The “don’ts” tend to be more selfish in nature, while the “dos” show you can handle yourself with poise and grace.

There is a time and place for attention and sexy: for your spouse and the marital bed.

Same goes for men, as men can be immodest in the way they dress (or don’t dress) too.

The irony is that usually when women or men dress for attention/sexy they will attract the lowest common denominator men and women who are only looking for sex while if you dress to be classy, elegant, and feminine you will attract men and women who admire you for standing out in a good way.

Why is dressing feminine included in the “Do” section?

For most cultures, that tends to be things that men don’t wear such as dresses and skirts. For these it’s pretty obvious when someone is trying to dress for attention or sexier as usually the bottoms of the skirt/dresses are rising and the tops of blouses/dresses are lowering.

That’s why it tends to be thrown in the “do” section as you can tell when someone is trying to be classy with feminine clothing as opposed to attention. Things like jeans which are more neutral clothing (or at least were invented as male style) tend to have more issues because women have many more curves than men that are more accentuated in male or neutral style clothing.

Christians and the blame game

August 2, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is one of the biggest issues I've seen that no Christian ever talks about.

> James 1:12 Blessed is a man who perseveres under trial; for once he has [m]been approved, he will receive the crown of life which the Lord has promised to those who love Him. 13 Let no one say when he is tempted, "I am being tempted [n]by God"; for God cannot be tempted [o]by evil, and He Himself does not tempt anyone. 14 But each one is tempted when he is carried away and enticed by his own lust. 15 Then when lust has conceived, it gives birth to sin; and when sin [p]is accomplished, it brings forth death.

Some Christians blame God for their temptation and faults which is true and easy to spot out according to James. It's usually our own lusts and desires that tempt us to go astray from God. We're good enough at screwing things up ourselves as it is.

However, when we're talking about the devil, deception, and temptation, there's only a few unique circumstances in the Bible where Satan actually tried to deceive someone: Adam and Eve and Jesus fasting are the only ones that come to mind.

One of the big issues that we as Christians like to do nowadays is play the blame game. If we say that someone else played a part in our sin, we like to partly or even fully absolve ourselves of the responsibility that it was our fault that we got into a situation and screwed up. Our fault becomes their fault. This is antithetical to the gospel where we are sinners in need of a Savior.

In this case, even Satan becomes one of our scapegoats: Satan deceived me so it was his fault and not mine. It is often the case that it's just us screwing up and were too prideful to admit it and want to play the blame game on the Satan. It's crazy, but Christians actually scapegoat Satan in these circumstances. He's evil for sure, but it was you screwing up and wanting to blame him for it. God isn't going to blame Satan for your screw up. He's going to come to ask you to give an accounting. Recall that God still held Eve accountable for her sin, even though she was deceived. She still knew not to eat of the tree. Being deceived into doing something wrong does not mean you get a free pass to blame someone else.

Pride blinds us to our own faults, especially when we try to scapegoat someone else for our wrongs. This is especially true in marriages where usually both parties are at fault in some matter, but each person is blaming the other or blaming their past or blaming deception.

"The devil made me do it" ain't no excuse at all.

On divorce Part 6

August 14, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

This post is a re–re–re-consolidation and simplified explanation of the Scriptures on divorce. Previous discussions include several conversations and much of the same material from On divorce and On divorce Part 2 and On divorce Part 3 and On divorce Part 4 and On divorce Part 5. Also related: polygyny and the Lysa divorce fiasco (which they are currently reconciling which is good). This is one of the original research articles that got me started on analyzing the Scriptures on divorce.

New evidence

The reason for this this post is that new evidence by Leslie McFall has come to light that the majority of English translations are corrupted.

> It is a fact of history that the only widely available printed Greek New Testament available to the Reformers were Erasmus's five editions of the Greek New Testament (continuously modified very slightly by subsequent editors).4 Erasmus flooded the European market with his five cheaper editions, all of which had his faulty, variant reading at Matthew 19:9. The fault was that he added an extra Greek word in Matthew 19:9 which completely altered Jesus' teaching on divorce.
> The original Greek text read: "not over fornication [which was punished by death]," so that Jesus condemned every known excuse to divorce a marriage that the rabbis could think of, besides fornication, because that particular sin had a death penalty punishment attached to it (Deut 22:22; Lev 20:10). The rabbis could not give 'fornication' as a grounds for divorce, because, they and Jesus, knew that God had decreed the death penalty for adultery and other sexual misdemeanours.

Erasmus, a dutch humanist and also RCC priest (don't know how that works?), didn't like Jesus' teaching on no divorce which was also the RCC doctrine and still is. Unfortunately, he was one of the scribes for translating the NT. The Reformers used his faulty edition when compiling their theology, and didn't back check it according to other manuscripts.

> Erasmus turned Jesus' teaching on its head, because his new Greek text read: "except for fornication." This alteration had Jesus agreeing with Hillel and Shammai that fornication was a legitimate grounds for divorce in His Church. This was a humanist response to a social evil in Erasmus's day. In his opinion, the death penalty was too harsh a punishment to inflict on the poorer classes, and since he believed that God sanctioned divorce as a divine institution in Deuteronomy 24:1-4, he assumed that a compassionate Jesus would allow > divorce in the case of fornication, adultery, physical abuse, and intolerable desertion.

> Sadly, many Christians today prefer to follow the common-sense opinion of Erasmus and believe that a compassionate Jesus would allow divorce in the case of fornication, adultery, cruelty, and desertion. These Christians will latch on to any text or pretext that will support their private instinct of what is 'sensible' and appropriate in the eyes of the man of the world.

What is the evidence against Erasmus?

> There is a very late Greek manuscript, Codex Leicestrensis (a Caesarean text-type manuscript, belonging to Family 13 [f13]), dated to the 15th century, which has in its margin a correction to its own faulty main text at Matthew 19:9. The faulty main text consisted of the exemption clause in Matthew 5:32 being imported into Matthew 19:9 where it replaced the so-called exception clause in that verse. However, in trying to restore the original clause of Matthew 19:9 in the margin, a later owner or collator of the Codex added the small Greek word ei (ei0, 'if') before the negative mh (mh\, 'not') to change the text to read 'except' (in Greek ei before mh becomes 'if not,' or'except'). It has been generally assumed that Erasmus consulted this Codex during his stay in Cambridge, England, between 1511 and 1514. The question is, Did Erasmus see this marginal reading and incorporate it into his first edition, or, did someone else use Erasmus's printed text (or alater edition of it) to insert it into the margin of Codex Leicestrensis (referred to as MS 69)? The latteris the case, as I shall show below
> Who was the first to add ei ('if') to the inspired Word of God? The answer is clearly Erasmus himself. To date there is not a single, extant Greek manuscript of Matthew's Gospel that contains the word eij in its main text at Matthew 19:9. Its only appearance to date is in the margin of Codex Leicestrensis. It has always been assumed by textual scholars that Erasmus saw the marginal reading in Codex Leicestrensis and that he copied it from there into his main text. This assumption was based on the belief that the marginal reading pre-dated Erasmus's 1516 edition.
> What apparently Erasmus did find as he travelled around Europe were manuscripts, such as those reflecting the text of Family 1 and Family 13,11 which imported the exemption clause of Matthew 5:32 into 19:9. Now 5:32 is a context-specific exemption clause. The mischief was caused by importing it into 19:9, where it did not belong, and was out of context.12 This particular variant reading may have led Erasmus astray, plus Jerome's ambiguous Vulgate translation.

What does the original Greek texts of Matthew 19:9 read?

> Majority Greek Text (Byzantine) Matthew 19:9: Now I say to you that whoever shall dismiss his wife—not over fornication17—and shall marry another, he commits adultery.18 And the one who marries one divorced commits > adultery.19

> Minority Greek Text (Vaticanus, Bezae, Leicestrensis) Matthew 19:9: Now I say to you, whoever shall dismiss his wife—apart from the matter of fornication, he makes her to commit adultery. And whoever shall marry one dismissed, he commits adultery.
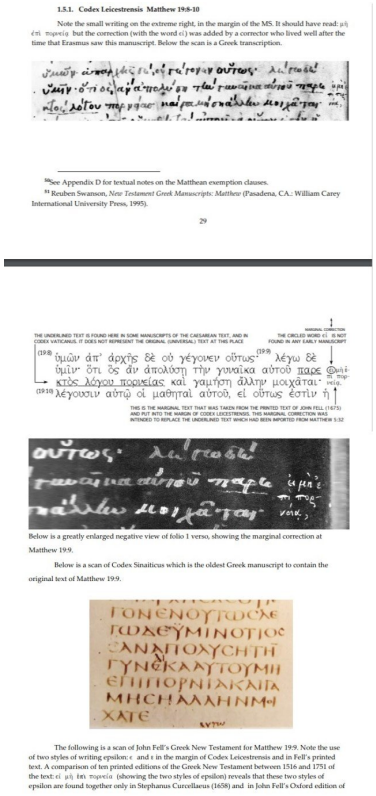
> Vaticanus and Bezae agree to make Matthew 19:9 conform to Matthew 5:32, and by doing so they removed any suggestion that a man could get a divorce on the grounds of fornication. Note that the underlined words: "apart from the matter of fornication, he makes her to commit adultery" is a translation of the text of Matthew 5:32, which was carelessly (or deliberately, due to a misunderstanding) imported into Matthew 19:9, where it replaced the original text, which read as the Majority Text does: "not over fornication." This mistake is found in the Caesarean Text, Codex Leicestrensis, and in Vaticanus (but not in Sinaiticus, which supports the Majority Text at this point).

This was not Erasmus' only "modifications" of the Scriptures.



> Not content with changing the Greek text, Erasmus also changed the Latin Vulgate, which was the Bible of the Roman Catholic Church from the time of Jerome (c. AD 420).
> The Latin Vulgate read: "And I say to you that: whosoever shall put away [Latin: dimiserit] his wife unless [nisi] 21 for fornication [Latin: fornicationem]: and shall marry another, committeth adultery. And whoever marries one put away: he commits adultery." Erasmus altered this in his second edition in 1519 to read: "And I say to you that whosoever shall repudiate [Latin: repudiauerit] his wife, unless [nisi] it be for disgrace [Latin: stuprum], and shall marry another, committeth adultery."
> By changing 'fornicationem' to 'stuprum,' Erasmus widened his exceptive clause from the sexual sin of fornication, to the general, catch-all phrase of anything that gives ground for 'dishonour, disgrace, defilement, unchastity, debauchery, lewdness, and violation,'22 all of which are the meanings given to stuprum in the Oxford Latin Dictionary. 23 Suddenly, Erasmus offered divorce not just on sexual grounds (i.e., for fornication), but for any cause that gave rise to dishonour or disgrace, which may not necessarily be sexual, such as abuse, neglect, desertion, or anything that a partner feels angry about. This brought Erasmus's teaching into perfect alignment with the teaching of the post-A.D. 70 school of Hillel (which, apparently, used Deut 24:1-3 and Exod 21:1-10 as their base texts24).

RCC's Latin Scriptures did not have this change, and textual scholars have rejected Erasmus' in the past.

> Of course, the Roman Catholic Complutensian Polyglot (CP)20 did not have Erasmus's addition at Matthew 19:9, and two editors, Arias Montanus (1583) and Joseph Scaliger (1620), preferred to follow the CP text. C. Lachmann in 1842

> (followed by S. P. Tregelles in 1854) using his evidence-based Greek text, was the first, modern textual scholar to reject the Erasmian addition; and every subsequent, academic edition, followed his lead. But by 1842 the damage to the institution of marriage had been done, and Protestant churches were committed in the sixteenth century to the institution of divorce as a way to end broken marriages. We would expect divorce to be institutionalised in the world, where Satan rules, but not in Christ's Church, where His teaching should prevail.

What textual evidence supports the modifications?

1.5.1. Codex Leicestrensis Matthew 19:8-10

Note the small writing on the extreme right, in the margin of the MS. It should have read: μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ but the correction (with the word εἰ) was added by a corrector who lived well after the time that Erasmus saw this manuscript. Below the scan is a Greek transcription.

THIS IS THE MARGINAL TEXT THAT WAS TAKEN FROM THE PRINTED TEXT OF JOHN FELL (1675) AND PUT INTO THE MARGIN OF CODEX LEICESTRENSIS. THIS MARGINAL CORRECTION WAS INTENDED TO REPLACE THE UNDERLINED TEXT WHICH HAD BEEN IMPORTED FROM MATTHEW 5:32

Below is a greatly enlarged negative view of folio 1 verso, showing the marginal correction at Matthew 19:9.

Below is a scan of Codex Sinaiticus which is the oldest Greek manuscript to contain the original text of Matthew 19:9.

The following is a scan of John Fell's Greek New Testament for Matthew 19:9. Note the use of two styles of writing epsilon: ε and ɛ in the margin of Codex Leicestrensis and in Fell's printed text. A comparison of ten printed editions of the Greek New Testament between 1516 and 1751 of the text εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ (showing the two styles of epsilon) reveals that these two styles of epsilon are found together only in Stephanus Curcellaeus (1658) and in John Fell's Oxford edition of Basically, Erasmus had this added to the text, and the subsequent copies confirm it. There's more evidence than this from other documents aside from this codex. Examining all of the various manuscripts give some additional modifications that Eramus did (but didn't really change any theology such as some in Acts).

> It was shown under §1.5.1. that the corrections in the margin of Codex Leicestrensis could not have been inserted earlier than 1550 when verse numbers were introduced into the Greek New Testament for the first time. Erasmus died in 1536, so he did not see the marginal corrections in the Codex. The quest then became a matter of detective work to find out from an inductive study of the corrections themselves what printed edition was used to correct the Codex.
> All of the printed editions of Erasmus's text, and the printed editions of Elzevir's text (under different editors), are so close in terms of their fonts and abbreviations (ligatures) that it is extremely difficult to find differences between them that would show up in the margin of the Codex. We noted that the handwritten form of the marginal correction at Matthew 19:9 narrowed down to > either Curcellus (1658) or John Fell (1675). To decide between them it was necessary to collate all the corrections in Codex Leicestrensis and compare them with the texts of Curcellus and Fell.Disappointingly, there was not a single correction in Codex Leicestrensis that was found only in Felland not found in Curcellus, or vice versa, Consequently, it was not possible, on these meagre results,to settle the issue over which printed edition was used to correct the Codex. However, the corrector can be narrowed down to someone who used either Curcellus's 1658 edition, or Bishop John Fell's1675 edition.

> We can conclude, however, that Erasmus did not see any of the 154 corrections in the margin of the Codex made by the second corrector (List B, in Appendix G). The only corrections he would have seen were the 40 made by the first hand of the Codex (List A, in Appendix G). Consequently, Erasmus did not get his reading of ei0 mh\in Matthew 19:9 from Codex Leicestrensis,which is a significant finding.
> All things considered, Erasmus must made up the Greek text himself because he wanted to impose his theology on the text, and he succeeded in duping the Reformers to fall for his new doctrine. The Reformers had a weakness, because they were prone to latch on to any difference they could find between Scripture and Roman Catholic doctrines and traditions, and Erasmus handed them one such difference on a plate, and they fell completely for it. The result is that today we are living out the legacy of their error, and most Christians are content to retain Erasmus's new doctrine because so many relatives and friends have fallen for it, and they are not prepared to give up being a disciple of Erasmus, to follow Christ Jesus, who will not tolerate any remarriages after a divorce.

Therefore, this isthe reason why the Reformers departed from the true theology on divorce from the Roman Catholic Church which states that marriage is permanent and there is no reason for divorce.

The original text is more inclusive: Jesus refers to "putting away" as both "putting away without a writ of divorce" and as divorce "put away + writ of divorce" simultaneously. Therefore, there is no reason for any putting away or divorce, even for non-sexual reasons or sexual indiscretions.

This also eliminates the "desertion" exception where you could possibly remarry. Desertion was a non-sexual reason for remarriage, but since Jesus eliminates all non-sexual reasons for divorce and remarriage then you cannot remarry while your deserting spouse is alive.

Therefore, there is no divorce period, for any cause (sexual or not sexual).

I have gone through and edited the analysis and conclusions to reflect this change.

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in Mosiac law. This will be important later.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her,

> 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective, very few if any women that were caught in marital fraud were actually stoned. Women caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced (put away + writ of divorce) as the couple was not considered legally married.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because it shows how a woman could be put away (without being legally divorced).

3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord is shown to follow the laws he outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity. By the time the NT rolls around, they were no longer “Jews” but “Samaritans” because they have been divorced by God and intermixed with the surrounding nations. The Samaritans were despised by the Jews because they were no longer part of the God’s chosen people.

It should be noted that the Lord still wants repentance in Jeremiah 3:14, even though He legally divorced Israel.

On the other hand, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother’s divorcement (sêpher ‘êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and delivers Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

4. Malachi 2 — The background from the Old Testament to the New Testament

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The passage only talks about putting away and not legal divorce under the Law of Moses. The main background behind this passage is that “divorce” in surrounding cultures was simply putting away (without a writ of divorce). Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. Husbands mimicked the surrounding culture because of two reasons:

1. Selfish gain. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride's father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry.
2. Marginalized wives. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would still be legally married to her husband, which allowed her unable to remarry without committing adultery.

This is why putting away is termed treacherous by the Lord. This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus' interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament.

5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

The OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek. There are synonymous terms in the Hebrew and Greek.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement

> (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on
> Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

Before the new evidence: I did not believe "apoluo" to be inclusive of divorce (apoluo + apostasion), but the new evidence shows that any putting away is wrong.

6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap

Line by line analysis, given our solid background:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

The word "every cause" is another instance of background. The Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for "every cause" due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important).

Your spider senses should be tingling with the tricky wording of "lawful" with "putting away" (without writ of divorce) and "every cause."

The trap is that the Pharisees are pitting Roman law versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could "divorce" your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo) much like the surrounding culture in Malachi 2. However, Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth).

The trap: The Pharisees wanted to see which side Jesus would take in their argument, and trap Him between Jewish and Roman Law. If Jesus answers that you can put away a wife without a bill of divorcement, the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you need a bill of divorcement then the Pharisees accuse Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law (like they eventually did before Pontius Pilate).

This is similar to other traps the Pharisees employed such as it being lawful to pay taxes to God or Caesar (Matt 22, Mark 12) which would pit Jewish law against Roman law.

7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus knows that it's a no-win question. He sidesteps the Pharisees' trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and avoiding their dispute. Instead, Jesus discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

This is Jesus' answer on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

No divorce.

8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap and are confused. If God did not intended for any divorce then why divorce in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24 (Putting the wife away AND giving her a bill of divorcement)?

The Pharisees acknowledgement that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement reveals their trap. The Pharisees knew that a divorce was putting away and a bill of divorcement, but they only tested Jesus on putting away only.

9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds that this part of the law was created because human hearts are hard. Jesus doesn't want "putting away" for any reason: valid divorce which is "putting away + writ of divorce" (e.g. Deut 24) or treacherous "putting away" (e.g. Malachi 2) because of the hardness of hearts.

10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

Jesus answers the original question that the Pharisees posed: "what lawful instances can a man put away?" You can see the mirror of the verses which confirms this:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?
>
> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be~~ not for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

We have established that Jesus is answering the Pharisees original question. Next, read the verse without the "not for clause" to understand why it makes sense.

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be not for~~ ~~fornication (porneia)~~, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:
>
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, […], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> In plain English:
> If you put away your wife and marry another you commit adultery and whoever marries her commits adultery.

The meaning is obvious. If you put away your wife (with or without a writ of divorce), you're still married to her. If you're still married to her, both you and her commit adultery if you marry another. You can see this agrees with Jesus' statement of "what God has put together let no man separate" and the similar statements in Mark and Luke.

Now to add in back the exception:

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be~~ not for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

The "not for fornication" clause seals off any sexual infidelity or indiscretions as a reason for divorce at all because it says if you put away, not even for fornication, adultery, or sexual indiscretions, and marry another you commit adultery.

Any "putting away" (putting away and divorce) and shall marry another — whether it is a sexual indiscretion or not — commits adultery.

Therefore, Jesus makes two distinct statements in this entire passage:

> On marriage and divorce:
>
> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> On putting away for any reason is divorce:
>
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, not for fornication (porneia) (not even for fornication, adultery, or any other sexual indiscretions that would normally require the death penalty), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

In conclusion, Jesus says there is no divorce.

11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce.

When Jesus fulfills the Law, it is always vastly more difficult than the former Law. For example, "Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself" (Matt 22) is transformed to "a new command I give to you: that you love one another, just as I have loved you, that you love one another" (John 13, John 15).

The standards of the the New Testament always supersede that of the Old Testament.

No divorce period for any non-sexual or sexual reason is a hard word. A really hard word.

12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary

Additional evidence is the case where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus [r]Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been [s]betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away (apoluō autos) privily.

Joseph engagement and marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was supposed to be marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

The “not for fornication” clause seals off any reason for divorce by adultery, fornication, and sexual indiscretion and therefore agrees with Mark and Luke.

14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she > is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

Romans 7 does not speak specifically about whether you can legally divorce or not. Paul is speaking to the scenarios of being unbound by the law (in death) rather than about divorce because He is discussing our salvation and grace versus works. Husbands were allowed to divorce their wives in Deuteronomy 24, but wives were not allowed to divorce their husbands. Hence, when Paul speaks to the scenario of a wife being bound by the law to her husband until he dies as the example because a wife cannot divorce her husband.

15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

The Lord is speaking to a Roman/Greek population in the Corinthians and not the Jewish people. Hence, the Lord is speaking against the Roman law that "divorce" could be done through "putting away" or simply "departing" in the case of the wife.

Likewise, the Lord follows this up with the only correct path for those separated or divorced: stay single or reconcile. This is a hard word for most Christians because divorce and remarriage to another is not an option.

This agrees with Jesus' original statements on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put > away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. "If I'm not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry." That is the "liberal" interpretation of this passage, which is false in the light of new evidence.

> Initially, only fornication for divorce was permitted until Erasmus established another ground, namely, desertion, using 1 Corinthians 7:15. Now, it was well recognised that 1 Corinthians7:15 on its own was ambiguous as a grounds for divorce. If Jesus was an absolutist then 1 Corinthians7:15 had to be seen in the light of Matthew 19:9 as originally written, without Erasmus's addition of eij before mh;. In which case 1 Corinthians 7:15 would receive its natural sense that desertion was not a grounds for divorce but a grounds for giving more of one's time to the cause of Christ.

The Scriptures must be consistent with each other and the teachings of Jesus are paramount. Desertion therefore means that you are not under the bind of marital duties (e.g. earlier in the passage, Paul tells spouses that they owe each other sex), and not that they are not under the covenant of marriage anymore.

17. Conclusions

Jesus talks about marriage, divorce, and putting away. Understanding which passages Jesus refers to is critical to unifying all of Scripture on the topic of divorce.

"Not over fornication" causes an even harder word on divorce. It seals adultery, fornication, and any other sexual indiscretion for adultery.

1. In Matthew, any putting away, whether divorce or putting away without a writ of divorce, and marrying another is adultery per Jesus. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19, Mark 10, Luke 16
2. Putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus' plan for marriage is that "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10
4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. Separation seems to be an option

if you can't live with them. Reconciliation is ideal. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, 1 Cor 7

5. Under the Law of Moses, a marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud prior to marriage, but under Jesus this is not a valid excuse for divorce. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage. You are not under the bondage of the roles and responsibilities of marriage, but you are still under the covenant of marriage. You must not remarry. – 1 Cor 7

Note: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery:

> 1. There is perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, "sacramental marriage" affirmed by the Church.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. Those that don't undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn't valid they are free to marry another. A marriage can be affirmed sacramental in which case divorce and remarriage is a sin.
> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Final Conclusion

1. No divorce period. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Your recourse is separation if you absolutely can't live with them.
2. If you are separated, stay single or reconcile. No remarriage.
3. Stay with an unbeliever if they want to live with you, otherwise you are not under the bonds of marriage. Desertion does not allow you to remarry, as you are not under the bonds of the roles and responsibilities of marriage (like sex in the earlier part of the passage). You are still under the covenant of marriage.
4. If you have a "Christian marriage" (or sacramental marriage) — both of you know that marriage is forever on earth and the accompanying roles and responsibilities — then any divorce and remarriage is perpetual adultery.
5. 2nd or 3rd marriages that come to Christ can be affirmed as Christian marriages. They would not have to go back to their first spouse and are not in perpetual adultery. Prior marriages are effectively "annulled" as you did not understand Christian marriage.

This is why I believe (as a Protestant) that the Catholic and Orthodox methods of sacramental marriage are probably the best method to deal with marriage and divorce in a broken world. Protestant views on marriage are trash, and it is no surprise that they have the highest divorce rates of any denomination of Christianity and divorce rates almost as high as secular culture.

I am 100% confident that God and Jesus said that there is no divorce at all for Christians according to the Scripture based on in-depth study on all of the relevant passages in Hebrew and Greek in accordance with Christian apostolic tradition. Divorce at your own risk to your eternal soul.

Other notes:

Overall, the book is approximately 180 pages in word, which when put into a standard book format will probably end up somewhere around 300+ pages.

The book definitely does NOT contain everything written on this blog or some of the other sources that it has pulled from, and I added in some sections that aren't covered on this blog into the book too. The scope is too large.

It's a solid primer that you can take and discuss with men in your Church (single or married).

I removed any sort of RP or manospherian terms and talked about everything in reference to Scripture. RP and the manosphere get a bad rap because of the PUAs, incels, and whatever else groups out there, so people are already biased against any truth if you use that terminology. Also, the Bible is the original book on human nature, so all of the secular RP copies off it anyway (and goes off in wrong or evil directions).

Feminism truisms

September 7, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Going off of Dalrock's thread I'd thought I try my hand at another one.

> Dalrock's Law of Feminism: Feminism is the assertion that men are evil and naturally want to harm women, followed by pleas to men to solve all of women's problems.

Some of the ones I've made before:

- Feminism is the temptation to be like god and man
- Feminism creates unsafe men then complains about it
- Feminism is an inferiority complex and white knights are enablers
- Feminism is the promotion and glorification of rebellion

My new analysis:

> Feminism is the belief that men are superior to women. Therefore, women should become men, and men should become women.

Another:

> Feminism is the belief that a woman's roles and responsibilities of a wife to her husband, a mother to her children, and homemaking are worthless (when they are actually priceless). Therefore, to have any value, they must prostitute themselves to random attractive men (NSA sex, FWB, etc.) under the guise of finding themselves and prostitute themselves to corporations to make money (careerism).

No wonder women are more unhappy.

That's the best I got for now.

“You did this to him”

September 11, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Funnily, enough, I agreed with much of this article over the break up of Mac Miller and Ariana Grande.

> Mac Miller and Ariana Grande‘s relationship fell unusually under the tabloid radar for the majority of their two-year run. It was their breakup in May that finally captured public attention, especially since it was followed eight days later by Miller crashing his car while intoxicated and, just weeks after that, Grande getting engaged to SNL star Pete Davidson.
> “It’s the most heartbreaking thing happening in Hollywood,” wrote Twitter user Elijah Flint back in May. Flint, like many presumed fans of Miller (as well as casual tabloid followers), didn’t find the heartbreak in Miller’s continuous battle with substance abuse — a battle he explored in his music and spoke openly about for years — but rather in the fact that a woman like Grande could, according to Flint, callously transform from being one man’s muse to finding love with someone else.

Grande eventually posted a long comment on twitter:

> how absurd that you minimize female self-respect and self-worth by saying someone should stay in a toxic relationship because he wrote an album about them, which btw isn’t the case (just Cinderella is ab me). I am not a babysitter or a mother and no woman should feel that they need to be. I have cared for him ad tried to support his sobriety & prayed for his balance for years (and always will of course) but shaming/blaming women for a man’s inability to keep his shit together is a very major problem. let’s please stop doing that. of course I didn’t share about how hard or scary it was.

Miller eventually killed himself over a suspect drug overdose, and apparently people went crazy against Grande on twitter and Instagram.

The most Grande could be accused of is being very ignorant about entering another relationship right away after breaking up with a previous one. This is similar to shades of Asia Argento and Anthony Bourdain, where Asia was spotted with another man and Anthony committed suicide a few days later IIRC.

It’s pretty clear that both Miller and Bourdain literally thought of the women they were with as their “angel” and put them up on such a high pedestal that they couldn’t live with them once they left them. This is the exact wrong way to be in a relationship with a woman. The majority of the blame should go to these men for doing that.

Grande is right that she is not his babysitter or his mother. Nor should she be. In fact, it’s very unwise in the first place to enter relationships with anyone who has red flags like this.

The real question, though, is what if the roles had been reversed? The woman was struggling with drugs and addiction issues, and the man left the woman to be engaged. We'd probably see riots from all sides against the man.

Fathers legitimatize children

September 19, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I find it interesting that children without fathers, in the past at least, were called bastards.

Perhaps it is no surprise that fatherlessness has such a negative impact on children such as dropping out of school, behavioral problems, drug and alcohol abuse, runaways, and so on.

We are legitimatized when we accept Jesus, as we are adopted into God's family.

> Romans 8:14 For those who are led by the Spirit of God are the children of God.
> 15 The Spirit you received does not make you slaves, so that you live in fear > again; rather, the Spirit you received brought about your adoption to sonship.
> And by him we cry, "Abba, Father." 16 The Spirit himself testifies with our spirit > that we are God's children. 17 Now if we are children, then we are heirs—heirs of > God and co-heirs with Christ, if indeed we share in his sufferings in order that we > may also share in his glory.

Non-Christians are effectively spiritual bastards, which is why they spend their lives chasing after every other thing to attempt to satisfy that identity and purpose that they don't have.

Part of the disconnect happens, even in saved Christians, because they don't fully understand that they are legitimatized in Christ. So they hang onto worldly desires and pleasures.

American crime mystery, solved

September 27, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was recently alerted to this old (2008) article in the Atlantic on "Why is crime rising in so many American cities? The answer implicates one of the most celebrated antipoverty programs of recent decades."

It's extremely long but suffice to say they basically tracked when people were moved out of Section 8 housing and where they moved. They found out that crime decreased in the area where there was the previous Section 8 housing and increased in the areas where there were people moved.

> When the Dixie Homes housing project was demolished, in 2006, a group of residents moved to a place called Springdale Creek Apartments in North Memphis, on Doug Barnes's beat. They were not handpicked, nor part of any study, and nobody told them to move to a low-poverty neighborhood. Like tens of thousands of others, they moved because they had to, into a place they could afford. Springdale Creek is not fancy, but the complex tries to enforce its own quiet order. A sliding black gate separates the row of brick buildings from busy Jackson Avenue, where kids hang out by the KFC. Leslie Shaw was sold when she heard the phrase gated community mentioned by the building manager.
> When Shaw saw the newly painted white walls, "so fresh and clean," with no old smudges from somebody else's kids, she decided to give away all her furniture. "I didn't want to move in here with any garbage from Dixie," she said. "I said to myself, 'Might as well start over.'" She bought a new brown velour couch and a matching loveseat. She bought a washer and dryer, and a dresser for her 8-year-old grandson, Gerrell, who lives with her. The only thing she kept was a bookshelf, to hold the paperbacks coming monthly from the book club she'd decided to join.

> Shaw is 11 years crack-free and, at 47, eager to take advantage of every free program that comes her way—a leadership class, Windows Vista training, a citizen police course, a writing workshop. What drove her—"I got to be honest with you"—was proving her middle-class sisters and brother, "who didn't think I'd get above it," wrong. Just after she moved in, one sister came over and said, "This is nice. I thought they would put you back in the projects or something."
> I visited Shaw in February, about a year and a half after she'd moved in. The view outside her first-floor window was still pretty nice—no junk littered the front lawn and few apartments stood vacant. But slowly, she told me, Springdale Creek has started to feel less like a suburban paradise and more like Dixie Homes. Neighborhood boys often kick open the gate or break the keypad. Many nights they just randomly press phone numbers until someone lets them in. The gate's main use seems to be as a sort of low-thrills ride for younger kids whose parents > aren’t paying attention. They hang from the gate as it slides open; a few have gotten their fingers caught and had to be taken to the emergency room.

> When Shaw recounts all the bad things that have happened at Springdale Creek, she does it matter-of-factly (even as a grandma, she says, “I can jump those boys if I have to”). Car thefts were common at first—Shaw’s neighbor Laura Evans is one of about 10 victims in the past two years. Thieves have relieved the apartment management company of some of its computers, extra refrigerators, and spare stoves. A few Dixie boys—sons of one of Shaw’s friends—were suspected of breaking the windows in vacant apartments. Last year, somebody hit a pregnant woman in the head with a brick. In the summer, a neighborhood kid chased his girlfriend’s car, shooting at her as she drove toward the gate; the cops, who are called in regularly for one reason or another, collected the spent shells on the grass. “You know, you move from one place to another and you bring the element with you,” said Evans, who stopped by Shaw’s apartment while I was there. “You got some trying to make it just like the projects.”

> In the afternoon, I visited an older resident from Dixie Homes who lives across the way from Shaw. Her apartment was dark, blinds drawn, and everyone was watching Maury Povich. A few minutes after I arrived, we heard a pounding at the door, and a neighbor rushed in, shouting.
> “They just jumped my grandson! That’s my grandson!”
> This was 64-year-old Nadine Clark, who’d left Dixie before it got knocked down. Clark was wearing her navy peacoat, but she had forgotten to put in her teeth. From her pocket she pulled a .38-caliber pistol, which was the only thing that glinted in the room besides the TV.
> “There’s 10 of them! And I’m gonna go fuck them up! That’s my grandson! They took him away in an ambulance!”
> Nobody in the house got excited. They kept their eyes on Maury Povich, where the audience was booing a kid who looked just like the thug who’d shot up his girlfriend’s car. “She’ll calm down,” someone said, and after a few minutes, Clark left. I drove down to Northside High, a few blocks away, where the grandson had gotten beaten up. TV crews and local reporters were already gathered outside the school, and a news chopper hovered overhead. There had been two school shootings in the neighborhood that month, and any fresh incidents made big news.

This should not come as a surprise to us, since we know that moving people with dysfunctional relationships will just cause the different areas they moved to have the same problem too.

Then they get to the real details at the end, but brush by it like it’s some afterthought.

> Leslie Shaw is writing a memoir, and it contains more weather than most of us > can imagine. At 15, she left home with a boy named Fat, who turned out to be a pimp. She spent the next seven years being dragged from state to state as a street hooker, robbing johns and eventually getting addicted to crack. Once, a pimp locked her in his car trunk. Another time, her water broke in a crack house. This covers only the first few chapters. She works on the memoir endlessly—revising, dividing the material into different files (one is labeled, simply, “Shit”). She still has two big sections to go, and many years of her life left to record. Her next big project is to get this memoir under control, finish it, have it published, and “hope something good can come out of it,” for herself and the people who read it.

Is it any wonder that this stuff happens without fathers? After all, Fathers legitimatize children.

Single motherhood and a whole host of dysfunction like the above are the real reasons for why these communities become like this. The irony is that the people in these communities are looking to blame their surroundings rather than look at themselves and see why the dysfunction is propagated from their own relationships.

IFS analysis of incels

September 29, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

H/t to whoever mentioned it on Dalrock's blog.

Male Sexlessness is Rising, But Not for the Reasons Incels Claim

There's a bunch of good charts on this one, so I would suggest clicking over to see them. Main points made by the article, which focuses on: "individuals aged 22-35 who have never been married, and particularly males within that group."

- No sex has consistently risen from the 12-16% range in 1990-2010 up to 22% since 2010. It's also slightly risen for married men.
- 20% of the men get 80% of the sex is wrong, but not that wrong. Approximately 20% of the men get 50-60% of the sex. The same is with women. These are stable over time.
- Sexlessness in never married young men seems to parallel the rising unmarried age rates.
- Sexlessness increases with education
- Sexlessness rises with living with parents

They define incels as not having sex for any other reason than religion, health, or timing.

My thoughts:

- The 80/20 rule is wrong but not really. We already knew it wasn't actually 20% of the men getting 80% of the sex, but it's a general heuristic to tell that both men and women congregate toward the most attractive.
- Online dating was pretty big over 2000s, but it suddenly started collapsing around 2010 which could potentially parallel the increase in incels.
- Sexlessness with education makes sense. Generally, those that do well in school are not the best social butterflies.
- Sexlessness rising with living with parents is obvious.

I think the biggest takeaway is of the degree of fracturing of the man population into tiers.

If 20% of the men are getting 50-60% of the sex, that means 60% of men are getting about 40-50% of the sex, and 20% of the men get nothing.

This ratio is likely to keep getting worse as the marriage rates continue to plummet. Marriage generally guaranteed that 90-95% of men and women got sex. This has dipped down to about 80% of the men get sex and will to continue to get worse. The consequences of this will probably be bad.

Self esteem

October 5, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was thinking about this a bunch, and came to a somewhat startling revelation as I expanded on the feminism trusims.

> Self-esteem is the concept that, instead of valuing yourself as God does (priceless/precious), you must define and put a price on how much on how valued you are by worldly measures–money, attention, possessions, career, other people, etc.

This basically shows you in a sentence why self-esteem is very bad that anyone would understand, Christian or non-Christian.

A lack of respect should not be easily ignored

October 11, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

For the single men looking to be married, there are some good life lessons to be learned. This is straight out from one of the examples of the RP Christians reddit. This is a part of the original post and my response.

> My girlfriend is a friendly, social person, however I notice this is exemplified when it comes to guys for some reason, when guys get too close too touchy; its as if she loses control and acts like a kid, laughing, giggling, giving compliments every 5 minutes and acting impressed and of the like. She's not reserved at all but only reserved around females (hmm) There was one incident where we went to a group event and she hung out with a guy (who was flirting with her) more than me until I confronted him and told him to back off (this was when we were "talking") at that time I couldn't believe it, we were emotionally attached and she would say stuff like "I love you" "you are my world"; so I was rocked to my core when she did that knowing how much she claimed to love me, if thought if this is how you treat someone you love, this is deeply concerning. I didn't break up with her then because my friends convinced me that she didn't know what she was doing, which was confirmed by questioning her over and over, she came clean and said she really did know she was doing anything wrong.

The typical RP advice of going to be friendly with other girls (to ostensibly make her jealous) or not mate guarding or being outcome independent or being collared by her behavior may work if she was a plate, but it is not useful advice to any Christian looking to marry.

The problem is that she does not respect what you are telling her. If a woman thinks you are important enough to respect, she will do what you say without being petty or trying to turn it around on you.

If this woman has the same attitude to you telling her something that is concerning to you now and blatantly ignoring it or turning it around on you, what do you think she is going to do to you in marriage? It's going to be waaaaaaay worse. This is a big red flag.

For any particular thing that you think is concerning this is a useful heuristic:

1. Tell her once, no big deal
2. Bring it up again, concerning.
3. Have to tell her a third time, she's gone

If she knows once, then she now knows if she didn't before. If she has to be told a second time, she doesn't think you're worth respecting and needs to be told again. If she keeps doing it, she's stuck in her ways and not worth the time to change as you'll probably be cutting your teeth.

If she’s not teachable and she keeps doing concerning things, it’s not worth it. Ask any married men with wives who are stubborn and unteachable.

- Proverbs 19:13 A foolish son is ruin to his father, and a wife’s quarreling is a continual dripping of rain.
- Proverbs 21:9 It is better to live in a corner of the housetop than in a house shared with a quarrelsome wife.
- Proverbs 21:19 It is better to live in a desert land than with a quarrelsome and fretful woman.
- Proverbs 25:24 It is better to live in a corner of the housetop than in a house shared with a quarrelsome wife.

It’s so important that the Bible repeats it.

Opting in to the Biblical framework for marriage

October 11, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the biggest and most overlooked concepts that the arranged marriage, courtship models, or dating models do not cover is that one must opt in to the Biblical framework for marriage.

As we have noted before, the Biblical commands to the husband and wife are unconditional. The husband is to be the head, protect, provide, love, cherish and nourish his wife. The wife is to respect, submit and obey, and be affectionate toward her husband. These commands are irrespective of any bad behavior or sins committed by the opposite spouse.

The problem with attraction (or romantic love) being the major component of a dating/courtship/marriage is that these things are conditional. Attraction may wax and wane depending on how fleeting the feelings of the husband or the wife or if certain mistakes or incidences happen such as becoming lazy, overweight, bad behavior, or sin. Feelings tend to be emphasized at the cost of duty and fidelity.

Arranged marriage is a bit more nebulous because there are varying ways that works. In some cultures, the husband and wife don't meet each other until they're getting married. In some others, like Jewish culture, they met at least a few times and the potential husband/wife had some type of veto power if they really didn't like the other potential spouse.

Although arranged marriage probably results in a somewhat closer mimicry of Biblical marriage, a couple must still opt into the Biblical framework for the husband to love and cherish unconditionally and the wife to respect and submit unconditionally regardless of it the spouse goes on a bad behavior streak or even off of the reservation.

Getting husbands and wives to do that is hard, but that's because humans like to weasel out of responsibilities.

Biblical marital perspectives

October 30, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've gone over this before in some old posts, but I haven't pointed out the correct Biblical perspective that can be enlightening to most Christians. One of the onuses for this is the commentary on this post.

If you notice, the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities for husbands and wives are different. The husbands have different commands than the wives have. What most also don't notice is that the husband and wife marital perspectives are different too.

The Biblical marital relationship is one of headship-submission and love-respect. The husband's are called to a horizontal relationship while the wife is called to a vertical relationship. Put together, this shows the powerful imagery of the cross.

This is consistent throughout the Scripture in any headship or authority relationship.

Those under authority are always told to submit and respect. Those in authority are always told to love and treat those under them well and/or with honor. This includes masters and slaves and also Christ-Christians and also God-Jesus when He was here on earth. You can see that Paul always call himself a slave/bond-servant for Christ in his letters to the Churches.

Indeed, the Biblical perspective is that:

- The husband should treat his wife as an equal. Ephesians 5 states that a husband should treat his wife "as his own body" 3 different times. 1 Peter 3 states that husbands should treat their wives in an understanding way as the weaker vessel and to honor them as a co-heir in Christ.
- The wife should treat her husband as her head. Submission and respect are the responsibilities in Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, and 1 Peter 3.

Complementarians get this twisted.

They claim that a husband cannot tell his wife that she should submit, when in fact Jesus lays down a "if you love me" statement to Christians. A husband is to help sanctify his wife in Ephesians 5 which means helping her submit and obey.

> John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.

> John 15:10 If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father’s commandments and abide in His love. 11 These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full.

Jesus qualifies this in that through submission and obedience to Him, He does not call us slaves (inferior position) but friends (equal position).

> John 15:12 “This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you.

It’s easy to get blinded by feminist equality.

The correct Biblical marital perspective is that husbands as the head should consider wives as equal, but wives should consider husbands with submission and respect. This gives us an important conclusion.

Wives trying to treat their husbands as equal is disobedient to the Scriptures just as husbands treating their wives as servants.

Christian men's blogs

October 31, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Like Cane is doing, if you have a Christian men's blog that focuses on Christian men's issues, mentorship, and discipleship that you think are good, post them in the comments.

Here is the current list, which was parsed down several years ago to active ones only.

- American Dad Web
- Biblical Gender Roles
- Cane Caldo
- Dalrock
- Donalgraeme
- Free Northerner
- Keoni Galt
- Moose Norseman
- Seriouslypleasedropit
- Wintery Knight (Christian Apologetics)

I haven't updated my blogroll in several years either, so comment away. Also, make sure you add why you think it should be added if you can.

Also, I know I removed a bunch of the inactive ones, but if there is an inactive one that you think is important I will be adding an "inactive but important" section so that people can go back through the archives.

I'm going to eventually post a list over to the RPChristians reddit, as many of those men have been entrenched in the secular manosphere. It has made/makes them exceedingly bitter against God, women, and others. A good list will help to give them things to read to disciple them out from the darkness and into the light.

Honor the Sabbath

November 3, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A Christian writes on reddit:

> Currently I am in a dilemma. I want to keep the sabbath holy and honor the word of God, however I also unfortunately have sporting events/showcases that take place on the day of the sabbath, and I personally have a great chance to play at a very high level for my respective sport. If anyone has had anything similar occur with them, or just wants to give advice, any help is appreciated. Thank you and God bless you all!

My response. Look at the intent behind the Sabbath.

> Exodus 20:8 “Remember the Sabbath day by keeping it holy. 9 Six days you shall labor and do all your work, 10 but the seventh day is a sabbath to the Lord your God. On it you shall not do any work, neither you, nor your son or daughter, nor your male or female servant, nor your animals, nor any foreigner residing in your towns. 11 For in six days the Lord made the heavens and the earth, the sea, and all that is in them, but he rested on the seventh day. Therefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and made it holy.

The Jews keep it on Saturday. Christians moved it to Sunday (even though God “rested” from raising Jesus on Saturday).

Jesus notes the intent of the Sabbath is that it is made for man not man for the Sabbath.

> Mark 2:25 He answered, “Have you never read what David did when he and his companions were hungry and in need? 26 In the days of Abiathar the high priest, he entered the house of God and ate the consecrated bread, which is lawful only for priests to eat. And he also gave some to his companions.”
> 27 Then he said to them, “The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. 28 So the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath.”

Here’s a simple question: Is there a difference between Saturday or Sunday? Not really. The intent is to honor God and to rest just as God rested.

Thus, move your Sabbath to Saturday or another day of the week.

What I am curious about is if my readers agree/disagree with this.

I think there is an adequate case to be made that the intent of the command is that we are to honor God and rest. It doesn’t matter which day it is done. There is freedom in Christ for this.

I think it is probably best done Sunday if possible, so we can worship and fellowship with other believers. But it does not always have to be that way.

Your future wife should be happy to take your last name

November 4, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Another interesting topic has come out of reddit: I didn't know that a Biblical view on a wife taking her husband's last name would get downvoted or even opposed in the RPChristians reddit.

This means that this is probably another one of the cultural blindspots for Christians. Most Christians stated that name-taking was merely a "cultural phenomena" and one made the argument that it appears to be an "abuse of authority" that a wife should take your last name.

Overall, I disagree with the people who say there are no Biblical arguments for this.

> Genesis 2:24 That is why a man leaves his father and mother and is united to his wife, and they become one flesh.

A woman leaving her name behind signifies she is becoming a new family unit with her husband. It is the husband who separates from his father and mother and becomes the head of the family, and the wife who joins him. They become one flesh, as a new family.

This is also practiced in almost all cultures. There are only a few exceptions.

> John 15:12 My command is this: Love each other as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this: to lay down one's life for one's friends. 14 You are my friends if you do what I command. 15 I no longer call you servants, because a servant does not know his master's business. Instead, I have called you friends, for everything that I learned from my Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose me, but I chose you and appointed you so that you might go and bear fruit—fruit that will last—and so that whatever you ask in my name the Father will give you. 17 This is my command: Love each other.

The reason we take on the name of "Christian" is because we are followers of Christ and adhere to His teachings.

Likewise, as Christ is the head of man (1 Cor 11) and Christ is the head of the Church (Eph 5), the husband is also the head of the wife (Eph 5) and the wife is a helper to her husband (Gen 2). There is a clear parallel of headship/authority where the one under authority also assumes the identity of the one that is leading.

Some other evidence pointed out in the post:

- Genealogies in Scriptures track sons and fathers
- God renames Abram/Abraham, Sarai/Sarah, Saul/Paul, Jacob/Israel, etc.
- Christ renames Christians (Rev 2)
- Adam names Eve

So yes, a wife should take her husband’s last name for Scriptural reasons. There are also good secular and cultural reasons such as in eye of the law for family management (healthcare, finances, etc.).

I do not see any good reason not to except to follow the “trends” of today’s culture, and we all know how “Christian” those are.

A future wife should be HAPPY to take your last name. This can be a yellow or red flag that you run into with a potential wife candidate if she is opposed to refuses to take your last name. This can be covert feminism coming to the surface.

The funny part for those who disagree a wife should take their husband’s last name is that by keeping a wife’s last name you get double the Patriarchy: your last name from your father and her father’s last name. Have a good laugh at that.

Kavanaugh is innocent, as many “innocent until proven guilty” supporters expected

November 6, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I actually went and read through the main parts of the 414 page Senate Committee report.

Ford allegations:

> Committee investigators found no verifiable evidence that supported Dr. Ford’s allegations against Justice Kavanaugh. The witnesses that Dr. Ford identified as individuals who could corroborate her allegations failed to do so, and in fact, contradicted her.

Ramirez allegations:

> Committee investigators found no verifiable evidence to support Ramirez’s allegations.

Swetnick allegations:

> The Committee found no verifiable evidence to support Swetnick’s allegations. Indeed, the evidence appears to support the position that Julie Swetnick and Mr. Avenatti criminally conspired to make materially false statements to the Committee and obstruct the Committee’s investigation. Accordingly, the Committee referred both to the Department of Justice and FBI for investigation and potential violations of 18 U.S.C. § 371, § 1001, and § 1505 on October 25, 2018. In addition, on October 26, 2018, the Committee made a second criminal referral against Michael Avenatti to the Justice Department and FBI for investigation of potential violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1001 (knowingly providing materially false statements) and 1505 (obstruction of a congressional investigation), based upon the NBC story that evidenced that Mr. Avenatti may have fabricated allegations by a second declarant.

Rhode Island allegation:

> The Committee found no verifiable evidence to support the allegations. Indeed, the evidence appears to support the position that [blacked out] provided false information. Accordingly, the Committee referred both to the Department of Justice and FBI for investigation and potential violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1001 (knowingly providing materially false statements), and § 1505 (obstruction of a congressional investigation).

Colorado allegations:

> The Committee found no evidence to support the allegations in the anonymous

> Colorado letter. The alleged victim of the incident—the woman Justice Kavanaugh was dating when he authored parts of the Starr Report—denied the event ever took place. Justice Kavanaugh similarly denied engaging in the alleged conduct. The letter is anonymous, and the Committee has no way to identify the sender for further investigation. The Committee found no verifiable evidence to support the allegations.

California allegations:

> The Committee found no credible evidence to support the allegations in the Jane Doe letter. Justice Kavanaugh denied engaging in the alleged conduct. The letter is anonymous, and the Committee has no way to identify the sender for further investigation. Although Judy MunroLeighton emailed several Senate offices to claim responsibility for the letter, she later admitted that she was not the author of it and merely used it as a "ploy" to "get attention" and had never met Justice Kavanaugh.

Basically, Kavanaugh was enraged for good reason. Lots of people were falsely accusing him of terrible things. Not just 1 or 2 or 3 but 6 different allegations have come up that have all proved immaterial. Many in fact were simply made up for attention or ulterior motives.

I don't doubt that Ford believes it was Kavanaugh who groped ~~raped~~ her, but it's likely someone who looks like Kavanaugh and/or a false memory.

For the former, in a Senate report there were two interesting entries that are eerily like Ford's allegations:

> (Sept. 24, Sept. 25): [Blacked out] stated that after graduating from high school in Hampton, Virginia in 1982, he made several trips to D.C. that summer. During one of the trips, he attended a house party where he kissed and made out with a woman he met who he believes could have been Dr. Ford. said that based on old photographs of Justice Kavanaugh he has seen on the news, he believes the two of them share a similar appearance.
> (Sept. 26): [Blacked out] stated that when he was a 19 year-old college student, he visited D.C. over spring break and kissed a girl he believes was Dr. Ford. He said that the kiss happened in the bedroom of a house which was about a 15-to-20 minute walk from the Van Ness Metro, that Dr. Ford was wearing a swimsuit under her clothing, and that the kissing ended when a friend jumped on them as a joke. said that the woman initiated the kissing and that he did not force himself on her.

In particular, the 2nd one is almost word for word on her accusations of Kavanaugh and Judge.

For the latter, Ben Sharipo notes that in this Newsweek article:

> One report from the U.S. National Research Council explains that eyewitnesses > are notoriously unreliable: “Unknown to the individual, memories are forgotten, reconstructed, updated, and distorted.” Elizabeth Loftus of the University of Washington points out that memories can easily be distorted by misinformation; in her words, memories are “more easily modified, for instance, when the passage of time allows the original memory to fade.” False memories “are constructed by combining actual memories with the content of suggestions received from others.” In a small-scale study performed by Loftus, fully 25 percent of respondents remembered false events constructed for them, and insisted that those events were real memories.

Whatever the case, Ford was likely not assaulted by Kavanaugh, and the smear campaign was a smear campaign.

Of course, you’ll not hear a peep of this in the mainstream media that Kavanaugh is innocent. I did a search for it and only saw it in Fox News and a couple other small time papers.

No interest for an attractive Christian woman… or something else?

November 9, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

On Dalrock's Incentives Matter, Jean comments:

> We have a 22- year-old daughter who's basically out of luck when it comes to getting married. There are just not enough suitable men to go around. Most worthwhile men in her age range are already married or engaged, and the rest who aren't can command absolute perfection in the woman they choose. As parents, we really didn't see that coming.
> Our daughter is a debt-free virgin with no tattoos (haha), an 8/10 in appearance according to objective observers, fit and active, firm in her faith, kind and loyal, and would love to be a wife and SAHM more than anything else. Very not a feminist. She has a great sense of humor, but she's reserved when she just meets people. She loves to cook and clean and decorate and make ordinary things special for the people she loves. On the downside, I guess for some, she has a degree and a career (that she's very willing to give up for a family), lives on her own with her own money (too independent for some), she's never dated anyone (which to some people is a red flag), and sometimes she has some acne (we've tried everything). She's capable of driving a manual transmission and of doing manual labor (on missions trips or helping her dad around here), which I guess some people interpret as unfeminine (although the farm ladies at our church can do all that and more without becoming unfeminine). So she's not terrible. Just not excellent enough to be chosen.
> She's constantly approached by the über-handsome PUA type who are quickly uninterested when they realize she's not looking for one of them. But the men she's attracted to—quiet Christian guys, handsome to her, productive, with good morals—never reciprocate her interest. I don't know if they're holding out for someone better or what. I keep hoping that eventually someone will realize he's not going to get the ultimate dream girl and will settle for my daughter, but quite possibly not.
> She's starting to realize that she's probably going to be left out of marriage and motherhood. It makes her sad, but she's not willing to just grab someone to have someone and then make a train wreck of things. Her list of must-haves, as I outlined above, is short and pretty open, but there just isn't anyone like that who's interested in her, even though she's done things "right" as a young woman.

Deti answers:

> This makes no sense at all. If your daughter really is what you say she is, she > should have no trouble at all finding men who are interested. None whatsoever. There should be at least 5 men interested in her, and who have shown interest. I simply do not believe this. The only way this makes any sense is

> –you live in a very small town and are isolated from most other people
> –you live in an isolated, closed, cloistered religious group
> –your daughter is sending signals of disinterest to men
> I suspect this because you say she is reserved when just meeting people. Well, if your daughter really is attracted to “quiet Christian guys” with “good morals”, she’s going to have to step out a little and make that interest VERY VERY clear.
> But the men she’s attracted to—quiet Christian guys, handsome to her, productive, with good morals—never reciprocate her interest. I don’t know if they’re holding out for someone better or what.
>
> I don’t believe this either. She isn’t showing interest in them. If she really were showing interest in them, they’d notice and reciprocate. Your daughter could very, very easily get every single one of these men interested in her. Very easily.
> Jean, there could be many things going on here. I don’t know. It could be any one or a combination of:
>
> –Your daughter is not anywhere close to as physically attractive as you say she is.
> –She isn’t really interested in these Christian men.
> –If she is interested in these Christian men, she’s not showing it clearly enough.
> –she’s sending signals to these Christian men that they are interpreting as disinterest, whether right or wrong.
> –She isn’t as kind and nice as you think she is.
> –You, and she, are isolated and cloistered.
> –Her standards are too high.
> –She isn’t really making herself available to men wanting to date her.

One of the things I’ve noticed more when talking to my wife is the differences in the way men and women rate attractiveness. I’ve somewhat explored this before, but women don’t really understand male attraction.

Women that my wife may rate an “8” I would only rate as a “6” in attractiveness and vice versa. The difference between an 8 and a 6 is pretty huge. The majority of men would be likely fall over themselves trying to date an 8, but many men would simply be interested in dating a 6. Of course, the same can be said for women to men, so you can see how there is also a bottleneck when the average is in the 4-6 range. The people who are more attractive have a big advantage in getting married. But that was always the case. You can see above in the comments where there was a lot of misunderstanding until I explained how curves played into that.

In any case, a woman with obvious acne is generally not an 8 to begin with, so we can see the cracks in the story there. It’s likely that these objective observers are biased.

One thing I would add to Deti's list is that if she is physically attractive but her style could suck. If she's wearing more form fitting dresses and skirts that bring out her attractiveness or attractive body, that would make men more inclined to initiate or at the very least tell her she's beautiful (if she was objectively an 8).

Contrary to many of Dalrock's commenters, most Christian men actually want to see that their wife is living by herself and can support herself.

Of course, none of these women or parents actually want their daughter to play the Ruth role. Ruth update. That means going out of your way to make it obvious to a man that you're interested.

> Ruth 3:1 One day Ruth's mother-in-law Naomi said to her, "My daughter, I must find a home for you, where you will be well provided for. 2 Now Boaz, with whose women you have worked, is a relative of ours. Tonight he will be winnowing barley on the threshing floor. 3 Wash, put on perfume, and get dressed in your best clothes. Then go down to the threshing floor, but don't let him know you are there until he has finished eating and drinking. 4 When he lies down, note the place where he is lying. Then go and uncover his feet and lie down. He will tell you what to do."
> 5 "I will do whatever you say," Ruth answered. 6 So she went down to the threshing floor and did everything her mother-in-law told her to do. 7 When Boaz had finished eating and drinking and was in good spirits, he went over to lie down at the far end of the grain pile. Ruth approached quietly, uncovered his feet and lay down.
> 8 In the middle of the night something startled the man; he turned—and there was a woman lying at his feet! 9 "Who are you?" he asked. "I am your servant Ruth," she said. "Spread the corner of your garment over me, since you are a guardian-redeemer of our family."

The funny part about this story was that Naomi told Ruth to show up at Boaz's "house" unannounced, invite herself in, lay down near him until he wakes up, and then confess to him. This would literally be called 'stalking' nowadays. There is one thing about human nature then and now: if you're attractive it's not stalking but romantic.

Yet Christian woman today don't even want to try to flirt with men or start up conversations with men they like or show interest in him or his hobbies and things like that. I just don't get it.

No interest for an attractive Christian woman… or something else? Redux

November 10, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Funny enough, this popped up on Wintery Knight's Stop telling women that God will give them husbands later if they delay marriage now too.

Re-farmer comments:

> I see what you're saying. I really do. But, as others have pointed out, there are… gaps in your argument, shall we say.
> One of the things you keep stressing is that women should be marriage minded when they are young and fertile (fair enough), but also while they are "prettier." So… what about the ugly women? Or the not-conventionally attractive women? I guess they don't count?
> And then I think of the experiences of my own daughters, both of whom are in their early 20's now. Neither has been asked out on an actual date in their entire lives. One of them hasn't had a male show interest in her since she was 13 (the guy thought she was his own age; 19). AT work, she was frequently mistaken for a male. How, I'm not sure, considering her generous… assets, shall we say… but there it is. The other worked as a cashier and would get hit on by customers all the time. She was 19-21 at the time. They were 50+ yr old contractors. A co-worker got hit on by much older customers so often, she started wearing an engagement ring, hoping it would dissuade them. It didn't. And she looks a good 5 years younger than my daughter, which puts it in the creepy as heck category.
> I realize you are posting from a guy's point of view, but there is an entire world young women are living in that you know nothing about. Not saying there aren't women as you describe, but perhaps there is more to the issue then you are seeing.

I respond:

> It's very rare for women to get mistaken as a man. There's usually several reasons involved in this:
> 1. She is wearing androgynous clothing like jeans and t-shirts instead of feminine oriented clothing like skirts and dresses
> 2. Her hair is cut short
> 3. She has masculine facial features
> 4. She has masculine mannerisms or speech
> 5. She doesn't wear feminine accessories like earrings
> 6. Tasteful feminine makeup
> All these are changeable, except masculine facial features.

> You need to encourage her to dress and be more feminine.

She responds:

> Or people just assume that an employee in a hardware store is male, even when most of the employees are female. Every time it happened, it was always a male customer, and they always apologized immediately. She was never offended and just laughed it off.
> Why should I encourage her to dress more “feminine”? She dresses appropriately for the need. We’re getting back to blaming women for men’s responses to them.

I respond:

> Paragraph 1: Hard to do with feminine clothing, long hair, female accessories, etc.
> Paragraph 2: This is hilarious, honestly.
> You’re the one complaining that your daughters are recognized like men, not me. You’re the one complaining that your daughters haven’t been asked out on dates, not me.
> Perhaps you try something different if the same old same old isn’t working, instead of complaining that we’re now blaming women for men’s responses.

Her response:

> Actually, no. I wasn’t complaining. I simply made a comment. You’re the one who is making all sorts of assumptions with absolutely zero information about my daughters, instead of addressing the actual point of my comment. Did you even catch what that was?
> My girls are adults now – did you miss the part where I mentioned they are in their 20s? They are not 2 yr olds that need me to tell them how to dress. They do just fine, regardless of what conclusions you have drawn about them out of your own imagination.

There’s really no need to deign the last comment with a response, so I stopped.

In the old days, parents actually gave you useful dating advice. Now they actively sabotage your chances for relationships by giving you bad advice and doubling down on it when they’re called out.

Also, the old ‘victim blaming’ complex, lack of common sense, and combative attitude has made it into rural areas now too it seems.

Authority and obedience are not necessarily two sides of the same coin

November 13, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Dalrock's marriage isn't a military unit, Oscar brings up a good question:

> Here's the conundrum. The definition of the word "authority" is: the power or right to give orders, make decisions, and enforce obedience (synonyms: power, jurisdiction, command, control, charge, dominance, rule, sovereignty, supremacy).
> If a husband has authority over his wife, how does he enforce her obedience? And if he's not allowed to enforce her obedience, how, exactly, does he have authority over her?
> Obviously, Warthog's answer of "beat her into submission" is wrong. But, what's right?

Gary Eden gets the closest, from what I've seen, but then veers off in the wrong direction.

> "force her to obey" is always a distraction. You can't force anyone to do anything; as the early Christian martyr's proved with their life. But you can influence. You can set consequences for disobedience.
> Withholding attention and dread game can work to influence a wife. But they are at best, indirect means and at worst, passive aggressive.These are popular in the Red Pill community because they are about the only tools a man has when the wife is firmly in control and he is trying to regain power by stealth. I'm not saying they're bad or wrong, I'm just pointing out the context of those. That is not the full extent of what a husband can do.
> Ultimately, it's going to come down to setting consequences for disobedience. That can come in many many different forms. The cold shoulder is exactly that, a consequence of bad behavior.
>
> This is incredibly unpopular in church circles. But if a man cannot establish consequences for bad behavior he has no real authority in the relationship (de facto).
> The ironic thing is that while the church, society and law will do everything to makes sure you have no de facto power in their effort to cancel God's de jure establishment of husband as had, they can't outdo the God's creation…
> "Your Desire Will Be For Your Husband, And He Will Rule Over You"
> Often all that is required is for you to have the brass balls to just seize control. They'll squawk and complain and bluff ahead of time but in the end, they want to be ruled. All the bitter feminist talking heads in the world can't stop a woman who is thrilled to be ruled by her husband. Maybe you'll have to do it slowly.

> Certainly you'll have to do it with understanding. But no one is going to just hand it to you; least of all an American Christian woman.

To correctly understand the situation, you must understand all of the underlying dynamics first.

1. The husband has usually abdicated the head position or never been in it in the first place
2. The wife has usually been acting as the de facto head (via abdication) or constantly been in it
3. It could be the case that the husband has always been the head and the wife rebels, but this tends to be rare.

Next, it is important to understand Scriptural marital obligations and vows.

1. It is the obligation of the wife to submit to her husband, as to the Lord (e.g. Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3, 1 Tim 3, etc.) and respect her husband (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3).
2. It is the obligation of the husband to love his wife sacrificially toward sanctification (e.g. Eph 5), treat the wife as he would himself three different times (Eph 5), nourish and cherish (Eph 5), not be embittered toward his wife (Col 3), and live toward her with understanding that she is a weaker vessel and co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3).
3. Vows — whatever VOWS you took, the Lord counts as binding:

Example: "I, ___, take thee, ___, to be my wedded husband/wife, to have and to hold, from this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death do us part, according to God's holy ordinance; and thereto I pledge thee my faith [or] pledge myself to you."

Let's work out the rest of this out.

- Your primary goal is to obey God rather than men

This should go without saying, but we should be more concerned with how we are viewed in God's eyes than in our spouses/wives. This will change how we act toward them because we know that God does not tolerate our excuses, foolish behavior, and justifications.

"I forced my wife to obey because that's what you said she should do in the Bible" ain't gonna fly.

- To the commands to each spouse are unconditional.

They don't say that wives should only submit to their husbands if they are acting loving and kind. They don't say that husbands should only love their wives if she is respectful and obedient.

Unconditional commands help break negative behavior cycles where the wife acts bad, then the husband respond poorly, the wife responds poorly to that, and so on.

- The exception temptation

As I have noted before, whenever wifely obligations get brought up in Bible studies, there is always the exceptions that get brought up such as “what if he tells me to sin.” These exceptions are distractions from the commands–it is the exception temptation. Submit to your husband in all things, as to the Lord.

Gary Eden rightly identifies that “force her to obey” is a distraction from the commands of God. This is somewhat on the mark in terms of the influence paragraph, but then goes off on the tangent.

Putting it together

Your goal as a husband is not to “force her to obey” but to:

1. Love your wife sacrificially toward sanctification (e.g. Eph 5),
2. Treat your wife as you would yourself three different times (Eph 5),
3. Nourish and cherish her (Eph 5),
4. Not be embittered toward your wife (Col 3),
5. Live toward her with understanding that she is a weaker vessel and co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3).

Husbands in the situation of abdication or never led their marriage with wives who are de facto leaders are in a place of role reversal or rebellion. How does God treat us when we are rebellious and disobedient?

> Romans 5:8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

He makes the first move, to lead by example by sending Christ to die for us.

God’s marital commands are not here so that a wife will obey her husband (even though that is the optimal outcome), but so that a husband can show a rebellious wife how God loves us and how Christ loves His Church. This is how we reflect the Christ-Church image as the husband and wife.

Christ does not force us to obey, He shows us by His example and then asks (not demands) us to follow Him.

> John 14:15 “If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.
> John 15:10 If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father’s commandments and abide in His love. 11 These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full.

Discipline (in the form of punishment, chastisement, rebuke, or reproving) only works when those under authority accept the authority (even when they are under it but don’t accept it). A good example of this is parents and children. Children do not like it when you give them a time out or punishment for wrongdoing, but they accept it because they know your word is law. Wives who are fully submissive to their husbands like Abraham and Sarah show this.

One who is already rebellious or continues to be rebellious is acting as an unbeliever. Usually you don't even need to "punish them" or "enforce consequences" as usually the negative behavior will have its own consequences. What you don't want to do is to cover for those consequences. Let the wife deal with them by herself.

This is similar to what God does with Israel when turning away from him and invaded by surrounding nations. He allows them to suffer the consequences of their disobedience and idol worship. It is only when they repent and call out that he delivers them.

So what is a husband to do…

- Be the head. Act as the leader, even when she doesn't follow. Complaining and demanding don't work. Leading may not work at first, but may eventually.
- Love your wife sacrificially toward sanctification. Don't be a hypocrite (Matthew 7:1-2). Make sure you point out your faults first and work on them. When you have a pattern of consistent behavior start to kindly point out some of hers to help her become more sanctified.
- Love himself and love his wife as he loves himself. This is counterintuitive to most Christians, but it is Scriptural: "love your neighbor as yourself" and "So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies."

A man who is running himself ragged to please his wife is putting her on a pedestal and idolizing her. A man must make sure he is holding himself to the standard of Christ through excellence in all that he does (heart, soul, mind, and strength or spiritually, physically, mentally, emotionally) to be able to lead by example.

This is why "self improvement" such as gaining leadership skills, working out, losing weight, gaining muscle, dressing well, and things like that helps. It's akin to holding himself to a higher standard (which starts to satisfy her hypergamy) and makes her want to do it too.

- Nourish and Cherish her. Meet her needs. Be kind and considerate. This shows her she is valued and important, which is important to leading by example to gain your follower's/wife's trust back.
- Do not be embittered. Self explanatory, especially for husbands where their wife is not obedient. Not only does this not work, but it increases the divide between the husband and wife.
- Live toward her with understanding that she is a weaker vessel and co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3). She is not a man and therefore not as tough and resilient. You don't have to treat her like fine China, but understand that men and women are different from each other and respond differently to different things.

Overall, Authority starts with that which Authority is derived: God and Jesus. They are the ones who you are accountable with the Authority first. Then yourself by holding yourself accountable to the standard of authority through godliness and excellence yourself. Then your wife. The Scriptures outline this fairly clearly.

Demanding obedience and forcing obedience are temptations like wives are tempted to use exceptions to get out of submission free. Each will be held accountable by God for what they have done to disobey Him.

Pharisees and Weasels

November 21, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Playing off of Dalrock's Does romantic love sanctify sex? and Scott's The extremist nature of being human, the pharisee and weasel are the two categories that people trend toward.

- Pharisees like building extra rules and laws on top of the Law of Moses and Jesus' commands. There is a right and wrong way to have sex in marriage. There is a right and wrong way to be the head in marriage.
- Weasels are the ones that rationalize if something is a sin or not. They try to toe the line instead of head in the right direction. For instance, "is [holding hands, kissing, french kissing, groping each other, oral sex, or sex] before marriage a sin" is the wrong attitude and frame of mind: chastity is a direction not a line you cross.

At the core root, this is how our sin nature manifests at extremes of the works-based mentality instead of grace and freedom.

The Pharisaical nature is easier to spot as it is largely rooted in the pride of ones own convictions overlaid onto others.

The weasel mentality is harder to spot in certain circumstances. This is in part due the root of the problem of 'wanting to get away with something' despite the cost of the sacrifice that Jesus made for us. In other words, cheap grace. Shall we sin more so that grace may abound? Surely not!

Grace has afforded us peace and freedom in Christ. The freedom to do good. To love our neighbor. To love our wives. To honor God.

It is, however, easy to fall back into that works based mentality even as a Christian. We do it all the time. Pastors do it all the time. We need to constantly remind ourselves that we shouldn't be Pharisees or Weasels with our faith.

edit: Chad makes some important points that may be misinterpreted about this post.

> Calling such aid pharisaical seems… illogical, at best. The reason being that number one criticism of them was hypocrisy, the second putting human tradition above the inward disposition that God desired with His law. He never voices issues with the extra rules other than when they run contrary to His will. Meanwhile, the original quotes were speaking of the basic foundation of the family and how it knits together – the relationship between husband and wife – and trying to aid people on how to achieve the correct inward disposition along with objectively meeting the exterior acts as well. While, again, some get it wrong these days, the post as written seems to foster the idea that there is no correct course to take and certainly no correct way to correct wayward souls on the subject

This post is mainly about different patterns that humans can usually fall into traps. Not about any of the particular scenarios in the other posts. There obvious is right and wrong, according to God and the Scriptures, usually within the context of Loving God and Loving your Neighbor.

Divorce Part 7 Final

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

This post is the final consolidation and simplified explanation of the Scriptures on divorce. Previous discussions include several conversations and much of the same material from On divorce and On divorce Part 2 and On divorce Part 3 and On divorce Part 4 and On divorce Part 5 and On divorce Part 6.

Also related: polygyny and the Lysa divorce fiasco (which they are currently reconciling which is good). This is one of the original research articles that got me started on analyzing the Scriptures on divorce and also evidence by Leslie McFall.

The "Betrothal position" has the most evidence to support it given the context from Matthew 1 (in the same book) and pointing toward the difference between putting away and divorce (putting away + writ of divorce). John Piper gives a good summary of it here. That's my official position on the topic after having done more research from the past post. Another paper on the betrothal position.

I took a lot of the info from previous posts and condensed it a bit. I also added substantially more points in sections 6-10 the summary of all evidence section.

18. Conclusion

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in Mosiac law. This will be important later.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

---

2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because > she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective, at the time of Jesus no women who were caught in marital fraud were stoned (due to the Romans not permitting the Jews to execute anyone, which is why the Pharisees had to take Jesus to Pontius Pilate to have Him executed). Women caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced (put away + writ of divorce) as the couple was not considered legally married.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because it shows how a woman could be put away (without being legally divorced).

---

3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord acquiesces to the laws He outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity. By the NT, they were no longer "Jews" but "Samaritans" because they have been divorced by God and intermixed with the surrounding nations. The Samaritans were despised by the Jews because they were no longer part of the God's chosen people.

But the Lord still wants repentance in Jeremiah 3:14 even though He legally divorced Israel. Since they are part of the 'Gentiles' now, they can now be redeemed by Christ.

On the other hand, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement (sêpher 'êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem?

> or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and delivers Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

4. Malachi 2 — The background from the Old Testament to the New Testament

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The passage only talks about putting away and not legal divorce under the Law of Moses. “Divorce” in surrounding cultures was simply putting away (without a writ of divorce). Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. Husbands probably mimicked the surrounding culture because of two reasons:

1. Selfish gain. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride’s father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry.
2. Marginalized wives. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would still be legally married to her husband, which allowed her unable to remarry without committing adultery.

This is why putting away is termed treacherous by the Lord. This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus’ interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament.

5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

The OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek. There are synonymous terms in the Hebrew and Greek.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on

> Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

I crossed out the two instances of "divorce" within Strong's definition of apoluo because apoluo does not denote a legal divorce according to the Law of Moses and according to Matthew because it is a gospel to the Jews. Jesus would not have used apoluo to mean "divorce" in Matthew because He does not abolish the law but fulfills the law.

---

6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap

Line by line analysis, given our solid background:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

Your spider senses should be tingling with the tricky wording of "lawful" with "putting away" (without writ of divorce) and "every cause."

The main trap is the Pharisees are pitting Roman law versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could "divorce" your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo) much like the surrounding cultures in Malachi 2. However, Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by "putting her away" (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth).

The secondary trap of the Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for "every cause" due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important). Roman husbands could just send a wife away to divorce her whereas Jewish Law required broad or narrow cause.

The trap: If Jesus answers that you can "put away a wife without a bill of divorcement" the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you "need a bill of divorcement" or "a narrow range of causes" to put away then the Pharisees accuse Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law (like they eventually did before Pontius Pilate as they claimed Jesus was a 'King' which was antithetical to Roman rule).

Other similar Pharisee traps:

- 'Is it lawful to pay taxes to God or Caesar' (Matt 22, Mark 12) which would pit Jewish law against Roman law.
- 'In the Law Moses commanded us to stone such women. What do you say?' (John 8) with the woman caught in adultery. The Law required stoning, but Romans did not allow the Jews to execute anyone.

There is a pattern of Jewish vs Roman law interpretation.

7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus knows that it's a no-win question. He sidesteps the Pharisees' trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and causes. Instead, Jesus discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

This is Jesus' answer on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

No (man initiated) divorce.

8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap and are confused. If God did not intended for any divorce then why divorce in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24?

The Pharisees acknowledgement that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement reveals their trap that we saw earlier. The Pharisees knew that a divorce was putting away and a bill of divorcement, but they only tested Jesus on putting away only.

9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds that this part of the law was created by Moses because human hearts are hard. Jesus agrees with God: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

Jesus is saying that any who thinks divorce is an option for them has hardness of heart.

---

10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

Jesus answers the original question that the Pharisees posed: “what lawful instances can a man put away?” You can see the mirror of the verses which confirms this:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?
> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Jesus is answering the Pharisees original question. Next, read the verse without the “exception clause” to understand why it makes sense.

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for~~ ~~fornication (porneia),~~ and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, …, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> In plain English:
> If you put away your wife and marry another you commit adultery and whoever marries her commits adultery.

The meaning is obvious. If you put away your wife without legally divorcing her — give her a writ of divorcement before sending her away — you’re still married to her. If you’re still married to her, both you and her commit adultery if you marry another.

Now to add in back the exception:

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

What is the only case you can “put away” a “wife” without legal divorce? In the Law of Moses that would be Deuteronomy 22 where the marriage was invalid because of fraud. Since the marriage was invalid because of fraud, you can put her away without giving her a writ of divorce.

Porneia, in this case, refers specifically to invalid marriages because of marital fraud.

There is additional evidence why porneia does not refer to adultery here.

- First, Jesus specifically says “except it be for fornication (porneia). “Fornication” is any illicit sexual union including incest (1 Cor 5) and adultery. If Jesus was referring specifically to adultery here then “moichao” is a much more accurate term than “porneia.” Moichao is used later in the verse, yet it is not used here. You would have to admit that Jesus doesn’t know to use the term “adultery” if he is permitting divorce.

- Second, if Jesus was talking specifically about a legitimate divorce for adultery, according to the Law of Moses, He would have said (in reference to Deut 24):

> “Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) with a writ of divorce (apostasion) his wife, “except it be for adultery (moichiao),
> Instead, He says in reference to Deut 22:
> “Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, “except it be for fornication (porneia),

The Greek wording is important because it tells us what passages Jesus is referencing in Mosaic Law. The answer is Deuteronomy 22 and illegitimate marriages as opposed to Deuteronomy 24 and rules on divorce.

- Third, this also explains exactly happening in Malachi 2 and Roman times. Husbands were defaulting to the culture and putting away their wives without a writ of divorce contrary to the Law of Moses. The wives could not marry again because they were still married to their original husbands. If they did they were committing adultery.
- Fourth, Jesus continues to avoid the Pharisees’ trap. Remember, “putting away” in Roman culture is synonymous for divorce. Jesus references the only part of the Law where “putting away” is valid, which would not conflict with Roman divorce laws.
- Fifth, sacraments/covenants like marriage cannot be formed if there is deception by any party. They require that the full Truth is disclosed. This is similar to contract law and why there are annulments for invalid marriages.
- Sixth, the nail in the coffin. If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery, then He would simply be repeating Deuteronomy 24 verbatim as it says a husband could legitimately divorce for adultery. Given the disciples response in the next section, we know that is not what Jesus is saying.

A preponderance of logical evidence backs the “exception clause” referring directly to the Deuteronomy 22. The husband could put the wife away (without a writ of divorce) because the marriage was a sham. Thus,

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) (illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Therefore, Jesus makes two distinct statements in this entire passage:

> On marriage and divorce:
>
> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> On putting away in regard to fraudulent marriages (referencing Deut 22):
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

In conclusion, Jesus says there is no divorce. You can only put away if there is marriage fraud.

For example, in the case of fraud, a wife that lies about her past sexual history can be put away because it's a fraudulent marriage. Interestingly, though we often negatively critique him, Mark Driscoll experienced this. You can see the devastation, which is why God makes an exception for this.

11. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fraudulently married by deception.

- If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery (like in Deut 24), the disciples would not have responded like this. It was already acknowledged that you could do this, which would not be surprising to the disciples.
- If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery (like in Deut 24), He would have been calling His own heart hard since He had earlier stated "Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so."
- When Jesus fulfills the Law, it is always to a much higher standard than the former Law. For example, "Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself" (Matt 22) is transformed to "a new command I give to you: that you love one another, just as I have loved you, that you love one another" (John 13, John 15). Now, Jesus is the standard.

- In the case of divorce, Jesus instead goes back to Creation which was Perfect: "What God has put together let no man separate."

The standards for Christians in the New Testament always supersede that of the Old Testament.

No divorce period except for fraudulent marriages is a hard word. A really hard word.

12. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away (apoluō autos) privily.

Joseph engagement and marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was supposed to be marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

This is probably the reason why Matthew includes the "except for fornication" clause in Matthew 5 and 19. He was defending Jesus' birth. The Pharisees and others accused Jesus of being illegitimate in the Scriptures (Mark 6, John 8).

---

13. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she > committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

First, there is no "exception clause" in both Mark and Luke. This would conflict with the passages in Matthew passages if it referred to adultery. As we now know, Mark and Luke do not conflict with Matthew because the "exception clause" refers to fraudulent marriages and not divorce for adultery.

Second, the background behind these passages is that Mark and Luke were mainly written to the Gentiles while Matthew was written to the Hebrews. The reason for this is that "putting away" was "divorce" for the Gentiles. The instruction is that they should not do that at all. As they were not under the Law of Moses, this goes back to Jesus statement of original intention: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." There is no divorce for Gentile believers.

Third, the Mark passage is particular instructive. The disciples asked him in the house later about Jesus' true thoughts in private: no divorce (which goes along with "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."). If Jesus had said this out in public, the Pharisees could have had him stoned as divorce was lawful for Romans.

14. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

In Romans 7, Paul is speaking that the covenant of marriage is unbound by death only.

15. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

The Lord speaks through Paul that any type of separation (legal divorce or not) that those in the marriage are to stay single or reconcile. In other words, do not divorce. If you separate, you must stay single or reconcile. There is no remarriage.

This agrees with Jesus' original statements on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

16. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage (douloo) in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. “If I’m not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry.” This interpretation is incorrect.

If you examine the wording closely, the passage only says that if they depart then you’re not under the bondage (douloo) anymore. Greek douloo is from doulos which means servant/slave and is the verb form of slave which means enslavement. This is bondage is our duty to God for the marital roles and responsibilities.

Paul references this authority-slave/servant relationship earlier in the passage on the spouses owing sex to each other.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.5 Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

This verse must also be taken in context with the other verses in the Bible and passage. As Romans 7 and 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 show, the Christian must stay single or reconcile and that the marriage covenant is only broken by death.

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.

Notice the same wording of an unbeliever departing (chorizo) and a wife departing (chorizo). They are still under the marriage covenant and must stay single or reconcile.

Likewise, the end of the 1 Corinthians affirms this too:

> 1 Corinthians 7:39 A wife is bound (deo) as long as her husband lives; but if her husband is dead, she is free to be married to whom she wishes, only in the Lord. 40 But in my opinion she is happier if she remains as she is; and I think that I also have the Spirit of God.
> G1210 — deō — deh’-o — A primary verb; to bind (in various applications, literally or figuratively): – bind, be in bonds, knit, tie, wind. See also G1163, G1189.

This is affirmed again at the end of 1 Corinthians 7. Notice the difference in the Greek word deo versus douloo used in the other verse. Deo means to bind. This is the same language that is used for the marital covenant as oneness/binding and is only broken by death.

> Genesis 2:24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave (dâbaq) unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh

> H1692 — dâbaq — daw-bak' — A primitive root; properly to impinge, that is, cling or adhere; figuratively to catch by pursuit: – abide, fast, cleave (fast together), follow close (hard, after), be joined (together), keep (fast), overtake, pursue hard, stick, take.

The covenant bond is one of permanent clinging together.

There is no divorce or remarriage for Christians with unbelieving spouses either.

17. Summary of all available evidence against divorce and remarriage

1. Jesus notes the standard is "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."
2. Divorce from the Law of Moses is for those hard of heart.
3. Putting away is not divorce according to the Law of Moses, which both Jesus and the Pharisees knew.
4. Jesus was answering the original question the Pharisees were asking about "putting away."
5. Textual analysis points to "except for porneia" pointing to Deuteronomy 22 instead of Deuteronomy 24, especially in context of Matthew 1 Joseph and Mary and the trap the Pharisees were trying to trick Him.
6. Moichao = act of adultery specifically. Jesus doesn't use that word in the "exception"
7. Disciples response ("it is better not to marry") indicates that it does not refer to Deuteronomy 24 where you can already divorce for adultery.
8. Why would Jesus repeat and agree to with the Pharisees that you can divorce for adultery. Hint: He wouldn't.
9. Precedent of Joseph and Mary where "putting away" is the righteous option for marital fraud (not killing her according to Deut 22).
10. Agreement of Mark and Luke with no exceptions. If Jesus made an exception Matthew, then Mark and Luke would not agree with Matthew and the Bible would contradict itself. It is not an 'addition' to Jesus' statements in Mark and Luke.
11. In Mark, the disciples ask Jesus again privately, and He clarifies any putting away = adultery. If he had done this publicly, the Pharisees could have had him stoned as Roman Law said you could put away to divorce which would make Jesus deny Roman Law.
12. Romans 7 and 1 Corinthians 7 showing that death breaks marital covenants with no other exceptions.
13. 1 Corinthians 7, the Lord says that a wife and husband should not separate, but if they do, they should stay single or reconcile. This agrees with "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" and does not agree with an 'exception' for divorce.
14. The whole book of Hosea is about God commanding Hosea to marry a prostitute and how that symbolizes God and His people who are adulterous. God still wants them to come back to Him. We are to emulate God.

Other evidence:

- A husband who runs off with another woman is still married to his former wife, and he will be held accountable for judgment to God for that.
- You (and most others) took vows in marriage, which God takes very seriously. Story of Jephthah sacrificing his daughter because of his vow. Vows in Numbers 30, God on vows, Jesus affirms the seriousness of vows. Vows are not null and void because someone else did something wrong.
- All the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are unconditional (Eph 5, Col 3, Titus 3, 1 Peter 3, 1 Corinthians 7). You don't get a "get out of marriage free" card or "I can act mean to my wife if she treats me poorly" card if the other person is sinning. The Bible still commands husbands to love their wives and treat them with honor and calls wives to submit and respect their husbands…. no matter how bad the other spouse acts.
- Our ministry as Christians is the ministry of reconciliation (2 Corinthians 5) which also includes marriages that have had crazy sins happen in them.
- The early Church fathers held the view of no divorce and remarriage. It's funny that Christians now think they know more about it from their own Biblical interpretation than those who were passed down the Standard directly from Jesus Himself.

Piper has some additional points based on hypothetical scenarios that support the no divorce position.

Overall, I can't think of one piece of evidence in combination with looking at both the Old and New Testament that indicates one can divorce for adultery. The only circumstantial evidence that those who support divorce for adultery keep trying to stand on is that "porneia" can refer to adultery in some instances according to Strong's. Unfortunately, it is never used to refer to adultery in the NT, especially when there is a more suitable word which is moichao.

There are also no Christian traditions that support divorce for adultery. The only exception is in the past century or so with the rise of feminism.

18. Conclusions

Jesus talks about marriage, divorce, and putting away. Understanding which passages Jesus refers to is critical to unifying all of Scripture on the topic of divorce.

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the context of Mosaic Law and in the gospel of Matthew. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19
2. Putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus' plan for marriage is that "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10

4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. Separation seems to be an option if you can't live with them. Reconciliation is ideal. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, 1 Cor 7
5. Under the Law of Moses and according to Jesus, a marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud prior to marriage. Example: Claiming she was a virgin when she was not (Deut 22). Hence, you can put her away without divorcing her since it was a sham. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage of marital roles and responsibilities. You are still under the marriage covenant, and you cannot remarry. – 1 Cor 7
8. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse if they come to Christ (See: Note 1 for more details). The heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. In this line of thought, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. This view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again otherwise is it an abomination. – Deut 24, Matthew 19

Note 1: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery:

> 1. There is perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, "sacramental marriage" affirmed by the Church.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. Those that don't undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn't valid they are free to marry another. A marriage can be affirmed sacramental in which case divorce and remarriage is a sin.
> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Final Conclusion, according to Scriptures, for Christians

1. No divorce period. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

2. Stay single or reconcile. No remarriage. This includes marriage to unbelievers who leave.
3. Your recourse is separation if you absolutely can't live with them (though not ideal).
4. Fraudulent marriages are not marriages. Covenants require truth from all parties to be established.
5. If you have a "Christian marriage" (or sacramental marriage) — both of you know that marriage is forever on earth and the accompanying roles and responsibilities — then any divorce and remarriage is perpetual adultery.
6. 2nd or 3rd marriages that come to Christ can be affirmed as Christian marriages. They would not have to go back to their first spouse and are not in perpetual adultery. Prior marriages are effectively "annulled" as you did not understand Christian marriage.

This is why I believe (as a Protestant) that the Catholic method of sacramental marriage is probably the best method to deal with marriage and divorce in a broken world. Orthodox I can see the reasoning on, but it is not as strictly faithful. Protestant views on marriage are trash, and it is no surprise that they have the highest divorce rates of any denomination of Christianity and divorce rates almost as high as secular culture.

I'll probably get a zillion comments on this from pro-divorce proponents as most of my other posts on this. Unless someone addresses all of the evidence in section 17, I probably won't participate. Most of the pro-divorce proponents only argue that porniea includes adultery and that putting away = divorce and ignore every other available evidence because it doesn't support their point. No one ever refutes: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" and divorce = hardness of heart.

Toxic masculinity is a myth?

November 28, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

New article called Toxic Masculinity is a Myth, but Insecure Men Lash Out at Women. The behavior is real, but the way we've come to talk about men who lash out obscures the problem.

Seemed like an "ok" premise, so I took a look.

> But what does it mean to be guilty of toxic masculinity? Hard to say. For how much the term is bandied around, it remains poorly defined. The toxic bit is simple enough, but masculinity has always been difficult to pin down.
> Whereas feminine ideals are fairly consistent over the course of western history, masculine ideals are not. Anthropologists claim that three Ps — providing, protecting, and procreating — define modern American manhood, but that's a localized phenomenon. The only consistent truth about masculinity has been this: Men have always feared having it taken away. This is why serious gender researchers are increasingly dismissive of the idea of toxic masculinity, which suggests that manhood itself has some form of congenital defect. What seems to be more plausible is that toxic behaviors are a reaction to perceived threats to the masculinity of a subset of men with poor self-esteem. Put a different way, what's toxic isn't masculinity — there's nothing ultimately wrong with masculine behavior — but the creeping suspicion that it can be taken away and the juvenile actions that this suspicion triggers.

So far, not a bad analysis. Most of everything up 'til the last sentence is true.

> "The idea that manhood is something that has to be earned is fairly widespread," says social psychologist Joseph Vandello, who, along with his colleague at University of South Florida Jennifer Bosson, proposed an alternative to toxic masculinity in 2008: Precarious Manhood Theory.
> Bosson and Vandello concluded that many men view masculinity as a sort of currency that can be earned and stolen rather than as a fixed trait. They found most young boys working hard to earn manhood and a smaller population of men preoccupied with protecting this valuable social status. These men, the ones who worried about their masculine status being taken away, demonstrated a tendency to lash out if not externally validated. By contrast, girls tended to view the transition to womanhood as physical rather than social. Questioning their femininity was unlikely to trigger much more than a laugh.

Highlighting the difference between the sexes is a good. Manhood for men is indeed seen as more earned in respect to what women are attracted to whereas women are typically born with their beauty and have to do things to mess it up (cake on make up, get obese, cut off their hair, etc.).

> Bosson and Vandello posited that men are quite a bit more anxious about gender than women. But why? The answer seems to be more cultural than biological. In almost every culture, boys begin to police each other as they approach manhood, deeming only specific behaviors acceptable and demanding, in many cases, that aspirants to masculinity perform feats of social and physical strength.
> “Basically being a man is ultimately more valued in society and being a woman is more devalued,” Maxine Craig, a sociologist at the University of California, Davis, explains. “Because men are more valued in society they have to watch their step in order not to lose that position.”
> Gender is performative in general and women experience social pressures and have hierarchies. That said, there’s less status attached to being female than male, which may be why women are granted more freedom to be fluid than men. Feminists lampooned by their enemies for being too masculine — Lady Gaga has, for instance, been accused of hiding a secret penis — tend to shrug off the jokes while the men who make them struggle to grant the premise that gender roles are oppressive. Understanding that they have more to lose, men flee the conversation or prepare to fight.

And they lost me.

The apex fallacy rears it’s ugly head. No matter the fact that primary through high school is biased against boys, women represent a 60:40 majority in college and also a majority in graduate school, and other things like these.

The reality now is that no one gives a crap about men, unless they have made themselves into a person of power or high status.

> If the precariousness of the male identity is more potentially destructive than masculine behaviors, one would expect the most toxic behavior to occur in the most precarious groups. And that’s exactly what is happening. Roughly three-quarters of violent crimes in America are committed by men and the peak age for every form of criminal activity surveilled by the FBI’s Uniform Crime Reporting program is under 25. (The exception is gambling.) The median age for most crimes is under 30.
> Who engages in dangerously toxic behavior? Young men, the people that worry most about their gender status.
> Although a young man in a privileged position may have the resources to assert his manhood in constructive ways (excelling academically, professionally, or even athletically) more marginalized young men who don’t have healthy outlets and are less likely to receive external validation. Communities with a high density of underprivileged young men without access to validation tend to be high crime communities in which manhood is expressed through substance abuse, homophobia, sexism, harassment, extreme risk-taking, and violence. This is toxicity and the problem does not seem to be masculine ideals. Kids in America’s > toughest neighborhoods and Afghanistan's toughest provinces all have positive male role models. What they don't have is a sense of gendered stability.

Now the ignorance is showing. Kids in high crime communities do not "all have positive male role models." In fact, most of the time, they don't have a father in the home at all because of the rampant single motherhood! Even the male role models they have aren't the best; single moms with live-in boyfriends who are overwhelmingly more prone to domestic violence than biological fathers.

> Testosterone tends to shoulder the blame for poor male behavior and it is true that higher testosterone levels are linked to low-risk aversion, aggression, and violent tendencies. Men with higher sex hormone levels are also more sensitive to masculinity threats. But Vandello is reluctant to blame biology for men lashing out when their manhood is threatened. Social rules, consequences, and the policing of masculinity reinforce the idea that men have to perform and defend it. Men must be convinced that their manhood is suspect. This is not an innate anxiety.
> "The construction of gender identity for men is more fragile than for women. In many cultures, one is born a woman — and one becomes a man," psychotherapist, podcaster, and author Esther Perel recently wrote on her well-trafficked personal site. Perel, the mother of two boys, was teasing a conference dubbed "The Paradox of Masculinity" at which she spoke to a packed room of therapists in Midtown Manhattan and an international audience of interested parties via a video link about the need for a better understanding of what makes men tick. One of the five pillars of male identity she discussed in her keynote was trauma. She explained to her majority female audience that most men experience rejection tied to masculinity at some point in their life and that this often leaves a profound mark. To illustrate this point, she shared a clip of the documentary The Work about men in group therapy in a prison. In the clip, a man describes being sent away by his engineer father for not understanding knowing how to help work on a car. Decades after he was told to go find his mother, the wound is still clearly fresh. He cries.
> Perel's audience respectfully scribbled notes. But not all of her colleagues have been so pleased to have a woman looking under the hood of maleness.
>
> "A handful of men that I respected professionally went straight into attack mode," Perel recently told Psychotherapy Networker. "They immediately went into diatribes that implied they thought this couldn't be anything other than an organized attack on men or a misguided woman's attempt at feminizing their gender."
> This was predictable.

Talk about confirmation bias.

Shades of Kavanaugh being angry at the false accusations against him are used to prove that he was indeed guilty of what they were claiming.

> Precarious masculinity seems to show up everywhere. But the most obvious place most people encounter it is in humor. Research indicates that men do not typically prefer sexist and homophobic humor. But psychologist Thomas Ford has found that men who believe masculinity can be taken away are more likely to respond positively to sexist and homophobic jokes. Interestingly, this group of insecure men do not seem to have acquired a taste for racist jokes. Why not? Presumably because sexist and homophobic humor has a uniquely gender-affirming quality. Jokes allow men to reassert their masculinity by distancing themselves from perceived femininity.

Men regularly communicate with each other with teasing and mocking and joking. That's just male camaraderie.

While I don't necessarily agree with racist or sexist jokes (depending on the sexist joke at least), it's interesting to see an article say that masculinity shouldn't be pathologized but still pathologizes some aspects of male behavior.

> That's the low stakes stuff. The high stakes stuff is much more disturbing. Perceived threats to masculinity lead to higher incidents of domestic violence and sexual assault. Despite having some of the highest rates of gender equity in Europe, Denmark, Finland, and Sweden have the highest rates of intimate partner violence and sexual assault in the EU. Dubbed as the "Nordic Paradox," this troubling phenomenon may also be occurring in the United States. One study of over 4,000 families found that women who were the primary breadwinners were more likely to be victims of domestic violence when their partners held more traditional beliefs about gender roles.
> "Some men see that as a zero-sum game. That women's advancement must come at a cost for men. That's not the reality, but it's the perception," Vandello says.
> The data indicates that men have a problem with the precariousness of masculinity over the toxicity of it, but the core is that too many boys and men deeply struggle for self-worth without the help of outside sources.
> "Toxic masculinity is more of a sign of lack of self-worth and self-respect," psychotherapist Hanalei Vierra, who's counseled men for over three decades, told Fatherly. "Underneath all that instability and anger is a wounded little boy who was never taught to value his authentic and genuine experience of himself."

The Nordic paradox seems alike the "paradox of declining female happiness." The more you try to push away from the fact that men and women are different, the more problems you have.

Color me not surprised that when you raise a culture of feminist men that these men are insecure and act out more when threatened. The irony is not lost on them. When you destroy the structure of the family and discourage fathers teaching their sons how to be men, you're going to raise boys who are insecure. See: single motherhood.

> Clinical psychologist Daniel Sher echoes those sentiments, adding that there are some men who see masculinity as stable, biological, a relatively arbitrary construct, or some combination of the three, which reflects more psychological maturity and likely a higher quality of life. "This reflects a different psychological makeup and the potential for ambiguity is denied," Sher adds. "If we're talking psychoanalytically, the people who acknowledge the constructed and performative nature of masculinity are further along the psychic developmental trajectory."
> Vandello acknowledges that some men are able to reject the notion that manhood is unstable and needs to be regularly proven, especially as they get older. But many of these men who privately reject this still buckle when subjected to the social consequences of nonconformity.
> "It matters less what you believe and more what the cultural rewards and punishments are," Vandello says.

The culture rewards women for being women and punishes men for being men. Why do you think men are more insecure?

So much cognitive dissonance.

> Aside from the uncertainties of masculinity, what clinicians and social scientists overwhelmingly agree on is that making manhood the enemy may not be a constructive way to push for change. The floating of the term "toxic masculinity" has a tendency to start vicious cycles rolling downhill. Why? It is itself an affront to masculinity and, as such, a pretty lousy means of striking up a constructive conversation. Proving this is not hard. One only needs to try to participate in a discussion about gender on Twitter.

The second good though in the article.

> One example: In August, author Rollo Tomassi tweeted "Children from single-parent households (overwhelmingly single mothers) account for 80% of rapists motivated by displaced anger. Congratulations feminism, you've literally bred and raised the 'rape culture' you claim to fear." To this provocation, a user named Miss Stirr replied that "43% of boys are raised by single mothers. 78% of teachers are female. So almost 50% of boys have 100% feminine influence while at home & an 8/10ish chance of 100% influence at school. Toxic masculinity isn't the problem. Lack of masculinity is."
> The discourse devolved from there, divided between people supporting, insulting, and questioning Stirr and Tomassi. "So what are you saying, boys, are being neutered?" Bruce Schwab asked. "Toxic femininity is a problem," David Hunt added. William Dickson was more critical, tweeting "If your understanding of > simple math is so poor, you may not have a strong grasp of complex social issues."

> Other responses were just strange, like one from a "HipGnosis" who claimed being raised by a single mother taught him that "even approaching a woman is harassment" (naturally, his bio reads: "Retweets mean we're engaged"). Finally, a man named Nick derailed the thread entirely with "Canadian public school is child abuse." No one learned anything.

The manosphere is referenced!

It's honestly both. Lack of positive masculine role models is a big thing. There is also the surrounding culture that says women = good and men = bad and regularly craps on men for pointing the facts out.

> Still, coddling or talking past problematically insecure men is not a viable solution to the problem presented by gender insecurity. So what is? Strangely, the answer may be demanding more. Each expert interviewed for this article independently noted positive aspects of performed masculinity — heroism, action-based empathy like protecting others, expertise, amassing resources, and work ethic. Demanding men meet these standards and celebrating those who do might positively refocus the energies of men afraid of having their masculinity stripped from them. The good news is we've already seen this work: Arguably one of the healthiest forms of modern masculinity is engaged fatherhood, a fairly new masculine ideal. Caregiving demands a lot of men but can be ennobling and, if positioned correctly, masculinizing. There's a reason that the heavily branded movement towards male parental involvement has been largely fronted by athletes who pose fatherhood as a challenge. There's a reason the initial and rather unsubtle tagline for this publication was "Win Parenting."
> "A lot of men look back at their own fathers and think, I don't want to be this way," Vandello says, "I want to deal with my problems in a more constructive way."
> Instead of rejecting masculinity as toxic, it's possible to use its ambiguity to ask more of men. It's possible that this may encourage more generational progress among men who cling to and defend their manhood the most fiercely. Masculinity will not likely cease to be important to these men, but if the values attached to it become healthier so might the men plagued by it. Perhaps the ultimate twist in the myth of the toxic man is that an evolved and intrinsic form of masculinity might be the solution. Vandello admits that it's entirely possible for manhood to become less elusive, more attainable, and healthier. It's even possible that having a strong sense of self-worth regardless of what others think could be considered manlier over time. If masculinity is a construct that needs to be reinforced for some men over and over again, make it bear repeating.

Ah, yes. The ideal that men were supposed to strive for before feminism, divorce, and the sexual revolution wanted to destroy it and claim men and women are the same.

Not sure why they called ‘fatherhood’ a new masculine ideal. It was one of the reasons why men wanted marriage and family. They were respected by their wife and children and society. Now they’re a laughingstock everywhere. Incentives people, incentives.

Except they could not make the connection. Oh well. At least they tried?

The Law of Moses and equitable solutions specifically for Israel

December 3, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the difficult things for Christians to understand is the context of Jewish culture and some of the equitable solutions proposed. This is true with both marriage and divorce.

We discussed this some in the comments of Divorce Part 7 Final.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 “When a man takes a wife and marries her, and it happens that she finds no favor in his eyes because he has found some indecency in her, and he writes her a certificate of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out from his house, 2 and she leaves his house and goes and becomes another man’s wife, 3 and if the latter husband turns against her and writes her a certificate of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house, or if the latter husband dies who took her to be his wife,
> 4 then her former husband who sent her away is not allowed to take her again to be his wife, since she has been defiled; for that is an abomination before the Lord, and you shall not bring sin on the land which the Lord your God gives you as an inheritance.

The key to verse 4 of this passage is understanding inheritance. The wife is ‘defiled’ because of inheritance issues, not because going back to the former husband makes her defiled. If a wife went back to her former husband and then had a kid 9 months later, you couldn’t tell whose kid it was.

Inheritance is clearly important in ancient Israel that God had Levirate marriage (brother to deceased brother married his widow to produce an heir), Ezra had the Israelites put away their foreign brides, Samaritans were looked down upon because of their mixing with the surrounding cultures (cut off from the inheritance of Israel), and things like these.

The equitable solution in this instance is making sure she does not remarry the first husband. She is defiled as her womb (which produces sons for inheritance) has been defiled by the second husband having sex with her. Not having clear heirs brings sin on the land through lack of clear inheritance.

Similarly, the sex = marriage proponents also take the Law out of context.

> Deuteronomy 22:28 “If a man finds a girl who is a virgin, who is not engaged, and seizes her and lies with her and they are discovered, 29 then the man who lay with her shall give to the girl’s father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall become his wife because he has violated her; he cannot divorce her all his days.

It’s important to acknowledge the Law was written not as a “perfect guide” but aims to show what it means to Love God and Love your Neighbor. If you broke the Law, it imposes equitable punishments. The perfect guide is the example of Jesus Christ.

In Israel, women who were not virgins had virtually no marriage prospects anymore, so marriage to a man who was interested in her but did wrong was likely better than being shunned for the rest of her life.

The Amnon and Tamar story confirms this.

> 2 Samuel 13:10 Then Amnon said to Tamar, “Bring the food into the bedroom, that I may eat from your hand.” So Tamar took the cakes which she had made and brought them into the bedroom to her brother Amnon. 11 When she brought them to him to eat, he took hold of her and said to her, “Come, lie with me, my sister.” 12 But she answered him, “No, my brother, do not violate me, for such a thing is not done in Israel; do not do this disgraceful thing! 13 As for me, where could I get rid of my reproach? And as for you, you will be like one of the fools in Israel. Now therefore, please speak to the king, for he will not withhold me from you.” 14 However, he would not listen to her; since he was stronger than she, he violated her and lay with her.

Incest + seized and violated her. Continuing on in the story…

> 2 Samuel 13:15 Then Amnon hated her with a very great hatred; for the hatred with which he hated her was greater than the love with which he had loved her. And Amnon said to her, “Get up, go away!” 16 But she said to him, No, because this wrong in sending me away is greater than the other that you have done to me!” Yet he would not listen to her. 17 Then he called his young man who attended him and said, “Now throw this woman out of my presence, and lock the door behind her.”

The Law is interested in protecting the woman in this instance, which means making her the seizing man’s wife AND he cannot divorce her all his days.

We live in a different culture makes it odd to us that it was an equitable solution for the violated woman to be with her rapist, but women in that culture would rather be the wife of their rapist rather than live in shame the rest of her days.

In the case of the sex = marriage proponents, the case that would “most apply to today” — which it doesn’t but let’s say it did — is the passage from Exodus.

> Exodus 22:16 “If a man seduces a virgin who is not engaged, and lies with her, he must pay a dowry for her to be his wife. 17 If her father absolutely refuses to give her to him, he shall pay money equal to the dowry for virgins.

A man who seduces (not seizes) a virgin would have to give a dowry to the father and get his permission for her to be his wife.

It’s unlikely that men having sex with a woman would go get permission from her father AND offer a dowry for marriage. Most will try to keep the sex a secret from the father much less offer a dowry for her. They are obviously not married.

These are some of the many problems of trying to apply the Law that was written for the Jewish nation to non-Christians and Christians alike that are not under the Law. Christian who try to live under the Law but not under grace are making grave errors in their application of the Scripture.

Staying in an unhappy marriage could be the best thing you do

December 6, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From this article.

> New Marriage Foundation research reveals the majority of couples who are unhappy when their first child is born are happy ten years later if they stay together.
> Of parents who are unhappy at the time of the birth of their first child, seven in ten stay together and of these the majority (68 per cent) are happy ten years later.
> Twenty seven per cent of unhappy parents who stay together end up 'extremely happy,' rating happiness with their relationship a top mark of seven out of seven.
> With rates of family breakdown at record levels in the UK, the research suggests too many couples are giving up on their marriages before they have given them a chance to succeed.
> Harry Benson, research director of Marriage Foundation, commented: "Contrary to popular belief, staying in an unhappy marriage could be the best thing you ever do.
> "Most marriages have their unhappy moments, but apart from the fortunately extremely rare cases where the relationship involves abuse, most couples can work through the difficulties to be happy later on.

It should come as no surprise that those couples that can work through their unhappiness and conflict will bond closer together and usually come out happy on the other side. However, we have a culture that says to quit on marriage when you're unhappy or your feelings are telling you otherwise.

The most interesting point from reading the study is that:

> The parents most likely to split up during the subsequent ten years were those who reported they were neither happy nor unhappy when their child was born. The same was true for couples who suspected they were 'on the brink'. The parents most likely to split up were those who were unsure if their relationship was on the brink or not.

So there was a bell shaped curve where unhappy and happy had the lowest rates of divorce, but those who were neither unhappy or happy had the highest rates of divorce.

This too makes some sense with some critical thinking. At least someone who is unhappy in their situation cares about their situation. If someone is not unhappy or happy they tend to be more apathetic, which is a death knell for relationships. If any spouse just doesn't care anymore (has checked out), that's more likely to signal the end than unhappiness.

Jesus on vetting for marriage and lessons

December 10, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The purpose of vetting for marriage is to find a wife that is suitable for marriage.

We are in the engagement period of Christ and the Church, with the Holy Spirit as our seal of engagement (Eph 1:13-14) much like an engagement ring signifies that now. However, Christ has not married His Church yet (Revelation 21).

Revelation 2 and 3 accurately represents Jesus' process of vetting His bride, to weed out those who do not pursue Him wholeheartedly in the sanctification process. Each of the Churches have their own praises and their own admonishments/rebukes.

> Revelation 2:1 "To the angel of the church in Ephesus write:
> The One who holds the seven stars in His right hand, the One who walks among the seven golden lampstands, says this:
> 2 'I know your deeds and your toil and perseverance, and that you cannot tolerate evil men, and you put to the test those who call themselves apostles, and they are not, and you found them to be false; 3 and you have perseverance and have endured for My name's sake, and have not grown weary. 4 But I have this against you, that you have left your first love. 5 Therefore remember from where you have fallen, and repent and do the deeds you did at first; or else I am coming to you and will remove your lampstand out of its place—unless you repent. 6 Yet this you do have, that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. 7 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes, I will grant to eat of the tree of life which is in the Paradise of God.'

If the Church does not come after Christ wholeheartedly — much like Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength — then he'll remove their lampstand. The 7 golden lampstands are the Churches, and removal of the Church unless they repent is dire.

John 17:3 Now this is eternal life: that they know you, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom you have sent.

Eternal life is not about doing things for God which the Ephesians were but knowing God and Jesus Christ. It's the relationship.

> 8 "And to the angel of the church in Smyrna write:
> The first and the last, who was dead, and has come to life, says this:
> 9 'I know your tribulation and your poverty (but you are rich), and the blasphemy by those who say they are Jews and are not, but are a synagogue of Satan. 10 Do not fear what you are about to suffer. Behold, the devil is about to cast some of you into prison, so that you will be tested, and you will > have tribulation for ten days. Be faithful until death, and I will give you the crown of life. 11 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. He who overcomes will not be hurt by the second death.’

Be faithful unto death. Another tough word for the Churches that seems most applicable to the persecuted Churches of today.

Luke 14:26 “If anyone comes to Me, and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be My disciple. 27 Whoever does not carry his own cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple.

The amazing part of ‘take up your cross and follow Me’ is that Jesus used the cross prior to His crucifixion. What a crazy statement to make to the crowds: follow me until death, even death on a cross. We have the hindsight of knowing that Jesus would go to die on a cross for our sins, but the crowds and disciples only knew that the cross was reserved for the worst of criminals.

> 12 “And to the angel of the church in Pergamum write:
> The One who has the sharp two-edged sword says this:
> 13 ‘I know where you dwell, where Satan’s throne is; and you hold fast My name, and did not deny My faith even in the days of Antipas, My witness, My faithful one, who was killed among you, where Satan dwells. 14 But I have a few things against you, because you have there some who hold the teaching of Balaam, who kept teaching Balak to put a stumbling block before the sons of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols and to commit acts of immorality. 15 So you also have some who in the same way hold the teaching of the Nicolaitans. 16 Therefore repent; or else I am coming to you quickly, and I will make war against them with the sword of My mouth. 17 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes, to him I will give some of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and a new name written on the stone which no one knows but he who receives it.’

Here’s the background for this passage:

However, later on Balaam figured out a way to get his reward from Balak. Balaam advised the Moabites on how to entice the people of Israel with prostitutes and idolatry. He could not curse Israel directly, so he came up with a plan for Israel to bring a curse upon themselves. Balak followed Balaam’s advice, and Israel fell into sin, worshiping Baal of Peor and committing fornication with Midianite women. For this God plagued them, and 24,000 men died (Numbers 25:1–9; Deuteronomy 23:3–6).

Balaam’s name and story became infamous, and he is referred to several times in the New Testament. Peter compares false teachers to Balaam, “who loved the wages of wickedness” (2 Peter 2:15). Jude echoes this sentiment, associating Balaam with the selling of one’s soul for financial gain (Jude 1:11). Finally, Jesus speaks of Balaam when He warns the church in Pergamum of their sin: “There are some among you who hold to the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to entice the Israelites to sin so that they ate food sacrificed to idols and committed sexual immorality” (Revelation 2:14). Satan’s tactics haven’t changed all that much. If he cannot curse God’s people directly, he will try the back-door approach, and idolatry and sexual immorality are his go-to temptations.

The Nicolaitans, according to Irenaeus, led lives of unrestrained indulgence. The teachings of the Nicolaitans therefore could mean something along the lines of antinomian heresy (rejection of or advocating that Christians are not bound by moral law anymore).

Basically, in our day this can refer to people who are teaching for the love of money (prosperity gospel) as well as those who cause others to stumble to fall into idolatry and sin.

> 18 “And to the angel of the church in Thyatira write:
> The Son of God, who has eyes like a flame of fire, and His feet are like burnished bronze, says this:
> 19 ‘I know your deeds, and your love and faith and service and perseverance, and that your deeds of late are greater than at first. 20 But I have this against you, that you tolerate the woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, and she teaches and leads My bond-servants astray so that they commit acts of immorality and eat things sacrificed to idols. 21 I gave her time to repent, and she does not want to repent of her immorality. 22 Behold, I will throw her on a bed of sickness, and those who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they repent of her deeds. 23 And I will kill her children with pestilence, and all the churches will know that I am He who searches the minds and hearts; and I will give to each one of you according to your deeds. 24 But I say to you, the rest who are in Thyatira, who do not hold this teaching, who have not known the deep things of Satan, as they call them—I place no other burden on you. 25 Nevertheless what you have, hold fast until I come. 26 He who overcomes, and he who keeps My deeds until the end, to him I will give authority over the nations; 27 and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of the potter are broken to pieces, as I also have received authority from My Father; 28 and I will give him the morning star. 29 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.’

Of course, Jezebel refers to Ahab’s wife who used her authority to do much evil to the prophets of God, the innocent, and seduced the people into sexual immorality and idolatry.

In our time, this likely refers to much of the feminist, liberalist, and progressive ideologies that use their power to encourage that which deviate from the Scripture: fornication, abortion, sexual deviancy, etc.

I also think it is likely that the 'deep things of Satan' refer to the seductive nature of the 'equality' (no distinction between the sexes) and 'progressivism' (the Scripture is old and outdated and we're continually improving) and how that has infested much of the Church because it sounds good but is not.

- acts of immorality: fornication, adultery, sexual deviancy, etc.
- eat things sacrificed to idols: hold anything as idols above God- 7 deadly sins.
- bed of sickness: STDs?
- kill her children with pestilence: abortion?
- Satan's deep teachings: deception of equality and progressivism?

No one can deny these destructive aspects on Christians and marraiges.

> Revelation 3:1 "To the angel of the church in Sardis write:
> He who has the seven Spirits of God and the seven stars, says this: 'I know your deeds, that you have a name that you are alive, but you are dead. 2 Wake up, and strengthen the things that remain, which were about to die; for I have not found your deeds completed in the sight of My God. 3 So remember what you have received and heard; and keep it, and repent. Therefore if you do not wake up, I will come like a thief, and you will not know at what hour I will come to you. 4 But you have a few people in Sardis who have not soiled their garments; and they will walk with Me in white, for they are worthy. 5 He who overcomes will thus be clothed in white garments; and I will not erase his name from the book of life, and I will confess his name before My Father and before His angels. 6 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'

This again refers to prior Scriptures.

Jesus refers to the second coming as a 'thief in the night' in the gospels and Paul in the epistles to give us a warning to be prepared. The parable of the 10 virgins and parable of the talents who weren't prepared when the bridegroom (Jesus) comes for the wedding is similar.
